Mr. James A. McGrath (St. John's East): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Labour. Has he succeeded in getting the unions representing 90,000 railway employees and the railways back together for conciliation talks following the breakdown of negotiations last Friday?

Hon. John C. Munro (Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, I would advise the hon. member that I sent a telegram to all the parties concerned asking them to come together in another effort to resolve this dispute. I indicated that the assistant deputy minister of my department would be available along with other officials to assist in mediation if they would come together. I have had replies now from both the CNR and CPR that they are agreeable to reconvening in this endeavour and I am awaiting a reply from the union concerned representing the employees.

While I am on my feet, I wonder if I might clarify an answer—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. If the minister wishes to refer to the question that is now before the House, he can of course give additional information but, as I have suggested before to ministers and to hon. members asking questions, it is a little difficult from the standpoint of orderliness to jump from one question to another. Perhaps I might recognize the minister in a moment when we have finished this subject.

Mr. McGrath: May I ask the Minister of Labour if, in order to avert a nationwide strike, he is prepared to intervene personally as Minister of Labour to get the two parties back together for conciliation talks?

Mr. Munro (Hamilton East): That is always a possibility to ensure that this kind of dispute is resolved. We are hopeful it can be resolved at the bargaining table now without the necessity of going through all the conciliation procedures and boards that have not been too productive in the past. That is still our hope. I think that by making available to all parties concerned some of the most experienced mediators at the federal level, that will be the end result.

Mr. Speaker: Before pursuing this question, the Chair will recognize the hon. member for Compton.

ABOLITION OF SALES TAX ON BUILDING MATERIALS

Mr. Henry Latulippe (Compton): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the hon. Minister of Finance.

In his budget speech, the minister stated that 300,000 new jobs will be created in Canada. Now, with a view to encouraging the creation of jobs, as an incentive in the field of housing construction and, at the same time, as a contribution to lowering the cost of living, could the hon. minister tell the House why removing the 11 per cent sales tax on building materials was not considered in the last budget?

Hon. John N. Turner (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I considered this possibility but since I had only a few options, I could not accept the hon. member's suggestion.

Mr. Gilbert Rondeau (Shefford): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary for the Minister of Finance.

In connection with the 300,000 jobs mentioned in his budget speech, is he in a position to forecast whether Quebec will have by 1974 the 100,000 jobs promised by premier Bourassa in 1970?

HOUSING

MEASURES TO REDUCE COST OF HOUSES

Mr. Eldon M. Woolliams (Calgary North): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask a question of the Minister of Finance. In view of the fact he did nothing about repealing or changing the 11 per cent sales tax on building materials and in view of the fact the price of houses in places like Toronto and Vancouver is out of reach of all but about 4 per cent of the people, can the minister inform the House what other policies he or the government have to put houses back in a price range where the average man and woman can afford them?

Hon. John N. Turner (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I would think that when the House has a chance to deal with the amendments to the National Housing Act introduced by my colleague, the Minister of State for Urban Affairs, that question will be satisfactorily answered.

Mr. Woolliams: Mr. Speaker, in view of the answer given by the Minister of Finance, would he read those amendments to see what nonsense he is now peddling in the House?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. If the hon. member for Regina-Lake Centre has a supplementary to a previous question we will now return to him.

Oral Questions

GRAIN

EXPEDITING OF MOVEMENT TO LAKEHEAD TO FILL ALLEGED AVAILABLE ELEVATOR SPACE

Mr. Les Benjamin (Regina-Lake Centre): Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I wish to return to the question put to the minister in charge of the Wheat Board. As a precaution in case negotiations with the grain handlers or the railway employees do not succeed, can the minister tell the House if he is now taking or will immediately take action to increase grain movement to the Lakehead substantially in view of the fact that as of last week there was space there for some 60 million bushels?

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister of Justice): Mr. Speaker, the hon. member has referred before to the question of space at the Lakehead or stocks there. His information is quite definitely in error. Total stocks at the Lakehead as of February 7 were 64 million bushels of grain, which means that there is only 24 million bushels of space available. From the point of view of seasonal working capacity the movement of grain to the Lakehead is going along at a very rapid rate in the ordinary way of seeing that the right volume and right kinds of grain are there by the time navigation opens. There is an adequate number of cars under load to the Lakehead at this time, a much larger number than in the last several years.

Mr. Benjamin: Mr. Speaker, would the minister be good enough to tell the House what happened to the other 40 million bushels of space that I am sure is still there?

Mr. Lang: Mr. Speaker, the total licensed capacity at the Lakehead is 104 million bushels; the total seasonal working capacity is rated at 88 million bushels. The hon. member will appreciate that if the full licence capacity is occupied it is difficult to move grain through the facility at the most rapid rate. We are now setting records and we need to have these plants operating efficiently.

REQUEST BY HANDLING COMPANIES FOR REVIEW OF CHARGES

Mr. Gordon Ritchie (Dauphin): I have a supplementary question for the minister in charge of the Wheat Board. In view of the negotiations now going on at the Lakehead, has the minister had any request to review grain handling charges from the grain handling companies and, if so, what has been his reply?

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister of Justice): Mr. Speaker, I have had discussions on this subject. The question of rates, however, is in the hands, first of all, of the Canada Grains Commission and, second, is a matter of negotiation with the Canadian Wheat Board. I have referred the handling companies to these two bodies.

[Mr. Speaker.]

REGIONAL ECONOMIC EXPANSION

IMPORTANCE ACCORDED SUBJECT BY GOVERNMENT IN LIGHT OF BUDGET REFERENCE

Mr. John Lundrigan (Gander-Twillingate): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the right hon. Prime Minister and concerns a matter that was raised earlier today. In view of the fact that about half of the 1968 budget referred to the problem of regional development and the budget read by his colleague on Monday evening contained only half a dozen lines on that subject, can the Prime Minister indicate whether he has dropped this as one of the major policy aims of his government or whether he is satisfied that the problem has been eliminated?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, if the hon. member refers to the Speech from the Throne he will see that this is still one of the major aims of the government, and if he refers to the blue book which was tabled yesterday he will see from the estimates that expenditure in that area is going up considerably.

FINANCE

IMPACT OF BUDGET ON AREAS OF HIGH UNEMPLOYMENT

Mr. John Lundrigan (Gander-Twillingate): Mr. Speaker, may I then put a question to the Minister of Finance. Has the government made any estimate of what impact his budget will have on areas of high unemployment such as British Columbia, Quebec, New Brunswick, Newfoundland and other provinces? Will he be prepared, when he takes part in further debate and is answering questions, to give an indication to the House and the country of the goals of the government in high unemployment provinces, and can he also tell the House how many jobs will be created in those provinces?

An hon. Member: Answer yes or no!

Hon. John N. Turner (Minister of Finance): I will take that into consideration, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I suggest to hon. members that we should try to go to another question. If the hon. member has a supplementary I will recognize him and the hon. member for Oshawa-Whitby on a supplementary, I believe, on the same subject, and then I will go to the hon. member for Trinity.

Mr. Lundrigan: Mr. Speaker, may I ask quite specifically if the government has made any estimate of how many jobs will be created in these very high unemployment areas? Has it or has it not?

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): Mr. Speaker, it is difficult to be precise in that sense. However, the stimulus of the budget by way of equalization payments in the amount of $200 million to the less-favoured provinces and the tax reductions concentrated in the lower income groups will obviously be of particular benefit and give extra stimulus to the economy. The revenues derived by these provinces from provincial sales tax and other commodity taxes will undoubtedly have an impact on less-favoured areas, particularly the Atlantic provinces.

Mr. Lundrigan: Does that mean yes or no?

TRADE

RELATIONSHIP OF BUDGET TARIFF REDUCTIONS TO NEGOTIATIONS WITH UNITED STATES

Hon. Paul Hellyer (Trinity): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce. Following the assurance of the Minister of Finance yesterday that there were no discussions with United States officials prior to the unilateral reduction of tariffs on Monday night, is the minister now in a position to advise the House of any quid pro quo which would justify this unilateral treatment in favour of the United States?

Hon. Alastair Gillespie (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): Mr. Speaker, yesterday the Minister of Finance covered that point. This is a temporary move; he emphasized that it would last for a year only. It does not in any way affect our negotiating position as we enter GATT.

Mr. Hellyer: In view of the fact that the only public reaction in the United States so far is a treasury department announcement that it intends to press an antidumping case against aluminium ingots, can the minister advise the House whether we can expect any further unilateral action on the American side and whether there is any deal, implicit or explicit, of which the Canadian budget proposals form a part?

Mr. Gillespie: Mr. Speaker, there is no deal. The active imagination of the hon. member is misplaced in this case. As regards the question of antidumping duties on aluminium, I believe the appraisement has been withheld, so we will have to wait several months to find out whether injury is found in the case of the aluminium industry or not.

Mr. Hellyer: Mr. Speaker, it is not an active imagination on my part. Is the minister aware that a Toronto columnist has today accused the government of conspiracy with the United States in order to postpone reopening of trade negotiations until later this year after the next federal election?

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

HOUSING

ACTION TO PREVENT RENT INCREASES FOLLOWING INCREASE IN OLD AGE PENSIONS AND TAX REDUCTIONS

Mr. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa-Whitby): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of State for Urban Affairs and relates to a question asked yesterday by the hon. member for York South. In view of the promised increase for pensioners and the tax reductions for low income people outlined in the budget on Monday night, would the minister assure the House that he will get in direct contact with his counterparts at the provincial level and urge them to take steps to ensure that these benefits are not eaten away by rent increases on the residences of pensioners and low income people?

Hon. Ron Basford (Minister of State for Urban Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I do not think this problem is really with government run housing authorities. I think the hon. member can rely upon provincial housing agencies to take into account my remarks of yesterday and his remarks. Where there is a problem, I think it would be with those rental accommodations owned by the private sector. Whether provinces wish to impose rent control is really a matter for them to decide. The hon. member may wish to speak to three premiers with whom he is perhaps in closer touch than I.

Mr. Broadbent: While not sharing at all the assumption of the minister that there is no need to be concerned about publicly owned housing, I should like to ask him what concrete steps he is taking in terms of making sure in the private sector that the improvements that are promised to the low income people and pensioners in particular are not eaten up by rent increases in the private sector? What does he intend to do about that?

Mr. Basford: Mr. Speaker, rents in privately owned buildings are governed by the owners, and any control of those rents is a matter of whether or not there will be rent controls, which some provinces have already implemented.

CANADA PENSION PLAN

INQUIRY AS TO LEGISLATION TO EXCLUDE OLD ORDER MENNONITES FROM COMPULSORY PAYMENTS

Mr. Perrin Beatty (Wellington-Grey-Dufferin-Waterloo): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of National Revenue. Two and a half weeks ago I asked the minister whether the government had made a decision to exempt members of the Old Order Mennonites from compulsory participation in the Canada Pension Plan. At that time the minister indicated he would talk to his colleague, the Minister of National Health and Welfare. Has the minister consulted with his colleague and can he indicate to the House at this time whether the government will live up to that commitment?

Hon. John N. Turner (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, perhaps that question should have been directed to me. I had better take it as notice.

Oral Questions

INCOME TAX

SUGGESTED ALLOWANCE AS DEDUCTION OF FEES PAID CONSULTANTS BY INDIVIDUAL TAXPAYERS

Mr. Peter C. Bawden (Calgary South): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a supplementary question to the Minister of National Revenue. On February 8 the Minister of Finance replied, after being asked whether he was prepared to permit individual Canadian taxpayers preparing their forms to deduct reasonable fees paid to tax consultants, that this would probably be dealt with in the budget. May I ask the Minister of National Revenue whether this was overlooked in the budget and whether individuals will now be permitted to make deductions for fees paid for advice on filling out tax forms?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Obviously, to my way of thinking, that question is not supplementary to the previous question. However, as the question has been asked the minister can reply briefly, and I will then recognize the hon. member for Richmond immediately afterwards.

Mr. Stanfield: Mr. Speaker, there is no answer.

1976 OLYMPIC GAMES, MONTREAL—PARTICIPATION OF CENTRAL MORTGAGE AND HOUSING CORPORATION—ALLOTMENT OF FUNDS FOR PROJECTS IN QUEBEC

Mr. Léonel Beaudoin (Richmond): Mr. Speaker, I wish to ask a question of the hon. Minister of State for Urban Affairs.

Since the right hon. Prime Minister has recently declared to the House that with the help of the province of Quebec, the city of Montreal had only to use the services of the Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation to finance the facilities for the Olympic Games, can the minister tell the House if a special budget has been or will be provided by the Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation in connection with this new investment?

[English]

Hon. Ron Basford (Minister of State for Urban Affairs): No, Mr. Speaker. The Prime Minister made it clear that assistance would be provided through the regular budget of Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation.

[Translation]

Mr. Beaudoin: Mr. Speaker, I wish to ask a supplementary question.

Can the hon. minister assure this House that Quebec housing projects will not be deprived of funds, in view of the new investment made by the Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation for the Montreal Olympic Games?

[English]

Mr. Basford: Mr. Speaker, the purport of the Prime Minister's remarks was that housing for the Olympics, if applied for, would be handled through the normal budget of Central Mortgage and Housing and we would want to make sure that it is housing which is suitable for long term use.

[Translation]

Mr. Beaudoin: Mr. Speaker, I want to ask another supplementary question.

Mr. Speaker: I will first recognize the hon. member for Richmond and then the hon. member for Saint-Hyacinthe.

Mr. Beaudoin: Mr. Speaker, can the minister tell us if the department has already received letters asking precisely that the Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation provide this new investment for the Olympic Games in Montreal?

[English]

Mr. Basford: Mr. Speaker, we have not had a formal application for housing.

Mr. Baldwin: How about an informal one?

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

VIET NAM—DIFFICULTIES OF INTERNATIONAL SUPERVISION COMMISSION—REQUEST FOR STATEMENT IN SITUATION

Mr. Claude Wagner (Saint-Hyacinthe): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Secretary of State for External Affairs.

In the light of the rather puzzling statements made yesterday by Ambassador Gauvin in connection with the difficulties and risks currently faced by the International Supervision Commission, could the minister give the House further information as to the progress made in the field of the co-operation from the belligerent forces?

[English]

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I am sure you would not expect me to answer this question at great length on this occasion. May I make two comments. First, I am sure all of us are highly satisfied with the way in which Michel Gauvin is conducting himself in discharging his responsibilities as leader of the Canadian group. I think he has been very wise at this time in making clear that he expects better things from the operation of the International Commission of Control and Supervision than what has so far happened. I read the full account of what he had to say, and he said he is withholding judgment so far on whether this is a useful operation.

LAOS—REQUEST THAT HOUSE BE CONSULTED BEFORE DECISION ON POSSIBLE CANADIAN PARTICIPATION IN SUPERVISORY ROLE

Mr. Claude Wagner (Saint-Hyacinthe): I have a supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. In view of the reservations already expressed by the Secretary of State for External Affairs with regard to any Canadian role in Laos, can he now give the House his assurance that no decision on Laos will be taken without consultation with the House?

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Secretary of State for External Affairs): No, Mr. Speaker, I will not give that assurance, but I will certainly inform the House as soon as we have made a decision so that there can be discussion in this chamber.

NATIONAL REVENUE

REQUEST FOR CANCELLATION OF TARIFF ON ASTRO TURF AT HAMILTON STADIUM IN VIEW OF USE TO TRAIN OLYMPIC ATHLETES

Mr. Bill Kempling (Hamilton-Wentworth): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the Minister of State for Urban Affairs. Inasmuch as a mechanism has been found to finance the Olympics, would the minister discuss with the Minister of National Revenue the extra tariff placed on the Astro turf at Ivor Wynn Stadium, Hamilton, with a view to cancelling the extra charge, as this stadium will be used to train some of our Olympic athletes?

Hon. Ron Basford (Minister of State for Urban Affairs): Mr. Speaker, although that does not fall within my responsibilities, I am sure the Minister of National Revenue has heard the representation.

AGRICULTURE

INDUSTRIAL MILK—INQUIRY AS TO DECISION ON INCREASE IN SUBSIDY

Mr. Jack Murta (Lisgar): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the Minister of Agriculture. Has his department reached any decision on increasing the subsidy on industrial milk, as requested by Canadian dairy farmers? If so, how will this increase be paid? Will it come from the federal treasury or from an increase in the consumer price of milk?

Hon. E. F. Whelan (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, we have not reached a decision yet.

Mr. Murta: Can the minister inform the House when a decision will be made on this matter?

Mr. Whelan: I hope soon, Mr. Speaker.

NATURAL RESOURCES

OFFSHORE RESOURCES—ASSISTANCE IN EXPLORATION, DEVELOPMENT AND MANAGEMENT

Mr. Lloyd R. Crouse (South Shore): Mr. Speaker, may I direct my question to the Prime Minister. When appointing a new chairman for the government's task force on ocean science and technology, the Prime Minister stated that the federal government recognizes that Canada must ensure that it has the technical capacity and scientific understanding to respond effectively to the entire scope of this challenge. Would the Prime Minister indicate whether his government has any specific plans to assist in exploring, developing and managing our offshore resources, and also whether the government, in view of the oil shortage, is considering any increase in the assistance provided to domestic offshore oil drilling rigs and to ships built in Canadian shipyards so that we may utilize our entire offshore resources?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I would have to inquire to see whether any of our assistance to the shipbuilding industry applies to the specific aspects that the hon. member is asking about. I do not know the answer offhand.

TRANSPORT

RAILWAY LINE RELOCATION—GOVERNMENT POSITION—INTRODUCTION OF LEGISLATION

Mr. John Rodriguez (Nickel Belt): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Transport. In view of the Ontario government's announcement that it will not participate in the second phase of Sudbury's relocation study until the federal government makes known its intention respecting rail relocation subsidies, is the minister prepared to do so now?

Hon. Jean Marchand (Minister of Transport): Would the hon. member repeat the last part of his question, please?

Mr. Rodriguez: Is the minister prepared to announce the government's position, in view of the relocation study?

Mr. Marchand (Langelier): Mr. Speaker, I think I have said many times in the House that a bill will be introduced which will deal with the problem of relocation. A pilot study has been undertaken in Winnipeg. We have encountered this problem in many other places in Canada, mainly in Quebec City which is split in two by rail tracks. As soon as the bill is adopted by the House I hope we will be in a position to correct all these situations which the hon. member deplores and I deplore, too.

IMMIGRATION

ACTION TO DEAL WITH INCREASED NUMBER OF APPEALS—POSSIBLE INCREASE IN NUMBER OF MEMBERS OF APPEAL BOARD

Mr. Lincoln M. Alexander (Hamilton West): Mr. Speaker, may I direct my question to the minister responsible for immigration. As the number of appeals to the Immigration Appeal Board has reached alarming heights, at present numbering approximately 12,000, I wonder if the minister could advise the House what he is doing right now to expedite the hearing of appeals?

Hon. Robert K. Andras (Minister of Manpower and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, as we indicated in the Speech from the Throne, we plan to present amendments to the Immigration Appeal Board Act to the House at an early opportunity. In the meantime, as announced by my predecessor, several successful endeavours have taken place in eliminating the preliminary build-up of additional appeals that might be coming forward to the board. I think we will have to restructure the board in some fashion before we can really beat this problem.

Mr. Alexander: As the chairman of the board indicated in 1968 that the board, as constituted, could not handle the massive amount of work it has to do and in view of the hundreds of appeals being filed daily or monthly, can the minister assure the House that he will be bringing forward legislation in the very near future which will at least increase the numbers on the board in order to expedite the hearing of these appeals? The fact that this has now been going on for three years is ridiculous.

Mr. Andras: Mr. Speaker, it is also ridiculous to take single estimates and put them through the mill three or four times simply for political purposes. If we can get the House moving faster on these things, we will be able to deal with real problems much more rapidly.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Alexander: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a question of privilege. I did not expect a hanky-panky answer from the minister. I asked him a straight question which does not call for political manoeuvring on his part. I asked the minister a very simple question with respect to a very important problem that is being faced by many Canadians, those who are involved with the appeal structure, and the least he can do is give me a straight answer in terms of how soon we can expect action.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

Mr. Andras: Mr. Speaker, I was giving the hon. member a very straight answer. It was not hanky-panky. It is a very serious consideration that I ask all members to give. We will get to that problem when we can proceed expeditiously with other matters ahead of it.

ACTION TO COMBAT SHORTAGE OF VETERINARIANS

Mr. A. D. Hales (Wellington): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the Minister of Agriculture. In view of the fact there is an extreme shortage of graduate veterinarians in Canada, so much so that we have had to import veterinarians from Europe, I wish to ask the minister if it is the intention of his department or any other department of government to give a grant to the Ontario Veterinary College so they may enlarge their facilities to graduate more veterinarians from a long list of students who wish to study this profession?

[Mr. Alexander.]

Hon. E. F. Whelan (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, what the hon. member has said is true. There is a shortage of veterinarians in Canada. We actually have a team in Europe looking for veterinarians. We are studying the very issue about which he is talking. I hope to be able to give the hon. member a better answer very shortly.

SUBSIDY ON WHEAT USED DOMESTICALLY IN MILLS—POSSIBLE FURTHER MEASURES TO REDUCE FOOD PRICES

Mr. Norval Horner (Battleford-Kindersley): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Agriculture or the minister in charge of the Wheat Board. In light of the rising cost of food, is the government contemplating any further cheap food measures like the present one under which the federal treasury pays over one dollar for each bushel of wheat used in the mills for Canadian consumption?

An hon. Member: Yes, meatballs and gravy.

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister of Justice): Mr. Speaker, there are one or two other payments or programs in existence which can be called consumer subsidies. Any further decisions along those lines will be announced.

Mr. Horner (Battleford-Kindersley): I suggest that the minister in charge of the Wheat Board is playing politics with $60 million belonging to the Canadian wheat growers.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

Mr. Horner (Battleford-Kindersley): I wish to ask the minister how much that questionnaire cost and who is paying for it.

FISHERIES

WEST COAST HERRING FISHERY—REQUEST THAT MINISTER MEET WITH FISHERMEN TO DECIDE ON DISTRIBUTION OF CATCH BETWEEN GILLNETTERS AND SEINERS

Mr. Thomas S. Barnett (Comox-Alberni): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the meeting-shy Minister of Fisheries. I wish to ask the minister whether he will agree to meet, within the next week, with representatives of the herring fishermen of British Columbia to discuss with them and work out an agreed arrangement on division of the catch as between the gillnet fishermen and the seiners so there will be a fair distribution of the quota he has allocated in the west coast herring fishery?

Hon. Jack Davis (Minister of Fisheries): Mr. Speaker, I have had several meetings with the fishermens' representatives on the west coast and the herring management committee we have there. We have set quotas. The matter now at issue is the price of the herring. That is a matter to be settled between the union, the native brotherhood, the vessel owners and the processors, not the government.

Mr. Barnett: In view of the minister's statement that the issue is a matter of price, will he tell us why he has refused to meet with the fishermen, in view of having set quotas, in order that there may be a distribution of the catch between gillnet and seine fishermen, so that the matter of price can be properly settled between the fishermen and the buyers? That was my question and I would like an answer.

Mr. Davis: As the hon. member knows, Mr. Speaker, there are various groups of fishermen using different kinds of gear. The battle is between them as to what proportion of the herring they get. That is a battle I do not wish to enter. We have set over-all quotas. It is up to the industry to solve its difficulties in respect to price.

Mr. Speaker: The Chair will recognize the hon. member for St. John's West for a supplementary and then the right hon. member for Prince Albert who has been waiting very patiently for the past 40 minutes.

REQUEST FOR CLOSING LINES TO PROTECT HERRING STOCKS IN PLACENTIA AND ST. MARY'S BAYS

Mr. Walter C. Carter (St. John's West): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a supplementary question to the Minister of Fisheries. It also concerns herring. In view of the fact that numerous representations have been made by the fishermen of Placentia and St. Mary's Bays in Newfoundland with regard to the need for closing lines to protect the herring stocks until the study now being undertaken is completed, and in view of the minister's statement in Vancouver last week that the "let's fish and get out" attitude which is being pursued thoughtlessly must stop, will the minister now undertake to have closing lines imposed in those bays to protect the herring stocks until he can determine the size of the stocks and their sustainable yield?

Hon. Jack Davis (Minister of Fisheries): As the hon. member knows, Mr. Speaker, I prefer closing lines. I have been deferring to an industry committee on which the fishermen in southern Newfoundland are represented. They have asked for more time to study this matter. I am open to suggestions.

Mr. Barnett: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a question of privilege arising from a statement made by the Minister of Fisheries to the effect there is a dispute between the gillnet fishermen and the seine fishermen as to the question of the catch. In view of information I received within the past hour to the effect that they are agreed on a division formula if they can meet with the minister and get his blessing on it, in my view the minister must either be misinformed or is misinforming the House.

Mr. Speaker: That, of course, is not a question of privilege. I suggest to the hon. member that it is a question of debate between himself or other members and the minister. The hon. member for St. John's West will be recognized for a supplementary and then the right hon. member for Prince Albert.

Mr. Carter: My supplementary question is to the Minister of Fisheries. In his answer the minister referred to the herring management committee. The point I have been making, and I am sure the minister is aware of it, is that there is no scientific data available to help the minister or the herring committee to establish a safe quota. Until such time as that information is available, will the minister consider imposing closing lines to ensure that the herring stocks in those bays are protected?

Mr. Davis: Mr. Speaker, there is some information available. Additional data is being sought by research vessels right now. We need more information and have an open mind on the subject.

DEMURRAGE CHARGES ON SHIPS AWAITING CARGOES AT VANCOUVER IN 1972—ANSWER TO ORDER PAPER QUESTION

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prince Albert): Mr. Speaker, six weeks ago I asked a question of the government in connection with the Wheat Board. It was a very simple question. After the mountain had been in labour for all that period, it produced this mouse. My question was:

What was the total amount paid for demurrage by the Wheat Board in 1972 for ships which were held up in Vancouver Harbour awaiting wheat cargoes?

The answer was $2,326,469.25. The next question is the one that interests the farmers.

Is the Wheat Board to receive payment of said amount from the government of Canada or, if not, is it to be considered as a marketing expense which will come out of the farmer producers?

The answer was as follows:

Where demurrage is incurred for the account of the Canadian Wheat Board, it is considered to be a marketing expense payable out of the Canadian Wheat Board pool accounts.

In other words, it comes from the farmers.

Whether this amount comes out of sales proceeds or from the government of Canada depends on whether a particular account is in deficit or surplus.

• (1520)

Sir, that answer is the antithesis of frankness and could not have been expressed with greater precision. This is deception that the government is endeavouring to practice on the farmers of western Canada.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Danson: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker, may I suggest that when the right hon. gentleman rises and makes allusion to a mouse we should smell a rat.

Mr. Crouse: All the rats are over there.

Mr. Diefenbaker: The hon. member has been silent for a long time. On one occasion I said of the hon. member for York North, in the most kindly way that I had concluded after hearing him that he was a wit but I then had to admit that I was only half right.

An hon. Member: Old stuff.

Mr. Speaker: I have to apologize to a number of hon. members in the last row who were not reached. Perhaps we might eliminate the budget debate from the question period tomorrow and recognize immediately hon. members in the last row. Before calling orders of the day I think I might recognize the hon. member for Rimouski.

THE CANADIAN ECONOMY

SUGGESTED INTRODUCTION OF GUARANTEED ANNUAL INCOME TO ALLEVIATE UNEMPLOYMENT

Mr. Eudore Allard (Rimouski): Thank you, Mr. Speaker, I was beginning to lose hope. I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Finance.

Since the minister recognized that it is impossible for him to find a satisfactory solution to the problems of unemployment and that, consequently, the rate of unemployment, already heartbreaking, particularly in the case of the young, will go up unavoidably, could the minister tell us if he considered setting up a guaranteed annual income as a possible solution to that unfortunate situation?

Hon. John N. Turner (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I must take this question as notice for I could not hear it because of the noise in the House. I trust the hon. member will forgive me.

Mr. Allard: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I will repeat my question.

Since the minister recognized that it is impossible for him to find a satisfactory solution to the problems of unemployment and that, consequently, the rate of unemployment, already heartbreaking, particularly in the case of the young, will go up unavoidably, can the minister tell us if he considered setting up a guaranteed annual income as a possible solution to that unfortunate situation?

Mr. Speaker: Obviously, there is no answer to be offered to the question asked by the hon. member for Rimouski who will probably have the opportunity to raise the issue again tomorrow or to suggest to the Chair that it be discussed at the time of adjournment.

[English]

Mr. Munro (Hamilton East): On a question of privilege, Mr. Speaker, I think my answer to the hon. member for Winnipeg North in connection with the elevator strike might have been somewhat misleading. I should like to advise him that a conciliation board has been appointed and that we are waiting for the union to make its recommendation as to its member on that board.

Mr. Yewchuk: I am sorry to rise on a point of order at this time, Mr. Speaker, but I am seeking clarification of a matter I have been trying to raise for some time. It concerns the honesty of one of the ministers and I wonder whether I could have an opportunity to ask for clarification of this matter.

[Mr. Diefenbaker.]

Mr. Speaker: The Chair is in the hands of the House. I recognize that the hon. member for Athabasca, along with others, has been attempting to ask a question. I suggested that had we started the question period a little earlier, we might have gotten to him and to others before calling orders of the day. I would hope that the hon. member's question might be allowed to stand until tomorrow so that we can proceed with the business before us. I shall undertake that the hon. member will be given an opportunity tomorrow, along with other members. I tried to note the members who were attempting to ask questions, and I would seek the assistance of all hon. members in giving the Chair an opportunity to recognize them tomorrow.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

THE BUDGET

FINANCIAL STATEMENT OF THE MINISTER OF FINANCE

The House resumed, from Monday, February 19, consideration of the motion of Hon. John N. Turner (Minister of Finance) that this House approves in general the budgetary policy of the government.

Hon. Marcel Lambert (Edmonton West): Mr. Speaker, the House will be in a somewhat different mood this afternoon from the mood it was in the other night. Having spent some time profitably reading previous speeches of the Minister of Finance (Mr. Turner) on budgetary matters, I thought I might refer to those other speeches which he made from time to time. I have before me the speech the minister made last fall in Truro. Does he want to read it? In that speech, he referred to certain budgetary and fiscal measures proposed by the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Stanfield). It occurs to me he would now want to swallow that speech after chewing it into small pieces—dry. That is the type of punishment he deserves for having made those statements.

I shall not plagiarize the delightful writings of other people who have compared passages in the various statements made by the minister at different times. One such statement was to the effect that the Leader of the Opposition had taken leave of his senses, that his fiscal proposals would increase the budgetary deficit to about $900 million, double what the minister had proposed in June; that it would drive the country to the edge of bankruptcy; that all those measures were utterly irresponsible and ill thought out. But what did the minister have to say the other night? "I come, now, to a budgetary proposal of the greatest significance", he told us. And then he laid out his personal income indexing proposal.

An hon. Member: Why don't you read George Bain's column?

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): All right. That's fine. I will go on to something else. I did refer to the opportunity I had had of reading some delightful writing. But not everybody has a chance of reading that column. I think people all over the country who read Hansard should have the benefit of these comments. This applies also to the minister's speeches in Calgary. I do not know whether an increase from $1.5 billion to $2 billion would ever drive the country to bankruptcy. Yet why would the minister now come along and boast that for the good of the country we should now, in a deficit position, spend some $2 billion more? In June of last year he said such additional expenditure would drive the country into bankruptcy—it was sheer fiscal lunacy on the part of the Leader of the Opposition even to suggest we spend that kind of money. Yet now the expenditure of that amount is supposed to bring the biggest possible benefit to the country and constitute the greatest possible gesture on the part of the Minister of Finance. The hon. gentleman reminds me of the little fellow who pulled out a plum. He has been sitting in the corner and he has pulled out a plum. It is great to hear the minister, having said these things, now telling us that what was irresponsible, what was unacceptable, how they now become policy with the greatest possible benefit. Somebody has called this a chocolate bar budget. Perhaps others would call it a candy budget, recalling the Prime Minister's statement about all the candy which would be handed out—les bonbons que nous allons donner au public canadien.

Then I noticed that another eminent scribe had entitled his column this morning "Budget! Humbug!". Is that the kind of candy included in this budget? We will see.

More seriously, Mr. Speaker, the House was in a very anticipatory mood the other night, and so was the public in the galleries. The stage was set for what I would suggest was one of the most dramatic budget nights we have seen in many years. As my colleague from Calgary South (Mr. Bawden) has said, was this going to be the opening of the wedding presents to see whether the trial marriage between the NDP and the Liberals was going to continue? Was the NDP bride going to find these wedding presents satisfactory? I do not know, but perhaps that accounted for some of the anticipation. Others, particularly those behind the minister who were supporting him, were looking for what they might call political goodies, for those things that would make for a good pre-election budget, no matter if those measures were devoid of any principle. We must remember that the thing is to win the next election, and with a nice cushion of swollen tax receipts the minister would be able to play the bountiful Santa Claus to the Canadian public.

The minister would not tell the Canadian public, of course, that he was merely returning to them money extracted from them by a tax schedule provided for by section 117 of the act which the government of Ontario as well as the members of this House, including the NDP, had told the government would grossly gouge the Canadian public and place in the federal coffers funds far in excess of the government's requirements. We now have an admission that the public was being gouged. The minister says with some pride—at least, he thinks it should be with some pride—that he is leaving with the taxpayers some $1.3 billion as a result of the Income tax changes that are proposed in the budget. As I have pointed out, according to the table of revenue that appeared at page 26 of the minister's budget speech, there will be an excess this year of $925 million over last year on the personal income tax account. This represents a growth in the Income tax collections of $2.2 billion. Talk about the government benefiting from inflation!

This is all part of the colouring of the atmosphere in this House the other night. However, there were legions all across this country who were looking to see whether the budget would propose some bold measures, measures that would be new departures to deal with the problems that have been with us for years. These problems have not been swept under a rug. The minister's predecessor used to say, having looked at one month's statistics, that the curve had levelled off and that therefore he could promise that we were going to do a lot better. I quoted that speech the minister made last May in which he solemnly declared that the cost of living index would be much improved during 1972, that we would do a great deal better in the field of unemployment. But what do we have? We have a level of increase in the cost of living now that is totally unacceptable to the Canadian people and it just cannot continue.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): It matters not what it is that influences these cumulative increases. The government had the best of all possible surveillance of these matters, but it strikes me that the surveillance was from the tail of the ostrich with its head in the sand. In other words, they could do nothing, did not want to do anything, and they did nothing.

The personal income tax cut included in this budget is, of course, welcome; there is no doubt about that. But it is less than the figure proposed by the Leader of the Opposition during the last campaign, indeed less than that which we have been proposing all along. Certainly, it is less than what it should be today. It is satisfactory as far as it goes, and I will not gainsay anyone who is able to benefit from this tax reduction. But it only shows, as I have pointed out before, that the tax rates in 1972 grossly overcharged the Canadian public. We are now going to get a decrease in the schedule by one point per tax bracket during 1973. This step was taken by the minister's predecessor to, shall I say, alleviate the possibility of excessive taxation and is statutory.

I also accept the increase of $100 in the personal exemption, but I should point out that the 5 per cent increase in the cost of living has already eroded $75 of the exemption in one year. If you take 5 per cent of $1,500 you will get $75, which brings the $1,500 down, in effect, to $1,425. This $100 increase will make up for the erosion of last year and will provide a partial bridge for this year until the personal income index comes into effect in 1974.

One would have expected there would be some really bold measures to deal with the increase in the cost of living. After all, the minister is relatively new to the job and is not tainted by the attitude that had prevailed when his predecessor was minister. However, the thinking seems to be the same; this budget is set in the same mould as last year's. As I have pointed out, even a lot of the phrases are the same.

As far as the customs tariff reductions are concerned, we have had that sort of thing before, when the only people who suffered as a result were Canadians. We all remember the acceleration of the Kennedy round cuts. There was no diminution in the cost of living index as a result of that move, and here we have a unilateral reduction in the customs tariff. Some of my colleagues in the field of agriculture, and others in the field of industry, tell me they cannot understand the philosophy of the government in making this unilateral move on the eve of new multilateral talks on the reduction of tariffs. Here, we have a whole series of bargaining points that have been given away.

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): They are temporary reductions.

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): Temporary?

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): That is right, for one year. I said so right in my speech.

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): These will not be temporary. I do not anticipate the minister having the opportunity of announcing in the House that he is revising these tariffs and increasing them again.

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): Do not get over-anxious, Marcel.

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): The minister tells me not to get over-anxious about this but I am not the one to be over-anxious.

• (1540)

I sometimes wonder about some of the underlying philosophy of this budget. Knowing the minister's position in the hierarchy of the Liberal party, one wonders just what circumstances might have coloured this budget. I do not want to be personal about this matter, but I could suggest all sorts of possibilities.

Quite frankly, this budget has no real economic purpose and no central theme. For instance, does the minister wish to expand the economy and, if so, how will this budget affect regional economic disparities? Has the minister taken steps in this budget with regard to regional economic disparities?

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): Is the minister doing anything in respect of solving agricultural problems?

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): I suggest that instead he is creating them in the horticulture industry.

An hon. Member: Don't be silly.

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): That is so. Does this budget do anything for the building industry?

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): What part of the economy of Canada does the minister intend to benefit by this budget?

[Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West).]

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): The Canadian consumer.

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): The minister says "the Canadian consumer". If that is so, why is there not one measure calculated to control the accelerating cost of living?

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): This is a policy of drift. This is a budget of tinsel, garland and candy. It is superficially attractive and lends itself to the kind of headlines I have seen to the effect that taxes are down and pensions are up. There are a number of proposals which we accept, and it would be quite wrong to reject them. Certainly, the minister will agree that the economic crunch of his budget must be related to the over-all impact. He has stated time and time again that he would attempt to deal with the problems of unemployment and inflation, but nowhere in this budget has he really attempted to do so. He has only expressed some fond hopes. The minister has become expert in professing fond hopes that the economy will somehow be cranked up, that we will see a flattening out of upward pressure on the CPI and also the creation of 330,000 jobs this year.

An hon. Member: 300,000.

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): Last year it was 330,000, but this year it is 300,000.

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): It was quite clear.

Mr. Stanfield: It is 300,000 this year.

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): Don't let your leader upset you.

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): Does the minister believe that the sales tax reductions and the customs tariff reductions will really have an effect on food prices? These reductions certainly will not have an effect on the demand for and the price of houses.

An hon. Member: What about housing starts?

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): I am sure we would all love to hear another factual speech by the hon. member for Bruce (Mr. Whicher). One of these days he will be good enough to bring his attention to bear on some of the true facts of this budget, and tell the Canadian people just how the cost of living is to be reduced and how employment will be increased. That hon. member passes through the city of Toronto regularly. Perhaps, he will tell us how this budget will in any way reduce the rapidly increasing cost of housing in that city. I should think he would have that matter very close to his heart, and we will anticipate his participation in this debate at some time.

An hon. Member: How about right now?

Mr. Muir: He gives the government hell and then votes with them.

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): In so far as the income tax cuts are concerned, they are generally acceptable to us. I spoke about the basic exemption for a married couple. Perhaps this will take care of the erosion caused by inflation during 1972. However, there is one thing I should like to find out in respect of the minister's charge that the Leader of the Opposition's constant dollar proposal was an impossible one. Were the adjustments made with the consent of the provinces? Has the minister been able to get provincial consent? I hope he will tell me that. Will the individual tax return in 1974 provide for an application of the adjustment formula to only federal tax or will it also apply to provincial tax? Having made the proposal at this time, I hope the minister or one of his colleagues will be able to tell us that this has been negotiated with the provinces, or has been presented as a fait accompli on a take it or leave it basis. Will this only apply to the federal portion of personal income tax? The answer no doubt will be interesting.

The increases in old age security to $100 is a good step forward. It provides some $13 more than would have been provided on April 1 as a result of the cost of living factor which would come into play at that time. We would then have had basic old age security at $86 and some cents. The adjustments in respect of the guaranteed income supplement are in keeping with the adjustments to the war veterans allowances.

However, there is one thing I wish in respect of these adjustments, and that is that the minister had been in consultation with some provincial authorities in respect of those senior citizens who live in nursing homes or senior citizens' homes. I hope that those who are being maintained at public expense will not have the biggest part of this increase in old age security taken from them under the guise of increased rents. I hope the minister will be able to use his good offices in conjunction with those of provincial ministers from one end of the country to the other to see that this does not happen.

I am not trying to make sheep or goats of any of the provinces, ministers or municipalities in this regard, and I know that it may be the municipalities that are involved, but this is my sincere hope. I know that in many instances these homes face municipal tax increases. This could be a frustrating step. If we must have a deficit in one area it is the Canadian taxpayer who must accept the deficit, and let us not try to say it is being passed on to someone else. It is the Canadian taxpayer who ultimately bears the cost of any deficit, if there must be one, to look after senior citizens and those people in public institutions who are better off there than they would be on their own.

There is some relief in respect of customs duties on such things as bagatelle tables, billiard tables, squash rackets, cricket bats and things of that sort. There is also some relief in respect of certain types of vegetables and fruits, and I am sure some of my colleagues from areas in British Columbia and the Niagara Peninsula will have more to say about this. There are others who will have something to say with regard to white hardware. I am not satisfied that this will prove to be a particularly good move. I am not satisfied this reduction will be passed on in any way to the consumer. Is there to be a monitoring system? We have had expressions of pious hopes in the past in respect of the reduction or removal of sales taxes so that the benefit could be passed on to the consumer if the purpose of the reduction is to fight the cost of living.

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): Did you see what Eaton's said today?

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): Yes, but next month it may be nothing. I know what the Hudson's Bay Company and others have done. I know what the chocolate bar people have said. Some of them have said they will just make a bigger bar for 15 cents.

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): A bigger buy for your money.

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): For more money. I know it would have cost the public treasury $200 million or $250 million more, but the minister could have done much more good in the battle against the inflating cost of living by taking off the 11 per cent sales tax on building materials. That step would be directly identifiable.

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): There is to be monitoring.

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): In respect of the sales tax reductions on children's clothing, has the minister a system of monitoring to see that this will be of benefit? May I ask the minister how much of that reduction or elimination of sales tax would be absorbed by the counter effect of the 10 per cent devaluation of the Canadian dollar. Childrens clothing which is imported from Japan would cost probably 16 per cent more than the present level. Goods from Hong Kong would cost from 8 per cent to 10 per cent more.

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): Surely, you are not blaming me for what the Janapese are doing?

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): The point is, Mr. Speaker, that the minister should not tell us in his speech that the reduction in sales tax on children's clothing and on these other commodities will have a very marked effect on the extent of the increase in the cost of living. The minister would have had to take 50 per cent, if he had that much tax on, in order to counterbalance the increase due to devaluation. The point is that building materials come mostly from Canada and the United States where there is not this difference as a result of the change in monetary valuation. I would suggest also to the minister that it is much easier to monitor, as a result of the concentration of these materials, the removal of the 11 per cent or 12 per cent tax from various categories of building materials. I believe the minister would have been further ahead had he spent another $250 million in this area because I suggest that his budget is not expansionary enough.

If one looks at the tables that were given to us yesterday by the President of the Treasury Board (Mr. Drury) in so far as the spending estimates of the government are concerned, one will recall that that minister said there was a difference of some $2200 million in the estimates between 1972 and 1973. The main claim the minister makes is that he has an expansionary budget. Let us look at table one which appears at page 16. If one looks at the budgetary estimates and non-budgetary estimates for 1972-73 and compares them to 1973-74 one can see there is not a difference of $2200 million. There is less than $900 million that the President of the Treasury Board called principal estimates. He conveniently forgot the $1800 million which came in as a supplementary estimate which we just passed. It is the other estimates at which we must look. Therefore, there is no question that this is an expansionary budget. This blue book of estimates reports the spending program of the government.

Now, in respect of the 5 per cent cost of living increase factor let us see where one stands in relation to the 1972-73 estimates. That amount of $800 million I spoke about disappears. Therefore, outside of the inflationary factor, and applied to last year's estimates, there is no change and yet this is supposed to be an expansionary budget.

Mr. Stanfield: They will end up with a big surplus again.

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): The minister made certain proposals with regard to tax reform. It is unfortunate that many taxpayers will be caught in a real bind this year. I hoped the minister could have had a word to give these people, because the law of 1971 says that they had to take certain action by 1973. The action taken by the taxpayers was supposed to be subject to regulations, but the regulations have not even been drawn up. Is there no way that the minister could have indicated, for instance in respect of the foreign affiliates provisions of the Income Tax Act, that the date which appeared in Bill C-222 would be changed. There are taxpayers in this country who, if they are to follow the law, will have to undertake extensive administrative changes. However, nothing has been said.

A similar situation exists in respect of discretionary trusts where the beneficiaries are supposed to make elections according to certain regulations. Substantial assets of Canadians, not strangers, are involved in this and yet these regulations have not even been drafted let alone promulgated. The minister has given no indication in this regard. I would hope he would have his colleague the Minister of National Revenue (Mr. Stanbury) stand in his place during this debate and make an authoritative statement in respect of all these matters. I know it will take some time to get Bill C-222 before this House and passed, but the taxpayer is entitled to justice. His fate should not be to be kept dangling in suspense because of the inability of the Finance Department, the Department of National Revenue or the other people involved in finance to agree or because of the deletoriousness at the cabinet level in agreeing on certain provisions. The taxpayer is entitled to a better deal than that.

There was one point that was raised by the Minister of Finance in answering the Leader of the Opposition, with regard to the $890 million which appears as a statutory item under the Department of Manpower and Immigration. This is a bookkeeping entry, but it is not part of an expansionary budget. It does not put one dollar into the economy. All it does is to meet the deficit in the unemployment insurance account which is finally computed with accuracy at the end of April. It goes to repay the advances the Minister of Finance has made under section 134 of the Unemployment Insurance Act. That is all that the $890 million does. It appears as part of this total $19 billion. As a matter of fact, I find that this year's estimates are below last year's, if one looks at the effect of the increasing cost of living which affects the government as much as it does anybody else. If the inflationary factor is applied, and this $890 million is not included, then this year's estimates are well below last year's. Not one dollar of this $890 million will ever appear in circulation; it is a bookkeeping entry.

This budget was supposed to deal with the problem of unemployment. Of course, it is an added bust when it comes to that. There is not within one ministry one proposal that actually makes a constructive effort to expand the economy. There is nothing there that will provide one meaningful job. There are some additional transfer payments.

Mr. Paproski: Long overdue.

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): They will be transfer payments; they will increase pensions; they will pay more under medicare and for health care. But that does not increase the number of jobs for Canadians.

Mr. Paproski: Where are those jobs?

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): Those are the things that we want to see. Having made these criticisms of the budget, and having indicated how the minister has failed to face up to the principal economic problems of this country, let me point out the third economic problem in this country, which looms large in the minds of many people, namely, the smaller degree of participation by Canadians in the ownership of Canadian business and development. The minister had a wonderful opportunity in this budget to do something positive with regard to that situation. There were many things he could have done to help Canadians acquire a bigger share of their own assets in business, and I do not care what kind of business it is, or a greater measure of control in their own resource development. I know that the minister's colleague, the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce (Mr. Gillespie) has a bill on the order paper, but the bill is entirely negative. It says: thou shalt not, thou shalt not, thou shalt not, all the way through. But does it tell Canadians: you may, or, you will be allowed to?

Mr. Baker: Nor does it say: we will help you.

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): This is the type of positive action that should be taken, and it could have been taken simply through amendments to the Income Tax Act. Why is there even a partial continuation of the principal occupation rule which bars Canadians from participating in resource development on equal terms with their American counterparts? You have tied the hands of Canadians behind their backs. You have done it for years. Certainly, in Bill C-259 there was a partial relief, but it was only partial; you untied one tiny knot but that arm is still up behind the back. In other sectors there are snackles round the ankles of Canadians as taxpayers in competition with foreigners in the development and ownership of Canadian resources.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): The administration moved in the right direction to eliminate estate taxes. The province of Alberta went the right way in not moving into that field. I trust that the province of Quebec will live up to its promise to do the same and that Ontario will do the same because in my book, in so far as the ownership and development of Canadian business and enterprise is concerned, there has been no greater shackle than the piracy under the succession duty legislation.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): We have seen hundreds and thousands of Canadian businesses that have had to come on the market at fire sale prices in order to meet the rapacious demands of the government's financial policy, the pound of flesh of the "have-nots" and of those who have worked in this country. It is an outdated method going back to the eighteenth and nineteenth centuries in Britain to break up landed estates. It is of no application in this country. How many good Canadian businesses, from small ones to major ones, have had to go on the market, and who was there with the money to buy the shares at fire sale prices? There were our friends south of the border and our friends across the ocean. There is not one member in the House who cannot call to memory some classic examples of that.

Mr. Lewis: I am one.

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): You have been blind. I can tell you of any number of them.

Mr. Lewis: Your tears for the poor millionaires who are dying really shower over me.

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): They are not millionaires, Mr. Speaker, many of them. We want to pile on the agony higher and higher succession duties. They will find out who sells before succession duties come on and how they sell and to whom they sell.

Mr. Lewis: If you have an opportunity to buy some, what are you yelling about?

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): I would have said that by changing the Income Tax Act, by persuasion with regard to succession duties, this situation could be avoided. Since the minister apparently had another good look at some of the fiscal proposals of the Leader of the Opposition and he found some to his liking, what about the small business investment tax credit that the Leader of the Opposition proposed to encourage Canadians? That would help Canadians to take a share in Canadian business.

I would like to make a proposal with regard to our resource development, and this would not cost the government anything at this time. Let us determine what is resource development from one end of the country to the other, and let us reserve this privilege for the average Canadian citizen and say to him: "Canadian, invest $1,000, $5,000". After all, what money can the average Canadian have? Invest it in the equities of whatever company or development you want within the ball park of the determined resource development. Then, you can sell that stock and buy another as long as you keep your capital and accrual to your capital within that ball park. If you want to get out at the end of one year and there is a capital gain, we will forgive you 20 per cent and then 20 per cent for each succeeding year. For instance, if the Minister of National Revenue has left our good friend the Minister of Regional Economic Expansion (Mr. Jamieson) with a few shekels and he has been able to invest $1,000 in resource development equities and finds at the end of five years they are worth $1,200, that is a $200 capital gain. One hundred dollars of that would be taxable, but because he has held the investment for five years we will forgive him the capital gains tax. This would apply to Canadian citizens only.

You may say that we are discriminating, but do we not all discriminate in some form or another? The government's legislation is certainly discriminatory when it comes to foreign takeovers and control of foreign investment. What I am saying is that within the Income Tax Act there would be an advantage available to Canadian citizens only to invest in Canadian resource development. Unless the investment is made, there is no tax that is lost; a taxable income will be earned providing the investment is there but there must be an incentive.

This is not a novel plan, Mr. Speaker. A variation of it has been tried in other countries, such as Australia, where the degree of ownership of natural resource development is far higher than in Canada because of such an incentive. This is, I suggest, a positive gesture in favour of Canadians owning a greater share of the resource development of this country.

Coming to the point—

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): Coming to the point of unemployment and those massive measures needed to turn the corner, Mr. Speaker, all sorts of proposals have been tried by the government over the past several years but there were still 688,000 people seeking work this last month.

Some hon. Members: Shame!

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): Can we, as Canadians, in good conscience continue to say that we can carry this load, that this becomes something we must get accustomed to, that it is something we have to bear like arthritis or rheumatism? Of course not. I would have thought that the Minister of Finance would have seized the opportunity to do something bold and imaginative. I would say that he should not have been content with this set of estimates which frankly are no greater than last year.

Mr. Alexander: Throw it at him, Marcel.

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): He couldn't make it.

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): Don't tempt me. On the basis of his forecast as to the gross national product and income, the minister should have said "I am going to make a massive attack on unemployment with a real expansionary budget. Something drastic has to be done; the corner has to be turned and we have not done it so far."

My colleagues the hon. member for Don Valley (Mr. Gillies) and my leader are going to elaborate on this point. On this occasion, a Conservative minister of finance would have introduced a really expansionary budget and if you want figures it could be $2½ billion or $3 billion to really do a job and at the same time not be afraid to impose a total price freeze and then phased price controls in order to contain inflation.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): We saw the example of a price freeze and phased controls in the United States. There will be some argument as to how effective it was at the time.

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): Food prices went up in the United States by 3 per cent in one month.

Mr. Lawrence: What are you doing in Canada?

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): The point is this, Mr. Speaker—

An hon. Member: Is this the point?

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): The hon. member who keeps yapping in the background would never understand in a year of Sundays. The minister should understand that the inflation psychology was blunted in the United States. The minister has another step to take as far as taxation is concerned and this is to turn that psychology—to get away from this anticipation of continuing inflation. The minister knows very well that there is a national psychological feeling with regard to inflation. Other countries have taken such steps and it would be in the interest of Canadians to do the same. The Conservative party would not be afraid to do this at this time. In future, if the circumstances are the same, I am satisfied that such steps would be taken without hesitation.

Mr. Speaker, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Peace River (Mr. Baldwin):

To strike out all the words after "that" and substitute the following:

While acknowledging certain beneficial provisions in the budget proposals, this House regrets that they do not contain measures that will substantially reduce continuing high unemployment, effectively contain the spiralling cost of living or provide any incentives to Canadians to increase their participation in Canadian business enterprise and development.

Mr. Max Saltsman (Waterloo): Mr. Speaker, in looking at this amendment I see that caution got the better of the drafters and they did not add the words "like the last Conservative government" when I think we had 10 per cent unemployment in this country. It is always a pleasure, Mr. Speaker, to follow the hon. member for Edmonton West (Mr. Lambert); of course, I mean to follow him in the sense of time rather than in the sense of agreeing with him.

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): That is because you have never understood it.

Mr. Saltsman: In a few moments, as I listened to what he said, I thought he would support the budget. He seemed to suggest that there are all kinds of good things in it, things that he supports; yet, somehow or other, he never quite made that statement. I think he came down in favour of virtually everything except bringing back the enclosure laws.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Saltsman: You know, it is hard for a man to have faith anymore. It is hard to know what one can believe in.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Nowlan: Waterloo is the right constituency for the hon. member. He will soon meet his Waterloo.

Mr. Saltsman: At one time, the Conservative party was the party of fiscal integrity. You knew where it stood.

Mr. Nowlan: So did the Minister of Finance, and now look at him.

Mr. Saltsman: However, when the spokesman for the Conservative party says that the $2 billion deficit—and this is really something—is not sufficient, it is apparent that the day of balanced budgets is over and fiscal responsibility has gone by the board. We decided we were going to support this budget—

Mr. Alexander: Surprise, surprise.

Mr. Nowlan: The hon. member means, support the trained seals on the government side.

Mr. Saltsman: Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to see how responsive my friends in the official opposition are. I think I should make clear what we are supporting.

Mr. Nowlan: We know; your own political hides.

Mr. Saltsman: Oh, no.

Mr. Nowlan: Oh, yes. There is no surtax on them.

Mr. Saltsman: We are supporting specific measures contained in this budget, and not those contained in the previous budget brought down last May. This is a much better budget. I know the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Stanfield) has taken on himself the onerous task of being our conscience and advising us on how we should maintain our purity. I do not want him to think we do not appreciate him, because we do appreciate him.

An hon. Member: Stanley is in shock.

Mr. Saltsman: Let him get his facts straight so that, while acting as our conscience, he does not inadvertently become misled.

An hon. Member: Stanley is still in shock.

Mr. Saltsman: Let me explain our position. This is not a budget that we, if we were a government, would have brought down. We have reservations about many provisions in this budget. We have reservations about the size of the deficit. We think it should have been larger, that more stimulation should have been applied.

Mr. Nowlan: Well, well.

Mr. Saltsman: Oh, yes. We had other considerations in mind. Perhaps the deficit will not be the determining factor in the amount of employment that will be created in this country. That is one of many considerations which must be taken into account. We suggest that there must be a change in the mix of economic policies followed in this country. We must move away from resource development that does not provide job opportunities and move into the manufacturing sector that does provide them. There is considerable evidence to indicate that, in the past, the size of deficits has not been the only important consideration.

I recall that in 1960-61 the Conservative government of the day, faced with a 10 per cent unemployment rate, also budgeted for a deficit but failed to create jobs. Why, Mr. Speaker? I will tell you why. When the government was budgeting for a deficit capital was coming in, resource development was taking place, interest rates was being forced up, our dollar was too high, and these factors tended to nullify any effects that might otherwise have been felt from the budget deficit. Unless the government introduces a whole range of policies designed to bring down the level of our dollar and curb resource development, and this can be done by accepting the Carter Commission proposals and taxing resource industries more heavily than now, the budgetary deficit in itself will not be sufficient.

The increase in old age pensions, although highly acceptable and welcome, is not one with which we are prepared to be satisfied. We will not be satisfied with the increase announced and will continue to urge the government to increase that amount again. I think this is the position my party has taken for a long time, and it is a position that the party will continue to take. It was not many years ago that J. S. Woodsworth stood in this House and pleaded for a $20 old age pension. We can look back on those years with satisfaction. We have not achieved everything we wanted, but we have certainly come some distance from those days. I think my colleagues and I can take great pleasure in knowing that, from time to time, we have been in the position of exerting influence on governments to increase the old age pension in accordance with precepts of equity and justice.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Saltsman: We have reservations about the indexed income system, that great idea the Liberals stole from the Conservatives. I know there is a poverty of ideas within that party, as well as on the government side. That, certainly, was not one of their better ideas. The indexed income issue was phony from day one, because if you adjust income tax rates from year to year you will achieve exactly the same results. Nevertheless, the government saw fit to steal that idea from the Conservative party. I understand the Conservatives are feeling uncomfortable. They are not accustomed to having their ideas stolen. After all, why steal from them? If you are going to steal, why go to an empty cupboard?

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Saltsman: We are more accustomed to having our ideas stolen. Actually, in a sense, we wear clothes with large seams, to make sure that when they are stolen they are suitable for others. In time, the great Progressive Conservative party will become accustomed to the idea and accept it with the graciousness that one should acquire from this sincere form of flattery. I will return to the indexed tax system later. At this time, I merely want to note my reservations about it. I do not think it will do a great deal of harm or a great deal of good. I simply think it was a phony issue; nevertheless, there it is.

On balance, this is a better budget than any I have ever seen brought before this House—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Saltsman: —by any majority government. It is far from perfect, and we have reservations about it. If you compare this budget with the kinds of budgets Canadians have had to swallow from majority governments, I think you can say on balance that there has been an improvement. I am including Conservative as well as Liberal governments in my comments.

Mr. Nowlan: You will not swallow it for more than six months, if you are here.

Mr. Saltsman: I do not know where the hon. member will be, but I intend to be here.

An hon. Member: I thought you were not going to run again.

Mr. Saltsman: I will be here until then. While we recognize that we did not get everything we wanted, the government accepted many ideas we have been putting forward for a long time. My party has 31 seats in this House and we took 18 per cent of the vote in Canada in the last election. We do not expect, because circumstances have placed us in the position of exerting enormous bargaining power, to use that power to extract everything we want.

An hon. Member: Oh, no?

Mr. Saltsman: I do not think we have the right to do that. On the other hand, we have the responsibility to act on behalf of the voters who voted for us in this country and gave us the seats we hold. We have always held seats in this House and people have always voted for us but, because there have been majority governments, our influence was not given the recognition that it deserved. In a majority House, all parties have influence. That is the way it should be. This government has accommodated itself to us, and so it should have, not only this time but at all other times in the past. It is the failure of majority governments to accommodate minorities that should be condemned, rather than the failure of minority governments to accommodate minorities in this House.

Instead of the 3 per cent tax cut that the government would have been content with before the last election, there is to be a 12 per cent tax cut. Mr. Speaker, it is a 12 per cent tax cut and it is a progressive tax cut. The government has, in fact, accepted in an indirect way one of the proposals we have been making for a tax credit. The idea of having a lower minimum of $100 and a maximum of $500 is basically the same principle as a tax credit. It increases the progressiveness of the tax system to a remarkable degree. As my leader said, this is not the millennium, but it is the acceptance of an important principle that the chief beneficiaries of tax cuts should be at the lower rather than at the higher end of the taxation scale. To the extent that this is being accepted, we are for it. It is four times more than Canadians would have gotten under other circumstances.

The old age pension is being increased by roughly 15 per cent. Veterans pensions have been increased by roughly the same amount. Even the farmers have received some benefits this time. As I recall, in the last budget there was not a single word about farmers. It was as though they did not exist. It looks as though the government in its desperation to remain in office, and I am glad it got desperate enough to think about this, went back over our amendments and decided to pick up some of the ideas we advocated, and in fairness, some of the ideas the Conservatives and Social Credit party advocated.

I remember arguing strongly, as did other members from Saskatchewan, that a farm should be passed on to a son or another member of the family without the payment of a capital gains tax. At the time we moved that amendment, the obstacles for the Liberal party seemed insurmountable. Somehow or other, those obstacles have melted away. We are glad the idea has been accepted and, I think, it has been accepted in a very intelligent way. As long as the farm passes to a member of the family who continues to farm, no capital gains tax is payable. If the farm passes into speculation or some other use, a tax becomes payable, which is right and proper.

There has been a return to measures that permit the building of herds. This is an argument that was made by people in our party as well as the Conservative party. Under the previous tax system, the possibility of building a herd in the early years was not being treated with the consideration it deserved. The government has moved to correct that. To that extent, I think the present budget is useful.

The Minister of Finance, with all his taking ways, has apparently played no favourites. He has robbed everybody. Everyone has had to give up something, involuntarily of course. He is taking from everyone. The government is repaying an obligation it has owed the Social Credit party since 1963 when that party supported their motion and brought down the government. I note the son of the leader of the Social Credit party spoke with approval on the government's position to raise the old age pension and gave the Social Credit party the credit. That party had been advocating a $350 a month pension for married couples. He feels that the $330 is very much in line with what they wanted and he seems to be somewhat satisfied.

As I said earlier, the government also took an idea from the Conservatives, such as it was. I know this will reinforce the belief of the Conservative party that it pays to advertise. All the running around this country advocating this idea, publicizing it, and speaking about it over television and to newspaper men has paid off. The Conservatives got what they wanted. The government accepted their idea. I presume that if they have an idea like that in the future, they will restrict it to the confines of their caucus in case the Minister of Finance steals it.

Something was taken from everyone. Even the page boys got to the receptive Minister of Finance on the candy bars. He has been very accommodating in that way. I would not want to have it appear that the Minister of Finance is a man totally devoid of ideas, because he is not. He has a lot of ideas, one of which is the leadership of the Liberal party. He has a lot of ideas aside from that. In fact, he has done some significant things in this budget and should be given credit for them.

One thing that was done, and the hon. member for Edmonton West (Mr. Lambert) did not think very much of this, was to unilaterally reduce the tariffs on certain items that do not significantly affect employment in Canada. That is an important step. I do not remember another occasion when a government unilaterally removed tariffs. If they did, I do not remember when it was. Whenever there was such a reduction in the past, it was always based on trading off something we have against something another country had. I realize this is only a temporary reduction and the trading potential is still there. It may be somewhat diminished. I hope the minister will not deny that. Nevertheless, the potential is still there.

What is important is that the government is prepared to use an instrument of policy to control consumer prices, something it should have used a long time ago. As long ago as the MacQuarrie commission report on combines, the recommendation to the government was that when you find collusion in the market place and working people are not affected by having some advantages passed along to the consumer, the government should act to remove their tariff protection. They have never done that. On each occasion where collusion was found and a recommendation for tariff removal should have been in order, the government took the position that it could not do it because it would be giving away its bargaining rights at the next round of negotiations. An insignificant fine was levied against the monopolies and they charged what the traffic would bear.

This particular measure, although it does not affect an enormous range of products, still affects enough products for it to have an impact. Its chief impact will not be that prices will be dramatically lowered as a result of the action that was taken. Its chief impact will be, if the government is alive to what it is doing, a warning to industries that do not pass on the savings they should that a government can make a recommendation to have their tariff protection removed. In the long run, it is important for this country to move toward tariff removal. Because of the nature of our country and the feeling in the west against tariff protection, the more we move in that direction without harming those industries which are in a special position, the better things will be. Therefore, I welcome that particular proposal in the budget. I see it as an innovative proposal for which the Minister of Finance should take some credit.

I said earlier that the inclusion of a minimum and a maximum amount for reduction of the income tax is a good feature because it increases the progressiveness of the tax schedule. I am glad to see that the government, after its conversations with the provincial governments, has moved to accept one of their arguments for including school taxes in the tax base. That is very important to many of the provinces.

Let me turn now, to another item in this budget which I feel to be of significance. I have said many nice things about the Minister of Finance. I think this particular thing was not by design. It is something he tripped over in his desire to keep support in this House. We have suffered enormously in this country from a decision made by Liberal governments of previous years that the worst thing we have to face in Canada is inflation rather than unemployment. As a result of that decision, this country was plunged into an unnecessary recession. There were enormous losses in production, untold hardship among the unemployed and enormous damage to our capacity as a nation to do good things and move ahead. It was a disastrous policy on the part of the Liberal government when they decided that inflation was the number one enemy. Inflation was, of course, an important matter. No one can dismiss it as insignificant.

But far more important was the need to concentrate on getting people to work, on providing jobs for Canadian people. Advice given at the time was ignored. Everything the government did was designed to contain an inflation which was largely international. This budget changes that pattern in a number of ways: first, by recognizing that it is necessary to run a sizeable deficit. I think most people will agree with me that the deficit was not large enough but it is a continuation of a deficit and it is bound to have an inflationary affect at the same time that it is stimulating the economy. But more than that, members opposite have accepted a principle we have put forward on many occasions. Yet, let us do what we can to contain inflation, but let us not kid ourselves that we can contain every aspect of inflation. Therefore, let us assure that those on fixed incomes are compensated while we are fighting the fight against inflation and not held, as they have been held, as hostages to a government with intentions that it could not match with action. Now, that has been accepted. The old age pension is indexed. You have gone beyond that. Veterans pensions are indexed and now they have picked up the Conservative idea of indexing the income tax.

As I said earlier, I do not think it is a very good idea, but it is an acceptance of a certain kind of principle. There is nothing much to get excited about one way or the other, because what is really important about the taxes people pay is the rate. It doesn't much matter whether you make this adjustment of 4 per cent up or down or in or out or sideways. That has been accepted. If you want to subtitle the minister's speech, it might be called "How to limit inflation and like it." It frees the minister's hands, now, to start moving this country ahead. These indexes are "in" and those who are going to be hurt by inflation will be compensated. Therefore, the government's No. 1 priority has to be the same as it should have been in the past, namely to get full employment in Canada.

In October, when the dust had cleared, parliament wound up in an unusual position. The early talk was that the country would be ungovernable and that parliament would be unmanageable. All of us were given a share of power. The question was, how would each party use that power. The Liberals have less power than before and they have proven themselves somewhat more accommodating as a result. Even the language in the House has improved to some extent. How have the Conservatives behaved?

Mr. Gilbert: Terribly.

Mr. Saltsman: You are right, they have behaved terribly. They have a little more power than they had before, and it has gone to their heads. All they can think of is bringing the government down and getting themselves in. If the right hon. gentleman from Prince Albert (Mr. Diefenbaker) were here, he could tell a story of how he laughed at the Liberals in 1957 when they suggested to him, get out, get out and let us in; we are the chosen. Now, the Conservatives seem to have picked up the same theme. They are the chosen and the Liberals should make way for them. I do not think it is a position which would be accepted in the country.

Mr. Morgan: Let's find out.

Mr. Saltsman: You will find out soon enough. You certainly did not get any endorsation in the last election.

Mr. Morgan: Nor did you.

Mr. Saltsman: No, we didn't get one, but we have not let it go to our heads, either!

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Saltsman: Given such a situation, the responsibility of making parliament work has to a large extent fallen on the New Democratic Party. Some hon. members may laugh, but that is because they do not want parliament to work. We campaigned on the basis that we were going to make parliament work, and that is our commitment.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Saltsman: That is why, on a budget which has been designed to meet some of our objectives, and the objectives of other political parties, we think those responsible for it are deserving of support. It is for that reason we intend to support them. We intend to live up to our responsibility of seeing that parliament functions as long as it brings in good legislation. That should be clear. I should like to repeat what I said earlier. Our support is for this budget and for the ways and means motions which flow from this budget alone. There should be no misconstruing of the position of the New Democratic Party in relation to other matters which may come before us.

This budget has got something for everyone. Economists will like it because of the tariff proposals; consumers will like it for a similar reason; old age pensioners are receiving some benefits, veterans are receiving some benefits, farmers are receiving some benefits, small business is receiving some benefit; all taxpayers are receiving some benefits and the provinces are receiving some benefits. It has been without a doubt one of the most political budgets this country has ever seen and I say "political" in the best meaning of that word. Some of those great economic budgets which were designed by governments with a large majority turned out to be complete fiascos. This time, out of sheer necessity, out of the need to adapt itself to the various opinions held in this House, I think we have a political budget which is a good budget. Speaking to me about it the other day, the hon. member for Broadview (Mr. Gilbert) called it a survival budget, a survival kit. Well, it is a survival kit. It is the government's survival kit. If I may quote Samuel Johnson:

> Depend on it, Sir, when a man knows he is to be hanged in a fortnight it concentrates his mind wonderfully.

Mr. Speaker, may I congratulate the Minister of Finance on his powers of concentration?

[Translation]

Mr. René Matte (Champlain): Mr. Speaker, we were really eager to hear the budget speech of the Minister of Finance (Mr. Turner) last Monday.

I do not know whether the fact of having been chosen the fifth best-looking Canadian, male had some effect on him, but he seems to have rewarded his supporters with candy.

So many promises had been made! So nice things had been suggested! Such a renewed governmental policy in the economic and social fields had been predicted that we were expecting a budget repleted with social and economic measures meant to give satisfaction to Canadian taxpayers.

We had been told, Mr. Speaker, that the government had seen the light in October last when the Canadian electors had clearly indicated that they were not satisfied with its performance and had threatened to remove it, if it did not amend shortly.

The Liberal government had then promised to mend its ways, to make it up with the people and listen to their most urgent requests and it had then brought forward a Throne Speech which enabled us to believe that it was finally to govern in the best interests of the Canadian people.

Having heard Monday night the Minister of Finance make amends and admit the past mistakes and faults of the Liberal government, having heard him implicitly state that the government had failed to find employment for those who wished to work and that family budgets are burdened as a result of price increases and taxes of all kinds, we were expecting more thorough reforms, more effective measures to solve the unemployment problem in order to assure the security of all Canadians and reduce prices to an acceptable level for Canadian consumers.

Now, what does the Minister of Finance say in his budget? The purpose of this budget, he says, is to bring about a substantial reduction in unemployment. The budget, he adds, is aimed at the faster growth of our economy, at reducing inflationary pressures and the squeeze of rising prices on family budgets. Finally, this budget, according to the Minister of Finance, is aimed at increasing the real income and improving the standard of living of Canadians.

[Mr. Saltsman.]

That means, Mr. Speaker, that the minister recognizes the gravity of the unemployment situation. The government admits that our economy is not healthy. This means as well that they admit that inflation was not licked and this finally means that they admit that many Canadians are in need and deserve a better fate.

Mr. Speaker, has the Minister of Finance taken the necessary steps to prevent thousands of Canadians from being unemployed? Does that mean that the Minister of Finance announced the decision of the government to secure economic security for all Canadians? Finally, does that mean that the hon. Minister of Finance found a way to stop the inflation and the rapid increase in prices which continuously swallows up an ever increasing part of family budgets?

To find an answer to these questions, Mr. Speaker, we will analyse some of the proposals contained in the budget to find out if the announced measures will be enough to solve the present problems of our economy.

In the Montreal Gazette of Tuesday February 20, 1973, the editorial is entitled: "The Candy Budget". The author reminds us that the right hon. Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) has undertaken, in a speech which will undoubtedly last for ever, that if the government was reelected, it would distribute goodies to the people of Canada. According to the Gazette, the hon. Minister of Finance took this statement seriously since he announced the removal of the sales tax on chocolate bars.

In its Tuesday issue, the Toronto Globe and Mail also speaks about "candy kisses" contained in the budget introduced by the Minister of Finance.

Finally, in the Journal de Montréal published on Tuesday, one can read the following title: "At last we have them, Trudeau's candies" and reporter Jacques Guay writes about it, and I quote:

> Mr. Trudeau keeps his promises. He promised "candies", lots of candies to Quebecers. He kept his word in his first minority budget. If the manufacturers do not keep everything for themselves, we will pay less for Pepsi, chips, make-up, Dentyne gum and Caramilk bars, thanks to Mr. Turner's last budget.

That then is the tone the Minister of Finance gave his budget: "candies", cheaper candies, Dentyne gum, and soda-pop, more crumbs. But that budget does not hold anything of sustenance. Yet, they claim they want to solve the problem of unemployment and give economic security to the Canadians.

First, let us study the celebrated matter of the cuts in excise tax and duties on some imported goods. In his "Supplementary Information on the Budget", the Minister of Finance explained as follows:

> The budget proposes important new exemptions from the federal sales tax and the removal of special excise taxes on many consumer items. While the changes are effective immediately, their full impact on retail prices may not be felt until goods upon which the taxes have already been paid move to retail shelves and are sold.

When he brought down his first budget on May 8, 1972, the minister stated that the economic expansion would put an end to unemployment and that inflation would at last be controlled.

We know what happened. The rate of unemployment has kept on going up while prices are at a record high. That should give us an indication of what we should believe when the Minister of Finance tells us that the cuts in sales taxes and excise taxes will benefit the Canadian consumer.

What gives to the hon. Minister of Finance (Mr. Turner) assurance that lowering the sales tax and removing special excise taxes will benefit the consumer and not the retailer? What gives him assurance that some retailers will not take the opportunity either to increase their profits or to try to improve their unsteady situation because they have difficulty in striking a balance and meeting their expenditures? Who then will benefit from these lower sales and excise taxes and what measures will the government take in order that these cuts are really passed on to the consumer?

And why have especially chosen chocolate bars or Dentyne chewing gum as typical products on which the government wants to make sales taxes disappear?

For years now, Mr. Speaker, the Social Credit party of Canada and other opposition parties have been asking the government to eliminate that nuisance tax on building materials. For years, house builders have been requesting the elimination of that 11 per cent tax on building materials whose fall outs are heavily felt in the budget of all Canadian families, either in the monthly payment they have to make to pay for their house or in the rental payment they must make each month. The elimination of that tax would have been more beneficial and logical for the Canadian consumer than that proposed by the Minister of Finance for "candies" and bubble gum.

Secondly, the minister proposes an increase in the basic exemption on personal income; he also proposes to reduce personal income tax.

Let us say first of all that we do not understand how is it that between an income of $3,000 and another one of $6,000, the only difference in the tax reduction for the unmarried taxpayer earning that income will be a mere $2.

The same phenomenon recurs in the case of the salaried married man with two dependent children and whose annual income varies from $5,000 to $10,000. The wage-earner whose income is $5,000 will benefit from a $137 reduction a year, while another man earning $10,000 will have a reduction of $145 a year. How come the one earning $10,000 is entitled to a $145 reduction while the other who is getting $5,000 would only receive $137? The latter certainly needs a bigger cut than the one earning $10,000 a year.

The minister assures us in the budget that such measures will permit to salvage the family funds which are depleted by inflation and rising prices.

Looking at the statistics supplied by the minister himself on page 13 of the "Supplementary Information on the Budget" we notice first that, for instance, the married taxpayer with two dependent children under 16 and whose income is $6,000 a year will get a reduction in the federal and provincial tax of $139 for the year 1973. The amount of $139 annually corresponds to a $2.66 supplement a week in the taxpayer's pay envelope whose income is $6,000 and who, furthermore, has two dependent children under 16. A weekly supplement of $2.66 works out to 38 cents a day for four persons or, if you prefer, 9½ cents a day per person. This 9½ cents a day per person does not even buy a 10 cent chocolate bar from which the excise tax has been removed.

All this means, Mr. Speaker, that we should not be bowled over by the budgetary proposals of the Minister of Finance.

The married taxpayer with two 16-year-old children and an income of $6,000 will not even be able to buy a chocolate bar for 10 cents a day with the tax reduction the federal government has just granted him. This is for the birds.

Let us now look at this problem from another point of view, using the same example of a married taxpayer with two children under 16 and an annual income of $6,000.

After looking over the tables which the Minister of Finance himself supplied, we know this particular taxpayer will pay $139 less in 1973 for income tax. This means he will have $139 more in his pockets than before income tax reduction. On comparing with 1972, one wonders what will be the benefits for the taxpayer. According to Statistics Canada monthly publication no. 62-001 on consumer price movements, the consumer price index as regards food prices has risen by 13.6 per cent in 1972 and it stands at 150 for January 1973 compared with 136.4 in January 1972. As explained by Statistics Canada, this is a proportional increase of 10 per cent.

What is the equivalent of an annual or weekly increase of 10 per cent for food in a family budget for four people.

As usual, we are going to obtain an answer from the government itself in a bulletin released February 15 last by the Department of Agriculture under the title: "Tastes Dictate Grocery Bills". In that publication, the Department of Agriculture seems to insinuate that Canadians want to eat too well, hence the increase in the price of foods.

The Department of Agriculture shows three sample budgets for Canadian families.

The first one is a budget of misery which is pompously called moderate. It is set at $28.70 weekly.

The second budget which is highly recommended by the Department of Agriculture is an average budget for a family of four and which amounts to $47.76 weekly. Finally, there is the "generous" budget which amounts to $49.90 weekly.

For analysis purposes, let us study the intermediate weekly budget of $47.76 for an average family of four. I would compare this, Mr. Speaker, with the amount of $39 per person granted by the Quebec Department of Social Affairs, with the fact it is considered normal to spend $47.76 weekly.

If it is estimated that in theory the typical budget on January 1, 1973 would have amounted to $47.76 in practice it would have amounted to about $43, removing that 10 per cent because prices have increased by 10 per cent since January 1, 1972. This would amount to a weekly increase of $4.75 in the food budget of a family of four, over the year 1972, that is an annual increase of $247.

But what do they suggest to grant a family of four which draws an income of $6,000 a year? The Minister of Finance proposes to give it a tax reduction of $139. How can the minister explain that with $139 one can buy $247 worth of goods? This is a mathematical impossibility if one considers simply the case of the government concerning the moderate food budget introduced by the Minister of Agriculture.

What am I saying, Mr. Speaker? This average family of four whose annual income is $6,000 cannot even afford the low price food basket, the poor man's basket at $28.70 that the Minister of Agriculture suggests in the release that I referred to earlier.

Mr. Speaker, considering that the increase in the cost of living has been 10 per cent in the case of food over 1972, it can be said that today's market basket, costing $28.70, cost $25.83 in January 1972. We can say that basket now costs $2.87 more a week which for 1973 makes $149.24 more than in 1972. Now, the Minister of Finance has found no better compensation for that increase in the cost of food than a tax cut of $139. That family will therefore be $10.24 short for the purchase of a poor man's basket during the 52 weeks of 1973.

And that, of course, includes none of the other increases, rents, transportation, gasoline, medical care, leisure. Everything is increasing, Mr. Speaker, and we are all aware of that.

We have no congratulations to extend to the Minister of Finance for the minor tax cut he is offering the average Canadian taxpayer.

However, the minister did better when he announced an increase in old age security pensions. Of course, we know that these pensions will be increased from $82.88 to $100 a month beginning April 1, that is an increase of $17.22 per month. We believe that all Canadians who have reached pension age have the right to an equal pension sufficient to allow them a decent life. This pension must be high enough to enable them to benefit from Canada's wealth, from Canadian production and from all that the activity and genius of Canadian workers can make available to them.

This is why, we, of the Social Credit Party, are once more today proposing that the elderly person who retires should receive at least $200 per month whereas his or her spouse should receive at least $150 per month, no matter what his or her age.

We believe that the government has lost a magnificient opportunity to bring more happiness into numerous homes for the elderly in Canada by not allowing the spouse of the retired individual the right to receive this pension as soon as the breadwinner of the family or couple retires.

Nevertheless, we recognize that the government has taken a step in the right direction and we congratulate ourselves, of the Social Credit Party, for always having been at the vanguard of those who were asking for better conditions for the elderly and the retired whereas our Liberal friends are only beginning to become aware of this. Not so long ago, Mr. Speaker, the government was simply refusing to increase the basic old age pension.

On May 4, 1970, during a vote on a motion of the hon. member for Winnipeg-North-Centre (Mr. Knowles) to increase the basic pension to $150 per month, the Minister of Finance and the right hon. Prime minister as well as the hon. member for Langelier voted against this motion while the Créditistes supported it.

The hon. member for Témiscamingue (Mr. Caouette), leader of our party, said at that time:

> We support the objectives of the motion. For many years, we have called for a $150-a-month old age pension. We are calling for a similar pension for the blind and the disabled as a basic pension for all classes of society. We are in a position to do it because production in Canada can guarantee such a pension.

This is what the leader of the Social Credit Party of Canada said on May 4, 1970 to support a motion to raise old age pensions, which was fought and rejected by the Liberal members who were then in this House.

Mr. Speaker, it can be said that only a fear of losing power, a fear of being defeated on the coming votes seems to guide this government who does not seem to have any social policy, let alone a family policy.

At least, this is what is suggested by Roger Bellefeuille, a journalist, in a study published in the Quebec Le Soleil on February 15 last.

On the subject of family allowances under the heading "The Cornerstone of a Social Policy", Mr. Bellefeuille writes:

> Had the federal government officially advocated an "anti-family" policy, it could not have shown more reluctance, as has been the case since 1945, to offset more generously family expenses.
> It may be argued that other so-called social measures, such as hospital insurance, medicare, the so-called free education, drug insurance for welfare recipients, help to alleviate the financial burden of families, the fact still remains that over the years, the steady increase in the cost of living has systematically eroded the purchasing power of families.
> The cost of food products has increased by 52 per cent.
> During that time, the federal government, with a disconcerting meanness, maintained family allowances at $6 a month for children up to 10 and $8 for those from 10 to 16.
> It did not even deem it advisable to index them on the cost of living.

This was written last Thursday, a few days before the budget was brought down.

We, of the Social Credit party, find this attitude of the government shocking. We are shocked to see the present government pursue a policy likely to prove unfair to families, to reduce the birth rate, so that people, particularly in Quebec, become discouraged. And while forgetting its essential programs for family development and progress, the government seems inclined to talk even more of abortion. Such an attitude, Mr. Speaker, is somewhat shocking.

We feel that the government has missed the opportunity to give to all Canadians the economic security and social measures that they deserve.

We, of the Social Credit, have established a program; we put it to the people and, Mr. Speaker, in Quebec, where our party is better organized than elsewhere, we have made more progress than all other parties.

Mr. Speaker, I want to repeat in the House what we propose, so that the entire population will know what policy a Creditiste government will implement when it comes into power.

Mr. Speaker, the basis of our policy is to give a chance to all Canadians to achieve self-fulfilment. And since, as far as the province of Quebec is concerned, the administration of all social measures comes de jure or de facto under provincial jurisdiction, we would obviously settle major problems by striking at their roots.

This is why we have included in our political platform, with regard to provincial rights, the following sentence: The Social Credit party of Canada will make available to all provinces the financial means they need in order to fully assume their constitutional responsibilities, without any interference from the federal government.

And further, we said: The Social Credit party of Canada believes that the present constitutional status quo, with which nobody is satisfied, must be left behind and the provinces must be given the power to be themselves, to develop and to fufil themselves, according to their needs and aspirations.

In other words, Mr. Speaker, the dilemma facing the government and the Minister of Finance comes from what? It comes from a lack of co-ordination between the different levels of government.

This is why the Social Credit party of Canada said that the provincial governments should have their say in the development of monetary policies. The exclusive control of money and its extension, credit, through the federal government, the federal government's action on currency rates, on the money supply, on prices and inflation, have a direct influence on provincial finance and local economic development possibilities.

For these reasons, the provinces should participate in the development of those policies. In co-operation with the federal government, they should be able to turn their own credit into money in the same way as they are now able to borrow money on their own credit.

Some might say, Mr. Speaker, that the federal-provincial conferences are arranged to solve this problem, but everyone knows that those conferences have only one objective: to enable the ministers involved, in this case the Minister of Finance, to tell the provincial ministers, in a paternalistic way, that such is the Federal government's decision and that they can take it or leave it.

In the field of customs and trade, the provinces are now unable to protect their industries whereas the federal government can, through its power to negotiate or set customs tariffs—as mentioned in the budget speech—impose regulations on exports and imports, and thus considerably affect provincial economies.

We feel that negotiation of custom tariffs and settlement of extensive trade agreements should be done in consultation and with assent of provincial governments.

In respect of taxation, direct taxation was reserved for a very long time to the provinces because that was their only source of revenue. By its policies elaborated during the war, the central government tried to withdraw from the provinces that source of revenue; at the present time, the continuous presence of the central government in the field of direct taxation results in freezing and destroying all direct taxing powers of provinces.

The increasing needs of provinces in the field of education, social security and industrial expansion require that the provinces get back their direct taxing power.

Mr. Speaker, if we let the provinces administer as they want the matters under their own juridiction, probably there would be fewer constitutional conflicts, fewer fiscal conflicts and then it would be possible to implement the social security program we commended in the course of the last electoral campaign.

Mr. Speaker, we have repeated it many times: it is essential that some day—and that day should be much closer than we think—all Canadians should be given a guaranteed vital minimum income. Our country enjoys a fantastic amount of resources and it is unthinkable that the people should not take advantage of them.

Mr. Speaker, in conclusion and further to the amendment of the hon. member for Edmonton West (Mr. Lambert), I move the following subamendment:

That the amendment be amended by striking out the period and by substituting the following:

"as well as the absence of measures designed to reduce the burden of the federal public debt and to stimulate the public financing of the provinces by interest-free loans from the Bank of Canada."

• (1720)

[English]

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Hon. members have heard the motion.

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I wonder whether Your Honour would give the House an opportunity to look at the amendment and reserve our right to argue its admissibility, particularly in the absence of the House leader.

Mr. Baldwin: I am perfectly willing to consent to that, Mr. Speaker although, on looking at the amendment I note that its wording is almost identical to that of the subamendment proposed by the same party 10 years ago and supported by the government party, including my friend, the Minister of Finance (Mr. Turner).

[Translation]

Mr. Fortin: Mr. Speaker, I shall hold my remarks as to the admissibility of such an amendment if you accept the proposal of the Minister of Finance but it seems evident to us that this subamendment is in order.

[English]

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I think there is a general disposition in the House to leave for the moment the question of the admissibility of the amendment. Perhaps, in fairness to hon. members, since the vote on it would take place at 9.45 p.m. tomorrow evening if it is found to be in order, it could be agreed that the argument on the admissibility or otherwise of the proposed subamendment would take place immediately upon the calling of this order tomorrow. Is this agreed?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: It is agreed and so ordered.

[Translation]

Mr. Raynald Guay (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Justice): Mr. Speaker, the presentation of the budget last Monday by the Minister of Finance (Mr. Turner) seems to please most members, since it put together some realistic measures meant to improve economic prospects in 1973 for the individuals as well as for the community.

Mr. Speaker, we have endeavoured in 1972 to control inflation and unemployment, but I sincerely believe that the measures proposed in the last budget are really likely to make us reach our objectives, since they will promote the production rate and therefore employment. In addition, the budget has the great merit of enabling Canadians to benefit from higher incomes and thus increase their purchasing power. If a certain stability is maintained, especially as far as the American economy is concerned, 1973 should be a good year for the Canadian people on the whole.

But, obviously, everything is not perfect; I am sure that members of the opposition will agree with me and I should have liked to see certain questions included in this budget, for example, the question of shipyards.

I think we should tackle this problem as soon as possible because I consider that industry as essential from a defence and national economy standpoint. Our shipyards played an important role during the recent wars and one must recognize also that that industry now employs thousands of Canadians.

The last program called STAP allowed our yards to built 24 ships for foreign owners, in addition to acquiring valuable experience in the building of high-tonnage ships and developing new building methods. I think the government would be well advised to continue this program after March 31 and extend it to Canadian shipbuilders who could benefit from it, either by increasing or modernizing their present fleet. I hope the ministers concerned will take the necessary steps to ensure its continuance.

Another factor which affects the operation of our shipyards is the coastal traffic. The Darling report published in October 1970 made 15 recommendations to the government, the main purpose of which was to restrain coastal traffic in Canada to ships which displayed the Canadian flag. If they are accepted, the recommendations put forward in this report will have the following effect: they will give the Canadian government better control over its coastal traffic throughout Canada, enable it to derive a greater revenue from taxes on Canadian maritime transportation companies, give it a stronger authority in the Arctic waters, create more jobs for our sailors, and also encourage the operations in our shipyards thanks to the construction and repair of ships which will have to be built to meet these new needs.

Therefore, Mr. Speaker, I hope that the interested departments, that is the Department of Transport and the Department of Industry, Trade and Commerce, will implement these recommendations as soon as possible. Another thing which would have a substantial effect on the activities of our shipyards would be to set up a Canadian merchant marine. This is something which has been lacking for many years in Canada, though our country is considered among the greatest countries in the world when it comes to foreign trade. Our economy would derive many benefits from it, given the ever increasing amount of goods and commodities like grain, oil, ore, coal, wood and many others which have to be moved outside Canada. It is difficult to admit that in this area, one can see almost no Canadian ships or ships displaying the Canadian flag. This is, I suggest, a matter of national pride which is quite important.

I would like as well to draw the attention of this House to the pension plan of the CN employees. We received a report by the Committee on Transport and Communications on this. The CN pension plan was considerably improved, but I feel that the most important matter has not been settled, that is the rate of pension payed to those who retire. Since they are employees of a Crown corporation, the CN employees now want to know why they are not treated exactly in the same way as the employees of other corporations under federal government jurisdiction. I think that the request is reasonable and even if there are certain adjustments to be made concerning the 1.5 per cent less that they pay on the part of their salary that they contribute according to the pension plans, there is no reason why these employees should not be treated the same as those who work in the civil service and why they should not benefit from the 2 per cent formula. This problem concerns 80,000 railroad employees and some of them come from my riding and I believe that if a solution is not found soon, the federal government would be justified in intervening. At this point, Mr. Speaker, I wish to emphasize the fact that I have been one of the main defenders of the railroad employees before the Standing Committee on Transport and Communications because I believed and I still do that this claim on their part is fair and easily justified.

Another serious problem the farmers are faced with namely feed grain, has been overlooked in the budget. I would like the government to take steps regarding the supply of feed grain as soon as possible. This is a serious problem specially in Quebec and I think it would be possible to solve it, taking into account the volume and the price of grain in Quebec which are influenced by the federal government programs and more specially by those of the Canadian Wheat Board. The Quebec farmers request nothing but fair treatment. They do not want special privileges or better treatment than the western farmers. They do not want to deprive them of anything. All they want is equal treatment.

The Quebec Department of Agriculture and Colonisation, the Coopérative fédérée du Québec and the Union des producteurs agricoles du Québec has made nine recommendations to the Canadian Federation of Agriculture and to the Canadian Livestock Feed Board, the major one being as follows:

1. That feed grain transport assistance is an integral part of the feed grain marketing system in Canada.

2. That the price of feed grains on the interprovincial market in Canada be based on the Fair Formula, provided that all grain producers in Canada are given equal treatment.

3. That any procedure to minimize the cost of moving Prairie feed grains to consumer areas be encouraged.

I suggest, Mr. Speaker, it would be high time for the federal government to make a decison, because seed time is only a few months away.

Another suggestion is related to housing. It seems to me it is about time for our government to consider the possibility of granting a tax deduction on the building of family type houses in order to encourage Canadians to become homeowners.

Since owners of public and commercial buildings are allowed to claim, each year, a certain devaluation of their property, it would seem logical that homeowners be entitled to the same privilege as well as to a tax deduction on the maintenance costs of such houses. As for the mortgage, it could also become deductible for income tax purposes. These are measures which would stimulate the construction industry, while achieving a purpose contemplated by this government, namely to allow a growing number of families to become owners of their own houses.

To conclude, I would like to raise an important matter, while it is of regional rather than national concern. For nearly 15 years, as chairman of the Lauzon Chamber of Commerce and member of a joint committee on the Lévis-Quebec City direct link, I never stopped from advocating the establishment of that link, for the economic and regional development of our area, because this superstructure is essential. Recently, more specifically on February 20, the Hon. Bernard Pinard, Quebec Minister of Highways and Transport, released the report of experts who have proved that we were right in requesting a direct link. But one problem remains: the financing of the project, for it seems that a bridge would cost somewhere between $175 and $200 million. I therefore take this opportunity to ask what the federal government participation might be to that realization which cannot be postponed much longer.

[English]

Mr. Donald W. Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich): Mr. Speaker, it is my understanding that one of the traditions of the budget debate, at least in the second round of speakers, is that members may range over a wide field in their comments; they may depart if they wish from strictly budgetary considerations and deal with matters relating to their ridings, as did the hon. member for Lévis (Mr. Guay) who spoke just before me.

This is also my wish, Mr. Speaker, but I propose to remain within the ambit of the budget debate by directing my attention to an area of endeavour which the government has consistently overlooked but one which, if properly treated, could be gratifyingly expansionary in a sector of the economy that is both labour intensive and is related to regional development, while taking into account Canadian tradition we have too long neglected.

I regret that in the course of the remarks by the hon. member for Lévis the minister who is primarily concerned with them left the chamber because I, too, plan to direct my attention to that part of the amendment which regrets the absence of incentives to Canadians to increase participation in Canadian enterprise and development and to deal with the serious burden of unemployment which afflicts our country. I find it curious that the first speaker from the government benches should put his emphasis on programs which the government had decided in the past and in the present budget to overlook entirely. I suggest to him that he belongs to another side of the House.

My remarks today are derived from a multiplicity of sources. I speak of one of Canada's greatest traditions, an aspect of our native competence which is threatened by negligence and may disappear. I shall examine it in the context of our present economic plight. I shall also speak of the current unemployment situation in the country and of the growing need to exercise stronger controls over pollution in our waters and on our shorelines. If time permits, I will develop my second mix of thoughts. In doing so I will be drawing on a lengthy experience in serving Canada abroad and observing Canada from abroad.

It seems to me odd and distressing but true that, from time to time, we need to remind ourselves that Canada is a maritime nation. Too easily can we forget it; too often do we forget it, to our cost. I see the hon. member for Lévis (Mr. Guay) seems to have left. As I said, too often do we forget it, to our cost. We have been led to do so, I suggest, partly because of our continental fixation, our easy overland route north and south to markets, and partly because of Commonwealth preferences.

Two recent events, however, have shattered these illusions, namely, the restrictive trade policies introduced by President Nixon in August, 1971, and the entry of Britain into the European Common Market on January 1, 1973. The time has come, I suggest, to refocus on our maritime heritage.

In the deep sea navigable waters off the constituency of Esquimalt-Saanich, which include the Haro Straits and the Strait of Juan de Fuca—both of them running out to the international boundary—we have a special set of problems with which to deal. This is an international artery of commerce, and we want it that way. But in waters through which an international boundary runs, solutions of a particular kind are required. These solutions require the closest consultations between the national authorities who share the benefits of those waters as well as concerted action when action is needed. In a large measure, we do not have this co-ordinated approach at the present time, and it is high time we remedied that defect.

Before we can embark, however, on any bi-national program of co-ordination or undertake the international action that is required of us in our special circumstances on the west coast, we must consider a number of purely domestic concerns that deserve our attention, matters giving rise to problems that we must ourselves put right before we even think of trying to handle them in their international aspects. The first, of course, is the regulation and control of shipping of whatever registry plies our national waters.

As matters stand at present, Canada provides a variety of marine services: to cite only a few, these include lighthouse tendering, fisheries patrols, immigration controls, narcotics controls, dredging, icebreaking, happily not off my constituency, pilotage services, rescue, a sort of minimum Coast Guard, and, in a very tentative sort of way, pollution control. All these services a maritime nation requires. In addition, a new duty has recently put in its appearance, the regulation and control of drilling rigs. These are appearing off the east coast, the west coast and in our northern waters. As well there are, of course, reconnaissance and search and rescue activities performed by our uniformed personnel. All these services are needed to an even greater degree than at present provided.

What is needed more is domestic co-ordination of all these services so that their provision may be supplied as, when and where required, and in the proper amount. There must be a means of overcoming overlapping jurisdictions and clashes of priorities which interfere with the provision of these services. According to the information reaching me, there is no single, co-ordinating authority in this complex area because civil and military authorities in Canada are each staking out their respective claims. Neither will let go and no superior authority, in this case a minister, is able or perhaps willing, to make a ruling and make it stick. Perhaps a statute is needed, Mr. Speaker. In the meantime, we are not providing all the services which our maritime status requires.

For example, we seem incapable of drafting and implementing regulations for the ordinary control of deep seagoing vessels of all kinds that carry all sorts of cargoes and enter our waters. We do not appear to keep records of the pattern of shipping entering our waters. This astonishes me. In the meantime, we provide many services that those ships themselves need, but provide them, perhaps, in an unco-ordinated manner. We do not require of those ships the standard of performance that we, a coastal nation with untold riches above and below the sea and on our shoreline, ought to insist on.

Let me cite examples. Such ships can enter our waters with semi-trained crews. They can enter our waters with only marginally seaworthy craft. They can travel on our waters without equipment that modern day developments ought to make mandatory. We need a full fledged coastguard to ensure that these and all other threats to our waters and shorelines are removed. In order to ensure that necessary action in this regard is taken in a co-ordinated fashion, I would be prepared to see our coastguard—I have already spoken about the mess of uncoordinated commands—placed under the ministry of transport for staffing and maintenance purposes but placed under the authority of the commander, maritime command for operations and tasking. This would provide satisfactory civilian careers, gratifying accomplishments and an effective service to Canada.

As of January, 1972, Canada could not boast of more than 86 vessels of all kinds operated by the Department of Transport to look after the needs of a coastline some 17,800 miles long. By contrast, the U.S. coastguard, with only 12,300 odd miles of coastline to protect, has almost 3,000 craft afloat. So, in one case 86 vessels look after almost 18,000 miles of coastline and in the other 3,000 vessels look after 12,000 odd miles of coastline. No wonder the United States coastguard is frequently called on to rescue seamen and fishermen in distress in Canadian waters. I feel ashamed that we have to go outside Canada to obtain this kind of service. As a maritime nation, we must be prepared to carry our own weight at sea.

[Mr. Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich).]

The establishment of a coastguard is one of my pleas, and a revived shipbuilding industry is another plea associated with it. Information reaching me causes distress, dismay and shame. One of our vessels now doing work on the west coast is due to be replaced. It is old and outmoded. According to the answer I received today, it is 20 years old and completely outmoded. The reply from the government side today indicates that the government is thinking about drawing up plans for a replacement. I have also heard that the present government is thinking of chartering out this work to a foreign vessel and foreign crew. This procedure, I understand, is already being followed either in the Great Lakes or in our Arctic. How, can we think of chartering foreign vessels to do work for Canadians in Canadian waters? Can anything be more outrageous in a maritime nation which is faced with high unemployment than going out of the country and obtaining both ships and crews that we can easily supply here? We have the capacity on both our coasts to build these vessels. On both our coasts, in our lakes and on our rivers, a Canadian coastguard such as I conceive it under a co-ordinated command could have as its supreme function regulating ships that ply our waters. They should be manned by Canadian crews and built in Canadian yards.

This brings me to another of my concerns. It is a concern of all Canadians, the pollution of Canadian waters and shorelines from accidents to ships at sea. We had such an accident on the west coast within the past month. We failed to get a full report from either the Minister of Transport (Mr. Marchand) or the Minister of the Environment (Mr. Davis) as to the full consequences of that accident. The pollution of Canadian waters and shorelines is becoming more susceptable to these accidents as our traffic increases and ships become larger, particularly tankers. Spills or sluicing bilges at sea or in Canadian waters is on the increase. These sorts of pollution must stop. They can be stopped only by effective policing. The most effective police for this purpose is a strong coast guard.

To bring these matters under control requires action on three different levels. We must be prepared to act in the international arena, the bi-national field and domestically we must get legislation on our statute books that will prevent Arrow disasters or Van Lean happenings as well as others that have occurred within recent memory. Above all, we must never permit a Torrey Canyon to happen on our shores or such accidents as happened just before Christmas in the Gulf of Oman, a collision and fire involving two midi-tankers. By midi-tankers, I refer to those ships of only 86,000 tons.

Canada and like-minded states should press for an international convention setting forth new seaworthiness criteria for ships and crews, criteria that will weed out hulks and thin out marginally qualified mariners, whether masters or crew. Failing that, we must at least have regulations, agreed upon with our neighbour, that will prevent inadequately inspected ships with semi-trained crews from sailing in our waters.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Laniel): Order, please. I regret to interrupt the hon. member, but the special order made previously today only allows 15 minutes per speech.

Some hon. Members: Continue.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Laniel): Order, please. If I understood correctly, there was also an agreement that there would not be any request for an extension of time.

PRIVILEGE

MR. FORTIN—LATE DELIVERY OF FRENCH HANSARD

Mr. André Fortin (Lotbinière): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a question of privilege.

I have noticed every morning, to my great annoyance and to that of each of my colleagues, that the French version of Hansard gets to us some hours after the English one. I should be grateful, Mr. Speaker, if this situation were put right immediately. This quite unacceptable delay holds up the work of members who speak only French.

I consider that bilingualism must be applied as efficiently as possible in the House if we are to set the example for all levels of the federal civil service. I believe that monolingual francophones have a right to get just as swift service in their own language as monolingual anglophones do, and that no technical obstacle should prevent the application of this principle.

Therefore, Mr. Speaker, seconded by the hon. member for Abitibi (Mr. Laprise), I move:

That the Speaker of the House of Commons be authorized to take whatever technical measures are necessary for the French version of Hansard to be published as soon as possible every day, like the English version, so that both versions may be available to all members early in the morning.

Mr. Speaker: I would point out to the hon. member that his proposal is a formal motion and not a question of privilege. He may wish to move it on motions under Standing Order 43.

In any case, I acknowledge that the hon. member has raised a serious point which deserves the attention of the Chair; I will give close and conscientious study to the hon. member's suggestion that the French version of Hansard appear at the same time as the English version.

The hon. member will admit, however, that there is a certain problem and I suspect that the reason for the delayed publication of the French edition is that especially on some days, most speeches are delivered in English. Now those speeches must be translated before appearing in Hansard, which necessarily involves a delay.

It is possible, however, that there would be a technical way to cope with that difficulty and I will convey the hon. member's complaint to the attention of those who are responsible for the preparation and daily publication of Hansard in French as well as in English.

ROUTINE PROCEEDINGS

ANNOUNCEMENT OF INITIAL PAYMENTS ON WHEAT, OATS AND BARLEY FOR 1973-74 CROP YEAR

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister of Justice): Mr. Speaker, as has been the custom for the past two years, I should like to again this year inform the House, and then send information to all producers in the prairie region, about the initial payments for wheat, oats and barley for the 1973-74 crop year. The practice is to give this information to farmers now, prior to seeding, so that it can play a part in their plans for the next crop year beginning on August 1, 1973.

The initial payment for No. 1. western red spring wheat will be fixed at $1.76 a bushel, which is the same as in the current crop year. The initial payment for No. 3. western six-row barley will be $1.20 a bushel, an increase of 15 cents over the level presently in effect. This is in line with some of the requests from farm organizations. The initial payment for No. 2. western oats will be 80 cents a bushel which is an increase of 10 cents over the current crop year level. All initial payments are "basis in store Thunder Bay and Vancouver". The initial payments for the grades of wheat, barley and oats other than the basic grades I have mentioned will be established by the Canadian Wheat Board and announced at a later date.

It is our expectation that the higher level of initial payments for barley and oats, in addition to the higher level of assured deliveries which will be referred to in letters going to the producers, will encourage producers to increase feed grain acreage over the acreage sown in 1972 and that they will do this even though an increase is expected in the acreage that will be sown.

Producers are also being encouraged to increase production of rapeseed this year in view of the excellent market prospects for the sale of all of these grains and because of the importance of holding our customers in this area as well in making the best use of the acreage available in the Canadian production area now and in the future.

Mr. Jack Murta (Lisgar): Mr. Speaker, in replying briefly to the minister responsible for the Wheat Board I would hope that on other occasions he would give longer notice to opposition members who are expected to comment on such statements. This is only courtesy, and I would strongly urge the minister to take this course in the future. In this instance, the statement was received about two minutes before he stood up to make it.

As far as the prices are concerned, I think the initial payment for barley of $1.20 is in line with what we on this side of the House have been urging. I am disappointed, though, that there is no guarantee to purchase a set amount of barley and I think this is really the critical item of the three items the minister mentioned. I am also disappointed that he did not say anything about a cash advance in his statement. It seems that if farmers are to receive these amounts of money it will be very necessary for them this spring to have some funds by way of cash advances to help them put their crops in.

A guarantee, though, is possibly more important because I believe, after talking to a good many farmers in western Canada, that as markets are at the present time, unless the government can guarantee to take all or virtually all of the feed grain produced in western Canada we still face the possibility that there will be a very heavy emphasis on wheat production. I think this is very critical. I hope the minister will realize the importance of our feed grain markets being maintained this year in particular, since I think this will be a crisis year for the production of feed grains in Canada. We will hopefully see an enlarged market domestically, and over the next year or two the demand for feed grain will be even heavier.

I believe that the prices announced by the government are realistic. However, for this year at least I think the government should guarantee to take a set number of bushels rather than simply proceed on the assumption that in view of the price of the grain farmers will automatically grow the required amount.

Mr. A. P. Gleave (Saskatoon-Biggar): Mr. Speaker, the initial price guaranteed by the government is not unexpected. If we are to have the amount of feed grain or barley we are going to need this year, this is the minimum that could be set as the initial price. It could be argued that the initial payment should be higher, because in the case of feed barley, which is the grade that moves best and is produced in greatest amount, the initial price will be less than the price announced. I hope the minister will announce the initial prices for other grades of barley very soon.

The critical area in crop production in western Canada is probably rapeseed. I notice that the minister says that producers are also encouraged to increase the production of rapeseed this year. That is a nice phrase, but in point of fact the government has done nothing to encourage producers to grow rapeseed this year in sufficient acreages and quantities to serve the markets that have been developing.

Surely the minister is aware that the pricing situation in regard to rapeseed is chaotic. Surely he is aware that one price is being paid at one point in Saskatchewan while a few miles away another price is being paid. Surely he is aware that delivery opportunities between the producers of Saskatchewan and those of other provinces are unequal, and that transportation of rapeseed by rail has not been satisfactory.

It is not good enough for the minister simply to insert that sentence in his statement and leave it at that. If we are to produce the amount we need I suggest the minister must come back to the House soon and announce the policy of the government so that the farmers will plant the rapeseed acreages that we are going to need this year. In view of the guaranteed initial prices for wheat and barley and given orderly delivery for those grains and a clear road ahead for the farmer, and in view of the marketing of rapeseed in the past, one does not need to do a lot of guessing to know what could possibly occur.

Finally, the minister should clarify his position regarding the so-called two-price system for wheat. Instead of sending out questionnaires and trying to conduct a plebiscite by mail, which incidentally leaves out significant numbers of people with a stake in such payments, the minister had better come to the House and tell the House what his policy is, so we can then refer the matter to the standing committee where it can be properly discussed.

Mr. Léonel Beaudoin (Richmond): Mr. Speaker, first I must call your attention to the fact that we were given the minister's statement only a few minutes before the beginning of the sitting and we did not get a French translation of it.

By way of explanation the minister says:

I am sorry, but the French translation is not ready yet. As soon as it is completed, you will receive a copy of it.

An hon. Member: Tomorrow.

Mr. Beaudoin: As usual, Mr. Speaker, we have to wait until tomorrow again and it will be too late to comment on it.

Mr. Speaker, we of the Social Credit party of Canada approve any proper action by the minister responsible for grain production as advance payments to western grain producers to encourage them to seed larger pieces of land so that grain crops are larger and especially to encourage barley and oats crops for cattle feed, to the point where feed grains are produced in large enough quantities at stable prices all across Canada. Also, that they be available on all Canadian markets at profitable prices for production and, finally, so that western producers respond to the demands of those producing cattle feeds all over Canada.

APPLICATION OF COMPENSATED DISCOUNT POLICY—REQUEST FOR UNANIMOUS CONSENT TO MOVE MOTION

Mr. Jean-Marie Boisvert (Drummond): Mr. Speaker, pursuant to Standing Order 43, I solicit unanimous consent of the House to propose a motion in a case of urgent and pressing necessity of interest to all consumers in Canada.

In view of the many attempts made over the past few years to curb inflation, and the fact that such action and the substantial amounts invested to this end did not bring about the results anticipated, the population continuing to face an exaggerated increase in prices, and since all experts at the national and international levels recognize that it is no longer possible, nor human, to curb inflation by decreasing economic growth, a concept which created an alarming unemployment situation wherein all age groups in this country in the immediate past—

Mr. Speaker: Order. I must interrupt the hon. member. Would the hon. member kindly resume his seat? I must invite him to bring forward his motion. The Standing Order and usage clearly establish that the hon. member can propose a motion, but that it must be quite explicit. If the hon. member includes in his motion arguments he cannot bring forward in the House, I believe he is bending the Standing Order.

I would therefore invite him to tell the Chair and the House as promptly as possible the substance of the motion he wants to put under Standing Order 43.

Mr. Boisvert: Mr. Speaker, under Standing Order 43, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Richmond (Mr. Beaudoin):

That this House assign the Standing Committee on Finance, Trade and Economic Affairs the tasks of making an in-depth inquiry into the possible consequences of the application of a compensated discount on Canadian goods sold to Canadian consumers, especially with regard to standardizing price increases.

Mr. Speaker: The House has heard the motion of the hon. member. Under the terms of Standing Order 43, this motion requires the unanimous consent of the House. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. Speaker: The House is not unanimous. The motion may not therefore be put.

LAKE ONTARIO WATER LEVEL—REQUEST FOR UNANIMOUS CONSENT TO MOVE MOTION

Mr. Reg Stackhouse (Scarborough East): Mr. Speaker, pursuant to Standing Order 43 I ask leave of the House to move the following motion:

That the House deal with the need for action by the International Joint Commission to lower the water level of Lake Ontario because the present high level threatens property in the Toronto area and may become more dangerous by mid-summer if such action is not taken and the water rises even two more feet.

Mr. Speaker: The House has heard the motion proposed by the hon. member for Scarborough East. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. Speaker: There is not unanimity, so the motion cannot be put.

FINANCE

INTEREST ON PUBLIC DEBT—REQUEST FOR UNANIMOUS CONSENT TO MOVE MOTION

Mr. Gilbert Rondeau (Shefford): Mr. Speaker, pursuant to Standing Order 43, I request the unanimous consent of the House to discuss a matter of the highest importance.

As indicated in the recent federal estimates, Canada has an indebtedness whose interest alone is of the astronomical amount of $2.5 billion for the fiscal year—

Mr. Speaker: Order! I have just suggested to the hon. member for Drummond that hon. members who wish to move a motion pursuant to Standing Order 43 must do so without any argument, and I would invite the hon. member to indicate to the House as soon as possible—and I repeat, without any argument—the substance of the motion that he wants to put for consideration by his colleagues of the House.

Mr. Rondeau: Mr. Speaker, in view of the fact that Canada will have to pay interest charges of $2.5 million on the public debt during the 1973-74 fiscal year, I ask leave, under Standing Order 43, to move, seconded by the hon. member for Kamouraska (Mr. Dionne):

That this House instruct the Standing Committee on Finance, Trade and Economic Affairs to study the possibility of financing the public capital of Canada through interest-free loans granted by the Bank of Canada at the administrative rates instead of the current rates, and to analyze at the same time how savings thus made could serve to give much needed impetus to the Canadian economy.

Mr. Speaker: The House has heard the motion proposed by the hon. member. Under Standing Order 43 this motion requires the unanimous consent of the House. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. Speaker: There is not unanimity so the motion cannot be put.

LAKE ONTARIO WATER LEVEL—REQUEST FOR UNANIMOUS CONSENT TO MOVE MOTION

Mr. Terry Grier (Toronto-Lakeshore): Mr. Speaker, I rise under the provisions of Standing Order 43 to deal with a subject which the House has already considered this afternoon, I believe too hastily. I hope that upon reflection the House will agree to give unanimous consent. In view of damage to public facilities and private property as well as the possible danger to life which threatens as a consequence of the rising water level of Lake Ontario, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Broadview (Mr. Gilbert):

That this House directs the federal government to intervene before the International Joint Commission on behalf of the residents and authorities concerned, to insist that steps be taken immediately to relieve the threat of widespread and costly damage and danger to life and health, and further to inform this House what contingency plans it intends to activate in the event that the IJC does not act soon enough.

Mr. Speaker: Is there unanimous consent to the motion proposed by the hon. member?

FLAGS OF CANADA BILL

PROVISION FOR PRESENCE IN BOTH HOUSES OF PARLIAMENT

Mr. Stan Schumacher (Palliser) moved for leave to introduce Bill C-146, respecting the presence of the Flags of Canada in both Houses of parliament.

Some hon. Members: Explain.

Mr. Schumacher: Mr. Speaker, the purpose of this bill is to give honour and recognition to the two flags of Canada which were recognized by parliament in 1964. One, of course, is the national flag, the maple leaf, and the other is the union jack, symbolic of our connection to and abiding belief in the monarchy as our system of government, the parliamentary system as the means of governing, and the value of the Commonwealth of Nations. The bill would legislatively ensure that both these honoured flags would be displayed in both Houses of parliament.

ORAL QUESTION PERIOD

FLOODS

HIGH WATER LEVEL IN LAKE ONTARIO—ACTION TO REDUCE—PAYMENT OF COMPENSATION TO THOSE SUFFERING FINANCIAL LOSS

Hon. George Hees (Prince Edward-Hastings): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of the Environment of which I have given him ample notice, so I will expect an answer that will be both full and factual. In view of the fact that the water level in Lake Ontario is between four feet and five feet higher than is normal for this time of year and as this has caused severe damage to property and installations on the whole of the Lake Ontario shoreline, would the minister advise the House what have been the results of the approach which he assured the House a week ago today he would make to the International Joint Commission to take action to reduce significantly the water level in Lake Ontario?

Hon. Jack Davis (Minister of the Environment): Mr. Speaker, the Great Lakes Water Levels Board is meeting today in Chicago and our representatives are there, of course. I might add that the outflow from Lake Ontario is at a record high. It is at the maximum it has been for a number of months. Inflow into the Great Lakes system from Lake Nipigon is close to zero and leaving Lake Superior is the lowest in 50 years. There are no works which can control levels of either Lake Huron or Lake Erie.

Mr. Hees: As it is obvious that the government either cannot or will not take action—

Some hon. Members: Order!

Mr. Hees: —to control the water level in Lake Ontario—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Nielsen: Dry up.

Mr. Hees: —has the government been in touch with the government of the province of Ontario to offer co-operation to that government in making available compensation to the residents of Ontario who have suffered severe financial losses due to the severe flooding that has taken place?

Mr. Davis: Yes, Mr. Speaker. Our government has been in touch with the government of Ontario in respect to dikes and other remedial works. Also, the government of Ontario is aware of the general formula that applies in all provinces of Canada. It includes a threshold—of course, with a larger industrial lease and a larger population the threshold is higher for Ontario—but a per capita formula applies and in the event that the province is prepared to pay compensation to individuals hurt by flooding, it can get financial assistance from Ottawa.

Mr. Hees: Mr. Speaker, I have one final supplementary question to the minister. Do I take it, then, that this government is willing to co-operate in paying compensation, and has the government of Ontario indicated that it is willing to pay compensation?

Mr. Davis: Mr. Speaker, this is a very co-operative government, as everyone knows.

HIGH WATER LEVEL IN LAKE ERIE—REQUEST THAT PUBLIC WORKS ENGINEERS DETERMINE WHAT WORKS CAN BE UNDERTAKEN TO PREVENT FURTHER DAMAGE

Mr. W. B. Nesbitt (Oxford): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question which I should like to put to the Minister of Public Works. In view of the fact that Lake Erie flooding is just as bad as that of Lake Ontario and even more property damage has taken place there, will the Minister of Public Works send engineers from his department to Lake Erie as soon as possible and request them to make recommendations as to what works can be undertaken at once to prevent immediate and massive further damage?

Hon. Jean-Eudes Dubé (Minister of Public Works): Mr. Speaker, I have no objection at all to sending one of my officials to study the situation, but in reality I do not want to take over the responsibility of the province of Ontario. In any event, all federal efforts are co-ordinated under the leadership of my competent seatmate, the distinguished Minister of the Environment.

An hon. Member: Send Joe Guay, the water expert.

Mr. Nesbitt: A further supplementary—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I trust that today we will try to get to the second question before half the question period has expired. Therefore I hope that hon. members will not ask too many supplementary questions on the very first question. The hon. member for Oxford has a supplementary question.

Mr. Nesbitt: My supplementary question is also directed to the Minister of Public Works. It is my understanding that a cabinet committee is looking into this matter. Is the minister on the committee and, if not, would he request to be put on the committee if he is not already a member? Second, is the Minister of Public Works telling us that the entire responsibility for building works to stop Great Lakes flooding rests on the province of Ontario? It does not. I have letters from his colleagues to the contrary.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Obviously the hon. member has a reply to the question.

HIGH WATER LEVELS IN GREAT LAKES—USE OF ARMED FORCES PERSONNEL TO CONSTRUCT PROTECTIVE WORKS

Mr. Terry Grier (Toronto-Lakeshore): Mr. Speaker, I have a question on this subject which I should like to address to the Minister of National Defence. Has he consulted his colleague, the Minister of the Environment, and/or the provinces with a view to placing units of the Canadian Armed Forces at the disposal of the provinces or the other minister in order to construct bulwarks against possible flooding or to undertake such other works as may alleviate the threat?

Hon. James Richardson (Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, I have had consultations with my colleague but not with the provinces.

Mr. Grier: What has been the result of those consultations, and can the minister assure the House that in fact plans are now being made to make such use of the armed forces?

Mr. Richardson: Mr. Speaker, the armed forces are available for purposes of this kind, but there are no specific plans that we have arrived at yet.

HIGH WATER LEVELS IN GREAT LAKES—POSSIBILITY OF SITUATION WORSENING

Mr. Allan Lawrence (Northumberland-Durham): Mr. Speaker, my supplementary question is directed to the Minister of the Environment. Is he in a position to tell the House if he has any estimate whether the situation is going to get much worse this spring from the International Joint Commission, the Great Lakes Water Levels Board, his own department, or even from a provincial agency?

Hon. Jack Davis (Minister of the Environment): Mr. Speaker, the engineers who represent us on the Great Lakes Water Levels Board say that the levels might go up another foot and a half this spring, that is, through to June or July. Even then the levels would be lower than those encountered in 1952. They would have been higher had it not been for the construction of the St. Lawrence Seaway which has in fact reduced the effective level by about one foot.

HIGH WATER LEVEL IN LAKE ONTARIO—STUDY OF EROSION EFFECTS

Mr. Bill Kempling (Halton-Wentworth): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a supplementary question to the Minister of the Environment. Can the minister advise whether the Centre for Inland Waters at Burlington, Ontario, more specifically the $60 million hydraulic facility at this location, is studying the erosion effects of high water in Lake Ontario and, if not, will he direct that such a study be undertaken immediately?

Hon. Jack Davis (Minister of the Environment): Mr. Speaker, I understand that a study along those lines has been under way for some time. It is being done in co-operation with the government of Ontario, and I expect that a preliminary report will be published some time in March.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

SHOOTING DOWN OF CIVILIAN LIBYAN AIRCRAFT OVER SINAI—SUGGESTED IMPARTIAL INQUIRY BY INTERNATIONAL TRIBUNAL

Mr. Andrew Brewin (Greenwood): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Secretary of State for External Affairs. Does he propose to make a statement to the House on motions on the shooting down of a Libyan aircraft over Sinai, which follows a grim pattern of action and reaction, of reprisal and counterreprisal, and may lead to further tragedies of incalculable proportions?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, as the House is aware, on learning yesterday of this tragic event I, on behalf of the government and people of Canada, sent a message of condolence through our ambassador in Cairo to the foreign ministers of Libya and Egypt.

[Mr. Richardson.]

I know that all members of the House share my shock and sorrow at the destruction of a Libyan civil aircraft and at the loss of the lives of the majority of its passengers and crew. Many of the details of the tragedy are still obscure. What is all too clear, however, is that, as a result of a conscious act, up to 100 innocent persons aboard a regularly scheduled flight of a civilian airliner are dead. I am not satisfied that the destruction of this plane was unavoidable, and I shall be asking the Israeli government to clarify the reasons for this action.

Mr. Brewin: Before asking a supplementary question, Mr. Speaker, may I say that we share the shock and sorrow expressed by the minister. I would like to ask him whether or not he will seek to have a full inquiry made by an impartial and, I take it, international tribunal or authority, so that the facts can be ascertained before final judgments are made on this matter?

Mr. Sharp: Mr. Speaker, I do share the point made by the hon. member that one should not jump to conclusions. I also share his view that there should be an inquiry that will establish the facts because we do not want an event like this, tragic as it is, to cause a further escalation of violence in the Middle East.

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prince Albert): Mr. Speaker, would the Secretary of State for External Affairs say whether or not Canada might take a lead, even though not on the Security Council, to bring about an immediate meeting between representatives of Egypt and Israel to the end that the deplorable awfulness of what took place yesterday will not become the beginning of tremendous potentialities against the peace of the world?

Mr. Sharp: Mr. Speaker, I do share the wish of the right hon. gentleman that something should be done to try to bring the parties to this conflict together. I am rather sceptical, however, that a request of this kind from Canada would produce the necessary results, and I feel we should continue our present policy of supporting action under Resolution 242 of the Security Council, which does provide a framework for negotiations.

CYPRUS—SUGGESTED WITHDRAWAL OF CANADIAN TROOPS FROM PEACEKEEPING FORCE

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prince Albert): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a further question to the Secretary of State for External Affairs. With the situation the way it is in Cyprus, the degree to which unrest has broken out being unequalled in a matter of six or seven years, as a first step is the government taking action to do something about our peace force in Cyprus, which I think has earned the right to be removed, particularly in view of the fact Canada is the only nation that is actually financing all the costs of its participation in the peace force? This would do two things. It would save Canada $3 million, and would also do something to remove a danger that I do not want even to mention, so fearful is it, to the possibilities of peace.

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Secretary of State for External Affairs): On a point of fact, Mr. Speaker, Canada is not the only country that is paying the costs of its own force.

All of the countries participating are contributing the pay and allowances of their forces.

Mr. Diefenbaker: But they don't pay the complete shot.

Mr. Sharp: Unfortunately there are other costs not being shared as equally as they should be among the nations of the world. I can assure the right hon. gentleman that we have been urged by all the countries concerned, and all of those who want to maintain peace in Cyprus, to retain our peacekeeping forces there. We should like to withdraw them, but we have been told that to do so might make the situation even more difficult than it is.

Mr. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa-Whitby): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a supplementary question to the Secretary of State for External Affairs. In his reply to the question put by the hon. member for Greenwood the minister suggested that he agreed in principle with the idea of having an impartial investigation into the shooting down of the Libyan aircraft, but he did not answer specifically whether or not he would take steps to initiate the establishment of such an impartial investigation. Therefore I would like to put that question to him. Will he take such action?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, this is an event that took place in another country, and it is very difficult for us to initiate an impartial inquiry in an area under the control of another government. I do agree that it would be desirable to have an impartial inquiry, and I hope the Israeli government itself will ensure that the inquiry it makes is truly impartial.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The Chair will recognize the hon. member for Cochrane for one last supplementary on this subject.

Afterwards I shall recognize the hon. member for Champlain.

SHOOTING DOWN OF CIVILIAN LIBYAN AIRCRAFT OVER SINAI—CANADIAN POSITION RESPECTING UNITED NATIONS RESOLUTION 242

Mr. Ralph Stewart (Cochrane): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a supplementary question to the Secretary of State for External Affairs. Since he said that Canada would support Resolution 242 of the United Nations and since this terrible act yesterday was initiated from occupied territory which should have been vacated as a result of Resolution 242, what is Canada's intention with regard to reiterating our stand in support of that resolution?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, we are thoroughly in support of it, and we do support the principle that Israel should withdraw its forces to secure and recognized boundaries. I regret to say that there is not agreement on what are secure and recognized boundaries.

INDIAN AFFAIRS

RESPONSE TO BRIEFS SUBMITTED BY INDIANS IN 1969

Mr. F. Oberle (Prince George-Peace River): Mr. Speaker, I have a question to direct to the Prime Minister. Being a new member and having taken part in meetings of the Standing Committee on Indian Affairs, I am amazed at the lack of response from the government—

Some hon. Members: Order!

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member has the right to be amazed, but in asking a question he does not have the right to say so. He should ask the question.

• (1450)

Mr. Oberle: I should like to ask the Prime Minister how long it takes to respond to briefs of people from British Columbia, Alberta and Manitoba that were submitted in 1969?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Perhaps the hon. member might like to ask a supplementary and rephrase his question. If he wishes to ask a question relating to a brief or a matter going back to 1969, I wonder whether it might not be advisable to put the question on the order paper.

Mr. Oberle: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. I agree with Your Honour that it has been a long time. Perhaps the Prime Minister has forgotten about the matter. I am simply asking if he is replying to submissions by the Indian people of those provinces made in 1969.

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, as the hon. member is new he might not have had occasion to read the statement of the government in 1969 and, of course, the response by his own party to that statement.

Mr. Baldwin: Bilge!

Mr. Trudeau: The essence of it—

Mr. Baldwin: Bilge!

Mr. Trudeau: Well, the response was partly bilge but the essence of the statement was that we were telling the Canadian people, both Indian and white, that they had arrived at a crossroads, that a decision was necessary, and that discussion must continue between the two parts.

Mr. Hees: And a decision would be made in due course.

Mr. Trudeau: These briefs and the court actions themselves are part of this ongoing discussion.

Mr. Oberle: The Prime Minister referred to the white paper that was brought out by the government in 1969. The briefs I am referring to are the responses to that white paper and they contained definite proposals to which the people are awaiting a response.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Joe Clark (Rocky Mountain): May I direct a supplementary to the Prime Minister, Mr. Speaker. Will the Prime Minister explain to the House how he proposes to have discussions when one side will not respond for three years. Is this his definition of discussion?

Mr. Chrétien: Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I would not think that a question asked in those terms is in order.

Mr. Baldwin: You were not going to answer anyway, were you, Jean?

TRANSPORT

RAILWAY PASSENGER SERVICE, WESTERN ONTARIO—STEPS TO RE-ESTABLISH

Mr. Gus Mitges (Grey-Simcoe): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the Minister of Transport. In view of the urgency of re-establishing rail passenger service in western and southwestern Ontario, where many communities find themselves without any kind of public transportation to the detriment of many people who must depend on public transportation, can the minister inform the House when he will take a definite step in this direction, as recommended last spring by the Standing Committee on Transport and Communications?

Hon. Jean Marchand (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, on this matter I will have to meet with the government of Ontario and Metropolitan Toronto and with Mr. Carton, following the Soberman report, to study the whole problem of transportation not only in Metropolitan Toronto but in the entire province, although mainly in southwestern Ontario. As soon as those meetings have taken place I will be happy to indicate what the results are.

An hon. Member: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I can assure hon. members that it will not help them to try to shout louder than other hon. members. The hon. member for Grey-Simcoe.

Mr. Mitges: If I may respond to the minister's answer, he mentioned on January 15, as recorded on page 275 of Hansard, that he would have to meet with the Ontario government before any decision is reached. Can the minister inform the House whether steps have been initiated to set up such a meeting and, if not, when does he propose to do so?

Mr. Marchand (Langelier): Mr. Speaker, I think I said in the House somewhat later than the date to which the hon. member referred that as soon as the work of the House allows me to go, I will go.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Wetaskiwin.

CANADIAN CULTURE

MULTICULTURALISM—STEPS TO IMPLEMENT CONCEPT THROUGH BROADCASTING MEDIA

Mr. Stan Schellenberger (Wetaskiwin): Mr. Speaker, I congratulate you on pronouncing the name of my constituency correctly. I hope the hon. member for St. Boniface was paying close attention. My question is for the Secretary of State. Can the minister indicate what steps are being taken by himself in association with the Canadian Radio-Television Commission to promote positively and implement the concept of multiculturalism by way of the broadcasting media?

Hon. James Hugh Faulkner (Secretary of State): Mr. Speaker, as the hon. member knows, there was a hearing before the CRTC recently in Montreal touching on this question. We are awaiting a decision from the president of that commission. On the matter of the work that might be done by the various cultural agencies in support of this important goal, I think I would prefer to deal with that question when these various agencies are examined before the standing committee of the House. I think it is important that we raise this question with each individual agency and ask each one what it is doing.

PRESERVATION OF RIGHTS OF MULTICULTURAL GROUPS IN WINNIPEG AREA

Mr. Jake Epp (Provencher): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a supplementary question to the minister responsible for multiculturalism. CRTC hearings have now been held in Montreal, as already mentioned, but only certain groups found it possible to go to Montreal. As there are no hearings scheduled for Winnipeg on this matter, can the minister indicate to the House what alternatives he is proposing which would preserve the established customary rights of multicultural groups in the Winnipeg area?

Hon. Stanley Haidasz (Minister of State): Mr. Speaker, this is a matter of government policy and if anything is to be be done it will be announced in the usual way.

INCOME TAX

POSSIBLE APPLICATION OF INDEXING PRINCIPLE TO CAPITAL GAINS

Hon. Robert L. Stanfield (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I want to ask the Minister of Finance, now that he has adopted the principle that he calls indexing in connection with income taxation, whether he is prepared to adopt the principle of indexing in the computation of capital gains for the purpose of taxation?

Hon. John N. Turner (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, perhaps when the hon. gentleman makes his speech in the budget debate he will wish to expand that a little more.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Stanfield: When the matter is put before the minister and if he takes a decision on it, will he give the assurance that, following his usual practice, he will change his decision within a few months?

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

HEALTH

STATUS OF NUTRITION SURVEY

Mrs. Grace MacInnis (Vancouver-Kingsway): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the Minister of National Health and Welfare. In view of rumours now circulating to the effect that the Canada nutrition survey has been discontinued because of lack of funds, will the minister say whether this is true and, if it is not true, when the survey will be completed?

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to inform the hon. lady that this is not so and I believe we can expect the survey and report to be completed in the fall. However, I will inquire further into this matter in order to be sure that the information I am giving the hon. lady is exact.

Mrs. MacInnis (Vancouver-Kingsway): As we were promised originally that the survey would be available for this spring, can the minister say why it will be delayed until fall?

Mr. Lalonde: I would certainly be pleased to do so, Mr. Speaker. I would assure the hon. lady that, unfortunately, this will not be the first instance when this has occurred with such surveys.

INQUIRY AS TO FEDERAL SURVEY OF HEALTH COSTS— REQUEST FOR STATEMENT OF GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. G. W. Baldwin (Peace River): I have a supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. In light of the survey just completed in the province of Quebec, which indicates that government health costs will probably rise by 150 per cent within the next ten years, would the minister say whether the federal government has made a similar survey? Is the minister able to advise the House about it? If not, will he, in due course, make a statement to the House of what the government's views are in this regard?

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, the federal government, as far as I know, has not made any similar survey, but I will certainly be pleased to expand on this when I appear before the standing committee at the appropriate time.

COMMUNICATIONS

REQUEST FOR TABLING OF AGREEMENT BETWEEN BROADCASTERS ASSOCIATION AND CHIEFS OF POLICE

Mr. Gilbert Rondeau (Shefford): Mr. Speaker, I want to ask a question of the Solicitor General. Is the minister prepared to table in the House or at the Standing Committee on Broadcasting, Films and Assistance to the Arts a copy of the agreement concluded recently between the Association of Canadian Broadcasters and the chiefs of police?

[English]

Hon. Warren Allmand (Solicitor General): Mr. Speaker, there is no such agreement between my department and the radio broadcasters.

ROLE OF FORCE IN POSSIBLE OCCUPATION OF BROADCASTING STATIONS DURING CRISES

Mr. Gilbert Rondeau (Shefford): I wish to ask a supplementary question, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Shefford wishes to ask a supplementary question.

Mr. Rondeau: Can the minister tell us what is the role of the RCMP in the event that radio and TV stations facilities were occupied during civil disorders?

[English]

Hon. Warren Allmand (Solicitor General): Mr. Speaker, as I mentioned in the House the other day, there were discussions between the RCMP and the broadcasters regarding forcible occupancy. I can check to see if there is anything in writing. I do not think there is any written agreement but I will check and find out. There were merely discussions, to the best of my knowledge.

WHEAT—POSSIBILITY OF LOW FINAL PAYMENT IN LIGHT OF INITIAL PAYMENT FOR 1973-74 CROP YEAR—PAYMENT FOR FARM STORAGE

Hon. Alvin Hamilton (Qu'Appelle-Moose Mountain): Mr. Speaker, my question is addressed to the minister in charge of the Canadian Wheat Board. As world wheat prices are over $3 per bushel, is the very low initial payment announced by the minister today an indication to the farmers by the government that there will be a very low final payment, as there was this year?

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister of Justice): No, Mr. Speaker, it certainly is not. Of course, in terms of Thunder Bay prices, which is the basis for the initial price, the world price is not over $3 but some 30 cents lower than that. The initial prices which were announced today are for the crop year commencing next August 1. I assure the hon. member and other hon. members that I expect there will be a very good final payment for the crop year in which we are now. The final payment the hon. member was referring to was for the crop year which ended quite some time ago.

Mr. Hamilton (Qu'Appelle-Moose Mountain): Will the minister indicate to the House if he has made any decision about paying the cost of storage to farmers for holding grain on the farms so that they can meet the commitments he is asking them to meet for next year?

Mr. Lang: Mr. Speaker, this question has been canvassed from time to time with farm organizations. The basic proposition adopted to this point is that the total amount of money available to the farmers, both from the sales of their grain and from the federal treasury, is realistically the important figure. The question of whether a specific payment for on-farm storage of grain should be paid is rather a matter of getting the right result in regard to the position of grain. There seems to be no problem about the farmers holding and building up stocks when they see adequate marketing opportunities. I am confident they will produce on a record number of acres this year.

HOUSING

LAND BANK PROGRAM—AVAILABILITY OF SERVICED LOTS IN TORONTO AREA

Mr. Don Blenkarn (Peel South): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of State for Urban Affairs. In view of the fact that spring is rapidly approaching—

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Blenkarn: —and that is the season when building normally commences in this country, has the minister any policy or plans to make available from his land bank fund any serviced lots for builders in metropolitan Toronto?

Hon. Ron Basford (Minister of State for Urban Affairs): Mr. Speaker, my riding is Vancouver Centre and spring has already arrived.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Basford: The budget for Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation for this coming year has been approved. Funds are available for land assembly upon application by municipalities or provinces. Where land has already been assembled in a number of areas, that land is being made available in the form of serviced lots, including metro Toronto.

Mr. Blenkarn: Has the minister used any of the suggested $100 million for this year to acquire any land that can be serviced for housing this year or next year?

Mr. Basford: Mr. Speaker, the purpose of that fund is to acquire raw land. We are in the process, and have been for some time, of acquiring raw land. Some of that is being serviced and some is being made available.

CRIMINAL CODE

INQUIRY AS TO LEGISLATION TO INCREASE CONTROL OF WEAPONS

Mr. Eldon M. Woolliams (Calgary North): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Solicitor General. In light of the fact that many people in Canada are concerned about the increase in crimes and the use of guns and weapons, while other people, such as sportsmen, are very concerned about controls, is it the government's policy to now toughen the regulations covering the sale and registration of guns and other weapons of that kind?

Hon. Warren Allmand (Solicitor General): This is being considered, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Woolliams: I have a supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. I will make it brief. Do any of the amendments to the Criminal Code that were introduced in 1969 or 1970 empower the government to pass regulations respecting the sale or registration of weapons described in that act?

Mr. Allmand: Mr. Speaker, there are no new regulations at present.

AIR TRANSPORT

ADVANCE BOOKING CHARTER REGULATIONS—REQUEST THAT CANADIAN TRANSPORT COMMISSION REVIEW RATE-SETTING PROCEDURE

Mr. John Harney (Scarborough West): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Transport. In view of the fact the rates for advance booking charters have finally been set at the level of about $187, and in view of the fact these rates are some $80 more than the rates for a comparable trip originating in Britain, will the minister inform the House whether he has any intention of asking the Canadian Transport Commission to revise its rate-setting procedures so that Canadian travellers can benefit from the advantages of fair competition in this field?

[Translation]

Hon. Jean Marchand (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, the competition that the Canadian Transport Commission governs is that which involves planes chartered for flights outside the country. However, we do not consider a plane chartered in England to bring passengers to Canada and take them back to England as a competitor, because the clientele involved is not the same. And so it can happen that English companies perform the service at rates that are patently lower than ours.

[Later:]

[English]

Mr. Harney: Considering that it would be very difficult for most Canadians to understand why it should cost almost twice as much for Canadians to travel from Toronto to London and return than for British residents to travel from London to Toronto and return, can the minister assure the House that he will ask the CTC to study the whole pricing procedure, particularly with a view to ensuring that there is competition in the pricing structure in Canada?

[Translation]

Mr. Marchand (Langelier): Mr. Speaker, the Canadian Transport Commission governs competition between charter planes leaving Canada for destinations abroad. It does not allow a company to charge less than the lowest price charged by Canadian companies. I think it is easy for the Canadian public to understand that it costs less to charter a plane in England, since labour itself costs less than here, and this makes it possible to offer cheaper tickets.

DARTMOUTH, NOVA SCOTIA—ALLEGED FIRE HAZARD IN SENIOR CITIZENS COMPLEX—GOVERNMENT ACTION

Mr. J. M. Forrestall (Dartmouth-Halifax East): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the minister responsible for Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation. It arises out of the report prepared by the Nova Scotia fire marshall indicating 22 points of critical danger in a massive senior citizens' housing complex in Dartmouth, Nova Scotia. Has this matter come to the minister's attention and, if so, what action has the government taken to ensure that these 22 points of concern to the provincial fire marshall have or will be met before our senior citizens are permitted to move into this building?

Hon. Ron Basford (Minister of State for Urban Affairs): Mr. Speaker, the general rule of CMHC is that all buildings upon which they have loans must comply with applicable provincial and municipal bylaws and regulations, including fire regulations. This case has been brought to my attention. I am asking for a report on it. When I get it, I will submit it to the hon. member. Certainly the purpose of our intervention would be to ensure the safety of the senior citizens who propose to live in that building. I would point out that my understanding is that the Dartmouth fire commissioner is satisfied with the building construction, but that is a subject that is open to inquiry.

POSSIBLE PROSECUTION OF PFIZER CHEMICAL COMPANY FOR PRICE FIXING

Mr. William Knowles (Norfolk-Haldimand): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Justice. It concerns a matter we discussed several weeks ago relating to the Pfizer Chemical Company of Canada Limited. Does the hon. gentleman's department not intend to initiate legal proceedings against this company on the advice of investigators from the Department of Consumer and Corporate Affairs?

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister of Justice): When I last looked at this matter several days ago, consideration was still being given to the proper course of action to be taken.

Oral Questions

PUBLIC BUILDINGS

CONCENTRATION IN OTTAWA—REQUEST FOR INCREASED NUMBER IN WESTERN CANADA

Mr. Douglas Roche (Edmonton-Strathcona): Mr. Speaker, my question is to the Minister of Public Works. In view of the fact this is the second year in a row in which the government is spending more on public works in the city of Ottawa than in the four western provinces, the Northwest Territories and the Yukon combined, can the hon. gentleman tell us how this disproportion can be reconciled with an effort to develop government services throughout western Canada?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The question is very wide in scope and the hon. member is really inviting the minister to make a statement which would normally be made on motions. Perhaps he would like to rephrase it.

Mr. Roche: In view of the continued expenditure of public money for buildings in Ottawa, can he tell us what the policy of the government is with regard to spreading government services throughout western Canada?

Hon. Jean-Eudes Dubé (Minister of Public Works): This is a matter which would be better discussed when the estimates come before the committee. The quick answer would be that obviously there are more public services in the capital of the country than elsewhere. In principle I would agree with the hon. member that there could be some redistribution of power. But this is a difficult subject to deal with in the question period.

POSSIBILITY OF CANADA BECOMING PARTY TO 1958 CONVENTION ON CONTINENTAL SHELF IN ORDER TO ENTER RESERVATIONS CONCERNING RESOURCES

Mr. Lloyd R. Crouse (South Shore): Mr. Speaker, my question is addressed to the Secretary of State for External Affairs. On February 13, the minister informed the House that the first substantive session in connection with the Law of the Sea Conference would be held in Santiago, Chile, in April or May of 1974. In view of the fact that Canada's continental shelf represents an area which is 40 per cent the size of Canada's continental land mass, is it the intention of the government of Canada to become a party to the 1958 convention on the continental shelf so that we, as Canadians, may make legal reservations with respect to any of the 15 articles of that convention which concern the exploitation of our natural resources on the shelf?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Secretary of State for External Affairs): I should like to have notice of that question so that I can give an adequate answer to a very careful inquiry.

FEDERAL-PROVINCIAL RELATIONS

CLAIM BY QUEBEC FOR PAYMENT IN LIEU OF USE OF ROYAL CANADIAN MOUNTED POLICE

Mr. Roch La Salle (Joliette): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the Minister of Finance.

Some weeks ago, the Quebec Minister of Justice stated that he intended to claim from the federal government an amount of $230 million representing Ottawa's contribution to the maintenance of a division of the Royal Canadian Mounted Police as a provincial security body.

As it is important to know whether the Quebec minister was serious, I should like to ask the Minister of Finance whether he has received such a claim concerning the refund to Quebec of an amount of $230 million representing expenses in that respect.

Hon. John N. Turner (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, in answer I must tell the hon. member that I have received such a claim, but I must also add that under the equalization payments announced in the budget, the province of Quebec should receive $80 million.

Mr. La Salle: Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask a supplementary of the Minister of Finance.

The minister having said that the province of Quebec will receive an extra amount of a few million dollars, will the $230 million claimed by Quebec be reimbursed to that province by the federal government, for the reasons given by the minister?

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): Mr. Speaker, I have just said that over the amount already granted Quebec in equalization payments, the province will receive an extra $80 million following the measure announced Monday night last.

[Later:]

[English]

Mr. Erik Nielsen (Yukon): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Solicitor General and it is supplementary to that directed to the Minister of Finance. Has a request been received from the government of the province of Quebec for $230 million with respect to police services, either directly or through the RCMP and, if so, has the minister replied, and to what effect?

Hon. Warren Allmand (Solicitor General): A request was made, Mr. Speaker. The matter was brought to my attention and it was pointed out that, as far as I am concerned, the RCMP provides police services which we are willing to provide to any province that wants them, but we are not willing to give out subsidies or grants.

AIR TRANSPORT

CANADIAN CARRIER TO BE AWARDED RECIPROCAL LANDING RIGHTS AT MILAN, ITALY

Mr. Terry O'Connor (Halton): I have a further question to the Minister of Transport, Mr. Speaker, with respect to the reciprocal landing rights awarded to a Canadian air carrier in Milan. In view of the fact the government said it would make an announcement on the subject before January 1, and in view of the fact the minister has told us twice in the House that such an announcement would be made soon, would the hon. gentleman indicate what factors and what circumstances are being considered that are causing such a delay in making the announcement?

Hon. Jean Marchand (Minister of Transport): Unfortunately I can only make the same answer on this occasion. I would hope I would have a decision from the cabinet very soon, but I cannot say whether it will be this week or next week.

Mr. O'Connor: Has the minister estimated the immediate cost in lost revenues due to the delay and, second, has he made any costing with respect to long-range losses due to passenger loyalties which are being acquired by Alitalia?

Mr. Marchand (Langelier): No, I do not have such figures.

FISHERIES

FRESHWATER FISH MARKETING CORPORATION—REQUEST FOR INVESTIGATION OF OPERATIONS

Mr. Elias Nesdoly (Meadow Lake): I have a question for the Minister of Fisheries, Mr. Speaker. In view of the fact that Saskatchewan Co-operative Fisheries Limited has voted to break with the Freshwater Fish Marketing Corporation, in view of the fact that the Freshwater Fish Marketing Corporation has apparently suffered severe financial losses, and in view of the fact that Saskatchewan fishermen have called on the federal government to conduct a complete inquiry into the operation of the Freshwater Fish Marketing Corporation, may I ask whether Co-op Fisheries have been in communication with the minister and, if so, whether an inquiry will be held?

Hon. Jack Davis (Minister of Fisheries): The Saskatchewan Co-operative in question has not been in direct contact with my office. However, I would expect it to work through the provincial government, since the provincial governments of the prairie provinces are joint partners with the federal government in the freshwater fish marketing venture.

GOOSE BAY-HAPPY VALLEY AREA OF LABRADOR—REQUEST FOR REPORT OF FEDERAL-PROVINCIAL COMMITTEE

Mr. Elmer M. MacKay (Central Nova): Mr. Speaker, I have a brief question for the Minister of Regional Economic Expansion. Is the minister now able to table, or report briefly on, the joint federal-provincial report on the future prospects of the Goose Bay-Happy Valley area of Labrador?

Hon. Donald C. Jamieson (Minister of Regional Economic Expansion): Yes, Mr. Speaker. The report in question was prepared as a background document for the preparation of a federal-provincial committee. Copies of the report have been, or are being, made available to members of that committee which is made up of representatives of both governments and of municipalities in the area. INCOME TAX

Mr. Peter C. Bawden (Calgary South): Mr. Speaker, I hope the minister will answer my question today. It is a very important one for a great many Canadians. On February 8 the Leader of the Opposition asked whether the Minister of Finance would be permitting deductions on the part of ordinary Canadians who have to spend money seeking tax advice. May I ask the minister whether the budget purposely overlooked this question, and whether individuals obliged to seek professional advice in filing their tax returns will be permitted to make deductions for the fees they pay?

Mr. Speaker: I fail to see how that is supplementary to a question about pears and peaches.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member would probably suggest that it is a question asked of the same minister. That hardly makes it supplementary. However, the question having been asked the minister might reply. We have just about reached the time when orders of the day should be called.

Hon. Robert Stanbury (Minister of National Revenue): Mr. Speaker, the hon. member knows, I am sure, that questions about the budget are matters for the Minister of Finance.

AGRICULTURE

FARM MACHINERY—INQUIRY AS TO IMPLEMENTATION OF BARBER COMMISSION RECOMMENDATIONS

Mr. Paul Yewchuk (Athabasca): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Prime Minister. On May 19, 1970, I asked the minister of agriculture of that day, the Hon. H. A. Olson, which of the recommendations of the Barber Commission on Farm Machinery Prices had been implemented. His response was that all the recommendations had been implemented except the one dealing with a reverse dumping duty. A similar question was directed to the present Minister of Agriculture on February 5 and his reply was that none of them had been implemented. Bearing in mind the conflict between those answers, I wonder whether the Prime Minister would clarify the situation for the benefit of the House and tell us whether or not any of these recommendations have been implemented and, if so, which ones?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, it would be helpful if the hon. member gave notice of this kind of question or placed it on the order paper. However, I will take it as notice and look into the matter.

Mr. Whelan: A point of order, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Speaker: The Minister of Agriculture is rising on a point of order.

Mr. Whelan: Mr. Speaker, the question is clear in Hansard and the way I answered it. I thought that the hon. member who was asking the question at that time was talking about the present Minister of Agriculture initiating any of the Barber Commission recommendations, and I have already discussed two since that question was asked. The former minister initiated four of the recommendations contained in the Barber Commission report.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I am afraid that unless I recognize the hon. member for Lethbridge he will return in his scarlet coat. The Chair will recognize him before calling orders of the day.

GRAIN

POSSIBLE ENCOURAGEMENT OF FARMERS TO RETURN LAND FROM GRASS TO GRAIN

Mr. Ken Hurlburt (Lethbridge): Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My question is directed to the minister in charge of the Wheat Board. In 1970 the government paid farmers $10 per acre to plant crop lands with grass. In the minister's statement on initial prices today he recommended that they replant their lands with grain. Is it the intention of the government to have these lands varied from year to year?

[Mr. Stanbury.]

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister of Justice): Mr. Speaker, the hon. member is quite inaccurate in suggesting that we are recommending any return of lands from grass to grain. Indeed, as the Minister of Agriculture indicated in the House a couple of nights ago, we propose to continue to encourage farmers to put additional acres into grassland this year. What the hon. member may have noticed is that we are talking of a much larger acreage in grain in the prairie region than in the past number of years. I refer him to the agricultural practice of summerfallow. We would foresee that farmers would reduce their summerfallow to a much lower level than has been the case before.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member for Lethbridge might ask a supplementary, after which, with my apologies to a number of distinguished frontbenchers and to equally distinguished backbenchers—

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Speaker: —I shall call orders of the day.

Mr. Hurlburt: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I should like to ask the minister in charge of the Wheat Board where we are going to get the additional acres in view of the fact that they were planted to grass in 1970 under the Lift program?

Mr. Lang: Mr. Speaker, may I go over it once again for the hon. member. Last year an estimated 29 million acres of grain land in the prairies was in summerfallow, which I believe was a near record for summerfallow. We are anticipating that the farmers may reduce this 29 million acres to as little as 20 million acres, and this will furnish the additional acres for barley, rapeseed and wheat.

Mr. Speaker: Perhaps this question might be followed up tomorrow. Orders of the day.

WEEKLY STATEMENT

Mr. Baldwin: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the government House leader whether, in the unfortunate event that the government is still around to organize the business of the House after next Wednesday, he will tell us what will be the business for the rest of next week and the week following, after completion of the budget debate.

Mr. MacEachen: Mr. Speaker, on Thursday of next week we will probably begin discussion of the Old Age Security Act followed by war veterans allowances. On Monday and Tuesday, March 6 and 7, I shall probably call opposition days. I will be calling the 1972 budget bills at an early date also.

Mr. Baldwin: May I ask a supplementary question. Following from the discussions we have had, and in view of the fact that it is highly important to try to activate the Standing Committee on Public Accounts and the joint standing committee on statutory instruments, can the government House leader indicate when these two committees will be set in motion so they can commence their work?

Mr. MacEachen: Mr. Speaker, we hope to have the organizational meetings for these committees very early next week. In the case of the committee on statutory instruments, I hope to have an organizational meeting established very early next week, and also the public accounts committee set up as early as possible.

While I am on my feet, Mr. Speaker, may I attempt to request the House to agree to an arrangement in regard to time limits for speeches during the budget debate. There was a meeting of House leaders this morning and I hope to be able to explain what appeared even to me to be a complicated formula.

We have agreed that speeches will be limited to 15 minutes, with the exception of a 30 minute time allotment for three members of the official opposition; 40 minutes, however, if one of these members happens to be the Leader of the Opposition. There will be 30 minutes for five ministers, but 40 minutes if one of them happens to be the Prime Minister; and 40 minutes for the leader of the New Democratic Party and the leader of the Social Credit party, or the acting leader of the Social Credit party.

Mr. Speaker: Order. Before recognizing the hon. member for Joliette who, apparently, rises on a point of order—

[English]

There might be a slight difficulty in connection with the hon. member who had the floor last night and who had just about reached the end of a very interesting 15 minute address. In fairness to him, it should be said that at the time he had the floor no order had been made at that point. Therefore, I think he should be allowed to go for a while yet.

With this fifth or sixth exception, as the case may be, perhaps an order might be made, as suggested by the President of the Privy Council. Is it so agreed?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

[Translation]

Mr. La Salle: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Joliette (Mr. La Salle) on a point of order.

Mr. La Salle: Mr. Speaker, my point of order has to do with the question I put to the Minister of Finance. I think it is important that the minister understand the true meaning of my question. He answered that Quebec would get a certain number of million dollars under the equalization payments. My question was whether the minister intended to repay the $230 million claimed by the Justice Minister of Quebec, in respect to the security measures applied in Quebec by the provincial Sûreté as opposed to the R.C.M.P. in other provinces?

Mr. Speaker: Order. I must intervene at this point. The hon. member cannot rise on a point of order to put the question again, or to ask for an explanation on the answer given by the minister. It might be advisable for the hon. member to put the same question tomorrow; I shall cooperate to ensure that his question is allowed again.

[Later:]

[English]

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre is rising on a point of order.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order with respect to the time limit arrangements that we have just made. I believe that the government House leader neglected to include the fact that we had agreed, as I understood it, that these time limits having been decided upon, no one would ask for or be given an extension of the indicated period of time.

Mr. Speaker: Is that also provided by the House?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

FINANCIAL STATEMENT OF THE MINISTER OF FINANCE

The House resumed, from Wednesday, February 21, consideration of the motion of Hon. John N. Turner (Minister of Finance) that this House approves in general the budgetary policy of the government, and the amendment of Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West) (p. 1526), and the amendment to the amendment of Mr. Matte (p. 1533).

Mr. Donald W. Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich): Mr. Speaker, I do appreciate the kindness of the Chair since it was certainly my understanding when I began my speech last evening that this new rule had not come into effect. However, I do not propose to take more than five or six minutes of the time of the House. Thank you once again for the exception.

When my remarks were terminated last evening I was talking, in the context of the coast guard and general marine services, of the need to have international standards of seaworthiness and crewworthiness. The criteria which we ought to include in an international convention which I would like to see developed should be concerned not only with seaworthiness and crewworthiness but also with speeds on the high seas in various types of weather and for various types of ships, whether fully laden or in ballast. I think we should also contrive in such a convention to prescribe construction standards.

In addition, as well as requiring the best available navigational equipment that can be obtained— 360° radar, radio beacons, D/F equipment and ship-to-ship and ship-to-shore radio—all ships under the international convention I am proposing should be required to carry pollution control equipment. I regret that at this point the Minister of the Environment (Mr. Davis) has disappeared.

Ships now carry lifesaving equipment and fire fighting equipment. These are for the safety of the crew. Why should ships not also carry pollution control equipment which is for the protection of the rest of mankind? Surely it is time we insisted on equipment that will safeguard the interest of the rest of the world and reduce the risk to our sources of food.

There has been developed in the area which I represent a type of pollution control equipment which is capable of encircling a damaged vessel or a vessel leaking oil or other floating pollutants with a six-foot boom in a matter of minutes. I call this device "the instant boom". This equipment could be built in the shipyards in my constituency and supplied to ships all over the world.

On the national scene, and as a complement to these precautions, I suggest there should be sited at strategic places around our coast, but particularly in our active ports, a battery of pollution mop-up equipment such as the slick-licker, which was also developed in Esquimalt-Saanich I am pleased to tell my hon. friends, together with mobile instant boom barges. These two pieces of equipment could be brought into play, like fire fighting equipment, when the need arises.

On the bi-national front, once we have put in train legislation and funds to implement the foregoing suggestions nationally, there should be no problem in convincing our U.S. neighbours of the seriousness with which we are taking our status as a maritime nation and the earnestness with which we view our maritime problems and propose solutions for them. We can then take practical steps to co-ordinate our efforts with our neighbours. At the present time, the U.S. coastguard is implementing a system of lane traffic in Puget Sound. We should welcome this development and take similar action in the Gulf of Georgia. So far as I know, nothing of this sort is happening.

Perhaps this is a convenient place for me to conclude my intervention. I should have liked to go into the subject of developing a merchant marine which is a companion part of my theme, but I shall leave that for another opportunity.

Hon. Donald C. Jamieson (Minister of Regional Economic Expansion): Mr. Speaker, in the days since the presentation of the budget of my colleague, the hon. Minister of Finance (Mr. Turner), a number of comments have been made in various parts of this House concerning the correlation between the various budgeting measures that were presented and the emphasis which this government has placed over the past four years on programs to decrease regional economic disparity. Therefore, with the indulgence of the House, I should like to spend a few moments this afternoon indicating how, in my view, the budget is a significant contributor to the improvement of these regional economic disparities, and how these programs when taken in concert with the items totalling something over $500 million listed in the estimates will continue throughout the coming year the thrust that was undertaken in 1969 in order to attempt at least to provide a greater measure of equity across this country and to level out some of the disparities which have plagued this country literally from its very beginning.

In connection with budget measures specifically, it is a fact, of course, whatever arguments may be put forward, some legitimate and some perhaps not quite so legitimate, that the Minister of Finance was on solid ground when he forecast there would be differences of opinion regarding the effectiveness of the various measures he introduced. Other speakers in all parts of the House will, I am sure, be commenting on these particular issues, but I should like to point out to the House that there are certain elements within the budget that, in fact, can be forecast with precision and accuracy. The first of these is that, given the concurrence of this House, and I have not the slightest doubt that this will be granted, as of the beginning of April our old age citizens will have a basic pension increase to $100 a month each and considerably more than that if in fact they are entitled to part or all of the guaranteed income supplement.

The second point is, of course, that there will be a very large number of Canadians, particularly in the lower earnings bracket, who will gain substantial tax relief from these measures. Here again, it is possible to make this kind of forecast with complete accuracy. The third point is that there will be considerable improvement, and I hope it will be considerable, in respect of the measures taken to reduce the high cost of living.

I mention these three because they have a direct relationship not only to my responsibilities as the Minister of Regional Economic Expansion, but also because I come from the province of Newfoundland where I am well aware of the value of these measures and of how welcome they will be. This, it seems to me, is as much a part of fighting regional economic disparity as are the industrial incentives and economic measures so frequently talked about and referred to—indeed, I regret to say, almost to the exclusion of any thorough examination of other aspects of the regional economic expansion program.

Those of you who come from the Atlantic provinces, and I am sure I would not find any disagreement from either my colleagues from Newfoundland or, indeed, from the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Stanfield) on this score, will know that we have within the Atlantic provinces, apart altogether from the present problems which are very acute and very severe in terms of unemployment, what I call a significant residue which is a reflection of past industrial inequity. In other words, we have a great many middle-aged to elderly people who are dependent upon these kinds of measures and improvements to them literally for every mouthful that goes into their mouths and, in fact, for the roofs over their heads. Therefore, these significant improvements will, I know, be of more benefit in many respects to people in the areas for which I have a responsibility than in some other areas of the country, even though I am not, of course, discounting the benefits there either.

The second point where it seems there is an improvement, far beyond those improvements resulting from the budget of the Minister of Finance, is in that area where we have succeeded in turning over additional moneys to the provinces through the equalization formula. I have heard it said in this House that these amounts are perhaps not large enough. I suppose if one were talking about this in purely philosophic or abstract terms he would certainly have to agree that, indeed, seven of the 10 provinces will need even more in the way of assistance than the Minister of Finance is providing at the present time. Let me remind the House that over the past few years the degree of grants under the equalization formula has increased sharply from what it was even four or five years ago. Under this heading alone, leaving out the amount that will be provided through this particular budget, equalization in the case of Newfoundland today, and I use it because I am more familiar with the figures for that province, amounted to something in the neighbourhood of $130 million or $140 million, and now will probably be over the $150 million mark.

I mention these figures, in a sense, off the top of my head because there is no time for a detailed description. The figures are certainly in this area. Another interesting point when one asks what the federal government and federal agencies are doing in respect of regional economic expansion is that they are helping certain taxpayers across the country. Perhaps again I might refer to the province of Newfoundland and mention the fact that according to the statistics which are available for the year 1972-73, 52 cents of every dollar expended by the government of Newfoundland directly came in one way or another from federal spending. At the moment I am not arguing whether this is an adequate, inadequate or excessive amount. I might be prepared to argue with my colleague the minister in private that it might be greater, but I think it is significant to point out that it is still a very large expenditure in respect of any province of this country in the kind of program which the Minister of Finance has moved ahead on this particular occasion.

As Minister of Regional Economic Expansion, I recognize that one of the things which in fact has been most easy to identify is the plight of the municipalities in many areas where disparities are greatest at the present time. The municipalities have to assume a larger and larger portion of the burden of increased services and increased demands, so therefore any relief which is to be provided by the federal government to the provinces will we hope—and I am sure this will be the case—reflect on the position of the municipalities. In addition, however, there is also the fact that in several regions of this country, particularly those which by agreement with the various provinces have been designated as special areas, the federal government through the Department of Regional Economic Expansion has been making a significant input into the plant of the municipalities in these special areas. It might be surprising to hon. members to hear that in fact the emphasis—and it is understandable why this is so—has been on the industrial incentives.

The fact is that if one takes the infrastructure support provided directly by DREE in one form or another to the provinces, and couples it with the very important other matters designed to put in place a better social structure for these areas, and takes these two together, in the past year as in the coming year some three-fifths, roughly speaking, of the total budget for regional economic development will in fact be going into assistance to municipalities of various sizes but usually small to medium-sized municipalities where in fact the need and demand is greatest. It will interest hon. members to know that during the four years in which DREE has been in operation—and effectively it has only been three and a half years that the program has had an opportunity to start taking effect—just less than an amount of $1 billion has been provided to the provinces. The majority of this has been in terms of infrastructure support and the like, has been provided by the program I have talked about in the past few minutes.

In other words, we have recognized what has been maintained by a great many people, long before the concept of DREE was created, that is, that there is the necessity, if one is to draw industry to a particular area, to ensure there is the infrastructure support necessary to induce an industry to come into the area and, second, to help through the provision of the basic services necessary to make that industry grow. Therefore, I believe this is one of the more important parts. If one takes, as I say, the budgetary measures and couples them not only with the plans and estimates for the future but the expenditures to date, it can be seen that a very significant contribution has been made in respect of the reduction of regional economic disparities.

Let me go on to say that there are unquestionably major problems in respect of the program of regional economic expansion. We have been trying now for some months, indeed the review preceded my assumption of the particular responsibilities, to determine how we can make this whole program more flexible. Perhaps I will be permitted to go into some of these matters in more detail when I appear before the Committee later in the current month or in the month of March. However, I want to re-emphasize this point, because it has been suggested on one or two occasions in this House that perhaps we have not been recognizing the necessity for infrastructure support. I do not like that word, but I am sure hon. members know I am referring to such things as water and sewage systems, aid to land assembly, the building of schools and various other public facilities.

There is another way in which the budget is very significant in terms of what effect it will have in relieving regional inequalities in this country. I refer to the tax measures which the Minister of Finance mentioned on Monday night. When one looks at the difficulties we face in attempting to induce industry on a fairly significant scale into the so-called disparity parts of Canada, it will be seen that there are a number of problems one encounters which are clearly visible but which are very difficult to eliminate and which, in fact, have been with us in one way or another for years. I am sure the Leader of the Opposition in a completely non-partisan sense will probably recognize what I am speaking of because of the innovative steps taken by his government in Nova Scotia in terms of the Industrial Estates and various other agencies of this kind which have been copied in one way or another in other parts of Canada.

Mr. Jamieson: In the short time I have, Mr. Speaker, let me give you what are in my view some of the problems with which we must cope and which I hope we can resolve. The first is in respect of the degree of entrepreneurial skills, talent and initiative which exists in a particular region of this country. If one looks at the disbursements which have been made under the incentives program it becomes perfectly obvious that one of the difficulties we face in many areas, even where we are not only willing but anxious to make expenditures in terms of attracting industry, is in respect of the very small number, relatively speaking, of applicants who come forward seeking this kind of aid. I think there are very good reasons for this. Some of them have to do with the fact that in the case of some small industry there might not be the capability in terms of talent, staff and the like to do the necessary projections, studies of potential markets and the whole range of things which are necessary before one can put a new industry in place.

Another significant point stands out very clearly when one looks at the incentives which have been provided. By and large, the DREE program has been most successful where it has had some direct application in respect of the upgrading of resource-based industry; in other words, where there has been a reasonably solid base such as in the fishing industry. It has been possible there—and there has not been a significant lack of initiative on the part of entrepreneurs—to put in additional funds to undertake expansion. However, the further one becomes removed from the resource-based industry the more one seems to attract what are sometimes described as footloose industries, that is those which can locate in one place in Canada as well as another, and it becomes apparent that the entrepreneurialship is one of the things which is badly needed in many parts of the country.

The next point—and here I return to my observation of a few moments ago about the assistance in the budget—is to try to determine what degree of assistance is necessary in order to change an entrepreneur's or a company's mind about a proposed location in favour of one where it is desirable to build up an industrial enterprise. This is again a very difficult question. I mentioned a few moments ago that we do have various agencies, somewhat comparable to those established in Nova Scotia but located across the country and also located in the "have" provinces as well as the "have-nots", which are also in the business of offering incentives and inducements of one kind or another in order to keep industry active in their regions and to expand. I would naturally assume that each province, whether or not it be more affluent than some of the others, will still want to get a large industrial base.

So, therefore, one of the things that becomes apparent is that this competitive situation which exists, not only between the larger and the smaller provinces but between the smaller provinces themselves, is in many respects detrimental to the whole attempt at getting some form of regional economic expansion. I believe that it will be and is possible to pit, as it were, the more affluent provinces against the "have-not" provinces in this regard and to do a good deal of shifting, even within the depressed regions of affluent provinces. But one of the real dangers we have discovered, and it is perhaps one of the failings of our federal-provincial system, is that two or three "have-not" provinces compete amongst themselves, and the only winner in that kind of situation is the entrepreneur or the promoter. So one of the things which is important, and what we are seeking to do, is to try to bring some rationality to the industrial development efforts of the provinces, so that far from imposing our will on them we will nevertheless be able to arrive at some cohesive policy so that the poor regions will not be played off, as it were, against each other in this search for industrial expansion.

A third point which it is important to examine in detail in asking how the incentives program can be improved is to improve what I describe, for want of a better term, as the industrial intelligence that is available either to the industrial provinces or to other regions of this country. For a very long time, and certainly it goes back in my own memory to the earliest days of Newfoundland's entry into the Canadian union, there has been a tendency to play it by ear when it came to industrial development, to look to anyone who came forward with a proposal and to say: if you are willing to come in, certain assistance will be granted to you. But there has not been either a strategy or the degree of thorough examination necessary to determine whether that kind of industry will be able to survive in the particular milieu or area in which it is being located. Therefore, I see a need across the country for a very thorough job, particularly, for instance, within the Atlantic region and the western parts of the country, for this form of industrial intelligence.

I want to emphasize that what I have said is in no sense meant to convey any criticism of what some industrial organizations within the provinces are doing at present. Their efforts are very commendable and they have had indeed a good deal of success in one way or another in terms of attracting industry and in terms of getting additional jobs. But there is the necessity for some form of over-view to eliminate, if nothing else, this intense, one would almost describe it as exaggerated, competition that can sometimes develop between provinces. Therefore, there is in the programs that I am seeking now to develop in a comprehensive way an attempt on our part to discuss with the provinces how we can be more helpful to them in establishing this form of industrial intelligence.

Another difficulty in terms of regional development of industry is the growing tendency typified best of all perhaps by southwestern Ontario, but also by a few other regions of the country, for what I described in a speech in western Canada in December as industrial incest. In other words, the whole industrial development tends to become more and more interdependent throughout the country. Therefore, one has a situation in which, if you have a great deal of industry, there are many strong reasons why another one will attach itself to that particular complex, and the process grows. Of course, I should say in parenthesis that the transportation problem is basic to all of us and that any re-examination of the regional economic expansion policy cannot be undertaken effectively unless it also examines the transportation question.

But even more important than transportation, in the sense that I have been outlining it, is this tendency for industries to group together. Therefore, it is my judgment, and we hope to work in this direction, that we would get agreement with the provinces. This is in partial answer to a question asked a few days ago by the Leader of the Opposition. We would get, in co-operation with the provinces, the capacity to seek out those people who have a communality of interest in terms of a variety of related industries, so that instead of simply seeking to put a particular plant in a particular location we would do a thorough analysis in that region of what, to use the vernacular of the trade, now are referred to as spin-offs or value added, or whatever the case might be. In New Brunswick we are experimenting with such an approach with a good deal of success at present.

One of the things that is clearly necessary in the Atlantic provinces, for instance, is a complete metal working complex, not simply one factory making one part of a metal working complex but a total complex. So the Multiplex Corporation was established with that idea in mind. It will be very important in terms of a large section of this country that we have not merely the industrial incentives to which I have referred earlier but as well the maximum number of concessions of one type or another, be they depreciation, lower tax rates, or whatever they happen to be, because when one puts all of these things together, they are really the selling tools that we will have in order to induce industries to enter into these regions. I am satisfied for my own part that if we are to get away from the resource based industries in the regions of the country that are not in the centre—which is perhaps the best way to describe it—if we are going to get into manufacturing and processing, which I believe we have to do whether we are talking about agricultural products or fishery products, then it can only be done on the basis or in some variation of the routine that I have outlined.

It has been said, and I freely admit, that the incentives program needs re-examination and needs to be updated. I do not make any apologies for the past performance because I think that when we are before the committee it will be possible to illustrate that it has performed reasonably well, but I think it can perform better. There are questions which hon. members in all parts of this House will want to ask, and, incidentally, I would like to get from them advice on some of these things. For instance, it has been suggested that incentives should be paid earlier on in terms of the start of a new project. In its wisdom this House decided, when the DREE legislation was established, that the enterprise has to be 80 per cent in place in terms of its capital assets before it is entitled to a single cent from DREE. Furthermore, the enterprise must be in commercial production for a period of 30 days.

The reasons for having put these provisos in place are obvious, of course. They were designed to ensure that moneys would not be given out before the assets were in place or before there was pretty clear evidence that the project was going to go ahead. In other words, we were not speculating with the taxpayers money. There are those who say that perhaps this kind of policy should be changed, that in point of fact what is really needed is bridge financing, that we should be prepared to commit earlier and to put dollars in before the project gets to the point that I have outlined. I have some reservations on this score, but nevertheless it is something that is open to question. It may be that we can find a better formula that would help the small businessman in particular who may have difficulty in getting the bridge financing, even on the basis of an offer of assistance from the Department of Regional Economic Expansion.

The second way in which the program has to be improved is by decentralizing the decision-making processes. All of us are aware—

Mr. Woolliams: Are you getting ready for the next leadership convention?

Mr. Jamieson: Mr. Speaker, the last time I rose in the House to speak I had an awful lot of fun with members opposite and they criticized me for not talking about the policies of my department. I think I am restraining myself admirably today.

On the matter of decentralizing, Mr. Speaker, one of the things I feel is important is that we should not think about decentralization in the conventional sense. In other words, when one normally talks about the decentralization of a department or agency one thinks about putting a headquarters in Halifax or Moncton and saying that we are now decentralized in terms of the Atlantic provinces, or putting a headquarters in Edmonton or Winnipeg, and saying we are now decentralized in terms of the prairie provinces or western provinces. What I am looking for is a decentralizing mechanism that will not simply re-centralize in another part of the country, but which will ensure that there will be trained, responsible people with authority to make the decisions, in the field, so that in particular the smaller entrepreneurs will be able to get assistance and to get it more quickly.

But once again I have to remind hon. members that one of the great concerns expressed in this House when DREE was established was that there be a solid and assured guarantee that public moneys were not being expended on projects which were, at the very best, of dubious value. As a result there has been a natural, understandable and defensible tendency to try to be careful, to centralize, and to take too long in many respects in the making of decisions. So, Mr. Speaker, I am now in the process of trying to find, in consultation with the provinces, just what is the best method by which we can resolve this particular problem.

One of the other difficulties which we can go into at committee stage, with regard to levels of expenditure on incentives, is that there is still not a sufficiently long history behind the program for us to be able to forecast with precision just how many dollars in incentives will actually be spent in a particular year. One of the related difficulties in that regard is, of course, that it is also hard, at any given moment, to assess how many jobs have actually been created, because the lead time may be as much as three years after a grant is offered before an enterprise goes into production. We will need some more experience on the basis of the past three years' records, before we are able to give the House and the public the clearer figures to which they are entitled.

There is something else that has bothered me since becoming the Minister of Regional Economic Expansion, and which I am hoping we will be able to correct in some other way. I believe that we ought to have a greater degree of advice from knowledgeable people in the various regions, first of all as to the kinds of enterprises which are most likely to succeed, something I have already alluled to, and second, advice on many of the specific applications for incentive grants that are received. I would propose that we expand the present National Advisory Board on Incentives, which has been of very great value to us, to the point where we have sources on which we can draw in all the regions—businessmen, various other people, labour leaders and the like—so that they too will have the chance to tell us in specific terms whether such and such an enterprise has a chance for success.

Of course one of the difficulties has been that we have to respect the confidentiality of the records of various companies that come to us, but I would hope there can be some way arrived at so that not only the members of this House but these advisory panels and the like can have the opportunity, under some form of confidentiality, to assess just how meaningful has been the contribution we have made, and how effective any new proposals we make are likely to be. I am aware that there are members of this House who dismiss the concept of regional economic expansion out of hand. I am aware that there are those who believe that the natural forces should be put into play, that they should be allowed to take their course, and that this country should in all probability be polarized around ten or twelve centres within the next ten to 20 years.

Indeed, there are those who say that any efforts such as we have undertaken, efforts both of this government and of provincial governments, in an attempt to change the normal demographic trends in this country are really, as we say in the vernacular of the sea, spitting into the wind. I cannot accept that, Mr. Speaker, and I do not believe that the majority of the members of this House accept it. I think there is a great deal more—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. I regret to interrupt the minister, but the 30 minutes allotted to him by the order of the House passed earlier this day have now expired.

Mr. James Gillies (Don Valley): Mr. Speaker, I rise to speak in this debate on the budget which is before the House fully aware of the fact that this budget has probably been awaited by Canadians with more expectation than any budget brought down in the last 15 to 20 years. I am not cynical enough to think that the reason for their impatience for it was simply because of the political implications of the budget, but rather because they, the Canadian people, have a great deal of concern about the way the Canadian economy has been managed in the past four years, and about the way that it is going to be managed during the course of the years ahead.

This concern is easily understood when we recall that we have had an unemployment rate for three or four years of 6½ per cent, when we note that we have inflation at a rate of 5 per cent, and that it seems to be increasing, when we see that we have regional disparities increasing more and more, and despite the expenditure of millions of dollars that they do not seem to be getting less, and when we see that we still have in this rich nation far too many people living in poverty.

The Canadian people are very concerned about these problems. Moreover, they are very concerned not only about these things that are so apparent and easily measured, but they are also concerned because they have a feeling that somehow or other economic policy making in Ottawa is out of touch with the reality of what is happening in the world. Canadians know and have seen that the world is changing dramatically. They know that no longer are we in a period of Kennedy Rounds when there was a great thrust for free trade. They know that we have entered a period in which we may well be moving to more protectionism, and when we do not know what is going to happen as a result of the development of the Common Market.

Canadians are aware that their own country has changed dramatically. They realize that more and more people are living in cities, and that more and more employment has to be found in manufacturing, and in service trades to provide employment for the people in urban areas. They recognize that over the last few years a nationalistic spirit has been developing in this country that wonders why such a high proportion of our resources is controlled by people who are not Canadians and who do not live within the confines of this nation. As a result of all these things throughout the country there is a feeling of concern about what our economic policies are going to be.

