ENGLISH SYNDICATE SAW NO PROFIT IN ELECTRIFYING LINE TO PORT STANLEY

Mr. Harold Richardson Writes to Tell Citizens of Foremost British Firm's Opinion of the Proposal.

PRESENT RECEIPTS AND PROSPECTS WOULD NOT WARRANT EXPENDITURE

That the representative of one of the foremost electrical engineering firms in England declared that the electrification of the London and Port Stanley Railway, after inspection of the line and examination of the finances and prospects, was not feasible, is the information contained in a letter from Mr. Harold Richardson, of London, England, son of Archdeacon Richardson, of Broughdale, to a well-known citizen.

MR. RICHARDSON'S LETTER.

The letter, dated Nov. 20, in its entirety is as follows:

"I notice in the paper that there is some agitation regarding the operating by the city authorities of the London and Port Stanley Railway, and I thought it only fair to the people of London to give a few facts concerning the same from my personal knowledge.

NOT A PAYING VENTURE.

"In the spring of this year I communicated by cable and letter with the authorities in your city, through my representative there, regarding the purchasing or leasing of the London and Port Stanley Railway from them. The result of it was that my colleague, Mr. Tottie, went over to London during the past summer, and one of the largest electrical engineers in England, Messrs. Dick, Kerr & Co., had their American expert meet Mr. Tottie on the spot. After Mr. Tottie had looked over the property, and into the cash receipts and future prospects he advised Messrs. Dick, Kerr & Co., as electrical engineers, and indirectly myself and colleagues of the financial end, to give up the idea we had in mind, for the reason that he could not see how it could be made a paying venture on account of the large outlay which would have to be made, and also taking into consideration the operating cost per car per mile in comparison with the receipts per car per mile, irrespective of the lowest price at which power could be purchased. We, therefore, decided to drop the matter.

AN UNINTERESTED PARTY.

"You will understand that I am personally taking no sides whatsoever in the agitation, but simply giving you the expert's opinion, whether it be right or wrong.

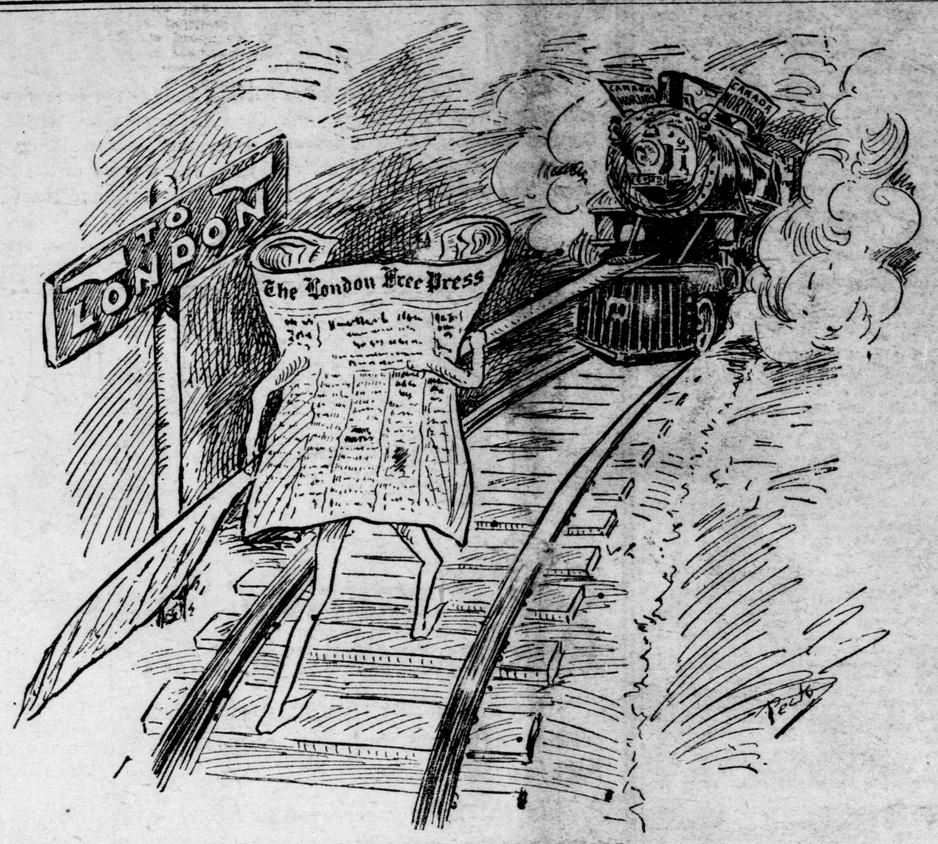

Yours very truly,
HAROLD A. RICHARDSON.

It will be remembered that Mr. Richardson interested a large and powerful English syndicate in the London and Port Stanley Railway, with the object of taking it over as an electric road, if it could be made a feasible proposition.

NOT A PAYING PROPOSITION.

The syndicate as stated in the above letter, made a thorough examination of the road, and decided that it could not be made to pay as an electrified proposition.

Mr. Richardson is prominent in English politics at the present time, and will be a Unionist candidate at the next elections.

THE CHARGE OF THE VERY LIGHT BRIGADE.

LONDON STREET LIGHTING BILL SHOULD BE $19,000

Report of Professor Angus, Received at City Hall, Vindicates Ald. Richter—City Council Now Pays $30,000 Yearly for Lighting.

The report of Prof. Harry Angus, electrical expert, Toronto, on the cost of lighting the streets of London, has arrived, and is now in the hands of City Clerk Baker.

Mr. Angus was able to finish it sooner than anticipated, and it was forwarded this morning. The sum of $19,000 is adequate for the service rendered the city, says the report. This is about $1,000 larger than the cost as estimated by Ald. Richter, and just $11,000 less than the amount charged by the water commissioners at the present time.

The report will be sent to the council, and will be presented to the hydro-electric commission, when that body considers the city's protest against the exorbitant rate.

Mr. Angus, in his statement, includes profits, which he figures at $2,000. This is a trifle more than 10 per cent, which is not a bad profit for hydro-electric, all things considered.

A Thorough Report.

The report is voluminous, going into the whole matter in a most thorough manner. It gives reasons for every charge, and places the expenditure as it should be placed. Mr. Angus takes the ground that the street lighting account should not be made to pay the way for the other branches of the enterprise, but that all should stand on their own foundation.

The full report was not given out for publication today, being held over until the meeting of the council on Monday evening. However, the figures as given above were announced, but the method of arriving at this sum was not explained.

It is understood that Mr. Angus secured every possible bit of information on the subject, and when he had considered it, he could arrive at no other conclusion than that $19,000 was a reasonable figure for street lighting in London.

Ald. Richter Vindicated.

The report is highly satisfactory to Ald. Richter, as it is a vindication of his position.

"I came to the conclusion, after a careful investigation, that the city was not getting a square deal," said Ald. Richter. "I wanted to know, but I could not get any information from the water commissioners or their staff, and so I had to investigate on my own account. After securing all the assistance I could, I came to the conclusion that $18,000 was a good price, sufficient to give the commissioners a fair margin of profit. Mr. Angus, thoroughly independent, says $19,000, or practically so. He also allows for over $2,000 profit. There is a difference of $1,000 between us. That is neither here nor there. The difference between Mr. Angus and Mr. Gabey is $12,000, and we should have the difference."

MINISTER LASHED BY SUFFRAGETTE

Militant One Thought That the Clergyman Was Lloyd George in Disguise.

WILD SCENE IN COURT

Suffragette Remanded for Inquiry Hurls Her Shot at Magistrate's Head.

[Canadian Press.]

Aberdeen Scotland, Nov. 30.—Militant suffragettes today brought about two scenes of extreme violence in which a woman's shoes and a horsewhip were used as weapons.

The first outbreak occurred when three of the women, Joyce Locke, Fanny Parker and Mary Pollock, who had been caught last evening in possession of explosives in the Music Hall, where Chancellor Lloyd George was to speak, were brought up before the magistrate.

After hearing the evidence the magistrate remanded them for further inquiry. As he informed them of his Joyce Locke removed her shoes and hurled one of them at the magistrate's head, and then threw the other at the head of the clerk of the court. She was promptly committed for contempt of court.

The second outrage was committed by one of the members of a party of suffragettes, who were waiting at the railroad station for the departure of Chancellor Lloyd George. The woman mistook the Rev. Forbes Jackson for the Chancellor of the Exchequer in disguise. She lashed the clergyman across the face with a heavy horsewhip and was at once arrested.

LIBERAL RANKS FILLED WITH JOY OVER BOLTON VOTE

Defeat Would Have Meant a Heavy Setback for Home Rule, Says O'Connor.

GUARDING AGAINST SNAP DIVISIONS

Asquith and Allies Taking No Chances at Being Caught Napping Again.

[Special Cable to The Advertiser by T. P. O'Connor, M.P.]

London, Nov. 30.—The election in Bolton submerges every other topic of interest this week in England. The Liberals apparently have fought with every disadvantage. George Harwood, the old member, was a commanding personality, eloquent, learned and popular even with his opponents. Especially he differed from the Liberal party in being opposed to ultra temperance legislation and to the disestablishment of the Welsh church. The previous big defeat in South Manchester on the insurance act, produced an impression that in every great Lanchashire town and among the workers in the cotton mills the Liberals are bound to be beaten.

In spite of the inflexible determination of the Liberal ministry and party to go right through to the end with the home rule and the other measures, a defeat in Bolton would enormously weaken their hands, and as two years have as yet to elapse before the home rule bill can be carried for a third time, a defeat, or even two rejections by the House of Lords in long intervals would, if the run of bad luck in the by-elections, went on uninterruptedly, make it almost impossible to overcome the Unionist obstruction in the House of Commons and the Ulster threats of civil war.

Anxious Time.

I can best indicate the state of the Liberals when I say that I was afraid to ask a newspaper office to give me the result of the Bolton poll on Saturday night lest my sleep should be destroyed by the news of a Liberal defeat. When we heard that a Liberal had been returned by a huge majority the news seemed almost too good to be true, and there came over all of the Liberals and Irishmen one of those wild outbursts of joy which mark the reaction from terrifying apprehensions. As things look now the Bolton election has settled the question of a possible home rule defeat in the House of Commons which was feared a couple of weeks ago.

Threats and Ravings.

The Unionist threats and ravings are all forgotten as if they all occurred a century ago, and the ministry and House of Commons go forward with the home rule bill as steadily and calmly as men marching to certain and near victory.

The Unionists display their sense of the crushing effect in Bolton. They speak like men who have lost heart, and their attendance in the Commons is very poor, and often some of the most important clauses of the home rule bill are discussed in a listless House, with not more than a score of members present.

The triumph of the Liberal candidate at Bolton was followed by the defeat of George Lansbury, the socialist candidate who resigned his London seat, but this produces no effect whatever on the political situation.

BACK TO WORK.

Portage la Prairie, Man., Nov. 30.—The majority of the striking members of the Canadian Brotherhood of Railway Employees at this place returned to work with the Canadian Pacific Railway and the other strikers are expected to go back today.

