Our readers will find the Hop. Proto-day, and the conclusion of the budget debate in another column. Mr. McLellan's budget speech was of the same practical character that he usually delivers, a fair and honest statement of receipts and expenditures, which after all is about everything necessary in a deliverance of that kind. The Hon. Provincial Secretary takes a very hopeful view of New Brunswick's prospects, and the circomstances fully warrant his remarks in this convexion. The man who preaches blue ruin ought to have no dace in this country. He is its worst enemy, and should be tolerated least of all in public life. Mr. McLellan we are glad to say, is no such individual. He has an abiding faith in the future of New Brunswick; in the energy and intelligence of her people to push forward to increased development, and if the Provincial finances are jalways as kealously guarded as "The N. S. Telephone Co., has now constructed and under operation the following exchanges in Nova Scotia: — Halifax with 450 telephones; Yarmouth 60; Windsor 40; Truro 56; Pictou 20; New Glasgow 25; Amherst 60; Londonderry 15. We are now about establishing an exchange in Spring well."

"You have some through lines in open tion have you not?"
"Yes, the idea is to connect all these exchanges with Halifax and we have made progress to that end to the extent of

we will locate in Annapolis and Kentville embracing Stellarton and Westville in the coal district. We have also a line of 24 amending the Scott Act, and he said Mr. miles between Halifax and Margareta' Ba Mills' action was quite at variance with the we are going to extend it to Mahone Bay where we will connect with a system of about 100 telephones in Mahone Bay, Lunenburg and Bridgewater, which comprises as you know the headquarters of an immense fishery business. The line from Halifax to Truro is also going to be extended to Ambant fability in the light way to St. to Amherst (which is just halfway to S John), and has already reached Londonderry, a distance of 17 miles from Truro. Posts are now all up to Amberst ready for the wires to be strung when the spring opens."

"What have you done in New Brunswick?" We have in operation at St. John, an exchange of 350 instruments, which is connected by an independent live with St. Martins and intermediate points. We have in Fredericton a circuit of 70 telephones, at Woodstock 40, at Muncton 90, and have a business arrangement for a connection with the exchanges at Chatham and Newcastle (about 30 telephones) now owned by Mesers Snowball and McKenzie." "What are your plans for the future as respects this province?"

"I was about to say that we have complet cription of instrument, as well as wire is required."

"What record of distance have you succeeded in making in Nova Scotia?"

"We are now

TALKING BASILY FROM HALIFAX TO PICTOR distance of 130 miles with ordinary instruments, and there is no reason why Halifax

"What advantage will the proposed line from Fredericton to St. John be, for instance, to the local subscriber?" ericton when this through line is complete, will be able to communicate directly with Woodstock, St. John and Moncton, besides having transfer connection with all the pro-vincial towns of Nova Scotia, embracing pro-bably 1500 subscribers more. Each subscriber as a rule is a professional or business man, and by this means will be put in direct personal connection with all the businessespeople representing the various commercia with B. in St. John, he will ring up the "Central"; "Central" will ring up St. John "Central," who in turn will ring up B. and a five minutes' conversation can be carried on for the trifling expenditure on the part of A. of 25 cents."

What is the object, Mr. Pearson, of your visit to Fredericton ? "Our object here is to obtain legislative power for the Nova Scotia Telephone Company to carry on its business in the Province of New Brunswick, and to project and com-plete the works I have indicated. The Bell Company in selling out their equipment had no power to sell their franchise which their hold in New Brunswich and so, while we as a Company have power to hold property in the Province we cannot extend our lines

(To the Editor of the Farmer) The Believ of the Farmer)

Six:—I see in the Glasser newspaper of Richard Roll a communication signed we have a present of that district. I have taken the trouble to inquire pretty fully as to the attention of the communication, and I am full the windows that it may have emanated the sun time and any one who concurred the continents expressed is the said letter, also think that Counceller Pinder is at the recent time and has been for the last twelve weather. For ten days the March sun has the fact the last twelve weather. For ten days the March sun has the fact of sel broad. The writer of the communication alinded to, says that Mr. Pinder again to feel broad. The writer of the communication alinded to, says that Mr. Pinder again to feel broad the west of the continuity over the streets and walks I hardly think the covering would be half an item. Now, Sir, I would like to know what could be the use of a persecution when it is well known that the author of the charge is the said, has recontly said application to swear off the limits, in the limits and it is said, has recontly said application to swear off the limits, in the limits and it is said, has recontly said application to swear off the limits, in the limits and it is said, has recontly said application to swear off the limits, in the limits and it is said, has recontly said application to swear off the limits, in the covering and coming to the front herself.

The Farmer regrets to hear of the death of Mr. W. E. Taylor, a worthy citizen of Sheffield, who for several years acceptably discharged the duties of Secretary-Treasurer of Sunbury County.

We notice our friend, Samuel Owen, has gone to Beston and New York to purchase spring goods, and will not return antil the 10th inst. His friends can look out for good bargains when is returned.

Mr. John McCoy, the well known horseman of St. Marys, has returned home after an absence of a month, during which time he visited East towhich we shall refer again.

Mr. Housekeepers who are looking out for commotion when they announced their ultimature of the congregation and refused to make the middle of the week and the critics began to hunt up a choir. To say the standard and the critics began to hunt up a choir. To say ble bornes to which we shall refer again.

EF Housekeepere who are looking out for new carpets, oil cibth, window curtains and pales, should visit Mr. Edgecombe's carpet that they succeeded is a poor compliment; that they pleased the congregation so well that the atrikers won't get back; and the good old the present the shurch goars.