People hoped to find out in the budget brought down last Monday night that the government of Canada had entered a new period, a period of new ideas, that the government was really taking our problems seriously, and was willing to bring down measures that would solve them. Did they find that in this budget, Mr. Speaker? The answer is clearly no. This is a budget that could have been written in 1952, that could have been written in 1962, and indeed could have been written in any year since the publication of Lord Keynes work, "The General Theory of Employment, Interest and Money". This is a budget that holds together without a particular thrust, that does not represent or seem to understand the urgency with which Canadians want an attack made on the economic problems they face in the world today.

What is the purpose of this budget? At the start of his budget speech the Minister of Finance (Mr. Turner) said that the budget was designed to lower unemployment, slow down inflation, create faster economic growth, and increase the real standard of living of Canadians. It is the responsibility of the people of Canada and of this House to decide whether or not the budget can succeed in achieving those particular goals. Canadians will only know a number of months after this budget has been adopted, if unfortunately it is adopted, whether or not these goals can be achieved. We, in this House, do not have the luxury of waiting until that time before deciding whether or not we can support this type of budget. For myself, I see little likelihood that the goals espoused by the Minister of Finance in the budget will be reached.

How does the Minister of Finance suggest we solve the present unemployment problem in Canada? The basic assumption of the budget is that we can approach this problem in a global way by increasing the aggregate amount of expenditure in the economy. The minister says he is depending on an increase in export trade, on an increase in capital investment, and on inventory buildup as the basis of the thrust for creating the 300,000 jobs which this budget will attempt to create. He said there will be some increase in consumer demand, but he was not looking to it for the basic thrust of the budget in 1973. Mr. Speaker, can we have confidence in the predictions of the Minister of Finance when he says that 300,000 new jobs will be created? It seems to me to be very difficult to have confidence in that projection. We have no budget papers and nothing has been said in the budget about the way in which forecasts have been made. We are not told what proportion of new jobs will come through increases in manufacturing, what proportion will come through increases in export trade and what proportion will come through increases in investment. We must take on faith the projections of the Department of Finance and I, for one, find it hard to do so, given the fact so many projections have been wrong.

In addition given the fact that the Minister of Finance said only last fall that a cut in personal income tax and an increase in expenditure would bankrupt the nation, and that the Stanfield proposal for the constant dollar was an absolutely unworkable scheme, yet accepted these propositions in the budget further shakes my confidence. In view of this performance by the Minister of Finance, one can have little confidence in his statements.

Mr. Gillies: Even if there were not such a dismal record in the field of forecasting and performance, can one be sanguine about the budget when one looks at its thrusts and philosophy in the attempt to create 300,000 jobs? Can one realistically expect the people of Canada to accept a budget that says that one of the important ways of increasing employment this year is through an expansion of exports? There may be an expansion of exports from Canada during 1973, but it is far from certain in view of the recent breakdown in the international monetary exchanges and the devaluation of the American dollar on February 12. We know that there may be an increase in protectionism in the United States and in other countries with which we do business. We know that, in our own monetary policies, there are problems connected with our floating exchange rate, and I wonder if we can keep our dollar floating without creating serious inflation. We know that in Canada we have never had really high levels of prosperity since the dollar floated up in value. Under these conditions are we responsible in placing confidence in any budget that says that one of the major thrusts for increasing employment in 1973 will be through an expansion of international trade?

What are the other reasons for expansion? We do not know how large the increase in capital investment will be in 1973 but, according to indications at this time, it will not be extremely large. There is still a degree of uncertainty among businessmen, an uncertainty resulting from the provisions of the tax reform bill, from the suggested Competition Act and from changes in labour relation laws. People in the business community still are not sure where the government is going. Consequently, we cannot positively count on substantially increased business investment to move the economy ahead. Certainly, we have been looking for an inventory buildup for the last two years, and that inventory buildup has yet to occur. But even if it does, it is an enormously cyclical factor. So, if we are to depend on increased international trade, on increased inventory buildup and increased capital expenditure to get this economy moving again after it had been in dead centre for three or four years, it seems to me we are expecting more than we have any right to hope for.

What do the budget figures actually tell us? They say that the government hopes, basically, to stimulate an expansion in consumer expenditure and, to do that, the minister has introduced a cut in personal income taxes, a cut which, I presume, the government introduced with reluctance, because, as recently as last May, the government thought that cutting personal taxes was not a good thing to do. However, even if one counts the cuts in personal income taxes introduced in this budget, the amount of money that will be taken out of the hands of consumers by the personal income tax system in 1973 will be higher, it is estimated, than the amount taken out in 1972 despite the cuts which have taken place.

In addition, the budget expects to introduce more purchasing power into the economy by cutting sales taxes and excise taxes by about $200 million, out of a total of $3.5 billion. So, that is a very modest cut indeed. The net effect of all these cuts in taxes will be that the total revenues of the government will be $1.7 billion higher than they were last year. Of course, expenditures have been increased throughout the same period; expenditures have a way of increasing faster than revenues. Consequently, this year the budget proposes a budgetary deficit.

The really fundamental question one has to ask in considering this budget and its effect on employment in the economy is: is the deficit large enough to really move this country ahead, to produce the sort of employment that Canadians have every reason to expect and to hope for within the economy. I would argue, that it is not. In the first place, the change in the cash base, as the minister likes to point out, between this year and last year is essentially nothing. Last year the cash needs of the government were forecast at $2 billion, and the cash needs for the government in the forthcoming year will still be $2 billion. We were to see 300,000 new jobs last year and we did not get them. Why would one think that there will be 300,000 new jobs this year, without any change?

On a national accounts basis, the deficit is less than it was last year. Yes, the deficit is actually less than it was last year. On a budgetary basis it will be only $975 million. I suggest to you that a deficit of this size has little likelihood of moving the country forward in the way in which it ought to go. Let us see what would happen in this country on the basis of our present tax system if there were high employment. Where would we be? If the country were operating on a basis of high employment, under the expenditure and revenue pattern suggested by the Minister of Finance in his budget we would have a surplus in tax revenue in this country of approximately $1 billion. Even if we were operating today with an unemployment rate of 5.5 per cent, we would probably still be in a balanced budget condition. Considering the revenue and expenditure pattern that the government has brought forward, how can one ever argue that the economy will move ahead?

As I said many times, I do not like international comparisons, particularly those involving the United States. When United States authorities wanted to bring their unemployment rate down they operated with a deficit of 10 per cent on a national accounts basis and brought the unemployment rate down from over 6 per cent to about 5 per cent in 17 months. On a national accounts basis, the deficit which the American government is running with a 5 per cent unemployment rate is twice as high, proportionately, as the deficit projected by the minister for the forthcoming year. In view of this pattern, there is no reason to expect that a deficit of the size projected in this budget will do anything to move this country ahead in a major way.

How long must Canadians wait before a government takes the sort of action that will put the people of this country back to work? We do not need to have a 6.5 per cent unemployment rate in this country three or four years in a row. We do not need to have young people without jobs. What we need is the will and determination to make the economy work. Only a lack of spirit on the part of government has enabled the situation to continue. In Germany there is virtually no unemployment. In Japan there is full employment. In the United States the unemployment rate is down to 5 per cent. Why cannot we do something about the problem in this country?

I can assure you, Mr. Speaker, that if a Progressive Conservative government had been in power and had been given the responsibility of bringing down a budget, it would have brought down one that would get this country going again. That budget would have been substantially more expansionary than the budget the government is introducing at this time. Within one year and a half our unemployment rate would be down towards 5 per cent, revenues would be up and we would not be operating so far below potential. Just think what you could do with the extra revenue that full employment would generate. If you had an extra $1 billion in tax revenue, you could start to move old age security payments down from age 65. If you had an extra $5 billion or $6 billion in output, which would happen and which is the real value to the country from a full employment operation, just think what you could do with regard to housing, regionally depressed areas and so forth. It is inexcusable that, after three years, the government is not willing to go on a much more expansionary basis than they have at the present time. If the Conservatives had brought down the budget, we would have removed the 11 per cent sales tax on building materials—

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Gillies: —to lower the high price of housing and construction and to get the stimulation of more employment right away. If we had brought down a budget, we would have removed the sales tax on all types of clothing, not just children's clothing, in order to avoid the bureaucratic problems that will develop in deciding which is which. If we had brought down a budget, we would have had a program—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. I regret that I have to interrupt the hon. member, but the time allotted to him by the House order made earlier has expired.

Mr. Stanfield: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. Under the agreement reached, the hon. member has half an hour.

Mr. Lefebvre: That is correct, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The Chair is always glad to have advice. It had not been given to the Chair before. I apologize to the hon. member for Don Valley.

Mr. Gillies: As I was saying, Mr. Speaker, if we had brought in the budget, we would have removed the sales tax on building materials, all types of clothing, not just children's clothing, and brought in a program to help the small businessmen of this country. We would have had the tax program that has been put forward by our party, a program that would really stimulate employment because the bulk of employment in this country is still in small business. To have a budget come down that does nothing more than correct the mistakes of the past as far as small business is concerned is quite inexcusable.

If we had done these things, the deficit we would be running on a national accounts basis would be somewhat over two and one half as much as the deficit which the Minister of Finance suggested. I say to the members of this House that this country at long last needs this sort of stimulation to move ahead in an effective and improved fashion. This is the sort of program we would have had if there were a Conservative government in power at the present time.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Gillies: The Minister of Finance says that with his budget he may overshoot; it is a budget that may be too strong. I do not know how it can be too strong. There is no way that there is sufficient stimulation in that budget to bring unemployment down to a level of 4.5 per cent, the figure for which we should be aiming. Even his own estimate is that the unemployment rate would be down to 5.5 per cent. I suppose what the minister is saying is that the budget may be too much stimulation in its inflationary impact.

There is no question that inflation is a very important problem in this nation. However, anyone who thinks that inflation in the nation today is coming from excess demand in the economy certainly is misinterpreting the inflationary situation in totality. That is unexcusable. It may well be a sort of interpretation that will rank with the earlier choice of the present government trying to stop inflation in this nation by creating unemployment. The inflation we have in this nation today, and a very serious problem it is, will be with us unless we take serious action to prevent it.

It is an inflation that is caused primarily by cost push, and an inflation that is created by cost push can only be solved by an action that is dedicated and directed toward attacking the particular problems that are causing it. If this party were the government, it would have introduced on budget night a program which would have called for a freeze on wages, prices, dividends and income. We would have an income policy for 90 days so that we could develop in this country a stabilization program that would really get to the heart of the inflation problem of this nation.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Gillies: The time has passed when we can ask the Canadian people to pay the cost of a continuing inflationary situation such as we have had for the past year. The time has passed when we can pretend to put our finger in the dyke and solve these problems. The time has come for action on these particular situations. We would have put on a freeze. We would have used the time of the freeze to consult with the provinces, labour leaders, business leaders and consumer groups to work out an economic stabilization program that would achieve controlling the price rises in this nation.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Gillies: It would bring down the inflationary rate in this country to close to 3 per cent in a year. This is the sort of thing we need. The Canadian people want action to solve the problems of unemployment and inflation. The budget before us tackles neither of these in a really responsible fashion. There is no chance of this budget solving the problems of unemployment and inflation. There is no way in which responsible members of this House can support this budget given the fact that we have these serious problems in the country today.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Gillies: The people of Canada want the problem solved. They know these problems were solved in the United States to a considerable degree. Why does not the government have some imagination and come forward with programs that will really work?

In addition to having an expansionary program of the sort this party proposes, and in addition to a freeze to tackle the problem of inflation, we would have been working on programs to solve some of the other economic problems that face this country. We would have had a task force working now to find out how to use funds in the exchange equalization for investment by Canadians. We would have had a tax program to support Canadian exporters—a program based on performance. We would have resurrected the Porter commission report and done something about regional monetary policies to stir economic activity in this depressed nation.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Gillies: By now we would have certainly had a reorganization going into the way in which economic policy decisions are made by this government so that we would not be making policy on forecasts that are wrong in direction.

Some hon. Members: Shame!

Mr. Gillies: The people of Canada deserve much more leadership in economic policy making than is even suggested in this budget. The people of Canada want these problems solved. Any member of this House of Commons who thinks this budget is going to reduce unemployment substantially, who thinks this budget can possibly solve the inflation problem and therefore votes for it is not responsibly serving the needs of the Canadian people at this time.

Mr. Blais: I was wondering whether the hon. member for Don Valley would permit a question? I am sorry for the delay, but the thunderous applause prevented my getting your attention, Mr. Speaker.

The hon. member has indicated that he espouses a policy of wage and price controls and controls on dividend payments. I should like to ask him when he came to that brillant conclusion was that decision formed when he appeared on the program Encounter on February 8, 1973 at which point he gave such an indication—

Mr. Grafftey: That is not a question, that is a speech.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The question and the answer would have to be very brief. The hon. member for Don Valley is one of the members of the opposition who has been given 30 minutes for his speech. There was approximately a minute left at the conclusion of his observations and the applause attendant thereon. I think I am bound by the order of the House, since a question by the hon. member would take us past the time allotted to the hon. member for Don Valley.

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): He failed to answer the question.

An hon. Member: Don't you think he could?

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): The question killed the whole speech.

Mr. Gillies: I have the answer right here.

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): He ran away!

Mr. Alexander: You all look sick over there.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: May we have order. The Chair has recognized the hon. member for Sherbrooke.

[Translation]

Mr. Irénée Pelletier (Sherbrooke): Mr. Speaker, I am very pleased to speak at the beginning of the budget debate.

I would like to take this opportunity to discuss two subjects which are important both for the constituency I have the honour to represent and for Canada as a whole.

[English]

Before dealing with these two important questions, may I say it is a very happy coincidence that I should be one of the first backbenchers on the government side to speak on the budget. I was offered this opportunity, probably, because the first minister of finance of this country was the Hon. Sir Alexander Galt, the member for Sherbrooke in Sir John A. Macdonald's first cabinet.

The county which I represent has been represented by many other distinguished members who have served Sherbrooke and Canada with high distinction. I might mention, for example, the Hon. William Ives, Charles Howard and Maurice Gingues in this connection.

Sherbrooke, often rightly called the Queen city of the Eastern Townships, is the fourth most important city in the province of Québec. I am very happy, Mr. Speaker, to be able to draw the attention of the government and this House on the economic situation in Sherbrooke and the Eastern Townships during the debate on the budget, a budget which will allow the government to materialize its intentions.

Mr. Speaker, the two questions I chose to deal with are part of the two major objectives stated in the Speech from the Throne and that the government intends to pursue in the coming years in both the social and economic fields.

I will deal first of all with the economic situation in Sherbrooke and the Eastern Townships and, after that, with amateur sport in Canada.

In order to reach the economic objectives stated, the government of Canada has launched a two-part program. As indicated in the Speech from the Throne, the first part consists of measures to provide more jobs immediately by strenghtening and broadening existing programs. As an example, one can quote a substantial seasonal capital works project to be undertaken in co-operation with municipalities and provinces.

In the second part, the government intends to take measures that will add to the fundamental strenght of the economy and can be expected to have effect with a minimum of delay and, again, one can quote as an example the Speech from the Throne where it is said that the government intends to bring in renewed measures to reduce deeply-entrenched regional economic disparities and the Department of Regional Economic Expansion will be decentralized to allow a better identification of opportunities for regional development.

Among the measures which we could single out in that second part, there is one which seems to me to be important and that is the one dealing with already existing programs to encourage research and development in order to increase their efficiency by encouraging innovation in the private sector of the economy, a two-fold important step in a riding which has two universities—one English-speaking and one French-speaking—two community colleges, one French and the other one English, and several other educational institutions.

As to economic growth, and industrial progress in particular, we are well aware of the fact that the Canadian government in agreement with provinces makes a great contribution to the economic growth, because it has many controls which enables it to encourage investment.

If we consider a map of the province of Quebec, Mr. Speaker, we see that the Eastern Townships region is perhaps one of the only regions in Quebec which has not benefited, during the past few years, from significant government assistance. It now ranks among the slower growth regions in this country.

It has to be emphasized that the federal government, under the designated area assistance program, invested several millions of dollars in this region. As regards industrial structures, however, we must admit that the main reason why we are lagging behind in terms of economy is that the amounts granted were far from being sufficient to create a substantial impact.

Considering data related to employment in the manufacturing sector, we see that Sherbrooke is in a position much worse than many other regions throughout Canada and increased government assistance would be very useful and have pretty good results.

Between 1965 and 1972, employment in the manufacturing sector in Quebec has risen by 7.4 per cent while it dropped by 10.8 per cent in Sherbrooke. Therefore, if the manufacturing sector is important, our region is becoming a marginal area and we can prove, in the light of available information, that the city of Sherbrooke can in no way expect to have an economic recovery without substantial grants from the federal government.

For several years, the Eastern Townships have been studied from a social, economic, cultural, industrial point of view.

In the recently published white paper on socio-economic conditions in the Eastern Townships, we find the main reasons why the Eastern Townships are behind on an economic level, in comparison with other areas of the country. It must be pointed out that the industrial structures are one of the reasons for that economic slump.

We all know that the textile industry as well as the pulp and paper industry have always been and are still among the most important of the district. Now, we know that though both industries have experienced a certain stability in recent years, it must be admitted thanks to the intervention of the federal government, they have not increased the number of jobs and it is easy to understand why there is at the present time a surplus of manpower in that area.

We see anomalies such as, for instance, where the average annual salary paid in the clothing industry of the area is $2,122 lower than the national average, which is $5,492.

This, I respectfully suggest, shows to what extent these traditional industries have paid such low wages in our area.

It is true that the Sherbrooke area has developed an important tertiary sector, but unfortunately the secondary sector has progressed so slowly in recent years that there has been practically no economic progress.

It is obvious that in order to restart the economy, there will have to be some quick and important government action.

The present Minister of Finance (Mr. Turner) said not so long ago that the tertiary sector cannot develop if the secondary sector is not in good shape.

Regional expansion programs should be timed in keeping with the national economic situation. The federal government has, on one hand, situation programs for the purpose of coping with cyclic variations and on the other hand, national expansion programs to change economic structures of a region at a given time and at long term.

As a result of delayed application of structural programs in many cases (regional development), the government now lacks significant possibilities for making public investments more profitable; businessmen are well aware that there is a strategic timing for investments, which is often determined by the situation.

I therefore believe that we should take these two important factors into consideration for our investments in industrial infrastructures, on the one hand the economic situation of the country as a whole and on the other the situation proper to a specific region at a specific time.

Nationally, 1973 should be a good year for private investments and consequently a good year to support efforts for economic expansion in the Eastern Townships.

It could be useless to think of investing industrial development funds in Sherbrooke without knowing whether or not there will be private investments, which as I have said, depend on the national overall sitation. Just as it could be useless to invest capital in places that are not prepared for them.

Ideal conditions exist in Sherbrooke at the present time, and there is urgent need for action, as a result of the national situation as well as the sad state of the regional economy and the rational requests expressed by the people of the Eastern Townships in the last few years.

Sherbrooke is the capital of the Eastern Townships; the riding encompasses an area which has seen an almost unique migratory movement in Canada. One can say that the Eastern Townships encompass eight ridings, of which seven are rural and one urban. The seven rural ridings are now losing their population to the urban riding of Sherbrooke. In addition, as a result of the stratification of ages, we must welcome a high percentage of young people who flood the labour market.

In 1972 alone, those two factors put together led to an increase in the number of employees in Sherbrooke from 49,244 in January 1972 to 59,100 in 1973. This increase therefore exceeds 20 per cent. Thus 7,449 jobs were created last year to employ this manpower, but as we can easily notice it was not sufficient and in January 1973 the unemployment rate in Sherbrooke was between 11.6 and 11.8 per cent.

Two firms among the most important in the region are now threatening to close down sometime during the year. The university hospital, otherwise recognized throughout Canada, would dismiss about 200 persons and nothing serious is provided as a replacement.

However, there is hope since three firms that would create about 400 jobs would come to Sherbrooke if they were attributed 45 acres of serviced land in a regional industrial park—which indeed has been seriously considered for several years—whose plans are now available.

Other industries have expressed their intention to settle eventually in an industrial park in Sherbrooke. This industrial park was recommended in a $250,000 research report sponsored by the federal government in the riding of Sherbrooke. Without help, the city of Sherbrooke can absolutely not equip the industrial park or even provide 10 per cent of the $5 million needed for this project.

The rationalization works necessary to implement the project have come to an end; we have furthermore received a recommendation from the Quebec Planning and Development Bureau that would like to finance it through the special areas programs.

Mr. Speaker, there are also enormous touristic possibilities in the region that numerous studies made in recent years have always properly stressed. We have there unlimited riches if we know how to exploit them rationally. The intentions of the government, through the Department of Industry, Trade and Commerce, to stimulate this industry in Canada give new hopes to our region.

The situation which I just described raises, on the social point of view, a number of real difficulties which soon will have to be considered.

The white paper published by the Quebec Planning and Development Bureau stated that 20 to 25 per cent of the Eastern Townships population are now living in poverty. In other words, 50,000 people in this region are living below what is considered to be the subsistence level.

As I said earlier, the current unemployment rate has reached alarming proportions since it amounts to 11.6 or 11.8 per cent of labour, and over 40 per cent of the jobless are under 25.

From the annual report just published by the Department of Regional Economic Expansion, it is obvious that great progress has been achieved through the programs implemented by this department in the 23 "special areas" throughout the country.

In the recently published annual report of the Department of Regional Economic Expansion, one can read:

> There are important signs that progress has been made in the effort to strengthen the economies of the slow-growth regions of Canada. A number of key indicators in these regions have begun to move in an encouraging direction,

And further on, the report reads:

> The experience of the past three years has made it clear that any effective regional development policy must contain certain key elements. It is clear, for example, that regional development policies and programs require close and continuing intergovernmental co-operation. Such co-operation is essential if confusion and conflict are to be avoided.

And the conclusion is as follows:

> One other important fact is clear. Regional development cannot be simply an effort to make all regions similar in their growth. There are important differences in the aspirations of people who live in various regions of Canada. Any effective regional development policy must not only take these into consideration, but also recognize that the quality of life desired by the people of the region can be——different.

> The development approach taken in each region must recognize this key fact and build upon it.

These, I submit, are clear and specific examples of the type of intervention to which the federal government has resorted for the past few years and which have been successful. We have enthusiastically welcomed in the Speech from the Throne those proposals which are intended to reduce unemployment, check inflation and strengthen the economy.

Through our adoption of the present budget, we shall be able to carry out in many parts of the country projects on which the people have been consulted but which must also, from an economic point of view, be undertaken in the nearest future. This, I suggest, is the economic situation in the constituency which I have the honour to represent.

A joint intervention by the government of the province of Quebec and the federal government has become urgent. Whatever the government mechanisms used to correct the economy of this area, it is imperative that this be done as soon as possible.

[English]

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. I regret to interrupt the hon. member but the time allotted to him by the House order passed earlier today has expired.

[Translation]

Mr. Heward Grafftey (Brome-Missisquoi): Mr. Speaker, at the outset of my remarks, I would like to congratulate my neighbour from Sherbrooke. I think his maiden speech in the House was in French and I would like to take this opportunity to offer my sincere congratulations to him. Even though his opponent during the last elections was a great friend of mine, I take this opportunity to wish him the best of success in his political career.

Mr. Speaker, at the present time, as well as during the last election, the most important problems for all Canadians are unemployment, inflation and regional expansion.

Our problems remain the same as they were at the time of the last election and they are the result of bad administration of the Canadian economy, whereas adequate policies which were proposed to everybody by our leader and our party should solve those problems.

• (1650)

[English]

I can only repeat most emphatically what has already been said. In my view the present debate is an important one because the questions that were important at the time of the election, notably those of unemployment, inflation and regional disparity, are the very questions of concern to the Canadian people at the present time. The same question that was concerning the Canadian people at the time of the election more than anything else, namely the maladministration of the Canadian economy by the present government, is of equal concern today. That is why the budget debate is of such importance not only to the members of this House but to all Canadians.

I would be the first to admit, along with many of my colleagues on this side of the House, that in the short term there are obviously many attractive items in this budget. They are attractive and desirable politically, economically and otherwise—

An hon. Member: Wait for the "but".

Mr. Grafftey: Yes, there will be plenty of "buts". Members on this side of the House who have preceded me noted time and time again that there is nothing in this budget to alleviate, in the long run, basic problems of unemployment, the cost of living and regional disparity.

As I listened to the minister responsible for DREE a few minutes ago I could not help but feel his whole speech was nothing more nor less than an indication of why DREE has not worked. I repeat, as most members on this side of the House said before me, there is nothing in this budget in the long term that will alleviate unemployment, the cost of living and regional disparity. One might ask why. It is because the budget, in itself, is not expansionary enough to begin to correct any of these conditions.

There are other questions I should like to ask, Mr. Speaker. Where in this budget are the incentives to Canadians to invest in the Canadian economy? If we are really interested in creating a viable economy in this country, which in turn will create more good jobs and I mean good jobs for Canadians, we must do something about developing secondary industry. Surely, one of the first and basic things we do through a budget is to create an atmosphere which will encourage Canadians to invest in Canadian industry and in the Canadian economy. I ask the minister, as people will ask from coast to coast, not just those in this House, where are these tax incentives? This question will be repeated time and time again because there are no long-term solutions in this budget to the basic, economic questions facing the Canadian people.

An hon. Member: It is a cosmetic job.

Mr. Grafftey: If there are no long-term solutions in the budget it is because, as was said by the speaker who preceded me, there are no long-term forecasting procedures in the Department of Finance. We have seen time and time again over the last few years that the United States has outperformed us in areas of regional disparity, inflation and unemployment. I suggest it is because the United States has exercised, not necessarily with bureaucratic control but with leadership, certain percentage guidelines in these areas of inflation and unemployment. Where is the leadership in respect of guidelines shown by this Minister of Finance and this government? I suggest they do not have any and that we will drift along in the same old unimaginative way. There are no long-term forecasts and no guidelines, and we compare very badly with what we see going on in the United States.

Let me remind this House of one of the things that struck me most forcibly, and this is an important consideration. While I have noted, as have other hon. members, that certain transfers are to be made to the provinces, basically speaking this budget does not realize that very often the action is at the provincial and municipal levels. This budget does not recognize the responsibility of the provinces. It is my contention that because of the lack of realization of provincial responsibility we are really not going to achieve any tax cut, because provinces will be forced, much sooner than later, to up provincial taxes. This government does not recognize the duty and responsibility of our colleagues and confreres at the provincial level. I want to stress the importance to hon. members of the House and the Canadian people of watching how this budget, directly or indirectly, will force provincial Prime Ministers and Premiers to increase taxes. This will result in virtually no tax cut for the Canadian people at the end of the year.

Without getting too specific in this budget debate, although sometimes we can argue from a specific to the general by taking examples, I should like to touch upon three problems in my area which are national problems that faced this country during the last election. Very often politicians at the local or constituency level are accused of being narrow or parochial when they discuss what they think are problems of their constituency, but soon find out after coming to Ottawa that they are problems facing and harassing the constituencies of Members of Parliament from coast to coast.

I want to refer to designated areas, health care services and unemployment insurance. It was some time ago that Mr. C. D. Howe said "what's a million", and during the intervening time the government has wasted millions in faulty handling of an aircraft carrier and other things. I am talking about something much worse than that. In a short 15-minute budget speech I do not have the time or the right to document this waste with the Clerk of the House, but I categorically claim that in these three areas which affect not only my constituency but the whole nation, that is designated areas, health care services and unemployment insurance, because of the gross mismanagement of this incompetent and tired administration we are wasting annually over $4 billion in tax money.

Let me first of all refer to the unemployment insurance issue.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Grafftey: You can sit over there and make fun of these things, but I am talking about some pretty serious matters.

An hon. Member: Mal de tête.

Mr. Grafftey: I do not think I need comment on that sort of remark in this House, Mr. Speaker.

While we can talk about the run on the unemployment insurance fund and the maladministration of this fund, I simply talk about the main issue, as did the Minister of Labour (Mr. Munro), unemployment. However, there are some other things which must be brought to the attention of this House. There was a day about ten years ago when there were unemployment insurance commission offices well placed throughout this country. But to satisfy the bureaucrats much more than to satisfy the will of the people, many of these offices were shut down in the name of efficiency, decentralization or centralization if you like. The fact is that in many constituencies across Canada such as mine—constituencies containing towns with a population of 15,000 people—there is not one UIC office. However, in the present, as in the past, if one in order to qualify for unemployment insurance must be available for work how in the world, if there are manpower offices in the rural areas and UIC offices only in the large cities, can the fund be policed.

In the province of Quebec and in many provinces of Canada, one has a long and painful wait in respect of unemployment insurance benefits because of the terrible administration by this government and by its inhuman administration. An hon. member laughs, but I suggest to him that the same situation exists in his area. People must wait for weeks and weeks to receive their cheques. Some of them have to go on welfare just because this government cannot administer the fund properly. I am concerned about the day-to-day administration of government services. People in my riding ask, if a government cannot get cheques to people who are out of work through no fault of their own, can it administer and govern in respect of other things in Canada. We might say the same thing about the mail services. It is my view that a $1 billion overrun in the UIC fund is an example of poor administration especially when it involves the shutting down of UIC offices.

It might be more difficult to expose les grandes lignes de ma pensée in a short 15-minute speech before this House this afternoon, let alone the next two items in respect of the $3 billion annual waste in the health and medicare field and in the field of designated areas. What is the background to this sort of thing? We were told in the Mackenzie King era that the members of the NDP were nothing more than Liberals in a hurry.

An hon. Member: What era was that?

Mr. Grafftey: It could have been in the St. Laurent era or in both eras. We were told in the 1930's in respect of the new deal, and later in respect of the fair deal, that the best way to solve social and economic problems was to have a massive infusion of funds and that things would more or less look after themselves. But that approach does not go far enough. Very often it results in wastage. When you have waste in one program, often needed funds for other programs are denied. Now, what do we have? We have an alliance—I do not care what anybody calls it, whether a coalition or an arrangement, I call it an alliance—between the NDP and the Liberals with an obvious result. What will the result be? In the area of health care services and in the field of designated areas—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. I regret very much to interrupt the hon. member but the time allotted to him by the House order passed earlier today has expired.

Mr. Paddy Neale (Vancouver East): Mr. Speaker, in view of the fact that I have been limited to 15 minutes, it is not my intention to take the time of this House with pious platitudes about this budget. Suffice to say that it is with considerable reluctance that I offer my support to it. My reluctance stems from the fact that while there is something in it for everyone, there is simply not enough of anything. In my opinion the minister, by his own admission in his budget speech, could have doubled most of the goodies without running short of funds.

The minister has said a number of times that his budget is aimed at creating jobs in Canada and he is talking about 300,000 new workers in the next year. As I understand it, there are some 260,000 jobs created per year in Canada by the natural demand of the market place, so really what he is talking about is some 40,000 additional jobs being created in the next year over and above the normal level. This is simply not good enough, and if this government is truly interested in knocking unemployment below 5 per cent or 5½ per cent in the near future, it must look at some other avenues.

Mr. Speaker, I would like to spend the rest of my time introducing a few suggestions which, in my opinion, would go a long way towards creating employment in this country. First, I would like to suggest that the government take a serious look at recreating a Canadian merchant navy. The ocean-going dry cargo merchant fleet has now been reduced to the lowest possible point barring complete extinction—one solitary ship, if we still have that ship. This does not include the shipping on the Great Lakes. In the past a Canadian merchant marine handled significant portions of our overseas trade. A report of the Canadian Maritime Commission shows that in 1947, 20.2 per cent of the total dry cargo Canadian trade—excluding trade of the United States—was carried in ships of Canadian registry. By 1953, this percentage had dropped to 4.3 per cent. The latest figures that I have seen show the absolutely ridiculous figure of .2 per cent. Meanwhile, ships of foreign registry have captured significant portions of our trade, including ships of German, Greek and Norwegian registry plus the fantastic number of runaway flag ships.

It is incongruous that the Liberal Minister of Veterans Affairs, the Hon. Ian MacKenzie said at the end of the World War II:

> We are not going to repeat past mistakes. It is the determined policy of the present government that Canada is in the shipbuilding business for good. The navy and merchant marine that you made are going to be maintained and expanded. The ships you built will carry Canada's trade to the ends of the world, creating employment and opportunity for Canadian workers.

Here is a statement by a responsible government official that failure to build a merchant marine in the past was a mistake. It is also stated that we are to be in the shipbuilding business for good, and that the merchant marine is to be maintained and expanded. Employment and opportunity for Canadian workers are pledged by the solemn word of one of the highest government officials. What was said 24 years ago is still very true, even more so. The discrepancy between promise and actuality can not longer be tolerated. What is the state of affairs with regard to other shipping using Canadian ports to move Canadian goods? Here, Mr. Speaker, are a few glaring examples.

No one example better illustrates the situation than the case of the Canadian Pacific Railway. Having grown enormously rich over the years at the expense of our natural resources, this international company is now busily engaged in swelling its corporate treasury to the detriment of the vast majority of the Canadian people. How does this work in the case of ships? In the late 1960's, the CPR set up a dummy tax haven, a 100 per cent controlled subsidiary, called CPR Bermuda Limited. Why did the CPR go to this trouble? The answer is simple. There was a lot of dough in it for them, since in Bermuda the maximum annual corporation tax is a paltry $560. In order to take the maximum advantage of this fact and to demonstrate their dollar patriotism, CPR Bermuda Limited constructed in the past five years a merchant fleet of 871,000 dead weight tonnage and has on order an additional 360,000 dead weight tonnage.

Here are the details of this "CPR Bermuda Merchant Marine": Lord Mt. Stephen, a 71,000 dead weight tonnage tanker, on charter to Shell Oil and British Petroleum; Lord Strathcona, a 71,000 dead weight tonnage tanker, on charter to Shell Oil and British Petroleum; R.B. Angus, a 13,122 dead weight tonnage bulk carrier, to take lead concentrates and lumber to Japan; Pacific Logger, a 16,000 dead weight tonnage log and lumber carrier, on long term contract for service between the Pacific coast and Japan; T. Akasaka, a 58,000 dead weight tonnage bulk carrier, to carry ores and particularly coal from Australia to Japan; W.C. Van Horne, a 58,000 dead weight tonnage bulk carrier, to carry coal to Japan; Port Hawkesbury, a 250,000 dead weight tonnage supertanker, on long term charter to Gulf Oil Limited; and T.G. Shaughnessy, a 250,000 dead weight tonnage supertanker. None of these ships were built in Canada. Not one flies the Canadian flag. None employs Canadian sailors. Most carry Canadian raw materials for the benefit of foreign manufacturing industries, and the profits from all this activity are tax free in Canada.

The largest forest products complex in the world, namely MacMillan, Bloedel and Powell River, has followed a similar practice in a smaller way in the province of British Columbia. This company has had three large ships built in Japan using subsidies and write-offs, so that the cost to the company is minimal. The ships have been named after the chief executives of the company, for example, the H.R. MacMillan, named after the past president, the J.V. Clyne, also named after a past president, and the N.R. Crump. I hope I do not have to explain who he is. These ships are all registered in Bermuda and the company pays minimal taxes to that country, some $560 per year according to my information. I am also reliably informed that there are no Canadians hired on any of these ships and that, in fact, all the crews are of foreign extraction, paying their taxes to a foreign country and spending their wages outside of Canada. This, to my mind, is despicable and a disgrace and these companies have the gall to fly Canadian flags from the poles on top of their office buildings.

It seems to me that I recall statements made by the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) in the last election to the effect that he would seriously consider a Canadian merchant marine if there was no need to subsidize it. You know, Mr. Speaker, some people in this country have a funny idea of priorities. It is proper to subsidize, through the DREE program, large multinational companies which do not need the subsidies, but it is not proper for the Canadian government to build a merchant navy owned by the Canadian people if subsidies are necessary. I should like to point out that to my knowledge every country in the world which has a merchant navy subsidizes it, including even landlocked countries such as little Switzerland.

I propose to this government that it build a federal government sponsored and financed Canadian merchant marine, built in new, technologically advanced shipbuilding complexes on both coasts. Such a national investment would mean thousands of jobs for our skilled shipyard workers and thousands more in other industries; the development of modern technology in heavy industry such as steel, the electrical industry, machinery, and the industrial use of computers; control of the disposition of our foreign trade, which is 25 per cent of our gross national product. Canada would then be in a position to become the vital link in an Asian-European land bridge. It would also mean the development of Canadian raw materials, such as coal, iron ore and copper in Canada, and the extension of secondary industry. It would mean the end of the huge drain in our international balance of payments, which totals $313 million in the 1965-67 period, because of our deficit in the ocean shipping account. It would mean permanent tax revenues, business for ship suppliers and merchants, and much less unemployment insurance expense. It would also mean increased personal income and corporation taxes in Canada. Truly, we cannot afford not to have our own merchant marine.

Now, I would like to raise the problems created by the lifting of the ceiling on interest rates in this country and the fantastic interest rates that finance companies are allowed to charge, a rate of 2 per cent per month on the unpaid balance. In round figures, the Canadian people owe $15 billion in consumer debt—this does not include mortgages on houses—upon which they are paying an average rate of 16 per cent, mostly to foreign owned finance companies which pay very low income taxes to the federal coffers. This means that the working people and the poor are losing $1 billion per year from their purchasing power, most of which is leaving this country in profits and dividends.

I specifically mention the working people and the poor because, in the main, they are the ones who have to buy on credit. The businessman, most of the time, has the cash to purchase consumer goods. He also has a wholesale card in his pocket and saves from 30 per cent to 50 per cent when buying from the wholesaler, and usually saves the sales tax. So once again, the workers and the poor are being ripped-off with the tacit acquiescence of this government. I would strongly urge that the government seriously consider rolling back interest rates to those charged by credit unions in this country.

There is another way that employment can be created and pollution controlled at the same time. I would like to give one small example. Those hon. members from the west coast know that there is a great fear that the Fraser River is on the way to total pollution, created, in the main, from the dumping of raw or primary treated sewage by the many cities and communities lining its banks. Some eight or nine years ago I wrote to the department of the interior of the United States for a report on the pollution and clean-up of the Willamette River in the state of Oregon. I learned that the river is less than one quarter the size of the Fraser and it cost some $400 million to reclaim it. You can imagine how much it will cost the taxpayers if we are stupid enough to allow it and the Strait of Georgia to become polluted. The cost will run to billions of dollars.

The latest figures I have seen on the cost of building secondary treatment plants on the Fraser River is $88 million, and sadly everyone says that that money cannot be raised. I suggest to the government that some of the corporate rip-off funds be given to the municipalities as grants to assist them in saving that river and its valuable salmon runs, instead of waiting until it is polluted and then having to spend billions to reclaim it. This situation is probably true in other areas of this country.

I would like now to talk briefly about pension plans and how they could be used to create employment. There are, I understand, some $11 billion in funded pension plans in Canada and some $4 billion in non-funded plans. Most of these plans are beyond the control of the workers who are putting their money into them. These plans are either controlled by insurance companies or by the employers who arbitrarily set them up. I know that lately some unions have been able to negotiate trustee set-ups to administer their pension plans, but these plans only cover a small percentage of unionized workers. We all know that only one third of the Canadian work force belongs to unions in this country, so very few of them have this kind of protection.

The worst offenders in this respect are the CPR and the CNR. These two companies have absolute control of their employees' pension plans and callously and intentionally invest the moneys in low return areas. My understanding is that the return on investment for both these plans runs from 2½ per cent to 3½ per cent a year. The companies are very happy with this set up because they do not put up their share of an employee's contribution until he reaches retirement age. They have been able to use this money for their own interests during all the employees working years and only have to pay retroactively an amount equal to their share, plus what that amount would have earned during the work life of the employee. You can readily see that it is to the advantage of these two companies to keep the return on investment as low as they possibly can.

The CNR is a publicly owned corporation, and it is a shame on succeeding governments of this country that this situation is allowed to persist. This government can set an example by ordering the CNR to allow the employees, through a trustee set-up, to have some say in the investment policy to be followed in respect of their money. Just think of the result, Mr. Speaker, if these pension funds were made available at only 6 per cent so that workers could borrow the money to purchase or build houses. Think of what this could accomplish. First, there would be an upsurge in housing construction in Canada, creating thousands upon thousands of jobs, not just in the construction of these houses but in the manufacture of all the component parts of the house. Second, it would double the return to the pension fund, thereby making it possible to pay higher pensions, which, in itself, would increase the purchasing power of the retired workers and would also allow for a reduction in their retirement age covered by the plan. This in turn would create more vacancies which could be filled by the young people who are presently drifting around this country disillusioned and frustrated, trying to find work.

The same principle could and should be applied to all pension plans in the country so that the contributors to the plans could receive some of the benefits accruing from the investment of their moneys instead of the monster corporations and foreign-owned insurance companies reaping them all.

There are many other issues that I could raise, including improved facilities for bulk loading in the port of Vancouver to stop the drain of shipping and handling of goods now flowing to the ports of Seattle and Portland. But, Mr. Speaker, I have taken enough of the time of the House on this occasion. I just hope that the government will seriously consider some of the recommendations that I, and other members of the New Democratic Party, have made to bring unemployment down to an acceptable level. I want to assure the Minister of Finance that an acceptable level is not 5.5 per cent, not even 5.2 per cent, but a much lower figure than that.

Mr. S. Victor Railton (Welland): Mr. Speaker, this is my official maiden speech, although I did give a short opinion on the subject of capital punishment some weeks ago. I would still like to congratulate you and your colleagues on your impartiality, and on the distinction which you all bring to the sittings of this House.

Today, we heard the new member of the official opposition who represents Don Valley (Mr. Gillies). I notice that he did not express his opinions in this House until the budget speech had been read. I think hon. members should make a note of that. The leadoff speeches for the Progressive Conservatives, the NDP and the Socreds have also been given. Regarding the first, we heard only criticism, this in spite of the fact that they claimed that our Minister of Finance (Mr. Turner) had stolen their ideas. It is obvious that that is not the case. They did not come even half way to meet our proposition, and they had no real method proposed for working out their scheme.

The NDP leadoff speaker supported us very well, but of course he claimed that we had stolen many NDP ideas. This may be so, but that seems to be the function of a party that is doomed to remain in the minority and which admittedly has left wing ideas. So far as the Socreds were concerned, we were blasted all the way. Their main cry was for the introduction of their peculiar economic philosophy, which would require the printing of funny money to put it into practice. So, although we must always impute the highest of moral qualities to other parties, we can see that the attacks of the Official Opposition are simply an attempt to confuse the electorate, and hopefully to bring down the government, in this way getting their chance to force an election. This is very obvious. They seem so desperate that it is becoming crystal clear that their chance of forming a government is getting slimmer by the hour.

The members of the NDP must be given credit for idealism. They are, in addition, a well disciplined party with an eye to the future. They have temporarily submerged their socialistic anchor, but to be credible they have taken to the marriage bed with a gun, threatening that this may be their last try to make a marriage of convenience work.

To me, the budget is the best one produced by any government, whether majority or minority. The reduction of tax is really 12 per cent. It is definitely a poor man's budget. It is unprecedented in Canada's experience to give a $5,000 a year man a 47 per cent reduction in his income tax, and an $8,000 a year man a 15 per cent reduction in his tax. The sales tax is family oriented. The lightening of duties on fruits and vegetables is a big blow to high food prices. It is also, as the Minister of Finance stated, a friendly gesture toward our largest trading partner, and now it gives us some reserve for negotiations on all tariffs, and still will not hurt our producers.

My constituency of Welland is right near the Niagara frontier. It is agricultural in some portions, but very well industrialized also. It contains heavy and light industry, with large firms, Canadian owned, such as STELCO and Atlas, and also foreign owned firms such as INCO and Union Carbide.

We also have many medium and small industrial projects in the area. Recently I asked these firms about their reaction to Canada's tax program and to the government's budgetary direction. They have been unanimously in favour of our government's policy to date. They also show statistically that the tax reduction was one of the big factors in keeping unemployment in the area down to a 4 per cent or 5 per cent figure. We have American subsidiaries in our Welland-Niagara area. They employ a great many people. We should realize that we could easily lose all these plants if we use tax discrimination against them. Neither the Welland constituency as a whole not the labour unions in the area want any change in our tax policy. I spoke to several of the unions as recently as Monday last, and I say this House would do well to realize that organized labour in the Niagara peninsula is strong and has had excellent treatment. In addition, it is very co-operative with management and government.

I would like to make a plea for closer ties vis-à-vis Canada and the United States, if only on a friendly basis. In the Welland area many Americans own summer cottages. We have grown to like each other. Every slap in the face in our press hurts them. It must be evident to all hon. members that Americans came to our aid in two world wars. They have policed the world when it was in imminent danger of atomic warfare. Surely, any rebuke or rebuff from us, either verbally or financially, must be a very gentle one.

When speaking of our border with the United States along the Niagara River, I would like to emphasize that we have had in actual fact 100 years of peace. The war of 1812 and the Fenian raids are past. Incidentally, I would like to tell you, Mr. Speaker, that I still have my grandfather's homemade powder horn which he made before getting on the train to go down to fight the Fenians. He got there too late to fire a shot. Now, Mr. Speaker, Americans and Canadians pass each other in both directions over great international bridges at Queenston and Fort Erie. Visitors from the United States are happy to enjoy our beaches and northern lakes, while we press south to the great cities of New York, Cleveland, Detroit and Chicago, or head for the southern states and Mexico. What a wonderful continent we have, and what a marvellous heritage we have in Canada.

Just recently a dinner was held in this House supporting multiculturalism. I was unable to be present but I would like to draw the attention of hon. members to the terrific melting pot we have in the Welland riding. In the city of Welland we have 5,000 or more French Canadians. They take very prominent places in the life of the city and in our municipal councils. This is only one race. We have close to 10,000 other people of various origins, Italians, Hungarians, Poles, Latvians, Croats, Estonians, Ukrainians, and representatives of all other middle European countries. They have mixed well with the old German, Dutch and British stock. We have an extremely interesting panorama of languages and cultures. I think it would do any member of the House a great deal of good to visit this area and see how well the principles of bilingualism and multiculturalism work in my constituency.

The area is remarkably prosperous. We have an agricultural economy of no mean proportions, with mixed farming of all kinds. We also have a great deal of vegetable farming, and we have the tender fruit areas. We are trying to retain the grand old orchards and vineyards in the area between the escarpment and Lake Ontario, and the Tender Fruit Association, known to all hon. members, is doing its best to bring the plight of the fruit and vegetable farmer to the attention of the government. We have a wine industry which is second to none in Canada, and which is becoming recognized throughout the world.

Because of our proximity to Lake Erie, a great many people were very worried about the high lake levels and the lack of provision for either public works, subsidies, or insurance to protect against the recent storm catastrophe. However, I have been able to assure these people that we are trying to do something to solve these difficulties.

One of the great public works in my area is the Welland ship canal. This is the fourth one that has been built during the last 200 years. The most recent addition is the bypass which straightens the canal and takes it out of the city of Welland. It now runs straight from Port Colborne to Port Robinson and allows much faster shipping movement. Formerly there were many traffic delays. There were irate citizens in both Welland and Port Colborne waiting for bridges which, in previous years, had to be raised and lowered every few minutes in an attempt to let the ships pass through the canal.

The Welland Canal is part of the great international seaway that takes shipping right up to Thunder Bay and Chicago. It is one of our greatest routes for the shipment of our wheat and ores. It is a tremendous freighting facility not only for internal trade but also for ships coming from every corner of the world. This seaway runs 2,000 miles into the heart of North America.

Building the bypass to avoid the city of Welland has brought troubles in its wake. Though it has provided two tunnels, at great expense, for our automobiles and our rail traffic and supplied a very fine new dock, and though it is going to open on time—thanks to all our efforts—next April, it has left the old canal, which is now abandoned, right in the centre of the city of Welland. The old canal does not flow. It is going to be a static ditch because of the causeway which carries heavy freight lines across the old canal after emerging from the tunnel under the new bypass. This means there is a great likelihood that the old canal will become polluted and unsightly.

So it is the job now of myself and the council of the city of Welland to make sure that the government sees clearly the plight in which the new bypass has left us and the city of Port Colborne. For this reason I have been making representations to the government and the St. Lawrence Seaway Authority, along with delegations from the local municipalities and the region, to settle this matter. The fate of unused or abandoned canals in Canada has never been particularly pretty. One of the most recent problems in this regard involved the canal at Cornwall, which concerns Mr. Speaker. After ten years of hard work which involved His Honour, the citizens of the area and the government, a solution was found. I think a solution in our case will be more difficult to come by. I have talked about our local situation, Mr. Speaker. I think all of us should look beyond the localities we represent even though we may come from such lovely spots as Welland, in the Niagara peninsula, which is really a continuation of the golden horseshoe running along Lake Ontario from Oakville to Burlington.

When we look at the world situation, we know that we must trade with the U.S.A. Seventy per cent of our exports go there right now. About 12 per cent go to Europe. There is a smaller percentage going to Japan and the undeveloped nations of the world in Africa and Asia. There is so far very little trade going to China and Russia, but let us not forget that it was our own Liberal government and its leader which initiated the rapprochement between the west and these two great countries.

It will be very difficult for us to export manufactured goods to that remarkable economy of Japan. It will be almost as difficult to find suitable goods to export to the European community. However, the people in our area as well as those in the rest of Canada, hope that if we implement all the parts of this budget there will be a great opportunity for us to continue trade with the United States, Europe and Japan and to find new markets in emerging countries as well as in the two great nations which formerly hid behind the iron curtain.

As a new member, Mr. Speaker, I feel privileged to be taking part in this lively and historic parliament. Frequently the action gets a bit rough. However, what good is a man who will not fight for something? We seem to be successful in channelling this basic human instinct into making this minority government work. All members of this House are obviously good Canadians, so I am confident that our national future is in good hands.

Recently, an hon. member opposite drew a good analogy about the short span of human life on this planet. He said that a length of rope stretching from Lake Ontario to the Speaker's chair represented the total span of life on earth. He showed that the very short, final end of the rope was the length of man's time in the evolutionary scale. For a few minutes I was worried that his rope might have a noose on the end which he might tighten around the necks of the government supporters.

This picture can be transferred from the past to the future. At some time not too far into the future our knowledge of astronomy and space technology will pierce the secrets of space, time and even immortality. In my mind there is no place in Canadian society for resigned acceptance of eventual human decadence. So, Mr. Speaker, even the trivia of party politics and the present budget debate are small but necessary evolutionary steps in the upward progress of mankind.

The Budget—Mr. Blenkarn

Mr. Don Blenkarn (Peel South): Mr. Speaker, the budget speech we listened to the other night will do absolutely nothing to correct what I consider to be one of the most serious problems affecting young, newly married Canadians who want to raise a family. Hon. members on the other side suggest that the budget will deal with unemployment and inflation. They suggest that there are adequate proposals in the budget to handle those problems. For the few minutes allotted to me may I direct the attention of this House to the serious problem of housing, the cost of housing in our large urban centres, in particular in and around metropolitan Toronto.

When I raised this matter in the House the other day, the Minister of Finance (Mr. Turner) suggested that he had said nothing about housing in the budget and that Bills C-133 and C-135 would be helpful. Anyone who has read those bills will realize that they will do absolutely "zip" to solve the problem: they are just tinker bills. One bill creates an unworkable mortgage exchange, no doubt dreamed up by a foggy bureaucrat somewhere, and the other attempts, with a lot of financial salve, to do something about urban development; in other words, something about low-income housing. But it will not do anything that has not already been tried.

It became evident throughout the election campaign that municipal authorities, provincial authorities, people in apartments, people all over the country, including developers, had isolated the problem which has to do with lack of serviced land in and around the cities. The government has proposed nothing since the election, either in the budget or in any bills on the order paper, that will deal with this problem.

Municipalities encompassing growth areas, and the provinces, are clearly short of money. Because they are short of money they cannot build rinks, community centres, sidewalks, sewers, water mains, rapid transit and similar facilities; therefore, they are not able to approve plans of subdivisions presently filed, registered and ready to go. To be sure, under the Central Mortgage and Housing legislation provisions there is an arrangement whereby municipalities will be lent 75 per cent of the cost of constructing sewers. That provision is to help with the construction of sewer mains. But that kind of loan affects the debenture credit of a municipality; as a result, the provisions of the act in this respect are totally useless.

Developers such as the McLaughlin company, the Erin Mills company, the Markborough company and hundreds of others, have subdivision plans which are ready to be put into operation. They are ready to do something about this problem. And what has this government suggested as a solution? Land banking. We have all sorts of land banked around the metropolitan centres of this country, ready to go and ready to be developed—and this government has done nothing about it. It has done nothing about the $16,000 it costs for a half or semi-lot, or about the $18,000 or $20,000 it costs for a single-family house lot. Has this government done anything about the fact that, because we are only bringing onto the market less than one-third of all residential lots required, by next year the price of residential lots in Toronto will rise to about $24,000? No, Mr. Speaker, the government has not done a thing. It has no program. Right now in the metropolitan

Toronto area, unless you happen to be privileged or wealthy, with money in the bank, you cannot afford a new house. Only 4 per cent of the citizens of that area can afford to buy a new home.

Something must be done. The government has suggested that $100 million a year should be used for land banking. They should be making grants to municipalities. They should be turning over to municipalities some of the money they have for programs that will service land and get land on the market. When I asked the minister about this during today's question period, he had no answer. He said maybe we will have some land available soon.

Let us talk about his land banking scheme for a moment. The minister will have land available. He is going to build new cities. Maybe in two years he will acquire the land. Maybe after five, six or seven years, when he organizes things, he will service some of that land. I suggest it will be at least ten years, and perhaps longer than that. It may take the 20 years that Malvern took before any of this land in his famous land bank gets on the road so far as development is concerned. This is the record of the government in dealing with this problem.

The social damage caused by this government in its housing program is probably the greatest it has ever caused. During the election campaign, I went into apartment buildings. I want to speak about one of them. This apartment building had on it the sign of the present Minister of Manpower and Immigration (Mr. Andras). It contained 360 suites, fronted two four-lane highways, was faced with red brick, sterile, with a playground which was a fenced-off part of an asphalt parking lot. You would not even put animals in a zoo in those playground facilities. The kids have to ride their bikes in crowded apartment corridors. That is the policy of this government with regard to low-income housing. We have not heard a thing from this government about a backyard for kids to play in, a park or facilities that will make life better for those who are in the less fortunate category of society. We have not heard anything about bringing down the cost of housing.

We should now be talking about the economic cost of housing and not just the social cost. The social costs are serious enough, but we must also talk about the economic costs. The other day I spoke to a man who came into my office and said he needed some help. He could afford to pay a man $130 a week; however, he could not get the man he wanted because he wanted to live in a decent house and drive a decent car, and therefore could not start at that wage level. Even though he would eventually earn $250 a week or more, the man said he could not live in the community with that kind of wage. Here is a man trying to build a business, get ahead and get other people involved in work. The whole problem boils down to inflationary high rents and high mortgages in our metropolitan areas.

I want to say a few words about one of the geatest national disgraces this government continues to allow. I refer to the 11 per cent sales tax on building materials—11 per cent on every brick, every piece of plumbing pipe, every concrete block and every sheet of lathing. We do not now charge tax on food, and apparently this government says we do not even have to pay sales tax on the mix for a cocktail party; but we charge tax on building materials.

The party to my left is going to support a government that believes shelter costs should be taxed. Can they think of anything worse than that? This is a tax on growth areas. It is a regressive tax. It is principally collected from areas of Canada where growth rate and housing problems are most severe. This tax is maximized in areas where costs are already overbearing the price of a house. We need aggressive changes and suggestions. If we are going to tax buidling materials, some of the tax should be rebated to the municipalities or the purchasers of houses so they will at least have a little bit of equity. We did not receive such a proposal, or anything like it, from this government.

The area I come from is sometimes called the golden horseshoe. I suggest to the House that the government has used this area as its golden goose. This area is a source of tremendous tax revenues for this government. Any farmer knows that if you want to get eggs from a goose, you have to feed it. The government's attitude to this growth area, with its tax on building materials, is to take, take, take. It is about time that somewhere along the line the Minister of Finance did a little giving.

The minister must realize that if we are going to attack unemployment, the construction industry can supply more employment than perhaps any other industry. This government's program on employment has been unemployment insurance, LIP, Opportunities for Youth, and so on. However, none of the programs presented by this government have been to build anything that is useful and will get people organized, such as community centres. The other day I received a call from a lady in Malton. She asked if she could get a grant to organize a community centre. I told her that the federal government had pumped $40,000 into her community in the last year, but not a dime for building a facility that would have any permanent value. The programs this government produces do not have any permanent value.

If we are going to build Canada, it is time we looked ahead, took the kind of aggressive action suggested by the hon. member for Don Valley (Mr. Gillies) and attacked the social problems of the city, the problems of housing and the cost of housing. I speak on this matter with feeling. I speak on it because I have an element of self-interest in it. As the cost of residential houses keeps rising, and the only alternative of this government seems to be bigger and bigger high rise apartments with more subsidies, I can see the environment in which my own children will grow up. I had a back yard. I had a place to grow, a place to be. Through not having a concrete housing policy and not attacking the problem of making land available, my children will not be able to have a home. That, Mr. Speaker is my concern. That gives me a personal interest. Perhaps I should not be bringing personality into a debate such as this, but I am sure that is the personal interest of every member of this House.

We must get with it. We must demand from this government a concrete proposal for making available land for housing. The problem has been identified. It is time this government took aggressive action instead of just relying on old programs that have not worked.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. C. A. Gauthier (Roberval): Mr. Speaker, I should like to start by explaining certain points, among them the reasons behind the sub-amendment moved by my colleague, the hon. member for Champlain (Mr. Matte), who blamed the government for failing to take the steps needed to reduce the national debt and to set up a policy for financing provincial governments that does not lead Canadians at all levels of society and in all regions into constant and progressive debt.

The Minister of Finance (Mr. Turner) stated openly in his budget speech on Monday evening that the financial deficit in 1973-74 will be around $975 million, while the non-budgetary needs will amount to $1.25 billion. The overall requirements are estimated at about $2 billion, which is roughly equivalent to those of the current financial year.

At page 18 of the booklet "How your tax dollar is spent 1973-74", there is a table of past, present and future expenditures in connection with the national debt, i.e. what it costs the Canadian taxpayers every year to pay the interest on the national debt.

Here are the figures given in the booklet to which I have referred:

It is alleged that the national debt is not a bad thing that it is current practice in all countries of the world to get indebted and pay interest to government bond holders because this, they say, keeps the money flowing and above all, these bonds are in the hands of Canadian citizens who profit by them.

Mr. Speaker, until recently the Creditistes were practically the only ones to criticize such a way of thinking and to refuse to consider as normal the indebtedness of the federal government, provinces and municipalities.

In the Labour Gazette of December, 1972, published by the Department of Labour, there is an article written by Mr. Richard Deaton and entitled "Crisis in Taxes".

Incidentally, Mr. Deaton is the director of the Canadian Union of Public Employees and holds a diploma in economics and industrial relations from Wisconsin University. On page 653 of the Labour Gazette, he describes in revealing terms that, from 1950 to 1970, provincial and municipal expenses have been higher than their revenues, whereas the federal government revenues have been higher than its expenses.

In fact, from 1950 to 1970, these revenues totalled about $155 billion against outlays of approximately $125 billion. Provincial coffers took in about $65 billion, but expenditures soared to approximately $80 billion, which represents a total deficit of $15 billion. As for municipalities, their revenues amounted to almost $45 billion, while expenditures were about $65 billion, or a deficit of some $20 billion since 1950.

This is how Mr. Deaton explains the problem and here are the conclusions he draws from the article:

> This table shows that at both municipal and provincial levels, total expenditures incurred between 1950 and 1970 exceed total revenues. Only at the federal level is the situation the reverse. Succeeding deficits only increase the debt of administrations and finally result in tax increases. If the "crisis" thus defined only affects municipalities and provinces, it is supported mainly by the federal government which, in part, stands surety for municipal and provincial administrations by consolidating debts and making transfer payments.
> The Department of Urban Affairs formally stated: Municipalities have more and more trouble to finance their ever increasing budget. The expenditures of most urban areas exceed their revenue. They borrow or make drastic cuts in public services.
> They find themselves in a vicious circle. Each time the property tax goes up, businessmen and "middle class" landlords move to the suburbs, and in order to keep on providing municipal services despite this shift in the tax basis, cities increase even more their taxes . . .

May I call it six o'clock, Mr. Speaker?

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Boulanger): It being six o'clock, I do now leave the Chair until eight o'clock.

At 6 o'clock the House took recess.

AFTER RECESS

The House resumed at 8 p.m.

Mr. Gauthier: Mr. Speaker, when the House adjourned, I was reading an excerpt from the publication which deals with deficit spending at various levels of government. The quotation goes on:

> Provincial and municipal administrations mainly have blanced their accounts through deficits and by creating debt servicing. From 1950 to 1970, this has only caused the situation to worsen. Thus, the surpluses accumulated during this period, at the three levels of government reached $3.5 billion, while the deficit reached $6.6 billion.
> Now with this deficit policy, governments borrow and the debt is growing. From 1950 to 1968, the indirect and direct debt of the federal government went up by 36 per cent; the debt of provincial governments, by 505 per cent, and the debt of municipalities, by 511 per cent. The economists . . . keep saying: "The national debt? We owe it only to ourselves". They are missing the point: in fact, the interest on the debt uses up income we badly need for other things.
> At present, the cost of servicing the debt alone is the third largest item in public expenditure; —and when the article was published, we were in second place, but we are now lucky enough to be in third. I continue to quote:

> —this money goes mainly to the banks, which are the large buyers of bonds issued by the State in order to cover its deficits.

[Mr. Gauthier (Roberval).]

In this connection, Mr. Speaker, I should like to stress the truth of Mr. Eaton's statements to the effect that the interest that we pay on the public debt goes mainly to the banks, which are the largest buyers of government bonds.

In the budget papers for 1971, table 14, page 56, shows an interesting situation about the distribution of this debt. The table indicates that in 1960, the banks were holding $1,381 million in Treasury bills and that this amount increased to $3,366 million in 1970, namely a $1,985 million increase in favour of the banks.

On the other hand, in 1960, $549 million in Treasury bills were in the hands of the general public, while this amount was down to $218 million in 1970, namely a $331 million drop in Treasury bills held by all Canadians. If you consider the bond market, you find the same tendency.

In 1960, the banks held only $4,421 million in bonds. This amount increased by $3,146 billion in 1970 and reached $7,769 million. On the other hand, in 1970, the general public was holding only $6,484 million in savings bonds, namely a $753 million slump in ten years. It is true that the public which held $3 billion in savings bonds is now holding $7 billion. However, the banks which were holding only $5,802 million of the public debt, are now holding $10,935 million, namely a $5,133 million increase. This means that in ten years, the banks have doubled their assets in savings bonds and are now holding over 40 per cent of the debt. Thus, of the $2 billion in interest that the Canadian taxpayers will pay this year, the banks will cash in over $800 million, which represents about $2,500,000 in daily profits made out of nothing by the Canadian bankers.

The minister himself admits it on page 56 of the budget papers. During the last decade, of the $7,900 billion collected through the issuing of government bonds, the banking system, namely the Bank of Canada and the chartered banks, absorbed all Canada bonds issued as well as a reduction of more than $1 billion of the securities held by other investors.

That is what the minister said. This means that the banking system benefits from the billions paid each year by Canadian taxpayers for the payment of the debt.

Now, Mr. Speaker, how would a Social Credit government finance this public debt? Here is a means available to the government to increase the standard of living of all Canadians without taking anything from anybody, without bringing the economy to a standstill, without bringing about inflation or deflation: it would be to finance public capital by credit advances without interest issued by the Bank of Canada.

One can see immediately that this kind of measure would result in reducing the taxes that the government levies in order to pay the interests on the public debt or its borrowings, and would increase the amounts available to consumers to obtain the goods which would meet their needs.

At this point in the discussion, Mr. Speaker, I would say that although the Creditistes do not get much support for their ideas on the introduction of a national dividend, for instance, they do get some in favour of creating new interest-free credits for financing public capital.

In his book entitled Demain c'est l'an 2000 (The Year 2000—Tomorrow), Mr. Gaston Bardet, a professor of applied economics at the University of Brussels, after having studied in depth the banking system, and in the light of the studies conducted in Great Britain by the MacMillan commission and those carried out in Canada in 1939 by the Committee on Banking and Commerce of the House of Commons, came to the following conclusions:

> There are therefore two possible methods of financing which are diametrically opposed: one is based on savings, on excess money, the other on anticipating. In the first instance, with regard to private production, control is automatic and depends on the offer of existing capital. In the second instance, it depends on the demand for the most assured primary needs. Thus bank financing is really indicated for the construction of property equipment for the benefit of the entire country. When there is no danger of overproduction, demand really determines the supply. Such are the requirements for housing, roads, bridges, hospitals, schools, forestry, which this time become the regulators of anticipated script money.
> It is a matter of consumer loans and no longer one of production. Interest is no longer involved. The country and the community cannot be usurers.

Another economist has considered the problem of government financing and has drawn the conclusions discovered by the Créditistes a long time ago, namely the financing of public capital through new interest free credit.

This principle is stated in The Challenge of Abundance by Mr. Robert Theobald, a book which can be found in the Parliament Library. Mr. Theobald writes as follows:

> A government can use three different methods to obtain the funds it requires to meet its obligations. First, it can tax its citizens and institutions, thus gaining possession of their money. Second, it can borrow money from people and institutions and pay interest on the amount it borrows. Third, it can simply create money and use resulting funds to make its purchases . . .
> The one point on which everybody agreed before 1936 was that the government should never simply create funds. The prohibition against creating funds was based on the assumption that the demand for goods would always be equal to supply as long as government did not interfere with the economy. Keynes destroyed the validity of this assumption when he showed that there was no certainty that the demand for goods would always be equal to the available supply in the rich countries . . .
> There are other methods that could be used to close any gap between supply and demand. It would be possible to decrease the level of supply without greatly affecting demand by cutting hours of work and leaving wages unchanged. It would be possible to raise the desire for goods by making people feel that more products were necessary for the good life and a decent standard of living. The government could simply take up the slack between actual and potential production by building new schools, by demolishing slum housing and building new accommodation, and by controlling pollution. Because there would be unused resources in the economy, the government would not need to raise this money by taxation or by borrowing, the money could simply be created. The additional funds would not cause inflation, for there is—by definition—no shortage of goods.

This, Mr. Speaker, is the testimony of an American economist, Mr. Robert Theobald, who thinks that it is possible to make money more democratic and to use new interest-free funds for the development and social equipment of the country. If this not the right time to do what Mr. Keynes urged so strongly, namely, to "make financially possible what is physically feasible", and I quote:

> As a first step, a national financing corporation should be set up in order to provide the funds necessary for the creation of assets for the benefit of society. Thus, jobs would be provided as long resources would last. In a free society, in peacetime, an excess labour force cannot be directed to different occupations, but with education, rehabilitation, a good salary, proper housing, it can certainly be attracted to other occupations, keeping in mind that the GNP can be increased annually.
> Never before has our ability to produce, transport, communicate been so great, however, the government's admonitions to tighten our belts inevitably result in restrictions imposed upon producers in various ways. History will show if taxation was too heavy or too complicated. This is why we suggest that for what is called non-profitable capital goods, a national financing corporation must be set up to meet those needs. This would require very specific terms of reference in order to avoid any conflict with the various financial organizations serving the private sector of the economy which is profit-making—The national financing corporation which would be one of the most important factors in government policies would provide a large part of the money or credits now collected through taxation. Even at the high rates we have at present, taxation is unable to use inactive resources to build a sophisticated road system for example. Moreover it adds an enormous burden to the cost society must pay in interests.

Mr. Speaker, last Friday the hon. Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development (Mr. Chrétien) said to the House that he would like to be able to finance the building of a Canadian pipeline in the Mackenzie valley but that "he was not a Creditiste and he did not know how to print money".

If the minister does not know how money and credit originate, let him consult his banker who, if he is at all clever and honest, will tell him how the banking system creates credit out of nothing. And if his banker does not know, I will send him a copy of the explanatory brochure published by the Royal Bank of Canada so that he will learn that all that is physically desirable must be made financially possible, and that with a financial system that is true to facts, economic problems would not exist when there is no problem of production.

As the marquis de Serra has written in "Economic chaos and the coming revolution"—

An hon. Member: He is a bastard!

Mr. Gauthier (Roberval): Yes, but he did write some pretty good sentences. Sometimes, bastards do write something good. It is the dawn of art to express in terms of units called dollars the development of materials, natural resources and technological methods, and it is again the dawn of art to create purely monetary means, among which credit, to facilitate the exchange of various services which will carry out the plans.

Mr. Speaker, if I still have a few minutes, I would like to deal with another very interesting subject. I would have liked to have more time to deal with it thoroughly, but I only wish to touch on it lightly because we read in the budget headlines that its major objective is to reduce unemployment.

In brief, the Minister of Finance is at war with unemployment. He stated that his prime objective was to fight unemployment. But what are his tangible proposals? Nothing very serious, Mr. Speaker, because certainly the crumbs he gave in his budget will not go very far in solving the problem.

What I think was needed was a reform which would have produced massive shifts toward a more realistic guaranteed income such as, for example, pensions at 60. This would have had a direct effect on unemployment, allowing more than 400,000 unemployed to receive a family salary while at the same time effecting savings for the Treasury. Indeed, if you consider that sometimes it costs both levels of government up to $400 or $500 a month to keep a family going on social welfare—drugs, shelter, clothing and food—when it would cost only a maximum of $325 to pay a pension to a married couple of 60; by thus replacing pensioners between the ages of 60 and 65 by unemployed the government would save while at the same time perhaps reducing the number of unemployed which stands at more than 400,000.

Mr. Isabelle: The provinces are against that.

Mr. Gauthier (Roberval): Secondly, if the government had granted, for example, with the provinces' assent, since the member for Hull shouts at me: the provinces, the provinces—

Mr. Isabelle: The provinces are unwilling.

Mr. Gauthier (Roberval): The provinces are unwilling and I think that the government is rather embarrassed because it follows a particular direction. But I admit that the provinces are not open to this problem. However, it can be suggested to them and this will form a new subject for study. In a second move, the government should have granted, for example, a salary to the mother who wants to stay at home but must work to tie both ends of the family budget. As a matter of fact, I have noted, following a personal inquiry, that 50 per cent of married women who work would be very happy to stay home again if they would be ensured of a family salary. If we could bring back in their homes the women who wish to do so, we would allow 200,000 unemployed to have profitable jobs, reducing accordingly the number of unemployed, and if one begins by eliminating 600,000 unemployed, the national economy would thus be relieved.

Thirdly, the implementation of the Opportunities for Youth Program should be done in a more responsible way, in order, for instance, to guarantee an income to students who at the present time rely on scholarships only and are often disappointed because these scholarships go most of the time to those who do not need them, but have wonderful political connections. In that field, we, of the province of Quebec, do not find too much fault with the federal government; however, we can criticize it since we have to foot 50 per cent of the bill.

Mr. Isabelle: And we also.

Mr. Gauthier (Roberval): But from here, the federal government cannot see everything that is going on in the province of Quebec. In fact, in our constituencies, for instance, we come up against the patronage being dispensed in Quebec.

[Mr. Gauthier (Roberval).]

As concerns the local initiatives program, one day it will really have to serve the unemployed and not only enable some privileged people to double their salary, or still, enable two or three devoted organizers and supporters of a political party to share among themselves the whole amount of the project, since it is felt that in some cases, the program has resulted in the creation of only 15 or 20 new jobs, and this I can prove.

I would still have many suggestions to put forward, but my time is running short and I should like to leave it to the government to consider these practical proposals, because I have noticed that government members are wont to say over and over again that the opposition never proposes any remedial action.

We, of the Social Credit Party, always strive for objectivity in bringing forward concrete and clear solutions, expressed plainly, in order that the government may at last understand. However, since there will always be people who do not want to hear and who do not want to see, I am convinced that some government members will repeat, after hearing this very clear outline, that we will have proposed nothing concrete. However, I am certain that the people of Canada, upon reading the official record of my remarks, will all understand.

Mr. Fernand Leblanc (Laurier): Mr. Speaker, together with all the Canadian people, I wish to extend my most sincere congratulations to the hon. Minister of Finance (Mr. Turner) for the budget he brought forward in this House, the primary purpose of which is to stop unemployment.

As I do not have too much time, I shall deal straight away with the matter I am concerned about, that of private retirement-savings plans in view of the difficulties experienced by Canadians 45 years of age and over when looking for a new job when, unfortunately, circumstances require it.

Now that people think of retiring at an earlier age, an appropriate planning of such a significant period in one's life is even more important. It seems to me that no worker will be able to consider his retirement to be secure as long as he is not sure to have a plan under which on the one hand pensions are universally portable, and which is based on the other hand upon a formula which enables him to remain a number of years out of the labour market, without being penalized.

Nowadays, one should always be in a position to prepare for a fair retirement, even though one remains a few years without work, for the present unemployment rate lays a new requirement on us. We must also be able to do so, if circumstances invite or compel us to leave our employment to accept another one, and therefore, a transferable pension plan has become necessary.

It is only since 1965 that provinces, and Ontario first of all, began to be concerned about part of this problem and to legislate accordingly in 1965, the federal government did the same for employees, businesses and activities under its jurisdiction, and which were not affected by provincial legislation.

It is remarkable that tax privileges granted by the federal government to registered retirement savings plans prompted many employers to take advantage of them to register their own private plans.

I would like to draw the attention of the House to the fact that the federal government can still find other ways of approaching the problem and thus contribute to bring about certain changes in the position taken by the working world on this matter.

It is our responsibility to innovate in this sector and to try to identify as much as possible the problem because unemployment, manpower mobility and the lowering of the pension age are now a primary concern for the worker without forgetting that retirement plans represent an asset of some $12 million.

Since the pension age tends to be lowered, with the years, long-term planning of his pension becomes an important matter for the employee.

One of the major problems facing the employee who wishes to quit his job, as well as the one who is dismissed is that of the loss incurred because of the cancellation of the first pension plan.

In most cases, the employee is not even entitled to recover the contribution paid to his pansion fund if he has not yet reached the stage where, under the terms of the collective agreement, the pension money can be reimbursed to him on leaving his employer. Since union action has therefore resulted in dismissal according to seniority, when staff has been reduced by a particular company, the first ones to be fired are always those who do not yet have the right to recover their contributions to the pension fund because they have not worked long enough for the company. Therefore, the plan is basically unfair in terms of this practice and it invalidates the opinion according to which this is being done in order to discourage the newscomers to leave the company of their own accord.

In order that pension credits become perfectly and universally portable from one job to the other, all private retirement schemes would have to meet some basic conditions.

As suggested in the Financial Post of November 4, 1972, we would also have to consider the possibility of establishing a central agency that would hold these credits on behalf of all firms, which would make it easier to plan the operation of schemes.

Furthermore, this idea of a central agency has already led to the setting up of union retirement funds in which a unionized employee contributing to such a fund can go from one employer to another without changing his pension plan, at least as long as he continues to belong to the same union. Here again, pensions are not universally transferable in this case although this system shows a definite improvement over the retirement plan of some companies. And for the non-unionized, as well as non-unionizable executives, the problem could not be solved this way. So this is a partial solution, and an imperfect one, even for unionized labour which can benefit from it.

However, the formula of union funds can serve as a basic model for the setting up of a central agency which would ensure universality of the plan.

If we want to have in Canada workers ready to move from one area to another according to the pace of the economy, ready to undergo retraining to learn a new trade while there is still time for them to do so, ready to work in a different field than the one they became used to initially, we must seriously consider setting up transferable retirement plans which will give them the security they will be giving up by leaving either the local area, or their initial trade, or the field they became used to.

One must remember that before constituting an incentive to move constantly from one company to another, the universally transferable plan would first represent a form of security for the employee who could finally plan his retirement. Since on the average the retirement age constantly goes down this planning becomes more and more important from the point of view of the employee.

The employer has no right, as it is often done today, to make his the funds by treating them as company property. Those funds belong exclusively to the employees who have earned their salaries on which the contributions were levied and for that reason, they must not be mistaken for company property.

Mr. Speaker, the best way to prevent this from happening would be to appoint a trustee who would hold the moneys and be empowered to invest them.

Retiring at an early age is costly because the prematurely retired person is losing not only with regards to public pension plans but also with regards to private pension plans. This is so, as explained by Mr. Donald Rumball in the Financial Post of last July 1st, and I quote:

• (2040)

[English]

The annual increase in the pension stops because he is no longer employed and no more contributions are being made by or for him.

He loses the interest that would have continued to accrue because the money must be used to start paying his pension.

The buying power of the assets held for him is diluted, because more pension payments will be made to him as a result of his having the extra years of retirement.

Those factors make it important for employees to accumulate maximum pension if they wish to enjoy a relatively easy retirement at a reasonable age, in spite of the continuing rise in the cost of living and the increased deductions which generally result from the decision to ancitipate retirement.

The federal income tax provisions concerning registered retirement and savings plans have encouraged many employers who were anxious to take advantage of those privileges to change their private plans to make them consistent with the standards established by the law; the employees have also been favoured by those changes.

The introduction of the Canada Pension Plan also had its impact on private retirement plans whether or not they were integrated into it.

Even if for constitutional reasons, the federal government cannot directly legislate in this respect, it can have significant influence on the standards prevailing in this field through federal legislation aimed at urging employers as well as employees to act in whatever direction they think is best.

The legislative power that the federal government may exercise is limited by the Constitution, but it certainly can suggest that the provinces adopt a policy consistent with certain measures being considered.

The federal government can certainly find a way to exert appropriate pressure in this field, whether it prefers to act through a penalizing tax measure, a tax exemption, the creation of a national pension plan fund that would administer or "supervise" the administration of private, unregistered pension funds anxious to benefit from any privilege bestowed by federal law, by systematically "educating" employee groups on the demands they could profitably make when negociating the conditions of their private pension plans, by amending laws under its jurisdiction, such as the Canada Labour Code or specific laws governing financial institutions under its control, or in any other way.

It seems safe for the moment to suppose that suggestions from the federal government would be well received in the provinces.

The provincial legislation governing private pension plans has set clearly insufficient minimum conditions, effective only in provinces where it is in force, and it does not offer any suitable solution to the non-transferable character of most private plans.

We should consider dealing with the unemployment problem under all its aspects and try to cope with all its disadvantages; in short, we should do more than fight against its direct effects, that is by creating employment.

If it is true that we have attempted up to now to cope with it by creating employment and by reducing as much as possible the period of unemployment, nobody has considered for example, at least to my knowledge, systematically legislating so that the period of unintentional unemployment will not dramatically extend the period which a worker must spend on the labour market to provide for adequate retirement. For want of being able to fight unemployment, it is at least time we go about "organizing" it. The protection of workers and unemployed implies that we are interested in their condition when they reach retirement age and they prepare that retirement today. It is certainly not normal that workers who acquired a vast experience over the years have difficulty in finding a job precisely because of their age since potential employers would have more contributions to pay in to the retirement fund in order to hire them at that age.

It is also true that retirement was not insured before but that people put money aside for that purpose. A single glance at the assets retirement funds constitute and we understand readily how important it is to take into account this financial contribution which grows and grows and which can represent an important source of investment funds.

It is probable that the provinces will go on legislating uniformly on the question and that negotiations engaged with the provinces would give excellent results; they would make it possible to elaborate in this area federal and provincial laws which are compatible and liable to direct the trade market and to encourage it to react in the desired direction.

[Mr. Leblanc (Laurier).]

I think naturally of a possible intensification of federal-provincial relations in this area. I suggest this to the Minister of Finance, to the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Lalonde), to the Minister of Labour (Mr. Munro) and to the right hon. Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau), so that individually or together, they become interested in discussing this very important matter during the next federal-provincial conferences.

Let us cast a new glance on the modern problem involving the future and welfare of the unemployed, of workers and their family. In my opinion, such an attitude would comply perfectly with the wishes of the Minister of Finance and would also meet the views of all thoses members whose ambition it is to make sure that our people enjoy a standard of living increasingly in keeping with the needs of our times.

[English]

Mr. Stan Schellenberger (Wetaskiwin): Mr. Speaker, on rising to speak in this debate I am conscious of the heavy responsibility incumbent upon every member of this House. The people of Canada are waiting and will judge us by our actions. For years they have been tired of a government which has stumbled from crisis to crisis, allowing hundreds of thousands of jobless Canadians to grow weary and cynical as month after month both unemployment and prices continue to rise, giving a combination of depression and inflation unparallelled in our history.

So now, finally it must be admitted that the government has made a partial deathbed repentance. I for one am happy that some mention was made of the removal of the capital gains tax on the family farm when it is passed on to a son or daughter after a farmer dies. I welcome the removal of the federal sales tax on children's footwear and clothing, and I am glad that some benefits are given to the senior citizens and veterans of our country.

My constituency, named Wetaskiwin after the largest trading and commercial centre therein, was so called due to the Cree Indians' name for the region, the Peace Hills. Wetaskiwin itself has a population of 6,000 and depends on farming and light industry for its existence. We have a population diverse in its origins, which perhaps comes as close as possible to pinning down that sometimes elusive Canadian identity—people of various backgrounds working together to better their own well-being and the interests of the community.

Wetaskiwin has a number of problems which are of concern to cities. Perhaps the major concern in my city is created by the Canadian Pacific Railway tracks which run through the centre of town. The result is a grave hazard to the lives of our people; the fire station is located on one side of town, and if a train is standing on the crossing, if a slow freight is passing through or if railway cars are being changed, our fire department is effectively cut off from attending any emergency which might arise in the other part of town. Applications have been made to the CTC for immediate action to be taken, possibly for the relocation of tracks. I was happy the Speech from the Throne mentioned that moneys are to be provided for the relocation of rail tracks. I hope this provision will be included in bills that come forward after the budget debate.

I am fortunate to be in close contact with five Indian reservations in my constituency. I believe that often the native peoples tend to become too isolated from the mainstream of Canadian life and are encouraged to remain apart from the rest of us by the multiplicity of government programs. Surely we would prefer it if they felt like Canadians, the same as we all do.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Schellenberger: At the same time, the government should recognize the special problems imposed on communities by their proximities to reserves. For example, the facilities of Wetaskiwin municipal hospital are used to a greater extent every year by residents of the nearby Hobbema reserve. The administration of the hospital, seeking relief from soaring costs and trying to avoid the necessity of more taxes being levied on municipal residents, seems caught between the federal and municipal authorities in the search for funds to further the use of the hospital by native people. It would seem to me, Mr. Speaker, that treaty Indians are the responsibility of the federal government and that the two ministers concerned should get together soon and find a solution to this problem which is duplicated in other parts of Canada. At the moment, as usual, the local taxpayer is caught in the squeeze.

Now I want to turn to matters of agriculture. Most of the farms in my constituency are of the mixed variety, each of about 300 acres. The average age of farmers is 50. The net income of these farmers is a source of continuing concern to me. We know that farm income dropped by 34 per cent in the last five years. Farmers seem to have gained in the last year; because prices have risen for beef and grain, which is good for farmers. At the same time, costs of farming have risen. Input costs for farmers have risen by 75 per cent in the last decade. That is why so many farmers are having trouble making ends meet at the end of the year. Galloping food costs have affected farmers, as they have affected everybody else.

Farmers, as I have pointed out before, have less variety to choose from when shopping and there is less competition among stores in rural areas. Consumers tend to blame farmers for rising food costs. For example, the price of eggs zoomed upward last month. We should remember that the profits are not going to farmers but to the distributors and supermarket cartels, as I see it, because the farmer receives only 11 per cent of every dollar spent on food.

The continuing decrease in the number of census farms is one of the changes in Alberta agriculture which has gone almost unnoticed in the past two years. Figures show that in 1972 there were 67,702 farms in Alberta compared with 84,000 in 1951. This means we have suffered a decrease of nearly 1,000 farms per year. I believe the chief factor in this decline has been the ever-increasing amount of capital necessary to begin farming. In 1951 the capital figure was $21,000, in 1961 it remained a reasonable $37,000 and today it is estimated that one needs $80,000. As an initial outlay of this magnitude is needed, many people, especially young people, who would like to begin farming are unable to do so. Consequently, farms are swallowed up by large corporate farmers or allowed to go to seed.

The provisions of the budget allow farms to pass to a son or daughter without the imposition of capital gains tax on the death of the farmer. How much more useful it would be, Mr. Speaker, if these farms were allowed to be passed to a son or son-in-law during the farmer's life—when he retires, for example. Such a provision, I submit, might effectively halt the decline in the number of census farms to which I have referred.

The statistics that bother me most are those showing that the average age of farmers has continued to increase, from 45 two decades ago to over 49 today. We are losing young people; they go to urban areas as soon as they can simply because they cannot see their way clear to making a decent living on their father's farm. There still is a capital gains tax on farm land and machinery. This ought to be abolished. I believe it is a mistake to take away any part of the retirement fund of a farmer, a fund for which he has saved many years in building up equity in his establishment. In this way, again, we are discriminating against young persons who want to establish themselves in agriculture. Natural phenomena are also important in farming. It is time the government undertook seriously its responsibilities in leadership by presenting a well defined insurance or stabiliZation program to cover farms which are hit hard by acts of God.

I have spoken before in this House on dairy matters, a subject on which my predecessor, Harry Moore, who was known for his interest in the subject and for his long service to his constituency, spent much time and energy. Suffice it to say that our dairy farmers look to the government to find new markets to replace those we have lost as a result of the expansion of the European Economic Community and our failure to obtain special concessions, such as New Zealand did, for butter.

At a time when young people make up a greater than ever percentage of the work force we must, as the work week declines to 35 hours, be concerned about recreation. As Canada is increasingly urbanized and as promotion of tourism increases, many more people will find themselves in an inelastic space—more in the fields, more in the parks, more on the mountains and more on the lakes and waters of our country. Recreation has become an industry supporting many whose jobs ultimately depend on natural resources which facilitate recreation. If we destroy or limit these resources, we will destroy or limit job opportunities. As tourism becomes more competitive, so does environmental management increase in importance. We can hardly expect tourists to beat a path to our country if they will find only crowded beaches, overused parks, logged-off or subdivided mountains and villages sprawled over with people.

Our expenditures, as individuals, on recreation need to be balanced by corresponding public expenditures. I was disappointed that the budget made no provision whatever for this matter. In my constituency there are the ability and the resources for establishing, privately and publicly, more employment and facilities in the field of recreation. Help is needed, however, and I would like to see that help given both in terms of guidance and of finance. Any plan of action should include first, a decision as to who has responsibility for the recreation; second, effective tri-level organization for development; third, adequate planning studies as the basis of a development program; and fourth, citizen participation in development of recreational land use.

I now want to say a few words about the Local Initiatives Program. I think most hon. members would agree that there is room for improvement in this program. At the same time, I want to pay special tribute to Mr. Gairns and Mr. Meehan of the special information group. They have been unfailingly helpful and courteous to me. I think many of us, Mr. Speaker, would like to exercise greater input into these projects. We should like to know more of the real reasons for rejection. Some reasons, such as "Question ability of management" or "Doubt feasibility of project," are awfully vague for a Member of Parliament to forward to his constituents, to whom he must somehow explain the workings of bureaucracy and the mentality of civil servants. I was particularly distressed at the rejection of the Spruce Grove swimming pool and arena project and the Winfield recreation centre, as similar projects elsewhere were accepted. I also wonder why co-op projects were rejected out of hand, such as the Ste. Anne project in Onoway.

I also wish to talk about incentives to small businesses of which there are many in my constituency. I have seen them suffer over the past few years. Incentives to small business are one area this government has neglected, Mr. Speaker. We see that business failures rose dramatically, by 61 per cent, in 1971. It is obviously the small businessman who suffers most. We need the program my leader has advocated: to establish a Canadian investment incentive credit, available to any Canadian who makes a direct investment in the equity of a Canadian-owned small business. A credit such as this, to a maximum of $5,000 a year, might cost $300 million during its first year of operation but, as my leader pointed out, this could not begin to equal the more than $1 billion poured into the unemployment insurance fund to allow the government to pursue its heartless, directionless, incompetent fiscal policies and thus sustain a 7 per cent employment rate.

The family farm, about which I spoke a few minutes ago, would also benefit from this scheme; incentive credits would be available for new investment in such an operation. Small business encourages individual initiative and this is something which is stifled by the government's current reliance on big government, big business and big unions.

In conclusion, Mr. Speaker, I want to speak of my concern over the government's continuing intrusion into every level of society and life. Boards, committees and regulations seem to be the rule rather than the exception. Despite some tax cuts, the government's total tax take continues to soar. I believe the individual should have more freedom, especially when deciding how to spend his income. We need more freedom and less regulation; fewer laws, and not more boards. I hope that when this party comes to power and meets its new appointment with destiny, which not even the hon. member for York South (Mr. Lewis) cannot much longer delay, it will help Canadians to free themselves from the bureaucracy which now entangles us and discover again the meaning of personal initiative and development. To this cause I pledge myself.

[Mr. Schellenberger.]

Mr. Les Benjamin (Regina-Lake Centre): Mr. Speaker, in the four years I have been here I have listened to five budget debates. This is the first budget which I find myself, a little reluctantly, able to support. Possibly this is because there are a significant number of items in it that were put forward by individual members of the three opposition parties, as well as by the opposition parties generally on numerous occasions in the past four years, all of which the government scoffed at and refused to listen to or pay attention. They have finally been paid some attention as a result of what many citizens said to the government with "X's" on their ballots last October 30.

The pension increases are welcome. It is the minimum that could be done without the Minister of Finance (Mr. Turner) blushing in shame. However, I warn him—and I think this is felt by members on all sides—that it is still not enough by any means. The government can be sure that we will continue to fight for further increases until the old age pension is increased to $150 per month or the GIS and OAS combined are a minimum of $220. At least by moving up to $100 it puts the Liberals $7 a month ahead of the amount to which the Tories committed themselves.

That in itself is an excellent reason for preferring to support this Liberal budget rather than a possible Conservative one. If one looks at what has been happening with increases, not only in the cost of living but in the standard of living since the 1950s, it will be seen that the increase should be to $110 in order to keep up. The $40 basic pension of 1952, to which should be added the price increases and cost of living increases since then, totals $63.60. If you add to that the increase in the gross national product, in real terms, of 72 per cent, the old age pension should be $110 per month. The government will have to move within a year to make that further improvement in the old age pension.

Another suggestion that is receiving support, even from members on the government side, is that the government should move rapidly to reduce the eligibility age for the old age pension from 65 to 60. If this cannot be done in one move, it should be done on a year to year basis for five years, as was done when the eligibility age was lowered from 70 to 65.

The increase in the war veterans allowance is also welcome. Every member of this House handles dozens of veterans' cases a year, dealing with the Department of Veterans Affairs. This increase will not only alleviate the financial well-being of veterans but will also reduce some of the mail with which Members of Parliament have to deal.

I welcome the remarks of the hon. member for Wetaskiwin (Mr. Schellenberger) regarding capital gains as they apply to family farms. Although I am grateful for this concession, I find it amusing because this particular matter was contained in an amendment moved by my colleague, the former hon. member for Regina East, a year ago when we were discussing the tax bill. The government said it could not be done. It refused to even listen to it. It is amazing what they can do. We welcome that change in the budget. May I repeat what others, including the hon. member for Wetaskiwin, have said: the trouble is you have to die to get it. That is some improvement for the successor, the son or daughter who will continue to operate the farm, but we again submit that this provision should be available during the lifetime of the farmer. We all know that a farmer in his fifties or sixties who becomes disabled because of a heart attack, or for some other reason, has to retire early and turn the farm over to his son. That farm should be exempt from capital gains tax.

The New Democratic Party is not interested in capital gains on small, family operated farms and small business. We are after the ones that count, the big fellows.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Benjamin: I submit that the Minister of Finance should extend this provision to apply not only after the death of a farmer but during his lifetime, and that it be further extended to the small, family-owned and operated business. Any enterprise whose assets run up into millions of dollars should be subject to capital gains tax at any time.

Reductions in sales tax and excise tax are fine, though some of the tariff reductions are so insignificant as to be almost meaningless. But they are welcome. They are timely. They were asked for last year, the year before that and the year before that. Finally, the Minister of Finance was converted on this item as well.

There is another item for which the government of Saskatchewan deserves full credit for its power of persuasion. I refer to the proposal to take into account the costs of education when determining equalization payments to the provinces. This idea was put forward by the provincial treasurer of the province of Saskatchewan and I am happy to note that the government and the Minister of Finance have adopted it. This means another $26.5 million for the province of Saskatchewan. It is a further incentive to me to support the budget.

While all of us welcome whatever cuts have been made in tariffs and sales and excise taxes, along with the increases in pensions, all of this will go for naught if people at the manufacturing, wholesaling and retailing levels do not pass the reductions on to consumers. If landlords are allowed to raise rents unconscionably, thereby absorbing some or all of the increase in pensions, the intention behind the budget will go for naught.

An hon. Member: Speak to the provinces.

Mr. Benjamin: I have already spoken to some of my friends in Saskatchewan and I urge the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs (Mr. Gray), the Minister of State for Urban Affairs (Mr. Basford) and the Minister of Finance to do the same. I should like them to make representations to all the provincial governments urging them to impose a rent freeze immediately so as to protect all persons aged 65 years and over living in rented accommodation. If an attempt was then made to raise their rents, all these people would need to do would be to pick up the telephone and call somebody in Regina or Ottawa. Here is an area in which the federal government should provide leadership. It should persuade the provinces to take action to ensure that the benefits in this budget are passed on to the consumers.

I note that one or two hon. members in the official opposition have called for the removal of the sales tax on building materials. We agree that this should be done. The difficulty about this—and it attaches to the other reductions I have mentioned—is seeing that the benefit is passed on to the public. We all remember the bitter experience which followed the removal of the 11 per cent sales tax on drugs. It was absorbed by the producers and retailers and the consumers received no benefit at all. Unless there is effective monitoring of prices charged by manufacturers and retailers, the reduction in sales tax would be meaningless; the government might just as well have left it on and redistributed the revenue through further increases in the old age pension. Hon. gentlemen to my right may wonder why I do not propose this by way of an amendment. But if they are right in what they have been saying, members of the New Democratic Party have no need to do so; I would only have to whisper into the ear of the Minister of Finance and he would do these things.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Benjamin: I would only have to roll back the blankets and he would be only too willing to agree.

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): Not a nice thing to say.

Mr. Benjamin: I want to make one final proposal which would do a great deal to solve two problems which face this country, namely, unemployment and pollution. I have raised this subject ever since I first came here. What we need is a national policy under the leadership of a national government with some imagination, a policy which said: over the next five years, every town and city with a population of more than 5,000 will have an adequate tertiary sewage treatment plant. As things are, cities alone, even with the help of provinces, cannot handle this themselves; the costs are too massive. The federal government must provide the leadership and the major portion of the funds.

Think about it, Mr. Speaker. What would a program of this kind do in helping to solve the problems of unemployment and pollution? While there is some help available at the present time, it is entirely inadequate. On this basis, the problem will be dragged out for another 50 years before it is dealt with in a satisfactory way. Imagine the amount of useful employment which would be created for tens of thousands of people in the planning and construction of sewage treatment facilities. Imagine the work which would be involved in the expansion of existing plants with the manufacture of additional equipment needed. I hope the Minister of Finance will think about it, if the government really means business when it says it is determined to tackle pollution and, at the same time, to reduce unemployment.

Some provinces, some municipalities, might drag their feet but I submit they would not do so for very long before the wrath of their respective electorates descended upon them. Here is a goal which the country would support. Canadians generally would back the effort and the investment which would be required and the country would profit, too, from the creation of tens of thousands of jobs which are so urgently needed. At the same time, such a project would do more to halt pollution than any other single endeavour.

An hon. Member: Who would pay for it? The taxpayers.

Mr. Benjamin: I submit it would cost about four or five billion dollars. The money is there. We have to use it.

• (2120)

Hon. E. F. Whelan (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, I want to say—

Mr. Baldwin: So you are going to read your speech, are you? Did John write that?

Mr. Whelan: John Diefenbaker? You would be surprised how often he calls me. There was news in the budget for farmers, and most of it was very good news.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Whelan: Gains for farmers far outweigh any losses that may have to be borne. First of all, like all other taxpayers, farmers will benefit from the 5 per cent cut in income tax. I want to point out that tax reductions are much greater than 5 per cent for people who make less than $10,000 a year income. When we put the 5 per cent tax reduction together with the increase in exemptions, we come up with a 9 per cent tax cut for people with an income of $10,000, and 18 per cent tax cut for people with an income of $7,000 and a 47 per cent tax cut for people who have an income of $5,000.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Whelan: Under this administration, in view of the way we are improving the income of farmers, there will not be that many farmers—

Mr. Madill: You are right, there won't.

Mr. Whelan: —who would have benefited in former years because they will be earning more money than that.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Whelan: This is a budget for little people. They have benefited a great deal from the budget, more than others. Secondly, farmers will benefit from the changes made in the capital gains tax as it applies to transfers of farms from a father to the mother or child. This is a major concession, one that I am very happy to see in the budget. I have had an extraordinary number of requests from farmers to have this change made in our tax legislation and I am glad that the Minister of Finance (Mr. Turner) was able to make the change at this time. There are a lot of farmers in Canada who are at the age where transfers will be taking place within the next generation. We will need a lot of young farmers in Canada, so I am very happy the farmers are getting this tax break in the budget.

While we are talking of farmers, Mr. Speaker, there are probably more people over the age of 65 who are still productive in agriculture, their way of life, than in any other way of life in this country.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Whelan: I hope some of the noisy members on the other side are on the consumers affairs committee—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. I hope it will not be necessary for hon. members to respond to everything that the Minister of Agriculture says. I know he is generating considerable excitement by his speech and perhaps if there were more order in the House he might excite me with it, but not too much of it is getting through to the Chair. I would therefore ask hon. members for their co-operation.

Mr. Whelan: As I was saying, Mr. Speaker, I hope hon. members on the committee examining food costs will remember just how productive these people are and how long they remain productive. I am happy to see that the budget aims at preserving the family farm. The tax concession does not apply to the corporate giants but to farm families who pass on their farm from one generation to the next.

I think the change is important enough that farmers should consult a lawyer—and even for a farmer this is a concession—or an accountant if they are planning a transfer of their farm to their son, son-in-law, daughter or whoever it may be. There are several methods of transferring a farm from father to son or daughter including gifts spread over a number of years. A good accountant can tell them how this can best be done. The change announced in the budget changes the rules of the ball game, to the benefit of the family farm, and I want every farmer to get the most he can out of these concessions that are rightfully his.

The third change involved livestock herds. Under the old system, farmers who chose to pay their taxes on an income basis had to count any increase in their herd as income and pay tax on it. They could not deduct any losses in the herd. Under the change announced in the minister's budget, any increase or loss in a herd can be counted as a change in inventory. This means that taxes on gains can be delayed until the herd is actually sold, or that a loss can be deducted from inventory. I think that is very important.

Fourthly, the budget offers a faster rate of depreciation on silos and on facilities to store fruits and vegetables under controlled temperatures. The change increases the rate of capital cost allowance to 20 per cent. That is of tremendous benefit to them.

Fifthly, there is some gain for farmers who buy quotas. Under the previous system these quotas had no value on valuation day, and if and when they were sold the total sale price was treated as a capital gain and subject to taxation. Under the change the Minister of Finance announced, farmers who buy quotas will be able to deduct the purchase price in calculating the amount that is taxable on the sale of quotas. The same rule applies to any licences that farmers purchase or sell.

Sixthly, the dropping of the 12 per cent tax on items described as "near food" will help promote the increased consumption of these foods. This may be more important to some farmers than they now realize. For example, I know of one creamery in southwestern Ontario which developed a low-calorie dairy spread similar to butter. Because it was defined as a diet food, the 12 per cent tax applied. That will no longer be the case, and hopefully that creamery will be able to increase its sales thereby increasing the market for milk.

There is one point in the budget that I know concerns a lot of farmers, and that is the temporary reduction in tariffs on imports of certain foods. First of all, it is my belief that the changes will have little significant impact on farm prices. In addition, these changes are temporary and if difficulties arise for specific commodities I shall not hesitate to recommend appropriate changes.

I think these changes will have little or no significant impact on the returns of Canadian farmers because they fall into general categories. First, they are on items that are either non-competitive or mariginally competitive with Canadian production either because of their nature or because of seasonal availability in Canada. That is, they are commodities that enter the country at a time when they are not produced in Canada. Secondly, other changes simply adjust tariff rates where there was a difference between the British preferential rate and the most-favoured-nation rate. In these cases the change brings the most-favoured-nation rate down to a par with the British preferential rate, which remains the same as it was.

Mr. Baldwin: Explain.

Mr. Whelan: The hon. member for Peace River (Mr. Baldwin) wants a little explanation, so I will make one. I will use as an example canned peaches. Before the change, the British preferential rate was 1¾ cents a pound, the most-favoured-nation rate was 2½ cents a pound, and the agreed rate for Australia was one-half cent a pound. In 1971 we imported about $9.2 million worth, of which $7 million worth was from most-favoured-nation countries, largely the United States, $1.4 million worth was from Australia and $800,000 worth was from other British preferential rate nations. As with apricots, the new arrangement is that these stay the same but subject to the maximum of 12½ per cent. For 1971, the most-favoured-nation rate represented 16 per cent, the British preferential rate was 15 per cent and the Australian rate 2 per cent ad valorem. Assuming prices remain the same, this would mean a reduction of 3½ per cent which would amount to a reduction of slightly under half a cent per pound.

• (2130)

In the case of imports from most-favoured-nation countries, the reduction would be slightly over one-quarter cent per pound. There would be no change in imports from Australia. We import about 76.7 per cent of total consumption of peaches in Canada. I could give you other examples, Mr. Speaker, but I will not at this time.

An hon. Member: You did not tell us about Australia.

Mr. Whelan: We did not change the situation with Australia. It stays the same as it has been for years.

Mr. Baldwin: It is like a boomerang.

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): That's better than having a kangaroo.

Mr. Whelan: There were a few cases where the tariffs were so low they represented more of a nuisance than anything else. As I said before, I do not think the change will have a significant impact on farm prices; however, I am prepared to recommend appropriate changes in cases where difficulties arise in respect of specific commodities. I should like to add that farmers will benefit from particular tariff reductions on some items. There are a number of reductions that will include imports of items that farmers use in their business. It is a very long list but it includes, for example—

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Whelan: I will not give the whole list.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Whelan: I know you do not want to hear all the good things because those are the things you do not like.

An hon. Member: We are interested in what the farmers make, not what they pay.

Mr. Whelan: You do not like the good things, but I am going to tell you some of them anyway. This is a long list which includes, for example, a 5 per cent reduction of tariffs on antibiotics, hormones, medications and vitamins.

An hon. Member: We are going to need lots of them.

Mr. Whelan: These are all used in animal and poultry production on the farm. There is also a 5 per cent reduction on tariffs for baskets, and a 5 per cent cut in tariffs—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Whelan: Let me remind hon. members that we use hundreds of thousands of baskets in this country, so that is not a small thing to many people.

An hon. Member: What about artificial insemination?

Mr. Whelan: There is a 5 per cent reduction in tariffs on a whole group of hardware items such as electric fixtures and appliances, vices, saws, hooks and eyes—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. The hon. minister has a strong voice and a sunny disposition and perhaps his tolerance point is much higher than most, but the Chair finds it extremely difficult to follow his speech. I do not think that everything he says should draw comment from every corner of the House. I would ask that more of his speech be allowed delivery without encouragement. He is doing very well.

Mr. Baldwin: I agree with you.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Whelan: Mr. Speaker, these interjections do not bother me one bit. I am an old union man and I have attended the wildest farm and union meetings you can think of. These people here are quite tame.

As I said, there is a reduction on hardware items such as hammers, crowbars, screwdrivers, and so on, of 2½ per cent to 17 per cent—

An hon. Member: What about wheelbarrows?

Mr. Whelan: —on trickle-irrigation systems and sprinkle or trickle-watering systems used on the farm, in the greenhouse, and a 2½ per cent reduction in the tariffs on air cooled internal combustion engines—

An hon. Member: What about manure spreaders?

Mr. Whelan: —and parts for these engines. These will all be of benefit.

Mr. Speaker, I could go on and give that group over there a lot more information if I thought it would do any good, but I am of the opinion that it may be like the old saying—no, I won't say it.

An hon. Member: Don't put your foot in your mouth.

Mr. Whelan: The point I am making is that tariff reductions cut both ways. They may hurt a bit in respect of some food items, but I do not think they will hurt even as much as normal price fluctuations with which we live all the time, and they will help reduce the cost of some inputs.

Above all, I want to emphasize that the tariff cuts on food imports do not—I repeat, do not—apply during our growing season. We have retained our present tariff structure on these items. For example, we keep a 10-week tariff for rhubarb, a 44-week tariff for onions, a 12-week tariff on green peas and a 22-week tariff on special things like cucumbers, and so on, down the list. So we will still protect these producers, as we always have, during the growing season.

An hon. Member: The farmer is not going to hold his breath waiting for you.

Mr. Whelan: Our producers will continue to receive tariff protection during the in-season of the year and we will continue to work closely with the Canadian Horticultural Council in applying these tariffs. For the information of hon. members, I might add that I met with some of these people today and will meet with some of them tomorrow to consider some of the things I have mentioned tonight, as well as other things about which they are not too unhappy, I can tell you. They know this Minister of Agriculture is not going to sell them down the river as hon. members opposite would like to do.

An hon. Member: The Minister of Finance sold them down the river.

Mr. Baldwin: Where is Benson?

[Mr. Deputy Speaker.]

An hon. Member: He is up the creek.

Mr. Whelan: I want to take a few minutes to deal specifically with sugar beets because they represent a special case under the budget the Minister of Finance announced. There is a rather complicated set of tariffs applying to sugar imports but, in general, there is a reduction amounting to 30 cents per 100 pounds of raw sugar.

An hon. Member: How sweet it is!

Mr. Whelan: I have obtained authority from the cabinet to use our Agricultural Stabilization Act and the Agricultural Stabilization Board to offset any—I repeat, any—impact this change in sugar tariffs will have on the income of Canadian sugar beet producers. My authority to offset the impact of the reduced tariff applies even if the price of sugar beets stays above the support level.

I visited most of the farm leaders across Canada before the House started this session and I learned what they wanted and what they thought of our proposals.

An hon. Member: You should have taken Turner with you.

Mr. Whelan: I might say that we have everything in this budget they wanted, and more. I do not think that some of them felt they would get this much.

We have talked about the family farm. It is easy for many people to talk about a family farm, people who really have no feeling in this regard. I think one has to be raised on a family farm to really understand what it means and to have the feeling of having produced crops. One must be in this position to know what it is to create things. I have been criticized before for saying I feel that farmers are the salt of the earth and closer to God because they create things.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Whelan: God will not do everything by Himself and the farmers cannot do everything, so they must work together.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Whelan: It would not hurt if some of my friends across the way were associated a little closer with one or the other.

Mr. Alexander: Yes, reverend.

Mr. Whelan: I say that in respect of the farming industry today we can be thankful we have the farmers who are here, some of the most productive people in the world. Not long ago we had a delegation from another country. Members of that delegation said they did not understand how the farmers in Canada could be so productive. They said they did not understand how the government could keep them as productive as they were. It is mainly because they are still in a free country and a free society where they can do what they wish. They can create what they want to create because the incentive is still there.

• (2140)

When one thinks of the ten different provincial agricultural programs that we have across this nation, which are sometimes as different as they are between one country and another, it is very difficult to ask the Minister of Agriculture to be an equalizer. Sometimes I am told I should have been a westerner. If I were, I would be carrying two equalizers to do the things people want done. In summary, I say that I am confident that the changes announced in the budget offer major gains to farmers. When I was in Edmonton talking to the Unifarm people, one of the papers wrote on its front page, "He talks and thinks like a westerner".

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Whelan: But, Mr. Speaker, what they were really saying was that no matter what part of Canada farmers come from, they talk and think about the same things. With the changes announced in the budget which offer major gains to farmers, particularly in regard to capital gains tax on the transfer of family farms from father to son or daughter, and in the tax on quotas and licences as well as the tax change to allow livestock producers to count gains or losses as a change in inventory, I am sure there will be prosperity in the agricultural economy for the coming year.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. It being 9:45 p.m. it is my duty, pursuant to section 6 of Standing Order 60, to interrupt these proceedings and forthwith put the question on the subamendment now before the House.

Those in favour of the amendment to the amendment will please say yea.

Some hon. Members: Yea.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Those opposed will please say nay.

Some hon. Members: Nay.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: In my opinion the nays have it.

And more than five members having risen:

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Call in the members.

The House divided on the amendment to the amendment (Mr. Matte) which was negatived on the following division:

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I declare the subamendment lost. It being after ten o'clock, this House stands adjourned until eleven o'clock tomorrow morning.

At 10:14 p.m. the House adjourned, without question put, pursuant to Standing Order.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Friday, February 23, 1973

The House met at 11 a.m.

PRIVILEGE

MR. WAGNER—PARTICIPATION OF EXTERNAL AFFAIRS MINISTER IN VIET NAM PEACE CONFERENCE

Mr. Claude Wagner (Saint-Hyacinthe): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a question of privilege although I have doubts about the choice of procedure; however, I appeal to your kind understanding.

[English]

As hon. members may be aware, the Secretary of State for External Affairs departs today to participate in the international conference in Paris pursuant to the peace treaty signed by the belligerent parties in Viet Nam.

I am sure all hon. members will wish to join me in expressing to the minister our united understanding of the difficult and important task that he will face along with the other members of the international conference. While, in a partisan way, the minister may have disagreements with other members of the House, there is no question that he speaks and works for all Canadians when he joins the search for a lasting peace in Paris.

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker, my colleagues and myself wish him good luck; we can assure him we will keep an eye on him but we cannot guarantee that upon his return he will sit in the same place in the House.

[English]

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member's doubts were well founded when he suggested he had some reservations as to the procedure. He will recognize, I am sure, that this is not a question of privilege. I indicated that to him when he gave me notice as required by the Standing Orders. I would hope we would not begin a practice under which statements would be made by other than by ministers as provided by the rules.

TABLING OF LETTER FROM MINISTER TO QUEBEC COUNTERPART

Hon. Gérard Pelletier (Minister of Communications): Mr. Speaker, under Standing Order 14(2), I wish to table, in the two official languages, copy of my letter to the Quebec minister of communications concerning the general regulations published by the Quebec Public Service Board.

CANADA PENSION PLAN

AMENDMENT TO ENABLE HOUSEWIVES TO MAKE CONTRIBUTION AND COLLECT BENEFITS

Mr. Max Saltsman (Waterloo) moved for leave to introduce Bill C-149, to amend the Canada Pension Plan (housewives' contributions and benefits).

Some hon. Members: Explain.

Mr. Saltsman: Mr. Speaker, the purpose of this bill is to enable housewives to make contributions to and collect benefits from the Canada Pension Plan. Since many housewives spend part of their careers working in industry as well as working at home, they should be permitted to continue their contributions to the Canada Pension Plan while at home to ensure them a full pension at retiring age. The bill recognizes that work performed at home is equally as important as work performed in industry and provides housewives with the same pension opportunities.

Motion agreed to, bill read the first time and ordered to be printed.

DISCOVERY DAY BILL

PROVISION OF STATUTORY HOLIDAY ON LAST FRIDAY IN FEBRUARY

Mr. Sinclair Stevens (York-Simcoe) moved for leave to introduce Bill C-150, respecting Discovery Day.

Some hon. Members: Explain.

Mr. Stevens: Mr. Speaker, the purpose of this bill is to establish Canada's tenth statutory holiday which, falling on this Friday every February, will be the only holiday break in our long winter season. The holiday will afford Canadians an opportunity to pay tribute not only to our pioneers of the past 500 years but to reawaken interest in discovery both present and future. Both Newfoundland and the Yukon have such a holiday. This bill lets the rest of Canada catch up.

Mr. Speaker: Is the hon. member for Yukon rising on a question of privilege?

Mr. Nielsen: Yes, Mr. Speaker. We have had to put up with the larcenist conduct of Edmonton with respect to the theft of our Klondike days, and while we are flattered by the hon. member's bill I would not want to promise him support for the theft of our own provincial holiday in the Yukon.

Motion agreed to, bill read the first time and ordered to be printed.

CANADA PENSION PLAN

AMENDMENT RESPECTING APPEALS TO PENSION APPEALS BOARD

Mr. Robert C. Coates (Cumberland-Colchester North) moved for leave to introduce Bill C-151, to amend the Canada Pension Plan Act.

Some hon. Members: Explain.

Mr. Coates: Mr. Speaker, the purpose of this bill is to remove the Scrooge-like approach of the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Lalonde), who has been using his right personally to appeal against favourable decisions by the review committee for applicants who have applied for a disability pension under the Canada Pension Plan and unleash the full force of his department against applicants who are disabled, who have had their disability recognized and a pension awarded by a review committee and who, as a result of the minister's personal action in his own name, must not only wait many additional months for a decision on their claims but must face top medical and legal experts from the federal bureaucracy without so much as the benefit of legal counsel. This amendment will eliminate the meanest possible action any federal politician can take against an individual Canadian.

Motion agreed to, bill read the first time and ordered to be printed.

POSSIBLE DECREASE IN FUTURE SALES OF WHEAT TO PEKING—SUGGESTED PURCHASE OF RICE FROM CHINA

Hon. Alvin Hamilton (Qu'Appelle-Moose Mountain): Mr. Speaker, my question is addressed to the minister in charge of the Canadian Wheat Board. In view of the statement made by the Australian minister in charge of development after his visit to Peking that in future wheat deals Peking would favour Australia over Canada, has the minister made any plans for a pilgrimage of penance to Peking to explain why he introduced the Lift Program in 1970 to take western farmers out of wheat production?

Hon. E. F. Whelan (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, I will have to take that question as notice on behalf of the minister and have him report back.

Mr. Hamilton (Qu'Appelle-Moose Mountain): Mr. Speaker, would the Minister of Agriculture also take notice of this supplementary question to the minister? Will the minister explore the possibilities of having a government to government deal between Canada and China under which we will buy rice from China instead of buying all our rice from the United States as a way of solving the difficulties that apparently are arising between Canada and China?

Mr. Whelan: I will bring that suggestion to the minister's attention, Mr. Speaker.

PER CAPITA EXPENDITURE DISTRIBUTION ON A PROVINCIAL BASIS

Mr. Stuart Leggatt (New Westminster): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Public Works. It deals with the 1973-74 expenditures for that department as found in the estimates. In view of the per capita expenditure in the province of British Columbia of $1.56 and the per capita expenditure in the province of Ontario of $9 exclusive of expenditures on the national capital, do these expenditures vary inversely with the distance from Bay Street and Ottawa?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

INSURANCE

BRITISH COLUMBIA LEGISLATION—POSSIBLE CONTRAVENTION OF BILL OF RIGHTS AND RESTRAINT ON INTERPROVINCIAL TRADE

Mr. Gilles Caouette (Charlevoix): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Justice with regard to the introduction last Friday, February 16, of the Automobile Insurance Act of British Columbia and the Insurance Corporation of British Columbia Act. I should like to know whether the confiscatory features of the bill are in any respect in contravention of the Canadian Bill of Rights and, further, whether or not the Automobile Insurance Act represents a restraint on interprovincial trade by requiring all vehicles operating in the province to use the Insurance Corporation of British Columbia as the sole carrier for insurance?

Hon. Warren Allmand (Solicitor General): Mr. Speaker, the Minister of Justice had to be away today. I will take the question as notice and bring it to his attention.

Mr. Baldwin: Is he on a slow boat to China?

[Translation]

REQUEST FOR STATEMENT BY MINISTER ON BRITISH COLUMBIA LEGISLATION

Mr. Gilles Caouette (Charlevoix): I have a supplementary question, Mr. Speaker.

As soon as the minister is acquainted with the act passed in British Columbia, does he propose to make a statement about the detrimental effect of that legislation on the other provinces.

Mr. Speaker: I would point out to the hon. member that there may be some doubt about the first part of his question. For the rest, I see no procedural difficulty with regard to his supplementary question.

MANPOWER

SUFFICIENCY OF BUDGET STIMULUS TO PRIVATE ENTERPRISE TO CREATE ENOUGH JOBS TO REDUCE UNEMPLOYMENT SIGNIFICANTLY

Mr. Lincoln M. Alexander (Hamilton West): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct my question to the minister responsible for manpower and the local initiatives program. My question is prompted by the fact that almost two-thirds of those who have applied have not been successful. In light of the fact LIP has been used as a stimulus to employment and as 92,000 people are now placed in a precarious position because of government indecision with regard to scrapping, revising or renewing LIP, will the minister advise the House whether the budget recently introduced by the Minister of Finance is a sufficient stimulus to the private sector to appreciably create jobs in sufficient numbers to reduce unemployment significantly this year?

Hon. Robert K. Andras (Minister of Manpower and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, I certainly hope so.

Mr. Alexander: In view of the indecision of the government in reaching conclusions, in light of the answer just given by the minister, and particularly in view of the indication by the Minister of Finance that some 300,000 jobs will be created, can the minister now advise what the forecast is for unemployment this year?

Mr. Stanfield: Don't all jump up at once.

Mr. Alexander: I know the ministers are not interested in the questions asked by members on this side, but perhaps I could direct the question to the Minister of Finance who I assume has had some discussion with the Minister of Manpower and Immigration. In view of the fact he has indicated that some 300,000 jobs will be created this year and, keeping this in mind, that he must have some forecast concerning what the unemployment figure will be this year, will the minister advise the House just what the figure will be?

Hon. John N. Turner (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, it depends on a lot of assumptions which I should like to go through with the hon. member when we have time to discuss them.

UNEMPLOYMENT INSURANCE

REQUEST FOR ESTIMATE OF AMOUNT OF MONEY REQUIRED FOR GOVERNMENT TO MEET OBLIGATION THIS YEAR

Mr. G. W. Baldwin (Peace River): Mr. Speaker, I am driven to ask this question as a supplementary because of what has been said and because of the fact that the estimates failed to make any mention of the amount required for unemployment insurance benefits if unemployment exceeds 4 per cent. Would the Minister of Manpower and Immigration now remedy this defect and advise the House concerning the government's estimate of the amount that will be required to meet the statutory obligation of the government when unemployment exceeds 4 per cent?

Hon. Robert K. Andras (Minister of Manpower and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, the way the act operates, as the hon. member knows better than many others, is that the government's share will be applicable to unemployment insurance benefit costs in excess of 4 per cent, but that figure will not be known until the end of March in the following year after the calendar year in which they are incurred. That is the time when they become appropriations and appear in the main estimates.

MANPOWER

LOCAL INITIATIVES PROGRAM—CONSULTATION WITH PROVINCES ON CONTINUING OF PROJECTS RUNNING OUT OF FUNDS

Mr. James A. McGrath (St. John's East): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the Minister of Manpower and Immigration a question. In view of the fact that many worth-while and essential services provided by and started under LIP will be without funding as of the end of May, may I ask the minister whether he intends to consult with the provinces to see which of these essential services now carried on under the LIP program can be continued by federal-provincial participation.

Hon. Robert K. Andras (Minister of Manpower and Immigration): That is the intention, Mr. Speaker.

POSSIBILITY OF LEGISLATION TO COMBINE LOCAL INITIATIVES, OPPORTUNITIES FOR YOUTH AND OTHER GRANT PROGRAMS

Mr. Erik Nielsen (Yukon): Mr. Speaker, in view of press reports regarding the local initiatives program, instead of continuing these programs without the benefit of legislation is it the intention of the government to bring in a bill which would have the effect of combining the local initiatives, opportunities for youth, and other grant programs similar thereto?

Hon. Robert K. Andras (Minister of Manpower and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, no such intention has been finally determined but if it is no doubt it will be announced in due course in the House.

LOCAL INITIATIVES PROGRAM—COMPLETE ALLOCATION OF FUNDS—ALLEGED REJECTION OF PROJECTS IN REMOTE AREAS

Mr. S. J. Korchinski (Mackenzie): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary for the minister. Have all the funds appropriated for the local initiatives program been used up? If they have not, why are letters being sent from the office indicating that projects are being rejected for that reason?

Hon. Robert K. Andras (Minister of Manpower and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, with the exception of a very few thousand dollars which are more in the nature of administrative tidy-up, all of the $165 million has been allocated. It has not been used up in the sense that it has been expended but it has been committed to projects, some 5,800, I believe.

Mr. Korchinski: Was all of the appropriation used up by the middle of December, since it appears that some projects, particularly in remote areas of the country, have been rejected because of their remoteness rather than for other reasons?

Mr. Andras: Mr. Speaker, I know of no projects that were rejected on that basis. If the hon. member has some facts I will be delighted to examine them and advise him.

Mr. Speaker: Order. The Chair will recognize the Leader of the Opposition on supplementaries and will then recognize the hon. member for Oshawa-Whitby and return to the supplementaries that hon. members wish to ask on this subject.

[Mr. McGrath.]

Hon. Robert L. Stanfield (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Finance and is supplementary to that posed by the hon. member for Peace River. I should like to ask the Minister of Finance whether he has an estimate of the cash requirements necessary to finance the unemployment insurance advances estimated to be required during the fiscal year ending March 31, 1974? I ask that question, Mr. Speaker, because the minister has given us an estimate of the cash requirements and therefore must have made an estimate of the cash requirement needed to finance unemployment insurance advances.

Hon. John N. Turner (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I will try to put that answer in a form that will satisfy the hon. gentleman. The difficulty is in the switch, in accounting terms, from a commitment on a non-budgetary basis to a budgetary basis over the years, which makes my answer difficult to explain in accounting terms.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Hees: Not difficult but impossible.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Selkirk. I apologize to the hon. member. We will come to him, but at present the Leader of the Opposition rises on a supplementary question.

Mr. Stanfield: Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the Minister of Finance why, when he has given the House an estimate of the cash requirements of the government for the fiscal year of which I spoke, he is unable to give the House his estimate of the cash requirements to finance unemployment insurance advances?

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): In simple terms, the cash requirements of the government will include the unemployment insurance advances.

Some hon. Members: How much?

MANITOBA PROPOSAL TO EXTEND HOSPITAL INSURANCE TO COVER PERSONAL AND NURSING HOME CARE

Mr. Doug Rowland (Selkirk): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the Minister of National Health and Welfare the following question. In view of the announcement in the Manitoba Speech from the Throne that the province will extend hospital insurance to cover the personal care homes and nursing home care, has the minister arranged a formal cost-sharing program with the province of Manitoba, would such a program, if arranged, cover patients other than those requiring extended care, and is consideration being given by the federal government to amending the federal hospital insurance legislation along these lines?

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, I believe the hon. member has misinterpreted the contents of the Speech from the Throne concerning our health program plans. We have suggested to the provinces a new system of financing that would give them complete freedom in allocating health funds; this would obviously enable the provinces to cover the aspects touched on in his question.

We have already submitted this plan to the provinces, and we are awaiting their response. If agreement is reached, there will be nothing to prevent any province, Manitoba included, from covering the expenses in question.

[English]

Mr. Rowland: Mr. Speaker, the minister has misinterpreted my question. I was not addressing myself to the statements with respect to hospital insurance contained in the federal Speech from the Throne but rather to those in the Manitoba Speech from the Throne. Would he address himself to that question? What arrangements have been made for cost-sharing in the Manitoba program?

Mr. Lalonde: I apologize to the hon. member if I misinterpreted his question regarding the specific proposal that is contained in the Manitoba Speech from the Throne. The policy of the federal government is to press for an agreement on the proposals that were put forward to the provinces at the end of February which would give them the necessary flexibility. There is no intention at present to amend the Hospital Insurance and Diagnostic Services Act.

Mr. Rowland: Is the federal government giving consideration to providing compensation to provinces such as Manitoba that decide to provide services on a universal basis and will thus lose the cost-sharing benefits of the Canada Assistance Plan which would apply to programs which are more social assistance oriented? For example, is the federal government considering transferring funds equivalent to those which Manitoba would have received under the Canada Assistance Plan for nursing care and personal care to the amounts paid to Manitoba for hospital care?

[Translation]

Mr. Lalonde: Mr. Speaker, I have had the opportunity to discuss this question with the premier of Manitoba and some of his officials; obviously, the matter is still under examination, but I must stress again that precedence is given to study of the new financing formula, which would apply in all cases the hon. member has mentioned.

MONTREAL—VOLUNTARY WITHDRAWAL FROM WORK BY COMMISSION EMPLOYEES—PAYMENT OF BENEFITS

Mr. Léonel Beaudoin (Richmond): Mr. Speaker, I should like to put a question to the Minister of Manpower and Immigration who is in charge of unemployment insurance.

Is he aware of the fact that yesterday about one hundred employees of the Unemployment Insurance Commission left their jobs voluntarily in Montreal, and if so, does he expect to pay unemployment insurance benefits to those employees?

[English]

Hon. Robert K. Andras (Minister of Manpower and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, the incident has just been brought to my attention and I have asked for a full report.

LOCAL INITIATIVES PROGRAM—AUDITING OF PROJECTS

Mr. A. D. Hales (Wellington): Mr. Speaker, my supplementary to the previous question is also directed to the Minister of Manpower and Immigration and concerns the local initiatives program. I would like to ask him if it is his intention to have all of these LIP programs undergo a government audit and, if so, will it be for the full amount or just for those over a certain amount?

Hon. Robert K. Andras (Minister of Manpower and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, we have a monitoring system for LIP projects. I think that about 10 per cent or 15 per cent of those below $75,000 will be monitored on a prearranged basis, and those in excess of $75,000 will receive attention to a greater degree. Auditing will take place in regard to all of them to one degree or another. We will have to have reports on all of them because we have to account for the funds.

Mr. Hales: May I ask what the minister means by monitoring those under $75,000?

Mr. Andras: The monitoring is to see that the objectives of the particular project applications are being carried out. They will be visited by field staff from the manpower offices. The auditing process is more of an accounting procedure involving examination of the books to determine the disposition of the funds.

Mr. Baldwin: Who audits the monitors?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I will recognize the hon. member for Wellington again but the House has heard a large number of supplementaries on this subject and there are a number of other members who want to ask questions. I will recognize the hon. member for Wellington and the hon. member for Hastings on further supplementaries, and then see the hon. member for Vancouver South.

Mr. Hales: Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask the minister whether or not the accounts are going to be audited from the first dollar up?

Mr. Andras: Mr. Speaker, I will get a precise answer for the hon. member. My understanding is that they will all be audited in the accounting sense but the monitoring will be spot monitoring.

FINANCE

EFFECT OF BUDGET TARIFF CUTS ON JOBS

Mr. J. R. Ellis (Hastings): Mr. Speaker, my question is supplementary to a much earlier question and I direct it to the Minister of Finance. Since the minister has indicated that the prime consideration in his budget is the provision of jobs, and since the removal of tariffs on concentrated juices alone will cost at least 30 jobs in my area, can the minister indicate what he intends to do to compensate for these jobs, as well as to provide new jobs?

Hon. John N. Turner (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, the tariff cuts were made after a thorough review of the repercussions on the Canadian economy and particularly on Canadian jobs. I would be interested to see the case that the hon. member has in mind.

PROPOSED WEST COAST OIL TANKER ROUTE—MEETINGS OF CANADA-UNITED STATES COMMITTEE TO DISCUSS CONTROL—SUBMISSION OF PLAN

Mr. John A. Fraser (Vancouver South): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources. In light of the right hon. Prime Minister's statement on Friday last that a joint United States-Canada committee was established last spring to discuss joint control over the proposed west coast oil tanker route from Alaska, and in view of the right hon. Prime Minister's suggestion that the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources answer questions relating to that committee, can the parliamentary secretary tell the House whether the committee has in fact met and, if so, has the committee submitted any plan for joint control to the respective governments of Canada and the United States?

Hon. Herb Gray (Acting Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, as the acting minister I would be happy to draw this question to the attention of the minister who is unable to be in the House today. With respect to the second part of his question, I have a feeling that this may be something of which the Minister of the Environment may want to take note.

Mr. Fraser: Mr. Speaker, with respect, I do not think the question is a difficult one, and in view of the minister's suggestion I will now put it to the Minister of the Environment. Can he advise the House whether that committee has in fact met and, if so, has the committee submitted any plan for joint control to the governments of Canada and the United States?

Hon. Jack Davis (Minister of the Environment): Mr. Speaker, I met with Mr. Russel Train, who is the presidential adviser on the environment to President Nixon, last fall, and there is to be another meeting shortly. However, it is not a meeting of a committee. It is a meeting between the Minister of the Environment for Canada and the President's adviser on the environment in the United States. I really do not think that this is the committee to which the hon. member is addressing his question.

Mr. Fraser: Mr. Speaker, on Friday last the right hon. Prime Minister indicated that a committee had been set up to study joint control of the Alaska tanker route down the west coast of British Columbia. My question, to any minister or any parliamentary secretary who can answer it, is: has that committee met?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I will attempt to get a reply for the hon. member. My answer was to the effect that I had discussed this with President Nixon and suggested that the International Joint Commission be brought into action to study and monitor that type of thing. I was then informed by somebody in the government—I must say I cannot say who exactly but I will look into that—that there was a preference on the American side not to do it through the IJC but through an ad hoc committee, and it was to that committee I was referring. I will attempt to see to what minister, if not the Minister of the Environment, it reports on its meetings.

Mr. Stanfield: It is a phantom.

PROPOSED WEST COAST OIL TANKER ROUTE—FURTHER PROTESTS BY GOVERNMENT

Mr. Donald W. Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich): Mr. Speaker, my question along the same lines is directed to the Minister of the Environment. In light of the statement by the Prime Minister to the Premier of British Columbia that the federal government has already registered its disapproval of the movement of oil down the British Columbia coast, does the government plan any further protests or any actions of its own on this matter? If not, to take any further action at this time? Perhaps the Minister of the Environment or the Secretary of State for External Affairs might reply.

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I personally, and the government, have registered very strong opposition to the movement of tankers through the narrow waters of the Strait of Juan de Fuca and related waters. We are still very strongly of this view. We continue to reiterate this view in all our contacts with the United States government.

As the Prime Minister indicated in his previous answer, we would have liked the IJC to become involved. The Americans were opposed to this, and it was on that basis that the Ministers of Environment of Canada and the United States have met and will meet again to see whether something can be done to reduce the dangers of any oil spills if the United States, notwithstanding our objections, insists on this route.

Mr. Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich): In light of the fact that the Cherry Point tanker terminal would pose an immense threat to the B.C. coast—I have a most personal interest in this through watching these tankers sail by my window when I am at home—with almost no threat to the United States environment, as a minimum has the government insisted that the United States government choose a terminal site farther down the U.S. coast and, if not, will the government take this position now?

Mr. Sharp: Our preference would be, and this is the point we have made to the United States government, that tankers should not go to Cherry Point. Whether they should go to another point farther down the United States coast is a matter for the United States itself to decide. Our interest is in preventing the pollution of those waters which, as the hon. gentleman said, would have a very deleterious effect on the beautiful environment of British Columbia.

AIR TRANSPORT

INTENTION OF DEFENCE DEPARTMENT RESPECTING RESUMPTION OF SEARCH FOR LOST BEECH AIRCRAFT

Mr. Peter Reilly (Ottawa West): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of National Defence. It bears on the disappearance of an aircraft some two weeks ago, while on a flight between Montreal and Val d'Or, with four persons on board. I have discussed this question in a preliminary fashion with the minister. In view of the fact that additional investigation has shown that 15 people have reported spotting or hearing an aircraft north of the search area, and in view of the fact that the search by search and rescue has been called off at least for the present, will the minister now, in view of this additional information which I understand he has, order the search resumed for these four people?

Hon. James Richardson (Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, last week, when the hon. member was not in the House, I gave a full report on this search. I have said that if there are new clues, new evidence, we would resume the search in full force.

[Later:]

Mr. Reilly: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I asked a question and I wanted to rise on a supplementary. It seems that this privilege is accorded to everybody in this chamber; however, I was passed over—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Reilly: I do not wish to be dilatory—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member can ask a supplementary but I do not think it is proper for him to make the comments he is making now.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member may seek the floor on a supplementary and I am quite prepared to allow him to do this without such preliminary comments. He may ask the supplementary now.

Mr. Reilly: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I asked the Minister of National Defence whether in the light of what I believe to be new information he would now order the resumption of the search and, with great respect, I do not believe he gave an answer. I repeat the question now: Does the minister have the information to which I referred and on the basis of that information will he now order resumption of the search for these four Canadian citizens who at this moment may be starving or freezing to death in the Canadian north?

Mr. Richardson: Mr. Speaker, I said that if we had sufficient evidence of new clues to resume the search we would do so. I have not got information of that kind, but I am certain that if my officers do have that information the search will be already under way.

INVESTIGATION INTO LOSS OF BEECH AIRCRAFT IN NORTHWEST TERRITORIES LAST FALL

Mr. Erik Nielsen (Yukon): I have a supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Last week I asked the Solicitor General and the Minister of Transport questions with respect to the loss of a twin Beech aircraft in the Northwest Territories and the completion of the investigations, in one case by Department of Transport officials and in the other case by the RCMP. I wonder if each minister has an answer now?

Hon. Warren Allmand (Solicitor General): Mr. Speaker, the RCMP investigation has been completed but the inquest has not been completed. The inquest was postponed until next Monday, February 26, and it will be continued at that time in Yellowknife. When the inquest is completed a full report will be made.

• (1140)

Mr. Nielsen: Have the Minister of Transport's officials completed their investigation and, if so, with what results?

Hon. Jean Marchand (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, officials of my department are in contact with the RCMP and officials of the Solicitor General. It is all the same inquiry.

FLOODS

HIGH WATER LEVEL IN LAKE HURON—SUGGESTED USE OF ARMED FORCES PERSONNEL TO INVESTIGATE SHORE EROSION AND ASSIST IN CONSTRUCTION OF PROTECTIVE DEVICES

Mr. Jack Cullen (Sarnia-Lambton): Mr. Speaker, my question to the Minister of the Environment is supplementary to a question asked yesterday by the hon. member for Toronto-Lakeshore. Will the minister discuss with the Minister of National Defence the possibility of determining if Canadian forces personnel, primarily engineers, might be used to investigate shore erosion on Lake Huron, as opposed to flooding on Lakes Erie and Ontario, which is caused by the high water levels with a view to making recommendations about how the shoreline might be preserved and also whether assistance might be given to land owners by the Department of National Defence in the form of constructing groynes and other protective devices?

Hon. Jack Davis (Minister of the Environment): Mr. Speaker, I am certain that our engineers will be happy to work with officials of the Department of National Defence and the staff of the Department of Public Works in this connection.

HIGH WATER LEVELS IN GREAT LAKES—FINANCIAL ASSISTANCE FOR MEASURES TO PREVENT DAMAGE BEFORE IT OCCURS

Mr. Norman A. Cafik (Ontario): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question for the Minister of the Environment. We all understand that there are arrangements with the provinces to look after flood damage when it has happened, but would the minister take into account any representations that may be made by the province for funds from the federal government for preventive measures to be taken before flood damage occurs, thus reducing public expenditure?

Hon. Jack Davis (Minister of the Environment): Yes, definitely, Mr. Speaker. There are programs of that kind already in operation in a number of provinces and we would welcome discussions with the government of Ontario.

Mr. Cafik: If these programs exist with other provinces, can the minister indicate what the formula is for cost-sharing in respect of such preventive measures?

Mr. Davis: Mr. Speaker, the formulas have varied from place to place. They depend on the extent of federal responsibility in the area and the extent of provincial and local responsibility.

Mr. Speaker: I suggest, with respect, to hon. members that we should limit the number of supplementaries at this point and not allow too many subjects to become debate rather than simple questions.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

PROPOSED FLOODING OF SKAGIT RIVER VALLEY—UNITED STATES RESPONSE TO REQUEST FOR DISCUSSION—REQUEST FOR TABLING OF NOTE

Mr. Mark Rose (Fraser Valley West): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Secretary of State for External Affairs and deals with flooding in a different context. On February 6 the minister told us that the government of Canada had written to the government of the United States requesting discussions regarding the proposed flooding of the Skagit Valley by Seattle City Light. Has he received an answer and, if so, what was the nature of the reply?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Secretary of State for External Affairs): No, Mr. Speaker. We sent a message requesting such discussions to the American authorities on January 9 but we have not yet had a reply.

Mr. Rose: If I may be permitted a supplementary, Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the minister whether the government's note to the United States requesting these discussions included an explicit statement to the United States that the government of British Columbia has decided not to allow the flooding to proceed? Would he also be kind enough to table the note to the United States?

Mr. Sharp: Mr. Speaker, it is not customary to reveal such notes unless with the agreement of the other government, but I would ask the hon. member whether it is true that the British Columbia government has made a definite decision that it will not permit the flooding?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I hope that the minister is not now suggesting that we should get into a practice whereby ministers will ask questions of members opposite.

An hon. Member: They sure need to.

Mr. Lawrence: They would get better answers.

Mr. Rose: Mr. Speaker, it is my understanding that the government of British Columbia has advised the minister informally that it has decided not to proceed with this agreement. May I repeat my question? Did the minister's letter to the United States government contain explicit information on this point, that the British Columbia government had decided not to proceed? We have heard from the Minister of the Environment. He said in the House that he had—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member has asked the question. He should not now make a speech.

Mr. Sharp: Mr. Speaker, I do not have the note with me to enable me to answer the question directly but I shall take notice of it. However, I agree with the Minister of the Environment that the flooding of the Skagit Valley is a dead issue.

INCOME TAX

PROPOSED ACCELERATED DEPRECIATION ALLOWANCES FOR CORPORATIONS—METHOD OF IMPLEMENTATION

Mr. G. W. Baldwin (Peace River): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Finance. In light of statements made on television by his honourable friend from York South last night, will the minister give an undertaking to the House that his proposals with regard to fast write-offs for corporations will be only brought in by legislation or, if by order in council, they will have attached an affirmative resolution under Section 28 of the Statutory Regulations Act so that the House can give assent before they become law?

An hon. Member: Or otherwise.

Hon. John N. Turner (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I am glad to have the hon. member's point of view.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

An hon. Member: David, give him permission.

Mr. Baldwin: I have a supplementary question for the Prime Minister. When the hon. member for York South intimated last night that it would be adequate to have discussion after the event, was he stating official coalition government policy?

IMPACT ON FARM INCOME OF TARIFF REDUCTIONS

Mr. Doug Neil (Moose Jaw): Mr. Speaker, my question is addressed to the Minister of Agriculture and arises out of a remark he made in his speech last night when he indicated that the temporary reduction in tariffs on agricultural products would have little significant impact on farm prices. In answer to a question from the hon. member for Carleton-Charlotte on Thursday last he indicated that he was in the throes of estimating the effect on agricultural income. Would the minister undertake to table his findings on the impact on farm income of the reduction in tariffs?

Hon. E. F. Whelan (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, I shall shortly be appearing before the agricultural committee on the estimates and at that time I will be glad to do this. Our findings are not complete, but if it is the wish of the House to have this type of information may I say I have already promised to give it to many hon. members anyway.

TRADE

REPRESENTATIONS TO ARGENTINA TO LIFT BAN ON EXPORT OF HIDES

Mr. William C. Frank (Middlesex): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce. As the government is concerned about prices in this country, can the minister tell the House if the government has been in contact with the government of Argentina concerning the possibility of lifting that country's embargo on export of hides which is having serious implications on the cost of footwear in Canada?

Hon. Alastair Gillespie (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): Mr. Speaker, I shall be pleased to make inquiries and convey the information to the hon. member.

ACTION TO CREATE NEW AND EXPAND PRESENT MARKETS FOR DAIRY PRODUCTS

Mr. John Wise (Elgin): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce. Can the minister assure the House and the dairy farmers of Canada that he and his department are doing everything possible to create new and expand present export markets for dairy products?

• (1150)

Hon. Alastair Gillespie (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): Mr. Speaker, we, of course, as a matter of policy are always trying to expand markets for all types of Canadian products. In this connection, I think the House will be pleased to know that, of a requirement for some 25 million pounds of milk powder, 19 million pounds were sold by Canada to the United States recently.

REPRESENTATIONS AGAINST REDUCTION OF TARIFFS ON AGRICULTURAL PRODUCTS

Mr. G. H. Whittaker (Okanagan Boundary): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a supplementary question to the Minister of Finance. The minister has said that the does not want to hurt Canadian agriculture. Did he take into account the fact that the Canadian Horticultural Council and the Canadian Federation of Agriculture have been requesting the government not to make any further reductions in tariffs on agricultural products?

Hon. John N. Turner (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, with a colleague like I have there is no way I would be able to hurt agriculture, not with the present Minister of Agriculture.

FINANCE

TAX REDUCTIONS ON CHILDREN'S CLOTHING AND CERTAIN FOODSTUFFS—MONITORING OF PRICES TO ENSURE THAT CONSUMERS GET SAVINGS

Mr. Cyril Symes (Sault Ste. Marie): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Finance. In view of the fact the budget has cut federal taxes on children's clothing and certain foodstuffs, is it the minister's intention to monitor the prices of these items to ensure that the savings are indeed passed on to the consumers?

Hon. John N. Turner (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, we will be watching these items. The initial reaction has been very encouraging right across the country.

Mr. Symes: Can the minister tell the House what action the government will take with firms that do not comply by lowering prices?

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): Mr. Speaker, if firms do not lower prices when other firms do they will just lose the business.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Oral Questions

POST OFFICE

PUBLICITY PROMOTING NEW POSTAL CODE

Hon. W. G. Dinsdale (Brandon-Souris): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Postmaster General. It arises from the publicity promoting the new postal code, using enlightening messages such as "Keep two pairs of plus fours". In view of this profligate expenditure of public funds, will the Postmaster General inform the House what sensible ideas he has to make the code more acceptable to the Canadian public?

[Translation]

Hon. André Ouellet (Postmaster General): Mr. Speaker, I must say that the introduction of the postal code is progressing as expected, according to a timetable that was established a year ago. The comments we have received are, contrary to what the hon. member says, very favourable and I hope all Canadians who wish to benefit from a more adequate postal service can use this code to great advantage.

[English]

Mr. Dinsdale: Can the Postmaster General assure the House that the expenditure of over half a million dollars indicated in a return that was tabled the other day will not be expanded, because I think that one of the most important responsibilities of a member is to scrutinize carefully unusual waste of public funds?

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

[Translation]

Mr. Ouellet: Mr. Speaker, the increase in the department's expenditures is largely attributable to salary increases and to the improvement of postal services in the different post offices across the country.

[English]

NEW POSTAL CODE—PROVISION OF PRINTED STICKERS TO PUBLIC

Mr. Dan McKenzie (Winnipeg South Centre): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question to the Postmaster General. In view of the growing deficit in the Post Office and the reluctance of the Canadian public to use the new complex postal code, is the government planning to provide preprinted code stickers to the public?

[Translation]

Hon. André Ouellet (Postmaster General): Mr. Speaker, on the contrary the deficit has decreased over the past two years.

Mr. Speaker: I apologize to the hon. member for Richmond. I think that he wanted to ask a supplementary and I therefore recognize him.

[English]

[Later:]

Mr. McKenzie: Mr. Speaker, I did not receive an answer to my question to the Postmaster General. I will address it to him again. Is the government planning to provide printed code stickers to the public in order to make the operation work?

[Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton).]

Mr. Ouellet: Mr. Speaker, I will find out what can be done following the hon. member's representations.

MEASURES TO COMBAT SHORTAGE OF VETERINARIANS—REPRESENTATIONS TO ENLARGE FACILITIES OF ST. HYACINTHE SCHOOL

Mr. Léonel Beaudoin (Richmond): Mr. Speaker, I would like to put a question to the Minister of Agriculture.

In view of the fact that the minister told the House, on Wednesday last, that because of the shortage of veterinarians in Canada, he felt it necessary to send a recruiting team to Europe, could he tell us whether, through his department, he offered to co-operate with the Quebec government with a view to expanding the veterinary school in St. Hyacinthe to train more veterinarians?

[English]

Hon. E. F. Whelan (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker this has been under consideration for some time with all the veterinary schools. A paper is being prepared. I hope to be able to submit it to the government shortly.

Mr. Beaudoin: Mr. Speaker, I should like to put a question to the Minister of Agriculture.

Can he tell us whether representations have been made last year or two years ago to enlarge the veterinary school in St. Hyacinthe with federal funds?

[English]

Mr. Whelan: Mr. Speaker, representations were made by the province of Quebec concerning this veterinary college at St. Hyacinthe, the same as they have been by practically every other school in Canada that teaches this subject.

MEANING OF BUDGET PROVISIONS RESPECTING SALE, PURCHASE AND HOLDING OF MILK MARKETING QUOTAS

Mr. Bill Jarvis (Perth-Wilmot): Mr. Speaker, some members on this side were accused by the Minister of Finance on Tuesday of not understanding his department's system. I hasten to plead guilty to this charge and I ask the Minister of Agriculture if he will give now, or undertake to do so forthwith, a clear, definitive and explanatory statement, preferably in "Whelanese" which I do understand, as to the precise meaning of the provisions in Monday's budget regarding the taxation and/or depreciation involved in the sale, purchase and holding of milk marketing quotas?

Hon. E. F. Whelan (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, I can send the hon. member a complete document about this. In short, it means that under the present law proceeds from the sale of quota rights are all treated as income. The budget now proposes that any recovery of original cost will not be taxed.

EFFECT OF TARIFF REDUCTIONS ON ESTABLISHMENT OF SUGAR BEET INDUSTRY IN SOUTHWESTERN ONTARIO

Mr. R. E. McKinley (Huron): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Agriculture. In his speech last night the minister assured us that he had received cabinet approval to use the stabilization act to give assistance to the sugarbeet growers in Canada should it be necessary because of the tariff reductions. Can the minister advise whether the tariff reductions will wipe out any chance of a sugarbeet industry in southwestern Ontario, or does he have cabinet approval for assistance to establish such an industry?

Hon. E. F. Whelan (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, as far as I am concerned it does not wipe out the opportunity of establishing a sugarbeet industry in southwestern Ontario.

Mr. McKinley: Mr. Speaker, it looks very much like the Minister of Agriculture has been scuttled by the cabinet the same as the former minister.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

INCOME TAX

REQUEST FOR RE-ESTABLISHMENT OF OFFICE IN BRANTFORD

Mr. Derek Blackburn (Brant): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct my question to the Minister of National Revenue. Because income tax forms are much more complicated this year than last, will the minister re-establish a tax office with tax counsellors in the city of Brantford, a city of 61,000 people, instead of forcing taxpayers with tax problems to go either to private tax consultants or telephone Hamilton?

Hon. Robert Stanbury (Minister of National Revenue): Mr. Speaker, I can look into the hon. member's representation. However, I read in the London Free Press a few days ago that "the new income tax form is a breeze".

Mr. Blackburn: A supplementary question.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I suggest to the hon. member for Brant and other hon. members that a question of this type should normally be placed on the order paper or discussed at the time of adjournment. We are coming close to calling orders of the day. I believe there are a few supplementaries being sought.

NATIONAL PARKS

AVAILABILITY OF RESIDENTIAL LOTS IN JASPER, BANFF AND WATERTON PARKS

Mr. Joe Clark (Rocky Mountain): Mr. Speaker, my question is addressed to the Minister of State for Urban Affairs. In view of his statement in parliament that "it is the fundamental right of Canadians, regardless of where they live, to enjoy adequate shelter at reasonable cost", may I ask whether this principle will be applied to residents in Canada's national parks?

Hon. Ron Basford (Minister of State for Urban Affairs): Responsibility for national parks belongs to my colleague, the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development, and I suggest the question ought to be addressed to him. He is responsible for housing there.

Mr. Clark (Rocky Mountain): Inasmuch as that minister is conveniently absent today, may I direct the question to his parliamentary secretary and ask that he not only answer that question within the next week but that he also indicate within the next week when and how many residential lots will be made available in Jasper, Banff and Waterton Park townsites?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. That question ought to be placed on the order paper. I see that a number of hon. members are seeking the floor to ask supplementaries, but there is important business to transact and perhaps they will not mind waiting until Monday to ask their questions. Orders of the day.

Mr. Hales: I rise on a point of order, Mr. Speaker, having to do with the responsibilities of the Secretary of State. On February 16 he tabled his annual report for the year ended March 31, 1972, according to Votes and Proceedings, at page 124. Since it is customary for these reports to be distributed to all Members of Parliament, I should like to bring to his attention the fact that the report has not been distributed to members or to senators.

I might add that I have checked with the distribution office and learned that the reports have not arrived there. Neither has the distribution office received the annual reports for the year 1971. I bring this to the attention not only of the Secretary of State but of all ministers because it is most essential at this point that annual reports be made available to hon. members. The estimates have now been tabled and will be referred to committees, and these reports are necessary if there is to be effective discussion of estimates in the committees.

Mr. Faulkner: Perhaps I might respond briefly to that point of order. If the facts are as the hon. member says they are, and I have no reason to disbelieve him, his complaint is legitimate and I will take steps to correct it.

Mr. Lalonde: Mr. Speaker, the other day the hon. member for High Park-Humber Valley called attention to the delay in submitting the report on amateur sport and physical fitness. May I say on a point of order, Mr. Speaker, that I regret that the hon. member was correct. The report was delayed in translation. I have given instructions that this work be given top priority and I expect to be able to table it in the next few days.

THE ROYAL ASSENT

Mr. Speaker: I have the honour to inform the House that I have received the following communication:

Government House,
23 February, 1973

I have the honour to inform you that the Honourable Wishart F. Spence, O.B.E., Puisne Judge of the Supreme Court of Canada, in his capacity as Deputy Governor General, will proceed to the Senate Chamber today, the 23rd of February, 1973, at 12.45 p.m. for the purpose of giving Royal Assent to a Bill.

I have the honour to be,
Sir,
Your obedient servant,
André Garneau
Brigadier General
Administrative Secretary to the Governor General

Mr. Baldwin: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker. I should like to file a caveat following what I said last session with regard to this question of Royal Assent. I bring it up now, reserving the right to speak on it later. I do not propose to take up the time of the House by dealing with it further at this point.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

FINANCIAL STATEMENT OF THE MINISTER OF FINANCE

The House resumed, from Thursday, February 22, consideration of the motion of Hon. John N. Turner (Minister of Finance) that this House approves in general the budgetary policy of the government, and the amendment of Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West) (p. 1526).

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): I rise on a point of order, Mr. Speaker. I trust the Leader of the Opposition will give me a few moments for it.

My point of order relates to the fact that almost always when the Minister of Finance makes his annual budget presentation he tables, two or three days earlier, a document known as budget papers. These budget papers are then attached to Hansard on the day of the speech, also to Votes and Proceedings on a day somewhere in that same week. But thus far, although the budget was presented on Monday, there has been no such tabling of budget papers. I am wondering whether at some time, soon, the Minister of Finance will table such a document so that it can be part of the record.

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): Perhaps I might speak briefly to that point of order. Last year we began publication of the Economic Review on an annual basis in April prior to the budget introduced on May 8. I said at that time it would continue to be an annual review, presented separately from the budget. The Economic Review will again be presented in April this year.

As to the so-called budget papers, the difficulty this year is that the budget was brought down earlier than usual. The budget papers cannot be assembled until after the close of the fiscal year, March 31. Those papers will be assembled as quickly as possible and be presented to the House.

Hon. Robert L. Stanfield (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I must begin by apologizing for my voice which may not be as crystal clear as it usually is. I trust, however, that hon. members will nevertheless be able to understand me.

I want to say, too, at the outset, that I understand the somewhat unique position of the Minister of Finance with respect to the budget he presented to the House on Monday night. After all, in order to keep himself and his friends in power he did not have to satisfy the country; he did not need to meet the critical demands of the country or to attack the problems of inflation and unemployment. All he had to do was to please hon. members in the New Democratic Party—something he has obviously succeeded in doing. But I must say to him he could have done so even if he had come here last Monday and promised to increase the old age pension just by a nickel or a dime.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Stanfield: Now that the minister knows how easy it is to placate his allies, I wish it were possible for him to go back to the drawing board and begin again to draw up a budget designed to achieve some degree of order in the economy of Canada, to create some buoyancy and strength to remedy the brutally high rate of unemployment which exists in this country. Those who sit to my left say, as an excuse for their support of this budget, that it proves how potent their position is and how their bargaining power can be used. Well, if this budget is an example of the potency of their bargaining power, they have as much influence as a eunuch in a harem.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Stanfield: The leader of the New Democratic Party says the government has been humbled. Even if this were true, I would say this to him, as I would say to the Canadian people: What this country needs is not necessarily a humbled government but an effective government, an honest government, a government that can be trusted. How can you trust a government that within the short space of a few months has accepted so much of what it previously rejected, and in turn has rejected so much of what just a few months ago it so readily accepted? Confidence and trust are one of the basic questions that we have to face in considering this budget.

I do not object for a moment to the government's borrowing ideas and suggestions from other parties, including my own; that is perfectly proper. Provided the ideas are sound and helpful to the country, this is acceptable. But what is not acceptable and what will not be accepted by the Canadian people is for the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) and the Minister of Finance (Mr. Turner) now to seek approval in the House for policies that they condemned categorically, and in the strongest possible terms, only a few months ago.

Last May in the course of the budget debate I proposed an adjuster to the income tax system to compensate for inflation. For some reason or other best known to himself, the Minister of Finance immediately high-tailed down to my own home town of Truro and there said the following about my proposal: "It would be unique in all the world. The scheme would add immense complexities to the income tax system and the individual taxpayer would face continued uncertainty". He went on to say: "Federal-provincial fiscal arrangements would become chaotic," and that my proposal would "steadily undermine the ability of the federal government to meet the growing demands upon it to provide new and expanded services to Canadians".

On Monday, the same Minister of Finance stood up in this House and said with respect to the same suggestion, as reported at page 1435 of Hansard:

> I suggest that this new system will be recognized everywhere as a bold and sensitive response to a rather fundamental tax problem. With the introduction of this change, Canada will join a very select group of countries which have eliminated the hidden revenues accruing to governments through the effect of inflation on a progressive tax system.

I would be very happy to use my good offices to arrange a return engagement in Truro for my hon. friend the minister if he wishes to go down there and explain his change of position.

What has happened in the meantime, Mr. Speaker? Did the minister believe what he said in Truro?

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. Stanfield: Did he believe what he said in the House Monday night?

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. Stanfield: Does the minister believe anything on this subject?

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. Stanfield: Prior to and during the election campaign I proposed tax cuts, including income tax cuts, to help reduce the effects of inflation and to stimulate the economy. I also proposed an increase in old age pensions which, with the formula I was using, would have produced substantially the same results that the minister proposed on Monday night in this House—about $100 a month. I was attacked by the Prime Minister and particularly by the Minister of Finance in the most emphatic language.

This is what the minister said on October 19 in Calgary.

Mr. Woolliams: My riding.

Mr. Stanfield: He said: "I suggest to you that the promise to sharply reduce taxes, while at the same time substantially increasing federal spending, is not only evidence of political bankruptcy, but it is a prescription for putting Canada in bankruptcy as well". Yet on Monday night this same discredited Minister of Finance stood up in this House and introduced tax cuts which he said are equal to a tax cut across the board of 12 to 13 per cent. He also supported increases in expenditures amounting to approximately 16 per cent.

What happened between October and February? How is it that a proposal that was a prescription for bankruptcy in October becomes highly meritorious in February? Did the minister believe what he said in Calgary in October?

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. Stanfield: Did he believe what he put forward here on Monday night?

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. Stanfield: Is there anything in which the Minister of Finance and the Prime Minister of this country really believe?

Some hon. Members: Power.

Mr. Stanfield: They cannot even put forward in an honest way what it is they are proposing. They are incapable of putting things forward in a straightforward way, even when they are doing something that in many respects is very commendable.

In May last the Minister of Finance forgot to mention to the House that income tax rates would go up by 3 per cent on January 1. Let me tell him that I was prepared to regard that as an oversight, although I do not know that a minister of finance should overlook things like that. But on Monday night he presented as a 5 per cent tax cut what is really a 2 per cent tax cut with a floor of $100. So even when the minister puts forward something that, in itself, is quite decent, he seems to be incapable of putting it forward in a straightforward, honest manner. How can one have any confidence in this government?

In approaching the budget we must deal with it as a whole package, a package that has been loudly acclaimed by hon. members opposite and by what I think we can refer to as the rump to my left. It seems to me fundamental that this country would anticipate a budget which would have withstood the test of three crucial examinations. First, what the budget would do to reduce unemployment, which most members of this House agree has achieved a level that is a national shame and disgrace. We on this side of the House, as well as the people of Canada will wait to hear from the supporters of this budget—and I include all its supporters—the documentary evidence behind these proposals that gives the assurance that this budget will matter a tinker's damn in relieving the national scandal of unemployment.

The second test of this budget is the measure of the government's resolve to do something effective about inflation. Again, the members of this House will wait to hear from those who support the budget. Perhaps they will tell us whether there really is a morsel of comfort or relief on the horizon resulting from the budget with regard to the continually rising cost of the necessities of life in Canada.

The third test of this budget concerns the future of our country and its mastery over its own affairs, its economy and the development of its own resources. In this budget there is not one morsel of new initiative or crumb of encouragement with regard to this very vital matter. I had been led to believe that this was a serious consideration with many members of this House. So this budget was not designed to remove unemployment, nor to contain inflation, nor to strengthen Canadian economic independence. This budget is not an expansionary budget, much less a visionary one. Those who support this budget, Sir, are doomed to live with it because the time will come, sooner or later, when those who support it today will have to explain tomorrow why unemployment is still a lingering curse in this country.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Stanfield: They will have to explain why inflation is still devouring the savings, pensions and budgets of those who live on modest incomes. Those who support this budget will have to explain, as they proclaim their concern for Canadian economic independence, how it was they voted for this budget without a whimper of protest or even a whine of concern.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Hees: You better get the convention on soon, John.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Stanfield: We have in this budget unilateral, and I emphasize that, unilateral tariff reductions concerning manufacturing in this country. Also we have a program by which any company may establish its own investment program and, provided the investments are unrelated to the company's enterprise, it may qualify for the minimum corporate tax rate.

All this, Sir, is proffered without any consideration being given to the sensible requirements that investment should be in Canadian equities and in the Canadian economy. It is astonishing that throughout this broad range of proposed policy there is not even a wink, a blink or a nod to the need to stimulate investment in Canada.

I am not condemning the minister's lack of concern in this matter, I can only pity it, but I do condemn the sorry silence of some in this House who have spent hours of rhetoric on the issue and who are now silent and satisfied with a policy which will increase the difficulties of Canadian industry and Canadian workers; a policy which provides a quid to other countries without a reciprocal quo to us; a policy which fails to seek any commensurate advantage at a time when we are presumably co-operating with the U.S. about trading relations.

One must ask what sort of policy this is for Canada. We must ask if it is the policy of the government and of its supporters to sell more refrigerators, for example, or whether it is the policy of the government to create—

Mr. Guay (St. Boniface): No, underwear.

Mr. Stanfield: No, it is the policy of the government to steal my underwear, Mr. Speaker.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Hees: Any more cracks, Joe?

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

An hon. Member: Try another question, Joe. You are a great help, keep going.

Mr. Stanfield: Mr. Speaker, I appreciate the enthusiasm of my colleagues but I have limited time and much to say. Is it the policy of the government and its supporters to sell more refrigerators, for example, or is it the policy of the government to create more jobs in Canada? Is it the policy of the government to stimulate demand or is it the policy of the government to stimulate more demand for imports? I remember a minister saying last May that there was no use creating more consumer demand in this country because it was all being spent on imports. Now, it seems this government has turned it around again and is encouraging this process.

I had hoped the minister would have done something for Canadian business and for Canadian workers. Instead, with deliberation and determination, he has done something against Canadian business and Canadian employees. We had hoped the budget might have contained more incentive programs for small business, but there is nothing but a vague kind of promise from the minister in that regard. We know that the minister has already pronounced himself as opposed to the incentives that I had proposed, but I am comforted by the fact that he has changed his mind before and he may do so again.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Stanfield: The government must realize how vital small business is to the economy of our country. It must realize the difficulties of small business in Canada today, even if it only takes the trouble to read its own statistics on the number of business failures, particularly small business.

I cannot emphasize too strongly the fact that this budget falls far short of the nation's need for a new era of expansion and productivity. True, the government at long last has given in to the need for increased basic old age pensions. At long last the family farm has been partially rescued from confiscation by taxation, temporarily at least. At long last the government has given in to the realistic need for reduced personal income taxes, although in spite of the reductions the minister has proposed he is still going to collect 15 per cent more tax in the form of personal income tax than he collected during 1972. That shows what was really meant by tax reform when this government put it forward.

The government has even adopted our proposal to make some equitable adjustment in respect of inflation, an adjustment which for a change will favour the taxpayer.

One does not have to be in this House very long before realizing that these have been grudging government concessions to commonsense and reason as well as a confession of the government's own bankruptcy of policy. Perhaps the only proposal in the budget which originates from the front benches opposite is the move to restore the 10-cent candy bar.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Stanfield: What the country needed and had a right to expect was a budget that would signal an end to this long period of economic confusion and stagnation in which unemployment and inflation have been the constant preoccupation of the nation's concerns.

I can only conclude from reading the budget that the government intends to go along with present conditions in the hope that it will survive long enough and hold office long enough for something to turn up. In that spirit, or lack of it, the country will continue to mark time. A half a million or more Canadians will remain idle and the opportunities for growth and development will pass as the days pass, unrealized and unfulfilled. The government is in a posture of fixed inertia with regard to inflation. A few months ago the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) admitted that he was puzzled by some of the economic phenomena in the country. Then he was puzzled; now, he seems to be paralyzed.

If inflation was a matter of prime concern to the government four years ago, why is there no decisive action proposed in respect of it? The answer is plain. The answer is that the government of Canada does not choose to fight inflation, it has chosen rather to live with it. I suspect the same is true with regard to unemployment. There is nothing in this budget to summon this country to confront and overcome the lingering national disgrace of over half a million idle Canadians looking for work. All we have is a modest, round figure of 300,000 new jobs, a figure hastily summoned from the imagination of the minister and almost immediately forgotten. We are talking about a fundamental matter of credibility. This government has lost its credibility in a way that is beyond recovery. If this budget had to be categorized in a library, the only appropriate section to put it in would be fiction.

Mr. Stanfield: It is fiction for the Minister of Finance to say that this is an expansionary budget that will generate the jobs needed to substantially cut into unemployment. He talks about the amount of cash required and yet he cannot tell this House how much cash will be required to meet the responsibilities in respect of unemployment insurance. It is fiction for the minister to talk about contingency plans to deal with some level of inflation that never gets defined. It is fiction for the minister to talk about disciplining the expansion of government. He expects Canadians to believe that he intends to cut the fat. But where is the evidence of his sincerity on that matter? There is none. He has given no effective demonstration to the people of this country that would give them any more reason to trust him than they had to trust his predecessor.

The minister surely must recognize that he, too, now has a record of wrong forecasts, inadequate measures and unimpressive results. And he has, in his short time in that office now, also established some kind of record for incredible switching of position. I am not talking about a switch of ministerial position but rather a switch of position taken by the minister. He has made his own fine words in the budget presentation worthless in themselves. In his budget the minister perpetuates a dismal record. The only obvious and undisputed expansion he will achieve will be a further expansion of the credibility gap he has created.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Stanfield: Since the government embarked on its disastrous slowdown policy in 1969, I have been saying that the trade-off approach to unemployment and inflation was unacceptable in today's society. It is almost beyond belief that the government would have applied this harmful policy on the basis of a wrong diagnosis of the kind of inflation that was upon us. But that is exactly what happened and that is what the people of this country are still paying for in terms of lost economic potential that can never be recovered, in terms of lost opportunity, in terms of disorder in prices, in terms of human misery, in terms of lost confidence and for so many Canadians, lost hope.

In rejecting the trade-off approach, I have consistently said that the emphasis must be put on adequately stimulating the economy to deal with unemployment. I have consistently said that inflation must be dealt with by means other than slowdown, and I have said that in the event of a serious and widespread inflation psychology developing in the country there would be no alternative but to deal with it through the introduction of a program of temporary price and income controls. The key to determining when such a point of seriousness has been reached has always, in my judgment, been a matter of assessing the state of any expectation spiral among Canadians, because it is this expectation spiral that determines the course of the wage-price spiral.

What it all boils down to is this. In assessing the appropriate time to introduce such a program as we would have brought before parliament, it is not simply the level of prices or price increases that is the fundamental consideration. What must be assessed is the level of inflationary expectations in people's minds, and a major influence on those expectations is the level of trust that people are capable of extending—trust that their government is dealing with them openly and trust that their government is going in a direction that will produce results. The budget presented by the Minister of Finance on Monday evening conveys no sense of direction. It is a politically motivated grab-bag and will be viewed as such. In assessing the state of mind in the country now with regard to inflationary expectations, it is helpful to read the views expressed by editorialists and commentators concerning how rapidly inflation will erode any benefit which may have been conferred by way of tax reduction.

Our assessment of the mood of expectation in the country leads us to the conviction that what is needed in a budget approach at this time, and what we would have put before parliament, is the package that was outlined yesterday by my colleague, the hon. member for Don Valley (Mr. Gillies).

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Stanfield: The package is comprised of two significant thrusts, and I cannot emphasize too strongly that we are talking about these two thrusts operating simultaneously as a unit. We would not have put them forward in such a way that either one of them could have been considered as optional. They are not in any way independent or separable. We would have introduced them in budget form as a package to operate simultaneously to respond to the two simultaneous problems facing Canadians at this time—persistent high levels of unemployment and price escalations that have reached serious proportions in terms of generating an over-all inflation psychology. We believe it is time, indeed long past time, for strong action against unemployment. The thrust which we would have presented to attack unemployment would have been unquestionably more effective than the ad hoc measures which were presented in the budget of the Minister of Finance. The plan to promote Canadian investment in Canadian small business—the plan which I put forward during the election campaign—would have been a fundamental part of this package.

Other expansionary measures which were outlined yesterday by the hon. member for Don Valley would have added to the job thrust so that parliament could have dealt with a budget truly expansionary in a dollar sense, and, more important, truly expansionary in terms of actions and programs specifically designed to directly stimulate creation of the number of jobs required to reduce unemployment quickly and substantially in our country.

Mr. Stanfield: No one can question the need to fight unemployment. We believe it is also time for strong action against inflation because we believe that expectation levels are seriously high and, on the other hand, the credibility and trust appraisals of this government are seriously low. We believe that such action must be effectively combined with strong action to stimulate job creation. We believe that Canadians would accept and support such a two-thrust budget package at this time. We believe that Canadians would endure the discomfort and inconvenience of a freeze and temporary controls program if they felt that dramatic results could be achieved in reducing unemployment as well as in restoring order to the price side of the economy. In the package we would have presented, the time span involved would have been in the order of 18 months to two years with goals ' pelled out in relation to unemployment and inflation. If we had received approval of our package in this House the nation would have the benefit of a well-defined game plan based upon generating opportunity and restoring order in a decisive way, a way which we still believe should be the Canadian way.

But the fact is that in this budget there is no program of national development, no new initiative or fresh inspiration, no delineation of priorities for government action in the seventies, no objectives for the nation to strive towards, no goals to seek and no national purpose to achieve. This is a government not only bankrupt in policy but bereft of leadership. The government and this budget have this in common: both are timid, both lack the courage of conviction and the strength to persevere. There are those in the House who have obviously persuaded themselves that this budget will effect substantial improvements in the Canadian economy and in the lives of the Canadian people. We in this party are not among them. We are convinced that this budget is grossly inadequate, and because of that belief and because we think the government is completely untrustworthy and we have no confidence at all in their statements as to what they are going to do, what they are for or against—we do not know that they believe in anything—because of the gross inadequacy of the budget, we propose to vote against it and to vote against the authors of that budget.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Stanfield: After all, we have our own judgment which has been vindicated by events in the recent past, especially with regard to the economic policy. Those who now support the government, will of course do so because they believe that within the lifetime of the effective application of this budget the Canadian economy will respond and be immeasurably improved. We do not believe that, Sir, and as the events unfold, we should be able to see quite clearly who has been right and who has been wrong.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. David Lewis (York South): Mr. Speaker, in the few minutes I have before we are called to the other place may I say, first, that I listened to the hon. member for Edmonton West (Mr. Lambert) on Wednesday who spoke as one financial critic for the Conservative party. Unfortunately, I could not listen to the hon. member for Don Valley (Mr. Gillies) yesterday but I read his speech this morning. I find I have a difficulty, sir, which I had hoped the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Stanfield) would clear up for me. My difficulty is to know which of those two gentlemen was speaking for the Conservative party.

Some hon. Members: Both.

Mr. Lewis: If the suggestion of the hon. members to my right was that they were both speaking for the party, may I suggest to them that there was absolutely no relationship between the reactionary nonsense which the hon. member for Edmonton West spoke on Wednesday and the almost sensible suggestions which the hon. member for Don Valley made yesterday. I mention that at the start, Mr. Speaker, because the Leader of the Opposition was eloquent today in his condemnation of everybody concerned, and emphasized in particular the fact that the government opposite was not to be trusted. I agree with him entirely.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Lewis: I have not changed my mind about the performance of this government since 1968 one bit, and I have not seen, in the presentation of the Minister of Finance (Mr. Turner), any indication that there are problems with which they should deal in a much larger way. I agree with the Leader of the Opposition—

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Lewis: —but I say that to ask the House and the people of Canada to have confidence in this outdated party to my right is an act of extreme presumption and arrogance that I do not intend to fall for.

If you want an indication of the kind of modern thinking of which even the hon. member for Don Valley is capable, let me remind hon. members that the great example he gave to the House, the great example which he quoted in support of acceptance of his policies, was that of the policies of the United States and of the Republican President Nixon, despite the failure of that country to deal with poverty, with racial equality or with anything else that has to do with human welfare and human decency. The hon. member for Don Valley says that if the United States could do it, then we should be able to do it in this country. This is an indication of the kind of thinking in which he indulges. If this party had had an alternative government to the one that is across the aisle, one that could be trusted to act in the interests of the Canadian people, it would not have taken us one day—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Lawrence: You are not being cheered from behind, you know that. Even they don't believe you.

Mr. Lewis: I expected these catcalls from the Conservatives because I have learned over the years that catcalls is their major weapon in the House and in the country. I emphasize that the history of the Conservative government between 1958 and 1962, the history of the party and the way in which it speaks in the House, the twins looking in opposite directions, the twins Lambert and Gillies with their backs together and looking in opposite directions—

Mr. Nowlan: But you are going in opposite directions.

Mr. Lewis: —indicates that no one in this country can believe that the Conservative party could do the kind of thing that the Leader of the Opposition says he would do when he is in power.

Some hon. Members: Try us. Give us a chance.

Mr. Lewis: Hon. members in the Conservative party say: try us. When I cut my finger with a knife, I do not keep on cutting my finger with the same knife.

An hon. Member: It's better than cutting your throat.

Mr. Lewis: Hon. members say: try us. This country has tried the Conservative party. It is not only the failures of the Liberal party—to which I shall come later in my remarks—that account for the present difficult position of Canada, for the high unemployment and the inflationary spiral. It is also the economy that was built at the time of the Diefenbaker government in this country—

Some hon. Members: Shame!

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Nowlan: It was John A. Macdonald.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

Mr. Lewis: —because, Mr. Speaker, these economic developments do not take place in a year, or two, or three. They are economic developments that grow over a period of time, indeed over generations. And if the Leader of the Opposition now puts on the mantle of Canadian economic independence, by gad—

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Lewis: —by gad, Mr. Speaker, and he accuses the Minister of Finance of not being forthright and honest with this House, then I suggest to him that as leader of a party with 19 members from Alberta, every one of whom supports the rape of Canadian resources by foreign corporations—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Bell: Explain!

Mr. Lewis: —then I suggest to him that he is not honest. He is not honest with this House, Mr. Speaker. Even when the government takes a timid step, probably too late, to control the export of our resources in order to preserve them for the needs of Canada in the future, what do you find? You find the Conservative premier of Alberta objecting to that step—

Some hon. Members: Shame!

Mr. Lewis: —and wanting his oil corporation friends to continue exporting Canada's resources and raw materials.

Conservative hon. members can howl and scream, but what they are really doing is twisting in their seats because they know that what I say is correct.

Mr. Speaker: I apologize to the hon. member for York South but the hon. member for Rocky Mountain rises on a question of privilege.

Mr. Clark (Rocky Mountain): Mr. Speaker, as one of the 19 members from Alberta I simply want to take exception to the remark of the hon. member for York South, and to make it clear that I am not personally in favour of rape, even of that kind of which he is such a complacent partner.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Lewis: Mr. Speaker, if the hon. member weren't a new member of this House I might be a little less kind, but the fact is that he did not deny, nor can anyone, that those members from Alberta are entirely in favour of continuing to leave those resources in the control of the foreign owned corporations. They have not attempted at any time to stop the rape of those resources by these foreign controlled corporations. They simply cannot deny that the Conservative government of Alberta, even with the timid step that the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources has taken to control exports, is howling and screaming because that government does not want any control over the foreign owned corporations that now have the resources of Alberta in their hands.

All I am saying to this House is what I have said on behalf of my party all through since October 30. I do not have confidence in the government opposite, and its performance does not permit me to have that confidence.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Lawrence: You voted confidence in them.

Mr. Lewis: But neither do my colleagues and I have the slightest confidence in the dinosaur oriented and dinosaur controlled Conservative party of this country.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Paproski: What about Brontosaurus Rex?

Mr. Speaker: May we have order please?

Mr. Lewis: Hon. members tell me they prefer the brontosaurus to the dinosaur. So far as I am concerned they can have their choice. In fact, they can hyphenate the two words, and the result would still apply to their policies and theories. These hon. gentlemen, who now say we should do such and such for this country, are merely showing their anxiety to get across the aisle and take the place of the government. And the only reason that the Leader of the Opposition, who is usually so mild and kind a person, such a nice guy—

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Grafftey: A real human person.

Mr. Lewis: —the only reason this nice guy from Halifax has become vicious in the last few days—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Alexander: You are not your best today, David.

Mr. Lewis: —the only reason he has become vicious is that he is absolutely destroyed by the frustration that he feels each day sitting in this House. And I say to him that it is not head of government that he ought to become; he ought to visit a psychiatrist and get rid of the frustration. Then, he will return to the kindness and the softness which were the familiar characteristics of him.

Some hon. Members: Shame!

