CHAPTER XXIV.

As she spoke, she looked up and down the mantel-shelf, as if she were searching for something.

"I put a long pin—a hat-pin—there," she said.

Mechanically he searched also, pushing aside the curios and ornaments. In doing so, he took up the portrait, lying face downward, and was putting it down again, when, as mechanically, he glanced at it.

"He did not start, uttered no cry, but he stood stock still and stared at the bewitching face in the silver frame, as if he had suddenly fallen under a spell. Gradually a deathly pallor spread over his face, his eyes became distended.

"Who—what?" broke from his set lips.

Decima had found the pin, and had turned to leave the room. She came back to him and looked over his shoulder.

"That portrait? Whose is it?" she asked.

She had not seen his face.

His senses seemed to be deserting him; he could not remove his eyes from the face, which, with its "beauty of the devil," seemed to smile up at him mockingly, derisively. His silence smote her, and she looked at him. A low cry broke from her lips.

"What—what is the matter?" she murmured. "What—is it?—I—I found it, saw it. Whose portrait is it?"

Though he tried to crush the answer down, it would come, as if he had lost control of his voice.

"It is my wife," he said, as a man speaks in his sleep.

She shrank back from him as if he had struck her.

"Your—wife?"

The words were scarcely audible, and yet to him they seemed to ring through the room.

He still gazed at the face. How had it come there? What juggling fiend had conjured the thing up to confront him with it at this moment—the moment of his life?

"Your—wife?" Decima repeated, and she shrank a step further away from him.

"My wife!" he said, hoarsely, still staring at it. Then he lifted his eyes heavily, slowly, and looked at her, looked and realized that he had spoken aloud, that he had told her.

With an oath he flung the portrait into the fire-place. It fell with a crash on the tiles; then he stretched out his hands toward her.

"Yes, my wife, Decima, you know now why I can not marry you. I am married already."

"No—no!" she put up her hands to her ears as if to shut out the words.

"It is true!" he said, hoarsely, with a calm more terrible than any violence. "I am married to—that woman whose portrait lies there. That—is why

I can not marry you. Listen—for God's sake, don't shrink from me!" for as he had taken a step toward her she had drawn back with a gesture of denial.

"Your wife! Then—then it is not I you love—you can not! It is she!"

"Love her?" He laughed with fierce bitterness. "You don't know what you say. Love? I hate, I loathe her!"

A cry broke from her lips.

"But she is your wife."

He made a gesture of despair. How could he tell her, make her understand?

"Decima, she is my wife, but I hate her! No man with a spark of manhood could do otherwise. Child, listen—don't shrink from me. Don't—don't look so, or I shall go mad. She is a bad, worthless woman. I left her. I have not seen her for years. She is nothing to me; nothing—nothing. Don't you understand? But that she is my wife I should have told you of my love long, long ago. Ah, that you understand. Come to me. Child, have pity!"

He knelt to her, and drew her hands from her face. She yielded, or rather, she did not resist, but her eyes were fixed vacantly above his head, as if she were trying to understand—and to bear—the truth.

"Decima, now that you know, you will not turn from me?"

"Your wife!" She drew one hand from his grasp and pressed it against her forehead with a piteous little gesture of helplessness, and despair. "Oh, why—why did you not tell me? Your wife!"

"My God! don't repeat it!" he cried.

"Try—try and forget it. Decima, you will not desert me; you will not draw back; I can not live without you! If you turn from me—"

He rose and caught her in his arms, for she had swayed to and fro, as if she were about to fall. But his touch seemed to give her strength to resist him, and after a moment—a moment during which he looked into her eyes—she recovered from the terrible faintness and drew herself from his arms.

"Let—let me go! ah, let me go!" she panted. "I will go! I want to go! Your wife!"

"You shall not go until you have heard me!" he said, fiercely. "Child, you don't understand, or you would not torture me. Sit down!"

"No, no!"

"Ah, but you must! You must listen. Decima—"

She stood, her hands clasped tightly, her face upraised, her eyes fixed on vacancy; and her despair almost drove him mad.

"Decima," he began again; then suddenly he stopped. There was a sound in the corridor. A voice, a woman's voice, said in clear, metallic tones:

"Thanks; don't trouble. I know the way. I will go in and wait until he comes in."

At the sound of the voice Gaunt started and looked over his shoulder, as if his senses were playing some fiendish trick on him.

Decima heard the voice, the words, but she did not move.

"God! it is she!" broke from his white lips.

He caught Decima's arm, but stood as if paralyzed for a moment, then he said in a hoarse whisper:

"Go—that room!" and dashing open the door, half led, half dragged her into the adjoining room. Then he closed the door and stood with his back to it—and waited!

CHAPTER XXV.

It was the long arm of Coincidence—guided by Morgan Thorpe's cunning—which had led Laura to Prince's Mansions that night of all nights.

Three days before there had been a little dinner at Cardigan Terrace. It was like all the other dinners, perfect of menu and cozy in character, and, as usual, Trevor and Bobby were the only guests.

Now, Bobby had come back from Leafmore with a good resolution. We would see no more of Morgan Thorpe and Laura—for, alas! it was as "Laura" he had habitually thought of her, and not seldom addressed her, so far had poor Bobby gone. Bobby made this resolve firmly—surely, that grim road to the infernal regions, which is constructed of good resolutions, must be the most endurable ever imagined, more endurable than stone, more slippery than asphalt—and he meant to stick to it. But the morning after his resolve, behold! Mr. Morgan Thorpe, arrayed in faultless attire, entered Gaunt's rooms, and greeted Bobby as if he were a long-lost brother suddenly returned.

"My dear boy," he exclaimed "where have you been? I called the other night, and was filled with alarm when they told me that you had left London. I feared that you had fled from us for good," which, though he did not intend, was a particularly accurate way of putting it. "I was quite out of my mind, and as to Laura—" He paused and smiled at Bobby. "Well, perhaps I'd better not say how my news affected her. Mustn't tell tales out of school, eh, Deane?"

He leaned forward and touched Bobby on the knee, and Bobby grew red and hot.

"I—I had a wire from home, and had to run down suddenly."

Morgan Thorpe glanced at him sharply.

"No bad news, I trust?" he said.

"No," replied Bobby, after a moment's hesitation. "At least—well, something had gone wrong—some business; but it's all right now."

"I'm glad to hear it. I was afraid one of your people was ill," said Mr. Morgan Thorpe, with charming sympathy. "And I'm glad you are back. We missed you, my dear Deane, though you were away for so short a time. Trevor came and dined with us, but—well, Trevor is a deuced good fellow, but he didn't compensate us for your absence. I never saw Laura so triste and dull. You really must come round soon. What do you say to dining with us to-morrow night?"

Bobby's good resolution rose and looked at him sternly, and, still more red and uncomfortable, he stammered an excuse.

"Engaged! I'm sorry, and I'm sure Laura will be. Well, we'll hope for another night. What are you going to do this afternoon? Drop in at the club and have a quiet shell out with Trevor and me."

What could Bobby say? It would have been extremely difficult for him to remark: "Look here, Thorpe, I've made a mental vow to cut you, therefore—get out!" What young man of Bobby's age and temperament could have done that? Oh, parents and guardians, when you are inclined to be hard on your erring sons and wards, I pray you remember your own youth and the temptations thereof!

"All right," he said; but there was another pause of hesitation, which, be sure, did not escape the wily tempter's notice.

"Half a moment," said Bobby, as his visitor rose to leave. "I'll—I'll take up those L.O.U.'s, Thorpe. I've got some of 'em. He went to the bureau of inland satin-wood and took out his check-book; but Morgan Thorpe waved his hand with delighted indifference.

"No need to bother about that just now, my dear Deane," he said. "Besides, I haven't the L.O.U.'s with me." They were in his pocket at that moment, of course. "And dashed if I remember what I did with them. They're at home somewhere, I dare say. Bring the check next time you come and dine with us."

Again, what could Bobby do? He could scarcely force the check upon Mr. Thorpe.

"All right," he said again. "But—but, Thorpe, I wanted to tell you—"

He colored again, but the old Bobby asserted itself, and he looked Thorpe in the face squarely, and as he did so, there was an expression in his face which was singularly like that of Decima's.

"What is it, my dear boy?"

"Oh, only this; that I've made up my mind to cut cards for the future. The fact is—well, my governor has lost some money, and I can't afford—"

Morgan Thorpe seized his hand.

"My dear Deane, I'm delighted to hear you say that—not that your father has lost money, but that you are going to cut cards. It's strange, but I was just going to ask you if you'd drop gambling. I was indeed! It was on the tip of my tongue. To tell you the truth, Laura and I have been—now, you won't mind, you won't think us intrusive and impertinent, I hope, Deane—"

"No, no," said Bobby. "Go on."

"Well, we've been thinking about you—she is always ready to talk about you, you know. You must know that she—well, takes a great interest in you, and she begged me to ask you not to play."

Bobby felt so grateful, so touched by the beautiful woman's goodness and care for him that he could not speak.

"And I promised her that I would. If I had not done so, she would have spoken to you herself. I'm convinced she would. Ah, I assure you, the dear girl has plenty of pluck when she has resolved upon doing the right thing, when she is convinced that a duty lies before her."

Cecil Says League of Nations Very Much Alive.

Germans do Not Like Army of Occupation.

LEAGUE VERY MUCH ALIVE.
GENEVA, Nov. 17. "Very much alive" is the condition of the League of Nations as shown by the report of the Executive Council, Lord Robert Cecil, of England, sitting as a delegate from South Africa, declared in today's session of the League here speaking on the report made by the Council to the Assembly. Lord Robert remarked that while it has been said in some countries that the League is dead, the Council's report shows it to be very much alive. Referring to criticism of the League that it was spending all its time getting ready to do something, Lord Robert said that a machine to work well must be set up well. He considered the report showed great progress had been made.

