HEROIN—REQUEST FOR UNANIMOUS CONSENT TO MOVE MOTION

Mr. Heath Macquarrie (Hillsborough): Mr. Speaker, under the provisions of Standing Order 43, I seek unanimous consent to move a motion on a matter of urgent and pressing public interest. I refer to a recent disclosure by a national magazine that the government's failure to act upon recommendations concerning the control and use of heroin constitutes a serious national situation. I therefore move, seconded by the hon. member for Edmonton-Strathcona (Mr. Roche):

That the annual report of the Department of National Health and Welfare be forthwith referred to the Standing Committee on Health, Welfare and Social Affairs for consideration and report.

Mr. Speaker: Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. Speaker: The motion cannot be moved.

Mr. Nielsen: Sounds like a fix!

SOCIAL SECURITY

PENSION INCREASES—REQUEST FOR UNANIMOUS CONSENT TO MOVE MOTION

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, I ask leave under the terms of Standing Order 43 to move a motion on a matter of urgent and pressing necessity. I feel sure my friends in the Official Opposition will agree to the motion being put and I hope the government will give it at least a few seconds thought before saying no. I move, seconded by the hon. member for Vancouver-Kingsway (Mrs. MacInnis):

That immediately on the passing of this motion the Leader of the Opposition be given five minutes in which to state clearly the program of pension increases to which he referred last night on CBC television, and in particular to state the precise figure to which his party would raise the basic amount of the pension provided under the Old Age Security Act.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Speaker: I am doubtful as to the procedural acceptability of the suggestion proposed by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): But it was agreed to.

Mr. Speaker: I will inquire from the House whether there is unanimous consent to the motion proposed by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre.

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. Speaker: There is no apparent unanimity.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Who said no?

Mr. Reid: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker, I should just like it to be known that it was not we on the government side who refused unanimous consent.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Stanfield: So that hon. members will not be disappointed, may I say I shall be speaking, I hope, later this afternoon.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

FOOD PRICES

PRICES AND INCOMES COMMISSION STUDIES AND RECOMMENDATIONS—REQUEST FOR UNANIMOUS CONSENT TO MOVE MOTION

Mr. James A. McGrath (St. John's East): Mr. Speaker, pursuant to Standing Order 43 I rise on a matter of urgent and pressing necessity. Tomorrow, the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs will be appearing before the Special Committee on Food Prices. Since the minister left some doubt, in reply to questions last week, whether or not he is prepared to make available to the committee all of the findings of the Prices and Incomes Commission, and in view of the importance of those findings to the committee which has to report to the House in less than two months, I would therefore move, seconded by the hon. member for Kingston and The Islands (Miss MacDonald):

That in the opinion of this House the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs should make available to the Special Committee on Trends In Food Prices all background studies and recommendations of the Prices and Incomes Commission.

Mr. Speaker: The House has heard the motion proposed by the hon. member for St. John's East. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. Speaker: There does not appear to be unanimity.

PROPOSED WEST COAST TANKER ROUTE—REQUEST FOR UNANIMOUS CONSENT TO MOVE MOTION

Mr. Randolph Harding (Kootenay West): Mr. Speaker, I ask the unanimous consent of the House to present a motion under Standing Order 43 which I believe is urgent and can be passed without debate. The motion deals with the proposed tanker route down the west coast of British Columbia. In view of the recent decision by the United States Court of Appeals which has blocked temporarily the issuing of government permits for the building of a trans-Alaska pipeline, I feel it is essential that the Canadian position be made crystal clear. I therefore move, seconded by the hon. member for Comox-Alberni (Mr. Barnett):

That this House in this, the first session of this new parliament, express its unanimous opposition to the proposed tanker route from Valdez, Alaska, to Cherry Point, State of Washington, and that this decision of the House of Commons be transmitted to the United States government through official channels.

Mr. Speaker: Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. Speaker: There is no unanimous consent. Does the hon. member for Calgary North rise on a point of order?

Mr. Woolliams: Yes, Mr. Speaker. As I heard the motion, I think it ascribed the decision to the United States Court of Appeals. My information is that it was the court of appeal of one of the states, and whether that decision will be binding on the other states is a question of jurisdiction.

[Later:]

I rise on a question of privilege, Mr. Speaker. Earlier, on a point of order, I questioned whether a court to which the hon. member for Kootenay West had referred was, indeed, the United States Court of Appeals. It is, in fact, the United States Court of Appeals and the hon. member for Kootenay West was right. The information I had was incorrect.

REGIONAL ECONOMIC EXPANSION

REGIONAL ANALYSES—REQUEST FOR UNANIMOUS CONSENT TO MOVE MOTION

Mr. Elmer MacKay (Central Nova): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a matter of urgent and pressing necessity, pursuant to Standing Order 43. In view of recent statements attributed to the Minister of Regional Economic Expansion that his department has prepared analyses on the economic structure and possible development of six regions of this country—the Atlantic provinces, Quebec, Ontario the prairie provinces, British Columbia and the Canadian northwest—and in view of an impending major policy announcement to the premiers of the Atlantic region that is undoubtedly connected with these economic development strategies, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Dartmouth-Halifax East (Mr. Forrestall):

That the annual report of the Department of Regional Economic Expansion be referred to the Standing Committee on Regional Development in order to allow the committee to study these analyses, and that the committee be reconvened forthwith for this purpose.

Mr. Speaker: Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. Speaker: The motion cannot be put.

Mr. MacKay: A point of order, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member is rising on a point of order.

Mr. MacKay: In view of the fact that according to the required rules of the House this report is already nine days late, in view of the fact that this party has been accused of being obstructionist, and in view of the fact on at least one other occasion the Department of Energy, Mines and Resources report was referred without debate, I appeal to the government House leader and to the minister to reconsider and to have this matter referred to the committee as soon as possible.

2. Of the total, how much has been provided to provincial governments for language instruction and what is the breakdown in assistance by province?

3. Of the total amount spent by the government on federal program, what have been the programs and how much has each cost to date?

Hon. James Hugh Faulkner (Secretary of State): 1. For the period of January 1, 1970 to December 31, 1972, the cost of the various programs administered by the Department of the Secretary of State under the Bilingualism Development Program has been $167,819,970.

2. For the period of January 1, 1970 to March 31, 1972, amounts granted to provincial governments or provincial institutions may be broken down as follows: Newfoundland, $326,204; Prince Edward Island, $246,895; Nova Scotia, $1,679,530; New Brunswick, $10,540,116; Quebec, $73,293,456; Ontario, $34,133,769; Manitoba, $2,097,071; Saskatchewan, $1,099,627; Alberta, $2,062,234; British Columbia, $2,089,874; (a) Final figures for fiscal year 1972-73 are not yet available on a provincial basis, but payments of $39,449,760 have been made between April 1, 1972 and December 31, 1972 to provincial governments or provincial institutions; (b) For the period of January 1, 1970 to December 31, 1972, an amount of $801,075 has been spent in non-governmental sectors (national voluntary associations, linguistic research, etc.); this amount cannot be broken down on a provincial basis.

FEASIBILITY STUDIES ON CONSTRUCTION OF RAIL LINE FOR TRANSPORTING OIL FROM ARCTIC

Question No. 38—Mr. Gleave:

1. Have any studies or research been undertaken by the Department of Transport into the feasibility of the construction of a rail line for the purpose of transporting oil and liquified gas from the production fields in the Arctic to points in southern Canada?

2. Have any studies been made into construction and maintenance costs as between rail transport and pipeline transport of oil and gas?

3. Have comparative studies been undertaken as to the effect on the ecology between these two alternate methods of transporting oil and gas?

Hon. Jean Marchand (Minister of Transport): 1. The Ministry of Transport has contributed towards funding the study "Railway to the Arctic" carried out in 1972 by the Canadian Institute of Guided Ground Transport, Queen's University. This report examines in a preliminary way the technical feasibility and the cost of rail movement of oil in the permafrost region from Prudhoe Bay on the Alaskan north slope to North American markets.

2. Some tentative comparison of the cost of moving oil between different transportation modes were made by the Canadian Institute of Guided Ground Transport in connection with the "Railway to the Arctic" study. It is likely that because of interest in both these modes further comparative work will be done.

3. No. However, the extensive information being collected on the environmental impact of pipelines in the North is applicable to all modes of transportation in the Mackenzie corridor and is being used to assess the environmental impact of the Mackenzie highway. Further studies on the ecological effects of the Mackenzie highway are also being carried out currently. The information from both these sets of studies would be largely applicable to assessing the ecological effect of any possible railway to the Arctic.

GRANTS UNDER EMERGENCY GOLD MINING ASSISTANCE ACT

Question No. 164—Mr. Broadbent:

1. What were the names of the corporations which received cash grants under the Emergency Gold-Mining Assistance Act (EGMA), in each of the fiscal years 1968-69, 1969-70, 1970-71, 1971-72, 1972-73 to date and, in each case, what were the amounts of money committed and paid?

2. What are the objectives of the program?

3. Has the department conducted any evaluative study of the program and, if so, what was the date of the latest report?

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): 1. In accordance with the act, gold mining companies receive assistance on a designated, i.e. calendar year, basis. The amounts paid in the years 1968 to 1971 inclusive are shown in the report on the administration of the Emergency Gold Mining Assistance Act for the fiscal year ended March 31, 1972, which was tabled on January 4, 1973. The Canadian gold mines did not sell any of their 1972 gold production to the Royal Canadian Mint and thus no assistance was payable for the calendar year 1972.

2. The objective of the program is to provide financial assistance to long-established marginal gold mines. By enabling gold mines to extend their productive life, the assistance helps communities dependent on gold mining to adjust gradually to diminishing economic support.

3. A comprehensive evaluative study was completed in 1970 prior to the renewal of the act at that time. This study was extended in 1972 for purposes of renewal of the act and is referred to in the annual report just tabled. The internal studies are confidential.

EMPLOYMENT SUPPORT PROGRAM

Question No. 168—Mr. Broadbent:

1. What were the names of the corporations which received grants under the Employment Support Program (ESP) in each of the fiscal years 1971-72 and 1972-73 to date, and what were the amounts in each case?

2. What are the objectives of the above program?

3. Has the department conducted any evaluative study of the program and, if so, what was the date of the latest report?

Hon. Alastair Gillespie (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): 1. For reasons of commercial confidentiality, this information is not available.

2. To support employment in Canada by mitigating the disruptive effect on Canadian industry of the imposition of foreign import surtaxes or other actions of like effect.

3. No.

THEFT OF POSTAL BAGS

Question No. 186—Mr. Laprise:

1. How many thefts of postal bags have been reported in 1970-71 and since the beginning of 1972 (a) in the Province of Quebec (b) in Canada?

2. How many refunds have been made and what was the average amount refunded?

3. How long did the inquiries on these thefts average?

Hon. André Ouellet (Postmaster General): 1. (a) Quebec, (b) Canada.

	Quebec	Ontario	Western	Atlantic
1972	270	239	13	1

2. For the most part post office records of indemnities paid do not differentiate between loss or damage in the mails and loss by theft. Statements submitted by postal districts on a monthly basis reveal the following expenditures. Of the figures shown, 4.46 per cent represent international claims and 1.05 per cent of money paid international claims.

	Total Indemnities Paid	No. of Claims	Average Amount
1972	738,111.74	24,080	30.65

3. The length of time spent on enquiries raised in this part of the inquiry varies from hours to weeks to months and this type of statistics would be meaningless.

3. How many of those who completed the course and received diplomas are now employed by the Department of Transport as air traffic controllers?

PUBLIC WORKS—PROTECTION OF FARMLAND AND PROPERTY FROM HIGH WATER LEVELS

Question No. 221—Mr. Holmes:

What action, if any, has the government taken to protect the farmland and property from the high water levels and impending flood conditions in (a) Dover township (b) Chatham township (c) Wallaceburg, Ontario?

Hon. Jean-Eudes Dubé (Minister of Public Works): None. The policy of the Department of Public Works concerning shoreline erosion is that the government will contribute to the cost of shoreline protection in cases where erosion is directly attributable to commercial navigation or the presence of a federally owned structure. The department has in the past advised property owners of the types of engineering structures which could be used to advantage in their particular case but each case must be considered separately and on its own merit. Although some regulation of levels and flows is carried out on Lake Superior and Lake Ontario under joint action by the International Joint Commission, the general water level condition of the Great Lakes and in particular lakes Huron, St. Clair and Erie, are considered to be natural. Remedial measures for flood situations are a provincial responsibility and the federal government would only become involved in co-operation with the province in the event of emergency or disaster situations.

2. What was the grant per student actually received in 1972 by church related universities and colleges in Ontario?

Hon. James Hugh Faulkner (Secretary of State): 1. The amounts transferred to the provinces under Part VI of the Federal-Provincial Fiscal Arrangements Act, 1972 are not calculated on the basis of grants per student, but on the basis of operating expenditures for post-secondary education. It is estimated that in the fiscal year ending March 31, 1973 the amounts transferred to the provinces will total approximately $972 million. This total includes the value of the federal revenue relating to post-secondary education, related equalization and guarantee payments, and post-secondary education adjustment payments.

POSSIBLE IMPOSITION BY UNITED STATES OF IMPORT SURCHARGE IN LIGHT OF DOLLAR DIFFICULTIES—CANADIAN REPRESENTATIONS AND POSITION

Hon. Robert L. Stanfield (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce a question arising from a statement attributed to the chairman of President Nixon's council of economic advisers that the United States government is seriously considering the imposition of a surcharge to urge or at least have the effect of compelling or bringing its trading partners to the point of adjusting their monetary and trading policies to relieve the United States deficit. I should like to ask the minister whether, in view of this statement attributed to the chairman of the President's economic advisory council, he has had any contact with the United States government in this regard?

[Mr. Nystrom.]

Hon. Alastair Gillespie (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): Mr. Speaker, I am aware of the newspaper reports quoting the chairman. Our officials have, of course, been in contact with United States officials over a period of time and certainly very recently as well.

Mr. Stanfield: Mr. Speaker, I assume what the minister is saying is that he has not been in contact with the United States government as a result of this statement of the chairman of the President's council of economic advisers. What is the position of the government in respect of the difficulties relating to the United States dollar and the possibility of surcharges being imposed in light of the statement to which I referred? Is it the position of the government of Canada that Canada will make a special approach to the United States with regard to this potential difficulty for Canada, or does Canada intend to rely upon a multilateral approach in association with the countries of western Europe, Japan and other countries that will be concerned?

Mr. Gillespie: Mr. Speaker, I should like to emphasize that Canada's position will be placed strongly and clearly to the United States authorities. It has been made strongly and clearly over the months and, indeed, recently, and I am sure it will continue to be so. As far as the solution of the difficulties the United States faces at the present time is concerned, I very much hope it will be a multilateral solution rather than a series of bilaterals.

An hon. Member: Don't be so formal.

Mr. Stanfield: Mr. Speaker, I have a further supplementary question. I am sure the minister will agree that the recent difficulties are what the chairman of the President's economic council referred to. Does the minister propose to act on behalf of the government of Canada in putting forward and claiming a special position for Canada in relation to United States trade in light of consideration by the United States of the imposition of surcharges, or does the government of Canada propose to let nature take its course in the United States and then formulate domestic policies designed to relieve Canadian industries that might be affected, as the policy followed apparently was in the imposition of a surcharge in August, 1971?

Mr. Gillespie: Mr. Speaker, we have made clear to the United States authorities that Canada is not contributing to the deficit on current account that the United States is experiencing. In fact, we assist in respect of that deficit in that we as a nation have helped to reduce the U.S. deficit position on current account. Indeed, like the United States, we are in a deficit position on current account with the rest of the trading world.

BANK PROFITS FROM INTERNATIONAL MONETARY DEALINGS—GOVERNMENT ACTION

Mr. David Lewis: Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask one or two questions in the same area. May I first address a question to the Minister of Finance. In view of reports by the chartered banks of Canada showing that they have made considerable profits from international monetary dealings, may I ask whether the minister has discussed this situation with the chartered banks, or intends to do so, in order to make sure that they do not add to the international monetary crisis by profiteering from international monetary transactions?

• (1420)

Hon. John N. Turner (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, the arrangement agreed to by the banks last June in Winnipeg to limit the amount that they were willing to pay on certificates of deposit for short-term deposits up to 100 days and up to a year has had a beneficial effect so far on the Canadian dollar in the sense that it has discouraged the influx of short-term money in which the banks were participating prior to that time. Insofar as the Canadian chartered banks are concerned, I am satisfied that since that date they have not been contributing to an adverse position in the Canadian dollar scene.

CANADIAN PARTICIPATION IN DISCUSSIONS ON REFORM OF INTERNATIONAL MONETARY SYSTEM

Mr. David Lewis (York South): Mr. Speaker, may I ask the Minister of Finance a further question. Are Canadian authorities now participating in the further discussions for the reform of the international monetary system and to expedite that reform to produce more liquidity in the international monetary system so as to make it more difficult for vested and speculative interests to create an international monetary crisis every few months?

Hon. John N. Turner (Minister of Finance): Yes, indeed, Mr. Speaker. As the House knows, Canada is part of the group of 20 constituted last September in Washington, which includes developing and developed countries, seeking to achieve a new international monetary situation having as one of its prime features a new reserve currency. Whether it should be special drawing rights or an other is not yet determined. One of the items on the agenda which is now being considered by the deputies and which will be considered by the ministers, including myself, in March will be the question of not necessarily capital controls but the control of short-term money.

TRADE

CANADA—UNITED STATES—POSITION OF NEGOTIATIONS ON SO-CALLED IRRITANTS

Mr. David Lewis (York South): Mr. Speaker, may I address a supplementary to the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce. In view of the developing difficulties and the threat of possible further protectionism by the United States administration, may I ask the minister whether negotiations are now continuing in respect of what his predecessor called trade irritants between Canada and the United States and at what stage those negotiations are now?

Hon. Alastair Gillespie (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): Mr. Speaker, there have been discussions by Canadian officials prior to the vote of confidence. I would expect that there will be further discussions between officials of a similar exploratory and general review nature in the very near future.

INTERNATIONAL MONETARY SITUATION—CANADIAN PARTICIPATION IN PRESENT DISCUSSIONS—PURCHASE OF U.S. DOLLARS

Hon. Marcel Lambert (Edmonton West): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Finance. Would the minister advise whether he has had any negotiations or communications with his opposite numbers in the Group of 20 or perhaps even the smaller group of ministers that is rumoured to be meeting this week in order to deal on a much more pragmatic and urgent basis than the long-term basis of next March with the present situation?

Hon. John N. Turner (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, the government of Canada has been following very closely the situation in international monetary terms last week, over the weekend and again this morning. Although we have not been a party directly to the discussions in Bonn or Paris, we have through our representatives in Bonn, Paris, London, Basel and Washington kept abreast of the situation, and this morning I talked on the telephone with the Secretary of the Treasury of the United States, George Shultz, who is keeping me informed of the current situation.

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): Mr. Speaker, would the minister advise the House whether the Bank of Canada late last week participated or whether it is contemplated that the Bank of Canada will participate in the mopping up of excess United States dollars in order to maintain Canada's own position in the exchange market? What is contemplated precisely so far as Canada is concerned?

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): The hon. gentleman, I and the Leader of the Opposition talked about reserves before. The position of Canada at the moment in the current situation is to maintain the floating of the Canadian dollar. The exchange fund will continue to intervene in order to preserve an orderly market.

CANADIAN DOLLAR EXCHANGE LEVEL—GOVERNMENT POSITION RESPECTING UNITED STATES POLICY

Mr. Speaker: Is the hon. member for Compton rising on a supplementary?

Mr. Henry Latulippe (Compton): Yes, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Speaker: Order. I shall allow the hon. member to put his questions, after which I shall recognize the hon. member for Oshawa-Whitby for a supplementary, and then we shall return to this subject later on.

Mr. Latulippe: Mr. Speaker, my question is for the hon. Minister of Finance.

Could he tell us whether Canada will be in a position to float its dollar or whether the decision in this respect will depend on the policy of the United States or of the international organization?

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): I am sorry, Mr. Speaker, but I did not quite get the hon. member's question.

Mr. Latulippe: I shall put my question once more, Mr. Speaker.

I am asking the minister whether Canada will be in a position to float its dollar or whether the decision will be left to United States or world organization policy?

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): Mr. Speaker, we have our own economic policy and at present, as I told the hon. member for Edmonton West, we are continuing to float the Canadian dollar.

CANADA-UNITED STATES AUTO PACT—POSITION OF DISCUSSIONS—INVESTMENT BY INDUSTRY IN CANADA

Mr. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa-Whitby): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce. In view of the fact that the specific item of trade that has been of most concern to the United States in recent months has been the Canada-United States automotive agreement, is the minister in a position to tell us what has happened in terms of discussion of that agreement up to this point?

Hon. Alastair Gillespie (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): Mr. Speaker, that particular so-called irritant was one of several that were discussed on an earlier occasion. There have not been any discussions with respect to that particular item in recent months.

Mr. Broadbent: In view of the concern being expressed at present in Canada by both the parts sector of the industry and the assembly plant sector concerning investment decisions that are now being made in that industry, the concern being that all the investment now will take place on the American side of the border for future production, would the minister assure the House that he will obtain assurances from the Canadian side of that industry that we will get our fair share of future investment in the automotive industry during the next 12 months?

Mr. Gillespie: Any discussion with respect to the benefits of the automotive pact or its reconsideration or revision must, in our view, provide significant benefits for Canada.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The Chair will recognize the hon. member for Prince Edward-Hastings on a last supplementary question on this subject

EFFECT OF POSSIBLE DEVALUATION OF UNITED STATES DOLLAR ON CANADIAN DOLLAR

Hon. George Hees (Prince Edward-Hastings): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Finance. Because it has been widely rumoured during the weekend that the United States dollar will be devalued because of that country's trading difficulties with West Germany and Japan in particular, does the government of Canada feel that this will affect adversely the Canadian dollar as opposed to the U.S. dollar?

Hon. John N. Turner (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, the hon. gentleman himself admits that it is still a rumour and therefore the question is hypothetical.

REFERENCE OF REPORT OF COMMISSIONER TO HOUSE COMMITTEE

Mr. Adrien Lambert (Bellechasse): Mr. Speaker, I should like to put a question to the minister responsible for the application of the Official Languages Act.

In view of the importance of the second annual report of the official languages commissioner, does the minister intend to refer it to a house committee or will he take steps to implement the recommendations of the commissioner?

Hon. James Hugh Faulkner (Secretary of State): Mr. Speaker, it is on my prescribed reading list. It is being studied by the department, and I would suggest that all Members of Parliament would be interested in reading that document.

GRAIN

PROVISION BY RAILWAYS OF SUFFICIENT CARS FOR MOVEMENT—SYSTEM OF ALLOCATION

Mr. Norval Horner (Battleford-Kindersley): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the minister responsible for the Wheat Board. Would the minister explain, or at least investigate, the problem in Saskatchewan where many producers have been unable to deliver quotas for months because many points are plugged while other points are less than half filled and there is still lots of room? Many of these quotas are election quotas that were imposed last September.

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister of Justice): Mr. Speaker, individual situations will be looked into, including some brought to my attention by a telegram this morning. The Canadian Wheat Board is making every effort to assign cars to the blocks where the congestion is most serious. Of course, a good deal of the allocation of cars within blocks is in the hands of the elevator companies rather than the Wheat Board under the rules of the block shipment system. Movement of grain is going along rapidly, but in certain places there will be some congestion until the fullest movement begins with the opening of navigation to the east.

Mr. Horner (Battleford-Kindersley): Would the minister not agree that the problem seems to lie in the way boxcars are allocated to the blocks? For part of the year the allocation is based on space available in the elevators. If this allocation is fair for part of the year, why is it not fair for the whole year? Should boxcars not be allocated all year according to space available?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The supplementary is perhaps couched in argumentative language, but possibly the minister might be allowed to reply.

Mr. Lang: Mr. Speaker, certain producers certainly were concerned about the question of whether or not the Bracken formula was creating some of the congestion problems. We conducted a thorough investigation of the situation only to find that the amount of space available was fairly equal among the various elevator companies with the Bracken formula operating. Further, we asked the Canadian Wheat Board to try to ensure that some shifting of cars from non-congested blocks to congested blocks could occur at the request of the elevator companies. In other words, in assessing the situation we found that since congestion was evenly spread among the elevator companies it was not a matter of the sharing of the business which was creating the problem at individual points.

Mr. A. P. Gleave (Saskatoon-Biggar): Mr. Speaker, I would like to direct a question to the minister in charge of the Wheat Board. Since this is a chronic condition that has existed for some time, will he meet with the Canadian Transport Commission and the Canadian Wheat Board to get down to cases, find out what the problem is and arrive at a solution?

Mr. Lang: Mr. Speaker, the hon. member is well aware that I had just that kind of meeting with the Canadian Wheat Board, not just days ago but weeks ago, and got their agreement to attempt to move allocations of shipping orders to those areas where congestion was most serious. I should emphasize, as I have said before in the House, that it was the Wheat Board's decision to raise quotas rather more rapidly than I would have liked in the fall and early winter that gave rise to the possibility of congestion which will not be relieved until the very rapid movement that occurs in the spring period begins. I should point out that the movement at the present time is in fact more rapid than in any other year for the winter months, but obviously not as much grain moves while Thunder Bay is frozen so it will be April before we see very rapid movement again.

CONTINGENCY PLANS TO CONTROL INCREASE IN SHELTER COSTS

Mr. Don Blenkarn (Peel South): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the Minister of Finance. In light of the fact that shelter prices rose .7 per cent last month and increased over the last 12 months by 6.4 per cent, would the minister advise the House whether the government has designed any contingency plans to abate shelter price increases?

Hon. John N. Turner (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, the plans which the Prime Minister has been revealing to the House about the subject of price and wage controls are in general terms.

Mr. Blenkarn: In light of the fact that over-all fiscal and monetary policy has an immense effect on shelter costs, has the government any target for 1973 with respect to the limits to which shelter costs will be allowed to rise?

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): Mr. Speaker, I think my colleague, the Minister of State for Urban Affairs, already answered that last week so far as CMHC is concerned. If shelter were to be dealt with specifically, it might well fall under provincial jurisdiction.

CHARGES AGAINST ALBERTA FARMERS RESPECTING WHEAT AND RAPESEED QUOTAS

Mr. Eldon M. Woolliams (Calgary North): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the Minister of Justice. He may answer it either as Minister of Justice or as the minister in charge of the Wheat Board. Is he aware that in one community alone in the province of Alberta 40 farmers have been charged with violations of the Wheat Board regulations in connection with wheat quotas, and a number have been charged with violations of the rapeseed quotas? Further, is he prepared to hold the charges in reference to rapeseed in abeyance until the Supreme Court has ruled in that regard? Also, will he advise the House whether any of the farmers received notice prior to being charged under these regulations, which I may say are numerous?

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister of Justice): Mr. Speaker, that question was extremely broad in its scope, and I would have to ask the hon. member to give me an indication of the specific charges to which he is referring. Obviously such charges are laid from time to time by the Wheat Board in an attempt to enforce its act and regulations in order to ensure orderly marketing and fair delivery opportunities for farmers across the prairie region. I would want to look into the specific second part of the hon. member's question. I assume counsel for the defence and counsel for the Wheat Board have that well in mind.

Mr. Woolliams: The charges were laid in the Bentley-Red Deer district and I am advised by the farmers, although I have not had a chance to check this, that there may be 100 or more charges pending in Alberta. I would ask the minister to look into this in light of the fact that the regulations are numerous and the farmers have been experiencing marketing difficulties. Will he ascertain whether the charges have arisen because of marketing difficulties, and will he report to the House?

Mr. Lang: I will certainly look into it. I appreciate the specific information given by the hon. member. There certainly have been more infractions in the province of Alberta this year than in any other province, particularly in relation to rapeseed. I was not specifically aware of the situation in the Red Deer area and the charges there to which the hon. member refers, but I will be glad to look into the matter.

Mr. Woolliams: In light of the fact the minister says there have been more violations in Alberta than in any other province, would he or his department exercise the same kind of scrutiny and diligence with respect to breaches of the regulations in other provinces, particularly around Humboldt and Saskatoon? Further, does he find any conflict between being the Minister of Justice and the minister in charge of the Wheat Board?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

USE OF HEROIN—REQUEST FOR TABLING OF MEMORANDUM AND DOCUMENTS PRESENTED TO CABINET—ACTION TO MEET PROBLEM

Mr. Lorne Nystrom (Yorkton-Melville): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of National Health and Welfare. In view of the shocking revelation over the weekend that a memorandum and documents were presented to the cabinet last April warning that the use of heroin was increasing at a terrifying rate of perhaps 2,000 per cent over the past five years and that the cabinet should take immediate action, would the minister undertake to table those documents and memorandum in the House?

[Translation]

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, I am sure the hon. member is very familiar with the rules in this regard and I do not foresee that those documents if they exist, will be tabled.

[English]

Mr. Nystrom: In view of the revelation that the number of heroin addicts increased from about 500 to 10,000, can the minister say what action was taken, and can he also say what action the department is planning now to meet this grave social problem?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member will appreciate that at least the first part of his supplementary is not in order.

[Translation]

Mr. Lalonde: Mr. Speaker, the first part of the question deals with an opinion expressed in a newspaper: I have no comments to make. In answer to the second part, I shall be pleased to explain in detail what the department has done in this field as soon as the occasion arises, either in the House or before the appropriate committee of the House.

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of National Health and Welfare): I have not been consulted, Mr. Speaker.

NATIONAL DEFENCE

PAY OF CANADIAN ARMED FORCES PERSONNEL ON VIET NAM SUPERVISORY COMMISSION

Mr. Peter Reilly (Ottawa West): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the Minister of National Defence. In light of the fact the government acknowledged some time ago that Canadian military personnel in Viet Nam would be facing a dangerous situation, can he tell the House whether or not it is true that a married man, with children, who belongs to the Canadian Armed Forces, receives between $300 and $400 a month less than his counterpart in External Affairs, and can he justify this, if true?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member knows that a question cannot be asked in those terms. A minister cannot be asked to confirm or deny a statement made outside the House or made in the press. The hon. member should ask the question directly.

Mr. Reilly: I will ask the minister then whether it is true that a member of the armed forces who is married, with children, receives $300 to $400 less than his counterpart from the Department of External Affairs and how the minister can justify this?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I doubt that the hon. member has succeeded in getting around the procedural difficulties of the first question. Perhaps he might have a chance later to try a second time to rephrase the question. I have the impression it would be somewhat difficult to make that question acceptable within the rules of the House. The hon. member might like to rephrase the question. I want to be fair to him.

Mr. Reilly: Does the minister intend to bring into line the extra pay accorded to members of the armed forces serving in Viet Nam with the salary scale now paid to men in equivalent circumstances working for the Department of External Affairs?

Hon. James Richardson (Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, I have stated in the House that members of the armed forces in Viet Nam receive foreign service pay of $150 a month for single men and up to $180 a month for married men in addition to regular pay and allowances. There are some differences in the payments made to personnel of the Department of External Affairs but we are still on the 60-day basis and these arrangements have not yet been finalized.

Mr. Reilly: Is any change in view in the circumstances of these military personnel which would bring their additional foreign service pay into line with that paid to External Affairs officials in the same circumstances?

Mr. Richardson: Mr. Speaker, I shall be discussing this with my colleague, the Secretary of State for External Affairs, and with the government.

POSSIBLE IMPOSITION BY UNITED STATES OF IMPORT SURCHARGE IN LIGHT OF DOLLAR DIFFICULTIES—DISCUSSION WITH SECRETARY OF TREASURY

Is view of the fact it is obvious that the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce has not taken any special action with regard to this difficulty, may I ask whether the Minister of Finance discussed with the Secretary of the Treasury the question of any surtax that the United States might impose upon its trading partners and did the minister make any representations to him on this subject?

Hon. John N. Turner (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, the Secretary of the Treasury and I agreed that the purpose of the conversation was to keep Canada informed on American intentions and that for the moment the substance of the conversation should remain confidential.

PENITENTIARIES

Mr. Sean O'Sullivan (Hamilton-Wentworth): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Solicitor General. As his department has had five months to study the report on the disturbance at Kingston penitentiary which occurred about two years ago, has the minister decided whether the report can now or will be made public? If so, when may we expect it? If not, will he inform us why?

Hon. Warren Allmand (Solicitor General): Mr. Speaker, we hope to make an announcement on that report soon. I might add that I have only been looking at it for about two months.

Mr. O'Sullivan: Can the minister advise the House whether the report has been referred to penitentiary officials at Kingston with recommendations for action on the commission's findings?

Mr. Allmand: Not explicitly, Mr. Speaker, although on some points the penitentiary officials have already taken action, but not as a result of the report.

PUBLIC SERVICE

RECONSIDERATION OF RAISING OR REMOVING CEILING ON ANNUAL ESCALATION OF PENSIONS

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the President of the Treasury Board. In view of the information placed on today's Hansard in response to my question No. 10 on the order paper that the credit balance in the supplementary retirement benefits account is growing by leaps and bounds, will the minister now reactivate consideration and discussion with respect to raising or removing the ceiling on the annual escalation of pensions of retired public servants and others who are in related categories?

Hon. C. M. Drury (President of the Treasury Board): Mr. Speaker, I have not seen the answer to which the hon. gentleman refers, but I have an idea that at the bottom of that answer is a note to the effect that the amounts in the account are those computed by the actuaries as being required to meet but no more, current and future obligations.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): I rise on a point of order, Mr. Speaker. The minister must be referring to some other document because there is no such footnote on this one. Perhaps he will look at the matter and consider my question.

NATIONAL CAPITAL COMMISSION

POSSIBLE INVESTIGATION OF ROLE AND POWERS

Mr. Walter Baker (Grenville-Carleton): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the Minister of State for Urban Affairs whether the government has made any decision with respect to the investigation of the role and powers of the National Capital Commission which was referred to and agreed to be necessary by the chairman of that commission and its general manager late last week?

Hon. Ron Basford (Minister of State for Urban Affairs): Mr. Speaker, the role of the National Capital Commission is determined by the National Capital Commission Act. Since I became minister a year ago I have said that it seemed to me it would be desirable, following the recommendations of the constitutional committee, to have a parliamentary committee examine the role and operations of the National Capital Commission. That was not possible in the last session of parliament and, although I would welcome discussion amongst the House leaders, I suspect it would not be possible this spring.

PICKERING TOWNSHIP SITE—INDEPENDENT STUDY—DISPOSAL OF EXPROPRIATED LAND IF PROJECT NOT PROCEEDED WITH

Mr. Ron Atkey (St. Paul's): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Transport. Since the minister's announcement of the Pickering airport decision almost two weeks ago, when he undertook to meet immediately with leaders of the various levels of government to set up an independent study, has he met with the Premier of Ontario and municipal government leaders to get the study under way and, if not, when does he intend to do so?

[Translation]

Hon. Jean Marchand (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I have not met the Premier of Ontario. I think that I will meet the Ontario minister responsible for transport and airports. We are now consulting at the senior official level in order to agree as to those who will be called to sit on the board that has been referred to.

[English]

Mr. Atkey: If the study to which the minister has referred indicates massive public opposition to the airport and it is cancelled, as the minister apparently suggests is possible, what does the government intend to do with the 18,000 acres of land already expropriated?

Mr. Marchand (Langelier): I think I shall wait, Mr. Speaker, until we have the results of the board examination.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

RELEASE OF CANADIAN CIVILIANS HELD IN NORTH VIET NAM—PAYMENT OF TRANSPORTATION COSTS

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prince Albert): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Secretary of State for External Affairs. I join with him in appreciation of the fact that the exchange of prisoners of war with North Viet Nam is taking place. However, nothing has been said yet concerning the two Canadians. I would ask the minister whether he has any information with respect to their possible evacuation from North Viet Nam and return to Canada?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I join with the right hon. gentleman in welcoming the beginning of the movement of prisoners of war to their homelands. We have not yet been able to get definite information about the time of the release of Mr. Cayer and Mr. Oppel. We know they are safe and we know they are about to be released but we have not been able to get information as to the exact time of their release. We have made arrangements to transport them home, which I am sure would be the wish of all members of the House, and we have been in touch with their families on a daily basis.

Mr. Diefenbaker: With particular reference to the release of Mr. Oppel, I am informed that his family was told they would have to pay the cost of transportation. That is the instruction they got within the last couple of days. I suggest that such a niggardly policy would not be approved by the minister as Mr. Oppel was actually a prisoner of war as was the other man, and they should receive the same treatment as the prisoners of war.

Mr. Sharp: Mr. Speaker, I should like to reassure the right hon. gentleman that my instructions are that the public should pay the expense of the return of these two Canadians.

[Later:]

Mr. Diefenbaker: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a question of privilege. A moment ago I asked a question. I do not ask questions without foundation.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Diefenbaker: The indication of the answer given by the minister was that I was mistaken. I have the letter here from the father of Mr. Oppel. It is dated the seventh of this month. I quote from the letter:

> My son is alive and I hope will soon be home. Our External Department told us that the Americans may bring him as far as their base in the Philippines and then that the Canadians would take over but my son would have to pay his way.

He goes on to make some further observations which I would not want to read.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

Mr. Sharp: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a question of privilege. I wish to reiterate what I said, that I gave instructions that the expenses were to be paid. Perhaps by the time he had this information, my instructions had not been conveyed.

I was not questioning the word of the right hon. gentleman.

AIR TRANSPORT

ADVANCE BOOKING CHARTER REGULATIONS—REQUEST FOR STATEMENT ON RATES SET

Mr. John Harney (Scarborough West): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Transport and relates to a question I asked him on Friday, February 9, with regard to the advance booking charter rates. His answer then was to the effect that these rates had been published by the Canadian Transport Commission on February 1. In view of the fact there have been subsequent reports to the effect that Air Canada offices are informing travellers that these rates have not been set and that Canadian Pacific as well as Air Canada officials have stated that these rates have not been set, will the minister make a statement to this House to the effect that the rates have indeed been set and also cite these rates to avoid and obviate the very great confusion that now exists in the minds of the air travelling public?

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Hon. Jean Marchand (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, the Canadian carriers filed applications with the board. If my memory is right, that was on January 16, and the commission gave its approval on February 1. They now have to enter into a contract with the charterer and come back before the commission before everything is settled. Since then, about 11 foreign carriers have made applications to the board and the board will probably make a decision very soon. Therefore you have the Canadian carriers for which the rates have been established and approved, and the foreign carriers for which the rates have not yet been approved.

Mr. Harney: Could the Minister of Transport clarify the situation further for the House in view of the fact that according to the regulations published earlier this year controlling advance booking charters there is a floor below which foreign carriers may not charge and that floor is clearly related to the prices or tariffs filed on behalf of Canadian carriers with the Canadian Transport Commission which, as far as I can understand, does not approve but simply receives applications for tariffs?

Mr. Marchand (Langelier): Mr. Speaker, I think the commission has approved the contract. As far as the prices are concerned, I think they will be about the same as those in force last year. If the hon. member wants an example, Toronto to London last year was $235. Now it will be $240 or something like that.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member will be recognized for one last supplementary, but before we reach the end of the question period the Chair is anxious to recognize some members in the back row who have been waiting for a chance to ask questions.

Mr. Harney: Mr. Speaker, considering that there is some "Marchandage" with relation to the prices charged by carriers, will the minister inform the House whether he has received a communication from the Consumers Association of Canada urging a thorough investigation of the costs involved in charter services offered by Canadian carriers to ensure that prices charged reflect those costs and do not allow excessive profits to carriers at the expense of the Canadian public?

Mr. Marchand (Langelier): Mr. Speaker, I think I said last week that, as minister, I had not received any representations, but I know that the Canadian Transport Commission did receive some representations.

ROYAL VISIT

REQUEST THAT PRIME MINISTER RECOMMEND THAT THE QUEEN INCLUDE FORT MACLEOD IN ITINERARY

Mr. Ken Hurlburt (Lethbridge): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Prime Minister. On January 19 I asked my first question in the House, at which time the Prime Minister answered by saying that a communiqué would be sent to Her Majesty the Queen requesting her to place Fort MacLeod on her itinerary. Has this been done and, if not, why not?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, the requests of Fort MacLeod and, indeed, Edmonton have been discussed by Premier Lougheed and myself. The hon. member's representations have been taken into account. The upshot is that the Palace feels it really would be impossible in the one short day that will be spent in Alberta in order to celebrate the centennial of the RCMP to meet every request for her presence in every part of that province. In discussion with the premier's office, the conclusion was reached that Calgary would be the best place for the Queen to assist in the celebration of the RCMP centennial. I am sure the Palace regrets that Her Majesty cannot spend more time out west, but the House will recall that the first decision was to celebrate the centennial in Ottawa. It was after my talks with Her Majesty in December that she agreed to spend one day in Saskatchewan and one in Alberta.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Hurlburt: I wish to ask the Prime Minister whether a communiqué to Her Majesty did leave his office on January 19 or on any date until now?

Mr. Trudeau: Mr. Speaker, I have not got the exact dates of correspondence between my office and Buckingham Palace. If the hon. member is wondering whether his own request to me was communicated to Her Majesty, the answer is no, because the question of Fort MacLeod had already been discussed and a solution had been arrived at to the effect that it would not be possible or desirable to have the whole day which is allocated to Alberta spent in Fort MacLeod, and a choice had to be made.

Oral Questions

PENITENTIARIES

FAILURE OF JOHN CHARRON TO RETURN TO COLLINS BAY FOLLOWING RELEASE ON ONE-DAY PASS—RECONSIDERATION OF PAROLE POLICY

Mr. Reg Stackhouse (Scarborough East): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the Solicitor General with reference to John Charron, a prisoner at the Collins Bay farm annex who, while serving six years for parole violation, armed robbery, attempted robbery and possession of a sawed-off shotgun, did not return Sunday night from a day long pass. What are the minister's department or other authorities doing to apprehend this prisoner?

Mr. Baker: Probably nothing.

Hon. Warren Allmand (Solicitor General): Mr. Speaker, on Sunday, February 4, Mr. John Charron was granted a one-day pass to visit a couple. He was to leave at nine o'clock in the morning and return at eleven o'clock in the evening. The hon. member is correct; he did not return. Since that time the police have been informed and an information has been laid, but we have not been able to find him yet.

Mr. Stackhouse: In light of this conduct by a person who already had a record of parole violation, is the minister willing to reconsider the policy of his department with regard to giving passes to this kind of person?

Mr. Allmand: Mr. Speaker, it was announced in the Speech from the Throne and I also answered questions in the House that we are reconsidering the entire question of parole and temporary absence.

Mr. Erik Nielsen (Yukon): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question for the Solicitor General. In view of the minister's repeated public statements outside and inside the House concerning the intention of his departmental officials and himself to bring about reform in the bail measures now available to prisoners, when is it his intention to make a clearcut definitive statement to the House with respect to the tightening up of these very loose measures now in effect?

Mr. Allmand: Mr. Speaker, I never made any mention about bail. However, with regard to parole and temporary absence I explained to the House that I received the task force report just before Christmas. It is a rather lengthy report. We are analysing the report now and I hope to have some information for the House in the near future.

AGRICULTURE

FRUIT AND VEGETABLES

Mr. G. H. Whittaker (Okanagan Boundary): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Agriculture. Will the minister in his best "Whelanese" tell the House why he has never mentioned fruit or vegetables in all his speeches sent to my office or in the speech he made in the House?

[Mr. Trudeau.]

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

• (1500)

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I have some doubts as to the acceptability of the hon. member's question. I think this would be an appropriate moment, on this happy note, to call orders of the day.

Is the hon. member for Kingston and The Islands rising on a point of order?

Miss Flora MacDonald (Kingston and The Islands): Yes, Mr. Speaker. I would have done this during the question period had I been able to catch your eye. I should like to take this opportunity to welcome back to the House the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

BUSINESS OF SUPPLY

SUPPLEMENTARY ESTIMATES (A), 1972-73—MOTIONS FOR CONCURRENCE IN VOTES 35a, 40a, 45a—DEPARTMENT OF NATIONAL HEALTH AND WELFARE

The House resumed, from Friday, February 9, consideration of the motion of Mr. Drury:

That vote 35a, in the amount of $850,000 of the Department of National Health and Welfare for income security and social assistance—Operating expenditures in supplementary estimates (A) for the fiscal year ending March 31, 1973, be concurred in.

That vote 40a, in the amount of $2,685,000 of the Department of National Health and Welfare for income security and social assistance—Contributions in supplementary estimates (A) for the fiscal year ending March 31, 1973, be concurred in.

That vote 45a, in the amount of $1,000,000 of the Department of National Health and Welfare for fitness and amateur sport—Operating expenditures in supplementary estimates (A) for the fiscal year ending March 31, 1973, be concurred in.

Mr. Henry Latulippe (Compton): Mr. Speaker, I was saying last Friday that we were experiencing a national economic lack of balance, that we were living gloomy days and had few solutions to offer. I was commenting on vote 45a in the amount of $1,000,000 for fitness and amateur sport.

Mr. Speaker, I am not against amateur sport but we must live before having a good time.

Many families in Canada are at grips with financial problems and yet they are also entitled to live. One practices sports when one can afford it and has time for it, but we can no longer afford to spend so much money to develop amateur sports and thus deprive families of what they need.

All hon. members should try to answer the following question: Why are so many older persons so deprived, why have 65 years of their working life of sacrifices and devotion not enabled them to save enough money to enjoy a decent life and why are most of them compelled to depend only on public charity?

Is it not enough to convince us that we must condemn the present system which has kept for itself their property. Surely their dependents did not inherit these assets for all they have inherited is a lot of debts and mortgages.

Mr. Speaker, government debts now exceed our citizens' ability to pay. How logical it is that so many members of Parliament pretend to be experts! Do they not care to know why there is so much poverty, unemployment, so many debts and bankruptcies? Once more, I suggest that when we are at grips with such economic unbalance, amateur sports should be let aside.

Last Friday, when the House adjourned, I was saying that we should identify the most urgent needs, those which can give to the Canadian economy the appropriate boost to meet essential needs. I suggest that our efforts in the economic and social areas should be primarily based on family, for this is where basic needs are to be found. The family needs clothes, housing, furniture, schools, hospitals, drugstores, teachers, doctors, fuel, policemen, city councils, restaurants, cars, hotels and household help. Finally, one can say beyond a doubt that it is the greatest consumer, that it contributes most to the general trend of the economy. It is also the most forgotten in the minds of our leaders, the most heavily taxed. Generally, it has only one salary, that of the father, to provide food, clothing and shelter to one or several persons despite the fact that its salary is being eaten away by taxes of all sorts.

Families are without the necessary purchasing power and they are the ones which suffer most from the increase in the cost of living; they are the ones which are the hardest hit by economic imbalance and the nonsense in the present diabolical system.

Yet it is the family which is the foundation of society, which builds and maintains it. It has to carry the major part of the social and economic responsibilities, and we also rely on it to upgrade and continue the species.

Mr. Speaker, the prerogatives and rights of the family are being denied consideration; its existence is nearly being denied. You have to be young before you get old. Family allowances were set up in 1944-45. Their rate has remained the same while all other sectors of society have kept pace with the increase in the cost of living. Old age pensions followed an upward pattern but family allowances which stood at $6 to $8 in 1944-45 remain at the same level today while the cost of living increased by over 100 per cent.

I am not against increasing old age security pensions, Mr. Speaker. In fact, I support all increases. However, I am opposed to increases which are without positive effects, which lead to nothing, which only serve to increase the cost of living which is going up continuously.

Mr. Speaker, the question is whether it is worthwhile to increase family allowances and old age security pensions before other ways are explored for giving the economy the upsurge it needs.

Mr. Speaker, national production approximated to $12 billion in 1944. In 1973, it will amount to $114 billion of which $8 billion will be derived from personal income tax and $40 billion from corporate taxation.

On the other hand, family allowances still being down at only $6.00 and $8.00 in 1973, no wonder that we are witnessing an unprecedented decrease in own birth rate while w e should be having a greater family expansion. Coupled with this economic expansion, there is a decrease in the number of children. We are closing our eyes on these tragic events and we are looking for consumers abroad. This is the worst administrative mistake ever made by our governing bodies.

With such a national production, Canadians should enjoy renewed prosperity. And yet, all we have is unemployment, poverty and inflation which indicate that our off-centred national economy is still affecting the whole population.

Mr. Speaker, it is only by restoring an economic equilibrium between people, families and companies that poverty, unemployment and inflation will be eliminated.

Only the government is capable of quickly restoring and maintaining the economic stability which would rub out poverty, unemployment and inflation for the benefit of all Canadians provided that specific and efficient decisions are taken.

However qualified they may be, no civil servants, no university professors, no professional bodies, no trade unions, no federal or provincial economic councils, no religious groups, be they Roman Catholic or Protestant, no ethnic groups, whether English, French or whatever you like, no political parties, no party bagmen, no bank or company presidents or directors, are empowered to pass legislation for the Canadian Parliament. The power to vote is the exclusive privilege of the 264 members of Parliament, a privilege which they must exercise on behalf of 22 million Canadians.

It is therefore in 1973 that this problem should be solved by the government. If the constitution, monetary, economic and political systems enable the people of Canada to achieve a national production of $114 billion i.e. $5,000 per inhabitant or an average of $25,000 per family of five, these same institutions should also enable us to accomplish an equitable sharing among the 22 million citizens living in 6 million homes, residences or slums, throughout our country.

All hon. members, the 30 ministers, the right hon. Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) and primarily the Minister of Finance (Mr. Turner), together with the President of the Treasury Board (Mr. Drury) and the leaders of the three opposition parties are the only Canadians responsible for restoring national balance. But how should the government go about this? That is the great question.

I have before me, Mr. Speaker, the findings of the four major commissions of inquiry created over the past decade on banks, taxation, poverty and the status of women in Canada. There is no need for further study. Everything has all been said and studied; every recommendation has beem made. There is nothing left but legislating. We know exactly what the present situation is, we know the logical evolution of technology and we have an inspiring outlook on immediate possibilities. In short, we have all the required powers to act in a positive way.

First of all let us think of children and teenagers. Let us at least grant $1 a day for children and $2 a day for teenagers. Let us enable this class of citizens to enjoy an annual guaranteed income so that they may contribute to an adequate purchasing power. This will maintain the economic equilibrium. In fact, this category of citizens should have priority over all others.

The hon. Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Lalonde) said in his speech that efforts should be made to establish income security programs which would attain objectives within the related interdependence of the tax system itself.

He also said that it is important to recognize that there are several aspects to the redistribution of income in Canada and that social security legislation must be envisaged in the overall system of tax legislation. He said at the same time that if Canada wants to attain its objectives in social security better ways to set up components must be found. Finally he said we must take into account the virtuality of a conflict between, on the one hand, the natural reluctance of Canadians in the face of the rising level of taxation and, on the other, the concern the governments should feel in the name of all Canadians to increase assistance to the underprivileged.

Nothing can be done without the necessary resources and we have not yet discovered a magic wand or an alchemy formula. So many complicated words to say that much is wanted but that the means are lacking. Still more time is required to explain that the Canadian taxes will have to be increased.

A substantial rise in old age security pensions has been promised, not only a symbolic increase. But there is never any mention of family allowances which are still at the 1944-45 level when that plan became effective.

The minister and the political parties have completely ignored family allowances in the list of the various appropriate programs worked out by the Canadians aware of their responsibility toward their fellow-citizens unable to work.

Mr. Speaker, why should we have one law for the elderly and another for the young? In the course of his life, each individual experiences a basic need for breathing, eating, sleeping and clothing. Therefore, why do the same hon. members vote pensions for the aged with an escalation clause related to the cost of living, and do they fail to follow the same course as concerns family allowances?

Why do the same hon. members vote themselves higher salaries up to $26,000 per annum, to take into account the cost of living, while, at the same time, refusing to do the same with respect to family allowances, to young people quite unable to earn a living?

The minister himself stated that wages generally do not take into account family responsibilities.

Mr. Speaker, I would therefore suggest that family allowances, under the legislation now in force, be increased for all children up to the age of 18 under the guaranteed income program.

Since 1944 Canadian production has increased by $102 billion, and none the less there is not enough money for Canadian children. There is money for everyone. Children suffer from hunger and cold and their parents are ashamed of such a situation.

If we find means to increase the cost of living, we must also find means to provide a decent living for Canadian families. Family allowance should have increased at the same pace as old age security benefits, as salaries of members of Parliament and senators, as should have kept pace with increases in all sectors of the economy. Family allowances alone have not gone up.

I am not against the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles) when he strongly advocates that old age pensions be increased. However, I would ask him to be kind enough to support us, to remember the Canadian families because, at the present time, their needs are greater than those of the aged. The children ask the people of Canada to treat them at least as well as all the other institutions or sectors of our economy.

Mr. Speaker, we owe a lot to families. We owe them justice and some security. It is good to give the old some security but if we do not allow Canadians to renew our society through births, if we commit all possible errors and work against the family, the time will soon come when there will be neither young nor old people. There will be no need for old age pensions or family allowances because society will have disappeared.

Mr. Speaker, we must face up to our responsibilities and open our eyes and all together we should recognize the injustice that we have done to the family in opposition to the normal development of the Canadian people. At present, our legislation, all the restrictions and the economic worries are prompting parents not to have any more children.

This, Mr. Speaker, is where we stand; we are witnessing the near-complete disappearance of the Canadian or Christian civilization.

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Motion agreed to.

Mr. MacEachen (for Mr. Drury) thereupon moved for leave to introduce Bill No. C-141, for granting to Her Majesty certain sums of money for the Public Service for the financial year ending the 31st March, 1973.

Motion agreed to and bill read the first time.

Mr. Speaker: When shall the said bill be read a second time?

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, I believe there is agreement that the bill be read a second time now. May I ask if it has been printed, and can it be distributed?

Mr. Speaker: My advice is that copies are available at this time, or will be available shortly. However, inquiries are being made to confirm this.

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (for Mr. Drury) moved that Bill C-141, for granting to Her Majesty certain sums of money for the Public Service of the financial year ending 31st March, 1973, be read a second time and referred to the Committee of Supply.

Hon. Robert L. Stanfield (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I rise not to oppose the motion but in order to make a few comments of a very non-partisan and non-controversial nature in respect of the bill, particularly with regard to two aspects relating to unemployment, the winter works and LIP programs which were designed to reduce unemployment. Certainly, as I say, I do not propose to oppose the measures that are put forward so far as the winter works program is concerned. I have consistently maintained that in a country such as Canada there is a need for special programs relating to employment in winter in an effort to mitigate to some extent the amount of unemployment that ordinarily develops within Canada as a result of winter. Of course, the winter works program was originally inaugurated under the government of my friend, the right hon. member for Prince Albert (Mr. Diefenbaker). I must say, in connection with the supplementary estimates on this item that the announcement of December, I believe it was or late in November, by the government that it would embark on a program of winter works did surprise me somewhat in view of the very harsh condemnation of a winter works program for Canada by this government over a period of at least some two or three years.

Second, I must comment that this announcement came extraordinarily late in order to be as effective as it might have been for this winter following a rather constant position taken by the government that it would not involve itself in any program this winter. So I can only conclude that the announcement of the program was the result of some kind of conversion and was really not induced by conviction. Third, in passing I must comment that, since it covers some three years, the method of introducing this program through the supplementary estimates seems to be a rather strange proceeding. Above all, however, I wish to emphasize as firmly as I can in this Chamber that the winter works program and the supplementary funds voted for the LIP programs are, of course, no substitute for an adequate level of employment in Canada based on an annual rate and annual considerations. These programs are only supplementary to offset seasonal effects and seasonal unemployment, but in no way constitute a substitute for an adequate program for the development of employment opportunities in this country.

These items relating to the winter works program and supplementary amounts for LIP are here before us now because of the inadequacy of the budget of last May. They are here before us at this time because the budget of last May failed to generate enough growth in our economy and failed to encourage enough development of employment. I think most of us agree that in Canada most jobs are created in the private sector. Indeed, I think the Minister of Finance (Mr. Turner) during his budget comments of last May emphasized this and emphasized that his efforts were directed toward increasing employment in the private sector through direct encouragement to certain types of industrial investment in Canada. Hence we had the proposed reductions in corporate taxation for manufacturing and processing operations as well as fast write-offs in respect of new equipment purchased. But we emphasized at that time that this was not an adequate stimulation of the economy and that these measures would not have the effect of generating the rate of growth the minister was talking about, even the 6 per cent or 6½ per cent which in the circumstances would not have had any marked effect on the rate of employment or unemployment in this country.

We emphasized that this was a very inadequate proposal to place before this House of Commons at that time, if it was really designed or intended to generate the rate of growth required in order to cut down the terrible rate of unemployment that existed. There was some suggestion that the personal income tax cuts we were demanding prior to that time, at budget time and ever since, were inflationary. I do not think too many people would now argue that such is the case in the existing context of inflation. Indeed, the Economic Council of Canada in its recent report indicates that if personal income tax cuts are not introduced, in certain circumstances this might very well have an inflationary effect. This has been our argument. I do not wish to spend too much time on this aspect this afternoon, because in about a week's time we will have an opportunity for a general debate. I simply wish to make the point that these estimates are before us today. One may call them a band-aid or whatever may seem appropriate, but they are here because of the inadequacy of the budget which the Minister of Finance presented to this House last May.

It must be said that the budget that was adopted, despite our objection and despite the fact that we on this side of the House voted against it, constituted a drag on the economy through the summer, the fall and so far through the winter because it has generated a much higher degree of revenue for the government as a result of the tax schedules in the so-called tax reform bill passed in late 1971, which of course has a schedule of tax brackets much more productive in terms of revenue for the government as people move up the income scale than the old brackets. So, partly as a result of the new tax schedules adopted, and particularly because of the high rate of inflation we have had through 1972 since the budget, this government has been taking in money hand over fist.

There has been some suggestion by the Minister of Finance that these increased revenues are due to the rate of growth of the economy, but I point out that the economy has grown at a substantially slower rate than the Minister of Finance projected in his budget when he gave his projection of estimated revenue. The minister projected a growth of 6¼ per cent whereas it looks now like something in the order of 5 per cent or 5½ per cent. The President of the Treasury Board suggests that that is not the case. However, it will be nearer 5½ per cent than 6¼ per cent. The Minister of Finance will fall one per cent beneath his forecast in respect of the growth in the gross national product.

So my point is, that the extra money that the government is taking in is not because the growth rates are exceeding the target of the government. In fact, the growth rates are well below the prediction of the government, well below the figure upon which it based its estimates of revenue at the time of the budget. I would point out also that the rate of growth in capital investment has been a disappointment. The budget measures presented last May have not generated a rapid growth in industrial investment. This reminds us again that we were, of course, right in emphasizing that people will not build bigger factories or more factories unless there is a demand for the products requiring enlarged factories, more machinery and more equipment. This is why we were pressing for measures to stimulate the economy and stimulate the demands for investment. So, we called for personal tax cuts.

I say that instead of this sort of behind-the-door operation that the government performed in December of last year by increasing grants for LIP and establishing a winter works program, we should really have had a mini-budget late in November or early in December because if there was ever a time when the estimates and the planning of the budget for the year were completely out of whack it has been this year. We should have had a mini-budget so that, among other things, the drag on the economy that the budget of May had created and was continuing to create could be dispelled immediately rather than having to wait for a measure in March to do this. No one has been able to find out for sure whether income taxes are to go up 3 per cent as of January 1. Despite the fact that the calculations of the Minister of Finance were completely wrong in May, despite the fact that it has been demonstrated for months that his budget was inappropriate, this government would not even say in November, December or January that the 3 per cent increase in personal income tax rates was not going to go into effect as of January 1 of this year.

We called for tax cuts on the basis of conditions as they existed in the fall of 1972 and relating to the current fiscal year. We said that a 3 per cent increase in personal income taxes should not come into effect on January 1, and we said that we required a 4 per cent cut in personal income taxes to offset the increase in the real rate of taxation which has come about as a result of inflation taking place. I am addressing myself to the current fiscal year. I am quite content to wait for a week or so before addressing myself to the next fiscal year and what tax cuts are appropriate with regard to that year. But we emphasized the importance of a 7 per cent cut for the latter half of 1972-73 to stimulate the economy and to do something about this terrible unemployment which, seasonally adjusted, stands at exactly the same rate in January of 1973 as it did in January of 1972, and is actually higher in February.

We also say that these measures which are before us do nothing to reform in any way our tax structure. When the budget was being considered, I urged the adoption of a reform measure to get the government out of the business of profiting from inflation. I put forward a very simple device which would, in effect, adjust the statutory exemptions, the statutory deductions and the tax brackets to correspond to the change in the purchasing power of the dollar each year. It is a very simple device, and I put forward the simplest mechanism that I thought I could devise. Somebody may be able to devise a simpler method, but it was clear at the time, and increasingly clear since, that my proposal would have preserved whatever equity there was in the tax structure for personal income taxation adopted in 1971. This simple measure would have prevented a drag on the economy from developing, one that has been so pronounced this year as a result of inflation moving people up into higher tax brackets and increasing everybody's rate of taxation, by leaving nominal rates of taxation alone. Of course, this would force any government to come to parliament for increases in taxation rather than allowing them to secure increased revenues in a sneaky way as a result of inflation working on the progressive tax structure.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Stanfield: If this course had been adopted, we would not have this problem today of the budgetary measures being a drag on the economy and maintaining unemployment at high levels, problems which we are now considering in a piecemeal way as this bill goes through the House. I do not think the Minister of Finance understood what I was proposing to him at all. He poured scorn on it. I do not think he misrepresented my position deliberately; I just think he did not understand it. It has been very apparent in the course of the months that have passed since May that the proposal I made, or some variation of it, is receiving increasing acceptance. A similar proposal was put before the Tax Foundation a few months ago and met with no objection at all. It is theoretically sound and very simple to administer. It would prevent a fiscal drag from developing in the course of the year as the result of the present tax system we have, and would compel the government to deal honestly with parliament. I cannot repeat too often that while the government can bring forth winter works programs and put more money into LIP projects, we need a big personal tax cut. We needed it in 1972 just to offset the real increase in tax rates that have come about through inflation. I cannot repeat that too often.

An hon. Member: How big is "big"?

Mr. Stanfield: My hon. friend just needs to be patient for a week or so to see how big the government thinks is big. We will have no hesitation, as we had no hesitation during the election campaign, to put a very precise figure on it.

I think it is obvious that the measures we are now considering do not do anything to stimulate or encourage small business in the country which is the greatest source of employment in Canada. We put forward a proposal to encourage the individual and to stimulate business to expand and develop, a proposal designed to help people get started in small business. We call it the Canadian investment credit incentive, and it would be available if we were in government and had the opportunity to bring it into operation to benefit any Canadian citizen who invests directly in the equity of Canadian owned small business. The credit, which would be 50 per cent of qualified investments up to a maximum of $5,000 a year, would either be offset against the individual's income tax for the year or repaid in whole or in part directly to him. Qualifying investments would include any equity share of corporations provided they qualify or direct participation in proprietorships or partnerships. In order for this credit to be available and granted, the businesses would be required to register with the Department of Industry, Trade and Commerce. Since only investment in Canadian owned small businesses would qualify, small business would include corporations with a net worth up to $1 million and with annual revenues up to $10 million, and no corporation would be able to qualify as a small business if its shares were listed on the stock exchange.

I say again, as I said when I made this proposal, that I believe this incentive to small business will do more in a single year to stimulate private initiative, to provide more new opportunities for jobs, and to stimulate demand for goods and services than any combination of direct government loans, concessions and subsidies presently in effect. They, of course, include the measures we are now considering. I repeat that we are not opposing the measures we are considering, but they do not really represent an attack on the main problem confronting the Canadian people, and on the main problem confronting the unemployed. I have emphasized the need for tax cuts. I have emphasized the need for reform in our personal income tax system. I have emphasized the need for this kind of encouragement and stimulus to small business as the greatest employer in the country.

Of course, Mr. Speaker, how we are going to convince the government that it needs an independent forecasting unit is something I do not know. The Economic Council recommended this for years. We have been after the government for years on this. One would think that after its terrible record of forecasting, particularly this year, the government would be ready to help establish an independent forecasting unit. I have to say, and I say it without any unkindness in my heart, that in view of the record of the first year in office of the Minister of Finance, he is beginning to make the last year of his predecessor look good by comparison.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Stanfield: I am not going to take up the time of the House this afternoon, Sir, to get into areas like regional economic disparity. Obviously, these measures do very little in connection with that. I will not take the time to emphasize the extent of the failure of the government's program in the area of diminishing regional economic disparity. For example, we have all seen the unemployment figures published for the month of January, and we can see a great disparity between unemployment rates in the Atlantic provinces and Quebec as opposed to Ontario.

A subject which is a little off my theme, but which I am glad to take up for a minute, arises from the question raised by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles). He is inquiring about what position I have taken in relation to old age pensions. Of course, when I consider old age pensions, like the hon. gentleman who put the question, I am thinking primarily of the old age pensioner rather than of the economic consequences of increasing old age pensions, although those also are significant. The hon. member for York South (Mr. Lewis) earlier in the session, during the debate on the Address in Reply to the Speech from the Throne, delivered quite a sweeping generalization on the same topic. He indicated that he could not find anything specific in the record that I had said about old age pensions beyond maintaining the present plan and removing the 2 per cent ceiling on the cost of living adjustment.

I appreciate that the hon. member for York South was not in the House last May 15 when I spoke on this matter in the budget debate, as you will find reported at page 2264 of Hansard for that date. I appreciate that he was not in the House when I spoke, although he was here later on in the afternoon to take part in the debate himself. But I must say I find it a little difficult to understand how the hon. member did not take the trouble to read what I did say. I want to remind him, and also the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre, that detailed proposals and costing summaries relating to our policies on pensions were distributed in a mass way, including distribution to the media, and they were reported. This was done in May. We carried on with this position on pensions during the election campaign. That was the reference I made last night, when I said in fact that we had presented proposals regarding pensions.

In addition to those, and I emphasize that in putting these positions forward, and in still putting them forward, I do so as the minimum positions, as the very least that we should have done, since last August I have called for specific emergency provisions, aside from the standard pension provisions, to assist our old people who were bearing the brunt of the drastic increases in food prices. While hon. gentlemen to my left were promoting a committee to study food prices, I think also in association with a review board of some sort, this is what I was doing, Mr. Speaker. I was advocating some direct and immediate help to the people living on fixed incomes, to the people living on old age pensions, who were facing the increase in the cost of living and, in particular, the increase in the cost of food. This is our minimum position. We are reviewing this position with the budget coming up, and I will have more to say about old age pensions, as well as about other matters, in the forthcoming budget debate.

[Mr. Stanfield.]

I trust that the hon. member for York South and the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre, if they are unable to be in the House and do not have the privilege of hearing me in person when I speak during the budget debate, this time will be able to read afterwards what I had to say. I do not question their sincerity with regard to assistance to the older people, and I trust they are not going to question my sincerity, or the sincerity of my party in that regard.

The country is paying a very heavy price for the budget adopted last May, the first budget presented by the Minister of Finance. We are paying a very heavy price in terms of a disappointing rate of growth, a rate falling well short of the target set by the minister. We are paying a very heavy price in terms of unemployment which, seasonally adjusted, is as high as it was in January, 1972. And, of course, we are paying a very heavy price in terms of inflation which is running on a year to year basis at something in excess of 5 per cent.

There is nothing at all in these measures contained in the supplementary estimates, nothing at all more than some belated assistance to those caught by winter unemployment, and only to a small percentage of the large number of unemployed in Canada. There is nothing in these supplementary estimates to get the country on the right track. I hope I will not be accused of immodesty if I say we, speaking for this party, during the past couple of years and in particular during the last year, have been on the right track in terms of diagnosing the economic problems of the country and in terms of recommending very precise and appropriate methods to deal with them.

I expect there is a very good reason why the Minister of Finance cannot be in the chamber at the present time to hear my speech, but I can send him a copy of it later to read, and I hope he will adopt the suggestions that we have been making. I hope he will bring in some of the reforms in the tax system that we have been suggesting, some of which I have touched upon today, so that while the government remains in office, whether it is for a few days, a few weeks, or for as long as it may last, will begin to get the country moving in the right direction. I hope the government will begin to adopt a few of the measures that are appropriate to get the economy zinging along, get employment growing at an adequate rate, get unemployment down, and do something effective to deal with the problems associated with inflation.

Mr. David Lewis (York South): Mr. Speaker, I stayed to listen to the hon. Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Stanfield) because of the promise I understood him to make earlier this afternoon that he would, when he spoke on this bill this afternoon, answer what was in the motion moved, not with tongue in cheek but very seriously, by my colleague, the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles).

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Lewis: The motion that could have been passed if hon. members of the Conservative party had had the courage to let it pass—

Mr. Horner (Crowfoot): That is not so, at all.

Mr. Lewis: Mr. Speaker, that was the way I noticed it.

Mr. Horner (Crowfoot): That is not the way it was said.

Mr. Alexander: You noticed in error.

Mr. Lewis: The hon. member may speak for his—

Mr. Lundrigan: Mr. Speaker, a question of privilege.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. What is the question of privilege?

Mr. Lundrigan: Mr. Speaker, I was in the House this afternoon and the House did not give consent to the motion made by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles) but certainly no members were named as having refused consent. I challenge the hon. member to state categorically who refused consent or get on with the problem.

Mr. Lewis: Mr. Speaker, let not the hon. member try to be so smart. There was not anyone from the other side of the House who cried "No" and there was not anyone from my party who cried "no". The Speaker heard the "no" so I ask you, Mr. Speaker, to decide exactly where that "no" came from.

I stayed, Mr. Speaker, to listen—

Mr. Lundrigan: Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member for York South (Mr. Lewis) has the floor. I do not believe a question of privilege is involved in what I have heard so far. The hon. member for York South.

Mr. Lundrigan: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a question of privilege.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The hon. member for York South is recognized by the Chair.

Mr. Lundrigan: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a question of privilege.

Mr. Lewis: I waited, Mr. Speaker, to hear the hon. Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Stanfield)—

Mr. Lundrigan: Mr. Speaker, surely a question of privilege, when raised, must be heard immediately.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The hon. member rose on a question of privilege. It was heard and disposed of, and then he mentioned a further question of privilege. I am not sure how one could arise but I will be patient and hear the hon. member on a further question of privilege.

Mr. Lundrigan: Mr. Speaker, I have the greatest respect for you, Sir, but I will say that if I want to raise 50 questions of privilege you are called to judge those—

Some hon. Members: Order, order!

Mr. Lundrigan: The hon. member for York South (Mr. Lewis) has made an accusation which is incorrect. As a matter of fact, the hon. Leader of the Opposition accepted the challenge and, consequently, there was no reluctance on his part to express in detail the opposition of this party on old age pensions or he would not have taken the opportunity to do it this afternoon. Consequently, when the charge is made the hon. member must withdraw his remarks. I am not going to sit here as a member of this party and allow smear tactics by the hon. member for York South which have no basis in fact and can only downgrade his party. I should like to see him start to act like an hon. member instead of a dishonourable member, as is the case at the moment.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Perhaps this sustains the Chair's suspicion—

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Deputy Speaker: —that we are really dealing with a question of debate rather than a question of privilege. The Chair would remind the hon. member for Gander-Twillingate (Mr. Lundrigan) that he has an opportunity to take part in the debate. If somebody has said something with which he finds fault or if there is a disagreement on fact, rather than interrupting another hon. member's speech he should make his own contribution with his own statement of the facts as they appear to him. I am sorry to have been somewhat impetuous earlier in trying not to see the hon. member for Gander-Twillingate a second time, but I think it does become an abuse of our procedures if every time an hon. member says something with which some other hon. member disagrees, violently or otherwise, an attempt is made to settle the difference then and there by means of a question of privilege. I really believe this is a bad debating practice, and I have to appeal to all hon. members to assist the Chair in seeing that the debate proceeds in a more orderly fashion.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Hees: Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The hon. member for Prince Edward-Hastings (Mr. Hees) rises on a question of privilege.

Mr. Hees: Mr. Speaker, the allegation the hon. member for York South made was 100 per cent untrue. Mr. Speaker, he has said, sitting at the far end of the chamber, that he could ascertain exactly whether every member on the far side, a long, long distance from him, said yes or no.

Some hon. Members: Order, order!

Mr. Hees: He is saying no one said no. I say to him he is stating a straight untruth and he knows it.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Perhaps the hon. member for Prince Edward-Hastings was not here when I made my point a few minutes ago—

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Deputy Speaker: —on questions of privilege which are really matters of debate, and trying to set forth one's own opinion of what transpired. I appeal to hon. members not to raise bogus points of order or questions of privilege to try to quarrel with statements of other hon. members. I will certainly see that the hon. member for Gander-Twillingate or the hon. member for Prince Edward-Hastings or any other member is recognized to make their contribution on this particular point if they feel that point should be dealt with. I now call on the hon. member for York South.

Mr. Lewis: Mr. Speaker, the first thing I should like to say is that it is obvious that members of this House were exceedingly wise in asking you to be deputy speaker of this House of Commons—

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Lewis: —in view of your evident wisdom and impartiality. The second point I should like to make, Mr. Speaker, is that I do not withdraw the statement that I made,—

Mr. Alexander: Shame!

Mr. Lewis: —nor do I withdraw one word of that statement.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Some hon. Members: Shame.

Mr. Lewis: I was coming, Mr. Speaker, to the fact that as I listened to the hon. Leader of the Opposition he gave me the impression that, speaking later in the debate, which meant the speech he has just finished, he would tell this House in the language of the motion—that was the impression I got—at precisely what figure he wants to see old age pensions established. He then referred, and I hope I have the correct page number, to Hansard of May 15, 1972, page 2264, where he is reported to have said:

> These pensioners, who have been bearing the brunt of inflation ever since January 1, 1967, should have been awarded an increase in their basic pension sufficient to compensate them adequately for the deterioration in purchasing power which has taken place since the last major change late in 1966. This would involve an adjustment, not of $2.88 but of nearly $15 a month in the basic pension. I have no hesitation in saying that the government I expect to lead shortly will do just that.

I remind hon. members that the figure was $15, on top of $80, which would have given a pension of $95. If this is still the policy of the hon. Leader of the Opposition and his party, I hope he will state that policy when the pension bill comes before this House.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Lewis: I want to say to you, Mr. Speaker, and to hon. members of this House that such level of basic old age pension would not satisfy my colleagues and myself.

I rise to speak also because we have been through some steps in this parliament that have been very disturbing to anybody who watches it with an objective eye. The hon. Leader of the Opposition said that he was rising not to oppose this bill and later on in his speech he said "I repeat that I have not risen to oppose this bill". He should have informed some of the members in his party that was his intention, that he was not opposing any of the supplementary estimates, because members of his party had nine motions of opposition to the supplementary estimates. He says that he is not opposing the proposed winter works program. He says it is not enough. Of course, it isn't. I will have a word to say about that in a moment. Although he was not opposing it, there was a motion to oppose by one of the Conservative members. It was the request of the provinces and municipalities of this country that the winter works programs be arranged for a period of years so that they could plan and prepare for them. However, the Conservative party said "No. We want to limit it only to this year; $75 million and no more."

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Lewis: That was the motion on the order paper.

Mr. Nielsen: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I cannot allow such a canard to go unanswered, particularly when it is being done deliberately and for his own political advantage by the hon. member for York South (Mr. Lewis).

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Nielsen: It was made clear throughout the debates in committee and here that the reason for the notices of opposition was to enable debates and for no other purpose.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Alexander: He knows that.

Mr. Nielsen: It was further made clear that we intended to permit those items to pass without recorded division. The point of order I raise has to do with—

Some hon. Members: Order.

Mr. Nielsen: If Your Honour will prevent the howling from hon. members to my left and opposite, I will quote Standing Order 35 which prevents the hon. member for York South from reflecting upon any vote of the House. I quote:

> No member may reflect upon any vote of the House, except for the purpose of moving that such vote be rescinded.

In his remarks, the hon. member for York South is attempting to reflect upon a vote that was taken this morning and yesterday. I submit that he cannot do this. I further submit that the hon. member for York South should be the gentleman that he is supposed to be in this House and stop playing politics with these issues.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. Perhaps I could amplify the remarks I made earlier about points being points of debate rather than points of order.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I refer hon. members to citation 113 in the fourth edition of Beauchesne's Parliamentary Rules and Forms. I think the first sentence is helpful. I quote:

Members often raise so-called "questions of privilege" on matters which should be dealt with as personal explanations or corrections, either in the debates or the proceedings of the House.

I suggest that the remarks of the hon. member for York South (Mr. Lewis) with regard to what previously transpired in this particular debate is not a reflection on any member that is incapable of at least being answered in debate. I heard the point being raised over and over again as to whether the notices of opposition with regard to certain portions of money or the full sum of moneys set forth in these estimates constitutes attempts to defeat a particular estimate, or to be unkind to old people, or to have some such motive ascribed.

I heard all of that last week, as did other occupants of the Chair. These points were answered at the time. I think they can be answered again. I do not find that is a reflection on previous proceedings. I again ask hon. members to consider that they have a right to participate in the debate and to make their points known, at least to give the reasons they proceed in certain ways. At the moment the hon. member for York South has the floor.

Mr. Lewis: Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is the hon. member for Yukon rising on a further point of order?

Mr. Nielsen: With great respect, Mr. Speaker, it does not appear that the Chair has dealt with Standing Order 35, which was the point of order raised, because the items which the hon. member for York South referred to were votes that were taken this morning and last Friday afternoon. They were, in effect, votes. The hon. member for York South is attempting to deal with the position of this party on those votes. I suggest to the Chair that that is flying directly in the face of Standing Order 35 and should not be permitted.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. In the remarks I made a moment ago, I thought I dealt with the point raised by the hon. member for Yukon. He read part of Standing Order 35, and I quote:

No member may reflect upon any vote of the House, except for the purpose of moving such vote be rescinded.

I do not think that the way in which the hon. member for York South was proceeding was a reflection upon the vote and I so rule. I ask that he be permitted to make his speech.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Lewis: Mr. Speaker, may I assure the pure, non-political member for Yukon that I intend to remain a gentleman, if I can, and that I suspect my gentlemanliness will not be at a disadvantage compared with that of others. I did not speak about the vote at all. I am talking about notices of opposition on which votes were not taken.

Mr. Nielsen: They were.

Mr. Lewis: They were not. What was voted on was the vote in the estimate. The notices of opposition were not voted on. I remind Your Honour that not only was there a notice of opposition, but for almost two days members of the Conservative party beat the air against the idea that this three year arrangement was in a supplementary estimate. Indeed, the hon. Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Stanfield) referred to it in the mild way in which this kind, honest guy always refers to things. He also suggested that it was an improper procedure to have the three year arrangement in the supplementary estimates.

Mr. Stanfield: Peculiar.

Mr. Lewis: He says peculiar. He does not deny that is what he said. The Conservative party cannot have it both ways, Mr. Speaker. Either they are for the winter works program on a three year planning basis or they are not. I am sick and tired of their phony superiority throughout this debate.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Lewis: We have been treated to a parade of phoniness that I suggest to you, Mr. Speaker, this parliament has not seen for a long time. Despite all their notices of opposition to various items in the supplementary estimates, the hon. gentlemen, including the member for Yukon, did not even have the courage to say "on division" when those motions were called.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Lewis: Before the bill was introduced, the supplementary estimates were passed without objection from any corner of this House, despite three days of time wasted arguing against them.

I have received one or two letters, not too many, from pensioners who wrote me they had received letters from members of the Conservative party saying that our party had opposed bringing forth pensions earlier. They did not know quite what it was about, but they wondered what it was. One was a letter from Cape Breton Island where one of the Conservative members had written to say that the New Democratic Party had opposed bringing old age pension legislation forward earlier. I suppose the reference was to the phony motion in January which would have had the effect of adjourning the debate. The word goes all over the country that members of the Conservative party are concerned about the old age pensioners—they wanted a debate on their problems to come on early. Mr. Speaker, they knew it was phony; they knew it was dishonest. They were not satisfied with putting that dishonesty before the House; they are now spreading it across the country.

Some hon. Members: Shame.

Mr. Lewis: And these are the people who my colleagues and I are supposed, tomorrow, to permit to take over the government of this country because they are honest and because they know what should be done. Mr. Speaker, I don't like the Liberals. But I don't like the Tories any more!

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Lewis: There have been times in my political history when I felt that at least in the case of the Tories I knew where they stood. When the right hon. gentleman from Prince Albert (Mr. Diefenbaker) led the Conservative party, I knew where they stood. I'm darned if I know where the Conservative party stands now on any issue which faces this country, whether it is capital punishment or taxes or pensions or national unity or any other question—even bilingualism. One member speaks one way; another member speaks another way. And I, as leader of the New Democratic Party, am supposed to say to the Leader of the Opposition: "Bob, you are the guy to lead this country to Heaven." I am supposed to say: "Go on, Bob; take over and lead us into the Kingdom of Heaven on this earth."

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Lewis: The Leader of the Opposition talks about the awful situation with respect to unemployment. Let me just remind him of this: if you look for a year in which the seasonally adjusted rate of unemployment was higher than it is even now, that year was in 1961 when the Conservatives were in power.

The Leader of the Opposition rises when there is an international monetary crisis to ask with fervour that the government do something about it. He forgets that it was during the last Conservative administration that the whole relationship between the government and the Bank of Canada went down the drain.

The Leader of the Opposition made a remark about organ grinders.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

An hon. Member: That got to you.

Mr. Lewis: If hon. members would be quiet, I want to tell them two things about that. First, I want to thank him for the compliment. At least, someone else was the monkey. The second thing I want to say, after listening to his speech, is that he could do with an organ grinder a lot more than with a speech writer. I did my best to phrase that delicately so that I would not have to suggest that anyone was a monkey. But I would suggest that an organ grinder might be in place. Because I put it to you, Mr. Speaker, that what we have been listening to in this House, during the debate on the Speech from the Throne, during the debate on supplementary estimates and during the debate today is a call for office as hungry, as clear, as unprincipled and as devoid of objectivity as anyone in this chamber has ever heard. I want the people of Canada to know this. If the time comes, and this government falls—and it may do so a week from now, or two weeks from now—

An hon. Member: Tell us when!

Mr. Lewis: —or three weeks, or three months, because we have made clear what kind of legislation we shall support—and if it should come about that the Leader of the Opposition does take over as head of the government, he will do so not because of his insatiable hunger for office, he will do so because of the failure of the Liberal government to produce legislation which in our view the people of Canada require for their welfare.

The Leader of the Opposition says he does not intend to oppose this bill. And then he makes a budget speech, or a mini-budget speech. Forgive me, there was no mini-budget. However, he made a budget mini-speech this afternoon dealing with taxes and unemployment. Of course, the government is responsible for the level of unemployment, not only since last May but since its disastrous decision back in 1969 to set off employment against the rising cost of living. That was a stupid course to take and not only the Leader of the Opposition but every spokesman for my party, myself included, and every knowledgeable economist in the country warned the government that it was being misled by its advisers in the Department of Finance and in the Bank of Canada. But the government had an overwhelming majority, smaller, it is true than that of the Conservative party led by the right hon. gentleman from Prince Albert, but just as effective, and it chose to ignore everything which was said on this side of the House.

I want you to know, Mr. Speaker, that October 30, producing, as it did, a minority government, led to a situation in which the Liberal administration opposite acts entirely differently from the way it acted when it could call upon its arrogant majority. It is now bound to take into account the wishes of the opposition and the advice of knowledgeable people who disagree with its policies. The Leader of the Opposition, in the next election campaign, will no doubt travel across the country yelling for a stable majority government under his gentle wing. Well, the people of Canada have learned that an arrogant majority government is to their detriment, and he will not be able to persuade the Canadian people of anything else, despite his hunger for office.

We are, of course, paying a heavy price in unemployment. What are the suggestions put forward by the Leader of the Opposition? One of them—and I agree with it—was that there should be a sizeable income tax cut. I had my ears open to hear exactly what figure he had in mind. If I am wrong, the Leader of the Opposition, for whom, personally, if I may interject this, I have the greatest possible warmth and respect—

An hon. Member: Too late.

Mr. Lewis: —will correct me. This will not prevent me in the future, any more than it has prevented me in the past, from telling him what I think of his policies and attitudes. But I do have a deep respect for him. I am waiting to hear what he has to say. How big shall the income tax cut be? My recollection is that during the election campaign he proposed, in addition to the continuation of the 3 per cent reduction, a further 4 per cent decrease for 1972 beginning on July 1 of that year. All I have ever heard him say, or, I state more accurately, all I have ever read him as saying about the size of the personal income tax cut was that it should be 4 per cent for the second half year of 1972. That is all I remember him saying. If I am wrong he will correct me, but he is not correcting me. That meant an average cut of 2 per cent. If the Minister of Finance is stupid and crazy enough to present that kind of personal income tax reduction, then he will not be Minister of Finance for very long, I promise him that.

• (1630)

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. I regret having to interrupt the hon. member, who has been given extra time for the interventions earlier in his contribution, but the time allotted to him has expired. It may, however, be extended with the unanimous consent of the House.

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The hon. member for York South.

Mr. Lewis: Mr. Speaker, may I thank Your Honour and hon. members for their courtesy, which in this case may be a little more deserved than in other cases where I have had extended time. As I was saying, I wanted to hear what it should be, but I knew that I would not. I am certain that what has been decided to the right of me by the members of the Conservative party is this, that whatever level of income tax reduction is proposed they will say they want more. That is the only decision that they have made.

Mr. Horner: You have never done that.

Mr. Lewis: They have not decided what level of personal income tax is good for the country; the only decision they have made is that whatever is proposed by somebody else, they will say it is not enough. I did not really expect the Leader of the Opposition to tell me what the level would be. I am deliberately not making a budget speech, not even a mini one, because that will come in time. I rose to make it clear that we supported the government in the miscellaneous estimates committee and during the discusions here on the supplementary estimates before the bill was introduced and that we are going to be consistent throughout and support the bill now.

We are doing this because—and this also applies to the unemployment insurance amendments bill number one—we are determined that the unemployed should receive their benefits; that programs like LIP will have enough money to carry on; that the physical fitness program, which the members of the Conservative party also wanted to reduce in amount, will be able to carry on; and that the on-going work of the government and the salaries of civil servants should not be stymied and frustrated purely by political hunger for office. This is why we have consistently supported the supplementary estimates and it is why we support this bill.

May I say to this House what I have said outside it on one or two occasions. If I may speak personally for a moment, I fell in love in my early teens and the girl I fell in love with was silly enough to marry me. We have been married for 37 years now. Therefore, I have not personally experienced the delights and the discomforts of being wooed by more than one suitor at the same time. I am having that experience now. I get a wink from the Prime Minister and a nod from the Leader of the Opposition—if I may add, Mr. Speaker, in both official languages.

Let me repeat what I said during the throne speech debate. As far as we are concerned, we have noted the fact that over the past 15 years since 1957 this country has had five minority governments and only two majority governments. We have noted the fact that there are in Canada now four established political parties. We have also noted the fact that the relative percentage of the vote obtained by these parties at election time has been more or less the same. We, therefore, recognize that the likelihood of minority government after an election in this country is greater than the likelihood of majority government.

Under these circumstances, it is our duty—and if Conservatives members of this parliament had any principle other than yearning for office, it would be their duty too—to make this parliament work. This minority government is now chastened and humbled. One almost does not recognize the Prime Minister nowadays when he appears on television. I watched him on television last night and I must say that, although I do not agree with everything that he said, boy, oh boy, did October 30 change that man, at least superficially! I do not know what goes on inside. I am not a psychologist or God and I cannot climb into his mind, but superficially he is certainly a changed man.

My colleagues and I believe that it is possible, if Members of Parliament have regard for Canada and Canadians, instead of playing the political game of office-seeking with tongues hanging out for office, for this parliament to do more for the people of Canada than it has done in the past four and a half years. That is our objective and we intend to stick to that objective despite the hunger that overwhelms me sometimes from members immediately to my right.

Mr. Stackhouse: Mr. Speaker, would the hon. member for York South permit a question?

Mr. Lewis: Certainly.

Mr. Stackhouse: Would the hon. member inform the House what he would regard as the minimum figure that his party would settle for as the old age pension of the future?

Mr. Lewis: No, Mr. Speaker, I am not going to inform the hon. member of that. I have not said on television or anywhere else the words that the Leader of the Opposition used last night to the effect that I had made precise numbers known. I did not do that. We have made known to the country and to the old age pensioners of Canada that, in our view, the basic old age pension ought to be at the level of $150 a month, and we mean it. Now, whether or not that amount of old age pension will be accepted by this parliament is something that we will decide when we see the old age pension bill.

Motion agreed to and bill read the second time.

Mr. Reid: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker, I believe you will find there is agreement in the House that once we go into committee of the whole we stay there during the period normally allotted to private members. If there is such agreement of the House perhaps an order can be made to that effect.

Mr. Nielsen: That is agreeable to us, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Agreed.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: It is so ordered. Perhaps before I leave the chair I might announce the business for ten o'clock. Perhaps it would be agreeable that this announcement be given from the Committee of the Whole House on this occasion since we do not have the list of the three members at this particular time.

• (1640)

Pursuant to Standing Order 54, I do now leave the chair for the House to go into Committee of the Whole on the said bill.

House in committee on Bill C-141, to grant to Her Majesty certain sums of money for the Public Service for the financial year ending March 31, 1973—Mr. Drury—Mr. McCleave in the chair.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Chairman, may I rise on a point of order for the purpose of getting clarification as to our procedure? I believe it is generally understood that there is a desire on the part of hon. members to discuss the different items set out in the schedule. My experience tells me there are two ways to do this: One would be either on Clause 2 or Clause 3, one of which mentions the estimates and the other mentions the schedule, to call the schedule and start with agriculture and go on through it. The other procedure would be for us to go through all the clauses, there being five of them, then call the schedule, taking department by department in an alphabetical order.

It seems to me that nothing turns on which way we do it, but I think we should have a clear understanding. I think there is a general desire to get into a discussion of the estimates of the different departments. If that is the case, perhaps when Clause 2 is called and before it is carried the chairman might call the schedule referred to therein and then take it department by department.

The Chairman: The Chair would appreciate the views of the hon. members on this important point raised by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre. It has been at least 10 years since we have gone into Committee of the Whole to deal with the estimates, so it is perhaps worthy of a moment of reflection.

If it meets the wishes of the committee, my own inclination would be to start with the schedule and begin with the items under agriculture, and then when that is exhausted proceed to the next topic and so work our way through the schedule. We would then come back to the clauses. I am quite prepared to hear submissions as to how we should proceed in a manner that is most agreeable to hon. members.

Mr. Drury: Mr. Chairman, on this particular point of order I think it might be more convenient if we were to deal with the clauses and then with the schedule, thus enabling us to summons the necessary ministers who are not, as you see, available in the House at the moment. If the first minister required is the Minister of Agriculture it might take us some time to get him here. I suggest we might deal with the clauses, and go on with the schedule on the understanding that each of the scheduled items will call for the presence, if needed, of the minister.

Mr. Nielsen: Mr. Chairman, we on this side would much prefer the suggestion of the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre. While the Minister of Agriculture and his officials are on the way here, I am sure there are members on this side who will be participating in the debate in a general way and will not require the presence of the officials or the minister during their remarks. For the sake of order, I think it would be much more preferable to proceed in the manner suggested by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre.

Mr. Horner (Crowfoot): On the same point of order, Mr. Chairman, in looking at Clause 2 and Schedule A, I find myself at a loss in determining how one could debate Clause 2 without dealing with some of the matters dealt with in Schedule A. In actual practice, I feel that the suggestion by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre is the only one that can be followed.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Chairman, I appreciate the point made by the President of the Treasury Board that the Minister of Agriculture is not here at the moment. I am sure it will not take him very long to come here unless his office is a lot further away than it ought to be. I point out, however, that we have one or two members waiting to speak on matters relating to agriculture. I suspect there might be a Conservative member who wants to talk about this as well, so the Minister of Agriculture will be here before the item is carried.

Mr. Reid: Mr. Chairman, under the circumstances I think we would agree to proceed in the way the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre has indicated. That would be acceptable.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Chairman, may I ask one further question? Do you intend to proceed simply by calling agriculture and letting the debate range over both the items therein, and then going on department by department, or do you prefer to call each item? Again, my only interest is in knowing how we are going to proceed.

The Chairman: I think the Chair would go along with the mood of the House to consider matters at an early stage by dealing with them by department rather than on a breakdown within departments. I propose to do that, so we will be calling Clause 2, Schedule A, dealing with agriculture Votes 15a and 40a under agriculture as the first part of the debate.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): You are a wise Chairman.

Mr. Nielsen: For the purposes of further clarification, I take it that the calling of the items under the various departments in this fashion will not preclude the general rule of practice in this House, that is that on Clause 1 there will be the fullest possible range of discussion?

The Chairman: What I propose to do is reach a conclusion of discussions under each item within a department without calling the vote until the discussion is completed on the schedule, and then deal with the point raised by the hon. member for Yukon, if it should arise, after the schedule has been carried.

Mr. Nielsen: Mr. Chairman, it will not arise at all if we call Clause 1 of the bill, because this permits that kind of full discussion on the subject. As long as there is the understanding that by proceeding in the manner suggested by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre, and I believe he is of the same view as I on this matter, the fullest possible discussion will be permitted, then we have no problem. Otherwise, we will have to call Clause 1 so we can have that kind of full discussion.

The Chairman: I think I should refer the hon. member to Standing Order 75 which probably deals with the question he has raised, and the reason Clause 1 is usually stood during consideration in committee.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Chairman, with respect, I am not sure the hon. member for Yukon has as yet made clear the point he has raised, but I think I understand it. What he wants to be sure of is that in discussing the items under agriculture members will be free to discuss agriculture generally. I submit, Sir, that is what has been happening in the debates we have had thus far. I also submit that the wording of these various items is such that it is pretty hard to restrict discussion. After all, under agriculture, we will be discussing production and marketing. What is there in agriculture that cannot be considered under one of those headings? Then, when we come to national health and welfare we will be discussing income security and social assistance. What is there which cannot be brought up under those headings? I submit there is really no issue here. These items are broad enough that discussion will take care of itself.

On Clause 2—Schedule.

Mr. Horner (Crowfoot): Mr. Chairman, it seems clear in the minds of members of this House why this latitude should be allowed in respect of Clause 2 and Schedule A. The first item deals particularly with production and marketing. A situation occurred in eastern Canada, as a result of which there were huge crop losses and farmers were in dire need of assistance. The government, therefore, has proposed a program which suggests a payment of $400 per farm to approximately 26,000 farms. The whole question of production and marketing involves other problems in Canada. We have the concern of the consumers in respect of the high cost of food. Now, when we have a situation in which $400 is to be granted per farm this will not be of major help to farmers who have suffered particular crop damage. If a farmer is in need of help, I do not believe that an amount of $400 will be of very much assistance.

In looking at the whole field of agriculture, and in comparing our productive capacity with that of other countries, one must look a little further afield than this expenditure. I should like to read about some of the problems Canada faces in relation to our major agricultural neighbour to the south, the United States. I shall read from the annual review, 1968 of the Economic Council of Canada in which mention is made of the challenge in respect of agriculture and productivity in Canada. A comparison is made between Canadian agriculture and that of the United States. I am reading from page 86:

> While growth rates in agricultural labour productivity have been similar in Canada and the United States, levels of labour productivity differ significantly. Over the past two decades, output per farm worker has been consistently lower in Canada than in the United States. In percentage terms, this relationship has changed little over the years. In terms of net value of production per worker, Canadian farmers produce on the average 25 per cent less than U.S. farmers. In terms of gross value of production, the disparity is about 35 per cent.

It goes on to suggest the following:

> Thus, any significant narrowing in this gap would require a sharp acceleration in productivity growth in agriculture in Canada relative to the United States. For example, assuming that U.S. agricultural productivity growth over the next two decades were to approximate that achieved over the past two decades, Canadian farmers would need to step up their productivity growth by more than half—from 5½ per cent to over 8 per cent per year—to catch up to U.S. productivity levels by 1990.

This article further suggests that part of the problem in Canada is that we have not put enough money into machinery and into the additional capitalization needed in the agricultural field. It reads:

> In the United States machinery input per form worker has been about 30 per cent higher than in Canada.

This gives us a glimpse of some of the problems involved in agriculture today. One might recall that the former minister of agriculture—I am not sure whether it was in this House or when addressing the farmers—suggested that the farmers bought too much machinery and that was part of their problems. Actually, they have not purchased sufficient machinery. We have the land, but we have not done enough with it.

We might look at the annual report of the Farm Credit Corporation for 1971-72. I shall refer to the amounts in round figures. It is shown that in 1967-68, the corporation lent to farmers an amount of $263 million. In 1968-69, the amount was $208 million and, in 1969-70, it was $160 million, while in 1970-71 the figure was $114 million. I am running through the figures shown in this report. The figure for 1971-72 was $114 million. This shows a decrease in the amount of money used for the purchase of farm machinery and capitalization of agriculture. The thorough study by the Economic Council of Canada in 1968 indicates that the Canadian agricultural industry should be upgraded and that its input per farm worker is 30 per cent less than that of our United States counterpart, our competition one might say.

One might look at the amount of money invested in the prairie provinces, the three major agricultural provinces. In the province of Saskatchewan, an amount of $80 million was lent five years ago as against an amount of $30 million last year. In the province of Alberta, an amount of $65 million was lent five years ago against an amount of $19 million last year. This indicates a decrease in capitalization. No wonder we see the agriculture industry severely handicapped today. No wonder we see, on the next page of the same annual report, that an amount of $8 million in arrears is shown against the three prairie provinces. This indicates a direct curtailment of capital. A number of farmers go broke. One cannot go broke until one runs out of money. If the government curtails the money supply, this has an effect on the interest rate. Statistics can be found in the same book, the annual report of the Farm Credit Corporation, indicating that something like 60 per cent of the money lent was for the purchase of land, for the change of ownership or for the encouragement of land investment. The land has been acquired and has been farmed extensively in the prairie provinces for the past 50 years or so. What we need is more mechanization and more processing of agricultural products.

The Farm Credit Corporation indicates that 1.2 per cent of the money lent was for equipment and that 1.8 per cent was for livestock. We are not trying to catch up to our United States competition. We are keeping our loans low in respect of mechanization which is so badly needed. The agricultural program which is now being carried on in the province of Saskatchewan is wrong. The government of that province is spending $14 million to purchase land. The land is there. What we want is more production which might have the effect of lowering food costs.

In looking at the 1972 report of the Industrial Development Bank, we see the same thing. Approximately 60 per cent of the money lent is for the purchase of land. As I have said, we have the land and must have more money for the mechanization of the agriculture industry in order to have a greater productive capacity per man so that we can catch up to our competitors to the south. If our present practice continues, we will see an increase in the amount of agricultural goods imported into this country. I believe this is wrong. I should like the new Minister of Agriculture to take note of the change which should be taking place in the Canadian agriculture industry.

I was disappointed that the question of Farm Credit Corporation loans was not contained in the supplementary estimates. The former minister of agriculture allowed the interest rate on Farm Credit Corporation loans to increase to 8.75 per cent. I am disappointed that the farmers of Canada were not given an opportunity to refinance their loans because now the interest rate is down to 7 per cent. The feed and the mortgage companies have played a great part in the intensification of agricultural production, but they have done it at high interest rates. This has made it far more difficult for the farmers to catch up to their American counterparts. To me this is disappointing, and I would like to see somewhere along the line, a review of the whole concept underlying the Farm Credit Corporation. We have land. We do not have to push back oceans as they do in Holland. We should not spend so much time on changing ownership but we should put money into the capitalization of our industry to allow our workers to catch up with our major competitor.

There has been a suggestion regarding the payment of $12 million mainly in eastern Canada, a payment of $400 per farmer. An additional $4 million for feed freight assistance is merely patchwork assistance, something to sustain the farmers through the present winter. This is certainly no long term solution of the problem. When one considers the anxiety in the minds of the consumers regarding food prices, one has to discover where our agriculture industry went wrong. The former minister was concerned about farmers buying too much machinery, but basically they never bought enough. We had the situation in the Prairies where instead of providing more money for the agriculture industry, the government withdraw and tightened up. No wonder the arrears in Saskatchewan, Manitoba and Alberta total well over 20 per cent of the loans. These arrears arise when the banker cuts off the money supply. The Farm Credit Corporation has not been extending the same loans to the industry. In my opinion this is wrong.

We have to be readjust the program because this particular item under Schedule A deals with saving 26,000 farmers through the payment of $400 an acre. I wonder how many farmers are suffering in other parts of the country, because the amounts due, as contained in the annual report of the Farm Credit Corporation, total $8,616,000 over $7 million of that being in the three prairie provinces. If the $400 a year were paid to every farmer, it would not even amount to the $7 million. Certainly, farmers in that area are suffering when their crop is hailed out or watered out, as has happened in eastern Canada. Certainly, farmers in the Peace River area are not receiving the same consideration, since they have had four bad years and they need assistance and understanding. The Farm Credit Corporation has had to foreclose on the loans of many of these farmers, and to me this is a sad situation.

It is my belief that we have not put enough money into the agriculture industry and that is why farmers are going broke. How can we develop the agriculture industry? I wonder whether the new Minister of Agriculture has travelled through parts of the United States and has seen what they are doing there to develop their agriculture industry. I wonder whether he has seen the irrigation projects in the Moses Lake area, perhaps with the use of Canadian water from the Columbia River. We should do more of that type of thing. We should increase our agricultural production and encourage that industry so that we can meet the opportunities that will unfold internationally through the creation of greater demand for our agricultural produce. If we do not, food prices will increase substantially in Canada in the next year, and very little can be done about that unless we increase our production to meet both Canadian and world demand.

While approving Schedule A, I wish that the government had approached the matter with greater depth and scope. Even in the supplementary estimates, they could have brought in changes to alleviate the problems of the agriculture industry to a greater extent. I look with great hope to the present Minister of Agriculture. Perhaps he will bring a breath of fresh air, new ideas and new thought to the industry. I hope he does not encounter the same problems which faced the previous minister by accepting what the department officials tell him to do and not going any further than that. A completely new look must be given to the agriculture industry to increase production and to create greater stability. We must ensure that if one farmer suffers damage to his crops this will not mean that he is left without anything to sustain his family and himself throughout the winter months until the next crop is ready.

The Chairman: Order. It is my duty, pursuant to Standing Order 40, to inform the House that the questions to be raised tonight at the time of adjournment are as follows: the hon. member for Hillsborough (Mr. Macquarrie)—Social Security—Old Age Pensions—Introduction of legislation to provide increase—Consultation with provinces; the hon. member for Bellechasse (Mr. Lambert)—Manpower—Local Initiatives Program—Measures to accelerate approval of projects; the hon. member for St. John's East (Mr. McGrath)—Search and Rescue—Steps to ensure adequate number of planes and vessels for accidents off east coast.

Mr. Gleave: Mr. Chairman, it has taken us some time to reach this very important item under which assistance will be given to the farmers in the Peace River area. It is the first item in these estimates. In speaking this afternoon in committee, I want to say that following correspondence and telephone calls which I have received, I am very concerned about the amount of assistance that has been offered to farmers in the Peace River country, both in Alberta and in British Columbia. This Committee should be made aware of the fact that their need is very great and that it has not been met by the amounts of money that have been provided for the relief of these farmers. Possibly the first move has properly been made in providing a blanket solution. However, on examining the situation closely I find that the farmers in various parts of the Peace River region have not suffered these hardships equally. There are areas which have suffered a total loss, while in others significant amounts of the crop have been recovered.

In addition to what has been done, I suggest that the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Whelan) himself make a detailed on-the-spot survey of the conditions that exist in that part of the prairie region. My understanding is that he has been in Edmonton, met with ministers of the Alberta and British Columbia governments, and received reports from them. I say he should go personally to that area, talk to the farm families, and find out how those people are making out. I hope he will do this.

I hold in my hand an article from the Globe and Mail, a Toronto paper. It is headed, "A White Disaster for Peace River." It describes the real hardships that exist in certain parts of the Peace River country. I say that the minister should see to it that the people there receive all necessary assistance from other Canadians. This article in the Globe and Mail reports that farm families in the area say that what has been done to date is not adequate.

I also have a letter here from one of the Farm Union representatives in the Peace River area. He writes that there will be real hardship unless a more adequate and comprehensive job is done. I quote from his letter as follows:

> In short, the farm economy here requires a substantial injection of capital if it is to remain viable. Nothing less will guarantee its continuation as a contributor to the welfare of the country. I would suggest that the government has already set this sort of precedent. It has found it advisable, or expedient, to inject great amounts of cash into any number of projects of no more importance than this—OFY programs, manpower training programs, DREE incentive grants, and not the least, great tax concessions to any number and variety of corporations, many of them foreign owned.

We have provided assistance for corporations already. When the United States proposed, and indeed imposed, restrictions against the export of certain Canadian manufactured goods to the United States, we took action not more than a year ago to provide assistance. And we did not make it a limited program. We made it an open-ended program so that if companies could prove the damage done to them and the amount they needed, that amount of money would be paid under the formula in the act that we passed. I, as a farmer, as a Prairie representative, voted for that legislation. I, and others on this side of the House, thought it was necessary to keep Canadians in business. We did not think that Canadian businesses should be destroyed. All I am pleading this afternoon is that we do as much for the people who suffered disaster in western Canada as we were prepared to do for corporations in eastern Canada. I do not know if the Minister of Agriculture will pay any attention to my plea. I had hoped he would be in the House this afternoon when we were discussing estimates which affect his department. Perhaps he did not receive enough notice; I do not know, but I hope he will read the reports of the speeches made by those who are talking on behalf of these farmers.

These particular farmers suffered difficulties in previous years. That is why they are in straightened circumstances. Their reserves of credit and cash were already badly depleted. I understand that in that area the Farm Credit Corporation is not pressing collections on money owed to it. I say that the minister in charge of the Canadian Wheat Board should make representations to that board not to press collections under its cash advances program, in instances where farmers, because of weather conditions, have been unable to deliver grain and will not be able to deliver grain. There is no point in harassing those people at this time because they have neither grain nor money. The old saying that you cannot get blood out of a turnip is still true. I urge that minister to consult with officials of the Wheat Board to see if some assistance can be given in that area. Of course, interest rates have been a factor in the whole equation, but not the only one.

Finally, Mr. Chairman, the Minister of Agriculture did give some undertaking at a meeting of the Miscellaneous Estimates Committee, when I asked him if the government would give consideration to providing supplies of seed grain so that farmers could put in another crop in this area. He replied:

> We will be watching it very closely. If our investigations show that there may be a need to move jointly in seeds, etc., for them, we will do it. We already know the plans that we made on shipping feed in for the livestock and again there is not going to be the need that we thought there was for this unless it speeds up tremendously.

I call the attention of the House to that commitment, and hope adequate funds will be provided so that farmers can put in another crop and take it off properly.

Now, I wish to speak briefly about the Canadian Livestock Feed Board. Additional money is provided in these supplementary estimates for the transportation of feed grains. Again, I understand that this need arises in part because of bad weather conditions in eastern Canada, which resulted in less production of grain and corn than had been expected. As a result, we find it necessary to move larger amounts of feed grain into eastern regions to meet the needs of farmers there. I want to say that as far as we are concerned, we are prepared to see these amounts come before this committee, and we are prepared to support them so that farmers will be assured of the amounts of grain that they need. We are always prepared to see a fair and workable agricultural arrangement between the various regions of Canada.

I want to say, too, Mr. Chairman, that we are concerned about the Wheat Board's handling of grain, particularly about the present situation that exists in western Canada and most particularly in the province of Saskatchewan and in my constituency, in regard to the marketing of rapeseed. I am informed that some farmers are delivering rapeseed under contract for less than the current market price. At some points in my constituency grain companies are paying 30 cents to 35 cents a bushel more than at other points in the same constituency. Places like Kinley, where the higher prices are paid, are plugged and farmers at that point are not able to deliver the quantities of wheat that they should under their quota because other farmers 50 or 60 miles east are delivering grain so that they can get the Vancouver price.

Two or three years ago I said to the then minister in charge of the Wheat Board that two future markets operating in western Canada could only work to the disadvantage of the western farmer, and this is what has happened. The only reasonable solution to the problem is to bring these other non-board grains under the Canadian Wheat Board and have an efficient method of marketing and pricing. The quota regulations are working to the disadvantage of the ordinary producers of rapeseed because of the present price situation and an explanation is owed to them. They should not have to spend their time in a truck taking their grain to another area in order to get the higher price; it should be available to them at their own elevator door. Perhaps the minister can clear up this problem when he speaks about the production and marketing of feed grains.

The price of rapeseed and the method of marketing will have a very important effect on planting programs in the coming year. The method of pricing barley will also have a profound effect on the plans of farmers in the coming year. There is nothing in the actions of the government to suggest that they have given any serious consideration to these factors. The minister makes vague noises now and then about bringing other grains under the Wheat Board, but in the last parliament when he and his party had a chance to do this they voted against it. When the Conservatives had a chance to do it, they also voted against it.

It would be interesting, Mr. Chairman, if the Conservatives would state their policy in regard to marketing. Do they want a free-wheeling, open market for feed grains and rapeseed across Canada or do they want them marketed through the Wheat Board, giving a fair deal to those who buy and those who sell? I am offering the Conservatives the same challenge on grain marketing that my leader offered them on the pension program half an hour ago. When are they going to stand up and be counted? I will put the policy of our party on the line. We will not continue to put up with the present policies in regard to rapeseed which set producer against producer and farmer against farmer to the advantage of that group who handles it and skims off the profit as the farmer moves it from the field to the marketplace.

[Mr. Gleave.]

We will have a chance to talk on the method of movement of grain later as these estimates move through the Committee, but at this point I should like to deal again with the needs of the men and women and their families in the Peace River country. We need to do more for them because we should not see hardship visited on farm families in Canada without protest. As a final word, Mr. Chairman, I say again to the Minister of Agriculture that he should review his position. He should personally walk with those farmers in their fields and talk to them. After he has done that, he is entitled to make his decision and bring it before the House. He should come here and tell the House what he has seen, then make recommendations on what should be done to meet the situation.

• (1730)

Mr. Latulippe: Mr. Chairman, I am pleased to say a few words on the supplementary estimates of the Department of Agriculture.

I attentively listened a while ago to the hon. member for Crowfoot (Mr. Horner) who spoke about agriculture. That member is surely well versed in agriculture, but as many others he does not know all solutions to farming problems.

The hon. member stated that we should find means to stimulate production in Canada, but I wonder whether it would now be advisable to stimulate farming production. Not so long ago, various ways were found to prevent farmers from producing apparently because there were surpluses. Eastern farmers were penalized because they were producing too much while western farmers were paid to prevent them from sowing.

Now, we are told that agriculture has to be invigorated and this, after it has been restricted and mismanaged to a point that about 50 per cent of our farmers are giving it up. A new policy of incentives for agriculture is now being advocated. But I do not think that agriculture can be stimulated with the means we have now. In fact, when a farmer needs machinery, he pays a lot for it, what with taxes and transportation. He also has to pay a very high rate of interest to finance companies when purchasing his implements.

But farmers do need other things besides machinery, like materials, buildings and decent homes. And when purchasing building materials, they must pay an 11 per cent tax just like any other citizen.

And yet we want the price of farm products to go down because the cost of living is too high, and we are seeking ways of bringing it down. Well, bringing the cost of living down for the farmers is a simple matter of removing taxes, bringing down interest rates and granting compensated discounts on products. In fact, the primary incitement for farmers is to enable them to sell their products, which is only possible if citizens have adequate purchasing power.

Now the cost of food is so high that many families are denying themselves necessary food products. I shall give milk as an example: some families could use four or five quarts a day but use only one because they cannot afford to buy more. The government should therefore find a system for granting compensated discounts in order to bring prices down. By so doing, and through other means, such as reducing interest rates and eliminating taxes on building materials for farmers, we could contribute to bringing down the price of food.

If we brought those prices down, the farmer could sell more products and be less dependent on foreign markets, as other producers in our economy would be. We are seeking all kinds of ways of exporting our products while doing everything to prevent Canadians from purchasing more by burdening them with taxes and excessive interest rates.

Mr. Chairman, how can we find real solutions to this problem when we act in an unthinkable way, against all sense? Common sense requires to reduce interest rates and enable our citizens to buy more by pushing prices down. Yet prices are going up in every field, including that of grain movement; this is the reason why farmers have become unable to make both ends meet and they have gone deeply into debt.

This is why they borrow money. Interest rates, one could argue, are reasonable, but a rate of 8 or 9 per cent is too high for a farmer. It should not exceed 3 per cent.

We shall never settle problems related to agriculture by taking all kinds of measures designed to increase the prices of products; we should rather find other means in order to reduce them.

A moment ago, the hon. member for Crowfoot said that Canadian farm production is not balanced with the U.S. production. He stated that we are unable to produce as cheaply as the Americans do, that there is a difference between prices of American and Canadian products. The American legislation is a little more helpful, a little more human than the Canadian legislation in the area of agriculture. I met some U.S. farmers who borrow all the capital they need at an interest rate of 5 per cent; those American farmers do not pay any tax as long as they work on their farm. This is a system which does not exist in Canada, where farmers must pay taxes just as other citizens and they cannot make ends meet.

This is why there are so many problems in agriculture as in other areas of the economy. People cannot operate their farm on a profitable basis any more, excepted larger organizations. Those can finally survive but the ordinary owner of a family operation cannot make ends meet.

So, if we want agriculture to be more prosperous, we will have to find mechanisms other than the traditional ones. We cannot seem to find any logical formula to really stimulate agriculture. Yet the incentive formula is always the same: we have to try to find ways to lower prices through the granting of compensated discounts, the lowering of interest rates, through allowing the purchase of cheap machinery and eliminating taxes on building materials and on all kinds of goods.

That is a way, Mr. Chairman, to stimulate agriculture for the greater prosperity of Canadians.

[English]

Mr. Lang: Mr. Chairman, I wish to make a short intervention on this item. When the hon. member for Saskatoon-Biggar was speaking, he said he was dealing specifically with two areas. I also wish to touch on those two areas. I regret that the hon. member is not here at the moment. In the latter stages of his remarks the hon. member said that he wondered what our position was with regard to the marketing of rapeseed and whether rapeseed should be handled by the Canadian Wheat Board. He said something about my having made some vague utterance on this question.

We have been anything but vague. We have taken the position that it is up to the producers to decide this issue. In our discussions with producers we have followed their advice that a significant amount of information is needed about the marketing system, the open market, a pooled market, Wheat Board marketing, and that this must be in the producers' hands before they can make a sensible decision about which kind of marketing they want. It is our position that it is up to the producers to decide.

I know that the hon. member for Saskatoon-Biggar comes from a party which on the provincial side in Saskatchewan seems to take the view that it ought to decide when producers should have a marketing board, whether the producers want one or not, and goes ahead with marketing boards without consulting producers and imposes upon them a particular solution. That is in keeping with the basic NDP philosophy that the experts, that is to say themselves, ought to tell producers and everyone else what to do, and they will be better off for having been told.

I think that the hon. member for Saskatoon-Biggar is quite right in wondering about the Conservative position on this issue. He stated he would like to give them five minutes in which to present their views. I think it would be more workable if he were to invite five or six of them to state their five or six views on this issue, since usually their position on agricultural questions varies from one part of the country to another; they have no consensus. Luckily, they have not so far needed to reach a consensus on any of these issues.

If the hon. member for Saskatoon-Biggar has missed our position, or found it vague, let me state it for him once again very clearly. We will not impose producer marketing boards upon the producers of rapeseed, but we are prepared to offer them this type of marketing should they choose it. We have waited until they themselves are able to say that the information has been in their hands long enough to enable appropriate consultations to be held. I should like to repeat what I have said to some producer organizations and their representatives in the last few weeks: I believe the time is now ripe for us to take that next step and consult producers about the kind of marketing they want.

The member for Saskatoon-Biggar referred to price differentials which can exist under the present system. He referred to farmers who sell at a lower price at one period of the year and who then find that their neighbours are selling at a different price in another period of the year. This, of course, is one of the annoyances which will lead some producers to opt for board marketing, which will lead some producers to choose to get out of the business of speculating directly on the rapeseed market; they wish to farm to raise the grain, not to speculate in its sale. This leads them to prefer the board marketing system.

Other producers, of course, have taken the view that the rapeseed market has been doing very well, that the price has been high and that the product has been moving. This is the aspect they are apt to stress in their arguments with other producers on this question. Let hon. members have no doubt about this, however: we propose to proceed by holding consultations on this question with producers in the very near future as to the kind of marketing system they prefer and then to move in accordance with their wishes, given the support of the House of Commons for the principle—a sensible one in my view—that machinery should be available to enable producers to handle their products in the way that producers desire.

The hon. member for Saskatoon-Biggar—I am glad to see him back in his place—also dealt with the need to provide relief for farmers whose crops suffer from particularly adverse weather conditions. He said there was a need for the Minister of Agriculture to view the scene in person. The Minister of Agriculture is an extremely energetic and sympathetic man who is going about his duties with tremendous enthusiasm and with the interest of the farmers very much at heart. He is away, necessarily, for several hours this afternoon on official business. On his behalf as well as on my own I should like to say a few words on this subject.

Hon. members are apt to ignore the fact that the provinces have some very important responsibilities in the field of agriculture. The hon. member says the Minister of Agriculture should personally visit the scene of these crop failures. Mr. Speaker, when localized problems occur it is particular fitting that provincial ministers of agriculture should take a lead and deal with them. This has been the position of the federal government for some time with respect to problems which can arise in localized areas, whether they involve fire or flood or unusual weather conditions.

Essentially, responsibility lies within the area in which the setback occurs. The federal government is ready to assist when the magnitude of the problem is so great that the burden would be too much for the provincial government concerned to bear. Notwithstanding this general rule, we have involved ourselves to the extent of strengthening the hand of the provincial ministers of agriculture both in eastern and in western Canada by offering certain forms of assistance in situations of this kind.

There are certain difficulties attached to rushing in with assistance when particular problems involving crop damage occur. Crop insurance programs across this country have been developed as a result of initiatives taken by this government and its predecessor. The usefulness of the program is gradually improving, and consequent upon the step now proposed, in accordance with which the federal government would bear an even greater share of the cost of the premiums across the country, it may improve even further. It is, of course, important that the crop insurance plans should be good plans and that farmers take advantage of what is, after all, the main measure of insurance against the occasional disaster which might occur. To some extent the provision of special assistance militates against the development of good crop insurance plans.

I should also like to draw attention two ways in which other governments have acted to assist areas in which weather conditions, particularly in early winter, give rise to chronic problems. There is the forage incentive program, now going into its third year of operation, under which some 3.7 million acres have already been taken from grain production and put to grass and forage as a base for livestock industries and to enable farmers to raise produce which is free from certain hazards such as early snow which can afflict wheat, barley and other grain crops.

I am happy to note that applications for payment under the forage incentive program came largely from areas in which the cattle industry should develop, areas in which grain production may be hazardous because of the recurrence of unfavourable weather conditions year after year. It is also the case that over the past three years we have offset some of the problems which arose in connection with the production of barley in those areas, thus making it easier for farmers to switch some of the risk away from themselves by planting barley instead of wheat. We achieved this result by revising the quota system in a way which brought about equality of treatment for barley growers as compared with wheat growers. We did it by carefully watching the initial prices for barley to ensure that they were attractive. In doing this we benefited the whole country by assuring new feed grain markets, markets which had for so long been neglected in this country. We have now gone into them in a big way. Barley is being grown in those areas where the climate is conducive to the shorter maturing period required by that crop, to the benefit of the farmers directly concerned and also to the national good.

This year we have also taken advantage of legislation passed by parliament at the initiative of the Liberal government two and a half years ago. I refer to the ability to extend by order in council cash advances in relation to grain which is still unharvested. This is a modest form of assistance but a useful one, so useful that in two previous periods it received special attention in the House in the form of legislation to enable the government to extend those provisions to the farmers affected. We have been able to do this by order in council as a result of the foresight shown on the last occasion when this question was discussed. On that occasion the provision to which I have referred was specifically embodied in the law.

The hon. member for Saskatoon-Biggar inquired about present Wheat Board cash advances. I have already discussed this subject with officials of the Wheat Board as a result of my own concern about the position of farmers who find themselves in a difficult financial situation as a result of adverse weather conditions—farmers who are in arrears in their repayments and in whose case the Wheat Board feels it is necessary to take some action to protect its own position. I am afraid that the position in which the Wheat Board finds itself is such as to require some steps to be taken in connection with these arrears. The farmers in question had undertaken to be in possession of adequate grain to repay the advances at the time they took out the initial advance. This has created some difficulties.

I have discussed the seed grain situation with the Minister of Agriculture. He will certainly see to it that should there be a shortage steps will be taken to ensure that supplies are available.

The government has been attempting not only to assist farmers in difficult financial situations but to encourage the production of crops which are most suited to particular areas as a means of minimizing the size of losses which can occur. I am happy that notwithstanding certain criticisms, the gist of the hon. member's remarks has been to support the measures which have been taken.

Mr. Hamilton (Qu'Appelle-Moose Mountain): Mr. Chairman, I hardly thought when I returned to the House of Commons that my first speech would be on agriculture, but this seems to be my fate. I rise to say a few words to the absent Minister of Agriculture, not only to give him condolences for his job but to support him in what I suspect is his new, fresh attitude toward the marketing of grain in this country. When three weeks ago he asked the farmers of western Canada to grow all the grain they could, I was in western Canada and supported those remarks because they were the direct opposite of what we had been told for the previous four years.

Votes before the committee of $8 million or $9 million, money to help farmers in great distress, can only be understood by the rest of the country when we look at the whole situation in perspective. The perspective of the last four years has been of a government that is going the wrong way in the matter of marketing, that has been reducing the income of farmers to a level where they could not build up reserves with which to meet the emergencies that occur, whether they be in the Peace River area, eastern Ontario, the Maritimes or the eastern townships of Quebec. That was a deliberate decision made by the government of the day after three years of study, and it sent this country in the wrong direction.

Today this country stands condemned in the eyes of the hungry people of this world for not being able to do what it is elementary that we do here, namely, produce food for the world, something we can do so efficiently. By letting the income of our farmers decline to the point it reached in 1969 and 1970 we took away the farmers' ability to produce food and meet the demands of the world.

It is a matter of shame to every Canadian who ponders about this interdependent world in which we live that for the last four years Canada has been a net importer of beef at a time when the world is desperately short of protein. No government sitting in the seat of power during the last four years can escape that indictment. It is no help to the people around the world who need that protein to say that our American neighbours are also importing beef, because their government stands condemned for the same reason. The United States took land out of production and applied restrictions. That is why today the American farmers, indeed the American people, stand beside Canadians equal in guilt and equal in shame for not doing the basic things they should have done.

It is on the subject of grain that I want to speak most strongly. I shall praise the Minister of Agriculture so long as he keeps going in the direction he is going now, namely, that of expanding production. When there is a hungry world, any minister or any government that votes for restricting the production of food in a country that can produce food as Canada can stands condemned not only before parliament but before the country and their own conscience. I want to make that very clear.

There has been a debate all over the western world this last 15 to 20 years about the future of agriculture. World economists have been looking at the traditional markets for certain products. To use wheat as an example, in our traditional bread-grain markets of Europe these economists see a declining per capita consumption of bread-grains, and since the population is not increasing quickly enough to take up the slack these economists say that we must advise our farmers in the bread growing areas of the world to reduce production.

They do not see in that model two billion people living in Asia, South America and Africa who would like access to any type of food whether traditional with them or not. They do not see in that model that China has now come into the market as a steady purchaser of bread-grains from western countries. They do not see in that model that they use that Russia, having spread its agricultural production across the Urals and into the volatile, dry land of that area, sporadically comes into the market to buy several hundred million bushels of grain. They do not see any of these new factors in that model. They do not see in the general picture that whereas ten years ago the average trade in wheat between the countries of the world was roughly one billion bushels a year, it is today over two billion bushels a year and is still rising. What was a surplus ten years ago is nothing at all today.

When so much was said in this House two years ago about surplus there was roughly a surplus of two and a half billion bushels of grain, insufficient for one year's marketing. No merchant can stay in business without having something on the shelves, but we took our inventory off the shelves. That is what I want to speak about, Mr. Chairman, putting it in very simple terms.

In addition to the advice given to us by economists, advice was also given to us by those who know the needs of people—nutritionists, demographers, sociologists. A conference was held here in Canada in June of 1969, the first and only conference of this kind held in Canada, attended by all the brains of the Ford Foundation, the Rockefeller Foundation and the Food and Agriculture Organization, etc. At this conference representatives told of all they had done to bring about a green revolution around the world and confessed that even with all their efforts in the waters of the sea and on the dry land areas of the world, they would be unable to meet the needs of the people of the world. Therefore, they pleaded with governments to go all out to produce all the food they could. Figures were cited showing how they were losing the race.

The minister of agriculture in the previous government, the Hon. H. A. Olson, was given this information and he attended the November meeting in Rome of FAO. On November 11 he stood before the FAO nations and pledged Canada's all-out support for the expansion of production to help meet the deficiency in food production around the world. He made that pledge on our behalf.

Three months later it was repudiated in this House and in the country.

Mr. Chairman, I have got to the point in my remarks where I should like to make them cohesive, so may I call it six o'clock?

[Translation]

The Deputy Chairman: Order. It being six o'clock I do now leave the chair until eight o'clock.

At 6 p.m., the House took recess.

[English]

AFTER RECESS

The committee resumed at 8 p.m.

The Deputy Chairman: Order, please. When the committee rose at six o'clock it was considering the schedule of Bill C-141, particularly votes 15a and 40a.

Mr. Hamilton (Qu'Appelle-Moose Mountain): Mr. Chairman, when the committee rose at six o'clock I was in the process of putting before it the type of decision the government made some three years ago which was so disastrous to the farmers of western Canada and to the world as a whole. I described one type of advice coming from the nutritionists, to the effect that no matter what we could do, we could not begin to feed the world and meet the gap which existed between the needs and our ability to supply. On the other hand, there was advice coming from economists mainly, to the effect that governments in the western world should restrict production and match production to the markets in our traditional areas.

To show that this debate was a lively one I hold up to the committee, as an example, the speech delivered by the then minister of agriculture, the Hon. H. A. Olson, in which he quoted figures from nutritionists pointing out that we produced only a certain amount of food in the world but that needs were roughly one-third higher. This speech was delivered on November 11, 1969, by the then Canadian minister of agriculture to the FAO. Three months later, on February 27, 1970, the minister in charge of the Wheat Board made a statement in the House of Commons to the effect that we had too much wheat on hand, requiring farmers, by inducement and by force, to stop producing wheat in the year 1970. That policy enunciated by the minister in charge of the Wheat Board was a strike in the back of his colleague the minister of agriculture which destroyed that minister before the producers of western Canada.

When the then minister of agriculture took that stand in November, 1969, I am positive he did so with all the honesty of any minister of agriculture speaking on a subject so important to his portfolio. In the meantime, the government—and I can only assume it was the minister in charge of the Wheat Board who had the biggest say—reversed the policy and the direction of the minister of agriculture by coming out for restriction with the Lift program which is supposed to mean "lower inventory for tomorrow" but which turned out to be "lower income for tomorrow." That is why the farmers in Peace River and in every other part of the country who have been smashed about by this government for the last four or five years cannot cope with this emergency situation with which we are now faced.

That decision by the government in February, 1970, was only part of a four-point program or package to restrict agriculture. The first as the Lift program to stop wheat production in western Canada for that year. Secondly, the government brought in a marketing act, the infamous Bill C-176, as a result of which farmers were not given control over their agriculture; control and decision-making in every step of agriculture from seeding to selling was put under the power of civil servants, with no control by parliament and no control by the farmers. It was a terrific example of controls and restriction on agriculture along the lines that economists of Europe, and later of North America, advocated. Thirdly, we had the stabilization bill. This bill meant that if you did what civil servants told you to do, you would be eligible for a formula-type minimum wage on the farm of $2,000 a year. I will not go into detail as to what happened to these bills.

The fourth part of the package was the adjustment program. This was a program aimed, as the task force had recommended in 1969, at getting two out of every three farmers in every part of Canada—not just in the west—off the farm, and the farmers in the west to cut grain acreage in half. This four-point program was the result of an economic theory called supply-management. This supply-management theory was in control and was running the government; the ministers had no say and I do not think the government understood what they were walking into. The time when appointed officials of government can run the elected officials of government is about over, and that is what the issue was across this country last year.

I have spoken of these two speeches and have indicated to the committee what the issues were. I simply point out that as a result of these restrictive policies and the whole direction the government took—and it was a wrong direction—income which from 1953 to 1957 had been about $2,000 a year for farmers in Saskatchewan and had slowly climbed from 1961 to 1967 to about $6,000 a year suddenly went down to $2,000 a year. Yet the experts ask me why the west went against the government. If your income had been $2,000, and it went up to $6,000 and then back down to $2,000, would you not think that the government was a wrong-way government? Only one Liberal outside the city of Winnipeg survived the feelings of westerners.

I think I have said enough to illustrate the fact that we have had a wrong-way government because we have had wrong-way ministers. We have had a fire-sale government which in spite of shortages a year and a half ago forced the sale of grain regardless of price, and they come along now and tell us to look at all the bushels they have sold. I know it is hard to explain to non-farmers how the impact of this situation hits the western farmer. If you ran a car lot which was facing another car lot on the other side of the street, and you left an agent in charge while you were away and came back after a short trip to find all your cars were sold, you might say, "What a good boy he is." But if you found he sold all the cars at below cost, you were broke and the guy across the street was still in business, I am sure you would get rid of that salesman.

This fire-sale attitude is the basic reason for the troubles the government is now facing. This is the basic reason for many people around this world suffering a food shortage. They are short of rice in Southeast Asia, and short of wheat all over the world; yet we sit with relatively nothing to sell because of this policy forcing the farmers to sell, not on an orderly basis according to the Wheat Board but through fire-sale type activity.

We tried to get rid of this situation 35 or 37 years ago when we set up the Canadian Wheat Board. However, this government has hit farmers so hard during the last four years that it will take a generation to remove the monument in their minds which says that the Lift program is a program to take farmers out of production. Now, when the price is up to $3 per bushel, there is no grain to sell. The government has just begun to pay the price of that folly.

My final words to the absent Minister of Agriculture are to keep his back close to the wall and not to let them do to him what they did to Olson. In the last days of the campaign Olson said that the Lift program was the greatest mistake of his life. It was not only the greatest mistake of his life; it was the greatest mistake of every member of the government and everybody else who supported that program, because they betrayed not only the farmers but also the hungry peoples of the world. That is the indictment of this government.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Lang: Mr. Chairman, I rise with pleasure following the remarks of the hon. member for Qu'Appelle-Moose Mountain who is back with us in this House after a period of absence. I do so with pleasure because after the recent election campaign the hon. member for Qu'Appelle-Moose Mountain had been saying things far apart from what his leader and other agricultural critics of his party had been saying and they found it necessary to make him the critic for energy, mines and resources.

You may not know this, Mr. Chairman, but during the course of the election campaign the Conservative platform contained a promise that the initial price for wheat should go up by 30 cents a bushel. At that time it was $1.45 a bushel. Shortly thereafter the world price began moving very rapidly, and in order to put funds into the hands of the farmers we raised the price of wheat by 31 cents a bushel compared to the 30 cents a bushel the opposition was advocating. Then they did not know whether they were promising an additional 30 cents a bushel or what. This is part of their policy which allowed them to speak in different tongues in different parts of the country.

I know my own opponent wanted to get one step up, so he said that their 30 cents would be in addition to what the Liberals had done. That set me back a little until the Leader of the Opposition was in town the next day and said that now the Liberals had done exactly what the Conservatives had promised. I should say to hon. members that the initial price at $1.76 meant an elevator price of perhaps in the order of $1.47 or $1.50 depending on where you are, which the Leader of the Opposition said they had promised while my opponent said they would go 30 cents better. That, of course, did not bother the hon. member for Qu'Appelle-Moose Mountain because he had promised a $2 price at the elevator right from the beginning and he was able to stand with that. However, as I say they made him responsible for the field of energy, mines and resources rather than grain. We have to admit that the hon. member for Qu'Appelle-Moose Mountain is the visionary of his party. Of course, everybody knows what a visionary is; in the Tory party a visionary is someone who after something has happened can in fact see it clearly.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Lang: I say that particularly in relation to what the hon. member has just said in speaking about the Lift program. He should go back over the remarks of his colleagues in the House at the time the Lift program was announced. Their criticism ranged from the fact that it would not do any good because, with all that summer fallow, the next year as much grain would be grown again and we would be back with the same problem we had in the first place. That is the kind of line they were taking.

The point, of course, is that they talked about our having to sell a lot more grain than we were. They tried to talk about the hon. member for Qu'Appelle-Moose Mountain as their great salesman. It turns out that for the past several years the best year for sales while he was Minister of Agriculture responsible for the Wheat Board has been far surpassed. In fact, I expect within a matter of months to be able to report to the House that we have sold as much in a year as he sold in the best two years put together.

The years in which the hon. member was responsible for the Canadian Wheat Board were years of building elevators in the prairie region. He built more elevators and just put more grain into them. He never really sold as much as was being produced. The farmers were complaining more and more about the problem of accumulated grain. Then along came my colleague the Secretary of State for External Affairs who had some golden years during which grain moved very rapidly out of the country in record volumes—close to 700 million bushels. Indeed, when he was minister responsible for the Canadian Wheat Board he had to ask the Wheat Board questions which the hon. member for Qu'Appelle-Moose Mountain never had to ask, namely, how much was it possible to carry out of the country with the existing handling and transportation system, a system which of course had been inherited in the previous five years from the Conservative government of which the hon. member for Qu'Appelle-Moose Mountain was the key minister in this field. My colleague was told what the limits were and he exported grain in those years when he was responsible at a record level, with the handling and transportation system which we had—a level which was not even conceived of when the hon. member opposite was the minister responsible. That is the fact of the matter with regard to where our grain situation stood.

The hon. member has just made an impassioned speech about how we should be feeding the poor peoples of the world and should have gone on growing grain for them.

Let me ask hon. members whether through 1968-69 and 1969-70, when we had large surpluses of grain in this country, they were treated as assets by our buyers around the world. Not a bit of it. They were treated as reasons for depressing the price. It was not until the United States finally made a large sale of grain to Russia this year—and it probably did not involve as much as we adjusted our inventory by during 1970—that there was a dramatic impact upon the world price and we started to get for our farmers a fair price for grain, a price not below the cost of production.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Lang: The facts of the matter are that we had an inventory in this country which was treated by all our farmers as being a significant problem. Indeed, if the hon. member will look back at the speeches of his colleague he will find that they were complaining about the Lift program partly because they said those farmers who saw the surplus problem as a real problem had already done something about it, and that now we were bringing in a program which did not allow for the fact that they had already coped with the problem. That was the kind of criticism they levelled at us. They saw that that kind of supply on hand was in fact a problem; it was a price depressant problem in the world.

We were told that we should go out and sell grain. I said at that time, and we did it, that we would sell grain at record volumes year after year notwithstanding this program. In the very best year while the hon. member for Qu'Appelle-Moose Mountain had responsibility for the Wheat Board we had an export figure of 453 million bushels. When I first asked the Canadian Wheat Board whether it could in fact handle an export of 800 million bushels, I was told it could perhaps handle 700 million bushels. In the year 1970-71 we went beyond 700 million bushels; we reached a figure of 706 million bushels. Last year we exported 824 million bushels. This year, with grain at record prices, we are exporting at new record volumes and can go on into next year exporting again at record volumes, notwithstanding what the hon. member says about supply.

Of course, we know the hon. member said we should have realized the desirability of moving into beef production. He was not here and perhaps has forgotten that with the Lift program we went into a forage incentive program to encourage the cattle industry. When that was over we offered the prairie farmers $40 million at $10 an acre to move grain land into grass because we believed there was a future in beef and that was what we should be producing. We talked about diversification into meat and into barley. I wonder whether the hon. member knows what the word barley means.

An hon. Member: I don't think he does.

Mr. Lang: I am not sure whether hon. members know this, but barley is produced traditionally almost for the purposes of drink; farmers in the prairie area were encouraged to grow low protein barley for the best possible distilling purposes. Occasionally we got into the feed grain barley markets of the world. When barley turned up being high protein it would be fed to cattle, but it was never promoted to any significant degree in foreign markets. Members from the Tory party are rankling at that and they ask: what are the facts?

Here are the facts: in 1957-58, just as the Tories were coming to power, we exported about 80 million bushels of barley. In the subsequent years 70 million, 63 million, 42 million, 48 million and 15 million bushels of barley were exported to world markets. This includes malting barley of the type which was being grown.

We turned our attention to barley in a big way. We said that we should get into the feed grain markets of the world and we asked the Wheat Board to go to work to market that grain. And they did. In the first year of that decision they moved barley exports up to nearly 90 million bushels. In 1970-71 they exported 179 million bushels, and last year they exported over 200 million bushels.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Lang: We are told, Mr. Chairman, that in some fashion the Lift program, which was designed to put $70 million into the hands of the prairie farmers—and it did—contributed to their lower income. But the fact is that the farmers' income depends upon the movement of grain into markets, not the piling up of grain in the granaries on the farms. I am surprised that hon. members to this day do not understand that piling grain in granaries does not provide income. In the following years we moved grain into markets beyond the actual production in those years, and we began to encourage farmers to produce barley and wheat and to stay in the rapeseed markets in the world in a full way; and we can now go out, as our new and enthusiastic Minister of Agriculture is doing—

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Hees: Would the minister permit a question?

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Lang: Yes, Mr. Chairman.

The Deputy Chairman: Order, please. I would advise members of the committee to listen to the question which the minister has permitted.

Mr. Hees: I should like to ask the minister why, if the Liberal party has done so well in the west, they practically threw them out lock, stock and barrel last October 30.

Mr. Lang: Mr. Chairman, the hon. member for Prince Edward-Hastings has asked a very relevant and important question. Of course, his colleagues have pointed to about 92 identifiable reasons why the west might have done that. I share a seat with my colleague, the Minister of National Defence, who was not affected by that; and I should like to point out that, surely, over these years if the grain policy of this government was identified with anyone, it was identified with me—and my majority rose from 500 to 8,000.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

The Deputy Chairman: Order, please. I am sure hon. members would be interested to hear the minister complete his remarks.

Mr. Lang: Mr. Chairman, I had better not allow any more questions from the hon. member for Prince Edward-Hastings because it ill becomes my modesty to have to answer him in that way.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Lang: At the moment our situation in the world is such that the price for feed grain, rapeseed and wheat is at a high level. This is of great importance to the producer because grain is moving at record volume to export markets. We can say to producers: go ahead and fertilize to the limit of your knowledge in terms of your production capacity. So long as they were producing for bins which were already full, they were not doing that and they were costing themselves the bushels which in fact are the cheapest to produce. They can now correct that and they can do it with confidence because they know that our marketing policy, and the facilities that we have made available to the Canadian Wheat Board, ensure that we will go on marketing to the extent of our capacity and transport grain into world markets except in years when conditions change so much that it is impossible to do so.

I hope that for that purpose one day the hon. member will look at the stabilization program, and I hope that by that time we will have been able to put it into effect, because if it comes to pass that our volume of export turns down by 200 million or 300 million bushels from the new record levels, it will be on the conscience of the hon. member's colleagues that there is no stabilization program to put $200 million to $400 million into the pockets of the prairie farmers in that year. I have some confidence we will have been able to correct it before that may happen, but in the meantime let it be on the hon. member's conscience.

Mr. Hamilton (Qu'Appelle-Moose Mountain): Mr. Chairman, if you have been bored with the committee proceedings to date, I think it has come alive in the last little while. I think the committee owes thanks to the Minister of Justice for having met my attack head-on, because he has repeated to the committee what he was saying across the west most of last year. It is this type of gibberish, that he pours out like a fountain without a tap to control it, that cost so many Liberals their seats.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Hamilton (Qu'Appelle-Moose Mountain): The Prime Minister has said that he realizes he has made a great mistake in his attitude toward the west. Because of this I was trying to advise the Minister of Agriculture to beware of what he should do. I will answer the Minister of Justice in his capacity as minister responsible for the Wheat Board by giving him the facts which won the west. And let me point out that I did not have anything like the voice he had; I had to stay down in my little corner of the province. He had a staff in Saskatoon working for a year in advance to get this great majority. But he took that majority for himself personally and cut the throat of any other Liberal candidate there.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Paproski: That is a real friend for you.

Mr. Hamilton (Qu'Appelle-Moose Mountain): When I spoke earlier I referred to the Minister of Justice in his capacity as minister responsible for the Wheat Board striking down his colleague, the ex-minister of agriculture, Mr. Olson, who had come out on Canada's behalf with pledges for an all-out production of grain. The minister came along three months later and said "There is too much grain. Cut down all wheat acreage in 1970." That is the monument that the farmers will carry of him as long as they live.

Now, as for that little highschool boy chit-chat about the initial price, it was clear to us a year and a half ago that Russia was in trouble with the winter wheat crop. The right hon. member for Prince Albert spoke up in this House on several occasions and asked the minister in charge of the Wheat Board when was he going to raise the price to take advantage of this great demand for grain. All the minister could come back and say was, "The Americans won't raise the price." Mr. Chairman, when was there a law in this country which said Canadians could not raise the price? Never in the history of parliament has any minister ever stood up and said he had no right to have any say about the future and the prices of our products, that he had to run down to the U.S.A. and ask the people who have led this whole supply-management nonsense for the last 15 years, "Won't you raise the price?"

Do you think the farmers are going to be happy with all these statistics and figures when they sit on their farms with almost empty granaries and when they know that the grain they grew over the last five or six years was dumped on the market in 1971 and 1972 at a price below the cost of production? Now they sit there with empty granaries when grain is selling at $3 a bushel and the minister sits here in this House and says, "What a good boy am I." Mr. Chairman, he is the boy who took over the automobile lot and sold all the cars at half price before the boss came back. The boss in this case is the voter, and he will clean out the Liberals.

With respect to the initial price, our party met in Saskatoon in June last year. We asked the party to accept the fact that prices had to go up and that the farmers should be told and given a little hope. We said we should increase the initial price of all three main grains. As a matter of fact, we announced that officially at the beginning of the election campaign. Then the minister became terrified that he might lose a vote in Saskatoon-Humboldt and he raised the initial prices by the same amount that we advocated. This does not mean one cent more to the farmer, Mr. Chairman; he simply gets some money into his hands earlier.

Now I want to come to the main issue and get to real grips with the minister. During the campaign, Mr. Chairman, not only did I support the raising of the initial price but I called for a price of $2 at Thunder Bay and I said there would be no trouble about reaching it because the price would go to $2.50 by Christmas. I was wrong; it went up to nearly $3. But you have to give farmers some hope when they are broke, particularly after four years of government under the leadership of the type given by the Minister of Justice. Long before the price rose above $1.75, where this minister was keeping it, I said it should be $2. I won't go back over all that hash. But back in 1953 to 1957 in western Canada we piled up wheat. Then the government changed and in 1961 and 1962 we gave open quotas to the farmers and all the grain they could produce was sold.

Mr. Hees: Those were the golden years.

Mr. Hamilton (Qu'Appelle-Moose Mountain): I asked the farmers to go out and grow all they could because the world needed it. In 1963 when we were negotiating the long-term agreements, which the Secretary of State for External Affairs knows all about because he signed them word for word as I had negotiated them, I asked the farmers, "Please grow all the grain you can and help meet the needs of a hungry world." The farmers cleaned off brushland, brought land back into production, put in seed and fertilizer, cut the crops off and raised average farm income from $2,000 to $6,000.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Hamilton (Qu'Appelle-Moose Mountain): It was not pleasant for me, Mr. Chairman, to sit out of parliament later and watch the succeeding government, with its restrictive measures, bring that average income down from $6,000 to $2,000 in the years 1969 and 1970. I don't care how many bushels you sell, it is what is left in your pocket when you have sold it that counts. It is for this that we hold the government guilty.

Now we sit here with a hungry world around us, with race riots all through Southeast Asia because of hunger, with trouble in Pakistan, India and Afghanistan and we cannot help those peoples because we do not have the grain. Russia still wants grain. The wheat farmer in Russia is in trouble again this year. Russia wants more grain this year. Where are we going to get it? I am glad that this debate is taking place. What is the point of the minister saying, "Look at all the bushels I have sold," when the farmers are broke? Why are we voting this money to help the farmers in the Peace River area? It is because they do not have money to cope with a local, one year disaster. It would be the same in any part of the grain area.

Finally, Mr. Chairman, the minister mentioned barley. That is a word he should not have mentioned. We all know about his barley goings on. Barley is a coarse grain that used to be produced for making beer. Then the Americans found a way to produce their own barley to make their own beer, and that market went to pieces. But ever since 1960-61 there has been a rising demand for coarse grains around the world, including barley, not for making beer but for feeding animals. The minister is quite correct when he says that the best future for grain is going to be in the feed grains, not just the bread-grains. I am not arguing that at all; what I am arguing about is this barley business.

Somebody gave orders to the Canadian Wheat Board in April, 1970, when the farmers were rising in protest against Operation Lift all over the three prairie provinces, and told the Wheat Board to break the law, not to follow the processes of orderly marketing but to dump barley onto the world markets. In the succeeding months the Wheat Board dumped millions and millions of bushels of western barley on world markets; in fact, there was not enough to meet all the feed contracts so in 1971 the minister went out and said to the farmers, "Grow all the barley you can." The farmers looked in the newspapers and saw that the price was $1.30 at Thunder Bay. They said that that was pretty good and so they grew 16½ million bushels of barley in 1971. But in 1972, when they went to get the extra above the initial payment, what did they get? They got zero, Mr. Chairman, and there was a loss on the pool of $11 million. This is what we want the minister to explain in committee, not here. There are more angry barley farmers around Saskatchewan than you will find in any other part of the world, and the minister should know that.

Now to deal with diversification. That action was taken by somebody frightened by the fuss farmers were raising about the Lift program. That somebody said, "We have to get money into the farmers' hands. Sell something." The only competition they had to sell against was an American broker down in Duluth who had 20 million bushels of rotten barley in his granaries which he was trying to get rid of for 57 cents or 58 cents a bushel. We sold our barley in competition with rotten barley in a bin in Duluth. Who was this person who interfered and intervened with the Wheat Board? I want to know, and so do a lot of farmers. We want to find out who gave that order. It was not orderly marketing; it was fire-sale marketing. The law says that the Wheat Board is to sell grain at the best possible price for the advantage of the western farmer. But somebody interfered, somebody monkeyed. And somebody has to pay the price. These are the reasons we on this side of the House want some answers from the government.

It is all very fine to vote a $400 grant each to a group of farmers who have been hard hit this year. But that does not cover the gap between conscience and fact. The fact is that the farmers have been betrayed. The farmers have not had their grain sold at above cost. The farmers have not seen the government renew these long-term agreements with the iron curtain countries. The farmers have seen everything that they had hoped and dreamed of in the years 1965 to 1967, when everything was looking up for them, destroyed under the present Minister of Justice who thinks that because he is from Saskatchewan he is the natural crown prince of the Liberal party.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Paproski: That is not what David Lewis called him.

Mr. Hamilton (Qu'Appelle-Moose Mountain): These crown princes can always be identified, Mr. Chairman; they have eaten the royal jelly and they know what they want. Not only should the Minister of Finance look over his shoulder, but so should the Prime Minister because when the crown prince from Saskatchewan moves in, God help the Liberal party!

Mr. Prud'homme: Are you jealous?

An hon. Member: What about your own party?

Mr. Basford: You should know about crown princes.

Mr. Prud'homme: Talk about 1962-63.

Mr. Hamilton (Qu'Appelle-Moose Mountain): Mr. Chairman, the Liberal party knows that in order to survive as a national party their next leader must not come from Quebec or Ontario. The minister from Saskatchewan knows that very well.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Hamilton (Qu'Appelle-Moose Mountain): Mr. Chairman, what we heard here tonight was not only childish chit-chat; it was a man preaching for a call. When all the Liberal delegates come from the west to select their new leader, I suspect they will not call for him. They remember the monument of Lift, and that will be the monument as long as he lives.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Walker: Mr. Chairman, may I ask the hon. member a question?

The Deputy Chairman: Order, please. Would the hon. member permit a question?

Mr. Hamilton (Qu'Appelle-Moose Mountain): I am always glad to entertain a question, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. Walker: May I ask the hon. member from which part of the country he feels his next leader should come in order for his party to survive?

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Hamilton (Qu'Appelle-Moose Mountain): Mr. Chairman—

The Deputy Chairman: Order, please. Would the hon. member resume his seat. The question as asked is inviting a prediction by the hon. member, and I do not think it is in order.

Mr. Nesdoly: Mr. Chairman, I hope not to indulge in too many recriminations during this debate on production, marketing and livestock feed boards. I should like to remind hon. members on my right that when the farm stabilization act was before this House a year and a half ago it took members from Saskatchewan in the New Democratic Party to stop it. Other members tucked their tails under and ran.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Nesdoly: I should like to make some constructive suggestions instead of delving into history which goes back 100 years. The Conservative and Liberal parties have their past glories to live with; we in the New Democratic Party have our future glory to come by.

Mr. Paproski: You have a lot of hope.

Mr. Nesdoly: We have a lot of patience, Mr. Chairman. I should like to point out the necessity of encouraging prairie farmers to produce enough barley and rapeseed to meet market demands at a time when world wheat demand is at record levels. To reduce the supply of other grains may limit the future markets for these alternate crops.

I know that people in the prairie provinces are very concerned that production of some of the other crops will be neglected and they do not want to see this happen. We ought to encourage production of specialty crops such as rapeseed, rye, flax and barley—particularly rapeseed. The federal government should establish an incentives policy for producers of field grains to encourage sufficient acreage to ensure adequate supplies. One step to encourage production of grains other than wheat would be to increase the guaranteed initial payment for barley by at least 15 cents a bushel before seeding in the spring of 1973.

In Saskatchewan we would like to use most of the feed grains we produce to feed our own hogs and cattle, and we would like to develop our own meat packing industry and the secondary industries as well. When we produce enough for export we will gladly ship it to Ontario and Quebec as well as to the overseas markets. If the federal government desires or demands changes in production patterns or a variety of changes for some reason or other, financial incentives should be provided to producers to make the required adjustment.

I should like to say a word or two about the international trade in grains, Mr. Chairman. Since the price range in the International Grains Agreement collapsed in 1971 the world has not had effective international agreements for trade in grains. The present International Wheat Agreement which began in mid-1971 runs to mid-1974 but it does not have any price ranges at all. Producers and consumers of grain, especially wheat, are best served by an effective and strong international agreement concerning price, supply and trading conditions.

I urge the minister responsible for the Wheat Board to work with vigour to develop a climate in which a new and effective agreement may be forged after the present one expires. Things are looking better on the Prairies, Mr. Chairman, and we do not want the things that happened four or five or ten or 15 years ago to happen again. In the west we want to look to the future and make our agricultural economy more stable. The new agreement which, hopefully, will be negotiated by 1974 will cover wheat and also feed grains.

This international agreement on grains should also include national and foreign stockholding policies, maintenance of adequate reserves, a reduction of trade barriers through commitment by exporters and importers, co-ordination of farm programs, maximum and minimum prices for world transactions and adequate food aid.

Now that the war in Viet Nam is over and people are still dying of starvation in Bangladesh, perhaps we should be laying aside a few million bushels to aid these war ravaged countries.

With regard to marketing, Mr. Chairman, I feel that the jurisdiction of the Canadian Wheat Board should be extended to cover the marketing of rapeseed, rye and flax. A recent study committee established by the federal grains group recommended that producers be provided an opportunity to say by plebiscite whether they support the present rapeseed marketing system or an alternative. I support the proposal for a plebiscite, as does my riding, and I urge producers to support the alternative which would give marketing authority over rapeseed to the Canadian Wheat Board.

Rapeseed is produced in my constituency and some is shipped to Vancouver and some to Thunder Bay. Because the futures market in Vancouver is consistently higher than in Thunder Bay, the result is that some points in Saskatchewan have a great differential in rapeseed prices although they are very close together geographically. On October 6, 1972, the price of rapeseed in Glaslyn was 23 cents a bushel more than at Meadow Lake. I was home to Shellbrook last weekend. I talked to many farmers at a hockey match. They told me that in the village of Leask the price of grain was 31 cents more than at Shellbrook. These two villages are 25 miles apart. What is disconcerting is that rapeseed packed into boxcars in Saskatchewan is shipped from Leask through Shellbrook to Prince Albert and on to the west coast, yet the producer of Shellbrook received 31 cents less last week.

An hon. Member: And he will this week, too.

Mr. Nesdoly: We should try to solve this problem, Mr. Chairman. Certainly this anomaly would be liquidated if prices were administered by the Wheat Board and the price of rapeseed was averaged. The only people benefiting now are the boys playing the futures market. There is a lobby in this House of people who are not interested in the welfare of the farmer but in the futures market or grain exchange operations at Winnipeg, or Vancouver, if there is one there.

Consequently, I suggest—and I believe this is part of the policy of the Saskatchewan wheat pool—(a) that the federal government introduce necessary legislation immediately which would give authority to the Canadian Wheat Board to market rapeseed; (b) that a producers' plebiscite be held to determine whether producers support extension of Wheat Board powers to the marketing of rapeseed; and (c) that any permit holder who has produced rapeseed in any one or more of the last three crop years be eligible to vote on this question and that a simple majority of those voting be required in favour before the marketing authority be given to the board. I think this is one step that can be taken immediately. It would be progressive.

Before produce can be marketed, it has to be moved. We hear a lot about occasional grain tie-ups on the west coast or at Thunder Bay. Personally, I favour nationalization of the grain handling system at Vancouver so that it is divorced from other work stoppages at that port. No farmer should be expected to haul his grain more than 25 miles under most circumstances. If the suggested rail lines are abandoned, some farmers will have to haul their grain 50 miles to market. I suggest that the scheduled abandonment of railroad lines be postponed until this entire matter is thoroughly studied to determine its effect on marketing and the movement of grain.

We are debating payments to farmers under farm income maintenance. Because of poor whether conditions and other risks associated with agriculture, we in this House should not begrudge the payment of moneys to farmers who have suffered crop losses. I am certainly in support of them. Perhaps they are not enough.

I hope this House will take some long-term measures in the direction of comprehensive crop insurance programs to ensure that every producer of crops in this country has some kind of insurance so that eventually there will be no need to debate in this House year after year crop losses in one part of Canada or another. This would necessitate co-operation between the federal and provincial governments.

As far as the estimates of production and marketing and the Canadian Livestock Feed Board are concerned, I am in agreement with them and I hope we can soon bring this matter to a vote.

Mr. Hamilton (Swift Current-Maple Creek): Mr. Chairman, I am pleased to take part in this debate on the production, marketing and transportation of our grains. Lately, a lot of fellows have been talking who have not produced too many bushels of wheat or barley. The minister in charge of the Wheat Board, and my friend the hon. member for Qu'Appelle-Moose Mountain, covered a lot of ground in a very few minutes.

There are a few things I would like to say about this world of wheat in which we live. The minister in charge of the Wheat Board is on pretty shaky ground when he starts patting himself on the back for the record exports that Canada is now enjoying, because last year 60 per cent of Canadian wheat exports went to production catastrophe areas around the world. That is a pretty shaky basis on which to build some stability into our grain industry. If anyone knows anything about grain, they know that Canada does not sell grain to Russia, India or Pakistan; those people come here and purchase it.

For five consecutive years western farmers saw farm deliveries of wheat go down, down, down. We ended up with a four-bushel quota with production controls in the form of Operation Lift around our neck. Farmers were ready to rebel. That is when the word came out for the Wheat Board to sell barley. I was on the floor of the Winnipeg exchange the day the Wheat Board offered its barley to the world. The big international traders could not believe what they were hearing. They got their hands on 150 million bushels of barley at a fire-sale price. That deal cost the western farmers $50 million.

The other day we were discussing the purchase of hopper cars. It was ironic that at the very time these estimates were being discussed in committee, American grain for export was being moved through Canada in Canadian cars over Canadian rails to Seattle. I received several calls that day from farmers in Saskatchewan commenting on the large number of Canadian cars in Montana and Dakota sitting on sidings. In one case, 52 empty Canadian boxcars had been there for over seven days. I want to read a statement given by a grain farmer to the press in southern Saskatchewan:

> Since the first of December, four or five hundred Canadian boxcars full of American grain have entered Canada at North Portal, Saskatchewan, gone up the Soo line, on to B.C., and then down into the states for export out of Seattle.

The farmer said he is critical of Canadian Pacific Railway for allowing the Americans to use Canadian cars and Canadian rail lines to move grain to coastal terminals when there is difficulty in having Canadian grain moved to the west coast. He said:

> As an example, North Portal has a six-bushel quota on wheat, and has trouble getting enough cars. But U.S. wheat moves right through there in Canadian boxcars.

The farmer then asked what sense there was in providing the railways with 2,000 additional cars so that it could take its own cars out of service and rent them to the Americans. The CPR claim they are up to date on all Wheat Board deliveries to Thunder Bay and the west coast. The point I am making is that there is no shortage of grain cars in Canada over-all, even now when we are in the midst of a record grain movement.

Senior officials of both railroads have given assurances in the past that they could move one billion bushels to export with the equipment they already have, given a degree of co-operation and planning. Our number one grain transportation problem has not been the number of grain cars available; it has been to get the cars through the Rocky Mountains to the Pacific seaboard so that the grain will be available to our customers when they want it and so that Canada could be classed as a dependable supplier. We must have some order of priorities, some long-range plans so that all segments of the grain industry, railroads, shippers, handling companies and, most important of all, producers will be able to see the future with some intelligence.

We on the Prairies are stunned by talk of spending hundreds of millions of dollars on new airports and hundreds of millions more on pipelines into the frozen north when we cannot now depend on getting our produce to the customers to their satisfaction. I was on board a Japanese ship in Vancouver just about a year ago. That vessel had been waiting there for 37 days to take on a cargo of Canadian feed barley. They hadn't taken on a single bushel. According to the captain, the cost of maintaining a vessel there was some $4,000 a day. Thirty-seven days at $4,000 a day—all of which will be paid for in demurrage and higher ocean freight by the western farmers!

Year after year thousands of loaded grain cars are trapped east of the Rocky Mountains because of the Fraser canyon. Last year the Canadian National line to Prince Rupert was blocked for five weeks. The Canadian Pacific track was blocked for four weeks through the Fraser canyon. Winter comes each year; and labour problems will continue to plague us. This $48 million expenditure will not solve our number one grain transportation problem, which is getting our product to the Pacific seaboard. More than 40 per cent of Canada's grain exports go out by way of the Pacific seaboard, yet the seaboard possesses only 10 per cent of Canada's terminal elevator capacity.

It is obvious that the present system has no capacity to stockpile. As a matter of fact, five million to seven million bushels of wheat is about the best they can do at the west coast—about a three-day supply at full loading rate. We are in good shape this year. Nature has been kind to us. The railroads have not been blocked. Vessels are arriving on time. There is no tough or damp grain. And there are no labour problems. According to the Canadian Grains Commission report for the week ending January 24, there were 6,853,000 bushels of milling wheat in seven terminals at the Pacific seaboard. Over a million bushels of that were in Prince Rupert. On the average, this is less than a boatload at each of the Vancouver and Victoria terminals.

Competing with western grain farmers for transportation to the west coast are coal, potash and sulphur. These commodities are handled in solid train and unit train lots through modern bulk handling facilities. There is a capacity for stockpiling for weeks ahead, thereby protecting customers against the consequences of railway stoppages. As the total tonnage handled by the railways continues to build rapidly, the grain export situation becomes more critical with each passing year. Grain, the only commodity under government control, is the one that suffers most.

The government of Canada conducted a three-year study of grain transportation at great cost to the taxpayers. Instead of acting on the report, hon. gentlemen opposite turned this hot potato over to the Canada Grains Council which now estimates it would take another five years to finalize. The expenditure of $48 million on these hopper cars was made for reasons of political expediency. It was announced by the Prime Minister in Winnipeg where it would make the biggest political impact just before the last election.

What we should be doing is using to the maximum the facilities which are already in existence. It is almost incredible that during the three-year transportation study nobody in the federal government ever contacted the bulk handling people in Vancouver—people whose systems contain unused capacity and who are ready, willing and able to help export more grain. The expenditure at the Pacific seaboard of a small portion of the $48 million spent on new grain cars would have increased the throughput of grain at Vancouver by more than a third, more than 100 million bushels a year. It would have allowed us to stockpile against rail stoppages and enabled us to use modern bulk loading facilities to compete with the coal, potash and sulphur moving to export.

A good deal has been said about the Lift program. I shall not say anything more about that. I will say that in 1971 the minister in charge of the Canadian Wheat Board went on record advocating the need for additional grain storage at the west coast. Our good customers, the Japanese, took the unprecedented step of sponsoring a transportation conference in Vancouver as a means of expressing their growing concern. However, the desire of the producers to move more grain to export and the customers' pleas for better west coast service have both gone unheeded.

We could and we should be selling and exporting more grain. On September 13, 1972, the Kansas City board of trade, talking about the tremendous increase in wheat prices, released the following news item from which I quote:

—but in Canada's case the increases were almost academic because that country was not booking any shipments at the higher prices, due to the fact that it had already sold all it could move overseas until May of next year.

With wheat quoted today at over $3 at the port of Vancouver, it is a tragedy for western farmers that Canada effectively stopped selling wheat some seven months ago. The expenditure of $48 million for 20 miles of grain cars is pretty dramatic stuff for us in western Canada. These cars are highly visible as they move around the Prairies, painted in appropriate colours, bright orange and gold. I can assure you, Mr. Chairman, nothing like it has ever been seen on Canadian rail lines before. The only thing missing is the minister's signature.

Let me draw attention to some of the things the federal government should be doing to help the grain transportation industry. First, we should be moving away from the inner harbour of Vancouver out to Roberts Bank where there is sufficient depth of water to accommodate the new large bulk carriers, giving us lower ocean freight and where we can stockpile and where pollution will not be such a pressing problem.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Hamilton (Swift Current-Maple Creek): Second, the government should recognize that the expenditure of a few million dollars on dredging the prairie port of Churchill would revolutionize it. This is probably the finest port in the world as far as the stockpiling of grain is concerned. The grain would keep for ever. The drawback is that Churchill doesn't have much political horsepower, and money spent there is not too visible.

Last year the government made trucking experiments in western Canada, moving grain to inland terminals by truck and thus releasing grain cars for export movement. In my view this was an unqualified success. We should be building up a prairie trucking industry ready to take over if railroad abandonment starts.

An hon. Member: What do you mean by "if"?

Mr. Hamilton (Swift Current-Maple Creek): The lines become unprotected in January, 1975. I charge the government with drawing the wrong conclusions from the trucking experiment. The operation should have been continued. It was never given a fair chance. Now, since the 2,000 new, large grain cars cannot be used effectively on light branch lines, the railroads will have yet another argument in favour of abandonment.

Mr. Lang: Would the hon. member permit a question?

Mr. Hamilton (Swift Current-Maple Creek): There is another proposal I have to advance. It is to bypass the Fraser canyon. It involves an alternate route. It involves 45 miles of line.

[Mr. Hamilton (Swift Current-Maple Creek).]

Mr. Lang: Would the hon. member permit a question?

• (2110)

Mr. Hamilton (Swift Current-Maple Creek): I should like to continue, Mr. Chairman, and then I will answer the hon. member.