Mr. Lewis: And if I am being unkind to the hon. Leader of the Opposition, it is quite deliberate. He deserves it for the way in which he has behaved throughout the opening of this session of parliament.

Mr. Hees: I hear you can't get a psychiatrist to take you on, David.

Mr. Lewis: Mr. Speaker, I am really very flattered by the reaction of the Conservatives. Their sensitivity and thin skin are showing. They like to applaud their own outdated appellations that they throw across the floor, but when they are told some things that are true and that are necessary for the people to hear, they scream, yell and cat-call. It is rather complimentary, Mr. Speaker. I am delighted to know that whatever shafts I was throwing hit their mark. That is always a pleasure to know.

Mr. Lawrence: There is a better word for it than "shaft".

Mr. Lewis: Mr. Speaker, we have decided to support this budget.

Mr. Alexander: Surprise, surprise!

Mr. Lewis: We have decided to support this budget, not because—

Mr. Bell: Someone is knocking on the door, David. They are coming to take you away.

Mr. Lewis: May I call it one o'clock, Mr. Speaker.

THE ROYAL ASSENT

A message was delivered by the Gentleman Usher of the Black Rod, as follows:

Mr. Speaker, it is the desire of the Honourable the Deputy of His Excellency the Governor General that this Honourable House attend him immediately in the chamber of the honourable the Senate.

Accordingly, Mr. Speaker with the House went up to the Senate chamber.

• (1310)

And being returned:

Mr. Speaker informed the House that the Deputy Governor General had been pleased to give, in Her Majesty's name, the royal assent to the following bill:

An Act for granting to Her Majesty certain sums of money for the public service for the financial year ending the 31st March, 1973—Chapter No. 3.

Mr. Speaker: It being after one o'clock, I do now leave the chair.

At 1:13 p.m. the House took recess.

AFTER RECESS

The House met at 2 p.m.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

FINANCIAL STATEMENT OF THE MINISTER OF FINANCE

The House resumed consideration of the motion of Hon. John N. Turner (Minister of Finance) that this House approve in general the budgetary policy of the government, and the amendment of Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West) (p. 1526).

Mr. Lewis: Mr. Speaker, it is, of course, obvious and true that the budget which the Minister of Finance presented on Monday night showed that he had changed his position on a good many items, that he had accepted what he had rejected a year ago, or last May, and what he had rejected throughout the federal election campaign. It is precisely this fact which would lead responsible people, people who are willing to carry out their duty to make this parliament function, to support this budget and welcome the fact that in response to criticism the hon. gentleman had changed his views. It is obvious why he changed his views. He changed his views because he is now a member of a minority government teetering on an edge. And he changed his views because in this parliament he and the government must be responsive to the views of others; they cannot arrogantly continue to act in any way they think is right in total disregard of other opinion.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Lewis: This is why those views were changed.

I would be more inclined to believe in the sincerity of the concern for the unemployed which is professed by some of the spokesmen for the Conservative party if every time they used such expressions I did not remember their vote on the amendment to the Unemployment Insurance Act and their attitude toward the estimates. But in connection with the Unemployment Insurance Act, particularly, had their vote prevailed, the unemployed would not now be receiving the benefits to which they are presently, by law and in humanity, entitled.

Some hon. Members: Shame.

Mr. Lewis: The fact is that on October 30 the people of Canada did not accept either of the traditional parties in this House to be the government of Canada in a majority sense. They rejected the way in which the Liberal government had carried on its work for the four and a half years before that date, and they rejected the Conservative party also. I say to my friends in the Conservative party what I said to a reporter during the election campaign—I think it was reported in Time Magazine: that if the Conservative party had any program and any leadership to offer, so anti-Trudeau were the people of Canada that the Conservatives could have swept the polls. This was the feeling which was evident throughout Canada. And in this situation, the people having created a dilemma for themselves. I think it is right that this parliament should function and should get the best possible results out of the government that happens to be in power. The government had to listen. That is why it has accepted what formerly it had rejected. That is why the old age pension has been increased to $100.

Mr. Gillies: Big deal.

Mr. Lewis: The hon. member says "Big deal". Let me tell him that based on the promises which the Conservative party made during the election campaign and the promises which the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Stanfield) made during the debate on the May budget last year, all the calculations I could possibly make add up to an amount less than $100. In fact, when the Leader of the Opposition spoke to old age pensioners in Vancouver last year and they asked him whether he would agree to make the pension $150, he said: "No, I will not. The likelihood is that I think the pension ought to be $90."

Mr. Gillies: He said, let's look at it.

Mr. Lewis: Now, they have an old age pension of $100. My colleagues and I are not satisfied with it.

An hon. Member: Nor are we.

Mr. Lewis: Certainly, the Conservatives are not satisfied with it. But if they had been in power, pensioners would have had to be satisfied with $90. Members to my right now say they are dissatisfied with $100. I repeat, that we in this party believe the increase should have been greater, but I want to say this to members of this House and to the people of Canada: I have reason to know, not merely to believe, that the old age pension would not have been $100 if the NDP had not insisted that it could not be less than $100. I suggest that that is a service to the elderly people of this country, a service I am proud that my party has rendered.

There is a basic pension of $100 a month, but what is just as important is that there is a combination of pension and supplement of $170 for a single person and $325 for a married couple. These, too are not adequate to give them the kind of dignity and comfort that they ought to have, but it is a great improvement on their previous situation. Because of what happened on October 30, this has been included in the budget. These proposals will come before us in a bill, once again I say because of the attitude taken in this parliament by the New Democratic Party. This alone justifies the responsible position that the members of this party have taken.

There is also a personal income tax cut in the budget. It is true that 5 per cent is only 2 per cent more than the former 3 per cent cut, but certain members of this House demanded that an income tax cut must be made on a progressive basis. I have said consistently that there should be an income tax cut for people in the middle and lower income groups and no cut at all for those in the higher income groups. At all events, in reply to the demands that have been made we now have one of the most progressive income tax cuts this parliament has ever seen, and I am proud that my colleagues and I are partly responsible for that.

When my Conservative friends beat their breasts and say that they will do these things for us, as the hon.

member for Northumberland-Durham (Mr. Lawrence) has done, I am reminded of another being, though not the kind I have in mind.

Mr. Lawrence: They have more hair on their chests than I have.

Mr. Lewis: When these Conservatives beat their breasts and say that they will do better, I recall what was said by the hon. member for Edmonton West (Mr. Lambert) when he was the only financial critic for the Conservative party—now there are two; there are twins in that capacity. When the Income Tax Act was changed a little more than it usually is, the hon. member for Edmonton West on June 22, 1971, as reported at page 7222 of Hansard' said this. This is one of the great saviours of Canada that we are supposed to bow down to. He said this:

> —some people think that you can have equity between taxpayers. That is impossible in this country and anyone who suggests otherwise is not aware of our financial and economic requirements. It is absolute nonsense to talk about equity between taxpayers or within the income tax system.

That was the declaration of the hon. member for Edmonton West, the financial critic of the Conservative party. Let me tell the members of that party that I believe it is possible to have equity in the tax system, and I have no confidence in people who say that it is not possible to do so.

As a result of the October 30 election, the government has now increased basic exemptions. My colleagues and I oppose the idea of exemptions because we think it is not a good way to get equity in the tax system, as the Carter commission report showed and as logic indicates. Whenever exemptions are increased by $100, you give more to the higher income earners then you do to people with lower incomes. A person whose effective income tax rate is only 17 to 20 per cent gets out of an increase in the exemption of $100 only $17 to $20 benefit. On the other hand, a person whose effective rate of tax is 40 or 50 per cent derives from a $100 increase in the exemption $40 or $50 benefit. Therefore, that is not a fair way of making allowance for the basic needs of families, on which the theoretical concept of an exemption is based. What is required, as we have been saying for many years, is a tax credit, rather than this kind of increase in the exemption. However, there has been a recognition that income tax on individuals must be eased for those at the bottom. Although we would have preferred a tax credit arrangement—something that we are going to argue for—I have no doubt this change was made as a result of the October 30 election.

We have also had some tariff cuts. The cuts are not very wide but they are important. They are particularly important to western Canada. I was amused today when I heard the Leader of the Official Opposition (Mr. Stanfield) opposing even these minimal tariff cuts. Every time you scratch a Conservative at a particular moment, the basic protectionism of the Conservative party spurts out. We welcome these tariff cuts, unilateral as they are, and we think that if the government plays its cards well in negotiations with the States on trade matters they will be of value.

We also welcome the reduction in sales tax. Perhaps the hon. member for Don Valley (Mr. Gillies) is right and there should have been a decrease or elimination of the sales tax on all clothing. However, every time that kind of suggestion is made I think of certain clothing off which I would not take sales tax. For example, many of the members of this chamber are going to wear black ties tomorrow night at the gallery dinner, and I am darned if I am particularly anxious to take sales tax off the tuxedo. In other words, to be effective and decently done, these cuts have to be selective so that those who need assistance are assisted, rather than the cuts being global, as has been suggested.

The same is true when members of the Conservative party start screaming about removing sales tax on all building materials. That sounds good and these members think that they have a political item here. But if that were done, it would be the biggest bonanza in Canada for the gouging developers of this country.

Mr. Gillies: It would help the construction workers.

Mr. Lewis: You can deal with this problem in a decent and progressive way, a way you cannot expect the Conservatives to suggest. It can be done by rebating to the person who buys a house costing less than a certain sum—I am talking of the middle income and lower income home purchaser—the tax on the building materials that went into the construction of his house.

Mr. Gillies: That would be a bureaucratic nightmare.

Mr. Lewis: That is what we would have done.

Mr. Lawrence: It would be very difficult to administer.

Mr. Lewis: The hon. member for Northumberland-Durham, who has been a member of a provincial cabinet, says it would be difficult to administer, but his provincial government had no difficulty at all in administering many things. It had even less difficulty in misadministering them.

Mr. Lawrence: The expense would be enormous.

Mr. Lewis: There is also in the budget a very important modification in the equalization formula which means that an additional $200 million will be spent on the seven "have-not" provinces. This is a very important step to take for the Atlantic provinces, Quebec and the prairie provinces of Manitoba and Saskatchewan. That, too, is in the budget as a result of the October 30 election. Although some provinces had demanded it at various conferences, only now has their demand been recognized. We have all these things in the budget which make us believe it is our duty, in light of the position we took at the opening of the session, to support the budget we have before us. It is of course true, Mr. Speaker, that the advisers of the Department of Finance have not shown much imagination. It is of course true that this budget should have been the subject of more imagination than has been shown. It is true that this budget is not sufficiently expansionary, and it is true that it is easier to move mountains than to move the mandarins in the Department of Finance.

Mr. Hees: Why don't you move an amendment?

An hon. Member: Put your vote where your mouth is.

Mr. Lewis: I have a suspicion that most of the colleagues of the Minister of Finance in cabinet know that is true. I cannot condemn sufficiently the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) and members of his Cabinet for not having seen, since they are ready to admit the failure of their policies to date, that they should have had the gumption and imagination to take a much bolder step in the expansionary program presented to this parliament instead of placing limitations upon themselves.

An hon. Member: Otherwise, they should have resigned.

Mr. Lewis: I have never had any illusions about this, and I do not think this budget will reduce unemployment at as fast a pace, if it reduces it at all, as it should. It is a pity and a crime really that the government, once having decided to take some expansionary steps regarding the economy, and once having decided to pour more money into the economy, did not have sufficient guts and imagination to pour at least another billion dollars into the economy, as it could and should have done. I said that before my hon. friends to the right, who keep up these catcalls, the very night of the budget. There are areas where this course should have been followed. One such step would have been to increase the revenues of the provinces which must have more to carry out their responsibilities. They are now hobbled by a lack of revenues to carry out their constitutional functions. Another step would have been to increase the old age pensions by $10, $15 or $20 more, or at least to increase the supplement by some sizeable amount. The government should have made an even larger personal income tax cut, and set a minimum reduction of $125, $135 or $150 with an increase of 6 per cent or 7 per cent instead of 5 per cent.

I say to you, Mr. Speaker, that if the government had done that kind of thing, this budget would have had a great deal more meaning for the people of Canada, a great deal more meaning for the provinces of this country and a great deal more hope for the unemployment situation.

An hon. Member: And we might have even voted for it.

Mr. Lewis: I do not think the hon. member would vote for anything, no matter what it was.

I want to say one final thing, since I do not think I have many more minutes at my disposal. I share the views of my colleague, the hon. member for Waterloo (Mr. Saltsman), who indicated that merely having a deficit does not by itself create employment. Although it is important in this kind of situation deliberately to have a large deficit, that in itself does not accomplish this. Along with my colleagues, I believe, and we are entitled to this belief as anyone else is entitled to his, that the policies and philosophies of both the Liberal and Conservative parties, in an age of automation and cybernation, in an age when there is constant replacement of human labour by machines, in an age when you can produce much more with less human labour than you could, in such an age without plan and when the Liberal and Conservative parties rely on the private enterprise sector alone to produce jobs, would make the Liberal government fail and a Conservative government fail because these policies and philosophies will not produce jobs for Canadians.

If I had anything to do with the budget, let me inform the members of the Conservative party that not only would it be much more expansionary, it would have provided a great deal more money for the Department of Regional Economic Expansion; it would have indicated a complete restructuring of regional economic development policy in this country; it would have decentralized the regional development program; it would have given the provinces and the regions more opportunity to plan their priorities and objectives. It would have emphasized a need for public investment combined with private investment for the development of industry in the disadvantaged areas of this country which, by definition, do not produce the kind of profits that attract private enterprise. The only way you can build the economy in these areas is by having a public involvement in the development of economic policy. Had we designed the budget it would have told parliament and the people that part of this regional expansion program would be to lend a great deal of assistance to co-operatives, particularly in the Atlantic provinces; fisheries co-operatives and farm co-operatives, so the people themselves could help in developing their livelihood and future.

We would have undertaken in the budget that the task force, which the Economic Council of Canada set up to deal with the question as to what constitutes unemployment in Canada, was given the job of finding new ways of employing the hardcore of unemployed in this country. We could do a tremendous job for future generations in Canada if we used social capital to get this country cleaned up from coast to coast as far as that can be done by human work and machines. An anti-pollution program of dimension in this country would have helped unemployment and would have guaranteed the quality of life for future Canadians. These are the kinds of things we would have proposed. We would have proposed direct employment programs.

An hon. Member: Why don't you?

Mr. Lewis: Mr. Speaker, I am delighted to hear of the socialist conversion of hon. members, particularly the hon. member for Prince Edward-Hastings (Mr. Hees).

Mr. Hees: I would just like to hear you propose an amendment.

Mr. Lewis: If I believed him I would, with your permission, walk over and give him an application form, but that hard-nosed Tory has not been converted.

Mr. Hees: I would just like to hear you suggest you had the guts to propose an amendment today.

Mr. Lewis: Those are the measures we would have proposed in addition to an expansionary program. As the hon. member for Waterloo said, we cannot ask the Liberals or Conservatives to accept, adopt and implement a New Democratic Party policy because that is not what we would expect them to do.

Mr. Hees: Why don't you try an amendment?

Mr. Lewis: I told those hon. gentlemen in Toronto the other day that I was certain they would vote for the communist manifesto if they thought they could get across the aisle and become the government.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

An hon. Member: Give us the chance.

Mr. Lewis: I have no doubt they would vote for any amendment put forward, without caring what it said, as long as they thought the amendment would carry. Because I do not expect this government or any other government of another party to bring our program forward, I feel and my colleagues feel it our duty to support this budget and to be proud that our presence here has produced many more things for the people of Canada than would otherwise have been the case.

Mr. Ross Whicher (Bruce): Mr. Speaker, it has been a very interesting day, at least up until now. We heard the Leader of the Official Opposition (Mr. Stanfield) and the Leader of the New Democratic Party (Mr. Lewis) tell us all that is wrong in Canada. To use the words of the Leader of the Opposition, he said there is nothing but confusion and stagnation in Canada. The Leader of the New Democratic Party told us there is much wrong. If there were people from other countries of the world such as Germany, France, Russia, England or the United States sitting in the gallery today, they would think that perhaps this is the worst country in the world. I say it is high time that as Members of Parliament we started telling the world what is good about Canada, and started sticking up for Canada for a change. Much is wrong, of course, with Canada. It is not any Heaven, but it is still the best country in the whole world with one of the highest standards of living, with the best housing and where we have a policy of looking after our senior citizens better than they are looked after in any other country in the world. I could go on and on in this vein.

It was interesting to hear the Leader of the Opposition this morning tell us what is wrong. It was also interesting to hear the Leader of the New Democratic Party in his most efficient manner tell us why he would support us over here instead of those horrible people to the right of him. I will tell you, Mr. Speaker, why he supports us. He supports us because he is afraid to do anything else. I am the fellow who will tell him right now that he is afraid, as are the people behind him. He told us today, and on numerous other occasions, that he does not like us any more than the people to his right. So, the answer is that what all the people behind him are thinking about is their seats, particularly those from western Canada. They do not want an election in the near future. In the light of what the two leaders of the parties said this morning and again this afternoon, it was obvious they certainly were not sticking up for each other.

May I say I listened to the lead-off speaker for the Conservative party, the hon. member for Edmonton West (Mr. Lambert) and also listened attentively to his lieutenant, the hon. member for Don Valley (Mr. Gillies) yesterday afternoon, but I did not find any similarity in their speeches. As a matter of fact, the hon. member for Edmonton West said that his amendment was being moved because this budget would not reduce either unemployment or inflation or the spiralling cost of living. I did not hear the hon. member for Don Valley speak very much about that. The main theme of his speech centred around the fact that if the conservatives had the opportunity they would place a 90-day freeze on wages, salaries, prices and so on. The hon. member for Edmonton West who led off and moved the amendment did not even mention the possibility of a wage or price freeze in Canada.

Mr. Gillies: Yes, he did.

Mr. Whicher: As has been suggested, perhaps our Tory friends should hold a caucus meeting next Wednesday morning to decide what their position is in respect of budget, because evidently they are not all telling the same story.

Inasmuch as I do not have the same length of time as some other hon. members, may I ask that members take the time to read some of the highlights in the budget and then go home where, in the quietness of their own rooms, they can say they are really proud they are still Canadians and have the responsibility and obligation to pay taxes in this fine land. Let us look, for example, at the first item. The basic exemption for all taxpayers has been increased from $1500 to $1600. Perhaps this might seem to be of little significance, but the point is that the basic exemption was the highest in the world before last Monday night and now is even higher. This is something of which Canadians can be proud.

Not only has the basic exemption been increased to $1600 from $1500, but let us see what has been done for the senior citizens. Their exemption at age 65 will not be $1600 but rather $2600. This is the highest exemption in respect of senior citizens anywhere in the world. My hon. friends did not mention that.

An hon. Member: It is not enough.

Mr. Whicher: That is the story we hear all the way through—too late and not enough. I say to some of the people across the way who want the responsibility to govern that you cannot give everything away without increasing taxes. For the last several weeks we, and my friends on the other side of the House, have been talking about the old age pension situation. No one appreciates more than I do the fact that our senior citizens need assistance, but what has not been said is that the old age pension scheme before last Monday night in Canada was the best in the whole world. They did not say that the basic exemption for our senior citizens is the highest in the world, or that at age 65 in most provinces senior citizens receive free hospitalization and medicare in Canada. They did not mention the other things such as cheaper housing and rentals. One must take everything in context and not try to dwell on one point. The fact is that our senior citizens know they are not getting too much, but they do know that they are getting more than the senior citizens in the United States, in France, in England, in Russia or anywhere else in the world.

Not just the people in the Liberal party but also those in the Conservative party and New Democratic Party should be very proud of the way in which we are attempting to look after our senior citizens. I did not hear my friends mention anything about the increases which are to be given to the recipients of the war veterans allowance. I did not hear my hon. friends mention the fact that we still have over one million veterans in Canada out of a total of 22 million people. Those who are in receipt of war veterans allowance will find that the allowance for married recipients has been increased to $357 a month. Once again, I say we should be very proud of that. I could go on and on. I did not hear my hon. friend from Don Valley say anything about the fact that it will now be possible to pass family farms on from generation to generation free of a capital gains tax.

Mr. Gillies: That is a great idea. I only had 30 minutes.

Mr. Whicher: I heard hon. members opposite say that other small businesses should be allowed to pass to the next generation free of a capital gains tax, but I did not hear them give any credit for what has been done. I did not hear any credit being given for the fact that, for the first time since the war years, the agriculture industry in Canada is starting to receive a fair deal. More grain is being sold now, and at higher prices, than has been the case for many years. So far as the agriculture industry is concerned the light of day is now being seen in respect of many products for the first time, but my Tory or NDP friends did not mention this. I could carry on and mention many other things. Let us think about some of the other good things we have in Canada. Let us stand up for Canada.

We have one of the finest educational systems in the whole world, one of the finest hospitalization systems in the world. They are not perfect by any means. However, if you think we have poor housing in the city of Toronto—there is none in Don Valley—go to Harlem in New York city and take a look at really poor housing, and that is the wealthiest city in the whole world. We are not perfect in Canada, but we have the very best there is. Ask our friends who are in the Caribbean: why is it that more Canadians travel than do the people of any other country in the world?

Mr. Paproski: They are on LIP grants.

Mr. Whicher: The answer is, because we are more prosperous.

Mr. Paproski: They are on Opportunities for Youth grants.

Mr. Whicher: I would not mind interruptions from the other side, but I hope you understand I only have a few minutes because I am a back-bencher. I do not, therefore have many opportunities to speak.

Mr. Paproski: Oh, oh.

Mr. Whicher: It would not take too long to cut you down to size. You will be a lot smaller, my friend.

Why is it that these good things are taking place in Canada? I will say this: the reason that we have these good things is our high standard of living. This country is not perfect by any means, as I said. The reason we have these good things is that over many years we have had an excellent democratic government here in Canada, and the one that we have at present is no exception.

I heard the speech of my friend, the hon. member for Don Valley whom I appreciate very much and I think he gave a wonderful speech yesterday. Let me say, incidentally, that he comes from the riding of Bruce. However, I was amused when I heard him say that one of the things the Conservatives would do, if they had funds, would be to reduce the age at which the old age pension is granted from 65 to 64. This is a wonderful promise but I cannot help but feel that the last time my Conservative friends had the opportunity to raise old age pensions they raised them from $55 to $65, and not at the age of 65 but at the age of 70.

Mr. Gillies: Poor comparison.

Mr. Whicher: These are facts, my friend. You should go back to your colleagues and start learning some of these things. I do not know what these fellows are, but they are confused, I will tell you that.

These are the things that we must think about here in Canada. We have many problems. There is not any one on this side of the House who is proud of the fact that we have 6½ per cent unemployment, but in remembering that fact let us face the reality that some of those people for various reasons, do not want to work. They may be semi-retired or may have other reasons. But let us remember that if we have 6½ per cent unemployment, it means that 93½ per cent in Canada are working. We should not forget that. When the hon. member for Don Valley suggests we should bring unemployment down to 5½ per cent, as our American friends have done, let us not forget that for the past number of years they have been fighting one off the worst wars in history with three million men under arms and with armies all over the world. Perhaps if we wanted to have an army on that scale we might bring our unemployment down to 5½ per cent.

Mr. Gillies: That is absurd.

Mr. Whicher: On the other hand, there is no doubt that the unemployment situation in Canada must be remedied. Everyone on this side of the House says so. As a matter of fact, the very first thing that the Minister of Finance (Mr. Turner) recommended in his budget speech the other night was to lower unemployment figures in Canada and to lessen inflation. After all, we are controlled to a large extent, so far as inflation is concerned, by the outside world. We have a country to the south of us with ten times our population and 15 times our gross national product. If General Motors workers in Detroit ask for wage increases, I suggest that General Motors workers in Oshawa or Windsor will ask for similar increases. We are tied to the U.S. rate of inflation. But my friends on the other side, of course, are not tied to anything. They are in a position of being able to criticize and they take advantage of this at every opportunity.

In conclusion I want to say to hon. members: do not sell this country of ours short. It has never been sold in that way in the past. I say, as I did when I started, that it is high time, while we recognize the fact that we have many problems in Canada, the problems were ploughed under by the good things that have been accomplished over the years and are continuing to be done even unto this day.

Mr. William C. Frank (Middlesex): Mr. Speaker, it is indeed a great honour and privilege to have the opportunity to enter into this budget debate, particularly at the early stages, and to speak on the same day as our leader.

First of all, I wish to extend my congratulations to you, and they are just as sincere now as they were at the beginning. As a matter of fact, over these several weeks, both you and the hon. member for Halifax-East Hants (Mr. McCleave), have given me ample opportunity to appreciate the very impartial and objective approach which you exemplify and which has been so evident throughout the proceedings of this House. I am sure that each new member, as he attempts to adjust to this new and challenging environment, forms many different opinions of parliament and its members. Let me assure you, even though I have always had a high opinion of this institution, it has certainly been heightened further and you, Mr. Speaker, have indeed contributed to this.

Before I get into the serious part of my speech as it relates to the budget, I would like to take the opportunity provided by a maiden speech to expound on the many virtues of the riding which I am both proud and humble to represent, namely, Middlesex. Actually, considering the geographic area which this riding encompasses, it should be called London Middlesex Lambton. About one third of the electorate of my riding lives in that great city of London which is conveniently situated midway between Windsor and Toronto and which has a population of well over 200,000. The balance is made up of most of the county of Middlesex which encircles London, plus a portion of the county of Lambton. This, in itself, makes the riding unique in many ways.

I should like to deal first of all with some of the factors that make the city of London so important, not only the portion of that city in my riding but in total. The London area has long been recognized as a very important education centre, having that great University of Western Ontario in its midst. This university has been noted, not only for its many distinguished graduates, but also for its growth, never more so than in these recent years when many new buildings have been added to the university campus, such as the new D. B. Weldon library, the extended cancer research area, the new faculty of dentistry, and the new university community centre which, incidentally, was a $4.5 million project with the students paying roughly $140,000 a year over a 20 year period. In the fall of 1972, a new university hospital was opened adjacent to the campus, and more buildings will be put up. There are, of course, many affiliated colleges surrounding the campus, such as the London Teachers College, and the Althouse Secondary Teachers College. We can also boast of the Fanshaw College of Applied Arts and Sciences, a new college with a full time enrolment of some 3,300 students.

London is proud of its many financial institutions, being the home of several head offices. These are made up of insurance companies, trust companies, and a very pleasant and necessary mixture of industry, both large and small. Although all of these important institutions and areas are not necessarily situated within the city boundaries of my riding, my constituents certainly share the responsibility and, I believe, some of the credit for their existence.

My riding has many towns and villages spotted here and there among the farms. The largest of these towns is Strathroy, with a population of close to 7,000. Middlesex riding rates second in terms of acreage of improved farmland in Ontario with some 538,013 acres. It has been long recognized as the home of many prominent breeders of Holstein dairy cattle, having the second highest production of No. 1 milk in Ontario with 142,700,000 pounds, and also of Aberdeen Angus and Hereford cattle. We certainly have our share of swine breeders and sheep breeders. We can also boast of some of the finest horses, a number of which have been recognized in many of the great horse shows in North America.

My riding is well recognized in the poultry industry, being the home of the largest turkey hatchery not only in North America but in the world. This hatchery supplies a large percentage of the Canadian market, as well as the United States, with turkey poults, and this year will ship close to one million eggs to Europe, opening up yet another vast area of exports. My riding can also be credited with the highest hen laying population in Ontario, and probably in all of Canada.

Crop production is still another area in which we need not take a back seat, although corn would be by far the greatest acreage, placing second in Ontario with 130,531 acres, and I share with my colleague from Huron the only Canadian-owned seed-corn production company in Canada, Stuarts Hybreds. We produce large quantities of beans, placing second in Ontario in white bean production, plus of course general cereal crops. And provided that the government can come up with a Canadian sugar policy, Mr. Speaker, you will also see production of sugar beets in my area for the proposed plant in southwestern Ontario.

These products I briefly mention are only the basis of a far more encompassing production pattern as the result of cross-breeding, which in turn produces volume that has only scratched the surface of what can be done, if the agricultural community has the confidence in the future that it must have for it to do any long-range planning.

All these things in my riding did not just happen. It has taken the efforts of responsible citizens at all levels of society, whether they be union or non-union employees, large or small employers, large or small businesses—both urban and rural—and large or small farms. They have all exhibited a responsibility to the steady growth of a city and surrounding area that is the true symbol of a free enterprise system.

If these citizens of the city of London and the surrounding rural areas are going to continue to progress in the manner that they have in the past and, Mr. Speaker, they are no different from millions of other citizens throughout this great Canada of ours, they must have confidence in a federal government leadership that will give them the incentive that they so desperately need. This, Mr. Speaker, is the background for a few areas that I would like to elaborate on this afternoon. Canadians have the right to expect positive leadership, from their federal government, and not just a group of followers.

To illustrate what I mean, Mr. Speaker, I think we have had the greatest exhibition of kite flying that this country has ever known, during what will be known in history as the Trudeau years. Now, when I mention kite flying I do not mean the recent exhibition on the front lawn of parliament a few weeks ago. I am referring to the time the former Minister of Finance subjected this country to that monstrosity known as the white paper on taxation. I was not a member at that time. I was one of the hundreds of thousands of employers, owner of a small business in particular, who frantically enlisted every means possible to try and convince the then minister of the folly of such legislation as it related to small business.

Mr. Speaker, such kite flying cost this country untold hundreds of thousands of dollars in accountants' and lawyers' fees, and after many months of frustration and expensive anxiety we were informed that the 50 per cent taxation on all business, large or small, would not be implemented as proposed. There were also concessions in other areas, but the point of it all is that when this same Prime Minister and his supercircle of advisers finally realized this tax paper was not acceptable, they simply passed it off with another shrug and said, "We never intended to implement it; we just wanted to see what the people thought about it".

That was my impression of the government of the day, looking in from the outside. Now that I am here, I am sorry to say we seem to be saddled with the same idea of following. Mr. Speaker, the proof of all this was once again displayed by yet another Minister of Finance last Monday evening when he attempted to convince the taxpayers of the soundness of an original tax plan, when in fact he was capitalizing on one of the Leader of the Opposition's (Mr. Stanfield) own sound proposals in the last campaign.

Small business must have more reasonable assurances of stability in the future, or Canadian small business failures will continue to rise, even at a greater rate than in 1972, which was the highest period. The free enterprise system that encourages individuals to launch their own ideas and optimism, through outlets of their own small businesses, is still alive, even after such negative federal discouragement these past few years, and more particularly from this last budget. The small business concession in this budget does nothing for the man who wants to start up, or is already in production but cannot find reasonable capital to continue. Such people are the embryo of unlimited employment potential if given a chance. But financial institutions today are not interested in taking that chance, so I feel it is up to the federal government to provide the necessary confidence.

I know of the frustration of small business. I had the nerve to start one in 1956, with no excess capital but with lots of enthusiasm and energy. It is an agri-business, so you know it was never lucrative to the lending institutions, government or otherwise. But today, from a one-man and my family beginning, this business now maintains over 25 employees, and distributes brand name products, two of them with my own Canadian and United States patents, to all provinces across Canada and much of the United States, and with even a shipment to Japan. I still recognize that same optimism and energy in this Canada of ours, but they need sound financial encouragement if we hope to keep on building a better and more productive society.

I would now like to discuss the budget as it relates to our senior citizens. There is no doubt that they have been given reasonable consideration, but I wonder if the increase will really do much good in the area where it is most needed. I mean the area of supplying their essential drugs. I receive numerous letters from senior citizens, and drug costs are by far the biggest problem to overcome. I feel, Mr. Speaker, that if the minister could see his way clear to let these people have their prescription drug needs compensated in full, he would be supporting the class of senior citizen that is the hardest hit. There must be some way to perform this service systematically for these people. I know many who, with total drug support, could continue to live independently for much longer, and keep in mind, Mr. Speaker, that these are many of the same independent individuals who built this country. They struggled and deprived themselves of what were necessities to them at that time, trusting future generations to stand by them.

The conditions today must be a bitter pill, to be forced down the throats of our senior citizens by a government that has such apparent indifference to society. "Yes," they say, "but that is all over now, that was our other face." They seem to forget the old phrase, "It's a long lane without a turn". You cannot hoodwink the people of Canada indefinitely, and a lot more than just our senior citizens will eventually prove that statement when they come to submit their 1972 tax returns.

The tax-paying public who are recipients of Canadian dividends are virtually asked to sign a return that in effect is a falsehood. It is not only a falsehood but an underhanded way to try and hoodwink these taxpayers into helping to pay for the so-called goodies in this budget, because there is a one-third levy automatically added to their T5 dividend returns which, in effect, shows them stating an income above that which they in actual fact received, even including the 20 per cent tax credit.

I know of several people who have already confronted the local tax departments on this fact, and were virtually given the opinion that it was true. Officials tried to pass it off as too complicated to explain. This puts these civil servants in an embarrassing situation, and sometimes finds them being rude to the inquiring taxpayer because remember, they are human too, and can stand only so much needling for a situation they had no part in bringing into being. So, as it now looks, there will be thousands of returns submitted unsigned, from fear of potentially falsifying these income tax statements. This government should be thoroughly exposed for such underhanded tactics.

Another area that disturbs me as a new member is the apparent lack of sincerity of some ministers in their replies to questions asked in the House. A good example is the time the Minister of Transport (Mr. Marchand) was asked if there would be an opportunity for the citizens near Mount Hope airport to be heard. He intimated, and I quote:

> Mr. Speaker, we might first have the opinions of members of parliament who contend that they have been elected by the people—

This was a convenient answer, except a bit contradictory to previous positions taken by former ministers of transport. This involved pressure brought to bear on this government to extend the runways at the London airport. There were three government members at that time representing the London area, but apparently the government would not accept their advice because the mayor and a delegation, at the city's expense, had to come to Ottawa to get final approval. If we in opposition are made to feel like nobodys by this government, what of the embarrassment of those particular members, two of them being still with us?

Mr. Speaker, you have heard of honourable mentions. Well that is about all this budget gives to the farmers by eliminating the capital gains tax on family farms. That may be very credible, but if we are going to encourage young people to take over farms, capital gains tax has to be eliminated from all bona fide transactions. Statistics tells us the average age of all farmers is too high, and the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Whelan) tells us that an average of 12 farmers per day are leaving the industry. Mr. Speaker, that figure will get higher if they cannot afford to sell before they die.

The Minister of Agriculture has credibly increased the potential loan to a young farmer. That is fine if the farmer has any equity, but what is really needed is for the minister to encourage the balance of the provincial governments to incorporate the once-in-a-lifetime-gift for farmers, and it should include small businesses as well, to the limit of $50,000. In this way, potential family business successors, whether they be farmers or small business people, could apply to the Farm Credit Corporation or the IDB and would have a decent equity for loans, with a reasonable chance of survival.

We have a committee investigating the high cost of food. If this committee accomplishes nothing else, the least it should do is establish in the minds of urban consumers, in particular, the true role the basic producer is playing in the food production cycle. The consumer must keep in mind that the so-called cheap food policy that seems to be on so many minds today will only lead to consistently dearer foods in the future. Tariffs, basic herd and quota rights are other areas of concern in agriculture which I strongly urge the Minister of Finance to reconsider.

There are many more areas I would like to cover as this budget relates to my riding, but apparently time will not permit.

Hon. Alastair Gillespie (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): Mr. Speaker, in the time allotted to me this afternoon I shall try to deal with two subjects. I want to deal with some proposals of the Conservative party with respect to price and wage controls, and to talk about the importance of the manufacturing industry at a time of rapidly shifting international currents. I start with the proposal put forward yesterday by the likeable member for Don Valley (Mr. Gillies.)

Mr. Gillies: The party proposal.

Mr. Gillespie: I accept that. Your leader endorsed it today. Two weeks ago this same member, the spokesman for the economic troika of the Conservative party, stated that if the Conservatives had been elected to form a government on October 30 they would not have brought in wage and price controls. Only yesterday he said that if a Conservative government had been elected on October 30 it would have brought in wage and price controls. This is an incredible position for anyone to take and, I suggest, even more so for a Conservative. I think most would agree that the Conservatives, more than anyone, dwell in the past.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Gillespie: They are specialists in hindsight. They are the ones who are usually looking back. But when this man looks back, he finds two stories. He has not yet made up his mind. In his speech on the budget, the hon. member for Don Valley put forward the proposal to freeze immediately all wages, prices, interest and dividends in Canada for a period of 30 to 90 days—

Mr. Gillies: Sixty to 90 days.

Mr. Gillespie: —and thereafter put them under a comprehensive system of controls. Judging by the reaction this proposal had among his backbenchers and the comments of his leader today, that position has been endorsed by his party. We are aware that the Conservatives have been inching toward this position for some time. When questioned on this particular issue, the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Stanfield), as usual, stated, "Yes, we would not be afraid to introduce controls if necessary"—"if necessary" being underlined. Why has the Conservative party now come to the conclusion that the situation is so critical that the government should control wages and prices for Canadian workers and producers?

Mr. Baldwin: We heard the budget.

Mr. Gillespie: When he appeared on the CBC television program "Encounter," the hon. member for Don Valley said that a move toward controls could only be made on the basis of a national emergency. I think those were his words, "a national emergency." He was asked:

> Do you think that five per cent inflation would justify a national emergency?

The hon. member replied:

No, I'm not suggesting that.

Was the member really criticizing the Minister of Finance (Mr. Turner) for not introducing an emergency measure to deal with 5 per cent inflation? Was there any need for it at that moment?

Mr. Baldwin: As long as you stay over there, there is an emergency.

Mr. Gillespie: The hon. member for Don Valley assured the viewing public, "No, no". I can understand that even if there has not developed a critical national emergency to justify the sudden conversion of the hon. member for Don Valley and other members of his party, there has at least developed a critical political emergency among Conservatives recently, one that apparently drives them to desperate last resorts. The extent of their desperation may possibly best be measured by the extent to which they have reversed their positions over the past several months.

Let me remind hon. members of some of the positions taken by leading spokesmen of the Conservative party. In a column in the Telegram, a newspaper that used to exist in Toronto and to which the hon. member for Don Valley contributed—I am not saying that had anything to do with its demise—he told his readers that he did not believe that wage and price controls were effective anti-inflationary measures.

Mr. Gillies: What date?

Mr. Gillespie: April, 1971.

Mr. Gillies: Two years ago.

Mr. Gillespie: Furthermore, he warned they would create far more problems than they might solve.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Gillespie: I can understand the lack of interest of members opposite in being reminded of some of these remarks. He said controls were extremely difficult to administer and could only possibly be effective if they were applied to all segments of the economy and were widely accepted. In addition, he wrote:

—price and wage controls inevitably bring rationing. Once the price for a particular product is fixed, the only way it can be distributed among all the people who want it is through some such system.

It was just over two years ago—it seems like yesterday—that the government and the public were being sternly lectured by the Leader of the Opposition. I want to recall his words at that time. He complained:

There has been a lot of loose talk about wage and price controls—even cabinet ministers are mentioning it these days—as the answer to price stability in Canada.

I put these things on the record because it is obvious the Conservative party looked at these techniques and rejected them until the desperation of their political situation and frustrations caused them to reverse their position.

Mr. Baldwin: That was five budgets ago, Benson's three and Turner's two.

Mr. Gillespie: I wish to remind hon. members of the statements they made on this particular subject. I again quote the Leader of the Opposition.

Mr. Nowlan: What date?

Mr. Gillespie: It is roughly two years ago.

Mr. Alexander: Things have changed.

Mr. Gillespie: He was talking on a question of principle, and I do not think the principles of the Leader of the Opposition change that quickly. He said:

It is important for us to recognize the far-reaching implications of such controls, which, by their very nature, could be nothing better than a short-term solution, taken as a final resort after all other means failed.

• (1510)

An hon. Member: We agree with that.

Mr. Gillespie: What would be the consequence of controls? Let us listen to the Conservative leader. He said:

They would cause untold resentment among groups and individuals who felt unfairly done by and they would result in a climate of constant confrontation.

Mr. Stanfield: These are continuing controls.

Mr. Gillespie: These are the positions, Mr. Speaker, that the hon. Leader of the Opposition took.

Mr. Stanfield: The minister is not talking about control at all. He is quoting me absolutely out of context.

Mr. Gillespie:

in addition, of course, they would inevitably lead to a highly centralized and therefore inefficient, form of economic planning.

Mr. Stanfield: That's right.

Mr. Gillespie: Only last September the Premier of the Conservative government of Ontario was warning the Canadian Chamber of Commerce of the difficulties of achieving consensus in support of controls. He said that once launched, controls reshape the economy to the extent that the consequences of their ultimate repeal are very difficult to forecast and indeed may be quite hazardous.

I should emphasize, Mr. Speaker, that the government has never ruled out the possibility that price and wage controls might become necessary as a last resort to curb an inflationary spiral that seriously threatened the well-being of the nation. Indeed, despite the criticism of the Leader of the Opposition, the government a long time ago undertook the planning of a control system as a contingency measure.

An hon. Member: If we suggest it now, you will accept it tomorrow.

Mr. Gillespie: We recognize that inflation is a serious problem and in the budget we propose a number of important measures to help moderate the risk of rising prices and incomes. We do not believe that all the present circumstances, taken together, are sufficiently critical to justify the state interfering so drastically in the economy of the country and lives of the people. Quite apart from the fact that there is no evidence of the kind of strong national consensus in support of controls that would be essential to make them work, there is little reason to believe that they would be effective.

I would draw the attention of the hon. member to the recent experience in the United States which he quoted, and particularly to the increase in food prices in January. The strongest inflationary pressures have been evident in the case of food, and other countries have demonstrated that food is less amenable to control. In the United States and in the United Kingdom, imported foods and basic agricultural commodities have been exempted from controls.

Food prices have been rising sharply in Canada and around the world because of shortages in production of many agricultural products in the face of continuing strong growth in world demand. The fact that food prices jumped by 2 per cent to 3 per cent in the United States last month—the sharpest increase in 20 years—suggests strongly that controls are no solution to that fundamental problem either for the producer or the consumer.

I share the concern of all Canadians for the problem of rising prices, but I believe that Canadians are also wise enough to distinguish between a national emergency, requiring the government to take over control of prices and incomes, and a political emergency generated as part of a desperate last resort by the Conservative party to take over the government.

An hon. Member: Nonsense.

Mr. Gillespie: I suspect we are hitting pretty close to the mark. There is a fair amount of heat on the other side.

An hon. Member: You didn't write that speech.

Mr. Hees: Those fellows used to write better stuff for me.

Mr. Gillespie: This would not be the first time the Conservatives have been victims of their opportunism. It is clearly a desperation move and in my view an irresponsible one. The United States, the hon. member for Don Valley stated, had used price controls to break inflationary psychology, but he must know that his recommendation that we impose them at this time would work against the very anti-inflationary psychology which he has advocated. Mr. Speaker, he is presenting himself as a fireman who would dampen the fires of inflation, but he has turned out to be an arsonist.

Mr. Nowlan: And you are turning out to be a joker.

Mr. Gillespie: I do not believe the Canadian people will be taken in by this exercise in opportunism.

Mr. Gillies: Let's test them.

Mr. Gillespie: I should like now, Mr. Speaker, to turn to the other item I want to talk about this afternoon, the question of the changing trading environment and the importance of maintaining an efficient secondary manufacturing industry. Budget debates are a time for stock-taking, to assess recent events, to look at Canadian positions in a rapidly shifting trading international world, a time to examine our options and our opportunities, a time to look the future squarely in the eye, a time for realism. In my view, it is not a time for rhetoric but a time to look at the facts of international life.

What sort of facts am I talking about? I should like to refer to half a dozen. Fact one is President Nixon's measures of August, 1971. The United States' unilateral action at that time to meet a growing merchandise trade imbalance has triggered a profound change in moods among the major trading nations. These measures, Mr. Speaker, have generated a new protectionism in many important corners in the United States and resulted in such measures as DISC and the Burke-Hartke bill before Congress. The August, 1971, action has galvanized trading partners of the United States into re-examining their traditional trading relationships with that country. It has created a new awareness in Canada of the importance of our manufacturing industry and the vulnerability of some sections of it. The Nixon measures of August, 1971, have clearly underlined the need to seek multilateral solutions to trading, monetary and balance of payments problems.

Fact two is that as a nation we in Canada have an enormous stake in international trade. Over 50 per cent of the value of the goods we produce are exported. Let us look for a moment at the make-up of our imports and our exports. The major part of our exports is in crude materials and semi-fabricated products; roughly 60 per cent, or 40 per cent in end products. On the import side, two-thirds of our imports are end products and one-third in the crude or semi-fabricated classification. Those figures are for the year 1972.

Let us look now at our exports to the United States. Most of our end products go there; in fact, 85 per cent are the most sophisticated manufacturing products. If we exclude the items in the auto pact, then 70 per cent of our end products are exported to the United States.

Fact three is that we have the fastest growing labour force in the world. If we are to provide job opportunities for that labour force today, tomorrow, five years and ten years from now we must have a strong, growing and competitive secondary manufacturing base. Such a base will provide direct jobs but, even more, it will provide indirect jobs in the goods related service sector, particularly those related to the manufacturing or goods producing industries as well as creating the wealth to provide for the increase of jobs in the personal services sector.

Fact four is that the government's actions of last May were a clear response to the realities which had become apparent since August, 1971, realities to which attention had been particularly drawn by the Smithsonian agreement of December, 1971, when it became apparent that a new international trading situation had developed. I am referring specifically to the reduction in the corporate income tax rate from 50 per cent to 40 per cent and, for all private Canadian-controlled corporations, the reduction to 20 per cent on the first $50,000 of taxable income, in addition to the provision for fast write-off of equipment in the manufacturing and secondary processing industries to facilitate the expansion and modernization and pollution abatement within these industries.

Let us look at fact five, the United States devaluation measures taken two weeks ago. The full impact of this move is not yet apparent and probably will not be so for some weeks or months, maybe even longer. But this step constitutes one of the most significant post-war economic developments affecting the trading world. It has to be seen against the background of an even more serious United States balance of payment problem than that which existed at the time of the measures taken in August, 1971. It has to be seen in the light of the forthcoming GATT negotiations, the multilateral negotiations among the trading nations of the world. It has to be seen in the context of our negotiations to gain wider access for our products in the markets of Europe, Japan, the United States and the other trading nations of the world while at the same time being prepared to give up advantages with respect to certain exports to the Canadian market.

Fact six is that account must now be taken of Britain's entry into the European Common Market, an event which gives rise to a new uncertainty among Canadian manufacturers and exporters. The British market has traditionally been our largest in Europe. The potential of the Common Market as far as Canadian exporters are concerned is considerable; that market has been expanding at a significantly greater rate than the United Kingdom market. Nevertheless, the situation at present is one of additional uncertainty for Canadian manufacturers.

Fact seven is the emergence of the Pacific rim countries and, in particular, the importance of the Japanese market to Canadian producers. In my view we are entering a crucial period for Canada as a trading nation, a time in which to make special efforts to develop foreign markets for our manufactured goods.

Mr. Gillies: How does the budget help to do that?

Mr. Gillespie: Mr. Speaker, may I suggest, through you, to hon. members opposite that if they have questions to ask me at the end of my speech, I shall be pleased to try to answer them. This is no time for a passive attitude toward our manufacturing industries. If we adopt such an attitude we shall fail Canadians now and we shall fail future generations from the point of view of seeking the great opportunities which can be ours.

Mr. Gillies: Platitudes.

Mr. Gillespie: Some people, you know, are concerned about this. I think there are some on the other side of the House who are concerned about it. But not all of them, judging by the kind of interruptions which we have heard this afternoon.

Mr. Stanfield: We have heard these platitudes too often from you fellows.

Mr. Gillespie: The Canadian Labour Congress is concerned about the Burke-Hartke bill and the protectionist attitude in the United States. The Canadian manufacturing industry is also concerned about that kind of sentiment developing. I think the provinces are concerned. Certainly we are concerned, and I should like to think that all hon. members opposite are concerned.

Mr. Stanfield: We are concerned, with a minister like you reporting for them.

Mr. Gillespie: Mr. Speaker, I am giving hon. members the background, explaining why I think the manufacturing industry is so important at this time. I should like to make a comparison between the rates of corporate taxation in Canada and in several of the countries with which we compete. The rate of corporate tax in the United States is 48 per cent; in Japan it is 35 per cent; in the United Kingdom it is 40 per cent. We hope to make it 40 per cent, Mr. Speaker—

An hon. Member: Have you discussed this with Stanley?

Mr. Gillespie: —and 20 per cent on the first $50,000 of taxable income earned by private Canadian-controlled corporations. If we are to be competitive in world trade, our tax rates must be competitive too.

Let me say this with respect to the employment situation. In the last five years, employment in the manufacturing industry has risen by approximately 100,000. There are presently about two million Canadians directly employed in the manufacturing industry. The output of Canadian manufacturing industry in the last five years has increased by 25 per cent, that is, an increase of 25 per cent in physical volume, amounting to a substantial increase in the productivity of the industry in terms of the number of people employed. Employment in the service sector, which is directly related to the manufacturing sector, has increased by 15 per cent. The point is that the growth of Canadian jobs is inextricably hitched to the growth of development of manufacturing industry.

Mr. Speaker, let me briefly review the recent trade performance. That performance has been excellent. In many ways it has been exceptional. Export sales were up 12 per cent last year, roughly double the rate of increase in the previous year, and there is every indication that they will be moving ahead at a rate even greater than last year. There were significant increases in exports to the Japanese market as well as the United States market. However, no significant increase was recorded in exports to the European market. This is why I say we cannot afford complacency. It is a time to assist manufacturing industry to be fully competitive in the coming decade, fully prepared to meet the tests of the new set of circumstances to be negotiated under the GATT agreements.

Let me mention very briefly various aspects of the support which the department is giving to manufacturing industry. The record is clear as to the success of a number of programs we have initiated to promote export market development. By way of example I would refer to the importance of trade fairs and especially to the Peking trade fair. A number of Canadian manufacturers went to China to meet some of their opposite numbers and it was announced a few days ago by Orenda Engines that they had obtained a substantial contract there for industrial turbines. There are many who say that the Chinese market is not a big one for Canada, but here is a tangible example of a deal that was negotiated very quickly.

Shortly, during the month of March, there will be a series of seminars across Canada, or let me call them missions. Over 40 trade representatives from our 80 offices around the world will be meeting in nine cities in Canada. They will be taking a sector by sector approach that is aimed at trying to identify for Canadian manufacturers and suppliers specific market opportunities in specific countries around the world.

In the minute that I have left to me, one matter I might emphasize is that this is a crucial time to move forward. It is not a time for the faint-hearted; it is a time for the confident. I am confident that the Canadian manufacturing industry, employers and employees, are equal to the task of creating a new trading environment. They are equal to the challenge of innovation and of developing new markets for Canadian products. They are equal to the task of helping us expand the markets of Canada. But let us be under no illusion: this is going to require determination. It will require a variety of measures and the support of this House for the kind of measures contained in the budget, measures aimed at making the manufacturing and the processing industries of Canada competitive on a worldwide basis.

Mr. F. Oberle (Prince George-Peace River): Mr. Speaker, I speak for the first time to this distinguished gathering. I feel in doing so I am more privileged than any other member of this assembly since I did not have the good fortune to inherit this land by birth. I came to Canada a little more than 20 years ago, and as far as I can determine I am the first Canadian coming from Germany following two world wars who ever acceded to such high office. My election victory was not just a personal victory; it was a victory also for all Canadians who, like myself, foster a dream of multiculturalism.

As a new member, I may at times have to call on Your Honour's indulgence as I am sure you will find that my approach to the problems presented to the House is that of a practical man, one who has learned through his involvement in business to look for simple solutions to problems which at first appear complex. There is not another country in the world where there are so many opportunities for a man, where there is such a vast horizon and a chance to fulfil one's wildest dream so long as one has the guts to dream it and to work at it.

In the deliberations of this House I have found myself taking an approach in sharp contrast to that taken by most of my colleagues who, by virtue of their professional training, are never ready or prepared to do anything that is unprecedented. I have learned through the best school, that of experience, that the worst practice is to do nothing that has not been done before.

In Canada today we are faced with problems for which there are no precedents, all of which requiring a solution that cannot be found in the great volumes in our library. Yes, some of these problems provide men of the twentieth century with a unique challenge—a challenge to try something fresh and to embark upon something new. But we must muster the courage to admit that in some areas of our endeavours we have been going in the wrong direction. We must not be discouraged by the monstrous task of amending the laws of this country, some of which are in drastic conflict with the needs of our time.

I should like to make a few comments in connection with the remarks made by the hon. member for York South (Mr. Lewis). He compared the provincial governments and some of the activities taking place in the western regions of our land. I would have liked to rise on a point of order while he was speaking, Mr. Speaker, but since my time is short and I will shortly be catching a plane, I did not interrupt him. The hon. member referred to the province of Alberta and the disastrous oil exploration policies of that government.

May I tell him that today I met with a group of people from northern British Columbia who had just driven down the Alaska highway behind a string of trucks which were pulling out of the province of British Columbia. These were people who had been engaged in exploration and who had been making a contribution to the economy of British Columbia. This makes me wonder why the hon. member's party has such hordes of supporters in the western provinces. Maybe they are leeching off the corporate welfare bums out there. There is no New Democratic Party in the have-not provinces of this country; the party is where all the rich people live. The hon. member has been to my riding, and if the same government is still in office the next time he comes out he might not get the steak that was fed to him previously, but a peanut butter sandwich.

The hon. gentleman's indulgence in political skullduggery has made me digress, so may I now say something about the budget. I want to talk about some of the problems that are not unique to my constituency and the people I represent, but are of great concern to all Canadians. Certainly they are relevant to the debate before the House.

Since such a major part of my constituency comprises agricultural land and so many of the people I represent are affected by the outdated, unimaginative and, yes, disastrous policies of the Department of Agriculture, I should like to make known my views about the farming industry. I hope the government does not consider that the hand-down of the family farm from father to son, when the father dies, is a solution to the situation farmers are facing in Canada today.

The policies pursued by the Department of Agriculture cannot be interpreted in any other way than that they are designed to do away with an industry that has caused the Canadian consumer and, as a result, this parliament so many problems over the last generation. The budget is now solving certain problems by removing tariffs on some farm commodities so these commodities can enter Canada at a cheaper rate. Our farm credit policies, our transportation policies in relation to farm commodities and our marketing policies for farm products have been worked out by people in the department, all of which seem to be designed to destroy an industry that is so vital to our economy and to the preservation of the way of life for the greatest part of this country. Farming is an industry with which, if it were properly managed, we could make a great contribution to the rest of the world.

During the last election campaign we heard much about wage and price controls. The government pointed out the dangers that were involved in such revolutionary policies, yet the farmers of Canada have lived for years with controls on the price of their products. Indeed, their income has been controlled by the percentage point that the Canadian consumer is prepared to pay in the supermarket. Thus it is obvious to me that we are committed to maintaining the standard of living that is now enjoyed by other Canadians who are spending only about 18 per cent of their income on food, compared with other countries whose people have to pay much, much more. This is why we must find ways of subsidizing the Canadian farmer to a much greater extent and in ways different from those proposed by the budget. Let me assure the House that the needs of Canadian farmers would be much better served if we were to allow them a place in the free enterprise system and let them charge for their product what the product is worth in relation to other commodities.

With respect to world markets and the position that Canada must take in the marketing of our farm products, we must first assure our customers of continuity of supply. In order to do that we must have storage facilities and transportation systems much different from those that we have today.

Last but not least, Mr. Speaker, we must as a total community commit ourselves to helping the farmer in times of natural disaster of the sort that has plagued farmers in the Peace River country of northern British Columbia and Alberta during the past three years. Farmers in that area have suffered three consecutive crop failures. The Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Whelan) offered these farmers $400 per farm in settlement. I was ashamed to relay that news to the people in my constituency because such a payment is an insult. That $400 was the only income some of them had last year.

The problems I am referring to are not unique to the farming industry. Another example of such bungling is seen in our approach to the problems facing our native citizens. Economists have proven to the Department of Indian Affairs that if we could do away with their department and its 5,606 "experts", the $386 million distributed annually, together with other funds handed out in gobs, would provide every Indian and Eskimo family with a guaranteed annual income of $7,407. Is the increase in the budget designed to engage these experts or to help Indian people? The real problem, of course, is that money is usually the last thing these people really need. Most of the people I have talked about have never learned what it means in this complex world to get along on a budget. That should, of course, be not too surprising to our friends across the aisle because there is no one in Canada today with more problems living on a budget than our federal government.

As a youngster in a foreign land, I read about the great human qualities inherent in Canada's Indian people. I read about the beautiful culture and religion they once possessed and I find that, in an attempt to integrate these people into our own way of life, our own culture and religion, we have committed cultural and religious genocide on these people. Those are harsh words, but I have no other way to describe what is happening to our natives in Canada.

How else would one describe the discriminating ways in which they are treated in our courts, in our schools and on the street? How else would one describe the total ignorance we display in respect of any land claims and aboriginal rights they may have? How else would one describe the way in which we play them off against each other, by segregating them into factions called full-blooded Indians, half-breeds, Métis, Eskimos? It is high time we recognized the fact that we must establish our natives with a status called "citizens plus" and also provide them with every opportunity to maintain their own culture.

There are two reasons for which we must commit ourselves to immediate action. The first is that our moral laws, such as they are, will not permit us to allow these things to continue. The second is that if we do not make a genuine effort on behalf of these people now, we will have a crisis in Canada in the not too distant future that will make the negro problem in the United States look like a Sunday school picnic.

Our ignorance toward underprivileged people is not confined to Indians or natives alone. In fact, if we have any crisis in Canada today it is not an economic crisis, it is not an environmental crisis, it is a social crisis. I ask the minister, what has the budget really done to eliminate this crisis? We have a third of our population deprived, by their social background, of participation in our free enterprise system. A third of Canada's people are snowed under with payments for goods they cannot afford, by high interest rates and by an all-out effort by our government to keep them out of work. There is just no other way I can describe all the hand-outs and gobs of money to those who can come up with the best excuse for not wanting to work.

I am not concerned about the vast amount of money we are spending. Why, we have lots of money. Let us dig out more resources. I am concerned about the loss of productivity of those people. That, Mr. Speaker, is the real crisis. It reflects itself upon our position in world markets. There are just not enough people with their shoulders behind the wheel; and the budget does not encourage them to expand their businesses and put some of these people to work. It reflects itself in the way we treat those Canadians who really need help; the old, the sick, the handicapped and the poor. There is not a country in the world which can afford that kind of luxury, and I know that the days are counted in Canada.

I maintain that our government does not have the responsibility to provide everyone with a guaranteed income, but we do have the responsibility to provide everyone with the opportunity to work. I am ashamed, as a Canadian, with all our opportunities and potentialities, not to have lived up to these responsibilities. Why, Mr. Speaker, are we willing to accept 6 per cent or 7 per cent unemployment when countries with much less potential have a zero unemployment rate? Why is it that in Canada we never strive for perfection?

Having said all that, I would now like to say a few words about the apparent discovery of the west and the northern regions of our land. I find a gap between what is said in the Speech from the Throne and what is said in this budget, because there is no mention of the discovery of the west in the budget speech. Coming from the northern part of British Columbia, it is quite an experience for me to travel to the nation's capital and en route to visit some of the great cities of our country, cities into which we have plans to herd 85 per cent of our population by 1980. What an insult to the intelligence of the human race!

It is unbelievable to me that anyone in their right mind would pursue such disastrous policies when the rest of our vast land beckons to be challenged. Am I really to believe, Mr. Speaker, that the people who have been born into the concrete jungles of our nation are suddenly about to creep out of the dim and the glare, out of the smog and the smoke, and embark on the development of the north? Are they really serious about the development of one of the world's last frontiers in a way no other region has ever been developed? Are they really serious when they say that the development of the northern resources must be carried out in harmony with the protection of the environment?

Are they really considering that there is a breed of people in northern Canada now which can be compared with the early settlers and pioneers, the only difference being that they are fighting against much greater odds because so-called civilization is much closer to them? Are they considering the native people who have lived there for centuries and are still there? Mr. Speaker, they had better consider all those things. They had better have a convincing story because the people in the north will not stand for any more blunders. They had better have the answers to some vital questions. For whom are they developing and exploiting the north? What benefits will be derived by the people there? Who will pay for the social structure, the services, the transportation network?

Parts of my constituency have been subjected to an ambitious development program. The city of Prince George is one of Canada's fastest growing centres but there is no plan for any of the infrastructure to which I have referred. There are not nearly enough facilities for our young people. Our old age pensioners—people who have lived there for the major part of their lives—are shipped out to strange places 300 to 400 miles away because they have become chronically ill. A new hospital under construction will be 105 per cent occupied if and when it is ever finished. We have to fight for, beg and steal every penny we spend on post-secondary education and our facilities are hopelessly inadequate. After 20 years of struggle we finally witnessed the construction of an air terminal which would adequately serve a city half the size of Prince George. Nobody has yet determined who, and to what extent the three levels of government are responsible for urban renewal, for transportation and road networks, because everybody passes the buck.

The village of McBride, with its surrounding area of 3,500 people, does not have televison and the latest estimate holds out hope for TV three years from now. What a barbaric approach to the development of that region which we have learned to know as mid-Canada. Are we going to repeat this disaster as we embark upon the development of the north? Yet with a new and imaginative development strategy the north could well be the answer to a lot of pressing problems. But the policy would have to be worked out by human beings, not computers.

Mr. Speaker, before we commit ourselves to any more northern development we must look at all these things. We must learn from all the mistakes already made. Most of all, we must assure ourselves of a government prepared to accept the challenge, a government convinced and strong. As a government, we we must say no to foreign corporations who are blindly pursuing policies of exploitation. We must also say no to international unions which are acting irresponsibly in our country by depriving our labour force of shaping their own destiny.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Boulanger): Order, please. I regret to interrupt the hon. member, but his allotted time has expired.

Mr. William Rompkey (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of the Environment): Mr. Speaker, it is a great pleasure to rise as a member of this House on the first occasion and it is a particular pleasure to take part in the budget debate. I want to say to you, Sir, I am very pleased to be here at this time as the member for Grand Falls-White Bay-Labrador. May I also take this opportunity of saying to you and to those who occupy that chair how impressed I have been with the impartiality and fairness with which you conduct yourselves.

I want to tell the House something about my riding. I will try to relate my remarks to the budget speech because certain aspects of the budget have very wide implications for my riding.

This is one of the largest ridings in Canada, encompassing an area of about 130,000 square miles including a great part of the island of Newfoundland and the territory of Labrador of some 112,000 square miles. It is a widespread riding with diverse and divergent social and economic problems ranging from the problems of the woods industry in central Newfoundland through the beautiful Green Bay area with its great tourist potential, through the area of White Bay which is primarily concerned with the fishing industry, to the whole territory of Labrador.

This area has been called the last great storehouse of natural wealth, but even in Labrador there are great contradictions. On the coast are the small isolated communities sometimes ranging from two or three families in the summer months to communities of 1,000 people. In the central part of Labrador we have the communities of Hamilton Inlet, Goose Bay—which is now undergoing a transitional stage—and in the west one of the greatest hydroelectric developments in the world at Churchill Falls. Farther west there are the great iron mines of Labrador City and Wabush.

It is a land of contrasts. There, too, we have the Indian and Eskimo communities. These people are desperately trying to adapt themselves to the twentieth century. If we think we are having cultural problems in adapting to the rapid pace of technology, these people are suffering even more so in that regard. These changes baffle all of us who are Canadians whether we live in small villages or large cities. So, in a way, this riding is a microcosm of Canada with problems of regional disparity, problems of great distances to be spanned, problems of communication from one end to the other, and problems of economic and social development.

It is to areas such as mine that this budget is mostly aimed. I take issue with the term that our areas are have-not provinces. They have been described as such in the past. We may be have-not in economic terms, but there is a great cultural heritage there and a great historic background from which to draw. In these areas there is a sense of identity and a sense of community which my friends from Quebec may understand very well but which I believe is lacking today in many areas of North America and, indeed, in the world where the impact of technology has been felt. So there is a lot there to be thankful for.

I hope that when we plan our future in these areas we will take into account our way of life and find the kind of province we want. Like all parts of the world, we have felt the impact of rampant technology. Industry today is becoming capital-intensive rather than labour-intensive. Jobs are disappearing whether a man works in a fishing boat, in the iron mines, in the mills or wherever it happens to be. Those who have prided themselves on their independence are dismayed and frustrated now in having to accept government assistance. It is my hope and belief that this budget, reflecting as it does the policies of this government, will alleviate the economic problems from which my riding suffers.

I was extremely pleased to see the proposed increase in pensions for the elderly and the veterans. I think we have a responsibility to both these groups. Money in their pockets should represent an asset to the economy. But I believe we must do more than that. We must not simply look after our elderly people; we must create a positive role for them in our society. I am very pleased to see the New Horizons program and the extension of it this year. This should be a positive way whereby we can draw on the experience of the older people in our society so that they may play a useful role with the knowledge and experience only they possess.

We must solve the unemployment problem. We must give people in the disadvantaged areas, people who pride themselves on their independence, an opportunity to get back their self-respect. I was particularly pleased to see the tax cuts. This should be of great help to people, particularly those in the lower income group. The mothers in my riding, I believe, will be particularly pleased to see the tax taken off children's clothing and other food items. This will help combat the high cost of living in many areas.

I may say here that I look forward to the time when the government introduces the revised family income security plan. These two measures together should be of great help to the people in the lower income group. There are other pressing problems in my riding which obviously could not be dealt with in the budget speech but with which the government must deal. This will mean positive expenditure and government action.

Perhaps I might say a few words about the fishing industry in my area because it is particularly important. At the present time this industry is in a transitional stage. The time really has passed when a man could survive through the use of a small boat in the inshore fishery. Nevertheless, we have a responsibility to that man. He is the man who prosecuted the fishery for years, who survived on his own, who wanted to make a contribution to society and who is prepared to be independent. We all know there is far too little of this in the world today. So We must preserve the fishery in so far as possible. This industry has felt the impact of technology, as have other industries in the province. Yet there is an increasing demand for food, and prices are improving. We must help the inshore fishermen. I think the government is dealing with that problem and will continue to do so.

I take issue with those on the other side who criticize the department which is presently administering those policies. I want to tell them that the Minister of Fisheries (Mr. Davis) is not dead. He is alive and well. He is administering a very capable department served by a very capable staff in the fisheries branch, many of whom I am very pleased to say are Newfoundlanders. I have great confidence in that branch and in the department and I am very pleased to be associated with it.

This year there is a great need for improved icebreaking services in our province. I note with satisfaction that there is provision in the estimates for at least one more icebreaker. However, I feel this will not be enough and that there will have to be more expenditures in this region if we are to help the woods industry in central Newfoundland and the fishing industry on the Newfoundland and Labrador coasts. I look forward to the time when government will provide even more funds for this very necessary service.

I was pleased to note that live television has come to Goose Bay. I am disappointed that it is not yet in Labrador West. I look forward to the time when the people on the Labrador coast will also receive live television. In fact, it may very well be that they will receive live television before they have a telephone service, because there are still communities in that area which do not have this very necessary service. Communication in northern Newfoundland and in many parts of my riding is far from acceptable either in terms of telephone or mail. It is still extremely frustrating to me to try to communicate with my constituents in that area. I urge the government, either directly or through agencies connected with it, to try to solve this problem and take steps immediately to improve these essential services which all Canadians should enjoy and to which they are entitled. These people still are not in the mainstream of Canadian life, and meanwhile the rate of change is increasing.

I was very pleased to hear my colleague, the Minister of Regional Economic Expansion (Mr. Jamieson) speak of the decentralization of his department. This is a most important department to us both in terms of infrastructure development and industrial incentive. The idea of bringing decision-making down to the local level is something to which we have looked forward for some time. It will allow us, in that area and in all areas, to do our own thing, because I believe it is not simply enough for government to provide goods and services for people; we must ask the people at the local level to assist and take part in the decision-making process and assume responsibility for the policies and programs that will affect their lives.

I hope the government will make an effort to build a highway across Labrador which is one of the last great areas of the north to be opened up. We have seen what has been done in the Yukon territory and the Northwest Territories. We have seen that area being slowly opened up by the construction of highways. I hope the same thing will occur in northern Labrador. I hope the government will give every consideration to building the highway across Labrador to open up that great area, and to the highway up the northern peninsula from the national park which is presently under construction, as well as the road from Baie Verte to La Scie which will connect the communities in Green Bay. These are some of the problems I shall be bringing before the government during the coming months.

While there are problems, there is great potential, particularly in the Labrador area. I believe it has a great future; and having lived there for eight years and now having the honour to serve in the House, I am proud to be able to help build that future. I believe that the economic development of Labrador has great meaning, not only for that area of the province and the whole province but indeed for the whole of Canada. And when we are made aware of power shortages that exist on this continent, such as have been experienced recently, we realize how much emphasis we must give to the development of the power potential in that area.

Labrador needs a great deal of attention. To this end I believe it should have a member representing it in the House, a member wholly and solely for Labrador, as have the Northwest Territories and the Yukon. I give notice now that I shall be introducing a bill in the House which I hope will be debated and will receive a great deal of consideration, a bill which will ask the House to provide a member for Labrador in its own right so that its problems and its potential are put in their proper perspective.

We in Grand Falls-White Bay-Labrador want to make our own unique contribution to the Canadian mosaic. We must create the kind of province we want. But the kind of province we can have depends on the responsiveness of the government of Canada. I believe this budget is an indication that the government is listening and is prepared to respond.

Mr. Henry Latulippe (Compton): Mr. Speaker, I am very pleased to have the opportunity of making some comments on the budget, a quite fascinating but extremely complicated subject.

I will say at the outset that this budget presumes upon the present to provide for future needs, that is the present is used to survive and the future to exist.

The fact that we have a minority government at the present time indirectly helps the Canadian people, but does not solve the basic problems. The piling up of deficits will be detrimental to Canadians later on. This is why I stated that the present is mortgaged on the future.

According to the Minister of Finance (Mr. Turner), the primary objective of the budget is to control unemployment, poverty and inflation by reducing taxes, increasing old age security pensions and writing off certain costs for the benefit of some industries.

In 1967, 1968, 1969 and 1970, the Liberal government was saying and doing quite the contrary. At that time, the government said that to fight inflation, it was necessary to impose credit restrictions and tax increases, and at the same time it eliminated public works in the name of inflation.

And today, the budget introduced by the same government but by a different Minister of Finance advocates the contrary. We are wondering whether this is logical. Before we were told that it was necessary to balance the budget to solve the problem. Now a deficit of the order of $2 billion is acceptable and we are told that this is the only means to restore balance to our economy and to fight inflation.

We realize that to balance the government budget, the taxpayers' budget should be unbalanced and that for balancing again the taxpayers' budget, the government's budget should be unbalanced. In this manner, the economic unbalance grows worse, the cost of living goes on increasing, the dollar value keeps decreasing and inflation causes more and more damages.

Let me tell you that from now on, present and future can no longer be administered as the past. The past gave us deficit budgets and tax increases; in some budgets, it has been proposed to lower taxes and to increase the money supply in return for larger deficits.

No golden mean has been found; we cannot achieve a truly balanced economy. We can give no equilibrium to our economy. Nothing must be changed. I must say at once that there is no need to change our present economic structure. However, to rectify the system, we should modify the sharing of national production, taking into account the consumers' expenses and the capitalists' reserves.

We produce in abundance, we accumulate surpluses, but we do not have the mechanisms necessary to allow the consumers to get their fair share of the production.

In 1944, national product was worth $12 billion; in 1973, it has reached $114 billion, which represents an increase of $102 billion. Although 9 to 10 per cent of the labour force is not working, production could easily reach $125 billion. In spite of this gigantic production, we have yet to find the means to meet the needs of the people.

In fact, we can say that the economy is not balanced at all, that neither the government nor the opposition has a concrete solution to offer that we might truly live in a country where the economy is balanced to satisfy the citizens.

Mr. Speaker, members of the House voted themselves a salary increase pegged to the rise in the cost of living and old age pensions have also been hiked but not quite enough to match the cost of living. On the other hand, family allowances have remained the same since 1944, that is $6 and $8, whereas the gross national product has gone up by $102 billion since 1944. This proves the illogical thinking of the government in refusing to boost family allowances as well. Families are where the need is most urgent and they are the largest consumers. This is where the purchasing power should be.

The Minister of Finance said in his budget speech that 750,000 Canadians will no longer pay income tax beginning in 1973. Why? Because they are too poor to pay any. They were not paying any either before. The basic exemption has been raised from $1,500 to $1,600 for single people, and from $2,850 to $3,000 for married people. It should have been raised to $3,000 for single people and to $5,000 for married people. The exemptions are far from logical. The cost of living is several points above the basic raise as agreed to; there is thus nothing in this bill to increase the taxpayer's buying power. It is in fact just window dressing.

As the hon. member for Edmonton West (Mr. Lambert) has said, the removal of the 10 per cent tax on food, chocolate and soft drinks is a mere crumb from the government's economic table.

The increase in old age security pensions from $82 to $100 is not in line with the increase in the cost of living, and it must not be forgotten that every increase in pensions under the present system merely contributes to a further raise in the cost of living, and sets the economy on a suicide course. No basic remedy is being applied to stabilize the economy. All this will only destabilize the economy and make life harder for Canadians, as well as bringing with it a $2 billion deficit.

Some are saying that we should not get concerned about a deficit, but when there is a majority government they will say: We must balance the budget. There is no longer any reason to accept a deficit. Then they will raise taxes and duties and cut back on public works for two, three or four years in an attempt to "rebalance" the government's budget. But they will be "unbalancing" the budget of all Canadians, because there is no happy medium in our present economy.

Mr. Speaker, in the same proportion as production is automatic, consumption must be distributed by the same technical and automatic means, by issuing new credits in order to keep pace with new public developments, and these credits must or should be issued at administration cost and reimbursed at depreciation cost. Credits should then be issued to redeem bonds as they mature in order to lower the federal public debt which is of $48 billion, in addition to the other debts of Canadians.

Mr. Speaker, in this budget, if the government really wanted to prove equal to the task, it would have cancelled at least the 11 per cent tax on building materials. The government would then have directly contributed to give purchasing power to taxpayers, to families who need houses to have a decent lodging and who cannot own one because of the 11 per cent sales tax on building materials.

Moreover, when money is needed to finance the purchase of buildings, several people pay from 10 to 12 per cent interest to the Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation. Over seven years, the interest doubles the capital; over 40 years the buyer has to pay five times the price of the house and we find it is natural. We do not say a word. The budget mentions nothing about it and it is said that one of the most beautiful budgets in Canadian history has been presented.

Mr. Speaker, this is a beggar's budget, made up of bits and pieces, which yields only token benefits; it is a patchwork budget, because this is not the kind of budget which will help the Canadian people to pay their debts and get back on their feet and which will enable our country to grow and to develop. Far from it, Mr. Speaker.

As for Canadians—politicians, journalists, economists, accountants, administrators—may I remind them, as an observer of the economic and monetary situation in Canada, since the government founded the Bank of Canada in 1934, as a result of many Royal Commissions such as the Stevens and Turgeon Commissions, and of inquiries on textile products and on the banking and financial systems, that in 1934, national production was only $4 billion; it amounts today to $102 billion and in 1973, it will reach $114 billion, which means $5,000 per capita.

We are told that we often speak about money, and that money does not grow on trees, but still, money grows somewhere! Money grows within the government, thanks to technical and legislative processes which are controlled, planned and administered, and based on the national production of goods and services as well as on the needs of Canadian citizens.

Since 1934, our whole country has been steadily progressing and moving forward. We could feel quite satisfied in respect of our natural resources, the work of people and the talent of those who administer work and capital. All of us enjoy more or less this continuous development.

Mr. Speaker, even though in all papers and reports of public meetings one can read articles about inflation, unemployment and poverty, that is no reason for brooding and crying blue murder. All these problems of inflation, unemployment and poverty are nothing more than problems of economic unbalance in the flow and distribution of money between overly rich and overly poor institutions.

Through a simple readjustment of the economic direction of government, balance would be restored and everybody would be happier. Only the repeal of the legislation on the dollar-unit would be left.

Sufficient unto the day is the evil thereof and the joy thereof. Let us be positive!

If there is an unemployment rate of 7 per cent, 93 per cent of the people have a job. If there is 25 per cent of underfeeding, there is therefore 75 per cent of overproduction. If there is 40 percent of capitalization—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Boulanger): Order. I regret to interrupt the hon. member, but his time has expired.

[English]

Mr. Ian Watson (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of State for Urban Affairs): By custom, Mr. Speaker, the budget debate allows Members of Parliament almost complete latitude in their speechmaking, and I trust you will allow me to talk about some of the particular concerns I have regarding the role of Members of Parliament as representatives of the people and, more specifically, the member of parliament's role on parliamentary committees and the role of parliamentary committees themselves.

When Canadians elect Members of Parliament to represent them here in the House of Commons, they legitimately expect their representatives, either individually or as a body, to exercise effective scrutiny over the initiatives and spending of government departments and crown agencies. More succinctly, they expect us to be able to do something about controlling government bureaucracy.

They believe that by constructive criticism we can influence the direction of government policies and government initiatives, and that we can do all this right here in the House of Commons. This public belief is continually being reinforced by the traditionalists in this chamber, most of whom seem to be the really vocal members of the House, who keep insisting and pretending that the action on the floor of the House of Commons is all-important and that if you upgrade any other aspects of this institution, in particular the House of Commons committee system, you are somehow tampering with parliamentary democracy itself. Attach too much attention to committees, and the traditionalists hint darkly that we are moving toward congressionalism.

What are the facts, Mr. Speaker? I do not have to tell you that most of what goes on in this chamber is show business pure and simple. Most questions are not asked to obtain information. Nine times out of ten, questions are either asked to embarrass or the answer is already known. Few of the millions of words of speeches that flow across the pages of Hansard ever affect government bills or government policies. By the time these items reach the floor of the House of Commons the die has been cast and policy directions have already been decided upon. The sheer modern-day volume of legislation and programs makes it impossible to give any in-depth treatment to legislation or programs on the floor of the House of Commons. The traditionalists, by continuing to pretend, in the face of reality, that it is on the House of Commons floor that all the important action occurs, are minimizing the role of Members of Parliament as representatives of the people, and in the context of 1973 Canadian society they are doing a disservice both to parliament and to the Canadian people.

Mr. Speaker, if this place is ever to become as effective as the Canadian people expect it to be and want it to be, then that increased effectiveness will have to come about through better use of the House of Commons committee system.

[Translation]

What is the immediate future of the committee system in our parliament? In the present context, Mr. Speaker, the government does not control the committees and because the official opposition does not seem to believe in the usefulness of enhancing the role of the committees, there could well result a tendency to minimize the function of committees in the parliamentary process. This would be a grave error.

[English]

I say this advisedly, Mr. Speaker! There is a tendency throughout this House right now to downplay committees. What better evidence is there than the present situation when, for the first time, the government has indicated that it is willing to have members of the opposition as chairmen of committees? What is the reaction? None of the opposition parties wants to name its members as chairmen. I think they are making a serious mistake. This is a golden opportunity for certain of their members to shine as committee chairmen. But the attitude toward the importance of committee chairmanships which has been demonstrated on all sides of the House downgrades the committee system.

Mr. Alexander: Not in the area of chairmanship.

Mr. Watson: I feel that if we had the right kind of attitude on all sides of the House, we would have a rush for the job of chairman of committees. If the opposition were serious, they would be taking the government up on its offer to have a percentage of committee chairmanships based on representation in this House.

It would be a serious mistake to minimize the role of the committees of parliament. Enhancing it, more than any other action will give hon. members the opportunity to contribute to improvement of legislation, to reveal unnecessary expenses and to suggest to the government new projects and new goals for its policies.

If, as some seem to believe, we are entering a long minority-government period in Canada, I believe this makes it all the more important to strengthen our committee system. What should be done now? The great major improvements brought about over the past years have vested in House of Commons committees, three main responsibilities: the review of the budget of government expenses, the study of bills at the very important stage of second reading, and also essential task of conducting an inquiry when a committee, under a constitutional order, is dealing with a specific subject. All this shows that actually committees play a much more significant role within the parliamentary organization. But the changes should not stop there.

[English]

I urge the government to further expand the inquiry role of our House of Commons committees. As members are aware, any inquiry role of a committee is really in the hands of the government since it, in the final analysis, has absolute control over the terms of reference given to a committee or whether they are given at all.

This government could take a giant step forward in increasing the power of House of Commons committees by establishing as an automatic practice of this House referral of annual reports of all departments to the respective standing committees. Such a practice would give committees freedom to investigate any matter mentioned in an annual report and to report to the House without control by the government. I would go even further and suggest that not only the annual reports of departments but the annual reports of every Crown corporation be automatically referred each year to the respective standing committees of the House of Commons. This, of course, would be a nightmare for civil servants and for ministers of the Crown but, Mr. Speaker, I am convinced that such a change is essential if we are to give Members of Parliament control over civil servants, government bureaucracy and red tape which the Canadian public clearly wants them to have.

Mr. Speaker, how do I envisage this extension of control by members of parliament taking place? The answer is the combining of a liberalized inquiry role, including automatic referral of annual reports, with a better and more effective use of the tools that are already available to our committees. The Senate really has shown the way to the House of Commons by its willingness to hire experts. We in the House of Commons have been reluctant to hire experts in the past, but nothing under our rules prevents our obtaining the expertise necessary to compensate for any expertise advantage which civil servants may have over Members of Parliament.

I am suggesting that members of parliament, whether they are opposition members or government backbenchers, will never be able to play the effective role which the public expect them to play in legislative changes, government programs and controlling government bureaucracy unless they equip themselves and their committees to overcome the expertise advantage of civil servants.

Mr. Alexander: Right.

Mr. Watson: Cynics may say that such a broadened committees' role is not feasible because a government would be asking for trouble by giving parliamentary committees the free rein that referral of annual reports would give to them, because governments normally do not look for trouble, and the traditionalists in the official opposition and elsewhere in the House would view this as a certain sign that we are headed toward a congressional system. This is simply not so, Mr. Speaker. I would argue that the calibre of Members of Parliament in this House and that we will find in future Canadian parliaments will not continue to accept their major role, if they are government backbenchers, as that of a vote-caster to maintain the government in power, or as a vote-caster to maintain his party's line if he is in opposition. Members will agree that if such a broadened inquiry system is to prove productive, then every side of the House will have to change its attitude toward the day to day operations of committees.

Obviously, the inquiry role of a committee will only be effective if the inquiry is approached in a fairly non-partisan way. There have been effective inquiry roles for committees in past parliaments, and they have been effective because members of all parties have conducted themselves in a non-partisan way.

Other changes of attitude will have to accompany a broader inquiry role. The government will have to learn to live with adverse and critical committee reports, and the opposition will have to restrain itself from undue partisan exploitation of adverse reports. Both government and opposition should regard these reports, which under our rules are not binding upon the government, as an additional weapon in alerting and informing public opinion. The government would have the legal right to ignore a report, but unless it was on very solid ground it would do so at its peril. It goes without saying that accompanying a broader committee role and more committee reports there must be changes in the time allotted under the rules of this House for the debate of committee reports.

How do we achieve this expanded inquiry capacity? The government could do it either by a simple declaration of intention which would be followed by referral of reports to the respective committees, and which would not be necessarily binding upon any subsequent government or—and I would prefer this—to make the change more permanent the House would agree to incorporate such an automatic referral into the orders and rules of this House.

I urge the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) and this government to give serious consideration to such a broadened committee rule, not just for this parliament but for the effect it will have on future parliaments. The public expects us as members of parliament to be more influential. We can be more influential than we now are by using the tools available to us in committee. However, over the years I have found that with the government's control over orders of referrence to committees, unless an annual report is before a committee it is almost impossible for it to get going on a subject as quickly as it should. Without an automatic system, the item is passed over. It is lost in the events that develop a few days later. By the time the committee is ready to return to it, it may be too late. If we had a system where committees would automatically receive reports, there would be no problem in proceeding when an inquiry was necessary.

In closing, Mr. Speaker, I would say to the traditionalists in both government and opposition that an expended committee inquiry role is not congressionalism in disguise; it is not a Trojan horse that will foist republicanism on an unsuspecting Canadian public; it will not have any of the dire consequences for the British parliamentary system and responsible government which traditionalists fear. But it will give Members of Parliament of every party in this House new opportunities, as representatives of their constituents and as representatives of the Canadian people as a whole, to contribute to improving the manner and the ways in which this country is governed. The new generation of members in this House will accept no less. The Canadian public will accept no less of their Members of Parliament.

Mr. Harry Kuntz (Battle River): Mr. Speaker, like the members who have spoken before me, I would like to add my sincere congratulations upon your re-election as presiding officer of the House of Commons. It is my understanding that in the past you have conducted this office in a very fair and wise manner, and I am confident this will hold true in the future. I would also like to extend my congratulations to the Deputy Speaker, the Deputy Chairman of Committees and all those who have been appointed ministers of the Crown or parliamentary secretaries. You have taken on heavy burdens of responsibility and should be commended for this.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Kuntz: At the outset, I wish to pay tribute to my predecessor, Mr. Cliff Downey, of Castor, Alberta. Mr. Downey served my constituency throughout the twenty-eighth parliament, and he served it with sincerity and desire.

Like other members before me, I have decided to speak about my constituency. I understand that this is the usual practice for a new member when giving his maiden speech. While acknowledging certain beneficial provisions in the budget proposals, I regret that they do not contain measures that will substantially reduce continuing high unemployment, effectively contain the spiralling cost of living or provide any incentive to Canadians to increase their participation in Canadian business, enterprise and development.

In support of this statement I would like to describe the existing situation in my constituency. My constituency, Battle River, is located in east central Alberta. The northwest corner is approximately 40 miles southeast of the city of Edmonton. From this point the north boundary extends due east for 132 miles to the Saskatchewan border. From this same point the boundary extends due south for 36 miles, then due west for 18 miles, south again for 24 miles, reaching the Red Deer River. It follows the Red Deer River crossing through six townships and then proceeds due east for 126 miles, reaching the Saskatchewan border. These boundaries take in approximately 9,200 square miles, with a total population of approximately 70,000 people. These people live in one of the following places: on farms, in the city of Camrose, with a population of 10,000 people and where I make my home, in the two largest towns, Wainwright and Stettler with populations between 4,000 and 5,000 each, or in one of 70 some smaller towns, villages or hamlets varying in size from 2,000 to 10 people. However, my constituency has been gradually decreasing in population with many of these centres slowly deteriorating. Even the largest ones show an increase in population per year of only 25 to 50 people.

As far as industry is concerned, we do have a few oil wells in some parts of the constituency. This has resulted in a few small gas plants and oil pumping stations. In the city of Camrose we have a pipe rolling mill which, when working to full capacity, employs about 300 people. However, since this mill was built some ten years ago it has only produced for about one half of the time. This means that for one half of the ten years this mill has employed from 200 to 300 people, the other one half of the ten years it has employed only 20 to 30 people for maintenance purposes. It is my understanding that their biggest problem, when it comes to competing in prices for contracts, is freight rates once again showing that the freight rate structure is hurting Alberta.

What all this boils down to, Mr. Speaker, is that agriculture is by far the main industry in my constituency and is, therefore, of grave concern to me. Most of our businesses are agriculture-related and what happens to the agricultural industry is directly reflected on them. I have had businessmen tell me that when the farmers are prospering, their businesses pick up and do a relatively good turnover. However, when agriculture is in a slump this automatically puts the related businesses on a downward trend.

As most members know, agriculture has not been in a very healthy position for the past several years. This, of course, is why my constituency is gradually losing population, with many towns and villages deteriorating. More and more farmers are becoming fed up with the odds they have to work against, and sell out. In support of this statement I would like to quote the following farms statistics. In the year 1956 there was a total of 574,993 farms in Canada. At that time, in order to qualify for these statistics, your land holding had to be three acres or more and your sale of farm produces had to be $250 worth or more. In the year 1961 the qualifications for these statistics were a land holder of one acre or more, and selling $50 worth of farm produces or more. Even with dropping the qualifications, the number of farms in Canada had decreased to 480,887. With the same statistical qualifications, in 1966 the total number of farms in Canada had dropped to 430,552. By the year 1971, with the same qualifications, this figure had dropped further, to 366,128. This means the number of farms declined 10.4 per cent between 1961 and 1966, and 17.2 per cent between 1966 and 1971.

In 1961, 12 per cent of all Canadians were farm residents; in 1966 only 10 per cent were farm residents and in 1971 the percentage had dropped to 7 per cent. Meanwhile, Canada's population increased from 20 million in 1961 to 22 million. We hit the 22 million mark yesterday, as hon. members who watched television will know. Along with this, on the basis of a five-year average from 1967 to 1971, farm cash receipts had increased only by .9 per cent while for the same period their operating expenses had increased by 3.69 per cent. With farm cash receipts and operating expense figures in mind, is it any wonder people are leaving the farm?

After selling out, the majority move to the larger cities, cities which are already plagued by overpopulation and unemployment. Surely it would be better and less costly to help them while they are still on the farm.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Kuntz: The most difficult problem facing farmers is the lack of a reasonable return for their produce in terms of real net income. They are continually faced with rising costs of production as the prices of farm machinery, parts and motor fuels increases substantially each year. Yet the return they receive on their products shows little or no increase. In some cases there is a decrease in the net return.

While I was campaigning in the last election, Mr. Speaker, one constituent showed me a new machine he had purchased—by way of a loan, of course. It was a self-propelled bale stacker which he found it necessary to purchase because he was unable to obtain hired help on his farm. In order to pay for the machine he said he would have to undertake all the custom work he could possibly find. The machine in question, required only for the purpose of picking up and stacking bales, bore a price tag of $18,000. After the interest payable on the loan is added, the price will be higher still.

The question I should like to have answered is why this man is unable to obtain help at a time when Canada is chronically plagued by unemployment. Why was he forced to finance and buy an expensive machine? The fact is that he does not have the cash and therefore cannot compete with other industries and unemployment insurance benefits at the rate of payment per hour for the number of hours per day which is required. I further submit that with only about 365,000 farmers left in Canada, the farming industry could well employ thousands of people if it could afford to do so. I personally do not know a single farmer who would not wish to employ someone if he only knew he could afford to continually do so. I ask hon. members this: in what industry would it be better to create employment than in the industry which is the backbone of our country, agriculture?

Some of the legislation put forward by the government in the past has been designed to encourage people to leave the farms. Believe me, Mr. Speaker, they are leaving—many not needing any encouragement. Look at the average age of farmers—something like 58 years of age. This is evidence enough that young people are not remaining on the farms. People are not staying because they can make a far better living in other industries. They are entitled to a decent wage for their work as well as a reasonable return on their investment. This is not being realized on the farms, as it is in most other industries.

Mr. Speaker, I believe that to encourage people to leave farming is a serious mistake and shows a lack of long-range planning. I also believe that in the not too distant future government will be encouraging people to return to farming. I know that Canada is at or near zero population growth. However, the growth in the world population is a horse of a different colour. Examination of the figures shows that in the year 1650 the total world population was only 500 million. By the year 1850 it had increased to one billion. At the end of 1971, the population of the world stood at 3.74 billion, of which number 73 million had been added in 1970 and 1971 alone. The estimated rate of increase is one billion every 15 years. Developing countries double their population every 20 to 30 years. Advanced countries double their population every 70 to 175 years. In 1971, only 23 countries throughout the world had family planning and only another 15 countries supported birth control. By the year 2000, which is only a short period of 27 years away, the world population is estimated to be over six billion people. Mr. Speaker, I repeat: in 27 years our population will number more than six billion.

These people will have to be fed and Canada, without doubt, is one of the countries which will be expected to help provide this food. I feel it would be one of our world responsibilities as a food-producing nation. It is quite possible that if we do not consider this to be a responsibility, and refuse to help, other countries might consider obtaining our help by means of force.

What is the answer to the problem? It certainly is not to encourage people to leave the farms where the all-important food is produced. We should be encouraging farmers to stay on the farms to increase production, rather than prompting them to leave. If we are to do this, we must recognize that the farming industry needs capital—I mean cash in the pocket, not capital by way of more loans. To achieve this objective, long-range planning should begin right now. This will require the co-operation of the farmers.

In last Monday night's budget there are a few points that will benefit the farmers, but nowhere near enough of them. In fact, there are some proposals that will be highly detrimental to the farmers, and others that don't go far enough. The decrease in personal income tax and the increase in old age security pensions will help. The removal of the capital gains tax when transferring the farm within the family, as we had suggested, is good. However, the fact that this cannot be done until after death is unacceptable. This provision means that children could be in advanced age themselves before a transfer could take place, thereby affecting their future planning and security.

The removal of tariffs on farm products in the absence of reciprocal agreements is an outrage because at certain times this will be very costly to the farmers. Failure to remove taxes from building materials is a serious drawback to all segments of our society, especially to the farmers since they are always requiring building materials when expanding their operations or trying to keep their farms in good repair. Mr. Speaker, there are many more objections to this budget as far as I am concerned, but our time limit does not permit me to go into them right now.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Boulanger): I regret to interrupt the hon. member, but his time has expired.

Mr. Gordon Towers (Red Deer): Mr. Speaker, it is a pleasure and an honour for me to speak in this debate on behalf of the people I represent. There may be others of their calibre in Canada, but there are none better.

This is the message I bring to you today, Mr. Speaker, as we discuss the budget. The majority of my constituents are not prepared, nor are they willing to become pawns of any government. As the representative of Red Deer constituency, I want Canada to be united from the Atlantic to the Pacific, from the United States border to the Arctic Ocean. But there are those who are dividing us. Divisive statements have been made during this session which should never have been uttered. Divide and rule seems to be the motto of this government.

The Minister of Transport (Mr. Marchand) during a speech delivered in this House talked about regionalism. We do not want to be regionalized. We cannot afford to be regionalized. Alberta is solidly opposed to this type of policy. One of the major problems within my constituency is transportation, because we are so far from the markets. In this great dominion we have two land-locked provinces, Alberta and Saskatchewan. Did the Minister of Transport tell us anything definite about his transportation policies or did he suggest ideas which could be construed to be promising or positive? No, Mr. Speaker; he did not give one word of encouragement about an improved system of transportation, nor did the Minister of Finance (Mr. Turner) in the new budget.

If this government does not stop talking about regionalism, it will balkanize our land to such an extent that Canada will never become the great nation we desire. Transportation is vital to our economic well-being because the majority of Canadians reside in an area almost 5,000 miles long and 300 miles wide. Transportation is a problem but not an insurmountable one. Some common sense and rationale on the part of this government could alleviate this situation. Transportation difficulties are with us here and now, and the present is not too soon to start to resolve them. The earlier the minister comes to grips with high transportation costs, stops talking regionalism but instead plans policies of expansion, the better it will be for every Canadian.

Let me quote from a speech given by the Alberta minister of agriculture, Dr. Hugh Horner, in the legislature on November 9, 1972:

> We intend as a government, as we already have, to continue to press the federal Department of Transport in relation to the port of Vancouver, in relation to the provision of bulk unloading facilities at Roberts Bank and specifically to prod them, hopefully, into some action in developing the port of Prince Rupert so that we can have a substantial storage capacity in Prince Rupert, and substantial unloadability. Certainly when we are talking about our markets in the Orient, Prince Rupert is substantially closer, by a day's sail, than the port of Vancouver.

I believe that the premiers of Saskatchewan and Manitoba would support this statement. In view of this situation, would you not say that there is a job ready and waiting for the federal Minister of Transport in conjunction with the Minister of Finance?

I am positive that the well-being of every Canadian is affected by transportation in one way or another. The cost of groceries in Red Deer, as in every city, town, village and hamlet in our fair dominion is influenced by transportation. The Minister of Transport has an important role to play, and I only hope that he will be able to measure up to his responsibilities, but first he must stop talking and thinking about regionalism. Does the minister not realize that a healthy Canadian agricultural economy is necessary for Canadians generally and for many hungry people of the world in particular?

The jobs and livelihood of a large number of Canadians depend on agriculture, not just as a primary production industry but also because those in the industry spend over $3 billion annually on goods and services. Between 20 per cent and 25 per cent of the gross value of factory shipments from Canada's manufacturing industry is comprised of raw material which originated in agriculture. Also, 35 per cent of the freight shipped through the St. Lawrence Seaway found its base in agriculture, as well as between 20 per cent and 25 per cent of the revenue to our railroads. No other industry in this country creates as many jobs as does agriculture.

Approximately 35 per cent of Canadian agricultural production relies on exports for a market; and let me impress upon you that upwards of 75 per cent of prairie production has to be sold outside the prairie provinces. We must recognize the value of this benefit to the hungry masses all over the world. This is the role that Canada can play in solving world problems, especially when two-thirds of the population of the world go to bed hungry every night.

Let us not forget, either, the need for income from the sale of our agricultural products. At the moment agriculture is contributing $2 billion per year through exports, and certainly this must have a worthwhile effect on our balance of payments. One of the most important aspects of this type of business is that we are not dealing with non-replaceable products such as our mineral resources. With proper assistance and improved farm management, I am convinced that the Canadian farmer could double or even triple his production if he did not have to cope with a combination of inclement weather, high production costs and, above all, a federal government which is continually jumping from crisis to crisis.

The situation now, Mr. Speaker, is that this government for some time has even forgotten to jump; and there are now so many crises that it does not know where to jump—if there is any jump left in it. After listening to the budget, I have not yet decided whether the Minister of Finance is pedalling backwards from the budget of last May 8 or has reversed direction completely and is now pedalling in the opposite direction. While this stalemate continues, the people suffer.

There obviously is confusion between federal cabinet ministers as to policy. The minister responsible for the Canadian Wheat Board, when explaining the method of distributing the money available to grain producers under the two-price system and telling the farmer to decide which method he preferred, an acreage basis or a bushel basis, stated:

> The permit holders must weigh heavily the responsibility in possibly causing an overproduction of wheat by deciding upon a distribution on a per bushel basis.

The Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Whelan), speaking in this House said:

> I am purposely asking western grain producers to produce all the wheat they can produce, conscious of all this implies.

Is there any doubt why the Alberta minister of agriculture asked Alberta members of parliament to introduce these two federal ministers?

Another vital area in which I believe this government is reneging in its responsibility is that of overseas promotional sales of Canada's products. Oh yes, Mr. Speaker, we hear those who are other than Conservatives rail about the Diefenbaker years, but let me impress upon them that there has never been a trade mission more successful than that of the hon. member for Qu'Appelle-Moose Mountain (Mr. Hamilton) when he was minister of agriculture, which resulted in the first large wheat sale to communist China. Also during that parliament the then minister of trade and commerce, the hon. member for Prince Edward-Hastings (Mr. Hees), who is still with us, used his initiative by calling our trade commissioners home from all over the world to show them what Canada had to sell, and then told them to go out to do their jobs. This is what Canadian industry is crying out for today—someone with initiative, with positive ideas to develop salesmanship, someone who will demonstrate what leadership is.

Provincial governments are becoming tired of waiting for the federal government to assume its responsibility, so they are going out to sell on their own. A delegation from Alberta moved into Japan to locate a market for Alberta's products. Manitoba recently made a sale of pork to Japan. People appreciate the fact that the leadership of these provinces accepts responsibility, in contrast to the failure of the federal government to take the initiative to go out to sell what Canada has to offer. However, there is a grave danger in each province making its own sales as this has a tendency to further balkanize our country. Also, the buyers have an opportunity to barter between the provinces. An effective federal policy could prevent this.

Canada has witnessed the recent development of the European Common Market and its benefits to the people who make up its membership. Do we in Canada lack the intelligence, the ability or the desire to stay away from the development of a European Canada? I do not have to remind the House that the former situation in Europe created two world wars in a lifetime. Canada needs an agency to pull the provinces together, rather than to further separate them. The federal government is the only agency available to us to accomplish this end.

Could we not take a leaf from the book of Europe? Can we not understand that those people have now agreed to work together in a larger community within the European Common Market? Here we have countries which have warred against each other but now, for the common good and in the interest of strength, have overcome a great number of their differences and are willing to work together. They have faced almost insurmountable barriers, but they have succeeded in mastering them.

When we compare this achievement in Europe to what Canada is experiencing today, we find that we do not have comparable obstacles to master. Let me stress that if the present, indifferent, lackadaisical attitude of this government is allowed to continue, Canada will become separated to such an extent that we will require much more than a common market to bring us back together as a nation.

I have never been an advocate of centralized power, because I believe that the further controls stray from the so-called grassroots, the more expensive becomes the administration. There is a certain segment of our governing process which must be administered at the local level, but there are areas of development and promotion which have to be performed on a national basis. This does not necessarily mean that the provinces or provincial organizations be weakened: the opposite would result, through a firmer national economic understanding.

In 1970, Canada imported more food than she exported. Mr. Speaker, in a country as agriculturally-oriented as Canada, with such tremendous potential, with our great ability to produce, this is a national disgrace and is reprehensible to all of us. Nothing will destroy a family, a province or a nation as rapidly as circumstances which cause one's grocery bill to be higher than one's pay cheque. Who is to blame? None other than the head of the family—which in this case, Mr. Speaker, is the government of Canada.

My constituency, as is the case in most others, is experiencing an increase in urban population. If we are to reach our maximum growth, the value of intermediate and small towns must be recognized. Red Deer constituency is made up of a city and many towns which have a great deal to offer society if the federal government provides encouragement and opportunity. One cannot blame small businessmen if they do not establish within our area when assistance by grants is available at the other end of our province. The time has come for this policy to change, and definite action to be taken.

Talk and promises are not enough. There is no "if" or "but" about this; it is a must. Every small business and secondary industry should have the opportunity to expand and to settle within a province with assurance of equal benefits. The federal government spends such a large percentage of the tax dollar, as evidenced in this budget, that there is not enough left for municipal governments to develop as they can and as they wish. The federal government must either take less of the tax dollar, at the same time curbing its own administration costs, or it must give equal assistance to develop new areas and to re-establish those with potential in the smaller communities. Size really does not matter; there are certain parts of every community which need to be rebuilt and expanded.

The federal government would seem to be the worst offender when one looks at the cause of inflation and notes that the budget does not cut back on the cost of government itself. An example of this is the unprecedented cost of the staff of the Prime Minister's office—$1 million in one year.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Boulanger): Order, please. I regret to interrupt the hon. member, but the time of adjournment has now been reached.

Mr. Lefebvre: Mr. Speaker, I understand the hon. member requires only a minute or two to complete his remarks. Perhaps he might have the unanimous consent of the House to conclude.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Boulanger): Is the House agreed?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Towers: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. If my constituency could have the privilege of using just half of that amount, many new industries could be established. Small businesses could expand with that $500,000. The budget is not doing anything to give assistance where it is needed, to our small businesses and to secondary industries.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Boulanger): Order, please. It being five o'clock, this House stands adjourned until Monday next at two o'clock p.m., pursuant to Standing Order 2(1).

At 5.06 p.m. the House adjourned, without question put, pursuant to Standing Order.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Monday, February 26, 1973

The House met at 2 p.m.

ROUTINE PROCEEDINGS

INDIAN AFFAIRS AND NORTHERN DEVELOPMENT

CONCURRENCE IN FIRST REPORT OF STANDING COMMITTEE

On the order: Motions.

Mr. Frank Howard (Skeena): Mr. Speaker, there is, as is known, a motion standing in my name to concur in the first report of the Standing Committee on Indian Affairs and Northern Development. I would not desire to proceed with it today but it is urgent. Without cutting into the time of the House available for public business, I wonder whether I could put forward the suggestion that the House consider, by consent, dealing with this motion without debate so the House may have an opportunity to express its view on the need to enter into negotiations with the Yukon Native Brotherhood as soon as possible.

Mr. Erik Nielsen (Yukon): Mr. Speaker, we on this side of the House would be more than happy and eager to concur in the suggestion of the hon. member that the motion be put and carried without debate.

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, we on this side are agreeable to the proposal. We agree with the hon. member who, in explanation of seeking concurrence in the motion, said that the negotiating committee should begin its work as soon as possible. It may not be possible to meet the target outlined, but subject to that reservation we have no objection to this motion.

Mr. Speaker: Is it my understanding from the discussions that have taken place that reference has been made to a motion standing in the name of the hon. member for Skeena?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Howard moved that the first report of the Standing Committee on Indian Affairs and Northern Development, presented to the House Friday, February 16, 1973, be concurred in.

Motion agreed to.

CANADA EVIDENCE ACT

AMENDMENT TO MAKE OTHER SPOUSE COMPELLABLE WITNESS IN CASES WHERE SPOUSE CHARGED WITH ASSAULTING CHILD

Mr. Derek Blackburn (Brant) moved for leave to introduce Bill C-152, to amend the Canada Evidence Act.

Motion agreed to, bill read the first time and ordered to be printed.

PROCEDURE AND ORGANIZATION

REFERENCE TO STANDING COMMITTEE TO CONSIDER STANDING ORDERS AND PROCEDURE IN HOUSE AND COMMITTEES

On the order: Government Notices of Motions:

February 23, 1972—The President of the Privy Council:

That the Standing Committee on Procedure and Organization be authorized to consider the Standing Orders of the House and procedure in both the House and its committees with special regard to all the matters that Mr. Speaker suggested during the twenty-eighth and twenty-ninth parliaments that may require the consideration of the said committee, and to report to the House its views on any facets thereof that may require reform and to recommend what manner of reform may be required;

And that the committee be authorized to travel outside of Canada during consideration of the aforementioned subject.

Mr. Speaker: Pursuant to section 2 of Standing Order 21, this notice of motion is transferred to and ordered for consideration under government orders at the next sitting of the House.

[1] Total does not coincide with sum due to rounding.

[2] Unique packaging and type of butter for specialized use.

(d) Twelve cents per pound duty on butter imported from the United States; (e) Canadian Dairy Commission; (f) The Canadian Dairy Commission sold the butter at 68 cents per pound.

INFORMATION CANADA—PUBLICITY AND/OR INFORMATION CONTRACTS

Question No. 67—Mr. Nystrom:

1. What were the amounts of money spent by Information Canada on publicity and/or information in each of the fiscal years 1968-69, 1969-70, 1970-71, 1971-72?

2. What were the names and addresses of firms or individuals who received these contracts, what amounts of money were spent in each case and what was the purpose of each contract?

3. What contracts for publicity and/or information were awarded in the current fiscal year, what are the names and addresses of contractees, what are the amounts of money involved in each case and what is the purpose of each contract?

Hon. John C. Munro (Minister of Labour): 1. 1970-71*, $45,435.47; 1971-72, $86,774.75. *Fiscal years 1968-69, 1969-70 are not reported as Information Canada commenced operations April 1, 1970.

Canadian Advertising Agency Ltd., 630 Sherbrooke Street West, Montreal, Quebec.	$45,435.47	$27,130.76
Goodis, Goldberg, Soren Limited, 23 Prince Andrew Place, Don Mills, Ontario.		$36,909.77

The purpose of each of these contracts was to advertise the location of Information Canada bookstores and the publications sold by Information Canada.

3. No fixed contracts have been awarded in 1972-73. Payments to date to advertise the sale of publications have been:

	Payments to date
Canadian Advertising Agency Ltd. (address as in 2. above)	$ 429.42

Note: The Expositions Division of Information Canada is a common service agency and as such does no advertising or promotion for itself. It does, however, do work for client departments and agencies, part of which might be construed as advertising or promotion activities by such client departments. As Expositions has no voted funds and conducts all of its operations on a cost-recoverable basis, we assume that other departments and agencies will be reporting independently their total program expenditures in the categories requested. Information Canada/Photothèque, which was transferred to Information Canada in August, 1971, has made no expenditures on paid advertising and only significant and unidentifiable expenditures on promotion and publicity in the period when it has been attached to Information Canada.

SUBSIDIES TO LA COMPAGNIE MARITIME DES CHARGEURS RÉUNIS AND LA SOCIÉTÉ NAVALE CHARGEURS DELMAS-VIELJEUX

Question No. 188—Mr. Laprise:

Did the Canadian government grant any subsidies to La Compagnie Maritime des Chargeurs Réunis and to La Société Navale Chargeurs Delmas-Vieljeux and, If so, what was the amount granted to each?

Mr. John M. Reid (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Privy Council): No.

TELECOMMUNICATIONS—USE OF ANIK SATELLITE IN RIMOUSKI AREA

Question No. 286—Mr. Allard:

Is it the intention of the government to use the Anik Satellite to improve telecommunications reception in the Rimouski area?

[Translation]

Hon. Gérard Pelletier (Minister of Communications): The local telephone service in Rimouski is provided by the Quebec-Telephone Company. The quality of the service locally provided by Quebec-Telephone will in no way be affected by the orbiting of the Anik satellite, except perhaps, that it will be easier and quicker for Quebec-Telephone subscribers to complete a telephone call with points located, say, in Western Canada. As a matter of fact, as the Trans-Canada Telephone System has already reserved two of Anik's channels, the routing of telephone traffic and data transmission from one end of the country to the other will generally be faster since more telephone channels will thus become available. Therefore, but in a very indirect way, it is possible to say that even if the quality of the local telephone service of Quebec-Telephone will not be improved by Anik, the telephone subscribers in Rimouski will benefit, since their calls to or from other regions will be efficiently and rapidly routed. Moreover, the advent of Anik will in no way affect the quality of the diversity of the radio or television signal routed by the Quebec-Telephone network.

UNEMPLOYMENT INSURANCE COMMISSION SERVICES

Question No. 418—Mr. Cossitt:

Is it the intention of the government to (a) take measures to improve the efficiency of services to claimants by the Unemployment Insurance Commission office in Kingston, Ontario (b) take steps to improve the public relations of the office (c) establish Zenith phone service so that claimants served by the office can telephone from their places of residence toll free?

Hon. Robert K. Andras (Minister of Manpower and Immigration): (a) The Unemployment Insurance Commission Office in Kingston has already improved the efficiency of its services to claimants by: (i) providing in-person claims taking facilities; (ii) Increasing the number of its insurance officers, examiners and inquiries clerks. (b) the public relations program in the Kingston Office is being strengthened by the addition to the staff of a full-time Public Liaison Officer. (c) Zenith phone service is not being considered at this time because of the availability of Canada Manpower Centres in Brockville, Picton, Gananoque, Napanee and Trenton with direct telephone lines to the Kingston District Office.

POST OFFICE, STOUFFVILLE, ONTARIO

Question No. 441—Mr. Stevens:

1. Has the government any immediate plans to build a new post office in Stouffville, Ontario and, if so (a) do they now own the site on which they plan to build the post office (b) on what date does the government intend to call tenders if they have not already done so (c) on what date do they anticipate the post office will be completed (d) what do they plan to do with the present post office facility?

2. If the government does not plan to build the post office does it plan to rent a suitable building and, if so (a) have rental arrangements been completed (b) what is the name of the lessor (c) on what date do they anticipate the post office will be ready for occupancy?

3. Does the government plan to commence door to door mail carrier service in Stouffville and, if so, on what date and, if not for what reason?

Mr. John M. Reid (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Privy Council): I am informed by the Department of Public Works and the Post Office Department as follows: 1. Yes. (a) The new site is not yet owned by the Crown and has still to be selected and acquired. (b) Tentative plans are for May 15, 1973. (c) February, 1974. (d) No plans at present.

2. Not applicable.

3. Not at this time, because the basic requirement of at least 2,000 potential points of call concentrated in a well developed area has not yet been reached.

RELOCATION OF RAILWAY PROJECTS

Question No. 448—Mr. Hueglin:

1. Have any relocation of railway projects been funded in whole or in part in the years 1970, 1971, 1972 and, if so (a) where did these projects take place (b) what was the cost of each one (c) what was the federal contribution to each one?

2. What is the maximum federal contribution for these projects under existing legislation?

Hon. Jean Marchand (Minister of Transport): 1. The following railway relocation projects have been approved since 1970: Brandon, Manitoba. Relocation of transfer track approved by Order No. R-11405 dated April 6, 1971. The actual cost of the project was $82,484.65 and $65,-987.72 was paid from the Railway Grade Crossing Fund; Woodstock, Ontario. Removal of CNR's Hickson Spur was approved by Order No. R-13076 dated November 18, 1971. The estimated cost of this project is $114,000 and a commitment of $48,000 was authorized from the Railway Grade Crossing Fund; Guelph, Ontario. Relocation of the CNR's Guelph City Spur was approved by Order No. R-13582 dated February 10, 1972. The estimated cost of this project is $64,500 and a commitment of $36,000 was authorized from the Railway Grade Crossing Fund.

2. Under existing legislation the maximum contribution that could be made is 80 per cent of the actual cost or $500,000 for each project.

HIGHEST RATE OF UNEMPLOYMENT 1961-62 AND 1971-72

Question No. 588—Mr. Mather:

What was the highest rate of unemployment in Canada in 1961 and 1962 and in 1971 and 1972?

Hon. Alastair Gillespie (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): Statistics Canada reports that: The table below shows the months with the highest rates of unemployment in Canada for each of the years 1961, 1962, 1971 and 1972:

	Seasonally Adjusted		Unadjusted
	Rate Per cent.	Month	Rate Per cent.	Month
1961	7.7	February	11.2	February
1962	6.2	February	9.1	February
1971	6.9	September	8.1	February
1972	7.1	September	7.7	January

CBC—BILINGUAL POSITIONS, CBWT AND CBWFT, MANITOBA

Question No. 595—Mr. McKenzie:

How many employees of both CBC networks in Manitoba (CBWT and CBWFT) occupy positions which must satisfy the government's bilingual criteria and what are the positions in question?

Mr. Gilles Marceau (Parliamentary Secretary to Secretary of State): I am informed by the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation as follow: Inasmuch as the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation is a Crown Corporation, it is not subject to government criteria for bilingual positions in the Public Service. However, the CBC does have a comparable bilingualism policy whereby all areas requiring bilingual services are staffed accordingly.

ELECTION, 1972—CHOICE OF ELECTORAL OFFICERS

Question No. 599—Mr. Godin:

1. In what manner was the choice of electoral officers in each constituency decided upon for the general election on October 30, 1972?

2. How many were chosen from lists provided by (a) Social Credit Party of Canada (b) NDP (c) Progressive Conservative Party (d) Liberal Party?

3. What were the names and addresses of electoral afficers recommended by (a) Social Credit Party of Canada (b) NDP?

Mr. John M. Reid (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Privy Council): 1. Returning Officers are appointed by the Governor-in-Council pursuant to section 7 of the Canada Elections Act.

2. No political party provided lists of prospective returning officers for the general election of October 30, 1972.

3. Not applicable.

Order Paper Questions

*REOPENING OF UNEMPLOYMENT INSURANCE COMMISSION OFFICES

Question No. 608—Mr. Rynard:

Does the government propose to reopen the Unemployment Insurance Commission offices in those cities where they were previously closed and, if so (a) will such offices be close to or in the same building as the Canada Manpower Centres (b) what criteria, if any, will be used for the reopening of such offices?

Mr. Mark MacGuigan (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Manpower and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, the goal of the Unemployment Insurance Commission is to humanize its services by bringing these services closer to the client population. The matter of opening new Unemployment Insurance Commission offices or of reopening those offices that were in existence prior to 1967 is under continual study as part of this goal.

The answer to sub-question (a) is as follows: The Unemployment Insurance Commission tries to locate its services in the same premises as the Canada Manpower Centres, provided space is available, otherwise the commission tries to establish its facilities as close as possible to the Canada Manpower Centres.

In reply to sub-question (b): The criteria used for the opening of offices are mainly; the numbers and geographic distribution of the claimant population, the availability of adequate transportation and/or parking for clients and; in so far as possible, the commission is trying to use the same area boundaries that are used by Canada Manpower Centres.

Of course, administrative costs have to be taken into consideration, and the availability of properly trained personnel is another factor.

DEPARTMENT OF NATIONAL DEFENCE—TRANS-ATLANTIC AIRCRAFT

Question No. 613—Mr. McKenzie:

1. How many aircraft, with trans-Atlantic capacity, are on the strength of the Department of National Defence?

2. What was the cost of each?

3. How many additions are planned to the fleet?

4. Were cost-benefit studies of the use of civilian aircraft for this trans-Atlantic service made before the purchase?

5. Were the major Canadian airlines asked to tender for the trans-Atlantic service?

6. How many civilians (a) employed (b) not employed by the Department travelled on the trans-Atlantic planes in 1970, 1971 and 1972?

7. How many of those in Part 6(b) were (a) relatives of personnel of the Department (b) relatives of Armed Forces personnel (c) other government employees?

8. What was the cost involved in each category?

9. What is the unit cost of transporting persons across the Atlantic on a departmental aircraft?

10. How does the cost compare to travel on a civilian aircraft?

11. Have any protests been received from Air Canada and/or CP Air about the transport of civilians and, if so, how many?

Hon. James Richardson (Minister of National Defence): 1. There are five Boeing 707/347C and 23 Hercules (C130) aircraft with a trans-Atlantic capacity. The Boeings normally carry 157 passengers whilst the Hercules are restricted to freight only on trans-Atlantic flights. As all following questions appear to be directed toward passenger service, information has been supplied only in regard to the Boeing 707s operated by Air Transport Command.

2. The total program costs of the Boeing 707s were $64,900,000 exclusive of 12 per cent sales tax but including conversion compartments, $385,000 worth of spares, 400 hours of flight simulator time, and in-flight fueling conversion costs for two aircraft.

3. None.

4. No, the Boeing 707/347C aircraft were purchased to replace the existing fleet of Yukon aircraft and cost analyses were conducted to determine the economic feasibility of continuing to operate 12 Yukon aircraft or replacing them by a lesser number of jet transport aircraft.

5. No.

6 and 7. Travel by both military and civilian personnel on duty, and by personnel outside the Department when travelling in the interests of the Department, is authorized as a routine procedure at appropriate administrative levels throughout National Defence, and no detailed records are kept. However, in general terms, the following passengers travelled on duty: 1970, 25,992; 1971, 30,818; 1972 (Up to November) 23,169.

Non-duty travel on leave or "space available" basis again does not distinguish between military personnel, dependants or others. The total number of passengers in this category was: 1970, 13,566; 1971, 14,425; 1972 (Up to November) 11,849. Travel by personnel outside the Department e.g. other government departments' officials, requires special authority and since April 1971 to November 1972, 2,572 non-DND personnel are known to have made trans-Atlantic flights. These figures are included in the numbers shown above.

8, 9 and 10. Many factors enter into the determination of unit costs, including the fact that in so far as military personnel and dependants are concerned on non-duty travel or "space available", the cost is considered as being part of the Pay and Benefits package. Departmental records are not maintained in a manner which would make the unit cost in each category, readily accessible.

11. In so far as the Department of National Defence is concerned, no protests have been received from Air Canada or Canadian Pacific Air.

PAPER PRODUCTION INDUSTRY

Question No. 642—Mr. Fortin:

INFORMATION CANADA ADVERTISING

Question No. 683—Mr. Muir:

Since its inception, how much money has Information Canada spent annually on television, newspaper and bill-board advertising?

Hon. John C. Munro (Minister of Labour): 1970-71—$55,-105.98 (Including $45,435.47 for advertising publications); 1971-72—$115,052.70 (including $86,774.75 for advertising publications); 1972-73 (year to date)—$11804.42 (including $5,880.57 for advertising publications).

SEARCH AND RESCUE, BRITISH COLUMBIA COAST

Question No. 698—Mr. Reynolds:

1. Is the Vancouver Marine Aeradio station short staffed and, if so (a) has this affected search and rescue operations on the B.C. coast (b) did it have a direct bearing on the sinking of the vessels MV Dona Anita and MV Pacrover and the fire on Cruise Ship Meteor?

2. Was the station operating at full staff at the time of the sinking of these vessels mentioned in Part 1(b)?

Hon. Jean Marchand (Minister of Transport): 1. No. Vancouver Marine Aeradio station is not short staffed and the station is fully capable of meeting its Search and Rescue commitment at all times. The staffing of Vancouver Marine Aeradio had no bearing on the sinking of the MV Dona Anita and MV Pacrover or the fire on the Cruise Ship Meteor.

2. Yes. Vancouver Marine Aeradio was operating at full staff at the time of the sinking of the above mentioned vessels.

CANADIAN TRANSPORT COMMISSION—APPOINTMENT OF HON. J. W. PICKERSGILL

Question No. 699—Mr. Mazankowski:

1. On what date was Mr. J. W. Pickersgill appointed as chairman of the Canadian Transport Commission?

2. On what date did Mr. Pickersgill retire from the Canadian Transport Commission?

3. What was his effective date of retirement re allowances, severance pay etc., and remuneration regarding same?

4. What is the annual pension, or superannuation, paid to Mr. Pickersgill by the Canadian Transport Commission, on what date did it commence and on what basis was his superannuation established?

Hon. Jean Marchand (Minister of Transport): 1. There is no post of chairman of the Canadian Transport Commission. The Hon. J. W. Pickersgill was appointed President of the Canadian Transport Commission effective September 19, 1967 for a period expiring June 23, 1975.

2. Mr. Pickersgill resigned from the Canadian Transport Commission effective August 31, 1972.

3. Mr. Pickersgill was granted a cash gratuity in lieu of salary representing four weeks retiring leave effective September 1, 1972, the normal benefit under the regulations.

4. The Canadian Transport Commission is not empowered to pay an annual pension or superannuation to anyone. Mr. Pickersgill is entitled to benefits under the Superannuation Act calculated in accordance with the terms of that Statute.

OFFENCES COMMITTED BY PERSONS FREE ON BAIL

How many men and women, released on bail, were charged in 1972 with offences said to have been committed while they were free on bail?

Hon. Alastair Gillespie (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): In so far as Statistics Canada is concerned the information requested is not available.

CANADIAN MERCHANT MARINE

Question No. 739—Mr. Forrestall:

Is it the intention of the government to institute a Canadian Merchant Marine which would be given preferred rights in the Arctic Zone?

Hon. Jean Marchand (Minister of Transport): The government has no intention at this time to institute a Canadian Merchant Marine for ocean going trades; however, Canada does have a large internal fleet which, at the present time, is largely concentrated in the Great Lakes-St. Lawrence trade. This national fleet has, at the present time, preferred rights when trading between ports and places in Canada. However, Commonwealth vessels are allowed to participate in coasting trade activities which involve the Arctic zone. The government is presently examining our coasting trade policy with a view to extending the opportunities for the Canadian internal fleet by reserving the Arctic zone and offshore areas to Canadian flag vessels.

Order Paper Questions

ARCTIC NAVIGATION

In view of the characteristics of the Arctic area, does the government intend to attempt to persuade foreign purchasers of recoverable or non-recoverable resources to ship a percentage of the extract product in Canadian bottoms and, if so, what percentage is presently contemplated?

Hon. Jean Marchand (Minister of Transport): Notwithstanding the characteristics of the Arctic, the question of cargo preference to Canadian flag vessels must be considered in an overall resource policy. It is not, at the present time, the policy of the government to reserve overseas cargoes to Canadian flag vessels.

ARCTIC WATERS POLLUTION PREVENTION ACT

1. What steps has the government taken to ensure that all foreign flag vessels going into the Arctic area actually meet the Pollution Control requirements?

2. Will there be inspectors in the area who will be prepared to board those ships that have not been pre-cleared for compliance to the Pollution Control requirements?

Hon. Jean Marchand (Minister of Transport): 1. Provision has been made in the Arctic Shipping Pollution Prevention Regulations for a foreign flag vessel to be issued, after inspection, with a certificate which, in the absence of evidence to the contrary, is proof that the vessel complies with the requirements applicable to it. Officers of the Marine Administration of the Ministry have been designated as pollution prevention officers by Order-in-Council in order to enforce the provisions of the Arctic Waters Pollution Prevention Act and the regulations made thereunder.

2. Yes. Selected officers of Canadian Coast Guard vessels will be provided with the necessary authority to carry out the inspections required.

*ACQUISITION OF PROPERTY FOR TORONTO HARBOUR PARK

Does the government intend to complete in 1973 acquisition of property required for the Toronto Harbour Park?

Mr. John M. Reid (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Privy Council): The answer is yes, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Knight: Mr. Speaker, on a point of order, I wonder whether I could bring to the parliamentary secretary's attention questions Nos. 606 and 607 which are of some importance in relation to the Prairie Farm Assistance Act and the lower inventory for tomorrow legislation. May I also refer him to questions Nos. 609, 626, 627, 628, 929, 930, 931, 932, 961, 985, 998, 1045, 1046, 1056, 1077, and 1083.

Mr. Hellyer: Mr. Speaker, on the same point of order I should like to bring to the attention of the parliamentary secretary questions Nos. 583, 708 and 715. There is not one of those three questions that could not be answered in less than a week. Everyone knows this is one of the most mediocre governments in the history of Canada, and its inefficiency seems to be rising at the same rate as prices are rising.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

Some hon. Members: Order!

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

Mr. Stevens: Mr. Speaker, I draw attention to starred questions Nos. 839, 848 and 896 which I feel should be answered as soon as possible.

Mr. Cossitt: Mr. Speaker, I should like to draw the parliamentary secretary's attention to question No. 220 placed on the order paper on January 9. Two other questions which I asked about the same matter were answered last week and I see no reason that this third question which was asked previously should not be answered. I realize it is on the subject of the gigantic staff of the Prime Minister's office that is running this country and this might prove embarrassing.

Some hon. Members: Order!

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Hon. members can, if they wish, bring to attention of the parliamentary secretary certain questions they feel should be answered more quickly, but it is not according to the well established practice of the House for hon. members to make the kind of comments or speeches such as those made by the hon. member and the hon. member for Trinity.

Mr. Hellyer: We have to get their attention, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Lambert (Bellechasse): Mr. Speaker, may I call the attention of the Parliamentary Secretary to Question No. 21 which, in addition to having been on the order paper since 4 January 1973, has also strirred special public interest, and ask him whether it will be answered soon?

Mr. Reid: Yes, Mr. Speaker.

ORAL QUESTION PERIOD

Mr. G. W. Baldwin (Peace River): Mr. Speaker, in the absence of the Minister of Finance I shall direct this question to the Minister of Manpower and Immigration. As a result of the opportunity the minister had over the weekend to reflect and to observe the Minister of Finance when he appeared on television and said, as I heard his words, that unlike last year he was now able to predict the unemployment insurance figures, will the minister give a simple clearcut answer concerning the cash requirements in respect of the Unemployment Insurance Commission for the fiscal year ending March 31, 1974 and/or the amount of the contributions to be made out of the consolidated revenue fund when unemployment exceeds 4 per cent?

Hon. Robert K. Andras (Minister of Manpower and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, I would wait for the Minister of Finance to make his forecast before I would undertake to give those figures. I indicated the other day that by the Unemployment Insurance Act and the amendment recently made to that act cash requirements become appropriations as such in the following year and this amount is known and included in the main estimates at this time.

Mr. Baldwin: Did the minister obtain from the officials of the Unemployment Insurance Commission any information as to the cash requirements for the ensuing fiscal year and/or the contributions which might be required to be made in respect of the government's share of the contributions?

Mr. Andras: Mr. Speaker, as I indicated before the Miscellaneous Estimates Committee, I believe, we can forecast a range of cash requirements based on various levels of unemployment and based on the many other variable factors involved in such a calculation, many of which have been indicated by the Minister of Finance and many which are applicable to the straight question of unemployment levels. We can give a range of requirements which will be accurate within certain boundaries, but it does depend on the length of time people will be on benefit, the average weekly wage, the level of unemployment and a whole series of other matters the complexities of which it has been indicated, would make it very difficult to give an absolutely accurate forecast at this date.

Mr. Baldwin: Mr. Speaker, in order that the House may have this very important information before it is asked to approve the budget of the Minister of Finance I should like to ask the Prime Minister whether he would require the former Minister of Manpower and Immigration, the hon. member for Verdun, who apparently is able to answer these questions, to answer the questions I have asked?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member for Norfolk-Haldimand.

COMMISSION POLICY RESPECTING UNEMPLOYED AGRICULTURAL WORKERS SEEKING BENEFITS

Mr. William Knowles (Norfolk-Haldimand): Mr. Speaker, my question is supplementary and is addressed to the Minister of Manpower and Immigration. It relates to the Unemployment Insurance Commission. Is it now the policy of the Unemployment Insurance Commission deliberately and systematically to disentitle seasonal agricultural workers from unemployment insurance benefits?

Hon. Robert K. Andras (Minister of Manpower and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, absolutely not, as such. The disentitlement of any worker is based on certain factors, including proof of search for work, availability for work and willingness to take work if in fact it is available.

Mr. Knowles (Norfolk-Haldimand): That being the case, would the minister investigate the gestapo-type tactics that are being employed in my area to deliberately and systematically disentitle the seasonal agricultural workers from their proper benefits?

Mr. Andras: Mr. Speaker, without in any way accepting the premise or description the hon. member has applied to the activities of the unemployment insurance commission, I would be very glad to investigate any specific instances. In fact, it would put me in a much better position to answer such questions in the House if the hon. member would give me advance notice of the question, provided he really is seeking information.

SAVING TO BE MADE BY ENACTMENT OF BILL C-125

Mr. Lincoln M. Alexander (Hamilton West): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Manpower and Immigration. In view of the fact Bill C-125 stands on the order paper for second reading and is supposed to result in a saving of approximately $100 million, and as the minister is reviewing this bill, can he still state that the bill will save the country $100 million?

Hon. Robert K. Andras (Minister of Manpower and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, I would hope so.

Mr. Alexander: Can the minister advise whether his involvement with the bill in terms of reassessment and bringing in amendments has been completed? Has he completed his investigation on behalf of the New Democratic Party and, if so, when can we expect the bill to be proceeded with?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member will appreciate that a question asked in those terms is not in order.

Mr. Alexander: May I rephrase the question, Mr. Speaker. In view of the importance of the matter and in view of the fact the bill will save the country $100 million, can the minister advise when the bill will be brought forward again and, if not in the very near future, what is holding it up?

Mr. Andras: I expect it to be brought forward in due course, Mr. Speaker. One thing about the situation is that we know at least where two parties stand on this bill. We do not know—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Is the hon. member for Fraser Valley West rising on a supplementary question?

Mr. Rose: Yes, Mr. Speaker.

ALLEGED INCLUSION OF IMPROPER PHRASES BY OFFICERS IN PREPARING APPLICANTS STATEMENTS

Mr. Mark Rose (Fraser Valley West): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Manpower and Immigration and it is supplementary to previous questions. Is the minister aware of the current practice of benefit control officers who, when interviewing clients, often smuggle into the statements of those clients, which the benefit control officers themselves write, words that condemn the clients or force them to testify against themselves such as "no transportation" and "excessively high salary expectation"? Is the minister aware of this practice, because it has been going on now for a year, and is he prepared to do something about it?

Hon. Robert K. Andras (Minister of Manpower and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, in every case where I can prove such action by a benefit control officer or anybody else he will be dismissed as quickly as I can make the arrangements, but I would like to have concrete proof before doing so.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. We will complete the first round of questioning, after which I will return to the hon. member for Fraser Valley West on a supplementary question.

FLOODS

HIGH WATER LEVEL IN GREAT LAKES—FEDERAL GOVERNMENT MEASURES TO AVERT DAMAGE

Mr. Terry Grier (Toronto-Lakeshore): Mr. Speaker, I should like to address my question to the Prime Minister as there would appear to be several departments of the government concerned, and in view of the seriousness of the situation. In light of the statement by an official of the International Joint Commission that nothing more can be done to control the rising water levels in Lake Ontario and the other Great Lakes and that further flooding is therefore inevitable, can the Prime Minister give the House assurances that all courses of action open to the federal government are being actively pursued in order to avert, so far as possible, flood damage, and will the Prime Minister or the appropriate ministers indicate to the House specifically what these steps are?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, the answer to the first question is yes. The answer to the second is that various answers have been given by the Minister of the Environment who is responsible in the government for co-ordinating action in these areas.

Mr. Grier: In an effort to attract from the government benches more specific answers, may I put this supplementary question. Has the government taken the initiative to discuss joint preventive programs with the governments of the province of Ontario and/or Quebec? My question is again directed to the Prime Minister.

Mr. Trudeau: I will take notice of the question, Mr. Speaker. I have not had such discussions personally, but I will have to refer the question to the Minister of the Environment who has been retarded on his way in from the west coast and is expected later.

Mr. Terry Grier (Toronto-Lakeshore): I have a supplementary question for the Minister of National Defence. May I ask him whether specific plans have now been made to assign units of the armed forces for flood prevention construction and other works.

Hon. James Richardson (Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, as I advised the House last week, the armed forces are available for this type of emergency, but we have had no request from the government of Ontario or from anyone else at this stage.

HIGH WATER LEVELS IN GREAT LAKES—PROTECTION AND COMPENSATION FOR PROPERTY OWNERS ALONG ST. LAWRENCE RIVER

Miss Flora MacDonald (Kingston and the Islands): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question for the Prime Minister. Can he assure the House that property owners along the St. Lawrence River and in the Thousand Islands area will be given adequate warning and all possible protection in the event of an unusually high run-off from Lake Ontario and that they will receive adequate compensation for any damage that may result?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I cannot, of course, give a general answer to that very wide-ranging question. It is a matter of policy which has to be announced in specific instances.

HIGH WATER LEVEL IN LAKE ONTARIO—REQUEST FOR PROVISION OF ENGINEERING SERVICES TO ONTARIO RIDING

Mr. Norman A. Cafik (Ontario): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the Minister of National Defence. In a previous response he indicated that he had not received any specific requests for assistance from any sources in respect of possible flood damage. In light of the fact that I investigated this problem in my riding over the weekend—

Some hon. Members: Question!

Mr. Cafik: —I would like—

Some hon. Members: Question!

Mr. Cafik: I will get to the question, if you will be patient. This is an important problem to the people in my area.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Some hon. Members: Question!

Mr. Cafik: I would like to give the minister notice right now that I am requesting—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

Mr. Cafik: Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Speaker: Order. The hon. member has the floor for the purpose of asking a question, not to give notice.

Mr. Cafik: Yes, Mr. Speaker. I will ask the minister right now if in fact he will supply engineering services to the municipalities in my riding that want to assess what preventive steps can in fact be taken?

Mr. Alexander: Patronage!

[Mr. Richardson.]

Hon. James Richardson (Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, we will give immediate consideration to the request from the hon. member.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

DAIRYING—MEASURES TO ENSURE FINANCIAL STABILITY FOR PRODUCERS

Mr. Adrien Lambert (Bellechasse): Mr. Speaker, I should like to put a question to the Minister of Agriculture.

Yesterday I met a delegation of manufacturing milk producers; they are quite concerned about the considerable increase in the cost of feed which is threatening the financial balance of their operations. Can the minister tell the House what steps he intends to take immediately to hearten the manufacturing milk producers in this regard?

[English]

Hon. E. F. Whelan (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, we are studying ways and means of aiding them now.

DAIRYING—REQUEST FOR INCREASE IN PRICE OF INDUSTRIAL MILK—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Adrien Lambert (Bellechasse): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary. Has the minister perused the brief submitted by industrial milk producers, whereby they request an immediate increase of industrial milk prices to the extent of 60 cents per 100 pounds? If so, could he inform us shortly of his reply?

[English]

Hon. E. F. Whelan (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, I stated in reply to another hon. member in the House that we hope to be able to announce something soon.

HOUSING

STATEMENT BY MINISTER OF FINANCE ON TELEVISION PROGRAM RESPECTING INCREASE IN COSTS—REQUEST FOR ELIMINATION OF BUILDING MATERIALS SALES TAX

Mr. Eldon M. Woolliams (Calgary North): Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask the Minister of Finance a question. Would he inform the House on what basis he was able to state on the television program "Question Period" yesterday that housing costs increased by only 3 per cent last year, and can he inform the House whether the priority given to housing in last week's budget was based on that 3 per cent figure?

Hon. John N. Turner (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I think that if the hon. member reads the transcript he will see that I was talking about the general increase in service charges, including housing, over the year 1972, and saying, in relation to the reason why I did not choose to reduce or eliminate the 11 per cent tax on building materials, that I was confident that the amendments to the National Housing Act introduced by my colleague, the Minister of State for Urban Affairs, would provide a good, remedial measure for this problem.

Mr. Woolliams: Mr. Speaker, I wish to ask a supplementary question. I listened with great care to the minister's answer in reference to the 11 per cent sales tax, but in light of the fact that from December, 1971, to December, 1972, the cost of new housing increased by 12.5 per cent and the cost of building materials rose by 15.2 per cent—I refer the minister to Statistics Canada's Catalogue 62 for those figures—would he now reconsider his position in reference to the 11 per cent sales tax?

Mr. Hees: No, because David Lewis says no. That is the simple reason. David Lewis says you can't do it, and you don't dare do it.

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): Mr. Speaker, when the increase in housing costs or costs of renting are brought into the general income picture, they are brought by Statistics Canada into the category of service charges, and those were the figures to which I was referring.

ELEVATOR CONSTRUCTORS' STRIKE—REQUEST THAT PRIME MINISTER CONVENE MEETING WITH PROVINCIAL MINISTERS TO ACHIEVE SETTLEMENT

Mr. Eldon M. Woolliams (Calgary North): I have a further supplementary, Mr. Speaker. In light of the fact that we now have serious unemployment, particularly in the building industry, and in light of the fact that the International Union of Elevator Constructors is on strike in nine provinces with a slowdown strike in the province of Quebec, throwing construction workers out of work by the thousands across the nation, would the Prime Minister now take the lead, in spite of his constitutional argument, and call together the ten provincial ministers of labour with a view to sitting down and getting this strike settled which is really motivated by an international union in the United States?

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I shall certainly consider the request of the hon. member that I demand that the provincial premiers come and listen to my word on that.

An hon. Member: He did not say "demand".

CENTRAL MORTGAGE AND HOUSING CORPORATION

REQUEST FOR TABLING OF CAPITAL BUDGET

Mr. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa-Whitby): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary on housing for the Minister of State for Urban Affairs. In view of the fact the amount of money to be spent by Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation is of crucial importance to the government's housing plans, would the minister inform the House why the capital budget for CMHC has not been laid before parliament when in normal years it is before us by this time?

Hon. Ron Basford (Minister of State for Urban Affairs): Mr. Speaker, the capital budget is normally discussed when the estimates of the corporation go to the committee. I will be happy to see that the capital budget is laid before the House.

[Later:]

Mr. Broadbent: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a question of privilege. A few minutes ago I asked the Minister of State for Urban Affairs a question about the laying before parliament of the annual capital budget of CMHC. He said to the House that it was not the practice of the government to do so and that it would be brought before the appropriate committee at the appropriate time. My question of privilege is that inasmuch as in each year in recent history the government has laid the capital budget of CMHC before parliament the minister, if I understood him correctly, misinformed parliament, I assume inadvertently. I therefore ask him to explain the statement he made just a few moments ago.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. That is hardly a question of privilege. I suggest to the hon. member that it might be the subject of a supplementary question. Perhaps the minister might be allowed to reply to the hon. member's point by way of a supplementary answer to the alleged question of privilege.

Mr. Basford: Mr. Speaker, I should like to check the precise words in the blues. What I said was that it was the practice to examine the capital budget when the estimates of the corporation were being examined and that if the hon. member has questions to ask they will be answered when the estimates go to the committee. I also said I would be happy to lay the capital budget before parliament. I hardly see that there is any misinformation being given to parliament.

Mr. Broadbent: Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I will return to the hon. member in a moment.

[Later:]

Mr. Broadbent: Mr. Speaker, I repeat the point that the minister said a while ago that it was not customary to lay the capital budget before parliament. He has now acknowledged that it is and I should now like to ask him when he will lay that budget before parliament?

Mr. Basford: In accordance with the usual practice, Mr. Speaker.

POSSIBILITY OF DISCUSSION OF BUDGET WITH NEW DEMOCRATIC PARTY LEADER PRIOR TO DELIVERY

Hon. Alvin Hamilton (Qu'Appelle-Moose Mountain): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Finance. In view of the statements he made yesterday on the television show, would the minister confirm to the House whether he did or did not have discussions with the leader of the New Democratic Party on the budget before the budget speech was delivered?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I will, of course, allow the minister to reply to the hon. member's question as I have shown some leniency in regard to questions asked earlier this afternoon about the statements made outside the House. As hon. members know, it is long established practice that normally questions are asked only of the Prime Minister to inquire whether statements made by ministers outside the House represent government policy. However, as the question has been asked the minister may wish to reply.

Hon. John N. Turner (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I can confirm that before the budget I discussed budget measures neither with the leader of the New Democratic Party nor the leader of the hon. member's party.

Mr. Woolliams: Why did he say that you did?

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): He did not say that.

HEALTH

STATUS OF NEGOTIATIONS WITH PROVINCES ON PROVISION OF CHRONIC CARE IN NURSING HOMES

Mr. P. B. Rynard (Simcoe North): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of National Health and Welfare and he may want to make his reply on motions. In view of mounting hospital costs and the federal government commitment in this field, would the minister state whether general agreement has been reached with the provinces for providing chronic care in nursing homes to relieve hospital overstay or in the prevention of illness leading to a cutdown in hospital admissions?

[Translation]

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, we recently had a meeting on that subject with representatives of provinces. The federal government made a proposal in view of easing health services and specifically developing less expensive services such as mentioned by the hon. member, as compared with the very expensive hospital services. If the provinces agree to the formula we proposed, we hope there will be a substantial reduction in health service costs in Canada.

[English]

Mr. Rynard: Mr. Speaker, I will debate this question at ten o'clock.

REPRESENTATION OF YUKON AND NORTHWEST TERRITORIES COUNCILS AT RECENT CONFERENCE—TRANSFER OF JURISDICTION OVER SERVICES TO TERRITORIES

Mr. Erik Nielsen (Yukon): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary for the same minister. Were the elected bodies in the Yukon and the Northwest Territories represented at the conference of which he speaks, and what is the time frame within which federal health services will be transferred from federal jurisdiction to the jurisdiction of the governments of either the Yukon or the Northwest Territories?

[Translation]

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, in reply to the first question, that was a federal-provincial conference of ministers of finance and of health and the Northwest Territories and Yukon were not represented as such.

Replying to the second question, the matter has been under discussion for many years between the federal government and authorities involved, and is permanently under review.

TRANSPORT

REQUEST THAT RAILWAYS REINTRODUCE "O CANADA" TRAIN WHISTLES

Mr. Ian Arrol (York East): Mr. Speaker, I should like, with my question, to introduce a note of harmony if it would not be out of order today. I should like to ask the Minister of Transport a musical question. In view of the importance of promoting any good idea in aid of Canadian unity and the Canadian identity, could consideration be given to encouraging the railway systems of Canada to reintroduce the unique "O Canada" train whistle refrain that was so popular in the year of Canada's centennial?

Mr. Speaker: I suggest that the hon. member's question ought normally to be placed on the order paper. However, since it is intended to bring some harmony to the House the minister might be allowed to reply briefly.

Hon. Jean Marchand (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I shall be happy to discuss that with the presidents of the two railway companies.

DRUGS

REQUEST FOR LIST OF DRUGS THAT FAILED TO MEET TESTS AND NAMES OF COMPANIES

Mr. David Orlikow (Winnipeg North): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of National Health and Welfare. Will his department make public the list of drugs that failed to meet the standards set by his department in its QUAD tests, as well as the companies by whom they were manufactured?

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, I shall certainly look into this matter.

Mr. Orlikow: May I ask the minister what action the government will take in connection with those drugs which apparently did not pass the test standards set by the government?

[Translation]

Mr. Lalonde: Mr. Speaker, it should not be deduced from the fact that I do not give an immediate reply to the hon. member's question that his premise is accurate. I shall make inquiries and see whether there has been one case of a drug not being submitted to the tests involved.

TARIFF REDUCTIONS ON FOOD IMPORTS—PRIOR CONSULTATION WITH AGRICULTURE AND LABOUR

Mr. H. W. Danforth (Kent-Essex): Mr. Speaker, I should like to address my question to the Minister of Finance. In view of the grave concern of many primary producers of food commodities and the food industry in general about their economic future under the new reductions in tariffs and the loss of jobs involved, can the minister tell the House if any of these groups were consulted in any way before this government action and, if so, can he indicate which agricultural and labour groups were consulted?

Hon. John N. Turner (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, obviously in direct terms one cannot consult groups before the introduction of budget measures, particularly tariff measures, but a thorough review was made with the various departments concerned to ensure that any tariff reductions would not unduly affect employment potential or farm income. I am in constant consultation with my colleague the Minister of Agriculture to ensure that this does not happen.

Mr. G. H. Whittaker (Okanagan Boundary): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Agriculture. In view of the fact the Minister of Finance in reply to a question on Friday said that the Minister of Agriculture would see to it that farmers were not hurt by the tariff reductions, did he consult with his colleague on the fact that cans imported into Canada for use by Canadian processors for Canadian products have a 17½ per cent tariff, while those already filled in some other country, and being imported into Canada now have no tariff?

Hon. E. F. Whelan (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, we have discussed that recently.

SOCIAL SECURITY

OLD AGE PENSIONS—REQUEST THAT DEPARTMENT BE MORE FLEXIBLE RESPECTING QUALIFICATION OF PERSONS RETURNING FROM ABROAD

Mr. Heath Macquarrie (Hillsborough): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of National Health and Welfare. Will the minister give consideration to introducing more flexibility and compassion in his department when dealing with Canadian born senior citizens returning to Canada from abroad and seeking old age security qualification, particularly the avoidance of such incidents as advising an 88 year old gentleman to come back in 33½ years with his application?

[Translation]

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, I shall certainly be very happy to examine the regulations in question, and more particularly those relating to the point raised by the hon. member. I should mention, however, that these regulations were enlarged a few years ago, as the hon. member knows. I shall certainly look into the matter.

LABOUR RELATIONS

STAGE OF PLANNING FOR HOLDING OF 1974 INTERNATIONAL CONFERENCE IN CANADA

Mr. Ron Atkey (St. Paul's): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Labour. In view of the commitment made on behalf of Canada by the hon. member for Verdun when minister of labour at the International Labour Relations Conference held in Israel in 1972 that the Canadian government would host the next international labour relations conference in 1974, can the minister inform the House what stage the planning for this conference has reached?

• (1440)

Hon. John C. Munro (Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, I believe it is still the intention of the government to host that conference. As far as I am aware, planning is going on as well as can be expected.

Mr. Atkey: Would the minister advise the House of the details of the projected arrangements for this conference, and when they might be available to the participating countries?

GRAIN

POSSIBILITY OF ALLOWING DOMESTIC WHEAT PRICE TO FLOAT

Mr. Jack Murta (Lisgar): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the minister responsible for the Canadian Wheat Board. Does the government have any plan at this time to change the domestic price paid for wheat, at present $1.95½ per bushel, and allow the price to float with the world price of wheat?

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister of Justice): No, Mr. Speaker. The government is now paying the difference between $1.95½ and $3 out of the treasury. In reviewing this matter recently it was decided that it would be better to continue doing that rather than shift the cost to the consumers of bread in Canada.

Mr. Murta: As the minister has sent a survey to wheat farmers in western Canada on the method of payment under the two-price wheat system, is not the prairie wheat producer at present being asked by this questionnaire really to subsidize the users of domestic wheat in Canada? Is this not what is really happening at present with the price of wheat?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I suggest that is not a question but argument.

WHEAT—INQUIRY AS TO ACREAGE PAYMENT

Mr. J. H. Horner (Crowfoot): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a supplementary question to the Minister of Justice who is in charge of the Canadian Wheat Board. Can we expect an acreage payment before spring planting, because additional money would be beneficial to the farmers at that time?

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister of Justice): Mr. Speaker, the questionnaire now in the hands of farmers is part of the process of determining the method of paying to them the amount of money which will be available, which will likely be in the order of $57 million. Part of that is clearly a consumer subsidy, if you like, on the price of bread. If an acreage payment is to be made we would expect to make it in April.

Can he give hon. members a copy of a paper from the federal government in which it is estimated that in 1973 the Canadian dollar has a value equivalent to 55 cents compared to 1949? In 24 years, therefore, the value of our dollar has decreased by 45 per cent.

Hon. John N. Turner (Minister of Finance): I shall check whether such a document exists, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Allard: Mr. Speaker, I should like to put a supplementary question.

What is the present value of the Canadian dollar based on the price of gold on the open market which is now selling between $93 and $96 per ounce?

As the Prime Minister and the Minister of Transport are listening attentively these days to the needs and wants of the west with a view to curing the west of its so-called discontent, would the Prime Minister or the Minister of Transport use their good offices to give Edmonton at least one direct flight to Ottawa at a reasonable hour?

ASSESSMENT OF VALUE-ADDED TAX SYSTEM USED BY EUROPEAN ECONOMIC COMMUNITY—EFFECT ON INFLATION

Mr. Elmer M. MacKay (Central Nova): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Finance. What assessment has the minister made of the value-added tax system presently utilized in the European Economic Community and the effect it may have on Canada's inflationary difficulties?

Hon. John N. Turner (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, we are reviewing aspects of this tax, particularly since Great Britain has adopted it and it seems to have general support in the European Common Market. Aside from that, any adoption of that tax would have to be related to a general budgetary statement.

Mr. MacKay: With respect, I suggest the minister has not done his homework. I suggest that the tax is not applicable—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member is now debating. He should ask his supplementary question.

Mr. MacKay: Mr. Speaker, although the minister has already partially answered my question, may I ask him if he has any immediate plan to study the effects in Canada of such a value-added tax?

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): Mr. Speaker, it is being studied.

COMMUNICATIONS

INQUIRY AS TO PAPER ON POLICY AND POSSIBILITY OF FEDERAL-PROVINCIAL CONFERENCE

Mr. J. P. Nowlan (Annapolis Valley): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Communications. After tabling on Friday his rather pointed letter to the minister of communications of Quebec, I wonder whether the Minister of Communications can be a little more definite and precise now as to when he intends to lay before parliament the green paper, so-called, on communications policy? The second part of my question, which I ask now so as not to take too much time, is this: after tabling the green paper, does the minister intend to convene a federal-provincial conference on this long-smouldering problem?

[Translation]

Hon. Gérard Pelletier (Minister of Communications): I do not have to alter my predictions about the publication of the government green paper at the end of March, Mr. Speaker. As for another federal-provincial conference on communications, several provincial ministers of communications have approached us about it and we are now considering the matter. The federal government warmly welcomes that proposal. We will have to agree so to include it on the agenda of federal-provincial meetings which, as we all know, is quite full; we will also have to agree on the agenda of such a conference, which will be much easier.

CABLEVISION—GOVERNMENT POSITION RESPECTING JURISDICTION

Mr. Roch La Salle (Joliette): I should like to put a supplementary question, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Joliette wishes to put a supplementary question.

Mr. La Salle: Since, Mr. Speaker, the Quebec Minister of Communications has reminded his federal counterpart that Quebec has jurisdiction over cablevision and that it was taken for granted, what is now the government position in that connection?

Hon. Gérard Pelletier (Minister of Communications): Mr. Speaker, the position of the federal government is quite clearly indicated in the letter which I sent to my Quebec counterpart and of which I tabled a copy in this House last Friday.

YOUTH

OPPORTUNITIES FOR YOUTH PROGRAM—SPECIFIC GUIDELINES FOR APPLICANTS—ESTABLISHMENT OF REVIEW COMMITTEES

Mr. Keith Taylor (Churchill): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Secretary of State. In view of the fact there is a March 1 deadline for opportunities for youth applications, would the minister advise the House whether more specific guidelines have been prepared for the use of applicants and also for the use of the committees that are to review and recommend projects?

Hon. James Hugh Faulkner (Secretary of State): No, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Taylor: Would the minister tell us whether these committees have been established? If so, would he tell us how the members were selected, and by whom?

Mr. Faulkner: They have not been finally established, Mr. Speaker, but the opportunities for youth staff are looking at names that are coming from the field and the committees will, I believe, be established some time next month.

OPPORTUNITIES FOR YOUTH PROGRAM—REQUEST FOR EXTENSION OF DEADLINE FOR APPLICATIONS

Mr. John Lundrigan (Gander-Twillingate): Mr. Speaker, perhaps I could help the minister by asking him a question to which I hope he will have a positive answer. Is he prepared to advance by a couple of weeks the deadline for applications under the opportunities for youth program, bearing in mind that hundreds of communities geographically removed from central Canada are not aware of the March 31 deadline?

Hon. James Hugh Faulkner (Secretary of State): I understand the hon. member's question. I should like to talk to him about it. This is the first indication I have received that there is a problem of this kind. I do not know whether I am free to make the change suggested, but I should like to talk to the hon. member in order to determine how serious the problem is.

OPPORTUNITIES FOR YOUTH PROGRAM—AUDITING OF PROJECTS

Mr. A. D. Hales (Wellington): I should like to ask the Secretary of State whether all the moneys provided for opportunities for youth projects will be audited by one of the government departments?

Hon. James Hugh Faulkner (Secretary of State): They are always audited, Mr. Speaker.

OPPORTUNITIES FOR YOUTH PROGRAM—INVESTIGATION OF APPLICATIONS BY POLICE OR SECURITY PLANNING GROUP

Mr. Erik Nielsen (Yukon): I have a supplementary question for the Solicitor General. Can the hon. gentleman inform the House whether it is any part of the responsibility or activities of the police and the security planning group in his department, or of any other personnel coming under his jurisdiction, to vet applications before they are approved of after they are granted?

Hon. Warren Allmand (Solicitor General): Only if there is a request to do so from the agency itself.

FARM MACHINERY—MASSEY-FERGUSON PROFITS—INVESTIGATION BY MINISTER—POSSIBLE ACTION

Mr. Lorne Nystrom (Yorkton-Melville): My question, Mr. Speaker, is directed to the Minister of Agriculture. In view of the fact that the profits of the Massey-Ferguson farm machinery company increased by more than 340 per cent last year, may I ask whether the minister is investigating this unjustified rise in profits and can he tell us whether he is considering recommending some form of price control in a situation of this kind?

Mr. Baldwin: In due course.

Hon. E. F. Whelan (Minister of Agriculture): I was not aware that their profit was that high. As I stated earlier in the House, we have been meeting with ambassadors and trade representatives of other countries that are in a position to supply farm machinery in an attempt to work out agreements with them or to help them with their sales in this country so that these other companies will be faced with some competition.

Mr. Nystrom: The minister failed to answer my question. Is he considering the establishment of a prices review board or some form of price control in a situation such as I have described where the increase in profit amounts to 340 per cent?

Mr. Whelan: We will certainly consider every avenue open to us to make them accept a realistic mark-up when selling machinery so that they do not take advantage of agricultural producers.

REQUEST FOR EXTENSION OF OFFICE HOURS TO ASSIST TAXPAYERS SEEKING INFORMATION

Mr. Joseph-Philippe Guay (St. Boniface): Mr. Speaker, my question is to the Minister of National Revenue. Bearing in mind the deadline for income tax returns, which is coming up shortly, and with reference to my question of February 8, reported in Hansard at page 1076, with regard to the possibility of extending the office hours of income tax offices throughout the country in order to assist taxpayers seeking information in connection with income tax returns, may I ask whether the minister has now had time in which to consider this matter?

Hon. Robert Stanbury (Minister of National Revenue): Yes, Mr. Speaker. For the benefit of people unable to use the inquiry service during the day because they are at work, we are extending both the local and long-distance toll-free telephone inquiry service until 8 p.m. every Monday and Tuesday until April 30.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. G. W. Baldwin (Peace River): Is the minister contemplating engaging Fred Davis and the rest of his staff at another million dollars to publicize this fact?

Mr. Nielsen: I rise on a question of privilege, Mr. Speaker. Perhaps hon. members have heard this question of privilege before, but I raise it again because it brings into question the whole practice of this place in entertaining questions by parliamentary secretaries to ministers.

I can understand backbenchers seeking legitimate information. If they cannot get it on the telephone, they may seek to get it in the House. But parliamentary secretaries, in my submission, are in a far different position. They are assistants to ministers, in this case, to the Minister of Transport, and there is a clear line of communication available between the parliamentary secretary and the Minister of National Revenue through which this information could have been easily obtained.

It is unfair to opposition members whose chief responsibility it is to seek information in this House for parliamentary secretaries to abuse the question period in this way. I submit that Your Honour should take this whole matter under consideration and at some later time advise members of the House whether you feel it is fitting and proper for parliamentary secretaries or, for that matter, ministers, to be asking each other questions.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Guay (St. Boniface): Mr. Speaker, I should like to say first of all that I have been elected in just the same way as the hon. member from Yukon.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

An hon. Member: And by a lot more voters.

Mr. Guay (St. Boniface): And, Mr. Speaker, may I say to you that it is very difficult for a member of this side of the House to sit here daily listening to some of the nonsensical questions posed from the other side.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Guay (St. Boniface): At least we ask questions that make sense and benefit Canadians. Also, I am sure, because we are all equal as Members of Parliament, we are entitled to have questions recorded in Hansard on the same basis as members on the other side. The time has come for this to be recognized. Regardless of whether we are parliamentary secretaries or not we should be able to catch your eye, Mr. Speaker, when we have important questions to ask pertaining not only to our constituencies but to Canadians throughout the country.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. This matter was raised by way of a question of privilege by the hon. member for Yukon and I have no hesitation in ruling that while it may be a point of order which is of interest to all hon. members, and certainly to the Chair, it is not a question of privilege.

I am not entirely in agreement with what is suggested either by the hon. member for Yukon or by the hon. member for St. Boniface. The hon. member for St. Boniface suggests—and I suppose in theory he is right—that members on the government side have the same rights as members of the opposition in asking questions. Yet that is not in accordance with the traditions of this House or of any parliamentary democracy. It is a long established practice in Canada, going back for many years, that questions are essentially, or basically, the privilege of members of the opposition.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Speaker: The other point is perhaps a little more subject to controversy—whether parliamentary secretaries have the same right as members of the opposition or as backbenchers on their own side to ask questions during the question period. I must say I have some reservations about this point. It seems to me that if parliamentary secretaries are to be recognized as having authority to speak on behalf of the government in reply to questions, it is debatable whether they ought to be given the privilege of asking questions.

Mr. Speaker: This is the aspect which worries me somewhat. The hon. member for Yukon and others have raised this matter before. I am not clear in my mind, because the points made by the hon. member for St. Boniface are worth considering and the points made by the hon. member for Yukon and others on his side are also worthy of consideration. I have been thinking of this problem for some years now and there seems to be no solution except, perhaps, to count on the discretion and co-operation of parliamentary secretaries not to ask questions too often. I have tried in a subtle way not to encourage them too much to ask questions, and I will continue that practice as much as possible. I realize there are arguments that may be made in support of the proposition advanced by the hon. member for St. Boniface today, and by the hon. member for Saint-Denis and the hon. member for Ontario.

However, perhaps the question should be whether it is proper for a parliamentary secretary to ask a question rather than whether the rules and practices of the House give him the right to do so. I should like to reserve the question. I will take it under advisement and perhaps some day it can be resolved to the satisfaction of all hon. members, including backbenchers to my right and distinguished parliamentary secretaries. The hon. member for Yukon and others might have noted that when the hon. member for St. Boniface was given the floor a moment ago the question period had expired. That is a point that the hon. member for Yukon and others might like to take into consideration.

This having been said, perhaps in fairness to a few members to my left and to my right in the back benches who have been trying to ask questions we might recognize two or three for quick questions before calling orders of the day.

Mr. Prud'homme: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Speaker: Order. The hon. member on a point of order.

Mr. Prud'homme: Mr. Speaker, I am of course with you when you say that one ought not to put questions to the minister whom one represents as parliamentary secretary, but before you make a decision that might affect the rights of members in future, and set up new precedents, I must say that I do not see why we should not exercise our privilege of addressing questions to other ministers, just like any other member.

Furthermore, Mr. Speaker,—and this is in reply to a remark by the hon. member for Yukon (Mr. Nielsen)— if government members can ask a minister for information simply by picking up the phone, I suppose that there is nothing to prevent any opposition member from doing the same. I could easily reply any time to the hon. member for Yukon on this matter.

Mr. Speaker, I would like to respectfully point out to you, before you make a ruling, that if a parliamentary secretary or anybody else asks questions to a minister from whom he could get answers over the phone this is likely to inform the public.

If the hon. member for Yukon directs a question to a minister it is because he expects that a reply will be given in the House so as to permit reporters to inform the population. Questions from the opposition to ministers could easily be asked outside the House—

AIRPORTS

MOUNT HOPE—POSSIBILITY OF AREA MEMBERS ATTENDING MEETING BETWEEN HAMILTON CIVIC AIRPORT COMMITTEE AND MINISTER OF TRANSPORT

Mr. Sean O'Sullivan (Hamilton-Wentworth): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Transport and arises from a news account carried in the Hamilton Spectator late last week. Is the minister planning to meet tomorrow members of the Hamilton civic airport committee? If so, would he consider allowing members from the Hamilton area to join the Minister of Labour in attending the meeting?

Hon. Jean Marchand (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I have just been told that they have asked for an interview tomorrow but I do not know at what time. I shall have to discuss the matter with the minister from Hamilton.

Mr. O'Sullivan: I have a supplementary question, Mr. Speaker, which perhaps I could direct to the Minister of Labour. Would the minister advise whether other Members of Parliament from the Hamilton area will be allowed to attend the meeting?

Hon. John C. Munro (Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, what happened, I think, was that the chairman of the civic airport committee was in touch with members of my staff to see whether a meeting could be arranged between the committee and the Minister of Transport. Following that, I believe we got in touch with the minister's office, but I am not yet aware of the precise time. With regard to the hon. member's question, if he and other members from the area are to be involved I think this would be up to the Minister of Transport to decide.

Mr. Muir: A point of order, Mr. Speaker. For quite a number of years in this House members from a province could ask a minister from that particular province questions about matters other than those looked after by his department. Then, Your Honour made a ruling that, for instance, members from Nova Scotia could not ask the minister from Nova Scotia any questions about matters other than those pertaining to his portfolio. In this way, many times he could avoid answering many questions because he was not responsible for those matters to the House.

Mr. Bell: Heavy water, for example.

Mr. Muir: A moment ago a question was directed to the Minister of Transport. It was then redirected to the Minister of Labour, who I am sure has nothing to do with transport matters which I think would be for the Minister of Transport. The question related to a particular area of Ontario. Now that the precedent has been reset once again, I hope that members from Nova Scotia will be in a much better position to pose questions to the minister from Nova Scotia, questions pertaining to the office of the President of the Privy Council, especially with regard to the announcements that he makes about everything under the sun.

Mr. Speaker: Order. The hon. member has raised an interesting point. Without getting involved in a discussion may I say that the rule was made not by me but is of long standing. In this respect I can quote to the hon. member a number of past rulings and a citation from Beauchesne. If the supplementary question asked a moment ago was asked of the minister as representing an area or district, then it was entirely out of order and should not have been asked. I was so busy looking at the back rows to see who might next be recognized that I did not follow as closely as I should the question that was being asked by way of a supplementary. If the question was asked of the minister in his capacity as representing an area, then it was certainly out of order, and that is my ruling. Orders of the day.

Mr. Baldwin: Mr. Speaker, may I raise a point of order having to do with House business and the very interesting point that was raised previously. Might I suggest to the Chair that no decision on the matter be made, and also bring forward for the consideration of the government House leader the suggestion that one of the first items of business for the procedure committee, which will engage itself in a discussion of the questions put before it by the terms of reference, be this particular issue. While it is not necessarily binding on Your Honour, this was done in 1968, I think, when certain guidelines were laid down. I suggest that the question period and the answers given might well be considered a priority item for the committee on procedure and organization so that this question period might be made more useful and meaningful.

Mr. Speaker: Orders of the day.

[Mr. Munro.]

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

FINANCIAL STATEMENT OF THE MINISTER OF FINANCE

The House resumed, from Friday, February 23, consideration of the motion of the Hon. John N. Turner (Minister of Finance) that this House approves in general the budgetary policy of the government, and the amendment of Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West) (p. 1526).

[Translation]

Hon. Jeanne Sauvé (Minister of State for Science and Technology): Mr. Speaker, it is not without emotion that I rise in this House, which you chair with so much competence and fairness, in my capacity as elected representative of the people. I have delivered many speeches during my life, but this one is not at all similar to the others. The opinions which I will submit today are proceeding from a mandate solemnly given through a democratic election.

Curiously enough I solicited this somewhat frightening responsibility which now falls upon me of representing others, and which is so personal and so total a commitment. The democratic process requires one to take the initiative of this office in its first stages. Such an enterprise may seem presumptuous, for who can claim to speak for others? Yet, this is necessary.

The only way to adequately fulfil this duty of representation is to listen to those who elect us and to reflect their concerns as much as possible. Then it is important to agree to the duty of pondering on the needs and expectations of the electorate and to restate them from the point of view of the legislator.

Then the time comes to project these conclusions in a debate in parliament, as I am doing today. Hon. members on the other side of the House also take part in this process. Their analyses and criticisms lend a character of full representativeness to our proceedings.

Parliamentarism is the very basis of our democracy as it is a means to have those especially elected by their constituents to insure the welfare and the progress of the people through adequate and progressive legislation. Freedom of speech in the House is indeed the best means to ensure our century old parliamentary institutions their strength and forever present characteristics.

This is why I am particularly happy to have this opportunity to comment on a budget which has been presented in such a clear and rigorous way by the hon. Minister of Finance (Mr. Turner).

Last Monday's budget is a significant answer to the needs of the average class of people who make up most of the constituency of Montreal-Ahuntsic.

Mr. Speaker, families in my constituency earn $8,000, $12,000 or $15,000 a year. They are made up of two to four children, they own a car, a garden and some of them have a cottage. Here is a still more meaningful fact I am glad to tell the House. The Ahuntsic constituency is one where the education level is the highest.

Indeed when I travelled through it I discovered that in each home all the young people, almost without exception, either those of 16 or those of 22 were still students. It is undoubtedly such families which are the cornerstone of our society: those whose children have the courage to get an intellectual and professional training allowing them to accept the challenges which are awaiting them as adults.

The budget we are discussing today is for those families.

Having ensured, through previously submitted bills, the attenuation of unemployment rates' effects that measures designed to create employment cannot succeed in reducing as fast as desired, having established in co-operation with the provinces one of the world's best systems ensuring essential services for the people, the government now undertakes to protect the income of middle classes. It is the middle class people who bear the cost of programs of a social nature. It is them, not that they are so rich, but because they are the most numerous, who provide the money required for public expenditures of the size of those incurred in Canada.

Rather prosperous, hard working and generous, these middle class people accept this civic duty, showing thus a very high social awareness.

I suggest, Mr. Speaker, that I was not elected for having promised tax reductions or increases of marginal benefits. I have rather taken advantage of my contacts with the people to explain the reasons behind our social policy and outline the necessity, for a country as prosperous as Canada, of taking progressive social measures in order to protect those who, for various reasons, cannot earn a decent income. And it is to the Liberal government's credit that it has been to the forefront in the social field.

The voters in my constituency have shown themselves very aware of this fact. Although these programs were a heavy burden to them, they chose to elect a government that planned to unite the resources of the strong in support of the weak. The present budget accordingly leaves income in the hands of those who earned it, so as to increase their purchasing power, which should in turn help increase employment and give a boost to economic activity.

[English]

In this respect, the measures to reduce taxes announced by the hon. Minister of Finance (Mr. Turner); measures such as the increase in the principal exemptions and the lowering of federal tax rates, are of fundamental importance.

Moreover, in order to shield middle income families from inflation, these exemptions, as well as the income brackets, will, as of January 1, 1974, be set in such a manner as to ensure that the tax reductions will continue to be just that; tax reductions. Therefore, if, on account of inflation, a middle-income earner obtains a salary increase that would normally put him into a higher tax bracket, he will find that his exemptions and his income bracket have also moved upwards and that the increase in his income is protected. This, I feel, is the clearest possible proof of this government's sincere desire to put more money in the hands of middle-income families. Of course, the government could merely have lowered taxes for these people. But since, in a certain way, the government stands to gain from inflation, because of the increase in tax revenues that it can produce, the indexing of rates and exemptions is a guarantee to all taxpayers that the tax relief announced today will still be real tomorrow.

This budget will also protect the income of the average wage earner in other ways, such as through the reduction of tariffs, and taxes on certain consumer goods. It is important to note, however, that these reductions are of limited application, or, in the case of some products, such as fruits and vegetables, that they vary with the time of year, specifically for the purpose of avoiding unfavourable side effects on Canadian production and on employment in our farms and factories.

[Translation]

Some may have smiled at the inclusion of cosmetics and other beauty products among these exemptions. An yet those are products whose consumption is very important and which—

Mr. Hees: The government did it to get female votes!

Mrs. Sauvé: That was a good idea.

Mr. Speaker, I was saying that women are more particularly interested in those products although the latest statistics reveal that more and more men are using beauty products. Is this one of the reasons why the hon. Minister of Finance took those products into consideration?

Nevertheless, women will benefit from this exemption. Rich or poor we all have in our purse our lipstick, some powder, mascara and many other items. It is true that this measure was the subject of superficial comments and there are more to come. However, let us not forget that this industry's yearly turnover amounts to almost $600 million.

Women are involved in this budget not only through the exemption on beauty products, of course, but by the resulting increase in their income. As main consumers, repeatedly harassed by consumption enticements, administrators of the family budgets, they will find it easier to shop for themselves and their families and perhaps to add a few new items.

I find comforting that this budget is unquestionably aimed at a class of women with the lowest incomes and who need more than others to improve their situation. It is not always through exceptional measures involving the word "woman" that women can most be helped but by allowing them to share equally the advantages of social and economic life through the introduction of an increased degree of equity and justice in our legislation. The budget paves the way toward this ideal. It indicates to the average earners that when the economy is developing they should be the first ones whose income must increase.

The budget will be approved by the female consumers that will know, as was asked other groups of citizens by the Minister of Finance, how to reduce their expenses so as not to start a new round of inflation.

In the progressive perspective of compensating measures for the protection of income, the government naturally took account of older people who worked hard to build this country and still want to play their full part as citizens.

At the time of the last budget, we increased old age pensions from $82 to $86. And so, as we are fully conscious of the increasing needs of older people, we wish now to boost the pension basic rate to $100 a month beginning from April 1, 1973. Those changes will enable older people to live more decently and reduce the gap between their income and the income of other citizens.

Mr. Speaker, within a federal government, we must closely co-operate with the provinces in order to give the people the services they are entitled to on the part of a government knowing how to assume its responsibilities.

It is also on that account that the federal government decided to change the equalization formula for the benefit of provinces, by adding new grants based upon school tax revenue.

There is no doubt that such measures will help support the provinces in their governing responsibilities.

Federalism requires a sense of balance and measure, some concern for community well-being and, above all, steady co-operation from all levels of government.

This government not only shows positively that it wants co-operation, but this time it even anticipated the requests of the provinces.

As concerns the department of which I have been made responsible, the Minister of Finance stated, and I quote:

> ... the experience of many decades has shown that advancing technology brings with it continued expansion in productivity and output, continued expansion in the real income that workers are able to earn, and continued expansion in the number of productive jobs available.

The very creation of the Department of Science and Technology is intimately associated with such an objective. It bears testimony to this government's new awareness of the eventual impact of science and technology on the development of this country. Innovation, research and know-how are the core of the progress achieved by modern societies.

If Canada has managed to maintain its prosperity up to now, it is mainly on account of its great natural resources and thanks to its exploiting industries. But if we want to maintain and improve our position in relation to other industrialized countries, we must now proceed to some structural changes in our industries.

Through the operations of the department of which I have the responsibility will be worked out the long term programs aimed at ensuring continuity between research, development, industrial process and marketing. In order to survive against our competitors, to dodge their control, we must in turn direct our efforts toward industries using highly skilled labour. We must know better the influence of exterior factors, such as fiscal measures, tariffs, taxes, foreign investments that affect our industrial development. One of the responsibilities of the department is to assess the influence of those factors on our economy and to pave the way for the future.

To this effect, Mr. Speaker, let me remind hon. members that, as of March 31, 1972, we have set a rule to assign the Canadian industry an increasing part of the federal needs in research and development. This initiative was taken by my predecessor and has been known for some time as the "Make or Buy" principle; it enables us to elaborate in details and to implement a policy to bring research near development, to spread its effects throughout the country and to bring our industry an intellectual and innovating incentive. It will also ensure better employment opportunities in the private sector.

We must innovate if we want to ensure more and better jobs. At least, however insufficient it may be we must not lose the jobs we already have.

[English]

It is not only the person who perfects a new product or process who gains from innovation, for it also stimulates those companies that do business with the innovator: the supplier of materials, of parts, of services and of capital goods. By dealing with those firms the innovating company acts as a spur to their development. As a result, our entire industrial base and our capacity for innovation are strengthened. But that is not all. When the company perfects a new product or process, it needs new materials, new services and new capital goods, and the more the new product or process is technologically advanced, the more advanced will the new material, services and capital goods have to be.

In terms of other advantages, technical innovations mean, over the long term, increased profits for businesses, increased real income for labour, and improved work conditions with its "corollary", work satisfaction, a strengthened economy, and thereby increased business profits.

It is thus quite clear that innovation and increased activity in the field of science and technology are the way of progress for our economy.

Briefly, our aims in industrial technology are these: to increase innovating activity within Canada and, if we have to import technology, to do so in the manner most advantageous to the Canadian economy.

And so, Mr. Speaker, these various reflections on the budget and on the department's activity in promoting the role of science and technology in industrial development show unequivocally that our government's first concern is for the needs of Canadians; it listens to their requests, and tries, as it always has, to further their welfare and progress.

[English]

Hon. George Hees (Prince Edward-Hastings): Mr. Speaker, I should like to begin by congratulating the very charming and able Minister of Science and Technology (Mrs. Sauve) on a very well delivered maiden speech. It was informative and delivered with fine style. I am sure she will make her constituents very proud that they sent her here.

Following the night of February 19 it became very clear that the budget that had been presented to the House and to the country was a 100 per cent election budget aimed at appearing to give something to as many as possible of those who will be voting in the general election which will come later this spring. It was delivered by the greatest con artist that this country has ever had as Minister of Finance (Mr. Turner) because on January 1 this government raised taxes by 3 per cent to all personal income tax payers, but six weeks later the minister had the unmitigated gall to pretend that this 5 per cent tax reduction was anything more than a net 2 per cent reduction in income taxes. Just how gullible does this minister and this government think the people of Canada are, and just how phony can you be?

As the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Stanfield), the hon. member for Edmonton West (Mr. Lambert) and the hon. member for Don Valley (Mr. Gillies) have pointed out very ably, this budget contains no stimulus to the economy and nothing which will reduce unemployment to a reasonable level of around 4 per cent. Also, it contains no plan to control inflation and nothing to keep the annual increase in the cost of living down to around 3 per cent a year.