PETITIONS CIRCULATED FOR ALD. RICHTER FOR MAYOR

Popular Civic Representative Is To Be Asked to Contest for the Chief Magistrateship—If Not for Mayor, He Will Run for the Water Commission.

Petition are being circulated in the city asking Ald. Richter to be a candidate for the mayoralty.

Ald. Richter.

The announcement that ex-Ald. Dr. W. J. Stevenson would not run in 1913, caused a number of prominent citizens to demand a candidate of standing to run, and Ald. Richter is counted the logical man for the position.

The petitions are being largely signed, and when a sufficient number of signatures are received a deputation will wait on Ald. Richter to endeavor to persuade him to be a candidate.

At the present time he is considering the advisability of running for the water commission.

"I would prefer some big man, Sir George Gibbons, Col. J. W. Little, or a person of that calibre to run for the mayoralty," said Ald. Richter to The Advertiser. "I have heard nothing of the petitions whatever, but if I followed my own inclinations I would retire altogether from public life. I have not the time for the mayoralty.

"As for the water commission, I may be a candidate. I am persuaded that some person should be on the board to see that the citizens got a square deal. I do not think they are getting it. I will think the matter over in the meantime."

SARNIA BOY ROBBED PHONE PAY STATION AT GRIGG HOUSE

When Arrested on Another Charge, Part of Plunder Taken in London Was Found Upon Fred Buchanan, a Youthful Thief.

The Sarnia police have taken into custody a youth, Fred Buchanan, of that place, charged with the burglary of Palmer's store there, and have incidentally discovered the thief of the pay station slot, which was unscrewed from the wall in a telephone cabinet at the Grigg House here some time ago. The local police have been notified of Buchanan's arrest.

The lad is to appear in police court in Sarnia Monday morning, to be tried in the Palmer matter. According to the Sarnia authorities, Buchanan, after robbing the store there a month ago, came to London and added to his desperado achievements by making away with the pay slot and its contents.

Portions of the broken cash box were discovered in his possession when his arrest was effected.

SAYS BISHOP FALLON STARTED A CRUSADE

Mr. J. Burnham, M. P., Sees a Conspiracy to Rob French-Canadian of Language.

[Canadian Press.]

Ottawa, Nov. 30.—Mr. J. H. Burnham, M. P. for West Peterboro, gave out a warm interview today, following up his recent remarks in the Commons to the effect that a conspiracy exists for depriving the French race in Canada of their language.

"Does any ecclesiastic of the Church of Rome," Mr. Burnham asks, "deny that the church through Cardinal Bourne, has commanded and directed the French-Canadians to give up their mother tongue and to adopt English in order that the church may make full use of the French race in its proposed conquest of Canada to the true faith? Does anybody deny that a Government began the crusade by an investigation at the dictation of Bishop Fallon? The French are willing to conform to the law, but are resisting the church. With which side do the Protestants of Canada propose to ally themselves?"

MR. GRAY IS READY TO RUN FOR MAYOR

Will Oppose Mr. Graham if Latter Stands for Electrification.

Mr. William Gray stated this morning that he intended to run for mayor if Mayor Graham sought re-election and came out in favor of electrification.

"I have been asked to stand ready to enter the field if it appears necessary," said Mr. Gray. "I shall certainly give Mr. Graham a fight if he comes out in favor of this 'bughouse' scheme."

BALKAN TENSION SHOWS RELAXATION

Signs Point to Speedy Signature to Conditions of an Armistice.

MAY BE A COMPROMISE

[Canadian Press.]

London, Nov. 30. — A slight relaxation of tension in the international political situation has come today with the optimistic announcement from official sources in Constantinople that the negotiations between the Bulgarian and Turkish plenipotentiaries at the village of Baghiche, on the Tchataldja lines, are likely to result in a speedy signature being written to the terms of an armistice.

The Real Menace.

The real menace to European peace, however, in the shape of the Austro-Servian difficulty, still persists. The assertions of the rulers of Austria-Hungary and Russia, the two great empires most immediately concerned, that they desire to maintain peace, have not put an end to their active preparations for war.

May Be Compromise.

Diplomats feel that once hostilities have been definitely adjourned, and the allied Balkan nations are in a position to calculate their gains, there will be a much better chance of bridging the gulf at present existing between Austria-Hungary and Servia. It is generally thought that Bulgaria would then be in a better situation to bring her influence to bear in favor of a compromise.

The announcement that Montenegro has appointed delegates to participate in the eventual peace negotiations to be held at Sofia, the Bulgarian capital, is taken to indicate that the Balkan allies posses information pointing to an early settlement.

MR. YEATES REPLIES TO CHARGES THAT PUMPS FELL DOWN

Installer of Apparatus Says Mr. Glaubitz Is "Talking Through His Hat."

600 HORSEPOWER WASTED IS ANSWER

Minor Repairs Perhaps Necessary, But Experts Passed on Proper Installation of the Machinery.

That the pumps installed to generate power at Springbank dam are not altogether inefficient, and that with a few minor repairs they could develop 600-horsepower, and reduce power rates materially, is the answer made by Mr. William Yeates to the charge of General Manager Glaubitz that the pumps at Springbank station are improperly installed. The pumps have not been in operation for months, excepting intermittently, and many citizens hold the belief that the cost of power could be materially reduced through their operation.

Could Be Fixed for $2,000.

It was stated that it would cost the city $2,000 to repair the pumps by one gentleman interested in hydro-electric affairs.

The letter received from Mr. Yeates is as follows:

To the Editor of The Advertiser:

I noticed in your paper of last evening an article re the Blake-Yeates pumps, and the remarks of Mr. Glaubitz that the pumps were not properly installed, and I think Mr. Glaubitz is talking through his hat.

I do not know whether Mr. Glaubitz has reference to the high duty steam pumps or the hydraulic pumps. If the pumps or the hydraulic pumps, I beg to say that they were built by me in the city nineteen years ago, with city workmen, and installed by me. The patterns were the Blake Pump Company's, of New York, loaned me for this job, on condition that their name should appear jointly with mine, hence the name, Blake-Yeates.

Complimented by Experts.

When the contract was let it was stipulated that a duty of 110,000,000 foot pounds should be raised with 100 pounds of coal, and if Mr. Glaubitz will take the trouble to read the report of the elaborate three days' test by Mr. Laschinger, of the School of Practical Science, Toronto, he will find they came up to the specifications in every respect, and fulfilled every duty required of them, and General Stover,

CLOTHES FOUND BESIDE EAST END POOL

It Now Appears Certain That Wm. C. Swannell, of 1054 Mabel St., Took His Life—Police Search for the Body.

High Constable J. A. Hughes and his men are searching for the remains of William C. Swannell, a young Englishmen who boarded with T. E. Ames, of 1054 Mabel street, in a pool near the main line of the Grand Trunk east of the city limits, beside which the coat, hat and other articles belonging to the missing man were found last night.

A diligent search was prosecuted this morning, grappling irons being thrown into the water from the banks of the pond. However, nothing was discovered, and this afternoon the high constable ordered a rowboat, which was taken to the place. The place will now be dragged more thoroughly, and it is expected that the body will be found.

Ended His Life.

It is firmly believed that Swannell ended his life in the water. He was a quiet mannered young fellow, and was the son of very respectable parents in England, his father being a local preacher there. His fits of mental depression are attributed in some quarters to neuralgia on the brain, which developed after he had several teeth attended by a dentist a few months ago. The pain at times was excruciating, and it is thought that this may have been responsible for his temporary derangement.

Was Going Home.

Swannell had written to his parents in England, telling them that he would sail for home on Dec. 13, and that he would be with them for the Christmas holidays. Mrs. Ames stated today that they will not be notified until the body has actually been found, as some slight hope is entertained that he may have left his clothing on the bank and gone wandering through the district in his derangement. This is not considered probable, however, as he left his hat, overcoat and coat.

The pond is immediately east of the sand pits. It is about a hundred feet in diameter, and attains a depth of ten feet in places. It is fed by a small creek, and has another as an outlet.

Swannell had been in this country for two years, the greater portion of which time was spent in London. He had previously located at Newmarket and at Woodstock.

Left His Employment.

Swannell, as stated in yesterday's Advertiser, left his employment at Lawson & Jones', where he worked as a litho pressman, Thursday morning, and complaining of feeling ill, proceeded to the office of Dr. Edwin Seaborne.

Thereafter nothing was heard of him, and Mrs. Ames, who had known him since a boy in England, caused inquiries to be made at the city hospitals and at the police station. Her fears that something might have occurred to him during a fit of despondency were justified when late in the evening his clothing, and the bottle of medicine with which he was furnished by the physician were found at the edge of the pool.

It was in this same place that two little colored boys were drowned while a couple of men looked on two years ago.

Liberal Club Tonight.

Mr. E. M. MacDonald, K.C., M. P., Pictou, N. S., who made so favorable an impression at St. Andrew's banquet last evening, will be the speaker at the Liberal Club tonight. He will discuss the political questions of the day. He is recognized as one of the most gifted public speakers in the Dominion, and his address tonight will prove a treat. All Liberals are expected, and others are invited, to be present on this occasion.

BULGAR INDEMNITY FIGURES ALONE PREVENT A PEACE

Solid Basis of Agreement Said To Have Been Reached and a and Fifteen-Day Armistice To Be Signed at Once—The Highest Turk Circles Expect Peace.

[Canadian Press.]

New York, Nov. 30.—A special cable from London says:

George Renwick, correspondent of the Daily Chronicle at Constantinople, telegraphs:

"I learn on excellent authority that the Balko-Turkish peace conferences, late this afternoon, reached a solid basis of agreement, which augurs well for the early conclusion of the negotiations. The delegates are now one on the following points:

THE CONDITIONS.

1. Adrianople to remain Turkish territory under certain stipulations, including the reduction of the fortifications.

2. Turkey to enter the Balkan confederation for customs purposes. The exact conditions of this partnership are not, however, definitely fixed.

3. Autonomy be granted to Albania, under the control of the allies.

4. Macedonian mussulmans, in any territories annexed by the coalition, to have certain privileges.

WAR INDEMNITY.

The only serious difficulty in the way of instantly signing the peace treaty is Bulgaria's demand for a war indemnity of 500,000,000 francs ($100,000,000), which Turkey so far refuses to pay or even to consider.

From a good source I am informed that a fifteen days' armistice will be signed, probably tomorrow. There is no doubt that very definite progress has been made with the negotiations, and high hopes are raised this evening at the Porte. The highest circles now regard peace as certain. Kiamil Pasha has expressed himself as optimistic regarding the prospects of "an early peace with honor."

Good Furniture As An Indication of Good Taste

Good furniture, like good clothes, is a certain indication, not only of good taste, but of careful choice.

In the home where you find Berkey & Gay furniture you will never have cause to doubt the presence of good taste. It is always made of the best wood, by the best workmen, and in the best style. A Berkey & Gay "Flanders" piece, for instance, represents oak in its highest artistic development. "Flanders" oak furniture has all the dignified beauty and style of the real Flemish at its best. Age seems but to add to its value and its charm.