HIS CHANCES ARE DIMINISHING.
PARIS, Nov. 17. The chances of ex-King Constantine's return to the throne of Greece are steadily diminishing, according to opinion in French circles, as the anti-Venizelos party in Athens is coming to realize the strength of allied opinion against such restoration.

TWO SPEAKERS.
LUCERNE, Switzerland, Nov. 17. Former King Constantine made his first pronouncement expressing his attitude in the light of the Greek elections to the Associated Press today. "I cannot go to Athens at the head of any one political party and therefore insist upon a plebiscite for my return or the return of one of my sons," he declared. "It is for the Greek people to decide. If the people want me I shall return to Athens, unless of course prevented by unjust force."

PRO-TINO.
ATHENS, Nov. 17. It is believed here that the Allies will make known to Greece their intention not to recognize Constantine should the ex-King be restored to the throne. "Constantine is our rightful King," former Premier Gounaris, leader of the successful party in the Greek elections, told a correspondent today, "and we expect him back as continues to accord the United States Government the same privileges that it accords British and other Governments in handling cable messages, is contained in a formal statement issued today by the State Department.

WILSON'S HOPES.
WASHINGTON, Nov. 17. President Wilson in a message sent today to Paul Mymans, President of the League of Nations' Assembly at Geneva, Switzerland, extended his personal greetings to the assembly, and expressed the hope and belief that their labors will be of immense value to the whole civilized world. The message was an acknowledgement of one to Pres. Wilson, conveying an expression of sympathy voted President Wilson unanimously upon the opening of the Assembly of the League last Monday.

DOES NOT APPROVE.
WASHINGTON, Nov. 17. The British Embassy today notified the Committee of one hundred investigating conditions in Ireland, that it did not approve of the purposes to be served or the methods to be followed in the Committee's hearing to begin tomorrow and that, therefore it could not accept the Committee's invitation to have a representative present. The Embassy's reply addressed to Oswald Garrison Villard, Editor of the Nation who appointed the Committee, declared that the only outcome of the inquiry would be the spread of propaganda and that there was nothing in the composition of the Committee itself to remove from it the idea that it was not impartial or prejudiced in advance.

PARIS WORKMEN ATTEMPT TO SEIZE FACTORY.
PARIS, Nov. 17. Shots were exchanged when a crowd of workmen and sympathizers this afternoon again attempted to storm Blarlot factory, which was guarded by a cordon of police, who had been placed at the plant after the attempt made by dismissed workers yesterday to storm the plant, which closed down recently, throwing two thousand persons out of work. The police, reports state, opened fire when shots from the direction of the crowd wounded policemen. Two workmen were wounded, one of them seriously.

A VEILED THREAT.
WASHINGTON, Nov. 17. A veiled threat that the permits granted for the landing of the Western Union cables in the United States will be revoked unless the company continues to accord the United States Government the same privileges that it accords British and other Governments in handling cable messages, is contained in a formal statement issued today by the State Department.

A GERMAN PROTEST.
BERLIN, Nov. 17. Allied armies of occupation in Germany are being maintained at strength which is unnecessary, said Foreign Ministers Simmonds in a speech at Cologne today. He contended that the Allies' intention in thus keeping their forces in a high state of efficiency was not defensive but offensive.

DUE TO MISUNDERSTANDING.
WARSAW, Nov. 17. Lithuanian troops fired on members of the League of Nations Control Committee as they were crossing "No Man's Land" from General Zeligowski's lines to those of the Lithuanians, according to dispatches received here today. The members of the Commission were carrying a white flag. The Lithuanian commander said the firing was due to misunderstanding.

DISAGREE OVER RUSSIA.
LONDON, Nov. 17. The Cabinet today held a long session, again discussing the question of opening of trade relations with Soviet Russia. Premier Lloyd George and Bonar Law and other members of the Cabinet were understood to be pressing for resumption against the opposition of Earl Curzon, Foreign Secretary. Winston Churchill, Secretary of War, and Austin Chamberlain, Chancellor of the Exchequer, who fear it would be difficult to enforce the provision in the proposed agreement that the Bolsheviks cease their propaganda against Great Britain. They desire to meet again with Leonid Krassin, Soviet Representative, and endeavour to get from him further assurances on the propaganda question. It is reported the Russians will agree to recognize Russian debts owed to the British Government, and British individuals with long term payment, but that part of the negotiations has not yet been reached.

For years I have never considered my stock of household remedies complete unless a bottle of Minard's Liniment was included. For burns, bruises, sprains, frostbites or chilblains it excels, and I know of no better remedy for a severe cold in the head, or that will give more immediate relief, than to inhale from the bottle through the nasal organ.

And as to my supply of veterinary remedies it is essential, as it has in very many instances proven its value. A recent experience in reclaiming what was supposed to be a lost section of a valuable cow's udder has again demonstrated its great worth and prompts me to recommend it in the highest terms to all who have a herd of cows, large or small. I think I am safe in saying among all the patent medicines there is none that covers as large a field of usefulness as does Minard's Liniment. A real truism good for man or beast.

AT THE TOP.
It's bucking in and fighting hard that gets a fellow through. It's giving all your thought and strength to do what you have to do; Oh, there's no idler's road to fame, no care-free way to win. The man who wants to reach the top must have a stern set chin; The summit of success is fine and much there is to see there. But he who'd climb up to the crest, must prove his right to be there.

You cannot feign the touch of skill, nor glory's gods deceive. The indolent or cunning hand no lasting joys achieve; Though sham may seem to prosper here, there always comes the test When only they survive who give their noblest and their best; A man must climb the mountain heights, nor are the glories free there. Who stands with men of strength and skill, must prove his right to be there.

Life sorts the false men from the true, the crooked from the straight. No man shall wear the wreath of fame save he be truly great; Real merit has no counterfeits, when by the test 'tis tried, If it does not deserve to win it's quickly thrown aside; So work your way and earn your way—you shall receive the fee there. When you have reached the mountain top, if you've a right to be there.

Opera Called Off

OWING TO STRIKE OF MUSICIANS.

A large crowd of music lovers, says the New York World in a recent issue, waited an hour one evening in the Lexington Theatre for the curtain to rise on the first act of Aida, depicting a scene in the palace of the King of Memphis.

The first intimation the audience had that all was not well in Memphis was when at 9 o'clock a stout gentleman wearing a long overcoat and a double-breasted set of whiskers came before the curtain and announced that the performance would be delayed five minutes. The gentleman with the whiskers said he was waiting for a trunk to arrive and the opera couldn't possibly go on without the trunk.

The real trouble, it appears, was that the orchestra refused to produce notes before the management came across with a few. An agreement was reached with the musicians, and the curtain was about to roll up on Memphis when the priests, soldiers, slaves, first cit, second cit, and Memphis cops went out on strike until they had some money.

Oh, for a Cal Coolidge. Of course there is only one.

The management appeased the Memphis cops and a second time the curtain was about to roll when it was discovered that the King of Egypt had lost his whiskers in an argument with a Memphis cop. The King's hanging gardens were finally located behind a fire bucket and were leaped to the royal chain and the curtain was about to tremble a third time for an ascent when Mme. Emma Noe said "No!" just like that.

Mme. Noe's "no" settled it. The Daughter of the King of Egypt joined Aida and Aida's old man, the King of Ethiopia said he didn't see why his daughter should, and the scrap ended by the gentleman with the long coat and the whiskers appearing before the curtain and telling the music lovers they could get their money back by appearing at the office of Theodore Van Hemert, General Manager of the New York Opera Association, while advertisements selling shares in the association read: "Capital unlimited." It took four policemen to disperse the audience.

A Musical Jest.

Here is a story that will appeal with special force to my musical readers.

A transport (says George Coodchild in "Pinches of Salt") was steaming warily through the Aegean Sea. The captain and the second officer were on the bridge talking and looking out for submarines.

"Darn nuisance these U boats," said the captain. "One wouldn't imagine there was death lurking beneath those glorious waves. Gad! What an idea day it is!"

"Yes, it's like music," said the other.

"It is music," rejoined the captain emphatically. "It's the common chord."

"Common chord! What do you mean?"

"Well, it's the 'E.G. and C.' isn't it?"

Vicious Fallacy of Self-Determination.

The mischief that can be wrought by idle words has been peculiarly illustrated by the pestilential effects of President Wilson's famous phrase, "the self-determination of nations." In essence it is as trivial, though less clever, than certain ingenious phrases like "Absinthe makes the heart grow fonder" or "How many hides has a cow?" But coming from such an exalted personage as the President of the United States, it attained oracular significance. Now a considerable number of persons, to whom Providence gave speech, but denied reason, are proclaiming that the "self-determination of nations" was one of the war aims of the Allies. The invalid President has had his words rammed down his throat until he is almost suffocated, and must on countless occasions have regretted the evil inspiration that prompted him to bang them out on his typewriter. Certainly few men are more temperamentally opposed to self-determination in others than he.

The vicious fallacy involved in the phrase at once becomes apparent if we take the compound word "self-determination" and instead of applying it to nations extended it to individuals. How long would any community, or any enterprise last if every individual were allowed to exercise self-determination as a sacred right? Occasionally some persons try to exercise it;—in fact there has been more of it during the past eighteen months than most of us can tolerate,—but what happens in the long run?