Because of the lack of a practical and effective plan to deal with unemployment, inflation, or any of our other economic ills, the government will call an election in April, with a vote no later than 60 days from that date, which will be in June, with the intention of getting in the votes if possible before three important things take place. First, the government wants to have an election before it becomes obvious that the few prices which have been lowered as a result of the removal of excise taxes have again gone up and have reached levels above those that prevailed before the taxes were removed. Second, they want the election to come before those who have been taken off the tax rolls find out that inflation has once again put them back on the tax rolls. Third, they want the election to come before the people of Canada realize that unemployment and inflation have not been reduced by this budget and that it, like the five budgets which have preceded it, has simply failed to deal with the economic problems facing this country and has fallen flat on its face. This budget was presented with the sole aim of trying to maintain this government in power, and the people of Canada will come to realize this more and more in the weeks ahead.

Now, Mr. Speaker, I should like to deal briefly with a matter about which the government has said very little in the presentation of this budget for fear of offending its new-found bedfellows, the New Democratic Party. I speak, of course, of the government's proposal to reduce corporate income taxes from 49 per cent to 40 per cent for manufacturers and processors as a means of stimulating employment in those two sectors of the economy and thereby reducing unemployment. When the minister first introduced his plan on May 8, he confidently predicted that manufacturers and processors would start expanding their operations as a result of the windfall that they would receive on January 1. The result of this would be to reduce unemployment. When the minister announced his plan, unemployment in Canada stood at 5.2 per cent of the work force, seasonally adjusted. Today, it is 6.2 per cent, seasonally adjusted. The natural question is: what went wrong?

The first mistake the minister made was that he did not seem to realize that our manufacturers and processors had three options open to them for spending the windfall they would start receiving on January 1, 1973. They could either expand their operation in anticipation of the cash windfall they would start receiving on January 1, or they could decide to put the extra money into the company's reserve fund, or they could plan to pay out the money in additional dividends. Judging by the results that have accrued from the minister's policy, the great majority of our manufacturers and processors must have decided on one or the other of the two latter alternatives.

The second mistake which the minister made was that he did not seem to realize that although taxes would be lowered on January 1 for manufacturers and processors, who together make up 34.2 per cent of the Canadian economy, they would also be substantially raised on the same day for the other two thirds of the economy because of an item in the budget of 1971. The minister did not seem to realize that lowering taxes for one third of the economy and substantially raising taxes for the other two thirds does not add up to a stimulus for the economy as a whole and, regrettably, today's very high unemployment figures show just how true that is.

Now, as though this was not a sufficient deterrent to reducing unemployment, the minister did not seem to realize that the money which would be invested in plant expansion by manufacturers and processors today means investment in labour saving machinery to lower costs and make management less dependent on their labour force. So our manufacturers and processors who started investing in plant expansion in anticipation of the windfall which they would start receiving on January 1, 1973, have been making these investments to reduce their labour force rather than to expand it.

It is fair to ask: what measure to increase employment should the minister have introduced last May 8 and what should he be introducing in his present budget? If a government wants businessmen to do something which it believes is necessary for the good of the country, it must not simply hand over to businesses a gift in the form of a tax reduction and hope that they will make use of it in the way in which the government desires. This simply does not work, and I speak with 20 years of experience as a manufacturer and six years of experience as a member of the government dealing with businessmen.

What the government must do for the good of the country is to tell businessmen what it wants to accomplish and that it will reward their efforts to bring about this aim in proportion to the effort which they make. In the present case, the government should have said to all business, not just the manufacturers and processors, that it will reward over-all increases in employment during the year in direct proportion to the increases in employment that are made by individual companies, and that it will do so in the form of a tax rebate at the end of the year. This is simply a matter of comparing the total number of man years of employment by a company in the tax year under consideration with the man years of employment by that company in the previous year. The tax rebate would be in proportion to the increase in employment, and the company would be able to calculate a year in advance what cash rebate it would receive for various improvements in employment.

This would enable Canadian businessmen to calculate in advance how much their labour costs would be reduced on any additional business which the tax rebate would make it possible for them to undertake. At present, many orders are out of the reach of Canadian producers, both in Canada and in the export market, because of low prices quoted by foreign competition. Lower labour costs would put some of this business, as a matter of fact I believe quite a lot of it, within their reach, and orders obtained in this way would be a net gain for employment in Canada.

Mr. Hees: Mr. Speaker, in this way the government would receive a 100 per cent return for every dollar that it spends to increase employment, instead of the expensive, give-away program which the minister has presented to the House and which the government intends to push through parliament. Mr. Speaker, I believe that the businessmen of this country would respond very well indeed to the incentive program which I have presented. I have talked it over with a great many businessmen. They tell me that it would be exactly the kind of program that all businessmen would like.

They tell me that this incentive program means the possibility of lowering labour costs, so that they could go after business that is out of their hands today. By achieving lower labour costs through a direct rebate given to them by the government, which they know will come to them at the end of the year, in direct proportion to their increase in employment, they will be able to go out after new business with prices which are competitive, get business for Canada and produce the jobs that are not available to Canadians today.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Hees: So, Mr. Speaker, through you I say to the minister and to the government, forget about your candy bars and your cosmetics. Bring forth plans that will deal with the basic problems facing the economy today. Through you I also say to them that failure to do so will result in their making that short trip across the aisle to sit on your left, Mr. Speaker, sometime later in June.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Hees: Mr. Speaker, I see that I have a minute and a half left, and I would like to clear up a slight misunderstanding that occurred in the House a few weeks ago. After I spoke in the throne speech debate I was followed by the Minister of Finance who stated the belief that, during the Grey Cup game of 1938, which the Argonauts happened to win by defeating Winnipeg 30 to 7, I had sat on the bench. Mr. Speaker, I want to tell this young upstart of a minister that in those days we played 60 minutes of football, and I happened to play 60 minutes in that game. I am glad to have the opportunity to correct that, Mr. Speaker.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Kootenay West (Mr. Harding).

[Mr. Hees.]

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): On a matter of privilege, Mr. Speaker, I want formally to withdraw—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I apologize to the hon. member for Kootenay West as the Minister of Finance seeks the floor on a question of privilege.

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): Mr. Speaker, in view of the hon. gentleman's statement I want formally to withdraw the remark which I made in the throne speech debate, and to say to him that I recognize that in those days he was a 60 minute player, able to go both ways, but I think that in current circumstances he is better on defence.

Mr. Randolph Harding (Kootenay West): Mr. Speaker, may I first congratulate the Minister of Science and Technology (Mrs. Sauvé), who represents the riding of Ahuntsic, on her maiden speech. I think she has made an excellent start in the House of Commons, and I trust that in the months to come we will hear more from her.

I have listened with interest to the budget debate over the last three sitting days. Some constructive criticism has been offered, and many good suggestions have been made by speakers representing all parties. I feel that these suggestions should be carefully examined by the government, which might be able to incorporate some of them into future budgets or into the administrative policies of the various departments concerned. Our nation is in deep economic trouble, and it is obvious that the government is in need of guidance, both devine and otherwise.

There has been a great deal of criticism of the Minister of Finance (Mr. Turner) for bringing in a budget which contains a number of NDP and Conservative measures which were advanced during the election campaign some four months ago. There is absolutely no doubt that the present Liberal government has done a complete about-face on the financial policies which it was advocating over the past three or four years. Its tight money policy and the restrictive measures ensuing from that policy have resulted in tremendously high and unacceptable unemployment rates in Canada. This budget is a reversal of the government's past tight money policy, but one of the main criticisms of the budget is that it is not sufficiently expansionary to meet the crisis in unemployment which is facing us.

I am not going to be critical of the minister for incorporating a large number of NDP and Conservative ideas in his budget. I only regret that this action was not taken several budgets ago, and then perhaps had that been so, we might have the unemployment rate at manageable proportions by this time. I see nothing wrong with a democratic and responsible government changing its plan, or accepting ideas advanced by other groups. The adoption of these ideas might show up the fallacies of its past policies, but will result in better government, and in a much better deal for the taxpayers of the country. And that is what government should be all about. Too many governments fail because they try to stick too closely to preconceived ideas in a policy and a program which are often faulty. I do not believe in the old philosophy that majority governments have always used in this country, to the effect that suggestions from opposition groups must seldom be accepted because that is apparently a sign of weakness. No government is always right, just because it received majority support in a certain election.

In a minority situation the government of the day is forced to make major adjustments. For this reason, some of the best legislation ever passed in this country came during a period of minority government. I would remind hon. members that our old age pension legislation in 1926 was brought in to accommodate a minority group of progressive members who supported the government of that day on the condition that old age pension legislation would be one of the items passed by the government. During the last 10 or 12 years some major pieces of social legislation were also processed through the House of Commons under minority governments. Some of the important legislation passed under minority administrations included family allowances and our national medicare plan. Good legislation can also come out of the present minority situation if the government is flexible enough to adjust to the current political situation.

I would like to make my position on the current budget crystal clear. Our party has agreed to support generally the budget of February, 1973, and feels that most of the proposals stemming from it would be beneficial to the Canadian people. Our group voted solidly against the budget of last year, primarily because of the corporate rip-offs which it contained. I, personally, see no reason to change either my opinion or my vote so far as the corporate rip-offs in the May 8, 1972, budget are concerned, and I have no hesitation in stating that any bill containing corporate rip-offs which comes before the House of Commons will not receive my support.

The last general election date was less than four months ago. It resulted in a minority government. The Canadian people do not want another election immediately, despite the minority situation in which we find ourselves. They want the elected members and the parties to try to make this parliament work. We are being asked to make every effort to solve the serious national problems facing us, and to try to produce good legislation for the Canadian people. Our NDP group has decided to give the minority government an opportunity to produce this type of legislation and we will base our support and decisions on each piece of legislation as it is presented to the House of Commons.

One thing has become crystal clear since this session opened just over seven weeks ago. The Conservative party has no intention of trying to make parliament work. It has only one goal in mind, and that is to take over the reins of government. Its obstructionist and delaying tactics are deliberately designed to prevent any good coming from this minority government situation. The lust for government office by this power hungry group of Tories is really something to behold. Their drive for power has become an obsession and this fact has not been lost on the Canadian people.

Last November, our NDP group met and drew up a list of eight objectives which we felt this new parliament should work toward. The Throne Speech indicated that action would be taken in all the areas outlined. The budget presented one week ago, makes some progessive moves in this direction, and for this reason I will support the motion on the budget when it comes to a vote this coming Wednesday. I trust that all the legislation to implement the progressive measures outlined in this budget will be introduced and dealt with as soon as this debate is concluded. This legislation is needed and should be given top priority by the government and by the committees which will deal with it. Early action on these measures will also show the Canadian people that parliament can work and pass progressive legislation in a minority situation.

Perhaps the most widespread benefits from the budget will come in the area of income tax reductions. These will be retroactive to January 1, 1973. The proposed 5 per cent reduction, with a minimum tax reduction of $100, is a welcomed tax relief, especially for those in the lower income brackets. When this tax cut is combined with the increased exemption to $1,600 for single people and $3,000 for married couples, along with the plan to index the personal income tax system and so end the erosion of purchasing power resulting from the interaction of inflation with the progressive tax system, I feel we have measures which can be supported by all members in the House.

The increase in the basic old age security pension to $100 is another move in the right direction, although this government has the financial resources which would have enabled it to raise the basic old age pension to a much higher figure. Our group has been pressing for a basic old age pension of $150. We intend to continue our campaign until we reach this goal. The raising of the basic pension, however, will help all pensioners, including those who were unable in the past to get any of the guaranteed income supplement. In addition, the combined old age security and guaranteed income supplement which becomes $170 a month for a single person and $325 for a married couple, again raises the monthly amount a little closer to an acceptable income goal.

The war veterans allowance, and the civilian war allowance which will be increased to a minimum of $150 per month for single and to $257 for married recipients is long overdue. With this goes the raising of the guaranteed income for those veterans over 65 to $206 per month for a single and $357 per month for married couples. As I said earlier, these benefits are steps in the right direction and certainly warrant support.

Despite many of the good features which I have briefly mentioned, the government's financial policies are not adequate to deal with the serious unemployment situation facing us. Canada has the highest unemployment rate of any industrialized country in the western world. The present budget is not sufficiently expansionary to really do a job of drastically reducing the unemployment rate in Canada. The fear of further inflation throughout the country apparently led the Minister of Finance to cut down on expansionary measures which many economists feel are needed at this time. I am of the opinion that the major problem facing us today is unemployment and budgetary measures should have reflected this to a greater degree than we find in the present budget. I suggest the Minister of Finance should closely study this situation over the next few months and, if necessary, make the financial commitments to do the job of effectively reducing unemployment.

There is no reason why the old age pension could not have been increased to a much higher figure. This would not only have further alleviated the plight of many of our senior citizens but would also have stimulated economic growth. As I indicated earlier, revenues currently available to the Canadian government warranted further increases. We should have had higher income tax reductions but, most important, the budget should have clearly laid out those programs which must be initiated to lay the base for permanent jobs throughout Canada rather than the use of the stop-gap programs which we have been faced with over the past two or three years.

Mr. Speaker, most economists will agree that unemployment is probably the major probem facing Canada today. Over the past four years, we have seen the objectives of this government and of many economists outside the government change in so far as the maximum rate of unemployment is concerned. Four years ago, 3 per cent was the maximum goal for unemployment in this nation, and then we find it going up to 4 per cent. Now, some of our financial leaders are talking in terms of a 5 per cent float of permanent unemployment in this nation. The fact must be coming clear to Canadians that neither this government nor the Conservatives who wish to follow have the economic policies to provide the people of Canada with full employment. The only time since the war that the unemployment situation was worse than today was during the last Conservative government in the early sixties. Most of the trouble stems from the economic policies which both these old line parties have been espousing for years. Their policies have made Canada a supplier of raw materials to practically every country in the world and these policies have basically neglected the job-intensive secondary industries which we require to help meet the unemployment crisis currently facing us. This is one of the main reasons we have increasing unemployment in an apparent period of prosperity.

This budget should have produced measures to ensure that immediate steps were being taken to lay the base for increased secondary processing in our nation. We should be taking steps now to regain control of many of our resource industries which currently belong to foreign dominated corporations, whose only object in obtaining them is to obtain a cheap source of raw material for the parent plant which is outside Canada. These are some of the basic measures that Canadians would like to see this government carry out. These are some of the basic measures which our party intends to press for over the coming months.

Mr. Speaker, the Minister of Finance has indicated that if necessary he will bring in two or three budgets per year to help meet the problems facing Canada and Canadians. I suggest to him, and to this government, that as soon as the budget debate is over, he start planning for the next one within a few months time. There are a number of emergencies in Canada at this time and this parliament should be prepared to meet them. By all means, let us pass this budget and pass the legislation based on the proposals contained in it, and then let us move forward into newer fields and give all Canadians, including those who are just starting out in the labour force of Canada, some real hope for the future.

[Mr. Harding.]

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister of Justice): Mr. Speaker, a few moments ago we heard the hon. member for Prince Edward-Hastings (Mr. Hees) refer to this budget as a pre-election budget. He did that, while at the same time saying that a number of things were wrong with it so I cannot quite understand the logic of the hon. member in putting those two thoughts together. Lest there be any doubt about the matter, we should all take it as a fair and firm prediction that it is anything but a pre-election budget now that the hon. member for Prince Edward-Hastings has referred to it in that fashion. I suggest that it will require about six such references before eventually, by effluxion of time, he is right about something being an election matter. Indeed, the hon. member for Kootenay West (Mr. Harding) has spoken about the responsibility and the opportunity to make parliament work. It seems to me that there should be a good, long time between now and the next election, so long as parliament assumes all its responsibilities and faces all the challenges which now face it to do work and produce good legislation for this country. I think it will be up to members in this House to make sure that the country understands from where any obstruction is coming, from where the delay is coming and who are those who do not want to see parliament work but, through their attitudes and actions, wish to delay good legislation brought forward by this government for the benefit of this country.

• (1600)

I was interested in observing in this debate a number of interesting differences of view expressed by members of the official opposition about what should have been done or should not have been done in connection with the economy. The hon. member for Don Valley (Mr. Gillies) has spoken of the importance of considering threats that this country faces from things over which it has no control. He was talking about matters of international concern and about the policies of other countries. Neither he nor his colleagues have so far repeated what formerly had been the position of his party, namely, that the reduction in taxation for manufacturing businesses and accelerated depreciation allowances were necessary protection measures for particularly vulnerable areas in secondary manufacturing. This area is particularly vulnerable because of the smallness of our national market and it is important, therefore, for us to meet international competition both at home and abroad. That was that party's position.

Indeed, rather than come out flatly and say that their position is still that of supporting assistance to industries in these vulnerable areas, some hon. members, particularly the hon. member for Prince Edward-Hastings (Mr. Hees) have come forward with a new idea. It is not unusual for each Conservative spokesman on finance to introduce a new major plank as he goes along. Only some of those members are allowed to say that they are speaking on behalf of the party when they do that.

Mr. Dinsdale: And the government steals all those good ideas.

Mr. Lang: I take it the hon. member's remarks do not fall into that category. He talked about windfalls in our policy. He did not seem to see the windfalls in his. He suggests that there should be a direct bonus to employers in all sectors of industry, for increasing employment. I wonder how he would distinguish between those increases which would take place in any event and those which take place as a result of special effort on the part of the employer? I do not know how he would do that. Indeed, he did not deal with the rather strange situation that would result from those industries which are strongest, most able to grow and most able to hold their own in international competition, receiving the maximum of help under such a plan, whereas those which are most vulnerable and are struggling to survive in the face of competition would receive almost none. I take it that in this idea he has not received the blessing of his colleagues who seem to be more responsible in matters of finance. They are busy, in the meantime, trying to decide what size of deficit would be appropriate in present circumstances to provide a sufficient degree of expansion through the budget.

In making his proposals in the budget, the Minister of Finance (Mr. Turner) tried to strike a balance between stimulation for purposes of employment and undue stimulation which would encourage inflation. He was exercising important judgment on what was the right amount of expansion needed for our economy. Hon. members opposite suggested that the deficit should be greater, which is not surprising, since, when the government does anything, the tendency of the opposition is to say that it should do more.

The hon. member for Edmonton West (Mr. Lambert) was provoked during his speech to name a figure. When asked how large a deficit the Minister of Finance ought to have brought in, the hon. member suggested that it should be, "perhaps $2.5 million or perhaps $3 billion". I see a spread of half a billion dollars there, yet I suppose we are to believe that the half billion dollars difference between the suggestion of the hon. member for Edmonton West and the proposal of the Minister of Finance in the budget is crucial, or very important. I note that the hon. member for Don Valley did not name a similar figure. No doubt he will, one of these days, come in with a new and different version of what ought to be done. I understand the hon. member for Saint-Hyacinthe (Mr. Wagner) was more generous in this regard, having suggested that $4 billion perhaps is the right figure. So, the Minister of Finance had better take note before he prepares his next budget; the bidding is under way, and almost any figure seems to be right. The figure that the Minister of Finance included in his budget was one that he had arrived at after judging carefully what was right for the country.

The hon. member for Prince Edward-Hastings did something else which I found remarkable and interesting. He talked about the negligible difference between the proposed income tax reductions and the situation if the 3 per cent reduction had remained in force from the previous year. Perhaps he suggests that the reductions are negligible, because for those with incomes over $50,000 a year the reduction in income tax under this budget is 3 per cent, which is what it would have been if the 3 per cent surtax had remained in place. So, for those with incomes of over $50,000 a year, there is no change. However, it is significant that for a great number of other Canadians, namely, those with the lowest incomes, the reductions are much more significant and, as the Minister of Finance has pointed out, they are in total worth about four times as much as the previous 3 per cent reduction would have been worth.

Hon. members of this House should focus their attention carefully on reductions in the total amount of tax for those in the lowest brackets. Those reductions are significant. The reductions are also significant for those in the middle income brackets. The wage earner with $7,000 income is to receive a tax reduction of approximately 10 per cent. This is important and this is the right direction in which tax reductions ought to go. It is that aspect of the budget to which I particularly want to direct the attention of hon. members. It is specifically in keeping with the traditions of the Liberal party of the past that we continue to improve the progressive nature of our tax system and attempt to reduce the burden on those in the lower income categories who can bear it least.

Mr. Dinsdale: Oh, come off it!

Mr. Lang: In doing this at this time the Minister of Finance has given the greatest part of the benefit to the lower income Canadians who are wage earners, or to Canadians with low incomes, wherever they may be.

Mr. Dinsdale: The minister begins to sound more and more like Edgar Benson.

Mr. Lang: Therefore, the greatest amount of tax reduction will affect those regions where the taxpayers are in the lowest income categories. The minister has thereby provided for a tendency for greater expansion in those areas where incomes are lowest, where unemployment normally is highest and where expansion is most needed.

Mr. Dinsdale: But this budget will not cure unemployment, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Lang: In keeping with that principle this budget provides for an increase in equalization payments; for here, too, the government is following traditions which were developed by previous Liberal governments and saying to all Canadians that, just as individuals who have most must bear the greatest burden of running this country so, too, those provinces, those areas, which are most prosperous when taken as a whole should assist those other areas where cost payments are highest and where tax revenue is proportionately lowest.

At present our government pays large sums of money to provinces under a variety of programs, many of which are cost-shared. Under those programs we pay as much as 50 cents on the dollar for post secondary education, hospital and medical care and the Canada Assistance Plan, to name the principal programs. Under all these programs, the payment made is equal to half the cost. Many of the poorer provinces have proportionately higher responsibilities than the more wealthy provinces, because of the nature of these programs. Under the equalization program, moneys are made available to the provinces, particularly to those which need money most. Under this budget, for instance, $190 million has been added by way of equalization payments. Of this amount, I am happy to say $26.4 million is to go to Saskatchewan, a province which has been going through economic difficulties and population decline as a result. It will receive an amount of money which should help it reduce tax burdens further on many provincial taxpayers, particularly upon property owners, as property taxes in some ways are the most regressive of taxes.

I hope the provincial authorities will take the suggestion of the Minister of Finance and make sure this money is used for the reduction of these taxes. As a citizen of Saskatchewan, I was pleased to note the increase in equalization, Mr. Speaker, especially as a number of years ago it appeared that Saskatchewan might be moving out of the so-called "have-not" category and into the "have" category, and might cease to receive equalization payments. I hope that day will come again. I want to say, now, that I shall continue always to support the equalization principle under which money is taken from across the country to help areas where available tax revenues are lowest. This is a fair and decent program, and one which is an extremely important part of the budget. It means that the provinces which have the lowest incomes and, often, the highest unemployment, find themselves in a better financial position to do something about it.

The budget contained another feature of direct interest to me and to people in my part of the country—the removal of the capital gains tax on family farms passing from father to son. This is an important measure psychologically and it leads me, again, to say to governments of provinces where estate taxes still apply in these circumstances, that it would be well for them to follow the lead of the federal government in this budget and to remove estate taxes, at least in this area, so that those succeeding to family farms need not fear a demand for taxes at that particular point.

Many hon. members will say, of course, that old age pensions should have been further increased. They should bear in mind the freedom which provincial governments have to pay more money to pensioners in their provinces where they see the need, and notice how few of the provinces have taken up this challenge or possibility. As far as a national program is concerned, consideration must be given to the needs of people across this country. There are other groups whose needs are also great and if there are additional funds to spend we must consider their needs also. But the challenge to the provinces is there—to pay more to those who need more in whichever province they are found. Not only does the challenge exist, but because of the arrangements made with the provinces under the Canada Assistance Plan it is easy for provinces to set up programs in such a way that the federal government pays 50 cents on every dollar made available. However, under the national plan, this is an important step to protect our old age pensioners and it is another part of this extremely significant budget. It is a budget which, as I have said through you, Mr. Speaker, to the hon. member for Prince Edward-Hastings is one of many which the present Minister of Finance will be bringing before the House before the election.

[Mr. Lang.]

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I regret to interrupt the minister but the time allotted to him has expired.

Mr. Douglas Roche (Edmonton-Strathcona): Mr. Speaker, on rising to speak for the first time in parliament, I wish to pay tribute to the excellent manner in which you preside over this House, along with the Deputy Speaker and your other officials. It is a privilege for any Canadian to be able to speak in this chamber and to take his place among so many distinguished parliamentarians from all parties.

I want my first words to be addressed to the youth of Canada. I want to reassure young people who are legitimately questioning the validity of old institutions that parliament is the preserver of their freedom. I want to tell them to have faith in this institution and to participate, in some way, in the continued development of our country and to help make our society more human in an age when the computer threatens to submerge the individual. We are not at the end but only the beginning of a new century of development in Canada.

Little did I realize, Mr. Speaker, as I sat in the Commons public gallery many of an afternoon in my youth, that I would one day stand here. The fact that I am here, as an ordinary Canadian, ought to be but one example to young people that there is room for them in society. We need their ideas and their energy.

One of the most important functions of a member of parliament is to reconcile the divergent interests in the community so that we can move forward together. It is necessary, therefore, as Edmund Burke has said "to unite circumspection with vigor". For we live in a time of exciting change and new possibilities, and parliament must show that it is responsive to people's needs if people are to continue to believe in it. Our job is to rule and not to wrangle.

Let me say at the outset that I believe the cornerstone of public policy in Canada today must be the rights and dignity of the individual human being. That is the principle which will reinvigorate Canada with economic prosperity, human freedom and national independence. Thus, I am convinced that the federal government today is too big, too dominant, too expensive and imposes itself too much in people's lives. Look at the government estimates for 1973-74 as the latest reflection of this: a federal budget tripled in 10 years; government spending up 17 per cent in one year; a 10 per cent increase in civil servants in one year and $300 million more for their salaries; a public works program of $97 million in the City of Ottawa alone.

Little wonder that the Economic Council of Canada has warned us against this government extravaganza. With 47 cents out of every dollar earned going to the three levels of government, federal, provincial and municipal, we have too much government in Canada. Too many people are made overly dependent on government; those who truly need help, the handicapped, the aged, the infirm, are hurt in the process. I advocate a hold-the-line approach on government spending so that, as our economy expands over the next decade, the percentage of government in the gross national product can be reduced. Mr. Speaker, it is time to blow the whistle on big government in Canada, and the people of Edmonton-Strathcona have sent me here to do a lot of whistling.

Many people today are asking, "What does Western Canada want?" What we want, in brief, is an even break in the opportunity to participate in industrialization, in scientific, technological and economic endeavours. Western Canada, with its tremendous agriculture, resource and energy base, is of vital importance to Canada's total wellbeing. Yet the over-centralized operation of the federal government treats the west as a hinterland. Tariff, transportation and marketing policies of the federal government work to the disadvantage of the west. There must be a better economic balance between the prosperous centre of Canada and the western provinces. We want economic justice. That is the central message the Lougheed government is transmitting to the country. That message will be at the heart of the forthcoming conference between the governments of the four western provinces and the federal government to discuss "western economic opportunities". It is imperative that this conference produce action and not just another report for the already overloaded library shelves.

Precisely because the distance from Parliament Hill is so great, the federal government must pay constant attention to the modernizing of the west so that westerners feel the spirit of confidence that is necessary for economic success. The Ottawa-Toronto-Montreal triangle has dominated Canada for too long; the future lies with the western, building end of Canada where the spectacular openings to the north and Pacific will be concentrated. I hope the government will not discount the urgency of my message because I am a member of the Progressive Conservative party. Western development must transcend politics. For my part I endorse the stand of Manitoba Liberal leader I. H. Asper, who criticizes "the freight rate structures, the custom tariff situation, the centralized banking system, the tax laws which create no incentive for western development, the immigration laws which presently create no impetus for settling in the west, and a host of other instruments of federal authority."

The situation of Edmonton today is an example of why stronger western influence is needed in Ottawa. Edmonton, host to the 1978 British Commonwealth Games, is witnessing the rapid beginnings of a five-year boom. Because of oil, gas and mineral finds in Northern areas, Edmonton is now the pivotal city in western Canada. We are not only a major distribution centre and staging area for the Arctic developments, we are strategically located to take advantage of great new markets opening up in the Pacific. Because of the Yellowhead highway, we are the only western Canadian city directly linked to two coastal cities, Vancouver and Prince Rupert.

The new trading opportunities waiting for Canada in Asia are bound to add to the Edmonton boom. Similarly, the coming direct link between Edmonton and Tuktoyaktuk in the Arctic and the development of the Mackenzie valley energy corridor will make Edmonton one of the great action centres of North America. But we are hurt by inadequate transportation. The Yellowhead highway must be upgraded immediately to trans-Canada specifications. There must be more equitable trans-Canada air service. For example, Edmonton has more annual passengers than Winnipeg—780,885 to 702,375—yet Winnipeg has twice as many domestic flights as Edmonton, 29,006 to 15,412.

The opening of direct air service to the United States is long overdue. It is vital that Edmonton be included in daily jet service from Twin Cities, Minnesota, to Anchorage. Northwest Airlines has agreed to fly this route. This will give Edmonton a connection to the central United States and gives Canada its first connection to Alaska. Also any bilateral trading involving an air bridge from Alberta to California must include both Edmonton and Calgary. We are a north-south oriented province, not an east-west strip. Air route negotiators must recognize that Edmonton is the largest city in the province and Calgary the second largest.

In the past quarter century more than 3,500,000 people have come to Canada from other lands. Canadians whose mother tongue is neither English nor French now comprise 26 per cent of the population. In Alberta, a province whose "rugged grandeur" is praised by author James MacGregor, there are more than 50 ethnic cultures which have enriched our total life style. These groups have added to the scope and beauty of our music, our dance, our art, our films. The intellectual, cultural and construction achievements of new Canadians have been an important factor in the maturing of the Canadian society. They have brought instant skills to a country that needs those skills.

Yet the federal government has been slow to recognize the value to Canada of cultural groups that are neither English nor French in background. Ethnic groups have received little in government grants. Our goal must be nothing less than the recognition that cultural diversity is a basic human right, a fundamental human value which must be encouraged by government. The Canadian constitution, now in the process of revision, should spell out that Canada is a multicultural country with many languages, two of which, English and French, are official; and that every ethnic group in Canada has a natural right to the pursuit of its own language, religion and cultural identity.

[Translation]

In the Edmonton areas, the French fact is reflected through new structures. In the last 25 years, we have seen the establishment of radio station CHFA and C.B.C. French TV station CBX-FT. The high school sections of the Collège Saint-Jean and the Académie de L'Assomption have been replaced by a new bilingual institution, the J.-H. Picard School. It is attended by over 500 students some of whom are from English-speaking families.

In short, the present structures recognize the French fact in my constituency and endeavours to contribute to its fulfilment. There is still some progress to be made. On the other hand, the recent achievements are quite important and show the official acceptance of the French fact in Alberta, especially in Edmonton.

[English]

A discussion of the problems and potential of Canada inevitably brings us back to our constitution. The joint Senate-Commons committee on the constitution gave us an excellent report on necessary revisions to meet modern demands. Why do we not implement it? The joint committee struck at the heart of the Canadian problem when it said:

> A new Canadian constitution should be based on functional considerations, which would lead to a greater decentralization of government powers in all areas touching culture and social policy and to a greater centralization in powers which have important economic effects at the national level.

Here is the situation in brief. The federal government has the main access to the growth fields of taxation, such as personal and corporation income taxes. The provinces and the municipalities are boxed in by such slower growth taxes as retail sales taxes and property taxes. At the same time, the provinces and the municipalities are the levels of government which are faced with the most rapidly expanding demand for services. This situation has been intensified by the vast growth in welfare costs borne by big urban municipalities as a direct result of unemployment.

The lack of government co-ordination in urban planning is shocking. We now have an intergovernmental jungle in Canada with all three levels of government clamouring for more money. Their competition, and the lack of consultation, weakens government programs; meanwhile, the taxpayer is financing an expanding bureaucracy. This produces a spirit of confrontation throughout the country. The role of the federal government should be one of co-ordination and support, not domination. Decentralization means shifting as much power as is compatible with the national interest to provincial levels of government and from the provinces to the municipalities. That is the way to give people more control over their own lives and a greater say in their own destinies. Ottawa should lead, not dictate.

The constitutional committee has told us: "More communications and fuller co-operation among all levels of government are imperative needs . . ." That is what we are putting into practice in Edmonton-Strathcona. We have an informal intergovernmental team consisting of Mayor Dent, Aldermen Menzies, Purves, McLean and Olsen and MLA's Getty, Crawford, Schmid and Koziak and myself. Essentially, the same voters elected all of us to the three levels of government, and we are trying to find ways to co-ordinate our service. Last Friday we held our second meeting to plan co-operative action on a senior citizens high rise, co-ordinated social services and the introduction of rapid transit without damaging communities. We hope to give a report on intergovernmental co-operation in this one federal constituency at the next national trilevel meeting.

The immediate problems of unemployment, inflation and taxation are undoubtedly pressing us, but we must not be diverted from global problems. Parliament must focus national attention on the opportunities and responsibilities Canada faces in contributing to world order. The astronauts have shown us that the whole of humanity is compressed into a global village. The central question today is whether our world will become a community or a wasteland. There is no alternative to the United Nations as the major focus for building a world order guaranteeing peace, justice and progress for all peoples. The only wars we can now tolerate are the wars on poverty, injustice, discrimination, ignorance, disease and the befoulment of the planet. Yet the United Nations is struggling for its existence and the gulf between the "haves" and "have-nots" is growing in an unbalanced world economy. Sixteen per cent of the world's population, largely North American, has 75 per cent of the wealth; the number of illiterate people in the world is actually growing, liberation struggles are common.

World aid programs total $7 billion annually, but the value of that aid is diminished by inflation and the world's population is growing by 78 million people per year. By the year 2000 the world will be inhabited by eight billion people, six billion in underdeveloped countries and two billion in the developed zone. The last quarter of this century will be dominated by people under 25, largely alienated and living in ghetto continents. We have the ability in Canada to make a vital contribution to the survival of man in the new age. We can decide whether to build a system of economic humanism on this planet or to blindly allow technology to widen the gaps between men. Canadian leadership can stimulate a new era of world co-operation.

Our goal should be to become an international nation, pioneering research and training through an expanded Canadian International Development Agency. Canada could stimulate an alliance of middle states, north and south, east and west, to move policies for world development and conciliation to the prime place that human survival demands. Our goal should be to move beyond the concept of foreign aid, necessary as that is; world development demands organized trading systems under which the poorer countries may enjoy a fairer share of export earnings. Canada has made a modest beginning in tariff cuts, but we must do more to open our markets so that developing countries can sell their primary products to us. Canadian industries affected by increasing imports would be given adjustment assistance.

A strong Canadian economy is a prerequisite to Canada playing a larger international role. But if a strong domestic economy is our only goal, we will be failing to recognize that international social justice is the only route to world peace. Thus, I want to see a higher Canadian government priority given to involvement in United Nations programs for food growth and distribution, literacy development and health services.

Finally, the Science Council of Canada has recently given us a very controversial report questioning the growth syndrome as the criterion of national success. The council wants us to use the same energy and genius that built this country "to create new social organizations, new transportation mechanisms, new waste disposal systems and the whole panoply of new services which our emerging life style will demand". In other words, we must put the national spotlight onto improving the quality of life rather than just increasing the abundance of goods. This ties in with the international examination of our life support systems now going on through the Club of Rome.

Population, industrialization, food production, depletion of non-renewable resources and pollution can no longer be viewed as separate things; they are interconnected in many ways. The resources of this planet are limited and the demands made on them increasing. Thus, the protection of the environment demands constructive political action and creative social change. I believe it is possible to establish a condition of ecological and economic stability and justice that is sustainable far into the future.

Canada cannot remain oblivious to this global problem. We need to re-define our national priorities. Parliament is the place to do it.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. I regret having to interrupt the hon. member, but the time allotted to him by the House order the other day has expired and it cannot be extended.

Mr. Francis Fox (Argenteuil-Deux-Montagnes): I am particularly pleased, Mr. Speaker, to participate today in the debate on the budget.

As member for Argenteuil-Deux-Montagnes, a riding which incidentally has sent to this House a Prime Minister, Sir John Abbott, and several other distinguished parliamentaries, Progressive Conservatives as well as Liberals, I would like first to congratulate you for your election as Speaker of the House of Commons. You are known both inside and outside this chamber, for what you are: an honest, fair and impartial man whose contribution to the efficient work of this House is above criticism.

Mr. Speaker, my fellow citizens and I believe in a strong, united, wealthy and humane Canada. The legislation that we pass in this House must be considered in the light of these criteria.

One criterium, Mr. Speaker, underlies all others, includes them and gives them their meaning: the human criterium.

Our constituents entrust us with a rather general mandate. We are responsible for public welfare, for the conduct of government affairs geared to improving the lot of the population. However, our constituents also vest in us a specific duty: to see that the ever more powerful government remains and becomes increasingly aware of the aspirations of the individuals it is to serve.

I believe, Mr. Speaker, that the budget the Minister of Finance (Mr. Turner) has brought forward on behalf of the Canadian government does meet this very concept.

[English]

I do not believe it is necessary to repeat the highlights of the budget. It will suffice to underline that the main objectives of the budget are to reduce unemployment and encourage faster growth, to reduce inflationary pressures and offset the effects of past inflation, to increase real income and ensure older Canadians of a fairer share of prosperity and to contribute to more balanced economic expansion among all regions of Canada.

I was particularly pleased to see increases in both old age pensions and in war veterans allowances. I have always felt that parliament has a special responsibility toward those who have made a contribution to the building of this nation, and I am particularly proud to be a member of parliament at this time.

The budget before the House can justly be called a family budget. Along with increased pensions for Canadians aged 65 and over, basic tax exemptions have been increased for all taxpayers effective January 1, 1973, and a tax decrease of 5 per cent is proposed.

Perhaps the most important long-term innovation is the indexing of the tax system beginning in 1974. It will raise tax brackets and income tax exemptions each year by an inflation factor based on the consumer price index. Reductions in tariffs and cuts in sales tax should also help curtail the rise in the cost of living.

Furthermore, the government has come to the help of the ratepayer. The general equalization system will be broadened in the next fiscal year to include grants on account of municipal taxes. This should enable provinces to come to the relief of hard pressed property owners and tenants who have had to carry an increasing burden of local school taxes. Under this program, the province of Quebec will receive an additional $78.6 million in equalization payments from the federal treasury in 1973-74.

I was also pleased to note the undertaking by the Minister of Finance (Mr. Turner) that measures will soon be announced for assisting small business. I find this area to be of utmost importance, as approximately 60 per cent of the Canadian labour force is working in establishments having the characteristics of small businesses. The Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce (Mr. Gillespie) recently noted that 3,500,000 Canadians are employed by businesses with 15 or fewer employees. Small business provides the economic livelihood of the majority of working Canadians. Small business constitutes a source of entrepreneurial activity and growth that should be tapped when seeking increased job opportunities and greater regional development.

The Minister of Finance also proposed a change to the Income Tax Act which is important for the preservation of the family farm. Under the present legislation, when a farmer dies and leaves his farm to his children, his farm is deemed to have been sold and there may be a capital gains tax liability. Under the proposed changes, effective January 1, 1973, if adopted by parliament, there would be no deemed sale on the death of a farmer and hence no capital gains tax liability if the farm is left to the family.

Mr. Speaker, it should not be expected that the budget will solve all the problems of Canadian society. Its purpose is to promote an expanding economy and the development of an economic climate allowing our citizens to progress towards achievement of their destiny.

Conversely, one short and long-term problem which we must face is that of employment. I did notice with great pleasure the following paragraph of the masterly speech delivered in this House on January 11 last by the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Lalonde), and I quote:

> the social security system as it applies to people who can work must contain incentives to work and a greater emphasis on the need to get people who are on social aid back to work.

I believe that most Canadians agree in this regard.

The employment problem brings forward challenges that politicians of the 70's will have to take up. As years go by, the number of Canadians and technological innovations increase. New plants incorporate these technological advances which demand more and more investments and less and less labour.

It is time for us to begin to think seriously about benefits and other consequences of this post-industrial era.

Will our present work ethic be able to solve these problems? Should our society not get prepared at once for such changes? We must try without delay to find answers to those questions.

To palliate these problems forthwith, the government introduces a highly expansionary and innovating budget, a student employment program, the Local Initiatives Program and winter works projects. All these programs are excellent, though I suggest that the Local Initiatives Program could be improved. In my view, its criteria should be altered in order to bring more incentive to municipalities. We are all aware of financial problems encountered by municipalities. I suggest that we might take advantage of such a program to try to bring along the decentralization of decision making process which might be very valuable.

Mr. Speaker, I do not want, in my first statement in this House, to let aside the fact that at the beginning of 1975, Mirabel, the new Montreal international airport, located in the riding of Argenteuil-Deux-Montagnes, will welcome its first passengers. Its effects have been felt since 1969 in the riding of Argenteuil-Deux-Montagnes.

The airport area being designated as a "special area", many projects have been achieved which are designed to improve the infrastructure of this riding.

For the expropriated people the airport is not a future development but a reality of every day and it has been so since the expropriation plans were tabled in 1969.

Mr. Speaker, the Canadian Parliament must not forget in his concern to see this country move ahead that men and women, even whole families, have and still have to move to make room to that progress. Houses, land held by the same families from time immemorial, neighbourhood relations dating to the beginning of our history are wiped out by bulldozers and concrete runways.

The federal government has expropriated over 3,000 owners many of whom have now become government tenants.

These people who used to be owners are now in daily contact with federal government officials responsible for the management of the expropriated territory.

And I say to all those officials, Mr. Speaker, that they must remember that they are essentially at the service of the public and that it is their main raison d'être.

Mr. Speaker, Ste. Scholastique, now Mirabel, is not a land concession for the administration of a few civil servants; Ste. Scholastique is people, men, women, children who were upset in their daily life and who have a right to be treated with all the dignity that their pride as Canadians calls for.

In addition to a fair expropriation allowance, these people want clear and specific information inasmuch as it is possible on what their territory is to become.

[Mr. Fox.]

I know, Mr. Speaker, that the Minister of Transport (M. Marchand) is very concerned about those problems. Last week he met in his office with the Ste. Scholastique community information and animation committee and the citizen help committee. In the light of those meetings I am confident that some of the problems will soon be solved.

[English]

In conclusion let me reiterate my fundamental belief in people-oriented government. "Policies for people" is a motto to which I wholeheartedly subscribe. It is a motto which ensures our responsiveness to the aspirations of the Canadian people whom we have the honour to represent in this parliament.

Mr. Tom Cossitt (Leeds): Mr. Speaker, it is a privilege to represent the historic eastern Ontario riding of Leeds, famous for its dairy farming and its cheddar cheese, known for its tourist resorts and its fishing, yet at the same time being a beehive of bustling industrial activity. This partly rural, partly urban riding was represented in this House for two decades by the Hon. Hugh Stewart, a member of the Bennett government. The Hon. George P. Graham from Brockville served with distinction in the governments of Laurier and King, and his descendants play an active part in the Leeds of today. And naturally I cannot help but recall another Leeds man, a great grandfather of mine, William H. Comstock, who was elected to this House on April 20, 1899. A further distinguished son of Leeds I will mention later in my remarks for some very special reasons.

I was a member of the party opposite until January 15 last year, and like many others across the country I left it when it became obvious that its policies, or perhaps I should say lack of policies, were destroying this nation. Almost from the beginning, this government ceased to be genuinely interested in people and their problems. Everything was subjugated to the new image. Everything became a matter of slogans. Blinded by a false euphoria, this country was swept down a road toward disaster in the greatest con game ever perpetrated on the Canadian people. Our major problems went unsolved and grew steadily worse. In most cases they were not even tackled. Unemployment has stalked the land in ever-increasing proportions since this government took office. A couple of years ago, the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) pronounced inflation dead and since then it has been the most active dead body in the history of Canada. Everything looked so easy through those rose coloured glasses held before our eyes in 1968. But the dream has been shattered. We still have our problems. It takes more than an image to run a country.

What about those great slogans, participatory democracy and the just society? Participatory democracy turned out to mean the privilege of plugging in for orders from above. There has been less and less participation in the democratic process of government by the people of this country, and that has been accompanied by a down-grading of parliament as well as an attempt by the Prime Minister's office to create government. The just society turned out to be a society of gross economic mismanagement and social injustice.

For the past five years we have been governed by "Father knows best-ism". And what is even worse, we have been governed by a group for whom maintenance of power is the only real consideration. I do not believe there has ever been in the history of Canada a government more concerned with its own survival than this one. It has shown itself prepared to sacrifice any principle, change any policy, jump in any direction and promise anything it is asked—all since October 30, 1972 when the people of this country clearly declared they were not prepared to accept autocracy in the place of democracy, that they would not accept any longer government by bumbling bureaucrats and heartless technocrats.

The President of the Treasury Board (Mr. Drury) was one of the first to adopt a changed attitude when he announced in December that the supposedly perfect public service bilingual program, in effect, was not so perfect after all. Then, the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Lalonde) acknowledged the necessity of raising the old age security pension. There are dozens of other examples, not the least of which was the sudden conversion of the Prime Minister on the subject of the monarchy, followed by his dash to London for tea with Her Majesty the Queen. Then, in a discovery worthy only of a Christopher Columbus, the Prime Minister found western Canada after all these years. Recently, he daringly called for "Manitoba Power" in Ottawa. And now, in this budget, this inept government proposes all sorts of things in a last desperate effort to remain in office.

Last fall the Progressive Conservative party called for income tax cuts to stimulate the economy. "Impossible", they said, but now they take a somewhat inadequate step in that direction. "The capital gains tax on the family farm should go" said those on this side of the House. "Nonsense", the government replied. Yet now they say it should be done. The Liberals laughed when the leader of this party said that an inflation factor should be applied to the income tax system. Now, they advocate just such a thing. The pensioner did not need more assistance before election day, but the government suddenly recognizes there is a need.

I recall when this House first met that a member of the opposition suggested a theme for this government called, I believe, "Those Nobodies are a Bunch of Somebodies Now". I should like to suggest as a theme for this government, "What a Difference a Day Makes". Politicians who will turn in any direction in order to maintain power demonstrate all too clearly that the welfare of their own needs is more important to them than the welfare of the Canadian people. It is not very difficult to imagine what would be the fate of this country if a group which operates on such a level of motivation was again ever able to obtain a majority of seats in this House.

As one who was a member of the Liberal party for over 30 years and who served in the executive side of that party on the local, provincial and national levels, I believe I can claim some accuracy in assessing its steady destruction in the hands of those who have controlled its destiny—and unfortunately the destiny of this country as well—since April 20, 1968, a destruction that has proceeded to the point where the so-called Liberal party of today is not even an unworthy shadow of its former self, while at the same time, as the government of this country, it has utterly failed in its responsibilities to the Canadian people.

When I was a young boy, Prime Minister Mackenzie King came to Leeds to officially open the Thousand Island Bridge with President Roosevelt. The afternoon before the ceremony Mr. King came to Brockville in his private railway car and I remember asking a man at the entrance to the car if I could take the Prime Minister's picture. A few minutes later, to the wonder and delight of a small boy, Mr. King stepped from the car and talked for a while about Canada and how every individual and the problems of every person in this nation were important. It was not rhetoric for a crowd, as he sat for a few minutes on a pile of railways ties and talked about the Liberal party and his hopes for Canada. There was no one there but a small boy. The so-called Liberal government of today is a sad reflection of its predecessors. The individual and the problems of people are no concern except at moments when fear of losing power engulfs this heartless machine. Then, this government, in the traitorous style of a Judas, is prepared to sell what principles it has left for the support of the socialists in a fantastic display of its belief it has a divine right to govern at any cost.

When I asked that man years ago at the entrance to Mr. King's railway car if I could take the Prime Minister's picture, I assumed he was a member of Mr. King's staff. In later years I came to know him when he served nine years in this House as the Liberal member for my riding of Leeds. I refer to one of my predecessors, George T. Fulford of Brockville who is in the gallery today and who, last year, put his country ahead of the Liberal party. He is now a member of the Progressive Conservative party and, like so many former Liberals in Leeds and across Canada, he is working for an end to the folly that calls itself the government of Canada.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Cossitt: The sense of democracy and the love of the House of Commons so often displayed over the years by the right hon. member for Prince Albert (Mr. Diefenbaker), who is still such a vital presence in the House today, is something this government could never comprehend, let alone emulate.

There must be a return to the days when the individual member of parliament was the link between government and people instead of the regional desks in the Prime Minister's office. The government of Canada must be returned to the House from the Prime Minister's office. There must be an end to persons sitting on the Treasury Benches guided by methods of the technocrat and the autocrat instead of being guided by a feeling and an understanding of people. There must be an end to the financial irresponsibility that has been the most outstanding feature of the last five years.

Since last October, we have been witnessing an effort to cover up the impossible. We are told the Prime Minister is indulging in a new-found love affair with the Canadian people. The latest grey eminence in the Prime Minister's office has promised us that things will be different in the future. But nothing has really changed. The leopard has not changed his spots. It is the same stale old piece of cake with a little new icing smeared across the surface.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Cossitt: The Prime Minister has said that he will now listen to the people. It is as if the emperor had suddenly decided to give the people his ear. It is a mixture of gross condescension and demogoguery. This is a floundering government that has staggered aimlessly for five years in a sea of problems it is incapable of facing. On its deathbed, it indulges in the sickening performance of trying to buy and hoodwink the people of Canada by flip-flopping all over the place, and if there ever was a time for the people of Canada to get whatever they want, let them just come to Ottawa and ask for it now.

In conclusion, I believe that this country stands at a vital crossroads, and the seriousness of the situation cannot be over-emphasized. I can think of no better way to close these remarks than to quote words that were spoken in the British House of Commons on July 22, 1803 because they seem to me to be so applicable to the situation existing in Canada today. These words were spoken by the prime minister of the day, William Pitt, and they are as follows:

> We must recollect what it is we have at stake, what it is we have to contend for. It is our property, it is our liberty, it is our independence. It is our existence as a nation. It is our character. It is our very name. It is everything dear and valuable to man on this side of the grave.

Mr. Gaston Clermont (Gatineau): Mr. Speaker, in his budget speech of last February 19, the Minister of Finance (Mr. Turner) spoke of several aspects of Canadian society.

In the area of social security, he recommended that parliament bring the basic old age security pension to $100 a month from April 1, 1973, which, added to the guaranteed income supplement, will give single people who have no other income, $170 a month and married couples in the same financial situation who get both the old age pension, $325 a month.

Some people say that it is not sufficient, that the government should have given much more but if I examine the basic pension and the guaranteed income supplement paid on April 1, 1970, that is to say $111.41 a month, I notice that, in the case of single people, there is an increase of 52.5 per cent and for married couples, an increase of 46 per cent. I think it is a very appreciable increase within three years. We are right when we say, Mr. Speaker, that Canada offers its elderly citizens the highest old age security pension in the world.

Other people claim that the pension should be paid to persons who are 60 or more, that it should be also paid to the wife of a man who receives it, even if she is not 65. These two measures would no doubt be of great help to a good many people and I am quite convinced that the Liberal government will implement them, as was the case for nearly all benefits under the Canadian social security plan.

Moreover, when Parliament will adopt the recommendation enclosed in the budget of May 1972, concerning the increase from the special exemption of $650 to $1,000 which applies to persons aged 65 or over, fewer of those persons will have to pay income tax.

We find also an increase in veterans' allowances and war allowances for civilians.

In the field of individual income tax, it is recommended to raise the basic exemption for all taxpayers from $1,500 to $1,600 and for married couples from $2,850 to $3,000 effective January 1, 1973. We proposed to Parliament a 5 per cent reduction on basic federal income tax effective January 1, 1973, and the maximum will be $500 and the minimum $100.

From 1974, individual income tax will be related to the cost of living; this will put an end to the purchasing power erosion which comes from the combined action of inflation and the progressive taxation system. The escalation will be made effective by raising tax brackets and increasing each year basic exemptions with an inflation coefficient based on consumer price index.

When Bill C-259 entitled "An Act to amend the Income Tax Act" was under consideration the former Minister of Finance, the hon. Edgar Benson, made it clear that in his opinion changes should be brought to the taxation system in the light of this new law. The present Minister of Finance has recommended some changes in his budget of May 1972 and again in the budget of February 19, 1973. A change is more particularly needed for small businesses. The Income Tax Act contains a feature of prime interest to the businessmen concerned. It deals with the deduction granted to small ventures. A provision allows a reduced tax rate on business incomes.

Provisions of Part V of the Income Tax Act annul the effect of the deduction granted to small businesses inasmuch as such undertakings are using the operating excess to make long term investments not related to their activities. The policy serving as a basis for those investments is doubtless sound, but its application is very complex. In most cases, the small businesses to which the reduced rate will apply, will use the resulting savings to expand, improve their techniques and create more jobs. As a study of the eligibility of the investments seems useless, its abolition, retroactive to January 1, 1972, will be proposed to the House.

The second change proposed, that dealing with protecting family farms, is very important. Under the present regulation, the farmer who leaves his farm to his children before he dies is deemed to have sold it for a fair market price. A capital gains tax can be levied. For many farmers, the problem is serious because it can lead to many complications. Now, to remedy those problems, it will be recommended that, retroactive to January 1, 1972, any farmer, who at death leaves his farm to his children, not be deemed to have sold his farm. Consequently, the capital gains tax will be applicable only if the farm is sold, that it is not being developed at time of death and that it is not bequeathed to the family.

A third amendment to be introduced has to do with the taxing of retirement pensions.

Furthermore, it is recommended by the Minister of Finance that temporary custom reductions be granted immediately on a five percentage points average on imported consumer goods evaluated at $1.3 billion. Such decreases are intended to counterbalance the inflationary trend on prices. Besides, those reductions are not likely to produce unfavourable results on production or employment. They involve mostly consumer goods which are relatively more heavily taxed than the average products and they will apply to products which are not grown or manufactured in Canada.

In so far as sales taxes are concerned, some will be abolished, namely in the case of children's clothing, shoes, near-food products such as candies, chocolate bars, soft drinks and fruit drinks. The special 10 per cent excise duty on toilet articles, cosmetics, clocks and watches, except if the manufacturing price of the latter is more than $50, will be abolished.

It is said that retailers across Canada are already offering some of those products at reduced prices.

Mr. Speaker, I would now like to comment on the prices and distribution of cattle feed. The situation of cattle feed prices is detrimental to eastern Canada farmers, especially those of Quebec and the Atlantic provinces. I agree that the present situation is not as discriminatory as it was in 1969, 1970 and 1971, but the problem remains nevertheless and solutions must be found as soon as possible. The representatives of the Union des producteurs agricoles of the province of Quebec recently walked out of the annual meeting of the Canadian Federation of Agriculture. For some of us, the struggle has been going on for a number of years, but there exist great possibilities towards a solution.

The Speech of the Throne deals with the matter as follows:

> The government supports the principle of an equitable relationship of prices of feed grain to livestock feeders in various areas of Canada.

Of course, Mr. Speaker, this includes eastern Canada.

On many occasions, the minister responsible for the Canadian Wheat Board (Mr. Lang) as well as the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Whelan) have also made statements in this House and elsewhere about this. They undertook to introduce a fair and equitable solution for all regions of this country about such an important matter, before next crops.

Mr. Speaker, when I read through the main estimates for the fiscal year ending March 31, 1974, which was introduced in the House of Commons by the President of the Treasury Board (Mr. Drury) on Tuesday, February 20, 1973, I am pleased to note that the Department of Public Works and the National Capital Commission are asking from parliament important amounts to build up new federal buildings and the infrastructure within the boundary of the national capital on the other side of the Ottawa River. We remember that the Prime Minister of Canada (Mr. Trudeau) as well as the hon. Minister of Transport (Mr. Marchand), then minister responsible for the National Capital Commission, announced together a wide spread program of about $250 million, over a period of 25 years, designed to build federal public buildings as well as infrastructure works on the Quebec side.

Following this statement, construction of the Portage bridge began by the end of 1970, at an approximate cost of $13 million which are entirely paid out by the federal government.

In 1971, phase 1 of the construction of federal public buildings began. This is for Place du Portage, a building whose first two floors should soon be occupied by business firms and the rest by the federal government. Phases II and III are underway and the votes required in fiscal year 1973-74 for its continuation are of about $15,450,000. Votes of $8,535,000 are required for other projects in the same area for the same fiscal year.

Additional votes of roughly $830,000 are required for the construction of two federal buildings, one in Buckingham where work has already started and the other in Gatineau where I strongly hope that work will begin during the next fiscal year of 1973-74.

Mr. Speaker, some will ask why does the member for Gatineau mention work which is or will be carried out for a large part in the riding of Hull. I find it easy to explain. The economic effects resulting from the transfer of federal departments to the city of Hull will benefit not only the people of that city but the whole population of western Quebec.

Furthermore, in the future, the authorities of the Department of Public Works of Canada will have to consider erecting such buildings east of the Gatineau river, as I have already mentioned to former minister of public works as well as to the present minister. With an improved public transport system on both sides of the river and a rapid transit system on the Quebec side it will be as easy to move from communities east of the Gatineau river as it is from certain parts of the cities of Ottawa and Hull.

In January 1972, an agreement in principle of about $130 million was signed on a cost sharing basis between the province of Quebec and the National Capital Commission and included the construction of 45 miles of highway on the Quebec side of the Ottawa area as well as the development of a rapid transit system and urban arteries in Hull and the surrounding municipalities. This vast road-building program should be undertaken on a six-year schedule that could be extended if necessary. Credits of about $4 million has already been approved by parliament under the terms of this agreement, and the 1973-74 budget forecasts contain further credit of around $8 million. Work has been done or started as a result of this agreement.

Highway 8 has been widened between Maloney Boulevard in Gatineau and Archambault Boulevard in Pointe-Gatineau. Work has begun on the bridge over the Gatineau River, near Leamy Lake, to be called the "Pont des Draveurs". Work is in progress on the interchange between Highway 8 and the new "Pont des Draveurs", and also on Highway 11.

There can be no doubt that the agreement reached between the National Capital Commission and the government of the province of Quebec will speed up the construction of expressways 5 and 50 in the part of the national capital area that is in Quebec.

I have only a minute or two left, but I wanted also to speak about small businesses and ways of financing them. I have discussed this several times in the past, both in the House and in committee. It is a complex subject, but a solution must be found as soon as possible. The following is a direct quotation from the Speech from the Throne:

—aid to small businesses through new initiatives to strengthen management and consulting services and to improve access to financing facilities.

I believe this is what small and medium-sized businesses mainly need, although I do not mean to minimize the importance of new measures to improve management and consulting services, which would be new sources of working and investment capital which these businesses badly need in order to broaden their operations.

• (1710)

Mr. Joe Clark (Rocky Mountain): Mr. Speaker, it is a great privilege for me to rise in this House. This is virtually my first chance to speak in the House of Commons, although I have had the opportunity to ask one or two questions even though I am not a parliamentary secretary. I have also had the opportunity once to speak briefly in the late show at a time when the House was slightly less full than it is now, if that could be imagined.

When one takes his place in this chamber it is with some feeling of trepidation. One cannot help but be aware of the traditions of this chamber, and one cannot help either but be aware that this is one of the few institutions in the country that is capable of drawing together citizens from across a wide and varied land. I just wanted to note in passing how appropriate it seemed to me the other day to hear the hon. member for York South (Mr. Lewis) talking about dinosaurs. That is obviously a subject of natural interest to his party. Indeed, it is difficult to think of any other group in this House which has a greater philosophic affinity to that era, or a better prospect of becoming extinct.

It is a remarkable coincidence that whenever the leadership of the NDP encounters a crisis of conscience at home, they suddenly perceive some greater evil at another hand. Faced with the challenge of principle embodied in the Waffle, their leadership conjured up the corporate bum, whom they have now embraced. And now, caught in an alliance which they consider a lesser treachery than electoral defeat, their leadership has decided that we are dinosaurs. They remind me of the itinerant evangelists we used to get, from time to time, in the towns on the Prairies. They would come in the night, usually having just created their own theology, and proceed to bilk the wealthy widows of the town with promises either of a new cathedral or a new Jerusalem, and when suspicion grew about their purposes, they would suddenly be seized of the great dangers of fluoridation, or Argentina, or some other scare. They usually lasted about five months, these prophets of phony fear, and then were never heard of again. So, in every particular, they remind one of the NDP.

On February 15, I asked the Prime Minister what plans his government had to find jobs for young Canadians. He replied with characteristic boldness and foresight and said his plan was to wait for the budget. Now, we have the budget and presumably the government's answer—which is that it intends to do nothing at all to break the pattern which has made Canadians under 24 the chief victims of unemployment in Canada throughout the life of the Trudeau government.

The most recent figures for January this year, indicate that a total of 688,000 Canadians were unemployed. Fully 300,000 of those were under the age of 24—almost half of the total number of unemployed in the country and one in nine of the people in that age group who wanted to work. That figure is appalling enough on its own. What is worse is that it is part of a clear and evident pattern that even the government has recognized. The proportion of unemployed in that age group has been rising gradually for several years. But in recent years it has been nearly 45 per cent of the total, despite the fact that many people of that age who might have been looking for work have been drained off into technical schools or CEGEPS, or colleges and universities. There is some indication now that this safety valve is closing, because young people who go into training for better jobs are finding too often that they graduate into unemployment. The result of their diversion is just that they have better skills to waste.

That pattern has been clear throughout the life of this ministry. They were warned by the Economic Council of Canada. They were warned by the Canadian Council on Social Development, by the Committee on Youth of their own Secretary of State (Mr. Faulkner), and frequently by editorialists and by spokesmen of this party. Their only answer has been to fake a response. They claim that Opportunities for Youth was created to meet this problem. But Opportunities for Youth last year employed about 3,000 non-students for the summer. If applied today to the January figures, that would amount to the stirring figure of one per cent—a one per cent response—except that OFY does not work in the winter. That is about the only thing that program has in common with the young people it is supposed to help.

The government's only other response to unemployment in Canada, the LIP program, works less well among the young than among other age groups of the unemployed. In 1971-72, 41 per cent of LIP workers were under age 24 but 46 per cent to 47 per cent of the unemployed were under that age. In hard figures, LIP that year created only 37,000 temporary jobs for Canadians under 24 and there are 300,000 out of work today.

The more serious fault of the LIP and OFY programs in relation to youth employment is that they provide the government with an excuse for doing nothing effective about the problem. LIP and OFY embody a potential for innovation and involvement which is as important now as it was when that principle was introduced into Canadian legislation in the ARDA program. They are important programs. But they are not youth employment programs. Yet every time the statistics are cited in this House which prove that this government's economic programs are victimizing the young, the government answers by pointing to LIP and OFY. The most innovative aspect of these programs is the use the government makes of them to avoid meeting their responsibility to young Canadians who want to work. In so far as youth employment is concerned, LIP and OFY have been used principally not to innovate action but to avoid it. It is very easy when discussing unemployment statistics to lose sight of the human consequence involved, and forget that each one of these 300,000 young Canadians is a single case of need.

One way to gain perspective on the youth employment problem is to realize there are about twice as many young Canadians out of work today as there were in the great depression. Now, if you treat people as statistics, you can say that is not significant, because the work force has grown but if you regard people as people, you might remember the record of personal hardship and bitterness spawned in that period when so many people started what should have been their working lives without work to do. What is particularly cruel about unemployment among the young is that so many young people have no other resources to fall back on and no real preparation for being unwanted as workers. And what is particularly dangerous about unemployment among the young is that the experience and attitudes which young Canadians develop now will last their lifetime. If they are herded into welfare or if they are taught that their energies are unwanted, that will shape their lives and could deprive our nation and themselves of their creative participation.

There is another aspect of this question. It is a myth that has grown up, the myth that kids in Canada are lazy. I think that the existence of that myth protects the government against its clear responsibility to take action to end the high and unacceptable rates of unemployment among the young. One of the tragic aspects of this is that the Prime Minister himself has contributed, perhaps not deliberately, to the view that kids in Canada do not want to work when he made his offhand remarks that anyone who wanted work in Canada should go to Thompson, Manitoba or some other distant spot. The people who suffer most from this misleading suggestion are the young people in the country.

Prior to those comments, there was some substantial sympathy for the problems of the unemployed young, but that sympathy evaporated when the Prime Minister casually entered the fray. In fact, Mr. Speaker, while the work ethic may not recommend itself to a barefoot boy from Outremont, a study by the Canadian Council on Social Development of young Canadians who applied for social assistance in November, 1971 indicated:

> The young social assistance applicants who were interviewed have by no means rejected the concept of work and its central importance to their development and self-fulfillment.

They do not reject work, they just cannot find any. So long as the government caters or contributes to the opinion that they do not want work, their problems will continue to be ignored.

We are dealing here with a budget which will do much less than it pretends. It is the budget of a parlour magician, relying on illusion, trying to trick the people who are watching. The minister held out the illusion of using tax cuts to put more purchasing power into the economy, yet in reality the total revenues of the government will be $1.7 billion higher this year than last. He talks buoyantly of creating 300,000 new jobs as he has talked before and failed, yet in reality is accepting unnecessarily high levels of unemployment. He talks about expansion, yet understimulates. He worries about inflation, yet has no response except a so-called contingency plan which he proposes to produce like a rabbit from a hat.

What is wrong with this budget is its purpose. At a time when the government should be preoccupied with providing jobs and growth and some stability, it is instead preoccupied with its own political survival. So, instead of introducing measures which are bold enough to work, the government relies instead on measures which seem safe enough to serve. Other speakers in this debate have indicated how far short the minister will fall of his stated goals. My particular concern today is to underline the urgency of a goal he did not state, the goal of helping young Canadians put their energies to work and to review some of the steps which the government's own advisers have urged as a means to break the shackling pattern of high unemployment among the young.

The Hunter Committee on Youth published its report 19 months ago, and it was heralded with that special enthusiasm this government reserves for reports it proposes to ignore. One simple, but highly valuable, recommendation of that report was that the government at least recognize that youth unemployment constitutes a special problem in Canada. At the moment, we have virtually no hard information about the special causes of high youth unemployment, about its relation to the education system, about the effectiveness of counselling or manpower, about the need and scope for new kinds and definitions of work. The Hunter Committee recommended establishing a Canadian youth employment directorate, and generally we in this party approve of that initiative, at least as an interim measure. The government has done nothing about the directorate.

The report of the Canadian Council on Social Development, entitled "A Right to Opportunity" reveals a chaos in the counselling and social assistance services available to young Canadians out of work. They recommend an early federal-provincial conference, to bring some order and equity to that field. The government has done nothing. This party has suggested that LIP and OFY be given statutory authority, so that their purposes can be debated and understood in parliament and so that they can assume some permanent place in the program structure of various government and voluntary agencies, instead of being expensive itinerants whose present status prohibits integrated national programming. The government declines that commitment as, indeed, it declines any commitment to do anything at all about the continuing crisis of youth unemployment. The government has been running away from the problem and the running has to stop. We cannot afford the enormous human cost of training hundreds of thousands of young people to be out of work and on welfare. We are wasting lives and wasting potential.

The problem of youth employment would be less acute in an economy performing nearer its potential. So, the approach of this party, outlined Thursday by the hon. member for Don Valley (Mr. Gillies), will help the young to find jobs and will help other Canadians. Even so, it will be necessary to take special measures to arrest or reverse the trends towards higher and higher levels of unemployment among Canadians age 24.

The Budget—Mr. Allard

Speaking Friday, the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Stanfield) underlined the most dangerous consequence of this budget, that the country will continue to mark time, because we are governed by a party more intent upon its own survival than upon the growth or progress of the nation. That is harmful to many parts and people of Canada; but no group suffers more from this government or this budget than the hundreds of thousands of young Canadians who are looking for work in this rich country and finding only frustration. If we continue to deny them the chance to contribute their best to Canada, they will quickly become accustomed to contributing their least. That is a tragedy we have in our power to avoid if this government would only put the nation's priorities ahead of its own.

[Translation]

Mr. Eudore Allard (Rimouski): Mr. Speaker, one of the admitted concerns of the hon. Minister of Finance (Mr. Turner) when he read his budget speech last Monday evening was to reduce the unemployment rate and stimulate economic development.

A well known fact is that Canada has almost 700,000 registered and catalogued unemployed people. It is also true that thousands of workers who have now no job because they cannot find any are not included in the official statistics on the number of unemployed. It can therefore be said that the unemployment rate is higher than it actually looks and that measures far more drastic and important than those proposed by the Minister of Finance should be put in application if unemployment is to disappear.

The Minister of Finance also expects that 300,000 new jobs should be created thanks to the measures proposed in the budget. These new jobs would be available for the new comers to the labour market in 1973.

But if the measures announced by the Minister of Finance have no other result than to provide jobs to the newcomers to the labour market, nothing effective will be left to give a strong stimulus to the economy so that it will provide work for the 700,000 or so unemployed at present.

The Minister of Finance recognizes also that the way to create employment is to increase demand. Products are plentiful to such a point that we despair of exporting them.

Here is what was said at the 32nd annual conference on agricultural outlook held in Ottawa November 20 and 21 last. I quote:

On the whole, the outlook seems more favourable for western farmers than for farmers in eastern Canada.

Actually, Canada is already assured of record wheat sales as a result of agreements signed this year with Russia and China.

Conversely, sales of cheese will be down again this year in eastern Canada, again we shall have to import small quantities of butter to maintain reasonable prices, and the price of hogs will be approximately the same as in 1972.

In this field, prices will often be identical with those in the United States.

According to a participant in the conference, the only way to control these price variations would be to set up a national hog products marketing board, just like the one it is intended to establish for eggs.

[Mr. Clark.]

However, three provinces do not even have a hog Marketing Board, namely Quebec, Saskatchewan and British Columbia.

As far as exports are concerned, it was clearly determined during the conference that Canada should continue prospecting international markets so that its agriculture may progress.

According to Mr. Neufeld, of the Department of Economics of the University of Toronto, the matter is so important that unless new markets are discovered Canadian agriculture is hound to decline.

Mr. Speaker, if new markets cannot be found for eggs, pork, beef, wheat and all our other agricultural products, agriculture is going to decline, because farmers are going to be stuck with their crops. This will bring about a decrease or a stagnation in farm incomes. This is also being forecast by the Canadian Agricultural Outlook Conference. It is also noted that the yearly income of Eastern farmers averages a poor $2,500.

This was stated at the Conference by officials of the Department of Agriculture. A Canadian Press release published in the newspaper Le Droit, on November 22, 1972, was not very encouraging for Canadian farmers. This is how it reads:

Farm incomes in 1973 should reach just about the same level as in 1972, according to Mr. W. L. Porteous, of the Canadian Department of Agriculture.

Speaking before the 33rd Canadian Agricultural OUtlook Conference which ended yesterday in Ottawa, Mr. Porteous said he expected the total farm income to net $1.9 billion.

The record year for agriculture was 1966, when farm incomes totalled $2 billion.

As compared with 1972, however, farm expenses will increase in all areas except building repairs, the end result being a decrease of approximately 4.4 per cent in the income.

Prairie farmers and those of Prince Edward Island can expect a decrease in income, however.

Even if the income of western farmers on the whole should increase as a result of record sales of wheat to Russia, more especially, the speaker stressed the fact that a decline should be expected for 1974. He does not believe, however, that Canada will experience conditions like those of the 1960's.

A participant stated that, in his opinion, every farmer must incur annual expenses of $10,000 or so.

In order to have a net income of approximately $5,000 per year, according to him, every farmer must have a gross income of almost $15,000.

Following that intervention, a discussion was held on the definition of an economic farm.

• (1730)

As one can see, we are heading for disaster. Instead of suggesting that Canadian consumers do with a little, thighten their belts and get used to the poor's menu, at $28 a week, the government should see to it that Canadians have the necessary purchasing power to do justice to Canadian production, which would have the effect of stimulating demand, encourage agricultural production and secure at the same time supplementary income to Canadian farmers.

Government members voted several times against the proposals aiming at the implementation of a guaranteed minimum income which would make it possible for each Canadian to live decently, according to the possibilities of Canadian production.

A Creditist government would not hesitate to implement such measures; one of the first measures would be to abolish all income tax on an income of less than $3,000 for single people and $5,000 for a married person and to fill the gap between personal income and guaranteed annual income by means of corresponding allowances.

Another measure which is easily applicable would consist in bringing old age security pension payments up to $200 a month for all citizens who are 60, while giving $150 a month to the spouse of a retired person. It would increase the purchasing power of consumers, stimulate production and put up a barrier against unemployment.

Finally, according to Creditist proposals, one should secure a decent family income. This measure could take the form of higher family allowances which are geared to prices.

"Every tax reform which does not take the price problem into consideration will end up in failure" Major Douglas tells us. That is easy to understand. Our friends of the other parties of the opposition often speak of inflation. We recognize that it may constitute a real danger, under our present system, but we deny that it would really be dangerous under a Créditiste system, applied in its integrity, as we suggest it.

Indeed, why should the monetary units in the hands of the consumers be increased if, at the same time, the price of goods keeps going up at the same rate?

That is why, under our present economic system, any increase in the personal income which is included in the cost of the goods that are manufactured and sold can only be reflected in higher prices.

Whether it be an increase in the profits of the contractor, the rates of interest, salaries, or taxes, they all lead to higher total costs and higher consumer prices.

That is why the Créditistes suggest a way to adjust prices which would leave the producers free to set their prices at a reasonable level. We say that the producers must continue to produce goods and riches on his own terms for the other members of the community. However, it is not up to him to set the conditions under which the consumers will obtain the products. In other words, the producer must be paid according to his sales price, but he does not care whether the money he claims or he receives comes from the buyers of his products or whether part of his sales money comes under the form of new credits issued by an agency certified for that purpose.

This price adjustment could be made, every year, every six months or every three months. It would be similar to what is called a discount, which would be the opposite of a sales tax.

This compensated discount would be paid to the retailer through an issue of credit equivalent to the total of bills showing that a similar discount was granted to the consumers. That is how producers would be paid according to their own sales price, whereas consumers could obtain the whole production while paying only a fraction of the prices appearing on the tags.

How would this discount rate be calculated? It would be calculated according to the lack of purchasing power, taken as a whole, after deduction of the amounts paid in social allowances that would not result from taxes, as well as the amounts paid as social dividends.

Let us suppose, for example, that the total price of the goods offered amount to $80 billion and that during a given period, Canadians have only bought $60 million worth of products; then, the National Credit Office would decide for the next production period a discount of 25 per cent.

That price adjustment technique would work automatically, according to the calculations of the accountants of Statistics Canada and of the National Credit Office, somewhat like a thermostat in a heating system. Therefore, we would automatically avoid inflation and deflation.

No doubt these measures would have some negative effects, such as cutting out financial dictatorship, wording off infringement on the producers' rights to private property, eliminating the dangers of social upheaval and quelling feelings of revolt among people.

However, the positive sides would be much more important: applying the Social Credit measures would cause goods to meet the citizens' needs and to pass from the producers' firms to the consumers' households. This would allow the economy to achieve its goal, which is to meet the needs of the human beings. This would be something new and unprecedented in this world.

[English]

Mr. David Orlikow (Winnipeg North): Mr. Speaker, when the hon. member for Ottawa-Carleton (Mr. Turner) made his first speech as Minister of Finance in February, 1972, he said:

> Our most urgent and pressing task is to bring about a substantial reduction in the level of unemployment. Our objective must be the provision of a job to every Canadian who is seeking work.

When the Minister of Finance made that speech in February he had before him the unemployment figures for the month of January, 1972, which showed that the rate of unemployment was 6.2 per cent, seasonally adjusted. In May the minister presented a budget which he called an expansionary budget, a budget which he predicted, because of the concessions he was proposing to industry by way of lower corporation taxes, fast write-offs in respect of the purchase of machinery, and so on, would produce a large number of jobs and reduce the number of unemployed.

For more than three years unemployment had hovered at 6 per cent or more of the labour force, on a seasonally adjusted basis. I said then that the minister was a bad predictor, that the advice he was getting from senior officials of the Department of Finance and the Bank of Canada was the wrong kind of advice, and that he would not succeed in his stated objective of reducing the number of unemployed.

The record is clear, Mr. Speaker. For the month of January, 1973, the rate of unemployment was precisely what it was for January, 1972—6.2 per cent of the labour force, on a seasonally adjusted basis. In the Atlantic provinces the number of unemployed was higher in January of this year than in January of last year. There were more people unemployed in Quebec this year than last year; there were more people unemployed on the Prairies and in British Columbia. The only province which showed a decrease was Ontario.

We said last year's budget was not expansionary enough. I suggest to you, Mr. Speaker, and to the Minister of Finance that this year's budget is not an expansionary budget. The Financial Times dated February 26, 1973, which arrived in my office today, contains an article dealing with the economy under the heading, "A less stimulating budget". The article reads:

> Last week's budget, billed as a strong stimulus for the economy, may turn out to be less stimulating than the government says it is. On a national accounts basis the budget is less expansionary than last year's was.
> When the federal government's revenue and expenditure is converted to a national accounts basis, the deficit for the coming fiscal year turns out to be $640 million, compared with $1,075 million this year. On this basis, Finance Minister Turner does not seem to be running the risk of overheating the economy.

The minister is not really thinking of an expansionary budget because, as has been the case with Liberal finance ministers for the last four years, he is still worried about his belief that inflation is a more serious problem than unemployment. We in this party have been opposing that kind of belief since it was first proposed by the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) in December 1969. We said then, and we say today, that the cost of dealing with inflation has been put on the backs of those least able to bear it, namely, the unemployed. We said then, and we say now, that this country has 2 or 3 per cent more unemployed than it should have because governments have refused to introduce programs that are expansionary.

If the Minister of Finance wanted to do something about unemployment, his budget should have proposed a deficit in the neighbourhood of $500 million or $1 billion more than is the case. He ought to have proposed expenditures, in co-operation with provinces and municipalities, of large sums of money to put people to work on projects that the provinces and municipalities know require to be done and for which they need assistance from the federal government.

The budget should also have provided for larger cuts in income tax. We have said for years that we are opposed to flat percentage cuts in income tax. That is the kind of income tax cut that has been proposed by members of the official opposition. We oppose that kind of cut because a flat cut of 5 per cent, 7 per cent or 9 per cent—the kind proposed by my hon. friend from Edmonton West (Mr. Lambert) and the hon. member for Don Valley (Mr. Gillies)—would benefit, in the main, people in the upper income bracket. One need only look at the income tax table to see what a 5 per cent income tax cut means to people in the $50,000 a year class if no maximum is placed on the size of the reduction.

We have also said that a flat 5 per cent or 7 per cent cut in income tax for people in the lower income bracket would mean very little. While we do not think that the cut in income tax proposed in the minister's budget is enough and we would like it to be more, we nevertheless welcome the fact that for the first time the government has adopted a basic principle that we have been proposing for four or five years at least, namely, that income tax cuts should be of a selective nature.

[Mr. Orlikow.]

The 5 per cent income tax cut proposed by the minister, when coupled with the minimum reduction in income tax of $100, means, for a married man with two dependent children earning $8,000 a year or less, a cut of 13 per cent. For someone with an income of $5,000, it is a tax cut of almost 50 per cent. That is the kind of tax cut we welcome and which is included in the proposal for a 5 per cent income tax cut means that people in the upper income bracket will receive, not 5 per cent but an income tax reduction of probably not more than 2 or 3 per cent. To the extent that this reduction in income tax goes mainly to people in the low income bracket, we in the New Democratic Party welcome it.

Similarly, we welcome the proposed increase in the basic old age pension to $100 from the former $82.88, and the increase to $170 from $150 in supplementary benefits paid to old age pensioners who qualify. We are still of the opinion that this is insufficient and that the old age pension should be $150 a month for everyone 65 years of age. We are still of the opinion that the old age pension should be extended to people below age 65. There are too many people in their sixties who are getting along with very little since they do not qualify for the old age pension and are unable to work.

Nevertheless, we greet with a good deal of satisfaction the increases proposed by the Minister of Finance. We greet them with some enthusiasm because those of us who were here before the election of 1968 remember the speeches of the former minister of national health and welfare when he rejected our suggestion that the basic pension should be increased and insisted that the only increase should be by way of supplementary benefit.

We also welcome this increase because we know that the official opposition have consistently refused, and still refuse, to indicate precisely what they would do for the old age pensioners should they form the government. On one occasion during the election campaign the Leader of the Official Opposition (Mr. Stanfield) was asked whether he would support the proposal made by our party that pensions be increased to $150 a month, and he indicated that he would not. He was asked what increases he would agree to, and very grudgingly he agreed to an increase to take care of the increase in the cost of living, which would have meant an increase to $90 a month.

The members of this party who have always insisted, inside parliament and outside, that the old age pensioners need to have their pension increased, are now told by members of the official opposition that we are betraying the interests of the elderly. I do not know when I have heard such gall in the years I have been in politics. A party that has consistently refused to indicate what it will do for the old age pensioners now says that if we support an increase to $100 a month, we are supporting an increase that is a good deal less than we should support. Where were these members, Mr. Speaker, when we were calling for substantial increases in old age pensions? Where have they been until today? They have been playing both ends of the political game, telling people that taxes are too high, that we cannot afford to do more for people in need, while at the same time trying to create the impression that they are on the side of the old age pensioner.

Having said that the budget is not expansionary enough and that we think a good deal more needs to be done, may I say it is still the best budget we have seen in the last half-dozen years. I do not think that is an accident. I think the government is reacting to the fact that it has lost its majority—and so it should. I believe the government is reacting to the fact that it is in a minority position, so it is willing, as it should be, to listen to what the people of Canada are saying to us both inside and outside parliament. It is prepared to do something minimal to meet some of the needs of the Canadian people. It will do something in order to hang on to power and continue in government.

Let me say that this budget is not an NDP budget. It does not begin to meet the needs of the people of Canada in terms of dealing with unemployment, a problem with which Canada has been plagued for many years under Liberal and Conservative governments.

The hon. member for Rocky Mountain (Mr. Clark) talked about this party being a party of dinosaurs. I suggest the hon. member should look at what is happening in the world, particularly in western Europe. We find a socialist democratic government in Germany, Sweden and Denmark, a labour party in Norway which has been in power for most of the past 30 years, and very likely a socialist party in power in France after the next election, with a labour opposition in Great Britain that will probably come back into office after the next election. These are parties with which we are associated on the international scene. If the hon. member for Rocky Mountain wants to talk about dinosaurs, he should look at his own party because that is the party going out of style. Before I finish, let me say one more thing.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Laniel): Order, please. I regret to interrupt the hon. member, but his time has expired.

Mr. Joseph-Philippe Guay (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to have the opportunity to say a few words in respect of the budget presented to the House by the Minister of Finance (Mr. Turner). In my opinion it is the best budget we have had because it contains so many things of benefit to the citizens of this country, particularly those with lower incomes. It will also help in solving problems associated with unemployment.

I was very pleased to see included in the budget increases in old age security benefits and the basic supplementary pension. I am also pleased to note that there is an increase in the appropriations for the Department of Veterans Affairs to cover the costs arising from the committee's study of the recommendations of Canadian veterans' associations. These associations unanimously recommended adoption of the report of the committee, which would mean an increase in veterans pensions which they so rightfully deserve. I hope members of this House will adopt the same attitude as members of the committee and will accept the recommendations so that veterans or their widows will receive these benefits as soon as possible.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Tell the government to bring in the bill.

An hon. Member: It is coming.

Mr. Foster: Wait until Friday, Stanley.

Mr. Guay (St. Boniface): The hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles) has always played an important role in the field of pensions, and I wholeheartedly support his request to the government to present this bill as soon as possible.

I was also pleased by the recommendation of the veterans affairs committee in respect of pensions based on the recommendations of the joint committee regarding standard of living. It was my hope that there would be in the budget an announcement in respect of railroad pensioners, particularly in view of the recommendations of many members of this side of the House and the fact that the Minister of Transport (Mr. Marchand) had a chance to speak to the presidents of both railways regarding parity of railroad pensions with those of Air Canada. I await with anticipation such an announcement. The national president of the Railway Pension Association, Mr. Jack Pickett, in one of his recent letters urged Members of Parliament to support changes in the CNR pension plan. He said:

> I would urge all MPs to support changes in the CNR pension plan—now. We want the same as those employed by other Crown corporations. We are prepared to pay the same, no more, no less, and it must be on a retroactive basis.

I should like to raise another important matter which has no reference to the budget. Members on the government side, including parliamentary secretaries, are not given the same opportunity as opposition Members of Parliament to ask questions during the question period. It is true that members on this side can ask questions of ministers outside this House and receive appropriate answers. It is also true that members of the opposition, regardless of party affiliation, can ask questions of ministers outside the House and receive satisfactory answers: they can do so verbally or in writing.

I was told this afternoon by two ministers that in some instances their departments provided written answers to written questions by opposition members, yet very often the questions are also asked orally during the question period. In this way, opposition members can have their questions and answers recorded in Hansard and use Hansard to supply information to their constituents. Surely backbenchers on the government side, and parliamentary secretaries, should have equal rights because they are also Members of Parliament.

May I call it six o'clock, Mr. Speaker?

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Laniel): It being six o'clock, I do now leave the chair until eight o'clock p.m.

At six o'clock the House took recess.

AFTER RECESS

The House resumed at 8 p.m.

Mr. Guay (St. Boniface): Mr. Speaker, to continue my speech from before the dinner hour, I should like to read a question I put to the Minister of National Revenue (Mr. Stanbury) which I believe is very important not only to members of this House but to all taxpayers of Canada. Even though I am a parliamentary secretary, I believe, as I said earlier, that in this regard I should be on an equal basis with all other elected hon. members. It is because I believe my question is of importance that I should like to have it incorporated in Hansard, just as questions of hon. members opposite are incorporated in Hansard. It is directed to the Minister of National Revenue and reads as follows:

Bearing in mind the deadline for income tax returns, which is coming up shortly, and with reference to my question of February 8, reported in Hansard at page 1076, with regard to the possibility of extending the office hours of income tax offices throughout the country in order to assist taxpayers seeking information in connection with income tax returns, may I ask whether the minister has now had time in which to consider this matter?

The answer is:

For the benefit of people unable to use the inquiry service during the day because they are at work, we are extending both the local and long-distance toll-free telephone inquiry service until 8 p.m. every Monday and Tuesday until April 30.

An hon. Member: What does the minister have to do with that?

Mr. Guay (St. Boniface): If hon. members wish to ask questions when I have finished, I shall be glad to be of assistance on any matters in respect of which they are in doubt or do not know anything.

This information no doubt will be repeated by the minister at a later date so that the people of Canada will be aware of the additional service available to them. I do not believe any parliamentary secretary should have to remain silent. I do not believe, also, as some hon. members on the other side have suggested, that members on this side should be muzzled merely because they happen to hold office. I think all of us have a responsibility to our constituents. There is no reason why a parliamentary secretary should not ask a question, have it placed on the record in Hansard and thus be able to represent his constituents on a basis equal to that of hon. members opposite, provided the question is not directed to the department or to the minister he represents as parliamentary secretary.

As elected members of the common people—and this is what parliament is all about—notwithstanding the party to which we happen to belong, surely Members of Parliament on the government side have a right to be heard, whether backbenchers or parliamentary secretaries, and a right to have their remarks reported in the official record of this House on a basis equal to that of other Members of Parliament.

Mr. J. R. Holmes (Lambton-Kent): Mr. Speaker, I have followed the proceedings during this session in the hopeful anticipation that the government would come forward with new proposals to deal with the problem of the non-medical use of drugs, a problem which I feel is national in scope and certainly deserving of immediate attention.

I listened to the debate on the supplementary estimates. I heard the presentation of the budget, and I have reviewed the estimates for the fiscal year ending March 31, 1974. I have found nothing to suggest that there are any new proposals. What bothers me even more is that I am confident this government has in its possession authoritative information indicating that we are indeed dealing with a national problem of epidemic proportions.

I am certain this government is aware of the economic implications not only in terms of loss of productivity but in terms of actual dollars spent in respect of costly hospital admissions related to the effects of these drugs or their complications. I am also certain this government is aware of the social implications and the growing evidence of self-destruction which too frequently involves the youth of our society. I cannot understand the position of this government and its lack of initiative to accept leadership.

I cannot accept answers such as, "This is a matter which is the responsibility of the provincial governments" or, "We must await the report of the LeDain commission." I interpret such responses as clearly indicating that this government has not developed a policy to deal with this national crisis. Time does not permit me to review in detail the statistical data which indicates the magnitude of the problem. I am sure hon. members have read many articles in this regard. However, in order to place the problem in proper perspective I should like to refer hon. members to two articles. The first appeared in Canadian Magazine February 10, 1973. I shall quote from pages 2 and 3. The article is entitled "The Poppy's Evil Harvest" and reads in part:

"Five years ago," the briefing book said, "the RCMP estimated the number of heroin addicts at 500. Today their modest estimate is 10,000 addicts and 100,000 users." The book also advised the Prime Minister, somewhat ominously that "many young users of heroin do not even realize how dangerous this drug is."

It goes on to indicate that in Edmonton there are 900 users, in Calgary 500, in Vancouver 5,000, in Winnipeg 350, in Montreal 1,000, in Halifax 100, in Toronto 3,000. If I may make one additional reference, Mr. Speaker, I should like to refer to the publication Addictions, the summer edition of 1972, by the Addiction Research Foundation of Ontario. At page 47 of the publication the following is written:

Figures for the city, province and country are as elusive as dandelion seeds in the wind. Those available are usually subject to some kind of qualification. James Moore of the Le Dain commission puts the national figure at 10,000—published in Treatment: A Report of the Commission of Inquiry into the Non-Medical Use of Drugs (Ottawa: Information Canada, 1972). p. 30—and calls it a conservative figure. According to the narcotic control division of the Department of National Health and Welfare, heroin addicts in 1971 numbered 6,696. This figure is computed by counting those who come to the attention of the police—therefore it's inevitably a low one. (American figures indicate that over 2,000,000 in the U.S.A. have tried heroin; 1,500,000 of high school age—6 per cent of all young people between 12 and 17).

Let me repeat, Sir, that 6 per cent of all young people between 12 and 17 in the United States have tried heroin. There is one point which I should like to make in passing. I am impressed by the fact—I think this is a reflection on the federal government, in terms of educational programs—that when the problem is being discussed, the discussion invariably comes around to addiction; rarely do we hear about the complications as a result of the abuse of drugs, and specifically in this instance, the abuse of heroin.

I can assure you, Sir, that many of the reportable cases of death are due either to respiratory failure or overwhelming infections such as septicaemia, endocarditis, etc. This is but one example which reflects the inadequate educational program which is actually undertaken by the federal government. I do not intend to discuss the penal aspects of the non-medical use of drugs but, rather, I would like to develop the concept in terms of research, treatment and rehabilitation.

Let me say at the outset that I was concerned by statements made in the House on February 13 when a question was asked concerning the development of a national institute for alcoholism and drug abuse. On that day the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Lalonde) indicated that his department must await the final report of the LeDain commission before action could be taken. I believe that such an institute should receive top priority and that this government has a responsibility to provide leadership in dealing with this problem which is national is scope.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Holmes: If I may, Sir, I would like to review briefly some of the background material that forms the framework for the development of a national institute for alcoholism and drug abuse. We know that following the interim report of the LeDain commission the Department of National Health and Welfare established the non-medical use of drugs directorate. Since 1968, the problem of drug abuse has accelerated, and continues to do so. I can assure you that this is the consensus of those at the federal level and those at the provincial level.

During this time we have seen the utilization of various drugs including marijuana, the hallucinogens, amphetamines, heroin and cocaine. More recently there has been greater experimentation, particularly by large numbers of young people, with alcohol, notably cheaper wines and beer. At present in Canada there exists a lack of organized information with two notable exceptions—the one I referred to earlier, namely, the Alcohol and Drug Addiction Foundation of Ontario, and the Narcotic Addiction Foundation of British Columbia.

We are all aware of the increasing cost of medical services and it therefore becomes imperative that we avoid costly duplication and fragmentation of our efforts. Instead, co-ordination of activities is desirable. It is in the context of this background that the concept of a national institute was born and I believe that enthusiasm, acceptance and co-operation can be found among the provinces and indeed among all those who are dealing with the problem of drug abuse.

In addition, there is a pressing need for an expert centre of scientific knowledge, technical information and professional advice to deal with this special health problem. This need is not likely to be met in the foreseeable future by the often isolated and fragmented approach of official provincial agencies, universities or the Department of National Health and Welfare. I believe that such an institute presupposes a union between the federal and provincial governments, official professional agencies, voluntary agencies, private enterprise and university expertise.

It is obvious that direct attempts in the past to develop problem solving programs at the federal level have not been successful. The difficulties appear to have been, and continue to be due to conflicts and confusion which arise when staffs and programs which ought to be primarily professional and scientific in their aims and methods come under misguided political direction and cumbersome bureaucratic control. Therefore, I believe that such an agency, which would be operationally independent and national in scope may be the only certain and satisfactory way of attracting and holding highly competent medical and social scientists and other critical professional disciplines that are needed to develop an effective long-term program.

It is clear to experts working in this field across the country that drug and alcohol abuse knows no conventional and no provincial boundaries, and it is therefore truly a national health problem. Because of lack of co-ordinated, well planned federal leadership the programs in some provinces, particularly the smaller provinces, are poorly financed and therefore fragmented in their approach and certainly cannot cope with the problem.

The need for centres of expert knowledge and advice in particular and specialized health problem areas has not been well met by the divisions or directorates that are harboured within the Department of National Health and Welfare. Such an institute would be a body or association of bodies authorized and financed under government legislation to be a national agency for research, development, education, training and information in this particular health science.

I believe it should be an agency independent of the government, free from bureaucratic controls but with its professional and scientific operation consistent with the public responsibilities and functions of the Department of National Health and Welfare. Many of the responsibilities of the present non-medical use of drugs directorate and of other agencies of the Department of National Health and Welfare could be undertaken by this new institute.

This does not imply that the directorate would not be involved, and indeed it would play a responsible role in the development of the program. In general, the directorate would be the federal government's bureau for underwriting in part the policies and operations of the national institute, and in addition would discharge those larger responsibilities in the fields of education, public information, mental health and social science research to bear upon the social, economic and cultural causes of all forms of social alienation as well as self-destructive behaviour.

The directorate, in the interests of speed and economy, should direct its activities in such a way as to avoid the unnecessary duplication of staff and facilities by utilizing the existing facilities, agencies, persons and resources to the fullest extent. The directorate would ensure the co-operation and involvement of directors of related programs at the federal and provincial levels, as well as professional and voluntary agencies, by active representation. In general terms, the institute would be responsible for research, development, education, training and accumulation synthesis, extraction and dissemination of information relative to drug and alcohol abuse on a national and international basis. The highest priority should be given to development of programs of prevention, with task-oriented research in this area.

Programs of behavioural science research would be undertaken which would focus upon Canadian cultural implications as well as psychological identification of personality abnormalities. In effect, we should seek answers to questions such as: What is the impact inherent in the rapid movement of young people across the country? What role does peer group pressure play in drug abuse? I could go on to outline additional questions that should be asked.

In addition, research would be directed to evaluate programs of treatment and rehabilitation already available in some areas of the country leading to identification and implementation of specific treatment facilities, including crisis centres, street clinics, therapeutic communities and industrial rehabilitation programs where required at the provincial level.

Research in the pharmaceutical and biochemical areas should expand simply beyond marijuana to include longer-acting new products or polymers to replace methadone; discovery of new and safer, longer-acting narcotic, alcohol, amphetamine, blocking agents to combat the euphoric effects of these drugs. We should also study the effects of drugs on locomotor, sensory and reflex systems as they apply to operating motor vehicles, and the effects of drug use on industrial productivity, etc.

Such an institute should be involved with the identification of innovative programs in the field of drug abuse, with consequent evaluation and implementation. An information centre would be an important component which would receive information from the World Health Organization, from American experience and from actual operating Canadian sources which would then be synthesized, evaluated and distributed to specific target audiences including elementary and high school students, teachers, law enforcement agencies, physicians, hospitals, parents, treatment and rehabilitation professionals including pyschologists, public health personnel, voluntary agencies, organized community action groups, etc.

I feel that an important component of such an institute would be a national training centre to develop meaningful programs to train manpower to deal with the treatment and rehabilitation of drug abusers in crisis centres, hospital location departments, medical practices and other professional locations, halfway houses, therapeutic communities, etc. Finally, such an institute would be charged with identifying, describing and implementing, wherever required, programs relative to development of alternatives to drug and alcohol abuse by the young people of Canada.

Mr. Antonio Yanakis (Berthier): Mr. Speaker, I am glad to have the privilege of taking part in the debate on the budget that the Minister of Finance (Mr. Turner) so brilliantly presented, and to be able, on behalf of my constituents, to express my approval of the positive steps the government has put forward so as to fight unemployment and reduce taxation in the interests of those who have been hit the hardest by successive rises in the cost of living.

The substantial increase in the basic old age security pension is undoubtedly one of the most welcome measures, for it benefits the group of people in the third age of life, one might say the golden age, who were the most affected by the loss of purchasing power of the dollar due to inflation.

The removal of tax from children's clothing, confectionery, soft drinks and cosmetics, and the lowering of customs tarifs, etc., have no doubt come at the right time, and I hope that the manufacturers will pass these benefits on to consumers.

In his speech, the Minister of Finance described it as a positive budget, aimed at holding back inflation and fighting unemployment, and he predicted that it would create 300,000 new jobs. This certainly augurs well, and should bring renewed confidence to industrialists and businessmen on whom we largely depend, since their investments are needed to bring about these new jobs.

In this connection, Mr. Speaker, I can say that the industrial expansion of the Berthier constituency has greatly benefited from subsidies from the Department of Regional Economic Expansion; in the last few years, several millions of dollars have been invested, and more than 2,000 jobs created. I hope that when these programs are reviewed soon, even more generous benefits will be granted to industrialists, to get them more interested in investing in areas that are suffering from the regional disparities that we all deplore.

On this subject, Mr. Speaker, I think it was stupid on the part of hon. members opposite to run a disparaging election campaign, the last time, charging the government with granting too much money to Quebec and giving this province more favours which were at the expense of the rest of Canada. That was untrue and the now Minister of Transport (Mr. Marchand) who was then Minister of Regional Economic Expansion did not fail to state the facts with the actual figures.

Mr. Speaker, there will soon be a statement made, on the government's new dairy policy. We know how hard it has been over the years for the dairy producers to operate without any hope of ever drawing decent profits from this industry. For the past couple of years, under the leadership of this liberal government, the situation has improved, but not enough to allow the dairy producers to keep up with increasing production costs and their own cost of living.

For some time, people have been complaining about consumer food prices. But, is it not the middle men who, most of the time, are pocketing these increases whereas farmers are left to fend for themselves?

In my opinion, Mr. Speaker, farmers do not receive their fair share of those increases and that is sheer inequity. We must once again make sure that farmers obtain a just and decent income.

I am pleased to note that the Throne Speech included a provision to the effect that the feed grain problem would be settled during this session, thus bringing to an end a discriminating situation which has lasted too long and which compels our farmers to pay more for their feed grain than the Western farmers.

• (2030)

I also hope, Mr. Speaker, that the Quebec government will accept, as several provinces have already done, the federal-provincial arrangement which enables the farmer who wishes to sell his farm for health reasons or due to his advanced age, or because he can no longer make a decent living there, to take advantage of the special legislation passed to that effect. Thus he can sell his farm, thanks to the guarantee of a farm loan and the subsidy provided up to $3,500, payable to the owner, so that he may settle elsewhere.

Mr. Speaker, I wish to point out that I am most upset about the injustice made to the farmers of the Maskinongé and Saint-Maurice constituencies, which are part of the federal constituency of Bethier, concerning the $400 subsidy made available to them by the federal Department of Agriculture.

It is known that the provincial Department of Agriculture has already designated a certain number of constituencies where the damage caused to harvests by the heavy rains of last summer has been most disastrous. However, the constituency of Bethier has been included since it is part of zone No. 10. That leads one to believe that when it rains in Bethier, it does not rain in the neighbouring constituency, particularly over a period of three or four months. I have seen myself harvests damaged to the extent of 50 or 60 per cent, and a good part of them burnt in the fields in those two constituencies.

That discrimination between constituencies has been most unfortunate, and I only hope that the provincial Department of Agriculture will reconsider its decision, for the federal Department of Agriculture informed me that that decision must come from Quebec City and that the federal government would be ready to compensate those who suffered losses.

Mr. Speaker, as we all know, although winter makes some people happy, nevertheless it causes problems to several others because of the increased unemployment it brings. I think the government has found a good solution with its Local Initiatives Program to create temporary jobs. My riding of Berthier received a great deal of encouragement because more than 50 projects were recently accepted in an equal number of parishes for an amount of $1,500,000 which created 805 jobs this winter. It is an efficient program which will have beneficial socio-economic effects in the whole riding.

Now, what about the Opportunities for Youth Program presently being carried out, under which a good number of students will find jobs to pay for their education next year, the New Horizons Program for older people which provides occupations for them, student exchanges to allow them to know their country better or learn a second language and youth hostels providing holidays at a low cost for the young?

Is that not a positive record liable to improve the social climate in a country, or area or riding? Judging from the opinions of the members of the opposition, one would have the impression of living in the most tyrannized country in the world when it is exactly the opposite!

In the past few weeks I was called upon to participate in the work of the Special Committee of the House of Commons on Food Prices. There is discomfort among the public because of the unjustified increase in food prices, and I think that Parliament was right in setting up that committee.

In his analysis of the budget, the financial critic of the Progressive Conservative Party reaches the conclusion that we should immediately freeze all salaries, prices, interests and dividends for a 90-day period and then impose general controls. How can he reach such a sudden conclusion when the committee has not even submitted its preliminary report to the House, as it was asked to after 60 days?

On the same occasion, the leader of the Progressive Conservative Party (Mr. Stanfield) was never categorical in his speech; he was content to say that he would not hesitate to apply this control "if necessary".

Where does that conclusion come from then, that the situation is now critical, and that the government should control salaries and prices for both workers and producers?

We must bear in mind that price and wage control would create many more problems that it would solve. Already, the United States and Great Britain who had implemented them are hastening to repeal them.

This government has other means of bringing to reason manufacturers, wholesalers and retailers who abuse the consumers.

Mr. Speaker, tomorrow is the deadline for those who want to appear before the Electoral Boundaries Commission and state their case and that of their constituents concerning the changes proposed by the commissioners.

I am convinced that not only my riding, but all rural ridings should have almost no change.

The rural characteristics and the homogeneity of the Berthier riding which I represent must remain as they are if we want the member to represent it efficiently.

Mr. Speaker, the time put at my disposal will soon end and I want to conclude by expressing to my constituents the pride which I feel representing them and all the optimism and trust which I feel toward the economic and social future of the riding of Berthier. Under the direction of the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau), under whom I have the honour to serve, I hope for still better days.

[English]

Mr. Jake Epp (Provencher): Mr. Speaker, in rising to speak in the budget debate one is faced not so much with the question of what has gone before but, principally, what will the budget do for us in the future? Despite that, Canadians are asked by this government to put their trust in the government and its economic planning. It still insists on wistfully looking into the cracked crystal-ball of the Liberal party and coming to the conclusion that it muddled through before, and if it hangs on it may just muddle through again.

I suggest, Mr. Speaker, that we need a lot more courage, a lot more foresight and close scrutiny of the government's economic policies rather than simply a "wait and see" attitude. Across the country this government had a reputation for not listening, a reputation of being arrogant. Suddenly it is listening, and what it is hearing is the voice of discontent, specifically on its handling of the Canadian economy.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Epp: It is hearing this discontent from farmers, from small business people, from over half a million unemployed. But it is hearing another voice, that is, the small voice of its socialist colleagues saying, "Let's stay together; let's hang together, and we might muddle through". This being the case, Mr. Speaker, it is simply a continuation of arrogance for the government now to ask this House and the Canadian people to once again put their trust in it and in the economic policies it has espoused.

The party to my extreme left has generally been known as a party of principles—misplaced principles very often. Yet they have that reputation. For the moment they are willing to give up those principles. In order not to have to face an election, they are willing to follow a policy which their leader has said they cannot trust, a policy which they simply cannot accept. Yet they say they will endorse it unequivocally. I say, Mr. Speaker, that they have endorsed this government's economic policies for a mess of pottage, and nothing more.

In this budget speech on Monday last, the Minister of Finance (Mr. Turner) said there were two principal aims in his budget: first, to reduce unemployment and, second, to curb inflation. This government is asking Canadians to trust it to reduce unemployment, yet as a result of its policies for the last three or four years the unemployment figure has been hovering around 6 per cent or 7 per cent. How can it ask us to support that kind of record? It simply staggers the imagination, Mr. Speaker.

Our unemployment rate is amongst the highest in the western world, and along with that we have to contend with inflation. This inflationary rate cuts into the savings of our old people, many of whom saved during hard times, and it cuts into the incomes of those who live on modest or low incomes. These groups are hit hardest by inflation. This is an inflationary cycle, Mr. Speaker, which the Canadian worker feels he can only combat by asking for higher wages and salaries in order to stay ahead. It often happens that the people who cannot defend themselves against inflation are the weak and the old, those who cannot organize themselves. I suggest that the government has to look again at this segment of our population. An increase in the old age pension is not completely the answer.

The Canadian farmer, who must sell on an open market economy and must face competition, is hit hard by inflation. Why is this, Mr. Speaker? The farmer must buy manufactured goods. The labour costs connected with these goods are high, often following inflationary trends. He must recover the high prices he pays through returns for products which he sells. Farmers are surviving only because of the increased efficiency they have brought to their industry.

Despite these conditions, what has the Minister of Finance done except adopt a "wait and see" attitude. That there were some acceptable measures in the budget, I admit openly. I nevertheless suggest that, considering his record of forecasting, the minister should not rely on divine providence to any great degree.

You might describe the minister's approach to economics in this country in this way: he considers the economy much as a doctor might consider a sick patient who is in need of drastic and immediate medical help. Instead of being decisive and taking appropriate action, the minister quickly runs to the medical chest for a whole fistful of patent medicines which he offers to the patient. In this case, instead of "aspirin" read "tax cuts" and "higher exemptions," and instead of "sedatives" read "higher old age pensions." Having administered these medicines, the minister sits back and says, "I have done my job. Hopefully, the patient will be cured. If not, at least I tried." I suggest that is not enough.

Further, the Minister of Finance has asked for restraints on the part of the wage earner, on the part of businessmen and on the part of provinces. He has asked them to restrain their spending, hoping that this will cure inflation. At the same time, despite tax cuts, or whatever you may call them, this government will spend $2.76 billion more this next fiscal year then it did the year before.

The Minister of National Defence (Mr. Richardson) has acquired the reputation in western Canada of being one of the spokesmen in cabinet for western Canada. If he will examine the estimates he will find that more is to be spent on public services in the capital region of Canada than in the four western provinces, the Yukon and Northwest Territories combined. Is that recognition of the west? If so, I suggest it is on a very small scale indeed.

I suggest, also, that the government is the single largest inflationary agent in the economy. If there is to be economic restraint and, hopefully, a reduction in our inflation rate, and if we are to ask the Canadian taxpayer to bear that burden, I suggest that the government first and foremost should follow its own advice and show leadership to the Canadian people.

On the CBC program "Encounter" aired last Sunday, the Minister of Finance talked about the indexed tax plan and mentioned that certain western European countries are adopting it. I suggest that we in the opposition have brought forward constructive ideas, which I am happy to say the Minister of Finance—

Mr. Alexander: Stole.

Mr. Epp: —incorporated or stole when presenting his budget. I therefore ask, why was there ridicule and arrogance last fall when we were debating this idea? Why did the minister not have the foresight to adopt it at an earlier date?

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Epp: In the time remaining to me I will not be able to delve deeply into economic policy. However, there are a few points I wish to make. The government has embarked upon a program for relieving regional economic disparities. Perhaps some time in the future we will see the results of those economic policies. Our problem in western Canada is one of geography. For instance, why must western Canadians pay more for freight? Why does it cost more to ship goods from west to east than from east to west?

If we are to do something positive about regional economic disparities, let us not only do something through DREE programs; let us do something to improve the economic base of the regions from which we come. In my area we are not asking for anything special; we are only asking for the same deal to be given to all Canadians.

Mr. Paproski: How about more flights from Edmonton?

Mr. Epp: We could include those, too. The economy of western Canada has been largely agricultural. In order to expand that economy, we must introduce to the region secondary manufacturing and processing industries. I suggest we have made a good start in this direction. If that industry is to expand and be competitive, it must be placed on the same footing as the eastern manufacturing industry.

The Minister of Finance mentioned in his budget speech the removal of tariffs on specific out-of-season fruits and vegetables. I will let my friends representing areas of horticultural production discuss this matter. I only ask the minister this question: Why must Canadian farmers cross the American border and buy Canadian fertilizer from American companies at $20 per ton less than they would have to pay in Canada?

An hon. Member: Shame.

Mr. Epp: Why must they bring it back to Canada, to their own communities, having paid less than they would have paid if they had bought it in those communities? Does that represent the type of economic policy this government endorses?

The third point I wish to make is this. It would have been much more equitable if the minister had removed the 11 per cent sales tax on building materials. Because the construction industry is a seasonal industry there are high unemployment rates associated with it. I suggest that such a tax cut would have created incentives for that industry and, apart from bringing down the high cost of housing in Canada, would have affected with advantage some of the other areas to which the minister referred.

Lastly, Mr. Speaker, may I mention incentives for small businesses. I might mention, parenthetically that when dealing with the Department of Regional Economic Expansion one almost needs professional guidance to cope with the red tape in assessing the status of grant applications. If we are to create jobs over the long term, we must provide incentives for the small businessmen who produce jobs. If we provide incentives for farmers to produce, they will expand production and we shall expand the economy—because it is private initiative that counts, Mr. Speaker. I suggest that as well as abolishing inheritance taxes and capital gains on farms that pass to members of a family, the government should treat small businesses in much the same way so that they may be transferred from generation to generation and enjoy the same sort of tax forgiveness so long as they remain within the family.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Epp: So if this government wants the people to have confidence in its economic policies, I suggest it should look once again at the two basic areas of free enterprise and personal initiative instead of indulging in another band-aid approach to spending. Let the government not think that by giving hand-outs it will induce the economy to pull itself out of its current difficulties. Let the government create a climate in which individuals can produce and in which the economy can begin rolling forward again, instead of the type of climate which the government is proposing in the budget.

[Translation]

Mr. Gaston Isabelle (Hull): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to speak this evening, because I feel that it is a privilege which all members should avail themselves following the presentation of the budget.

Mr. Speaker, I think that the constituency which I represent is well-known. When I heard in this House some members say that the federal government was spending too much money in the national capital, that regionalization should be out of question, that no more funds should be allotted under this item, I felt that they could examine a map of Canada to realize that our country is a continent.

Canada has naturally multiple callings; moreover, if we compare the various provinces, we see right away that their economy is different and that some are richer than others. This is why the government has established the so-called equalization payments, in order to enable the poorer provinces to get a little more money, so that all provinces may enjoy the same standard of living.

Mr. Speaker, it has often been said that if the country must have a heart as human beings, that heart must be found in the national capital which has been Ottawa up to now. Some members came to Ottawa for the first time after their election; when Ottawa was referred to as the national capital of Canada, they did not care, because they had never been there. I would like them once again to immerse in the history of the capital of Canada. They will soon realize that the capital of Canada is not just Ottawa, although Queen Victoria did decide to choose it—because Parliament also decided that there would be a National Capital region including the cities of Ottawa and Hull and the neighbouring municipalities.

For many years, Mr. Speaker, it was always felt that the part of the National Capital including Hull and its environs was systematically overlooked by the central government and even by the Quebec government.

There is no need for me, Mr. Speaker, to prove to what extent we have been forgotten for years by the province of Quebec and by the central government, to recall that a Quebec minister even came over to Hull to see Mayor

D'Amour, who had just won a splendid victory; and he shook his hands congratulating him for having defeated Miss Whitton, who was then Mayor of Ottawa.

Mr. Speaker, a newspaper for intellectuals, Le Devoir of Montréal, reporting in 1962 or 1964 a golf tournament at the Rivermead Club, had the following title in its sports columns: "Hull, Ontario".

By all means, Mr. Speaker, I think that we have been systematically forgotten because we are far from Quebec and close to Ottawa. Since we were too far from Quebec, Quebec was forgetting us; since we were too close to Ottawa, Ottawa was snobbing us to some extent, by telling us all the time: Because you belong to a provincial jurisdiction, we cannot do anything whatever in your favour.

Mr. Speaker, 1968 was a turning point in the history of the national capital region. The present federal government, through the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) and the then Minister of Regional Economic Expansion (Mr. Marchand) decided to remove economic disparities which existed between these two communities which make up the national capital region. And if investments from the federal government had not been announced, we would still be a hamlet in the shadow of the Peace Tower.

These clever people decided to act in order to give us what we had been claiming and which had been due to us for years.

I remember, Mr. Speaker, reading speeches made by Dr. Fontaine, who was the first member of Parliament from Hull, having been elected in 1917, and who spoke exactly to the same point as I am tonight; but instead of saying that there were now things being achieved, he urged that something be done for Hull.

Mr. Speaker, we are now going through a great economic upsurge. The results will be felt around us. We have been experiencing difficulties from all sides. We will experience others, but we are sure that we are on the right path and that the present government will go through history, simply because they wanted to have the national capital represented by its elements, that is Francophones and Anglophones.

Mr. Speaker, I have often said that a country's capital is the seat of its central gouvernement and national institutions. The capital city must reflect the soul of its people, its validity, its strength and its future aspirations. I have said it at all times and if I may say more, its importance is more of a matter of its role than its area or its importance on both the industrial and commercial levels. It is a legislative and administrative center as well as the heart of its national institutions. It is a community without definite boundaries, because every citizen is part of it and all share its activities, responsibilities, problems and aspirations.

Mr. Speaker, I have always been in favour—and maybe because of that my name shall be remembered through history in a way or another—of some sort of a federal district, and I would like to be well understood. Actually, I don't want to talk about a federal district like the one in Washington, for the administrative problems they have there are well known. We know that the city authorities of Washington are appointed by the White House. What I would wish, for this economically identical area on both sides of the Ottawa river, is for the people of Hull and area who work in Ottawa not to be penalized.

Mr. Speaker, we are penalized by double public transportation tariffs; we are more penalized in the field of income tax than those who do the same work and live in Ontario.

We are penalized in the field of health, because we live in the Province of Quebec.

The Province of Quebec passes its own legislation concerning tax collection, and I am all for it; but for the National Capital area, one should try to amend the existing laws, so that the Hull people who work in Ottawa, are not penalized, but covered by laws identical to those in effect in Ontario, and likewise that the Ontario residents who work in Hull are not be penalized for the same reason.

Mr. Speaker, it would not be a special status, but a kind of economic arrangement, with the setting up of an identical economic region, in order that the citizens of one side of the river not be classified as first class citizens and those on the other side as second class citizens.

One could quote a good number of cases where people in the area are penalized precisely because they are civil servants.

Very soon, with the new buildings scheduled for Hull, several thousands of federal civil servants from Ottawa and the area will have to go and work in the Hull area. I would like to say here that we are faced with a crucial problem which may seem of little consequence but which is particularly important for those who will have to pay for their transportation. Here again, the Ottawa Regional Community Transit Commission will be penalized. I know that the National Capital Commission is presently trying by all means available to eliminate double fares which we have been paying for 50 years, but I hope this will not be done only to favour the people of Ottawa who will be working in Hull. This anomaly should have been corrected a long time ago. I hope it will become a priority and that this problem will be dealt with without delay.

Federal civil servants living in the area must pay between $200 and $1,200 more in income tax per year than their colleagues from Ontario who do exactly the same work. I think that in the national capital area such a thing should not exist and that governments should set up a federal district where laws would be uniform and where all citizens would have the same privileges and would be subject to the same taxes.

Although the separation of Quebec is not yet for tomorrow, an economic separation which I consider serious is slowly taking place. Again recently, car dealers were fighting so that a person from Ontario do not have to pay an 8 per cent sales tax when buying a car in Hull. That is what they tried to do, Mr. Speaker, on two occasions, by tricks that I do not want to qualify tonight. In any event, this situation was settled at the very last minute, because 30 to 35 per cent of customers of car dealers in Hull come from Ottawa.

I could quote many examples in the health area, Mr. Speaker, where no planning was made on the Quebec side. Never. It was done in a haphazard manner and today one can hear: People go and "see a doctor" in Ontario. People do not go and "see a doctor" in Ontario, Mr. Speaker. They do not have any other alternative because, as I said earlier, they have always been forgotten. The federal government pays 50 per cent, Mr. Speaker—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Boulanger): Order, please. I regret to have to interrupt the hon. member, but his time has expired.

[English]

Mr. John Lundrigan (Gander-Twillingate): Mr. Speaker, a few years ago when I was a new member in the House of Commons one of the old timers in the House was talking to a bunch of us young fellows and said, "I want to give you a bit of advice. Don't mail your mail, if it is a nasty letter, until the morning. Think it through and wait until morning, because perhaps your initial reaction might not be the one that governs your behaviour eventually". That kind of attitude might well have been adopted by the leader of the New Democratic Party and his colleagues last Monday evening, and especially before Friday when the leader of the New Democratic Party took part in this debate.

One thing I have noticed from watching this debate in the last few days is the change in attitude, not on the part of hon. members on this side of the House but on the part of those on the other side. Consistently throughout the speeches that we have heard in the last three or four days hon. members on that side of the House have been on the defensive. We are now one week from the glamour budget of last Monday night, and many on that side of the House have voiced different ideas. I think that within the next several months this attitude will not only be felt across the way but throughout the whole country.

I want to touch on a little bit of history. My colleague from Provencher (Mr. Epp) has touched on the fact that Canada is a difficult country to govern. He said that we are a rather unique country. We are the second largest in the world, have very few people, who are dispersed across a large land, and we are situated next to the most powerful nation in the world. We are a country that depends heavily on exports, a country that is made up of many regions with regional differences and difficulties. Those who have held the reins of office in this country since 1867, when confederation was born, have come to recognize that Canada is a difficult country to govern. It is also an exciting country to govern, a country that provides a great challenge to its parliamentarians.

In 1968 even the members of the opposition came to this House of Commons with a little bit of the excitement that many Canadians felt regarding the leadership they expected to be provided by the then brand new Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) who had literally swept Canadians off their feet. It was not much more than one year later that the members of this party received what I consider was a profound shock when they started to hear of the economic revelations of the Prime Minister.

I am not an economist, Mr. Speaker. I have had no connection with economics and I doubt whether I could even spell the word. However, I know that if you want to help people who are on fixed or low incomes, people who are seasonally employed, those who are among the most disadvantaged in the nation, you do not help them by putting them out of work. Yet the Prime Minister stated that we must adopt an economic model to take care of inflation. He said that if we are to protect people who make only $2,000 a year, or those who are on fixed incomes, or those who are only employed for five or six months a year—the little people of Canada—we must control inflation. The method that he used to control that inflation was to put these people out of work. If political parties could collectively be held responsible for certain acts under the Criminal Code, then I suggest there would certainly be a place for the Prime Minister and his cabinet.

I should like to say something to the few NDP members who are present tonight. There is one difference between what the Prime Minister did and other disasters that have overtaken us. Everyone knows that a plague, a war or pestilence either destroys or disadvantageously affects the economy of a country, but such a thing is usually accepted for what it is since it is beyond our means to control. The difference between that kind of situation and the attitude of the Prime Minister is that the Prime Minister decided deliberately that this was the model which had to be accepted in order to cure inflation in the country. The evidence of this is in the fact that since 1967—I will give the statistics a little later to prove this—we have had approximately a 50 per cent increase in unemployment across the nation.

During three years, members of this party have constantly during budget debates, question periods and speeches in the House taken issue with the policies of the government—but there has been no moving this Prime Minister during these years; he has been so carried away by his own omnipotence. The Canadian people, labour unions, consumers groups, provinces, municipalities and various provincial premiers, such as the NDP premier of Manitoba, have been criticized because they suggested there was an unemployment problem. In any event, nobody could budge the Prime Minister. We all know his attitude and how it became manifested.

It is unfortunate that during the past three or four years someone has not got inside the House with a camera in order that the people of Canada might see what was happening. Had that been the case, I am sure we would have 200 seats here now. The people would then know of the Prime Minister's reaction, perhaps unwittingly, to the Lapalme workers and to members of this House on the occasion when he used the expression "fuddle-duddle". Canadians would then know the attitude adopted by this unbudging Prime Minister, and I am sure it would have had an adverse effect for him in the results of the last election. In any event, the Prime Minister cannot be budged.

Last year, instead of the inflation-unemployment trade-off we had the Benson-Turner trade-off. Last February we had the Benson trade-off with Turner and everybody got the feeling that we were going to have someone new from the east, but it turned out to be someone new from Ottawa. Instead of coming with gold, frankincense and myrrh, this new man came with a cosmetic kit. Basically, what we got last Monday evening was another cosmetic kit.

The new Minister of Finance would not talk about unemployment rates. We asked him to tell us what the rate of unemployment was that the government would tolerate. His reply was that he would not talk statistics but intended to talk in human terms from now on in respect of unemployment. He said the government would not be satisfied until every Canadian who was willing to work had a job. Everyone on this side of the House felt on many occasions that we had a new glamour boy who was going to do a job across Canada and that this new Minister of Finance really meant business.

Until last May 8, members of the House of Commons and the Canadian public were half convinced that the prognosis and the prediction of the new Minister of Finance might come true. He was suggesting that we were again turning a corner, to quote the hon. member for Verdun (Mr. Mackasey) who sits now, lonely and deserted, in the front benches. That hon. member made a significant contribution in one way to which I will refer in a few minutes. We were again turning a corner, this was the suggestion of the Minister of Finance. He indicated that we were going to control inflation and solve the unemployment problem.

The Minister of Finance predicted substantial increases in employment in the manufacturing sector. The end result was that from May to December, 1972, there was a reduction of 1.6 per cent in employment in the manufacturing sector of the enonomy. In the previous year, when we had no Turner budget, we had an increase in employment in the manufacturing sector of .53 per cent.

It was that the minister's new budget would have a dramatic, perverse effect on the economy of Canada. That is exactly what happened. In that sector of the economy which he talked about stimulating, the situation got worse. Toward the end of the year the government made predictions about employment and inflation. I do not need to refer to inflation because the statistics are obvious and need not be put on the record again.

Last Monday night everyone knew there was to be a new kind of budget to cure the ills of the Canadian nation. Everybody anticipated that the Minister of Finance had a pocketful of money. Nobody knew it better than the hon. member for Verdun. That hon. member, who was previously minister of manpower and immigration, knew that even though his unemployment insurance scheme cost $2 billion, it would not bankrupt the nation. As a matter of fact, some say it was fortunate for the Liberal party that this $2 billion got into the economy. Had it not been ingested into the economy we might very well have had another 100,000 Canadians out of work.

With that kind of contribution to the just society, we can thank the hon. member for Verdun for what happened. He was one of the few humanitarians left in the cabinet. I shall be watching that hon. member and other members on that side of the House to see how they vote tonight. I am aware of his feelings and I am confident that he will show Mr. Turner, through his vote, that he does not believe he went far enough in stimulating the economy.

Let us see what happens. We are all conscious of this feeling, so let us see how they vote.

Last Monday night we knew there would be something of benefit to Canada. We welcome the increase in pensions and the tax adjustments of a beneficial nature. As the hon. member for Provencher has said, we have a Canadian economic anatomy that is undernourished. Perhaps this is an allegorical analogy that indicates all kinds of defects. Our economy is basically undernourished and plagued by government overspending in areas such as Information Canada and others. We have an economic rupture in the Atlantic region, an economic ulcer in Quebec and a general malaise across the whole nation. On Monday the Minister of Finance presented a budget which will keep this nation's economic anatomy in the same malnourished condition in terms of regional disparity.

In case there is an hon. member in the House of Commons who is not aware of what has happened to unemployment rates since the Liberal party took office in 1968 under this Prime Minister, let me place on the record a few statistics that show the seasonally adjusted rates across Canada. In 1967 we had an unemployment rate of 4.1 per cent. In 1968 that rate increased to 4.8 per cent. In 1969 the rate was 4.7 per cent, in 1970 it was 5.9 per cent, in 1971 it was 6.4 per cent and in 1972, after last year's expansionary budget, it was 6.3 per cent. That is an increase from 4.1 per cent to 6.3 per cent in a period of six years—a 50 per cent increase in the unemployment rate in this country.

In the Atlantic region, with the new regional economic expansion project, that two-pronged effort to gain equality and eliminate regional disparity, in 1967 the unemployment rate was 6.6 per cent. The next year we had an increase to 7.3 per cent, the next year it was 7.5 per cent, the next year 7.6 per cent, the next year 8.6 per cent, and last year it went up to 9 per cent. That indicates the result of the efforts of the Department of Regional Economic Expansion in the Atlantic region. Even with the Organization for Economic Co-operation and Development, this government has not been able to come up with any positive regional development policy in the last four or five years.

Lest anyone thinks my attitude is predicated on the fact that I am from the Atlantic region, let us look at the figures for the province of Quebec. In 1967 we find an unemployment rate of 5.3 per cent, in 1968 a rate of 6.5 per cent, the next year 6.9 per cent, the next year 7.9 per cent the next year 8.2 per cent, and in 1972 a rate of 8.3 per cent. This shows a steady increase in the level of unemployment since 1967. If I can add correctly, this shows an increase of 3 per cent in the rate of unemployment in the province of Quebec.

Without putting all the statistics on the record, we find for the province of Ontario an increase from 3.1 per cent in 1967 to 4.8 per cent in 1972. In the prairie region the rate of unemployment went from 2.3 per cent to 4.5 per cent, and British Columbia—a province that had not heard of unemployment for a number of years—had an increase, from 1967 to 1972, from 5.1 per cent to 7.6 per cent. These are the national averages up to 1972.

I do not like offering statistics except to prove a point. However, for the benefit of the Minister of Finance may I say that in Canada unemployment goes beyond statistics. In Canada, unemployment has a twofold effect. The first effect almost everybody understands. There is the cost of unemployment in terms of its strain on the national treasury, which does not have to be explained after the $2 billion deficit we experienced last year. Then there is the cost of unemployment in terms of loss of productivity. On the one hand we have the case of a man sitting at home drawing benefits from the system, and another fellow at the other end who is working every day.

This does not have to be explained to anybody; one does not have to be an economist or a minister to understand it. The fellow who sits at home may be a farmer or a fisherman. The fellow sitting at home is eating out of the vegetable bin, and the other fellow has to produce. Can you imagine the difference in productivity on the farm?

In material terms we have the drain of unemployment on the Canadian nation. In economic terms we lose several billion dollars because of lack of productivity due to unemployment. There is another side to this situation which every member must have observed. I wonder whether anyone can imagine the impact on a family when a man has to sit at home doing nothing. What impact does this have on the individual and on his children? The children come home from school day after day, having mingled with children whose fathers are employed, and look around at the old skipper sitting back in the corner receiving the benefits given by the state. I ask hon. member to consider the impact on a family which in this situation has to obtain the necessities of life in an environment where prices are increasing very dramatically. I happen to come from an environment where this is a common occurrence. There is insecurity involved in having a half million people sitting home not knowing what will happen. They do not know whether or not they will be working tomorrow. Then there is another group of people. There are the hundreds of thousands who are just scraping by, people who may work today and not tomorrow.

The total impact of unemployment on this nation is worse than any pestilence, war or disease. This is a matter in respect of which we think differently from the people in the party across the House. I believe the party opposite has shown that over the last four years it has not understood that unemployment is a problem in Canada. It seems to believe it is something which can be cured. I do not believe the people sitting across the House, the Prime Minister or the Minister of Finance really believe unemployment can be cured. I do not believe they even think it should be cured. There is a difference between our party and the party opposite on the matter of conviction. We are convinced we cannot continue to tolerate the unemployment levels we have had.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Lundrigan: The Minister of Finance in his budget last Monday night told me, at least, as one Canadian that he does not believe this situation needs curing. He has painted a black picture. I am amazed that a man of the integrity and intelligence of the hon. member for York South (Mr. Lewis), who leads the party to my left, would be willing to go along with a budget which he considers will not work.

As one who comes from one of the poorer regions of Canada, I say that unemployment and inflation problems, with the present approach, will be no better in the future than they are today. The hon. member for Verdun agrees with me. He has had the same attitude for a number of years. Since 1969, when we first heard of the inflation-employment trade-off where jobs are given away to cure inflation, people have asked what the alternative is. I heard the leader of the New Democratic Party say that if we gave them an alternative, they would support us. He said that if we could provide some way to control the problem, they would support us.

We have offered an approach. I need not reiterate what my colleague, the hon. member for Edmonton West (Mr. Lambert), the hon. member for Don Valley (Mr. Gillies) or the Leader of the Official Opposition (Mr. Stanfield) have said: we have said there must be more substantial cuts and more reduction in taxation to provide real expansion. We have said that the deficit of the Minister of Finance, which is a little more than half the deficit of last year, is not enough.

The minister quoted people from the Toronto Institute of Quantitative Analysis, Messrs. Jump and Wilson. They said that sales tax reduction is the best way to provide stimulus on the one hand, employment on the other hand, cool off inflation and provide the equity of taxation that would benefit the poor people in this country. This is what the experts have concluded, not in 1962 but in 1972 and 1973, in this decade. Therefore on that basis, for the benefit of my NDP colleagues, may I say we have said we do not want only a reduction of the tax applicable to the clothing of small children but would eliminate the entire taxation on clothing. That is one approach we have recommended. Sales of clothing in Canada in the past year amounted to $3 billion. We have gone further—I take issue with the Minister of Finance on this—and said that it is absolutely essential that the 11 per cent building tax be eliminated.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Lundrigan: Today, in response to a question from this side of the House, the minister indicated there is no need for this. He said he was completely satisfied that his budget of last Monday night would provide the necessary stimulus. We have gone further. We mention the building tax, not only because of the stimulus on its own but because of the very critical housing problem in this nation. We also believe a reduction in sales tax and building materials tax, because they are at the manufacturing level, will result in savings passed on to the consumer.

We have gone beyond this and said that in this country we as a party believe the most important part of the economic fibre is the small business community. We recommended in October, 1972, and have reiterated since, that there must be a program designed to provide incentive for the small businessman. We have talked about tax credits. We have talked about being able to invest and receive credit for one's investment on a tax basis or through elimination or lowering of what really is taxable income.

The result of this, for the benefit of my NDP colleagues, is that there would be a further billion dollar incentive in the Canadian economy. Perhaps the leader of the NDP might ask, "What's a billion?" Unlike my colleagues across the way, we say this type of expansion with another billion dollars in the economy would have a very beneficial effect. Given the fact that we have that kind of expansion, we have agreed that it would be of little avail to have that kind of expansionary policy on the one hand and on the other hand to have some kind of system of inflation that would eat away the real value to the consumer.

We are taking a stand which I believe is dramatic in Canadian history. We have said that given that type of expansionary approach on the one hand, we would be prepared to impose a 90-day freeze on prices and wages in this country, with one or two exceptions. It was indicated that by using the 90 days as a short-term approach, with consultation which we believe to be absolutely essential with the provinces, unions, consumer groups and other groups in Canada, we could come up with guidelines that would satisfy many of the question marks people have in their minds.

We realize that there are many question marks. I have heard my colleagues in the House and people in various groups talk about the many problems that are raised when prices and wages are frozen or controlled. With this in mind, we have recommended a 90-day freeze, with proper consultation for longer term planning. With this combination I can stand here tonight before members of the House, and I will stand anywhere in Canada, and say to my friends in the NDP and to the voters for the NDP—and gain votes with this kind of approach—that this will have a beneficial effect on the Canadian nation.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Lundrigan: I spoke earlier of the time in May of 1972 when we had the man from the east coming before us with his cosmetic kit. That is what we saw last Monday evening. He presented Canadians with a beautiful make-up job, with all the rouges, eyebrow-pencils and all the stuff that some ladies put on their faces—and perhaps some gentlemen too, for all I know. He painted this beautiful face; he did a good face-lifting job. This is what he gave us. We say that a face-lifting job is inadequate. We say that now, in 1973, after five years of this type of approach, we need a body building effort and that is what we have offered the Canadian people.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Lundrigan: That is what we have offered them in the program outlined by the Leader of the Opposition, the hon. member for Don Valley and the hon. member for Edmonton West. In conclusion, just in case there are any members to my left who did not understand what I have just said and what we have been saying in the last week and in the last four years, I should like to say something for the record. I can hardly believe that politics can get down to this level and that this is the approach of my friends to the left who have spoken the same language that we speak on this side of the House. Here we have the hon. member for Oshawa-Whitby (Mr. Broadbent). We know where he will be, depending on the way he votes tonight.

[Mr. Lundrigan.]

An hon. Member: He will be in Oshawa.

Mr. Lundrigan: It sounds as if he is getting homesick. I want to say, in conclusion, that tonight will be a real test of the position of individual members of the NDP. I predict that a good number of the members of that party—I do not know exactly how many—will realize the calling that was referred to again by my colleague, the hon. member for Provencher, and stand up for their principles. I predict that some members of that party will stand on their convictions rather than follow the lack of leadership given by the hon. member for York South.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Lundrigan: I want to read again the motion of the hon. member for Edmonton West and that of the Minister of Finance on which they will be voting. The motion reads:

> That this House approves in general the budgetary policy of the government.

The hon. member for Edmonton West moved an amendment that all the words after "That" be deleted and the following substituted therefor:

> while acknowledging certain beneficial provisions in the budget proposals, this House regrets that they do not contain measures that will substantially reduce continuing high unemployment, effectively contain the spiralling cost of living or provide any incentives to Canadians to increase their participation in Canadian business enterprise and development.

That motion should provide no difficulty for members who are interested in the future development of our nation to support the hon. member for Edmonton West.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Hon. Bryce Mackasey (Verdun): Mr. Speaker, I regret missing a few minutes—I hope it was only a few minutes—of the beginning of the address of the hon. member for Gander-Twillingate (Mr. Lundrigan) who is obviously one of the better debaters in the House of Commons. He showed very early in his remarks—at least when I was in the House—a real and sincere concern for the effects of unemployment. He spoke eloquently and with conviction about the dramatic and the traumatic effects which unemployment has on family life.

He pointed out something that most of us who remember the depression years know, namely, the degradation that the father or the chief breadwinner feels when he is out of work through no fault of his own. He spoke with great feeling about the effects of unemployment. He could have gone on to describe the 1930s as I did the other day, the soup kitchens, the bread lines and my community which the hon. member for Saint-Hyacinthe (Mr. Wagner) knows so well, where people burned their cupboard doors in the winter in order to prevent the pipes from freezing and to provide some heat.

Having said this, it is hard to reconcile this eloquence with his inability to drive home to his own party in caucus that the only thing standing between the type of existence which he describes so eloquently and the same thing happening today is unemployment insurance. How does he reconcile the fact that his party did its best during the election campaign to destroy the very act which prevented the return of the hungry thirties?

An hon. Member: That is nonsense.

Mr. Mackasey: I have never hidden my concern for unemployment. I have expressed support in the House, as did the former leader of the NDP, when the former minister of finance was here and a discussion took place on selected wage and price controls to endorse it as an alternative to a fiscal and monetary policy which drives 500,000 or 600,000 people out of work. We can no longer return to this type of policy in the future if we ever reduce unemployment to a decent level.

It is very hard to reconcile the position of a party which has now discovered the social implications of mass unemployment with their attitude during the election campaign when they were prepared to destroy the only plan that stood between degradation and at least a decent income while people were waiting for the economy to pick up.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Mackasey: The hon. member for Edmonton West (Mr. Lambert) has shown the people how callous he is and what little concern he has for the unemployed. At least the hon. member for Gander-Twillingate, the hon. member from Cape Breton and the hon. member from Newfoundland had the courage of their convictions when they voted for the unemployment insurance amendments, because they know what unemployment is and they know that above all else, the coal miner in Cape Breton and the fisherman in Newfoundland deserve a job; and if it is not there, through no fault of his own, he is entitled to a decent unemployment insurance plan that is not reduced to the level of welfare.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Mackasey: If we had listened to the advice of the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Stanfield) and raised the level of the unemployment insurance qualification to 20 weeks, we would have thrown hundreds or thousands of people in the Maritimes on the welfare rolls. And now the Tory party has suddenly discovered the social effects of unemployment! Only a few months ago, last October, they were prepared to disown the unemployed and, if possible, to rise to power on the backs of the unemployed.

Mr. Alexander: You are less than honest.

Mr. Mackasey: The hon. member for Hamilton West (Mr. Alexander) was the first to disown the very act which, until his speech on Bill C-124, was a monument to his own progressive thinking, to the same extent as it was to the former minister who introduced the bill in the first place. I will vote for the budget; and if there is not enough stimulus for the economy, then in a few months the Minister of Finance (Mr. Turner) can certainly provide more: he is a flexible individual. There is no reason why we should be stuck to one budget a year, as used to be the case. As a matter of fact, the trend now is toward introducing two or three budgets a year.

One of the hon. gentlemen opposite who made a fine speech a few days ago forgot to mention in this debate that the most effective means of reducing unemployment is an across the board reduction in sales tax, as indicated by the econometric model computer in the University of Toronto. Not coupled with personal income tax reductions, which the party opposite endorsed; nor did it include a reduction of the sales tax on building materials. There were three different, fundamental formulae fed into that model. The first was a reduction of sales tax, excluding a personal income tax reduction, the second was a reduction in the building materials tax alone and the third was a personal income tax reduction. The first, a general reduction in sales tax, proved to have the most stimulus on the manufacturing sector. But, in addition, we have reduced personal income tax because it was obvious, as a result of inflation and the growth of the wage rate pattern in the country, as indicated by the Minister of Finance yesterday, that in effect we were overtaxing people.

As a consequence we have reduced income tax and at the same time the Minister of Finance has reduced sales tax on certain commodities. As I say, if we need more stimulus for the economy in a matter of three, four or five months there will be nothing to prevent the Minister of Finance from further reducing sales tax on clothing and on other items in order to assist manufacturing. But it is very hard to reconcile the very emotional concern for the unemployed expressed by the hon. member for Gander-Twillingate tonight on behalf of his party with the callous, indiscriminate and vehement way in which that party tried to destroy the unemployment insurance scheme during the election campaign.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Mackasey: Hon. members opposite may holler, but I say to them that one of your own members tonight had the courage to tell you about unemployment. He had the courage to explain to you exactly the degradation of unemployment. He had the courage to tell you its effect on the family unit. He had the courage to remind you of the hungry thirties. And you don't want to be reminded because you know in your hearts that you voted the wrong way on unemployment insurance. You cannot turn the clock back on your action, and sooner or later when the next election comes around, in the Atlantic provinces you will have to answer for your attitude to the unemployed and the unemployment insurance scheme. You cannot have it both ways.

One hon. member who can have it both ways is the hon. gentleman from Gander-Twillingate, because he voted according to his conscience. He knew it would be embarrassing to stand and vote against his own party, but he did that the other day, as did another hon. member from Cape Breton and one from Newfoundland. They know that the unemployment insurance scheme means the difference between turning to welfare or possible starvation to the unemployed in their communities, and they at least showed their concern.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Boulanger): Order. It being 9.45 o'clock p.m., it is my duty, pursuant to section 7 of Standing Order 60, to interrupt these proceedings and put forthwith the question necessary to dispose of the amendment now before the House. The question is on the amendment. All those in favour of the amendment will please say yea.

Some hon. Members: Yea.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Boulanger): All those opposed will please say nay.

Some hon. Members: Nay.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Boulanger): In my opinion the nays have it.

And more than five members having risen:

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Boulanger): Call in the members.

The House divided on the amendment (Mr. Lambert, Edmonton West) which was negatived on the following division:

Mr. Speaker: I declare the amendment lost. The House will now adjourn until two o'clock tomorrow afternoon.

At 10.15 p.m. the House adjourned, without question put, pursuant to Standing Order.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Tuesday, February 27, 1973

The House met at 2 p.m.

ROUTINE PROCEEDINGS

FISHERIES

PROPOSED INQUIRY—REQUEST FOR UNANIMOUS CONSENT TO MOVE MOTION

Mr. Thomas S. Barnett (Comox-Alberni): Mr. Speaker, pursuant to Standing Order 43, and in light of the increasing backlog of crisis situations in the east coast, west coast and inland fisheries of Canada, which are being left unresolved by the Minister of Fisheries (Mr. Davis) and the government, I ask leave of the House, seconded by the hon. member for Coast Chilcotin (Mr. Olaussen), to move as a matter of urgent and pressing necessity the following motion:

That in the opinion of this House the government should establish immediately an independent commission to make a public investigation of the fishing industry of Canada and of the role of the federal fisheries service; and that by its terms of reference the commission be instructed first to examine the ban on commercial salmon fishing in New Brunswick and Newfoundland, its impact on the livelihood of the people involved, and whether continuance of the ban is justifiable or necessary.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Comox-Alberni proposes a motion under the terms of Standing Order 43. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. Speaker: There is not unanimity and the motion cannot be put.

PUBLIC WORKS

PER CAPITA EXPENDITURES ON PROVINCIAL BASIS—REQUEST FOR UNANIMOUS CONSENT TO MOVE MOTION

Mr. Stuart Leggatt (New Westminster): Mr. Speaker, I rise pursuant to Standing Order 43 to request the unanimous consent of the House on a matter of urgent and pressing necessity. Whereas the 1973-74 estimates of the Department of Public Works reveal that, despite the principle of equitable distribution as articulated by the present Minister of National Defence (Mr. Richardson) on behalf of the government, British Columbia will receive $1.56 per capita of these expenditures, and whereas the province of Ontario will receive $9 per capita excluding expenditures in the national capital, and in view of the high rate of unemployment in the province of British Columbia, I therefore move, seconded by the hon. member for Fraser Valley West (Mr. Rose):

That the question of inequity in the per capita distribution of public works expenditures be referred to the Standing Committee on National Resources and Public Works to throw light on the real criteria used in determining the 1973-74 expenditures.

Mr. Speaker: Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. Speaker: There is not unanimity and the motion cannot be put.

UNEMPLOYMENT INSURANCE

DECENTRALIZATION OF BENEFIT PAYMENT SYSTEM—REQUEST FOR UNANIMOUS CONSENT TO MOVE MOTION

Mr. René Matte (Champlain): Mr. Speaker, in view of the difficulties encountered by those in receipt of unemployment insurance benefits, particularly due to inadmissible delays in payments, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Rimouski (Mr. Allard):

That the Standing Committee on Labour, Manpower and Immigration recommend the decentralization of the benefit payment system.

Mr. Speaker: The House has heard the motion proposed by the hon. member for Champlain. Under the Standing Orders, that motion requires the unanimous consent of the House. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. Speaker: There is not unanimity and the motion cannot be put.

SPORTS

FINANCIAL ASSISTANCE TO TRAIN ATHLETES FOR 1976 OLYMPIC GAMES—REQUEST FOR UNANIMOUS CONSENT TO MOVE MOTION

Mr. Roland Godin (Portneuf): Mr. Speaker, pursuant to Standing Order 43, I ask for the unanimous consent of the House to move a motion of urgent and pressing necessity.

In view of the poor support given to our Canadian amateur athletes in their training and the mediocre performance of Canada in international competitions, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Abitibi (Mr. Laprise):

That this House create a special committee which will consider the possibility of direct financial assistance by the federal government to help amateur sport present qualified athletes at the Montreal Olympic Games in 1976, the said committee being asked to report within six months of its establishment.

Mr. Speaker: Hon. members have heard the motion of the hon. member for Portneuf. Under our rules, this motion requires unanimous consent. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Yes.

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. Speaker: As there is not unanimity, the motion cannot be put.

MAIN ESTIMATES, 1973-74

REFERENCE OF ITEMS TO STANDING COMMITTEES

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (President of the Privy Council): Mr.Speaker, pursuant to Standing Order 59 I move, seconded by the President of the Treasury Board (Mr. Drury):

That the estimates of the sums required for the service of Canada for the year ending March 31, 1974, be referred to the several standing committees of the House as follows:

I have circulated some copies of this motion which is very detailed. It would take a very long time to read it. I hope we can dispense with the reading of the votes.

Vote 1 relating to the Senate.

Vote 5 relating to the House of Commons.

Vote 10 relating to the Library of Parliament.

Mr. Baldwin: Mr. Speaker, I have spent two hours looking through the list and it would seem to be reasonably well in order. However, I should like to take a moment on a point of order. I realize this is not a debatable motion and I do not intend to debate it. I have a very serious suggestion to make to the government House leader and in fact to all hon. members. We have had one parliament in which we have had experience with this method of dealing with the estimates. I have reason to believe we are rapidly approaching the end of another parliament which will be the second experience. There is no doubt in the minds of all hon. members who have participated in committees that we have developed a committee jungle. I am not saying that disparagingly of any party or any hon. member, but it is a fact of life. We have discovered it. Your Honour knows as well as I do the complaints, requests, points of order and questions of privilege that have been raised in the House and have made it abundantly plain that this is the case. In addition, an increasingly large number of votes in the estimates are of a legislative nature but are not based on legislation, thereby preventing hon. members from having that opportunity for discussion they would normally have on the second reading, report and third reading stages of a bill.

For these reasons, while we do not intend to oppose this motion—we did toy with the idea—I urge the government House leader to give some consideration to the proposition which has been discussed on a number of occasions that several departments might well be dealt with by the House under conditions that would supply ample safeguards so that there can be a reasonable method of dealing with some of the departments that by their nature need to be discussed in the House as well as in committees.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, as the hon. member for Peace River (Mr. Baldwin) has pointed out, this motion is not debatable. However, I wonder if I could be permitted to ask the government House leader one question so that the point will be clear to all hon. members. Can the government House leader indicate whether there are any changes in this motion from the comparable motion of last session? In other words, are the estimates of any department or agency being referred to a different committee than was the case last year?

Mr. MacEachen: Mr. Speaker, as I went through the votes I believe there was one vote which had been shifted from a former standing committee to reflect new ministerial responsibilities. It is not a matter of principle with me, and I will advise my hon. friend in detail about it. If the House wishes to have anything altered there would be no objection.

If I may, Your Honour, I should like to comment briefly on the point of order raised by the hon. member for Peace River. The supply Standing Orders under which we are working may be a jungle and the committee system may be a jungle, but it was a jungle into which we voluntarily entered as a House of Commons. There were certain controversial aspects of the rules changes but the House as a whole did accept the new supply procedures and the new committee structure with, I believe, a sincere hope that they would improve the situation.

Having said that, Mr. Speaker, I am quite happy to co-operate with hon. members to bring estimates before the House of Commons provided there are certain safeguards. It seems to me that was a point of view I held when the procedure committee examined the matter of estimates, but wiser heads prevailed, including that of my hon. friend from Peace River, and that advice was not followed. However, I am glad to see that he has reached the same destination after four or five years.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The Chair recognizes the hon. member for Lotbinière on the point of order.

[Translation]

Mr. Fortin: Mr. Speaker, I will not repeat what the hon. member for Peace River (Mr. Baldwin) and the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles) have said, since I share their fears and opinions on this matter.

I could speak at length about the committee system and about the way in which the government uses committees for referring budget estimates; I want it to know that this party does not approve of this procedure. Even though there were special circumstances that led to this budget's being presented earlier than expected, the fact remains, Mr. Speaker, that the government acts unilaterally when it refers these estimates to committee in this way, and thus prevents those of some departments from being studied by the committees.

[English]

Mr. Nielsen: Mr. Speaker, I rise on the point of order but my remarks are in a slightly different direction. The point concerns the government House leader and it should also concern the Minister of Justice (Mr. Lang). My point of order concerns the requirements of Standing Order 82 (1) having to do with reports and returns which it is mandatory that public officers and private corporations make to the House of Commons. In order to have any intelligent discussion of the estimates, either here or in committee, it seems to me that the law should be complied with and the reports required to be tabled in the House tabled on time.

The Department of Consumer and Corporate Affairs tabled its report on January 4 last year for the year ended March 31, 1971. The Department of Energy, Mines and Resources tabled its report on January 30 last year for the year ended March 31, 1971. The Department of External Affairs tabled its report on January 4 of this year for the year ended December 31, 1971. The Department of National Health and Welfare tabled its report on January 4 of this year for the year ended March 31, 1971. The Department of Public Works tabled its report on January 4 of this year for the year ended March 31, 1971. We can see that all of these reports for these departments are at least a year old and should have been tabled a year ago. We cannot have intelligent discussion of estimates under these conditions.

The report on the fitness and amateur sport program was tabled on January 4, 1973, for the year ended March 31, 1971. The report on the Canada Assistance Plan was tabled on January 4 of this year for the year ended March 31, 1971. The report on the Canada Pension Plan was tabled on April 25, 1972 for the year ended March 31, 1971. The report on old age assistance was tabled on June 14, 1972 for the year ended March 31, 1971. The report on the Unemployment Insurance Act was tabled on January 4 of this year for the year ended March 31, 1971.

Here, Sir, my point of order resolves itself into a question of privilege concerning documents which, contrary to the legal requirements, have been tabled late. The Department of Agriculture is to table its report within the first 21 days after a session of parliament commences. It was tabled on February 7, 1973. The Department of Communications is supposed to table its report on or before January 31 following the end of the fiscal year, or within the first five days of the next session. It was tabled on February 12, 1973. The Department of the Environment did the same, its report being tabled on February 21, 1973. The Department of Regional Economic Expansion also did the same; its report was tabled on February 9, 1973. The Department of the Secretary of State was supposed to table its report within the first ten days of the next session; it was tabled on January 4, 1973, for the fiscal year ended March 31, 1971, and on February 16, 1973, for the fiscal year ended March 31, 1972. This, of course, only treats of departmental reports.

The other day the Minister of State for Urban Affairs (Mr. Basford) had something to say about his capital budget. According to my reading of the rules, under Standing Order 82(1) the budget of Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation should have been tabled at the end of the year, and that has gone by.

We cannot function properly and conduct the business of the House or of the standing committees efficiently unless the government complies with the law and tables these reports as required.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, I wonder if I may rephrase the question I asked a few minutes ago, in the hope that I may get the answer I feel the House is entitled to have at this time. Is it a fact that the estimates of the Canadian Radio-Television Commission are being referred this time to the Standing Committee on Transport and Communications rather than to the Standing Committee on Broadcasting, Films and Assistance to the Arts, but that otherwise all of the estimates are being referred to the same committees to which they were referred last session?

Mr. MacEachen: I believe that is the particular vote I had in mind, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): That is what I wanted you to say the first time.

Mr. Baldwin: What's the matter? Is your telephone line to him broken down?

Motion agreed to.

COMBINES INVESTIGATION ACT

AMENDMENT TO ENSURE RETURN OF OPERATION OF SERVICE STATIONS TO INDIVIDUAL PROPRIETORS

Mr. Max Saltsman (Waterloo) moved for leave to introduce Bill C-153, to regulate trade and commerce.

Some hon. Members: Explain.

Mr. Saltsman: Mr. Speaker, the purpose of this bill is to put into effect certain conclusions arrived at by a number of commissions that have examined the operations and structure of the oil industry. The aim is to ensure the return of the operation of service stations to the individual proprietors and to permit the further expansion of small business.

Motion agreed to, bill read the first time and ordered to be printed.

ORAL QUESTION PERIOD

FINANCE

WHOLESALE PRICE INDEX INCREASE—ACTION TO AVERT RETAIL PRICE INCREASES—SUGGESTED CONFERENCE WITH PROVINCES

Mr. Allan Lawrence (Northumberland-Durham): Mr. Speaker, one of our main concerns today is the increasing wholesale prices index. My question is therefore directed to the Minister of Finance. In light of the fact that the government's own figures show that wholesale prices rose by a full 2.5 per cent last month, an increase, I may say, Sir, of 12.3 per cent over January, 1972—

Some hon. Members: Question!

Mr. Lawrence: My question to the minister is this: in light of the fact that this index has been rising at an accelerating annual rate since last August—

Some hon. Members: Question!

Mr. Lawrence: —would the Minister of Finance advise the House what action the government is now going to take to avert the accelerating retail price increases that will ultimately follow these wholesale price increases?

Hon. John N. Turner (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, in the budget last week we took steps to increase the disposable income of all Canadians, particularly lower and middle income Canadians, in order to compensate them for the rise in cost of living, particularly food prices, and we lowered the sales tax and tariff on several food and near food items in order to increase the average Canadian budget to meet this situation.

Mr. Lawrence: If that is the only action the Minister of Finance intends to take, Mr. Speaker, I wonder if I could pose a question to the second in command, the Prime Minister. Is he prepared to hold emergency conferences—this is an emergency we are facing right now—with the provinces at this time to see if common targets and common policies for stabilizing prices can be established?

Mr. Hees: No fuddle-duddle, now.

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): No, Mr. Speaker.

FOOD PRICES—GOVERNMENT DEFINITION OF ACCEPTABLE INCREASE—CONTINGENCY PLAN

Mr. James A. McGrath (St. John's East): I have a supplementary for the Minister of Finance, Mr. Speaker. In response to the growing inflationary expectation in the economy, may I ask whether the minister is prepared to advise the House and the country that he has now arrived at a definition of reasonable price increases for 1973, and is he prepared to state that he is now going to act to keep prices within such a level?

Hon. John N. Turner (Minister of Finance): I think I have already dealt with that question in answer to the same hon. member, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. McGrath: May I ask the minister—perhaps he did not understand my question—if he is prepared to tell the House and the country at what level the government expects an emergency to arise in regard to price increases? In other words, at what level of price increases will the government's so-called contingency plan be put into effect?

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): Mr. Speaker, I said before that present circumstances do not warrant the imposition of any sort of price and wage controls, particularly as it relates to food. That could not be achieved unless there was a strong public consensus to that effect. I do not find that consensus with labour, with the farmers or with other significant groups, including provincial governments.

TARIFF AND SALES TAX REDUCTIONS—MONITORING SYSTEM TO ENSURE CONSUMERS GET BENEFIT

Mr. Ron Atkey (St. Paul's): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary for the Minister of Finance. In light of the declared intention of the tariff and sales tax reductions to reduce prices in certain areas, can the minister tell the House whether machinery has been set up to ensure that these reductions are passed on to the consumer?

Hon. John N. Turner (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, we are setting up a monitoring system. I am satisfied that the initial reaction to the sales tax reductions has been good. Many of the major retailers across the country have taken 15 per cent to 10 per cent off children's clothing and food and near food commodities. I think it has been very encouraging to this stage.

PRICE INCREASES—IMPACT OF MONOPOLY POWER ON ECONOMY

Mr. Ron Atkey (St. Paul's): I have a supplementary question for the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs. What steps has the minister taken or is he prepared to take to investigate the impact of monopoly power on the economy as a contributing factor in the shocking price increases?

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

An hon. Member: A real socialist.

Hon. Herb Gray (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I will continue to see that the officials of the combines branch of my department carry out the statutory duties imposed upon them by parliament.

Oral Questions

PRICE INCREASES—POSSIBILITY OF ESTABLISHMENT OF PRICES REVIEW BOARD

Mr. Lorne Nystrom (Yorkton-Melville): Mr. Speaker, my supplementary is directed to the Minister of Finance. In view of the price increases referred to earlier as well as increases in areas such as farm machinery, can the minister state whether the government or his department is considering the institution of a prices review board to monitor and act on unjustified increases in prices?

Hon. John N. Turner (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I have already dealt with that situation very fully on budget night.

• (1430)

REQUEST FOR GRANTS TO AVOID INCREASE IN PRICE OF MILK PRODUCTS

Mr. Gérard Laprise (Abitibi): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary for the hon. Minister of Finance.

In view of the reduction of sales tax on soft drinks announced in the recent budget, would the minister consider granting subsidies to the producers to prevent a rise in the prices of dairy products?

Hon. John N. Turner (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, that comes under my colleague's jurisdiction. I will discuss it with him in any case.

[English]

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Three or four members are seeking supplementaries on this subject. Perhaps the Chair might be allowed to recognize the hon. member for Edmonton Centre on a last supplementary for the moment, and then we will try to conclude the first round of questioning. If hon. members think we should spend more time on this subject, I will return to hon. members who are seeking to ask supplementaries.

CONSUMER AFFAIRS

PRICE OF DIETARY FOODS—REQUEST FOR INVESTIGATION

Mr. Steven E. Paproski (Edmonton Centre): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed either to the Minister of Finance or to the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs. I would ask those ministers to please have their officials check into the price of dietary and low calorie foods—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Paproski: —so that unfortunates who are diabetic and overweight will not be discriminated against, as the price of these foods has risen between 50 and 80 per cent?

Hon. Herb Gray (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I will be happy to consult with my colleague, the Minister of Finance, on this. It is my impression that the reductions he announced with respect to sales tax and customs duties will apply to those categories of foods as well as to those more specifically referred to in the budget.

[Mr. Gray.]

Mr. Paproski: Would the minister make a statement on motions as soon as he has gathered all the information? This is an unfortunate situation in that sugar is taken out of these foods but the prices still keep going up.

TRADE

CANADA-UNITED STATES—SUGGESTED RESUMPTION OF NEGOTIATIONS IN LIGHT OF STATEMENT BY U.S. OFFICIAL ON CANADIAN ASSISTANCE TO EXPORT INDUSTRIES

Mr. David Lewis (York South): Mr. Speaker, I am afraid I am still chortling about the last question. I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce arising out of a report I have received that the executive director of the President's Council on International Economic Policy, giving evidence before a Senate committee this morning, informed the committee that the President of the United States intends to use every effort to discourage countries like Canada from subsidizing, as he called it, export industries such as Michelin. I would ask the minister whether negotiations have now been resumed between the two countries, since such a policy declaration would affect not only the grants given to Michelin but a good many other policies and programs of the Canadian government?

Hon. Alastair Gillespie (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): Mr. Speaker, on previous occasions I have told the House of our concern with respect to the decision on Michelin and the reasons why we think the United States government should review that decision. All this was put before the House in a note tabled on January 19. The other point I would make, in answer to the hon. member, is simply that in that note we asked for formal consultations with the United States under article 22-1 of GATT.

Mr. Lewis: I knew that, of course, and I would therefore like to ask the minister whether there has been any reply from the administration in Washington to the note that has been sent?

Mr. Gillespie: Mr. Speaker, we are still awaiting that reply and hope to receive it shortly so that we can enter into the formal consultations we have requested.

Mr. Lewis: In view of the extreme importance of this development to Canada and its future and the necessity to try to exert some influence before a decision is made which may then become irreversible, is the government taking steps to expedite the negotiations with Washington and to see to it that answers are given not in due course but with some expedition?

Mr. Gillespie: Mr. Speaker, of course we have followed up the formal note with further representations at the official level, and we are awaiting the reply, as I told the hon. member. I do not want to create the impression that we are likely to be able immediately to effect a reversal, because the settlement of this issue may well have to go to the United States courts and that may well be a lengthy process.

Mr. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa-Whitby): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a supplementary question to the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce. As testimony in Washington this morning by a key official of the senior advisory body to the President constituted in effect a repudiation of the Canadian government's position, whether or not the Americans have yet replied formally to the Canadian note, will the minister undertake now to make a direct appeal to GATT on the U.S. decision?

Mr. Gillespie: Mr. Speaker, under GATT the rules require that there first be formal consultations between the two parties to the dispute, and then and only after that can there be a registration under the multilateral provisions.

Hon. Paul Hellyer (Trinity): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a supplementary question to the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce. Does the minister not feel, in the circumstances, that it is absolutely essential to recommence negotiations at the ministerial level at once in order to reach some accord which would allow Canadian businessmen, provinces and other interested parties to plan effectively?

Mr. Gillespie: Mr. Speaker, I do not think it is essential that the Secretary of the Treasury and I meet immediately on this point. I think the Canadian government's position has been put very clearly in more than one way and at more than one time. I would hope that this message has got through. I look forward, let me assure the House, to meeting with the Secretary of the Treasury in the near future.

Mr. Hellyer: In view of Mr. Flanigan's further suggestion that Mr. Nixon should be given strong powers to raise or lower tariffs as bargaining chips in trade negotiations, does the minister still feel that the Canadian government played Canada's chips well in making unilateral reductions in tariffs in the budget of last week?

C.I.P. PLANT, TEMISCAMING—APPLICATION OF TEMBEC TO OPERATE MILL—POSSIBLE ECOLOGICAL EFFECTS

Mr. Réal Caouette (Témiscamingue): Mr. Speaker, I thank my hon. colleagues for their welcome: they were as anxious to see me again as I was to see them. As a French Canadian, I suffered from bilingualism for a few weeks; I had the English flu.

In any event, Mr. Speaker, London is not bothering me now.

I should like to put a question to the Minister of Regional Economic Expansion.

Can he tell the House about the study undertaken by his department into the request for a subsidy made by those in charge of TEMBEC with a view to reopening the pulp and paper mill at Temiscaming? Can he tell us when he will be in a position to advise us of the decision that will be made in this regard?

[English]

Hon. Donald C. Jamieson (Minister of Regional Economic Expansion): Mr. Speaker, I will be pleased, subsequent to the House sitting, to confer with the hon. member in detail on the state of the negotiations. If I may answer as briefly as I know Your Honour will permit, the situation is that there have been a number of meetings, that we are prepared in this particular case to interpret the mandate of the department as broadly as possible in order to accommodate this situation, that the difficulty at the moment is with pollution standards and that we are consulting with the Department of the Environment and with the promoters of the project as well as with the union in an effort to resolve the pollution question. If that question can be resolved with reasonable satisfaction, then I am hopeful the project may be able to go ahead.

[Translation]

Mr. Caouette (Témiscamingue): Mr. Speaker, has the minister met recently the TEMBEC authorities precisely in connection with pollution?

[English]

Mr. Jamieson: Mr. Speaker, I personally have not met with them since about three weeks ago, but officials have been meeting virtually on a daily basis. I believe there was a meeting yesterday and I had a report this morning. I am looking forward to receiving further information within the next two or three days.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

VIET NAM—INQUIRY RESPECTING EXTENSION OF SERVICE OF CANADIAN ELEMENT IN SUPERVISION COMMISSION

Mr. Claude Wagner (Saint-Hyacinthe): Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask a question of the government leader.

In the light of the remarks made by the Secretary of State for External Affairs, could the Prime Minister inform the House if in fact a decision has been taken to extend from 60 to 90 days our initial commitment in Viet Nam and, if so, when was such a decision taken?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, the position of the Secretary of State for External Affairs is that should we have to withdraw at the end of the 60 days, and should it be agreeable to other countries that we extend our stay for 30 more days to allow them time to find a substitute, we would give consideration to this 30-day extension.

[English]

VIET NAM—PROTECTION OF CANADIAN NEWSPAPER REPORTERS

Mr. Claude Wagner (Saint-Hyacinthe): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a supplementary question to the Prime Minister. In view of the brief detention of Canadian Press photographer, Peter Bregg, yesterday, could the Prime Minister undertake to assure maximum protection for Canadian reporters on duty in Viet Nam?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I am sure our officials and personnel there are doing their best to protect every member of the press, particularly my friend, Pierre Bregg.

VIET NAM—CANADIAN ELEMENT IN SUPERVISORY COMMISSION—INQUIRY AS TO RECOMMENDATIONS FOR WITHDRAWAL

Mr. Claude Wagner (Saint-Hyacinthe): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a supplementary question to the Minister of National Defence. In view of the decision of Red Cross officials to return home almost immediately as a result of a lack of co-operation on the part of the authorities in Viet Nam, can the minister inform the House whether he has received similar recommendations from Canadian officers in the field and, if so, what action does he intend to pursue in this matter?

Hon. James Richardson (Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, we have received no such recommendations from our commander.

INDOCHINA—METHOD OF EXTENDING AID FOR RECONSTRUCTION AND REHABILITATION

Mr. R. Gordon L. Fairweather (Fundy-Royal): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a supplementary question to the Prime Minister. What success has the government had in getting agreement from other countries for the principle that aid for reconstruction and rehabilitation in Indochina be multilateral, through the specialized agencies of the United Nations, rather than bilateral?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I am afraid I cannot help the hon. member on this, but I will ask the Secretary of State for External Affairs to consider the question.

VIET NAM—INQUIRY RESPECTING LIST OF CANADIAN PRISONERS OF WAR

Mr. Donald W. Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich): I should like to put a question to the Prime Minister, Mr. Speaker.

My question deals with Viet Nam and particularly Canadian prisoners who are held there.

The protocol on the freeing of prisoners stipulates that lists of prisoners were to be exchanged on the very day of the signature of the agreement.

Is the list of Canadian prisoners in the hands of Canadian authorities?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): I am going to inquire, Mr. Speaker.

FAMILY ALLOWANCES—PRESERVATION OF UNIVERSALITY

Mr. Reg Stackhouse (Scarborough East): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of National Health and Welfare. It is with regard to the proposed bill on family allowances which the minister referred to last week. In light of the fact that universality has been a longstanding feature of the family allowance system, is the minister prepared to indicate to the House and the Canadian public what consideration is being given to preserving universality in the future?

[Translation]

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, we are reviewing all aspects of this matter now and I regret not being able to say right now what specific option I shall recommend to my colleagues and to the House.

HARBOURS

LADNER, B.C.—DATE OF EXPANSION WORK

Mr. John Reynolds (Burnaby-Richmond-Delta): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Public Works. In an answer he gave last week to a question I had on the order paper with regard to the lack of expansion of Ladner harbour, the minister said that expansion is still in the discussion stage. Because of the urgency of the problem and because of the fact over 5,000 people in that area have signed a petition, can the minister give us a date when he expects the discussions will be completed and the harbour constructed?

Hon. Jean-Eudes Dubé (Minister of Public Works): Mr. Speaker, I cannot give a definite date but I will be very happy to try to expedite the matter as much as I can under the circumstances.

Mr. Reynolds: Can the minister tell us whether this will happen in 1973?

Mr. Dubé: Mr. Speaker, we always try to do the impossible but we cannot promise it.

CANADIAN NATIONAL RAILWAYS

ALLEGED SLOWDOWN BY VANCOUVER YARD CREWS—EFFECT ON GRAIN MOVEMENT

Mr. Bill Knight (Assiniboia): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Transport. In his capacity as the minister in charge of reporting for the Crown corporation, Canadian National Railways, is the minister aware of an alleged work slowdown of CNR yard crews in Vancouver possibly causing a slowdown of the movement of prairie grain through that port? Can he inform the House on that situation?

Hon. Jean Marchand (Minister of Transport): Yes, Mr. Speaker, I am very well aware of that situation. We are investigating it right now. I hope to be able to report to the House shortly.

ALLEGED SLOWDOWN BY VANCOUVER YARD CREWS—REASON FOR LOWER PRODUCTIVITY

Mr. Mark Rose (Fraser Valley West): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question for the Minister of Transport. Has the minister considered investigating whether or not any lowered productivity at the rail terminals in Vancouver is due not to a deliberate slowdown by the men but because of an arbitrary decision by Canadian National to cut yard crews from three to two men despite the fact that today two men are asked to handle twice the number of cars formerly assigned to a three-man crew?

Hon. Jean Marchand (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, this aspect is also being investigated and I hope to have a report on this also.

[Later:]

Mr. Rose: Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question for the Minister of Transport. The minister kindly agreed to investigate the productivity aspect of two-man crews in non-automated yards. Will he also consider investigating the safety aspects of handling large trains by men under considerable pressure to produce while 75 per cent of them have no job protection in these times of high unemployment?

[Later:]

Mr. Rose: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I have no desire to take up the time of the House, but I believe that my supplementary question to the Minister of Transport was not heard by him. Can the minister possibly give me a reply to the third question about which I gave him notice earlier?

Mr. Marchand (Langelier): Mr. Speaker, the hon. member might receive a better answer if he would direct that question to the Minister of Labour who has a report that I do not have.

BUS PASSENGER FARE INCREASE, NEWFOUNDLAND—REQUEST FOR MAINTENANCE OF OLD RATES UNTIL COURT CASE DECIDED

Mr. Walter C. Carter (St. John's West): Mr. Speaker, my question is to the Minister of Transport. I have given him notice of it. The question concerns the recent increase in fares by Canadian National Railways in Newfoundland with regard to their bus passenger service. In view of the fact that their application to the Newfoundland government's public utilities commission was rejected and the fact that the case is still pending before the Newfoundland Supreme Court, will the minister undertake to instruct Canadian National to revert to their old fare structure pending the outcome of the Supreme Court decision?

Hon. Jean Marchand (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, if the facts as revealed are true, I will certainly ask Canadian National to revert to the former fare structure.

If so, what action has he taken or does he intend to take in order that his department's investment of taxpayer money be turned into profits?

[English]

Hon. Donald C. Jamieson (Minister of Regional Economic Expansion): Mr. Speaker, it is not possible within the rules of the question period to answer that question in detail. I can only tell the hon. member that the matter is being investigated and I hope to have a report for him and other interested parties shortly.

FINANCE

PRICE INCREASES—REQUEST FOR RECONSIDERATION OF IMPOSITION OF CONTROLS IN LIGHT OF POLL RESULTS

Hon. George Hees (Prince Edward-Hastings): Mr. Speaker, I wish to return to the first question regarding the rise in the cost of living and direct a further question to the Minister of Finance. In view of the fact recent polls have shown that the overwhelming majority of the people of Canada want something done to control rising prices, will the minister reconsider this matter in view of this overwhelming desire of the people that something be done?

Hon. John N. Turner (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I will have to check those polls again with the hon. member.

Mr. Hees: As the Minister of Finance is unable or unwilling to answer the question and as the second in command, the Prime Minister, is unable and unwilling—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

Mr. Hees: —may I direct this question to the third in command—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

Mr. Hees: —the hon. member for York South.

Mr. Speaker: Will the hon. member resume his seat.

Oral Questions

AIRPORTS

VANCOUVER INTERNATIONAL—PROPOSED NEW RUNWAY—REQUEST FOR AMENDMENT OF EXPROPRIATION ACT TO ENSURE APPLICATION OF RULES OF NATURAL JUSTICE

Mr. John A. Fraser (Vancouver South): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Justice. In view of the fact the Federal Court on February 21, 1973, ruled that the hearing officer hearing the complaints of objectors to the proposed runway at Vancouver airport was not bound to apply the rules of natural justice, and in view of the fact that when the Expropriation Act was before the Standing Committee on Justice and Legal Affairs the then minister of justice stated "we hope that the rules of natural justice would be followed", can the minister advise the House whether he is prepared to introduce immediately an amendment to the act to ensure that the Expropriation Act in fact reflects the intention of parliament so that objectors are not denied the protection of the rules of natural justice?

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister of Justice): Mr. Speaker, there is a difference between a technical challenge to the rules which may not be relevant and applying the rules in spirit. I will check the proceedings in parliament to see whether we in fact find that situation to be fully in place today and consider the hon. member's representation.

Mr. Fraser: I thank the minister for saying that he will look into the matter, but in view of what is now obviously a defect in the act would he assure the House that as Minister of Justice he will consult his cabinet colleagues to the end that the present expropriation at Vancouver airport will be stopped until these objectors have had a chance to be heard in a form that properly reflects the intention of parliament and the rules of natural justice?

Mr. Speaker: I am sure that the hon. member appreciates that a question asked in those terms is hypothetical.

WELFARE

ACTION TO ASSIST RECIPIENTS IN LIGHT OF RISING FOOD PRICES

Mr. Heward Grafftey (Brome-Missisquoi): Mr. Speaker, while the Minister of Finance has talked about tax relief for people on low incomes in face of rising food prices, what action does the government intend to take to come to the aid of welfare recipients who are not on the tax rolls and whose benefits are now being eaten up by rising food prices?

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Peel South.

[Translation]

Mr. Grafftey: Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask a question of the hon. Minister of National Health and Welfare. Perhaps he will answer the question I was just asking.

[Mr. Speaker.]

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of National Health and Welfare): I will answer with pleasure, Mr. Speaker.

As the hon. member surely knows, the Canada Public Assistance Act provides that the federal government will pay 50 per cent of all assistance to the poor. Therefore, it is up to the provinces to decide on the amounts to be paid to those people.

[English]

Mr. Grafftey: Mr. Speaker, may I pose a further supplementary question to the Prime Minister. For that reason, would the Prime Minister convene an emergency conference with the provinces, as was asked of him today?

AIR TRANSPORT

CHARTER FLIGHTS—DISPARITY IN RATES BETWEEN CANADIAN AND BRITISH CARRIERS

Mr. Don Blenkarn (Peel South): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Transport. On February 22 last as reported at page 1549 of Hansard, when replying to a question by the hon. member for Scarborough West concerning the difference between the cost of charter flights from the United Kingdom to Canada and flights from Canada to the United Kingdom the minister said:

I think it is easy for the Canadian public to understand that it costs less to charter a plane in England, since labour itself costs less—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I think hon. members ought to realize that it is not in order to preface a question by making reference to statements. I think more questions might be included in the question period if questions did not contain these lengthy statements that seem to precede most questions.

Mr. Blenkarn: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Does the minister understand that the same planes carry the same passengers, and will he inquire as to the reason for the different rates charges by the same airlines with the same crews using the same equipment when carrying U.K. passengers from London to Toronto and when carrying Toronto passengers to the United Kingdom? The difference is between $105 and $180 roughly.

Mr. Speaker: Perhaps the minister might be allowed to reply to that part of the hon. gentleman's statement which was a question.

[Translation]

Hon. Jean Marchand (Minister of Transport): The only problem, Mr. Speaker, is that this is a very difficult question to answer briefly. I am aware that there is considerable confusion at the moment over the new regulations on advance booking charters, and I should like to make the matter quite clear. All I meant to say was that companies that own planes leaving, say, London for Toronto and later returning to London may, even if they are Canadian companies, charge lower prices than a company whose planes leave Montreal for London and come back to Montreal. If the hon. member wishes to know all the reasons, I can only say that it is a matter of costing.

[English]

Mr. Blenkarn: Mr. Speaker, what I really want to know from the minister is whether he will inquire why it is that foreign corporations can fly Canadian passengers at a more expensive rate than they can fly foreign passengers, apart from labour costs and aircraft maintenance costs?

[Translation]

Mr. Marchand (Langelier): As you know, Mr. Speaker, England has set up a system that is comparable to ours, and charter planes are subject to regulations that apply in England.

Our regulations are different from the English ones; here, mileage rates are decided by the Canadian Transport Commission, while the cost to the passenger is decided by those who charter the planes. But the economic situation in England is not the same as ours, which is why the prices are not the same.

[English]

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. My impression is that this would be a very good debate for the proceedings at ten o'clock. The hon. member for Vegreville may ask a supplementary question and we will then try another subject which is perhaps less complicated.

ADVANCE BOOKING CHARTER REGULATIONS—ACTION TO OVERCOME DIFFICULTIES

Mr. Don Mazankowski (Vegreville): Mr. Speaker, may I ask the Minister of Transport whether he has had any discussions with the Air Transport Committee regarding the confusion surrounding the advance booking charter regulations? In particular, has he had any discussions with a view to overcoming the difficulties of many ethnic charter groups in handling charter flights, particularly to eastern Europe?