Other Berkey & Gay furniture is marked by the same characteristics. When you buy a Berkey & Gay mahogany piece you get real mahogany through and through, and in faithful design and execution it will satisfy the most exacting. We have the exclusive right to handle Berkey & Gay furniture in this city. Come and look at some of the excellent sets and pieces we have to exhibit. You will find it as interesting as going through a gallery stocked with good pictures.

If some special design from catalogue not on the floor is wanted for Christmas the order should be sent to the factory as early as possible. See special dieplay of Christmas furniture. Third Floor.

LONDON, SATURDAY, NOV. 30.

THE LIBERALS AND THE NAVY.

Without prejudging the Government's naval policy, enough has been said in Parliament by Liberal leaders to make it certain that the Opposition forces in both chambers will not favor a dole of money as a means of discharging Canada's obligations. One thing could induce them to support an emergency gift: the proof, not yet contained in any public utterance of British statesmen, that an emergency exists, and that an immediate cash grant would help to cure it. If this proof is forthcoming there will be no quibbling over the size of the grant. If it is not forthcoming, and if the Government rests its case on the facts already known, there will be no excuse for throwing into the North Sea millions that should be spent on laying the foundations of a Canadian naval service. Great British shipbuilding firms were ready to establish shipyards in Canada, and these enterprises would have been approaching completion if the Laurier Government had not been defeated, or if the Borden Government had not struck its Canadian navy flag to the Nationalists in the election campaign. As Dr. Pugsley says, the present Government is open to the suspicion of having invented an emergency in order to circumvent its own pledge to refer its naval policy to the people. It knows it will have to come back to Laurier's position, which it abandoned in order to coquet with Laurier's enemies in Quebec, but it feels that it can do this with a better face four years hence than immediately after a triumph won mainly by denouncing Laurier's program.

A FAMILY QUARREL.

The (British) preference will not long be maintained (by Canada) unless there is reciprocal action by Britain. Nor should it be. This is a matter purely of business, not sentiment.—Hamilton Herald.

One of the lights of machine imperialism in Canada here shines forth. But at the same time the Herald takes the Toronto News to task for commenting as follows on Lord Lansdowne's proposal that Canada should increase the preference in return for a grain tax in Great Britain:

"It can hardly be the intention of Canadian ministers to bargain over a table at Westminster for advantage in the British markets. It is not intended that control by the Canadian Government over fiscal duties shall be limited by any contract with the imperial authorities."

The News, organ of an ultra-protectionist ring, wrote in haste, in mingled anger and panic, on reading Lord Lansdowne's words. The Herald took time to think the thing over, and puts forward the consideration that now we are helping to pay for the imperial navy, we should withdraw the preference, unless every British bread-eater will tax himself so much a loaf in our interest. But let us not, says the Herald, rebuking the cowardly and too obvious inconsistency of the "patriot" News, talk all at once of keeping away from Westminster, of having no truck or reciprocity with the London sharps. "Why shouldn't Canadian and British representatives bargain over a table at Westminster?" asks the Herald. What harm would it do us? What! Run away from the heart of old John Bull, after all our talk? Rather stay by it, stick a knife into it as it were, by cancelling the preference which Laurier in his simplicity gave. John is simple, too, unlike those dangerous Yankees. If we give him a present for his navy, he wont mind his children being robbed of a slice or two in every loaf of bread.

When certain Canadian interests think themselves menaced by any rivalry of British industry, however much competition may be "the life of trade," their newspaper organs drop the imperialist twang assumed to gull the common people, and show their teeth at even their supposed friends over the water. Their patriotism oozes out at once through their fingertips. What will the quarrelling be when it comes to actual bargaining over the table at Westminster?

NOT GOOD POLICY.

The Mayor and the London Free Press accuse the C. N. R. people of deception in saying that their main line will pass through St. Thomas unless they can operate the L. and P. S. R. Courtesy is the oil of diplomacy, and a little of it will not compromise the city. It is not wise to open negotiations by impugning the good faith of the other party.

We are told by the Free Press that the Mayor pointed out to them (the C. N. R. representatives) that a reason for desiring to obtain the L. and P. S. R. had not been disclosed." In the same column of the same paper an alderman supplies the possible reason:

"The alderman believes that in the L. and P. S. line, the C. N. R. sees a ready access to London and St. Thomas, whereas in the purchase of a right-of-way into the city, they would spend several hundred thousand dollars."

Certainly the L. and P. S. R. would largely solve for the Canadian Northern the problem of a right-of-way into the city. It is a sound reason for wanting the road; certainly it has a more reasonable look than the contention that the C. N. R. wants the L. and P. S. R. because it has some deadly designs on the hydro-electric undertaking. How would the operation of steam roads from Toronto to Windsor and from London to Port Stanley affect hydro-electric? By preventing the sale of hydro-electric power for the operation of the L. and P. S. R.? But Mr. Beck himself, speaking at the London Asylum some months ago, declared that it was better not to try to make business for the hydro-electric in this manner. If his scheme for electrifying the L. and P. S. R. were primarily intended to create a new customer for Niagara power, the transportation interests of London would be made a pawn in the hydro-electric game.

It is easy to see that the control of the L. and P. S. R. would be highly useful to the C. N. R. in giving them an entrance to London, and connection with St. Thomas and the lake. The question is, What is the C. N. R. willing to give in return? Can the city make a better deal? Before either question has been answered, and before even the Board of Trade committee has met to hear the results of inquiries into the electrification scheme, why prejudge the whole case? The assertion that the advocates of electrification are "the friends of the people" and that those who have doubts and ask time in which to try to clear them up, are fighting for "the interests" is foolish, and unfair to the citizens—among them some of the largest shippers and jobbers of the city—who merely ask to be shown, like the man from Missouri.

The Borden Government says it has found a naval emergency, but consider how the Borden Government has been hunting for it.

All the suffragettes who simultaneously dropped acid in mail boxes must have conspired together. Here are some women who can keep a secret.

"Observer's" letter will be published with pleasure if he will send his name—not for publication—but to comply with a rule which may not be known to him.

A Toronto expert reports that the city should be charged only $19,000 for street lighting, for which it is paying $30,000. So the hydro-electric surplus comes out of the taxpayer's pocket?

Lloyd George's proposal that the Highlands should again raise men in place of deer will earn him the fresh hatred of the class that has turned much of the Highlands into a pleasure ground for the rich and would like to turn all Highlanders into caddies or gillies.

The Toronto World explains that its story of the C. N. R. doing big things for London was the report of an interview with Colonel Davidson. Naturally a description of C. N. R. plans should come from C. N. R. headquarters. Does the World impugn the colonel's veracity?

POLITICS VS. BUSINESS.

[Ottawa Free Press.]

Tory Toronto is going to try to sell its bonds in New York. In politics trucking with the Yankees is one thing; in business it is another.

IT'S COMING ALL RIGHT.

[Ottawa Citizen.]

When will society be sane enough to demand the product of its own labor? When will men realize that just as they have as individuals an inherent right to that which they by their labor produce, so the community has a right equally as great to what it alone creates.

POPULAR.

"We women are working for the right to propose."

"And when you get it, what then?"

"Then we'll work to take away man's right to refuse."

CHICKENS LACK ORIGINALITY.

[Brooklyn Eagle.]

Abby, the littlest girl of the family, was seated at the breakfast table one morning. As usual, eggs were served. Either she was not hungry, or she had grown tired of the inevitable bill of fare, for very earnestly and soberly she remarked: "I do wish hens would lay something besides eggs."

SUPERSTITION.

[Milwaukee Sentineul.]

She had a dozen suitors,
And she turned them all down cold;
She offered not a one the least excuse;
When the thirteenth came she married.
She was forty. She had tarried,
And she knew it was unlucky to refuse.

AN EVEN BALANCE.

[Brantford Expositor.]

Dec. 9 will be the 44th anniversary of W. E. Gladstone's first accession to control in the British Isles as premier. During these 44 years the Conservatives have been in office 23 years and 100 days, and the Liberals 20 years and 262 days. It will thus be seen that between the two parties "honors are easy."

CYNICAL.

[Cincinnati Inquirer.]

When two women get real chummy and lay their souls bare before one another, it is a sign that they are to be deadly enemies in a few weeks.

THE SCRAMBLE FOR ANCESTORS

[Chicago Record-Herald.]

We should be more uneasy about the growth of ancestor worship in the east were it not, for the fact that the phenomenon seems to be world wide at present. G. K. Chesterton complained only recently of the mad scramble for ancestors which is going on all over England. Nobody's ancestors are safe nowadays and there are never enough ancestors to go around. China is cutting off its queues and forgetting its ancestors. We might be able to exchange a few modern ideas for the most ancient ancestral lines of China, with mutual benefit. Give and take is the law of the world.

VOX POPULI.

[London Opinion.]

Mr. Pompus (to butler)—I'm expecting a deputation at 12 o'clock to ask me to stand for the borough!

Butler—Yes, sir.

Mr. Pompus—Perhaps it would be as well to remove all the best umbrellas from the hat stand!

JAPAN'S GREAT WARSHIPS.

[New York Sun.]

The Japanese battle cruiser Hiyei, launched at Yokosuka on Thursday is the second ship of 27,500 tons to take the water. The Congo was launched on May 18, and two others of the type, which is to carry 14-inch guns and have a minimum speed of 27 knots, the Haruna and the Kirishima, will be launched about midsummer next year. The Japanese are making rapid progress with their big ship program. By this time the battleship Settsu, 20,800 tons, must be in commission, and a good deal of work has been done on the Fuso, of 30,000 tons, which may carry twelve 15-inch guns, and will be the most powerful fighting ship in the world when commissioned.

THESE BOYS!

[Life.]

Howard—Hasn't Bachelor waited rather long before choosing a wife?

Coward—Bless you, no! He's only had a marrying income since he was sixty.

NOT A GARAGE.

[Harper's Weekly.]

"And what is that little building over there?" asked the visitor to Tompy's place.

"That? Oh, my wife calls that the garage," said Tompy.

"Oh—what is your car?" asked the visitor.

"Oh, that's a mirage," said Tompy.

SPARE THE ROD, ETC.

[Stratford Beacon.]

Parents in the present day are apt to delegate the teaching of their children in morals to the minister and the Sunday school teacher, just as they delegate the mental training of them to the public school teacher and the high school teacher. But the parent has a duty to the child which no other can discharge, and he who attempts to undertake the moral training of the child by proxy will in the vast majority of cases find it result in failure.

NAMELESS MARTYRS.

[Felicia Heamans.]

The kings of old have shrine and tomb
In many a miser's haughty gloom;
And green along the ocean side
The mounds arise where heroes died;
But show me on the flowery breast,
Earth! where the nameless martyrs rest.