The Chairman: I think the tradition is not to interrupt a maiden speech.

Mr. Hamilton (Swift Current-Maple Creek): Mr. Chairman, there is an alternative to the Fraser canyon route, and I think the federal government has a responsibility to act on it. It consists of a rail line some 45 miles long, joining our present CN and CP main lines just west of Kamloops to the British Columbia rail line which goes in a southwesterly direction to Squamish and Vancouver. This line would begin at Ashcroft and go up a hilly valley in a northwesterly direction to Clinton which is situated on the B.C. rail line. The proposed 45-mile loop would be built in a hilly mountain valley, not a mountainous canyon, closed-in type of terrain. At the present time there is already a highway joining these two towns.

Let me once again give the committee the figures relating to the three rail routes to the Pacific. The Prince Rupert line was blocked for five weeks last year, the Fraser canyon route was blocked for four weeks, but the proposed B.C. route was blocked for only 24 hours. Records for past years follow a similar pattern.

Our grain transportation industry has been studied to death, Mr. Chairman. In the last couple of years we have had plenty of task forces. We have had the Menzies report, a three-year transportation study which has now been passed on for another five years of study. We have had protein grading studies, quota system studies, block shipping studies and feed grain movement studies which have pitted eastern farmers against western farmers. The latest development was when the Quebec delegation walked out of the CFA meeting in Ottawa a few days ago. The government has done all these studies at great cost to the taxpayer. They have been done by very competent people who have gone as far as they can. It is now up to the government to act. What we want is some direction.

This government's response to our grain problems has been to build more and bigger bureaucracies. Let us look for a moment at some of the government organizations that the farmers and the transportation industry are expected to blueprint their way through. We have the Canadian Wheat Board, the Canadian Grains Commission, the Canada Grains Council, the grains group in Ottawa, the Canadian (International) Grains Institute, the grains division of the Department of Industry, Trade and Commerce, the Canadian government elevator system, the National Harbours Board elevator system, the Canadian Livestock Feed Board. Under growing federal government bureaucracy we now have the Manitoba Grain Commission, the Saskatchewan Grain Commission and the Alberta Grain Commission. How many more such bodies will we have to support before the government finally accepts its responsibility and moves to bring some order out of chaos?

I am apprehensive, Mr. Chairman, and so are a good many other farmers. I say this because the government has consistently drawn the wrong conclusions, or no conclusion at all. Our grain industry has been managed by default. Three times during the last ten years we have been taken to the limit of our transportation facilities. In 1963 the Russians bought every bushel of wheat that Canada could export. In 1965 Russia and China again took all the grain we could move to export. In 1972 once again we found a desperate world at our ports and once again we were unable to accommodate the demand. Dr. Boerma, director of the Food and Agriculture Organization, has stated that world wheat stocks are now at their lowest level in 20 years, and during that period the world's population has grown by 50 per cent.

This government's action—or lack of action—is nothing short of criminal. The expenditure of $48 million on hopper cars is very difficult to justify in so far as increasing our exports of grain are concerned. Western Canadian farmers are not being saved by the politics of this government; they are being saved by the politics of hunger, by the food crisis which has made tens of millions destitute. This government must accept the blame for monumental failures in planning and implementing policies.

Mr. Lang: Mr. Chairman, I rise only to put a few facts before hon. members, particularly in view of the remarks made by the hon. member for Swift Current-Maple Creek. When I asked the hon. member in the middle of his speech whether he would permit a question, I certainly did not realize that he was in the process of delivering a maiden speech. Nor did I realize, in point of fact, that there was a rule against interrupting such a thing. However, I do apologize for having done so. What I wanted to ask the hon. member—and perhaps he will take another occasion to tell me the answer to the question—was how he stood on the question whether any branch lines in the prairie region should or should not disappear in the next little while.

The hon. member made reference to the studies that have been made, and to do him credit I think he recognized that there was need to be patient until these studies made of the transportation and handling system had been completed. He criticized us for turning over the matter to the Canada Grains Council. What in fact we did was to turn it over in an effort to get the industry as a whole, and the producers in particular, to give their views as to whether or not we should move in the direction of fewer elevators and longer hauls in view of the savings that are possible.

The hon. member has been associated with the Palliser Wheat Growers Association which took a very strong stand in favour of far fewer delivery points across the prairie region, certainly a much stronger stand than I took in that direction. Indeed, they took a stronger view than that taken by the studies I have referred to, which suggested a certain degree of continued development and consolidation of delivery points. Even that view, however, means it is probable that some of the railway lines now existing will disappear, since grain was hauled along those lines to elevators which now no longer exist. Thus, these particular lines are of no further use for that purpose.

When the hon. member said that hopper cars were apt to be another thin edge of the wedge in regard to rail line abandonment, if he meant anything at all I think he meant that he opposes rail line abandonment. Although the hon. member wants us to do something, he reserves the right to attack us, whatever we do and, in the best Conservative tradition, to attack from all sides in order to get maximum flexibility.

I know the hon. member for Swift Current-Maple Creek very well. I also know that in the ordinary course he attempts to be fair and to be accurate. Therefore I must seriously ask him to put forward at an early opportunity his own views on the question whether the branch lines that now exist throughout the prairies are to remain five years from now or eight years from now. The hon. member says we should move faster than that and not wait five years, as suggested by the Canada Grains Council. I am far too impatient a man to see it take even that long. However, the producer must have the chance to make his views known and to tell us the system he wants.

The studies that we have completed show that if the grain that is now being handled by nearly 5,000 elevators in the prairie region were handled by two-thirds that number, the savings per bushel on all grain handled on the Prairies would be about five cents delivered. If those studies are accurate, that would mean a saving of $50 million on producer deliveries of one billion bushels, which I predict we will see for the first time in our history. In addition, the studies have indicated that—

Mr. Gleave: Would the hon. member permit a question?

Mr. Lang: By all means.

Mr. Gleave: In view of the fact that the National Farmers' Union and the three wheat pools have resigned and withdrawn from the Canada Grains Council, does the minister still regard it as a producers' organization representing grain farmers on the Prairies?

• (2120)

Mr. Lang: Mr. Chairman, I am happy to tell the hon. member that while the three prairie pools have now withdrawn from the Canada Grains Council, which I regret and hope the hon. member regrets as well, there are other producer organizations of that organization. What I should like to point out to him particularly, if he does not mind listening to the answer to his question, is that the three prairie pools which resigned from the Canada Grains Council, and the National Farmers' Union, which resigned over a year ago, are all agreeable to serving on the transportation committee which the Canada Grain Council set up to study this very question. So there will be representation.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Lang: The hon. member for Swift Current-Maple Creek also referred to a number of studies including the block shipping study, the protein grading study and feed grain movement study and seemed to imply that these are perhaps governmental studies on the shelf somewhere. I should like the hon. member to note that in each of these cases the recommendations in these studies supported by the producers have been implemented to the full and are in operation.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Lang: Of course, the situation on the west coast is one in which we clearly require more storage facilities. We are all agreed on that. There is no doubt that more storage facilities are required there. I do say to the hon. member that it is not clear at all that the simple use of bulk handling facilities in that area is the answer to anything. The existing Saskatchewan wheat pool's terminal there, which is the most modern one, can handle a great deal more grain than it is now handling if it receives that grain clean. So if we can clean the grain on the Prairies, ship it to Vancouver and put it through that facility, we can handle that grain without using bulk handling facilities. I suggest this is something the wheat farmer and the wheat associations must look at very carefully before saying that bulk handling facilities are the answer.

We are told that the Kansas City review of September 13, 1972, said it was too bad that Canada was not selling grain any more because now the price has gone up so much. The Wheat Board stopped selling grain some time before the United States did because it knew the price was going up and it was waiting for it to go up. Indeed, on September 13 when the Kansas City review was saying it was too bad we were not selling grain any more, the price of grain was 30 cents or 40 cents lower than it subsequently rose to, and at that point after it had risen we sold more grain. Indeed, since that date the Canadian Wheat Board has sold 200 million bushels of wheat. That, Mr. Chairman, is the fact.

I really do not know how long we have to go on having the prairie farmers say such things as that we are out of wheat, because as at the last report I have here in my book, the amount of grain in the country three weeks ago was 1,100,000,000 bushels. We are told we have not been selling any grain. We sold 200 million bushels of wheat and we have been selling barley at a rapid rate and at a higher price, and we are continuing to sell. Those are the facts, Mr. Chairman.

We are now hearing criticism about the purchase of 2,000 hopper cars. We saw a need for the purchase of 2,000 hopper cars on the basis of the information the railways gave us. They could not assure us that in any given year, unless everything went absolutely right, they could in fact take more than about 800 million bushels of grain to destinations for export. We saw the possibility of wanting to take a good deal more than that, perhaps as much as 150 million bushels more than that for export. Hopper cars were needed to assure us that we could do that and to give us some leaway in times when markets were readily available.

We are told, again, that those hopper cars can only be operated on certain of the trackage in the prairie region. Of course that is true and it was known to us long ago when we began to look at the prairie region and the railway system there. I am not sure what the hon. member means when he says that somehow this is going to lead to more branch line abandonment. What it will lead to—and for goodness sake let us look at the positive side—is pressure on the railways to bring up their standards for the use of hopper cars on those lines which should remain in the business of grain handling. That, Mr. Chairman, is the positive side of this whole business.

[Mr. Lang.]

Mr. Lang: Hon. members talk about somebody encouraging the disappearance of farmer's elevators and that this is a problem for the individual farmer. Of course it is, but that is not something which is going to start tomorrow. This is something that has been going on for years as a result of elevator company decisions. They know they have elevator units that can handle 700,000 or one million bushels of grain just as easily as 100,000, yet they have been handling on the average 100,000 to 200,000 bushels of grain with a man having to operate each elevator.

That is why we made the move and that is why the Saskatchewan, Manitoba and Alberta Wheat pools, as well as the United Grain Growers and other elevator companies, have been in the process of closing individual elevators. They had to consolidate grain handling to save the farmers some money. What we are trying to do is get into a position where some of this can be done in a sensible fashion. What we have had is the railways abandoning a line in one area of the Prairies and the elevator companies abandoning elevators in another area, not making very much sense between the two. What we are hoping to do is get them into a position where they all know what they are doing, so that they can save the farmer "X" cents per bushel in hauling grain to the market at a lower cost.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Lang: The use of hopper cars will mean efficiency in handling of grain, rapid loading and rapid unloading. The elevator companies are agreeable to using the maximum number at their elevators. That is the kind of thing I believe we have to do for the good of the grain industry. I have been one who has been optimistic about the potential of our agricultural grain area from the very darkest days of 1968 and 1969.

An hon. Member: And the days of Lift?

Mr. Lang: Yes, even from the days of Lift when we had to take one step in an attempt to get the system into shape as quickly as possible. We had to say to the farmer that this was one step needed to get more grain out of the elevators. We had to get wheat out so we could move the barley that could not be handled until we got this grain out of the elevator. That was an essential step. Since then the record of this government has been to give the farmer information about world markets to the extent that we have given it to him on March 1 before he seeds his grain; we have told him what the initial price will be for the year—not in August as has been the tradition for years—because this year, for the third year in a row, we will be giving the farmer that information on or before March 1, as we promised to do as part of the over-all grain policy announced at the beginning of the Lift program in February, 1970. Those are the facts, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. Nystrom: Mr. Chairman, I rise on a point of order. I was wondering whether the minister in charge of the Wheat Board would be willing to answer a question at this time.

The Chairman: That is not a point of order. However, I understand the minister is prepared to answer a question.

Mr. Nystrom: In view of the interest of the minister in charge of the Wheat Board in farm economy, is he planning to make personal representations to the Canadian Transport Commission asking it to impose a moratorium on plans for abandonment of rail lines on the Prairies after 1975? Does he plan on making any personal representation?

Mr. Lang: Mr. Chairman, it is my hope that in the course of the discussions which are now going on, and on the basis of the studies we have done on handling and the transportation system, well before January 1, 1975, there will be a consensus and agreement in respect of which rail lines must be improved and which will not be used. It is my hope that the consensus which emerges from prairie producers in respect of their needs and benefits will in fact be a decision-making device in respect of what will happen before the CTC.

Mr. Neil: Mr. Chairman, I should like to make a few remarks at this time which I feel are pertinent to this debate. I do not intend to become involved in statistics but will as much as possible comment generally and see that my remarks are brief.

The movement of grain on the Prairies has been a very real problem for many years. There has been a great deal of study carried out on the subject. There has been much debate, but very little action. I would suggest that the purchase of hopper cars has been the result of political expediency rather than a decision based on priority. Undoubtedly, at some time in the future hopper cars will become a priority item, but at the moment the railroads have indicated that with the rolling stock existing prior to the purchase of the cars they were able to transport approximately one billion bushels of grain annually to the west coast and Thunder Bay provided they had good weather and adequate terminal facilities.

The hon. member for Swift Current-Maple Creek has suggested a linking up of the CNR and CPR lines from the Kamloops area with the B.C. rail line in the Clinton area, a distance of some 45 miles. This is a rail connection that could be constructed with relative ease and at reasonable cost. This rail link, together with the improvement of facilities at Vancouver and new facilities at Roberts Bank, would save the western farmer many hundreds of thousands of dollars in demurrage. It would mean that there would be adequate supplies of export grains that would be available on site when called for by our customers. These are urgent matters.

There is the urgent matter of the port of Churchill. The port of Churchill is the nearest Atlantic ocean port to the prairie provinces. It eliminates more than 1,000 miles in comparison to the St. Lawrence Seaway route. It represents a reduction in shipping costs of from 10 cents to 15 cents per bushel. An amount of $10 million or $15 million out of the $48 million spent on hopper cars could have been spent in dredging and port rehabilitation. I suggest that such an expenditure should have had a much higher priority than hopper cars.

There is also the matter of rail line abandonment in Saskatchewan which has been delayed until 1975. The proposal of the railroads is to close down approximately 3,000 miles of the 8,500 miles of line. With the abandonment of this trackage, some 800 of the present 2,700 elevators would close down, affecting approximately 400 delivery points. The closing of these delivery points will spell the end of many of our small towns and an end to rural life, a trend which already is taking place.

I am not suggesting that there should be no rail line abandonment. What I am saying is that before any steps are taken to close down lines, the effect on small rural communities located on the lines should be seriously considered. Too often economics seem to have priority over people. Before the Standing Committee on Miscellaneous Estimates we were told that something less than half the trackage in western Canada will be able to handle the new hopper cars. When considering the rail line abandonment it is imperative that we also consider rail line improvement at least into areas of high grain production.

In the past few days we have heard questions posed to the minister in charge of the Wheat Board with regard to problems of grain delivery in various areas of the Prairies. We have also heard that Canadian boxcars have been used to transport United States grain through the Prairies and out to the west coast. If Canadian cars are available to transport United States grain, why are there not cars available to clear out some of the congested delivery points on the Prairies? What are the priorities? Is the transportation of United States grain more important than the transportation of Canadian grain? Is the welfare of the United States producer more important than the welfare of the Canadian producer?

To summarize, may I say that we have reached a difficult period. Decisions must be made in the immediate future. As the hon. member for Swift Current-Maple Creek stated, there has been a multiplicity of studies. We cannot continue having more studies. Priorities must be worked out based on statistics available from those studies and not, as I said before, based on political expediency. Unless we establish such priorities very quickly, and unless once they have been established the government carries them out, the problems will continue to be compounded and we will lose not only the developing markets but also some of our traditional markets to our more aggressive competitors.

Mr. Benjamin: Mr. Chairman, I wish to interject two remarks in this discussion on the supplementary estimates of the Department of Agriculture. I was particularly struck by three things tonight. I never thought I would live to see the day when we would have, as we have now, fourteen cabinet ministers present in this House and many shiny faces in the other rows on the government side. It is a wonderful change. I do not know whether they are paying attention to this particular subject or whether they are interested in subjects which will come up during the remainder of the discussion. As I have said, I never thought I would see the day when they would all be present for this kind of discussion. Had this been the case in 1968, 1969 and 1970 we might have had a much better situation in the agricultural and grain industry than we had in those years.

I listened to the hon. member for Qu'Appelle-Moose Mountain make a speech that was two or three years old. I heard the hon. member for Crowfoot and the hon. member for Saskatoon-Humboldt make the same speech, very much better, two years ago. The hon. member seemed to be attempting to revive the myth about Alvin selling wheat. I noticed the manner in which the Minister of Justice got up and after years of frustration tried to combat that myth. I believe he had some success. However, had the Minister of Justice said the kind of things he said tonight in 1969 and 1970, and had he used some muscle on the railroads what we are debating tonight might not have been necessary.

The hon. member for Qu'Appelle-Moose Mountain was a typical Tory when he took part in the debate, only he is a little more modern than his colleagues who spoke last week. He was marching into 1957 trying to dam the waters that have already gone under the bridge. I appreciated some of the remarks of the Minister of Justice. I even understood and sympathized with his last-ditch defence of Lift. I hope he keeps that up in my constituency. But again, Mr. Chairman, that is water under the bridge.

It is amusing to hear the hon. member for Qu'Appelle-Moose Mountain and the Minister of Justice rise back and forth for four and a half years and say to each other, "I sold more wheat than you did". Which one sold the most wheat? All this has been done at the expense of the wheat growers in the prairie provinces. Both of them talk about maximum production but they say nothing about price or, if they talk about price, they say that we have too much production. Both of them have spoken this way for many years, and while both of them have been in government we have lost tens of thousands of grain growers in the three prairie provinces.

Only the organizational genius of the old-line parties could do such a thing in a country which grows grains naturally. It is amusing to hear them talking about prices. When in mid-September the Tories promised an increase of 25 or 30 cents a bushel, the Minister of Justice pulled their teeth the next day and beat them by a nickel. What both of them forgot was that they were not fooling the farmers. It was the farmers' own money. The Minister of Justice could have announced the price to take effect at the beginning of the crop year on August 1; he could have done it in July. Of course, it made a better announcement coming in late September or October. However, he outbid the Conservatives by a nickel a bushel, using the farmers' own money.

The minister had the fortitude to mention the stabilization bill this evening and I am glad he brought up the subject. If it is his intention and the intention of his government to reintroduce that little item, I would like to refresh his memory. Perhaps he will recall that during the debate on that measure, before it was withdrawn four things were put forward which should have been included in the bill if it was to be acceptable to western grain farmers. One of them, I am happy to note, has been done; that is, having to do with crop insurance.

May I refresh the minister's memory, if he intends to bring that in again, that there are three remaining things to do or revisions to make in his stabilization plan if it is to have any acceptance in the House or among farm organizations or grain producers in western Canada. The first is grain storage. I hope that by now the minister has given up the idea of repealing the Temporary Wheat Reserves Act. We would welcome some positive amendments to it, but we hope he has given up that idea. We hope that he and his colleagues have now come around to what we put forward a year and a half ago, that the nation as a whole should bear some share of the cost of grain storage, not just on wheat but on all grains.

Second, the plan must be based on net income, not gross income. I do not need to say anything more on that subject. The minister went to the farm organizations and to the provinces, and I hope he has that message by now before he brings in any new stabilization plan. Third, the plan must be based on some kind of guaranteed price which has some relationship to the cost of production, or a combination of guaranteed prices and some control over rising farm costs. Those three things must be included before any stabilization plan becomes acceptable to grain farmers in western Canada.

We have had so-called surpluses in Canada and so-called world shortages, and successive old-line governments have played around with farm prices using the farmers' own money. Farm prices have always fluctuated at the beck and call of the so-called world markets. I submit, Sir, that until a national government is prepared to back the grain industry on prices and not leave them to the whims of world markets, we will continue to have the problems we have had in the past.

It is not good enough for either the hon. member for Qu'Appelle-Moose Mountain or the Minister of Justice to brag about how much grain each of them moved if, first, the grain was sold at an insufficient price or, second, there was no guarantee or protection on those prices for grain producers when production is at a decent level. Surely this is part of what we have to do. We cannot leave individual grain growers at the mercy of what happens on the world markets. It requires the strength and wealth of the entire nation to support agricultural prices and, in this instance, grain prices.

Earlier tonight mention was made of orderly marketing, which I find most amusing coming from members of the Liberal and Tory parties who have talked a good fight on that subject for all these years. I would say to the Minister of Justice that we in this party support, and always have since the inception of our party in 1932, the orderly marketing of all six grains under the Canadian Wheat Board. In fact, there were only five grains in those years. We still support that.

I accept the idea of a plebiscite. I am confident that the overwhelming majority of grain growers in western Canada want the three grains to be under the jurisdiction of the Canadian Wheat Board. I am confident that rapeseed growers are sick and tired of the kind of pricing that has been imposed on them. It is all very well for the minister to lie back and rely on a plebiscite. I wonder, however, if his heart is really in it. What action is he personally taking, and what action is the Canadian Wheat Board and the government taking to provide the kind of positive information to grain growers that will lead them to unanimously want to include rapeseed under the Canadian Wheat Board?

I am afraid what will be allowed to happen is that fast buck operators from grain exchanges and free enterprises will ride the backs of grain growers and start another propaganda war trying to undermine, undercut and destroy the whole principle of orderly marketing through a public, producer-controlled board. It is not good enough to say that we are all for a plebiscite. It will require some leadership. We submit that it will require leadership from members of all parties in the House if we are to enlarge and enhance the operations of the Canadian Wheat Board for the benefit of the grain growers, and this applies to feed grains as well as to the board's grains.

Unless and until this happens, the kind of things that have been happening to rapeseed prices and to flax and rye prices will be happening, that is, that they will have no relationship to the value and worth of the product. They have only related to what the speculators could make on them, with no relationship to the real value and worth of the product or to what it cost to raise and produce, and little or no relationship to what the farmer needed to have left over for himself. I submit that not until these grains are under the jurisdiction of the Canadian Wheat Board will we get some fair, reasonable and decent pricing on these three grains.

I would like to hear where the Conservative party stands on this. I would like to hear from all the prairie cowboys whether or not they are in favour of flax, rye and rapeseed being under the jurisdiction of the Canadian Wheat Board. I would be interested to know, because I can assure them that whichever way they say they would prefer it, I would be happy to circulate every speech in my riding and in other parts of the Prairies.

We would like to know, are you or are you not in favour of those grains being under the Canadian Wheat Board? We would like to know if the Minister of Justice is in favour or not. And if there are any other Liberals from the three prairie provinces, we would like to know their position. There is one from Winnipeg. We would like to know whether he is in favour or not. An answer from him should be a dandy. We would like the Minister of National Defence to tell us whether or not he is in favour of these three grains being under the Canadian Wheat Board.

The Minister of Agriculture may or may not have expressed himself on this matter, but we would like to hear from him as well. We would like to know whether or not he is in favour of these three grains being under the Canadian Wheat Board. If nothing else, we would like to know his own personal opinion. I give him credit for that, Mr. Chairman; he is not afraid to express his personal opinion. He has given such opinions in the past. Is he for or against these three grains being under the jurisdiction of the Wheat Board? If these three gentlemen express positive personal opinions they will provide some kind of responsible leadership and help the grain growers of western Canada.

I also hope that the minister in charge of the Wheat Board will arrange for a lot of information to be given to grain producers very quickly, to support a plebiscite on the question of bringing these three grains under the Canadian Wheat Board. I hope he is not merely playing around and could not care less whether the plebiscite wins or loses in that respect. I also hope that the minister in charge of the Wheat Board will be present when we get to the vote in the estimates dealing with the Department of Industry, Trade and Commerce because we have some questions to ask him concerning hopper cars. I will not go into that subject very much tonight, although others have raised it.

But when it comes to the matter of rail line abandonment, Mr. Chairman, we for one group expect that the minister and the government will either formally make representations to the Canadian Transport Commission or, if necessary, overrule the commission and, as a minimum, place a five-year moratorium on any further rail line abandonment. Anything less than that will be a betrayal of grain growers and of hundreds of towns and villages in western Canada. Just to illustrate, I mention one line in my constituency which connects the villages and towns on Dilke, Holdfast, Penzance, Liberty, Stalwart, Simpson, and Imperial, some 130 miles of track slated to go if the CPR can get its way. The minister talks about a 5 cents a bushel saving from abandonment. I would like him to tell us whether that 5 cents a bushel saving is just for the CPR and the grain companies.

Mr. Lang: For the farmers.

Mr. Benjamin: If that is for the farmers, I would like the minister to explain what will be done when grain is hauled great distances in trucks carrying 1,000 to 1,500 bushels, along municipal road systems not one mile of which is capable of carrying those loads? What will that mean in land taxes to farmers? I repeat, where does the 5 cents a bushel go? Is it still a 5 cents a bushel saving to farmers if, in addition to hauling their wheat a distance two or three times greater than before, they have to travel that farther distance to buy their groceries and farm implements?

What happens if these towns and villages become ghost towns and villages? Add up the cost if these scores of towns and villages with their streets, sidewalks, churches, schools, curling rinks, elevators, and other community services are abandoned, not to mention the grocery stores and implement dealerships. Is the minister going to ask all those people to get up and walk away from their communities? Surely not.

I want to see a lot more information before the minister can convince me or anybody else on the Colonsay subdivision of the CPR, that its abandonment will mean a saving of 5 cents a bushel. But even if by some stretch of the imagination or statistics-bending that was correct, has anybody added up the social and human costs involved? Are they included in that 5 cents a bushel? What is going to happen to those communities? The debenture debt is not even paid on the sewer, water and road systems. Surely the minimum we must have is for the government either to request the CTC or overrule the CTC, so that there will be a minimum moratorium of five years past 1975 on any rail line abandonment. That is the minimum time that will be needed in order to find out all we need to know before one more mile of track is lifted.

Mr. Horner (Battleford-Kindersley): Mr. Chairman, I really enjoyed what might be called the Saskatchewan debate this evening. I think all the speakers were from that province. It was interesting to see the Minister of Justice rise time and again and make accolades to himself. This is one of the disadvantages of coming back alone to parliament; you don't have anyone else to blow your horn so you must blow it yourself. We heard the debate between the minister in charge of the Wheat Board and the former minister. We are not really able to judge who won tonight. But the same debate was carried on in Saskatchewan last October and I will accept the judgment of the people of that province; they were in the best position to know.

I take exception to the minister's comments about the Conservative party. It is rather discouraging to have the king of the grain bootleggers make criticisms like that. I say that his pet answer as to why Lift was introduced was utter nonsense. He said it was to clean out the system. He decreased the amount of grain in the system by 200 million bushels. He forced that amount of grain to be stored again on the farms for one reason and one reason only, to reduce the amount which the treasury had to pay under the Temporary Wheat Reserves Act. There is no way he will get me to believe anything different.

Perhaps this great salesman would rise at the close of my remarks tomorrow and tell us about the barley payment on last year's crop. And what about the final wheat payment? It was rumoured that it would be paid out on February 1, and then on February 12 which is today. I suppose now it will be paid on Friday. Maybe the politicians over there are still trying to steal a little out of this year's pool to make it look good politically?

May I call it ten o'clock, Mr. Chairman?

Progress reported.

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

A motion to adjourn the House under Standing Order 40 deemed to have been moved.

SOCIAL SECURITY—OLD AGE PENSIONS—INTRODUCTION OF LEGISLATION TO PROVIDE INCREASE—CONSULTATION WITH PROVINCES

Mr. Heath Macquarrie (Hillsborough): Mr. Speaker, on January 24 I asked the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Lalonde) if he intended to present at an early date legislation to provide the promised substantial increase in old age security pensions. The minister replied that he had scheduled yet another dominion-provincial conference and that such a meeting was to be held on February 2. The minister announced that the discussions with his provincial counterparts were "consultations" and that he envisaged no veto power for any or all of the provinces.

It is difficult to understand, let alone appreciate, what the government intends in this most important sector of the social welfare field. The Speech from the Throne declared, "a reconsideration of Canada's social security system must be conducted jointly by the federal government and the provinces". Later, the same document promises, nevertheless, "legislation will be introduced to improve the economic situation of the old age pensioners". The Speech from the Throne has been adopted, the minister has had a conference, he has promised more than once a substantial increase in the old age pension—but where is the legislation? If it were needed at the time of the drafting of the Speech from the Throne, how much greater is the need now as prices continue to soar and the purchasing power of the old age security cheque shrinks with painful inevitability under this government's inflationary economy.

Two eminent economists, one from the Canada Council on Social Development and one from the Department of Urban Affairs recently indicated that about 50 per cent of Canadians over 65 years of age were living in poverty. Over 50 per cent, Mr. Speaker. What a situation! What a condition in a country with such potential for prosperity as Canada to have one-half the senior citizens having to eke out an existence at or near the poverty line.

It is time to bring on some measure of relief, some measure of justice for those who receive the old age security pension, now possessed of ever-diminishing purchasing power. I assured the minister and the House the other day that if he abandons his immobility on the matter and brings down the legislation we will assist him get it into the hands of the old age pensioners where it has belonged for lo these many months. How wrong it is to think, Mr. Speaker, that just because these people do not qualify for the supplement, do not in fact pass the means test, they are therefore affluent and are living a luxurious life, when indeed many of them are on the very edge of painful poverty.

My colleague from South Shore (Mr. Crouse) was telling me a moment ago about being in a supermarket in Ottawa this morning when he saw an old age pensioner look at a jar of honey, put it in the cart, calculate again what his pension was and then put the jar back on the shelf.

Some hon. Members: Shame!

Mr. Macquarrie: These people are in dire straits. They need help, and they need it now. Mr. Speaker, there is no reason for delay. Surely, on the contrary, there are compelling economic reasons for action.

Mr. Norman A. Cafik (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, in response to the question raised by the hon. member for Hillsborough (Mr. Macquarrie) on January 24, I should point out that on January 11 the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Lalonde) indicated quite clearly what the government had in mind in respect of increases for old age pensioners. He indicated that consultation was taking place with provincial ministers of health and that further consultations would take place. He made an unequivocal statement that substantial increases in the old age pension would be forthcoming.

On January 24 the hon. member for Hillsborough indicated that he was in a bit of a quandary on this subject. He did not seem to know why we would consult on the matter when in fact we had already made up our minds that there would be a substantial increase. I should like to point out to him that consultation does not mean that they who are being consulted will make the final decision on what will be done. The fact of the matter is that this kind of consultation means that the Department of National Health and Welfare is concerned with the view of the provincial ministers and would like to take them into account in its deliberations. However, that does not preclude the possibility of achieving the objective of the government's statement to provide substantial increases. It could be increased in terms of the old age pension itself, the OAS, the GIS or a combination of both.

It is quite important to the government to know the views of the provincial ministers of welfare in this respect prior to introducing legislation in this House. The minister indicated that that legislation will be coming down very shortly. I think all members of this House will agree that when that legislation is presented it will do something very worth while for all the old age pensioners in Canada.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Bring it down tomorrow.

MANPOWER—LOCAL INITIATIVES PROGRAM—MEASURES TO ACCELERATE APPROVAL OF PROJECTS

Mr. Adrien Lambert (Bellechasse): Mr. Speaker, I raised the question of the insufficient funds made available to the Department of Manpower and Immigration for its Local Initiatives Program by asking the Minister of Finance (Mr. Turner) when additional credits would be made available to the Minister of Manpower and Immigration (Mr. Andras) to enable him to approve a greater number of projects with a view to creating jobs and settling some of the problems facing the Unemployment Insurance Commission.

In his reply the minister stated that he would take the suggestions into account.

During the previous program, namely the 1971-72 program, 38 per cent of the projects submitted were approved and implemented. As a rule, the results were satisfactory.

When this program was renewed for 1972-73, the minister stated that it met the needs of the rural population as well as those of the urban population and that it permitted a direct and rapid intervention in high unemployment regions and often made it possible to create new kinds of employment. The minister also said that this program would permit the implementation of projects which the people themselves consider essential for their collectivity but which could not be implemented before.

The government saw fit to renew this program this year and, as a representative of the people, it was my duty to inform my constituents and to invite them to submit projects.

The Canadian population responded to the government in such a way that over 16,000 projects have been submitted. Unfortunately, for lack of funds, less than one third have been approved to date.

If the government is truly sincere and willing to fight unemployment it should at least double the funds earmarked for this purpose.

In the second place, it is high time for the government to state frankly what criteria are applied for approval of projects. It is increasingly difficult for a member of Parliament to ascertain the true facts in this respect. Moreover, the public is concerned about allegations that patronage-minded Liberals are imposing their views on selection of projects emanating from ridings represented by non-Liberal members. I hope there is no truth in such rumours, but it is time to give the public frank reassurances in this respect.

The minister has already stated that the main consideration for acceptance of a project is the level of unemployment in the locality from which it originates, which is reasonable.

If such is the case, I suggest that it would be equitable for more projects to be approved in Eastern Quebec, some of them in the riding of Bellechasse which has been sadly neglected for many years, long before I became its representative and where there are major economic and social needs to be met.

That is why I am insisting on approval and implementation of a greater number of projects as early as possible, in order to provide employment for a greater number of workers and to reduce the number of people now forced on welfare.

The minister has instructed his officials to send to all hon. members copies of projects submitted and originating from their respective ridings, accompanied by a letter asking for each hon. member's comments, if any are warranted. This is a most generous gesture on the part of the minister. It will enable hon. members to acquaint themselves with each one of the projects and judge whether or not they will meet the needs of the locality.

I wish to call the attention of the minister to another point which is most troubling, that is, to the announcement of the Quebec minister for municipal affairs to the effect that he accepted such and such a program.

This news published in the newspapers lead the public to believe far more projects are adopted than are in fact. If the reader is the least bit careful, he will discover that the good news of the minister is conditional on the projects being accepted at the federal level because the federal government pays.

In the final analysis, it is just a matter of partisan propaganda of which the public has long since had its fill. This does nothing to help create jobs for the unemployed or to implement projects.

So I ask once more that additional credits be voted for this program, that the project examination and approval procedure be accelerated and that consideration be given to recommendations by Manpower Centres and the organizations concerned, which are more qualified than anyone else to inform adequately the officials responsible for making final decisions. This is urgent; the unemployed cannot wait any longer.

I hope very much that we shall receive a favourable reply and that the projects will be approved in greater numbers and implemented in the best interest of working people.

[English]

Mr. Mark MacGuigan (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Manpower and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, the question originally raised by the hon. member for Bellechasse (Mr. Lambert) had to do with the speed of processing LIP applications. The minister has on several occasions this year responded to similar questions. On January 8, as reported at page 40 of Hansard, he said the following:

I cannot give a precise date but in all sincerity it will be done just as quickly as it can be done wisely.

That might be said to be the principle upon which we have been proceeding with respect to the processing of LIP applications. This evening the hon. member has raised several other questions including, principally, that of the sufficiency of the fund. It should be pointed out that the regular LIP fund has in fact been exhausted since January 19, and to the extent that the LIP fund has been kept open since that date this has been possible as a result of the transfer of funds from the on-the-job training program and from the business LIP.

The minister suggested to the hon. member in his answer on February 6 that he thought it likely that $10 million would be transferred from the on-the-job program to LIP but, as a matter of fact, only $5 million has been transferred because there was a considerable upswing in applications for on-the-job training during the last week of the application period and it will be possible to put people to work under this program at a faster rate than the minister had anticipated when he answered on February 6.

With respect to the $10 million set aside for business LIP, $7 million has been transferred back to regular LIP. It is anticipated that only $1 million will be required for fund projects approved under the business LIP segment of the program although, of course, these projects will serve as a valuable tool for assessing the viability of the particular program involved.

To bring the House up to date I should like to give the latest available figures on the Local Initiatives Program, taken from the computer as of Friday, February 9. The applications received numbered 15,269; the dollar value of these applications was $487, 121,698. The number of applications approved was 5,732; the dollar value of the applications approved was $162.6 million. Man-months of employment created, 332,732.

Unofficially, as of this time, all available funds have been committed to approved projects. The official figures from the computer will be available tomorrow or Wednesday. It may be the case that there will be some further small transfers of funds. The balance of $2 million from business LIP may be available for regular LIP, or the decision may be made to pay the money back to the training on-the-job program because of great demand in that area.

[Mr. Lambert (Bellechasse).]

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Boulanger): Order. I regret that the time of the hon. member has expired.

SEARCH AND RESCUE—STEPS TO ENSURE ADEQUATE NUMBER OF PLANES AND VESSELS FOR ACCIDENTS OFF EAST COAST

Mr. James A. McGrath (St. John's East): Mr. Speaker, on January 26, as reported at page 683 of Hansard, I directed a question to the Minister of National Defence (Mr. Richardson). I asked the minister what steps he was taking to ensure adequate search and rescue capabilities off the east coast of Canada, in view of the serious incident that took place recently when it took ten hours to evacuate the crew of a stranded Canadian trawler only a very short distance from the coast of Newfoundland because there were no helicopters based there. The minister replied that the government was looking at the possibility of decentralizing it—that is, the search and rescue facilities—somewhat and increasing our capability in Newfoundland. That is more or less a direct quotation.

My question was prompted by the grounding of the Newfoundland trawler Cape Brule in heavy seas off the south coast of Newfoundland early in January of this year. Because of the heavy seas in the area at the time, the vessel was in great danger of breaking up, placing the lives of the 14 crew members in imminent danger. The nearest search and rescue aircraft are stationed in Nova Scotia and Prince Edward Island, some considerable distance to the west. Consequently, it took ten hours to get the Canadian forces search and rescue helicopter to the scene to evacuate the crew.

This is not the first such incident, Mr. Speaker, and it is unfortunate that the limited time at my disposal does not permit me to go into the others. There was a search and rescue unit based in St. John's up to 1963, when it was moved to Greenwood, Nova Scotia, some 500 miles to the west. The situation has been further aggravated by the departure of the U.S. Coastguard from Argentia, Newfoundland.

The situation concerning the grounding of the Cape Brule and the lack of air/sea search and rescue capability in the area was summed up by the St. John's Evening Telegram in an editorial on January 18, 1973. The editorial is headed "Ottawa needs a map", and I shall quote part of it:

Has anybody in Canada got a map of Newfoundland? We doubt it, for anybody with such a map and the sense that God gave to a broody hen would see right off that Newfoundland is the obvious place in which to locate air and sea rescue operations. It has a long and dangerous coastline, it is close to the major Atlantic shipping routes, it sits astride the main fishing areas and it has five fully fledged airports, as well as a number of suitable airstrips.

The editorial goes on to say:

It is only too obvious that aircraft could have been on the scene within an hour if Argentia, Gander or St. John's had rescue aircraft ready to move at short notice.

On January 24, 1973, I wrote to the Minister of National Defence outlining the urgency of the situation and the need for immediate remedial action. I realize, of course, that the minister has been preoccupied of late with the Viet Nam situation, but I do not think it is overstating the case to say that unless the government acts, and acts soon, we are going to be faced with a serious marine disaster.

The Minister of Regional Economic Expansion (Mr. Jamieson) has already announced that four specially designed lifeboats will be built and placed into service by the Department of Transport. Surely the Department of National Defence, which is currently in the process of redefining the role of the Canadian armed forces, has to bear a great deal of the responsibility since it has aircraft at its disposal plus the experience to co-ordinate and carry out successfully an air/sea rescue operation.

My province, which has a coastline of 6,000 miles, is involved in year-round deep sea fishing operations. God knows, fishing is a hazardous occupation at the best of times but is particularly dangerous in the wintertime. The province of Newfoundland, particularly the east coast, should be the logical site for an air/sea rescue unit. Thanks to the United States, there are adequate and excellent base facilities available. An aircraft stationed in eastern Newfoundland would add almost a thousand miles to their capability and would reduce substantially the time it would take to deploy a helicopter to a stricken vessel.

In addition, I think it is also fair to say, for the record, that the province of Newfoundland has been short-changed in so far as national defence spending is concerned. We do not have a major Canadian forces base in the province of Newfoundland, apart from a very small communications unit stationed at Gander and a very small unit based in Goose Bay, Labrador, which is there mainly to assist the huge U.S. base located there.

I believe this would be an excellent opportunity for the government to correct that situation and to provide the province of Newfoundland with an air/sea search and rescue unit which would serve to protect the many thousands of Canadian fishermen who fish off the coast of Newfoundland and, more particularly—I underline this because I think it is urgent this winter when we are experiencing severe ice conditions—it would serve in my view to avert a very major marine disaster. I believe it is incumbent upon the government to act immediately because of the seriousness of the situation.

Mr. Leonard Hopkins (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of National Defence): First of all, Mr. Speaker, I should like to compliment the hon. member for bringing forward this subject of search and rescue as it pertains to the Canadian armed forces, because they have had an excellent record over the years. In this very serious task we do run into many difficulties.

The hon. member for St. John's East (Mr. McGrath) has expressed his very real concern on the subject of search and rescue to the minister in private discussions, by letter, by question in the House and during this debate tonight. I wish to advise him that the minister also has a very real interest in the search and rescue capability of the department.

I believe the hon. member is aware that the Department of National Defence is, by cabinet direction, responsible for providing search and rescue facilities capable of responding to air distress incidents in accordance with Canada's international responsibilities as agreed with the International Civil Aviation Association and also in terms of our own domestic requirements. Providing resources to deal with marine distress incidents is primarily the responsibility of the ministry of transport. I understand that department will shortly be commissioning four new lifeboats, as the hon. member mentioned, for use in the Newfoundland area.

I know the hon. member does appreciate, however, that when there is a distress call, be it air or marine, the search and rescue facilities of the Canadian forces are immediately alerted and provide whatever assistance is possible. The Canadian forces do, through the rescue co-ordination centres, provide co-ordinating services for both air and marine incidents.

In the specific rescue operation involving the motor vessel Cape Brule to which the hon. member has referred, I should like to point out that from the first indication that the ship was in distress until a search and rescue aircraft was over the Cape Brule, was 5½ hours, not 10 hours as the hon. member indicated in his question on January 26.

Furthermore, from the time it became apparent that a helicopter was required to effect a rescue of the crew members until the search and rescue helicopter was taking the first survivors from the Cape Brule, was 4 hours and 21 minutes. Finally, Mr. Speaker, the hon. member does have the minister's assurance that he is looking at the possibility of some decentralization of the search and rescue capability.

Motion agreed to and the House adjourned at 10.27 p.m.

PRIVILEGE

MR. PAPROSKI—ALLEGED INACCURATE ANSWER TO QUESTION ON POLAR BEARS

Mr. Steven E. Paproski (Edmonton Centre): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a question of privilege. My question of privilege refers to an answer that I received, as recorded on page 4893 of Hansard of April 5, 1971, to my question No. 1,184 on the slaughter of polar bears. The minister's assistant replied: "No polar bears were shot in 1971". Figures released yesterday at the Northwest Territories Council revealed that 2,735 polar bears in the eastern Arctic in a six-year period, an average of 450 bears a year, were slaughtered.

Obviously the information supplied by the government was incorrect and deliberately evasive. I bring this to the attention of the House because it indicates the lack of respect with which this House has been treated, and I request a complete investigation by the responsible minister. I find, Sir, that this is a clear case of contempt of parliament by the minister or his officials to cover up a situation that is focusing the attention of conservationists and nature lovers—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please, I have to interrupt the hon. member. He knows that the rules require that according to the Standing Orders, notice must be given to the Chair of a question of privilege. No notice has been given so the matter cannot be considered. The hon. member cannot rise on a question of privilege in these circumstances. Perhaps he would like to give notice of a question of privilege for tomorrow and the House will hear him then.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

ANNOUNCEMENT OF RELEASE OF MARC CAYER FROM IMPRISONMENT IN NORTH VIET NAM

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, yesterday the right hon. member for Prince Albert (Mr. Diefenbaker) asked me a question about the time of release of two Canadians who are prisoners in Viet Nam. I am very pleased to inform the House that Mr. Marc Cayer who has been held in Viet Nam for five years was released in the custody of the Canadian representative in Hanoi at 1000 hours local time today, Tuesday, February 13, 1973. The initial report indicates that Mr. Cayer is well and in good spirits and that he is looking forward to rejoining his family in Canada. Mr. Cayer's father was informed of his son's release early this morning by officials of my department.

Arrangements are being made for Mr. Cayer's quick return to Canada, taking into account his condition after his long captivity and the possible need for medical consultation.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

FINANCE

STATEMENT BY MINISTER ON DEVALUATION OF UNITED STATES DOLLAR

Hon. John N. Turner (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, at 10.30 last evening the Secretary of the United States Treasury announced that the United States dollar would be devalued by 10 per cent. He announced further that new trade legislation would be proposed to the Congress shortly and that the interest equalization tax and capital controls would be phased out and terminated at the latest by the end of 1974. Secretary Shultz kept me posted on developments in the situation in the course of yesterday and informed me of his proposals shortly before announcing them last evening.

This action should help to restore balance to the United States international payments position. Such a restoration is a prerequisite to progress in the basic reforms of the monetary and trading system now in train. To the extent that countries whose currencies appear to have been undervalued now adjust in response to the United States action, there will be a better equilibrium in the world economy. Such a development will be beneficial from the world point of view and is welcome to Canada.

We are, of course, pleased that no measures have been taken to restrict trade. We welcome the United States undertaking to present early a comprehensive trade bill to Congress, directed to the reduction of tariffs and other restrictions, and to the expansion of trade generally.

The Canadian dollar has been floating. The market has been determining its value in relation to all other currencies. Canada is now running a current account deficit with the world and also with the United States. The changes announced by the United States do not alter the fundamental position of our currency in relation to theirs. We shall continue to float for the time being.

There is bound to be considerable activity in exchange markets in the wake of the United States devaluation. We shall be watching developments carefully and will continue to operate to maintain orderly conditions in our own exchange markets.

Crises events such as we are now passing through underscore our need to do all we can to maintain the health and competitiveness of our own manufacturing and export industries.

Hon. Marcel Lambert (Edmonton West): Mr. Speaker, I thank the minister for having sent a copy of his statement to us before the House met. I must say that, having read his statement and heard it now and also having heard and read what the President of the United States has said in this regard, I am afraid I cannot quite share the optimistic note the minister has attempted to strike this afternoon.

We welcome with relief the knowledge that we will not have a prolonged crisis such as the one in the fall of 1971 and that the United States has taken action to devalue its currency. Having said that, I think this action, followed by the statement of the President leaves a number of questions unanswered that the minister has not attempted to answer in his statement.

First of all, with the lifting of the interest equalization tax and capital controls one might ask what will be the quid pro quo. In addition, I do not share the optimism of the Minister of Finance in respect of the trade legislation likely to be passed by the United States Congress. The President has made it clear that for all things that go down others must go up. Therefore the bill is not going to be merely a measure for the reduction of trade barriers in the United States. We in Canada have our own problems with the United States, and I do not think we can say that what the President said yesterday and this morning will provide a permanent solution.

There are other factors that must be taken into consideration in respect of the future of the Bretton Woods agreement. Will the continued floating of the Canadian dollar and the floating by other countries of their currencies mean that this may be the rule rather than the exception under the Bretton Woods agreement? Are we going to have continuing uncertainty? There is a long-range problem here. Until we resolve the international monetary situation this uncertainty will persist, and we might well have another crisis within six months. We must also look at our trade relations with the United States.

As I have said, we welcome the apparent ease with which devaluation of the United States dollar took place at this time and the fact that there has been no major disturbance so far of the equilibrium of Canada's dollar.

[Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton).]

Mr. Max Saltsman (Waterloo): Mr. Speaker, the action announced last night at 10.30 has a strange appearance. While it is being called a devaluation of the United States dollar, it seems that what in fact the United States has done is to bump up the currencies of other countries. It is pretty hard to say that the reserve currency is being devaluated.

I think we can be very thankful that Canada floated its currency at the time it did. We in this party have always advocated that position and I think the wisdom of it is being demonstrated. Had our currency not been floated, I believe we would be in serious trouble as a result of the events that have transpired during the last day. The alternative would have been worse. Therefore, to the extent that the currency situation has been resolved in this way we are very happy. The alternative proposed by the United States was the imposition of an import tariff on goods entering that country. This would, of course, have affected Canada as well as the other countries which were largely responsible for her problems. As a result of having this relative position in respect of currency exchanges and with our own currency floating, we will not be affected to the same extent.

However, a number of questions arise from the minister's statement, and I think he should give us very quickly an explanation of his intentions. There was an ominous ring to the concluding words of one sentence in the minister's statement, that we shall continue to float our dollar "for the time being". As the minister came to the words "for the time being", there was a significant pause. Does this mean that the minister has made some arrangement with the United States that we will go back to a fixed exchange rate? It is important for us to know what the intention of the government is. If such an arrangement has been made, I think we should oppose it. On the contrary. I think other countries should emulate the example we have set by floating their currencies. In this way I think adjustments would be far more gradual and there would not be a tendency to work the world into a monetary crisis position.

While the government says there has been a free float of the Canadian dollar, it should have also added that there is a little bit of a dirty float involved, and the governor of the Bank of Canada has had his finger on it for a long time.

On the whole we are very glad to see that the monetary situation has been resolved, but we also think a more comprehensive statement on the government's future policies needs to be given to this House. We look to the minister to make such a statement quickly because some real questions were raised in his statement that have not been answered.

Mr. C.-A. Gauthier (Roberval): Mr. Speaker, I feel that the announcement which has just been made is very important for us.

Yesterday, the United States, undoubtedly after having taken the advice of the authorities of the International Monetary Fund, have decided to devaluate their dollar by 10 per cent. From a practical point of view, the price of gold has been increased, but since this can be done only with the consent of the American Congress, which could be delayed, the American government has decided to devaluate its dollar immediately. In short, this means that the American dollar will be worth only 90 cents, since its value will be 10 cents lower.

Practically speaking, the price of goods purchased by the Americans abroad will increase. Thus, the ton of paper for which the United States paid $100 in Canada will from now on cost $110 in devaluated U.S. dollars. Consequently, the Americans having to pay more for their imports—for instance, paper from Canada—will purchase less of this product in Canada which will result in a slowdown of our production and a higher rate of unemployment in Canada.

This devaluation will enable the United States to export their unemployment abroad, being unable to export products. Will Canada be spared? First of all, we must bear in mind that this monetary crisis stems from the fact that the United States have a deficit in their commercial balance of payments with the rest of the world, particularly with Japan and the members of the Common Market.

During 1971, the deficit of the American trade balance amounted to about $2 billion. In 1972, despite price controls and other measures taken by the American government, the deficit rose to $4 billion.

This means the United States were buying $4 billion more in products abroad than they exported to other countries. This results in a flow and overabundance of American dollars, in the form of letters of credit, credit notes and other accounting entries.

Countries in possession of these titles are not using them for purchases in the United States because they are in a position to fend for themselves. Therefore, the United States find that they cannot pay for their purchases abroad because of insufficient imports.

It must be remembered that the golden rule in international trade consists in balancing imports and exports, perhaps not in each country but generally on the world market. In so far as Canada is concerned, our current accounts with the United States show a $120 million deficit for the third quarter. On a world basis, we had a deficit of more than $400 million in the same period.

To the question will Canada be exempted from the consequences of devaluation, the answer seems to be no. If the United States simply decided to apply an excise tax on their imports, Canada could have negotiated at least a partial exemption. In view of the devaluation of the American dollar, it will be almost technically impossible to spare our country the consequences of this devaluation.

What are the results of this devaluation, Mr. Speaker? In my opinion, we will feel them in the months to come. As the United States are dominating international trade, the changes in the exchange rate might result in increased prices for imported products and through the interdependence of prices we will end up on the whole with higher prices in Canada.

FLOODS

HIGH WATER LEVELS IN GREAT LAKES—REQUEST FOR UNANIMOUS CONSENT TO MOVE MOTION

Mr. H. W. Danforth (Kent-Essex): Mr. Speaker, I rise to seek the unanimous consent of the House to move a motion pursuant to Standing Order 43. The matter of urgent and pressing necessity has arisen because of the fact that the forecast of higher water levels in the Great Lakes water system presents a very real threat to the lives, homes and property of Canadians living along or near the shoreline and to dikes already severely damaged by storms and the present disastrously high water levels. I move, seconded by the hon. member for Lambton-Kent (Mr. Holmes):

That the appropriate officials of the Department of the Environment be instructed to seek ways and means to finance and begin an emergency reconstruction on the said shorelines and dikes and report back to parliament through the minister forthwith.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member proposes a motion under the terms of Standing Order 43 which requires the unanimous consent of the House. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. Speaker: There is not unanimous consent and the hon. member's motion cannot be put at this time.

That this House instruct the Minister of National Health and Welfare to table forthwith two documents presented to the cabinet on March 20, 1972, and April 10, 1972, warning the government that the use of heroin is rising rapidly among young Canadians and that the cabinet should act promptly, and that these documents be referred to the Standing Committee on Health, Welfare and Social Affairs for study and report.

Mr. Speaker: Is there unanimous consent to the motion proposed by the hon. member?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Léonel Beaudoin (Richmond): Mr. Speaker, pursuant to Standing Order 43, I solicit unanimous consent of the House to propose a motion in a case of urgent and pressing necessity for all Canadians.

As a result of the decision taken by the United States government to devaluate their dollar, which will seriously affect the Canadian economy, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Abitibi (Mr. Laprise):

WEST COAST OIL SPILL—REQUEST FOR UNANIMOUS CONSENT TO MOVE MOTION

Mr. Stuart Leggatt (New Westminster): Mr. Speaker, I rise, pursuant to Standing Order 43, on a matter of most urgent and pressing necessity arising from the recent west coast oil spill. The district office of the Department of Transport now reports the estimated cost of the clean-up to be $325,000. The amount now held in court is $20,000. No legal proceedings have been commenced to effect seizure of the vessel. In view of the fact the Canadian taxpayer does not appear to be secured against this loss, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Comox-Alberni (Mr. Barnett):

That the matter of securing the loss suffered by the Canadian taxpayer in this oil spill be referred to the Standing Committee on Transport and Communications for study and report.

Mr. Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for the motion proposed by the hon. member?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. Speaker: There is not unanimity. The motion cannot be put.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS AND NATIONAL DEFENCE—REQUEST FOR UNANIMOUS CONSENT TO MOVE MOTION

Mr. Doug Rowland (Selkirk): Mr. Speaker, under the provisions of Standing Order 43 I would ask leave of the House to introduce a motion of urgent and pressing necessity. The need for rapid action on the subject matter of the motion is obvious, and I believe it should be possible for it to be passed without debate. I therefore move, seconded by the hon. member for Greenwood (Mr. Brewin):

That the estimates of the Departments of External Affairs and National Defence be referred, immediately upon being tabled, to the Standing Committee on External Affairs and National Defence so as to permit immediate consideration of Canada's truce supervisory role in Viet Nam and the matter of the NORAD agreement which is due to expire May 12.

Mr. Speaker: The House has heard the motion proposed by the hon. member for Selkirk. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. Speaker: There is not unanimity. The hon. member's motion cannot be put at this time.

CRIMINAL CODE

AMENDMENT TO REMOVE SECTIONS CONCERNING ABORTION

Mr. Stuart Leggatt (New Westminster) moved for leave to introduce Bill C-142, to amend the Criminal Code (abortion).

Some hon. Members: Explain.

Mr. Leggatt: Mr. Speaker, the purpose of this bill is simply to implement the recommendations of the Royal Commission on the Status of Women by removing the subject of abortion from the Criminal Code, implementing recommendations Nos. 126 and 127 of that report.

Mr. Speaker: Is it the pleasure of the House that the hon. member shall have leave to introduce the said bill?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. Speaker: Is it the pleasure of the House that the hon. member shall have leave to introduce the said bill?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. Speaker: Perhaps the views of the House might be recorded on the request for first reading. Mr. Leggatt, seconded by Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre) moves that the said bill be now read a first time and be printed. Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the said motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. Speaker: Apparently there is a division of opinion. In the circumstances the motion will have to be put. Is the House ready for the question?

Some hon. Members: Question.

Mr. Speaker: Mr. Leggatt, seconded by Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre), moves that the said bill be now read a first time and be printed. All those in favour of the motion will please say yea.

Some hon. Members: Yea.

Mr. Speaker: All those opposed will please say nay.

Some hon. Members: Nay.

Mr. Speaker: In my opinion the nays have it.

And more than five members having risen:

Mr. Speaker: Call in the members.

• (1510)

And immediately before the recording of the division:

Mr. MacEachen: Mr. Speaker, I am rising on a point of order. While I realize that—

An hon. Member: You can't.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The President of the Privy Council cannot rise on a point of order at this stage, or even on a question of privilege, unless there is unanimous consent.

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. Speaker: There is obviously not unanimous consent.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Speaker: The question is on the motion of Mr. Leggatt, seconded by Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre), for leave to introduce a bill entitled: "An act to amend the Criminal Code (abortion)".

The House divided on the motion (Mr. Leggatt) which was agreed to on the following division:

PRIVILEGE

FILING OF ELECTION EXPENSE RETURNS BY CERTAIN MEMBERS

Mr. Erik Nielsen (Yukon): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a question of privilege based on a press report which was just brought to my attention a few moments ago. It is written by a Citizen staff writer, Dennis Foley, and concerns the filing of returns on election expenses and my legal right and that of other hon. members named in the article to sit in the House because of failure to file election expense returns.

Under the provisions of the Canada Elections Act, as all members know, election expense returns are required to be filed within certain time limits. The information for the article must have come from the Chief Electoral Officer. In my case the return was filed several weeks in advance of the time required, and in fact published several weeks in advance in a newspaper in my riding.

The article is ill-founded. The Chief Electoral Officer, not only in my case but I suggest in the case of the other hon. members referred to, should communicate with his returning officers. This might not be possible in my case as the returning officer has been on vacation since shortly after October 30.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Nielsen: I submit that it is his responsibility to communicate those expenses to the Chief Electoral Officer. Articles like this should not be allowed to emanate on the basis of misinformation supplied by that office to the press.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Alex Patterson (Fraser Valley East): Mr. Speaker, I rise on the same question of privilege, I should like to associate myself with the statement made by the hon. member for Yukon because I have been given to understand that my name is also included in the list. I have contacted my official agent and he assured me that the returns were all filed on the first or the second day of December and that everything is in order. May I say as well that we endeavoured to get in touch with the returning officer for that area but I believe he is also on vacation.

An hon. Member: Liberal appointees.

Mr. Duncan M. Beattie (Hamilton Mountain): Mr. Speaker, I should like to associate myself with the statement just made by the hon. member for Yukon. I too filed the returns more than two months ago and as far as I know they were submitted to Mr. Hamel. I spoke to him about half an hour ago and he told me he had received the returns from the returning officer and he did not know how the report got into the Ottawa Citizen.

Mr. G. H. Whittaker (Okanagan Boundary): Mr. Speaker, I rise on the same question of privilege. I also would like to associate myself with the statement of the hon. member for Yukon. My returns were filed on December 13; I filed them personally on that date. I have read in a local newspaper an account of the amounts of money that were spent by the three candidates in the riding, and I certainly do not understand why this sort of thing should happen.

Mr. Andrew Brewin (Greenwood): Mr. Speaker, I have just been informed that I am on the list also.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

An hon. Member: Explain.

Mr. Brewin: I want to say that my official agent was a former member of the House and he has assured me that the election expenses information was filed in due course and before the expiry of the time within which it was required to be filed.

Mr. Paproski: Mr. Speaker—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Paproski: —I rise on the question of privilege. I should like to know whether hon. members opposite know where Murray McBride is so he can file his returns also.

ORAL QUESTION PERIOD

FINANCE

DEVALUATION OF UNITED STATES DOLLAR—REPRESENTATIONS CONCERNING LEVEL OF CANADIAN DOLLAR BY U.S. AUTHORITIES—PROPOSED U.S. TRADE INITIATIVES

Hon. Robert L. Stanfield (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Finance and it arises out of the statement he made in the House a while ago. Has the government of Canada received any suggestion or request from the United States authorities that the Canadian dollar should be valued by Canadian authorities above the level of the U.S. dollar, as was apparently suggested by former Secretary of the Treasury Connally at the time of the Smithsonian agreement?

Hon. John N. Turner (Minister of Finance): No, Mr. Speaker. On both occasions when I spoke yesterday to the Secretary of the Treasury of the United States, Mr. George Shultz, I advised him of our intention to keep the Canadian dollar floating.

Mr. Stanfield: Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question arising from the feeling of pleasure the Minister of Finance expressed that the United States had taken no trade initiatives so far. Has the minister received any assurance from the United States government as to the nature of the trade initiatives that the United States proposes to take? I ask this question particularly in view of the statement attributed to the President that tough trade legislation is needed and that "only by being able to go up" in some trade categories "will they be able to get others to come down". Can the minister give us any assurance that the United States does not propose to take any initiative comparable to that which was taken the last time?

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): We do not know, of course, the content of the legislation which the President will be bringing before Congress but Mr. Shultz, the Secretary of the Treasury, is well aware of the representations I and my colleague, the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce, have made to the effect that the current trade position of the United States is not attributable to Canada in that at the moment we run a current account deficit both with the United States and with the world.

Mr. Stanfield: I only hope that the optimism of the minister turns out to be justified, although there seems to be little ground in the present statement for complacency about the matter. I should like to ask the minister whether there was any significance in the rather pregnant pause, which was noticed by the hon. member for Waterloo, following the statement he made that he would maintain the float and before uttering the words "for the time being", was it simply the minister's intention to announce the government's continuing policy in this regard?

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): I want to assure the hon. gentleman that when it comes to pauses I am not in his league.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): The position of the Canadian government remains the same, namely, that we will continue to float the dollar until there is some evidence of a return of stability in the international monetary situation. We feel that that terminal date at the moment is at least a new international monetary agreement now being negotiated by the group of twenty.

Mr. Stanfield: Mr. Speaker, I want to make it very clear to the Minister of Finance that I do not expect him to be able to compete with me as an orator.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

DEVALUATION OF UNITED STATES DOLLAR—REPRESENTATIONS BY CANADA ON REMOVAL OF DISC PROGRAM AND OTHER TRADE BARRIERS

Mr. Max Saltsman (Waterloo): Mr. Speaker, my supplementary question is for the Minister of Finance. The minister indicated that he had had discussions with the United States government regarding currency realignment and the removal of certain barriers to trade. Has he asked the U.S. government to remove some of their barriers to trade such as the DISC program?

Hon. John N. Turner (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I think that matter has been under advisement by my colleague, the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce. We have made representations to the United States that we support any effort they can make toward moving toward more liberal trading arrangements in the world and a more liberal monetary arrangement. That, of course, would exclude any type of export subsidy or investment subsidy represented by the DISC legislation.

Mr. Saltsman: In the light of what is happening with currency realignment, is it the intention of the minister to alter his budget proposals to take those changes into account?

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): Mr. Speaker, that is a little hard for me to explain because the hon. member would not know what the proposals were in the first instance and so I could not explain how I would alter them.

DEVALUATION OF UNITED STATES DOLLAR—REPRESENTATIONS BY UNITED STATES CONCERNING FLOATING OF CANADIAN DOLLAR

Mr. James Gillies (Don Valley): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a supplementary question to the Minister of Finance. Have there been any representations whatsoever from the United States government about the nature of our float?

Hon. John N. Turner (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I think the United States understands that we intervene in the market through the exchange fund in order to maintain an orderly market, and that during the period since the Smithsonian Agreement we have intervened through the exchange fund on either side of the market in order to maintain an orderly progression of the dollar.

Mr. Gillies: Is it the position of the government that an orderly market means that the Canadian dollar shall be relatively at par with the American dollar?

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): No. It means that the Canadian dollar will respond to market forces but those forces must adjust in an orderly manner, and to achieve that orderly manner the exchange fund will intervene.

DEVALUATION OF UNITED STATES DOLLAR—SUGGESTED RESUMPTION OF TRADE DISCUSSIONS IN LIGHT OF PROPOSED U.S. LEGISLATION

Hon. Paul Hellyer (Trinity): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a supplementary question to the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce. In view of Secretary Shultz's statement that the proposed U.S. trade legislation, in addition to those positive aspects mentioned by the Minister of Finance in his statement to the House this afternoon, would provide safeguards against the disruption of particular markets and production from rapid changes in foreign trade, and protect the United States external position from large and persistent deficits, will the minister take the initiative in resuming Canada-U.S. trade discussions in order to state Canada's position and reconcile differences before the legislation is presented to the U.S. Congress?

Hon. Alastair Gillespie (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): Mr. Speaker, I have repeatedly stated to the House that we are after multilateral solutions. We have been in contact with the United States on these matters and, as my colleague has stated, I welcome the statement of the secretary that he lays great stress on the legislative groundwork for broad and outward looking trade negotiations. If that is the particular stance of the United States government with respect to its trade bill, it is a stance that we welcome.

[Mr. Saltsman.]

Mr. Hellyer: In view of the fact that the total statement of Secretary Shultz contains certain aspects which are not nearly as liberal or outgoing as those referred to by the two ministers this afternoon, will the minister undertake to prepare contingency legislation to protect the jobs of Canadians engaged in manufacturing and offset the effects of any United States legislation incorporating any of the protectionist aspects of the Hartke bill?

Mr. Gillespie: Mr. Speaker, as the Minister of Finance has made clear on a number of occasions, the May budget measures were aimed specifically at assisting the competitiveness of Canadian industry and offsetting the effects of DISC and other protective measures.

RESERVE FUND HOLDINGS OF UNITED STATES DOLLARS—POSSIBILITY OF GUARANTEED EXCHANGE RATE

Mr. J. P. Nowlan (Annapolis Valley): Mr. Speaker, on June 27 last I asked the Minister of Finance whether, with the monetary problems we then faced and international monetary exchange problems throughout the world, we had any guaranteed exchange rate with the United States government in view of our increasing appreciation of a decreasing asset, namely, our large holdings of U.S. dollars. In view of the fact that we have continued to increase our holdings of American dollars and the fact that they went down 10 per cent overnight and Canadians lost $430 million with the swipe of a pen, I ask the Minister of Finance whether he has a policy to seek a guaranteed rate for our holdings of American dollars, or do we intend to start to unload them at once?

Hon. John N. Turner (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I hope you will give me some latitude in replying to this question because the hon. member has gone into some detail and I think the answer has to be specific in order to set aside the preamble with which he prefaced his question.

The Canadian dollar value of Canada's international reserves, including its holdings of U.S. dollars, varies according to the relationship that exists from day to day in the exchange market between the Canadian dollar and the U.S. dollar. Following the announcement of the change in the parity of the U.S. dollar, its value in terms of Canadian dollars declined by three-eighths of one per cent in the market this morning. I am advised that there has been no significant change in the exchange market during the last few hours. In other words, what the hon. gentleman has suggested to the House is not true.

If I may add to that, Mr. Speaker, because I am not responsible for the complexity of the question, and because the sensitivity of international markets makes it important that I answer fully, the 10 per cent change in the value of the U.S. dollar which became effective today will have the effect of increasing the value of the non-U.S. dollar assets included in Canada's holdings of international reserves, the value of which is expressed in U.S. dollars. These assets consist of gold, special drawing rights, working balances in several foreign currencies, and Canada's reserve position in the International Monetary Fund.

Therefore the concern the hon. member expresses in his question is without foundation.

Mr. Nowlan: Mr. Speaker, I appreciate in part the answer I have received from the minister, but in view of the fact that we have continually increased our holdings of American dollars, to the tune of over $4.3 billion, does the minister have a policy, or does he intend to discuss with his counterpart in the United States some plan to attempt to obtain a guarantee from the Americans of the value of those holdings, as they have done with other countries in the past, or are we going to pursue an active policy of diversifying our holdings?

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): Mr. Speaker, if the efforts to which Canada is a party, and which we support, result in our obtaining a new international currency, whether that be new international special drawing rights or not, then that type diversification will be possible, but the factual basis of the hon. gentleman's question is not valid at the moment.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I suggest to hon. members that we might go to another subject now and return to this matter later because it is obviously one of concern to many members who want to ask supplementaries. For the moment we will go to the next subject and recognize the hon. member for York South.

INCOME TAX

RECONSIDERATION OF ADDITIONAL ALLOWANCES TO CORPORATIONS IN LIGHT OF 1972 PROFITS

Mr. David Lewis (York South): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Finance on another topic. It arises out of the report of a survey of corporate profits for 1972. In view of the fact this survey shows an increase in corporate profits of 20 per cent in 1972 over 1971, an increase of 21 per cent in chemicals, 46 per cent in food processing and so on, is the minister reconsidering the additional concessions to what I have called the corporate welfare bums that he suggested last May?

Hon. John N. Turner (Minister of Finance): To begin with, Mr. Speaker, the percentage increase depends on the base against which the hon. member is comparing that increase, and that base was not particularly reflective of a strong year. If I might remind him of the remarks of his colleague, the hon. member for Waterloo, the current situation in monetary and trade terms, with its emphasis on the competitiveness of the world situation in the next five to ten years, underlines the necessity for Canadian manufacturing to remain competitive, to protect our markets abroad in these uncertain times, to protect our share of the market in Canada, and to protect Canadian jobs. That is the reason for those measures, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Lewis: Mr. Speaker, in view of the historical evidence that that kind of concession to corporations, manufacturing and others, does not produce the results the minister complacently suggested it produces, and in view of the very substantial increase in the profits of the manufacturing and processing industries, can he assure the House that that kind of concession will now result in more jobs rather than fewer jobs as has been historically the case?

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): Mr. Speaker, the hon. gentleman is being inconsistent because he has been concerned in the House, and rightly so, with the effect of DISC on our own investment and industry in Canada. DISC is merely a lower tax rate, and one of the aspects of the tax rate I introduced last May was to make our tax rate competitive with the American tax rate as reflected in DISC.

Mr. Lewis: Mr. Speaker, I wish to ask one further supplementary question. The minister is perhaps innocently confusing two things. I am asking the minister whether the fast write-off, which is an entirely different business from the tax rate and which gives the corporations an opportunity to defer taxes and get what in effect is an interest-free loan for many years, if not forever, is being reconsidered by him in view of the profit situation?

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): Mr. Speaker, the capital cost allowance is, as the hon. gentleman says, a deferral of tax in terms of increasing cash flow. That does not in any way minimize the tax payable. However, I think this whole subject is a matter for debate.

REQUEST FOR CLARIFICATION OF PRIME MINISTERS' REFERENCE TO JOB CREATING PROVISIONS OF MAY, 1972 BUDGET

Mr. John Lundrigan (Gander-Twillingate): A supplementary question to the Minister of Finance, Mr. Speaker. Since, the Prime Minister made a statement on Sunday evening that the May, 1972 budget contained provisions for the corporate tax adjustment and also had provisions to ensure that the adjustment would result in job creation, I wonder if the minister can tell the House what provisions were referred to by the Prime Minister?

Hon. John N. Turner (Minister of Finance): Well, Mr. Speaker, of course that question should properly be referred to the Prime Minister, but I can suggest to the hon. gentleman that we put 250,000 new jobs into this country in the year 1972—

Mr. Hees: Compared to 330,000 the year before.

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): —compared to 200,000 the year before, an increase of 25 per cent over 1970.

Mr. Hees: Three hundred and thirty thousand.

Mr. Lundrigan: To the hon. Prime Minister—George!

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Lundrigan: A supplementary to the right hon. the Prime Minister, Mr. Speaker. In view of the fact that on May 9, 1972, in answer to a question from the hon. member for York South the Minister of Finance indicated that the government would not consider any monitoring provisions to ensure job creation, I wonder if the Prime Minister can tell the House what he meant when he indicated that there were provisions in the May, 1972 budget to ensure that the corporate tax adjustments would result in job creation?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I want to understand the question well. I understand it to refer to a statement by the minister on monetary provisions. Well—

An hon. Member: Monitoring.

Mr. Trudeau: On monetary provisions—

Some hon. Members: No, no! Monitoring.

Mr. Trudeau: I am sorry, I have not understood the question.

Mr. Lundrigan: Mr. Speaker, my Anglo-Saxon accent is confusing the hon. bilingual Prime Minister. I should like to ask him what provisions he was referring to on Sunday evening when he said that there were provisions in the May, 1972 budget to ensure that the corporate tax adjustment would result in job creation in view of the fact that on May 9 the Minister of Finance indicated that he would not consider any monitoring provisions to ensure job creation.

Mr. Trudeau: Well, Mr. Speaker, I really would have to refer to the speech by the minister on budget night in which he introduced these measures for tax reductions for corporations and in which he indicated the firm wish of the government that this would result in the creation of jobs or in lower prices and not increased profits by the companies. I think the words are paraphrased, but the essence is about right. The result has been the figures the Minister of Finance just quoted, for indeed a great number of jobs were created this year—much more than previous years.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. We have been essentially on the same subject since the beginning of the question period. A number of hon. members are anxious to ask their questions so I think we should try to move on. We have not yet finished the first round of questions and the hon. member for Shefford is waiting for his chance. The hon. member for Gander-Twillingate.

Mr. Lundrigan: Mr. Speaker, my supplementary is very brief. Can the Prime Minister indicate whether the Minister of Finance has informed him that between May 1972 to September 1972 jobs in the manufacturing industry—employment in that sector of the economy—were reduced by 1.6 per cent?

Mr. Hees: Did you know that, Pierre?

Mr. Speaker: While the matter is being pondered the Chair will recognize the hon. member for Shefford.

[Mr. Lundrigan.]

GOVERNMENT PUBLICATIONS

WRONG COLOURS USED TO IDENTIFY CERTAIN POLITICAL PARTIES IN PRESS RELEASE OF DEPARTMENT OF ENERGY, MINES AND RESOURCES

Mr. Gilbert Rondeau (Shefford): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources.

Following the publication yesterday of a news release by his department, could the minister tell us how it is that the department, in the reference map dealing with the results of the October 30, 1972 federal election, used the wrong colours to identify the New Democratic Party and the Social Credit Party of Canada, since green has stood for the Social Credit party since 1935 on that map, and mauve for the New Democratic Party. Could the minister explain why a mistake was made in the colours of those two parties?

Mr. Speaker: Order. I think that this question could be put on the order paper. The hon. member should be satisfied with a written answer. If there is any urgency, which does not seem obvious, perhaps the hon. member could give notice that he would like to bring this matter up at the time of adjournment.

Mr. Rondeau: Ten o'clock, Mr. Speaker.

POSSIBLE INTRODUCTION OF INCOME STABILIZATION MEASURE

Mr. Harry Kuntz (Battle River): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the minister responsible for the Wheat Board. Is the government going to introduce a new grain stabilization bill and if so, when?

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister of Justice): Mr. Speaker, discussions about the issue of the stabilization bill have been going on, but we do not have the specific time and date for its reintroduction.

Mr. Kuntz: A supplementary question. Has the minister had any negotiations with the provinces and, also, will the cost of inflation be a factor taken into consideration?

POSSIBLE REMOVAL OF SECTIONS ON ABORTION—GOVERNMENT POLICY

Mr. Douglas Roche (Edmonton-Strathcona): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Solicitor General. In view of the confused circumstances surrounding the vote just taken on the abortion question, and in view of the possible public misunderstanding of how some of us voted—for example, I voted yes, to allow the debate—

Some hon. Members: Order, order!

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member knows that he cannot reflect on a vote. He should ask the question directly.

Mr. Roche: In view of the circumstances, Mr. Speaker, may I ask this question: what is the government's policy on the removal of abortion from the Criminal Code?

An hon. Member: If there is a policy.

Hon. Warren Allmand (Solicitor General): Mr. Speaker, that is not a matter under my responsibility.

Mr. Roche: A supplementary to whatever minister is responsible—the Minister of Justice, perhaps. What is the government's policy on the removal of abortion? Subsequently, is there going—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I suggest that a member having a question as general as this should give notice by way of a request for a statement on motions, unless the minister can respond briefly. The minister might be able to respond briefly to the hon. member's question.

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister of Justice): Mr. Speaker, it is not our intention to introduce any bill like the one to which first reading was just given, and we do not intend to support that bill.

Mr. Bell: You supported it.

POSSIBLE REMOVAL OF SECTIONS ON ABORTION—REQUEST FOR DESIGNATED DAY FOR DEBATE

Mr. J. M. Forrestall (Dartmouth-Halifax East): A supplementary question to the right hon. Prime Minister. Is it his intention, within the next two or three weeks, to bring on the long awaited one-day debate on this very vital question?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I am sure the government House leader, in consultation with the other House leaders, would be agreeable to allowing one of the opposition days to be used for this purpose.

DESIGNATION OF SHERBROOKE AND EASTERN TOWNSHIPS AS SPECIAL AREA—STATUS OF NEGOTIATIONS

Mr. Irénée Pelletier (Sherbrooke): Mr. Speaker, I would like to direct a question to the Minister of Regional Economic Expansion.

Following the publication of the Quebec Planning and Development Bureau white paper on the socio-economic situation in the Eastern Townships, could the minister tell us at what stages are the federal-provincial negotiations regarding the possibility of designating Sherbrooke and the Eastern Townships as a special area?

[English]

Hon. Donald C. Jamieson (Minister of Regional Economic Expansion): Mr. Speaker, the particular matter to which the hon. member refers is one that has been under discussion between the government of Canada and the province of Quebec. We are carrying on these discussions with the hope of concluding some kind of firm agreement with regard to either a continuation of, or expansion of, special areas or variations in them within a short time.

[Translation]

Mr. Pelletier (Sherbrooke): Mr. Speaker, I should like to put a supplementary question to the minister. Can he tell us when he expects the end of the negotiations and the announcement of an agreement between the two governments?

[English]

Mr. Jamieson: Mr. Speaker, I would hope that the next set of meetings which are set for about ten days from now would conclude the negotiating portion of the discussions, and that we could then move into what I might describe as ministerial level meetings with an announcement by the end of March or sometime in that neighbourhood.

FISHERIES

POSSIBLE ATTENDANCE OF MINISTER AT MEETING OF HERRING ADVISORY COMMITTEE IN VANCOUVER—REQUEST FOR STATEMENT ON DISPOSAL OF DOGFISH

Mr. Thomas S. Barnett (Comox-Alberni): Mr. Speaker, in the absence of the Minister of Fisheries, who I understand is attending an FAO conference of fishing nations, may I direct this question to the acting minister or parliamentary secretary. May I ask if the Minister of Fisheries is attending the meeting of the Herring advisory committee this week in Vancouver, as requested by the United Fishermen's and Allied Workers Union, and whether he will be indicating to that committee that his department is making arrangements for the market disposal of dogfish caught by fishermen for predatory control in connection with establishing a herring catch quota?

Mr. William Rompkey (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of the Environment): Mr. Speaker, may I take the question as notice and provide the hon. member with an answer at a later date.

CANADIAN CULTURE

ADJUSTMENT OF BROADCASTING RULES TO ALLOCATE TIME TO MULTICULTURAL PROGRAMS

Mr. Paul Yewchuk (Athabasca): Mr. Speaker, may I direct my question to the minister responsible for multiculturalism. Following the meeting with one of the cultural groups of this country yesterday, can the minister inform the House whether it is his intention to take steps to ensure that the Canadian content rule applying to the broadcasting media can be adjusted in such a way as to allow a certain percentage of time to be devoted to multicultural programs?

Hon. Stanley Haidasz (Minister of State): Mr. Speaker, I am awaiting the report of the officials of the CBC on their multicultural programs.

MULTICULTURALISM—REQUEST FOR FUNDS TO ASSIST PROVINCES ON THIRD LANGUAGE TRAINING

Mr. Paul Yewchuk (Athabasca): Mr. Speaker, may I direct my supplementary question to the Minister of Finance. Could the minister inform the House whether, in preparing his budget, he has considered the advisability of increasing substantial budget allocations for multicultural purposes in order that the federal government can assist the provinces in various aspects of third language training schools?

Hon. John N. Turner (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I will certainly take that as a strong representation from the hon. member.

COMMUNICATIONS

NATIONAL POLICY—POSSIBLE MERGER OF REGULATORY FUNCTIONS OF CRTC, CTC AND DOT

Mr. J. P. Nowlan (Annapolis Valley): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a supplementary question to the Minister of Communications. It has to do with the field of broadcasting and communications. In view of the speech he made the other night in which he suggested that proposals would be laid before parliament involving a green paper on the question of broadcasting and communications, could he be more precise and indicate to the House just when we may expect that so-called green paper and if the rationalization of federal legislative and regulatory provisions to do with telecommunications and broadcasting will involve the merger of the CRTC, CTC and DOT regulatory functions?

[Translation]

Hon. Gérard Pelletier (Minister of Communications): The date of publication, Mr. Speaker, is now set for the second or third week in March. Unfortunately, it will be necessary for the hon. member, who is deeply interested in matters pertaining to communications to wait until that date to find out what the proposals of the government will be.

Hon. Marcel Lambert (Edmonton West): Mr. Speaker, my question is addressed to the President of the Treasury Board. Would he tell us whether he is to table the main estimates tomorrow or on Thursday?

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): Is it to be on Friday, then?

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

VISIT OF FRENCH WARSHIPS TO VANCOUVER—ATTITUDE OF CANADA TOWARDS NUCLEAR TESTING BY FRANCE

Mr. Mark Rose (Fraser Valley West): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Secretary of State for External Affairs. Is the government of Canada, through Canadian Forces salutes and so on, participating in the official welcome to several French ships of war visiting Vancouver today? If so, does this welcome indicate a more cooperative attitude on the part of Canada, if that is possible, towards nuclear testing in the south Pacific?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I am sorry but I cannot answer the first part of the question; I really do not know whether we are participating. Our relations with the French government, as I am quite sure hon. members would wish, are on a normal and happy basis. We hope they will take our advice not to hold tests in the Pacific.

VISIT OF FRENCH WARSHIPS TO VANCOUVER—RELATIONSHIP TO NUCLEAR TESTS

Mr. Mark Rose (Fraser Valley West): A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Has the government of Canada any information as to whether this particular flotilla visiting Vancouver today is on its way to participate in nuclear tests in the south Pacific, or, at the very least, to prevent the peaceful passage of vessels on the high seas, in connection with those tests?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Secretary of State for External Affairs): No, Mr. Speaker, I have no information of that kind.

INDIAN AFFAIRS

PROTECTION OF RIGHTS AND PROPERTY OF NATIVE PEOPLE AFFECTED BY PROPOSED NELSON RIVER HYDRO-ELECTRIC PROJECT

Mr. Keith Taylor (Churchill): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development. In view of the recent decision by the government of Manitoba to proceed with further development of the Nelson River Hydro-Electric Project and the diversion of the Churchill River in Northern Manitoba, despite the objections of residents of the area, will the minister advise the House when some action will be taken to protect the rights and property of native peoples who will be affected by such projects?

Mr. Len Marchand (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): Mr. Speaker, may I take that question as notice.

MONTREAL—CONTINUATION OF INVESTMENT AND INCENTIVE PROGRAM

Mr. Henry Latulippe (Compton): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the Minister of Regional Economic Expansion?

Would the minister tell us whether the industrial investment incentive programs will be continued in the city of Montreal and whether Montreal will receive a priority over other areas in the province of Quebec?

[English]

Hon. Donald C. Jamieson (Minister of Regional Economic Expansion): Mr. Speaker, as to the first question, whether the incentive program will be continued for the so-called Montreal region, that is one of the matters now under active consideration. As to the other question, whether one region will be preferred over another, the answer is that no region of Canada will be preferred over any other so far as the programs of my department are concerned.

[Translation]

Mr. Latulippe: Mr. Speaker, on a supplementary, would the minister tell us whether he recognizes that in the area distribution and establishment of the incentive programs, it had been decided that the basic purpose was the decentralization of industry for the benefit of underdeveloped areas? What steps does the minister intend to take to this effect?

[English]

Mr. Jamieson: Mr. Speaker, I think the hon. member must have been reading some of my speeches. I could agree on the premise on which his question is based. I think there are those who recognize that in and around the Montreal region there are several depressed areas. We are anxious to do what we can about those, as well.

MANPOWER

LOCAL INITIATIVES PROGRAM—REQUEST THAT MEMBERS BE CONSULTED BEFORE PROJECTS APPROVED

Mr. Paul Dick (Lanark-Renfrew-Carleton): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the Minister of Manpower and Immigration. In view of the fact that a LIP grant, being Project No. K 1286 has been awarded to Daniel Burns of Golden Lake, in view of the fact that this project is for the production of a 35 or 40 minute videotape to assist adults from certain towns to adjust to city life, and in view of the fact that all the applicants but one are United States citizens who have deserted the cities of the United States to live in a hippie commune and, as local citizens—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member is now making a speech. He ought to ask his question. We are running short of time. If all hon. members take two or three minutes to ask a question, it will not be very helpful.

Mr. Dick: Mr. Speaker, I thought I had only used 20 seconds. I am coming to my question. Would the minister undertake to consult with local Members of Parliament, the hon. member for Frontenac, Lennox and Adddington and the hon. member for Renfrew North-Nipissing East, and would he reconsider the spending of the latter two-thirds of the $17,600 and perhaps hold the Canadian taxpayers' money for Canadians.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I suggest to the hon. member that that is a representation rather than a question. If there is urgency about the matter he can give notice to the Chair, for the purpose of considering it at the time of adjournment.

POST OFFICE

POSSIBLE RESTORATION OF SIX DAY A WEEK DELIVERY

Hon. W. G. Dinsdale (Brandon-Souris): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Postmaster General. In view of the continuing deterioration in the postal service and the statement in the Speech from the Throne that the government plans urgent remedial action, would the hon. gentleman inform the House when he will be restoring the six day a week delivery as a step in this direction?

[Translation]

Hon. André Ouellet (Postmaster General): Mr. Speaker, if the labour agreement is ratified within the next few days, I believe we can expect much better postal service in the coming weeks. I do not feel that we can say at this time that the postal service is deteriorating. I believe instead that it is improving.

[English]

Mr. Dinsdale: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Is the Postmaster General aware that his own Post Office Department has been unable to reach media deadlines because of the slow-down in service?

ALLEGED INCREASE IN USE OF HEROIN—GOVERNMENT ACTION TO COUNTERACT

Mr. Lorne Nystrom (Yorkton-Melville): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of National Health and Welfare. In view of the announcement made by the minister yesterday that the final report of the Le Dain Commission on the non-medical use of drugs will not be completed for several months, does the minister intend to take action to counteract the increasing use of heroin, as was suggested over the weekend?

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, many steps have been taken during the last year in this regard and many more steps will be taken.

Mr. Nystrom: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I see the hon. member for Renfrew North-Nipissing East is rising on a question of privilege.

• (1610)

Mr. Hopkins: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker. Since the hon. member for Lanark-Renfrew-Carleton referred to me by name, or at least named my constituency, I should like to say that I have communicated with all the high schools in the area, and they are against it. The statement which appeared in the press was inaccurate, and cannot be substantiated and therefore—

Mr. Speaker: Order. The hon. member will appreciate that that is not a question of privilege.

RECOMMENDATION TO ESTABLISH INSTITUTE ON ALCOHOLISM AND DRUG ADDICTION—GOVERNMENT ACTION

Mr. Lorne Nystrom (Yorkton-Melville): In view of the fact that a recommendation was made to the Minister of National Health and Welfare in November, 1971, calling for the establishment of a national institute on alcoholism and drug addiction, and in the light of the delay surrounding the Le Dain Commission may I ask whether it is the intention of the minister to proceed to establish such an institute?

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of National Health and Welfare): With regard to such a proposal it is the intention of my department to await the report of the Le Dain commission.

Can he tell us why some unemployed are receiving T-4's for income tax purposes even before they have received unemployment benefits?

[English]

Hon. Robert K. Andras (Minister of Manpower and Immigration): I am not aware of the incident to which the hon. member refers. I guess one department is a great deal more efficient than the other. But it seems, somehow, to be altogether backwards.

REQUEST FOR STATEMENT ON CATEGORIES OF PERSONS PAYING PREMIUMS BUT EXCLUDED FROM BENEFITS

Mr. W. B. Nesbitt (Oxford): Will the minister make a statement on motions as soon as possible setting out the categories of persons who are obliged to pay into this unemployment insurance fund but who are prohibited from drawing unemployment insurance benefits? I ask this supplementary because of the widespread confusion and uncertainty caused by a recent administrative decision.

Hon. Robert K. Andras (Minister of Manpower and Immigration): I must be able to clear this up very quickly, Mr. Speaker. The sponsors of local initiatives projects, by ruling of the taxation department, are not eligible to receive unemployment benefits and should not therefore be paying into the fund.

Mr. Nesbitt: Can the minister tell us whether there are any other categories of persons who have been paying into the fund for years who may also be excluded?

THE CANADIAN ECONOMY

UNEMPLOYMENT—POSSIBLE SHIFT IN EMPHASIS FROM JOB TRAINING TO STIMULATING ECONOMY TO CREATE JOBS

Mr. Lincoln M. Alexander (Hamilton West): Mr. Speaker, I address this question to the Minister of Finance. In the light of the present high level of unemployment, does the minister now share the view that job vacancies are close to a minimum keeping in mind that the Canadian work force amounts to some eight million people?

Hon. John N. Turner (Minister of Finance): That is a debating point, Mr. Speaker, and I should like to deal with it next Monday night.

Mr. Alexander: In the light of the fact that less than half the graduates from job training programs were able to find work for which they had been trained, is the government thinking of shifting the emphasis from questionable job training programs, and instead, placing the emphasis on stimulating the economy in order to create jobs.

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): I should like to check the hon. member's facts before answering that question.

POLLUTION

THREAT TO MARINE RESOURCES OF ATLANTIC FROM CONTAMINATION BY OIL AND PLASTICS—REQUEST FOR STATEMENT OF GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. James A. McGrath (St. John's East): Mr. Speaker, I should like to address a question to the Acting Minister of the Environment or to his parliamentary secretary. In view of the alarming evidence released in the United States yesterday indicating that there is substantial plastic and oil pollution affecting plankton off the east and south coasts of the United States threatening the whole ecological process, threatening the survival of marine resources, I would ask the acting minister or his parliamentary secretary whether the Canadian government has looked into the consequences of this situation and whether a statement can be made on the subject.

Mr. William Rompkey (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of the Environment): I should like to take that question as notice, also, and provide an answer at a later date.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

LAW OF THE SEA CONFERENCE—DATE OF MEETING—NEGOTIATIONS WITH FRANCE ON CLAIMS TO CONTINENTAL SHELF OFF ST. PIERRE AND MIQUELON

Mr. Lloyd R. Crouse (South Shore): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Secretary of State for External Affairs. In view of the fact that the forthcoming Law of the Sea Conference will be the most vital and far-reaching conference from the point of view of economics, national sovereignty, pollution control and resource development in which Canada will participate within the next 100 years, would the Secretary of State inform the House whether a firm date has yet been set for this conference and will he seek to make a statement on motions concerning the result of our negotiations with France over their undersea ownership claims to the continental shelf surrounding St. Pierre and Miquelon, and also dealing with the results of our negotiations with the United States to determine the ownership of George's Bank—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Secretary of State for External Affairs): In answer to the first question, there is to be an organizational meeting of the conference in New York in late November or early December, 1973. This is a firm date. The first substantive session will be held in Santiago, Chile, in April and May, 1974. That is the present schedule. As to the further questions, Mr. Speaker, I would suggest that when the estimates of the department are referred to the standing committee an opportunity will arise to examine those other matters.

NORTHERN AFFAIRS

NORTHWEST TERRITORIES—ALLEGED PROROGATION OF COUNCIL BY COMMISSIONER—REQUEST FOR STATEMENT ON GOVERNMENTAL REFORM

Mr. Erik Nielsen (Yukon): A question to the Prime Minister, Mr. Speaker. In view of reports that the Council of the Northwest Territories was prorogued while in session by a federal civil servant, the commissioner who administers the territory under the direction of the Governor in Council, and that prorogation took place without the wish of the Council or in the absence of consultation with the Council, would the right hon. gentleman direct the commissioner to reconvene the Council in order to ascertain the wishes of the elected representatives of the people, and ensure that his government follows a policy which will not allow a federal employee to override the wishes of the elected representatives of the people of that territory in future?

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): I will gladly undertake to look into the facts. They are, indeed, important if as stated by the hon. member. I had no knowledge of them until the question was asked. I might just add that perhaps the request of the hon. member might set a dangerous precedent if its effect were to withdraw from the head of the territory or, indeed, from the head of the state, the prerogative he has to grant a prorogation or not.

Mr. Nielsen: The prorogation was, according to reports, declared unilaterally by the federal civil servant, the commissioner. My supplementary question is this: when will the government bring in its policy with respect to governmental reform not only in the Northwest Territories but, as well, in the Yukon for which the people in the two territories have been crying out for so long?

Mr. Trudeau: This is a matter of policy in connection with which the Minister of Northern Affairs has made statements at various times and there is nothing to add at this time.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

POSSIBILITY OF NEGOTIATING WITH UNITED STATES FOR AMNESTY FOR DRAFT DODGERS

Mr. Barry Mather (Surrey-White Rock): My question is for the Secretary of State for External Affairs, Mr. Speaker. It has to do with the presence in our country of a large number of young Americans who are here because they decided not to participate in the Viet Nam carnage. Many of these people would like to return to their homeland. Is consideration being given to initiating discussions with a view to encouraging the United States government to allow these young Americans in Canada who wish to return to do so under terms of amnesty, particularly having in mind the unemployment situation in Canada?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Secretary of State for External Affairs): We did not consult with the United States when these young people came to Canada. They came under Canadian law, but we did not consult as to any changes or as to the law itself. And we do not intend to consult about their return.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

OFFICIAL LANGUAGES ACT

APPLICATION OF LAW WITHIN FEDERAL DEPARTMENTS AND AGENCIES

Mr. Pierre De Bané (Parliamentary Secretary to Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the government on which it can rest assured that it will never be troubled by the official opposition, particularly its French-speaking members. It has to do with the report of the Commissioner of Official Languages and I should like to direct my question to the Secretary of State in charge of a great number of bilingualism programs.

Does the Secretary of State intend to remedy the various situations that the commissionner has diagnosed in his report in order to ensure as soon as possible that the Official Languages Act is observed in all departments and government agencies?

[English]

Hon. Hugh Faulkner (Secretary of State): I do not think I can add very much to what I said yesterday. Part of the report of the Official Languages Commissioner does touch upon my responsibility as Secretary of State. I told the House yesterday that I have been studying it personally, the department was looking at it, and I recommended it to all of us.

IMPLEMENTATION OF RECOMMENDATIONS OF COMMISSIONER WITHIN DEPARTMENT OF TRANSPORT

Mr. Pierre De Bané (Parliamentary Secretary to Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a supplementary to the Minister of Transport.

Since the commissioner makes several recommendations for better implementation of the bilingualism policy in the Department of Transport and some government agencies such as Air Canada, would the hon. minister be prepared to give instructions so that the recommendations of the commissioner will be implemented in the current fiscal year?

Hon. Jean Marchand (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I was informed that Mr. Spicer wanted to see me. I will be very pleased to receive him to discuss the report with him and bring about the corrections he suggests.

TRANSPORT

WEST COAST MARINE PILOTS—POSSIBLE STRIKE CAUSING CLOSURE OF PORTS

Mr. Harvie Andre (Calgary Centre): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Transport. In view of the fact that the west coast marine pilots could go out on strike this Thursday, which would effectively shut down west coast ports again, would the minister indicate what steps he or his officials have taken to try to prevent another stoppage of throughput at west coast ports which would be so damaging to Canadian industries on the west coast?

Hon. Jean Marchand (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, the pilotage authority has been negotiating with the pilots for months now. I think that a conciliator was called in. The Minister of Labour could give the hon. member information on that. Apparently they have not yet come to an agreement. Is there going to be an agreement? I am not sure; but fortunately they do have certain rights under the law and I am not the one who is going to deprive the pilots of those rights.

WEST COAST MARINE PILOTS—POSSIBLE INTERVENTION OF MINISTER OF LABOUR TO AVERT STRIKE

Mr. James A. McGrath (St. John's East): A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. May I ask the Minister of Labour whether he intends to follow the example of his predecessor and intervene in this dispute in order to avert a strike which would close down the port of Vancouver?

Hon. John C. Munro (Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, as the Minister of Transport has already mentioned, our officers have intervened and tried to be as helpful as possible in order to obtain a settlement. I realize how serious the matter is. If I were to conclude that ministerial intervention would help to resolve the situation, then it would be given serious consideration.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

REQUEST FOR WITHDRAWAL OF INVITATION TO PRESIDENT AMIN OF UGANDA TO VISIT CANADA

Mr. Gus Mitges (Grey-Simcoe): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the right hon. Prime Minister and deals with the invitation extended to the dictator of Uganda by the government of Canada to visit this country in August of this year. In view of the inhuman and inhumane policies of President Amin in his treatment of non-blacks in Uganda, would the Prime Minister consider withdrawing this government's invitation to President Amin?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, it is this government's view that it should not intervene in the affairs of other Commonwealth nations. Of course, the Commonwealth nations collectively can express their displeasure, but there is no provision for expelling a member of the Commonwealth. It has happened that countries have withdrawn, but we do not intend to direct the Commonwealth in a way that would involve the censure of one government by another government.

Mr. Speaker: Orders of the day.

Mr. MacEachen: Mr. Speaker, might I raise a point of order affecting the members of this House. Before the order designated for consideration today having to do with the appropriation bill is called, I wonder whether we could agree to deal with order No. 21 to send the annual report of the Department of Indian Affairs and Northern Development to the committee. I understand agreement has been reached and that this can be done now without debate.

Mr. Speaker: Is that agreed?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

SUPPLY

APPROPRIATION ACT No. 1, 1973

The House resumed, from Monday, February 12, consideration in committee of Bill C-141, for granting to Her Majesty certain sums of money for the public service for the financial year ending 31st March, 1973—Mr. Drury—Mr. McCleave in the chair.

The Chairman: Order. House again in committee of the whole on Bill C-141, an act for granting to Her Majesty certain sums of money for the public service for the financial year ending 31st March, 1973. When the committee rose last evening votes 15a and 40a of the schedule relating to agriculture were under consideration.

On clause 2—Schedule.

Mr. Horner (Battleford-Kindersley): Mr. Chairman, I should first like to clarify for the members on the government side, both NDP and Liberals, what Conservative policy is regarding the marketing of rapeseed. I am really quite surprised they do not know immediately what our policy would be. Since we believe that the individual is intelligent and should be allowed to make up his own mind on these matters, and since we do not believe in rule by experts, as do the NDP and the Liberals, naturally this is a decision that the rapeseed growers will have to determine for themselves, and we would welcome a plebiscite on the matter.

Mr. Gleave: Why didn't you vote for it last year?

Mr. Horner (Battleford-Kindersley): Personally, I would be inclined to let the Wheat Board handle it provided the Wheat Board could be changed somewhat; I shall develop that point a little later. Otherwise, I would caution farmers not to enter such an arrangement on a permanent basis. I know that a lot of people in Winnipeg would be happy to see the Wheat Board handle rapeseed, especially those who do very well on barley.

I was quite surprised to hear the Minister of Justice, the minister in charge of the Wheat Board, accuse the NDP yesterday of having the philosophy that the experts ought to tell the producers what to do. I was pleased to hear him say that because, having taken a look at all the reports he has received from the experts and read some of the conclusions in those reports, it is reassuring to know that the minister himself does not do everything the experts tell him to do.

I am concerned with some of the conclusions the experts have drawn in regard to matters of grain handling, trucking and transportation. A lot of these reports were prepared at tremendous expense to the taxpayer, and some of them are dated in 1970. They reached the Parliamentary Library last Wednesday. Apparently it is all right for the minister to have them two and a half years ago but M.P.'s have to wait for them.

I have just gone over the reports quickly, so if I happen to make a mistake I think I should be forgiven by the minister. It is of interest to note that the criteria used by these experts do not relate to any social repercussions there may be in western Canada, and in this regard I think the people of western Canada should be alerted. From listening to many of the minister's speeches recently, it appears to me he is leaning toward a change in the grain hauling system at the 70 inland terminals, something that upsets me very much.

A lot of people have come to the conclusion that the grain industry is labour-intensive and there must be a cut in the number of people employed in that industry. I suppose they have in mind sending them into government programs and projects which would retrain them for something else. We are already losing one seat in Saskatchewan and another in Manitoba, and we now have a report that recommends a reduction in the number of people employed in this particular industry.

One of the factors not considered in these studies was the tremendous contribution made by a lot of the grain growers to rural life in small towns in Saskatchewan. I think the minister is in real danger of being unaware of the realities of life because he stepped straight from school into the cabinet and perhaps cannot appreciate what is involved here. It has been said that the grain handling system was subject to inflation. I do not know what is not subject to inflation these days. One report says that the over-all cost of marketing grain today is 42.9 cents a bushel, and that if we adopted the inland terminal proposals the cost would be 38.7 cents. They are asking us to look at a savings of three cents. I think the Minister of Justice made reference to this in a speech delivered in Regina a short time ago when he said people should look seriously at how much money this adds up to if they handle a billion bushels a year. For a saving of three cents a bushel, we are asked to continue and accelerate the depopulation of rural Saskatchewan, Manitoba and Alberta.

According to the reports farmers will be asked to use trucks to move this grain to these inland terminals at a cost of approximately 3.8 cent per bushel, and I suspect it would be considerably more. We are also asking the rural municipalities, after the taxpayers have already paid for a rail system which was given very costly land, to build the roads to handle this grain movement. The cost of maintaining these roads is another factor I do not see mentioned in the reports.

Another sad mistake in the reports is the assumption that we are going to continually ship wheat. It has been assumed that we are not going to increase sales of barley and take part in the sale of utility wheat in the Pacific area, in Asia and other points. These utility grades of wheat and barley would perhaps not have to be cleaned, and this would reduce the three cents per bushel saving.

I do not know where this Minister of Finance gets his experts, but he has taken a typical socialist approach by going to the most educated person he can find for his advice. It does not matter whether that person has done nothing more than read a book, the socialist idea is to go to the best educated—experience is not considered. Stage one of this socialistic program is to ask the most educated person to consider the problem and come up with solutions. Once you have the solutions, stage two is to inform the poor and ignorant people what is right and good. I understand the second stage in respect of these reports is to take place next month in Calgary and Saskatoon when this government will try to get the people to see the wisdom of their conclusions.

The Minister of Justice, the hon. member for Saskatoon-Humboldt, said after the election that everything the government did was right but the people did not understand. Apparently Information Canada and all the other facilities the government has at its disposal failed to educate the people. This whole thing is rather like a hard sell advertising program. You have to get people to want something, and then they will be happy with it when you give it to them.

In so far as these inland terminals are concerned, I am concerned that we will have to pay for them. If this program is put into effect we will suffer. This same sort of thing was done by the Liberal government in 1953. I recall reading a feasibility report on the Saskatchewan dam. It indicated that in straight dollars and cents the dam was not feasible. The writers of this report did not take into consideration the people who live in that province, the recreational facilities provided and that sort of thing. Since that time we were fortunate enough to have a different kind of government and we were able to get this dam for Saskatchewan.

[Mr. Horner (Battleford-Kindersley).]

Another thing the experts have not looked at in respect of this savings of three cents a bushel is the amount of grain farmers are able to haul directly from the combine to the elevator. In my own operation I think I haul 20 per cent of what I produce directly to the elevators. I have not had to put it in a bin as I have always hauled direct to the elevator without having to store the grain. If this system is brought in it will result in farmers having to build storage space on the farm for another 200 million or 300 million bushels. I do not know what we will be able to do with the saving of three cents a bushel, but the five or six things I have mentioned suggest that we should go very slowly on any kind of crash program.

The reports suggest that the railways will save 5.7 cents per bushel as has been indicated. I do not know what it is with this man, but perhaps like a lot of us, he grew up in the 30's and did not have a toy train to play with when growing up. He seems to be obsessed with railways. He buys hopper cars when we have not got the money and do not need them. The railways might save 5.7 cents a bushel but the farmers will have to pay out 4 cents a bushel for trucking and probably another 4 cents in other costs.

I fail to understand the railways' position in respect of feeder lines. If they do not have feeder lines to bring the grain out to the main line they will not have anything to haul. This is not to say I think all the lines should be maintained. Obviously, some lines are not really needed, but this is the sort of thing upon which we will have to take action very slowly, while taking into consideration the people living in those areas. Surely, the decisions should not be made entirely by people in Winnipeg and Ottawa.

Let me mention briefly the west coast situation, about which nothing has been done. In the very near future handling through the west coast could double and the bottleneck now at the west would intensify. The idea regarding hopper cars was good if the facilities on the west coast were improved, but they have not been improved. Today, we have rail cars backed up 20 miles. We still have problems there which we have always had but they are getting bigger. The Minister of Justice said yesterday that grain was moving very rapidly. I suggest to him that average car unloadings at the west coast amount to less than 600 cars a day. I do not think that is any record.

Let us consider what some of our competitors are doing. Are they giving hopper cars to the railways and then sitting down with cap in hand trying to negotiate some method of maintenance or some method of repayment? Are they hoping that the railways will buy the cars in a year? I doubt that that is the case. In Kuena, Australia, new facilities are being built which will be paid for through a per bushel handling charge. They are going to provide storage for 31 million bushels at a cost of $41 million. That is close to what it cost to administer the Lift program. This was money the farmers never saw which could have been used to provide a 30 million bushel facility at the west coast.

I suggest the $48 million for hopper cars might well have been used to improve facilities on the west coast, if in fact that was all the minister was able to wheedle out of the cabinet. The capacity at this dock in Kuena, Australia, is 5,000 bushels an hour, twice as great as any facility we have for loading ships in Vancouver. They are also building a port which will be able to handle ships capable of carrying 100,000 tons of grain. If there are ships in the next few years capable of loading 100,000 tons of grain they will have to load out of Seattle. We could save 10 cents a bushel on the cost difference between moving freight to large ships as compared with the small ships we are using today, yet we have a Minister of Justice surrounding himself with one group of experts after another trying to save money at the expense of increasing farm and labour costs.

The same situation exists in the United States where they are building facilities at Seattle and Tacoma. If we get into another situation like that of 1969-70 we pretty well know which country will be left with grain. I am concerned about the minister's attitude. Every time he is asked a question pertaining to anything in the west, he says he is discussing it with farm organizations and will be talking it over with his experts, after which a decision will be forthcoming. I think the minister has forgotten what happened last October 30. We had an election under our democratic process. As a result, people like myself were elected, and I like to think I represent some of the farmers who do not belong to any organization. I am a member of the Saskatchewan Wheat Pool. I have been a member for 25 years and I haul all my grain there. I am a member of the Palliser Wheat Growers' Association. I was elected by the farmers and producers of the Battleford-Kindersley constituency and I am here to represent them. The mere fact that some expert or organization suggests something to me does not cut much ice if I do not think it is right for the farmers in my area.

Was the Standing Committee on Agriculture named just for the sake of naming it? We should be studying a feed grain policy for Canada. It is no wonder this legislation does not have much success in the House. Decisions should be made by the committee, and these matters should not be brought into the House for decision until after a committee has studied them. We are very suspicious of the FAIR formula that the Canada Grains Council is promoting at the present time. This formula does nothing for the western producer and is not in any way related to the cost of production. It is simply that if a surplus of barley or feed grain should arise again on the prairies, the eastern feeders will be allowed to benefit from it. Of course, if we had had a government at all during 1969-70 there would not have been the bootlegging going on in respect of cheap feed in any event.

I should like to make a few remarks about the Canadian Wheat Board. It is strange that yesterday, in answer to some questions the Minister of Justice who is responsible for the Wheat Board said "that it was the Wheat Board's decision to raise quotas more rapidly than I would have liked in the fall and early winter that gave rise to the possibility of congestion." It is strange that when the Wheat Board does something correct, then the minister agrees with the decision but when there is an unpopular decision he implies that he cannot understand the board making such a decision.

There was a period of two or three years when the quotas worked well. All of a sudden there was an election in the country and we had a quota of six or eight bushels. The elevator agents said that they could not handle that amount of grain for months and months. A person in the Wheat Board yesterday informed me that the policy is that the quotas are raised when there is 30 per cent space available in the blocks. I suggest that on September 1 last year there certainly was not 30 per cent space in any of the blocks, and yet the quotas were raised to six bushels. I suggest that the minister should get together with the Wheat Board because there would seem to be disagreement concerning when quotas should rise in the first place.

I think the Wheat Board is a wonderful thing. The other day the minister was quick to answer when someone asked about the Wheat Board selling grain to Eastern feeders at 10 cents below the world market price. He suggested the hon. member was against the Wheat Board. The Wheat Board is supposed to help the farmer. Someone is needed on the board who knows what is going on, rather than someone who does not know what the agenda is and cannot ask the proper questions. There is a need for someone on the Wheat Board who is elected by the farmers. In this way we could be assured that the board would operate in the way the farmers want it to operate. If this were the case, I would be in favour of the Wheat Board handling rapeseed. But that is not the case. The Wheat Board is hallowed ground. One cannot criticize it because then the members of the New Democratic Party and their friends jump up and say that those who criticize it are against it.

Then, there is the matter of the way in which boxcars are allocated. Yesterday the minister evaded a question on this topic. It seems to me the producer is the only one who should decide where the cars go. The grain is supposed to be obtained from the producer and sold for the greatest amount of money possible. That is not what happens. For the last three months of the year, boxcars are allocated to those elevators with less than 25 per cent vacant space. For the other months another formula is used. If it is a good formula for three months, I think it should also be a good formula for 12 months.

The Chairman: I regret to interrupt the hon. member but the time allotted to him has expired.

Mr. Danforth: Mr. Chairman, when this parliament began we hoped we had entered a new era in respect of agriculture because we had promoted to the high office of the Minister of Agriculture of this country a member from a neighbouring riding to mine in southwestern Ontario. I supported this move because I felt that this hon. member coming from that area would have a real grasp of the problems of the farmers in that area and now would be in a position to do something about the situation. Having said that, I should like to say that we need more than just words to solve the problems in that area and indeed in all areas of eastern Canada and British Columbia. Words alone will not suffice. We would like to see a little more action from this government than we had from the preceding government and the succession of Ministers of Agriculture. Each minister had pet projects, pet theories and pet principles which he foisted on the agriculture industry of Canada, with the result that we have had one of the most chaotic situations. One result has been that there has been no long-term progressive policy for any particular group in agriculture.

I shall reflect on some of the things that have happened in our area. The federal government has brought in a policy to promote the re-establishment of the Ontario sugar beet industry. This is laudible. We need alternative crops to some of the other crops which no longer are feasible to produce. However, when we think back to the year 1968, we remember that the government at that time was trying so hard to get the farmers engaged in the sugar beet industry out of that industry. They pleaded with them not to produce, and asked the sugar refinery of that area to purchase the equipment from the farmers in order that the equipment would not be a liability. In other words, the industry was defunct. Now this government plans to invest millions of dollars to re-establish a new industry. This is not as devious as it sounds because in that era, 1962 through 1966, the actual economic returns to the growers of sugar beets were not comparable to the returns in respect of other companion crops, so the farmers in that area turned from the production of sugar beets to crops which could be harvested with greater facility or with a greater return per acre.

At that time the industry was not assisted. Now, when the world price for sugar is higher and there could be a measure of profit in the production of sugar beets, the government has the idea that perhaps we should have an industry down in that area. If a farmer wishes to become involved in the production of sugar beets his costs are immense. No farmer will become involved in this type of investment unless he has a long-term guarantee of some sort that he will have a domestic market for the product at a profit to him. No longer will he abide by the catch-as-catch-can promotion of a crop which is on again and off again. He wants to see a long-term program with some stability. We certainly have not had such a program from this government.

Every time an election comes along it seems to be a golden year for the producer in Canada. Prior to the 1968 election in my area, one million dollars was given to the sugar beet farmers. Prior to the last election there were payments to the wheat growers, the hog producers and other growers in different areas. It just happened that these promotions took place and that payments were made some weeks prior to the calling of the election in order to influence some of the farmers in their thinking. This, however, creates havoc in respect of the commodity groups.

We have established a special committee to study the high prices of food in this country, but let us look at the record of what has happened in the last three years. We are importing butter into this country. Four or five years ago we had tremendous surpluses of stocks, but the government set up a national dairy committee to look after this, to reduce the surplus stocks. They did this to such a degree that they reduced a great many of our producers to poverty and they had to move off the farms. They regulated production to a sufficient degree to meet domestic requirements, they hoped, but when an invariable factor such as bad weather upset the whole proposition, the government has had to make the decision to import dairy products into Canada. We cannot import these at a low, basic price; we have to import them at the world market price which is very often greater than the prices charged here in Canada.

Let me say a few words about other commodities. I can recall the time last spring when in my area there was tremendous frost damage which, in most instances, completely wiped out the entire crop of the peach growers. Some of the growers suffered grievously. They suffered a crop loss of perhaps $10,000 to $100,000. They appealed to this government for some help. They wanted direct financial aid, but the government procrastinated. What the government said was what we will do is wait until we see what kind of harvest you have, and then we will act accordingly. The peach growers in the area knew there was not going to be any harvest and that the government was not going to take any action, which is what the government ended up by doing. The government said they would back the farmers at the bank for loans at current rates of interest. Most of those growers who had any credit at all could have taken the same action, which perhaps they did. This is what the government did in this instance.

The government does not have a constant policy. When the hog producers were in trouble a year ago and asked for some help, they got it immediately. They received $5 per pig up to 200 pigs, which gave them $1,000 a farm. Those farmers were helped, and justifiably so, but the same help was not given to other producers. Why do we help one group and not another group? Why is it that when the consumers of Canada are paying the highest price for milk, we fine producers for producing milk? There is something wrong with the system and with the over-all policy. The minister said this morning—and I agree with him—that there is a farmer leaving a farm every two hours, or eleven farmers leaving farms every 24 hours and going to the city where, in some instances, they become welfare recipients. There is something wrong when we lose farmers at that rate.

Do you know, that at present we have more civil servants in Canada than there are farmers in the country? There is something wrong when we cannot support an industry but yet can support a bureaucracy. We must have a policy which will put incentive back into farming. Farming is no longer a has-been industry. It is a very specialized industry which requires extremely long-term financing and capital financing which is comparable to industrial financing. We are not dealing with farmers whose outlays run from $15,000 to $25,000, although certainly there are some of those today who run very successful farms. But in most cases we are dealing with farmers with investments anywhere from $150,000 to one million dollars or perhaps $1.5 million. These are large farming interests. Do not tell me that they are corporate farms. Some of them are family farms according to any criteria you want to apply. They are the people who are getting hurt. They want to know what the government's policies are, where we are going and what we are doing.

Just to add to the confusion that we are experiencing today, we heard testimony from two key ministers of the government. One is the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs who is responsible for the setting up of a special committee of the House to study the trends in food prices and to determine ways and means whereby the consumer would not have to pay exorbitant prices. In other words, they would put a lid on the prices so far as possible. If they could not peg the prices, perhaps they could stop prices from rising so quickly. The minister studied this matter because consumers across the nation were demanding that such action be taken. Consumers felt that in some instances they were paying exorbitant prices for food, which indeed they were. So the government set up a special committee to look into food prices.

Then, we have another minister, the Minister of Agriculture, saying that the committee will not achieve anything and that he can tell us what the result will be after the hearings are over. He believes the price of food will continue to rise. He said in speeches—and I think I quote him fairly—that farmers were not receiving enough for their produce. In many instances, I agree with that statement. On the other hand, he said that consumers in this country are receiving a bargain in food. This is what is upsetting members of the food prices committee. You cannot have it both ways. You cannot have two ministers of the government stating directly opposite views if we are to accomplish anything, because all that does is to create confusion. I, and I think most members of the House from all parties who have any connection with the agriculture industry, want to see the family farm and those engaged in farming obtaining a return for their investment and labour comparable to that of other segments of the economy. The minister said that farmers want a fair shake, and I agree with this. There is no argument there. That is what the farmers of this country want. They want to be able to promote and develop a business on a sound footing which will provide a living for themselves comparable to that of others with equal investment.

We are dealing with the prices of food, and this leads me right into something else concerning farmers. We are studying the price of food, and that is the concern of producers, distributors, wholesalers and retailers. I think we should study the price of food as a concern of the government. I would point out the taxes which farmers have to pay now, since the new tax system destroys many of the tax benefits which farmers have been able to utilize through the years and which made it possible to pass on a farm from one generation to the next. This policy will destroy many farmers in the country. These additional expenses must be passed on to the consumer because there is nobody else to pay them.

Then, there are government regulations regarding packaging and distribution, and there are tariffs and taxes. I think we should study what government interference has actually done to the cost of food in Canada today. But we will never be able to do that because the people concerned will not be called in front of the committee. However, we will be digging to see how much the retailers make, how much the wholesalers make, and we will be dealing with how much the producers did not make. Anyone who has had anything to do with agriculture could have told you that this was what would happen before we ever sat on the committee. So, I think we should take a new tack.

The Chairman: I regret to interrupt the hon. member, but it being five o'clock, it is my duty to rise, report progress and request leave to consider the bill again later this day.

Progress reported.

PRIVATE MEMBERS' PUBLIC BILLS

BANK OF CANADA ACT

AMENDMENTS RESPECTING LONG-TERM LOANS OF FEDERAL AND PROVINCIAL GOVERNMENTS

On the order: Public Bills:

January 15, 1973—Second reading and reference to the Standing Committee on Finance, Trade and Economic Affairs of Bill C-14, An Act to amend the Bank of Canada Act.—Mr. Caouette (Témiscamingue.)

Mr. Gilbert Rondeau (Shefford): Mr. Speaker, at the request of the hon. member for Témiscamingue, and with the unanimous consent of the House, I should like to move second reading of Bill C-14, seconded by the hon. member for Bellechasse (Mr. Lambert).

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Does the House agree to allow the hon. member for Shefford to move second reading of the bill on behalf of the hon. member for Témiscamingue?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Rondeau: Mr. Speaker, I think that Bill C-14 is one of the most important bills ever introduced in the House because it would improve the whole financial structure not only of the federal government but also of all the provinces which are stagnating.

The bill under consideration would amend the Bank of Canada Act, so that that institution could be permitted to make long term loans to the federal government or provincial governments at an interest rate which would not exceed administration costs.

Mr. Speaker, the Bank of Canada is an institution which should first be useful to all Canadians and then to the federal government and provincial governments. That is why amendments to the Bank of Canada Act are advocated by the Créditistes.

The bill under consideration would repeal section 18(1)(i) of the existing act which now reads as follows:

The Bank may ... make loans or advances for periods not exceeding six months to the Government of Canada or the government of any province on the pledge or hypothecation of readily marketable securities issued or guaranteed by Canada or any province.

Mr. Speaker, we suggest to put the Bank of Canada at the service of the provinces and the federal government to prevent this institution from becoming a mere shadow. To this end, we propose three changes to section 18(1)(i) of the Bank of Canada Act in order to change the duration of loans from this bank to the federal government or to a provincial government.

Instead of lending money for periods not exceeding six months, as prescribed in the existing act, the Bank of Canada could make long term loans, for periods up to 60 years, stated in our amendment.

Mr. Speaker, it is absolutely ridiculous to see the Bank of Canada proposing loans to the central government or to the provinces for a period not exceeding six months. In fact, the governments cannot, in such a short period, make long term investments and avail themselves of the benefits that the Bank of Canada should offer to these various governments.

The second amendment concerns guarantees to be supplied by federal and provincial governments. At present, the bank requires as security readily negotiable transferable stocks and shares because loans are for short terms.

The amendment we are proposing calls for real credit of Canada or of any province to guarantee loans granted by the bank. This would enable the Bank of Canada to make loans to the federal government on the real worth of Canada, and to provinces on their real credit and their physical potential and not exclusively on short term guarantees or transferable securities. The Bank of Canada could thus truly carry out its function as a Canadian financial institution serving central and provincial governments.

The third change we propose for the present Bank of Canada Act concerns the interest rate. Instead of being subjected to exorbitant interest rates that can only worsen their financial position, the borrowers, be they the federal government or the provinces, could obtain loans at a rate of interest not exceeding the cost of administration, as is the case with loans granted to developing countries.

Mr. Speaker, considering that the rate of interest of the Bank of Canada has increased from 6¼ to 9 per cent within a few years, one must come to the conclusion that the Bank of Canada in fact has restrained the Canadian economy and induced the rise of interest rates in all financial fields. The Bank of Canada was the direct cause of inflationary interest rates affecting housing, agriculture and production, whereas it should be what the Social Credit party wants it to be, that is a financial institution ensuring an adequate economic balance, viable competition and reasonable prices.

Now, at the present time, the Bank of Canada is not assuming its proper role, and so the members of the Social Credit party are proposing an amendment to the Bank of Canada Act that will have that institution serve the purposes that were intended for it on its inception in 1935.

For example during the last 19 years of federal government administration, 17 budgets have shown a deficit while Canada had only two budget surpluses. The federal government showed up a total deficit of $6,361,000,000 which means a deficit of $300 per Canadian. In 1955, Canada had a deficit of $151 million, in 1965 a deficit of $38 million, in 1967 a deficit of $442 million, in 1969 a deficit of $566 million and in 1972, $600 million. Strangely enough, in all the governments that have followed one another in the House since 1955, all the budgets have shown a deficit. Mr. Speaker, this information can be found in the Public Accounts of Canada for the fiscal year 1970-71 especially in the booklet entitled "How your tax dollar is spent 1972-73" and in the budget papers tabled by the Minister of Finance (Mr. Turner) on May 8, 1972.

Thus, with the amendments we propose to bring to the Bank of Canada Act today, the federal government could balance its budget and say once and for all that the deficits experienced in the federal administration is a thing of the past because the federal government would be really, financially speaking, a supreme power and the provinces could take the responsibilities inherent in their own jurisdiction. Unfortunately, we are the witnesses of sempiternal federal-provincial conferences that always end up in quibbles over tax sharing.

The federal government is responsible for financial matters in Canada while the provincial governments have jurisdiction over highways and education. But if the federal government does not put the Bank of Canada at the service of provinces to enable them to develop, to grow without being reduced to beggary, without being compelled to go and beg in New York or elsewhere, things will be taking a bad turn.

Mr. Speaker, thanks to the amendments we are introducing today, the Bank of Canada could play its part; the federal government and particularly the provinces will not have to lie at the mercy of foreign countries.

We could thus finance our public debt, which has gone up from $17,951,491,464 in 1955 to $45 billion in 1972 and which will increase by a few billions when the estimates are brought forward next Monday. The federal government alone will therefore have a debt of about $50 billion.

Mr. Speaker, thanks to the amendments I am introducing under this bill, the Bank of Canada could redeem obligations which are now on the market and pay their holders. In 1973, we could save in interest alone on the public debt more than $2.260 million, 90 per cent of which are not paid out to Canadians but to foreigners. The Bank of Canada could redeem obligations and the money which would be paid to their holders could be used to operate the Canadian economy, to help private enterprise which is being slaughtered by usurious interest rates.

Mr. Speaker, this would enable us to save, 365 days a year, $6,191,780 in interest per day on the Canadian public debt alone.

In addition to that, with the amendments proposed, the Bank of Canada could do the same with regard to the provinces. Indeed, when we look at the debts of provincial and territorial public administrations to 31 March 1970, we notice this:

Short-term bank loans	$ 47,384,000
Bills payable	734,073,000
Loans and advances	527,181,000
Treasury bills	127,949,000
Savings bonds	190,021,000
Bonds	10,885,052,000
Notes	56,387,000
Deposits and other liabilities	854,780,000

Thus, the liabilities of the provincial governments total $13,422,827,000. This is not the whole story. The provincial governments have also endorsed debts from some provincial agencies. Such debts have been entered into by municipalities, school boards or Crown corporations such as the Quebec Hydro.

On March 31, 1970, provincial endorsements for these various publics organizations amounted to $10,475,101,000. These figures are taken from annual report No. 68-209 on the provincial administration finances published in June 1972. The cost of the federal debt is $2.260 billion; the cost of provincial debts is $1,195,300,000 and the total cost of the debt, in Canada, is $3,455,300,000, excluding the interest paid to municipal and school organizations as well as to Crown corporations.

Now, these amendments to the Bank of Canada Act would actually enable this Canadian finance institution to play its role of financial organization and would also enable the Canadian government to act as a sovereign government through its own money, its own bank, its own credit, along with the provincial governments which would have Bank of Canada branches available so as to finance themselves within their physical possibilities because the Social Credit theory is that anything that is physically possible should be financially possible. And this can be achieved only by using the Bank of Canada which is the foremost Canadian financial institution and which would be given back its true role. Today it is a ghost institution which was created in 1935 by the then prime minister when, with a view to obtaining the votes of the western Creditistes, he promised in a speech pronounced in Saskatoon in 1934 to create a national bank to serve the interests of the federal government and of the provinces. But, until now the Bank of Canada has been a ghost institution which has not yet played its role because since 1935 the interest rates have increased, the debts have increased while Canadians and their governments have sunk into ever deeper financial slavery towards foreign financial institutions.

This is why, Mr. Speaker, some international caucuses are now considering a world monetary reform. Today, at the international level, we have reached a dead-end. Over the years, people enjoyed poking fun at the Social Credit party. Now, I think the time has come to put aside the old gadgets and the outdated financial formulas that led us nowhere except to debts, taxes and loans bearing usurious interest rates. Such formulas have reduced the Canadian people to such a state of financial slavery that we cannot see the day when we get out of it. We must turn aside from the beaten tracks and adopt modern and scientific financial solutions placing the Bank of Canada in authority above the other financial organizations, above those financial companies which now control the provincial governments and the federal government and which, as they administer the debts of the whole country, in fact create Canada's monetary policy.

Mr. Speaker, if the Bank of Canada were restored to its real function, Parliament would again become what it should be, a sovereign Parliament possessing a sovereign currency, which does not need foreign countries for monetary purposes but does need them for trade. Unfortunately we are now slaves and beggars in regard to foreign countries. Créditistes do have a solution and I ask those who claim that we never produced a valid, serious and concrete solution to this problem to consider Bill C-14 brought forward in this House by the hon. member for Témiscamingue (Mr. Caouette) and now before us, which does offer such a financial solution, opening the gates to economic prosperity and financial independence of Canadians, of the federal government and of provincial governments.

Mr. Jacques-L. Trudel (Montreal-Bourassa): Mr. Speaker, I listened attentively to the hon. member for Shefford's outline of a theory which is going to solve all current problems. Whereas some twenty countries signed an agreement last year and are still seeking a solution, he claims that the Créditistes have found a magic formula, embodied in Bill C-14. Now, none of those countries has found such a solution, such a magic formula.

Mr. Latulippe: That is not the concern of other countries. It is ours.

Mr. Trudel: I also noticed that the hon. member did not mention the 1949 agreement, still in force in 1972.

I see, Mr. Speaker, that several Créditistes want to speak at the same time. Actually, they would have been better advised to settle the matter earlier, instead of interrupting me while I have the floor. I not only did not prevent the hon. member from speaking, but I listened attentively to what he had to say. Now, I would ask them to kindly listen to me for a few minutes and allow me a few remarks about the magic formula which has just been expounded to us.

They said they wanted to help the provinces. I think all hon. members agree on that. But before wanting to help some thought should be given to the plans already existing and to which the provinces have participated. The hon. member for Shefford (Mr. Rondeau) took great care not to mention them and merely advocated instead the adoption of an extraordinary formula liable to solve all the problems.

The hon. member for Shefford has read some figures—I should not say read because he seems to know them by heart—but he has forgotten many others and I would like to quote some of them.

There is certainly a sharing problem in Canada. Now an objective must be attained and there I might meet the hon. member. There is always the taxpayer who pays the bill. Of course the municipal and provincial governments have certain responsibilities as well as the federal government.

I think that if Bill C-14 could solve all our socio-economic problems I would be the first to support it. But, as I pointed out earlier, they do not even want us to discuss a problem for which they seem to have a ready made solution.

I want to talk about the sharing of public funds. We must check to see if the sharing is fair, if the provinces or the municipalities were really given the means they need to attain their objectives while taking ours into account at the same time.

I have before me a table which I would like to quote and which is a good example of provincial tax sharing, with detailed figures which do not provide all the answers, I agree, and do not set forth all the social and economic problems.

Now, in addition to the transfer payments to the provinces, I should like to quote some figures relating to the federal area. After tax sharing with the provinces, the federal government only has 40 per cent of the tax basis. Provinces and municipalities receive 59.6 per cent. I do not think anybody said during the debate on the estimates that we have the money, but that all the same it is impossible to do more than our means allow us to.

Reference was made to administration costs, to a magic solution, and it was added that the Bank of Canada, since 1935, has not played its role properly. However, we were told things today which are just the opposite of what the member of Shefford has just said: Canada is in a better position than almost any other country because its economy has been controlled, because the dollar was allowed to find its own value. Other countries which did not do so have not found themelves in the same situation. We have done it within our structures.

Moreover, we should at least admit that the Bank of Canada has allowed us to control the economy, to prevent exorbitant interest rates, as somebody said earlier, and to improve the lot of the people.

It was said a moment ago that we have a solution to all problems. I would suggest to the hon. member that he and the hon. member for Témiscamingue (Mr. Caouette), who are businessmen, sometimes need capital. I never saw either of them resort to the formula they are supporting because they too conform to the rules of the game, and I am not blaming them for it because everyone does it.

I should say, however, that there are banks today in Montreal, for instance, that lend money free of interest. I never saw a Creditiste lend money free of interest or at the cost of administration.

The Bank of Canada must operate within the limits of recognized structures. But it is claimed that this is not appropriate and that we should resort instead to some magic solution. It is suggested that the Bank of Canada, which lends money for periods of six months only, should make loans for periods of 60 years. This we have done with the provinces, lending them money interest-free and moreover, provinces and municipalities have obtained millions of dollars from the government and these debts were forgiven or at most recovered at 75 per cent of their value in some cases. This has not been mentioned, but this is done in respect of the provinces now but it is never mentioned. I have here a few copies of joint agreements between the provinces and the federal government. I will just name them because it would take too much time to quote the figures. Anyway, these agreements allow the provinces to manage their moneys and those which are transferred from the federal government.

The Canada Pension Plan was not accepted as such by some provinces and it was amended in order to allow the province of Quebec to use the payments made as contributions to which the provinces have direct access and which amount to hundreds of millions of dollars. That plan was established in co-operation with the provinces that wanted it, while the province of Quebec will have its own scheme. Under this arrangement, hundreds of millions of dollars are made available to the provinces which can use them where needed.

There are also family allowances, Mr. Speaker. These are not loans. I wish to emphasize that youth need loans; the federal government has provided youth, at a certain time with some financial means.

Family allowances, Mr. Speaker, amount to over $600 million; this is money transferred directly to individuals so the provinces do not have to pay themselves allowances to the families which really need them.

Little has been said about the old age security, Mr. Speaker. Pensions amount to nearly $2 billion. There are 1,700,000 people eligible for old age security and among those, almost one million receive the guaranteed income supplement, Mr. Speaker. It is a matter of funds which do not go through the Bank of Canada but are collected as income tax and transferred to the provinces which can draft their budget to satisfy the people, realistically if not always fully.

There is also the Canada Assistance Plan under which the government disburses 50 per cent for programs launched by the provinces. We do not mention this too often here, but 50 per cent is quite a lot and it is at the disposal of the provinces. It is not necessary for them to collect taxes representing half the capital. Half of what is being paid out by the federal government can be used for other purposes.

Mr. Speaker, all this constitutes a form of assistance to provines, without the services of the Bank of Canada. There are several others. There has been the matter of interest rates which I talked about earlier. Budgets have been mentioned and the hon. member for Témiscamingue has used a somewhat different formula on television. He spoke about a $18 billion budget. On several occasions he has asked the House how much it would cost to establish the price.

Now, I see that efforts are even being made to prevent Canada from participating in the development of other countries. I have heard it said in the House by several Creditiste members. There is no mention of our programs which are adopted by the House.

The hon. member for Témiscamingue said something about $18 billion, which is more than the entire federal budget. He had found a magic formula and he wanted to create global control at the provincial and municipal levels.

We have a different formula. We say to the provinces: "You must identify your real needs and then we will meet to discuss them." I think, Mr. Speaker, that the few programs to which I referred really show that there is a possibility of agreement to meet our real needs with the assistance of the provinces and municipalities.

I do not think that Bill C-14 is the magic formula praised by member for Shefford, but in my opinion we must ask ourselves if the Bank of Canada is effectively carrying out its duties. I wish to point out, Mr. Speaker, that it is. In connection with the trade balance, it has done so well that some economists—I saw few who had structured such a plan—told us: "What formula have you used to compete with your southern neighbours?"

As far as their trade balance is concerned, they are faced with a real problem. As for us, we have at least succeeded in planning our needs, taking in consideration our population and our resources. We have undertaken a tax distribution for all those in need, be they provinces, municipalities or individuals within our structures.

I wish to point out, Mr. Speaker, following those few comments, that I cannot see how Bill C-14 can solve all our tax and monetary problems, while 20 countries whose representatives have now been meeting for days and nights, have not succeeded in doing so.

Mr. Henry Latulippe (Compton): Mr. Speaker, I am always pleased to discuss economic questions of such a scope.

Mr. Speaker, I shall discuss Bill C-14 which has been moved on behalf of the hon. member for Témiscamingue (Mr. Caouette).

Mr. Speaker, this bill has an exceptional scope. I we passed it—which would require some sort of social and logical reasoning on the part of hon. members—it would be possible and easy to change the structures of the debts which now oppress us.

Indeed, we are riddled with debts of all sorts. Canada has a debt of $45 billion; the provinces $45 billion to $50 billion, which is more than the federal government. Individuals are also endebted with the result that almost all the debts of all Canadians exceed $125 billion.

Mr. Speaker, there is only about $4 billion in legal currency in Canada. The national debt exceeds $125 billion.

The net result is, Mr. Speaker, that Canadians are overindebted; they are in a situation where they are incapable of paying just the interest on the debts. There is only about $4 billion in legal currency in Canada and the national debt reaches $125 billion. The difference between $4 billion and $125 billion is a matter of accounting and that accounting is done by institutions other than the Bank of Canada. This is exactly what the Creditistes want to give the Bank of Canada, the creation of accounting. Interest is added to the figures; this accounting should belong to the bank of Canadians which should protect individuals instead of protecting only financial institutions.

Our national bank now exists only to favour the large financial institutions and everytime it issues new credits or legal currency it loans that money to chartered banks which turn one dollar in legal currency into eight dollars in accounting currency. Then the Creditistes rise and say that it is wrong to operate this bank at the expense of taxpayers, putting them in debt.

The hon. member who spoke earlier said in his remarks that Canada is a prosperous country, that it pays family allowances, old age security pensions, etc. It does, but after having collected money from the taxpayers.

And when they do not draw enough money from taxpayers, they take out loans and sell bonds. Loans and bonds end up in the public debt which now reaches $45 billion. We shall have a $2 billion deficit by the end of this year. In the next estimates, we shall see a deficit of $2 billion. By the end of 1973, the deficit shall amount to about $3 billion.

As the hon. member for Shefford (Mr. Rondeau) put it earlier, out of 20 years of administration, 17 were deficit years. And with 1973, we shall have had 18 years of deficit.

Conservatives and Liberals are equally responsible for these deficits and it is not logical, Mr. Speaker, to run a country accumulating debts for which the taxpayers bear the burden.

Why do we have to pay family allowances and old age pensions to people who for the majority need those welfare or relief payments? Why do so many people have to live on public assistance? How come a man of 65 has not been able during his life to save enough money to take care of his old days? How is it that people are so destitute? The majority of older persons are beggars and cannot look after themselves because they are penniless. If our system is so efficient, why is it that we take everything away from Canadians? How is it that all these people have to rely on public charity?

• (1740)

When the government wants to help them, under the present system, it can but increase taxes. Money is taken from those who do not have enough and given to others who have nothing at all, and those who do not have enough money at present get into a more and more desperate situation. Indeed, life is very difficult for those Canadians who do not work for large businesses, because taxes are so high that we can no longer operate in such a way.

Under the present system, almost all businessmen, except those who operate their businesses with millions, will soon be unable to make ends meet. All their money goes for taxes of all kinds.

The provinces, Mr. Speaker, will not be able to operate for very long, under the present system, because they have gone deeply into debt; they are no longer able to tax citizens because taxes now exceed incomes. People have to put up their homes for taxes in several municipalities, because a number of citizens can no longer pay their municipal and school taxes.

It is time for us, Mr. Speaker, to intervene through the Bank of Canada, which could issue credits to finance public property. There remains to identify the kinds of property which are to be financed. One must differentiate between public property and private property and indeed between the public and private sectors. What the Créditistes are asking for is not the direct payment of family allowances or the direct payment of old age pensions but rather the financing of the public sector, of the provinces—the province of Quebec as all other provinces—so that they can start on their own projects.

In the province of Quebec, Premier Bourassa wants to go ahead with the James Bay project. It is unfair, Mr. Speaker, to allow the Quebec premier and indeed all the other provincial premiers to crawl before the financial magnates of other countries for loans that they could obtain against the same property the Bank of Canada would accept as security. What we are really asking for is that the Bank of Canada grant credits against the same values accepted by other countries. When the United States lend money or grant credits to the Quebec premier they grant credits against the par value, the actual value of Quebecers. The Bank of Canada could do the same.

Mr. Speaker, we could lend money free of interest to the provinces at the administrative cost because it does not cost any more to register $1 billion in a book than to register $1. Indeed one does not need to exert more energy to do so. Therefore, with the same values we could finance our provinces, our own institutions and thus get out of this chaotic situation.

Never, under the present system, will we pull out of our depression. The more we apply the system, the deeper we sink in, the more we get bogged down, and the more Canadians worry because the national, provincial and municipal debts grow daily. Our taxes, of all sorts, also increase constantly.

Day after day, Mr. Speaker, new citizens are being ransomed, and new families have to rely on social welfare and public charity. The country can no longer operate without almost 50 per cent of the people living off public charity. If that is called good administration I really do not understand what good administration is. And the situation certainly cannot improve when 50 per cent of the people live off welfare. This situation will surely not pull Canada out of the hole. That is certainly not how we will help the provinces to develop.

Every time we want to do something under the present system, we have to go into debt. Every time we want to do something in the present system we are forced into debt and have to pay interests, to pay off more than we borrow. That is one of the reasons, everybody is deprived.

When we have to impose taxes, we must ask ourselves where Canadians will get the money to pay them. In fact, they have to borrow that money and to pay it back. And governments then grab part of the money borrowed by Canadians who find themselves in a position where they are unable to repay their debts, and this no doubt explains all the bankruptcies we witness today. Never in our history have we seen so many bankruptcies. And I will show you later on how much the government lost in terms of the 12 per cent tax or in terms of personal income tax as result of bankruptcy. That amount is fantastic and the government itself is on the verge of bankruptcy because it is no longer in a position to borrow money.

Therefore, if we want to do anything useful we have to change the system and that is the purpose of Bill C-14 which would allow the Bank of Canada to make loans to provinces as we do for foreign countries.

We have nothing against assistance to underdeveloped countries, notwithstanding what the hon. member said earlier. We are far from being against this aid, but if we can make loans to foreign countries without interest, and for periods of 60 to 70 years, we can do the same for Canada and for any province. We would then act as real businessmen, able to obtain credit on the basis of our country's resources. Our currency would be based on the actual values we own, not to create money at random but simply to do the same thing we do for foreign countries. Those credits would be issued by the Bank of Canada which would create credits according to its wishes and the guarantees we could offer; this would enable us to develop our country.

As long as there is manpower, engineers and construction materials to build with, there should be no problem. Every time we want to do something, we run up against a shortage of capital. Few people fear a shortage of materials to build houses, or a shortage of footwear, but everyone worries about finding the "scrap of paper" needed to buy those shoes or build those houses. When it is possible to develop something in this country, it should also be possible to finance the undertaking.

Mr. Speaker, I shall leave it to others to express their views on this point, to agree or disagree with us. We know we will never be gladly supported by all hon. members because they have obviously not understood the workings of our economy. They have failed to understand that it would be logical and healthy to make our own financial means available to the people of Canada to allow them to develop and, at the same time, to stop getting deeper in debt.

Before concluding my remarks, I will say that it is illogical that a government should get in debt with itself. The $45 billion debt of Canada is one that the government has incurred wit itself. It is quite difficult to do so, but that is what is done in the present system, something of which a great many members, citizens or businessmen are unaware. One makes debts with oneself and finds it logical.

[English]

Mr. H. T. Herbert (Vaudreuil): Mr. Speaker, I have always enjoyed the oratorical prowess of hon. members to my extreme right. When I first entered federal politics just a few months ago I had the misfortune, through alphabetical listing, always to follow the Creditiste member. I have never suggested that I have the brilliance of display and presentation of the members of that party; nevertheless, I have plenty of experience in playing with figures. We can all play this little game of adding up figures and coming up with logical answers. I think today it may be just as well if we put on the record a few facts and statements which will illustrate to the people who take the trouble to read Hansard that there are answers to the kinds of presentations that have been put forward by the proposer of the motion.

Bill C-14 would amend the Bank of Canada Act to permit loans and advances to the government of Canada for a period not exceeding 60 years, rather than for a period not exceeding six months as in the present act. It would also amend the Bank of Canada Act to permit such lending on the "real credit of Canada or the provinces." I wonder what that wording is intended to mean. It would also permit the Bank of Canada to make such loans at a rate of interest which does not exceed the cost of administration. We could really have fun with that one, too.

Similar suggestions for amendments have been made in the past and have been rejected by the government. I would quote from Hansard for March 15, 1967, when the then minister of finance, now Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Sharp), replied to a similar amendment and chose to quote from a 1964 report of the Royal Commission on Banking and Financing as follows:

> However, the same section of the act enables the bank to act as banker or fiscal agent to the government of any province by agreement. While never used in practice, we believe it should be removed since the bank could not run an effective national monetary policy if it were to be continually under the obligation to put out new issues for the provinces, at least without conflicting with its fiscal responsibilities to its provincial clients. Adequate fiscal and banking advice is available elsewhere, and the embarrassment which would result from the central bank vetoing an unsound provincial financial program rises all too readily to the imagination.

I read that last sentence slowly and I do not think we need go any further in amplifying that particular point. The minister went on to quote another extract from the commission's report as follows:

> We also received a proposal that the Bank of Canada should finance the social capital requirements of the provinces and municipalities either directly or through re-discount facilities, a proposal which would involve major changes in that institution's operating practices and have profound consequences on its ability to promote national objectives. Financing on the scale envisaged could only be supplied by the central bank if price stability were sacrificed, and even on a smaller scale would subject the central bank to intolerable pressures from eleven competing governments. For the latter reason also, we do not believe it necessary or desirable for the central bank to act as an underwriter to these governments, especially in view of the full facilities available in the private sector.

About two years later the Hon. E. J. Benson, also speaking on the same type of proposal, said the following as recorded in Hansard for March 18, 1969, at page 6789:

> There was some mention with respect to contributions to the provinces. Indeed, the proposition in the motion was that the Bank of Canada buy up provincial and municipal debentures, presumably by printing more money because that is the only source of funds they have. I think a better solution to this is for the federal government to stay out of the financial markets as much as possible and thus make room for the available limited resources to move to the provinces and municipalities. Indeed, that is what we are trying to do. In fact, that has been our aim for some time and continues to be our aim.

They argued that implementation of the proposals on the scale apparently envisaged by the proponents would pose a serious risk of inflation. They also argued that the involvement of the Bank of Canada in provincial finances, particularly on the limited scale that would be consistent with sound monetary policy, would risk very troublesome conflict of interest problems for the bank. It would, moreover, simply provide an indirect transfer of funds from the federal government to provincial governments, a transfer which could more appropriately be made directly between governments in the context of federal-provincial fiscal relations. Let me quote as follows from the same 1964 report of the Royal Commission on Banking and Finance:

> The Bank of Canada acts as agents for the Minister of Finance in all transactions for the government's securities accounts or the exchange fund. It also has the power to act as fiscal agent for any provincial government and is permitted to invest in provincial government securities, but these powers have not been exercised. In practice the bank would find it extremely difficult to act for provincial governments and deal in their securities because of the virtually insoluble problems of equity among different governments that would inevitably arise. (In view of the relatively small annual increase in the bank's security portfolio, it could make only a limited contribution to provincial financing in any case.) We do not see the same political objection to including provincial securities among those eligible for discount at the Bank of Canada but there would be little advantage in doing so: as a practical matter this would reduce the borrowing costs of provincial governments little if at all.

Although paragraph 18(1)(i) of the Bank of Canada Act, which this proposal wishes to revise, restricts the ability of the Bank of Canada to make loans to the provinces and the federal government, paragraph 18(1)(c) allows the bank to purchase both federal and provincial securities without restriction as to term or rate of interest. Thus there is no legal barrier to the Bank of Canada in fact lending to governments through the purchase of their securities.

Each year the Bank of Canada buys a limited number of Government of Canada securities in line with its responsibilities for a sound monetary policy. The bank currently does not hold any provincial securities and has not done so for many years because of the likely conflict of interest that could arise. There would be great difficulty in allocating the additions to the bank's portfolio of securities among 11 competing governments. This theme is repeated throughout. Furthermore, in a period of monetary restraint the bank might have to sell securities to control the rate of credit expansion. In such circumstances, sales of provincial securities by the bank could interfere with the ability of provinces to finance their cash requirements. Such a conflict can, of course, also arise in the case of the federal government but, unlike the provinces, the federal authorities are directly responsible for monetary policy and economic stabilization.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. The hour provided for the consideration of private members' business has now expired. Perhaps the House would permit us to go back into committee of the whole before the Chair calls it six o'clock. Is this agreed?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

SUPPLY

SUPPLEMENTARY ESTIMATES (A), 1972-73

The House resumed consideration in committee of Bill C-141, for granting to Her Majesty certain sums of money for the public service for the financial year ending 31st March, 1973—Mr. MacEachen (for Mr. Drury)—Mr. McCleave in the chair.

On clause 2—Schedule.

The Chairman: Order, please. It being six o'clock, I do now leave the chair. The committee will resume at eight o'clock.

At six o'clock, the committee took recess.

AFTER RECESS

The committee resumed at 8 p.m.

The Chairman: Order, please. When the committee rose at six o'clock we were considering the schedule, particularly votes 15a and 40a relating to the Department of Agriculture.

Mr. Gleave: Mr. Chairman, I rise to touch on two or three points that were raised by the Minister of Justice, who is responsible for the Canadian Wheat Board, and by one or two members on the benches to my right. When I spoke previously on these estimates I made the point that due to the inequities and inefficiencies which existed in respect of the marketing of rapeseed, it would be advisable to bring this grain within the marketing operations of the Canadian Wheat Board.

The minister in charge of the Wheat Board told us he had said they would be ready to reconsider that matter, and that he was in favour of it. However, he said it would be fine except that he did not want to be like those nasty people in the province of Saskatchewan who moved boldly ahead in the field of marketing but, rather, he would be with those who chose to hold a plebescite and give the producers a choice.

I cannot quarrel with him on that sort of approach. As a matter of fact, in the last parliament, the twenty-eighth parliament, I moved a motion to have the Canadian Wheat Board Act do that very thing. I shall not read the motion to the committee, but I am sure the hon. member for Saskatoon-Humboldt remembers that in it I said the possibility of holding a plesbiscite should be put before the rapeseed farmers of the three western provinces. The minister in charge of the Wheat Board and his colleagues voted against that motion; they voted against the possibility of allowing the farmers a real choice.

I listened this afternoon to the hon. member for Battleford-Kindersley. He said they had been asked what their position was, and it was that they would like the farmer to have a choice; they should have a plebescite and vote on the matter. If that is so, I ask why his colleagues in the twenty-eighth parliament did not vote to give the farmers a choice: that is all I asked in this House on behalf of the rapeseed growers of the three western provinces, that they be given the opportunity to make their choice.

The minister in charge of the Canadian Wheat Board knows that. It may be that the hon. member for Battleford-Kindersley does not know it, but his colleagues know it. The hon. member for Lisgar knows it. The hon. member for Lisgar is an honest man and he will admit that I moved that motion in the House. I do not propose to be flim-flammed and bamboozled in this House; I do not propose to put up with just shadows.

Let us be honest with one another and look at the situation and deal with it. When farmers have to haul their rapeseed 50 miles or 60 miles to get it into an elevator in my constituency so they can obtain the Vancouver price of another 25 cents, 30 cents or 40 cents a bushel—and it is that much—such an effort and exercise is unacceptable to me. When they have to sit in their trucks in front of an elevator in North Battleford because they have signed a contract, rather than getting the current market price, it is unacceptable to me. These people are very careful with the farmers. There was a famous man in Saskatchewan by the name of Charles Dunning at the time when the farmers were trying to form the Saskatchewan wheat pool. The farmers were out in the country persuading people to sign wheat pool contracts, and he said, "Oh, for God's sake be careful and read the small print in the contract".

There are ways of doing things and there are ways of not doing things. When I read the statement made by the minister when he argued about the Conservatives having promised 30 cents in the last election, my wish was to correct the record, because to be quite fair and to do justice to the Conservatives I must point out that the minister was in error. I think the Conservatives were promising 25 cents a bushel for wheat.

I agree that when we argue about who sold the most wheat and who made the biggest sale, it is difficult to get excited about it.

Mr. Rose: Yes, get excited.

Mr. Gleave: With friends like this, Mr. Chairman, I do not know who needs enemies. I want to put these ideas before the House, to keep the record straight and to keep us on the road regarding what we are really going to do on behalf of the grain farmer to enable him to stay in business, make a living and contribute to the welfare of this country.

I want to say something else to the minister in charge of the Wheat Board. I notice in press reports that it is probable that within this year we will start negotiations under GATT to obtain new agreements and trading arrangements for the sale of our grains in the markets of the world. I point out to the minister that the last time we negotiated agreements with the western countries under GATT for the sale of grain, the result for the western farmer was an unmitigated disaster. We came out with the International Grains Arrangement and we locked the western farmer to poverty prices and to minimum delivery opportunities.

I say to the minister and to the government that they should not again try to negotiate trade in western Canadian grains under GATT. There are two or three good reasons for not doing so. One of the major reasons is that a significant amount of our trade has shifted to the eastern countries, to China and the U.S.S.R. which are not members of GATT and do not form part of the western trading bloc. We should try, instead, to conduct a trade discussion within the United Nations which would bring us within the total ambit of world trade in grain.

I do not know whether the government has any such intention, but I would ask the minister in charge of the Wheat Board or the Minister of Agriculture to tell the House what their intentions are regarding trade for the farming community in western Canada in the immediate future. They owe it to the House to tell us what their plans are and how they see the present situation. The western farmer will be listening when they do.

When we negotiated the International Wheat Agreement through the United Nations we were negotiating with the people with whom we were trading, the people who were buying our product and who were competing with us in world markets. Under GATT we are negotiating with the western nations, but we do not trade with them to the extent that we once did. Furthermore, we know from the announcements which were made yesterday and the day before that the United States is continuing its restrictive attitude toward trade into that country from Canada and Japan which it developed a year ago. It is at Canada and Japan that the United States is aiming its more severe restrictions. We must protect our grain and livestock industries in western Canada by seeking alternatives. This is probably true to a greater extent in grain than it is in livestock, but our agricultural industry is now starting to look to the Pacific rim countries even for the sale of meat.

I do not mind repeating myself because I think this is very important. I hope that in the very near future we will hear from the two men who are responsible to this parliament for the government's policies on agricultural products. I should like to see them stand in their place and state what their policy is.

The other matter on which we need a clear statement of policy very soon is transportation. It has remained in limbo long enough. I hear hon. members to my right saying that we should use the interior terminals, but others say that we should not.

Mr. Lang: What do you say?

Mr. Gleave: Let me say to the minister in charge of the Wheat Board that I am quite willing to put my opinion on the line. The minister has not put his on the line.

Mr. Lang: After you.

Mr. Gleave: That is a fine situation for a minister of the Crown, responsible for the Wheat Board, to tell the opposition to state their position after which he will state his. Mr. Chairman, he is hiding behind the Canada Grains Council which is the spokesman for the Liberal party on grain transportation. The people who know a fair amount about handling grain in terms of elevators are the co-operative elevator companies.

I will say this to the minister, that the United Grain Growers, the Saskatchewan wheat pool, the Alberta wheat pool and the Manitoba pool are now developing the type of elevator that we need to handle the large volumes of grain in these areas. But I know that we are waiting for the decision of the railroads. Mr. Chairman, I do not know if there is anyone big enough in this country to tell the CPR and the CNR what kind of transportation system we should have in western Canada or that we should have there. Their offices are in Montreal, in eastern Canada. But if there were such a person, he could tell the railroads that what is needed is a roadbed to carry the grain.

I think the minister would have been well advised to build roadbed as well as to buy rolling stock. That is just a wild guess, but at present we do not have adequate roadbed to carry effectively a maximum grain load on 50 per cent of our trackage. If the minister will not maintain roadbed himself, he had better negotiate with the railways to maintain it. Surely he knows that grain can be moved cheaper per ton-mile on rail than on the highway.

I should not be giving all this advice to the minister, considering all the high-priced help he has behind him. But, Mr. Chairman, somebody has to say something for the western farmer. Somebody has to say something for the farmers sitting at points such as Kinley, Perdue, Whitco and Assiniboia. We have to ask the people who are responsible what they are doing and, further, when they are going to do it. If there is anything I can do to promote something for the people who live and produce agricultural products in Saskatchewan, I will certainly do it. Perhaps some day the minister in charge of the Wheat Board will rise and tell us what his program is, instead of saying it is referred to the Canada Grains Council, that bottleneck into which ideas come, stagnate, and from which they take a great deal of time to escape. Those are the main things I wanted to say.

The Deputy Chairman: Order. I regret having to interrupt the hon. member, but the time allotted to him has expired.

Mr. Whelan: Mr. Chairman, I will not take up too much of the committee's time but there are things I should say about some of the comments made during the debate yesterday and today.

It was suggested that the feed grain policy should be discussed in the Standing Committee on Agriculture. That is probably a good idea; but if there is one thing that has been discussed more than anything else since I became a Member of Parliament, it is a fair feed grain policy for Canada. Certainly we have had enough suggestions by parliamentarians, farm organizations, farm leaders and provincial governments to have enough information which we can use to pick out a fair feed grain policy that will suit this nation. If we do not have enough information now we will never have it.

Reference was made to the subject of transportation and how the Canadian Wheat Board should tackle it. It may be wrong to look at the past, but I can remember that when I was chairman of the agricultural committee we made some recommendations when we were talking about the transportation of grain in the west. I remember asking the chairman of the Canadian Wheat Board why he was not more concerned about transportation and why he seemed to be more concerned about having to sell wheat. At that time we made certain suggestions. So far as I am concerned they are now being picked up in many ways, but we still have a long way to go.

The suggestion was made that farmers serve in an advisory capacity on the Wheat Board. Personally, I would rather see more real dirt farmers becoming members of the Wheat Board. Long ago the farmer reached the stage where he had to become a businessman. He has to know how to manage his farm and grow the grain. Certainly he should have more say in how it is handled and sold. The suggestion that farmers should be elected to the Wheat Board is a good one. I suggested it myself.

An hon. Member: Elected by whom?

Mr. Whelan: By farmers through their own organizations, in a democratic fashion. Today the hon. member for Kent-Essex made some comments about there being no action from the Minister of Agriculture in his first three months in office. Mr. Chairman, things have happened so fast that I did not think it was three months, and I had to check the calendar. I find I still have two weeks to go before the first three months are up; but with the insecurity we have in this place, who knows whether there will be another two weeks or not. Anyway, I never made any great promise that I was going to achieve in three months all things on behalf of agriculture.

Before decisions are made I have been trying to speak to farmers and get their opinions. One of the things we were talking about was the re-establishment of the sugar beet industry in a better fashion that would provide stability to the sugar beet producers. The response that I have received from Alberta, Manitoba, Quebec and Ontario has been much more than I expected from this type of approach. I now know why we lost the sugar industry in that part of Canada; there was no security in the sugar beet industry; there was no stability. I believe that farmers should not be asked to place themselves in subjection to a new sugar beet industry without an assurance of security. Security is what people in other parts of society want whether they work for government, industry or for railroads. This is what the farmers want. To get a new national sugar beet policy is not going to be easy. It must be a policy that will last for a long time, one that will provide security for sugar beet producers.

Sometimes I find difficulty in organizing a program for certain commodities that are affected by the variety of provincial programs presently in existence. Sometimes when you compare the agricultural programs of one province with those of another province you would think they were two different countries altogether: they could not be more different if they came from different countries. It is hard for me to understand how a federal minister can be expected to act as an equalizer in some of these problems.

I do not think the criticism that we did not allow enough dairy quotas is justified. Last year the Dairy Commission, after consultation with all the dairy associations and marketing boards in the country, increased the dairy quota by 7½ per cent. Perhaps they should have changed the weather while they were at it, because the cattle did not get enough feed and dairy production decreased by 14½ per cent per county in most areas. Not enough butter to meet our needs was produced and we had to import 20 million pounds. Luckily, it was brought in at a low price and put on the market at the same price as our own in order to provide stability in the industry, so there was no extra cost to the consumer. Indeed, more stability has been provided to the dairy industry than any other sector of the agricultural industry in Canada.

Last year peach growers in my part of the country lost their crops because of a freeze in February. They said they never received a penny of help from this government. It is the general policy that a request for federal aid must come from the province concerned. I have checked into this matter and no request was received from the province of Ontario on behalf of peach growers, though it is claimed that this was the sole livelihood of some of them and, of course, the orchards had to be maintained for the year.

The dilemma of the hog producers in the last year has been mentioned. Mr. Chairman, the legislation is there for the hog growers that will perhaps provide stability for their industry if they want it. I do not think that when they get into difficulty they should come to the government to be bailed out. When you look closely at what they are doing, it is evident that they will create chaos in the marketplace if they continue.

I have said before, Mr. Chairman, and I say again that my main concern is to see that all the people get a square deal—not just the producers of the primary products but also the consumers.

Mr. Knight: Did you say that this morning?

Mr. Whelan: I have stated this in all my speeches. The hon. member for Assiniboia might not think it is possible to ensure a square deal for all the people, but I think it is. In the committee on food prices I stressed that farmers should not be expected to carry the full load of what we call a cheap food policy. We have to guard against this type of thing. No other part of our society has been as productive as our farmers, and all they want is their fair share.

An hon. Member: Are you going to keep out cheap food in order to protect them?

Mr. Whelan: If I had my way there would be no tariffs whatsoever; no food would be allowed into this country unless we needed it.

An hon. Member: You have been telling us in good "Whelanese" that you are running the show.

Mr. Whelan: Just give me a little more time. I can think of ministers who have been here a lot longer than 2½ months; that goes for all parties.

An hon. Member: How about next Monday?

The Deputy Chairman: Order, please.

Mr. Whelan: They never put into force any of these programs that should have been put into force.

The Deputy Chairman: Order, please. The hon. member for Fraser Valley West on a point of order.

Mr. Rose: I hate to deflect the hon. member from his course when he is in full flight—perhaps a little out of control, but nevertheless in full flight. However, he made the statement that if he had his way he would keep all food out of the country unless we needed it, Canada is a net importer of food, and he would not move toward tariffs. I ask the hon. minister how he would achieve this kind of imperviousness to the importation of food if he did not use tariffs.

Mr. Whelan: Many of the countries that we deal with do not import Canadian goods without a permit. Just try to export something to the United States and find out how restrictive they are. This country's policy toward free trade is one of the best. I certainly would not be so restrictive that I would not allow food to be imported if we needed it or if a marketing board got out of control. I do not think our producers want to cause a rip-off; they just want a square deal. We have no intention of allowing a smart operator to bring in cheap products in order to make a fast buck and the consumer not get any benefit.

An hon. Member: You would agree that Canada is sinned against and the rest of the world is a sinner.

Mr. Rose: Mr. Chairman, I certainly agree with the minister. He has spoken explicitly and strongly on this matter—

The Deputy Chairman: Order, please. Before allowing the question I should bring to the attention of hon. members that they should not take advantage of points of order or questions of privilege to ask a question. They should get the consent of the hon. member who has the floor because the time taken up by a question is part of the time allotted to the hon. member who has the floor.

Mr. Rose: On a point of order, Mr. Chairman, I ask permission of the minister, through you, to ask a question. If the minister declines to reply, he has a perfect right to do so. But if he is willing to entertain the question, I would be pleased to hear his reply.

An hon. Member: He answered it. What more do you want?

Mr. Rose: The minister's reply to the question is most satisfactory to members who represent rural or semi-rural ridings, and I congratulate him on it. However, he said, "if I had my way" and I should like to know if he has brought that type of representation to cabinet and, if so, what kind of results has he been getting?

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Alexander: That was a personal assessment.

Mr. Nielsen: Don't pay any attention to it; just carry on.

Mr. Whelan: I want to tell the hon. member, Mr. Chairman, that I am still talking and he can take it from there. I am still allowed to express my opinion, my suggestions, my philosophy. Anyone who wants to check can find out that I have been most successful in many of the things that I have tried to do. Persistence pays, Mr. Chairman, and even the cabinet may give up on some of these things.

Any effort to bring in cheap food to break the market should be treated the same as any effort to bring in electricians or pipefitters. I have a brother who is an electrician, and one who is a pipefitter. They would not want me to bring in 1,000 electricians tomorrow to cause chaos in the labour market. Anyway, the Minister of Manpower and Immigration would not allow it.

So that was one of the things that I thought would be good for one part of our society and it ought to be good for all parts so far as I am concerned. We hope to provide a decent living standard for all our people so that all can share in the benefits of our society, instead of one part contributing all the time and not receiving anything in return.

An hon. Member: Don't give our gas away.

Mr. Whelan: An hon. member mentioned taxes. The interdepartmental committee is working on the subject of taxes. I just want to make one comment: I am not going to tell them what ought to be done but I do not think hon. members will be all that unhappy, either, with respect to what happens.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Whelan: We are still working on these questions. So long as you are persistent, you can be successful.

An hon. Member: If you stick around here long enough.

Mr. Whelan: Hon. members across the aisle are trying to obtain power. They may obtain it if they keep on trying.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Whelan: But all this takes a long time.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Whelan: Speaking of world trade, Mr. Chairman, all one has to do is check our record in agriculture and in other fields of trade to see how much we have done to improve our trade position. One member pointed out that we ought to be doing more with Pacific rim countries. One of the first salesmen who went to that area—

Mr. Benjamin: Was Alvin Hamilton.

Mr. Whelan: —and he was criticized by some of the very people who are saying that we should be there, was the Prime Minister himself. He went to those countries and called on their people, and we know that you can pay no higher compliment to these people than by calling on them and saying, "We want to do business with you."

We can sell products there that we have every right to be proud of. We need not worry about the quality of our products, they can stand close scrutiny, because whether we sell grain, meat or anything else, the quality is high. We have nothing to be ashamed of in the sale of our products and this is a great credit to our producers. Notwithstanding the costs that we are subjected to in Canada, we can compete on world markets with any country in the world. We have more and better salesmen on the road than ever before, and they are doing a better job than ever before in selling our products. I am optimistic about our trade in future. People know that when they buy Canadian, they buy well; they buy the best products in the world.

Mr. Benjamin: But Alvin was there first.

Mr. Whelan: May I mention something else, Mr. Chairman. Having done some research and made telephone calls, I wish to report—this may please members from Saskatchewan and Alberta—that the price of fertilizer will not increase. I received a call from one of the largest fertilizer companies—

Mr. Nielsen: That explains the speech.

Mr. Whelan: Let us be careful. This is a large co-operative company, a large fertilizer company. I was told that there would be no increase in the price of fertilizer.

An hon. Member: Not any more; it has already gone up.

Mr. Whelan: There is to be no price increase. The price will be the same as it was last August for all Alberta; it will not change in that area.

An hon. Member: Are there ample supplies?