Suppose the ordinary man with a living to earn exercises self-determination in a manner pleasant to all of us, by lying in bed in the morning instead of going to work. He promptly discovers that the boss has strong personal convictions against this kind of self-determination and he loses his job. In time he loses so many jobs that he becomes a charge on others less imbued with his theory of human rights. Suppose a clerk becomes determined that he ought to have money in his pocket whether he has earned it or not, and takes it out of his employer's till. All his theories of the sacred rights of self-hood will not prevent his going to jail if he persists in the practice.

Rich men are supposed to be freer to exercise the right of self-determination than their poorer brethren, but they nevertheless, meet at every turn, barriers set up by modern civilization against this very propensity. They cannot even keep the snow on the sidewalks in front of their homes, defy the speed laws or commit bigamy without incurring the risk of being haled into court and subjected to penalties.

Most of us cherish a secret list of men we would gladly kick. In fact, we are convinced that it would be to the moral advantage of the individuals themselves if we kicked them. But so soon as we should attempt to act on that impulse, we should find the organized forces of law and order lined up against such a simple exercise of the principle of self-determination. In fact, the very idea is inimical to the basic principles under which individuals manage to rub along from the cradle to the grave. The only really successful practitioner of self-determination is the murderer or thief who does not get caught.

If, then, self-determination is impossible for the individual, how much more so is it for a race or a nation, which is but an individual in the mass. In history self-determination of nations has never been a complete success, even with those countries strong enough to get some distance in the pursuit of it. The revolt of the thirteen American colonies is supposed to be a cardinal example of its successful application; but the truth of it is that the majority of the continentals who took up arms, fought because they wished to abolish taxes, and were sadly disillusioned when Washington and his advisers refused to recognize this as a war aim. In all subsequent extensions of territory which have made the United States what it is to-day, the principle of self-determination was completely ignored, so

OXO GENERATES HEALTH

Concentrated Beef Cubes Fortify Body Against Chills.

An Oxo cube dissolved in a cup of hot water is a splendid thing to take before going out in the cold or damp, or on coming in, if one feels the slightest ill effects. Besides its nourishing and invigorating properties, Oxo acts as a fuel in the body, generating heat that the system requires.

Oxo cubes—in tins of four and ten cubes—have endless possibilities. For soups, sauces, gravies, savory dishes and meat jellies, they do all that meat could do, and do it quicker and with less trouble. Use Oxo cubes with "left-overs" and oddsends for new, delicious dishes.

There is nothing better than Oxo for building sturdy boys and girls.

far as the people already established therein were concerned. A general adoption of the principle, either for nations or individuals, would, in a generation or two, bring us back to the moral and intellectual status of the troglodyte.—Saturday Night.

Exhibition of Soldiers' Handiwork.

An exhibition of wicker work baskets, and woollen goods made by soldiers of Escasoni, Jensen Camp, the General and Sudbury Hospitals, was held yesterday afternoon in the Presbyterian Hall. The exhibition was opened at 3 o'clock by His Excellency the Governor, who was accompanied by Lady Harris. In his address, before declaring the exhibition open to the public, His Excellency said that the work done by the young ladies who supervised the making of the articles exhibited, "marks an effort to perform one of our duties to the brave fellows who went overseas." After giving a short account of the work done by the Ward aides, Sir Charles said that the work not only helped the soldiers to keep their thoughts off their ailments, but it would also help towards their upkeep if they were unable to support themselves otherwise. His Excellency quoted two examples of soldiers who were very despondent until they discovered that they could make woollen goods, such as scarves, jumpers, etc., and wicker work cradles, respectively. After a few more appropriate words, Sir Charles declared the sale open. This idea of teaching incapacitated soldiers the means of occupying their time whilst undergoing treatment, originated with Dr. Blackall, the then Vocational Officer, and it was solely through him that the idea became an accomplished fact. The Ward Aides were carefully selected by a committee of ladies, and Miss Smith, who had a great deal of experience in matters of that kind in Canada, was invited down here to instruct them. These young ladies, who, under Miss Smith's able direction, soon became competent in themselves to instruct, are as follows: Misses Pauline Baird, Mary Doyle, Winifred Barker, Susie Taylor, Anna Ledingham, Hattie Wills and Laura Roper. These ladies work under the supervision of Miss Baird. Although the work of instructing the soldiers was not begun until July 19th, the large number of exhibits speaks volumes for the good work of the teachers and the intelligence of the pupils. All the articles exhibited, which ranged from wicker work, baskets, beautifully hand-carved articles, woollen scarves, jumpers and bags, and bead work, were excellent and admiration of them was expressed on all sides. Almost every article was sold, and orders were placed for more. We would like to lay particular stress upon the fact that orders for any of the articles described may be placed with Miss Pauline Baird, Room 4, Militia Bldg., who will see that they are attended to immediately. We understand that the total amount taken in yesterday approximates $460, a very respectable sum. After deducting the expenses incurred in getting the material for the workers, the balance will be given to the soldiers in proportion to the value of the articles they made. During the afternoon the exhibition was visited by many prominent people, all of whom expressed their admiration of the various exhibits and showed it in a practical manner by making purchases. Before concluding, we would again remind all people requiring any of the articles named above, to place their orders with Miss Baird immediately, and they will have the satisfaction of not only getting good value for their money, but also of helping on a good cause.

Side Talks by Ruth Cameron

"THAT'S DIFFERENT."

A friend came to me the other day in a bitter mood. Her husband had put her in a very hard position. Having accepted a week-end invitation from friends of theirs (and especially of hers) he had changed his mind about wanting to go. And she, he said, must get him out of it. They were people to whom she felt under obligations; she didn't think his reasons for changing sufficient; and she rebelled at the idea of lying, as she would have to lie, to spare their feelings.

That Made Her Maddest.

"And the most maddening part of it is that last summer when some of his friends had invited us for an evening—not a week-end, mind you—and my dearest girlhood friend, that I hadn't seen for four years, was going to be in town that one evening, and I wanted him to excuse me, he was awfully indignant and made such a fuss that I finally gave it up."
"Why don't you remind him of that and how he felt then?" I suggested.
"Do you know what he'd say?"
"No."
"That's different!"
"But how could he say it was different? I should think it was almost the same, except that you had more cause."

It's Always Different in His Case.

"So should I," she said, "but I know just as well as I know the sun will rise to-morrow morning, that he will say that. And he will have some reason to give and there won't be a bitman's chance of my making him admit anything different. He's hat way if you try to switch a thing round and apply it to him as he applies it to other people. He can always tell you a reason why it's different in his case. I never yet knew him to admit that there wasn't some circumstance which made it different from him. And sometimes in spite of all his good points, and I know he has a lot of them, it seems as if I simply could not stand that."

Did you ever know anyone with that form of mental blindness, Reader-friend?

And if you have, did you ever know anything more exasperating? It gives one such a feeling of helplessness, such a feeling of not being able to get at a person.

Things Sometimes ARE Different.

Of course things sometimes are different. Circumstances do alter cases, and there may be times when what looks like a reversed condition is not one at all. (It may even have been true in the case of this tale of woe that the woman was unconsciously suppressing or colouring facts in a way that altered the aspects of the case.) And there are people who have a mental blindness in not being able to understand this. "I suppose the only thing one can do is to try very hard when one says 'that's different'—not to be swayed by personal feeling—and equally hard not to be swayed by personal feelings into unjustly resenting the other person's 'that's different.' Of course that does not save one from the other person's mental blindness, but after all one is not responsible for that."

A Militant Poet.

Gabriele d'Annunzio is held to be Italy's greatest living poet; but outside his own country he is not known so much as a poet as he is known as an agitator and adventurer, whose bold achievement has added one more to the many difficult problems Europe has still to solve.

The new kingdom of Jugo-Slavia desired to possess Fiume, the valuable port on the north-eastern Adriatic, and Italy wished to have it, and while the rival claims were being debated, the Italian poet, with a small volunteer army, seized and still holds the place.

Fiume is a most charming city. It is picturesquely situated in the Gulf of the Quarnero, on the slopes of the Julian Alps. Half of its 50,000 inhabitants are of Italian descent, and the other half of southern Slavonian origin. In the town proper, there is now an unmistakable preponderance of Italians. Nobody seems to be oppressed by care, except the "Commandante," d'Annunzio, who must provide the population with food, money—and poetry. The works in the harbor are lulled to sleep, and industrial establishments are at rest. The workmen get for their support 13 liras (equal to $2.20) a day from the workmen's relief fund and the 500 legionary soldiers receive the same pay as the regular troops of the Italian Army.

D'Annunzio, poet, novelist, dramatist, politician, and soldier, was born at Pescara, Italy, in 1864.

He enjoyed excellent educational advantages, graduating from the University of Rome. In 1898 he was elected a member of the Italian Chamber of Deputies, and when Italy entered the war he joined the forces, served at the front, and was wounded in action. When peace was being negotiated he launched the Fiume adventure, the end of which is not yet within sight.

As a writer he has been very industrious and some of his poetry ranks high. His plays, too, have been successful.

COST OF MOTORING.

WILL MASON

Excuse me while I shed a tear and raise a loud lament; the price of tires has climbed, I hear, some twenty-five per cent. I have to buy four tires this spring, or run her on the rims, and I am sadder when I sing these cost-of-motoring hymns. The cost of gas is rising, too, the gas that runs our boats; and every time my car goes "choo!" it burns up seven groats. And oil is going up with gas, the oil we all must buy; and so I pause to say "Alas!" and say it with a sigh. And sparkplugs cost a bone a throw, that once were fifty cents; and motorists, submerged in woe, are sulking in their tents. They gaze upon the wind-swept hill they can't afford to mount, for every mile runs up a bill that breaks their bank account. They view the long inviting road where they would like to speed, but they are chained to their abode by cost of things they need. They cannot tour the moorland track, or journey anywhere, unless they're willing to get back to Shanks and his old mare.