The thousands that, uncheered by praise
Have made one offering of their days;
For truth, for heaven, for freedom's sake,
Resigned the bitter cup to take;
And silently, in fearless faith,
Bowing their noble souls to death—

Where sleep they, Earth? by no proud stone
Their narrow couch of rest is known;
The still, sad glory of their name
Hallows no fountain unto Fame;
No, not a tree the record bears
Of their deep thoughts and lonely prayers.

Yet what if no light footsteps there
In pilgrim-love and awe repair,
And the cold winds and sounding waves
Are silent of those hidden graves?
They sleep in secret—but their sod,
Unknown to man, is marked of God.

EX-ALD. STEVENSON NOT A CANDIDATE

Doctor Announces He Will Not Seek the Mayoralty Next Year.

Ex-Ald W. J. Stevenson today made the statement to The Advertiser that he will not be a candidate for any civic office in the approaching election.

"I have been asked by very many citizens to run for the mayoralty," he told the reporter, "but press of business will not allow me to do so. I greatly appreciate the honor which many of my fellow-citizens would have me accept, but under the circumstances I cannot see my way clear to offer my services. Next year will be a most important one for the city of London, and the man who occupies the mayor's chair should be prepared to devote almost his whole time, if necessary, to the work of the city. This would be an impossibility for me, and I am reluctantly compelled to tell my friends that I will not be a candidate for the mayoralty next year."

METHODIST UNION SECURES CHARTER

Aim of Organization Is To Advance Church at Toronto.

[Canadian Press.]

Toronto, Nov. 30. — The Methodist Union is the newest of church organizations to obtain a provincial charter. The promoters of this union are Chester D. Massey, Charles D. Daniel, Wm. L. Armstrong, John J. Redditt, James A. Rankin, Methodist ministers; Alexander Mills, Edmund Harley and B. E. Bull, barristers, and George H. Parks, Robert C. Hamilton and John Donogh, all of Toronto.

The aims of the union, which is without share capital, are:

To carry on mission and church extension work in Toronto and suburbs in accordance with the regulations of the general conference, which may be altered from time to time, and to control such work and extension, as well as foster connexional spirit and promote the spiritual and temporal welfare of the churches.

To give assistance to weak churches and advise in the selection of church sites in order to prevent overlapping of circuits.

To organize Sunday schools and arrange for the holding of gospel meetings in the suburbs where churches have not yet been established.

To acquire lands and other property and to establish a relief fund for the purpose of assisting churches within the limits of Toronto.

MRS. McCLUNG'S NEW BOOK

[By Special Arrangement With the Winnipeg Telegram.]

Mrs. McClung's new book, "The Black Creek Stopping-House," will greatly add to her growing reputation. In motivation and compactness of plot it strikes me as being decidedly superior to her former longer but less convincing stories, and here once more we find that rollicking humor and knowledge of human nature which are Mrs. McClung's leading characteristics. The style also in this volume is less rhetorical, therefore better, than in the former stories, which contained too much of the prose-poem business. In this book there are no rosy-purple Marie Corelli passages, although we have plenty of local color, Mrs. McClung expresses herself in a style that is admirably adapted to the kind of life which she has attempted to describe. It is simple, yet full of nervous force, in fact a style of which any woman writer in Canada might well be envious.

"The Black Creek Stopping-House" is a story of life on the prairie. It glorifies the pioneer women of the west by its simple recital of their hardships in other days. Maggie Murphy Corbett is the heroine. From the hour that you meet her in the Salvation Army service in the old Victoria Hall in Winnipeg to the moment when she fades away from the last page of the story, she is a fascinating Irish diamond of purest, jolliest ray serene. I pass over the reformed gambler, her husband, John Corbett, for John was as clay in Maggie's hands, to dwell upon a few of the characteristics of this Queen of the Black Creek Stopping-House, the Mecca for hungry teamsters in the Souris Valley. Mrs. Corbett was at her best when she was in the kitchen mashing potatoes with a gem-jar, or baking biscuits for a hungry gang of new arrivals; for when she was at her busiest her brain was quickest, and her natural eloquence most pronounced. It is joyous to smell these biscuits hot from the oven, and to listen to Maggie's remarks to "Da" Corbett, or to lady gossips who have dropped in for dinner on their way to Brandon. Mrs. McClung is certainly a great hand at cooking up meals; there are all kinds of appetizing odors floating through this story! But Maggie was not only a first-class cook, but a woman with a warm heart. The way she circumvented the handsome villain, Rance Belmont, and, by the help of "Da," saved Evelyn, her neighbor, forms the climax of the story. She was as good as she was kind, but when the sailor twins got into her bad graces, they found that her shrewdness and pointed remarks did not emanate from a dove-like nature. But it is useless for me to tell you what Maggie Corbett was like, for you have to know all the events of those two or three years in the Souris Valley to be able to appreciate her charm. If Mrs. McClung doesn't carry her on into other stories, she will be positively unkind to at least one reader. Here is a little pen-picture of the interior of the Stopping-House: "Mrs. Corbett, with a black dress and white apron on, sat with folded hands (It was Sunday), in the rocking-chair. 'Da' Corbett, with his 'other clothes' on, and his glasses far down on his nose, sat in another rocking-chair reading the life of General Booth. Peter Rockett, the chore-boy, in a clean pair of overalls, and with hair-oil on his hair, sat on the edge of the wood-box twanging a Jew's-harp, and the tune that he played bore a slight resemblance to 'Pull for the Shore.'"

In addition to "The Black Creek Stopping-House," which fills up the major portion of the book, there are seven short stories, all of them dealing with life in the west in a most interesting way. Mrs. McClung's vivid pictures of Western Canadian life have this great merit—they are absolutely reliable. She sees the bright side of prairie life, its hope and poetry and plenty, but she does not disguise from her readers the fact that it has the less cheerful side as well. This is what we want in Canadian literature, the color of Nature done in Nature's paint, the union of the real and the ideal.

PARKS' BOARD WILL PROVIDE THREE RINKS

One Will Be in Victoria Park, One in Queen's, and Another in South London.

It was announced at the city hall today that plans have been completed whereby the parks board will provide three free skating rinks this winter for the people of London. One will be in Victoria Park, one in Queen's Park, and one on the Parke flats in South London. The city will flood the rinks with water, and will have men attend properly to them.

ELEVEN INCHES OF SNOW

November Weather Figures Show a Light Fall Compared With Year Ago.

The rainfall during the month of November amounted to 4.16 inches, and the snowfall to 11 inches, 4½ inches falling one night.

The highest temperature occurred on the 11th inst., namely 58.5 degrees, and the lowest on the 28th, being 18 degrees above zero.

A year ago the rainfall amounted to 3.94 degrees in November, and the snowfall to 24 inches. The highest temperature—61.5 degrees above zero—occurred on the 11th, and the lowest—13 degrees—on the 13th.

BELL 'PHONE CO. WANT 3-YEAR RENEWAL

Proposition Laid Before No. 1 Committee By Mr. J. Richmond at a Meeting Held on Friday—$4,000 a Year and Free Phones For City Was Offered.

District Superintendent J. L. Richmond of the Bell Telephone Company submitted a proposition for a three-year renewal of the present exclusive franchise in this city at a meeting of the finance committee of the city council held Friday at the city hall.

The company offers the same terms as at present obtain—a cash bonus of $4,000 per annum and $600 worth of free telephone service to the city. Mr. Richmond was requested to reduce the proposition to writing and to submit it at the next meeting.

Mr. Richmond explained the difficulties concerning the $20 and $25 services, which have evoked some comment from citizens. The question was raised by Ald. Richter, who asserted that it is now almost impossible to get the cheaper style of 'phone. The $20 instrument is now obsolete, and is no longer made, said Mr. Richmond. It was formerly operated by a single line and a ground wire, but the Blake transmitter requires a double metallic circuit, and is therefore more costly to install and maintain. A two-party service with the modern equipment is furnished for $20.

Sale of Debentures.

City Treasurer Bell was instructed to call for tenders for the purchase of $221,000 worth of city debentures. The debentures, which bear 4½ per cent. per annum, have been held back for a considerable time because of the condition of the money market, but it is now necessary to dispose of them, the money being required for waterworks purposes, for the new incinerator, etc.

City Solicitor Meredith will be consulted as to the proper procedure for the holding over of $75,000 debentures voted by the people for city hall purposes last January. The law states that all debentures must be issued within two years, and to meet the situation an effort will be made to merge the present $75,000 with the additional amounts that will be required in the federal square scheme.

LADIES' GUILD BAZAAR RAISED SUM OF $175

Successful Affar Held in Church of St. John the Evangelist.

The Ladies' Guild, Church of St John the Evangelist, held a bazaar in the Sunday school room of the church on Friday afternoon and evening, and it was an unqualified success. The proceeds of the sales amounted to $175.

The ladies of the guild had spared no efforts to have this function surpass all previous efforts, and a visitor could not help but be favorably impressed and forced to admire the prettily-decorated booths, laden with specimens of the ladies' handicraft.

In the evening, the bazaar proved to be a magnet for several hundred visitors. The ladies had provided a pleasing and varied program for the occasion, consisting of solos by Mr. H. Ellis, Miss Florence Wooley and Mrs. Minhinnick, a piano duet by Misses Eccleston and McDougall, a flute selection by Mr. Young and a reading by Mrs. Bartram. Rev. Canon Craig acted as chairman.

The following are the names of ladies who presided over the various booths. Fancy work, Mrs. Manigault and Miss Imlach; baby's table, Mesdames Wright, Jeeves and Callard; candy booth, Miss Gertrude Imlach and Sunday school class; home-made cooking, Mrs. Williams and Mrs. Loughrey; notion booth, Mrs. Booth, Mrs. Elwood, Mrs Archer and Mrs. Clark; apron table, Mrs. Guest, Mrs. Taylor and Miss Carter; tea table, Mrs. Anderson and Miss Macklin; high tea, Mrs. Edwards, Mrs. Friendship, Mrs. Boug and a band of 12 young ladies.

A LARGE AUDIENCE HEARD MISS HALLOCK

First Methodist Church Choir Also Appeared to Good Advantage.

The last of the trio of recitals given under the auspices of the First Methodist Church choir proved as eminently successful as its predecessors, and the Grand Opera House was well filled Friday evening at the first appearance in London of Miss Mary Hallock, pianist. The big choir, under the leadership of Mr. A. D. Jordan, was in fine form, and received a most enthusiastic welcome.

Miss Hallock adopted the method which is becoming quite popular amongst artists on this continent, of interpreting each selection verbally before rendering it. This was perhaps a wise course, as many of her selections last evening were of an advanced classical type, and difficult for the indifferent musician to comprehend. "The Skylark," by Tschaikowski, representing the notes of the English songster, was rendered with beautiful expressiveness by Miss Hallock, but it was probably in her numbers from Chopin that she was at her best. In the number, "And the Moon Descends," by Debussy, an air of mysticism was obtained by throwing the entire house into darkness excepting for one pale light which hovered about the pianist. All Miss Hallock's selections were well received.