Mr. Whelan: They have ample supplies. They had problems bringing in phosphates from the coast, from B.C. We have already made representations to the railroads and asked them to help. The company says it has all the phosphates it needs. All the other ingredients are to be found on the prairies in western Canada. Therefore, there is to be no price increase, no matter what anyone else says. This company is to be a price-setter, or pace-setter in the price of this product. At least that is one good bit of news, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. Knight: On a point of order, Mr. Chairman, would the minister entertain a question?

Mr. Whelan: Yes, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. Knight: In the Peace River country the price of fertilizer increased from $34 a ton in 1972 to $46 a ton in 1973. In view of this, can the minister say if the people he has spoken about indicated that they intend to roll-back the price to previous levels?

Mr. Whelan: Mr. Chairman, I can only repeat what the honest gentleman told me, that his prices will not change from what they were last July and August. The prices are on the price-lists which are being prepared. The product is being sold and delivered to our markets every day at that price.

Mr. Knight: Mr. Chairman, I hope the minister will look into this matter carefully, because the price in January went up by at least $10 per ton.

The Deputy Chairman: Order, please. The hon. member knows he cannot take advantage of a question for the purpose of making a statement or comment. It is very difficult for the Chair, especially in committee of the whole when hon. members converse across the floor, to tell whether an hon. member is rising on a point of order or for the purpose of asking a question, because sometimes hon. members seek the floor to make points and arguments rather than to receive replies to questions.

Mr. McCain: Mr. Chairman, it was a pleasure listening to the Minister of Agriculture giving his dissertation tonight. In view of statements reported in the press and attributed to him, I had hoped that we might now be engaged in debate on a most serious topic, that of putting agriculture on the course which it has for so long deserved to follow. I was particularly interested in his remarks relating to hog production. In effect, he told the hog producers not to approach the government again, for "The machinery has been established to enable you to put your own house in order, and it is up to you now."

I think we ought to review the circumstances which resulted in the glut of hogs on the market in Canada. We should examine the situation as it was in years far back, because we will find that it was the incompetence of the government and its grain selling policies that allowed grain to build up inside the granaries and outside. Farmers could only find markets for beef, hogs or poultry. Farmers diversified in the only way they could and produced meat.

As a result of government policy, producers, in programs involving provincial and federal co-operation, encountered a situation which made it possible for them to produce hogs and, in particular, eggs at rates which had not been heard of before. The result was not only disaster for western hog producers but, equally, disaster for eastern hog producers. We have received no assurance today that the situation is to be put right. Actually, we have reason in the east to shudder with fear and trembling in case there will be a repetition of policies which will again permit or encourage the massive production of livestock on the prairies. Until such time as we can back up effectively, with legislation, programs involving self-control or bureaucratic control for agricultural products, we need a total, over-all basic agricultural policy. This we have lacked and this we continue to lack, as was made evident by the minister's speech this evening.

For proof of my statement let me direct the attention of hon. members to catalogue No. 21-202 of the Dominion Bureau of Statistics, to do with farm net income for 1970. It covers the period 1926-1970. It is significant to note that net farm income in 1970 was only slightly better than that for 1946-1950.

An hon. Member: Shame!

Mr. McCain: Mr. Chairman, is that a sign of progressive agricultural policies being followed by the government to your right? I submit that these figures condemn the government and its policies.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. McCain: On looking at cost figures to be found in the same document one will find the cost of agricultural production has virtually doubled in that same period. The investment the farmer needs to make, if he is to make a living, has doubled. At the same time, the return on investment has remained static. So you might say, Mr. Chairman, that the Department of Agriculture and its policies under Liberal management has been such that the farmer is investing twice as much to reap half as much, because certainly our dollars today are not worth half as much as those of 1946-1950.

It may be all right for the minister to say that the introduction of dairy quotas was one of the most admirable things to happen in Canada. But it will be difficult to convince all of Canada that this is the case. What has been happening in the last ten days with respect to butter? The present policy is that the government buys butter from the creamery producers at 68 cents a pound en bloc. This is a policy which permits the creamery packers, by some means which I cannot describe, to pack butter in prints, transport it to a wholesaler, return it to a store, a total trip of 1,100 miles, and put the printed butter in the store at 70 cents per pound. I have seen the invoices; this is not hearsay. It is a peculiar situation. The Minister of Agriculture may profess a serious interest in dairy quotas and dairy management, but this is certainly a phase in which management is totally lacking. It is allowed to run by itself.

One area of Canada is hurting the other, and hurting it badly, in this situation. It is time we had national poicies and national administration on a basis which would put the industry of dairy production on a footing of equal opportunity. This is not the way things are at the present time.

There is certainly some change apparent in the position the minister has taken today. For years, through the Horticultural Council, eastern agriculture and the fruit and vegetable industry in general have been asking for a "living allowance", so to speak, from their crop production. This has been ignored. We have been told by every individual we have dealt with that it is difficult, if not impossible, to obtain duty concessions. It is difficult to impose duties on products coming in, because we are a partner in GATT. It is all right for the minister to say he will not allow certain food products to enter Canada. He is still restricted by law and I presume he must operate within the limits of that law. He will be obliged to prove to agriculture in Canada that he is sincere and that his attitude is not just one of bluff and bluster.

The hon. gentleman who preceded the minister in office told representatives of the fresh fruit and vegetable industry that Canada and Canadians were entitled to the cheapest food they could get, and that if agriculture in Canada could not compete with outside sources of food it was the responsibility of agriculture to switch its crops and mend its ways because Canada could not protect it. This is a policy which never was acceptable to the agricultural world. It is not acceptable because not only does the farmer feel he is entitled to a fair living, but because he is absolutely convinced, as are most economists, that if Canada does not produce its own food it will in the long run pay through the nose for imported food.

I have heard nothing in this House tonight to lead me to believe it is the intention of the government to lay on a policy whereby Canada can produce the food which it can best produce and from which it should expect to make a decent living. I cannot believe that a government which is so concerned about the price of food to consumers can support the Minister of Agriculture as he tries to get an acceptable price for agriculture so that we can return to the earnings position which we experienced relative to the economy of 25 years ago. This must be the objective of the Minister of Agriculture, to bring farmers back to the point at which they will be at least as well off as they were 25 years ago. As of 1970 they were not.

My mind was boggled by the hundreds of millions of dollars which the hon. gentleman in charge of the Wheat Board was prepared to spend on agriculture. I want to make one thing very clear: if the expenditure of this money is necessary to a healthy agricultural industry and a healthy economy in western Canada, then by all means let it be spent. But I am reminded of an occasion on which I approached the Minister of Agriculture as part of a delegation on behalf of the potato industry. The sum required to more or less stabilize the whole national potato economy would probably have been substantially less than a million dollars. But we were told that the situation was impossible and that no such assistance could be provided, and it was not provided. In consequence the national potato industry, in respect of the 1971 crop, suffered a very severe setback.

The consequences of the inattention of the Department of Agriculture are not always felt immediately, however. Sometimes one has to take the long view. As has been pointed out already in this House, the dumping of wheat on the world market in a premature fashion during the past 2½ years has reduced the potential profit for wheat farmers in the present crop season.

In a similar way, the refusal of the Minister of Agriculture to attend to the 1971 crop in proper time, so that there might have been some profit from it, has caused a reduction in the crop which has denied the potato industry an opportunity to take advantage of world markets and make the profit it might otherwise have made. I am not quarrelling about the price of potatoes in 1972. The price for that crop year is excellent. But as far as the Atlantic area is concerned—I am sure the Minister of Veterans Affairs will confirm my statement—this more acceptable price follows a period in which there was a capital decline for six consecutive years in the potato industry in the Atlantic area. It was in these circumstances we made the approach we did in 1971, asking for the assistance we were later denied. We were told that Canadians should have the cheapest food they could get; the government could not upset a situation in which consumers benefited.

Mr. Chairman, there are certain questions I should like to ask and I hope the Minister of Agriculture will give attention to them. There is one arrangement in particular which I think needs adjustment. While it relates directly to the Minister of Manpower and Immigration, I believe the Minister of Agriculture ought to be interested. The regulations pertaining to on-the-job training as they relate to agriculture are drawn up by the bureaucratic structure of the Minister of Manpower and Immigration so as to require specific dates for applications for help and the period of time in which workers are to be employed. In my view, this practice does not meet the needs of a seasonal operation such as agriculture. The farmer who applies for his manpower training candidate is the man who best knows for which season he needs that worker. He is the man who knows in what period he can best train the applicant for the position.

Several farmers have been denied the opportunity to train a candidate by virtue of the dates which were established and the period during which it was necessary to employ the individual concerned. This objection is particularly applicable in the case of the potato industry where workers are not needed until some time in April. But the date for applications has been fixed for December and employment begins as of March 1. This does not suit the industry. A later starting date should be set. The program should be open-ended as far as dates are concerned.

I asked a question in the committee which dealt with these estimates, and I put it again to the minister because I have received no answer so far. Is it the intention of the government that the grain cars now in service in the west are to constitute only lip service to the transportation program, or is transportation to be considered seriously as a national agricultural problem?

At the time Canada was forming we seemed to learn a few lessons. One of the lessons that the west learned before it came into confederation was that the Crowsnest pass rates for grain must be legislated, that there would be no argument about it. That was a smart move and I admire them for it. But it was also intended that equal protection would be given to eastern agriculture and to all the extremities of Canada that sent products to Canadian markets when confederation was first born.

This is a privilege that has been denied by virtue of the lack of a transportation policy in this country, and certainly agriculture in the east is suffering as a result and suffering severely. Indeed, agriculture in the west is also suffering. It makes no difference whether we are talking about apples from British Columbia or from Nova Scotia, potatoes from New Brunswick or Alberta, or peaches from Ontario: the transportation facilities that are available to transport these products to market are not up to those of 25 years ago. In other words, we have gone backwards. Such a policy must be made available to agriculture if this minister is to alleviate the situation.

Another problem agriculture is facing is that under the tax laws today it is virtually impossible for a father to pass on to his son, or for a son to inherit from his father, a farming enterprise. I have heard no sympathy expressed anywhere in the House for this unfair situation. The cost involved in passing on a farm from father to son or to sons is beyond the capacity of the individual to bear. This is no wonder since our profit opportunities in 1970 were no better than they were in 1945. It is indeed a dire situation.

So far as a feed grains policy is concerned, we have been told some kind of council is going to advise the government and advise agriculture. Plans were placed before the Federation of Agriculture for consideration, but one province in its wisdom chose to back out of this conference and not participate in the proposed arrangement. This is a further symptom of the inadequate transportation policy in Canada today. We have a hodgepodge, step by step emergency-type program with no long-range opportunities given to agriculture and no long-range commitments made by the government.

Let me give the committee another example of the sort of thinking that went into this sugar beet deal. I am not sure whether any part of the Atlantic area is interested in it, but I asked the minister earlier in the House whether he would determine if the soil was fit for beet production in areas where an alternate crop was required and if a beet crop would be acceptable to the farmers concerned. If this sugar beet proposal is to be national policy, then the minister should never have stopped at the Quebec border in discussing sugar beets in his speech tonight.

Until such time as the research facilities of the Department of Agriculture are overhauled, our agricultural production will not be what it should. Some years ago the minister and those in charge of research decided there should be certain stations adopted across Canada which would be used for specialized purposes. Fredericton was chosen for one purpose, Charlottetown for another, Vineland for yet another, and so on. On the surface it looked to be a healthy and efficient sort of program, but what it failed to recognize was that in a country such as ours where there is demand for fodder feed and grains across the nation, research that might be effective for the west was totally ineffective for the east.

If we are to have diversification in agriculture we must have diversification in research in the various areas of Canada, whether it be in livestock, grain, fruit and vegetables or what have you. Wheat, barley and oats which may grow at their best in the west do not necessarily grow at their best in the east and produce an economic crop. Yet at this moment in time we have no effective cereal grains research program in the eastern areas of Canada to produce those varieties we are capable of producing, thus saving the federal government a lot of money by way of freight rate subsidies. Until such time as the cost of grain production reaches the point where we in the east can produce grains competitively with the west—which I think will come eventually with research—we must retain a feed grain transportation policy that puts products in the markets of Canada at an equal price at the point of delivery, regardless of their source.

The minister emphasized one other point tonight that I should like to take up. The charging of the provinces with responsibility for agricultural emergencies is basically a wrong policy. Agriculture should be a national concern. When the farmers of New Brunswick, Prince Edward Island and Ontario are told that the frost will destroy their crops, it is wrong to expect the province to pick up the tab, or at least half of it. If the potato growers or wheat growers are told that they are worth only $400 to the government of Canada, then we are writing them off. Until such time as the Minister of Agriculture starts to face some of the realities involved in financing and marketing agricultural products, with the necessity for making a profit, he is not doing his job any better than his predecessor, and as far as the farmer is concerned will be replaced at the next election.

[Translation]

Mr. Adrien Lambert (Bellechasse): Mr. Chairman, first I would like to congratulate the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Whelan) for his appointment. I am convinced that he is a sincere man because I have had the opportunity of sitting with him on the committee on agriculture for several years where he gave proof of his objectivity and sincerety. Now that he is a minister, he holds the reins of power and if he does not succeed in getting Parliament to pass the required measures in order to increase the stability and viability of agriculture, this will once more show that there is a secret power which is acting on our best ministers. Anyway, I hope that in the near future justice will be done in the area of agriculture, both in western and eastern Canada.

Mr. Chairman, with Bill C-141 the government is asking the House to vote supplementary estimates of approximately $16 million required by the Department of Agriculture to close this fiscal year.

As it has been often said, agriculture is the most important industry of our country. Because thousands of people depend on it as their main source of income, this industry, which is at the same time the most vulnerable one, must be able to rely on government support to reach a certain degree of stability. We are not begging for charity, we are asking for fairness considering that the government does interfere in many other areas of the economy with all kinds of grants to ensure the viability and the survival of some industries, which we agree about.

When farmers request assistance from the government, we should not be looked upon as never-satisfied beggars. Indeed, this industry provides thousands of jobs, not on farms only, but also in the areas of transportation, processing, wholesale and retail distribution. Thousands of people are dependent on it. This is the industry where production per worker is most effective.

I was pleased to hear the minister point out that our farmers during the last couple of years have increased individual productivity to a surprising level which exceeds that of any other industry.

However, there are various factors to be considered for the industry to be profitable and to provide for those involved in it incomes at least equal to those of workers in other industries.

Agriculture is a combination of several activities: grain production, dairy production, hog and poultry production. Farming is becoming an increasingly specialized industry and in each field the availability of labour is an important factor. However, there is concern now, particularly in dairy production, about the shortage of labour.

I should like to quote at this stage part of a speech delivered by the second Vice-President of the Dairy Producers Association of the province of Quebec:

> Therefore, working out a policy for farm labour is a matter of great concern for dairy producers. As they are practically up to their ears in work seven days a week, they are of course keenly aware of the problem.

They are more or less like politicians: we also are at it seven days a week—and still we cannot keep up with our work.

I continue to quote:

> Also, programs concerning dairy quality and control are of particular concern to producers.

I stress this point because the bill now before us includes a special chapter on labour.

> Not only does it require a considerable time investment, but dairy production also demands special attention and abilities.

Certainly, the first passer-by that comes around cannot be entrusted with the responsibility of looking after a dairy herd. It is becoming increasingly important for people who are involved in this activity to be qualified so that production costs are reduced as much as possible to allow for a wider profit margin for the producer without overburdening the consumer.

I quote further.

> ... This is essential for the proper management of a herd and the requirements in this connection are increasing.
> Now, we can no longer rely on the zeal of the producer, of his sons or of his employees for the basic survival of the dairy industry. Today, the salaries must correspond to the qualifications required from the worker. The working hours should correspond reasonably to those prevailing in other sectors and, consequently, most urgent measures and special programs should be adopted to encourage the training of competent and adequate labour.

In the job training programs, the government should give more specific attention to the training of competent labour able to meet the producers' requirements in the field of the dairy industry.

Further on, the second vice-president added in his remarks:

> ... during the national convention of dairy producers spoke on this question to confirm the current uneasiness of labour ... the former UCC has already fought to have labour protected by unemployment insurance and there was no question of giving up what already exists. In reply to a spokesman for the Ontario producers who were wondering about the advisability of maintaining the current system, the vice-president ... stated that contributions were not paid for nothing and that we should instead try to improve the existing laws.

This is evidence from the manager of a fairly considerable dairy business, and who, at the same time, has become one of the major official of this association. This evidence may be considered as worthwhile and the required measures should be taken to prevent this problem from aggravating so that this industry may survive and continue to provide our Canadian consumers with a sufficient amount of dairy products.

Another important area also connected with agriculture is the operation of maple tree groves. This issue has often been raised in this House. My colleague, the hon. member for Compton (Mr. Latulippe) mentioned it and as the maple season is coming closer the same problem will arise.

And I quote again:

A high percentage . . .

—Last year—

. . . of those who did not produce any maple sugar . . . explained the fact saying there was a shortage of labour. And of those who did tap their maple trees, many tapped only a few of them for the same reason . . .

Strangely enough, that manpower is very often there, within reach, but paralyzed, frozen by the Unemployment Insurance Act or that on social assistance. What a paradox to speak of a shortage of labour when everyone speaks of a high rate of unemployment. It is also maddening for the serious producer who racks his brains trying to understand what is going on. The unemployed who still have some courage and some pride would be very willing to earn a few dollars but if, all things considered, working does not net them any more, can they be blamed for losing all ambition or interest in seasonal work?

Especially when one has to work waistdeep in snow! I know what I am talking about; for a long time I helped with the production in my own maple-tree groves; I know the work is rather exacting, demanding of your energy and that working conditions are hard. It happens many times that snowshoes are not adequate because snow is too soft to support your weight and you sink in it with snowshoes. Then we have to manage with snowshoes, carrying buckets full of maple sap taking care of not spilling them if you want to have it boiled to obtain maple sugar. If the sap is spilled on the ground, it a complete waste.

There is another field, Mr. Chairman, where much more consideration should be given so that a solution may be found for this problem. In fact, the maple syrup industry is also part of the farming industry and, as I said previously, it is divided into two areas. There is another aspect to be considered which is the weather. I will not discuss this aspect further as the hon. member for Bonaventure-Îles-de-la-Madeleine (Mr. Béchard) who is now behind the curtains—I hope he will participate in the debate later and second me—says it is a matter that concerns the Almighty above and nobody can do anything about it. During the summer of 1972, the weather certainly did not favour the eastern Ontario producers and those of western Quebec in particular. On August 9, the Quebec government was asked—the hon. member for Joliette (Mr. La Salle) indicates he asked also—to prevent a disaster and to stop the producers of this region from getting rid of their herds by assisting them to obtain the necessary fodder for the hibernation of their animals.

It so happened, Mr. Chairman, that favourable answers were given. I do not doubt of the sincerity of ministers, but I wonder how the creation of areas was made. I am at a loss to understand how two or three parishes are forgotten while another is getting assistance, because weather, generally, does not change because of geographical limits.

For instance, I note that in the riding of Lotbinière which I know quite well, some parishes have been designated, including Parisville in the far west of the riding, Deschaillons, Villeroy, Val-Alain, Sainte-Françoise and Fortierville. Then they went as far as Sainte-Agathe in the eastern part, flying over the parishes of Joly, Sainte-Anastasie, Lyster et Dosquet which I know very well.

Mr. Chairman, I delved into the problem to find out the reasons behind those designations. I did not get any satisfactory answer and that is why I raise the issue. I see that the minister is listening with attention because a number of producers have yet to receive the $400 grant. I am making that point so that we will try with goodwill and sincerity not to show at least openly, preference for one region or parish over another.

A third factor, not the least, in agricultural profitability is the famous system of prices, the marketing. The instability of prices is an element that plays to the disadvantage of the producer. A House committee has now been established to find out if price increases would not be the result of people charging excessively for their production. I hope this committee will work seriously and that it will not take into account only the consumers' interests. I have much compassion for the consumers. I understand the workers, the welfare recipients, the elderly, the handicapped who because of their income cannot face the increase in food prices.

On the other hand, producers are also human beings with families and responsiblities and this also adds to their production costs.

For instance, in 1971, our potato producers were affected to a certain extent by extremely low prices and the government had established a program providing for the repurchasing of potatoes, in order to enable the producers to cover at least their expenses if not to make profits. I think that generally the program was carried out equitably but it so happened that some of the dealers did some fiddling about taking advantage of the program; and making profits while the producers were in worse conditions than before.

I would therefore ask the minister to direct his officials to investigate in this area, and make sure that the moneys voted by parliament for the Department of Agriculture will serve their purpose.

Another matter which is exceedingly difficult to discuss in this House, because it concerns all of Canada, is the cost of agricultural production. Our friends from the Prairies will certainly understand the point made by our Eastern producers, and I hope that some day this government will develop a national policy taking into account the needs of both Eastern and Western producers, and that they will find means to enable those in the East to produce at a cost just about equal to that of Western producers.

Meetings are being held. In fact, last week I attended a meeting held by the Canadian Federation of Agriculture, and I was very pleased to notice that all the Canadian regions seem to agree on a solution to this problem. But much to my deception I learned the next day that our Quebec delegates had left the meeting to protest against these participants who had gone back on their positions.

Evidence has shown that in 1971 hog producers in Eastern Canada have produced at a loss and that their production costs were $4.20 per hundred weight higher than Western costs. This is why the government, aware of the losses incurred by the producers and after repeated representations finally adopted a policy to make up for the hog producers losses.

Still in the same area, there have been shady speculators. I call them so because it is really "shocking" to see that all possible efforts are made in this House in order to try to reconcile—

The Assistant Deputy Chairman: Order. I regret to interrupt the hon. member but the time allotted to him has expired.

[English]

Mr. Whicher: Mr. Chairman, most assuredly I will try not to speak too long because I hope these estimates will be passed as quickly as possible. I remind my hon. friends, particularly those in the opposition parties, that one of the votes before us tonight is 15a, in respect of production and marketing grants and contributions of up to $12,600,000. Some of that money will be paid to our friends in Peace River who, unfortunately, have faced a catastrophic situation certainly not of their own making. I would hope that these estimates might be passed quickly so that the Minister of Agriculture could pay this money to these unfortunate people who are victims of circumstances beyond their control.

Because I had an opportunity to visit western Canada in 1969 as a member of the committee on agriculture, I thought perhaps my friends, particularly those from western Canada, would excuse my making these comments because I obviously do not have their great knowledge about western grain farming. In 1969 the committee on agriculture visited the western provinces where hon. members saw the situation which existed. I can tell you it was a sad thing indeed to see what was happening in the west. In most instances the granaries and the drying sheds were full of grain. In many instances the grain was piled on the ground. Quite frankly, the farmers had so much grain that they did not know what to do with it.

I ask my friends from western Canada, most respectfully, to try to be fair for just a minute. I know that politics is politics and I know that you have to paint as bleak a picture as possible of members on the government side of the House. But I ask you to look at this question. What about the difference between now, February of 1973, and the spring or the fall of 1969?

I say to you most respectfully, Mr. Chairman, that the members of the Canadian Wheat Board, under the guidance of the government—because of course the government has something to do with the selling of grain—have accomplished a most remarkable job. It seems to me that the Minister of Justice should not be raked over the coals as he has been day after day in the past few days when he has been accused of not doing the job for western Canada. I say to you that he has done a most remarkable job. I say to you, further, that most certainly the province of Saskatchewan knows it because only last year they named him salesman of the year. Why? Because he sold more grain than any man has ever done in the history of Canada. Surely this is something that not only all Canadians should be proud of, but more particularly my friends who represent farming constituencies in the three western provinces.

Many other things have been done apart from the selling of grain. I agree that there is some justification when some of my friends say that grain was sold at fire-sale prices. But let me point out that it was not sold at fire-sale prices; that grain was sold at world prices. I defy anybody, be he a Liberal or a Tory, to sell grain at a higher price than the price at which the rest of the world is selling it. It is an impossibility. On the other hand, it was sold and it is being sold today in huge amounts. Last year Canada achieved a world record and this year there will be another record, and from what we can see next year there will be another record.

The other night I listened to the hon. member for Qu'Appelle-Moose Mountain who was very successful as the grain salesman of the Conservative party in the Diefenbaker years. I was impressed by the hon. gentleman. It was the first time I had heard him speak. I know that he sold a great deal of grain with the co-operation of the government of that day, but the fact is that he was an amateur compared to our minister today.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Whicher: However, he was not correct when he made the accusation the other day that the grain bins in western Canada are empty.

The Assistant Deputy Chairman: Order, please. The hon. member for Dartmouth-Halifax East wishes to rise on a point of order.

Mr. Forrestall: Mr. Chairman, I wonder if the hon. gentleman would entertain a question.

Mr. Whicher: I would be glad to accept a question, but we want to get these estimates through as quickly as possible. I will listen to the hon. member after completing my remarks. The fact is that when the hon. member for Qu'Appelle-Moose Mountain, who was the head salesman for the Conservative party some years ago, says that the granaries in western Canada are empty and that people in southern Asia and in other parts of the world such as India and Pakistan are hungry while Canada has grain to sell to them, he does not know what he is talking about—and you do not have to be a western farmer to recognize that. Only three weeks ago the Minister of Justice said that according to his figures—and surely we have to accept them—there are 1,100,000,000 bushels of grain in western Canada yet to be sold and we are getting this grain to the ports as fast as we can.

However, that is not the only thing that has been done for the grain farmers of western Canada in the last two or three years. I ask my Conservative friends, most of whom are fair and reasonable, why they did not do something about a two-price system for wheat when they were on the government benches. Why did they not have the courage to give to the western farmers something that they deserved? I will tell you exactly how much was provided by the taxpayers of Canada in the past year: it amounted to $57 million which the farmers had never had before. The hon. member for Qu'Appelle-Moose Mountain had the chance to do the same in the 1960s, but he did not do it.

It was our Minister of Justice who sold this program to the government of Canada which provided the western farmers with this large sum of money.

The Assistant Deputy Chairman: Order, please. The hon. member rises on a question of privilege.

Mr. Forrestall: Mr. Chairman, so that the record will be accurate, I would ask that justice should prevail in this committee of the whole and that the hon. member should name the member who was the first member of the House to advocate the sale of wheat from the area on which the hon. member seems to be concentrating tonight.

Mr. Whicher: I did not catch exactly what the hon. member said; but if he said what I thought he did, I would imagine that his party would drop him like a bad habit.

The Assistant Deputy Chairman: Order, please. The hon. member rises on a point of order.

Mr. Forrestall: Mr. Chairman, when the question I pose is called into question in the manner in which it was, I think I should have the right to correct the hon. member. This is within the rules as I understand them. The question I posed to the hon. member was to implore him to include in his remarks to the House the name of the hon. member who was the first person in the House of Commons to advocate the sale of Canadian wheat abroad.

The Assistant Deputy Chairman: Order, please. The hon. member knows that he is raising a point of debate, not a point of order.

Mr. Whicher: Mr. Chairman, I really could not understand what the hon. member said. I tried to be fair about the hon. member. I think he did a wonderful job in selling wheat to Russia, but he sold only half as much as did our minister.

Mr. Forrestall: Why don't you mention Gordon Churchill?

Mr. Whicher: The hon. member did not do half the job in getting the two-price system for western farmers that the present minister did, and he did not do half the job in supplying the much needed railway cars to western Canada that were supplied in the last few months. My friends say that the railway tracks will not take the cars. Quite frankly, it does not matter how much we give, not to western Canada but to Members of Parliament from western Canada; they will ask for more. In any event, I do not want to say anything more on this subject. I heard my hon. friend, the agricultural expert from the New Democratic Party whom I respect greatly—

Mr. Forrestall: Oh, oh!

Mr. Whicher: My hon. friend is a perfect example of why we should have birth control in this country.

An hon. Member: The Tories are split on that issue.

Mr. Forrestall: I rise on a question of privilege, Mr. Chairman.

[Mr. Whicher.]

Mr. Whicher: Mr. Chairman, I am not giving up the floor. If my hon. friend says anything further, even members of his own party will admit that so far as birth control in his instance is concerned, we should make the legislation retroactive.

Mr. Forrestall: You are the best example of it.

The Assistant Deputy Chairman: Order, please. The hon. member for Bruce.

• (2140)

Mr. Whicher: If you say any more, my friend, you had better call out the defence forces whom you try to represent for your party.

My hon. friend in the NDP who represents the farmers asked tonight, "What is your policy for the farmers of western Canada?" Just tonight the Minister of Agriculture spoke, and the Minister of Justice spoke earlier in this debate. Here I refer to our grains policy in western Canada. Our policy is simply this: we are going to sell all the grain we possibly can, for as much as we can, for the farmers of western Canada.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Taylor: Mr. Chairman, it is a pleasure for me to speak on this vote dealing with the production and marketing of grains. I feel fortunate in being able to pass on to hon. members opposite some solutions to the grain marketing problems that they have been agonizing over for quite some time. I am particularly happy that some of the members on this side of the House have also suggested one solution to the marketing problem, namely, the utilization of the port of Churchill to its full capacity and potential.

Hon. members know that the port of Churchill has been in existence for a long time. It was one of the main entry routes through Hudson Bay for the early settlers in the Province of Manitoba. Unfortunately, the potential of the area has still not been realized, but it seems the only impediment to the development of the port has been of a political rather than an economic nature.

This evening I am pleased to pass on to hon. members opposite, particularly to the Minister of Agriculture and to the minister responsible for the Wheat Board, some suggestions on how the port might be better utilized. I am not suggesting that the problem is a recent one; it has been in existence for a considerable time. Here I refer to a report made following an expedition in 1904, which says, "Ships will go wherever cargoes can be found. All that is needed to open Hudson Bay for ordinary commercial navigation is a line of rail to carry freight to the port. With the use of iron steamships, the shipping season can extend from July 20 to November 1, and this period might be increased without much risk by a week in the beginning of the season, and perhaps by two weeks at the close." That is another report that has been buried somewhere and no one has paid much attention to it.

The port of Churchill has a storage capacity of some 5 million bushels. That capacity is almost as great as the capacity of the western seaports. However, the capacity is not used adequately, and in order to realize the full potential of the port some improvements should be made to it. You may ask what is the reason for suggesting greater use of the port of Churchill. I suggest there is a very practical reason for its greater use. Here I quote from a report prepared by the office of the Minister of Agriculture for the crop year 1971-72. It is interesting to note the comparison of costs involved in shipping grains. I refer to page 23 of this report headed, "Estimated average cost of moving Canadian wheat from a mid-prairie point ... during the crop year 1971." The report indicates that in the crop year 1971-72 some 20 million bushels were shipped through the port of Churchill, and some 23 million bushels in the previous year. I believe the estimates show that the approximate amount of grain shipped through the port of Churchill this year was some 25 million bushels.

But, Mr. Chairman, the cost, on an estimated average forwarding cost basis, to ship by the port of Churchill was quoted as 36.652 cents per bushel. The cost of using maritime ports was 59.110 cents per bushel, and the cost of shipping by way of Thunder Bay overseas direct was 44.578 cents per bushel. I suggest that savings of that magnitude certainly justify taking a much closer look at the potential of the port of Churchill.

Briefly, I would like to suggest some of the things that must be done, at a very minimal cost, in order to utilize the port fully and perhaps effect much greater savings that should evolve to the benefit of the wheat growers, producers and shippers in the prairie provinces who have access to the Manitoba seaport of Churchill. First of all, the capital improvements that are required are in the neighbourhood of $15 million. But these improvements should not be undertaken as in the past, on a piecemeal basis or with a shotgun type of action: they should be undertaken as a total development concept.

The first thing that must be done is to deepen the harbour by dredging. I do not like to go back into history but I believe the last dredging of the port was carried out in 1962. Since that time there has been some minor maintenance dredging but nothing of the nature required. The port near the wharf itself must be deepened by another four feet as a minimum, in order to handle the larger ships that are becoming more common to the area. The present depth at the wharf is some 32 feet and, of course, relying on the tides, which can be up to 15 feet in height, it is now necessary that further deepening be done in order that the larger ships can come into the harbour, receive grain with a minimum of delay and return to Europe.

Coupled with this must be the deepening of the turn around basin. When the ships are loaded they must be turned around in the mouth of the Churchill River. In order to maintain the proper depth in the turn around basin it is necessary that constant dredging be done. This has not been the case for some years. The result is that the turn around basin is getting shallower and shallower and certainly is not adequate for the size of ships used in that area in this day and age.

Another item that must be attended to is the provision of grain galleries and wharf facilities which will handle the larger ships. There is not point in deepening the harbour unless the facilities are upgraded to handle the size of ships now in use. And coupled with this is grain storage and cleaning facilities. As I have mentioned, the storage capacity now is some five million bushels but because of the distance and the fact that the port is at the end of the line it is necessary that these facilities be increased and that the service of cleaning grain be added. Mr. Chairman, it is not necessary that the service be added right at the port of Churchill. There is no reason why it could not be included at some point in the rail line leading to Churchill where it would facilitate the rapid movement of grain out of the port.

One reason given for the failure to use the port as much as possible is that the Churchill River runs into the bay and in the late fall slush-ice forms in the river, pushes against the wharf facilities and makes it difficult for the ships to manoeuvre. Various plans have been put forward to overcome this problem, one of which, the tidal barrier, is quite feasible and could be constructed at minimum cost. Another reason which is sometimes put forward is the short season. The grain marketing people have said that they need a longer season in order to justify any increased expenditure at the port. This is not necessarily a physical problem, however.

One of the reasons the season is so short is that the marine insurance companies arbitrarily set the dates for which insurance will be in effect for the ships using the Hudson Bay and the port of Churchill. The season commences July 23, usually, and extends almost to the end of October. The season could be extended to 107 days if the hulls of the ships were reinforced. With the use of icebreakers it is conceivable that the season could be extended to 214 days. Were this the case, the service time for the port could be extended considerably and the volume of grain handled could be increased substantially.

Coupled with improvements to the port, icebreakers must be provided to keep the bay clear and an adequate tug must be provided at the port to ensure that the ships are quickly taken to berth, loaded and returned to the bay. One of the bottlenecks has been caused by the fact that ships often have to wait a long time in the bay before they can get into the wharf to load. Another factor to be considered is that railway facilities should be upgraded to handle the new hopper cars purchased by the government. These cars cannot operate to their full capacity at the present time. The railway to Churchill should be upgraded so that it can support the port in the shipment of grain and other products.

Another difficulty is that the port does not receive the support it should from the government. The National Harbours Board is responsible for the maintenance and improvement of the port, but the Wheat Board and the Minister of Agriculture are responsible for deciding what method is used to ship grain. It requires some extensive re-examination of the problem and the promotion of a number of things, and I sincerely hope that all these will be taken into account.

Mr. Chairman, I do not want to deal with this matter very much longer. However, I would express the hope that hon. members opposite, particularly the minister, will take a good look at the port of Churchill and give serious consideration to providing the capital needed to make it the port it should be which will enable grain to be moved cheaply and quickly from the prairie provinces.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Rose: Mr. Chairman, in the dying moments of the evening I should just like to say that I represent a riding typical of Canada's relationship to agriculture, a riding where agriculture is declining. The hon. member for Bruce, who is always entertaining when he speaks, has long experience both with the government of Ontario and in this House. I remember one occasion when he said that one of his main aims was to help the farmers, but he admitted that the farmers were actually worse off than they had been when he was first elected 20 years ago. Nevertheless, tonight he proposed all sorts of things and asked, "Who sells the most wheat?"

Mr. Chairman, if there is a market for wheat, any government can sell it; it does not have to be the minister from Saskatoon-Humboldt who is the super salesman, or the member for Qu'Appelle-Moose Mountain. World demand sells wheat whether the minister represents one of the old-line parties or the other.

In response to the hon. member for Churchill who spoke on the need for increased use of that port and the need to keep it open for 107 days, I would suggest to him that the Minister of Transport is in enough hot water to keep the port of Churchill ice-free the year around.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Rose: Mr. Chairman, there are a number of problems relating to my riding that would bear greater examination than is possible in the 30 or 40 seconds remaining, so with your permission I shall call it ten o'clock.

The Assistant Deputy Chairman: Is it agreed that we call it ten o'clock?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Progress reported.

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

A motion to adjourn the House under Standing Order 40 deemed to have been moved.

AGRICULTURE—INCREASE IN PRICE OF FERTILIZER—INQUIRY AS TO ACTION

Mr. Bill Knight (Assiniboia): Mr. Speaker, on January 15, 1973, I asked the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Whelan) the following question:

• (2200)

As great concern has been expressed by a number of farm organizations in the past as well as at present over the increase in the price of fertilizer for the farming industry, and as fertilizer plants suggest that the increase results from a lack of potash and other ingredients which are in over-supply in Saskatchewan, can the minister inform us whether there will be action on this matter?

[Mr. Taylor.]

In asking that question I was dealing with a subject that historically has long been of concern to the western producer and, as I am sure the Minister of Agriculture knows, to the eastern producer as well. For example, in the Peace River country the price of certain types of fertilizer—without going into details—was $34 per ton in 1972. By January, 1973, the price had risen to $46 per ton, an increase of $12 per ton. In the month of January alone there were two increases of $5 each in the price of fertilizer.

In addition to that rapid increase in price, the suppliers of fertilizer in the Peace River country claim that there is a shortage of fertilizer to meet the needs of the Canadian market. At the same time some suppliers have been exporting fertilizer. We have had experience with such exports before. The Minister of Agriculture may not be aware of these instances. For example, the Cominco Company of Trail, British Columbia, exported fertilizer to North Dakota, U.S.A. At the same time, Canadian farmers could cross the border and obtain fertilizer at prices lower than those obtaining on the Canadian market. After it was learned that the farmer, as usual, was smart enough to do this, the rules and regulations were changed and the price on the American side of the border went up as well.

What I am trying to get across to the minister is that we need a better answer than the one he gave when he said, as reported at page 277 of Hansard:

Mr. Speaker, this has been reported to me. What the hon. member says is true, according to the representations which have been made to me, namely, that because of so-called shortages of nitrogen and potash it is proposed to increase prices. We are investigating this. We are contacting the premier of Saskatchewan to find out if it is true that there is a shortage of potash in Saskatchewan and investigating the other chemical companies that are responsible for the manufacture of nitrogen.

May I point out that in Saskatchewan, as I am sure the minister in charge of the Wheat Board knows, we have more potash than we need or will need for a long, long time. This is something fertilizer suppliers can take into consideration. I appreciate the minister's answer. It is at least better than the sort of answer we used to obtain from the former minister, and I make no bones about it.

This evening perhaps he will take the opportunity to tell these producers in our country that they have no business increasing the price of fertilizer because at the same time the price of fuel oil for farms in Saskatchewan jumped by 2 cents a gallon, adding at least $400 or $500 to production costs for the next year. Tonight perhaps the minister will not only talk on this matter but will outline some proposals for action.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The Chair recognizes the hon. parliamentary secretary.

Mr. Knight: Mr. Speaker, I see the minister is chicken.

[Translation]

Mr. Léopold Corriveau (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to reply to the hon. member for Assiniboia (Mr. Knight) who expressed concerns which, I can assure him, are shared by the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Whelan).

In reply to the hon. member's question, the minister has advised that he was closely following the increase in the price of chemical fertilizers. In fact, he is now writing to manufacturers of chemical fertilizers, proposing a meeting in order to be able to examine the subject with them.

I am informed that a shortage of potassium is not the main reason for the increase in those prices. I know that the Supreme Court will soon be hearing a suit related to the quota system used by Saskatchewan for the regulation of the potassium supply, but I do not believe I can make any further remarks in this regard except to say that the officials of the Department of Agriculture are following the matter closely and consider it as an aspect of their inquiry.

Nitrogen and phosphates are the chemical fertilizers most often used by the Prairie farmers. Pre-season purchases of 11-48-0 fertilizer have increased by 25 per cent over last year and there is apparently no surplus of phosphates as was the case in previous years. The price of nitrogen, a by-product of natural gas, has increased for the same reason.

I would like to mention to the hon. member that in order to minimize price increases, farmers should bargain in many places in order to get the best price, buy in bulk where possible and place their order as soon as convenient so as to avoid the spring rush which will be particularly intense this year.

In concluding, Mr. Speaker, I think the matter is serious and we will make every possible effort to enlighten the situation.

AGRICULTURE—FEED GRAIN—SUGGESTED ASSISTANCE RESPECTING PROTEIN SUPPLEMENT

Mr. J. P. Nowlan (Annapolis Valley): Mr. Speaker, several days ago I asked the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Whelan) a question in connection with the feed freight equalization program to provide feed grain to the Atlantic growers at a cost which is in a sensible relationship to the cost of the same feed grain to the western grower. The able Minister of Agriculture is not seated in his place tonight, from which I gather he does not intend to reply to this adjournment debate. But in answer to my question I received the usual answer, that protein additions or additives or concentrates would not necessarily be included in the feed grain assistance program for the ensuing year but that it would be considered.

Mr. Speaker, as I was thinking today of what I might say in this seven-minute debate, one hon. member said to me "Patrick, why do you even have to think about feed grain assistance to Atlantic Canada? Surely the facts are so graphic on your retina of memory that you don't have to worry about facts and figures to try to tell the House tonight how important this program is?" Mr. Speaker, you, who come from one of the greater feed grain areas in Canada, that is, an area which needs feed grain, know better than I how fundamental is the program of feed freight equalization grants, payments, call it what you will, to Atlantic Canada.

When I look at Atlantic Canada and/or the Annapolis Valley I try to picture what would happen if feed freight assistance went out of the window. Mr. Speaker, you might as well then put that part of Atlantic Canada out of the window: it is that fundamental. You can resurrect the old stories of those under steam and sail wondering why we did not coalesce more with the northeastern part of the United States in order to get a viable economy.

Atlantic feed freight assistance has had a better multiplier effect on the economy of Atlantic Canada than any program I can think of. This program has been in existence for 25 to 30 years. Surely the government could learn from this experience. The whole subject is of such importance that not only the Nova Scotia Board of Agriculture but the Maritime Farm Council have passed several resolutions connected with it.

We also wanted included in the feed freight assistance program the question of protein additives or concentrates; we wanted these incorporated into the feed grain assistance act. I do not want to bore the House by reading the resolutions passed by the Nova Scotia Federation of Agriculture or by federations of agriculture in Atlantic Canada in regard to suggested amounts of feed freight assistance, but as a member from Atlantic Canada I am beginning to wonder just where Atlantic Canada fits into the whole program.

The Minister of Agriculture is from Essex and he may be able to grow tomatoes without feed grain additives or protein additives. But if he came from Atlantic Canada he would be standing in my place tonight trying to get the House to take a definitive position on feed grain assistance not only to Atlantic Canada but to la belle provence and the beautiful province of British Columbia as well. The provinces of British Columbia, Quebec and the four Atlantic provinces, especially number one, Nova Scotia, depend on feed grain assistance. The Crownest pass rates have been inscribed into the statute of Canada, but so far we have not been told just where feed freight assistance, feed freight programs, feed freight policy or feed freight statutes fit into the priorities of this government.

As the House knows, I come from the Annapolis Valley. If the poultry producers and hog producers of the Annapolis Valley were deprived of feed grain assistance they would be in dire trouble. The Annapolis Valley is the king producer in Nova Scotia. I realize there are producers in New Brunswick and a more moderate amount in P.E.I., but Kings county, which is the base of the Annapolis Valley, is being castrated by the electoral commission in its attempt to divide the county. Divided or not, they can never deny the necessity for feed grain assistance and the equalization of feed grain rates in Atlantic Canada so that in truth there is a program that eliminates regional economic disparity, a program that would enable the various economic regions of Atlantic Canada to realize their full potential.

In closing, may I say I hope the Minister of Agriculture, who is presently sitting in the front row, will hobble back to his own seat and tell us definitively whether feed freight assistance in eastern Canada and in British Columbia is as inviolate as are the Crowsnest pass rates to western Canada, thus enabling us to stabilize our agricultural potential.

[Translation]

Mr. Léopold Corriveau (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, the question being debated now is very much like that which was asked by the hon. member for Richmond (Mr. Beaudoin); therefore my answer will be the same. The hon. member will find in the January 4, 1973 issue of Hansard, on page 6, the commitment made by the government in the Speech from the Throne:

> The Government supports the principle of an equitable relationship of prices of feed grain to livestock feeders in various areas of Canada. It is the intention of the Government to implement before the next crop year, procedures that will ensure the optimum development of the feed grain and livestock industries within Canada.

I am confident, Mr. Speaker, that we shall fulfil this commitment. We are now having important discussions with various producer groups in order to ensure that they will be heard and that their views will be taken into consideration in seeking a solution. I am sure no hon. member would want decisions taken without consultation.

Mr. Speaker, the rise in production costs does worry me and the fact that this increase stems from a world shortage of feed grains and protein is of little consolation. However, I am happy that, at least this time, the price the consumer of feed grains receives for his products has also increased. Let us hope that the increase in the cost of production, in stock breeding, will be reflected in the profits of the grain and protein producer and help him stabilize his income and ensuring that he can produce even more feed grains next year.

In closing, Mr. Speaker, I would say that everyone is very much aware of the seriousness of the situation and I know that a practical solution will soon be found.

GRAIN—PROVISION OF RAILWAY CARS TO POINTS WITH LARGE SUPPLIES OF NON-BOARD GRAINS

Mr. Elias Nesdoly (Meadow Lake): Mr. Speaker, I am glad to see that the minister responsible for the Wheat Board is here tonight. On February 7, 1973, I asked a question regarding the movement of grain in western Canada, particularly in Saskatchewan. The reason I asked the question was that reports from Saskatchewan indicate there are about 150 delivery points in that province plugged up with grain. I have received a number of letters from my own constituency; one from Whitkow, Saskatchewan, which indicated that it has had a full elevator since December 11 and the last train passed through the village on November 29. There was a quota for several more bushels of grain but they could not haul any more as the elevator space was filled.

Let me indicate that I do not bring this matter forward tonight for the purpose of publicity, but because farmers in Saskatchewan generally are facing a real problem. I made several phone calls today to spot-check the situation, and in all fairness to the minister I must say that there appears to be no problem in respect of grain movement at various points in my constituency.

They told me at Paradise Hill that grain is moving to about 90 per cent capacity with cars coming in. They are keeping up quite well. A similar statement was made in respect of some of the grain at Canwood, although they have missed the odd car occasionally. A similar statement was made in respect of Spiritwood, Shellbrook, Holbein and Bapaume. However, at about half the points I phoned there appeared to be problems with non-board grains or the oilseed crop which is rapeseed.

There also appears to be difficulty in respect of the movement of barley. I was told that at St. Walburg, for example, there was congestion in respect of barley to the extent of 49,000 bushels, and some 42,000 bushels of rapeseed. They only have 19,000 bushels of wheat on hand. It seems the wheat is moving well but rapeseed and barley are not being moved at all. The agent indicated to me, also, that trains are run whenever the railway feels like operating them. They say this is a real problem.

In respect of Turtleford, Saskatchewan, they say they have been filled up and congested every weekend since October 1972. They have space for only 4,000 bushels, with a capacity of 93,000 bushels. Barley is very congested, as also is rapeseed. They say they have only a four-car spot and they could use an eight-car spot. They tell me that this situation seems very difficult to change. At Meadow Lake, Saskatchewan, it seems that the problem is about the worst in the constituency I represent. Barley is really congested, with one of the pool elevators having 54,000 bushels of grain on hand and the others ranging from 70,000 to 100,000 bushels. Yet I understand there is a crying need for feed grain in certain parts of Canada. They also indicate that there is a lot of rapeseed on hand which has not been moving well for the last couple of months.

Glaslyn, Saskatchewan, has been congested since the start of the 1972 crop year. They state that rapeseed is really congested and just is not moving. When I spoke to them today on the telephone they told me that the movement of barley is bad too. It was indicated that they could use an eight-car spot instead of a four-car spot. Leask is congested right up to the 140,000 bushel capacity. There is congestion in respect of all grains. They say they are located on the line between North Battleford and Prince Albert and never know when the trains are coming.

This would seem to be typical of the situation in other parts of the country. Elevator agents do not know when to expect the trains. I think we are getting into a de facto abandonment of railway lines, as I mentioned in the House previously. I am told that shipments sometimes are three weeks behind schedule. I could mention several other points at which there are problems.

As I have said, there has been some good movement of grain in certain parts of the constituency but it appears that rape and barley are causing problems in certain areas and I would appreciate a response from the minister responsible for the Wheat Board as to the reason the situation exists and what steps he is taking to remedy it.

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister of Justice): Mr. Speaker, I appreciate the hon. member saying that grain is moving in great volume and also that the congestion does not exist at all delivery points but only at certain ones. Certainly it does exist sometimes at as many as 10 per cent of the delivery points in the prairie region at any particular point in time, although not at the same one for necessarily very long.

The fact is, of course, that the producers have delivered by now—or by the reports, before the first half of the crop year is complete over 500 million bushels of grain will be delivered into elevators and we have been exporting at the rate of 20 million bushels, which is higher than last year's level when we set an all-time record. The grain is moving very rapidly indeed.

The Wheat Board did open quotas fairly rapidly in the early part of the year, basically to assure itself that there would be supplies available to continue marketing and that farmers would not hold back on those supplies. There is an eight-bushel wheat quota. The barley quota is up to 20 bushels. This is in order to ensure that the supplies come in. I indicated in the House the other day that there was here a friendly bit of disagreement between myself and the Wheat Board about the speed with which they opened quotas. They were concerned to see the supplies. I was satisfied that those supplies would be forthcoming. I was more concerned to try to avoid congestion. However, congestion has resulted from that and from the fact that there is a tremendous demand for rapeseed and other products which has required those quotas to be opened fairly rapidly.

Grain is not distributed evenly across the prairie region, so as quotas are opened more or less evenly there are particular points where there are difficulties. In addition, of course, there are logistics difficulties. The Wheat Board must call forward wheat from places where it is and see that cars are there to haul it out when that is needed. Sometimes points are neglected where other grains not immediately needed for some shipments are to be found.

The first priority is to get grain to the ports. Vancouver, for instance, has had a lot of grain on hand, rapeseed included. Rapeseed movement is going very well and there should be rapid alleviation of all these situations. At the moment grain is moving very well for this time of the year, but we will only hit the tremendous volume again after Thunder Bay opens and the eastern movement goes into full swing again.

In short, the Wheat Board, which has been facing many problems, has been trying to ensure that grain which is needed at markets gets there. It has been trying to ensure that grain comes in so that they can sell with confidence in the future. This has led to certain congestion. I hope this can be avoided in the future with a slightly more careful opening of quotas. There are individual lines where rail problems occur, where during the wintertime grain is not taken out because so little moves over the line that it is simply not economical to move grain during the heaviest snow months.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. The motion to adjourn the House is now deemed to have been adopted. Accordingly, this House stands adjourned until tomorrow at 2 p.m.

At 10.30 p.m. the House adjourned, without question put, pursuant to Standing Order.

PRIVILEGE

MR. FOX—STATEMENT RESPECTING ELECTIONS EXPENSES

Mr. Fox: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a question of privilege.

On Monday, a newspaper published in the national capital region appeared to be insinuating that some hon. members, myself included, had not met the requirements of the Canada Elections Act through failure to file their statutory return respecting election expenses with the local returning officer.

Mr. Speaker, this article is inaccurate. I filed the statement referred to with the returning officer of my constituency, on December 30 last, and I was accompanied by my official agent.

Furthermore, this return was later published in a newspaper in my constituency. The Chief Electoral Officer, Mr. Jean-Marc Hamel, confirmed to me by telephone that the article was inaccurate.

WHEAT BOARD ANNUAL REPORT—REQUEST FOR UNANIMOUS CONSENT TO MOVE MOTION

Mr. J. H. Horner (Crowfoot): Mr. Speaker, I rise pursuant to Standing Order 43 to ask leave of the House to move a motion on a matter of urgent and pressing necessity arising out of the announcement today by the Canadian Wheat Board of the disastrously low final payments on wheat and oats and no payment at all on the barley pool. I move, seconded by the hon. member for Lisgar (Mr. Murta):

That the annual report on the Canadian Wheat Board be referred to the Standing Committee on Agriculture and the Wheat Board and the minister be called to appear before the committee.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Speaker: The House has heard the motion proposed by the hon. member for Crowfoot (Mr. Horner). Under the terms of Standing Order 43 this motion requires the unanimous consent of the House. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. Speaker: There is not unanimity and the motion therefore cannot be put.

ADDITIONAL FUNDS FOR LOCAL INITIATIVES PROJECTS—REQUEST FOR UNANIMOUS CONSENT TO MOVE MOTION

Mr. Roland Godin (Portneuf): Mr. Speaker, pursuant to Standing Order 43, I ask for the unanimous consent of the House to move the following motion concerning a matter of urgent and pressing necessity.

Since the government has granted unlimited credits to the Unemployment Insurance Fund for the maintenance of unemployed Canadians while the Local Initiatives Program, which enables the unemployed to feel useful and to work, has very limited funds, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Bellechasse (Mr. Lambert):

That this House should consider as soon as possible the means to be taken to make available to the Minister of Manpower and Immigration sufficient funds to carry out all the projects submitted, so that the unemployed who are now reduced to idleness may make a worthwhile contribution under the Local Initiatives Program.

Mr. Speaker: The House has heard the motion proposed by the hon. member for Portneuf. This motion requires the unanimous consent of the House. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

COMMITTEE ON OIL AND GAS PRODUCTION AND CONSERVATION—REQUEST FOR UNANIMOUS CONSENT TO MOVE MOTION

I spoke in that fashion, Mr. Speaker, to make the point that I do not believe anyone in the House understood my words, nor do I think there are many people here who understand the people of the Northwest Territories and their problems. Therefore, under Standing Order 43 I seek leave of the House to present a motion, seconded by the hon. member for Skeena (Mr. Howard), on an urgent and pressing matter involving our Canadian north and the northern people. I move:

That this House instruct the Ministers of Indian and Northern Affairs, and of Energy, Mines and Resources, to reconsider the appointments to the five-member committee on oil and gas production and conservation in the Canadian north and in off-shore areas, and that the committee be composed in such a way that it could understand the problems of the north and would truly represent the interests of the Canadian north and its native peoples.

Mr. Speaker: The motion proposed by the hon. member for Northwest Territories requires the unanimous consent of the House. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. Speaker: There is not unanimous consent. The motion cannot be put.

Mr. Carter: Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Lawrence: I rise on a question of privilege, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Speaker: I apologize to the hon. member for St. John's West. The hon. member for Northumberland-Durham is rising on a question of privilege.

Mr. Lawrence: Mr. Speaker, I apologize to you for not being able to give you notice of a matter that just came to my attention and, in addition, the minister has just entered the House. Yesterday, before the Special Committee on Food Prices, the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs referred to an unpublished study by the Restrictive Trade Practices Commission which he indicated had looked at the profits of the grocery store chains which in a period of rising costs showed declining profit margins. My point of privilege is that it is my understanding of the rules that if either a minister or a member refers to a report in the House or in a committee of the House that report should be tabled. Therefore my question of privilege is that the report should now be tabled.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. There are a number of weak aspects to the proposition made by the hon. member. First, even though this matter has just been brought to the hon. member's attention there is still the requirement of the Standing Order that notice must be given. Second, I would think it is perhaps more a point of order than a question of privilege. Third, the hon. member is trying to bring into the House a matter raised in a committee, and that is entirely out of order. Fourth, the fact that a member or a minister has referred to a document in a committee does not require its tabling. It is only when it is quoted and cited that its tabling may be required.

Mr. McGrath: I rise on a point of order, Mr. Speaker. Yesterday the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs, as my colleague from Northumberland-Durham mentioned, referred to and did in fact quote from an unpublished report of the Restrictive Trade Practices Commission. My understanding is that the minister has a responsibility to table that document in the House once he quotes from it either in the House or before a standing committee. Unless the minister has something to hide, I suggest that he should in fact table that document.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member has reiterated the point of order raised by the hon. member for Northumberland-Durham. The fact remains that although I appreciate it is a point of order which is subject to interpretation and ruling from the Chair, the ruling in respect of the point of order of the hon. member for St. John's East must be the same as the ruling I just made when the matter was raised by the hon. member for Northumberland-Durham, that this is a point which should be taken up in the committee. We cannot bring to the House a procedural debate that took place in a committee. I suggest respectfully to both hon. members—and of course I have no knowledge of what transpired in the committee—that even if an official document were cited, read or quoted from in a committee the rules and practice and the Standing Orders do not require that that document be tabled in the House. There must be a distinction between the proceedings in committees and the discussions, debates and proceedings in the House. It is a well known rule, which I am sure all members appreciate, that we cannot import into the House the debates, discussions and points of order which might legitimately be raised in a committee.

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): Then instruct the chairman, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

FISHERIES

HERRING—REQUEST FOR UNANIMOUS CONSENT TO MOVE MOTION

Mr. Walter C. Carter (St. John's West): Mr. Speaker, pursuant to Standing Order 43 I beg leave of the House to present a motion of urgent and pressing necessity. I refer to the situation in Placentia, St. Mary's and other bays in Newfoundland where the Department of Fisheries has set quotas with respect to the herring fishery, thereby endangering the herring stock and causing a possible depletion, without first ascertaining, through scientific research, a safe sustainable yield of herring catches in these bays. I therefore move, seconded by the hon. member for St. John's East (Mr. McGrath):

That this House instruct the Minister of Fisheries to initiate immediately a thorough scientific investigation into the herring stock in Placentia and St. Mary's Bays in Newfoundland with a view to determining the size of the stock and the sustainable yield; and that pending the outcome of the investigation, strict conservation measures be adopted by imposing closing lines in the bays and that large purse seiners be barred from fishing in the areas so designated.

Mr. Speaker: This motion also requires unanimous consent of the House.

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. Speaker: There are yeas and nays, and the fact that there are nays indicates that the motion cannot be put at this time.

DISPLAY OF CANADIAN FLAG—REQUEST FOR UNANIMOUS CONSENT TO MOVE MOTION

Mr. Alexandre Cyr (Gaspé): Mr. Speaker, I ask leave under the terms of Standing Order 43 to move a motion which I hold to be of national urgency. Tomorrow, February 15, will be the eighth anniversary of our Canadian flag. In most legislative bodies throughout the world, the national flag stands in a place of honour.

Knowing the spirit of good citizenship and patriotism of my hon. colleagues, who are all proud to be Canadians, I trust that my motion will get unanimous support without debate.

I move, seconded by the hon. member for Cochrane (Mr. Stewart):

That the Speaker of the House, following the adoption of this motion, be authorized as of February 15, 1973, to display the Canadian Flag in the House of Commons in such location as he chooses.

Mr. Speaker: The House has heard the motion proposed by the hon. member for Gaspé. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Speaker: It is difficult for the Chair to determine whether there is unanimous consent. I might say that when some members say "agreed" and others say "d'accord" it is perhaps even more difficult to make out what the consensus of the House is. I want to make sure, if there is unanimous censent, that it is made clear to the Chair. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Speaker: I think there is unanimous consent.

RURAL AIRPORT DEVELOPMENT ADVISORY COMMITTEES BILL

On the order: Introduction of Bills:

February 9—Mr. Howard—Bill intituled: "An Act to provide for the establishment of Rural Airport Development Advisory Committees".

Mr. Speaker: Before putting this motion I think I should advise the hon. member that the Chair has had an opportunity to look at the proposed bill and there are, to my way of thinking, money implications. The hon. member seems, at least in some respects in the bill, to infringe the financial initiative of the Crown. Perhaps some minor changes to the bill might make it acceptable from the procedural point of view, unless the hon. member has come to the House armed with the Royal Recommendation. He may have this in his possession, in his pocket, at the present time, and that, of course, would make the bill acceptable. If he does not possess this all-important procedural document, I would think it would be helpful if he would have a brief discussion with the parliamentary counsel. I am sure some slight adjustments would make the bill perfectly acceptable at least from the procedural standpoint. This is the advice I take the liberty of giving to the hon. member for Skeena.

Mr. Howard: Mr. Speaker, I would not seek to obtain the royal authority you mentioned because I think that is an infringement upon the rights of all members.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Howard: In any event, I have had a discussion with the law clerk of the House. Following that discussion the matter which I think you have your eye upon was put into order, but perhaps that information has not yet reached Your Honour. Therefore I will ask that the bill stand.

Mr. Speaker: I appreciate the comments made by the hon. member and I shall look again at the proposed bill. As I said, the difficulty is not of a substantial nature and if that aspect is corrected the motion for introduction of the bill could then be put. The hon. member requests that the bill stand. Stand.

CANADIAN WHEAT BOARD—HOPPER CARS

Question No. 39—Mr. Gleave:

Will the Minister responsible for the Wheat Board inform the House as to the status of the 2,000 hopper cars which he announced in the 28th Parliament would be purchased and put at the disposal of the Canadian Wheat Board and, if so (a) how many of these cars were in service as of January 1, 1973 (b) had an agreement been reached with the CNR and the CPR as to the recovery of depreciation and maintenance costs for this tank car fleet prior to putting these cars into service (c) does the Minister have assurance from the two major railroads that they will not reduce the numbers of their own rolling stock for the purpose of grain movement as and when the 2,000 hopper cars are made available (d) has an agreement been reached with the P.G. and E. *ROYAL CANADIAN MOUNTED POLICE SIGNS

Question No. 53—Mr. Diefenbaker:

1. By province since January 1, 1972, how many (a) Detachments (b) automobiles or other vehicles have had the descriptive letters RCMP removed and the word "Police" substituted therefor?

2. By province since September 1, 1972, on how many automobiles or vehicles have the said letters been restored?

3. Under whose authority was such action under Parts 1 and 2 taken by the Solicitor General?

4. Did the Prime Minister, as undertaken by him in a public statement, direct the restoration of said letters and, if so, on what date?

5. Has there been a recent directive to the RCMP rescinding the earlier direction that the said letters should be restored and, if so, on what date, for what reason and under whose authority?

Hon. Warren Allmand (Solicitor General): Mr. Speaker, I am informed as follows: (a) No building signs were altered, however, 26 signs containing the crest of the Royal Canadian Mounted Police and the word Police were installed on operational buildings replacing signs which contained the crest of the force and the words Royal Canadian Mounted Police or Gendarmerie royale du Canada. Additionally, 26 signs bearing the crest of the force and the word police were installed on new buildings previously unmarked which the force was occupying for the first time. (Annex 1) (b) Eighteen police vehicles had the shield containing the description letters RCMP removed and the shield containing the word police substituted therefor. Additionally, 622 police vehicles had the shield containing the word police installed as new or replacement vehicles previously unmarked. (Annex 2)

2. Nil.

3. The policy change for building and vehicle signs was authorized by the Commissioner of the Royal Canadian Mounted Police under section 5 of the Royal Canadian Mounted Police Act, the first building sign being taken into use in March, 1970 and the first vehicle signs in January 1972. The conversion of signs under this policy was discontinued on April 28, 1972 save in the case of 86 vehicles (included in the total of 622 vehicles referred to in Part 1 (b) which were marked subsequently to that date for reasons of operational necessity.

4. No undertaking was given by the Prime Minister in the terms stated. He did indicate, however, in a public statement on April 27, 1972, that the program replacing RCMP insignia on buildings and patrol cars had been halted.

5. Not applicable since, as stated in Part 4, no direction for the restoration of the letters RCMP had been given.

Mr. Speaker, there are two annexes to this question; I wonder if I could merely table them with the question?

Mr. Speaker: Is this agreed?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

VICTORIA, B.C.—NUMBER OF DREE PERSONNEL

Question No. 138—Mr. McKinnon:

1. How many Department of Regional Economic Expansion personnel are there in the office or offices at 1175 Douglas Street, Victoria, B.C.?

2. What is the annual or monthly rent for the premises (a) in total (b) per square foot?

3. How many DREE projects were approved by or through that office in the period January 1 to November 1, 1972?

What is the total annual payroll for the personnel employed there?

Mr. Marcel Prud'homme (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Regional Economic Expansion): 1. Six

2. (a) Annual rent for 2,368 square feet, $14,752.64. (b) $6.23 per square foot.

3. The office's main operational role in the period in question was to analyze and recommend on provincial government proposals for action under the ARDA program. Nineteen projects calling for total federal assistance of about $2.4 million were dealt with in this way. During the period, however, local DREE personnel was also involved in extensive discussions with provincial representatives which resulted in the signing of an agreement for the implementation of the Special ARDA program in B.C. The Victoria office is responsible for the administration of this new program and, while no projects had been approved as of November 1, 1972, 17 applications seeking federal assistance of approximately $5.4 million had been received and were under consideration. The Victoria office is not directly involved in the processing of applications under the Regional Development incentives Act, but does receive and deal with many enquiries and this activity represents an important part of its responsibilities.

4. $67,734 for the 1972-73 fiscal year.

Question No. 197—Mr. Gleave:

1. How many of the government's new hopper cars were allocated to (a) CPR (b) CNR?

2. How many box cars previously used in grain movement have been scrapped since September 1, 1972 by (a) CPR (b) CNR?

3. Are there any restrictions placed on the use of the hopper cars in so far as what commodities will be carried?

4. (a) What braking systems are used on the government's hopper cars (b) who designed the braking system, have all of the cars the same type of braking systems and, if not, which railway received each respective braking equipment (c) have there been any previous hopper cars built with the braking equipment now being used on the government's hopper cars and, if so, have any known defects been reported insofar as their use is concerned?

5. Have there been any reported problems encountered with the hopper cars now being used by (a) CPR (b) CNR and, if so, what are these problems?

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister of Justice): 1. (a) 1,074 CP Rail; (b) 926 CN.

2. (a), (b); 46 CP, 344 CN. Box cars used in grain service are restricted to those with six foot doors. Figures include cars assigned exclusively to grain service and general purpose box cars not exclusively assigned.

3. Restricted to the carriage of grain as defined in the wheat Board Act delivered to the railways from the western division.

4. (a) The braking system incorporated on the cars is the AB freight brake equipment with B-1 quick service valve. Aside from the quick service valve, the principal components include the ABD control valve and Wabcopac truck-mounted unit brake assemblies with 9'' diameter brake cylinders; (b) The Brake system on all cars is designed by the manufacturers, Westinghouse Air Brake Company and New York Air Brake Co., to Association of American Railroads specifications; (c) All 100-ton covered hopper cars built for CP Rail since 1964 have AB freight brake equipment with Wabcopac brake assemblies but have not included the B-1 quick service valve. The quick service valve is a relatively new development originally designed to provide more efficient braking on cars of more than average length but has more recently been adapted for use on any size of car to promote maximum possible response and uniformity in brake action. Its use is required, for example, on such long cars as multi-level autorack cars and the long variety of piggyback flat cars, and because of the length of brake pipe in the Canadian Wheat Board grain cars, it is considered desirable to install the quick service valve for optimum braking response. No deficiencies in braking action have been experienced on CP Rail's several types of long cars such as multi-level cars and piggyback flats that are already equipped with B-1 quick service valves.

5. (a) CP Rail problems experienced are all of the fail-safe variety and have involved either the failure of train brakes to release after an application, causing the train affected to stop, or the development of brake pipe leakage to such an extent that it has been impossible to start the train out of the yard until the cause has been found and remedied. In all cases where deficiencies have occurred, corrective action has been taken which has returned the cars to service in satisfactory condition; (b) CN: There has been a problem reported on the quick service valves. However, the nature of the problem is such that it could cause delays in charging time but does not affect braking ability of a train. In any event these valves were temporarily isolated before the cars entered service. They will not be used until the problem is rectified.

3. The amount allocated is in the form of a grant.

RESTORATION OF PLACE ROYALE, QUEBEC CITY

Question No. 581—Mr. Lambert (Bellechasse):

8. Will the total cost of the restoration be less since contracts were awarded without tender?

[Translation]

Mr. Marcel Prud'homme (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Regional Economic Expansion): 1. Yes.

2. $3,795,000 in grants $586,000 in loans.

3. Approximately $18 million to restore some 75 houses.

6. This decision was made jointly by the minister and the hon. Robert Bourassa, following the recommendation of the Quebec Department of Cultural Affairs.

7. The joint federal-provincial committee had granted the Quebec government a request that contracts for this project be given without tenders being called because the nature of the undertaking is such that firm prices could not be obtained for this kind of work. Officials of the department had investigated the matter and had sought the advice of federal experts before granting the request of the Quebec authorities.

8. It is impossible to answer this question because, as stated above, the nature of the undertaking is such that firm prices cannot be obtained for this kind of work.

Mr. Speaker: Starred Question No. 663.

Mr. Cafik: Mr. Speaker, as the reply to Starred Question No. 663 is somewhat lengthy, I would ask permission of the House to have the answer printed as if read.

Mr. Nielsen: Mr. Speaker, on a point of order relating to the documents just tabled by the Solicitor General on starred question No. 53, although he asked the permission of the House, perhaps they might also be printed as if read.

Mr. Allmand: Mr. Speaker, I would ask to table two annexes which were attached to the question and give further information.

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): Print them in Hansard.

Mr. Speaker: Is this agreed?

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): Mr. Speaker, on that point, may I suggest that what the Solicitor General ought to have said is that they should be printed as an appendix to Hansard. If they are tabled, the documents will remain downstairs in the parliamentary returns office and, unless someone knows about them and gets copies of the documents and relates them to the question, the total answer will be incomplete.

Mr. Nesbitt: Mr. Speaker, with regard to the starred question I placed on the order paper, No. 663, I am quite agreeable to having any schedules or tables printed as an appendix to Hansard but I cannot see why the answers to such questions should be so lengthy that they cannot be read in the House. If the answer extends over several pages, I could agree; otherwise, I should like to have it read.

Mr. Speaker: Perhaps before the parliamentary secretary, who is apparently prepared to read the answer into the record, does so, I might say that it is my understanding that there is agreement that the annexes to which the Solicitor General referred be appended to Hansard. Is this agreed?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): The answers to starred questions should always be read.

Mr. Cafik: Mr. Speaker, I apologize to the House for suggesting that the answer be taken as read. I was trying to conserve the precious time of the chamber.

Question No. 663— Mr. Nesbitt:

1. What is the total number of "medical advisers" who advise the Minister of National Health and Welfare with respect to decisions on applications for a Disabled Person's Pension under the Canada Pension Plan?

2. What are the required qualifications and experience of these advisers?

3. Do all of the present advisers meet the qualifications outlined in Part 2?

4. Are consultations required to be held with the "family doctor" when applications are made?

5. Are consultations ever held with the applicant's family doctor and, if so, under what circumstances?

6. Does the Minister personally review complaints concerning the decisions of his medical advisers?

7. Is it the policy of the Department to disregard recommendations of an applicant's family doctor when applications are made for a Disabled Pension?

8. How many applicants for the Disabled Pension have been personally examined by the Minister's medical advisers?

Mr. Norman A. Cafik (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, the answer to the first part of the question is: At present there are 13 full time medical advisers making recommendations with respect to Canada Pension Plan disability pensions. In addition, four medical advisers work on a part-time basis.

The answer to Part 2 is: The required qualifications for medical advisers are an M.D. degree from a recognized university together with some years of clinical experience and/or public health experience.

The answer to Part 3 is: Yes.

The answer to Part 4 is: A medical report from the records of the treating physician is requested by the applicant in each case and accordingly is included as part of the documentation upon which medical advisers advance their recommendations.

The answer to Part 5 is: The treating physician is contacted by the departmental medical adviser if more information is required on the current status of the applicant's medical condition.

The answer to Part 6 is: There is, in the law, a three-stage appeal procedure which applicants may pursue if they wish. However, the minister may review those complaints which are brought to his personal attention.

The answer to Part 7 is: No.

The answer to Part 8 is: Canada Pension Plan staff medical advisers do not personally examine applicants. However, specifialists in appropriate fields perform examinations at the request of the Canada Pension Plan when such examinations are felt necessary for recommendations to be made. Such special examinations are performed with the consent of the applicant and at the expense of the Canada Pension Plan Administration.

*THIRD NATIONAL PARK ON EASTERN SHORE OF NOVA SCOTIA

Question No. 782—Mr. Forrestall:

1. With respect to the answer to question Number 145, will the government now advise the House when the evaluation of the public meetings referred to will be completed?

2. Will the government advise whether there is an expiry date on the Memorandum of Agreement and, if so, when will the Memorandum lapse?

Mr. Len Marchand (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): Mr. Speaker, the answer to Part 1 is as follows. The evaluation is being carried out in conjunction with the Province of Nova Scotia. No advice concerning the date of its completion is yet available.

The answer to Part 2 is as follows: The Memorandum of Agreement itself has no expiry date. The memorandum does suggest that certain tasks to be performed by a joint federal-provincial committee be completed and reported on within six months of the signing of the memorandum. The option to extend the time limit for this report is available to both governments.

*CANADA PENSION PLAN BENEFITS

Question No. 789—Mr. Rynard:

1. How many people applied for Canada Pension Plan benefits because of disability and did not qualify for the years 1969, 1970, 1971 and 1972?

2. How many people were classified as being disabled and supported by their own doctor's report did not qualify for the Canada Pension after being assessed by doctors employed by the Department of National Health and Welfare for the years 1969, 1970, 1971 and 1972?

Mr. Norman A. Cafik (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, in replying to the first part of the question with respect ot the year 1969, the question is not applicable because disability pensions commenced to be paid under the Canada Pension Plan from February, 1970, only. With respect to 1970, the determined as disabled numbered 3,087. The determined as not disabled numbered 670. The figure for action discontinued due to application withdrawal or insuffient earnings is 203, and the total for the year 1970 is 3,960. For 1971 the figures are as follows: determined as disabled, 10,019; determined as not disabled, 2,259; action discontinued due to application withdrawal or insufficient earnings, 480, the total for the year 1971 being 12,758. With respect to 1972 the figures are as follows: determined as disabled, 14,951; determined as not disabled, 4,572; action discontinued due to application withdrawal or insufficient earnings, 640, the total for 1972 being 20,163.

The answer to Part 2 of the question is as follows: In the case of disability pension applications under the Canada Pension Plan, the applicants' own physicians are not asked to determine whether a person is disabled under the Canada Pension Plan legislation, since the decision is more than purely medical in nature and must be made, as required by the legislation, by the Canada Pension Plan Administration. The applicant's physician is simply asked for objective findings of any functional limitations. This procedure, including the medical report form answered by physicians, was approved by a committee of experts on disability assessment, which included a representative from The Canadian Medical Association.

The statistics of the nature requested are not kept since the applicant's physician is only forwarding a medical report; that is, the physicians are requested to report their objective findings, rather than to provide their opinion as to whether the applicant meets the requirements of the Canada Pension Plan legislation.

After the application is received along with the medical and other reports, if it is felt that more medical information is required, the applicant is asked to undergo an examination by a medical specialist (consultant) at Canada Pension Plan expense. With this information, a large number of applicants are able to complete the legislative requirements—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Despite the exchange which took place earlier between the parliamentary secretary and other hon. members, I would think that an attempt should be made by the House to consider the terms of Standing Order 39(4) which provides:

If a question is of such a nature that, in the opinion of the Minister who is to furnish the reply, such reply should be in the form of a return, and the Minister states that he has no objection to laying such return upon the Table—

Clearly, the answer may be made an order for return. That has been the long established practice of the House. In such a situation the reply is made by the House itself an order for return. I would hope that this might be done in relation to the answer which the parliamentary secretary is giving to the House at present. I am not sure how long he has yet to go, but I would hope that there would be consent to make this reply an order for return.

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Cafik: Mr. Speaker, I think there are about 15 more words to go, if the House would be satisfied with English; if it wants the reply in French, it will take a little longer.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I think it might be agreed that the reply be made an order for return.

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Return tabled.

POST OFFICE—INSUFFICIENT POSTAGE ON LETTERS FROM LIBERAL PARTY

Question No. 815—Mr. Cossitt:

Did the Post Office Department collect any postage due because of insufficient postage being placed by the Liberal Party of Canada on imitation personal letters from the Prime Minister and mailed to approximately 35 constituencies, including Leeds, shortly before October 30, 1972 and, if so (a) what was the amount of overdue postage paid (b) what was the date the Department received such payment?

Hon. André Ouellet (Postmaster General): Yes. (a) $130.56; (b) October 27, 1972.

*NUMBER OF UNITED STATES DRAFT EVADERS IN CANADA

What is the government's estimate of the number of United States draft evaders in Canada?

Mr. Mark MacGuigan (Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Manpower and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, the fact that an applicant from the United States is, or may be, seeking to avoid military service in his own country is not considered in determining his admissibility to Canada. Consequently draft evaders are not identified as such in Immigration records and, short of conducting a special survey or registration, it is not possible to provide an estimate, based on other than a guess, of the members in Canada.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Ninety thousand.

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): Mr. Speaker, I will try to escalate the answer.

MOTIONS TO ADJOURN UNDER S.O. 26

INDIAN AFFAIRS

CLAIMS OF JAMES BAY AREA NATIVES AFFECTED BY HYDROELECTRIC DEVELOPMENT

Miss Flora MacDonald (Kingston and The Islands): Mr. Speaker, I rise under Standing Order 26 to move a motion for the adjournment of the House for the purpose of discussing a specific and important matter requiring urgent consideration, namely, the lack of direct participation by the federal government in the claims of the James Bay Indian people affected by the James Bay hydroelectric project, the exposure of apparently conflicting cabinet positions, and what appears to be an abdication of the federal government's constitutional responsibilities to act on behalf of the Indians of James Bay at the insistence of the provincial government which created the development corporation.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Kingston and The Islands has filed the notice required by Standing Order 26. This has provided an opportunity to give serious consideration to the hon. member's proposed motion. The Standing Order requires the mover to state the matter proposed to be discussed. In this particular instance the hon. member proposes for debate, "the lack of direct participation by the federal government in the claims of the James Bay Indian people", and later, "what appears to be an abdication of the federal government's constitutional responsibilities".

With respect, the Chair must suggest to the hon. member that her proposed motion is essentially one of censure which the House would normally consider in circumstances provided by Standing Orders other than Standing Order 26. In other words, what is proposed for debate is a substantive motion which cannot claim the priority provided by Standing Order 26.

With much regret, I have to rule, therefore, that this motion cannot be put to the House.

AIRPORTS

VANCOUVER INTERNATIONAL—EXPROPRIATION HEARINGS—SUPPLYING OF INFORMATION BY MINISTERS TO PERSONS AFFECTED

Mr. John Reynolds (Burnaby-Richmond-Delta): Mr. Speaker, pursuant to Standing Order 26 I ask leave to make a motion for the adjournment of the House for the purpose of discussing a specific and important matter requiring urgent consideration, namely, that during the currency of public hearings under the Expropriation Act concerning the Cora Brown, Tapp Road and MacDonald Subdivisions, Sea Island, Vancouver International Airport, British Columbia, which must be resolved before March 4, 1973, ministers of the Crown have refused to provide those affected with the information they have requested, contrary to specific provisions of the Expropriation Act.

[Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre).]

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Burnaby-Richmond-Delta proposes that the business of the House be set aside for the purpose of an emergency debate under the provisions of Standing Order 26. In support of his motion the hon. member has been kind enough to file with the Chair some very interesting and enlightening material, for which I thank him.

As hon. members know, it is only in very exceptional circumstances and on rare occasions that the provisions of Standing Order 26 are used for the purpose of setting aside the business proposed for consideration by the House, as previously announced by a spokesman for the government, and usually after consultation between the parties. Standing Order 26, as well as numerous precedents and rulings, determines the conditions required to accept such a motion.

One of the elements to be taken into account is whether the motion proposed for discussion is a new matter requiring immediate debate. It is essential to note that it is not the urgency of the matter which is relevant but the urgency of debate. If the matter is one on which there has been continuing discussion over a period of time, it can hardly be judged to meet this particular requirement.

In fact, in this instance the question was first raised by the hon. member for Vancouver South on January 15 last when he proposed to move a motion under the provisions of Standing Order 43. On the following day the same matter was raised again and this time it was discussed on the adjournment proceedings; indeed, priority was given to the hon. member for Vancouver South to raise this question on the adjournment proceedings on the basis of the then urgency of the matter. On January 19 the hon. member for Burnaby-Richmond-Delta proposed a motion under Standing Order 43 which in effect dealt with the same question as he now proposes under Standing Order 26. Essentially the same question was raised on January 31 by the hon. member for Fraser Valley West when he proposed to move a motion under Standing Order 43 dealing with the expropriation proceedings at the Vancouver International Airport. On February 1 the hon. member for Burnaby-Richmond-Delta again brought the matter before the House during the proceedings on the adjournment motion. Once more, on the 8th of February, the same question was raised by the hon. Leader of the Opposition by way of a question to and reply from the hon. Minister of Transport.

It will thus be seen that over a period of approximately one month this very important and, I am sure, urgent matter has been brought to the attention of the House by concerned members.

The Chair also has to take into account the possibility of debate within a reasonable time. I would judge that the budget debate, which is one of the general debates during which such matters can be brought forward for debate, should provide an opportunity for the submission of additional representations and the expression of additional views for the information and guidance of the government. It can be assumed that the budget debate will be called on government orders for a few days next week. If this should not take place, the Chair would be prepared to review the situation if a similar motion were proposed again at that time. For today, however, the Chair cannot agree to set aside the government business scheduled for today. I regret, therefore, that the hon. member's motion cannot be put under the terms of Standing Order 26.

REPORT OF THE LEGISLATION REVIEW COMMITTEE, CHAIRED BY JOHN G. BRYDEN

Motion No. 33—Mr. Forrestall:

That an Order of the House do issue for the tabling of the Report of the Legislation Review Committee, chaired by John G. Bryden.

Mr. John M. Reid (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Privy Council): The Bryden report was commissioned on the understanding that it was to be an internal, confidential document for the use of the minister through whom the Public Service Staff Relations Board reports to parliament. It is for this reason that the Bryden report has not been released. When the proposals relating to changes to be made in the Public Service Staff Relations Act are presented to the House, however, the government will then review the situation to determine whether it would be in the public interest to publish the report. I therefore ask the hon. member to withdraw his motion.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Perhaps this might be an appropriate occasion to remind hon. members that when parliamentary secretaries and members of the government reply to these motions, although a brief explanation to the House might be helpful there should not be an extended reply. I am not saying that this is what was done in this particular instance, but this might be an appropriate time to place this caveat on the record.

Mr. Forrestall: I ask that the motion be transferred for debate.

Mr. Speaker: Transferred for debate.

BRYDEN REPORT RELATING TO REVISION OF PUBLIC SERVICE STAFF RELATIONS ACT

Motion No. 86—Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre):

That an Order of the House do issue for a copy of the so-called Bryden report concerning the revision of the Public Service Staff Relations Act, which was submitted to the then Minister of Manpower and Immigration in June 1971.

Mr. John M. Reid (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, this motion deals with exactly the same subject matter as the last. Therefore I appeal to the hon. member to withdraw it for the same reason.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): I appeal to Your Honour to put the question.

Mr. MacEachen: Transfer for debate.

Mr. Speaker: Transferred for debate.

Mr. Howard: Mr. Speaker, notice of motion for the production of papers No. 133, which admittedly only has the date of February 6 on it, relates to the Stanbury-Fields report on the taxation of Indian people and Indian lands in the province of British Columbia. During the previous session in the last parliament the House passed such a motion subject to the agreement of the province of British Columbia. That agreement has now been given in a letter to the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development, whom I am very pleased to see back in the House in good health. We wish him the best from now on.

[Mr. Speaker.]

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Howard: In view of this piece of past history regarding endorsement being given by the province of British Columbia to the tabling of this report, I wonder whether the matter could be proceeded with.

Mr. Chrétien: Mr. Speaker, may I thank the hon. member for his kind words. I should like to inform the House that the document will be tabled within the next few days.

Mr. Speaker: Shall the remaining notices of motions stand?

Some hon. Members: Stand.

ORAL QUESTION PERIOD

INDIAN AFFAIRS

CLAIMS OF JAMES BAY AREA NATIVES—ROLE OF FEDERAL GOVERNMENT

Miss Flora MacDonald (Kingston and The Islands): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development and is based on last night's report released by CTV with respect to the lack of federal participation in the claims of the James Bay Indian people. Can the minister tell the House if the role of the federal government is now relegated to that of an observer, as directed by the chief negotiator for the province of Quebec; and has the federal role been confined so as to prevent the government from participating in the negotiations and, if so, why?

[Translation]

Hon. Jean Chrétien (Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): Mr. Speaker, it is true that on certain occasions the representative of the provincial government wanted to make a distinction between the federal government and the Indians, but I never accepted that policy and each time the Quebec Indians asked me to attend, I complied. I must say in that connection that I met four or five times with the Quebec premier but unfortunately we could not come to an agreement and the Indians have decided to lodge legal proceedings. As all hon. members know, in my capacity as Minister of Indian Affairs, I am pleased to grant them funds so they may plead their case before the court and it will now be heard in Montreal.

[English]

Miss MacDonald (Kingston and The Islands): Mr. Speaker, I still feel that the government is abdicating its constitutional responsibility. May I direct a further supplementary question to the minister. In view of the three different positions taken by cabinet with regard to the claims of the James Bay Indian people as outlined in the memo to cabinet of July 6, 1972, the first being that of "alert neutrality" on October 21, 1971, the second being that of "being a party to the negotiations" on May 9, 1972, and the third being that of "restricted to the role of an observer", can the minister say which of these three now is the position of the government?

Mr. Chrétien: Mr. Speaker, as I said, we are being less paternalistic than some other people would like us to be. We have always followed in all circumstances the wishes of the Indians and have assisted them as often as possible. When they decided to go to court to defend themselves, I gave them some help and I am ready to help them in all possible ways. But, of course, I do not intend to be paternalistic, and I know they are capable of defending themselves.

Miss MacDonald (Kingston and The Islands): Will the minister acknowledge that the National Indian Brotherhood has requested that the minister assist them in their representations before the courts?

Mr. Chrétien: Mr. Speaker, two groups are involved, the Quebec Indian Association and the National Indian Brotherhood. The case in court has been put forward by the Quebec Indian Association and, as I say, I have helped them put their case before the court. I am in constant contact with these people; in fact, I had the pleasure of meeting their representatives about 10 days ago.

JAMES BAY HYDROELECTRIC DEVELOPMENT—STUDY OF EFFECT ON ENVIRONMENT OF NATIVE PEOPLE

Hon. Robert L. Stanfield (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, may I ask the minister a supplementary question. Has he caused to be conducted any inquiry into the effect of this proposed undertaking upon the environment, life and habitat of the native people in the area?

[Translation]

Hon. Jean Chrétien (Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): Mr. Speaker, we are aware of the consequences. As for the department which I am heading, we are concerned with the interests of the Indian people and their traditional way of life. We have held numerous discussions with them and we are endeavouring to protect their interests. They have decided to take their case before the court and it would not be advisable for me to discuss the heart of the problem since their case is before the Superior Court in Montreal.

[English]

Mr. Stanfield: Has any formal, systematic study been made of the environmental effects resulting from this development, particularly upon the native peoples, and is the minister prepared to make the study public?

[Translation]

Mr. Chrétien: Mr. Speaker, the question concerning ecology in this area has been considered and I think that the Minister of the Environment could perhaps answer this question.

[English]

Hon. Jack Davis (Minister of the Environment): Mr. Speaker, perhaps I might try to reply to the question of the Leader of the Opposition. We are now in the second phase of studies, the first phase having been completed in the fall of 1971. A summary report was published and widely distributed. There are 40 supporting reports available to anyone who is interested. More detailed studies are now under way at a cost roughly of $8 million, and jointly financed by the Quebec government and the federal government.

Mr. Stanfield: Can the minister indicate approximately when the results of these studies in the second phase will be made public?

Mr. Davis: Mr. Speaker, I expect that a number of the studies being undertaken in the second phase will be completed this year and their publication will begin in the fall.

CLAIMS OF JAMES BAY AREA NATIVES—GOVERNMENT POSITION RESPECTING COURT CASE

Mr. David Lewis (York South): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask one or two questions on this matter. The Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development has told us that the matter is now before the court and therefore he cannot discuss certain aspects of it. But would he inform the House whether the native people affected in the James Bay area asked him before they went to court to carry out the responsibilities that the federal government has under the British North America Act as well as the Indian Act and to represent them in negotiations in order to protect their interest in that area before they were forced to go to court?

[Translation]

Hon. Jean Chrétien (Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): Mr. Speaker, I should like to remind the House that the Indians themselves came to see me and asked me to help them take the case before the courts; I used my authority to give them the funds required to retain the services of the best legal advisers they could find. We gave them all the information they requested. The Indians never asked me to take over their case. They themselves decided to take it before the courts, and I gave them all the help I could.

[English]

Mr. Lewis: In view of the responsibility of the federal parliament and government to protect the Indian people in that area, both under the act that gave that area to Quebec and under other statutes, has the minister given consideration to his responsibility to be in court to support the position of the native people in that area instead of merely providing them with legal assistance?

• (1500)

Mr. Chrétien: Mr. Speaker, I have not yet been directly summoned to the court and I believe the proceedings are now going quite smoothly. An observer from my department is following them, I have regular meetings with the Indians, I offer them all the assistance required and if I am summoned to give evidence—I do not know whether I shall be—I am quite ready to comply with the orders of the court, but I can do no more than keep the court informed of legislation. The attorneys in charge of the case for the Indians have already informed the court of existing legislation, i.e. the Indian Act and the 1912 Act of Transfer.

[English]

Mr. Lewis: Mr. Speaker, may I put this straightforward question to the minister in the hope that I can get a straightforward answer.

Mr. Nielsen: I doubt it.

Mr. Lewis: Does the minister accept the responsibility of the federal government and parliament for the condition of the Indians in that area, despite annexation of the territory to Quebec under an act and, if so, exactly what plans does he have to protect the welfare of the native people in the area who are bound to be affected by the development which has now started?

[Translation]

Mr. Chrétien: Mr. Speaker, I should like to reply to the hon. member but the question he has now asked is a legal one. I accept my responsibilities as Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development and I do not believe the Indians of the province of Quebec have complained at any time of my attitude toward them.

JAMES BAY HYDROELECTRIC PROJECT—MEASURES TO PROTECT QUEBEC INTERESTS

Mr. Roch La Salle (Joliette): Mr. Speaker, a supplementary.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Joliette on a supplementary.

Mr. La Salle: Mr. Speaker, I should like to put a supplementary to the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development.

We are all aware of his concern about his responsibilities towards the Indians and my question is as follows: is he willing to do as much to protect as well the interests of the province of Quebec with regard to the James Bay development project?

Hon. Jean Chrétien (Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): Mr. Speaker, my primary responsibility is the protection of the interests of the Indians; I have repeatedly asked the Quebec government to sit at a table and come to an agreement, but it was felt that the Indians had no rights. Today, their case is before the courts. We will know whether or not they have rights; as for me, I must fulfil my obligations and help the Indians as much as possible.

[English]

CLAIMS OF JAMES BAY AREA NATIVES—REQUEST FOR STATEMENT ON GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Erik Nielsen (Yukon): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a supplementary question to the minister. In light of the decision of the federal-provincial cabinet committee on May 9, 1972, that in view of its constitutional position in respect of Indians and the lands reserved for Indians the federal government has a vested interest in the settlement of the Indian claims and should be a party to the negotiations, will the government now make known its support for the Indians of the Quebec Indian Association either by clearly stating its position to the House on motions tomorrow or by reasserting the position that it indeed has a vested interest in the settlement of the Indian claims and should be a party to the negotiations?

[Translation]

Hon. Jean Chrétien (Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): Mr. Speaker, there is nothing new in that question. I stated in the House on various occasions what was my position as Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development and as I said earlier, I will endeavour to help the Indians protect their interests in the James Bay area.

[English]

Mr. Nielsen: In light of the minister's answer, is the government prepared now to make known its support of the position of the Indians of the Quebec Indian Association in a statement before the interlocutory injunction hearing?

[Translation]

Mr. Chrétien: Mr. Speaker, I answered that question on several occasions and stated what had been the government interventions. I wish to point out to the House that I am in constant communication with the Quebec Indians and that such a request could not be made at the present time; besides the Indians themselves did not ask for it.

JAMES BAY HYDROELECTRIC PROJECT—GOVERNMENT POSITION CONCERNING CONTINUATION OF DEVELOPMENT

Mr. René Matte (Champlain): I should like to put a supplementary question.

Could the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development say what is the policy of his department concerning the works now under way at James Bay?

Hon. Jean Chrétien (Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): Mr. Speaker, we have no direct jurisdiction over that area, but we do have one over the Indian rights and it is precisely because the works are carried out that the Indians have applied for an order of the Superior Court. Indeed, it rests with the court to decide whether the works must be stopped or not, but the specific request made to the court is that they be stopped.

[English]

JAMES BAY AREA—GOVERNMENT ASSISTANCE IN DEVELOPMENT

Mr. Heward Grafftey (Brome-Missisquoi): Mr. Speaker, my quesiton is directed to the Minister of Regional Economic Expansion. Has the government been informed that the chairman of the James Bay Development Corporation has been appointed mayor of the James Bay municipality with a mandate given by the provincial government for regional development, and is the federal government prepared to assist the area under the terms of federal regional development legislation?

Hon. Donald C. Jamieson (Minister of Regional Economic Expansion): Mr. Speaker, as to the appointment of the gentleman in question, I have no formal knowledge of it other than what is public knowledge, nor have there been any discussions between the government of Canada and the government of Quebec with regard to this region. As things stand at the moment, the region would not be entitled to special assistance under the Regional Development Incentives Act but, of course, Quebec is free at any time to make submissions to us with regard to the region. As of the present moment it has not done so.

JAMES BAY AREA—CONSTITUTIONALITY OF QUEBEC DEVELOPMENT ACT

Mr. Wally Firth (Northwest Territories): Mr. Speaker, I too am happy to see the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development back at work. I wish him continued good health because I think his presence makes for a very interesting question period. Has the federal government decided to refer the James Bay region development act, passed by the Quebec National Assembly, to the courts of this land for determination as to its constitutional validity?

[Translation]

Hon. Jean Chrétien (Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): Mr. Speaker, this question is part of the application made by the Indians to the court and I think that one of the aims of their procedure is to determine whether the legislation passed by Quebec is constitutional. It would not be proper for me now to make further comments.

INDIAN AFFAIRS

JAMES BAY HYDROELECTRIC PROJECT—RESPONSIBILITY FOR JOINT ECOLOGICAL STUDY

Mr. Gérard Laprise (Abitibi): Mr. Speaker, I should like to put a supplementary question to the Minister of the Environment.

Could he say whether it is the federal government or that of Quebec which has the first responsibility for the joint ecological study made by both governments on the James Bay basin?

[English]

Hon. Jack Davis (Minister of the Environment): Mr. Speaker, personnel carrying out these studies are supplied by both levels of government and consultants are also being retained by both levels of government.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Obviously there is widespread interest in this matter. Before going to the next subject the Chair will recognize the hon. member for Rocky Mountain. If there is time at the end of the question period we might return to this matter, but I have some doubts whether that will be possible.

JAMES BAY HYDROELECTRIC PROJECT—GOVERNMENT RESPONSIBILITY TO INDIANS AFFECTED

Mr. Joe Clark (Rocky Mountain): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct my question to the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development for the purpose of clarification. Is it the position of the government that the government of Canada has no responsibility to the Indian people in the James Bay area on this question beyond the payment of some conscience money and, if not, what are the responsibilities recognized and accepted by the government?

[Translation]

Hon. Jean Chrétien (Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): Mr. Speaker, obviously this question is a bit startling because we accept all responsibilities which are ours under both the Indian Act and the act of 1912.

DARLING REPORT RECOMMENDATION THAT COASTAL WATERS BE RESERVED FOR CANADIAN FLAG VESSELS—POSITION OF GOVERNMENT

Mr. T. C. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): Mr. Speaker, St. Valentine's Day seems to be an appropriate occasion upon which to ask the Minister of Transport about the Darling report which has been in the possession of his department for some two years.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Douglas: I should like to ask the minister whether he has yet made any decision with reference to the recommendations in the report of the inquiry on the coasting trade of Canada and related maritime activity, particularly with reference to the recommendation that Canadian coastal waters be reserved for Canadian flag vessels. Has any decision been made in respect of this matter, since it is of tremendous importance to those on the east and the west coasts of Canada?

An hon. Member: Give us a sweetheart answer.

Hon. Jean Marchand (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I agree entirely with the hon. member and am anxious to have this report implemented. But before doing so I should like to meet with the premiers of the maritime provinces to study the impact of the recommendation on transportation prices and to see what kind of solution we can bring about. We have a problem of a shortage of crews as well as a shortage of ships, and I should like to know exactly what would be the total impact whenever we decide to implement the report.

Mr. Douglas: In view of the importance of creating jobs on both coasts, and the need for keeping our coastal waters clear of pollution by having ships under Canadian control, can the minister give the House any idea when he will have completed his discussions, which should have been held some time ago, and when he will be able to make a report to the House regarding a decision on this matter?

Mr. Marchand (Langelier): The hon. member knows how we have had to stay around these days in order to attend sessions of the House. As soon as we can I will meet with the premiers in an effort to solve this problem.

Mr. J. M. Forrestall (Dartmouth-Halifax East): Mr. Speaker, I ask the minister, although it might be a good idea if this matter were referred to the standing committee for review, whether implementation of the Darling report is in any way related to the rewriting of the Canada Shipping Act and, if so, does the minister intend to rewrite that act prior to any serious consideration of the Darling report?

Mr. Marchand (Langelier): That calls for a legal opinion which I am not in a position to give, but it is my opinion that we can implement the Darling report without amending the Canada Shipping Act.

Mr. Frank Howard (Skeena): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the Minister of Transport a supplementary question. Inasmuch as the Darling report and its examination involve matters which are exclusively within the jurisdiction of the parliament of Canada and the minister's department, why does he want to talk with the premiers of the maritime provinces about it?

MANPOWER

LOCAL INITIATIVES PROGRAM—CRITERIA FOR APPROVAL OF PROJECTS

Mr. Roland Godin (Portneuf): Mr. Speaker, I should like to put a question to the Minister of Manpower and Immigration.

Concerning projects submitted under the Local Initiatives Program, we all know that there is a study and selection committee. Would the minister tell this House since when projects are submitted to the Liberal caucus for final approval?

[English]

Hon. Robert K. Andras (Minister of Manpower and Immigration): No, Mr. Speaker.

[Mr. Marchand (Langelier).]

Mr. André Fortin (Lotbinière): Mr. Speaker, I should like to put a supplementary question.

Can the minister tell the House whether he is aware of the fact that political committees, at the riding level, cooperate with some officials of his department in order to give political approval or disapproval to certain projects?

[English]

Mr. Andras: No, Mr. Speaker.

BARLEY—REASON FOR NO FINAL PAYMENT FOR 1971-72 CROP YEAR

Mr. J. H. Horner (Crowfoot): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Justice in charge of the Canadian Wheat Board. Can he explain to the House and the country why there has been no final payment on barley? Was the surplus used to pay off losses in previous years?

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister of Justice): No, Mr. Speaker. The pool to which the hon. member refers is for the crop year 1971-72. The pools have been closed for all three grains. In those years world prices were at a very low level, and accordingly the final payment is small. I am happy to say that the situation has been corrected and that the farmers can look forward to higher returns.

Mr. Horner (Crowfoot): The minister referred to a small final payment. My understanding of the announcement made today is that there will be no final payment.

Mr. Lang: I was referring to all three grains. In the case of barley, there was a deficit in the pool of approximately $3.8 million which, of course, will be borne by the treasury in accordance with the standard practice.

Mr. Horner (Crowfoot): Now that the final pool has been audited, will the annual report of the Canadian Wheat Board be referred to the committee on agriculture, as has been the practice of the House over the past number of years?

Mr. Lang: We will certainly be following the practice of making the annual report of the Canadian Wheat Board available to the committee.

BARLEY—EXPECTED INITIAL PAYMENT AND ACREAGE TO BE PLANTED THIS YEAR

Mr. Jack Murta (Lisgar): My question is supplementary, Mr. Speaker, and is addressed to the minister in charge of the Canadian Wheat Board. Since there is not to be a final payment for barley for the 1971-72 year, and since this could have an effect on the barley acreage to be planted this year in western Canada, could the minister tell the House what acreage and what initial payment can be expected this year for barley?

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister of Justice): Mr. Speaker, I would hope to be able to inform the House about this fairly soon, because we are moving toward the time of issuing a regular letter to producers about initial prices, probable quotas and, therefore, also market opportunities. I should remind hon. members that the $3.8 million deficit in the barley pool results partly from the initial price of barley being increased for 1971-72, with the specific object at that time of encouraging additional barley production so that we could go into the market and establish markets which are now paying off at better prices.

Mr. Murta: Mr. Speaker, is the Wheat Board giving serious consideration at the present time to making an initial payment, in respect of barley, of $1.15 a bushel for this coming year with at least a 40-bushel quota to ensure that we will have sufficient feed grain, specifically barley, to meet export and domestic requirements?

Mr. Lang: Mr. Speaker, for this year the Wheat Board is watching the quota situation and the delivery situation. At the present time there is on hand a significant quantity of barley and of wheat. This has been noted in the House on other occasions in respect of certain elevators being congested. As the spring movement of grain develops with the opening of Thunder Bay, we will continue to see a very rapid movement of barley and wheat, as well as rapeseed, and hon. members can be assured that quotas will be opened at that point by the Wheat Board to enable the farmers to deliver barley at a far greater volume than in past years.

SUGGESTED NEGOTIATION OF PRICES THROUGH UNITED NATIONS

Mr. A. P. Gleave (Saskatoon-Biggar): Mr. Speaker, since the level of prices which has denied the farmers a final payment on barley this year stems from the negotiations that were carried out in respect of grains under the General Agreement on Tariffs and Trade, can the minister give the House some assurance that in the 1973 negotiations we will seek to have prices and grades negotiated through the United Nations rather than under GATT?

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister of Justice): Mr. Speaker, the premise of the question as it relates to barley is completely false because, of course, barley was not the subject of an international agreement and therefore was not in any way affected by any negotiations concerning its price. In the case of wheat, of course, it was not the International Grains Arrangement which led to the lowering of the price but, rather, the failure of our chief competitors to adhere to that agreement.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I hope we can return to this matter later, but for the moment the Chair will recognize the hon. member for Prince Albert.

WHEAT—REASON FOR LOW FINAL PAYMENT FOR CROP YEAR ENDED JULY 31, 1972

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prince Albert): Mr. Speaker, arising out of the questions asked in connection with the final payment, I should like to ask the Minister of Justice whether the distressingly low, even meagre, final payment made for wheat arose because sales of Canadian wheat in the year ended July 31, 1972, were made, internationally, below the cost of production?

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister of Justice): Mr. Speaker, the size of the final payment depends specifically upon the amount of money obtained by the Canadian Wheat Board from the sale of Canadian grain in markets, less the initial price paid to farmers at the time of delivery. Therefore the final payment is dependent directly upon the price obtainable by the Wheat Board. The Wheat Board, in my judgment, did an extremely good job in obtaining the best possible price in a world marketing situation where it had to remain competitive.

Mr. Diefenbaker: I shall not criticize the Canadian Wheat Board, because it was the Conservative party that set it up. I ask the minister to answer the question. Is the low final payment for wheat for the year ended July 31, 1972, the result of the policy of this government of permitting the sale of our wheat below the cost of production? That is the question. The verbose explanation of the minister did not answer it.

Mr. Lang: Mr. Speaker, if the Wheat Board had been left with only the powers given to it by the Conservative government it would have never worked at all, and that is what the colleagues of the hon. member would like to see happen again.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Diefenbaker: Mr. Speaker, the minister has given his answer, and the fact that he cannot answer indicates that what I suggested was so. Did not the minister, when speaking in Minneapolis last March 12, say that one of the great difficulties in marketing wheat at that time was that it was being sold below the cost of production?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The right hon. gentleman knows, of course, that questions cannot be asked about statements made by ministers outside the House except for questions asking the Prime Minister whether such statements represent government policy. Perhaps the question might be redrafted.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Mr. Speaker, I will try to put it in such a way that the minister will be able to answer.

An hon. Member: Make it really simple.

Mr. Diefenbaker: As of July 31 last, Canada had two contracts with the U.S.S.R. for wheat.

An hon. Member: Question!

Mr. Diefenbaker: The hon. member does not even know what wheat is; he thinks it grows on trees.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Diefenbaker: In those two contracts, under which 90,100,000 bushels were delivered between July 31 and December 31, were the prices to the U.S.S.R. below the cost of production?

Mr. Lang: I am glad that the right hon. gentleman has been able to rephrase his question so that it is in order and therefore I have an opportunity to answer it. The prices which were obtained from the U.S.S.R. in those agreements were, in the judgment of the Canadian Wheat Board, the best possible prices obtainable at that time.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Lang: Any suggestion to the contrary can only come from those who would want to destroy the Canadian Wheat Board.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Diefenbaker: With a few more ministers like this minister, the Wheat Board will be destroyed, because that is what happens when wheat is sold below the cost of production.

HOUSING

CANCELLATION BY HALLIWELL TERRACE LIMITED OF CONTRACTS WITH PERSONS FOR PURCHASE OF CONDOMINIUMS

Mr. John Gilbert (Broadview): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of State for Urban Affairs. In view of the fact that almost 200 people who purchased condominium apartments at 980 Broadview Avenue, Toronto, have had their purchase contracts cancelled by the builder, Halliwell Terrace Limited, by the use of a "loogal leaphole"—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Gilbert: —legal loophole in the act stand to lose their apartments unless they pay $1,600 to $4,000 more, would the minister look into this matter and advise the House whether the building has been financed under NHA? If so, would he require the builder to register the condominium plan forthwith with the municipality and the province so that the contracts may be binding and enforceable and people may retain their apartments without having to pay the price increase?

Hon. Ron Basford (Minister of State for Urban Affairs): Mr. Speaker, my colleague, the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources, has contacted my office on this matter. We are making inquiries to see whether CMHC is involved and, if it is, whether there is something we can do for the purchasers who seem to have been abused in this case.

Mr. Gilbert: Would the minister assure the House that any builder using NHA financing or CMHC financing would be prohibited from using this legal chicanery exemplified by Halliwell Terrace Limited?

Mr. Basford: I am not sure I should leap into that loophole, Mr. Speaker. However, we did mention in the Speech from the Throne a plan that we would be putting forward for the provision of a system of warranties for purchasers of new homes which would include, of course, condominium units. This is being worked out at present.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

REPRESENTATIONS ON BEHALF OF RONALD PATRICK LIPPERT IMPRISONED IN CUBA

Mr. Tom Cossitt (Leeds): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Secretary of State for External Affairs which is further to a question I asked in the House a week or so ago regarding Ronald Patrick Lippert, a Canadian citizen from Kitchener, Ontario, who has spent ten years of his life, as part of a 30-year sentence, in a Cuban jail. Can the minister at this time give assurances to the House that the government is willing to undertake immediate negotiations with the Cuban government for the release of Mr. Lippert?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, we were in touch with Mr. Lippert from our embassy in Cuba as recently as January 25, 1973. We are prepared to give him all possible assistance. I can add that he is in very good health.

Mr. Cossitt: Yesterday the minister announced in the House details concerning the release of Canadians imprisoned in Viet Nam. Especially in view of the age and state of health of Mr. Lippert's mother, and in view of Mr. Lippert's diabetic condition, is the minister willing to treat this Canadian, imprisoned in Cuba for ten years, with the same degree of attention and importance?

Mr. Sharp: We have treated this matter with great importance. We have made representations to the Cuban government. I am sure the hon. member is familiar with the circumstances of the case and would not want me to reveal them here.

NEGOTIATIONS WITH CUBA RESPECTING AIRCRAFT HIJACKING

Mr. J. P. Nowlan (Annapolis Valley): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question for the minister regarding a problem in Cuba. How is our combined delegation from the Department of External Affairs, the Department of Transport and the Department of Justice, I believe, together with officials of the Canadian Transport Commission, doing in Cuba in working out an air piracy and hijacking agreement, especially in view of the fact that the United States seems to have signed one already? Or does the minister think we should negotiate through Switzerland?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I am happy to inform the House that we have reached the substance of an agreement with Cuba, just as has the United States.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

AIRPORTS

STE. SCHOLASTIQUE—UNSETTLED EXPROPRIATION CASES—ALLEGED PROHIBITIVE RENTS

Mr. Jean-Marie Boisvert (Drummond): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Transport.

Does he intend to meet the officials of the Centre d'information et d'animation communautaire (CIAC) of the Ste. Scholastique area who are complaining of inequitable action taken against them by the government in expropriating their property and in this handling of various problems resulting from the expropriation?

Hon. Jean Marchand (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, if they ask me to meet them, I shall certainly do so, and gladly. It should, however, be remembered that of 3,250 expropriations fewer than one hundred cases are still pending, and I feel that the population as a whole is satisfied.

Mr. Gilbert Rondeau (Shefford): I have a supplementary, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Shefford on a supplementary.

Mr. Rondeau: Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary for the Minister of Public Works.

Does he intend to review himself the cases just mentioned by the Minister of Transport? In fact, some residents of the Ste. Scholastique area not only have not been paid, following expropriation of their property, but are being charged prohibitive rents to remain in their own homes without any agreement having been reached.

Mr. Marchand (Langelier): Mr. Speaker, I believe this question comes under the jurisdiction of my department. Rents paid are those current in the area. We do not want to compete unfairly with other landlords and there has been no abuse, and those who say there is are just indulging in demagogy.

ENERGY

OIL SUPPLY—REQUEST THAT REPORT OF NATIONAL ENERGY BOARD BE TABLED IN HOUSE

Mr. Peter C. Bawden (Calgary South): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources. In view of the report which appeared in the Calgary press on December 29 last, and again last night in the Ottawa papers, that the National Energy Board staff has prepared and completed a dismal report suggesting that Canada will not be able to supply all of its oil markets beginning next year, will the minister tell the House whether there is such a report and, if there is, would the minister table it in the House so that members will be aware of its contents?

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, as the hon. member will know, he being a member of the appropriate committee, that committee will be meeting at eight o'clock tomorrow night and I and the National Energy Board will be reporting fully on Canada's oil export policies.

Mr. Bawden: Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to see that the minister is responding in a positive way, but in view of the leaks that have taken place and the fact that the press and many others have seen this report, will the minister reconsider his decision and table it in the House so that members will have an opportunity to review the report in advance and thus have a better chance to make a contribution at the committee meeting tomorrow night, as well as recognizing the proper importance of the members of this House by doing so?

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): Mr. Speaker, it seems to me to make more sense to have the board there to explain its views in person.

Mr. Bawden: Mr. Speaker, the minister is saying that we have to have an explanation first, that we do not have the ability to read this report in advance. I would ask him again to consider tabling it, because I think members could understand the report all on their own.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member for Calgary North.

PROPOSED ALASKA OIL PIPELINE—REPRESENTATIONS TO UNITED STATES GOVERNMENT ON MACKENZIE VALLEY ROUTE

Mr. Eldon M. Woolliams (Calgary North): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources. In view of the recent decision of the United States court of appeal that effectively barred construction of the Alaska oil pipeline for an indefinite period of time, and in view of the statement the minister made not so long ago in Washington about an alternative route, will the minister advise the House whether further representations have been made to the United States with respect to the alternative route by way of a pipeline down the Mackenzie Valley?

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, the "not so long ago" to which the hon. member refers was 11 months ago. The government has no intention of renewing its representations. At that time we put before the United States government the information we had available with regard to a Mackenzie Valley oil pipeline as opposed to a gas pipeline. Since that time we have completed a great many studies with regard to environmental, ecological and other impacts of a pipeline on the Mackenzie Valley and the Mackenzie Valley oil pipeline research group has made available its studies in this regard to the American authorities. Of course, we will be interested in hearing from the United States administration in this regard, but at present we do not plan to take any fresh initiative.

Mr. Woolliams: Do I take it from the minister's answer that no further representations are being made and that the government is waiting on the United States while we might have a very serious oil spill off the western coast of Canada? Do we have to wait on the United States government? Will the Canadian government take action?

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): Mr. Speaker, I would point out to the hon. member that you cannot have an oil spill from Alaskan oil because there is no pipeline for it to come down through.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. We are running short of time. The Chair will recognize the hon. member for Edmonton East on a supplementary and then try to recognize a few of the members in the last row.

NATIONAL GAS—POSSIBLE PIPELINE ALONG EASTERN SHORE OF HUDSON BAY

Mr. William Skoreyko (Edmonton East): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources. Can the minister tell the House whether there has been a decision to build a gas pipeline along the eastern shore of Hudson Bay within the next three years, as announced by Premier Bourassa in New York recently?

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): No, Sir. A consortium has been formed consisting of Panarctic, Tenneco, Trans-Canada Pipelines and the Canadian Pacific Railway Company to do a feasibility study on the possibility of constructing a gas pipeline either on the west or on the east side of Hudson Bay. It is a feasibility study only.

SCIENCE AND TECHNOLOGY

PROPOSED CANADA-FRANCE ASTRONOMICAL OBSERVATORY—REQUEST FOR TABLING OF AGREEMENT—SHARING OF COST

Mr. Donald W. Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich): Mr. Speaker, I have been trying for several days to remedy a gross oversight in the House relating to the direction in which questions are addressed across the floor. I would like to address my question to a minister who has been shamefully neglected, for reasons which I find quite inexplicable. My question and supplementary, I hope, will be directed to the Minister of State for Science and Technology. Is the minister planning to table the agreement between the Canadian and French governments covering the joint enterprise to build and operate an astronomical observatory in Hawaii?

[Translation]

Hon. Jeanne Sauvé (Minister of State for Science and Technology): Mr. Speaker, of course I have had a look at this project in order to see whether it fits into an over-all research policy on astronomy, but as the hon. member knows, the National Research Council is under the responsibility of my esteemed colleague, the President of the Treasury Board.

[Mr. Woolliams.]

Mr. Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich): Then perhaps my supplementary should be addressed to the President of the Treasury Board. I may not get an answer, but I am going to try. Is the President of the Treasury Board able to inform the House now what general division is proposed or envisaged at the moment on the construction costs, the operation and the time available, as between Canada and France for this proposed observatory?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I take the liberty to suggest to the hon. member, with great respect, that his first question should have been placed on the order paper and the same might apply to his second question. The hon. member is asking for very detailed information which normally, I suggest to him, is sought by way of a written question. Perhaps the hon. member would like to follow that suggestion.

CONTINGENCY PLAN TO HALT INCREASES—DISCUSSION WITH PROVINCES

Mr. James A. McGrath (St. John's East): Mr. Speaker, I direct my question to the Minister of Finance. In view of the statement made by the Minister of Agriculture before the Special Committee on Food Prices yesterday, does the government propose to take any action with respect to food prices in Canada? Does the government in fact have a contingency plan for such action and has the government discussed this plan with the provinces?

Hon. John N. Turner (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, in his question the hon. member did not refer to the part of the statement of the Minister of Agriculture he has in mind. If he could clarify this, perhaps I could be more specific in my answer.

Mr. McGrath: Perhaps I can clarify it by way of a supplementary question. The Minister of Agriculture indicated yesterday that a contingency plan had not been formulated—that was the thrust of what he said—and that food prices were going up. Based on that, Mr. Speaker, my question to the minister is this: does the government have any plan to deal with food prices, and if such a contingency plan does exist has it been discussed with the provinces?

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): Mr. Speaker, as the Prime Minister said earlier, we have a contingency plan to deal with the general matter of prices. I have also said earlier that there is no selective way that food prices could be dealt with as a specific item unless under a general plan.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. We have reached the end of the question period. The hon. member might quickly ask a supplementary and then I will recognize the hon. member for Nickel Belt or the hon. member for Coast Chilcotin, as the case may be.

Mr. McGrath: In view of the provincial jurisdiction in this respect with regard to any contingency plan, is it the government's policy that its contingency plan would be based on a situation in which food prices, inflation and unemployment would affect the peace, order and good government of the country? Is that the type of contingency plan the government has?

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): The hon. member is looking for a legal opinion, and that makes it difficult for me to answer.

SHIPPING

DARLING REPORT RECOMMENDATIONS RESPECTING COASTAL TRADE—GOVERNMENT JURISDICTION

Mr. Harry Olaussen (Coast Chilcotin): Mr. Speaker, pursuing the St. Valentine's Day question further, can the Minister of Transport inform the House, as a result of his decision to consult with the maritime provinces, whether marine activities as dealt with in the Darling report come under federal jurisdiction or provincial jurisdiction?

Hon. Jean Marchand (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I never mentioned that I had to meet with the premiers in order to decide jurisdiction. But if we decide to abandon the Commonwealth agreement on coastal trade this will have an impact on rates and the cost of transportation. I want to discuss this problem with the premiers, not because we do not have jurisdiction but because they will be affected.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The Chair will recognize the hon. member for Burnaby-Richmond-Delta and then call orders of the day.

AIRPORTS

VANCOUVER INTERNATIONAL—REQUEST THAT MINISTER OF TRANSPORT MEET PEOPLE AFFECTED BY EXPROPRIATIONS

Mr. John Reynolds (Burnaby-Richmond-Delta): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Transport. In view of the fact he stated today in the House that he will visit the people of Ste. Scholastique if they ask him to do so, has he had a change of heart and will he visit the people of Sea Island? If he has not had a change of heart, why does he continue to ignore the pleas of the people of Vancouver, including the mayor, that he visit the area involved and try to solve the problem?

Hon. Jean Marchand (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I have good news for the hon. gentleman. I think he mentioned at the beginning of this session that they were short of information. The people have received all the information they need about the second runway that we want to build.

Mr. Reynolds: Mr. Speaker, the minister still has not answered my question. The people still do not have that information. I want to know why, if he will visit the people of Ste. Scholastique, he will not visit the people of Vancouver?

Mr. Marchand (Langelier): Mr. Speaker, they now have all the information. I will wait to see whether they need to be visited later.

Mr. Speaker: Orders of the day.

FISHERIES

HERRING—PLACENTIA AND ST. MARY'S BAYS—REQUEST FOR STUDY OF STOCKS AND QUOTAS

Mr. Walter C. Carter (St. John's West): On a point of order, Mr. Speaker, I have been trying to get Your Honour's eye for some time in order to ask a question of the Minister of Fisheries on a matter which is extremely urgent and important to a large number of people in my riding.

Mr. Speaker: I appreciate the point that the hon. member is making, but I must bring to the attention of the hon. member for St. John's West that we have gone beyond the time allowed for the question period. He seeks the floor on a point of order. The Chair, of course, has no objection, but he will appreciate that he is not the only one who has not been recognized. I have made a note to ensure that the hon. member will be given priority tomorrow. However, with the consent of the House perhaps he might be allowed to ask his question quickly and get a quick response from the minister.

Mr. Carter: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My question is for the Minister of Fisheries and relates to a motion under Standing Order 43 which I presented concerning the catch quotas set by the Department of Fisheries with respect to herring fishermen operating in Placentia Bay and St. Mary's Bay, Newfoundland. In view of the fact that the fishermen have made representations to the minister about the quotas, expressing certain fears as to the possibility of depletion, would the minister undertake to have a scientific investigation made to determine the size of the herring stocks in those bays? Until such time as this information is available, would the minister also impose closing lines as a conservation measure?

Hon. Jack Davis (Minister of Fisheries): Mr. Speaker, scientific investigations are already under way. We will not be imposing closing lines immediately because the local herring management committee, on which the fishermen were represented, recommended against it.

Mr. Carter: Will the minister tell the House if the quota to which the fishermen are objecting was set on the basis of scientific information or was it just a figure plucked out of the air, as it were, by the Department of Fisheries?

Mr. Davis: Mr. Speaker, I am sure the committee and the scientists supporting it were trying to be as factual as possible.

Mr. Speaker: Orders of the day.

Mr. Korchinski: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a question of privilege regarding questions that have been raised in the House and notice has been taken of them or ministers have promised to take them under advisement and bring forward answers. I raised a question on February 1 with the Minister of National Revenue, and several other questions have been taken as notice by parliamentary secretaries. Your Honour will appreciate that many members cannot get the recognition they would like in order to ask a question. Difficult as this is, it is doubly difficult to raise the same question again. I wonder if it might not be a solution that when ministers rise to reply to a question they take advantage of the opportunity to reply to other questions raised previously.

Mr. Speaker: The point raised by the hon. member for Mackenzie is of interest but objection has been taken to this procedure on the ground that it complicates matters. I would think it does. If a minister rises on a first question, gives a reply and then before a supplementary can be asked replies to a question asked on an earlier day, it does confuse things somewhat. I understand the difficulty the hon. member has raised and perhaps some day he might be inspired to find a solution to this ticklish and difficult problem. Orders of the day.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

SUPPLY

APPROPRIATION ACT No. 1, 1973

The House resumed from Tuesday, February 13, consideration in committee of Bill C-141, for granting to Her Majesty certain sums of money for the public service for the financial year ending 31st March, 1973—Mr. MacEachen (for Mr. Drury)—Mr. McCleave in the chair.

On clause 2—Schedule.

Mr. Rose: Mr. Chairman, I can always expect a good deal of assistance, whenever I speak, from those around me who are masquerading as my friends. I had just launched into my remarks last night when someone pointed out that it was ten o'clock, so I am very pleased to be able to continue today and I am extremely pleased to see the Minister of Agriculture here.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Rose: To have the minister of the department concerned present in full and living colour when one is making a speech is appreciated by all members. We are always grateful for that courtesy.

Mr. Chairman, I should like to cover three main points in my remarks this afternoon. First is the lack of tariff protection and customs protection accorded to horticultural and vegetable crops in the area of British Columbia that I represent. Second, and I am sorry that the Minister of National Revenue is not in the chamber, is what I consider to be the inequities of taxation. Third is what I regard as the persecution and harassment of certain part-time farmers in my riding.

In British Columbia, agriculture has a tremendous impact on the economy even in comparison with other provinces. When we hear the word "wheat" mentioned in this House about 25 members jump to their feet. I am not quite in the position that the right hon. member for Prince Albert suggested, to the extent that I believe wheat grows on trees, but we have had a good deal of discussion of wheat around this House of Commons over the last few years and members from what I call prairie Canada, as opposed to western Canada, have had a lot of exposure here. Nevertheless, the agricultural industry in British Columbia represents approximately $250 million a year to the economy, so it is not a minor industry.

There are great pressures on that industry and I think it is fair to say that it has been declining, as it has throughout Canada. One of the reasons for this is that we have traded off agricultural protection in order to get some other kind of advantage with the Americans and our other trading partners in world markets. In my riding there is great pressure by subdividers because of the limited amount of land available. There is an urban intrusion into our farmland.

Between 2 per cent and 4 per cent of the land in British Columbia is suitable for agriculture. Most of this land is in the Fraser Valley. The Fraser Valley happens to be close to the large megapolis known as Vancouver, and the growth of Vancouver has tended to funnel up the Fraser Valley. That expansion has been assisted by a great many transport arteries, bridges and by business and domestic expansions as well as subdivisions which have appeared in the area.

As there is so little land in British Columbia that can be devoted to any kind of farming, and as there is strong pressure to sell such land because of increased land values which have been created because of subdivisions springing up, farmland has tended to disappear. There has been an encouraging response recently by the government of British Columbia. It has imposed a temporary freeze on all farmland until certain legislation can be enacted and we can know in which direction we are going.

I do not think our greatest problem is our proximity to the city. Actually, the problem that faces all agriculturalists throughout Canada is that stemming from a lack of adequate return for agricultural enterprise.

Mr. Whelan: I agree.

Mr. Rose: The minister agrees with me. He said that last night.

Mr. Whelan: I wondered when the hon. member was coming to that part.

Mr. Rose: The minister wondered when I was coming to that part of my speech. The minister said that the government does not intend to allow a smart operator to bring in cheap products in order to make a fast buck, with the consumer not getting any benefit. I am sure the minister knows that that is occurring. He knows full well that the prices of many farm and horticultural products are depressed. Why is that, Mr. Speaker? Such prices are depressed because our farmers work under a seasonal disadvantage, as the minister knows.

Our neighbours to the south can produce their crops and charge high prices. They send the tail end of their production to Canada. They may export products such as peaches, pears, strawberries or what have you. They do not send them in at dump prices, but they do not sell them at the same price as they obtain in their own markets in the United States. Those products enter this country just as our current domestic production is about to reach the Canadian market, and they kill our market. If the minister is not aware of this, then certain people in agriculture, especially those associated with the British Columbia Federation of Agriculture, have been negligent in their duty in not bringing it to his attention.

Mr. Whelan: I can tell the hon. member that they have not been negligent.

Mr. Rose: I am pleased to hear that. This is not the first time I have raised this subject; I have raised it with the minister's predecessor. I am sure the minister is aware of the lengthy resolution passed by the British Columbia Federation of Agriculture. I will not bore the House in reading it in its entirety, but after half a dozen paragraphs beginning with "whereas," it concludes:

> Therefore be it resolved that the government of Canada immediately consult with the representatives of the Canadian horticultural industry to formulate a realistic—

It is important to note that word, because the present policy is unrealistic. I continue to read the resolution:

> —means of automatic application of surtax protection based on a predetermined import valuation as may be applicable to various Canadian tariff zones.

The minister had the intestinal fortitude to stand up in this House and say that he will not allow cheap exports. That, I think, was a step in the right direction. Let me allude to a small example of what may happen in the field of agriculture. No matter whether you are talking about strawberries, pears, peaches or what have you, these crops in the United States fetch a fair price. However, those crops are grown in advance of our own. An offer for a certain amount of the product is made to certain brokers and that offer has the immediate effect of destroying or undercutting the price of Canadian products.

It is time we decided whether we want a viable agricultural and horticultural industry in Canada. Under present procedures one has to prove injury. By the time one has been able to prove injury, that injury has been done and is not prevented. This has happened over and over again.

Mr. Horner (Crowfoot): The task force suggested that the fruit and vegetable industry of Canada should be phased out.

Mr. Rose: I think I said earlier to the hon. member for Crowfoot that I feel our agricultural industry forms part of a trade-off. We trade off agricultural benefits in order to obtain for other parts of our economy advantages in the field of exports, or in certain imports. If the minister is determined to make changes he will have his work cut out, because he will run up against fixed positions which have been taken not in the past year but for many years. I want the minister to know that I—perhaps I cannot speak for the whole of my party—will support him if he will move in that direction. Proof of injury procedures come too late.

Mr. Horner (Crowfoot): The minister said in committee the other day that he does not believe in tariffs.

Mr. Rose: He may not believe in tariffs, but unless we are able to provide some kind of protection for our industry we might as well fold it up. Land has become a commodity for sale; farmers are selling it because they cannot make a decent income from it. As a result there is great temptation to subdivide. Who benefits, Mr. Chairman, except a few real estate developers? You must remember that except for 4 per cent of the land in B.C., most of the province consists of rock and Christmas trees. Builders can build on all sorts of ground other than farmland, but that is where they like to build first and the developers grab the flat land first. Just look at the airport development; there is another land grab for you! This time the Department of Transport has grabbed all of Sea Island.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Rose: Once upon a time, Mr. Chairman, I can recall that on the lower mainland of British Columbia there were up to 20 domestic processors in the Okanagan area. They are now all gone, mostly bought out by American firms. Those firms bought the rights to the Canadian label. Actually, one processor who is left in my riding has told me that he needs protection because he cannot compete against imported canned products. He cannot pay Canadian prices for his products and meet competition. The hon. member for Okanagan Boundary may be interested to learn that a processor in my riding can buy peaches from the United States at 50 per cent of the price he would have to pay British Columbia fruit growers. The tail end of the United States production is dumped in this country. He can buy peaches for his canning and processing needs, as I say, for 50 per cent less than he has to pay the B.C. fruit growers.

An hon. Member: That's enough to spoil one's appetite.

Mr. Rose: That might spoil the hon. member's dinner, but it is true. Perhaps he should get up on a point of order, or something. Let him rise on any point; I don't care what it is.

I now wish to move to another topic, Mr. Chairman. Perhaps this is not an agricultural matter although it has implications for agriculture. I am referring to the attitude of the taxation branch to supply and management or production quotas. Hon. members know as well as I do that such boards are going to become more numerous, despite the protestations of the hon. member for Crowfoot. There will be more and more of them because farmers have the right to organize just as any other group of citizens has the right to organize if they so decide by a majority.

Mr. Horner (Crowfoot): They have the right to produce.

Mr. Rose: They ought to move into this kind of market-sharing arrangement and establish co-operatives. "Co-operative" really has a nice sound, much nicer than "dog-eat-dog competition." I know that certain agricultural undertakings can survive under competition provided, for instance, there is tariff protection against cheap Australian beef. If our people can buy a piece of land in the east at ten cents an acre and obtain freight rate assistance, they can survive as free enterprisers. The attitude is: Just leave us alone. Just help us, but do not do anything else to us. I think the Hoss Cartwrights will disappear if they are prepared to make their particular product the luxury food that nobody can really afford.

• (1600)

I received representations from several farm organizations, or organizations relating to farming matters, and farmers with regard to taxes on market-sharing quota sales. I will give an example of how this operates. If a farmer who has an egg quota in my constituency wishes to get into the business, and this is where I agree with the hon. member for Crowfoot—

Mr. Horner (Crowfoot): He needs a rich father, aunt or uncle.

Mr. Rose: What is so odd about that? He could steal the land from the Blackfeet for nothing.

Mr. Horner (Crowfoot): "Blackfoot."

Mr. Rose: I am speaking of them collectively.

Mr. Horner (Crowfoot): It is "Blackfoot" collectively.

Mr. Rose: If he wishes to get into the egg business, he would have to purchase 20 cases a week. Ninety-two hens equals a case of eggs. The hens he buys from the man who wants to get out of the business cost 10 cents each, or 20 times 92 times 10 which is $18.40. If he wishes to get into the business, the cost to him is $6,000. He goes to the tax department and says that this is really a capital expense. The tax department says no, it is not, because market-sharing quotas have no value. He is told that he purchased the business for $6,000 but the hens he purchased are worth $18.40. Nobody could eat them; he probably buried the hens after he bought them. He gets this tremendous right. What he does is purchase a right to sell. I understand the misgivings of the hon. member for Crowfoot. He purchases a right.

The Chairman: Order, please. I regret to interrupt the hon. member and the members with whom he is chatting, but the time allotted to them has expired.

[Translation]

Mr. Beaudoin: Mr. Chairman, I am happy to take part in this debate. First of all, I wish to congratulate the new Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Whelan) for being so sincere and above all so convincing when he speaks to the producers.

One can tell he himself is a former producer: he knows quite a lot about production costs; he knows that the farmers must also make profits, if profits can be made in agriculture.

[Mr. Horner (Crowfoot).]

I am also happy to speak on behalf of the farmers of eastern Canada on the important question of the credits the Department of Agriculture earmarks for financing federal assistance to the Canadian Livestock Feed Board, and to Canadian agricultural production and market.

At the start of my remarks, I should like to point out that it has become important and interesting for us, members of the opposition, to speak in this House since the start of this session. Formerly, when we were led by a majority government, no matter how much we shouted ourselves out of breath telling parliament what the people liked or did not like, we were not listened to. The Canadian people showed the government we were right. Not only does the government listen to us, but it listens closely to what we have to suggest. Its political life is at stake, and if it does not want to be inflicted parliamentary death sentence, I advise it to listen carefully to our suggestions and criticism. Today, I shall limit myself to agricultural production costs and profits.

Until now, I voted for or against the government, depending on the legislation proposed to us. I am proud that I am absolutely free to decide how I will vote, and not always bound to vote against the government as the progressive conservative party seems to be, nor always for it as the NDP has been since the start of the session.

The estimates that we are asked to approve are not sufficient in my opinion as far as agriculture is concerned. This is obviously not enough. In my area of the Eastern Townships and in my constituency particularly, farmers received a small cheque of $400 lately, in respect of the bad crops of last year. How is it possible, Mr. Chairman, for a farmer to recover the loss of more than 50 per cent of his hay production with $400 per year?

Almost every day, we hear statistics to show that farmers' incomes have increased at an astounding rate for the past year. Some people even talk of a 40 per cent increase, and I refer to Mr. Toupin or his acolytes in the province of Quebec.

It is very easy, Mr. Chairman, to play politics on the farmers' backs. However, the facts are not what Mr. Toupin believes they are, as reported this week in La Terre de chez-nous.

If such were the case, the government would not have accepted in the first place to give farmers $400 to compensate for the loss of crops due to bad weather. Farmers would not have to hold weekly auctions the likes of which have never been seen. Moreover, youth would be interested in becoming farmers, which is certainly not the case now.

Mr. Chairman, any one could tell me that everything is all right, that milk price is at its best, that the world demand for feed grains is the strongest ever recorded, but those are only words. The farmer who has to buy machinery or dairy cows to increase his herd knows how difficult it is to finance those investments while the labourer, who has only his lunch box to finance, earns $4, $5 or $6 an hour. Furthermore, in order to buy, control and finance his operation, the farmer must borrow money at a rate between eight and nine per cent. In the case of farm machinery, they pay up to 13 per cent interest to financial sharks, whoever they may be. The working man does not pay taxes on capital gains but the farmer does. Nowadays, when farmers are making a few dollars they have to pay capital gains taxes when they retire.

Mr. Chairman, those who in the past few days spoke on appropriations for the Department of Agriculture, especially on feed grains, were mostly hon. members from western Canada. Every single one said that there was not enough or too much production in the past and that exports had not been sufficient.

Mr. Chairman, I think it is very important to decide whether Canada is producing enough or not and whether western farmers are being encouraged to produce or not. However, it is more important to find out whether prices for grain and processed grain purchased by Quebec farmers will continue to spiral up as they do now so that eastern producers will not be able to make profits this year, contrarily to what is said in La Terre de Chez-Nous.

If in the course of the 1970-71 crop year western producers were paid not to produce, it certainly is not the fault of the eastern farmers. The federal government should provide a great deal more help for transportation of feed grain if it wants the farmer to be able to engage in a rewarding occupation.

In the January 1973 issue of Le Coopérateur agricole, I was reading about a comparative study on the prices of grain and certain ingredients which make up feeds. They study indicated that almost all classes of grain had registered raises in price per ton of the order of at least 35 percent.

Soy-bean cake, which was selling for $104 a ton in December 1971, is at $210 a ton right now, for a considerable jump in price in a 12-month period. Linseed cake, for which a price of $102 a ton was quoted in December 1971, was up to $130 a ton in December 1972. Corn sold for $50 a ton in 1971; it was up to $70 a ton in December 1972.

In eastern Canada, gluten meal with 28 per cent protein content sold for $72 a ton in December 1971 and $86 a ton in December 1972. Wheat was $60 a ton in December 1971 and $80 a ton in December 1972. Bran was priced at $56 a ton in 1971 and $90 a ton in 1972. "Gru" sold for $58 a ton in 1971 and $92 a ton in 1972. The price of barley was $50 a ton in 1971 and $73 a ton in 1972. Oat sold for $50 a ton in 1971 and $83 a ton in December 1972. Draff was priced at $68 a ton in 1971 and $86 in December 1972.

Mr. Chairman, those are the prices in eastern Canada, though they could vary between areas according to local market conditions and especially to transportation cost.

Besides UPA economist François Dagenais recently called my attention to the fact that hog raisers in the province of Quebec have recently suffered losses due to the increase in feed price. Because of this, 2,054,507 hogs were slaughtered in Quebec in 1971 while, in 1972, the number was 2,029,002. Thus, the difference in production cost in eastern Canada compared with the west is $4.20 a unit. Hog producers in Quebec have suffered fantastic losses when one compares their income with that of the producers in the west.

The price paid for feed grains and proteins is the main item in the cost of production for hogs, poultry and cattle.

Feed grain consumption in Quebec has spiralled these last few years, especially over the last two years. As a matter of fact, in 1970, consumption of feed grains was about 561,875 tons of meal mixtures, and in 1971, of 623,875 tons; and in 1972, the Union des producteurs agricoles estimates that it will reach 783,445 tons. As we know very well, the cost of meal mixtures has increased by 30, 40 or 50 per cent in some cases, especially as concerns proteins, and yet I am told that the farmers have an easy life, and lots of money, and so on, because milk sells quite well!

I suggest that the milk producers will not earn enough this year, since they have to pay too much for the services they need and for feed grains.

Besides, as concerns the 1973 dairy policy established on January 18 last, the Canadian Dairy Producers' Federation has provided us with the following information, and I quote:

According to the official figures available, we know that:

(1) The index of farm production costs for the third quarter of 1972 exceeds by 4 per cent that for the same quarter in 1971. However, let us note that in the meantime the cost for new buildings increased by 11.2 per cent and the cost of farm labour, by 7 per cent.

Moreover, that index still does not show the increases in feed grain costs registered mainly during the third quarter of 1972.

(2) The wholesale price for feed grains, as reported in the December 1972 issue of Grain Facts, published by the Canadian Livestock Feed Board, has jumped since last year—

(3) Farm wages

As we indicated before, the cost of farm labour apparently increased by 7 per cent in Canada. Again, these are the last reports available.

The cost of manpower and feed grains, as we all know, accounts for a considerable share in the overall expenses of dairy production. In 1973, the notable increase in power rates and local taxes will only aggravate the situation.

But, once again, it is still the cost of grains and services which boosts the production cost of our eastern farmers.

As long as the government fails to take appropriate measures to stabilize the cost of feed grains at a reasonable level as usual Quebec farmers will depend on the federal policies for eastern Canada.

Recently, the Quebec Minister of Agriculture paid for two large pages of a newspaper to boast that eastern farmers "were making money"; but I say that he was once more politicking on the farmers' back.

In concluding, on behalf of the farmers of the Richmond constituency and eastern Canada, I ask the government and the hon. minister to give careful consideration to the requests from UPA on the question of feed grains so that our Quebec farmers be granted justice as to their production cost and that, some day, we can see the establishment of long term programs in the field of production cost and the sales cost of farm products.

In conclusion I would say how surprised I have been recently to hear the hon. member for Qu'Appelle-Moose Mountain (Mr. Hamilton), former Minister of Agriculture, stating that in 1960-61, the farmers were performing miracles.

I think that the Canadian voters will remember at the time of the next election as they have remembered since then, that in eastern Canada, in 1960-61, when the hon. member was minister, farmers were selling $4.05 per cwt.

their 3.5 test milk when the cost of production was $4.35 and even $4.65. I think that our farmers cannot go back, nor are they considering going back in the next election to those long years of darkness the hon. member for Qu'Appelle-Moose Mountain is trying to praise. I think that those years are over. The minister is looking at me and I think he approves of what I have just said. Those years are over and thank God we now have a minister who I think is clever and looks after his business.

Mr. Horner (Crowfoot): Mr. Chairman, before the debate on schedule A, production and marketing program, concludes I thought I might say a few words about it. The new Minister of Agriculture has not really given us his views on what in western Canada is commonly known as the Liberal libel on agriculture, the task force report on agriculture. The former minister of agriculture stated during the last election campaign that the one big error he made was he had not publicly declared that he did not support the task force report on agriculture. I am wondering just what the present minister thinks about it. Certainly we are wondering about it since it contains many myths and untruths in regard to the goals and objects of Canadian agriculture.

The minister in charge of the Canadian Wheat Board, the hon. member for Saskatoon-Humboldt, has been making a number of remarks in the House of late which suggest that some members of the Conservative party are not in favour of the Canadian Wheat Board. This reminds me of a statement made by the hon. member from Saskatchewan to the effect that I was opposed to the Canadian Wheat Board. I should like to assure the minister, through you, Mr. Chairman, that I am in no way opposed to the Canadian Wheat Board. I believe that board's powers should be strengthened and I would develop policies to do just that if I had the opportunity.

I am not in favour of the manner in which the minister is handling the Canadian grain situation. In western Canada during the last campaign there were attempts made by the Liberal party to suggest that the minister in charge of the Canadian Wheat Board is the greatest Canadian salesman of wheat Canada has ever had.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Horner (Crowfoot): I hear some hon. members saying "Hear, hear". They should look at the annual report for 1970-71 and the percentage of the wheat trade Canada has had in the last number of years. We never dropped below 20 per cent in the whole history of the Wheat Board; but when that minister took charge of the Canadian Wheat Board we dropped to 17.4 per cent of the world's wheat trade. The next year it was 18.5 per cent, the next year 18.5 per cent, and in 1970-71 he got it up to 21 per cent. It will be higher this year because of the drought in Russia and China.

The previous speaker talked about the price of wheat back in 1961. He was quite right. In 1961, as indicated at page 18 of the annual report, the total realized price was $1.91 per bushel. When the present minister took over it went down to $1.81 and it has dropped ever since. The next year it was down to $1.70, the next year to $1.68, the next year to $1.67 and the announced price today is $1.59. One can see the steady slide downward. Our percentage of world wheat trade has gone down and our price has gone down, yet the Liberal party believes it has the greatest wheat salesman Canada has ever had. Certainly he has lost us money every year he has been in charge.

We hear about the way barley is selling today. It certainly is selling well and we wish we had more to sell. About two years ago the minister in charge of the Wheat Board sold barley on the international market for as low as 47 cents a bushel. The price at Vancouver today is $1.69 a bushel. We wish we had a little more, but there is no surplus of barley. I met the vice-president of the Saskatchewan wheat pool at the Federation of Agriculture conference and he asked me if I thought Alberta would have enough barley to see us through until the next crop year. I said I thought we had. Then he asked me if I wanted to make a little bet, suggesting that we would not have enough. That indicates how much barley there is available.

The minister in charge of the Canadian Wheat Board has had the board conducting a survey. I spoke about this earlier. He does not want to release the results of that survey because it will show that the farmers' barley bins are almost empty. This minister has cost the Canadian wheat farmer, as I said in another speech, in the neighbourhood of $600 million because of his foolish Lift program.

To my way of thinking, this minister has been Canada's worst minister in charge of the Canadian Wheat Board. His policies have been detrimental to the farmers of Saskatchewan in particular and I urge those farmers at the next election, whether it be in June or in the fall, to take steps to remove him. They can remove him from that portfolio, and they should because he does not understand the grain picture or the handling of grain. I would urge the Prime Minister to take the Canadian Wheat Board out of the minister's jurisdiction. Maybe he knows something about the law, but the Wheat Board should be given to someone with more understanding of the grain trade than the minister has. This minister thinks it does not really matter at what price he gives our product away as long as he moves it. The farmers are concerned about their product and the price at which it is sold. They are concerned about how it is handled.

During the last election campaign the minister came out to Calgary and said that if his party was re-elected the government would spend a considerable sum to really modernize the port of Vancouver. This port is very important to the marketing of grain in that it handles over 50 per cent of our export sales. What has been done to overhaul the port of Vancouver? Figures tabled in this House on March 5, 1972, indicate that in 1968 the federal government spent $17 million on the port of Vancouver, but expenditures dropped to about $6 million over the following four years. This indicates another sliding graph. The government should spend a little more on the port of Vancouver to help in the marketing of one of our major exports, grain from western Canada.

We now have a price of $1.59 per bushel for wheat. The minister has entered into long-term contracts with Russia and China. The right hon. member for Prince Albert suggested during the question period today that some 100,000 bushels are still to be delivered to Russia at the lower price. There is still a great amount of wheat to be delivered to China at the low price of the 1970-71 contract. This minister has done western Canada no good at all.

We have had reference to the transportation study which the minister has had conducted by the grains group. An interesting thing about the study which no one has really pointed out is that in respect of the movement of grain it has been carried out on railway rates completely ignoring Crowsnest pass rates. I wonder how many farmers in Saskatchewan really think that the minister they elected to take charge of their product is actively interested in doing away with the Crowsnest pass rates. Are they aware of that fact? I think we will have to make them aware of it before the next election.

I think the minister should be brought to task for harbouring that kind of thought. To me the Crowsnest pass rates structure is the Magna Carta of the west. The minister is attempting to subsidize the railways by giving them $48 million worth of boxcars. Without having any commitment from them in this regard, he hopes they will repay that amount some day. The minister wants to do away with nearly 5,000 miles of track on the Prairies, about 3,600 miles of which are in the province of Saskatchewan. I wonder whether the people in those areas of Saskatchewan really feel they should return to Ottawa a man who wants to gather up 3,600 miles of track in their province.

The same minister said in a speech to the Alberta wheat pool that he might subsidize the movement of grain because of the cost of long hauls to the farmer.

An hon. Member: Temporarily.

Mr. Horner (Crowfoot): Yes, temporarily. The grains group study did not make that suggestion. It suggested that the farmers will have to build more storage and haul their grain over longer distances, but they will then have the 80 inland terminals to facilitate the railways. This Liberal government has been obsessed with the idea of increasing railway revenues since it passed the National Transportation Act in 1967. They are obsessed with that idea, no matter who pays. Apparently the minister in charge of the Canadian Wheat Board will have the farmers paying the cost of this.

The minister has lowered the price of wheat from $1.81 a bushel, when he took over, to $1.59 a bushel. He now wants the farmers to pay these additional costs and will see that they do so by removing the Crowsnest pass rates, by making the farmer store more grain on his farm and haul it farther to the elevator at a lower price. It seems to me we must do our best to remove him if he is to remain in charge of the Canadian Wheat Board. We must do our best in Saskatchewan to see that he does not come back, so that we might have a more orderly marketing system under which the farmers will pay less, rather than more, and under which the railways will provide more services rather than fewer at a higher cost.

We have seen the final payment figures for barley and we know that there is no surplus of barley. There is to be no pool in respect of barley. One might expect, with wheat selling today at $3 a bushel in Vancouver, that the final payment on wheat for this crop year would be 60 cents a bushel. Because of the way in which forward sales have been made at the low price, the farmers will be lucky if they receive another 30 cents a bushel.

It seems to me that the minister in charge of the Canadian Wheat Board has done a disservice to the wheat farmer during the past four years. We might consider his thinking in respect of doing away with the Crowsnest pass rates and 600 miles of track in the province of Saskatchewan, or a total of 5,000 miles of track in the three prairie provinces. There are about 19,000 miles of track in the province of Saskatchewan; therefore he will be doing away with nearly one-third of the total trackage. The closing of elevators will probably result from this. There are now about 1,800 delivery points. The minister wants to cut that figure to 80. I believe there are 105 delivery points in the constituency of Crowfoot alone. On the basis of these figures, this would probably mean that my constituency would be reduced to three, four or five delivery points. Certainly this is not a satisfactory situation in the minds of the constituents I represent.

We are concerned about these things. We believe in the Canadian Wheat Board which, as was mentioned by the right hon. gentleman from Prince Albert, was set up by the Conservative government. We believe in orderly farming for the benefit of the farmer, not for the benefit of the railways. We believe the CPR has been given a gracious grant by the government over the years and that it has provided a good service in return. However, we do not believe the farmers should provide all the money in order to keep the railway going. This also applies to the CNR.

I think we should have a more orderly marketing system and along with it we must have encouragement of production. The Minister of Agriculture, when appearing before the committee on food price trends, said that if the price of food increased further he did not believe in the implementation of a food price freeze. He suggested that perhaps an embargo would be the easiest way to handle the situation. He would license anyone who wanted to export any commodity. I ask hon. members what kind of thinking that is with regard to the production of agricultural goods in Canada.

During the war years we had an embargo on the export of cattle to the United States. This was maintained until 1948. The price in the United States at that time was about 30 cents a pound, while the price on the Prairies was about 16 cents a pound. Finally the Liberal government of the day lifted the embargo and the price of cattle shot up to 30 cents a pound and then dropped again to 16 cents a pound. This shows the effect an embargo would have. It would result in less production in Canada. Our prices would be depressed, while everything we had to buy would be priced on the international market according to cost.

This attitude of the Minister of Agriculture leads me to believe this is part of the contingency plan we hear about in respect of the control of food prices. What will the farmers in western Canada think about a Minister of Agriculture who harbours the belief that somewhere along the line there should be a licensing system in respect of anyone who wants to export something? This would have the effect of decreasing production rather than increasing it. Instead of having an increased movement of cattle we would have less, and food prices would not be helped in the long run by such a policy.

I see the Minister of Agriculture shaking his head in disagreement with what I am saying. Perhaps he can encourage farmers to produce hogs and cattle for less money. He said it would take four years to bring about an increase of any size in the production of cattle. He is correct. I think we could do it in three years in the west, but perhaps in eastern Canada it would take longer. I really do not know. In any event, it is nice to get a glimpse of the future in the thinking of the Minister of Agriculture. It is also nice to get a glimpse into the future in the thinking of the minister in charge of the Canadian Wheat Board, who wants to do away with the Crowsnest pass rates and rail trackage on the Prairies. It is my belief that this would merely bring about a chaotic situation. I urge voters across Canada to take note of this fact in the event that the Prime Minister calls a June election, because this kind of thinking should not be rewarded by votes.

Mr. Rose: Mr. Chairman, this is another chapter in the continuing saga of my speech which started on Friday night and which I hope to be able to complete in this session. When I was so rudely interrupted by the fact that my time had run out, I was attempting to point out the seriousness of the taxation clauses as they affect supply-management or marketing quotas. I had used an illustration involving a person who would pay up to $6,000 in order to get into the position of having a quota. If this person turned around and sold the quota to another purchaser at a higher price, or even at the same price, he would be charged, under the current taxation laws of Canada, with a gain of 50 per cent. If the gain is from $6,000 to $7,000, it is a gain of $1,000. I believe this is an iniquitous tax arrangement. I do not think a great deal would be involved in amending this provision. I believe it would be very easy to do it if the government were interested at all in encouraging agricultural production in this country.

I hope the minister recognizes that this is a problem with regard to supply-management quotas, and so on. There are now national agencies in respect of the production of broilers and eggs. There is to be an agency in respect of turkeys, and perhaps hogs, which might leave out Alberta although certainly the rest of the country would be involved. I bring this to the attention of the minister because it is a matter of concern to many people in my riding. As I understand it, it is my duty to speak on behalf of my people.

Another problem involves the type of depreciation allowed on farm equipment. Last May we heard the minister speak of fast write-offs with regard to manufacturing and processing in an attempt to produce jobs in the manufacturing and processing industries. However, the kind of change that is anticipated by the new tax arrangement concerning the write-offs for equipment in effect means that there will be a straight line depreciation of, say, 15 per cent while others have a declining line write-off. If such a write-off is to be helpful in manufacturing and processing, about which I have some doubt, and certainly if it is to be stimulating in that sector of the economy, a faster write-off would be a stimulus or at least of assistance to farm production. This would result because of the high capital cost of land in most farming operations today. I hope the minister has taken note of this point because I believe it is very important. It is something which probably affects everyone who is now involved in a mechanized farming business. I think farmers are quite able to understand fast write-offs. Certainly if they are good for one sector, they are equally good for another.

I should like to deal with another tax matter that I said earlier was a persecution, a harassment of part-time farmers, which occurs in my riding and perhaps in other parts of Canada. When you mention this situation you think of part-time farmers and you have visions of doctors, lawyers or other affluent people who use this technique as a tax haven. There is no doubt that some of this occurs, but the vast majority of the people engaged in agriculture in a small way, at least in the riding I represent and the ridings near me, are not that type of person at all. They are people with a small acreage of land which is in effect a green belt. We would like to preserve that land as a green belt. These people are occupied with farming on a part-time basis mainly because they cannot make a satisfactory living for their families in agriculture.

However, it must be noted that these people provide a very important service; they make a real contribution to the supply of food. As some of you may know—certainly people from the prairie provinces will know it—so far as the red meat industry is concerned in the lower Fraser Valley, it is pretty well gone for the most part. Most cattle breeding is finished near Edmonton where they have the advantage of having non-board grain, the price of which is about half as much as even freight assisted feed grain in the lower Fraser Valley.

We in North America have now roughly a 20 per cent beef shortage. The cattlemen may correct me if my percentage is wrong. Nevertheless, the small, part-time farming operation where the wife and kids do the work while the husband works in the mill in the daytime, or has some other kind of occupation, and then comes home and does the chores at night, provides a real contribution to our food supply because it avoids the monopoly control of the meat industry of a relatively few big ranches or big companies.

We have a situation where the small or part-time farmer is being harassed by the taxation department and is frequently being told that he can no longer file for tax exemption because in his operation there is, to use the language of the tax people, "no expectation of profit". He is the kind of person who provides work for the packing industry and the slaughterhouse and he provides a good deal of the local meat. He is the one who holds the price down. We find that once he is gone, which is the case in England, the price of the commodity that he produces goes up.

What is happening to these people who are visited by tax auditors? Frequently the tax auditors are inexperienced people who do not know much about farming. Some people say they do not know much about accounting either. They call at these farms and have a little chat with these people, following which, and without giving them the usual RCMP warning that everything said will be held against you, they make out a report and that is the end of it. Sometimes the tax auditors even tell the farmer, "You cannot even file for a farm exemption any longer". The man has a perfect right to file for tax exemption if he likes. By and large these people are not interested in being cheaters or tax evaders. They are people who are working very hard to produce in what they consider to be a fine environment for their family, the rural atmosphere, and they want to do what is right. Yet they are told that they can no longer file for a tax exemption.

About a year ago I went to the predecessor of the present minister to speak about this problem and I got some relief for these people. At least they stopped reassessing them two or three years back and limited the reassessment to one year. However, this is still going on. Tax auditors are continuing to plague and harass the people. I do not think the farmers save enough to even pay their own salaries. What the auditors do, in addition—I think this is most pernicious—is push these people off the land. What choice have you if you receive no tax recognition for your enterprise? What choice have you if you are a small or middle-income person? Your choice is either to subdivide—which I do not think we want—or sell to some more affluent person. This has to stop. The Minister of National Revenue is, I think, interested and willing to listen. I will be meeting him on this problem shortly.

I will not take up any more of the time of the committee because I know this debate is supposed to finish this afternoon. I would just like to say that there are three major concerns with which I have attempted to deal in three separate sessions of this debate. The first is the lack of protection afforded with regard to foreign imports. The second is the iniquity of the taxation of production quotas, and the third is the persecution and harassment of part-time farmers. I do not think there is much to gain from pushing people into cities and making formerly independent, self-reliant people into what might be called urban serfs.

These people are marginal farmers in terms of their income. They are mostly three generations away from their forefathers who came to this country looking for land of their own and for independence of their own because they were either part of the peasantry of Europe or were the urban poor of the cities and of large industrial slums. They came here looking for a better life, but within three generations they become, again, serfs in the high-rises. That is what is happening all over the country.

If it is necessary, let us take steps through taxation, through agricultural policies and through urban policies to make rural life not only rewarding but opportunity creating so we will not have this constant rush to the cities. If necessary, let us even subsidize people to stay away from the cities, because we will save money in the long run. The minute we crowd people into cities our police costs go up, our school costs go up, costs for services and housing go up, and the incidence of stress and mental illness goes up.

Before resuming my seat I should like to commend and congratulate the Minister of Agriculture on his new portfolio. All of us are looking for great things from him. He has a tremendous opportunity to reverse the trend which has existed in the Liberal government, of not really caring very much about this problem. I wish him well.

Mr. Lambert (Bellechasse): Mr. Chairman, some of my colleagues to my left seem discouraged when a member of this House does his duty, but that does not impress me at all. I shall continue to do my work to the best of my knowledge and with the sense of responsibility instilled in me during my youth.

Mr. Speaker, I spoke last night on a subject of great relevancy nowadays—

Mr. Trudel: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. The hon. member for Montreal-Bourassa rises on a point of order.

Mr. Trudel: Mr. Speaker, I think our colleague misread our minds. We are anxious to hear what he is about to tell us and not what he has said about his colleagues.

Mr. Lambert (Bellechasse): I thank the hon. member for the correction and I am sure the second part of his remarks is true.

Mr. Chairman, I was saying last night during the debate on this important matter of estimates for the Department of Agriculture, that strange things were happening. I think it is my duty to draw the attention of the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Whelan) to these facts, so that he might take the necessary steps so that in future there will be no need to give grants to farm producers as is being done for those who suffered losses in 1971; the money must reach directly those for whom it is intended.

Mr. Chairman, my colleague from Richmond (Mr. Beaudoin) was speaking a moment ago about an increase of 44 per cent in the net income of farmers in 1972, as compared to 1971. I suggest that the public servants, in Quebec, are very good playing with figures. They are able to put figures one after the other and make them say anything they want; but if they troubled themselves to consider the matter more closely, the findings of their study would be different. They would be in a position to better inform the people.

When considering the matter in depth, one finds that in 1971, many producers lost substantial amounts of money; their operations showed a deficit but thanks to representations which were made to draw the attention of governmental authorities, programs were developed to make up for part of that loss. And as subsidies were paid in 1972, it is normal that the income of farmers in 1972 should be higher than in 1971. But this does not mean that the 1972 production brought in a higher income. These figures are added to those of the 1971 production.

When one really wants to study these facts in depth, one must substract the losses suffered in 1971 from the total income of 1972 and then, one shall know the truth. I think the farmers of the province of Quebec can see for themselves whether those figures are true.

But there is more to it, Mr. Chairman. What happened is that very valid programs were implemented then poisonned in several cases by blood suckers who saw an occasion to further exploit the farmers.

I will give you an example: in 1972, the federal government raised the grant for hog production to $5, up to 200 hogs, and the provincial government drafted a policy in that direction. Unfortunately, it happened that some "integrators" took advantage of that program by using those who raised hogs for their own use. They obtained their signature against a fictitious acknowledgment of debt. When the cheques were delivered, the "integrators" gave them a receipt. Many thousands of dollars allotted to the farmers thus went into the pockets of those people. That did not increase the real income of true farm producers. In fact, some jokers have suggested that perhaps that money was used for the October 30 elections; I do not know how it was used but certainly not for the right end anyway. As I said, these practices did not increase the income of true producers.

I think it is about time the Canadian government manages agriculture on a real national basis by taking all means available so that when a policy is developed to help a certain category of producers, the money gets where it should if we want to obtain results, if we want those who are supposed to benefit from those programs to be really satisfied.

Mr. Chairman, I think many things happen without the hon. minister knowing about it; but these misuses of funds do nothing for the government or the producers for whom we carry votes.

Mr. Chairman, I would like the important question of grain to be examined very carefully. Earlier on, a member was stressing the fact that the minister in charge of the Canadian Wheat Board might not have the competence to manage this agency efficiently. I think it might be better if the board were under the responsiblity of the Minister of Agriculture (M. Whelan) because he certainly has closer relations with the producers and their associations than does his colleague. These associations and the brief would get a better hearing if the board came under his responsibility. I see the minister is smiling; maybe he thinks he has enough work as it is. However, with his stamina, he would be able to manage efficiently and the whole population, including farmers, would be very happy.

Those are, Mr. Chairman, the few remarks I wanted to make while we are examining these votes so that we could together find a better use and also allow farmers to keep on hoping.

I have received today, as all other members probably have, a brief rrom the Canadian Federation of Milk Producers. During the question period, I intended to put a question on that matter to the hon. Minister of Agriculture. But since probably more important matters drew the attention of the Chair, I had to postpone until now my remarks on that matter.

I would like to ask the hon. Minister of Agriculture to give special attention to that very serious brief which demonstrates that production costs in the dairy industry have increased substantially in 1972, particularly in the last quarter and that they continue to increase.

As it is stated in this brief, the Canadian Federation of milk producers is asking for a 60 cents increase per hundredweight in order to allow dairy farmers to make profits proportionate to their investments and their needs and to attain gradually the living standards enjoyed by other classes of society. Production costs are clearly established; I believe that the figures stated are valid and that we should take them into consideration.

The brief suggests two ways in which producers could make higher profits; it stated also that the government should take direct action to increase the subsidies granted to producers through the Agricultural Stabilization Board. As far as I am concerned, I would support such a measure, because there is a committee studying the trends in food prices, and I believe that if we should pass a different type of legislation from the one we had in the past, we would help both consumers and producers without increasing food prices.

This policy was applied during the war when the government had enacted a measure for the payment of a discount on dairy products. Thus the consumers were not paying any more, but the producer got a discount directly through the federal government. This is very much like the compensated discount which was so well thought out by Major Douglas in his great financial philosophy for a better economy, for a less rigid economy, that would allow the population to benefit instead of being punished by progress.

We have oodles of all kinds of products and we can produce even more. However, in the dairy industry, brakes were put on, as everybody recalls, to adjust production to consumer needs. I say however that they acted on the capacity of consumption. In fact, if consumption is to be increased, a compensated discount should be allowed to the producers, a discount which would not come from the consumers' pockets through taxation but which would be available through the Bank of Canada by means of new credits available to the Agricultural Stabilization Board and based on real production instead of fictional issues.

Mr. Chairman, I urge the Minister of Agriculture to take into consideration the few suggestions I just made, including the change of jurisdiction regarding the Canadian Wheat Board and the possibility of increasing the price of industrial milk, because the producers are greatly in need of it.

I do not want to take more of the time of the House as I know other members have also comments to make on this matter.

Mr. La Salle: Mr. Chairman, I am always glad to express my views.

I should like to expound some claims of our farmers in the discussion of these estimates and I fully agree with many other hon. members who have already suggested to the minister some changes that are absolutely necessary in view of the importance of agriculture in the Canadian economy.

Someone yesterday expressed some regret that the House has spent so much time for so many years before dealing with the feed grain problem.

I think I should also deal with this as with other points that have been mentioned during the discussion on these estimates.

We know perfectly well that my constituency, like many others, includes a large number of producers who have encountered difficulties because of this policy on feed grains for quite a long time. This is very disturbing for them, especially when competition at the national level is mentioned.

In my opinion, we have no right to neglect to bring this matter once more to the attention of the minister who is now present in the House, not in order to blame him, because, on the contrary, as the new minister from the east—and I am glad that he is new—I think he will naturally show more understanding in respect of the problems raised by eastern producers.

The minister is aware of the position taken by the Quebec delegation last week, but I think that the delegation has made that gesture in order to prove how important it is to remedy the unfair situation of eastern producers, not only of Quebec producers. There is a great number of producers who are directly affected by the unfair feed grain policy, and they think that the time has come to settle the matter.

As a member of Parliament, I was very happy to see that the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) had included in the speech from the throne amendments designed to settle that problem, and to learn that the minister had stated that he hoped the matter would be settled before the month of June.

All the members also must realize how important this problem is and join forces in making the members of other areas understand it, because for quite natural reasons, they might hesitate to redress that injustice. It is not a matter of depriving anyone of his rights, but merely of viewing generally the importance of the economy at the national level as far as those measures are concerned, and I think that eastern producers are only eager to work to meet a fair competition.

I hope that the minister will make every effort with regard to that policy in order to ensure a fair treatment in the interests of national unity.

I was also very pleased to find that the minister was especially concerned with the family farm. He added that the government had passed beneficial measures in the past few years—such as the Farm Products Marketing Agencies Act—which are, in his opinion, a further step forward stability. Speaking of stability, one may say that farmers have never enjoyed it as other groups of citizens have. I think that the minister is quite right in raising the question of stability, because such stability would enable farmers to live in a world in which he would feel secure about his future, which would be likely to encourage young farmers.

People often wonder in my riding as in others whether the young are not losing interest in the farm. This can be explained by the poverty that the young man has experienced at home, the instability that has affected him and because of competition that is often unfair.

It is imperative that the government hasten to set up more equitable programs. Bill C-176 deals with marketing and is aimed at ensuring more adequate prices. It deals also with farm credit, but should we not still consider the cost of interests when dealing with that subject?

If we really want to instill in the young a taste for farming, we must offer him benefits not available to him at the present time. The interest required on farm loans is a discouraging feature for the young farmer, and he will not accept to borrow huge sums of money once he has learned of the difficulties his parents have experienced.