The New Greek Regent.

(From the Boston Transcript.)

The selection of Admiral P. Coundouriotis by the Chamber of Deputies as regent of Greece marks clearly the general control which Premier Venizelos exercises over political developments in Greece. Coundouriotis is the present Minister of Marine, and in 1916, as commander-in-chief of the Greek Navy, he stood staunchly by Venizelos in the efforts which the latter made to have Greece join the cause of the Allies. An influential member of the party opposed to former King Constantine, Coundouriotis may be expected to block any attempt of the Constantine faction to restore the deposed monarch to the Athens throne. It is by no means certain that Prince Paul, younger brother of the late King Alexander, will accept the conditions which go with the offer to him of the Greek throne. These conditions are very definite and specific and are designed to render impossible a future claim to the throne on the part of the deposed Constantine, or any candidate put forward by the Constantine faction. If Prince Paul accepts the Greek throne he will do so only after a formal renunciation has been made by Constantine and Prince George, Duke of Sparta, of their respective claims. These are the conditions which the Greek Government, in accordance with the orders of Premier Venizelos, has attached to its offer of the Greek throne. In formulating these conditions, the Greek Government is inspired by no feeling of animosity towards Prince Paul. It is merely registering the will of a majority of the Greek people, who want definite assurance that the Germanophile Constantine faction have been eliminated, once and for all, as a potential factor in Greek politics.

Cigars and Character.

A man's character may be told from the way in which he smokes cigars, says an enterprising scientist. He who axes his cigar deeply in his mouth is of a nature resolute, skeptical and abrupt; one who bites off the end of his cigar is careless, thoughtless or listless. When the cutter is used to nip off the end the smoker may be considered a man of caution. The user of the amber holder is a delicate person. The man who smokes his cigar to the end is a faithful friend, a constant husband and of a persevering nature. If one is in the habit of throwing away the cigar when only half smoked, he is in danger of being considered feckle, blasé and a trifler.

THE SALE OF GOLDEN OPPORTUNITY!

"OPPORCHUNITY"

By
PETER FINLAY DUNN, et al.

As the poet says,
Opportunity knocks at every man's door
On some men's doors it hammers
Till it breaks down the door,
An' then it goes in and wakes him up,
If he's asleep,
And lives afterwards it warruks fr him
As a night-watchman,
On other men's doors it knocks,
An' goes away,
An' on the doors it comes it knocks,
An' then they come out
It hits them over th' head with an axe.
But every man has an opportunity.
The port are th' people that've been at work
With Opportunity knocked,
And there are others
That have been star gazing,
But now we tell of an opportunity for everybody,
And we want you to tell your friends
And your acquaintances
That the greatest opportunity
There is to-day is

A Bluff That Was Called.

Whenever the fishermen of Newfoundland determine to use their native intelligence in promoting something for their own personal welfare, on their own initiative and independently of Mr. Coaker, that gentleman, with his usual audacity, immediately begins to question the motives which prompt the movement. The successfully carried out meeting of the toilers in the C.C.C. Hall last night, brought forth the usual crop of reasons, when it was mooted, why it should not be held. Simultaneously the Advocate and Star, yesterday, published front page articles, inspired—if not written—by Mr. Coaker, warning fishermen that they should not be present at the meeting, and cautioning them that it was called solely by dissatisfied politicians for political purposes, and the fishermen were to be used as tools. In making such a statement both Government organs deliberately insulted every fisherman, Union and non-Union in Newfoundland. The unscrupulous writer of the article in question wantonly went out of his way to cast a slur on the natural intellect of the men who organized and attended that meeting. Because forsooth it was not headed by Mr. Coaker, and controlled by him.

The dangerous falsehood that it was a political gathering was rammed down the throats of the traducers last night, when the greatest assembly of outport men ever seen under one roof, assembled at the appointed place to make a first start for freedom and fair play. Fishermen from the four Northern Bays, from St. John's, from Ferryland, from Placentia and St. Mary's, backed up by the working classes of this city, were present to voice a protest against the Fish Export Regulations, the operation of which are preventing them from disposing of the fruits of their season's labors. Men not members of the F.P.U. were sitting side by side with members of that organization, and all were unanimous that the time had come to make a bid for free and unrestricted trade. There were Union speakers and non-Union speakers, but not a note of dissent from the purpose of the meeting was heard from any one man. All were united, all in complete accord that the Regulations only are the cause of the present dullness in the local fish market. Politics were not even suggested. The weal of the fishermen was the one subject, and every speaker laid particular emphasis and stress on the fact that they were there solely for the purpose of endeavoring by legitimate means to restore conditions to normal, and thereby bring benefits to the whole country. The report of the proceedings published on page ten will give the reading public in and out St. John's a complete resume of actual happenings. The result of the meeting demonstrates incontrovertibly that the fishermen of Newfoundland do not approve the Regulations, and have given the lie to Coaker's declaration that but for them the price of fish would be lower than it is.

Bold Burglary This Morning.

Early this morning an unknown man entered the store of D. Feder & Co., adjoining Rothwell & Bowring's store, Water St. East, and helped himself to the best outfit that was on the premises. The thief made entrance by the rear and evidently he took his time about the selection he needed. He dressed himself of all his clothing and put on everything new, not forgetting to take a raincoat and a sweater. All his own clothing, including his boots, he left behind. Even some ready cash in the register was taken, the only article overlooked being a watch, a parcel of $300 worth of "tickers" lying silent in a safe. The burglary was one of the coolest carried off here for some time and the wonder is where were the night policemen. The thief made his escape through a skylight over the front entrance.

Express Engine Derailed

The engine of the cross-country express has been derailed near Cook's Brook, consequently the incoming express will not arrive here before tomorrow. The west bound express which left here Tuesday got as far as Cook's Brook, where the incoming express and a special were met at a siding. In passing, the engine became derailed and tipping over sunk in soft mud. The east bound is held at the siding until the derailed engine can be replaced. As far as can be learned no one was injured in the accident.

Dominion Sports.

As will be seen by the prize list, in another column, the Committee in charge of the Dominion Sports has left nothing undone in its attempt to make Nov. 22nd a red-letter day in the annals of sport in Newfoundland. The programme has been prepared with care, and will undoubtedly provide a great deal of interest and excitement for those who attend. The inter-collegiate items are expected to prove very interesting and the Committee is to be congratulated in helping to keep going the friendly rivalry between the various colleges. The marathon race is expected to be the feature of the evening and as all our best runners are taking part, everybody should make an effort to see this great race.

C. L. B. Old Comrades' Dinner.

Last night the Church Lads' Brigade Old Comrades' Association, under President Sergt. Major Peckham, held their annual dinner in the armory gymnasium. Amongst the guests were His Excellency the Governor and Capt. Saltmarsh, A.D.C., Lieut-Col. Geo. Carry, John R. Bennett, Esq., Captain E.H. Dawe, Hon. Tasker Cook, Rev. Canon Jeeves, Rev. Jacob Brinton, Rev. Dr. Geo. H. Bolt, M.A., Lt.-Col. R. G. Hendell, C.B.E., F. P. LeGrow, M.H.A., Chas. E. Hunt, Rev. Captain Clayton, Dr. Modsell and others. This dinner was in connection with the C.L.B.'s 29th anniversary celebration. The toast list was as follows:—

"The Brigade"—Prop. Mr. A. G. Williams; resp. Lt.-Col. R. F. Goodridge.
"The G.W.V.A."—Prop. Mr. C. E. Hunt; resp. Lt.-Col. Geo. Carry.
"Absent Friends"—Prop. Mr. E. Spurrell; resp. Major G. R. Williams.
"Our Guests"—Prop. Mr. Albert Blackler; resp. Rev. Dr. Geo. H. Bolt, M.A.
"Old Comrades"—Prop. Dr. Modsell; resp. Pres. H. R. Peckham.
"The Ladies"—Prop. Lt. R. R. Motty; resp. Lt. Fred Reid.

Songs were given by Color Sergt. McConney, Band Sergt. Pottles and Mr. Macklin. An address on "Old Comrades" by Rev. Captain Clayton, and an exhibition of ventriloquism by Mr. J. Wheeler was much enjoyed by everybody present. The toast of Sister Old Comrade Brigades was on the programme, but had to be omitted on account of the representatives being unable to be present unfortunately, so that the toast was coupled with that of "Absent Friends" in the speech of Major Williams. Selections by the Band were also of a high class and much appreciated as the music was very appropriate to the occasion. The gathering was most enthusiastic and showed that the spirit of the Old Comrades' and brigade work generally is going strong.

A feature of the evening was the unanimous vote to request President Peckham to send a cable of good will and appreciation to Lt.-Col. Franklin, D.S.O., one of the Brigade's pioneer officers as an expression of gratitude for the past herculean work in keeping the C.L.B. going at times when the brigade spirit was waning. References to the past 23 years were many—the days of the battle of Waterford Bridge, Lt.-Col. Outerbridge and R. G. Rendell, C.B.E., Captains C. Wearing Hayward, Major Warren, Lieut. Sam Ebsary, Capt. A. E. Nash, Will Lewis, of South Africa, Lieut. Norman Outerbridge and Sergt. Harold Blackler's names were freely mentioned. To these the Brigade owes its existence, and to many others which space prevents us to mention in detail. President Peckham announced that on Tuesday the Old Comrades will hold a card tournament and on next Tuesday their regular meeting, and hopes all the old boys will turn up in full force to revive the sacred memories of friends gone by and pleasant

Strike for Living Wage.