Of his choir, Mr. A. D. Jordan has reason to be proud at any time, and last night should prove no exception. The clearness of enunciation was particularly noticeable, and the voice parts balanced so exceedingly well that almost perfect blending and harmony resulted. "The Christmas Carol," one of Mr. Jordan's own compositions, pleased especially. In the encore which followed this number, a novelty in the music line was accorded the audience. Guided by a single note struck on the piano by their leader, the choir gave the well-known selection, Schumann's Traumerl, the notes being hummed and imitating perfectly a full orchestra. Such applause followed that they were forced to repeat the encore. Mr. Jordan is the first choir-leader to introduce this style of singing into Canada.

DIES OF EXPOSURE.

Montreal, Nov. 30.—After walking from Ahuntsic to Montreal, five miles, without boots, Arthur Bellefleur fell on the street and was arrested for being drunk. It was later found that he was suffering from privation and exposure, and died shortly after being admitted to the General Hospital.

REAL ESTATE MEN FAVOR A COMMISSION

Local Association Passed a Resolution to This Effect On Friday Night.

At the regular meeting of the Real Estate Owners' Association held Friday evening, resolutions were passed favoring a commission form of government for the city and against the board of control idea.

The discussion was somewhat lengthy. The opponents of the board of control plan pointed out that in Montreal and Toronto the system of government in vogue there was deemed a failure.

The R. E. O. A. urged the council to keep up the agitation until the Provincial Government enacts legislation to provide for a commission. Where it had been tried it had proved to be a success.

The association also went on record as opposed to the desire to extend the present municipal system by making the terms for the mayor and council of longer duration than one year.

A resolution, objecting to the loan of money to industries, was also passed. It was pointed out that all should be given the same treatment, and if the city voted $25,000 to the 200 factories in London, $5,750,000 would be required to meet the expenditure. This was considered an outrage, and the members desired to call a halt at once. Some of the members declared that the protection afforded by the tariff, the London and Port Stanley, together with railway bonuses, etc., should be sufficient protection to industries. In addition, they are specially favored in the tax rate.

FEES FOR DOCTORS WHO REGISTER DISEASES

Fifty Cents For Every Case of Communicable Complaint That Is Reported.

[Canadian Press.]

Toronto, Nov. 30.—During the next session of the Ontario Legislature a bill is to be introduced under which medical men will receive a fee of 50 cents for the registration of all communicable diseases. Under present conditions about 40 per cent only of the cases of tuberculosis are reported to Dr. John McCullough, chairman of the provincial board of health, and deputy registrar general.

Dr. McCullough says he knows nothing about the bill. "However," he said, "if doctors are to be paid a fee of 50 cents by the municipality in which the registration is made, it is not too much. It would help matters much and be very much in the interests of the municipalities."

The diseases registered in the past ten months throughout Ontario are: Smallpox, 451; scarletina, 2,229; diphtheria, 1,787; measles, 2,330; whooping cough, 1,267; typhoid, 2,316; tuberculosis, 1,186; infantile paralysis, 43; meningitis, 37; total, 10,646. While these figures are incomplete, they are sufficient to show that the fees for registration would not be more than from $6,000 to $10,000 from all the municipalities in Ontario.

METHODIST EPWORTH LEAGUE MEETING

Union Met in North End Church and Held a Profitable Session.

The Methodist Epworth League Union held a social gathering of the officers and pastors of all the Epworth Leagues of the city at Memorial Methodist Church. All the churches were well represented, there being about 75 person present.

On arriving, the officers were divided into groups, so that those in charge of the same departments in various leagues could better become acquainted, and exchange ideas and methods in connection with their own particular part of the league work.

Mr. J. A. McArthur, of Askin Street League, gave a very helpful address on "The Real Needs of Our League." The meeting was then thrown open, and a profitable discussion followed.

After a novel method of mixing the audience up, refreshments were served, which proved a delightful part of the evening's program.

Mr. J. A. Showler, the president of the union, was in the chair.

During the evening Mr. Jack Nash sang a sacred number.

It is the intention to repeat these gatherings throughout the winter.

It entertains the family with the world's best music, beautifully rendered. People on the other side of the street are learning to play. Their neighbors wish they had invested in a Martin-Orme Player instead.

17 CASES SET FOR COUNTY COURT

List Is Such a Lengthy One It Is Hardly Likely It Will Be Possible to Conclude Business Until Week After Next.

The list of cases for the sitting of the county court, which commence before Judge Macbeth on Tuesday was closed on Friday, and the number of actions entered was such that it is hardly probable that the sittings will be completed until the following week. Ten cases have been entered for trial in the non-jury, and seven in the jury list, as well as five criminal cases, which will be tried.

Four non-jury and three jury cases were entered at the last moment on Friday. The first of the non-jury cases was that in which W. G. Coles & Co., brokers and commission agents of this city, claim $369.92 from the G. T. R. for damages to a shipment of tapioca, while being shipped to the plaintiff from New York. Messrs. Fraser & Moore for the plaintiffs, and W. H. Biggar, of Toronto, for the defendants.

Suit Over an Auto Bill.

Messrs. Jarvis & Vining, acting for the London Motor Sales Company, have entered an action against Dr. H. A. Kingsmill to recover $321.25 for repairs done by the plaintiffs to the defendant's automobile. The defendant states that much of the repairs were made necessary by the negligence and carelessness of the plaintiffs while overhauling the machine. Messrs. Fraser & Moore are representing the defendant.

J. H. Pollock, an electrical worker of the city, has commenced an action to recover $169.85 from F. R. Fitzgerald, W. L. Fitzgerald, and A. E. Fitzgerald, for installing electrical appliances in the premises at 173 Dundas street, of which the defendants are the owners. Messrs. Gibbons, Harper & Gibbons for the plaintiff, and Messrs Meredith & Meredith for the defendants.

The Hobbs Manufacturing Company through Messrs. Gibbons, Harper & Gibbons, has entered suit to recover $409.03 and interest from N. C. Forbes, contractor and builder, of Toronto, for goods sold and delivered to the defendant. The defendant has entered a counter-claim for $1,000 for non-fulfillment of a contract made between the parties and which finally forced him out of business. Messrs. McBrady & O'Connor, of Toronto, for the defendant.

Walters vs. London Brass Co.

The suit of Walters against the London Brass Works Company, Limited, which was adjourned from the June sessions, has been re-entered. The plaintiff claims that the defendants owe him $550 arrears of wages, and also claims $1,000 damages for wrongful dismissal. The defendants state that the dismissal of the plaintiff was warranted by his misconduct while in their employ. The plaintiff is represented by Messrs. Gibbons, Harper & Gibbons, and the defendants by Messrs. Buchner & Gunn.

Wolfe & Co., dealers in art calendars of Philadelphia, have commenced an action to obtain $70 damages for the non-fulfillment of a contract between the plaintiffs and the Canadian Druggists Syndicate, in which the defendants promised to purchase 1,000 calendars. Gibbons, Harper & Gibbons for the plaintiffs, and T. H. Luscombe for the defendants.

Assault Case.

The last case to be entered was that in which William J. McLeod, contractor and builder of this city, claims $200 damages from Alex. Fitzsimons for assault and injuries. The alleged assault took place at 820 Princess avenue on Dec. 14, 1910, but the defendant in his statement claims that he was assaulted first, and the assault he is charged with committing was made in his own defence. Messrs. Blackburn & Weekes represent the plaintiff, and Messrs. Meredith & Meredith are acting for the defendant.

FOUND UNCONSCIOUS FROM COAL GAS FUMES

Mr. and Mrs. Robert Burnison, of Glencoe, Will Both Recover.

[Special to The Advertiser.]

Inwood, Nov. 29.—Last evening Robert Burnison, a farmer, living south of Glenrae, in the Township of Enniskillen, and his wife, retired as usual. During the night other members of the family heard strange noises in their room, and upon investigating found Mrs. Burnison unconscious, and her husband nearly so, from the effects of coal gas. Help was called for, and they were carried out of the house. After a time they revived, and are now considered out of danger. It was found that the coal gas came from a chimney which had become obstructed.

WAR WOULD BE ACT OF MADNESS

London, Nov. 29.—In a speech at a banquet here tonight, Mr. Winston Churchill, first lord of the admiralty, said that while a strong feeling naturally existed between Russia and Austria over the Balkan question, a resort to war by them would be a horror utterly disproportionate to any cause existing or any compensation that might be achieved.

"Christian civilization," continued Mr. Churchill, "looks across the tangles of diplomacy to the sovereigns of those august empires, and asks whether kingship might not in these modern democratic days win for itself new lustre and proclaim to the multitudes of enfranchised toilers, in whose hands power is being increasingly reposed, the fact that the monarchy is the bulwark of European peace."

A great gulf, Mr. Churchill said, separated the affairs of Russia and Austria from those of other European powers, and they had only to pursue the policy of [illegible] one another which they had been pursuing and nothing [illegible] drive them from the path of sanity and honor. A general [illegible] ght plunge Europe almost into the desolation of the Middle Ages.

"The only epitaph history could write upon such a catastrophe," Mr. Churchill declared, "would be this: that a whole generation of men went mad and tore themselves to pieces."

SUFFRAGETTES AGAIN SWOOP ON LETTERS DOING GREAT HARM

Acid Poured Into Mail Boxes for Second Time, Despite Special Guards.

SOMEBODY ANGRY SAYS MRS. PANKHURST

Value of Checks Destroyed in Thursday's Raid Estimated at Ten Million.

London, Nov. 29. — The city pillar postal boxes were well guarded throughout the day and night, but the outrages of last night were renewed tonight at the letter boxes of the city postoffice. There was considerable damage done at the general postoffice, and at Cannon street, Grace Church, Queen Victoria streets. At one of the frequent clearances at the new general postoffice a clerk found that a quantity of paraffin, which had been poured into an opening, had saturated many letters. No match was found, and it is surmised that the perpetrator of the outrage had been frightened off before the work had been completed.

Great Damage Occasioned.

So far as can be ascertained it appears that some 1,500 postal packets were damaged in London on Thursday night by the introduction of acids, paint, and ink into the pillar post boxes. Of this number the mail clerks were able to decipher the addresses on about 1,000. The other 500 packets are in such condition that the addresses are practically undecipherable. The time was well chosen for the vandalism, as Thursday is settlement day on the stock exchange. One estimate places the value of checks in the mail boxes around the stock exchange at $10,000,000.

The police are keeping a sharp lookout for a repetition of the outrages.

Mrs. Emmeline Pankhurst in an interview said "Apparently people are showing exasperation against the Government by attacking a Government department." The leader of the militant suffragettes refused to say any more on the subject.

Thought It Was a Bomb.

Some excitement was caused at Aberdeen this evening when what at first was believed to be an infernal machine, intended for David Lloyd George, chancellor of the exchequer, was found in the hands of a suffragette who was discovered hiding in the hall where Mr. Lloyd Georeg was to deliver an address. It turned out, however, to be a box containing firecrackers. The woman who had it and two of her suffragette companions were arrested.

The car was utterly demolished, but the two men in the party were uninjured.