In my opinion, it would be advisable for the minister to seriously consider preparing for the benefit of the young farmers a loan policy involving very special interest rates. This would encourage the young man to eventually take his father's place and show that the government is really willing to open a door and help those young people find stability in farming.

We know very well that these young farmers also need management classes. In my constituency, as I was told recently, people deeply regret that the Department of Manpower and Immigration will not work harder at providing help for the young farmers, and I mean not necessarily those people who have already 40 or 45 years of farming experience, but rather the young people who need more training in management, considering all the changes to which farming is being subjected today. That need has become vital for the reasons I have mentioned and I believe that the young farmers would benefit enormously from such help, as would the Canadian economy as a whole. The farmers having more qualifications in management, farming would be more lively and more challenging.

These are the suggestions I had to make, taking into account the needs of agriculture at the national level, and not only within the limits of my constituency.

I should also like to take this opportunity, as others have done, to deal with two major problems. Feed grains have been discussed and apparently the minister is to settle that problem. I hope we shall be informed of a solution by June. The Canadian Dairy Federation, as the hon. member for Bellechasse (Mr. Lambert) said a short while ago, has submitted a brief fully explaining the reasons for their requests to the Canadian Dairy Commission and to the government for supplementary subsidies of some 60 cents, because of constantly increasing production costs.

Clearly, and particularly because of the experiences of 1972 and of unfavourable temperatures, producers' needs are greater than ever. Considering the constant increase in production costs, it is also easy to understand that the Canadian Dairy Federation's request is fully justified.

We expect to hear good news from the minister early in April and in the interest of an improvement in the situation of those producers we hope he will give a positive response to the arguments and requests brought forward by the Canadian Dairy Federation to obtain higher incomes.

I should also like to bring back to mind the difficulties producers of all food products experienced last summer. On the basis of representations made by hon. members and of course because of the minister's comprehensive attitude toward losses sustained, the government distributed $9 million to some 22 thousand farmers, making $400 for each producer.

I do not believe any of them lost less than $400 and most of them lost much more. And we know that several growers or farmers have lost millions of dollars due to bad weather.

Of course, I regret that such a policy of reimbursement has been applied. We might say it is equitable, $400 for every one, and everybody will be glad. But how could we satisfy a farmer who lost $4,000 and received only $400? I understand it was difficult to estimate the damages but I think, in view of their importance, we should have assessed them farm by farm.

I believe it would have been possible to make such a survey, such an estimate and to act more fairly toward growers. I take this opportunity to ask the minister to urge his officials to speed things up with regard to those who have not yet received their $400. I know that a number of them have made this mistake or did not quite understand what was required. Some producers mentioned this to me and I am now asking the minister to reconsider their case in view of the fact that those farmers misunderstood the terms of eligibility. Indeed they are definitely full-time producers and farmers. Of course they are looking forward to receiving their $400 but I still believe that damages could have been evaluated much more fairly and a lot more could have been given to some producers who are facing real problems mainly in winter.

I had to express these few comments to the minister while the House is dealing with the business of supply and to remind him of the importance of agriculture in my constituency. In fact, I had to express these views because they reflect the arguments put forward all the time by farmers, especially in my office on weekends.

Dairy producers are also experiencing increases in their production costs which is unavoidable. However, subsidies must be increased also if they are to make reasonable profits.

Potato producers have also experienced difficulties. Bill C-176 is intended to establish marketing boards, but I would ask the minister to make more efforts so that these producers understand the purpose of this legislation and do something to get reasonable prices. I have tremendous faith in the effectiveness of Bill C-176. However, farmers should be made to understand the need to get together and deal through a marketing board for better results. Unfortunately, farmers often have a tendency to wait for the situation to deteriorate and difficulties to become unsolvable. I think the Department of Agriculture will never overpublicize the fact that it is necessary for farmers to get together within an association if they are to obtain the maximum of benefits under Bill C-176 and to ensure that farmers are putting to good use this tool that the government has given them.

[Mr. La Salle.]

I shall end my remarks by inviting once more the minister to pay very close attention to the briefs that come to him from different organizations in Quebec and Canada as a whole. Let us hope that an interesting solution to this problem of feed grains will be forthcoming in a few weeks.

For a long time now, there has been talk of a policy to buy up small farms. In fact, talks on this subject are being held right now with the government of the province of Quebec. I don't think they have ended yet, so once more I invite the minister to increase his efforts in order to settle this question to the benefit of all farmers. I trust that he will fully understand the position of Quebec which is trying to establish certain priorities regarding farm lands within the province for the years to come.

In my opinion, the representations made by the Quebec Minister of Agriculture as well as certain views expressed by the Quebec premier must, I hope, have made the Minister of Agriculture realize the importance for that province of keeping some jurisdiction over agricultural planning. I think it is most important to meditate on that question and to find a mid-course acceptable to both governments so that producers of the province of Quebec may not suffer from protracted negotiations. I do hope that Quebec will be able to keep its priority regarding the selection of agricultural soils both for the benefit of the producers of that province as well as for the rest of Canada.

Mr. Allard: Mr. Chairman, I thank you for giving me the opportunity to add a few words to what has already been said by those who have preceded me.

First of all, I should like to tell the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Whelan) that he impresses me as being sincere, honest and sympathetic to the cause of the farmers, and that I would like to continue seeing him in that light in the coming months.

The fact remains, Mr. Chairman, that last year, Canada imported $20 million worth of butter, while Quebec's butter production decreased by 1.5 per cent and its milk production by 3 per cent. Quebec's production, which accounts for roughly 30 per cent of the total national production, could obviously have improved to make up that loss. As a result, the farmer's income, which now averages about $2,500 a year, would have improved accordingly.

For this period, the price of feed grains from western Canada has shown an increase of 25 to 30 per cent in some cases and 50 per cent in others, not to mention protein additives, which have increased 50 per cent for fish flour and 70 per cent for soya flour in Toronto. The same tendency has been noted in the United States.

For the same period, in the province of Quebec, we have suffered from a production decrease in all areas. With regard to oats, for instance, the 1971 production was 29,667,000 bushels and was reduced to 23,392,000 bushels in 1972. For grain corn, production was 13,334,000 bushels in 1971 and 9,380,000 bushels in 1972. For feed corn, production was 1,771,000 bushels in 1971 against 1,559,000 bushels in 1972. Barley production also decreased, from 1,532,000 bushels in 1971 to 1,280,000 in 1972. Coarse grains also went down, from 5,252,000 bushels in 1971 to 4,448,000 in 1972. Spring wheat production also slackened, from 1,071,000 bushels in 1971 to 558,000 in 1972. Hay production went from 5,000,587 tons in 1971 to 4,000,054 in 1972.

Mr. Chairman, it is true that the prices of hogs have increased; conversely, there was a decrease in production of about 20 per cent in the same area. We are surely going to experience again the bad situation of the past, when we had a surplus of hogs, a reduction in prices—and I do say reduced prices—because when there is a surplus of hogs, this automatically brings the market to the saturation point and so there is a reduction in prices. This is a sort of a vicious circle. If feed grain prices remain high, it is difficult to contemplate a stability in hog prices.

Of course, with such a situation, we shall soon see small and middle farmers disappear. As I stated earlier, the average income of Quebec farmers in 1972 was about $2,500. During the same period, the number of farmers reduced from 98,000 to 97,000, which led to a decrease in the production of feed grains, without taking into account the climate.

Mr. Chairman, in the more or less distant future we shall have to face a shortage of agricultural products. Therefore it is time that the government take immediate steps to correct the present situation, either through the removal of feed grain price differentials between eastern and western Canada or through greater inducement for the brave people of the agricultural field. I say "brave", and I know what I am talking about, for it is not easy nowadays to secure the necessary food for all the hungry people in the world.

Unfortunately the eastern farmers have always been forgotten. Subject to all kinds of control, to the whims of climate, and forgotten by the government, they must be very brave to hold on to their farm, even though it offers many opportunities. But, through inadequate measures, our governments fail to provide security or the means of earning a living. It is not too encouraging for the farmer's son to succeed his father for, most of the time, the farmer is up to his neck in debts. So, when the father is ready to pass his farm on to his son, his son must take the good with the bad. Therefore, people lose interest in rural life and leave the farm. This is why, last year, 1,000 farms were written off in the province of Quebec alone.

I believe that the minister is of good faith and I dare hope he will persevere.

[English]

The Assistant Deputy Chairman: Is the Chair to understand that the debate on votes 15a and 40a of the Department of Agriculture is now completed?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

The Assistant Deputy Chairman: We will now proceed to vote 20a, Department of the Environment.

Mr. Fraser: Mr. Chairman, I do not rise to quarrel with the supplementary estimates put forward by the minister. However, having looked at them I am compelled to ask why an item that I thought might have been there is omitted. I refer to the fact—and I think it is interesting at this time to keep this in mind—that in the supplementary estimates, despite the growing concern over the fate of the Skagit River in British Columbia, there is no item which reflects aid to the citizens' groups which have been fighting the flooding of this Canadian valley by an American power utility.

There have been comments in the House with respect to this matter. It was first raised in 1970, some two and a half years ago, but it is still unresolved. It is time it was spoken of again in this House and it is time all hon. members learned something of the background of this problem and put their minds to doing something about it. I say all hon. members because there is not a party represented in this House which has not at one time or another expressed their complete accord with the objective of saving this Canadian valley from being flooded by an American power utility.

It is important that hon. members remember that this problem was created by the fact that in 1909 we, with the United States, entered into the boundary waters treaty under which the International Joint Commission was established. As some members know, that commission was created to resolve disputes between ourselves and the United States along our border.

Many years ago the city of Seattle developed a utility department. As a consequence, plans were made and shortly after World War I the Ross dam development began on the Skagit River. The Skagit River's headwaters are in British Columbia, where they come through what is now the beautiful Manning provincial park. They leave Manning park and head south along a beautiful valley for a distance of 12 to 14 miles and then cross the American border.

The area that the Canadian Skagit flows through is not completely primitive because there has been some limited logging there. But it is still a very beautiful place and is close to the city of Vancouver. The Skagit is one of the last free-flowing streams within 100 miles of the third biggest city in this country. I know the Skagit well. I have fished it, hiked along its banks and camped beside it. It is a very beautiful part of the country.

If I speak with some emotion this afternoon for some moments, I make no apology for it. I would ask every hon. member of this House, keeping in mind the position that all parties have expressed, to remember that this is not just an intellectual assessment of our resource use; this is an emotional matter, a question of what is going to happen to a part of your country, Mr. Chairman, and mine.

Pursuant to the regulations of the International Joint Commission, in 1941 the United States, which was concerned with continuing the development of the Ross dam project, applied to the commission for authority to raise the Ross dam on the United States' side another 100 feet or so. In 1942 the International Joint Commission, as it must do, made an order granting the Americans the right to raise the dam even though as a consequence at least ten miles of the Canadian valley would be flooded.

I ask hon. members to remember the climate of those times: this country was at war and in 1941, when the United States made its application, that country was not yet at war though it was to be soon. The Skagit was relatively isolated. There was no environmental input at the hearing. In fact, the game commissioner for the province of British Columbia turned up only because the game commissioner for the state of Washington had said to him, "George, they are going to flood your valley; you had better get down here and see what damage it is going to do".

As I say, this order was made in 1942 and it is important to note that the order probably is legally invalid because, contrary to article 8 of the treaty, the International Joint Commission did a strange thing: it delegated to the city of Seattle and the province of British Columbia the right to work out the terms of compensation. That is completely contrary to the duty of the commission under the treaty. I stress the aspect of legality because this is a very powerful weapon in the hands of Canada in dealing with this particular matter, one that has not been effectively used by this country.

To continue the chronology, in the early fifties negotiations between the City of Seattle Light and Power and the province of British Columbia were continued. I do not want to take too long on the subject, but finally in 1967 an agreement was entered into, apparently pursuant to the order of 1942. This 1967 agreement was entered into between the province of British Columbia and the city of Seattle and it provided that the province of British Columbia would agree to allow the valley to be flooded for an annual payment of $3,500 a year. So Seattle, in their estimate, gained at that time an advantage in terms of power of $1 million a year, and there are documents today that show they have upped the figure to $2 million a year.

Under article 8 of the treaty, the commission is charged with the duty of ensuring that adequate and suitable compensation is made as "approved by it". The point I am making is this. I realize the International Joint Commission is important in our relations with our American friends, and I am very aware of the sensibilities of a great many people in this city if anyone were to suggest that the International Joint Commission did not do everything as well as it should or that it had made a mistake. But the fact is that in taking this action the commission delegated its authority, which it had no right to do, and in fact never approved the terms of that settlement. And is there any wonder? Who in their right minds would approve it? There is now no question that the International Joint Commission would say to the Canadian people or any other people that that sum was suitable and adequate compensation for the loss of a valley.

It took some time for the public to realize what was going on and agitation began originally in the city of Vancouver. The former Liberal member for Fraser Valley East raised the matter in the House of Commons on October 6, 1970, as reported at page 8855 of Hansard, and this is what he said:

> It is therefore incumbent upon this House of Commons to exert every power within our jurisdiction to assure Canadians in general and British Columbians in this case in particular that the government of British Columbia is acting and operating at the present time in the interests of the people of Canada in relation to the proposed plans for the flooding of the beautiful Skagit Valley . . .

[Mr. Fraser.]

> Apart from normal requirements relating to removal of debris, and so on, the compensation to be paid to the province of British Columbia by the city of Seattle department of lighting is $34,566.21 per annum.

Then the hon. member worked it out and said that this amounted to $5.50 per acre per year, which is equal to two Christmas trees per acre per year. That, Mr. Chairman, is what we gave away. One can say that the province of British Columbia gave it away, and that is true. But what I am saying is that the International Joint Commission is a child of the treaty that was entered into between the government of Canada and the government of the United States, and it is therefore our responsibility in this House to make sure that this giveaway does not happen.

The Minister of the Environment—I will be most generous in what I say—immediately recognized the seriousness of this problem and began to take steps to see what could be done about it. On October 10, 1970, he issued a statement. Part of the statement reads as follows:

> The International Joint Commission had a great deal of faith in the B.C. government, too much faith perhaps. It left the Skagit to our provincial authorities to look after. Victoria was to look after the Canadian interest. Victoria was to look after the writing of a contract with the Seattle City Light Company in the U.S.A.

That is an admission that the Minister of the Environment recognized that a mistake had been made, that a potential legal invalidity lay in the order that allowed Victoria to settle with Seattle as to terms. Then the minister made this commitment:

> All I can tell you this morning is that we in Ottawa are taking our responsibilities seriously. We are going to do something with the hot potato which Premier Bennett has tossed our way. As a starter we'll open up the Skagit issue for public discussion right here in B.C.

The Prime Minister was next to get into the act. On November 25, 1970, in The Province the right hon. gentleman is quoted as saying:

> The best way—

That is, to end the threat of flooding.

> —would be to do it yourself—get rid of Bennett.

Let me inform those hon. members whose knowledge of the beautiful province of British Columbia is limited that the "Bennett" referred to is the former premier, the Hon. W. A. C. Bennett who until recently was premier of the province. For better or for worse, the people of British Columbia did get rid of Mr. Bennett but this, contrary to the hopes expressed by the Prime Minister, has not resulted in the going away of the threat of the flooding of this valley.

I should say, also, that hon. members of all parties have supported the opposition to this flooding. As far as the government party is concerned, I want to make sure that hon. members on that side know full well how hard a certain member of the legislative assembly of the province of British Columbia, a member of the Liberal party, has worked on this matter. I pay tribute here to Mr. David Brousson, the member of the Legislative Assembly of British Columbia who has as much as any man led the fight to save this valley for the whole of the country. I think hon. members on the government benches should be aware of that fact because it has been the Liberal party in the province of British Columbia as much as any other which has been in the forefront of this fight. It behooves government members to pay close attention to all those things that must be attended to if we are to win that fight.

There was a promise, of course, that there would be a public hearing on this matter. But there never was. What happened finally was that the government promised that this matter would be brought back before the International Joint Commission. Most people engaged in the fight breathed a sigh of relief because they felt if it went back to the International Joint Commission that would be the end of it. A very strange thing happened. The 1971 terms of reference that the governments of Canada and the United States agreed to in putting the matter back before the International Joint Commission contained these strange and sinister words:

> The International Joint Commission ... to report on the nature, scope and impact of these consequences; and to make such recommendations, not inconsistent with the commission's order of approval dated January 27, 1942, and the related Agreement dated January 10, 1967, between the city of Seattle and the province of British Columbia as the commission may deem appropriate for the protection and enhancement of the environment—

The effect of that was that the International Joint Commission, by virtue of its terms of reference, did not have the power of jurisdiction to say no to the flooding. Let no one in this House fail to remember or to take into account the intense disappointment of thousands of citizens in Vancouver who realized that these hearings, no matter how they ended up, could not result, from the terms of reference, in the IJC saying no.

I have asked, as have other people, why the government of Canada agreed to these limited terms of reference. There may be reasons which justify these limited terms, but the fact is that they were limited and, as a consequence, the International Joint Commission brought out its report. While it could not say no, the report went so far toward saying no that headlines sprung up in papers across the country to the effect that the Skagit was saved by the IJC report. The fact of the matter is that there was a lot of optimism but that optimism was ill-founded. This matter was tabled in the House of Commons when the IJC report came out and there was a commitment by the Minister of the Environment at that time to study the matter and bring a report back to the House. So far that report has never been made to the House.

Let me go back to one incident at the hearing before the International Joint Commission. This is significant in that it refers to the legal point of which not enough has been made. I refer to the legal argument presented on behalf of the citizens who opposed the flooding, to the effect that the 1942 order was invalid and, as a consequence, the 1967 agreement was invalid. For some strange and incredible reason which I do not understand, which is completely and utterly beyond me and beyond other people there at the time, the representative of the Canadian government made this statement after the legal arguments before the IJC were closed. This statement was made by a representative of the government of Canada who was doing everything possible to stop this flooding, and I quote from page 130 of the transcript:

> —the government of Canada has treated the 1942 order and the 1967 agreement as perfectly sound legal documents and this has been our posture and I think that speaks for itself.

At this point we have the government saying it wants to stop the flooding, and we have arguments presented that could be used to stop it, yet we have a representative of the government of Canada saying that the government thinks these are legal documents. If any member of this House does not know how discouraging it is, when you are involved in a citizens' group fighting for something, to hear somebody from your own government shooting you down before the United States government, let him be faced with that sort of thing. This is one example of what we have had to fight against. There seems to have been an unexplained lack of co-ordination.

To bring the matter up to date, we now have been told by the Minister of the Environment that the Skagit is a dead issue. In fact, there was a press conference held in the fall by Premier Barrett and the Minister of the Environment wherein the Minister of the Environment assured us that if the province of British Columbia did not want the flooding to take place, it would not happen. He said:

> Really, it is all over. When the government of British Columbia, who owns the valley, says the valley is not going to be flooded it's just a matter of Seattle City Light getting the message loud and clear—

Again the news headlines suggested that the valley was saved. Curiously enough, on February 6 when had occasion to raise the matter in this House and I asked the Secretary of State for External Affairs what was happening, he said, as reported at page 1000 of Hansard for that date:

> Mr. Speaker, we have made our representations to the United States government which I believe is quite happy to discuss them with us. The outstanding issue at the moment is not the question of the flooding but the question of the cost, and this is what we are discussing at present.

That was a curious reply I say, with respect, to the Secretary of State for External Affairs. How can we be discussing costs if the United States is still going ahead with the flooding? On January 29 of this year, Seattle City Light filed its brief with the United States Federal Power Commission and is proceeding with its application before that commission. Unless we do something or get some agreement with the United States, that commission will make the final determination as to whether a Canadian valley is flooded.

The Secretary of State for External Affairs was asked on February 6 what he meant by his answer in the House. I say gently, that is a good question. This is what he said to a radio news reporter, Mr. Doug Taylor, of CKWX:

> There is nobody believes now that the ... Skagit Valley will be flooded. And that is why my colleague the Minister of the Environment, Mr. Davis, said, "The Flooding of the Skagit is a dead issue". What we are talking about now is ... who is to pay the costs that have been incurred ... so this is what we're talking to the American government about. I agree with my colleague the Minister of Environment, that the flooding of the Skagit is a dead issue.

If this is a dead issue, I wonder why a letter of December 18 from Seattle City Light to the mayor of the city of Seattle said this:

> The Canadians apparently deem it sound strategy to make strident but unofficial press statements, and studiously refrain from any legislative action affecting Ross on either the federal or provincial level.

Further in that letter we find this:

We understand from contacts with our state department that it would view very seriously any Canadian action repudiating the treaty agreement—

My time is just about up, but this is my point. If the Secretary of State for External Affairs and the Minister of the Environment do in fact have an agreement with our United States friends that this flooding is not going to take place, surely it is an obligation on the government to say so in this House. Certainly it is an obligation of the government to say to the citizens' groups opposing this, raising money and getting ready to fight it before a United States tribunal, groups from both the Canadian and the United States side, that they can safely withdraw because this matter has been settled. This is what I ask the government to do. I ask hon. members to support this position and encourage the government to make such a statement.

Mr. Davis: Mr. Chairman, I shall say only a few words. First, I wish to congratulate the hon. member for Vancouver South for raising this subject. It is very important, especially in the eyes of the people of British Columbia. I believe it is also important to Canadians since what has happened here could create a precedent for good or ill in respect of other situations along the border between Canada and the United States.

The hon. member concluded by expressing concern about certain groups which are raising money to continue the fight in respect of the flooding in Canada of a beautiful valley. They need not be in too much of a hurry because the Federal Power Commission, which could be meeting on this subject, will not be considering the application by Seattle City Light and Power Company until late in the fall. So there will be a period of some months before that hearing will begin.

Let me try to describe the present situation. It is not one of flooding which is about to take place. It is one involving compensation. The hon. member for Vancouver South is a lawyer and therefore knows that this issue is now in the hands of lawyers on both sides of the border.

The province of British Columbia in 1967 signed a contract of sorts with Seattle City Light and Power which involved certain costs. It certainly involved a large expenditure on the part of Seattle City Light in subsequent years. The province of British Columbia has, in effect, torn up that contract and Seattle City Light is, in its eyes, out a considerable sum of money. This company is owned by the people of Seattle. Considerable jockeying is going on now concerning who should pay how much. It is yet to be settled as to whether there is some obligation on the part of the people of Canada, as distinct from the people of British Columbia as represented by their provincial government.

The amount of money involved could run into millions of dollars. Whether Canadians should pay any part of that amount really is the issue. It is really a question of who pays, and how much, what obligation was entered into by the province in 1967, and how binding that obligation is in respect of a financial settlement with Seattle City Light.

The federal government has been in touch continually with the state department in Washington. It is my understanding that the state department has in recent weeks been in touch with Seattle City Light, but I suspect this jockeying will go on for some time. It is essentially a matter of the amount owing, and who pays whom in respect of the unfortunate incident.

Mr. Fraser: Mr. Chairman, would the minister permit a question?

Mr. Davis: Yes.

Mr. Fraser: Through you, Mr. Chairman, I would like to address a question to the minister. I am not so naive as not to know that there is a certain amount of jockeying going on in respect of compensation. I am also a good enough lawyer to know that if a contract is broken by frustration, one cannot claim damages. The frustration was created by an act of the Government of Canada. The agreement under which Seattle wishes to claim damages may have no effect at all. I ask the minister whether he or the government is prepared to say to this House, positively and absolutely, now, that there is no possibility of this flooding taking place; not just now but at all.

Mr. Davis: I may be sticking my chin out a bit, but I would say there is no possibility of it taking place.

Mr. Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich): Mr. Chairman, if the minister would permit a question I would like to ask him this. The minister mentioned that the question is one of compensation. In this particular context "compensation" could mean different things. It could be compensation for damage in respect of flooding; it could also be compensation for expenses, expectations and failures in construction. Which sort of compensation are we talking about?

Mr. Davis: The only kind of compensation we are talking about is moneys expended by Seattle City Light in the interval, I believe, from 1967 to the present or to the time when they finally received word from British Columbia. There is some debate as to when they received word.

Mr. Harding: Mr. Chairman, it is very close to six o'clock. May I call it six o'clock?

The Assistant Deputy Chairman: Is it agreed that we call it six o'clock?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Progress reported.

At 5.57 p.m. the House adjourned, without question put, pursuant to Standing Order.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Thursday, February 15, 1973

The House met at 2 p.m.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

DISPLAYING OF CANADIAN FLAG IN CHAMBER FOR FIRST TIME—STATEMENT BY MR. SPEAKER

Mr. Speaker: Order. Hon. members will have observed that the Canadian flag is being displayed in the chamber today for the first time.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Speaker: As hon. members will recall, the terms of the resolution adopted yesterday authorized the Speaker of the House to display the Canadian flag in the House of Commons in such location as he chooses. Acting under the authority of that resolution the present location has been temporarily selected, but it seems to me it would be desirable for the Chair to consider the wishes of hon. members. It may be that a more appropriate position could be found or that as a matter of balance in the chamber consideration might be given to displaying more than one flag or two flags, one on each side, and perhaps not exactly in the place which has been chosen temporarily.

I am suggesting to hon. members that the Chair does not like to take decisions of this importance and run the risk that the decision taken might be against the wishes of hon. members. I have taken upon myself to give effect to the order passed by the House yesterday and, I hope, of course that what I have done will prove satisfactory. However, if it is not I will be very pleased to give effect to the wishes of hon. members.

[Translation]

As I already said, I will be very pleased to give effect to the wishes of hon. members.

ROUTINE PROCEEDINGS

On the order: Motions.

Mr. Howard: Mr. Speaker, I wonder if I might take the liberty of rising on a point of order at the very commencement of item "motions". My point of order is necessitated as a result of having inquired at the office of the leader of this party to determine whether or not advance notification had been given of an intention on the part of the government to make a statement today in respect of the announcement of the Prime Minister yesterday concerning recognition of the native title to lands of a specific group of Indian people thereby possibly reducing the number of questions on the subject later. I thought the opportunity should be given to the Prime Minister to rise and tell the House whether he intends to make a statement on motions.

• (1410)

Mr. Trudeau: Mr. Speaker, my only statement at this point would be that the hon. member, as usual, obviously misinterpreted what I said.

Mr. Danson: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I should like to point out it is most appropriate that on this day when the Canadian flag is displayed in this chamber for the first time we have in the gallery Mrs. Lester B. Pearson. I think this is particularly appropriate and her presence honours this House.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

HOUSE OF COMMONS

PROPOSED DISPLAY OF UNION JACK IN CHAMBER—REQUEST FOR UNANIMOUS CONSENT TO MOVE MOTION

Mr. Stan Schumacher (Palliser): Mr. Speaker, I rise under the provisions of Standing Order 43, as well as to pursuant to your pleasant invitation, on a matter of urgent and pressing necessity. In view of the fact one of Canada's flags was given recognition and a place in this chamber yesterday, I would hope that the same consent would be given to the following motion:

That this House authorize Mr. Speaker to instal in a location deemed suitable by him, as soon as possible, the Union Jack, as symbol of Canada's membership in the Commonwealth and reverence for the monarchy as our system of government.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The House has heard the motion proposed by the hon. member for Palliser. This motion proposed under the terms of Standing Order 43 requires the unanimous consent of the House. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. Speaker: There is not unanimity and the motion cannot be put.

Mr. Diefenbaker: The Liberal members are all against it.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Canada Flag Day

PRECEDENCE FOR BILL C-136—REQUEST FOR UNANIMOUS CONSENT TO MOVE MOTION

Mr. Frank Howard (Skeena): Mr. Speaker, I also desire to seek the agreement of the House under Standing Order 43 on a matter of urgent and pressing necessity, namely, the desire, I am sure, of all hon. members today, to express themselves about the Canadian flag. I move, seconded by the hon. member for Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands (Mr. Douglas):

That, at five o'clock this day, notwithstanding the order of business set down for that time, the House proceed to consider Bill C-136, an act respecting Canada flag day standing in the name of the hon. member for Burnaby-Seymour.

Mr. Speaker: The House has heard the motion proposed by the hon. member for Skeena. This motion requires the unanimous consent of the House. Is there unanimity?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Speaker: If there were any noes, they were very faint and I did not hear them. Unless I hear them loudly and clearly now, I believe I will have to say that there is unanimity to allow the Chair to put the motion. Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the said motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Motion agreed to.

MANPOWER

INQUIRY RESPECTING LOCAL INITIATIVES PROGRAM—REQUEST FOR UNANIMOUS CONSENT TO MOVE MOTION

Mr. Gilbert Rondeau (Shefford): Mr. Speaker, pursuant to Standing Order 43, I ask leave to put the following motion.

In view of rights of hon. members to control government expenditures, of the very serious doubts entertained by some hon. members concerning partisanship aspects of the Local Initiatives Program as well as false criteria applied for acceptance or rejection of projects, and in view of the urgent character of the matter, since some projects have not yet been accepted, I solicit unanimous consent of the House to move, seconded by the hon. member for Compton (Mr. Latulippe):

That an investigation be ordered and carried out as early as possible, under control of the House of Commons, in order to check on the very serious doubts hon. members of this House entertain as to the integrity of Local Initiatives Program as concerns criteria for acceptance or rejection of projects.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member is proposing that the House deal with this motion under Standing Order 43. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. Speaker: There is no unanimity. The motion therefore cannot be put.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

ANNOUNCEMENT OF SIGNING OF AGREEMENT WITH CUBA ON HIJACKING OF AIRCRAFT AND VESSELS

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, this morning Dr. Rene Anillo, the Cuban First Vice-Minister of Foreign Affairs, who is in the diplomatic gallery, and I signed an agreement on hijacking of aircraft and vessels and other offences. I am now tabling this agreement.

As affirmed in this agreement the governments of the Republic of Cuba and Canada share a common commitment to eliminate the menace to lives posed by resort to hijacking of aircraft and vessels. This agreement is an impressive example of what two countries enjoying friendly relations can do in the common good.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Heath Macquarrie (Hillsborough): Mr. Speaker, our eloquent and esteemed spokesman on external affairs, the hon. member for Saint-Hyacinthe (Mr. Wagner), is unable to be here today because of disruption of air schedules from Montreal.

An hon. Member: Is he hijacked?

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Macquarrie: No, I do not believe there has been any hijacking. I am very happy to hear the announcement by the minister in reference to the longstanding and vexatious problem of hijacking. I believe, Sir, that any move that makes it easier for the people of different countries to traverse paths of commerce and social exchange together should be welcomed.

I have always been very proud of the fact that some years ago the government of the right hon. member for Prince Albert (Mr. Diefenbaker), against a great deal of pressure from certain countries in the world, decided that this country, regardless of its views of the ideological construction of the government of Cuba, would retain diplomatic and commercial relations with that country.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Macquarrie: I believe that decision was right and proper, as indeed were most decisions taken by that right hon. gentleman's government in those difficult years. I am happy that upon a basis of continuing consultation we have moved forward to a situation today which I salute and commend.

I am also happy to say that I had the honour of being in the Republic of Cuba for a couple of weeks before Christmas, where I was treated with every courtesy and every kindness. I bear for the people of that fine country, and especially for their distinguished ambassador in this country, the highest regard.

I look forward to the day when, upon the basis of the understanding reached today, we shall have direct air communication between Canada and Cuba, and I suggest that that carrier be Eastern Pacific Airways—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Macquarrie: I mean, of course, Eastern Provincial Airways. If I may say so, Mr. Speaker, in referring to common carriers I am getting carried away. It is an Eastern Provincial Airways service from Halifax to Havana that I foresee. This kind of contact can only strengthen relations between our two countries irrespective of forms of government.

• (1420)

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Macquarrie: Mr. Speaker, this is an important matter and it is this kind of organizing in the development of such agreements that a country like Canada and this assembly of serious parliamentarians here gathered should welcome. I do welcome this agreement and I commend the minister for the success attending his efforts. I expect good things to follow in the development of commercial and economic ties between our two countries.

Mr. Andrew Brewin (Greenwood): Mr. Speaker, I have been instructed by my colleagues not to attempt to emulate the hon. member for Hillsborough (Mr. Macquarrie). I want to say, however, that I too am very happy with the announcement made by the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Sharp).

There are two aspects that I welcome particularly. First, the agreement represents international action to deal with the problem of hijacking which has caused grave concern and is typical of the violence of our age. It is high time that governments dealt with the problem and I am very happy that the governments of Canada, Cuba and the United States have agreed to at least start to deal with it. The second aspect that pleases me is that this is the first treaty Canada has had with the Republic of Cuba since the revolution. I believe it is a symbol of the real opportunities that exist for the development of friendly and mutually beneficial relations with the Republic of Cuba.

I travelled to Cuba recently with the hon. member for Hillsborough and the hon. member for Cochrane (Mr. Stewart). We were received with great hospitality and were also shown admirable opportunities for the mutually beneficial expansion of trade and relations with that country. I think this present treaty will be a milestone on the road to closer collaboration. For that reason I warmly welcome it.

Mr. Gérard Laprise (Abitibi): Mr. Speaker, we welcome the news that an agreement has been signed between the Canadian government and that of Cuba with regard to air and sea hijackings.

We had reached the point where we dreaded to see planes leave, fearing they might not reach their destination. Something had to be done to prevent acts of violence. Cuba was probably one of the busiest countries in that regard as it often welcomed the unwanted as a result of planes having been hijacked.

I feel the minister deserves our congratulations for having concluded that agreement and thereby given air travellers more security in their travels.

To my mind, that agreement between those two governments will encourage negotiations with other governments.

INFRASTRUCTURE PROGRAMS FOR ATLANTIC REGION—REQUEST FOR UNANIMOUS CONSENT TO MOVE MOTION

Mr. J. Robert Howie (York-Sunbury): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a matter of urgent and pressing necessity pursuant to Standing Order 43. As the acute and urgent need for a massive investment in infrastructure programs in Atlantic Canada has been recently demonstrated by the inability of the port of Saint John, New Brunswick, to hold the Volkswagen contract, the inability of Halifax to expand industrially because of an inadequate water supply system, and the failure to harness the tides of Fundy for power development, I would move, seconded by the right hon. member for Prince Albert (Mr. Diefenbaker):

That the question of massive infrastructure programs be referred to the Standing Committee on Regional Economic Expansion for detailed study and recommendations.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for York-Sunbury has proposed for the consideration of the House a motion under the terms of Standing Order 43 requiring unanimous consent. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member will have heard, as did the Chair, that there is not unanimous consent and the motion cannot be put at this time.

MANPOWER

APPROVAL OF LOCAL INITIATIVES PROJECTS—REQUEST FOR UNANIMOUS CONSENT TO MOVE MOTION

Mr. Jean-Marie Boisvert (Drummond): Mr. Speaker, pursuant to Standing Order 43, I ask for the unanimous consent of the House to discuss a matter of urgent necessity, specifically undue political influences concerning the Local Initiatives Program, so that our fellow citizens be not victims of injustice in the criteria for the acceptance or rejection of their projects.

Consequently, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Compton (Mr. Latulippe):

That the House request the Minister of Manpower and Immigration who is responsible for the politicized Local Initiatives Program, to make a statement on that matter and that he reassure the House about the honest administration of the said program, and that he define the role of the Minister of Transport in the publication for the province of Quebec of the accepted projects.

Mr. Speaker: Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. Speaker: Since there is not unanimous consent, the motion cannot be put.

CRITERIA FOR APPROVAL OF LOCAL INITIATIVES PROJECTS—REQUEST FOR UNANIMOUS CONSENT TO MOVE MOTION

Mr. Adrien Lambert (Bellechasse): Mr. Speaker, in view of the importance of local initiatives projects for promoters and regions concerned and in view of the political criteria which led the authorities of the program to accept or reject the said projects, I ask the unanimous consent of the House to move a motion pursuant to Standing Order 43. I therefore move, seconded by the hon. member for Lotbinière (Mr. Fortin):

That the entire question of local initiatives projects, its administration, its acceptance or refusal process, be referred to the appropriate standing committee and that this parliamentary committee consider not less restrictively the political influences exerted at the constituency level, the influence of the Quebec liberal caucus in that connection and the reasons on which were based the rejection of some worthwhile projects urgently requested by the area population.

Mr. Speaker: I am sure the hon. member for Bellechasse will recognize, as I do, that a substantially similar motion has just been introduced. I doubt very much whether it would be possible in the course of the same sitting to ask the consent of the House two or three times on a motion which is essentially the same. I do not want to be unfair to the hon. member for Bellechasse. I will ask for unanimous consent, but I feel that this is a clear abuse of the Standing Orders and I am sure the hon. member for Bellechasse will agree with me.

In any event, I am asking the House whether there is unanimous consent.

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. Speaker: There being no unanimous consent, the question cannot be put.

ANNOUNCEMENT OF DATE OF TABLING

Hon. C. M. Drury (President of the Treasury Board): Mr. Speaker, in view of the interest of the House in the date, it is the intention of the government to table the main estimates for 1973-74 next Tuesday.

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): It would be better if they could be tabled tomorrow.

• (1430)

Mr. Stewart (Cochrane): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order for the removal of a public bill. As you know, Mr. Speaker, for the past few years there has been a bill standing in my name to place our national flag in the chamber. I am overjoyed that we are able to have our beloved flag here from now on. Therefore I request unanimous consent to have my bill, C-50, removed from the order paper as it is now redundant.

Mr. Speaker: Is it agreed?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Order discharged and bill withdrawn.

PROPOSED DISPLAY OF PROVINCIAL AND TERRITORIAL FLAGS—REQUEST FOR UNANIMOUS CONSENT TO MOVE MOTION

Mr. Paul Yewchuk (Athabasca): Mr. Speaker, I rise under the terms of Standing Order 43 to ask the unanimous consent of the House to move a motion of urgent and pressing necessity. In view of the fact the Canadian flag is now displayed in this chamber it would seem appropriate, in order to show the unity and greatness of this country, to display the flags of the provinces and the territories as well at a time deemed to be appropriate by Your Honour.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Yewchuk: I therefore move, seconded by the hon. member for Palliser (Mr. Schumacher):

That on an appropriate day flags of the provinces and territories of Canada be displayed in this chamber.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Athabasca proposes for the consideration of the House a motion under the terms of Standing Order 43. It requires unanimous consent. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. Speaker: There is not unanimity; therefore the motion cannot be put.

UNEMPLOYMENT INSURANCE

FOREST WORKERS—REQUEST FOR UNANIMOUS CONSENT TO MOVE MOTION

Mr. Eudore Allard (Rimouski): Mr. Speaker, pursuant to Standing Order 43, I request the unanimous consent of the House to discuss an extremely important subject, following the new regulations of the Unemployment Insurance Commission as proposed by the Minister of Manpower and Immigration and which are unfair to the lumber industry workers who are subject to cutbacks three weeks after having applied.

Considering that 90 per cent of lumberjacks are disqualified and penalized and that the officials of the Unemployment Insurance Commission are applying the new legislation before it is passed, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Abitibi (Mr. Laprise):

That the Minister of Manpower and Immigration take measures to correct these inequities.

Mr. Speaker: The motion moved by the hon. member requires, once again, the unanimous consent. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. Speaker: There is not, apparently at least, and this motion cannot be put to the House under Standing Order 43.

REGIONAL DEVELOPMENT INCENTIVES ACT

AMENDMENT TO PROVIDE FOR MONTHLY PUBLICATION OF REPORTS WHEN PARLIAMENT NOT SITTING

Mr. Elmer M. MacKay (Central Nova) moved for leave to introduce Bill C-144, to amend the Regional Development Incentives Act (report on administration).

Mr. Speaker: Is it the pleasure of the House that the hon. member shall have leave to introduce the said bill?

Some hon. Members: Explain.

Mr. MacKay: Mr. Speaker, the purpose of this bill is to change the present situation which does not oblige the government to keep the public informed by publishing monthly reports on the Department of Regional Economic Expansion when parliament is not in session, as was the case for so many months last year. This bill will require the government to keep the public advised on a monthly basis, to give an accounting, as it were, of DREE in the same way that monthly reports are made available with regard to the consumer price index and unemployment statistics.

Motion agreed to, bill read the first time and ordered to be printed.

MOTIONS TO ADJOURN UNDER S.O. 26

INDIAN AFFAIRS

NEGOTIATION OF ABORIGINAL RIGHTS

Mr. Frank Howard (Skeena): Mr. Speaker, I rise pursuant to Standing Order 26 to move the adjournment of the House for the purpose of discussing a specific and important matter requiring urgent consideration, namely, the statement made yesterday by the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau)—I do not want to impinge upon his eggshell sensitivity but I think this is accurate—that his government is prepared to negotiate the matter of aboriginal and/or land claims with a specific group of Indian people, and the effect this will have upon all Indian and Eskimo people in Canada.

Mr. Speaker: Due notice of the hon. member's intention to propose a motion under the terms of Standing Order 26 has been received by the Chair. As was stated on February 8 last, the Chair recognizes the special circumstances relating to the question of aboriginal rights. Obviously this is a problem which is of continuing concern to hon. members. This was further shown yesterday, not only during the question period but also by the fact that a motion in the same area was proposed by the hon. member for Kingston and The Islands (Miss MacDonald).

Hon. members are quite familiar with the terms of Standing Order 26 and with the fact that there are a number of factors to be considered by the Chair in determining whether the government business called for the day should be set aside to discuss a matter by virtue of Standing Order 26. I would think that both the Standing Order and the precedents would require that the Chair take into account the fact that by unanimous decision of the House the annual report of the Department of Indian Affairs and Northern Development has been referred to the standing committee for the very purpose of considering aboriginal rights. I hasten to say at the same time that this in itself is not sufficient to reach the decision that a debate should not take place under Standing Order 26.

Another relevant aspect is the opportunity for debate in the near future. I have been of the opinion that, in view of the deep concern of all members about this important and urgent matter of national interest, there should be provided an opportunity for debate either by agreement between members or by a motion under Standing Order 43, under the terms of Standing Order 58, or under the provisions of Standing Order 26.

As the Chair suggested on February 8 when a similar motion was put forward by the hon. member for Athabasca and the hon. member for Kingston and The Islands, the door should not be closed on the possibility of an emergency debate. The situation has not changed and I am still hopeful that a debate in one form or another can take place very soon. Perhaps the Chair might be allowed to leave the door open for the possible consideration later of a similar motion under Standing Order 26. For the moment, however, and particularly in view of the decision which was given yesterday, I would hesitate very much to agree that a debate take place at this time under the terms of Standing Order 26.

ENERGY

UNITED STATES PREFERENCE FOR ALASKA RATHER THAN MACKENZIE VALLEY OIL PIPELINE ROUTE

Mr. John A. Fraser (Vancouver South): Mr. Speaker, I rise under Standing Order 26 to move a motion for the adjournment of the House for the purpose of discussing a specific and important matter requiring urgent consideration, namely, the statement made by the President of the United States today that he prefers the Alaska route to the Canadian route for an oil pipeline from Prudhoe Bay, and because of a statement made yesterday by the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources that the Canadian government does not plan any further representations to the American government on this matter.

Mr. Speaker: The notice required by the Standing Order was given to the Chair by the hon. member for Vancouver South just a brief moment before the opening of the House at two o'clock. The notice given was proper and in order as provided by the Standing Order, in view of the special circumstances alluded to by the hon. member for Vancouver South. However, the fact that notice was given just before the opening of this afternoon's session makes it very difficult for the Chair to reach a decision and make a ruling on whether a debate should be had on this very important and urgent matter. At this time I wish to take advantage of the provision of the Standing Order to delay the decision on the motion and later this afternoon give a ruling on the hon. member's proposed motion.

Mr. Woolliams: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. If Your Honour finds some difficulty with regard to the notice, I wonder whether you would consider asking for the unanimous consent of the House to waive the usual notice.

• (1440)

Mr. Speaker: I have just said that the hon. member was within the ambit of the rules. There is no question at all about that. The rule is clear. If the motion relates to a matter which comes up at the last moment it is sufficient for notice to be given just before the opening of the House. The hon. member for Vancouver South will admit, I am sure, that he was pretty close to the line, somewhere between the first prayer and the second prayer I believe.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

[Mr. Speaker.]

Mr. Speaker: That is why I suggest that his prayer should be kept in abeyance and considered later this afternoon.

ORAL QUESTION PERIOD

REVIEW OF POLICIES FOR ATLANTIC REGION—EMPLOYMENT AND CAPITAL TARGETS

Mr. Elmer M. MacKay (Central Nova): Mr. Speaker, I had intended to direct a question to the Minister of Regional Economic Expansion but in his absence—

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. MacKay: I apologize for interrupting the hon. minister but I would like to ask him a question or two if I may. In light of the fact that unemployment in the entire Atlantic region today has risen by 20 per cent since DREE was first instituted, is the minister preparing an over-all review of the economic policies of his department bearing in mind that other economic indices are also worsening? If so, will he be making it public in the near future?

Hon. Donald C. Jamieson (Minister of Regional Economic Expansion): The short answer is yes, Mr. Speaker. I think that during the discussion that will take place when my estimates are before the committee we shall be in a better position to reveal our proposals in detail. However, I can say to the House that the record in terms of our experience of industrial incentives is such as to indicate a necessity to go out and try to induce entrepreneurs to come into the area instead of waiting and simply responding to their initiatives.

Mr. MacKay: I should now like to direct a supplementary to the Prime Minister. In light of the apparent continuing isolation of regional development priorities from the over-all economic policy of the Department of Finance, has the government formulated employment and capital targets for the Atlantic region that will discipline and co-ordinate the over-all economic policies of the government? When will such targets be made available to the public who are very concerned, particularly in the whole Atlantic region where we are not in very good shape economically?

An hon. Member: That is the repercussion of heavy water.

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): When the government discusses budgetary matters and the subject of regional economic expansion it does take those factors into account.

DEPARTMENTAL PARTICIPATION IN DEVELOPMENT OF FUNDY TIDAL POWER POTENTIAL

Mr. Lloyd R. Crouse (South Shore): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary for the Minister of Regional Economic Expansion. In view of reports that DREE may be involved in the James Bay development plan and the Upper Yukon River water diversion scheme, will the minister indicate what further action, if any, is contemplated by his department for the development of power potential in the Bay of Fundy? Is there liaison between his department and the Department of Energy, Mines and Resources in this regard?

Hon. Donald C. Jamieson (Minister of Regional Economic Expansion): The answer to the last part of the question is yes. As to the other two projects the hon. member mentioned, to my knowledge there has been no direct approach by either the provincial government of Quebec or by the governing council of the Yukon with regard to DREE representation. Indeed, at the moment, DREE is specifically excluded from participation in territories' activities and the hon. member directly concerned has made representations to me to see that they are included.

METHOD OF ATTRACTING INDUSTRIES TO CERTAIN AREAS

Hon. Robert L. Stanfield (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary arising from the minister's indication that his department intends to make arrangements to go out and attract industries into the relatively underdeveloped areas of Canada. Is it proposed that the department shall do the selling job, does the hon. gentleman propose to set up some new federal agency, or does he propose to set up some kind of joint federal-provincial agency?

Hon. Donald C. Jamieson (Minister of Transport): I think it is probable that it will be a combination of all three.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Jamieson: We would hope, primarily, that it would be on the basis of joint federal-provincial co-operation and through agencies such as the Magie project which takes in Halifax-Dartmouth and which is designed to have this kind of initiating capability.

SUGGESTED ALLOCATION OF FUNDS ACCORDING TO REGIONAL UNEMPLOYMENT—POSSIBLE OBTAINING OF SHARES BY GOVERNMENT FOR GRANTS

Mr. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa-Whitby): Bearing in mind the high unemployment levels already referred to in the Atlantic provinces, would the minister assure the House that, unlike the way in which funds were allocated by the former minister, DREE funds will in future be allocated to the various regions of Canada according to the percentage of unemployment existing in those regions.

Hon. Donald C. Jamieson (Minister of Regional Economic Expansion): If it were possible to devise a mathematical formula of that kind I would be more than pleased to be able to work it out, but I think one would have to add another part to the equation, that is, to put in the same degree entrepreneurship in all the regions or, to put it in another way, the number of applicants from the regions would be proportionate as well and that is not always the case. But the principle is good.

Mr. Broadbent: In view of the findings of the Canadian scholar, Dr. Springate, last spring that a very high percentage of the grants given to large corporations constituted a windfall profit for them, would the minister inform the House whether he will be changing the policy in relation to DREE grants and making grants conditional upon shares being owned by the government or a form of equity being acquired by the government?

Mr. Jamieson: Mr. Speaker, I hope I am permitted the same kind of preamble as the hon. member used to say that I do not agree entirely, or even largely, with the findings of Dr. Springate. However, as to the substantive part of the question, the project I mentioned to the Leader of the Opposition, the Halifax-Dartmouth complex, for instance, envisages precisely the kind of thing to which the hon. member has referred, that is, the taking of equity when this appears to be the most desirable and effective means of participating.

ENCOURAGEMENT OF ESTABLISHMENT OF ENTERPRISES IN CAPE BRETON

Mr. Robert Muir (Cape Breton-The Sydneys): In the minister's reply to my hon. friend from Central Nova he referred to the question of inducing entrepreneurs to come into the area. Is he not aware that an agency already exists on Cape Breton Island charged, among other things, with inducing people to come into the area and create industry? Is he also aware that this work has stopped since the new president, Mr. Kent, took over? Would he be good enough to contact the new president of the Cape Breton Development Corporation and try to induce him to encourage entrepreneurs to come into the area?

Hon. Donald C. Jamieson (Minister of Regional Economic Expansion): I, of course, am doing this constantly but I do not think it is necessary in this case. I think part of the problem in the area referred to, and in several other areas, lies in identifying what might be described as good economic opportunities. In other words, you have to determine what it is you have to sell before you can find an appropriate buyer. It is putting these two factors together that I am working on.

ATLANTIC REGION—MEETINGS WITH PREMIERS TO DEVISE NEW STRATEGY

Mr. James A. McGrath (St. John's East): In view of the fact that existing DREE programs have had little or no effect with regard to reducing unemployment in the Atlantic region is the minister now prepared to agree to meet with the premiers of the four Atlantic provinces to devise a new strategy of development and a program to change the present unsuccessful industrial structure with a view to creating jobs in the region?

Hon. Donald C. Jamieson (Minister of Regional Economic Expansion): As to the argumentative aspect of the question, I may say I have heard at least three premiers from the Atlantic provinces concede there have been substantial benefits from DREE. But setting this aside, I shall be meeting with Premier Hatfield next week; my anticipation is that I shall be having a fourth meeting with Premier Moores this weekend and be seeing the other two within the next two weeks to do exactly what the hon. member has suggested.

Mr. McGrath: A further supplementary question.

Mr. Speaker: Order. The Chair will recognize the hon. member for St. John's East, try to complete the first round of questioning, and then return to this subject later.

• (1450)

Mr. McGrath: Would the minister agree to stepping up the plan of the government to meet with the premiers of the four Atlantic provinces on the subject of freight rates and their impact on development and the cost of living in the region, and would he use this occasion to discuss a new strategy for the area as has been recommended by the Atlantic Development Council and the Atlantic Provinces Economic Council?

Mr. Jamieson: Mr. Speaker, on the matter of freight rates in isolation, and I concede they cannot be considered in isolation, I believe that my colleague the Minister of Transport has initiated such talks. I have also been discussing transportation as it relates to regional economic expansion. The ultimate conclusions that will be drawn I think will involve both incentives and some form of change in transportation subsidies and the like, so the two do go together, yes.

INDIAN AFFAIRS

ABORIGINAL RIGHTS—REQUEST THAT MINISTER APPEAR BEFORE COMMITTEE TO EXPLAIN GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Frank Howard (Skeena): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct my question to the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development, and I do so because we invariably get straight answers from him. As a result of the statements, whatever they were, that he and the Prime Minister made yesterday, I should like to ask whether the minister would be prepared to appear before the Standing Committee on Indian Affairs and Northern Development, which is currently examining the annual report, and lay out there in great detail the decision and the position of the government in respect of negotiating the question of land claims, aboriginal claims, native rights claims and the like?

Hon. Jean Chrétien (Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): Mr. Speaker, I would be very happy to appear before my committee whenever I am called to be there.

[Mr. McGrath.]

Mr. Howard: That being the case, Mr. Speaker, I wonder whether the minister would be prepared to explain to the committee the position of the government in respect of negotiating the claims by the Nishga tribal council?

Mr. Chrétien: Mr. Speaker, every member of the House knows that I am like an open book when I am before the committee.

Mr. Hees: Sometimes too open, Jean.

Mr. Howard: It may well be that he is like an open book, Mr. Speaker, but probably one filled with blank pages. I apologize now for prefacing my original question by saying we usually get straight answers from the minister. I should have known better. He has been influenced too much by the right hon. Prime Minister.

An hon. Member: That will teach you.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I am not sure whether the hon. member has a supplementary question, but if he has he might ask it now.

Mr. Howard: Yes, I have, Mr. Speaker. In view of all the generosity displayed by the minister, I wonder whether he would be prepared to outline the government's position in respect of negotiating with the various Indian and Eskimo people their aboriginal rights and land claims specifically from the point of view of guaranteeing that whatever position the government has taken regarding the Indians of the Yukon will not be the basis of a settlement to be crammed down the throats of the rest of these people?

Mr. Chrétien: Mr. Speaker, I will answer the question asked by the hon. member at the committee.

ABORIGINAL RIGHTS—ESTABLISHMENT OF NEGOTIATING COMMITTEE

Mr. Erik Nielsen (Yukon): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question for the minister. Since the committee passed a unanimous resolution this morning that will be reported to the House calling for the setting up of a negotiating committee as recommended by the brief of the Yukon Native Brotherhood presented yesterday, which the Prime Minister endorsed in principle, can he give us any idea when it is his intention to set up that committee since the standing committee recommended this be done before March 31?

Hon. Jean Chrétien (Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): Mr. Speaker, I cannot give any specific date today but I will move as quickly as possible.

OFFICIAL LANGUAGES ACT

QUEBEC—GENDRON COMMISSION REPORT—CONSULTATION WITH FEDERAL AUTHORITIES

Mr. René Matte (Champlain): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the Prime Minister.

Has the Gendron Commission on the situation of the French language in Quebec consulted with the federal government during its term or at least before tabling its final report?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Not to my knowledge, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Matte: Mr. Speaker, on a supplementary, may I ask whether the government intends to intervene if the recommendations of this report are found contrary to the constitution or at least contrary to the Official Languages Act?

Mr. Trudeau: Mr. Speaker, this is a rather hypothetical question, but I think the answer is self-evident. If the recommendations are contrary to the constitution, they will not be applicable.

QUEBEC—POSSIBILITY THAT GENDRON COMMISSION RECOMMENDATIONS RUN COUNTER TO LAW—GOVERNMENT POSITION—STATEMENT FROM PRIME MINISTER REQUESTED

Mr. Roch La Salle (Joliette): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask a supplementary. Will the right hon. Prime Minister tell us if he is prepared to make a statement on the recommendations of the Gendron Commission?

Mr. Trudeau: Mr. Speaker, I would have to wait first, like all other members, for the publication of the report.

Mr. John Harney (Scarborough West): Mr. Speaker, a supplementary to the right hon. Prime Minister, if I may.

Could he enlighten us on his interpretation of the word "national" as used by the Gendron Commission in the expression "a national language"?

Mr. Speaker: I do not think the question can be put as formulated. The hon. member is asking the right hon. Prime Minister to give an opinion on the meaning of a word.

LABOUR RELATIONS

ELEVATOR CONSTRUCTORS' STRIKE—FEDERAL GOVERNMENT ACTION TO ACHIEVE SETTLEMENT

Mr. Eldon M. Woolliams (Calgary North): Mr. Speaker, I should like to address this question to the Prime Minister. In light of the national crisis now affecting housing units because of cost, shortage and the economy of the country, what do the government and the Prime Minister intend to do to assist in the negotiations for a settlement of the lengthy strike of elevator construction workers which is affecting the economy of Canada in all its facets? This strike has reached the level of a crisis in respect of shortages in housing and the general health and well-being of the Canadian people.

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I would expect the hon. member would want me to defer to the Minister of Labour.

Mr. Stanfield: By all means.

An hon. Member: Go ahead.

Mr. Trudeau: Apparently he does not want me to do that.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Woolliams: If the Prime Minister does not want to answer this question—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Woolliams: —I will put it to the Minister of Finance.

An hon. Member: He won't or cannot answer it.

Mr. Woolliams: In light of the Prime Minister's refusal to answer, and in light of the fact that the strike has been going on for months without any intervention on the part of the federal government, will he take leadership and intervene?

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

An hon. Member: Explain.

Mr. Hees: There is nothing personal, John.

Mr. Woolliams: Will the minister consult with the Minister of Manpower and Immigration, the Minister of Labour, the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs and the Minister of State responsible for housing in an endeavour to settle this strike which is affecting the economy of the country?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I am sure the hon. member for Calgary North appreciates that a question asked of the Minister of Finance in those terms is not in order.

Mr. Woolliams: May I put it to the Minister of Labour?

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

An hon. Member: It is about time.

Some hon. Members: Order!

An hon. Member: No answer; non-government.

Mr. Nielsen: Take this to your leader.

Mr. Woolliams: Mr. Speaker, in light of the fact the federal government has done nothing to intervene in respect of this strike which is costing $250,000 a day in taxpayers' money, will the Minister of Labour now meet with the parties involved or with the various premiers of the provinces to bring to an end this strike which is not only affecting the economy but the health and welfare of the people of Canada?

Hon. John C. Munro (Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, it is not correct to say that we have done nothing. The fact is that we as the federal government have absolutely no jurisdiction to intervene in this particular strike.

An hon. Member: Tell us another one.

Mr. Munro (Hamilton East): It is exclusively a matter of provincial jurisdiction. In spite of that fact, I did contact the Ontario government to indicate the serious implications this prolonged strike was having, and to indicate our interest. Of course, this would automatically leave the impression that if that government felt we could be of any help, in spite of the fact the matter is within its jurisdiction, it could contact us, but it has not done so.

Mr. Woolliams: Mr. Speaker, in view of the fact the Minister of Labour has shunned his responsibility in this case and tried to pass this off as a constitutional question, may I ask the Minister of Manpower and Immigration whether he would investigate and take into account the big drain on the unemployment insurance fund of Canada as a result of thousands of construction workers put out of work because this government will not take action?

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

An hon. Member: No leadership.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Is the hon. member rising to ask a supplementary question?

ELEVATOR CONSTRUCTORS' STRIKE—REASON FOR ONTARIO GOVERNMENT NOT INTERVENING

Mr. David Lewis (York South): I have a supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. I should like to ask the Minister of Labour whether he has ascertained the reason the Prime Minister and government of the province of Ontario have refused to intervene in this dispute although the premier of another province has done so?

• (1500)

Hon. John C. Munro (Minister of Labour): No, I cannot answer that question, Mr. Speaker. As the Leader of the Opposition knows, I cannot go into the motivations one way or another of the politicians in the Ontario provincial government. The fact is that I do know that the Ontario Department of Labour has had its personnel available in their mediation role but despite their efforts the talks have broken down. From what I read I take it there is pressure on that government to intervene and take constructive action, but I have had no further report.

ELEVATOR CONSTRUCTORS' STRIKE—SUGGESTED FEDERAL PARTICIPATION IN INDUSTRIAL INQUIRY COMMISSION

Mr. Lincoln M. Alexander (Hamilton West): I have a supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. In view of the fact Nova Scotia has called for an industrial inquiry commission in order to look into this five month old strike and in light of the concern of the minister, would the minister communicate with the parties involved to see if this government can be either a party to the commission or at least be there as an observer. I hope the minister can take this under advisement.

Hon. John C. Munro (Minister of Labour): I think it is obvious that even the parties to this dispute are prepared to acknowledge that the federal government has no jurisdiction and that the provinces involved, particularly Ontario, are prepared to accept their exclusive jurisdiction and not call upon the federal government to help. There is absolutely no leverage for the federal government to make a constructive contribution in this matter at all.

[Mr. Munro (Hamilton East).]

Mr. Alexander: In light of the fact the minister has had some conversations with at least the authorities of the province of Ontario and therefore did set the tone, does the minister not now think this is the proper time for him to become involved once again in order to see whether his department can be of assistance in this matter?

Mr. Munro (Hamilton East): Mr. Speaker, in view of the obvious serious implications here, of course we would try to render whatever assistance we could. If the hon. member and other hon. members opposite view this in the light they have expressed now, they are in a better position than I to approach their political counterparts in the province of Ontario.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I will have to seek the cooperation of hon. members very soon. We are still on the second or third question. There are a number of members seeking to ask questions. We have had quite a few supplementaries on two or three questions. At this point I will recognize the hon. member for Cape Breton-East Richmond.

Mr. Donald MacInnis (Cape Breton-East Richmond): Mr. Speaker, my supplementary is addressed to the Minister of Public Works. Since this comes within the jurisdiction of his department, I should like to ask the minister whether he will take some action concerning the elevators within this building as well as other government buildings in Ottawa, and at least see that they are repaired?

Hon. Jean-Eudes Dubé (Minister of Public Works): Mr. Speaker, the observations of the Minister of Labour still apply. If hon. members on the other side have any influence with their provincial counterparts, they should ask them to move.

Mr. MacInnis (Cape Breton-East Richmond): I rise on a point of order, Mr. Speaker, because the answer given to me by the minister is quite out of line with the facts. There is no doubt about the fact that the Minister of Public Works is responsible for government buildings in this area, and it is time he got off his butt and did something about it.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Again, there are members seeking to ask supplementaries on this question. I hope hon. members will not feel hurt if I try to go on to the next subject. I shall recognize the hon. member for Prince Albert who probably has a non-controversial question to ask.

ENERGY

SUGGESTED CONSTRUCTION OF RAILWAY FROM NORTH WITH TERMINUS IN SASKATCHEWAN TO TRANSPORT OIL AND GAS—REQUEST FOR ESTIMATE OF COST

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prince Albert): Mr. Speaker, my questions are always modest and only attempt to obtain information. In view of the fact that one of the most important economic matters facing our country today is the question of the transport of oil, gas and so on from the Yukon and Alaska I wish to ask the Minister of Transport whether there is a task force now operating to the end that problems of environmental difficulty and so on will not come into being should the suggestion be accepted to build a railway from the north having its initial terminus in Saskatchewan which, with objectivity and great personal restraint, I suggest should be in Prince Albert?

Hon. Jean Marchand (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, as the right hon. gentleman knows, so far as oil and gas are concerned they come under the authority of my colleagues the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources and the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development. So far as other highways or railways in the north are concerned, we are negotiating with the British Columbia and Alberta governments.

I met with Mr. Peacock, the minister of industry and commerce, to see how we could develop highways to the north, including the Mackenzie highway, and how we can relate the British Columbia Railway to the CNR so that we can move farther into the north. Of course, this is all related to the resources that can be exploited, and we will have to wait a little longer to see what is discovered by the companies that exist now and by the department of energy.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Mr. Speaker, I thank the minister very much for his full answer. He mentioned Alberta and British Columbia. I should like to ask him whether or not the most appropriate route would not be through Saskatchewan, and what is the estimate today of the cost of such a railway through British Columbia and Alberta with the terminus I mentioned in Saskatchewan. Have any such estimates been made?

Mr. Marchand (Langelier): Mr. Speaker, as I said, I have met with the minister of industry and commerce from Alberta and with the premier of British Columbia. I have not yet met with the premier of Saskatchewan. I intend to do so. I think we will have to study the whole question of transportation in the north in consultation with the provinces. Whenever those studies are complete I will be happy to make a report to the hon. gentleman.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Has any estimate of the cost been made by these several task forces which have been set up apparently to look into this matter?

Mr. Marchand (Langelier): Yes. Some have been estimated and others have not been estimated yet.

PROPOSED ALASKA OIL PIPELINE—REPRESENTATIONS TO THE UNITED STATES

Mr. Erik Nielsen (Yukon): Mr. Speaker, I was interested to hear the minister say he was in consultation with members of the governments of British Columbia and Alberta. I was most disappointed not to hear him say that he was in consultation with the elected representatives of the people of the north concerning these matters. My supplementary is directed to the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources. In view of the report that President Nixon has indicated that legislation will be introduced in the United States which will have the effect of voiding the decision of the court in respect of the construction of the Alyeska line, and in view of the fact that President Nixon apparently stated his preference for the sea route, has the minister himself or has the Secretary of State for External Affairs renewed the protest Canada sent to the United States some time ago?

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, as I mentioned to the hon. member for Calgary North yesterday, we made representations some 11 months ago to the United States administration leading to the construction of an oil pipeline down the Mackenzie corridor rather than through the Alyeska route. The United States administration decided then, and apparently has renewed the decision, to proceed by way of the Alyeska route, although I think it is fair to point out that this question will have to go back to the court of first instance. Mr. Justice Hart will now have to evaluate the possibility of a Canadian route, so it may be some years before there is a full judgment on this question. I would expect that the studies done in Canada will be very germane to that judgment.

TRANSPORT

WEST COAST MARINE PILOTS—GOVERNMENT ACTION TO AVERT POSSIBLE STRIKE

Mr. Les Benjamin (Regina-Lake Centre): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the Minister of Transport. This question does come under federal jurisdiction. In view of the threat of a strike to take effect at midnight tonight by the B.C. Coast Pilots Association, and in view of the representations telegraphed to him by the premier of Saskatchewan, could the minister tell us what action he has taken to have negotiations resumed immediately?

Hon. Jean Marchand (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I think that the parties are meeting right now. However, I should emphasize that this is a very peculiar situation because both the pilots' organization and the employers' organization are companies registered under British Columbia laws. They are not unions as defined in the Canada Labour Code.

Mr. Benjamin: In view of the fact the B.C. Pacific Pilotage Authority reports to the Minister of Transport and that most of the proposals of the British Columbia Coast Pilots Association call for improvements in the working conditions, safety procedures and safety equipment, will the minister instruct the B.C. Pacific Pilotage Authority to resume negotiations? Will he also assure the authority that there will be adequate funds to meet the proposals of the pilots regarding safety procedures and working conditions?

Mr. Marchand (Langelier): I do not intend to instruct the pilotage authority, and I wonder whether I have this authority under the law. Negotiations are proceeding right now and I certainly do not wish to intervene. I think that everyone should be very careful in this situation because the pilots on the west coast, as well as other pilots, are not wage earners making $2,000 or $3,000 a year but have an average salary of probably $25,000 or $30,000 a year. This does not mean they have no rights. They have some rights, and they are negotiating. I think it would be preferable if the hon. gentleman would wait until the negotiations are completed.

RAILWAY ACCIDENT AT SAINT-GERMAIN—REQUEST FOR INVESTIGATION BY MINISTER

Mr. Eudore Allard (Rimouski): Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask a question of the Minister of Transport concerning an unfortunate accident which took place on December 9. It has to do with the railroad accident at Saint-Germain in the riding of Drummond where two persons were killed, implicating nine dependents. Early in December, the coroner's inquest had not been held yet. Does the minister intend to intervene in that sad matter?

Hon. Jean Marchand (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I will get more information because I do not know enough about it to give a satisfactory answer.

LABOUR CONDITIONS

UNEMPLOYMENT AMONG YOUNG PEOPLE—REQUEST FOR REPORT ON INTERDEPARTMENTAL COMMITTEE AND EMPLOYMENT PROGRAM

Mr. Joe Clark (Rocky Mountain): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Prime Minister. Since the January figures for unemployment indicate that we are now into the fifth year in a row in which the unemployment crisis is most acute among Canadians under the age of 24, and since the Prime Minister indicated last year, as recorded at page 3081 of Hansard, that he would review the progress of the interdepartmental committee which was established to look at youth employment policies, I wonder whether the Prime Minister has activated that committee again or created a new one? In any event, when will he be in a position to announce to the House and to the country a comprehensive new program to find jobs for the 300,000 young Canadians who are now out of work?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, as regards the latter part of the question, we expect that the budget will present Canadians with an economic statement which will help all sections of the economy.

Mr. Clark (Rocky Mountain): Mr. Speaker, since the Prime Minister's answer indicates that there has been no change in the government's lack of policy in this respect, I wonder whether I might ask the Secretary of State a supplementary question. Has he received a copy of the report of that interdepartmental committee, and will he either table it in the House or at least indicate when the government intends to introduce new programs to reduce the high rate of unemployment among young people which has been a feature of Canadian life ever since this government was elected?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The question as asked is not in order.

VANCOUVER INTERNATIONAL—REQUEST FOR DELAY IN EXPROPRIATION PROCEEDINGS UNTIL ALL QUESTIONS ANSWERED

Hon. Robert L. Stanfield (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Transport arising out of the great concern in Vancouver about the proposed expansion of the airport, a concern that arises from the fact a number of major questions have not been answered relating to noise and the effect on land values. I should like to ask the minister again whether he is prepared to provide some kind of a moratorium there so that the people concerned can get answers to the questions that are concerning them so seriously.

Hon. Jean Marchand (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I think I have answered the question already. A hearing is now taking place under the Expropriation Act. Nothing will be done before the completion of this hearing, the date of which I believe is March 4. After the public meeting took place a public information kit was distributed very widely in Vancouver to all those who are interested in the problem. It contains all the answers, and I will be happy to send a copy of it to the hon. gentleman.

Mr. Reynolds: On a point of order—

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member is rising on a point of order.

Mr. Reynolds: Mr. Speaker, the minister stated yesterday that the questions were answered. He has a telegram or the Prime Minister has a telegram from the greater Vancouver regional board which states that 15 major questions have not yet been answered. My point of order is that either the Minister of Transport is misinforming the House or he does not know what his own department is doing in Vancouver.

VETERANS AFFAIRS

DEER LODGE HOSPITAL—NEGOTIATIONS ON TRANSFER OF RESPONSIBILITY TO MANITOBA—MAINTENANCE OF MEDICAL STANDARDS AND JOB SECURITY

Mr. Dan McKenzie (Winnipeg South Centre): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Veterans Affairs. Are negotiations going on at present between the federal government and the Manitoba government to transfer responsibility for the Deer Lodge Veterans Hospital to the province?

Hon. Daniel J. MacDonald (Minister of Veterans Affairs): Mr. Speaker, the answer is yes.

Mr. McKenzie: What measures are being taken to ensure that medical standards and the job security of hospital staff will be maintained by the province?

Mr. MacDonald (Cardigan): Mr. Speaker, this precaution is taken. Before the hospital is transferred to the other party we will certainly have this assurance.

MANPOWER

REQUEST FOR TOLL FREE TELEPHONE SERVICE TO CERTAIN CENTRES

Mr. J. R. Ellis (Hastings): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Manpower and Immigration and it is very important to the people in my riding. Would the minister indicate whether or not he has considered installing a toll free telephone service to the Canada Manpower Centres, especially in such areas as the Hastings riding where some employers are 100 miles away from the Canada Manpower Centre?

Hon. Robert K. Andras (Minister of Manpower and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, I will give the hon. member's representation due consideration.

CANADIAN BROADCASTING CORPORATION

OPPOSITION OF CANADIAN TEACHERS FEDERATION TO TRANSFER OF RIGHTS TO FILM AND VIDEOTAPE TO PRIVATE COMPANY

Mr. Mark Rose (Fraser Valley West): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the Secretary of State when he intends to meet with the Canadian Teachers Federation to discuss that body's brief opposing the granting of rights to the CBC film and videotape library to a private distribution company?

Hon. James Hugh Faulkner (Secretary of State): Mr. Speaker, I have an invitation to attend the meeting but I cannot remember that we agreed to a date. I will report to the hon. member.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member will be allowed a supplementary question and then I will recognize the hon. member for Norfolk-Haldimand.

Mr. Rose: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Since there have been a great number of objections from school districts and teachers organizations to granting to a private distribution company the right to rent films and tapes that were paid for out of public funds, has the minister given any consideration to setting up a Crown distribution corporation or, alternatively, having the films distributed through provincial audio-visual services.

Mr. Faulkner: Not yet, Mr. Speaker.

FLOODS

DAMAGE CAUSED BY HIGH WATER LEVELS OF GREAT LAKES—REQUEST FOR COMPENSATION

Mr. William Knowles (Norfolk-Haldimand): Mr. Speaker, inasmuch as the substance of my question relates to several departments of the government, I will direct it to the Prime Minister. In view of the fact that the abnormally high water levels on the Great Lakes have caused flooding and erosion of catastrophic proportions resulting in the loss of farmland, dwellings and harbour installations, what steps is the government prepared to take to compensate financially those individuals and municipalities who have suffered such a grievous loss?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, without getting into the question of compensation, because that is a matter to be discussed and established, I would say that the government is making a real effort to co-ordinate the actions of the various departments involved. A minister has been appointed in the person of the Minister of the Environment to co-ordinate these policies and to respond.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. There are only two or three minutes left before the end of the question period. We could use them for supplementary questions but my thought is that perhaps we should allow a few hon. members on the back benches to ask questions.

• (1520)

Mr. Nesbitt: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker, this flooding is a matter of great urgency to hon. members and also to the province of Ontario. I know that a number of hon. members have supplementaries to ask, and I hope Your Honour will see some of the other hon. members who are involved in this matter.

Mr. Speaker: Perhaps the Chair could be allowed to recognize the hon. member for Swift Current-Maple Creek.

GRAIN

LOW FINAL PAYMENTS—POSSIBLE LOSS TO FARMERS RESULTING FROM WHEAT BOARD'S DEALINGS IN STERLING

Mr. Frank Hamilton (Swift Current-Maple Creek): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister in charge of the Canadian Wheat Board. It is not a supplementary question. In view of the surprisingly low final payment announced yesterday on wheat and oats, with no payment on barley, can the minister tell the House if western farmers have had to absorb the loss resulting from the Canadian Wheat Board's unhedged and unprotected sterling balance when Great Britain devalued her currency during that pool year? Knowledgeable people in the trade have estimated that this has cost the farmers many millions of dollars.

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister of Justice): Mr. Speaker, let me say fairly simply but directly that the suggestion is quite wrong. For rather obvious reasons, I do not want to get into the business of commenting on the day-to-day operations of the Canadian Wheat Board in connection with its currency holdings, but I can assure hon. members that the Canadian Wheat Board uses extremely good advice, does use hedging operations, and in fact came out very well indeed in the case of these particular currency holdings.

PROSECUTIONS UNDER WHEAT BOARD ACT—REQUEST FOR REVIEW OF LEGISLATION

Mr. Gordon Towers (Red Deer): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the minister in charge of the Canadian Wheat Board. Due to the fact that a number of farmers in central Alberta are being charged in court under the Canadian Wheat Board Act, can the minister in charge of the Canadian Wheat Board, who is also the minister in charge of justice, assure this House that he will undertake a review of the act to ensure that it is formulated in such a manner as to be in the best interests of the grain producers?

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister of Justice): Mr. Speaker, as I have indicated previously in the House, I have had discussions with the Canadian Wheat Board about the problem of charges in certain cases such as the ones to which the hon. member refers, and about the Wheat Board's requirement to take action in certain circumstances to protect its position. I will, therefore, take very seriously the hon. member's suggestion that we consider, at an early opportunity, whether additional provisions should be put into the Wheat Board Act to deal with special positions like that.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The Chair will recognize the hon. member for Nickel Belt for a question, and then perhaps we might have two or three supplementaries on the question which was of interest to the hon. member for Oxford.

HOUSING

ALLEGED SHORTAGE OF SKILLED WORKERS—POSSIBILITY OF IMMIGRANTS FILLING GAP

Mr. John Rodriguez (Nickel Belt): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the Minister of Manpower and Immigration. Keeping in mind last year's 250,000 housing starts and the prediction by CMHC that there will be several thousand more housing starts across Canada this year than last year, and also considering the imminently grave shortage of 10,000 to 25,000 skilled workers in the housing and building trades next summer, what steps is the minister taking to avoid such a shortage?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The Chair will allow the minister to reply briefly, but normally this information should be given by way of a statement on motions.

Hon. Robert K. Andras (Minister of Manpower and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, officials of my department and I have met with the executive members of the Housing and Urban Development Association of Canada for the purpose of devising measures to combat this situation, although there is at present quite a discrepancy between the estimated shortage of skilled workers reported by the hon. member and, as a matter of fact, reported by the Housing and Urban Development Association of Canada, and our own records. We are attempting to reconcile this now and are developing programs to alleviate the situation.

Mr. Rodriguez: Can the minister tell the House whether there were any discussions in terms of opening immigration avenues to solve this problem?

Mr. Andras: There has been an allusion to the question of immigration. I am not sure that is a bad solution, but we certainly have to examine the situation a great deal more deeply before I give a positive response in terms of opening up immigration for that purpose.

FLOODS

REQUEST FOR ACTION TO PREVENT FURTHER DAMAGE BY HIGH LEVELS OF GREAT LAKES

Mr. W. B. Nesbitt (Oxford): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the Prime Minister. It relates to the question posed earlier by the hon. member for Norfolk-Haldimand. While all of us appreciate that the government is giving consideration to compensation and other matters because of the very high lake levels in southern Ontario, can the Prime Minister tell us what he plans to do in collaboration with several of his ministers, the Minister of Public Works, the Minister of the Environment, the Secretary of State for External Affairs and others, to prevent further damage, which will most certainly take place in the immediate future if something is not done? I draw your Honour's attention to the imminent spring breakup which when it takes place in Lake Erie, will cause damage of enormous proportions to houses and other property.

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I think my previous answer indicated that we do realize it is a serious problem, and that is why the government has set up this group under the Minister of the Environment to bring attention to it. Of course, meanwhile if the hon. member has specific suggestions to bring forth I am sure the minister would be pleased to hear them.

POSSIBLE ACTION BY INTERNATIONAL JOINT COMMISSION TO LOWER LEVELS OF GREAT LAKES

Mr. Ron Atkey (St. Paul's): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a supplementary question to the Minister of the Environment. In view of the fact that the city of Toronto executive committee yesterday requested the federal government to make immediate and urgent representations to the International Joint Commission with a view to lowering the dangerous high water levels of Lake Ontario and of the other Great Lakes, what steps has the government taken, and has the IJC been contacted?

Hon. Jack Davis (Minister of the Environment): Mr. Speaker, the IJC has been contacted in this regard. I might also say that the engineering staff supplied to the IJC on the Canadian side is in fact staff from the water management service of the Department of the Environment. It is possible, within narrow limits, to regulate the water levels in Lake Ontario, and we are doing our best.

POST OFFICE

REQUEST FOR COMMEMORATIVE STAMP TO HONOUR CENTENNIAL OF ONTARIO AGRICULTURAL COLLEGE

Mr. A. D. Hales (Wellington): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Postmaster General. In view of the fact that the time honoured science of agriculture, in conjunction with the Ontario Agricultural College, will be celebrating their centennial next year, is it the intention of the Postmaster General to issue a commemorative stamp to honour this great science and this outstanding agricultural college?

[Translation]

Hon. André Ouellet (Postmaster General): Mr. Speaker, I shall be pleased to take the hon. member's suggestion into consideration.

REQUEST FOR COMMEMORATIVE STAMP TO HONOUR INVENTION OF TELEPHONE

Mr. Derek Blackburn (Brant): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a supplementary question to the Postmaster General. In connection with the celebration of the invention of the telephone in the city of Brantford, Ontario, is the minister considering striking a special stamp in commemoration of that event?

[Translation]

Hon. André Ouellet (Postmaster General): Mr. Speaker, I shall before long announce next year's commemorative stamp program. Therefore, I would ask the hon. member to exercise a little patience.

FINANCE

WINTER PROJECTS CAPITAL FUND—ALLEGED FAILURE OF ONTARIO TO PROVIDE APPLICATION FORMS TO MUNICIPALITIES

Mr. Norman A. Cafik (Ontario): Mr. Speaker, I would like to direct a question to the Minister of Finance. In view of the fact the federal government announced the establishment of the $350 million winter projects capital fund back on December 6 last and two and a half months have subsequently gone by and the province of Ontario has not made available even application forms to municipalities—

Some hon. Members: Shame!

Mr. Cafik: —to take advantage of this program to reduce unemployment in the province during the winter months, would the minister take some immediate action to encourage the province of Ontario to play its role in reducing winter unemployment?

Hon. John N. Turner (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, not only is that a very good suggestion but I would encourage the opposition in the House to pass the appropriation bill in order to make it all possible.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. We have really gone beyond the end of the question period, but perhaps the Chair might be allowed to call two other hon. members, without supplementaries, first the hon. member for Halton, then the hon. member for Vancouver-Kingsway, and then call orders of the day.

AIR TRANSPORT

RECIPROCAL LANDING RIGHTS WITH ALITALIA IN MILAN TO CANADIAN CARRIER

Mr. Terry O'Connor (Halton): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Transport. With respect to the anticipated awarding of reciprocal landing rights with Alitalia in Milan to a Canadian air carrier, is the minister yet in a position to advise the House when this award will be made and to whom it will be granted?

• (1530)

Hon. Jean Marchand (Minister of Transport): Excuse me, Mr. Speaker, but I did not hear the first part of the question. Would the hon. member mind repeating it?

Mr. O'Connor: I am sorry, Mr. Speaker. With respect to the anticipated awarding of reciprocal landing rights with Alitalia in Milan to a Canadian air carrier, is the minister yet in a position to advise when this award will be made and to whom it will be granted?

Mr. Marchand (Langelier): Mr. Speaker, as far as Alitalia is concerned the decision has been made. Alitalia can land in Montreal and Toronto. As far as Milan is concerned, this has not been attributed yet to a Canadian carrier but it will be eventually.

COMBINES

ALLEGED COLLUSION AMONG OIL COMPANIES—REQUEST FOR INVESTIGATION

Mrs. Grace MacInnis (Vancouver-Kingsway): Mr. Speaker, if this question is a little longer than usual it is because I cannot have a supplementary. The question is directed to the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs. In view of a formal complaint made yesterday by the Consumers Association of Canada alleging collusion among the various oil companies in the recent price increases in gasoline and fuel oil and requesting an inquiry under the Combines Investigation Act, can the minister assure us that he will do his best to see that this investigation gets top priority?

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Hon. Herb Gray (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): Mr. Speaker, actually the formal request was received by the Director of Combines Investigations, I am informed, not yesterday but the day before. I am sure he is carrying out his statutory responsibilities but I will continue to be in touch with him for that purpose.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The Chair definitely will call orders of the day after the hon. member for Vegreville has been heard.

AIR TRANSPORT

RECIPROCAL LANDING RIGHTS WITH ALITALIA IN MILAN—POSSIBLE CHANGE IN GOVERNMENT POLICY

Mr. Don Mazankowski (Vegreville): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Transport and arises out of a question posed by the hon. member for Halton. In light of the declared aviation policy defined in 1965 which in effect would place Milan in an area to be served by Canadian Pacific Airlines, and in view of the government's slowness in awarding the landing rights for the city of Milan, can the minister indicate to the House whether the government is now considering a deviation from that policy as defined in 1965?

Hon. Jean Marchand (Minister of Transport): No, Mr. Speaker, we try to have a rational policy and I hope it will be known by the House shortly.

Mr. Speaker: Orders of the day. The hon. member for Gander-Twillingate rises on a point of order.

Mr. Lundrigan: Mr. Speaker, this is a point of order which affects all members of the House of Commons and, indeed, the Canadian nation. I trust that in hearing my point of order Your Honour will not interpret it as resulting from selfish motives. There is nobody in this House of Commons who has less reason to raise this point of order than I. If one looks back over the past five years one will find I have had my fair share of questions and comments in the House. My point arises from the fact that I look around every day and see about 20 or 25 members rise in the House at question time trying to ask questions.

Earlier today a question was raised about regional development, one which had serious implications not only for economic development but for national unity. Out of a sense of justice to all members, Your Honour was required to bypass this subject after several questions. I quite understood this and I think other hon. members did as well. However, there are other questions just as fundamental, and if hon. members cannot raise them in the House of Commons it is my contention, as a rookie in the House, that this will manifest itself throughout the country. A lot of the frustration that we have results from the fact we cannot get things resolved through the debating forum in the House of Commons. This frustration is going to build up in the country and result in a lot of unnecessary bad feeling.

Mr. Speaker, I am no relation at all to the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles), but I feel that if you go back to Magna Carta you will find that the fundamental rights of members of the House of Commons are the right to be heard and the right to speak. I can quote from several sections of the 1958 version of Beauchesne, particularly where it says that a great deal of latitude must be allowed in the House of Commons which is a forum where every phase of public affairs can be discussed and where every member has the right to be heard, even if in doing so sometimes the rigidity of procedure is disregarded.

I remember reading Hansard back in 1961 and 1962 when I was interested in one day becoming a member of the House. A few hon. members, amongst whom was J. W. Pickersgill who represented my district, raised hundreds of questions in the House of Commons day after day, questions which affected the people for whom they were speaking. We are getting to the point today, because of the 40 minute question period and because the opposition is larger than the government, where many members are not given the right to raise questions.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Lundrigan: Mr. Speaker, we spend hours of debate on subjects such as agriculture, manpower, fisheries and many other subjects which are boring and of interest only to one lonely member, unwatched from the press gallery and unobserved by people in the general gallery. This gives us hundreds of hours of debate which are meaningless, which are not reported and which do not give the country a chance for—I do not know what the word would be if I were using a medical term—catharsis', it does not give the catharsis which the country needs.

I would strongly recommend to Your Honour that while hon. members have a little bit of patience left the House leaders take this question a little more seriously than just hearing what I have to say today. I think that we should lift the ceiling on the question period on one day a week or even on two days a week. I think that the good, common sense of hon. members would not encourage them to go beyond responsible behaviour. If we cannot agree to have one or two days a week when we ignore the length of the question period, then consideration should be given immediately to extending it to at least an hour.

I get my share of questions because I do not ask the initial question but usually supplementaries related to questions asked by other hon. members. However, today I stood up and I was beginning to get concerned when I was not recognized, but as I looked around there were 40 or 50 other members standing up. Some of them sat down again and others walked out in disgust. Mr. Speaker, they are here to talk about issues as fundamental to their regions as regional development is to my region. I know that I am speaking for all Canadians when I say the question period is one time when we, as Members of Parliament, can bring forward issues that are of monumental importance in a forum in which they can be properly aired. The cutting off of questions at the end of 40 minutes is encouraging the build-up of negative attitudes in this country, and we cannot afford that.

Mr. Speaker, I have the greatest respect for the way you handle the question period. I do not think anybody in the House could exercise more wisdom, more patience or more fairness, but I suggest that if the question period is to be meaningful, action should be taken in the next few days, even if that requires a reference from parliament, to alleviate the problem by extending the period twice or three times a week.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for St. Boniface.

Mr. Howie: Mr. Speaker, on the same point of order—

Mr. Guay (St. Boniface): Mr. Speaker, I hope that—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member for St. Boniface has the floor on a point of order and is entitled to be recognized.

Mr. Guay (St. Boniface): Mr. Speaker, I hope you will give me half the length of time the previous speaker had. I, too am not happy with the use of Standing Orders 43 and 26 by the opposition. There was a good example of that today. Many members used those Standing Orders today, knowing full well that they really did not have a particular point to bring to your attention. They make use of these rules every day, and lately we have been losing about 40 minutes on these motions before we even start the question period.

I should like to agree with the hon. member for Gander-Twillingate (Mr. Lundrigan) that the question period should be made longer. However, I feel that if the members of the various parties used the question period to bring only pertinent matters before the House, better use could be made of that time for further important matters, to the benefit of all Canadians. Mr. Speaker, I think this is a matter for co-operation. Perhaps the House leaders could speak to the members of their own parties in an effort to make sure that the time of the House is not taken up with irrelevant motions made under Standing Order 43 or Standing Order 26, which often waste an hour before the question period starts.

[Translation]

Mr. André Fortin (Lotbinière): Mr. Speaker, for some time I have been wanting to speak on the same subject on a point of order. However, I would disagree with the hon. member who raised this point of order.

Mr. Speaker, it is obvious that the oral question period has become a mockery and has been abused. It will be said that members from the back benches cannot ask questions; I would remind them that members of the Social Credit party, which is an integral part of this House, have asked two questions today and this for the simple reason that the official opposition does ask too many supplementaries. If the members of Her Majesty's loyal opposition would understand how important it is for them and for others to give a chance to other members to ask a question, I do not doubt, knowing the tact, finesse and competence of the Chair, that all hon. members wanting to ask a question would be able to do so in their turn. But as long as the official opposition will abuse by raising five, six, eight or ten supplementaries from the beginning of the question period, which delays the first question of the New Democratic party leader for 15 minutes and that of the Social Credit party leader for 15 minutes more, finally some day the question period will be over and members from the back benches from both sides of the House will have no time left to ask their questions.

Mr. Speaker, I want you to know that we are supporting you and that we disagree with the critics of the hon. member and we urge you to see that those people refrain from abusing the question period by asking supplementaries so as to grant the same privilege to hon. members from the other parties.

Mr. Stanfield: Mr. Speaker, although I do not support any suggestion that the Official Opposition is utilizing a disproportionate amount of the question period, I should like to make a suggestion to the hon. member for St. Boniface (Mr. Guay): If he will speak to his group, I will consult with mine, to see if we can make any constructive suggestion to Your Honour that might be helpful.

Mr. Peters: Mr. Speaker, may I add this: I think there is general agreement that the question period has been badly abused. One can blame the leadership of the various parties and the neglect of party leaders with respect to the individual problems of backbenchers. I suggest that the House leaders be asked to meet with the procedure committee in order that we may change the rules governing the question period. The problem, which Your Honour cannot cope with because of existing circumstances, arises from the fact that the first question leads to a mini-debate, followed possibly by 10 or 12 supplementary questions. Then, another question is asked, which also turns into a mini-debate as several other supplementaries are asked.

The backbenchers in all parts of the House really do not participate, except by bottlegging related questions in the question period, or questions on other topics. If we are to avoid calamity in the question period I strongly urge Your Honour, as a member of that procedure committee, to bring the House leaders together for the purpose of revising the rules. Unless our rules are changed, the question period will become a shambles. All members in this minority parliament ought to be equal.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Peters: There should be, at least, partial equality of opportunity to ask questions, and there is not. But for Your Honour's kindness and guidance, many members could not ask any questions. This holds true for those members who are classed as independent as well for all those who sit in the back rows of this chamber. Perhaps Your Honour could use your good offices in such a way that we could split the question period into a leaders' hour which would be followed by a question period for backbenchers. The leaders' hour could be devoted to questions asked by members of the front benches and to supplementaries, and the rest of the question period should be so arranged as to allow an individual member to present the problems of his individual riding and perhaps other parts of the country as well.

Mr. Stewart (Cochrane): Mr. Speaker, on the same point of order, I sympathize with the hon. member for Gander-Twillingate (Mr. Lundrigan). Certainly, a number of backbenchers wish to ask important questions, and they would like more time in which to ask them. I wish to make a point which is sometimes heard in the house but does not seem to receive too much attention, namely, that government members also would like to ask questions but they do not seem to have the opportunity in the question period to do so.

An hon. Member: Raise that in caucus.

Mr. Stewart (Cochrane): I understand that the attitude of some hon. members is that as we, on this side, are supporters of the government, we should be in accord with everything the government does. That is not the point. Some of us may question policies being carried out by the cabinet and we, as backbenchers, want to know about these things.

An hon. Member: Ask in caucus.

Mr. Stewart (Cochrane): Therefore, we have the right, as Members of Parliament and as supporters of the government to ask such questions in the House.

There is another point which is not well understood. In addition to the several opposition parties in the House, we must face an even stronger opposition, that of the fourth estate, which is powerful in this country. The backbenchers of the Liberal party have just as much right to the forum provided by this House for the purposes of asking questions and seeing their views expressed in the press as the other backbenchers of other parties.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Stewart (Cochrane): It seems to me that the present practice should be changed so that backbenchers on the government side may have an opportunity to put forth their views in the same proportion as members on the other side of the House. I welcome what the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Stanfield) said, namely, that he will speak to his people, if the House leader on my side of the House will speak to the people on this side. Certainly, a number of questions asked in this House are not necessarily questions of national interest. Of course, we are all political beings; we all want to be given publicity in our ridings. At the same time, a question about a bridge over a little river in a certain riding is not a question of national importance. Many such questions are asked in this House during the question period. I suggest that if hon. members bear in mind that we are concerned about national matters in this House, we could perhaps solve part of our difficulty.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. MacDonald (Egmont): Mr. Speaker, as you know, for the third time in about a week a point of order has been raised at the end of the question period to do with the question period. This indicates not only that many hon. members have not had a chance to ask questions but the magnitude of the problem as well. I will not repeat what has been said, although I should like to add this: When the 40-minute limitation was established in the previous parliament, that parliament was constituted differently from the present one. Although we tried to devise rules that would find application in more than one parliament, to a certain degree the rules that we introduced in the previous parliament were surrounded by considerable controversy. Those rules reflected the fact that there were more than 150 members on the government side and slightly more than 100 in opposition. Today, the reverse is true. There are a few more than 100 on the government side and more than 150 in opposition. If individual members are to be allowed to ask their questions, the rules governing the question period in this parliament will need to be reconsidered. Under a simple rule of thumb we might extend the question period by 50 per cent, in recognition of the number of members who now sit on opposition benches.

Another practical suggestion is this: Perhaps the government House leader, in view of comments which reflect frustrations, might convene the standing committee on procedure, perhaps by unanimous consent. The government House leader could present a motion, either later today or tomorrow, so that this committee could immediately attend to this important question. I think that is important, in view of the nature of this parliament, and this question should not be allowed to drag on for weeks. I urge the government House leader to bring forward a straightforward motion so that the standing committee on procedure could convene early next week, say, consider this problem and present an interim report as to what action can be taken on this question.

I realize that in dealing with a question originally raised by the hon. member for Gander-Twillingate we are dealing with a matter that goes beyond Your Honour's jurisdiction. Nevertheless, I think it is important for us to hear an expression of Your Honour's views so that the members of the House, through the instrumentality of this committee, may resolve this difficult question.

Mr. Korchinski: Mr. Speaker, I want to comment on a few items that have not been mentioned during the course of this discussion. There may be a sense of urgency on the part of many members in this minority situation. Under normal circumstances, the pressure on each individual member may not be as great, that is if we were to assume that parliament would be here for four or five years. In that situation, members can expect to be recognized. There is not such a sense of urgency.

Another point is that which I raised yesterday in connection with questions being asked and notice being taken of them. Perhaps there could be an allocation of a few minutes time, either before or after the question period, at which time only those questions of which notice has been taken could be answered. In that way a member who has been jumping up and down like a yoyo for two weeks will not have to repeat his question. It is incumbent upon a minister to meet a commitment which he makes to this House and the country. It is not only the members of the press who read Hansard. It is read by people all across this country. There are people who wait for these answers. Perhaps that extra few minutes will not be necessary on every occasion.

There is another point that arises. There are limitations on debates in the House. In addition, restrictions are imposed on members in committees in the sense that in some committees members are not permitted to ask questions which they were unable to ask in the House. In some committees, there is a rule that unless you are a member of the committee, you cannot ask a question until the questions of committee members have been exhausted. Some members are practical jokers. They continually ask questions and thereby frustrate other members. If you cannot ask a question in the House or in committee within a certain time, the question may become unnecessary. After a month has elapsed, there is no point in asking the question. It is no longer urgent. That is an added frustration for many members.

With regard to starred questions, I think there should be a limit of three or four days or a week in which they must be answered. I think that would facilitate their use. At the same time, possibly one supplementary question should be allowed when a starred question is answered. This is not always necessary, but it would be very useful on certain occasions.

Mr. Howie: Mr. Speaker, I congratulate the hon. member for Gander-Twillingate (Mr. Lundrigan) upon demonstrating the courage to raise this problem which concerns all members in the back benches. Your Honour will notice that there are a lot of questions on the order paper. I think there are nearly 1,000. These are being answered at the rate of 20 a week. A lot of questions asked during the oral question period do not really pass the test of relevancy or urgency, although Your Honour generously allows us to ask them. If there were more efficiency and promptness in answering questions on the order paper, there would be a lot less questions asked in the question period.

If we are going to be a good opposition, we need information in order to deal effectively with the budget debate that will commence next week. Many of our speeches will contain irrelevancies because we have not been given accurate information quickly enough by the government. I am not saying this is by design, but some questions have been on the order paper since January 4. A good opposition cannot tolerate that kind of thing and, therefore, it is necessary for us to ask questions during the oral question period. Some members have been forced to resort to other methods because they cannot get recognized during the question period. Because they cannot get recognized, they rise daily under Standing Order 43 and Standing Order 26.

I hope that as a result of Your Honour's long experience here, and the great respect we all hold for you, that you can give some guidance to us as to how we can solve this problem. Our purpose is to be good members and to represent our constituents well. We find we are having difficulty doing this.

Mr. Wise: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I do not rise to continue the lecture. However, I am one of the backbenchers who was overlooked during the question period. My concern arises from the fact that I did not have the opportunity to lend some support to my colleagues, the hon. member for Oxford (Mr. Nesbitt) and the hon. member for Norfolk-Haldimand (Mr. Knowles), who pointed out to the government, the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau), members of the cabinet and other members of the government the very serious erosion situation on the north shore of Lake Erie.

I see that the Minister of Public Works (Mr. Dubé) has left the chamber. I am happy to see that the Minister of the Environment (Mr. Davis) is here. Perhaps Your Honour will allow me to say that I hope the Minister of the Environment, in keeping with his past record, will show interest and leadership in this problem and will ask for the participation of the provincial authorities to at least commission a study as to the course of action most suitable to correct this situation. I want to go on record as pointing out the necessity of solving this great problem and supporting my two colleagues, the hon. member for Oxford and the hon. member for Norfolk-Haldimand.

[Translation]

Mr. La Salle: Mr. Speaker, I could not resist the temptation and shall say a few words on the opinions expressed. I know that all political parties have put forward their arguments. I believe that there remains an important point which was not dealt with. The hon. members active within their parties have been mentioned, but not those who had enough courage to seek election outside the framework of a political party. Mr. Speaker, you know, indeed, to what I am now referring.

Nevertheless, I should like to note that whatever amendments might be brought in, in my opinion, a great wisdom accompanied those remarks, and since I shall definitely not be invited to the committee on procedure and organization to discuss the matter, I should like to indicate to hon. members from the various parties that should they introduce a measure requiring unanimous consent of the House, I would deem it important that they send me a copy of the draft. I shall certainly not agree to any measure without previous consultation.

In any event, and as usual, I feel confident that Your Honour will continue to keep me in mind during the oral question period, because I aim at a positive contribution in the House.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

WEEKLY STATEMENT

Mr. MacLean: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I wish to ask the government House leader what business he proposes to place before parliament tomorrow, Monday afternoon and Tuesday, on the assumption that the House will have dealt with the supply bill.

Mr. MacEachen: Mr. Speaker, in reply to the hon. member for Malpeque (Mr. MacLean), following the completion of the appropriation bill, I would like the House to return to the debate on the amendments to the Criminal Code, Bill C-2. If this is not completed, we can probably continue with it on Monday afternoon and Tuesday, if necessary.

As we are aware, Mr. Speaker, the Minister of Finance (Mr. Turner) has already indicated his intention of making a budget presentation on Monday evening. It is proposed that the budget debate will begin on Wednesday and will continue through the end of the week. In order to permit the delivery of the budget, I take this opportunity in accordance with Standing Order 60(2) to request you to designate an order of the day. I also suggest, in keeping with past practice, the House might make it an order that debate on whatever government business is before us at 5 p.m. on Monday be adjourned at that time so that the Minister of Finance may commence his speech when the House resumes at 8 p.m.

• (1600)

Mr. McGrath: A question to the government House leader. I feel the hon. member has a good deal of responsibility which he does not seem to wish to accept in relation to the discussion which took place in this chamber prior to the question directed by my hon. friend from Malpeque. I should like to ask the hon. member whether it is his intention, in the light of that discussion and the continuing concern of members of all parties who took part in the debate, to accede to the request of the hon. member for Egmont to call an organization committee meeting of the Standing Committee on Procedure and Organization immediately. The committee has been struck, but obviously someone has to take the initiative in calling the committee together so that it can elect a chairman and get down to studying the serious questions raised by hon. members today.

Mr. MacEachen: In answer to this question, Mr. Speaker, perhaps I can say it is my intention at a very early date to initiate a meeting of the Standing Committee on Procedure and Organization. That committee has a number of urgent matters to consider and I would certainly give my support to it considering the matters which have been raised with respect to the question period.

I shall resist the temptation to give my own views on the operation of the question period. I am sure each one of us has his own observations to make on this subject and it would probably be more productive to allow the committee to wrestle with the matter because there are real difficulties attached to it. I imagine that more than an extension in the time period would be required in order to overcome them. I believe you have been very generous in extending, by consent, the time allotted to the question period. Usually, I believe, it goes beyond the normal 40 minutes, and I doubt whether another 20 minutes, if we were to approve such an extension, would enable us to resolve the difficulty which the House now faces in dealing with this matter. Perhaps the committee should begin an examination of the question and perhaps we ought to arrange for a more extended discussion of the subject some time soon.

You have an unhappy responsibility in deciding every day which members are to be recognized among the very large number who rise in their places to ask questions. We on this side of the House have never pressed forward a claim that each hon. member should be seen by the Chair. We have accepted the tradition which has long been understood and practised that the question period is primarily, though certainly not exclusively, an opportunity for members of the opposition to interrogate the ministry. We do think, however, that from time to time hon. members on this side of the House should have an opportunity to put questions!

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. MacEachen: We have no desire to upset the tradition you have observed, Mr. Speaker. But on this side of the House, as well, hon. members frequently impress upon me the necessity of having an opportunity to ask questions. Well, each of us is a member. Each of us has the same rights, and if we were, every day, to attempt to assert our individual rights there would be no end to the question period, and—

Mr. MacDonald (Egmont): I am glad you resisted the temptation to give your views!

Mr. MacEachen: —I would have to secure acceptance by the House of a much more strict observance of the rule of urgency attaching to questions.

The hon. member is concerned about the prospect that if parliament should end quickly some hon. members might not have had an opportunity to make their presence felt. This is a real concern on the part of every member. He does not want to go back, if we do go back, and admit to his constituents that having sat in the House of Commons for two or three months he has not been able to utter a single word, not even to ask a question. That is hardly a platform on which to seek acceptance. It is a real problem.

I sat in this House, I think, for six months before I even raised my head from the back benches. I was so far back I was almost outside the chamber. But members develop much more rapidly now, and they expect to catch the Speaker's eye the very first day. Well, we all cannot do that. I sympathize with hon. members in their problem. I do not think we want to snuff out the opportunity to ask questions. I think it could be done more rapidly, though. Maybe if we were to encourage the practice of giving notice it would help a bit. It is only by exception, today, that ministers receive notice of questions and despite the fact that we all try to take on the appearance of omniscience nobody has at his fingertips all the information which is required. If a minister is asked a question which involves gathering information, the matter is merely postponed until another day when another question might be asked.

As I say, we could perhaps benefit by adopting the British practice of making a greater use of notice. The Committee on Procedure examined this question a few years ago. It was as a result of a report from that committee and a decision of the House that a definite time limit for the question period was established. This was done in the belief that a shorter question period would make the question period brisker, and sharpen confrontation—that the intensity of the interrogation would be increased. Apparently, this has not happened. Anyway, I have not resisted the temptation to express my own views, but I extend an apology to you. I will co-operate in trying to get the question examined by the Committee on Procedure and Organization.

Mr. Howie: Would the minister permit a question? Would he care to comment on the length of time some of the written questions remain on the order paper? If we could speed up answers to questions on the order paper it might help matters during the oral question period.

Mr. MacEachen: I have attempted to get answers as quickly as possible. Hon. members—and I am sure this is true in the case of the hon. member for Prince Edward-Hastings—understand how slowly at times government departments respond to the necessity of supplying information. Every Monday I try to sit down with my parliamentary secretary and review the progress we are making in answering questions. There is no desire to withhold information. Some questions require a lot of digging. Others are difficult, and have to be considered by a minister. But the main job is extracting information quickly from government departments. I do not say this in any political way today, but I have examined the record of the last parliament and productivity, in terms of answering questions, has been very high. Mind you, the number of questions set down on the order paper is increasing. The number of notices of motion for production of papers is increasing rapidly. If I may say so, part of the reason is the fact that Members of Parliament now have research staffs which, it seems to me, develop their imaginations by thinking up questions to put on the order paper. In order to get rapid answers it would be sound if we kept the number of questions on the order paper to the absolute minimum; then, I think we would get better results.

At some future time I hope to have the opportunity to talk about the very vexing problem of notices of motions for the production of papers. We want to give as much information as possible, but if you look at the order paper you will see there is really an enormous demand for information. The more economical we are in asking for information, the more rapidly the answers will be forthcoming. In addition to that, much of the information that is requested in questions on the order paper is a matter of public record in any event. It is available in government documents and publications, but if one pointed that out he would be accused of withholding information needed by Members of Parliament.

I believe there are a lot of things we could do to improve the process. In respect of starred questions, we ought to, and we are trying, get the answers out as quickly as possible. Many of the questions that are starred are obviously of a highly political nature. Many of them are not put on the order paper for the purpose of soliciting information. Despite his disclaimer, my friend the right hon. member for Prince Albert (Mr. Diefenbaker) usually has all the information he needs before he asks a question, but he asks questions to score political points. In part, the purpose of the question period is to score political points, and I think we ought to understand that.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, may I very briefly say just two things. First, in respect of the discussion we have now had for more than the length of a question period, I trust that the government House leader will endeavour, perhaps by consultation with other House leaders and with Your Honour, to provide a term of reference that might be presented to the House very soon which would result in an early meeting of the Standing Committee on Procedure and Organization.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): The other thing I should like to say relates to the inquiry by the hon. member for Malpeque (Mr. MacLean) concerning the business of the House. As the government House leader knows, there have been some discussions about the possibility of passing Order No. 20, which has to do with a reference to the Standing Committee on Veterans Affairs, without debate. I think we might find that either now or tomorrow that would be the case and it could be passed without debate. If we could do it now, at least we would have accomplished something today.

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. MacLean: Mr. Speaker, I only rise to say that this is agreeable to the Official Opposition.

Mr. Speaker: Before seeking the concurrence of the House, I should like to make one brief comment. I thank hon. members for their very valuable and generous suggestion for the consideration of the Chair.

I think the point has been made, and this has become apparent during the discussion, that the problem to which reference has been made is not one for the Chair to solve. The Chair is here entirely and exclusively, to the extent this can be done, to see that the rules adopted by this House are respected. It is not for the Chair to change the rules, to either shorten or prolong the question period, change the provisions of Standing Order 43 or speed the returns to the House.

My duty, and this is the commission I have from hon. members, is to see that the rules adopted by the House are as nearly as possible respected, taking into account the mood of the House and the particular circumstances. If it is the intention of hon. members that changes or amendments should be made in the Standing Orders, this can be done by the House, normally after consideration by the Committee on Procedure and Organization. I will certainly offer my full co-operation to see that the committee meets early.

The suggestion was made during the discussion that the Speaker is either the Chairman or a member of that committee. This is not so, of course. I am very pleased that the Speaker is not a member of that committee because he escapes the criticism that might attend recommendations which are made to the House following the discussions and considerations of the committee. I feel that the other problems to which reference has been made should be considered at an early date by the committee. It is my opinion that the committee is very useful and has worked well and efficiently in past years. I think it can be helpful in the days and weeks ahead in solving some of the difficulties to which hon. members have alluded, and I can assure them once again of my wholehearted and enthusiastic co-operation.

Is the suggestion of the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles) agreed to?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

VETERANS AFFAIRS

MOTION TO REFER REPORT OF JOINT STUDY GROUP ON BASIC RATE OF PENSIONS TO STANDING COMMITTEE

Mr. MacEachen (for Mr. MacDonald, Cardigan) moved:

That the Report of the Joint Study Group on Basic Rate of Pensions, tabled January 31, 1973, be referred to the Standing Committee on Veterans Affairs.

Motion agreed to.

SUPPLY

APPROPRIATION ACT No. 1, 1973

The House resumed, from Wednesday, February 14, consideration in committee of Bill C-141, for granting to Her Majesty certain sums of money for the Public Service for the year ending 31st March, 1973—Mr. MacEachen (for Mr. Drury)—Mr. McCleave in the chair.

The Chairman: When the committee rose last evening Vote 20a, Department of the Environment was under consideration.

On clause 2—Schedule.

Mr. Harding: Mr. Chairman, I should like to take this opportunity to deal briefly and generally with the Department of the Environment. Some progress has certainly been made since the department was set up and some encouraging steps are being taken but, on the whole, the over-all accomplishment in the environmental field is rather disappointing. I should like to outline several areas where I feel fundamental weaknesses exist, and also suggest some changes which might help to eliminate these weaknesses. First, I should like to make a few general comments.

There has been major neglect of environmental problems in every part of Canada over the years. All levels of government, and the public generally, have allowed this environmental deterioration to continue. Those who did speak out were accused of standing in the path of progress or of trying to deliberately remove job opportunities from some specific local area. For the most part, in the past, the general public accepted with very little protest the right of industry to pollute our air and water, for employment and job opportunity was of paramount importance. The feeling was that pollution of our environment was a small price to pay if jobs were produced in the process. Few people realized that the real accounting from pollution would have to come years later, and that the cost would be tremendous.

Years of neglect and lack of action by government at all levels has led to some major pollution problems, not only in Canada but in most of the industrialized nations of the world. In fact, the situation is becoming so serious the very existence of our civilization is threatened. The warning signs are to be found everywhere, yet many nations including our own are not giving real leadership in meeting this challenge. To a large extent, the real problem is being ignored, for governments of the day are not yet prepared to make those major changes in our society which are required to provide a clean, healthy and safe environment in which to live and work. This federal government is not prepared to take action or to give the leadership required in many important environmental fields, and as a result, Canadians in the future will be saddled with the unenviable task of trying to clear up environmental problems which can be prevented if adequate measures are taken in time.

This government has had the opportunity to give real leadership in the environmental field. It has failed to adequately meet the challenge. At a time when Canadians were looking for a national and a unified approach in the field of environment, this government has failed to act. At the very time that the United Nations was calling for a common international outlook and direction, and stressing the need for a unified approach on a global scale, we find the government of Canada deliberately fragmenting our national approach to the problem. We had an opportunity to set national standards when the Canada Water Act was by the last parliament, but instead the government opted for the right of each province, in effect, to set its own standards, and fragment the jurisdiction and control more than ever before. The result has been that the Canada Water Act, which was to be the main weapon in the fight against water pollution throughout Canada, has remained on the statute books, without being effectively used by the department.

I have said on other occasions that Canada needs an integrated environmental policy. This is essential, if we are to meet the many changes facing us in the environmental field today. Our earth has limited carrying capacity for human beings. The basic elements potentially supportive to life, were placed on earth eons ago, and through the agents of evolution, systems have been developed which constantly recirculate these basic elements. The interplay between organisms and this environment has given rise to complex life support systems, in which the air, water, nutrients and energy supplies for the inhabitants of earth are normally maintained by the function of the inhabitants themselves. Man is so utterly dependent on these natural processes that the policies he devises to govern his actions, must ensure their maintenance at all times. This is not being done and there is increasing evidence that some life support systems are being severely damaged. It is for this reason that work on our environmental problems is so important.

Most of the resources on earth are indefinitely renewable through natural cycles, but some of them are not. For example, the continuous provision of high grade mineral supplies, are finite. We will have to devise artificial cycles for recovery and reuse of these minerals. Fossil fuels, such as coal and oil are exhaustible and will be in extremely short supply in less than 28 years from now, when we reach the year 2,000. We are developing alternative sources of energy to replace them, such as nuclear power, but here again we must take care that the byproducts of heat and radiation do not defeat our purposes by destroying the natural cycles not under our control. Other sources of non-polluting energy must be researched and perfected to serve mankind in the future.

An integrated environmental policy, whether it be national or international includes many things. One of the most important is population growth. The present growth rate means that our earth must provide every year the resources required to support 70 million new individuals. This is roughly three and a half times the current population in Canada. Every year we must provide new food, power, fuel, air, water, minerals, space, doctors, hospitals, teachers, schools, transportation, industrial plants and many other cultural resources for a population three and a half times that of the current population of Canada, just to maintain the present ratio. Twenty-eight years from now at the end of this century, the world's population could be double that which we find on earth today. The big question arises, do we have the resources to feed, clothe, and house these people adequately, and the answer is obviously "no", for even in this day and age, two out of every three human beings on the face of the earth go to bed hungry every night.

Another important problem, particularly in the more industrialized nations, is that of resource use. For example, in Canada, with a relatively small population of some 22 million people, our individual drain on resources is estimated to be about 26 times greater than that of a resident of India or China or Pakistan. It is 30 times greater than that of a Nigerian, and about 10 times greater than that of a Brazilian. This means that Canada's 22 million people make roughly the same demands on the resources of this earth as some 572 million Chinese living in Asia. We cannot ignore indefinitely the enormous per capita demands that the world's growing population makes on the world's limited resources, both inside and outside our borders. We cannot ignore the fact either that it is absolutely impossible for the people living in the underdeveloped nations of the world to ever reach the standard of living which we currently enjoy in Canada. The net resources of this earth just cannot provide that type of standard, even for those living in the world today. When we consider the likelihood of the world population being doubled within the next 28 years, it becomes obvious that hundreds of millions of human beings on the face of this earth can look forward to nothing but abject poverty, disease and pestilence on an unheard of scale. The escalating world population is a major environmental problem facing every nation in the world today. It must be placed high on the agenda of the United Nations for solution, as it obviously needs top priority attention.

There are many other serious environmental problems in the international field, including the severe and serious problem of our oceans. Agreements must be worked out among all nations to adequately protect our ocean environment. Tough international laws must be set and enforced, for the very existence of mankind is threatened unless early action is taken. For far too long we have allowed the oceans to become dumping grounds for pollutants of all kinds.

Now, Mr. Chairman, I would like to deal briefly with what I consider are some serious shortcomings in the present Department of the Environment. The chief weakness lies in the lack of the over-all authority required to do an effective job to protect our environment. This is becoming more obvious every day and legislative action should be taken this session to rectify the situation.

Let us look briefly at the Department of the Environment, and the job it is supposed to do in protecting our environment from damage or unwise use. To begin with, I feel the minister cannot effectively administer the Fisheries and Forestry departments and at the same time handle the environmental problems affecting those same departments. There is bound to be a conflict of economic and environmental interests on many occasions. It seems to me that no minister should be placed in this position for it could lead to those half measures of compromise which never do a real job of cleaning up a situation. For this reason, I suggest that the Department of the Environment should not be combined with any other portfolio. It should have complete over-all authority in all federal areas and should be setting and enforcing the necessary regulations to bring and keep our environment in the proper state of balance.

It is nonsense for the Department of the Environment to not have complete control over environmental problems in our northern areas which are under federal jurisdiction. It does not make sense to have officials in the Department of Indian Affairs and Northern Development or in the Department of Energy, Mines and Resources with as much, if not more, power of decision making as far as environmental controls in the north are concerned. I saw this when the land use regulations were being laid down by this government only last year. I, personally, feel that to have other departments play the major role in setting the pollution standards for effluents in the north does not make sense from an ecological point of view. If the object is to fully protect our environment, then half measures are not good enough. Again, there would be the conflict of interest about which I spoke earlier. We cannot afford these compromise solutions when it comes to protecting the Canadian environment adequately. Firm and sensible regulations must be laid down without tremendous pressure coming from commercial interests to have these regulations watered down just so they can make some additional profits out of our natural resources.

Another major weakness in the Department of the Environment is its apparent lack of direction and action on several vital environmental problems which exist in Canada today. A good example of this is to be found in the James Bay area. It is obvious that the Department of the Environment is not playing the effective role in this major development which Canadians expect. The federal government has clear jurisdiction in several aspects of this project, but it has delayed taking action primarily because of political reasons. The minister himself stated that environmental impact studies should be carried out well in advance of any project, such as the James Bay project, and that studies should be properly evaluated and assessed before any decision to proceed is made.

We have had an excellent example in British Columbia with the building of the Bennett Dam on the Peace River. Environmental impact studies were never carried out on how the dam would affect the lower reaches of the Peace River and the whole Mackenzie River system. As a result, immense ecological damage has been done to the Mackenzie River system, including the Mackenzie delta, Lake Athabasca, not to mention the ecological damage to the vast area behind the dam itself. The minister will tell us that environmental studies are under way on the James Bay project at this time, but the tragedy lies in the fact that this project started before surveys were made and evaluated. It is crystal clear that the tremendous cost of ecological damage in the James Bay area, the upheaval and dislocation of the way of life of several thousand Indians in the area, were not taken into consideration when the feasibility of the project was being studied. I am certain that if the immense costs of this ecological upheaval, including the loss of some 3,000 to 4,000 square miles of flooded timber, had been included, it would have put the cost of hydro power to be produced in such a high category that the entire plan would have had to be scrapped. It is obvious that the Quebec government has deliberately played down the costs of environmental damage to the general public so as to make the plan more acceptable.

The lack of action by the federal Department of the Environment and the Department of Indian Affairs and Northern Development in the James Bay Project is an indication that the federal government is going to stand on the sidelines and will again allow some very undesirable and unnecessary environmental damage to take place. The department shelters behind the excuse that provincial jurisdiction is involved. When any government gets into trouble, it always tries to hide behind the constitution. This is not good enough in this day and age. Increasing numbers of Canadians are demanding action at all levels to ensure that our environment is not destroyed just because some exploiter wants to make a few fast dollars or some government wants to retain office for a short period by using a major public works scheme as bait for the electors. In any event, there will be much more said on the James Bay project in this session of parliament.

In the time remaining, there are one or two other points I would like to raise. For years our party has been suggesting to the minister that the government should set up an environmental council of Canada which would be completely divorced from politics and based along the lines of the Economic Council of Canada. We feel that an environmental council of this nature would be able to report not only to the government but to the Canadian people and to advise on an environmental policy for this country. It could point out those areas where immediate action should be taken, and it could be critical of the lack of government policy if the council felt that the government were not properly looking after the environment.

I am not sure that the department is receiving sufficient advice from outside the government. We need a council the members of which would sit down with research staff and do a top notch job of advising and setting guidelines, so that all Canadians will be made aware of the direction in which we should be going in this respect. Again, I want to point out that this is a pretty important problem because, after all, the care that we take of the environment and the state in which we leave it after we pass away will determine whether civilization will continue to exist on this globe for any length of time.

There are several other problems that we have drawn to the attention of the government and on which we do not think enough action has been taken. I spoke earlier about the Canada Water Act. The government was going to set up water quality management areas under this act to deal with specific and grave pollution problems. Practically nothing has been done. There are some prime areas in Canada along some of our rivers and in practically every province where this type of action should be taken. There should be no further delay in dealing with these problems.

Then we come to the problem of sewage. Everyone knows that grants are made to municipalities and that a fund is available to municipalities for the setting up of sewage treatment plants, but not enough money is made available and this is one of the prime causes of pollution in a number of major rivers and streams throughout Canada. Let us take a look, for example, at the city of Montreal. Over 300 million gallons of untreated sewage flows into the St. Lawrence every day, which is over 90 per cent of the sewage coming from that great city. If it is a matter of money, I see no reason why there should not be a vast fund of low cost money made available so that municipalities could proceed with sewage treatment projects. I cannot think of a better method of helping to alleviate the unemployment situation in Canada than to make this type of money available. This grant would be repayable over a long period of time so that the municipalities could get on with the treatment of sewage.

Now, I should like to return to British Columbia again and to deal, in the few minutes remaining, with an issue that has been raised in the House. I raised it again last week in a motion, which I hoped would be unanimously supported in this House, on the oil tanker route.

The Chairman: I regret to interrupt the hon. member but the time alloted to him has expired. He may continue with the unanimous consent of the committee.

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Harding: Mr. Chairman, I will not abuse the time extension granted by hon. members because I know there are others wanting to speak. May I deal very briefly with the oil tanker route. Since the court of appeal in the United States has stopped the building of the trans-Alaska pipeline for a time, I feel that if this parliament and Canadians generally are really interested in trying to stop this oil tanker route, we should make the U.S. government aware of that fact by passing a motion unanimously in the House that we are opposed to it.

Mr. Davis: This was done.

Mr. Harding: The minister indicates that we moved such a motion in the last parliament. This is a new parliament and that is why I moved a motion last Monday that we have a unanimous vote by members of the House to indicate that the new parliament of Canada does not like the idea of this tanker route along the west coast of British Columbia. It is obvious that members of the opposition cannot get this motion through the House. I suggest to the minister that he can introduce such a motion. We will support it, and I am quite sure that he will obtain the unanimous support of all other parties here because we are all interested in trying to stop this tanker route along the west coast of British Columbia.

I will close on that note, Mr. Chairman, and thank you for allowing me this additional time.

Mr. McCain: Mr. Chairman, it is not my intention to take up much of the time of the committee, but the first thing I wish to say pertaining to this debate on fisheries and environment is that it is very obvious that questions of the environment are uppermost in the minds of Canadians and of hon. members. This makes it extremely difficult for those engaged in commercial fishing to get their points of view before the House. It seems to me that the Department of Fisheries should have its own minister. Through no fault of the present minister, or of the policy initially intended, it is quite obvious that there is conflict between the two departments of Environment and Fisheries, inasmuch as the emphasis upon one puts the other almost into virtual oblivion.

The problem in the area which I represent, and in neighbouring areas, is one of very serious consequence to those who make their living from the sea. I grant that there are environmental problems involved. It is most unfortunate that some of the employment opportunities created by government emergency programs have not been directed to the correction of some of the environmental problems, because the cost of correcting these problems is beyond the financial means of the local communities and areas.

Fishing is restricted because of environmental problems in my area. This is something to which the government should give serious consideration. The most pressing question arises out of the restrictions placed on the taking of certain species of fish in the New Brunwick area, particularly the taking of salmon. Not only have fishermen been forced to abandon their fishing operations but they have encountered many problems in arriving at the final settlements to which they feel entitled. I would like to ask the minister if he would advise the House, preferably today, what the terms and conditions of the final settlements will be. The salmon fishermen understood that if they submitted an estimate of their income for a certain period of time they would forthwith receive cheques for half of the amounts they estimated. In general this has been done. However, it has been extremely difficult for the salmon fishermen to prevail on the responsible authorities and make them understand that the estimates they submitted as income were, in fact, their income. They are being asked to settle for less than they feel is just.

In the terms of settlement, I believe there must be a certain element of estimate allowed to the fishermen. Since the earliest days of the industry, it has been habitual that people in the surrounding area buy some fish directly from the fishermen, and the balance of the catch is sold to the commercial trade. It is with respect to this local sales income that the fishermen are experiencing difficulty in receiving a fair sum on an annual basis. When it was agreed that there would be a settlement arrived at on the basis of income, regulations had to be laid down. That is understandable, but these regulations have created many hardships. I give one example. The father of a family passed away. The mother and sons retained all the fishing equipment which the father had owned, in anticipation of the day when one of the sons would be old enough to take up lobster fishing. Now, that equipment is aging and neither the eldest son nor the mother can get a licence to fish for salmon or lobster. Further, they are not entitled to compensation because for one year the father's licence was allowed to lapse. This is a serious hardship for them.

Now, I wish to mention the Kouchibouguac National Park on the east coast of New Brunswick. Here again there is a conflict. People are being told that they will be remunerated for giving up their fishing business on the basis of its value to them over the years. Does this mean that they will receive income comparable with their income from fishing? Does it mean they will be established as individuals in fishing somewhere else? If a man lives in the neighbourhood of the park and sells his salmon fishing privileges will he have an opportunity to take the five year settlement on an annual basis? The people concerned are confused. They anticipated that by the latest on Christmas Day they would receive cheques in lieu of their income from salmon fishing. This would have been as a final settlement. They have not received those cheques yet. The fishermen are deeply concerned.

Then, there is the question of building new wharves and repairing old ones. It is difficult, if not impossible, to get three departments of government to give approval. First, the Department of Fisheries has to estimate the income involved and determine the viability. Then, the Department of Transport has to appraise the proposal from its point of view. Finally, the Department of Public Works comes in to the picture. As I say, it is extremely difficult to get all three departments to agree that a particular wharf should be built or repaired. The obstacles to fishing, and to convenience in fishing, are immense and almost insurmountable.

One of the questions frequently asked is this: is there statistical evidence that additional lobster traps in the area where lobster fishing prevails would, in fact, deplete the resource? Is that information available? Are the salmon which are tagged in their ocean habitat returning to New Brunswick, to the east coast of New Brunswick, to Nova Scotia, to Newfoundland, or are they going elsewhere? Have we in fact, identified the ocean habitat of Atlantic salmon, or have we just identified the habitat of salmon, meaning salmon that may come from somewhere else? There are questions that must be studied and answered.

I understand the desire of the House to make progress with these estimates, so I will not take up any more time. But, Mr. Chairman, let us not underestimate the interest of the thousands of people along the shorelines of the Atlantic area who make their living out of fishing and who, by virtue of regulations drawn up without consultation with the actual fishermen, are being put out of business, are being inconvenienced by one regulation after another emanating from the Department of National Health and Welfare, the Department of Consumer and Corporate Affairs, the Department of Fisheries and the Department of the Environment. For them it is an intolerable and insurmountable problem. I maintain that there must be liaison between research and the fishermen, and here I do not mean the corporate fishermen. I mean the fisherman who puts on overalls and goes out to fish by himself. This is the man who must be consulted. Mr. Chairman, do you know that when a man buys a licence to fish he does not even get a copy of the regulations so that he may know what he can and cannot do? He pays whatever the stipend may be, but is not furnished with the regulations pertaining to his occupation.

My purpose in rising to speak was to emphasize the need for attention to be paid to the fishermen by the Department of Fisheries and by the minister. I hospitably invite the Minister of Fisheries to come with me, at his earliest convenience, and take a tour along the coast of New Brunswick, particularly in the county of Charlotte, to talk to the fishermen and to see what can be done for them. There has been a great deal of discussion about the lack of opportunity for the young people of Canada, but the young people are coming to me and saying that they would like to fish with their fathers. Some of them are now old enough, are married and have children and want a licence to fish but the regulation does not permit it. This is the case with the widow, who has kept her equipment. Her sons will never fish with it under present regulations and she will never be remunerated, in spite of the fact that her husband held a salmon fishing licence in that community for a longer period of time than any of the other salmon fishermen. When the civil servant responsible for settlements was invited to visit her home and discuss the problem, he visited the community and avoided her. Mr. Speaker, this is harsh treatment for poor fishing people who need the help of the department, and the understanding of the department, to make regulations which will enable them to make a living rather them be regulated out of a living. I appeal to the minister to give these people consideration at his earliest possible convenience on the question of settlement.

Mr. Davis: Mr. Chairman, I should like to answer the hon. member for Carleton-Charlotte, who raised several questions, as succinctly as I can. First of all, the individual case that he described today of a widow and her son who were not adequately compensated in respect of the loss of their salmon fishing privilege for the next few years is one of perhaps a dozen cases. This will make the thirteenth, submission that has been made directly to me.

We have an appeal committee in the area, and if people with legitimate complaints like this do not receive an appropriate hearing or indeed a decision that satisfies them, they can appeal, directly to me or through their local member. I will take cognizance of this particular case. If the circumstances are as described, I imagine they would be recognized as having a valid licence and either their gear would be bought out or they would receive as many as five years' payments in lieu of income. These are individual cases and each has to be dealt with on its merits. However, we have only a dozen cases of that character pending which have been appealed to me personally. There are literally hundreds of cases which have been settled to the satisfaction of the fishermen.

On the question of lobster traps, I point out that the fishermen themselves in that area have voted overwhelmingly to reduce the number. It is essentially as a result of surveys and actual consultations with the fishermen that the numbers have been reduced. If it is their wish to increase them, they will be running counter to sound economics but we will consider it.

Tens of millions of dollars have been spent on researching Atlantic salmon over the years and a great deal of work has gone into the tagging of salmon. There is now a wealth of information on how the salmon move into the ocean from the rivers. Those in the Saint John River, I understand, essentially stay in the Bay of Fundy area while these in the Restigouche and the Miramichi Rivers, the large salmon, go to waters off Greenland. The smaller salmon do not go to Greenland, even if they originate in Newfoundland rivers. We know a great deal more than I have the time to relate today.

The hon. member for Kootenay West raised several points, and I will address myself to them. He frequently says in the House that no use has been made of the Canada Water Act. This is absolute nonsense, Mr. Chairman; the Canada Water Act made possible the agreement between Canada and the United States on the Great Lakes. It gave us parliamentary approval for a structure which was negotiated with Ontario and with the United States for the clean-up over half a dozen years of the lower lakes. The Canada Water Act has been used extensively to create water management areas in Lake Ontario, Lake Erie, Lake St. Clair and so on. I wish he would name the instances in which he says it has not been used. There is also the Saint John River, New Brunswick where we are proceeding to a water quality management area agreement between the federal government and that provincial government. There are other instances, Mr. Chairman. Studies are proceeding on the Okanagan Lake in the context of the Canada Water Act and so on. There is a long list of applications of the Canada Water Act, such as the case of the lower lakes agreement, proceeding all the way to the establishment of a multilevel international federal-provincial agreement setting up water quality management areas.

Mr. Harding: Would the minister permit a question? Would he tell us how many water quality management areas have been set up?

Mr. Davis: Mr. Chairman, I am simply naming three lakes for example, and interconnecting rivers from Sarnia right down to the Thousand Islands which are covered by a series of water management areas. They do not have to be spelled out in capital letters in an agreement to indicate that they are water quality management areas. The water quality targets are identified in agreements between Ottawa and the province of Ontario, and between Canada and the United States. The means of reaching those water quality objectives have also been spelled out in the number of agreements, financial and otherwise. They are in every way water quality management areas.

Mr. Harding: Another question, Mr. Chairman. We spent a great deal of time on the Canada Water Act. Has machinery for operation within these water quality management areas been set up?

Mr. Davis: Yes, Mr. Chairman, all the machinery is in place for the execution to the letter of the Canada-Ontario agreement and the Canada-U.S. agreement in respect of the clean-up of the Great Lakes. As the hon. member knows, the final arbiter of the success of the performance is the International Joint Commission. It has to do the follow-up work to make sure that the water quality objectives are met.

We are exploring a number of areas. I should like Ottawa to have an agreement with the province of British Columbia for a water quality management area in the Strait of Georgia and, for example, the lower Fraser leading into the Strait of Georgia. If we had that, we could then go the Americans and say that we have been able to put our own house in order, so we should extend the program to the Puget Sound area as being something equivalent to the Great Lakes agreement on the west coast. I think we would then be a long step down the road toward dealing with the tanker problem in that particular inland sea between Vancouver Island and the mainland and international waters where an international agreement is essential to the proper control and operation of tankers.

Mr. Harding: A further question. In these water quality management areas provision was made for effluent fees. Can the minister inform the House if these are being paid by any industry in any of these water management areas?

Mr. Davis: No, Mr. Chairman, we do not regard effluent fees as a good idea. I realize that provision for effluent fees exists in the act, but our basic policy is that the polluter will pay. We do not simply want them to make some nominal payment to ease their conscience. The lower lakes agreement provides that the polluter shall pay for the clean-up and the parallel in the case of Ontario must be certain quality objectives stated in physical terms, but no funds are available from the federal or provincial governments to help with the clean-up.

The Chairman: Order, please. It being five o'clock it is my duty to rise, report progress and request leave to consider the bill again later this day.

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Progress reported.

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

SUBJECT MATTER OF QUESTIONS TO BE DEBATED

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. It is my duty, pursuant to Standing Order 40, to inform the House that the questions to be raised tonight at the time of adjournment are as follows: the hon. member for Humber-St. George's-St. Barbe (Mr. Marshall)—National Defence—Suggested redeployment of armed forces elements to Newfoundland to consolidate strategy and promote economic development; the hon. member for Portneuf (Mr. Godin)—Manpower—Inquiry as to efficiency of manpower centres; the hon. member for Grenville-Carleton (Mr. Baker)—Housing—Land assembly program—Reconsideration of investment of funds for proposed Gloucester Township project.

The Chair has received notice, under Standing Order 26, that the hon. member for Vancouver South (Mr. Fraser), seconded by the hon. member for Victoria (Mr. McKinnon), intends to move a motion for the adjournment of the House. It is the understanding of the Chair that it is agreeable that this matter be dealt with by Mr. Speaker at the commencement of tomorrow morning's sitting. Is that agreed?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: It being five o'clock p.m. the House will now proceed to the consideration of private members' business. Pursuant to the special order made earlier this day, the House will now proceed to the consideration of the order for second reading and reference to the Standing Committee on Justice and Legal Affairs of Bill C-136, an act respecting Canada Flag Day.

PRIVATE MEMBERS' PUBLIC BILLS

CANADA FLAG DAY

MEASURE TO ESTABLISH

Mr. Ed Nelson (Burnaby-Seymour) moved that Bill C-136, respecting Canada Flag Day, be read the second time and referred to the Standing Committee on Justice and Legal Affairs.

He said: Mr. Speaker, the purpose of Bill C-136 is to establish February 15 or the Monday following as a legal holiday, to be known as Canada flag day. I have sensed, sir, that there is general approval of the idea embodied in the bill and am grateful. I will, therefore, forgo the privilege of speaking at length and respectfully request that the bill be given second reading today, this February 15, and sent to the Standing Committee on Justice and Legal Affairs.

[Translation]

Mr. Alexandre Cyr (Gaspé): Mr. Speaker, I would like first to thank hon. members for having unanimously agreed to the resolution I moved yesterday regarding the display of the Canadian flag in the House.

In the history of the Canadian flag, the dates of February 14 and 15, 1973 will be remembered. I want to stress the measures taken in the past by the hon. member for Cochrane (Mr. Stewart) in order that the flag be displayed in a place of honour in the two houses of Parliament, and I thank him for having supported the motion I submitted yesterday.

Today we are studying Bill C-136 so that February 15 can be observed as "Canada Flag Day". I express my heart-felt congratulations to the hon. member for Burnaby-Seymour (Mr. Nelson) who has introduced this bill which I hope will be referred today to the Standing Committee on Justice and Legal Affairs.

The purpose of the bill is also to pay tribute to the Right Hon. Lester Bowles Pearson, the father of the Canadian flag, which is one of his many achievements.

On February 15, 1965, the first page of a new era in our nation's history was engraved in gold letters. This typically Canadian single leaf flag was first blessed by the chief chaplains to the Canadian armed forces and then raised at 12 o'clock noon on the main platform in front of the Peace Tower.

On that occasion, the Governor General His Excellency George Vanier called for unity, and I quote from his speech:

I urge all Canadians to give up any prejudice, narrow mindedness and intolerance that might exist and to develop a spirit of brotherly love and mutual confidence.

I hope that all Canadians will give an example of friendly co-existence and that our flag will symbolize for us and before the entire world unity in thought and determination to live up to the noble destiny to which we are called.

Mr. Speaker, the flag which has been waving for eight years in the Canadian sky, over our embassies, which identifies our ships that sail the seas of the world, which is carried by our athletes in Olympic stadiums, which is the flag of our armed forces, is an emblem of unity, of courage and strength for our nation. It inspires in our youth a deep feeling of patriotism and attachment to their native land.

This flag is displayed for the first time in the House of Commons. It proves that hon. members have forgotten the quarrels of the 1964 debate and that we are moving towards the unity of the various ethnic groups of the country.

Mr. Speaker, before leaving the floor to another member, I would like, if I may, quote a few lines of the speech delivered by the Right Hon. L. B. Pearson on the day the Canadian flag was inaugurated. I quote:

If, by God's grace, our nation should last a thousand years, this day, February 15, 1965, will always be commemorated as an important step in the realization of the national progress of Canada.

I find it impossible not to be deeply moved by such an occasion and to be indifferent to the honour and privilege of being a participant.

[English]

Mr. Speaker, I am in favour of the bill the hon. member has brought forward in the House today. May our youth and all Canadians be proud to observe Canada flag day.

[Translation]

In conclusion, Mr. Speaker, may I be permitted to salute the flag on your right in these words:

[English]

To my flag and to the country it represents, I pledge respect and loyalty.

Wave with pride from sea to sea and within your folds, keep us ever united.

Be for all a symbol of love, freedom and justice.

God keep our flag.

God protect our Canada.

Mr. Heath Macquarrie (Hillsborough): Mr. Speaker, I commend the mover of the bill for his initiative in bringing forward this suggested piece of legislation. I commend him, too, on the alacrity with which his bill has risen to the coveted spot that it now occupies, inasmuch as many important private members' bills languish many, many weeks and we often find that sessions expire before we are given a chance to place our deliberations before our colleagues.

It is hardly to be gainsaid that all members of the House honour the flag of the country, respect its place in the world and love, serve and cherish the country which it symbolizes. It need hardly be said that all members of the House and the people they represent honour the achievements of the great statesman named in the bill, cherish his memory, salute his achievements and feel proud to acclaim him as a fellow Canadian.

I am not sure, however, that I would have used the same technique as the hon. member used to honour a great Canadian, namely, that of attaching his name to an honoured symbol of our nation, the flag. There are many achievements of the late Right Hon. L. B. Pearson which will retain for him a lustrous place in the hall of honour of our nation, indeed, of the world. His involvement in the process leading to the adoption of a distinctive Canadian flag is but one of his contributions to Canada and to the world. Yet, I would not like to think of the late Right Hon. Lester Pearson as merely a great Canadian. I think of him as a great Canadian certainly, one whom I was honoured to know and admire and for whom I had great affection. But he was, Sir, also a man of the world, a man whom Canada gave to the world, a man whose exertions on behalf of peace were humanitarian, whose actions and performance made us all a little better and who always, substantially, made us feel proud that he was one of us. Therefore, I would like to reflect a bit more on the suggestion that this great man's memorialization be confined only to one particular act in which he gave leadership within his own country.

It is a very important question that a nation faces as to what types of holidays it should set apart for national celebration. I believe our country should celebrate holidays and should allow for a symbolic expression of those things which make us a country and a nation. What are the great days in our historic past? Surely, the time when our political forefathers met together, beginning in Charlottetown and later in Quebec, to form a country out of regions and small communities was a great occasion. Therefore, I think that Dominion Day remains prime among those days in which we honour our heritage and salute the people who brought about this country.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Macquarrie: An eminent historian, a great pillar of the Liberal party, although I sat in his classes many years and was much convinced by him, but never converted, A. R. M. Lower, once said that if Canada had an independence day like the great country to the south of us, it would be December 11, the day in which formal indication was given that this country and other members of the Commonwealth were declared to be free and autonomous communities, in no way subordinate one to the other.

The process whereby Canada obtained its independence was a most impressive process, led by a great man from Nova Scotia, Sir Robert Borden. He had asserted vigorously the great nationalization which was required to lead us from a colonial status to something more noble and challenging. He often said the great warriors were in fact the true warriors, the men of Vimy Ridge and many other horrible blood baths in Europe where Canadians made an impact in courage and bravery far beyond their numbers. Therefore, the day of the Statute of Westminster, which was the culmination of the process, would be an important day.

I was much moved in this House when the right hon. member for Prince Albert (Mr. Diefenbaker) produced what we so long wanted and needed, the Bill of Rights. I think the Bill of Rights is now seen to be greater even than it was then because of interpretations of the courts. That, too, was a milestone.

Some of my colleagues will not be surprised at my mentioning that the birth of Sir John A. Macdonald is something of significance. Many Americans celebrated Lincoln's birthday last week. All Americans will be celebrating Washington's birthday next week. The father of the country deserves at least passing recognition.

I am not sure that the linking of the homage to a great man and the movement toward a national holiday commends itself to my judgment. I am hardly against flags. I honour the flag. I wear it when I go abroad. I wear it in my lapel of course. I do not carry it on a staff. I am happy to be designated as a Canadian. Holidays are certainly a fine thing. Heaven knows, I would not be against the memory of Lester Pearson for whom I have the warmest recollections. He was a great man whose greatness became him. He walked with kings and kept the common touch. He was a man of genius, humour, compassion and comprehension. I would like to say that he was a typical Canadian, but in many ways, although he would be the last to declaim it—I trust I used the right word; I said declaim not disclaim—he was in many proportions greater than his fellows.

It is my thought on this particular measure, although I would be the last to criticize the hon. member or be critical of the amazing alacrity with which this particular bill got before us—this kind of speed is not typical of this House—I suggest that it is the kind of thing we should be thinking about but thinking more about. While a mid-February holiday is a delightful thing, in our anguish for one whom we loved and admired is very much upon our hearts, perhaps we should reflect upon it in a little broader perspective. I wonder whether we should think not only of more events in our past, such as some of those I have mentioned. but of other individuals in our past for whom we might properly, appropriately and with meaning pause and reflect upon for a national holiday.

I do not want to prolong the discussion, although if I start talking about Borden, Laurier and Macdonald, I will soon exhaust my time. I just wish to say that I believe it is a good idea to let us ponder this a little further because in a matter of hours, February 15 will have passed by for this year and perhaps by next year the fruition of our thoughts will come up with something even better.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. René Matte (Champlain): Mr. Speaker, we have no objection to passing this bill now before the House on second reading since in the last decade nobody has insisted more on the absolute necessity to bring back dignity and unity in this country than the members of our party. This is why I make only one wish, Mr. Speaker, in order not to delay the passing of this bill, that this symbol will not be only a symbol but an indication of true understanding and true unity, and heaven knows we have not reached that point yet.

The last election campaign has shown that unfortunately there is still many politicians who have not yet recognized the existence of French Canadians, the existence of the French language, in a very concrete way.

The fact that the government itself is postponing the issue regarding the implementation of all regulations respecting the official languages proves, Mr. Speaker, that we still have a long way to go if we really want the flag to be a true reflection of what exists in this country. I hope that all aspects of true national unity will materialize very vividly and concretly.

[English]

Mr. Ralph Stewart (Cochrane): Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I shall be very brief. Today is, I believe, an historic day in the history of Canada and it is fitting that time should have been allowed for a short debate on the question of a flag day for Canada. Other countries set aside a day on which they honour their flag. Canada would do well to adopt the same practice. That it should be February 15 or the Monday following is also fitting, because of the anniversary we are celebrating today.

I am pleased that the Canadian flag is at last being displayed in this House, the centre of government. I have visited other countries and seen their flags in their respective legislative chambers. Yet visitors from abroad come here and wonder why the Canadian flag is not displayed here of all places. I congratulate the hon. member for Burnaby-Seymour (Mr. Nelson) for bringing forward this bill today. I want to thank the hon. member for Gaspé (Mr. Cyr) for proposing the motion in connection with which we have both worked so hard over the past six years.

The flag is one of those symbols which are so important to the patriotism of our youth. Canadians should grow up with a fervent love of their country and of their flag. I feel that the most fitting way in which I can end these remarks is by quoting a short statement uttered by the late Hon. Lester B. Pearson on the day the flag was inaugurated eight years ago.

As the symbol of a new chapter in our national story, our Maple Leaf Flag will become a symbol of that unity in our country without which one cannot grow in strength and purpose; the unity that encourages the equal partnership of two peoples on which this Confederation was founded; the unity also that recognizes the contributions and the cultures of many other races.

Under this flag may our youth find new inspiration for loyalty to Canada; for a patriotism based not on any mean or narrow nationalism, but on the deep and equal pride that all Canadians will feel in every part of this good land.

God bless our flag!

God bless Canada!

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Maurice Dupras (Labelle): Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I, too, intend to be brief and I shall only say a few words on the subject because I wish this bill to be adopted.

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker, when I was in the Canadian Air Force and we spent our evenings in the officer's mess, groups of men would often talk about the kind of Canada we would find when we returned, if we ever did, and the kind of country that was going to be built for us, after having helped other countries to fight against the assailant and to rebuild a united Europe like the one we know today. And at that time already, my friends, whether they came from Halifax, Vancouver, Toronto or Winnipeg, were as sorry as I was, that we did not have a real Canadian flag.

We wondered whether the Canadian people would ever be Canadian enough to have their own flag. Of course, we had colours which identified the members of Canadian Armed Forces, whether they belong to the Air Force, to the Army or to the Navy; but we felt a little like the head of a family who walks along with the picture of his neighbour's children in his pocket. Yet we had something to show that identified us, but it had nothing really Canadian, nothing peculiar, nothing that represented the Canadian unity.

This is why I am so proud today to see the Canadian flag displayed in this House, and I want to congratulate the mover and the seconder, the hon. member for Gaspé (Mr. Cyr) and the hon. member for Cochrane (Mr. Stewart), for being responsible for what will surely be an outstanding event in the life of the Canadian parliament. And I am sure, Mr. Speaker, that my predecessor who is now our ambassador in Paris and who was vice-chairman of the committee on the Canadian flag must have really felt Canadian this morning in our embassy when he learned that for the first time and for ever, the flag of which he was one of the advocates, will be displayed in the House of Commons.

But it is not enough that our colours should be diplayed in the House of Commons, Mr. Speaker; a day should also be set aside to honour them. Even more should be done; we must also ensure that our colours are on display in every classroom in the country, that the place of honour in every school, every province, every territory in the land is reserved for the flag. Indeed, parliament must take the steps required to ensure that everywhere in Canada, in the east as well as in the west, we can unfurl that flag, symbol of the pride and unity of all Canadians.

I also think that there should be a law to punish those who show a lack of respect for our flag, who violate, tear or burn it. Those measures should be passed as soon as possible.

As I hope this bill will be passed, I shall conclude my remarks by saying how proud I am of this typical Canadian flag now unfurled in this House of Commons.

Mr. Marcel Lessard (Lac-Saint-Jean): Mr. Speaker, I shall be brief. I don't want to miss the opportunity to say a few words on the bill setting apart a special day to commemorate the adoption of the Canadian flag.

One of the reasons I rise on this occasion is that, with the hon. Minister of Public Works (Mr. Dubé), I am the only member to have had the privilege of sitting for six weeks on the special joint committee which in 1964 studied the thousands of models submitted and chose the single maple leaf design followed by a recommendation to the House in the fall of the same year. Those who were then in this House will remember for a long time, not to say all their life, all the debates which took place, the adoption of the project at the end of 1964 and the proclamation on February 15, 1965.

This day is most important to me and I am quite proud to have lived this period of 1964 when we chose this flag and I am all the more proud as I am among the 15 members who approved the design and recommended it to the House. Moreover, I always keep at home a picture signed by those 15 members, a picture which is so valuable to me that I would not part with it at any price. There are only 15 copies of this picture and only those 15 members have one and even today—eight years later—three or four members of this committee are deceased.

Mr. Speaker, I can tell you that at that time we listened to interesting debates and I am quite happy to see this flag now in the House of Commons thanks to the motion adopted by all hon. members and I can only approve the place chosen by the Chair for the flag, to the right of Mr. Speaker himself. I think it was not possible to make a more sensible choice.

Mr. Stan Schumacher (Palliser): Mr. Speaker, it is not uncommon for certain bills to be introduced in this or any legislature, for that matter, which on their surface seem to be very attractive, indeed compelling, but which, when one looks into all their implications and their motivations, really say a lot more than hon. members, perhaps even the hon. member proposing the bill, would desire. It is in this category that I fear I must place the bill we are now discussing. On the surface it is very nice, very moving, very appropriate; and all the more so, I might add, Mr. Speaker, in view of certain events earlier today and yesterday. But for all of that, there is something missing.

As hon. members will remember, the flag debate aroused passions in this dominion seldom seen before or since. But when that flag was passed into law I believe all of us respected that decision and I know we all honour the flag as the flag of Canada. Perhaps, Mr. Speaker, I should not have said "the flag", for there is another flag, just as Canadian, with even more history behind it; a flag which symbolizes much to many Canadians, so much in fact that parliament in its wisdom chose, immediately after adopting the maple leaf flag, to enshrine this flag too as a flag of Canada and specifically as a symbol of the Commonwealth and monarchy.

In the explanatory note to the bill under discussion, the hon. member for Burnaby-Seymour (Mr. Nelson) says that his act is designed "to emphasize the unity of the Canadian nation," and the preamble to the bill speaks of "the Canadian nation strong and indivisible under one flag."

It is my contention, Sir, that our very strength lies in the fact that we are a big enough, strong enough, indivisible enough land, one dominion united from sea to sea, that we do have two national flags in essence and in reality. One is the product of a recent parliament and bears no less love and no less respect than the other, an ancient and storied emblem, symbol of past ties which some hon. members despise but of which I, for one, am not ashamed.

Let us remember how young a country we are and yet how strong, rich and prosperous we have become over the few years of our existence as a dominion, when compared to Great Britain, France or China. Then there are all the other reasons why we should not forget our antecedents. I always like to remember, Mr. Speaker, the words found in that noble collection of the English language, the Anglican Book of Common Prayer, where in the "Prayer for All Sorts and Conditions of Men" the great Cramner wrote:

Guard from forgetfulness of Thee all those who are strong and prosperous.

I often think some hon. members would be all too ready to do this, to throw overboard all our past, all our traditions; in some cases they would substitute nothing, in others a mess of pottage. I submit this is the precise defect in the hon. member's bill. He would establish a national flag day, but only to honour one flag.

In the first place, I invite hon. members to consider just how many "days" we want. One of our strengths as a dominion, I think, is our avoidance of the razzle-dazzle nonsense in which the Americans sometimes indulge. We avoid this, partly because of our national character and partly due to another factor I shall mention in a moment. But it seems to me unfortunate, when the post office calendar ignores Victoria Day and Dominion Day—and that is the correct name, for certain hon. members' information—that the hon. member for Burnaby-Seymour wants to set up another day.

What will be the cost of promoting it? Will children have another holiday? Will the mails cease to move, or move even more slowly than their accustomed snail's pace? Is this how the hon. member would honour our flag? Surely the honour due to a flag lies in its frequent display. No greater tribute can be paid to either of our two flags than the lump in the throat, the throbbing of the heart or the tear in the eye as we see them in the course of our normal rounds and duties and remember for what they stand and the brave men who died under them.

I know that certain hon. members of the NDP caucus, a party always ready to negate and yell down our cherished traditions in Canada—although I do not think their attitude was so obstreperous under the leadership of the hon. member for Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands (Mr. Douglas)—think that the Union Jack means nothing to Canada, and the maple leaf flag everything. But I do not think, Mr. Speaker, that any flag, including the Red Ensign, as the poet put it "dipped in the blood of fearless men", under which generations of Canadians were proud to fight and die can lightly be dismissed from Canada's history or our consideration here today: for the Commonwealth and monarchy, which are but part of this history, are its chief testators today.

The Commonwealth of Nations, which the hon. member's bill ignores, is the great and free association of nations which share a common colonial past, a common free present, a common reverence for parliamentary institutions and, in most cases, an instinctive suspicion of the quasi-presidential type of government to which we have been treated over the last years in this House and dominion. It is a viable third force in a world increasingly bound up by alliances and power groups. Its most utilitarian phase, trade and commerce, may have passed, but perhaps that enables us even more to appreciate its ethereal qualities in the present.

The Union Jack flies freely over the member nations and, the current antics in Australia excepted, the countries and the citizens thereof are not as paranoid as certain members on my left who have a suspicion of anything older than yesterday, the writings of Marx, Lenin and Trotsky always excepted. I think that any bill which is to be passed by this House, if it must set up a day to honour our flags, cannot lightly omit the Union Jack for this reason alone.

There is another reason, Mr. Speaker, and it concerns the monarchy. This House in 1964 specifically designated the Union Jack as a Canadian flag which has special significance in a royal sense. I am very proud to be a member of a party which does not have members such as the hon. member for Skeena (Mr. Howard) who yesterday in this House called royal prerogatives and recommendations affronts to hon. members and the public.

If we want to set aside a holiday, how can we do so without honouring the flag which represents our head of state? For it is the fundamental genius of our system that the Crown, intangible yet personified perfectly by our gracious Queen, to whose visits this summer we all look forward, is the ultimate source of law, virtue and honour in this country, separate and distinct from the head of government who must necessarily be political at least part of the time.

The monarchy stands first and foremost in the hearts of Canadians, first in affection, first in their prayers and first in every good and decent act in this dominion. We do not depend on the right hon. Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau), on the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Stanfield) or even on the hon. member for York South (Mr. Lewis) for our laws and liberties. They are enshrined and protected in that body so mystical and yet concrete, the Crown, and I could not vote for any flag bill which does not recognize the monarchy, the systemization of the Crown, by including the Union Jack in its provisions.

[Translation]

Mr. Claude Wagner (Saint-Hyacinthe): Mr. Speaker, I do not want to let this historic moment pass without saying a few words to express my personal satisfaction about the bill now under consideration.

I have just heard my colleagues' comments and I agree with their suggestions.

It is obvious now that we have a Canadian flag that we must foster feelings of respect and pride for it, since it reminds Canadians of the memory of those who sacrificed their life in several ways to defend our rights.

When I refer to the defence of the Canadian people's rights I mean those who died on the battlefields and I also wish to think of those who, in others fields of public life, have devoted their energy and their efforts, either as parliamentarians or in another capacity, to make this country more tolerable, the government more easily controllable and the Canadian people happier.

If it is true, Mr. Speaker, that we respect and are proud of our flag, it is not because of what it is but rather of what it represents.

For us, our flag is a symbol. It is the symbol of Canadian unity. And I must admit, Mr. Speaker, that listening to the comments of my colleagues a while ago, I was a little sad. I wished those complimentary words intended for the flag could be renewed the year round in this country, and I was remembering some incidents showing that it was so easy for politicians, be it during election campaigns or in other instances, to forget that their duty was to ensure Canadian unity. I was also remembering, but with much sorrow, the unfounded charges that were uttered from right and left. I was also remembering some disparagement campaigns; I remembered how easily mud could be thrown at others during election campaigns or at other ements, and with what care division seemed to be nursed among the Canadian people.

Mr. Speaker, I was reflecting that no doubt it is nice to hear members of Parliament today pay homage to the flag, speak with reverence of those who contributed to providing us with that symbol, but that it would be much more desirable that altogether, with no exception, on the occasion of this debate on the subject of the Canada flag day, we resolved to transpose into facts and in our daily life those noble feelings being expressed today. In such circumstances, Mr. Speaker, perhaps would we less often witness on the political scene those sad examples that are offered us, those deplorable sights which, unfortunately, endure, while apparently, hon. members bend their efforts much more on dividing the Canadian people than on uniting them.

In the same line of thought, Mr. Speaker, I do remember some words that were uttered not so long ago and which, unfortunately, among the people of Canada, contribute not only to reducing the importance and the influence that the Members of Parliament can enjoy, but also giving an erroneous notion of what we mean by Canadian unity.

Therefore, on this occasion, may I make the wish that every day, every member will read the flattering remarks made by all in the greatest spirit of cordiality. May those words come back to our mind every day and guide our deeds because I am convinced, Mr. Speaker, that we will be judged much more on our deeds than our words.

It would be fruitless and useless to quote, either from Hansard or elsewhere, speeches by hon. members praising the Canadian flag if on the same day or the same occasion one can read in the debates or the papers the speeches delivered by those same members which served to divide the Canadian people.

In making that wish, Mr. Speaker, I endorse the remarks made by my colleagues. However, I should like to point out a paradox which is quite evident. This bill was put on the order paper with great haste and I think it was only right to pay tribute to the great man the right hon. Mr. Pearson was, an authentic liberal—and I mean "authentic"—but although that tribute was called for we must also realize that there is on the same order paper a bill coming from my excellent colleague the hon. member for Hillsborough (Mr. Macquarrie) which brings to the attention of the House the deeds and accomplishments of another statesman, Sir John A. Macdonald, and I think on this occasion if our colleagues are willing to talk about Canadian unity and show a concrete example of Canadian unity it would be desirable to have both bills examined at the same time, deferred to the committee at the same time, dealt with at the same time so as to really enshrine in reality this unity which we so often praise in our speeches.

[English]

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, as one who had the honour to second the motion for second reading of this bill, I might say just a word or two. I should like to congratulate my friend and colleague, the hon. member for Burnaby-Seymour (Mr. Nelson), for presenting this bill before the House of Commons. I feel I must extend to him also another word of congratulation, because if as a new member he should get a private members' bill through during the first session he is here, what a future he has ahead of him. Indeed, some of my colleagues have been suggesting to me that if I stick around long enough I might have the same success.

Earlier today the hon. member for Cochrane (Mr. Stewart) rose and asked permission to withdraw a bill of his because its purpose had been accomplished, namely, the decision to display the Canadian flag in the House of Commons. At first, the thought occurred to me that perhaps I should withdraw half of a bill of mine that is on the order paper, but I have been reminded by the hon. member for Palliser (Mr. Schumacher) that I had better not do that.

I do have a bill, Bill C-79, which calls for two holidays in addition to those that we already have, namely, a holiday in August and a holiday in February. Now that we will have a holiday in February when this bill passes, as I said, some hon. members may think I should withdraw my Bill C-79. But I would point out, prompted by the hon. member for Palliser, that the bill we are now discussing does not give workers the day off and does not provide all of the things that go with certain holidays. It just declares it to be a legal holiday.

I hope that after we are used to the idea of Canada flag day being an important day in the Canadian calendar, we will take the further step suggested in my Bill C-79 and make it, as well as an August holiday, a holiday under the provisions of the Canada Labour Code so that all people across Canada will be able to enjoy it.

However, for the moment all one needs to say is that just as it was an historic day eight years ago, which some of us well remember, here on Parliament Hill, so this is an historic day and I suppose congratulations should be extended to all hon. members that this House seems to be ready to pass this bill.

Mr. Nielsen: Mr. Speaker, the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles), the hon. member for Cochrane (Mr. Stewart) and myself had discussions prior to commencing this private members' hour, the result of which was altered when the hon. member for Cochrane subsequently came back to us and altered conditions upon which the previous discussions were held. I am not rising to prevent the passage of the bill and the sending of it to the committee, but it was my understanding that we should be using, except for five minutes, the whole of the private members' hour for estimates. That went by the board, and I explained to the hon. member for Kenora-Rainy River (Mr. Reid) that the rest went by the board as well.

So we are prepared on this side to let the bill go to committee, but we are rather impressed by the fact that there have been several motions and several bills passed and sent to committee which were introduced by hon. members on my left as well as hon. members opposite. I think that some fairness should be shown here. My colleague, the hon. member for Hillsborough (Mr. Macquarrie), has had on the order paper Bill C-95 in this session and similar bills in previous sessions respecting Sir John A. Macdonald day. Surely there can be no greater Canadian in our historical past who would merit a legal holiday and this matter would merit the attention of the committee.

Therefore, before the expiry of private members' hour, having regard to the sense of fairness in having legislation of private members from all sides considered in a fair way, I propose that we permit the bill of the hon. member for Burnaby-Seymour (Mr. Nelson) to go to committee provided that hon. members are in agreement that Bill C-95, sponsored by the hon. member for Hillsborough, will also go with it as decided in the same private members' hour.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Nielsen: If there is general agreement, I will say no more and simply resume my seat to see whether or not there is that agreement.

Mr. Reid: Mr. Speaker, the hon. member has put me in a somewhat impossible position. Perhaps I might explain to him and to the House the way in which we have been attempting to proceed with the private members' hour of late. We have worked out an agreement with the government House leader and the cabinet that we will examine each proposal put forward by hon. members to see whether or not they are acceptable. We have done this with the first 20 items of bills and notices of motions. What we have done is to make a list of these; we have examined them and we are trying to come to some agreement with the cabinet to either accept or reject them.

It is our hope that as this new practice becomes established we will be able to accept many more private members' bills and notices of motion than has been the case in the past. Unfortunately, I am in the position where I cannot accept the offer made by the hon. member for Yukon (Mr. Nielsen) until I have had an opportunity to discuss it with the House leader and with members of the cabinet.

However, I can say that I would certainly have no objection to the same procedure being followed with respect to Bill C-95 as was followed with the bill under discussion. I have no objection to private members' bill or notices of motions from all parties being discussed and cleared in this way. I regret that under the circumstances I cannot accept the proposal put forward by the hon. member for Yukon. However, I hope that in explaining the way in which we are trying to treat private members' hour to make it more significant for members, hon. members opposite will permit this bill to go forward, and I promise in the future to give every consideration to bills that come before us and hope it will become the practice, and not the exception, in the private members' hour.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, may I rise on a point of order. I shall refrain from asking what happened to the agreement that I thought we had. I do not like this, but I suppose something must have changed. I hope, however, that the fundamental aspect of that agreement, namely, that this bill be allowed to have second reading and go to committee, might be sustained. I wonder therefore, since the hon. member for Kenora-Rainy River (Mr. Reid) is not in a position to agree to the passing of the bill in the name of the hon. member for Hillsborough (Mr. Macquarrie), whether a compromise could be reached by giving second reading to the bill we are now discussing and by the House passing an order right now putting the bill of the hon. member for Hillsborough at the top of the list of public bills so that it will come up for discussion next time we come to this hour.

Mr. MacLean: Mr. Speaker, I want to make one observation on the suggestion made by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles). The placing of a bill at the top of the list gives no assurance whatsoever of its passage. It will be talked out almost certainly. We would have to have an assurance that it would be dealt with if it were given such priority, that the motion would come to a vote and that it would be sent to the committee at the next private members' hour. We had the spectacle only yesterday of generosity being returned by the very opposite action on very similar matters. Regretfully, I have to say that before I go blindly into such an arrangement I want to know what all the consequences might be.

Mr. Nielsen: I have another suggestion to make, that rather than going along the route suggested by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre, we stand this bill—if permission is necessary to get approval of my original proposal—and deal with it in the next private members' hour.

Mr. Reid: Mr. Speaker, we would have no objection to having the bill stood and retain its present place.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Does the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles) wish to comment on this suggestion?

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): If I may, Your Honour. Naturally, I shall not object to that. I am unhappy at what seems to have happened to an agreement that we thought we had, but may I suggest that we order two things, that this bill stand at the top of the list and that the bill regarding Sir John stand as No. 2 so that we can consider them together next time.

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: It is agreed and so ordered. The hour provided for the consideration of private members' business has now expired. Perhaps the House will permit our going back into committee of the whole before I call it six o'clock. Is that agreed?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

SUPPLY

APPROPRIATION ACT No. 1, 1973

The House resumed consideration in committee of Bill C-141, for granting to Her Majesty certain sums of money for the public service for the financial year ending 31st March, 1973—Mr. MacEachen (for Mr. Drury)—Mr. McCleave in the chair.

On clause 2—Schedule.

The Chairman: Order. It being six o'clock, the committee stands adjourned until eight o'clock p.m.

At six o'clock the committee took recess.

AFTER RECESS

The committee resumed at 8 p.m.

The Deputy Chairman: When the committee rose it was considering the schedule, vote 20a related to the Department of the Environment. The hon. member for Burnaby-Richmond-Delta.

Mr. Reynolds: Mr. Chairman, I am very pleased that we are talking about the environment tonight because one of the things that has concerned me since I have been in this House is airport expansion. Airports have a great effect on our environment, and one that concerns me most is the Sea Island airport in Richmond which is in my riding.

[Mr. Nielsen.]

Mr. Marchand stated yesterday that only a small number of people were concerned about the expansion of our airport. He said that he did not see why some who wanted to obtain more money for their property used those pretexts in order to get it. I think that Mr. Marchand—

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Order.

Mr. Reynolds: —is very wrong when he accuses people in my riding of seeking more money. The people in my riding are seeking an environmental impact study on the relationship of the new airport to the environment. The main thing that is wrong with the way the government is expropriating land is that they expropriate first and do their studies later.