Yesterday afternoon men discharging a coal cargo for the Railway Commission from the S.S. Lingan, at Clarenville, struck for a living wage. The men were being paid 30 cents per hour and demanded 50 cents, but their demands were not granted. About 200 men were engaged at the work, the majority of them favoring a strike. The rest, however, seeing no other employment in sight, were satisfied to work on, even though the pay was not half sufficient. Fearing trouble the services of the police were requisitioned, and by last night's train a number of constables under Sergt. Bennett, went to the scene. Up to noon hour to-day no offer had been made the men by the Government Commission.

Fishermen Hold Magnificent Demonstration.

C. C. C. Hall Packed From End to End and Hundreds Unable to Gain Entrance -- Unanimous Condemnation of Coaker's Regulations.

The meeting of fishermen and people generally who are affected directly by the fishery, which took place last night in the C.C.C. Hall, showed only too well that conditions as they now exist, must change. The meeting was called for half-past seven, but long before that hour the spacious hall was thronged, every seat and available standing place being occupied. Those who had charge of the meeting, in order to make more room requested the men seated to draw their chairs closer together. This was done, and a couple of hundred others who were on the stairway gained admittance, while others from outside pushed in to take their places. Outside the hall about twice the full of it waited till the meeting was over to hear the result from their fellow fishermen. In spite of the large gathering the meeting was one of the most orderly ever held in the city, and the speakers one and all acquitted themselves in a most creditable manner. Not a dissenting voice was heard, and though the use of the platform was repeatedly offered to any of the audience who held contrary views to the speakers, not one availed of the opportunity. All present were of a unanimous mind that the Regulations were the cause of the present chaotic conditions. The meeting was called by the fishermen who are in the city with fish, which they cannot dispose of. The hire of the hall was paid for by a collection made amongst the fishermen, the proof of which was submitted by one of the committee, who reading an article from the Daily Star, stating that Morine and Bradley's cheque had paid for it, literally caught that paper with the goods. After reading the article in question, he tore the paper in shreds, and tramped on it, amidst thunderous applause. The paper had often lied, but this time it was caught red-handed. The Chairman of the meeting, too, bowled out the Advocate in its bluff of the fishermen. He read an extract from that paper dated Oct. 10th, telling how everything was going good, and that the Regulations were keeping the prices up, etc., while at the same time a notice had been published, at the instance of the Advisory Board, telling shippers that they should not then charter vessels for Labrador fish as the markets were overstocked. Thus the two Government papers were proved conclusively to be lying to the fishermen.

Precisely at 7:30 the committee, consisting of Frank Greene, Greenspond; Sidney Hill, Wesleyville; James Windsor, Wesleyville; Henry White, Greenspond; Aaron Burry, Greenspond, and Samuel Collins, Greenspond, ascended the platform and were greeted with a tremendous outburst of cheering. Mr. Collins rose and asked that a Chairman be appointed. Capt. A. Kean was proposed by Mr. Hill and seconded by Mr. Burry.

CHAIRMAN OPENS MEETING.
Capt. Kean then came forward, and after the cheering had subsided, said that he was much pleased to see such a magnificent audience, and it was due to that the purport of the meeting be made clear, and also his position regarding it. He had been approached and was told it was the unanimous consent of the committee of fishermen present that he should act as Chairman. "This meeting," said the veteran captain "was not brought about by my dictation. It was brought about by men who feel that they have a grievance, and it is their desire to get the support of the country in finding a remedy. It is the purport of this meeting to find out why fishermen coming to St. John's cannot get a sale for their fish. In questions like this there are men who take sides; one side will back the fishery regulations, another will think the regulations are detrimental (hear! hear!) and a third class who don't believe in the fishery regulations, but think it not right to oppose them at this particular crisis. This third class I don't set much regard on. I would like to see here on the platform men who are favorable to the regulations, and would like them to express their opinions. Do you wonder that men should call a public meeting to express their opinion? Last spring the fishermen were told they would get $12.00 and $10.00 a quintal for their fish, and now they could only get $7.00 and $8.00. If they could sell it at all. I may tell you men, that while walking up the street to-day with an exporter of 30 years' standing, who was not in favor of the regulations, he said that he thought it would be the greatest calamity to do away with the fish regulations now. I replied, I am not in favor of the regulations. A meeting has been called by a dozen or 14 reputable citizens of our country, and they ask me to be Chairman. I am going to meet that Committee now, and will you come with me. The merchant replied, 'No, I do not care to be mixed up with them.' Gentlemen, the question has to be settled right. If the move we make is wrong, it will have no effect, but if right it will leave its impression on the country for generations to come. A set of resolutions will be read to you, and if there is a fisherman here who is in favor of the fishery regulations he may come on the platform, and I am sure he will get an attentive hearing. So far as a strike or using force was concerned I would not be a party to it, but I was always willing to act as chairman of a fishermen's meeting no matter what side of politics they were on. With these few remarks, I now declare the meeting open."

SKIPPER CALLS $8.00 BLUFF.

Mr. Chairman and Gentlemen,— You may wonder who I am; well, I am Frank Greene from Greenspond, and the Daily Star to-day says I am an Opposition trickster. I say I am a fisherman, who catches fish to make a living. There is no Opposition or Government in this matter. I am here to get a living. Frank Greene went overseas when the war broke out in 1914, and did not come back till it was over. I am here to sell my fish and I have tramped Water Street but could get no offer for it. Fish is no good now, men. We are told to catch and make good fish and we did so, but we cannot get the price we were promised for it. If we have smart men running the Government, why did they not tell us this deadlock was coming? Every one is suffering now. Why are the factories in St. John's closed down? It is because our fish is lying in schooners in the harbor and no sales can be made. If the fisheries go down, Newfoundland goes down. I fought for her, and I think I should now fight to keep her up. If the regulations have brought us to this pass, well then tear them up. Is there proof that the regulations are good? [No! No! No!] We have fish in our vessels and can't sell it, while our families are in want. Out came a hand-bill this evening, I suppose it was from the Star or Advocate office, saying 'Don't sell your fish for less than $8.00.' Why did they not offer this money during the week. I suggest that a deputation wait on Mr. Coaker, and ask him to sell our fish at these prices. I will now read a resolution for you men. Drink down every word of this resolution, and if it don't satisfy you spit it up again. (The resolution will be found elsewhere).

MR. JABEZ WINDSOR CALLS HAWES.

In seconding the resolution, Mr. Windsor said: I am here as a fisherman, and I second this resolution because I believe the Fish Regulations are ruining us. We have been fooled some way or another. I was shown a foreign order for 10,000 qtls. of fish, but the man who had it would not buy because he didn't know when he would be allowed to ship it. I saw another order for 5,000 qtls. which another buyer had, but he would not buy for the same reason, and he would give a higher price than the other man. I put it to yourselves, could you do business if someone in the same business would order you when to sell and when and how he liked and to whom he liked. Why should we be bound down to a Mr. Hawes; this man is controlling the sales in Italy, and you can't sell only through him. Why should we be ground down by such an order as this. If you could only sell through one man in St. John's, what would happen? I guess every one here knows. The proper way to handle the fish question is to let every one sell where he likes as he can sell where he likes in St. John's and get the highest price obtainable. Kill competition and you kill the price. Give every one a chance. We are not concerned who eats the fish or who buys it so long as the price is maintained.

FISHERMAN SIDNEY HILL MOVES SECOND RESOLUTION.

Fisherman Sidney Hill of Wesleyville, moved the second resolution. He said "It seems strange to me to be here on this occasion, when we expected so much when we started out at our annual trot this spring. A great deal has been said about the Regulations, but it is impossible to find out how they are working. If the Regulations are to be carried out at all they should be carried out properly. In places they have not been carried out at all. Why should we not be allowed to come here and sell to the Spaniards or to any other person instead of having other people buy our fish and then sell to them and make a dollar a quintal raw profit that should go to the fisherman. It is right that the merchants and buyers should make a profit, you can't expect them to sell by the loss, but the fisherman also should be considered and as the producer, given a fair price for his catch. The Regulations are not dealing properly with the fishermen and the loss is all on our side. The standardization is alright, because it asks that we make good fish, but this also has not been properly carried out as every man who has sold his fish can tell.

HENRY WHITE CONDEMS REGULATIONS.

In seconding the resolution Henry White of Loo Cove, said, "I have tried 5 merchants to-day and could not get an offer for my fish. I have walked Water Street for days trying to get a decent price for my fish or oil, but to no purpose. More than that I saw hundreds of men hanging around the wharves out of employment. What are we going to do about it? While conditions are bad now, they will see them worse later on. The North is going to be the greatest sufferer. Watch the Prospero sail every trip, and you can see her leave here without enough of freight to keep her in ballast, and if this continues is it not reasonable to think that the people of the North who will soon become isolated with ice and snow, will be short of provisions for the winter. A year ago you would want to get smart to get a parcel aboard of her. What are we going to do about it? If the Regulations are the cause, let us get rid of them (The audience 'get rid of them to-night.') I will not be surprised if some people in the North are hungry before Christmas comes, if these Regulations are not done away with and free trade opened. (Audience, "Do way with the Regulations.") We must do something. I am only a fisherman, have been at it since I was 7 years old, have been 20 years a shipper, and I am only 36. I was never in the House of Assembly to make a speaker, but when it comes to making a living for my family and I can't get it. I am forced to do something. I have a family home and I am prepared to die for them. I am going to stand out for my rights. I supported Mr. Coaker last Fall, and will support him to-morrow if he does right by the fishermen. I do not want any politics mixed in this matter at all, but I want to get a living for my family without being restricted. Seven dollars a quintal for fish is a starvation price. But even at that you can't even get an offer. What are we going to do? At $8.00 a quintal I will sink about $1500 on my fish. How can we live at a loss. Then let me tell you of the Inspectors under the Regulations. Why they don't know a cod-fish from a sculpin. And the Agents abroad are worse. Just think, men, we have an Agent abroad looking after our fish at $4,000 a year, who has only just left school teaching. What does he know about fish? I don't want to knock the whole business; in certain parts the Regulations are alright. The matter of cure is alright. This year I watched my fish which was split in my schooner, saw it properly salted, washed and made, expecting as was promised last spring that we would get $10.00 or more a quintal for it, but what do we find. I went to some merchants who told me that I would fetch $10.00 or $10.50 for my product only for the regulations, but we are all left. I think it is too late for us now to do much good, we should have started when the first vessel came to St. John's. It may not be too late to accomplish something, however, if not this year, next year. When I look at Water Street and the waterfront it is with sadness. While we consider the outports our own home, we look upon St. John's as our big home, and if we don't do something the grass will be growing on Water Street sure enough. We don't want to tear down anything or tear up anyone, but we want fair play. I have 800 quintals of fish on my schooner and if I could sell it it would give a couple of days work to 20 or 30 men in St. John's and put at least some money in circulation.