Hon. Jean Marchand (Minister of Transport): Yes, Mr. Speaker, I have had a discussion with the president of the commission and he is aware that there is a certain confusion and that we will probably have to establish some kind of transitional period in order to pass from one system to the other.

Mr. Mazankowski: Would the minister inform the House when we might expect a statement as to the changes or transitional measures that will be adopted in order to overcome this confusion and get charter flights back into the air?

Mr. Marchand (Langelier): Mr. Speaker, I will get in touch immediately with the president of the commission and report to the House. He is the one who will make the decision.

TRANSPORT

RECOMMENDED RATIONALIZATION OF CANADIAN NATIONAL AND BRITISH COLUMBIA RAILWAY LINES IN NORTHERN SECTION OF PROVINCE—GOVERNMENT APPROVAL

Mr. Frank Howard (Skeena): Mr. Speaker, I too would like to direct a question to the Minister of Transport. Is the minister aware of a report by a consulting firm in British Columbia, Reid and Associates, which recommends the rationalization of the Canadian National railway line and the British Columbia Railway in northern British Columbia, with specific mention of a redirection of the route contemplated by the B.C. Railway? If so, has the government or the minister given any endorsement or approval of the contents of this report?

Hon. Jean Marchand (Minister of Transport): Yes, Mr. Speaker, I am aware of this report which has been studied by the railways, the government of B.C. and my own department. No conclusion has yet been reached and we have made no commitment at all. We are still discussing both reports, the report made to the department and the report made by Reid and Associates.

Mr. Howard: Is the minister aware that a statement has been attributed to him to the effect that the minister or the government have committed themselves to sharing the cost up to $10 million of redirecting the B.C. Railway into northern British Columbia?

Mr. Marchand (Langelier): No, Mr. Speaker, I was not aware of this, but I am sure I never made such a commitment.

URBAN AFFAIRS

PROPOSED SITE FOR METRO TORONTO GARBAGE DUMPS—REQUEST FOR FURTHER STUDIES—ACTION TO DELAY APPROVAL

Mr. Norman A. Cafik (Ontario): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Transport. Is it the intention of his department to conduct further studies on whether a metro-Toronto garbage dump should be allowed to be located in the vicinity of the proposed Pickering Airport in view of the safety factors involved?

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

[Mr. Forrestall.]

Hon. Jean Marchand (Minister of Transport): You have the answer, Mr. Speaker. Of course, we have followed this event very closely because of its importance to those people who are going to travel from Pickering. A check was made, and I think the Department of the Environment was also involved. Because of the importance of the matter, you can be sure I am ready to have it doublechecked.

Mr. Cafik: In view of the minister's intention to make a doublecheck into this very important question, I wonder whether the department will take steps to prohibit this location or to at least suggest a delay in the approval of that site, as a decision is expected to be taken on Friday of this week?

Mr. Marchand (Langelier): Mr. Speaker, if it is proven, demonstrated or indicated that there might be a danger there is no doubt that we are going to prevent the dump being located there.

Mr. Cafik: I have another supplementary question.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

An hon. Member: Parliamentary secretaries should be seen and not heard.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The Chair will allow a supplementary question, and then recognize the hon. member for Northumberland-Durham.

Mr. Cafik: Mr. Speaker, as this is a very important question affecting the people of Pickering and, indeed, the people of all Canada—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Cafik: —would the minister make representations to the Ontario Municipal Board asking it to delay the decision approving the site for garbage purposes until the inquiry has been completed?

An hon. Member: They should put you on the garbage dump.

Mr. Marchand (Langelier): Mr. Speaker, if we receive a recommendation to that effect from the Department of the Environment we will certainly ask for such a delay.

Mr. Hees: A point of order, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Speaker: I apologize to the hon. member for Northumberland-Durham. He will be recognized in a moment, but I understand the hon. member for Prince Edward-Hastings is rising on a point of order.

Mr. Hees: Yes, Mr. Speaker. Following yesterday's discussions with regard to speeding up the work of the House, it is obvious the business would be greatly accelerated if members on the government side and members of the NDP would raise these questions at their joint caucus meetings which are held every week.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Speaker: I will recognize the hon. member for Malpeque, but we are running short of time.

Mr. MacLean: Mr. Speaker, I rise on the same point of order. I was only going to suggest that it seems to me someone is trying to incinerate somebody.

Mr. Allan Lawrence (Northumberland-Durham): Mr. Speaker, my supplementary question is directed to the Minister of the Environment because the application under discussion has to be made to the Ontario Environment Board, not the Ontario Municipal Board. For a change, will the federal government intervene in this matter and make specific recommendations through the minister?

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The parliamentary secretary is rising on a point of order.

Mr. Cafik: Mr. Speaker, I just want to protect my own position by pointing out that when I informed the House that a decision had to be made by the Ontario Municipal Board this is, indeed, the fact. It has to make the decision whether rezoning will be allowed in Pickering Township to accommodate the location of a garbage dump in that area.

Some hon. Members: Sit down.

An hon. Member: That is not a point of order.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I suggest that is hardly a point of order.

An hon. Member: Those four votes are disappearing rapidly.

Mr. Speaker: The Chair will again recognize the hon. member for Northumberland-Durham on his supplementary question and then we will have to call orders of the day.

Mr. Lawrence: Mr. Speaker, may I direct my question—

An hon. Member: You just lost your four votes.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Would hon. members resume their seats. I will recognize the hon. member for Northumberland-Durham on a supplementary question and, because some time was taken up by a point of order, two or three further questions might be allowed to make up for the time we lost in the last three or four minutes.

Mr. Lawrence: Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct my question to the Minister of the Environment. Is the government of Canada going to involve itself by making representations in respect of this important matter? A simple yes or no answer will be sufficient.

Hon. Jack Davis (Minister of the Environment): Mr. Speaker, we are having a report prepared on wildfowl problems in that area. It will be available to all interested parties.

DATE OF PROCEEDING WITH BILL C-125

Mr. Paul Dick (Lanark-Renfrew-Carleton): Mr. Speaker, I would like to direct this question to the President of the Privy Council in his capacity as government House leader. In view of the fact that on February 3 the Prime Minister indicated legislation in the form of Bill C-125 would be reintroduced in the House within a few weeks, yet on page 1448 of Hansard the government House leader is reported as having indicated other items of business which would take up the entire period to the end of March in reply to a question by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre, will the minister tell us when that bill in respect of abuses of the Unemployment Insurance Act will be reintroduced?

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, I am afraid my hon. friend misunderstands the situation. That particular bill has not been withdrawn and does not require reintroduction. It is on the order paper along with all the other bills and will come forward in the normal course.

Mr. Dick: Mr. Speaker, in view of the fact the Prime Minister indicated it would be taken up within a few weeks of February 3, can the minister give us a more precise date when this matter will be before the House for debate?

An hon. Member: Ask Stanley.

Mr. Hees: Stanley will tell you.

Mr. MacEachen: Mr. Speaker, it is impossible at this stage to give a precise date in respect of any particular item of legislation, including the unemployment insurance bill. The program for the month of March is almost totally predetermined by the supply situation.

Mr. Hees: And by the NDP.

Mr. MacEachen: It will be very difficult to bring on additional items, including this particular bill in which we are both very interested.

IMMIGRATION

PROHIBITION OF APPLICATIONS FOR LANDED IMMIGRANT STATUS BY VISITORS—REQUEST FOR CHANGE IN REGULATIONS

Mrs. Grace MacInnis (Vancouver-Kingsway): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Manpower and Immigration. In view of the great hardship being caused persons from overseas countries because the new immigration regulations force them to return to their country of origin before they can apply for landed immigrant status, will the minister consider amending the regulations to permit those already in Canada or in transit at the time the new regulations came into force to apply for landed immigrant status in Canada instead of having to return to their country of origin?

Hon. Robert K. Andras (Minister of Manpower and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, I think the rationale for the revocation of regulation 34 in November was clearly set forth at the time. I have also indicated to the House in answer to similar questions that we are not planning any general amnesty from that regulation. We will look at hardship cases, and any cases of refugees, and will deal compassionately with them; but otherwise it is our intention to have the regulations stand.

Mrs. MacInnis (Vancouver-Kingsway): Mr. Speaker, will the minister consider changing the regulations to permit those whose applications were already in progress at the time the new regulations came into force to continue their applications for landed immigrant status?

Mr. Andras: Mr. Speaker, any visitor or any person in Canada legally at that time, who had in fact registered with an immigration centre his or her desire to apply for landed immigrant status, would have the application proceeded with. There is no prohibition on that if in every other way the applicant is qualified to gain landed immigrant status.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The Chair will recognize the hon. member for Vancouver-Kingsway and then the hon. member for Hamilton West on one supplementary and will then call orders of the day.

INQUIRY AS TO INTRODUCTION OF AMENDMENTS TO IMMIGRATION APPEAL BOARD ACT

Mrs. Grace MacInnis (Vancouver-Kingsway): Mr. Speaker, may I ask the minister whether he can say when the Immigration Act will be up for discussion in parliament?

Hon. Robert K. Andras (Minister of Manpower and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, the amendments to the Immigration Appeal Board Act will be brought forth in due course. I think I would defer to the comments of the House leader a few minutes ago as to the precise date.

POSSIBILITY OF VISITORS SMUGGLING ALIENS INTO UNITED STATES

Mr. Lincoln M. Alexander (Hamilton West): Mr. Speaker, I had intended asking the minister about the problem faced by foreign students today in terms of jobs, but I will save that for another day. I am wondering whether the minister is aware of the fact that visitors are smuggling aliens into the United States and, if so, has he been in consultation with his United States counterpart with regard to this problem and what has developed?

Hon. Robert K. Andras (Minister of Manpower and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, I must admit this has not been brought to my attention. I am very interested in the member's comments and would be appreciative if he could give me any details so that I could try to look into it.

Mr. Speaker: Orders of the day.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

THE BUDGET

FINANCIAL STATEMENT OF THE MINISTER OF FINANCE

The House resumed, from Monday, February 26, consideration of the motion of the Hon. John N. Turner (Minister of Finance) that this House approve in general the budgetary policy of the government.

Mr. H. W. Danforth (Kent-Essex): Mr. Speaker, I am most grateful to have this opportunity, on behalf of the primary producers in this nation and the processors as well as the allied industries, to speak out at this time on what I believe is one of the gravest injustices perpetrated by the Minister of Finance (Mr. Turner) in his budget when he indiscriminately removed tariffs on foods coming into this country. This was not only a shocking action on his part, but what was equally shocking was the apparent collusion between him and the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Whelan) on that particular occasion. They seemed to be congratulating each other—as a matter of fact they did shake hands—on a policy concerning the primary producers of this country which will strike at the very heart of many of our farming and processing enterprises in this country which, under the present policies of this government, already operate on a very marginal or non-profit basis.

The agriculture industry is upset to a degree I have never before experienced, not only because of the fact that the tariffs were lowered, but also because as long as two years ago this government approached all the commodity groups in agriculture requesting that they bring forward a careful detailed study on how the tariff problem in respect of GATT might be approached in order that we might grant some concessions that would not injure the industry and gain some concessions in return from the other countries involved. This government which issued this invitation deliberately slapped every commodity group in the face by the action taken on February 19 when it deliberately lowered the tariffs before the results of any of these studies could be made known to the government. Thousands of dollars were wasted, and thousands of hours of study and research were wasted, because of this action on the part of the government. This is the action of a government that derides and criticizes the policy put forward by our party. This is a government which is trying to lay the cause of inflation as well as the high cost of food at the door of the primary producers of agricultural products.

This government is trying to make agriculture the scapegoat for inflation. This is the government which has derived our policy whereby we would seek, in a two-pronged attack, to achieve the objective of controlling inflation and prices without putting anybody out of business and without destroying an industry. Our alternative was to lower taxes, provide some incentive for increased production of food in this country, make it possible for small businesses to survive, give the individual taxpayer more money with which to buy groceries and at the same time introduce some price controls on all items except food. These controls would be imposed for a short period of time in order that we might, in consultation with the provinces, develop guidelines that could provide a reasoned measure of control of inflation about which we are so fearful today. But this government would not even consider such a proposition and pressed the panic button when the latest figures on inflation were brought out. The government indiscriminately lowered the tariff on foods entering this country from offshore. Disruption in the industry and the effect on unemployment will be tremendous.

I do not think the government to this date realizes the trouble it has caused in industry. The minister, in his budget speech, said that he was taking a risk. But, when the government takes a risk, does it have to be a risk that involves the livelihood of farmers and the existence of farms which have been in the same family for three generations? Does it have to be at the risk of small processing companies which have just begun to function on an economic level and which are now having their chances of survival taken away from them? Is this the risk which must be taken? The Minister of Finance said that the Minister of Agriculture would be the watchdog over this program. This minister watched while half the proceeds and profits of the Canadian agriculture industry were swept away in a budget speech. This is the minister who indicated that if this measure should cause any hardship it would be reversed in 24 hours. The occasions on which this government, after having lowered any rate of tariff, ever replaced it have been very few and far between.

The sheep industry of this country, when the tariff was removed on mutton coming into this country from New Zealand and Australia, was assured that if hardship resulted it would be rectified. We do not have any sheep industry in Canada today. It is gone. What does this mean? I am grateful to the hon. member for Peel-Dufferin-Simcoe (Mr. Madill) for having provided me with this document, and it is from the Peel-Halton Beef Improvement Association. It gives us some indication of what we are up against. The tariff on beef coming into this country was lowered by 1.5 cents a pound. But what does it mean to the primary producer who sells in one year 150 head of cattle, which is not a great number, and there is a great number of producers who sell more? Based on his average return per year, 1.5 cents a pound adds up to the startling sum of $4,800, and that could be the difference between a profit and a loss in the operation of his enterprise.

This government took this action in spite of the fact that the opposite action has been taken by all our trading partners. Do you realize, Mr. Speaker, that the European Economic Community has allocated $3 billion in order to smooth over the bumps experienced by this trading group? Do you realize that of that $3 billion, 86 per cent is directed toward subsidizing agriculture and ensuring that these countries have a viable agriculture industry within the confines of the European Common Market? This is an indication of the importance they place on agriculture in those countries. You do not see the Unites States cutting tariffs on food entering that country because, unlike this government, they place a priority on their agriculture. They are not only adopting a policy to protect their agriculture industry now, they are even considering other barriers to stop the inflow of food into their country if there is an indication of damage in the foreseeable future. They are not only dealing with the present, they are dealing with the future, and this is what we need in this country, a long range agricultural policy which we have never had since the government came into office.

The government mentions that this drop in tariffs of 1.5 cents a pound will be passed on to the consumer. This means life or death to the primary producer in many instances, but 1.5 cents a pound, I suggest to you, will never be passed through the whole complicated food chain to the consumer.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Danforth: Talk about a chaotic policy! I would like to demonstrate what a chaotic policy we have today. We have a government which is making grants for the construction of freezer plants, cold storage, gas storage and common storage. At the very same time they are removing the specific duties, the surcharges, on fruits and vegetables to such a degree that this will shorten the season and make absolutely worthless the economic investment in freezers and in storage in any form. On the one hand, they are telling primary producers to go ahead and buy their policy; on the other hand, they are saying: if you do, we will bankrupt you just that much quicker.

Not only did the government cut these tariffs without consulting anybody in the industry—and I should like to make this point very strongly—but when this policy was adopted, the Minister of Agriculture was not consulted either or else he did not care or understand the ramifications of the drop in the tariffs. I know this Minister of Agriculture. I know his background and I know that this measure was passed without his having been consulted in any way whatsoever. They lowered the tariffs on citrus juices, fruits and vegetables coming into this country at a time when contracts were being negotiated between the processors and the primary producers. I predict that this will have a disastrous effect on these contracts which are being negotiated. The government does not realize what it has done.

I had a phone call from one of the biggest producers of cabbage, a common, everyday staple. He is one of the largest producers of cabbage in my area. As a result of what is considered to be only a slight reduction in tariffs, he decided not to plant one single seed this year because he said that under this program he could not realize a profit. There is a man who is out of business as a result of the policy applied by this government.

Some hon. Members: Shame.

Mr. Danforth: When the Minister of Finance took this step, it was quite evident to us on this side of the House that he did not understand the tariff structure so far as fruits and vegetables are concerned, a tariff structure which is different from that on other commodities that are manufactured. When he spoke about specified time periods for the application of a specific duty and then a surcharge, he should remember that these specified time periods were agreed upon by the industry in the 1930's, not in the 1970's. They were agreed upon before research had made it possible for Canadians to extend their production period, both early into the spring and later into the fall, and to develop a greenhouse industry which made it possible for us to produce during the winter months.

Now, what has happened? When the tariff is reduced, what little tariff is left to cover these specified periods results in the cutting off of either the early or the late production. Then, when the surcharges on many of our tender fruits and vegetables were removed, that made it almost impossible for them to be produced at a profit because very often these fruits and vegetables were protected by the surcharge and not by the specific duty. The price structure of the imports was such that the surcharge was much greater than the specific duty. The price of the imported products on an ad valorem basis was much greater, but this was not taken into consideration. What the government has done, when it allowed the inflow by removing the tariff on fresh produce from the United States at a time when we do not have this fresh produce here, has been to run exactly contrary to the interests of our canning industry which processes the produce for which they contracted with the farmers.

This is going to have a serious effect because the processors, to stay in business, will have to make the contracts of payments to Canadian producers low enough to compete with fresh fruits and vegetables coming into the country. This is an almost impossible situation. The tariffs on some of the canned fruits have been lowered to such a degree that the change in tariffs alone, let alone the devaluation of the U.S. dollar, takes every cent of profit out of a case of canned fruit produced in this country. When there is no profit, there is no production.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Laniel): I regret to interrupt the hon. member, but the time allotted to him has expired.

[Translation]

Hon. Jean-Eudes Dubé (Minister of Public Works): Mr. Speaker, I am delighted to be able to take part this afternoon in the debate on the budget.

First of all, I must congratulate my colleague the Minister of Finance (Mr. Turner) for his excellent budget. It is not only a responsive and responsible budget, but also a generous and a deeply human one.

The area with which I will try to deal in my remarks is the scope, the influence of the budget and of the main programs of the government concerning the economy of the Atlantic provinces, and more particularly of my province of New Brunswick.

In its review of the month of December, the Atlantic Advocate reported a statement of the right hon. Prime Minister which I believe to be quite correct to the effect that "no federal government in the history of Canada has backed up its concern for the welfare of the peoples of the Atlantic provinces with more effort or more dollars than the present government".

In human terms, the ideal of equal opportunity for all Canadians is absolutely basic. With that in mind, the equalization payments enable the poorer provinces to provide public services comparable with those of richer provinces.

As we all know, last year the equalization payments amounted to $135 per capita for Nova Scotia, $164 for New Brunswick, $213 for Newfoundland and $215 for Prince Edward Island. Without that generous but fair contribution of the federal government, the Atlantic provinces would simply be unable to give to their citizens a reasonable standard of living for Canadians of our generation.

This is why I was quite pleased to hear the Minister of Finance announce Monday last in the budget that he would increase the equalization payments. The new amount will be paid as new subsidies based on municipal school taxes. And according to that much more generous new formula, the four Atlantic provinces will now receive $194 per capita for Nova Scotia, $218 for New Brunswick, $284 for Newfoundland and $285 for Prince Edward Island. In so far as New Brunswick is concerned, it is an increase of $164 to $214 per capita in one year.

I am convinced, Mr. Speaker, that this new federal infusion will contribute largely to the economic development of my province and will enable a greater number of people to remain and prosper in New Brunswick.

In fact, New Brunswick was the only one among the four Atlantic provinces to reverse the periodic exodus of its working people—mostly young—towards other labour markets and to have a net inflow of residents.

As every one knows, Mr. Speaker, the Atlantic provinces have a great deal of natural resources and human wealth. Should the Atlantic wake up, like the Sleeping Beauty, I see no reason why the federal government would not play its role as Prince Charming.

In 1968, we know that the federal government launched a 15-year program of regional economic expansion program to run over a period of 15 years. There are clear signs that the economy is moving along as it has turned a corner and is now going to narrow the economic gap.

Although the unemployment rate is too high in our estimation, its rate for the four provinces is clearly lower than was expected. It has been estimated that, without the massive infusion of federal funds into the region since 1968, the unemployment rate would be 30 per cent above its present figures.

The direct federal grants of the Department of Regional Economic Expansion have generated more than $200 million of investments in new or growing industries, which amounts to about $28 per man, woman and child in the Atlantic region. This will result in 10,000 new jobs.

Another one of the key approach to regional ressources development policy will have been the stimulation and expansion of growth centres capable of accommodating new industries and an expanding population.

Twelve such centres have been identified in the Atlantic provinces, and more than $250 million has already been spent by the federal government to enhance the infrastructure.

The benificial federal influence is felt also in the smaller municipalities, small villages, parishes which are not growth centres, through the Local Initiatives Program. And in the framework of the Local Initiatives Program, for the first time in the history of our country, last year our government was directly supporting local projects conceived by people from small communities.

Last winter, and again this winter, you can hear the pound of hammers disturbing the quiet of parish halls, of Canadian Legion premises, of barns and repair shops.

Instead of idling, and being unemployed in all such places people are building, painting, sewing, repairing furniture, helping each other, making positive achievements. In the province of New Brunswick alone, the program has created 24,000 man-months of employment this winter.

Mr. Speaker, during the past five years, the Department of Public Works for one has allocated close to $190 million for various structures in the Atlantic region. I shall mention, for instance, the major tanker terminal at Point Tupper in Nova Scotia and Come-by-Chance, Newfoundland, the ferry-boat wharves at St. John's, New Brunswick and Digby, Nova Scotia.

I should also mention the bridges along the Trans-Canada highway and the international bridges, among them the one between Maine and Saint-Léonard, which is already finished, and the one between Quebec and Flatlands, New Brunswick, which is under construction.

There is a very impressive list of less spectacular projects that are much appreciated by the local population, such as federal buildings, post-offices, docks and harbours.

Our estimates in the last financial year for maritime building alone amounted to $8,500,000 for the Atlantic area. And as a result of the importance that we attach to small construction to meet the needs of local fishermen, we plan to spend $2 million more on subsidies in the region.

The primary industries in New Brunswick are generally in good shape, Mr. Speaker, as income from agriculture and forestry has held up especially well. On the other hand, it is well known that the pulp and paper industry is still very shaky. In the aim of somewhat lightening the heavy burden under which it labours, the pulp and paper industry is considering installing industrial complexes involving, for example, new sawing techniques, better use of wood residues and the manufacture of products such as plywood. The manufacturing industry will be encouraged to produce equipment for the forest industry, for domestic and for export sale.

In Dalhousie, located in my own Restigouche constituency, paper exports will be facilitated by the construction this year of a new seaport designed to harbour the large modern ships of the Ro-Ro type. On account of the mercury recently discovered in the mud and the waters close to the place that was designated at the very beginning for the construction of the wharf, apparently this wharf will now have to be erected somewhat further up north-east of the first expected location. But we do not anticipate that such a change will delay the construction of the wharf or of the seaport itself.

So, Mr. Speaker, the basic contribution made by the federal government since 1968 has left the Atlantic region poised for dramatic economic achievements in the seventies.

Many changes have vastly improved the climate for economic development. For instance, let us mention the improvement of the highway network all over the Maritimes; I have in mind especially the north of New Brunswick where a generous government grant of $20 million will allow the renovation of Route 11 and its continuation up to Moncton, with much updating. I must also indicate the establishment of the container transportation services at the two main ports in the area, that is St. John, New Brunswick, and Halifax, Nova Scotia. We must also emphasize the development at all levels of the educational and technical services and institutions. We now benefit from a labour force with more education, mobility and flexibility than before thanks due to the programs established to increase workers' mobility and skill, programs that are mainly administered by the federal Department of Manpower and Immigration. Greater resources now provide the industry with the technical and scientific research services heretofore unknown and the assistance provided each provincial government of the Atlantic area permits the planning of community infrastructure, especially in major urban areas.

Moreover, Mr. Speaker, the potential for development in the Atlantic area is apparent on account of the tremendous advantage of its geographical situation in relation to the large market on the eastern seaboard of the United States. In the days of super ships in which we live, the deep waters of the Atlantic coast are a more and more valuable asset. Moreover, the environment in our areas is stable and the manpower intelligent and industrious. Congestion does not pose any serious problems and the forms of pollution that exist can be fought and checked at a reasonable cost.

In other words, Mr. Speaker, the government firmly believes in the future of the Atlantic area. The massive federal effort will ultimately bear fruit, there is no doubt about that. Nevertheless, the citizens of that area and all their representatives will have to be more positive and optimistic.

With this in mind, let us recall one of the first visitors to the Maritime provinces, Samuel de Champlain. During the first winter he spent in Nova Scotia, he created l'Ordre du Bon Temps in order to keep the morale of his officers and soldiers, in the midst of a rigourous winter and depressing circumstances. That Order of Good Time, now known throughout the world, should inspire our deeds and speeches, because positive thinking is father to the powerful results.

[English]

Mr. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa-Whitby): Mr. Speaker, various spokesmen for the New Democratic Party so far in this debate have attempted to indicate, (a) why we are giving general support to the budget and, (b) simultaneously to raise questions about what we would have done differently had we been in a position not only to influence government but to make the final decisions ourselves. In my few remarks this afternoon, I should like to add some further arguments to this general approach that we have been trying to make as a party.

Before doing so, however, I cannot forgo the pleasure of responding to some of the comments made by the party on my right, the official opposition.

Mr. Nowlan: The only opposition.

Mr. Broadbent: At various times they have suggested that the New Democratic Party, because it has decided under the present proposals of the budget to give support, has somehow been lacking in principle.

Mr. Nowlan: You are right.

Mr. Broadbent: They suggest that we are abandoning the objectives that historically our party has fought for in this country. I find that argument rather curious, coming from that motley crew on my right, a party which, if we are to accept the word of the hon. member for Don Valley (Mr. Gillies) as the spokesman for the Conservative party, has at least progressed from the 18th century and Adam Smith as represented historically right up to last week in the speeches of the hon. member for Edmonton West (Mr. Lambert). I ask all members of this House, Mr. Speaker, who is the real voice of the Conservative party? Who speaks for that party today? Is it the hon. member for Don Valley, on the one hand,—

Mr. Alexander: In his position he does.

Mr. Broadbent: —who is arguing that what we need is greater deficits, and who is now arguing for the Conservative party something that the New Democratic Party has been advocating for years that we should use our reserves of U.S. dollars to buy back control of certain sectors of the Canadian economy which are currently foreign owned. Up to last week such an argument was heresy in the Conservative party of Canada, yet the hon. member for Don Valley is now coming forward with these suggestions.

The hon. member for Edmonton West conventionally argues for control of inflation and that we must have a balanced budget at all costs. Last year when the foreign takeover bill was before this House he opposed any movement by the government, and therefore the people of Canada, into the foreign-owned sector to gain control of our economy for the people of this country. When the foreign takeover bill is reintroduced I will be interested to see who is the Conservative spokesman; will it be the hon. member for Don Valley or the hon. member for Edmonton West? We could see another historical shift in that party at that time.

The point I am making, Mr. Speaker, is that in this debate the New Democratic Party has not in any way abandoned its principal concern with the redistribution of income and wealth, the redistribution of power in Canada. All its spokesmen have argued consistently in support of this budget.

Mr. Alexander: To save your necks.

Mr. Broadbent: —not because it implements our program but because it at least moves in our direction. There has been no suggestion at all from the Conservative party of a coherent move, whether in our direction or any other. For them to suggest that somehow it is we who have abandoned a principle in our current situation is, to understate it by about 1,000 per cent, a little curious.

What specifically are we supporting, Mr. Speaker, and how would we perhaps have improved, even in those areas had we had the real power as opposed to merely the influence to do it?

First of all, we like that universal minimum $100 tax cut. That is the kind of idea for which we have been arguing for some time. We proposed in an amendment to the budget last year in debate that we have a minimum of $100—in fact, an inclusive $100 tax reduction for everyone. We regard that as a progressive type of proposal as opposed to cuts of a certain percentage right up the scale. With the $500 ceiling proposed in this budget, at least we do not have the across the board percentage reduction all the way up the scale that we had in last year's budget, so that certain taxpayers could save thousands of dollars and those at the bottom of the scale a mere pittance.

How would we have changed it had we had the real power to do so? The kind of thing we would have done would have been to give an across the board $200 tax cut to every taxpayer. We would not have given more than $200 in tax cuts to any one taxpayer in Canada. That seems fundamental to us on grounds of equity or justice. It would have involved a fair redistribution of income and net disposable income available to average and poor Canadians would have risen. We would have removed that $500 limit that is part of the Liberal government's proposal and would have said that nobody will be allowed more than $200, but all will get that $200. So, on grounds of equity and fairness that measure would have been good. Also, it would have stimulated the economy by putting more money into circulation, increasing demand and therefore creating more jobs. According to our research, that measure would have put the same number of disposal dollars into the economy and would have stimulated jobs to the same degree as the present proposal. Furthermore, it would have put money into the hands of those who need it most. We would not have needed to go up to the $500 ceiling in tax cuts which benefits only the upper top 10 per cent of taxpayers in this country. They will really reap the gain of that $500 limit. From our point of view that is unjustified.

Another point I wish to mention has to do with the pension increase. Increasing the basic pension to $100 a month is good. The increase is $14. We support that. However, may I draw something to Your Honour's attention? If you take the level of pensions prevailing in 1952 and consider how much the cost of living has increased since then, how much inflation we have suffered from, how much the dollar has decreased in value, and how much the gross national product has increased since 1952, I submit that the pensioner in Canada today, if he is to maintain his position in the community as it was in 1952, should be entitled to a basic pension of $110. With those considerations in mind, my party would have increased the pension ceiling and gone well beyond the $100 that the government has adopted. Nevertheless, we welcome the $100. With this increase, we are getting more from the Liberal government than we would have received from a Conservative government, according to what was said in the last election.

Mr. Alexander: You are getting exactly the same thing.

Mr. Broadbent: Mr. Speaker, I wish the hon. member for Hamilton West (Mr. Alexander) would read the literature his own party put out in the last election.

Next, I shall touch on consumer spending. There has been an average reduction of 5 per cent in tariffs, which is good as far as it goes if it is passed on. This tariff reduction will help the average consumer in an equitable way, and therefore we support that. I think the Minister of Finance (Mr. Turner) and other government spokesmen have exaggerated rather grotesquely the benefits of this measure. I, for one, see that tariff concession as being aimed at trade negotiations with the United States. I think that is what is really involved. The government took unilateral action of this kind hoping, somehow, to mitigate the hostile feelings of the United States at this time. That country is suffering difficulties in connection with its balance of payments in international trade. The government sought to mitigate hard feelings; that was the real object of that measure even though, as I say, the Canadian consumer is to be given some benefit.

Another item that we support in the budget is the reduction of the 12 per cent sales tax on children's clothing. This is important, particularly for low income families in Canada. This reduction goes towards an important aspect of daily living, in that our people must clothe their children in an adequate way. We support that initiative. Sales taxes are regressive taxes. The same tax in dollars is paid by upper income, middle income and poor families; therefore, this is a regressive form of taxation and, as far as we are concerned, the sooner we get rid of all sales taxes in Canada the better. However, as the government in Ottawa is moving in the direction of eliminating that tax, it is good that it has begun with taking it off children's clothing. I was pleased to see that Eaton's and Simpson's in Toronto, two large merchandisers, have indicated that they will pass the tax savings on to consumers immediately. I hope the taxpayers benefit from similar action by other merchants, and I hope particularly that the Minister of Finance sets up some monitoring body within his department to make sure that these benefits are passed on to consumers.

Another item we support is the increase by nearly 20 per cent in war veterans' allowances. Again, that is overdue. Again, my party unreservedly supports the government on this, as it is something for which we have been arguing enthusiastically for some time.

Next, may I mention a budget item that will go a long way towards improving the tax position of ordinary people in what are regarded as "have-not" provinces of Canada. I am speaking of the change in the equalization payment formula proposed by the federal government. This will take into account the spending at the provincial level on education. May I point out that education funds are largely derived from taxation of property owners, in other words, average people, who in most provinces have had to pay a disproportionate part of the education cost through property taxes. By taking this factor into account in the equalization payment formula, the property tax, for example, of the average person in Saskatchewan will be reduced substantially. Speaking as one who comes from a province that, compared with others, is well off and fortunate, I am pleased to see that we are to redistribute income in this way. Therefore, the government deserves credit for the steps it is taking in this direction.

I have indicated my support for the kinds of measures that my party historically has argued for in Ottawa and in the provinces. I have suggested that we would have made definite changes and improvements if we had formed the government. Nevertheless, we are pleased to support steps that the government has taken in that direction. The single most important deficiency in this budget relates to the deficit. We think that the treasury department finally has won, as the government's approach to spending in terms of gross amount has not changed basically since the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) was elected in 1968. If we had formed the government, instead of being able to influence in some marginal way those who now make the decisions, we would have doubled that forecast deficit, not only for the next year but for the next five or ten years, so that we could move effectively to cure unemployment. We would not wish to create miracles overnight, and for the short run bring unemployment down to 4 per cent—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. I regret to interrupt the hon. member, but his time has expired.

Mr. P. B. Rynard (Simcoe North): Mr. Speaker, this is a critical budget. What will it do? Will it do what the government hopes? Last fall, during the election campaign, there were three principal items with which people were dissatisfied, namely, unemployment, inflation and taxes. The public had already seen the inane actions of a government in increasing taxes and limiting credit to stop people buying. That, in the long run, created unemployment, because industry was not able to sell its products. The government's purpose was, of course, that of halting inflation, Mr. Speaker. Instead, we wound up with both unemployment and inflation. This is all a matter of record, regrettably. The people were annoyed. Can you blame them? Tax measures were taking more and more money from pay envelopes, from industry and from business. Mr. Benson's taxation reforms had upset the business world. Business people could not interpret the new laws, and neither could Members of Parliament. Closure choked off debate on this tax legislation after 75 clauses had been passed, and with less than one quarter of the 735 pages of the bill discussed. Hon. members will recall it required 135 amendments to deal with those clauses which were reviewed. What a bureaucratic jungle he wished on the people.

When pressed for tax cuts last May, the Minister of Finance (Mr. Turner) came through with a 3 per cent rebate on income, but only effective until January 1, 1973. There will be a pay day here. He reduced corporation taxes, but this was overdue. Corporate taxes could be lowered more. In fact, they are down to 35 per cent in Japan. They are also lower in other countries. Profits were running between 5 per cent and 6 per cent and we were asking the Canadian people to invest in Canadian companies. They were running twice as high 20 years ago; in 1964, 20.5 per cent; 1965, 19.4 per cent; 1966, 17.6 per cent; 1967, 14 per cent; 1968, 14.3 per cent and 1971, 12.4 per cent. Our exports were falling relatively and our imports were increasing relatively. The minister knew that 25 cents out of every dollar came from our exports.

The minister also knew that if people were to be induced to invest in Canadian industry, they had to see prospects for returns. In spite of the leader of the New Democratic Party and his corporate rip-offs, people were not rushing to take advantage of this so-called bonanza. If Canadians do not invest, then outside interests will come in. With over 600,000 people unemployed, we need them badly.

How wrong and inept this government has proven itself to be. It was out millions of dollars when predicting its revenues and $1 billion more or less in its calculation of the unemployment insurance fund. If this were a private business, that fellow would get bounced awfully quick for doing such accounting work. The Minister of Finance has been collecting millions of dollars from taxpayers across the country, money to which he had no right. It took an election to show the minister how wrong he had been. According to his own statement, he has now entered the villa of political bankruptcy by lowering taxes. This is something that could have been done months ago when it was proposed by the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Stanfield).

What did the budget do? Let us take a look at it. It raised the old age security pension to $100 per month. I say to you, Mr. Speaker, this in no way makes up for the increase in the cost of food and shelter since 1963 when the basic pension of $75 was fixed. The country is still cheating these people. Nothing was done about including drugs in the medicare plan, yet this was part and parcel of the Hall Commission Report on National Medicare which a Liberal government introduced. People over the age of 65 require a good deal more prescription medicines than those under that age.

According to the Economic Council of Canada, one in four people today are below the poverty line. The government consistently refuses to help the most needy, the sick and the ailing. The budget did not provide anything for chronic nursing care or anything to prevent the necessity for active hospital care, yet governments scream about the cost of health care and rising hospital costs. They blame the doctors, everyone but the governments who do not provide chronic nursing care for the sick so that patients can be discharged from hospitals. What a mess governments make when they take over administration.

Health care costs will increase 14 per cent this year. The government and the minister say they do not want anyone asking for a raise. We must all show responsibility. The day after the minister said this when presenting the budget the government brought in its own spending estimates, which showed an increase of 17 per cent. This was one day after the minister pleaded with the people of Canada not to ask for a raise. The budget will help with the financing of children's clothing, candy and soft drinks, jewellery and cosmetics, but I wonder what manner of reasoning was used in arriving at this decision when a young couple who want to build a home for those same children find themselves faced with a 12 per cent sales tax on the building materials for that home. Surely, the cost of shelter should not have been overlooked. This sales tax accounts for thousands of dollars in the cost of the house and its financing.

What kind of a deal is this exemption to the farmer and his son when the family farm passes on from generation to generation? If anybody is going to win, it will have to pass on from generation to generation from here to eternity. Very few farms continue to be held by the same family beyond a couple of generations. Let us take an example. A farmer buys a farm for $25,000. On valuation day, it is worth $50,000. The son gets the farm after 20 years, but 10 years after that he has to sell because of urban sprawl, ill health or a dozen other reasons and the price is $100,000. Does the son pay capital gains on $75,000 or $50,000? The government is always the silent benefactor while over the years the farmer was the worker, the caretaker and the one who make the investment. The government can even change the rules before the farm is disposed of finally. If anyone does not believe that, just go back to 1936. The Liberal government of the day pleaded with people to invest in Canada. The government sold what were known as 1936 perpetual bonds which cost 98 cents on the dollar. What can you get for them today? If any member opposite wants to bid 40 cents on the dollar he can have them.

Mr. Lefebvre: Have you got some, Doc?

Mr. Rynard: No, I do not have any. However, I have received many letters from widows and old people who are wondering what in the world to do with them. They thought these would provide a good living for them in their old age. They thought the government would be honest and fair with them, and they would be able to cash them when the coupons ran out. That is what governments do.

Although we welcome the income tax reduction, just what does it amount to? The minister was to increase taxes by 3 per cent on January 1 of this year, so in effect I suggest the 5 per cent reduction is really only 2 per cent. The minister also said that he was going to take three-quarters of a million people off the tax roll, and I am sure some hon. members of the House remember what a former minister, Edgar Benson said. He said that he was going to take three-quarters of a million people off the tax rolls and he did, but within a year they were nearly all back on the roll again paying taxes. The Minister of Finance has now done a flip and is putting three-quarters of a million people off the roll who will all be back again within a year or so.

Has the minister lowered taxes sufficiently that the people can spend more, and more jobs will be created? That is the burning question. If he has, then are controls necessary to hold the line? The public is losing faith in the ability of governments, governments that blunder. The budget is complicated. Its end results are not certain and the new tax forms are so complicated that the public just does not understand them. The public is in rebellion. People want a better accounting system, a simple system so that they will understand what goes on and may judge whether or not the servant is worthy of his hire.

In my opinion, with the tremendous yields in taxes from Mr. Benson's tax reforms, more money should be poured into industry that is manpower oriented so as to produce jobs quickly. More money should be poured into research to develop our raw resources and manufacture new products. We should do far more processing in Canada of our own goods. At the present time over 60 per cent of our exports are of raw materials or are only partly processed, which I think is a disgrace. A little less than 40 per cent of the goods we sell are processed. Some 50 per cent of the value of the products that we produce are exported, while two-thirds of our imports are processed.

The labour content of a processed article is three times that of a raw resource product. This indicates the necessity for tax cuts and for the stimulation of the manufacturing sector. This fact strikes home when we realize that Canada has over 600,000 people unemployed out of a population of 22 million and a work force of around eight million. We have the greatest known amount of raw resources per capita in the world, yet we have the highest unemployment rate in the developed world. I say that without criticism but with a good deal of sadness. There are nearly 80,000 jobs in Canada that cannot be filled because there is no one to fill them, yet Ottawa spends $2 billion a year on benefits to the unemployed. What a way to run a country. We have manpower centres for training people and we have unemployment offices; nevertheless, in face of the stark facts we must point the finger at the inability of the government to solve our problems. The socialists say that they would cure the trouble. They would probably adopt the Swedish method—work or starve and this is not acceptable to a free society.

[Translation]

Mr. Réal Caouette (Témiscamingue): Mr. Speaker, if one considers the views that have been expressed during the debate on the budget for the past few days, one realizes how important a minority government is for Canada as a whole. I suggest the government feels compelled to take heed of the opinions and wishes of the Canadian people.

If a majority government were better for Canadians than a minority government, we could rightly ask why a budget such as this was not brought down last year or two years ago, when the government was in a majority.

When we had a majority government, taxes were raised and practically nothing was done about old age pensions. I say "practically nothing", because at one time they went so far as to increase these pensions by 42 cents a month, which everybody thought was very funny.

On the contrary, under a minority government, increases have almost reached $18 a month, which prompts me to say that a minority government is more effective for the people.

The government is less arrogant. I notice that the ministers are a great deal more polite than a year ago. They look at us, they acknowledge us, they even smile to attract our attention and sympathy, there is no doubt about that.

Mr. Speaker, the budget really reflects that change of attitude from a majority to a minority government composed of almost the same men, the same ministers and the same Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau).

In his speech, the Minister of Finance (Mr. Turner) told us strongly that the budget would result in creating more than 300,000 new jobs, that the LIP projects would be more fully and more easily subsidized than before. In my opinion, the budget as it was tabled, even with the pension increases and the tax reductions of around 5 per cent, will not create a single additional job in Canada.

It does not promote industry either. I shall give a striking example. The hon. member for Sherbrooke (Mr. Pelletier), a riding which I well know, talked about his region. I did not have the pleasure of hearing him but, last February 22 he talked about the unemployment problem and the economic doldrums in his riding; it is not the only one in that position. The riding of Saint-Hyacinthe encounters difficulties in the same areas, what with economic stagnation and now hopes raised in the budget of the hon. Minister of Finance.

There is a good reason to hope that Sherbrooke will become again the prosperous queen of the Eastern Townships. The hon. member for Sherbrooke emphasized the situation of unemployment and distress in his riding and this is still true after more than ten years of continuing Liberal administration. If things are going badly in Sherbrooke, in Quebec and throughout Canada, with regard to the economy, the Créditistes are not to be blamed because it is the Liberals who are running the government. They laughed at the Créditistes when we offered solutions. When we made suggestions to the government, they found that funny but here is a Liberal member who complains that the Liberal riding of Sherbrooke is in distress. The Créditistes do not run the government, they do not administer the Canadian economy nor are they responsible for unemployment, low wages and distress which exist in Canada and in Sherbrooke in particular.

As I found it from reading Hansard at page 1561, here is what the hon. member for Sherbrooke said:

From 1965 to 1972, employment in the manufacturing sector in Quebec rose by 7.4 per cent, while it dropped by 10.8 per cent in Sherbrooke.

I think that in Drummondville, in Saint-Hyacinthe, in those parts of the Eastern Townships, the problem is about the same.

Therefore, if the manufacturing sector is important, our region is becoming a marginal area—

It is the hon. member for Sherbrooke who is speaking.

—and we can prove, in the light of valuable information that the city of Sherbrooke can in no way expect to have an economic recovery without substantial grants from the federal government.

At that time, the citizens or the industries in Sherbrooke will be called corporate welfare bums because the government will help them or will try to help them. The hon. member for Sherbrooke has complained saying that industrial structures were lacking, that the wages paid in Sherbrooke were below those paid elsewhere in Canada in the garment industry.

[Mr. Caouette (Témiscamingue).]

The unemployment rate varies from 11.6 to 11.8 per cent in Sherbrooke, while 20 to 25 per cent of the people in the Eastern Townships live in poverty. That is what the hon. member for Sherbrooke says.

But whose fault is it, Mr. Speaker? Who is to be held responsible for unemployment in Sherbrooke or elsewhere? Whose fault is it if wages paid in Sherbrooke are lower than the national average? Whose fault is it if plants in Sherbrooke leave this town to go to Ontario?

A plant closes down because of imports in the area of footwear, for instance. The manufacturer blames the government for not taking the necessary steps to help Canadian workers.

I have here a letter dated February 2 that was sent by the Kaufman Footwear Company Limited in Sherbrooke to its employees. The government is in office. What does management say?

Due to the economic situation, the company deemed necessary to stop production in Sherbrooke.

The decision to close down was based on the fact that the plant is in a non-competitive position mainly as a result of footwear imported from countries where wages are very low.

Italy, Czechoslovakia, Japan are countries which sell footwear in our country. Mr. Speaker, here are statistics related to the import of footwear of all kinds during the first 11 months of 1972. Manufacturers are right to complain about imports. From the countries I just mentioned, 47,117,826 pairs of shoes have been imported. The people from these countries manufacture footwear at a cheap cost because salaries there are not high.

Mr. Speaker, the material is less expensive than in Canada and the Canadian government allows the import of 47 million pairs of shoes so that industries like Kaufman Footwear Limited are obliged to close down. I have before me a letter from which I shall quote an excerpt:

Many attempts to create new lines such as boots for ladies and shoes for men, have not succeeded in producing the number of additional pairs needed by the plant to increase its productivity. The government has heard the representations made by shoe manufacturers with regard to the situation of the footwear industry, but it does not want to "listen" and take corrective measures which would help the Canadian workers in the footwear industry.

It should be clearly understood that the recent demand of employees for representation is not the reason which has brought about the above-mentioned decision.

The production will continue until or about May 4, 1973. A committee will be set up to help you, if possible, find jobs in other places. If there are employees who are interested to be sent elsewherere—

But in other places, measures are taken to reduce employment. After 25, 30 or 40 years of employment, in Sherbrooke city, how could workers consider being moved to other places like Matagami, for example? Workers are told to go to James Bay to face an intolerable situation in Canada. The company says and I quote:

If there are employees who are interested in being employed elsewhere, they should speak to their foreman so that the necessary information could be directed to the responsible persons.

We regret that this is the only course available to us. Your cooperation through the years has been appreciated.

KAUFMAN FOOTWEAR LIMITED
DIVISION PROSPECT

Here is a situation where 300 workers are losing their jobs, while the minister says in his budget speech: We will create 300,000 new jobs in Canada. What a joke! On the other hand, the minister of Finance said: We will present a budget which will create employment and after two or three weeks, or after the budget speech, manufactures and mines are closing up in my region as well as elsewhere. An exclusive control over the dairy industry is being set up in the province of Quebec because small industries cannot operate with profit. Therefore large organizations buy the small dairy operations to gain control over that industry throughout the province of Quebec. Yet no one hears about that. The "big people" who buy do not say a word and the small businessmen who sell are appointed directors of a new plant that is set up to control exclusively the production and distribution of dairy products in our province.

That happens in a particular sector of the economic activity. But the budget will not create a single job, and I am deeply convinced of that even if the old age pensions are increased to $100 a month as we have been urging for many years. We advocated the payment of the old age pension at 60, the same pension for the spouse, but the government does not take that into account. Today, all hon. members know that a 60 year old man cannot find a job because there is no place for him in our society. And the government does not do anything to help her.

In the field of initiatives, the government thought it would have more money for the LIP program, money that would be earmarked for worthwhile projects from municipalities or intermediate organizations. But they say now: We are getting too many applications. They have paid for ads in the newspapers, on the radio, in all media telling people: Quick! Send in your local initiative or opportunities for youth projects. They have received 30,000 projects, they approved 7,000 so that leaves 23,000 citizens or groups who are not treated fairly, even though they have submitted worthwhile projects. Again, they are laughing at people when they pay advertisements to tell them: Submit your projects quickly and we shall approve them. Everyday, they turn down local or municipal initiatives projects from young as well as not so young people.

Mr. Speaker, we have also asked for assistance for university and CEGEP students. A kind of salary for students, they think that it is funny. Why are the young people on strike in universities? Because they are not learning French? Because they are learning too much English? Because they cannot pay for their tuition fees!

Mr. Speaker, if war broke out tomorrow morning—

[English]

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. I regret to interrupt the hon. member for Témiscamingue, but the time given him by the House order passed on February 22 has expired.

[Translation]

Mr. Fortin: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order.

[English]

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The hon. member for Lotbinière on a point of order.

[Translation]

Mr. Fortin: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Pursuant to an agreement with the four parties, taking into account the agreement which you have just referred to, we agree to let the leader of the Social Credit Party of Canada speak for five minutes more. To this end, would you kindly request the unanimous consent of this House? As far as we are concerned, we agree.

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

[English]

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is the extension agreed to?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

[Translation]

Mr. Caouette (Témiscamingue): Mr. Speaker, I wish to thank my colleagues and I will not speak for five minutes.

If a war broke out, the government would find the means to finance the studies of all those students who are striking in Montreal, in military colleges or universities and in such a case we would not call this aid anticipated salaries but a pay which would enable them to pursue studies paid for by the government.

Mr. Speaker, if, in wartime, it is possible to help young people of 18, 19 or 20, there is no one valid reason in the world for not helping them in peacetime in order to prevent them from sinking into disorder and helter-skelter as it is presently the case at the University of Montreal and at the University of Quebec in Montreal.

Mr. Speaker, there are limits to preposterousness and it is economic preposterousness to bring forward a budget which aims at distributing crumbs to the population on the whole. We will go on suggesting to and asking the government to entertain broader views. They have broad views when it comes to paying the interest on the public debt; the budget of the Minister of Finance will increase the public debt by $2½ billion or $3 billion in interests only. The hon. member for Saint-Hyacinthe (Mr. Wagner) said recently we should have increased that debt by $4 billion or perhaps $5 billion. We say that instead of going into debt with figure makers, we should use the Bank of Canada. Let us have its new governor write the figures which are necessary to the normal development of a country like ours. Then Mr. Speaker, we would be able to bring in a progressive budget, a budget of initiatives, in short a budget which would really serve the superior interests of the Canadian nation.

Mr. Yvon L'Heureux (Chambly): Mr. Speaker, I am particularly pleased to take part in the debate on the budget and to express my satisfaction on behalf on my constituents concerning the measures proposed by the minister to fight unemployment and to reduce taxes for the middle class and the low-income group. I was particularly pleased to see that the old age security pension and the veterans pension were to be increased.

The Minister of Finance (Mr. Turner) brought in a realistic budget which aims at controlling inflation and fighting unemployment. He even specifies that 300,000 new jobs will be created. This is auspicious and likely to give confidence again to manufacturers and businessmen. We rely on their investments to create new jobs.

Mr. Speaker, a great portion of my riding is industrial: Boucherville, Saint-Bruno and Saint-Hubert, Chambly and Belœil have well organized industrial parks. For example, Boucherville, Saint-Bruno and Saint-Hubert have agreed to take advantage of the new facilities offered by Quebec Industry and Commerce Minister Saint-Pierre who made funds available to them to help pay qualified commissioners and to interest other industries in settling in the area.

The Department of Regional Economic Expansion paid to date several million dollars in my riding and I recently heard the new incumbent of this department (Mr. Jamieson) say that a review of those programs would be made and that even more substantial benefits would be granted to small and large industries.

In another part of my riding, we find heavy industries. Mr. Speaker, this could be the Canadian Ruhr if only the government accepted to build deep water wharves on the south shore at Varennes and Contrecœur. I made representations to have some of the Montreal harbour facilities moved to the south shore but without result. The officials talk nonsense. One day they say yes, the other they say no, and discussions have been going on for 15 years. I am fed up with those stupidities. I urge the minister to approve the establishment of industries such as Gulf Oil Limited in Varennes and others such as The Steel Co. of Canada Ltd. and Dosco Steel Division, Dominion Steel and Coal Corporation Limited in Contrecœur, that employ thousands of people. We must act.

Mr. Speaker, the economy of the south shore, and especially of my constituency, is at stake. Several heavy industries lack only the permission to go ahead with planned expansion. Branches are planned at Varennes and Contrecœur. Heavy industry naturally covets this site, and the construction of wharves there is of the first importance.

I suggest that we do without the intermediary of the Port of Montreal, which has too many problems to face. I again call on the minister to study this situation so that a decision may be taken without further delay, for unless it is, the south shore will continue to be an underprivileged area.

I was pleased that the Speech from the Throne mentioned that the question of feed grain would be dealt with in this session. Bravo! The dairy industry, too, should continue to benefit from a dynamic policy, so that farmers may be assured of a just and equitable income.

I should like also to congratulate the Minister of State for Urban Affairs (Mr. Basford), who is responsible for the Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation, on having made it possible for more young and not-so-young people to have their own homes and to move to my constituency, which is the natural dormitory for the city of Montreal.

There is some amazing development going on in my area. Serious promoters and contractors are helping to develop this small stretch of land that has become a marvellous place thanks to the new facilities I mentioned just now.

In my constituency, there is also a part of the Chambly canal which, since last June, has been transferred from the jurisdiction of the Minister of Transport to that of the National Parks Branch of the Department of Indian Affairs and Northern Development. Built over a century ago, this canal is in an appalling condition besides harming considerably the normal evolution of the Chambly area. The obsolete bridges built for horse-driven carriages should have been replaced years ago to conform with minimum standards acceptable to modern traffic.

The construction of a detour to the highway at present closed to traffic has become necessary on account of the canal. The Richelieu River, which hit critical levels for the last three years, threatens to create a situation which could prove catastrophic this spring. And despite those urgent needs, among so many others, various papers in this country have been literally shocked at the sight of the credits granted Quebec by the federal government.

I do not want favours for the Chambly constituency, but only that works which have been delayed for too long and which are absolutely necessary be carried out if this area is to achieve normal economic development.

Finally, Mr. Speaker, I urge the responsible minister to make a list of the credits voted for the Canadian canal system. He will see that Chambly canal over 20 years has received only poor grants compared with the Trent and Rideau canals. Chambly, a historical site because of its fort and its monuments, has a particular touristic role to play. In fact, the American people coming from New York take the canal, stop at the Chambly marina, follow the Richelieu river to Beloeil where, again, a marina is to be found. Those marinas probably have benefited from help, for the tourist industry is necessary and has importance for our country. And that magnificent district could benefit from help given those marinas. But up to now, they are the concern of benevolent organizations still at work, but which should not be discouraged, because they do care for the valuable aid they could obtain and that could benefit the whole area.

I hope that the minister will seriously consider these requests. He can be sure that I will renew my requests in order to get justice for that region.

Presently a study jointly conducted by the federal and provincial governments aims at cleaning the Richelieu river and at the diversion into that river of the Chambly canal, which I mentioned a while ago, where old bridges are on the verge of falling down. However that study is proceeding at a snail's pace. Three provincial and three federal engineers are carrying out that study. I recently heard that two were going to resign to take up new positions. In my opinion, the task should be entrusted to an independent study group, the matter being so important that decisions should be taken without delay to do justice to that area which experiences troubles and problems and I am asking the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development (Mr. Chrétien) and the Quebec government to resume that study after having entrusted it to an independent organization.

Mr. Speaker, all the demands are surely timely because I have been interested in public administration for over 28 years. I was elected to work constructively with a party and a team which I trust and support. However, we must take into consideration the claims and difficulties of which the government is probably unaware. I do not wish to speak about my background, but I have examined those problems and I would like some assistance to solve them in the interests of my constituents.

[English]

Mr. Bill Clarke (Vancouver Quadra): Mr. Speaker, I rise to speak for the first time in this House and I hasten to join other hon. members in congratulating Mr. Speaker on his re-appointment as well as Mr. Deputy Speaker on his appointment. Other hon. members have spoken in glowing terms of their past association with Mr. Speaker. I cannot do that, inasmuch as I did not know Your Honour until a few weeks ago, but I have come to respect the Chair and admire the many capabilities of its occupants.

As I make my contribution to this budget debate, I will propose some radical changes which, I believe, have not been heard in this House previously. I shall develop a case for the elimination of taxes on personal incomes and the substitution of a tax on personal spending.

But first, I would like to say that I have observed another tradition in the House, which is to include in a maiden speech a detailed account of one's own riding. If I say that I have been pleased to have lived there for 17 years, that should say quite a lot about Vancouver Quadra. However, it may be helpful to what I am going to say to explain that Vancouver Quadra is probably a choice example of an urban residential riding. Vancouver Quadra stretches two thirds of the way across the centre of the city of Vancouver. It is eight miles from end to end, and varies in depth from one and a half to two and a half miles. It is the only riding in Vancouver that has boundaries in common with each of the four other ridings in the city. It contains no industry; the commercial areas are principally neighbourhood oriented; and there is not a single major shopping centre.

Although Vancouver Quadra is quite different from some rural ridings with their enormous distances, and from some of the high rise ridings of the big cities, the residential cross-section is complete. We have new high rise apartments and ancient walk ups. We have luxurious stone mansions and modest frame cottages. We have the university residences, low income housing, old folks homes, an army base, and even a youth hostel. These buildings are all called "home" by their occupants—the people, the families who live in Vancouver Quadra.

These are the families that the Minister of Finance (Mr. Turner) has overlooked in his budget. Yet, he said he had produced a family budget. Now, Mr. Speaker, the minister is a smooth talker and is well known for this quality. He may have been able to smooth over the rough spots, and the morning after budget night it is possible that many families thought the minister was truly their knight in shining armour.

I am sure that nobody on this side of the House, least of all the Leader of the Official Opposition (Mr. Stanfield), would condemn the budget in total. Our leader has been trying to sell this package to the government for years. Just think of his policies on the issues of tax cuts, pensions, and unemployment. But by now the analysts have had a chance to dig deeper into Turner's maze, and the media are telling the whole story. In short, as one editorial put it, there is less to it than meets the eye at first glance.

I will not repeat the words of previous speakers on this side of the House except to say that the people in Vancouver Quadra are now aware that the budget lacks the incentives to business which would ease the unemployment problem; lacks incentives to Canadians to invest in Canadian business; and lacks policies to combat inflation. They have heard that a Conservative government would have gone full speed on expansion of the economy and would have introduced temporary controls on prices and incomes. This is what the voters in Vancouver Quadra said they wanted last October 30.

There are no farms in my riding, Mr. Speaker, but the residents of Vancouver Quadra have had a chance to wonder why the family owners of small businesses should be less entitled to pass them on free of capital gains tax than should the family owners of farms. The government's policy of discrimination was undoubtedly arbitrarily political. It has no basis in logic. But my constituents have been disappointed in Liberal budgets before, and they have been disappointed in the Liberal government for years. They can recall the early days of tax reform when the government said that the primary aims of tax reform were equity and simplicity. They know that the Liberals have given us neither.

My constituents have been frightened and confused by white papers. They have seen business decisions postponed because of uncertainty about taxation. There is no telling how much unemployment can be attributed directly to this uncertainty. It is an accepted fact that businessmen will work under any given set of rules, but it is an equally well accepted fact that the one thing that businessmen cannot tolerate is uncertainty about those rules. When businessmen are faced with uncertainty about the rules they pull back on the reins and, as a result, there is a general slowdown of business activity. This slowdown costs jobs. Some of my friends at home have given up waiting for the government to untangle the tax mess. They cannot understand the new tax law themselves, so they go to some of my fellow chartered accountants who are in the tax advisory business. These professional tax advisers are unable to give any more than the most basic advice on taxation, in spite of the fact that some of them have done little but study the government's tax reform for years.

The minister had a chance truly to reform his predecessor's so-called tax reform, which has been so justly criticized, but the only reform this budget contains is the removal of one arbitrary restriction on small businesses. Now, they can invest their surplus funds in other Canadian companies on terms equal to those granted to foreign investors. Wasn't that a nice gift? After the Minister of Finance takes away the whole loaf, Mr. Speaker, he expects people to appreciate it when he gives back the crumbs.

The real test of the budget is yet to come. The government says it got the message on October 30 of last year. Well, Mr. Speaker, just wait until after April 30 this year, after the taxpayer has had to wrestle with the new simplified tax return, complete with schedules in glorious colour. Then, the government will get a real message from the voters. What we really need, in addition to the policies we have heard from my colleagues, is some real tax reform with simplicity and equity.

I would like to ask hon. members to reflect for a moment on the origin of income tax. Most of the members were not even born 56 years ago, and certainly only a very few could remember that horrifying day in 1917 when the government of Canada first imposed a tax on incomes. Of course, it was a temporary measure, its purpose being merely to cover the costs of the Great War. In fact, Mr. Speaker, until 1949 when we had a major revision of the tax law it was known at the Income War Tax Act. Now, we have the distinction of paying 10,000 civil servants to see that we pay the proper amount of income tax. The estimated cost of operating the Income Tax Department for the coming year is $153 million, nearly five times as much as the cost of operating the whole House of Commons for the same period.

In addition to that, the people of Canada must bear the cost of legal and accounting assistance to help determine what amount of income is considered taxable, and to advise us of the tax consequences of our every move. Bitter disputes are commonplace, and invasion of privacy becomes ever more frequent. So much for simplicity, Mr. Speaker.

Now let us have a look at equity. The present system is often thought of as being a tax on the rich. If one thinks about it, one can see that the rich man cares little about rates of tax on incomes. The income tax does not tax his wealth. Income tax is a tax, not on the rich but on the poor who are willing to work hard to become rich. Income tax is a disincentive. It discourages hard working and able Canadians from their good endeavours, and even has caused some of them to leave the country taking their labour, capital and initiative with them. We have a strange tax system, Mr. Speaker. Instead of taxing what a person takes out of the economy in consumption we tax what a person puts into the economy. We tax labour, by wages and salaries tax, we tax savings by tax on investment income; we tax initiative by capital gains tax.

Surely a more equitable measure of ability to pay tax is what a person takes out of the economy in consumption. If the amount of consumption were taxed, the result would be the equitable situation of everyone paying in direct proportion to his material standard of living. What could be fairer? A man would not be penalized for doing well and saving his money. Young people would find it very much easier to save up for furniture or a house. Such a system would have the added advantage of simplicity, and gone would be the annual tax nightmare. Gone would be the huge government police force, and gone would be the endless arguments about the amount subject to tax. This system of taxation was thoroughly discussed in a 1955 book by Nicholas Kaldor, a noted British economist and adviser to the British Labour Party.

[Mr. Clarke.]

There is also a precedent for this idea in this country. Already the government allows individuals to save up to $4,000 per annum tax free in a registered retirement savings plan. This money is taxed when it is taken out of the plan and spent, usually after the taxpayer has retired. Look at the effect of this idea on a young family starting out—and much is said about the difficulties facing them. At present, two young people working side by side to make a start for their family are forced to pay a vast portion of their income in tax, even though their consumer expenditures are very low. My suggestion would allow them to get a boost by paying a tax only on the amount they spend. Similarly, those on low incomes would pay little in tax, and high living Canadians would pay their fair share based on their high expenditures.

It may be said that such a system would be regressive. Well, Mr. Speaker, if it is the desire of any government to have equity and simplicity in a tax system it should be obvious that the existing system has so many faults that it is incapable of reform. In that regard, I should observe that it has a great similarity to the government of the day. So, Mr. Speaker, I say that 56 years of experience with a patched up system that taxes incomes has been a flop. I advocate the elimination of personal income taxes, together with all the problems and faults that have come along with such taxes since 1917. I encourage in-put to our society by freedom from tax, and recommend the institution of a tax on expenditure or consumption.

Mr. Leonard Hopkins (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of National Defence): First of all, Mr. Speaker, I wish to congratulate the Minister of Finance (Mr. Turner) upon bringing in what in fact is a typical Liberal budget. In addition to the increases for old age pensioners and veterans, and the reduction of taxes generally, I express to him and to the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Whelan) our appreciation in rural Ontario for the removal of the capital gains tax on the family farm. I also observe with great satisfaction that we are to have a considerable increase in expenditures for the Department of National Defence, to the tune of $236 million, which is approximately a 12½ per cent increase.

I would like first to draw attention to the National Capital Commission. Our country is rich in history, and particularly in local history. We have not and do not put the kind of emphasis on our past that the people of pioneer days deserve. For example, the names of the counties clasped in the V of the Ottawa and St. Lawrence Rivers—Stormont, Dundas and Glengarry—ring like the echoes of an old hunting horn. Here the Macdonells, disbanded from the Royal Regiment of New York, were first in occupation. Other Scots followed and established the same tightly knit communities as in their native highlands. They adopted the routines of their French-Canadian neighbours, serving their land from May to October and going into the lumber camps for the rest of the year. By the 1860's, there were men of substance among them, and timber had become their business, so that they were acutely conscious of the receding forest. Their eyes were on the Ottawa valley where magnificent stands abounded, but this area was in fee to Montreal by virtue of the river route. Hence, their thoughts turned to railways and the possibility of a local line which would link up with the systems of New England, whose markets clamoured for Canadian lumber.

The value of railways was exemplified during the Fenian invasion of the Niagara Peninsula on May 1, 1866. F. W. Cumberland, General Manager of the Northern Railway, received orders to concentrate the militia to meet the enemy; within 24 hours he had delivered 1,240 men at the threatened point, and twice that number were on their way. The invasion was over before it had begun. Perhaps we can say, Mr. Speaker, that Mobile Command is something that was not born just yesterday. Therefore, security, the profit motive and the status symbol of the railway business made this an attractive business to men of energy and ambition.

In the years immediately following 1871, a series of railways were built between Montreal and Ottawa. In 1879, a man by the name of J. R. Booth who was born in 1826 at Waterloo in the eastern townships came on the scene. At an early age he had learned the routines of railway construction in Vermont. In 1852 he arrived at Hull as helper in the construction of a sawmill; within a matter of months he was in the timber business for himself. From an initial venture at Chaudière Falls, his interests rapidly spread until he owned 7,000 square miles of timber limits in the Ottawa valley as well as substantial holdings in other parts of the province. He was among the first to develop his own sales organization in the United States and his press for business grew beyond the capacity of the water route to Montreal. Hence, he was advised by his personal expert to go into the railroad business to transport his timber and lumber to market. He formed the Canada Atlantic Railway Company along with his partners William Perley of Ottawa and G. C. Noble of St. Albans.

On September 13, 1882 the first train steamed into the capital from Coteau Landing on the St. Lawrence. The Canada Atlantic succeeded from the start. What had begun as a timber carrier quickly became a general purpose railway traversing a wealthy area. A western extension along the Ottawa valley which would serve not only the Booth mills but the growing market towns, Arnprior, Renfrew and Pembroke, grew necessary. Beyond these settlements a vast expanse of merchantable forest awaited exploitation, and this necessitated the building of a new railroad up the Ottawa valley.

On March 24, 1888 the Ottawa, Arnprior and Renfrew Railway Company was incorporated to build the first 55 miles westward from the Canadian capital. Six weeks later, the Ottawa and Parry Sound Railway Company was entrusted with the construction of 157 miles between Renfrew and Scotia, on the Toronto-Callander branch of the Grand Trunk. The two companies were merged as the Ottawa, Arnprior and Parry Sound Railway. Construction began immediately in both directions from Renfrew to be completed in the following stages: Ottawa-Arnprior, 38 miles, opened May, 1893; Arnprior-Madawaska Junction, 93 miles, opened September, 1894; Madawaska Junction-Cache Lake, 36 miles, opened May 1895; and Cache Lake-Scotia, 46 miles, opened December 1, 1896. This was perhaps the first railway of any importance to be both financed and built by Canadians. At times 2,000 men were at work; the roadbed rose and the steel went down with the swing and precision which were the hallmarks of the Booth enterprises.

On October 5, 1896 the J. R. Booth group took over and completed the Parry Sound Colonization Railway between Scotia and Parry Sound. Another subsidiary, the Pembroke Southern Railway Company built 21 miles of track to join the town of Pembroke with the Canada Atlantic at Golden Lake, 88 miles west of Ottawa. This project cost $264,500 of which $139,500 represented federal, provincial and municipal subsidies. Therefore, Mr. Speaker, we can readily assume that regional development programs did not start yesterday.

At one stage a passenger could buy a ticket at the town of Renfrew for 75 cents and receive not only a round trip ticket for 117 miles of travel, but also a 50 cent seat at the Ottawa Opera House. The J. R. Booth railways eventually ended up in the CNR system; and today the line is still in operation from Ottawa to Arnprior, Renfrew, Eganville, Golden Lake, Wilno, Barry's Bay, Madawaska and Whitney on the edge of Algonguin Park.

It is my proposal to the national capital commission that a passenger train for tourist traffic could be developed as a great attraction, because all these places in the Ottawa valley and the Madawaska valley as well as the timber resources of that area have played such a major role in the area history and economic life of our national capital of Ottawa. Tourists visiting Ottawa could travel to Algonquin Park on a train that should be modelled after those of the pioneer days. We might even bring back the so-called old-fashioned steamer and the pot bellied stove in the coach if the Minister of the Environment would permit it, Mr. Speaker. Not only would the train ride be of an original nature for the tourist traffic, but passengers would be free to get off at any community along the line to play golf, go fishing, water ski, to stay at a resort area for a day or a week, or to go skiing, skidooing at Mount Madawaska at Barry's Bay, or go on hikes through Algonquin Park. Other forms of attraction would be limitless, including the natural beauty and history of the region. The old station buildings along the way could be rejuvenated or rebuilt, to serve as entertainment centres as well as places to purchase tickets; though I doubt very much if they could purchase a ticket for the National Arts Centre for 50 cents. Not only would this be an added attraction for Ottawa as a capital city, but it would bring back the prominent economic relationship between the valley and our nation's capital.

In summary, Mr. Speaker, I make this proposal in all seriousness because we, as Canadians, have a habit of destroying those things of our past history rather than preserving and promoting them. Therefore, I call upon the National Capital Commission, the various historical societies up and down the valley, to back this project before it is too late and the rail line is destroyed in the name of progress, hence destroying one of the most romantic symbols of Ottawa valley history. May I also appeal through you, Mr. Speaker, to Ottawa City Council to back this proposal so that relationships between Ottawa and its valley communities will prove of great value to all concerned.

Mr. Speaker, I should now like to go on to another item of primary importance to me and every Canadian, that is the increase in the defence budget of 12½ per cent, something that is not only needed in order to take the strain off many areas of departmental personnel at this time, but is also necessary if we are going to keep pace with modern equipment, training and everyday demands on the members of our armed forces. We do hear complaints about the spending estimates of the Department of National Defence from time to time but this, I believe, is basically because the critics, who intend to be sincere in their comments, really do not fully realize the extent and depth of the operations, the demands and the expertise of the men and women in the forces. Fortunately, most people do fully understand their impact on Canada and the world at large.

Historically, the Canadian forces have pioneered in virtually every major field necessary for getting into the Arctic, living there and working in the extreme climatic conditions. Most of the airfields and airstrips which are now under the Department of Transport or civilian jurisdiction were started by military forces. The fear of the Arctic which was a major drawback to any northern venture before the Second World War, was largely overcome by the presence of the search and rescue organization of the forces. If people know that the government is going to look for them if they are lost or forced down, the fear of non-survival is substantially reduced.

In the post-war period, when the Royal Canadian Air Force was photographing the whole of Canada, their operations took them into every corner of the high Arctic. The maps which resulted from these efforts made navigation possible. New techniques for air navigation were worked out by the forces, which were adopted by the United States Air Force and civil operators and provided for accurate air travel where the magnetic compass was useless. At the same time, army ground survey parties were adding to the knowledge and topography of Canada with new data for maps and a mapping section.

• (1710)

The army, too, for nearly 20 years maintained the Northwest Highway system.

The navy pushed the first large ship, the icebreaker HMCS Labrador, through the northwest passage, showing the way for future commercial ventures.

Communications in those early days were primitive. From 1946 to 1964, the forces constructed and operated the Northwest Territories and Yukon radio system, which was finally taken over by CN Telecommunications. The DEW line, too, provides radio communications which up to now would have been economically impossible for small civil use but became more and more important to north-south communications for civilians.

As communications improved and airfields became available, as maps were produced, as navigation became possible, as fuel was available and as the fear of northern flying was dissipated, more and more civilians pushed north for a wide variety of reasons, many of them economic. This is only a short list of the major contributions made to northern development by Canadian forces.

I would like now to speak about the training of the Canadian forces and their preparation for tasking by the government in both their national and international roles.

[Mr. Hopkins.]

The people of Canada and, I think, many members of this House, assume, and rightly assume, that the Canadian forces can do just about any job that is given to them. We assume that they have such training and such expertise in thousands of specialities that they can go into any environment, on land, on the sea or in the air, and do what we ask of them. In recent years we have asked them to fly into the middle of a shooting war between India and Pakistan, to pick up Canadian civilians. We have asked them to fly 4,000 miles south to earthquake-ravaged Peru on a humanitarian mission for Canada, and to operate off tiny airstrips high in the Andes evacuating the sick and the injured. We ask them to buck North Atlantic gales to rescue the crews of foundered vessels. We ask them to parachute into the scene of a crashed aircraft, with all the survival skills and medical knowledge necessary to save the crash victims. We have asked them to operate in the deserts of North Africa and in the heat of Yemen, in the jungles of the Congo and the mountains of the Himalayas for the United Nations. We have asked them to control and clean up a giant oil spill on the east coast of Canada. We have asked them to build six airfields in the high Arctic, to serve both civilian and military air traffic. We asked them to dive 2,000 feet into the sea in highly sophisticated submersibles and to take a good look at our Continental shelf. We have asked them to keep under constant surveillance the million and a half square miles that we designate as the Canadian north. And, most recently, we have asked them to assume the dangerous and delicate role of supervising the cease fire in Viet Nam.

These are just examples taken at random. But in each of these instances they have done what we asked of them without question, and with a skill and professionalism which has often drawn international praise. However, the variety of tasks that we give to our soldiers, sailors and airmen taxes them almost to the limit. All of this requires a lot of training to bring the new recruits up to the high standards required by the forces and to keep the old hands up-to-date with ever-expanding technology, a technology which is often reflected first in the vehicles and weapons of defence. That is why we need an increased defence allocation in the budget. This training requires a large and highly professional teaching and instructional staff. It needs schools and sophisticated training facilities and training aids. It needs—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. I regret having to interrupt the hon. member, but the time allotted to him has expired.

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

SUBJECT MATTER OF QUESTIONS TO BE DEBATED

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Before calling on the next hon. member to speak, it is my duty, pursuant to Standing Order 40, to inform the House that the questions to be raised tonight at the time of adjournment are as follows: the hon. member for York-Sunbury (Mr. Howie)—National Defence—Alleged exclusion of Gagetown from bases sharing funds for labour-intensive projects; the hon.

member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles)—Social Security—Retired public servants, armed forces personnel and RCMP pensions—Status of consideration of raising or removing ceiling on escalation; the hon. member for Vancouver-Quadra (Mr. Clarke)—National Defence—Jericho Land, Vancouver—Inquiry as to calling of tenders concerning disposal.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

THE BUDGET

FINANCIAL STATEMENT OF THE MINISTER OF FINANCE

The House resumed consideration of the motion of Hon. John N. Turner (Minister of Finance) that this House approve in general the budgetary policy of the government.

Mr. Gus Mitges (Grey-Simcoe): Mr. Speaker, those of us who are privileged to sit in this House for the first time find ourselves caught in a set of unique circumstances, many which have had the effect of thrusting freshman members into the thick of the fray sooner than it has been customary. At least, that is the impression I get from some veteran members, Mr. Speaker. Speaking for myself, I have been struck by the excellence of some of the speeches given by some of my colleagues, on both sides of the House who, as I am, are sitting in the House for the first time. I am also impressed by the way the new men appear to be so eager to be involved in the business of the House and in committee work. If I may remain on that issue for another moment or two, I believe that my party in this House is fortunate in many respects. For one thing, we new members have an exceptionally talented and knowledgeable group of veteran members to lead us through the difficult days of learning our way around. In my view they have made it possible for us to become effective members in a shorter time than I would have expected.

As to the budget, Mr. Speaker, I do not intend to try to take this budget item by item and expose its deficiencies. This has been done most effectively by my leader and many of my colleagues. I understand that in budget debates a member can digress and dwell on issues that for him or her have a special meaning or interest. This is what I would like to do; and while I will not guarantee that all of my colleagues will agree with everything I say, I would be less than honest if I were to let that fact deter me from my course. To set the stage for my remarks, I would refer my colleagues to a statement made by the mover of the Address in Reply to the Speech from the Throne on January 5, the hon. member for Nipissing (Mr. Blais). As recorded on page 25 of Hansard for that date he said:

> I am sure that no member of this House was directed by his or her constituents to come to the House to squelch debate.

I give the freshman member for Nipissing full marks for that observation, Mr. Speaker, but I cannot extend the same charity to the seconder of the Address in Reply to the Speech from the Throne, the hon. member for Lachine (Mr. Blaker). As recorded on page 28 of Hansard for January 5, he said:

> Many of us had thought that the great debate on Canadian unity was over;—

What a statement that was, Mr. Speaker. I referred to those statements because I intend to speak for a few minutes on the question of national unity. National unity is one of the subjects closest to my heart, Mr. Speaker, and I will question some of the misconceptions that are presently being bandied about by some people for purely personal and partisan purposes.

In the first place, Mr. Speaker, no thinking person in Canada could accept the statement that the debate on national unity is over. The debate on national unity will continue long after those of us here have gone to a better or a worse place. I will refer to one more statement in Hansard before I continue. As recorded, on page 58 of Hansard for January 8, the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) said:

> It is obvious, Mr. Speaker, that the question of national unity has not been solved in this country.

The Prime Minister should know that better than anyone, Mr. Speaker. During the terms of the last two governments, and especially during the term of the present government, the cause of national unity has deteriorated as at no other time in our history. Canadian voters tried to tell the Prime Minister just that on October 30 last year; and while he admits that that is so, I still do not believe that he or his government plan to alter their stand on the issue. There is great danger that too many people in Canada today will accept the view of the hon. member for Lachine, that we should not engage in any further dialogue on the question of unity. The hon. member must be afraid that his views on the subject will not stand scrutiny and he must be afraid that his views will not stand the test of dialogue.

After the recent election, the Prime Minister complained that there were members of this House who had used racism in their election campaigns; so far he has not yet named any names, and I doubt if he will. The Prime Minister has said, Mr. Speaker, that there will not be real unity in Canada until we in English Canada accept the fact that we are a bilingual country. We accepted that fact back in 1966; all of us accept that fact today. Yet, what do we see today? Almost daily on CBC television we see evidence that the Quebec separatist movement is growing as it has never grown before in our long history.

Whatever we are doing to achieve national unity and weld our people together in a common bond is not working. That is the main reason I believe we should undertake further study of the problem; and we should not be afraid of dialogue. It is when people do not talk about problems that the small problems develop into big problems. I do not mean the small, whimsical comments of the type characterized by the Prime Minister when he said that bilingualism will be a fact when a French Canadian can go to Vancouver and order a hamburger in French. This is not what the issue is about, but the trouble is that there have been too many people talking in just that way about a very serious problem.

I have read and heard, Mr. Speaker, that whenever anyone dared to stand up and ask questions about this subject, he was branded a bigot. If I worried about such things as that, Mr. Speaker, I would not be here. I happen to care a great deal about where we are going and I am concerned about what will happen to us if people continue to use the issues of race and language for political gain. In my case, I am a Canadian of Greek heritage. I am proud of my heritage, but I would not let it stand in my way of being a Canadian because that is exactly what I am. I do not want a hyphen in front of my name. I am not prepared to go along with anyone who proposes policies that will dilute or diminish the strength of Canadianism, not as an alternative but as a fundamental and basic philosophy.

Last Friday the Leader of the Opposition said in this House that we need in Canada an effective government, an honest government, a government that can be trusted. I cannot help feeling that that is at the root of most, if not all, of our problems in Canada today. We do indeed need honest government in Canada, a government that has the trust of the people, if we are to move forward and root out the real causes of dissent and disruption in our country. There is a group in Canada that professes to present the Canadian viewpoint, Mr. Speaker. They make a lot of noise, but they are not the answer. The Committee for an Independent Canada is not presenting or pushing the cause of Canadianism. They are anti-American, first and last, and that is negative. What I want to see is a government that will inspire people throughout our country to proclaim their Canadianism. I am a Canadian because I want to be, and in my view anyone who lives here and shares the bounty of Canada should be just as willing and anxious to say the same.

The Prime Minister keeps coming up with ad hoc policies designed to demonstrate his feeling for the different cultures in our country. Since money is no object to this government, he offers everyone and anyone money to do his or her thing. We do not need government assistance to divide our people into cultural segments. We need a government that will recognize the clear fact that the majority of the people in our country want to be recognized as Canadians and that everything else we want to do will be made easier if we take that logical step.

I hear that we must hurry and erect barriers here and there to preserve our cultures from exposure to other societies, such as that in the United States. People complain that we are becoming Americanized and that we must take action to reverse the situation. Again, Mr. Speaker, this is palpable nonsense. All the world is changing; people are changing and countries are changing. Anything that cannot stand up to exposure to other cultures and ideas is not worth saving. It would be working against natural forces, against nature itself, and it would mean that we would have to adopt a policy of isolation.

The only cultures, in my view, that we as Canadians must work to preserve in their pure form are the cultures of our native peoples, the Indians and Eskimos. Their cultures are distinct from any other on the continent and they should be preserved. These people differ in their viewpoints, in their living and work habits and in their approach to the whole process of living. In many cases these people choose to move into the mainstream of Canadian life and so they will decide for themselves how much or how little of their native culture to keep. But, where people want to live in their own regions in a style of life different from our own, they must be encouraged and assisted. And, Mr. Speaker, they must be protected.

A final point on this subject might best be summed up by saying that our Canadian culture is only in danger of extinction if and when we admit that it is, and I do not admit that there is any real danger. As long as people talk openly and honestly about what they are, what they want to be and how this might be accomplished, there is no way that a small or even a large group of separatist rabble can accomplish the breakup of our country.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

• (1730)

Mr. Albert Béchard (Bonaventure-Îles-de-la-Madeleine): Mr. Speaker, each time I have the opportunity to rise in this House, I am always honored by the impressing attendance of my colleagues and this is most stimulating for me.

The budget speech of February 19 last is a new example of this government's concern about the individual's welfare and about those most in need. Indeed a host of measures announced in this speech are aimed at giving to the average Canadian and to the have-nots a more equitable share of our national resources through more generous tax cuts and for our pensioners notably increased pensions.

As underlined by the Minister of Finance himself (Mr. Turner), the objective of this budget is to reduce unemployment and inflation pressures, to eliminate the ill effects of past inflation, to increase take-home pay and to give to our senior citizens a more equitable share of our country's affluence so as to contribute to a balanced economic expansion throughout Canada.

No wonder this budget is welcome at all levels of our economy. The opposition finance critic, the hon. member for Edmonton West (Mr. Lambert), having no serious criticism to make and dumbfounded as he was—and as everyone opposite was that night in the face of such an achievement by the Minister of Finance—merely criticized the minister and the government for borrowing from his party's platform, for having taken into account the needs of Canadians and for at last becoming aware of the situation of our senior citizens.

Who are those Conservatives to give lectures on the right of our senior citizens to government consideration when throughout the whole history of Sir John A. MacDonald's great party with their adulation or supposed adulation for our senior citizens, they barely managed to pay them $19 a month as compared with $82.88 and $155 which they now receive and $100 and $170 they will get starting April 1, 1973? They should be ashamed of such a meagre record. They are truly conservatives. To them this is not only a word, it is reality.

Instead of whimpering because, for instance, the minister announced a better formula than the one advocated by the leader of the official opposition (Mr. Stanfield) to eliminate the erosion of the purchasing power caused by inflation and progressive taxation, he should have rejoiced. If the leader of the official opposition was serious, as I think he was when he made that suggestion, he should not recriminate because the Canadian citizen will have a better fate thanks to the beneficial action of this government. We would also have thought that the budget, which according to them is nothing but plagiarism, would not have prompted them to bring in a non-confidence motion. Since when, unless someone is off his rocker or marked by trappistine austerity, do we scourge ourselves and censure ourselves? It becomes more and more evident that the official opposition, its leader included, has only one purpose: Power at all costs. In the pursuit of that objective, whether the legislation is good or not, the main interest is to defeat the government.

I do not venture to claim that the budget will solve all the social and economic problems of today. Besides, what budget has ever performed such a feat? However, undeniably it will somewhat benefit the security and welfare of a great many Canadians. The economic consequences of increased old-age security pensions, veterans' allowances as well as substantial lowering of income tax, elimination of sales tax on some products and of customs duties on some goods cannot but bring great relief, particularly to lower income groups.

It is customary for the debate on the budget speech to provide an opportunity for hon. members to speak about their constituencies and the needs of their constituents. For the benefit of those who might not be over-familiar with the geography of the province of Quebec, I shall say that my constituency comprises two totally different areas. The first is the continental area—Bonaventure—located on the South-East coast of the Gaspé peninsula, north of Chaleur Bay and adjoining the province of New Brunswick. This area extends over more than 150 miles from East to West, and includes 38 localities, 30 of which are organized as municipalities. The second region comprises the Magdelen Islands, 150 miles from the coasts of the Gaspé peninsula, in the Gulf of St. Lawrence, covering an area of some 75 miles from East to West. These islands comprise 12 different localities, six of which are organized as rural municipalities. The population of the islands is close to 14,000 inhabitants, totalling, with Bonaventure, 56,700.

The main industries of these regions are fisheries, agriculture, forestry and tourism. In order to function as decently as possible and in a competitive way, they need increasingly easy access to foreign markets and to the major business centres. An adequate transportation system, at reasonable rates, is a primary necessity. Our fishermen and businessmen need modern harbour facilities, in keeping with their needs.

In so far as sea ports are concerned, there have been important improvements in the Magdalen Islands, as well as at Bonaventure, especially during the past years, although much remains to be done. For instance, the construction of the multipurpose harbour of Cap-aux-Meules is not yet completed. There has been proscratination for over a year as to the site of an unloading docks for the ferry Manic. The construction of the fishing harbour at l'Étant-du-Nord was postponed because of last year's delay in asking for tenders. I may say we are grateful to the minister directly on my right for obtaining this harbour last year.

Moreover, in order to retain a large number of fishermen in their industry, a suitable fishing harbour has been demanded for years in the Millerand area, more specifically in the municipality of Havre Aubert in the Magdalen Islands. Until now, we have been living on hope. It is essential that this work start this year if the number of welfare recipients is to be kept down, otherwise it would mean a further outlay of public funds. Entry Island has been retained as an unloading harbour. What has been done to date in order to improve conditions there other than letting the only wharf go to rot until fall, when a call for tenders will be made for long awaited repairs?

When one considers, Mr. Speaker, that this wharf is the only point from which the fish can be shipped to outside markets, and the only supply point for the island, one can easily wonder about the efficiency of our planners.

Still with regard to fishing, I am willing to recognize that there must be some centralization of our port facilities, for instance with regard to offshore fishing, in view, among other things, of the size of our modern fishing fleets and the fishing boats themselves. Such centralization results in better facilities for the fishermen, facilities better adapted to their needs. I am also willing to recognize that centralization for greater efficiency and better shelter is justified. However, I do not admit, and never will, that all the small harbours in the area should disappear, as has been the case in Bonaventure where over a distance of 100 miles, for instance, only three ports of harbours have been kept.

I sometimes wonder, Mr. Speaker, as you must also, what supergenius, what technocrat in need of publicity and, above all, promotion, wants to make sport of the fishermen by crossing out with a single stroke of his pen the facilities that are essential to fishing! As long as the sea produces lobster, there will be inshore fishermen. I wish the technocrats would understand that once and for all. The fisherman will therefore always need harbour facilities to bring in his catch and shelter his boat, unless the expert planners want us to go back to the mid 19th century, when the shore was often the only home port. Hippies develop in that direction!

Therefore, I call once more publicly for the development of harbour facilities for inshore fishermen from Port Daniel to Hopetown included, and especially in New Carlisle, in Bonaventure, in Ruisseau leBlanc which was favoured last year, in Caplan, as well as a proper maintenance of structures in Marcil's Lane and Shigawake. Fishermen are calling for it and wish to retain their livelihood rather than to live on welfare, which they will be forced to do if we go on listening to some technocrat dreamers who issue their orders from the top of their ivory tower!

The economy growth of the whole Gaspé peninsula as well as the Magdalen Islands was seriously threatened in the past and still is today for lack of proper transportation means. Now that highway 6 is being rebuilt thanks to a Canada-Quebec agreement for the economic development of eastern Quebec (Lower St. Lawrence, Gaspé peninsula, Magdalen Islands), to which the federal government makes a financial contribution of 50 per cent, we should develop an air transport policy. How many times did I say in this House that the Gaspé peninsula and my riding in particular had almost no air transport service at all? We are not less Canadians than others. I believe that it is no longer necessary for us to prove our devotion to the Canadian flag. But we should not be forever considered as simple-minded. Why should we be deprived of this basic modern link with other regions? We are calling for the setting up of a first class airline service for the Gaspé peninsula, on which passengers could rely because the carrier would keep to his schedule. Besides there is a splendid runway in Bonaventure, another one in Gaspé as well as in Havre-aux-Maisons, in the Magdalen Islands. The runway in Bonaventure, once improved and provided with the required instruments and facilities, could complete the network in our area. Why not develop it? With a little imagination, a first class service could pay for itself in our area. Subsidies, which are available elsewhere, would be just as welcomed in the Gaspé area, I believe. The mail which is so often delayed could come by air. Thus we could enjoy the same privileges or at least the same rights as those enjoyed by such remote areas as Newfoundland and British Columbia.

In the Islands, following numerous requests and representations of all kinds, the government created a roll on and roll off ferryboat service, operating between Prince Edward Island and Cap-aux-Meules, in the Magdalen Islands. While it is not the ideal solution, that ferryboat is a great improvement on what existed before. But what happened last summer clearly shows that it cannot fully meet the economic needs of the Magdalen Islands, especially with the increasing inflow of tourists in that beautiful area.

In addition, the trucks used for moving fish and perishables have a lot of difficulties finding room since they have no priority. It is urgent that this situation be corrected at least during the rush period between June and September. A parking lot should be provided on the Islands to relieve the approaches to the dock which are already overcrowded. The wharf I mentionned a while ago, intended for the ferry-boat, within the harbour should be built without delay in order to prevent unfortunate accidents. Because of the development of the tourist industry on the Islands, action should also be taken following the repeated requests for improving existing airport by extending the runways to give better access to larger aircrafts.

Since 1946, an interprovincial ferry service has been in operation between Dalhousie which is in the riding of the minister of Public Works (Mr. Dubé), in New Brunswick, and Miguasha which is in the riding of Bonaventure in the province of Quebec. Subsidies have been payed up until now to the operator of that boat. However, at the close of last season, the agreement between the Canadian Transport Commission and the present operator having expired, in spite of the many representations made to both the previous minister of Transport (Mr. Jamieson) and the Canadian Transport Commission, the future of that ferry service is still very uncertain. I hope it is only an impression because our area would then be set back 30 years. I cannot believe that a population which has been neglected to such a point in the immediate past will be forgotten. If both levels of government develop a tourist industry by establishing a national park, tourist facilities and areas, they will be driving away those they want to attract by depriving them of an absolutely necessary link between the two provinces.

The role played by the Canadian National Railways, Mr. Chairman, is becoming very important for the economy of our area. There was a time not so long ago when railways were the only means of transportation. It cannot be said that all is well in the best of possible worlds, at present. For some time especially in our area we have been witnessing a kind of dance of death involving railway stations and station masters, cleverly orchestrated and directed by the authorities of this Crown corporation, for efficiency and economy reasons, as they say. I should like for my own information and for the information of my constituents to hear details on the savings that will follow from the replacement of the station master by a janitor paid on commission, in view of the rent that he will be paid for his accommodation and the fantastic number of long distance calls that will be necessary, compared with the salary now paid to the station master. This is penny-wise and pound-foolish.

I wish to object once more to such an arbitrary and retrograde decision by the CNR in our area. Let me mention only one example. In Maria, Mr. Speaker, there is a hospital serving the community in a radius of more than 100 miles; it has a home for older people, one of the only medical clinics in the area, many dealers and businessmen; it is unthinkable that they should insist on depriving this community of a station master. Despite the very numerous representations made these past few years, I cannot understand this attitude and I hope that my message will reach the Canadian Transport Commission. I ask the Minister of Transport (Mr. Marchand) to use his influence and to order this agency to revise its decision to accept the request of the Canadian National Railways.

[English]

Mr. Dan McKenzie (Winnipeg South Centre): Mr. Speaker, it is customary, on the occasion of a member's maiden speech, to extol at great length the virtues of one's own riding. Traditionally, this has made maiden speeches rather prolonged and often tedious affairs. However, I am privileged in being able to forgo this practice for I know of no prose, poem or song that can enhance or do aesthetic justice to the beauty of Winnipeg and Manitoba and the friendliness of our people.

Although words prevent me from expressing an accolade fitting to the true splendour of western Canada, I am sure the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau), in view of his literary background and his party's showing in Manitoba on October 30, could recite some sort of verse for us. Let me assure him, though, that the ringing rhetoric of "fuddle-duddle" will not suffice. Hopefully, the Prime Minister's new set of songwriters are more adept lyricists than his last.

I have the privilege of representing a constituency that for many years was represented by one of the most able and well respected parliamentarians of our time. I refer, of course, to the Hon. Gordon Churchill. My only hope is that I, too, will be able to serve the people of Winnipeg South Centre, and Canada, in the same distinguished way.

The budget recently brought down by the Minister of Finance (Mr. Turner) is indicative of the manner in which the present government deals with problems. There is seldom any decisive leadership; rather, the government tends to meander along in a quandary until situations manifest themselves to such an extreme that action is unavoidable. Such is the case with the current budget. Some much needed proposals have been brought down, but only after the placing of great pressure upon the government from all sides, particularly the left.

The personal income tax cuts are a welcome measure, but this is a measure which has been long advocated by everyone, including the Economic Council of Canada. The $100 basic old age pension and the increase in veterans benefits are to be welcomed as beginnings. However, the government has proposed nothing to compensate these pensioners for the tremendous increase in food prices during the last year. Instead, the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Whelan) maintains that Canadians should be happy with our food prices because compared with certain other countries our prices are relatively low. A budget which does not explain how a government is going to reduce the rate of increase in the cost of living is not good enough.

The government continues its wild spending spree. At the time of the last budget in May, the Minister of Finance called for expenditures of $16.5 billion, a 10 per cent increase over the previous year. Now the Treasury Board has asked parliament for an additional $1.8 billion to cover the government's spending obligations between now and the end of the fiscal year, March 31. This means that within a period of two years, federal spending has gone up from $13.2 billion to $18.34 billion, a 35 per cent increase. The government, however, appears to have no intention of arresting these growing expenditures. This is evidenced by the Minister of Finance's recent announcement that the government plans to spend a record $19.3 billion of taxpayers' money in the coming fiscal year.

The situation is such that Canada's GNP is growing less quickly than is the percentage being spent by government. In 1971 the total value of goods and services produced by the public was $67 billion. Of this, the government's revenue share was 37.7 per cent, almost 10 per cent higher than in 1961. During this ten-year period the government's role as a purchaser of goods and services from the private sector increased by nearly 300 per cent. In terms of money, this was an increase from $7.9 billion to $22 billion.

These are the facts. What they mean is that under the present government, Canada is being slowly steered toward increased state control of our lives. The government does not appear to have any intention of curbing its spending, especially with the possibility of an election at any time. Thus, a situation appears to exist which, if carried to its ultimate conclusion, will lead to a system of government capitalism instead of individual and private enterprise. This state capitalism would be the dominating unit in the economic system. It is obvious to me and my Progressive Conservative colleagues that something must be done to stop this ever-increasing government expenditure.

One current government expenditure of particular concern to me is that of the federal bilingualism development program. Between January 1, 1970, and December 31, 1972, $167.8 million was spent on programs administered by the Secretary of State in an effort to implement various government bilingualism programs. I suggest that spending great amounts of money in an effort to implement the bilingualism program is an excellent idea, but only where a sufficient proportion of the population makes such an effort justifiable.

I do not believe that regions of Manitoba which have been designated as potential bilingual areas by the bilingual districts advisory board should be declared such. Like the Commissioner of Official Languages did in his second annual report, I question the need for and the negative effects of the establishment of bilingual districts outside the Ottawa region. The 10 per cent minority population rule used in designating bilingual districts is an arbitrary one. Furthermore, how are the lines on the maps to be redrawn? Will there be a redistribution of bilingual districts every ten years? There are numerous unanswered questions. I am in agreement with the commissioner when he suggests possibly abandoning the concept of districts altogether, instead of relying on strengthened interpretations of "significant demand" and "feasibility" as stated in the Official Languages Act to decide where bilingual government services should be provided.

lished so as to allay the fears of not only French-speaking Canadians but those of English-speaking western Canadians. Such a program might deal with the language problem by allowing the use of both languages in the federal civil service, but only in direct proportion to that particular language group's statistical number in the population. As it is now, the program does little but breed alienation in western Canada. It is also resulting in the unnecessary spending of millions of dollars.

The throne speech promised that in this session parliament will be asked to reaffirm the basic principles of bilingualism. In light of Mr. Spicer's comments and the tremendous expense being generated in efforts to implement the program, parliament would do well to re-examine not only the principles of bilingualism but their implementation. It is only by reviewing the effectiveness of the bilingualism program that parliament will find a fair and just solution satisfactory to both of Canada's founding peoples.

I have used the term "western alienation". This is a rather overworked term; none the less, it seems to accurately depict the feelings of discontent which characterize many Canadians. It is an honest feeling of westerners that they are not getting their share of the pie. Such feelings have been given substance by the actions of recent Liberal governments. In my riding of Winnipeg South Centre one particular government action more than any other is responsible for widespread feelings of dissatisfaction. I am speaking, of course, of the decision by Air Canada many years ago to move its overhaul base from Winnipeg in an effort to consolidate its overhaul functions in Dorval. Then, contrary to the promises made, the complete phasing-out of the Air Canada operation occurred.

On April 3, 1969, the Minister of Transport announced that negotiations had been completed between CAE's parent firm, Northwest Industries, of Edmonton, and Air Canada for the sale of the Air Canada overhaul base. The Minister of Transport indicated that the federal government through its departments and agencies would lend strong support to the new enterprise. However, such has not been the case.

In mid-1969, CAE Aircraft signed a contract with the United States military through the Canadian Commercial Corporation which works for the Department of Supply and Services. The contract was to repair and overhaul military jet aircraft. This contract involved the direct employment of approximately 250 skilled workers. Suddenly, though, this T-39 contract was terminated. This, together with the Viscount phase-out, resulted in tremendously decreased employment.

A similar situation exists today. It is an urgent one. While the province has done what it can at the provincial level to assist CAE Aircraft, unless the federal government uses its resources to secure work for CAE it will be unable properly to maintain its operation. Lack of a viable air industry in Manitoba has resulted in great loss to the province in terms of expertise as all our skilled personnel leave to seek employment elsewhere.

Lay-offs in this industry are devastating. CAE is currently operating with skeleton crews. They have recently lost 17 more men, trained by Air Canada, who have gone to work at Dorval. Approximately 90 per cent of the aeronautical personnel, including engineers, consulting staff, supervisors and licensed mechanics, have been forced to move to Montreal. This is to say nothing of the expense of such a move. I have spoke to people who have been forced to move; they inform me of low morale amongst workers both at Dorval and CAE in Winnipeg. In both places there is much resentment of the government stemming from the government's failure to honour its many promises.

A great proportion of those who formerly worked at the Air Canada overhaul base in Winnipeg were constituents of Winnipeg South Centre, as are the bulk of those working for CAE Aircraft, its successor. The facilities and airports where men worked also are within my riding. Therefore I am concerned with the state of the aerospace industry in Manitoba. The aerospace industry held a special place in Manitoba's economy and the decision to transfer the base to Dorval dealt a serious blow to that economy.

The logic of the transfer escapes most people associated with the industry in Manitoba. Winnipeg should be the centre of a viable aerospace industry. Our geographical location, in the centre of North America, and proximity to the markets of the American mid-west are obvious reasons for the establishment of what could some day be a prosperous industry. At the time of the transfer to Dorval, definite promises were made by the Liberal government to do everything possible to maintain employment at the base and, if possible, to increase it. However, it appears that the government has little intention of honouring its commitment.

In order that hon. members may understand the situation, let me review it briefly. On November 22, 1963, Prime Minister Pearson, as he then was, speaking in the House of Commons acknowledged the importance of the base to the economy of Winnipeg. He said:

> For at least as far ahead as planning now extends, that is at least ten years, the Winnipeg facilities will continue to be used.

On June 5, 1964, in a letter to Mr. D. A. Thompson, Q.C., of Winnipeg, the then minister of transport in a letter to the Manitoba government assured Premier Roblin that every effort was being made to "maintain the level of Air Canada's activities in Winnipeg". On May 23, 1968, Prime Minister Trudeau wrote to Premier Weir of Manitoba stating:

> You may be assured that the present government will honour the commitment made by my predecessor and that we will in addition vigourously search out alternatives aimed at maintaining a viable aircraft support industry in Manitoba.

Here are the remarks of the Minister of National Defence (Mr. Richardson) on the air base being moved:

> One of the worst decisions made in Canadian history.

He further stated:

> No one endorses more strongly than I do the concept of decentralization of industrial activity.

Within the past fortnight the Prime Minister has visited Winnipeg. He has assured us that western interests are of equal importance to those of Quebec, that we must take the initiatives to press for their realization and that we must not passively wait government intervention. We will take him at his word. We believe in the importance of maintaining and promoting an air base in Winnipeg to serve central and western Canada. Winnipeg is the logical location. We believe that the Prime Minister should fulfil his promise to honour the commitment made to us by his predecessor to maintain a viable aircraft support industry in Manitoba.

We do not doubt the sincerity of the Minister of National Defence in his wish to serve western Canada, and we sympathize with the difficulties and restrictions he faces in this regard. But this issue is so essential to Winnipeg that we believe it is his responsibility to press for its realization. We believe that he should be prepared to resign from the cabinet and move to the back benches to challenge the Prime Minister's sincerity. Our cabinet representative should be expected to remind the Prime Minister of his advice and promise to us, and demonstrate that he stands by this principle. In my opinion, the Minister of National Defence has no other choice.

The people of Winnipeg South Centre remember these promises. They demand to know if the federal government recognizes its long-standing commitments to the aerospace industry in Manitoba. If the government does not recognize its commitments, then this feeling of alienation can only grow stronger not only in my constituency but among all the people of western Canada.

Mr. John Harney (Scarborough West): Mr. Speaker, when I look about me and see that the democratic left has virtually gone, I remember the very apt lines of Alexander Pope:

> The hungry judges soon the sentence sign,
> And wretches hang that jurymen may dine.

I wonder, therefore, whether I should call it six o'clock.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Laniel): It being six o'clock, I do now leave the chair until eight o'clock p.m.

At six o'clock the House took recess.

AFTER RECESS

The House resumed at 8 p.m.

Mr. Harney: Mr. Speaker, it makes a difference to be addressing this House after rather than before supper. At least we have all returned replete with meat if not with wisdom.

I do not want to address myself to the specific points in the budget because so many of my fellow members in this party have addressed themselves to these points in particular. I could certainly tell the House what I like about the budget and what I dislike about it in terms of its particular elements, but I feel that in the past few days these elements have been adequately covered on both sides of the House.

My remarks will pertain to the budget: I will avoid making a travelogue about the beauties of Scarborough West. I know this is very difficult to resist, but I will manage to resist the temptation and will try to speak about the budget in general terms which are at least of interest to me and might be of interest to other members of the House.

First of all, it will not surprise members to my immediate right that I am prepared to congratulate the government on the budget. I think that the budget presented by the Minister of Finance (Mr. Turner) is a kind of milestone for the parliament of Canada. Mind you, it is a retarded milestone because it is one that we should have passed many years ago. Nevertheless, it is rather nice to get to this particular milestone.

I should like to congratulate the Minister of Finance and the members of the government for returning to the age of Keynesian economics. We left them solidly behind three or four years ago, particularly in 1969 when in a fit of despair the government gave up trying to understand how to run an economy on the lines enjoined by Lord Keynes and decided to go back to much more classical, indeed we could call them Victorian, procedures. The result of this kind of decision-making certainly caused an enormous amount of distress and pain across this nation. We all know now, including the government, that the policies adopted by the government some three years ago to fight what they thought was the great bugbear, namely inflation, simply brought about acute unemployment in this country and enormous distress to tens of thousands, indeed hundreds of thousands of Canadians.

Therefore, I congratulate the government on having moved itself from the day before yesterday to yesterday so that now we are in a position to start talking about today. Now we are in a position to start talking about the problems that really face Canada, not the problems that the government then thought faced Canada. We are now in a position to start talking about the problems of this economy as an economy that is of the post-industrial age.

Having congratulated the government, I must express a concern. I am not too sure that the government knows where it is going. I say this because there was so much left out of the budget and the address relating to the budget. For example, there was nothing in the budget or in the budget address about the spending and investment plans of those corporations which are directly owned or controlled by parliament. I refer to the Crown corporation in Canada. There was nothing, even in estimation or in prediction, about the spending and investment plans of the provincial governments or, indeed, of other levels of government in Canada. There was virtually nothing—just one sentence, I think—on possible monetary policy as it would apply in Canada in the coming year, and there was simply no attempt to try to ascertain what would be the plans and the position of the private sector in Canada.

The budget speech, in effect, was like a treasurer's report for a rather large bowling league. There was some talk about the cost of membership in the league. There was some talk about the benefits that would accrue from membership in the league and there was some talk of an annual banquet. But there was no attempt to try to understand what is really going on in the country. Can this House, then, know what is going on in the Canadian economy? Can it ascertain from the budget and from the address relating to it what will happen to the economy in the future? Is it possible for the government to be guiding the economy on the basis of so little consideration and so little information given to the House?

There was promise in the budget of tax cuts. We on this side, particularly in this corner of the House, welcome the provision for tax cuts. But at the same time, in the supplementary papers issued on budget night we were given a very clear indication that there would be no particular shift in the tax burden as the taxes applied to individual Canadians as opposed to corporations. For example, we are told in that supplementary document that last year some 44 per cent of all taxes received by the government came from individual contributions, and that this year some 44 per cent of taxes would come from the same sector; that last year some 15 per cent of our revenue came from corporations, and this year some 14 per cent would come from corporations—a decrease in taxes coming from the corporate sector. I am told that these projections include the effects of the bills that were to have been passed following the budget of May 8 last.

I want to tell the members of the government that if these projections are actually carried out through the implementation of corporate tax cuts, we will have achieved nothing in terms of real redistribution of the tax burden in this country and I and many others in this party will not stand for that kind of shell game. It is very obvious, upon any close analysis of the budget, that the only meaningful way in which the budget can have a beneficial effect on the average Canadian is to have personal income tax cuts and no corporate tax cuts, because it will be apparent to most Canadians that the tax cuts proposed by the Finance Minister a week ago last Monday will be totally ineffectual if the bills emanating from the May 8 budget are brought in.

I have another reason for congratulating the Minister of Finance. I do not know whether he really deserves it. At any rate, he seemed to go all out for a policy of budgetary expansion. What I am going to say may sound a little heretical, Mr. Speaker, but heretical things have been said before from this corner of the House. It has become very obvious to many students of the dismal science of economics that even the Keynesian approach to economics will not work any more.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Harney: I was rather pleased, in a way, to see the people on my immediate right fall into the trap. Their immediate reaction, in effect, was to overturn all the sacred tablets which they had been carrying for many years and to call for a vastly more expansionary kind of budget because, I suppose, if they are the apostles of faith in growth they believe, as does the government, I think, that growth will solve all problems.

We really have to ask ourselves whether the nature of unemployment facing the people of Canada today is of the classical kind. I know there are certain sections of the country where there is massive and very evident unemployment, where the individuals who are thrown out of work feel, at the very least, a certain kind of fellowship in that they see themselves not to be alone. But for many citizens of this country, being unemployed is a lonely, solitary and alienating business because they see themselves as alone out of a job, keenly aware of a sense of uselessness in a society which seems to be busy and bustling all around them.

We really have to ask ourselves whether a purely expansionary budget, in the classical sense, will do anything to change this pattern. The point I am coming to is simply—since I have very little time I would like to dwell on it for my last two or three minutes—that I urge this House, and particularly the government, to take a totally new look at our economy. I urge all hon. members not to fall into the old trap of simply encouraging more growth, because growth by itself will not change the quality of life of Canadians. We must look for a different way of living our economic life in this country. I would urge on this House a policy which concentrates upon qualitative growth as opposed to quantitative growth. We must set out to improve the quality of life for the individual and the community rather than simply the quantity of goods.

There are figures that I could quote. We now know, for example, that 10 per cent of disposable income is saved by Canadians. That is a very high proportion. I do not mean to indicate by this that everybody in Canada has money to save, but there certainly are certain sectors of our population which have money to save. Any simplistic, classically-based expansionary approach to the problem of unemployment will simply give them more money to save, without giving to those people who have not enough money to live on, enough money with which to survive.

We must look at every impetus we put into the economy to see whether it changes the nature of our economic existence. I would urge on the Minister of Finance and on the government a totally new look at the world of work, because it is becoming very obvious to many people that simply to create jobs as a way of giving people remuneration so that they can buy the goods that we can produce—there is no question that we can produce the goods—will not get them out of the squirrel cage in which they find themselves.

Surely this parliament should be ready to invoke some new thinking rather than simply saying to the country, "Look, we can make the squirrel cage run faster and let those who have drop out, drop out." There are many attendant aspects to what I have said. I am sorry, although I am sure several members are not, that I cannot expand on this matter but I hope that I can on another occasion. Somebody has to stand here and say what a lot of people outside parliament are saying, simply that growth by itself does not change the nature of our existence, that by increasing the gross national product what we are doing in large measure is increasing the production of junk, not changing the quality of our production and the quality of people's lives. What people outside are saying is that the production of junk by a lot of people makes junk out of their lives.

Let us ask ourselves this question as we look at our economy: How many people are truly usefully employed? I end on a note which is not mine, Mr. Speaker. Unlike some other hon. members, I admit that I am plagiarizing. Here I quote from an article by a Mr. Anderson:

> Generals are traditionally accused of wanting to re-fight the battles of their youth instead of meeting the weapons or tactics of a current war. The record of politicians (and of many economists) is infinitely worse. They cling tenaciously to techniques devised by their grandfathers to deal with circumstances that have long ceased to exist; and when (as happens sometimes, though not often) a new idea does emerge it is regarded as dangerously novel for at least a generation, and then misapplied.

The new idea that emerged a generation ago was the thinking of Lord Keynes. I am afraid that today it is in danger of being dangerously misapplied because we, the politicians, the representatives of the people of this land, cannot push ourselves into the post-industrial society and cannot begin to realize that the nature of the unemployment beast that faces us has changed radically. We must realize that we must look at the world of work and make sure that henceforward people who do the hard work of this nation are adequately remunerated for it; that there are still many people in this nation, some in this parliament and many in the professions, who are unemployed effectively in terms of real usefulness but nevertheless are extremely well paid. We have to look at the kind of work that is done by the people of Canada. In many cases it is soul-destroying work. In many cases the work we force them to do for remuneration is totally—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. I regret to interrupt the hon. member, but the time allotted to him by the order made last Thursday has expired.

Hon. Herb Gray (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): Mr. Speaker, as Minister of Consumer and Corporate affairs I would like to draw attention to those features of the budget which are of interest to consumers. This budget is important to consumers. It has a number of provisions which were designed to be of direct benefit to them. The proposed reductions in sales taxes, excise taxes and customs duties will affect a wide range of consumer goods and will have a correspondingly wide impact upon consumers' well-being.

Let me first comment upon the proposed changes in the sales tax. As the House knows, it is proposed to remove the sales tax on confectionaries, chocolate bars, soft drinks, fruit drinks and other near-food products. The effect of this measure in so far as food is concerned will be to exempt from federal sales tax all food and drink for human consumption, except alcoholic beverages.

Furthermore, it is proposed that the federal sales tax will be removed from children's clothing and footwear. These measures will be of great benefit to Canadian consumers, particularly to those in the lower income groups. Already a number of important companies in the food distribution field have announced reductions in the price of soft drinks, fruit drinks, confectionary products and snack foods.

Within one or two days after the announcement of the proposed removal of the sales tax on children's clothing and footwear, several of Canada's leading merchandising organizations announced reductions on the prices of these items. One firm announced a 10 per cent cut, a second announced a 15 per cent cut, while a third made a statement the import of which was that its price reductions would conform completely to the reduced sales tax.

Secondly, Mr. Speaker, the budget proposals include the elimination of the 10 per cent excise tax on cosmetics and toilet articles. Furthermore, it proposes the removal of the excise tax on clocks and watches except those on which the manufacturer's price or duty paid value exceeds $50. These also are constructive proposals from the consumer's point of view and already the benefits are appearing at the point of sale.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Gray: For example, two important supermarket chains have announced cuts in the prices of specified cosmetics and toiletries, and two local Ottawa firms have announced cuts in the prices of cosmetics, toiletries, clocks and watches.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Gray: Next, Mr. Speaker, let me deal with the benefits to the consuming public from the reductions in customs duties proposed for many articles imported into Canada. The products on which tariff cuts will have the greatest significance for the greatest number of consumers are probably those in the food category. Food prices have been rising more sharply than other consumer prices in recent months, particularly the prices of relatively unprocessed foods. The aim of these cuts is to help moderate those food prices.

Probably the most important food items to be affected by the proposed cuts are fresh beef and veal, fruit juices, bananas and sugar, although several other categories are also involved. The tariff on raw sugar has been reduced, in effect, by 33 cents per hundredweight. Bananas, formerly dutiable at 50 cents per hundredweight, will become duty free; duties on fresh beef, veal, pork and certain other fresh meats will be reduced to zero, while the duty on lamb and mutton will be reduced by one-third. Cuts of various amounts are proposed: for canned beef 50 per cent, canned pork 40 per cent, canned hams and other canned meats 25 per cent.

The 10 per cent ad valorem duty on imports of a number of vegetables and fruits will be removed. Thus, duties on these imports will fall to zero except during the season when the Canadian crops come on the market. During this season, these imports will continue to be subject to specific duties of various amounts. The purpose of the proposed cuts is obviously to help moderate prices of the products in question.

Turning now to another matter of continuing concern to Canadian consumers, drug prices, I might recall at this point that the federal government has made a very considerable effort over the past six years to help reduce the price of prescription drugs to Canadians. The proposed reductions in the customs duties on drugs represent a further step in the direction taken by the federal government when it removed the federal sales tax on drugs in 1967. The present proposals provide that customs duties on a wide range of drugs, both prescription and non-prescription, be cut by 50 per cent.

Those who are furnishing their homes or who are setting up housekeeping for the first time will be pleased to know that customs duties will be reduced on vacuum cleaners, washers, carpet sweepers and power lawn mowers. Homemakers will benefit also from the proposed reduction in duties on kitchen or household hollow-ware of aluminum, nickel, iron or steel, as well as the proposed reduction of duties on chinaware and porcelainware.

The Minister of Finance (Mr. Turner) in his budget speech on February 19 indicated that the reductions in the sales and excise taxes taken together would reduce federal revenues in the coming fiscal year by about $190 million. It seems likely that the dollar volume of imports which will be affected by the proposed reductions in customs duties may well be of the order of $1.3 billion per year. Mr. Speaker, I think it is clear that the reductions proposed by the Minister of Finance in sales tax, in excise taxes and in customs duties will prove to be advantageous to the Canadian consuming public.

A very basic aim of the budget is to ensure that there is more money in the consumers' wallets and pocketbooks for them to spend. To achieve this aim the government has proposed increases in personal exemptions as well as a substantial cut in personal income tax. This cut involves a 5 per cent reduction in the basic federal income tax up to a maximum of $500. But to ensure that there is meaningful tax relief for the middle and lower income groups, the government has proposed that there be a minimum reduction in personal income tax of $100. This means that the actual tax cuts for many hundreds of thousands of Canadian taxpayers will be far higher than 5 per cent.

For example, as the Minister of Finance has pointed out, taking into account the increase in individual exemption and the cut in personal income tax, for a married couple with two young children and the breadwinner earning $5,000, the total tax will be reduced by $137. This represents a 47 per cent reduction from what the tax otherwise would have been this year. If this same family has an income of $8,000, the total tax reduction will be $141, or 13 per cent.

As the Minister of Finance said, another way of looking at the effect of these cuts in taxation is to note that a married wage earner with two young children living in any one of the provinces will pay no federal income tax until his income goes above $4,473. Therefore, looking at the 1973-74 fiscal year, Canadian consumers will have available to them an additional $1.3 billion through this reduction in personal income tax. Seventy per cent of this will be in the hands of the majority of Canadian taxpayers—those with an income of less than $10,000. Consumers who are old age pensioners will also benefit from the increase in the basic old age security pension to $100 monthly.

Mr. Speaker, to conclude, I think it is clear that the reductions proposed by the Minister of Finance of sales tax and customs duties as well as the other budget measures—particularly the cut in personal income tax and the increase in the old age pension—will prove and are already proving to be of worth-while benefit to the Canadian consuming public. These measures will help the Canadian economy and at the same time will constitute a countervailing force against inflationary pressures. Therefore, I urge the House to support this budget to ensure that its benefits are in fact available to every Canadian consumer.

Mr. Stan Darling (Parry Sound-Muskoka): Mr. Speaker, at long last, after listening to my colleagues on this side and to other members I have a chance to say a few words. This is my maiden speech, Mr. Speaker, so I would like to begin by congratulating Your Honour on your appointment for another term to the post of Speaker of the House. I would also like to congratulate my colleague, the hon. member for Halifax-East Hants (Mr. McCleave) on his appointment as Deputy Speaker and Chairman of Committees of the Whole House.

May I at this time say I am proud to represent the riding of Parry Sound-Muskoka and to have been selected to follow Mr. Gordon Aiken, Q.C., who was an outstanding member of this House for 15 years.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Darling: He served unstintingly in the House until he was forced to retire because of ill health, and I know his many friends here will join with me in wishing him a complete return to health. As an aside, Mr. Speaker, I had a letter from him today and he is enjoying the best health he has had for the past 20 years.

• (2030)

I should like to say a few words about my constituency of Parry Sound-Muskoka. I am sure that many members of this House have been to my region at one time or another and those who have not been so fortunate have heard of the area. My riding is without doubt the finest tourist area in this great Dominion of Canada. This certainly must be so, Mr. Speaker, as more members of this House visit my riding during the summer months than visit all other ridings combined. I might say that one of our visitors is His Excellency the Governor General. Tourism is our biggest industry. This can be very good when an area has a strong attraction as a tourist paradise because it brings in people from far and wide. They bring with them not only money but new faces, good will and companionship. The chances are they will enjoy themselves and will tell others. Many of them will build in our area and add to the vitality and prosperity of our region.

These are serious times for our country, Mr. Speaker, and I share the concern expressed by my colleagues who have spoken in the past few days on this budget. These are times that call for leadership and for decision. These are times that call for courage. For that reason I was disappointed, both for myself and for my constituents, at the lack of real evidence in the budget that our country is getting leadership or decision from this government. The only evidence of courage in the budget is the indication that this government is prepared at last to accept some of the recommendations of the official opposition.

I realize that it would have taken courage of a very high order for the present government to bring down a budget that would satisfy the people of Canada rather than the NDP. However, I realize also that it was more expedient, politically, for the government to enter into an arrangement with the NDP in order to prolong its stay in power. This is all the more difficult to accept, Mr. Speaker, and is all the more distasteful when you recall that the official opposition is on record as having told the government that it need not fear defeat so long as it brought down legislation that was meaningful.

The Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Stanfield) did not offer any deals and he did not propose any arrangements in exchange for personal reward. It was a straightforward announcement of purpose. The government was told that as long as it made a serious effort to govern responsibly and showed signs that it was prepared to grapple with such problems as inflation and unemployment, we in the opposition would act just as responsibly.

It is easy to sit back and criticize. I served as the head of a small municipal government for over a quarter of a century before coming to Ottawa as a new member. Criticizing for the sake of opposing is not good enough. During my campaign I emphasized certain things as priorities which I hoped would be included in the budget, and I thank the Minister of Finance (Mr. Turner) for those things which were included. The top priorities in my area are, first and foremost, the high cost of living caused by spiralling inflation and the great need for increases in old age pensions for the elderly and many others living on fixed incomes who are hardest hit by inflation.

While the budget does provide some relief for the people in my area, the top priority, to my way of thinking, for the people in rural Canada is to find a way to stop spiralling inflation and the high cost of living. This can only be done by the kind of wage and price freeze suggested by my party earlier in this debate. A great many people in the rural parts of Canada are living on low and fixed incomes. Therefore, they are hardest hit in endeavouring to make their income dollars stretch. This is not the case in the great metropolitan areas where the highest wages are paid and where the great unions are able to demand, and receive, wages which naturally force the cost of goods up. Those of us not so fortunate have to pay for this.

I was pleased, Mr. Speaker, to see the old age pension increased to $100 a month. I still feel, and I know it is the feeling of our party, that this pension should be geared to need. To my way of thinking, the very minimum for all old age pensioners should be $110 a month, with the built-in protection that if the cost of living goes up, the pension goes up automatically.

We are divided into ten provinces, Mr. Speaker, and two great areas, the Yukon and the Northwest Territories. Also there are two other areas, those of the haves and of the have-nots. The have areas are growing like cancers. If the present trend continues, by the year 2000, or sooner, we will have to redraw the map of Canada and throw out the present provincial boundaries. The new map will consist of super areas such as Toronto, Montreal, Winnipeg, Vancouver, Calgary and perhaps our capital city of Ottawa.

An hon. Member: And Edmonton.

Mr. Darling: All right. Call them what you will, city states, super cities or provinces, these concentrated concrete jungles will have 90 per cent of our population and as much or more of its wealth. The other area or province will be the entire balance of our country and could be named Canada. Let me say a word about redistribution. If we still have the same number of members in this House, those areas will be represented by 238 members and all the rest of Canada by 27.

Something has to be done, Mr. Speaker, to keep people in the rural areas and in towns and villages and to stop this erosion of population to the cities. The top priorities are, as I said before, jobs, housing and control of inflation. In rural Canada today our chief export and most valuable commodity is our young people. We pay to raise and educate them, and then they leave for the great rat race in the monster cities. In recent years some cities have had a twinge of conscience and are now willing to repay us by sending us, in return, their garbage. This pattern of growth means declining populations. It means the under-use of existing local and municipal services. It means an erosion of the municipal tax base. It means under-used school facilities. Something must be done to halt this and provide a way of life to the many people who want to remain in the regions where they were born and raised.

The backbone of the rural areas across our country is the small businessman and enterpreneur who is having a hard job getting by, in making a comfortable living, and who is paying the high wages now demanded and the many other high costs. He is also in a very serious financial position during certain periods of the year. In our particular area, where the economy is buoyant in the summer season, the lean months in the winter eat up the profits and he must borrow money at the bank and pay, in many cases, high interest rates. I feel that low interest rates should be available to these hard working and enterprising citizens who provide the great majority of employment in the many small villages and towns scattered throughout our country.

We have heard much said, Mr. Speaker, during the present session regarding the high water problem in the Great Lakes. The entire western boundary of my riding borders on Georgian Bay, and the high water is certainly a serious problem to many tourist and marine operators, as well as to cottagers. They have suffered considerable financial loss. I am hoping that this government will have sufficient funds set aside for emergencies so that it can make a worth-while contribution in conjunction with the province of Ontario.

Let me say a word about the LIP program, Mr. Speaker. I am aware that the money has now been overspent and a great many applications turned down, some of them very worthy. Having served as a member of a municipal government for a long period, it is my opinion that top priority should have been given to all applications submitted by municipal governments before projects submitted by private individuals or other organizations were considered. If money was left over, it could then have been divided among such individuals or organizations. It is my considered opinion that the elected officials of municipalities know their needs far greater than any individual or organization in the area. I will concede that many worthwhile ones were approved.

I trust that all members of the House who represent constituencies on our coast will pay particular attention to this: they have been daily making life miserable and have been badgering the Minister of Transport (Mr. Marchand) for the tabling of the long-awaited document known as the Darling report. Here it is, Mr. Speaker, and I am sure they will all be delighted with it.

I would be remiss if I did not indicate my pleasure at being able to sit in a parliament with so many colleagues from the Progressive Conservative party. At the same time, I would like to convey my respects to the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau). Although my colleagues and I may take exception to many of his policies, it is in keeping with the intended spirit of our parliamentary system that when he speaks we afford him the respect due Canada's first minister. I certainly take exception to the way he has been treated time and again.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Darling: There has been some doubt expressed as to the wisdom of removing the 11 per cent tax on building supplies. Some hon. members feel that such a measure would provide little relief for the lower income groups. It is true that outside of pure Marxism, equity is an elusive quarry. Nevertheless, repeal of the 11 per cent building supply tax would represent a significant reduction in the final price of a home and allow many more Canadians to own their own home. Apart from the obvious social benefit, a stimulus in the order of $365 million would be injected into the economy. This stimulus, in conjunction with increased sales of building materials and related products, would serve both to boost this sector of the business community and to increase employment in all facets of the housing industry.

At the same time, this policy would serve to dampen the wage demands of workers who have come to view their jobs as uncertain and demand wage rates to compensate for their seasonal nature. This aspect of many of our industries is a prime contributor to our high unemployment rates, inflationary tendencies and outsized Unemployment Insurance Commission payments. In this light, elimination of the 11 per cent tax on building supplies would be a significant step toward a sound economic and a more equitable distribution of funds for all income groups.

I believe I have gone over my time, Mr. Speaker, and I thank you for the consideration shown to me.

[Translation]

Mr. Marcel Roy (Laval): Mr. Speaker, I welcome this opportunity to make a few remarks concerning the budget brought forward by the Minister of Finance (Mr. Turner), which reflects the thinking of various authorities coming from all segments and classes of Canadian society.

Listening to some official opposition members criticizing the economic and social measures embodied in the budget, I wondered whether this was the same House of Commons where the budget was submitted on February 19 last. On the other hand, I derive satisfaction from the thought of all the people of 65 or over who will be receiving $100 a month from April 1, 1973, meaning $170 a month if they are alone and receiving the guaranteed income supplement, and $325 for married couples receiving that supplement.

I was also gratified to hear that our veterans will also be receiving increased allowances and that military service allowances will be provided for civilians, similarly increased to a total of $151 a month for single persons and $257 for married couples. Veterans over 65 will receive guaranteed incomes of $206 and $357 respectively.

Therefore, in the evening of February 19 last, I was glad to hear this good news. I was also glad I belong to a country and a government which have always promoted many social policies in Canada and will always retain their advance over all other countries in the world in the field of care and assistance to elderly people.

In the economic field, an amount of $11 billion, or 60 per cent of the total budget, will take the form of payments or direct contributions whether to citizens, firms or various communities or to the provinces of Canada.

In other words, the federal government will not be paying out these billions directly, but rather passing them on to agencies or economic bodies responsible for investing them in various economic sectors.

Social security plans, equalization payments, grants to regional economic expansion, industrial incentives of the Department of Industry, Trade and Commerce, agricultural prices support funds, there is a range of federal expenditures amounting to $8.5 million including the Opportunities for Youth and Local Initiatives programs. There is the range of part of the federal contribution to various sectors of the economy.

Mr. Speaker, may I make a comment about one sector that is sometimes omitted: the involvement in a profitable federalism, and I am referring to equalization payments. The equalization payment plan, designed to maintain essential public services at a uniform level in Canada, will be considerably enlarged this year. New grants, based on municipal school taxes, will be added to the equalization formula, which will increase the payment for 1973-1974 by $190 millions to reach the total of $1,400 millions.

If, according to the present formula, Quebec was granted $562 million last year, it will then receive an additional amount of $78,600,000 through tax-sharing agreements to be used for schools which is equivalent to $13 per capita.

We forget too often the higher federal share paid to provinces that need it, as against the ones which are wealthier such as Ontario being more industrialized, or British Columbia and Alberta which are in a sound economic position.

I would consider equally very important the personal income tax reductions. I have said in the election campaign and in the House that perhaps we forgot to explain to the people the basic benefits granted to the people by the liberal government. In fact, how does the individual income tax stand? For a family with two young children, where the income is $5,000 yearly, the basic tax will be reduced by $137, which is equivalent to 47 per cent as compared with the amount it would have to pay this year according to the previous legislation. In practice, this represents a 3.6 per cent salary increase.

On the other hand, a family with two children, where the income is $8,000, would benefit from a $141 reduction, or 13 per cent, which is the equivalent of a yearly salary increase of 2.4 per cent.

As concerns the individual income tax, it has been reduced in the case of low incomes.

Something else I would like to discuss which is very dear to me and has to do with our programs in favour of youth. We have heard a statement from the Secretary of State (Mr. Faulkner) to the effect that an amount of $85,400,000 will be allocated to the creation of 67,200 summer jobs for students. I was delighted like all my colleagues by that fortunate initiative of the government, which was thus showing its faith in youth, by trying to develop that potential with which it is endowed.

But on the other hand, it is noticed that the budget of the Department of National Defence has been increased to $200 millions, $80 millions of which are earmarked for capital expenditures.

I would have liked that an additional amount be allocated to our cadets corps. Those movements of youngsters of 13 to 18 years of age have not received any grant increase for 10 years, since they are still getting $3 a year. It seems to me that we should totally revise our policy concerning the cadets corps. Indeed, they are teenagers who volunteer because they wish to acquire discipline, leadership, respect of authority and self-respect. It seems to me that we should review the measures concerning those leaders of tomorrow. It seems to me that we should consider doubling that amount of $3 a year, provided that the youngster takes part in the annual parade.

Furthermore, it seems to me we could help pay the rental of school auditoriums, because those young people do meet from one to three times a week. They have to pay the rental for those premises directly out of their budget which is very limited.

I have here a letter from Major Guy E. Méthot, of the 687th Squadron, dealing with the budget. His squadron totals 170 cadets and its total budget is $800. The cadets have met three times a week, but they must now make up the deficit. These boys have to solicit for funds in all sorts of ways. It seems to me that during the summer months, the Department should seriously consider revising its policy and grant subsidies as well to the girls cadets who, even if they are accepted in theory, do not receive the $3 annual allowance paid to the boys.

Mr. Speaker, that is very dear to me. In my opinion, the Opportunity for Youth Program meets a need, but one must also not forget or underestimate the cadets.

I would like to make a last suggestion concerning the Departments of Public Works and Environment. I am speaking on behalf of many of my colleagues whose ridings border the Des Prairies and Mille-Îles Rivers.

For about 25 years, we have been asking for the canalization of the Des Prairies and Mille-Îles Rivers, in order to avoid happenings unpleasant every spring.

This year, we anticipate heavy flooding on all the lands along the Des Prairies and Mille-Îles Rivers.

As for the Department of Public Works or Environment, I would have been very happy if moneys had been allocated to such works which, in my opinion, and in the opinion of all the other members, are of a great priority for that sector.

[English]

Mr. Bill Kempling (Halton-Wentworth): Mr. Speaker, I rise at this time to speak in the budget debate wishing it could have been under different circumstances. The bitter disappointment felt by the people of Canada is beginning to filter through. Editorial comment on the budget is anything but complimentary. There is a feeling of dissatisfaction and bewilderment, and in some quarters downright anger.

My mail since the budget reflects these emotions. One letter from a student doing a school project asked me to explain what the government is doing to reduce unemployment. Another letter tells of a visit to a bank for a loan under the Small Business Loans Act. The writer was told that the bank does not lend money under the act because the interest rate is too low and the bank cannot make a profit at the rate set by the act.

Representatives of several secondary industries have called about tariff cuts and to ask whether this is the forerunner of future cuts to be bargained away at the GATT meeting. It is unfortunate that the Minister of Finance (Mr. Turner) did not consult some of the agricultural associations which will be affected by his tariff cuts on fresh vegetables and fruits. We suspect that the Minister of Finance did not even consult the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Whelan). I have received a letter from the proprietor of a small manufacturing company in my riding who writes as follows:

> It has been brought to our attention that the proposed budget will decrease the tariff on finished toys while not altering the tariff on components which require further manufacture. If this is the case, then in essence the government is encouraging importers of finished toys at the expense of domestic manufacturers. The toy industry tends to be labour-intensive, and thus I believe an asset to our community and country.

Those are a few of the letters I have received, Mr. Speaker. I am sure you are aware, as I am sure everyone is aware, that many of our secondary manufacturers and secondary industries have not recovered from the accelerated cuts in tariffs in 1972 which were billed as an anti-inflationary measure. I have had numerous conversations with my constituents regarding the game being played by the government and the NDP over the corporate tax cuts and the accelerated depreciation provision in the May, 1972, budget. Is it in the budget, or is it not in the budget? Some say it is, and some say it is not.

• (2100)

An hon. Member: Now you see it, now you don't.

Mr. Kempling: Now you see it, now you don't—exactly. But what a game to play with the people who hold the key to employment! According to a press report, the leader of the NDP said he did not want to play dog-in-the-manger over this matter of accelerated depreciation.

An hon. Member: He wants to play monkey in the granary.

Mr. Kempling: The names I have heard in reference to that hon. member are not "dog-in-the-manger" and I could not repeat them in this House. The mood of the business men I talk to is one of anger. They had all hoped for a more expansionary budget, one that the business community could grab hold of and begin to display some confidence in the future. Certainly, we would have presented a much more imaginative and forward looking budget, one that would take a real bite out of unemployment and come to grips with inflation.

This government stands condemned by the business community for failing to face the realities of the day. This is the seventh budget this government has presented which was supposed to deal with unemployment and inflation. There seems to be lack of purpose and direction by the government. It is a sort of ad hoc approach to economics filtered through the hon. member for York South (Mr. Lewis).

The main thrust of this budget seems to be that by cutting income taxes by 5 per cent and raising old age pensions to $100 a month, by dropping the sales tax on children's clothing and candy bars, all this coupled with devaluation of the U.S. dollar will create an internal and external demand for products that will create jobs and thus reduce unemployment. In fact, the government is beginning to hedge on this, because as the hon. member for Verdun (Mr. Mackasey) said last night:

> If there is not enough stimulus for the economy, then in a few months the Minister of Finance can certainly provide more.

I quote that sentence from page 1679 of Hansard, in the event the hon. member wants to raise a point of order. There is no mention in the budget of what position the government will take on small business, secondary industry and the service industries. These businesses collectively are the largest employer in Canada, yet they have no status in the economic life of our country.

The major problem affecting all business is a continual shortage of money. Let us look back at the havoc caused by the ill-conceived tight money policy of 1969 through 1970 and a part of 1971. The only real winners were the banks. We had inflation, wages went up and the cost of money rose to its highest level in memory. The banks made record profits and, indeed, today have assets of some $60 billion, neatly protected by the Bank Act.

Without exception, the greatest deterrent to business expansion in this country is the lack of money. It is only by expanding the business base that we will make headway toward lowering unemployment. Small businesses, secondary industry and the service industries do not want government grants. They know from long experience that anything the government gives, it must first take away. All they want is access to money at a reasonable rate and they will do the rest themselves. They want less government, not more. They want simplified tax forms and fewer reports to send to the figure filberts at Statistics Canada. In other words, they want the government off their backs.

In my riding there are several small industries. I had a recent call from a businessman who was having a problem with—you guessed it—money. He had orders, but no money. His company had designed a unique hydraulic device that found a ready market in the United States. Our banks could not help him and his company unfortunately became caught in the clutches of the Industrial Development Bank. He was really in trouble then, with orders coming in, demands on cash at a high level, no help from the chartered banks and the IDB charging 12 per cent interest.

With this dilemma facing his company, he met with a group of United States customers and explained his problem. They came back with a solution. The United States customers recommended that he move his manufacturing operations to New York state. They would organize a new company in the United States, give my constituent 49 per cent of the stock, refinance the operation, set up a DISC and ship goods back to Canada. That is what happened.

There are hundreds of similar occurrences, with slight variations, each year in Canada. A lack of money, high interest rates in Canada and plenty of money south of the border at equitable rates is a familiar tune to businessmen. The answer this government gives is that it will set up some conditions and a screening agency, but no mention of solving the real problem. I have mentioned the man in my riding who tried to borrow money from the bank under the Small Businesses Loans Act only to be told he could not borrow money at that rate because the bank could not make a profit at 6¼ per cent interest. The bank then steered the man to the IDB, which suggested he borrow at 12 per cent interest.

There is nothing in the budget presented on February 19 that will make money any easier for small business, secondary industry and the service industries. There are none of the massive changes in the Income Tax Act promised by minister of finance Benson when Bill C-259 was rammed through this House. These are the same changes echoed by the present minister when he took over the finance portfolio. A few minor changes have been made, but nothing to make it a workable tax act which the average businessman can understand.

There is no statement of policy by the government as to its over-all plan for secondary industry. In fact, you could easily say this is an anti-business budget. This shows how far to the left this government has gone. The people operating small businesses, secondary industry and service industries in Canada have no status in the economic life of our country. They know how far to the left this government has gone. In spite of being the largest employers and tax contributors, these operators are continually downgraded and held at bay by a government that does not know, does not want to know or just does not give a damn.

The strange part of this indifference by the government is the cost involved. Small business, secondary industry and the service industry want amendments to the Bank Act to ease the flow of money to their operations. Along with everyone else in Canada, they want revisions to the tax act so it is workable, understandable and can be lived with. They want simplified tax forms in keeping with their business records. They want a moratorium on Statistics Canada forms until the value of such forms is proved.

These people want the same access to export credit as large industry. They want an end to the numerous faceless and nameless forms that cross their desks with unintelligible signatures. They want to be able to talk to the faceless and the nameless person who wrote the letter, rather than to be told that he does not accept phone calls. These people want a government with guts enough to face up to the issues of the day, one in which they can have confidence and under which they can plan their business in an orderly fashion and an atmosphere of co-operation.

These requirements would cost the taxpayers nothing, but the budget presented by this government falls way short of expectation, as does the government itself. I cannot support this budget and I join my colleagues and millions of Canadians in condemning this government.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Jean-R. Roy (Timmins): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to have this opportunity of speaking during the budget debate, but not to dwell on the excellence of the government's budget because there is no need for that. The people in my riding, as well as people across Canada, are already aware of the many measures in this budget that will help the fixed income earner, the low income earner, the old and the young—all of them consumers. The government has indeed put together a package that will receive the approval of a very large majority of Canadians, to the chagrin and frustration of members opposite including the hon. member who has just spoken.

The matters I would like to bring to the attention of several ministers for their immediate consideration and correction have to do with several continuing bureaucratic administrative procedures which frustrate some of our citizens and make my blood pressure rise to boiling point. It is amazing how often parliament adopts a law, with much good will and the best intentions, which is designed to serve the small citizen of this country, yet after the regulations have been compiled by departmental officials it develops that parts of the law become simply bureaucratic nightmares.

The first example with which I shall deal is the additional $1,000 personal exemption that was proposed for persons 65 years of age or over for income tax purposes. To all members of this House the meaning was simple and clear. Persons 65 years of age, because they have more medical bills and particular needs because of age, in most cases have no ability for normal earnings and have limited income, should have an additional $1,000 deduction to ensure that their meagre income would not be taxed. To all members it was a simple matter. If it involved a married couple, the additional exemption was two times $1,000, or $2,000. Is this what we have? No. After the officials got through with the income tax forms, it turned out that in order to claim the $2,000 deduction both husband and wife must have earnings of at least $2,500. If only the husband has earnings and the wife simply has her $994.86 old age pension as earnings, her $1,000 additional exemption is useless to her and to her husband.

Again we have a case of gross discrimination. If each one of a couple has earnings of $2,500, their exemption in practical terms can reach over $5,000, but if only the husband has earnings of more then $5,000 the exemptions can reach only $1,000 less. If a way can be found by a bureaucrat to make life hard for the politician, you can bet your life he will find it. In this case they have found a way to make it tough not only for the politician but for the poor, old age pensioner through another example of discrimination which is more helpful to the high income earner than the low income earner. I would therefore ask the Minister of Finance (Mr. Turner) and the Minister of National Revenue (Mr. Stanbury) to quickly correct this injustice.

Another example relates to the deductions allowed a working parent for child care in the amount of $500 per child up to a maximum of $2,000. Again, members accepted this measure with great pleasure and pride, with much good will and the best intentions. However, Mr. Speaker, when the bureaucrats got through with the regulations for this bonanza to working parents, it became a nightmare that frightened away both the parents who needed the relief and the babysitters who are trying to help out. The babysitters want to quit because they become full-time employees. The parents throw up their hands in frustration because they become employers. This involves them in all the implications of unemployment insurance, the Canada Pension Plan, income tax deductions, forms of all sorts, and reports. This disgusts the two parties to the point that the benefit is refused. They would rather not have the help than become involved in all the bureaucracy. Surely a quick, easy and reasonably simple procedure can be found to accommodate these people. Surely we can do away with this nightmare without destroying the value of this measure.

The third point I wish to bring to Your Honour's attention has to do with unemployment insurance. I recognize that Bill C-125 will be in the House shortly and that my recommendations might be more appropriate at that time. But the situation I wish to talk about is in my view so distasteful that I feel a correction must be brought in now. It has to do with the infamous practice of having benefit control officers ask people who are seeking unemployment insurance to make statements. The officer interprets the statement, writes the report and has the claimant sign the report as his own. Some officers will ask, "How much do you have to earn to properly support your family?" The claimant will answer, "About $100 a week." The officer will mark on the sheet, "Will not accept less than $100 a week."

The officer then will ask, "Would you take a job in another area?" The claimant will say, "Well, I am established here. I have my family and my house here." The officer will write down, "Will not accept work outside of town." Then he writes, "I am writing these statements knowing exactly what they mean". He turns the sheet to the claimant and says, "Sign here". The claimant is so eager to receive his unemployment insurance benefits that he quickly signs, not knowing he is disqualifying himself completely from benefits.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

An hon. Member: You are right.

Mr. Roy (Timmins): Mr. Speaker, I will vote for all the amendments the minister presents to prevent abuses in the system. I find the loopholes that were left repugnant and I will support the elimination of abuses as much as possible. However, in this case it is the system that is wrong and abusive. This procedure must cease. If any claimant is to incriminate himself, he should at least be left to do it alone without the help of a benefit control officer. It is a despicable practice. I sometimes ask myself why the control officers have not revolted against this procedure and forced the commission to abandon it. I urge the minister to change this situation, one which is the very opposite of the democratic process and the simple rights of an individual.

An hon. Member: He is not here.

Mr. Roy (Timmins): He will read about it tomorrow; I will make sure of that. It may be difficult to find a more efficient method to disqualify people from unemployment insurance benefits, but surely the nature of this procedure condemns it outright as an inhuman and unjust one. I urge the minister to quickly dispense with that sort of sordid practice. I have often thought we should have a committee of the House for the purpose of studying the consequences to individuals resulting from regulations which complement our laws. Mr. Speaker, the examples I have brought to your attention confirm the need for such a committee and I commend it to my House leader for consideration.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. John Wise (Elgin): Mr. Speaker, this is the first occasion I have had to participate in debate in this House and I sincerely welcome the opportunity. My first wish is to join my fellow hon. members in expressing congratulations to you upon your election to the high office of Speaker, an office in which you conduct yourself so ably, with dignity and a great sense of humour. My congratulations and best wishes are also extended to the Deputy Speaker, the hon. member for Halifax-East Hants (Mr. McCleave), on his elevation to that high post. At this time,

Mr. Speaker, I have a desire to recognize the abilities of two other gentlemen among us, Mr. A. Fraser for his sincere personal interest, and Mr. J. Gordon Dubroy for his keen expertise.

I realize that it is customary for one in my position to spend some time setting forth some of the great virtues of the riding. Realizing that other members wish to speak in this debate, I will not linger in this area at any great length except to inform the House that the riding of Elgin is one that is steeped in some of the most interesting history of our great nation. Elgin, like many other ridings, is a mixture of urban and rural communities. Its industries range in size from a few employees to the giant Ford Company of Canada assembly plant at Talbotville employing between 3,000 and 4,000 people.

A great number of these industries are American-owned and they are excellent corporate citizens. I make that statement without any hesitation, Mr. Speaker. Therefore, any move to restrain or restrict American investment by this or any government would have extremely adverse effects upon the economy of an employment in my riding. Its agriculture is diversified, involving both dairy and beef cattle production. I might say that the Elgin herds possess some of the finest and highest producing cattle that can be found across this country. Food and vegetable growing is very common. We have cash crop production including corn, wheat and beans of many varieties. These are only some of our products.

It is my wish to point out that the single, most valuable crop grown in Elgin is flue-cured tobacco. Its production from Elgin growers alone recently brought in $35 million. When we consider that over $24 million goes for provincial and federal income taxes, and over $551 million for excise tax and duty, one can clearly appreciate the input of the flue-cured tobacco growers and the tobacco industry in our over-all economy. I would be remiss if at a time when I am mentioning some of the aspects of Elgin agriculture I did not draw the attention of hon. members to the world championship awards which were received by my constituents for soybean and tobacco production.

I was pleased to read in the government's estimates that significant amounts of money were granted for the construction of a new post office in the town of Aylmer, and that moneys will be expended on the Lake Erie Harbour of Port Stanley. In a recent conversation which I had with officials of the Department of Public Works regarding damage to the pier at Port Bruce, I was informed that the situation had been investigated, a report was being prepared and the port facilities would be repaired.

I regret that the government continues to ignore the deteriorating harbour, port facilities and property at Port Burwell. I am convinced that the neglect of Port Burwell is clearly a mistake. I make these remarks without fear because I want to draw to the attention of the government the fact that this harbour is within walking distance of the site of the new Dofasco steel plant and hundreds of acres of land have already been purchased for that purpose.

I want to be fair, and without taking too much of hon. members' time I should like to acknowledge with satisfaction those budget items that were welcomed by Canadians across the country. However, the minister and his colleagues can hardly take credit for them because they were measures we had recommended and they had been severely ridiculed by hon. members opposite in many instances and on many occasions.

For many years I have been of the opinion that income tax and tariff legislation governing farmers, farmlands, agricultural products, marketing rights and quotas have been grossly unfair. After studying some of the new proposals relative to these matters, I am convinced of their unfairness. If the reaction I have received is typical of producers across Canada—and I am positive that it is—then this government should well realize its shortcomings in this area. Mr. Speaker, this is another prime example of the lack of understanding, the lack of recognition or the absolute refusal to recognize conditions as they really are. It points to the huge, untravelled distance between those in the ivory towers and those at the grass roots level of this country.

All Canadians have a vital stake in the employment and income-generating potential of the agricultural industry. You will be interested to know that 20 per cent of the gross value of our manufactured goods is supplied by the agricultural industry; 33 per cent of the freight moving through the St. Lawrence Seaway and 20 per cent of the goods moved by our railways are of agricultural origin. How has agriculture performed over the past few years? It is a known fact that the number of farm operators has rapidly declined and their average age has rapidly increased. These are two serious and drastic trends that are still continuing, but they seem to be of little or no concern to this government.

During recent years the output per agricultural worker has increased 100 per cent as compared to 50 per cent for his counterpart, the industrial worker. The consumer has been the major beneficiary of these developments. Today Canadians spend less of their pay on food than ever before, about 19 per cent of the family budget as compared to 28 per cent in France, 24 per cent in the United Kingdom and 37 per cent in Italy. In fact, we Canadians require less of our pay cheques for food than people anywhere except in the United States.

There are two questions that I would like to pose to Canadians in other walks of life. First, what would you do if you had put in the same number of hours of work in your job, or the same effort into your business, but your sales or output dropped by 50 per cent in that year? Second, what would your reaction be if your wages, or prices for products, declined to 50 per cent of those in the previous year? Such things happen to large groups of farmers and are very commonplace in the agricultural industry.

Some of the principal reasons for these problems are poor production incentives, inadequate tariff protection, lack of sufficient export sales promotion and subsidies, and high support prices paid to producers in our traditional markets outside Canada. An example is the fact that in France, barley is subsidized for the export market at $1.23 a bushel more than the Canadian farmer receives for his barley. The average expenditure in agricultural subsidies in Canada per person in 1968 was $350, compared to $1,287 in the United States, $1,059 in the United Kingdom and $1,502 in Switzerland. I mention these examples because there is a widening gulf of misunderstanding between farmers and the rest of the economy about the reason and need for assistance to Canadian agriculture.

It is only through an expansive, outward looking agricultural and food policy that the farm sector can ensure that its contribution to the general economy will continue. We need in this budget an energetic and positive program of incentives for our business and industry, both large and small, a program with guidelines which would ensure that public moneys earmarked for the purpose of improving employment truly end up in the creation of more jobs. Too often in the past moneys have ended up in modernization, automation and plant transfers, resulting in even fewer jobs than before.

No mention was made in the budget of lowering the age at which our senior citizens receive their pensions. I am of the opinion that serious consideration should have been given to such a course of action. It is most regrettable that the government has refused to remove the sales tax on building materials. The elimination of this tax would encourage construction and, speaking in human terms, I would remind the Minister of Finance (Mr. Turner) that construction creates jobs. A glance at the present national unemployment figure in this country would indicate that jobs are still high on the priority list, at least they are on this side of the House.

• (2130)

There are numerous other areas of concern that I would have liked to talk about at length tonight, but because of the limited time available I will be unable to do so. Therefore, Mr. Speaker, I have submitted these words with sincerity and genuine concern, and will continue to do so on future occasions for as long as I have the good fortune and the honour to represent in the House of Commons the great people of Elgin.

[Translation]

Mr. Roch La Salle (Joliette): Mr. Speaker, I take this occasion to make a few comments on the budget.

It is rather interesting, Mr. Speaker, to listen to a series of speeches on a budget which, according to some, seems to be the solution to all our problems and, according to others, seems to be the worst budget ever introduced and would have no beneficial effect.

I should like to express in an unbiased manner, as I always attempt to do, very honest opinions in respect of this budget. It is certainly not as great and not as good as some hon. members would have us believe, though it is not as bad as some other hon. members, in view of their opinions, tried to make us believe.

The outstanding points and objectives of this budget are of course to lower the unemployment rate and stimulate more rapid growth, to reduce inflationary pressures, also, and deaden the effects of past inflation, to increase actual income and to assure elderly Canadians or a more equitable share of the country's prosperity, and, lastly, to work towards a better balanced economic development of all regions of Canada.

How far will this budget allow us to carry out all of these objectives. I am not as optimistic as the Minister of Finance (Mr. Turner), who believes and claims that these measures will create 300,000 jobs. In any case, I hope that whoever estimated that 300,000 jobs could be created are not the same people who dreamt up the 100,000 jobs that the government of Quebec promised us a few years back, or the other 100,000 jobs that the building of an airport at Saint-Scholastique was guaranteed to provide. We know very well how wrong those forecasts were, and I trust, Mr. Speaker, that those responsible for the estimates in this budget are not the same people.

Taken as a whole, of course, the budget is not as bad as some would have us believe. The budget is definitely the product of a minority government. That is nothing new, and I have said several times before that a minority government could achieve in six months what a majority government has failed to achieve or could not achieve in four years. We see the government having to do more and better, when forced to act. In my opinion, the opposition should join forces to force the government to fulfil the people's hopes and needs.

The budget now under consideration is much more worthwhile than those of past years and I must say objectively that I will support it in spite of its deficiencies as most measures are generally deficient in one way or another. It remains nevertheless that this budget on the whole has some merit and that in my opinion it is preferable to support it rather than to reject it.

I could also dwell on some commitments in this budget concerning a basic exemption for taxpayers which will increase from $1,500 to $1,600 and an exemption for a married couple which will augment from $2,850 to $3,000. Moreover, the basic federal income tax will be reduced by 5 per cent and the personal income tax rate will be escalated from 1974. We are pleased also with the $18 monthly increase in old age security pensions.

I regret to see that the government has not seriously considered giving the old age security pension to people who are 60. We could at least have given it progressively over a period of 5 years, as was the case when the eligibility age was brought down from 70 to 65; I think we could also have thought of giving the old age security pension to the spouse of the beneficiary, even if he or she is not yet 65.

I think it is important to remind hon. members and the minister in particular of the problem that arises for an old couple, when one is not yet 65 and could get $170, when we know perfectly that a couple both aged 65 will be able to get $325 a month.

I think it will be important for all hon. members, when new bills issued from this budget will be brought in to propose the necessary amendments, and if we failed to legislate in order to control unemployment, I think I would not hesitate to remind them of the importance of bringing in amendments designed to force the government to give the old age security pension at 60, even if it is done progressively over a period of 5 years, if it appeared impossible for the government to do it quicker. I think that if we seriously want to find a solution to the problem of unemployment, this kind of measure would be quite right.

I recognize that the government made a tremendous effort to reduce unemployment by injecting new credits into the economy but after five years we realize not only that the rate of unemployment has not diminished but that it even has a tendency to grow. Now, I think it is the duty, the government to improve the social climate: what better way of doing it than by giving holidays to people who have reached an age when they deserve them? Of course, some will tell me that it will be extremely costly for the government to give the old age security pension as early as at 60.

I should like to put this question to the Minister of Finance: How much does it cost to provide for 500,000 to 600,000 unemployed, for instance? If the required calculations were made to grant the old age security pension as early as at 60 years of age, on an optional basis for some months and shortly after on a compulsory basis, we would finally achieve a truly acceptable social policy. Of course, people would become unemployed at 60, but they would be happy unemployed, thanks to a decent pension, contrary to our 20-year old unemployed who are rather inclined to be revolutionary. To my mind, the government always errs in a masterly manner when it applies itself to increasing the benefits and allowances of those who make up a generation we are in the process of spoiling.

In my opinion, it rests with the Opposition members, especially under the present circumstances, owing to the membership of the House, to suggest amendments to the bills which will be referred to us. The official opposition should make a point of introducing constructive measures and I would like to see the New Democratic Party take position on such proposals. Up to now, I somewhat regret the lack of aggressiveness of the New Democratic Party which is too readily approving the budget.

Once again, I admit as many others do that it contains some good provisions; moreover, on the whole, I will support the passage of the budget, because it contains a minimum of good provisions.

I heard this afternoon a member of the New Democratic Party say that if he had been a government member, he would have done better. But is there anything preventing the New Democratic Party from proposing positive amendments? The Progressive Conservative party has proposed an amendment, the Social Credit party has proposed a sub-amendment, but the New Democratic party has proposed no amendment. We could have made some evaluation of an amendment, voting for or against it.

I believe it important for the opposition parties not to subject The New Democratic party to difficulties, but to allow it to support a measure that would improve the lot of our older citizens. We do know that that party has always paid much attention to the older or the poorer citizens, and I believe that it would be very interesting to know about the amendments and suggestions that could be introduced in this House inviting the New Democratic party, as all the other opposition parties, to force the government to act, because the Canadian people know very well that the opposition is in a position to do so. No doubt the government will not allow itself to be defeated on a positive and worthwhile measure. We all know that the government is obliged to come to some arrangements and that it also pays heed to positive solutions or suggestions. Therefore, I consider it my duty to invite the opposition parties to discharge their primary responsibilities, forcing the government to improve the legislation placed before us.

I do not hesitate to say that the $20 increase in old-age security payments is welcome by those who can get it, but, there again, I believe that we would have benefited from lowering the eligibility age in order to make some room for the unemployed and for the young people waiting openings on the labour market.

For instance, I would have been happy if this budget had provided some moneys for amateur sports. I know that the Speech from the Throne says that amateur sports could eventually obtain some additional credits. When this government talks about youth's motivation toward physical fitness, I wonder to what point it is serious. A year and a half ago, I suggested to the Minister to grant some very special funds enabling municipalities to acquire the basic tools. But what are those basic tools? Whether one is talking about physical fitness, financial participation, direct or indirect, to the 1976 Olympic Games, youths must still be offered training facilities. But basic tools in municipalities mean arenas, playgrounds, lighting systems, public swimming pools, etc. How can municipalities acquire these? If they were acquired, I am convinced that volunteerism would follow, that interested people would offer to participate, and that at last we would set up facilities so that youths may acquire that physical fitness which is absolutely required.

I thought that the federal government was in a position to bring in a tripartite policy at the financial level. There should be no cheating, of course. The municipalities could ask the province to supply 25 p. cent, contribute themselves 25 p. cent and let the federal government pay the other half of the expenses incurred for the project.

In that way, we would not infringe upon the provincial jurisdictions and the fact that the municipality would be compelled to make a request to its province would enable the latter to adjust its planning at leisure. So, if the province accepts to pay 25 p. cent of the cost of an arena or of a public swimming pool, the federal government would pay 50 p. cent of the expenditures, would respect at the same time the provincial jurisdiction, would leave the province free to monitor the planning, the municipality would show its interest and good will by paying 25 p. cent of the cost of the project. I think this would be a way to prove that the federal government is willing to help youth in need of physical training.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Boulanger): I regret to interrupt the hon. member, but his time is up.

[English]

Mr. John Rodriguez (Nickel Belt): Mr. Speaker, in 1789 social needs were vital in France and Marie Antoinette responded to the cries of the French people for bread with, "Let them eat cake." In 1973 the Minister of Finance (Mr. Turner) meets the cries for employment, decent housing and the alleviation of poverty in Canada with, "Let them eat candy and drink pop". When we examine this budget closely, we see it for what it really is, a tale full of sound and fury, signifying nothing. It purports to improve the lot of Canadians on fixed incomes by raising the old age pension by what appears to be $18 a month; in reality is a mere $15 per month.

We in the New Democratic Party find the increase a half-hearted response to the needs of our people who exist on fixed incomes. Even though it is a crumb, we will accept it. What were the Tories prepared to offer the pensioner? During the October election campaign that party was prepared to raise the basic old age pension to $90 a month. Since the election they have suddenly discovered the old age pensioners and are now calling for a greater increase than the government has proposed. It only serves to show that the Tories are just as opportunistic as the Liberals. But we must not forget that these two corporate parties have now entered a new era of disincentives for the poor and incentives for their corporate friends and allies. After all, the Liberals and the Conservatives would not want over one million Canadians, 65 years old and over, becoming lazy with large pension cheques.

Another crumb is in the area of personal taxes, where the government broke with the traditional concept of across the board tax cuts. The budget proposes a minimum $100 cut in tax. We accept this crumb also. The indexing system proposed is a small step in the right direction—another crumb, and we accept it. Apart from these meagre offerings forced out of this government, the rest of the budget does not deal seriously with unemployment and the urgent social needs of the Canadian people. On the contrary, the selective federal sales tax cuts might very well find their collective way into corporate pockets. We warn the government that the day will come when the people of Canada will want to eat at the table and will not be content with crumbs. They will want to share in the meal. Then these two old-line parties can exist side by side as the corporate concubines they really are.

The list of items on which the federal sales tax has been lifted indicates, first of all, that the government is not interested in the production and availability of necessary goods such as building materials and adult clothing. These members to my right, Mr. Speaker, would suggest that the 11 per cent federal sales tax on building materials be dropped. I should like to ask them why they would not use their influence with the premier of the province of Ontario to get that government to drop the 5 per cent sales tax on building materials, if they are so interested in stimulating the building market.

Stimulation of the consumer market, as I have mentioned, Mr. Speaker, would certainly have served to create employment opportunities so vital to the nation's economy today. By what logic is the tax on candy and pop removed, and not the tax on building materials? Even if the saving is passed on to the consumer, how does the Minister of Finance justify stimulating consumerism in a non-essential area? I grant that the selective federal sales tax on various items has been reduced, but what assurance have we that these decreases will result in savings to the Canadian people? The government has refused to implement any kind of monitoring system to ensure that the Canadian people get the benefit of these sales tax cuts. The minister seems to have blind faith that the marketplace of the free enterprise system will lower prices to the Canadian people. Alas for such faith! We know from past experiences that when the federal sales tax on prescription drugs was dropped by the last minority government—that was another crumb—the people never received the benefit. So why do we think we are going to receive benefits now?

If the minister is interested in dealing with one of Canada's most serious problems, why not provide a tax rebate to individuals who build their own homes or have their homes built for them? It seems to me that two problems would have been attacked by such a tax incentive, namely, unemployment and inflation. While the budget indicates the extent to which the Liberals are willing to tinker with the economy, it also exposes their opportunism and inability to effectively redirect the human, financial and natural resources of our country so that poverty may be eliminated and a better quality of life may emerge for the Canadian people as a whole.

[Translation]

Mr. Yves Demers (Duvernay): Mr. Speaker, the budget brought down by the Minister of Finance (Mr. Turner) on Monday, February 19, 1973, is considered by the vast majority of financial analysts as a masterpiece.

Its main objective is to check unemployment. But its strength, and this is what most surprises those financial analysts, lies in the fact that in addition to checking unemployment the budget also considerably dampens the effects of inflation.

Normally, in our North American economic context, when unemployment goes down, inflation goes up. By decreasing inflation, one creates more unemployment.

By reducing income tax, not only in the lower income brackets but also in the average income levels, the budget gives Canadians more purchasing power. Automatically our industries will have to produce more; they will therefore require more labour.

What I admire most in this budget is that the average-income group will also benefit from tax reductions. We often think about the Canadian middle class. Unfortunately, every time this happens, it is for the purpose of paying more taxes, indirect taxes as well as municipal and school taxes.

I even know about administrators who are looking for new ways of increasing taxes in future. This middle class which is made up of workers form the greater part of Duvernay. They are people who contribute heavily to all levels of the Canadian economy.

Finally in this budget the minister of Finance has shown that this middle class is also representing the overtaxed silent majority, to such an extent that many are discouraged in seeing such a large share of their working hours wasted on taxes of all kinds.

It must be remembered that, basically, our economy leans on the middle class which must be encouraged as best we can. It is due to these people that our gross national product is so high and that we are in a position to improve our social assistance such as old age security pensions, unemployment insurance benefits, social welfare benefits, etc.

I said earlier this budget is intended to stop inflation to some extent.

In fact, by reducing the sales tax on several products, especially on children's clothing and shoes of all kinds for young people, there results an appreciable reduction of the family cost of living.

Indeed, I should have preferred to see an increase in family allowances, but the elimination of the sales tax is equivalent to an indirect increase of those allowances.

The budget provides for the Canadian taxpayer tax cuts varying from $100 to $500 a year. This reduction, which increases purchasing power, will also contribute somewhat to bringing down salary increases, a primary cause of inflation in this country.

A decrease in tax rates equivalent every year to the percentage of inflation has also been provided, a provision that will, I believe, most effectively curb the inflationary pressure. I shall clarify my statement.

In the late 50's, a construction worker earned an average of $100 a week. Now, hourly rates have gone slightly over $5 an hour for a 40-hour week, bringing present salaries slightly over $200 a week. Thus, in 14 years, salaries of those workers have doubled, from $5,200 to $10,400 a year. After payment on taxes on a salary of $5,200, a married, childless workers was left with a purchasing power of $4,300. Today, with a salary of $10,400, the purchasing power in the same case is only $8,100. Salaries have therefore doubled whereas taxes, because of increased rates, have gone $500 over double their amount.

These calculations therefore show that the progressive tax rate has substantially contributed to inflation during the past decade and that during the past 13 or 14 years the increase in tax rates accounted for some 20 per cent of inflation in Canada.

In order to curb this effect, there will be an indexing of personal income taxes as of January 1, 1974, in order to halt the erosion of purchasing power.

I should also like to point out another cause of inflation, the collective agreements which, over the past ten years—

May I call it 10 o'clock, Mr. Speaker?

[English]

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

A motion to adjourn the House under Standing Order 40 deemed to have been moved.

NATIONAL DEFENCE—ALLEGED EXCLUSION OF GAGETOWN FROM BASES SHARING FUNDS FOR LABOUR-INTENSIVE PROJECTS

Mr. J. Robert Howie (York-Sunbury): Mr. Speaker, on January 22 I asked the Minister of National Defence (Mr. Richardson) if he could tell the House why base Gagetown in New Brunswick was omitted from the 40 bases sharing the $13.3 million allotted for federal labour intensive projects. I have referred previously to my concern about the increasing rate of unemployment in New Brunswick and in particular to the alarming rate of increase in my own constituency, York-Sunbury. The largest employer of unskilled and semi-skilled labour in New Brunswick is Canada's largest military training establishment, base Gagetown.

I believe that several hundred thousand dollars was requested by the authorities at base Gagetown under the winter works program to carry out much needed maintenance on defence properties, including accommodation occupied by military personnel and their dependants. I would like to ask the Minister of National Defence why, with such a large rate of unemployment in that particular area and the obvious wastefulness of allowing valuable properties to continue depreciating, he would select base Gagetown as one of the few military stations to receive absolutely no grant from his allotment of $13.3 million.

As part of the program of work that was proposed from base Gagetown involved a large portion of labour-intensive work on armouries and other defence properties throughout New Brunswick, it would seem that other hard-hit communities in my province have also been deprived of this opportunity for employment, opportunities that have been given to all other provinces except Alberta, the Yukon and the Northwest Territories.

I ask the minister to reconsider what appears to me and to the people of my constituency to be a case of unfair discrimination in the allocation of funds placed at his disposal. Urgently needed work has to be done at base Gagetown and a large number of men, most of them heads of families, are willing and able to do it.

Hon. C. M. Drury (President of the Treasury Board): Mr. Speaker, it was perhaps incorrect to direct this question to the Minister of National Defence (Mr. Richardson) because he does not have total discretion in the matter. If the hon. member will recollect, during the discussion on the $350 million winter works program an allocation of this sum of money was made across the country by provinces in relation to population, the rate of unemployment and the degree of seasonality of unemployment. It was hoped there would ensue a fair distribution of this money.

At the same time, the government set aside—this was subsequently approved in the supplementary estimates—the sum of $60 million in a Treasury Board vote for direct employment through the federal government for federal labour-intensive programs. The moneys were allocated by provinces in exactly the same way, using the same criteria as the federal winter works program, the larger program. Departments were then invited to submit proposals for work showing the cost, the type of project and the number of man-hours, from which it was possible to grade them in order of number of people employed per dollar expended or number of dollars required to secure one man-month of employment. The allocation of funds was made by provinces in accordance with the formula suggested by the provinces in respect of the $60 million and in relation to those projects which would produce the greatest number of man-months per dollar expended.

In the case of the camp Gagetown projects, the number of man-months employed for the given number of dollars expended tended to be higher than others. For this reason, Gagetown was not selected. I sympathize with the hon. member because there is unemployment there, but the money could not usefully be used; it could more profitably and more urgently be employed elsewhere.

SOCIAL SECURITY—RETIRED PUBLIC SERVANTS, ARMED FORCES PERSONNEL AND RCMP PENSIONS—STATUS OF CONSIDERATION OF RAISING OR REMOVING CEILING ON ESCALATION

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, on Wednesday, January 24, as recorded at page 610 of Hansard, I put this question to the President of the Treasury Board (Mr. Drury):

In view of the assurance given by the minister toward the end of the previous session that consideration would be given to raising or removing the 2 per cent ceiling on the escalation of pensions of retired public servants and also retired armed forces and RCMP personnel, can the minister say what is now the status of that consideration?

The President of the Treasury Board replied:

Mr. Speaker, in view of the genesis of the 2 per cent figure in the Superannuation Act, namely, its relationship to the Canada Pension Plan, perhaps these two matters could be looked at together.

I then asked a supplementary question which raised another issue in the same field. As the President of the Treasury Board knows, I am concerned about both issues. The second issue was that of the position of retired armed forces and RCMP personnel who are under 60 years of age and have to wait until that point before the escalation of their pensions begins. As the President of the Treasury Board knows, it has been my argument for some time, particularly since certain changes were made regarding early retirement, that such personnel should not have to wait until age 60 to start drawing their escalation.

However, let me concentrate this evening on the removal of the 2 per cent ceiling on escalation of the pensions we are speaking about tonight. As the minister knows, the first escalation of pensions was on the old age pension, and it was subject to a 2 per cent ceiling. But we make progress, even when the Liberals are in power, and we have now got to the point where old age and certain other pensions are escalated by the actual percentage rise in the cost of living. Indeed, we have gone a step further: there is now on the table of the House a report from the Standing Committee on Veterans Affairs which recommends that war disability pensions be escalated by an even more beneficial factor, namely, the wage index, and I emphasize the fact that that is higher than the cost of living index. That, in my book, is a wonderful report and a tremendous recommendation, and we shall get to it later in this session.

In light of the progress that is being made, I think it is unfair to retain for retired public servants and retired members of the RCMP and armed forces the 2 per cent ceiling, so that no matter by how much the cost of living goes up in a year their pensions cannot go up more than 2 per cent. I got back to the minister on this question again on Friday, February 9. I thought I made a good point, but all he did was look at me while the Speaker called order. On another occasion, namely, on February 12, I drew attention to the fact that figures which had been tabled that day showed a tremendous increase in the amount of money in the special fund out of which these escalation payments are made, to which the minister responded that this additional money had to be looked at as providing for a greater charge on the fund in later years.

Time is at a premium but I should like to argue with the minister on that point. I went back over the debate in 1970—even though I remembered it quite well—and I found no suggestion that this fund for escalating the pensions of retired public servants and others was to be put on an actuarial basis. The key sentence of the then President of the Privy Council, the present Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Mr. Macdonald), is to be found at page 4589 of Hansard for March 10, 1970, and is as follows:

These increases will in turn be financed by additional contributions of one half of one per cent by present employees, contributions that will be matched by the government.

As the minister knows, every time we have been faced with complaints by present employees that they have to pay this one half of one per cent in order to pay for the escalation of pensions received by those who are now retired, our answer—the minister's and mine—has been that when they get to the point of retirement the working public servants of that day will pay one half of one per cent to provide for the escalation of their pensions.

I feel that there is nothing in the record to indicate that this fund is on an actuarial basis. It is on a current or pay-as-we-go basis. I contend that, partly because the fund is growing rapidly, but even more so because of what is right—namely, that it is unfair to retain this 2 per cent ceiling—early action should be taken either to raise that ceiling to a much higher figure, or to put it on the basis of the actual cost of living or remove it altogether and accept the formula recommended by the Standing Committee on Veterans Affairs.

I do not expect the minister to stand up tonight, give me the perfect answer and say, "Yes, we shall get at this tomorrow morning and bring in the legislation tomorrow afternoon." But I do urge him to activate consideration of this matter. If it requires further consultation with representatives of the staff associations, for goodness sake let us have that consultation right away. I ask the minister not to wait until something is done about the Canada Pension Plan, because that involves federal-provincial relations and the minister knows how long that can take. In the meantime, it is only fair and just for retired public servants, and retired armed forces and RCMP personnel that their pensions should be accelerated every year by at least the rise in the cost of living.

Therefore I urge that steps be activated now so we can get rid of that 2 per cent ceiling, and I hope while he is at it the minister will take steps to get rid of the unfairness in respect of retired armed forces and RCMP personnel who are under age 60.

Adjournment Debate

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. I regret to interrupt the hon. member, but his allotted time has now expired.

Hon. C. M. Drury (President of the Treasury Board): Under the rules, Mr. Speaker, I believe I have only three minutes, so I will have to compress my remarks.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): You could say yes in a few seconds.

Mr. Drury: The first benefits to which the hon. gentleman refers apply not only to public service superannuation annuitants, to members of the armed forces and the RCMP, but also to those receiving benefits under the RCMP Pension Continuation Act, the Members of Parliament Retiring Allowances Act and the Diplomatic Service (Special) Superannuation Act, so we are dealing with a much larger group than merely a certain selection of public servants.

It was quite clear in 1970 when this act was passed, as the hon. gentleman pointed out, that the cost of these additional benefits and the escalation was to be financed by employer contributions by the government and by employees under these various statutes.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Present employees.

Mr. Drury: Yes, present employees. Reference has been made to the desirability, and with this I heartily agree, of escalation starting at the time of retirement, but because the dates of retirement vary under each of these different acts, given a common contribution, and a common fund, a common age was sought, and 60 appeared to be the most appropriate to cover the largest number of people.

It is possible for members of the armed forces to retire on full pension at a considerably earlier age than is possible for public servants. It is possible for Members of Parliament to retire on pension at a considerably earlier age than age 60 provided for in respect of most public servants. As a result, age 60 was thought to be a common ground in view of the fact they were all drawing from a common pool of contributions on a common basis.

There are obvious difficulties. Present public servants are making contributions to this common fund to be used to finance, not only the pensions of public service annuitants but also pensions of armed forces personnel who start drawing their pensions very much earlier and, perhaps even more interestingly, the pensions of Members of Parliament who may theoretically retire at age 37 or 38.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): That ought to be amended.

Mr. Drury: But that is the way it currently reads.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. I regret to interrupt the President of the Treasury Board, but his allotted time has expired.

[Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre).]

NATIONAL DEFENCE—JERICHO LAND, VANCOUVER—INQUIRY AS TO CALLING OF TENDERS CONCERNING DISPOSAL

Mr. Bill Clarke (Vancouver Quadra): Mr. Speaker, on January 26 I asked the Minister of National Defence (Mr. Richardson) a question concerning a property commonly known as the remaining 38 acres of Jericho defence land in the city of Vancouver lying north of Fourth Avenue. My question asked whether the government was making plans to sell this land. The minister's answer was that his predecessor indicated that if the city wished to reopen negotiations, because there was already an agreement with the city of Vancouver, the city could do so. He seemed puzzled that I should think they were going to sell this land, although the terms of the agreement, as I will show in a minute, with the city of Vancouver provided that the government could sell it.

There have been many briefs, hearings and discussions in respect of this land. I think it would be worth while to run through the history in respect of this land. Prior to World War II the land was used for recreational purposes by the city of Vancouver as a golf course and beach land. During the war, in 1942, the Department of National Defence acquired the use of the land primarily by lease and the citizens of Vancouver were willing to give up their recreational land as part of the war effort, particularly since the government assured them it would be returned after the war.

In 1947, instead of having the land returned, it was purchased by the federal government. There were several parcels, but they ended up with a total package of 172 acres. Then followed 20 years of discussions, meetings and letters. During the 1968 election campaign, the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) landed on the land by helicopter for an election rally. He assured the voters or perhaps he mislead them—but in any event they received the impression they were not to worry about the Jericho land and that the government would certainly be returning it to the citizens of Vancouver.

In 1969, the agreement with the city was entered into which provides that 72 of the 172 acres would come to the citizens for park-land and 38 acres would be sold by the federal government in order to recover the cost of relocating the military installation. The agreement fails to mention, and the government certainly has not often mentioned it recently, that they still retained 62 acres south of Fourth Avenue. That is the situation today.

In 1971, certain groups of concerned citizens who realized this was not the best use of land in the city of Vancouver formed what is known as the Jericho Parks Committee. The membership is made up of representatives of 17 citizens' groups from the whole of the lower mainland of British Columbia. I was involved with this group during 1972. I took the Leader of the Official Opposition (Mr. Stanfield) there. It was agreed that a Conservative government certainly would return the land to the citizens of Vancouver for park use for the price of $1. In May, 1972, Mr. Benson, the then minister of national defence, said that the government would certainly part with the 38 acres, but wanted money for it. My Liberal opponent during the election campaign said he was certain Vancouver would get the land back. We will come to the matter of price in a moment.

