"THEY SAID SHE WAS ALONE."

By Mrs. L. H. Sigourney.

They said she was alone,—and that she stood Amid the corpses of her three fair babes, And by his side, who to her heart had been Lover and comforter for many a year, And that he too, was dead.

Amazed I look'd To see if it were so,—and on his lip There was no breath, and in his eyes no light. They said she was alone.—And many wept In company with her,—For he had fallen, Was their guide to everlasting life.— Their oracle in doubt,—a friend who pour'd The interceding prayer when death was nigh, Or the tomb open'd for a "dust to dust."—"They said she was alone." But when I turn'd To look upon her,—and breast there lay A tender blossom of a young one, News-born and smiling,—I thought the babe Did bid the foe to fly,—and bid me stay.

—ALSO—
The Father of our mercies—who doth watch Our frames so tenderly, and press the strength Of holy healing in the cup of grief, That none may sink beneath his cruel rebuke, But walk in patience and in chastened hope On to the land which hath no need that pain Should be the teacher of its sinless host.

THE PRINTER'S SOLILOQUY.

"'Tis strange! 'tis most prodigious strange, That our subscribers are so careless grown About paying their arrears. They cannot think That we alone, who publish the world News from all nations, and delight to spread Useful instruction through our spacious land, Can, meanwhile, live on air: 'tis flesh and blood That works the press, and turns the black-lead sheet Well stored, and ready for their eager eyes. As well as theirs, or else the press must stop. Thus calls for CASH. And then how many reams Of paper are struck off and scattered wide, For which no length of credit will be given, It given at all—besides the type and ink, And many things required by those that print, For which our money must be answerable!"

Oh! that our readers would consider this! And while they're laughing, look our paper o'er, And gather instruction from its every page. Would pause, and to this one question ask, "Do I not owe for one, two, three, or four Years past, the printer who supplies me with His sheet?" And oh! that he would only add "I will go even now and pay him!" So should we Well pleased receive, and with light heart pursue Our useful toil; while conscience would applaud Their conduct, and give relief to the rest. We may prepare. Come then, good friend, and soon.

COMFORT FOR SPINNERS.

But this single state of submission of the female character; on the contrary, our present life would be a state of the most perfect submission, and much like every part of it absolutely essential to the wellbeing of every part of society, and even of the private home, without the unmarriageable female, there would be a mother—a husband and not less a sister, is both a necessity and a blessing! How many of us have to look up with gratitude to her care and kindness. How many nephews and nieces owe their young felicity and improvements to her! Every young woman married, the paternal home would often in declining life be a solitary abode, when affectionate attentions are most precious, and, but from such a source, not attainable. It is the single class of women which supports most of our teachers and governesses; and it from the lower ranks, nearly all the domestic assistants of our household come. What vast changes, not promotive of the general happiness, would ensue in every station of life, if every female married as soon as she was fully grown! Certainly human life would in that case have a different aspect, and must be regulated on a new principle, and would lead to consequences which cannot be calculated. The single woman is, therefore, an important element of social and private happiness as the married one. The utility of each is different, but both are necessary; and it is vulgar to suppose, as many are wont to do, that the unmarried condition is for any one to be preferred to the married condition. If from what is here said we turn our glance to what is interesting, the single lady is in this respect not surpassed by the wedded matron. For no small portion of her life, I think for the whole of it, with judicious conduct, she is indeed the most attractive personage. The wife resigns, or ought to resign, always her claims to general attention, and to concentrate and confine her regards and wishes and objects to her chosen companion, and domestic claims and scenes. She has quite the habit; she becomes part of his history and separated; she is not the unmarried lady remains still the candidate for every honorable notice, and injures no one by receiving it. Those of the noble sex, who are in the same condition, are at full liberty to pay her their proper attention as she is to receive them. Being in this position as to society at large, she is always interesting wherever she goes; and, if she preserve her good temper, her steady conduct, and her modest reputation undiminished, and cultivate her amiable, her intellectual, and her truly feminine qualities, she cannot go anywhere, in any station of life, without being an object of interest and pleasurable feeling to all those of her own circle with whom she may choose to be acquainted.—Sharon Turner's Sacred History of the World.