FISHERMAN EDWIN WILLAR PROPOSES 3rd RESOLUTION.

Fisherman Edwin Willar of Greenspond, a man who for many years has been harvesting the sea, in a crippled condition, having had a leg amputated, moved the third resolution. He said he was a member of the Fisherman's Union for ten years, and never missed a meeting during that time. He supported the Union because he deemed it was doing good. Dealing with the resolution he said, "I am opposed to the regulations. Five years ago I had a leg amputated by Dr. Grenfell and as soon as I recovered I started fishing in a small punt. During the war when fish was high I was paid for with $1202 for a summer's work in three handed boat. I invested a big lot of money in a schooner and this year I took a crew and sailed from Cape Spear to Cape Mugford in quest of a voyage. After all our efforts we only secured 230 quintals, which we brought on here for sale and started to land at Mudges. Of this 155 quintals turned out No. 1 and the balance No. 2. I asked the Inspector what he meant by culling, so much of my fish down to No. 2 and I will not tell you the answer I got. It made my blood boil and I made after him. If I had caught him I need not tell you what would have happened. If you could see the condition of my body after tramping this town carrying around a 19 pound artificial leg you would not wonder why I lost my temper with that Inspector. When I went to the Labrador I understood from Mr. Coaker's story that the price would be $9.00 and $10.00 for ordinary Labrador and $12.00 for shore cure, and that the government would be at the back of these prices. Last year Mr. Coaker went over to the Fish markets and came back this spring and said the prices would be $10.00 and $12.00. If the fish were sold at a loss we were led to believe the government would stand the loss. The fisherman, he told us, were going to be looked after, and if any loss was met it would come out of the Minister and the Doctor and the Lawyer and the Clerk, and if we were obliged to pay $2.00 into the revenue to meet the loss we would get $500.00 back. Now the boot is on the other foot. I am a Union man but I don't hold with the Regulations. I would support Mr. Coaker to-day if he would treat me right. I propose that a committee of 5 wait on Mr. Coaker to-morrow about these prices.

UNION MAN CONDEMS REGULATIONS.

Aaron Burry of Greenspond, in seconding the resolution said "He was a Union man, being Deputy Chairman of the Council for 3 years. This year he was up against it and had about 45 quintals as his share of the voyage. He sold a few quintals of the fish Monday and was then told by the buyer he wanted no more. He called on the Hon. Inspector General about the cull, but he don't seem to understand him. The price and the cull was an outrage on the fisherman, and the whole thing was due to the Regulations, and I say if so let us break them. The regulations told us, said the speaker to make good fish and we did it with 800 qtls. and now we can't sell it. In Greenspond men who fitted out the smack fishermen had the fish in their stages and in their stores and could not find a purchaser because of the Regulations. What odds if a purchaser came from Baffin's Land or Jericho so long as his money was good and he wanted fish. If free trade is stopped the independent trader is driven out of the market; there is no competition and the producer is the victim. If we don't let the foreigner, the Spaniard, the Italian, the American and every one else come in and take our fish we will quickly find ourselves in the hole, and we are very deeply into it already. He followed the Regulations to the fullest degree. When he arrived home his crew took about 800 quintals of fish, rewashed it, dried it and cured it as well as could honestly be done. "Only to find when we reached St. John's we could not sell it, and if we could only at a price that is enough to no more than pay for the salt. This was an extra job we undertook under the Regulations."

MR. CONDON SPEAKS.

Mr. M. E. Condon was asked by the audience to address the meeting which he did briefly. The last time he spoke from the platform, he said, was at a Sealers' meeting at the request of Mr. Coaker, and as a Union man he denounced the regulations. If they were removed, he said, trade would improve, and if they never had been introduced Italy to-day would have purchased 150,000 qtls. of the catch.

GOVERNMENT DECEPTION EXPOSED.

When the resolutions had been moved and seconded, Capt. Kean again came forward and asked the meeting if anything objectionable had been said or if any abuse had been offered, to which questions the entire audience replied "NO!" After thanking the fishermen for the splendid example set in the conduct of the meeting, he went on to deal with certain criticism of himself in the Star and Advocate which were to say the least libellous and for which the authors would likely have to appear before the bar of Justice. He then went on to quote from the Advocate of the 10th inst., an editorial headed "Coaker Policy Wins Out," which said that the fish markets were purchasing all the fish available, that no losses had been made, and that there was no need for alarm. He also quoted a letter from the Marine and Fisheries Department urging the exporters not to charter any vessels for 3 weeks, as they would not be allowed to sail, and that 200,000 quintals of Labrador fish were in the markets or afloat, and would be sufficient for 3 or 4 months. One statement was inconsistent with the other. If purchasers were not allowed to charter ships and export, there could be sales made locally, and the trouble to-day was that buyers were afraid to purchase and store up the fish. Allow free export and the cobwebs would soon be relieved. (The chairman then went on to deal with the personal attacks made on him by the Star and Advocate, and satisfied the fishermen that they were undeserved. When Capt. Kean resumed his seat the building shook with cheers.

IN A RIGHTEOUS CAUSE.

Mr. Samuel Collins, Hare Bay, was the next speaker, and said he believed he was present in a righteous cause. (Continued on 11th page.)

LONDON GOSSIP.

PRINCE AND THE NAVY.

LONDON, Nov. 1st, 1920.
The rumour that the Prince of Wales will shortly command a cruiser for a few months is ridiculed in the navy. It certainly implies little knowledge of the conditions in the modern Navy, and of the Prince's association with the Service. He would be the first to admit that he has had no training for the responsibilities of a warship captain. He relinquished active duty afloat as a midshipman in 1911, and he has not served in an executive capacity as Lieutenant or Commander. His father commanded the Melampus in 1892 and the Crescent in 1898, but that is no precedent, because the King had gone through the ordinary training of a naval officer.

LIGHTER ARTIFICIAL LIMBS.

The insistent demand among all ex-soldiers who have lost legs, and are compelled to wear artificial limbs, is for the lightest possible leg. At the beginning of the war, nine pounds was the average weight of an artificial leg, but the weight of a leg made of wood has now been reduced to just under five pounds. The Ministry of Pensions is now experimenting with metal limbs lighter than this. On a recent morning it was shown a new leg, made of the aluminium alloy, duralumin, which only weighs 3½ pounds. The leg can be made at very little greater cost than the heavier wooden leg. One ex-soldier, after looking at the leg and agreeing that its lightness was an inestimable advantage, said to me sadly, "If I had a metal leg I should have to find a new way of keeping up my sock. With my wooden leg I use tin-tacks, of course."

NAME AND ADDRESS WANTED.

During the last few days an old man of a shabby appearance has been dropping in at hospitals and charitable society offices and casually giving "a little donation." This little donation has been invariably notes for $2,000. The old man's method is freakish. He tells the secretary he would like to help, and producing from a small canvas bag a roll of notes he puts them down and forthwith disappears. If asked for his name by the grateful official he will say (or did to one astonished secretary), "I like your face," and departs quickly. He seems to be nearly eighty years old, and wears a greasy suit, a cloth cap, and broken boots. The only noticeable feature recorded is an inflamed left lower eyelid. One secretary said he expected to get half a crown from the look of him. He speaks like an educated man. The little canvas bag is said to be bursting with bank notes. He is known to have given away more than $8,000 in this way. The hospitals are all eagerly hoping he will call. Before producing the money he usually stipulates that it shall be used for the benefit of the patients and not for building. Reporters who have been trying to discover the identity of this modern Haroun al Raschid have found out nothing. For the sake of the hospitals it is to be hoped his wish to be unknown will be respected. His own account of himself is simply that he "is getting an old man, without much use for his money." Doubtless he is enjoying the stir he has so innocently caused.

PICTORIAL CHEQUES.

Hitherto the form of cheque used by private persons, or by firms, has been conventional. Its principal feature has usually been the name of the bank on which it was drawn, and its only decoration the revenue stamp with which it was embossed. An innovation, however, which may become generally adopted is for a firm to have its own cheques printed, and then illustrate them with pictures round the outer edges depicting its trade activities. The idea may even spread to private persons, who would decorate their cheques with their portraits, or, for the enlightenment of sceptical creditors, a photograph of the drawer being received at his bank by an obsequious manager.

RARE VINTAGES FROM HOTEL CELLARS.