HYDE FOUND GUILTY

Former New York City Chamberlain Accepted a Bribe.

New York, Nov. 29. — Former City Chamberlain Charles Hyde was found guilty of accepting a bribe, by a jury, at 11:40 tonight.

The charge against Hyde, who is a Canadian, having been born in Nova Scotia, was that he used his position to obtain loans from banks to the Carnegie Trust Company, in which he was interested, in consideration of the placing of deposits of city funds in these banks. The Carnegie Company soon afterwards failed and paid but a few cents on the dollar to depositors.

It was proven that city deposits had been placed in the Mercantile Reserve and other banks as rewards for loans to Carnegie Trust interests.

The verdict came as a surprise, as it was generally expected that the accused would be acquitted.

The conviction carries with it a maximum penalty of ten years' imprisonment and $5,000 fine. Sentence will be imposed next Wednesday morning by Justice Goff.

HON. WM. PATERSON HIGHLY HONORED

Veteran Statesman Is Retiring From Public Life and Going to California.

[Special to The Advertiser.]

Brantford, Nov. 30.—Hon. William Paterson, who is retiring from public life, and who is about to leave to spend the winter in California, was highly honored last evening at his home, when he was waited upon by a deputation of several hundred Liberals and Conservatives and presented with an illuminated address inclosed in a silver-mounted casket.

Hon. Mr. Paterson was greatly moved during the presentation and reading of the address.

Following the presentation at Mr Paterson's home the deputation returned to the Liberal Club rooms, where a large number had convened, and the address presented was read, and Mr. Paterson's reply. Prominent Liberals gave addresses extolling the virtues of the veteran, both in public and private life, and wishing him many years of life and happiness.

Mr. Paterson replied at some length. The casket inclosing the address was a work of art. It consisted of bird's-eye maple, with oxidized silver embellishments, carrying as a crest the Dominion coat-of-arms upheld on each side by a beaver. On the front was a portrait in a wreath of laurels of Hon. William Paterson, and on the reverse side a portrait of Sir Wilfrid Laurier. The interior of the casket was of royal purple plush.

She, however, spoke kindly of his disposition when sober, and expressed a desire that no charge be pressed against him. The magistrate suspended sentence, and his name will be placed on the Indian list.

BRAW NICHT FOR SCOTCH BRILLIANT SPEECHES AND GOOD MUSIC AT BANQUET

St. Andrew's Dinner in Hyman Hall on Friday Night Excelled, If Possible, the Many Joyous Spreads Held by the Society in London in the Past—Guests Numerous.

MR. E. M. MacDONALD, M. P., PICTOU, AND REV. DR. CLARK MADE ADDRESSES

Beautiful Tributes Paid to Scotch Character by Both Speakers —Toast List Was Most Unique and Interesting— Mayor Responds to the City of London.

St. Andrew's Night was truly a gran' nicht for the Scotchmen of London, who royally celebrated the anniversary of their patron saint with a banquet held in Hyman Hall, which was from every standpoint one of the most brilliant of a long series of successes. The hall was filled with enthusiastic Scotchmen. The speeches were of an exceptionally high order, those of Mr. E. N. MacDonald, M. P., of Pictou, Nova Scotia, and Rev. Dr. Clark, Montreal, being particularly eloquent and inspiring. The best of camaraderie prevailed, and the occasion will long live in the memory of those fortunate enough to be present.

Of course, the Scotch forgot their native modesty for once, and for several hours recalled the memories of valiant deeds of warriors, and statesmen, and sang the songs of the poets, and bards of other days. The modern Scotch song did not have a very high position in the program, to be really accurate, it had none, but the songs of other years, many of which had become universal in popularity were sung with the rarest gusto.

Mr. MacDonald's Address.

Mr. MacDonald responded to the toast to "Canada, Our Home." However, as may be imagined, he is a Scotchman, and he spent a portion of the time allowed him in telling of the story of the Scotchman's achievements the world over. The recital of the history of the Scotch in Pictou County was most interesting. Mr. MacDonald is no pessimist regarding the future of Canada, and he declared the day would soon come when Canada would be the strong factor in holding the Empire together.

The speech of Dr. Clark was a very brilliant effort, a most enjoyable admixture of sentiment and philosophy. It was one of his best, and Londoners know him well enough to appreciate that statement.

Mayor Graham responded on behalf of the city of London.

Unique Bill of Fare.

The bill of fare, the "farin," as it was in Scotch, was very interesting to the Scotchmen present, although it was quite unintelligible to native-born Canadians, or at least many of them. Of course, there was a reekin' haggis, roastit bubbly jock, Ayrshire tattie salad, trumlin tam, scones, bannocks, and a' the rest. It was most enjoyable to those present, and even with the handicap of the names the unfortunate who did not come from Scotia enjoyed it thoroughly.

Scotch Music.

The music was as Scotch as the menu. Mr. J. Montgomery, straight from the land o' heather, sang "Sweet Mary of Argyle" in excellent voice. Mr. W. A. McCutcheon raised the enthusiasm of the audience to a high pitch when he sang "Scots Wha Hae," and for an encore, "Blue Bonnets O'er the Border." Mr. Ed. Webster was also in good form, singing "A Man's a Man For a' That" very cleverly. Mr. C. E. Wheeler acted as accompanist. Tony Cortese's orchestra also furnished a fine program.

Secretary E. V. Buchanan read a number of telegrams of greeting from various St. Andrew's Societies, among them being the following:

From the St. Andrew's Society, Montreal:

"From the lone shieling of the misty island, mountains divide us, and the waste of seas, yet still the blood is strong, the heart is highland, and we in dreams behold the Hebrides.

"MONTAGU ALAN, President."

From Major Thomas Beattie, M. P., Ottawa:

"Regret exceedingly that pressing engagement prevents me being with you tonight as usual. I wish you every happiness in the celebration of the national day of old Scotland, the fatherland of so many brave and loyal sons of Canada and the Empire, not the least of whom is Ned MacDonald, your guest of the evening."

From the Winnipeg St. Andrew's Society:

"Greetings. May your head be never so heavy as to capsize the boat."

From the Cornwall St. Andrew's Society:

"Then sip the dew, and cheerful sing,
And loud the bagpipes play, man,
And gae the very welkin ring,
Wi' blithe St. Andrew's Day, man.

"W. A. MUNRO, President."

From Windsor St. Andrew's Society:

"This is the nicht we Scots forgether,
In spite o' sleet or snaw or weather;
This is the nicht we break oor tether
Ae nicht a year,
To toast auld Scotland's hills and heather
Wi' cronies dear.

"JAMES SAMSON, President.
"GEO. MacDONALD, Secretary.
"ROBERT BARR, Bard."

The City of London.

President E. E. Reid occupied the chair. At the head table with him were: Mr. E. N. MacDonald, M. P., Pictou, N. S.; Rev. Dr. Clarke, Montreal; Dr. Peter McDonald; Judge Talbot Macbeth, T. H. Purdom, K. C., Mayor C. M. R. Graham, Rev. T. H. Mitchell, E. V. Buchanan and others.

After a Scotch welcome had been given the visitors by Pipe Major Thos. McDonald and his London pipers, President Reid proposed the health of the King.

Vice-President M. F. Irwin proposed the toast to "The City of London," which was responded to by Mayor Graham. His worship thought London needed enthusiasm. The city had all the advantages necessary to make a great city, but the citizens did not believe in its possibilities as they should, and as a result its rate of progress was not so great as it should be. The newspapers also came in for criticism, his worship finding fault with them because they did not quite measure up to his idea of journalism. London was a city of which its citizens should be proud.

Its streets were parks, but the roads were not park drives, although some day they would be. Canada was to be one of the greatest nations on the earth, his worship discovered, and that London would be one of the largest and best cities in the Dominion. Mayor Graham did pay a deserved tribute to the industrial school, one of the outstanding features of the educational system of the city.

According to his statement, the C. N. R. is coming to London because they need London for their business. While a mistake was made in allowing the Canada Southern to get away from London, the present council would allow nothing to get away. After declaring that the present council formed one of the greatest bodies ever collected under one canvas, his worship invited all the citizens to stand behind them in their efforts to make London one of the greatest cities in the Dominion, as it should be.

"Canada, Our Home."

Mr. A. G. Calder proposed the toast to "Canada, Our Home," to which Mr. MacDonald responded. The Pictou man, who is colonel of the Seventy-eighth Highlanders, was very picturesque in his kilts and uniform. He was given a great reception on rising.

He thanked Major Thomas Beattie for his kindly reference to him in the telegram sent to the society, and stated that in Ottawa members on both sides of the House regard London's member as a pretty good fellow. Canadians have failed so far to realize as they should that the twentieth century is really going to be Canada's. The progress of the first ten years of it has been marvellous, but no person can imagine what it will do in the days to come. Mr. MacDonald then gave an interesting account of Pictou County.

New Scotland.

"There are more Scotch in seven counties where I live than in the rest of Canada," he declared. "It was called ed New Scotland. Thousands of them came after Bonnie Prince Charlie was exiled, and settled down in Nova Scotia. They have preserved all the traditions and sentiments of Auld Scotia. There are men of all religions, but tolerance prevails, which is the spirit that should prevail in all Canada.

"I represent more MacDonalds in the House of Commons than any other member—and more Presbyterians, too," declared Mr. MacDonald amid laughter.

Four College Presidents.

The early Scottish settlers, with their love for educatien, soon founded the Pictou Academy, and from that county had come four of the great college presidents of Central Canada — Sir William Dawson, who made McGill; George M. Grant, who established Queen's, a man with the vision of the statesman, who, long before the west was discovered, predicted what it would become; Dr. Gordon, his successor; and last of all, "Bob" Falconer, a school chum of the speaker, now head of the great University of Toronto. This was a wonderful record for one county, and they would pardon him if he did a little boasting.

"You know, your mayor did a little bragging, and I do not see why I should not do the same," he declared.

Plea for the Pipes.

Mr. MacDonald made a plea for the bagpipes. To appreciate its music, on should go to Scotland, and hear its music amid the hills and glens of Auld Scotia. It is a wonderful music. The sound of the pibroch at the head of the Highland regiment marching to the relief of Lucknow was the sweetest music that the imprisoned Britishers ever heard. Dargai had its memories of its Scotch pipers.

"Those of you young Scotchmen who do not appreciate the music of the bagpipes should go back to Scotland and have your inspirateion renewed," declared the speaker. "Why, I always take a piper with me when I am campaigning. The Duke of Connaught, on the occasion of his visit to my county, declared that he could play the bagpipes. I want you to get fashionable and learn to play the bagpipes, too."

No Special Privilege.

The Scotchmen of the world were celebrating the day everywhere, but in no narrow or restricted sense. They demanded no special privilege. When cabinets are formed in Canada there are always claims put forward for certain races and creeds, but the Scotch never demanded any special privileges. They managed to get their own in any event.

The wonderful combination of races in Great Britain, the Celts, the Norsemen, the Saxons, the Jutes, the Normans, the Angles, and others, had been welded by a common ambition and ideal into the greatest empire the world has ever seen. It was an inspiration to Canadians.