Today the Vancouver paper carries a report that the parks board chairman has been to Ottawa and has spoken to officials here, I assume in the Department of National Defence, and that he finds the government now is asking questions such as, how does the city propose to use the land? I also find that he took back the date of March 6 when a final decision is expected by the government. But I am in Ottawa and I do not know what goes on in our area except by reading the papers.

Let us talk about price. In 1965, when the government first decided it would dispose of the Jericho lands, the price talked about was $12 million. Later, when we were about to have an election, the price being talked about by the government was $4½ million. In this day of inflation that is wonderful. That was for 110 acres, the whole of the section north of Fourth Avenue. By October, 1972, we were down, according to my Liberal opponent, to a price of about $500,000.

Let us talk about the moving cost. Certainly the government had to move the installation, but that was its choice. It certainly is not reasonable to have the citizens of Vancouver paying for an inevitable move that the government chose to make. Our Conservative defence critic told me that after his research he found that some two dozen similar cases existed in Canada and in most instances the investment by the government had been written off in the year of purchase.

The government still has the 62 acres on the south side of Fourth Avenue about which I have spoken. The latest blow, I believe, to the citizens of Vancouver happened two weeks before the election when the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Sharp) announced in Toronto that the federal government would give a gift of 86 acres of farm land to the citizens of Toronto at a cost of $30 million. The people of Vancouver wondered if they were still in Canada. Vancouver's reward for its contribution to the war effort in giving up the use of its land is to end up fighting the federal government in order to get it back. The government has no right to be there, and they make much of not charging us any taxes during the time they were there and making grants in lieu. We have been deprived of the use of our land for all these years, and we think we should be charging the government for the loss of its use.

Mr. Leonard Hopkins (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, I am not in the middle of an election campaign; I am just delivering an official answer for the Department of National Defence.

The hon. member's representation on behalf of his constituency of Vancouver Quadra and the city of Vancouver is one that he has been most assiduous in pursuing. I note that on January 12 he placed a private member's notice of motion on the order paper concerning this subject. This was done following a very detailed reply by the Minister of National Defence (Mr. Richardson) in a letter to the hon. member dated January 3, 1973. At that time the hon. member was advised that there are no immediate plans to dispose of the 38-acre development area although such disposal is part of the understanding with the city of Vancouver.

In the same letter the minister enclosed a detailed departmental position paper on the whole subject of the Jericho beach lands. This was done to provide the member with the whole background of the subject, as there has obviously been much local misinterpretation of this issue. Further, on January 26 the minister, in response to a question in the House from the hon. member, as recorded at page 685 of Hansard, confirmed the departmental position.

Basically, the department made an agreement with the city of Vancouver whereby 78 acres of waterfront land at Jericho beach was turned over to the city of Vancouver for $1. The remaining property, some 38 acres, was to be sold by the department. This agreement is still in effect. The basic departmental position is that if the city of Vancouver wishes to reopen this agreement, the minister is prepared to listen to any official representations that may be made.

Motion agreed to and the House adjourned at 10.26 p.m.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Wednesday, February 28, 1973

The House met at 2 p.m.

ROUTINE PROCEEDINGS

PROVINCIAL AFFAIRS

BRITISH COLUMBIA LAND COMMISSION BILL—REQUEST FOR UNANIMOUS CONSENT TO MOVE MOTION

Mr. John Reynolds (Burnaby-Richmond-Delta): Mr. Speaker, pursuant to Standing Order 43 I rise on a matter of urgent and vital importance. The provisions of the federal Bill of Rights are being challenged by Bill 42 of the British Columbia legislature, the Land Commission Act, which denies the public the right to appeal decisions of the commission. Section 11(5) states that the decision of the commission is final and no appeal lies from that decision. I therefore move, seconded by the hon. member for Okanagan-Boundary (Mr. Whittaker):

That this House instruct the Minister of Justice to immediately set up a parliamentary committee to investigate the constitutionality of the B.C. Land Commission Act, and to report its findings to this House.

Mr. Speaker: This motion is proposed to the House under the terms of Standing Order 43. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. Speaker: There is not unanimous consent. The motion cannot be put.

TRADE

CANADA-UNITED STATES AUTOMOTIVE AGREEMENT—REQUEST FOR UNANIMOUS CONSENT TO MOVE MOTION

Mr. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa-Whitby): Mr. Speaker, I rise under the provisions of Standing Order 43. Because of the circumstances I am sure the motion will receive the unanimous consent of the House. The motion arises out of the statement made in Washington yesterday by a United States treasury official that, in spite of a very substantial trade deficit on Canada's part in Canada-U.S. automotive trade for 1972, the United States will continue to insist on the removal of the Canadian job-protection safeguards in the Canada-United States automotive agreement. In view of this major and continuing threat to employment in Canada, I move seconded by the hon. member for Waterloo (Mr. Saltsman):

That this House reassets its commitment to maintain the Canadian job-protecting safeguards in the Canada-U.S. automotive agreement of 1965.

Mr. Speaker: The motion proposed by the hon. member is put before the House under the terms of Standing Order 43. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. Speaker: There is not unanimous consent. The motion therefore cannot be put.

UNEMPLOYMENT INSURANCE

ACCEPTANCE OF MEDICAL CERTIFICATES FOR RECEIVING BENEFITS—REQUEST FOR UNANIMOUS CONSENT TO MOVE MOTION

Mr. Henry Latulippe (Compton): Mr. Speaker, I rise pursuant to Standing Order 43 to request the unanimous consent of the House on a matter of urgent and presseing necessity.

In view of the difficulties encountered by unemployment insurance recipients with respect to stoppage of work due to illness, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Champlain (Mr. Matte):

That medical certificates filed by applicants' doctors be automatically accepted with respect to the period of incapacity to work.

Mr. Speaker: The House has heard the motion of the hon. member. Under Standing Order 43 this motion requires the unanimous consent of the House. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. Speaker: There is not unanimous consent and the motion cannot be put.

REGIONAL ECONOMIC EXPANSION

SUGGESTION THAT GRANTS BE REPLACED BY COMPENSATED DISCOUNT—REQUEST FOR UNANIMOUS CONSENT TO MOVE MOTION

Mr. Jean-Marie Boisvert (Drummond): Mr. Speaker, I rise pursuant to Standing Order 43 to request the unanimous consent of the House on the very important problem of the viability of grants made by the Department of Regional Economic Expansion.

I move, seconded by the hon. member for Rimouski (Mr. Allard):

That this House instruct the Standing Committee on Regional Economic Expansion to examine the viability of grants made by the Department of Regional Economic Expansion to alledgedly create jobs and determine whether those same votes could not be more profitable to the Canadian economy and would not create more jobs if they were applied as a compensated discount to Canadian consumers when purchasing Canadian products now in difficulty because of foreign competition.

Mr. Speaker: The House has heard the motion of the hon. member. Under Standing Order 43 this motion requires the unanimous consent of the House. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. Speaker: I regret to inform the hon. member that there is not unanimity. Therefore the motion cannot be put.

TRADE

CANADA-UNITED STATES AUTOMOTIVE AGREEMENT—REQUEST FOR UNANIMOUS CONSENT TO MOVE MOTION

Mr. Bill Kempling (Halton-Wentworth): Mr. Speaker, I rise under the provisions of Standing Order 43 on a matter of vital and common concern to all members. In view of the fact that the auto pact has not ensured for Canada an equitable share of production and employment in the automotive industry, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Hamilton West (Mr. Alexander):

That this House asserts that there should be improved safeguards in the auto pact to guarantee just levels of employment and production in the Canadian automotive industry and that the government negotiate improved safeguards at the forthcoming trade talks with the United States.

Mr. Speaker: The House has heard the motion proposed by the hon. member under the terms of Standing Order 43. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. Speaker: There is not unanimity. I regret, therefore, to advise the hon. member that his motion cannot be put. Is the hon. member for Oshawa-Whitby rising on a point of order?

Mr. Broadbent: Mr. Speaker, I trust that Hansard will record that the opposition to this motion came from the Liberal benches.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

QUESTIONS ON THE ORDER PAPER

(Questions answered orally are indicated by an asterisk.)

CANADIAN NATIONAL RAILWAYS—NUMBER OF RETIRED EMPLOYEES

Question No. 16—Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre):

1. How many retired employees of the Canadian National Railways are in receipt of pensions of less than $25 per month?

2. How many are in receipt of a pension of $25 per month?

3. How many are in receipt of pensions of $25.01 to $29.99 per month (b) $30 to $39.99 per month (c) $40 to 49.99 per month (d) $50 to $59.99 per month (e) $60 to $69.99 per month (f) $70 to $79.99 per month (g) $80 to $89.99 per month (h) $90 to $99.99 per month (i) $100 to $124.99 per month (j) $125 to $149.99 per month (k) $150 to $199.99 per month (l) $200 to $299.99 per month (m) $300 per month and over?

Hon. Jean Marchand (Minister of Transport): The Management of Canadian National Railways advises as follows: The information shown being as of December 31, 1972 and does not reflect the escalation in pensions granted effective January 1, 1973. 1. Number of pensioners receiving less than $25 a month, 264.

2. Number of pensioners receiving $25 a month, 105.

3. Number of pensioners in receipt of: (a) $25.01 to $29.99 a month, 471; (b) $30 to $39.99 a month, 435; (c) $40 to $49.99 a month, 616; (d) $50 to $59.99 a month, 1,940; (e) $60 to $69.99 a month, 805; (f) $70 to $79.99 a month, 662; (g) $80 to $89.99 a month, 570; (h) $90 to $99.99 a month, 587; (i) $100 to $124.99 a month, 1,622; (j) $125 to $149.99 a month, 1,742; (k) $150 to $199.99 a month, 3,743; (l) $200 to $299.99 a month, 6,552; (m) $300 a month and over, 6,005.

In a number of cases the amounts of pensions paid by Canadian National Railways do not represent the total pensions payable to employees for railway service. Pensions payable by the CNR to international employees (service in both Canada and the United States) relate to their service in Canada only. Such employees also receive annuities payable under the U.S. Railroad Retirement Act or the Social Security Act for service performed in the United States. For example, in the group receiving pensions under $25 from CN, there are 27 former international employees who also receive U.S. Railroad Retirement or Social Security annuities in respect of CN service rendered in the United States. The balance of this group consists of employees who elected early retirement (before age 65) with reduced basic pensions ($25) and employees who had very short service and small contributions.

RAISING OF "IRVING WHALE"

Question No. 259—Mr. Macquarrie:

1. On what date is it now intended to raise the Irving Whale or to relieve it of its cargo?

2. On what date were tenders called for this project?

3. From whom were tenders received and in what amounts?

4. For what reason or reasons were contracts not awarded?

5. Since this time, what inspections of the Irving Whale have been carried out?

6. What are the reasons or factors which prompted the delay in raising the ship or its contents?

7. What is the nature of any technological developments which have come about in this type of salvage since the rejection of the tender bids in Part 2?

Hon. Jean Marchand (Minister of Transport): 1. No date has been set to raise the Irving Whale.

2. Tenders were called on September 13, 1971.

3. Tenders were received from: (a) Atlantic Salvage & Dredging Ltd., Smit Tak International Salvage Ltd., $1,770,000; (b) Marine Industries Ltd., M.I.L. Tug and Salvage Ltd., The Foundation Co. of Canada Ltd., $2,350,000; (c) Murphy Pacific Marine Salvage Co., International Underwater Constructors Incorporated, $4,400,000 (U.S.).

4. Tenders received were much higher than estimated with no guarantee that there would be no risk of pollution as a result of the methods of salvage submitted. The Treasury Board declined to accept these tenders and requested that the Ministry reassess the raising of the Irving Whale and attempt to gain further data and technical advice.

5. Visual inspection of the water surface in the vicinity of the sinking by aircraft and surface vessels for evidence of oil slicks.

6. There was a considerable delay from the time of the sinking until tender calls were made and tenders assessed due to various legal and technical problems. The preparation of specifications was very lengthy as the Ministry had not been faced with a project of this nature in the past. After the receipt of tenders and a review of the methods, it was finally decided to seek further information from various world sources who may have been faced with this problem, with the view of determining whether it might, in fact, be safer to leave the wreck undisturbed rather than attempt to raise it and thus create a potential pollution hazard.

7. The Ministry initiated further research into technological data on a worldwide basis which, it was hoped, could be incorporated into a project of this nature. To date, the information received is inconclusive but the technical data favours the leaving of the Irving Whale where it is in an undisturbed state.

PROFESSOR ISTVAN MESZAROS

Question No. 424—Mr. Stackhouse:

1. Is Professor Istvan Meszaros being allowed to enter Canada and, if so, for what reason?

2. Was Professor Meszaros previously barred from entry into Canada and, if so, what was the reason for the change in the decision?

3. Is the Department of Manpower and Immigration considering a quota system on admission of foreign scholars or other means of protecting the priority of Canadian scholars to academic posts in this country?

Hon. Robert K. Andras (Minister of Manpower and Immigration): 1. Yes. When Professor Istvan Meszaros was examined in England in the first week of January 1973, he was found to comply with Canadian immigration requirements and consequently his application for admission was approved. He is now in Canada as a landed immigrant.

2. Professor Meszaros gained entry to Canada by misrepresenting himself to be a visitor when in fact he intended to reside here permanently. He was ordered deported and appealed to the Immigration Appeal Board. By virtue of this appeal, he had effectively removed himself from the Minister's jurisdiction. It was not until after he had withdrawn his appeal and returned to the United Kingdom that a departmental review could take place. Since the illegal entry prohibition no longer applied, the results of the review were favourable and his immigrant application was approved.

3. No. The Department of Manpower and Immigration will not interfere with the hiring preferences of academic institutions since this is a field which comes under provincial jurisdiction.

EMPLOYMENT OF JEAN-PAUL MATTE

Question No. 436—Mr. Matte:

Is Mr. Jean-Paul Matte still a Special Assistant to the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development and, if so (a) what were his duties between August and December, 1972 (b) what was his salary during that period (c) what expenses did he claim?

Hon. Jean Chrétien (Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): Yes. (a) Special Assistant to the Minister responsible as any assistants to other ministers for projects and tasks assigned to him directly by the Minister; (b) $15,000-$17,500; (c) nil.

UNEMPLOYMENT INSURANCE COMMISSION—SHERBROOKE REGIONAL OFFICE

Question No. 497—Mr. Beaudoin:

1. How many employees are there at the Sherbrooke Regional Office of the Unemployment Insurance Commission?

2. What is the area, in square feet, available to the employees?

3. Is the government considering the possibility of increasing the number of personnel in this office and, if so, on what date?

4. Is the government considering the construction or enlargement of the present quarters of this office and, if so, on what date?

Hon. Robert K. Andras (Minister of Manpower and Immigration): 1. There are presently 254 employees on strength in the Sherbrooke District Office.

2. The total usable area in the Sherbrooke District Office is 19,816 square feet.

3. No increase in staff is expected at this time.

4. The UIC requirements in the Sherbrooke area are under review. Consideration is being given to improving the office facilities in Sherbrooke.

VANCOUVER INTERNATIONAL AIRPORT—CONCESSIONS

Question No. 567—Mr. Reynolds:

Has Host Rent-a-Car applied for space in the Vancouver International Airport and, if so (a) is it the intention of the government to approve the application (b) will the government give the coffee shop, the cigarette stand, the barber shop, the gift shop, expansion facilities on the same competitive basis?

Hon. Jean Marchand (Minister of Transport): 1. Host Rent-a-Car has not applied for space at Vancouver International Airport. (a) Not applicable; (b) Not applicable.

Order Paper Questions

CANADA ASSISTANCE PLAN

Question No. 572—Mr. Holmes:

1. As of December 31, 1972, what was the total number of personnel in the Welfare Assistance and Services Division of the Department of National Health and Welfare responsible for the administration of the Canada Assistance Plan either on a full-time or a part-time basis (a) the number of staff full or part-time administering the plan at central headquarters (b) the number of consultative staff full or part-time administering the plan at central headquarters (c) the number of field staff in each province (d) the number of full or part-time personnel providing consultative services in relation to (i) Indian welfare (ii) institutional care (iii) accounting and auditing (iv) welfare services (v) community care services (vi) work activity (vii) rehabilitation (viii) family and child welfare (ix) public assistance policy and administration (x) community development (xi) staff training and development?

2. What was the number of personnel responsible to the provincial and municipal authorities working on a full or part-time basis responsible for administering the Canada Assistance Plan?

3. What was the total federal administrative cost for the Canada Assistance Plan for the years ending March 31, 1971 and March 31, 1972?

4. What was the total provincial and municipal cost for administering the Canada Assistance Plan for the years ending March 31, 1971 and March 31, 1972?

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of National Health and Welfare): 1. (a) Full-time, 36; Part-time, 4; (b) Full-time, 9; Part-time, 2; (c) British Columbia and Yukon, 2; Alberta, 2; Saskatchewan, 2; Manitoba, 2; Ontario, 5; Quebec, 6; Nova Scotia, 2; New Brunswick and Prince Edward Island, 2; Newfoundland, 1; Total field staff, 24; (d) Included in (b) above; (i), 1; (ii) 2; (iii), 2; (iv), 1; (v), 1; (vi), 1; (vii), 1; (viii), 1; (ix), 2; (x), 0; (xi), 0.

2. None. All personnel responsible for administering the Canada Assistance Plan are federal employees.

3. Year ending March 31, 1971 $634,556, Year ending March 31, 1972, $785,819.

4. The provinces and municipalities administer their own income support and welfare services programs, certain costs of which are shared on a 50 per cent basis by Canada under the federal-provincial agreements authorized under the Canada Assistance Plan. Therefore, they do not have any costs for administering the Canada Assistance Plan. However, in 1970-71, the costs of administering provincial and municipal programs as used in compiling claims on Canada were $88,953,000 and in 1971-72, $100,556,000. A significant portion of these administrative costs were in fact related to professional social services such as counselling, homemakers and similar services provided by employees of provincial and municipal governments to recipients of provincial income support programs (including children who are wards, residents of welfare institutions; and needy persons living in their own homes).

INCLUSION OF GRATUITIES AS WAGES IN CALCULATING UNEMPLOYMENT BENEFITS

Question No. 697—Mr. Reynolds:

Can waiters and waitresses include gratuities as wages in calculating unemployment benefits in the same manner as for income tax purposes and, if not, for what reason?

Hon. Robert Stanbury (Minister of National Revenue): In so far as the Department of National Revenue, Taxation, is concerned: Gratuities received by waiters and waitresses directly from the customer are not included in insurable earnings for purposes of calculating unemployment insurance benefits. The legislation provides that premiums are to be deducted only if the remuneration is paid by the employer. Further to this, the employer does not know the amount of gratuities received by each employee. Where an employer includes a service charge in the billing to the customer and in turn passes this service charge on to the employees, he is required to deduct employees' premiums and pay employer's premiums with regard to gratuities that are paid in this manner. These gratuities would then constitute insurable earnings.

COMMERCIAL SHIPPING IN THE ARCTIC

Question No. 749—Mr. Forrestall:

What action has the government taken with respect to the recommendation of the Standing Committee on Indian Affairs and Northern Development that the government consider defraying part of the costs of imposing user charges on commercial shipping in the Arctic?

Hon. Jean Chrétien (Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): Given that there are no Polar icebreakers presently in operation it has not been necessary to make an immediate decision on the imposition of user charges on commercial shipping in the Arctic. However, before such a vessel enters into service the implementation of the recommendations of the Standing Committee on Indian Affairs and Northern Development will be given further consideration.

CBC POLITICAL BROADCASTS, NEW BRUNSWICK

Question No. 783—Mr. Fairweather:

1. Does CBC host a free-time television program in New Brunswick in which spokesmen for provincial political parties participate?

2. Were plans prepared to broadcast the program during the 1972-73 season?

3. At what hour was it planned to broadcast the program?

4. What facilities are available in Fredericton, the provincial capital of New Brunswick, for producing such programs?

5. Have protests been received from the Progressive Conservative and Liberal parties of New Brunswick about the 12.25 a.m. Sunday broadcast time and the lack of facilities for producing the program?

6. What are the Corporation's plans for a better broadcast time and provision of adequate broadcast facilities in Fredericton?

7. In what other provinces in Canada are free-time provincial political programs broadcast at 12.25 a.m. on Sundays?

Hon. James Hugh Faulkner (Secretary of State): I am informed by the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation as follows: 1. No such program has yet been broadcast in New Brunswick during the current season.

2. Yes. Free-time TV program periods were offered to official New Brunswick party associations.

3. At 12:15-12:20 a.m., following the hockey game, "Countrytime" and "National News". However, the Saint John affiliate CHSJ-TV might have been prepared to schedule the broadcasts early afternoon on Sundays. This possibility was not fully examined by the party associations following a meeting held November 14, 1972 at station CBZ in Fredericton.

4. A one-camera studio set up at station CBZ provides the possibility of microwaving the basic program material to Moncton for recording and final assembly.

5. No protests were received beyond the reservations expressed by the PC and Liberal association representatives at the November 14 meeting. At that time, strong unfavorable views had been put forth regarding the proposed late night broadcast time and the lack of flexibility of the production facilities.

6. The broadcast time is governed by programming constraints affecting the three maritime provinces. In addition, the CBC having no English network TV station of its own in New Brunswick, any discussion regarding a more suitable broadcast time should take into consideration the problems and requirements of the private stations called upon to distribute the programs. At the present time, the Corporation does not plan to provide broadcast facilities in the capital city. Production facilities, although minimal, are considered adequate for this type of program.

7. The normal release time for all provinces is 11:15 p.m. to 11:20 p.m. on Saturday nights following the National TV News. However, due to the hockey being telecast live to the Maritimes from 9:00 p.m. to 11:30 p.m., followed by "Countrytime" from 11:30 p.m. to 12 midnight, then by the National TV News from 12 midnight to 12:15 a.m., "Provincial Affairs" in Nova Scotia, New Brunswick and Prince Edward Island is scheduled from 12:15 to 12:20 a.m., and in Newfoundland from 12:45 a.m. to 12:50 a.m.

NORTHERN TRANSPORTATION COMPANY—TENDERS FOR MARINE ENGINES

Question No. 794—Mr. Hales:

1. Did the Northern Transportation Co. call for tenders for marine engines to be used on four large tugboats to be used on the Mackenzie River?

2. How many and what type of marine gear engines were involved?

3. What were the names and addresses of all the companies that submitted tenders?

4. On what date (a) were tenders called (b) were they let?

5. Was the contract let to the lowest bidder and, if so (a) for what amount (b) to whom?

6. Was the contract let to a Canadian company and, if not, for what reason?

7. Will the installation of the motors and other assemblies be performed by Canadian labour?

Hon. Jean Marchand (Minister of Transport): 1. Yes.

2. Sixteen engines and 16 gears involved. Diesel engines considered were Caterpillar D-399, and General Motors 16V-149Tl. Marine gears considered were Caterpillar model 7261, Lufhin RS1616F, and Western Gear model 180PCHR-AA.

3. Tenders were submitted by: Hoffars Ltd., Burnaby, B.C.; R. Angus Alberta Ltd., Edmonton, Alta.; Finning Tractor & Equipment Ltd., Vancouver, B.C.; Stewart & Stevenson Services, Inc., Houston, Texas.

4. (a) November 9, 1972; (b) January 3, 1973.

5. Contract was let to lowest bidder, R. Angus Alberta Limited; the amount is proprietary information.

6. Yes.

7. Yes.

*EXPORT DEVELOPMENT CORPORATION FINANCING TO MEXICAN COMPANIES

Question No. 839—Mr. Stevens:

1. Has the Export Development Corporation offers outstanding which have been approved by its Board of Directors to provide Section 29 financing to Comision Federal de Electricidad and to Nacional Financinciera S.A., both of Mexico, for $54 million and $34.5 million respectively and (a) if not, were such offers made and what was their final disposition (b) if so, what are the dates of expiration?

2. If one or more agreements have been signed for such financing or part thereof, what are the names of the main exporters in Canada who will benefit directly or indirectly from such financing and what are the terms of repayment for the loan or loans, including the interest rates thereon?

Mr. Herb Breau (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): Mr. Speaker, the answer to starred questions Nos. 839 and 848 is the same, so I wonder if I could have your permission to read it once?

Mr. Speaker: Is this agreed.

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Breau: The answer is the following. The Export Development Corporation states that: 1. Approval of section 29 financing by its board of directors and EDC's offers to provide the financing are based on trade information received in confidence from Canadian business firms negotiating for export orders; as publication of any particulars would be a breach of the confidence, EDC is careful to treat all aspects of matters of trade security. (a) for the reasons mentioned above, EDC does not publish the fact that an offer is made, or the final disposition of any offer; it does publish the fact that a financing agreement is made, when that results; (b) similarly, EDC does not publish the expiry dates thereof.

2. Not applicable.

*EXPORT DEVELOPMENT CORPORATION FINANCING TO BRAZILIAN COMPANIES

Question No. 848—Mr. Stevens:

1. Has the Export Development Corporation offers outstanding which have been approved by its Board of Directors to provide Section 29 financing to (a) Companhia Siderurgica Nacional, Companhia Siderurgica Paulista and Usinas Siderurgica de Minas Gerais for $35,000,000 (b) Companhia Estadual de Energia Electrica for $13,000,000 (c) Centrais Electricas de Minas Gerais for $27,300,000, all companies being of Brazil, and (i) if not, were such offers made and what was their final disposition (ii) if so, what are the dates of expiration?

2. If one or more agreements have been signed for such financing or part thereof, what are the names of the main exporters in Canada who will benefit directly or indirectly from such financing and what are the terms of repayment for the loan or loans, including the interest rates thereon?

DEPARTMENT OF INDIAN AFFAIRS AND NORTHERN DEVELOPMENT—EMPLOYMENT OF TEACHERS

Question No. 866—Mr. Orlikow:

1. How many teachers are employed by the Department of Indian Affairs and Northern Development?

2. What are the minimum qualifications (academic) required for teachers hired by the Department?

3. (a) How many teachers working for the Department have more than the minimum academic qualifications required (b) how many have a Bachelor of Arts, Bachelor of Science, or Bachelor of Education degree?

4. Is the Department giving consideration to the payment of a bonus or an allowance similar to the $1,000 bonus now being paid by the Ontario Department of Education to teachers in isolated northern schools?

Hon. Jean Chrétien (Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): 1. In 1972-73, 1,579 teachers, principals and counsellors were employed by the Department of Indian Affairs and Northern Development.

2. See answer to Parliamentary Question number 1,105, tabled in the House of Commons on March 4, 1970.

3. In 1972-73: (a) 1,537; (b) 523.

4. See answer to Parliamentary Question number 1,105, tabled in the House of Commons on March 4, 1970.

DEPARTMENT OF INDIAN AFFAIRS AND NORTHERN DEVELOPMENT—EMPLOYMENT OF PLACEMENT OFFICERS

Question No. 867—Mr. Orlikow:

How many Employment Placement Officers does the Indian Affairs Branch of the Department of Indian Affairs and Northern Development employ in each province and how many of these are of Indian descent?

Hon. Jean Chrétien (Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development):

Province	Placement Officers	Placement Officers of Indian Descent
Maritimes	4	3
Quebec	8	–
Ontario	7	–
Manitoba	1	–
Saskatchewan	8	5
Alberta	10	1

INDIAN STUDENTS

Question No. 883—Mr. Orlikow:

1. How many Indian children attend elementary schools and how many attend secondary schools and of these how many are attending schools which are (a) purely Indian (b) integrated?

2. How does the percentage of Indian students attending (a) elementary schools (b) secondary schools compare with the percentage of the whole population attending elementary schools and secondary schools?

3. How many Indian students are attending universities or other advanced educational institutions?

Hon. Jean Chrétien (Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): 1. The following enrolment figures are for 1971-72, the most recent year available.

Grades	Federal Schools	Non-Federal Schools	Totals
Elementary	26,445	32,844	59,289
Secondary	439	9,174	9,613
Special	143	1,338	1,481
	27,027	43,356	70,383

2. The percentage of Indian students enrolled in elementary or secondary schools in 1971-72 was:

	Percent of Indian Population	Percent for Whole of Canada

USE OF FIELD STONE, JASPER NATIONAL PARK

Question No. 886—Mr. Clark (Rocky Mountain):

1. Is there a limitation on the use of field stone for construction or decoration in Jasper National Park and, if so, for what reason?

2. Is there a limitation pending or in effect on the taking of gravel from locations within Jasper National Park for purposes of construction within the National Park and, if so, for what reason?

3. Is there a general policy on the use or removal of rocks within the National Parks and, if so (a) what is that policy (b) on what date was each part of it brought into effect?

Mr. Len Marchand (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): 1. No, as long as the stone comes from outside the park.

2. Yes, there is a limitation pending. It is the National Parks philosophy that in site geological material should be preserved to the same degree as flora and fauna. Furthermore, previous uncontrolled establishment of sand and gravel pits have left unsightly scars that have no place in a National Park.

3. Yes. National Parks General Regulations No. 13. (a) "No person shall remove or displace any rock, mineral, fossil or other object of natural curiosity or interest in a Park without permission in writing from the Director". (b) latest amendment, 1965.

INFORMATION FILES ON MEMBERS OF PARLIAMENT

Question No. 892—Mr. Cossitt:

Has any person attached to, on loan to or employed by the Department of the Solicitor General compiled information files of any kind whatsoever on any persons serving as Members of Parliament since April 20, 1968 and, if so (a) what are the names of such Members of Parliament (b) for what reason were the files compiled?

Hon. Warren Allmand (Solicitor General): See the answer that has been given in reply to Question No. 268 on February 12, 1973.

DUPLICATION OF R.C.M.P. WORK BY PERSONNEL OF DEPARTMENT OF SOLICITOR GENERAL

Question No. 893—Mr. Cossitt:

Are there any persons employed by, attached to or on loan to the Department of the Solicitor General whose duties in any way whatsoever duplicate work performed in any field by the Royal Canadian Mounted Police and, if so (a) who are these persons (b) what is the exact nature of their duties?

Hon. Warren Allmand (Solicitor General): No.

*EXPORT DEVELOPMENT CORPORATION FINANCING TO THE REPUBLIC OF TURKEY

Question No. 896—Mr. Stevens:

1. Has the Export Development Corporation an offer outstanding which has been approved by its Board of Directors to provide Section 29 financing to the Government of the Republic of Turkey for $26,150,000 and (a) if not, was such an offer made and what was its final disposition (b) if so, what is the date of expiration of the offer?

2. Is Northern Electric Company Ltd. the chief Canadian exporter to benefit from such financing and, if so, what guarantee is there that all or part of the work will not be done in their plant in Turkey?

Mr. Herb Breau (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): Mr. Speaker, the Export Development Corporation states that: 1. It signed a loan agreement on February 13, 1973, with the Republic of Turkey to provide $13 million to finance the first half of a contract for telecommunications equipment and services required to implement the second five-year stage of Turkey's telephone expansion program; the loan agreement covers the requirements for 1972 to 1975 and, in addition, contains a commitment to provide similar financing of $13.15 million to support the remainder of the contract to be supplied over the period 1975-1977; (a) Non-applicable; (b) Non-applicable; and

2. Northern Electric Company Ltd. is the chief Canadian exporter to benefit from such financing, and the benefit will extend to a substantial number of Canadian companies who supply it. As to assurance that Turkish-made goods are not financed, EDC funds are disbursed only upon presentation of evidence as to the value and nature of the goods or services and as to the fact of export from Canada.

Order Paper Questions

EXPORT DEVELOPMENT CORPORATION—REFINANCING OF LOAN AGREEMENT WITH PAKISTAN

Question No. 902—Mr. Stevens:

What was the nature of the re-financing loan agreement No. 72-24R signed November 1, 1972 between the Export Development Corporation and the President of Pakistan for some $6,500,000 and what was its term, true interest rate and method of repayment?

Hon. Alastair Gillespie (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): Export Development Corporation states that: 1. The refinancing agreement signed on November 1, 1972 between the President of Pakistan and the Export Development Corporation for some $6.5 million was undertaken to provide Canada's share of debt relief established under a multilateral agreement among Pakistan's major creditors; the refinancing undertaken by EDC consolidates maturities falling due in the period from May 1971 to June 1973 under five separate financing agreements signed previously between EDC and Pakistan;

2. With regard to the term, the last repayment of the amount refinanced will be due July 1, 1977;

3. Interest, including accrued interest, is to be paid semi-annually from January 1, 1973; interest rates on Export Development Corporation long-term financing are not published since the disclosure of a rate established in respect of one transaction may seriously jeopardize current negotiations for export business; and

4. Repayment of the amount consolidated is in six semi-annual instalments beginning January 1, 1975.

VALUE OF CONTRACTS SIGNED UNDER SECTION 29 OF EXPORT DEVELOPMENT ACT

Question No. 903—Mr. Hellyer:

Hon. Alastair Gillespie (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): Export Development Corporation states that: The total dollar amount of signed contracts, under section 29 of the Export Development Act, as of December 31, 1972, was $841 million.

DEPARTMENT OF SOLICITOR GENERAL—COST OF REPORT FOR FISCAL YEAR ENDED MARCH 31, 1972

Question No. 941—Mr. Andre:

1. What was the cost of production, printing and distribution of the Report for the fiscal year ended March 31, 1972, for the Department of the Solicitor General?

2. How many copies of the Report were distributed?

Hon. Warren Allmand (Solicitor General): 1. The total cost of production, printing and distribution of the Report for the fiscal year ended March 31, 1972, for the Department of the Solicitor General was $15,567.27. The total cost consists of the following expenses: Production and printing $10,689.35; Addressing and handling $379.72; Postage and shipping to date $4,498.20.

2. 8,330 copies of the Report have been distributed to date.

MOTION TO ADJOURN UNDER S.O. 26

TRADE

STATE OF NEGOTIATIONS WITH UNITED STATES ON AUTO PACT

Mr. Terry O'Connor (Halton): Mr. Speaker, I ask leave to move a motion for the adjournment of the House pursuant to Standing Order 26 for the purpose of discussing a specific and important matter requiring urgent consideration, namely, the state of negotiations between Canada and the United States with respect to the Canada-U.S. auto pact, in view of recent statements by the vice-president of General Motors Corporation and officials of the United States Treasury Department concerning a $100 million trade deficit for Canada and particularly the proposed continuing insistence by the United States on the removal of the present Canadian safeguards.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Halton has forwarded the notice required under Standing Order 26 and I have had an opportunity to consider the several aspects of the proposed motion.

The precedents, as well as the Standing Order itself, provide that in ruling whether the business of the House ought to be set aside for an emergency debate the Chair should take into account a number of factors, including the opportunity for debate within a reasonable time. In the present circumstances it would be difficult for the Chair to ignore the fact that the House is now engaged in the budget debate. A long established practice indicates that the budget debate, as well as the throne speech debate, are both deemed to provide the type of opportunity for debate envisaged and contemplated by Standing Order 26. There are many rulings to this effect.

While I recognize the interest and concern of all hon. members in this urgent question, I have concluded that there are in fact, or will be, a number of opportunities for debate within a reasonable time, one of these being the budget debate which is to be called under government orders later this day. It is with regret that I have to reach this conclusion and make this ruling in the hope that the hon. member for Halton, who has proposed this debate under the terms of Standing Order 26, will have the opportunity during the budget debate or other opportunities within the next few days to bring this matter to the attention of the House, to make his representations and to institute a debate.

Motion No. 19—Mr. Rodriguez:

That an Order of the House do issue for a copy of the latest evaluation report of the Automotive Adjustment Assistance Program (AAA).

Mr. Herb Breau (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): Mr. Speaker, there is no evaluation report of the automotive adjustment assistance program. I would therefore ask the hon. member to withdraw his motion.

Mr. Rodriguez: More of the same, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Speaker: Dropped.

Order discharged and motion withdrawn.

EVALUATION REPORT OF DEVELOPMENT MANAGEMENT COURSES PROGRAM

Motion No. 20—Mr. Rodriguez:

That an Order of the House do issue for a copy of the latest evaluation report of the Development of Management Courses Program (DMC).

Mr. Herb Breau (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): Mr. Speaker, there is no evaluation report of the development of management courses program. I would therefore ask the hon. member to withdraw his question.

Mr. Rodriguez: Agreed.

Mr. Speaker: The motion is dropped.

Order discharged and motion withdrawn.

Mr. Breau: Mr. Speaker, there are a number of these motions with the same answer—

An hon. Member: Call them all at once.

Mr. Speaker: I am not sure what is the wish of the House, whether they should be called individually—

Mr. Baldwin: Mr. Speaker, I think this farce ought to be terminated, the relationship between these two parties being such that they should all be withdrawn.

Mr. Hees: They should have been discussed in caucus this morning.

An hon. Member: One should not condone incest.

Mr. Speaker: I understand that Nos. 21, 22, 25, 26—the hon. member for York South.

Mr. Lewis: Mr. Speaker, despite the expected smart-alecky remark of the hon. member for Peace River—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

An hon. Member: You don't know what smart-alecky is.

Mr. Lewis: —I cannot agree to lumping them together. I think Hansard should show in each case that there are no evaluation reports for these important programs.

Mr. Nowlan: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker, I listened to the hon. member for York South (Mr. Lewis) talking about smart-alecky remarks. I made a few remarks which were not smart-alecky.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Some hon. Members: Explain.

Mr. Nowlan: I intend to explain, Mr. Speaker. There is a difference between a smart-alecky remark and a smart remark.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Nowlan: The fact is that the alecks and the echoes to my left do not know the difference between being smart and smart-alecky.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Nowlan: The hon. member for York South may refer in any way he wants to the member for Peace River but the remarks I made were smart and were not meant to be smart-alecky. They were just describing an incestuous situation which is a farce in this House.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Howard: Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The Chair, of course, will recognize the hon. member for Skeena, but I am wondering whether we are serving a useful purpose by continuing the discussion on the point of order. The Chair is quite prepared to call the motions individually.

Mr. Howard: Mr. Speaker, I just wanted to ask, is it not a bit early in the day for the hon. member of the Conservative Party who just sat down to be in the condition he is in?

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Some hon. Members: Shame!

Mr. Nielsen: Mr. Speaker, on a point of order, that remark by the hon. member for Skeena carries personal imputations of a highly questionable nature, to put it most kindly, and I think that he, as a gentleman in the House, should withdraw it.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Nielsen: If it were possible so to do, Sir, I would ask that Hansard not record it, but that would be impossible. The least the hon. member can do, as a gentleman, is to withdraw the remark.

Some hon. Members: Withdraw!

Mr. Nowlan: Mr. Speaker, I will not persevere by asking the gentleman what he proposes to do. The remark was directed toward me and I must say I feel rather badly that it was. But I can tell hon. gentleman that, regardless of the hour of the day in my day I am still looking ahead and not behind me, as the hon. member is.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Some hon. Members: Withdraw!

Mr. Speaker: I think hon. members will agree--

Mr. Nowlan: Mr. Speaker, I do not ask the member to withdraw his remark—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

Mr. Nowlan: —directed at me because, as far as I am concerned, when he says anything negative about me—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I appreciate the point made by the hon. member for Annapolis Valley. At the same time, it is the responsibility of the Chair to express an opinion on whether in the view of the Chair such remarks tend to be unparliamentary and sometimes go beyond the thought of hon. members. I am sure the hon. member for Skeena would agree with me that his remarks were of a personal nature and, in that respect, ought not to have been made. I am sure he would agree with me and would be prepared to govern himself accordingly.

Mr. Howard: Mr. Speaker, I never disagree with you but I must say that the implication attributed to what I said about a condition obviously is the result of someone having an extremely thin skin. I did not mean it that way at all.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I think it might be said in charity about the hon. member's remarks that they were at least the subject of misinterpretation, and in this sense and to this extent I think the hon. member would want to clarify what he wanted to say and correct the record.

[Mr. Speaker.]

• (1430)

Mr. Howard: If I were to clarify it, Mr. Speaker, it would be out of order.

Some hon. Members: Shame!

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I have to ask the hon. member for Skeena for his co-operation. I appreciate that these remarks are made in the course of debate and discussion when it is easy for any hon. member in the House to go beyond his thoughts and use words which in his view might be in order but are not consistent with the traditions of the House. The hon. member has to appreciate that he should respect these traditions. One of the traditions or well established practices for the protection of all hon. members is that there should not be personal allusions of any kind. I hope the hon. member will agree, in view of the fact his remarks can be interpreted unkindly, to withdraw them.

Mr. Howard: I tried to indicate that earlier. To the extent that the hon. member for Annapolis Valley finds them offensive, I apologize to him.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Speaker: I would think the hon. member is apologizing to the Chair because the hon. member for Annapolis Valley has not asked for an apology. Indeed, the Chair did not ask for an apology. I simply asked that the hon. member clarify the statement and withdraw it. He has perhaps gone a little farther. He suggests that to the extent that the Chair finds it offensive he withdraws it. I find it offensive and, on behalf of the House, I accept the hon. member's apology.

EVALUATION REPORT OF COUNSELLING ASSISTANCE TO SMALL ENTERPRISES PROGRAM

Motion No. 21—Mr. Rodriguez:

That an Order of the House do issue for a copy of the latest evaluation report of the Counselling Assistance to Small Enterprises Program (CASE).

Mr. Herb Breau (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): Mr. Speaker, there is no evaluation report of the counselling assistance to small enterprises program. I therefore ask the hon. member to withdraw his motion.

Mr. Rodriguez: Agreed.

Mr. Speaker: Motion dropped.

Order discharged and motion withdrawn.

EVALUATION REPORT OF PROGRAM FOR EXPORT MARKET DEVELOPMENT

Motion No. 22—Mr. Rodriguez:

That an Order of the House do issue for a copy of the latest evaluation report of the Program for Export Market Development.

Mr. Herb Breau (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): Mr. Speaker, there is no evaluation report of the program for export market development. I therefore ask the hon. member to withdraw his motion.

Mr. Rodriguez: Agreed.

Mr. Speaker: Motion dropped.

Order discharged and motion withdrawn.

EVALUATION REPORT OF MOTOR VEHICLE MANUFACTURERS' REMISSION PROGRAM

Motion No. 25—Mr. Rodriguez:

That an Order of the House do issue for a copy of the latest evaluation report of the Motor Vehicle Manufacturers' Remission Program (MVM).

Mr. Herb Breau (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): Mr. Speaker, there is no evaluation report of the motor vehicle manufacturers' remission program. I therefore ask the hon. member to withdraw his motion.

Mr. Rodriguez: Agreed.

Mr. Speaker: Motion dropped.

Order discharged and motion withdrawn.

EVALUATION REPORT OF THE ACCELERATED CAPITAL COST ALLOWANCE PROGRAM

Motion No. 26—Mr. Rodriguez:

That an Order of the House do issue for a copy of the latest evaluation report of the Accelerated Capital Cost Allowance Program (ACCH).

Mr. Herb Breau (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): There is no evaluation report of the accelerated capital cost allowance program. I therefore ask the hon. member to withdraw his motion.

Mr. Rodriguez: Agreed.

Mr. Speaker: Motion dropped.

Order discharged and motion withdrawn.

EVALUATION REPORT OF NORTHERN MINERAL EXPLORATION ASSISTANCE PROGRAM

Motion No. 31—Mr. Firth:

That an Order of the House do issue for a copy of the latest evaluation report of the Northern Mineral Exploration Assistance Program (NMEAP).

Mr. Herb Breau (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): There is no evaluation report of the northern mineral exploration assistance program. I therefore ask the hon. member to withdraw his motion.

Mr. Firth: Agreed.

Mr. Speaker: Motion dropped.

Order discharged and motion withdrawn.

EVALUATION REPORT—PROSPECTORS ASSISTANCE PROGRAMS

Motion No. 32—Mr. Firth:

That an Order of the House do issue for a copy of the latest evaluation report of the Prospectors Assistance Program (PAP).

Mr. Herb Breau (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): There is no evaluation report of the prospectors assistance program. I therefore ask the hon. member to withdraw his motion. I would like to say, Mr. Speaker, this is the last of the evaluation reports, and the evaluation goes on.

Mr. Firth: Agreed.

Mr. Speaker: Motion dropped.

Order discharged and motion withdrawn.

[Translation]

Mr. Herb Breau (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): Mr. Speaker, the reply to notices of motions Nos. 87 to 114 inclusive is the same. Must I read them out or may I dispense?

[English]

Mr. Speaker: In the case of motions Nos. 87 to 114, is it the wish of the hon. member that they be called together or individually.

Mr. Grier: Mr. Speaker, I am agreeable to having them all dealt with in one reply.

Mr. Speaker: Perhaps we might hear the parliamentary secretary's reply to motions Nos. 87 to 114.

[Translation]

Mr. Breau: Mr. Speaker, the answer is as follows: Notices of motions for papers Nos. 87 to 114 are internal documents of a confidential nature and therefore cannot be tabled. For these reasons, I invite the hon. member to withdraw his motions.

[English]

Mr. Grier: Mr. Speaker, I would request that these motions be transferred for debate.

TRAINING AND EMPLOYMENT AGREEMENTS PREPARED FOR PROPOSED MACKENZIE VALLEY PIPELINE

Motion No. 130—Mr. Harding:

That an Order of the House do issue for a copy of training and employment agreements prepared for the proposed Mackenzie Valley pipeline as referred to at page 61 of the Annual Report of the Department of Indian Affairs and Northern Development.

Mr. Len Marchand (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): Sometimes white man's system crazy, Mr. Speaker.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Marchand (Kamloops-Cariboo): While the department is in the process of preparing such an agreement, no final document exists and it is expected that considerable time will elapse before final consultations are completed with the pipeline industry. Under these circumstances, would the hon. member agree to withdraw the motion?

Mr. Speaker: Is this withdrawn? I am not sure whether the hon. member for Kootenay West wants the motion dropped or transferred for debate.

Mr. Harding: Transfer for debate, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Speaker: Transferred for debate.

[Mr. Grier.]

COPY OF ORDERS ISSUED BY GOVERNOR IN COUNCIL

Motion No. 156—Mr. Douglas:

That an Order of the House do issue for a complete copy of all orders by the Governor in Council issued since September 29, 1970 under Section 11A (2) of the National Energy Board Part VI Regulations, in respect of the reports by NEB.

Mr. Herb Breau (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): Mr. Speaker, the National Energy Board reports that no orders have been issued by the Governor in Council since September 29, 1970, under Section 11A (2) of the National Energy Board Part VI Regulations, in respect of reports by the board. I therefore ask the hon. member to withdraw his motion.

Mr. Douglas: Agreed.

Mr. Speaker: Motion dropped.

Order discharged and motion withdrawn.

COPY OF REPORTS SUBMITTED TO CABINET BY NATIONAL ENERGY BOARD SINCE SEPTEMBER 29, 1970

Motion No. 157—Mr. Douglas:

That an Order of the House do issue for a complete copy of all reports submitted since September 29, 1970 to Cabinet by the National Energy Board under Section 11A (1) of NEB Part VI Regulations, in respect of the prices charged for exported Canadian gas.

Mr. Herb Breau (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): Mr. Speaker, the National Energy Board has carried out a number of studies and is keeping under constant surveillance the matter of prices charged for exported Canadian gas, but as of this date there has been no report submitted to the Governor in Council under Section 11A (1) of the National Energy Board Part VI Regulations. I therefore ask the hon. member to withdraw his motion.

Mr. Douglas: Agreed.

Mr. Speaker: Motion dropped.

Order discharged and motion withdrawn.

Mr. Speaker: Shall the remaining motions stand?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Nystrom: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. Would the parliamentary secretary check into notices of motions Nos, 152, 153 and 154? I understand they are available and it would only take five minutes to deal with them.

Mr. Breau: Mr. Speaker, I will bring that to the attention of the Parliamentary Secretary of the President of the Privy Council.

Mr. Speaker: Oral questions.

Mr. Broadbent: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I wonder if we could get the unanimous consent of the House to revert to motions so that the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce could make a brief statement on the current state of the trade talks that are going on between Canada and the United States.

Mr. Speaker: Oral questions.

ORAL QUESTION PERIOD

TRADE

CANADA-UNITED STATES AUTO PACT—REASONS FOR CANADIAN DEFICIT POSITION IN 1972—MAINTENANCE OF SAFEGUARDS

Mr. Terry O'Connor (Halton): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce. With reference to the indication yesterday that our automobile and automotive parts trade position with the United States amounted to a $100 million deficit in 1972, will the minister advise the House of the reasons for such a deficit occurring and, further, whether this deficit is a temporary reversal or the beginning of a future trend?

Hon. Alastair Gillespie (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): Mr. Speaker, Statistics Canada today published the figure. The figure is not $100 million; it is a $41 million deficit on the merchandise trade account. This reverses the position of last year when, according to our figures, we had a surplus on merchandise account of just under $200 million. I would expect with the auto pact that there would be shifts in trade balance figures from time to time. I do not see that there is any emergency or any reason to push any panic button at this time.

Mr. O'Connor: In view of the fact there has been a transition from a $200 million surplus to a $41 million or $100 million deficit, as the case may be, is the minister satisfied that the production to sales ratio and the Canadian value-added safeguards contained in the auto pact were strictly adhered to by all auto manufacturers operating in Canada in 1972?

Mr. Gillespie: I should like to take this opportunity to say I believe there is a lot of misunderstanding with respect to the so-called safeguards. They were transitional measures introduced at the start of the auto pact, and at present levels we are exceeding the levels of those transitional provisions by $1 billion or more.

Mr. O'Connor: With respect, the minister has failed to answer my question. Is he satisfied that all manufacturers and parts manufacturers in Canada have strictly adhered to these safeguards as set out in the auto pact?

Mr. Gillespie: As I have pointed out, by at least a billion dollars.

Mr. O'Connor: Was the production and employment percentage of the total North American Market reduced from the levels achieved in 1971? Further, what steps is the government taking to ensure that these critical levels will not be substantially altered in the future?

Mr. Gillespie: With respect to production-employment ratios, I would have to check. I will be pleased to do so and report back to the hon. member.

Mr. A. D. Hales (Wellington): Will the minister insist, in his negotiations with the United States, that Canadians have the opportunity to buy cars made in Canada at the same price as Americans pay for Canadian cars?

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Gillespie: As hon. members will recall, one of the first tasks I took on as Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce, was to narrow the gap between the wholesale price of vehicles made in Canada and those made in the United States. I received an undertaking from the automobile manufacturers in Canada that if there is any increase in prices in the United States there will be no increase in Canada. To the extent that there is an increase in the United States, the gap will then be narrowed. At the time I received this commitment the United States companies were pursuing an application for a 3 per cent increase.

Mr. Hales: We are not asking for the gap to be narrowed. We are asking for exactly the same price.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa-Whitby): My supplementary refers to the answer the minister gave a minute or so ago. This is the first time to my knowledge that any minister of the Crown has publicly acknowledged that the government regards the safeguards as being transitional. Would the minister make it clear now that the government regards the safeguards in the Canada-United States automobile agreement as being transitional only?

Mr. Gillispie: I think it has been made clear in the past that the word "safeguard" is not a word used in the agreement itself. The phrase used in the agreement is "transitional provisions". When reference is made to the so-called safeguards I think the hon. member must be referring to the transitional provisions, because I am unaware of any other so-called safeguards in the agreement.

Mr. Broadbent: In view of the fact that in the opening paragraphs of the agreement there is a statement signed by both governments that Canada is to get its fair and equitable share of the production in the North American automotive industry and that this is followed in the agreement by a commitment that the level of production in Canada is not to fall below that achieved in 1964, and in view of the fact that yesterday in the United States treasury officials reasserted their desire to get rid of these aspects of the agreement specifically, as I understand the position, can the minister tell the House whether or not the government of Canada has agreed with that approach?

Mr. Gillespie: No discussions have taken place with the United States following the committee hearings to which the hon. member has referred. But let me repeat that the auto agreement is, in our view, working very successfully. We believe it is working very successfully in the United States, and it is presently operating in Canada at a level of a billion dollars over those transitional provisions.

Mr. Broadbent: The minister is still being evasive. Will he tell the House whether it is the position of the government that the job-protecting requirements relating to production levels in Canada which are written into the agreement should be maintained? Is the government committed to maintaining them or is it prepared to allow them to be taken out of the agreement?

Mr. Gillespie: We are committed to making the auto pact work so that there will be increased employment. That is the important thing, I should like to remind the hon. member. I can see no point at this time in creating baseless fears in the minds of the public with respect to the so-called safeguards.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Gillespie: We are committed to making the pact work, to building a larger market in North America and a larger share in that market.

Mr. Allan Lawrence (Northumberland-Durham): Mr. Speaker, when the minister says there are misunderstandings, he is right. Can he give any explanation for one of the auto companies saying there was a deficit last year of $100 million while according to Statistics Canada there was a deficit of $41 million? What is his department's estimate of the deficit last year?

Mr. Gillespie: I have already stated that Statistics Canada has published figures today showing that the deficit on merchandise trade flow was $41 million in the past year.

Mr. Lawrence: And I have asked for an explanation of that difference. Can the minister answer that question for me—

Mr. Speaker: Order. Is the hon. member repeating the question he asked in the first instance? If he is, there is not much point in his continuing.

Mr. Lawrence: Then I will ask the minister whether any date for new trade talks is now under discussion with the United States?

Mr. Gillespie: No date has been set. I should like to remind the hon. member that I am not the person who puts together the statistics issued by General Motors in the United States. If he wishes to find out the reason for the difference I suggest he call General Motors in the United States.

Mr. Lawrence: Don't you think you should do it?

CANADA-UNITED STATES AUTO PACT—CANADIAN REACTION TO UNITED STATES POSITION

Mr. Trevor Morgan (St. Catharines): Does the minister reject the position taken by United States treasury officials that the automotive trade figures last year were nothing more than an aberration and that the auto pact is actually working to the detriment of United States interests? If he does reject that position, will he tell the House why the government is lagging in its negotiations in connection with this matter?

Hon. Alastair Gillespie (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): I do not think the auto pact is any aberration. I do not think its success as far as Canada is concerned is an aberration at all. Nor do I think that spokesmen in the United States regard it in that way. In fact, one report I read stated that the auto pact had been of very considerable benefit to the United States, too.

Mr. Morgan: I would ask the minister again: does he reject the position taken by the United States and, if so, why has he not begun negotiations with them at an earlier date?

Mr. Gillespie: I am not at all clear what particular position the hon. member is imputing to the United States government at this time.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I will recognize the hon. member for a supplementary and then the hon. member for Waterloo.

Mr. Morgan: United States officials have said that last year's trade figures were a mere aberration and that the auto pact is working to the detriment of the United States. That is the official position of the United States treasury. If the minister rejects that position, surely he is going to enter into early negotiations and, if not, why not?

• (1450)

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I suggest to the hon. member that he has made his point. He has asked the question twice and the minister has replied, though perhaps not to the hon. member's satisfaction. Perhaps we should allow the hon. member for Waterloo to ask his supplementary.

Mr. Max Saltsman (Waterloo): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question I should like to direct to the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce regarding his statement about baseless fears. There may have been baseless fears prior to the minister's statements today, but some real fears have developed as a result of what he has said. Since this is the first time I have heard the minister use essentially the same language in describing the auto pact—a transitional agreement—as is being used by the United States government, does this mean that the minister is looking at the auto agreement in the same terms as the United States government and therefore describing it in the same language?

Mr. Gillespie: Mr. Speaker, I think that is quite an impossible question to answer. The hon. member is implying a particular view on the part of the United States government which I am not at all sure is the view of that government.

SPORTS

MONTREAL OLYMPIC GAMES, 1976—ISSUE OF SPECIAL COINS

Mr. René Matte (Champlain): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Prime Minister.

Could he tell us whether the recent reported doubling of the price of silver will lead to a change in the government's policy on the issuing of special coins for the Montreal Olympic Games in 1976?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): I cannot, Mr. Speaker, but I will make inquiries on the matter.

AIRPORTS

QUEBEC CITY—EXTENSION OF RUNWAYS

Mrs. Albanie Morin (Louis-Hébert): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the hon. Minister of Transport.

In view of the increase in air traffic in the Quebec City area, could the minister say whether the runways are to be lengthened to 9,000 feet to make it possible for DC 9s loaded with passengers and fuel to take off and land without difficulty?

Hon. Jean Marchand (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, we are informed that the Department of Transport has set up a continuous program of airport expansion, and the Quebec City airport is on the list. I cannot say by how many feet the runways will be lengthened, but the problem is definitely being looked into, and we will try to find a solution soon.

[English]

Mr. Danson: Mr. Speaker, if the hon. member would like an airport I know where she can get one cheap.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

An hon. Member: So that's your position.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

An hon. Member: There goes Cafik again.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I believe the hon. member for Waterloo still had a supplementary to his previous question. He will be recognized for that purpose, after which the Chair will recognize the hon. member for Calgary North.

TRADE

CANADA-UNITED STATES AUTO PACT—NATURE OF SAFEGUARDS

Mr. Max Saltsman (Waterloo): Mr. Speaker, in view of the importance of the issue concerning the auto agreement I should like to give the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce a chance to clarify his position, as he seems to be so concerned about doing so. We have been led to believe that the safety features of the Canada-U.S. auto agreement, as they now are, are binding in contrast with the position taken by the United States government that they are transitional. Can the minister state in an unequivocal way whether the government still views this agreement as binding or does it see it as transitional?

Mr. Baldwin: That is an impossible dream, Max.

Hon. Alastair Gillespie (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): Mr. Speaker, I think I made it quite clear that these provisions were provided for, in the language of the agreement, as transitional.

Mr. Lewis: It doesn't say transitional.

An hon. Member: Would you have a meeting with David Lewis, please, Alastair?

Mr. Hees: Why don't you go back to square one and start all over again?

Mr. Gillespie: I am trying also to explain—

Mr. Hees: Start all over again like a good boy.

An hon. Member: You shouldn't be talking about squares.

Mr. Hees: They don't build trade ministers today like they used to.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

ENERGY

SECURITY OF OIL SUPPLIES FOR EASTERN CANADA—REQUEST FOR TABLING OF REPORTS

Mr. Eldon M. Woolliams (Calgary North): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources. In light of the fact he confirmed last night the national energy policy which was established in Canada in 1961, and in light of his admission there has been a cutback in the export of crude petroleum of 3.7 per cent with the pipeline working at capacity, having regard specifically to supply east of the Ottawa line I should like to know whether there has been any consultation by the department, the minister or the government with other countries exporting crude petroleum to Canada, as our imports almost equal our exports, with a view to ensuring that imports will continue without disruption at this time as there is no pipeline into that area?

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, the arrangements with regard to imports either into the United States or the eastern part of Canada have not been conducted on a government to government basis but on a commercial basis between companies. We have no prospect of changing that at the present time.

Mr. Woolliams: In light of the fact they are not carried out on a government to government basis, can the minister assure the House there will not be any disruption of imports and that the domestic price of gasoline and other products from crude petroleum to the consumer will not go up in the next few months?

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): Mr. Speaker, I like the suggestion that I have the ability to control the political situation in the Middle East, but I cannot give that assurance.

Mr. Woolliams: May I ask a further supplementary question?

Mr. Fairweather: I thought the only thing this government would not admit being able to control was the weather.

Mr. Woolliams: Last evening the committee moved a motion requesting the minister to produce all the reports for which he has asked in reference to production and transportation because of the inadequacy of pipelines at the present time. Is the minister now prepared to agree to table these reports at the appropriate time, including those he may have asked for from the National Energy Board, and disclose them to the House of Commons and the public in order that we may find out what studies have been going on in the last four years?

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): As the hon. member knows, Mr. Speaker, under Section 23 of the National Energy Board Act that particular material is privileged. However, I did indicate to the committee that such material as was not covered by privilege, or would not in the public interest be difficult to produce, I would be prepared to produce. Many of the reports were, of course, made orally to myself and my predecessors.

MONTREAL OIL STORAGE CAPACITY IN EVENT IMPORTS CURTAILED

Mr. Harvie Andre (Calgary Centre): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question for the minister. In the event of some sort of accident or international event which curtailed or cut off oil supplies to the Montreal market, can the minister indicate what our storage capacity is and how long refinery feed stocks would be available in Montreal?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The Chair has the impression that the question has hypothetical overtones. The minister might like to reply briefly.

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Subject to confirmation, Mr. Speaker, and without special arrangements with regard to the transport of oil in Canada, I would say about 45 days.

[Mr. Woolliams.]

ADMINISTRATION OF JUSTICE

YELLOWKNIFE INQUEST INTO PLANE CRASH—REQUEST THAT COUNSEL FOR INTERESTED PARTIES BE ALLOWED TO PARTICIPATE AND QUESTION WITNESSES

Mr. R. Gordon L. Fairweather (Fundy-Royal): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Justice. Because of the understandable public interest in the outcome of an inquest now being held in Yellowknife, will he instruct the coroner to permit counsel for the National Indian Brotherhood and for the families of those who died in the accident that is the subject of this investigation to participate in the inquest and to question witnesses?

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister of Justice): Mr. Speaker, the general conduct of the inquest is in the hands of the coroner and I do not think it would be appropriate for me to issue the kind of instructions to which the hon. member refers.

• (1500)

Mr. Fairweather: Has the minister, or someone delegated by him, discussed with the coroner, Mr. England, the need for special arrangements for this inquest?

Mr. Lang: I know that there have been many discussions with the press on the part of the coroner and the local authorities, including a representative of myself who is there in an attempt to give the maximum accommodation to the press.

Mr. Erik Nielsen (Yukon): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a supplementary to the Minister of Justice as Attorney General for the Northwest Territories. Will he not intervene at this stage, as any provincial Attorney General would, and discuss the matter with the coroner so that a full and complete inquiry may be made to the end that justice will be met? Will he also inform the House why he thought it necessary, in view of the autonomous situation in respect of affairs judicial in the Northwest Territories, to send a special agent from his department, Mr. Trainor, to act on behalf of the Crown?

Mr. Lang: Mr. Speaker, in respect of the reference by the hon. member to the presence there of a representative of myself as Attorney General for the Northwest Territories, this indicates we are indeed following the situation very closely and are offering such assistance to the inquest and to the coroner as is reasonable. The autonomy which is extended to the Northwest Territories as well as to the Yukon territory over local legal affairs does not remove the direct obligation of the Attorney General, myself, in connection with prosecutions and other legal matters.

The question of whether to use someone from outside the Northwest Territories or from the regular legal staff of the Attorney General in the Northwest Territories depends upon the workload and other considerations, having regard to the nature of the case.

Mr. Speaker: Order. The Chair will recognize the hon. member for a supplementary and then the hon. member for Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands. There are other members who have supplementaries. The hon. member for Vegreville would like to ask a supplementary and will be recognized later.

Mr. Nielsen: Mr. Speaker, in the interests of justice and of having a complete inquiry, will the minister not at least indicate to his agent there, who in turn could consult the coroner, that other counsel involved in these proceedings should be allowed to participate in the examination of witnesses appearing before the inquiry?

Mr. Lang: Mr. Speaker, I can give the hon. member the assurance that I have made it quite clear that the function of my agent in these proceedings is to make sure that there is the fairest possible hearing, and I have no reason to doubt that this is happening.

ENERGY

OIL SUPPLY—HEARINGS BEFORE NATIONAL ENERGY BOARD TO DETERMINE EXPORT QUOTAS

Mr. T. C. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources. It arises out of the fact that the National Energy Board has set export quotas on Canadian crude oil at the very high figure of 1,235,000 barrels per day which is higher than the applicants indicated they intended to export during the month of February. I ask the minister how long it will be before the National Energy Board will have completed its hearings and be in a position to set more realistic quotas for export, having due regard to the dwindling reserves of Canadian crude oil?

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, I think I am correct in saying the board at the moment has not set a definite date for the hearings. I would anticipate it could be a matter of several months before it would be in a position to have the hearings proceed, and perhaps a month or so after that before it could complete its study in this regard. I would anticipate it would be some months yet before we can determine what the appropriate level of reserves is for oil and thereafter to set an appropriate export level.

Mr. Douglas: Mr. Speaker, in view of the fact the present export quotas that the board has set for the month of March seem to be based on exporting all the oil surplus to our immediate domestic requirements, I ask the minister whether he or the officials of his department are drafting guidelines for the National Energy Board that would ensure that exports of oil will be kept sufficiently low so that the life index of our reserves will be extended to enable this country to develop other sources of supply and to enable the environmental impact of pipelines in the north can be fully studied?

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): Mr. Speaker, with regard to the short run position—that is, in the next several months and until the proper reserve level can be established—I would not anticipate that there would be a very substantial draw on Canadian reserves in relation to the amount that is available. I would agree with the hon. gentleman that the National Energy Board should determine a position as to the appropriate level which we should have in reserve. I think it would be more appropriate, really, that the board should do that after there has been an opportunity for public hearings and for participation by interested parties, not the least being the government of Alberta, and make a determination at that time. Thereafter, of course, the future development of the reserves of the great plains will depend upon the board's determination and also agreements with the government of Alberta.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member for Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands seeks to ask a supplementary, as does the hon. member for Calgary North. I bring to the attention of all hon. members that if we allow these two supplementaries we will just about reach the end of the question period. I am a little unhappy about the situation of other hon. members but I appreciate that this is an important matter. Perhaps the supplementaries and the answers could be brief.

Mr. Douglas: Mine will be brief, Mr. Speaker. In view of the fact the National Energy Board will have to make some far-reaching decisions in the course of the next few months, and in view of the fact there will be a need to harmonize these with the government's energy policy, can the minister be more precise as to when he intends to announce the government's energy policy?

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): I have to confess to the hon. gentleman that there has been slippage from late winter to mid-spring now.

INTERPROVINCIAL PIPELINE—REQUEST FOR EARLY DECISION ON APPLICATION TO ENLARGE CAPACITY

Mr. Eldon M. Woolliams (Calgary North): Mr. Speaker, in light of the fact Dr. Howland said last night before the committee that they were not coming here on the basis of an estimated shortage of oil, would the minister now undertake to have entertained immediately the application to enlarge the capacity of Interprovincial Pipeline to 125,000 barrels of crude petroleum per day, so that the project can start and the question of shortage will not depend on procrastination or failure in respect of building pipelines?

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, the hon. member is asking me to give instructions to private industry as to when it should bring forward its projects. I am interested that he would do that coming from one of his political party, but it seems to me that with the application being set down for next month it will go ahead in due course.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The Chair indicated a moment ago that we should try to give other hon. members an opportunity to ask questions. The hon. member for Richmond.

NATIONAL FILM BOARD

REDUCTION OF BUDGET OF GILLES GROULX

Mr. Léonel Beaudoin (Richmond): Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask the hon. Secretary of State a question.

Could he tell the House about the circumstances surrounding a budgetary reduction made by the National Film Board in the case of Mr. Gilles Groulx, a Quebec film producer.

Mr. Speaker: This is perhaps a matter to place on the order paper. However, the minister might take it as notice.

SOCIAL SECURITY

FAMILY ALLOWANCES—PRESERVATION OF UNIVERSALITY

Mr. Jacques Olivier (Longueuil): Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask the hon. Minister of National Health and Welfare a question.

Could he tell the House whether his department is still considering the possibility of maintaining flat-rate family allowance payments?

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of National Health and Welfare): As I said before, Mr. Speaker, my department is presently reviewing all possibilities in this respect.

DRUGS

CATALOGUE ISSUED BY DEPARTMENT—REQUEST FOR ASSURANCE OF THERAPEUTIC EQUIVALENCY

Mr. P. B. Rynard (Simcoe North): Mr. Speaker, I should like to address a question to the Minister of National Health and Welfare. In view of the assertion of the minister that all drugs listed as approved by his department and published in a catalogue being sent to all doctors, are equivalents, would the minister assure the House that all drugs in this catalogue are equivalent in quality and have therapeutic equivalency in treating the same type of sickness?

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, the QUAD program is one of the steps taken by the government to help reduce the cost to the consumer of drugs in this country. The QUAD program contains three basic elements: one, to establish quality, the chemical testing; two, the evaluation of the manufacturing capabilities; three, the measure of clinical effectiveness. No single one of these three characteristics can guarantee equivalence, but if they are taken together these three factors provide extremely strong evidence of clinical equivalence. Thus, two brands of a given drug which have acceptable chemical analysis and bio availability, and have been produced under satisfactory conditions, can be expected to be therapeutically equivalent.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I apologize to the hon. member for Simcoe North, but the hon. member for Halton is rising on a question of privilege.

Mr. O'Connor: Mr. Speaker, my question of privilege arises out of the remarks of the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce this afternoon. On several occasions he referred to the transitional measures contained in the automotive pact. I was not sure at the time, but in the interest of being accurate I have since read the agreement and the letters of undertaking filed by various car companies, and nowhere in the agreement is there a reference to the measures of safeguards being of a transitional nature.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. That cannot possibly be considered to be a question of privilege. The hon. member for Simcoe North has the floor.

Mr. Rynard: Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question for the Minister of National Health and Welfare. Is it a fact that in all cases the government cannot guarantee either the quality or the therapeutic equivalence of the drugs listed in the catalogue?

Mr. Lalonde: I think my previous answer covers this point, Mr. Speaker.

AIR TRANSPORT

IMPROVEMENT OF NAVIGATIONAL AIDS IN NORTHERN CANADA AIR CORRIDORS

Mr. Don Mazankowski (Vegreville): Mr. Speaker, my question is supplementary to the questions posed by the hon. member for Fundy-Royal and the hon. member for Yukon. I wish to direct it to the Minister of Transport. It arises out of the inquest being held in Yellowknife. In view of the evidence that was presented yesterday to the effect that non-directional beacons along the prescribed route are inadequate, weak and feeble, is the minister now considering stepping up the program of improved navigational aids in northern Canada along the main airline corridors?

Hon. Jean Marchand (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I could give more details this afternoon but I would prefer to do it tomorrow if the hon. member will accept this. We are working very hard to improve all navigational aids not only in the Arctic but everywhere in Canada.

DC-8 CRASH IN TORONTO—INQUIRY AS TO SETTLEMENT OF CLAIMS

Mr. John Lundrigan (Gander-Twillingate): Mr. Speaker, may I ask the Minister of Transport the following question. Following the unfortunate crash of a DC-8, Air Canada jet in Toronto two years ago this coming July, I think it was, can the minister indicate whether the insurance claims have been met so that the estates of the deceased can be settled?

Hon. Jean Marchand (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I will inquire into this matter. I will ask Air Canada to give me a report on it and I will transmit the information to the hon. member.

NATIONAL REVENUE

INQUIRY AS TO USE OF VETERANS LAND ACT ASSESSORS TO APPRAISE LAND IN ALBERTA

Mr. Dan Hollands (Pembina): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of National Revenue. Has the department at any time during the past 18 months engaged the services of Veterans Land Act land accessors to do a land appraisal in the province of Alberta?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. A question in those terms should be placed on the order paper. The minister will be allowed to reply briefly since the question has been asked, but I respectfully suggest to hon. members that questions of this nature should normally be placed on the order paper. The minister will be recognized for the purpose of replying briefly.

Hon. Robert Stanbury (Minister of National Revenue): Mr. Speaker, my brief reply would be that I would be glad to look into the question and answer it either on the order paper or directly to the hon. member.

REQUEST THAT REPORTS OF STUDIES BE TABLED

Mr. J. R. Holmes (Lambton-Kent): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of National Health and Welfare. Would he table in the House the various investigative studies, including those in terms of bioavailability, which support the evidence presented in the QUAD 1972 presentation?

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, I do not know how many trucks I would need to carry all that information, but I am looking into the matter at present and will try to make as much information available as is physically possible.

AIR TRANSPORT

WARDAIR STRIKE—LEASING OF AIR CANADA VANCOUVER HANGAR SPACE—SUPPLYING OF FLIGHT INSTRUCTORS

Mr. Paddy Neale (Vancouver East): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Transport. In view of the fact that Air Canada now owns one-third of the shares of Wardair, where a legal strike is now in effect, would the minister have his department investigate the leasing of Air Canada hangar space at Vancouver international airport to Wardair and the supplying of Air Canada instructors to train Wardair personnel to man the 747 aircraft that Wardair is purchasing?

Hon. Jean Marchand (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I am not aware of that strike, but I will inquire.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Marchand (Langelier): I am not aware of the details of the strike. If the hon. member wishes to ask the Minister of Labour what the strike is about, O.K.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Baldwin: Why don't you ask him a question?

TRADE

MEASURES TO COUNTERACT UNITED STATES DISC PROGRAM AND COUNTERVAILING DUTIES

Mr. Elmer M. MacKay (Central Nova): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce which will give him a break from questions on the auto pact. In view of the use by the United States of countervailing duties in the case of Michelin and the use of DISC to promote its exports, and as the European Economic Community is using a value added tax to promote its economic interests, has the government of this nation any current policies, plans or measures to promote and protect Canada's economy as it is now, or must we practise passive endurance forever?

Hon. Alastair Gillespie (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): Mr. Speaker, as the hon. member made quite clear by his question, we are entering a very tough trading situation in the world. There is no question of it. That is all the more reason, therefore, for the House to adopt the corporate tax reductions so that we can put exporters on an equal basis and enable them to compete internationally.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. MacKay: Apart from the general reply the minister gave me, has he any specific plans similar in nature to the Employment Support Act which was brought in August of 1971 to counteract the surcharges? Have we anything tangible at this time to counteract this difficult position?

Mr. Gillespie: I do not think there is anything more tangible than a tax cut which will put the exporters of end products, the manufacturers of this nation, in a better position.

SUGGESTED CONSULTATION WITH GOVERNMENTS OF ATLANTIC PROVINCES ON TARIFFS PRIOR TO DISCUSSIONS WITH UNITED STATES AND GATT

Mr. J. Robert Howie (York-Sunbury): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question. In light of the fact that tariff policies have an immense effect on the economic life of the Atlantic provinces and will affect future opportunities in this area, will the minister consult the governments of the Atlantic region regarding proposals on tariff policies before future Canada-U.S. trade talks and the GATT talks expected to be held this year?

Hon. Alastair Gillespie (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): I expect to be discussing the Canadian position in the multilateral negotiations with the ministers of industry of the various provinces some time within the next five or six weeks.

AGRICULTURE

REQUEST TO EXTEND PERIOD OF EMBARGO ON IMPORTS OF FRUITS AND VEGETABLES OR TARIFF INCREASE

Mr. J. H. Horner (Crowfoot): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Agriculture. It concerns the tariff talks already referred to. In view of the concern expressed yesterday by the Canadian Horticultural Council, is the minister prepared to assure the House and the country that he will act unilaterally either by extending the embargo period with regard to fruits and vegetables entering this country or increasing the tariff to protect our thriving horticultural industry?

Hon. E. F. Whelan (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, the hon. member was present last night when I addressed the Canadian Horticultural Council and I am sure that he heard what I said there, namely, that my interest was to make sure that Canadian horticultural production—

Mr. Horner (Crowfoot): Yes or no?

Mr. Whelan: —remains healthy. Yes, I am prepared to do that.

AIR TRANSPORT

CHARTER FLIGHTS—DISPARITY IN RATES BETWEEN CANADIAN AND BRITISH CARRIERS

Mr. Jim Fleming (York West): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Transport. Because there continues to be concern regarding the necessity of Canadians travelling abroad on charters to pay higher fares than, for instance, Europeans travelling to North America, could the minister give us any justification for this hardship to Canadians?

[Translation]

Hon. Jean Marchand (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, the Chairman of the Canadian Transport Commission informs me that the relevant regulations authorize the Commission to remove or waive some restrictions in certain individual cases.

Now the Canadian Transport Commission has decided to waive certain delays for all travel towards Eastern Europe, which means that no ethnic groups will meet with the problems they have faced so far.

On a question of privilege, Mr. Speaker, I wish to refer to what I said a few moments ago about not being aware of the Wardair strike. As a matter of fact I am aware that a strike is on, but not of the status of negotiations, which is quite different.

I apologize to the hon. member—

TAXATION

REMOVAL OF CAPITAL GAINS TAX ON FARMLANDS INHERITED BY SON OR DAUGHTER—SITUATION REGARDING FARM BUILDINGS

Mr. Gus Mitges (Grey-Simcoe): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Agriculture. The budget included a provision that family farmlands will no longer be subject to capital gains tax when passed on to a son or daughter on the death of the farm owner.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Mitges: I would like to ask the minister if this exemption also includes the buildings on the farm, or is it just the land?

Hon. E. F. Whelan (Minister of Agriculture): It includes the complete farm, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Mitges: Does it include the buildings?

Mr. Speaker: Has the hon. member a supplementary?

Mr. Mitges: In view of the fact that many family farms have been incorporated so as to make the family farm a more viable unit, does the minister intend to take steps to make sure that these family farm corporations will not be subject to capital gains tax and thus will be treated the same as family farm units which in fact they are?

Mr. Whelan: Mr. Speaker, I think it is fairly plain that the whole principle behind this provision in the budget is to make sure it is a family farm and that the family stays in farming. That is the idea of it.

Mr. Horner (Crowfoot): Why do you have to die first?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. We have just about reached the end of the question period. The Chair will recognize the hon. member for Lethbridge.

Mr. Ken Hurlburt (Lethbridge): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Agriculture. As 75 per cent of all irrigated lands in Canada are in southern Alberta, and since the ditches serving these lands are in a sad state of disrepair, has the government completed the agreement under negotiation with the province of Alberta whereby both governments would participate in the cost of upgrading this antiquated system?

Hon. E. F. Whelan (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, I met with the people in that area of Alberta a week ago Saturday, and we are very close to completing this agreement. I am sure that even the hon. member will be happy with it.

FINANCE

REQUEST FOR REVIEW OF REMOVAL OF TARIFF ON IMPORTS OF UNITED STATES BEEF

Mr. A. P. Gleave (Saskatoon-Biggar): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the Minister of Finance. In view of the letter sent to him by the minister of agriculture for Saskatchewan protesting the removal of the tariff protection on cattle and beef coming into Canada from the United States, will the minister review this policy as requested and give farm organizations a chance to put their case before him?

Hon. John N. Turner (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, of course all the tariff reductions affecting consumer goods, whether they be industrial or agricultural, are on a temporary, one-year basis. They are meant, and were so researched, not to affect adversely either production or employment and we will analyse any adverse affect on either production or employment of every one of these reductions.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

REPRESENTATIONS ON BEHALF OF RONALD PATRICK LIPPERT IMPRISONED IN CUBA

Mr. Tom Cossitt (Leeds): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the Prime Minister on a subject I have raised on several previous occasions in the House, namely, the matter of Ronald Patrick Lippert, a Canadian citizen from Kitchener, Ontario, in prison in Cuba for the last ten years as part of a 30-year sentence. In view of the lack of success, or perhaps lack of initiative by the Secretary of State for External Affairs, in dealing with the matter, will the Prime Minister consider approaching his counterpart, Prime Minister Fidel Castro of Cuba, in an attempt to obtain the release of Mr. Lippert as soon as possible?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, the Secretary of State for External Affairs has dealt with this matter on several occasions and I have nothing new to add at this point.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I apologize to hon. members who have supplementary questions and did not have an opportunity to ask them. Before calling orders of the day the Chair will recognize the hon. member for Burnaby-Richmond-Delta.

BRITISH COLUMBIA LAND COMMISSION BILL—REQUEST FOR ASSISTANCE TO PROTECT CITIZENS' RIGHTS

Mr. John Reynolds (Burnaby-Richmond-Delta): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the right hon. Prime Minister or for the Minister of Justice. Have they received a telegram or a submission from the opposition parties in the British Columbia legislature asking for federal government assistance in removing those parts of Bill 42 that affect the individual rights of Canadian citizens and, if they have received such a telegram, what do they plan to do about it?

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister of Justice): Mr. Speaker, so far as I know I have not seen such a telegram. I will check in my office to see whether one has arrived.

Mr. Speaker: Orders of the day.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

CONVENING OF STANDING COMMITTEES

Mr. Baldwin: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order which affects the business of the House. I would urge the government House leader to set in motion the various standing committees which will be inquiring into the estimates, not only because of the heavy burden involved and the late date at which we are approaching the examination of the estimates but because of a number of issues raised today that might well be inquired into in committee.

I was particularly taken by the questions asked of the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce. If the appropriate standing committee were convened, the whole question of the controversy over and discrepancies in the auto trade pact could be the subject of discussion in that committee, with questions asked and answers given. I am not going to suggest, Mr. Speaker, that that would relieve the burden you are now faced with in dealing with the question period, but I do suggest it would be a great measure of assistance to the Chair and to the hon. members if the committees were set in motion.

Mr. Beattie (Hamilton Mountain): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order regarding recognition of members of the House. It does not concern myself. Two members on the opposite side asked questions today, one on family allowances and the other on charter air fares, which were asked and answered in the House yesterday. Either these members were not present or they do not read Hansard.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I think there has never been any suggestion that members on the government side are not entitled to ask questions, and as long as I am here I have every intention of allowing them to ask questions.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Hales: I rise on a question of privilege, Mr. Speaker, concerning the answer to written question No. 794 which I received today. In part 5 I asked:

Was the contract let to the lowest bidder and, if so (a) for what amount (b) to whom?

This matter concerns the Department of Transport. The answer was that the contract was let to the lowest bidder. That is fine. The name of the bidder was given but as to the amount the answer was that it is proprietary information. It has been a longstanding rule of the House that when a member asks for the name of a tenderer and the amount of the tender that information should be made available. I would ask the minister to see that I get information as to the amount and that I am not again told that it is proprietary information.

Mr. Danforth: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a question of privilege. I apologize to the House for holding up the normal proceedings. I bring to your attention, Sir, and to the attention of all hon. members that we are very fortunate to have in our galleries today, I believe for the first time in history, the Canadian Horticultural Council in a body, an organization which has for so long represented the fruit and vegetable growers and horticulture in this country.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Brome-Missisquoi.

Mr. Heward Grafftey (Brome-Missisquoi): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Secretary of State for External Affairs.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I apologize to the hon. member, but the question period has ended. The hon. member for Burnaby-Richmond-Delta.

[Mr. Baldwin.]

• (1530)

Mr. Reynolds: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. My question was to the right hon. Prime Minister or to the Minister of Justice—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. If the hon. member wishes to ask a question, I point out that the question period ended about ten minutes ago. Only with the unanimous consent of the House can we revert to the question period.

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. Speaker: I would have no objection whatsoever if hon. members wished to revert to the question period. The hon. member rises on a point of order.

Mr. Reynolds: The point of order is that my question was asked of the Prime Minister or the Minister of Justice as to whether they had received a telegram or submission. I received an answer only from the Minister of Justice, and I would not want the press to pick up that the Prime Minister said he did not receive a telegram. Perhaps the Minister of Justice would straighten out this matter, because the Prime Minister has left the House.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. That is not a point of order. The Minister of Justice rises on a point of order.

Mr. Lang: Mr. Speaker, I am happy to tell the hon. member that the Prime Minister indicated that his answer was the same as mine. Also, if the hon. member wishes to know whether we have received a telegram it might be wise to let us know in advance.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. That is not a point of order but an answer perhaps to a supplementary question. Apparently the matter has been cleared up to the satisfaction of the hon. member. Orders of the day.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

THE BUDGET

FINANCIAL STATEMENT OF THE MINISTER OF FINANCE

The House resumed, from Tuesday, February 27, consideration of the motion of Hon. John N. Turner (Minister of Finance) that this House approve in general the budgetary policy of the government.

[Translation]

Mr. Yves Demers (Duvernay): Mr. Speaker, since I had to interrupt my speech yesterday evening, I should like to point out that another cause of inflation is that collective agreements have these past ten years provided the Canadian workers with annual salary increases of about 5 per cent. Five per cent raises are granted to one sector of the economy one year, and the next year other collective agreements make it necessary to give raises to other sectors, so as to ensure some degree of uniformity in salary scales, and so it goes on and on. In the end, everyone is earning more but no one is getting more buying power.

Not that I am opposed to collective agreements or to unions; on the contrary, I consider that they have done a fine job and have greatly contributed to the workers' welfare. I would, however, suggest that the federal government, the unions and the employers carry out a joint study of this vicious circle, with a view to putting an end to this plethora of raises, which are getting us nowhere and are adding to the inflationary pressures.

The budget also assists small businesses, Mr. Speaker, through elimination of the ineligible investment test as from January 1, 1972. According to the fiscal reform, small Canadian businesses are taxable at the rate of 25 per cent of profits resulting from their operations. However, any investment income was taxable at 50 p. 100. As a result, management of small businesses had adopted a policy of distributing as dividends or otherwise a very substantial part of accumulated profits, resulting in a serious lack of liquid assets in our businesses. A reduction of the tax rate on investment income from 50 to 25 p. 100 therefore encourages small businesses to increase their operating funds in periods of stability and to invest surpluses in bonds, mortgages or other Canadian investments.

In this manner, when those businesses are prepared to expand, they will merely have to liquidate their investments in order to finance development.

This is a measure which will enable our smaller industries to save more; thus, a larger share of our economy will belong to Canadians and no longer to foreign investors.

This budget also introduces a new concept in our tax system, that of including in the calculation of equalization payments the amounts paid in school taxes. Today, most of our Canadian municipalities are faced with a crucial problem. In 1973-74, $190 million will be paid to the Atlantic provinces, Manitoba and Saskatchewan; this amount represents 28 per cent of the school taxes levied in those provinces.

The Minister of Finance (Mr. Turner) also increased to $100 the basic old age security pension. I am happy to see that not only the guaranteed income supplement has been increased but also the basic pension because, to my mind, those Canadians who have paid taxes all their lives have the right to that pension; it is not a social security benefit, but their due.

The workers who have contributed to superannuation funds of private companies or other employers are eligible when they retire to a pension at a fixed amount proportional to the amount they have paid, notwithstanding their eventual investment revenues.

The present gap between the basic pension and the guaranteed income supplement must be progressively reduced, because it is unfair to the Canadian worker who, through his work and because of the sacrifices be willingly accepted in order to save money, has often managed to save $10,000 or $15,000 a year throughout his life. Canadians are thus penalized, because in calculating the guaranteed income supplement, the interest gained on saved capital is deducted, which leaves him with a pension altogether equal to that of the taxpayer who never took the trouble to save. Canadians are accordingly encouraged to spend all their earnings, knowing that when they reach 60 or 65 they can live at the expense of the state.

I even think that in the future the gap between the basic pension and the guaranteed income supplement should be further reduced even if the $1,000 tax exemption granted to pensioners has to be abolished.

The suppression of the $1,000 exemption would make the taxation system fairer, so that with an equal revenue, one would pay an equal tax.

This budget is certainly the best in many years, if not since the beginning of Confederation.

Mr. Claude Wagner (Saint-Hyacinthe): Mr. Speaker, hon. members have several ways of analyzing the budget now under consideration. One of them is to look at it with the eyes of the head of a family. The more time passes by, the more it seems fair to me to say that it is in terms of its social impact that the budget introduced by the present Minister of Finance (Mr. Turner) must be assessed.

The Liberal members and those who are no longer in such a hurry and who are sitting to my left cannot indeed contend decently that this budget is beneficial to the average Canadian family. Looking at it this way would amount to considering the family merely through a statistical prim.

Mr. Speaker, a family is a reality. In the province of Quebec—and I am referring here to the family in Saint-Hyacinthe, as well as the family almost anywhere else in Canada—the family relies more and more on the authorities in search both of a reassessement of its status and life conditions which would not only encourage its complete development, but even constitute its very existence.

It is sad to realize today that our colleagues of the New Democratic Party, the new "democratic paradox", find it normal that the corporate welfare bums should retain what they use to call privileges, and at the same time that the family should gradually lose its rights. Helping out the family meant in particular—and that is what we would have done had we been in office—suppressing the 11 per cent tax on building materials. If I may parody here our Social Credit friends, I would say that we would have thus made financially feasible what is physically possible, namely the desire of every father and mother to have their children educated in a home that would be personal to them and rich in comfort and in intimacy.

Concerning the suppression of the tax on children's clothing and footwear, that is a step forward, but a most bashful one. It is well known, Mr. Speaker, that the 39 cents saved on the one hand on the purchase of footwear for junior will not be enough on the other hand to compensate for the increase, due to inflation, in the price of the maternity dress which the mother has to buy.

And now we know it, Mr. Speaker: a Progressive Conservative government would have removed the federal sales tax on all kinds of clothing and footwear; as for the mascara of the fashionable woman, I couldn't care less!

This, Mr. Speaker, would have really helped the family.

This budget will not put luxuries within the means of people aged 60 and over. At least 786,000 Canadian citizens between 60 and 65 are being told once more, despite the people's will: "status quo". The government would not even agree to lower the eligible age for retirement. Some 145,000 persons aged 64 across the country are disappointed with the last budget. Yet it is time, Mr. Speaker, to forget about partisanship and to bring gradually into to the federal pension plan all those aged 60.

Even here, "David" did not dare pit himself against the Liberal Goliath. Making a U-turn, he preferred in an anti-historical gesture use his sling against people smaller than him and in some cases against those very people who favoured him at the expense of Goliath.

This budget, Mr. Speaker, is not either that of the Golden Age, nor will it ever come of age, because it was stillborn. It was produced by a couple that entered into a friendly agreement which has more to do with political immorality than with the desire to create sound results for the people.

From the social point of view, Mr. Speaker, the budget of the present government is a failure since it ignores the family and minimizes the needs of older people.

From the purely economic point of view, my distinguished colleagues, and I am thinking here of the Leader of the Official Opposition (Mr. Stanfield) and the hon. members for Edmonton West (Mr. Lambert) and Don Valley (Mr. Gillies), have shown in this debate the weaknesses of the budget speech of the Minister of Finance.

The rate of increase of the cost of living erodes the increases in salaries or welfare benefits for some and the incentive to work for pay for others and yet the government is still doing nothing more, as the Minister of Finance said, than calling for voluntary restraint as a means to curb inflation.

• (1540)

[English]

Earlier, Mr. Speaker, I spoke as a family man, as a Quebecker. I say that no province has more to be bitterly disappointed about in this budget than Quebec. A province whose people have the right to participate in the mainstream of Canadian economic life has been given no meaningful incentive or encouragement to do so in this budget. The pensioner, the workingman and the small businessman in Quebec can, with strong reason, be united in their disappointment.

Mr. Speaker, the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) and members of his cabinet have long prided themselves on the political success their party has had repeatedly in the province of Quebec. As I sit and look across the way at many of my fellow Quebeckers who chose to serve as Liberal members, and when I note the increase in costs and unemployment for Quebeckers under this government, I cannot but rephrase the words of a great parliamentarian of another era and say: Never have so many taken so long to do so little for those they represent.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Wagner: For while it is all very well for government agencies such as the one formerly headed by the Minister of Transport (Mr. Marchand) to seek to equalize disparity through regional development grants, the measure of a government's economic success lies in its ability to create a climate in which all citizens can help themselves to achieve a better standard of living.

Those who represent Quebec in this House know full well the type of people we have the honour of speaking for here in Ottawa. Whether a Quebec member sits with the government, the Créditistes or with the official opposition, he or she knows full well that those who sent us here are a self-reliant group of Canadians desirous of neither special economic favours nor handouts. We from Quebec know that Quebeckers want to participate in our nation's economy while standing on their own economic feet—

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Wagner: —as opposed to relying on an election platform artificially propped up by some last minute grants. We from Quebec should ask ourselves what this budget should have done for young Quebeckers leaving CEGEP or college and seeking work, and what it should have done for housewives trying to meet the steadily rising cost of living. After asking these questions, Quebec members who support this budget know full well to what degree they are selling out their constituents' interests.

Mr. Speaker, we are getting closer and closer to the day when those whose interest was sold out on the carving block of parliamentary expediency will vote against those who so willingly made that sale. It may be very easy for government members from Quebec to join their colleagues in making parliamentary deals with the New Democratic paradox, but let them be fully aware that the price of NDP support this week in Ottawa will be paid by Liberal candidates in the 74 ridings of Quebec in the months to come. For when Quebeckers speak out at the polls they will be speaking out against a party that has allowed Quebeckers to suffer an unemployment rate which is at times a full two percentage points above the national average.

Mr. Paproski: Right on. Shame.

Mr. Wagner: They will speak out against a government that forces Quebeckers under the age of 25 to make their entry into the work force a particularly discouraging and difficult one.

Mr. Paproski: Yes, and I see the Minister of Transport smiling.

Mr. Wagner: They will speak out against the type of price instability that makes maintaining a decent standard of living, let alone improving one's standard of living, a discouraging and impossible battle for Quebeckers of all ages.

My colleague for Don Valley (Mr. Gillies) has already put forward the type of bold step a Stanfield government would have taken to move the economy of Quebec and of other provinces forward while ensuring that a basic form of price and cost stability was maintained. By comparison, the Turner budget lacks both imagination and understanding and deserves neither the trust nor support of the Canadian people.

• (1550)

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

[Translation]

Mr. Wagner: This budget, as the Minister of Finance said, strengthens and supplements the budget introduced in the House in May 1972. It is true, Mr. Speaker, in this sense that it strengthens and supplements the image the people of Canada had of the incompetence and the loss of credibility of this government in general and the Minister of Finance in particular.

The challenge, Mr. Speaker, was not to convince the New Democrats but all Canadians. For our part—and it is the challenge—we are ready to meet the real needs of all Canadians.

[English]

Hon. John C. Munro (Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, it gives me great pleasure to enter this debate on the budget. The hon. member who last spoke quoted that great statesman and made the analogy that never have so many taken so long to do so little for those they represent. After listening to his speech, with all its colourful rhetoric and very few specifics, I think I can say that never have I heard so many people in the opposition talk so much and offer so little.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Munro (Hamilton East): The hon. member talked about what the Turner budget has done for the young Quebecker. As I recall, this man should know something about progressive policies to help the young Quebecker because he was a member of the government of that province: he is aware of the jurisdictional limits on how we can intervene to help.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Munro (Hamilton East): I might ask him what he and his government did, and would he justify his own policies in terms of concrete assistance to young Quebeckers? Our record is quite clear, Mr. Speaker. As the hon. member knows, we have shared, in terms of post-secondary education, half the operating costs throughout the province of Quebec and have done so for many years. Is he not aware of that fact? Is he not aware of the millions, indeed hundreds of millions of dollars which have gone to that province, as they have to other provinces, as our share in the cost of post-secondary education? Does he condemn the Opportunities for Youth program?

Mr. Blenkarn: Yes.

An hon. Member: Who said that?

Mr. Blenkarn: I did.

Mr. Munro (Hamilton East): I take it that whoever in the opposition said yes, he does condemn it, does not speak for the official opposition. The hon. member for Saint-Hyacinthe (Mr. Wagner) talked about what this budget does for the housewife and the family in Quebec. Let me remind him that there are many tariff cuts and sales tax cuts which are designed to increase the purchasing power of the very housewives in Quebec about whom he speaks. Let me also remind the hon. member that it was this government which not so many months ago brought before this House a family income security plan.

Mr. Forrestall: Who killed it?

Mr. Munro (Hamilton East): Precisely. I wish the hon. member would keep interrupting; he is very helpful. I will tell him who killed it. Members of the official opposition killed it by delaying tactics throughout the debate.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Munro (Hamilton East): Some members of the official opposition from Newfoundland—one or two are not here now because they did not survive the last election—will testify that the Conservative party's position on FISP was a positive embarrassment to them in that province. That bill would have redistributed an additional $180 million over and above the $650 million already in the program to those very children and families about which the hon. member spoke. The hon. member is now a front bencher of the party which did so much to destroy the legislation that would have greatly helped young families in the province of Quebec as well as in other provinces of Canada.

Mr. Blenkarn: What about jobs?

Mr. Munro (Hamilton East): The hon. member asks about jobs. That shows how preposterous is the economic thinking on the other side, when they do not realize that an increase of this kind in social security moneys going to those in the lower income groups increases their disposable income and purchasing power for goods they desperately need and, by its very nature, creates jobs. Is that not what the hon. member for Don Valley (Mr. Gillies) has been trying to tell us and his own party?

Mr. Blenkarn: You are the minister of unemployment, not employment.

Mr. Munro (Hamilton East): Maybe the hon. member who just spoke has one advantage. He is a new member. For obvious reasons, he has chosen not to take any responsibility whatsoever for the past conduct of the party he represents.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Munro (Hamilton East): The hon. member for Saint-Hyacinthe spoke with passion about the high rate of unemployment in the province of Quebec but offered very few specifics to correct the situation in terms of policies. He was a member of the Conservative party which not so many days ago took a position that would have cut off moneys to the very unemployed he pretends to care about.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Munro (Hamilton East): He speaks about his concern for families of Quebec. Let him justify the position of his party on the FISP bill that would have done so much for the children of his province. I do not think he can. I had an opportunity to read the speech of the hon. member for Don Valley. I read in the newspapers that the hon.

member for Don Valley is the new financial critic for the Conservative party. I looked forward with considerable anticipation to his speech. Knowing his background in the academic field, I thought we might find something there of a novel nature which would be constructive. I found not one original thought in that speech.

• (1600)

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

An hon. Member: You should hear yourself.

Mr. Munro (Hamilton East): I hope his students felt he made a better contribution to their benefit than members of this House felt he did to theirs.

Mr. Gillies: I doubt whether members of the government felt that way.

Mr. Munro (Hamilton East): The hon. member who has just spoken referred to the great new formula which the hon. member for Don Valley had offered. But when you strip away the rhetoric, his solutions to unemployment and the economic problems confronting the country aside from policies already in place turned out to be wage and price controls. He talked about a 90-day period, a stabilization period, whatever that means; but I found an amazing lack of detail as to precisely what would happen after that period of 90 days.

Mr. Jamieson: Sixty days.

Mr. Munro (Hamilton East): He talked about wage and price controls. Nowhere in his speech did I see any suggestion that there ought to be any type of control of profits. When we talk about wage and price controls and offer them as some solution to the economic ills of the country, I believe we should be careful not to raise expectations among the people who are suffering most from inflation and from unemployment—expectations which can never be fulfilled. I take it that the hon. member for Don Valley would be the very first to admit that in terms of the unemployment which we have been facing and which we have been trying to cure—

Mr. Gillies: Unsuccessfully.

Mr. Jamieson: Oh, come on!

Mr. Munro (Hamilton East): —wage and price control is not a solution which will lower unemployment in the short term.

Mr. Gillies: Try it.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Munro (Hamilton East): If he is suggesting that it will—and it would appear that his party is doing so by the line it is taking—he is misleading the Canadian people. The fact is that wage and price controls, unless one spells out specifically how they would work and to whom they would apply and whether they would apply to profits, all too often hurt the very people who can least afford to bear their weight. I refer to the people in the lower income groups. These are the ones earning wages and salaries. These are the ones who could be subjected to control most effectively. These are the ones who enjoy the least benefits in terms of stock options, expense accounts, and so on, as a means of getting around controls. Any equitable approach to wage and price controls must ensure that the working population of this country is not asked to accept the full burden of such restrictions while those who enjoy profits, stock options and other sources of income escape.

The hon. member and other members of the Official Opposition talk about tax cuts. They suggest tax cuts across the board.

Mr. Gillies: Right.

Mr. Munro (Hamilton East): What novelty is there in that? Those in the higher income groups get the greatest benefit. That has been the traditional position of the Conservative party. I thought the hon. member for Don Valley would have something better to offer.

This budget places minimum and maximum limits on tax cuts so that they can exert maximum impact on the people who should benefit most—the people in the middle and lower income groups. Who would argue with that? This budget also increases real income by effecting reductions in sales tax. I think the hon. member for Don Valley would admit that, traditionally, sales taxes are retrogressive; they have been most severely felt by those in the lower income groups. By reducing sales taxes we are helping the people in the lower income groups who need help most. Surely, no one would disagree with that philosophy.

Mr. Speaker, we are considering a budget which increases disposable income, which reduces tariffs, which reduces sales tax, which reduces customs duties. Second, it reduces taxes. The hon. member for Don Valley has talked about this, but in a much less progressive fashion. The budget reduces taxes in a way which will have a major impact upon those who most need increased disposable income—the low income groups. Third, it contains a built-in mechanism as an inflationary hedge. It does so in a way which will work. I believe even the hon. member for Don Valley will admit that this type of inflationary hedge mechanism built into the platform of the Conservative party would have been entirely inoperative.

Fourth, it contains incentives to private industry to increase capitalization, modernize plants and upgrade technology, thereby improving the strength of its position in world markets. This is what hon. members opposite have been talking about during the question period. Fifth, it continues a policy of injecting money into the economy so as to provide jobs through such programs as Opportunities for Youth, LIP and manpower training. This provides a direct stimulus to the economy. Sixth, it increases disposable income in the hands of some 1,700,000 Canadians by expending many more hundreds of millions of dollars in this fiscal year on our senior citizens, one million of whom were surviving on all or part of the guaranteed income supplement. Now they will get a substantial increase in their pensions. Would anyone disagree that all these programs combine to increase substantially the amount of disposable income in the hands of Canadians?

Mr. Gillies: Not enough.

Mr. Jamieson: It is never enough.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Laniel): Order, please. I regret I must interrupt the minister, but the time allotted to him has expired. As hon. members know, we have only limited time available to us.

Mr. Munro (Hamilton East): Could I have one more minute?

Mr. Knight: Sorry.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Laniel): In the circumstances there is no possibility of an extension of time if we are to retain the order which has been arranged.

Mr. Alex Patterson (Fraser Valley East): Mr. Speaker, it is an honour and a pleasure to be back in the House of Commons after an enforced absence. On the occasion of my first intervention in debate in this parliament, I would express my appreciation to the electors of the Fraser Valley East riding and publicly pledge my best efforts to represent them faithfully and effectively.

The current debate presents the opportunity to deal briefly with some of the issues facing us today, not only at the riding level but on a national scale, because we are well aware of the fact that the attitudes and actions of the national government establish the broad economic framework within which all Canadians must operate. In view of this fact, it can be readily understood that the altered stance of the government, as indicated in the last two budgets, cannot help but cause wonderment and confusion in the minds of the general public as to the direction in which this country is being led. The dilemma was clearly presented by the Leader of the Official Opposition (Mr. Stanfield) on Friday last when he asked the question:

How can you trust a government that within the short space of a few months has accepted so much of what it previously rejected, and in turn has rejected so much of what just a few months ago it readily accepted?

As my riding includes a substantial part of the limited arable land of British Columbia, I would first make some observations with respect to what is termed rural Canada. Economically and socially, rural Canada is facing a crisis in 1973, and the policies of this government are doing little to remove the source of that crisis. These problems are caused mainly by the increasing loss of manpower to the cities. Economically, rural Canada suffers an over-all loss in net income that has intensified over the past four years. In 1951, for example, 37.05 per cent of Canada's population was rural. By 1961, the rural population was down to 30 per cent, and in 1971 to 23.6 per cent. The reason for this exodus to the cities is obvious when we realize that in 1969 a full 36 per cent of families living in rural areas lived below the Statistics Canada poverty line. For unattached persons in rural areas the percentage was 50.4 per cent.

As well, four out of every ten Canadian farmers find it necessary to be employed to some degree in a non-farm job. In most cases this extra income only brings them up to the poverty line. Little wonder, then, that many farmers have given up the land and have moved to the city to try to make a living there. In a lot of cases these individuals do not have the skills necessary for employment in industry and therefore end up on the welfare rolls.

Agriculture in Canada, then, is still facing serious problems. One example is the decrease in realized net farm income. When we study these figures, we realize just how serious that problem has become. It is during this period of falling income that inflation and the cost of living have been the highest. It is the responsibility of the government to see that no individual is caught in the price squeeze—that income is, for all, adequate to purchase the necessities of life. I would submit that this government has failed in this responsibility, especially as it pertains to rural agricultural Canadians. Increased costs of production have certainly not been accompanied by increased prices for products.

There are one or two specific matters to which I should like to direct attention today, but because of the time factor I would just call the attention of hon. members to the speech made by my colleague, the hon. member for Kent-Essex (Mr. Danforth) yesterday in respect of one of the most serious situations referred to in the budget.

British Columbia is perhaps in the most vulnerable position of all the provinces of Canada in regard to agricultural tariffs, mainly because of its location. Immediately to the south lie the states of Washington and Idaho which together produce by far the heaviest volume of potatoes of any area in North America. In addition, Washington is a major producer of most common vegetables.

British Columbia has already felt the impact of the rapid expansion of production to the south, a prime example being the collapse of the market structure for strawberries for processing following the sudden upsurge of production in Mexico in 1970-71. The resulting flood of berries in the North American market drove both U.S. and B.C. prices far below the cost of production. At that time this labour-intensive sector of the industry provided a return of $6 million annually in this province.

In view of this experience, it becomes readily apparent that the fruit and vegetable industry in my province is deeply concerned about the possibility that its position, already demonstrably vulnerable to external pressures, will be severely undermined by these concessions in the form of tariff reductions. They are unilateral and, as a result, we lose all our bargaining position with foreign nations with respect to their tariffs. I would suggest that not only does the reduction in tariffs place our producers in a very vulnerable position, making it extremely difficult in many instances for them to carry on their operations, but it will also have tremendously detrimental effects on the employment picture in Canada, for we all know that the agricultural industry provides a great deal of employment.

With the exception of southern Ontario and the Prairies, about three-quarters of all farms in Canada are considered small farms, according to the Statistics Canada census, 1966, and it is these small farmers who bear the brunt of the inept agricultural policies of this government. I believe this is what concerns a great many of us today. The big man can take care of himself, but the little man gets trampled by not only the big man but the big government, big taxes, big inflation and a bigger cost of living.

It is the same in the business world. Figures compiled by Dun and Bradstreet of Canada Ltd. last fall show that Canadian business failures during August, 1972, were the highest for that month since the depression years. They rose a fantastic 61 per cent since 1971, from 145 business failures to 233. These figures show that the ailment was widespread and general, for by region there were more failures in August, 1972, than a year earlier in every province except Saskatchewan, while Toronto led the nation with more than twice the number recorded in 1971.

There should be no reason for puzzlement about the rise in business failure and the drastic loss in productivity. Since the beginning of last year the Economic Council of Canada, along with my leader, warned that a healthy economy would require giving far more purchasing power and initiative back to the small businessman. Yet this government, this finance minister both in the budget he presented last May and in the one he presented last Monday night has to all intents and purposes ignored the plight of small business in this country.

We all know that attempts at tax reform led big government to ignore the vital interests of small business, yet small business in this country generates more employment, more real growth, more tax revenue and bears more of the cost burden of government than does so-called big business. It is my position and the position of this party that provision should be made for Canadian citizens to invest in the equity of Canadian-owned small business. We believe that the credit, which will be 50 per cent of qualified investments to a maximum of $5,000 each year, will either be offset against the person's income tax or rebated directly to him. This means that a Canadian who invests, for example, $1,000 in a qualified business or company will receive a credit of $500 against his income.

If implemented, the cost of such a program would be about $300 million—"cost" in the sense that this would be lost to federal revenue and treated as deferred personal tax. It would, however, be far less than the $1 billion spent on unemployment insurance payments to sustain an unemployment rate of 7 per cent. I realize that this government does not learn lessons very easily or very quickly, but surely by now it has learned that if we want to create jobs and encourage enterprise, the least effective way to do it is by direct government spending. As has been so clearly stated in this debate, the budget does virtually nothing to assist small businesses nor to encourage investment in small Canadian-owned enterprises.

The mention of tax reform brings to mind the introduction of a bill to introduce a great new deal for the Canadian taxpayers but in fact was, I believe, the perpetration of one of the greatest hoaxes by the Liberal government. It was a massive document, so complex that not even its authors were able to adequately explain either its intricacies or its ramifications. Rammed through parliament with indecent haste and characteristic Liberal arrogance, it further aggravated an already unintelligible jungle of tax laws and regulations.

A further move of the present government was the introduction of a new set of income tax forms that in their effect add insult to injury and have caused consternation in the minds of taxpayers across the nation. An advertisement in one of the west coast newspapers vividly portrayed the situation when it called attention to the fact that in view of the new tax forms there would be a tremendous demand for the services of tax consultants, and offered courses to prepare for this lucrative development. Accountants time and time again have complained that answers to inquiries cannot be obtained at the taxation offices of the Department of National Revenue. The magnitude of the muddle caused by the tax measure and tax forms is eclipsed only by the confused and confusing picture drawn either deliberately or unintentionally by the Minister of Finance (Mr. Turner) in the presentation of the budget currently before the House.

We appreciate the announced reductions in personal income taxes, but without an effective program to halt the constantly increasing cost of living, Canadians could well find that through the further erosion of the value of the dollar all benefits accruing from tax reductions will be effectively wiped out. We have constantly urged the elimination of the 11 per cent tax on building materials. I firmly believe this would be a practical and effective way to encourage the building of new homes. The exorbitantly high interest rates should be reduced and the interest paid on mortgage payments should be deductible for income tax purposes, as should the municipal taxes on property. We continue to advance these proposals as deserving of the consideration of government.

May I also raise another matter to which attention has been called on many occasions; that is, the desirability of the government facing up to the unfairness of the situation and settling in an equitable manner the pleas of the original purchasers of Government of Canada 3 per cent perpetual bonds sold, I believe, in 1936. There are a limited number of individuals involved and I believe the source of hardship and resentment should be eliminated by a settlement of the issue.

The government's policy with regard to inflation was even more disastrous than its agricultural and small business policy. I would remind the House of what the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) said in 1969 about his government's policy toward inflation. He said, on December 22, 1969, about what he termed our worst enemy, inflation:

> There are a lot of people in this country who are bargaining that, oh well, the government can't hang tough for too long because it will only get frightened when it sees unemployment go up to 6 per cent. But if people think we are going to lose our nerve now, they should think again. We're not.

I think this is a shameful thing for the Prime Minister to say. If we look at the social and economic costs of the unemployment we have suffered, they would seem to indicate that there have been incalculable losses to the Canadian people, and this in the midst of statements by the Minister of Finance telling the poor people of the country that it was perfectly possible for a Canadian family to get along on $30 a week. If the government's policy to fight inflation had worked, then perhaps the Canadian people could forgive it for the chaos it brought about in the economic system. But the fact is that it did not work and we still have inflation and high unemployment.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Laniel): Order, please. I regret to interrupt the hon. member, but the time allotted to him has expired.

Mr. Bill Knight (Assiniboia): Mr. Speaker, it is with pleasure that I rise to take part in this debate. We have heard from one Liberal, the Minister of Labour (Mr. Munro), we have heard from a recycled Grit, the hon. member for Saint-Hyacinthe (Mr. Wagner) who has returned after having dwelt in the political wilderness of Quebec, and we have heard from the hon. member for Fraser Valley East (Mr. Patterson), a recycled Social Crediter who failed to mention the Bank of Canada. So the debate this afternoon has been close to being interesting.

I wish to deal with a number of matters. I note that with great piousness the government introduced a 5 per cent reduction in personal income tax in such a manner that the individual taxpayer will receive a reduction of a minimum of $100 or a maximum of $500; this will apply to the middle and lower income people in this country. I point out to the minister that it was this government, while it had a majority, which brought in a 3 per cent reduction in income tax in respect of which the greatest benefit went to those in the upper income group and not to those in the middle or lower income groups. Because of the development of a minority government in this parliament, the government has had to change its position and bring in this budget.

I believe there are things in the budget which will be of benefit, I hope, at least to the consumers of the constituency of Assiniboia. It is on that basis and with some reluctance that I support the budget. I want to point out that the government has increased the old age pension to $100 and the supplement to $170. I say to the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Lalonde), who is present, that in terms of the real needs of the pensioners in this country that kind of increase is not good enough and the government must look toward a greater increase. In addition, there is the matter of the age limit being lowered from 65 to 60. This is a question with which we must deal in the near future. Many widows and widowers between age 60 and age 65 have real need and very limited sources of income. A drop in the age level for eligibility in respect of pensions is greatly needed. I do, however, accept the increases in the sense of meeting the need as of April 1, 1973. I shall continue to push for a further increase across the board to $150 a month which is advocated by the New Democratic Party.

I might mention the manner in which the income tax reduction of 5 per cent with a maximum of $500 and a minimum of $100 was brought in. That is a plank which was stolen from the platform of the New Democratic Party. I say to hon. members that they can steal these planks all they like, so long as it is done for the people of Canada and so long as the greatest benefit goes to the people in the middle and lower income brackets. On top of that, we have seen the raising of the exemptions which I spoke about in my constituency during the election. These exemptions have been increased for the ordinary taxpayers of Canada.

Further, we have seen a reduction in tariffs. There is a temporary reduction involving in the neighbourhood of $1.3 billion worth of goods. I point out to the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Whelan) and the Minister of Finance (Mr. Turner) that the significance of this reduction in tariffs is that it establishes a precedent in the area of tariff-setting in this country. For the first time in a long while a government has moved in the area of reducing tariffs on certain commodities. This may or may not benefit the consumer of this country, but a precedent has been set which those of us from the west will watch with great interest, no matter which old-line party is in power. People in the west have lived for a long time under the protective umbrella of tariffs which did nothing but protect the interests of the people in the east. So a very important precedent has been set in terms of the future development of the country.

Because this government is in a minority position we have had a reduction in sales tax on such things as children's clothing, shoes and other footwear. That is significant. I have already had managers of stores and co-operatives writing me for further details in order to lower the price of their products. If this reduction is passed on to the consumer, it will help to lower the cost of living, especially for people who are at present raising children and are in need of all the purchasing power they can get.

Furthermore, there is in this budget an equalization formula which increases payments by some $190 million to the Maritimes, the Atlantic provinces, Quebec, Manitoba and Saskatchewan. This will be of further assistance in giving purchasing power to people in Saskatchewan where we are attempting to alleviate the pressure of the property tax, to shift it more in relation to a man's income. We are trying to reduce school property tax as a cost. That is important in terms of what is in the budget, coming from a minority government.

Further to that, there has been some change in the area of tax reform. I will not jump with joy over a couple of these changes, for a number of reasons. When the minister made his speech in the House of Commons, he mentioned that the capital gains tax has been removed from the transfer of a farm from father to son, so as to keep the farm units going. The Minister of Agriculture jumped with great glee at that and shook the hand of the Minister of Finance, praising him to his colleagues around him, I am sure. Then he probably went home that night and made the mistake of reading the details and finding out that first you had to drop dead before getting this exemption.

We in this party moved an amendment against the tax reform bill of 1971 to exempt the transfer of farmland which kept the farm unit going from father to son or even daughter-in-law. We moved that amendment, but the government has not gone far enough and the Minister of Agriculture, for all his talk, should not get so excited about it. I am sure there are other things in the budget that did not excite the Minister of Agriculture. There has been a move back to allowing a producer to set up a basic herd. That is important in my area for many people involved in the cattle industry. This is a move in the right direction, although it does not go far enough in setting up basic herds. These are the things in the budget that have some merit.

We have now left the kind of dinosaur economic philosophy which was practised in 1969, 1970 and 1971 and are moving in the direction of an expansionary budget, although it does not go far enough. We are moving in this direction only because this is a minority government, and as insensitive as it has been during its four years of governing, the government now finds itself in a minority situation and reacts thereto.

I suppose that when we reach 5.45 p.m. tonight and we get to the point of voting on the final element of this budget, we will find the Tory party voting against the following measures. It will vote against an increase in the old age pension. It will vote against an increase in war veterans allowances. It will vote against the reduction of 5 per cent in personal income tax with a maximum of $500 and a minimum of $100. It will vote against the removal of the tax on children's clothing, etc. This budget provision will be of great value to the young consumers in my constituency.

Tory members from the Maritimes, Saskatchewan and Manitoba will be voting against the equalization formula in order to provide additional moneys amounting to $190 million to the revenue of those provincial governments, to assist in the education and property tax. That is what they will do at 5.45 p.m. They will vote against a change in the capital gains tax as it relates to farmers, limited as it is. They will vote against the change in the basic herd concept, limited as that change is. This should be on the record, Mr. Speaker.

In the few moments that I have left I want to say that this government which bases its philosophy on outdated concepts, as outdated as those of the party to my right, has not yet begun to deal with the real issues; and this budget does not deal with the real issues that face the people of this country, such as the redistribution of income. Although there is a limited redistribution of income in this budget, it has not been carried out in terms of a fundamental change in the tax system, in spite of the cries of some members of the Tory party that the system is unfair to their big business friends.

Further to that, there is a need to revamp our housing programs. There is real need for a strong foreign takeover bill, stronger than the one presented to this parliament, to meet the real challenge of the continual increase in the foreign ownership of our economy. One issue that will tickle the hearts and the fancies of the members of the Tory party is the energy policy. We are facing an energy crisis, and let there be no mistake about it, in spite of the cry from the Tory members from Alberta and in spite of the weak-kneed approach to the whole issue by the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Mr. Macdonald). The government's energy policy is a disaster. It is a disaster when the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources and the National Energy Board come before the committee of the House and state that on the night of February 1 they did not know whether they had enough oil resources for the month of February.

[Mr. Knight.]

Since one of the Tory members from Alberta is trying to speak up, let me remind him that the Tory members present in the committee said that there is no problem, no crisis; we do not need any quotas or controls, everything is fine, let us export in the traditional free enterprise system. One of the Tory members from Calgary pointed out in the committee a fundamental issue facing the people of this country, that is, the price that we will have to pay for our natural resources if we keep selling our present reserves. We will then have to rely on the reserves in the Mackenzie delta and in the Arctic. If we keep selling them, the consumers in my constituency, because of the free enterprise philosophy of that party in Alberta and of the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources, will be paying twice as much for their fuel requirements. This is what my constituents will have to do; and this applies to the farmer, the consumer of natural gas in the city, the old age pensioner and everybody else.

What this country needs is a fundamental policy related to the redistribution of income, related to housing, to control of foreign ownership, and above all in this decade we need a national energy policy to answer the real needs of the Canadian consumer.

[Translation]

Mr. Roland Godin (Portneuf): Mr. Speaker, I would like first to congratulate the Minister of Finance (Mr. Turner) on the optimism he has shown in the "Budget Highlights" which he handed out to hon. members on Monday, February 19, 1973.

In this publication, the first words of the Minister of Finance are as follows:

> A budget designed to reduce unemployment and to stimulate a more rapid growth

If, as stated by the Minister of Finance, this is the first goal of his department and of the government on the fight against unemployment, we shall be the first to support him as long as the legislation proposed by the government is really adequate.

As the NDP spokesmen said, that party is naturally inclined to support the government as well as the budget of the Minister of Finance where the government states its intention of fighting unemployment.

As to hon. members of the official opposition, I think their feelings have been expressed by their financial critic, the hon. member for Edmonton West (Mr. Lambert) who told the House on February 21:

> Coming to the point of unemployment and those massive measures needed to turn the corner, Mr. Speaker, all sorts of proposals have been tried by the government over the past several years but there were still 688,000 people seeking work this last month.

The hon. member for Edmonton West has good cause for being shocked because 688,000 persons had no paid job last January. Members of the official Opposition are undoubtedly right when they state that the measures proposed in the past and still being proposed by the government to combat unemployment will not have the expected results.

The Canadian people are justified in distrusting a government which, at a time when all kinds of goods are plentiful, allow so many people to live in destitution.

Mr. Speaker, one may wonder whether the Progressive Conservatives could do better. Have they found practical ways to cope with the unemployment problem? What were their solutions when they were in office from 1958 to 1962? Do they have better answers to offer now and what concrete measures to they suggest?

We of the Social Credit Party of Canada would like it very much if the Progressive Conservatives could suggest solutions likely to solve the unemployment problem. We would like to be able to endorse all their criticisms about the present situation and we would like very much to see another government at the head of the country.

Unfortunately, the Progressive Conservatives who offer themselves as alternative solutions to the Liberals have no credibility when it comes to fighting against unemployment. They have no credibility and they will not have the chance, I think, to replace the present government because electors aware that the Progressive Conservatives have no solution to offer to settle the unemployment issue. They have shown their inefficacy and their ineffectiveness when they were in power in Canada from 1958 to 1962.

In September 1971, Statistics Canada published a most interesting and revealing study on the unemployment problem in Canada. Entitled "Unemployment Data, 1960-71" this study enables us to analyse the unemployment situation in the course of the years 1960, 1965 and 1970.

Here are the yearly average unemployment rates in relation to the total manpower for each of the five Canadian areas. For the Atlantic region, in 1970, the unemployment rate amounted to 7.6 per cent in relation to the total manpower; in 1965, it was 7.4 per cent, and in 1960, under the Progressive Conservative government, the unemployment rate reached 10.7 per cent.

For the Quebec region, in 1970, the rate of unemployment stood at 7.9 per cent; in 1965, 5.4 per cent, and in 1960, 9.1 per cent, which means that in Quebec also, the rate of unemployment was higher under the Progressive Conservative regime of the sixties.

In Ontario, we note the same occurrence: the unemployment rate was 4.3 per cent in 1970 and 5.4 per cent in 1960.

In the Prairies, unemployment reached 4.4 per cent in 1970 and 4.2 per cent in 1960.

Lastly, in British Columbia, the unemployment rate was 7.6 per cent in 1970 and 8.5 per cent in 1960, under the Progressive Conservative government.

I suggest, Mr. Speaker, that with such a record and so poor a performance in respect of unemployment, the Progressive Conservatives have nothing to teach anyone and they should be the least inclined to criticize the present government which has not been and is not able to check unemployment.

According to statistical data from January 1953 to December 1971, here is the unemployment situation from 1959 to 1962, under the Progressive Conservative government, and from 1968 to 1971, under the Liberal government.

In 1959, the unemployment rate, by sex and age categories, was 6 per cent. It roses to 7 per cent in 1960. It reached 7.1 per cent in 1961, decreasing to 5.9 per cent in 1962, when the Progressive Conservative party was in office.

In 1968, under the government of the present right hon. Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau), the unemployment rate was 4.8 per cent; it fell to 4.7 per cent in 1969 and again went up to 5.9 per cent in 1970, reaching 6.4 per cent in 1971.

On pages 12 and 141 of Catalogue 71-201 showing unemployment and labour figures from January 1953 to December 1971, there is clear evidence that the unemployment rate, from 1958 to 1962, under a Progressive Conservative government, reached absolute figures higher than those registered under this government from 1968 to 1971.

Mr. Speaker, I would not take the time of the House to quote all the figures available to me, but may I say only that in 1961 the labour force had 2 million fewer workers than in 1971. The unemployment figure reached 716,000 in February 1961 and 702,000 in March 1961.

Under this government, the unemployment figure never exceeded 700,000, although in Canada the labour force has increased by two million workers.

Therefore, the unemployment rate stood at 11.4 per cent in March 1961, 11.24 per cent in February 1961 and 10.77 per cent in January 1961.

An analysis of these statistical data enlightens us on how the Progressive Conservative party members felt about the problem of unemployment when they occupied the front benches. I therefore cannot bring myself to place confidence in the Progressive Conservatives when they are dealing with this problem because they did worse than the present government when they were in power.

It is true that the Progressive Conservatives have changed their leader since 1962 but I believe, that the party's past record has not been impressive. We even have some documents to the effect that the present leader (Mr. Stanfield) has never been very popular. The people of Canada cannot even grant him the benefit of the doubt, saying "Let us gives him a chance to prove himself, since he has already been tested as premier of Nova Scotian".

As a matter in fact, in issue No. 39, for March 21, 1967, of the proceedings of the Joint Senate and Commons Committee on Consumer Credit, we find a brief submitted by Mr. Duncan MacIntyre, who represented a department of St. Francis Xavier University as well as low-income families of the eastern ridings of the province. Now, the author of this brief states that only three constituencies in the province had less than 40 per cent poor families. In fact, in some constituencies, 59, 56, and even 63 per cent of families were poor.

If one uses the same criteria as were used in writing the brief, one can say the Mr. MacIntyre was perfectly right, since the families he refers to were, and I quote:

(1) families other than agricultural families, with incomes under $3,000;

(2) agricultural families with incomes under $2,500;

Using these figures, constituencies could be found in Nova Scotia where 63 per cent of families were not even getting the wretched incomes mentioned above.

Since, therefore, we cannot trust the solutions put forward by the Liberals, because they have not put an end to unemployment or prevented prices from rising, and since we cannot trust in the Progressive Conservatives, because they were no more successful in bringing prosperity and security to Canadians from 1958 to 1962, I suggest that all that remains to us is to try Social Credit, which has not yet failed us and is full of promises.

• (1650)

I imagine that the majority of hon. members are not happy about the misery and distress of almost 700,000 Canadians who have no jobs in this country. So we, of the Social Credit Party of Canada, want to ensure economic freedom and security for all Canadians. For this, we propose that the Canadian population apply a system which has never been applied anywhere, and which cannot be worse than the one proposed in turn by the Liberals and the Progressive Conservatives.

It was on June 26, 1937, during a lecture he gave in London, that the founder of Social Credit gave a detailed definition of it. Here it is:

> In the minds of many people, Social Credit is a plan for monetary reform, and that is why today when money and credit are scarce the monetary reforms it proposes are so popular. But Social Credit is not only that, Social Credit is the policy of a philosophy. This philosophy may be described as the partnership philosophy or the power of human beings living in partnership to get the wanted results in order to meet their needs.

If we make a more thorough analysis, we may ask ourselves: What is credit? This is the answer: Credit is just the belief that partnership brings along benefits. For instance, the first Canadians relied on the wealth which were within their reach and able to meet their needs. That is what is called the real credit of a country. This credit includes the country's wealth as well as all the men who want to exploit them. Therefrom one may conclude, that the real credit of a country is a social common thing. Therefore, the real credit or the social credit is a reality, a fact for our country. But, if social credit is a reality, a fact, why do members of the Social Credit party not stop complaining, asking above all for social credit, trying to change the monetary system and to have enough members elected in Parliament in order to reach their objective? The only reason is, Mr. Speaker, that the present financial system does not reflect reality and that our bank system prevents consumers from taking advantage of the result of their partnership, because the financial system keeps for itself the benefits of partnership which should normally belong to every citizen.

This is the situation, Mr. Speaker, which led the Right Hon. Mackenzie King to say once, and I quote:

> Yesterday's promises are today's taxes.

So that Canadians really benefit from the results of their partnership, we must therefore relate the financial credit to the real or social credit, that is to say relate money and credit to what Canadians produce and provide and are able to produce and provide.

[Mr. Godin.]

Values that were far sounder and far more basic than the present bank system have been put aside. Religion, Catholicism, papal authority, private property, respect for the human life of the foetus, and many other things have been put aside.

And, Mr. Speaker, what about the desperation of international bankers who are seeking a new international bank system. If the international financial system has to be reconsidered and worked out again from scratch, this is because the national financial systems also have to be reconsidered and worked out again from scratch.

This, Mr. Speaker, is the task which the Creditistes are trying to carry out, being precursors and innovators, misunderstood perhaps and rejected sometimes because they dare attack finance. Fortunately, finance is no longer a taboo subject today, the monetary system is no longer sacro-sanct, and because facts prove us right, Creditistes are going to continue even more successfully, I think, to expose the present system which has no justification in the nature of things and perpetuates a false concept of money in a human society.

[English]

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. Perhaps this is rather irregular for the Chair, but before I recognize the next speaker I would point out that there are six names left on my list. We have 50 minutes left in this debate, and if those six members were agreeable that I call each of them for 8½ minutes, that would give everybody who has offered to make a contribution an opportunity to do so. This, however, would have to be with the agreement of the six speakers on the list. Although it might be a departure from the normal practice, is it agreed?

Mr. Lefebvre: We are always ready to agree on this side, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The hon. member for Bonavista-Trinity-Conception; eight and a half minutes.

Mr. Dave Rooney (Bonavista-Trinity-Conception): Mr. Speaker, I have decided to give my first address to this honourable House an official title: "Budgets may come and budgets may go, but inequalities go on forever." That statement is not likely to startle many hon. members; indeed, it is not my intention that it should do so, nor is it my intention to sound cynical or pessimistic. On the contrary, I am very optimistic about the future of this country and about the future of this government.

I am sure that the statement contained in the title will be forever true. But it is also true that the very uncomfortable extreme of inequality has always been borne by great numbers of dependent, unorganized and often helpless recipients of meagre financial means. What has always disturbed me greatly, Mr. Speaker, is that in our own times and in our own nation this situation has been perpetuated largely by the insensitivity and inaction of those with the political power to make more equitable adjustments to the distribution of our nation's wealth. I might add that, prompted by a remark made in this House, I had considered another title: "In this House there are many mansions". While that statement is made in jest, it also bears the reality that in our plush-bottomed chairs and glamorous surroundings it is easy to become distracted from, and less sensitive to the extreme and persistent poverty that exists in the midst of affluence and great national wealth. Having accepted that inequalities will always exist, admittedly much more so today in other countries than in Canada, we must then be concerned with the degree of inequality that exists at a given time in our history and in our nation.

This, in my opinion, has been the greatest single achievement of this year's federal budget. This is not to say that our government has done anything near the ultimate, it is not to say that the measure of intention will be equalled or surpassed by the measure of success; it is to say that this Liberal government has made a vigorous and commendable attempt to counter the forces that ever threaten the common good, the common interest and the common comfort that Canadian democracy can and should provide to all who participate in that democracy.

Of course, the official opposition, playing their traditional opposition role, have to sneer and jeer and criticize. After all, their only hope of ever assuming office is to make our best programs look like their worst ones in the eyes of the general public. The hon. member for Gander-Twillingate (Mr. Lundrigan) cannot admit that Newfoundland will this year receive in excess of $24 million in additional tax equalization payments alone as a result of the new budget. What does he say to Newfoundlanders? What does he say to his own people? That the federal government has given up on its theme of eliminating regional disparities!

A few days ago, the same hon. member told this House that I had not been saying much about the fisheries and related unemployment and, as if to chide me a little, wondered aloud when I would be making my maiden speech. I can tell the hon. gentleman quite sincerely that what I have to say, either in this House or in public will, I hope, be a little more responsible and more informed than certain statements he has made concerning regional disparity and the unemployment situation.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Rooney: I have never in my life heard of a person getting so much mileage out of his biweekly interpretations of the unemployment statistics. I would remind the hon. member that to be unemployed at a given time and to be in need of employment are two very different situations, and sufficiently different to require explanation. I, too, have given some thought to the problem of unemployment, Mr. Speaker. In terms of those in need of work, with no acceptable alternative, an unemployment rate of 1 per cent is just as serious as an unemployment rate of 10 per cent. Bringing down the rate of unemployment a few percentage points does not alleviate the severity of the problem; it merely makes it less noticeable.

Mr. Speaker, time does not permit me to elaborate on the many unfair criticisms levelled at this budget. Let me say, however, that the opposition's reaction to the budget reminds me of the watchdog that guards his master's interests well until you find that he is only barking because he is afraid, afraid perhaps of being placed in the dog-house.

I should like now, in brief detail, to offer my interpretation of what the budget will mean in very real terms to the constituents of Bonavista-Trinity-Conception, to Newfoundlanders in general—not in isolation but as one small part of our great Canadian nation. Essentially, the budget is committed to increasing the real income of the burdened Canadian consumer. This means not only an increase in terms of dollars and cents but an increase relative to the cost of living and the standard of living—that their dollar will either buy more or cost less.

Those concerned with tax reform are pleased to learn that the basic exemption for all taxpayers has been increased to $1,600 from $1,500, and that the basic exemption for married couples has been increased from $2,850 to $3,000. The working people of my riding are happy to learn that, beginning next year, income tax will decrease to offset any increase in the cost of living. The increase in the basic rate of old age pension, the increase in the guaranteed income supplement and the increase in war veterans allowances has prompted many favourable comments from elderly and other people in the riding. With a little more complexity, the new budget elaborates on the federal government's efforts to reduce the cost of living by removing federal taxes from numerous necessities, for which I am sure Newfoundlanders will be appreciative.

This government, through the budget speech, has committed itself to a complete overhaul of our welfare system. I assume that the slight delay in this area can be attributed to the necessary negotiations which have to be completed with the provincial governments concerned, including Newfoundland. This House has already been told that these negotiations will also include the long awaited family income security plan. I understand that we can expect an announcement soon after the conclusion of these negotiations which I am told will take place in April. I am confident that, in harmony with the spirit of the budget's specific commitments in areas of total federal government responsibility, the new welfare program will also be geared to both the rising cost of living and a decent standard of living.

With respect to the family income security plan which was vetoed by the hon. member for Trinity (Mr. Hellyer), the delay in the implementation of this program has meant considerable hardship to the parents of large families in my riding.

Mr. Jamieson: The hon. member is right.

Mr. Rooney: Since Newfoundland is a province of large families and relatively low incomes, this new legislation would have meant that the average child in Newfoundland would have been eligible for payments twice as large as those paid under the present family allowance plan. This had meant a loss of nearly $20 million per year to Newfoundland, and this loss is being borne by those who need it most. What bothers me most about the budget is the danger of our provincial government lapping up some of the benefits received from the federal government. In Newfoundland we have seen how, in mere anticipation of the—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. I regret to interrupt the hon. member, particularly during his maiden speech. I thank him for his co-operation in accepting the suggestion made by the Chair a few minutes ago.

Mr. Peter C. Bawden (Calgary South): Mr. Speaker, it is a great pleasure for me to rise on this occasion in the House of Commons. In prefacing my remarks, I would like to say a few words about my predecessors. Hon. Pat Mahoney represented Calgary South in the twenty-eighth parliament. Though I rarely agreed with the policies of the party Mr. Mahoney represented, I respected him as a Member of parliament and as a friend, one who has followed the high standards of members who have in the past represented this riding. The House will remember the contributions of Carl Nickle, Arthur R. Smith, Senator Harry Hays and Ray Ballard as well respected members who have represented Calgary South. Previous to the rapid growth of Calgary in the 1950s, my riding formed the southern part of Calgary West, a riding distinguished by the representation of Right Hon. R. B. Bennett, Judge Manley Edwards and Arthur L. Smith. As I recall their contributions, I am truly humbled by the honour bestowed on me by my constituents in Calgary South.

Since coming to Ottawa, I have been continually grateful for the hospitality and assistance accorded to me as a new member. I congratulate Mr. Speaker on re-election to his high office. I learned to appreciate his skill and tact very early in my parliamentary life. I extend congratulations to Mr. Deputy Speaker and my thanks to the Clerk of the House for his generous assistance and the guidance extended to me and other new members.

In view of the time restriction imposed on speeches, I am particularly appreciative today of the works of Pauline Johnson who, in a few short lines, captured the pride and enthusiasm of my constituency in this excerpt "Calgary of the Plains":

> Not of the seething cities, with their swarming human hives,
> Their fetid airs, their reeking streets, their dwarfed and poisoned lives,
> Not of the buried yesterdays, but of the days to be,
> The glory and the gateway to the golden west is she.

This is Calgary, a city of the future with a rich and exciting heritage, centered in Canada's most prosperous province. Calgary's geographic location is ideal. The clean, crisp air of the foothills and nearby Rocky Mountains and the warm, sunny climate invite visitors from around the world. I invite members from all sides of this House to visit Calgary and hope that I may have the pleasure of being host to many of you in the months and years ahead.

May I now comment on the budget which the Minister of Finance (Mr. Turner) presented to this House on Tuesday last. The people of Canada, more, I believe, than at any other time in the history of this country, were hoping and even expecting that this tired and disabled government would at long last come down to earth and give to this country leadership to lift Canada from its tragic level of underachievement of the last five years. Mr. Speaker, if I were to describe last Tuesday's budget in a word, I would say it is a humbug budget. I say this not because of any special treatment accorded confectionary but, in the words of the Oxford dictionary, a budget of sham and deception; "a type of hard-boiled sweet, usually flavoured with peppermint."

It is presented as a budget to cure the country's economic ills, but it has no chance whatsoever of meeting such an objective. Its benefits to individual Canadians are small, and the minister must know that it will do little to bring down unemployment or to cure inflation. To be fair to the Minister of Finance, I do not think he is the kind of man who would purposely present a humbug budget to this House. I just do not think that he and his advisers have the knowledge, experience, staff or courage to produce what is needed.

It has become painfully obvious to this House that this government has abdicated its responsibility to govern Canada on the basis of any principles or policies of its own. It has no policy, as was evident to the Canadian people during the election last fall, and it has no principles. Today it is governing as a coalition between the Liberal and New Democratic parties. Canada today has a coalition government, and it is now clear that much needed legislation will be sacrificed in the interests of narrow political gain. For that reason, this government is not master of the destiny of Canada. In fact, it never has been.

The cost to Canada, in just one case, is illustrated in the government's handling of the bill to amend the Unemployment Insurance Act. The government refuses to debate the bill. The minister has said that passage of the bill would save Canadians $1 million per year, or over $275,000 per day. Why has this bill been stalled? The reason, I suggest, is that the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) and the leader of the NDP are playing "house" while the taxpayers of this country are paying the price of this common law arrangement. In short, Mr. Speaker, this budget confirms the belief of many in this country that the government continues to be incapable of managing the economy. Notwithstanding its acceptance of some important Conservative principles, it now refuses to consider a temporary freeze on prices and incomes. I am sure that by August they will again be adopting our policy and bringing it before parliament, but it will be six months late.

The approach of this government is that of trial and error. Every time there is a trial, there is another error. The hon. member for Verdun (Mr. Mackasey) when speaking in this debate defended this approach by saying, "If necessary, the minister can bring in two or three budgets." Canada cannot afford such a "try and try again" type of government. I am sure the members of the NDP also recognize this, Mr. Speaker, and if they support the government in today's vote they will know that they are not, in a moral sense of right or wrong, acting in the best interest of the people of Canada.

A budget is expected to be a future looking document which, on the basis of experience and sound judgment, sets the ground rules under which the country can achieve its economic and social goals in the year and years ahead. The minister said last Tuesday that this year we are expecting the expansion to be driven mainly by business capital investment, inventory build-up and exports. Can we really expect the necessary expansion in capital investment? The Economic Council of Canada reported in the fall of 1971 that capital investment intentions in Canada fell far short of levels necessary to provide sufficient jobs for the growing labour force. Such investment continues to fall short.

That, Mr. Speaker, brings me to the matter of confidence. Business will only respond to the required degree when a climate for confident economic growth has been restored in this country. The creation of jobs is directly related to the investment of capital. For many years a pall of uncertainty has hung over the business community of this country. It is still with us in the areas of taxation, competition and labour legislation and is increased by many unnatural interventions into the marketplace by government. These uncertainties weigh much heavier on small business as few have legal or accounting experts on their staff, nor can they afford to employ such people. What has this budget offered small business? It has offered a correction of mistakes handed to them in the last budget.

• (1710)

Has not the time arrived in Canada to consider a royal commission to investigate the Department of National Revenue and determine whether the method that the department is using to deal with smaller businesses is as it ought to be? The adverse effects of harassment by this department on the smaller company are much more significant than on the big company. Small business cannot afford to proceed and fight the claims in court. Former employees of the department freely admit that unreasonable tax assessments are often imposed on the little man because they know he cannot fight back.

The result of this, Mr. Speaker, is that the morale of businessmen in Canada is low. With the credibility of this government completely shot with the business community, I can see no less than a new, fresh Progressive Conservative government to get this country going and to recognize that business strength and morale is a vital and integral part of the community, not distinct from it; that national economic defence requires building of business strength and morale so it may meet the competitive assaults from government-supported foreign business.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Bawden: A Conservative government would have recognized the important role of small business in Canada as an employer and as a potent force in stimulating the economy by offering positive measures to encourage Canadians to invest in such enterprises.

A factor overlooked by ministers in this government and large numbers of their boffin-ridden staffs is that profit is still a good word in Canada and it is a necessary word if a free enterprise system is to work. Profits are simply a payment for the use of capital, including an allowance for the element of risk. The government is a full partner of business, sharing through taxes the rewards of success, but business failures are for the account of the investor. It is only from a healthy growth in tax revenues that we can advance—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. I thank the hon. member for his co-operation.

The Budget—Mr. Walter Smith

Mr. Walter Smith (Saint-Jean): Mr. Speaker, I am indeed delighted to take part this afternoon in the debate on the budget, already known across Canada as a budget for the Canadian family. Members across the floor do not appear to approve of this budget. I did not expect they would. This is no surprise. It is clear they are determined to criticize everything this government proposes.

I am pleased to learn that the senior citizens of this country are going to receive an increase in their old age pension. The basic pension will be increased by 15 per cent to $100 a month effective April 1, 1973. The maximum payment with income supplement will be increased from $150 to $170 for individuals and from $285 to $325 for married couples, the highest guaranteed income pension in the world.

[Translation]

Veterans' allowances will now be $151 for single persons and $257 for married veterans. Guaranteed income for veterans over 65 has been increased to $206 and for those over 65 who are married, to $357.

[English]

Income tax is being cut 5 per cent, with a maximum reduction of $500 and a minimum reduction of $100. The individual tax exemption is being raised from $1,500 to $1,600 and, for married couples from $2,850 to $3,000. I am also pleased to learn that starting in 1974 personal income tax exemptions and rates will be adjusted to reflect the changes in the cost of living. With these tax changes, about 750,000 Canadian taxpayers will be dropped from the federal tax rolls. All this is aimed at increasing real income and improving the standard of living for Canadians from one end of this country to the other.

The 12 per cent federal sales tax on all children's clothing as well as shoes and other footwear is being abolished. This is very important. The federal sales tax on confectioneries, chocolate bars, soft drinks, fruit drinks and similar food products is being abolished. This is well accepted across Canada. The 10 per cent luxury tax on toiletries and cosmetics is being abolished. The 17 per cent luxury tax on clocks and watches, except when the manufacturer's price exceeds $50, is being removed. With regard to small business, corporations receiving the small business deduction are allowed to reinvest earnings without restriction. The government will announce additional specific proposals to assist small businesses. Family farms are now permitted to pass from generation to generation free of capital gains tax.

Many times I have talked to farmers in my region about feed grains. There is an injustice with regard to farmers in Quebec and the Maritimes where the price of feed grains is much higher than in any other part of Canada. The Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Whelan) and the minister responsible for the Wheat Board have promised that a solution will be found and announced in the near future. I will not be satisfied until a fair solution is found.

The federal government represents every Canadian in every province and territory. It is responsible to all Canadians, not simply to those in the wealthy regions or those in regions where additional political popularity would be helpful in elections. That is why we shall continue the system of equalization payments, for it is one of the basic pillars of our federal system. If it is our belief that the unity of Canada is essential, as it is mine, then no party leader can claim the luxury of opting out when situations demand standing up and speaking out for principle.

There are many issues which will involve us in the course of this session, but I repeat that none is so important as my belief that this Canada is a favoured place and that it is so because persons in every part of the country are able to seek fulfilment through the help and understanding of their fellow Canadians.

The opposition are constantly criticizing the high percentage of unemployed. However, in the five-year period 1965-70 more than one million jobs were created. This figure exceeds the total number of new jobs created in Belgium, Germany, Italy, France, the Netherlands, Sweden and the United Kingdom combined. The total population of these seven countries, 12 times as great as Canada's, created fewer jobs than did Canada in the same period. In Canada this momentum is continuing. In 1971 more than 200,000 new jobs were created. It was this government that created the Department of Regional Economic Expansion and has spent millions in the past three years creating new jobs in regions of Canada in greatest need.

[Translation]

In the riding of Saint-Jean, several industries have benefited by federal grants for building new plants and for expanding and modernizing others.

The constituency was proclaimed a designated zone in 1970. Several industries are therefore eligible for a maximum grant of 10 per cent of cost, up to $2,000 for each new job created.

• (1720)

[English]

Many jobs have been created in my riding, thanks to the Local Initiatives Program which has been well received by many. Unfortunately, some of the projects submitted were not accepted. Over a million dollars have been allotted to date under this program, and my thanks go to the officials of the manpower department who approved constructive projects. The local manpower office in Saint-Jean, and others have been very helpful in preparing and suggesting projects to be created—projects to correspond with the local needs in each section of city or country. Many new projects are being submitted at the present time under another program called Opportunities for Youth. This had much success last year, its first year of experience. Students welcome such initiatives and it is hoped that many worth-while projects will be accepted for this coming summer, permitting students to earn enough money to continue their studies next fall.

Agriculture is very important in the country, and the dairy industry is perhaps the industry which occupies most of our farm people. Only two years ago this industry was not too healthy, but thanks to the dairy commission and the federal-provincial marketing plan which was brought about and accepted by the dairy producers, today there is nothing but praise for the government's guidance in the production and marketing of dairy products. The price of butter, milk, cheese and milk powder has increased in the past years. My congratulations extend to the industry for their co-operation and good understanding.

Market gardeners occupy an important sector of the country, especially in the rich, black soil where several thousand acres are sown to potatoes, carrots, turnips, onions and many other small vegetables every year. Nevertheless, more protection should be given to producers of green vegetables in full season by better control of imports from the United States. The wet season this year really set the farmers back, and although they are receiving a $400 grant, it is in many cases too little. I have just noticed that I am running out of time, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I thank the hon. member for his co-operation.

Mr. Paul Dick (Lanark-Renfrew-Carleton): Mr. Speaker, it is indeed an honour for me to rise today to make my first speech in the House of Commons. I would like to extend to you, Mr. Speaker, and to Mr. Deputy Speaker the best wishes of the people of Lanark-Renfrew-Carleton, and to add to them my congratulations on your election and appointment to these high offices.

I shall not dwell at length on any topic other than the budget, as time is short. First, I would like to say that I wonder whether this is a good budget. I would not like to say that the whole budget is bad, for indeed the Minister of Finance (Mr. Turner) and the Liberal-NDP coalition have taken four of the major points in this budget directly from the Progressive Conservative party platform made public in the autumn of 1972. This is a compliment, of course, to the Progressive Conservative party and it adds a great deal of credibility to our party as being the party of the future, the party which does the thinking.

The fact that the Liberal party did not have any policy shows they are bankrupt of ideas and unable to conceive of intelligent, economic planning. One of the four major planks which were taken had to do with a decrease in personal income tax. During the last election the Progressive Conservatives called for a decrease of at least 7 per cent. The Minister of Finance intimated during that campaign that this was not being responsible. However, on budget night we saw a reduction of 5 per cent.

During the election campaign, part of the Conservative party platform for 1972 was a call for an increase in old age pensions. At that time this was pooh-poohed as not being responsible. The Liberals said they had given the old people an increase to cover the cost of living in the spring of 1972. On budget night the old age pension went up by the sum of $13, to $100 a month.

The Progressive Conservative party during the election campaign called for the exemption of the family farm from capital gains tax when it was passing from father to son. This was casually brushed aside by the governing party as a phony issue. On budget night, the minister announced that the exemption would stand and that no longer would the family farm be taxed as a capital gain when it passed from father to son.

The Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Stanfield) in May, 1972, put forward the constant-dollar theory in relation to taxation. This policy became a major plank in the platform of our party and as early as June 6, 1972, the Minister of Finance, speaking in Truro, Nova Scotia, ridiculed the idea and charged the Leader of the Opposition with being irresponsible. On budget night, this very proposal was adopted almost without change.

It can therefore be readily seen that many of the proposals contained in this budget come originally from the Conservative party. However, it is not a good budget because it does not go far enough. By adopting only half the measures put forward by the Progressive Conservative party it has not resulted in a good budget. All the measures we proposed should have been accepted, not just half measures. If someone likes a package of free paper and pretty ribbon, they will like this budget, Mr. Speaker. But if a person likes to wait until they open the package to see the prize inside, then I think he will find the budget disappointing.

The 5 per cent income tax allowance turns out to be only 2 per cent over last year's rate. In terms of dollars in one's pocket it might not be too impressive. A married breadwinner supporting two children under the age of sixteen years and earning around $7,000 a year will have in his pocket about $1.97 more. It certainly won't burn a hole in his pocket. I was very surprised that the old age pension was not raised to at least $115 a month. I would hope that this goal will be attained in the very near future. My personal feeling is that our senior citizens deserve this consideration.

In the long run I think this budget will fail. It will not reduce unemployment below the present rate of 6 to 7 per cent. I think inflation will continue. The Minister of Finance should have continued to follow the Tory policies. He should not have drawn back. He should have gone much further. He was too timid. He should have pulled the throttle wide open and made personal income tax cuts of the order of 7 to 10 per cent. The old age pension should have been raised to at least $115, and he should have introduced across the board tax cuts for Canadian-owned corporations to encourage expansion and Canadian ownership.

Perhaps even more important, he should have introduced a price-wage-profit-dividend freeze to cool our inflationary psychology for a 90-day period during which we could have held discussions with business, labour and other sectors of the economy with a view to agreement upon a more permanent scheme of controls so that inflation would not run rampant.

In the budget of February 19 the minister told us the government would lead the way in showing restraint in terms of expenditure. In fact, expenditures increased. I believe the government should set an example and cut down on money being spent on unnecessary programs. I believe the government should have the courage to introduce Bill C-125 and have it debated. I suggest the introduction of a small business tax incentive to encourage small business, which is the lifeblood of our society. Incidentally, this would help create more jobs.

I believe the 11 per cent sales tax on building materials should be removed so as to stimulate the construction industry and provide more employment. I believe sales taxes should be removed from all clothing, thus placing more purchasing power in the hands of the individual. I believe, further, that we should encourage Canadian equity ownership by means of tax incentives.

Unfortunately, the budget did not include provisions for encouraging the export industry. This industry definitely should be encouraged so more jobs will be created and Canadians will have a better standard of living. Lastly, I believe there should have been included a definite "buy Canadian" program with the Canadian government encouraging Canadians to buy the products of Canadian industries rather than continuously purchasing abroad.

I believe my time has expired, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I thank the hon. member for his co-operation.

[Translation]

Mrs. Albanie Morin (Louis-Hébert): Mr. Speaker, I should like to seize this opportunity to bring up a matter which, in my opinion, is very important for the riding of Louis-Hébert and for the whole metropolitan region of Greater Quebec.

[English]

Several projects to provide infrastructure, currently under way, in the vicinity of Quebec City will enable that area after 300 years of existence to catch up gradually with the rest of Canada, or at least to reduce the gap separating the standard of living of Quebeckers from that of Canadians in other provinces.

[Translation]

Now, Mr. Speaker, to serve this large metropolitan area which is in the process of becoming one of the great Canadian capitals, we, in Quebec, need an airport capable of meeting the needs that will spring from the economic vitality that is just around the corner for Quebec.

[English]

Is Quebec asking to be treated differently from other areas of the country?

[Translation]

Is the extension of the runways important to the development of the Quebec area? Let us look at the situation, Mr. Speaker.

Of the ten provincial capitals in Canada, Quebec is the one that has the shortest landing strips. Of the metropolitan areas with more than 400,000 people, Quebec is the one with the shortest landing strips. Finally, of the ten largest metropolitan areas in Canada, Quebec is the only one that is not served by an international airport.

[English]

Mr. Speaker, we were pleased to learn that the main runway at Windsor airport, which was 7,000 feet long, would be increased to over 8,500 feet. We were also pleased to learn that the main runway at the airport at London, Ontario, would also be lengthened. Yet in terms of passenger arrivals and landings, these airports are in eighteenth and nineteenth places, whereas the Quebec city airport is in tenth place.

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker, those few facts answer well the question of knowing whether or not Quebec City is asking for a favour by requesting extended runways. In the past, it was always argued that, in order to develop, Quebec could eventually bank on the use of medium-range planes such as DC-9s.

[English]

However, just recently a group of businessmen who wanted to charter a DC-9 found that, fully loaded, the plane would have to stop at Montreal airport for an hour to refuel since the length of the runway at the Quebec City airport would not allow it to take off with full tanks.

Some hon. Members: Shame!

Mr. McGrath: We want Jamieson.

[Translation]

Mrs. Morin: Mr. Speaker, now that I have clearly established that we do not request any preferential treatment but the equivalent of that asked by the other regions, let me remind hon. members that this equivalent is important for the long-term economic growth of the region.

The most promising aspect in the field of economic growth, at least as regards job creation, seems to be the expansion of tourist industry.

The Quebec region is now increasing considerably the number of hotel rooms, namely by over 2,000 units. Most of them will be built by major international hotel enterprises. Those enterprises believe it possible to extend the tourist market of the region.

[English]

On the municipal level, the city, to aid in stimulating expansion, has agreed to invest $4 million to build a conference centre. This clearly demonstrates the willingness of Quebec taxpayers to promote their own expansion. On the federal and provincial level, as you know, important work is being done to increase tourist attractions in Quebec City. I will just mention the restoration of old Quebec and the development of Mont Ste-Anne.

[Translation]

Everyone will agree that surely it is our interest, for a country such as Canada, to facilitate the restoration of this old capital which saw the advent of the country and of America and which, given the number and the quality of its monuments which resisted the elements until now, is undoubtedly the major historical asset of North America.

Finally, tourism promotion budgets have increased fivefold and now amount to half a million dollars and this is indicative of the private and public sectors willingness to exploit fully the tourism market potential. A whole set of new marketing structures, and mainly the systematic chartering of planes during tourist seasons, are now under preparation. But our contacts with external market representatives demonstrate that we must improve our air services.

[English]

The question of air services, including the lengthening of runways, is important not only to tourist development but to industrial growth. Air freight is playing an increasingly important role in industrial development. In addition to air cargo potential, especially in the case of large corporations which must maintain regular contacts between various factories and the head office, passenger transportation is a factor that cannot be overlooked.

[Translation]

Now it is certain that any possibility of establishing new air routes, both for freight and passengers, is related to the problem of extending runways, particularly when one realizes that even medium range aircraft cannot leave the Quebec airport with a full load of fuel, passengers and luggage.

[English]

Furthermore, Mr. Speaker, the Quebec City airport, once its runways have been lengthened, could be used as an accessory emergency airport, especially when bad weather prevails at Dorval and Ste-Scholastique. At the moment it is the Bagotville military airport which, although unable to provide the other complementary services, is being used for this purpose.

• (1740)

[Translation]

Moreover, Europe bound charter flights for Quebec groups could take off from Quebec City rather than from Montreal, which would allow the citizens of eastern Quebec to save both on costs and disadvantages.

Mr. Speaker, in the light of those facts, we ask that runways be extended to a minimum of 9,000 feet, in order to meet fully the requirements of medium an long range aircraft.

[English]

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. I thank the hon. member for her co-operation.

Mr. Haliburton: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a question of privilege.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Haliburton: I should just like to say that I agree with much of what the last speaker said, but the founding of Canada took place in my constituency, at Port Royal, and not in Quebec.

Mr. Keith Taylor (Churchill): Mr. Speaker, it is a privilege to have the opportunity of saying a few words during this budget debate, although I realize it is just about concluded. I should like to congratulate you, Sir, and Mr. Speaker upon appointment to the very high offices which you hold. I know from the short time I have been here that you are a credit to those offices and to this House.

It is an honour for me to represent the people of Churchill. They are accustomed to good representation of the kind provided for the past five years by Mr. Bud Simpson. I certainly hope I will be able to provide the citizens of the Churchill constituency with the same type of representation.

I have one of the largest, if not the largest, constituencies in Canada. The difficulty of representing a constituency of that size is very formidable. Mr. Speaker, as I am sure you will agree, it is a privilege to be able to represent people whose livelihood ranges from living directly off the land to being involved in the most advanced space age technology.

The people of Churchill, of course, have the same problems as those experienced by other Canadians, namely, unemployment and inflation. This is especially so in the northern area of the province of Manitoba where transportation costs add considerably to the cost of construction projects and even the food all of us buy every day. The budget presented in this House will do very little for the citizens of the north. Our party has offered many suggestions during the course of this debate which would considerably improve the lot of all Canadians. I would have hoped that all parties in this House would have adopted them. However, I am amazed at the attitude of the Leader of the New Democratic Party (Mr. Lewis). This is the man who during the throne speech debate called for more action in the field of housing. He now says that the Conservative proposal to remove the sales tax on building materials would be the biggest bonanza in Canada for gouging developers.

Now, of course, we are used to extreme language from the hon. member for York South, so his latest inflammatory remarks do not shock us. But it is interesting to note the length to which he will go in order not to support a Conservative proposal no matter how meritorious. What he would do, he says, to deny this bonanza to gouging developers would be to rebate to the person who buys a house the tax on building materials that went into the construction of the house. I noticed that while he was saying it even some children in the parliamentary gallery were laughing. This would not only be a bureaucratic nightmare, as the hon. member for Don Valley (Mr. Gillies) said, but it would be so difficult to administer that much of the revenue saved would be spent on administrative costs. It would be a totally useless exercise.

If conditions were such—and theoretical and empirical evidence suggest that they are not—that the developer would not pass on the tax reduction to the home buyer, then the NDP proposal would not make one iota of difference. There is nothing in that proposal to prevent a developer from raising the price of the home enough to offset any rebate that the home buyer would receive. The trouble with the position of the hon. member for York South is that elimination of the building materials' sales tax would reduce the cost of housing, increase construction and create jobs; so he cannot admit to being against it. At the same time, however, it is a Conservative proposal, so he cannot support it. Thus he finds himself in a quandary, and in his attempts to wiggle out of it he becomes ludicrous.

It is the same thing with sales taxes. Studies show that lower income groups pay a greater proportion of their income on sales taxes than higher income groups. But the hon. member for York South cannot support our proposal to eliminate sales taxes from all clothing because it would also eliminate taxes on all clothing of higher income groups. It is difficult to know whether to feel sorry for the members of the NDP or to be angry with them. Their fear to face the electorate is understandable. It is irritating, however, to sit in this House and note their mock pleasure at the latest budget.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. I regret to interrupt the hon. member. I thank him and the five other hon. members who have participated in the debate in the last 55 minutes.

It being 5.45 o'clock p.m., it is my duty, pursuant to section 7 of Standing Order 60, to interrupt these proceedings and put forthwith the question necessary to dispose of the motion now before the House. The question is on the main motion. Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the said motion? All those in favour of the said motion will please say yea.

Some hon. Members: Yea.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: All those opposed will please say nay.

Some hon. Members: Nay.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: In my opinion the yeas have it.

And more than five members having risen:

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Call in the members.

The House divided on the motion (Mr. Turner, Ottawa-Carleton) which was agreed to on the following division:

Mr. Speaker: I declare the motion carried. This House stands adjourned until two o'clock tomorrow afternoon.

At 6.13 p.m. the House adjourned, without question put, pursuant to Standing Order.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Thursday, March 1, 1973

The House met at 2 p.m.

PRIVILEGE

MR. CAFIK—FAILURE OF DIVISION BELL TO RING IN PARTICULAR AREA OF WEST BLOCK

Mr. Norman A. Cafik (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a question of privilege of which I gave notice this morning under Standing Order 17(2). My question of privilege relates to the ringing of the division bells within the buildings of the House of Commons. Last night at 5.45 p.m. there was a pre-scheduled vote in the House. About half an hour prior to that I returned from an organizational meeting of the committee on health and welfare to my office to make some urgent constituency calls, awaiting the ringing of the division bells. However, the bell did not ring in that particular area. I draw to your attention the fact that my office is not located in the ordinary halls of the House of Commons but rather in Room 268 of the west block on a smaller hallway running from one side of the building to the other.

I have also noted that this problem has occurred in the past. I refer the House to Hansard of Friday, June 18, 1971, page 6857, when my predecessor, who occupied the same office, made the same complaint on that date in respect of a vote on the previous night.

In view of the fact that we are in a minority government situation and that each vote in the House is extremely important, I hope this matter will be looked into and corrected.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

An hon. Member: You were asleep.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. There can be no debate on the question of privilege raised by the hon. member. I have taken note of his complaint. Of course we accept his word that the bells did not ring. The matter will be brought to the attention of the Sergeant at Arms and of the staff of the House to ensure that there is no further difficulty with that or other bells.

Mr. MacInnis (Cape Breton-East Richmond): Mr. Speaker, on the question of privilege—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member would have to rise on a different question of privilege. When there has been a ruling on behalf of the House by the Speaker that there is no question of privilege, there can be no debate.

Mr. MacInnis (Cape Breton-East Richmond): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a question of privilege with reference to the ringing of the bells yesterday. I would call Your Honour's attention to the fact that I do not question what the hon. member has raised by way of a question of privilege, but the bells did ring beyond six o'clock. I also draw the attention of the hon. member to the fact that at two minutes after 6 p.m. the Prime Minister walked into the House for that vote and we proceeded from there.

Mr. Cafik: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I would hope we would not get involved in a debate on whether the bells did or did not ring. I might indicate for the benefit of hon. members that I have notices of four questions of privilege and numerous other procedural matters, so if we want to get to the business of the House eventually we should try to avoid debate on each one of these questions of privilege.

Mr. Cafik: Mr. Speaker, I rise to ask whether the hon. member is imputing improper motives to me in his statement and, if so, that he withdraw the imputation. I do not question whether the bells rang elsewhere in the buildings. I simply raise the point that they did not ring in the corridor off which my office is located, and I resent any suggestion by any hon. member to the contrary.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. MacInnis (Cape Breton-East Richmond): Mr. Speaker, if the hon. member checks the record he will find that I did not question the statement he made.

Mr. Cafik: What were you doing?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

An hon. Member: Where were you when the bells were ringing?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

[Translation]

Mr. Prud'homme: Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Speaker: Is the hon. member rising on a question of privilege?

Mr. Prud'homme: Yes, Mr. Speaker. I should not wish to—

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member will have to wait, because I have received notice of questions of privilege that should have immediate consideration.

MR. COSSITT—WORDS USED BY SPECIAL ASSISTANT TO MINISTER OF TRANSPORT IN REFERRING TO MEMBER

Mr. Tom Cossitt (Leeds): Mr.Speaker, I rise on a question of privilege of which I have given prior notice to Your Honour. In this regard I would like to refer to page 5 of the Ottawa Journal of this date, Thursday, March 1, 1973. There appears on this page an article concerning an address made last night in Smiths Falls, Ontario, to the annual public meeting of the local Liberal association in that town by the special assistant to the Minister of Transport (Mr. Marchand), Reverend Gervais Black. The headline of the article and the article itself quote the special assistant to the Minister of Transport as referring to me as a "purveyor of hatred."

He—

Referring to me.

—is developing a reputation now . . . throughout the country as . . . the number one purveyor of hatred—

Some hon. Members: Shame!

Mr. Cossitt: I take strong exception to such a statement which I believe goes beyond the bounds of all normal political criticism. I came to this House to represent the people of the good constituency of Leeds to the best of my ability and to do my best on behalf of my country as well.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Cossitt: I am not a purveyor of hatred and I consider that such a statement is slanderous and reprehensible.

An hon. Member: Sue him.

Mr. Cossitt: I ask that this matter be referred to the Standing Committee on Privileges and Elections for a full investigation of all the circumstances surrounding it. I trust that the Minister of Transport will now rise in the House and immediately disown any connection with such statements alleged to have been made by a member of his staff.

In conclusion, Mr. Speaker, may I say that I fully realize that what I said about the Liberal party in the House on Monday last may have made them mad, but surely this goes beyond the bounds of normal political retaliation. This is a matter of privilege.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member gave somewhat late notice of his intention to raise this matter. He has referred to an article in a newspaper, which the Chair would like to read in due course. I think I should indicate to the hon. member that I have always had some doubts, based upon considerable precedents and jurisprudence, that statements made outside the House can be the basis of a question of privilege and of referral to the Standing Committee on Privileges and Elections, although I think there are aspects of this case which are certainly worth looking into a little more closely. This the Chair will do on behalf of the House and of the hon. member.

[Mr. Speaker.]

Mr. Nielsen: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker, the minister was about to rise, and in order to give him the opportunity to create a wholesome atmosphere in the House I think he should be permitted to reply.

MR. BROADBENT—CANADA-UNITED STATES AUTO PACT SAFEGUARDS—STATEMENT BY MINISTER OF INDUSTRY, TRADE AND COMMERCE

Mr. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa-Whitby): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a question of privilege based on a statement made in the House yesterday by the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce (Mr. Gillespie), at which time he misinformed the House concerning certain provisions in the Canada-United States automotive agreement. The minister is reported at page 1751 of yesterday's Hansard as referring to "the so-called safeguards" as being "transitional measures introduced at the start of the auto pact . . ."

The minister knows that in the Canada-U.S. automotive agreement of 1965 there were certain key provisions known as safeguards which, among other things, made it mandatory for automotive companies in Canada, in order to be eligible for certain tax remissions to do a certain percentage of production in Canada. These safeguards, Mr. Speaker, are not anywhere in the pact referred to as being transitional in nature. Indeed, they are embedded deeply in the core of the pact itself. Therefore, Sir, if you agree that this is a legitimate question of privilege and that the minister has misinformed the House I will move that this matter be referred immediately to the Standing Committee on Industry, Trade and Commerce.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Oshawa-Whitby has filed with the Chair notice of his intention to bring this matter to the attention of the House under terms of Standing Order 17.

The hon. member claims that a statement made to the House yesterday by the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce in reply to a question is incorrect and that it is his right to have the matter referred to the Standing Committee on Privileges and Elections or some other committee of the House as a breach of parliamentary privilege. I refer the hon. member to citation 113 of Beauchesne, Fourth Edition, which reads as follows:

Members often raise so-called "questions of privilege" on matters which should be dealt with as personal explanations or corrections, either in the debates or the proceedings of the House. A question of privilege ought rarely to come up in parliament.

And later in the same citation:

. . . a dispute arising between two members, as to allegations of facts, does not fulfil the conditions of parliamentary privilege.

The hon. member suggests or claims that the minister has misinformed the House. This in itself, even were it so and even if the information given by the minister were not correct, could not be the subject of a question of privilege for consideration by a committee.

MR. NYSTROM—ANNOUNCEMENT BY DEFEATED LIBERAL CANDIDATE OF ACCEPTANCE OF LOCAL INITIATIVES PROJECTS

Mr. Lorne Nystrom (Yorkton-Melville): Mr. Speaker, I have given notice under provisions of Standing Order 17(2) to pursue a matter of privilege that I feel infringes upon my rights as a Member of Parliament as well as those of all members of the House.

It was brought to my attention this morning that the former candidate for the Liberal party in the October 30 election in the constituency of Yorkton-Melville has notified some successful applicants for local initiatives projects that their applications have been approved before they were officially notified by officials of the local initiatives program.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

An hon. Member: The same old gang over there.

Mr. Hees: Pork barrel politics!

Mr. Nystrom: I have also been informed, Mr. Speaker, that this practice has been carried on in some other constituencies which I do not think I should name at this time.

I genuinely feel that this sort of activity infringes upon the rights of all members of the House regardless of political party. Programs such as the local initiatives program are designed with the taxpayers' money to provide jobs and ought not to become a private political vehicle for defeated Liberal candidates no matter how desperate they may feel.

If Your Honour finds that I have a legitimate question of privilege I would move that the subject matter be referred to the Standing Committee on Privileges and Elections.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Yorkton-Melville has also forwarded the notice required by Standing Order 17. This has given the Chair an opportunity to ponder this situation and to be prepared to give an opinion to the House which I hope will be acceptable.

The hon. member suggests in his notice, as well as the remarks he has just placed on record, that certain announcements of certain government projects are a breach of parliamentary privilege. The definition of parliamentary privilege found in Erskine May's Parliamentary Practice has often been quoted in the House. To paraphrase the citation, the particular privileges of the Commons are the sum of the fundamental rights of the House and of its individual members as against the prerogatives of the Crown and the authority of the courts. In other words, parliamentary privilege is what places members of the House in a special category and gives them special rights so as to exercise freely their responsibilities in the Commons.

I doubt that the special status granted by parliamentary privilege can be extended to cover the situation of which the hon. member complains. Members know the distinction between privilege and grievance. An hon. member may have a very legitimate complaint or grievance about certain actions of the government, of members of the public service, of the press or of individual citizens. This cannot always be deemed to constitute a breach of parliamentary privilege. In this instance I would find that while the hon. member may have a grievance I cannot conclude that there is a legitimate prima facie case of privilege. In the circumstances, I would not think that the hon. member would expect the Chair to put the motion and have a debate on whether this matter should be referred to the Standing Committee on Privileges and Elections.

KINGSTON—TABLING OF REPORT ON DISTURBANCES IN APRIL, 1971

Hon. MEASURES TO RESOLVE FEED GRAIN PROBLEM—REQUEST FOR UNANIMOUS CONSENT TO MOVE MOTION

Mr. Adrien Lambert (Bellechasse): Mr. Speaker, I rise under the terms of Standing Order 43 to propose a motion on a matter that deserves immediate attention.

In view of the growing concern of agricultural producers in eastern Canada about the government's slowness in introducing legislation leading to a fair solution of the feed grain question, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Richmond (Mr. Beaudoin):

That the government take immediate steps to insure that producers in eastern Canada may at all times buy feed grain at the same prices as western producers, and that the Canadian Wheat Board be placed under the Minister of Agriculture's jurisdiction.

Mr. Speaker: The House has heard the motion proposed by the hon. member for Bellechasse. This motion is put forward under the terms of Standing Order 43 and requires the unanimous consent of the House. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. Speaker: The motion cannot be put, since there is not unanimous consent.

Unemployment Insurance Act, 1971

CONSUMER AFFAIRS

SUGGESTION THAT COMPENSATED DISCOUNT BE ALLOWED ON FOOD PURCHASES—REQUEST FOR UNANIMOUS CONSENT TO MOVE MOTION

Mr. Gérard Laprise (Abitibi): Mr. Speaker, under Standing Order 43, I would like to ask the unanimous consent of the House to propose a motion concerning an extremely urgent subject which involves all Canadians.

The catastrophic increase in food products prices in the last ten years will soon result in a situation where only the rich and the well-to-do will be able to afford quality food products. I propose, seconded by the hon. member for Compton (Mr. Latulippe):

That this House do study the possibility of creating a compensated discount on essential consumer products so that the level of food products be brought down according to the financial means of all Canadians.

Mr. Speaker: Hon. members have heard the motion presented by the hon. member for Abitibi under Standing Order 43 which requires the unanimous consent of the House. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. Speaker: There being no unanimous consent, the motion cannot be put.

UNEMPLOYMENT INSURANCE ACT, 1971

PROVISION FOR ASSISTANCE BY LABOUR ORGANIZATIONS TO UNORGANIZED WORKERS WISHING TO APPEAL BOARDS OF REFEREES' DECISIONS

Mr. John Rodriguez (Nickel Belt) moved for leave to introduce Bill C-154, to amend the Unemployment Insurance Act, 1971.

Some hon. Members: Explain.

Mr. Rodriguez: Mr. Speaker, this bill would eliminate the discrimination against those who are unorganized and desire to appeal boards of referees' decisions to the umpires. At the present time they are denied the advantage of the advice of labour councils and trade unions, which they may need and seek.

Motion agreed to, bill read the first time and ordered to be printed.

[Mr. Speaker.]

MOTION TO ADJOURN UNDER S.O. 26

TRADE

CANADA-UNITED STATES AUTO PACT—STATEMENT BY MINISTER

Mr. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa-Whitby): Mr. Speaker, I ask leave, seconded by the hon. member for Saskatoon-Biggar (Mr. Gleave), to move the adjournment of the House under Standing Order 26 for the purpose of discussing a specific and important matter requiring urgent consideration, namely, the future of employment in the Canadian automotive industry. This important matter arises from a statement made yesterday by the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce (Mr. Gillespie) in which he described—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Under the terms of Standing Order 26 the hon. member may indicate what the matter is without argument. He may only put on record the notice he has submitted to the Chair. If he has only a few more words he will be allowed to complete his statement.

Mr. Broadbent: Thank you, Mr. Speaker—in which he described the production safeguards in the Canada-United States automotive agreement as being "transitional" only.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Oshawa-Whitby has given notice of his intention to seek the adjournment of the House for the purpose of discussing the subject matter of a statement made by the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce.

Substantially, this is the same problem as that on which an adjournment was sought yesterday by the hon. member for Halton. It was indicated yesterday that the Chair has to take into account opportunities for debate within a reasonable time. The comments made in connection with the motion proposed by the hon. member for Halton under Standing Order 26 apply substantially to the motion proposed today by the hon. member for Oshawa-Whitby. In the circumstances, I believe that the Chair would not be justified in putting to the House a motion which would set aside today's business under government orders for the purpose of an emergency debate under Standing Order 26.

I realize that this is a matter which is of the utmost concern to the House. I trust, however, that in the course of the coming days there will be a number of opportunities to debate it, both in the House and in a committee.

ORAL QUESTION PERIOD

TRADE

CANADA-UNITED STATES AUTO PACT—POSSIBLE TRANSITIONAL NATURE OF SAFEGUARDS—NATURE OF MEASURES

Hon. Robert L. Stanfield (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker—

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Foster: Nice to see you back.

Mr. Stanfield: I thought there would be more applause from the other side of the House.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Stanfield: I wish to direct a question to the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce. Will the minister state what his authority is, other than statements of United States government officials, for saying that the provisions in the auto pact which we have all regarded as safeguards are, to use his term, transitional measures? Can the minister quote a section of the act or point to any part of the agreement to support his statement?

Hon. Alastair Gillespie (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): Mr. Speaker, in referring yesterday to the phrase "transitional provisions" the words I used, I think, were "in the language of the act". I inadvertently misled the House with respect to that particular phrase.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Gillespie: What I should have said was "in the language of the negotiators of the agreement".

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Stanfield: Mr. Speaker, now that the minister has referred to the views of the negotiators rather than the language of the auto pact, I wish to ask the minister to what these transitional measures refer? Were these measures transitional to an agreement, an auto pact without safeguards, or transitional to an agreement providing a common market for automobiles in North America?

• (1430)

Mr. Gillespie: I think the agreement makes the purposes of the auto pact very clear. What I was referring to and hoped to make clear was that the Canadian content provisions or the Canadian value-added provisions, are based on the year 1964. In that year the Canadian value added was $780 million. Last year, 1972, the Canadian value added was very close to $2 billion. I was pointing out that I did not see how we could regard those Canadian value-added provisions, based on 1964, as a safeguard in the sense of maintaining employment today at current levels.

Mr. Diefenbaker: A poor alibi.

Mr. Stanfield: I expect others will pursue the minister along that line. In light of his statement in the House yesterday that there were no safeguards in the auto pact, that they were simply transitional measures, I should like to ask the hon. gentleman in what sense his view of the auto pact and the negotiations differs from that being adopted by representatives of the United States.

Mr. Gillespie: Obviously, I cannot honestly speak for the United States, but I will say that from the point of view of the Canadian government we regard the auto pact as a very successful pact. In the eight years it has been in existance sales have increased 37 per cent, production is up 120 per cent and employment is up 41 per cent.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Gillespie: —or very close to 100,000 new jobs, and we intend to keep it that way.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Stanfield: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker, with all due respect, I recognize that the minister is not obliged to give direct answers to questions put to him in the House, but that does not give him any excuse for putting a lot of propaganda before us.

Mr. Trudeau: Was there no propaganda in the question?