Now that one large London hotel after another is being reopened at the end of the sweeping and furnishing necessitated by the havoc of years of Government war-time control, the diner-out who loves a glass of good wine is discovering a consequence as unlooked for as it is welcome. When the Government stepped in the hotel proprietors as a rule locked their wine cellars and kept their stocks intact. They are now releasing these pre-war hoards. The result is that diners prepared to pay the cost—and it is noteworthy how many are daily forthcoming—can to-day procure wines of vintages and bottlings which had been absent from London dinner tables for years. This is particularly the case in regard to certain German wines, it being possible now to procure in certain hotels and restaurants bottles which could not be obtained from the large wholesale houses, as these were sold out long ago, and have not been able to replenish their stocks. As far as the finer and older vintages are concerned, this condition of things will remain, as such comparatively small parcels of them as remain in Germany renewal of the importation here of wines from the Rhine and the Moselle has, however, set in, and very soon those who do not share the poet Coleridge's deep distaste for these vintages, and who do share Bismarck's belief that affairs of the frontier should not be allowed to disturb the digestion, will be drinking again from the old familiar brown and green long bottles as of yore.

THE CAGE BIRDS.

England has six hundred cage-bird societies, each of which separately holds two or three members a year, but this year a dozen of the London societies have combined to exhibit a thousand birds at the show at the Passmore Edwards Settlement, canaries out number all the other exhibits, but there is a very good if melancholy collection of English native birds, including a nightingale which sings all the year, a bullfinch described by enthusiasts as the finest bullfinch in England, and a beautiful goldfinch which failed to win a prize because it had not learned the properly educated show birds trick of hopping about in a way to show off its best points. The birdmen say that cage birds are more popular than ever, and perhaps even Mr. Galsworthy, the popular playwright, would admit the plea that they are a solace to hundreds of disabled men who love living things but are shut off from all their outdoor interests. The cost of canary food has gone up, and the canaries themselves are now expensive. The singer who hangs on a nail in the kitchen costs three times his pre-war price, and a bird worthy to enter a singing contest may be anything up to $200. These fine singers have a long training, and the lessons take place in the dark of shuttered cages surrounding the cage of the teacher canary, who sings to them. The judges test them severely and award bad marks for such faults as "ugly interjections," which means breaking from smooth song into chattered notes.

THE SCEPTRE.

Another of the old London chop-houses that have remained in their original state is about to pass away. The Sceptre is not an 18th century antique like the lamented Baker's Chop-house, but it is a very fine specimen of the early Victorian restaurant, hardly altered at all since it was established by the original Purcell some 90 years ago in that narrow sinuous street, Warwick Street, which follows the line of Regent Street a little to the eastward of it. It is called the Sceptre after a famous racehorse, and the prints on the walls are of racing events. It has a gently curved window with smallish panes of glass and some remains of a reading room with newspapers are in the front part. In its early history it provided the news of the day for its customers as well as good English food and drink. It was one of the last places to give up pewter platters for its chops, and more people drank port with their cheese there than in any other moderately priced restaurant in London. Its port was good and cheap. The lower part had no table cloths, and to fastidious modern eyes suggested a cabman's eating house. The upper part, rather cramped with two awkwardly shaped rooms, has a large armchair in which

MRS. NANCY SHARP, of Los Angeles, who says she received one of the greatest surprises of her life when Tanlac completely restored her health after she had almost lost hope of ever getting well. Declares she suffered for twelve long years.

"After seeing the wonderful results my husband obtained from Tanlac I began taking the medicine myself, and now we both agree that it is the greatest medicine on earth," said Mrs. Nancy Sharp, a prominent and highly esteemed resident of Los Angeles, Calif., living at 921. Canulus street, whose husband is proprietor of the Merchants' Express Co.
"During the twelve years that I suffered with indigestion and stomach trouble I tried nearly every medicine I heard about, but nothing helped me and I lost faith in everything. So, my wonderful restoration to health has been one of the greatest surprises of my life.
"I began to feel an improvement on finishing my second bottle of Tanlac, and now after taking six bottles I am like a new woman. I have a splendid appetite, eat three hearty meals a day, enjoy them thoroughly and am never troubled in the least with indigestion or any other disagreeable after effects.
"Before taking Tanlac most everything I ate caused my stomach to rebel and I would suffer for hours afterwards. I was so dreadfully nervous that many nights I never closed my eyes in sleep, but now I am not the least nervous, and I sleep like a child. My strength has been wonderfully increased, and I have much more energy.
"I just wish it was so everybody troubled like I was knew about this wonderful medicine."
Tanlac is sold in St. John's by M. Connors, in Parade by Mrs. Martin F. Byrne, in Upper Gates by Fisher Andrews, in Portland by H. C. Haines, in St. Joseph, Salmonier, by Mrs. J. Gush, in Miramichi by Exploit Valley Royal Stores, Ltd., in Flat Island by William Samson, in Jamestown by Christopher Haines, and in Lewisporte by Uriah Freahe—adv.

Charles Dickens is said to have sat—he was certainly one of the patrons of the Sceptre. The elderly waiter never saw Dickens, but he remembers people who had seen him there. It had a curious mixture of customers; young officials of the Admiralty and the War Office, elderly Soho tradesmen, sporting journalists, and old-fashioned theatrical people made the body of it, and usually there were one or two fairly well-known faces at its tables. The old waiter has been 42 years in the place, and some of his customers were there before him. The property is to be put up for sale, and will probably close its doors. There is no chop-house quite like the Sceptre, and its passing will be mourned by old-fashioned Londoners.

Company Denies Charge

Editor Evening Telegram.
Dear Sir,—Our attention has just been drawn to a statement made in the House of Assembly on Friday, May 28th, which seems to imply that there have been a lot of deer killed on the Howley Reserve to feed the men of this Company.
We wish to state most emphatically—though it should not be necessary for us to do so—that no deer have been killed by the authority of this Company, and from careful enquiries we have made, we are satisfied that no deer have been killed by our men and taken to Millertown or Badger for their food supplies.
Trusting you will give publicity to this statement.
Yours truly,

Story of the British Navy.

ILLUSTRATED LECTURE BY COM-MANDER FENN.

The Sunday Schoolroom of Gower St. Church was well filled last evening at the lecture on the British Navy given for the benefit of the Gower St. Troop of Boy Scouts by Commander Fenn of H. M. S. Briton. All who attended were delighted with the presentation of the subject. For an hour the Commander spoke on the Navy of the past, tracing the history from the earliest times, and recounting the story of many a heroic deed done by "heroes of oak" in the days of wooden vessels and sail propulsion. The speaker was thoroughly acquainted with his subject and told of many incidents of striking interest. The latter part of the evening was given to the display of lantern slides on the Navy of to-day. The lecturer commented on these, and gave a description of the battle of Jutland and the attack on Zeebrugge. The exploits of the mine sweepers and the work of the submarines were touched upon, and the frequent applause and close attention of the audience—and especially the boy part of it—showed that the Commander had caught and was holding their entire attention. In the course of the evening allusion was made to the Battle of Trafalgar and the early life of Admiral Nelson. At a later date the Commander has promised to give another lantern lecture on Nelson's life. This will doubtless attract a large audience. During the evening a dialogue was put on by two of the older Scouts, Bert Spencer, P. L. "Eagles", and Jim Stevenson, P. L. "Caribous". Mrs. Garland, wife of Assistant Scoutmaster Lieut. Chas. Garland, sang a solo, accompanied by Mrs. Jardine. A vote of thanks was moved by Mr. Joseph Peters and seconded by Rev. Dr. Bond. The Scouts and Cubs were there in force, and they presented their thanks to the speaker by giving him the full salute and the rousing Scout Yell. His Excellency the Governor, Chief Scout of Newfoundland, regretted his inability to be present.

The Absorbing Question

The British press is discussing, with all becoming delicacy, the marriage of the Prince of Wales. One paper already suggests that "the prince is getting on." The London Times expresses the hope, in a veiled way, that the prince is in a new world, in which many a punctilio has been thrown in the discard, may not be limited in his choice to the royal circle, tragically narrowed by the war. The quidnuncs have even mentioned names. The hope is expressed that should the prince be inclined to marry, he should find a consort in the British nobility. The heir apparent, during his visit to the Dominion and Australia, was, of course, polite and attentive to the many ladies to whom he was introduced; but he does not appear to have paid any marked attention to any individual lady. Hopes may have been cherished; flutterings, deliciously feminine, were doubtless indulged; but, according to all external appearances the heart of the prince is still whole.

History is full of the miseries of royal marriages of convenience. The most notable in this category, so far as our own empire is concerned, was that of the prince regent (George IV.) and the Princess Caroline of Brunswick—a marriage which, with all its wretched consequences, became a great scandal in Britain for years. The habit has been to marry for reasons of State, and then contract left-handed or morganatic marriages for love. There must, of course, be certain restrictions in the matter of royal marriages, as the large interests of the State have to be considered; but it is well known that Queen Victoria, who was a wonderful match maker, always advocated love marriages, and this more emphatically, in that her own marriage had been unprecedentedly happy—that long union with the prince consort expressing the most ideal relations.

The morganatic marriage was the custom at the court of the Hohenzollerns and, in its incidence, was the cause of much suffering, as neither the morganatic wife nor the offspring of the union could be recognized; and women, well born and well bred, have been obliged to live under a social cloud which embittered their lives. The morganatic principle has not been recognized at the British court, although it was well known that the Duke of Cambridge, at one time head of the British army, was married morganatically.