FULL RICHNESS OF THE FEMALE CHARACTER

NOT YET DEVELOPED.—There is as yet no perfect Venus de Medicis, in mind and moral qualities, any more than in actual form in all the totality of loveliness. The sculptor and the painter can represent a combination of feature, figure, expression and deportment, more perfect as to bodily appearance than can be so completely met in any single individual; and a possible union of the beauties of the heart, the intellect, the taste, and the virtues may be imagined in a still greater degree than those which we have personally witnessed. I believe that this improvement is not only attainable, but is in actual process of attainment. In this country, the female character has been steadily advancing in a manifest progression; always amiable and beneficial, it is more so now than it has ever been; and it appears to be advancing both in the useful and in the interesting. It cannot, however, improve beyond the ratio of a correspondent melioration in our own. The male and female heart and mind must equally improve, for either to do so. They are too much interested to have each other's good opinion and favour, for either to be or do what the other disapproves of. Hence, while the man is savage, the woman is uncivilized; when he is stationary, so is she; when he is prodigal, she sinks to debasement. But let him only elevate himself, and sanction her elevation, and she will be envious to be honoured by him, and to be a blessing to him. Her intellectual beauties will attract and guide him to new excellencies, and these will be patterns to her, and raise her imitating docilities and desire of his praise, to make her a fairer of kindness and comfort to him, and a brilliant ornament of our common nature. Such the female world ever tends to be, and it is usually our own fault if we find them otherwise. It is at least in our power to encourage, and most dearly connected with our welfare, to cause them to be so.—Sharon Turner.

DELICATE PREDICAMENT.

I was resolved to see Lucy once more, and I was, and am, a determined person whenever I take such resolutions. To see her at her house was impossible, but to see her for the last time as Lucy Stackpole, and for the first as Mrs. Henderson, was very probable. Accordingly, on the day fixed for the marriage, I placed myself in one of the boxes near the altar, which possessed a convenient pillar, and there, concealed from public curiosity, I awaited the "terminating" scene. A pair of two of finest finery were ranged off in couples, the ceremony being judiciously shortened for the humble are imagined to live as comfortably as such animals can, without the example of Isaac and Rebecca. They appeared, poor devils! happy for the moment; and I verily believe they looked forward to about one dozen children, all half-staring, as a proof of their conjugal felicity. Then came a preparation for a greater show; the mob were ejected and the doors were closed; some dozens of women bedizened in blonde, and some score of men in blue coats and white gloves, distributed themselves in various parts of the church. The propriety and joyful countenance of the Bishop of C. was exhibited under a mask of gravity. A slim and elegant man led in the beautiful figure of a woman; her face was concealed under a rich Brussels veil, and she could not and did not conceal the agitation of her mind, or the apparent horror of her situation; by her side was another elegant creature, whose beauty was not clouded by the fineness of lace. At first I did not imagine the couple to be the objects of my search; but in closely examining the company, I saw Sir Jacob in all his glory, I saw Mrs. Stackpole in all her tawdriness, and espied the joyous and merry countenance of Mary. This, then, thought I, is the consummation of experience over hope. The ceremony proceeded according to all rules of decorum and of the service. I endeavoured to catch Lucy's answer when the question was asked if she would "have this man to be her husband," but it was inaudible. I heard the bishop proclaim them man and wife, with out fainting or any hysterical buffoonery. I saw the "Lucy Stackpole" invested with all the dignity of the Hendersons, and I was an eyewitness to the consummate coolness with which a girl, who was outwardly the emblem of innocence, could give her hand to one, while certainly, until the last fortnight, her heart was another's. This was a masterpiece of performance; it imitated nature so closely that it appeared quite natural. No deep-toned "amen!" at least from my lips, followed even the blessing. I watched the frustration of all my chances with a dry and a clear eye. I was wounded up for any thing, and I only felt as if I could stand—still—by, to the very best, both the fickle, faithless girl and the more successful lover. They returned to eat and drink in their new state. To be the show of the moment, and then, as if ashamed that such an act had been committed and not properly appreciated, the postillions, who drove the new travelling carriage from the door, were decked with favours, that all the world might know, what an old maid once remained. "The trap was down and another foot caught." Away they went, at rapid speed, to a place belonging to the major's uncle; and as they passed the corner where I had posted myself, my eye caught that of the bride, and I looked, I hope, as if I wished her all the happiness she could experience in her novel situation. I never saw them afterwards.—Chambers's Unfortunate Man.