Mr. Stanfield: I should like to ask the minister this question. To what kind of agreement does he regard these transitional measures as being transitional?

Mr. Gillespie: I put it to the Leader of the Opposition: would he be satisfied with a safeguard which—

Some hon. Members: Order!

Mr. Gillespie: —operated 40 per cent below existing levels? I am not satisfied with it.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Hees: Just answer the question.

CANADA-UNITED STATES AUTO PACT—REQUIREMENT THAT MANUFACTURERS MUST MAINTAIN MINIMUM PRODUCTION LEVEL TO OBTAIN TARIFF EXEMPTION

Mr. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa-Whitby): Bearing in mind that perhaps the most crucial of the four safeguards embodied in the pact is the requirement that in order to gain exemption from certain tariff provisions manufacturers in Canada must maintain a certain minimum level of production, whatever it may be, will the minister assure the House that the government has no intention of abandoning that provision in principle?

Hon. Alastair Gillespie (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): I assure the House that we shall do everything we can to expand the job opportunities represented by the auto pact. As to the particular point made by the hon. member, the level set is so low that I am not prepared to accept that it is a satisfactory one, and I do not think hon. members generally would be prepared to accept it, either.

Mr. Broadbent: Mr. Speaker, we are still getting misinformation. Having regard to the wording of article one of the pact to the effect that both countries are to share on a fair and equitable basis in future expansion of automotive production in Canada and the United States, can the minister assure the House that in the present negotiations he is pointing out to the Americans that we are currently producing at a lower level than we are actually consuming in terms of automotive production and that therefore the minimum requirement in terms of implementation now expected from the companies should be raised and not lowered or abandoned?

Mr. Gillespie: I have been informed on that latter point that we are in fact producing at a higher level than this particular provision of the act requires.

CANADA-UNITED STATES AUTO PACT—PRESENT NECESSITY OF SAFEGUARDS TO PROTECT PRODUCTION AND EMPLOYMENT

Mr. Terry O'Connor (Halton): If we are over-fulfilling the safeguard provisions of the act, is it the position of the minister and the government that the present safeguards are no longer necessary to protect production and employment in the Canadian automotive industry?

Hon. Alastair Gillespie (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): I think I made it quite clear that in my view the Canadian value-added provision is not an adequate safeguard for Canadian jobs today. It operates at far too low a level. The effort of the government will be to provide for the future expansion of jobs and to secure future job opportunities for Canadians in any changes there may be in the auto pact. Let me make it clear we have made no changes in the auto pact and we have taken no decision to change any provisions in the auto pact.

Mr. O'Connor: In that case, would the minister advise the House as to the types of new safeguards he is considering to further protect Canadian production and employment?

Mr. Gillespie: Those are the kind of provisions which would, I think, be subject to negotiation and I do not believe it would be in the interest of negotiating any changes successfully if we were to discuss them at this time.

CANADA-UNITED STATES AUTO PACT—CANADIAN POSITION ON UNITED STATES WISH TO REMOVE SAFEGUARDS

Mr. David Lewis (York South): Mr. Speaker, may I pose this question to the minister. In view of the fact he was a private member of the House before he was Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce and must have heard discussions across the floor to the effect that negotiations were in progress and that the auto pact was one of the trade irritants, as they were called, and that United States negotiators were seeking to remove some of the safeguards, may I ask the minister whether it is still the case that United States negotiators are seeking to remove the safeguards—whatever he may think of them they seem to think they are important—and, if so, what is his position?

Hon. Alastair Gillespie (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): There have been no recent negotiations with the United States respecting these provisions so I cannot add to the record in that regard.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The Chair will recognize the hon. member for York South on a supplementary and then recognize a questioner from the party across the aisle.

Mr. Lewis: In view of the fact that until recently United States officials made it clear that they intend to continue to press for the removal of the safeguards from the auto pact, can the minister now assure the House that the government will continue to maintain the position that while the safeguards might be improved they will in no circumstances be abandoned?

Mr. Gillespie: I am certainly interested in seeing them improved, and that will be the position of the government. If there is any change with respect to these provisions, it will be to improve them so as to make them more workable.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

CRIMINAL CODE

ABORTION—PUBLICIZING OF CLINICS IN NEWSPAPERS

Mr. Oza Tétrault (Villeneuve): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the Minister of Justice.

Is the minister aware of advertisements in the press inviting pregnant women to get a legal abortion in Montreal or at low cost in New York clinics? If so, has the minister made any inquiries to determine whether this is contrary to the provisions of the abortion legislation?

[English]

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister of Justice): These particular advertisements have not been brought to my attention, but similar ones have and I am looking into them.

POSSIBILITY OF IMPROPER USE OF MAILS TO PROMOTE ABORTION

Mr. James A. McGrath (St. John's East): I have a supplementary for the Postmaster General. May I ask the hon. gentleman whether he has given consideration to the possibility of the mails having been improperly used to promote this illegal activity?

[Translation]

Hon. André Ouellet (Postmaster General): Mr. Speaker, I shall look into the situation.

IMMIGRATION

SMUGGLING OF VISITORS TO CANADA INTO UNITED STATES

Mr. Lincoln M. Alexander (Hamilton West): Mr. Speaker, I would like to direct a question to the minister responsible for immigration. The other day I gave him notice of a peculiar situation existing in Canada inasmuch as visitors are being smuggled into the United States in consequence of the hardship suffered by many of them by reason of the November 3 cut-off date. Has the minister had an opportunity of looking into this matter and has he had any consultations with United States authorities. If so, what has been the result of such meetings?

• (1440)

Hon. Robert K. Andras (Minister of Manpower and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, I regret that I have not got the results of the report that I asked for following the hon. member's question the other day, but when I have the information I will convey it to him.

Mr. Alexander: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. I appreciate the minister's concern and I hope he will make a statement as soon as the information is available. There is another problem that seems to be bothering foreign students—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. If the question is not supplementary the hon. member should be recognized later for his second question. If it is not supplementary I will recognize the hon. member for Edmonton-Strathcona.

Mr. Alexander: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker, I am dealing with immigration and therefore it is supplementary.

Mr. Speaker: I would suggest to the hon. member that that might be stretching the point a bit. I will recognize a supplementary to the first question and then go to the other question that the hon. member would like to bring to the attention of the same minister. The hon. member for Edmonton-Strathcona.

APPLICATION FOR LANDED IMMIGRANT STATUS BY VISITORS

Mr. Douglas Roche (Edmonton-Strathcona): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Manpower and Immigration. In view of the minister's statement a few days ago expressing his desire to deal compassionately with certain visitors in Canada who may be eligible for landed immigrant status, the November 3 regulations notwithstanding, will the minister send to his departmental officials the same information he sent to me in a recent letter citing what circumstances might be acceptable so that his officials might be able to deal with these cases with knowledge of the positive feeling of the minister?

Hon. Robert K. Andras (Minister of Manpower and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, I think that would be going full circle. I am sure they are aware of the contents of the letter that I sent to the hon. gentleman.

OPPORTUNITY OF FOREIGN STUDENTS TO OBTAIN WORK

Mr. Lincoln M. Alexander (Hamilton West): Mr. Speaker, I should like to put to the minister the problem of foreign students which seems to have been exaggerated as a result of the November 3 cut-off and the need for work permits. The students do not quite know where they stand. Has the minister reviewed this matter in order to relieve any hardship, and can he assure the House that there will be no obstacles unduly placed in the way of these students to prevent them from gaining employment, as they have in the past?

Hon. Robert K. Andras (Minister of Manpower and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, we have circulated the details of the exemption for foreign students from the employment visa requirements. I will not go into full details here except to say that all are exempted except foreign students who came here on their own. These came under circumstances that indicated that they were self-sufficient and self-supporting. Nevertheless, we are reviewing that situation as well. Even under the present regulations, if they apply for jobs in Canada which are jobs that cannot be filled by Canadians, there is no obstacle preventing foreign students from taking that work. However, we are looking a little farther behind this once more with regard to foreign students who were here before the employment visa system was introduced in early January.

Mr. Alexander: In view of the emergency situation that exists, with many of these students soon leaving school and seeking summer employment, and the need for some direction from the government immediately, would the minister at least assure me that he will reach his conclusions in the very near future and publicize them to the several universities, colleges, etc. so there will be ample time for these students to know what is happening on the government's side?

Mr. Andras: Mr. Speaker, I have already indicated we will be doing this directly through some of the representatives who came to see me.

AMOUNT OF LAND IRRIGATED FOLLOWING CONSTRUCTION OF SOUTH SASKATCHEWAN DAM—ALLEGED FAILURE OF PROVINCIAL GOVERNMENT TO LIVE UP TO AGREEMENT

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prince Albert): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of the Environment and it has to do with the agreement that was entered into between the government of Canada and the government of Saskatchewan when the hon. member for Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands was premier of that province in connection with the construction of the South Saskatchewan River dam. Among the provisions in the agreement was one to the effect that a minimum number of acres within a certain period of time should have completed irrigation. The government of Saskatchewan has now broken that agreement, and I ask the minister what he is going to do about it. Is he going to call on the government of Saskatchewan to live up to its agreement, and what discussions have taken place so far with that government?

Hon. Jack Davis (Minister of the Environment): Mr. Speaker, I am not personally that familiar with this agreement but I will look into the matter, as the right hon. gentleman suggests, and provide him with what I hope will be a satisfactory answer.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Mr. Speaker, I would not want to break up this beautiful relationship between the Liberal party and the NDP, but in view of the fact that the banns have not yet been published, I hope that for the benefit of the province of Saskatchewan some action will be taken.

AIRPORTS

PICKERING TOWNSHIP SITE—EXPROPRIATION OF LAND—MEMBERSHIP AND TERMS OF REFERENCE OF COMMITTEE OF INQUIRY

Mr. John Harney (Scarborough West): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Transport and it has to do with the inquiry announced in conjunction with the decision to expropriate land for the Pickering airport. Will the minister report what progress is being made, if any, on the selection of the chairman and the membership of the inquiry?

[Translation]

Hon. Jean Marchand (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, we are trying to choose from a rather extensive list of possible candidates and when we have reached a decision as to which candidates we shall propose, we shall discuss it with the province of Ontario.

[English]

Mr. Harney: Mr. Speaker, may I ask the minister a supplementary question with particular reference to the latter part of his answer. Have the terms of reference been set for the committee, and is the government of the province of Ontario now co-operating by making the inquiry sufficiently broad as to involve all planning considerations for the region?

[Translation]

Mr. Marchand (Langelier): Mr. Speaker, we are in the process of defining the mandate of this commission. I trust that within a few days we will be in a position to inform the Ontario government of it.

[English]

PICKERING TOWNSHIP SITE—RELEASE OF SURROUNDING LAND FROM MINISTERIAL ORDER

Mr. Sinclair Stevens (York-Simcoe): A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. While the minister is carrying on his present plans, would he inform the House whether he has been in touch with the government of Ontario to inform them which of the 70,000 acres surrounding the proposed airport that were frozen may be released from the ministerial order of March 1, 1972, which was put on at the request of the minister on the understanding that it would not be required for longer than four months?

[Translation]

Hon. Jean Marchand (Minister of Transport): I believe, Mr. Speaker, that the expropriated area which could be handed over to the interested parties was defined in the news release, and that the information was also transmitted to the Ontario government.

FINANCE

REQUEST FOR STATEMENT ON INTERNATIONAL MONETARY SITUATION

Hon. Marcel Lambert (Edmonton West): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Finance. I wonder whether the minister would make a statement on motions, either tomorrow or on Monday, in which he would give the government's views on the present and continuing international monetary crisis, in view of this week's assaults on the dollar and the rumour that the Common Market countries are going to float their currencies, and on what is going to happen to the Canadian dollar, whether it is going to go down with the U.S. dollar or be allowed to float upwards?

Mr. Drury: Where is your crystal ball?

Hon. John N. Turner (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I want to thank my partner for his support. I do not think the House would want me to speculate on the future of the Canadian dollar, for obvious reasons. At the moment the Canadian dollar is stable and in rough parity with that of the United States. While it is true that today the markets in Europe are finding the U.S. dollar under considerable pressure, if the situation reaches the stage described by the hon. member I would, of course, consider his suggestion.

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): Mr. Speaker, I wonder whether we could have a statement so that the minister could expose all the circumstances that he feels proper to put before the House and so the House would be able to comment on them as well as on the nature of Canada's U.S. holdings and their, shall I say, frozen state?

INDIAN AFFAIRS

ELECTION OF CHIEF OF KAMLOOPS No. 1 BAND—REQUEST FOR REPORT ON SITUATION

Mr. F. Oberle (Prince George-Peace River): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development. I asked a similar question a couple of weeks ago when he was absent, and I am glad to see him back and now in good health. His parliamentary secretary said at the time that the Indians in Kamloops are quite O.K. I should like to ask the minister how the hearing is coming in Kamloops and if things are O.K. there, where the Indian people have been deprived of their welfare payments and so on? Can the minister report on that matter?

Mr. Speaker: The minister can give the House a quick report or reply to the question briefly, but the hon. member is inviting the minister to give a reply that ought normally to be made on motions. However, the minister will be given the floor for the purpose of replying briefly to the question.

[Translation]

Hon. Jean Chrétien (Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): Mr. Speaker, I will give an answer later to the hon. member. I am not in a position to give him any details at this point because it would take too long, but I will keep him posted on the situation.

NATIONAL DEFENCE

ALLEGED INTENTION TO ABOLISH TRADITIONAL RANKS AND TITLES IN NAVY

Hon. George Hees (Prince Edward-Hastings): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of National Defence. In view of persistent reports that the government intends to abolish traditional ranks and titles in the Royal Canadian Navy and replace them with their army equivalents, would the minister advise the House whether the government is considering such a move or intends to take such action?

Hon. James Richardson (Minister of National Defence): No, Mr. Speaker. There is no change in that regard.

Mr. Hees: I know there is no change so far, but does the government intend to take such action or is it considering such action? Mr. Speaker, may I rephrase my question.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Perhaps before rephrasing the question the hon. member might allow the minister to reply.

Mr. Richardson: No, Mr. Speaker; no such change is contemplated.

FINANCES

WINTER PROJECTS CAPITAL FUND—POSSIBLE ACCEPTANCE OF LOCAL INITIATIVES PROJECTS ALREADY REFUSED— REPRESENTATIONS TO PROVINCES

Mr. Gilles Caouette (Charlevoix): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Finance, if I may have his attention.

In the release issued jointly with the Minister of Manpower and Immigration on January 12, 1973, the minister told us of the investment fund program for winter works. Can he inform us now whether local initiatives projects refused for lack of funds, or at least those accepted by the provinces or municipalities can be granted through the $350 million municipal-provincial fund?

Hon. John N. Turner (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, if a municipality accepts a project approved by the provincial government, and which fills the terms of the contract, such project can be approved, but I am unable to answer unless I have all the particulars of a specific project.

Mr. Caouette (Charlevoix): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Charlevoix on a supplementary.

Mr. Caouette (Charlevoix): Since the funds do come from the Minister of Finance, can he guarantee that he will make representations to the provinces in order that some of the local initiatives projects which have been rejected may be reviewed?

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): I believe on principle the matter is left to the discretion of the provinces. At any rate, I shall study the question. If I have any authority, I shall communicate with the hon. member.

MANPOWER

LOCAL INITIATIVES PROGRAM—AVAILABILITY OF ADDITIONAL FUNDS

Mr. André Fortin (Lotbinière): I have a supplementary, Mr. Speaker.

On two previous occasions the hon. Minister of Finance stated in reply to my questions that he would consider whether it was possible to increase funds allocated to local initiatives programs. Has he completed his study and is he in a position to announce whether further local initiatives programs can be approved?

Hon. John N. Turner (Minister of Finance): Not yet, Mr. Speaker.

[English]

LOCAL INITIATIVES PROGRAM—ANNOUNCEMENT BY DEFEATED LIBERAL CANDIDATE OF ACCEPTANCE OF PROJECTS—DEPARTMENTAL POLICY

Mr. Lorne Nystrom (Yorkton-Melville): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Manpower and Immigration and is further to the privilege I raised earlier regarding the Liberal candidate in my riding notifying applicants that their applications under the local initiatives program have been accepted. I should like to ask the minister whether it is the policy of his department to have former Liberal candidates announce such successful programs and, if so, are his officials acting upon instructions from the minister?

Hon. Robert K. Andras (Minister of Manpower and Immigration): No, Mr. Speaker, they are not acting under my instructions. I have had some indications that this sort of thing has taken place, including announcements by members of different provincial governments of other political stripes, where they have had the opportunity to approve various projects, long before we did.

YOUTH

OPPORTUNITIES FOR YOUTH PROGRAM—REQUEST FOR EXTENSION OF DEADLINE FOR APPLICATIONS

Mr. Heward Grafftey (Brome-Missisquoi): Mr. Speaker, normally I would not direct this question to the Prime Minister but time is of the essence. In the absence of the Secretary of State I would ask the Prime Minister whether, in view of representations received from Canadians from all corners of Canada, the deadline for receiving Opportunities for Youth applications will be extended beyond today, March 1?

[Translation]

Mr. Gilles Marceau (Parliamentary Secretary to Secretary of State): Mr. Speaker, to answer the question of my hon. friend, I would say the deadline will not be extended because those who complied with the law and whose projects are now in the hands of civil servants would not want a decision delayed by a new extension. Granting another extension is therefore out of the question.

[English]

Mr. Jack Marshall (Humber-St. George's-St. Barbe): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Prime Minister. In view of the fact there are many groups of students in remote areas of Canada who have not heard about the deadline date, would the Prime Minister reconsider the matter and discuss with the Secretary of State the possibility of extending the date for receiving applications under the Opportunites for Youth program?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I think it would be more useful to look into the premise of the question and find out why this information has not been conveyed to the students.

INCOME TAX

ALLEGED QUESTIONABLE ADVERTISING OF NEW FORM FOR 1972

Mr. Lloyd R. Crouse (South Shore): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct my question to the Minister of National Revenue. In light of the minister's letter to me as well as to my colleagues under date of February 26 in which he requested our ideas about possible improvements to the income tax forms, has the minister now concluded that the expensive advertising campaign using Fred Davis was misleading, that the new forms are not that much easier than they look, and is he now prepared to abolish this Davis waste of taxpayers' money?

[Mr. Andras.]

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member may agree with me that the question as asked is in the form of a representation rather than that of a question.

GRAINS

QUESTIONNAIRE TO FARMERS ON FORM OF PAYMENT PREFERRED FOR WHEAT USED DOMESTICALLY

Mr. S. J. Korchinski (Mackenzie): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the minister responsible for the Wheat Board. Did he personally authorize the questionnaire which went out to 180,000 farmers asking them about the method in which they wished to have payments made for wheat used domestically?

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister of Justice): Yes, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Korchinski: May I then ask the minister why farmers are asked to finance a questionnaire intended to answer political questions which should be properly answered by the Liberal party?

Mr. Lang: Mr. Speaker, I should just like to make clear to the hon. member that the implication of his question, and that of another member the other day, that this is somehow being paid for by the farmers is quite wrong. It is part of the general government administrative costs. It has often been said in this House that it is important for us to consult with farmers and farm organizations on important matters. In this case there was a significant difference of view among farm organizations and I thought I should take this rather straightforward and simple question to the farmers directly. I am surprised that the hon. member is objecting to that.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Korchinski: I rise on a question of privilege, Mr. Speaker. It is simply that the minister in his capacity as the minister who answers in the House for the Canadian Wheat Board is exercising a privilege that is not afforded to members of other parties in the House and in doing so is using funds not properly funds of the government but funds of the farmers. This is money that has been accumulated—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I suggest to the hon. member that this is hardly a question of privilege. It seems to me it is a question of debate with the minister. I do not want to prevent his making that point, but at first glance it does not appear to me to be a question of privilege.

Mr. Korchinski: Ten o'clock, Mr. Speaker.

• (1500)

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prince Albert): Mr. Speaker, naturally one is interested in the returns that are being received. One hundred and eighty thousand were sent out, there being no referendum in our country in effect. Is the minister now in a position to let the House know the progress that has been made up to the present time, the numbers that have replied and the nature of their replies, because the House is entitled to that information? It should not be the private property of the Liberal party.

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister of Justice): Mr. Speaker, I do intend to make a report to the House after the polls have closed.

An hon. Member: It is two to one for the Liberals so far.

Mr. Diefenbaker: I would hope he could answer earlier than that, because it will not be long before he will be over there to give an answer.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. We are running short of time. Perhaps we should try to go to the next question.

INDUSTRY

TANNING—GOVERNMENT POSITION ON REPRESENTATIONS OF TANNERS ASSOCIATION—REPORT OF ANTI-DUMPING TRIBUNAL

Mr. Andrew Brewin (Greenwood): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce, and it is not about the auto pact. Has the minister received representations from the Tanner's Association of Canada on behalf of the Canadian tanning industry that recent developments in that industry are threatening the jobs of 2,500 men and women engaged directly in the industry and another 20,000 or so affected indirectly by the possible collapse of that industry? What steps, if any, is he taking in regard to these representations?

Hon. Alastair Gillespie (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): Mr. Speaker, I have received representations from that association, I think, and from a number of other associations and private corporations in respect of this serious matter. It is under very active study by my department at present. When I have any measures to announce, I will announce them.

Mr. Brewin: I have a supplementary question, Mr. Speaker, and perhaps I should have given the minister notice. Has the anti-dumping tribunal reported to the government or to the minister on the submissions of the Tanner's Association to that body and, if so, is any action being taken on their report?

Mr. Gillespie: I wonder whether the hon. member is referring to the inquiry with respect to the footwear industry, or is he referring to some other inquiry? If he is referring to the former, which issued from an anti-dumping finding with respect to footwear, I am still awaiting the report on the inquiry.

VETERANS AFFAIRS

INQUIRY INTO HEALTH PROBLEMS OF FORMER PRISONERS OF WAR IN EUROPE

Mr. Gordon Towers (Red Deer): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Veterans Affairs. Can the minister tell the House when and where the consultation with the European prisoners of war will commence, and would he be prepared to lay the terms of reference for the consultations on the table?

Hon. Daniel J. MacDonald (Minister of Veterans Affairs): Mr. Speaker, in answer to the hon. gentleman's question may I say that the inquiry is now in progress. A gentleman by the name of Dr. Hermann has undertaken it for us, and I had a consultation with him a few days ago: I would like to convey to the House some of the things he said to me. He has undertaken a review of the possible delayed effects of imprisonment upon Canadians who were prisoners of war in Europe during world war II. For the purposes of the study, the former prisoners are divided into four groups: Dieppe, northwest Europe, central Mediterranean, and air force plus navy.

He has drawn for review 1,826 Dieppe prisoners files, has a list of 2,000 Dieppe veterans who were not imprisoned, and is now preparing mailing lists in order to contact these persons. Data will also be gathered on 1,000 fit male civilians of similar age as of 1940. This will mean that he will have information on all three groups for purposes of comparison.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I hesitate very much to interrupt the minister, but I suspect he has almost reached the end of his statement. Normally, information of this nature should be given on motions.

Mr. Marshall: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I think we might seek to obtain the unanimous consent of the House to return to motions in view of the fact that this is very important information which deals with an important segment of our society. I think we should return to motions and allow the minister to complete his interesting statement, since there is no other opportunity to speak about veterans here.

Mr. Speaker: As I indicated a moment ago, my suspicion was that the minister had just about reached the end of his statement. If he has not and if it is the wish of the House to hear the minister, he may complete his statement at this point without the necessity of returning to motions. Is that agreed?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. MacDonald (Cardigan): Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I had just about completed my statement. I have only a few words more.

It is expected that in about six months time Dr. Hermann will be in a position to discuss the meaningful results of the study and whether additional work will still be necessary. He recognizes that time is of the essence.

ALLEGED TELEGRAM INDICATING DESIRE OF KIDNAPPERS OF JAMES CROSS TO RETURN TO CANADA

Mr. R. Gordon L. Fairweather (Fundy-Royal): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Prime Minister. Has the government knowledge of a telegram alleged to have been received from the kidnappers of James Cross in which they seek permission to return to Canada to appear before a board which would have the object of deciding whether they should be granted amnesty?

An hon. Member: They want a LIP grant.

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I have no knowledge of any such telegram.

TOBACCO—ALLEGED DISCRIMINATION BY MANUFACTURERS IN PRICE OFFERED TO PRINCE EDWARD ISLAND GROWERS

Hon. J. A. MacLean (Malpeque): Mr. Speaker, I should like to address a question to the Minister of Agriculture of which I have given him notice. Has the Prince Edward Island Flue-cured Tobacco Growers Association been in communication with him regarding their dispute or misunderstanding with the Canadian Tobacco Manufacturers Council arising from the fact that they are apparently about to be paid 14 cents a pound less for tobacco grown in Prince Edward Island than the council is paying for similar grades of tobacco in Ontario? If the minister or the department has been involved in this, could he say what the result has been?

Hon. E. F. Whelan (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, neither I nor the department has been directly contacted by the tobacco producers of Prince Edward Island, but they have met my colleague, the Minister of Veterans Affairs, and had a discussion with him about their problem. I understand that he is awaiting some further documentation from these people so we can proceed to a proper investigation and take action if we can.

TOBACCO—REQUEST FOR INVESTIGATION OF ACTIONS OF TOBACCO MANUFACTURERS COUNCIL IN DEALING WITH PRINCE EDWARD ISLAND GROWERS

Hon. J. A. MacLean (Malpeque): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question for the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs, and it is with regard to this dispute. Has any inquiry, even in a preliminary way, been made to investigate whether or not the Canadian Tobacco Manufacturers Council, in dealing with the growers in Prince Edward Island, is acting in a fashion that is legal under the Combines Investigation Act?

[Mr. MacDonald (Cardigan).]

Hon. Herb Gray (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I would like to thank the hon. member for giving me notice of his question. As he knows, the practice has been not to confirm or deny the existence of an investigation, but I have asked my officials for a further report in order to see if I can provide any additional proper information to the hon. gentleman.

INQUIRY OF THE MINISTRY

Mr. Donald MacInnis (Cape Breton-East Richmond): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Justice. In view of the fact the rules forbid asking for a legal opinion from the government, would the minister advise us what procedure to take in order to receive a legal opinion from the government?

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister of Justice): Mr. Speaker, I think that may itself be asking for a legal opinion. Subject to that reservation, I would simply like to advise the hon. member that he is quite right in saying that it is the duty of the Minister of Justice to advise the government on legal matters but that persons otherwise seeking legal advice must see their own legal advisers.

• (1510)

Mr. MacInnis (Cape Breton-East Richmond): Mr. Speaker, on a point of order, legislation passed by this House has not been administered by the responsible party in accordance with the legislation itself, and I have been trying every possible method, including questions in the House of different ministers, to find out why. I am not asking for a legal opinion directly from the minister or from any minister of the Crown. All I want to know is whether the government is in a position to give a legal opinion?

Mr. Crouse: Don't all rise at once.

REPORT ON DAMAGE TO HMCS RESTIGOUCHE—REQUEST FOR STATEMENT

Mr. Doug Rowland (Selkirk): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of National Defence. Has he now received the report resulting from investigation of the damage done to HMCS Restigouche, which I understand was forwarded to him this week, and, if so, can he inform the House whether he will be making a statement on motions, based on that report, and will the report be made public?

Hon. James Richardson (Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, the report has been received and is being considered.

Mr. Rowland: Can the minister inform the House whether the report recommends legal action against the shipyard involved in the refit, and can he advise the House whether it contains evidence of deliberate damage being done to the ship, beyond that to the feedwater supply, such as screwdrivers being jammed in bearings and packings?

Mr. Richardson: Mr. Speaker, I do not want to comment on the report until it has been considered.

INCOME TAX

REQUEST FOR EXPLANATION OF REGULATION REQUIRING INCREASE IN REPORTING DIVIDENDS FROM CANADIAN COMPANIES

Mr. William C. Frank (Middlesex): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of National Revenue. In view of the fact that T5 tax returns require a taxpayer to increase by one-third the actual dividends received from Canadian companies, can the minister offer a suitable explanation of why this should be?

Hon. Robert Stanbury (Minister of National Revenue): Mr. Speaker, because it is provided for in the act which the House passed not too long ago, and because it is part of the law of many countries and provides for a better deal for the taxpayer with smaller taxable income.

Mr. Frank: Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a supplementary question to the Minister of Finance. In light of the fact that this requirement automatically means that such taxpayers' returns show a higher income than actually received, does this in effect not show the said taxpayers as filing false returns?

Mr. Speaker: I suggest to the hon. member that that is argument. The Minister of National Health and Welfare is seeking the floor for the purpose of replying to a question, but first I will recognize the hon. member for Hamilton Mountain on a supplementary.

CHILD CARE EXPENSES—ALLEGED DISCRIMINATION IN APPLICATION OF PROVISION AS BETWEEN SEPARATED FATHERS AND WORKING MOTHERS

Mr. Duncan M. Beattie (Hamilton Mountain): Mr. Speaker, my supplementary is for the Minister of National Revenue, but prior to my putting the question to him I would like permission to apologize to you for my questioning of your recognition of members on the opposite side yesterday. I can assure you that this was not my intention. My supplementary has to do with discrimination, Mr. Speaker. It relates to section 31 of the government's crystal clear tax reform guide headed "Child Care Expenses." Could the minister inform the House if he is aware of the fact that a separated father must have a written agreement of separation from his wife before he becomes eligible to claim for child care expenses on his income tax form, while no such agreement is necessary for working mothers?

Hon. Robert Stanbury (Minister of National Revenue): Mr. Speaker, I certainly would not want to see any discrimination of that kind in our administration, but I will have to check to see whether that is something that is required by the law. The Department of National Revenue is obliged to apply the law as parliament passes it, not as we would like it to be.

ACTION TO ENSURE TESTING OF DRUGS BY MANUFACTURERS TO DEMONSTRATE SAFETY AND EFFICACY

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, on February 8 the hon. member for Simcoe North raised the question of adequate testing of drugs on the Canadian market, following press reports of questionable drug manufacturing practices in Montreal. I have now received the report I requested from my department and can confirm that the press reports in question were erroneous. The activities of the health protection branch, I am satisfied, do provide the needed assurance that drugs on the Canadian market are safe and effective, and I will be pleased to provide the hon. member with more details on this matter in writing.

AIR TRANSPORT

IMPROVEMENT OF NAVIGATIONAL AIDS IN NORTHERN CANADA AIR CORRIDORS

Mr. Don Mazankowski (Vegreville): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct my question to the Minister of Transport. Yesterday the minister indicated to the House that he would be giving more details today in respect of the escalation of a program designed to improve air navigational aids in the Canadian north. Having regard to the evidence presented at the Martin Hartwell inquest in Yellowknife, which described the non-directional beacon at Contwayto Lake as being weak and inadequate, is the minister prepared to make a statement in the House today, or can he indicate when such a statement will be forthcoming?

Hon. Jean Marchand (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I do not remember having said that it would be today. I said I would make it in the House as soon as possible. Following the inquiry in the north I think it is very important that the whole system be revised and I hope to make a statement in 15 days, before March 15, on what we intend to do to correct the deficiencies in the system.

POSSIBLE REMOVAL OF IMPORT DUTY ON LOCATOR BEACONS AND CRASH POSITION INDICATORS

Mr. Erik Nielsen (Yukon): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a supplementary question to the Minister of Transport, and it also concerns the Minister of National Revenue. In view of the minister's announcement the other day, will the government give consideration to removing the import tax on emergency locator beacons, and on crash position indicators that are to be mandatorily installed in all aircraft flying in remote areas, as indicated by the minister, in the interests of safety and economy?

Hon. Jean Marchand (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I think I mentioned in the House that we have been in touch with manufacturers in Canada to see if the locators can be fabricated here in Canada, and at what price. It is difficult to answer the question before having received and studied the report.

Mr. Speaker: Orders of the day.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

WEEKLY STATEMENT

Mr. Baldwin: Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask the government House leader what will be the business for the rest of this week and next week.

Mr. MacEachen: Mr. Speaker, before mentioning the business for the rest of this week, may I inform the House that it has been agreed that private members hour today be devoted to a discussion of the Interparliamentary Union meeting and, if that can be regarded as agreed, maybe it could be made an order of the House later.

Today and tomorrow we will call the old age security legislation followed by the War Veterans Allowance legislation. Monday and Tuesday next will be opposition days, and notwithstanding the progress that might be made on the legislative items, on Wednesday I would like to call the reference of various matters to the Procedure and Organization Committee so that hon. members may have a chance to air some of their views with respect to the operations and procedures of the House. On Thursday next I will call the uncompleted legislative items that I have mentioned today.

Mr. Baldwin: As a supplementary question, is the government House leader able to give us any indication of when the leftovers from the 1972 budget, in which there is some passing interest, will be introduced, that is, provided the Minister of Finance, in his negotiations with his friends to my left, has reached the stage where he knows in what form he will be allowed to bring them into the House?

Mr. MacEachen: Mr. Speaker, the only negotiations that take place with my hon. friends across the floor, both to my right and to my left, take place in the presence of my hon. friend who has asked this question. I would hope to call the 1972 budget bills at an early date.

URBAN AFFAIRS

PROPOSED TORONTO WATERFRONT PARK—INQUIRY AS TO ITEM IN ESTIMATES TO COVER

Mr. Ron Atkey (St. Paul's): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a question of privilege. On February 12 the Minister of Public Works replied to my written question to the effect that the government had exercised an option to purchase 14 acres of land for part of the proposed Toronto waterfront park promised during the election campaign. The minister referred to some $9.7 million to purchase this land as being committed from the Department of Public Works estimates, yet neither the main estimates for 1973-74 tabled a week ago Tuesday nor the supplementary estimates for 1972-73 nor the main estimates for 1972-73 refer to this item. It is quite impossible to prepare for discussion of the estimates without knowing where this item is. Would the minister indicate whether he has misled the House in reply to my question or where I could find that particular item?

• (1520)

Hon. Jean-Eudes Dubé (Minister of Public Works): No, Mr. Speaker, I have not misled the House. I believe this will be found in subsequent estimates.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

An hon. Member: Subsequent?

[Translation]

Mr. Prud'homme: Mr. Speaker, I tried to raise the question of privilege earlier.

I only wanted to reiterate the remark of the hon. member for Ontario (Mr. Cafik) that the bell was not ringing last night in our corridor and, in view of the present political situation that could obviously have been disastrous for government members.

[English]

Mr. Hellyer: A question of privilege, Mr. Speaker. I wonder if the Minister of Public Works would be good enough to clarify the answer that he just gave to the House in reply to the hon. member.

Some hon. Members: Order, order!

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member I am sure will appreciate that this is hardly a question of privilege. I allowed the hon. member's previous question which in my view was not a question of privilege but I thought, in fairness to him, and since he had tried to get the floor before, that I should be mute on the point and allow the minister to reply. I am sure the hon. member for Trinity would agree, however, that what he is bringing to the attention of the Chair is hardly a question of privilege.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Hellyer: Mr. Speaker, as a question of privilege or a point of order, I think it is now a matter of privilege affecting all members of this House. If I understood the minister correctly, he told the House that the government of Canada has expended some several millions of dollars without parliamentary approval. If that is what he meant to tell the House, that the government of Canada has spent millions of dollars without authorization from this House and only in future will estimates be presented to the House, then it is, in fact, a question of privilege affecting every single member of the House.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Hellyer: It is a question, Mr. Speaker, which strikes at the very principle of parliamentary control.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Hellyer: This is a matter which goes back hundreds of years in the constitutional system under which we operate. This government with its usual arrogant demeanour, during the election campaign commits itself to expenditures and then, Mr. Speaker, it spends the money without any parliamentary approval or authority whatsoever. If that is not a bona fide question of privilege affecting all members of the House I should like to know what is.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Speaker: Orders of the day.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

OLD AGE SECURITY ACT

AMENDMENTS TO INCREASE BASIC PENSION AND TO CLARIFY BASE YEAR IN ESCALATION FORMULA

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of National Health and Welfare) moved that Bill C-147, to amend the Old Age Security Act be read the second time and referred to the Standing Committee on Health, Welfare and Social Affairs.

He said: Mr. Speaker, the bill that is now before the House for second reading proposes the largest single increase in the basic old age security pension that has ever been made since the inception of this particular program over 20 years ago.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Lalonde: I feel all the more privileged that the very first bill I have the honour to propose for the consideration of parliament is one which aims at substantially improving the economic condition of those 1.8 million senior citizens to whom Canada owes so much for making it what it is today.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Lalonde: I, for one, am thinking of my 86 year old mother and my 81 year old father who all their lives worked extremely hard for their family's livelihood on a farm in Quebec and who, like all those of their time, gave everything they had for the raising and education of their children. In their humble way, they made Canada a country in which one is proud to live.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

[Translation]

Mr. Lalonde: Consequently, it is a great honour for me, Mr. Speaker, to move that Bill C-147 be read a second time. With this measure, a Liberal government shows once more its deep concern for the plight of aged persons in Canada. For the eighth time since 1950, a Liberal Minister of National Health and Welfare has proposed an improvement in the benefits paid to our older people. Since 1966, the total amount set aside by Liberal governments for old age security has increased from 1 billion to 2.9 billion—almost a threefold increase in less than seven years.

[English]

In this bill we are proposing to raise the basic old age security pension to $100 a month for all pensioners effective April 1, 1973. Including the cost of living adjustment that was provided for in last year's budget, this will mean an increase of $17.12 a month or $205 a year, an increase of over 20 per cent for every old age recipient in this country. Once more this represents the largest single increase in the pension for all old persons that has ever been made in the history of the old age security program.

In 1957 the pension was increased by $15 in two stages by two different governments. In 1962, it was raised by $10, in 1963 it was raised again by $10 and then 1967 the $30 guaranteed income supplement was added for those people with no other income. This supplement was raised by $21.39 in April, 1971 and by $12.12 in January, 1972. The increase we are now proposing, together with the normal escalation of the Guaranteed Income Supplement, will mean a total increase of $20.14 a month for those aged persons who have no other source of income.

By this measure we will be offering a guaranteed annual income to persons over 65 who can meet the residency requirement of $2,040 if they are single and $3,895 for a married couple.

[Translation]

In addition to these measures on behalf of aged persons, a number of other steps have been taken in the income tax field to improve the lot of old age pensioners. Before the adoption of the recent tax reform measures, about 1,350,000 pensioners were required to pay income tax, including many of those in receipt of the Guaranteed Income Supplement. When the Guaranteed Income Supplement was defined as non-taxable income about half a million pensioners were removed from the tax rolls. The increase in basic personal tax exemptions from $1,000 to $1,500 removed another 130,000 pensioners from the rolls, and the decision to raise the special exemption for aged persons from $500 to $650 and to make it available at age 65 instead of age 70 meant that another 150,000 pensioners became exempt from income tax. It is expected that raising the special exemption from $650 to $1,000, as proposed in the budget speech of May 1972 will remove an extra 75,000 pensioners from the tax rolls. This will mean that only about half a million pensioners—compared with 1,350,000—will be subject to income tax as a result of these tax modifications. When coupled with the cumulative benefit increases that have been provided, it will be readily seen, Mr. Speaker, that this government has considerably improved the economic condition of persons 65 years of age and over in the course of the last two years.

Old Age Security Act

• (1530)

[English]

It has been suggested by some writers that this measure which we are proposing, Mr. Speaker, is a "paltry increase", amounting only to $13.39 a month more than would have been paid next April in any event. It has also been criticized for "leaving OAS recipients below the poverty line." Such comments show the authors' complete misunderstanding of the way the program works. Those people who have no other source of income will get $170 a month at the single rate or $325 a month at the married rate; in all about 500,000 people are in this category. Another 550,000 old people are entitled to partial benefits, ranging for single people from $169 a month down to $101 a month, depending on the levels of their income from other sources. The remaining 750,000 old people who already have incomes above $1,700 if they are single, or $3,000 if they are married to other pensioners, or $4,600 if they are married to non-pensioners, will none the less get $100 a month Old Age Security pension on top of these sums. It is hard to understand how it is that these people are considered to be "still left below the poverty line." And it is incomprehensible how an increase of $20 a month can be called a "paltry increase," especially when it follows on the heels of last year's $15 a month increase.

I would like, Mr. Speaker, to remind hon. members of the important role that the Old Age Security program plays in Canada's income security system for the aged. It is the foundation on which many other plans have been built. In a sense old people in Canada have a three-tiered system of income security, with the OAS pension providing the base for all who meet the residence requirements. The middle tier is provided by the Canada Pension Plan/Quebec Pension Plan for those who have contributed to one of those plans; through them a retirement pension related to their past earnings is available for them. The third tier is the pension provided by private pension plans at one's place of work; it may be stacked on top of, or integrated with, the other two. But the foundation is the basic OAS pension; if anything were done to destroy or diminish it, the whole retirement structure would suffer as a result.

During the recent election campaign, and in discussions and statements made since that time, a number of criticisms have been directed at the OAS program. These generally were of two types. Some were directed at the actual amount of the benefits provided, while others called for a change in the basic structure of the program.

Many proposals were made for increasing the amount of the benefits provided under the plan. There were some opposition critics who suggested, or seemed to suggest, that the income-related part of it should be removed and replaced by a universal benefit payable to rich and poor alike. Instead of paying $82.88 a month to all aged persons, rich and poor alike, and $150 to those with no other income, it was said that all should be given $150 a month, that we should give those who are better off the same as those who have nothing. To do this we estimate would cost about $800 million more this year alone.

Other critics, who will recognize themselves easily, suggested that the principle of an income-related supplement was a reasonable one, but that the basic benefit payable to all aged persons should be raised, to recognize the rise in prices since 1967 when the supplement was first paid. To this end, it was suggested that Old Age Security should be raised to a mere $92 or $95 a month.

More recently, a pensioner's organization recommended a series of changes, including the payment of a $150 a month pension for all aged persons over 65, the extension of the existing OAS pension to people at age 60, and a guaranteed annual income of $6,000 a year for an aged couple, or $3,000 a year for a single pensioner over 65. These proposals would cost the federal treasury several billion dollars extra each year.

I am leaving aside a few other proposals to do with benefits to be paid; they range from payments of over $100 a month to larger amounts. Other proposals that have been made from time to time have dealt with the structure of the OAS program, the age at which pensions become payable or the frequency with which benefits are escalated.

Mr. Stanfield: Mr. Speaker, would the hon. minister permit a question? What did he propose during the election?

Mr. Lalonde: Mr. Speaker, I think the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Stanfield) will have plenty of time to ask questions after I have made my speech. It is very nice to see him today after his absence. I am sure he will have plenty of time for his questions. Some people have suggested that a special pension should be provided for the spouses of pensioners in cases where the spouse is not yet 65.

Mr. Stanfield: I wish the minister would tell us what he proposed during the campaign.

Mr. Lalonde: Mr. Speaker, let the Leader of the Opposition be a little patient. I will deal with his proposals before long. Moreover, I have already talked about some of his proposals for paying either $92 or $95 a month. I hope he recognized those as his own proposals.

An hon. Member: Keep your cool.

Mr. Stanfield: I still hope the minister tells us what he proposed during the election.

Mr. Lalonde: Mr. Speaker, I am sorry, but I did not hear the Leader of the Opposition just now. I intend to continue with my speech.

Mr. Stanfield: Tell us what you said during the election campaign.

Mr. Lalonde: Mr. Speaker, I shall continue. A man retires at 65 and goes on pension, but if his wife is not yet 65, both of them may have to live on a single pension. Depending on the nature of this special pension, if it were confined to spouses aged 60 to 64 it would entail an extra outlay of from $65 million to $150 million next year. This proposal seems very sensible at first glance.

Mr. Benjamin: Right.

Mr. Lalonde: It raises an important question about the priorities that should be attached to various proposals for improving the structure of social security in Canada. I will come back to this matter in a few minutes.

There are those people who have suggested that not only spouses of pensioners, but all persons aged 60 to 64 should be entitled to a guaranteed income of $150 a month. It is estimated that this would cost at least $330 million if the whole benefit were income tested, or about $800 million if only $70 a month covered by GIS were income tested. If this benefit were brought into line with the new OAS/GIS rates, the ones we are proposing for adoption under this bill, the additional cost would be over $1 billion. Such a benefit would recognize the needs of the prematurely aged and the chronically unemployed who are a charge on provincial social assistance between the ages of 60 and 65.

• (1540)

It is maintained by some proponents of this approach that it would help solve the high unemployment levels we now face by freeing jobs for younger people. Several experts argue that there would be only a negligible effect on employment levels. Those with adequate incomes would probably not quit their jobs to collect the full OAS/GIS of $170 a month. Those with smaller incomes would not need to quit their jobs but could count on a partial OAS/GIS payment to supplement their earnings. There may be a few low-paid workers in difficult or unsatisfying jobs who might be glad to retire early; it is not so obvious that these jobs would be readily filled from the ranks of the unemployed. However, it is reasonable to expect that those in this age group now without work might stop looking for work and thus somewhat reduce the overall rate of unemployment.

[Translation]

Some hon. members have suggested that the age of eligibility for the OAS pension should be lowered to 60, and that the pension should automatically be granted to both spouses when one has reached 60.

Mr. Speaker, there are 830,000 people in the age group 60 to 64. In addition there are 320,000 spouses under 60 of people who are over 60. The implementation of such a measure would add 1,150,000 persons to the OAS rolls. At $100 a month each, it would cost $1.38 billion to pay them the OAS pension. If in addition they were to be granted the GI supplement, the costs of this proposal would rise to $1.48 billion.

[English]

There was also a proposal that escalation of old age pensions be speeded up, supposedly because annual escalation entails too long a delay before price increases are reflected in pension payments. From an administrative point of view, monthly escalation of benefits would be a nightmare, and I was amazed to hear the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Stanfield) entertain such a thought during the last election campaign. The OAS/GIS system is not sufficiently flexible to produce an adjustment each month. A battery of clerks would be needed to establish entitlement every month based on a new set of eligibility tables each month. The time interval between the completion of the printing of cheques in one month and the start of the printing in the following month would be too short to permit the necessary adjustments to be made. The process would be slowed down, and overpayments or underpayments would become much more likely. A monthly escalation provision would mean that the processing of one million applications for annual renewal be condensed into a one-month period. The extra administrative costs entailed in such a program would be substantial.

Similar problems would be encountered with the proposal of quarterly escalation. It is surprising to say the least to hear those people who criticized the FISP proposal because of its potentially high costs of administration, ready to support the high administrative costs of such an OAS/GIS plan.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Lalonde: Again the question of social priorities must be raised. In view of the needs of poor families, disabled persons and others, it is doubtful that such a move is the most effective way to spend the additional sums of money that would be required.

[Translation]

On February 2, I called a meeting of welfare ministers to discuss these various proposals and to seek the provinces' views on the most appropriate course of action from their point of view. There was a very clear consensus that this was not the time to be changing the structure of the old age pension program. The provincial ministers did not favour at this time extending benefits to spouses, or bringing in the age group 60 to 64, or changing the $1 for $2 reduction formula, or trying to speed up the escalation process. All such changes they regarded as stop-gap measures that would be typical of the piece-meal approach that has been taken for so many years in revising the income security system. Without exception, they called for an integrated approach that would look at the whole system at once and determine where the greatest priorities should lie. They agreed that the needs of pensioners' spouses and of low-income people aged 60 to 65 be reviewed, but at the same time that the needs of low-income families, disabled persons, and other needy groups in the population were being considered. Referring to their own social assistance programs, the provinces are convinced that several groups of needy people in the population have needs at least equal to those of aged persons, and yet their levels of assistance are much below the benefits available to aged couples. In these matters, Mr. Speaker, I am in full agreement with my provincial colleagues.

During their conference in Victoria in November 1972, the provincial ministers had agreed that "the compensation of family expenses related to children, the rehabilitation of the poor through personal development and the provision of effective work incentives are matters of the greatest urgency". They therefore asked for a federal-provincial conference "to discuss social policy on a comprehensive basis".

At the February 2 conference the Quebec Minister of Social Affairs discussed this point in some detail. He said:

In our opinion the matter has much more scope than the mere consideration of the group of old age people and those between 60 and 65 years of age.

The Ontario minister said:

> Social policy needs must be discussed immediately and on a comprehensive basis ... What we must now fully realize and accept is the urgent need to devise an overall integrated approach in this area.

Non-governmental agencies have also been urging such an integrated approach. In its statement "Social Policies for Canada" in 1969 the Canadian Welfare Council recommended that "the federal and provincial governments, in concert, should undertake a nation-wide study of Canada's social security system." Only in this way, it said, can we "achieve a more integrated and satisfactory system of social security."

As a result of our discussions it was agreed that the federal government should not at this time move to change the structure of the OAS system as we have it now, and that any such changes should only be considered as part of the overall review of the whole income security system. We should embark on such an overall review immediately and hold a first conference by the end of April.

Only then can we get a proper perspective on all those people who live in poverty rather than selected groups like the spouses of old age pensioners.

Mr. Speaker, the approach the provinces are pressing on this Parliament is directly in line with the third principle enunciated in the Speech from the Throne which called for "a fair and just relationship" between the guaranteed incomes for people who cannot work, such as the aged, and the allowances paid to those who can work but are unemployed. The review to be undertaken by us jointly with the provinces will seek to work out such a fair and just relationship among the various programs.

The following comparison will perhaps illustrate the problem. With the present increase in OAS pensions, people over 65 will be entitled to incomes of at least $170 a month if single or $324 a month at the married rate. But people who are not yet 65, including those under 60, who must rely on provincial social assistance for support, are entitled to much smaller benefit levels. Single people can receive maximum payments of from $100 a month to $135 a month, a married couple, from $150 to $235 a month. This is the situation, despite the fact that under the Canada Assistance Plan the federal government contributes 50 per cent of the amounts paid by the provinces for social welfare. I repeat, while we give from $170 to $324, depending whether people are single or married, the amount varies from $100 to $135, and from $150 to $235 a month, for people now receiving welfare allowances from the provinces. This is why the provinces argue that first priority should be given to the need for raising benefit levels of poor families in general.

Let us turn now to the situation of persons aged between 60 and 64 years, which, I know, worries not only opposition members but members of our own party who raised the matter with me and in discussions.

Approximately 20,000 people in this age group were unemployed and looking for work in 1972; 5.2 per cent were part of the labour force. Considering this, we should ask ourselves if it would be wise to give greater priority to lowering the pensionable age than to other measures which can be taken to improve the lot of the disadvantaged.

In our society there are 150,000 mothers who by themselves have to raise 330,000 children; 200,000 invalid people aged between 18 and 65; and 575,000 social aid recipients registered in the provinces. This figure comes to about 1.4 million if we count their dependents. The monthly benefits paid to these persons are well below the sum of $170 received by pensioners over 65 years of age. Of all the groups of Canadians in need of aid, why should those who are between 60 and 65 years of age receive priority above all others? By that I do not mean to say that this group does not matter, but rather that—before a decision is made—the situations of the other groups should be examined with equal attention. At a first glance, it would seem to me that mothers who have sole responsibility for raising their children are as much entitled to draw on public funds as 360,000 persons in the 60-65 age group who are working and earning an income.

What is even more important, I believe that we should take the steps necessary to ensure that all Canadians—regardless of age—have the means to meet their needs. This is the goal I set myself in accepting the portfolio of Minister of National Health and Welfare, and it is the goal that the present government set itself in the last Speech from the Throne.

[English]

We must look at the question of overall priorities. These priorities have not yet been established. The relative social priorities of benefits for pensioners' spouses or for widows and single women in the same age group, or for disabled people of any age, or for families struggling to raise young children on limited incomes, ought to be closely examined. The provincial ministers were unanimous in expressing the view that we should not interfere with the structure of the OAS program until we have had a chance to review with them the overall structure of the whole income security system. Which is the group with greatest need for income support at the present time? Would we be justified in providing $150 or $170 a month for people aged 60 to 64, while disabled people are entitled to only $100 to $135 a month under provincial social assistance? Would it be a more appropriate step to channel any available resources toward low income families in order to supplement family income which is inadequate to meet the needs of their dependent children?

These are exactly the kinds of questions which will be tackled in the forthcoming federal-provincial review of the whole income security system. These questions simply serve to show how necessary it is that such an overall review be made.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

[Translation]

Mr. Lalonde: In view of the foregoing, I trust that the aid that we propose to make available to aged persons under the present act will receive the immediate and unanimous approval of the House. Of the 1.8 million OAS pensioners, the vast majority are over 70 years of age. These are the people hardest hit by rising prices, for they have no other alternative means of augmenting their incomes. They are much more dependent on help from others than are younger groups in the population who may also be needy. The inadequacy of benefits now provided for social assistance recipients is not a very compelling argument to old people who are poor. Rather it suggests that ways must be found to improve also the levels of social assistance.

The fact that we plan to act now to improve the position of our aged people, for whom the federal government has recognized its direct responsibility since 1951, does not preclude us from reviewing the whole field of income security in April and succeeding months, including pensions for the aged. It should not be assumed that in our discussions on the income security system we will be confined to a search for ways to redistribute only those resources that have already been allocated to the system. It may well be necessary to find new resources or to shift resources from other areas into the income security system in order to achieve our overall goals for the people of Canada as these are agreed on by the governments during the general review process that we are undertaking.

By this measure we are allocating an additional $300 million to benefits for aged persons, bringing total expenditures from the OAS fund for 1973-74 to about $2.9 billion. This represents an expenditure of 15.3 per cent of the total federal budget. Such large expenditures for one segment of the income security system demand that we examine closely the total allocation of resources in the battle against poverty. What levels of assistance should be provided to persons over 65 and what levels to needy people on provincial assistance? What proportion of the total national product should be allocated to the income security system? It is incumbent upon us to explore the needs of all the poor and not just the aged poor.

We feel that with this measure that is before the House, together with the other measures taken in the taxation field, Mr. Speaker, we have dealt fairly with the needs of our aged people. We should now turn our attention to the needs of other poor people who do not qualify for OAS payments. In particular we are concerned with the needs of poor families in our country, and our next step will be the reform of the family allowance program. This move was promised in the Speech from the Throne, and was expanded on in my speech in this House on January 11. The government has firmly undertaken, in a bill introduced during the present session, to show the same concern for the families of this country, as it has shown today for our old people.

• (1600)

[English]

At the moment we are spending about $640 million for families with children under 18, including $560 million for family allowances, $58 million for youth allowances in nine provinces, and $22 million through fiscal arrangements for schooling allowances in Quebec. The federal and provincial treasuries, by means of the exemptions from taxable income given to parents with dependent children under the federal income tax legislation, are in effect further subsidizing tax paying families by giving up $610 million in income tax revenues. Through the Canada Assistance Plan—

Mr. Stanfield: You have big hearts, you fellows.

Mr. Lalonde: One thing is sure, Mr. Speaker, when the Conservatives were in power federally they did not do a thing with regard to family allowances. If you go through the record of social legislation in this country, Mr. Speaker, you will find that the Conservative party has done practically nothing in this whole area.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Lalonde: Through the Canada Assistance Plan the federal and provincial governments are spending $1.4 billion for persons in need, including needy families with dependent children. We intend to tackle the problem of family poverty and to rationalize our treatment of children under these various programs in the course of the review we are about to undertake with the provinces.

Last year we raised the OAS-GIS payment by $15 a month. At the same time we changed the escalation provisions so that the full increase in the annual cost of living is applied both to the OAS pension and to GIS. I was amazed to see during the recent election campaign and since, editorials stating that we should escalate the old age pensions, this having been done since the budget last May. We have now further increased the basic OAS pension to the level of $100 a month. This means that the elderly people in Canada are guaranteed an annual income of $2,042 at the single rate and $3,895 at the married rate. Together with the CPP retirement pension, an old person could get a combined pension of $2,524 if single or $4,378 if married to an OAS pensioner.

It is difficult to compare pension levels from one country to another because of the wide differences that exist in the nature of each country's pension system. Most countries have contributory earnings-related pensions, like those under the Canada and Quebec pension plans. Some of these make provision for a minimum pension, but not all. Only a few provide for universal pensions, like Canada's old age security plan. As well as the complexities, there is the problem of converting foreign currencies into Canadian dollars in a way that will recognize the price levels in each country and the average levels of income. The Canadian Magazine in its August 19, 1972 issue reported on the cost of an identical basket of food in the capitals of 23 countries. While such a basket of food is not the measure of the standard of living in each of these countries, it does provide an approximation of the living costs since food is an important factor in the budget of an elderly person.

In relating Canadian benefits for the aged to food costs as calculated by the Canadian Magazine country by country, the following situations are observed. Canadian minimum benefits are higher than those in Sweden, and in addition food costs in Sweden are about 80 per cent higher than those in Canada. While food costs are nearly 20 per cent lower in the United Kingdom, Canadian benefits are almost three times as high as those in the United Kingdom. Food costs are about 10 per cent higher in the United States, but minimum benefits in Canada are more than double those in the United States. The maximum benefit in Canada, including OAS, GIS and CPP, is about the same as that for a single person in the United States, but much higher than that for a married couple. Minimum benefits are higher in Canada than in France, and food costs in France are about 60 per cent higher than in Canada. There are no minimum benefits under the West German program with which to compare Canadian pensions, but Canadian maximum benefits are lower than those in West Germany. However, food costs in Germany were about 100 per cent higher than those in Canada.

From these rough comparisons—and I admit that these are rough comparisons—it can be concluded that minimum benefits for the aged in Canada are higher than those provided in the United States, the United Kingdom, France or Sweden. With the measure that is before the House today, this government has kept Canada in the forefront of the countries of the western world in providing income security for older people. I am particularly proud to be part of a government and of a political party that have made sure over the years that Canada would not only keep that lead over the other countries, but would increase it.

• (1610)

Mr. Heath Macquarrie (Hillsborough): Mr. Speaker, it is a great pleasure to follow the minister. His modesty varied in reverse proportion to the modesty of his proposals. Not only did he reach back through time but extended his comparison through space to every country with the exception of Australia. He said we were incomparable. This remark struck me. It is a remark which emanates so often from people in the minister's party. It is suggested again that the Liberal party uniquely shows its great concern for the plight of the aged people in Canada, that the members of that party alone hold a monopoly on concern and that they and they alone care. This is the party of the "six-buck boys" which had the effrontery to go to the country in 1968, on an increase of 42 cents a month. Then, I see that there is the old refrain that they have "effectively banished poverty for persons of over 65 years of age". Then, there is the familiar refrain, "You never had it so good". I am sure the aged of Canada will note that they have been told how generous the government has been and how amply it has met their needs in a country which under this administration has been facing grinding and groaning inflation year after year. I should like to say to the minister that this party will support Bill C-147—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Macquarrie: —not with the ecstasy which some have already expressed, but because it is the best available and is the best we are likely to get from this government so long as it clings to power. I shall go a little further than that and say that, although in my view it is much less pretentious than the minister seems to think, we will be glad to expedite its passage. If it is agreeable to the other parties, we will field one spokesman, namely myself, and move on to the veterans legislation. But this offer is made with wide-open eyes. I remember very well what happened during the debate on the estimates when we ended up by creating an oratorical vacuum for government supporters on this side of the House and elsewhere. If the agreement is such, we will stick by it and do our best in committee, although there may be witnesses who might like to come to the committee and testify as to how grateful they are that all their needs have been met. Later on in my remarks I will indicate why I feel tepidity rather than enthusiasm for this particular measure.

It is the first bill the minister has brought forward and it is a custom in parliamentary circles to congratulate ministers when they present their first legislative infant to the baptismal font, and I do that with sincerity. I have already congratulated the minister upon proceeding from the back room to the green chamber. I have reflected on this of late. When I see that so many princes from the Prime Minister's palace have gone into limbo I feel that his survival is pretty remarkable. Practically all are gone save he. We look around and see that the felled princes have been succeeded by the fallen politicians, and I am told it is the only palace in the world where the old guard is replaced by a still older guard. In the light of this legislation, whether the minister's move was fateful rather than fatal time alone will tell. All the leaks we had heard and noted, and all the thought waves from commentators in recent weeks and months as well as the vibrations from the inner sancta and writings of eminent journalists, indicated we would be looking at a figure of $125 today. Who cut that figure down? Was it the President of the Treasury Board (Mr. Drury); was it the Minister of Finance (Mr. Turner)? Surely, it was not the spokesman for the junior partnership in this alliance for perpetrated power, the New Democratic Party, because its figure is $150.

However, the $125 figure is not before us today. I wonder what thwarted the minister's $125 plan? Some day when we are all gone, some student will peruse the archives and will find out. Today, we can probably surmise with reasonable accuracy. While it is the custom to congratulate the father of a bill, I am in a difficult situation today because this bill has two fathers, a difficult situation biologically but not impossible politically. The Leader of the New Democratic Party (Mr. Lewis) said there would not have been a pension increase to $100 if the New Democratic Party had not insisted on it. I ask, what in heaven's name the increase would have been had the government been left alone. Had the junior partner not moved in, would there have been an increase of $6 or would it have been 42 cents? I look forward to hearing from my venerable and beloved friend, the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles), because I know he called for $150. He is getting $100. Yet it seems, despite the fact that the figure is not $150 but rather $100—this cherished figure is gone—he is going to support an incompetent and insensitive government on the strength of not $150 but $100. Many things will be said about the distinguished member for Winnipeg North Centre, but it may not be said that he was particularly hard to satisfy.

This is certainly an important piece of legislation. It was presented today in unusually partisan terms for this kind of legislation. I simply state that the political and parliamentary structure in this country make it all the more important that the Canadian people, especially the Canadian elderly people, should take particular note of what is going on because perhaps this very bill is the marriage document for which we have been looking. Perhaps this is it, and all the rest was word of mouth. Here we have something on paper. I tried before to help my former neighbours, the members of the New Democratic Party. I tried to warn them what would happen if they allowed things like this to take place. I told them about the occasion when the Progressive Party, which was twice as large as the New Democratic Party or the CCF, was wooed and won by a Liberal party in the twenties and explained that after the wooing was over little was left of them. A few prairie politicians called themselves Liberal-Progressives and a few senators called themselves Liberals.

I paid a disrespect to my colleague the other day when I said that perhaps some day I will go to the gallery of the Senate, since I may never get the floor, and see Senator Lewis and Senator Knowles being escorted by Senator Argue. I forgot that they deserve two escorts and that Senator Eugene Forsey, who is the expert on the constitutional correctitude of governors-general, would be there to help them up the aisle.

I used to sit next to the NDP in the last parliament and it was an exhilarating experience. I enjoyed it when brave David took on Goliath across the way. What wonderfully polished pellets he used to throw across the aisle and what brilliant invectives there were about the "arrogant technocrats" who were going to fall. I looked, hoped, wondered if this would take place and some day with a shrug and perhaps a couple of four letter words, in a figurative sense, Goliath would expire and David take over.

But now I have been moved and, apparently, so have they. No more David and Goliath scenes at all. Now, it is David and Jonathan. We Presbyterians love the Old Testament and we remember what David said of Jonathon: "thy love to me was wonderful, passing the love of women". These are stirring days and stirring times, and I verily believe that we are living in the last days of pre-organic unity. I say to the minister, having placed things in this proper historic perspective, as I have a right to do so since he gave the broadest geographic background, let him not proclaim and at the same time try to be credible that this bill is a burst of generosity for which senior citizens should exude eternal gratitude to him and his ilk. For years, indeed since this government took office—and I put this at a decade ago—with its inflationary policies year after year it has been victimizing the very people about whom the minister talked with such apparent concern. This bill is not excessive generosity. This bill is delayed and partial justice, because the older people have been unfairly bearing the burden of inflation put upon them and the government has been remiss in not taking remedial action long since.

I have here a splendid document published by the United Church of Canada. So ecumenical are we these days that as a continuing Presbyterian I will quote from it. I find here an editorial from the Toronto Star which reads:

In 1967, the federal government, being of sound mind and body,—

That was when the Star was Liberal —decided to increase the standard old age pension of $75 a month by providing a supplement of up to $30 for those needing it. It wasn't a princely sum, but it helped.

In revising the pension, Ottawa was declaring, in effect, that we Canadians could afford to turn over a somewhat larger portion of our collective resources in order to maintain our 1,663,000 old age pensioners at a slightly more decent level of existence.

It was a solemn and careful undertaking, made after much agonizing about social responsibility and much squinting at our collective pocketbook—and yet we have been reneging on that undertaking ever since. Each year we have been giving old age pensioners a smaller share of our resources than we did in 1967; each year the pension buys less than it did the year before; and each year our old people slide further backward into the penury from which we set out to rescue them.

That situation has not, alas, profoundly changed, and I say to the minister that while he produced copious figures, usually they were of the kind that indicate that improvements cannot be made. But he produced copious figures on the state of the nation and the state of the old people. I have also done some research in this matter. If the old age security from 1963 when this group of people took over the destinies of this country had been increased by the actual cost of living year by year, the minister's announced figure today would not be sufficient to give them the same purchasing power that they had in 1963. Let him call that generosity. Let him look at those figures and say that eternal gratitude must forever fall upon the Liberal party of Canada.

Mr. Whicher: That is at the age of 70, not 65.

Mr. Stanfield: There is our friend again, the just society fellow.

An hon. Member: He woke up again.

Mr. Macquarrie: I would like to say that if the actual cost of living had been added, the pension would now be up to $107. That is the situation. We have held back. We have laid that burden on the older people. We have made them and other people on fixed and low incomes bear too much of the burden of inflation which an incompetent and insensitive government has visited on the people of this country for a decade. As one of my colleagues said, the six buck boys are seven bucks short.

So, I cannot stand up and say that, in the light of this legislation, my colleagues and I are so impressed and so enamoured that we are going to vote to sustain this government in office. If this was expected of us, then I am sorry to disappoint you. We agree pretty well with what Donald Macdonald of the Canadian Labour Congress thinks of the budget. He does not think it is much, and we do not want to disagree with him in that appraisal of the budget. So, our affirmative vote for the bill that we have before us is given because we regard it as a delayed recognition. It is an attempt to catch up. But, as I pointed out, even at that it does not quite do the job.

I was impressed with the many suggestions which the minister momentarily brought before us, and then almost instantly pushed away for interesting reasons, such as that they cost too much, or the provinces do not like them, or we have not had our conference on that yet. So once again we seem to be pretty well frozen to $7 below what in justice the pension should be. There are more things that should be done. We should be looking with concern and compassion upon a movement to lower the age of eligibility to 60. There is much to be done on this whole question.

I agree with the minister that it is a social priority; it is something that transcends legislation; it is a fundamental societal question. Perhaps at one stage in our social development we over-regarded the mere accumulation of years when societies believed that elder worship was the summum bonum of social values. It was believed that to be old was to be wise, was to be virtuous and, what was more important, was to be in command. Perhaps that was not too wise an appraisal. Perhaps Swift was right when he said:

• (1630)

Old men and comets have been reverenced for the same reason: their long beards and pretences to foretell events.

But our day sees perhaps rather too strong a reaction against gerontocracy. Now, many people believe that to be old is to be out of touch, to be out of things altogether.

Many people today who seek employment, not old people, people in their fifties or early sixties and the Prime Minister and I at age 53 would not accept that as old, get the cold turndown of refusal. There is too much the feeling that when one is no longer young, one is no longer needed. Perhaps we should remind ourselves, as Ulysses did in advanced age, that:

Old age hath yet his honour and his toil;

We should look thoughfully and earnestly at this issue of lowering our retirement age. It should be viewed as something more than an early transfer of more and more of our citizens out to pasture. It must be regarded as something more than a way out of the unemployment mess which has plagued us again and again for ten years. But if the state makes early retirement possible we should, in our society, establish social values which make early retirement meaningful. Shakespeare put it well when he wrote:

Give me a staff of honour for my age.

But not a sceptre to control the world.

I agree that this is a question of profundity, of concern, and I do agree that it is one to which all levels of government must give the most earnest and thoughtful consideration. Perhaps we have in our labour-saving age reached a stage where the work force should indeed, can indeed, may indeed in the old fashioned sense, be much smaller. And yet existence must be meaningful. So, we get into the realm of leisure time activity. We have to find employment for those who want employment. We have to find a meaningful challenge for those who are employed. So, in the long run as we look upon these issues which concern the quality of life, we come back to regarding the quality of government. The government which cannot find employment for its people cannot bring about that quality of life which all its people, its workers and its leisured, are entitled to in a society with the values of ours.

The unemployment and the inflation of the last ten years have sapped our economy, have diminished the quality of life, and put us into the situation where the minister, while at one time indicating his great generosity in bringing up many meaningful programs, points out that the economy is such that they cannot be undertaken.

[Mr. Macquarrie.]

One thing that did disturb me perhaps most of all in the minister's speech was the seemingly subtle suggestion that one sector of society, namely, the aged, should have their needs frozen while all other corrective measures are worked out. That strikes me as extremely unfair. Why go to these people and say, "You hold the line until we bring about a better society for the rest of our people." Why again take it out of the hides of the aged? If corrective measures are needed, and they are needed, let them be carried by all of society, and not make them uniquely a charge on those who are aged.

I note what the minister said about the mothers' allowance, the family allowance. We expect a family allowance bill which will provide increases, and we do not expect the kind of monstrosity that came up in the last parliament. I would say that the author of that bill should be given a job in the Globe and Mail doing the puzzle that is on the front page, that mathematical blister. That bill was an administrative nightmare. I hope we will have something that will be meaningful, and that will not have in it that psychology that you should take away from those who are already getting it, the "princely" sum now in the family allowance. I think that should be preserved, but we should also look to a realistic figure that will take heed of the rising costs of living.

Then, there are special categories. The minister mentioned some. Surely, we have reached the time when we can recognize that certain categories of our fellow citizens have such disabilities that their disabilities alone entitle them to compassion and consideration. Surely, a person who is without sight, a blind person, need not prove his poverty before he gets that allowance? Surely, too, the totally disabled, the person who for reasons beyond his control, and for physical reasons cannot go into the world and make his own way—surely he is a special case?

I hope the minister will pay particular note to the notice of motion which the hon. member for Brandon-Souris (Mr. Dinsdale) has placed on the order paper, one of the most thoughtful, perceptive and compassionate pieces of suggested legislation that I have seen in a long, long time. He invites special concern for the handicapped. And how often we can be so careless, Mr. Speaker. We build our public buildings so that people with wheelchairs cannot get in. We even have post offices where a lame man cannot climb up the steps. There is so much more we can do in this field. I remember that the hon. member for Oxford (Mr. Nesbitt) talked the other day about some of the problems of the disabled. He used the colourful expression, the rather painfully colourful expression, that in some cases you had to be devoid of both legs and arms to be considered disabled by those who hand out the allowance.

The minister did not deal with the New Horizons Program. I think that is an interesting program. If he were still here, I would tell him that I believe much can be done on a particular suggestion by a group in Charlottetown, but I will write to him about that. The creative activity of senior citizens should be encouraged.

I do not accept the idea that we should throw cold water now on the suggestion that the spouse of an old age security recipient, because she is not 65 or he is not 65, should not be entitled to an allowance. Surely, here is an area where we can move to correct that one injustice. There are many couples who are living on the single pension, simply because one or other has not reached the age of 65.

There are now in Canada some organizations of senior citizens, and I think we should look to them for leadership. They are the ones who know. The National Pensioners and Senior Citizens met in Charlottetown not long ago. They showed their great wisdom in the choice of the convention site. They brought forward some very interesting suggestions as to how their lot might be improved. I am sure that their suggested pension was not $100. I do not know whether the minister got their letter or not; they actually suggested $150. They mentioned some of the things that have already been discussed here. They felt, and I can understand why, that the cost of drugs was excessive and they made suggestions for plans whereby the older people could travel in Canada at a cheaper rate in the off season. Another suggestion was that a period of grace be extended to people in straightened circumstances in the OAS group upon the demise of either spouse, in consideration of the heavy expenses incurred at such a time. It would not cost a fortune to enact any of these things and they are the kinds of things that would indicate a constant awareness of the needs of senior citizens and a flexibility in attitude as well as a degree of compassion, showing that the government cares for those who have made the country what it is.

Another subject on which I have had many letters is the problem faced by our older citizens when they get an increase and some landlord grabs it. That is outrageous, especially when it happens in those institutions which are supported by federal and other governments.

• (1640)

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Macquarrie: I remember some old men telling me that the increase is so devoured that they did not even have enough to buy an extra pouch of tobacco.

There are so many areas of concern, Mr. Speaker, so many areas for improvement, I just want to say that we welcome this measure of justice; we support it but this party has no intention of entering the auction room. We are not going to go about the land with great bids for particular support. It little profits to bid $150 and accept $100—you would never get away with that at Sotheby's.

We are not going to make preposterous promises because we happen to be led by a man who is responsible at all times and who has no intention of moving the power by the preposterous bribes that glitter for the moment and then are gone from reality. We also are led by a man who, before too long, will be in office.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Macquarrie: We are not going to trifle with the real needs of the senior citizens of this country for the ersatz satisfaction of trying to gain a few more votes at election time. We will tell the senior citizens of this country that what Canada needs today is a government of competence, a government that can manage the country and its affairs, a government that can and will do something about this eternal and infernal unemployment which is ruining this land.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Macquarrie: Canada needs a government that will do more than say that the defeat of inflation is around the corner, which we have gone around eight times and it is still there.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Macquarrie: The first need of the land is to have a government with competence, a government which will not have to put so much of the nation's wealth into unemployment insurance. It is not unemployment insurance that is our burden, it is unemployment.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Macquarrie: That is the problem. That is why so many of the government's programs which the minister mentioned today have to be left in the cupboard. With efficient administration, with competent government, we will provide the people of this country with the kind of meaningful, compassionate administration in the areas that we talk about. It is not going to be just glittering promises; we can assure them that it will have real purpose, that this will be a better land and a better governed land. That is the future I see for this country and especially the older people, and I invite them to look forward to it, as I do, with eager anticipation.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, I confess that on entering this debate this afternoon my mind goes back a number of years. We have before us a bill which makes the basic amount of the old age pension $100 a month. I am not even an old age pensioner yet—I am only 64. But when I first came here, Mr. Speaker, a little over 30 years ago—

An hon. Member: My God!

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): —the old age pension was only $20 a month. Not only was it so small an amount but it was payable only at age 70 and it had attached to it a means test which said that no person could be on the old age pension and have a total income of more than $365 a year. That was the standard for the people on the old age pension when I first came here—$1 a day.

Just to be sure that my recollections are correct, last evening I checked the Hansards of the first year or two that I was a member of this House. It is there on the record; one of the battles that I got into right away was that of trying to get that pension of $20 a month raised to $30 a month. Imagine that—asking for a pension of $30 a month! The question came back from the other side, just as it is coming now from Little Sir Echo behind me, where will the money come from?

Mr. Speaker, we fought hard over this issue then as we have done over the years since I first came here. Likewise, I may say that back in 1942 and 1943 public opinion was on our side. In addition to that, some of the provinces felt that something had to be done. In those days the pension was not only as I have described it but it was financed 75 per cent by the federal government and 25 per cent by the provinces.

In my own province of Manitoba, where the Honourable Stuart Garson was then premier, an effort was made to force the hand of the government by adding $1.25 to the $20 pension and saying that this was 25 per cent of a $5 increase but the federal government still refused to agree. Some other provinces took similar steps with the result that finally there was enough pressure from the provinces and the public, and enough pressure put on the government by those of us who were in this House, that we did win an increase.

Hon. members who have been around here for even a few years will be interested in knowing the vehicle that was used in this instance. It was announced on July 24, 1943, by the then minister of finance, the late Right Hon. J. L. Ilsley. He pointed out that the government of the day, that of Mackenzie King, had decided that, for the sake of public morale in time of war it was necessary to do something to ease the plight of our old age pensioners; as a result, it was under the War Measures Act that an order in council was passed raising the maximum pension from $20 to $25 a month. I smiled to myself when I looked last evening at Hansard for July 24, 1943, and discovered that the then member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles) spoke on behalf of this party in response to that increase from $20 to $25 per month. And what did the member for Winnipeg North Centre say on that occasion? He said, "We welcome the increase; we welcome this $5, but it should have been $10."

• (1650)

An hon. Member: That sounds just like the hon. member.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Thirty years have gone by, Mr. Speaker, and the same member for Winnipeg North Centre is now saying the same thing. We welcome the increase to $100, but, for heaven's sake, why did the government not make it $150?

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Let there be no doubt about it; that is still our position—

An hon. Member: But the hon. member voted for this increase.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): —that the basic old age pension should be raised to $150 a month.

Let me say that I like my friend the hon. member for Hillsborough (Mr. Macquarrie) so well that I hoped he would, in his speech, fill a gap this afternoon that has been evident for a long time. I dared to hope that he would tell us where his party stands on what the basic amount of the old age security pension should be. The Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Stanfield) has not told us. When asked about this during the course of the budget debate, he told my leader to look up what he had said during the last budget debate. We did. His proposals added up to almost $95 a month. The hon. member for Hillsborough today said that the basic pension of $100 per month is about $7 short of the amount it ought to be, yet he did not say that the basic pension ought to be even $107 per month.

Some hon. Members: Shame.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): If one remembers, when considering the remarks of the hon. member, that during the election campaign the Leader of the Opposition was honest and forthright enough to tell old age pensioners that he would not back their campaign for $150 a month as the basic pension, it becomes clear, though we may be dissatisfied and disappointed because the basic pension has been increased only to $100, that this pension increase is better than any which would have been granted if the roles of the government and opposition had been reversed and the opposition were sitting on the other side of the House of Commons.

Mr. Alexander: The hon. member is only speculating. He will never know.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, I was immodest enough a few minutes ago to draw a parallel in history between something I had been doing and saying in 1943 and that which I am doing and saying in 1973. May I draw another historical parallel? Near me sits the hon. member for Vancouver-Kingsway (Mrs. MacInnis). Back in 1926, it was her late and illustrious father, the former member for Winnipeg North Centre, the late J. S. Woodsworth, who, assisted by a few others—

An hon. Member: Were you here then Stan?

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): No, Mr. Speaker, but I was watching what was going on—who got from the Mackenzie King government of the day the first old age pension in this country. It is clear from the record and from the letter Mr. King sent Mr. Woodsworth, copies of which we have scattered widely, that the government of that day initially had no intention of bringing in an old age pension but that, because of the pressure which Mr. Woodsworth was able to put on the minority government of that day, we were given the first old age pension in this country.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): I say to you that today, Mr. Speaker, that page of history is being repeated. Today, again, there is a minority government in this House. The hon. member for Hillsborough wondered what the Liberals might have done if we were not in the position of exerting some of the influence we seem to have today. I can tell him what would have happened if the Liberals had been returned with a clear majority.

An hon. Member: Or the Tories.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Or if the Conservatives had been so returned, for that matter.

Mr. Alexander: Please do not lump us with that gang over there.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): If the Liberals had been returned with a clear majority, the basic old age security pension would have increased in April by the amount automatically provided, that is, to $86.61, and that is all.

Mr. Alexander: I agree with the hon. member.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): It is perfectly clear that just as J. S. Woodsworth, and those who supported him back in 1926, won for us the first old age pension, so it is clear because there are 31 New Democrats in the House today and because the Liberal party in government is in a minority position, there has been given this increase of $13.39 more than would have been given if the Liberals had been returned with a majority.

If this bill is passed, and I trust it will be passed quickly, and if it is accepted by the other place, which, by the way, threw out the first old age pension bill back in 1925, the law respecting old age pensions will be changed, effective April 1. That means that the April cheques, which our pensioners will not get until the end of April, will be increased by the amount provided for in this bill. As I understand it, every one of the 1,800,000 pensioners in Canada, those on the old age security pension only, those on old age security plus part of the Guaranteed Income Supplement and those on old age security plus the full Guaranteed Income Supplement, will get $13.39 more than they would have got in April of this year. That, Mr. Speaker, is happening in Canada in 1973 because, on October 30, 1972, the people of Canada elected a minority government and elected 31 New Democrats to this House to speak for the old people of this country.

Mr. Alexander: What a line that is. The Liberals will not buy that.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Just as we are proud of what the late J. S. Woodsworth did in 1926, so we are proud of what we are doing today for 1,800,000 pensioners in this country.

Mr. Alexander: The hon. member has to say that. He is trying to justify the marriage between his party and the Liberals.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, I see that you are looking at the clock, and that it is five o'clock. I shall continue with these remarks at eight o'clock.

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

SUBJECT MATTER OF QUESTIONS TO BE DEBATED

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. Having noticed that it is five o'clock, it is my duty at this time, pursuant to Standing Order 40, to inform the House that the questions to be raised tonight at the time of adjournment are as follows: the hon. member for Vancouver-Kingsway (Mrs. MacInnis)—Manpower—Refusal of unemployment insurance benefits to persons taking courses; the hon. member for Calgary North (Mr. Woolliams)—Labour Relations—Elevator constructors' strike—Federal government action to achieve settlement; the hon. member for Fraser Valley West (Mr. Rose)—Canadian National Railways—Alleged slowdown by Vancouver yard crews—Reason for lower productivity.

It being five o'clock, the House will now proceed to the consideration of private members' business.

Mr. MacLean: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker, I believe there is an understanding, as was mentioned by the government House leader early today, that private members' hour on this occasion will, by special arrangement, be devoted to consideration of Notice of Motion No. 76 standing in the name of the hon. member for Fundy-Royal (Mr. Fairweather).

Mr. Deputy Speaker: May I ask if this is agreed to by all hon. members?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

PRIVATE MEMBERS' MOTIONS

INTER-PARLIAMENTARY UNION

CONFERENCE ON EUROPEAN CO-OPERATION AND SECURITY

Mr. R. Gordon L. Fairweather (Fundy-Royal) moved:

That, in the opinion of this House, note should be taken of the Inter-Parliamentary Conference on European Co-operation and Security held in Helsinki, Finland, from January 26-31, 1973.

He said: Mr. Speaker, may I first thank the House for the arrangements which have been made enabling us to debate this matter this afternoon. I think this is a "first". The Canadian branch of the Inter-Parliamentary Union, of which I have the honour to be the chairman this year, has initiated the formula for bringing to the attention of the House of Commons and of the Senate some of the deliberations that are held at the various meetings of the Inter-Parliamentary Union. I do not say this in any wish to be boastful. I think the precedent is interesting and the record should note that.

• (1700)

I also want to say that the motion could translate the work of the various parliamentary associations, for example, the Commonwealth Parliamentary Association, the NATO Association, the United States-Canada Interparliamentary Group, the Francophone group and others, into the records of this parliament. I think that is an important first step.

I am very grateful to the House leaders of the government and other parties for agreeing that this is a procedure worth testing. I want to have most of the time today for the delegates to the Helsinki conference, but if I can exercise the privilege that is mine because I am up first, may I say that one of the proposals contained in the Final Act of the Inter-Parliamentary Conference on European Co-operation and Security in Helsinki has very great relevance to Canada. It reads:

Carrying out, in a humanitarian spirit, negotiations at the governmental level with a view to eliminating the problems posed by the separation of members of families seeking to be reunited;

There are other parts of this resolution or proposal that other hon. members will discuss more extensively, but I think that that resolution or proposal has a peculiarly Canadian mix, if I can put it that way.

I noticed the other day in the statistics from the Department of Manpower and Immigration that this country has had over 10 million immigrants since 1867. About one half of our population is of immigrant stock. In many instances, this means that families have been separated and, therefore, it is a peculiarly Canadian wish that the nations of Europe agree with us on a formula for re-uniting many of these families. That was one of the proposals of the Canadian government at the government level. I think it is particularly apt that Canadian parliamentarians speaking for this chamber were able to bring that proposal forward and have it as part of the Final Act of the Helsinki conference.

The resolution is in my name, Mr. Speaker, but there are three parliamentarians who are delegates of the Canadian branch of the parliamentary union. I want to reiterate my thanks to those who were responsible for this first step in the conference of parliamentary associations.

Hon. J. A. MacLean (Malpeque): Mr. Speaker, it is a great pleasure for me to take part in this debate on the resolution of the hon. member for Fundy-Royal (Mr. Fairweather) which reads:

That, in the opinion of this House, note should be taken of the Inter-Parliamentary Conference on European Co-operation and Security held in Helsinki, Finland, from January 26-31, 1973.

It was a special event for the Inter-Parliamentary Union to organize a regional conference for the discussion of European Co-operation and Security. Never before had the Inter-Parliamentary Union convened a regional conference or one with a limited topic. The decision was taken in April, 1972 at the spring meeting of the Union in Yaoundé, subject to confirmation at the annual conference in Rome in September. Finland offered to act as host, and the decision was taken to hold a Conference on European Co-operation and Security in Helsinki from November 10 to 15, 1972. At the Rome meeting, the West German delegation drew attention to the election to take place in Germany on November 19. In view of the central role of the Federal German Republic, it was decided at the Rome meeting of postpone the conference and to hold it on January 26 to 31, 1973.

Holding the conference in January was highly fortuitous because the inter-governmental preparatory discussions on security and co-operation in Europe had begun in late November. The representatives of the countries at that conference were mostly ambassadors. Although some of the essential ground had been cleared, talks were making slow progress. During the six days of meetings of the IPU conference, it proved to be possible to reach agreement on a major statement of objectives described as the Final Act of the conference. This included reaching general agreement on formulations to cover several issues which remained in contention in the inter-governmental talks already being held in Helsinki and at the Conference on Mutual Force Reductions which opened at the end of January in Vienna. Inevitably, therefore, the Final Act of the Helsinki Inter-Parliamentary Union Conference can be expected to have an immediate impact on the intergovernmental negotiations in both Helsinki and Vienna.

I might say that the countries represented at the conference were virtually all European countries whether or not they were members of IPU, and Canada and the United States were represented because of our keen interest and involvement, not only in security in Europe but in European culture, trade and the many other things that we have in common with the European countries that attended the conference. In addition to this, several countries which are members of IPU sent observers. Among them were Brazil, India, Indonesia, Israel, Japan, Mongolia and others.

The organization of the conference was done in a very effective and efficient manner. The conference opened on January 26 with a formal ceremony at which addresses were made by President Urho Kekkonen, the President of the Republic of Finland, Mr. Johannes Virolainen, President of the Finnish group of the IPU, Mr. John Hall, first vice-president of the IPU Council and Mr. Leonid Kutakov, Under Secretary-General of the United Nations, who represented the Secretary-General of the United Nations. Mr. Virolainen was elected chairman of the conference.

All points of organization, which was the responsibility of the Finnish group, were of high, effective and efficient order. The Finnish parliament co-operated fully and the hospitality and other arrangements made for all delegations were excellent indeed. We were not only extended hospitality by the Finnish group and the Finnish parliament, but also by the president, the mayor of Helsinki, the government of Finland and many others.

• (1710)

Canada played an important part in this conference. Prior to the conference itself, the Canadian delegation was one of the very few western delegations to submit a draft resolution. This was on the issue of the uniting of families. At the opening of the conference, the Canadian delegation submitted a resolution on development assistance and its relevance to east-west relations. I had the honour of being one of the members of the delegation. The delegation consisted of three members—myself, the hon. member for York North (Mr. Danson) and the hon. member for Scarborough West (Mr. Harney). They spoke on those two Canadian working papers in the plenary session. Their speeches were of a very high order, and a credit to Canada. I had the honour of being selected as the nominal head of the Canadian delegation, and I took part in the work of the first committee. My colleagues took part in the work of committees two and three, respectively, which dealt with the two Canadian initiatives. They will be speaking more fully later on these questions and I, therefore, do not intend to say anything further about them at present.

The Canadian parliament might be pleased to know that although its delegation was a small one—all the delegations were small, by arrangement—it was a hard-working one. I might even say we were up long before daybreak and working hard into the night. Perhaps, though, I should add that day breaks around ten o'clock in Helsinki at this time of the year and night falls around four o'clock!

We received excellent co-operation and assistance in every way from Canada's ambassador in Helsinki, Mr. Ernest Côté. He is a man who is well known to many Members of Parliament, having served in a number of senior government posts here before being appointed ambassador to Finland. The delegation is especially indebted to Mr. Peter Dobell from the Parliamentary Centre for Foreign Affairs and Foreign Trade who accompanied the delegation as adviser. His advice and counsel were invaluable. I should also say that the arrangements made by the staff of the Parliamentary Association here in Ottawa were excellent. Everything was arranged in a way which made it possible for our delegation to function in the best possible manner.

As I said earlier, the two Canadian resolutions were dealt with in committees two and three. Committee two dealts with proposals in the area of economic relations. Committee three dealt with proposals for co-operation in the areas of science, technology, education and culture as well as with proposals concerning exchanges of persons and information. I served on the first committee which dealt with proposals in the area of security. That committee had this to say:

The Conference,

1. Wishes to see national Parliaments contribute to the organization of détente and the strengthening of security in Europe;
2. Notes that the security of the European continent is dependent, to a large extent, on each State respecting and applying the generally recognized principles of international law which govern inter-State relations;
3. Is aware of the need to give concrete significance to the abovementioned principles;
4. Appeals to Governments to examine, at the Conference, on Security and Co-operation in Europe (CSCE), the question of the system for the peaceful settlement of disputes and, in case of need, that of its improvement;
5. Calls upon the Parliaments and Governments of each State to consider:

(a) Implementing steps to create greater mutual confidence among the Governments concerned leading to a genuine reduction of tensions, such as by giving advance notice of manoeuvres and exchanging observers;

(b) Stimulating a mutual and balanced reduction of armed forces and armaments in Europe, through negotiations which would be accessible to all states concerned, with a view to gradually reducing all armed forces and armaments to a less dangerous level and to ensuring the equal security of States, taking into account that the disarmament problem constitutes an essential component of security;

(c) Taking concerted action to combat terrorism in Europe and support the ratification of international conventions in this field.

I shall conclude by saying that I hope my contribution is in accord with a procedure which I believe to be an excellent one and which I hope will continue as a general practice in the future in relation to the work of parliamentary associations, as noted by the mover of the motion.

Mr. Barnett J. Danson (York North): Mr. Speaker, I am delighted to take part in this discussion. I welcome the procedure initiated by the hon. member for Fundy-Royal (Mr. Fairweather). I think it is an excellent precedent, one which will ensure that the proceedings and reports of such conferences as these are placed on record in parliament and discussed in a serious way. I am particularly pleased to follow the hon. member for Malpeque (Mr. MacLean) who, with his customary modesty, told the House he was the nominal head of the delegation. He was the head of the delegation in every sense of the word, and he led our delegation with dignity and distinction. I think we should be grateful to him.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Danson: It was my pleasure to serve on the third committee, known at the conference as the Social and Cultural Committee. I was always social, although I have never been accused of being cultural. This is the committee referred to, more fully, as the committee considering proposals for co-operation in the areas of science, technology, education and culture, as well as the exchange of persons and information. It was this exchange of persons which was of particular interest to us, as the hon. member for Fundy-Royal has said.

It was necessary, as a matter of fact, to establish a Canadian interest in a conference on European security and co-operation, even in our own minds, so as to put the meetings into a proper context. As the hon. member for Fundy-Royal has said, the very nature of Canada gives us our European context and purpose. I do not mean in any way to suggest that our native peoples are less important in any sense. Such a large part of our population can find its roots in Europe, and our culture is deeply rooted there. Canadians have fought in Europe in two world wars and have a presence in European security today through NATO. Thus, we cannot divorce ourselves from this presence; it is one that we should nourish and encourage, not only for the value it adds to the richness of our culture and the people represented in Canada, but for the pragmatic reason that it is in our best interests to maintain a position in Europe.

Although we have considerable trouble maintaining our identity on this continent, the world is breaking up into security and economic blocs and we do not want to see ourselves isolated or to isolate ourselves. Therefore, the Canadian presence was a very legitimate one, and it was of interest to the delegates to the conference, in establishing this point, that we gave an indication of the ethnic make-up of our own country. I am sorry that I did not bring the statistics with me which we used in Helsinki, but after the British and the French, the Italians and Germans are the next largest ethnic groups. The Ukrainians are the fifth largest ethnic group. However, as you go down the list you find that every country with representatives at the conference had sent immigrants to Canada, with the possible exception of San Marino. I think this impressed the delegates and put this country in its proper context.

In the original draft resolution on the reunification of families, the following was the wording:

Recognizing the desirability of promoting increased human contacts,

Calls upon the parliaments of all participating states to urge their governments to begin multilateral discussions toward the conclusion of an international declaration providing for the progressive elimination by all states of obstacles on members of families seeking to reunite across national borders.

Then, as a result of negotiation, the Final Act read as follows:

Carrying out, in a humanitarian spirit, negotiations at the governmental level with a view to eliminating the problems posed by the separation of members of families seeking to be reunited;

As the hon. member for Fundy-Royal (Mr. Fairweather) has said, we do not have to make excuses for, or qualify our interest in, reunification of families because it is a problem that directly concerns Canada, and it is part of our foreign policy on which we have been consistent and united ever since I have been a Member of Parliament.

It is of interest to note that the Swiss delegate, Mr. Karl Ketterer, had a similar resolution, actually a little more specific than ours. However, in an arena where you are trying to moderate differences and reach agreement, Mr. Ketterer of the Swiss delegation deferred to our resolution, and we carried the ball, so to speak, on this particular subject, with his support and co-operation and the support and co-operation of many other delegates.

Then, a sort of basket draft resolution was brought in by the French delegation under Senator Leon Jozeau-Marigne. The French delegate managed to bring in a draft which covered most of the points with which other delegates wanted to deal, so we accepted it as our working paper and it really worked out quite well. As we met in committee and then in drafting committee, there was interesting interplay between peoples of different social and economic philosophies. For example, words that are perfectly obvious to us might be considered provocative to somebody else.

One of the Polish delegates, Madame Teresa Skubala, was concerned about multilateral discussions on the subject covered by our resolution and objected to the wording in some way. But we were dealing with many things on a multilateral basis, and as we went into the drafting committee the Polish delegate did not question the matter any more. However, the Russian delegate, Mr. Tchaikowski—who looked more like Shostakovitch but his name was Tchaikowski—took an interest in the matter, and having myself been to the Soviet Union and talked about the question of reunification, I was very much impressed by the co-operative attitude he took. We ended up with the resolution contained in the Final Act.

The committee dealt with many more things, such as education, science, culture, information, and in a more general way with further contact and exchanges between people. Those who are brought up in a society like ours cannot over-emphasize the importance of these. We discussed the development of tourist and professional exchanges, especially among young people, a matter of common interest to all nations. In the field of education we discussed the forecasting of needs on a European-wide basis. Although in this context it might be somewhat different for those living on the continent of Europe, this was a matter of interest to us. We discussed working together in order to co-operate in forecasting educational needs, a job that we could do much better, I think, in this country.

Then, we discussed the study of new techniques, as well as what was termed "life-long education". I guess all of life is an education, but we did not quite understand this term. To us it means continuing education and retraining. In the society in which we live we consider not only retraining but having several careers in one lifetime. The Europeans think along the same lines. Although we were struck by the term "life-long education", it is a term commonly accepted over there. We then talked about equivalence of diplomas and degrees, a matter of serious concern to us and of even greater concern to a continent the size of Europe comprising so many countries where the interchange of personnel is so great.

Then, there was another resolution dealing with the revision of school textbooks, particularly those on history and geography, in order to present objectively the contribution of the various European national cultures to universal culture and not impair the dignity of other peoples. Although I think it would be very difficult to come to a final agreement on this, there was recognition given to the problem and the desire was expressed that we overcome it.

Other matters dealt with were twinning among educational institutions, and exchange programs for teachers and students. In the field of science we discussed co-operation in basic and applied research, long-range planning, a network of scientific co-operation among participating countries, the stimulation of joint research projects and so on. That is the sort of thing we can get a great deal of value from in such interchanges, particularly a country like Canada which too often is so largely dependent upon one other country. I think there is much to be gained from participating in a conference of this sort and continuing as a member of the European community in this sense.

We also discussed culture and the development of exchanges. The words "exchanges" and "co-operation" kept cropping up in each of these resolutions. We discussed the development of various European cultures, which reminded me very much of the discussions that we in this House have had among ourselves on the subject of multiculturalism.

Then, we considered co-operation in the field of the cultural development of foreign minorities resulting from migratory movements, and support for the principle of cultural equality for these minorities by appropriate national legislation. This is a problem of which I was really unaware. Certainly, it is a major problem in Europe where there are so many massive movements of workers from one country to another. They are there temporarily as migratory workers, and they want to maintain their culture, their dignity and respect. In many cases citizens of one country that is less developed go to another country that is far more developed, either for employment or for training, and their rights have not been recognized and they have not been treated with the dignity they deserve. That is a matter more serious to them than the problem that we face here, but it is something from which we can learn.

Still in the field of culture there was a resolution dealing with the organization of a European cultural year. This will be the focal point for co-operation on a human level where the best instincts of men and women are highlighted, and I look forward to the organization of this year with great interest. Then there is the matter of free flow of information. The following appears under the heading "Information":

• (1730)

Free flow of information by eliminating obstacles to the exchange of ideas, books, newspapers, films, and radio and television programs—

This is important.

—while recognizing the right of each country to protect its cultural and political values—

Once this caveat is attached there are many things that can be read into it. It is rather interesting that during the drafting of the resolutions there were present representatives of the Soviet Union and the United States. Their concerns were somewhat identical. Each considered the other's information services to be propaganda services. Recognition of that alone is a step forward to understanding what information services are. What one country is trying to do in providing information might be called propaganda in another country. This is a terribly sensitive area. Then there is the measure for facilitating the freedom of foreign journalists so that they can work unimpeded and have freedom of movement.

The whole question of human rights was raised. The question of fundamental human rights flowed through everything we dealt with, but perhaps with a different orientation as between the east and the west. It also called for the participants to reinforce the application of the principles contained in the Universal Declaration of Human Rights and to hasten ratification of the International Covenant on Human Rights. We in Canada may not understand why other countries have not ratified the declaration on human rights, but we might consider for a moment that Canada has not ratified it either. I hope that ratification is not far off. We have reasons for this: there is the problem of federal-provincial jurisdiction. However, I think we should stop being self-righteous and criticizing others for raising their perhaps legitimate concerns when we have problems ourselves.

On the other hand, it would be foolish to be naïve. It is a tough world. We are involved with people with whose social systems we differ. We recognize those differences and talk about them openly and freely. I was very impressed, as I have been in respect of negotiations between east and west over the past couple of years, with a slow trend toward moving together and finding that our values are similar respecting ecology and the quality of life, which is perhaps a cliché but a very valid one. We seem to find that we have much more in common than we realized. The progress is slow, but it is very much better than not making progress at all; it is very much better than not meeting and talking. I believe it was Churchill who said that it is better to jaw, jaw, jaw than to shoot, shoot, shoot. I think we are making progress. We cannot expect solutions overnight; we cannot expect miracles.

I should like to add to the praise of the hon. member for Malpeque (Mr. MacLean) for the courtesy, hospitality and assistance of Ambassador Coté and, indeed, Madame Coté as well as Mr. Michael Shenstone, one of the officials taking part in the Dipoli conferences as representatives of government at the ambassadorial level. Without taking up too much time, I think it is worth digressing for a moment because Madame Coté, when we had a couple of free hours, took the hon. member for Scarborough West (Mr. Harney) and myself to see the suburb of Tapeola. Tapeola is a suburban community of Helsinki which is built on a very human scale. There are no high-rise buildings except possibly one office building. There are amazing recreational facilities. They accommodate the motor car but do not succumb to it. Things are on a human scale where people live as human beings in a totally integrated and very beautiful setting. It reminded me very much of the Muskoka or Georgian Bay regions with which I am particulary familiar. I think that in our urban planning we could learn a great deal from what the Finnish people have done. So outside of the conference itself there has been some really valuable spin-off and I believe that tour, or diversion perhaps was as valuable as the whole conference, in a totally different way. There is often such a spin-off which one does not expect in these matters.

I think the work of Mr. Peter Dobell was invaluable to us, as the hon. member for Malpeque pointed out. With his energy, his expertise and his contacts he paved the way for us, kept us moving and made us far more effective than we might otherwise have been. He made us feel a great deal more at ease. I would also mention Jean MacPherson and others of the Parliamentary Union staff who were so helpful. I was particularly proud of my colleagues, the hon. member for Malpeque, who led our delegation, and the hon. member for Scarborough West. They conducted themselves in a manner which brought only credit to Canada. I must say our colleague from Scarborough West was designated as our bilingual member. He delivered much of his intervention in both official languages and in a manner which made it sound official. I pay a tribute, of course, to our Finnish host, Johannes Virolainen, who chaired the conference and was particularly helpful in a cold climate where you wait until Helsinki freezes over. They were warm and gracious hosts; they made us feel very much at home and were highly efficient and kind.

In closing, Mr. Speaker, I should like to move an amendment to the motion. I am not sure of the procedure involved here since I seconded the motion. I do not know whether I may move an amendment, but I think we might find a way to handle it. With unanimous consent I would move, seconded by the hon. member for Malpeque, that in amendment to motion 76 in the name of the hon. member for Fundy-Royal (Mr. Fairweather) the following be added:

and that the Final Act of the conference be referred to the Standing Committee on External Affairs and National Defence.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Laniel): Order, please. The Chair finds a procedure problem concerning the acceptability of the amendment in its present form. It would seem to the Chair to be a completely new proposal. I will take the matter under advisement, which will give the hon. member for Scarborough West (Mr. Harvey) an opportunity to enter the debate. In the meantime I shall try to make a decision on the amendment or perhaps suggest an easier form to meet the will of hon. members.

Mr. John Harney (Scarborough West): Mr. Speaker, I certainly cannot do as well as the hon. member for Malpeque (Mr. MacLean) and the hon. member for York North (Mr. Danson) when it comes to congratulating and thanking the people who made the trip to Helsinki such a fruitful and pleasant one. I would simply like to underline what they have said and express our thanks for the help afforded the delegation from Canada by His Excellency the Ambassador for Finland, particularly for the briefing he gave us before we left for Helsinki. Through him I would express our thanks to the Finnish parliamentarians and the people of Finland. Although we did not have an opportunity to meet them all, the contacts we made were warm and close.

Mr. Speaker, I shall devote my remarks directly and simply to the third commission of the conference on whose drafting committee I had the honour to serve. This commission was the one which dealt with economic relations.

• (1740)

I will begin my remarks by reading to the House part of the resolution which was presented to the conference by the Canadian delegation, a draft resolution submitted by the Canadian delegation on co-operation and collaboration between countries with regard to aid to developing countries. This resolution, to be fair, was one which was suggested primarily by the hon. member for York North and was familiarly known to the delegation as the "Danson doctrine." Although I had the honour of speaking to this resolution at the plenary conference and of working on it, I must give credit where credit is due. It is about the only credit that I can hand over in this partisan House, but it was a particularly non-partisan occasion and I am pleased to give such credit at this time. The resolution reads in part:

> Believing that development can be successfully promoted through co-operative efforts and programs among developed countries, including countries having different economic and social systems,
> Acknowledging the desirability of achieving reform of the international monetary system and of further liberalization of international trade,
> Desirous of finding new means of reducing east-west tensions,
> Recommends that participating delegations encourage their governments to co-ordinate, to the extent possible and in co-operation with developing countries, their national development assistance programs, and to seek to elaborate co-operative or joint development assistance projects.

I think the only fair thing I can do at this stage is to repeat some of the words that I used to address the plenary session in support of this resolution. We all understand, of course, that the meetings of the interparliamentary conference are not meetings of government and that the participants in the delegations go there not as representatives of their parliaments in totality but as representatives of the make-up of their parliaments. Therefore, if you detect a partisan tone I think you would agree that it was quite appropriate for these elements to be included.

[The Acting Speaker (Mr. Laniel).]

When I addressed myself to the Canadian resolution I made the very obvious point that, of course, aid had to be co-ordinated and also that this aid had to be offered to the developing countries in collaboration with them. Most countries which have been involved in international aid have at least reached this degree of wisdom, that there must be international co-operation in the offering of aid and there must be consultation and collaboration with the developing countries in the offering of such aid.

I also pointed out that it was important for the developed countries of this world not to send with their aid what could be called a cultural under-burden. We have recognized that we must be careful about the ideological and political content of our aid, but at the same time we must not try to impose, through the aid that we offer, our values and our beliefs. Developing countries have a complete right to develop in their own way, to their own purposes and according to the nature of their historical existence. This is a rather important factor, if it is not an immediately evident one.

Then I made the point that no matter how generous the aid would be, no matter how internationally it would be co-ordinated and how sensitive it would be, it would nevertheless be insignificant if we were not prepared, as developed countries, to take a look at what we were doing in terms of the consumption of the world's resources. I quote from my remarks at this stage as follows:

> However, aid is not solely a matter of what we give and how we give it, it is also a matter of what we take. We in North America, for example, consume over one-third of the world's energy and about one-half of the world's non-renewable resources, and yet we make up less than one-fifteenth of the world's peoples. World consumption of energy and resources will have to be co-ordinated and redistributed, for without this redistribution of consumption, the developing nations will forever keep falling behind the pace of the developed world, and whatever formal aid we proffer will never be more than a token amend for our guilt of greed.
> It certainly shall not be easy for the developed world to reconsider and change its patterns of consumption, but this must be done . . .
> We have spoken much of sovereignty in this conference, and rightly so, but we have to understand that the building of national sovereignty needs an economic base as well as a political one. The political base is the will of the people to nationhood, the economic base is that people's ownership or control of the material conditions of its existence. That is why we must begin to take those measures which must be taken to bring the ever growing power of the multinational corporation under national and international control. Should we fail to do so, we will find, when we have finally dismantled the suffocating political and military power blocs of this world, that we are confronted by a multinational system of power which lies beyond the parliaments we so value.

There was another element which I added and which I think is worth repeating here because it loomed very large in the deliberation of the commission, and of the committee particularly. I am not suggesting it is worthwhile repeating because I brought it in; it was brought in by several members. It was that we in the developed world in the northern part of the northern hemisphere had to consider seriously our whole approach to economic growth, because if we continue growing as much as we can to try to solve some of our economic problems, there is no way in which we can offer any real comfort or aid to the underdeveloped world.

The deliberations of the commission, and then of the drafting committee, were certainly fruitful, as the hon. member for York North has suggested, but they were not always carried on in full agreement. One could sense that all the delegates at the same time wished very much to reach consensus and were willing to sacrifice some of their original positions in order to reach that consensus. For the information of the House I would like to read that part of the Final Act referring to the third commission, that is, the commission on economic affairs, which relates particularly to the input of the Canadian delegation. The recommendation reads as follows:

• (1750)

[Translation]

The Conference,

recommends that participating delegations encourage their government:

—to co-ordinate and promote co-operation with underdeveloped countries in order to extend national and international plans for development aid and to devote to the growth of those countries their financial advantages and savings made thanks to co-operation and European security —to work in order to alter existing tariff systems to the extent that their effects on underdeveloped countries are hindering the acknowledged purposes of the aid and co-operation and especially to take steps to stabilize the price of raw materials at a profitable level.

[English]

I remember particularly that in the debates relating to that last point which has to do with the stabilization of the world prices of raw materials and of basic commodities, there was a particularly heated exchange at one moment over what certain European countries had done to the economies of certain parts of the underdeveloped world in such cases, for example, as the overproduction and dumping into the international market of sugar from sugar beets. I was reminded in this House the other day that we, too, in Canada are embarking on a program to encourage the growing of sugar beets. If we are to be serious in attending these conferences, taking part in them and coming to a consensus on general resolutions, we should also bring back with us the sense and import of these resolutions, particularly as they would apply to our policies.

As the hon. member for York North has suggested, our going to Europe to join in these conferences can become a bit of a hollow exercise if we simply go to take part in a conference, in the shaping of the resolutions and in agreeing to the consensus that is struck, and then return home and forget about our participation there and the arguments which we as parliamentarians made.

I will end on this note, Mr. Speaker. Of course, none of the commitments made by the delegation from this parliament is binding on the government. But I think it is important for parliament to hear the report, to consider it and the position taken by the delegation in coming to what was, after all, on several very important matters a rather critical and important consensus. I would like to thank hon. members for hearing this report. As has been pointed out, this is a precedent. I hope it is a significant and important one. I was proud and honoured to be a member of the delegation; and although Helsinki may be a dark place in January, I would be glad to return there almost any time—not in the next two weeks but certainly in the very near future.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Laniel): Order, please. We are encountering one or two problems. As the hon. member who just had the floor mentioned, this is a new procedure, and I think we should try to proceed in an orderly manner.

It has been suggested that the amendment proposed by the hon. member for York North (Mr. Danson) cannot be moved by him since he is the seconder of the motion. Even if the amendment were moved by somebody else, the Chair, looking at it and seeing it refers to the Final Act of the conference, which is not before the House at this time, could well determine that it is introducing a foreign matter, a new proposal. Further, the proposition to refer the subject matter of the conference to the committee is also a new proposal, foreign to the original motion which merely invites the House to take note of the conference.

The Chair suggests to hon. members that possibly the best procedure would be to obtain the unanimous consent of the House to allow the hon. member for Fundy-Royal (Mr. Fairweather) to withdraw his motion; then we could discharge the order that is presently before the House. Again, by unanimous consent, as an order of the House the subject matter could be referred to the Standing Committee on External Affairs and National Defence. Would this procedure be agreeable?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Laniel): Is it agreed that the House give unanimous consent to the hon. member for Fundy-Royal to withdraw the motion before the House?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Laniel): Is it also agreed that we discharge order No. 76 from the order paper?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Laniel): Is it also agreed, by unanimous consent, that the subject matter included in the motion be referred to the Standing Committee on External Affairs and National Defence?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Order discharged, motion withdrawn, and the subject matter thereof referred to the Standing Committee on External Affairs and National Defence.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Six o'clock.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Laniel): I hear the suggestion that we call it six o'lock. Is this agreed?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Laniel): It being six o'clock, I do now leave the chair until eight o'clock p.m.

At six o'clock the House took recess.

AFTER RECESS

The House resumed at 8 p.m.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

OLD AGE SECURITY ACT

AMENDMENT TO INCREASE BASIC PENSION AND TO CLARIFY BASE YEAR IN ESCALATION FORMULA

The House resumed consideration of the motion of Mr. Lalonde that Bill C-147, to amend the Old Age Security Act, be read the second time and referred to the Standing Committee on Health, Welfare and Social Affairs.

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, when I was interrupted for private members' hour at five o'clock I was in the midst of recounting some historical facts in relation to the subject of old age pensions. I do not wish to stay with the pages of history much longer, but there is one other reference I should like to make; it is called for because of the boast that my good friend, the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Lalonde), made this afternoon. He said, correctly, that the increase now being proposed in terms of dollars is the largest increase ever made in the old age pension at any one time.

Whether one talks of an increase of $13.39 over what the pension would have been in April, or of $17.12 over what it now is, one is talking of increases of only 15 per cent or 20 per cent. I pointed out this afternoon that 30 years ago, after a rough session, we won an increase of $5. Now, Sir, $5 is a much smaller amount than $13 or $17; but I also point out that it was an increase of 25 per cent in the pension of that day, so the minister has a way to go yet. I also point out that $5 30 years ago had a lot more purchasing power than has $13.39 today.

This leads me to underscore the point which I make very strongly on behalf of this entire movement, that although there has been an increase—and we welcome that—we are still not satisfied. The basic pension should be $150 a month. The minister and the government know that we have given them little peace so far this session because this is one of the things we have wanted. I can tell the minister, too, that there will be no peace for the government until the pension has reached the kind of figure that we believe is fair for the older people of this country.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Alexander: Where is the amendment, Stanley?

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Hon. members do not seem to realize that private members cannot move money amendments to money bills.

Mr. Alexander: Fake it, anyway.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, I hope that remark is on the record. My hon. friend from Hamilton West (Mr. Alexander) says, "Fake it, anyway". That is the Tory approach to this problem.

[The Acting Speaker (Mr. Laniel).]

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): They have completely failed, from their leader down, to indicate what they believe the pension should be.

An hon. Member: Ninety dollars a month.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Yes, or $95 at best. Mr. Speaker, I say to the Minister of National Health and Welfare that it is a good debating point for him to give us the cost figures of the higher pension we would like to have, but if he is telling us that we cannot today have a higher pension because of the millions or hundreds of millions of dollars it would cost, I hope the minister or the government a few days or a week or two from now will not ask us to vote for hundreds of millions of dollars in tax write-offs to the corporations.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

An hon. Member: Here it comes.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): If the money is available, the people who deserve it, the people to whom it should go, are our senior citizens. We stand by our program of a basic pension of $150 a month.

I enjoyed the reference that the minister made this afternoon to the question of universality. His predecessors have stood in their places and justified the government's not raising the universal part of the pension but raising, instead, the supplement. Even when he was doing the right thing this afternoon he made the point that it might be better to have added the money to the supplement rather than to the basic amount of the pension. He went into the old argument that when you pay the pension on a universal basis, you are giving some of it to the wealthy, to those who do not need it. Mr. Speaker, it is still our view that in terms of philosophy and in terms of common sense, the best way to unite this country is to get as close to equality as we can; and if we cannot get it in other sections of life, let us get it in the years of retirement.

Let me tell the minister and this House again, that of the Canadian people who are 65 years of age and over there are only about 10 per cent at the top who have so much money that they do not need any more. The other 90 per cent fall into three groups of roughly 30 per cent each. There are the 30 per cent at the bottom who have no income except the pension and therefore qualify for the full guaranteed income supplement on top of their old age security pension; the next 30 per cent have some income, but very little, as a result of which they qualify for part of the guaranteed income supplement. Between these two groups at the bottom which total 60 per cent, and the top wealthy group which makes up 10 per cent, there is another group of 30 per cent consisting of people who have just enough other income to deny them the guaranteed income supplement. As a result, they get none of that money, none of the various benefits and services that are available, free, to pensioners on old age security and the guaranteed income supplement. Yet these people, in a relevant and very real sense, are in need.

It is our view that the best way to handle this problem is not by applying a means or needs test but, rather, by paying the pension universally and then adjusting the tax system in such a way that those who are in the upper income brackets and do not need the money pay it all back. So long as you apply a needs or income test you will create the situation in which there is a division between those who have just enough and those who do not even have enough to get by. We suggest that is not fair.

I say to the minister that he need not offer any word of apology for adding the full amount of this increase to the basic pension paid under the Old Age Security Act. One of the reasons we are prepared to vote for this bill is that, for the first time in several years, we are seeing an increase in that basic amount. In other words, we are moving a little more in the direction of universality than has been the case with respect to the last several amendments to the Old Age Security Act.

It is still my view, despite all the reviews, papers, reports and so on which have been written on the subject, that the best piece of social legislation our parliament ever passed was the bill in 1951 that provided for old age security to be paid on a universal basis, beginning in 1952. I regret very much that the Liberal party which brought in that piece of legislation—granted, it was prodded to do it—has since then retreated from that principle. So, Mr. Speaker, we welcome the aspect of this piece of legislation that moves us toward the universal approach. We hope that there will be further steps in this direction.

I spoke earlier today about the pension situation which existed when I first came to this House some 30 years ago. Not only have we increased the basic amount of the pension fivefold and done other things; we have achieved the acceptance in Canada of a new philosophy about pensions. Pensions are no longer regarded as a form of charity, something that you give to people to enable them to keep body and soul together for the few years they may still live after leaving the treadmill. Rather, we now look on pensions as a right. We now believe that individuals have the right to retire at a decent age and to enjoy something of the good life they have helped to make possible through their years of hard work in this country. I hope we will not go back on that approach to pensions, back to any concept of charity or welfare.

I shall now move to another phase of the question on which the minister touched at length this afternoon, that is, the question of our doing something for persons below the age of 65, particularly those who are between 60 and 65. I say to the minister and to the government that although we were disappointed because the basic amount of pension was not increased to, say, $125 or $150, we were equally disappointed, a bit surprised—almost shocked—to see when we examined this bill that there was nothing in it to break through that floor of 65 years of age.

As the minister said this afternoon and as we all know, the greatest pressure for something to be done in this area is exerted by those who sit on his side of the House. He knows very well that the members of his own party are constantly pressing him on this point. There is no reason why I should not single out a particular group of members who are exerting this pressure, and I commend them for doing so. The Quebec members of his party feel very strongly that people between 60 and 65 years of age should be paid a pension. If the government is not prepared to give the pension to everyone between 60 and 65, there is, none the less, tremendous support by hon. members on his side of the House for the proposition that the spouse who is between 60 and 65 should get the pension—

An hon. Member: Yes.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): —if the other person is already in receipt of the old age pension.

Mr. Alexander: I agree with that.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): I gather from the applause of hon. members that there is support for that proposition from all parties in this House.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): I was disappointed that nothing was done to lower the pensionable age in one of two ways, either by lowering it universally to 64, 63, 62, 61 and on down to 60—and I would not mind an employment test being applied to any pension that might be payable at that age—or by introducing some vehicle for providing the pension to the younger spouse in cases where the other spouse is already in receipt of the pension.

I listened with interest and attention to the minister's discussion on this subject this afternoon. I think there is a good deal to be said for his argument that we must think about all the areas of need affecting people below age 65. It is not just a case of looking at those between 60 and 65; we must be concerned about those, in need who are below that age. I firmly support the idea of the federal-provincial conference that will discuss the entire problem of welfare, income security and income maintenance. If I may say so, I felt on two or three occasions this afternoon, as I have felt in the past, a sense of determination displayed by the minister. I think he wants to move in this field. He has our blessing. We wish him well. I only hope that the conference in April, 1973, will not mean that papers will be produced for action in 1975 or 1977. I hope there will be action in these areas this year, in 1973. I wish Hansard could record the fact that the minister is nodding his head up and down.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Alexander: He is not denying it.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Even though it is true that we must do something to meet the needs of the poor of all ages, I do not think it is fair to lump those between 60 and 65 with the rest of the population. We dare to hope that persons who are in their thirties, forties and fifties and who are in economic trouble will be helped in ways other than putting them on an old age pension. We hope that there will be jobs for them, or rehabilitation or economic programs that will give them the chance to live the good life that is to be lived in Canada. However, if a person is over 60 and is in economic trouble, his chances of getting employment and being rehabilitated in the industrial world are not good. All he has to look forward to is his pension.

In addition to the rather sad letters I get from persons over 65 who are not getting enough pension, I get a great many letters from people who are between 60 and 65 who have nothing to fall back on and who can only wait until they are 65 and collect the old age pension. The situation of such people is tragic. I say to the Minister of National Health and Welfare that it behooves him to put right on top of his list of concerns this problem, because he must do something for persons between 60 and 65. I say, all power to him in anything he can do for groups below that age, but please do not ignore the possibility of doing something for those between 60 and 65 simply because something has to be done for those below the age of 60 as well.

As I said, I welcome the fact that these conferences are planned, particularly the April conference. I think the idea of taking a new look at our entire income maintenance, welfare and social security program is good. However, the trouble with these over-all reviews is that they come up with grandiose schemes that are difficult to put into effect so that for a long time nothing is done. I therefore plead again with the minister to give the strong lead in the cabinet that I know he can give for action to be taken on some of the pieces of legislation that are on our statute books right now. For example, I urge that he push very hard for acceptance of amendments to the Canada Pension Plan. I know he told us he had some trouble with the provinces when they met here a short while ago. However, it still makes no sense for the old age security pension and the guaranteed income supplement to be escalated each year by the actual increase in the cost of living, but for the pension escalation paid under the Canada Pension Plan to be limited to a 2 per cent ceiling. For the provinces to say they do not want to agree to the removal of that because they want to be able to borrow the money that is in the fund is a downright shame. If necessary, they should be told this in every provincial legislature in this country. I think the Minister of National Health and Welfare should use the bargaining power he has to ensure that that ceiling is taken off the escalation in the Canada Pension Plan so that those pensions will grow year by year at least by the actual amount of the rise in the cost of living.

I mention again, as I have on other occasions, the Disabled Persons Act and the Blind Persons Act. I realize that the persons who come under these pieces of legislation get something more than is in those acts by virtue of the Canada Assistance Plan, but it is still very galling to those people to face the fact that although for a number of years their maximum pension increased in line with increases in old age security, that has not happened for a number of years. In the case of the blind, in particular, there should be a universal means test-free allowance. Surely that is the least a society like ours can do for the blind. In the case of the disabled, who are tossed back and forth between the Disabled Persons Act and the social welfare legislation of the various provinces, that is not good enough. The minister may tell me this will be dealt with in the total review, but the totality of that review can get so large that for a long time nothing will be done. These people deserve improvements right now.

I also wish to mention other groups I have spoken of from time to time. I refer to the railway pensioners, both Canadian National and Canadian Pacific. The minister may tell me this is a little out of his field, but he sits in the cabinet with the Minister of Transport (Mr. Marchand) and others who have connections with these organizations. It is completely unfair that the Canadian National escalation of pensions is still limited to a 2 per cent basis. It is unfair that the basic pension formula for CN employees is poorer than those in the Air Canada pension plan and in the Public Service Superannuation Act.

The Canadian Pacific pension plan is really a disgrace. To tell us that the CPR is a private company and therefore the government cannot touch it does not wash very well with us. It may be a private company in terms of the profit it makes, but it is making its profit from serving the public and charging the public for that service. It gets its whole existence from what this parliament has given to it over the years and I think the government has the right and the duty to tell the CPR, as it must tell the CNR, that the time has come to make tremendous improvements in the pensions of all retired railway workers.

I wish again to put in my plug for retired public servants, including retired armed forces and RCMP personnel. The President of the Treasury Board (Mr. Drury) and I have had many discussions about this. We agree on what has happened and we agree on what ought to be done, but nothing gets done. The escalation of those pensions is still limited by the 2 per cent ceiling. Sometimes the President of the Treasury Board says that he would like to take off that ceiling, but he cannot do so until the Minister of National Health and Welfare removes the 2 per cent ceiling escalation under the Canada Pension Plan.

When the minister talks about the necessity for a review in its totality, there is a very wide totality to be looked at. I welcome the idea of a guaranteed annual income and the suggestion in the throne speech that if a guaranteed annual income cannot be brought in this year or for everyone, it will be good to start with it in certain categories. However, the government can show its good faith in these areas by doing something about the pieces of legislation that are on the books now. I say to the minister and the government that any improvements that are made in these particular pensions plans will not be null and void if we get this over-all approach to income maintenance and security that seems to be the goal of the minister. Therefore, I press all these points on this minister and his colleagues in the cabinet.

I believe, as I have for all the years I have been here, that we are dealing with a most important area when we talk about the right of our people, after the years they have worked, to enjoy retirement in dignity, with justice and security. I strongly urge the minister to do the things we are asking for tonight, that he review the amount of the basic pension that is being provided and, in particular, that he study the whole question of lowering the eligible age to 60, preferably for everybody, with the only rider that an employment test might apply. If he cannot do that, he should at least do this for the spouses of those who are already on pension.

I have just one other point to make. I have deliberately left it to the last because I regard it not only as something new in terms of its being on the table of this House, but because I welcome it so much and regard it as so important. For all the years I have been talking about pensions, I have been insisting that merely to increase pensions by the amount the cost of living goes up, although that is much better than 2 per cent, is not good enough because the recipients of those pensions are forever getting behind. Although the cost of living goes up to a certain extent, wages and the standards of living go up more than that.

We now have on the table of this House a report from the Standing Committee on Veterans Affairs which was tabled a few days ago by the hon. member for Labelle (Mr. Dupras). It endorses unanimously a recommendation in the report of a joint study group that considered the basic amount of the war disability pension under the Pension Act. That recommendation is that war disability pensions should be increased each year, not just by the amount the cost of living goes up but by an index that measures the rise in the standard of living.

That committee found a particular formula. It said that the basic disability pension could be arrived at as the average of the salaries or wages of five selected groups in the public service. That committee said it is not good enough just to arrive at that decent figure for now and then leave it to be adjusted with the cost of living. No. The committee said that in future years the war disability pension should increase by the same dollar amount that the average salaries of those in the same five selected categories increase. I am hopeful that when the government brings in the bill to amend the Pension Act, it will accept that recommendation. There has been a commitment by the Minister of Finance (Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton)) to do so, and I believe it will be done.

When we get that principle accepted for war disability pensions, I say to the Minister of National Health and Welfare and this House that we are just beginning. It is a very important new beginning. However, we must apply it across the board, and when we do we will be doing the right thing. We will be saying to those who have retired. "We are not asking you just to get by for the rest of your life on the money you have at retirement; we are not asking you to get by for the rest of your life with just enough to buy the same quantity of goods and services you can buy on retirement, but you have the right to share in the rising standard of living, the better life Canadians are making possible because you, the retired people of this country, gave so much during your working years." This is a tremendous report we have received from the Standing Committee on Veterans Affairs. I have seen a lot of improvement in pensions during the years I have been here. This report recommends a new one which I hope we will win with respect to all our pension programs.

In closing, however, I urge the minister to meet two main challenges without delay—raise the amount of the basic pension under the Old Age Security Act to $150 a month, and lower the qualifying age so that Canadians, if they wish to, may retire at age 60.

[Translation]

Mr. Henry Latulippe (Compton): Mr. Speaker, I welcome this opportunity to say a few words about the present economic situation and about the bill the Hon. Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Lalonde) has brought forward here.

We are gratified, Mr. Speaker, by the minister's statement concerning the increase in the old age pensions, but less so when we see that it has been impossible to bring down to 60 the age for eligibility to the pension. We should have liked that minimum age to be brought down, which would have been one way of directly fighting unemployment. It would certainly have been a remedy to the unbalanced economic situation concerning the unemployment we are now experiencing.

Mr. Speaker, we feel that this partial increase of pensions was urgent to offset the increase in the cost of living; the increase amounts to about twelve dollars. This will give somewhat more purchasing power to senior citizens.

According to the minister's estimates, this increase will cost some 290 million dollars a year. We know, Mr. Speaker, that money always comes into the picture. If the minister had made the necessary financial arrangements, if financial conditions had permitted, I know he would have increased the pension to $200 instead of $100.

Mr. Speaker, the minister announced that the increase was granted up to April 1974, after which increases will escalate with the cost of living. This shows recognition of the continued upward trend in the cost of living.

Therefore, I agree with those who want pension increases. I agree with the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles) who wants to have pensions increased at all costs. However, we also believe that the cost of living should stop rising. If nothing is done about the spiralling cost of living, there is no use boosting pensions. The higher the pensions, the higher the cost of living. In turn, the higher the cost of living, the heavier the taxes, thus causing a further economic disequilibrium. This is not profitable or logical.

Under our present system, social legislation leads to more taxation and income taxes in a direct or indirect way which causes the economy to become imbalanced. Economic difficulties are causing an increasingly difficult situation. In fact, we have reached the point where adequate solutions are practically impossible. The guaranteed monthly income will be $170 for single persons and $325 for couples, which means an increase of about 26 per cent, as claimed by the minister. He says Canada will be ahead of all other countries.

Mr. Speaker, considering our situation, our natural resources and technical progress, I do not think we should compare with other countries. I think we must look after ourselves, accept our responsibilities and live according to our means. If we are in a position to raise pensions, let us do it. If our automated production reaches the markets quicker than the consumers can absorb it and because it is produced without labour, other solutions must be found to our problems, so as to balance our economy. And the only ones to have found any solutions so far are those who go straight to the heart of the matter and say: If production is automated, consumption must be too. We must develop ways of making distribution automatic, like production.

At present, production is being financed, but no one bothers about the consumer side of things. When consumption is financed, it is with measures that do not fit the economy, by taking from those who are short already so as to give to others. What is given to others is lifted from the pockets of those who are already lacking. So some are made poorer that others might live. This cannot go on, since it is wrong and out of tune with reality, since we are living in a country that abounds in wealth and whose industry is automated; we can do better than that.

Our main objective in the present situation must be to bring the increase in the cost of living to a halt; there would then be no need to be always raising pensions, then this, and then the other thing.

Not one party here can accept this or can suggest any way likely to prevent the cost of living from ever increasing and from ever unbalancing the economy.

The more we progress the more we increase pensions, social services and taxes, the more we increase the deficits which we must meet by borrowing and by selling government bonds. In so doing we must pay new interest rates and we increase public debt. So we will never succeed in balancing the economy and we will never allow Canadians to live decently in their over-affluent country which is moreover automated to an unbelievable degree.

It is essential to have a social budget able to meet each citizen's needs and to guarantee his right to live to each Canadian. Is our national production sufficient for this? I am not afraid to reply in the affirmative because our national production is sufficient; this year national production amounts to $142 billion and national consumption to $60 billion; therefore our reserves are $40 billion. If we have $40 billion this year we also had $40 billion last year. It is those $80 billion accumulated during these last two years that we should use to give Canadians what they are entitled to have, namely the right to live. This is what I was leading to.

The right to live is not a moral, social or religious question; the right to live is only a monetary, economic and political question. It is the responsibility of those involved in economy and politics to establish a balanced system so that each individual may have his three meals a day.

The right to live is not a municipal, provincial or regional question; it is a natural, national and federal question in Canada and a universal question on earth. Let us settle our problems first in Canada and the other countries will follow our leadership depending on whether our experience turns out to be effective and profitable.

If we must start somewhere, Mr. Speaker, why not in Canada? If we must start one day, why not today? Since the monetary system has now become almost worldwide, since money has truly become a must in terms of buying useful goods which are essential or pleasant for life, for each living citizen in every country, particularly in those that are more advanced industrially speaking, including Canada, it becomes most pressing to withdraw as directly as possible from our monetary, economic and political system the responsibility for each citizen's right to live.

If the entire economic system comprises production of goods and services, consumption of those goods and use of those services by living citizens, as well as the capitalization of the instruments of production and progress, if the entire economic system has to ensure justice and economic equilibrium in every sector of the nation's economic activity for the benefit of all Canadians, it is through the monetary system that the political authority must act to bring about the ultimate end of the national economy which can be but the fulfilment of the needs of all citizens composing the nation.

If the annual national production is based on natural resources, on the capital and the work of adult citizens, one knows that natural resources are provided freely by nature or Providence and that capital requires interest and work a salary according to the rates determined by the citizens concerned.

In 1973, Canada has almost 23 million inhabitants of which some 9 million only have a satisfactory purchasing power thanks to the interests on their capital or their salaries. The 15 million dependent citizens without employment nor capital are also entitled to live and to obtain the necessities of life out of our national production and our natural resources. Our organizations, with their financial, economic and political framework, are already set up and operate with efficiency and flexibility which all our experts find surprising.

Nothing is left to chance, Mr. Speaker. Everything is determined, anticipated, decided, planned and directed by a few qualified and responsible leaders. All the mechanisms, bodies and instruments are controlled by men, by recognizing and accepting the economic situation in Canada at the end of the 1972-73 fiscal year and considering our enormous capacity for producing and capitalizing. So, for the end of the current fiscal year, let us immediately improve our present methods for distribution of the purchasing power in the hands of dependent citizens who are without income, capital or work, and let us recognize at last the entitlement of the individual to a guaranteed annual income on par with the national product.

Mr. Speaker, for the past twenty years, we have been advocating a guaranteed annual income for each Canadian citizen, taking into account the annual national production based on three different sources: capital, work and the vital entitlement of each person living in this country. Just as personal capital calls for a personal income under the terms of an agreement, so dependent citizens deserve a personal income also guaranteed by contract. This is what we have been asking for quite a while. We are able in our country to negotiate a contract ensuring our people their right to three meals a day.

The word "income", Mr. Speaker, is an administrative term known throughout the world. Income equals expenses and surplus. This is at the same time the capitalist, socialist and communist formula which is being used the world over. Each administration enjoys sufficient income to guarantee the everyday expenses needed in addition to leaving a surplus margin for the future security and development of the administered. The administered is always a person, a family or a society. Only the person has life; the family is a natural group of people joined by love and by birth. Society is a group of persons artificially joined by interest or by need.

Canada, I say again, has 23 million citizens, including 6 million families of three to ten members or more, active in some 500,000 firms or institutions of all kinds. All those persons, families and corporations function according to the same universal pattern of administration: income equals expenses and reserves, profits or surplus, or, in the case of bad management, there is a deficit.

A country like Canada should not have a deficit. The company which Canada constitutes should have nothing but surpluses in the present situation, in view of our well developed economy, and its citizens should live the way real citizens have the right to live, off their gigantic national production.

Individuals alone, Mr. Speaker, have life, life with essential needs, material, cultural and spiritual, which must be met. The individual then must be assured, first of all, of a guaranteed income because he is a living person, and not because he is an adult who can work to earn a living, because he has capital that is automatically bringing in interests, an income.

Every person starts with having life, before being able to work or own something. The right to life is therefore the first right of every human being, through the family; society itself is made up of individuals, families and companies.

Any group is made up of units. Therefore it is by taking care of the units that each group can best ensure its own administration. The opposite is not true. Thus in Canada, in 1972-1973, the national economy has shown an exciting productivity, while its units were plagued with inflation, unemployment and poverty. Only a guaranteed personal income granted to each dependent citizen can eliminate poverty from every home in Canada in 1973, while productive citizens continue to receive salaries for their work and interest on their capital.

Without work nor capital, Mr. Speaker, no matter whether we are young or old, sick or disabled, unemployed or mother and housewife, we can do nothing. I suggest that the capitalist system today rewards only work and capital, without any consideration for the family and the human being.

At the present time, Mr. Speaker, capital is quite profitable. As for interest rates, nobody says a word about them; they are exorbitant. We have long been requesting a reduction in the rates of interest in order to lower the cost of living. Considering the monetary system we are advocating and which could be applied, we asked that the citizens be granted a compensated discount on the production that is most in demand and on the one which implies the highest cost.

At the present time, we should grant compensated discounts on the necessities of life as a whole, especially on food, because we need food; people also greatly need a home. Current interest rates for those who want to build a house are 10 or 12 per cent and there is also an 11 per cent sales tax on building materials, which increases the cost of living.

Mr. Speaker, we would have been happy indeed had we had the good fortune of finding that the last budget did away with this awful 11 per cent sales tax on building materials which strangles all Canadians who want a home. Home like food is a necessity of life. People need shelter and food and they are being exploited in every way and the sharks are those who benefit most from it.

Mr. Speaker, looking into the budget of finance people, of high financial institutions, one notes that there is no deficit. Let us imagine the billion dollar profits they make thanks to our taxes and the exorbitant interest rate we are paying, and these are the matters that should retain our attention if we want to settle our current economic problem.

Mr. Speaker, our current problem is artificial, not natural. It is not a creation of nature but of mankind. Now, men are the administrators, they have the responsibilities and, taking into account the good will that he shows, I urge the Minister of National Health and Welfare to kindly redress our economy and, as he said today, jointly with the provinces, to find means of building up an economy that could be satisfactory to all Canadian people, guaranteeing them a yearly income besides their wages.

Therefore, should he entertain such good dispositions, I shall congratulate him, but should his approach be nothing more than perpetuating the present system, when necessary to increase the pensions and allowances, or this and that, while accepting the increase in the cost of living and all the resulting difficulties, that will not settle the problem. We are only going round in circles and our uncomfortable position will only worsen. Since we must adopt social and economic measures, let us take them, let us assume our responsibilities, and I believe that in so doing, instead of calling our pension plan a universal plan, we should call it a Canadian pension plan for the benefit of the Canadian people, because our pension plan should not be viewed as universal but as Canadian. When speaking about a universal pension plan, we do not intend to use only words, and I believe that instead of using the words "universal pension plan", we should say "Canadian pension plan". I feel that those words would be easier to understand.

[English]

Mr. Nielsen: Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is the hon. member rising on a point of order?

Mr. Nielsen: Yes, Mr. Speaker. When the hon. member for Hillsborough (Mr. Macquarrie) spoke on behalf of this party, he put our position very well and at the same time suggested that each party field one speaker. It seems to me that not one hon. member will vote against this bill and a competitive debate would not solve anything. We could pass the bill, send it to the committee right away and bring in the next order of business. That is our position. We would like to move matters along. We make this offer to all parties in this House in the hope that we can speed up the business of the House, get the legislation passed and see that our old people are in receipt of their increased pensions as quickly as possible. Is there agreement?

An hon. Member: No.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. This does not seem to me to be a point of order. It is a suggestion which does not seem to be acceptable. The hon. member for Bruce (Mr. Whicher).

Mr. Nielsen: Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The hon. member for Bruce.

Mr. Nielsen: On a point of order—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I recognized the hon. member for Yukon on an alleged point of order. I told him it was not a point of order. It has been the custom of Speakers of this House to rule that a point of order does not arise from a point of order. I now recognize the hon. member for Bruce.

Mr. Nielsen: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a question of privilege. In my respectful submission, it has long been the custom of this House that when an hon. member rises and asks the Chair to request whether or not consent exists in the House to a suggestion made, that request is made by the Chair. With great respect, I ask Your Honour to request whether there is unanimous consent to the suggestion that we pass the bill now without further debate.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I object to a point of order being used as a political ploy.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. All my instincts were right in the first place when I recognized the hon. member for Bruce.

Mr. Ross Whicher (Bruce): Mr. Speaker, it is certainly a pleasure to have the opportunity to say a few words in respect of Bill C-147. Also, I am most pleased, as a backbench member of this House, that the suggestion made by the House leader of the Conservative party was not accepted by hon. members. On such an important topic as this, one that hits at the very fibre of Canada in that it would improve the lot of elderly Canadians who made the country what it is, one would think the Conservative Party would show some interest in this bill. I enjoyed—

• (2100)

An hon. Member: We have heard your speech twice already.

Mr. Whicher: —the presentation which the minister gave this afternoon and I congratulate him. This is the first bill he has presented to the House and it is probably one of the most important bills he will ever present, even if he stays here as long as the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles).

An hon. Member: No chance.

Mr. Whicher: I listened with interest to the hon. member for Hillsborough (Mr. Macquarrie) this afternoon. We heard a considerable amount of humour, more humour than facts; in any event, it was enjoyable. I also listened to his criticism which, I suppose, according to him was constructive. Then I come to the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre.

An hon. Member: Why?

Mr. Alexander: I remember, you are the one who said that our senior citizens never had it so good; you said that six months ago.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Boulanger): Order, please.

Mr. Whicher: I do not suppose there is anyone—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Whicher: I want to tell you fellows over there something. If you say too much, you will not be talking for too long.

I do not suppose anyone has crossed swords with another hon. member—in a friendly way, I hope—in the last four or five years as often as I have with the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre. On the other hand, I have always appreciated his sincerity and I cannot let this occasion pass by without paying my compliments to him as an individual.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Whicher: He told us, for example, that 30 years ago when he was in the House in 1943, old age pensions were $10 a month. I believe that is what he said.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): No, $20.

Mr. Whicher: One would be less than honest if he did not say that one of the reasons old age pensions have reached the height which they have in Canada—although they may not be as high as the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre would wish them to be—is his efforts over the years.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Alexander: This is a strange parliament.

Mr. Whicher: He has constantly been a thorn in the side of the government party, whichever party it might be, to try to get pensions raised; and he has been successful. May I respectfully and in a very general way remind him of something he said this afternoon, that his party was for complete universality. I believe that was one of the main themes of his speech.

I would like to ask him the following question; perhaps on another occasion he might be able to answer it. Why is it that the first thing the New Democratic Party in British Columbia did when they were elected a few months ago was to increase the old age supplement to $200, but they did not increase the basic pension by even a five-cent piece? Surely I have said enough already to show how much I appreciate the hon. member and what he has tried to do. It is all very well to say that the great NDP want universality across the board, but when a provincial NDP government comes to power they increase the supplement to $200 a month, with the help of the Canada Assistance Plan, but they do not raise the basic pension by even a dime. So I respectfully point out that it is one thing to be in opposition but it is a completely different thing when you are sitting on the government side of the House.

It is now 21 years since universal old age pensions were first introduced in Canada for those aged 70 and over. In 1952, this parliament provided a universal benefit of $40 a month to every person in Canada over 70 who met the residence requirements. In 1967, parliament provided a guaranteed income supplement to that pension of $30 a month on the basis of an income test for old age security pensioners. Commencing in 1966, the age of eligibility for pensions was reduced from 70 one year at a time until in 1970 the age of eligibility reached 65.

Before 1952, a very high proportion of Canadians in retirement were obliged to seek social assistance to keep body and soul together. In the intervening years, the level of income guarantee provided to our senior citizens has increased steadily until, as provided for in the legislation now before the House, single pensioners will be entitled to $170 a month, couples to $325 a month, and the basic pension is increased to $100 from $82.88.

I would remind hon. members, in passing, that this afternoon the hon. member for Hillsborough, speaking on behalf of the Conservative party, said that $100 was not enough and that to keep up with the cost of living it should be raised to $107 a month. I simply cannot understand how a party as great as the Conservative party was in former years can be talking about such a delicate subject as old age pensions, because there is not one person in the House of Commons tonight, in fact there are very few people in the whole of Canada, at the age of retirement who cannot remember what our Tory friends did when they ruled the roost with one of the greatest majorities in the history of Canada. I will tell you what they did. They raised the old age pension to $65 a month to be given to pensioners at age 70 and they said to them, "God bless you. Go ahead; this is the best we can do".

An hon. Member: That is a lot better than you did.

An hon. Member: How about $2.88?

Mr. Alexander: How about 42 cents?

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Boulanger): Order, please. Perhaps it is because hon. members are approaching the time when they will receive the old age pension and enthusiasm is getting to them, but it is difficult for the Chair to follow what the hon. member is saying.

Mr. Alexander: He is not making any sense, anyway.

Mr. Whicher: Let me remind you that at the age of 70—

[Translation]

Mr. Laprise: Mr. Speaker, on the point of order that you just made, I must say I would have been happy a short time ago when my colleague for Compton (Mr. Latulippe) was speaking if the one who was in the Chair at the time had made the same comment when a number of Liberal members on my left were really kicking up a row.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Boulanger): Order. That is not a point of order.

[English]

Mr. Whicher: It is better than the $65 a month at age 70 that our friends to the left of Mr. Speaker gave the senior citizens of Canada, with no guaranteed income supplement whatsoever. Yet they tell us now, through their main speaker, that instead of $100 a month it should be $107. Not once in this speech did the hon. member mention that senior citizens at the age of 65, those who have no other income, will be drawing $325 a month for a couple while a single person at the age of 65 will be drawing $170 a month. Having heard the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre this afternoon casting aspersions on the sincerity of the Conservative party with regard to senior citizens, I say that if I am ever unfortunate enough to need a heart transplant, let me have the heart of a Tory, because so far as senior citizens are concerned it has never been used.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

• (2110)

Some hon Members: Hear, Hear!

Mr. Nielsen: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a question of privilege. I assure the hon. member that all Tories have hearts, but that is not the part of my anatomy that I would give him.

Mr. Alexander: What's your next statement, Ross?

Mr. Whicher: My next statement is that I meant every single word of my last statement. Although there are no precise data on the proportion of pensioners who still have to submit to a needs test to receive social assistance before this legislation takes effect, it appears to be in the order of from 5 per cent to 10 per cent, depending on what region of Canada one is talking about. Except for a small number of people with special needs, this legislation will provide to our senior citizens a level of income sufficient to remove them from the welfare rolls once and for all.

Special needs might include drugs, nursing home care, and home care, and of course I would be less than frank if I did not remind hon. member that the provinces, which have responsibility in this field, receive 50 per cent of the cost of this assistance under a federal cost-sharing program. Hon. members should note the federal cost-sharing of increased supplements for the aged and the handicapped in British Columbia. This could well apply to other provinces. For example, it could happen in the provinces of Ontario and Prince Edward Island. If Conservative members really want to put pressure on the provinces and if they are really sincere in support of the speech given on their behalf this afternoon, they should go to the wealthy province of Ontario and say to the premier of that province with whom they have very close contact, "Let us do in Ontario exactly the same as they did in British Columbia."

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Whicher: Don't come crying here and telling us what you did years ago when you gave the magnificent sum of $65 a month. Go to the province of Ontario and tell it to make the same deal as British Columbia.

Mr. Lewis: Don't forget Alberta.

Mr. Whicher: Very good; I won't forget Alberta. As a matter of fact, I have it in my speech later on. I will use Alberta in a rather different fashion.

Let no one underestimate this achievement, Mr. Speaker. It has been secured after a long and, from a parliamentary point of view, rather complicated process. It reflects the consensus of this House, over time, on the priority that we attach to the needs of those who built this country, our fathers and mothers and the grandfathers and grandmothers of those who now harvest the fruits of their great endeavours. As a Canadian I am proud to say that Canada is the first country in the world that has provided this order of protection to its aged. Not just the Liberal government, that introduced this legislation, should take pride in it: we have three other very responsible parties in this House and it is a fact that all of the parties working together made this legislation our number one priority to assist our senior citizens. We should be proud of that fact.

This afternoon the minister attempted to compare Canada with other countries such as Sweden, France and Germany. It is very difficult to do that. Last night I took the opportunity to compare Canada with various countries. I repeat that it is very difficult. While the figures must be reasonably rough, nevertheless it is a fact that so far as looking after senior citizens is concerned, we are the number one nation in the world. In the wealthiest country in the world, the United States, approximately 5 per cent of its citizens, if they retire at age 65 because of sickness or some unfortunate catastrophe, are not covered by social security. They must go on relief, which is paid for by the state or the U.S. treasury. How different from the situation here in Canada where a couple living anywhere from Newfoundland to Vancouver can retire at age 65 and, if they have no money, automatically from now on, starting in April, receive a cheque for $325 a month!

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Whicher: Canada is one of the first countries in the world to legislate to provide that its pensioners, as a matter of right, without reference to contributions that they may or may not have made to a pension plan and without reference to a means or needs test, shall be guaranteed an income which will permit them to live their declining years with security and dignity.

As a Liberal as well as a Canadian, I applaud the contribution which has been made toward the final achievement of this goal by such eminent predecessors of the present incumbent of the National Health and Welfare portfolio as the Hon Brooke Claxton, the Hon. Paul Martin, the Hon. Judy LaMarsh, the Hon. Allan MacEachen and the Hon. John Munro, all of whom had a great deal to do with the legislation that has come before us today. We should be proud of them. It has been said that one may judge the moral fibre of a nation by the way it takes care of themselves. No Canadian need fear the application of this standard to his country, and no Liberal should be ashamed of the contribution of this government.

Other things have also been done for our senior citizens, Mr. Speaker. The income tax exemption for our senior citizens was $650 at age 70. In the tax reform legislation which we introduced last year that exemption was increased to $1,000 and the qualifying age lowered to 65 years, so that anyone getting the guaranteed income supplement would no longer have to pay income tax in Canada. There are those on the other side of this chamber, particularly in the NDP, who have asked why we should increase the old age security pension rather than the guaranteed income supplement. Mr. Speaker, in passing this legislation the House is reaffirming the position it took in 1952 when it decided, for the first time in Canadian history, to recognize the contribution which our senior citizens have made to the growth and current prosperity of the country by providing a universal benefit.

Some 21 years ago this House removed all conditions which had hitherto attached to the old age pension, and gave it to all pensioners as a matter of right. No one in the House at the time thought it was sufficient to meet all the needs of retired persons, and some who are still here today said so in no uncertain terms. For some of those who had other income, it lifted them from insecurity to security. For those who had little or no other income, it was not enough and required supplementation. For those who had plenty of other income—this was not, and still is not, characteristic of the vast majority of retired Canadians—this was a payment made by a grateful country to those whose labours had built it into a strong and prosperous nation. It was to be theirs as a matter of right.

As a nation we have prospered much since 1952 when the OAS payment was $40. Since then we have turned increasingly to the problem of the relief of poverty. In the retired group, the guaranteed income supplement which was introduced in 1967 put pensioners on the high road to the achievement of a guaranteed income at a level which meets their needs without attacking their dignity. The legislation before us, despite the charges of inadequacy, removes all pensioners except those with very special needs from the welfare rolls of this country. I do not regret our concern in recent years for increasing application of the principle of selectivity in the utilization of our welfare dollar to meet the needs of those in poverty. But in our zeal to improve the lot of the very poor we have turned our backs in recent years on the commitment we made in 1952. Let those of us who share unabashedly in the wealth of this country compare our monthly pay cheques in 1952 with those we receive today. And when we have done so, let us ask ourselves whether we think it is inappropriate, or immoral, to restore the purchasing power of the universal and unconditional pension to its level of 21 years ago.

No one would support the view that we should have dealt with those who do not receive the guaranteed income supplement while neglecting the need to improve the pension of GIS recipients. But that is not what is proposed. The increase to the one group is of the same order as the increase to the other group. The existing relationships between the two groups is being maintained, not narrowed. Indeed, the legislation provides that this relationship will be maintained automatically in perpetuity.

We have been concerned—necessarily concerned, as I have said—with the plight of the poor. But what of the near poor? A single pensioner with a private annual income of $1,700 is not entitled to the guaranteed income supplement. Is this person so well provided for that he is none of our concern? We have been arbitrary, as we must be, in identifying that amount of income which reduces a pensioner's guaranteed income supplement to zero. But is the person just below that line a poor person, and the person just above that line not poor, by virtue of the line we have drawn?

I know many of the near poor whose other income, although pitifully small and secured by caution, thrift and rigorous self-denial over many years, allows them to live a precarious and extremely simple existence when it is combined with their old age pension. I make no apology for supporting legislation which remembers the near poor along with the poor and reaffirms the original intent of this legislation to recognize the contribution of all the senior citizens of this wonderful and very wealthy country which we inherit from them.

Mr. Speaker, I am proud to be a member of the government which introduced this legislation—

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Whicher: —but even more important, I am proud to be a citizen of Canada, a country that is giving more to its senior citizens than any other country in the whole world.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Douglas Roche (Edmonton-Strathcona): Mr. Speaker, as you know, I am a new member of this House of Commons. Before coming here I used to wonder why it took so long to have debate in the House and to pass legislation. Tonight we have a good example of why we are extending the time of the House of Commons when it does not need to be extended.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Roche: We have an example here, Mr. Speaker, of a debate that did not need to take place. I believe that the country could live without the words that I am going to offer in comment on this bill. We are having this debate because the government, with the free and easy compliance of the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles), has chosen to extend it before going into committee.

I have a few comments to make about the bill. I address them through you, Sir, to the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Lalonde). He brought in the bill and suggested two or three times in his speech that it was indeed a very fine thing that the government was doing. He said this was the largest single increase ever brought in, and there was the suggestion in his speech that we should be happy with what the government is doing.

I can tell you, Mr. Speaker, that along with my colleagues I shall vote for this bill, but we do not do so with any happiness because we consider it is a reflection of political cynicism; it is the result of an election which has made the government dependent upon the New Democratic Party for support; it is placating the New Democratic Party. I may say to the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre that for many years I sat in the gallery and watched him and indeed admired him for the forthright manner of his speech in pleading causes. But he was too easily satisfied tonight.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Roche: Mr. Speaker, I will tell you why there is unhappiness in our party, why there is unhappiness throughout the country at the news that the pension, with the increase, will amount to only $100. Why did 1,500 senior citizens assemble at Queen's Park yesterday to ask for an increase? Because the federal increase to $100 is not enough. Why did Mayor Dent of Edmonton have the Mayor's Committee of Senior Citizens launch a petition to have the people of Edmonton give an expression of their views as to the validity of this increase? Mr. Speaker, 17,000 people in Edmonton have so far signed this petition, pleading with the federal government to increase the old age pension to at least a minimum of $125.

This committee was in existence during the past two months; it preceded the minister's introduction of this bill and it preceded the introduction of the budget when the figure of $100 was announced. Half of the 17,000 people signed the petition before the $100 figure was known, and the other half signed after the budget was introduced on February 19. The petition is still being signed and will be brought here upon completion. It indicates that many people in Edmonton are unhappy with what has been done.

Why, Mr. Speaker, did the National Pensioners and Senior Citizens Federation come to Parliament Hill today and speak to the Standing Committee on Health, Welfare and Social Affairs to ask if it could exert its influence for a much better deal for the senior citizens of this country? They are going to make the same request tomorrow to the government. All this has happened since the $100 figure was announced.

Why have I received a telegram from the president of Pensioners Concerned in Edmonton, Mrs. Kay Charest, who expresses her appreciation for the increase that has been put through but says she realizes that by April inflation will have eroded practically all the benefits, and strongly urges price control, especially for rent and food, and that the old age security and guaranteed income supplement be tied to the cost of living?

Why, Mr. Speaker, did the Society for the Retired and Semi-Retired in Edmonton, Alberta, send me a message following the introduction of the budget and the $100 figure, signed by the vice-president, Mr. Fred Hannochko. It is not very long and succinctly expresses the feelings of senior citizens since the budget has been introduced. It reads:

> I find the recent announced increase in the old age security pension to $100 a month disappointing. This does not begin to take care of the increase in the cost of living. We know that in Alberta approximately two-thirds of us are living on only the old age security and all or some part of the guaranteed income supplement, which means that many pensioners are living at a poverty level. The announced increase does little to improve our standard of living when you consider the cost of the necessities of life, in particular food and housing. Inadequate pensions force us to become second-class citizens and therefore dependent on others and special services. After giving 40 years of our lives towards building Canada we feel that we have been let down. We would like to be able to live our remaining years in dignity and pride.

Those are the sorts of messages some of us have received. They reflect on events which have taken place in this country in the past ten days. These have caused not only unhappiness but concern in a very great section of our community. I can say this on the basis of having talked to hundreds of senior citizens last summer and fall. Let me tell Your Honour about a couple that came up to me in the shopping centre, because their words will express more poignantly than any of mine what the people in this country feel.

A lady, accompanied by her husband, came to me in a shopping centre and said, "Can you tell me what is wrong with Canada? My husband and I worked hard through the years. We worked during the thirties and during the forties when times were hard and salaries low. Now we have managed to save a little; not enough to live on, just a tiny bit. We need a fair old age pension." She then said to me, "Why can we not get a decent pension when people who are unemployed can collect $100 a week after having worked a short time, and when so much money in our society is paid for programs like Opportunities for Youth, and so on?" Then she said, "Is there not something wrong when we who have contributed so much to our country and society get so little and when those who do not really need money are given so much?"

Mr. Alexander: That's the just society!

Mr. Roche: I told her I thought she had put her finger on what was wrong with modern Canada. That lady and hundreds like her with whom I have talked have told me that senior citizens in this country feel abused because they feel someone is playing games with them. Let me tell you why they feel this way, Mr. Speaker. Last year the government introduced the New Horizons program. I will not speak against the New Horizons program now; I do not want members of the government to accuse me of being opposed to senior citizens merely because I am opposed to the New Horizons program.

Mr. Speaker, I am against that program because so many of our senior citizens are against it. They do not support it because they are not able to get money for projects they are asked to submit. The youth of this country are given all sorts of money for programs like Opportunities for Youth and other programs, including schooling, which I support. On the other hand, senior citizens who submit projects under the New Horizons program are told there is not enough money for them. When I spoke about senior citizens previously, that was one of the problems uppermost in my mind.

A couple of weeks ago during the debate on supplementary estimates some members said they were disenchanted with the New Horizons program. Some hon. members opposite tried to make it sound as if members of the party I support oppose the interests of senior citizens because we are trying to show what is wrong with the program. Let me say that I am opposed to the bill introduced by the Minister of National Health and Welfare even though I will vote for it because, as the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre said, any increase is better than none.

I oppose this bill because it represents a piecemeal approach to the solution of a complicated problem. The minister had some good things to say about the comprehensive approach that is needed. I will deal with that in a minute; I want to finish telling the House how senior citizens think and feel about certain government programs. In this connection I wish to introduce a topic that has been on my mind for a long time, that of national unity. I will not deal with the French and English problem in this country. Although we are making progress, much progress still has to be made on that crucial front in this country.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Would the hon. member please resume his seat? The hon. member said a moment ago that he would not go into what he called the English and French problem. I would hope so, because I must bring to his attention that the bill presently before the House is Bill C-147, an act to amend the Old Age Security Act. It was all right for hon. members to roam over their general fields of concern for Canada while we were on the budget debate, but now there is a specific bill before the House. Hon. members must remember that what is vital and basic to parliamentary conduct is the rule of relevancy. All hon. members are to respect this rule and debate what is before us, namely, an act to amend the Old Age Security Act.

Mr. Roche: Mr. Speaker, I agree with your interpretation of my remarks. May I submit to you that the question of national unity is extremely important in this connection, as the aged are part of our nation and want to participate in its affairs. They want to be plugged into our society, if you like. I say that there will not be national unity in this country so long as sections of it such as the aged, women, and youth feel alienated and dispossessed. The aged feel this way particularly. The thrust of my argument is that there will not be a stable society in Canada until each of the various components of our society is able to participate in its activities.

As I have said, the aged feel that they are being used. Why do I say that, Mr. Speaker? Simply because I suggest this basic increase could have been introduced a few months ago. Why did it need a dramatic political event to bring about circumstances such as those now prevailing in the House before action could be taken in this field? It must be clear to the pensioners and senior citizens of this country that the government has not understood their difficulties. Mr. Reg. Watson, late head of Pensioners Concerned, put their case succinctly:

During our working years, we all paid our taxes; we defended our country in at least two wars and many lost loved ones; we educated our families to take their place in society; we contributed to welfare and many of us still do; we supported our country in every way humanly possible even through the world's greatest depression . . . We ask not for charity, but our just due.

Now, Mr. Speaker, I submit that the government is introducing political charity for the aged rather than justice. We shall not see the kind of national unity that I think is necessary until we treat the aged with more justice.

The minister this afternoon spoke of how expensive it would be if we were to fix the age of eligibility below 65. We must remember that we spent $900 million of public funds on unemployment insurance benefits because unemployment had risen above 4 per cent. We went through that debate and argued a good deal. Nevertheless, $900 million was spent because unemployment rose above 4 per cent. That amount of money would have enabled us to pay the combined old age security and guaranteed income supplement to all Canadians over the age of 62. I submit that spending that amount of money in stabilizing our society would have been far better than spending it on unemployment insurance and bailing out the unemployment insurance fund.

If the minister will permit me to say so, he displayed a good deal of insight into the problems of the poor, handicapped and aged in our society when he dwelt at length on the need for a comprehensive program. He said he is looking forward to the forthcoming federal-provincial conference that will try to evolve an integrated approach to all problems in the social security field. I hope the minister will not present this to us as a discovery that a comprehensive program is needed. This has been the approach of the Canadian Council on Social Development, and many other experts, who have looked at the problem. For some time chaos has been developing, literally, because there are three levels of government trying to approach social service programs. I point only to the report of the Croll committee on poverty. Unfortunately, too much of it is still sitting on the shelf. It states in great detail that the welfare system in Canada today is literally in chaos. The whole system of welfare in this country costs $6 billion. There are five million Canadians at or below the poverty level. Poverty is indeed the great social issue of our time.

I commend the minister for looking at the problem of the aged in its totality. I think I can say that he, with many members in this House from all parties, is envisaging a society in which there is much more justice not only for the aged but all components of our society, the handicapped, the infirm and those for whom society has a responsibility to protect and support.

The forthcoming conference will undoubtedly bring us back to the question of the constitution. Within the past couple of years a joint House of Commons-Senate committee on the constitution travelled across this country. It received innumerable briefs and compiled a report that I, as a newcomer, think is very good. It stated that we will have to realign not only our fiscal priorities but the responsibilities between Ottawa and the provinces. I suspect the minister's view is going to be so comprehensive that it will bring us, in concert with the provincial ministers with whom he will be meeting, back to the constitution. He will say to this House that we cannot make any substantial improvement in a comprehensive approach to the social problems of this country until our constitution is changed.

I wonder how long it will take us to change the constitution. In many ways I wish it could be done overnight, but obviously that is impractical. However, I hope we do not lose sight of the need of our constitution to emphasize what is absolutely necessary in our society, namely, decentralization so that those who need services can be serviced by governments that are close to them and will no longer be subjected to so many programs set down by Ottawa to be delivered at provincial and municipal levels, thereby raising the costs of government in those communities and provinces.

All of this is to bring us to a very vague goal, a concept of improving the social services in this country if we are patient enough, if we can all agree on what a comprehensive approach will actually bring and, then, how we can get a new constitution out of it. However, that will not be sufficient to meet the circumstances that we face. These circumstances were clearly outlined by previous speakers, including the hon. member for Hillsborough (Mr. Macquarrie). Many senior citizens today are in a situation that does not render them eligible for a guaranteed income supplement. Their savings are being eroded. They are subject to inflation. They are at an income level that hurts them most when it comes to food and rent, particularly at a time in life when they are not able to augment their very meagre income. They are the ones who are suffering.

I admire the long-range goal of the minister. However, when he says that the minimum age cannot be gradually lowered from 65 to 60, and that we cannot give consideration to spouses between the ages of 60 to 65 being eligible for old age security when the first partner of the marriage goes on retirement—improvements that are absolutely necessary in our society today—because there are so many other factors that have to be taken into consideration in light of a comprehensive approach, I say that time simply will not allow us to take this casual approach and meanwhile grab a headline that the government is increasing the old age pension to $100—and isn't that a wonderful thing!

It will be necessary to keep up the pressure on the government, and I do not care which party forms the government. The government of this country has an obligation to consider justice and has a high priority for the aged. They should not be subjected to any more gamesmanship. I hope we can see some improvement very shortly.

I have commended the senior citizens of this country for becoming politically active. We have certainly seen evidence of this in the past few years. I have said to them before, and I say to them again, that an increase in their political activity and political demands on the government will produce results. The combination of their political demands and our understanding and compassion for the needs of senior citizens of this country can bring about improvements.

I want to say a final word about the comprehensive approach, or what I call the practical and immediate approach which should be wedded or brought together. Society has an obligation to help those who need assistance. I want to see a clear line between that segment of our society and the much larger segment that does not need to be helped but needs an opportunity to help itself. I submit far too much public money is going to this latter section of society, the vast bulk of society, because this government has given political response to economic problems in the creation of social programs that do not necessarily need to be created, and in spending money it does not need to spend in order to satisfy the political demands on them.

Who has suffered, been squeezed and short-changed? It is that element of our society which desperately needs more help. What has happened is not a reflection of a compassionate government. We have an obligation to help people who live in this very modern, complex, alienating society.

• (2150)

Mr. B. Keith Penner (Thunder Bay): Mr. Speaker, I think it can be fairly said that for the vast majority of Canadians these are extraordinarily good times in which to be living.

Mr. Forrestall: Oh!

Mr. Penner: I come from a region of Canada which is not known for fabulous wealth, yet the people I visit and talk with there agree with me that for most of them these are extraordinarily good times in which to be living. But what is true for most Canadians is not true for all, and this is precisely the reason for the bill which was introduced this afternoon by the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Lalonde) to increase the old age pension.

It is a good life for most but it is not a good life for all. The present parliamentary inquiry into food prices has revealed, for example, that Canadian families today spend a smaller percentage of their budget on food then they did in 1961 and that in many cases the kind of food which is available today is of improved quality. So people who are working for good wages are presently eating better, for less, than they did ten years ago. While this may be true of most people it is not true of people who must live on a relatively low fixed income. These people undoubtedly find it very difficult to meet the rising cost of a nutritionally adequate diet, not to mention the other costs they must bear. This situation is particularly distressing for those who must rely on pensions as the sole means of economic livelihood. In these circumstances I enthusiastically welcome the pension increase which is outlined in Bill C-147. It is a means of putting more spending power into the hands of people who need it most.

I listened with great care when the finance critic of the official opposition made his comments on the budget. He said it was not expansionary enough. It should go further, he said. He suggested more across the board tax decreases. I am sure such a move would be welcomed by many. The trouble is that doing so would fail to bring the requisite help to those who most need help. I did not hear the hon. member suggest that an effort ought to be made to put more money where it was most needed. He did not talk about increasing old age security payments or increasing the income supplement.

The same thing happened during the election campaign last fall. People kept asking spokesmen for the Conservative party how much they would give if that party were in power. We never heard a clear and conclusive answer to that question. Various figures came out—sometimes $88, sometimes $92. Some even surmised that the figure went as high as $95. But we were never quite sure.

Mr. Forrestall: What figure did you suggest during the campaign?

Mr. Penner: Well, it is not what we promised; it is what we deliver.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Penner: The raising of the basic old age security pension to $100 is an important and necessary follow-up of the measures announced last year to raise the guaranteed income supplement for old age pensioners and to increase both the basic pension and the supplementary payment automatically in line with any annual rise in the cost of living. Unless I misunderstood him, the previous speaker failed to take cognizance of that point. There is, in fact, a cost of living escalation built into both payments at the present time.

Twenty-one years have now passed since the universal old age pension was first introduced in Canada for the benefit of those aged 70 and over. In 1952, the twenty-first Parliament of Canada provided a universal benefit of $40 a month to every person over 70 who met the residential requirements. If, in 1952, a cost of living escalator had been built into the scheme, and if we take account of all the cost of living increases in those years and discount any actual increase parliament has made, the basic pension today would amount to only $64.62. Taking the $40 and the cost of living escalation in each year since 1952, the pension would amount to only $64.62.

Instead of that, effective April 1 it will be $100 as a basic old age pension. Moreover, the age of eligibility has been progressively reduced to 65. If we take account of supplementary benefits, it is now possible for a single pensioner to receive a guaranteed monthly pension of $170, and for a couple to receive $325. As I say, the scheme was introduced in 1952—$40 and no guaranteed income supplement. It is now possible for a single pensioner to receive $170, and this more than accounts for the rise in the cost of living which has taken place since 1952.

An hon. Member: And there is the Canada Pension Plan.

Mr. Penner: In addition, there is the Canada Pension Plan. Mr. Speaker, I see it is now ten o'clock.

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

A motion to adjourn the House under Standing Order 40 deemed to have been moved.

MANPOWER—REFUSAL OF UNEMPLOYMENT INSURANCE BENEFITS TO PERSONS TAKING COURSES

Mrs. Grace MacInnis (Vancouver-Kingsway): Mr. Speaker, on February 9 I addressed the following question to the Minister of Manpower and Immigration (Mr. Andras);

Is it the policy of the government to refuse unemployment insurance to people who are taking manpower courses, giving as a reason that because they are taking the courses they are not available for work?

The answer the minister gave was:

Generally speaking, that is correct.

Then I asked when the new policy had been adopted. My question arose out of letters I had been receiving from my constituency. I should like to read one of these letters because it is most specific:

I recently took leave of absence from my job to complete my education in hopes of finding a better job. I am going to B.C. Vocational Institute.

I have worked at Weldwood of Canada for nine years prior to taking leave of absence. When I applied for adult education I was told I would receive $73 a week from Manpower and around $35 a week from unemployment insurance. I am receiving money from Manpower but the unemployment insurance has cut me off.

They have sent me cards to fill out and cards saying they owe me money. Then they said I was not able to qualify because I was unavailable for work. Manpower said I would be subsidized by the UIC or I would never have taken a leave of absence. I was making $160 a week at the mill and am finding it a bit difficult managing on $73 with a wife and two children to look after.

I would not have taken the course if I was not told by three different people that I would be receiving $73 from Manpower and $35 from unemployment. Could you please help?

It seems to me, from what I have been able to learn, that when this man applied for a manpower course and took leave of absence he was told by manpower officials he would be able to receive not only manpower training allowances but unemployment insurance as well.

Then evidently the regulations were changed, and from what I learned from telephoning Vancouver and speaking to the manpower officials there, the regulations must have been changed sometime during the last week of November, I think probably on November 24. That was the time the new regulations came in, and apparently the manpower people were told that from then on they would have no say in what happened to people taking courses except in so far as the courses themselves were concerned, that only the Unemployment Insurance Commission would be able to tell applicants what they would receive by way of unemployment insurance.

The point I want to make this evening, Mr. Speaker, is this. As far as I have been able to make out, this man and others like him applied before the new regulations went in to effect, at which time they were quite legitimately told that manpower would give them the training allowances, and unemployment insurance would give them benefits while they were taking the manpower course. As a result, this man in question in perfectly good faith went ahead and took the course, only to find himself cut off from unemployment insurance because he was declared to be unavailable for work.

Of course he was unavailable for work; he was taking a course and had leave of absence to do so. As I say, it seems to me very peculiar that a person is told to go ahead on the basis of one set of regulations, only to pull the rug out from under him when another set of regulations is passed. There are some cases of this sort where great hardship is suffered, quite apart from the injustice that I think is being done to these people.

I have known cases where the only way that a man taking a course, who had a family, was able to live was to get help from his parents or to move in with a relative. This kept his family going until he finished the course. This particular man was very lucky in one respect; he did have leave of absence and can go back to his job—if he and his family are able to survive until he finishes his manpower training course.

If I have my facts straight—and if I have not I should like to be set straight on the facts—I consider it to be very unjust to tell an applicant he will receive a training allowance while on the course, only to cut him off from unemployment insurance on the ground that he is unavailable for work while he is taking the course. I would be very glad to receive an explanation from the department. If the explanation is not one that is commensurate with justice and fair play, I would be very glad to know whether the department will make some restitution to this particular individual and others like him who, through no fault of their own, are caught by a change in regulations.

Mr. Mark MacGuigan (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Manpower and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, claimants who are attending courses approved by manpower and to which they are referred by the Unemployment Insurance Commission are not required to prove availability while they are attending the course and are allowed to receive benefit. Such benefits represent the amount necessary to "top up" a claimant's income from the training course after deducting the costs, if any, of living away from home. The benefits paid bring the claimant's payments up to the benefit level he would have received had he not been on training. It is the general policy of the commission to refer claimants to courses of instruction under the Adult Occupational Training Act providing they have not voluntarily left full-time, regular employment in order to take the course of instruction.

I regret that I do not have with me information as to the time at which these regulations came into effect, but it is not my understanding that there has been any recent change in the regulations. I suspect the explanation is, rather, that the officer to whom the question was originally referred misunderstood the claimant's situation, because if he were not leaving a job voluntarily and if he were being assigned by the Unemployment Insurance Commission to this course, then of course he would receive unemployment insurance benefits.

I suspect the difficulty arose because of the fact that he was moving from his employment and it is not the policy of the Unemployment Insurance Commission to subsidize a person who gives up his employment in order to retrain himself for a higher paying job. I would say to the hon. member that we would be most happy to discuss this particular case with her in light of the facts she has, and we shall endeavour to obtain for her full information on this matter.

LABOUR RELATIONS—ELEVATOR CONSTRUCTORS' STRIKE—FEDERAL GOVERNMENT ACTION TO ACHIEVE SETTLEMENT

Mr. Eldon M. Woolliams (Calgary North): Mr. Speaker, I am very happy that the parliamentary secretary to the Minister of Labour (Mr. Turner), the hon. member for London East, is here to answer my question tonight. It is an asset for any party to have him because he is one of the more likeable members of this House. I say that without any reservations.

Tonight I wish to deal with a matter about which many members have spoken and on which they have asked questions. On February 15 I asked the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) the following question:

Mr. Speaker, I should like to address this question to the Prime Minister. In light of the national crisis now affecting housing units because of cost, shortage and the economy of the country, what do the government and the Prime Minister intend to do to assist in the negotiations for a settlement of the lengthy strike of elevator construction workers which is affecting the economy of Canada in all its facets? This strike has reached the level of a crisis in respect of shortages in housing and the general health and well-being of the Canadian people.

The Prime Minister suggested I direct the question to the Minister of Labour (Mr. Munro), which I did. This question appears at page 1309 of Hansard:

Mr. Speaker, in light of the fact the federal government has done nothing to intervene in respect of this strike—

This, of course, is the strike of the International Union of Elevator Constructors.

—which is costing $250,000 a day in taxpayers' money, will the Minister of Labour now meet with the parties involved or with the various premiers of the provinces to bring to an end this strike which is not only affecting the economy but the health and welfare of the people of Canada?

The Minister of Labour replied as follows:

Mr. Speaker, it is not correct to say that we have done nothing. The fact is that we as the federal government have absolutely no jurisdiction to intervene in this particular strike.

I want to answer that. On February 26, as recorded at page 1639 of Hansard, I asked the same question. I do not intend to read it. I will put it this way: I said that, even assuming that it is a provincial matter, surely there is a responsibility on the federal government to bring together at least the ministers of labour of the ten provinces in order to bring an end to this strike. The Prime Minister did say he would consider the request. At least he had some appreciation of what was going on.

This is a national question. It is true it is a problem which comes under the jurisdiction of the provinces. However, we must consider what the strike is all about. It involves the International Union of Elevator Constructors. The strike has been affecting elevator construction in the ten provinces of Canada. It is not something involving merely the province of Ontario but, rather, Canada from coast to coast. Even in the province of Quebec, where the provincial government intervened, there has been a slowdown. From the beginning, the union insisted that any settlement must encompass all of Canada, not just Quebec, Ontario, Saskatchewan, British Columbia or Alberta. This means that the settlement must be based on the Toronto wage scale.

The amount paid to the elevator constructors will make no difference whether it is in the Maritimes, in British Columbia or elsewhere to the cost of living in different areas. What is the strike really about? It would not be so bad if they were asking for better working conditions or for higher wages. But do you know what they are asking for? This strike is an American-motivated international strike. They are angry because the elevators are prefabricated in the factories for apartment blocks and commercial buildings; they cannot be prefabricated on the job. This is featherbedding of the worst kind. If this were a Canadian union it would not be so bad, but this is a sympathy strike for the United States unions.

Why is this strike national in scope? First of all, 750 projects in Canada are affected from coast to coast. Tonight more than 15,000 workers are out of work and drawing unemployment insurance. If that does not make it national in scope, what does? Millions of dollars of unemployment insurance are being squandered, dollars which taxpayers are putting up.

What about the health and welfare of the people of Canada? Who are we talking about? We are talking about the aged who live in buildings 20 storeys high and who cannot take the elevator down to get medicine from the drugstore. We are talking about the sick and the infirm, about the homeless. Dozens of people have had their contracts cancelled after having made their payment on a housing unit. Above all, there has been national violence against the people of Canada by American-motivated unions. Apparently the elevator union has been harassing and intimidating supervisors of buildings and other people who belong to Canadian unions.

Now I want to come to an important point. Lord Watson said, in a famous case, that that is how in time of war the federal government can take over control of the country—by controlling labour, management and industry. They can call this a crisis. When they relate it to the B.N.A. Act, as Lord Watson said, peace, order and good government take over. Surely it is time this country arrived at a new theory and perhaps it should be tested in the Supreme Court of Canada.

When there is an economic crisis which affects property and civil rights in the whole country, the federal government can move in to end the strike. This crisis is national in scope and such a case is covered by the constitution. Even if I have to apply a new theory tonight, I must point out that this government cannot sit idly by and watch people thrown out of work, see a drain on the unemployment insurance fund and people who are unable to get out of their apartments, the infirm, the aged and the sick, and 750 projects affected. We are losing a quarter of a million dollars in national revenue in Canada. Therefore I say that this strike is national in scope.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Boulanger): Order, please. I regret to interrupt the hon. member, but his time has expired.

Mr. Charles Turner (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, I thank the hon. member for his kind words. It is not correct to say that we have done nothing. The fact is that this matter is exclusively under provincial jurisdiction. In spite of that fact, the minister did contact the Ontario government to indicate the serious implications which this prolonged strike was having and to indicate our interest. Of course, this would automatically leave the impression that if the Ontario government felt we could be of any help, despite the fact that it is within its jurisdiction it could contact us; but to this date it has not done so.