A great deal of this old official furniture is being cast in the discard. The world is new. Official red tape and pipe clay are seen to be the foolish things they are. There must be order. There ought to be reverence. But the Prince of Wales is not only the heir to the greatest throne on earth—he is a human being, and entitled, in the most serious act of life, to the exercise of his inclination and his judgment. Certainly, the British people would be satisfied if the Prince married within the circles of the British nobility, while it would be an immense social and political sensation if "Prince Charming" should choose a prominent American lady as his consort. That, it has been claimed, would settle many an awkward international difference, but, as "Bobby" Burns says: "Luv will ventur' in where it daren't will be seen."

And the choice of the Prince can only be a matter of conjecture. All the world loves a lover, and all the world is intensely interested in the choice of her apparent. A lady writer has said that, even with love, it is hard for married folk to "rub along." All the more necessary that the prince should have this advantage; but, most important of all that, he should exert his unhampered choice in a relationship so pregnant with consequences to the State and the individual. —Montreal Gazette.

Jeweller's Vest.

Jewellers in New York's diamond district wear a jeweller's vest which is a long, drill. It is longer than an ordinary waist-coat or vest and is worn between the regular vest and the coat. On the inside of the vest, on each side, is a deep pocket, with a flap and a button to close the flap. Jewellers wear them to carry the wallets in which they keep diamonds and other precious stones. They consider the pockets safer than those in the ordinary garments because the wallets do not bulge out the pockets so much.

Holland May Abolish Throne.

The Hague, Nov. 5.—The possibility of becoming a republic is in prospect for Holland under recommendations submitted to-day by the commission appointed to revise the constitution. If these recommendations are adopted, Holland will have the chance to decide upon doing away with royalty, unless the little Princess Juliana, only child of Queen Wilhelmina and Prince Consort Henry, some day gives birth to a son by a husband whom the Dutch parliament approves as her consort. The princess now is eleven years old.

The commission proposes that hereafter, unless there is a direct male descendant of a male ruler, the throne shall go to some male of the second generation of the last king. In the event of there being no direct male successor, however, the people shall have the opportunity to change the country's form of government, under the commission's scheme.

Made Brave Fight for Life.

Half-Breed Sailor, Wrecked off Philippines, Simply Determined He Would Not Die.

Among the crew of the Poigat, a ship that, foundered off Malaban, in the Philippines, was a half-breed sailor named Alejandro Lorenzo. In the moment of the ship's sinking he was agile enough, and lucky enough, to leap clear of the wreck and escape the deadly suction of the disappearing vessel. He was alive and uninjured, but he was many miles from shore, and there was no help in sight.

After swimming for an hour he found a hatch cover on which he rested. Then pushing the hatch cover ahead, he started for San Nicolas. He was just reaching shallow water when the tide carried him out to sea again.

As night came on the wind increased and the waves tossed him and his hatch cover back and forth till he was almost exhausted, being washed toward the Cavite shore. For several hours he drifted in, but just as his hope grew strong the tide and wind swept him in spite of his struggles once more out to sea.

Something brushed against his leg. He thought that it was a shark and screamed in fear. "It did not touch me, or I should have gone mad," he said. The water was cold, the night was dark and the rain beat down on him. He heard a cry in the darkness, and pushed his hatch cover in the direction whence the sound came. He found a Filipino boy, another survivor of the wreck, clinging to an oil box. They drifted together.

When daylight came they could see boats, but could not make themselves heard or seen. They were tortured by thirst, salt water got into their mouths they drifted all day.

Night came again. Soon after dark they saw the lights of a breakwater, and with new hopes noticed that the lights grew larger and more distinct. They were being washed toward the shore. But the boy could not hold out. Taken with cramps, he lost his hold on the oil box and went down. The man was washed into the middle of the bay and drifted all night.

At dawn he was almost ready to give up, but the wind and waves headed him for the shore and he took heart. Then he saw boats and used his last strength in trying to reach them. The boatmen saw him, were able to get to him in time and picked him out of the water. There was not much of the man left, and shrieking for water, he collapsed in the bottom of the boat.

As he lay on a pallet, after he found himself able to talk again, his rescuers spoke of his wonderful endurance. Alejandro in reply said that, of course, he had done the best he could. He wanted to live, he said.—New York Herald.

The Tale of the Telephone.

The Emperor of Brazil Was One of the First to Appreciate Its Wonders.

"Mr. Watson, come here, I want you." These were the first words ever spoken on the telephone, and the date of the event was March 10th, 1876. For months Alexander Graham Bell, the almost penniless young inventor, and his friend Watson had been working on the new invention. As Bell said long after, "It was conceived in a cellar and born in a workshop."

Two months later the Centennial Exhibition at Philadelphia was opened, and Bell sent in his new invention.

At this time he was deeply in love with a charming girl, a Miss Hubbard, whose father had something to do with the Exhibition. One day she came to him and urged him to go to Philadelphia. "I am going myself," she said. "Do come with me." "But I can't. I've no money and no clothes," he answered. The poor girl burst into tears. "Don't cry. I'll come," declared Bell, and there and then, without ticket or luggage, he jumped on the train.

No One Noticed the Invention. The pair arrived at Philadelphia. The Exhibition had been open for six weeks, and not a soul had so much as noticed the poor little telephone which lay on a small table all by itself. Miss Hubbard begged her father to get some of the scientific people to examine it.

He promised, but it was seven in the evening before the judges approached. They were tired and hot, and wanted to get their dinner. Bell explained eagerly, but not one would so much as lift the receiver.

Poor young Bell's heart was in his boots when at that moment a fine-looking man, with a dark face and white hair, and accompanied by a gracious lady, came up.

"How do you do, Mr. Bell?" he said, extending his hand. "Do you not remember me? I came to your class for deaf mutes some years ago. I have since established a similar class in my capital."

Bell gasped, and managed to bow. "I remember, sir. You—you are the Emperor of Brazil."

Dom Pedro smiled. "And this is an invention of yours?" he asked.

Bell quickly explained, and the Emperor listened with interest. Then he picked up the receiver and put it to his ear, while Bell hastily instructed a friend to go and speak from a distance.

A look of amazement crossed the Emperor's face.

"My God, it talks!" he exclaimed. By this time there was a crowd around, a crowd among which were numbered some of the most famous scientists of the day. One was Lord Kelvin himself, the greatest electrician of the time.

He was the next to put the receiver to his ear.

"It does talk!" he declared. "This is the most wonderful thing that I have seen in America."

Soon well-deserved honors and riches were heaped upon its brilliant young inventor. But he never forgot that all his success was due to the girl whom he loved and afterwards married.—Pearson's Weekly.

U. S. Troops Slaughter Haitians.

The United States Government has lately had something to divert its attention from the condition of Ireland, in revelations with regard to the conduct of its troops in Haiti. Privates of the U. S. marine corps have been recklessly killing Haitian prisoners held on the charge of being bandits. Two marines were tried and acquitted on the ground that they were merely obeying the orders of their immediate command, Lieut. H. T. Brokaw. The latter was in turn investigated, adjudged insane and dismissed from the service. It is admitted by the higher command of the Marine Corps that there was "indiscriminate killing" of Haitians, who are, in a measure, wards of the United States. It is now revealed that this slaughter has totalled 3,250 in the past four years. The New York Herald says that these massacres were due chiefly to the strong anti-American feeling engendered by the methods of American occupation, which has destroyed any vestige of independence.

The Brokaw affair was not one of those that invariably transpire during the suppression of insurrection, when the whole community is in danger, like the unjustifiable killing of Mr. Sheehy Skeffington in the Irish rebellion of Easter Week, 1916; or the drastic measures taken by General Dyer at Amritsar, Punjab, to save whites of both sexes from hideous death. It was cold blooded slaughter.

Outrage at St. Paul's.
 FAMOUS PICTURE ATTACKED WITH A HAMMER.
 Seeking to air a pension grievance, Matthew Scully, of New Cut, Lambeth, waited until the close of the afternoon service at St. Paul's Cathedral, and then smashed the protecting "glass panel of Mr. Holman Hunt's painting, "The Light of the World," which hangs there. He used a hammer, attached to which was a label, "Justice for the disabled." A second blow was delivered, but before a third blow could be struck Mr. Victor G. Gibbs, of Maida-vale, rushed up and restrained the man, who was taken into custody. Subsequently, at the Guildhall, Alderman Sir Alfred Bower, publicly thanked Mr. Gibbs for his promptitude, which had preserved the actual painting from serious damage. Scully, it appears, is an old soldier, who served seven years in India before the war, was discharged with a pension of 2s. 6d. a day, re-enlisted in 1915, and was then discharged on account of an old leg-weakness. He was given hospital treatment, but then his pension ceased, though it had since been re-granted as from July 1 last. He complained that he could not get his pension at Hounslow.

A Literary Charwoman
 Following little Daisy Ashford with her "Young Visitors" and six-year-old Opal Whiteley with her diary, the literary charwoman of Bayswater, a London suburb.
 A tall, gaunt woman of sixty, with the modesty of many notable literary folk, demands that her identity be concealed, this bookworm, Bayswater reads a book a day, and acts as a collaborator to her employer who is a busy reviewer.
 She opened the door to a London reporter who called to interview her recently, but promptly disappeared and details had to be supplied by a reviewer. She insists upon being given a book to read every day. She time ago she declared she would stay if this were not done.
 "No trash will do," said the reviewer. "I have a weakness for detective stories, but I don't get out of them to here. We have given you Colley and Tchekoff, Thomas Hardy's poems, though she considers them too pessimistic."
 "It is my lot to review a certain number of books. I find that I do better than hand them to her. Her judgment is always sound and swayed by no weight of a name or popularity."
 Last week Bayswater's literary charwoman was reading "Daisy" by H. G. Wells. Next she may be busy with E. F. Benson's new "Daisy."