BEFORE AND AFTER DINNER.

Look at the same man before and after swallowing a good dinner. In the first case, (if hungry,) he is cross, peevish, irritable, snorts at every body and every thing, asks questions, and gives answers in the most capricious manner, and is ready to knock any one down that says him more than any one point. But as his stomach becomes filled with the good things of life, his eye beams mildly, the stern clouds from his brow, and the black clouds give gradual place to calm sunshine in his countenance. His face is the index of his mind; his wit sharpens, he is the idol of conversation and mirth, his soul expands in generosity to all mankind, his purse and his sympathies are open to them, and as he finishes his meal he is pleased with himself and the whole human race. Lord Bacon very beautifully calls this stomach the "father of the family."—Kilgour's Lectures.

IMPERIAL PARLIAMENT.

HOUSE OF COMMONS—March 2.

SUPPLY—RESOLUTION.

The order of the day having been read for the House to resolve itself into a committee of supply, Lord J. Russell rose and said that he believed no minister ever before stood in so extraordinary a situation as his Majesty's present government, two votes of the House having passed against them, and he wished to call attention of the House to the reasons that prevailed with respect to a dissolution of Parliament before passing the Mutiny Act; and to the determination of ministers to maintain a standing army in time of peace contrary to the constitution. He did not think that the House should go far with the concession of supplies before it had an explanation from ministers of the course they intended to pursue. The noble lord then stated that originally he had chiefly been afforded the House of deciding whether the majority of its members were bent upon that necessary refusal of corporations to which the terms of the amendment on the address referred, and to which the wishes of the people are directed, and before the close of the month, he (Lord J. R.) intended to bring the Irish Church—(Cheers.) He stated those things in order that the right hon. member, either in support or in opposition, might have the opportunity of making his views known, and that the House would and must make up his mind, by stating the course ministers mean to adopt under these new and extraordinary circumstances.

THE CHANCELLOR OF THE EXCHEQUER.

—I have not felt it my duty, in consequence of the vote of the other night, to tender my resignation (a burst of cheers from the minister and benches),—and I do intend to persevere (cheers) in that which I consider I owe to his Majesty and to the public, notwithstanding that, by submitting to the consideration of the House those measures on which the members of the present government have formed their opinions, and which are alluded to in the speech from the Throne—(Cheers.) I am certainly aware that the House of Commons did, by a small majority, pass a resolution in an exceedingly full house, not a small majority in the King's Government, but a majority of only seven imply a difference of opinion as to the necessity of a dissolution, and express apprehensions, which I think are ungrounded, that measures conducive to the general interest will be interrupted and retarded by the speech which his Majesty made to his people. But I do not believe that that majority, which came to a vote in favour of the amendment to the address, did mean to imply an opinion that it was tantamount to a vote for the removal of the government. (Cheers from the ministerial side.) With respect to the Irish Church, I intend to present to the House the report that may be made by the Commissioners of public instruction appointed by the late government. This noble lord has stated that it is his opinion that I would not act upon the report, or found a measure upon its suggestions; but I beg to assure him that he misapprehended my meaning. What I said was, that I still retained of opinion that ecclesiastical property ought not to be directed to any other than the purposes of the Church—that is the principle on which I was disposed to act; but I did not preclude myself, by that declaration, from the adoption of any measure recommended by the commissioners, not inconsistent with that principle. On the subject of the Corporation Commission, I mean when the report of the commissioners is presented to me to take the resolutions and to the evidence the fullest and fairest consideration. (Hear.) I do assure the noble lord, notwithstanding what he may fancy, that I have no lurking prejudices in favour of the rights of corporations. But I do think it would be consistent with my duty as a minister of the crown, if I proceeded hastily to pledge myself as to any measure. I do think that the most natural course, and that most consistent with the duty of a minister, is to promise nothing until I have had an opportunity of seeing the report, of weighing the evidence, and of ascertaining the nature of the proposed reforms. The noble lord asks me whether I have continued the resolutions that are proposed? I tell him at once that by so doing, and by no expression of mine, have I directly or indirectly sanctioned such measures. (Cheers.) I will tell the noble lord, also, with equal fairness, that I never have discussed the cases of a probable dissolution, even hypothetically. (Hear.) I should think it disrespectful to the House, if ministers were to discuss such a contingency; for, in my opinion, nothing could be more unbecoming than to hold out any menace to the House as to the possible consequences of any course of proceeding it might think fit to adopt. (Cheers.) That reminder by which the noble lord has been reminded, as to the intention of Government to keep my standing army in case the House of Commons should resolve to pass the mutiny bill, I trust is of very recent origin; for I can declare with perfect truth, that the first time I ever heard of the proposal of such a report was from the lips of the noble lord. (Much cheering.) I have thus endeavoured to give an answer to the various points put by the noble lord, and I think to the extent I have done, I may venture to anticipate that any answers have been satisfactory. (Cheers.)