The Madawasks alection matter is being made before the privileges committee, among the witnesses being Sheriff Rice, Mr. A. R. Balloch and Dr. Bernier of Edmundston. The evidence is being stenographed by Mr. H. Risteen.

The Madawasks alection matter is being for the church goers.

You have frequently noticed in newspapers, very favorable mention of the portrait painting of the Mesers Martin of this city who are known to the business world as H. C. Martin & Co. Of course their are artists and true artists who alone could exhibit such finished work as is seen in their windows on King street. Many persons, in fact all who please,

CHAPTER XXXII. A SUDDEN SHOOK.

The three months following the disturbance in the school-room at Dunbarton Priory passed quietly, and even pleasant ly. The lines of care and anxiety that had been occasioned by Mise Camilla's insolence and ill-treatment faded out of Pearle's face, after that young lady's withdrawal; she had no more headaches or heart solies from that cause, and not unfrequently her sweet, clear laugh was heard ringing out at some comical prank of her popils.

The children continued to improv rapidly, and grew to love their beautiful governess more and more. Francita was also very kind to her, and made such pro-gress in her French and German, that she became an object of envy to her sister, who was not nearly as successful under who was not nearly as successful under her masters, and this of itself increased her dislike of Pearle.

"I hate her," she often said, after com-no opportunity to pass to show her scorn and its will;

Meantime Ambrose, the young heir, had returned to his home, and his cautions mother, warned by her suspicious daughter, banished the governess entirely from her drawing-room, and exerted all her powers to prevent her darling son from coming into contact with this very atrange and beautiful young governess.

And strangely beautiful she was growing, too. It might have been the result of the quiet, peaceful life she was leading, it might have been the pure country air and living, but a great change for the better was visible in Pearle.

She knew that Lady Femnelses would not approve of thus arrangement—nay, that she would undoubtedly be very angry if she knew that the heir of Dunbarton Priory was spending the day and making merry with a proor governess.

But what could she do under the circumstances? The young man evidently intended to remain, and it would be entirely out of her province to interfere in any way.

I will not fret," she said to herself, after a moment of thought. "I could in any way.

"Oh—it will come somehow," she an awared, wrinkling up her forehead and assuming a reflective look; and Pearle, though she knew it was only childish prattle and nonsense, was nevertheless infinitely comforted and soothed by it. "If I have lost what once made life as beautiful, I can never be very miserable while I have such a darling to love me, she would say; and grateful for this morsel, she fulfilled her duties faithfully and patiently, striving to mark each day

"My reward is ample," said her brother patting her cheek, "and now," with an appealing glance at Pearle, "my agency in this matter having been discovered, and being also "one of the children," I do not see but that I may be permitted to claim my share of the holiday sport."

He gave her a taughing glance and bowing low before her, darted away. He was back again in less than five min-utes, bearing a silver cup filled to the brim with cool, sparkling water which, bending upon one knee, in mock rever-ence before her, he presented to her, say

" It is fitting thus to serve the queen. Pearle made a gesture of disapproval at his position; but, after quaffing the cool-ing drink, she, smillingly, though with beightened color, commanded him to serve her retinue in the same manner, which he, obedient to the letter, proceeded to do.

A balf hour was spent in resting, after which they had games and stories for another hour, and then it was time to begin to think about the good things in the hamper. A spotless damask cloth was spread down the centre of the arbor, and Pearle proceeded to arrange with dainty care the many delicacies which Lady Fen-nelses had ordered to be prepared for moments, then, declaring that such a feast should be decked with Flora's richest offer ing, he set forth with the children to see what treasure they could find.

Before Pearle had quite completed her arrangements they all returned, with hands full, and his lordship with his deft fingers fashioned a dainty bouquet to lay before each plate.

Never had there been a more delicious lunch, or one partaken of with keener relish; never had the children's faces been brighter, nor their voices merrier, their hearts happier, while Ambros Fennelsea thought that no fairy queen could be more lovely than Pearle was as she sat opposite him, her face flushed and radiant her eyes sparkling as they had not done before since the happy days at Ashton Manor, and looking like a floral queen, with a wreath of blue-bells, which Clara had fondly twined for her, resting upon nad fondly twined for her, resting upon rich brown hair, and contrasting beautifully with the pure white of her brow.

They lingered long over the tempting viands, making the clear air ring with their merriment, for the air of Dunbarton Priory made himself very entertaining, and Fred and Clara found themselves wondering why they had not discovered before that their brother was so delightbegged that they might be allowed to fish for awhite on the margen of a small lake at the foot of the hill, and the young man, desirous that the day should be atisfactory in every respect assented. Pearle said she would remain in the arbour as Amy was tired, and she pre-ferred to rest for awhile. Besides the fragments of the feast and the dishes must be gathered up, and she would stay to superintend it.

The child, nothing loth, dropped upon and hiding myself from every familiar eye excitement of the last few moments and in filling my life so full of work and beginning to tell upon her strength.

ing forth into some sweet carel as she climbed the woodland path.

On reaching their destination the children cried out with delight, for it almost seemed as if some good fairy, aware of their anticipated pleasure, had been there before them, and expectally prepared for their coming.

In the centre of the knoll there had risen, as if by magic, a spacous booth or arbor made of young applings cut down, their trunks sharpened and driven into the earth, while their tops were brought together and twined in the centre.

Can it be for me? Shall I ever reach it?" she asked. "Can it be for me? Shall I ever rest in such brightness and glory as that?" In her longing and eagerness she seem ed to forget where she was; she let go her hold upon the sides of the ladder, reaching up her hand as if to seize upon what she saw.