Welding the Races.

"They talk about of the impossibility of welding together the multitude of races that are coming to our shores," said Mr. MacDonald. "We have but to look to the history of Great Britain for our inspiration. We have here in Canada, the stability of the Scot, the sturdiness of the Englishman, the vivacity of the Irish, and the courtesy of the French. These were welded together in Britain, and Canada will develop a race like unto the olden one. We will have here a second great Anglo-Saxon race, the second Britain in history, that will carry forward the institutions of the race, its same faith, its same ambition, its same ideals. Canada's future is assured, and we may look with unabated confidence towards it. This problem was solved in Great Britain, and will be solved here. We will go on to a magnificence not yet dreamed of."

Canada the Factor.

Canada would be the chief factor in the preservation of the British Empire. If Scottish people and Scottish character are as they should be, the race would have a great part to play in working out the destiny of the empire here, as they had in Great Britain itself.

An Old Member.

Mr. Walter Fairbairn, the oldest member of St. Andrew's Society, was introduced at this juncture, and spoke briefly in a reminiscent mood. He had been so long in Canada that he was a Canadian. He gave an interesting account of a visit made two years ago to his old home in Scotland after an absence of 63 years. The contrast to him was pathetic, and he came back stronger in his love for Canada.

Rev. Dr. Clark was given a most cordial greeting when he was introduced by Mr. E. E. Reid to respond to the toast, "The Day and A' Wha Honor It." The president referred to the affection the many friends of Dr. Clark had for him, and he was always welcome to come to London.

Rev. W. J. Clark.

Dr. Clark expressed his appreciation of the kindness of Londoners to him. The city had a warm spot in his heart. Tonight he was thinking of the old guard, Robert Reid, John Campbell and many others who were associated with them. The majority of them were gone, but if there was a rift in the veil that separated this world from the others, he was certain that they were looking down upon the members of St. Andrew's Society on this night."

The Scotch were a wonderful people, he declared. There was nothing prouder than a Scotch piper at the head of his regiment. He looked as proud as a game rooster who had had a fight and won it. They were a varied folk, but there was something about them, and their language that had a universal appeal. When one considers the size of Scotland, its natural poverty, the restraints of condition there, and when one looks at the effect the race had on modern history, it was one of the most extraordinary phenomena of history.

Universal Songs.

"The songs of Scotland have become universal songs," declared Dr. Clarke. "What can be more inspiring than their songs of love, pure and beautiful. Under their spell we forget the barriers between us, and are better men and women for it. Other nations have nothing to compare with it. Not long since, in Montreal an Anglican body separated, and when something was needed to stamp its approval, the rector of St. George's struck up, 'For Auld Lang Syne,' and this Scottish song welded together in friendship these Anglicans of Montreal. Not long since, when in the mother of parliaments, men so forgot themselves in the strife of conflict that a riot almost ensued, who was it saved the day and brought these men back to themselves? It was Will Crooks, the Labor man, who raised his voice and sang, 'For Auld Lang Syne,' and saved the most indelible disgrace on the British Empire. The influence of that song first stilled the tumult. This is one of the heritages of the Scottish race."

A Shrewd People.

One of the characteristics of the Scotch race was the shrewd intellect, the power to balance and weigh things, the ability to see two sides of a question.

"I have a dream of nations going mad," said Dr. Clark. "It is not an idle dream either. We have had many incidents to show ehe insanity of a people. The world is drawn together, and there is no stranger and no foreigner in the old sense of the term. I do not see so much danger of a war of a nation against a nation. But I do fear a war between class and class. We cannot tell the sad horrors that are in this sad earth. The world needs today as it never needed before the shrewdness of intellect, the impassivity, the ability not to be stampeded, the solidity of a people like the Scotch to hold them back, and save them from the insanity that would lead to such a war."

A Kindly Heart.

Beneath the somewhat dour exterior of the Scotch, there was always a kindly heart. In spite of the many differences in religious expression, the Scotch always had a kindly heart, and showed when he could. He would advise all young men to cultivate the kindly outlook. See the best in one's fellows. If nothing but bad were seen, at least be forgiving for such a man.

The sturdy independence of the Scotch was another outstanding characteristic. The terrible toll of many of the pioneers of Canada was an inspiring tale. They led a hard, suffering, heroic life, but these hardy Scotch would not ask for charity, would not take what they had not earned. Not many Scotch can be found in the poorhouse, or depending on charity.

Reverence For God.

Then his reverence was another feature of his character. His reverence before the Eternal was wonderful. He might have been too cock sure of his theology, but underlying it all was his great reverence for the eternal God.

The problems of Canada made him pause, the speaker declared. The mad rush for money to him was rotten. The spirit of speculation was rampant, a dangerous element in the nation's manhood.

"If we are to be the people we desire to be, if we are to make Canada the nation that it should be, if we are to rise to a greater stature, it will not be by wealth, not by the cleverness of our statesmen, not by the acuteness of our lawyers, not by the planning of our commoners, but it will be by men who have the characteristics of the Scottish people, his independence, his reverence, his shrewdness of intellect, his kindliness of heart. That is the only element that will bring peace."

COLLEGIATE HOCKEY CLUB ORGANIZES FOR SEASON

Mr. S. P. Riddell Elected President at Meeting Held on Friday Afternoon.

The London Collegiate Institute Hockey Club held a meeting at the school at 4 o'clock Friday afternoon, and elected the following officers for the coming season:

President—Mr. S. P. Riddell.
Vice-President—Mr. A. M. Overholt.
Secretary-Treasurer—E. H. Braund.
Manager of Team—Johnny Bell.
Captain—Gerald McRobert

Representatives from each year were also picked, the following being appointed: Upper School, Rosg Belton; Third Year, Tom Brown; Second Year, John Ross; First Year, H. Stewart; representative from Students' Union, Hugh McCrimmon.

Meeting Enthusiastic.

The meeting was a most enthusiastic one, and the students are elated over the prospects of the coming winter. The L. C. I. has more good material this year than for some winters and an effort will be made to add the Collegiate hockey championship of Western Ontario to the honors already gained by capturing the Collegiate rugby championship of this end of the province. Nearly all of last season's men, with the probable exception of McQueen and Slater, are available this winter, and the boys are only waiting the chance to get out on the ice and show what they can do.

CITY LEAGUE EXECUTIVE FACES PECULIAR PROBLEM

Is There Accommodation For More Than a Six-Team League?

The executive of the City Hockey League will face a somewhat difficult problem at the next meeting when it becomes necessary to decide on the number of teams to be represented in the league. The number of teams which are desirous of entering this organization grows in volume every day, apparently. At present there are no less than nine clubs who have announced their intention to join.

Six-Team Original Idea.

The original idea of the league officials was that a six-team organization would be quite big enough, but now it looks as if an eight or ten-club league will have to be formed. It might be that the league could be divided into two sections, but rink accommodation is so limited that it is a question whether all the games could be played.

The clubs who have expressed the intention of joining the City League are Bank of Toronto, Orient Club, Seventh Regiment, First Hussars, St. Peters, Army Medical Corps, Empire Brass, Western University and Hymans. Judging from this it looks as though the City League officials will have "some time" arranging matters.

INGERSOLL MAY PUT IN A JUNIOR TEAM

Meeting Will Be Called Next Week to Organize for the Season—Colt Club Take Initiative.

[Special to The Advertiser.]

Ingersoll, Nov. 30.—As was expected the Colts' Club have taken the initiative in regard to hockey for the coming season. The situation was fully discussed at a meeting of the club at which there was a very representative attendance. The feeling was general that Ingersoll should not allow the game to go by default for one season, and it is likely that efforts will be put forth to muster a strong junior team. The decision of the meeting was to call a general meeting next week, probably Tuesday or Wednesday night, and if the circumstances are encouraging organization will then be completed.

ST. THOMAS GUN CLUB READY FOR TOURNEY

Have Gone to Considerable Expense In Preparing Grounds—Three Sets of Western Traps to Be Used.

St. Thomas, Nov. 29.—The St. Thomas Gun Club members have gone to considerable expense in preparing their grounds for the tournament to be held there on Dec. 2, 3, 4, 5 and 6. At least 20 professional shooters and 75 amateurs will be present to participate in the big event. Three sets of western traps will be used in the regular target events, a special trap for the long run events, and a set of Fulford traps for the grand International handicap.

STOVALL WILL HOLD ST. LOUIS POSITION

Has Been Named as Manager of Browns for Next Season Despite Rumors That Bresnahan Was Offered Job.

Los Angeles, Cal., Nov. 29.—Robert Hedges, president of the St. Louis American League baseball team, who is in Los Angeles, announced today that George Stovall would continue to act as manager of that club.

Hedges, in thus disposing of the rumor that he had attempted to obtain the services of Roger Bresnahan, deposed manager of the St. Louis Nationals, declared he was thoroughly satisfied with Stovall's work. He said he had tried hard to obtain Bresnahan's services as a catcher, but not as manager. He added, however, that Bresnahan was not in a position to leave the National League.

KING WILL SUPPORT HORSE RACING

Will Not Withdraw From Turf as Reported According to Statement of Lord Thursby.

[Canadian Press.]

New York, Nov. 30.—A London cable to the Herald says.

"As a reflection on the intolerance of those who killed racing in New York and forced American owners of thoroughbreds to seek new fields to conquer in the old world, Sir John Thursby, speaking at a dinner of the Gimcrack Club in York, last night announced that Lord Derby told him that King George not only did not intend to withdraw from the turf but would in future, so far as his kingly duties allowed, give his effective personal support to one of the greatest sports in the world.

SIDELIGHTS ON SPORT

By Jinx.

Brutality is a thing to scorn, but we wish someone would give this football season a kick in the slats and put it out of business until next year.

As Battling Nelson is apt to remark, that is a bird of an excuse that Johnny Kilbane gives.

This is the time of the year that the enthusiastic hockey manager comes forth with the statement that he's got the best little team ever. May his optimism never run dry.

Mr. Prodger may be under the impression that it is an easy thing to jump from Quebec to British Columbia, but let him beware. It's a long walk back.

A SHAM BATTLE.

They tell us that this hockey war is just a framed-up bluff, and talk about big salaries is nothing more than guff. That the friendliest of feelings combines the east and west, and all these complications are but a merry jest. If so, we fail to understand, the reason we've been stuffed, and, likewise, cannot comprehend just who is being bluffed.

Mr. A. Attell endeavors to inform the public that he has quit prize fighting for good. What Abe should have said was that prize fighting had qiut him for good.

Having tasted the cup of bitter defeat, Mr. A. Wolgast is now thinking of wiring his sincere sympathies to the Turks.

Since London has proved such a poor-paying proposition in the Canadian League, why not transfer the franchise to Dorchester or Komoka? The fans there would fall for the kind of baseball the London team plays.

We positively refuse to arouse any hectic enthusiasm over this tug-of-war pull. With Christmas coming on, there are too many other pulls to think about.