I have asked the hon. Minister of Transport questions regarding the environment and he has stated they are all answered. I should like to put on the record of this House some of the questions on the environment that people of my riding are still asking: (1) noise: (a) did not provide technical data on CNR noise cones; (b) new NEF noise cone reports still unavailable; (2) air pollution: no studies, data to justify statement that airplanes are not a contributory factor; (3) engine test-beds: no studies of effect enlarged airport will have on use, expansion or inconvenience caused by test beds; (4) environment: no studies, research, data on environmental effects of airport on Vancouver, Sturgeon Bank fishing, river pollution due to expected container cargo ports, etc.

Then (5) Burkville: long-range plans for this area absent. Mr. McLoud hinted that there may be long-range plans; (6) decision-making process: no information on process of planning for airport—especially whether or not Mr. Marchand has taken a direct interest in decision-making; (7) diminution of land values: neither guarantees nor information about DOT's responsibility for land values; (8) comparative costs: no information on whether comparative cost studies done—comparison of building new airport versus letting air carriers pay penalties versus cost to community. MOT said a study existed, but was not available to be taken home; (9) no data on zoning restrictions and requirements for parallel runways—these exist but have not been made available.

Then we got to (10) Boundary Bay: no studies on whether reserved area at Boundary Bay could be developed into a freight airport thus diminishing the necessity to enlarge Vancouver; (11) cargo ports: no information on proposed cargo ports, environmental effects, effects on property values of nearby Vancouver, etc; (12) population: no data to show that expected growth of airport use is based on realistic estimate of future population growth in greater Vancouver area; (forecast for needs of airport based only on predictions by airlines. This data not supplied either); (13) air space: no studies have been made of available air space (MOT seems to have sought only verbal opinion of air controllers); (14) taxiways: no plans, data, studies of effects of taxiways especially north of new runway.

Then we have (15) landfill: no studies on environmental impact, cost, source of landfill, etc; (16) sinking runway: no explanation of contention that old runway is sinking and this is the reason for the haste in building a new runway; (17) property use: no data, schedule of when and if expropriated or purchased property will be used; (18) public annoyance: no data on how MOT acquires negative information on public annoyance, whether current complaint procedures are adequate and represent actual annoyance; (19) land purchase: no clear explanation of policies used to buy up land, whether it was equitable or not.

Mr. Chairman, these are questions put to the hearing in Vancouver right now, and we still do not have any answers. The Minister of Transport says there have been environmental impact studies done, yet his department fails to produce them at the hearings and that is why we have sought to have them halted. There seems to be a conflict here, because the Minister of the Environment said last Friday night in Vancouver, as reported in the Province of Saturday, February 10:

> Environment minister Jack Davis said Friday night the ministry of transport will not expand Vancouver airport without a full environmental study, including public hearings.

A further quote from the Minister of the Environment reads:

> I think we've got at least 18 months to do this study.

If in fact, Mr. Chairman, the study has not been done, why are we expropriating the land of people in that area? We should give them a chance. The hearings require that these people be told everything that is going to happen so that they have a proper reason to object. They have not a proper reason to object now, because they do not have these answers in their hands.

For the Minister of Transport to state a few people are seeking more money for their property is scandalous, and I think they deserve an apology. The mayor of Vancouver is concerned about it and his council has passed a resolution seeking that the government delay the hearings. The greater Vancouver regional board has asked that the hearings be delayed until the environmental studies are complete.

The people of that area would like to go along with this government. They agree there is an airport needed. A year ago, in 1972, they came to an agreement with the director of the property and commercial law section of DOT on how the property would be disposed of. The government has not seen fit to bring that agreement before this House. It would have provided an agreeable solution to the problem. My last point in talking about the airport is that it is not a local problem. Members of our party and of the NDP have been raising it here since January. It is a national issue.

In the province of Quebec a priest, the Reverend Georges Duquet, has demanded a probe into the airport at Ste. Scholastique. Yet all we hear is that everything is going all right in that area. The Reverend Duquet challenged the Quebec department of justice to investigate the expropriation of thousands of acres of land for the Mirabel international airport. I read from the press report.

> At a press conference, the fiery parish priest charged that "many hands were greased" with expropriation funds and urged the justice department to look into the takeover of 93,000 acres in the Mirabel region.

The Deputy Chairman: Order, please. I am having difficulty relating the hon. member's remarks to the matter before the committee. I know he has been referring to the environmental situation relating to the setting up of an airport, but I hope he will keep to the subject matter before the committee and not discuss the process of establishing airports.

Mr. Reynolds: Mr. Chairman, I will try to abide by your suggestion, but I feel that when we talk about expropriations we are dealing with the environment, and the people of my area are as concerned about this question as Father Duquet is about Ste. Scholastique.

Mr. Guay (St. Boniface): You cannot compare the two.

Mr. Reynolds: The hon. member for St. Boniface says you cannot compare them. The people of both areas are concerned about the environmental impact and about the treatment they are receiving at the hands of this government in the matter of expropriations.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Reynolds: I have the greatest respect for the Minister of Transport and for the hon. member for St. Boniface. They have discussed this issue with us but still have not solved the problem. I wish one of them would go to my area and find out what is happening. The people of my area are concerned about the environment. I am speaking of the people of Sea Island, the people of Vancouver and the people of British Columbia. They want action. I hope that tonight's discussion will result in the Minister of Transport going to the area soon and finding out for himself the problem facing the people of British Columbia.

Mr. Davis: Mr. Chairman, the hon. member for Burnaby-Richmond asked several important questions. He is concerned about the preparation of environmental impact statements before the bulldozers move in. I think this is essential; it is basic to the federal government's position on environmental policy. It is important, however, to separate two very distinct happenings on Sea Island. One is the removal of a certain number of old homes, probably 50, by expropriation, and the other, at a later date, the expansion of the international airport there.

The expansion of the airport will be a sizeable undertaking and it will have a substantial impact on the immediate surroundings. The environmental consequences could be serious if the airport is not properly planned. But if we deal with one thing at a time, namely, the expropriation of homes and the removal of private residents from that island, the environmental impact of removing those homes will be zero, or positive. That, obviously, is good.

When we come to the expansion of the airport which will begin, say, in 18 months' time, we will need prior to that date a published environmental impact statement. I hope it can be prepared within 12 months; that is the deadline the task force is working to. It must gather all the information available to date. After the publication of that information we must hold hearings. I would hope at the same time that intervenors, be they municipalities, the provincial government or private individuals, will also bring forward ideas as to environmental consequences.

May I point out that very few developments in this country so far have been preceded by environmental impact statements. We are embarking upon a new course, hoping in this case that we will have done all the right things in the right time sequence. Certainly, in the case of the construction of a major runway costing many millions of dollars and extending into the ocean, there must be a proper environmental appraisal, a public debate on the matter and changes if those changes are necessary.

Mr. Reynolds: On a point of order, Mr. Chairman, the minister referred to my constituency as Burnaby-Richmond, and forgot the "Delta" part of it. There are many fine people in the Delta and they do not like to see their part of the riding left out when the riding is mentioned. Another point of order is that the hon. member for St. Boniface thumped his desk when the Minister of Environment suggested that the government is trying to do things the right way. I am sure it is; there are hard working people over there. But obviously the people of British Columbia do not agree with the hon. member, otherwise, they would not be complaining.

The Deputy Chairman: Order, please. The hon. member is making an argument or a case. I think he should take the floor on a subsequent occasion and make his comments about the remarks of the minister.

Mr. Grier: Mr. Chairman, I wish to say a few words on a matter affecting the environment. It is not mentioned as frequently as some others. It has to do with noise control, noise pollution, noise abatement and the general impact of noise on the environment.

Mr. Nielsen: Beginning with the hon. member.

Mr. Grier: After spending six weeks as a member of the House of Commons, I have become more familiar with the effect of noise on the immediate environment than I was before coming here.

Mr. Nielsen: Especially as the hon. member sits where he does.

Mr. Grier: The problem of noise pollution is one of which we have become increasingly aware in recent years, especially in cities where industrial, residential and commercial uses of various kinds intermix one with another. Increasingly, environmental authorities, including those of the federal government, ought to be concerned about the problem of noise.

In the cities and metropolitan areas the problem of noise pollution is especially severe, particularly in those parts of cities where industrial and residential areas are intermixed. This is most likely to happen in older parts of cities or in older suburbs because there, among core industries, substantial residential developments have grown up. For that matter, one will find noise pollution even within residential areas themselves as innocuous devices such as domestic air conditioners can, over a period, create an intolerable nuisance to people in the immediate neighbourhood.

Notwithstanding the problem of jurisdiction as between federal and provincial levels of government, and the further problem that a certain amount of noise abatement control is undertaken at the municipal level, there are steps which could be and ought to have been taken by the federal government. I am particularly anxious to see action in this area because there are problems which have arisen in my constituency. I hope hon. members will forgive me for referring to my own constituency in this connection. I am sure, however, that most Members of Parliament representing urban constituencies will find similar problems in their areas.

In my constituency, the residents living on a number of streets are severely disturbed by noise coming from Canadian National Railways marshalling yards and the Go transit yards operated by the Ontario government. Over a number of months I have, in conjunction with members of other levels of government and a number of citizens, been trying to take some kind of action to deal with this problem. Our efforts have been frustrated. First, there do not appear to exist any uniformly accepted sets of standards as to what are acceptable noise levels and what are intolerable noise levels. Second, there is great confusion as to which authority, municipal, provincial or federal, is responsible for dealing with the problem.

These residents and others have found that it is almost impossible to get any level of government to take constructive action on a problem that is of serious concern to many residents, one which is causing depreciation in the value of their property and appears to defy the rational solutions which one ought to expect to be brought to bear upon the problem.

This is a matter which the federal government is obliged to deal with, and I suggest it could be dealt with in one or two ways. Under the authority of the Department of the Environment, some kind of national noise control code or set of standards should be established. This should govern the operation of enterprises and activities within the federal jurisdiction. It would serve as a set of standards for the guidance of other jurisdictions, industries in the private and public sector and the general public. For example, when citizens appeal to their municipal government for assistance in the matter of noise control, they are frequently told that there is no satisfactory set of standards, the matter is not yet fully probed and no immediate action appears to be possible.

Without suggesting that the federal government can interfere with those enterprises or activities which fall within the jurisdiction of another level of government, I think a set of standards which have integrity, which are acceptable to experts in the area and which can be publicized would be of substantial benefit to citizens who are seeking redress of grievances arising from noise pollution. At the same time, such a set of standards ought to be enforced upon all enterprises that fall under federal jurisdiction.

I do not exempt the railways from such a suggestion. In my view, the railways are frequently among the worst offenders. We are not now dealing with the railways of 50 or 60 years ago when steam engines inevitably made a certain amount of noise. We are now dealing with problems of a more sophisticated and complex nature which I believe can be overcome and controlled. As result, residents within the immediate environment of the noise-emitting agency would be given some protection which they are now denied.

As I speak, and I hope this is not a reflection on my oratorical ability, the level of noise in the House of Commons appears to be rising. Perhaps it is appropriate as I deal with this problem. In any event, I want to draw to the attention of the minister that there have been undertaken in other countries very substantial efforts to control noise pollution. I draw to his attention the maximum noise level standards established by the Swiss anti-noise commission. That federal country seems to have had no serious difficulty in establishing and enforcing substantial anti-noise devices and control in recent years.

The United States Congress set standards in that federal country under the national environmental protection act. They are enforced by the environmental protection agency. They apply to virtually all forms of noise pollution except those surrounding the operation of airports and aircraft. In Great Britain, the British Standards Institution has set out a comprehensive method of rating industrial noise affecting mixed residential and industrial areas. As I said at the beginning of my remarks, I think this matter is of most immediate concern in our country. Those standards are elaborately described in a document published by the British Standards Institution which I commend to the Department of the Environment.

I am aware that many problems surrounding the general area of noise pollution and noise control must be solved at the provincial and/or municipal level. However, I believe that federal leadership is required and can be extremely beneficial. I believe that federal leadership, as an example to a wider community, by way of direct action in connection with those enterprises and agencies which fall within federal control, and by way of moral support to a growing number of citizens in Canada who take the environmental issue seriously and who are devoting their attention to this particular and less tangible form of pollution which none the less may have as serious an impact on our over-all environment as any other, would enable those seeking action and redress at any level to enlist the support of an authoritative set of standards in their struggle to protect their neighbourhoods and point to an example set by the federal government in this field.

Mr. Fraser: Mr. Chairman, I do not want to be overly long tonight, but I think the matter raised by the hon. member for Burnaby-Richmond-Delta deserves some comment in this debate on the environment. I do not mean to go back into a great deal of detail as to what is wrong with regard to the proposed plans for the Vancouver airport. The point I want to make is that we are now reacting after the event.

The Minister of the Environment said that before this project goes ahead, we will need to have a fully fledged environmental study and these matters will all have to be considered. My position is that this shows the basic weakness in our environmental planning, our administrative system and our legislative system. The decision to go ahead with this new runway was made a long time ago, before members on the government side or members of the bureaucracy who have to do these things in a detailed way had any idea of what the impact would be on the surrounding municipalities. What is the use of coming along after the event and promising that we will have another study? According to newspaper reports we will be spending $3 million to $4 million to expropriate this land. We will have destroyed a neighbourhood in the process.

Now there is to be an environmental study. I say, with respect, that the only reason there is to be an environmental study is that there has been so much commotion raised about the matter in the House of Commons during the last month or so. The point is that we have not yet come up with an answer to the question: How shall we make decisions in a proper sequence? It is not enough to come along after the event, at the tail end of the decision-making process, and run around trying to satisfy some irate voters by giving them a sop and saying there is to be an environmental study. Let me give an example. The Province of February 12, writes:

> The problem of noise levels is being re-examined this weekend by Minister of Transport's Warren Christopher, a senior planning officer from Ottawa, who will try to produce an updated noise exposure forecast by today in partial answer to objector's demands for information.

Why was this not done a long time ago? When we are talking about the environment, we must remember that unless all hon. members in this House recognize that our decision-making process is all wrong we shall be unable to satisfy the public and we shall be unable to solve environmental problems. We have been talking tonight about Vancouver, but this could apply to any area across this nation.

The last point I want to make is this. All hon. members in this House have an obligation to the electorate of Canada to look as though they are trying to do things properly. The protest which is growing in my city does not come only from a few people who are objecting to the expropriation of their property. Hon. members, especially those on the government side, must realize that protests have come from the municipality of Richmond, the city of Vancouver and the executive committee of the greater Vancouver district. The city of Vancouver passed unanimously a resolution last week asking that this whole process be stopped until they can discuss it; and today a telegram has been sent to the Prime Minister from the executive committee of the greater Vancouver district saying: "Stop it until we know what is going on."

These are not protests coming from silly people who are only concerned about the value of their property. These protests are coming from an entire community. If we go on doing things the way we have been doing them—we must all take some of the blame for this—the faith of the ordinary person in the validity of our decision-making will become less and less. So it behoves us all, especially members on the government side, to remember what the consequences are likely to be, because we have an obligation to show the electorate that we can make decisions in a way that makes sense to the people who have sent us here.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Davis: Mr. Chairman, the hon. member for Vancouver South made a lot of sense. He said many of the right things. We must make environmental studies before we undertake major construction projects. If we had enough expertise, enough biologists around, we should carry out environmental studies in connection with everything we do.

The hon. member was president of the Garibaldi Olympics Association, and they were very active promoting a development in connection with the winter Olympics in a pristine part of British Columbia, Whistler Mountain. But they never did an environmental impact study.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Davis: However, in fairness to the hon. member, environmental impact studies were not in vogue in 1970. Today, people are looking further ahead and asking more important questions. All I want to say to the hon. member is that he must not take for granted that a decision to build a runway in a location is final, and by a date that is settled forever. If, over the next year, we come up with reasons, or others come up with reasons of an environmental character, telling us why this should be done and should not be done, we will have to change our plans. That is basic policy and that is what I believe will be done. And I know I will have the support of the hon. member.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Lundrigan: Mr. Chairman, the first thing I would like to do is to congratulate my hon. friend from Vancouver South for the tremendous contribution he has made in recent weeks to the debate on environmental matters. I am sure he exemplifies the quality of representation we need in the House of Commons. Second, I would like to congratulate my colleagues from western Canada who during the last few days while we have been engaged in discussion of the supplementary estimates have shown much initiative in displaying their concern about the direction being taken in rural Canada and about the problems being faced by our agricultural industry. If I were a voter from western Canada I would be very happy about the quality of representation being brought to the House of Commons by western members in recent days.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Lundrigan: I wish to make, Mr. Chairman, what one colleague of mine in the provincial legislature once called a second maiden speech. This is my second maiden speech. It is the first time I have taken the floor this year except for a few points of order and a couple of questions during the question period.

I make this speech feeling there has been an area in this session of parliament which has been sadly neglected. I am, of course, referring to the fisheries of Canada. I know when I talk about the fisheries in this country I am talking about a topic which has never been high in popularity on the parliamentary menu of the House of Commons. In fact, I am reminded of the day when colleagues from my own province took part in a debate on fisheries questions and were mocked by members across the way. I remember the constant din that was set up by those hon. members, repeating the word "fish", "fish", "fish". I suppose one could only call it fun-poking at us for participating in a fisheries debate.

I must even admit, Mr. Chairman, that as I stand here tonight talking about fisheries I do not feel quite as much in order as I would if I were talking about other matters. I am sure that if I were a representative from, say, Toronto, I would feel more in order talking about something like Pickering airport, or perhaps Ste. Scholastique because those things are big, they cost something like $600 million and everybody has come to understand that kind of importance. I suppose it is because this country has become a great big country. It has large cities, great concentrations of people, sophisticated questions about language and urban development, bilingualism, disunity, regional development and all manner of nonsense. But when you talk about fish, that is something which identifies only with little guys.

Mr. McGrath: Just a four-letter word.

Mr. Lundrigan: Yes, Mr. Chairman, just as my hon. friend from St. John's East has said, it is just a four-letter word.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Lundrigan: Of course, the Prime Minister would understand that language, even though he might not know much about the fisheries.

But I remember, Mr. Chairman, when I first came to the House of Commons in 1968 I felt a great deal of pride in being able to identify with the fisheries. As many hon. members who have come here since then, as well as those who have been here a long time, will know, the fishing industry was what gave birth to what has become the Canadian nation.

There is documented evidence available which goes back to the year 1,000 A.D., ample evidence which goes back to 1497 and 1610 in Canadian history, showing the value of Canadian fisheries. It was the first staple industry ever to be established. It was followed by the fur trade, then the great concentration on timber because of the wars and the naval development in Europe. Later we saw the great migration to western Canada and the building of the railways. This was a great, exciting period. But it was only yesterday. Such developments have taken place only in the last hundred years. The fishing industry, however, was what gave birth to the Canadian nation.

I remember just a while ago, relatively speaking, we heard a statement by the Minister of the Environment that he intended to disband the ministry of fisheries. The province of Newfoundland joined the confederation of Canada in 1949. In 1867 the Fathers of Confederation saw fit to establish a Department of Fisheries. Now, in 1973, the man who sits across from me today calls himself the minister of the sexy department, but there is no longer a fisheries department.

Mr. Davis: You haven't asked a question this year about fisheries.

Mr. Lundrigan: The minister tells me I haven't asked a question about fisheries this year, and that is exactly the point I am trying to make. You do not talk about fish in the House of Commons any longer; you talk about the environment.

An hon. Member: What's wrong with that.

Mr. Lundrigan: I'm all in favour of it. I am one of the greatest environmentalists in Canada because I live in a province that is one of the last frontiers. It is uninhabited and unmolested, with thousands and thousands of square miles of beauty that is unpolluted by mankind. I tell you that I am going to be here a long while before I ever allow some of the things to happen there that have been happening in some parts of Canada.

When the minister brought in his Department of the Environment every Canadian knows that he eliminated the department of fisheries. Consequently, today even some of our most vocal spokesmen on fish find it almost impossible to stand here with any support from the House of Commons and talk about fish. You do not hear any questions about fish.

An hon. Member: Why not?

Mr. Lundrigan: The minister does not want to hear about fish in this House.

Mr. Crouse: There is no department of fisheries, that is why not. You have no interest in fish. You cut out whaling, you cut out sealing and you cut out everything. You are the biggest doomsday guy in the House, and you know it.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Crouse: That's why you don't hear about it.

Some hon. Members: Shame!

Mr. Crouse: You betrayed the fishing industry; you made a mockery of it.

Some hon. Members: Order.

Mr. Lundrigan: Mr. Chairman, my colleague, the hon. member for South Shore, was chairman of the fisheries committee for four years and in my opinion he exemplifies the kind of character, steadfastness and ability we need in the fishing industry of this nation. He has now pretty well expressed the view I wanted to express.

The Minister of the Environment is not interested in fisheries. He does not want to be involved in fisheries. I am sure around the cabinet table he never mentions fisheries legislation. We have eliminated the ministry of fisheries. We have excellent people in the department who are involved with fisheries, but the point I am trying to make is that we have lost our initiative in Canada as a nation which depends so heavily on fisheries. The minister made a tragic blunder when he eliminated the department of fisheries.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Lundrigan: During the last election campaign the leader of our party went across Canada and said—

An hon. Member: Which one?

Mr. Crouse: You know which one. There is only one leader in our party. But we could not find your leader over there today.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

An hon. Member: How about some order?

Mr. Crouse: You just can't take it. Where is your leader? You haven't got one.

An hon. Member: Oh, go get your dory.

Mr. Crouse: Never mind my dory.

Mr. Lundrigan: During the last election campaign our leader stated categorically that we would adopt a policy to rejuvenate the department of fisheries which would in no way impinge on the ability of the government to handle environmental problems. The Minister of Fisheries said categorically that there was no need for it, and my hon. friend from Newfoundland in that cabinet had no choice but to honour his responsibility in the cabinet.

The end result was that after the election was over we came back to the House of Commons and we were told that the government was going to restructure the department a little. We were not going to have a minister or a deputy minister of fisheries; there was to be a Minister of the Environment and a deputy minister of the environment. But we were told that we would have an assistant deputy minister of the environment and an assistant deputy minister of fisheries and related services, or some such nonsense.

It was made quite clear that the minister realized he had made a mistake, but he was not big enough to stand up before the House of Commons and the Canadian people and say he had made a mistake and intended to restore the department of fisheries. Perhaps he could not get support from his Prime Minister. I am sure he could not get support from the Secretary of State for External Affairs because that is where the biggest problem lies. The minister should have to stand today and tell the whole story about the problems he is having in cabinet with Mr. Sharp, because that is where the problem lies.

I will get around to that subject in a few minutes, and I apologize for using the hon. gentleman's name. When talking about external affairs we should remember that there are a whole lot of external matters that come under that department which do not apply to the fishery. Let me place a few things on the record that have caused us concern.

The hon. member for Northumberland-Miramichi was a great salmon fisherman and a great sportsman. He is not here tonight but he has been here and has raised problems in respect of salmon, just as the hon. member for Saint John-Lancaster has. I want to inform hon. members of this House that I am going to rise on a point of order every time someone stands up and directs a question to the Minister of Fisheries, because he is not alive and does not exist. He has been dead for over a year. I am going to rise on a question of privilege every time someone asks a question of the Minister of Fisheries.

Mr. Davis: It is in the act.

Mr. Lundrigan: What act? He is in the act? I know he is acting all right and that he is a great actor, but where is the Minister of Fisheries mentioned? This ministry does not appear in Hansard. Where the hell is he? This table of ministers indicates that the Hon. Jack Davis is Minister of the Environment, and this is the official record of Hansard. It lists the ministry according to precedence, and it appears in Wednesday's Hansard every week. There is no mention of fisheries. Show me where he exists? The Minister of the Environment should be a little careful as to what he is talking about. Obviously he does not exist.

Mr. Davis: It is in the Government Organization Act.

Mr. Lundrigan: He is in the Government Organization Act? Where is that buried? Everybody agrees that the minister is a cold fish, but he is certainly not a very active one. Let's get on to the real issue. We had the Danes involved in the high seas fishery for salmon. The United States very quietly and behind the scenes sent a delegation to Denmark and took their stand against the Danes being involved in the high seas salmon fishery. What did the Minister of the Environment do or say? He said he was going to cure this problem in respect of the declining salmon fishery off the Atlantic coast. He said he would do this by destroying the livelihood of Atlantic salmon fishermen. He said he would take them out of the salmon fishery, and that this would replenish the stock. He gave the impression that he was doing this because he was out to stop the Danes. I suppose he thought they would become very humble because we were punishing our fishermen and that they, the Danes, would then withdraw from this fishery. Instead, they said that he could go straight to hell and that they would have nothing to do with him. They have not done anything about it. The Danes have not reduced their fishing fleet and they are continuing in this salmon fishery as they have over the years. Not only have we not stopped the Danes or turned them back, but they are getting the benefits of this fishery and we are being accused of being criminals.

The minister and officials of his department said the other day that the fishermen of New Brunswick were inflating their estimates of the cost of their fishing gear. He said the costs were so high they could not settle the claims. The Globe and Mail came out with a headline to the effect that the fishermen of the Atlantic region were trying to take advantage of the Department of the Environment. Everybody across Canada, especially those in Toronto, now thinks we are a bunch of crooks down in the Atlantic region because of the attitude taken by this minister. That is the kind of publicity we can well do without if we are as interested in national unity as those of us from the Atlantic region. What has happened to the seal fishery?

An hon. Member: Oh, don't mention that.

Mr. Lundrigan: Last year I received a letter from a favourite friend of mine in British Columbia who writes me periodically about the seal fishery. There is a lot of interest in the seal fishery in British Columbia, especially around Capilano, and don't tell me the minister is not concerned about what goes on in Capilano. In any event, this lady said there had been a secret treaty signed with Norway allowing the Norwegians to take 60,000 of our seals inside our 12-mile limit. Canada has a 12-mile limit, and this is about as archaic as the cannon. That is how we got the three-mile limit. In the days when we had cannons we used to shoot three miles out into the Atlantic and if anyone came within that distance he was endangering himself. As a result, it was said that we had a three-mile limit.

Fishing has been carried on since 1000 A.D., but since 1400 we have only been able to establish a 12-mile limit. The minister is advancing at the rate of about one-eighth of a mile every hundred years. We might be up to a 15-mile limit in the next two centuries. In any event, the minister has decided he is going to do something about Norway and has said that we want Norway out of the Gulf of St. Lawrence. For over a year he has been talking of this gulf as being a Canadian area. He has made the statement that it is exclusively Canadian waters, but we have found that he has made an agreement with Norway whereby they are still to be allowed in the gulf until some time to come. When is the minister going to get them out?

Mr. Davis: They have not been there for ten years.

Mr. Lundrigan: The minister says that they have not been there for ten years. Well, that is the greatest revelation I have ever heard, because the Secretary of State for External Affairs and the Minister of the Environment have been telling us that in order to get them out of the Gulf of St. Lawrence we had to give away our seal fishing rights. We were told a special concession had to be given. Last year secret talks were held in this connection and then they were allowed to take 60,000 of our seals nine miles inside our territorial sea. I do not know of another occasion on which we have allowed people to declare war on us by agreement.

Then we might talk about the whaling industry. There is no whaling industry in my riding. The hon. member for South Shore has a whaling industry in his riding.

An hon. Member: He does not have it now because it was taken away from his constituency.

Mr. Lundrigan: He had one. The hon. member for Bonavista-Trinity-Conception, who sits across the way, is not here tonight. I am waiting for him to make his maiden speech. He had a whaling industry in his riding. The minister read Farley Mowat's book on Burgeo and the killing of a whale. I have read Farley Mowat's books for years. The first book I read was "The People of the Deer". I love his writings. He is a dramatist and an author. His writings are partly based on fact and largely on fiction. There is also a lady in Toronto who has been involved in saving the whales.

There have been 50,000 whales killed by the nations of the world, and 500 by Canadians. The minister decided to set an example. One day he held a press conference on whaling in Canada. The people were told that we must protect our non-renewable resources so he cut out whaling. The minister did not have the decency to tell the people what the scientific evidence was, what the situation was and what we should do. He did not say we must have a plan. He said when people are put out of work there must be an alternative arrangement for them so they will have employment. There are hundreds of thousands of people walking the streets today as a result of the behaviour of this government. When I think of the behaviour of this minister I am ashamed that I have not violated that little space between us.

Now I shall move on to the matter of the swordfish industry. This does not have anything to do with us in Newfoundland. The minister does not allow us to sell our swordfish. He tells us the reason is that there are certain mercury levels and contaminants, and yet swordfish are being sold in other parts of the world.

Mr. Davis: The Americans will not allow it to be sold in the U.S.

Mr. Lundrigan: Well, are swordfish being harvested by other nations? I thought they were.

Mr. Davis: Tell us.

Mr. Lundrigan: I will not tell anything. I do not know anything about fisheries. I am from the east coast. I am not involved in that. I eat T-bone steaks and filet mignon.

Then we have the lobster fishery. We do not know what we are doing in respect of that industry because we do not know when the minister will pull the plug and destroy the industry. Regulations are being made without any consultation. Last year the minister would not allow anybody in our province to take salmon who had not been involved in the industry prior to the bringing in of the regulations. There are people in my province who have never done anything except fish, and now many of them cannot obtain a licence to fish salmon. There used to be a man who would come around and ask if a person wished a salmon licence. We are not as sophisticated as the people are in Capilano and other places. This man would come around and we would get a licence from him. However, if a man did not get a licence in a particular year, he was barred for all time; the minister decided to put him out of business even though he had all the salmon nets and gear sitting in his yard. This is the type of regulation this department brings in. We can talk about national unity, but how can we respect this kind of attitude?

The Deputy Chairman: Order, please. I must interrupt the hon. member to tell him that the time allotted to him has expired. Is the hon. member rising on a point of order?

Mr. Lundrigan: Yes, Mr. Chairman. Is it not customary for an hon. member to carry on, with unanimous consent?

The Deputy Chairman: Of course, the hon. member may continue if there is unanimous consent. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

The Deputy Chairman: The Chair is of the opinion that there is not unanimous consent. The Chair now recognizes the hon. member for Sarnia-Lambton.

Mr. Lundrigan: Before you do so, Mr. Chairman, may I say that I think it is a silly rule because I will probably be back on again in 20 minutes. May I ask what member in the Liberal Party denied the unanimous consent needed for me to continue? Is it possible for you to tell me, Mr. Chairman?

The Deputy Chairman: Order, please. The hon. member knows that the Chair is a servant of the House and must abide by the rules of the House, which provide for a limit of 20 minutes on the speeches of hon. members in committee of the whole. I must call upon the hon. member for Sarnia-Lambton.

Mr. Nielsen: I rise on a point of order, Mr. Chairman. Since we all want to get on with the consideration of these estimates and have the discussion completed as quickly as we can, I believe there should be some co-operation. The rules provide that an hon. member may speak as many times as he chooses—

The Deputy Chairman: Order, please. The hon. member for Yukon knows the rules. There is no provision in the rules to extend an hon. member's time unless there is unanimous consent. I must abide by the rules and recognize the hon. member for Sarnia-Lambton, who also has a right to speak in this House.

Mr. Drury: Mr. Chairman, I think there is agreement on this side for the hon. member to continue.

Mr. Nielsen: I was simply about to suggest to the committee that it give unanimous consent in order that we may get on with our business and not take any more time than is necessary.

The Deputy Chairman: I could again ask whether there is unanimous consent. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Lundrigan: Mr. Chairman, I did not realize I was allowed only 20 minutes. I had assumed I would be allowed 30 minutes. I thank hon. members for the privilege they have given me of continuing. There are two or three points I should like to talk about. I could speak for five or six hours because I think the question of fisheries is that important.

A couple of days ago I received a letter from the Department of Public Works. I had written the department on behalf of a small fishing community asking for some facilities. I was told in the letter from the department that they did have some opinions, but could not do anything about it because they had not received an expression of opinion from the Department of the Environment; therefore could not make a decision. Two years ago it was my understanding that the Minister of the Environment assumed responsibility for matters of facilities which came under fisheries. My understanding was that they were going to take unto themselves what is now the role of the Department of Public Works in constructing these facilities, Apparently this has not happened, either, because of conflict within the cabinet, difficulty with regard to jurisdiction or difficulties in structuring.

• (2100)

The fact is that today on our coast—and I think hon. members from the Pacific coast are of the same opinion—you cannot get anything from the Department of Public Works. All of our facilities, thousands of wharves and breakwaters and other fishing facilities that are absolutely essential for the continuation of the industry, are going downhill and are not being replaced. If you write to the Department of the Environment or the Department of Public Works they will tell you that there has been no increase in the fishing activity and therefore the expense cannot be justified. Every move is being made to destroy the fishing industry of this nation, and that is our major concern. I ask the minister to clear up once and for all this nonsense regarding who is responsible for fishing facilities.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Lundrigan: I will pass over several things having to do with marketing and the flow of dollars into the pockets of our fishermen and go on to another issue which is major in consequence. It has to do with unemployment insurance for fishermen. About two years ago we started raising questions about some plan that the minister might have for the fishermen of our country so that they could be treated in the same way as workers in other industries in terms of unemployment insurance benefits. The Minister of the Environment stated at that time that his department was studying the problem.

Three or four weeks ago I met Mr. Guy Cousineau, chairman of the Unemployment Insurance Commission, and raised the question with him. He told me that the commission had studied the problem extensively. I make no negative comment about Mr. Cousineau's involvement, which is a very recent and a very honourable one but the fact is that the department has not yet come to grips with the problem.

I should like to tell hon. members a fact which I am sure some of them do not know. If a labourer or construction worker has eight weeks' stamps, he can qualify for up to 44 weeks benefits under the Unemployment Insurance Act. Some hon. members may ask why fishermen are involved at all. I wonder whether they know what fishermen can get with eight weeks' stamps. Does anybody in the House know what a fisherman can get with eight weeks' stamps? There is a special ruling for fishermen. They get in benefits two-thirds of the number of weeks they have worked. For example, if a fisherman pays for nine weeks' stamps—I will try to make it easier for those hon. members who are not as mathematically inclined as the minister—he can get only six weeks' benefits. He cannot start receiving benefits until December 1, and this ends in May.

There are all kinds of restrictions; it does not make any difference how long a fisherman works, how industrious he is. In the fall, the fisherman who goes out to fish in the North Atlantic—the same thing would apply in the Pacific—begins to find his unemployment insurance benefits limited. In the fall, the weather on the North Atlantic deteriorates, the big storms start, storms that have a wind velocity of 80 or 100 miles an hour sometimes. This gets a little rough, and fishermen can only work a few days a week. We talk about rough times in the House of Commons. Let me say that this is a pleasure trip in comparison. Nobody here understands how rough it gets out there. These fellows can go out to fish in the Atlantic only on certain days.

What do you think the UIC does? When fishing stops in the fall, they take the fishermen's last 20 weeks of work and they average out what benefits they have had. Consequently, the fellow who gets in his boat and goes out into the North Atlantic in the fall, in November or December, is running the risk of losing his life but is penalized for that. The reason is that he is too industrious. However, the fellow who decided that it is a little too cold out yonder and gives up fishing in August is all right because he has had the beautiful, heavy summer, fishing stamps at a time when there is a glut of fish around the shores.

This is the kind of benefit that the minister is ready to provide for our fishermen. Does he not feel guilty about these kinds of injustices? If I were sitting there as Minister of the Environment and either had not enough interest or enough pull in the cabinet to rectify these matters, I would feel embarrassed and really ashamed.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Lundrigan: Any fisherman in Newfoundland who really understands what fishing is all about would feel the same as I do. My colleagues from Nova Scotia are certainly well able to speak for themselves, but I know they have the same attitude. The same is true in the province of Ontario in which fresh fish marketing is all messed up. Manitoba also got itself into a mess because of fresh fish marketing. Yet this minister does not want to talk about it because the sexy thing right now is the environment. When you talk about the environment you can cloud the fishing industry issue. If we had a minister of fisheries today, he would be roasted alive in the House of Commons.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Lundrigan: That is not happening to this minister because the environment issue is so popular and so much on the minds of people nowadays that we hardly have time to talk about fish. I understand what the hon. member from the Vancouver area is talking about every day and what his colleague from Vancouver means. These are vital issues, and consequently fishing has become irrelevant. It is a ruptured appendix which should be cut out, so far as the minister is concerned.

Mr. Chairman, there are two or three other issues to which I should like to refer. One is the sort of thing with which the hon. member for Hull across the way should be able to identify. I am referring to the hon. doctor who sits here daily, the distinguished member. Even my colleagues from parts of Canada that have never seen the rolling waves of the Atlantic ocean should be able to understand this. In 1947—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. McGrath: They don't know what you are talking about.

An hon. Member: That is before Stanley Knowles.

Mr. Lundrigan: I am getting a charge out of watching the Minister of National Health and Welfare who until recently was one of the super group.

Mr. Hees: "Was" is the operative word.

Mr. Lundrigan: He was better off in the Prime Minister's office where he had the protection and security of being behind the scenes.

Mr. Hees: We need you back there, Marc.

The Assistant Deputy Chairman: Order, please. I have only recently assumed the chair and I must ask the hon. member whether we are now on the subject of the environment or on National Health and Welfare.

Mr. Lundrigan: I am talking about fishing, Mr. Chairman, but I should be talking about pollution, I recognize that. However, I will get to the point. We have a problem, and I should like hon. members in their daily deliberations to give this problem serious consideration. The fact that our country has developed economically is due mainly to our fishing resources. I remember hearing my colleague, the hon. member for Burin-Burgeo, the eloquent Minister of Regional Economic Expansion, say, one day when we were asking for subsidies, that if we were here when John Cabot came across we would be looking for subsidies for fishing baskets which were used to sink into the water to catch the fish which were there in great abundance. Unwittingly he reminded us that the resource was rolling up on the beaches of North America. It was the same as gold except that the shape and weight were different; it attracted people the same way that gold attracted people to Alaska. It was another major form of wealth. We had millions and millions of dollars worth of fish.

The ancestors of many members of the House today constructed boats and developed the technology to harvest that resource. They fought the elements, they scratched and dug into an environment which was completely foreign to many who came from Europe, especially those who came from southern European countries, and thus they eked out a living. Some of them survived, some did not. They distinguished themselves as aggressive, competent people. About 20 years ago—and this is not due to this government—we became part of Canada. Since that time, the fishing industry in Atlantic Canada is something that people blush about when they talk about it.

The Soviet Union discovered there were resources out there. Mr. Chairman, we discovered that 500 years ago. But the Soviet Union discovered them ten years ago and put millions of dollars into a great naval fleet, not to declare war on Canada militarily but to declare war on our fishing resources. That is what the Soviet Union and other nations have done off our coasts. Hon. members get all excited when we send troops to Viet Nam. But, Mr. Chairman, we have been at war for years. The Russians have been sending naval fleets to attack our resources.

The Russians destroyed the whole resources of the Hamilton Inlet banks, which was the spawning ground for the traditional Labrador fishery. In one year the Soviet Union and other nations took enough fish off that bank, and other banks, to keep the largest fish plant in my riding going for 100 years, employing 300 people. They took away one billion pounds of fish. So that hon. members can understand the magnitude of this, I repeat that that amount of fish could have kept the largest fish plant in my riding going for 100 years, employing 300 people working eight or ten hours a day. The end result was that that fishery was completely destroyed.

Is it any wonder that in the last three years members from my province have been standing up in this House asking for special assistance for our fishermen on the Labrador coast? Our fishermen traditionally used to go up the Labrador coast and harvest these resources in small boats. I have heard stories in which my ancestors described the quality and quantity of those resources. Today there is nothing left. Today, as we say, we cannot get a fish for the pot on the Labrador coast. The whole fishery is destroyed. Foreign nations moved in 250 miles off our shores and destroyed the spawning grounds.

The government has imposed some limitation on this, and I agree with that action, but overfishing continues to take place on all our banks and spawning grounds. The Secretary of State for External Affairs has not the gumption to stand up and tell us what propositions Canada will be presenting to the next International Law of the Sea Conference. The reason is that the government has no proposition to present. It is ashamed of the fishing industry. This is true; this is a fact.

Ministers don't talk about this in cabinet. They are not going to present any case at the next Law of the Sea Conference because the fishery does not fit into their major strategy for the Canadian nation. Iceland had no alternative but to take action. Icelanders depend on fishing for their livelihood. A year ago they established a 50-mile limit. They said to the British and Germans, "You send your bloody ships in here and we will sink them." And, Mr. Chairman, Iceland does not have a large enough navy to occupy the Rideau canal!

Mr. Drury: I rise on a point of order, Mr. Chairman. I hesitate to interrupt the hon. gentleman, particularly as we have agreed to allow him to continue, but I would point out that we are under some time pressure on this particular question. If we do not succeed in completing our consideration of supply before we get into the budget debate, all these programs we are considering will not be able to start until after the budget debate. I would hope the hon. gentleman would be able to conclude now because I do not think he was making a leader's speech.

Mr. Lundrigan: I will respect that opinion, Mr. Chairman. We have been under a time pressure for about 500 years, but I am going to respect the minister's opinion. I think that I have gone beyond the normal privilege that one should take when one has been given extended time.

I just hope that one of these days we will get a Canadian government and a Canadian minister, and Canadian people, who realize that there is more in Canada causing disunity than just a language problem. There are a lot of serious economic problems and a lot of cultural problems. I and my six fellow colleagues from Newfoundland are the youngest Canadians here. As Canadians we are just 24 years old. We have a lot of social welfare problems, a lot of economic problems, but we would feel a lot more at home in confederation if we saw a manifestation on the part of any government, whether it be a government made up of hon. members opposite or a government made up of hon. members on this side, that it knew our problems were real. All Canadians have their own problems, but they are not getting the response from the government that they should be getting. I plead with hon. members to pay attention to our problems because they strike at the roots of the system in this federal country.

Mr. McCain: Mr. Chairman, I wish I had the sense of humour and the ability to deliver a speech displayed by the hon. gentleman who has just spoken, but I do not. One thing I resent is that no man delivered a speech with more sincerity than he and was faced with more mockery by hon. gentlemen to your right, Sir. They took it in a very lighthearted fashion. I exclude the minister from that, but those who sit behind him treated the speech with laughter. That is a disgrace to this House and an insult to the fishing industry.

I would like to pose just a few questions that hon. members might consider. Place yourself in the position of a clam-digger in the Atlantic area who is eligible for unemployment insurance. It is in the law of the land that you are eligible. So you try to find out why it is impossible to draw benefits. You go the Minister of Fisheries, if there is one, and he tells you, "You have a complete season. There is no reason why you should not get unemployment insurance." But you know that you have a very limited fishing season because the minister has closed down the fishery.

When you try to find out from the Minister of National Health and Welfare why you cannot get unemployment insurance stamps, you are told it is because the terms and conditions regarding unemployment insurance for clam-diggers have been set by the Department of National Revenue, and not even the Department of Fisheries can help you. Laugh that off, I say to hon. gentlemen opposite.

The fisherman is confused beyond reason by the host of regulations emanating from Ottawa, regulations drawn up without consultation with the fishermen. We are told in the Bay of Fundy that we should catch only a very limited number of fish of various species. But when one talks to fishermen who have been placed on quota, they say, "The best description of our quota that we can give you is that a Gloucester fishermen once said, 'The Russians don't need sonar. For generations we have been able to find schools of fish, but now when we find them the Russians overrun us and we cannot catch them.'"

The catch in that area is down to 20 per cent of what it was 25 years ago. It is less then 50 per cent of what it was before international fishing fleets invaded those waters. While our fishing boats are halted at the 12-mile limit off the United States coasts, U.S. boats are allowed to fish up to the three-mile limit off our coasts. I do not know how the hon. gentleman from Newfoundland would describe that, but it is a most unfortunate situation.

When confederadtion was formed there were free tie-up privileges at the docks of this nation, from coast to coast, for fishermen. Why is it that fourth generation fishermen, for the first time are now being charged for tie-up privileges at their home docks and are being hauled into court for non-payment? Why are these regulations invoked? They give rise to frustration, defeat and discouragement. We have a situation in one province where the average age of farmers is 55 years. It is virtually impossible, by virtue of regulations, for a young man to get into the fishing business today, following the practice of his father or grandfather, because he cannot get a licence.

I am quite prepared to recognize that the minister and his department are taking a very serious look at conservation, which of course is important. I submit, however, that it is vital that the minister and his staff get out into the fishing area, get to know the problems of the people and achieve liaison between the department and the fishermen in order to understand their problems and meet them on their own ground.

It has been so long since a general survey of docks has taken place in many areas that the badly needed repairs will be very expensive indeed. While a minimum of work is going on, it is not enough. In many instances, harbours along the coast are no longer capable of accommodating the boats. If you were a fisherman and were told by the Department of Industry, Trade and Commerce that you could buy a boat and it was such a good boat that the department would pay 50 per cent subsidy, and if you managed to get a little conversation going with the then department of fisheries—a department that has now disappeared—and your department of fisheries financed you and bought the boat for about $350,000, you would think the government was going to pay the 50 per cent and everybody had financed it for you. You would fish with it for two and a half years and then would come the Canadian steamship inspection service and say, "I am sorry that your boat is not seaworthy. We are going to tie it up at the dock."

You might ask what you were going to fish with, but that does not make any difference; your boat is not seaworthy so you find yourself out of pocket $350,000 for a boat that you bought with the assistance of the Department of Industry, Trade and Commerce but with no assistance from the Department of Fisheries. In good faith you bought the boat. Do you blame the people in the Bay of Fundy area who wonder what is going on in the Department of Fisheries in Ottawa? Do you blame the salmon fishermen who wonder which way they are going when the minister says, and I am sure he means it, "We will treat you fairly"? Then along comes a representative of the department who says that there is only $125,000 allocated for this work and it is impossible to give you any more money. That is what a representative told a fisherman in our area—"The money is all spent." Now that statement has been taken back.

I beg you, Mr. Chairman, to call the committee to order and not to take the subject of fishing so lightly as it was taken today when the hon. member from Newfoundland was discussing it. I think he deserves an apology from some members to your right.

It is high time a minister of fisheries was reinstated in the cabinet so that he will no longer have a conflict of interest as between fisheries and any other department of government, or at least, if there is a conflict of interest, fisheries will have a voice in the halls of government to say, "You may be right, but let's try to find some sort of solution," so that the fishermen can make a living. Let us not just leave them among the rocks and shoals to drown.

Mr. Nesbitt: Mr. Chairman, I do not wish to take much of the time of the committee. I enter the discussion only because of the matter that was raised in the House this afternoon, that is, the question of having an opportunity to question the minister. If we cannot do it in the House, the only recourse is to do it on estimates. Canada apparently received an invitation recently to take part, with the United States of America, in the study of the pollution effect of aircraft in the upper atmosphere with particular reference to supersonic aircraft, military and otherwise. Is Canada taking part in this?

Mr. Davis: Mr. Chairman, we have in fact received an invitation and we have one man in the department who is quite an expert on this subject. We will be looking at the SST, but essentially in a defensive posture. We have no intention of buying them and we hope we can prevent their flying over Canada.

Mr. Nesbitt: I take it from the minister's reply that we have accepted the invitation to study the possibilities of pollution and its dangers in co-operation with the United States authorities?

Mr. Davis: No, Mr. Chairman, we have not yet replied whether we would join with the Americans in this study. But if we do, that is the gentleman who would be involved. He has already done some work in this field.

Mr. Nesbitt: I raise the matter because of press reports in the major newspapers in the last few days, that pollution of this kind, so the scientists say, could cause as many as 300 deaths per year from cancer, not to mention other aspects. In view of these reports from reputable scientists, Canada should take part, because when supersonic aircraft fly over North America this kind of pollution does not take cognizance of the famous 3,000-mile border between this country and the United States. This stuff can creep into our atmosphere, and in major military exercises of course it does. In view of the real danger of this kind of pollution, I think we ought to take part in this study.

The other matter is one that I tried to raise this afternoon and on other occasions, but this has not been possible because of the short question period. I want to emphasize this again. I am thinking of the great danger to southwestern Canada from the high level of the lakes. Since the Prime Minister was kind enough to tell me this afternoon, in answer to my question, that the Minister of the Environment is designated as chairman of sort of a cabinet subcommittee on the matter, I am addressing my remarks to him.

Up to the present time there has been no co-ordination on this matter because so many ministers are involved; the Secretary of State for External Affairs, because he is in charge of foreign affairs and the IJC, the Minister of the Environment, the Minister of Public Works, the Minister of Transport, because he controls the Navigable Waters Protection Act, and the Minister of Manpower and Immigration. The latter minister, in reply to a question on this matter the other day in the House, indicated that he would be very happy to extend LIP to allow some local work to be done in the area to protect cottages and permanent residences and to supply emergency materials to keep out the waters.

Recently I had a letter from the minister which was probably written by someone in his office—maybe the minister did not even see it—and it indicated that he was backing out of the undertaking made in the House. This afternoon the Prime Minister asked me if I would suggest something that the Minister of the Environment might do. Rather than write the minister a letter, I am happy to make suggestions now.

First of all, he might persuade his colleague the Minister of Public Works to send engineers to the Canadian shore of Lake Erie and Lake Ontario where the water level has risen four feet. A few feet difference in the water level is important, particularly when there are nasty storms in the Great Lakes and in the straits. Ice piles up and breaks into cottages. One place I would refer to is Long Point Island, where there are three or four thousand summer cottages. In a short while ice will be piling up there as a result of winds and water. Many cottages have been innundated already.

It is unfortunate that these things happen. We must prevent further damage. I think we should have foreseen that this would happen, knowing that the levels of the Great Lakes had risen and that damage could be done. Perhaps the minister will take a number of steps which may help. Let him send engineers from the Department of Public Works to those areas to see what can be done. It is most urgent that we prevent further damage being caused. What has been caused has been caused and the losses are great, but we should prevent further damage.

The best thing to do would be to use a number of people who are unemployed and ask them to work temporarily erecting barricades or piling up sandbags to stop the water, or something like that. It is quite likely that after June or July the waters will recede. The critical period is the time between when the ice goes out, probably in one month or six weeks, and midsummer. If something could be done, it would be very helpful. It is not just a few people who are involved. Probably at least 50 members of this House are involved. That is why I think this is a political matter and it is as important to the government as to the opposition that something be done. I hope the minister will take the urgent steps that are needed. The situation is dangerous.

Mr. Harney: Mr. Chairman, I had a good deal of difficulty being elected to this chamber, having tried five times. It is rather odd to be seated at its edge, but I am somewhat uneasy when I have difficulty in being recognized by those who operate the translation and public address system.

There is a small matter I wish to bring to the attention of the Minister of the Environment and Minister of Fisheries. I will not take up the time of the committee by quoting extensively. I have read with considerable interest a news release issued by Environment Canada. There are two, actually, one dated January 3, 1973, the other, Thursday, February 8. The first, to do with "National air quality objectives announced," reads in part:

National air quality objectives for four major air pollutants: sulphur dioxide, particulate matter, carbon monoxide and total oxidants have been announced by the Honourable Jack Davis, federal Minister of the Environment.

The communiqué goes on to say that this is a significant step in the taking of the inventory of air pollutants in this country. The news release of Thursday, February 8, says that a nationwide inventory of five major air pollutant emissions has been completed by Environment Canada. After repeating the substances contained in the inventory, it says in the fourth paragraph:

Commenting on significant findings, Mr. Davis noted that transportation accounted for 57 per cent of total air pollution emissions of 31.2 million tons. The federal government is actively engaged in the control of motor vehicle emissions.

We are told, particularly in the document I just referred to as well as in the other one to which I referred earlier, that one of the major aspects of motor vehicle exhaust emission is that of carbon monoxide. Carbon monoxide, we are told, is the by-product of the incomplete burning of carbon containing fuels and some industrial processes. The following words are significant:

It decreases the oxygen-carrying capacity of the blood and at levels often found in city air, may impair mental processes.

That last sentence has much to do with the point I wish to make. As it is significant I shall repeat it:

It decreases the oxygen-carrying capacity of the blood and at levels often found in city air, may impair mental processes.

I have done some research into this matter. Recently I talked to the driver of one of our parliamentary buses. He told me these buses are to be replaced by new buses at the end of this month. I asked, "What kind of buses will these be replaced by?" He said, "New and better buses." I said, "Run by gasoline motors?" He said, "Yes, run by gasoline motors, of course. What else?" I suggest to the Minister of the Environment that if the federal government is concerned about the control of motor vehicle emissions, why could not we of this parliament, in this city, in a small way give an example to other institutions, to other cities and other communities and introduce, not gasoline operated buses but electrical vehicles? They exist. They can be purchased. In our own, small way we should by example show what can be done. This matter may not be of national import. On the other hand, we are Members of Parliament and we ought to lead the way because our mental processes, weak as they may be, may be further impaired if we use gasoline-powered vehicles.

Mr. McGrath: Mr. Chairman, I shall try to be brief. Many of the things I wanted to comment on were covered adequately in the excellent speech of the hon. member for Gander-Twillingate this evening. I commend it to the Minister of the Environment and Minister of Fisheries.

[Mr. Harney.]

There are two or three items which I feel should be brought to the minister's attention. Since we have experienced difficulty in making our points in the limited time at our disposal during the question period, and since the minister of late has seemed preoccupied with matters concerning the environment, I believe we should take advantage of the opportunity presented by the supplementary estimates to put before the minister our views and concerns relating to fisheries.

We are witnessing, Mr. Chairman, the systematic destruction of Canada's most ancient industry. I hope the House, and particularly the government, will view what is happening with alarm. The industry is threatened not only by overfishing and the inability of the government to protect our own resource in this regard and take necessary action to prevent undue exploitation by foreign nations, but also by environmental pollution, something that I am sure is close to the minister's heart.

On Tuesday last, in the absence of the minister, I directed to the minister's parliamentary secretary a question concerning a statement issued the previous day, February 12, by the United States government regarding the pollution of plankton, the very essence underlying the life of our marine resources. Evidence had been unearthed by the United States government to indicate that plankton, that minute form of marine life with which begins the entire marine ecological process, was being polluted with minute particles of plastic and oil and that this pollution extended from the eastern seaboard of the New England states all the way down the coast of the continent to the Caribbean.

In the absence of the minister I asked the parliamentary secretary, if this very serious threat of pollution exists in Canada, what investigations have been carried out in this country to determine the effects of oil on plankton and on minute forms of sea life and what the effects of plastic pollution are on these minute forms of life. If this pollution extends all the way to our Atlantic coast we face a problem of monumental proportions. This will make the problems of mercury pollution minute by comparison. If in fact plankton has been polluted by oil and plastic, this can affect the whole ecological process and ultimately destroy all the major marine resources. It will certainly have a devastating effect on groundfish.

I also raised another question which is directly related. On January 10 I asked the Minister of the Environment what he was doing in connection with the substantial reduction in the total catch for last year. The total catch for last year suffered a reduction of 25 per cent. To my mind, this reduction in our total catch epitomizes the seriousness of the problem. It can be attributed directly to our inability to control this resource, to extend control over our continental shelf and our inability to say to the nations of the world which fish off our coast, "This is essentially our resource. We are prepared to share it with you, but you must recognize our right and, indeed, our obligation and responsibility to manage it."

If we do not do that, Mr. Chairman, the result will be total destruction of the fishing industry and the many thousands of Canadian jobs that are dependent on it. The foreign fleets will vacate our shores and head for other fishing grounds to do damage there, and our fishery will in fact have been destroyed.

I had hoped the minister would have taken advantage of the occasion to express his concern, even though my question was couched in terms of what the minister was going to do to compensate the loss to fishermen as a result of the 25 per cent decline in the total catch. The minister replied:

I am happy to report that the total income of fishermen on the east coast is up appreciably. It is up 10 per cent over that of last year.

That was not the answer I wanted. That was a misleading answer. If I may say so, it was irresponsible. I wanted the minister to express his concern over the 25 per cent decline in the fishery and to say what he, as the minister responsible, was doing about this decline which is directly attributable to overfishing by foreign fleets off our shores.

We are now on the verge of oil discoveries being made off the east coast of Canada. We are not satisfied that the minister, in his environmental responsibilities, has satisfied himself as to the consequences on our marine resources of an oil strike on the continental shelf. I feel the minister should address himself to these questions. This is a very serious matter and I hope the minister will respond to these questions tonight. I hope he will tell us whether the pollution referred to by the United States authorities extends to our coast and, if so, what steps he is taking to do something about it.

I hope the minister will tell us what it is proposed to do at the next Law of the Sea Conference. We have not been able to establish the government's position. We have a right to know, in light of the evidence before us which indicates that at the rate we are going there will be no more fishery in ten years. Cod resources will have been destroyed. At the rate we are going, this industry will have been destroyed as well as many thousands of jobs that are dependent upon it.

I believe it is the responsibility of members of this House who represent constituencies that are dependent to a large extent on the fishing industry to bring these questions to the attention of the minister. I certainly make no apology for so doing. I hope that in the few minutes remaining the minister will address himself to these very serious questions.

Mr. Davis: Mr. Chairman, I would like to make only one very important point. In the past 18 months we have managed to get together all of the nations fishing in the North Atlantic. They have agreed not only on a basic principle, a principle of sustained yield operations, but also on the shares of a sustained yield operation. In other words, they have agreed to stabilize the fishery. More than that, they have agreed to help rebuild the stocks of all species in the North Atlantic. Canada in the future will have the largest share under this sustained yield plan. One of our problems at the moment, and this is particularly true of Labrador, is that our allocation is very much greater than we have ever managed to catch in the past. We have a great challenge concerning our fishery on the coast to move out and take the quota allocated to Canada.

We have a sustained yield operation in the North Atlantic by international agreement. The first agreement of this nature was last June under the ICNAF authority. We now have a larger share, a larger quota, a larger amount of fish to take which is allocated to Canada than has ever been the case in the past. It is up to the industry on the east coast to show what it can do now that we have a larger quota.

Mr. McGrath: Mr. Chairman, I wish to ask the minister what we are doing to police this agreement regarding a sustained yield. As the minister well knows, most ICNAF agreements have been characterized by the inability of the member nations to live up to the agreement.

Mr. Davis: Mr. Chairman, we are making progress. As the hon. member says, in the past it has been a lawless operation in the Atlantic. Two years ago we got agreement among all of the fishing nations that protective officers from any country in the North Atlantic could board vessels of another country. We have the opportunity to board vessels. We are also organizing overflights. We have a new liaison between National Defence and our fisheries service which keeps track of all foreign vessels in the bank areas anywhere off the east coast. We do not yet have all the vessels we need to carry out the on-board checking operations. We have a large allocation of funds to build larger vessels which will enable us to go far from our coasts to inspect these foreign vessels and carry out police action. Because of the drawing of the fisheries lines, we do not have the same problems in our inland waters and we will be able to devote more time to the offshore operations.

Mr. Marshall: Mr. Chairman, when the North Atlantic countries met last year in Bonn, Germany, an all-party resolution, which the hon. member for Laprairie was instrumental in drafting, was presented asking all NATO countries for an investigation into the depletion of marine resources in the North Atlantic. It was accepted by all countries in the North Atlantic which are affected by the depletion of marine resources. I gave the Minister of the Environment a copy of this resolution. There has not been anything since that time to indicate that the Canadian government is aware of this resolution. As this was done on a non-partisan basis, will the minister indicate, prior to the Law of the Sea Conference, whether Canada, which is greatly affected, will get the co-operation that is expected?

Mr. Davis: I should like to tell the hon. member through you, Mr. Chairman, that Canada is taking a leading role. We are probably putting a far greater scientific input into the next Law of the Sea Conference, in so far as fisheries is concerned, than any other nation. The hon. member should bear in mind that Canadian initiative was responsible for the meeting of more than 60 fishing nations which is taking place right now in Vancouver. We have managed, through the United Nations, to get the fishing countries of the world together to talk about principles of sound management and sustained yield operations. That is what the current meeting in Vancouver is all about.

• (2150)

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Davis: At that meeting we are not talking in terms of slicing up the pie but in terms of how to make the pie larger—how best to manage the fisheries of the world. We are talking about basic principles, especially about a principle which would really place the coastal states in the position of managing all the living resources of the sea near their coasts. That kind of objective is the objective of the conference.

Mr. Lundrigan: Can the minister tell us about the policing of the northwest Atlantic? Will he tell us how many ships Canada has to police this area, which is about 500 miles one way and 1,000 miles the other, and where some 20 nations are fishing?

Mr. Davis: We have a large number of vessels, but as the hon. member well knows, very few are capable of going any great distance out to sea. Our new construction program is aimed at overcoming this deficiency. We do carry out overflights with aircraft, however.

Mr. McGrath: The minister reiterated that new ships are about to be built. What is he doing about the situation in which our naval patrol vessels only work an eight-hour day at the present time and tie up at five o'clock every day? He knows as well as I do that the principle infringements of our coastal waters take place after dark. What is he doing about the present ludicrous situation?

Mr. Davis: This is a problem which stems from union negotiations. Those craft are unionized. We have incurred additional costs so as to operate in other hours, and this has affected our budget very considerably. I meet this problem every time I go to Newfoundland and Nova Scotia. It is chronic. We have had to spend a great deal more money to get other crews to operate at night. But the problem is one which we cannot dismiss lightly. It is built into the structure of the civil service.

Mr. Peters: We are dealing, now, with the estimates of the Department of the Environment. I am not prepared to argue whether or not the department of fisheries should logically be part of the Department of the Environment or whether it should be separate. It is true there has been a good deal of discussion on the subject.

Mr. Nielsen: It depends on whether the fish are fresh.

Mr. Peters: It depends on whether I come from a fishing area or not. For my part, I am not opposed to the establishment of a department of fisheries under a separate minister. I agree with those who come from the Maritimes that fishing is an industry of historic importance to our nation and that there ought to be a separate ministry under a responsible minister.

There has been little discussion of what the minister is actually doing to improve the environment. I notice we have been buying buses to serve Parliament Hill. The buses are run by petroleum and the waste products will cause pollution. Every member of this House, most Canadians in fact, drive to gas stations to fill up their cars and it works out that in at least one trip out of five they are buying gas, not to run the car but to run the pollution control device. These pollution control devices have become very expensive. All smart young people, those familiar with automobile engines, have found out how to override the control, thereby reducing gas consumption. However, this is not the field I am interested in discussing tonight. I wish to turn to the events which have taken place in the last few weeks and months in connection with the proposed James Bay development.

I regard it as unfortunate that attention is now being focused upon the rights of the Indians and the aboriginal claimants rather than upon the effect of the project upon the environment of the area. As far as I am concerned, ownership of the land constitutes an entirely different question. From an environmental viewpoint I could not care less whether the Indians own the land, whether Quebec owns it or whether Canada as a whole owns it. I should like to know whether the changes contemplated in the area are likely to have an adverse effect upon the environment. This question would remain to be answered no matter what was eventually decided about ownership provided, of course, the scheme went through. It might, of course, be advantageous. I have heard it said that it might cause the temperature in the region to rise five or ten degrees as a result of the creation of a large additional body of water. On the other hand, the bay is only some 15 feet deep at levels where it is fairly deep, and two or three feet at levels where it is shallow, and if the flow of water into the bay is restricted, what is presently James Bay may be only a river 10 or 15 years from now. The change might have a considerable effect upon the climate of that part of the north.

I am not suggesting for a moment that the question of ownership is not important. I am not saying that the federal government, which made an arrangement to give the whole of the land owned formerly by the Hudson Bay Company in that region to the province of Quebec, with certain conditions stipulated, is willing to live up to its end of the bargain. It seems to me they are almost as bad as the Queen, who never lived up to her bargain, because her relatives were running Rupert's Land for many years and she was not in a position to live up to it. Surely there should be an indication of what is to happen on the northern side of the James Bay area where there are deposits—

The Assistant Deputy Chairman: Order.

Mr. Peters: May I call it ten o'clock?

Mr. MacLean: I am rising on a point of order, Mr. Chairman. It may be doomed to failure before I make it. I thought there might be a consensus in the committee that you should not see the clock for a little while, so that we might make some progress.

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Peters: Ten o'clock.

Mr. Nielsen: On a further point of order, Mr. Chairman, since there does not appear to be unanimous consent to your not seeing the clock, might I suggest that the committee pass without debate, now, vote 5A relating to the Department of External Affairs, vote 12A relating to the Department of Finance and vote 1A relating to the Department of Justice.

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

• (2200)

Mr. Peters: Mr. Chairman, I rise on a point of order. There have been at least four or five occasions to date when private members have asked for the unanimous consent of the House to consider certain matters and that consent was refused. I now refuse this request for an extension of time.

The Assistant Deputy Chairman: There is not unanimity to continue.

Progress reported.

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

A motion to adjourn the House under Standing Order 40 deemed to have been moved.

NATIONAL DEFENCE—SUGGESTED REDEPLOYMENT OF ARMED FORCES ELEMENTS TO NEWFOUNDLAND TO CONSOLIDATE STRATEGY AND PROMOTE ECONOMIC DEVELOPMENT

Mr. Jack Marshall (Humber-St. George's-St. Barbe): Mr. Speaker, we will consider some satisfactory resolutions now. While everybody is leaving the House, I should like to inform you that on February 8 I asked the Minister of National Defence (Mr. Richardson) if in his intentions to promote federal industrial development in his western region he would also consider the development of the eastern part of Canada, particularly the province of Newfoundland. I wanted to know whether he intended to promote some economic development through the Department of National Defence by deploying elements of the Canadian forces to that part of our nation, not only by way of economic impact but to complete, as it were, the consideration of a Canadian forces' presence in all of Canada.

While I realize it is doubtful whether the island would be in a more advantageous position, strategically, than it is with the present deployment of our forces involved in our committed tasks, there are several areas where the expenditure of our unfrozen defence dollars would or could be utilized to the economic advantage of that province and the nation as a whole.

The first obvious justification of our Canadian forces mission is our intended thrust toward northern development. For some strange reason or other, in our visions of the north and its development we keep talking about only one segment of Canada. The supposed experts, whoever they may be, seem to forget that there is a portion of our nation called northern Newfoundland and Labrador, which I hope is still part of Canada, which needs development just as seriously. What better way could we utilize the resources of our Canadian forces than by building roads, bridges and providing vital communications to this part of our nation, and providing normal heretofore denied communications links such as telephone and television? The situation as it now exists should be an embarrassment at this time to everybody responsible.

I wish I had more than seven minutes to tell-off those people who are disturbing everybody. Can you imagine that after five years of frustration during my presence here, before my presence here and certainly since confederation, the CBC and CNT have not been able to come up with the fundamental capability of providing television and telephone facilities for those Canadians living in northern Newfoundland? I suggest this can only be considered preposterous.

Secondly, what an opportunity the engineering capability of our Canadian forces would have in directing the provision of a connecting road between Quebec and Labrador, a continuation of this link between the two land masses by a tunnel or causeway, and a further continuation of a decent paved highway along the great northern peninsula of Newfoundland.

So I say to the minister or his parliamentary secretary, whoever is here, let us use some meaningful common sense, ingenuity and imagination and develop all of Canada so that we will see some realization of the pledges of the government of equal opportunity for all Canadians regardless of where they live.

Our Minister of the Environment and Fisheries spoke just a few days ago of the threat of the extinction of our fisheries. Is it not, then, fundamental logic that the Canadian forces could provide the surveillance capability in Newfoundland to prevent the depletion of our marine resources by foreign draggers who are literally raping our Atlantic fisheries?

To turn for a moment to the utilization of our Canadian forces from a military context and in support of our NATO mission, Newfoundland was found suitable for training exercises of our fighting troops because of the similarity of our climate and terrain to that of our task in our NATO commitment. I ask the simple fundamental question: Is there any reason elements of our Canadian forces could not be stationed in Newfoundland as a nucleus of a training cadre to provide logistic and training support on a continuing basis for present and future commitments, as well as provide administrative support to the reserve forces?

I find the Minister of National Defence, Mr. Speaker, is one who rightfully shows more than a token responsibility to his part of the country, even though he is committed to direct his attentions more on a national basis. For this reason I can only give him full marks. He has made his presence felt here by being successful in having provided a mint to his native Winnipeg. While I would like to have a mint in my province, Mr. Speaker, this might come, depending on the fortunes of our political future; but I only ask the minister, to use a military drill term, to make an about turn from the central part of our government and look to eastern Canada and provide a justifiable share of the expenditure through his department to those Canadians that seem to be continuously left out in sharing the wealth of our nation. I ask for a proper answer.

Adjournment Debate

Mr. Leonard Hopkins (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of National Defence): Before responding directly to the representation of the hon. member for Humber-St. George's-St. Barbe (Mr. Marshall) on behalf of his home province of Newfoundland, I personally, as parliamentary secretary, would like to take this, my first opportunity so far as he is concerned, to recognize his long standing interest in the department and his dedicated service as both a commanding officer and the militia adviser in his province.

I am sure the hon. member has had an opportunity to examine my response to the question put by his colleague from St. John's East concerning search and rescue capability. I do not intend, other than by reference to page 1215 of Hansard for February 12, 1973, to deal with that matter in detail. There is one point, however, that has been made many times before but does not appear to be clear in many members' minds, nor indeed in the public mind; that is, the actual responsibility of the department in terms of search and rescue.

The department, by cabinet direction, is responsible for providing search and rescue facilities capable of responding to air distress incidents in accordance with Canada's international responsibilities as agreed with the International Civil Aviation Association, and also in terms of our own domestic requirements. In addition, on behalf of the government the rescue co-ordination centres provide co-ordinating services for both air and marine incidents. This department does not receive a resource allocation, nor does it have the responsibility—I want to emphasize this—to deal with marine incidents. That is the responsibility of the Department of Transport. I know that the hon. member appreciates, however, that when there is a distress call, be it air or marine, the search and rescue facilities of the Canadian forces are immediately alerted and provide whatever assistance is possible.

The financial constraints under which the department has operated for the past few years has resulted in an over-all reduction in forces strength and also has necessitated consolidation of bases to achieve the most effective return for each defence dollar spent. I am sure that the hon. member would recognize that to reduce operating overheads it is more economic to provide centralized support services at five major bases in the Maritimes than to maintain a series of smaller, and hence more costly, bases in that area.

In terms of strategic considerations, the department does have the capability of performing both maritime and air surveillance in the Atlantic area to meet the primary defence role.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Boulanger): Order, please.

MANPOWER—INQUIRY RESPECTING EFFICIENCY OF CENTRES

Mr. Roland Godin (Portneuf): Mr. Speaker, on February 6, I asked the hon. Minister of Manpower and Immigration the following question:

[Mr. Marshall.]

In view of the fact that since the beginning of December a new regulation compels the unemployed to take personal steps to find work, could he tell us if in his opinion the application of this regulation will be enough to boost the economy . . .

Mr. Speaker, I asked that question because a new regulation enforced by the Unemployment Insurance Commission since last fall is causing problems to a great many unemployed. I would even say that this regulation is ridiculous in view of the present situation.

Speaking of only a few sectors of the labour market, I would mention first of all that of the footwear industry where the demand for labour is decreasing and employment is becoming seasonal. To my mind, it is absolutely senseless to force an old timer to find work elsewhere, when there is none available, and especially when he can be rehired by his former employer within a month or two.

Recently, several persons were denied unemployment insurance because they limited themselves to seeking employment with the manpower centres and the civil service. Mr. Speaker, if the workers have developed the habit of going to the manpower centres, it is because they have been trained or forced to do so.

For instance, when an unemployed person goes to the arsenal at Valcartier, the guard, at the gate, will tell him to go to a manpower centre because the arsenal does not hire people directly.

At the Quebec Department of Transportation a worker looking for a job on government ships goes through the same motions and gets the same answer.

At the Department of Public Works or the Department of the Postmaster General the unemployed cannot enter the building to apply for a job. The guard does not let them in but recommends that they see the public service or the manpower centre.

The same problem exists in the construction industry. An unemployed cannot move around the sites. A guard will tell him: see your union.

During the weekend I met a construction worker who, looking for a job had gone to the manpower centre. The receptionist did not even bother to refer him to a consultant. He was told: Friend, look up the billboard when you come in, that is all we have.

Lumberjacks are being forced to look for jobs which no longer exist.

In fact, any normal person knows that it is impossible for a five foot and a half lumberjack to move in six feet of snow. A lumberjack is not a mole, he is a human being.

If companies hired a lumberjack to work in six feet of snow with snow shoes he would violate the labour security legislation.

In addition to that, the provinces have their own statutes. Since there are regulations governing the height of stumps, a man cannot cut a tree at the height he wants but must do it according to the inspectors' instructions.

Mr. Speaker, it is obvious that six feet of snow are enough to upset the working methods of a lumberjack.

I know a jobless who went down to James Bay. He had left Quebec City by train and had done the last leg of his journey by plane. Upon his arrival he was told that the company was willing to hire him, since he is a heavy equipment driver and there is a shortage of workers in that field there.

But that was the hitch, Mr. Speaker. The company which was prepared to hire our man could not do so unless he went through the Montreal provincial manpower centre. He had to go back, and it had cost him $115. That is the way they treat the unemployed!

Mr. Speaker, we question the value of certain rules and we wonder where they originated. Officials of the commission assured me that they were never consulted, and the representatives of major unions were not either. No employer seems to have consulted them, or the hon. members of this House, for that matter.

As some regulations are inapplicable, I realize we are facing regulations suggested by one person only. In my opinion, no team would have taken such a stupid decision.

Mr. Speaker, all I am asking the hon. minister is this: who is that person who could have dreamed up regulations which are a nuisance for the unemployed and the Unemployment Insurance Commission staff?

[English]

Mr. Mark MacGuigan (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Manpower and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, the regulation to which the hon. member refers has been in effect for some seven months. It is regulation 145(9) which came into effect on June 23, 1972, and reads as follows:

> For the purposes of paragraph 25(a) of the act, a claimant fails to prove that he is available for work and unable to obtain suitable employment on each working day in a period if he fails to prove that during that period he made reasonable and customary efforts to obtain employment.

Claimants who do not make reasonable efforts to seek employment in areas where there are known to be job vacancies are therefore not eligible to receive unemployment insurance benefits. The purpose of requiring claimants to furnish evidence that they have conducted an active search for work is to determine whether claimants are entitled to receive benefits, in accordance with the requirement of the above regulation. The application of this regulation by the commission does not affect the operation of the Canada Manpower program.

I have to say that the parade of horrors to which we have been treated by the hon. member simply does not exist or, if it does exist, it exists only in isolated cases. The plain fact is that the search for jobs has to be conducted in a way that is appropriate to the skill of the person unemployed and appropriate to the area. If no jobs are available in the area, the search required does not have to be a strenuous one. Or if all employers in the area hire under the Canada Manpower service, it is sufficient for the unemployed person to register with that service. In other words, the interpretation of this rule varies from place to place. It is applied according to the conditions in the place concerned.

As the regulation says, he must make "reasonable and customary efforts to obtain employment." The reference to "customary efforts" has reference to the custom in the district in which the unemployed person resides. Therefore, Mr. Speaker, I would have to say that in our view the problem to which the hon. member has referred does not exist in an acute form. If he knows of any cases where, by accident, problems have occurred, we would be very pleased if he would bring them to the attention of the department or of the Unemployment Insurance Commission.

HOUSING—LAND ASSEMBLY PROGRAM—RECONSIDERATION OF INVESTMENT OF FUNDS IN PROPOSED GLOUCESTER TOWNSHIP PROJECT

Mr. Walter Baker (Grenville-Carleton): Mr. Speaker, on January 30 I asked a question of the Minister of State for Urban Affairs (Mr. Basford) with respect to the land banking arrangement, or land assembly program as it has been called, or the model city, as it has been sometimes called, to be located at Carlsbad Springs in the township of Gloucester in the national capital area. I want to thank the minister for his courtesy in coming here this evening to listen to what I have to say.

I asked the minister at that time whether the government was reconsidering its decision to invest public funds in that project. I want to make it clear at the outset that I am not against the concept of land banking because I believe it is one of the things that we will require in this country as time goes on. However, I think land banking must be done with a certain amount of perception, having regard to the need, and the need of this day and this time ought not to be ignored.

My question and my respectful submission at that time arose because I believed there was an attitude of prematurity with respect to the development in that place. Most important, I think there has been, and the press has indicated since that this is so, an obvious lack of consultation between the municipal authorities of the township of Gloucester and the department in respect of the investment of public funds for such a project in that location. I believe it is important in matters of land banking on large assemblies which will affect the development of many properties that there be proper consultation.

The reeve of the township has said that this is the least suitable site. He is concerned with the financial problems in which a dormitory community might involve the township, and he is concerned about the quality of the land. Just recently the regional municipality asked the senior governments to keep their hands off planning in their area. They are in the midst of dealing with an official plan and it is important to them in the development of this plan that there be the greatest possible consultation.

The eruption at the recent regional executive meeting indicates that as far as that council is concerned there has not been that kind of consultation. Moreover, from the engineering point of view—and I care not what tests there are, the minister has not produced any tests of the suitability of the land—there is an extremely high water table and instability of land, I am told. As a result, whatever development is proposed it cannot be a mixture of development and land use which will supply an immediate need for varied housing properly supported by the usual commercial amenities.

With respect to the problems of servicing and urban transportation there has been no consultation. The McLaren-Richards' report, the service report of the regional municipality, indicates that the prime area for serviced development is the township of Nepean and the township of Goulburn where there has already been a great investment of federal public funds in sewer and water services. More important than that, there is a real housing need today, not five years, not ten years, not 20 years from now but today in this area.

This great land assembly, some 5,000 acres projected over a period of 20 or 25 years, is not going to solve the problems that come to my desk each day as a Member of Parliament with respect to the crowding of existing urban areas, on the one hand, and the availability of relatively inexpensive serviced land, on the other.

For these reasons, Mr. Speaker, I ask the minister to reconsider the investment of public funds in this area in that premature way and to invest those funds in the area which is now serviced with the assistance of federal funds, the townships of Nepean and Goulburn in the west end of the national capital area.

Hon. Ron Basford (Minister of State for Urban Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I have listened to the hon. member for Grenville-Carleton (Mr. Baker) with great interest. I know he takes an interest in this area, as do I, and in the three minutes that I have I should like to make a few points.

The location of this land assembly and land banking proposal is in the line with a planning study commissioned by the Ottawa-Carleton district. The area for land assembly was identified as a potential growth area in the Ottawa-Carleton district, hence the location of this land assembly. That report indicated that it was estimated that 118,000 dwelling units, or some 6,000 units per year, would be needed over the next 25 years to accommodate growth in the national capital region. The planning proposals which have yet to be approved by the Ottawa-Carleton council suggested that provision be made for a future population of 650,000 within the green belt and 350,000 beyond the green belt. Of the latter, about 275,000 would be located in satellite communities.

I quote these figures to point out that while there is land assembly going on in the southeast area that the hon. member refers to, it is not going to prevent other communities in the national capital region and other growth centres from developing and other subdivisions from being approved and other townships from growing, which seems to be a fear. These are long-term planning proposals for the national capital region, the kind of long-term planning that we need in every region in the country. We support that kind of long-term planning proposal, hence our involvement in it. In this way we are endeavouring to have planned an orderly growth within the national capital region. I would hope that the hon. member for Grenville-Carleton is not opposed to that kind of long-term planning.

We are trying to avoid urban sprawl within the national capital region and avoid the use of valuable land in the region. If the hon. member and the reeves for whom he may purport to speak really oppose this kind of long-term planning, I would hope that he and they would urge immediately a permanent, long-term freeze on land within this area used for land assembly and land banking and say that that land must permanently remain frozen in its present use. At present it is mostly scrubland. The reeve out there called it swampland. The hon. member might urge that it be permanently frozen so as to remain that kind of land, because then we would get on with other long-term planning proposals in other regions instead of wasting money in the region on which the hon. member seems to think we ought not to spend money. With respect to consultation, may I say that there has been consultation and information has been obtained from throughout the region. This has involved our technical staff, the Ontario Housing Corporation, CMHC and the National Capital Commission. Questions of transportation, of servicing water systems, of engineering studies and water tables have all been taken into account.

I agree with the hon. member that there is a housing problem today and a need for housing. Hence we have introduced, for example, legislation before this House, which I hope will be debated quickly, to deal with some of our immediate problems. We also think there is a need for long-term planning, and that is what is involved in this matter.

Motion agreed to and the House adjourned at 10.30 p.m.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Friday, February 16, 1973

The House met at 11 a.m.

PRIVILEGE

MR. PAPROSKI—ALLEGED INACCURATE ANSWER TO QUESTION ON POLAR BEARS

Mr. Steven E. Paproski (Edmonton Centre): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a question of privilege with regard to an answer I received, as recorded on page 4893 of Hansard, for April 5, 1971, to my question No. 1184 on the slaughter of polar bears. The minister's assistant replied: "No polar bears were shot in 1971".

Figures released on Monday, February 12, 1973, at the Northwest Territories Council meeting revealed the killing of 2,735 polar bears in the eastern Arctic alone in a six year period, an average of 450 bears a year. This appears to contradict the answer given to me on page 4893 of Hansard. Obviously, the information supplied by the government was incorrect and deliberately evasive.

I bring this to the attention of the House because it indicates the lack of respect with which this House has been treated, and I request a complete investigation by the responsible minister. At the same time, I would request the minister to clarify the policy in view of the resolution of the Northwest Territories Council which promotes polar bear hunting by advertising in Europe.

I find, Sir, that this is a clear case of contempt of parliament by the minister or his officials. This House deserves an explanation of this apparent discrepancy regarding the fate of this great national asset, the polar bear, whose preservation is a matter of concern not only to conservationists and nature lovers but to all Canadians.

Mr. Speaker: This matter is obviously an important one, but I doubt that it can be raised by way of a question of privilege. The hon. member might be able to ascertain what the facts are during the question period or in some other way, but I suggest to him, with respect, that a dispute as to facts cannot be the basis of a question of privilege. Therefore I respectfully suggest to the hon. member that while the bears might have a question of privilege, I do not think the hon. member has one.

MR. HERBERT—OTTAWA "JOURNAL" ARTICLE ON VOTE ON INTRODUCTION OF BILL CONCERNING ABORTION

Mr. H. T. Herbert (Vaudreuil): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a question of privilege affecting the rights and privileges of all members of the House, concerning an article in the Ottawa Journal of February 14 under the byline of Mr. Richard Jackson. In reference to the vote on first reading of a private member's bill introduced by the hon. member for New Westminster (Mr. Leggatt), he states:

> What bothered the Liberals was that while many insisted they were voting not for abortion, but for the principle that every M.P. has a right to bring in a bill, their vote would reflect on them as pro-abortionists.

An hon. Member: You sure are.

Mr. Herbert: This statement, and others in the article, are inaccurate and misleading. Many of us, and not solely the new members of our party, were primarily concerned with parliamentary practice and the right of all members of the House—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Herbert: —to introduce bills and motions—

An hon. Member: Are you for or against?

Mr. Herbert: —whether or not we agree with the proposition. The content of the bill was secondary to the consideration of the principle involved, that of freedom of speech in parliament.

I would also state, Mr. Speaker, that I consider it an indictment of the individuals that a former member of the judiciary and a former Prime Minister should seek to deny to their fellow Canadians the right to freedom of speech.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. McGrath: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. We will deal with one thing at a time. The hon. member did give the Chair notice of his intention to bring this situation to the attention of the House by way of a question of privilege. While the hon. member may have a grievance, I suggest that it is not a question of privilege. In any event, the hon. member did not propose a motion for the consideration of the House, so a ruling is not necessary.

Mr. McGrath: On a point of order, the hon. gentleman has no right to impute motives or to reflect on the vote of any hon. member of this House—

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. McGrath: —and, more particularly, to impute motives to or to reflect on the vote of a very distinguished member of this House, the right hon. member for Prince Albert, a former Prime Minister.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. McGrath: I believe that the hon. member should be made to withdraw that portion of his remarks.

Some hon. Members: Withdraw!

Lake Ontario Water Level

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member for St. John's East is quite right that no member has a right either to impute motives or to reflect on a vote. I certainly find fault with the hon. member's statement to the extent that he reflects on a vote of the House. That is entirely out of order. But whether an hon. member should be required to withdraw a statement which is out of order is another thing. I think that the hon. member for St. John's East is quite in order when he protests against what was said, and it is the duty of the Chair to bring to the attention of the hon. member for Vaudreuil that he has no right to reflect on a vote of the House.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Let there be no mistake, Mr. Speaker. There is no complaint whatever on my part about the remarks read by the hon. gentleman, which were apparently prepared extramurally.

HIGH WATER LEVEL IN LAKE ONTARIO—REQUEST FOR UNANIMOUS CONSENT TO MOVE MOTION

Mr. Terry Grier (Toronto-Lakeshore): Mr. Speaker, I rise under the provisions of Standing Order 43. In view of the dangerously high level of Lake Ontario and the present and potential damage to property arising from this situation, and in view of the request made yesterday by the city of Toronto to the federal government, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Scarborough West (Mr. Harney):

That this House directs the federal government to make immediate representation to the International Joint Commission to the effect that steps be taken without delay to reduce the water level of Lake Ontario.

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member proposes for the consideration of the House a motion under the provisions of Standing Order 43. This motion requires unanimous consent of the House. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. Speaker: There is no unanimity, therefore the hon. member cannot put his motion.

RURAL AIRPORT DEVELOPMENT ADVISORY COMMITTEE BILL

PROVISION FOR ESTABLISHMENT OF ADVISORY COMMITTEES

Mr. Frank Howard (Skeena) moved for leave to introduce Bill C-145, to provide for the establishment of rural airport development advisory committees.

Some hon. Members: Explain.

Mr. Howard: Mr. Speaker, in recent times not enough attention has been paid to the need for airport development in rural areas. The purpose of this bill is to attempt to overcome that by establishing rural airport development advisory committees, the members of which would be selected by the municipalities and regions within the area for which they are appointed. These committees would advise the Minister of Transport on airport development in those areas.

Mr. Speaker: Is it the pleasure of the House that the hon. member shall have leave to introduce the said bill?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Motion agreed to, bill read the first time and ordered to be printed.

MOTION TO ADJOURN UNDER S.O. 26

ENERGY

UNITED STATES PREFERENCE FOR ALASKA RATHER THAN MACKENZIE VALLEY OIL PIPELINE ROUTE

Mr. John A. Fraser (Vancouver South): Mr. Speaker, I rise to put again the motion that was put yesterday under Standing Order 26. I move a motion for the adjournment of the House for the purpose of discussing a specific and important matter requiring urgent consideration, namely, the statement made by the President of the United States yesterday that he prefers the Alaska route to the Canadian route for an oil pipeline from Prudhoe Bay, and because of the statement made two days ago by the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources that the Canadian government does not plan any further representations to the American government on this matter.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member gave notice of this motion yesterday under the terms of Standing Order 26. Because of the developments in the afternoon it was felt, after consultation with the hon. member for Vancouver South, that he might be given an opportunity to propose the motion for the adjournment of the House this morning.

Hon. members know that the Chair is required by the Standing Order to consider whether there are other opportunities for debate. I would think that such an opportunity exists this very day since the House has before it, in Committee of the Whole, Vote 20a relating to the Department of the Environment. The next vote, 5a, Department of External Affairs, also seems to provide an opportunity for discussion of the matter raised by the hon. member. I would doubt very much that in the circumstances much would be gained by setting aside the consideration of these items in Committee of the Whole for the purpose of an emergency debate. I would hope that in the circumstances the hon. member for Vancouver

South would agree that it would be rather difficult for the Chair to put the motion at this time.

ENERGY

OIL—REASONS FOR IMPOSITION OF EXPORT CONTROLS—EASTERN CANADA SUPPLY—PREVENTION OF POSSIBLE PRICE INCREASES

Hon. Robert L. Stanfield (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, in the absence of the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources, which I understand is necessary today, I should like to ask the Prime Minister a question about the imposition of oil export controls. The minister indicated a number of days ago that controls would only be imposed if it became clear that the industry itself could not assure an adequate supply of oil for the month of March and the spring. What has happened since the minister made that statement to cause the government to believe that there will be a shortage?

Hon. Herb Gray (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): Mr. Speaker, if I may attempt to respond in a general way, it was obviously on the advice of the National Energy Board, concurred in by the government, that the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources told the Standing Committee on National Resources and Public Works last night that:

> Recent levels of export demand for our oil have been such as to strain the capacity of our oil production and transportation systems and to threaten the continuity of supply of Canadian oil to domestic refiners dependent on such supply.

• (1120)

Mr. Stanfield: May I ask the minister whether he is able to assure the House that, with the imposition of controls on the export of oil from Canada to the United States, that part of the country east of the Ottawa Valley will have adequate supplies of oil and that normal supplies of oil to eastern Canada will not be interrupted or endangered?

Mr. Gray: Mr. Speaker, I would prefer that the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources give more detailed replies, but it is my understanding that it is his desire to see that steps are taken to ensure that kind of result.

Mr. Stanfield: Mr. Speaker, I will leave that question to the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources and ask the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs a question appropriate to his jurisdiction. Can he assure the House that the prospective shortage of oil in Canada in the coming months will not result in significant increases in the price of oil and related products, and has the government any contingency plans to meet such possible increases in the price of oil products?

Mr. Gray: Mr. Speaker, I do not understand the circumstances to be such as to suggeest that there is a prospective shortage of oil in Canada itself if measures of the type that were announced yesterday are taken. However, I am following this matter very closely and am consulting closely with my colleague, the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources, with a view to ensuring, so far as I am able to do so, the consumer interest in this matter.

OIL—REQUEST FOR INDEPENDENT STUDY OF TRANSPORTATION OF PRODUCT AND POSSIBLE PIPELINE TO MONTREAL

Mr. Eldon M. Woolliams (Calgary North): I have a supplementary question, Mr. Speaker, for the Prime Minister. In view of the evidence before the standing committee last night which projected carefully the reserves of crude petroleum—the problem is that the pipeline transporting crude petroleum is carrying a full capacity load and the licence for interprovincial extension of the pipeline which would increase the volume by 125,000 barrels a day has not yet been granted—will the Prime Minister consider seriously, and I have asked this question before, setting up an independent group other than the National Energy Board to review the question of transportation, which really brought about the decision of the government that was disclosed last night?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I will gladly bring that suggestion to the attention of the minister.

Mr. Woolliams: Mr. Speaker, may I ask a further supplementary. In view of the questions put by the leader of my party and as we are still importing almost as much crude petroleum as we are exporting, within a few hundred thousand barrels per day, would the Prime Minister also set up a study to look into the economics and the possiblity of a pipeline to the Montreal market from western Canada as he has taken, and I say this in the proper sense, Mr. Speaker, a new interest in western Canada?

Mr. Trudeau: Mr. Speaker, my interest in the hon. member's question is as perennial as grass.

Mr. Woolliams: Mr. Speaker, may I ask the Prime Minister whether the decision made last night, which was not based on a shortage of reserves but on the question of transportation, was the price that the government had to pay the NDP for its support of the budget?

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

OIL—ACTION TO ASSURE SUPPLIES FOR EASTERN CANADA

Mr. Max Saltsman (Waterloo): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a supplementary question to the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs. Last night, when the announcement of the change in oil policy was made, all predictions and calculations were based on western oil going only as far as the Ottawa Valley and no consideration was given to requirements for the Montreal area and eastern Canada. Since the calculations made by the National Energy Board will be completely out of kilter if oil supply to that area is cut off, as they do not take into account the needs of eastern Canada and the calculations as to what we are able to export will be wrong, will the minister take a look at this situation with a view to discontinuing all export of oil from Canada until we are assured of supplies for eastern Canada?

Hon. Herb Gray (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I will be happy to look at the situation and consult with my colleague, the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources.

Mr. Peter C. Bawden (Calgary South): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct my supplementary question to the Prime Minister. It is clear that eastern Canada will be threatened in the event of a disruption of oil deliveries from overseas sources. I wish to ask the Prime Minister what contingency plans the government has, even in a general way, or what approach the government is taking in its thinking regarding this problem. Also, when will we finally get a definitive answer to this question, considering the importance of oil supply and energy to eastern Canada and the fact that, in any event, western delivery systems could not supply this market at the present time?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, it is nice to hear a member from Calgary show such interest in eastern Canada. I thank him very much. I think my best answer would be to refer him to the discussions that the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources was referring to the other day. Exchanges have been going on with the United States on the problem of supply to eastern Canada and there have been similar conversations with the OECD countries.

Mr. Speaker: The Chair will recognize the Leader of the Opposition for a supplementary.

[Translation]

Then I will recognize the hon. member for Portneuf and we will return later to supplementaries on that subject.

[English]

Hon. Robert L. Stanfield (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I ask the Prime Minister very earnestly whether, in light of the proposed restrictions upon the export of oil from our Canadian west to the United States, he is able to assure us that there may not be an interruption in the supply of oil to eastern Canada?

Mr. Trudeau: Mr. Speaker, I can only give the assurance that the minister has been engaged in talks with the United States and European countries to make this assurance possible. I cannot, of course, engage the government on the conduct of other countries.

Mr. Speaker: As I said a moment ago, the Chair will recognize the hon. member for Portneuf and then return to the hon. member for Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands, the hon. member for Calgary South and others for supplementaries.

[Translation]

Mr. Roland Godin (Portneuf): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the right hon. Prime Minister.

Mr. Speaker: I apologize to the hon. member, but—

[Mr. Saltsman.]

[English]

The hon. member for Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands is rising on a point of order.

Mr. Douglas: Mr. Speaker, it has been customary to recognize each party in order for a first question. There has been no first question from this party. Mine is not a supplementary question. No question has been asked yet on behalf of this party.

Mr. Speaker: The Chair has recognized the hon. member for Portneuf. As I said, I will return to the hon. member for Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands in a moment.

HOUSING

NEUFCHATEL, QUEBEC—MEASURES TO COMPENSATE OWNERS OF BADLY CONSTRUCTED HOUSE—REQUEST FOR FINANCIAL ASSISTANCE

Mr. Roland Godin (Portneuf): Mr. Speaker, I should like to put a question to the Prime Minister.

Has he read the telegram sent to him by a group of citizens from Neufchatel, in Quebec, advising him of their dissatisfaction with the Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation over recently built substandard houses? If so, can he tell us what steps he intends to take with regard to this serious problem?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, unfortunately I have not read the telegram mentioned by the hon. member but I shall check with my office to see, if, in fact, I received it before the hon. member.

Mr. Godin: Mr. Speaker, as the government has granted a certain amount of money to the Indians towards the cost of their expenses with regard to their James Bay claims can the people who are currently at odds with the Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation and bad contractors expect to receive some financial assistance?

Mr. Trudeau: Mr. Speaker, perhaps I am being asked for a legal opinion, but if my memory serves me right in my time the code of civil procedure allowed the poor to plead in forma pauperis before the courts.

ENERGY

PROPOSED WEST COAST OIL TANKER ROUTE—GOVERNMENT REPRESENTATIONS—EXPRESSION OF OPPOSITION BY HOUSE—POLLUTION CONTROL LEGISLATION

Mr. T. C. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the Prime Minister arising out of the announcement by President Nixon that he will seek legislative authority to proceed with the trans-Alaska pipeline project. In view of the fact the Premier of British Columbia has advised the Prime Minister that he is seeking a meeting with either President Nixon or Secretary of the Interior Rogers Morton, would the right hon. gentleman himself, or the Secretary of State for External Affairs, seek a meeting with either the President or Mr. Morton and invite the premier of British Columbia to accompany him as the premier of the province most adversely affected by this project which will entail large tankers plying the coastal waters of British Columbia?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): If I might preface my answer, Mr. Speaker, the House might be interested in being reminded that the action to which the hon. member referred follows a court decision in connection with which the leader of the Liberal opposition in British Columbia made an important input. On the question of representations, the Department of External Affairs and our embassy in Washington are always ready to help premiers of Canadian provinces to arrange interviews with important government officials in the United States. In this instance Mr. Rogers Morton knows, of course, the Canadian position. It was stated forcibly by the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources last March and has been expressed publicly many times. We are very happy that the premier of British Columbia now wishes to make representations to support our views.

Mr. Douglas: I had hoped that the Prime Minister would himself support such representations by personal intervention. In view of the fact the previous parliament unanimously passed a resolution expressing its adamant opposition to the United States government proceeding with the trans-Alaska pipeline project, would the Prime Minister undertake to have such a motion introduced in this parliament so that the present Members of Parliament might be able to express their views and have those views conveyed to the government of the United States?

Mr. Trudeau: Mr. Speaker, the hon. member has suggested that personal representations be made to the President. I would remind him that when I met the President last spring I did make representations about this question and about the danger of a tanker route on both the east and west coasts of Canada. As to the second part of the question having to do with a resolution the House can, of course, study such a resolution if it wishes but at this time we do not see any advantage in doing so. Our representations have been made known very strongly at all levels in the United States, and I think there may be a limit to the efficiency which this House could expect to achieve by passing resolutions urging the government of the United States to conduct its affairs in a certain manner rather than in another.

Mr. Douglas: In light of the right hon. gentleman's expressed concern about pollution on the two coasts of Canada, may I ask the Prime Minister whether the government has given any consideration to introducing legislation similar to the Arctic pollution control legislation which would bring all oil tankers entering the coastal waters of Canada under rigid supervision and control?

Mr. Trudeau: Well, Mr. Speaker, the question really requires a complex answer. The trick is, of course, not to pass legislation but to make it acceptable in international law. I think the hon. member appreciates that the steps taken by the government in the Arctic are of a particular nature because of the special circumstances of the Arctic. We cannot expect to make similar legislation stick as successfully in international law, especially if, as I understand the suggestion of the hon. member, it were to extend to some of the waters under United States jurisdiction.

PROPOSED WEST COAST OIL TANKER ROUTE—SUGGESTED CONTROL BY INTERNATIONAL COMMISSION

Mr. John A. Fraser (Vancouver South): Can the right hon. gentleman tell the House, bearing in mind the fact that the United States government now appears to prefer the trans-Alaska and tanker route, what steps have been taken recently, or at all, to try to negotiate with our United States friends to the end that the tanker route might be controlled by an international commission consisting of both Canadians and Americans, in which case, rather than simply worrying about the effects of a spill we would have a maximum chance of preventing a spill from taking place?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): This is the very subject I discussed with the President last spring. The suggestion we were making at the time was that it be done through the International Joint Commission. It has been found, since those meetings I had with the President, that a more useful and acceptable way would be to set up a committee composed of representatives of our two countries, and this has been done.

Mr. Fraser: Can the Prime Minister tell the House when he will be able to report as to the success of these negotiations, since it appears that time is now of the essence?

Mr. Trudeau: Mr. Speaker, it was already of the essence last spring when I talked to the President, and action has been taken along the lines I suggested. As to the exact date and nature of that report, I will refer the question to the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources so that he can attend to it.

OIL—CONTINGENCY PLAN TO ASSURE SUPPLY FOR EASTERN CANADA—INCENTIVES TO DEVELOP RESERVES

Mr. Peter Bawden (Calgary South): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary to the Prime Minister on the question of security of oil supply to eastern Canada. It is now clear that there is a threat and a danger of interruption of continuity of supply. The Prime Minister has told us that discussions are under way. The government has been aware of this problem for several years. When will a contingency plan be presented to the House so we will know what the government intends to do? Will the right hon. gentleman also be urging the Minister of Finance to encourage Canadians through proper incentives to develop further reserves in Canada, giving Canadians a chance to own the oil we should be finding here?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): The hon. member is right, of course, when he says the problem has been known for several years. But the imminence of the danger is, of course, no greater than at the time when the pipeline will in fact be constructed across Alaska, which is not as close as seems to be suggested. As to the government being aware of the problem, I would remind the House that under Mr. St. Laurent, as many hon. members will recall, the late Mr. C. D. Howe was very forthright in having pipelines built across Canada precisely to meet the type of problem that is being discussed this morning.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Speaker: Order. Hon. members will appreciate that we are spending a good deal of time on this question. I appreciate that it is important, but we should very soon move on to the next question. For the moment, the Chair will recognize the hon. member for Calgary South.

Mr. Bawden: I appreciate the Prime Minister's explanation, but he did not answer my question. Can he tell us when a contingency plan will be made known to the House, and will he say something about the question of encouraging Canadians to develop oil reserves that will be owned by Canadians?

Mr. Trudeau: I do not think I can add much to the answer I gave a few moments ago when I indicated—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Trudeau: I understand a lot of hon. members do not want me to answer anyhow. This is the subject we have been discussing. The Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources reported to the House at least a couple of weeks ago about these talks. The question at that time was on the other aspect, the so-called continental oil policy. The minister explained that his discussions with United States officials had to do with security of supply to eastern Canada.

OIL—DISCUSSIONS WITH VENEZUELA ON SECURITY OF SUPPLIES FOR EASTERN CANADA

Mr. Max Saltsman (Waterloo): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary for the Secretary of State for External Affairs. Has there been any discussion with Venezuela regarding security of supplies to eastern Canada in the form of offshore oil? Can he tell us whether Venezuela is interested in receiving firm assurances from the government of Canada, as to future contracts rather than continuing to negotiate with private companies?

• (1140)

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, in reply to the second part of the question, there has been no intimation of this kind from the government of Venezuela. We have not had any specific discussions recently with that country about the security of oil supplies although, as the Prime Minister has said, in the question of the security of oil supplies for Europe and North America as a whole Venezuela is included.

WEST COAST MARINE PILOTS STRIKE—GOVERNMENT ACTION TO SETTLE

Mr. James A. McGrath (St. John's East): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Labour. Now that the west coast pilots have walked off the job, does the minister now intend to intervene personally in the dispute, the prolongation of which could have very serious consequences for the economy of western Canada? I might say to the minister that this is not the time to be timid.

Hon. John C. Munro (Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, I appreciate the hon. member's invitation to be bold, but I want to advise him that in this case there is no federal legislation that applies to industrial relations of this kind. The pilots in this dispute are not considered employees but, rather, contractors in their own right and in that sense employers. This is not the typical situation of a collective agreement between employees and an employer.

Mr. McGrath: In view of the consequential effects of this strike, may I suggest to the minister that the situation warrants that he not hide behind the letter of the law.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. That question is not in order.

Mr. Harvie Andre (Calgary Centre): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct my supplementary to the Minister of Transport. How long is the minister willing to see this stoppage of movement of freight and other commodities through the west coast ports continue before using his good offices to intercede to bring the parties together so that freight movements through these ports can be resumed?

Hon. Jean Marchand (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I am as anxious as the hon. member to see this situation end. Officials of my department are already on the scene trying to get the parties together. As the Minister of Labour mentioned, this is a dispute between two corporations, not between a union and a company.

Mr. Andre: The point is, freight is not moving.

Mr. McGrath: We are looking at the results.

Mr. Marchand (Langelier): The only thing we can do is to try to get the parties together. The last offer made by the pilotage authority was 7½ per cent, which will bring the average salary of pilots to $32,000 a year. That is the situation at the moment. According to law, the pilotage authority has to pay for its own costs. It is a difficult problem and we are involved in it. The pilotage authority has waived the obligation upon shipowners to use pilots in certain waters. I hope our efforts will be successful; otherwise parliament will have to compel people to go back to work.

Mr. Les Benjamin (Regina-Lake Centre): Mr. Speaker, my supplementary is diverted to the Minister of Transport. In view of the fact the demands of the B.C. coast pilots for the most part have to do with working conditions, safety procedures and equipment, would the minister say whether he or his officials are taking any part in the discussions with the pilotage authority to see if agreement can be reached on these matters, since I understand that it is not the salary negotiations that are causing the strike?

Mr. Marchand (Langelier): Mr. Speaker, I think this is only part of the picture. It is not only a question of security but of working conditions. The pilots are asking for the same type of security as civil servants, but at the same time they do not want to become civil servants. They want to be regarded as a corporation and are seeking conditions that are unknown anywhere in Canada. This does not mean, of course, that we should not try to solve the problem, and we are trying to solve it. We know what the case is and we are trying to be helpful in the circumstances without embarassing anyone.

Mr. Speaker: Order. For the moment the Chair will recognize the hon. member for Abitibi.

MANPOWER

LOCAL INITIATIVES PROGRAM—AVAILABILITY OF ADDITIONAL FUNDS

Mr. Gérard Laprise (Abitibi): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Prime Minister.

Since the government recently secured passage of Bill C-124 to grant the Unemployment Insurance Commission unlimited public funds to pay the unemployed not to work, is the Prime Minister ready to have additional funds voted for the Manpower and Immigration Department to allow more local initiatives projects to be approved and more unemployed to find useful occupations?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I disagree with the hon. member's preamble and the assertion that the purpose of the Unemployment Insurance Act is to pay people for not working, which is simply not the case. It's an insurance. If someone burns his house down, he gets nothing; nothing is paid him to keep him from doing it either.

Mr. Laprise: A supplementary, if you will allow it, Mr. Speaker.

Would the Prime Minister be ready to indicate that the purpose of the Local Initiatives Program is to combat winter unemployment? If so, and the Prime Minister told us it was the case, why ask for additional funds to combat winter unemployment?

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member is starting an argument and not asking a question as such.

LOCAL INITIATIVES PROGRAM—REQUEST FOR RECONSIDERATION OF REJECTED PROJECTS

Mr. André Fortin (Lotbinière): Mr. Speaker, I wish to put a supplementary to the right hon. Prime Minister.

Since many projects have been submitted and very few approved and considering the limited budget, is it the intention of the right hon. Prime Minister to at least discuss with his colleagues the possibility of reconsidering the projects which have been rejected, in the interest of the localities which have submitted them?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I do not want to commit the government in that respect. In December or November the government almost doubled the funds earmarked for LIP. Surely there is a limit to what the government can spend in one area. If the hon. member would wait for the budget speech he will see what the government intends to do to help the economy in different ways, but as far as LIP is concerned, if the member will allow me, I will quote the Gospel: Many are called but few are chosen.

[English]

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. We should try to make some headway. The Chair will recognize the hon. member for Lotbinière for a last supplementary and will then recognize the right hon. member for Prince Albert.

[Translation]

LOCAL INITIATIVES PROGRAM—AVAILABILITY OF ADDITIONAL FUNDS

Mr. André Fortin (Lotbinière): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary for the Minister of Finance.

During consideration of Vote L12a of the Department of Finance, the minister told the House that he would look into the possibility of increasing the funds for the Local Initiatives Program by $10 million. Can the minister tell us now whether he has reached a conclusion?

Hon. John N. Turner (Minister of Finance): I am considering the situation, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Three supplementaries have already been asked on the same subject. I recognize its importance, and I shall recognize the hon. member for Lotbinière in a moment.

[Later:]

Mr. Fortin: I thank you, Mr. Speaker, and I will not take advantage of your indulgence.

The right hon. Prime Minister said no to my question and the Minister of Finance said he was examining the proposal. Then, can the Minister of Finance say if it is his intention to submit to the cabinet a proposal to increase the budget of the Local Initiatives Program as soon as possible or will he be discussing that with his colleague the Minister of Manpower and Immigration?

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): I just said, Mr. Speaker, that I was examining the proposal. In any case, the second half of the votes for local initiatives projects is still before the House. So, our friends the Progressive Conservatives should be told to speed the passage of this bill.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

REDISTRIBUTION OF RIDINGS—SUGGESTED AMENDMENT OF BRITISH NORTH AMERICA ACT TO MAINTAIN PRESENT LEVEL OF MEMBERSHIP IN CERTAIN PROVINCES

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prince Albert): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the Prime Minister. Having regard to the suggestion I made three weeks ago and since concerning redistribution, has any decision been made by the government in relation thereto, particularly in view of the fact that time is of the essence?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Yes, Mr. Speaker. We carried out our part of the undertaking and the House leader has effectively met with the House leaders of the other parties. He indicated ways in which we thought the problem might be approached, but as of this date, or rather as of yesterday, our House leader told us that the House leader of, shall I say, some other party has not been as forthcoming as we had hoped. However, I hope the particular House leader will read in Hansard that the right hon. gentleman feels that time is of the essence.

REQUEST FOR STATEMENT OF GOVERNMENT INTENTION IF DEFEATED ON BUDGET OR ITS RESOLUTIONS

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prince Albert): Mr. Speaker, the Prime Minister is apparently in good humour this morning in answering questions so I shall ask him another one. Having regard to the almost daily pronunciamentos and ultimatums on the part of the New Democratic Party as to what the government must do in order to get its support, and the statements that have been made by the President of the Privy Council and the Prime Minister outside the House, would the Prime Minister now say whether or not, if the government is defeated either on the budget itself or on the resolutions, an election will be called? Apparently he has made his decision.

• (1150)

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, in the hubbub I missed part of the end of the question, but I think the attempt was to make a distinction between pronunciamentos and ukases, and we are not quite sure which carries more weight.

Mr. Diefenbaker: The noise came from members behind the Prime Minister who apparently were endeavouring to answer for him. I ask him now whether or not some of the statements he has made outside the House and also a couple that were made on television by the President of the Privy Council mean that a defeat either on the budget itself or on the resolutions will result in dissolution? I ask him that for two reasons. First, the House has the right to know and not to be told outside the House. Second, if such an election should be called, with redistribution having been completed, the Minister of Justice and I will be in the same constituency because his home is there. That will be the battle of the century.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Simplifying the question, I ask him why parliament should not know that which is being spread around by himself and other ministers concerning what will happen? Will there be an election or will there not, or are these ultimatums pretence and sham on the part of the NDP?

Mr. Trudeau: Mr. Speaker, I cannot really instruct the right hon. gentleman on the constitution. He knows that two possibilities are always present.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): He knows what he did, too.

Mr. Trudeau: Mr. Speaker, I think the right hon. gentleman has given me reason to pause and welcome this redistribution because I would not want to miss this battle of the century.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Speaker: Order please. I will, of course, recognize the right hon. gentleman for a supplementary, but I think I owe it to the House to remind hon. members that there are just five minutes before the end of the question period.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Diefenbaker: Mr. Speaker, you will have noticed that the applause comes from the NDP which fears the next election. I ask the Prime Minister why the House of Commons should not have the information which he and some of his ministers are spreading around the country that there will in fact be an election?

Mr. Trudeau: Mr. Speaker, I am prepared to state here in the House what I have stated on the outside, that the constitution provides two ways to solve this problem. Either I can go to the Governor General and hand in my resignation as Prime Minister—

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Bell: I think he is home this weekend.

Mr. Trudeau: Mr. Speaker, I am glad to see that this alternative has received applause but not from the front benches. The other way is to advise the Governor General to dissolve parliament. These are the two possibilities.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Ask the NDP. They will tell you.

Mr. Trudeau: Which one would be exercised is a hypothetical question because we do not really expect to be defeated on the budget.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I think we should perhaps leave the debate on this matter now.

ENERGY

ABILITY TO MEET CANADIAN REQUIREMENTS FOR GAS AND OIL IN LIGHT OF EXPORTS—RECONSIDERATION OF POLICY

Mr. David Orlikow (Winnipeg North): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Prime Minister. In view of the warning by Professor Tuzo Wilson that Canada cannot meet its energy needs if it permits continued rapid export to the United States of gas and oil, and in view of the contention by the president of Union Gas that Canadian companies are now unable to let contracts to Canadian customers because of the exports of oil and gas, is the government asking the National Energy Board to reconsider the whole policy in respect of the quantities of gas and oil being exported to the United States?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, government policy on energy will be made public. The Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources has told the House of Commons, and we said it in the Speech from the Throne, that in the course of this session we would put our position before parliament and the country. In the meantime the National Energy Board is conducting hearings on this very question, and I am sure Professor Wilson will have an opportunity to be heard if he so desires.

Mr. Orlikow: In view of the warning by Professor Wilson and the president of Union Gas, will the government give consideration to the proposal made by Mr. Walter Gordon that the oil and gas resources of the high Arctic should be developed by a Crown corporation rather than by private industry?

Mr. Trudeau: We will consider that too. I am sure Mr. Gordon will be happy with the support he is receiving from the NDP.

INDIAN AFFAIRS

JAMES BAY HYDROELECTRIC PROJECT—STUDY OF FEDERAL INTERESTS AFFECTED—POSSIBLE GOVERNMENT INTERVENTION TO POSTPONE PROJECT

Miss Flora MacDonald (Kingston and The Islands): Mr. Speaker, in the absence of the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development I should like to direct my question to the Prime Minister. Has the government formally considered the study done for the Department of the Environment entitled "An Analysis of the Federal Interests Affected by the Proposed James Bay Hydro Development", which deals with the constitutional rights of the Indian and Innuit people and the federal government's responsibility thereto? Has the government reached a decision in respect of this study and has that decision been communicated to the province of Quebec?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, the Minister of the Environment has discussed this study with me. Perhaps he might be prepared to comment on it. I believe it was the work of a law student during the summer. It was studied with interest by the minister, but it does not carry the authority of government policy.

Miss MacDonald (Kingston and The Islands): In view of the statement in the report of the Indians of Quebec Association dated October 11, 1972, that the federal government was asked to intervene to get the Quebec government to consent to stopping the project until the project could be made acceptable to the Indian and Innuit people, can the Prime Minister say whether this has been done and what has been the response?

Mr. Trudeau: Mr. Speaker, I can only tell the House what I have heard the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development tell the House in the past few days, that there have been discussions with the Quebec Indians and that it had been decided that the best and least paternalistic way to approach the problem would be to subsidize them heavily so they could put their case before the courts. This has been done.

Miss MacDonald (Kingston and The Islands): Is the Prime Minister therefore prepared to make a statement on motions clarifying the federal government's responsibility and position on the constitutional rights of the native people in the James Bay area?

Mr. Trudeau: No, Mr. Speaker. I told the House a few days ago that the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development would be coming before the House later this session to put before the House a position paper of the government on all these subjects. I hope that, as happened last time, the opposition parties will respond and say the government is doing the right thing.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Prince George-Peace River.

Mr. Korchinski: Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary to a question raised on February 1.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. For the moment, the Chair has recognized the hon. member for Prince George-Peace River. I will recognize the hon. member for Mackenzie later.

Mr. F. Oberle (Prince George-Peace River): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Prime Minister. If he does not accept this student's study of the environment and the rights of native people in the James Bay area, is the government now preparing its own study so that the House may know what the government's stand will be in respect of the Indian people in the James Bay area and their environment?

Mr. Trudeau: I have just indicated to the House, as the hon. member would have known had he been listening, that we would make our views known in this session of parliament. I take it that this is what the hon. member wants.

Hon. Robert L. Stanfield (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the Prime Minister whether it is the position of the government with regard to projects going forward simply to have environmental studies carried out but to allow the projects to proceed before the environmental studies are completed?

Mr. Trudeau: Is this a question in relation to general principle or is it in relation to James Bay, airports, or what? I am not certain.

Mr. Stanfield: It relates specifically to this situation.

Mr. Guay (St. Boniface): Or is it on heavy water?

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh,!

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The Leader of the Opposition.

Mr. Stanfield: I apologize to other hon. members waiting to ask questions but I should like to point out that I asked the Prime Minister a perfectly serious question and I do not intend to be put down by the Prime Minister or by the hon. member for St. Boniface. I want to ask the Prime Minister whether he considers he is discharging his responsibilities to the Indians by simply having the government conduct an environmental study while at the same time allowing the project to proceed before the environmental study is finished.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Trudeau: The answer is no, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Stanfield: What are you doing, then?

Mr. Trudeau: We do not discharge our duties in that way. The environmental studies have been going on and, as the Minister of the Environment said, there has been a first report and there will be a further report. In the meantime, the Indians are before the courts of Quebec taking action to stop the project proceeding. I said a moment ago that this was done with federal support, with federal funds.

Mr. Nielsen: You are not discharging your responsibilities to the Indians.

Mr. Trudeau: I should like to know how the opposition would propose to deal with this particular responsibility in better ways than we have.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

VETERANS AFFAIRS

WAR VETERANS ALLOWANCES—REQUEST THAT ACT OR REGULATIONS BE AMENDED TO ENSURE THAT PROMISED OLD AGE PENSION INCREASE NOT DEDUCTED

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the Minister of Veterans Affairs. On Friday, January 19 I asked the minister this question:

> Is the minister giving consideration to an amendment to the War Veterans Allowance Act or to the regulations under that act to make sure that when there is the promised substantial increase in the old age pension this will not be subtracted from the war veterans allowance but will result in an actual addition to the income of our war veterans?

[Mr. Stanfield.]

May I ask the minister if the necessary action with respect to this matter has been taken?

Hon. Daniel J. MacDonald (Minister of Veterans Affairs): Mr. Speaker, the necessary action has been taken.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Can the minister say when it will be announced?

Mr. MacDonald (Cardigan): That is a matter of government policy, Sir, but it will be announced before very long.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Monday night?

ENVIRONMENTAL AFFAIRS

WATER LEVELS IN GREAT LAKES—SUGGESTED CONTROL BY CREATING RESERVOIR IN LAKE NIPIGON AREA

Mr. B. Keith Penner (Thunder Bay): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of the Environment. I should like to ask him whether he is aware of the scheme which has been proposed by Mr. Lorne Henderson, a member of the Ontario Legislature and chairman of the Ontario Select Committee on Land Drainage, in which he suggests that 14,000 square miles in the Lake Nipigon area of northwestern Ontario be flooded, thereby creating a huge reservoir in an effort to control the water levels in the Great Lakes?

Hon. Jack Davis (Minister of the Environment): Mr. Speaker, we will take a careful look at it. A reservoir in that area could not affect the lower lake levels for at least a year, and possibly two.

[Later:]

Mr. Penner: Mr. Speaker, Mr. Henderson is reported to be taking his committee to northwestern Ontario to examine this scheme. I should like to know whether the minister will make the services of his department available to us in meeting this committee in order to counteract their mad proposal?

Mr. Nielsen: Ask that question in caucus.

NATIONAL DEFENCE

POSSIBLE OPENING OF MILITARY COLLEGES TO WOMEN

Hon. George Hees (Prince Edward-Hastings): I have a question for the Minister of National Defence. Is it the intention of the government in the near future to open the three Canadian services colleges to young women wishing to make the armed services a career, and so make available to them the same very real advantages now available to young men?

Hon. James Richardson (Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, there are no plans to announce in that respect.

Some hon. Members: Shame!

Mr. Hees: Is it then the policy of the government, in educational institutions over which the federal government has complete jurisdiction, to deny to young women the same opportunities now available to young men, made available by the federal government?

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Perhaps before calling orders of the day I will recognize on supplementary questions the hon. member for Mackenzie and the hon. member for Burnaby-Richmond-Delta.

INCOME TAX

ACCEPTANCE OF VALUATIONS OF FARMLANDS MADE BY OTHER THAN DEPARTMENTAL APPRAISERS

Mr. S. J. Korchinski (Mackenzie): Mr. Speaker, I will forgo my supplementary question to the Minister of National Health and Welfare and will direct my question, after three weeks, to the Minister of National Revenue. I wish to ask him if he is now prepared to answer the question I raised on February 1 whether evaluations made of farmlands by so-called appraisers will be recognized by the Department of National Revenue? I must apologize at this time, Mr. Speaker, but I feel a supplementary question coming on.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Hon. Robert Stanbury (Minister of National Revenue): Mr. Speaker, noticing the difficulty which the hon. member had in being recognized, I wrote him a letter some time ago giving him the answer. However, I know that this is a matter of concern to many farmers, and I want to respond in the House so that farmers will beware of people who misrepresent themselves as employees of the Department of National Revenue. Any appraisers offering their services at a fee are not employees of the department, and any appraisals made by them would not necessarily be accepted by the department.

Mr. Korchinski: Mr. Speaker, I do have a supplementary question. May I ask whether the department will now consider accepting some of these evaluations because of the difficulty in carrying out estate planning and because next of kin or those who may be left behind may have difficulty in trying to explain the position which has been established by former appraisers? Will the department at this time accept these appraisals? Will it consider that possibility in order to facilitate estate planning?

Mr. Stanbury: I will be glad to have any particular cases looked into that the hon. member might want to draw to my attention and see if that can be done. If the department is not satisfied with the valuation offered by an owner, then of course any valuations done by the department would be at the department's own expense, not at the owner's expense.

Mr. Korchinski: As a further supplementary—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The Chair will recognize the hon. member for Burnaby-Richmond-Delta and then call orders of the day.

INQUIRY OF THE MINISTRY

Mr. John Reynolds (Burnaby-Richmond-Delta): Mr. Speaker, my supplementary is directed to the right hon. Prime Minister. In view of the fact the Prime Minister stated in the House today that the Indians of James Bay have had to take the government of Quebec to court, and in view of the fact that the people of Sea Island are taking the government to court on Monday to seek stoppage of the expropriation of land for the Vancouver Airport, is it the policy of the government that the only recourse the people of Canada now have is to the courts of Canada, not through the parliament of Canada, to stop this government's illegal actions in expropriation proceedings?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. That is not a question but argument. The hon. member for Humber-St. George's-St. Barbe on a point of order.

Mr. Marshall: Thank God for points of order, Mr. Speaker, or I would never get recognized. Can the government House leader advise when the Standing Committee on Veterans Affairs will be called to deal with the basic pension rate and the joint study report?

Mr. Lang: Mr. Speaker, I understand work is under way to try to bring the committee's organization into being about Tuesday.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

SUPPLY

APPROPRIATION ACT No. 1, 1973

The House resumed, from Thursday, February 15, consideration in committee of Bill C-141, for granting to Her Majesty certain sums of money for the public service for the financial year ending 31st March, 1973—Mr. MacEachen (for Mr. Drury)—Mr. McCleave in the chair.

On clause 2—Schedule.

The Chairman: When the committee rose last evening Vote 20a in the schedule relating to environmental services was under consideration. The hon. member for Timiskaming.

Mr. Nielsen: Mr. Chairman, I rise on a point of order in connection with speeding up the business of completing this bill. As you will recall, Sir, last evening we offered to sit beyond ten o'clock, and this was rejected by the NDP. We also offered to pass certain items, and this too was rejected.

I now make the suggestion to the committee, in order to speed up the business of supply and get this bill through this afternoon by, as I and we in this party hope, three o'clock, that by unanimous consent we agree to pass items 5a under External Affairs without debate, 1a under Finance without debate, 1a under Justice without debate, items 10a and 15a under Public Works without debate, the item in connection with parliament without debate, items 31a and 32a under Regional Economic Expansion without debate, items 15a, 35a and 90a under Secretary of State without debate, items 65a, 85a, 90a, L110a, 115a under Department of Transport without debate, the Treasury Board item 5a without debate, Urban Affairs item 10a without debate, and item 10a under Veterans Affairs without debate. We on this side are prepared to pass all of those items now without debate.

Mr. Peters: On the same point of order, Mr. Chairman, I am quite happy to see that the Official Opposition wishes to go home, and I am quite prepared to let its members do so. However, we are prepared to discuss, within a reasonable length of time, some of the estimates remaining before us. We are well aware of the fact that most of the discussion that has taken place has come from the hon. member's own party. I am surprised that he has now become the leader of that party, and asks that his suggestions be taken into consideration. I reject his suggestion, and certainly do not give unanimous consent.

Mr. Nielsen: Mr. Chairman, I would urge the hon. member and his party to reconsider. With respect to the number of speakers who have participated, the combined NDP and Social Credit in the House have 46 members and they fielded 22 in the debate while in committee of the whole. We in this party have 107 members, and we fielded 25 speakers. I think those facts should be on the record, and I urge my hon. friends to the left to agree to pass these items by consent.

I understand that the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre has specified three departments on which his members wish to speak. We have left those deliberately out of our suggested items to be passed by unanimous consent. If we do this, we could be through by three o'clock this afternoon. I appeal to them to be reasonable, and to complete and pass these items by unanimous consent.

Mr. Lang: On the question of order, Mr. Chairman, I am certainly delighted that at least hon. members opposite are arguing about who is now going to be the most co-operative, in trying to make sure that we get through these estimates with some expedition. It seems to me that in view of this discussion we may be able to reach agreement about not debating certain items when they are called, particularly where there is some general agreement about not speaking on them. But given that, and in view of the exchange, I think we should simply call the items in sequence, and hope we have a real spirit of co-operation in fact from all sections of the House and not just from the spokesman for a party.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Chairman, there is just one point that should be made clear. As I understand it, what we are now discussing is the schedule to the bill in its entirety, and by the rules we are not permitted to vote on or pass individual items. When the hon. member for Yukon gets up and says, "Let us now pass items so-and-so and so-and-so," he should be advised that this cannot happen. If that were possible, if it were possible to have votes on some of these items then we could have the votes and get them over with, but all that needs to happen to expedite the conclusion of the consideration of the schedule is just for us to get along.

[Translation]

Mr. Fortin: On the same point of order, Mr. Speaker.

Our party has always agreed to co-operate in speeding up the business of this House and I do not like the rather unflattering remarks made by the hon. member for Yukon (Mr. Nielsen). I should like him to know that we think—and I agree with what the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles) said—that what he suggests is counter to the practices of this House. As far as we are concerned, we would be ready to have the Chair call the votes one after the other as they are before us, and we will do as we have done since the beginning, that is to say we will express our opinion on those votes if we think it is necessary. We are prepared to co-operate.

However, one thing is sure, Mr. Speaker, if the hon. member for Yukon had agreed to talk it over with parliamentary leaders of all parties before making his little stage act he probably would have received better co-operation from his colleagues.

[English]

The Chairman: We will continue to discuss vote 20a in the schedule, relating to environment. The hon. member for Timiskaming.

Mr. Peters: Mr. Chairman, as I was indicating last night much of the discussion that has taken place, particularly with respect to the James Bay situation, has been about the effect on people of the environmental changes resulting from the development. But there is also the major question of what the environmental experts themselves have to say on this matter. I was urging the minister to give some consideration to this question and to consult other departments that may be involved with the subject.

As the minister is well aware, a great deal of hydroelectric development has taken place in the province of Ontario. In that province most of the rivers in the James Bay watershed have already been harnessed. Probably the largest of the early developments that took place in Canada was that at Fraserdale in the Abitibi canyon. Since then there have been many projects, the last one the Cannal project in the James Bay watershed. I am sure the information is available to the minister on the effects that have taken place. Many of us are interested in knowing whether, as a nation, we should be pursuing a project as large as the James Bay project.

I indicated some of the fears that were being expressed by environmentalists were related to what would happen to James Bay, what would happen to the water, what would happen to the fish and fowl in the area. The minister has probably not had time yet to consider the project that was announced yesterday for the large lignite deposits in that area.

One of the major pollutants, of course, is coal and if a steam plant is established in that area for the development of thermal power for approximately a 20 to 25 year period using 200 million to 300 million tons of coal there is obviously going to be a lot of smoke and pollution. Anyone who listens to the weather forecasts is aware that much of the weather that affects northern Ontario coming out of the James Bay and the Hudson Bay area, goes through central Quebec, central Ontario and ends up in the central United States. A project the size of the one at James Bay is going to be one of the nation's largest polluters and this weather picture should be given some consideration.

Mr. Chairman, I am concerned that the Minister of the Environment does not seem to be taking into consideration work done by other bodies. The Department of Mines for the province of Ontario, our own Department of Indian Affairs and Northern Development and some other agencies as well as the many universities, have undertaken studies on this subject. It has been known for hundreds of years that lignite exists in that area, and I am sure that many companies and universities have made studies of it. The Ontario government has made at least five studies. I am sure the environmental effect has been considered in all of them. I feel that this government should make all these studies available to the people of the area who could then decide whether to go ahead with the project.

When the Churchill Falls project was developed, obviously more hydro became available than the province of Quebec could use and the surplus was for sale, but that did not affect Canadians. The only work derived from a hydro project is in its construction and all the mess is then left. The plant is automated to the extent that one man comes in by helicopter to check the dials and see that all the red lights are off and all the green lights are on and that is all it takes to run a multimillion kilowatt per hour plant. All that is left in the area is destruction or perhaps some small advantages attendant upon the construction.

I am not sure if anybody knows whether the minister is responsible for the mess that is left. According to his argument he cannot establish water standards for Canada under the Canada Water Act; they must be set by the regions or provinces and there is not a Canadian water standard as such. He gave a number of constitutional reasons why he could not set the standards and he gave a number of economic reasons why he would not if he could.

The last very large hydro project to be built in northern Ontario was in my area. They not only cut all the trees but they put in bulldozers to clean the land. In addition, they built a lake that was to be used for a number of other purposes. In that part of the country there are areas that were flooded by lumber companies almost 100 years ago, and today the trees are almost the same as they were two or three years after the flooding. It was a disaster and will be for many years to come. Some members have had an opportunity to see a film of an area in British Columbia in which the trees were standing in water. They have been there now for some years, and it is predicted that they will be there for many years to come.

Does the minister have the responsibility to do something about the future environment of this nation? He has the responsibility for the Navigable Waters Act and, Mr. Chairman, very few hydro projects are possible unless they take place on navigable waters. The Navigable Waters Act is one of our earliest pieces of legislation and gives the federal government responsibility for the areas where hydro projects are constructed. I imagine that this minister will wait until the project is developed and then when nobody has cleaned up the area and we cannot get a boat through, he will tell us he did not have any authority to act. Mr. Chairman, he will not have the authority unless he tells members of this parliament exactly what the conditions are and what the economics will be. Then, we can make an honest decision on all the facts so that we do not have a calamity.

It is all very well for members to speak about the rights of Indians, Mr. Chairman, and those rights are very important. They are not only important to the Indians but to all Canadians. However, it seems to me there is just as much responsibility to tell other Canadians what is going to happen to the environment in the James Bay area as there is to explain how the Indians will be rewarded because they have to move out of the area. Frankly, that is all that is going to happen in that area. If the area is to be developed I think we must minimize the destruction that wil take place. Canada does not need that project. It is like the Arctic oil reserves and other reserves—they are of no value to Canadians today. The value is in the sale of the product to another country. Is it now time, Mr. Chairman, that the minister assured this committee that he has used every tool available to the environmentalists to ascertain how we can get the maximum advantage from any development that takes place. In this way, future generations of this country would not have to pay the penalty for our selfishness and greed in wanting to make the biggest dollar from present day developments.

Mr. Davis: Mr. Chairman, I should like, briefly, to answer several questions raised by the hon. member for Timiskaming. Environment Canada has in its employ many of the top biologists in the country. It has entered into contracts on a number of projects on which we need environmental assistance, and is employing many of the environmental consultants in Canada. These are people who can assess the effect on fisheries, forestry wildlife, air quality and land values that major projects can have in the future.

The business of looking into the side effects of major developments is new, and the expertise in Canada, our competence in this field, is already strained to the limit. We are finding it difficult to obtain enough competent people to carry out more environmental impact assessments. These are assessments that the Canadian government must undertake to honour its policy commitments in this field. Provincial governments are also beginning to follow this course, although few of them so far have made any environmental impact assessments. Municipalities have made hardly any.

There has been considerable discussion in this chamber of late about the James Bay power development project. In that case, a series of environmental appraisals has been underway prior to the construction of any dam. The project calls for the building of a series of dams, not merely one or two big dams. I might add that the entire schedule of building has been turned around as a result of the preliminary environmental impact appraisal, or as a result of the findings of Phase 1 of the over-all appraisal which was completed late in 1971. The development, instead of proceeding from south to north, has now been reversed and may proceed from north to south. So, already in the case of the James Bay development, environmental impact assessments have had a decided effect on the scheduling or sequence of dam construction.

Many other big projects are now being contemplated. One is contemplated in northern Manitoba. Actually, there we are faced with a fait accompli, although our people have been asked for advice. That project has already been undertaken. I urge the hon. member who represents the party in power in that province to see to it that that government does the same sort of thing that is being done in James Bay. Let it take environmental impact assessments seriously and adjust its plans to the findings made in the assessments, instead of proceeding unilaterally, regardless of the recommendations in the assessments.

Mr. Howard: Would the hon. minister care to spell out that suggestion?

Mr. Davis: The hon. member asked about a possible coal or lignite plant in northern Ontario. I understand that the Ontario government has already taken a cursory look at the environmental effects of this proposition. If there is some prospect of the project proceeding, we will look into its possible climatic and downstream effects. Fortunately, we employ people who are competent to make this kind of appraisal.

With respect to the James Bay project, the preliminary findings of our people are that the projected building sequence will not affect the climate of the James Bay area or of adjoining areas. Last night, I think, the hon. member mentioned that there might be a change in temperature of several degrees. Our people who have looked at the atmospheric effects do not forecast any marked change in the climate there.

In summary, we are embarked on a number of environmental impact appraisals. This is new, in that we are carrying out these assessments before construction actually begins. Our expertise is stretched to the limit, but we are doing our best. Naturally, we cannot cover all projects and study others in the depth we would like.

Mr. Peters: Mr. Chairman, may I ask the minister a question? I was pleased to hear what he had to say about studies in connection with projects. I am not familiar with the project in northern Manitoba. I presume it has to do with hydroelectric power as well. Does the Minister of the Environment have power to see to it that land, say both in Manitoba and northern Ontario, is left in a natural and decent state after the project is completed? In other words, after the basin is built and the area is flooded, does he have authority to see to it that tree stumps and debris are cleared up? Does he have power to prevent the sort of thing that happened in the Peace River project a few years ago? In other words, after all the cutting is done and after all the levelling has been finished, does he have power to make sure that the area is turned, say, into a recreational area, to compensate to some extent for the loss of other land?

Mr. Davis: Mr. Chairman, the answer is yes and no. It depends on the project, where it is and what its effects are likely to be. The provinces have substantial powers in the area of the environment. For example, the provinces control land and property, and this control can be very forceful indeed. The federal government can mobilize other powers and make them felt. It can use one power or a combination of powers. It may use its powers if, for example, there is to be a substantial impact on fisheries, or on navigation. Or, it may be asked to determine what the effects will be outside the province, or outside Canada, of the development. If the answer is yes, Ottawa can get involved in the project.

It can also become involved if federal money is to be spent on the project. Strings can be attached to the spending of federal funds and so on. But there is a limit to our powers. Many projects can be carried out in a part of a province where none of these effects are observable and federal money is not involved. That environmental control is a matter for the province. Only the province can act, because, if federal action were taken the courts could rule it ultra vires. That is the dilemma we face in the setting of national standards. There are circumstances in which we cannot enforce national standards. We do not have the necessary powers under our constitution. The development in northern Manitoba which I mentioned involves the diversion of most of the flow of the Churchill River to the Nelson. It is one of the biggest hydroelectric developments in prospect on this continent.

Mr. Peters: Mr. Chairman, may I ask the minister a further question. Leaving aside the diversion of the river in Manitoba, does the minister have authority to see to it—I do not know what the word is—that, after a development is completed and the waterbed or basin constructed, the land is returned as nearly as possible to its natural state? Does the minister have authority in Manitoba and in the James Bay area, and does his authority extend to navigable water that may be contained in the flood basin?

Mr. Davis: Mr. Chairman, in the matter of clearing reservoirs, we do not have authority to do that in northern Manitoba. All the lands involved, as I understand it, are under provincial jurisdiction, with the possible exception of one or two Indian reservations where the federal government has authority by virtue of the federal government's responsibilities under the Indian act. In northern Manitoba along the course of the diversion of the Churchill River into the Nelson, we do not have responsibility, nor do we have authority.

If, however, the construction of the diversion were to be detrimental to navigation, we could perhaps prevent structures from being built or have them modified. Or, if they were to have a detrimental effect on the fishery by drying up the lower Churchill, we could, in that case, rely on federal law. Unless it is a case of flooding across an international boundary, the flooding of a national park or that kind of thing, the federal government is not usually involved in the clearing of a reservoir or in the passing of regulations for the clearing of a reservoir. The federal government does not have the power to act, but it can recommend certain actions that ought to be taken.

Mr. Haliburton: Mr. Chairman, I realize that the committee is anxious to finish its deliberations with respect to the department now being considered, and I will not delay it longer than necessary. The hon. member for Gander-Twillingate last night spoke about the fishing industry and the comments he made applied generally to my area.

There is one area of particular concern in Southwestern Nova about which I would like to obtain a statement from the minister. I refer to the scallop fishery in the Digby and Digby Neck area, that is the Bay of Fundy scallop fishery. When the minister was in that area last fall, he announced that the season would remain open, presumably subject to some limitation on the size of scallops in the future. At a meeting the fishermen in that area unanimously agreed that the appropriate means of preserving the scallop fishery would be the imposition of a season similar to that which had been in effect prior to that time. Will the minister state whether this matter has been reviewed, whether his department has come to a decision and, if so, what that decision is.

Mr. Davis: Mr. Chairman, when I was in the area last fall, I saw a large number of fishermen at different locations. They were divided in their opinion, at least the opinion they expressed to me, as to whether or not there should be a limited season. The hon. member tells me that they have since voted in favour of a limited season instead of no season or open fishing at any time of the year.

The fundamental problem is that the scallop resource has been heavily overfished on the United States side and in Canada as well. The sizes of the remaining scallops is already small. This is in itself evidence of overfishing. In order to help bring back the resource, we set a lower limit on the size, a limit which will be raised as time goes by. The industry is already restricted because of the condition of the resource which is general on the Atlantic coast. Whether we should also introduce a short season is a matter which we are prepared to review at any time. I will inquire as to the nature of our discussions between officials and the fishermen to see what can be done to meet the latters requests.

Mr. Harding: Mr. Chairman, I have two or three questions I would like the minister to answer before we complete our study of this department. I listened with a great deal of interest to his answers concerning the jurisdiction of his department in connection with some of the projects about which we have been talking, such as the James Bay project and the project in Manitoba. Is the minister trying to tell this House that his department does not have jurisdiction, for example, when the diversion of a river is at stake? Have you no jurisdiction in this respect? I understand that it is completely within the confines of federal jurisdiction. A province might say it is going to divert one river into another and another and another. As far as I can understand, that proposal is subject to federal jurisdiction. In connection with this, I wish to ask the minister whether the province of Quebec applied to his department for the right to divert any of those rivers involved in the James Bay project.

Mr. Davis: Mr. Chairman, the province of Quebec has not applied to Environment Canada or any other federal government department for authority to divert one river in Quebec into another river in Quebec. The hon. member suggests that the diversion of rivers or streams from one to the other inside a province is a matter of federal jurisdiction. I am sure if he were speaking in a provincial legislature, he would say it was totally within the provincial jurisdiction. He undoubtedly knows of many instances where diversions have taken place solely under provincial jurisdiction and without federal law being abridged in any way. Unless there are effects outside the province, effects on the fishery, navigation or a substantial effect on human health, and there are a few other conditions I might add, unless those things happen, one or several in combination, there are no legal grounds for federal intervention. This is a fact of life in Canada.

Mr. Harding: Mr. Chairman, here we have major rivers running into James Bay in which there are fisheries and with deltas at the mouths of them. The whole picture is going to be changed. This is federal jurisdiction. Damage is being done. As far as I can make out, such a situation comes within the prerogative of the federal government. I am not talking about a little stream being diverted here, there or somewhere else. I am talking about a major river being diverted into another major river and so on, where you are bound to destroy fish runs. This directly affects the fisheries department. I again ask the minister, have there been any discussions between his department and the province of Quebec with regard to the diversion of these rivers and with regard to the damage that might be done when diversion takes place?

Mr. Davis: Mr. Chairman, this is a different question that the hon. member has raised. We have a number of our top people, experts in the area of fisheries, involved in the environmental appraisals on the effects of the James Bay project or series of projects. They have already published their preliminary findings. They are now involved in a more extensive examination of the new construction schedule which the James Bay Corporation is studying.

We will have all of that information. If there is a substantial effect on the fishery, of course there is a case for federal intervention. But the preliminary report of our fisheries exports was not all that conclusive as to damage to the fisheries. I recommend that the hon. member read the published reports on this subject before he says that there will be substantial damage to fish in this case.

Mr. Harding: Mr. Chairman, I have one more question. The minister spoke earlier about the environmental impact studies being carried out in connection with James Bay and, I presume, other projects. He indicated that this information is going to be available prior to the beginning of construction. This is the very point which our group and other environmentalists have been making. It is stupid to start on a project, spend tens of millions of dollars getting it ready and then finding out that an environmental impact study shows that immense damage is going to be done. At that time you are committed to the project.

The point that we are making is that these impact studies should be made first. They should be properly evaluated. The project can then proceed on the basis of the evaluation coming out of the study. With regard to James Bay and other projects, this procedure has been reversed. The cart has been put before the horse. After the Quebec government has spent tens of millions of dollars putting in roads, setting up base camps, building bridges over rivers and doing a variety of things, it is a fait accompli. The people of Quebec and Canada have taken another top-notch shellacking as far as the environment is concerned. This is why we are protesting and why we say the government has been negligent in not pushing this more effectively and vigorously.

Mr. Davis: Mr. Chairman, I can understand the hon. member's frustration. I notice that he is commenting on projects which are either largely or entirely within provincial jurisdiction. The James Bay project is novel to this extent; the Quebec government has asked the federal government to join in an environmental appraisal before the construction of dams begins. I urge him to apply the same criteria to the Churchill diversion in Manitoba.

• (1250)

[Translation]

Mr. Laprise: Mr. Chairman, I listened with great interest to the debate on the James Bay question which has been taking place for a few days, and I wonder whether this problem is put frankly. As a matter of fact, I doubt it.

According to questions which are asked and objections which are made to the government and to the minister, most hon. members seem to be opposed to the implementation of the James Bay hydro project. In a way, Mr. Speaker, I agree with the fact that this project may have been implemented 20 years too late but without any preparation, without any study. The minister and the federal government are in a bad position if they want to oppose the James Bay hydro project, on the strength of their authority under the Constitution, for this will immediately give rise to a war with Quebec separatists saying once more that the federal government is taking exception to the growth of the province of Quebec.

With the experience of other developments as important as the James Bay hydro project as well as the environmental damage and disorders of all kinds which resulted, whether we think of the Peace River hydro project or of similar developments in Asia or Africa, I do not think that we can do any better in Quebec than elsewhere.

Mr. Chairman, it is obvious—and I take as a basis some reports made by scientists—that these hydro projects will have serious effects not only in terms of climate but especially in terms of migration of fish, of birds and particularly, which is worse, of men, women and children who have been occupying these territories for generations.

In fact, work has not started yet but preparation has begun and Indians living in these areas have already felt some changes in their way of life. There are rightful complaints about the effects of that development for the power of those who need the power is known, these are the Americans. It is known that power generated in the James Bay area will be used to supply American plants.

Mr. Chairman, I was going to say that the Americans are financing these projects. Instead I should say that the Americans are lending money to the province of Quebec for the execution of these projects as a fairly high rate of interest so that there will be no profits from the sale of electricity by the province. Our natural resources will be sent out to a foreign country.

Mr. Fortin: And we are going to lose money.

Mr. Laprise: Perhaps we will lose out.

They had to honour an election promise made in 1970 and try to create those 100,000 jobs. There are many Quebecers involved. The only advantages resulting from the James Bay projects are jobs and high salaries, even though gangsters have taken over most of the administrative jobs.

Now, I wonder whether the federal government is in a position to interrupt this project or if the Quebec government should establish the extent of its usefulness.

It may be already too late to take adequate measures, but the Quebec people will bear judgment on the government that launched the James Bay hydroelectric project.

[English]

Mr. Peters: Despite my colleague's eagerness to go to lunch I should like to ask one other question. It relates to a totally different field. To what extent is the department involved in the development of sewage lagoons as a method of sewage treatment, especially in northern areas? What environmental studies have been undertaken in this connection?

I was interested to see that one of the government departments recently put out a statement to the effect that the evaporation factor in northern areas was something like 30 to 35 inches a year. This figure related to the mid-Canada corridor stretching from the constituency of my hon. friend from Skeena, to the Maritimes. Rainfall varies, of course, along this corridor but in my own area it amounts to some 37 inches a year which would leave an excess of some four to eight inches of liquid in the lagoons.

Has the department done any work in this field, or can the intention to clean up the Ottawa River system be regarded as just a smokescreen? In the area with which I am familiar the lagoons are flushed out every spring when the ice goes and the contents are discharged into the river. I should like to know whether in the discussions being held with the provinces the department is drawing attention to alternative types of sewage treatment which would supersede what is obviously an elementary expedient, and one which is not working successfully in many parts of the country. I have no doubt the system works adequately in the United States where the evaporation rate reaches 140 inches a year and rainfall amounts to 40 inches or so. Obviously, we are kidding ourselves if the federal government is advancing money to build additional lagoons in northern Ontario where they are frozen half the year and where evaporation amounts to less than the rainfall, particularly when we say we are trying to clean up local rivers as part of a total clean-up of the Ottawa River.

Mr. Chairman, the minister may wish to reply after lunch, so I will call it one o'clock.

At one o'clock the House took recess.

AFTER RECESS

The committee resumed at 2 p.m.

Mr. Peters: Mr. Chairman, before lunch I was talking about the effect of pollution in various areas and the methods used to fight it. I had said that in many parts of the mid-Canada corridor the weather conditions and rainfall are such that the outdoor lagoons used by some small communities are not effective for meeting the standards for which the minister is hoping. I suggested that a number of communities in northern Ontario were of absolute necessity dumping sewage into these lagoons, but the amount of rainfall and lack of evaporation meant that in the spring much of the effluent in the lagoons ran in an untreated condition into watercourses. The question I was asking was whether this matter had been considered by the minister's department and any recommendations had been made. The situation is similar to that in the United States, particularly in the southern states, where conditions are considerably different from those in our area.

Last week I was in Timmins where they have installed a new lagoon close to a housing development. Although these lagoons are not supposed to smell, the stench of this lagoon was so bad that some people in the housing development were considering moving. Obviously, that particular lagoon is not functioning in the way expected, and I suspect that the discharge from that lagoon is not such that should be dumped into watercourses. I should like to ask the minister whether he has considered the matter, whether studies are being carried out on the question, and what recommendations he is making to the provinces with regard to developing as an alternative low-cost treatment plants for small communities in areas where lagoons are not functioning well.

Mr. Davis: As the hon. member says, there is a problem about treatment of lagoons in northern communities. The department is looking into this. I do not have the details on hand, but I will make sure that they are made available to the hon. member.

The Assistant Deputy Chairman: Does that complete consideration of the items under the Department of the Environment?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Supply

The Assistant Deputy Chairman: The committee will now consider item 5a of the Department of External Affairs.

Mr. Howard: Mr. Chairman, when the estimates were before the miscellaneous estimates committee no indication was given of the purpose of this item. One or two paragraphs appeared in the proceedings of the committee just to show that the item had carried, without anybody knowing what the amount of $490,500 was for. I wonder whether we could now discover that.

Mr. Lang: Mr. Chairman, in the absence of the Secretary of State for External Affairs—absent perhaps partly because it was the view that there would be no discussion of this item—I shall ask that a detailed explanation be given to the hon. member and to other interested hon. members by the parliamentary secretary.

• (1410)

Mr. Howard: I could obtain that information by phoning somebody. I suppose I could obtain it more quickly in that way which might satisfy me.

The Assistant Deputy Chairman: Is the hon. member rising for the purpose of answering a question.

Mr. De Bané: Yes, Mr. Chairman. First I wish to apologize for being late. The expenditure of $490,500 is for the purpose of opening offices in Atlanta, Budapest and Lusaka which is in Zambia. In the case of Atlanta, the amount is to be $115,000. In the case of Budapest, the figure is $60,500 and in the case of Lusaka $315,000, for a total of $490,500. Those are capital expenditures and are not in respect of operations or other matters.

Mr. Howard: Fine. Presumably we are building something. From what I can gather from the estimates some of this expenditure would be for the construction and acquisition of land, buildings and equipment. Some of it would be for the acquisition of major equipment.

If I have the correct figure here, it would seem that out of the total of $490,500 an amount of $300,000 would be for the construction and acquisition of machinery and equipment. I can understand that we would be constructing buildings and this sort of thing, but I wonder what we are doing in respect of machinery and equipment.

Mr. De Bané: I hope to be able to have the precise information for the hon. member in a very short time in respect of that question.

Mr. Howard: Probably by not paying as much attention to the Department of External Affairs as we should, unfortunately we seem to have a tendency, as was evident in the committee and elsewhere, to think that the Department of External Affairs is a structure which should not be subjected to any questions about what it does. It operates at a level which is presumed to be helpful and beneficial. I think that, as a result, very little attention is being paid to what the Department of External Affairs does, on what it spends its money and the like.

There would seem to be a fantastic amount of waste involved in the Department of External Affairs—probably as much as in any other department—because it operates to a large extent outside of Canada where people cannot see what it is doing. There is a lot of fat in some of the expenditures which do not provide any great benefit to Canada, even in a diplomatic way. When I recall my visit to the United Nations some eight or 10 years ago and saw the offices and the staff which operated there in support of our delegations and groups at the United Nations, and then recall my return visit there recently I was amazed to see the tremendous growth which had taken place in that operation. It seemed to me that the people who were there were more interested in providing good conditions for themselves in respect of office space, conference rooms and so on than they were in respect of what they were trying to do in terms of representing Canada.

Too often we find government departments operating in this manner. In this respect I think probably the Department of External Affairs is the worst offender, probably as a result of being run by people who have no relationship whatever to everyday life in Canada. They do not concern themselves about the workers, the farmers and the majority of the people but are merely intent on living the easiest possible life they can and doing the least amount of work. This expenditure has been explained briefly, but I think that if the people who are acquiring these buildings, equipment and staff wanted to do so they could save money for the Canadian taxpayer. I am sure they could save half the expenditure in this item. Many people in this nation are getting fed up with the growth of the bureaucracy in the federal government and the squandering and waste of money without any real benefit accruing to the people of Canada. The Department of External Affairs is the worst offender of any I know.

Probably the Department of Industry, Trade and Commerce runs a pretty close second in this regard. If that is the case, it is because the industry section was set up by a Liberal government specifically for the purpose of finding a Cabinet seat for one of the ministers who is sitting in the front bench now. They set up the department of industry specifically for the gentleman who presently is the President of the Treasury Board. Later, the government put the department of industry in with the department of trade and commerce and created the Department of Industry, Trade and Commerce. There is a lot of duplication involved in this. However, that is a matter with which we can deal later. Knowing the way buildings are constructed, and knowing that if someone representing the taxpayers of this country said to these fat cats it was about time they started justifying their existence, I believe if they sharpened their pencils a little these buildings could be acquired for half the cost shown here.

In order to try to instill in this group some sense of responsibility to the Canadian taxpayer, I intend to move a motion which would have the effect of cutting this amount of money in half. If we must have these facilities and buildings in Budapest, Atlanta and Lusaka I would like to see this accomplished a lot more cheaply than is planned here. Accordingly, I move:

That the schedule be amended by reducing the amount set out in Vote 5a of the Department of External Affairs to $242,250.

[Mr. Howard.]

Mr. De Bané: Mr. Chairman, I should just like to say that in a few moments I will have the details concerning these expenditures for which the hon. member has asked.

Mr. Howard: That is what you said before.

Mr. Peters: Mr. Chairman, I am in agreement with the reduction in this item. When I look at the main estimates I find that we have in the capital budget in relation to Brazilia $2,200,000 which we previously estimated to which is now added $1,620,000. We are going to spend another $4,230,000 for the construction of a chancellery residence and staff accommodation in Islamabad, Pakistan. We have already spent around $8 million there, which is probably about one third of the budget of that country. In New Delhi we have spent, in the second stage of the current estimate, a total of $1,300,000. The previous estimate was $1,400,000. That involves the war. Everything is cheaper there now. In Dakar, Senegal we are putting in $285,000 for a chancellery. I suppose that this goes with our religious attachment to these places. Now we have Atlanta, Budapest and Lusaka added to this list.

I believe, as does the hon. member, that we should also be giving some consideration to the expenditure on the monument which was built down the street. I suppose this monument is worth $20 million and to staff it will probably cost another $20 million. The hon. member for Assiniboia has been asking some questions regarding the salaries. It is my guess that the salaries of Members of Parliament will look very small in relation to the salaries of the staff of the chancelleries which we are going to build as well as the salaries of those in the other buildings which we are putting up in these countries. Almost every one of them will have four or five people to staff them.

A few years ago I had some experience in a hospital in a country in Africa. I became part of the native population there for a three week period. Of course, there was no official from the Department of External Affairs coming to visit me, but a representative of Mau Mau came to vist me, as well as some other people. I found that the sole function of our senior staff representative in that area in eastern Africa was to keep whisky, and all the delegates who were there were very unhappy because she would not allow us to buy any of the whisky at embassy prices, as is done everywhere else. She was in another country and they kept the whisky and would not give it out. Maybe that was judicious of her, maybe it would not have been wise for her to do so, but the booze was very cheap in that country. They made it for the natives and allowed us to buy it at the same price. Her main function was to be keeper of whisky. She was responsible for three embassies, and I suppose we have buildings for them.

I have looked into our main estimates to find out what our embassies are doing. They are supposed to help Canadians. Help Canadians be damned. They do not help Canadians at all, in any shape or form. In most cases they do not even help delegations which go there unless a minister is attached to them. I remember attending one particular conference where we finally told the ambassador—and he is one of the long haired ambassadors who has been there a long time—that if he did not supply us with a car, we would confiscate one. Finally, he supplied us with a car under great duress. That was his contribution to that conference, which was an international conference for which we paid a large sum of money. The Canadian delegation did not make much of a contribution, but we did pay more than our share for that conference. The ambassador's contribution was one small party at which a number of us ended up dancing on a table. He finally gave us each a bottle of booze and asked us to leave, which we did. I have not found him to be of any help.

I think that most Canadians, including me, do not know where those countries are in which we are going to spend $115 million. If it is Georgia, O.K., but I am not sure that we should start dealing with the state government of Georgia. If we have done that, then perhaps we have recognized the state of Georgia. How about Alabama? Have we recognized Alabama yet? Has George Wallace been elevated to head of the state, and do we intend to put some money there? I have heard of Budapest—it is very reasonable over there. We are only going to spend some $60,500. In Lusaka we are going to spend $315,000. I do not know where that is either, Mr. Chairman. Probably it did not exist when I went to school; neither did Brazilia, but I know where that is. I do not know whether this town in Pakistan still exists after the war they had out there. New Delhi, everybody knows where that is.

I am suggesting that my knowledge of geography is not any worse because of my age than other people's knowledge of that subject. There are many people who do not know where those places are, and we are spending a lot of money putting up buildings in those places. It is my suggestion that we should do as we have done in many other countries with which we have established relations, namely, rent accommodation in these areas. I think it is rather ludicrous for us to be spending such large amounts of money on putting up buildings and facilities of the kind mentioned here. I have no objection to the Secretary of State for External Affairs suggesting that we spend money on an agency which is established to help some country. I have no objection when in my locality the principal of one of the schools goes to Africa and establishes a school over there. I have no objection when I hear of him going to South America and establishing a school there. Such projects are worthwhile, Mr. Chairman, but I wonder if Canada is not deluding itself and deluding Canadians into thinking we have reached the scale of countries such as Britain or the United States and a couple of other old super powers which have to have large buildings of their own flying their own flag in a country which needs their help.

My experience in external affairs is limited. It is probable that I have not taken as many trips as I should have. Perhaps I have not been allowed to do so by some of my confreres. In any case, it seems to me that our committee is failing totally in trying to approve such expenditures. We have on our committees in many cases people who know the countries which I have mentioned, and who have spent some time living there. It surprises me that they have not asked more questions about such a large expenditure as half a million dollars. Obviously, they all know where those places are and why we should have some representation there. They are familiar with these situations, but I and the general Canadian public are not. This is certainly a place where we could cut off an awful lot of fat.

In closing, Mr. Chairman, I was interested to read in the newspaper yesterday that a former minister of this House, who in my opinion was a very competent minister of trade and commerce, said that unless he could get some kind of arrangement with his former colleagues in the cabinet, he personally would set up a consortium that would trade with other countries across the word. He would set up a trading agency on behalf of entrepreneurs in this country and conduct business with traders in other countries. The minister should be asked what he anticipates such an agency would be doing. Are we helping peoples poorer than we are by establishing large diplomatic buildings in their countries? What is the purpose of the expenditures we make?

Many hon. members who have attended meetings of the United Nations realize we are not the powerful country that we sometimes think we are. The simple reason for that is that we have not given leadership to the third power nations due to our close association with our great neighbour to the south, that great neighbour who sometimes dominates us. We have not given leadership to the South American countries. We have not given leadership to the Asiatic countries. Yet we seek to impress the Canadian public that we are doing a wonderful job by the establishment of huge monuments in those countries. We are spending a fantastic amount of money on such projects. It seems to me that all we are doing is providing a lot of salaries for a lot of people. I think that an appointment to one of these overseas posts would even be a softer job than an appointment to the other place, provided I did not have weak kidneys and was not susceptible to cirrhosis of the liver.

We have a contribution to make to countries across the world. We have an obligation to participate, but I would like to know if Zambia, for instance, is going to build similar kinds of facilities in our country as we are building in Lusaka. I would like to know if India is going to build the same kind of facilities in Canada that we are putting up in New Delhi. Will Pakistan do so? In my opinion these countries will not do that. I live on the street where most of those countries have their embassies in Ottawa. That is where they conduct their business, and where occasionally they get blown up. I would like the minister to explain why we should put on this kind of face across the world, without showing some accomplishment for the Canadian people, or some accomplishment for the people we are supposed to be helping. I have looked over the list of overseas investments and foreign aid contributions that we make. I am proud of those contributions. For a country our size we have done an excellent job, but I do not think the capital expenditures that we put into palatial edifices in other countries do anything for the Canadian people or for the interests of Canada. If Canadians knew about this they would be opposed to it.

The Assistant Deputy Chairman: Is the committee ready for the question?

Some hon. Members: Question.

Amendment (Mr. Howard) negatived: Yeas, 6; nays, 72.

The Assistant Deputy Chairman: We will now proceed to the consideration of item No. 1a, Department of Finance.

Mr. Howard: Mr. Chairman, I did not realize that we had left External Affairs. I wonder if I can now be given the information that the parliamentary secretary was going to give us previously, but which he did not give us.

The Assistant Deputy Chairman: Order. If I understand the situation correctly, we are still on External Affairs. I recognize the Parliamentary Secretary to the Secretary of State for External Affairs.

Mr. Howard: Mr. Chairman, I had not really completed what I started to say. I repeat that the information was not given previously, and now I cast an eye of suspicion on those righteous hon. gentlemen to my right who are bent on squandering all the money they can without thinking of the Canadian taxpayer.

Mr. De Bané: Under heading No. 8, Mr. Chairman, the sum of $190,000 is for the purchase and acquisition of four residences in Lusaka. Under heading No. 9, $300,000, that amount can be broken into three, of which $125,000 is for the purchase of furniture and furnishings for the chancellory, the official residence and staff quarters in Lusaka; another amount of $115,000 is for the purchase of furniture, furnishings and appliances for the chancellery, the official residence and the staff quarters, and two vehicles in Atlanta; a third amount of $60,500 is for the purchase of furniture and furnishings for the chancellery and staff quarters, and one vehicle in the city of Budapest.

Mr. Benjamin: Could the minister explain why we need an office in Atlanta?

Mr. Sharp: If I may be permitted to answer some of the questions that were asked by the hon. gentleman who has just spoken, Mr. Chairman, I will begin by saying that the offices in Lusaka are being opened for reasons that will commend themselves to members of his party, particularly the hon. member for Greenwood who has been urging the government for a very long time to establish a High Commissioner's office there. Lusaka is the capital of a country, which I am sure he would want to support, which is beleaguered by South Africa, Rhodesia and other countries with whose racial policies we do not have very much sympathy. This is the fundamental reason and one which I know will commend itself to hon. members of his party.

On Budapest, we have also been urged from both sides of the House that we should not be governed by ideological considerations when establishing our embassies around the world, and that we should be opening offices in eastern European countries even though their ideologies do not agree with ours. I am sure that is a view that would commend itself to the hon. member and his party.

As for Atlanta, I am sure the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce will support me in saying that this is in the centre of an area with which we are doing increased business and it is necessary for us to be able to service it.

Mr. Peters: Mr. Chairman, I appreciate the statement from the Secretary of State for External Affairs, but I do not entirely accept his reasons why we should support this item. I am not interested in the arguments about whether this one is a good one or that one is a good one; my main argument was that the minister himself mentioned Zanzibar—

Mr. Sharp: Zambia.

Mr. Peters: One country is the same as another to me. I have no objection to that, Mr. Chairman; most Canadians do not know where these countries are because they keep changing their names. The point I was trying to make to the minister was that it might be to our advantage to do what other countries are doing in Canada and that is to rent the premises. This gives some flexibility in where the representatives can be located. I am thinking particularly of the representation that is being made by many of the attachés that are in Montreal, Toronto, Vancouver and other locations. Their purpose in being there is to do business with that particular area.

In many of these establishments abroad we are talking about diplomatic establishments of a permanent nature. It seems to me that to have one in each of these countries is a luxury that most Canadians would not necessarily support. Whether we have representation there or not is a different story. We are making capital expenditures, we are building buildings and to my knowledge this is not the normal procedure for countries dealing with Canada. Many of them are operating from rented residences in Ottawa. There are some permanent ones like the French Embassy, the British High Commission and the Russian Embassy, but I do not know of any others in that category. This is why I make the suggestion that we should be considering different methods than capital expenditures in these countries.

Mr. Sharp: As my parliamentary secretary has said, the only place that we are buying a residence is in Lusaka. If my hon. friend had been there he would know it is not a place where we can rent any suitable accommodation. It is a rapidly growing small town and it is necessary for us to buy a residence. It has been our experience over the years that it is cheaper to buy than to rent if we intend to be there permanently. In the city of Ottawa, the rule is to own the premises rather than to rent because our friends from other countries have found it cheaper to buy than to pay rapidly increasing rent for this kind of accommodation.

The Assistant Deputy Chairman: Is consideration of Vote 5a completed?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

The Assistant Deputy Chairman: If so, we will now proceed to Vote 1a, the Finance Department.

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Korchinski: Mr. Chairman—

The Assistant Deputy Chairman: Is the hon. member for Mackenzie rising on a point of order?

Mr. Korchinski: No, Mr. Chairman, I just want you to repeat that. I do not have it at this particular time.

The Assistant Deputy Chairman: I will repeat, we are now on Vote 1a, the Finance Department. We are proceeding now to Vote 5a—that is finished. Now, we are going on to item 30a, Industry, Trade and Commerce.

Some hon. Members: Carried.

Mr. Knight: No.

The Assistant Deputy Chairman: The hon. member for Assiniboia.

Mr. Knight: I hope, Mr. Chairman, that we have now hit the estimates related to the funding of the building of hopper cars, an amount in the neighbourhood of some $48 million less $7,700,000. This issue arose last spring as a result of the impending general election when the minister, hopeful of gaining some support in the west, decided that he ought to go out with a program to build some 2,000 hopper cars to carry grain. It was suggested, sometimes by farm organizations and sometimes by members, that although the need for rolling stock to keep the grain moving to market was realized, it was opportunistic of the federal government to buy the rolling stock and supply it to the railroads when it was the duty of the railroads, under the Railway Act, to supply the rolling stock.

If this gesture were followed further, the government could move into the business of supplying hopper cars to move potash out of Saskatchewan or lumber chips from the northern part of British Columbia or to move goods anywhere in Canada. We could get into the business of supplying the railways with rolling stock. With $48 million, we bought 2,000 hopper cars to roll on the tracks in western Canada. The question that arises now is how long will the government pursue the policy of having the people of Canada serve the railways? When will the railways be put in the position of serving the people of Canada? That is the fundamental question. The minister can have the grain councils and his other representatives, but the fundamental thing is that when he goes out of his way to buy 2,000 hopper cars and supply them to the railroads, the government is failing to make the railroads live up to their responsibilities. They must serve the farmers of the west, whether in the riding of Assiniboia, Regina-Lake Centre or Saskatoon-Humboldt. It was learned that in those parts of the west where the 2,000 hopper cars are to operate, 50 per cent of the track will not carry them. They cannot be used. What a reflection that is on the railway system of this country. Fifty per cent of track in western Canada cannot be used. I suggest that in Saskatchewan the figure is a great deal higher. In that province, it will be difficult to use hopper cars for the carrying of grain.