NORTH AMERICAN BOUNDARY LINE.

Mr. G. R. Robinson, (as we understand,) asked whether since the last session of Parliament, any thing had been done between this country and the United States towards settling the long pending question of the North American boundary line. Sir R. Peel said it was a most intricate and complicated question. The dispute arose out of the sagacious of the treaty in 1783. By that treaty a certain boundary line was settled between Maine, one of the United States, and New Brunswick, belonging to Great Britain, which boundary was to extend to the King of the Netherlands, and thence by his decision. Accordingly three points had been submitted to his Majesty's consideration, on two of which he had decided, but on the third he had found it impossible to determine, in consequence of the difficulty presented to the non-disclosure of the high lands in question. Under these circumstances, his Majesty had suggested an amicable compromise. Great Britain had professed the willingness to abide by the proposed final adjustment, but the United States had hitherto declined according to it. That Power had, however, suggested that a new survey should be made, to which Great Britain assented, offering to abide by that survey, providing that certain preliminary conditions were agreed upon, without which the survey would be useless and unsatisfactory. One of those points was, whether, according to the treaty of 1783, the Bay of Fundy formed part of the Atlantic Ocean. This negotiation was still pending, for sufficient time had not elapsed for the arrival from the United States of their answer to our last communication. It was the earnest desire, he believed, on the part of both countries to arrange the matter amicably (Hear, hear) and the House should be assuredly rejoiced by the result as soon as it was ascertained by Government. (Hear, hear.)

THE BARRON'S TRADING ARRAYS.

Mr. F. O'Connor moved for a copy of the evidence taken before the Coroner, upon an inquest held at Rathmore, upon the bodies of nine persons, who lost their lives at Garroon, on the 18th of December last. He said that the Hon. Member for Meath had fallen into error in stating that that melancholy affair nine persons had been killed and nine wounded. The fact was, that inquests had been held on the bodies of nine persons, but two more were killed on whom no inquests had been held, their bodies having been taken away by their relations. Thirty-five persons received wounds, of whom seven were severely wounded. The number of shots fired was seventy, of which forty-five or forty-six took effect. The object of his calling for the production of the evidence taken before the Coroner's Inquest was to enable him to obtain a court martial on the commanding officer.

Sir H. Hardings suggested to the Honorable Member whether it would not be prudent to postpone the present discussion until after the trial of those individuals upon whom charges connected with the affair alluded to had been made.

PUBLIC NOTICE.

THE high repute and extensive sale of ROWLAND'S MACASSAR OIL, throughout the world, has induced adventurers (in order to gain a trifling more profit, to introduce "spurious imitations" into America—injurious to the Hair, instead of the Genuine.—To prevent such Impositions, it is necessary to Notice, that each bottle of the Original is enclosed in a Wrapper, which has the Name and Address in Red, on Lace-work.

A. ROWLAND & SON, 20, HATTON GARDEN. And counter-sign, ALEX. ROWLAND.

—All others are Counterfeits.—Particular attention to this Caution is necessary, as the Proprietors cannot be responsible for the serious injury resulting from the use of base imitations.

This faithful assistant of nature has, from intrinsic qualities, acquired the high and distinguished patronage throughout Europe; and, with rank, fashion, and discretion, supercedes all preparations of professed similar import. Rowland's sooty genuine Macassar Oil excites a luxuriant growth to the head of the silky hair, and insures the continuance of it in plenty and beauty to the remotest periods of human life. This celebrated Oil ranks, in excellence, with the most distinguished Ladies as a conservator of personal attraction, preventing the hair from falling out and turning grey, and sustaining it in