With respect to the situation in Ontario, the meetings under the auspices of the Department of Labour were recessed about ten days ago, with no plans made for resumption. However, we are told that the mediators are continuing to explore every avenue of settlement and there is a possibility of further meetings taking place within the next few days. It has been reported that a group of contractors has asked the provincial authorities to appoint an industrial inquiry commission.

There is no change in the Alberta situation. The last information we had indicated that the Alberta Construction Labour Relations Association was going to present evidence of vandalism and threats of violence to the attorney general's department. Various employer groups have asked the provincial government to take steps to end the strike in Alberta.

Regarding the situation in British Columbia, the union's appeal against the B.C. Supreme Court ruling that the strike is illegal was set down for a hearing in the B.C. Court of Appeal on February 22. The union has said that no return to work directives have been issued to union members, and any decision in this respect was left up to the individual employees. Top officials of the union have been meeting with the provincial minister of labour. Quebec is the only province so far that has ordered striking employees back to work. There is little information from Nova Scotia, Manitoba and Saskatchewan, which seem to be watching events in Ontario where the main negotiations have been taking place and where any settlement reached will apply to the other provinces.

An editorial in the Globe and Mail of February 15 suggested: —that the dispute has lasted as long as it has chiefly because an international union and international elevator companies have made up their minds to use the Canadian situation as an experimental laboratory—to have a controlled strike here to fight for issues that are a future goal in the United States.

The Ontario mediators have advised us that this is untrue, because the Canadian companies have already offered the union more than was gained in the U.S. settlement. In conclusion I wish to state that the strike does not come under the provisions of part V of the Canada Labour Code (Industrial Relations) but is a matter strictly within the jurisdiction of all the provinces.

Adjournment Debate

CANADIAN NATIONAL RAILWAYS—ALLEGED SLOWDOWN BY VANCOUVER YARD CREWS—REASON FOR LOWER PRODUCTIVITY

Mr. Mark Rose (Fraser Valley West): Mr. Speaker, some of us are old enough to recall that to be part of railroading was to be part of an industry with a great deal of glamour. Everybody had heard of the great railway tycoons who, like kings, industrialists and leading politicians of the day had their own lavishly appointed private coaches. For the kids close to, but from both sides of the tracks, the railroad engineers, if not kings, were certainly the princes of the road. To be one of those princes in charge of all those mighty toots and puffs of black smoke and to wave pontifically down to people below was part of the vision and dream of most young boys.

The romance that was railroading, for a time at least, assisted the railroads materially in worker recruitment, because even if one never rose to become prince of the locomotive cab, you could at least be near to him and be part of this great and marvellous industry. Men flocked to railroad jobs, therefore, in search of steady work, of pensions which were relatively rare in those days and, at the end of your career, of the best possible prize for a working man—the celebrated gold watch.

I don't know whether working for railroads was any better in the old days than it is now. In fact, I very much doubt it. Probably railroads were able to attract and retain workers in earlier days because most other jobs were far worse. But what I do know is that railroaders in my constituency are not a happy lot. The engineers are concerned with lack of safety provisions in the Fraser canyon, and for yard workers wages have slipped in the past two decades from second to twenty-seventh for industrial workers. Railways pay lousy pensions, and many workers feel that they are poorly represented by a union from which there is no escape. Here is what one of my constituents wrote and why I raised my question when the subject of the west coast slowdown came before the House last Tuesday:

We are in the position whereby our switch crews are being reduced from three men, one foreman and two helpers, to two men, by eliminating one helper. This is being done in accordance with a duly signed agreement. The agreement was signed by our general chairman (business agent) because the only other alternative was to go through negotiations which would ultimately be finalized by the Railway Board of Arbitration. Under the laws of the land the arbitrator, Mr. J. F. Weatherill, can only rule on whether or not a crew can work safely while reduced.

He has ruled that production, or loss of same, is the responsibility of the railway company. Furthermore, the ratio of cases won by the company to cases won by the union before this arbitrator, is about nine to one. Facing this, and the fact that the railway company grossly misrepresents the cases before the arbitrator, our general chairman advised us the best thing to do would be to negotiate an agreement that would gradually phase the two man crews into the greater Vancouver terminal. This was done in Edmonton, Alberta, in July, 1972.

In brief, my information suggests that even in situations where the arbitrator has ruled that safety demands the crews handle only one car at a time, great pressure is put on the men to ignore this ruling because of the CNR's preoccupation with productivity.

Safety and highball operations do not go together, Mr. Speaker, and neither does productivity and service to the public. Crown corporations, like the government, should be model employers, and neither come close. Canadian National Railways, in my opinion, have every intention to phase in two-man yard crews as fast as they can. Edmonton, with 80 regular crews, has five of them reduced to two men. Vancouver, with 57, has already 13 diminished and as many as 25 are marked for the block within a year, and trains are double the length they used to be.

The CNR is deliberately limiting the ability of its crews to produce, thereby reducing its service to the public. If grain is not moving for export fast enough, my advice to the prairie farmer is to direct a large part of this outrage toward the railroads. Since we have been through the worst unemployment record in years, by deliberately reducing crews and service the CN must accept its share of the blame for that also.

In closing, Mr. Speaker, each year the Canadian National financing bill goes before this House and members of this party are usually up screaming. We scream about pensions. We scream about track abandonment and we scream because we do not think the people's money should be used to pay off the third generation descendants of those tycoons who want to ride around in the private cars I talked about earlier. We will never scream when the Canadian National comes before us and tells us it needs money desperately to provide good service to customers, good wages and safe and decent working conditions for the men.

There is no objection by the workers or their union to two-man crews in humpyards or automated yards. What they object to is that these two-man crews are inserted insidiously in places where neither safety nor productivity is enhanced, and the safety checks done in the daytime are ignored in the dark. I will be talking more about this question, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Joseph-Phillipe Guay (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I agree with the member for Fraser Valley West (Mr. Rose) pertaining to railroad workers, and I believe it would have been very important if we could have waited to answer this question until the outcome of the meeting that is taking place between Mr. Gale, vice-president of the UTU, and the top officials of the CNR in Edmonton. These officials are trying to find a solution for the resumption of full operation.

I said it would have been a good thing if this report had been available to us. I phoned a short while ago to find out if I could have a report from our officials who are at the meeting, but so far that is impossible. I hope that the conclusions of the meeting will become available to both parties. In the meantime, the information given to me by the departmental officials in regard to the supplementary question, part one, is as follows: Crew reduction is not an arbitrary act by CN but flows from a wage agreement provision negotiated in 1967, which requires a survey of each assignment to ensure that the work can be handled safely. Following such a survey, agreement was reached with the union representatives in June, 1972, for phase implementation between July, 1972 and October, 1973.

If I may answer the hon. member's supplementary question, Mr. Speaker the productivity of two-man yard crews has been demonstrated beyond question at many automated and non-automated yards and with no compromise of safety.

Motion agreed to and the House adjourned at 10.27 p.m.

PRIVILEGE

MR. COSSITT—WORDS USED BY SPECIAL ASSISTANT TO MINISTER OF TRANSPORT IN REFERRING TO MEMBER—RULING BY MR. SPEAKER

Mr. Speaker: Yesterday the hon. member for Leeds rose on a question of privilege in reference to a news report published in yesterday's edition of the Ottawa Journal. The member said in part:

> The headline of the article and the article itself quote the special assistant to the Minister of Transport as referring to me as a "purveyor of hatred." "He is developing a reputation now ... throughout the country as ... the number one purveyor of hatred."

I undertook to look into the matter and give a ruling today. I think it should be mentioned that the words actually used in the report differ materially. The actual words quoted in the newspaper are: "purveyor of hatred against the government." This, to my mind, puts a somewhat different slant on the news story, and of course on the offending statement itself.

Do these words constitute a breach of privilege? I refer hon. members to citation 110 in Beauchesne's Fourth Edition:

> But to constitute a breach of privilege a libel upon a member must concern his character or conduct in his capacity as a member and the conduct or language on which the libel is based must be actions performed or words uttered in the actual transaction of the business of the House.

The operative word in this citation is "libel". It is doubtful to me that a court would find the words allegedly used to be defamatory. Perhaps the real question relates to the propriety of a public servant, employed in the special capacity of assisting a minister, making derogatory remarks at a public meeting about a Member of Parliament. However, this being said, I would not think that any useful purpose could be served to assist the hon. member or to correct the situation by sending this matter to the Standing Committee on Privileges and Elections. I would rule, therefore, that the motion cannot be put.

MR. MACINNIS (CAPE BRETON-EAST RICHMOND)—ALLEGED FAILURE OF CAPE BRETON DEVELOPMENT CORPORATION TO IMPLEMENT ACT

Mr. Donald MacInnis (Cape Breton-East Richmond): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a question of privilege stemming from an attempt yesterday to find ways and means of acquiring a legal opinion from the government. I failed in that attempt, but I notice in yesterday's Hansard that the answer may have been provided for me by the Minister of National Revenue (Mr. Stanbury) who stated, as reported on page 1791, in answer to a question on why certain procedures were followed:

> —because it is provided for in the act which the House passed not too long ago.

He also stated:

> The Department of National Revenue is obliged to apply the law as parliament passes it, not as we would like it to be.

I feel that this answers the longstanding question about the legality of the performance of the Cape Breton Development Corporation with respect to an act of parliament, and in particular sections 18(a)(i) and (a)(ii) of that act which require Devco to set up pension arrangements for miners and their dependents, and for former miners and their dependents, and also section 28(e) of the same act which provides for pension arrangements for those not covered under sections 18(a)(i) and (ii), such as the president of Devco and others. Section 28(e) of the act covering the president and officers of Devco has been in effect for a number of years now while the requirements under 18(a)(i) and 18(a)(ii) have not been made available to the miners, former miners and their dependents. I should also like to point out that persons covered by section 28(e) can contribute to a retirement plan in a five-year period more than those who come under clauses 18(a)(i) and 18(a)(ii) can in 40 or 45 years.

• (1110)

The minister made a statement and I do not take exception to it but since it applies to the Department of National Revenue I take it that it also applies to other departments of government. The law is not being upheld. Officers and high salaried people in Devco can contribute as much in five years as a miner can in 40 or 45 years, but the pension arrangements made available to miners under sections 18(a)(i) and 18(a)(ii) have not been implemented despite the fact that the former minister indicated that they should be made available to them.

Some hon. Members: Order!

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member should indicate what the question of privilege is and in what way his parliamentary privilege has been breached. He has the floor on this basis and it seems to me that he is now making a statement in relation to the reply given by the minister yesterday. I would hope that the hon. member would indicate as quickly as possible what the question of privilege is so that the Chair can make a ruling.

Mr. MacInnis (Cape Breton-East Richmond): Mr. Speaker, my question of privilege puts into question whether the statement made by the Minister of National Revenue yesterday and which appears at page 1791 of Hansard is accurate and whether it applies equally to the miners of Cape Breton and to those people whom I represent as it does to anyone else. The evidence I have placed before the House would indicate that the law is not being upheld as far as the miners are concerned. I believe that I have a question of privilege as the member representing these people. Further, Mr. Speaker,—

Some hon. Members: Order!

An hon. Member: Sit down!

Mr. MacInnis (Cape Breton-East Richmond): Mr. Speaker, I would just indicate before resuming my seat, which I do not intend to do just because somebody over there wishes it—

Mr. Stanfield: I hope not.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. MacInnis (Cape Breton-East Richmond): —that not only is the law not being upheld with respect to the welfare of miners but the law is being broken.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Again, I have to suggest to the hon. member that while it seems to me he may have a grievance I doubt very much that the statement he is making now can qualify under the heading of privilege. I would hope that he would reach the end of his statement as quickly as possible so that the Chair can make a ruling whether there is a question of privilege which ought to be pursued further.

Mr. MacInnis (Cape Breton-East Richmond): Mr. Speaker, if anybody in this House ever had a question of privilege I think I have one. For five years I have been trying to get the government to uphold legislation passed by this House. I want to make sure that a Crown corporation set up by this parliament will stop breaking the law. Evidence that it is breaking the law is contained in the report of the Standing Committee on Justice and Legal Affairs. A document was placed before that committee which required—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member has had the floor now for some time on a question of privilege but until now he has not indicated that there is a question of privilege. The hon. member says that he has a question of privilege. That is a ruling that the Chair has to make. Again I suggest to him that he may have a grievance and I hope he will give the Chair the opportunity to make a ruling as soon as possible.

Mr. MacInnis (Cape Breton-East Richmond): Mr. Speaker, I want to go along with your ruling, but representing the people that I do I think I have been detrimentally affected by the actions of a Crown corporation despite legislation passed by this House. Where do I turn? How do I get proper guidance when I ask for opinions from ministers in the House and opinions from departments? They will not even answer mail.

Therefore, Mr. Speaker, I submit that I have a question of privilege in that I cannot find out for people I represent what justice means in this country and whether legislation passed by this parliament is to be implemented. The report of the Standing Committee on Justice and Legal Affairs indicates that the Crown corporation, Devco, for eight months acted illegally and that this action detrimentally affected between 1,700 and 1,800 miners. The legislation required the approval of the Treasury Board under section 18(3) of the act and this requirement was not fulfilled until eight months or more after the act was put into effect.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member for Halton-Wentworth.

MR. KEMPLING—ANSWER TO QUESTION BY MINISTER OF THE ENVIRONMENT

Mr. Bill Kempling (Halton-Wentworth): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a question of privilege concerning the responsibility of the Minister of the Environment (Mr. Davis) to the members of this House.

Hansard for February 22, 1973, records the following question and answer between myself and the minister at page 1544. I said:

> Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a supplementary question to the Minister of the Environment. Can the minister advise whether the Centre for Inland Waters at Burlington, Ontario, more specifically the $60 million hydraulic facility at this location, is studying the erosion effects of high water in Lake Ontario and, if not, will he direct that such a study be undertaken immediately?

The minister replied:

> Mr. Speaker, I understand that a study along those lines has been under way for some time. It is being done in co-operation with the government of Ontario, and I expect that a preliminary report will be published some time in March.

I have since established that, in fact, no such study was under way, that, after my question, the minister contacted his officials at Burlington and received a reply. For the minister's purposes, that after the fact inquiry apparently justifies his misleading myself and other members of the House. If Your Honour finds that I have a legitimate question of privilege I would move, seconded by the hon. member for Hamilton West (Mr. Alexander):

> That the subject matter be referred to the Standing Committee on Privileges and Elections.

Mr. Speaker: I have no hesitation in telling the hon. member that this is not a question of privilege. It has been ruled often that disputes as to facts cannot be the basis of a question of privilege. I refer the hon. member to citation 113 of Beauchesne's Fourth Edition. The hon. member may have a grievance or a point of debate with the minister, but that cannot possibly be considered as founding a legitimate question of privilege. Therefore I am sure the hon. member will agree with me that there would not be much point in having this dispute as to whether there was an inquiry or not looked into by the Standing Committee on Privileges and Elections. I am sure the hon. member will find other ways to ascertain the facts or to confirm his interpretation of the facts.

Mr. Mather: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a question of privilege. Can nothing be done to protect Your Honour, the House and the taxpayers from ersatz questions of privilege?

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Baldwin: How about motions for papers?

Mr. Bell: How about the filibuster on old age pensions?

VANCOUVER INTERNATIONAL—ANNOUNCEMENT OF DECISION TO PROCEED WITH EXPANSION FOLLOWING HEARINGS UNDER EXPROPRIATION ACT

Hon. Jean-Eudes Dubé (Minister of Public Works): Mr. Speaker, I believe hon. members are aware that public hearings under the Expropriation Act of objections to the intended expropriation of land required for the expansion of Vancouver International Airport were completed last week.

Of the 170 properties required for this expansion, the government had completed the purchase of 117 prior to expropriation proceedings. The notice of intention to expropriate therefore affects a total of 53 properties.

The government has carefully considered the objections documented in the hearing officer's report, and the Minister of Transport (Mr. Marchand), in particular, has reviewed the technical aspects. The government is convinced of the need to complete the planned expansion of Vancouver International Airport, and I am of the opinion that the designated lands are required for this purpose. Accordingly, I have signed the notice of confirmation of expropriation and requested the Attorney General of Canada to take the necessary steps to immediately effect registration of the notice in the local land registry office.

The objections made at the hearing focused on the possible impact of constructing a new runway. Notwithstanding the fact that noise studies already have been made and published, the Minister of the Environment (Mr. Davis) will conduct a thorough study during the next 12 months into the effects of a new runway on the environment. The findings will be published and open to public discussion before work begins on the proposed new runway.

I believe these arrangements meet the concerns of the residents of Vancouver, and in particular I can assure the House that each owner will be dealt with compassionately and given the full benefit of the new Expropriation Act.

Mr. Lewis: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. The minister did not provide us with a copy of his statement.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Stanfield: Why should he? You are not the opposition any more.

Mr. Hees: You are in the same party.

Mr. Bell: Go to caucus.

Mr. Hees: Did you not get a copy at caucus?

Vancouver International Airport

Mr. Lewis: If you have had your fun, perhaps you will let me finish my point of order. I have not seen a copy of the statement, Mr. Speaker, and I could not hear the hon. minister because of the noise.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Lewis: I have it now, Mr. Speaker. I have been provided with a copy of the statement by a member of the Social Credit party.

Mr. John A. Fraser (Vancouver South): Mr. Speaker, in rising to reply to the statement which has just been made on behalf of the government, may I say I noticed the singular silence evidenced by a lack of applause from the government benches when the statement was concluded.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Fraser: I think that silence was appropriate because the record of this expropriation and the lack of planning that has gone into this expansion of Vancouver airport is a classic example of what is wrong with our environmental decision-making.

I notice the statement says "The government has carefully considered the objections documented in the hearing officer's report". If that is so, the government is all the more condemned because documented in that hearing officer's report were facts such as these: No reliable NEF noise contour map exists; an estimate prepared by the Greater Vancouver Regional District indicates that approximately 135,000 residents in the areas mentioned would be placed within the NEF 25 contour. There has been no necessary co-operative planning with the Department of the Environment, the province of British Columbia, the city of Vancouver, the municipality of Richmond or the Greater Vancouver Regional District.

The minister also stated that "the Minister of the Environment will conduct a thorough study during the next 12 months into the effects of the runway on the environment." I suggest, Mr. Speaker, even that concession would not have been made if it had not been for the tremendous attack the government has been under in the past two months with regard to both this airport and the Pickering airport.

I ask all members, especially those on the government side, what kind of decision-making is this? The government is going to go ahead with the airport and then, because it came under attack in the House, it is going to have an environmental study. Suppose the environmental study shows you should not go ahead with it. What are you going to do?

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Fraser: What if the Minister of the Environment (Mr. Davis) says, don't do it? What about the neighbourhood that has been broken up and destroyed in the process? Can the government put that back?

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Fraser: Lastly, Mr. Speaker, I remind all hon. members that some years ago the then minister of justice, now the Minister of Finance (Mr. Turner), when he appeared before the Standing Committee on Justice and Legal Affairs on November 25, 1969, said concerning the section under which this expropriation is taking place and with regard to the hearing officer:

> The type of person I have in mind is somebody from the community, a lawyer or someone who has had experience in arbitration matters, somebody having some experience in real estate, somebody who would give the parties a fair hearing. You will notice, Mr. Chairman, that the procedure is pretty loose. We do not anticipate that this hearing would be conducted in accordance with the rules of evidence, that type of precise hearing, we hope that the rules of natural justice would be followed.

Yet on the twenty-first of this month the Federal Court ruled that the hearing officer is not subject to the rules of natural justice. When I asked in the House whether the present Minister of Justice would consider holding off this decision until these objectors could be heard in accordance with the rules of natural justice, the government responded by doing nothing.

I regret the statement that has been made today. I think it is a classic example of the lack of proper decision-making in connection with environmental matters and the lack of response by government to an entire community that is very upset about what is going on in Vancouver.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. David Lewis (York South): Mr. Speaker, I join with the hon. member for Vancouver South (Mr. Fraser) in expressing serious criticism of what has gone on in this situation. I had occasion to meet the people of Sea Island on a number of visits during the last couple of years and it seems to me that the way this matter has been handled over the last two years has done a savage injustice to the people of that island.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Lewis: I do not have the file with me this morning, but at one point a couple of years ago a representative of the Department of Justice, Mr. Troop, and the solicitor for the home owners on Sea Island had drafted and agreed upon a voluntary arbitration agreement. The home owners have ever since asked the department to approve that agreement since it has been approved by their representative after negotiations with the representative of the department. The department has not approved that voluntary agreement, and ever since the home owners have not known where they were going or what was going to happen.

There is still a portion of the area which has not been expropriated and which apparently is not to be expropriated. A commercial development involving hotels and motels is taking place. The people of the area have not been given an opportunity to take part in it. They have no idea what will happen to their properties and how badly their value may be depreciated by the developments that are taking place. The hearing held by the officer was the kind of hearing at which people talk but no one listens. I say to the Minister of Transport and to the Minister of Public Works that this kind of insensitivity—I suppose they really had nothing to do with it; the blasted mandarins in the department keep going at these things—this kind of treatment of people who have had a lifetime of association with the area is treatment no one can possibly condone. They want to know where they are going and what may happen tomorrow.

I suggest to the Minister of Public Works that before he carries out any of the things outlined here, including the phony inquiry which is to take place after everything has been settled, he should make sure that the voluntary arbitration agreement to which I have referred is accepted by his department and by the Department of Transport so that the home owners may have an opportunity to present their case in full to a body that will listen to them and make some judgment based on the facts.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

SPORTS

WINNING OF WORLD FIGURE SKATING CHAMPIONSHIP BY KAREN MAGNUSSEN—REQUEST FOR UNANIMOUS CONSENT TO MOVE MOTION

Mr. David MacDonald (Egmont): Mr. Speaker, I rise under the provisions of Standing Order 43 to seek the unanimous consent of the House to move a motion which I hope all hon. members, including, in particular, the Minister of the Environment, will find acceptable. It is brief and non-controversial. I move, seconded by the hon. member for Vancouver South (Mr. Fraser):

• (1130)

> That this House convey, through you, Sir, our heartiest congratulations to Karen Magnussen of North Vancouver, who not only won the world figure skating championship last night but the hearts of all Canadians from coast to coast.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Speaker: The House has heard the motion proposed by the hon. member for Egmont. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Speaker: I gather there is unanimity. Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the said motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Motion agreed to.

FINANCE

ADMINISTRATION OF MONEY ADVANCED TO QUEBEC FOR STUDENT LOANS—REQUEST FOR UNANIMOUS CONSENT TO MOVE MOTION

Mr. Roland Godin (Portneuf): Mr. Speaker, under the terms of Standing Order 43, I request the unanimous consent of the House to propose a motion on an urgent matter concerning credits granted by the government of Canada to the government of Quebec for student loans and bursaries.

I move, seconded by the hon. member for Bellechasse (Mr. Lambert):

That the House instruct the Standing Committee on Broadcasting, Films and Assistance to the Arts to carry out a thorough study of the Quebec education law and its application to student loans and bursaries, with a view to ascertaining whether the credits granted by the government of Canada to the government of Quebec for student grants are in fact used to that end, and that the committee suggest, if necessary, by what ways and means the government of Canada could ensure that the money granted to the Quebec government for that purpose should be used exclusively for the benefit of students.

Mr. Speaker: The House has heard the hon. member's motion. Under the terms of Standing Order 43, this motion requires the unanimous consent of the House. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. Speaker: There is not unanimous consent, and so the motion cannot be put.

[English]

Mr. Broadbent: Mr. Speaker, before we leave motions I wonder whether I could raise a point of order. It has come to my attention that an error of some $47 million in the Canada-U.S. automotive trade figures released two days ago has been made by Statistics Canada. As a result, instead of having a deficit on trade in automotive products with the United States of $41.2 million as originally announced, there is a surplus of $5.8 million. I wonder whether we could ask the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce (Mr. Gillespie) to make a brief explanatory statement to the House on this very important matter.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member will recognize that this is hardly a point of order. I would think it is a question that might be asked during the question period by way of a suggestion at that time that we might revert to motions for the purpose of hearing a statement from the minister. I think there might be difficulty if under motions hon. members ask questions of ministers to invite them to make statements during routine proceedings. Perhaps the hon. member might like to put that question during the question period.

ORAL QUESTION PERIOD

PENITENTIARIES

DISTURBANCE AT MILLHAVEN—PRESENT SITUATION—RETRAINING OF STAFF

Mr. Erik Nielsen (Yukon): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Solicitor General, whom I reluctantly disturb at this particular moment. Can the Solicitor General reassure the House that the disturbances involving a sitdown at the Millhaven institution are under control and that there is no danger of an escalation which could cause serious injuries either to inmates or the custodial staff?

Hon. Warren Allmand (Solicitor General): Mr. Speaker, there has been a sitdown strike of inmates since last weekend, but there has been no real trouble. It has been a peaceful sitdown strike up to this point. Yesterday there was a meeting between officials of the department and representatives of the inmate population, and it is hoped that we will have a full report as soon as possible.

Mr. Nielsen: Would the minister reassure the House as to who is in control of Millhaven? Is it the custodial staff or the inmates?

Mr. Allmand: Mr. Speaker, the officials of the penitentiary system and the director of the penitentiary with his men are in control.

Mr. Nielsen: In view of the fact that the Swackhamer report refers to a "custodial subculture" as having a detrimental effect on the over-all rehabilitation program, could the minister say what steps are being taken to ensure that staff at all levels and in all institutions are being accorded equal opportunity for training in modern methods of penology, which has not been the case up to the present?

Mr. Allmand: Mr. Speaker, several months ago—I am not sure of the exact date—refresher courses were started for all levels of staff, including custodial staff, so that they will be trained in new rehabilitative methods.

Mr. Nielsen: At Kingston?

Mr. Allmand: Yes, at Kingston College. I am not too sure how many from the Kingston area were involved. I might say that this sitdown strike started originally as a result of a stabbing incident between inmates. A frisking of the inmates was carried out to find out whether any weapons were involved and from there it went on to other things. We hope to have a full report on the matter as soon as possible.

REQUEST FOR ESTABLISHMENT OF VISITORS COMMITTEES TO FACILITATE DISPOSITION OF GRIEVANCES

Mr. R. Gordon L. Fairweather (Fundy-Royal): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question for the Solicitor General. Will the minister establish on a priority basis a penitentiary visitors committee to facilitate grievance procedures, which are now solely dependent upon prison administrations? Such a committee might be a source of relief for some of the bitterness and frustration that exists in Canadian penitentiaries.

Hon. Warren Allmand (Solicitor General): Mr. Speaker, that is one of the recommendations that has not yet been implemented but is under study. Personally I am very interested in it, and as soon as the studies are completed I will make a report to the House. I might say that there are experimental visitors committees operating with respect to some penitentiaries and we are using this experience in reaching a decision.

Mr. Fairweather: Would the minister acknowledge that this recommendation was made in 1938 by Judge Archambault and that the study has perhaps gone on quite long enough?

REQUEST FOR REFERENCE OF REPORT ON KINGSTON DISTURBANCES TO COMMITTEE

Mr. Andrew Brewin (Greenwood): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question for the Solicitor General. In light of the fact the minister himself has stated in connection with the Swackhamer report that public understanding of correctional problems would be enhanced by a study of the report with a view to protecting the public and providing opportunities for rehabilitation, would the minister take steps to see that the report is referred to the Standing Committee on Justice and Legal Affairs for further discussion?

Hon. Warren Allmand (Solicitor General): Mr. Speaker, that is an interesting suggestion and I will take it under consideration. May I say that I will also take note of the last suggestion that was made, to which I did not have a chance to reply.

KINGSTON—REQUEST THAT CITY BE REIMBURSED FOR ADDITIONAL EXPENDITURES NECESSITATED BY RIOT

Miss Flora MacDonald (Kingston and the Islands): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question for the Solicitor General. In view of the fact the city of Kingston incurred direct costs of $22,000 in overtime pay for local police during the period of the Kingston penitentiary riot and that this was a service requested by the federal authorities, and that an additional $100,000 was spent on local police services for protection and investigation purposes during the period of the trial, would the minister consider very seriously reimbursing the city of Kingston for this outlay of $120,000, which was directly attributable to a major disturbance in a federal institution and did not result from any local situation?

Hon. Warren Allmand (Solicitor General): Mr. Speaker, I cannot recall having received a request to that effect up until this time, but I would be glad to give the hon. member's suggestion serious attention.

ENERGY

NATURAL GAS—ALLEGED SALE FOR EXPORT AT LOWER PRICE THAN ALTERNATIVE SOURCES IN UNITED STATES—POSSIBLE LOSS TO CANADIAN ECONOMY

Mr. T. C. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources. Since National Energy Board regulations require the board to review prices of export gas and to report to the cabinet when these prices fall below alternative sources of energy in the United States, and in view of the fact that last Wednesday at page 1750 of Hansard the government in answer to my motion for production of papers No. 157 indicated no reports had been received from the National Energy Board since September 29, 1970, I should like to ask the minister whether he is aware of the fact that the Alberta Resources Conservation Board in its report of August, 1972, stated that Canadian gas was being sold at an average of 15 cents per m.c.f. below alternative sources? I should also like to ask the minister whether he asked the board for a report, why no report was received and why no action was taken?

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, I have been discussing this question in respect of regulation 11(A) to which the hon. member referred with the board and the chairman has advised me that when the parliamentary committee gets to the question of gas pricing he will be in a position to make a very full report of the rather complicated circumstances surrounding gas pricing in the export market.

Mr. Douglas: Mr. Speaker, on the assumption that the Alberta finding applies to the whole export of Canadian gas, this dereliction of duty on the part of the government represents a loss of $140 million a year to the Canadian economy. I should like to ask the minister to explain to the House why he was derelict in this respect, and we will let the chairman of the National Energy Board explain when he appears before the committee in due course.

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The Chair will allow the minister to reply to the hon. member's question, but the hon. member may agree with me that this is more of an argument than a question. That having been said, the minister might reply briefly.

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): Mr. Speaker, I was about to say that I did not accept the hon. gentleman's premise.

Mr. Douglas: Irrespective of whether the minister accepts the premise of my question, Mr. Speaker, I ask him now whether the Canadian economy sustained a substantial loss as a result of Canadian gas being sold on the United States market below the price of gas from alternative sources, and why no action was taken by the government with regard to that matter?

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): Mr. Speaker, as I indicated, the response to the question of gas pricing into export markets is a very complicated response and I do not really think I can go into it on orders of the day. As I have already indicated to the hon. gentleman and the House, we will be prepared to go into this very fully in the committee when we get to the question of gas pricing after the current discussion of oil exports.

TRADE

IMPORTATION OF SNOWMOBILES—REQUEST FOR EXPLANATION

Mr. Adrien Lambert (Bellechasse): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce.

In view of the fact that Canadian plants producing snowmobiles have had to slow down their production during the past few months and that others have closed down because of over-production, may I ask the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce whether he could tell the House why the government authorized imports of snowmobiles amounting to $47 million during the first ten months of 1972?

Mr. Speaker: Here again I am under the impression that the hon. member is inviting the minister to make a statement which normally should be made on motions. If the minister can reply briefly, I shall allow him to do so.

[English]

Hon. Alastair Gillespie (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): Mr. Speaker, I have not got the figures before me but my impression is that there were much greater exports of skidoos from Canada abroad than imports into Canada. However, I will be very pleased to get the figures for the hon. gentleman.

[Translation]

Mr. Lambert (Bellechasse): Mr. Speaker, I wish to ask a supplementary.

I regret that I cannot specify the date on which the answer was given in Hansard, but it was indeed related to imports. I was not wrong therefore in asking my question. I asked the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce why the government had allowed these snowmobiles to be imported while Canadian plants are forced to close down?

UNITED STATES DISC LEGISLATION—INTENTION OF GOVERNMENT RESPECTING ASSOCIATION WITH EUROPEAN ECONOMIC COMMUNITY IN PROTEST

Hon. Robert L. Stanfield (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce. Now that he has given us his various interpretations of the auto pact, I should like to ask him about another matter relating to Canada's trading position. Is it the intention of the government to associate itself with the proposed protest by the European Economic Community against the DISC proposals of the United States as a contravention of GATT?

Hon. Alastair Gillespie (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): Mr. Speaker, we have raised our objections directly with the United States on a bilateral basis.

Mr. Stanfield: I am quite aware of that, having heard the minister say it in the House, but I should like to know whether he intends to associate himself or the government with the protest by the European Economic community? More specifically, has the government consulted with the European Economic Community through its ambassador to that organization with a view to determining the position of the community and, in particular, with a view to associating itself with that protest?

Mr. Gillespie: Mr. Speaker, there is no plan to associate ourselves directly with the community. We have raised the issue in the councils of GATT.

Mr. Stanfield: Is the attitude and the position of the government to go it alone in respect of protests against DISC rather than attempting to associate itself with any general protest?

Mr. Gillespie: Mr. Speaker, I would expect this will be one of the items that will be discussed at the forthcoming multilateral negotiations under GATT, particularly the whole area of non-tariff barriers.

Hon. Marcel Lambert (Edmonton West): Mr. Speaker, my question in this connection is directed to the Minister of Finance. Did the terms and the principal proposals of the budget of May 8, 1972, which were claimed to be counter-DISC proposals, shall we say, indicate that the government of Canada felt there was no recourse through GATT and, therefore, if we are now to associate ourselves with the European Common Market countries will the minister then abandon his proposals in that May 8 budget?

Hon. John N. Turner (Minister of Finance): In no way, Mr. Speaker. Those proposals were general tax proposal reductions not only as a measure that would take into account the proposal of the DISC legislation of the United States but also to render us more competitive in a world where trading negotiations in the GATT and international monetary stability are prerequisites to Canadian prosperity. In the current world I think these corporate tax cuts are even more important.

Hon. George Hees (Prince Edward-Hastings): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a supplementary question to the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce. Were these protests he says have been made by the Canadian government to the United States government on the DISC proposition made by his officials only or has he done it on a minister to minister basis, which is the only effective way of making a protest of this kind?

Mr. Gillespie: Mr. Speaker, it has been done on a government to government basis.

Mr. Hees: Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member will be recognized for a supplementary question, but we are not moving very quickly with so many supplementaries to each question asked.

Mr. Hees: Mr. Speaker, I would simply ask the minister to give a straight answer. Has he done this on a minister to minister basis or on an official basis?

Mr. Gillespie: Mr. Speaker, it has been done on the most official of all official bases, a government to government basis, the Canadian government to the United States government.

Mr. Hees: You simply left it to your officials and you know it. You haven't got guts enough to call the secretary yourself.

Oral Questions

AGRICULTURE

AMOUNT OF LAND IRRIGATED FOLLOWING CONSTRUCTION OF SOUTH SASKATCHEWAN DAM—ALLEGED FAILURE OF PROVINCIAL GOVERNMENT TO LIVE UP TO AGREEMENT

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prince Albert): Mr. Speaker, yesterday I asked the Minister of the Environment a question in connection with the South Saskatchewan River irrigation situation where, as a result of the action taken by the government of Saskatchewan, the expected irrigation of 200,000 acres has been restricted to 15,000 acres. Has he communicated with the government of Saskatchewan to point out what a gross betrayal of the rights of the people of Saskatchewan this is as the result of action of that government?

Hon. Jack Davis (Minister of the Environment): Not yet, Mr. Speaker. I am consulting with the Minister of Regional Economic Expansion under whom PFRA is now operating. We will be taking appropriate action when we have the facts.

• (1150)

Mr. Diefenbaker: That is not the question I asked. The government of Canada put up 75 per cent of the $120 million and the provision was that there was to be a certain amount of irrigation done. Has the minister communicated with the government of Saskatchewan to point out that what is being done is a repudiation of the agreement entered into with the government of Canada when the money was advanced which made possible the building of the dam with the assistance of the government of Saskatchewan? What is he going to do about it?

Mr. Davis: It seems to me that the right hon. gentleman is making a submission concerning an agreement with the government of Saskatchewan which he entered into in his period as Prime Minister of this country. We will look into it with a view to ensuring that the agreement is carried out.

Mr. Hees: Just answer the question. We just want a yes or no.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Has wedded bliss between the government of Saskatchewan and the NDP in this House resulted in the fact that while the Liberal party in Saskatchewan is taking a strong stand against this, it is not going to receive the support of the government of Canada?

Mr. T. C. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question. When the minister is looking in this matter, will he ascertain whether or not there was a government in Saskatchewan from 1964 to 1971 that discontinued the extension of the irrigation works and whether or not that government was not in fact supported by and very friendly to the right hon. member for Prince Albert?

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

[Mr. Hees.]

Mr. Speaker: It seems to me that we are getting into the area of debate and argument.

Mr. Hees: Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Speaker: We are running short of time. Is the hon. member rising on a point of order?

Mr. Hees: Yes, Mr. Speaker. This will take very little time. It is very reassuring to hear the junior members of the coalition backing the senior members.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Speaker: We shall now return to the question period. The hon. member for Selkirk.

NATIONAL DEFENCE

DAMAGE TO HMCS "RESTIGOUCHE"—REASON FOR ESTABLISHMENT OF LEGAL INQUIRY FOLLOWING INITIAL INQUIRY REPORT—COST OF REPAIRS

Mr. Doug Rowland (Selkirk): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of National Defence and is related to the questions I asked yesterday. Was it on instructions from the Minister of National Defence that the Canadian Armed Forces undertook the somewhat unusual step of establishing a board of legal inquiry into the damage done to HMCS Restigouche in refit following the report of the board of inquiry, and was this step taken because deliberate damage that might even be termed sabotage was discovered by the original board of inquiry or was it for the purpose of determining whether the government of Canada can take legal action against the shipyard?

Hon. James Richardson (Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, I would have to check the dates. I think the inquiry may have taken place before I became Minister of National Defence.

Mr. Rowland: Can the minister inform the House at this time what the cost of the repairs involved following the damage to the Restigouche has been and when the Restigouche will once again be ready for service? I refer to the cost over and above the $12 million incurred in the original refit.

Mr. Richardson: I cannot give this cost figure now, but the Restigouche will be back in service very shortly. It is in operational order.

PROPOSED WEST COAST OIL TANKER ROUTE—JOINT CANADA-UNITED STATES COMMITTEE TO CONSIDER CONTROL—PRESENT GOVERNMENT POLICY

Mr. John A. Fraser (Vancouver South): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the right hon. Prime Minister. In view of the fact, as reported yesterday, that the United States administration has now sent legislation to Congress which would circumvent the court's decision against the Alaska pipeline proposal, and in view of the fact the premier of British Columbia is due to meet with representatives of the United States government in Washington, D.C. on March 9 to oppose the tanker route, can the right hon. Prime Minister today tell the House whether the joint Canada-U.S. committee set up last spring to consider joint control of the tanker route has in fact met and, if so, has that committee reported to the governments of Canada and the United States?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): No, Mr. Speaker, I do not have the answer to this. I took note of the question the other day and referred it to both the Secretary of State for External Affairs and to the Minister of the Environment to see who could provide an answer.

Mr. Fraser: I thank the right hon. Prime Minister for his answer and I direct the same question to the Minister of the Environment. I might point out that this is the third week that this question has been asked.

Hon. Jack Davis (Minister of the Environment): Mr. Speaker, I will be meeting shortly with Mr. Russell Train, U.S. presidential adviser on the environment, regarding west coast tankers and related matters.

Mr. Fraser: Mr. Speaker, this is the third Friday this matter has been raised and it may become a weekly event. This is the most elusive committee I have ever known. I wish to ask a supplementary question of the Prime Minister. Can he tell the House whether the government is sending a representative with the premier of British Columbia in order to show the federal government's support of the opposition of that province to the tanker route?

Mr. Trudeau: We have offered to the premier of British Columbia to arrange his visit in Washington and to assist him in meeting U.S. officials. I believe we have the practice of ensuring that our ambassador or a senior official be present at such meetings. I might remind the hon. member that his belated interest in this subject really has not come as something new to the government. We have made representations to the United States government at all levels on many occasions. I told the House that I had discussed the matter with President Nixon himself. Of course, the hon. member is aware of the fact that the Liberal leader in British Columbia is responsible for the very good turn of events in this matter.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Fraser: Mr. Speaker, may I say with respect that I do not mind waiting three weeks to get an answer but I do not think I deserve to have a lecture.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Fraser: I have a supplementary question for the right hon. Prime Minister. In view of the fact that the government has stated its opposition to the tanker route and yet apparently set up a joint committee to study international control, can the Prime Minister tell the House what the present policy of the government is regarding the tanker route and, if the policy is opposition, what alternative has the government discussed with the United States?

Mr. Trudeau: With regard to the matter of policy, Mr. Speaker, I think we have discussed it in the House in answer to several questions. I just want to remind the hon. member that what I said a couple of weeks ago, I believe, in answer to this question was that I had discussed this matter with the President. I suggested to him that we refer the matter to the International Joint Commission. The President suggested that it be done rather through a different ad hoc committee. It is this ad hoc committee to which I have referred. I have no report on how frequently it has met or if it has met at all. I do know that the matter has been pursued, as the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce would say, between the two governments and the Minister of the Environment has repeated again that he is proposing to meet his opposite number in the United States.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The Chair will recognize the Leader of the Opposition for a supplementary question. We are fast approaching the end of the question period and we have had a large number of supplementary questions on every question that has come up. I think that is the source of difficulty during the question period.

Hon. Robert L. Stanfield (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question for the Prime Minister following his answers to the questions put to him. Is it not the position that the government, after assuring the House that an ad hoc committee representing officials of the two countries would be set up to study this matter, has done absolutely nothing about that since?

STATUS OF WOMEN

IMPLEMENTATION OF COMMISSION RECOMMENDATIONS—POSSIBILITY OF DELAY BECAUSE OF ESTABLISHMENT OF ADVISORY COMMITTEE

Mr. Stuart Leggatt (New Westminster): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Labour and is prompted by the report that the minister intends to establish an advisory committee to study implementation of the recommendations of the Royal Commission on the Status of Women. Is it the intention of the government now to delay the implementation of any of these recommendations or to delay the bringing forward of legislation until the minister has had a report from that committee?

Hon. John C. Munro (Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, many of the recommendations have already been implemented and many are in the course of being implemented. The purpose of the advisory council is merely to assist the government in a judicious way in acting on other recommendations that have not yet been acted upon. It is designed to help. I would point out to the hon. member that there was a report tabled in the House in the latter part of last year indicating how many of these recommendations we have already acted upon, and I would be pleased to send him a copy.

ACTION TO ENSURE EQUAL PAY FOR WOMEN

Mr. James A. McGrath (St. John's East): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a supplementary question to the Minister of Labour. What steps is he taking to correct the situation that came to light recently in a departmental publication in which it was indicated that three million women in Canada are getting less than equal pay notwithstanding federal and provincial law to this effect? What steps is he taking within his jurisdiction, to correct that unjust situation?

Hon. John C. Munro (Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, I know that the hon. member is aware that we passed a bill providing for equal pay for men and women at the federal level. It is a good bill, and we are taking action to see that it is implemented for the benefit of all those employees who come under federal jurisdiction. If some of the provinces would pass similar, strong legislation, this would have a noticeable impact on a great many more employees, most of whom come under provincial jurisdiction.

Mr. Hees: That bill is a snow job. It has no teeth.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member for St. John's East has the floor.

Mr. McGrath: Is the minister prepared to meet with his provincial counterparts to achieve the situation he has described in his answer whereby women will be treated equitably and justly all across the country, and will he discuss with his provincial counterparts some standard code across the country?

Mr. Munro (Hamilton East): Mr. Speaker, I believe that the Ministers of Labour from the provinces will be coming to a meeting in Ottawa some time in the latter part of March or early April, and this undoubtedly will be one of the subject matters to be discussed.

AGRICULTURE

FEED GRAIN—REVIEW OF POLICY

Mr. Roch La Salle (Joliette): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the minister responsible for the Canadian Wheat Board.

As he met last Monday with the president of the Union des producteurs agricoles du Québec, can he give the House the assurance that changes will be made soon in the feed grain policy and if so, can he assure us that they will reflect the representations of Eastern producers?

[English]

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister of Justice): Mr. Speaker, we did meet last Monday and there will indeed be a number of other meetings in the course of putting into effect the statement in the Speech from the Throne that prior to the beginning of the next crop year we will have measures in place to ensure fair and equitable pricing of feed grains across the country, always, of course, allowing for inevitable costs of moving and storage. Therefore, the representations of the producers in the province of Quebec are being taken into consideration, as are the representations from other producer groups across the country.

CAPE BRETON DEVELOPMENT CORPORATION

ALLEGATION THAT CORPORATION ACTED ILLEGALLY IN EARLY RETIREMENT OF MINERS

Mr. Donald MacInnis (Cape Breton-East Richmond): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Prime Minister. Is the Prime Minister aware that for eight months the Cape Breton Development Corporation acted illegally in putting miners on the street because of age without the required approval of the Treasury Board, and is he aware that the corporation is continuing to retire people before the normal age of 65 despite a Federal Court ruling which removed that power from the government because the government was acting beyond its jurisdiction?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, if the hon. member has an allegation of illegality against the government or any of its agencies, I think he should address the question to the Minister of Justice.

Mr. MacInnis (Cape Breton-East Richmond): I rise on a point of order, Mr. Speaker. This gives me the opportunity to call the Prime Minister's attention to the fact that on many occasions I have asked the Minister of Justice to look into this matter. I have also written to the Minister of Justice. I have received no answers in the House or to my letters. It is time that the government and the leader of the government took the responsibility of seeing that the statement made yesterday in the House of Commons by the Minister of National Revenue, to the effect that the Department of National Revenue "is obliged to apply the law as parliament passes it, not as we would like it," is put into effect. If the Minister of National Revenue is going to remain an honest man, the government and the Prime Minister had better do something about this.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Speaker: Is the hon. member rising on a further point of order?

Mr. MacInnis (Cape Breton-East Richmond): Yes, Mr. Speaker. My point of order arises from the fact—it will not be recorded in Hansard—that the Minister of National Revenue seems to see something in this to laugh about. I point out to him that his integrity is in question on this subject, and I repeat that if he is going to remain an honest man he should do something about this situation.

HEALTH

STATUS OF NUTRITION SURVEY

Mrs. Grace MacInnis (Vancouver-Kingsway): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of National Health and Welfare. Some time ago I asked him about the Nutrition Canada survey and he was good enough to promise to get some detail and to say when we could expect the results of the survey to become public. Does he have that information now?

[Translation]

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of National Health and Welfare): With pleasure, Mr. Speaker.

The survey of Nutrition Canada was the widest ever undertaken in Canada on Canadians' nutrition. During this survey about 28 million data were collected and they now have to be compiled and analyzed. Reports are being prepared for each province; the first ones will be ready by May and the others will be completed in October or in late September.

These reports will be conveyed to the government of each province as soon as they are completed. An agreement has been reached between the provinces and the federal government whereby all papers will be made public when they are ready, as regards all provinces. Even though the first reports will be conveyed to the provinces in late May, I hope to be in a position to make all these documents public by the middle of October. Meanwhile the provinces and the federal government will make a thorough study of them.

[English]

Mrs. MacInnis (Vancouver-Kingsway): Will it be necessary to have the agreement of all the provinces on a course of action before we can expect action on the nutrition survey?

[Translation]

Mr. Lalonde: No, Mr. Speaker. The only agreement reached with the provinces about the study was that reports would not be made public on a regional breakdown only, and in order to prevent a biased interpretation for the whole of the country, these reports were not to be made public separately. Of course, each government will be free to act as it sees fit within its responsibilities in the light of the report.

PUBLIC BUILDINGS

ARCHIVES RECORD CENTRE, WINNIPEG—ALLEGED FAILURE OF LOWEST BIDDER TO RECEIVE CONTRACT

Mr. Dan McKenzie (Winnipeg South Centre): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the President of the Treasury Board and the Minister of Public Works. It is with regard to the error made by the Treasury Board and the Department of Public Works in awarding the build-lease Public Archives Record Centre contract in Winnipeg to the second lowest bidder when it should have been awarded to the lowest bidder, thereby saving the Canadian taxpayers $272,000. Will the two ministers order a halt to the second lowest bidder proceeding with any building plans until this matter has been fully investigated and a report made to the House of Commons?

Hon. Jean-Eudes Dubé (Minister of Public Works): Mr. Speaker, I will have to look into this matter. I am not aware of it. I will report back to the House.

Mr. McKenzie: Mr. Speaker, I would like to point out that I have written both ministers on this subject, and I have been corresponding with their departments on it for the last three months.

EXPORT DEVELOPMENT CORPORATION

POSSIBLE EXCEEDING OF CEILING ON LOANS—REQUEST FOR AUDIT

Mr. Sinclair Stevens (York-Simcoe): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce. I have given him notice of it. Would the minister inform the House as of February 28, 1973, to what extent has the Export Development Corporation's $850 million authority under sections 29 and 30 of the Export Development Act been exceeded?

Hon. Alastair Gillespie (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): Mr. Speaker, I thank the hon. member for this notice. As of February 28 the ceiling has not been exceeded.

Mr. Stevens: Would the minister request the Auditor General of Canada to do an audit of the Export Development Corporation's books as of today, so that the House may be assured that the $850 million ceiling has not been exceeded?

Mr. Gillespie: Mr. Speaker, I do not consider that necessary.

• (1210)

REQUEST THAT CORPORATION GIVE PRIORITY TO CANADIAN COMPANIES

Mr. Sinclair Stevens (York-Simcoe): A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Would the minister inform the House if he has requested the Export Development Corporation to better serve Canadian-owned businesses as opposed to foreign corporations and to give more export assistance to small businesses in this country?

Hon. Alastair Gillespie (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): Mr. Speaker, we will have a full opportunity, I hope, at an early date to discuss the question of small Canadian-owned businesses and the great benefit that the Export Development Corporation has provided for Canadians and Canadian jobs.

Oral Questions

AIR TRANSPORT

AIR CANADA REQUEST FOR ROUTE TO PEKING—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Les Benjamin (Regina-Lake Centre): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Transport. In view of the almost historic practice of allocating Atlantic routes to Europe to Air Canada and Pacific routes to Canadian Pacific Airlines, and in view of the fact that in later years routes were allocated to Canadian Pacific in Europe, can the minister assure the House that Air Canada's request for the route to Peking is being sympathetically considered, and will a decision be made at an early date?

Hon. Jean Marchand (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I think in both cases a decision is going to be made very shortly.

Mr. Benjamin: Can the minister assure the House that no further erosion of Air Canada routes and opportunities, both in regard to the new landing sites in Europe and at Peking, will be countenanced and those routes will in fact be granted to Air Canada?

Mr. Marchand (Langelier): Mr. Speaker, I think when the hon. gentleman learns the decision of the cabinet he will be able to draw whatever conclusions he wishes.

TRANSPORT

PROVISION OF RAILWAY CARS TO MOVE BRITISH COLUMBIA APPLES

Mr. G. H. Whittaker (Okanagan Boundary): Mr. Speaker, my question is supplementary to the question I asked on February 19 of the Minister of Transport which he answered by letter yesterday. In view of the fact that Canadian National Railways supplied only 13 out of the 207 cars for Okanagan apples shipped to the United States while Canadian Pacific supplied 115, and in view of the fact that the Okanagan fruit industry hauled 79 cars across the border at an expense to them of $15,000 as well as the loss of business because of the lack of Canadian railway cars—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Would the hon. member ask the question. I suggest that a question asked in those terms is somewhat irregular. The hon. member should ask the question as quickly as possible without conveying information to the House.

Mr. Whittaker: Mr. Speaker, I will do that immediately. Will the minister assure the House that the CNR will now supply cars for this export business?

Hon. Jean Marchand (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, as of February 21, eight 40-foot cars and four 50-foot cars were on hand in the Okanagan. Twenty-eight 40-foot and 32 fifty-foot cars are standing by in Edmonton and eighteen 40-foot cars in Vancouver. Canadian National system cars that are being supplied are not foreign cars. In summary, CNR have supplied whatever cars have been requested.

WILDLIFE

ACTION TO PROTECT WOLVES FROM EXTINCTION

Mr. Steven E. Paproski (Edmonton Centre): Mr. Speaker, my question is to the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development. In view of the strenuous efforts made in the United States—may I start again, Mr. Speaker. My question is for the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development.

An hon. Member: Tell Georgie boy to keep quiet.

Mr. Paproski: In view of the strenuous efforts made in the United States to protect the Canadian timber wolf, what action is the Canadian government taking for the survival of this threatened magnificent species?

[Translation]

Hon. Jean Chrétien (Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): Mr. Speaker,—

[English]

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I have the impression that perhaps this question could be placed on the order paper. In view of the fact we have about reached the end of the question period, perhaps the minister might be allowed to reply—whichever minister is responsible.

Mr. Paproski: Mr. Speaker, a point of order before the minister does reply, I consider this to be a very important question and I want to get an answer this week, since there has been a Canadian wolf displayed in the United States House of Representatives. In view of the fact the wolf population in the United States has been reduced to 350-500 in Minnesota, three to five million in Alaska and 90 in Louisiana of French heritage, which I think are becoming extinct, I really think there should be something that the minister could say.

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I want to attempt to reply to the hon. member. I can assure him that the species is alive and well. I saw the tracks of a wolf just about a mile from my house last weekend. I rather think it was a brush wolf and not a timber wolf because of the spacing between the tracks. I will try to ascertain which it was this weekend and perhaps reassure the hon. member next week.

POLAR BEARS—REQUEST FOR NUMBER SHOT IN ARCTIC

Mr. Steven E. Paproski (Edmonton Centre): Mr. Speaker, I thank the Prime Minister for that explanation but I should like to ask the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development a supplementary. When will the minister be prepared to indicate the number of polar bears shot in the Arctic?

[Translation]

Hon. Jean Chrétien (Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): Mr. Speaker, a quota has been set for several years on Arctic polar bear killed by Eskimos under Canadian Wildlife Service supervision and I think the situation is quite under control right now; I believe that even in the Churchill area, in Manitoba, they complain that there are too many polar bears.

[English]

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Prince George-Peace River rises on a point of order.

Mr. Oberle: Mr. Speaker, the minister finally got up and answered the question, but I feel that he was unduly protected by Your Honour—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member will appreciate that these remarks are entirely uncalled for. I will now call orders of the day. The hon. member for Oshawa-Whitby rises on a point of order.

Mr. Broadbent: Mr. Speaker, I wonder if we could get the unanimous consent of the House to revert to motions for a brief statement to be made by the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce to explain the $47 million discrepancy in trade figures announced by his department today?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

An hon. Member: No.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member has heard the answer. He has heard a no from one side or other of the House. Orders of the day.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

OLD AGE SECURITY ACT

AMENDMENTS TO INCREASE BASIC PENSION AND TO CLARIFY BASE YEAR IN ESCALATION FORMULA

The House resumed, from Thursday, March 1, consideration of the motion of Mr. Lalonde that Bill C-147, to amend the Old Age Security Act, be read the second time and referred to the Standing Committee on Health, Welfare and Social Affairs.

Mr. B. Keith Penner (Thunder Bay): Mr. Speaker, when the debate on this bill to increase the old age security pension adjourned last evening, I was making the point that for the vast majority of Canadians, but certainly not for all, these are extremely good days in which to be living in Canada. Because not all are sharing as they should in this general prosperity, it is imperative for us to bring in this legislation, Bill C-147, raising the old age pension to a minimum of $100.

In 1952, the basic universal old age pension was first introduced in Canada by the 21st parliament. It was to be $40 and for those who were 70 years of age and over. I suggested last evening, Mr. Speaker, that if in 1952 a cost of living escalator had been built into the plan, the pension today would amount to $64.62—that is assuming that along the way there were no other lump sum increases, but only percentage increases according to the cost of living.

Today, rather than a $64 or $65 pension, what we have is a basic old age security pension of $100, with a supplement which could bring that amount up to $170 for a single pensioner or $325 for a married couple. As well, in both the old age security and the guaranteed income supplement, there is now a built in cost of living escalator. The eligible age has been reduced from 70 to 65 and, in addition to this, there is the Canada Pension Plan for those who have retired fairly recently and those who will retire later. In introducing Bill C-147, the government has opted to follow the principle of universality rather than that of selectivity. The bill is universal in scope, in that the basic old age security pension has been increased to $100 per month. Everyone 65 years old and over will benefit.

At the same time, however, I hope that we have not entirely abandoned the principle of helping those who are in greatest need. The hon. member for Bruce (Mr. Whicher) reminded the House last evening that the government of British Columbia has decided to add another $30 to certain pensions, in order to help pensioners who are in special need. The federal government, under the cost-sharing formula, is paying part of that cost. The government of British Columbia has made sure that needy pensioners in that province will be paid at least $200. It astonishes me that Ontario, the richest province in the land, cannot see its way clear to act in the same way. A few days ago, 2,000 pensioners put such a request before the government of Ontario at Queen's Park. They did not see the premier; instead, they were given a nice little talk by the social services minister of Ontario who told them how good and kind the Ontario government had been in the past to the elderly in the province.

I sincerely hope that when the Ontario Legislature goes back to work—it meets so rarely these days—immediate consideration will be given to following the priorities laid down in this House, those to do with decreasing taxes and increasing pensions. I would encourage the needy pensioners of Ontario to keep up their campaign, and continue reminding Premier Davis that his government has some responsibility for helping those who are less fortunate in his very, very wealthy province. Let Ontario add to the pensions of its needy elderly citizens, because the federal government will share in the cost of that increase by virtue of the provisions of the Canada Assistance Plan.

I have already mentioned the year 1952, when the universal old age pension was first introduced in Canada. Reading the Speech from the Throne with which the fifth session of the twenty-first parliament was opened in 1952, the governor general of the day said in part:

> The primary reason for summoning you ... is to invite your consideration of a measure to provide increased security for our older citizens ...

That session was convened so that members could enact that important piece of legislation. Notwithstanding any other legislation that this House may enact during the first session of the twenty-ninth parliament, the law we are now considering to increase basic old age pensions will forever stand to the credit of this parliament.

In 1952 when the universal old age pension was first introduced there were 700,000 persons 70 years of age and over who became eligible. Hon. D. C. Abbott, then minister of finance, estimated that the annual cost of the program would be $342 million. Today, there are nearly 1,800,000 pensioners who are receiving the basic old age pension and supplement. The total annual cost of the basic pension plus the supplement has now risen to nearly $3 billion. In 1952 the minister of finance, when talking about the $342 million, said that the burden of this duty we are voluntarily assuming is not a light one and that no one should be under any misapprehension about this. He told the House that the cost was a heavy one and reminded the House of the simple proposition that a dollar paid out to one person must first of all be taken from another.

If the cost was considered heavy in 1952, think of the cost of the program today, even if one discounts the factor of inflation. In that year, the government was prepared to spend $342 million. We are now being asked to spend $3 billion on a vastly improved program. The cost is high, there is no question about it. Yet it is a cost which I believe most taxpayers are willing to bear gladly. They bear the taxation for this program gladly because they see it as an insurance policy for their own old age, as a contributory plan for their own retirement. They bear the taxation for this program gladly because they know that the old age security program provides a greater measure of dignified independence for our senior citizens.

Before 1952, a very high proportion of Canadians in retirement were obliged to seek some form of social assistance in order to meet basic needs and just stay alive. If the legislation now being considered passes, it will be possible for all senior citizens, except a small number with special needs, to live without having to apply for social assistance of some kind or other. With respect to those with special needs, such as prescription drugs, care in nursing homes, or in their own homes, the costs can in part be met by the Canada Assistance Plan. The federal government pays 50 per cent of costs incurred under that plan. In addition, if the provinces wish to increase supplements that may be paid to the aged and handicapped, federal cost-sharing assistance is available, as I mentioned earlier.

The present level of taxation in all western countries which is needed to pay for programs such as old age security and many others which have been introduced would have been unthinkable 50, or even 20 years ago. Today, however, there is general acceptance of taxation levels needed to pay for these programs, because they are felt to be the result of social progress. It was pressure from the people themselves which made this progress possible. Under popular influence such social programs as old age security have given new rights to our citizens. I stress that the pension is given as of right. It is not a handout; it is a right of the citizens of our country. It has increased their opportunities and opened roads that were previously closed by poverty and secured people against risks that in earlier times were disastrous for individuals and families.

Despite wars and other adverse events, production has increased and incomes and standards of living of a broad stratum of our national community have been rising more rapidly than ever. As a result, the prospects of the young are much better than the prospects which faced their parents or grandparents when they started out in life.

[Mr. Penner.]

Because this is so, I detect in Canada today a general willingness—more than that, an eagerness, a pressure—for a universal pension program which is as generous as possible. This is one government program which provokes few complaints about the amount of money spent on it, even though we are to spend nearly $3 billion.

Speaking as one Canadian, I am proud of the way that Canada has provided a reasonable order of protection for its elderly citizens. Canada is one of the first countries in the world which has provided by legislation that pensioners shall, as a matter of right, without reference to contributions that they may or may not have made to any particular pension plan, and without the imposition of a needs or means test, be guaranteed an income which will permit them to live out their declining years with some measure of security and dignity.

[Translation]

Mr. Claude Wagner (Saint-Hyacinthe): Mr. Speaker, this bill is very close to my heart. During the election campaign I continuously stressed the urgency of giving equitable treatment to our golden age citizens. I repeated everywhere that a nation that forgets its senior citizens is a heartless nation. And a government that refuses them a well-deserved comfortable life is a heartless government. I am therefore gratified to a certain degree by the very minor increase granted through this bill, but I recognize with much less gratification the diffidence of the government in a field where hearts with humane feelings should be inspired to greater generosity.

I read attentively the speech delivered by the hon. Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Lalonde). I expressly say I read it, Mr. Speaker, because while the minister was delivering his speech I was attending a meeting of the House Committee on External Affairs and National Defence and it is one of the drawbacks of our way of proceeding that we should have to sit in a House committee while bills are being debated here in the House.

Still, I did read his speech very carefully and I was struck, right off the start, by the clearly partisan tone which coloured the first words of the minister. He hurried to give all the credit for this measure to a liberal minister, of a liberal government, succeeding other liberal governments, with the result that the liberals alone know what is good for the people, they alone have the monopoly of social security, and without them, we would be very helpless, very miserable.

I would have thought, Mr. Speaker, that the arrogance reflected in the words of the minister had disappeared as a result of the lesson taught on October 30 last. But it must be that feelings die hard and that attitudes persist in spite of the lessons of the past.

Mr. Speaker, in presenting such an important bill, the minister should have placed himself on a much higher, more detached and serene level. Does he forget, for instance, that public funds do not belong to a party, a minister or a member of parliament, that they belong to the Canadian people, that they are not the exclusive property of the liberal party?

Does the minister forget that the public treasury must be managed with wisdom, without any influence reflecting the colour of the distributor?

Has the minister forgotten that, as a Crown minister, he is first and foremost the servant of the people and not a Ceasar who gives arrogantly and says: Accept because I am Ceasar.

Mr. Speaker, on reviewing the speech and studying more thoroughly the legislation brought forward, I wondered whether there really was something to be so proud about. All I need do is reread the hundreds of letters I receive, like other hon. members, to be able to say that the measly allowance granted to senior citizens seems to be an extremely shabby measure to hundreds of Canadians.

When the minister tells us about an increase in his budget, an increase in allowances, he forgets that other increases have also taken place; he forgets that unemployment in this country has reached a record high. As a matter of fact, the rate of unemployment in the province of Quebec has reached 10.2 per cent.

The minister also forgets that the cost of living now stands at an unprecedented level in this country, an aspect which should hang in the balance when the minister brags about his own bill.

Mr. Speaker, my intention is not to give a detailed analysis on this measure. Besides it has been done quite competently and intelligently by my colleague, the hon. member for Hillsborough (Mr. Macquarrie). I would still like to say why we have so much set our heart on this cause of the golden age people, and why we must give so much attention to it.

First, it is a matter of justice. If we consider the position of older people, we must remember the hard work, the sacrifices, the devotion, the taxes they paid, the services they gave and the devotion they showed, for we would not want all that to have been done for nothing.

These people have given us a much better society than the one they had known. The have endowed us with the material comfort which enables successive generations to progress and get better chances of success. They have left us, for instance, their daily experience, their way of living, all this moral heritage revealed by the traditional worth of our people: work, honesty, quest for perfection, faith. They gave whole-heartedly their health, their welfare so as to leave us with a country measuring up to their hopes.

In return, Mr. Speaker, the most elementary justice requires that we permit them, at this awkward age beginning at 60 to enjoy life just like all other Canadians. This is a question of justice, but also of gratitude.

Gratitude stands among the noblest feelings in the heart of man, and we from Quebec have a motto that we like to repeat: I remember. We remember not only the past, our inheritance, but we are pleased on the occasion of the consideration of this bill to say that we also remember aged people.

It is all very nice, on certain anniversaries, on New Year's Eve, to offer our wishes to our parents, to wish them a long life, but I think that what should express our feelings are neither words nor compliments, but indeed positive and concrete actions. We have now reached the point where we can stop talking and do something.

It is also a matter of humanitarianism, Mr. Speaker. It is easy to show compassion for under-developed countries. It is a good indiction that we are not fenced in our own country and that we are looking to the world beyond.

We are quick to bring assistance to countries suffering from disasters such as earthquakes, erupting volcanoes or other things. And this is good.

A reconstruction program for North and South Viet Nam which have been ravaged by war for 40 years is now underway. There is agreement to finance this program costing billions of dollars which is good and worthy of praise.

There was even some thought given to prisoners today. During the question period, there were some comments on what is going on in penitentiaries. Authorities agree that penal institutions should be made more conducive to prisoners rehabilitation and reintegration into society. We are willing to spend $8,000 annually for each prisoner. And this is good. There are principles which warrant it. And yet when we Canadians deal with the golden age problems there is stinginess, there are delays, all kinds of pretexts are put forward, the budget is scrutinized and we start talking about priorities. That is a priority issue, Mr. Speaker.

Prior to structures, thorough consideration must be given human persons. I am all in favor of shipbuilding, ecology, highway construction and more embassies. But, there is after all the daily life of those men and women who have reached an age where they need the attention of the government.

That is why, Mr. Speaker, I am not the least ashamed to say that I will fight to my last breath for those people to whom I have promised it. I might also say that those people are in need of a basic, civilized pension. I have promised to fight for the progressive lowering of the eligible age to 60 so that even this year those who are 64 can receive it. As promised, I am asking the government either to amend the bill or to introduce another measure also beneficial to the spouse of a person already receiving a pension, in the sense that such a spouse be also entitled to the pension.

Mr. Speaker, this government—

Mr. Cyr: And the provinces.

Mr. Wagner: I just heard an hon. member on the government side say: And the provinces. He also is echoing the Minister of National Health and Welfare who seeks by all means, all excuses, all arguments to refuse to recognize the natural rights of those who have reached the golden age.

I am coming to the provinces.

I would like to tell you, Mr. Speaker, that this government will thus have refused to increase old age security beyond the basic amount of $100. Any proposals along those lines, according to the Minister of National Health and Welfare, and I quote:

. . . would cost the federal treasury many more billions of dollars a year.

It is true, Mr. Speaker, but it is also true that contrary to the remarks of the Minister of Finance (Mr. Turner) on February 19 last, the government—contributing to inflation—found enough millions, even billions of dollars to increase substantially its operating expenses. For instance, the estimates of the Department of National Defence rose from $1.933,8 billion in 1972-73 to $2.135,5 billion in 1973-74.

Since defence has come up, Mr. Speaker, I trust that these increased estimates do not contain another Bras d'Or or another Bonaventure, of illustrious memory.

Under the heading of general internal expenditure, Mr. Speaker, we also find a $190 million grant for culture and recreation, which is an increase of $11 million.

Under what they call foreign affairs, the sum has mushroomed from $387,200,000 to $426,600,000.

Under these five major headings alone, the budget estimates have gone up by over $500 million, and the overall budget estimates for 1973-74 are several billion dollars higher than those for 1972-73.

What effort has been made to limit expenditure? None whatever. This is administrative irresponsibility. I therefore find it hard to take when a member of the cabinet, even though he is the Minister of National Health and Welfare, comes here and talks about caution in the use of public money.

It is high time, Mr. Speaker, that the federal government set the example for provinces and municipalities that have not yet put their financial houses in order. But we all know that the present government, caring little about that ideal, is slow to heed the advice of even the Auditor General. Thus, Mr. Speaker, this argument about the limits of public funds, however true in itself, carries little weight coming from the present government.

Mr. Speaker, when the hon. member for Don Valley (Mr. Gillies) made it clear that a Stanfield government would have used a two-pronged approach of increased expansionary budgeting with a temporary across-the-board freeze, many on the other side called this approach irresponsible and simplistic. Had the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Lalonde) been here throughout the speech by the hon. member for Hillsborough (Mr. Macquarrie), he would have seen further evidence of the way in which the government has missed the boat in terms of an economic policy which had truly beneficial implications in the area of social legislation.

Parliament will pass this bill. Yet while we debate here today we have little or no control over those forces which may now be working to relieve the pensioners of Canada of whatever increases we are endeavouring to approve in this parliament. How many pensioners living in nursing homes will find their monthly or annual rates increased just about the time they receive their first augmented cheques? How many will find the rents for their rooms or apartments going up in May? How many will experience the frustration of finally getting a raise only to see it fall into someone else's hands?

Members of this House are aware that the issue of rents is a provincial one. Nevertheless, the 60-90 day freeze would have given the federal government an opportunity to begin discussions with the provinces which could have led to some real restraint being imposed on rent increases. In my own province of Quebec, the government has already acted in a retroactive way to hold down unreasonable rent increases. The federal government has received, to my knowledge, no negative indications from any province with regard to co-operation in this field. The lack of a two-pronged approach in overall budgetary policy is now emerging as a major obstacle to any real social impact being produced in consequence of the increase we are discussing today. Indeed, it seems fair to conclude that this omission on the part of the Minister of Finance (Mr. Turner) will serve to cripple and undercut many programs and approaches planned by the government in the future.

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker, this government keeps purposely to the status quo as regards the structure of the old age security plan. The government members will not recognize the needs of a pensioner's spouse, who would be less than 65 years old. Those same government members also close the door against all requests concerning the age of eligibility under the Canada Pension Plan. Now there are 786,000 Canadians between 60 to 64 and the only short-term comfort being offered to 64-year-old people—there are 171,000 of them—is the need for a preliminary and thorough study of an over-all social security policy, with the co-operation of the provinces.

That any matter related to the formulation and objectives of and the responsibility for a social security policy should be a subject of intensive exchanges with provincial governments, we agree to that, because that is real federalism, a federalism that is justified. But that has always been true.

Has this government only discovered since its licking of last October 30, that there are provinces and that those provinces have their own responsibilities and priorities?

What was this government doing at the height of its majority, from 1968 to 1972?

We know what it was doing and that is why, among other things, it was practically defeated on October 30. It was arrogant then, showing no flexibility at all, having no real dialogue with the provinces.

And now this government which was rejected by a great number of Canadians on October 30 is acting the same way towards older people.

Older people in general, especially those between 60 and 64, are paying today the price or part of the price of the arrogance shown by the Liberal government over the four last years.

Incidently, if the Liberal government, its mandarins and some gray eminence, at the time he had the upper hand in the Prime Minister's office, had not been so arrogant with the provinces from 1968 to 1972, a certain Quebec natinalist movement would not now have so much power in direct political action.

In a different context the Minister of National Health and Welfare now says without any apparent embarrassment, and I quote:

> We must look at the question of overall priorities. These priorities have not yet been established. The relative social priorities of benefits for pensioners' spouses or for widows and single women in the same age group, or for disabled people of any age, or for families struggling to raise young children on limited incomes, ought to be closely examined.

And once more the government is confirming our own way of thinking when we said, during the last election campaign, that a national conference on Canadian priorities should be convened. Without governing the country we knew it but withdrawn in their ivory tower, they took years to learn it and recognize it.

It is true that in April a federal-provincial conference will take place on the overall social security policy. But this should not prevent the present Minister of National Health and Welfare from opening avenues and from adopting a progressive attitude.

[English]

I found very curious, Mr. Speaker, the two-fisted approach of the minister in introducing this bill yesterday. With one hand open wide, he spoke of how much the increase was and how important it would be to the senior citizens across Canada. At the same time, with the other hand the minister was very close fisted with regard to further progress in old age security planning in the future.

I find it very difficult to understand how a minister who spends a full 30 per cent of his speech extolling his party's commitment to progress in the social legislation field over the years can then spend almost as much time in his speech erecting obstacles to further progress in the field dealt with by the bill. His concentration on the administrative and fiscal arguments against progressing to the point where 60 would be the age of eligibility for a pension seems both overdone and somewhat reactionary. There were no fiscal impediments to mismanagement on the part of the government with regard to the Bras d'Or or the Bonaventure. There are no fiscal impediments to wild election promises, unsubstantiated by main or supplementary estimates. But when it comes to Canada's senior citizens, there always appear to be some fiscal impediments. That is the type of low priority that the government and this minister obviously attach to this area of social legislation. While this bill may be all right as far as it goes, I believe that it is essential that this parliament be on record as saying that in this area of social legislation we really can do better.

What the minister should have done, and indeed what thousands of senior citizens had a right to expect, was for him to make, along with this bill, a firm commitment to explore a reduction of the eligibility age to 60. We know very clearly the employment difficulties that those in their late fifties with no direct skill have. We know what type of employment insecurity the entire population endures, let alone the 50 to 65 group. While these social concerns should have been enough to encourage the minister to embark upon some commitment, surely the one rationale for this approach should be purely humanitarian.

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker: I am sorry I must interrupt the hon. member, but it being one o'clock, I do now leave the chair until two o'clock.

At 1 p.m., the House took recess.

[English]

AFTER RECESS

The House resumed at 2 p.m.

Mr. Wagner: Mr. Speaker, before the recess, I was trying to encourage the minister to adopt a humanitarian approach to this whole field of old age pensions. There are many who are suggesting, and quite frankly I happen to agree, that the old measures of a society's success, such as the gross national product and the balance of payments, are not all that relevant to the society in which most of us live. Many are saying that a society's success relates to its ability in terms of a meaningful social audit to measure up to standards of human dignity and social equality. It is in terms of this audit that we remain in the red, with so many just into or passed their prime. We have a responsibility to at least commit ourselves to balancing this particular section of the social ledger through progressive policies aimed at reducing the years of hardship for so many Canadians. It is the area of commitment to future policies that the minister has left far too much unsaid, and he has allied himself with those reactionary arguments that have always plagued societies seeking some very real social progress.

The area of social legislation is not one that can be attacked in short spurts either before risky elections or after inconclusive ones. This is an area of national policy that must have top priority at all times. The area of old age security legislation must not be closed off for a year or even a day. No bill must be allowed to be viewed as the end of any evolution. If Canadians are to have an integrated and comprehensive social legislative package to live with, its continued evaluation and re-examination must be looked at as a major priority for all levels of government.

I truly regret that the minister chose in yesterday's speech to cut off the question of lowering the elegibility. For him and for his government, this is a retrograde step. I think that while it is perhaps parliamentary form for the Liberal government to underestimate its opposition in this House and in the country, it is poor form for that same government to underestimate the Canadian people, their compassion and understanding.

Like most members, I come from a riding where concern for the aged is not confined to the aged. I come from a riding where people care more about each other and want to contribute to each other's welfare. This country, in my view, is made up of that type of person. This government has a responsibility to reflect that concern. This government is not being representative when it closes doors, as did the minister yesterday, to further progress in the old age security field. Indeed, it is doing a great disservice to those who look to government for leadership in the social field.

I should like to associate myself and my colleagues with the thoughts expressed in the Senate Report on Poverty:

To do what must be done will certainly cost money. Lack of action will cost many times more. What inaction will cost in lost humanity will cost many times more . . . Canadian people whose lives are spent in a far different world are ready to face the challenge . . . it is for the citizens of Canada to demand that this be our priority project for the seventies . . . we need search no further for a national purpose—

In closing, Mr. Speaker, no utterances seem to me more striking and more thought-provoking at the same time than those of Mr. Hubert de Ravinel whose charity organization dedicated to the golden age, the Little Brothers of the Poor, is so greatly admired and so worthy of our support.

In an interview given to the magazine Actualité in December 1972, Mr. Hubert de Ravinel expressed himself as follows:

An existence shared between day-to-day petty worries and the dreary view of a slummy back yard, or the solitude of a big institution for the aged . . . waiting for pensions to be increased, for problems to be alleviated, each day similar to the one before, the monotony of an unchallenging future, such are, in brief, the board horizons offered to the senior citizens of our cities.

I hope, Mr. Speaker, that this House will see to it that the description given by Mr. Hubert de Ravinel will in time become just a bad memory.

Mr. Arthur Portelance (Gamelin): Mr. Speaker, I am honoured as a member of the government to comment on Bill C-147 entitled: An Act to amend the Old Age Security Act. This bill is intended to increase the basic amount of the old age security pension from $80 to $100 per month effective April 1, 1973, with future escalation to commence May 1, 1974. Because of the escalation now in effect, the monthly pension that has been paid since January 1, 1972 is $82.88.

I would like to join with all my colleagues to congratulate the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Lalonde) for his quick response to the request of senior citizens who are rightfully asking the Canadian government to help them through an increase in the basic rate of pension, which will enable them to live more decently and to continue, even during their years of retirement, to do their duty as citizens and to be proud as Canadians.

Mr. Speaker, a few days ago, I sent a questionnaire to all my constituents of Gamelin, and nobody will be surprised to learn that most of those who were kind enough to answer and to add some comments were mainly concerned with the welfare of our senior citizens, either with regard to pensions or to housing. It is precisely in that direction that this government is going.

I know that in Canada there are still some glaring injustices. It is not easy to eliminate them all at the same time. The present government is now trying to help first the most destitute, especially old people, large families, disabled persons, the unemployed and small wage-earners.

It is certain, as mentioned in the throne speech, that the next important piece of social legislation will be to increase family allowances in order to make them as generous as old age pensions.

Mr. Speaker, it is good sometimes to compare oneself with others, to tell all Canadians what is going on outside our country, and to learn that Canada remains a forerunner in many fields, particularly in the area of social assistance. I have with me an article from the Toronto Globe and Mail, dated February 16, 1973. That article indicates that the old people in the United Kingdom, even if that country has now a Conservative government—maybe they are the elder brothers of our Progressive Conservatives—receive pensions that are not as generous as those received by ours, and I quote:

[English]

A retired person receives $16.70 a week if single. The state pension for a married couple is $27.25 a week.

If the old person has no income or savings, he or she can apply for supplementary benefits worth about $1 a week as well as for other payments to cover rent averaging $7.50.

[Translation]

And that's not all, Mr. Speaker.

Just recently pensions were increased,—

Just imagine what they were previously. And I quote further:

[English]

—with both unions and the government claiming credit though pensioners themselves played a role by staging a demonstration outside the House of Commons.

[Translation]

In fact, the senior citizens of Canada did not have to demonstrate in front of the House of Commons. This government had already increased the basic pension from $75 to $80 in April 1971, as well as the guaranteed income supplement to $55 a month for single people and to $47.50 for each spouse when both members of a married couple are eligible.

For those who received the GIS, the total pension was subject to an annual increase based on their pension tied to the cost of living index. We know that now total pensions will go up with the cost of living thanks to the new bill now before the House: single people who get the GIS will be entitled to $170.14 a month, and married couples to $324.60.

The old age security pensions amounted to $40 a month in 1952; from April 1, 1973 it will be $170.14 a month, including the GIS; of course, this represents an increase of over 400 per cent.

As a Canadian, I am proud to say that Canada is the first country in the world to provide that protection to the elderly. Canada is the first country in the world having legislated that people be eligible for a pension notwithstanding contributions they may or may not have paid into a pension plan and without subordination to various tests. The Canadian people are being guaranteed a revenue allowing them to live their retirement years with security and self-respect.

In order to improve the financial position of all Canadians 65 or over, this government has granted a substantial tax reduction for the year 1972. This applies instead of the additional tax exemption of about $650 granted to people having reached 70 years of age by the previous plan. Then, on reaching 65, people were entitled to a reduction of $1,000, which means that a single person 65 years old or over was entitled to the basic exemption of $1,500, plus an exemption of $100 for charitable donations, plus another $1,000, which altogether represented a $2,600 exemption for the year 1972, whereas the exemption for 1973 will amount to $2,700, plus a supplementary 5 per cent exemption its minimum being $100 and its maximum $500.

In the case of the couple 65 years old or over, similar reductions have been granted by this government.

In 1972, the total exemption could vary from $4,950 to $5,200 whereas, in 1973, with the adoption of the last budget introduced in the House by the Minister of Finance (Mr. Turner), the tax exemptions will still increase.

According to the comments I have received from my fellow citizens in reply to questionnaires, many of them wish the old age pensions were granted to people 60 years old or over. In their views, this would be a practical way of creating jobs and allowing young people to find work more easily.

I think that this recommendation deserves to be thoroughly discussed right now, because in a few years, most workers will be entitled to the maximum under the Canada Pension Plan or the Quebec Pension Plan. Indeed, the cost of the guaranteed income supplement will be decreasing, and I hope that those additional funds will be used to gradually lower the age of retirement, as it was done in 1966.

Yesterday afternoon, the minister said, and he gave some figures, that it was now difficult to look after citizens aged between 60 and 64. As so many others, government members would have preferred to see the situation or the lot of those people improved and since the minister and his provincial counterparts will meet in April to deal with that problem, we hope that a solution will be found in the very near future.

Other valuable suggestions have also been made. It has been suggested that the pensioner's wife, aged 60, should also get the pension and the guaranteed income supplement in some cases. If the legislation allowed the wife to receive the pension, that would be unfair to a widow or a single person who is 60 years old. I would agree if in the future all women of 60 or over could get the pension when they reach 60.

In my opinion, women at that age are facing difficulties greater than those which men may be up against. Even today many European countries already allow 65-year-old men and 60-year-old women to receive a pension. That is an approach which we could surely suggest here, and I agree with other hon. members that we should get on with it as quickly as possible, perhaps on the basis of the same principle used last year to phase down the eligibility age for pension. We should start to deal forthwith with that problem now confronting us.

As long as we will not lower to 60 the eligibility age for pension to all persons, there will be reasons and obligations to keep on paying assistance benefits with the cooperation of the provinces on the basis of equal contributions. Each citizen has a right to assistance if his situation does not allow him to receive a sufficient income, and if my information is correct, the province of Ontario allocates to the spouse of a pensioner in receipt of the guaranteed income supplement an additional sum so that the couple receives at least $235 a month.

I wish the province of Quebec and all the other Canadian provinces could prove as generous in the future, because that assistance is also paid by the federal government on the basis of contributions.

One Canadian province already uses federal funds to help those who need it most; in British Columbia, old age pension and a guaranteed income supplement amount to $200 a month, and only half of those $30 is coming out of the provincial coffers.

Senior citizens also have a right to an active contribution to the community, and today 709,000 men between ages 55 and 64 have a job and 270,000 women of the same age group are also part of the labour force throughout this country.

It is acknowledged and accepted that compulsory retirement can destroy whatever has been and is important to the person who is forced to retire. That means that the establishment of a fixed age for retirement should be avoided and that the eligibility for jobs should be made easy until such time as a person wishes to retire or has to do so on grounds of illness. However, perhaps we should help the elderly person to withdraw gradually from regular employment, redefine the social role of a pensioner and encourage the greatest possible number of retired people to participate in community life.

Such ideas are not at all conflicting with the principle of the guaranteed annual income for people ranging from 60 to 64 years of age, but they suggest programs which would add to the financial assistance so as to give retired people the opportunity to put their idle knowledge and experience at the service of others. A fine example of this is the New Horizons program.

In conclusion, and subject to budgetary considerations, the federal government should first consider introducing a guaranteed annual income for people 60 to 64 years old. For the first year, if necessary, the pension should be granted to the 64-year olds, the age being reduced each year until the entire group is included. Then, the guaranteed annual income could very well be a little less than the old age pension and the guaranteed income supplement combined. Finally, the program should at least provide an income equal to the guaranteeed income supplement.

Moreover, some tax legislation should be brought in jointly with the provinces to encourage the gradual transition from full employment to retirement, by putting at the individual's disposal means to engage in useful and creative occupations and to remove or reduce the age limit specified in the pension plans.

In co-operation with the provinces, programs should be developed to create part-time jobs, which would stimulate the participation in community life.

Mr. Speaker, another area also affects people who are 65 years old and I think it is not the least important. When people become 65, they are often forced to leave their jobs. These people go to unemployment insurance offices where often steps are taken so that it is impossible for a man or a woman of that age to qualify for the benefits they are entitled to.

As chairman of the Standing Committee on Labour, Manpower and Immigration, I remember that in 1971, when we passed this act, a worker who was 65 could choose to stay in the labour force—and, of course, he did not get a pension under the Canada or the Quebec pension plans—or to go on working; then he had to be helped to find a job and allowed to get his benefits as it is the case for every other Canadian worker.

I would invite this group of citizens to be careful when they meet people who have responsible positions in these unemployment insurance offices and to be available to take on the jobs they could be offered.

Having said this, Mr. Speaker, I remain optimistic as far as the economic and social progress of Canada is concerned. We meet everywhere Canadian men and women who are responsible, who are capable of leading and organizing their own lives, who are aware of their responsibilities and their needs and I invite them to go on trusting the present government, so that together we get more and more in the world the position and the influence we deserve.

[English]

Mr. Allan B. McKinnon (Victoria): Mr. Speaker, it is a pleasure to rise once again in this House on a Friday afternoon. My seatmate and I were discussing the formation of a new type of club, the Friday and Monday club. This club would have one difference in that members of it would attend on Friday and Monday when it seems so much easier to get the Speaker's eye than on the other days of the week.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. McKinnon: This leads into my opening remarks. I am at my wits end to discover why any of us are here discussing this bill at this time. This is government legislation. I listened with interest yesterday to the hon. member for Yukon (Mr. Nielsen) and the hon. member for Hillsborough (Mr. Macquarrie) when they both agreed on behalf of our party that we would surrender our speaking positions on this bill if we could get agreement with the other parties to send it to committee. I do not think there is a soul in this House who intends to vote against this bill. If there is, I would be glad to surrender my place to him right now and we could move on with this legislation.

In my constituency of Victoria, British Columbia, there is a fine club for the elderly known as the Silver Threads Club. If they had the unanimity at their meetings that this House has on this particular legislation, they could handle the business more quickly than this House of Commons seems able to. Why has the bill not gone to committee? The government does not seem to want that to happen at this time. They are supported, although I think in error, by the New Democratic Party, those who desire to talk about this bill rather than act on it. Certainly, the rather peculiar position of the government is that, in one sense, they are obstructing their own legislation. If the parties could come to an agreement, I would be glad to surrender the floor right now and have this bill go to committee.

It seems that we are not able to come to any agreement on this, Mr. Speaker. We seem to be the only party who would give up our right to waffle about this bill rather than act on it.

Mr. Nielsen: Why are you filibustering your own bill over there? We are going to vote for it.

An hon. Member: What's the rush?

An hon. Member: The aged are in a rush.

Mr. Nielsen: I will be eligible for the pension myself by the time this is through.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please.

Mr. McKinnon: It could be that the Liberal party so seldom does anything for the aged of this country that they must get the last ounce of gratitude out of the elderly people. Well, Mr. Speaker, if we must talk about it instead of acting upon it, I presume I may as well do as some of the other members have and speak for a time on the history of it, not trying to deceive the people of Canada with statistics as has been done by others in the last few days.

The history of the old age pension did not commence in 1952; it was instituted in England in 1908. The Old Age Pensions Act was passed to establish a non-contributory system of pensions and it was amended in 1911, 1919, 1924 and 1925. The last amendments provided for contributory pensions for certain classes of persons. So they were talking about contributory pensions in England then, Mr. Speaker.

When I read the minister's speech yesterday—I was unable to be here as I was called to a committee meeting—I learned that he spent a great deal of time, as did the hon. member for Thunder Bay (Mr. Penner), talking about what the country could afford. I should like to refer to something that was said about that bill in 1908 and hon. members will understand if it has a familiar ring. In 1899 Mr. Joseph Chamberlain said that the British scheme, which proposed to give pensions to everybody, was beyond the resources of the state, that it would make no distinction between the improvident and the thrifty, the drunkard and the spendthrift. He said that they should put aside at once every further attempt to secure compulsory contributions from working classes, which was the system in operation on the continent. So, Mr. Speaker, the more things change, the less they change it seems.

The pension was introduced in Canada in 1927 as a result of the previous election. The act was dated 1927 and stated that the maximum pension payable should be $240 a year, subject to reduction by the amount of the income of the pensioner in excess of $125 a year. We started at $20 a month. Who was responsible for starting this off? Everyone knows that the party in office at that time was the Liberal party. Anybody who wishes to be confused about the history of old age pensions need only listen to members of the Liberal party and the New Democratic Party trying to claim to be the parents of that act. The New Democratic Party claim that they are the true and only sons and daughters of the CCF whose parentage is a little cloudier. In 1927 the Liberals were sustained by the Progressive party, as they are now by the NDP. Many of the Progressives became Liberals—some became Progressive Liberals, some became Senators and some faded away, but there was a kernel there which after being buried on the Prairies for six years, became the CCF. For them to claim that, through Mr. Woodsworth, they were the instigators of the old age pension is rather like claiming responsibility for this measure because of Hazen Argue.

We know that the Liberal party introduced this bill under a certain amount of pressure; I should like to think it was from the Progressives who went over to the Liberal party. In any case, old age pensions were introduced some 20 years after having been enacted in England. The New Democratic Party claim that, as a result of the CCF party being born in 1933, they had some peculiar prenatal influence on this legislation. When I say "prenatal" I mean that in a little different sense from the normal; they claim the unborn baby of the CCF somehow influenced the legislation six years before it was born.

I listened with interest to the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles) discussing the early days of the pension and he cleared up one point for me. I assumed the pension had gone from $20 to $40 in one jump, so I am glad to learn from his remarks that it went from $20 to $30. That, of course, is a jump of 50 per cent but the minister stated yesterday that the present rise is the greatest in pensions since the year one. I submit that a rise from $20 to $30, being 50 per cent and ten hard dollars, may have meant more to recipients then than the rise today of $13.39.

Elections followed in the natural course and, by a strange co-incidence, increases in the old age pension seemed to coincide more nearly with elections than with any other events in our history. Pensions increased to $40 and then to $46 just before the Liberal debacle of 1957; and, from $46 they went to $61. For the benefit of the hon. member for Bruce (Mr. Whicher) who, when talking about people in elderly brackets, referred to the penuriousness of the Conservative government, may I point out that a Victoria radio station every year holds an open line contest as to who is the most popular living Canadian. Many elderly people listen to this program and answer and ask questions on it. They make up about one third of our population. The most popular living Canadian in the minds of the elderly of Victoria is the right hon. member for Prince Albert (Mr. Diefenbaker).

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. McKinnon: His government was the first to adopt the idea that old age pensions could be raised substantially, if necessary; and that was certainly necessary in those days. So, the pension went up to $61. In 1962, it was raised by another $10, according to the minister. Then, in 1963 it was again raised by $10. This is when history apparently started because, if you accept the minister's calculation with respect to the $15 and $10 raise in pensions, the pension in 1962 must have been $65.

If this bill passes, and it is sponsored by a reluctant government, the pension will increase slightly. The difference between $65 and $82.88 is not great, dollar-wise or percentage-wise, especially when you consider that government revenues in the same period have just about tripled, to judge from the estimates. This year the government will spend more than $20 billion; in 1962 government expenditure was around $7 billion. If the old age pension were to increase at the same rate as the government's revenues increase, the old age pensioner would be feeling about as fat and happy as the government feels.

The next question is, can we afford substantial increases? There was much talk in the election campaign about the size of the old age pension and about how much it should be increased. We heard lots about this from the NDP. I am baffled as to why the NDP should continually be asking my party how much increase it would have given old age pensioners. Why did they not ask the Liberals how much they promised?

An hon. Member: We did.

Mr. McKinnon: I will tell you why they do not ask. The Liberals did not promise a red cent; not a penny, and it is ludicrous for the NDP to give their unquestioned loyalty to the party which, during the election campaign, did not promise a single extra penny to old age pensioners. If the Liberals were not in their present perilous position, it is probable that they would not have given a penny extra.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. McKinnon: There has been some talk about how much my leader promised during the election campaign. I wish to put my version of the facts on record. In Victoria the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Stanfield) met the press at a press conference about the first of September and he said that a $10 increase might have been enough to compensate for the increased cost of living in April or May. By September, the cost of living had accelerated rapidly and my leader said that he thought $15 should be the amount of the increase. Let me point out that $15 and $82.88 comes to $97.88. That was our suggested figure on September 1, in view of the way costs were escalating.

Our leader refused to participate in the auction on old age pensions. It is very easy for the party on our left to suggest that $150 should be paid, but it is not so easy for a party that is likely to assume power to make such promises. None the less, we all expected a great deal more from the Liberal party than we have been given so far. So, in future I would appreciate it if the hon. member for York South (Mr. Lewis) and the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles), when speaking on what the party I support promised the old age pensioner, would be more factual in their statements. The figure was $97.88.

Let us now consider modern times. Yesterday I consulted Hansard and looked at the speech made by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre. I read over the words he had spoken so bravely on January 12 about what his party wanted in the way of an increase. It was to be substantial, Mr. Speaker. If one were a new student of English and reading the speech delivered by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre on January 12, one could be forgiven for assuming that substantial and increase together form one word, because the hon. member never used one without the other. I ask the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre if a $13.39 increase is his understanding of a substantial increase?

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): No.

Mr. McKinnon: The difference between $82.88 and $150 is quite large; I regret the small size of the increase as much as the hon. member does. I regret that the hon. member was unable to have his way in this matter.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Hear, hear!

Mr. McKinnon: I understand the position the hon. member is in. He is in much the same position as I am. I do not think the increase is worth very much, either, but it is better than none, I suppose. This leads one to this conjecture; how small would the increase need to have been before the hon. member and his party would have considered it an insult and refused to support it?

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, $97.88 would have been the figure.

Mr. McKinnon: Mr. Speaker, the difference between $97.88 and $100 is $2.12. The hon. member is drawing a very fine line. It would appear that the party on my left really did not require any particular amount and that their attitude to the government was, "If you want us, just whistle."

Before the budget was brought down we wondered how much the increase in the old age pension would be. I guessed that it would be increased to $120 because I did not think the government could count on NDP support for any length of time if the pension went much below $120. On days when I was feeling good I thought it might increase to $130, and on days when I did not feel so good I thought the increase might be down to $115. Never in my wildest predictions did I think the pension would be so low, as a couple of distinguished members of the party to my left had demanded a substantial increase in the basic pension. I did not think, in view of the position of power which that party now occupies, that it would buy the increase to $100. When the government introduced the figure of $100, I turned to my seatmate that night and said, "The NDP will never support this." I am afraid I either overestimated the principles of the NDP or underestimated their fear of an election.

Why was the pension plus guaranteed income supplement increased to $170? That is a rather strange figure, although there is some rationale for it. If you have less than $170 a month, you are liable to starve to death or die of neglect. That amount, I suppose, will just enable one to buy shelter and food, and nothing else. That is why the figure of $170 was chosen. So, in considering $170, which is made up of the basic old age pension plus the supplement, we are considering an anount that will just enable one to exist. It represents the barest minimum of existence. Everyone knows that you cannot live on $82.88 or $100. Therefore, the present old age pension is only a partial payment to enable old age pensioners to live at the barest subsistence level.

I am in favour of the universal approach, as is the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre, probably for reasons he did not mention yesterday. Under this kind of legislation, when it is so easy to apply, there is a great temptation on the part of some people to cheat a little bit. Can you blame them? They have been so grievously wronged that one can hardly blame them for cheating a little bit when the occasion arises. Some civil servant puts a piece of paper before them and says, "All you have to do is sign this piece of paper and you will get the supplementary payment. If you sign it, you will get; if you do not sign it, you will not." Many of our old people, when they realize how much they have contributed to our society and how little they are now getting from it, will be tempted to sign and so obtain the supplement. They know what they are doing, but one can hardly blame them when it is made so easy to cheat.

There are other ways of cheating, other ways of getting around the regulations. If you own property, you can turn it over to your children before you reach 65 years of age. I suppose another way of getting around the asset problem is to keep your money in a sock in the garden. They are only allowed to have so much.

When drafting legislation of this nature, we should consider the people who have to deal with it. I draw this to the attention of the minister responsible for the Unemployment Insurance Act. If something could be done to simplify that complex legislation, it would be a great boon to society and the administration of government. The Unemployment Insurance Act is very complex. Some of the people who draw unemployment insurance may understand it, but those administering it at the lower level certainly do not.

I wish to correct the statement made this morning by the hon. member for Thunder Bay (Mr. Penner) while trying to tell us how pure and virtuous the Liberals are. He stated that the British Columbia government added $30 to the pension to increase it to $200. Any sense of fairness and equity should impel an hon. member to state that the British Columbia government added not $30, but $50. The federal government is now catching up a little by increasing the old age pension and guaranteed income supplement to $170. It was $150 when the NDP government in that province, headed by Mr. Barrett, brought out the $200 a month income.

So that it will not appear I am turning toward the NDP, I must state that my understanding now is that this federal basic pension increase will not be passed on to some of the pensioners in British Columbia. Those receiving the guaranteed income supplement will not be getting $230 a month. They will still receive $200. The federal government monies will simply go into the general revenue to help British Columbia pay for the increase. I am not critical of this attitude of the British Columbia government, in view of the difficulty they have had getting the federal government to assume its rightful share of the $50 a month increase for those receiving the guaranteed income supplement.

Another problem that has been concerning us is whether the pension should be paid to spouses below the age of 65. I have seen quite a few examples of this problem in my province. When the husband retires, there is a drastic drop in income. If the wife is a dependent spouse, one who is not working, she receives no pension to help defray household expenses. Other civilized countries have this type of legislation. In the United Kingdom the retirement age for men is 65 and for women, 60. In Italy, the retirement age for men is 60 and for women, 55. I hope the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Lalonde) is listening, because yesterday he told us we were light years ahead of every other civilized country. The retirement age in Poland is 65 for men and 60 for women. In Sweden, the forerunner of the social movement, both have to be 67; in the United States both 65 and in Denmark 67 for men and 62 for women.

We will not be breaking fresh ground if we give a pension to spouses at the age at which their husbands become entitled to a pension. There might be a floor established whereby the spouses could receive a pension at age 60 provided they are not working. Almost everyone who has anything to do with elderly people realizes the desperate straits they are in when a man retires and the income drops from an average of say $700 a month to $170.

Another area that should be looked at is providing federal help for elderly people who have to spend their last few years in extended care hospitals. This is a great problem in British Columbia. Quite a few people come to British Columbia from other provinces who eventually reach the stage where they need extended care hospitalization. This is generally paid out of their own pocket. Our new government has promised action on this, but it is not yet forthcoming. This is a very serious problem. They have a bit of ghoulish humour in Victoria; you are never allowed to die until you are broke. Nursing homes and extended care hospitals are a quick way of achieving this. An elderly person on an old age pension who is suddenly faced with a hospital bill of $400 to $600 a month that is going to continue for the rest of his life very quickly loses interest in carrying on.

I intend to vote for this bill. I would be glad to vote for it right now to get it moved along one stage. I wish the amount were larger.

An hon. Member: How much larger?

Mr. McKinnon: When we were estimating how much you people were willing to spend to stay in power, and how much pressure we thought the NDP could put on you, we thought it would be somewhere between $115 and $130. Our party would have voted for that had you introduced it. I would like to see the insulting increases of the past few years, 42 cents and $2.88, avoided. I intend to vote for this bill and the sooner the better.

Mrs. Grace MacInnis (Vancouver-Kingsway): Mr. Speaker, when my colleague, the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles), raised the curtain of history yesterday and gave us a very thorough story of how old age pensions came to Canada, I thought it would not be necessary for any of us to refer to it again. However, some of what I have subsequently heard makes me realize that some of the things that were left out, even by my thorough colleague for Winnipeg North Centre, need to be said on the historical side before we go any further afield.

Both the Liberal and Conservative parties had been in office at various times since Confederation, but there was not a single piece of social security legislation on the statute books until the end of World War I. When the old age pension legislation was finally forced on the Liberal government of the day, it became the first piece of social security legislation on the statute books of this country. It is very significant that it did not get there as a result of the efforts of either the Liberal or Conservative administrations of the past.

Yesterday the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Lalonde) stated that this was the largest increase that had ever been made in the old age pension. I am not very good at arithmetic, but in my opinion the best increase was the first pension that was ever paid, because going from nothing to $20 in those days was really something. After all, this was done after many years of stalling, stalling, stalling on the part of both Liberal and Conservative governments. And pressure was exactly what was needed to get it in 1927. That is why we got it at that time and there is no need to worry about who is claiming credit for it; the record is there in Hansard of the day. Some of these people who spin fine fancies as to how it got there should just go back and look at the pages of Hansard and they would have no doubt as to how it all happened.

As a matter of fact, listening to the hon. member for Victoria (Mr. McKinnon) throwing all kinds of unflattering remarks in our direction, I was quite entertained, because he went through the geneology rapidly as to how the Progressive party faded out after 1921 and how some of them had faded out into the Senate—you would expect them to fade there—how others had faded out in the Liberal party—you would expect them to fade there—and how others had faded out in subsequent election contests, and you would expect them to fade there. But what he did not point out was that from all this there emerged an instrument of strength among men and women in this country who believed it was time that ordinary people in Canada, doing the ordinary work of farm, field, factory and household, stuck together to make a party of their own in order to get things done rather then having them just talked about.

If the hon. member for Victoria still has any doubts as to how old age pensions got onto the statute books, I would urge him to look back in Hansard and he will find out how the Right Hon. R. B. Bennett, who was the leader of the Conservative party at that time, turned to J. S. Woodsworth when the prime minister of the day, Mr. Mackenzie King, was bragging about how his administration put in old age pensions. Mr. Bennet turned to J. S. Woodsworth and said—these are his exact words—he was the man who forced this measure on a reluctant government. So if there is any authority required, I think the hon. member for Victoria will find it there.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Boulanger): Is the hon. member rising on a point of order?

Mr. McKinnon: I doubt that it is a proper point of order, Mr. Speaker, but I would like to say that I regret the submission the hon. member for Vancouver-Kingsway (Mrs. MacInnis) has made. I agree almost entirely with what she has said, and I did not in any way intend to put down Mr. Woodsworth, for whom I have very deep admiration. I agree with the hon. member that the party on the other side never would have put in the legislation without his urging.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Boulanger): Before the hon. member for Vancouver-Kingsway continues, I would point out to the hon. member for Victoria that he did not, of course, raise a proper point of order.

Mrs. MacInnis (Vancouver-Kingsway): I would like to say that I was not worrying about what was said about Mr. Woodsworth. What I was concerned about was urging the hon. member to go back and look at the Hansard reports of those days. There is no need to speculate about the circumstances; the written record is there.

I think we now have referred to enough facts in this connection. But I want to point out that even as people in those days were in a mood to get old age pensions on the statute books and intended to see legislation put there to that effect, they were organized to this end. And so, today, people in this country are in a mood to get things done as well. While I have heard members to my right speak in very beautifully couched and glowing sentences about how this is a very mean amount to give the old age pensioners and how, once they take office, endless and bountiful pensions will descend into the laps of old age pensioners, until the hon. member for Victoria spoke a few minutes ago I had not the faintest idea what amount his party intended with regard to old age pensions. Now, thank goodness, I have a very definite answer. They intended to give the old age pensioners $97.88. Well now, I think the old age pensioners, while they may not all be happy at having elected the Liberals to power, certainly will not feel they missed anything by not electing to power the bargain basement outfit to my right who would have given them $97.88.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mrs. MacInnis (Vancouver-Kingsway): I am very grateful that under the prodding of my hon. friend from Winnipeg North Centre the hon. member for Victoria has at last broken down and given us the figure the Progressive Conservative party considers to be appropriate for old age pensions, the sum of $97.88.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Boulanger): Order, please. I think the hon. member is rising on a point of order.

Mr. McKinnon: Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Lang: Sit down.

[Mrs. MacInnis (Vancouver-Kingsway).]

Mr. McKinnon: My point of order is, Mr. Speaker, that the hon. member for Vancouver-Kingsway is confusing the tense of my remarks. I said we promised that on September 1. I did not say that it was what we would now be satisfied with. Time marches on, even among the best of us.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Boulanger): That is not a proper point of order. I must remind the hon. member that the rules do not allow him to rise without consent unless he has a proper point of order. He may not use the occasion to raise a point of debate or give an explanation.

Mrs. MacInnis (Vancouver-Kingsway): If you can take it, Mr. Speaker, so can I. The point is that if the $97.88 was promised on September 1, I would be prepared to bet it would not be higher now, because that date was just before the election. However, I would not want to do the hon. member an injustice. If the figure the Conservative party has in mind is different from what it was at that time, I wish they would tell the House what it is. We have been trying for some time to get them to name the figure they would set for old age pensions.

It is all very well to describe what they would have done in the most glowing and attractive terms. But what the old age pensioners want to know is, how much? So far, the figure of $97.88 is the only one I have been given. If there is a later amount, I think it would be a good idea for a speaker from that party to give the exact figure they propose now, before lowering the boom again on some subsequent speaker. It might be to their advantage to do so.

The fact is that there have been nine increases in old age pensions since the program was first established. Two of the increases have been made under Conservative administrations. It may be that this was because the Conservatives were not allowed to stay in power very long—they can have it that way if they wish—or, if they were in power, that they were not much more generous than they were last September.

I left out one footnote to history, Mr. Speaker, and I would just like to bring it forward. When J. S. Woodsworth and A. A. Heaps sent that famous and historical letter to Mackenzie King, I think it was the first and the last time in recorded history that Mackenzie King ever signed his name to a promise; he knew that a sharp and pointed instrument was aimed at a vulnerable part of his anatomy and he knew it was time to sign. When that happened, the Hon. Arthur Meighen, who was then the leader of the party of my friends to the right, was also sent the same letter. Mr. Meighen, with the same caution which is being displayed by his party today, sent back a lawyer's answer to the question, "Will you give us old age pensions for Canada?" He sent back a lawyer's answer that meant, "We'll see". Well, he was not given the chance to take office. The other party was sustained because although they did not give people all they wanted even then, they did give something concrete and tangible.

I think people to my right ought to take a lesson from that. People today want something concrete and not just glowing promises. It is like the girl who was boasting about her fiance and said to her friend, "He said he would lay the earth at my feet". Her friend replied, "I would rather have a roof over my head". I think the old age pensioners feel that way too. Although we have had to fight very hard to even get this much—we still want $150—the old age pensioners will remember history and realize that we were the ones who got them the old age pension in the first place. We are the ones who have been fighting successive administrations for these raises ever since, and if the pensioners ever do receive $150 we will be the ones who got it for them.

Enough of history. Let me now come to more modern times. Every time this question is raised, we hear people ask where we are going to get the money from. We feel there are plenty of places that could be scrutinized and from which we could get the money. For example, what about the famous corporation tax reductions that are supposed to be coming before the House? I suggest that instead of bringing that measure forward, the Department of National Health and Welfare be given first refusal because it could put that amount of money to good use.

Of course we should be making provision for certain other groups in this country. It is ridiculous to expect two elderly people to exist in their old age on one pension. Yet there are thousands and thousands of cases where the wife does not qualify for old age pension by reason of age and where she has to try—pitifully—to get along by making her husband's pension stretch for the two of them. If, as the hon. member for Saint-Hyacinthe (Mr. Wagner) says, the measure of our civilization is how we treat our fellow humans, then I say that our civilization is still at a very low ebb in view of the form of torture to which we subject these elderly people by making them exist on one pension.

One of the very next measures that should be put before the House is one making it possible for wives of older pensioners who themselves are not working to qualify for a pension. After all, they have to be housekeepers and look after their older husbands; therefore they should be provided with the means of life. We should also consider moving the age limit down from 65 to 60, just as it was moved down from 70 to 65. Why cannot that be done? The Minister of National Health and Welfare said yesterday that there may be a few low paid workers who would like to retire at the age of 60. Let me tell him that this country is full of people who are ill, weak or handicapped at the age of 60 and who have no means of support until they reach age 65. We should find money to enable us to look after the handicapped, the partially disabled and the sick.

Make no mistake about it, Mr. Speaker, if we do not look after these people by giving them a decent pension we will have to look after them through additional costs of hospitals, mental institutions and these wretched nursing homes where so many of them have to be confined. So we shall have to pay in any event, but we will be paying for broken, disabled and miserable people whom we could have saved for a happy and effective old age. It is true that we can weep over mothers and fathers who are single parents and the sole support of their children. But there is no sense just weeping over their woes; we must do something about them. We must help them support themselves and raise the citizens of the future by providing them with pensions or allowances.

It seems to me we are dealing with this problem as though we were looking at a sinking ship and saying that there are only enough lifeboats to save certain people and that others will have to drown. We are deciding whether we ought to save single parents or throw them overboard, or whether we should save the wife of a pensioner of the old age pensioner himself, since both are unable to get along on one pension. I suggest we should not be satisfied with anything short of a policy that looks after all these people.

How silly it is to maintain a military establishment in the world that we have today. All the military hardware that we have is for what? It is no use in this world or in the next. It is a sheer waste of time and money, of good brains and good people to turn our energies into that particular channel. That is another matter I could deal with in some detail.

Of course we can afford decent pensions for our elderly people. Let me point out that the argument used today is exactly the one used in 1926 prior to the old age pension legislation of 1927. Our old boys in the Senate, above all else, were the ones who wept over the sacred duty of children to look after their aging parents and who said that on no account must we take that duty away from the young by providing a pension for their parents. The same crocodile tears are being shed today when it comes to raising money to look after people who need assistance in this day and age.

If better pensions were provided, a number of unthought of benefits would result. For example, it would provide a tremendous stimulus to our economy. People who receive pensions and allowances usually have to spend them at once. They are people for whom food, clothing, shelter and the few amenities of life are very sorely lacking today. In spending their pension money they would provide a market for farm produce and factory products, and they would engage in various forms of activity which presently are sorely lacking. We might even be able to do something in the land of heavy water, or in the land of the great trees and the ocean in my part of the country. Such a pension would provide these people with the services that they need.

If the sick, the crippled and the elderly were released from jobs which they cannot perform competently and which they carry out at great pain, misery and suffering to themselves, we would provide additional opportunities for employment of our young people. I am convinced that it would also provide opportunities for necessary community services provided on a voluntary basis. When I hear hon. friends to my right damning the New Horizons program as a waste of money, I wish that some of them would get to know an old age pensioner or two. If they did, they too would realize exactly what the New Horizons program means to them. It is opening the door to new activities, to a broader world. In many cases it is opening the door to programs that will enable the elderly to meet with the young, help the young and the old to close the generation gap that for so long has been allowed to exist.

Mr. Roche: A point of order, Mr. Speaker.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Boulanger): Order, please. The hon. member is rising on a point of order.

Mr. Roche: When I referred to the New Horizons program last evening, I made it clear that my opposition to it was because senior citizens in this country are not entitled to be paid money for projects that they recommend and in which they take part. I am not opposed to the New Horizons program itself—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Boulanger): Order. The hon. member knows that that is not a point of order; it is a point of explanation or debate. The hon. member for Vancouver-Kingsway (Mrs. MacInnis) has the floor.

Mrs. MacInnis (Vancouver-Kingsway): I am sorry, Mr. Speaker, but I did not even hear the hon. member speak last night. In fact, I was referring to one of his colleagues who spoke earlier. Even though the cap did not fit, the hon. member insisted on feeling that it did fit and he put it on. However, I did hear one of his colleagues earlier do a good job of damning the program.

I think all the aspects to which I have referred ought to be discussed with the provinces. I wish the present Minister of National Health and Welfare—I admit he has made a good impression on many of us—would go out to the provinces with a real plan. I wish he would say that he does not care whether the premiers are NDP, Conservative, or what-have-you in the Maritimes, that this is what the government thinks is a really good program to replace the present social security patchwork. Let us try it out and see whether it will work. I think it will work. Draw it up and put it across, and invite these people to comment on it. This minister should not be afraid of the premiers of the provinces before he gets there—and I know a lot of this has been going on. I know several of them very well and they are not half as vicious as the minister may think. I am sure they would not be, if he went there and said he had something positive, produced it and asked them to make a start.

I should like to say a few words about another aspect of this whole matter which I think is important, but before I do so I should say again that we intend to support this legislation, not because it represents all we want but because we think it is a step forward. We would like to see old age security at $150 now, and when we accomplish that goal we will want more. We expect that by then people will have reached a higher level of civilization and we want to think that the elderly can share in the improvement.

I think it is silly and futile to provide old people, young people or people somewhere in between with sufficient pensions and allowances to live decently without taking precaution to see that they can keep the extra money. Often the elderly or people with low incomes are deprived of any increase as soon as or before they get it, because of increases in rents and necessities. These other people take as big a bite out of that increase as they can. In my view, the minister should be trying to establish this protection when he visits the provincial representatives. He should say that there is no sense in giving these people an increase unless protection is provided so they can keep the increase.

What does this entail? I suggest it means we must devise some form of price agency or review board to monitor prices. Such an agency would have to ensure that prices are held steady in order that the people I have referred to can afford more at their new level of income. We will have to establish rental boards. The province of Quebec is probably in the forefront in this regard, although perhaps it has not gone far enough. It does have a rental control board to which people can make representations if they feel their rents are unjust. We must take that sort of approach, and we must adopt other controls to protect these people from being gouged of their pension increases.

One may say that this cannot be done. I suggest that it can be done and I want to give one or two examples of how it can be done. A few years ago the people across this country grumbled and growled about the terrific cost of insurance on their cars. They complained about their young people not being able to drive cars because of the high cost of insurance. They complained about the high cost of accidents. When people were involved in accidents without being covered under a special policy, they were ruined for life. At least the people in two provinces today have discovered that you can have public car insurance which covers accidents at a cost less than that payable in other provinces without similar schemes. A third province has announced its intention to venture into such an insurance scheme this spring. With the success shown in these provinces, I suggest this can be done.

I do not know how we are going to accomplish what we have in mind to protect our citizens, but I do know that in at least two provinces experiments are being conducted with a view to protecting their citizens by means of providing medicinal drugs as a public utility. Every time I heard the hon. member for Simcoe North (Mr. Rynard) suggesting that we should do something for our old people in respect of drug costs, I feel like reminding the House that years ago our ancestors thought that everyone should build his own piece of road and put a turnpike on it. But finally we got the picture and built our own national road with our own collective resources so that everyone could use it. You should hear the screams in British Columbia whenever anyone proposes putting a toll on a bridge now. We have had enough of that and we do not want any more.

I suggest that these things have to be done as a country. This idea of giving people increases and failing to protect them is not enough. We must adopt measures to safeguard these increases when we have them. We must protect people against having these increases taken away by stronger and more ruthless segments in our communities. We must prevent these more powerful people from moving in on any group which receives a little extra pittance.

I commend this action to the minister when he meets with provincial representatives, because it is something which will call for agreement between federal and provincial authorities. There is no reason under heaven why the provinces cannot cede or give authority to the federal government, and vice versa, where it is necessary to handle the situation in these areas.

I have now said the things I wanted to say about this measure. There should be no doubt now about the views of those of us who have spoken from this group. We are going to support this legislation, not because it provides all we want for the elderly people of this country but because it is a little better than we could get from the bargain basement Conservatives. This Liberal group happens to be in power for the moment and this is all we can get now. I want to say that we will support this measure, but as soon as it is passed we will start on our next campaign for more.

Mr. Maurice Foster (Algoma): Mr. Speaker, I am very happy to join in the debate on Bill C-147, to amend the Old Age Security Act. In my view, income support for our senior citizens is one of the cornerstones of our social security policy. In correspondence and conversations with my constituents, the importance of ensuring an adequate standard of living for our pensioners is a constantly recurring theme. This widespread concern for the welfare of our old people can be accounted for on several grounds. In part it is a human response to a situation of obvious social and economic disparity. In part it derives from the fact that most of us have intimate associations with elderly people—our parents, grandparents and friends. In part it undoubtedly reflects the realization that all of us will one day be old.

In any event, I subscribe to the theory that the way in which we treat the elderly is an important test of our society's level of civilization. In this respect, I think Canadians can be justifiably proud both in the objectives they have set and in the progress they have made in achieving them. Although as members of this House we may disagree from time to time on specific measures and questions of detail and timing, there is a remarkable degree of consensus among Canadians—one might even say unanimous agreement—as to our society's obligation to ensure a decent standard of living for our senior citizens not as a matter of charity but as a matter of right. We want to ensure that our old people are able to share fully in our nation's ever increasing prosperity, a prosperity which their own past labours have done much to promote and which many of them never knew during their working years when they were struggling to raise young families and meet mortgage payments.

We still have a long way to go before that goal is fully realized, but much progress has been made since January, 1952, when the government of the Right Hon. Louis St. Laurent enacted the Old Age Security Act which for the first time provided universal pension payments to all Canadians aged 70 and over. Developments over the past 21 years, taken together, constitute a revolution in the government's approach to the elderly. The amount of the basic pension has been increased several times since then. The age of eligibility has been lowered to 65 years. The guaranteed income supplement was introduced in 1967. Last year an escalation clause to make payments reflect the full increase in the cost of living was added to both the guaranteed income supplement and the old age pension. This is a truly remarkable record of achievement for our country. Perhaps I might be permitted to add that it is a truly remarkable record of achievement for Liberal governments.

This progress is reflected in the proportion of our national wealth which we have committed to the task of ensuring a decent standard of living for our elderly people. The amount paid to old age pensioners during 1971-72 was over $2 billion, of which some $500 million, or one-fourth, was paid in supplements. Canadians numbering 1,800,000 are now receiving the old age pension. Of this number, 1,050,000 are also receiving the guaranteed income supplement, 500,000 are receiving the full amount, while 550,000 receive a partial amount.

The effect of these increased payments has been to progressively remove our old people from the welfare rolls. We have now reached the point where, according to the latest estimate available, only 5 per cent to 10 per cent of pensioners require welfare assistance, and this is in special circumstances and special cases. We have recognized as a society that old age need not be and must not be allowed to be synonomous with the indignity of abject poverty and deprivation.

This record of achievement of Canada and of its Liberal government is even more impressive when seen in a global context. The variety of different schemes for income support and social assistance makes direct comparison of pension levels between countries quite difficult. However, one central fact is clear: Canada provides a higher guaranteed income, a higher standard of living to its senior citizens than any other country in the world. This is a field in which Canada has led the way. It is an achievement in which we should take pride. At the same time, we must never fall into complacency for much remains yet to be done.

That the present government has not become complacent is evidenced by the bill now before us. This bill would raise the basic monthly pension for an individual from $82.88 to $100, an increase of $17, and for a married couple, from $165 to $200, an increase of $35. This increase—20 per cent on the basic monthly pension—represents the largest single increase in our history. Together with the guaranteed income supplement, it would ensure a minimum monthly income to every Canadian 65 and over of $170, in the case of an individual, and $325 in the case of a married couple. Just compare those figures with the $40 old age pension of only 20 years ago.

In discussing this bill and in assessing the adequacy of the proposed increases in pension payments, it is essential to take into account the combined impact on our senior citizens of certain other measures outlined in the budget speech. The reductions in personal income tax have been designed to give maximum relief to those most in need—low and middle-income Canadians, a category which includes the vast majority of the elderly. Old age pensioners will welcome, as will all other Canadians, the increase in personal exemptions from $1,500 to $1,600 in the case of individuals, and from $2,850 to $3,000 in the case of married couples. Together with the increase in the special exemption for pensioners—from $650 to $1,000, the highest in the world—this will mean that no individual over 65 will pay tax on an income of less than $2,700, and that a married couple over 65 will be tax free on the first $4,100 of income.

Of the 750,000 people who will be removed from the federal tax rolls, senior citizens who tend to fall into the lower income groups can be expected to constitute a significant proportion. Those whose income is above these new thresholds will benefit from the 5 per cent cut in the federal tax rate, with a maximum reduction of $500 and a minimum reduction of $100. This tax reduction is even more significant when seen in the context of a family. For example, it constitutes a 47 per cent tax reduction for a family earning $5,000 a year. It amounts to an 18 per cent tax reduction for a family earning $7,000 a year. These reductions in income tax make this budget truly a family budget.

The budget measures designed to reduce consumer prices will benefit pensioners as they will benefit all Canadians. The removal of federal sales and excise taxes from certain consumer goods, including some foods and toilet items, and the average reduction of 5 per cent in the tariff on a wide range of consumer imports will be welcome news to our old people as well as to the young. The tariff reductions on food products such as out-of-season fruits and vegetables are especially important to our senior citizens and others on low or fixed incomes for whom food constitutes a relatively large proportion of the weekly budget. Of particular importance is the reduction of tariffs on drugs.

Our pensioners, like everyone else, will benefit from the new indexing system for personal income tax to be introduced in 1974 under which there will be annual adjustments in exemptions and tax rates to compensate for increases in consumer prices. For old age pension recipients and guaranteed income supplement recipients, this will mean specifically that they will not become liable to pay tax merely by virtue of increased pensions and supplements.

Taken together, these budgetary measures can be expected to have a significant effect in lowering the cost of living for old age pensioners and in reducing their income tax. Along with the increase in the basic pension payment, they will go a considerable way toward improving the financial position of senior citizens. In considering the requirements of our senior citizens and the adequacy of the proposed increases in the basic pension, we must always bear in mind that the old age security payments are but one element of the social security system that was evolved in Canada to meet the needs of our elderly.

Canada is a country which provides support to elderly persons by means of several schemes. The universal old age pension and the guaranteed income supplement are augmented, in the case of many pensioners, by a contributory insurance plan, the Canada Pension Plan, which will not only pay 25 per cent of the worker's average annual earnings up to $5,100 from 1976 but also provides a disability pension, a benefit for dependants of those disabled and unable to work, a pension for widows, orphans and disabled widowers and a lump sum death payment. Canada is one of the few countries which has this three-tier approach to income support for the aged. In addition, a fourth tier is provided for many employed persons through private pension plans.

There are also several programs which provide special assistance to the elderly in many facets of life. The Canada Assistance Plan, introduced by the Liberal government in 1966, can assist with special needs such as drugs, nursing home care, home care, etc., with a 50 per cent payment by the federal government. In most provinces, under the medicare scheme no premiums are charged to OAS and GIS recipients for hospital and medical care.

The New Horizons program will provide funds of up to $10 million over the next 18 months for projects undertaken by the elderly. Over 200 projects have received approval to date, with grants totalling some $1.3 million. Mr. Speaker, I believe that the New Horizons program, although designed for elderly people, will provide benefits to people who though they may be old in age are young in heart. When I looked at the announcement of several projects approved recently I came across one for a project in Toronto entitled the Merry Hearts Club, another in Kingston was for the Gadabouts Club and another in western Ontario was for the Rhythm Rascals. After visiting some of the senior citizens groups in my own riding, I know that a great many of our elderly people are young at heart—and the New Horizons program is keeping them that way.

It can be seen that the OAS and GIS payments under the present system of income support for senior citizens merely form a base, a minimum level of income guaranteed by the federal government, and it can be seen that additional measures, both federal and provincial, are available to supplement this basic income in special circumstances for specific needs.

Judging from the record of past Conservative governments, and from the figures which the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Stanfield) has quoted, suggesting his party would provide an old age security benefit of $92 or $95, it seems to me that we could have expected criticism from the official opposition suggesting that we are going too far and too fast. However, I was pleased to learn yesterday that the official opposition will support this bill, and to learn from the hon. member for Victoria (Mr. McKinnon) that he was suggesting an amount of $97 per month. Many of us would like to be able to do even more for our senior citizens and to raise the pension by an amount even greater than that proposed in this bill. But to do so at the present time would be very costly. I am convinced that this is the best we can do under the present circumstances.

Another area in our social policy concerning old age pensioners which is very important is the provision of the low rent, geared to income, housing program which has been available in Canada. Surely this program to provide good shelter at minimal rents is a most valuable one to our senior citizens who have to face the difficult years of retirement. This program in Ontario is financed jointly through the Ontario Housing Corporation and the federal government's agency, Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation, with 90 per cent of the cost being paid by the federal government and 10 per cent by the province. The program is administered by the Ontario Housing Corporation.

Any losses sustained by the program are borne three ways, 50 per cent by the federal government, 42½ per cent by the province and 7½ per cent by the municipality involved. I often wondered how much this 7½ per cent cost would be to a municipality. I inquired, and the response from one municipality was that this cost was very minimal, that in fact it always got back more in rents than it had to pay out in picking up the 7½ per cent loss sustained under the program.

The important thing is the benefit that the program provides to senior citizens in the form of safe, clean, low cost housing. Several of these complexes were built in my riding during the last few years, and I have never been so pleased with any federal government program than I am when I visit these housing complexes and talk to the people in them. A comparison of regular rents with those charged under this program readily reveals the advantage of it. A two-bedroom apartment in my area may regularly rent at $100 to $150 per month, but an old age pensioner who receives the OAS may pay rent as low as $39 per month. For a couple living solely on old age security, the rent may be only $74 per month. The only problem is that we need more and more of this type of housing for out senior citizens.

I was pleased yesterday to hear the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Lalonde) say that the problem of the working poor would be considered at the spring conference with provincial ministers of health and welfare. I regularly meet couples in my riding where the husband is working at the minimum wage, but the problem is that their family may include six or seven children. We must examine this problem soon to see if we can provide financial assistance to these working poor. I can think of a number of examples. There is one chap who was injured in an accident and as a result could not take a regular job. He had to take on a night duty job and could earn only $75 a week. He might have been able to survive on that wage if there were only his wife and himself to look after, but he had a family of six children and as a result had no alternative but to quit his job and go on welfare. That is something that must be changed. We must consider the provision of an improved family allowance program which takes into account a family with several children who have to be fed, clothed and educated. In other words, we must provide a supplement to low income workers. Such a program should have high priority for consideration by the ministers of health and welfare in the spring conference.

In conclusion, Mr. Speaker, I support Bill C-147 which increases the old age security pension to $100 a month. It is in step with the times. The need is very great among our senior citizens. It is time to make this advance in our old age security system.

Mr. Peter Reilly (Ottawa West): Mr. Speaker, on February 19 the Minister of Finance (Mr. Turner), when he mentioned proposed increases in old age pensions, said among other things:

> It is aimed at ensuring that older Canadians share more fairly and more fully in the growing national prosperity—which their efforts during their working years helped to make possible—so they may better enjoy living in well earned retirement.

Yesterday, when opening debate on this bill, the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Lalonde) said among other things:

> I, for one, am thinking of my 86 year old mother and my 81 year old father who all their lives worked extremely hard for their family's livelihood on a farm in Quebec and who, like all those of their time, gave everything they had for the raising and education of their children. In their humble way they made Canada a country in which one is proud to live.

I congratulate the minister for those obviously genuine comments about his parents, and those of their time, who worked hard to make this country a good place in which to live. They deserve the respect and concern of the many people carrying on in their wake. Mr. Speaker, I think of my father who died at the age of 63, short of pensionable age, after having worked hard to support his mother and father before they died, because in those days there was no pension plan. He began to raise his family at age 40, but died and left my mother without a pension because the munificent, giant American corporation for which he worked and upon which my hon. friends across the way are getting ready to lavish more windfalls, did not believe in pension plans. They did not believe in group insurance, either.

My father could not afford to carry very much on his own, so he left my mother to raise several children out of a family of five. She is now past the age of 60 and is still working toward her retirement in a couple of years. She is living in terror, Mr. Speaker, because when that day comes she will have to live on the amount of money that the Minister of National Health and Welfare tells us has banished poverty for old people in this country. I have sat in this House now for several months listening to the claims of the Liberal party, but that one, for sheer bunk, has to surpass any of the fatuous comments I have heard sail across this floor.

My leader and my party may support this bill if they wish, and the New Democratic Party may support it if they wish—their virtue has been so thoroughly compromised now that one more roll in the hay will not hurt—but I will not vote for the damn thing, Mr. Speaker. I think it is an affront to the old people of this country, I think it is cynical and I do not believe that any member of this House who is honest with himself believes that this amount of money can maintain a person who has no other income.

I should like to give a few figures to back up what I say. In the past four years, according to the government's own figures, the cost of living has risen by no less than 20 per cent. According to my arithmetic, the amount of money which this government, in its open-handed attitude to the people who have worked all their lives to pay taxes and educate their children, is about to hand out to them in its largesse, less the amount of money that has been eroded thanks to their incompetence, leaves the old people of this country a net increase of 75 cents a week. That is enough for a large packet of cigarettes and a couple of books of matches.

The figure of $170 a month, according to the Minister of National Health and Welfare, is enough to banish poverty in this country among old people. Well, Mr. Speaker, I want to apprise him of a few facts. In the city of Ottawa, which is by no means the worst place in the country to live, it is very likely that an old person would have to pay $120 a month for a bachelor apartment. On top of that, I calculate food at $43 and some odd cents a month, based on $10 a week multiplied by 52 and divided by 12—not an unreasonable amount to spend on food. These two total $163.33, so they are left with $6.66 for the entire month to cover transportation, entertainment, clothing and insurance for their poor possessions if they have any left by that time. That, Mr. Speaker, is as close to poverty as I would care to see my parents come. I hope the parents of the Minister of National Health and Welfare who worked so hard all their lives, as he has said, and whom he holds close to his heart, who are always in his thoughts, are not dependent on the figures which he announced the other day and of which he and his colleagues are so very proud.

The government claims that the time is not ripe to impose any kind of controls on prices in this country. I wonder when it will come to the conclusion that the time has arrived, with inflation rising at 5 per cent a year and no evidence that any of the government's programs are going to abate that rate, and with inadequate escalator provisions built in to accommodate old people. I cannot imagine when the time has been more ripe for the imposition of some controls but the government says, "Not yet". I do not believe the government is really very concerned with these people.

When I hear hon. members opposite, such as the one who spoke immediately before me, claiming credit for this paltry accomplishment, I am left to wonder what they believe is a tiny accomplishment, if this is the best they can do. I notice that my time is close to running out, so I shall conclude—

Mr. Lalonde: Mr. Speaker, I should like to rise on a point of order to clarify immediately something that the hon. member has attributed to me. He quotes the imposition of certain criteria from the English Hansard at the bottom of the right-hand column of page 1793, ending with the words:

—it will be readily seen, Mr. Speaker, that this government has effectively banished poverty for persons over 65 years of age in the course of the last two years.

I recognize readily that the text that would have been distributed and which was to be checked against the English translation was this actual text, but what I said in the House and what is in Hansard and I refer here to the French text reads quite clearly:

[Translation]

When coupled with the cumulative benefit increases of $58.70 a month that have been provided and the provision for full escalation of pensions in future, it will be readily seen, Mr. Speaker, that this government has considerably improved the economic situation of persons over 65 years of age in the course of the last two years.

[English]

Mr. Speaker, this is what I said in this House in French; this is the actual text. I understand now that Hansard in English did not translate properly and correctly what I said, and I hope that Hansard will be corrected accordingly. I never said such a thing. I am sure the hon. member will excuse me for interrupting him in this respect, but I would not like such an interpretation to be given to the words I said in this House.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Reilly: Mr. Speaker, the minister cannot know with what relief I receive his remarks. I am glad he did not say such a thing. I conclude by simply saying that a country which does not take better care of its parents than this one appears to be prepared to do, is a country which has some pretty strange priorities. When Members of Parliament meet in solemn conclave assembled to consider their own circumstances, their own aspirations, their own wants, it does not take very long to come to the conclusion that massive salary increases of the order of 100 per cent are merited and it does not take very long to conclude that pensions of the kind that we have can be implemented without any great jar to the economic system. I do not notice any blushes in their rubicund faces when they line up at the $1.50 buffet upstairs featuring prime ribs of beef and British Columbia salmon. If a pensioner could get one meal a week in that place he might be in a position to live on the money this government is prepared to hand out.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Laniel): Order, please. I regret having to interrupt the hon. member, but we have reached four o'clock and at this time the House will proceed to the consideration of other business.

[Translation]

It being four o'clock p.m., the House will now proceed to the consideration of private members' business.

[English]

Mr. Reid: Mr. Speaker, normally today we would be taking private members' notices of motion, but I think there would be agreement to take private members' public bills instead. Therefore I would move, seconded by the hon. member for Pontiac (Mr. Lefebvre):

• (1600)

That the House now proceed to the consideration of private members' public bills.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Laniel): Hon. members have heard the proposal of the parliamentary secretary. Is this agreed?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

PRIVATE MEMBERS' PUBLIC BILLS

CANADA FLAG DAY

MEASURE TO ESTABLISH

The House resumed, from Thursday, February 15, consideration of the motion of Mr. Nelson that Bill C-136, respecting Canada Flag Day, be read the second time and referred to the Standing Committee on Justice and Legal Affairs.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Laniel): Is the House ready for the question?

Mr. Bell: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker, I wonder if the parliamentary secretary to the President of the Privy Council (Mr. Reid) has anything to say in view of the way this matter was left when it was discussed on the previous day.

Mr. Reid: Mr. Speaker, we last debated this bill on February 15 and, as Your Honour may recall, there was some confusion in the House. It was agreed that we would stand the bill we are now discussing, which would create a holiday of flag day, and at the same time it was agreed that we would bring forward the bill standing in the name of the hon. member for Hillsborough (Mr. Macquarrie) and allow it to stand in position No. 2 on the order paper. This was done. There was some discussion at the end of the hour as to whether these two items ought to be discussed at the same time. There did not appear to be any agreement, according to Hansard, that they would be discussed at the same time, although the Hansard record is rather confused as to exactly what happened.

I would therefore suggest, if the House agrees, that we discuss the bill concerning flag day and, if hon. members are so prepared, the bill concerning Sir John A. Macdonald day. Then hon. members might want to discuss the possibility of referring to the Standing Committee on Justice and Legal Affairs not both these bills but their subject matter, that is, the possibility of a holiday being held either in February or March. What that holiday should be called could be left for hon. members to decide at this time or when they deliberate in committee.

Speaking further on the point of order, may I say that from the legislative point of view the form of both bills is sadly deficient. There is some doubt as to whether, if either or both bills were referred to committee, satisfactory amendments could be introduced to bring forth the results that both hon. members wish. For that reason I would not want to send either of the bills to committee because it might not be possible to put them into the proper form which hon. gentlemen sponsoring them so obviously want. If that is agreeable, we would be prepared to permit debate to go forward on that basis.

Mr. Bell: Mr. Speaker, is the parliamentary secretary proposing that during this hour we should discuss the matter of holidays and talk at the same time both on the flag day bill and on the Sir John A. Macdonald bill, and that toward the end of the hour the parliamentary secretary would get up and propose that the general subject matter of a holiday early in the year should be referred to the committee, but that neither one of these bills should be referred to the committee?

Mr. Reid: Yes, Mr. Speaker, in general that is what I have been saying. I want to emphasize that if we do send the subject matter of these bills to committee, that must be done on the basis that we are looking at a potential holiday in February or in March. That is as far as we have gone, because in those two months there is not now a statutory holiday. I should like to hear discussion on what we might call such a day.

Mr. Bell: Discovery day.

Mr. Reid: The hon. member says, "Discovery day". As there are a number of bills like this on the order paper, if Your Honour were to permit it might be worth while discussing all those which have been brought forward by hon. members.

Mr. Macquarrie: Mr. Speaker, may I say a word on the point of order. As one of these measures is particularly close to my heart, I have some question as to what method is to be used with respect to disposing of the bills. What will happen to the bills? I am wondering if there will not be even worse confusion than at present. I hear talk of transferring the subject matter of the bills to committee. Where will that leave the bills? I am also wondering exactly what will happen to the Sir John A. Macdonald day bill.

Some hon. members have already spoken on Bill C-136. The proposed administrative marriage might preclude them from speaking in today's debate. I fear that we may get into a sort of "lost in limbs" situation. I have heard some talk about a holiday in February or March. May I point out that one of the bills does not mention a holiday in either of those months. In view of all this vagueness I want a little more assurance, a little more clarity, so that we may have some better idea of what exactly are the terms of reference with which we are left.

[Translation]

Mr. Eymard Corbin (Madawaska-Victoria): I rise on a point of order, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Madawaska-Victoria on a point of order.

Mr. Corbin: Mr. Speaker, on a point of order, the suggestion brought forward by the parliamentary secretary does not seem quite acceptable to me in some aspects because in my opinion it would lead us to insincerity. The two bills now before us, Bill C-136 titled "An Act respecting Canada Flag Day" and Bill C-95, titled "An Act respecting Sir John A. Macdonald Day", deal specifically with two quite different matters. One seeks to honour our national emblem, the Canadian flag, whereas the other aims at recognizing the honour due to one of the Fathers of Confederation, perhaps the greatest of them, Sir John A. Macdonald. However, at the end of the time we have at our disposal the intention is to limit debate on those two bills, to a mere discussion on the possibility of establishing a legal holiday between New Year's Day and Easter. I suggest that we are straying considerably from the specific content of the bills and I am reluctant to accept the parliamentary secretary's suggestion.

[English]

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, I rise on the point of order. I am sure it is the feeling of hon. members that we want to know what we are going to do during this hour, and that if possible we would like to agree to some course of action. I believe the point raised by the hon. member for Hillsborough (Mr. Macquarrie) has to be considered, namely, that if we spend this hour ostensibly debating Bill C-136, we shall preclude the possibility of a number of members taking part in the debate. I wonder, therefore, if we could not arrive at this moment at an agreement to discharge these two bills, and, if there is unanimous consent, tell the parliamentary secretary to the President of the Privy Council (Mr. Reid) to move a motion that could be debated and voted on at the end of the hour.

In response to the problem raised by the last speaker, I wonder if the proposed reference to committee as suggested by the parliamentary secretary could not include the subject matter of these two bills or the establishing of a holiday in the period between the New Year and Easter. In other words, my suggestion, since what has been proposed so far has not been accepted unanimously, is that the House should now agree to discharge these two bills and that there be debated in this hour an order to the effect that the subject matter of these two bills or the question of a holiday between New Year's day and Easter be referred to the appropriate standing committee.

Mr. Macquarrie: Mr. Speaker, I would be quite agreeable to what the hon. member has proposed if he will withdraw the word "or" and use the word "and".

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): With pleasure, Mr. Speaker.

• (1610)

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Laniel): Is the hon. member rising on a point of order?

Mr. Stevens: Yes, Mr. Speaker. As some hon. members know, I also have a bill dealing with this general subject matter which I hope will be presented for second reading in due course. I am referring to Bill C-150, an act respecting discovery day. Perhaps we could include the three bills in the suggested motion and have this whole subject matter, including what I would like to say about discovery day, referred to the same committee.

Mr. Nelson: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I support what the hon. member opposite said with regard to the subject matter of the bill. It was never my intention, and I think the bill is quite clear on this point, that debate be polarized on the question of which figure in history the bill should commemorate. It was simply and solely a request that a legal holiday be instituted on February 15 or the following Monday to commemorate our official Canadian flag. This was the sole intention of the bill.

Mr. Reid: Mr. Speaker, I would agree to the suggestion that has been made following my original suggestion that we discharge these three bills. Perhaps I could move a motion which the House would debate and we could then vote on it at five o'clock. The motion I would propose would be that the three bills be discharged and that the subject matter of a national holiday from, say, the end of January to the end of March, the two months in which we in Canada do not have a national holiday at the present time, be referred to the Standing Committee on Justice and Legal Affairs for further discussion. If that is agreeable to hon. members, I would be prepared to move such a motion.

[Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre).]

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Laniel): Order, please. I am sure hon. members do not want to spend the hour discussing a decision on which we do not seem to be making progress. The only way we can do this is by asking whether hon. members are prepared to accept the proposal of the parliamentary secretary and of the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles) that the subject matter of the two bills appearing on the order paper as items Nos. 1 and 2, along with the possibility of selecting a day for a national holiday in the period from the end of January to the end of March, be referred to the Standing Committee on Justice and Legal Affairs. Is there agreement to this effect?

Some hon. Members: No.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Laniel): There does not seem to be agreement.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, I rise on the same point of order. I realize the position that the parliamentary secretary is trying to protect, but it seems to me it is not really fair to the hon. member for Hillsborough (Mr. Macquarrie) to ask him to discharge his bill in favour of this motion when the proposal is that the period within which this holiday is to be established does not include the day that he suggests, which is January. We are not deciding it here. The committee will, I am sure, come up with just one day. I wonder if the parliamentary secretary will accept the wording of the hon. member for Madawaska-Victoria (Mr. Corbin) that the proposed holiday be in the period between New Year's and Easter.

Mr. Reid: I am prepared to accept that, Mr. Speaker, providing that it says "one holiday." I do not think I could defend a proposition where we end up with three national holidays in one year. If that is acceptable, I will certainly accept an amendment of that nature to my motion.

Mr. Nelson: Mr. Speaker, may I say, on the point of order, that we must be careful in selecting the date because several provinces have now instituted what they call a mid-winter break in March. To my way of thinking, a holiday in March would be superfluous.

Mr. Stevens: Mr. Speaker, I wish to have it clarified that the motion proposed by the parliamentary secretary will include the three bills, including Bill C-150 with respect to discovery day.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Laniel): The motion would read that the orders for second reading of Bill C-136, Bill C-195 and Bill C-150 be discharged and that the subject matter of a national holiday in the period of February and March be referred to the Standing Committee on Justice and Legal Affairs.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): January, February and March.

Mr. Reid: January, February and March.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Laniel): Yes, that the subject matter of a national holiday in the period January, February and March be referred to the Standing Committee on Justice and Legal Affairs.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): That covers it.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Laniel): Is there agreement to this proposal?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Reid: Then I so move, Mr. Speaker.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Laniel): Is the House ready for the question?

Some hon. Members: Question.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Laniel): We have another difficulty. If we discharge the order from the order paper, it might be worth while either before or after to have agreement or unanimous consent to spend the balance of the hour discussing the subject matter of these three bills.

Mr. Corbin: I thought the question would be put at the end of this period.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, I think all that is required now is to ask if there is unanimous consent for the discharge of these three bills and the making of the proposed motion by the parliamentary secretary. It is part of the unanimous consent that there will be debate until five o'clock, if we wish. But it would be understood that there is to be a House order that the motion be voted on not later than five o'clock.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Laniel): Is this agreed?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Laniel): The motion before the House is now debatable and it will be put at five o'clock.

Mr. Douglas Roche (Edmonton-Strathcona): Mr. Speaker, I preface my comments by saying that we are progressing in a spirit of national unity this afternoon by bringing together three distinct bills for at least discussion and referral to committee for examination. After living in the United States for ten years I returned to Canada in 1965. This was shortly after the new Canadian flag—which now graces this chamber by being placed to Your Honour's right hand—was displayed for the first time in our country and raised on the Peace Tower. I must say that it was with emotion and gratitude that I viewed the new Canadian flag. I am wearing in my lapel this afternoon, as are many members of this House, a replica of that flag as a reminder of the country that we in this House have the honour to serve.

In our discussion on a way to commemorate that flag and honour it, we should concentrate less on the aspect of a holiday or mid-winter break, nice as that would be and to which I am not opposed, and more on the sense of history in our country that our flag symbolizes. I said that I lived in the United States. Three of my children were born there. Some began their education in that country. Any child educated in the United States quickly obtains a sense of appreciation for his country and a sense of history. Shortly after being exposed to school, or even the nursery television programs, every child knows that

George Washington was the founder of his country and Abraham Lincoln saved the union.

I was always impressed by the way in which the people of the United States carry with them through their lives an appreciation of their country. I wish that in our country we had had the same kind of appreciation. Of course, I found upon coming back that developments had taken place in the previous decade which helped to deepen our appreciation of Canada. Expo in 1967 was not only a memorable event but was probably the greatest event since confederation, one which brought together the Canadian people in a realization of what this country means, in a realization of the possibilities of this country in relating to the interdependent global society in which we live.

We are moving forward. This afternoon we are moving forward in trying to reconcile certain differences which occur in the presentation of the bills which are now before us, particularly Bill C-136 which deals specifically with the Canadian flag and Bill C-95 which deals with Sir John A. Macdonald and the third bill referred to this afternoon which concerns the whole question of recognizing the discoverers of this country.

I observed that on February 15 when we debated in this House the merits especially of Bill C-136 and tried to relate Bill C-95 to it, that there was, and let us be frank about it, a playing off of Lester Pearson against Sir John A. Macdonald. As I say, I came back to this country in 1965 when Lester Pearson was prime minister and the architect of the flag, and I noted with great joy the respect in which he was held throughout the world for his accomplishments not only domestically but internationally, for which, of course, he was awarded a Nobel Prize.

Mr. Pearson was a man who served his country nobly. As a matter of fact, he gave us a lesson in "togetherness," a lesson, unfortunately, which was revealed to us through the funeral of this great statesman, for we saw on television, those of us who were in other parts of the country, at the time, the leaders of the great faiths in this country, men and women from all walks of life, coming together to honour this man. I said to myself as I watched the ceremony, "Isn't it too bad that it takes the funeral of a great man to bring together Canadians from all religions and walks of life." This is perhaps part of the price we pay for the discordancy of the times in which we live.

I stand second to no one in this chamber, or even in the country in my appreciation of Lester B. Pearson. Indeed, just the other day I wrote a letter to his dear friend, Bruce Hutchison, who preached the eulogy at a service in Vancouver for the late Mr. Pearson and I recalled in my previous conversations with Mr. Hutchison the manner in which Mr. Pearson led this country into what might be called the modern era, the international era which Canada has now clearly entered.

I do not feel that if we celebrate Canada flag day as a way in which to mark our sense of appreciation of the national unity which is desired in this country, a sense of appreciation of our history, that we want necessarily to circumscribe the full meaning of this holiday, of this day on which we are going to emphasize our history, by identifying it so closely with one leader, distinguished as he is, to the detriment or to the putting into the shadow of other great leaders of our country. There are a number of leaders in Canada's history who have made distinguished contributions.

We cannot for a moment forget the contribution made to our country by the founding father, Sir John A. Macdonald. For several years my hon. friend from Hillsborough (Mr. Macquarrie) has introduced into this House a bill which would honour our founding father, Sir John A. Macdonald. I have noticed with a sense of sadness that this bill has been talked out, unfortunately; allowed to fall along the wayside of the parliamentary corridors. I have always wondered why we could not find some way to keep always before the Canadian people, one might say, in the same manner as we keep the external flame outside these buildings, the sense of the founding fathers of this country and what they have done for us.

This is in no way a partisan matter. I do not care to which party men like Sir John A. Macdonald, Lester B. Pearson or any of the other leaders who have helped to bring us to our stage of history belonged. They were great men. They were founders of this country. One need turn only to the Enclyclopedia Canadiana for a comprehensive article on Sir John A. Macdonald. I shall certainly not read the whole of this article now; I shall refer to only a couple of the points it makes which remind us how necessary it is to keep alive in our sense of history the role Sir John A. played, to recall in particular the role he played at the Charlottetown conference on December 1, 1864, and at the even more important conference which followed in Quebec on October 10. I quote from the enclyclopedia as follows:

> Macdonald was thus at all stages a major formative influence in the making of Canadian confederation. His declared preference was for a strong national federation rather than for a weak decentralized union of powerful provinces, and he sought at all times—through the division of legislative powers and the organization of the new federal institutions—to ensure the primacy of the new dominion.

He went on, of course, to the great events of July 1, 1867, when the British North America Act uniting the provinces went into operation. As I was looking through this article I came across a passage which I think is particularly relevant to the problems we face today in our society, more than 100 years later, because we read that Sir John was convinced that the continental imperialism of the United States was, and always had been, the most serious threat confronting Canadian nationality. How many times in the debates which take place today in this chamber, on television and in the newspapers across the country do we hear the very same sentiment expressed? Is it not remarkable that Sir John had the prescience to foresee the difficulty we would encounter in establishing our Canadian identity and in preserving it while living beside the giant of the United States?

I am absolutely opposed to playing-off in any sense men like Lester B. Pearson and Sir John A. Macdonald, both of whom in their own way and in the fullness of their times made distinguished contributions to Canada. So, too, did Sir Wilfrid Laurier, Borden and other leaders who have taken their place in this chamber and served their country in capacities beyond political life.

As Bill C-136 emphasizes, in protecting and underlining unity in Canada we must not turn this day that is hopefully going to be marked between January 1 and the end of March into a narrow expression of or focus upon our history, nor regard it merely as a holiday. If celebrating this day on Sir John A. Macdonald's birthday, January 11, is said to be too narrow and too partisan an approach, then let us at least include in the terms of reference and in the literature that will be written about this day the fact that we are honouring all the founders of Canada.

To me the word "founder" has a noble and lasting ring. It speaks not only of the beginning of our country but has a sense of continuity as well. As I remarked in my comments about Expo, we are surely continuing to develop this country. There is, again, a sense of founding, especially in the culturally explosive society that has been with us since the middle 1960s. There is a sense of continuing to discover, as my hon. friend who sponsored the bill respecting discovery day emphasized. That is why I say we should incorporate into the literature surrounding this holiday the names, the accomplishments, the sense of history of those who have helped make our country great.

If this whole subject is now to be referred to the Standing Committee on Justice and Legal Affairs, then let it be sent to the committee with the instruction from this House that the matter not be viewed in too narrow and partisan a way; that it not be viewed in a way that would hurt that national unity which all of us in this country desire—for as I remarked only yesterday in my comments on the pension bill, there is a temptation in this country to speak of national unity in too narrow terms. How many of us think, in the context of today, that national unity will be achieved if only we can solve the English-French question? Certainly this is a pressing priority, but it does not embrace the totality of what is national unity. To me, national unity means taking into account the problems of the aged, the problems of women and the problems of youth, three major components of our society. National unity means going back to the beginnings of this country and keeping before us the fullness of our history and all those who participated in bringing us to where we are today.

I want this day that will mark our country's acceptance of its flag to be more than just a holiday, as I have said; more than just a day on which we display our flag. The flag will be the symbol of what is underneath it. It will be the tip of the iceberg: The greater part of the iceberg will be the strength of Canada; this is what this day must focus upon. It will be a day that will help young Canadians who are now pursuing academic careers to achieve a sense of pride in their country. I have always felt that this country had a great future, one that belongs to us if only we do not give up on it because we feel that living beside the United States is too great a problem.

I conclude my remarks by saying that national unity is an elusive, precious thing but something we in this country need. We need to transmit it to our children. A burning desire to display our flag will remind us of Sir John A., of Sir Wilfrid Laurier, Borden, King and Pearson. It will remind us of the founders of our country, of all those the committee will declare as having made a great contribution to this country. Let there be a national debate, indeed anything that will give the Canadian people a deeper appreciation of the merits of this country, especially as we now move into the very challenging role Canada plays in accepting our responsibility to the developing, third world. Canadians cannot live alone. We have to project ourselves into the rest of the world community, because this is the kind of global society we are living in today. We need a sense of history in Canada which will enable our children to meet the challenges we are now facing.

Mr. Eymard Corbin (Madawaska-Victoria): Mr. Speaker, my little girl, soon after her sixth birthday, came back from kindergarten one day singing "I love my country, I love it". So I started to ponder not on the fact she was singing well what she was singing, Mr. Speaker, but on the innocence of that little girl who was expressing so well what she felt in the bottom of her heart and what she had learned from her teachers.

It is obvious that she was showing love and respect for her country, which she regarded in some way like her father and mother. When we hear children express such things candidly and innocently, we are entitled to ask ourselves why we adults find it difficult sometimes, even every day, to rediscover, to retain that innocence from our childhood when, serious matters are involved, matters of national interest, closely related to this country's unity.

• (1640)

Mr. Speaker, I was a little confused a while ago as to the procedure we were to follow this afternoon for the consideration of those two bills—now there are three of them—for the simple reason that when I read the remarks of the hon. member for Burnaby-Seymour (Mr. Nelson), the sponsor of Bill C-136, I noticed that he had actually given an explanation—and I quote the following from page 1327 of Hansard for February 15 1973:

—Bill C-136 is to establish February 15 or the Monday following as a legal holiday, to be known as Canada Flag Day.

Here is the explanatory note of his bill:

The purpose of this Act is to emphasize the unity of the Canadian nation, and further, to commemorate the ideals of the Canadian Bill of Rights and of the late Right Honourable Lester Bowles Pearson.

Of course I am not criticizing him for confirming this afternoon that the main objective of his bill is to proclaim another holiday in Canada.

However I cannot help but expressing how deeply I agree with the reasons which inspired this bill.

As the hon. member said, the bill is aimed at emphasizing Canadian unity and we quite agree with this because anything that can be done in this direction should be most welcomed. Nothing will be sufficient to reassert this Canadian unity which is so dear to us.

It has also been suggested to recall the aspirations of the Canadian Bill of Rights. I have no remarks to make in this connection; I am totally in agreement with the point of view of the late Right Hon. Lester Bowles Pearson.

We want the day in question to be called the Canada Flag Day. There are on the one hand some concepts which tend to concentrate everything on Canadian unity and, on the other hand, there are concepts which rather antagonize this symbol of unity.

And I am sure that all Canadians recognize in the maple leaf the concrete symbol by excellence of this unity.

This is why since the first reading, of Bill C-136, I devoted myself to support it without any reserve. For the sake of the proper functioning of the business of the House, and particularly for private members hour, I agreed to the subject matter of bills C-136, C-95 and C-150 being deferred to the committee because it now seems that the objective is not to honour Sir John A. Macdonald, the Canadian flag or Lester B. Pearson but rather to designate simply a new holiday and I think that we will have some difficulty in agreeing on how to call it.

I see my friend from Hillsborough (Mr. Macquarrie) opposite and I am sure he will insist for this day to be given the name which he recommended in his bill, namely bill C-195, and I think that the hon. member for Burnaby-Seymour is quite right when he wants that this holiday be called the Canada Flag Day.

I foresee that the debate just initiated will not be brought to a swift end. However, since this afternoon we showed concern for Canadian unity by agreeing in principle to the necessity of discussing all these matters together in committee, it is quite possible, Mr. Speaker, that we should find increased agreement within the committee and be able to agree on the designation of the legal holiday.

Mr. Speaker, I do not want to use up all the time to which I am entitled but I should like to say a few words about a related subject. It is not my intention to bring forward a bill in this respect, which might not be necessary, but it does seem to me that the time has come or is near when hon. members and senators will seriously consider the propriety of singing our national anthem in both languages, simultaneously or successively, once a week. It seems to me that singing the national anthem after the oral question period every Monday would have a unifying effect on us and would strengthen our will to keep Canadian unity strong and sound.

Mr. Speaker, this, in short, is what I wanted to say. I shall conclude by adding that the area I come from, which is not merely a tourist attraction, is rooted in history. It is that part of the country which is known as the "Republic of Madawaska", which is wedged in between Quebec and the state of Maine, which state also has a flag. Its flag was designed by Colonel Baker, a prominent figure in history who did live in fact and who, because of his convictions, was incarcerated in a military prison in Fredericton over a century ago. In Madawaska, we truly and sincerely love the flag of the "Republic". That is to say then, that amongst all peoples, the flag remains the symbol par excellence of national unity. Whether it be small or large, the nation always rallies around the flag, Mr. Speaker.

[English]

Mr. Ed Nelson (Burnaby-Seymour): Mr. Speaker, it is true that when I drafted the Canada flag day bill I mentioned in the preamble the Canadian Bill of Rights and the late Right Hon. Lester Bowles Pearson. As I said earlier, the simple statement of the proposed act is a request that the 15th day of February or the Monday following be declared a legal holiday to be known as Canada flag day.

During a previous debate, because of an informal arrangement in the House I agreed to forgo speaking on the bill, and did so except to request its passage on second reading and reference to the committee. I spoke then for only 55 seconds, and I do not intend to speak at length now because I do not regard this as an occasion for patriotic oratory. We Canadians are not normally flag-waving, but I feel deeply that we should recognize the official flag of our country in a concrete way outside the House as we have done inside.

I was somewhat saddened by the turn of events in the previous debate because I did not intend or foresee that it would be polarized on the question of whether certain men in history should be commemorated. It was, I suppose, not necessary to mention in the preamble the contributions of both the right hon. member for Prince Albert (Mr. Diefenbaker), through reference to the Canadian Bill of Rights, or the late Right Hon. Lester B. Pearson as the prime minister most directly connected with the adoption of the flag, as history has already taken note of contributions of men like these and many others. Neither was it my intention to denigrate the union jack or in any way to slight the monarchy or the commonwealth. Above all, I have no intention of resurrecting the flag debate.

I am a veteran of World War II and a member of the Canadian Legion in Burnaby, and I respect the traditions that have been built up in this country. In my first speech in this House I spoke of the importance of national unity. I believe that the Canadian flag is a symbol of that unity. My sole intention, as I say, was to ask for a holiday in the middle of February to recognize our flag, which seems to me to symbolize the ideals of all Canadians. If it seems presumptuous for a new member to introduce such a bill, I feel justified in that the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles), as seconder, lends stature to the bill commensurate with its importance.

I am thinking primarily of our young people, Mr. Speaker. As a teacher for many years, I know that our July 1 holiday occurs long after children have been dismissed from classrooms across the nation. I had hoped that this occasion in the middle of February might help to instil in our children a feeling of pride and respect for the Canadian flag.

Furthest from my wishes would be the encouragement of exercises in every classroom in which children would repeat by rote an oath of allegiance or salute the flag, or both. I believe that teachers across the land can be trusted to discuss voluntarily the significance of our national emblem. Still further from my intent would be the encouragement of any jingoistic form of nationalism, because I believe that pride in our country and its institutions is best expressed by a quiet but deep respect for this symbol of our nation.

In every political party there are men and women whose contributions in particular fields earn them the gratitude and respect of all citizens regardless of political affiliations. I could name many such people from all parties including my own. I doubt the wisdom of attempting to commemorate any one person because of the difficulty of making a choice, particularly among political figures. But the question before us, surely, is one that should be considered without reference to politics as such. The flag that hangs in the Commons chamber is our national flag. I would like to emphasize the recognition of that fact to the rest of the country through the institution of a holiday.

I would like to make one more point which is most important to me. There is growing up now a generation of young people for whom the maple leaf flag has a special significance, not only inside Canada but particularly in other countries because our younger people are travelling more and more in these modern times. If you travel to Europe you will see our flag displayed on packsacks, on camper windows and on signs that Canadian young people hold up to let motorists know that they are Canadian, not American, British or Australian. For these young people who are too young to recall many of the traditions associated with other symbols, this is the flag that says to them "I am a Canadian". For them it is a symbol of our nation.

In the intervening weeks since the bill was first placed before us there have been strong indications of wide public acceptance of this measure. By fortuitous circumstance, the middle of February seems to be the time when a holiday would be most appreciated. I welcome the decision of the House to refer the subject to committee but I must say in closing that, whatever the result, I hope our official flag and the unity of our nation will be honoured in whatever form the bill emerges.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Sinclair Stevens (York-Simcoe): Mr. Speaker, I am very pleased at the progress that has been made today with respect to the holding of a holiday in Canada some time between New Year's and Easter. I feel, from the tone set in the House so far, that it is likely there will be such a holiday established.

I would like to mention something about my "discovery day" concept. I feel that it is a broader concept than has been put forward so far concerning the nature of the holdiday which might be held in the period that has been mentioned. I believe that looking at our long history will help to renew our confidence in the future. I feel that in addition to Sir John A. Macdonald and the Right Hon. Lester B. Pearson, there are many politicians and exceptional men in other fields who have contributed substantially not only to the discovery but to the development of our country. I believe it would be fitting to honour these people by paying tribute to them on this public holiday.

I also feel that discovery day would be a day when governments, including this one, could designate people whom they felt had made a distinct contribution to Canada's development in the preceding year. These people would be honoured, not just with token recognition but in a very substantial way. In that way I feel we could look at our past and, I hope, our present and our future on a day which would be enjoyed by all Canadians during our relatively long winter season.

I would also like to point out that my bill proposes that the holiday be on a Friday, because I have found that many people feel that a holiday on Monday is not as convenient as one on Friday in that with a holiday on Friday there is a natural evolution into Saturday and Sunday, the day of rest. I hope we will now vote on this question, and I thank hon. members for including my bill in the motion. I sincerely hope the committee will take action on this important matter.

Mr. Speaker: Is the House ready for the question?

Some hon. Members: Question.

Mr. Speaker: All those in favour will please say yea.

Some hon. Members: Yea.

Mr. Speaker: All those opposed will please say nay. There being no dissent, I declare the motion carried.

Motion agreed to and the subject matter of a national holiday in the period January, February and March, contained in Bills C-95, C-136 and C-150, be referred to the Standing Committee on Justice and Legal Affairs.

Mr. Speaker: It being five o'clock, I do now leave the chair. This House stands adjourned until Monday at two o'clock in the afternoon.

At 5 p.m. the House adjourned, without question put, pursuant to Standing Order.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Monday, March 5, 1973

The House met at 2 p.m.

ROUTINE PROCEEDINGS

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

REPORT BY MINISTER ON INTERNATIONAL CONFERENCE ON VIET NAM HELD IN PARIS

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, as the House is aware, I have just returned from the International Conference on Viet Nam which I attended as the representative of the government of Canada. Essentially, this was a conference of the great powers and the belligerents in the Viet Nam war. Canada was present because of our participation in the International Commission for Control and Supervision.

As members will recall, I made clear prior to my departure that we were not going to Paris to sit in judgment on the political and military settlements embodied in the Paris agreement. I have made it clear repeatedly that Canada has not sought, and is not seeking, a truce supervisory role in Indochina but was prepared to serve in such a capacity if we were convinced that the ICCS could be made to play a useful and effective role in restoring peace in Viet Nam.

I have also made clear in this House and outside it the conditions we would consider essential if we are to continue our participation in the ICCS. One of these essential conditions was the establishment of an outside political authority independent of the belligerents themselves to which the commission could send its reports and which could alert the international community to a serious threat to the peace in Viet Nam. Provision for such a mechanism was lacking in the January 27 agreement and it was our hope that this deficiency would be corrected by this conference. I therefore went to Paris to do all I could to see if a satisfactory authority could be established.

In my initial intervention at the conference on February 26 I expressed our views on this subject clearly and forcefully and placed before the participants a proposal that provided for the Secretary General of the United Nations to receive and circulate communications from the International Commission of Control and Supervision to the membership of the international conference, and to perform a similar function regarding the comments of the membership of the conference on such communications. The Canadian proposal also contained a provision for the reconvening of the conference on any of four conditions:

(a) on receipt of a request from the International Commission of Control and Supervision;

(b) on receipt of a request from the Four-Party Joint Military Commission or the Two-Party Joint Military Commission;

(c) on receipt of a formal request from five of the members of the conference, excluding the Secretary General of the United Nations; and

(d) after determining, at the request of any member of the conference that a two-thirds majority of the members, excluding the Secretary General, considered that there was cause to reconvene the conference.

It soon became clear that few participants at the conference were prepared to support the type of independent international reporting mechanism, involving the Secretary General of the United Nations, such as we had suggested and some were strongly opposed to the whole concept. I think it is safe to say that it was only because of our insistence on this matter that the conference addressed itself at all seriously to the matter. What finally emerged in Articles 6 and 7 of the act was the most that could be obtained. Under these arrangements, the reports and views of the international commission will at least be transmitted outside the closed circuit of the belligerents to the conference participants, and the conference itself can be recalled.

I made clear to the conference our disappointment that it could not agree on a more effective arrangement and I questioned whether the mechanism established went far enough and whether it could work. I emphasized to the conference on March 1 that the arrangements provided in Articles 6 and 7 would be carefully reviewed by the Canadian government in determining the extent to which our conditions for continued participation in the conference had been fulfilled.

The act provided an opportunity for world powers to acknowledge their respect and support for the January 27 agreement in association not only with the parties to that agreement, but also with the governments participating in the International Commission established under it. It is also noteworthy that the conference was conducted in the presence of the Secretary General of the United Nations.

I signed the act on behalf of Canada because the spirit of the act and the good will reflected in it were such as to command the support of the Canadian people. The act welcomes peace in Viet Nam and it calls for the participants to do nothing to jeopardize that peace. It was, therefore, important to have all the participants at the conference associated with those objectives, and failure to sign could have been open to misinterpretation. Moreover, not to have signed the act could only have been construed as meaning that one of our sine qua non had not been met. We were not in a position at the conference, nor are we yet in a position, to say whether the machinery provided in Articles 6 and 7 could serve the purpose we have had in mind. We will look at these arrangements in the light of our experience in the International Commission. This will be one of the prime factors in determining whether the commission is playing or can play an effective role in restoring peace to Viet Nam.

We must now, Mr. Speaker, examine very carefully the political authority and the reporting arrangements that have been established to determine whether, in our judgment, they have a reasonable prospect of operating effectively. We must also relate these arrangements to the effectiveness of the International Commission on the ground. The Canadian delegation under the direction of Ambassador Gauvin is making a tremendous effort to see that the commission works. But we cannot do it alone, Mr. Speaker, and disturbing developments in Viet Nam compel us to question whether the International Commission will be allowed to function in a way that would justify our continued participation. Perhaps—and I cannot say that I am very confident—the discussions in Paris will result in increased support by all the participants at the conference for the objectives we have in mind. Over the next few weeks, therefore, we will need to assess the relevant factors very carefully. It may be, Mr. Speaker, that at some time I should pay a visit to Viet Nam and see the situation on the ground for myself. If so, I would invite members of the opposition to come with me, but that is a decision that has not yet definitely been made. I will report to cabinet on the results of this assessment and the government will then be in a position to make its decision.

Perhaps I should emphasize again that the peace in Viet Nam depends upon the parties to the peace agreement itself. The International Commission can help by investigation and observation and reporting but it cannot keep the peace. The commission is not an essential element. It can be of help only if the parties—and that means all of them—wish to see the commission function.

I wish to table, Mr. Speaker, the text of the act of the International Conference on Viet Nam and copies of my statements to the conference on February 26 and March 1. It might be useful, since they are really part of the statement I have made today, if they could be printed either as an appendix to Hansard or as an appendix to Votes and Proceedings.

Mr. Speaker: Is it the wish to the House that the documents referred to by the minister be made an appendix to Hansard?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

[Editor's note: For text of document referred to above, see Appendix.]

[Translation]

Mr. Claude Wagner (Saint-Hyacinthe): Mr. Speaker, we are pleased to welcome back the hon. Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Sharp). We wished him good luck when he left but, unfortunately, we notice that our wishes for his success did not materialize.

[Mr. Sharp.]

[English]

The minister has reported to the House his failure to secure acceptance of what he termed himself before his departure a sine qua non condition to our continuing participation in the International Control Commission. The conference's new position is virtually without meaning and constitutes a watered down and unacceptable version of the minister's proposal. This failure leaves the government with but one alternative. It has been summed up very clearly by many observers who have expressed themselves over the weekend. One Montreal paper expressed it this way:

> A continuing Canada presence will not stand for devotion to duty but rather for bluff, backdown and bumbling.

Our view all along has been that the minister should not have involved Canada without prior consultation with parliament—

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Wagner: —and without prior acceptance by all parties involved of the essential conditions.

As a nation, we should not apologize for desiring structures that will ensure a peace that can be supervised. The minister not only implies apology but indicates that for all intents and purposes we have backed down.

If a middle power has any long term interest it is in peace arrangements that guarantee an effective role for neutral smaller powers. If we do not stand by our own ground rules now, we will not succeed in letting belligerents know that the ground rules exist and must exist in the future.

The minister has disregarded parliament, has left dormant on the order paper the resolution calling for a debate and vote, and now, in spite of the difficulties in which he finds himself, the minister continues on behalf of the government to show continued disregard of the role of this House. He stated with arrogance yesterday that parliament will not be consulted before a final decision is reached. On the part of a weak minority government, the behaviour of the minister cannot be condoned.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Wagner: Although we sincerely regret the minister's failure in Paris, he has but himself to blame and in this House he stands alone.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Andrew Brewin (Greenwood): Mr. Speaker, this party has made it clear that while it supported the participation of Canada in the International Commission of Control and Supervision in Viet Nam for an initial period of 60 days, we believed and believe that the decision to continue Canadian participation was and is such an important and grave commitment, not a mere detail in the conduct of our international affairs, that the decision should not be made without the prior approval of parliament.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Brewin: We repeat this stand today and invite the minister to bring a resolution dealing with this matter before the House prior to committing the government to action on this matter.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Brewin: As to the continuation of our contribution to the commission, we would deeply regret if the arrangements or machinery for ending the war and restoring peace in Viet Nam broke down. But it remains true, as we said in an earlier statement, that the observer team can perform no useful function if the parties do not themselves accept the ceasefire or do not accept the provisions of the agreement in any important respect. No outside observer team or peacekeeping arrangement can enforce an agreement which the two parties themselves do not accept in good faith.

So far the ceasefire has been only partial and the observer team has been frustrated in performing its supposed function by lack of an adequate international body to whom to report and lack of a proper and workable procedure for reporting. We share the doubts of the minister as to the effectiveness of clauses six and seven of the Paris Act. We, along with the Secretary of State for External Affairs, would much have preferred the Security Council or the Secretary General of the United Nations to have been designated as the international authority to which the observers would report.

• (1420)

If the present situation continues without improvement—and I say "if"—then Canada must not repeat the farce of the International Control Commission.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Brewin: But I repeat—and in this I differ from the views expressed by the spokesman for the Official Opposition—if the observer team can function effectively, and we have not made a judgment on this aspect, then we would support the government in continuing the Canadian contribution.

The picture is not all dark. The arrangement made last week for the further release of United States prisoners of war and the continued withdrawal of United States troops from Viet Nam are to be welcomed, as is the international endorsement of the peace agreement reached in Paris.

I should like once again to refer briefly to the question of the release of the 200,000 political prisoners in South Viet Nam as constituting an integral part of a peaceful settlement. Many of these prisoners are neutral or non-communist politicians. Many are students, teachers or religious leaders. They constitute the third force which is so essential to the genuine national reconciliation that is the core of the peace agreement. One of the reasons I hope Canada may be able to continue its participation in the work of the commission is that it could use its membership as a measure of leverage in urging that this immense tragedy be relieved.

Lastly, a word on reconstruction. The international community must make it clear that international aid for reconstruction in Viet Nam is contingent upon a genuine peace and the bona fide acceptance of the peace agreement by all parties. The absence of any reference to these issues in the minister's statement presumably means that they were not the subject of serious discussion at the international conference. This is much to be regretted. These questions must be solved if genuine peace is to come to Viet Nam.

We look forward to further frank and full exploration of the situation in the Standing Committee on External Affairs and National Defence. Following that full study, we want our share of participation in reaching the decision on whether or not we should continue to participate.

[Translation]

Mr. Gérard Laprise (Abitibi): Mr. Speaker, the Viet Nam conference in Paris has shown us that bringing peace to Viet Nam is going to be a difficult and even a painful business. The Secretary of State for External Affairs was full of optimism when he went to the conference, but he no doubt discovered very quickly that, however good his intentions, his proposals would not gain immediate acceptance, because not just one but both sides were represented at the conference. And unlike here in the House, even though we do have a pretty strong opposition, there seem to have been greatly differing opinions.

I am by no means sure, Mr. Speaker, if the suggestion or proposal of the Secretary of State for External Affairs would have had much success even if it had been accepted and carried out.

It must be admitted that United Nations achievements so far in the field of worldwide peace-keeping have been somewhat inconclusive.

It may be that we have nothing better to propose when it comes to trying to reconcile countries in conflict, especially when they have been at war for almost 30 years; however, if the United Nations is to become an effective instrument in future situations of this kind, I believe it will need to undergo some reforms.

Mr. Speaker, Canada has now committed herself to continuing to seek a way of bringing peace to Viet Nam, and I think that we should continue the debate that we started at the beginning of this session, on a subject that is still on the Order Paper, to give Parliament an opportunity to express its opinion.

I recall that in a very similar situation in 1964, under rather complicated circumstances, the government saw fit to ask for the support of the House for sending troops for peace-keeping in Cyprus.

I have always wondered why the government did not do likewise when it came to sending troops to Viet Nam for observation duties after the cease-fire. At all events, Mr. Speaker, I and my colleagues in the opposition consider that Parliament ought to be consulted on any further steps that might be taken.

AIR CANADA

ALLEGED DETERIORATION IN SERVICE—REQUEST FOR UNANIMOUS CONSENT TO MOVE MOTION

Mr. John Lundrigan (Gander-Twillingate): Mr. Speaker, I should like to move a motion on an urgent matter affecting all members of the House. In view of the serious deterioration in Air Canada service across the country, especially in the Ottawa area and surrounding communities since relocation of their information services to Montreal, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Central Nova (Mr. MacKay):

That a special reference of this matter be made to the Standing Committee on Transportation and Communications, and that Messrs. Baldwin and Pratt be summoned to account accordingly.

Mr. Speaker: The House has heard the motion proposed by the hon. member for Gander-Twillingate under the terms of Standing Order 43. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. Speaker: There is not unanimous consent. The motion cannot be put.

FISHERIES

BRITISH COLUMBIA HERRING FISHERY—REQUEST FOR UNANIMOUS CONSENT TO MOVE MOTION

Mr. Thomas S. Barnett (Comox-Alberni): Mr. Speaker, in view of the complete chaos currently existing in the British Columbia herring fishery, I ask leave of the House under the terms of Standing Order 43 to move, seconded by the hon. member for Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands (Mr. Douglas):

That this House demand that the Minister of Fisheries forthwith (a) institute a rational quota division between gillnetters and seiners in order, among other things, to ensure that local fishermen, Indians and others have some reasonable opportunity to participate in the herring roe fishery and (b) lift his ruling that test fishing to determine the suitability of herring schools for harvesting be done by seine fishermen without remuneration for their work.

Mr. Speaker: This motion is put to the House under the terms of Standing Order 43. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. Speaker: There is not unanimity. The motion cannot be put.

NAVIGABLE WATERS PROTECTION ACT

AMENDMENT TO MAKE GOVERNMENTS AND AGENCIES THEREOF SUBJECT TO ACT

Mr. Thomas S. Barnett (Comox-Alberni) moved for leave to introduce Bill C-155, to amend the Navigable Waters Protection Act.

Some hon. Members: Explain.

• (1430)

Mr. Barnett: Mr. Speaker, this bill adds a new clause to the Navigable Waters Protection Act to make Her Majesty in right of Canada, in right of the provinces, or agencies of Her Majesty, subject to the terms of the act. Many activities of the governments of Canada and the provinces and their agents now affect navigable waters in ways similar to non-governmental activities. It is therefore proper and necessary that the act clearly require that governmental activities are subject to the same conditions and approvals.

Motion agreed to, bill read the first time and ordered to be printed.