The other night we heard the minister in charge of the Wheat Board and the hon. member for Qu'Appelle-Moose Mountain arguing about policy. It was an excellent debate, each member being right about the policies of the other. What has happened with respect to hopper cars is a prime example of what hon. members were talking about. The central government has developed a special relationship with the railroads. When they run into trouble, the government bails them out, mostly with grants of money. When the minister in charge of the Wheat Board was asked what he would do about the question of hopper cars, he suggested he would leave the matter in the hands of the railroads.

There is no clearcut agreement between the Canadian Wheat Board and the railroads with regard to paying for the cost of operation of those 2,000 hopper cars. There is no kind of maintenance agreement and we do not really know who will pay for the maintenance. I suspect we shall learn, when we get all the facts, that the Canadian Wheat Board and therefore the farmers of western Canada, will pay for the cost of operating those 2,000 hopper cars. It doesn't matter whether the Grits or the Tories are in charge of the railways of this country, whether the hon. member for Vegreville is the minister of transport, or the present minister, whose constituency I forget. It would not make a tinker's damn of difference, as there is no agreement. Oh yes, there was an initial agreement to allow the railroads to use the cars. That makes sense. When you buy 2,000 hopper cars and present them to the railroads, it makes sense to use them. The railroads are using them. Who knows how much the railroads are making out of the business. Who knows what the Wheat Board will have to pay and, therefore, indirectly the western producer.

When it was pointed out that 50 per cent of the track in western Canada cannot carry the hopper cars, the minister said we will tell the railroads that they must improve those lines in order to use the hopper cars. The minister knows as well as I do that the state of the track gives the railroads a perfectly legitimate excuse to do what they intend to do in 1975, namely, abandon certain rail lines. They intend to abandon them and say that certain railway lines are not up to par and cannot be used for moving grain. This merely presents the railroads with a good excuse for abandoning lines. In Assiniboia constituency there are 1,170 miles of track. Of that total, 605 miles, used for carrying 22.5 million bushels of wheat will be abandoned by 1975 unless the government proposes an alternative policy. Mr. Chairman, in 1975 the moratorium on rail line abandonment in western Canada will be lifted by the Canadian Transport Commission.

During the election campaign, the former minister of finance was made the head of the Canadian Transport Commission. That really cheered us up in western Canada. The Conservatives, during the election campaign, wanted the head of the Canadian Transport Commission to be fired. That is a good idea, but it really does not matter because if the Tories were in power they would, after firing the present chairman of the Canadian Transport Commission, instal in his place the president of the CPR; there would be no difference in policy. So, in 1975 some of the recommendations of the McPherson Commission, which was set up by the Tory government, will be carried out either by a Grit government or a Tory government, unless we once again operate in a House of minorities. Barring that possibility, 605 miles of track in Assiniboia will be abandoned. The elevator capacity on those lines is in the neighbourhood of 11.7 million bushels of grain.

I listened to members of the Tory party speaking in this committee on the agriculture estimates. They mentioned transportation. I know some of them belong to a particular type of organization that talks of abandoning 30, 40 or 50 country elevators in any given area. I also know that in Assiniboia constituency during the election the Conservative candidate said, "We will not abandon any of your rail lines. We will not permit the 5,100 farmers served by branch lines in Assiniboia to be left without rail service." That candidate and others suggested that the government should build 18 inland terminals and close certain country elevators. Farmers in western Canada can put two and two together. They should realize that the Tory party and some of the members who support it, particularly in Saskatchewan, want nothing more than the wholesale abandonment of those lines. That policy is not different from the one followed by this government in railine abandonment. Let the hon. member for Vegreville not doubt that the Tory government would abandon those lines. We have listened to his party spokesmen and know what they recommend in Saskatchewan in terms of rail line abandonment.

I could educate members from British Columbia as to why some of us in the west do not vote for the Tory party.

Mr. Mazankowski: You are fighting for your political life, and you know it.

Mr. Knight: Mr. Chairman, when I ran in the byelection they said I was fighting for my political life, that the Tories or Grits would get me, but I took care of them. In the general election I was also told that the Tories or Grits would get me, I was too young; yet here I am. I took care of them. I tell my hon. friend that in the next general election, in Assiniboia, or whatever the name of the riding may be, Bill Knight—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

An hon. Member: Let's talk about hopper cars.

The Assistant Deputy Chairman: Order, please. The hon. member knows the rules. He should refer to the item before us.

Mr. Knight: Mr. Chairman, I wanted members of the committee to know of the difficulties they will encounter in presenting certain policies on transportation to the producers of Assiniboia. Those policies with respect to transport interest all the producers of western Canada. I think I have made my point.

In Assiniboia an experiment in trucking grain was undertaken. Frankly, it was a good experiment. After cleaning some barley, it was trucked from inland terminals right through to Vancouver. I say to those who feel that it would be better to truck grain to large terminals, then load it unto unit trains and move it to the coast after it has been screened, that we have not been given a detailed cost study of such a project. All we were told, Mr. Chairman, was that this process was costing the farmer more than if he were using the railways and country elevators. I do not think that is good enough. I think the minister in charge of the Wheat Board and those members of that "think tank", the Canada Grains Council, should appear before the Committee on Agriculture and explain to western producers or their representatives what exactly are the cost factors involved in the running of the system. What are the cost factors in using trucks, in using hopper cars and in using unit trains to run to the west coast. I do not think we have been given an adequate explanation.

• (1500)

An inland terminal using a trucking method can be used along with hopper cars and unit trains. This might save producers money and increase the efficiency of moving grain. There is certainly some room to allow for the movement of a top grade of wheat. The sorry situation dealing with this estimate on hopper cars points out the bankruptcy of the national government, regardless of which old-line party is in power, in terms of producing a transportation policy for the producers of western Canada and, in fact, people in all of Canada.

Mr. Nielsen: Vote against the item.

Mr. Knight: It is no solution to merely offer much needed hopper cars. That is a piecemeal solution. It is another subsidy. Once a year we give the CNR a subsidy. Last year we gave both the CNR and CPR a subsidy by supplying them with cars. This points out that there is no national direction in the area of transportation.

The Speech from the Throne set out that there will be a meeting in western Canada to discuss our transportation problems. The Minister of Regional Economic Expansion forgets that when he was Minister of Transport not once did he speak of equalizing freight rates in this country so that those in the west could develop secondary manufacturing industry. Not once did he mention an equalization of the freight rate structure.

What we need is a federal government that will tackle the railways in relation to providing service to the producers. We need a railroad commitment of providing rolling stock, not a government that bails them out when the going gets rough, gives them 2,000 hopper cars and still allows them to lease cars to the United States. The government allows the railways to use Canadian cars to haul American grain over Canadian rail lines to American ports to go to American customers. They do not even know about it, much less care. You cannot build a national transportation policy by adhering to the idea that in order to save yourself in a general election you should supply 2,000 hopper cars to western Canada.

What we need is to attack the problem of upgrading the track and the elevator system. There is no question that between Weyburn and Yellow Grass there are about four elevators within sight of each other. There is no argument there. Where the argument comes is in an over-all program such as in a task force report or the report coming out of this "think tank" called the Canada Grains Council, or the Canada Grains Group which came up with the idea of banning them and not keeping up the track. That is where the area of massive transportation in western Canada falls down. With the removal of the pools from the Canada Grains Council as well the National Farmers'

Union, it might as well fold up its tent and go home: the Canada Grains Council might as well shut down because it will be representing only a very limited group in our society. They certainly represent the private interest.

I congratulate the hon. member for Churchill for raising the subject of the port of Churchill, something which is dear to my heart. I have never seen a port which has been more discriminated against or more ignored. It is absolutely incredible. The Dalglish Shipping Company, one of the major shippers in and out of that port, stated it would no longer go into the port at a certain time in the fall because it was not kept up to date. Eventually we will be faced with the situation where no one will use the port of Churchill as an alternate route for moving grain out of western Canada.

We must also develop a second route through the Canadian rockies. Last winter the mountain route was plugged and the grain was not being moved. At that time the minister in charge of the Wheat Board came up with the fantastic idea—

Mr. Mazankowski: How about the unions?

Mr. Knight: I will get to that. My colleagues will enjoy that. The minister in charge of the Wheat Board suddenly went to Vancouver and made a great to-do while standing in front of one of the terminals. Who did he take along with him? Almost all the Liberal candidates in the province of Saskatchewan. I do not know how they got there or back.

Mr. Nielsen: In a hopper car.

Mr. Knight: They were all there. They sent home pictures. I want to say to them that they did not learn very much about the blockage of the movement of grain in the mountains by flying over them. Two and a half weeks later I tried another method. I rode through those mountains on a passenger train. I could see what was blocking the movement of grain; it was large boulders.

Mr. Lang: Did you take along a shovel?

Mr. Knight: I should have taken along a shovel. I could have done more good than the minister in charge of the Wheat Board.

Mr. Lang: You could use a shovel right now.

Mr. Knight: Sooner or later an alternate route through the Rocky Mountains must be developed. This is fundamental to the movement of western grain. This brings me back to my first point. We in western Canada have suffered under two gentlemen who have been in charge of our most basic product, wheat. Each tries to collect the little bouquet of salesman of the year. One got a group in Regina to name him. I am referring to the hon. member for Qu'Appelle-Moose Mountain and the minister from Saskatoon-Humboldt. They beat their chests and make great pronouncements.

An hon. Member: The crown prices.

Mr. Knight: It is the crown price against the old wheat king. They beat their chests and cry aloud, "We sell the wheat." Well, we do not care who sells the wheat. We appreciate the fact wheat is sold, but I say to both these gentlemen from the old-line parties that this solution is not good enough.

The minister in charge of the Wheat Board in this House of Commons told the farmers to diversify and not just grow wheat. When you look at the estimates, you find that the grassland incentive program to get farmers out of growing what—I think the hon. member for Swift Current-Maple Creek will be interested in this—will have only $4 million in the fund by 1974. The minister says he helped the farmers to diversify. He and his good friend, who used to be the premier of Saskatchewan and whose name I will not mention—

The Chairman: Order, please. The time allotted to the hon. member has expired. He may continue only with the unanimous consent of the committee. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. Nielsen: Mr. Chairman, I rise on a point of order. We made the offer at the outset—

The Chairman: There is not unanimous consent within the committee.

• (1510)

Mr. Nielsen: Will Your Honour hear my point of order? At the outset of the day's business we made an offer to complete this bill in all its stages by three o'clock. This being so, and it appearing that the NDP is filibustering, we feel we cannot give unanimous consent.

Mr. Knight: On the point of order, I find it incredible that the hon. member for Yukon should take the line he does. I suggest it is out of order to imply that one group or another is filibustering. I want him to know that rural transportation in the constituency of Assiniboia is a very important subject no matter what the official spokesman for the Conservative party may think.

The Chairman: Order, please. My suspicions were perfectly right; I should have proceeded at once to recognize the hon. member for Mackenzie. I now do so.

Mr. Korchinski: I do not know what the official spokesman, or whatever he may be, is thinking in his own mind but I do have a few comments to make without conferring with him. Nor do I rise at the prompting of the hon. member for Assiniboia, though I do think some of the observations he made should be answered and that the opportunity should be taken to acquaint hon. members opposite with other circumstances which arise.

This having been said, I believe the hon. member should be fair and acknowledge that the minister who authorized the ordering of the boxcars did so with more than just politics in mind. I think he really was concerned about putting some of these railway lines into efficient operation. The trouble is, he was putting a lot of the other rural lines out of operation at the same time.

If the minister tells us that the railways will be persuaded to improve their lines, I am not going to believe him. It is true the railways have been given a $40 million grant by way of boxcars, but can anyone imagine them rushing to spend two or three million dollars on rights of way? They will obviously not be much impressed by the type of argument which the minister uses. They will take no action.

What will the railways do? They will simply close off those rural lines as soon as possible. They have already given an indication of the branches they intend to close. It is not a secret. The minister knows this. Can he tell us, for example, of any lines which the railways have stated they intend to improve? Not one. They will improve none of these lines. What the Minister of Justice may tell us in the House of Commons is beside the point. No extra money will be put in either before or after 1975. The fact has to be accepted that the lines will be maintained until 1975. I had a very interesting experience in connection with the Chelan line. I had to challenge the president of the Canadian National, Mr. McMillan, on that particular point in order to get a bridge rebuilt.

Does the minister think the government will be able to convince the companies to rebuild the rights of way, putting in more ballast or whatever is necessary throughout the whole of the system in this area? I come from an old railway family. My father worked hard on the railway and I grew up to understand the railway business. I appreciate the difficulties the companies have experienced. But I say the minister's assurance that the railways will change their attitude is not worth a pinch of salt. Why should they suddenly reverse the position they took five years ago when they prepared documents for the Transport Commission specifying the lines they wanted to close? Nothing the government has presented to them will change their minds. The provincial governments have done nothing except document the fact that their action will cost the farmers more money.

The Minister of Justice, who speaks for the Wheat Board, has had to account for the $40 million expenditure on boxcars. Originally he said it was $48 million, and that is the figure that registers in the mind of the public. Now he says it is $40 million. So he has done a heck of a lot for them. But what has he really done? He is speeding up the closure of the lines which are not able to accept those cars.

There is no way in which the minister can bring pressure to bear upon his colleague, the Minister of Transport. Witness what happened yesterday. The Minister of Agriculture did not appear before the committee in defence of farmers. He gave an explanation to justify his absence. But the whole cabinet, 23 or 26 members, put pressure on the Minister of Agriculture and he could not be present to accept the fact that farmers need an increase in some of the prices they have been getting. In the last few days the Minister of Agriculture has been subjected to pressure from other members of the cabinet, including the Minister of Justice, the minister from Saskatchewan.

An hon. Member: You don't know what you are talking about.

[Mr. Korchinski.]

Mr. Korchinski: I am sorry to say so, but what I have said is the situation. Can the government tell us that up to this point they have initiated talks on this question or made a written request to the railway companies? If they have not, the closure of these lines will take place in 1975.

• (1520)

Although I think this whole thing was started by a group of people who felt it was necessary, the government has the final decision. It is the government in power which has the right to stop this closure in its tracks. I cannot simplify it for hon. members any more than that. The fact is that we must keep these railways in operation. I suggest there is only one thing for the minister in charge of the Wheat Board to do, and that is to divert these cars from the main line to the other lines.

Mr. Lang: Nonsense.

Mr. Korchinski: The minister has done nothing like that, and he now admits it.

Mr. Lang: No, I did not. I said "Nonsense."

Mr. Korchinski: If the minister says it is nonsense, I will accept his word for it. Nonsense is nonsense if it comes from the Minister of Justice. The minister will admit that he has no jurisdiction over the railways or over the Minister of Transport. Is the minister going to bring pressure on the Minister of Transport to use heavier steel for these lines? I have a close connection with the railways because my father was a rail line maintenance man, and I know that if the Minister of Justice cannot get the Minister of Transport to use heavier rails we are going to be stuck with smaller cars, which in turn will mean less movement of freight.

A few years ago the Minister of Justice made a speech in which he said there would be only five or six terminal points across Canada. The minister must explain—

Mr. Lang: A point of order, Mr. Chairman.

The Chairman: Order. The Minister of Justice is rising on a point of order.

Mr. Lang: I regret to interrupt the hon. member, but I know there is a tendency, not only on the hon. member's part but also on the part of his colleagues, to suggest that if I sit silent I approve of what is said. Therefore I must make the point that at no time have I favoured a system that would use a small number of inland terminals. The suggestion has been made along that line by some people, and it is one of the proposals studied in the grain handling and transportation report, but I have personally never advocated at any time that particular configuration.

The Chairman: That is not a point of order but a matter for debate. The minister can make his contribution in the regular way. I recognize the hon. member for Mackenzie.

Mr. Korchinski: I accept the minister's comment, Mr. Chairman, but I assure the committee that the burden of our studies in the agricultural committee during the last few years has been to the effect that the minister did make that speech and we used it as a reference point. We are not going to stray from our argument in that regard. If he wants to change his suggestion and make it 40 or 50 terminals, I accept it, but the minister did make a speech in which he guaranteed there would be something like 40 inland terminals—

Mr. Lang: Never.

Mr. Korchinski: That speech was made about five years ago. If that were the case, the railways would not be justified in using 60, 70, or 100-pound rails, or whatever the weight is, since the minister has indicated that certain lines are going to be closed. After all, the railways are not stupid; they will latch on to every bit of information they can get. They will not do any more than they have to. I remember at one point the railways had decided to build a bridge until it was discovered they had to maintain rail service at the same time. Although the government can put pressure on the railways to do something, it cannot guarantee it will be done.

We have seen closing of rail lines and of stations. Although the government has said it is going to put pressure on the railways, where is the estimate to indicate that this will be done or that any particular line will be improved? The people are being fooled; it is as simple as that. We are not being honest with the people and telling them what is going to happen. I am sure the railways will not be allowed to close down the line between Keewatin and Kenora, or the Tisdale to Reserve line. I should like the Minister of Transport or the Minister of Justice to tell the committee now how much money they are going to put up. I hear hon. members laughing, but if these closures happen in their areas they will not laugh so much.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

• (1530)

Mr. Korchinski: You can hee-haw at this particular time—

An. hon. Member: Order.

Mr. Korchinski: —but I tell the committee that nowhere in western Canada is this matter being greeted with hee-haws. No Liberal who would go out there and read this speech which indicates that they hee-hawed. That would not endear them to the people there. I am not too concerned because I knew exactly what the reaction would be. The reaction is a natural one when you do not give the farmer an opportunity to reduce his costs of production or delivery costs.

The Chairman: Order. I regret to interrupt the hon. member, but the time allotted to him has expired. The point of order raised a moment ago, to the effect that members are asked to address the Chair, is a perfectly proper one. When one hears the word "you" being used, one expects that the words are being addressed to the Chair rather than to a member on the opposite side. Such a member should be referred to by constituency.

Mr. Stewart (Marquette): Mr. Speaker, I should like to make a few remarks on these estimates because the movement of grain is of great importance to western Canada. The future plans of the government and its transportation policies are being questioned by many people. Not only do they affect the largest industry on the prairies, agriculture, but they also affect the future of many rural communities.

Last year, when the government announced it intended to purchase 2,000 hopper cars to improve the movement of grain in the Prairies, there was a great fanfare from the government to the effect that this would be a major step in solving the grain handling problem in western Canada. We all know the problems Canada has faced in respect of moving grain to world markets in the last few years. Ships have been waiting for grain in Vancouver. Because of severe weather conditions, according to the government, we have seen grain move at a snail's pace to the west coast. All these delays were at great cost to the farmer and also affected our future export markets for grain.

It seems odd to me that the government waited until an election year to announce the purchase of these hopper cars when these problems had been facing us for many years. So far as I am concerned, this was just another smokescreen by this government to cover up its mismanagement of western agriculture. It sounded great in other areas of Canada that the government finally was assisting western farmers by an expenditure of $48 million. Did the farmers really benefit from the purchase of these hopper cars? I would question this and the farmers question it. I feel the greatest benefactors were the railway companies and the foundries in eastern Canada which built the hopper cars.

At the time the announcement of the purchase was made, we in the opposition asked the government how much trackage in western Canada would be capable of handling the hopper cars. The government said that we were just spreading gloom and that we should not worry. This year, when the minister responsible for the Canadian Wheat Board appeared before the committee on agriculture, he admitted that less than 50 per cent of the railway tracks in western Canada are capable of handling these hopper cars.

At the present time nothing concerns western farmers more than the question of rail line abandonment. This affects many communities in the Prairies. By its plan to purchase these hopper cars I say the government is merely accelerating its program of rail line abandonment which most farmers strongly oppose. We hope the minister will explain why this program is being accelerated. How can areas that are fighting rail line abandonment survive if the tracks are not capable of handling hopper cars? Why did the government not tell the CPR and the CNR that it would purchase these hopper cars provided they upgraded their roadbed and tracks so that the majority of areas would benefit from this mode of transportation? The railway companies have an obligation to the Canadian people: they are heavily subsidized by the taxpayers of Canada, yet in many areas they are not prepared to offer any kind of service.

We know that most branch lines are protected until 1975. Every year the railways accept a subsidy and at the same time decrease service on their branch lines knowing that after 1975 they will just close them down. They should be using these subsidies to upgrade their branch lines, thus fulfilling their obligation to Canada. It is time the government took a strong stand with the railway companies. Instead, the government protects the railways. For a change, let us protect the farmers.

The railways are making a fool of the government. Every winter and spring they allow no traffic on many branch lines because in the winter they say snow creates problems and in the spring they say their roadbeds are too soft to stand traffic. Because of this, some lines are closed for four to six months of the year. Then they appear before the transport committee and say that their tonnage is away down on such a line and that it should be permanently closed. The railways cannot deny this. At the present time, in the riding of Marquette, this is the situation in respect of some lines. This winter, because of the light snowfall in Manitoba, snow is no problem; the roadbeds are frozen solid and can handle most trains. Yet we see no trains using these lines. The government should demand from the railways action in respect of these lines.

I have knowledge of cases where either the Manitoba pool or the United Grain Growers wish to improve present grain elevator facilities and even build new ones. However, construction is delayed for one of two reasons. Either the railways will not guarantee how long they will service the line, or the proposed cost of putting a spur line into the elevator is not realistic. This is just a charade on the part of the railways, and unfortunately the farmer is the loser.

During the last few years the government has given the impression that it wants only 50 delivery points for grain in all of western Canada. I maintain that the purchase of these hopper cars is only the first step in this program. The end result will be long hauls for many farmers. The government should announce its intentions. It should announce a program now, as we urged last session, under which farmers would be paid for storage of farm stored grain. Despite what some experts say, Canada must have large supplies of grain on hand if it is to survive in world markets.

The government should also announce a program to assist farmers who have extremely long hauls to elevators. In areas where there is good and sound justification for the closing of a delivery point—and these are few—farmers should be compensated if the result is that they will have to haul their grain great distances.

One fear expressed by many farmers about the purchase of hopper cars is, who will pay for the maintenance of these cars? Will it be the railways, or the government, or will this expense come out of the farmers' Wheat Board account? They also wonder whether the government has received any assurance that the railways will use these hopper cars for grain only, or whether they will be used for other commodities. It is my understanding that the CPR and CNR presently are wrecking 2,000 boxcars. What is the reason for this? Could these cars not be kept to meet any emergency movement of grain?

In closing, let me again tell the government that it is time it got tough with the CPR and the CNR. If the purchase of these hopper cars is to be truly effective, the railways must upgrade their present tracks so all areas of the west will benefit. For a change, the farmer rather than the railways should be protected.

Mr. Lang: Mr. Chairman, I must deal with a number of issues which have been raised this afternoon. A number of the issues on the subject of hopper cars and the rail transportation system were gone over in the very lengthy debate we had on the first item in this schedule when members of the official opposition and members of the NDP spoke one after the other, presumably in competition for the filibustering role.

Mr. Stanfield: Do you want to get your estimates passed?

Mr. Lang: The question is, who pays the price? I see the Leader of the Opposition is trying to blackmail me by threatening not to pass the estimates, after two or three days' discussion by members of these two parties have come to naught. I do have to deal with some of the matters which have been raised. I would appreciate it if the Leader of the Opposition would not mind my attempting to deal with issues which are of key interest to prairie farmers, namely, the movement, handling and transportation of grain.

The item before us deals with the purchase of hopper cars. One or two hon. members, including the hon. member for Marquette who has just finished speaking, asked what benefit this has been to farmers. We have also been asked why this was not done earlier. I am not quite sure how they would like us to proceed on this matter. Should we not have done it at all, or should we have done it earlier? We have the dilemma that we must have been right or wrong or right too late. The interesting point, of course, which hon. members forget is that it was only when we had gone into the feed grain market in a big way—something that had never happened before—that we began to move volumes of grain which were likely to test the capacity of our delivery system in a regular fashion.

Hon. members may think that we should have a delivery system which is at all times ready to handle any volume of grain which we may have to move at any particular point in time. That is not sound economics, which I hope they will appreciate. You do not build a system to handle two billion bushels of grain if chances are that once in 150 years you might get to that kind of volume. You build for the realities, for the likelihoods.

We had a system which we were told could stretch itself and move 700 million bushels of export grain, and we stretched it to that limit. When we wanted to get exports up to 800 million bushels of grain, we ensured that additional facilities were there in order to move to that limit. We were getting to the point where I and the government could see that if the Wheat Board chose to move a particular volume of wheat and barley into market in the coming crop year, we might have some question about the ability of the existing system as it was operating to handle the grain. Notice those words: the existing system as it was operating and its ability to handle the grain.

The problem was that with the rail equipment in use, and with the turnaround formula for that equipment, there could be some finite limits put upon the volume of grain which could be handled, given the problems of trying to move more in some months and less in other months which are natural to a selling and delivery system. We were told by the railroads that with their equipment and with the elevator system running on a five-day week in certain areas rather than on a seven-day week, the maximum of the handling and turnaround volume might be just above the 800 million bushel figure which we had achieved in the 1971-72 crop year.

This was true even after we had done a few things to improve the system. We put a block shipping system into effect which allowed for far faster use of equipment. We put a co-ordinating system into effect at the terminals, and a pooling of cars at the terminals, which allowed a far faster turnaround of equipment at that point. In every way we were getting the maximum use out of equipment. However, we were in a dilemma when we said to the railways that the Wheat Board might want to move so much wheat and barley so that along with the volume of other grains including rapeseed we may have the challenge of moving 900 or 950 million bushels, or even a billion bushels of grain in a crop year.

In such a case, what about the equipment to do it? We were talking to the railways in terms of our view that it is their basic obligation to have in place equipment to handle grain in an ordinary way; not necessarily to handle an extra 100 million bushels suddenly in a month or a week but their ability to do so in a regular way. The railroads did not deny, in this confrontation, that this was a basic obligation on their part. What they did say was that they had no natural obligation to have equipment to handle that grain from the elevators on a five-day week basis. If they had enough equipment so that if the elevators would operate on a seven-day week basis, they could easily handle it.

The dilemma is that in this particular area you do not have ordinary negotiations between the shipper of a product and the railways. As difficult as those negotiations may be at the best of times, you do not have ordinary kinds of negotiations between the two parties about the price at which they will handle the product and, therefore, the manner in which they will handle it, because there is the Crowsnest pass rate, a fixed rate at which grain is handled. Therefore agreement could not be achieved between the railways and the elevator companies.

It was not a case of the railways saying, "We will handle it at such and such a rate if you work on a seven-day week, and at a higher rate if you work on a five-day week." There was no such bargaining nor willingness on the part of elevator companies to accept the challenge of the railways. I asked the elevator companies to accept that challenge and to operate on a seven-day week and then tell the railways that they should handle the grain. It may be that we could have sorted out that question after a year or so of arguing, but I was not sure of it and I therefore asked my colleagues to provide money from the general revenue to put the hopper cars into place so we could be sure we would be able to move the grain which the Wheat Board may want to move.

The hon. member for Marquette said—completely erroneously; and he was wrong in a number of respects—that I said something before the committee. But I was not there at all. He also made reference to some comments which he and his colleagues, he suggested, had made a year or so ago when hopper cars were being bought. If he will check that, he will find that they did not say that either. It was well known to us that the existing rail lines could not, to a very large extent, carry the hopper cars. We were also aware of the fact that a significant number of the most important lines, those which carry the largest part of the grain, could in fact handle the hopper cars.

Hon. members seem to be aghast at the fact that the lines cannot carry the hopper cars. Again, what a strange mentality! They were surprised that we suddenly needed the hopper cars to start moving 900 million bushels of grain, when no one thought of more than 700 million or 800 million bushels of grain until two years ago. Now they somehow think that the lines should have been able to carry the hopper cars, when until that point no one had in fact thought in terms of running hopper cars over those lines.

Mr. Knight: Mr. Chairman, since the minister has pointed out to the committee that we are discussing a serious matter, would he like to fill us in with any information he may have that would be of service to those of us who have asked very serious questions related to this matter? Since he said that the hopper cars were there to facilitate the movement of up to 900 million bushels, I wonder whether he could give us an outline or table in the House an outline of when those cars came into operation at different intervals, and how much grain they have moved until now.

Mr. Lang: Mr. Chairman, I would be very glad to supply the information to the hon. member personally, or indeed to table it if that is his wish. There are now about 1,700 hopper cars in use. They are coming into use during the winter months, which is not the key period in terms of their operational use, but they are quite a help in getting grain to Vancouver, for instance, in a given time if difficulties arise there. So already they are acting as a reserve.

The real opportunity to prove themselves will come with the peak movement of grain in the summer months. I say again that if the Wheat Board chooses to sell that amount of grain that will require a peak movement, then we want to be in possession of a transportation system that will allow it to move all the grain necessary.

Mr. Korchinski: On another question—

Mr. Lang: I shall accept questions afterwards, if the hon. member doesn't mind. Hon. members expressed surprise that some lines could not carry the hopper cars. We have had discussions with the Wheat Board and the railways about putting the hopper cars on lines which can easily carry them and have the cars turned around as quickly as possible so that we can achieve maximum movement of grain more easily, and indeed test some new things in the movement of grain.

Hon. members have asked, what about upgrading the lines? This question did not really arise until we got to the point where we were going to have the hopper cars. In fact, the elevator companies had not raised all of the spouts to deal with hopper cars, but now they are raising the spouts in order to be able to load the cars. It is not surprising that the elevator companies waited to do this, but they are doing it readily because they want to use those hopper cars. They are eager to use them. They compete with one another for the use of these cars.

It is now possible for us to say to the railways, "We have the hopper cars in position so now improve some important lines to carry them." To give an example, Mr. Chairman, consider the line between Rosetown and Kindersley, a line which in my opinion should be brought up to a standard that can carry hopper cars. These cars can be run on that line on the western end and on the eastern end, but there is a link-piece between on which they cannot be run. Clearly, the challenge there is to bring that line up to standard.

I have said previously, and I repeat now, that the government has tried to take this issue about the kind of rail and grain handling system that we really require out of the narrow range of both petty party politics and the interests of the railways and elevator companies, and out of the hands of other individual groups. We have tried to reveal the facts and to make those facts available to provincial governments, the railways, elevator companies, and particularly to grain producers, so they can face up to the fact that with certain changes they may be able to have their grain handled at far lower rates and thus get the benefit of changes in the system.

I hope hon. members will not misunderstand my objective. My objective is to see that any benefits which come from changes in the system do not get lost in the system, as happened so often in the past when individual elevators were closed and individual branch lines were abandoned. The producers living in those areas lost by those actions. My objective is to have the benefits passed on to the producers. Indeed, I have indicated that the provision of some compensation in the period of adjustment would be a good thing. I have not heard that suggestion taken up eagerly by hon. members opposite or by groups and various organizations on the prairies, perhaps because some of them are concerned that they would lose something if that particular matter were proceeded with. I submit that it deserves further examination. Of course, it is not a matter on which one can move rapidly without co-ordination.

Here are the words of Ira Mumford, general manager of the Saskatchewan wheat pool, as reported in the Star-Phoenix of January 31 last. Under the heading "System Wearing Out" he is reported as saying that the country elevator system is wearing out and that over the next few years more and more elevators will no longer be useful; the logical step would be central locations for replacements. This is his view, a view supported by the progress in this direction made by elevator companies over the last ten years, even though unco-ordinated with the railways.

Hon. members will have to determine for themselves whether they want moneys paid to the railway companies under the existing transportation act to keep a branch line in place when it moves only relatively few bushels of grain, or if they would prefer that money being put to better use to serve the producers. These are the real challenges with which we are faced.

[Mr. Lang.]

Some hon. members say, "Oh, woe betide us. Our rail system is handling American grain. Oh, what a tragedy. Only last year, in February, we could not move all the grain that we wanted to move to Vancouver. How illogical it is that some American grain is moving to Seattle on Canadian lines." I suggest that they are confusing two problems. We are moving American grain on our lines this winter, when the supply of boxcars is more plentiful than in the peak period of summer. I ask why not, when this does not interfere with the orderly movement of grain in Canada? Why shouldn't the railways move this grain to Seattle if they can make a profit on it? There must be a very strange feeling of some hon. members about the railways if their argument is that the railways should not make a profit on this movement, that there is something sacred about Canadian lines and that they should be used only for the movement of Canadian grain. That does not make sense to me.

What I have said to hon. members, and what I tell farmers, is that we will do everything we have to do to make sure that our transportation equipment is not used to handle American grain when it is needed for handling Canadian grain. But when there are 17 million or 18 million bushels of grain already in Vancouver, when grain experts, the Wheat Board, the elevators and everybody else agree that that amount is actually higher than is ideal, why should we load additional cars with grain and just hold them in readiness to move out there? That does not make sense. This is not the proper way to operate the system. We do not make progress that way.

I hope hon. members will recognize that this purchase of hopper cars was an extremely important demonstration by the government of Canada of a willingness to pledge the resources of the people of Canada to make sure that grain, which is of such importance to the prairie region and indeed to all of Canada, does in fact move to market. It is extremely strange and really rather difficult for me to sit here and listen to Members of Parliament from the prairie region attacking this purchase, suggesting to some of my colleagues from other parts of the country that that money ought not to have been spent by the treasury. I suggest to them that that is not a very useful thing from the point of view of the prairie farmers, particularly when such a step is taken and such expenditures are made by the people of Canada for the good of the people of Canada and, more particularly and directly, for the good of the prairie region and of the farmers there. That step will be even more important in the days ahead. We may need more such action, and it should not be attacked by hon. members from the prairie region. Hon. members representing or purporting to represent farm constituencies in that region, under the guise of defending their local communities are attacking those helpful steps which have been taken and I hope will continue to be taken to help the prairie farmers.

Mr. Drury: I rise on a point of order, Mr. Chairman. It is now almost four o'clock and I think there would be agreement to continue with this debate and hope that we could make progress, rather than proceeding with private members' hour.

Mr. Stanfield: We will certainly agree, Mr. Chairman, and I hope other ministers will not find it necessary to make long speeches of a rather inflammatory nature.

Mr. Dinsdale: Mr. Chairman, I was scheduled to proceed first in private members' hour. I will be very happy to give way so that the true facts can be presented on this important matter of the grain industry. However, I understand there will be an opportunity during private members' hour on Monday next to pursue the subject I was going to take up.

Mr. Reid: On the same point of order, Mr. Chairman, I want to assure the hon. member for Brandon-Souris that we will bring forth his resolution, which was to have been discussed today, on Monday at five o'clock.

The Chairman: These things should be done with Mr. Speaker in the chair. Perhaps hon. members will allow me to rise, it being four o'clock, report progress and request leave to consider the bill again.

• (1600)

Progress reported.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Laniel): When shall the committee of the whole have leave to sit again? Now?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, in accordance with discussions that have already been held, we agree to return to committee of the whole.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Laniel): Order, please. Hon. members have heard the point raised by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles). Is there agreement to forgo private members' hour at this time?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Laniel): Order, please. The hon. member for London West (Mr. Buchanan).

Mr. Buchanan: Mr. Speaker, would it be possible to obtain the consent of the House to revert to motions in order to present the first report of the Standing Committee on Indian Affairs and Northern Development?

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Laniel): Is it agreed that we revert to motions to allow the hon. member to present this report?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

SUPPLY

APPROPRIATION ACT No. 1, 1973

The House resumed consideration in committee of Bill C-141, for granting to Her Majesty certain sums of money for the public service for the financial year ending 31st March, 1973—Mr. MacEachen (for Mr. Drury)—Mr. Laniel in the chair.

On clause 2—Schedule.

The Deputy Chairman: When the committee rose, it was considering the schedule relating to the Department of Industry, Trade and Commerce, vote 30a. The hon. member for Wellington.

Mr. Hales: Mr. Chairman, I do not wish to prolong this discussion, but I would ask a question of the minister—

Mr. Benjamin: A point of order, Mr. Chairman.

The Deputy Chairman: The hon. member for Regina-Lake Centre.

Mr. Benjamin: Mr. Chairman, with all respect to the hon. member for Wellington, your predecessor in the chair recognized me before the points of order started on this item.

The Deputy Chairman: Order, please. I do not think we should try to create confusion at this time. The procedure was taken to report progress. I was not present, so I am not in a position to know who was recognized. I have now recognized the hon. member for Wellington.

Mr. Hales: Mr. Chairman, I have two questions for the minister in charge of these estimates. I have seen very many estimates go through this House, but I have never seen such a bundle as this one where the Department of Industry, Trade and Commerce is asking for $40.3 million to enable the Canadian Wheat Board to purchase hopper cars. Now we have the Minister of Justice handling the estimates, so it is really a bag of tricks.

My first question is, why are the railways not buying these cars? I refer to CP and CN? When was this decision made? Why is the Canadian Wheat Board in a business they have no right to be in? They have no right to be in it, in my opinion; buying cars is railway business.

Secondly, if the Wheat Board is providing these cars, is it going to receive a reduced rate from the railways? Thirdly, will this gift of $48 million to the railways appear on their profit and loss statement as income? I will follow these questions with another short one later.

Mr. Lang: Mr. Chairman, I thank the hon. member for these questions. Let me explain, first of all, that it is known to some members of this House that in addition to being Minister of Justice I am the minister responsible for the Canadian Wheat Board. The Canadian Wheat Board has traditionally had a relationship with the Department of Industry, Trade and Commerce and, indeed, supporting staff for the minister responsible for the Canadian Wheat Board is largely carried in the budget of the Department of Industry, Trade and Commerce and located in their offices. Therefore, while this item appears under that departmental heading, it is in my responsibility as minister responsible for the Canadian Wheat Board that I am speaking to the item in the grains area of that department.

In my short explanatory remarks a few minutes ago I explained why the railways were not, on their own, likely to purchase this additional equipment in a situation where the elevators are operating on a five-day week basis at the terminals when the railways are arguing that the equipment to handle the grain to the elevators should move on a seven-day week basis. The rates for the movement of grain for export are the Crowsnest rates. That means there was no bargaining position between the railways and the elevators to arrange the best system without some intervention. In reply to the hon. member's question about reduced rates, the Crowsnest rate is applicable in this area.

This is not, as the hon. member claims a gift of $48 million to the railways. It is a purchase of cars by the Wheat Board at the government's request. This is not a gift to the railways of these cars but, rather, the cars are in the hands of the Wheat Board to be made use of by the railways. There will be a possibility in the future of examining the question of when it is appropriate for the railways to purchase the cars rather than to continue to have a loan of them. That may be determined by the changing configuration of the railway transportation system.

Mr. Hales: The minister did not say when the decision was made to buy these cars.

Mr. Lang: Mr. Chairman, the decision was made and announced, I believe, in February a year ago.

Mr. Hales: The final question is a technical one but it is very important. This item appears in the Department of Industry, Trade and Commerce estimates under the heading of "marketing." I think we need great imagination to put hopper cars under that heading. This is equipment and capital expenditure; it is not marketing. We are being asked to pass estimates to buy equipment which is a capital expenditure, when it appears under the heading of "Marketing." Furthermore, the department is using $7.7 million from their 1972-73 estimates under that heading for the purchase of equipment and for capital expenditures. I think this is wrong and this House should not be asked to pass such estimates.

Mr. Lang: Mr. Chairman, this is an item which is needed to purchase the cars. I do not know how the hon. member can say it is a capital item in that sense. It is very much a budgetary item in terms of the government putting funds into the hands of the Wheat Board for that purpose. This is quite similar to other measures within the over-all marketing category within this whole title, where from time to time grants or payments, and indeed grants in respect of the purchase of capital equipment by an individual company, may be made to encourage the additional marketing of Canadian grain in an ingenious variety of ways.

In my earlier remarks, I explained to hon. members that the particular purpose of this purchase was to enable the Canadian Wheat Board to continue making sales beyond a certain volume of exports where they would have been stopped if there had not been more equipment available to handle grain and haul it to market. The point, in other words, is that the marketing of this grain for export depends on our having the handling and transportation system which can move the grain from where it is produced on the Prairies to the ports which, in Canada, are far removed from the production areas. Therefore, this kind of step is directly related to the capability of the Canadian Wheat Board to market grain.

Mr. Hales: Mr. Chairman, may I ask a final question? Under what department will this rolling-stock or equipment appear? Will it be on the books of the Department of Industry, Trade and Commerce, of the Canadian Wheat Board, or of the railways?

Mr. Lang: It will be on the books of the Canadian Wheat Board, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. Benjamin: Mr. Chairman, having listened to the minister in charge of the Wheat Board, I feel I must make some remarks. The minister has thrown out more strawmen and heifer dust than normal. No one objects to the purchase of rolling-stock for the movement of grain. Members on all sides of the House, the grain industry and farm organizations have said for many years that we do not have enough rolling-stock for the movement of grain. For the minister to throw out the strawman that somebody is objecting to the purchase of additional rolling-stock to move grain is sheer nonsense, and he knows it. He knows as well as I do and others who were elected to this chamber at that time that from his first year in office there was repeated discussion about the shortage of equipment for moving grain. So that problem is at least four years old in my experience and his, and it is 44 years old in the experience of people in the farming and grain handling industry. There is no argument about the necessity to increase the rolling-stock available to the railways for moving grain. The argument is whether it is the responsibility of the railways to buy such equipment.

It was pointed out by the hon. member for Assiniboia and the hon. member for Wellington that the Wheat Board and the Government of Canada are being required to shoulder responsibilities that should be shouldered by the railways. When the minister suggests that all he can do is discuss this question with the railroads, does he mean that the government and the Canadian Wheat Board in a better position to order hopper cars and ensure delivery more quickly than the railroads? If that is what he suggests, he is doing nothing but letting the railroads off the hook. When the government decided last February to purchase these hopper cars for grain movement, responsibility could have been transferred to the management of both national railway systems and they could have been required to buy that rolling stock.

We considered the Canadian National financing bill, and the entire $48 million could have been included in it one year ago. The minister knows that. For him to pretend and suggest that the cars have to be bought by the Canadian Wheat Board because the railways would not buy them, or could not, is nonsense, and he knows it.

The people of western Canada and members of all parties have been pleading for many years for an improvement in equipment used to handle grain. The minister's position is completely illogical. If it is logical for the Canadian Wheat Board to purchase hopper cars for the movement of grain, it is equally logical, I suggest, for the government to buy other cars for other uses. I am sure the hon. member for Medicine Hat, who has a great deal of experience with livestock movement, would agree with that. Every year there is a crying need for stock cars for moving cattle. Following the logic of the minister's position, does the minister not think that the government should also purchase another couple of thousands stock cars so that we can solve the chronic problem that arises every year of insufficient rolling-stock to move cattle to eastern Canadian and U.S. markets?

This problem has been with us ever since I began working for the railway in 1947. Will the minister also, if he is to follow through with his logic, not purchase refrigerator cars? Every year there is a chronic shortage of refrigerator cars for moving potatoes from the maritime provinces, particularly P.E.I. and New Brunswick, to market. Does the minister, in his logic, not think that the government ought to purchase 2,000 refrigerator cars to move potatoes out of the maritime provinces to central Canadian and eastern U.S. markets?

The minister talked much of being non-political and of not following narrow, partisan lines, yet he threw out the nonsense that members from other parties opposed the purchase of hopper cars. Such is not the case and he knows it. He ridiculed statements made by hon. members who pointed out that United States grain has been moving on Canadian rail lines, in Canadian equipment, to U.S. ports and he tried to tell us that that is all right at this time of year because there is no need for equipment to move Canadian grain to Canadian ports. Let us remind the minister in charge of the Canadian Wheat Board, if he feels that we do not need that equipment, that 450 rail cars of the CPR are being used to move American grain. Let me remind the minister in charge of the Wheat Board that there is space for 63 million bushels at the lakehead. Why not utilize some of that space? If he feels that at this time of year Canadian equipment is not badly needed, why does he not phone the Canadian Wheat Board and suggest that they use those 450 Canadian Pacific Railway cars for moving grain to Thunder Bay? I am sure he will find the Canadian Wheat Board and the elevator companies only too happy to say yes. If the Canadian Pacific Railway wants to haul U.S. grain over its tracks, let it use U.S. equipment to do so.

The minister made a great fuss about elevators working a seven-day week. When I asked him if he meant country elevators or terminals, he said mainly terminals, if I heard him correctly. The minister knows as well as anyone does that long before these hopper cars were delivered, and about the time it was decided to buy them, the terminals in Vancouver were operating five days a week, week after week. The railways were incapable of delivering sufficient grain to keep them operating seven days a week, and the minister knows it.

I am sure the minister remembers the tables the Saskatchewan wheat pool sent out. In some weeks elevators worked two days, in some weeks three days and sometimes they were on a four-day week because the railways did not spot enough cars to enable them to keep working for five days a week, let alone seven. What the minister suggested was nonsense when he said that because elevator companies would not go on a seven-day week they would encounter problems handling large amounts of grain. The elevator companies will be able to handle 750 million or 800 million bushels of grain and work every day of a five-day week if the minister will see that sufficient cars are spotted every 24 hours over five successive days to the elevators in order to keep the shifts working. The minister has thrown out nothing but strawmen and heifer dust, as I said, ever since the announcement he made one year ago, and it will not wash.

I shall ask the minister some questions in a moment. Another point was made with respect to rail links in British Columbia. The present government and its predecessor, the Conservative party, allowed the Canadian Pacific Railway to let its rail system in British Columbia deteriorate. I am speaking of the entire Kettle Valley line through the Crowsnest pass, that second route through British Columbia. It has now reached the point of not being as good as some branch lines. Here is the second rail link in British Columbia and it has been neglected for 20 years.

I ask the minister if he will note some specific questions regarding the handling of hopper cars. Earlier in the House, as I recall his replies, he suggested that agreement had been reached with the railroads over the handling of these cars. I believe in an earlier public statement he had said that arrangements had been made. He can correct me if I am wrong or partly wrong. When we examined in committee the supplementary estimates of the Department of Industry, Trade and Commerce, I heard that the matter had not been resolved either in whole or in part. In any event, it sounded to me as if the official was saying the opposite of what the minister had said. I should like to know which of these things has not been resolved. Can the minister tell us who is collecting the freight charges? I wonder if the minister can listen to me, Mr. Chairman, while conversing with his colleague.

Mr. Lang: I can listen with one ear.

Mr. Nielsen: The minister can listen to the hon. member without any ears.

Mr. Benjamin: Will the minister tell us who collects the freight charges with respect to these hopper cars? Are the hopper cars leased to the railways, or is there merely a verbal arrangement under which they have agreed to put them between an engine and a caboose?

• (1620)

Who is responsible for the repairs to and maintenance of the cars? Who pays for it? Is the Canadian Wheat Board being charged now, or will they be later, or have they been charged in the past for any item such as cleaning of cars, switching charges or any other items that normally go as extra charges in the handling of railway equipment, both loaded and unloaded? Will the minister inform us whether an agreement has been reached with the railroads on all of these details? What is the division of responsibilities? Who gets the revenue from the freight charges? Who pays for the leasing of them? Is any recovery being made toward the capital cost of these by the Canadian Wheat Board? These are questions the minister needs to answer.

Mr. Lang: Mr. Chairman, if I may briefly refer to some of these questions, the Wheat Board and the railways have entered into an interim agreement which for the time being has the railways in fact taking care of the maintenance of the cars. No lease or rental charge is involved. The final agreement is being drafted at the present time. It is not yet finalized. It will be made available to members of the House when it is finalized. The exact point or problem that is involved here is a basic agreement between the railways and, if you like, the Wheat Board or, more correctly, now the government, about the appropriate arrangement which genuinely shows what the proper obligation of the railway is in this arrangement and what is properly the obligation of other parties within the system.

One thing that I can say is that throughout, it has been the understanding on all sides that no costs of the cars will be borne by the producer, the farmer or the Canadian Wheat Board on his behalf. The only cost the farmer or the Wheat Board will bear will be the regular Crowsnest rate in connection with the shipment of grain in these cars, as with other cars. That part is clear. The question of the exact final arrangement between the railways on the one hand and the government on the other remains to be settled. It may well be settled with another agreement for a fairly short period of time which allows us to do further analysis of the very complex questions the hon. member asks about the proper relationship.

Mr. Benjamin: Mr. Chairman, I take it from the minister's answer that the railways are collecting the normal freight charges. Are they collecting the full rates, or have they agreed to a lesser rate since they are not supplying any equipment for that grain?

Mr. Lang: Mr. Chairman, at the present time they are collecting the full rate, that is to say, the Crowsnest rate which, of course, the railways claim is less than their full cost.

Mr. Mazankowski: Mr. Chairman, I wish to direct a question to the minister in charge of the Wheat Board. The minister pointed out at some length that the capacity or throughput of our present handling and transportation system has increased, but not much, through upgrading the basic concept of the system.

[Mr. Benjamin.]

Can the minister advise whether we are achieving maximum throughput under the present system? Also, can he enlighten us as to what he sees in the future for maximizing the throughput without extraordinary changes in the basic concept of our handling and transportation system? In other words, is it really necessary to have extraordinary changes in the system to meet our throughput for the next ten years?

Mr. Lang: Mr. Chairman, the question of any changes in the system is not really related to the question of throughput. The existing system could be modified and improvements made to it which would allow for more grain being continually handled through it. The key question is the cost of handling it in that way. If 200,000 bushels of grain are handled at ten elevators when they could be effectively handled at one, you have to compare the cost of handling it in those two ways as well as the cost of the additional trucking involved, and so on, in handling it in a more consolidated way. The question of the kind of system is more one of cost than throughput.

With regard to the other question, what is required to improve the throughput, there is a very long and complicated list of things each of which can help a bit to improve that throughput. For example, I believe that additional storage facilities on the west coast and perhaps some additional handling facilities there are at the top of anybody's list for increasing the throughput. The number of things that can be done is virtually unlimited.

Mr. Mazankowski: Am I to understand that what the minister is really saying is that we are looking forward to a modification of the present system over a period of time, rather than any fundamental or radical change in the system in the future?

Mr. Lang: Mr. Chairman, I have rather pointedly avoided making a personal conclusion on the studies of the handling and transportation group, simply because I am fearful that if I take a position some people might, politically, take an opposing position. Instead, I hope they will make a sensible analysis of the situation. I am willing to say to the hon. member that my view of the proposals studied, and my view of what is likely to come about is that we will have a system which retains what is basically our present system, but with fewer delivery points. That possibility, as examined in the studies, is likely to be the most sensible step at the present time. I do not say what may be true many years from now; that is a little too complicated an issue.

Mr. Mazankowski: This gives rise to a further question, that is, the question of fewer delivery points. Is the minister in a position to elaborate on what he means by fewer delivery points? Does he mean a reduction of 10 per cent, 25 per cent or 50 per cent? Can he give us some indication?

Mr. Lang: No, Mr. Chairman. I do not want to pretend that I have a final answer to that question. When I was talking about fewer delivery points, I was talking about the model which was studied by the handling and transportation group, namely, an examination of the cost of the system if we had two-thirds of the present delivery points. There is nothing magical about that number. It was a number picked at random to check the costs. Further review may well vary that upward or downward.

Mr. Nystrom: Mr. Chairman, I intend to be only four or five minutes. I believe there are a couple of items, one in particular, that should be emphasized at this time. So far in committee the members have been talking about the hopper cars and their purchase. One concern that is very evident in my constituency, and indeed across the province of Saskatchewan, is that these hopper cars can be used on roughly 50 per cent of the trackage. There is considerable concern in the minds of many people that this situation will probably expedite the abandoning of branch lines in many parts of Saskatchewan. I believe this presents a very serious social problem in terms of the small marginal farmer and the rural way of life. I believe on February 8 last the Saskatchewan legislature debated such an item. I wish to spend two or three minutes putting on record why they recommended that no railway abandonment be carried out until 1980, that is, until further studies have been carried out and the government of Saskatchewan gives prior agreement.

• (1630)

Mr. Chairman, the purchasing of the hopper cars, no matter what the intention might have been, will I suppose have some bearing on expediting the abandonment of railway lines which cannot accommodate the new cars. If the railways decide to go ahead in Saskatchewan and abandon the lines they wish to abandon, it will mean that about 35 per cent of the rail lines will disappear—about 3,000 miles of the 8500 miles of rail lines we have in the province. This will disrupt the economy as far as many rural people are concerned. May I remind the House that the Government of Canada donated land, mineral rights and other things to the CPR many years ago. These are matters we should be considering should the applications to the CTC go through.

In terms of elevators and delivery points, one or two other statistics which have come to my attention are, I think, shocking. There are some 2,700 elevators in Saskatchewan. If the branch lines are closed, about 800 of them will close down. About 375 elevator points will disappear altogether from Saskatchewan. The railway companies said they lost about $27 million in 1969 as a result of servicing the branch lines. The government of Saskatchewan has commissioned a study to determine the effects of the abandonment of branch lines across the province, as well as the effect of such abandonment upon the prairie region as a whole. No final conclusion has been reached but many facts have been revealed in interim reports.

One of the things those engaged in this study say is that if the lines are abandoned—and I believe there is a chance the hopper cars will expedite this process—it will cost the farmers in the prairie region $20 million a year because they will need to transport their grain to elevator terminals by other means. It would also mean an additional cost to the taxpayers. If railway lines are removed, some of the tax base will be gone and an extra charge will fall on businessmen living in small communities, for example. It is stated that every year, on average, every mile of railway line which is eliminated will cost the prairie economy an additional $1,525. Additional costs will arise in terms of highway expenditures, amounting to between $5 million and $12 million. And, as I say, it will mean the elimination of part of the tax base available to communities.

We are concerned about the cost of the hopper cars. We are concerned about who is to pay the bill for servicing and maintenance. There is a group in Saskatoon which has carried out a study. Those taking part have found that of the 540 communities in my province, about 200 will disappear completely in the next two years and a further 100 will have populations of fewer than 25 should these proposals for rail abandonment be carried out. That is a measure of the profound effect such a decision would have on the province of Saskatchewan and, indeed, across the Prairies.

We are all familiar with the shift of population from the countryside to the cities and the disappearance of the small farm. I wanted to spend just a few moments alerting the minister and the committee to the concern felt by myself and by my constituents, most of whom are small farmers, are operating farms of average size or live in small hamlets and villages from one end of my constituency to the other. I hope the minister in charge of the Wheat Board, the minister of industry and others will take very seriously the points I have raised when they consider long-term planning as it affects grain handling and transportation in Canada.

The Deputy Chairman: Is the Chair to conclude that this completes the examination of vote 30a of the Department of Industry, Trade and Commerce?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Harney: I rise on a point of order, Mr. Speaker. I raise this matter before we move to the next item on the list. I know we agreed the other day that we would proceed through the schedule item by item. This appeared to be a reasonable decision at the time and I agreed with it. I also know that the schedule is arranged alphabetically, which appears to be reasonable because this is one matter most members of the House will, I am sure, agree on—that there is an order of precedence in the letters of the alphabet and that these letters are roughly comparable in English and in French.

There is one thing, however, we are not taking into consideration. It is that the titles appear alphabetically according to their English names. The point is this: although we may pay respect to the French language by giving the French equivalent of the English names, the titles are nevertheless in the order in which they would appear under the English names. If we were to arrange the titles according to their French names, a different order of precedence would emerge, one which at any rate would mean quite a bit to me and to other members representing urban constituencies.

[Translation]

We must consider, Mr. Speaker, that if we had drafted this schedule in the French alphabetical order of the departments, we would not have spent the past two days discussing only the problems of agriculture, but we would have perhaps been able to deal with the problems of citizens who live in the big cities of Canada. After all we must bear in mind that most citizens live in the major centres. I must recognize that today, yesterday and the day before, I have heard about wheat and fish—which is a good thing—but I think that we should pay attention to the people who form the major part of the population.

I would like to suggest that for this time we proceed as if the schedule of departments had been drafted in French. We would first consider the items of the Veterans Affairs, External Affairs and then Urban Affairs departments.

And if you are looking for a suggestion, Mr. Chairman, I could perhaps suggest that since the Minister of Veterans Affairs is not in the House we proceed to the examination of the Department of Urban Affairs item.

The Deputy Chairman: Order. First of all, I must say that the point raised by the hon. member should have been raised when the agreement was reached by the various parties. Obviously, at this stage, it has been agreed to proceed according to the alphabetical order of the schedule to the bill. The Chair wants to be fair to the hon. member, but it must also do the same for hon. members who want to speak in the debate and who would like to know in advance the item which will be examined and, which is more important yet, for the person who must answer the questions. As far as I am concerned, if it is the wish of the committee to proceed to an item other than that of the Department of Justice, I will do as it wishes.

[English]

Mr. Nielsen: On the point of order, Mr. Chairman, I do not think that an order of the House having been made before the House resolved itself into committee of the whole, to the effect that we would deal with the estimates department by department as they appear in the schedule, the committee now has authority to change that order. I would like to be co-operative if any hon. member wishes to discuss another subject, but we are sitting today in committee of the whole.

Mr. Lang: I would certainly agree with the last comment made. I hope we can continue to follow the present order. On the other hand, the point raised by the hon. member for Scarborough West is a good one and I would be glad to undertake that when we are next in the House in these circumstances we shall try to have the French alphabet in use rather than the English alphabet.

• (1640)

Mr. Harney: Mr. Chairman, I suggest it is not a matter of having the French alphabet. The French alphabet, as you may have noticed, is exactly the same as the English except there is not common usage of the letter "w" as in "railway wagon."

An hon. Member: Or in "Wagner".

Mr. Harney: I said the French alphabet. I would not want to impose upon the committee the sudden reversal of an ancient custom that lists everything according to the English title, so I simply suggest that we adapt slowly to it in the future by drawing up lists of subjects according to their order in the alphabet in English and list the titles according to order in the alphabet in French, and then alternate between the two. This may be a rather sneaky way of getting around a discussion on urban affairs but I cannot see how else I can do it.

The Deputy Chairman: Order. I do not want to prevent the hon. member from making his point, but I think this subject has been sufficiently discussed at this time. There is a process that is followed to simplify the work of the committee and the Chair, and that is to study estimates as they appear. At the same time, once study of one estimate has been completed we cannot refer back to it. I think the procedure followed is the correct one. If the estimates should be printed in another way, that is a matter for consideration at another time, not a matter for this committee. The point raised by the hon. member for Yukon was also quite valid.

The committee will now revert to the consideration of vote 1a of the Department of Justice.

Mr. Nielsen: Mr. Chairman, it is now 17 minutes to five, so this may be the last opportunity I will have to make this proposal. I propose at this time that we pass all the remaining items without debate and we pass both remaining stages of the bill without debate, so as to complete this matter today.

Mr. Peters: Mr. Chairman, there seems to be a sudden desire on the part of the hon. member for Yukon to make himself House leader for the government. But whatever his intention is, it does not meet with my approval and I do not give consent.

Mr. Nielsen: These are the people who want to see parliament work.

Mr. Peters: Mr. Chairman, you have called item 1a of the Department of Justice. I was amused by the remarks of the Minister of Justice recently—I am not speaking of his organic remarks in the agricultural sense—concerning some of the recommendations made by members of the judiciary. I see there is a grant of $10,000 to the Canadian Association of Provincial Court Judges. Does it cover the total expenditure of that body, or are there other expenditures for ad hoc purposes or on a per capita basis?

Mr. Lang: Mr. Chairman, I am not fully conversant with the financial operations of the provincial court judges' association. As the hon. member implied, this is largely a matter for themselves and for the provincial governments. The grant referred to in the estimates in this case is specifically for the purpose of assisting the financing of a conference of provincial judges from across the country. We are conscious of the tremendous importance to the operation of the criminal law of having them meet to consider ways in which they determine appropriate sentences and other court matters. After consultations with the provincial attorneys general to be certain that they did not object to our involvement in this way, we propose to make this grant to assist in this single conference.

Mr. Peters: Mr. Chairman, may I ask a follow-up question? Is the federal department making suggestions along certain lines in relation to sentencing, and will this be on the agenda? In other words, are we asking them for some co-operation in regard to sentencing, which has become a major problem in interprovincial relations in regard to certain crimes in various parts of the country?

Mr. Lang: We are not making any suggestions to them, or indeed proposing to them what their agenda should be. Their agenda deals with the general subject matter of their role in the judicial process. If they invite persons from the Department of Justice, we will be glad to co-operate in lending them resource people, but I do not think that to this point they have requested them.

Mr. Nielsen: Mr. Chairman, I have one question for the Minister of Justice. A few weeks ago at a press conference he made the statement that he may expunge jail sentences imposed for simple possession of marijuana and hashish. Is it government policy to eliminate jail sentences for offences of this nature? If so, when might we see amendments to the Criminal Code brought in?

Mr. Lang: As minister responsible for the agents prosecuting in drug offence cases, I have asked—and this instruction has been issued to my agents—that in cases of simple possession of first offence marijuana the court should know that it is our view that the conditional and absolute discharge provisions may well be applicable. It is, of course, a matter for the judge himself in light of the particular case, but this is our view and I thought we should have a consistent one across the country. That is why the instruction was issued.

We hope to be able to come forward with legislation before too long which will allow the House to consider a lower maximum in cases of simple first offence possession. There are cases where what seems to be a rather higher penalty than the norm is imposed. We will be introducing in the House our proposals in due course. However, it is not our intention to make the offence of trafficking any less serious, though even there there will be an opportunity to examine whether the exact penalties that are in place are desirable.

Mr. Nielsen: Mr. Chairman, I am aware of that, but the press used quotation marks when it reported the minister as saying that in cases of possession of marijuana and hashish the government may eliminate jail sentences. I am aware of the policy regarding the instructions that have gone out to the provincial attorneys general and the minister's agents in the two northern territories, but is the government considering the elimination entirely of jail sentences in cases of simple possession of marijuana and hashish? If so, is it the intention of the government to introduce amendments to the Criminal Code in that respect?

Mr. Lang: That is what we are considering, Mr. Chairman, in cases of simple first offence possession of the lighter drugs to which the hon. member refers. However, it is not amendments to the Criminal Code that may be involved; it is the removal of this matter from the present act into either a separate statute or another statute.

The Deputy Chairman: Does that complete the study of vote 1a, Department of Justice?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Supply

The Deputy Chairman: The committee will now proceed to the consideration of votes 5a, 10a, and 15a of the Department of Manpower and Immigration, and vote L30a of the Unemployment Insurance Commission.

• (1650)

Mr. Nielsen: Mr. Chairman, it is with the greatest reluctance that we let these items go at this time. This has been the first opportunity for any examination of this program. We have had an extremely limited opportunity of some 45 minutes in committee. In the interest of getting the estimates through, we are prepared to hold off our examination of this program until another time and place, perhaps on the main estimates when they are referred to the committee.

Mr. Peters: Mr. Chairman, we are very pleased to have an opportunity to speak on this item, and before this matter is concluded will be pleased to reduce the item by a considerable amount. There seldom has been a government department established which has been of such little use as this department. I remember when Manpower was established in order to make a place for one of the three ministers from Quebec. It was set up in such a way—

Miss Bégin: Hey!

Mr. Peters: The lady disagrees. She was not here and it would be very difficult for her to say whether or not this is what happened. I assure her that it did. For her edification I would say that we formerly had unemployment and employment in the same department. Then we split them and placed unemployment in one department and employment in another. The employment end was called Manpower, and unemployment remained under the Unemployment Insurance Commission. Employment was taken out of the Crown corporation and placed in a government department. It has so great a failure that the unemployed are divorced in such a way that they cannot establish that going to the manpower office every week looking for work is an indication that they are seeking employment; it will not meet the requirements of a proper search even if they go to the manpower office three times a day.

An hon. Member: That is not right.

Mr. Peters: Mr. Chairman, it is right. The hon. member may think he knows something about this, but I consider he knows very little about it. He may not be aware of this, but it is a fact that in respect of the next item, involving $454 million, we have established ex-policemen of all forces, including the RCMP and security guards, to go around and do the job of checking up in respect of search to make sure that person is employed.

The Deputy Chairman: Order, please.

[Translation]

Order. The hon. member for Saint-Michel on a point of order.

[English]

Miss Bégin: Mr. Chairman, may I ask the hon. gentleman a question? Why did he not ask this kind of question during the question period a month ago?

Mr. Peters: I have not asked the question because obviously there is a difference between my thinking and the thinking of the government. I am also trying to point out that there is a difference between the thinking of the government and the thinking of the unemployed.

Mr. Chairman, I realize we cannot carry on a debate across the floor but I should like to ask the Quebec members, who seem to be taking such offence to my statements, whether the fact that one registers with manpower in the province of Quebec entitles one to draw benefits as having been actively seeking employment.

Mr. De Bané: May I answer?

Mr. Peters: Yes.

Mr. De Bané: It is obvious that—

The Deputy Chairman: Order, please. The chair is having difficulty.

[Translation]

Order. The Chair has some difficulty in following the procedure. The hon. member for Timiskaming (Mr. Peters) has the floor, but another member is answering one of his questions and this leads to confusion. It would perhaps be advisable to wait till the member for Matane (Mr. De Bané) gets the floor.

[English]

Mr. Peters: Mr. Chairman, the point I am trying to make is that we have established a new agency for unemployment insurance which is very expensive. It has several hundred people—it would not be difficult to find out exactly how many—going around checking on whether a person is actually looking for work. The hon. member is making a lot of noise from his seat. If he has something to say, I hope he will say it. I suggest to him now, however, that while he is standing on his feet he should walk behind the curtain.

Some hon. Members: Order.

The Deputy Chairman: Order, please. The hon. member for Welland is rising on a point of order.

Mr. Railton: Mr. Chairman, I think the hon. gentleman asked if I knew anything about expense. I think I do. I know pretty well how much it costs to keep hon. members in this House listening to drivel.

Mr. Peters: Mr. Chairman, before you rise and indicate that the hon. member is out of order, I might point out that he has already established his ability in this House. I am really surprised at the attitude of the people from Quebec.

In Ontario we have a practice that if one is unemployed for a short period of time there is what is called a proper search statement. This means that a person must establish that he is seeking work. It is not sufficient for him merely to attend at the manpower office to establish his right to unemployment insurance. Unemployment counselling services have been established to help people obtain jobs. One of the employment agencies is manpower. At one time we had established that office as the only office.

I remember going to a mine in Timmins when one had to make a payment to a private agency in order to get a job working underground for 52 cents an hour. We thought that kind of a situation had disappeared. We established an agency which is costing well over half a million dollars. We created that agency to make jobs available to people and to retrain those who were not competent to fill job vacancies. This program has failed completely.

The Deputy Chairman: Order, please.

Mr. Nielsen: Mr. Chairman, before Your Honour leaves the chair, may I once again suggest that you ask whether there is unanimous consent to pass all stages of these estimates tonight? If that is not agreeable, perhaps Your Honour would not see the clock.

The Deputy Chairman: Hon. members have heard the suggestion of the hon. member for Yukon. Is the proposal agreed to?

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Chairman, I must inform you that we have other members who have a few things they would like to say. We are not impressed with this sudden interest in expedition.

Mr. Nielsen: Mr. Chairman, it is not sudden. It has been done for the last few days. Members at that end of the House say they want to see parliament work, but it will not work with their filibustering.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): The hon. member's halo seems to be hurting him.

The Deputy Chairman: Order, please. There does not seem to be consent.

Progress reported.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

Mr. MacLean: Mr. Speaker, before you leave the chair I should like to ask the acting House leader if he would confirm that we will be continuing with this supply bill on Monday afternoon.

Mr. Lang: Yes, Mr. Speaker. It would be our intention to continue, and hopefully complete, this item in the early part of Monday afternoon. We then intend to return to Bill C-2, the Criminal Code amendments.

At 5.03 p.m. the House adjourned, without question put, pursuant to Standing Order.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Monday, February 19, 1973

The House met at 2 p.m.

PRIVILEGE

MRS. MacINNIS—STATEMENTS BY PRIME MINISTER RESPECTING POSSIBILITY OF CONTROLS ON FOOD PRICES

Mrs. Grace MacInnis (Vancouver-Kingsway): Mr. Speaker, according to media reports the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) stated over the weekend that suggestions that controls be put on food are crazy. He added that this could not be done without rationing. He stated further that countries that have imposed controls have all excluded controls on food.

My point of privilege is that the statements of the Prime Minister prejudge a decision which the Special Committee on Trends in Food Prices has the power to make and his statements are therefore in contempt of the committee, which means they are in contempt of parliament. If the Prime Minister feels he has to make statements of this kind, and since he cannot make them on the floor of parliament while this matter is in the hands of the committee, the place for him to make such comments is before the committee itself, either as a witness or by becoming a member of it. If you find, Mr. Speaker, that I have a prima facie case of privilege, my motion would include a recommendation that the Prime Minister appear before the committee at an early date.

When the Prime Minister appears before the committee I trust he will be prepared to substantiate his statement that countries that have imposed controls have all excluded controls on food. The fact is that what he is saying is not true. I realize, Mr. Speaker, that this is a matter of debate, but my point of privilege is that the place for this debate is in the committee. Mr. Speaker, if you find that I have a question of privilege I would move, seconded by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles):

That the statements made outside the House by the Prime Minister concerning controls on food prices be referred to the Special Committee on Trends in Food Prices and that the Prime Minister be requested to appear before the said committee.

Mr. Speaker: I am not sure whether the right hon. Prime Minister wishes to reply to the point made by the hon. member for Vancouver-Kingsway. In any event, there should be no debate. But the Chair, by long-established practice, has allowed a member who has been referred to in a proposed or alleged question of privilege to reply if he wishes to do so. If this is not to be done in this case, I should have to remind the hon. member for Vancouver-Kingsway that it has long been established that statements made outside the House by a member of the House cannot form the basis of a question of privilege. On this basis the motion proposed by the hon. member for Vancouver-Kingsway cannot be put. I rule that there is not a prima facie case of privilege.

MANPOWER

CRITERIA FOR APPROVAL OF LOCAL INITIATIVE PROJECTS—REQUEST FOR UNANIMOUS CONSENT TO MOVE MOTION

Mr. André Fortin (Lotbinière): Mr. Speaker, pursuant to Standing Order 43, I request unanimous consent from the House to move a very important motion concerning the Local Initiative Program and its administration.

In view of the very high flexibility of the criteria used in approving those projects which have been submitted and in view of the very large number of disappointed applicants, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Abitibi (Mr. Laprise):

That the administration of the Local Initiative Program be immediately reviewed by the appropriate standing committee of this House; and that this same committee call as witnesses the minister responsible for this program as well as all officials directly involved in approving projects, in order to throw light on the real criteria used for approving local initiative projects.

Mr. Speaker: Under Standing Order 43, this motion requires unanimous consent from the House. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. Speaker: As there is not unanimous consent, the motion cannot be put.

QUESTIONS ON THE ORDER PAPER

(Questions answered orally are indicated by an asterisk.)

PICKERING AIRPORT

Question No. 50—Mr. Diefenbaker:

1. Does the government intend to proceed with the Pickering Airport?

2. As of this date, how many acres of land have been secured by or on behalf of the Department of Transport by agreements with the owners?

3. What is the total expenditure to date that has been made on planning, development or for any other purpose connected with the establishment of said Airport?

Mr. John M. Reid (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Privy Council): I am informed by the Departments of Transport and Public Works as follows: 1. Yes.

2. None.

3. The total expenditures to date, December 31, 1972 for the planning and development of Toronto area airports is $4,028,000. This amount covers all of the investigatory work which has been undertaken in connection with the planning of the Toronto area airports system. In the course of these investigations, many sites were examined, and it would have been impracticable to maintain separate accounting systems for each site. Expenditures in connection with the Pickering site are therefore in the figure of four million. No money has as yet been spent on the development of the Pickering airport.

BANKRUPTCIES

Question No. 234—Mr. Allard:

Following the loss of more than $25,000 sustained by fishermen on the coast of Labrador as a result of the bankruptcy of a fish plant, what action does the government intend to take in this respect?

Mr. William Rompkey (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of the Environment): The government does not contemplate action on behalf of private individuals who sustain losses as a result of the bankruptcy of an independent commercial enterprise.

CANADIAN COMMERCIAL RELATIONS

Question No. 252—Mr. Schumacher:

1. Was authority given by the government to Mr. Bernard Pinard, Quebec Minister of Transport to discuss commercial relations between the Soviet Union and (a) the province of Quebec (b) Canada, during his visit to Moscow at the latter part of 1972?

2. What (a) special (b) general authorizations are given to negotiate in the case of (i) Mr. Pinard's visit (ii) any future international such visits by provincial ministers?

3. What reciprocal arrangements have been made for visits by members of governments of other countries to discuss commercial relations with individual specific provinces in each case?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Secretary of State for External Affairs): 1. The government of Quebec informed the federal authorities of Mr. Pinard's visit to Moscow in the company of a number of Quebec business men. Authority to discuss Canada's commercial relations with the U.S.S.R. was neither sought nor granted, since the Quebec minister was, of course, free to promote the interests of the Quebec businessmen's mission of which he was a part.

2. No special or general authorization was given to Mr. Pinard; nor is such normally given to provincial ministers to negotiate in these cases. Canadian commercial relations with the U.S.S.R. and other countries, in so far as they concern intergovernmental matters, are carried out by the federal government, in most cases through the duly accredited missions of both sides. This does not of course preclude the possibility that a provincial minister might be asked to carry out some function on behalf of the federal government in a specific case.

3. There are no reciprocal arrangements with other countries regarding discussion of commercial relations with Canadian provinces on a government to government basis. This remains a federal responsibility under the Trade and Commerce Power of the British North America Act. Provincial ministers and officials are, of course, free to discuss commercial matters with visitors from other countries.

POST OFFICE—COAT OF ARMS OF CANADA ON POSTAL BOXES

Question No. 272—Mr. Masniuk:

For what reason are decals of the Coat of Arms of Canada being used on postal boxes in the Confederation building instead of the metal plates normally used and (a) how many of these postal boxes have been changed in this fashion (b) on what date were they changed (c) for what reason were they changed?

Hon. André Ouellet (Postmaster General): The metal Coat of Arms on this type of box cost $3.75 plus installation, the cost of which is hidden in the cost of manufacturing the box. The cost of the decal Coat of Arms is 19 cents and the installation cost is minimal. All postal boxes ordered by the Post Office since May 1971 carry the decal Coat of Arms. The metal Coat of Arms is no longer used since that date: (a) None of the existing boxes were changed; (b) Not applicable; (c) Not applicable.

1. What is the extent of Canadian development assistance in Afghanistan?

2. Is Canada sponsoring any major, long-term development projects in that country?

3. Is Canada sending any food supplies to that country as relief assistance?

4.Is any additional aid now being considered by the Canadian government for that country?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Secretary of State for External Affairs): 1. Since 1965 when Canadian Development Assistance to Afghanistan was begun Canada has provided: (a) Programs for twenty-six Afghanistan trainees under the auspices of the Colombo Plan; (b) $2,700,000 in bilateral food aid (wheat) and approximately $1,370,000 in food aid through the world food program, and; (c) a $1,275,000 development loan for the purchase of STOL (Twin Otter) aircraft.

2. Canada is not sponsoring any major, long-term development projects in Afghanistan.

3. As noted in Section 1(b) above, Canada has provided a considerable amount of food aid. Although Afghanistan does not have an annual bilateral aid allocation, food aid has been provided in each of the last three years in reaction to the hardships and food shortages which have arisen from an extended period of drought.

4. Canada is presently discussing two areas of additional assistance: Firstly, a technical assistance program to provide meaningful training for personnel in key ministries of the government of Afghanistan; secondly, further assistance to support Bakhta Afghan Airlines, the government owned domestic airline which received the Twin Otters under the loan mentioned above.

Return tabled.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Mr. Speaker, the purpose of asking questions is to get information, and it seems impossible to get any information concerning Wheat Board operations. Question No. 51, dated January 4, is as follows:

• (1410)

As of (a) July 31, 1972 (b) December 31, 1972, what were the estimates by the Wheat Board of the number of bushels of wheat of grades available for export under the several agreements with Mainland China and the U.S.S.R. in storage (i) on farms (ii) in elevators of all kinds?

The answer to that question is available to the minister and has been available for the last four weeks. There is also question No. 55 which concerns farmers all over western Canada. It is dated January 4, and reads as follows:

1. What was the total amount paid for demurrage by the Wheat Board in 1972 for ships which were held up in Vancouver Harbour awaiting wheat cargoes?

2. Is the Wheat Board to receive payment of said amount from the government of Canada or, if not, is it to be considered as a marketing expense which will come out of the farmer producers?

Both of those questions should have been answered long ago. The minister has the information and simply is not placing it before the House because it will be embarrassing. I ask that he give the answers to these questions at the next opportunity.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Reid: Mr. Speaker, I can assure the hon. gentleman that the answers, embarrassing or not, will be available on Wednesday.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Mr. Speaker, I asked for the minister to give his assurance, not some subaltern.

Mr. Speaker: The minister rises on a question of privilege.

Mr. Lang: Mr. Speaker, the parliamentary secretary has indicated that these answers are likely to be presented on Wednesday; in fact, I dealt with them in my office a few days ago. My question of privilege relates to two things. First, the right hon. gentleman is suggesting that some of the information with regard to these questions was available to me for a certain period of time. The first time I saw that information was when I signed the answers to the questions in my office on Thursday or Friday. Second, I must also say that I object to the right hon. gentleman's suggestion that there is some reason for embarrassment or other purpose or motive in connection with the failure to bring the questions forward. I think that is a breach of the privileges and traditions of parliament and not to be permitted, even from the right hon. gentleman.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Diefenbaker: Mr. Speaker, there is nothing to withdraw; my statement stands. There is concealment from the farmers because the minister is afraid of revealing the information.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Cossitt: Mr. Speaker, I should like to draw the attention of the Parliamentary Secretary to the President of the Privy Council to three questions I placed on the order paper on January 11 which have not been answered, namely, Nos. 257, 273 and 274. Because the answers should be fairly straightforward I think they should have been forthcoming before now. Like the right hon. member for Prince Albert, I realize that two of the questions may be an embarrassment to the government, but I do not see any reason why the answers should be held up. I wonder whether we could have some idea of when the answers might be forthcoming.

Mr. Reid: Mr. Speaker, I shall be delighted to look into it.

Mr. Hees: As the Prime Minister says, "in due course", which means eight months from Wednesday.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, may I express the hope that the answer to starred question No. 811 will be given by the Minister of Finance on Wednesday?

Mr. Nielsen: It could be available tomorrow.

ORAL QUESTION PERIOD

LABOUR RELATIONS

Mr. Sinclair Stevens (York-Simcoe): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Labour. Now that the elevator constructors' strike has entered its 178th day, with some 2,300 workers idled in every province, with building projects worth tens of millions of dollars being delayed in urban areas, creating more unemployment, would the Minister of Labour now accept some responsibility and attempt, working in conjunction with provincial authorities, if necessary, to conciliate this dispute which is the first such national strike in Canada's history?

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Hon. John C. Munro (Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, if the hon. member feels so strongly, would he be good enough to advise the premier of the province of Ontario—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Munro (Hamilton East): —whether he is prepared to turn over to me what, constitutionally, is his responsibility? Then I will consider an answer to the hon. member's question.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I apologize to the hon. member. Is the hon. member for Burnaby-Richmond-Delta rising on a point of order?

Mr. Reynolds: Yes, Mr. Speaker. Being new in the House I am not sure what the Minister of Labour meant by his answer, but do I take it that it is now government policy for opposition members to deal with provincial premiers?

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member who had the floor wishes to ask a supplementary.

Mr. Stevens: Mr. Speaker, my supplementary is again directed to the Minister of Labour. I can assure him that I have gone a little farther than he has suggested and have actually contacted the company representatives and the union representatives. Would the minister inform the House whether he will take action this afternoon to help reconcile the strike of elevator constructors, bearing in mind that this morning Mr. Leo Moore, Canadian Vice-president of the union involved, and Mr. E. M. Tuff, chief negotiator for the companies involved, told me that they would welcome any federal assistance that might be forthcoming? I can give the minister their telephone numbers, if he likes, but let us have some action.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Munro (Hamilton East): Mr. Speaker, neither the federal government nor the federal Minister of Labour has any responsibility in the matter. We have no legitimate—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Munro (Hamilton East): —basis from which to operate, and the parties know that. However, if the provinces, including the province of Ontario, invite me to intervene and be helpful, then I will have a basis upon which to make a contribution toward the settlement of this dispute. Until that happens this government and I are powerless.

Mr. Nielsen: Why don't you offer to help?

Mr. Munro (Hamilton East): Mr. Speaker, I have offered.

Mr. Stevens: My supplementary is directed to the Minister of Finance, in view of the doubletalk I have been getting from the Minister of Labour.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member should ask his question. This is not a debate. The question period, as much as possible, should be devoted to straightforward questions and answers. It seems to me that all hon. members ought to bear this in mind. Perhaps the hon. member should ask his supplementary.

Mr. Hees: The hon. member accused the minister of indulging in doubletalk. I think he was being very kind.

Mr. Stevens: Mr. Speaker, would the Minister of Finance inform the House whether he is aware that the proposed wage settlement in the elevator constructors' strike would result, possibly, in a 97 per cent wage and fringe benefit increase in that industry within the next five years, or about three times as large an increase as was awarded in the comparable settlement in the United States where the same parties in that country were bound by the Nixon guidelines?

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Stevens: I know the minister—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member is making a speech. He is not asking a question. The hon. member for St. John's East on a supplementary.

ELEVATOR CONSTRUCTORS' STRIKE—SUGGESTED FEDERAL PARTICIPATION IN INDUSTRIAL INQUIRY COMMISSION

Mr. James A. McGrath (St. John's East): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a supplementary question to the Minister of Labour. As the Liberal government of Nova Scotia proposes, with the other provinces, to set up a provincial industrial disputes commission to get around the niceties of the constitution, is the minister prepared to use his good offices and the facilities at his disposal, to assist in the setting up of the commission and to work closely with the provinces in order to bring about the settlement of this costly dispute?

Hon. John C. Munro (Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, aside from the question of whether the setting up of a commission would rapidly settle the dispute, which is a very open question in itself, I have already said that, because of the serious economic implications of this strike, I and the government would be prepared to assist in any possible way but that we must have a basis upon which to act and that must come from the provinces.

ENERGY

OIL—EASTERN CANADA SUPPLY—FEASIBILITY STUDY ON PIPELINE EXTENSION—ASSURANCE OF SUPPLY BY UNITED STATES

Mr. T. C. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources arising out of the announcement that there is to be a substantial increase in the price of Venezuelan crude oil. As the area east of the Ottawa River is largely dependent on this source of supply, I want to ask the minister whether his department or the National Energy Board have completed the feasibility study on extension of the interprovincial pipeline, which his predecessor announced was under way, and whether the findings of that study will be made available to members of the House?

[Mr. Speaker.]

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): No, Mr. Speaker. I remind the hon. member that the price differential between Montreal and western oil is between 90 cents and $1. Even if the Venezuela price goes up, it will still be substantially below the Canadian supplier.

Mr. Douglas: Mr. Speaker, I asked whether the study is under way or is completed. In view of the discussions that have been going on between the minister and his counterpart in the United States government regarding contingency plans to ensure security of supply for eastern Canada in the event of a crisis, can the minister tell the House whether he has received any assurance from the United States government regarding security of supplies for eastern Canada apart from the promise they would put forth their best endeavours to see that oil would be made available to eastern Canada?

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): Mr. Speaker, as I have told the House several times, there is no agreement between the two governments at the moment. Officials will be meeting to negotiate further possible terms, but at the moment there is no formal arrangement between the two governments.

POSSIBLE RELATIONSHIP BETWEEN AUTO PACT TERMS AND SUPPLYING OF LARGE QUANTITIES OF OIL AND GAS TO UNITED STATES

Mr. T. C. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a supplementary question to the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce. In view of reports that the United States Senate interior committee, chaired by Senator Jackson, secured information from White House officials to the effect that favourable terms for the Canada-U.S. auto pact would be dependent upon Canada agreeing to supply large quantities of oil and gas to the United States, I ask the minister whether, in the trade discussions that have been carried on with the Americans, the supply of large quantities of oil and gas to the United States is the price Canadians will have to pay to get favourable terms in the auto pact?

Hon. Alastair Gillespie (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): No, Mr. Speaker.

SOCIAL SECURITY

CO-ORDINATION OF PENSIONS PAID UNDER QUEBEC AND CANADA PENSION PLANS

Mr. Gérard Laprise (Abitibi): Mr. Speaker, I would like to put a question to the Minister of National Health and Welfare.

In view of the fact that the government of the province of Quebec has granted substantial increases for certain categories of pensions under the Quebec Pension Plan, does the minister intend to inform the House whether there will be a readjustment of the Canada Pension Plan payments at a rate at least equal to those paid by Quebec?

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, this proposal was put forward as early as 1970 by the federal government. New proposals were also made recently. However, any amendment to the Canada Pension Plan must be agreed to by two thirds of the provinces having two thirds of the population. It has been impossible to date to reach an agreement with the provinces.

REGIONAL ECONOMIC EXPANSION

POSSIBLE DESIGNATION OF AREAS WEST OF REVELSTOKE, B.C.

Mr. Bill Clarke (Vancouver Quadra): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the Minister of Regional Economic Expansion. In view of the recent unemployment figures which indicate that the rate of unemployment in British Columbia has increased to 9.9 per cent and is now one of the highest in the country, is the minister prepared to designate any areas as depressed areas west of Revelstoke, which is now the most westerly designated area?

Hon. Donald C. Jamieson (Minister of Regional Economic Expansion): Mr. Speaker, we are prepared to consider new areas or changes in existing areas. The initiative in such cases generally comes from the provinces. We will be having further discussions with the government of British Columbia on this question, hopefully within the next two or three weeks.

TRADE

CANADA-UNITED STATES—ACTION TO REOPEN NEGOTIATIONS—CANADIAN PROPOSALS FOR REVAMPING INTERNATIONAL MONETARY SYSTEM

Hon. Paul Hellyer (Trinity): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce. In view of the fact that the trade relationship between Canada and the United States is taken much more seriously in Washington than here, has the minister now decided to take the initiative in reopening negotiations in order to seek an early reconciliation?

Hon. Alastair Gillespie (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): Mr. Speaker, I do not accept the premise of the question at all. We regard our trading relationship with the United States as most important. Probably the greatest trading relationship in the world is that between our two countries.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Hellyer: I would be most obliged to the minister if he would answer my question. Does he not agree that it would be in Canada's best interests to recommence negotiations at once before the United States trade bill has been finalized and presented to Congress?

Mr. Gillespie: As I have told the House on previous occasions, discussions have taken place between United States and Canadian officials. Discussions are going forward now, and further discussions will take place. The very nature of the relationship between our two trading countries is such that irritants are bound to arise from time to time and there will be continuing discussions. It is very much an ongoing process, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Hellyer: I have one more supplementary, directed to the Minister of Finance. In view of the widely held belief that there can be no rational solution to world trading problems until the international monetary system has been thoroughly revamped, can the minister advise us whether Canada has presented the committee of 20 with any specific proposals for reform?

Hon. John N. Turner (Minister of Finance): Yes, Mr. Speaker. Last May I spoke to the international bankers' conference in Montreal. I followed that up with a proposal to the international monetary conference in September. We further refined our proposal two or three weeks ago in Washington during the meeting of deputies of the committee of 20 and I shall be in Washington on March 26 and 27 to explain it even more fully.

Mr. Hellyer: Will you tell us tonight what that proposal is?

POSSIBLE EFFECT OF CANADIAN OIL EXPORT CONTROLS ON UNITED STATES ATTITUDE TOWARD NEGOTIATIONS ON OTHER MATTERS

Hon. Robert L. Stanfield (Leader of the Opposition): I have a supplementary to the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce arising out of suggestion in the press that some of his counterparts in the United States regard the controls placed upon the export of Canadian oil as perhaps a political move. What steps has the minister taken to assure his counterparts in the United States that the controls placed upon the export of Canadian oil to the United States are really necessary, in view of the effect these restrictions might have on the attitude of the United States toward negotiations on other matters?

Hon. Alastair Gillespie (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): In this matter, as in other matters of importance between our two countries, consultations have taken place. United States officials were made aware of our intended action before the announcement.

Mr. Stanfield: Is that all you did? Sounds pretty careless.

Mr. Eldon M. Woolliams (Calgary North): I should like to ask the minister a question in the light of his answer to my hon. friend, the Leader of the Opposition. If there was consultation, did the United States officials agree to these controls? Did they acquiesce in them? Did they say they were necessary?

Mr. Sharp: Do you want them to make our policy?

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Perhaps I might respond. The United States was advised in advance. Canada did not feel it necessary to seek approval or disapproval of any American officials in this regard.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

COMMUNICATIONS

POSITION OF CANADIAN BROADCASTING CORPORATION ON PROPOSED POLICE CONTROL OVER NEWS DURING CRISES—STUDY BY CANADIAN RADIO-TELEVISION COMMISSION

Mr. R. Gordon L. Fairweather (Fundy-Royal): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Secretary of State of which I gave notice on Friday. Will the minister advise what assurance he has received from the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation that it will not be a party to an illiberal proposal which would give the police a measure of control over news during crises—a proposal which has been quite rightly criticized by the police association?

Hon. James Hugh Faulkner (Secretary of State): I should like to thank the hon. member for having given me notice of his question. I am informed by the CBC that the CBC is in no way a party to any possible control of information by the police or others.

Mr. Fairweather: Can the minister tell us whether the Canadian Radio-Television Commission is taking any action to study this plan which could result, if implemented, in a serious limitation of press freedom? I suppose I ought to direct that question to the Minister of Communications.

[Translation]

Hon. Gérard Pelletier (Minister of Communications): Mr. Speaker, as it became evident, after a letter was sent to both broadcasting associations by the chairman of the CRTC, this agency was not aware at all of those agreements and an explanation by the broadcasters was requested.

[English]

PROPOSED POLICE CONTROL OF NEWS DURING CRISES—POSITION OF ROYAL CANADIAN MOUNTED POLICE

Mr. Erik Nielsen (Yukon): I have a supplementary question for the Solicitor General. May I ask whether any policy is being evolved within the police security planning and research group to step into this field should they assess a situation as one which affects national security?

Hon. Warren Allmand (Solicitor General): There has been no plan, no agreement whatsoever, by the RCMP or the police security planning group with respect to this matter. There had been a meeting between the former Solicitor General and the radio broadcasters, but it was merely with respect to the forcible occupancy of radio stations during crises such as the general strike last year. It had nothing to do with respect to direction of news or control of news.

GRAIN

DISCUSSIONS TO EXPEDITE DELIVERY OF QUOTAS BY SASKATCHEWAN FARMERS

Mr. A. P. Gleave (Saskatoon-Biggar): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the minister in charge of the Canadian Wheat Board. Further to the questions that have been directed to the minister in the past several weeks in regard to plugged grain elevators in Saskatchewan, can the minister inform the House whether he has held discussions with the transportation committee and/or the Canadian Wheat Board and received any assurance that farmers who have been unable to deliver their quotas will be able to do so?

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister of Justice): Mr. Speaker, we have been having regular discussions, both at the official level and between myself and the Canadian Wheat Board, about the expeditious movement of grain. Certainly the basic position of the Wheat Board is that there will be an adequate opportunity for delivery of grain during the course of the current crop year. In addition, special consideration will be given to granting additional time for deliveries at any elevator point that is congested at the termination date for a delivery quota.

[Translation]

Mr. Beaudoin: Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Speaker: I apologize to the hon. member for Richmond—

[English]

The hon. member for Saskatoon-Biggar has a supplementary so perhaps he should be allowed to ask his supplementary and then I will recognize the hon. member for Richmond.

Mr. Gleave: Mr. Speaker, since this situation has existed for some time, may I ask the minister whether he has had conversations with the elevator companies and the Canadian Wheat Board regarding the congestion that exists at these delivery points, and will he report to the House in the very near future on what action he is going to take in the near future, not next August?

Mr. Lang: Mr. Speaker, there have been such conversations and the action that is being taken has already been indicated to the House.

POST OFFICE

WINDSOR, QUE.—PROVISION OF DOOR TO DOOR MAIL DELIVERY

Mr. Léonel Beaudoin (Richmond): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the hon. Postmaster General.

Since the authorities of Windsor in my riding have made representations to the hon. minister to obtain home delivery within the city boundaries, would the hon. minister tell us if his department intends to respond favourably to this request? If so, when will this be done?

Hon. André Ouellet (Postmaster General): Mr. Speaker, following the request made by the Windsor authorities, I have asked my senior officers to conduct a new inquiry which will determine if this municipality can indeed be advantaged by a postman service which would distribute the mail. If this inquiry establishes that the locality now has 2,000 delivery points, I can assure the hon. member that we will provide such a service as quickly as possible.

TRANSPORT

RAILWAY FREIGHT RATES—DISCUSSIONS WITH ATLANTIC PROVINCES

Mr. Charles H. Thomas (Moncton): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the right hon. Prime Minister. In view of the throne speech promise to meet with the provincial governments to discuss and examine the impact of freight rates on economic development and consumer prices, and in view of the statement emanating from the recent Halifax meeting that the initiative rests with the federal government and the railways, will the Prime Minister tell the House what action has been taken to implement this throne speech promise?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, the Minister of Transport has announced in the House a few times that such meetings either had gone on or were contemplated. In my letters to the premiers of the provinces regarding a federal-provincial conference of first ministers, I indicated that at this level we would be looking at the result of meetings between the ministers of transport of the various provinces and the federal government.

Mr. Thomas (Moncton): I have a supplementary question, Mr. Speaker, which I will direct to the Minister of Transport. Since the railways have reportedly told the maritime premiers that freight rates should be determined by market forces without consideration of the national interest, is the minister now prepared to meet immediately with the premiers and the railways and to make some decision regarding the responsibilities of our national carriers and what type of assistance should be provided in lieu of freight rate increases?

[Translation]

Hon. Jean Marchand (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, we intend to meet the maritime premiers as soon as possible so as to have an exhaustive discussion on freight rates and I think I will be able to do it within the next few weeks.

STUDY OF PROBLEMS AFFECTING WESTERN CANADA

Mr. Don Mazankowski (Vegreville): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary for the Minister of Transport which also arises out of the throne speech.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I hope that the question is a supplementary, though I would doubt that, simply because a question also refers to the throne speech, it really would be a supplementary. I think an effort is being made this afternoon by hon. members, certainly by the Chair, to recognize as many members as possible by permitting as few supplementaries as possible. However, I recognize the hon. member for Vegreville.

Mr. Mazankowski: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, but with all due respect I believe I have a right to be heard. My question has to do with the study due to take place in co-operation with the western provinces respecting transportation needs. In light of the fact the minister indicated that a meeting was going to be held with the maritime provinces, can the minister outline to the House when this study of transportation problems affecting the west is going to take place?

[Translation]

Hon. Jean Marchand (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, at the beginning it had been almost agreed that CNR and CPR officials would meet the premiers or, at least, representatives of the prairie provinces. If the latter want to consult each other prior to meeting the railway officials before the end of March, I think we will be able to meet them after this meeting and have an exhaustive discussion on the freight rates.

NATIONAL PARKS

PROVISION OF FACILITIES FOR SKIING

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prince Albert): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask a question of the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development having to do with requests that have been made for ski facilities in various national parks across Canada. Would the minister let the House and the country know whether any decision has been made by the government with respect to the requests for such physical facilities for skiing to be provided in these various parks either by the government or by private industry?

[Translation]

Hon. Jean Chrétien (Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): Mr. Speaker, until now in all national parks the government did not create any ski trails at Jasper or Banff; they have been created by private industry in compliance with government regulations. We have not developed any specific program relating to ski facilities in national parks, but I understand that the right hon. member would like to know the situation in the Prince Albert park. We are currently studying this situation and no decision has been taken as yet.

[English]

Mr. Diefenbaker: Mr. Speaker, may I thank the minister for giving an explanation of this matter. Can he give the House any idea when a decision will be made, since we have no ski facilities in the park in northern Saskatchewan?

[Translation]

Mr. Chrétien: Mr. Speaker, I quite understand the problem of the right hon. member for Prince Albert. It seems, however, that to date private industry has not been interested in creating a ski centre in the Prince Albert park. As for the government, it has never created any ski centre in any national park.

VETERANS AFFAIRS

POSSIBILITY OF INCREASE IN WAR VETERANS ALLOWANCES AND DISABILITY PENSIONS

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the Minister of Veterans Affairs. In view of the welcome assurance he gave on Friday to the effect that there will soon be an announcement of government policy respecting the ceiling on permissible income under the War Veterans Allowance Act, can the minister say whether that announcement of government policy will also include proposals to increase the amount of the war veterans allowance and the amount of the basic disability pension under the Pension Act?

Hon. Daniel J. MacDonald (Minister of Veterans Affairs): Mr. Speaker, in a reply to the hon. member may I say that the government is giving this matter consideration and that an announcement will be made shortly.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Might it be tonight?

ELIGIBILITY OF PEACE RIVER FARMERS FOR SPECIAL ASSISTANCE IN LIGHT OF ADVANCE PAYMENTS BY WHEAT BOARD—FORECLOSURE PROCEEDINGS

Mr. F. Oberle (Prince George-Peace River): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the minister responsible for the Wheat Board. In view of the government's policy of assisting Canadian farmers in adverse positions with advance payments for their products under the policy of the Wheat Board, is the minister aware that the Wheat Board is informing the recipients of such advances in the Peace River country that as a result of such loans they do not qualify for any assistance announced by the Minister of Agriculture a couple of weeks ago?

• (1440)

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister of Justice): No, Mr. Speaker, I certainly was not aware of that. I would be happy if the hon. member would let me have the evidence of such a report and I will take it up from there.

Mr. Oberle: Mr. Speaker, is the minister aware that the Wheat Board is threatening or starting foreclosure proceedings against some farmers in the Peace River country?

Some hon. Members: Shame!

Mr. Lang: Mr. Speaker, the exact words used by the hon. member may be inaccurate. The Wheat Board is taking civil action to collect moneys which have been owing on cash advances sometimes for as long a period as four or five years. This action is necessary in order to give the Wheat Board appropriate priority in respect of the claims against the farmer who was indebted and did promise to deliver grain but has not done so. Needless to say, the question of what action will be taken after the actual issuance of a writ is a matter for further consideration by the Wheat Board, but the issuance of a writ is frequently necessary to protect the claim.

FINANCE

BANK OF CANADA ACTION RESPECTING EXCHANGE RATE DURING MONETARY CRISIS—REPRESENTATIONS BY UNITED STATES

Hon. Marcel Lambert (Edmonton West): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Finance. In light of comments by Secretary of the Treasury Shultz regarding the action of the Canadian government in evening out movement of exchange rates over the past fortnight, can the minister indicate whether he has received any direct representations from the United States government in respect of the action by the Bank of Canada during the recent currency crisis?

Hon. John N. Turner (Minister of Finance): No, Mr. Speaker, we have received no communication from the United States authorities, nor have I received any comment directly from the Secretary of the Treasury of the United States. In looking over the reports of his statement this morning, there seemed to be some contradiction in the various reports and I should like to check to see what he really said. I want to reassert to the House that exchange fund intervention is only to maintain an orderly market, and I want to assure both the Canadian people and Secretary Shultz that we have a clean float.

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): Mr. Speaker, will the minister advise whether he or any of the officials of the Bank of Canada received any direct intimation that the United States would like the Canadian dollar to float at an appreciable premium over the United States dollar?

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): Mr. Speaker, what the United States wants and what Canada feels would be in the best interest of Canada may be different on that particular score, but whatever it is we are allowing the market forces to fix the value of the Canadian dollar.

MANPOWER

SUGGESTED ALTERATION OF ON-THE-JOB TRAINING PROGRAM TO PERMIT MUNICIPAL PARTICIPATION

Mr. Derek Blackburn (Brant): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the Minister of Manpower and Immigration whether the terms of the on-the-job training program could be altered to permit municipal participation, and whether the January 31 deadline could be extended to permit municipalities to submit applications?

Hon. Robert K. Andras (Minister of Manpower and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, the first part of the question involves a matter to which I would give consideration, but the second part is more pertinent since all the funds have now been committed.

SUGGESTED USE OF RETRAINING AND OTHER PROGRAMS TO ASSIST WORKERS LAID OFF BECAUSE OF CLOSING OF NEWFOUNDLAND STEEL MILL

Mr. James A. McGrath (St. John's East): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct my question to the Minister of Manpower and Immigration. In view of the announced shutdown of the Newfoundland Steel Mill in St. John's, putting over 200 men out of work, and in view of the fact that many of these people are unskilled, I would ask the minister whether he has had discussions with the province with a view to bringing into force some of the provisions of the manpower retraining and other programs to assist in the already chronically high unemployment situation there?

Hon. Robert K. Andras (Minister of Manpower and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, we will do everything in our power to accommodate the hon. member's suggestion. Discussions are now under way.

Mr. Reg Stackhouse (Scarborough East): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of State for Urban Affairs in connection with the elevator constructors' strike. I direct this question to him in his capacity as the minister in charge of Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation which is the corporation most affected by this strike. What initiative has the minister or his department or CMHC taken to influence a settlement of this strike which is affecting so disastrously the completion of 100,000 dwelling units?

Hon. Ron Basford (Minister of State for Urban Affairs): Mr. Speaker, there is no basis for intervention by CMHC in this situation. Occasionally, when complaints have been made to it, it has referred them to provincial authorities.

Oral Questions

TRANSPORT

PROVISION OF RAILWAY CARS TO MOVE BRITISH COLUMBIA APPLES

Mr. G. H. Whittaker (Okanagan Boundary): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Transport. In view of the fact that British Columbia fruit growers are daily losing export business to the United States because of the lack of rail cars, and in view of the fact they have had to haul apples and load 79 cars in the United States on U.S. carriers, will the minister tell the House why Canadian National Railways is not making cars available to ship these apples?

Hon. Jean Marchand (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I will make an inquiry into the situation and report to the hon. gentleman shortly.

POSSIBLE DUMPING OF TORONTO GARBAGE BY CANADIAN PACIFIC RAILWAY IN HOPE TOWNSHIP, COUNTY OF DURHAM

Mr. Allan Lawrence (Northumberland-Durham): Mr. Speaker, my question is also directed to the Minister of Transport. Mr. Fairweather: Garbage is a provincial responsibility.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Lawrence: Mr. Speaker, can the minister inform us whether there will be a representative of his department at the press conference being called this afternoon in Port Hope by Canadian Pacific Railway?

OFFICIAL LANGUAGES ACT

QUEBEC—PUBLICATION OF GENDRON REPORT—POSSIBILITY OF AMENDING SECTION 133 OF B.N.A. ACT

Mr. John Harney (Scarborough West): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the right hon. Prime Minister.

Since recommendations of the Gendron report have effectively been published and are being widely discussed, particularly in the province of Quebec, may we, in this House, expect a statement from the Prime Minister or his government concerning the section of the report dealing specifically with the possibility of amending the British North America Act Section 133?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, as far as I know, the Quebec government has not released the Gendron report as yet. I personally have not examined it. I will take the hon. member's question as notice and immediately upon release of the report we shall certainly want to study the aspect mentioned by the hon. member.

[English]

Mr. Speaker: I apologize to the hon. member for Humber-St. George's-St. Barbe, but the hon. member for Scarborough West has a supplementary question. The hon. member will be recognized immediately following that.

Mr. Harney: Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary.

Considering that the report has not yet been published officially but that the people of the province of Quebec have a very good knowledge of what is in it since it was published in the newspaper Le Devoir and the editor of that newspaper commented upon it quite seriously this morning, would the Prime Minister be prepared to comment on that subject?

Mr. Trudeau: Mr. Speaker, I should like to assure the hon. member and the House that on the linguistic question and its relationships to the constitution the government has actually held rather firm positions. We submitted the issue at the Victoria conference two years ago and, at the time, the government of the province of Quebec indicated that it would prefer to wait until the report of the Gendron Commission had been published before taking a final position on the subject. So, the first comments will have to come from the government of the province of Quebec. The federal government indicated once again its desire to guarantee both official languages in the constitution and we came within a hair's breadth of doing it in Victoria two years ago.

NATIONAL PARKS

NEWFOUNDLAND—POLICY RESPECTING RELOCATION OF PEOPLE AGAINST THEIR WILL

Mr. Jack Marshall (Humber-St. George's-St. Barbe): Mr. Speaker, I am glad you let me sit down for a couple of minutes so I could get over the shock. I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development. In view of the hardship being caused to citizens and communities by the establishment of national parks, would the minister indicate to the House whether he is considering changing the policy so that people will not be moved against their will?

[Translation]

Hon. Jean Chrétien (Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): Mr. Speaker, the question of relocating people when we set up a national park is always of the highest concern for the government but I wish to inform the hon. member that this relocation of people is done by provincial authorities and I would be very happy to discuss the issue with Newfoundland authorities. I discussed the matter with the Minister of Regional Economic Expansion a few days ago and I would be very happy to discuss it with the government of the province of Newfoundland.

[English]

Mr. Marshall: In view of the fact that the Bill of Rights gives Canadians the right to life, liberty, security of the person and enjoyment of property, and the right not to be deprived thereof, would the minister renegotiate with the province of Newfoundland that portion of the memorandum of agreement establishing boundaries which will force citizens to be relocated against their will?

[Translation]

Mr. Chrétien: It is obvious, Mr. Speaker, that the government's intervention in the establishment of a service for the whole population often implies the relocation of people. We proceed through expropriations and I must say that in the present case, the expropriation and relocation procedures are under provincial jurisdiction. However, if they want to discuss the boundaries again with me, I would be willing to consider any request.

URBAN AFFAIRS

PROPOSED TORONTO WATERFRONT PARK

Mr. John Gilbert (Broadview): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development. In view of the statement by the Secretary of State for External Affairs just prior to the October 30 election that the federal government would finance an $80 million waterfront park in Toronto, what steps has the minister taken to implement that election promise?

[Translation]

Hon. Jean Chrétien (Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): Mr. Speaker, in that case it is not a national park but only a park within the city of Toronto and I think that the matter falls under the jurisdiction of the Department of Urban Affairs.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

REPRESENTATIONS ON BEHALF OF RONALD PATRICK LIPPERT IMPRISONED IN CUBA

Mr. Tom Cossitt (Leeds): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Secretary of State for External Affairs on the matter of Ronald Patrick Lippert, a Canadian citizen from Kitchener, Ontario, imprisoned in Cuba for the past ten years. Last night on the CBC program "Weekend" it was stated that the minister had announced that the Canadian government has made representations to the Cuban government for the release of Mr. Lippert on humanitarian grounds. In view of the fact the minister did not give such a forthright answer in the House when I previously asked him, as recently as last Wednesday, to take such action, would the minister advise the House whether he was misquoted by the CBC or whether at long last the government has decided that it should make such representations to the Cuban government for the release of Mr. Lippert?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, if the hon. gentleman will look at my answer in the House he will find that it is quite consistent with the statement I made outside. The question I was asked outside the House was a little more specific than the one he put to me. If he had asked me the same question, I would have given him exactly the same answer.

Mr. Cossitt: Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the Secretary of State for External Affairs a supplementary question. Last Thursday Mr. Rene Anillo of the foreign affairs department of the Republic of Cuba was in Ottawa for the signing of the hijacking treaty with Canada. Did the minister take that opportunity, as I did myself, to discuss the case of Ronald Patrick Lippert with Mr. Anillo? If the minister did discuss this matter with him, is he in a position to give a report on the matter? If he did not discuss it with Mr. Anillo, can he tell the House why he did not?

Mr. Sharp: Mr. Speaker, I am sure that all hon. members welcomed the reason for which the Cuban vice-minister was here, namely, to sign an anti-hijacking agreement with Canada. That was a very good reason to be here. I have great confidence in our ambassador to Cuba who has been making representations at the right level, which is even above that of the vice-minister. I thank the hon. member for making his personal representations and I hope they will help.

FITNESS AND AMATEUR SPORTS

ANNUAL REPORT FOR YEAR ENDED MARCH 31, 1972—PROVISION OF FUNDS TO TRAIN ATHLETES FOR 1976 OLYMPIC GAMES

Mr. Otto Jelinek (High Park-Humber Valley): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of National Health and Welfare. In view of the fact that, according to section 13 of the Fitness and Amateur Sports Act, the minister is eight months late in submitting the annual report of the department to parliament for the fiscal year ended March 31, 1972, and thus is in direct violation of the provisions of the said act, can the minister tell the House why this report has not been submitted to date and when we can expect it to be submitted?

[Translation]

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, if the facts are indeed as the hon. member has reported them, then I regret it infinitely; I shall look into the matter to find out exactly what the situation is in that regard.

[English]

Mr. Jelinek: I should like to assure the minister that those are the facts. I have a supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. In light of the fact that the government is suggesting a $14.5 million grant for fitness and amateur sports for the fiscal year beginning April 1, 1973, and in view of the fact that many sports bodies are patiently trying to prepare athletes from across Canada for the 1976 Olympic games, can the minister tell the House whether he is planning to use the $14.5 million toward aid to Montreal or for assistance in developing a respectable team to represent Canada in 1976, and if in fact we can expect a budget on this matter and when?

[Translation]

Mr. Lalonde: Mr. Speaker, above all I should like the supplementary estimates for 1972-73 to be passed as soon as possible to help with the development of our athletes.

With regard to the budget for next year, just as it happens every year, part of the money will be spent on training Canadian athletes, on developing their physical excellence, not only in preparation for the 1976 Olympic Games but also for the winter games and all other amateur sports manifestations in Canada and abroad.

[English]

Mr. Speaker: There are a number of hon. members seeking to ask supplementary questions. Perhaps they might be asked tomorrow because we have gone beyond the question period. Orders of the day.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

SUPPLY

APPROPRIATION ACT No. 1, 1973

The House resumed, from Friday, February 16, consideration in committee of Bill C-141, for granting to Her Majesty certain sums of money for the public service for the financial year ending 31st March, 1973—Mr. MacEachen (for Mr. Drury)—Mr. McCleave in the chair.

On clause 2—Schedule.

The Chairman: Order, please. When the committee rose on Friday, February 16, Votes 5a, 10a and 15a in the schedule relating to the Department of Manpower and Immigration were under consideration and the hon. member for Timiskaming had the floor.

• (1500)

Mr. Peters: Mr. Chairman, when I spoke on this estimate on Friday afternoon I ran into some flack and was surprised to find the violent objection that was expressed by some of the hon. members to one of the statements I had made. I said that the Department of Manpower and Immigration was developed mainly for a specific minister who had considerable experience in the trade movement in Quebec, and had considerable expertise in the field of labour relations.

[Mr. Lalonde.]

I am sure that at the time the department was established it was thought that this would give him an opportunity to develop the kind of training that would allow people to cope with technological change, that is, people displaced because of technological change, and it would also enable him to establish the kind of relationship that would encourage all employers and employees to deal with the government employment agency. As most hon. members are aware, under the previous system the Unemployment Insurance Service handled both employment and unemployment. For many years it was a simple operation. A person went into an unemployment insurance office or national employment agency and made application for a job. If he was unemployed, he went across the office to another counter where he also made application for unemployment insurance benefits, and benefits were paid if the proper contributions had beem made.

When we established the Department of Manpower and Immigration we retained the fundamental concept that a person obtaining unemployment insurance must first register with Manpower, and benefits could not be drawn unless notification was received from Manpower of his registration. Save for this exception, Manpower was totally divorced from the unemployment insurance agency. It was divorced to the extent that Manpower officials were instructed not to help, in any way, shape or form, those who were illiterate and who wished to fill out application forms to receive unemployment insurance benefits. In my opinion, and in the opinion of most people, we made a bad mistake at that time.

There were several reasons for making that mistake. When the then minister of manpower came into office, he brought with him the view that the responsibility for education in all stages was a provincial responsibility. It is a view that I do not share. The old National Employment Service had established what was known as Program V. It was a retraining program. The service had hired instructors and established schools across Canada. In effect, it was training people for technical jobs, jobs for which they could apply in any province. The new minister of manpower violently disagreed with that program. He was of the opinion that educational services had to be obtained through the provinces. As a result, this meant that the qualifications for a plumber in one province were no longer applicable in another province. We had varying provincial standards rather than national standards.

Employers found Manpower totally unsatisfactory for another reason. They discovered that Manpower never really established employment qualifications. When a man comes into Manpower and says, "I drive a truck," he is listed as a truck driver. Those who talk about people getting unemployment insurance and beating the system often point out that there are trucking jobs available for truck drivers. Mr. Chairman, for the first time in my area we recently had three major projects that required the use of 30 ton and 40 ton trucks, able to handle immense loads. Driving one of those trucks is a totally different proposition for the man who comes into Manpower and is registered as a truck driver simply because he was raised on a farm and could drive a half-ton truck.

On occasion the local Manpower office would send out such a person to drive a Euclid, or to drive a truck in the iron pits, or a truck at the very large hydro project in my area. And in many cases those men hurt themselves, and totally destroyed the trucks because they were unable to handle them. Manpower has never been able to establish the qualifications of people registering with it. As a result management reserves the right to do that. Further, Manpower has found that many employers will not accept its referrals. They demand that a referral come to their offices and go through their own employment services.

I see that the minister who was previously in charge of unemployment insurance has arrived in the chamber. He was well aware of that problem, and under the provisions of the new act he established an employee adviser committee. In fact, such a committee in many areas became an employment agency because it was in a position to decide on the qualifications of the individuals making application.

In my opinion, the Manpower officials in my area have done a very good job. They have solicited all employers in the area. They have made every effort to get a job for every unemployed person registering with them. But this is not the case in all areas. I can think of another office not too far away which has ten or 12 employees, and it would be safe to say that they do not place as many people as that in employment in a month. The only employment being provided is in fact in that office. I suggest that we must re-unite these two departments. The Department of Manpower is not serving the role for which it was intended. It is not serving it either in the educational field, in the retraining field, or in the placement field.

As you know, Mr. Chairman, many unions have gone into the employment field. They have done so on a simple basis. They use a hiring hall. They have the ability to assess and guarantee the type of training of the person sent to do a particular job. Here I think particularly of the SIU who will send out a person to a ship knowing full well that he can do the job. They know his experience, and it is almost impossible for them to make a poor referral, unless on moral or character grounds. As I say, they know the qualifications of the individuals concerned. The Department of Manpower is not in that position. With Manpower obtaining education through the provinces, the result has been the development of provincial standards rather than national standards. If you want a national employment agency that works, you must establish national standards, and we are not yet capable of doing that. Mr. Chairman, we should bring this matter to a head and decide what we are going to do with the Department of Manpower and Immigration. I do not think that the functions of that department can be satisfactorily divorced from the functions of the Unemployment Insurance Commission. I believe that if a person is unemployed he should be able to draw his benefits in the same place that he seeks employment; the two agencies must be united.

I am surprised that the unemployment insurance offices have drawn up what they call a job search statement. Apparently, they are hiring a large number of policemen around the country to take people off the unemployment insurance rolls, not to provide them with jobs nor make any effort to find jobs for them, but just to take them off the unemployment insurance rolls so that they can then apply for welfare. This means that in Ontario, and perhaps Quebec, a job search statement has to be completed by the applicant indicating that he has sought employment in a number of places. I suggest that this means then, that the manpower office is not really a national employment agency.

For this reason, Mr. Chairman, I consulted the main estimates to find out what the Department of Manpower and Immigration is supposed to do and on page 14-10 is the following statement:

Objective—To further the economic growth of Canada by endeavouring to ensure that the supply of manpower matches the demand qualitatively, quantitatively and geographically.

Then, follows a statement of the secondary objectives as follows:

—To help individuals select and obtain productive and personally satisfactory employment through efficient counselling in Canada Manpower Centres.
—To increase the level of skill of the labour force through adult occupational training, thereby providing needed skills for industry and raising productivity.
—To facilitate the adjustment of labour market demand and supply by helping workers relocate to the nearest areas where suitable, more productive employment exists.
—To help members of the labour force and employers adapt to technological and other changes.
—To help reduce fluctuations in employment and shorten the period of unemployment.

Mr. Chairman, in my area those objectives are not being pursued and I suggest they are not being pursued in most areas. For that reason, Mr. Chairman, I move that Vote 5a be reduced by $11,689,860 since the department has failed to provide for the needs of unemployed Canadian workers.

The Chairman: Order. The hon. member for Timiskaming has moved that Vote 5a be reduced by $11,689,860 since the department has failed to provide for the needs of unemployed Canadian workers. The Chairman has doubts about the rider that is attached after the figures, and would have to ask hon. members to address themselves to a point of order to show the Chair that the latter part of the amendment is in order. Otherwise, I would have to say that the amendment is not in order.

Mr. Nielsen: Mr. Chairman, is the amendment available so that members may look at it?

Mr. Peters: Mr. Chairman, I would be very pleased to withdraw the rider. I agree that there is probably some question whether there should be a rider.

The Chairman: If hon. members will refer to page 7 of the schedule they will understand the motion. The Chair has only one copy, and I presume no other exists. It is the first vote under Manpower and Immigration, Vote 5a and the motion of the hon. member for Timiskaming is:

That Vote 5a be reduced by $11,689,860.

Is the committee ready for the question?

Some hon. Members: Question.

Mr. Barnett: Mr. Chairman, I think it should be readily apparent to members of the committee that the effect of this motion would be to reduce the amount of money in that particular item in the schedule to the sum of one dollar, and I am sure hon. members are well aware of the import of such a motion. It should be pointed out that we are dealing with a supplementary estimate, one which increases the amount originally proposed by the government for expenditure in this particular area.

This motion is very timely because the government's spending program for the Department of Manpower and Immigration needs a thorough examination with a view to the possible elimination of the expenditure of millions of dollars which have been provided for one of its programs. As the hon. member for Timiskaming pointed out, in the main estimates a secondary objective is stated as being:

—To help individuals select and obtain productive and personally satisfactory employment through efficient counselling in Canada Manpower Centres.

I merely read that to lend weight to the point the hon. member for Timiskaming was trying to make through his amendment. Doubtless some of the programs for retraining and upgrading are useful, but some of my constituents tell me of their frustrations in trying to collect unemployment insurance benefits and trying to "obtain productive and personally satisfactory employment through efficient counselling in Canada Manpower Centres". In the last three or four years, hundreds of individuals have complained to me about getting the run around at the manpower centres and their complete frustration at going back again and again for nothing. I know of some people who have been denied benefits on the ground that they are not seeking actively enough to get a job. They have become so frustrated about the lack of help from the manpower centres that they have finally thrown up their hands in despair.

People spend months looking for jobs, going to manpower offices and getting the old "don't call us, we'll call you" routine. Some of my constituents are so frustrated that they have told me they consider the government's chief contribution to solving the problem of unemployment has been giving jobs to people who sit in Canada manpower offices and do nothing—to use the language of some of them—but sit around and pick their noses. When loyal Canadian citizens reach the point at which they are so frustrated by the activities of a department of government that, bluntly and publicly, they use the kind of language about the people in that department, then I suggest there is something seriously wrong with that operation, something which well justifies the kind of motion which the hon. member for Timiskaming has brought forward. Hon. members of the committee ought to think about it. For what purpose are we voting these billions of dollars in this appropriation bill? I imagine several million Canadians are wondering exactly that at this moment, and I think it is time this committee took a darned good look at the proposal to grant supplementary funds for the kind of purpose to which I have been alluding.

If there are not jobs available, and if the people in the Canada Manpower offices cannot serve any useful function in guiding people to useful and productive work, why keep those offices open? Why not cut down that operation and assist some of those programs involving retraining that may be useful in helping people obtain work. I am not critical of the individuals in my constituency who work in the Manpower offices. Some of them have been doing a conscientious job, and they have become very frustrated indeed. All the same, in my constituency there are four Canada Manpower Centres, three of which until recently have been staffed with several people. In one small office one person was employed for a while; I think there are two so employed now. At the same time, until recently, in my constituency there was not one man employed by the federal government who could answer a single question on how to go about filling out an unemployment insurance claim.

[The Chairman.]

Some hon. Members: Shame.

Mr. Barnett: Mr. Chairman, there are four Canada Manpower offices in my constituency and, until recently, not one single person employed in those offices was qualified to advise a person on how to become qualified for unemployment insurance benefits or tell a person whether or not he was eligible.

I remember some years ago there was some discussion in the House when we had reason to feel that our immigration department and the national employment service, then incorporated with the Unemployment Insurance Commission, were going their separate ways. Some members may recall how the then minister of immigration went to Italy to secure immigrants for Canada, at a time when employment in this country was on the increase. The discussion in the House revealed that the kinds of immigrant workers the then minister of immigration was seeking were actually in surplus supply in Canada, according to statistics available from the national employment service. We thought it sensible to correlate the activities of those two separate arms of government. I suppose many consented tacitly to what was taking place; as far as I can recall, I did. Certainly, not one of us at that time ever thought there would be created across this country manpower offices, each employing several people who were to sit around and have nothing to do. Of course, when I talk about their not having anything to do, I do not suggest that those people find nothing to do. I merely mean that they have nothing to do with regard to those objectives set forth in the program, as set out in the estimates.

The more verbose the language of the estimates becomes, the more I am inclined to believe that the estimates are simply propaganda put out by the government for its own purposes. The estimates at one time simply set out amounts of money to be spent and we were to judge the purposes and merits of appropriations for ourselves, or we could gather information by questioning the minister in committee of supply. Now, there are these elaborate objectives and secondary objectives. For example, under "Objective", with respect to the Department of Manpower and Immigration, we find:

To further the economic growth of Canada by endeavouring to ensure that the supply of manpower matches the demand qualitatively, quantitatively and geographically.

Under each of the three headings mentioned, I suggest this program has been a failure. I suggest, furthermore, that putting that sort of language in the estimates serves no purpose, or serves an illusory purpose. We know that the people sitting in manpower offices have no authority. They cannot give direction, nor can they create the kind of economic climate that will make it possible for people to find productive and personally satisfactory employment. Therefore, these grandiose objectives set out in the book of estimates on which the present appropriation bill is based are, to say the least, misleading. For that reason, I urge the committee to give serious consideration to the motion proposed by the hon. member for Timiskaming.

It is up to the minister to indicate why it is necessary to introduce a supplementary estimate for the spending of additional millions of dollars in a manner which many Canadians have concluded is a most unproductive way of using our tax money. Although I have not checked any statistics and do not know how many people are employed in Canada Manpower offices, I do not expect the minister to justify the expenditure of this money by saying that if we close some of these offices, a good many more Canadians will be unemployed. I do not think he would suggest that is the way to cope with the situation. I know unemployment figures have gone up. The point I am trying to make and the point with which the minister should deal is this: why is it that one hardly ever comes across anybody who has found a useful, productive and personally satisfying job through a Canada Manpower office? I do not know the answer. I have not conducted a poll on this question; however, in the last year I cannot remember a single person coming to me and say, "Tom, I have found a pretty good job through the Canada Manpower office."

An hon. Member: Right on.

Mr. Barnett: Not one said that. At the same time, dozens and dozens have told me, "You know, I have gone to the Canada Manpower office in the constituency and they have told me not to bother coming back, because there is nothing there for me."

An hon. Member: Right again.

Mr. Barnett: If this is true in my constituency, and I suspect it must be true in other constituencies because the hon. member for Timiskaming made it clear that this holds true for his, I think we should take a good, hard look at this matter before we lightly agree to an increase of this magnitude for this kind of government expenditure. I hope the minister will indicate where he thinks we ought to be going with respect to this whole matter.

I know the employees in Manpower offices could do useful work if they were given the necessary training and authority which would enable them to give guidance and direction to people coming to the offices and asking questions about unemployment insurance applications. This guidance and direction has been sadly lacking, certainly in my constituency. May I say that, ever since I have been a member of this House, I have supported the concept of the unemployment insurance program. Nevertheless, the whole concept of unemployment insurance is falling into disrepute because of frustrations people are experiencing, (a) in dealing with their claims and, (b) in obtaining satisfactory employment and help in unemployment insurance matters through Canada Manpower offices.

Mr. Andras: Mr. Chairman, I rise to comment on the remarks of the two previous speakers, particularly in connection with the amendment before us. As is often the case in this House, I find myself in agreement with some of their criticisms and suggestions. I start off on that note with particular reference to the possibility of closer co-operation and co-ordination between the Department of Manpower and Immigration and the Unemployment Insurance Commission, an initial reaction that I indicated I shared when I appeared before the committee approximately two or three weeks ago. I hasten to say that I want a little more opportunity and time to examine the reasons that several years ago, led to a considered and deliberate policy to separate what was then the National Employment Service from the operations of the Unemployment Insurance Commission. I caution hon. members as, indeed, I caution myself, that before I make any final decision, I wish to examine the thinking that went into that decision.

My initial reaction, however, was to ask the same question, particularly in light of current levels of unemployment and some of the difficulties we have had in the administration of the Unemployment Insurance Act, the question as to whether it would be better to put these two operations much closer together. The opportunity for that is certainly there now. Whether we should go into a formal amalgamation or merger or a de facto one between these two large agencies, the opportunity is there as they both report to one minister. This has been the practice since my predecessor took over this portfolio about a year ago. I think hon. members were probably a little heavy in their criticisms by going from the statement that there could be improvements in the operation of both unemployment insurance and Manpower, a statement with which I fully agree, to the other extreme of saying that Manpower is totally inadequate, useless and not performing.

In the brief time that I have had this responsibility, I have had some opportunity to examine the performance trends over the past few years. I noted, and I can say this quite candidly that job placements through Manpower centres seemed to take a slight downward dip until the middle of 1970. By an objective examination, I am able to say that since then the department has come up with a better performance in terms of placement, about which the last hon. member spoke. It is improving and, in fact, improving at a rapid rate. For example, in the calendar year 1972, a total of 1,343,000 job vacancies were referred by employers to Canada Manpower Centres across this country. That represents an increase of about 25 per cent over 1971. Those are references by employers to Canada Manpower Centres. It indicates a growing confidences on the part of employers who use the services of Canada Manpower Centres, and refutes the idea suggested by the hon. member for Timiskaming or the hon. member for Comox-Alberni that we consider the unemployment insurance reference to Canada Manpower Centre is not enough because it is not a significant placement agency. I suggest these figures are not indicative of that deficiency, since over 1,300,000 job vacancies were referred by Canada Manpower Centres by employers. Those references resulted in placements by Canada Manpower Centres on behalf of employers of just under 1 million people; 998,593 to be fairly exact. That represents a 25 per cent increase over the previous year. That does not include short-term placements where jobs are of a duration of one week or less, casual employment, which amount to another 300,000 annually.

I do not suggest that this represents any degree of perfection or in fact a performance with which Manpower officials, the minister or a succession of ministers should be satisfied. However, I think it refutes the argument that we should severely handicap the Manpower department by reducing this vote to $1. This would be a serious reaction to what is obviously an improving performance. This department is on the way up. In almost every area I have been able to examine, it is showing an increasingly efficient operation. There is no doubt about it. The figures I have given indicate that employers are beginning to have greater confidence in Manpower offices across the country. This is reflected in the number of referrals which has increased so dramatically.

With regard to co-operation between the Unemployment Insurance Commission and the Canada Manpower Centres, there should be a very deep study and analysis before we can seriously consider a formal merger. There is an examination that is now taking place. In the meantime, there is a very definite program of co-operation between existing Manpower Centres and unemployment insurance offices across the country. In some 144 Manpower offices where there is no Unemployment Insurance Commission office located in the same community, they are taking on the responsibility of providing accommodation to unemployment insurance people. Therefore, there is an extension of the unemployment insurance operation. At the same time, there is full co-operation between the two agencies.

The unemployment insurance benefit control officers were referred to, in a context of the Manpower area, so I think I am entitled to respond that they are not operating as the hon. member said. I would hate to think of them being given the designation, connotation or image of a police system. They have a difficult job to perform. I am concerned that they perform it with understanding of human frailties and with compassion. They are instructed to always give the benefit of the doubt to the claimant with whom they are dealing. Nevertheless, to protect that whole scheme, to keep confidence in it and give it credibility, we have to prove to Canadians generally that people who are getting unemployment insurance are in fact entitled to it.

The benefit control operation is not designed to take people off the rolls and not get them a job. In the ordinary process, people receiving unemployment insurance have to indicate that they are registered with the Canada Manpower Centre. If they have been referred to some kind of job vacancy by Manpower which they have refused to accept, there is an assessment of the situation. If the job vacancy was anywhere decent, in close relationship to the primary or secondary skills of the individual and the conditions of work were reasonably acceptable, we think the claimant should have given consideration to accepting that job. That is the role of the benefit control officer working in conjunction with the Canada Manpower people. I think it is totally reasonable to say to a claimant who is agreeing to the conditions of the Unemployment Insurance Act to actively search for work while he is enjoying the benefits, that if he is referred by the Canada Manpower Centre to a reasonable job he will seriously consider taking it. It is also reasonable that he give us an indication that he is not totally dependent on the Canada Manpower Centre.

Although the Canada Manpower Centre is fast becoming the primary reference of employers, to wit the number of vacancies I referred to a moment ago, we do not claim nor do we think it ever will contain all the references under its wing of all job vacancies existing in Canada. As an aside, I might say that we recognize the existence of private placement agencies, and the requirement, indeed the desire and the right of individuals to seek jobs on their own. We think this should be maintained, otherwise we would have to go to a totally controlled state where the government tells each individual what he can think, should think, can do or cannot do. But, I do not think it is unreasonable to ask the claimant who is getting the benefit of unemployment insurance payments to also search beyond the Manpower offices. In fact, the indications are that it is performing.

This particular vote refers to administration of training. It is an interesting coincidence that tomorrow, at the request of the Council of Education Ministers from the provinces across the country—including the western provinces, I might point out—I, along with the Secretary of State and one or two other ministers will be meeting with provincial ministers of education, and the thrust of one of their recommendations is that the funds available for adult retraining be increased. This is the very vote which is being attacked by hon. members across the way. The gist of provincial speeches is that they would like more money, not less, yet the effect of the hon. member's motion would be to wipe out the $11 million we need altogether with the exception, of course, of one dollar which would not even pay the postage to enable us to tell the provinces the news of the great disappointment they would suffer if that took place.

What we are dealing with now, this particular training, is the institutional side of the program. On-the-job training is very important as well, of course. We are in the process of comparing the value and the effectiveness of industrial training as opposed to institutional training. Many of the provinces are expressing some concern; they feel that industrial training, which is only in its second year, may signal the beginning of a reduction in the funds available to institutions. We think there is room for both. We believe there is a necessity for both.

The hon. member for Timiskaming drew attention a few minutes ago to the impracticality of aspects of our training of a few years ago in terms of instructing students in the use of heavy equipment for instance. Well, I do not think they could learn to drive a 40-ton truck or a big crane or a big mechanical shovel in a community college. And God forbid that the community colleges would start buying those trucks and that kind of equipment simply to justify their existence; their buildings would probably be knocked down if they did! We have, in fact, recognized this difficulty and that is one of the very purposes of our project to permit direct support to industry through on-the-job training allowances, one which has shown up very well in the preliminary experiments carried out last year.

Incidentally, I can give hon. members some characteristics of the people who were hired. Sixty-two per cent of them were single and 24 years of age or less. This is an area of unemployment which is bothering all of us—young people seeking their first jobs. Just over 11 per cent of those trained under this program had received less than a grade eight education and 81 per cent had been educated up to grade 13. Fifty-eight per cent of the trainees hired did complete their training. Unfortunately, 34 per cent quit voluntarily and about 8 per cent were discharged for one reason or another. Of those who completed their training—and I think this is an indication we are on the right path—93 per cent are employed, 90 per cent of them in the very occupations in which they were trained under this scheme, and 89 per cent stayed with the employer who undertook to train them in the first place. A further interesting fact is this: of all the trainees who were hired, only 7 per cent are known at this point to be unemployed. I think this is an indication that though we may be far from perfection, and while much more must be done to make this project more productive, the whole operation is beginning to take on a good flavour and produce results. I think those engaged in it should be allowed to carry on and that we should not entertain the idea embodied in this motion that the vote before us should be reduced to one dollar, thereby severely handicapping the operations of the Manpower department.

A word about the concern the hon. member for Timiskaming expressed about the operations of the office in his own constituency. He claims there are more employees in that office than have been placed through it. I certainly do not like to dispute the hon. member's interpretation of the situation but I should be glad of an opportunity to check into it and, if necessary, we might be able to do something about it in a very direct manner. But I hope he is wrong, and was using this particular situation as an example, with poetic licence—I know he is a poet. In any case, I would ask him to reconsider his amendment because the effect of it would be one which I do not think he or his hon. friends or, indeed, any hon. member in any other section of the House would, on sober reflection, desire to bring about. I think their consciences would bother them thereafter if this somewhat mischievous suggestion were carried to the conclusion he seeks.

Mr. Peters: May I ask the minister a question? I gather he is as confused as I am as to which vote applies to training. I notice that in the main estimates it is vote 10 which refers to the training program, not vote 5. Vote 5 relates to operations. I may be wrong in this assumption, but I did check the main estimates and I believe not.

I will agree with the minister that I did use poetic licence when referring to the number for whom employment has been found. I did, however, make a survey, and 82 per cent of the people who replied stated they had never succeeded in securing a job through the efforts of the manpower offices. In view of this, the talk on the streets and the rest of it, I should like to ask whether the manpower operation is conducted differently in the various provinces. In other words, does the record differ considerably as between one province and another in terms of success?

Mr. Andras: I frankly admit I should like an opportunity to get a provincial breakdown.

Mr. Nielsen: And the territories.

Mr. Andras: Yes, indeed. I am always in trouble with the hon. member for Yukon for failing to mention the Yukon and the Northwest Territories explicitly. I know he will never accept—as indeed, I would not, were I in his place—the explanation that these figures were included in the British Columbia figures. But I will get a breakdown for the hon. member. I will give them to him later, if he is disposed to carry on this debate, or if not, I will get them to him privately. I have no doubt in the world that there will be a variation in the statistical performance of various regions owing to the obvious difficulty of placing people in a region of high unemployment as opposed to a region of low unemployment. Without having the figures before me, I am unable to confirm it, but I suspect that in Ontario there will be a higher success ratio since more jobs are available, because unemployment in that province is not as widespread, as in the province of Quebec. However, I should say no more on that subject until I have the facts available.

Mr. Alexander: Mr. Chairman, may I make a few remarks with respect to the motion moved by the hon. member for Timiskaming. I listened at considerable length to what the hon. member said, but I can agree with only a very small part of the philosophy he is trying to project at this time. The part of the philosophy I do agree with is that the members on this side of the House have frequently and consistently indicated that the roles of manpower and unemployment insurance should be as one. Both can be effective only if this comes about.

I must give the minister some credit. When he was apprised of this view, he indicated to us during discussion of the miscellaneous estimates that he would like an opportunity to look at the matter and to ascertain why in 1966 it was felt necessary to separate the two. Notwithstanding that the minister has said some 1,300,000 unemployed have been placed by employers and that something like just one million jobs were reported as having been accepted, there still seems to be a heck of a lot wrong with manpower vis-à-vis unemployment insurance. Certainly, I do not hear too many of the people who are looking for assistance and guidance on manpower matters praising the role of the manpower office, so I suggest there must be a breakdown somewhere. Although there are pilot projects which give the individual more choice and may assist him, there must be something wrong with the whole system.

I think I speak on behalf of most hon. members when I say without hesitation that it is not too often we receive letters praising the efficacy of manpower operations. This is why I say there must be something drastically wrong. As far as statistics are concerned, we can appreciate what they mean but it seems to me there must be greater correlation between the federal government and the provinces in terms of our manpower needs for the future.

On the other hand, the government has created a very high level of unemployment. Although I do not want to get partisan at this time, the whole system has been frustrated by the fiscal and monetary policies of the government which have created unemployment of unprecedented levels. In 1966, there was a scheme whereby the Department of Manpower and Immigration was to concern itself with labour shortages, with the need for national training, mobility programs and improvement of job placement services. However, owing to the high level of unemployment the staff of the department has been unable to handle the workload, and those who have been trying to seek some alleviation of problems that are very real to them have simply been frustrated.

I submit that the minister should seriously consider wedding manpower with unemployment insurance. Indeed, the whole field of labour should be as one. I cannot see how the department can be at all meaningful until that is the case. Having said that, I am also very much aware that unemployed people must register with manpower and with the Unemployment Insurance Commission in order to show there is some inclination on their part to take a job. I should like to ask what happens after they have done so. Is it the fact, as I believe it is, that they sign their name on the register and then that is all? It seems to me no effort is made to assist such persons in terms of finding them a job.

Having once registered, surely to goodness what the manpower officials must do in order to take them off the roll is to find them a job. I venture to say that the vast majority of unemployed Canadians want to work, and that having registered with a manpower office it is then up to that office, as the national employment agency, to find them a job. That, Mr. Chairman, is where they are failing in their task and it is why some people are unemployed for three or four months in the year. If manpower is doing such a great job, why is it so many people remain unemployed for so long a time?

As I say, I am surprised that the hon. member for Timiskaming should move such a motion because he seems to me to have missed the point of the vote, even though his initial suggestion regarding a blending of manpower ans unemployment insurance is a good one. Let me once again put on the record vote 5a, which can be found in the schedule to Bill C-141:

5a DEVELOPMENT AND UTILIZATION OF MANPOWER PROGRAM

Development and utilization of manpower— operating expenditures—To extend the purposes of manpower and immigration vote 5, Appropriation Act No. 3, 1972 to authorize payments to a province in respect of any necessary administrative support and inspection services supplied by the province in connection with training provided to adult employees under section 6 of the Adult Occupational Training Act and to provide a further amount of $11,689,861.

Now, what surprises me is that the New Democratic Party, whose members are always talking about standing up for the unemployed and giving them equality of opportunity to become part of the mainstream of our economy, is attacking the type of policies that give people affected by technological change and technological advancement the opportunity of receiving on-the-job training, which is a very significant aspect of our manpower retraining program, or instruction at an institution.

Despite what the hon. member for Timiskaming says, his motion would have the effect of wiping out assistance given to the province of Quebec, a province where I understand there are 12 to 14 per cent of Canada's unemployed. The situation is even worse in Newfoundland. The situation is so bad there that members from that province raise the problem at every opportunity they get. Ontario is in the same boat since it has masses of people who have been brought to this country and rightly so, to take advantage of what can be a great future for them. But they need this kind of training in order to compete.

As far as corporations are concerned, I know my hon. friends would call them corporate welfare bums. But at the same time, have they ever considered that industry must be put in a position where it is competitive, which means that individuals who work in that industry must keep abreast with technological advances? The New Democratic Party, the champion of the worker, the champion of the disillusioned, now says to them, "Thou shalt not be educated". I take a dim view of that kind of approach, although in some respects I have every sympathy for the hon. member's motion.

• (1600)

Mr. Nielsen: Would you ask the minister to confirm that the money for on-the-job training is in that vote?

Mr. Alexander: I believe he has confirmed that. I think there are something like $10 million involved. How could anyone possibly take a stand to reduce that amount to $1?

I am very pleased to hear that the minister is going to meet with the provinces on this whole system in respect of job training. I hope that manpower programs will be looked into and reassessed in terms of needs in various regions and cities, because while I think on-the-job training programs are good there is something wrong with a system under which less than half of those who are graduated are able to acquire the jobs for which they were trained. In view of that, we must be very careful about these job training programs in times of high unemployment. We must reassess our priorities in terms of training because there is no point in having highly trained people who cannot find employment and just add to the unemployment rolls.

With all due respect to the minister, who I know always looks kindly upon advice, when he gets together with the provinces he will have to determine where we are going in the next five years and what type of skills will be required. There is no sense training people if, when they are trained, they cannot get work. The minister will have to give the provinces some guarantee as to an accepted rate of full employment, whatever that may be. The Minister of Finance says it will probably be around 6 per cent. I think that is very encouraging. Whether or not he realized just what he said, I do not know, but I hope that when the budget comes out tonight it will be a panacea for all regions of this country. I am sure that is what the people expect. If it is not a panacea, the government will not get much support from my friends to the left. They apparently want to cut out this type of training so you can see how vicious they can be when they want.

Mr. Nielsen: The so-called party of the working man.

Mr. Alexander: The key to this whole thing is the provision of high employment opportunities. We cannot continue to do what we have been doing in the last couple of years when our fiscal and monetary policies have created massive unemployment which ruins and frustrates all manpower programs. These programs are geared to normal circumstances, and "normal" in this sense means a minimum of unemployment, not high unemployment.

I hope when the minister speaks with his colleagues he will pass on the message that these programs are good but we should not continue education in terms of those skills which are not needed or become obsolete. These programs seem to absorb people and make things look good, but at the end of the program period these people are again out on the streets without employment and are perhaps tapping the Unemployment Insurance fund.

I do not think I have to continue talking about this matter.

Mr. Railton: Mr. Chairman, I wonder if the hon. member would permit a question?

The Chairman: Is the hon. member rising on a question of privilege?

Mr. Railton: Yes, Mr. Chairman. I think there has been an incorrect statement. In our area 70 per cent of the people who received on-the-job training were working within three months of the time they completed their courses.

The Chairman: Order, please. The hon. member for Welland has made a statement rather than a question of privilege. He apparently takes issue with the statement of the hon. member.

Mr. Alexander: I accept that statement, Mr. Chairman. I am very pleased to know that is the situation in the hon. member's area. What I was stating was that the minister's own figures in respect to manpower on-the-job training would indicate that less than half of those trained received jobs for which they were trained.

Mr. Andras: Oh, no, no.

Mr. Alexander: If I am wrong I know the minister will correct me, but my understanding is that less than half of those who graduated from the on-the-job training program were able to acquire the jobs for which they were trained. If I am wrong, I will sit down and let the minister correct me.

In any event, we might have been happy had the NDP come up with a sensible motion which intended to accomplish that which the keynote speaker of that party indicated in terms of manpower needs. Perhaps hon. members of that party have an excellent point, but when they try to tamper with and trample upon training programs which are really needed, speaking on behalf of this party we cannot go along with them. We will vote against the motion.

The Chairman: Order, please. The Chair must make a confession to the committee. Under the provisions of Standing Order 58(13), during the proceedings in respect of any item of business under the provisions of this standing order no member may speak more than once or for longer than 20 minutes. I am afraid we have departed from this practice in the last few days, particularly in respect of some members of the ministry.

I just draw this to the attention of hon. members, although I realize it would be an injustice if we now invoked this rule against ministers who have been asked to reply to certain arguments or allegations. I think it should be applied in respect of subsequent items in this schedule. This has been an omission on the part of the Chair which will be corrected at a future time. I will not invoke the rule in respect of the Minister of Manpower and Immigration who has been invited to make certain responses to the hon. member for Hamilton West.

Mr. Nielsen: Mr. Chairman, before we proceed I wonder if you would be so kind as to cite the order again so that I might look at it?

The Chairman: Yes it is Standing Order 58(13).

Mr. Andras: Mr. Chairman, I will be as brief as possible. I would like to confirm for the hon. member for Hamilton West the terrible damage that this motion might have done. I was pleased to hear the hon. member's stated intention not to support the amendment. Any hon. member who votes for the amendment now before us should come with me tomorrow to face those ministers of education from the provinces and tell them they cannot get any more administrative money for a co-operative manpower training program across this country. I would hate to face them and have to tell those fine gentlemen from Saskatchewan, Manitoba and British Columbia the source of this damage to the programs, particularly when they are coming here to plead with me for more assistance rather than less.

Perhaps I might take one more brief moment to give the provincial breakdown requested by the hon. member for Timiskaming. In the Atlantic provinces, there were 119,985 vacancies notified to manpower centres and 96,267 placements. These figures are related to regional breakdowns, but they could be given on a provincial basis if the hon. member so wishes. Unless he indicates otherwise, I will proceed on a regional basis.

Mr. Lundrigan: Go ahead and give them on a provincial breakdown.

Mr. Andras: In the province of Quebec there were 278,853 vacancies, with 209,793 placements. In Ontario, as one might have expected and I indicated this earlier, there were 466,548 vacancies reported by employers to manpower centres, and of these, 348,810 were filled as a result of CMC references to these employers. We will have to take provincial breakdowns in order to avoid offending the hon. member for Yukon. In Manitoba there were 52,000 vacancies referred and 35,970 jobs filled. In Saskatchewan, there were 30,169 vacancies notified by employers and 21,146 placements. In Alberta there were 97,112 references by employers and 65,505 placements. In the Northwest Territories there were 3,211 references and 2,362 placements. In British Columbia, there were 150,998 and 120,436 placements. In the Yukon, there were 2,352 vacancies, and 2,140 placements as a result of those references by employers to the Canada Manpower Centres.

This is the information for which the hon. member asked me a few minutes ago and I am pleased to be able to place it on the record.

Mr. Lundrigan: Mr. Chairman, what are the breakdowns for the Atlantic provinces?

Mr. Andras: In Newfoundland, there were 27,046 vacancies notified by employers to CMC, and 21,525 placements.

Mr. Lundrigan: Mr. Chairman, I do not believe it.

Mr. Andras: In Prince Edward Island, there were 8,478 references and 7,841 placements. In Nova Scotia, there were 48,572 vacancies notified and 38,211 placements. In New Brunswick, there were 35,889 references of vacancies and 28,690 placements.

I might indicate for clarification that these placements to which I am referring do not include casual placements of a week or less and that across Canada those totalled an additional 300,000 short-term jobs for casual employees.

Mr. Nielsen: Mr. Chairman, I rise on a question of privilege. Perhaps the only way that I and my colleagues from the Northwest Territories can see this done is to rise each time on a question of privilege. These figures are the kind of figures we would like to see recorded in all returns. The minister has given them to us, but where the failure arises is that they are not included in statistical releases, such as, for instance, the report on the operations under the Unemployment Insurance Act. The minister has them and all that the printers have to do is to publish them in separate statistics. I hope that his officials will ensure that that is done in the cases of the two northern territories in the future.

Mr. Andras: Mr. Chairman, I rise on the question of privilege. I agree entirely with the hon. member. I thought that he would rise to thank me, at least to recognize that we did have the statistics and put them in separately, having missed doing so a few other times. So long as the performance is as good as this one, I would be delighted to have those figures included in the future reports of the Unemployment Insurance Commission or of this agency and other agencies with which I am related.

Mr. Rodriguez: Mr. Chairman, I should like to reply for a moment to my friend, the hon. member for Hamilton West. This party has always been interested in the working man and woman. We have always held that unemployment insurance was no substitute for a salary well earned. But it seems to me rather strange that, since unemployment was created in an attempt to slow down inflation, we are now blaming people for the mess in which they find themselves. As we all know, it is a requirement that an unemployed person register with a manpower centre when applying for unemployment insurance. Yet, on the other side of the coin, it is not required that every available job in Canada be registered with manpower. To give you an idea of the situation in the Sudbury district, at the moment there are 7,600 people registered with manpower looking for work, and yet that office only has a turnover of 400 jobs a month. I suggest that the manpower office in that area is not performing the service which it should perform in terms of placing these people in jobs.

I have also noticed that the unemployment insurance office has now established what is called the claimant's assistance program. It seems to me that this program on which they are embarking falls within the realm of manpower centres in that it offers counselling to those who are unemployed in an attempt to help them make up a resumé in applying for a job. I have also noticed that the manpower centre is now turning people over to the unemployment insurance office in cases where people are not interested in a part time job or where the job offered to them by the manpower centre is located too far from the place where they live. It seems to me that on the one hand we want to assist people and, on the other hand, we establish a gestapo-kind of operation.

I want to say a few words on some of the practices in manpower offices in terms of discriminating against those people who want retraining for other kinds of jobs. For example, it is not unknown for a counsellor to say to a person: "we do not have an opening in the retraining program as yet, and there will not be one for three weeks or three months". When I contacted the Manpower office personally to find out why Miss Brown was not accepted for the retraining program, I was told by the counsellor that she was not suitable for office work. When I asked what he meant, I was told: "she is not attractive enough". I think that this practice of evaluating individuals who come to manpower offices for help contradicts the very spirit in which the office has been established. The Sudbury area, for example—and the Minister of Manpower and Immigration was there this past weekend—is a far-flung area with small communities. Yet people as far away as 60 miles are expected to come in and report to the Manpower office because there is no office in their particular area to serve them. It seems to me that if we are really interested in helping the unemployed find jobs, we should establish offices close to them where we can give them advice on the spur of the moment and help them in finding jobs.

I have also come across the practice in some Manpower offices of sending applicants or people registered with the Manpower centre to non-existent jobs. I have had a couple of cases in the Sudbury area which have occurred in the last couple of months of persons being sent to jobs which had been filled four weeks previously. It seems to me that, because of the high number of unemployed in the particular area, the manpower centre cannot keep abreast of the number of vacant jobs. The problem in the Sudbury area is far too many unemployed and far too little help in terms of trying to place these unemployed people in jobs. I would much prefer to see the two departments brought together, unemployment insurance and manpower centres. The aims and objectives of these two bodies are very close and related. People have the impression that these two offices are in a real mess. They do not want to go near them at all and they are becoming leery of the whole operation.

I support the amendment moved by the hon. member for Timiskaming. The money provided in this estimate would be better spent if the government were to use it directly in trying to create jobs, rather than using it for all these rather questionable ways of retraining people for non-existent jobs. By the time they are retrained the jobs have disappeared, and we have to start retraining them for something else. We are trying to stick our finger in the dike, but the pressure on the other side of the dike is far too great.

I suggest that we attack the problem directly by using these funds to establish secondary industry, for example, in the Sudbury area. There is no reason in the world why all the raw materials should be shipped away from Sudbury to Sweden, Norway, Japan and the United States, where the finished products are made, and this at a time when our own people remain unemployed. Jobs in secondary manufacturing should be provided in a mining area like Sudbury. In the last two years, we have seen many mining towns become ghost towns. There was the example of Coniston, and now Cobalt is closing down.

It seems to me that the whole approach taken by the government has been designed to deal with symptoms rather than with the problem. The only way to solve unemployment is by directing public funds into the establishment of factories, if private enterprise will not establish them. And private enterprise will not establish factories as long as the same multinational corporations that own the mines in Canada own and operate factories somewhere else. I repeat that government funds should be used to establish industry and provide job opportunities for our people. With the present system we will end up with one plaster on top of another, all covering the body cancerous, until the whole becomes an immense patchwork quilt. In such a situation even the bureaucracy begins to lose control of itself.

For this reason, I support the amendment moved by the hon. member for Timiskaming that the estimate be cut to $1 until some study is undertaken to show that spending money this way is effective in solving unemployment.

Mr. Lundrigan: Mr. Chairman—

The Chairman: Is the House ready for the question?

Mr. Lundrigan: Mr. Chairman—

The Chairman: The hon. member for Portneuf.

Mr. Lundrigan: Mr. Chairman, will you look this way a little later on to be fair about it.

The Chairman: Order. The hon. member for Portneuf.

[Translation]

Mr. Godin: Mr. Chairman, I did not ask for the floor.

[English]

Some hon. Members: Question.

The Chairman: Is the House ready for the question?

Mr. Lundrigan: Mr. Chairman—

The Chairman: The hon. member for Gander-Twillingate.

Mr. Lundrigan: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. The musical intonations from the recognition of the hon. member for Gander-Twillingate bring me no end of pleasure.

The Chairman: Order.

Mr. Lundrigan: I have often wondered if the weather has any effect on the attitudes of Members of Parliament and on the proceedings in this chamber. It has an effect on the bird population. Some fly south to escape the winter cold. Today, it seems that some of the NDP have taken leave of their traditional senses in moving a motion which is the most inexplicable thing that I have seen the NDP do since I came to the House of Commons five years ago. In fact, I had to reread Vote 5a in order to be sure we were talking about the same thing. It deals with "training provided to adult employees under section 6 of the Adult Occupational Training Act." Today, the minister confirmed that over $10 million is for on-the-job training, and I have just heard the hon. member for Nickel Belt say this item should be reduced to $1.

Mr. Barnett: Mr. Chairman, since the hon. member has referred to the particular details of the vote, does he recognize that the motion which has been proposed does not do away with the vote? It leaves what is sometimes referred to as a dollar item, which gives the government authority to operate a program. Doesn't he realize that the motion does not cut off the authority of the government to carry through with that program?

Mr. Nielsen: Rubbish.

Mr. Barnett: Since the hon. member is suggesting that what we have proposed is inexplicable, would he not agree that we often vote $1 items which provide the government with authority to carry out programs? The purpose of the motion is to shift the onus to the government fo find the $11 million out of the more than $200 million already voted.

Mr. Lundrigan: I agree with the embarrassment expressed by the hon. member. That is the only way I can describe his intervention. His question is rhetorical. If you take away the funds, the program does not really exist. Really what he is saying is that he is very embarrassed about it, even though he just spoke in support of the motion.

The hon. member for Nickel Belt has told us that the people in his area are all well educated, that there is no need for involvement with little people, and that the unions are against this kind of program. When he was speaking one of my colleagues said that the NDP has gone into debt with the unions and not only with the Liberals. I would ask the hon. member if the steel workers in his riding all agree with his stand?

Mr. Rodriguez: Mr. Chairman—

The Chairman: The Chair has recognized the hon. member for Gander-Twillingate, unless he is prepared to accept questions which I gather he is not prepared to do.

Mr. Lundrigan: Mr. Chairman, the hon. member does not want to ask a question. He wants to make an apology for the speech he made. He can get the floor afterwards. Three members of the NDP spoke on this subject. The hon. member from British Columbia seemed to be saying that if there was something wrong with a man's head, the best thing to do would be to cut it off altogether. If a man has an infected arm, you should cut it off rather than recommend any medication; just eliminate the thing completely.

That hon. member is saying that if there is something wrong with the Adult Occupational Training Program it should be cut out altogether. I doubt whether those hon. members realize the kind of people that they are coming down on when they support this kind of recommendation. The Adult Occupational Training Program was designed to help people who are almost completely unable to enter into our economic system because of lack of education. They are the little guys, the smallest people in our society in terms of capability.

Some hon. Members: Shame!

Mr. Lundrigan: Many of them are people who grew up during the depression years, who had to be taken out of school by their parents and put into jobs in order to help eke out a living in a difficult economic environment. Many of them are now 45, 50 and 55 years old. They have no basic education and no basic training. Somebody decided that we should help them to develop marketable skills, but today the NDP members have taken leave of their senses. They are opposed to this. They are flying north in the winter instead of south. Somebody made a mistake.

The hon. member for York South presents himself as the protector of the rights of the Canadian people. He says he holds the balance of power. He says that he is going to go along with anything that is good for the country. In effect, he becomes King David in our Canadian system, but today he and his party introduce a motion that will disadvantageously affect the lives of about 2,000 people in my province where we have an unemployment rate of 18 per cent.

Some hon. Members: Shame, shame!

Mr. Lundrigan: We have had ample manifestation of the feelings of the people in the Cape Breton area of Nova Scotia. The two gentlemen from Cape Breton in my party would not, I am sure, welcome this kind of support.

The NDP today appear to have inadvertently made a very serious mistake. When I finish my remarks, I think the hon. member for Timiskaming is going to stand in his place and withdraw his motion. My colleague from British Columbia and the hon. member from the Nickel Belt represent disadvantaged areas, as I am sure we all do. I am sure they are going to say that they were mistaken in their comments and that they overdid it in order to manifest muscle. If they do not, then the Procrusteans—wasn't that the mythological person who used to stretch people when they were too short—will be in agreement with the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre.

[Mr. Rodriguez.]

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

The Chairman: The hon. member for Greenwood.

Mr. Peters: A point of order, Mr. Chairman.

The Chairman: The hon. member for Timiskaming, on a point of order.

An hon. Member: You gave your speech; you blew it.

Mr. Peters: On a point of order, Mr. Chairman. If hon members will look at the estimates that are being amended they will find that Vote 5a is "Development and Utilization of Manpower—Operating expenditures". I presume this modifies and supplements Vote 5 in the main estimates. Included within the operating expenditures is the appropriation which is the dollar item, Mr. Chairman. If I was wrong in believing the appropriation was a separate item—

Mr. Nielsen: That is not a point of order.

Mr. Peters: —I would ask leave, Mr. Chairman, to withdraw the amendment.

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Nielsen: Mr. Chairman, I submit that the remarks of the hon. member for Timiskaming by no means come within the ambit of a point of order and as far as I am concerned, after hearing the NDP filibustering, I for one want to stand them up and see them vote against their own amendment. I take that position and my consent is not forthcoming.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Andras: On the point of order—

The Chairman: Order, please. The Chair does not feel that a point of order has been raised. I think that the understanding during the debate was that it concerned the effectiveness of a certain program that is at least identifiable to the members of the committee who have taken part in the debate. In that sense, I think there is a very clear issue, although a number of remarks have been made on whether or not the proper vote is being amended. As far as the Chair can determine, the motion does what the hon. member for Timiskaming has intended it to do.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

The Chairman: If the committee is ready, I will now put the question.

Some hon. Members: Question.

The Chairman: The hon. member for Greenwood.

Mr. Brewin: Mr. Chairman, I am only going to say a few words—

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Brewin: I have heard the motion made by the hon. member for Timiskaming and I think it will serve a useful purpose, that is to enable this committee to give consideration to the deficiencies in the manpower training program.

An hon. Member: You don't need an amendment for that.

Mr. Brewin: However, Mr. Chairman, I do not agree with the hon. member for Timiskaming that the vote be cut to one dollar and I would propose, if I am in the House, to vote against the amendment.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Some hon. Members: Question.

The Chairman: Is the committee ready for the question?

An hon. Member: What are they going to do on the budget?

The Chairman: The Chair will now put the question, and so that it will be intelligible to members who have not taken part in all stages of the debate I would point out that on page 7 of the schedule under Manpower and Immigration the first item is Vote 5a, Development and Utilization of Manpower. The hon. member for Timiskaming has moved that Vote 5a be reduced by $11,689,860.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

An hon. Member: Where are David and Stanley?

Mr. Bell: Knowles and Lewis are paired with each other.

Amendment (Mr. Peters) negatived: Yeas, 5; nays, 122.

The Chairman: Does this terminate discussion on the three votes under Manpower and Immigration?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

The Chairman: If this is agreed, we will move to the next items under National Health and Welfare, namely, Votes 5a, 35a, 40a and 45a.

Before I recognize the first participant in the debate, may I repeat that I think we should revert to the more normal practice that no member may speak more than once or longer than 20 minutes, except that both the mover of a debatable motion and the member speaking in reply thereto may speak for 30 minutes. In other words, the suggestion is that instead of replying immediately, the responsible minister should allow the spokesmen for the various parties to speak and then reply. I think this will bring us back within Standing Order 58(13).

The hon. member for Vancouver-Kingsway.

Mr. Barnett: On a point of order, Mr. Chairman. I find myself a bit puzzled by the ruling I understood you to make.

Mr. McGrath: Not nearly as puzzled as your constituents.

Mr. Barnett: Does that ruling mean that Standing Order 58(13) takes precedence over Standing Order 55 which relates to the House sitting in Committee of the Whole. Standing Order 55 reads:

(1) The standing orders of the House shall be observed in committees of the whole House so far as may be applicable, except the standing orders as to the seconding of motions, limiting the number of times of speaking and the length of speeches.

And, later:

(3) No member, except the Prime Minister and the Leader of the Opposition, shall speak for more than 20 minutes at a time in any committee of the whole House.

• (1640)

I always understood, Mr. Chairman, with deference, that that rule has general application when the House is in committee of the whole, notwithstanding what may be in any standing order.

Mr. Nielsen: Mr. Chairman, may I briefly speak on the point of order. I find myself in agreement with the Chair. With respect to the point raised by the hon. member for Comox-Alberni, he referred to the chapter under which Standing Order 55 falls. Chapter VIII deals with committees of the whole House generally, whereas the order under which the committee of the whole is now sitting falls under chapter IX entitled, "Business of Supply and Ways and Means". Standing Order 58 (18) relates to a unique procedure. The committee of the whole is now governed by that standing order. While the order cited by Your Honour leaves something to be desired in terms of draftmanship, it none the less is clear, in my view, that it applies to all proceedings under Standing Order 58. It could have been drafted in terms which would make the meaning abundantly clear by saying, "Notwithstanding anything else contained in these standing orders," and then go on to spell out the order. In my view it is clear that Standing Order 58(13) applies to proceedings under Standing Order 58(18).

The Chairman: I thank the hon. member for Comox-Alberni for raising the question and the hon. member for Yukon for his contribution. I would call the attention of the committee to the decision of Mr. Speaker with regard to the uniqueness of the procedure in which we now find ourselves involved, and the course chosen with regard to these particular estimates. The fact is that the Standing Order, as noted by the hon. member for Yukon, does apply only when we are dealing with supply procedures. For that reason, the Chair has invoked that particular subparagraph of Standing Order 58.

Mrs. MacInnis (Vancouver-Kingsway): Mr. Chairman, I shall keep in mind your admonishment about the length of speeches. Actually, for the last little while I have been so busy that I have not had time to speak. This is my first opportunity to speak on the estimates.

I shall not deal at length with the old age security pension, except to say that, as far as my party is concerned, the increase in the basic old age security pension which we fervently believe will be introduced tonight is urgent and essential. People over 65 are anxiously awaiting the announcement which, in the face of rapidly increasing living costs, they hope will be a worth-while one. They are anxious to find out what the minister means in practical terms when he proposes a substantial increase. We have been impressed with the fact that the minister seems to realize that the elderly of this country cannot everlastingly get along on promises. The government must bring in some practical assistance.

The members of my party have suggested that the basic old age security pension should be increased to $150. That represents a considerable increase and, in our view, a necessary and essential increase in view of today's rapidly rising living costs. We have not been able to pin down the official opposition on what it thinks should the pension increase. Apparently, those members are not concerned about increasing the basic old age security pension. They think that the supplementary pension ought to be increased by about $10. That is what we have found out so far, and we have not been too successful in pinning them down. We are awaiting tonight's budget anxiously. Then, we shall find out what is to happen.

For a few moments I want to talk about the needs of another group of citizens. I want to ask the minister what can be done for them. I am talking about those who are left out, about people who are not covered by any form of social security legislation or pension. These people are horribly insecure and depend on charity or on friends. Their only other recourse is, officially, to go on social assistance. I am talking about a large group of men and women, and for the most part they are women, who have no pensions or allowances of any kind and who must choose between depending on private charity, on social assistance, and on the assistance of friends. They face a pretty bleak outlook. That group is made up of people in their early sixties, in their fifties and, yes, in their forties. Most of them, the women particularly, for various reasons cannot find work that pays. In this group there is a large number of widows, women who married early without any particular training for work. They are now left without resources of any kind. Many were widowed before the Canada Pension Plan came into operation. There is nothing in the pension plan for them.

An hon. member, our whip, has just spoken to me, Mr. Chairman. I have been brought into line and asked to bear in mind Your Honour's injunction. I was referring to widows, to women who married early without first acquiring any particular training and who have a long, long way to go before they reach 65. May I read part of a letter. This is the latest one of this kind to be sent to me. I have received many such letters from my constituents. It reads in part as follows:

> I'm a widow since April 24/72, and there's no such thing as a widow's pension. My age is 57; at this age you're not able to get work, and I'm not able to do heavy work.
> I'm a diabetic and high blood pressure. When young people can't get work how can I; and another thing, my husband was not working at the time the Canada pension came in, so I don't even have that. I had unemployment insurance until a month before Xmas and that was that. The money in the bank, about $400.00, isn't much when the taxes come up. I've got to pay $300.00 and what does that leave me? . . .
> I'm in need of medications, which are very expensive for diabetes and high blood pressure. I had a few dollars but it soon goes when nothing is coming in.
> We need a government that will do something for us widows and soon. I do hope something can be done.

I have been sent dozens of letters like that, as have other hon. members.

[Mrs. MacInnis (Vancouver-Kingsway).]

May I mention another group, women who worked but cannot do so now. I have in mind a very personable woman who is young, or relatively young when one considers that 65 is the age at which one becomes entitled to the old age pension. She is in her forties. At one time she was a public servant and, deciding that she wanted to better herself, left her job and attended university with a view to upgrading her education. What was the result? About five years ago, when she came out of university she went to look for work and could not find anything at all. Since that time that woman has gone to every single university and college faculty in British Columbia or on the lower mainland, and has not found anything. At her request I visited her, in the homes of two or three friends. She has had to stay with them for a little while and then move to other friends. Then, when her welcome is worn out, she has had to move to other friends. She doesn't want to go on relief. She was raised as a self-respecting, hard working woman and does not want to go on social assistance. Yet, there is nothing else for her. What is she to do?

In addition, I want to talk about the many women who are in poor health and trying to carry on as best they can. One woman who came to see me had been trying to find work. She had a serious skin complaint. The only job she could get was one involving the use of soap and water in cleaning up around a rest home or working in the kitchen, doing dishwashing and that sort of thing. She has already had to go to a specialist for her skin condition. She has other health problems as well. However, the only kind of help available for that woman is social assistance. I also had a man call on me. For years he has been trying to do part time work. It is imperative that he give this up due to his health. He does not receive Canada assistance either. He has been carrying on as a self-employed person.

There are also the wives of the old age pensioners, people somewhat younger than their husbands, who are proving daily that two people cannot live on one income and two people cannot live as cheaply as one or anywhere near as cheaply as one. Members of the Créditiste party have made this one of their particular cases to champion. I agree with them completely. These people are in great need.

In addition to pensions for these elderly people, we also need better pensions for the blind and the disabled. There is still a $75 ceiling on these pensions. In my province of British Columbia, such people are now included under Mincome. Those people who now receive the provincial supplement have the assurance that they will not receive less than $200 a month on which to live. The blind and disabled are also included in Mincome and receive $200 a month. However, everyone cannot live in British Columbia, even though it sometimes seems to those of us who come from that province that most people are trying to do so. If our government continues to carry on as they are doing now, people will increasingly try to do so. But there is not room for them all.

We have been heartened by some of the minister's remarks. He at least knows that this crazy quilt of social security which has been built up patch by patch is no longer able to do the job of covering everyone who needs social security. The old fashioned crazy quilt, picturesque and interesting though it may look to a spectator from Mars, is very uncomfortable when it comes to providing warmth and shelter. The minister knows we need to take a new look at the social security fabric.

My whip has just advised me that I have only a few more minutes. If the minister will allow me, I want to share one of them with him. Will the minister tell me what he has in mind for those people for whom there is no pension? Some of the sick and disabled have a small pension, but for the army of self respecting people who would take work if they could, there is nothing but social assistance. Does the minister have something in mind for those people?

Mr. Nielsen: Mr. Chairman, we do not intend to speak on any of these items under this department in order to facilitate the passage of the items and the supply bill. There are a good number of things we could be saying at this point, particularly on the non-medical use of drugs program, but we will reserve that privilege for another time and place, perhaps when the main estimates are being discussed in committee.

[Translation]

Mr. Fortin: Mr. Chairman, I take this opportunity to say, like the hon. member for Yukon (Mr. Nielsen), that we have some very important representations to make concerning the old age security pension, income security and social assistance, as covered by vote 35a. We are going to express our feelings, since it is late, at the next debate on this subject.

Mr. Lalonde: Mr. Chairman, I feel I must say a few words to the hon. member of the New Democratic Party who has raised a certain number of questions. First, I would say, concerning old age pensions, that I hope that it is a matter of hours rather than days now, as for knowing what the exact intentions of the government are on this subject.

Secondly, as regards the broader problem which was raised, we have it very much in mind. It has already been dealt with in the speech from the throne, when it was said that our objective was to come to a fair minimum garanteed annual income for all those who are unable to work, either because of illness, of age or any other disabilities. I hope to be in a position, by the end of April, to table in the House a bill explaining the government's intentions in this regard. The problem that was raised does exist. My provincial colleagues as well as myself are very much aware of that fact; we have already initiated consultations; early in April, we shall visit all the provinces for further consultations. I hope that by the middle of April, we shall be able to let the House know the general intentions of the government about the problems raised.

Mr. Fortin: Mr. Chairman, I would like to take advantage of this opportunity, if I may, to ask the minister of National Health and Welfare whether he intends to grant the old age security pension at 60, to increase it to $200 per month for those who are 60 years old and to $150 for the spouse, whatever his or her age may be, so that both of them may enjoy their retirement together with income security?

Mr. Lalonde: The intentions of the government in this regard will be announced very soon. I hope to have the opportunity of speaking about the whole matter when amendments relating to the old age security pension are introduced in the House shortly.

Mr. Fortin: In the bill to be tabled by the end of April, according to the minister's statement, will the matter I have brought up, namely eligibility to the old age security pension at 60, be dealt with?

Mr. Lalonde: I am sorry, Mr. Chairman, as perhaps I gave the hon. member the wrong impression. I did not mean to say that a bill would be introduced before the end of April, but rather a statement or a white paper. The bills will come after consultations with the ministers, at the federal-provincial conference, at the end of April. Only after consulting with my provincial colleagues do I intend to introduce legislation on this subject. However, the government's intentions which should be made public before the middle of April will answer the hon. member's questions, I hope.

[English]

Mr. Nielsen: Mr. Chairman, surely the minister is not telling us that we will not have any bill before the House until after the provincial conference in April. Surely, there will be an increase in pensions before then.

Mr. Lalonde: I certainly hope so, Mr. Chairman. There was probably a misinterpretation of the French into English. I hope there will be legislation on OAS and GIS this week.

Mr. Nielsen: Next week?

Mr. Lalonde: This week.

Mr. Harney: Mr. Chairman, I wish to address a brief question to the minister. A while ago he spoke about a guaranteed annual income for those persons unable to work. Does he include in that category single parents, women, or men for that matter, who are forced by circumstances to raise a family without the support of a partner?

[Translation]

Mr. Lalonde: This is a matter which is under study at the present time. I would suggest to the hon. member to wait for the government's general statement of policy. This matter is now under review.

[English]

The Chairman: Does this complete the discussion on the items under the Department of National Health and Welfare?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

The Chairman: The next item is—

[Translation]

Mr. Fortin: Mr. Chairman, I understood this matter was going to stand until we discuss it again in the next debate, as it is getting late.

[English]

Mr. Nielsen: Mr. Chairman, there has been no general agreement with respect to private members' hour. The hon. member for Brandon-Souris is one of the most patient gentlemen in the House. If hon. members to my left do not agree to pass all remaining items and remaining stages of the bill, now, as I would hope they would do, we will have to ask the government House leader for some guarantee as to the standing of the order in the name of my hon. friend from Brandon-Souris so that it does not lose its place in the next private members' hour. But, surely, we can agree to pass this item now, so that my hon. friend can present his motion.

• (1700)

[Translation]

Mr. Fortin: Mr. Chairman, I think there has been some confusion, as we were consulted on the procedure for private members' hour. I could not answer, as the decision is not mine to make, but if the hon. member for Brandon-Souris (Mr. Dinsdale), who is the sponsor of motion No. 21, agrees that we should continue the debate during the hour set aside for private members' business, we are ready to go along with that.

[English]

The Chairman: The Chair, then, has to admit the greatest confusion of all. Perhaps the hon. member for Lotbinière can assist. I asked whether discussion of the four items under the Department of National Health and Welfare had been completed. I would not like to do an injustice to the hon. member or to other members of his party. I thought members of the other parties had agreed that this did, in fact, conclude the discussion. I am, therefore, in the hands of the hon. member for Lotbinière on this question. Has the discussion concluded on the items under the Department of Health and Welfare?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

[Translation]

Mr. Fortin: No, Mr. Chairman. I spoke a moment ago. I would have liked to make a very brief speech. I would have had some remarks to make. I simply asked a question in the hope that this could—

[English]

The Chairman: Yes, I understand. The item is still open. The four items are still open.

Progress reported.

Mr. MacEachen: Mr. Speaker, if it is agreeable, we could make provision for the pride of place of the hon. member for Brandon-Souris (Mr. Dinsdale) if we could agree to devote the Private Members' Hour to the completion of the appropriation bill. If this were agreeable to the hon. member for Brandon-Souris we would do what we could to see that his primacy is protected.

Mr. Dinsdale: I would be quite happy to co-operate in order to expedite the passing of the measure before us. However, I am wondering whether it would be possible to proceed tomorrow with my motion. As I understand it, it would mean substituting "motion" for "private members' bills". On those terms, I would be quite happy to co-operate.

Mr. MacEachen: That is agreeable to this side.

Mr. Nielsen: There is one further point here. This is the second occasion on which my hon. friend, who is one of the most patient and co-operative members in the House, has been asked to stand this order. I think we on this side would be agreeable, provided the House is in general agreement that we would finish all stages of the supply bill by six o'clock. If we can have that agreement, we would go ahead.

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Peters: No, Mr. Speaker. Just go ahead with the business. I have no axe to grind one way or the other, but I do not think there is any reason to make that condition.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Laniel): It is very difficult for the Chair to see how far we have come toward agreement. Hon. members have heard the proposal that we forgo the private members' hour, at the same time leaving priority on the order paper to the motion in the name of the hon. member for Brandon-Souris with the understanding that this motion be taken as the first order of business tomorrow during the private members' hour. I am not sure, though, whether there is agreement as to the work of the committee and the completion of the estimates which are before the committee by six o'clock.

Mr. Nielsen: If we cannot get that kind of co-operation from members to my left, as we have been endeavouring to do for the last three days, I can see no reason for again putting off the motion in the name of my hon. friend from Brandon-Souris.

Mr. Peters: That is our business.

Mr. Reid: Mr. Speaker, if you would call item 21 you would find there is agreement to allow all the others to stand with the consent of the government.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Laniel): As there does not seem to be complete agreement, it is my duty to call it five o'clock. The House will now proceed to consideration of private members' business as listed on today's order paper.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Laniel): Is it agreed we stand all the motions up to 21 exclusive?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

PRIVATE MEMBERS' MOTIONS

HEALTH AND WELFARE

SUGGESTED MEASURE TO AID HANDICAPPED PERSONS

Hon. W. G. Dinsdale (Brandon-Souris) moved:

That, in the opinion of this House, the government should give urgent consideration to initiating, in co-operation with the provincial governments, and voluntary groups, specific programmes for chronically sick and severely disabled Canadians including (a) building standards designed to provide easy access to public buildings, schools and universities (b) adequate educational and vocational and employment guidance service (c) making available technical and electronic equipment so that handicapped persons might be able to control their immediate environment (heat, light, radio, T.V., typewriter, tape recorder, etc.), enabling many to live at home in the bosom of the family rather than "existing" in expensive hospitals for the handicapped and chronically ill (d) separate provision for younger and older patients who must be hospitalized (e) the general coordination of policies designed to aid this group so that "if years cannot be added to the lives of the very sick, at least life can be added to their years".

He said: Mr. Speaker, this is a non-controversial motion. Indeed, it is the kind of motion which should receive full support from all hon. members in the chamber. It relates to the subject which was under discussion before the hour of five, namely, the operations of the Department of National Health and Welfare. The atmosphere at that time was somewhat contentious, and I hope it will not spill over into the atmosphere which I anticipate will surround consideration of the motion I am presenting. If I were to put a caption on the subject matter I wish to discuss, I would describe it in the following terms—the urgent necessity for new goals for rehabilitation.

The approach of dealing with the problems of handicapped people in Canadian society from the basis of a pension plus a bed I am sure all hon. members will agree is no longer adequate. Yet it is a subject that I found, as I pursued it and did the necessary research to present the motion, many people are reluctant to talk about. There is a sense of embarrassment that almost reflects the attitude that prevailed up until comparatively recent times with respect to the mentally ill and the mentally retarded. This applies particularly to the chronically ill, those who are disabled as a result of chronic illness, and also those who are severely physically disabled.

I trust I shall present a viewpoint this afternoon which will demonstrate that people with physical handicaps, or for that matter with any disability, actually have a special quality that places them in a position to make a particularly effective contribution to the society in which they live. One of the by-products of disability, I have found from having met with these people and had extended discussions with them, is that they have developed a patience plus a perseverance that enables them to make a particularly effective contribution to their day and to their generation.

When we are reminded that approximately 7½ per cent of the population of Canada requires rehabilitation services of some kind, we immediately become aware of the nature of the problem. If we express it in population terms, it amounts to almost 1.5 million people. The traditional approach that has been exercised, and which prevailed up until the so-called present period of enlightenment, is that of providing minimum facilities that make it possible for these people to maintain a minimum standard of life which completely ignores their special emotional, psychological and spiritual needs.

Even in the profession of the social worker, you will find that the approach has been to help the families who find this affliction in their midst adjust to the inevitable and they agree to place the afflicted person in question away in an institution which is more appropriately described as a human warehouse than as a centre for effective rehabilitation. Not only is this a monstrous waste of the human potential that lies at hand in the physically handicapped, it is also a costly solution. I do not have the figures at hand, but to have one of these persons permanently hospitalized or set aside in an institution for the chronically ill is much more costly in monetary terms than would be any co-ordinated effort directed toward the comprehensive rehabilitation of Canadians who are disabled in some respect.

We should also be reminded that disability is far more frequently the result of social, emotional or economic dependency than physical impairment. We believe it is a fundamental precept of our way of life to regard the body merely as the receptacle for the spirit of man. Yet when that receptacle is cracked, more often than not we throw the receptacle, contents and all, out of the general social process.

I want briefly to view the problem this afternoon through the eyes of the disabled. I find that they want to become involved in the whole ongoing process of life. They want to be able to control their environment; they want to have opportunities for social and mental development. They want adequate housing with specific facilities provided—and I shall enumerate one or two of these in a moment—so they can manage their own affairs and with minimum support be able to live a full life. This applies even to the 42,000 Canadians who at this time are confined to wheelchairs. They need special facilities to give them mobility, and they need recreational opportunities. They want to be accepted as persons and become involved in the total life process. In particular, this requires economic security and jobs, for in many respects poverty is just another word for disability. As a result, unemployment among them is chronic.

To sum it all up, perhaps we can say that we must seek a society where there is a genuine respect for the handicapped; where understanding is unostentatious and sincere; where if years cannot be added to the lives of the very sick, at least life can be added to their years; where needs come before means; where the mobility of disabled people is restricted only by the bounds of technical progress and discovery; where the handicapped have a fundamental right to participate in industry and in society according to their abilities; where socially preventable distress is unknown; and where no man has cause to feel ill at ease because of disability. That was a quotation from a debate that took place when the United Kingdom parliament was debating a special act which has now found its way into the statute books and is known as the chronically sick and disabled persons act of 1970.

Voluntary groups in Canada have done an amazing job of coping with the problem, to a large extent with a minimum of public support. In 1952, the first comprehensive rehabilitation institute was established in the city of Vancouver, the G. F. Strong Institute, and this indicates just how recent are these developments. Today there are some 16 centres in operation across Canada and in all provinces. Universities have become involved and several of the major hospitals are fully equipped to handle the disabled.

I should like to pay tribute to a few outstanding names. This is risky because so many people have been involved, but I am sure hon. members will understand if I mention the name of Colonel Eddie Baker who did so much to come to grips with the handicap of blindness. Then, there is the Lyndhurst hospital in Toronto under Dr. Jousse. Dr. Gustave Gingras has made a great contribution both in the province of Quebec and throughout the world. He has become an eminent world authority on the problems of rehabilitation through his work at the Montreal Rehabilitation Centre. In addition there are many associations, such as the Paraplegic Association, the associations for crippled children and adults, for multiple sceloris, muscular dystrophy and so on. I could go on and on, Mr. Speaker, and name the whole group that today is encompassed within a fairly recent organization, the Canadian Rehabilitation Council for the Disabled, better known as the CRCD. This body is under the direction of Dr. Keith Armstrong who has worked to bring about co-ordination in the voluntary and, more recently, in the public sector through the instrumentality of CRCD.

Obviously, the government is aware of the problems in this field, because I was reading a statement made by the minister as recently as February 5, 1973 when he addressed the Montreal Chamber of Commerce. It is a speech in respect of Canada's social security policy and at page 4 we find this interesting observation:

• (1720)

In the first place, the Social Security Plan shall ensure to persons unable to work, the elderly, the blind and the disabled, an annual guaranteed income that is fair and compassionate.

This principle is already embodied in a whole series of measures which go back as far as 1927.

These programs, drawn up to meet special needs, have never been fully integrated; on the one hand, because they were adopted at different times for different purposes, and on the other hand, because it happened that the same program came under different jurisdictions.

That sums up the situation in a nutshell in respect of problems which confront us in the public sector of responsibility at the present time.

In passing I would just like to refer to the outstanding work that has been done by the Department of Veterans Affairs in this respect. They have the know-how and all the information, and what is needed now is co-ordination. The National Defence Hospitalization and Medical Centre is another outstanding institution which has the experience to act as an excellent resource centre in dealing with this problem.

The categories of my resolution are before members of the House. Let me refer to them briefly as follows; building standards and the necessity of the state to take some responsibility for giving leadership in this respect to provide for greater mobility including such things as special homes along the lines of Cheshire Homes. Group Captain Cheshire of dambuster fame has become a worldwide leader in this field. He was in Canada a few months ago opening some of these Cheshire Homes which meet the particular needs of the severely disabled from the standpoint of architectural standards.

There is another problem to which I refer in passing. Very often because there is not adequate housing we find young people accommodated with geriatrics cases, and this is obviously unsatisfactory so far as young people are concerned.

My motion also refers to educational and vocational opportunities and the need for an educational counselling and retraining opportunities. It is interesting to note one aspect of the problem that really affects the physically disabled and makes them feel they are discriminated against; the fact that many applications for jobs specifically ask whether a person is disabled or has a physical defect, the implication being that he is not eligible for these positions if that is the case.

Let me refer briefly to the technical aid aspect of my motion. There is to be a meeting in Toronto on Wednesday sponsored by the CRCD where, for the first time in Canada, there will be a report on the technical aids which are available in meeting the special needs of the physically handicapped in Canada. Later on in March there will be a meeting in Ottawa to bring together people who are skilled in the area of biological engineering to discuss how modern breakthroughs in technology might be applied to the special needs of the physically handicapped.

Development in the United Kingdom is far ahead of our development in Canada. I would refer to Possum which is a Latin stylization of "Posm", Patient Operated Selector Mechanisms. With poetic licence, this has been changed by the disabled users to Possum, the Latin for I am able or I can do. It makes it possible for a totally handicapped person, through technology, to control his immediate environment and return to the bosom of the family rather than living an existence which is less than human in these human warehouses to which I have already referred. An outstanding case is that of Miss Hilary Pole, a victim of myasthenia gravis, who is totally immobilized except for the movement of her big toe. Through posm technical aids, she is able to type out the most beautiful poetry on a typewriter, and was able to return to her home.

In Canada, we have similar developments that are almost ready to go into production. TOSC, developed independently along parallel lines to Possum, meaning Touch Operated Selector Control, was developed by a Canada quadraplegic, Mr. Bud Cairns, of the city of Toronto. We have these breakthroughs and what is needed now is a coordinating effort on the part of the federal government to bring to bear the delivery of what is available to a large number of handicapped people in Canada so that, as my motion suggests, if they cannot have years added to their lives, they might have life added to their years.

This will require the complete co-ordination of medical, educational, social and technical aspects of the problem. I trust that when the government spokesman replies to the observations I have made this afternoon he will deal specifically with some of these recommendations. Ottawa must provide leadership. We do have the difficulty of jurisdictional dispute, but, as the minister mentioned in his speech on February 5 last, while a part of the responsibility lies with provincial governments, Ottawa must provide the co-ordination necessary to make it possible for provincial governments to deal adequately and comprehensibly with some of these problems I have outlined.

We have the Canada Assistance Plan, but there is no uniformity under that plan as it is permissive and standards vary in each province. As I look at the situation across Canada, it seems to me that the two provinces most advanced in this respect are the province of Manitoba, which happens to be my own, and the province of Ontario. If these provinces can do this, so can other provincial authorities.

Perhaps this motion could be referred to an appropriate committee for further discussion with the hearing of briefs, because the deeper I delve into this matter the more I am astonished at the lack of information. Once the motion became a matter of public interest and concern I began to receive letters from handicapped people across the country who have developed aids and programs on their own to assist themselves. Unfortunately, they are living in complete isolation without any comprehensive knowledge of the facilities and services available to help them.

A discussion in the appropriate committee would allow some of these viewpoints to be made known, and this would be extremely helpful. I hope too, the government will consider appointing a national rehabilitation council. The Canadian Rehabilitation Council for the Disabled has worked as a private agency in this field for the past number of years with limited resources, with some assistance from Ottawa and provincial governments as well as volunteer agencies. The time has come for Ottawa to accept its obligations in this respect, and I trust that the government will let this motion pass.

Mr. Georges-C. Lachance (Lafontaine): Mr. Speaker, we seldom have the opportunity in the House to discuss a problem with such a lack of partisanship. I am pleased to note the interest shown by the hon. member for Brandon-Souris (Mr. Dinsdale) in the rehabilitation of the handicapped and I congratulate him for having moved a notice of motion which reads in part as follows:

—the government should give urgent consideration to initiating, in co-operation with provincial governments and voluntary groups, specific programs for chronically sick and severely disabled individuals—

Mr. Speaker, I feel that we should seriously consider that problem. Some action has been taken in that field, but I think that we have not done the utmost to assist the handicapped.

Particularly during the last election campaign, Mr. Speaker, I have had the opportunity—previously also, but this is fresher in my mind—to talk with handicapped people, since there is a home in my riding with a number of handicapped people. The ones that I met do not obviously complain about their housing conditions; quite the contrary, first, one would be led to believe that these are people who live better than other Canadians since they live in a modern building. These in particular live in a modern building which was built precisely to help the handicapped. But how many do live in this home? One hundred and twenty or fifty—

It is hard to find out exactly how many handicapped there are in Canada, all the more because some are seriously handicapped, and others are less so; therefore, there is a question of percentage of invalidity which must be reckoned with. Several questions were put to me by these young men and women who are not very old and live in this home; it was brought to my attention that employment possibilities were very complex, but they were not complaining about housing conditions.

But it is not only that; those disabled of course want to be useful, to earn their living, to be kept busy and encouraged in their work. It is not that easy to get a 50 or 40 per cent job when you are 50 per cent handicapped; it might seem easy to find a 50 per cent job, but it is quite complex.

During the election campaign, I promised myself that after the election, I would try to look into this problem, and I got in touch with the research department of the parliamentary library whose help is always forthcoming. This department enabled me to find certain documents; my file is not yet complete but I take this opportunity to inform the House of the results of my research, unfortunately very briefly.

First, it must be acknowledged that in America, we have not done until now everything that could have been done for the handicapped. A few pieces of legislation were passed, but it is mainly in certain countries such as Sweden, Great Britain and Holland that more comprehensive and practical laws can be found for handicapped people.

I have here some documents precisely about the assistance given to the disabled in Sweden and Great Britain. It is always the same problem: means must be found to help the handicapped. It is true that since 1961, there is legislation on the vocational rehabilitation of the disabled, which is administered by the federal government but in co-operation with the provincial governments to help handicapped people. It is under this legislation that assistance is given to the handicapped.

But this legislation does not go far enough and it seems that it was not followed up in order to obtain beneficial results. We hear about research, medical care, vocational training, employment agencies, employment assistance, but as yet no one has taken the bull by the horns.

I do not know if the laws which apply in the United Kingdom and in Sweden can be applied in Canada, but I wonder whether a list of the disabled should not be drawn up, which does not seem to have been done as it was in the United Kingdom where a registry is provided for the handicapped to register. They are strongly urged to register but, of course, all of them do not. Besides, all the disabled cannot necessarily find a job. However, this registry provides at least an inventory—provided people agree to register—of those who really want to find a job.

This method might be implemented. Of course, certain people do not approve of such a register, all the more as some seem to have the funny idea that the handicapped do not want to be helped.

Today, that seems rather difficult. Dr. Meilleur, of the Manpower and Immigration Department, stated not so long ago that the department did not have the accurate statistics it needed to help the handicapped as it should. He also stated that it was difficult to get the necessary information through questionnaires. He said, and I quote:

• (1740)

[English]

Our forms are more and more neutral. Pretty soon we won't be able to ask which sex.

[Translation]

Still, there should be a campaign to explain to the people that it is extremely important for the handicapped to tell us of their wants, their needs; then, we could help them better.

Mr. Speaker, my time is almost over. Several of my colleagues want to discuss this problem. They could obtain information on the matter from the parliamentary library, especially on the way rehabilitation programs were studied and adapted in Great Britain and Sweden.

I have here a photostat of a brochure entitled "Rehabilitation and Care of Disabled People in Britain", that can be obtained from the library as well as that entitled "Services for the Handicapped", by Richard Turner. The latter is a study on the Swedish system.

Mr. Speaker, one can also obtain the document which was prepared for me by the research service of the library. It is dated February 12th 1973 and is entitled "Legislation Designed to Encourage the Employment of the Handicapped".

That is why, Mr. Speaker, I do not claim to have carried out an exhaustive study of the problem, but I am doing so. I have a special interest in it. In fact, during the election campaign I had the opportunity to meet young people of working age who are experiencing great difficulty in achieving a normal life.

They have skills—some fewer than others—and they are very anxious to work; some are interested in social work, work of all kinds.

I believe that it is only by a careful census and thorough of handicapped people and the appropriate action to enable them to find employment that they can be helped to lead normal lives.

As I said a few moments ago, should we adopt the formula developed in Great Britain? Legislation has been enacted, namely the Disabled Persons (Employment) Acts of 1944 and 1958, which deal with that system of records for the handicapped; the Secretary of State is given the opportunity to say that there are designated, sheltered jobs which even allow the incorporation on non-profit organizations designed to help the handicapped to obtain incorporation and to work. In general, these corporations, called Remploy Ltd., are granted governmental subsidies but some succeed in making quite interesting profits.

So I urge strongly hon. members to obtain those papers which have been prepared for me by the Library of Parliament and we will undoubtedly be in a position to discuss that matter in greater detail shortly.

[English]

Mrs. Grace MacInnis (Vancouver-Kingsway): Mr. Speaker, in this parliament of minorities, where we often have difficulty in reaching agreement, I think it is rather significant that on a matter of this importance all parties are in agreement on the desirability of trying to get a better and fuller life for handicapped and chronically ill people. We are all grateful to the hon. member for Brandon-Souris (Mr. Dinsdale) for bringing forward a matter which is so dear to his heart, one on which he has done a great deal of research. The hon. member for Lafontaine (Mr. Lachance) has told us a great deal about what is being done in other places.

The sponsor of the motion said the matter should be dealt with under the heading of "new goals for rehabilitation." I think it should also be called "new goals for living." From experience I know that the handicapped and chronically ill, when given a chance, are people who do get a whole new inspiration for living. The severely handicapped and the chronically ill have perfectly normal instincts. What they want to do, above all, is to lead as normal a life as possible in spite of their condition. They want to care for themselves at home as much as possible. They want to go places like other people do. Within their own capacities they want to get satisfactory work. They want to enjoy recreation with other people to the extent that is possible. We in this country have been doing a few things to assist them. Voluntary groups have undertaken many projects. However, governments have done very little in comparison with what needs to be done.

Every time I go past the National Archives on Wellington Street in Ottawa I am greatly heartened to see the stone ramp which makes it easier for handicapped people to get into the National Library. I remember being told in our centennial year that many of the structures being built then were designed to provide easy access for handicapped people. But this is far from becoming universal. We should be undertaking much more of this type of thing. We should find ways and means of helping handicapped people to get transportation to go places. Here I think of a muscular dystrophy case in my riding. Fortunately, this man has friends who help him into a car which has a specially wide seat and once a week they drive him to a centre where he can engage in recreation. But many handicapped people cannot get to such places. We have no means of transportation for them, so they are condemned to sit in solitude.

• (1750)

One of the brightest spots in the matter of housing for these people concerns a man in my constituency. He has been severely handicapped from his early years, when he had a bad accident, and has to spend most of his life in a wheelchair. He was able to get work during his earlier life but now is retired and draws the old age pension. About a year ago he convinced Central Mortgage and Housing that they should allow him to conduct research into the needs of handicapped people in their homes, and what should be done for them in the way of public and other kinds of housing. He did a great deal of research in this country, in the United States, and even in Sweden, and has made a valuable contribution to the outlining of some of the things that should be done by this government.

There is also the matter of sheltered workshops. Our government could do a lot more than is being done to provide activities for handicapped people so that they can lead a satisfying life. An adequate guaranteed income is essential, but satisfying social and useful activity must also be provided if these people are to lead satisfying and constructive lives.

I know that our time this afternoon is short. I am very tempted to take more of it, but I shall not because I know that one or two other members would like to say a few words. But I want to underline what the hon. member for Brandon-Souris said in his concluding remarks. I believe that we as a House should show that we are in earnest about this and are not just giving lip service to a "motherhood" resolution. If we really want to do something, we will listen to the plea of the hon. member for Brandon-Souris and send this resolution to the Standing Committee on National Health and Welfare for thorough study by handicapped people and those who work with them who could be called as witnesses. Perhaps in that way we can find the gaps in what is being done to help them.

Mr. Speaker, I urge that instead of talking out this resolution we agree to send it to committee. The Standing Committee on National Health and Welfare is not occupied at the moment, as far as I am aware. This would be something for it to get its teeth into, and would probably be much more useful than some of its other work. Let us help the handicapped to help themselves.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

[Translation]

Mr. Gaston Isabelle (Hull): Mr. Speaker, it is with pleasure that I shall say a few words on that motion, in my opinion, a very important motion, and the more so since it reminds me that in 1970 I had the opportunity, with the hon. member for York Centre (Mr. Walker), of travelling to Australia. In the beautiful city of Melbourne, we visited Australia's National Museum. We were surprised not only by the modern and extraordinary architecture of that magnificent building, but also by the sight of handicapped people who, having to move around in wheel-chairs, could have access to all the floors of that building.

I am convinced that perhaps the government has not done enough along that line. However, one should nevertheless remember that it has made some efforts; six years ago, the Post Office Department for its buildings adopted a policy requiring that in future such buildings should provide entrance at street level, allowing the handicapped to benefit from them as well as the other citizens.

Moreover, in those buildings, some of which were old, the department had some hand-rails eracted. In Calgary, a building was constructed in such a way that the handicapped could not only enter it, but also work in it and benefit from promotion opportunities as well as all the other public servants.

Mr. Speaker, of course, I should not like, as they say, to kill that motion, but may I be permitted to recall that sooner or later we shall all, inevitably, become handicapped, or at least less and less alert in the discharge of the most usual tasks.

But what about the Montreal Air Terminal, for instance? I do not mean that the architect who designed this awful piece of architecture is an imbecile, but why tell old people, Do travel, we shall grant you fare reductions, and then we have them walk about two miles, which is enough to kill them before they get to the plane. Perhaps we should follow the example set at the Paris Air Terminal, where moving sidewalks enable people and even handicapped persons to reach their plane with practically no effort. Perhaps we should stop building air terminals which not only penalize handicapped people but also people who normally become handicapped with age.

We should stop building such horrible things for our older people, for handicapped people who, for a reason or another, certainly took part in active life in Canada and certainly deserve some reward.

Mr. Speaker, there are many other things I would like to say. I think congratulations are in order for my friend Dr. Gustave Gingras who was, I believe, the first Canadian to promote rehabilitation. My hon. friend from Brandon-Souris (Mr. Dinsdale) spoke about Colonel Baker, but I think Dr. Gingras was one of the instigators of rehabilitation in Canada and should be praised for it.

Mr. Speaker, if the present motion is referred to a committee, I do not think this will produce any results. In my opinion, an effort should be made to tell the provinces they have something to do in this field. Health problems are shared and "shareable" to such an extent, especially on a world basis, that it is up to the provinces to deal with them. They are faced with so many problems, Mr. Speaker, that they do not think about these highly important matters.

In my opinion, health is the most important asset. In the case of those who have to get around and work with some disability, they should be treated as first class citizens by all governments. If provincial governments could take advantage of the Canada Assistance Act in such way as suggested by my friend for Brandon-Souris, I think that what he proposes to do in his motion could also be realized. Therefore, normally, all provinces should assume neither more nor less than their own responsibilities in this field, and I completely agree that this must be done by the provinces.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Laniel): Order. I regret to have to interrupt the hon. member but the hour allotted for the consideration of private members' business having expired, I do now leave the chair until eight o'clock.

At six o'clock the House took recess.

AFTER RECESS

The House resumed at 8 p.m.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

THE BUDGET

FINANCIAL STATEMENT OF THE MINISTER OF FINANCE

Hon. John N. Turner (Minister of Finance) moved:

That this House approves in general the budgetary policy of the government.

He said: Mr. Speaker, the purpose of this budget is—first and foremost—to bring about a substantial reduction in unemployment. Unemployment is much more than an economic problem. It is a grave social problem, a serious human problem, and I am deeply conscious of the fact that for those who really want and need work, who are looking for work and cannot find it, unemployment can be bitter and frustrating.

This budget is aimed at the faster growth of our economy and the strengthening of its basic structure in order to achieve the greatest possible increase in the number of permanent, satisfying jobs for our rapidly growing labour force.

This budget is aimed at reducing inflationary pressures in Canada and at offsetting the effects of past inflation. This is essential to protect our country's international competitive position so as to ensure continued strong growth of production and employment. It is equally essential to reduce the squeeze of rising prices on family budgets and the erosion of the hard-earned savings of Canadians.

This budget is aimed at increasing the real income and improving the standard of living of Canadians.

It is aimed at ensuring that older Canadians share more fairly and more fully in the growing national prosperity—which their efforts during their working years helped to make possible—so they may better enjoy living in well-earned retirement.

It is aimed at balanced economic expansion so that all regions share equitably in our growing wealth, because national unity demands fair shares in national prosperity.

[Translation]

This budget reinforces and builds upon the budget which I put before the House last May. Taken together, the measures proposed last May and those I will propose tonight are strongly expansionary, while at the same time acting to curb the forces of inflation. They will stimulate the growth of production and employment, while helping business to moderate price increases. They will put more income, more purchasing power into the hands of Canadian consumers without increasing costs.

Hon. members may recall that the budget of last May, in addition to providing immediate stimulus to the economy, was designed to serve two basic purposes.

It was designed to achieve a greater measure of social justice by easing the financial burden borne by pensioners, by the blind and the disabled, by veterans and their dependents, by students and their families and by those who face heavy costs for medical care and treatment.

And it was designed to reinforce the structure of our economy over the medium and longer term by strengthening the competitive position at home and abroad of our vitally important manufacturing and processing industries.

[The Acting Speaker, (Mr. Laniel).]

Parliament last session approved the proposals to raise the guaranteed income supplement for pensioners and escalate that supplement, old age security benefits, and veterans' pensions and allowances to offset fully increases in the cost of living.

It is urgent that Parliament give early approval to the other proposals put foward in the May budget involving the income tax, sales tax and the customs tariff, most of which are effective in 1972.

The measures to reduce the tax burden of manufacturers and processors represent a first major step in the development of a coherent set of new industrial policies. They are needed to strengthen the foundation of our economy and its capacity to create jobs for our working men and women—who belong to the fastest growing labour force in the industrial world.

The manufacturing and processing sector is the largest single source of employment in this country. It provides jobs directly for nearly two million Canadians—nearly a quarter of the whole labour force. It provides jobs indirectly for as many again in the service sector, which depends for its growth on the underpinning of viable primary, processing and manufacturing industries.

The manufacturing sector, however, is highly vulnerable to the new forces of competition that are now developing around the world.

The reductions in the tax burden borne by these industries will help them to overcome the competitive handicap caused by the appreciation of the Canadian dollar since May, 1970.

These reductions will enable them to offset the serious competitive threat posed by the substantial tax subsidies for exports made available in the past year to U.S. corporations. The real danger of such subsidy programs is not the immediate impact they may have on our exports or our imports. That, too, can be serious and takes time to show up. The real danger lies in their possible effect on new investment in this country. This is more difficult to measure. Often there is no visible decline of business. Unless it is as profitable to invest in Canada as in the U.S. or other countries offering special incentives, new plants don't get built, expansions don't take place, jobs don't get created.

The easing of the tax burden of manufacturers will also help them to meet the increasingly intense competition from the new industrial giants that are emerging on the world stage—Japan and the expanded European Economic Community.

• (2010)

[English]

The very recent international monetary crisis underscores the significance of what I have been saying about our position in the world. No one can predict the outcome of the changes now underway in the world's trading and financial system or what their impact may be on Canada's trading position. It should be clear to all of us, however, that we will be better able to face whatever challenges may confront us if we keep our industries strong, resilient and competitive.

What is at stake is not the welfare of corporations and their shareholders. At stake is the welfare of every Canadian. At stake are hundreds of thousands of jobs that today depend on our manufacturers staying in business and retaining their workers. At stake also are hundreds of thousands of good steady jobs in the manufacturing sector and supporting industries that will be required in future across Canada for our new workers. It is critical that we should all have a clear understanding of what is at issue. That is why I am committed and the government is committed to these measures.

It is sometimes argued that, far from creating new employment, these measures will only serve to reduce the number of available jobs by encouraging the displacement of workers by machines. That sort of concern has been raised periodically ever since the beginning of the industrial revolution. But the experience of many decades has shown that advancing technology brings with it continued expansion in productivity and output, continued expansion in the real income that workers are able to earn, and continued expansion in the number of productive jobs available. It is no coincidence that for some time now the most labour-intensive manufacturing industries in Canada have generally provided few—if any—new job opportunities, that they usually pay the lowest wages, and that they face the greatest difficulty from foreign competition.

It has also been contended that these measures should not be adopted because a significant portion of the benefit would go to foreign-controlled companies. Let me remind honourable members of a hard reality: these corporations, which are today a major source of employment in this country—providing jobs directly and indirectly for a million or more Canadian workers, face much the same handicaps as those that are Canadian-controlled. We have to move toward greater control of our economy in a way and at a pace that does not jeopardize jobs. I am sure these workers would not thank this parliament if it failed to take steps to counter the threat to their own jobs because of some misguided sense of extreme nationalism.

In its most recent Annual Review, the Economic Council of Canada warned that a failure to maintain the rate of productivity growth throughout the manufacturing sector would lead to higher costs, lower sales and fewer jobs for Canadian workers. The Council emphasized that new policies were required to deal with this threat. The Council concluded that, in its words, "the fiscal measures announced on May 8, 1972, concerning the manufacturing sector may be considered an important step in this direction".

Members of the House will recall that last May I said I was confident that Canadian businessmen would use the increased cash flow to improve and expand their operations and to engage in vigorous price competition at home and abroad. I said I expected business to hustle, to grow, to compete and to build jobs for Canadians. The recent pickup in production, investment and employment in the manufacturing sector leads me to believe that they are, in fact, already stepping up their performance.

I would like to advise the House tonight that the government has decided to make a modification to the rapid write-off and to introduce a new procedure to monitor the results of the incentives to manufacturing and processing industries. We propose that the two-year capital cost allowance provision be put in place for an initial period ending December 31, 1974. Moreover, the government will establish a reporting and review procedure in order to assess the effect of these corporate measures on prices and jobs.

It is our intention that a report be submitted to the House before the end of 1974. This report will be based on detailed information provided by a large number of individual companies and in-depth study of some 200 of the largest corporations. I believe that such an assessment will prove how constructive these measures will have turned out to be in creating new jobs and moderating prices. It will also be helpful to the government in reviewing the capital cost allowance provision to decide whether and in what form to extend it.

In order to better evaluate not just the new fast write-off, but all aspects of present capital cost allowances, I propose to initiate a thorough examination of the entire system. We intend to complete this review by the end of 1974 so that parliament will be in a position to modernize our whole approach to capital cost allowances. I am vitally concerned that our system for business depreciation be fair and reasonable and not a hidden method for avoiding taxation.

[Translation]

I would like now to review briefly the economic and financial situation.

Hon. members may recall that last year we published an annual Economic Review in April and we intend to follow that practice again this year. Because the budget is so early this year, it is not possible to issue the usual budget White Paper on government accounts at this time. This will be made available to the House as soon as possible after the end of the fiscal year.

In 1972 the industrial world enjoyed a strong economic expansion. When confidence returned after the international economic crisis of August, 1971, faster rates of growth set in everywhere—in Europe, in Japan and in North America. Output in the industrial countries went up at almost double the rate of the previous year. I would like now to give a brief account of how Canada fared during this period.

In 1972, Canada's gross national product rose 10½ to 11 per cent. Personal income per head was up close to 10½ per cent, and the standard of living of Canadians as shown by consumer expenditures per capita—after deducting the effects of price increases—was up by nearly 5½ per cent. We started 7 per cent more houses than we did in the previous record year. A total of 250,000 new jobs were created, as compared with 200,000 in 1971, an increase of 25 per cent. Farm income rose strongly and the return on business investment was restored to more normal levels.

Although the current account of our balance of payments moved back into deficit, we were relatively free of disturbance from the international economy. It is obvious from recent events that foreign exchange markets have been prone to crisis. But our own experience with a floating rate has been favourable. The Canadian dollar, having been above parity in terms of the U.S. dollar through the middle part of the year, has fluctuated around parity in recent months. This held true even last week. The operations of the Exchange Fund Account have been limited to maintaining orderly conditions in the exchange market and have not complicated the task of managing the government's financial position.

In the first half of the year, competition among the banks drove up interest rates and led to an excessive rate of monetary expansion. But the agreement reached among the banks with my approval in June to lower interest rates on large deposits eliminated these distortions and the financial markets have been reasonably stable since that time. A generally expansionary monetary policy fostered economic expansion and encouraged Canadians to borrow in domestic rather than in foreign markets.

[English]

The final record of the government's financial position for the current financial year will not, of course, be known with certainty until well after March 31. In fact, a somewhat more than normal amount of uncertainty should be attached to this year's forecasts. In particular, because this is the first year of experience under the tax reform, the timing and size of tax refunds and final tax payments may depart significantly from historical patterns. On the basis of information available at this date, we expect something close to a balance on budgetary accounts and non-budgetary cash requirements of approximately $2 billion, giving total cash requirements (excluding foreign exchange) of about $2 billion. This total is the same as that anticipated in the May 8 budget. As compared with that budget, the non-budgetary cash requirements are higher largely because of the higher than forecast unemployment insurance benefits; the budgetary position is stronger because revenues have been buoyant. The fiscal stance of the government is best expressed by the government's total cash requirement, budgetary and non-budgetary. For several years now, we have followed the practice of determining our fiscal policy on the basis of total cash requirements and, indeed, this is the practice of most modern states in presenting their over-all financial position.

The economic expansion in Canada was interrupted in the third quarter of 1972 by events beyond the ability of anyone to predict or control. The weather was most unfavourable last summer in much of Quebec and Ontario. This adversely affected farm output and all the many industries and services which depend upon agriculture. In addition, a series of strikes shut down important parts of the mining industry, tied up the forest industry in British Columbia, closed down Canadian and other ports, and disrupted the movement of wheat, lumber, iron ore and other export commodities.

Since September we have seen a sharp rebound of economic activity. The fourth quarter, I am confident, will turn out to have been quite extraordinary. In the early weeks of 1973, all the signs—including our own revenues—are pointing sharply upward.

This year we are expecting the expansion to be driven mainly by business capital investment, inventory build-up and exports. Consumer spending and house building, which contributed so much to the earlier stages of the expansion, will continue at high levels but could rise less rapidly. It is evident that business investment is now accelerating in response to the growth in the economy and in anticipation of the enactment of the May budget measures. When these measures become law, the growth in business investment will become even stronger. So far we have seen little growth of inventories in this expansion. I expect that businesses will be adding to their stocks in 1973 in order to maintain higher levels of sales and shipments. Thus, we have the basis for a very good economic performance in 1973.

[Translation]

Two major problems confront us. The first is unemployment. The second is the rise in prices and costs. These are the key problems to which my budget measures are directed.

The most unsatisfactory feature of our economic performance has been the continuing high level of unemployment, even after two full years of economic expansion. We would have done better, it is true, had it not been for the weather and the effect of strikes last year in slowing down employment, production and exports. But other factors have been at work as well. The labour force is growing rapidly both because of the age structure of our population and because a growing proportion of young people and of women have joined the labour force.

It is a fact that while unemployment has remained high, employers are reporting difficulty in filling the growing number of vacancies. Certainly more generous provisions for the unemployed and the availability of support for many unemployed persons from spouses or parents permit people to take more time in finding the jobs that suit them best. We need more information in appraising the unemployment situation and I trust the study being undertaken by the Economic Council of Canada will be helpful.

The hard truth remains, however, that unemployment is too high. I attach the highest priority to the creation of jobs. My May budget was directed toward creating jobs. In September, a major program to create winter employment was announced. One of the very first steps which this government took after the recent election was also directed to this same goal. I refer to the Winter Job Expansion Plan, which for some time now has been putting people to work. This program was directed at alleviating seasonal unemployment, particularly in the slower-growth regions. Further action is needed to deal with the more general problem. We need to stimulate a higher rate of economic growth. We must achieve a growth of real output of goods and services in Canada appreciably in excess of our long-term average if new job creation is to keep up with our rapidly growing labour force and cut into unemployment.

[English]

The second major problem is that of rising prices and costs. We are by no means the only country with this problem. Inflation has now reached epidemic proportions in many parts of the world. Our own experience was less favourable in 1972 than it was in 1971. The acceleration in consumer prices was concentrated in foods, which rose sharply last year. In part this was due to local conditions, but in large measure it reflected the world-wide market forces pushing up the prices of grains, meat, sugar and other basic foods. A committee of this House is now investigating these matters. Non-food prices have not shown nearly as much acceleration at the retail level, but there have been sharp increases in the prices of a number of primary commodities in world markets.

All Canadians are concerned about the rise in the cost of living and the decline in the value of money which that entails. If nothing is done, there is a prospect that inflationary expectations will rise. This could disrupt financial markets, drive up interest rates, disturb the exchange market and impose a brake on the economy—in short, frustrate our efforts to increase employment.

Many have argued that the best way to deal with this problem is to set up direct controls over prices, wages and other incomes. As members are aware, Mr. Speaker, the government has given extensive study to the matter of controls and has prepared a contingency plan to be used if necessary. But the government does not believe that the present circumstances—hurtful as they are to many Canadian families—warrant the imposition of controls. Controls would demand a far wider public consensus and more evidence of an emergency situation than is now the case. Our approach is to increase the supply of goods and services, to increase personal disposable income, to relieve the pressure on those hurt, to restrict the government's own demands upon the economy and, above all, to trust Canadians, in their own self-interest—businessmen, working men and women, professionals, farmers—to exercise restraint in their demands for higher income. If that self-interest is not reflected in good judgment, then there will be a self-defeating escalation of costs and prices.

We are, then, faced with the twin problems of unemployment and inflation. An expansion of output will contribute to the solution of both. The government, therefore, believes that in its own fiscal policy it should continue to impart stimulus to the expansion of employment and to the supply of goods and services. It is essential to provide this stimulus in ways which will offer maximum resistance to the forces of inflation.

In seeking to stimulate the economy, while at the same time resisting inflation, I have taken into account the actions which were included in my last budget. Their effects have not yet fully been felt because of time lags. They will continue to have a substantial impact for some years to come. The measures I shall recommend tonight involve action on several fronts. I shall lean heavily, however, on the side of cutting taxes, as opposed to increasing expenditures. This reflects the government's determination to impose restraint on its own spending in order to avoid aggravating inflation. It also reflects the government's determination to do everything reasonably possible to encourage business, labour and the professions to exercise price and income restraint in the national interest and in their own interest.

[Translation]

I turn now to the budget measures themselves. Let me begin with a proposal to help our older people. This is a follow-up to the important measures we put in place last year to raise the guaranteed income supplement for old age pensioners and to increase both the basic pension and the supplemental allowance automatically in step with any annual rise in the cost of living.

We are very much aware of the position of elderly people in our country and over the years successive governments have attempted to improve their situation as rapidly as our resources would permit. We can be proud of what we have been able to achieve for the most needy among our elder citizens by provision of the guaranteed income supplement. That unique system of allowances was introduced in 1966 by the government of the late Rt. Hon. Lester Pearson. It provides old age pensioners in Canada with the highest guaranteed income in the world.

At the same time we recognize fully that there are many individuals and couples, 65 years and over, who—through hard work and careful saving—have made provision for retirement income out of their lifetime earnings. As a result, they do not qualify for any part of the guaranteed income supplement. In the great majority of cases, the incomes of these elderly citizens are still small, particularly in comparison to the rising incomes of other Canadians. Despite their hard work and careful planning for retirement, inflation has eroded the real value of their incomes and savings. Those on fixed pensions have been unable to share in the benefits of the rapidly rising productivity of our country.

[English]

The government has, therefore, decided that a further portion of the nation's strongly growing total production should now be allocated to increasing the basic rate of the old age security pension.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): Effective on April 1, 1973, this pension will be raised to $100 per month. This represents an increase of more than 15 per cent over the pension level which would otherwise have come into effect on April 1 of this year. The cost of this additional increase is estimated to be $290 million for a full twelve-month period. The basic pension will continue at this rate until April 1, 1974. On that date, it will be escalated in accordance with the cost of living increase as provided for in my May budget and now prescribed in the Old Age Security Act.

Those entitled to the guaranteed income supplement will be able to add this benefit to the enlarged basic old age pension. The GIS, adjusted by the cost of living, will bring the combined OAS/GIS monthly payment for a single person to $170. For a married couple, the guaranteed income level will be close to $325 monthly. Over the past two years, therefore, the guaranteed income for all elderly Canadians 65 years and over will have been increased by 26 per cent. Canada will thus maintain its worldwide lead in the care and support for ederly citizens.

Further, in line with the increase in the OAS pension, war veterans' allowances and civilian war allowances will be increased by similar amounts to a minimum of $151 per month for single people and to $257 a month for married couples. For recipients of the allowances over 65 years of age, the guaranteed income will rise to $206 and $357 per month for single and married people respectively. This increase preserves the relationship between veterans' allowances and old age pensions and is estimated to cost $9 million in 1973-74.

My colleagues, the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Lalonde) and the Minister of Veterans Affairs (Mr. MacDonald), will bring in legislation to have these increased pensions and allowances enacted and paid as rapidly as possible. With respect to disability pensions for veterans, a report containing proposals for increases in basic rates of pension is being referred to the Standing Committee on Veterans Affairs and the government will await the recommendations of that committee.

I would like to deal next with several measures in the fields of tariffs, sales taxes and excise taxes designed to stimulate the economy and to strike directly against the upward thrust in the cost of living.

First, proposals concerning the customs tariff.

The government is now recommending to parliament temporary cuts in the tariffs on a wide range of consumer products. I am tabling a notice of ways and means motion setting out the details.

In choosing the products that would be subject to these tariff reductions, and in deciding how large the reductions should be, every effort has been made to avoid any adverse impact on production and employment in our factories and farms across Canada. At the same time, we wished to ensure that the tariff reductions would be sufficiently broad in scope, and of sufficient magnitude to have a significant effect in dampening the upward pressure on consumer prices.

Particular attention was given to foods and other consumer goods for which tariff rates are higher than average, especially to those that are dutiable at a rate of more than 15 per cent. This rate is now pretty generally the basic protective rate in the Canadian tariff. The measure also covers a number of products in short supply, such as meats and out of season fruits and vegetables, for which there is not now a good case for a protective tariff.

Among the non-food consumer products covered by the measure are drugs and pharmaceuticals, kitchen and dinnerware, furniture, electrical appliances, house trailers, photographic equipment, sporting goods and toys.

Substantial cuts are also proposed for a number of most-favoured-nation tariff rates on goods that are not produced in Canada. These rates had been maintained to provide a sheltered market for Commonwealth suppliers, whose goods enter free of duty or at relatively low preferential rates. For such food products as bananas—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

[Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton).]

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): If that does not get support for this budget, Mr. Speaker, nothing will. For such food products as bananas and citrus fruit juices, these preferences no longer serve the purpose for which they were intended.

The reduced rates proposed for raw and refined sugar and related products are broadly consistent with the recommendations of the Tariff Board, adjusted to take account of our obligations to Australia and the Commonwealth Caribbean.

• (2040)

To the extent possible, we are not cutting tariffs where to do so would have an adverse impact on job opportunities in Canada, where it would have little effect on prices, or where a tariff cut would run counter to other government policies. It is not proposed, for example, to cut tariffs on footwear, garments and textiles, on dairy products or eggs, or on fruits and vegetables in the season when Canadian-grown products are being marketed.

The total value of the imports that will be affected by these tariff cuts is about $1.3 billion. The economic impact must be judged not just by the reduction of charges on imports, but by the effect of such reductions in moderating prices charged by Canadian producers and distributors.

Hon. members will note that I am proposing that these tariff cuts remain in force for an initial period of one year. The reduction will be reviewed thoroughly before the measure expires. Furthermore, we are seeking parliamentary authority to delete items from this special list at any time during the course of the year should circumstances warrant such action.

There are several other tariff reductions which do not form part of this broad proposal the details will be found in the ways and means motion.

[Translation]

Next I would like to refer to several measures affecting excise and sales taxes.

First, I propose to remove the sales tax on confectioneries, chocolate bars, soft drinks, fruit drinks and other similar near-food products. The effect of this measure will be to exempt from sales tax all food and drink except alcoholic beverages.

Second, I propose to abolish the sales tax on all kinds of children's clothing, including shoes and other footwear. This tax reduction will provide welcome relief to young families with growing children, who face a constant need to replace outworn and outgrown clothes and shoes.

I have chosen to remove the sales tax on these particular items, namely the near-foods and children's clothing, because these products are consumed by virtually every Canadian family. Moreover, food and clothing account for a proportionately larger percentage of the budget of lower-income families, so that the tax on these products bears most heavily on those who are least able to afford it. This action should help to moderate prices for these basic necessities.

Next, I propose that the special 10 per cent excise tax on toilet articles and cosmetics be eliminated. I propose also that the excise tax on clocks and watches be removed, except to the extent that a manufacturer's price exceeds $50. It seems to me that these are now articles of mass consumption and should not be treated as luxuries.

The purpose of these commodity tax reductions is to benefit Canadian consumers. I appeal to Canadian producers and distributors to so price their products that their customers will benefit in the form of lower prices and more value for their money. Parliament will be watching for results and I expect that Canadian consumers will, as well. These measures come into force immediately and, taken together, reduce federal revenues in the next fiscal year by about $190 million.

[English]

Mr. Speaker, I would now like to discuss income taxes. To begin with, I want to speak about tax reform. When I presented my budget last May, I told this House that one of my priorities would be to smooth out the rough edges of tax reform. Last May I introduced a number of important amendments to the Income Tax Act arising out of tax reform, and those matters will be debated by this House shortly. Tonight I want to propose a number of further improvements.

First I want to mention a matter of concern to the small corporation and small business. As indicated in the throne speech, this government is deeply concerned about the problems facing small business today. Later in this session of parliament, the government will announce its specific proposals for assistance to this category of enterprise. However, there is one aspect of the Income Tax Act which is of vital importance to these businessmen, namely, the small business deduction. This is the measure which permits the active business income of small corporations to enjoy a lower rate of corporate tax.

Under Part V of the Income Tax Act, the benefit of the small business deduction was withdrawn to the extent that a corporation used its retained earnings for the purpose of making long-term investments unrelated to its business activities. I believe that the policy which gave rise to the ineligible investment test was correct, but I have come to the conclusion that it is too complicated. I believe that these small corporations which enjoy the benefit of the lower rate of tax will, in fact, use these tax savings to expand their businesses, to improve their technology and to create more jobs for Canadians. For this reason, the ineligible investment test is not necessary. Accordingly, I propose that, effective January 1, 1972, the ineligible investment test be withdrawn.

Mr. Speaker, I would now like to draw your attention to another matter which is of great importance, namely the preservation of the family farm. Under the present rules, when a farmer dies and leaves his farm to his children he is treated as if he has sold his farm at its fair market value. In the result, there may be a capital gains tax liability. For many of our farmers this poses a serious problem. First, the value of a farmer's land is often subject to fluctuations which have little bearing on the real value of that land as a farm. Second, most small farmers have little available cash and have already exhausted their credit. Therefore, a tax liability at a time when there has been no real sale may leave the family of the deceased farmer with no alternative but to sell out.

To remedy this problem, I propose that, effective January 1, 1972, when a farmer dies and leaves his farm to his children there will be no deemed sale of his farm land. In the result, capital gains tax will apply only if the farm is sold, if the land is not being used as a farm at the time of death, or if it is not left to the family.

In my last budget speech, I mentioned that I was examining a number of matters relating to the taxation of retirement income. Tonight I am proposing a number of improvements which I am sure will be welcomed by taxpayers. In addition, I would also mention that I am continuing to examine a number of other problems in the area of pension and other retirement income plans, with a view to proposing further improvements as soon as possible.

In my remarks tonight, I have mentioned only two measures of particular importance arising out of tax reform—and then only in summary. There are many other important improvements dealing with such matters as registered retirement savings plans, deferred profit sharing plans, sale of milk quotas and other governmental licences and a number of other amendments affecting individuals, small corporations and farmers.

The ways and means motion I am tabling will describe all of the proposed amendments and I urge every member to review that document carefully. Every one of these amendments is an improvement to our tax system.

• (2050)

I now wish to propose major reductions in the personal income tax. I do this for three reasons:

First, to stimulate the economy by leaving more income in the hands of those who have earned it, who will be stepping up their purchases and in this way providing more jobs.

Second, to encourage restraint in wage demands which, in combination with the restraint I am asking of business and of my colleagues in government, is required to meet the inflation threat. These income tax reductions will contribute to growth in a way that does not threaten excessive cost increases.

Third, to offset the damaging effects of inflation on our taxpaying citizens. Inflation is, after all, a kind of tax which satisfies none of the canons of equitable taxation. It is simple justice to offer some tax relief to those who have been hurt.

Before referring to the new measures, may I remind this House that there is already a tax decrease built into the system as a result of tax reform. The rate of tax on the first $500 of taxable income decreased from 17 per cent to 15 per cent effective this year as a result of measures enacted in December, 1971. This process will continue year by year to 1976, when the rate on the first $500 will be reduced to 6 per cent.

In recent years we have experienced an unwelcome and unacceptable rate of inflation. I want to relieve the Canadian taxpayer of as much of this burden of rising prices as I can. And, in particular, I want to provide relief to that group of our citizens who are least equipped to fight rising prices—our lowest income earners. The tax reform introduced some 18 months ago removed from the tax rolls a million Canadians. Some of these people now find themselves back on the tax rolls. I want to exempt from income taxes all these people who in 1973 would otherwise reappear on the tax rolls not because their real incomes have grown, but simply because of inflation. Moreover, I want these people taken off not only the federal tax rolls, but also provincial income tax rolls in provinces with which we have tax collection agreements.

Therefore, commencing in 1973, I propose to increase the basic exemption for all taxpayers from $1,500 to $1,600 and to increase the marital exemption from $2,850 to $3,000. This means that there will be no income tax whatever for a single taxpayer earning less than $1,700 and no tax on a married couple earning less than $3,100. The benefit of these increased exemptions will, of course, be enjoyed by taxpayers in all income brackets.

The combination of these proposed increases in exemptions, together with the other measures I will announce in a moment, will more than relieve every low and middle income earner of any increase in his taxes due to the inflation which has occurred during the period since the introduction of tax reform.

But this is not all that I have to say on this matter of personal taxation. Starting January 1, 1973 I propose a 5 per cent reduction in the basic federal income tax up to a maximum of $500 for every individual taxpayer.

However, there is one fundamental problem with a straight percentage reduction in taxes, particularly when it is to be a continuing part of the system. For that large body of our taxpayers below the middle income levels, their tax liability is not large in absolute terms. For these taxpayers, a percentage reduction in their tax does not provide enough relief. For example, in 1973 the basic federal income tax for a married man with an $8,000 income would be $954, after taking into account the increase in exemptions. For him, a 5 per cent reduction is worth only $47.70

To deal with this problem, I propose that the tax reduction be not just 5 per cent, but that there should also be a minimum reduction of $100.

Mr. Speaker, may I illustrate how some typical Canadian families will be affected this year by the combination of all these new income tax measures which I have just announced. For a married couple with two children and the breadwinner earning $5,000, the total tax will be reduced by $137. This represents a 47 per cent reduction from what the tax otherwise would have been this year. For that wage earner, this reduction in tax is the same as if he had received a wage increase of 3.6 per cent. If the same family had an income of $8,000, the total tax reduction will be $141, or 13 per cent—the equivalent of a 2.4 per cent annual wage increase. Another way of looking at the impact of these taxation cuts is to note that a married wage earner with two young children living in any one of the provinces will pay no federal income tax until his income goes above $4,473. These computations have been made for residents of provinces having the lowest provincial rate of tax. For taxpayers in other provinces, there would be minor differences in the calculations.

For the 1973-74 fiscal year, these measures will leave in the hands of Canadians an additional one billion, three hundred million dollars by way of reduction of personal income tax. And of this amount, 70 per cent, or about $900 billion, will be concentrated in the hands of people with incomes of less than $10,000.

The value of these tax reductions is four times greater than the value of last year's 3 per cent reduction. And, furthermore, the principal benefits go to the most needy and the most deserving.

The full value of these 1973 reductions will be reflected in payroll deductions at source commencing early in April. This will mean that there will be a very early improvement in the take-home pay of workers and, as a result, a quicker stimulus to the growth of the economy.

Mr. Speaker, let me sum up these income tax proposals for 1973:

(1)—an increase of basic exemption from $1500 to $1,600,

(2)—an increase of exemption for a married couple from $2,850 to $3,000,

(3)—a reduction of basic federal tax by 5 per cent, with a maximum of $500,

(4)—a reduction of basic federal tax of at least $100,

(5)—these measures have no termination date,

(6)—these measures give maximum relief to those whose need is greatest,

(7)—three-quarters of a million people are dropped from federal tax rolls.

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker, I come now to an income tax measure of fundamental importance. I am deeply concerned about inflation and the effect that inflation has on a tax system which is based on a progressive rate schedule. I therefore propose to take steps now to provide a lasting solution to this problem should inflation continue.

First let me explain more clearly how the problem arises.

Our tax system is based on a progressive rate schedule. This means that as a person's income increases, he pays a greater percentage of his income in taxes. For example, under our present system, in 1973 a person pays 15 per cent on his first $500 of taxable income, but 18 per cent on the next $500. In other words, as his income increases from one bracket to the next, the rate of tax on this additional income increases. Basically, this is a sound and fair approach and most advanced countries have adopted this progressive tax system.

But an increase in a person's income may be real or simply the result of inflation. Put another way, if a man gets a 5 per cent raise in salary, but the cost of living has also increased 5 per cent, he has the same real purchasing power he had before, and nothing more. Yet, the progressive tax system can leave him worse off than he was before because he has entered a higher tax bracket. What I want to do is eliminate that unfair and unintended result from our tax system.

Beginning in 1974, I propose to introduce the following system. First, in each year an inflation factor would be determined based upon the increase in the Consumer Price Index in an immediately preceding period. Second, in each year the principal exemptions would be increased by this inflation factor. This would include the basic exemption, the marital exemption, the two exemptions for dependents, and the exemptions for the aged and the blind and the disabled. Third, every year each of the brackets of taxable income would be adjusted upwards by the inflation factor.

For example, if in a particular year, the inflation factor was determined to be 4 per cent, then the principal exemptions would each be increased by 4 per cent. Similarly, each bracket of taxable income would be adjusted upwards by the same percentage. Thus, the first bracket of taxable income, which is taxed this year at 15 per cent, would be raised from $500 to $520. The next bracket, which would be subject to an 18 per cent rate, would commence at $520 and would extend to $1,040, and so on right through the tax schedule.

The indexing of rates and exemptions will produce a tax liability which will no longer erode a person's purchasing power as a result of inflation interacting with the progressive tax system. A person will no longer pay tax at a higher marginal rate simply because inflation swept him up into a higher tax bracket. For a person on a fixed income—

[English]

Some hon. Members: Author!

Mr. Speaker: May we have order, please. It is extremely difficult for the Chair to hear the minister.

[Translation]

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): For a person on a fixed income, the result of indexing would be to reduce his taxes each year if prices rise.

Members may ask why delay implementation of this indexing proposal until next year? There are two reasons. First, the income tax reductions and increased exemptions I have already announced for this year are far larger in magnitude than would be the effect of this indexing system if applied in 1973. Second, and more important, this proposal is a major innovation in tax philosophy and practice. It is not complex, but it will take some time for people and governments to adjust to it. For these reasons, I have concluded that it should come into effect only next year.

Mr. Speaker, a final comment on income taxes. I believe that this proposal for indexing the personal income tax puts Canada in the vanguard of countries with advanced tax systems. I suggest that this new system will be recognized everywhere as a bold and sensitive response to a rather fundamental tax problem. With the introduction of this change, Canada will join a very select group of countries which have eliminated the hidden revenues accruing to governments through the effect of inflation on a progressive tax system.

[English]

As I emphasized earlier, the budget of last May and the budget I am proposing to the House tonight are complementary and mutually reinforcing.

In proposing the reduction in the tax burden borne by Canadian manufacturing and processing companies in my first budget, I said I expected that, among other things, they would make use of this benefit to hold down the prices of their products.

The wide-ranging measures that I have just outlined in this budget will be of very direct and substantial financial benefit to every Canadian. The reduction in income tax rates and the increase in personal exemptions will increase the take-home pay of the average Canadian worker. The proposal to offset automatically the impact of inflation by the personal income tax indexing system will further moderate the weight of taxes next year and in the future. The reduction in sales taxes and excise taxes and customs duties I have proposed will help to moderate prices of many foods and household goods.

I want to see workers in this country receive a fair return for their labour. I want to see them receive a fair share of the real growth of our national income. But I expect them to be reasonable in their demands. I expect union members and their leaders to take full account of the increase in disposable income that will flow from these tax reductions when they enter wage negotiations. Indeed, I appeal to all income earners—and I include members of the professions—to be reasonable and moderate in their income expectations and demands. If we are to moderate the rise in the cost of living, then we must also moderate the rise in the cost of producing the goods and services that consumers buy.

[Translation]

I should like to turn now to the question of federal-provincial fiscal arrangements. Under the tax collection agreements, all provinces except Quebec relate their personal income taxes to the basic federal tax. The increase in the basic exemption for federal tax will cause some reduction in revenues for these provinces. However, they are protected by the floor we have already provided under the revenue guarantee provisions of the Fiscal Arrangements Act. I have previously assured the provinces of our readiness to make advance payments under that guarantee, in connection with our tax cuts of last May. I re-affirm that assurance as regards the personal income tax reductions which become effective in 1973. I also propose to consult fully with all provinces about the implications for them of the indexing system for personal income taxes.

There is, moreover, a very important point which must be emphasized. This is the obvious need for co-ordination in fiscal policy between the federal and provincial levels of government. Honourable members will be aware that over the past two decades a very substantial shift in responsibility for taxing and spending has been taking place—a shift away from the federal government to the provincial-municipal level. This shift reflects both the constitutional division of responsibility and the emerging social priorities of our country. It reflects, as well, the evident wish among Canadians for as much decentralization of power and authority as is consistent with a vigorous national unity.

But such a division of power also means that provincial governments—and those of the largest provinces in particular—must be prepared to carry an appropriate share of responsibility in policies for stability and growth in the national economy. This naturally means that substantial provincial deficits, as well as federal deficits, may well be appropriate when there is a need to accelerate growth in the economy.

• (2110)

I make this point having in mind particularly the unanimous view of the provinces, expressed at last month's meeting of finance ministers, as to the need for continuing economic stimulus. This I have clearly proposed in the budget tonight. However, at our recent meeting, the provinces pressed hard for federal action to help them to obtain additional revenues. I feel sure they will acknowledge that the faster growth in employment and income which will flow from this budget should bring an early and substantial boost in their revenues. We estimate that this increase in provincial revenues could be of the order of at least $400 million, building up fairly rapidly over a period of two years. I expect—and in fact I have had some assurance—that the provinces recognize that immediate tax increases on their part could stifle the expansionary thrust of the federal budget at this critical time.

I hope, therefore, for full co-operation from the provinces in not taking any action to counter the forward thrust of this budget. Of course, each of the provincial governments must decide for itself what it must do in the light of its own circumstances. I stress, however, that the tax cuts announced tonight have no termination date. The revenue growth resulting from the accelerated economic upswing will mean that our tax reductions can form part of the basic federal tax structure. As the economy moves closer to full employment, and if provincial expenditure requirements outrun their revenue growth, the provinces may then decide that their longer-run fiscal situation requires them to raise their taxes. If they do so, it will be as responsible governments, accountable to their electors for decisions to tax, as well as to spend.

In the present circumstances I have also considered carefully whether some further financial help to the provinces might be possible and appropriate. One problem is clear. The largest part of the increase in provincial tax revenues flowing from the stimulating effects of the federal tax cuts will benefit those provinces where tax capacity is above the national average. These are also the provinces which are best able—at the appropriate time—to raise taxes. Their rates of personal income or sales taxes are low in comparison to other provinces. Similarly, their strong economic growth contributes to their credit standing and their ability to finance deficits.

The position of the seven lower-income provinces is more difficult. They are handicapped by more limited tax capacity, generally higher unemployment and slower growth. Consequently, it is here where the strongest stimulus is needed. These provinces will, of course, obtain some additional equalization payments arising from the increased revenues which all provinces will derive from the faster economic growth generated by this expansionary budget. Given the need for balanced expansion across the country, however, it is apparent that a further special effort is required to assist the slower-growth regions.

The government, therefore, proposes that beginning in the next fiscal year the general equalization system should be substantially broadened to include new grants on account of municipal taxes imposed for local school purposes. At our recent finance ministers' conference, a widespread consensus in support of this proposal was evident among the "have" and so-called "have-not" provinces alike. This is a major advance. It adds a new dimension to a revenue equalization system already far superior to that of any other federal country. One of its main advantages is obvious. It will enable the lower-income provinces to come to the relief of hard pressed property owners and tenants, who have had to carry an increasing burden of local school taxes. Indeed, the increase in equalization grants involved in this measure—about $190 million in the next fiscal year—amounts to as much as 28 per cent of the local school taxes collected in these provinces. I would hope, therefore, to see significant benefits passed on to their local ratepayers.

This proposal will increase total equalization paid in 1973-74 to the four Atlantic provinces, Quebec, Manitoba and Saskatchewan to about $1.4 billion. Equalization can thus be seen not only as one of our most powerful weapons in combatting regional disparity, but also as a major step at this time in the application of regionally balanced fiscal policy.

[Translation]

Finally, I should say a word about a further matter of great interest to the provinces. This is the so-called "opting out" issue. "Opting out" is a concept which has been actively discussed over the past several years. Under this approach, the federal government would terminate its present shared-cost payments to the provinces in support of the well-established programs in health, social assistance and education, and instead vacate some part of the tax field.

This basic approach was first put to the provinces by the federal government in 1966. It would now appear that the early concerns about this concept on the part of most of the provinces have been substantially dispelled. However, we have all come to realize that any such arrangement has to be carefully designed to preserve the basic objectives of the programs which have been legislated by Parliament. It will have to take account of the projected costs of the programs and recognize the wide variations in tax capacity among the provinces. It must be fair and equitable, both among the provinces and between the provinces and the federal government.

Above all, if the federal government is to carry the main burden of economic stabilization, maintain harmony in an over-all national tax system—while fulfilling its responsibilities for income redistribution among Canadians and among the regions of Canada—it must clearly retain a strong and commanding position in the personal income tax field.

Obviously there are important problems and issues in the "opting out" system. We intend to consult closely with the provinces about them. Our hope will be to work out better arrangements, which will assure improved services to all our citizens and fully respect the rights and responsibilities of both levels of government.

[English]

Mr. Speaker, I come now to a summary of the financial implications of the budget. The measures which I have proposed tonight will have the gross effect of increasing the government's cash requirements by approximately $2 billion. The more rapid expansion of the economy which this budget generates will, however, bring in some revenues and permit some saving in expenditures. The total of these offsets will be of the order of $500 million. The net financial requirement imposed by these measures I calculate to be $1.5 billion in round numbers. Our cash requirements for 1973-74 will reflect this net figure. The most important impact will, of course, be on our budgetary revenues. I now calculate that our budgetary deficit will be some $975 million and our non-budgetary requirements some $1.025 billion. Taken together, our total requirement will, therefore, be $2 billion—as in the current fiscal year.

The treatment of the unemployment insurance account deserves special mention. The act requires that the government's share of the cost of unemployment insurance in 1972 be recorded, when incurred, as a loan in the non-budgetary accounts. When the actual costs have been established in 1973-74, they are charged in that year as a budgetary expenditure and the proceeds used by the Unemployment Insurance Commission to repay the loan, thus reducing non-budgetary requirements in 1973-74. This is a very good example of the point I made earlier in the House that the distinction between budgetary and non-budgetary outlays is artificial and that the significant figure is the over-all cash requirement.

I should like to remind honourable members that these figures are estimates, as were the figures I used earlier concerning the outcome in the current fiscal year. The actual outcome of the financial accounts will be determined in no small measure by the decisions of this House with respect to bills currently before it and legislation which will be proposed in the course of the session.

With the permission of the House, I should like now to include in today's Hansard supplementary tables showing estimates of Government of Canada cash requirements, federal government revenues and expenditures on a national accounts basis and reconciliations of these figures with those compiled on a public accounts basis, and details of the budgetary revenues. The information in these tables applies to the fiscal years 1972-73 and 1973-74.

I have already tabled several notices of ways and means motions describing the changes I am proposing tonight and I would ask that they be printed in the notice paper appended to Votes and Proceedings.

Mr. Speaker: Is this agreed?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): Mr. Speaker, the budget I have presented tonight is both responsive and responsible. It is responsive to the two problems challenging fiscal management at this time—the problems of unemployment and inflation. The budget measures I have proposed attack these two problems by adding a further strong thrust to the present pace of expansion. With average good fortune—fair crops, labour peace and international stability—the economy should grow in 1973 at a real rate in the order of 7 per cent.

This rate of expansion will not only provide more jobs, it should provide them fast enough to bring about a significant reduction in unemployment. Indeed, I expect that at this time next year there will be some 300,000 more Canadians holding down well-paying, steady jobs. The faster expansion will also supply the additional goods and services needed to meet the increase in total demand and maintain strongly competitive markets. Moreover, the form of the budgetary stimulus will help to contain inflation, because the personal tax reductions should diminish the pressure Canadians now feel to demand higher pay and thereby relieve the upward thrust on costs and prices. Other tax cuts attack the rise in prices even more directly and immediately.

The indexing of the personal tax system removes an unjust and unintended consequence of inflation. It will effectively eliminate the tax penalty imposed upon our people by the application of a progressive tax to an inflationary rise in income.

The budget is also responsible. It is responsible in the built-in restraint it places upon the growth of government expenditure, and in the consideration it has given to the requirements of provinces and their municipalities. It is responsible in the dimensions of the thrust it seeks to impart to the economy. I am confident that our cash requirements can be accommodated without bringing pressure upon financial markets.

I have made clear our objectives and the framework of measures designed to achieve them. I cannot claim that we will be fully successful in what we are trying to do. Economics is still an imperfect art, not a science. Its subject is people and their behaviour, not merely past facts and statistics. Even if it could be reduced to simplistic measurement, the fact is that the data are incomplete, imperfect, and often seriously contradictory. I do not want to labour this point, but all of us, inside and outside government, use the same basic information.

If we could stand back only briefly from partisan politics, I think we would all be ready to acknowledge that there is much about the economy we do not know—and cannot forecast. This, of course, does not absolve us from the responsibility of doing the best we can with the information we have, and of trying to improve it over time.

Mr. Speaker, I have sought the views and advice of knowledgeable people from all sectors of Canadian society—the provinces, the academic community, businessmen, labour leaders—

Mr. Nielsen: And the hon. member for York South (Mr. Lewis).

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): —and ordinary Canadians in many walks of life. The hard practical views I obtained in this way have been applied rigorously to the advice submitted by my professional staff inside the government.

Mr. Hees: That includes men like the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Stanfield).

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): In the end, of course, I have had to make my own judgments, and reach my own conclusions, and carry the government with me.

That there will be criticism, I have no doubt. We shall be attacked in some quarters for still not doing enough to stimulate the economy. Others will say that we are doing too much and that by overshooting the target we will aggravate inflation. We recognize that we are running a risk, and that the risk is on the side of overshooting. That is a risk worth taking at this time in the interests of dealing more effectively with unemployment.

This budget is now in the hands of the House. Whether the program I have outlined meets the challenge currently facing the country is something members here will have to decide. I have confidence that Canadians will make it work: that business will provide the jobs and moderate prices; that labour will take into account the additional income now in the pockets and purses of working Canadians when assessing their claims for a fair and just wage.

I commend this budget to you, Mr. Speaker, and to this House of Commons. I am confident that parliament and the people will judge it to be responsive and responsible.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Hon. Marcel Lambert (Edmonton West): Mr. Speaker, I would hope that the demonstration the House has just witnessed does not indicate approval of some of my colleagues for the budget. We saw tonight an example of a Minister of Finance (Mr. Turner) who was delivering his second budget speech—

An hon. Member: And very well, too.

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): —and it was obvious, Mr. Speaker, that the Minister of Finance had looked at his last budget speech, because other than changing a few words the first paragraph of this speech was much the same as the first paragraph of his speech of May last. In May last the minister said:

> —my first words to this House as Minister of Finance last February were that my most urgent priority was jobs. This remains my first priority. No economy is working as well as it should if there are men and women in this country seeking work who cannot find it.

Then come the following memorable words, spoken time and again by ministers of finance:

> The search for jobs is a human problem.

What did we hear tonight? The minister said: "The purpose of this budget is—first and foremost—to bring about a substantial reduction in unemployment. Unemployment is much more than an economic problem. It is a grave social problem, a serious human problem." Almost the same words are used. And what has happened since the previous budget was delivered, Mr. Speaker? We were told then that it was a responsive and responsible budget. If we look at the speech the minister made tonight, the first paragraph of his conclusion, we see the same philosophy, the same hope. What we now see is a confession of abysmal failure.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): Some of our new members were not present when the previous budget speech was made. We then heard statements almost similar to those made today. I will put some of the minister's previous statements on record. In the previous budget speech he said:

> I expect that unemployment will fall on the average in the course of this year, though the extraordinary month to month fluctuations in the size of the labour force will likely continue and be reflected in an uneven movement in the unemployment rate.
> There are mixed tendencies in the price picture. The growth of demand and rather lower productivity will make for price increases. The cost of imports may well rise less than last year.

Then we have these memorable words:

• (2130)

> We do not expect that food prices will rise as fast this year as last and their current tendency encourages us in this expectation. In summary, I expect that progress will be made this year in reducing unemployment.

Last month there were 688,000 unemployed. That is progress.

> The growth in jobs should be considerably larger than last year . . .

In short, I am expecting a year of considerable progress.

I should hope that the President of the Treasury Board (Mr. Drury) would hide his head in shame if he associates himself with these words because, as the minister said, "It is hard to forecast. It is dangerous to forecast." What have we had? The budget speech of May 8 contained nothing but a lot of empty forecasts. Coming from the same source, I suggest that this document which the minister read for an hour and 25 minutes tonight is also full of empty forecasts.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): October 30, 1972, was certainly a memorable day. It was the watershed, the time when this administration discovered there was a country called Canada. Tonight they announced more changes in policies, and more reversals. As a matter of fact, tonight we heard the minister adopting a constant dollar philosophy. He calls it personal indexing, but it is the same sort of thing. What did the minister say in Truro, Nova Scotia? He said the idea was totally wrong and that it was too costly. Suddenly, after October 30, what do we get: an adoption of this philosophy. We have seen a complete reversal in agricultural policy. At least, announcements have been made that are a complete rejection of former programs. In unemployment insurance, we have seen a minister eaten up, thrown to the wolves and changes being made. We have seen this in a great number of sectors. What have we seen with regard to inflation? We have seen its continuing recognition. I suggest to you, Mr. Speaker, that it is mere lip service.

Last year this administration decided against tax cuts. What do we see now? Tax cuts are welcome. But who are the people who insisted on them? Not this administration. This administration rejected them out of hand, time after time last year and all through the election campaign. Is this the discovery of Canada, or is it following the tradition of the magpie which robs the nests of other birds, taking this and that? One of my colleagues asks, what kind of a bird takes the nests of other birds but the cuckoo? What are we doing here, emulating a cuckoo or a magpie in taking this and that for others?

This government has suddenly discovered the family farm. Less than 18 months ago it voted against exempting family farms from capital gains. October 30 was a great day. We have figures in the May 8 budget with regard to unemployment. It is a major problem at this time. In May last year the minister said 330,000 new jobs had been created since the previous year. Today he says there were 250,000 in that same period. He has revised his figure downward to 250,000.

The minister has said that his budget is strongly expansionary. He says it is going to remove from the taxpayers' backs $1,300 million. But in his own tables on budgetary revenues it is shown that the government is going to take in an extra $1,700 million. The minister shakes his head. I suggest he consult the table of budgetary revenues, 1973-74 forecast. He will see that the total government budgetary revenues are estimated to be $18,000 million. That is precisely $1,700 million more than in 1972-73. The net result is $300 million pumped into the economy that does not belong to it. There is $300 million in addition to the money that was taken from it because it was taxed through additional government revenues. The minister says he is going to leave $1,300 million in the hands of the taxpayers as a result of tax reductions. But he did not say that according to his own tables. With the personal income tax cuts, he is going to take $925 million more. That means—

An hon. Member: What does it mean?

[Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West).]

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): Be my guest. After all, the minister worked with a text. There were $2,200 million in excess of requirements through a tax system that we were told was the most just and most equitable when it was being rammed through this House in 1971 by a government majority. I ask the minister and his colleagues who were here at that time if they remember the brief put forward by the government of Ontario on Bill C-259, and the statement by the then minister of finance of Ontario, Mr. McNaughton, to the effect that the personal income tax rates in Bill C-259 would overtax the people and yield even far greater revenues than the government thought. The fact is, that was right. We have had tax cuts; this is the first. In response to that, the then minister of finance said he would lower the tax rate over a period of five years. That is provided for in section 117 of the act. But now there are to be increased exemptions and a tax cut of 5 per cent.

• (2140)

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): It all demonstrates that the people over there were backing a tax system which was gouging the Canadian public.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): Oh, they smile, those boys at the back. They were not here when that bill was being taken through the House, when we heard ministers and others making statements and assertions which have proved to be falsehoods, which amounted to misrepresentation, which were put forward in ignorance of the facts and which were certainly based on wrong forecasts. The Minister of Finance may purse his lips, but he was not responsible in those days. He was only minister of justice and he was not then putting forward responsible and responsive budgets.

We could go on to direct further criticism at this budget. I know those people over there think everything now is fine and rosy. Did the Minister of Finance tell you that the $20 increase in old age security benefit includes the cost of living increase for last year and the one which was due on April 1? Also, instead of $20, the increase amounts to $13; that is all. That is the net increase. We are going to hear the claim that it is $20. Let us get it right. It is only two-thirds of what will be claimed by government supporters. Look at it and see.

Of course, we are going to import bagatelle games, cricket bats and all sorts of things at 2½ per cent, or 5 per cent less. And those who favour mascara and eyeshadow—

Mr. Jamieson: Don't you?

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): —will be pleased. But the Minister of State for Urban Affairs (Mr. Basford) and the Minister of Communications (Mr. Pelletier), for instance, will take little pleasure in hearing that hairsprays and other hair fixatives are to be cheaper.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): I believe the study and presentation of this budget would have been much more intelligent if the government had decided to table its main estimates before the budget was brought down. After all, we have this evening been presented with an outline of the way in which the government intends to raise revenue. But think of the expenditures. The estimates have not been tabled. We are told they will come before us tomorrow. Well, tomorrow is tomorrow is tomorrow.

The Budget—Hon. Marcel Lambert

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): Mr. Speaker, we have not seen the House in such a joyful mood on budget night for many years. On this note, may I adjourn the debate until the day after tomorrow?

On motion of Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West) the debate was adjourned.

On motion of Mr. MacEachen the House adjourned at 9.46 p.m.

PRIVILEGE

MR. LeBLANC (WESTMORLAND-KENT)—STATEMENT RESPECTING ELECTION EXPENSES

Mr. Roméo LeBlanc (Westmorland-Kent): Mr. Speaker, having been absent by reason of sickness, I seize this first opportunity to rise on a question of privilege.

I was informed yesterday that on Monday, February 12, a daily newspaper of the national capital indicated that some hon. members, myself included, had omitted to submit to the local election officer their statutory statements on election expenses.

Mr. Speaker, that article is misleading. My official agent did file, before the date provided, my statement of election expenses, and it has been published in my riding in both official languages.

I checked today at the office of the Chief Electoral Officer and it has been confirmed to me that the statement of expenses, concerning my candidature, had indeed been received.

ROUTINE PROCEEDINGS

[English]

MAIN ESTIMATES, 1973-74

EXPLANATORY STATEMENT BY THE PRESIDENT OF THE TREASURY BOARD

A message from His Excellency the Governor General transmitting estimates for the financial year ending March 31, 1974, was presented by Hon. C. M. Drury (President of the Treasury Board) and read by Mr. Speaker to the House.

Hon. C. M. Drury (President of the Treasury Board): Mr. Speaker, I should like to table the estimates for the fiscal year ending March 31, 1974.

The main estimates for 1973-74 tabled today propose budgetary expenditures of $18,393 million and non-budgetary expenditures—that is, loans, investments and advances—of $893 million.

In the Speech from the Throne made in early January, this government reaffirmed its long standing commitment to the all-important goals of national unity and equality of opportunity for all Canadians. It spoke as well of the measures it would lay before parliament in the fields of economic policy and social policy toward the achievement of these goals.

You will find, Mr. Speaker, that in furtherance of social policy objectives, these estimates contemplate higher expenditures for such programs as public housing and land development; assistance to native peoples; unconditional transfer payments to the provinces that permit greater equality in provincial services; bilingualism; and payments to provinces to assist them in financing hospital, medical and welfare services.

Higher expenditures are also proposed to strengthen the economy, notably through assistance to the technological development of our industry, to the orderly development of northern transportation and to other fields of transportation and communications throughout the country.

In certain other cases, where decisions were taken too late to be reflected in the main estimates, funding proposals will be submitted to parliament during the course of the fiscal year.

The government also spoke of a high degree of professionalism as being the primary and most essential objective of the armed forces. Hon. members will note a significant addition to the defence estimates with the lifting of the ceiling placed on the expenditures of the Department of National Defence in 1970-71.

The total increase of $2,274 million in estimates for budgetary expenditures for the coming year over forecast expenditures for the current year is unusually large. About 40 per cent of this increase arises because last year, the transitional year between the old and the new unemployment insurance plan, there were no budgetary expenditures for the commission, while the estimates for the coming year contain $890 million as the payment, after the fact, of the government's contribution to unemployment benefit payments in calendar year 1972. This does not call for any actual cash flow since the contribution is more than covered by the money already advanced to the commission over the past months.

Two years ago this government began to issue a companion booklet to the estimates called "How Your Tax Dollar is Spent". It is designed to better inform the public on the use made by the government of the revenues collected.

Mr. Stanfield: Is that why so many Canadians are on sleeping pills?

Mr. Drury: Copies of the third issue of this publication are being distributed immediately to hon. members and will be available soon to the general public upon request and without charge through the distribution outlets of Information Canada. The special theme of this year's issue is the programs which assist the consumer as he buys goods and services in the market place.

Hon. Marcel Lambert (Edmonton West): Mr. Speaker, we face today a novel situation in that on the day after the presentation of the budget, in which the Minister of Finance (Mr. Turner) outlined the methods whereby he proposes to raise money to cover the government's spending program, we are presented with the blue book of main estimates. It would have been far better, I suggest, if this had been done earlier provided the government was ready to do so. I suggest that the government was ready because the tabling of the estimates has been an on and off matter for the past two or three weeks. Actually, if one recalls events of about two weeks ago, it will be remembered that the estimates were to be tabled on Wednesday, and then on Thursday. The matter has been deferred from day to day. We should like to know the rationale of the government in choosing to bring in the main spending estimates on the day after the presentation of the budget.

The estimates disclose some interesting things. Having had the blue book delivered to me about 90 seconds ago, I do not think hon. members would expect me to be able to make a detailed analysis. The minister made a short statement indicating that the total estimates exceed those of last year by $2,200 million. That, in itself, is quite a revelation.

I am also conscious of the fact that he disclosed that the estimates this year will cover the deficiency in the unemployment insurance program last year, something which was vehemently denied. The government attempted to cover this up in many ways during the consideration of supplementary estimates. The minister can shake his head, but I suggest that many attempts were made to cover up the precise amount of the deficiency in the program. The minister and his colleagues tried to play a shell game with us in this regard.

We shall be examining the estimates in detail. They will now be sent to the various committees for study. I expect that some of the glow that seems to have arisen from last night's budgetary performance will undoubtedly be dissipated when we look at the blue book and see how the government proposes to spend those billions of dollars which are coming out of the pockets of Canadian taxpayers.

Mr. David Lewis (York South): Mr. Speaker, I think the last sentence spoken by the hon. member for Edmonton West (Mr. Lambert) was the only relevant one to make at this time in that tomorrow we will begin the budget debate in which we will discuss the general policies of the government. These estimates will go to the various committees of the House to be studied. I hope that some weeks from now we will know more about the details of the estimates than we know now. I see no reason for taking any more of the time of the House.

[Translation]

Mr. André Fortin (Lotbinière): Mr. Speaker, I have some very brief comments to make in this connection.

I thank the President of the Treasury Board for having given us a copy of his statement. We will have the opportunity to discuss further during the debate on the budget beginning tomorrow.

I note that last sentence of the minister's statement which reads as follows:

> The special theme of this year's issue is the programs which assist the consumers as he buys goods and services in the market place.

This idea was taken up yesterday in the budget speech and it could be noted that the government was increasingly dwelling on the consideration of the Canadian consumers' problems concerning national production. The government is showing a good intention as it was seen in some measures announced yesterday—not all of them.

Mr. Speaker, this is not new for the Social Crediters for, since we have been elected to the House, we have been urging the government to give all its attention to the consumer problem in Canada. It is nice to produce for billions of dollars but if that production does not reach its final end which is consumption then we will experience problems as those we have been and are still experiencing: inflation, unemployment and poverty in a very wealthy country.

I take the opportunity offered by the tabling of the estimates for the fiscal year ending March 31, 1973 to draw the attention of the House on table No 4 which appears on page 32 of Chapter 1, under the title: Percentage Distribution by Function 1973-74.

Despite the good intentions of the government, the fact remains that it will spend 14 per cent of its budget on the public debt. That represents $2,581 million in taxpayers' money which will be paid out to strangers, big companies, in interest only, without reducing the principal. Does that reflect an improvement or a worsening of the situation?

We already see in that column that the interest on the public debt will go up by $405,600,000 this year.

Mr. Speaker, this means that the measures announced yesterday by the expansionary budget of the minority government—which has no alternative but to listen to the demands of the opposition parties, including the Social Credit party—confirm the fact that the government does not really have any financial solution to propose. While encouraging economic expansion, it should reduce the public debt and enable Canadians to become in fact the masters of their own economy.

Therefore I deeply regret this method of financing Canada's debt and I say to the hon. minister that it is time more than ever for his government, instead of laughing at the Social credit suggestions, to consider our proposal or any alternative serious proposal which could make possible the financing of this item.

I conclusion, I would say that if we assign 14 per cent of the budget for servicing the public debt, only 13.2 per cent is allowed for economic expansion in Canada and this proves that it is more important for the present government to help financiers than to develop Canada.

FINANCE

INCLUSION OF CORPORATE TAX CUTS AND ACCELERATED CAPITAL COST ALLOWANCES IN BUDGET PROJECTIONS—RELATIONSHIP OF UNEMPLOYMENT INSURANCE EXPENDITURES TO FORECAST DEFICIT

Hon. Robert L. Stanfield (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask—

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

An hon. Member: Is this the Last Supper?

Mr. Stanfield: It may be for some. Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask the Minister of Finance whether the revenue effects of the corporate tax cuts and fast write-offs are included in the projections in the new budget presented by the minister last night?

• (1420)

Hon. John N. Turner (Minister of Finance): I wish the Leader of the Opposition would be a little more precise as to what he wants.

Mr. Stanfield: I wish the Minister of Finance would not pretend he did not understand the question. I should like to ask the minister whether the effects of the proposed tax cuts for corporations engaged in manufacturing and processing and the revenue effects of the fast write-offs are included in the revenue accounts tabled by the hon. gentleman last night for the coming year? If that is not clear enough, I will make it even clearer.

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): The hon. member is correct.

Some hon. Members: Tell your friends.

Mr. Stanfield: Then may I ask the Minister of Finance whether these corporate tax cuts and the revenue effects of the fast write-offs can come into force in the absence of approval by the House of the budget tabled last night?

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): The hon. gentleman knows the answer to that question, but since he has directed it to me I shall reply for the benefit of the House. The corporate tax cuts certainly cannot take effect without the approbation of the House. As for the fast write-offs or capital cost allowances, technically they could be passed by order in council.

Mr. Stanfield: I have a supplementary question arising from the information given by the President of the Treasury Board to the effect that some $890 million is included in the estimated expenditures for next year to cover after-the-fact expenditures in connection with unemployment insurance payments last year. Is it correct to say that with regard to the effect of the budget on public expenditures of money going into the hands of the public, or revenue coming from the hands of the public, there is not a budgetary deficit of some $975 million but virtually a break-even situation as far as the budget is concerned?

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): As to the statement that really forms part of that question, I regret to say the hon. gentleman is wrong. If you take it on a full employment budget basis for 1972-73 or 1973-74, the government accounts are in deficit. If you take it on the basis of cash requirements or the fiscal stance of total budgetary and non-budgetary accounts for 1973-74, the government will be in a total deficit position to the extent of $2 billion.

Mr. Stanfield: Does the minister challenge the statement of his colleague, the President of the Treasury Board, that some $890 million involves nothing more than paying off money already expended but outstanding in the form of advances and that consequently, in terms of actual expenditures rather than bookkeeping arrangements, the budget is in virtual balance?

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): No, Mr. Speaker. I deny again the preamble to the hon. gentleman's question. I do not challenge anything that my colleague says; I sit right beside him and we are in constant consultation.

Mr. Stanfield: Then you had better talk to him again.

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): The unemployment insurance account in the 1972-73 year is a non-budgetary item. As it switches into the 1973-74 year it becomes a budgetary item by way of a commitment of the Unemployment Insurance Commission to pay off the loan that constituted the non-budgetary item in the previous year. What the hon. gentleman does not understand is the accounting system used by the government.

Mr. Stanfield: I understand it, and I understand you, too.

ACCELERATED CAPITAL COST ALLOWANCES FOR CORPORATIONS—PROVISION OF MONITORING AGENCY TO CHECK EFFECT ON CREATION OF JOBS

Mr. John Lundrigan (Gander-Twillingate): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a supplementary question to the Minister of Finance dealing with the fast write-off provisions for corporations. Is the minister prepared to set up immediately some form of monitoring agency or body, as called for by the hon. member for York South on May 9 of last year, I believe, to ensure that these fast write-off provisions do in fact result in ongoing job creation during the next two-year period?

Hon. John N. Turner (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I think that is implied in what I said last night in the budget speech.

Mr. Lundrigan: I am aware that the minister said quite a lot last evening in his budget speech, but is he now prepared, in view of the question raised by the hon. member for York South last year, to announce immediately some monitoring procedures or accounting procedures, some form of machinery, to ensure that the fast write-off provisions will result in job creation during the next two years? Is he going to announce some measures with teeth in them?

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): I can only answer the hon. gentleman by asking him to read carefully what he heard last night.

Mr. Lundrigan: Mr. Speaker, I have read carefully a dozen times what was said last evening. Is the minister now saying that he did receive some assurance that the hon. member for York South is satisfied that the government is going to study the issue again for two more years, and that the Canadian people are going to have no guarantee at all that the fast write-off provisions will in fact result in job creation?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

RELATIONSHIP OF BUDGET TARIFF CUTS TO TRADE NEGOTIATIONS WITH UNITED STATES—ACTION TO ASSURE THAT CONSUMERS GET BENEFIT OF REDUCTIONS

Mr. David Lewis (York South): Mr. Speaker, may I ask the Minister of Finance one or two questions arising out of his statement last night. I refer particularly to the unilateral tariff cuts announced by the minister in regard to food and durable and other goods, including removing entirely the tariff on bananas, I notice. Are these unilateral cuts in tariffs which largely affect imports from the United States part of the negotiations with the United States, and is the minister making the case, as he should, that these cuts ought to ease the negotiations concerning the trade irritants, as they have been called?

Hon. John N. Turner (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, there was, naturally enough, no prior consultation with any official of the United States government, including my counterpart, the Secretary of the Treasury. The purpose of the tariff cuts was to fit in with the general philosophy of the budget and to reduce pressure on prices for the Canadian consumer. If I understand the significance of the hon. gentleman's question, may I say that this action certainly represents a step in removing trade barriers between the United States and Canada, and I believe that should be drawn to the attention of the United States.

Mr. Lewis: Mr. Speaker, the minister said that the reduction in tariffs was one of the steps he was trying to undertake to reduce the pressure on prices. Would he give very serious consideration to setting up some kind of surveillance agency, monitoring agency, prices review board or whatever in order to make certain that these reductions in tariffs do indeed get to the consumer by way of lower prices rather than being pocketed by the distributors, manufacturers or processors?

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): Mr. Speaker, I will take that under consideration. I have noticed that there have been announcements of certain price reductions already today as a result of last night's budget.

An hon. Member: On Mars bars and tennis rackets.

[Mr. Lundrigan.]

ACTION TO PREVENT RENT INCREASES FOLLOWING INCREASE IN OLD AGE PENSIONS ANNOUNCED IN BUDGET

Mr. David Lewis (York South): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask a further supplementary question and I direct it to the Minister of State for Urban Affairs. My question arises from the proposed increase in old age pensions which is also reflected in an increase in the maximum pension plus the supplement. In view of the fact that increases in rents to old age pensioners have already taken place in anticipation of an increase in the pension, may I ask the minister whether he is taking steps or will undertake to do so to see that, in so far as CMHC manages some of these homes or in so far as these homes are built under limited dividend arrangements or through any other contributions or assistance under the National Housing Act, rents to old age pensioners are not increased so that the increase in pensions is not eaten up by hungry landlords?

Hon. Ron Basford (Minister of State for Urban Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I completely agree with the purport of the question. I think all hon. members would deplore landlords taking that kind of action and trying to recover in rent increases any increase in old age pensions. In so far as CMHC is concerned, where we are the managers of properties and the rent is within our jurisdiction—I made this clear the other day—any rent increases for 1973 are withheld for the moment until a complete review of the rental policy can be made. An element of that review will be to make sure that any increase in old age pensions is not taken back in rent increases.

MEASURES TO OFFSET DEFICIT AND AVOID INCREASE IN PUBLIC DEBT

Mr. André Fortin (Lotbinière): Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask a supplementary question concerning the budget.

In the budget introduced last night, there is a foreseen $2 billion deficit. Has the hon. Minister of Finance thoroughly reviewed this matter of a deficit and if so does he intend to introduce specific legislation other than through the usual way of income tax and loans to finance this deficit and prevent an increase in the public debt?

Hon. John N. Turner (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, this question calls for a rather technical answer and there are several alternatives. Under the rules of the House, I cannot answer this question in a simple manner.

Mr. Fortin: Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask a supplementary question.

Can the minister tell us in simple words what steps he suggests to make up for the $2 billion deficit forecast in the budget?

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): Mr. Speaker, there are three ways in which to do it: issue bonds, issue new Canada Savings Bonds and finally reduce the government's cash balance.

[English]

CONTINGENCY PLAN FOR WAGE AND PRICE CONTROLS

Mr. James A. McGrath (St. John's East): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct my question to the Minister of Finance. In the absence of any precise policy statement on food prices in last night's budget, will the minister indicate to the House whether he is now prepared to meet with the provinces to reach a consensus on a contingency plan for wage and price controls?

Hon. John N. Turner (Minister of Finance): No, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. McGrath: May I ask the minister whether the government has decided what precise criterion will have to come into force before the contingency plan would be brought into effect? Does the government propose to wait until prices go up by 20 per cent before the plan is brought into effect? Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the minister at what precise point the government's so-called contingency plan will be brought into effect?

Mr. Nielsen: When it dreams it up.

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): If, as and when it is necessary. I have said quite firmly in the House that I do not think the present circumstances warrant the imposition of price and wage controls, and I said that last night.

TECHNIQUE FOR IMPLEMENTATION OF ACCELERATED DEPRECIATION ALLOWANCES FOR CORPORATIONS

Mr. Trevor Morgan (St. Catharines): Mr. Speaker, as the Minister of Finance indicated that the fast write-off procedures could, technically, be implemented by order in council, I should like to ask whether it is the intention of the government to use this technique or to introduce legislation for this purpose?

Hon. John N. Turner (Minister of Finance): I am sorry, but the hon. member was looking in one direction and speaking in another, and I did not think he was directing his question to me.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): I am sorry, Mr. Speaker, and I want to say that I apologize to the hon. member.

An hon. Member: You had better apologize.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): On a question of privilege, Mr. Speaker, I apologize to the hon. member. I did not realize the question was being directed to me.

Mr. Morgan: Mr. Speaker, I shall try to make the question clear to the minister. He indicated that the government could implement fast write-off procedures by order in council. Is it the intention of the government to implement the fast write-off procedures by using that technique or by legislation?

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): That decision will be announced to the House in due course, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Morgan: Will it be brought to the attention of the House during the budget debate?

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): That is possible, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Stanfield: If you do it by order in council, it will be the last thing you do by order in council.

BROADCASTING OF BUDGET PROPOSALS BY MEDIA BEFORE COPIES SUPPLIED TO MEMBERS

Mr. Eldon M. Woolliams (Calgary North): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Finance and arises from the fact that certain media were broadcasting the terms and conditions of the budget before the minister read the material part of his budget to parliament. Will the minister investigate why Members of Parliament were not allowed to receive copies of the budget last night prior to the public being informed by the media?

Hon. John N. Turner (Minister of Finance): I am sorry—

Mr. Woolliams: I am sorry, Mr. Speaker, I think the minister was engaged in—

Mr. Stanfield: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The Leader of the Opposition rises on a point of order.

Mr. Stanfield: Mr. Speaker, if the Minister of Finance could not hear the member who asked that question, I wonder what he is capable of hearing?

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Trudeau: He is not a minister.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Woolliams: Mr. Speaker, I will put the question again to the Minister of Finance.

Some hon. Members: Louder!

Mr. Woolliams: My question arises from the fact that certain media were broadcasting the terms and conditions of the budget some time before the minister had completed reading the budget in the House of Commons and at the same time Members of Parliament were denied the right to receive copies. Would the minister advise the House why that was the case and, if he does not know, would he investigate to find out the real reason for the situation that developed last evening?

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): I will look into that, Mr. Speaker. I wanted to keep the House in a certain state of suspense, but all opposition critics were given copies of the speech and all members were given copies on leaving the House.

An hon. Member: No, they were not.

Mr. Woolliams: Mr. Speaker, the minister said he wanted to keep the House in suspense. Does he suggest, and I hope he is not, that the general public should be informed through the media as to the terms and conditions of tax cuts or tax increases prior to Members of Parliament, who were denied copies of his speech, and before the minister had finished reading it?

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): I do not accept that premise at all, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Stanfield: It is true.

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): It is what happened.

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): Mr. Speaker, I think the procedure followed was well within the traditions of the House as they have been established over many years.

Mr. Woolliams: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a question of privilege. The Minister of Finance says he does not accept that premise. Some Members of Parliament from this side of the House were listening to a certain media broadcast at 15 minutes after eight, long before the minister got to the terms and the conditions of tax cuts or tax increases in his budget. At the same time Members of Parliament like myself were denied copies of the speech in the lobby. Those are the facts, and I would ask him seriously to look into them. He knows that our rules follow the British tradition in this regard.

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): We got it on a transistor radio.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I recognize the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

ORDER OF LEGISLATIVE PRIORITY FOLLOWING BUDGET DEBATE

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the President of the Privy Council in his capacity as government House leader. Can the minister indicate to the House the government's order of priorities once the six-day debate on the budget motion is over? Will the government then call such measures as the bills to amend the Old Age Security Act and the War Veterans Allowance Act? If not, what is the order of priorities?

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, following the completion of the budget debate of six days duration it will be the intention of the government to call, in addition to the Old Age Security Act and the War Veterans Allowance Act, the 1972 budget bills. There will also be seven opposition days, so bringing all that together will probably take up most of the month of March.

SOCIAL SECURITY

OLD AGE PENSIONS—POSSIBILITY OF PROVISION IN FORTHCOMING BILL RESPECTING PERSONS BETWEEN 60 AND 65

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): I should like to ask a supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. With regard to the old age security bill I should like to ask either the President of the Privy Council or the Minister of National Health and Welfare what has happened to the consideration we were told was being given to persons between 60 and 65 years of age? Will there be anything for them in the bill that is to be presented?

[Translation]

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, I will have something to say in the House on this subject as soon as I have the opportunity to do so during the debate on that legislation.

REGIONAL ECONOMIC EXPANSION

JOINT STUDIES BY DEPARTMENT AND DEPARTMENT OF TRANSPORT FOR REVISION OF POLICIES

Mr. Elmer M. MacKay (Central Nova): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Regional Economic Expansion. Because of the lack of emphasis on regional development problems in the current budget and the importance of transportation in equalizing economic opportunities in Canada, re-emphasized at a recent conference of Atlantic premiers and railway officials, have the Departments of Regional Economic Expansion and Transport initiated joint studies for revision of policies? If so, will any over-all statement be made this winter?

Hon. Donald C. Jamieson (Minister of Regional Economic Expansion): Mr. Speaker, on the first part of the question with regard to the emphasis laid on regional economic expansion in the budget, I call the hon. member's attention to the fact that there is slightly more than half a billion dollars in the estimates to be used for that purpose in the coming fiscal year. On the matter of combined transport and regional economic studies, yes, these are proceeding. I discussed them no later than this morning with my colleague, the Minister of Transport, and as I indicated last week I am carrying out a series of consultations with the provincial premiers.

Mr. MacKay: In view of the fact that only 30 per cent of the original estimates, or 50 per cent of the revised estimates, for incentive grant expenditures regarding DREE have been met during the past year or, to put it another way, the program operated at approximately 30 per cent of its capability, will the Minister of Regional Economic Expansion or the Prime Minister, who together with other dignitaries are meeting tonight at the ivory tower—at the Carleton Towers in Ottawa—be making announcements concerning specific fiscal proposals relating to DREE?

Mr. Jamieson: Mr. Speaker, it is certainly not the intention of the Department of Regional Economic Expansion to build ivory towers. On the one hand, I am glad the hon. member has drawn attention to the fact that the incentive grants were not quite the rip-off that some people claimed. I am sorry, on the other hand, that we have not put out more in legitimate projects. As I said the other day, that is what we are anxious to do in the coming year.

POSSIBILITY OF AMENDMENTS TO ACT TO ALLEVIATE UNEMPLOYMENT

Mr. Heward Grafftey (Brome-Missisquoi): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Regional Economic Expansion. It is based on the urgent fact that unemployment figures in Quebec, as released ten days ago, continue at 10.2 per cent. In view of the failure of the minister's policies to alleviate this situation in the province of Quebec, can we be assured that amendments to the Regional Development Incentives Act will be brought before the House in the very near future, and when?

Hon. Donald C. Jamieson (Minister of Regional Economic Expansion): Mr. Speaker, I do not anticipate that the plans we have will in the first instance at least require amendments, if the hon. member is speaking in the legislative sense. Within two weeks I would assume that my estimates would be before the committee. At that time I will be glad to give a complete and detailed account of the changes we propose to make with the objective of achieving the improvement in the employment situation that he and I equally desire.

Mr. Grafftey: Mr. Speaker, did the minister say that would be within two weeks?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Perhaps the minister might reply to the hon. member's supplementary and then I will recognize the hon. member for Yorkton-Melville.

Mr. Jamieson: I believe the question was whether it would be within two weeks. I understand that the committee probably will be considering the estimates within two weeks and at that time I will be very pleased to give a detailed account of our plans.

SOCIAL SECURITY

POSSIBILITY OF LEGISLATION RESPECTING GUARANTEED ANNUAL INCOME

Mr. Lorne Nystrom (Yorkton-Melville): Mr. Speaker, I have a question which is supplementary to that asked by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre. It is directed to the Minister of National Health and Welfare. In view of the fact that no reference was made in the budget last night to a guaranteed annual income for those who cannot work, as was promised in the Speech from the Throne, can the minister say whether or not a bill will be presented at this session for a guaranteed annual income for those unable to work?

[Translation]

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, in the Speech from the Throne the government has given five policy principles for the in depth reform of social security in Canada which is being considered jointly with the provinces. These principles will guide us during our discussions with the provinces in the months to come and particularly during the conference in April. Previous to this conference, the government will submit some proposals and if they are agreed to by the provinces, I hope that we will be able to submit certain bills to the House.

[English]

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. There are members who would like an opportunity to ask supplementaries on the subject introduced by the hon. member for Central Nova. I will return to them in a moment. In fairness, I think the Chair should now recognize the hon. member for Charlevoix.

[Translation]

POSSIBILITY OF LEGISLATION RESPECTING FAMILY ALLOWANCES

Mr. Gilles Caouette (Charlevoix): Mr. Speaker, may I ask a supplementary?

As to guaranteed income, we realize that the budget speech says nothing about family allowances. Does the Minister of Finance or the Minister of National Health and Welfare expect to introduce legislation in this respect?

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of National Health and Welfare): As I said earlier, Mr. Speaker, I hope to be able to bring before the House during the month of April some proposals that would be discussed with the provinces by the end of April and a bill on family allowances will be introduced in the House during this session.

FINANCE

FOOD PRICES—GOVERNMENT DEFINITION OF ACCEPTABLE INCREASE

Miss Flora MacDonald (Kingston and The Islands): Mr. Speaker, my supplementary is directed to the Minister of Finance with regard to his remarks on food prices. Would the minister advise the House whether the government has a definition of acceptable food price increases this year and whether that definition will be presented to the public and the food industry?

Hon. John N. Turner (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, that would be rather difficult to define in terms of the tremendous range of food available to Canadians.

Miss MacDonald (Kingston and The Islands): Mr. Speaker, in light of the lack of such a definition, would the minister advise the House how he will determine whether the tariff cuts will have an acceptable effect on food prices?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The minister may reply to the question briefly and will be recognized for that purpose, but I suggest to the hon. member that we are really entering into the budget debate itself. The minister will be recognized for the purpose of replying briefly, if he can do so.

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): By watching prices.

DISCUSSIONS WITH NOVA SCOTIA OFFICIALS— DECENTRALIZATION OF RESPONSIBILITY

Mr. J. M. Forrestall (Dartmouth-Halifax East): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary in respect of the question asked by my friend from Central Nova. I should like to ask the Minister of Regional Economic Expansion whether in light of the talks that are opening between his officials and officials of the province of Nova Scotia some time this week with regard to new DREE arrangements, the minister's officials will carry with them new instructions with regard to decentralization of the essential DREE structure? In other words, during these initial discussions will they be talking about the placement of greater responsibility in the region?

Hon. Donald C. Jamieson (Minister of Regional Economic Expansion): Mr. Speaker, with regard to initial talks, I think the hon. member will know these have been going on for some time and probably will be continuing during the current week. We are certainly not sending them down there to discuss with Nova Scotia, in response to the specific question, any hard and fast rules that we have laid down. If there is an instruction it is to try to make our program as responsive as we possibly can to the purposes of the provinces concerned, whether Nova Scotia, Quebec or British Columbia.

• (1450)

Mr. Forrestall: Mr. Speaker, I wish to ask a supplementary question. I believe I do not give you cause for concern in this regard too often, Sir. I am trying to determine from the minister when the government is going to get on with its undertaking to place a little more direct control over DREE programs with the Atlantic provinces?

Mr. Guay (St. Boniface): After they get rid of all the heavy water.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

An hon. Member: You have got water on the brain, Joe.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Speaker: Order. I apologize to the minister. The hon. member for Cape Breton-East Richmond rises on a point of order.

[Miss MacDonald (Kingston and The Islands).]

Mr. MacInnis (Cape Breton-East Richmond): I rise on a point of order, Mr. Speaker, because of the continuous interjections in the House by the hon. member for St. Boniface in respect of the heavy water situation—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. MacInnis (Cape Breton-East Richmond): —and the heavy water industry in the town of Glace Bay, my home town.

Mr. Guay (St. Boniface): It sunk the Bonaventure.

Mr. MacInnis (Cape Breton-East Richmond): It goes without saying and the hon. member for St. Boniface should make himself aware of the fact, that the present premier of the province of Nova Scotia, on April 1, 1965, while a member of this House, gave full credit to the then minister of labour, the hon. Mr. MacEachen, for placing that plant in Glace Bay.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Some hon. Members: Withdraw!

Mr. Crouse: Take a bow, Allan. You earned it.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. It does seem to me that this is more a point of debate. I would not think it could be considered a point of order. I would hope we could continue with the question period because we are running short of time and in about seven minutes it will be over.

Mr. MacInnis (Cape Breton-East Richmond): I bow to your direction, Mr. Speaker, which I will gladly accept, but I caution the hon. member for St. Boniface that every time he opens his mouth on heavy water I will bring forth more information for the attention of the House.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Guay (St. Boniface): On a question of privilege, Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I suggest to hon. members that we are not greatly helping this difficult part of our proceedings, the question period. I think it is a duty of all hon. members to give other members who are seeking an opportunity to ask questions and supplementaries a chance to do so. The hon. member for St. Boniface now rises on a question of privilege.

Mr. Guay (St. Boniface): First of all, Mr. Speaker, I would like to say that I am glad to see that the hon. member from Cape Breton is in the House.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Guay (St. Boniface): My point of privilege is that the fact is that this plant was officially opened by the hon. Mr. Stanfield in 1967.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Muir: And Mr. MacEachen.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

Mr. Guay (St. Boniface): When the hon. member rises on a question of privilege—

Mr. Crouse: You will have heavy water on the nose, Joe, like that guy in Nova Scotia if you are not careful.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. May we have order, please. The hon. member rose on a question of privilege. I have serious doubts whether it is a legitimate question of privilege. I certainly do not want to prevent him from stating what his question of privilege is but he should do it quickly, if he has one.

Mr. Guay (St. Boniface): Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I did not know the members on the other side were that touchy. From now on we will have to take it easy with them.

Mr. MacInnis (Cape Breton-East Richmond): On a question of privilege, Mr. Speaker, this is the second time within a few days that the hon. member for St. Boniface has made reference to my attendance in the House. It was only on Thursday of last week that I sent the hon. member a note, after he had made reference to the fact that I was not in attendance in the House, in which I called his attention to the fact that I had been away from Ottawa four sitting days since the session opened.

Mr. Guay (St. Boniface): That is what you said, but it was more than that.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member for St. Boniface should give an opportunity to the hon. member for Cape Breton-East Richmond to express his concern on his point of order. I think it is unfair on the part of hon. members to make reference at any time to the presence or absence of members of the House.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. MacInnis (Cape Breton-East Richmond): As I was saying, Mr. Speaker, on Thursday last the hon. member for St. Boniface sent me an apology by way of a note. If it is his wish now to withdraw that apology, I am perfectly prepared to accept that and to match my attendance against that of any other member in the House of Commons.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I wonder whether we might not now return to the question period. The hon. member for Dartmouth-Halifax East was attempting to ask a supplementary, I believe.

Mr. Forrestall: Mr. Speaker, I am sure the minister heard the question and I will not repeat it. Would he now answer it, and would he advise the hon. member for St. Boniface to take out a little insurance against fattened lips and bloodied noses?

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The comments made by the hon. member for Dartmouth-Halifax East are unparliamentary, I suggest to him.

Some hon. Members: Withdraw!

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I suggest to hon. members that there is no point at all in pursuing the matter.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The situation is getting more unpleasant by the moment, and I think all hon. members will be relieved when, in about two minutes, I call orders of the day. The hon. member for Labelle.

AIR TRANSPORT

INTENTION OF DEFENCE DEPARTMENT RESPECTING RESUMPTION OF SEARCH FOR LOST BEECH AIRCRAFT

Mr. Maurice Dupras (Labelle): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the Minister of National Defence. In view of the fact that occupants of downed light aircraft have survived for long periods before in adverse weather conditions, is it the intention of the minister's department to resume air search for the Beech aircraft lost with four occupants aboard about 20 days ago?

Hon. James Richardson (Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, that search is one of the most extensive we have undertaken. Our personnel have flown some 750 hours, covering approximately 72,000 square miles, and we have had as many as 16 aircraft in the air on one day. I would add that the search is still continuing in the sense that our training flights, and also civilian aircraft, have been asked to maintain visual and radio observation in the search area.

INVESTIGATIONS INTO LOSS OF BEECH AIRCRAFT IN NORTHWEST TERRITORIES LAST FALL

Mr. Erik Nielsen (Yukon): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a supplementary question to the Solicitor General and to the Minister of Transport whose departments are conducting investigations into the circumstances surrounding the twin Beech aircraft that was lost last fall in the Northwest Territories. Have the investigations conducted by the RCMP transport department officials yet been completed and, if so, what are the results?

Hon. Jean Marchand (Minister of Transport): So far as the Department of Transport is concerned there has been some inquiry. I have not yet got the report but there was an inquiry.

While I am on my feet, Mr. Speaker, I want to give the House the information that from January next all aircraft in Canada will have to have electronic location devices installed in them.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Marchand (Langelier): Only very large aircraft will be exempted. We are now in consultation with the manufacturers and the aviation clubs, and we hope that from January 1 next this will be compulsory in Canada.

Mr. Nielsen: Will the Solicitor General please answer with respect to the RCMP investigation?

Hon. Warren Allmand (Solicitor General): Mr. Speaker, I do not have an up to date report on that matter but I will be pleased to get one for the hon. member.

SUPPLY AND SERVICES

SUGGESTED ENCOURAGEMENT OF PLACING OF GOVERNMENT CONTRACTS IN WESTERN CANADA

Mr. Barry Mather (Surrey-White Rock): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the right hon. Prime Minister. Having in mind his recent speech in Winnipeg in which he laid importance on the well-being of western Canada in the federal scheme of confederation, would the right hon. gentleman give consideration to encouraging the placing of more federal contracts for federal purchases in western Canada and in particular in British Columbia where the number of such contracts in recent months has been minimal?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, the hon. member and the House will recall that when the present Minister of National Defence was minister of supply and services he announced that it would be government policy to review the whole matter of purchasing and contracts by his department and by the government in order to ensure an equitable spread of such contracts.

Mr. Mather: I thank the Prime Minister for that answer. Would he consider encouraging the former minister of supply and services, now the Minister of National Defence, to consult with the present Minister of Supply and Services with a view to expediting a more equitable distribution of contracts?

REDISTRIBUTION OF RIDINGS—REQUEST FOR PUBLICATION IN NEWSPAPERS OF MAPS SHOWING NEW BOUNDARIES

Hon. Alvin Hamilton (Qu'Appelle-Moose Mountain): Mr. Speaker, would the Prime Minister check with the Chief Electoral Officer and the redistribution officials to see that maps of the new boundaries proposed under redistribution are published in the constituencies? I make a personal complaint because not a single advertisement has been placed in any newspaper in my riding.

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I will take that suggestion under consideration.

AIR TRANSPORT

CRASH OF ILFORD-RIVERTON AIRCRAFT IN WINNIPEG—REQUEST FOR PUBLICATION OF REPORT

Mr. Dan McKenzie (Winnipeg South Centre): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Transport. In light of the fact that there has been an investigation into the fatal air crash of an Ilford-Riverton aircraft at Winnipeg in June, 1972, can the minister give any indication when the report will be made public?

Hon. Jean Marchand (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I will inquire and make a report to the House.

REGIONAL ECONOMIC EXPANSION

FORMER RIVERS, MANITOBA, AIR BASE—INQUIRY AS TO APPROVAL OF APPLICATIONS—REQUEST FOR REVIEW

Mr. Craig Stewart (Marquette): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Regional Economic Expansion. Can the minister inform the House when the several DREE applications for the former Rivers air base, which have been delayed for some time, will be approved?

Hon. Donald C. Jamieson (Minister of Regional Economic Expansion): Mr. Speaker, I have had representations from the honourable Mr. Evans who was here last week and discussed with me this and a number of other matters. I have asked for expeditious treatment of them in terms of getting them before me, and I would hope to deal with them in the near future.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Hon. members will appreciate that we have been operating on borrowed time for a few minutes. I thought that hon. members might want to have a few additional minutes because of the difficulties we had during the question period, but we should not have too many supplementaries or there would not be much point in prolonging the question period.

Mr. Stewart (Marquette): Because of the serious economic situation at Rivers, would the minister order a review by his department of all DREE applications that involve the former Rivers air base?

Mr. Jamieson: Mr. Speaker, I do not know if it would be in quite that form, but certainly that is the objective of what is being considered at the present time. I would be glad to have any comments or advice that the hon. member can give me.

FINANCE

INCENTIVES TO STIMULATE INVESTMENT IN BUSINESS, INDUSTRY AND RESOURCES BY CANADIANS

Mr. Peter C. Bawden (Calgary South): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Finance. In view of the fact the minister told the House to wait for his budget to learn about incentives to Canadians to invest in Canada and that the budget was strangely silent on this question last evening, can the minister now tell the House whether he proposes additional incentives to Canadians to stimulate their investment in equity ownership in business, industry and natural resources in this country?

Hon. John N. Turner (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I hope the hon. gentleman has read the budget carefully and all the ways and means resolutions. Certainly, my colleague the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce and I will be introducing measures that will stimulate interest in small business in particular in this country.

Mr. Bawden: In view of the overconfidence which the minister exudes while avoiding my question, can the Prime Minister tell the House whether he considers the marriage to be successful and secure now that the bride has seen the wedding presents?

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

WELFARE

SUGGESTED INCREASE IN FEDERAL CONTRIBUTION PENDING MEETING WITH PROVINCIAL MINISTERS

Mr. Jack Marshall (Humber-St. George's-St. Barbe): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of National Health and Welfare. In view of the fact that rising food costs are affecting those people who have to resort to welfare, and in view of the fact that the minister is not meeting with the provincial ministers until April, would he consider treating this as an emergency and raising the 50-50 cost formula with the provinces in order to help these people?

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, I am sure the hon. member knows that the federal government is paying 50 per cent of the social assistance in Canada and it is up to the provinces to decide what kind of measures they want to introduce to help people who are in need.

Mr. Marshall: Mr. Speaker, I was trying to help the minister by telling him I knew that. I mentioned it and he repeated it. Will he take the lead and meet with the provincial ministers? This is a serious situation. These people are suffering and he should take the lead in meeting them. Would he kindly do that?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member for Assiniboia.

HOUSING

ACTION TO CONTROL RENTS IN PROJECTS UNDER PROVINCIAL OR MUNICIPAL AUTHORITIES

Mr. Bill Knight (Assiniboia): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of State for Urban Affairs related to housing. In view of his statement today that he would move in the direction of rent control for the area under his jurisdiction, can the minister inform the House if he will be taking any action to ensure that rents will not go up in those housing projects under provincial or municipal authorities?

Hon. Ron Basford (Minister of State for Urban Affairs): Mr. Speaker, my statement referred to situations where Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation is itself the landlord and we have direct control and authority. We have no authority over provincial housing corporations, although one province has already implemented a rent control program and others, of course, are free to do so.

HEALTH

INDEMNIFICATION OF VICTIMS OF THALIDOMIDE—STATUS OF NEGOTIATIONS—POSSIBLE ASSISTANCE FROM MINISTER

Mr. Jean-Marie Boisvert (Drummond): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the hon. Minister of National Health and Welfare.

Since the parents of children who were victims of thalidomide have decided to institute proceedings against the company distributing this drug, must we conclude that the negotiations between the department officials and the company have not been successful?

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Absolutely not, Mr. Speaker, but the role of my officials has been to facilitate consultations and discussions between the families involved and the representatives of the company. I understand that one of the families was not satisfied with the settlement offered, that is the discussions between the parties, in this case the families and the business concerned.

Mr. Boisvert: Mr. Speaker, I wish to ask a supplementary question to the minister.

Would he be ready to grant his technical and financial support to these parents in the proceedings they are taking against the company?

Mr. Lalonde: No, Mr. Speaker.

FLOODS

POSSIBILITY OF AID TO SOUTHWESTERN ONTARIO IN LIGHT OF GRANT TO BRITISH COLUMBIA

Mr. H. W. Danforth (Kent-Essex): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of the Environment. It has been indicated that the minister has granted $12½ million for flood control and erosion relief in his own province of British Columbia. Can we expect a similar announcement for the continuing emergency in southwestern Ontario?

Hon. Jack Davis (Minister of the Environment): Mr. Speaker, that grant is part of a long term arrangement between the government of Canada and the province of British Columbia which has resulted from intensive studies over the years and is part of a firm federal-provincial agreement that also extends over many years.

TRANSPORT

NEED FOR MORE ICEBREAKERS ON SHIPPING ROUTES BETWEEN MAINLAND AND NEWFOUNDLAND

Mr. Robert Muir (Cape Breton-The Sydneys): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Transport. In view of the fact that drift ice is creating great difficulties and delays in ship movement between the mainland port of North Sydney and Newfoundland, affecting all CNR boats, would the minister today direct that more icebreakers be put into service in this area? I understand that icebreakers directed to other areas are not too far away.

Hon. Jean Marchand (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I think everybody will recognize that we have had a very bad season as far as ice is concerned.

Mr. Stanfield: More bad weather?

Mr. Marchand (Langelier): No, a lot of ice and I am not responsible for it. I like it in Scotch. I think the Canadian government sooner or later will have to build more icebreakers. I agree with the hon. gentleman. It is a long job and a very expensive one, but if we want our ships to sail in winter time we will have to take the necessary measures.

AGRICULTURE

TARIFF REDUCTIONS ON IMPORTS OF FARM PRODUCTS—COST TO FARMERS—EFFECT ON COST OF LIVING

Mr. Fred McCain (Carleton-Charlotte): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Agriculture. Last night's budget indicated that there would be several reductions in tariffs on agricultural products entering Canada. Has the Minister of Agriculture made an estimate of the possible cost in net income to farmers of this reduction in tariffs?

Hon. E. F. Whelan (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, we are in the throes of doing this at the present time, but I am not really concerned that they will have that much effect on farmers' incomes in Canada.

Mr. McGrath: Let them cut meatballs and gravy.

Mr. McCain: May I ask the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs if he is prepared to estimate the savings to the consumer as a result of the reduction in food costs to be effected by the removal of duty on agricultural products?

Hon. Herb Gray (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): Mr. Speaker, certainly I hope that the saving will be one of substance, but I am not in a position at this time to give a definite assessment.

Mr. Speaker: Orders of the day.

Mr. McCain: I asked if the minister could assess the effect on the cost of living of the reduction of duty on agricultural products entering Canada. Obviously he could not.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

SUPPLY

APPROPRIATION ACT No. 1, 1973

The House resumed, from Monday, February 19, consideration in committee of Bill C-141, for granting to Her Majesty certain sums of money for the public service for the financial year ending 31st March, 1973—Mr. MacEachen (for Mr. Drury)—Mr. McCleave in the chair.

On clause 2—Schedule.

The Chairman: Order, please. When the committee rose at five o'clock yesterday, votes 5, 35, 40a, 45a in the schedule relating to the Department of National Health and Welfare were being considered, and the hon. member for Lotbinière had the floor.

[Translation]

Mr. Fortin: Mr. Chairman, yesterday I asked for the opportunity to say a few words on items 35a and 40a. Shortly after the adjournment of the debate yesterday, the hon. Minister of Finance (Mr. Turner) announced in the budget speech something which is related to these items, namely the old age security pension and basic rates which differ from those we discussed yesterday afternoon.

Mr. Chairman, I would have spoken any way about the age of eligibility for the old age security pension. When we read the report of the special joint committee of the Senate and the House of Commons on Poverty in Canada as regards the dependency of many Canadians, we note that they recommend that a guaranteed income be given to a maximum number of Canadians who find themselves in a state of dependency.

The reading of the annual reviews of the Economic Council of Canada, allows one to draw similar conclusions; when one reads the Speech from the Throne made at the very beginning of this session, one will note once again the good intentions of this government which is talking about implementing a guaranteed income scheme.

In view of the budget presented last night—which could be predicted yesterday afternoon—the government agreed, after numerous representations and pressures from the Social Credit party of Canada, to increase old age security pensions. We were asking $350 a month and the government agreed to approximate that amount with $325 a month. It seems to me, Mr. Chairman, that this is a gain for our party which proves that our requests are not always ridiculous since the government is forced to agree to our proposals one day or another.

We have been asking for a long time that the government consider in the context of a guaranteed income scheme, the possibility of lowering to 60 the retirement age in Canada so that if one person receives old age security at 60, his spouse, whatever his age may be, could be entitled to the old age pension. I take the opportunity offered to draw the government's attention on that important matter.

Since the government is in a minority position, since it cannot be as arrogant as it has been since 1968 and since it must take account of our claims, it agrees partly to what we have been asking. However, that does not imply that it will get our whole support.

In view of the problems facing our fellow citizens, it is essential that the government and the minister undertake, as for the examination of votes 35a and 40a, to give details more rapidly than it had forecasted, since the budget was presented last night, on the possibility of first lowering eligibility for old age security pension to 60 and, second granting the old age pension automatically to both spouses when one has reached the pensionable age.

Then, Mr. Chairman, if the government agrees to work for the liberalization of the human being in order to give him an economic security in this country, it will not only show its good will but also that it understands many citizens who live in poverty and dependency.

Mr. Chairman, the old age security pension as it now exists in Canada often gives rise to dissatisfaction. The basic pension of $82.88, which is now increased to $100, is a statutory pension, according to the statement of the hon. minister.

If someone cannot make both ends meet with this basic pension, then the whole mechanism of the oppressive bureaucracy gets started to have forms signed, to check the claimants' ressources and if they are more or less dependent they will be entitled to the garanteed income supplement.

• (1520)

Mr. Chairman, this is just administrative make work which imply very substantial expenditures for the administration of the old age security pension. We in the Social Credit Party feel that it would be a lot easier to grant an equal pension to all Canadians who are 60 years old, which would make the administration of this program easier and would permit an increase in the old age pensions, thanks to the money that would be saved.

Mr. Chairman, during the question period today and the debate yesterday the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Lalonde) committed himself to announce his plans to the House as to the age of eligibility. He said that first he had to meet with the representatives of provincial governments.

Mr. Chairman, I wish to remind the Minister of National Health and Welfare that this House has a right to know what his intentions are in this regard even before he discusses the matter with the provinces. The minister should realize that provinces have some jurisdiction in that field—we acknowledge it—and that parliament which represents the people of Canada should have its say in the setting of the guidelines of the social security policy in Canada, regardless of what the provinces think.

That does not mean, Mr. Chairman, that we should not object to the policy proposed by the provinces. Of course, we must look for efficient and continuous consultation with other levels of government. But the minister should realize the importance of consulting his colleagues to set up the policy and I am sure that he will get excellent advice from all members of this House, particularly from the Social Credit party of Canada.

I remember the time when the leader of the Social Credit party (Mr. Caouette) was proposing to set old age pensions at $75 a month when they were much lower than that. Both Liberals and Progressive Conservatives—it's all the same—were saying: Caouette is sick. Caouette is mad. It doesn't make sense. Now the first time one of these parties managed to remain in power, it increased the old age pension by $25 over and above what the Social Credit leader was asking for, which makes the national leader say, and justly so, that the old parties are late and at least 25 times sicker than he was then.

Since I came to the House I noticed that some of our colleagues, smarter than others, have a tendency to ridicule certain points of the Social Credit doctrine as well as some of our proposals. I pointed out on motions, in reply to a statement from the President of the Treasury Board (Mr. Drury) an item of the estimates introduced yesterday which shows that 14.2 per cent of the total budget will be appropriated for servicing the public debt which for this present year amounts to $2.5 billion. Yet no hon. member of the other parties has brought up this matter. Maybe it has no importance, but I will point out to my hon. colleagues that this item alone entails an increase of $450 million in this year's budget.

When you consider that over the same period of time only 13.2 per cent of the budget is devoted to economic expansion, you realize that the Creditistes are not as crazy as they are said to be. They are probably right when they urge the House to vote new credits to finance Canada's normal development, including social security.

When the government announces tax cuts so as to raise the old age security pensions, it is at the same time forced to increase the public debt and to present a deficit budget. Everyone indeed knows that this year's deficit will amount to $2 billion.

I asked the hon. Minister of Finance (Mr. Turner) what measures he intends to take to finance this deficit—which was an important question. The hon. minister—everyone heard his reply—does not know. He said that he cannot do otherwise than use the two normal solutions which have been used for 100 years, namely government bonds and taxes.

In both cases, these solutions would reduce the taxpayers' purchasing power and boost our national debt. So, the more it goes, the more it is the same, and when the government grants tax cuts to save its skin, it has to increase the national, municipal and provincial debts. In brief, it has no long or short term solution to pay those debts.

The House is now requested to carry credits 35a and 40a totalling $5,385,000 for only a small portion of social security. But considering the cost of operating that program because there are so many forms to fill, the length of the negotiations and studies which never lead to concrete solutions, the increasingly dependent condition of most of our citizens in this country, which is a rich country, I think that if we claim some degree of intellectual honesty, we will have, in spite of ourselves, one of these days to consider this other Social Credit proposal which is to ensure each Canadian citizen of a guaranteed annual income through the issue of new credits from the Bank of Canada, thus avoiding getting Canadians into debt while granting them their share of the national product.

The minister gave an idea of his great plans in the Speech from the Throne, but after reading last night's budget speech we realize that the Minister of Finance did not dare to consult his colleague in National Health and Welfare Department since there is not a word about this in his budget.

Mr. Chairman, the government is not able to bring about the guaranteed annual income for all Canadian citizens. This government, as well as those who would want to replace it, the Progressive Conservatives, have no way of ensuring income security for Canadian citizens. And these same Progressive Conservatives want to govern the country.

Mr. Chairman, once more I ask the government what is the meaning of the credits the House is asked to vote since they only increase taxes and only minimal amounts are left.

Mr. Chairman, we should stop asking ourselves whether we have the means. It is obvious that we would have the means if we stopped getting Canadians into debt through abnormal financing procedures, namely taxes and Canada savings bonds.

The government has a financial tool on hand, that is the Bank of Canada. It should be used not just any old way but in accordance with a regular procedure and within the framework of a balanced budget in order to give a guaranteed income to all Canadians, specially to the citizens as soon as they reach 60. Thanks to this measure, our older citizens will no longer fell left out.

In conclusion, I would like to relate to the minister a very typical example in order to prove the importance of this proposal. I know for a fact that there are in my riding many cases where the 65 year-old worker is no longer able to work for reasons of poor health. So he retires and gets a piddling pension from the government. The pension will be better now, but is it truly enough?

If a spouse who retires and stays put at home wants to receive the guaranteed income supplement, he will go and fill out a form. Then someone will check his bank account, find out whether or not he reports the interest on his savings and check as well whether he gets additional income from rents, etc. Because of what he receives and the fact that his wife is not yet 65 years old, his pension, his sole income, will not be enough. What happens in such cases? The wife, who is probably 62 or 63, and also probably ill and less capable of working than at 23, will go out and wash floors, do dishes in restaurants or hotels to earn $15, $25, $30 or $40 more to make ends meet.

Mr. Chairman, in such cases, the government is primarily responsible for the state of slavery, dependence in which Canadians find themselves who are no longer capable, in certain circumstances of fighting for themselves, because of the inflated economic situation we are in.

Mr. Chairman, that is why I request, with my colleagues of the Social Credit party, that the old age security pension be given automatically to married couples as soon as one of the spouses reaches age 60, this to enable them to live together, to rest and take advantage of their retirement without any financial worries.

To my mind, that is the primary role of the government and the minister would be well advised to tell us what is his position is in this regard, before we pass the votes before the House.

[English]

Mr. Nesbitt: Mr. Chairman, I do not wish to take up the time of the committee for very long. I wish to refer specifically to certain serious administrative problems which the Minister of National Health and Welfare faces in this department. I am raising this subject today because there is often difficulty in bringing up urgent matters of this kind during the question period.

I am not attributing blame specifically to the minister. After all, he is a new minister. I would blame the former minister, if anyone. But this is a matter which the hon. gentleman might well look into. I am sure he has received complaints at one time or another from almost every member in the House. Anyhow, he certainly will be receiving such complaints. This leads me to the question of disabled allowances—disability pensions under the Canada Pension Plan. In this regard, a letter sent out under the minister's signature describes what constitutes disability under the terms of the plan. He said:

The legislation provides that a person must be suffering from both a severe and prolonged mental or physical disability.

That is simple enough.

Under the legislation, "severe" means that a person must be incapable regularly of pursuing any substantially gainful occupation by reason of mental or physical disability. "Prolonged" means that incapacity to work at any substantially gainful occupation will be present for a long continued and indefinite period of time.

This all seems fairly simple. One would not suppose it would lead to any great difficulty in interpretation. But there have been many complaints about the way in which this part of the plan is administered, and it would seem to me that in the case of nearly all the complaints brought to my attention the conditions stated have been fulfilled.

Apparently, there is some medical board which carries out certain duties under the minister's instructions. We are told, in reply to questions recently placed on the order paper, that there are 13 doctors who possess certain qualifications for making decisions in these cases. It was also interesting to learn, in an answer on February 14 last to a question by my hon. friend from Simcoe North, that after an application has been received, "along with medical and other reports"—I don't know what that means; perhaps the minister could tell us—the applicant is asked to undergo an examination if it is felt that further medical information is required. Mr. Chairman, I should like to know, very specifically, just what constitutes these mysterious "other reports". Who sends them in? Where do they come from? What is the nature of these "other reports"? It is necessary, I suppose, for someone in the minister's department to decide that the terms of the act are being carried out, but the information required by the board is purely medical information, supplied, usually, by a family doctor or a clinic. But the board chooses to disregard it in many cases, apparently, and this leads to serious questions being raised in parliament.

I ask the minister to check very carefully into this board of so-called medical advisers. I do not want to go into detail, and name names, because that is not the practice in this House. But I think the minister might look over the qualifications—I do not mean the paper qualifications but the actual qualifications—of some of the medical advisers who are supposed to be doctors. I am informed by my hon. friend from Cape Breton-East Richmond that on one occasion one of these advisers appearing at a hearing seemed to be, at least, somewhat politically inclined, if not very knowledgeable. He said: "There are three things which are certain in this world. One is death, one is taxes and the other is the re-election of a Liberal government". It seems very strange indeed that medical evidence of this nature should be given.

Right in front of me I have documents relating to three cases which I have brought to the minister's attention. I do not suppose he ever actually saw them. Probably he did not. I have been here long enough to know how these things go. In one case, an applicant who was turned down a couple of times by this medical board, had lost a leg. The other was to be removed. I do not know whether or not he will be considered disabled. Apparently not by the board. But he would appear rather disabled to me. I do not see how he can do very much work in the future. His disability will certainly be prolonged, I would think. In another case, the man concerned is suffering from emphysema. I think it is common knowledge among members of this House that those who suffer from emphysema are not allowed to do heavy work, if any work at all. In fact, they are lucky if they can walk across the room or breathe. Another case I have before me at the moment concerns a lady in her late fifties who has suffered repeated cardiac arrests. On one occasion, the only reason she didn't die, according to a report from her family doctor, was that she happened to be in an intensive care unit. The prognosis in this case is by no means good, yet she is not considered to be disabled.

This kind of thing must be brought to the minister's attention. If he is a good minister, as I think he probably is, he should check very carefully into the kind of judgment which is passed out by this so-called board of medical advisers and find out the nature of these other mysterious reports which they are supposed to read. Will he give some personal attention to this matter, or appoint somebody to look into it, because a great many people across Canada are affected? I am sure every member of this House has received correspondence from his constituency on the subject. It is purely an administrative problem and I believe the minister should exercise, as soon as he can, his administrative authority in this regard.

Mr. Rynard: I should like to say a few words on the subject which my hon. friend from Oxford has brought to the attention of the committee. What we are dealing with, now, is the examination which takes place under the Canada Pension Plan in connection with applications for disability pensions. It appears a person has to be dying before he can qualify. From an examination of the list showing the number of applicants rejected it would appear that the conditions are getting tougher every year, despite the fact that increasing numbers of people are unemployed. In 1970, 78 per cent of the applicants, or 3,087, were determined as being disabled and 16.9 per cent were determined as being not disabled. In 1971, there were 10,019 applicants, 78.5 per cent of whom were listed as disabled and 17.7 per cent of whom were refused. In 1972, we find the ratio of those refused pensions had risen. Only 74 per cent passed and 22 per cent were refused. These figures reflect an increasingly tougher position in the granting of disability pensions. Looking at the situation from the point of view of the economy, I would think this trend should be reversed at a time when more than 600,000 people in Canada are unemployed. Leniency should be shown when a man is sick and becomes unemployable.

I have just one case history here. The person concerned underwent five operations, I think, two for cancer; his gall bladder and stomach have been removed; he was in hospital three times during the first four or five months of last year. Yet his application for a disability pension has been rejected. There is something very peculiar about the whole business. I am astounded to learn that the word of a general practitioner is not accepted, or even of the internist who examines an applicant locally. The board simply wishes to hear what treatment has been prescribed, and then makes up its own mind. This goes against everything we know of medicine, because the doctor who clinically examines a patient, knowing the history of the case, is in a better position to know the facts than anyone who sits down at a desk and makes a ruling on the basis of a report.

We learn that the applicants' own physicians are not asked to determine whether a person is disabled under the terms of the Canada Pension Plan legislation, on the ground that a decision is more than purely medical in nature. So the decision is more than purely medical in nature! As the hon. member for Oxford asked, what else is it? What is being hidden? The standard reply of the department goes on to say that the decision must be made, as required by the legislation, by the Canada Pension Plan administration. As the hon. member for Oxford also pointed out, here is the administration itself deciding whether or not a man is disabled.

• (1540)

The reply continues, and I quote:

The applicant's physician is simply asked for objective findings of any functional limitations.

It is something like playing checkers at a distance and you phone in your moves.

This procedure, including the medical report form answered by physicians, was approved by a committee of experts on disability assessment—

I should certainly like to meet these experts, as I am sure would other hon. members of the House who have had some difficulty with the CPP administration. The reply continues:

The statistics of the nature requested are not kept since the applicant's physician is only forwarding a medical report; that is, the physicians are requested to report their objective findings rather than to provide their opinion as to whether the applicant meets the requirements of the Canada Pension Plan legislation.

Can you beat that, Mr. Chairman? I am sure that the minister feels he has a lot of cleaning up to do in his department. The reply continues:

After the application is received along with the medical and other reports, if it is felt that more medical information is required the applicant is asked to undergo an examination by a medical specialist (consultant) at Canada Pension Plan expense. With this information, a large number of applicants are able to meet the legislative requirements—

So, in addition to an applicant's own family physician examining him, the department wants a specialist to make an examination. That really burns me up, Mr. Chairman.

—whereas, had the specialists' reports not been obtained, many would not meet the criteria—

In other words, many applicants are more or less forced to go at their own expense to see a specialist. Is that fair to the ordinary citizen, or even to the doctor who originally examines the applicant?

—many would not meet the criteria to be determined to be disabled under the legislation; that is, if the decision had simply been based on the report of the family physician only.

I suggest that is partisanship at work there. Many applicants would be rejected if the family doctor only examined them. Therefore, through you, Mr. Chairman, I would ask the Minister of National Health and Welfare to clean up this mess and to put a stop to the unhappiness and unfairness created across Canada in respect of those who do not always have the opportunity to be examined by an internist. I know the minister will reply that everyone has this right, but how many people have the ability to exercise that right, especially those who are sick and down and out? Some people with cardio-vascular failure can hardly get about. Yet in some cases they are told they can take another job. I suggest the department is being unfair to people who are sick, to those who do not have the fortitude and courage to pursue their application, unless someone does it for them.

There is one other point I should like to make and it relates to women who work and contribute to the Canada Pension Plan on the same basis as men. When a working woman dies, her husband and minor children get not one penny in survivors' benefits, aside from a small death benefit which goes into her estate, unless, of course, they can prove they were financially dependent upon her. Yet widows and minor children automatically collect survivors' benefits when a man dies, the assumption being that wives are dependent on their husbands.

I suggest that the minister take another look at this question. There are today 2,831,000 women in the labour force, which I suggest is ridiculous since more than half of them are married. This is, therefore, no longer a valid assumption, and it is time to end this discrimination in the Canada Pension Plan in both of the situations that I have outlined, including that of the single woman.

[Translation]

Mr. Matte: Mr. Chairman, I just want to add to the remarks my colleague from Lotbinière (Mr. Fortin) made a moment ago. I am referring to a matter which I feel should receive more serious consideration from the minister than at present.

Examination of the items of the supplementary estimates reveal that operating expenses account for about one third of contributions.

Mr. Chairman, we have there a typical illustration of the fact that bureaucracy and technocracy sometimes cost as much as contributions themselves. And that is one of the reasons why our party stressed the necessity of the universality, for instance, of old age security, family allowances and minimum guaranteed income. That would eliminate ipso facto expensive investigations, bureaucratic waste and would further ensure greater justice towards the population since the granting of benefits on an overall basis would preclude omissions and ensure justice.

That is why, Mr. Chairman, I believe that a step forward was achieved yesterday. Old age security and the guaranteed income supplement will henceforth total $325 a month, approaching the minimum vital income required by people of 65 and over. However, apparently some considerations have been overlooked, which should have concerned not only the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Lalonde) but also the Minister of Finance (Mr. Turner), namely the plight of people aged from 60 to 65, which is very unfortunate.

At 60, Mr. Chairman, people have been working for more than 40 years. Most of those who are now 60 started working at 15, or earlier. And when one has worked for 45 years, one has directly contributed to the progress of one's country; one has also directly contributed, through taxes, its share of the revenue needed for the administration of the country. And when one has reached the age of 60, one is not asking for favours or gifts, one is just claiming his due.

How is it that this possibility has not been seriously considered yet? It is quite surprising. And what happens to people aged 60? They have to call, at least in Quebec—I know the figures—on the Department of Social Affairs which, through its various local offices, grants, not pensions, not a vital minimum income, but rather an indecent pittance for 1973, since they evaluate the needs of a person, for clothing, food and other personal needs, at $39 a month, that is $78 for a couple. Add to this the rent, electricity and some insurance, for theft or fire—if you take the case of a 60-year-old couple that has no income or cannot find any work—and it is impossible for a person to contemplate the possibility to get any income at all. This is why one has to call on welfare services and then, they generally grant a couple about $125 or $130 per month.

If the needs, at 65, are estimated at $324.30, Mr. Chairman, how is it that, at 64, these same needs are estimated at only $125? Why this difference of $200? This is not a question of wondering whether it will cost too much to lower the age of entitlement to 60; we must simply wonder whether it should be done. If so, the cost does not matter because we are facing a deplorable and disastrous situation.

That is the reason, Mr. Chairman, which must prompt us and the minister to consider the matter seriously. And then, we have two alternatives: either the eligibility age is reduced to 60—which would settle the problem of many heads of family—or, as demanded by the Quebec Minister of Social Affairs, the province is entrusted with the care of managing or co-ordinating the entire welfare program.

If the Minister of National Health and Welfare would agree to consider seriously the problem so as to reach a realistic conclusion in that field, we would solve some very serious and painful problems for the Quebec government.

Mr. Chairman, it would be more than ever advisable for the government during this session to assume its responsibilities and to consider immediately the possibility of introducing a bill to reduce the eligibility age for old age security pension from 65 to 60.

Mr. Peters: Mr. Chairman, I do not wish to add to the length of this debate and I agree with everything that has been said, but I was particularly interested in the fact that the minister did not reply to the hon. member for Oxford and the hon. member for Simcoe North.

[Translation]

Mr. Lalonde: Mr. Chairman, I rise on a question of privilege.

The Deputy Chairman: The minister of National Health and Welfare rises on a question of privilege.

Mr. Lalonde: Mr. Chairman, when the estimates of my department were called, it was agreed, if I stand correct, that I would let the spokesman for each party state their views and that I would then answer. If the hon. member who, I think, was then in the House remembers he will admit that his comments about me are out of order and surely not proper.

[English]

Mr. Peters: Mr. Chairman, I was not aware of those comments. Many hon. members have the same difficulty outlined by the hon. member for Oxford and the hon. member for Simcoe North, and I wanted to suggest to the minister that if he was not now in a position to make a detailed reply in respect of arriving at the criteria in areas where experts are not available he might give us a written reply at a later time. He might indicate how we, as members, can assist people in isolated areas who do not have access to heart specialists or internists. Some of these people are only now having their requests rejected, and I ask the minister to give us a reply in a written form for the edification of hon. members.

Mr. Nielsen: Mr. Chairman, since the main estimates have been tabled and will be before the various standing committees shortly, if we get this kind of information in detail from the minister at this time it will prolong our consideration. Hon. members on both sides are entitled to these detailed explanations, and I am sure the minister is prepared to give them.

However, if the minister deals at length with these matters now, and other ministers do the same in respect of other estimates, we on this side will have difficulty avoiding participation in the debate, and that is what we wanted to avoid in the interests of getting this bill through all stages before five o'clock.

[Translation]

Mr. Allard: I should like to add a few words to what my colleagues have said concerning people aged 60 to 65.

This is sad, but these people are very penalized in their life and it is impossible for them to find a job now. When they lose their job, they are discriminated against because of their age and their performance.

Reference has been made to various solutions; it has been suggested that we lower pensionable age to 60. My party has made many proposals in this respect. Apparently, the government turns a deaf ear to our representations. Nowadays, you always hear about freezing this and freezing that. Perhaps I would make a suggestion which would be a lot less expensive, in view of the fact that the government is short of money: we should freeze people when they reach 60 and wake them up when they get to 65. This way, we could save a fair amount of money.

Mr. Caouette (Charlevoix): Mr. Chairman, I have a very brief remark to make. I think the minister implied a moment ago that he was ready to take notice of our suggestion and comment on them at the end, that is, in his own speech.

I have always noted—and this is confirmed by last night's budget—that older people are considered differently depending on whether they are heads of families or not. The head is granted the sum of $170 in addition to the guaranteed income supplement, whereas—

The Deputy Chairman: Order. I do not wish to limit the comments of the hon. member, but I would ask him to confine his remarks to the vote now under discussion by the committee. He may discuss, generally, the Department of National Health and Welfare votes, but when his comments are related to yesterday's budget they are not in accordance with the rules of the House.

Mr. Caouette (Charlevoix): Mr. Chairman, I shall refer to the figures which have been used to establish these estimates. I mean that instead of referring to $170 I will quote the figures which were then established, that is $150 and $142, for exactly the same reasons.

I am sorry about the fact that women are considered as being less important than men, which is completely ridiculous. It is all very well to talk about family unity, but there are several instances where full pensions are paid to couples living as man and wife as allowed under Canada Pension Plan regulations.

Could the hon. minister say whether his department or the government are going to encourage family disunity much longer? Social Credit suggests that one and for all the status of women be recognized and that they be considered on an equal basis with men as regards old age security pensions.

The Deputy Chairman: Order. I think the hon. member for Lotbinière was in the House yesterday when the Chairman of Committees of the Whole (Mr. McCleave) referred to Standing Order 58 (13). I doubt he can be recognized a second time as he spoke before. Besides even the minister did not have the opportunity of replying.

Can the committee, which has until now allowed some members to speak several times, encroach upon the 20 minutes allowed each member in committees of the whole? In fact, according to the interpretation given yesterday by the Chair on committees of the whole, it does not seem that this would apply to the study of the supplementary estimates.

I mention this point, and invite the observations of the hon. member.

Mr. Fortin: Mr. Chairman, I rise on a point of order.

The Deputy Chairman: The member for Lotbinière on a point of order.

Mr. Fortin: Mr. Chairman, when I rose you called me back to order. I was rising on a point of order, because I know as well as you do that when the House sits in committee of the whole members speaks only once, for 20 minutes, that is all. I rise because the minister said a while ago, in reply to the hon. member for Timiskaming (Mr. Peters), who had raised a question of privilege, that he would be willing to answer at the end of the debate. I wanted to ask him, through a question of privilege or a point of order, whether he meant and, in fact, that he would not accept questions at the end of his speech?

• (1600)

[English]

Mr. Nielsen: On the point of order, with all due respect to the views of the hon. member, an hon. member is entitled to speak once, but after that if an hon. member wishes to speak he must obtain the consent of the committee. That is my understanding of Standing Order 58 (13).

[Translation]

Mr. Fortin: Mr. Chairman, on a point of order.

The Deputy Chairman: The hon. member for Lotbinière on a point of order.

Mr. Fortin: Mr. Chairman, I would respectfully tell the hon. member for Yukon (Mr. Nielsen) that I did not ask to be recognized twice. I simply asked, through a question of privilege, whether the minister had agreed to answer questions at the end of his remarks, in view of the question of privilege he has himself raised earlier following a question from the hon. member for Timiskaming (Mr. Peters).

Mr. Lalonde: Mr. Chairman, I would not like to interfere but if some points need to be clarified, it is up to hon. members to ask me questions.

I am rather embarrassed by the present situation. I understood, from the statement of the hon. member for Yukon, that it would be better if I gave a more elaborate reply in the more relaxed atmosphere of the committee to which the estimates tabled today will be referred. I am prepared to reply to the questions raised today by hon. members but I fear that this might extend the debate.

I am in the hands of hon. members. If they insist that we should discuss the points raised this afternoon, I have no objection but I think that the various party leaders would like to expedite consideration of the items presented to the House. I am ready to co-operate with the party officials to accelerate this study mainly because the budget debate will take place soon, because a bill amending the Old Age Security Act will be introduced and finally because the estimates will be referred to the Miscellaneous Estimates Committee.

[English]

Mr. Nielsen: We are in full agreement with that, Mr. Chairman. As an added argument, may I say the minister could give a fuller explanation before the standing committee and in the meantime he and his officials would have an opportunity to study in detail the points raised by hon. members and obtain detailed answers to their questions. That could be one of the first orders tackled by the committee.

Mr. Peters: On a point of order, Mr. Chairman; I think the decision is not up to the acting something of the Conservative party but rather is up to the minister. Because of the detailed questions which were asked by the two members, I had asked if we could be given a written critique. I would still hope that would be possible because if it were written members would have the benefit of being in a position to study it.

Mr. Lalonde: I fully agree with the hon. member and will be pleased to provide hon. members with a written answer on this subject.

I might say I am very sympathetic with many of the points raised by various members in this regard, including many members on this side. I have had, I suppose, as many letters on this subject as on any other in my department in the last few months. I have asked my officials for a full report and review of this situation. In particular, I want to be quite sure that we are not applying to private citizens in this area tougher criteria than are applied in respect of public pension plans and that the public plan is not tougher on Canadian citizens than the private sector. I expect to have a report on this subject very soon. I have asked my officials to review the whole situation. However, I shall be pleased, before I appear before the committee or at some other time, to give a full reply in respect of this subject.

The Deputy Chairman: Is the Chair to assume that this completes the committee's examination of votes 5a, 35a and 40a of the Department of National Health and Welfare.

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

The Deputy Chairman: The Committee will now proceed to the consideration of vote 5a relating to the House of Commons.

[Translation]

Mr. Fortin: Mr. Chairman, we are now discussing, as you have just announced, vote 5a relating to the House of Commons: Program expenditures and the grant listed in the Estimates.

An article was recently published in a daily newspaper of the Ottawa-Hull area on bilingualism in the House of Commons, particularly among the protective staff. I imagine—

The Deputy Chairman: Order. I do not wish to prevent the hon. member from making his remarks, but vote 5a which is now before the committee deals with the administrative responsibility of the government towards the House of Commons and specifically with inter-parliamentary relations. The point raised by the hon. member has nothing to do with government responsibility, but concerns rather the responsability of the Speaker of the House who answers for that. It is not in order to raise that question at this time.

Does this complete the consideration of vote 5a? Is it agreed?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Matte: Mr. Chairman, I listened carefully to your remarks, but when I read vote 5a—House of Commons—Program expenditures and the grant listed in the Estimates—it seems to me that, with all due respect, that vote can easily include the 7 per cent bilingualism premium claimed by bilingual employees of the House of Commons.

The Deputy Chairman: Order. I must point out to the hon. member that the Chair has made its ruling. He only has to refer to the supplementary estimates which were distributed to the hon. members and he will see that it is clearly indicated that the amount of $15,000 deals specifically with grants respecting inter-parliamentary relations. Although the subject is broader, the issue of bilingualism and the organization of the protective staff in the House of Commons has nothing to do with government administration and cannot be discussed at this time in committee.

Mr. Fortin: Mr. Chairman, with regard to the item for inter-parliamentary relations which we are asked to vote, I recall a trip to Washington within the framework of Canada-U.S. inter-parliamentary relations. I then met representatives of the American government. It was at the time we were discussing salaries, working conditions of hon. members, senators and Congressmen. My hon. colleague from Timiskaming (Mr. Peters) is aware of that. His party was very ably represented by his colleague from Regina-Lake Centre (Mr. Benjamin).

Mr. Chairman, I recall the discussions that took place then and which greatly interested our American colleagues. The state of the Canadian Parliament was being considered. Our American friends, within the framework of inter-parliamentary relations, came to Canada and I had the honour to be among the delegates who received them. I recall that at a supper in the National Arts Centre, the discussion bore precisely on this typical aspect of bilingualism in the House of Commons.

The Americans were very surprised of this situation and they were enthusiastic and they congratulated us.

Mr. Chairman, so that countries with which we have interparliamentary relations get a better image of the House of Commons, I suggest that the minister who requests the adoption of vote 5a should ensure that in inter-parliamentary relations we not only discuss better friendly relationships between countries but we should also emphasize this particular feature of Canada as a country that we want to recognize as bilingual and bicultural.

Consequently, when representatives of foreign countries are welcomed to the House of Commons, Mr. Chairman, it seems to me the members of the security staff should get equal treatment, with regard to competence and salary, when it comes to the official languages. Mr. Chairman, why not give an interesting picture to the representatives of those countries, within our inter-parliamentary relations—

The Deputy Chairman: Order. The hon. member knows that he is now trying to do indirectly what he may not do directly. I would invite him to respect the ruling of the Chair. Surely the committee has enough work to do without trying to elude the decisions of the Chair. Does this complete study of vote 5a concerning the House of Commons? Agreed?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

[English]

The Deputy Chairman: The committee will now proceed to Vote 10a and Vote 15a related to the Department of Public Works.

Mr. Peters: Mr. Chairman, I anticipate staying in order because we have support for the estimates, the bill, and if necessary for the budget. The only thing that bothers me is the influence of the hon. member for Yukon, but really that has not been much. It has been more of an irritant than a deterrent.

I am interested in two problems connected with the vote dealing with accommodation. I notice that we are erecting a number of single purpose and general purpose buildings, and I am interested in one general purpose building that simply is not being built. It has appeared in and disappeared from estimates with some regularity. But before dealing with it, since the President of the Treasury Board and the Minister of Public Works are both present I would like to deal with what I consider a fairly serious situation in terms of parliament, with respect to the vote just passed.

I do not intend to transgress the rules, but the Minister of Public Works has responsibility for accommodation with respect to rooms 601 and 602. You will remember, Mr. Chairman, that a green rug was placed in the Blue Room. This has now been overlaid with another rug, at some expense. I would like either minister to tell me what happened to the $5,000 genuine antique Indian rugs that were in rooms 601 and 602, and to tell me if there is any intention to re-instal them?

The Deputy Chairman: Order, please. Again, I wonder if the hon. member is getting away from the prerogative of the Department of Public Works, and coming into the realm of the responsibilities for administration conferred on the Speaker of the House of Commons with respect to accommodation in this building. Although there might be an in-put contributed by the Department of Public Works, the decision would come under the jurisdiction of the Speaker of the House of Commons.

Mr. Peters: I certainly do not want to reflect on the Speaker of the House. I know he does not have such poor taste as to put a green rug in a blue room. It was not his fault. Obviously, it must have been done by the Department of Public Works. All I want to know, either from the President of the Treasury Board or from the Minister of Public Works, is what happened to the rugs, and why can't we have them back? It is my guess somebody took them home.

An hon. Member: Prove it.

Mr. Peters: I want them brought back.

What I am mainly interested in with respect to this supplementary estimate is why provision is not made for a new federal building in my riding at the Earlton airport. The Prime Minister came into that area last summer, and gave an indication to the people there that he was surprised that the airport was operating with pre-war facilities.

An hon. Member: Which war?

Mr. Peters: In Northern Ontario we flew off water most of the time during the first World War, so the facilities must be pre-Second World War. Good airport facilities have been built at Val d'Or and Rouyn. I ask the minister to give serious consideration to replacing the building at Earlton, which is obviously obsolete.

As I have said, this building was previously mentioned in supplementary estimates, but does not appear in this estimate. It also appeared on several occasions in the main estimates. I believe a terminal should be erected there such as was built at Rouyn. Rouyn has a municipal airport. The Department of Transport owns the airport at Earlton, and a new building could house both radio technicians and weather technicians, as well as other facilities operated by the federal government. I make the plea that the minister discuss this with the Prime Minister who at least has had the opportunity to be there. I believe this is a reasonable request as I have already waited for 15 years. I think the people of that area should have a similar service to that being provided on other routes. It seems very odd to fly from a nice airport in Montreal to Ottawa, Val d'Or, Rouyn and then come to the archaic facility at Earlton, and on to the good facilities at North Bay, all on the same route.

I hope that the minister will give consideration to this minor expenditure which would provide a facility which is badly needed already, and will be more so in the future since that airport is now servicing three airlines and a very large flying club.

[Translation]

Mr. Fortin: Mr. Chairman, this is too good an opportunity to miss. On several occasions since I became a member of this House, I have asked the Minister of Public Works (Mr. Dubé) to look into the matter of retaining walls along the St. Lawrence river. Either I did not get answers or they were in the negative, that is they did not mean a thing. I am surprised about this because we often get more co-operation from other departments. Finally, I did get excellent co-operation from this department through its Victoriaville office.

The St. Lawrence contains unheard of wealth. It is the largest inland waterway of the world and it flows along the constituency of Lotbinière as well as others on both shores. I am sure my Quebec colleagues recognize the importance of this situation.

Quite some time ago, the federal government would agree to build retaining walls, piers and harbours, but despite the legitimate representations made by municipalities, by the people of these areas and hon. members —regardless of party—nothing has been done in recent years.

Mr. Chairman, the primary consequence is an obvious danger of erosion along the St. Lawrence, specially on the south shore in the Lotbinière area. Along the St. Lawrence the land is constantly eaten away by tides and the passing of ocean liners, in the narrowest straits of the river, notwithstanding the content of the department's studies.

And through you, Mr. Chairman, I would tell the minister on the occasion of the budget debate that it would be extremely important for himself as for Canadians that he commit himself to review his department policy to earmark a portion of the credits granted by the House to protect a natural resource such as the St. Lawrence River.

I do not quite understand why at a time the federal government invested several thousand dollars to build wharves and retaining walls whereas today it allows to be destroyed what was built and is not even prepared to study the dossiers.

Mr. Matte: Mr. Chairman, my colleague mentioned the south shore of the St. Lawrence River and as my constituency is located on the north shore, we have similar problems.

I have been trying for five years to have the minister understand that the standards which have been adopted when the retaining walls were built are inadequate and nothing is more astonishing not to say insulting for the St. Lawrence riverside dwellers than to be told: The standards are not met. The shipping channel is over 3,000 feet away and we cannot undertake this responsibility.

They completely disregard the concrete fact that there are dwelling along the river. Behind those dwellings, there used to be 100-foot backyards but one day the owners woke up and saw the river under the veranda! Considerable damages are made to properties by landslides. More time should be devoted to study this problem.

In some places and among others at Sainte-Marthe du Cap-de-la-Madeleine and at Champlain, Highway 2, which is only a few feet from the river, will eventually be damaged. Why wait then for disastrous damage to happen before changing standards which, in my opinion, are inadequate. They are the more so since statistics show that, until 1967, all retaining walls built along the river were entirely paid for by the federal government. Since 1967, it has been decided that the standards would be changed. I do not know what happened in the course of one year that the situation was so radically changed.

There have been expensive investigations made during the last two years. I think a few million dollars were spent for an investigation into this matter and retaining walls would have cost about the same amount. Then, let us put an end to investigations.

Whether the minister likes it or not, damages are being caused by navigation. We must now take into account that navigation is going on all year round, even in winter. Therefore the movement of ice resulting from the maintenance of the river, even in winter, is increasingly eroding riparian land. In my opinion, navigation is always indirectly responsible for most of the damages.

In fact, Mr. Chairman, how could one explain for instance the complete uprooting of trees which had grown for over a hundred years on the shores? If those trees could grow for 100 years, it means that nothing stopped them from growing. So why are they gone today? It is because of year-round navigation, and I think that problem is one the minister should attempt to solve since spring is already here and it is the best time to assess the damage. The minister should therefore send people down to size up the situation, review the standards of his department and do justice to those who live along the St. Lawrence River and are unable to remedy that situation themselves.

And when they are told that 75 per cent of the damages could be paid when they total $200,000, for example, even a contribution of 25 per cent is prohibitive for the riverain owners in the municipalities of my riding, and none of them would be in a position to pay $50,000 to have their property reinforced.

The minister should realize that immediate steps are necessary in order to change those standards.

Mr. Dubé: Mr. Chairman, may I be permitted to say a few words in reply to the recommendations, representations and suggestions made by the three hon. members who have just spoken.

In the case of the representations made by the hon. member for Timiskaming (Mr. Peters) with regard to rooms 601 and 602 of the central building, as you pointed out yourself, Mr. Chairman, I think that this question comes under the jurisdiction of the administration of the House of Commons rather than the Department of Public Works. Nevertheless, in compliance with the wish of the hon. member, I will try to find out who ever thought of putting a green carpet in a blue room, or a blue carpet in a green room, and I can assure him that as far as the old Indian carpet is concerned, it is not the Minister of Public Works who brought it home because his wife would not allow it.

As for the second representation, I understand it is about a terminal or some other building for an airport in his constituency; I must say that the airport problem does not fall under the jurisdiction of the Department of Public Works but under the jurisdiction of the Department of Transport. However I am sure that my colleague the Minister of Transport (Mr. Marchand) will, while reading Hansard as he does every day, take notice of the very interesting representations made by the hon. member for Timiskaming and will see to it that he gets justice, especially if it is an airport which has already been visited by the right hon. Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau).

As for the hon. members for Lotbinière (Mr. Fortin) and Champlain (Mr. Matte), they dealt with erosion and retaining walls along the shores of the St. Lawrence river. The position of the government in this regard is quite clear: when erosion results from navigation and marine works, we assume full responsibility and build retaining walls; when it results from natural erosion, that is, ice, floods, the causes are natural: the responsibility is not ours but that of the province or the individual, whether it concerns his property, his home or his cottage.

Still, if those two hon. members know of specific cases which really fall within the responsibility of my department, I shall be eager to have retaining walls built where they are needed.

Mr. Fortin: Would the hon. minister allow me a question?

The Deputy Chairman: The hon. member for Lotbinière on a question.

Mr. Fortin: I thank the hon. minister for his courtesy towards us and his readiness to reply. I appreciate this and want to express it sincerely.

He is no doubt aware of the many cases we have discussed concerning retaining walls in some municipalities, for the protection of a national highway, as the hon. member for Champlain indicated on the north shore. However, the hon. minister was kind enough to send people for a field survey with tide-gaugers in order to establish whether this erosion is the effect of tides or of oceanic currents. According to his department's standards, the minister had to give a negative reply. My question is as follows: Since in any case, as he and I both know, the province of Quebec will take no action for the preservation of this unparalleled resource, and since private interests, as the hon. member for Champlain indicated, cannot afford to deal with the problem, would the hon. minister consider a review of standards in order to enable the federal government to assist in rebuilding walls the government itself built a few years ago?

Mr. Dubé: Mr. Chairman, we are constantly reviewing the works for which we are somewhat responsible, and I take note of the representations of the hon. member. I can assure him that we shall consider what he has just outlined.

The Deputy Chairman: Will this conclude consideration of votes concerning the Department of Public Works?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

The Deputy Chairman: The committee will now proceed to the consideration of votes concerning the Department of Regional Economic Expansion, that is votes 31a and 32a, as well as vote 35a concerning the Cape Breton Development Corporation.

[English]

Is it agreed that the committee has completed consideration of these votes?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

The Deputy Chairman: Shall we move on to the next item?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

The Deputy Chairman: The committee will now proceed to the consideration of Votes 15a and 35a relating to Secretary of State.

Some hon. Members: Carried.

The Deputy Chairman: We will also consider Vote 90a, relating to the National Museums of Canada.

Some hon. Members: Carried.

The Deputy Chairman: Is this agreed?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

The Deputy Chairman: Shall we proceed to the consideration of the next votes?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

[Translation]

The Deputy Chairman: We will now proceed with consideration of vote 10a concerning the Department of Supplies and Services. Is this agreed to?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

[Mr. Fortin.]

The Deputy Chairman: The committee will now consider votes concerning the Department of Transport, namely votes 65a, 85a, 90a, L110a and L115a.

[English]

Mr. Harney: Mr. Chairman, I wonder if I could make a few remarks under the rubric of this aspect of the estimates. I hope I can say all I wish to say at one time, so that I do not have to proceed through the various pilotage authorities one by one. There are two matters which interest me, and I will be brief. One of them has to do with the Severn River, in Ontario. It is a navigable river. For many years mooring points for pleasure craft have been established on the Severn River. They were used extensively by pleasure boaters, being offered as a free service to the boating fraternity. On certain locations of the Severn River, particularly in the west end, mooring points have been closed for the past several years and many boaters have had to use privately operated marinas in the area. I do not see the minister present. Perhaps his parliamentary secretary is here. The question I wish to ask very simply is whether it is the policy of the ministry of transport to close down these public mooring points.

My other question is this: has the ministry of transport or any related federal authority entered into any kind of agreement with the Ontario Department of Lands and Forests with regard to these mooring points? I think the question is relatively important, because the boating fraternity in the area is increasing. Many more people are trying to and wanting to use these facilities, but at the same time they are finding it rather awkward to be forced into the not-so-tender embraces of the private operators of marinas. I trust that the Minister of Public Works was correct when he noted that the Minister of Transport pays religious attention to Hansard. As he is not here perhaps, in his reading, he may pay attention to my question and provide us with an answer.

An hon. Member: Where is he?

Mr. Harney: I expect he is coming. The second matter I wish to raise, and I am ready to be ruled out of order on the ground that I am not speaking to the correct estimate, has to do with the Richelieu River in Quebec. I bring up this matter under the rubric of the Department of Transport estimates because, until recently, the Chambly Canal, part of the canal works connected with the Richelieu River, was under the direction of the ministry of transport. I am not sure if there has been any change during the past couple of years in the department which has responsibility for the canal. I say that because the canal has stopped being, in any real sense of the word, a commercial canal and is now almost totally devoted to pleasure needs. The point I want to make is this: during the past few years flooding of the Richelieu River in the region above St. Johns, Quebec, has become serious and it is quite likely that this coming spring the flooding will be worse than that which occurred last spring.

• (1640)

We are told by the experts that the level of Lake Champlain in the United States, a lake which as many hon. members know flows out through the Richelieu River, is 19 inches above normal for this time of year. There was flooding last year and there will certainly be flooding this year. This matter relates to this or a related ministry, because over the last couple of years there have been some very serious changes to the shape of the Richelieu River at St. Johns, Quebec. St. Johns is the point where the river has the first rapid. This is the point where the river and lake levels are effectively controlled. In the past couple of years, there has been a widening of the canal at St. Johns and a consequent narrowing of the river. Therefore, even normal flows of water from Lake Champlain would be restricted. This year they are expecting higher than normal flows of water.

It is important to note that, along with the widening of the canal which has brought about a considerable change in the size of it and the consequent narrowing of the river, there has been no dredging of the Richelieu River below St. Johns in the rapids section since 1942. Dredging should be carried out quite regularly in order to keep the river level below the point where it would cause problems in the spring. I feel that all of these factors combine to increase the natural level of the lake and river waters, but the widening of the canal and the subsequent narrowing of the river as well as the failure to dredge the river will combine to cause very, very serious flooding this spring. Possibly the Minister of Transport or the Minister of Public Works, if he has any jurisdiction over the projects going on there, could comment on whatever steps might be taken to obviate this flooding danger.

Mr. Benjamin: Mr. Chairman, I want to say something on the Department of Transport estimates, Vote 115a, with regard to the Pacific Pilotage Authority. I do not know if there is a minister present who can answer some questions that are very current concerning that body.

Mr. Nielsen: None of them can.

Mr. Benjamin: If not, I hope this is not an indication that the treasury benches are not all that concerned about whether the supplementary estimates are passed tonight. However, I will make my remarks in the hope that somebody will draw them to the attention of the Minister of Transport and possibly he might reply at eight o'clock.

At the moment we are involved in a work stoppage or a failure to renew contracts with the B.C. Coast Pilots Association on the Pacific coast. The Pacific Pilotage Authority reports directly to the Minister of Transport. I notice in the supplementary estimate an additional $24,000 for the Pacific Pilotage Authority for a deficit of the authority occurring between January 1 and the end of March this year. Is that $24,000 allotted in anticipation of any additional cost to the authority that may result from a settlement between the pilotage authority and the B.C. Coast Pilots Limited? If it is, we would like to know. If not, if it is just for the expected deficit from normal operations, we would also like to know.

We would like to know if the minister is prepared, either under supplementary estimates, in the new estimates or in the new budget, to provide additional funds to the Pacific Pilotage Authority so that they can be in a better position to arrive at a settlement with the B.C. Coast Pilots Association which, by the way, is not a union but a limited company. The negotiations are between two companies, so to speak.

I understand that the Department of Transport is responsible for some of the costs incurred by the Pacific Pilotage Authority and that if some of the demands of the B.C. Coast Pilots Association were met expenditures would be required by the Department of Transport for safety equipment. I presume that includes navigation devices. Some of these demands are related to working conditions, which I take it come under the purview of the Minister of Transport. If this item involves additional expenditures by the Pacific Pilotage Authority, were they to meet the demands of the B.C. Coast Pilots Association? If that is so, it is incumbent upon the Minister of Transport to acknowledge this and to say what additional measures his department is prepared to take or what additional funding he is prepared to provide to the Pacific Pilotage Authority so that that authority can negotiate with the B.C. Coast Pilots Limited on a much more positive and constructive basis then they have been able to do at present. It would be good if the minister would provide that information this evening, as it might help a settlement to be reached much more quickly on the Pacific coast. I am not referring to any kind of pay raise, implied, asked for or offered by either side in the dispute. That is between them.

I do not believe the ministry of transport is very much involved in that area, although it may be. In any event, I think it would be useful if the minister could at least answer some of these inquiries so that the negotiating parties at the other end of the country might be able to reach a settlement that much sooner. Unless they do, a great number of commodities, particularly in constituencies in the four western provinces and possibly right across Canada, may be affected. In my case, and in the case of my colleagues from Saskatchewan, it would affect cargoes of grain. Therefore, we are anxious that these two parties agree to settle very quickly.

During the oral question period on two or three different dates, we asked the minister questions in this regard. As far as I am aware, he has not provided any answers that indicate what measures he is prepared to take to further fund the Pacific Pilotage Authority, as well as what responsibilities the Department of Transport would have, in what areas and what kinds of money. Surely, it is time for the minister to give us those answers, if for no other reason than to give the two parties in the dispute something more on which to negotiate and settle their disagreement.

Mr. Knight: Mr. Chairman, I have refrained to a considerable degree from discussing the estimates. However, in view of the fact that the estimates of the Department of Transport relate to the Pacific Pilotage Authority, and in view of the particular situation which we face today, I find it appalling that neither the Minister of Transport nor his parliamentary secretary are here. Possibly the government whip or government House leader could tell us where they are at this time. We would like them to answer some questions relating to their estimates. I presume they feel they are important and would like to answer the questions of opposition members relating to the two estimates. If the minister cannot be with us, where is the hon.

member for St. Boniface? There has been a withdrawal of the services by the pilots on the west coast.

The Chairman: Order, please. The hon. member for Esquimalt-Saanich.

• (1650)

Mr. Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich): On a point of order, Mr. Chairman. If I might intervene at this moment, I should like to say that I have reliable information that the pilots went back to work voluntarily this morning. I think they are to be commended for doing so. Negotiations, I understand, are still in progress. In these circumstances, I think the hon. member's last comment ought to be changed.

Mr. Knight: The information conveyed by the hon. member in the back row is appreciated. I wish we could get some answers like that from ministers or from parliamentary secretaries. Maybe the Leader of the Opposition will give the hon. member a post as minister of labour or minister of transport in certain circumstances. I hope the hon. member for Vegreville is not listening to me.

Negotiations are still in progress, he tells us. In this situation, the questions we are asking are still open questions. We want to know what action is being taken by the pilotage authority to deal with points at issue in the negotiations involving safety precautions when moving ships in and out of harbour. If the minister could give us this information, we might be inclined to look more favourably on these estimates.

Mr. Drury: Mr. Chairman, the Minister of Transport had planned to be here this afternoon but, I regret to say, he has gone to the hospital for an x-ray instead. I hope his absence will be forgiven.

The hon. member for Scarborough West is correct in assuming that the Chambly Canal no longer comes under the jurisdiction of the Department of Transport, but it comes under the jurisdiction of the Department of Northern Affairs. I shall be glad to convey to the minister concerned his representations with respect to flooding and steps which might be taken to alleviate this situation. In this case, I think the appropriate minister would be the Minister of Public Works rather than the Minister of Transport. The Minister of Public Works has already heard the representations, and I believe he will take them under consideration.

With regard to the representations made by the hon. member for Scarborough West—

Mr. Harney: Excuse me, Regina-Lake Centre.

Mr. Drury: Regina-Lake Centre, I am sorry. I am sure he will welcome the good news that the pilots are back at work. I would not think that in the midst of negotiations between two semi-public bodies he would wish the government to declare its negotiating position outside of the actual negotiations. As long as negotiations are proceeding, and as long as there is no interruption of work, I think he would agree that it would be unhelpful for the government to declare, if you like, its final negotiating position.

[Mr. Knight.]

Mr. Benjamin: I agree, Mr. Chairman, that to intervene in any manner in the midst of any negotiations—

The Chairman: Order. Would the hon. member resume his seat? The Chair made the point yesterday that contributions to the debate are restricted to one per member on any one item of business. So, perhaps the hon. member could make his point by way of a question.

Mr. Benjamin: I am sorry. I meant to say it was a question I intended to ask. My remark was a preliminary one. I should like to know whether the minister could tell us this: has the Minister of Transport intimated in an indirect manner, if not on the floor of the House, to the pilotage authority that the additional funds which are needed to enable the authority to arrive at a settlement will be available? I am under the impression that the hands of the authority are tied because of a lack of assurance that funds will be forthcoming to the authority on the basis of which a settlement could be reached. Has any kind of assurance of the kind I have in mind been given?

Mr. Drury: I believe the minister has been in communication more or less continuously with the pilotage authority.

Mr. Peters: I should like to ask a brief question on behalf of the hon. member for Yukon who has limited himself. I am aware of his interest in this item because he has taken part in discussions on a number of occasions having to do with the Northern Transportation Act. There is an estimate here which originally amounted to $1 million. It has now been raised to $4 million and, on behalf of the hon. member for Yukon, I would like to know what facilities are provided in return for this amount of money.

Mr. Nielsen: Since the hon. member was not present in the committee at the time this item was fully discussed he cannot be aware that this sum, as the minister explained, was for the purchase of new barges to accommodate the great influx of freight into the Mackenzie to cope with the rapidly increasing oil and gas exploration work. This is an item with which I and the hon. member for Northwest Territories, I believe, would fully agree.

The Chairman: Does this complete the discussion on the five items under the Department of Transport?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

The Chairman: The next item is Treasury Board Vote 5A.

Mr. Nielsen: Again, Mr. Chairman, in the interest of getting this item through, we intend to restrict ourselves from participation at any length in the debate, bearing in mind that there will be another opportunity to discuss these matters when the main estimates go to committee. We do, however, have serious reservations about this item, particularly with reference to the abuse of the contingency fund which is rapidly getting more and more out of hand. But we shall reserve our observations on that matter for another occasion.

Mr. Peters: I agree with the hon. member for Yukon that the contingency fund has grown immensely over the years and that it has obviously been augmented.

This is the question I wish to ask the President of the Treasury Board. Yesterday, I got into trouble with one of my confrères about what was covered by one of the votes under discussion—a vote in connection with which the Appropriation Act was used. I find that similar circumstances arise in connection with a dollar item on page 11 of the schedule—the vote relating to the Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation. Turning to item 35a on page eight, we see that the Cape Breton Development Corporation estimate has been increased by $5 million, $4 million of which was provided through the Appropriation Act. My own impression is that the procedure would be far simpler to understand were some regular form adopted in all cases where the Appropriation Act is used.

• (1700)

In the matter I was involved in yesterday, we were not talking about training at all but rather operating expenses for the manpower department. The hon. member for Hamilton West took me to task for being opposed to on-the-job training, which may or may not have had anything to do with the supplementary estimate or with the Appropriation Act since reference is also made to section 5 of the statute itself.

Certainly, I am confused when these statutory items are not separated from the others, such as the operating expenses in the supplementary estimates and the items that arise as a result of a section of a statute. It seems to me that in this bill we have done three things. We have used the Appropriation Act for the purpose of incorporating a $1 item; we have also used it in respect of the full amount requested in the supplementary estimate; and we have used it as part of a supplementary estimate. I am aware, however, of the problem created by the contingency fund.

Today the minister said that he was willing to consider making the supplementary estimates more understandable. I suggest that not only new members but also established members are confused when use is made of the Appropriation Act, statutory items and the section of an act, and then a supplementary estimate is used in its pure sense, none of which can be distinguished either upon examination of the supplementary estimates or the regular estimates, or even the bill itself.

Mr. Drury: Mr. Chairman, the hon. member has asked a rather technical question, and with his agreement I should like to study the representation he has made. I will provide him privately with an answer later on.

Mr. Nielsen: Mr. Chairman, it is now five o'clock—as a matter of fact it is five minutes after five—and by pure coincidence the private member's bill coming forward for discussion today is the one standing in my name on the order paper. I should like to suggest to the committee that we pass this item under treasury board and the items under urban affairs and veterans affairs, which are the only ones left, and pass all stages of this bill without debate. If that is not acceptable, I suggest we go on with private members' hour and resume the debate; but I hope that the former suggestion is acceptable.

Mr. Benjamin: Mr. Chairman, it is certainly acceptable to me, provided I can ask one question of the President of the Treasury Board regarding his estimate. I promise I will not make a speech; I will simply ask a question.

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

The Chairman: The hon. member for Regina-Lake Centre.

Mr. Benjamin: Mr. Chairman, may I ask the President of the Treasury Board about a matter that is of concern to the Secretary of State having to do with the grant for arts and culture. Approval of grants for a number of museums and art galleries were given by the Secretary of State's department in October and November last. May I specifically mention the Norman Mackenzie Art Gallery in the city of Regina which has still not received its grant and is awaiting approval of treasury board. The museum is in a very difficult position at the moment owing to the delay in authorizing the grant. I should like to ask the minister whether action is being taken and what is holding up the grant. Does the Secretary of State's department approve grants too easily and too readily? Why is it necessary for this length of time to elapse before approval is given by the President of the Treasury Board? People who have been waiting for months now are finding themselves in a very difficult situation.

Mr. Drury: Mr. Chairman, I regret to say that I am not aware of the circumstances surrounding this particular museum, but I shall be glad to make inquiries and let the hon. gentleman know.

Mr. Harney: Mr. Chairman, if the proposal is that we pass the remainder of the items without debate, I would have to put in a reservation. I have been waiting for some time to make some comment on the estimates of the Minister of State for Urban Affairs.

The Chairman: Order. It being five o'clock it is my duty to leave the chair in order to permit the House to proceed to the consideration of private members' business, in accordance with section (4) of Standing Order 15.

Progress reported.

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

SUBJECT MATTER OF QUESTIONS TO BE DEBATED

Mr. Deputy Speaker: It is my duty, pursuant to Standing Order 40, to inform the House that the questions to be raised tonight at the time of adjournment are as follows: the hon. member for Malpeque (Mr. MacLean)—Finance—Meeting of federal and provincial finance ministers—Discussion of means to relieve tax burden on rural residents; the hon. member for Saskatoon-Biggar (Mr. Gleave)—Grain—Reported advice by Minister of Agriculture to farmers on amount of wheat that should be planted; the hon. member for Fraser Valley West (Mr. Rose)—Canadian Broadcasting Corporation—Opposition of Canadian Teachers Federation to transfer of rights to film and videotape to private company.

It being five o'clock the House will now proceed to the consideration of private members' business, as listed on today's order paper, namely public bills.

PRIVATE MEMBERS' PUBLIC BILLS

BRITISH NORTH AMERICA ACTS, 1867 TO 1965

AMENDMENT TO PROVIDE SENATE REPRESENTATION FOR YUKON AND NORTHWEST TERRITORIES

Mr. Erik Nielsen (Yukon) moved that Bill C-12, to amend the British North America Acts, 1867 to 1965 (Yukon and Northwest Territories Senate representation) be read the second time and referred to the Standing Committee on Justice and Legal Affairs.

He said: Mr. Speaker, it might be said that my motivation for placing the bill on the order paper arises from the fact that I have spent some 16 years in this place and I am, perhaps, getting a little tired of it and looking forward to a greener and more casual pasture. But really this is not the motivation for the bill. All Canadians represented by members here, save a few, are represented in the Parliament of Canada. Two exceptions to this full representation are the Northwest Territories and the Yukon. It may come as no surprise to some of the older members of this House that this is the case. I am sure quite a number of the newer members here will be quite surprised to hear that this area of Canada, over 40 per cent of the area of the country, and all of those citizens who live north of the 60th parallel, have no representative in parliament as a whole. They have a member in this place. The seat for the Northwest Territories was established in 1949 by a change to the act and, of course, the seat for the Yukon has existed since 1903. From then, I may add, until 1949 one member represented the whole of that vast 1,600,000 square miles.

I want to bring to the attention of hon. members that the joint Senate and Commons committee on the constitution, when it completed its work, recommended that there should be Senate representation for each of these two northern territories. I would hope this alone would cause members to agree to send the bill to committee for, after all, that is all that is being asked on second reading, that the bill be sent to the committee for consideration. Undoubtedly, the committee would go into the recommendations of the joint Senate-Commons committee which held hearings throughout the Yukon and Northwest Territories and, after very careful consideration, came up with the recommendation that indeed these two northern territories should have Senate representation in order to be fully represented in parliament, not merely in this chamber.

The bill does nothing to affect any Senate representation in any other province in Canada. It retains that Senate representation intact. All it does is add two members to the Senate, making a total of 104, and gives to the Yukon a senator and to the Northwest Territories a senator.

I could go on at great length about government reform and all its aspects in the Yukon and Northwest Territories; reform that is so urgent and spoken of by the minister during the last campaign in real terms of promises of things that would happen when we came back. I shall not do that but will maintain my usual non-partisan approach to matters such as this in the hope that we can get the same kind of co-operation from members opposite that we have shown them over the last several days in getting their estimates and supply bill through. All we ask on this side is that the bill be given second reading and sent to the committee where all its aspects can be examined.

Mr. Len Marchand (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to participate in this debate on Bill C-12, which I suppose is really an act to amend the British North America Act to provide Senate representation for the Yukon and the Northwest Territories. I should like to commend the hon. member for introducing this bill. I, personally, support the measure but, as a Canadian from western Canada, I do not feel the hon. member has gone far enough in his proposals.

Mr. Nielsen: Do you want half a dozen?

Mr. Marchand (Kamloops-Caribou): I do not feel this bill gets to the root of the problem of Senate representation, and I am speaking now of the need to redistribute the seats in the Senate to more accurately reflect the regions of Canada. Western Canada, especially the province of British Columbia, in terms of numbers is under-represented in the Senate. To put it mildly, this is an understatement. The facts show that the proportion of Senate power accorded to my home province is the lowest in the nation. Another glaring discrepancy is that the Prairie provinces, with a proportion twice that of the Atlantic region, have only slightly better than half the number of senators of the Atlantic region.

For the purpose of Senate representation, the west in 1915 was considered as one unit. While the four western provinces share many concerns, even in 1915 it could not be said that the whole of the west was one economic unit. It is even less so today. Furthermore, since 1915 the economic power of the west has dramatically increased. There is a real need for reform to correct—

Mr. Nielsen: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. The bill has nothing whatever to do with the Senate except to provide for representation for the Yukon and Northwest Territories. It has nothing to do with the subject to which the hon. member is referring.

Mr. Marchand (Kamloops-Cariboo): Mr. Speaker, this bill which deals with the Senate is such that I should be permitted to range a little wider than the hon. member may want. There is a real need for reform to correct the unjust imbalance of Senate representation so that the distribution of Senate power will be fair and accurate.

Mr. Nielsen: Mr. Speaker, I must insist on a ruling on the point of order I raised because the bill itself—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. I am prepared to make a ruling. Does the hon. member for Windsor-Walkerville (Mr. MacGuigan) wish to make a contribution to the point of order?

Mr. MacGuigan: Yes, Mr. Speaker, I would sustain the hon. member for Kamloops-Cariboo (Mr. Marchand). Obviously, his remarks are necessary in order to consider the balance of power in the Senate. I support the arguments the hon. member has been advancing and feel they are quite in order.

An hon. Member: They are just as relevant as the Senate is.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. I would think the hon. member is in order.

Mr. Nielsen: Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. Would the hon. member for Yukon (Mr. Nielsen) please resume his seat. I think the hon. member is clearly in order. For example, it would be in order for him to move some amendment to the clause under consideration to support the points he is making, and the Chair cannot anticipate that he will not do so. I would ask the hon. member to continue.

Mr. Nielsen: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker. It might have been helpful to the debate and to your decision had you heard me, having heard the hon. member on the other side on this point of order.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I thought the hon. member had made his point. Indeed, he raised the point of order and then sat down. I recognize the hon. member for Kamloops-Cariboo.

Mr. Marchand (Kamloops-Cariboo): Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I should like now to address a few remarks to the fundamental question of Senate reform. At the outset, I think it is fair to say that many Canadians lack faith in the Senate as an institution. I am certain that many members of the NDP would like to see the Senate abolished. Personally, I have a very high regard for our distinguished senators, but this high regard does not necessarily carry over to the institution itself. I do not favour abolition of the Senate, but I would like to see it reformed and made more functional. The role of the Senate must be made more effective and more in tune with the needs of the democratic process in Canada.

In recent years, the Senate has taken the initiatives toward making its role in parliament more effective. Hon. members in the other place are to be commended for this action. They have undertaken a number of impressive studies into particular areas of policy, and resulting Senate reports have been both highly competent and thorough. A fair amount of legislative action has also resulted. I should like to mention a few examples including Senator Croll's report on poverty in Canada, Senator Lamontagne's report on science policy, and Senator Davey's report on the media in Canada.

In addition, senators have joined with members of parliament on special joint committees to study such questions as divorce reform and the constitution of Canada. It was my privilege to serve on the constitution committee. I look forward to increased initiatives of this kind emanating from the Senate. I feel the Senate must involve itself more and more in detailed investigation of important questions facing the Canadian nation.

My colleague, the hon. member for Louis-Hébert (Mrs. Morin) made a very concise speech calling for reform of the Senate in the recent debate on Bill C-10 which, it it had passed, would have effectively abolished the Senate. I wish to lend my support to the reforms my colleague suggested, and I would also call to the attention of hon. members the recommendations in the final report of the constitution committee in regard to the Senate. I am hopeful that the Senate, with the full and active support of our eminent contingent of senators from British Columbia, will continue its welcome moves toward greater activity and greater reform.

I must reiterate my very strong feelings that none of these reforms can succeed until the Senate is truly representative of the regions of Canada. The constitution committee made a series of recommendations to achieve this most important goal. The committee recommended that the number of Senate seats be increased to 130, 28 more than there are in the present Senate. The committee recommended that central and eastern Canada maintain their representation at the present level, while western representation should be increased to 12 members from each of the four western provinces. The Yukon Territory and Northwest Territories should have two Senate seats each under the plan the committee felt would best correct the inequities of Senate representation. I do not think that an increase in Senate seats of that magnitude is warranted to solve the distribution problem.

During the course of the deliberations of that committee, my colleague, the former member for New Westminster, and I concurred in a proposal for redistribution of the Senate. I would like to put this proposal forward today for the consideration of all hon. members.

The first thing about the current situation in the Senate, which really drove home to us the inequitable distribution of seats today, is the fact that Ontario and Quebec have 24 Senators each, almost half the entire representation in the Senate. In an institution which is supposed to reflect the diversity of our great nation, this seems to be a most peculiar and unwarranted situation in terms of present day conditions.

It has been a major complaint, and in many instances a fully justifiable one, from western Canada that the interests of central Canada are protected over and above those of the rest of Canada. I do not fully subscribe to this view but I do feel that the inequitable distribution of the Senate adds symbolic fire to the flames of what has come to be known as western alienation.

Senate Representation

I propose today that consideration be given to reducing the number of Senators from Ontario and Quebec to 20 from the present 24 as an important first step toward redistribution of the Senate. Then, there is the gross imbalance caused by the over-representation of the Atlantic provinces in the Senate. I have very great reservations about the province of Prince Edward Island having four seats in the Senate when its total population is somewhat similar to my own riding of Kamloops-Cariboo. British Columbia, with a population more than 20 times as great as that of Prince Edward Island, has only two Senators more than the island province. But despite my reservations, I suppose full marks must be given to the Fathers of Confederation from Prince Edward Island for having the wisdom and the foresight to have this entrenched in the British North America Act as part of their conditions for union with Canada in 1873. For obvious reasons, I propose that the present level of representation of Atlantic Canada in the Senate be maintained for each of the four provinces of the region.

I should now like to discuss the crux of the problem of distribution of Senate Representation. In order to redress the inequities of western Senate representation, I suggest that each of the four western provinces have their representation increased to 10 Senators and that, in line with the spirit of Bill C-12, one seat each be provided for the Yukon Territory and the Northwest Territories.

These proposals would bring the total number of Senate seats to 112, 10 more than at present. It would correct the unjust proportion that the current situation perpetuates. And, with a smaller Senate than that recommended by the Constitution Committee, the same purpose is served as that which was sought by the committee in its recommendations to cure the problem of Senate distribution. Western Canada and the north are the keys to the future of this nation. I commend to all hon. members the need to recognize that reality. Let us make the Senate truly representative of the great regions which make up Canada. When we consider the role of the Senate, let us look to the future, not to the failings and inadequacies of the past.

Mr. Wally Firth (Northwest Territories): Mr. Speaker, at this time I should like to make a few comments on the bill introduced by the hon. member for Yukon (Mr. Nielsen). I wish to commend the hon. member for expressing his concern regarding more representation for the north. In particular, I am concerned about more members for the Northwest Territories. In making my point, I wish to refer to some of the difficulties members of the north experience in representing that very large part of Canada. I might mention that it is most important, not only for the north but for all of Canada, that the north have more representation because at this time we have only a partially elected and partially appointed legislature for the Northwest Territories. In its present stage, I consider it to be somewhat like a colonial type of government. Within the next few months and the next few years some very important decisions will be made which will affect the native people of the Northwest Territories.

Decisions regarding natural resources and so on in the north are most important to all of Canada. I think wise decisions can be made only if there is sufficient representation from the Northwest Territories and the Yukon Territory. Some of the problems members from the north face are centred around transportation and communication. It is very difficult for the members from that area to cover that part of the world adequately. For example, a member going from Yellowknife in the Northwest Territories to, say, Frobisher Bay would have to travel about 6,000 miles. This would involve a journey of two days and an expense of $650. The cost of flying in a small aircraft is something in the order of one dollar a mile. Telephone service, where available, is something in the order of one dollar a minute. Therefore, the cost of transportation and communication is very high. The area of the Northwest Territories, which involves 1½ million square miles, makes it very difficult for one person to represent all that part of the world.

The formula of representation by population does not allow sufficient representation for the Northwest Territories. Although there are only approximately 40,000 people in that part of the country, the diversity of the way of life of the several peoples in that part is shown by the fact that the languages spoken are English, French, Louchoux, Dog Rib, Slovey, Chipewyan and in some areas three or four of the major Eskimo dialects. A large proportion of the population is unable to either read or write. This, again adds to the difficulty in respect of representing that area. The idea that perhaps we should have Senators representing the Northwest Territories is an idea I cannot accept, because I do not believe appointed people are representative.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Firth: Therefore, I suggest the important thing for the Northwest Territories and the Yukon Territory is more representation in this House and not in the other house. I suggest that the government pay some heed to the idea of having an ombudsman perhaps to represent the Yukon Territory and the Northwest Territories because of the many problems which are faced by the people up there. These people have many problems in respect of forms, the courts and so on. They have a difficult time. As I have said, I suggest the government pay some heed to this suggestion and that the hon. member for Yukon should reconsider his position and perhaps ask for more representation here in this House.

• (1730)

Miss Flora MacDonald (Kingston and The Islands): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to have the opportunity to support this measure for increased representation in parliament from the Yukon and Northwest Territories. I am sorry that the Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development (Mr. Marchand) could not see fit to endorse the bill as it stands as a prerequisite to his efforts toward Senate reform.

Because of the responsibility respecting Indian affairs and northern development which I have been given in caucus, I have been particularly concerned with problems of the north, the pros and cons of rushing resources into development and the way developers and conservationalists are striving to work together in this area rather than as protagonists. They realize that conservation and development must go hand in hand in the north. There are few places in southern Canada where such an approach has been tried, let alone carried out.

I have met with northern native leaders and believe, as their struggles for equality become more intense, that it is only just that there should be more people in parliament who know their feelings, who represent those huge areas, who are familiar with the problems, who come from that part of Canada which too many people consider to be the periphery and, therefore, too far away to be concerned about.

I have been fortunate enough to have travelled in both the Yukon and Northwest Territories, those remote but very beautiful parts of Canada. It is indeed difficult to appreciate the magnitude of our north. It has always been of interest to me to know that if we were to travel as far south as we can travel north, we would be well into South America. We can appreciate this if we ever have the opportunity to visit Frobisher, Resolute, Cambridge Bay, Inuvik, Yellowknife, Whitehorse or a score of other northern places.

While in the north I felt what most northerners learn to live with, a sense of remoteness and isolation. But for all its remoteness, many of the problems of the north are remarkably similar to those of southern Canada. For too long our northern territories have been considered quaint areas of hinterland into which no one goes because of the cold. It is difficult for those of us who have not spent much time there toappreciate the feelings of long-time northerners, the feelings of the hon. member for Northwest Territories (Mr. Firth) and of the hon. member for Yukon (Mr. Nielsen).

The hon. member for Yukon first introduced this measure in 1959 shortly after he was elected to this House. Three years later, in 1962, the hon. member's bill was debated in this chamber. His reasons for urging greater representation for this area which he delineated 13 years ago stand even more firm today and are more urgent because, surely, all Canadians living above the sixtieth parallel have the right to be heard in both Houses of Parliament. While over the years there have been motions by hon. members advocating reform and even abolition of the other place, there has been little or no action. Northerners, all this while, have not had the same sort of representation as other Canadians.

When Newfoundland entered confederation in 1949, the British North America Act was amended to allow for Senate representation of that province. The Northwest Territories and the Yukon have not been accorded the same consideration. I believe that wider representation in parliament by northerners would help those of us from the south whose knowledge of the north is limited, and in many cases is minimal; it would help us to a greater understanding of this vast, rich area that we are privileged to have as part of Canada.

Late last year an organization called Federation of Natives North of Sixty brought together seven Indian, Métis and Inuit groups of the Yukon and Northwest Territories. They felt they needed a stronger voice, particulary with respect to land claims. Their particular, yet special problems as natives are compounded by living in the north. I think it would be particularly fitting if a representative of the native peoples could sit in the other place for one or both of the territories. I would like to point out that in 1971 the census figures showed that in the Northwest Territories there were 34,800 people, 6,400 Indians, 11,000 Inuit and 17,400 others, and in the Yukon there were 18,400 people, 16 per cent of whom were natives.

Southerners have learned much over the years from hon. members who have represented the Yukon and Northwest Territories in this chamber. I am firmly of the belief that our education can be enlarged and enhanced even further by giving the territories the representation they merit in parliament as a whole.

Mr. Mark MacGuigan (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Manpower and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, I believe the hon. member for Yukon (Mr. Nielsen) has done this chamber a service in bringing before it Bill C-12 which would have the effect of instituting Senate representation for the Yukon and Northwest Territories. But I regret that his interest in the debate extended only to his own words; he has not remained to hear other hon. members participate.

The joint parliamentary committee on the constitution dealt fairly extensively with this subject and I would like to draw the attention of the House to its recommendations and reasoning. Recommendation No. 71 in the report of that committee provided that the Yukon and Northwest Territories should each be entitled to representation in the Senate. That had been preceded by recommendation No. 38, dealing with the Senate itself, in which the distribution of seats in the Senate as recommended by the committee was spelled out. The recommendation of the committee was that both the Yukon and the Northwest Territories should have two seats in the Senate. It would not usually be possible for a member on this side of the House to describe the hon. member for Yukon as a piker, but in this case he has not gone so far as the recommendations of the parliamentary committee.

Turning now to the chapter in the report of the committee dealing with the constitution of the territories, I should like to refer to the comparatively brief reasoning given with respect to Senate representation for the territories. The paragraph I shall quote is the last one on page 65 of the report which reads as follows:

> In order to improve communications between Ottawa and the territories at the parliamentary level, we advocate immediate Senate representation for each of the two territories. Under the constitutional rule that a province cannot have fewer members in the Commons than in the Senate, the appointment of two Senators for each territory would lead to an increase in the number of Members of Parliament to two for each.

Perhaps this is the reason the hon. member for Yukon, not wanting company in representing his part of the world, has chosen to stay at the figure of one. Be that as it may, Mr. Speaker, I should now like to turn to the chapter in the report of the constitution committee dealing with the Senate where this matter is more fully canvassed and put into the perspective which the hon. member for Yukon attempted to prevent this House having. I will first read some of the comments of the committee at page 35 of the report as follows:

> Two regions, the Yukon and the Northwest Territories, remain without representation in the Senate. There is precedent for having senatorial representation for the territories. In 1888 the Northwest Territories were first given two Senators under the authority of a constitutional amendment of 1886. This was increased to four in 1904 prior to the acquisition of provincial status by Saskatchewan and Alberta.

I interject at this point that of course the geographical area of the territories was somewhat different before the creation of the western provinces, so that statement may be somewhat misleading. But so far as the theory is concerned, there is no more reason now why both territories should not have Senate representation than there was in this period earlier in their history. Continuing on the same page of the report of the constitutional committee I read the following statement:

Two of the most obvious deficiencies in the current distribution of seats are: (1) the disparity in representation in geographical and other terms between the western provinces and the other provinces; (2) the fact that the Yukon and the Northwest Territories, being a major part of the Canadian land mass, are not represented at all in the Senate.

As the hon. member for Kamloops-Cariboo (Mr. Marchand) has pointed out to the House, this matter cannot be considered in isolation from other changes which should be made in respect of Senate representation. For instance, I would not allow my preference for two seats for the territories, as opposed to one which the hon. member for Yukon is recommending, to stand in the way of referring this bill to committee, but I think we should recognize that in the public mind, at least in many parts of Canada, there is just as much urgency with respect to increasing representation from the west generally and not just providing representation for the territories. If this matter is to be seriously considered by this parliament and referred to a further stage for discussion and debate, it might be well to include such a provision.

The constitution committee, of which I had the privilege and honour of being joint chairman, conducted hearings across Canada. It found consistently that when people spoke about the Senate they did not want abolition, they wanted reform. They wanted a Senate which would function somewhat differently but, above all, they wanted a Senate which they felt to be more representative of the people of Canada. It seems to me that this fact is also relevant to the consideration which members of this House are giving, not collectively but individually, to the question of redistribution which is presently under the aegis of a commission.

From my discussions with many members it seems they hold the view that this House should not be based entirely on the principle of representation by population but should somehow include regional representation. I would agree with the bare minimum limitation of the "Senate rule" which protects the province of Prince Edward Island. I trust my hon. friend from Kamloops-Cariboo was not serious in suggesting that Prince Edward Island should have fewer than four Senators or four members of this House. There has to be some minimum for this very important part of Canada, the smallest province.

Surely the principle of representation in this House has to be that of representation by population, just as the principle of representation in the Senate surely has to be one of geographic or regional representation. I believe this is the principal reason for having a Senate—not for sober second thought in legislation, although this is one of the advantages. The fact of regional representation is the raison d'être for the continuation of the Senate in the Canadian political system.

This is the theme which the constitution committee heard again and again across the country and everywhere in the west. The plea was made that the west had to be more adequately represented in the Senate, that its representation should be doubled or that all provinces should have equal representation in the Senate. The committee very seriously considered this question of equal representation for the provinces—something like ten Senators for each province. I suppose this would be, by way of analogy with the American system, a feasible way of arranging representation in our Houses of Parliament. We decided to stay closer to the present distribution.

As the hon. member for Kamloops-Cariboo indicated, there was some division among members of that committee with respect to the number of seats that should be allocated to the various areas, but I think everyone agreed that the number of seats for the west should be dramatically increased.

Mr. Benjamin: Just the House of Commons.

Mr. MacGuigan: I was speaking of the Senate. If my words were understood to mean the House of Commons, I assure the hon. member for Regina-Lake Centre (Mr. Benjamin) that I did not intend to refer to this House; it is the Senate which should have its membership very greatly increased.

An hon. Member: No.

Mr. MacGuigan: I realize that the hon. member's party is not especially keen to continue the Senate at all. I would point out to them, however, that the role of the Senate relates very much to the debate we are now having in the country and may be having in future in parliament with respect to the principle of representation in this House.

Mr. Speaker, this cry came from all across the country; I do not think it is placing it too high to refer to it as such. In some places in the west it was a cry from the heart, for greater representation in the Senate. I think the answer lies in the report of the constitution committee, which recommended that the western provinces should have a total of 48 seats in the Senate and that in addition there should be two members each from the Yukon and the Northwest Territories. This would increase the total representation in the Senate to 130 members. Some members who are opposed to the Senate believe that this would be too many, but if we are to have an active and functional Senate—which I believe we have—we want one that is more representative, and it seems to me it would function better if we were to have a larger number of active Senators.

Mr. Prud'homme: Ce n'est pas possible, 130.

Mr. MacGuigan: My hon. colleague from Saint-Denis (Mr. Prud'homme), who objects to the number, was a member of the constitution committee. I do not think there was any subject which engrossed the constitution committee more than these questions concerning the Senate. It was often thought, and reported by the press, that we were deliberating about a great many other subjects, but most of our time was spent discussing the question of the Senate.

Mr. Prud'homme: And self-determination.

Mr. MacGuigan: In time taken, that was a very secondary subject.

Mr. Gilbert: Would the hon. member permit a question?

Mr. MacGuigan: Certainly, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Gilbert: Could the hon. member tell us whether the main criticism with regard to reform of the Senate was on the basis that it should be an elected rather than an appointed body? Would he agree that it should be elected rather than appointed? Would not the Yukon and the Northwest Territories have better representation if the representatives were elected rather than appointed?

Would the minister also reply to the question raised by the hon. member for Yukon (Mr. Nielsen), that perhaps an ombudsman should represent some of the people in the Yukon because of the size of the territory and the multiplicity of people and their problems?

Mr. MacGuigan: Mr. Speaker, to deal first with the question of an ombudsman, I am generally in favour of the proposal for this and for other areas. However, I would prefer the services which Members of Parliament can render their constituents to be greatly increased by the provision of office space and facilities of that kind. This would enable them to better serve their constituents. While I would be in accord with the suggestion, it is not the only step that I would like to see taken in that direction.

With respect to the mode of selection of members of the Senate, it is true that there were people all across the country who urged us to have an elected Senate, but by and large that was not the view taken by the majority of witnesses who appeared before us, nor would it be my own view. It seems to me that an elected second chamber would rival this chamber and, as a member who prizes the prerogatives of this chamber, as the premier legislative part of our parliament, I would not want to see a second chamber which would in any way infringe upon our prerogatives. I think I would be more inclined to the abolition of the Senate than I would be to an elected second House, if I had to choose between them.

I believe, Mr. Speaker, not so much from the standpoint that the legislation we pass needs sober second thought, though in recent times we have had to admit that some of it can be improved, as from the standpoint of geographical representation that the Senate ought to continue in existence. At the same time, there should be greatly expanded representation from western Canada; and if I may include the great, Northern Territories as part of western Canada, there should be more members in the Senate who speak for and are from that area.

I think the hon. member for Yukon has done us a service by raising this matter once again. This problem will not disappear until the general problem of Senate representation is solved, but it is perhaps more urgent than other problems relating to Senate representation. Although I would prefer to see any terms of reference of a parliamentary committee expanded to include the question of broader representation from the west, I nevertheless think that Bill C-12 which the hon. member for Yukon has proposed is a step in the right direction. One cannot always have a whole loaf; one must be satisfied sometimes with half a loaf. I think this bill is a step in the right direction and will contribute, if adopted, to a more representative Senate in which the people of Canada can have even greater confidence.

Hon. W. G. Dinsdale (Brandon-Souris): Mr. Speaker, I shall speak briefly and deal with one specific aspect of this problem because I think, judging from the comments which have been made, that everyone is favourably disposed to accept the recommendation of the hon. member for Yukon (Mr. Nielsen), the sponsor of the bill, and refer it to the committee.

I want to focus narrowly on the basic issue before the House in Bill C-12. Let us be sure that we take at least one small step in the right direction, one small step in this instance but a giant step for the people of the Northwest Territories and the Yukon. Let us not bring in extraneous matters such as general Senate reform. I say this because only within comparatively recent times has parliament and the government of Canada taken a direct interest in northern affairs. The department was first established in 1952. Actually, we have not gone very far in moving toward greater autonomy and self-government in the north since then.

I had the responsibility as minister of northern affairs and we set as our target 1967, centennial year, when we would take a giant step forward in bringing about a greater degree of autonomy for the northern territories. That target date passed; we had no responsibility at that time. There has been no improvement or change for over a decade. I feel that what the hon. member for Yukon proposes would at least deal with one fundamental inequity, namely, lack of representation in our upper house.

Mr. Benjamin: One need not listen. No one is missing anything.

Mr. Dinsdale: Arguments have been made around the issue. The one fundamental issue at stake is that so long as there is a Senate, so long as there is an upper House as part of the Canadian parliamentary system—and I am sure even members of the NDP would agree—we are being grossly discriminatory and unfair if the people occupying 3½ million square miles of this country are not represented in that chamber. I heartily endorse the recommendation of the hon. member for Yukon and hope that other hon. members of this House will do the same.

Mr. Ian Watson (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of State for Urban Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I am rather surprised at the bill proposed by the hon. member for Yukon (Mr. Nielsen) because it has the effect of playing down his own role as an elected Member of Parliament. If there is any raison d'être for the Senate, it has to do, as the hon. member for Windsor-Walkerville (Mr. MacGuigan) pointed out, with regional representation. However, I keep coming back to the basic thought that a body which is not elected and is non-representative is really out of place in 1973.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): You chaps have learned a lot this session.

Mr. Watson: Several countries recently have adopted a unicameral system, preferring to be governed by one house. Sweden, Finland and New Zealand, the last named country having adopted this system somewhat earlier, have moved in this direction. There is perhaps some slight thought in my mind that representation by region might offer a solution for those in favour of keeping the Senate, but if its members are not elected and are not representative I am afraid I will have to remain a member of that group which favours Senate abolition.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Watson: I should like to talk at length about the question of better representation in the Northwest Territories and in the Yukon. Let me say this, however. The last two parliaments, by making use of the Standing Committee on Indian Affairs and Northern Development which visited many parts of the north and heard from people throughout the north, allowed those people to be better represented in parliament. I strongly recommend to this House that we continue that practice and perhaps expand it in this parliament, thereby giving the people of the north direct contact with members from other parts of the country. This process, in turn, would lead to members of this House becoming more aware of the serious problems existing in that area and of the huge stakes involved in the questions that will have to be decided, as the hon. member for Northwest Territories (Mr. Firth) pointed out, during the next few years.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The hour provided for the consideration of private members' business has now expired. Perhaps the House would agree to revert to committee of the whole before I call it six o'clock. Is it agreed?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

SUPPLY

APPROPRIATION ACT NO. 1, 1973

The House resumed consideration in committee of Bill C-141, for granting to Her Majesty certain sums of money for the public service for the financial year ending 31st March, 1973—Mr. MacEachen (for Mr. Drury)—Mr. McCleave in the chair.

On clause 2—Schedule.

[Mr. Watson.]

The Chairman: It being six o'clock, I do now leave the chair. The committee will resume at eight o'clock.

At six o'clock the committee took recess.

AFTER RECESS

The committee resumed at 8 p.m.

The Assistant Deputy Chairman: When the committee rose at five o'clock p.m. vote 5a relating to the Treasury Board was being considered.

Mr. Drury: Mr. Chairman, on a number of occasions concern has been expressed regarding the deadlines which we are trying to meet in the passage of these supplementary estimates.

Mr. Nielsen: In the past four days.

Mr. Drury: I have been advised that with respect to the Manpower and Immigration programs, allowances to persons on Canada Manpower training courses, LIP grants and further payments in respect of LIP grants under the 1972-73 program and contract payments to companies giving on-the-job training to unemployed workers, all further payments in respect of these programs will have to be suspended commencing February 22. On that date the funds available for these programs will be exhausted. Without further parliamentary authorization it will not be possible to continue to make payments.

Similarly, on the same day, Thursday, with regard to 74,700 recipients of war veterans allowances who are normally paid on the third last banking day of the month, unless approval is received by February 22 for mailing them, they will be delayed by the number of days beyond February 22 that it takes to secure royal assent to this bill. I might add that in addition to the 74,700 recipients of war veterans allowance there will also be similarly affected 3,300 recipients of civilian war allowances.

I appreciate the necessity and desirability of giving adequate consideration to the estimates but we wish, if we possibly can, to meet these deadlines.

Mr. Nielsen: Mr. Chairman, on the point that has been raised by the minister, we have been very keenly aware of the consequences of delaying these estimates. We were aware of this in committee. We sat long hours there, as we have here. We were Thursday, Friday, all day yesterday and today trying to get all the items passed without debate, and all stages of the bill. I want to again put on record that in the debate while we have been in committee of the whole 32 New Democratic Party members and 18 Social Credit members have spoken. With 46-member representation in the House, they have had a total of 69 speakers. When these are added to the Liberal speakers, we have had a total of 85 speakers. We in this party have had 33 speakers.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Nielsen: So that there will be no mistake about our intentions of seeing these estimates through, we are prepared here and now to pass the remaining items without debate, and the remaining stages of the bill so it can go to the other place for debate and royal assent.

The Assistant Deputy Chairman: May I inquire whether consideration has been concluded.

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

The Assistant Deputy Chairman: If so, we will now proceed to item 10a, urban affairs.

Mr. Harney: Mr. Chairman, I shall begin by asking the Minister of State for Urban Affairs a couple of relatively simple questions of a non-controversial nature. When I have asked these questions and received the quality of answers that I expect to receive, I should like to make some general remarks about the item in the schedule.

During a question period a few weeks ago I directed a question to the Minister of State for Urban Affairs with regard to tri-level conferences, federal, provincial and municipal. I understand the minister has been encouraging these over the past year, particularly during the past few months, and that there have been conferences between governments. However, there is considerable evidence that there is interest in particular localities to hold tri-level conferences of elected officials. For example, a conference of elected representatives in a community or small town could involve federal members, provincial members, municipal councillors, members of school boards and, possibly, leaders of community associations. It would be an extremely good way of having the elected members from a locality get together to understand the problems of a locality and, better still, to work out a concerted program for themselves, working, as it were, in harness.

I know the minister said several weeks ago that the federal government was more than ready to encourage and assist tri-level conferences. I do not want to distort his answer to the point of saying he would similarly encourage tri-level conferences of the more informal kind I have described, but would the minister not take this possibility under consideration? I repeat that it is an excellent way in which elected representatives can get together to work out problems and also to set projects for themselves.

Mr. Basford: I believe the Chair ruled the other day that the appropriate Standing Order would be applied and that ministers would answer all questions on these items at the end of the comments of hon. members generally on the particular items in the estimates. I am in the hands of the committee. I would be quite happy to answer either now or at the end of the comments, but there was a ruling on this matter the other day.

Mr. Nielsen: Mr. Chairman, I would submit that once an hon. member rises in his place and speaks to an item, whether it be by way of a question or a speech, in committee of the whole he has spoken and Standing Order 58(13), if applied rigidly, would prevent his speaking again. I leave the question with the Chair, but I believe this interpretation to be correct.

The Assistant Deputy Chairman: If I remember correctly—and I have consulted the Clerk—the suggestion was made that the minister would wait until all hon. members had finished before replying.

Mr. Nielsen: That is not my point, Mr. Chairman. The point is that under rule 58(13), which is applicable when the committee is in ways and means as opposed to the rule which applies in committee of the whole generally, once a member rises and speaks he may not participate further in the discussion, whether he makes a speech or merely asks a question. I am not urging this on the Chair but I am leaving the point with Your Honor for consideration.

The Assistant Deputy Chairman: According to the rules, once an hon. member has spoken he may not speak again. But no decision has yet been made. Does the hon. member for Scarborough West wish to continue?

Mr. Harney: Yes, Mr. Chairman. In light of what has been said with regard to procedure, I shall make all my points in one fell swoop, as it were. But they concern very different subjects and I thought they could be dealt with more easily if I kept popping up and down.

I wish to ask another question of the minister. It has to do with a statement he made this morning on the subject of rent freezes in projects directly controlled or managed by CMHC. I am thinking particularly of limited dividend projects. I know of projects in Toronto which use standard forms of lease as the contract between the owner and the tenant. These forms contain a clause which provides, in effect, that the rent agreed to shall remain fixed unless approval of an increase is given by CMHC.

I invite the minister to look into what has happened regarding 230 Oak Street. Tenants of this project signed leases on December 31, only to be advised two days later that their rents would be raised, the owner having received permission to do so from CMHC. In the private business world such a thing would rarely occur. The minister should take into consideration the circumstances in which it is possible to raise rents in these circumstances. He should consider making the rent freeze retroactive at least to the beginning of this year, because a number of rental agreements were signed by tenants around December 31.

The estimate has to do with research in housing and community planning. More money is to be devoted to such research from allocations which apparently have already been agreed in the House. There are one or two areas which ought to be examined very seriously. Everyone who has studied housing is aware that one of the most serious problems facing those who enter the housing market is that of raising money, in some cases, and the high interest charges applied to those who borrow it.

Many of us remember years when an interest rate of 6 per cent was considered high for a prime mortgage. For a number of years now the standard rate has been between 9 and 10 per cent. There is no doubt that such rates, seen in historical perspective, are usurious. Interest rates on domestic mortgages are prohibitive. It is not long ago that the minister, in order to help more people buy houses, raised the limit which could be borrowed from CMHC to $30,000. I wonder how many members have calculated the amount of interest which has to be paid on such a sum over the life of a mortgage. The total amounts to $42,000. I wonder how many people have calculated the length of time the average man has to work to pay off this $42,000, not counting the principal and leaving aside the down payment.

In Toronto, where I live, the average industrial wage is about $4 an hour. That figure is probably high, but let us take it to be $4 an hour. At $4 an hour a person can expect a gross income of about $8,000 a year. We all know the Canadian Tax Foundation tells us that a person earning $8,000 a year with the usual number of dependants—in this case let us say two—will pay about 37 per cent of his income in taxes of all kinds. If you subtract this 37 per cent in taxes from $8,000 a year, you are left with a net income of $5,100. If you divide the $5,100 into $42,000, you will see the number of years that the average working man has to put in just to pay the interest on the property he has purchased for himself and his family.

People have suggested in the past few months that something must be done to bring down interest rates. Perhaps some suggestions have been a little utopian, but I am sure very few hon. members would agree that an interest rate of, say, 6½ per cent or 7 per cent is utopia. I am sure several members of the House have bought their homes in the past at this rate or at a higher rate. It was not too long ago that many of us considered a rate of 7 per cent to be high. But let us say that by various devices—I hope to suggest one or two in a moment—we could bring down interest rates by 2½ per cent, or in other words reduce them from the 9 to 9½ per cent level they are now to a 6½ to 7 per cent level.

If I may again entertain the committee with a few more calculations, let me suggest that the saving in the interest payments over the life of a mortgage contract brought about by a reduction in the interest rate of 2½ per cent would amount to about $17,000. Again going through a process of rough division, we find out what is the net income of the average wage earner over the course of a year, and we discover that by bringing the interest rate down by 2½ per cent we will save him, in effect, some three years of work in that lousy factory or that boring office, work that is devoted solely to earning money to pay off this 2½ per cent interest. It is not devoted to the other 7 per cent interest, or to the principal he has had to put into the house as a down payment, or to buy food or shoes for his kids, or to put money aside for entertainment or travel; it is devoted solely to paying off that 2½ per cent.

Let us ask ourselves what we are doing with all these grand programs that we use in pretending we are helping the working people of this country, when we cannot come to the stark realization that the better part of a working person's life is devoted to paying off the interest on the mortgage he takes on his house. No one can tell me that a lot of people do not buy houses. I know that a lot of people rent them, but if you rent rather than pay off mortgage interest on your own house you are merely helping to pay off the mortgage on the landlord's house, which is really the same thing.

[Mr. Harney.]

Suggestions have been made with regard to ameliorating this situation. It has been suggested, for example, that people with a certain income should have their mortgage interest subsidized. That is a fairly good suggestion but I think it would be too indirect and would apply to too small a percentage of the population for it to have any real effect. As hon. members know, many other suggestions have been made to reduce the original cost of housing. However, in the past we have had many figures proving that by far the most massive part of the cost of housing is the cost of money and the cost of land.

Some time last year the minister suggested establishing some kind of mortgage clearing house—I forget the exact title—in which the lending and financial institutions of this country would be encouraged to invest more money for lending purposes; I think they were his very words. I have a few suggestions to make in that regard, suggestions that could be forwarded to the research groups that will be doing further research into housing and community planning. Although it does not always appear to us to be the case, there is a fair amount of money in this country available for investment. I am not suggesting that the government has its hands on very much of this money. When one looks at the figures showing the amount the government has available for discretionary investment—that is to say, amounts that it can or cannot, may or may not, place into certain areas—the amount is relatively small when one considers the vast sums that are now under the control of the financial intermediaries of this country. By "financial intermediaries" I mean banks, lending institutions, trust companies, insurance companies, and so on.

I will take just one example from among these financial intermediaries and deal specifically with trustee pension funds. Those of you who have been looking at the figures over the past few years will have noticed that trustee pension funds have grown in size; not alarmingly, but certainly rather strongly, to say the least. In 1960 the total assets of the trustee pension funds amounted to $3.5 billion. In 1970 they had grown to some $11 billion, and of course it goes without saying they have grown since then. That is not hay; that is a lot of money.

What is done with this money? According to a publication by Statistics Canada, this money is spread over various forms of investments such as bonds, government bonds at all levels, municipal bonds, school bonds, and so on. The Minister of Finance is not here, but let me point out to the President of the Treasury Board that the proportion of these funds invested in government bonds has gone down considerably over the past few years. A fair amount of money is invested in stocks, and the proportion of money invested in stocks has gone up rather strikingly over the past ten years.

In other words, trustee pension funds, in carrying out their design to make money, are finding it more lucrative to invest their money in stocks. It is also rather alarming to discover that there has been a very marked increase in the amount of money invested in stocks of non-Canadian companies. I can try to flummox this committee by saying that the increase over the past ten years has been 7½ times, though perhaps that would be a little misleading since I am merely following a trend.

The figure I want to concentrate on in relation to assets of trustee pension funds is the amount devoted to mortgages. We find that in 1960 the proportion that was devoted to mortgages of all kinds—not necessarily residential mortgages or mortgages on family dwellings or single family homes, but mortgages of all kinds—accounted for 8.3 per cent, and this amount has grown enormously over the years and now accounts for some 9.2 per cent of the total of assets invested by trustee pension funds.

What I am getting at is this. If we were to do a little more in this country than simply saying to these companies that they must invest in safe securities, and we said to them that not only must they maintain the security of the original investment placed in their hands in trust but they must also invest a certain proportion of their assets in socially useful projects that would satisfy the real needs of Canadians, then we might find that this would have a significant effect on the interest rates of domestic mortgages in this country and indeed on the whole field of housing.

In other jurisdictions, particularly the one to the south of us, there are financial institutions, savings and loan companies, for example, which are forced by law to invest a certain proportion, be it 30 per cent, 40 per cent or 50 per cent of their total assets in domestic mortgages. That is why in the United States mortgages are more easily available at lower rates than here in Canada.

I would suggest to the Minister of State, through you, Mr. Chairman, that rather than even invite these financial institutions through a form of encouragement to invest in what is, after all, a vital necessity, one of the elements which ought to be produced in quantity by our economy is investment by these people in the area of domestic mortgages. Rather than even encouraging them to invest, they should be told to invest. One does not have to be radical or drastic about it, telling them they have to invest 40 per cent; this could be progressive and conservative—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Harney: I suggest that pension funds in trust could be used for investment in domestic mortgages to the extent of some 5 per cent a year for the next four or five years. I will not go into specific calculations because the point is obvious. If this large segment of our economy, financial institutions which do nothing more than hold the savings of the nation in trust for us, was told to put our savings to use in the realm of mortgages, particularly the domestic mortgage market, we would find that in a relatively short time not only would there be more mortgage money available but the cost of that money would go down.

This government in the past has effected a two-price program for various commodities. Why should we not have a two-price program for mortgage money, a certain price for the commercial market and another price for the domestic market, being the average individual who wants little more from us than the possibility of buying a home for his wife and children? I hope to come back to this point on a number of other occasions, perhaps this spring and again next year. What I suggest at this stage is that this is an area in need of considerable attention.

A few weeks ago I asked the Minister of Transport a question regarding the CNR pension fund with particular reference to a horrible example. A number of years ago when I was a boy at school I was a rather clumsy person. One of the seniors said to me, "Don't worry, Harney; no one is totally useless: you can always serve as a horrible example." The CNR pension fund is not totally useless; it serves for us as a horrible example. This pension fund is held in trust for the workers of this country who are, in effect, direct employees of this government. This is a pension fund over which the workers have almost no influence—I will not use the word "control"—yet we find the fund invested in mortgages and other fields. This money is invested in what kinds of mortgage?

Let us consider the Fidinam case. The fund loaned $33 million to this foreign corporation to build another fancy office building in Toronto, and I assure you we did not need another fancy office building there. One thing we need in Toronto, Montreal and other communities in Canada is mortgage money at reasonable interest rates for these workers whose funds are being held in trust. Without going very far, not even to the private lending institutions, we could take some of this money held in trust for the public and parapublic workers of this country and put it to work building houses, rather than fancy office buildings wholly controlled by foreign corporations. Some of these office buildings were built with money raised totally in Canada and, in too many unfortunate cases, from money raised from those employed in our public institutions.

I have another suggestion in respect of a program quite dear to the heart of the previous minister in charge of housing and CMHC. I refer to the special and innovative $200 million program for low-cost housing. There was an interim report which came out in May of 1971. I believe originally $200 million was put into this program, with $100 million added to it. I would very much like to see a full report on that program in order that we may determine how the money was used. There are many questions in many areas of the country that need to be asked about this program, perhaps in no area more particularly than the province of Quebec.

[Translation]

If I may, Mr. Chairman, I should like to deal with the $200 million program and ask whether we could perhaps get an extensive report explaining in detail how this money has been invested and how it has profited Canadians.

One need not enquire very long to realize that people, particularly in Quebec, are very dissatisfied with this program.

Many construction projects have proven to be failures. Tenants and landlords are unhappy and dissatisfied with the quality of housing that was built for them. I could give a list of the projets—this would only take a moment—that should be closely inspected to see—

The Assistant Deputy Chairman: Order. I regret to interrupt the hon. member, but his time has expired.

Supply

Mr. Godin: Mr. Chairman, I think I should say a few words about Bill C-141 and mainly about item 10a, which is of particular interest to the Minister of State for Urban Affairs (Mr. Basford). This item appears on page 53 in Supplementary Estimates (A) and reads as follows:

• (2040)

To extend the purposes of Urban Affairs Vote 10, Appropriation Act No. 3, 1972 to reimburse Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation for expenditures incurred during the period January 1, 1973 to March 31, 1973 on housing research and community planning.

Mr. Chairman, clearly, like any responsible corporation, the Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation employs research personnel, people who conduct analyses. In the present case, the analyses are naturally specifically related to residential housing in our country.

In view of complaints reaching us from Ville Bélair, Val Saint-Michel and even Ville Vanier and other locations in my constituency, I am led to wonder, Mr. Chairman, at what level the studies have been conducted, and to what end? Were these studies fruitful? Did they focus on improving the quality of houses or on downgrading it?

Mr. Chairman, I am wondering about those things because, as the previous speaker stated, there has long been discontent in Quebec. I have here an article in the October 27, 1971 issue of Action Québec, titled as follows: Owners of Place Pierre-Bertrand are under the impression that they have been had.

Those owners are angry. They all feel they have been cheated on their houses, costing an average of $14,000. The building defects found reveal that residential standards of the building code were absolutely disregarded.

On the occasion of that meeting, the members of that association stated, and I quote:

The federal government is involved in this matter because the Place Pierre-Bertrand project was subsidized by the housing department.

Furthermore, according to the majority of owners present, there may have been collusion between the Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation and the contractor in order to avoid an inquiry, since they say that had there been an inquiry, the houses would never have been accepted.

So, Mr. Chairman, such is the situation for a particular area. I have here another letter from Neufchatel. It is addressed to the Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation, it deals with file No 430-LH-19861 and is signed by Roland Simoneau, Neufchatel. Mr. Simoneau writes:

This is to inform the CMHC about flaws and defects in my house.

Clause 7 of my contract provides that:

The borrower shall, during the period of this loan, keep in good repair the said building with dependencies and make all necessary repairs, and representatives of the lender and the Corporation . . . can inspect it on occasion . . .

So he wonders:

How can I keep in good repair a house I received in bad condition?

He goes on:

Is it any wonder that it costs us $300 to heat three walls when the seller told us it would cost $130, which is quite a difference.

[The Assistant Deputy Chairman.]

Moreover, since the inspector from CMHC never came to inspect the house, has he the right to come five years later when the inspection has never been done . . .

You understand that it is impossible to look forward to the future in such a house. The builder does not honour the guarantee he gives us, he probably wants to wait until the five years have passed. How can we fulfil our commitments? We might just as well move into rented housing again; this experience has been enough.

Mr. Chairman, these are the impressions of an owner.

After examining a house in Neufchatel, Mr. Louis Carrier, a Quebec City architect, said this:

This report was prepared following an on site inspection on Wednesday, September 27, 1972—

It is three pages' long. It is the inspection of a small $14,000 house, and I quote further:

(1) FOUNDATION:

The main front foundation wall is inclined outwardly by 1½'' at the top—

(2) FRAMEWORK:

(a) In the basement, the center beam is made of four assembled 2''x8'' beams. In violation of Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation's standards, cuts in the composing parts are located 6'' beyond the bearing center (or the steel column).

Moreover, this beam should rest on a pilar when meeting the anti-fire dividing wall instead of being imbedded in it.

(b) In the basement, a wood column, made of two 2'' x 4'' frames for the girders along the staircase and bearing a goundfloor partition, is truly defective—

(c) The groundfloor floor framework does not meet the standards of the Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation. The 1 5/8'' x 7 1/4'' beams, spaced 16½'' center to center, stand out 12'—2½'' which is inadequate since the C.M.H.C. minimum requirement for this wood (Eastern spruce) holding living quarters is: 2'' x 8'' beams . . . with 16'' spacing center to center—

Because of this inadequacy, the floor sank by at least 1'' at the center of bearings, namely in the middle of the living room, kitchen and bathroom.

This report states further:

(c) cont'd

One also finds by jumping slightly on the floor that a strong vibration is transmitted to the partitions thus unlevelling the pictures hanging on them.

3—INSULATION

(a) The dividing wall, firestop, visible in the roof space, is made of empty concrete blocks 3 inches thick; these do not reach the roof board everywhere and the top part seems badly insulated, which allows cold air to enter and get down to the first floor.

(b) Insulation of outside walls is provided by mineral wool bats 2 inches thick inserted between the studs on which gyproc is nailed directly.

It would have been preferable, for this type of wall, to put on the studs an insulating board ½ inch thick and to put the gyproc on 1'' x 2'' strips placed vertically where the studs are. The consequence of this inadequacy is that, on very cold days, frost will form inside in several places on the gyproc.

4—WAINSCOT AND EXTERIOR FINISHING

(a) The Alcan enamelled aluminum wainscot is not properly installed. Several open joints let in snow and water driven by the wind.

(b) The lower edge of the wainscot is neither protected nor reinforced by weather moulding and it easily loses its shape, besides being dangerous for children playing nearby because these aluminum sheets are very sharp.

(c) On both sides of the main entrance, the plastic joint between the wainscot and the doorframe has been badly made, or rather it does not resist because of the flexibility of the wainscot which is not solidly fixed to the frame.

(d) The drip, made of perforated aluminum is poorly designed for our climate. Snow and rain driven by the wind get into the roof space and damage walls and ceilings.

Mr. Chairman, I know that it is disgusting and boring to hear me read that, but I wish to point out that it is still more boring for those who are compelled to live in those shacks.

Mr. Prud'homme: Did you inspect them yourself?

Mr. Godin: Yes, I went on the premises and with my card of former carpenter, I can speak with full knowledge of the facts. I continue to quote:

3—GYPROC FINISH:

(a) The gyproc on the outer walls is damaged at several places near or on the ceiling by the water or melting snow which filtered through the drip.

Mr. Chairman, I have read only a page and a half and I will spare the House the remainder. Now—

Mr. Prud'homme: Mr. Chairman, could I put a question to the hon. member?

Mr. Godin: Mr. Chairman, as soon as I finish, the hon. member may ask his question.

• (2050)

I was reading a report written by an architect. However, I have statistics in that connection. It happens that this report was prepared by an expert in construction who lives in Orsainville and who is not afraid of signing his name. This man says that the total cost of repairs is about $4,000. An $18,000 house was first occupied about 18 months ago and repairs will cost around $4,000. But what is the use of such a shack, Mr. Chairman? Action-Québec published in that connection on January 15, 1973 an article entitled: "Would you like to own such a house? Walls that let the cold in, a bathroon at 55°, ice under the door-mat and warped foundations".

Newsmen went there and found out the following:

Snow in the roof space, ice under the carpet, water seeping through walls, plaster falling to pieces, paint peeling off, inadequate insulation, thermometer reading 55° in the bathroom and 65° in the bedrooms.

These are in substance the grievances of ten home owners of the Neufchatel district in Quebec who no longer want to have anything to do with their house built almost two years ago—

During interviews with three of them last weekend, we were told that some sixty others are equally dissatisfied. They have not yet taken any legal proceedings, but if——the contractor—

does not do something soon, it is quite possible that these other dissatisfied owners bring pressure to bear—

It must be mentioned also that other owners in the same situation, about thirty of them, simply decided to leave their home a few months ago.

Further on, we find the following:

However, the three owners whom we contacted ... persist in saying that the contractor has in no way solved their many problems—

—in spite of the letters written to the Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation—

—especially that of insulation. "You know 55° in the bathroom and 65° in the bedrooms, that is not very warm in the winter" stated Mr. Renaud—one of the owners.

He added: "That is not all, last winter, we found almost a foot of snow in the roof-space and this year there is ice under the mat near the door.

Mr. Chairman, the president of the Association des propriétaires de Place Pierre-Bertrand said: "How come that the governments concerned accept the recurrence of the same problems?"

In fact, the residents of similar projects in Montreal and Châteauguay are faced with identical construction defects. How is it, added the chairman, that once the building completed contractors suddenly disappear pretending they are bankrupt? How is it that sometimes after that they reappear with somewhat changed names and sometimes with the same names?

Mr. Chairman, I know a contractor who changed his name five times in 15 years. As the saying goes: How does that grab you? After 15 years, he is still in business with the Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation.

Some people are led to believe that contractors doing bad work are simply incompetent. I for one, strongly believe the contrary. I am convinced that the contractor who managed to change his name five times in 15 years is an expert. I am also convinced that the contractor who has succeeded in "playing" with the millions of the Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation is highly competent. In fact, those contractors, and there is more than one, are highly competent people.

Even the Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation knows its business; in fact, since last spring we have been asking for an enquiry to be conducted and for someone to inspect these slums. We said that it was cold and there was ice in there. So we requested that Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation officials investigate. They agreed and visited those houses on a day when the temperature was 55 degrees in January. Why did they select this day? This also took experts from the Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation!

I think it abnormal that contractors of this kind are still in business and multiplying their victims, especially under the protection of the Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation.

We have in front of us a statement which, I believe, speaks for itself. We are considering a bill under which we are asked for funds to undertake studies. In my opinion, studies gave us enough answers; we know what we need to make good construction because we built homes well before the Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation, when contractors knew how to build something good. The CMHC has already achieved good results. It continues to prepare and revise projects which are still very good but, unfortunately, it allows too many which are not.

All I ask the hon. minister today, all I want to know is this: what can we expect from the department, what can the people who have been cheated expect and are there still honest individuals in the CMHC who can take their responsibilities?

[English]

Mr. Nystrom: Mr. Chairman, I want to ask the Minister of State for Urban Affairs a question which is important to cities the size of Yorkton which I have the honour to represent. It concerns relocation of rail lines in downtown centres. Can he tell the House when we may expect some financial assistance for the relocation of rail lines from the downtown cores of cities of this size, and what will be the amount of such financial assistance? One point I wish to stress is that I would not like to see this assistance go only to the CNR and the CPR. I am concerned that when the program comes into effect too much emphasis will be placed on larger centres such as Montreal, Toronto and Vancouver. Cities the size of Yorkton are very interested in this matter. Perhaps the minister can comment later this evening on this point.

Mr. Gilbert: Mr. Chairman, I want to ask the minister three short questions for which I am sure he will have answers. What steps has he taken to implement the Liberal election promise to build an $80 million waterfront park in the city of Toronto? Either the Secretary of State for External Affairs or the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources made such a promise just prior to October 30 last, hoping to gain political capital. The good citizens of Toronto realized that this was the aim.

As a supplementary question, Mr. Chairman, I ask what citizen participation will be involved in this park. It will be a big job to co-ordinate the efforts of the federal, provincial and municipal authorities in assembling the land, designing the buildings and carrying through with the program. I hope local citizens will be involved in this work.

My second question is: when will the minister bring forth the CMHC capital budget? Further, does he anticipate including in that budget the programs he has set forth in Bill C-133, the bill he recently introduced? If they are not included in the CMHC budget, how will he fund the rehabilitation program, the NIP program and the other programs mentioned in the bill? I heard the hon. member from Hamilton asking about the NIP program: it is the Neighbourhood Improvement Program.

My third question concerns the guarantees the minister promised with regard to defective materials and workmanship in the construction of homes. The previous speaker for the Creditiste party mentioned some of the disasters that have occurred in building programs. The provisions in the new bill presented by the minister only go to a certain extent and include the completion of work by a builder who becomes bankrupt. Many people have had work done with CMHC and NHA financing which was later found to include defective materials and bad workmanship. Will the minister be introducing separate legislation with respect to building guarantees, or will they only be included as part of the new bill he has introduced?

Mr. Blackburn: I have one or two questions to ask the Minister of State for Urban Affairs on the question of urban renewal, which concerns all municipalities. Two or three weeks ago the minister indicated that there are changing trends in urban renewal. If I remember correctly, he said that we were going to place more money in and greater emphasis on the re-establishment and rejuvenation of already established neighbourhood communities. I commend the minister for this new trend. In other words, we are not going to concentrate so much on the bulldozer, but on rebuilding and rejuvenating existing communities. Going back as far as 1968 and 1969, many municipalities across this country have drawn up position papers and gone to a great deal of expense in order to establish urban renewal in the context in which we interpreted it ten years ago—in other words, the brick and mortar, blast and bulldozer approach—to clear out downtown urban areas and rebuild.

I represent the riding of Brant. At the present time the city of Brantford has budgeted approximately $2.3 million for a downtown urban renewal program which takes in the former market square which was established as a result of the construction of the city hall 112 years ago. Some of the merchants in that area are struggling, and this development would put capital and retail trade in their direction. Brantford city council has budgeted $2.3 million for market square development.

I ask the minister whether funds are available to a municipality for this kind of development under what might be called the new terms of reference of his department with regard to urban renewal. I listened to the minister but, Mr. Chairman, I do not believe that the taxpayers' money should go toward commercial development. I wonder whether there are still funds available for this kind of development, even though eventually this downtown market square development in the city of Brantford will be entirely privately owned and commercially oriented. Could the minister reply to this question as well?

[Translation]

Mr. Beaudoin: Mr. Chairman, I am going to be very brief. I only wish to direct a question to the minister responsible for Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation (Mr. Basford).

Could the minister tell whether his department could ensure that CMHC stops lending money to contractors who build bad houses, unhealthy houses, and who come back year after year, under a new name, to build shacks in other towns with the approval of CMHC? I wish the minister could tell us whether his department intends to find mechanisms to control this situation.

At present, the building industry is growing ever faster. A 24′ X 40′ house with a 1140-foot floor area, built of "Gyproc" and heated by a forced-air system, costs about $18,000, whereas last year the same house was selling for $16,100. The individual who buys such a house must meet payments during 39 and often 49 years under the new system; often the house is built to last no more than 10 or 15 or 20 years. What I am about to suggest could protect the money invested by Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation as well as protect the consumer.

We are rather lucky around Sherbrooke. I know of no contractor who builds such shacks but I did visit some in Montreal, for example, where the situation is terrible. Last year, we saw 34 houses that could not be sold by the contractor and yet the inspector from Central Mortgage and Housing had been there and had approved those houses. The builder could not sell them because you could see right through the walls, Mr. Chairman. It was as gusty inside as outside. I went there in the month of July. This was called the "Nid d'abeilles (Honeycomb)" project or something of the sort. I do not remember exactly but in any case there was a sleek word in the name. The sewage system had not yet been put in and I think that the city around Montreal where those houses were located thought it would be desirable not to instal the system too rapidly because the houses were not selling.

If a man who knows nothing about construction refuses to buy a house which was built by a contractor and checked by two or three inspectors from Central Mortgage and Housing who are supposed to know their business, how is it that those things can go undetected by those who seek to protect the consumer and would like him to be happy in his one-family or multi-unit dwelling.

In view of the high demand for housing again this year, I would ask the minister if it would not be possible to have Central Mortgage and Housing to thoroughly research the matter so as not to let the consumer be fleeced in such an unreasonable way.

[English]

Mr. Basford: Mr. Chairman, I have listened with interest to hon. members' questions and comments. Many of the questions can be dealt with at great length and exhaustively when the main estimates are considered in committee. There we can review the issues that have been raised. Others can be dealt with in debate and discussion when Bill C-133 is before the House for second reading and in committee, that is, the amendment to the National Housing Act that I have proposed. Also, Bill C-135, the financial mechanism bill, raises all the issues that the hon. member for Scarborough West brought forward in his speech about the flow of money into the mortgage market. I shall be brief tonight and touch upon just a few of the comments that have been made.

To the hon. member for Scarborough West, I would say that we are meeting with considerable success in major metropolitan areas across the country in organizing tri-level committees involving the federal government, provincial governments and municipalities or the local governments concerned. There are tri-level committees of government to deal with matters involving the various levels of government and are a means for consultation between governments. That is their purpose, unlike the kind of committee that the hon. member for Scarborough West suggested. There is nothing wrong with his suggestion and nothing to prevent it taking place; in fact, I would encourage Members of Parliament to meet with their provincial MLAs and local politicians. I have done this in my own city on occasion, but it is a different kind of concept from the tri-level government committees that I have been discussing and organizing across the country.

With regard to the question of rent increases, I shall of course look at the situation of 230 Oak Street. From the hon. member's comment, I take it that the building is a limited dividend project which means that the mortgage moneys are put up by Central Mortgage and Housing, that under an agreement with the builder and owner there would be rent control on the building for the first 15 years, and that he would receive a limited return on his property during that period. The agreement also provides for the costs of operation to be taken into account. If the owner is able to show real increases in costs, they must be considered and CMHC must allow an adjustment in rents. So we are bound by an agreement in that case. The owner must show an actual increase in costs. However, I will examine the question of that particular building.

When the hon. member spoke about costs I think he indicated that he agrees with the provisions of Bill C-135 which will be before the House and which is designed, in principle, to encourage the flow of mortgage money into the residential mortgage business. He spoke of trustee pension funds. One of the purposes of that bill is to make mortgage investments more liquid and mortgages more attractive to the managers of trustee pension funds. It is my hope that the bill, which will be dealt with in committee more fully, will make trustee pension funds invest in residential mortgages and provide the medium and mechanism for them to do so.

Other amendments to the National Housing Act have been proposed. I agree with the hon. member, about the need to introduce more money into residential mortgages and that that puts a downward pressure on interest rates; there is no question about it. I hope that if he has any influence with the trade union movement he will use it and encourage the members of unions to invest their pension funds in residential mortgages. He should make suggestions along that line.

May I bring an example to the attention of hon. members to illustrate what I mean. A certain company had developed a technique for building houses. It was a very good technique and they came to me for money because they wanted to provide mortgages for the new houses and market them. I said, "You have a huge pension fund; why don't you use it for house mortgages?" They had not even thought of that. They went back and applied their money in that way.

Mr. Gleave: On a point of order, Mr. Chairman, would the minister elaborate on those remarks? I think there are some restrictions on union pension funds in relation to where they may be invested. Did the minister check into this particular pension fund and find out if the people concerned were entitled to invest in mortgages?

Mr. Basford: In that particular case it had never occurred to the company or union that although they were in the homebuilding business they could use this money for putting mortgages on homes. That is why we must keep talking as the hon. member for Scarborough West talked.

A number of comments were made about the quality of housing. This is in connection with the $200 million innovating program. The hon. member for Scarborough West, the hon. member for Portneuf and, I believe, the hon. member for Richmond mentioned this problem. I will examine Hansard and see that the particular developments those hon. members mentioned are looked at. I think they have all been looked at already because the same names keep cropping up. There are examples of badly built housing. I can only say that in cases where remedies are available, CMHC is implementing them. In many cases we have hired engineers and consultants to advise us and the owners on what can be done. If possible, we have taken action against the builders, and in order to make sure that our inspection procedure is adequate and that those examples do not occur again we have reorganized substantially procedures within the province of Quebec.

Also, in Bill C-133 we have proposed a system of warranties for purchasers of new homes. This is very much needed in this country in order to avoid bad housing construction and the kinds of incidents that were mentioned in the committee this evening. I assure the hon. member for Broadview that Bill C-133, which will be dealt with in committee, is designed to cover the mortgage insurance fund and it will cover the completion of construction of a home in the event that the builder goes bankrupt during the course of construction. It will cover, as well, the matter of CMHC mortgages. In certain instances an NHA mortgage will not be granted or insured unless certain warranties are provided. Both amendments are provided for in the legislation. We will deal with them in committee.

The hon. member for Yorkton-Melville asked about policy on railroad relocation which, as was announced by my colleague, the former minister of transport, involves amendments to the railway and grade-crossing legislation. That legislation is being drafted. I hope it can be introduced in the house within six weeks and dealt with. All the matters raised by the hon. member will, of course, be dealt with then. We did, in replying to a specific question, say in our policy statement—and this ought to be enacted in the legislation—that the railroads should not be allowed to profit from the imposition of the provisions of the act; that was basic to our policy.

In conclusion, Mr. Chairman, I refer to the question of the Toronto urban park raised by the hon. member for Broadview. The purchase and acquisition of the property in question is proceeding. All the areas available through voluntary purchase have been acquired by the Department of Public Works which is handling the land assembly for the Toronto waterfront park. There are currently under way negotiations with the Toronto harbour commissioners for the acquisition of land that was mentioned in the statement; the harbour commissioners will yield the land for this park. With respect to the third lot of properties which could not be acquired by purchase or by agreement with the harbour commissioners, notices of expropriation have been published in the Canada Gazette. So we are attempting to carry out the commitment of the government to acquire the property for the Toronto urban park.

With regard to the question of whether citizens will participate in the planning, may I say very firmly that we are committed to consultation with the government of Ontario and with municipalities surrounding the area of the waterfront park, as well as with the public, on the development of the site and how it should be planned and used. I have indicated this federal commitment to His Worship Mayor Crombie of Toronto, to Mr. Dennis Barker of the Toronto planning board and to Mr. S.B. Dewan of the Toronto Citizens for a Better Waterfront Association. As I say, we are committed to the development of this waterfront park through a tri-level process involving the federal government, Ontario and metro Toronto. I met with the former minister, Hon. Charles MacNaughton, in an attempt to set up the committee. There has been some delay in establishing the committee owing to changes in the responsibilities of ministers at Queen's Park. I certainly hope that the committee will be set up as quickly as possible so that through it we can begin planning the waterfront park for which we are in the process of acquiring property.

I have made my points rather quickly and briefly and hope hon. members will understand why I have done so. I hope these issues can be discussed in more detail when the estimates are—

Mr. Blackburn: On a point of order, Mr. Chairman, I asked the minister a question and it appeared to me he had finished his answer without dealing with my question.

Mr. Paproski: He was being evasive.

Mr. Blackburn: May I ask if he will answer my question.

Mr. Basford: Mr. Chairman, yes, I will. I thank the hon. member for bringing my attention back to his question. As I say, all these questions can be dealt with in greater detail when the estimates are considered in committee and when the two pieces of legislation I mentioned are before the House and the appropriate committee.

The hon. member for Brant spoke about urban renewal. He correctly stated the proposition that the old urban renewal program was frozen. We have made it clear that no further money will be forthcoming. My predecessor announced this, and that is the policy of the government. The view at that time, and this continues to be our view, is that in many cases urban renewal was being used, not to provide housing but to underwrite and finance commercial redevelopment of downtown areas. There are many places where commercial redevelopment is necessary, needed and would be useful within a city or municipality, but we are operating a housing policy and urban renewal was aimed at a housing policy. This is the reason it was cancelled. It has been replaced by the proposals I made for a Neighbourhood Improvement Program.

I am not familiar with the matter raised by the hon. member for Brant. If he wishes to make representations to me, I invite him to do so. But within the framework of the policy I have just announced I do not see how there can be money made available for the commercial redevelopment of the market square area.

Mr. Gilbert: Mr. Chairman, I rise on a point of order. The minister forgot to answer my question with regard to when the CMHC capital budget will be made, and just what financing will take place with regard to the programs in Bill C-133 if they cannot be included in the CMHC capital budget.

Mr. Basford: Mr. Chairman, I will deal with that matter fully when the bill is before us, because we will want to examine how the programs are to be financed. The capital budget of CMHC has been approved by the three ministers who are to approve it, the President of the Treasury Board, the Minister of Finance and myself. It has to be approved by cabinet and will be discussed in committee on the main estimates. It covers the capital budget for the calendar year 1973. Under the rules that apply, it deals with existing law.

We cannot put into a capital budget moneys to be spent under proposed legislation which is not yet passed. When the legislation is before the House I will deal with the question of how we are to finance the various programs which are proposed in Bill C-133. However, much of the money is contained within the capital budget. For example, there is the program of support of non-profit associations. There is a very large commitment of funds for that in the existing budget, under the existing law. If the amendments are carried, we can use that money more effectively than we do under NHA.

[Translation]

Mr. Godin: Mr. Chairman, I want to ask a simple question.

I would like first of all thank the hon. minister for the information he provided us with. However, he said that bill C-135 includes guarantee measures in the case of a buyer who would have taken possession of badly built house. Could the hon. minister tell us if that policy will be retroactive in its effects?

[English]

Mr. Basford: Mr. Chairman, we can examine that question in committee when the bill is before us. However, it would seem virtually impossible to make it retroactive.

Mrs. MacInnis: Mr. Chairman, can the minister enlighten us a little on what plans he has in mind for low-rent public housing?

Mr. Basford: Mr. Chairman, they are outlined in Bill C-133. I can deal with those plans when the bill is before the House and in committee.

The Chairman: Does this complete consideration of the item under urban affairs?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

The Chairman: We now turn to the items under veterans affairs, votes 10a and 35a. Are these items agreed to?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Schedule agreed to.

Clauses 2 to 5 inclusive agreed to.

Clause 1 agreed to.

Preamble agreed to.

Title agreed to.

Bill reported, read the third time and passed.

Mr. Peters: Mr. Speaker, if you give the bill to the hon. member for Yukon (Mr. Nielsen), he will take it over to the Senate for us.

Capital Punishment

CRIMINAL CODE

REINSTATEMENT OF LAW RELATING TO CAPITAL PUNISHMENT THAT EXISTED PRIOR TO DECEMBER 30, 1972

The House resumed, from Wednesday, January 31, 1973, consideration of the motion of Mr. Allmand that Bill C-2, to amend the Criminal Code, be read the second time and referred to the Standing Committee on Justice and Legal Affairs.

Mr. Ed Nelson (Burnaby-Seymour): Mr. Speaker, it may seem anti-climactic to shift in midstream from the important matter of money consideration to the more mundane matter of human lives. Your Honour will recall that at the close of the debate on capital punishment on January 31, I was cut off, with good cause, in mid-sentence at the very peak of oratorical excellence. As I recall, I had sympathized with the protagonists of capital punishment who because of their emotional bondage to the topic felt bound to call for the blood of all those convicted of homicide, but I had rejected emotion as suitable grounds for a decision.

I have since noted that most of the speakers who rose in self-righteous indignation to demand the blood of convicted killers have at the same time demanded with equal vigour an end to the slaughter of innocent civilians in Viet Nam, both North and South. I had rejected the arguments based on statistics as well on the grounds that in effect liars figure and figures lie. I sometimes think that if all statisticians were laid end to end, it would be a good thing.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Nelson: There is no proof that capital punishment is a deterrent to capital crimes, as other speakers have pointed out. I will not dwell on that aspect of the topic. Revenge, too, it seems to me is too base a motive for settling such an important issue and can be dismissed out of hand.

• (2130)

My suggestion was that any favour in which retention was being held was possibly due more to the frustration of society with seeming permissiveness—a section of the public is ready to lash out at all those who violate the laws directed against homicide, despite the futility of capital punishment as a deterrent, despite the ambivalence of arguments based on religion and despite exhaustive studies by qualified authorities.

I had reached the point, then, of examining the question from a philosophic point of view. What is it, I asked, that separates man from the rest of the animals? Not reason, because some animals have shown the ability to reason in various degrees. The one thing we can do that animals cannot do is to store experience. While the animal, generation after generation, teaches its young in the same way, through example and experience, mankind is able to store his experience through history books, literature, artifacts, monuments and the like. Despite this superiority, however, I pointed out that there still lurks the beast just below the sophisticated veneer of modern man. The reason I gave for this was the relatively short period of time during which man has been on this planet, taking into account the tremendous span of life forms. Man has been on earth a relatively short time in comparison with the entire scale of life—the continuum of life in all its forms on this earth.

At the close of the session I was about to paraphrase an example used by a Dr. Müller. I ask you to imagine a rope stretching from Toronto and ending at the Speaker's chair in the House of Commons. This rope will represent the entire scale of life from the very beginning of life forms to this date in 1973. Now, scientists have estimated that life forms have existed on the earth for something like a thousand million years. On a rough scale, therefore, we might say that one yard of this imaginary rope represents 10,000 years. One human generation would be represented by less than one-eighth of an inch. On that scale of life we would find the dinosaurs making their first appearances at the entrance to the Commons chamber.

Some hon. Members: They are still here.

Mr. Gilbert: Still with us.

An hon. Member: Mostly from the Prairies.

Mr. Nelson: The first rude forbears of mankind would not appear until well past the position of the mace, and perhaps even past the position of the Clerk before the Speaker's chair. About half an inch from the end of the rope we would come to the beginning of the industrial revolution.

I draw this rough comparison to indicate what a relative newcomer mankind is to the earth which he dominates. It seems evident that the rapid advances in technology in the past few decades have by far outpaced the growth in man's social awareness and social consciousness; we can fly to the moon but we cannot deal with our social misfits. It is for this reason that we are still able to employ, despite the sophistication of our technology and the growth of our experience, such bestial methods in the wars, terrorist activities and homicidal acts which take place every day all over the world.

Mr. Speaker, we are not beasts, but men and women. We are not savages, but civilized human beings. What we need is not a revival of the old ways of killing people, or discovery of new ways of killing people; what we need is an end to killing.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Nelson: What we need is the vision to look into the future for a method of separating those members of society who are not capable of functioning within our society, without succumbing to the forces of anger and animality that lie so near the surface of our civilized veneer.

Mr. Speaker, I ask that this House get out of the business of killing and into the business of co-operating to find workable alternatives to protect our society. I do not have the answer, but I believe there is an answer to our dilemma. As a grade 7 student in Vancouver put it with instinctive wisdom:

> It's a tough decision to make because you are not dealing with potatoes or carrots, you are dealing with a man's life. You are dealing with a person's life, and that is why it is a hard decision.

It may take time, but meanwhile we can find comfort and solace in the belief that we will, with a deep conviction in the worth of man, raise him yet another step on the evolutionary ladder to the heights at which he can say with conviction: It is wrong to use society's laws as a licence to kill.

Mr. Raynald Guay (Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Justice): Today we are talking about abolishing or retaining capital punishment but I must say that I would have liked it better if we had started with a debate on the causes of crime before discussing its punishment.

A lenghty debate on the means to bring about a genuine reform to the whole society, to its judiciary system, its penitentiary system, its rehabilitation system for those on the fringe of society, would have been still more meaningful than the one we are having today.

If genuine and efficient means of rehabilitation and, most of all, crime prevention could be guaranteed and provided to the society, it would mean that we would have to establish throughout the country adequate rehabilitation programs because I would agree with the hon. Cyrille Vaillancourt who said that there is no use in trying to rehabilitate those on the fringe of society if, at the same time, they are taught to do wrong.

We are now worried about the life of the murderer, but not about the causes which led him to commit a crime.

When criminals are jailed, are studies made of their life and their past to find out about the reasons why they got there?

Since there is little certainty that abolishing the death penalty would be beneficial to our society, which is responsible for the protection of the community, and in view of the fact that most citizens of my constituency are in favour of the death penalty, I cannot vote in favour of the bill now under study.

Abolitionists say that there is some danger of condemning innocent people. If it can be proven that judicial errors were committed in the past, it is not the penalty that should be changed, but the judicial proceedings on evidence and doubt.

Even though governments throughout the world seem to be moving towards abolition of the death penalty, they do not do so with the support of the majority of the people. The most recent Gallup poll in Canada, published in February, 1972, showed that almost two thirds of Canadians want the death penalty to be reinstated, after the five-year trial period, in the case of murder.

If it is true that we represent our electors in the House, I think that it is logical to vote on this bill, in accordance with the wishes of most of them. Some members regularly speak in favour of retaining the death penalty and at the same time, some citizens would like other crimes such as kidnapping, rape and drug traffic be also liable to death penalty. Public opinion remains inexorably in favour thereof; most people, especially police officers and prison guards, feel it is effective; therefore, that view deserves to be upheld. It would almost be impossible to find another punishment to be substituted for the death penalty; even long-term imprisonment is not sufficient and the custom of an early parole makes it less effective.

On the other hand, life imprisonment which, in my opinion, is more cruel than death, leaves no hope to the criminal and does not lead him to repent as does the prospect of an immediate death penalty.

And if one does not think sufficient the reason that public opinion in Canada is definitely in favour of capital punishment and that it should not be abolished against the will of the majority of Canadians, let us consider that the law enforcement authorities are of the opinion that death penalty is an effective deterrent against murder, particularly since it deters professional criminals from procuring weapons and committing acts of violence.

In a country such as Canada, which is young and in full development, where the people are a mixture of several nationalities, there is a greater need for a deterrent such as capital punishment than in some other countries, in Western Europe, for instance, which have been constituted over a longer period of time and in a much more homogenous way in terms of race, language, religion and mentality. The incidence of murder and the proportion of premeditated homicides are higher in the United States and Canada than in western Europe. The abolishment of capital punishment would therefore involve a greater risk in the United States and in Canada than in Western Europe; it would result in a recurrence or an increase of crimes of violence. Furthermore, those who resort to violence are predominantly professional criminals for whom capital punishment is a more effective deterrent than mere detention, to which they are already accustomed and which they tend to consider as a professional hazard.

The Royal Commission of Inquiry stresses the fact that any world history teaches us that the threat of imminent death is the most effective deterrent there is. Death is death and there is no better description of the terror it inspires. When capital punishment really exists, would-be killers has little or no conception of his changes of not ending his life by the executioner's hand. Capital punishment therefore retains its deterrent effect. When homicide is committed, it is evident that the deterrent effect of capital punishment failed, but that does not mean it did not prevent many others from committing a homicide. When a murder is premeditated, it is not logical to suppose that its author would ordinarily have thought of the danger of getting caught and its consequences.

Most statistics that do not usually show up the death penalty as a deterrent are gathered by abolitionists. In other words, their figures are not compiled with a view to drawing a conclusion; they are gathered instead to confirm a conclusion already arrived at through moral, philosophical or even intuitive reasoning. Statistics lend themselves to various interpretations: they are doubtful and misleading. It is next to impossible to make useful comparisons between countries, because of the differences in legal definitions of crimes, government department and court customs, political, economic and social conditions.

That is why, instead of suggesting the abolition of the death penalty for the next five years, I would suggest on the contrary that the House agree to vote its reinstatement for the next five years.

That way, we would be in a position to get the comparative statistics we need to discuss coherently either a permanent abolition or permanent reinstatement of the death penalty.

We would then have available the data required to compare the last five years to the forthcoming five, and such a comparison would indicate clearly whether or not capital punishment has a deterrent effect on criminals.

Of course, I would suggest that alternative only if the House were unwilling to vote in favour of permanent reinstatement of the death penalty.

Mr. Dan McKenzie (Winnipeg South Centre): Mr. Speaker, in view of the debate that has preceded me on the subject of capital punishment, I find it difficult to advance any arguments which have not been previously articulated. Thus portions of my address may sound repetitious and familiar. None the less, as the elected representative for Winnipeg South Centre I feel it is my responsibility to express the feelings of my constituents on this very important matter.

Like all other hon. members, I have received great quantities of mail with regard to the issue of capital punishment. While letters have been written espousing the abolitionist position, the great majority of my correspondence, 80 per cent in fact, has come from those within my riding who advocate the retention of the death penalty for murder in Canada. I believe their biases are similar to those held by the majority of Canadians. As such, the death penalty for murder should be reinstated. Personally, I favour the retention of capital punishment. However, I would prefer to see some flexibility incorporated in any amendments to the Criminal Code.

The arguments offered by my constituents for retention of capital punishment are similar to those put forth by most Canadians. People make reference to the Bible, to statistics and to the deterrent effect of a death penalty. Even though the Bible is contradictory on the subject and says "thou shalt not kill," many quote what they see as a biblical axiom, an "eye for an eye". The Bible says that society has the right to put a murderer to death. Numerous people in my riding believe that the current government, which is society in this case, is fulfilling neither its moral obligation to its people nor its Christian obligation to God.

The crime rate is rising in Canada, and while statistics prove little or nothing most people believe that abolition of capital punishment would, among other things, only aid and abet organized crime in its current expansion into Canada. People are afraid. They are afraid of being mugged, robbed and beaten. We as politicians have all witnessed this fear. During an election people are afraid to open their doors to us and our fellow campaigners. They peek out from behind closed doors, bolted with chains.

Mr. Peters: Only when Conservatives call. It does not happen with the NDP.

Mr. McKenzie: They would not even open the door then. Policemen are afraid. So are prison guards. What protection do they have, or have they had during the past five years when the government has granted clemency in every capital case? The hired syndicate gangsters and others who commit premeditated murders have had little to fear since 1967 and would be even less afraid with abolition. The death penalty prevents a criminal from repeating his offence. Hanging may not deter murderers, but it sure gets rid of them.

Several years ago in Winnipeg a man named Westgate murdered a young secretary in a local hotel. Sentenced to life imprisonment at the Stony Mountain penitentiary, Westgate was a model prisoner. He earned a free pass or leave to go to Winnipeg, whereupon he proceeded to murder another girl in the same hotel. He repeated his offence. I could cite numerous other instances where murderers have repeated their crime, but this is unnecessary. The point is clear. Most people believe that it is time the government gave some thought to the innocent victims and their families.

Abolitionists point to studies showing that a halt in executions leads to no increase in capital crimes, that the death penalty has not been proven to have a deterrent effect. Such studies include all murders, a great percentage of which result from disputes between persons who know each other, and this percentage probably cannot be deterred by penalties of any kind. However, a great many people are sure that hold-up murders and similar crimes can be reduced in number by the fear of death, particularly if that death is imposed quickly rather than after years of legal delays. To determine whether a murder was premeditated or impulsive is impossible. That is why people believe there must be a uniform penalty applicable to all murderers.

While I am in favour of the capital penalty, I disapprove of the rigid inflexibility of a uniform penalty for all murderers. Every person is different. So is every murder. This is to be considered in any future legislation. There must be clearly defined maximum and minimum penalties for murder, dependent upon the nature of the crime. Obviously, a premeditated murder by a hired killer deserves more severe punishment than the impulsive murder committed by a drunk in a fit of wild anger. Judges must be empowered to levy sentences which fit the particular crime. It is only through legislation incorporating such flexibility that any law on capital punishment can be said to be just.

In conclusion, my constituents definitely favour capital punishment for murder. I feel likewise, but would like to see a greater degree of pliancy injected into any legislation. It is not capital punishment that is barbaric, but murder. Capital punishment seeks retribution, and not vengeance as some have implied. This retribution is what my constituents demand. I feel that their desire is characteristic of the majority of Canadians. Because of this fact I think it is necessary for parliament to retain the death penalty for murder in Canada.

Mr. H. T. Herbert (Vaudreuil): Mr. Speaker, I do not intend to speak either in favour of the death penalty or for abolition. I am, however, hoping that this bill passes second reading so that in committee it can be amended as necessary and the majority result returned to this House for final decision. My own opinion is best expressed by an extract from an editorial in the News and Chronical which reads as follows:

Is it Ottawa's . . . duty to see that we do what is right, or at least what they think is right, whether we want to or not . . . or is it their responsibility as our elected representatives to ensure that the decisions and wants of the majority are respected?

While the abolitionists . . . may argue over the morality or even the effectiveness of the death penalty, neither side seems to have questioned the validity of a number of polls that have been conducted and show quite clearly that the majority of Canadians are in favour of capital punishment.

—majority of Canadians are convinced that dangling a man from the end of a short rope is a deterrent to crime or justice well-served or an effective protection for society—

. . . it is the responsibility of those who are opposed to capital punishment to persuade and convince enough other Canadians to their way of thinking to form a majority.

But is it the right of our members of parliament to enforce what is now a minority opinion down the majority's collective necks?

—when the vote comes in Ottawa let it reflect the will of the majority of Canadians.

That poses the question: what is the will of the majority? Like other members of this House, I have received a large number of letters expressing all points of view and I wonder whether the several hundred letters I have received are really representative of the majority opinion of my constituents. Some of the opinions expressed are as follows:

We are shocked at the increase in crime and feel that the authorities must help the police, who badly need the death penalty restored.

Another opinion is:

I wish to urge you to vote in favour of the bill being presented to the House on capital punishment. This legislation was a positive step forward in our system of justice—a step toward civilization. Please do not let us slip back to legal murder.

Another opinion is:

We seem to be in times that steadily are becoming more lawless and therefore further relaxation of penalties would not be advisable.

This is another opinion:

Why should we not punish criminals with a Canadian "Siberia" in the north, building settlements, railways, airports, pipelines?

[Translation]

Those who favour capital punishment do not do so for the fun of it, or for the sake of justice; they all believe that the government is much too soft and indifferent towards law-abiding citizens.

A lawyer who is a friend of mine had this to say to me:

Among the criteria for sentencing, the example factor should be considered—if punishment is not severe enough, there is the risk of a relapse.

It is difficult to determine which punishment would be best suited in each individual case.

In our permissive society, however, this penalty seems the most adequate punishment.

It would be advisable to suggest to the capital punishment abolitionists that they should oppose wars.

Surely the murderer does not share the opinion of those who want the death penalty to be maintained.

We often hear: it is better to let a criminal go free than to hang an innocent.

However, before a convicted person is condemned, there are four stages to go through before the final decision is made.

1) Trial before jury: 12 citizen jurors.

2) Trial before the Court of Queen's Bench: 5 judges.

3) Trial before the Supreme Court: 9 judges.

4) Mercy request to Cabinet: 30 ministers.

It should therefore be realized that 56 persons have to have their say before the accused is condemned to death.

Perhaps sentences could be commuted if we knew for sure that the convicts would not be paroled too soon.

I think that the Parole Board legislation is adequate but they are not properly enforced. Paroled convicts are not properly supervised by our probation officers.

It has never been, and it will never be proven that a criminal was deterred from committing murder by the death penalty.

This was a lawyer's opinion.

[English]

On a number of occasions during this debate hon. members have quoted from the Bible. Let me refer to another opinion as follows:

When Noah stepped out of the ark God changed some of the rules of society. First he added animal meat to man's permissible diet but forbad the eating of blood. Then he instituted capital punishment:

"And surely your blood of your lives will I require; at the hand of every beast will I require it, and at the hand of man; at the hand of every man's brother will I require the life of man. Who so sheddeth man's blood, by man shall his blood be shed: for in the image of God made He man. Genesis 9:5-6.

Thus the institution of capital punishment was based on the doctrine of creation. And the sanctity of human life was to be protected by making murder a capital offence.

Later we find this statement:

Capital punishment is a command, not an option. Gentile governments have the responsibility to maintain the sanctity of human life. God's command for doing this is: "At the hand of every man's brother will I require the life of man."

Then we find this statement:

Mercy is often in order. But to terminate the use of capital punishment, and to remove it from the law books of the land, whether by courts or by cabinet . . . or by parliament, is national disobedience to the word of God. And the nation, like the individual, shall reap what it sows.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I regret to interrupt the hon. member, but it is ten o'clock.

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

A motion to adjourn the House under Standing Order 40 deemed to have been moved.

FINANCE—MEETING OF FEDERAL AND PROVINCIAL FINANCE MINISTERS—DISCUSSION OF MEANS TO RELIEVE TAX BURDEN ON RURAL RESIDENTS

Hon. J. A. MacLean (Malpeque): Mr. Speaker, on January 15, as recorded at page 269 of Hansard, I asked the Minister of Finance (Mr. Turner) the following question:

Will the minister be seeking jointly with the provincial ministers of finance means of relieving the tax burden on rural people? I ask this in light of the fact that the number of people employed in agriculture dropped by 31,000 in the recent 12-month period.

It was reasonable for me not to expect a definitive reply on the subject matter of the discussions which I hope the Minister of Finance held with his provincial counterparts until the budget was brought down. Now that the budget has been brought down, I expect I will be told that the problem is solved and I have nothing to be concerned about. Undoubtedly I shall be told this, for two reasons. It will be said that the problem is looked after, first because the government has seen fit to remove, under certain stringent conditions, the capital gains tax on a family farm when a farmer dies and the farm is passed on to a member of his own family. In that connection, I feel the imposition of this tax in the first place was an unwise move. I think its partial removal does not go far enough. I believe a capital gains tax should not apply to a farm when passed from father to son during the life of the father. I do not think a farmer should have to die in order to obtain the benefit from this supposed tax relief.

Second, no doubt I shall be told that the inclusion of municipal taxes imposed for local school purposes in the equalization system will have some resulting benefit to the poorer provinces. This is true, and I welcome this item in the budget. However, I am not satisfied that these two measures alone meet the problem on which I based my question. The second budget proposal I mentioned does not give any relative benefit to a rural or urban area. In his budget speech, the minister spoke of the hard pressed property owners. Perhaps this is the case. Because farmers in the business of agriculture must own a great deal of real estate and, due to the trend over recent decades of larger and larger farms being encouraged under the farm credit system in which all levels of government have indulged in recent years, where large loans have become popular and more liable to be approved than modest loans for modest operations, the trend has been that farms have been getting bigger and bigger. However, it does not follow that their earning capacity has been increasing in proportion to their size.

The farmer finds that his capital investment in land is being taxed more heavily by municipal school boards which base their tax on real estate values chiefly for educational purposes. These taxes must be paid whether or not the farmer is making a profit, and the rate of taxation often bears no relationship to the potential productivity of the land in question from an agricultural point of view.

I recognize this as primarily a provincial responsibility, but there is an urgent need for improvement of the assessment methods used in assessing real estate for tax purposes. Many cases can be cited where farmlands are assessed, and therefore taxed, on values which bear little resemblance to their potential productive possibilities or to their profitability as farms. They are valued because of their potential as land for a subdivision, or in my province quite often because they contain a waterfront with a beach, or something of that sort. This creates a situation where the farmer who has waterfront property is forced to pay a higher rate of tax than one who does not.

I think my time has expired, Mr. Speaker.

[Translation]

Mr. J.-Roland Comtois (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, replying to the question of the hon. member for Malpeque (Mr. MacLean), I would like to remind him that the budget which the hon. Minister of Finance (Mr. Turner) introduced in this House last night includes many provisions that will help alleviate substantially the tax burden of people in rural areas. Some of these provisions are extended to all Canadians, including those in rural areas, whereas others are intended specifically for rural people.

Among the former is the increase in the basic exemption from $1,500 to $1,600 for single persons and from $2,850 to $3,000 for married couples. I should also mention the reduction of 5 per cent in the basic federal income tax and the provision for a minimum reduction of $100. This provision is particularly important in that it will allow for reductions in federal income tax of up to 100 per cent in the case of low income people. It is estimated that these measures will take 750,000 people off federal income tax lists and I think it is reasonable to assume that a great number of them will precisely be people from rural areas.

Among the measures dealing specifically with people in rural areas one has to mention that which provides that from now on family farms, upon decease of the owner, will be transferred from one generation to the other without being subject to capital gains tax.

Mr. Speaker, when referring to the tax burden of people in rural areas, mention is often made of the heavy land taxes that these people have to support; obviously, this is not a federal responsibility—and I think the hon. member for Malpeque will agree—but one must point out the broadening of the equalization formula proposed in the budget which will ensure that local school taxes on properties are included in the equalization formula.

Since those equalization payments will represent roughly $190 million during the next fiscal year, this means that about 28 per cent of local school taxes levied in certain provinces will be compensated by that amount. I hope substantial benefits will accrue to taxpayers.

In conclusion, Mr. Speaker, I should like to mention that other steps to alleviate the tax burden of people living in rural areas have been proposed; for example, the federal sales tax exemption granted on equipment and machinery purchases for farm production purposes.

In brief, Mr. Speaker, this shows that the federal government looked very seriously into the problem raised by my hon. colleague from Malpeque and proposed measures which will contribute to reduce substantially all those problems.

GRAIN—REPORTED ADVICE BY MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE TO FARMERS ON AMOUNT OF WHEAT THAT SHOULD BE PLANTED

Mr. A. P. Gleave (Saskatoon-Biggar): Mr. Speaker, on January 22 I asked the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Whelan) to clarify a statement which appeared in the press where he was reported to have advised the farmers of western Canada to plant some 30 million acres of wheat. He subsequently said, and I of course accept his correction, that he was misquoted. At this point, however, I would suggest that the government, in the person of the Minister of Agriculture or the minister in charge of the Wheat Board, should clarify its position in regard to the market outlook and the plantings they are recommending to the grain producers in western Canada.

In a press release dated February 19, the minister in charge of the Wheat Board said that as of March 1 some clear direction in terms of initial prices and recommendations in regard to plantings would be forthcoming. In discussing this matter in the House I said that it would be useful to have these recommendations before the Standing Committee on Agriculture so that they could be properly examined and farmers would know the objectives and be able to study them.

We find now that the United States government has said it is going to bring some 15 million acres into production that would otherwise have been withheld as a stated policy of that government. We know that policies regarding production can change in other countries, which will effect Canadian farmers substantially. It is in these circumstances that I ask the Minister of Agriculture to clarify his position and that of his colleague and to tell us what their aims are.

The minister in charge of the Wheat Board is currently sending out a questionnaire of sorts to farmers in western Canada asking them what type of acreage payments they want, whether they want them to apply to grain, or how they want them to apply and what their intentions are with regard to planting. I do not know whether this questionnaire will clarify or confuse the situation. In a press release of February 17, the minister said that permit holders must weigh heavily the responsibility of possibly causing an overproduction of wheat by deciding upon distribution on a per bushel basis. On one hand he is worrying about an overproduction of wheat, and on the other hand we have had statements indicating that we should be going all out in grain production.

I think farmers might do well to take the advice of Mr. E. K. Turner, president of the Saskatchewan wheat pool, who is reported in the Globe and Mail of January 31 to have said that farmers in western Canada should sow 22 million to 24 million acres of wheat this year in order to meet market commitments, and that about 14 million acres of barley would be needed. Mr. Turner told a pool meeting in Saskatoon that we would probably need that much barley and about 3½ million acres of rapeseed.

If these two ministers would hold a meeting with some of the farm leaders in western Canada, I think they might receive very good advice. In turn, the farmers would be given better direction than is the case now. I therefore ask the Minister of Agriculture if he will clarify the position of the government so that the farmers may know clearly its assessment of the present market potential and what assistance they can expect in terms of initial prices and guarantees of delivery for grain production in the coming year.

Hon. E. F. Whelan (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, in replying to the hon. member's question may I repeat, as I said originally, that at no time did I say there should be produced 30 million acres of wheat. I think the hon. member accepted what I said. I say that to clarify the situation. The mention of 30 million acres arose from the newspaper man quoting a member of the Saskatchewan wheat pool who expressed the fear that farmers in western Canada might produce 30 million acres of wheat.

When the newsman spoke to me he said that farm leaders in western Canada had intimated that they would produce 30 million acres of wheat this year. I said at that time that I had never suggested this. I had suggested that farmers should produce all kinds of grain; I included farmers producing grains in all parts of Canada, not just those of the west. A tremendous amount of grain is produced in western Canada. We know that it is possible to increase the production of grain with present cultivated acreage. By using weed control and fertilizers we can increase production by at least 25 per cent in one year. I might inform the hon. member that I met with fertilizer suppliers from across Canada, particularly western Canada, earlier this year and they told me that farmers are buying fertilizer and storing it and preparing for exactly what the hon. member suggested.

May I refer to one or two other matters. We talk about the United States government taking acreage out of land banks and putting it into production this year. According to my information, that government is asking farmers not to produce that much more wheat; they want to increase the production of protein in that country. They want greater soybean production and are trying to encourage farmers to produce additional millions of acres of soybean. We know what has happened to Canada because of lack of proteins for animal feeds. These feeds are very expensive. As well, in western Canada we are still asking farmers to stay in livestock production and even to increase it. We are continuing our grassland incentive program, hoping that farmers will participate in it because we know how important it is.

May I inform the hon. member, if he is not aware of this, that I met practically every farm leader in western Canada before the end of December and asked them the very questions that the hon. member is now suggesting I should ask. At that time the farm leaders made suggestions, although not as many as were made after the erroneous report about 30 million acres was circulated. After that we heard many more expressions of opinion. Perhaps that erroneous report was not so bad in its effect because we found out what people were thinking. To conclude, I have a lot of confidence in the farmers of Canada. They know what they want to do. They are not indentured to anybody, and they know as much as anybody about what can be done. They are the producers of these products.

CANADIAN BROADCASTING CORPORATION—OPPOSITION OF CANADIAN TEACHERS FEDERATION TO TRANSFER OF RIGHTS TO FILM VIDEOTAPE TO PRIVATE COMPANY

Mr. Mark Rose (Fraser Valley West): Mr. Speaker, to give some background to the question I wish to discuss tonight, may I refer briefly to an extract of a brief presented by the Canadian Teachers Federation to the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau), dated January 5, 1973. Part of the brief reads:

> (iii) That adequate arrangements be made for the full and free use in Canadian schools, for educational purposes, of programs developed with support from public funds under federal control.

The brief continues:

> In connection with point (iii) we note with deep dismay that the exclusive rights to post-broadcast distribution of CBC materials are in private hands. In effect, the availability of such materials to Canadian schools is subject to the profit interests of a subsidiary of an American company which is itself a major producer of scholastic materials—

• (2220)

Departing from the text, the subsidiary is Visual Education Centre Limited of Toronto which is thought to be a subsidiary of Encyclopedia Britannica, an American company. The brief continues:

> —and which is in competition with the CBC and other producers for sales in a limited market.

That is the Canadian market.

> We do not believe that it is proper that the program materials produced by CBC, by a considerable expenditure of public moneys, should be placed in the hands of a commercial rival for post-broadcast distribution on a private profit basis.

It makes the distinction between that which has been produced by public funds and the material used over CBC obtained on contract, through agreement with private film makers or imported from abroad. It is not concerned with that particular material.

> We recognize that problems of copyright arise in relation to the post-broadcast use of radio and television materials, and we shall address appropriate requests to the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs.

That paragraph is not exactly central to the point I wish to discuss this evening. It is a copyright matter, but it is also part of the problem. This action of the CBC has caused some concern among teachers and school districts. I believe the contracts have run for about two years. I wish to quote briefly from a letter addressed to the hon. member for Comox-Alberni (Mr. Barnett). It is from the Campbell River school district in his constituency. The co-ordinator of instructional resources makes the following points:

> (1) We object to the fact that CBC produces programs with our tax dollar, then sells these programs to a private company who resells them to us.
> (2) We object to the fact that even those CBC programs not purchased by Visual Education Centre Ltd. are being restricted by this same company.
> (3) We object to the fact that televised information from our leaders, in all aspects of Canadian life, as being restricted in its use for our students.

What they are saying involves a bit of the copyright question because for educational purposes it is sometimes necessary to delay broadcasts for rebroadcast at a more convenient time. This is a copyright matter. I repeat that I am not dealing with this at the moment; nevertheless a definite problem exists there.

In the couple of minutes remaining I wish to give a bit of information about this particular arrangement with the CBC and Visual Education Centre. It expires in 1974. What does the contract do? It authorizes Visual Education Centre to distribute educational films. This company makes prints and sells them. By its contract it is also given the right to exploit, sell, market or peddle authorized CBC films. In return, the CBC receives a percentage of the gross sales. It may be that the CBC feels schools are concerned about the fact they cannot videotape copies of CBC educational material. That requires action under the Copyright Act. Nevertheless, there is a very limited market here for Canadian production and the schools of our country, supported as they are by public funds in the same way as the CBC, should have the first crack at access to this material without having to make the payment prescribed by the contract which the CBC has concluded with Visual Education Centre.

I have, I believe, less than a minute left and in this time I wish to make certain recommendations. Though the cabinet may not meet, as requested, with the Canadian Teachers Federation to discuss this question, the minister should certainly do so and use his good offices to discourage the CBC from continuing this private distribution contract for the reasons I have mentioned, and for others which will be adduced by the CTF. Second, the CBC material should be distributed through provincial audio-visual services. Such services exist in every province. Thus, it could be carried out simply. Alternatively, we should set up a Crown distributing system. I believe the former secretary of state at one time suggested such a thing. I am anxious, now, to hear what the parliamentary secretary has to read to me from his prepared statement.

[Translation]

Mr. Gilles Marceau (Parliamentary Secretary to Secretary of State): Mr. Speaker, the laws or rules allow the hon. member asking a question to have seven minutes but leave only three minutes to answer, so I cannot give a complete answer concerning the point made by my hon. friend.

But if I refer to Hansard I see that my hon. friend for Fraser Valley West (Mr. Rose) asked the minister whether he intended to meet the representatives of the Canadian Teachers Federation.

In this connection, I would like to point out that this association submitted a brief to the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) on January 12. Through its president, the federation asked for a meeting with officials of all departments mentioned in its brief, namely External Affairs, Secretary of State, Communications, Consumer and Corporate Affairs, Manpower and Immigration, National Health and Welfare, Finance and National Revenue.

It was then understood that the Secretary of State (Mr. Faulkner) would get in touch with Mr. Sparkes, the president of the federation, in order to set a meeting for the discussion of the brief. That meeting is scheduled for the beginning of next month; March 12 has been suggested but it has not been confirmed yet.

As for the brief, I would like to refer my hon. friend to a part of the introduction of the brief where it is mentioned expressly that the federation recognizes that the provincial governments have the authority to legislate on education. This being said, my hon. friend is well aware of the provincial jurisdiction in that area and he will understand that before making statements, the submission made by the federation, which will get special attention, will have to be examined in detail.

I also refer my hon. friend to the brief where it is said that teachers associations must try to maintain a constant dialogue with their government so that they agree, in view of the anticipated social changes. This is an excellent statement, the contents of which we support and my hon. friend and other hon. members may be assured that the members of the federation and its officials will be welcomed in a very friendly way. With them and with my hon. friend's co-operation, we shall try to examine the various proposals and to find a solution in keeping with the circumstances.

Motion agreed to and the House adjourned at 10.31 p.m.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Wednesday, February 21, 1973

The House met at 2 p.m.

PRIVILEGE

MR. BEATTIE (HAMILTON MOUNTAIN)—INVESTITURE OF CERTAIN MEMBERS OF ARMED FORCES IN ORDER OF MILITARY MERIT

Mr. Duncan M. Beattie (Hamilton Mountain): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a question of privilege. I ask the indulgence of the House to salute the 92 members of our armed forces to be honoured by the Governor General at Rideau Hall tonight. There they will participate in the investiture of the Order of Military Merit, a distinguished award for meritorious military service.

I understand that a number of the recipients are in the gallery today, and since only two of the 92 are of the fairer sex I am sure hon. members will not object to my naming Captain Edna Stokes, from the beautiful riding of Hamilton Mountain, for singular attention.

ROUTINE PROCEEDINGS

LENGTH OF SPEECHES IN BUDGET DEBATE

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, I thought it might be best to raise the point I am about to raise on motions. It has to do with certain discussions that have taken place about the length of speeches in the budget debate. I believe the whips have discussed a possible time limitation for each category of participants as follows. Party leaders would be limited to 40 minutes each and official spokesmen for parties and ministers would be limited to 30 minutes, but in either of these categories the time could be extended with the consent of the House. All other members would be limited to 15 minutes, without any opportunity to ask the House for additional time. The purpose really is to provide for the greatest possible participation in the debate. I thought I might make known to the House the purport of the discussions so that the proposal might be put in the form of a House order later if it is found to be agreeable.

Mr. Baldwin: Mr. Speaker, we would like to take this proposal under advisement for today, in any event. We might be able to get in touch with the government House leader later today for further discussion of the matter.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, if the hon. member for Peace River can see his way clear later today to agree to the proposal, may I indicate in advance that we will be happy to agree to it being made a House order.

[Translation]

Mr. Fortin: Mr. Speaker, I have already indicated that our party agrees with this arrangement.

[English]

INTRODUCTION OF REFERENCE TO COMMITTEE ON PROCEDURE AND ORGANIZATION

Mr. David MacDonald (Egmont): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order which is also related to House business. In view of the two or three discussions we have had during the past week or two and the commitment by the President of the Privy Council with respect to the immediate establishment of the Standing Committee on Procedure and Organization so that it can deal with the many questions that have concerned members on both sides of the House, particularly with respect to the operation of the question period and other related matters, can the government House leader indicate if we can expect the terms of reference to establish this committee to appear on the order paper within the next day or so?

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, I have the terms of reference prepared and am hoping to have them examined at a meeting of House leaders which I hope will take place later today or early tomorrow morning.

CITIZENSHIP

EXTENSION TO ALL PERSONS WHO SERVED IN ARMED FORCES IN WORLD WARS—REQUEST FOR UNANIMOUS CONSENT TO MOVE MOTION

Mr. Duncan M. Beattie (Hamilton Mountain): Mr. Speaker, under the provisions of Standing Order 43 I ask the unanimous consent of the House to move a motion of urgent and pressing necessity. At the present time there are many long-time residents of Canada who valiantly served this country, some through two world wars, in the Canadian Armed Forces and who will soon lose their right to vote if they do not apply for Canadian citizenship. I would move, seconded by the hon. member for Burnaby-Richmond-Delta (Mr. Reynolds):

That anyone who has served with the Canadian Armed Forces and is the recipient of an honourable discharge be granted immediate Canadian citizenship.

• (1410)

Mr. Speaker: Hon. members have heard the motion proposed by the hon. member for Hamilton Mountain. Under the terms of Standing Order 43 this motion requires the unanimous consent of the House. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. Speaker: There is not unanimity. The motion cannot be put.

FINANCE

ABOLITION OF SALES TAX ON BUILDING MATERIALS—REQUEST FOR UNANIMOUS CONSENT TO MOVE MOTION

Mr. Oza Tétrault (Villeneuve): Mr. Speaker, under the provisions of Standing Order 43, I should like to move a motion bringing to the attention of the House a matter of pressing—

[English]

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Hees: Did you slip on a banana, Joe?

Some hon. Members: Explain.

Mr. Speaker: Is the hon. member for Cape Breton-East Richmond rising on a question of privilege?

Mr. MacInnis (Cape Breton-East Richmond): Mr. Speaker, because of the appearance of the hon. member for St. Boniface (Mr. Guay), I want to assure all members of the House that I had nothing to do with it.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

[Translation]

Mr. Tétrault: Mr. Speaker, under the terms of Standing Order 43, I should like to move a motion to bring to the attention of the House a matter of pressing necessity, the importance of which the government seems to have overlooked when it brought down the budget.

I am thinking of the 11 per cent sales tax on building materials which prevents Canadians from owning their own homes. I move, therefore, seconded by the hon. member for Lotbinière (Mr. Fortin):

That this House study as soon as possible the possibility and urgency of repealing the 11 per cent sales tax on building materials to enable all Canadians who so desire to build single-unit dwellings at a decent price taking into account their limited family income.

Mr. Speaker: Hon. members have heard the motion of the hon. member. Under Standing Order 43, this motion requires the unanimous consent. Is the House unanimous?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

[Mr. Beattie (Hamilton Mountain).]

Mr. Speaker: As the House is not unanimous, the motion may not be put.

INFORMATION

AGREEMENT SIGNED BY BROADCASTERS AND SECURITY SERVICES—REQUEST FOR UNANIMOUS CONSENT TO MOVE MOTION

Mr. Gilbert Rondeau (Shefford): Mr. Speaker, pursuant to Standing Order 43, I ask for unanimous consent of the House to present a motion on a matter of urgent and pressing necessity.

In view of citizens' entitlement to objective information in order to safeguard their freedom, in view also of the importance of the media in our daily life and following the recent agreement between Canadian broadcasters and security services in Canada, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Portneuf (Mr. Godin):

That this House instruct the Committee on Broadcasting, Films and Assistance to the Arts to examine all causes of the agreement entered into by broadcasters and security services of Canada, particularly in case of a national emergency, as well as all potential effects on the level of freedom of Canadians and on their right to objective information, and to report to the House within the shortest possible delay.

Mr. Speaker: The House has heard the motion brought forward by the hon. member. Under Standing Order 43, it requires unanimous consent of the House. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. Speaker: There is no unanimity and therefore the motion cannot be put.

SOCIAL SECURITY

LOWERING OF AGE OF ELIGIBILITY FOR OLD AGE PENSION TO 60—REQUEST FOR UNANIMOUS CONSENT TO MOVE MOTION

Mr. Roland Godin (Portneuf): Mr. Speaker, I rise under Standing Order 43 to request the unanimous consent of the House to propose a motion on an issue of national urgency.

As automation plays a leading part in our economy, as an increasing number of Canadian citizens find themselves jobless without any possibility of finding work and without financial resources as soon as they reach the critical age of 55, and as this problem is getting more serious every day and no permanent solution seems to be applied at this time, I propose, seconded by the hon. member for Abitibi (Mr. Laprise):

That this House instruct the Committee on Health, Welfare and Social Affairs to make a thorough examination of the situation existing in the case of this group of people aged 55 and over, to analyse the possibilities of lowering old age security pensionable age to 60 and to report to this House.

Mr. Speaker: The House has heard the hon. member's motion. Under Standing Order 43, this motion requires unanimous consent from the House. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. Speaker: As there is not unanimity, the motion cannot be put.

STUDY OF EMERGENCY PROCEDURES BY LIEUTENANT-GENERAL DARE

Question No. 20—Mr. Rowland:

1. Has the study of emergency procedures conducted by Lieutenant-General Dare been completed and submitted for consideration?

2. What are the terms of reference for the study?

3. Is it the intention to continue the employment of the former Vice-Chief of the Defence Staff as (a) a public servant, on contract (b) an Order in Council appointment to the staff of the Privy Council or Prime Minister's Office?

4. What will be the status of the conclusions of the Dare Study in relation to the Report by the Standing Committee on External Affairs and National Defence, as tabled on June 29, 1972?

5. Will the Standing Committee be given the opportunity of reviewing and commenting on General Dare's recommendations?

6. Will General Dare's report be made public?

7. Will portions of the report or summary of its findings be made public and, if so, which ones?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): 1. General Dare has submitted a summary of his major findings and conclusions and is now in the process of completing his report.

2. On May 1, 1972, General Dare was given the following terms of reference:

> In general to carry out the Cabinet decision of July 22, 1971, that "a study be initiated into the subject of crisis-handling methods and structures within the federal government with a view to determining the means whereby better control and co-ordination among departments and agencies in the handling of natural and man-made disasters can be effected."
> To study and report on the problems of recognizing and defining "crisis-indicators" and of criteria which must be applied for any event and/or a trend to require crisis management action.
> To study and report on crisis-sensing techniques and methods and techniques of crisis decision-making.
> To study and report on the current state of crisis-management preparedness including such problems as control, co-ordination, communications, facilities and ministerial responsibilities and authorities.

To study and report on the criteria which must apply in any crisis situation before the Prime Minister and the Cabinet would be required to exercise and perform emergency powers.

To study and report on such physical, organizational and procedural preparations as may be required to enable the Prime Minister and the Cabinet to exercise and perform emergency powers when a natural or man-made crisis occurs.

That for the purpose of this study LGEN Dare will be seconded to the Privy Council Office effective May 1, 1972, with necessary office space and equipment to be provided by the Privy Council Office and with a combination of loaned and seconded staff, providing that in the case of seconded staff the approval of the Director of Administration, PCO, will be required.

3. Lieutenant-General Dare was seconded to the Privy Council Office from the Department of National Defence for the purpose indicated above. It is not intended to continue his employment there or in the Prime Minister's Office.

4. In view of the terms of reference described above, it is expected that the conclusions of the Dare report will deal peripherally with some of the matters embodied in the Report of the Standing Committee on External Affairs and National Defence. By virtue of the terms of reference, the Dare study will have examined a much broader area. Until such time as the report has been studied it is not possible to say what the status of its conclusions will be in relation to the Standing Committee's report of June 29, 1972.

5. This is a matter that will be considered after the government has had an opportunity to consider the report itself.

6. It is the intention of the government to make the report public in due course. It is possible that some parts of it could raise security considerations which would have to be examined, but it seems likely that virtually all of the report can be released. Until such time as the report has been considered by the government, public disclosure will not be made.

7. Yes. A full summary of findings will be made public in due course.

EXPORT OF WHEAT UNDER AGREEMENTS WITH MAINLAND CHINA AND THE U.S.S.R.

Question No. 51—Mr. Diefenbaker:

As of (a) July 31, 1972 (b) December 31, 1972, what were the estimates by the Wheat Board of the number of bushels of wheat of grades available for export under the several agreements with Mainland China and the U.S.S.R. in storage (i) on farms (ii) in elevators of all kinds?

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister of Justice):

	Millions of Bushels
Grade	a(i)	a(ii)	b(i)	b(ii)
1 CWRS	203	151	242	153
2 CWRS	59	56	82	48
3 CWRS	17	20	63	37
ARW	2	1	2	2
1 and 2 Durum	10	20	14	12
3 Durum	11	5	24	9
Ex 4 Durum	5	9	10	5
4 Durum	2	3	12	4

[Mr. Trudeau.]

The foregoing quantities are estimates based on figures published by Statistics Canada and the Canadian Grain Commission, pro-rated as to grade in conformity with Wheat Board estimates by grade resulting from data provided to the Board by elevator managers. They represent the estimated total available stocks in all positions out of which the necessary quantities are being drawn to fill existing contracts with the People's Republic of China and the U.S.S.R. as well as all commitments to other purchasers.

WHEAT SHIPMENTS—DEMURRAGE CHARGES

Question No. 55—Mr. Diefenbaker:

1. What was the total amount paid for demurrage by the Wheat Board in 1972 for ships which were held up in Vancouver Harbour awaiting wheat cargoes?

2. Is the Wheat Board to receive payment of said amount from the Government of Canada or, if not, is it to be considered as a marketing expense which will come out of the farmer producers?

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister of Justice): 1. $2,326,469.25.

2. Where demurrage is incurred for the account of the Canadian Wheat Board, it is considered to be a marketing expense payable out of the Canadian Wheat Board pool accounts. Whether this amount comes out of sales proceeds or from the government of Canada depends on whether a particular account is in deficit or surplus.

Question No. 58—Mr. Wise:

1. What government agencies are presently used in the promotion of agricultural export sales and in what countries are they now active?

Government departments and agencies currently used in the promotion of agricultural sales abroad are the Department of Industry, Trade and Commerce and the Canadian Wheat Board. Promotions are pursued in all potential markets, particularly in those countries where Canada has Canadian Government Trade Commissioner Offices.

2. Preliminary estimates place the farm value of Canadian primary agricultural production in calendar year 1971 at $4.53 billion. The value of export sales of agricultural and food products during the same period reached a record of $1.98 billion. Export sales which include processed products as well as farm products account for 44 per cent of the farm value of agricultural production.

*WETASKIWIN, ALBERTA—RELOCATION OF TRACKS

Question No. 508—Mr. Schellenberger:

Has the City of Wetaskiwin, Alberta, requested to have railway tracks running through the centre of the City relocated for safety, traffic and aesthetic reasons and, if so, will the government give favourable consideration to assisting the City and the CPR in proceeding upon an immediate relocation of the tracks?

Mr. Joseph-Philippe Guay (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, the Canadian Transport Commission advises as follows. The city of Wetaskiwin, Alberta, has advised the Canadian Transport Commission of its intention to apply for relocation outside of the city limits of the Canadian Pacific Edmonton/Calgary main line. Under existing legislation there is no provision by which the Canadian Transport Commission can provide financial assistance for the relocation of railway trackage unless the proposed relocation involves the elimination of a crossing at grade, which is eligible for a grant under the Railway Grade Crossing Fund. On October 10, 1972, the Minister of Transport and the Minister of State for Urban Affairs announced that parliament will be asked to approve legislation that would permit the Canadian Transport Commission to make grants for the relocation of railway lines outside of urban areas. In the event that such legislation is approved by parliament, an application by the city of Wetaskiwin for relocation of the CP main line would be considered in accordance with whatever criteria may be established under such legislation.

2. The government is committed to match dollar for dollar contributions received by the Institute for its endowment fund from other sources up to a total of $10 million over a period of seven years from its incorporation.

3. (a) The members of the Board of Directors, including the Chairman, do not receive any salary or remuneration for their services other than reimbursement for actual expenses incurred in discharging the business of the Institute. Mr. John M. Reid (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Privy Council): The answer is yes, Mr. Speaker. DREE—GRANTS TO LENNOX PAPER LIMITED

Question No. 566—Mr. McKenzie:

1. Is it the intention of the Department of Regional Economic Expansion to proceed with incentive grants to Lennox Paper Limited?

2. Has the Department of Regional Economic Expansion any intention of meeting with representatives from Canada's paper industry to discuss any misgivings concerning development incentive grants to Lennox Paper Limited?

Mr. Marcel Prud'homme (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Regional Economic Expansion): 1. A development incentives grant of approximately $870,000, calculated on the basis of 16 per cent of the approved capital costs plus $3,000 for each of the estimated 53 jobs to be created, was accepted by Lennox Paper Limited. This offer is subject to conditions specified under the provisions of the Regional Development Incentives Act. If all the provisions of the legislation are met, the authorization of payment will be processed in the usual manner.

2. As a matter of policy, the Department does not discuss the details of individual cases as this would be a breach of commercial confidentiality. However, a fair amount of correspondence has passed between representatives of the paper industry and the Department. The views of the industry are therefore known to the Department and have been taken into account.

PURCHASING POWER OF 1972 DOLLAR

Question No. 590—Mr. Mather:

With 1949 dollars as a basis, what was the purchasing power of the 1972 dollar?

Hon. John N. Turner (Minister of Finance): The Consumer Price Index measures the percentage change through time in the cost of purchasing a constant quantity and combination of goods and services. Starting with 1961, the index is based on 1957 family expenditure patterns while for the years 1949 to 1960 the index is based on 1947-48 expenditure patterns. The differing weight base periods are arithmetically linked to the time base 1961=100. In 1949, the Consumer Price Index averaged 77.4 and in 1972 it averaged 139.8. Bearing in mind the different expenditure patterns for the index in 1949 and 1972, the purchasing power of the 1972 dollar, in terms of the 1949 dollar, would then be 55 cents.

MARITIME COMMAND—FUEL SHORTAGE

Question No. 605—Mr. Schellenberger:

1. Is there a fuel shortage for helicopters which is hindering operations of HS 50 at CFB Shearwater?

2. How many of the "37" type helicopters are fully serviceable for the 60 pilots of HS 50 to fly?

3. Are pilots allocated sufficient fuel to fly an average of 10 hours of practice monthly, and do they consider 20 hours monthly a minimum safety factor in order to be able to carry out missions and search and rescue operations?

4. Was there a near disaster during a recent mission flown by members of HS 50 and, if so (a) what were the circumstances (b) was a full report ordered (c) did insufficient flying time contribute to such an incident?

5. Is the government planning to allocate more fuel, and thus make more provision for flying time to the pilots of HS 50?

6. Are any steps being taken to provide more fully serviceable helicopters to HS 50?

7. Is there a severe morale problem in HS 50 and, if so, what steps are being taken to correct it?

Hon. James Richardson (Minister of National Defence): 1. No.

2. There are 36 Sea King Helicopters available at CFB Shearwater for flying operations. Sea King Helicopters are cared for under a flexible maintenance system which makes it possible to adjust maintenance activity to best cater for variations in operational requirements. Therefore, day to day serviceability figures are subject to wide variations and do not provide a meaningful gauge of aircraft availability. The serviceability of Sea King Helicopters has been such that HS 50 consistently meets its commitments for operational crews and aircraft. At the present time, however, with the exception of 2 modified aircraft embarked with the Standing Naval Force Atlantic, the Sea Kings are temporarily restricted from operating from HMC Ships pending the completion of an engineering analysis of the undercarriage area; this engineering study was undertaken following the collapse of a stub wing of a Sea King aboard HMCS Fraser in November 1972.

3. HS 50 is allotted sufficient resources to permit each pilot to obtain an average of 25 hours flying per month. However, even more important than the number of hours flown each month is the completion of mandatory training exercises and a regular proficiency checking program, both of which are in effect at HS 50.

4. (a) There have been two Sea King Helicopter accidents during the past three months, one caused by the collapse of a sponson on a Helicopter aboard HMCS Fraser, and the other which appears to have been caused by the failure of a tail rotor in flight. There were no fatalities in either accident. (b) Yes. (c) No.

5. No.

6. See (2) above. A contract has been arranged to modify and strengthen the stub wings on all Canadian Armed Forces Sea King Helicopters.

7. Morale is the product of many factors and it is the assessment of the responsible military authorities that the morale of personnel at HS 50 is good.

Question No. 618—Mr. McKenzie:

Since April 1, 1972 all mail has been metered on a machine installed for PMO/PCO. It is not possible to establish expenditure for PMO only. Recorded expenditures for 1972 are as follows: April, $1,476.80; May, $1,817.28; June, $1,556.69; July, $968.75; August, $1,021.33; September, $1,150.78; October, $1,658.49; November, $1,153.23; December, $1,053.68.

Hon. John N. Turner (Minister of Finance): The program of loans under the Small Businesses Loans Act is currently under review to determine what changes to it would be desirable. It should be further noted that MOT vessels are sometimes used to support Marine Sciences Directorate programs when arrangements can be made that are suitable to both Departments.

What measures are being taken by the government to forestall attempts to highjack aircraft within Canada?

Hon. Jean Marchand (Minister of Transport): A detailed response to this question cannot be given without jeopardizing the effectiveness of the aviation security program. CANADIAN MERCHANT MARINE

Question No. 688—Mr. Mather:

Is consideration being given to the establishment of a Canadian Merchant Marine?

Hon. Jean Marchand (Minister of Transport): A Canadian Merchant Marine presently exists, with the main component being the substantial fleet of specialized bulk carriers engaged in the coasting trade and the Canada-U.S.A. international trades. The question of altering the policy of the federal government to induce more participation by Canadian-flag ships in ocean-going operations is under almost constant appraisal, but there are no plans to create a fleet of such ships at this time.

DEFENCE—MOTOR VEHICLES, BORDEN AND PETAWAWA

Question No. 689—Mr. Cossitt:

How many jeeps owned by the government were located at, or attached to (a) CFB Camp Borden (b) CFB Petawawa, at the end of fiscal years 1971, 1972 and at January 25, 1973?

Hon. James Richardson (Minister of National Defence): Approximately 25,000 motor vehicles of all types are operated by the Department. Distribution records are maintained on computer files which are updated every two weeks, and it is therefore exceedingly difficult to determine numbers assigned to any one unit "in arrears" without a manual review of unit records. Neither the personnel nor the funds are available to carry out such a search. As of January 25, 1973 there were (a) 119 jeeps at CFB Borden; and (b) 202 at CFB Petawawa.

Question No. 718—Miss MacDonald (Kingston and The Islands):

1. With reference to the cost estimate made by the Prime Minister on April 28, 1972, about the all-weather highway along the Mackenzie Valley (a) what is the estimated total cost of this highway (b) how much of this total has been spent so far (c) how many new miles of road were built for this amount (d) what is the proposed and actual cost per mile to build this highway (e) what is the projected cost for road maintenance during and after construction (f) how many new jobs has this project created to date, and how long did they last (g) how many total new jobs will be created, and for how long (h) when construction is completed, how many persons will be employed along the highway (i) how many of the current new jobs are filled by native people and what is the breakdown of various job classifications?

2. Is work presently suspended and, if so, who is paying the labourers who are kept on?

Hon. Jean Chrétien (Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): 1. (a) The current estimated total cost of the Highway (Fort Simpson to Inuvik) is $130 million. (b) Approximately $9 million to year end. (c) There are no miles of Highway fully completed. The present status of construction is: Section A (Fort Simpson to Camsell Bend) and Section E (Inuvik to Arctic Red River) are under construction now. Section B (Mile 346-550) and Section C (Mile 550-725) are undergoing pre-engineering and design. Section D (Mile 725-891) is undergoing limited pre-engineering activity at this time. Design will begin in the Fall of 1973. (d) The estimated cost per mile of construction is as little as $60,000 or as much as $200,000—depending on conditions. (e) During construction, maintenance costs form part of the construction costs. After construction is completed, maintenance costs are estimated at approximately $3,000 per mile. (f) Since the beginning of the project 284 new jobs have been created. Because of the nature of the work involved we cannot say how long each job has lasted. There are at present 180 jobs on the project. (g) The schedule of construction is not yet firm. See answer to part (f). (h) Approximately 150 to 200 persons. (i) 108 of the 180 current new jobs are filled by native people. The breakdown is: heavy equipment operators, mechanics, draughtsmen, labourers, attendants, chainmen, kitchen helpers, duty drivers, storemen, clerks, cooks, instrument technicians, resident engineers, construction engineers, maintenance personnel.

SEARCH AND RESCUE—AIRCRAFT BASED AT TRENTON

Question No. 719—Mr. Lawrence:

What was the normal complement of aircraft based at Trenton, Ontario during the summer period of 1972 for search and rescue purposes and what was the aircraft (a) type (b) size (c) number of engines (d) range and payload capacity?

Hon. James Richardson (Minister of National Defence): Two (a) CC138 Twin Otter aircraft with (b) a wing span of 65 feet and an overall length of 51 feet 9 inches; (c) two PT6A-27 engines; (d) 900 miles, 5000 pounds. Search and Rescue is the primary role of these two aircraft, but they are supplemented, when necessary, by a wide variety of military aircraft from the Regular and Reserve Forces, e.g., Hercules aircraft, Voyageur Helicopters, as well as by civil pilots and public-spirited citizens who act as observers.

DEFENCE—SUMMER RESERVE TRAINING

Question No. 730—Mr. Marshall:

1. Under the summer reserve training program what is the allocation by province of male and female student vacancies?

2. Is it the intention of the government to restrict applicants to those living only in localities where armouries are located as was the practice last year?

Hon. James Richardson (Minister of National Defence): 1. There is no distinctipn made between male and female applicants. Vacancies are filled on a "first come" basis by students referred to the local Reserve unit by the Department of Manpower. All applicants must meet the basic enrolment standards for the reserves. The allocation by region is: Pacific (British Columbia), 750; Prairie (Alberta, Saskatchewan, Manitoba and Northwestern Ontario), 1,200; Central (Ontario less Northwestern Ontario), 2,025; Eastern (Quebec), 2,250; Atlantic (New Brunswick, Nova Scotia, Prince Edward Island and Newfoundland), 1,275. This regional allocation has been determined by the estimated levels of regional student unemployment and the ability of the Reserves to conduct this training.

2. The training offered is of practical necessity limited to localities which have active Reserve units and suitable accommodation in which to conduct the training. There is no restriction on the domicile of any applicant other than that for most of the training period of eight weeks he is expected to provide his own accommodation and food. If rations and quarters were made available (and this is impractical in most localities) the overhead costs would be such as to substantially reduce the numbers who could be enrolled within funds available.

Question No. 731—Mr. Marshall:

1. Under the summer cadet program what is the total number of cadets who will avail themselves of this program besides the announced additional 4,000?

2. What is the allocation by province of the vacancies?

Hon. James Richardson (Minister of National Defence): 1 and 2. Under the summer cadet training program there are vacancies for 20,003 allocated as follows: Newfoundland, 1,313; Nova Scotia 1,270; Prince Edward Island, 120; New Brunswick, 967; Quebec, 5,633; Ontario, 5,345; Manitoba, 1,030; Saskatchewan, 1,002; Alberta, 1,517; British Columbia, 1,566; Territories, 240.

COASTAL TRADING REGULATIONS

Is it the intention of the government to institute or extend coastal trading regulations, similar to the Jones Act in the United States, to include the east and west coasts of Canada and, if so, will they be extended to include all the Arctic sector and Arctic Islands?

Hon. Jean Marchand (Minister of Transport): The government is presently considering a new policy for the Canadian coasting trade largely on the basis of the Darling Report. This Report recommended reserving all coasting trade activities in Canada to Canadian-flag vessels and extending the laws to the Arctic waters and Continental Shelf of Canada. It was, however, the recommendation of Mr. Darling that where no Canadian vessel was available or adequate to fulfil the requirements of the trade permits would be granted to foreign vessels following payment of duties on the basis of the value of the ship and its period of activity in the coasting trade. The Jones Act in the United States does not allow foreign vessels to engage in the coasting trade. Perhaps it might be noted that the United States has virtually no coasting activity.

MAN AND RESOURCES PROGRAM—YUKON AND NORTHWEST TERRITORIES

Question No. 756—Mr. Nielsen:

1. What is the total cost to date to the government for the provision of professional services for implementation of the "Man and Resources Program" in the Yukon and Northwest Territories?

2. What person, firm or corporation performed the services and of what did such services consist?

3. Were public tenders called for such services and, if not, for what reason?

4. Will any further costs be incurred by the government in connection with this program and, if so, what costs for what services?

5. Were any of the elected representatives of the Councils of either the Yukon or the Northwest Territories involved in the planning of the program or in the activities leading to the publication of any report?

Hon. Jean Chrétien (Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): 1. $30,000.

2. Gemini North provided professional services to implement the "Man and Resources" program in the North by designing the format, by providing an opportunity for public participation to identify and describe local resource use problems, issues and conflicts, by compiling a list of potential delegates for the Montebello Workshop, and by preparing brief notes for the use of the eight delegates selected to attend the Workshop from the Yukon and the Northwest Territories.

3. No. The work was specialized, the lead time was extremely short and consequently only two firms were contacted about the undertaking. One firm was unable to take on the work and, therefore, Gemini North was selected because the firm is resident in the North, possesses particular expertise in the field, and was scheduled to visit several communities during the summer in connection with another project.

4. Yes. The program for 1973 has not been fully developed yet but it is expected that approximately $30,000 will be spent in support of individuals, groups, organizations, associations, etc., wishing to address themselves to one of the 12 resource issues and requiring funds for travel, research, etc.

5. There were no elected representatives of either Territorial government involved in the planning of the program but some Council members did take part in activities at the local citizen participation level.

3. What percentage of employees live in Richmond and Delta and, if it is over 50 per cent, does the Minister consider such a move feasible?

5. Is there any scientific reason for this move?

6. Were other locations looked into besides the North Shore?

7. Was any consideration given to remodelling the present office?

Mr. William Rompkey (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of the Environment): 1. Yes; except for the Aviation Weather Briefing Office which will remain at the airport.

2. Yes; on January 26, 1973.

3. Forty-five per cent.

4. No.

5. Yes; co-location of the Atmospheric Environment Service with the Environmental Protection Service will facilitate the execution of programs.

6. Yes; False Creek, Steveston and UBC Endowment Lands.

7. No; the office space will be required by the Ministry of Transport.

1. What criteria were used to determine the regions where farmers would benefit from a $400 compensation for crop losses in 1972?

2. What were the names of the persons or agencies who were responsible for outlining the areas?

Mr. Léopold Corriveau (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Agriculture): 1. Regions designated in Ontario and Quebec were those where 1972 crops were 60 per cent or less of normal due to adverse weather.

These are Newfoundland, New Brunswick, Nova Scotia, Prince Edward Island, Quebec and British Columbia. Replies from other provinces are expected any day.

2. (a) and (b) Municipalities apply through the provincial government and, so far, no applications have been submitted by the Government of Quebec on behalf of its municipalities.

CANADIAN TROOPS IN VIET NAM

Question No. 792—Mr. Lambert (Bellechasse):

1. Is the sending of Canadian troops to Viet Nam entirely paid by Canada?

2. What are the estimated expenditures for this purpose?

[Translation]

Hon. James Richardson (Minister of National Defence): 1. No, see statement made by the Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of National Defence at page 761 of Hansard dated 29 January, 1973 in regard to Article 14 of the governing protocol ratified in Paris 27 January, 1973.

2. The International Commission has not yet submitted its budget for approval. Accordingly, the contribution by Canada as a member of the Commission for Supervision is not known at this time. Based on the agreed participation by Canada for the initial 60 day period, a rough estimate of the related military costs to be incurred for those 60 days would be in the neighbourhood of $500,000, exclusive of normal pay and benefits. The direct recoverable portion of these costs cannot be fully assessed yet.

Mr. Charles Turner (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, the answer is as follows. REPORT OF MR. JUSTICE TRITSCHLER ON CONSTRUCTION OF GREAT SLAVE LAKE RAILWAY

Motion No. 47—Mr. Benjamin:

That an Order of the House do issue for a copy of the report of Mr. Justice Tritschler on the enquiry into the construction of the Great Slave Lake Railway.

Mr. Joseph-Philippe Guay (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, the Standing Committee on Transport and Communications, sitting at Ottawa, Thursday, December 11, 1969, was pleased to recommend that the Minister of Transport establish a one-man inquiry to consider the merits of the claim submitted by the Great Slave Railway contractors, that the person nominated to conduct the inquiry be acceptable to both contractors and Canadian National Railways, and should report to the minister in confidence so as not to—

Some hon. Members: Order.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I think it is a well known practice that parliamentary secretaries or ministers replying to notices of motions for the production of papers should indicate whether it is proposed to table the documents without a lengthy explanation. It was the practice for many years that no explanation at all was allowed, but by consent of members over the years it was agreed that perhaps it made more sense if a one-line explanation was made to indicate why the motion was being refused. But certainly there is no provision in these circumstances for parliamentary secretaries or members replying on behalf of ministers to make a lengthy statement. I think the hon. member's statement is irregular.

Mr. Guay (St. Boniface): Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I will try to be brief, but it is very important that it be—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Guay (St. Boniface): Mr. Speaker, it is important that—

Mr. Speaker: Order, Please. Would the hon. member resume his seat. It should be brought to the attention of parliamentary secretaries that there are enough people working on behalf of the government and parliamentary secretaries that they should not propose for reading to the House statements of the kind the parliamentary secretary is trying to impart to us at this time.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Guay (St. Boniface): Mr. Speaker, the government is refusing, if that is the case.

Mr. Benjamin: On a point of order. Mr. Speaker, since the judge appointed was not acceptable to both sides, and since there is no further point in the documents being confidential, I would move that the question be put.

Mr. MacEachen: Transfer for debate.

Mr. Speaker: Transferred for debate.

APPLICATION OF EFFLUENT REGULATIONS TO MACMILLAN BLOEDEL LIMITED, NANAIMO, B.C.

Motion No. 48—Mr. Howard:

That an Order of the House do issue for a copy of all correspondence, telegrams and other documents exchanged between the Department of the Environment or any agency or branch thereof and MacMillan Bloedel Limited, Port Alberni, British Columbia, since January 1, 1972, relating to the pulp and paper mill effluent regulations and the application thereof to the above-mentioned company.

Mr. John M. Reid (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, the information received by the government in this case is regarded as confidential and the government, therefore, refuses the motion on that ground.

Mr. Howard: Mr. Speaker, is this motion No. 48?

Mr. Speaker: Yes, 48.

Mr. Howard: The Fisheries Act was amended some four or five years ago and this is just a lot of nonsense that we are hearing now.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The remarks from the Chair applying to parliamentary secretaries also apply to the hon. member for Skeena and other hon. members. I have to ask members whether they wish to have the question put or the motion transferred for debate.

Some hon. Members: Question.

Mr. MacEachen: Transfer for debate.

Mr. Speaker: Transferred for debate.

• (1430)

Mr. Reid: Mr. Speaker, on a point of order, perhaps I might be able to expedite proceedings in respect of motions Nos. 49 to 73 inclusive in the name of the hon. member for Skeena. The reason that the government is rejecting these motions is the same as that given for motion No. 48. Perhaps Your Honour might wish to deal with these in a group.

Mr. Howard: Mr. Speaker, if I may rise on the point of order I point out that the parliamentary secretary is accurate in his statement that each one of these motions asks for the same information in respect of different companies in the pulp and paper industry in British Columbia which have been exempted by the government from the pulp and paper mill effluent regulations.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I think the hon. member would agree that we might save time if we could accept the request of the government with regard to motions 49 to 73 standing in the name of the hon. member for Skeena. The request of the government, I gather, is that they be transferred for debate.

Mr. Howard: Mr. Speaker, on a point of order, may I say that this is not an acceptable course of action to me. Acceptance of the proposal of the government that these motions be transferred for debate will mean that any opportunity to get at the truth will be effectively denied because the government will just sweep these motions under the rug.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. If it is the wish of the House we will call each motion.

APPLICATION OF EFFLUENT REGULATIONS TO MACMILLAN BLOEDEL LIMITED, NANAIMO, B.C.

Motion No. 49—Mr. Howard:

ORAL QUESTION PERIOD

FINANCE

THE BUDGET—ALLEGED REDUCTION OF GOAL FOR CREATION OF JOBS FROM THAT IN 1972 BUDGET—NATURE OF FORECAST DEFICIT

Hon. Robert L. Stanfield (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Finance. I should like to ask him whether he has any explanation of why this year in his budget presented last Monday night he reduced his goal for the creation of jobs to 300,000 new jobs from the 330,000 jobs he said his budget of May 8 last would be created?

Hon. John N. Turner (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I would like to check the exact phraseology in the budget of May 8, but the target I gave the House on the number of new jobs for the calendar year 1973 will be a realistic figure, I expect.

Mr. Stanfield: Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the minister whether henceforth when he gives the House figures he will tell us whether or not they are to be taken as being realistic?

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Stanfield: Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the minister a supplementary question. Has he any explanation, in view of the existing level of unemployment, of why the budget he presented on Monday night last is less expansionary than the budget of May 8, 1972, particularly when one considers that nearly $900 million of the expenditures included in the budget on Monday night relates to money actually expended in connection with the unemployment insurance fund in the current year and has nothing to do with next year?

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): Mr. Speaker, the hon. gentleman is confusing the accounting figures with the cash requirements, and he is doing that deliberately, Mr. Speaker.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): I say to him that the deficit is measured in terms of the total of budgetary and non-budgetary items, which is set at $2 billion, the same stimulus as provided in the May 8 budget, which we believe to be the right stimulus in view of the fact we are higher up the scale of growth in the economy.

Mr. Stanfield: In view of the fact that nearly $900 million of these cash requirements relates to money expended in the current year rather than the money to be expended next year, I should like to ask the minister whether he will deny that on a national accounts basis the deficit he proposed for the coming fiscal year is substantially less than the deficit on a national accounts basis that he proposed in the budget of May 8? Can he deny that?

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): Mr. Speaker, the proper figure to look at is the total cash requirements of the government and the pressure put on the financial markets, and that figure remains at $2 billion. The hon. gentleman referred to the unemployment insurance fund. He knows that in the year in which the moneys are advanced they are a non-budgetary item and are picked up in the following year as a budgetary expense, so the preamble to the first part of his earlier question is illusory.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I would hope we would not become involved in a full-fledged budget debate during the question period in view of the fact that this is precisely what we will be dealing with later this afternoon. The hon. member for Don Valley has a supplementary.

[Later:]

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a question of privilege relating to the selective memory of the Leader of the Opposition. He quoted my budget speech as saying that I predicted an increase of 330,000 jobs. That is not what I said. I said:

> We are expecting a large increase in employment and all signs to date this year give credence to this anticipation. In March this year there were 330,000 more Canadians working than one year ago.

I was comparing March 1972 figures with March 1971 figures. The hon. member has used these figures completely out of context.

Mr. Stanfield: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a question of privilege. The minister made the following statement outside the House very emphatically:

> I was quite specific in the House of Commons tonight by saying that our total employment increase would exceed the 330,000 new jobs we provided for Canadians last year.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Hees: Let us have a selective apology.

Mr. Crouse: Your selective memory is failing you, John.

DEFICIT FORECAST IN BUDGET—AMOUNT OF PURCHASING POWER TO BE PUT INTO ECONOMY

Mr. James Gillies (Don Valley): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Finance and it is for clarification. Can he say, so that the House will not misunderstand him, whether it is absolutely true that in the calculation of the $2 billion deficit to which the minister refered in his budget it is the understanding, in the making of these calculations and in estimating the amount of employment that will be created, that there will be that amount of purchasing power put into the economy this year?

Hon. John N. Turner (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, the answer to that question is—and I will try to be absolutely true—

Mr. Stanfield: That will be very difficult.

[Mr. Stanfield.]

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): —that the excess of expenditures over revenues will require a cash injection of $2 billion.

Mr. Gillies: Am I to understand then that the minister's position is that the transfer to the employment insurance fund has no bearing on the amount of purchasing power that will be generated this year?

Mr. Speaker: Order please. The Chair will allow the minister to reply, but I am sure hon. members will agree that this is obviously debate.

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): That is not what I said.

GRAIN

ACTION TO AVOID POSSIBLE LAKEHEAD GRAIN HANDLERS STRIKE AND DISRUPTION OF SHIPMENT

Mr. David Orlikow (Winnipeg North): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Labour. In view of the fact that negotiations for a new contract between the grain handlers and the elevator companies at the Lakehead have broken down, thus creating the possibility of a strike this spring which would disrupt the shipment of grain for which large sales have been made, has he or his department studied the situation to see what they can do to resolve the impasse?

Hon. John C. Munro (Minister of Labour): Yes, Mr. Speaker. Our department has been watching this situation and has been ready to offer mediation services. We are prepared to continue to offer these services in an endeavour to resolve this dispute.

Mr. Orlikow: May I ask the minister whether the department has in fact moved to call the parties together to meet with officials of the department or the minister with a view to studying the difficulties that still exist between the two parties?

Mr. Munro (Hamilton East): Certainly we are prepared to consider that, Mr. Speaker.

POSSIBLE LAKEHEAD GRAIN HANDLERS STRIKE—CONTINGENCY PLANS FOR MOVEMENT

Mr. Bill Knight (Assiniboia): Mr. Speaker, my supplementary question is for the minister in charge of the Wheat Board. Can he inform the House whether, in view of the potential difficulties in moving western grain through the Lakehead, he has any contingency plans in terms of the movement of grain through other ports?

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister of Justice): Mr. Speaker, the Lakehead is of such major importance in the movement of grain during the shipping season that no alternatives to the proper functioning of that port itself would be adequate.

[Later:]

Mr. Knight: Mr. Speaker, returning to the all-important question to western producers, I should like to put a further supplementary question to the Minister of Transport. In view of the fact there could be difficulties at the Lakehead in terms of grain movement, can the minister inform us now if there has been any move on the part of his department or other related departments to improve and to bring into condition the port of Churchill and other such ports of importance as Prince Rupert?

Hon. Jean Marchand (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I have already answered on the situation at the port of Churchill. We are still studying the potential of that port, and as soon as we are ready to make a report I will make it in the House.