DION WANTED BADLY BY OTTAWA TEAMS

Rush to Sign Him Up When He Arrived Home in the Capital.

Ottawa, Nov. 29.—"Coo" Dion, former captain of the Cliffsides, who played for the champion Victorias, of Winnipeg last year, returned to his home from the West this evening. He is being counted on to play for the Stewartons in the Ottawa section of the Interprovincial Union.

Several clubs began to pull the wires for the services of the Victoria rover as soon as they learned he was on his way east. Stewartons had first call. They already have Billy Smith, Jack Fournier, Allan Johnson, Jerry Davidson and other McGill men, and will evidently give the New Edinburghs a warm battle for the Interprovincial championship, which the Paddiers have held for several seasons.

The New Edinburghs will decide at next week's meeting the question of going west to play for the Allan Cup. They have secured a promising youngster named Slack to fill the goal position vacated by Clint. Benedict's jump to the professional ranks, and will also have the services of "Punch" Broadbent, providing they go west before the N. H. A. season opens.

Explosion in Rear of Johnson's Home

[Canadian Press.]

Chicago, Nov. 30.—A mysterious explosion last night in the rear of the home of Jack Johnson, the negro pugilist, now under indictment for alleged violations of the Mann act, caused excitement among the neighbors, who believed an attempt had been made to dynamite the house that the negro recently gave to his mother. The explosion tore a large hole in a barn next door to the home of the prize fighter. The police are investigating.

OTTAWA PROS. HAVE TROUBLE WITH ARENA

Rink Management Have Raised Price to Forty Per Cent. of the Receipts.

Ottawa, Nov. 29.—The Ottawa professional club is up against another knotty problem. Manager Dey, of the Arena, figures that the attendance will not be as large as in other years and has decided that Ottawa must pay 40 instead of 30 per cent as the Arena company's share. This the Ottawa club refuses to do, and threaten to play all their games at the Rideau rink, which will not seat more than a thousand people. This is evidently a bluff. Dey claims that the crowds last year fell away below those of 1911 because of the antipathy of the Ottawa people towards the six-man game, and thinks that the situation this winter will be worse. The Ottawas say it is a bo'd-up and that they will play in the small rink this winter and build an arena of their own for 1914.

ENGLAND WON THE DAVIS CUP

Captured Tennis Championship of the World by Beating Australians.

THREE GAMES TO TWO

John C. Parke Won His Match in the Singles, Against Heath, Making Victory Possible.

[Canadian Press.]

Melbourne, Aus., Nov. 30.—England today won title to the Davis Cup, emblematic of the world's championship in lawn tennis, by taking a third match from the Australasian defenders.

The contest consists of four single matches and one double match, the team winning three out of the five matches becoming holders of the Dwight F. Davis International lawn tennis trophy.

On Thursday, J. C. Parke and Charles P. Dixon, of England, defeated Norman Brookes and R. W. Heath, of Australasia, in the first two single matches.

Yesterday, in the doubles match, Norman E. Brookes and A. W. Dunlop, the Australasians, beat John C. Parke and A. E. Beamish, the Englishmen, with comparative ease.

This left the contest a fairly open one, as it was thought that the Australasians might retrieve their fortunes, and in the last two singles matches carry off the victory.

Their hopes, however, were disappointed, as John C. Parke again won his match this time, beating R. W. Heath, the Australian. The second match between Norman E. Brookes and Charles P. D. Dixon, went to the Australasian, leaving the final score: England, 3 matches, Australasians 2.

The match between Norman E. Brookes and Charles P. Dixon was the first one to be decided today. The Australasian champion's volleying was too good for Dixon, although the latter made splendid rallies in the second and third sets.

With the rubber standing at "two all" the excitement among the 7,000 spectators was intense.

R. W. Heath, the Australasian, was palpably nervous when he came out onto the court to meet J. C. Parke, who is an older campaigner, and appeared quite cool.

The scores in today's events were:

J. C. Parke, England, beat R. W. Heath, Australasia, 6—2, 6—4, 6—4.

Norman E. Brookes, Australasia, beat Charles P. Dixon, England, 6—2, 6—4, 6—4.

Parke, by his consistent playing and superb drives, made England's victory certain. Lord Denman, Governor-General of the Commonwealth of Australia, with a large party, including many of the federal ministers, was present, and watched the matches with great interest.

The weather was fine, and the turf courts of Warehousemen's grounds were in excellent condition.

SEVENTH REGIMENT DECIDES TO STAY IN CITY LEAGUE

Will Have a Team Composed Entirely of Members of the Fusiliers.

The members of the executive committee of the Seventh Regiment Athletic Association held a meeting Friday afternoon for the purpose of deciding whether to enter a team in the City Hockey League or not. Although the Seventh Regiment was represented at the last meeting of the City Hockey League, and the league was given to understand that a team would be put in, the question arose at the association meeting last week whether it would be advisable to enter a team and bring in outsiders to play. The meeting was unanimous in declaring that a team picked from members of the regiment should be entered, but if it was necessary to bring in outsiders, the matter had better be dropped.

Will Organize Team.

However, at the meeting held Friday, it was decided to go ahead with a team, and the club will remain in the City League. Some good hockey players belong to the regiment, and a strong team will be put in. It is likely that the association will confine itself to members of the Seventh Regiment in choosing a team, and it will be a distinctly regiment team. Captain Watson was appointed manager, and he can be depended upon to place a fast seven on the ice.

C. P. R. Claim Conditions Not Satisfactory to Them

The C. P. R. tug-of-war team claim that they will not meet the Perrin team until a satisfactory agreement is reached as to the kind of belt and ring used in the match. A meeting of the principals of both teams was held about a week ago, and at that time no agreement could be reached. The C. P. R. team wanted to manufacture two rings exactly alike and give one to the Perrin club while they would take the other. Or they would agree to two rings manufactured by the Perrin club. Apparently the Perrin people objected to this, for the matter was left over for further consideration.

The Perrin Ring.

The Perrin people claim that they can see no reason why the C. P. R. team should make these demands. The ring that they have been using is only an ordinary one, and it is a perfectly legitimate one. They have used it in all their matches, and no protest has ever been registered. They claim that the C. P. R. are trying to withdraw on a technicality. It is also pointed out that when the C. P. R. issued the challenge to the Perrin team, they distinctly stated that they would pull at any time under any conditions named by the Perrin team. Secretary St. Clair, of the C. P. R., stated to The Advertiser yesterday that they were the challenged parties, and that they should name the terms. Just how the matter will end is not known.

What the Fighters Say

San Francisco, Nov. 29. — After the battle at which a new light-weight champion was made, the fighters had the following to say:

BY WILLIE RITCHIE.

The New Lightweight Champion.

Since I beat Wolgast in four rounds here last spring, I knew I could whip him over the championship route. My confidence was not mere boasting. I regret that foul blow more than Wolgast does—if it was accidental, I surely would have finished him in the round. It robbed me of a knockout victory, and the glory that goes with it. I may raise the limit to 135 or let it remain at 133. However, I am ready to defend the title against any recognized lightweight.

BY AD WOLGAST.

Ex-Lightweight champion of the World.

An erratic and prejudiced referee has stolen the title from me. I still refuse to admit that I deliberately fouled Ritchie. I was going good and would surely have stopped him in another two rounds. He was beginning to weaken, regardless of his flash at the opening of the sixteenth round. I would rather have been beaten thoroughly than have it said I fouled him intentionally.

Jamestown Results.

Norfolk, Nov. 29.—Two rank outsiders, each at 20 to 1, finished in front today at the Jamestown track. The hurdle handicap was the feature, the horses finishing as they were backed. Summary:

First race, two-year-old maidens, purse $300, six furlongs—Astute, 169, won; R. H. Gray, 112, second; L'Aiglon, 112, third. Time 1:17 1-5.

Second race, two-year-olds, purse $300, selling, 5½ furlongs—Field, 105, won; Gardenia, 104, second; Turkey in the Straw, 108, third. Time—1:10 4-5.

Third race, three-year-olds and up, hurdle handicap, purse $300, short course, about two miles—Nottingham, 138, won; Jesuit, 157, second; Dr. Heard, 138, third. Time—4:05 3-5.

Fourth race, Tidewater Purse, all ages, purse $400, seven furlongs—Sebago, 107, won; James Dockery, 106, second; Continental, 108, third. Time—1:29.

Fifth race, three-year-olds and up, purse $300, selling, six furlongs—Dipper, 101, won; Berkeley, 114, second; Scarlet Pimpernel, 111, third. Time—1:17.

Sixth race, all ages, purse $300, selling, 1 mile and 70 yards—Emily Lee, 108, won; Argonaut, 109, second; Otulan, 111, third. Time—1:50 3-5.

Seventh race, three-year-olds and up, purse $300, selling, 1 1-16 miles—Husky Lad, 109, won; Aplaster, 110, second; Banorella, 103, third. Time—1:51 3-5.

Kewanee is one Class D town that made some money. At the recent fall meeting of the club directors, it was announced that there was $2,000 in the treasury.

PUCKCHASINGS

St. Thomas will get back into the O. H. A. with an intermediate team.

Barney Holden is behind the project to start a professional league in Winnipeg.

It is the intention of the Hamilton Alerts to have senior, intermediate and junior teams in the O. H. A.

Failing to land Pitre of Les Canadiens, the Pacific Coast League magnates are trying to get Laviolette from the same club.

Allan Johnson, Fournier, Gordon, Johnstone, Smith, Davidson and the Dion brothers will be with the Ottawa Stewartons this season.

Archie Atkinson, the sturdy coverpoint of the New Edinburgh team of Ottawa, will likely be a member of Father Stanton's Ottawa College team.

The latest addition to the pros. is Lawrence Dennenny, of Cornwall, who has been secured by the Canadiens on the recommendation of "Newsy" Lalonde.

The Harvard hockey team lost its opening game of the season to the Boston Athletic Club by 7 to 5. But one Harvard regular, Sortwell, was in the line-up. The game was played at the Boston Arena.

The amateur clubs, it is understood, will be assessed $300 apiece for practice hours at the Toronto Arena, and for matches the clubs will receive 40 per cent of the gross gate receipts, with a provision that in all matches the rink's share shall be sufficient to cover ordinary expenses.

Notwithstanding all the scheming and fighting on the part of Mr. Lichtenhein, and the gorgeous salary which he has offered, it is announced that Ernie Johnson has finally decided to go to the Pacific coast again. What has induced the Big Moose to break his arrangements with Mr. Lichtenhein and the Wanderers is not known. The salary he was to get from the Wanderers was to be considerably over two thousand dollars. It is stated that he will leave tonight.

The Montreal club, it is said, will pass up the Virginia training camp next spring and go farther south, perhaps to Wilmington, N. C.

The Silent Barrier

(BY LOUIS TRACY.)

Bower planted himself firmly, right in the gateway. He clenched his fists, and savagely resolved to batter this lunatic's face into a pulp. He had a notion that Stampa would rush straight at him, and give him an opportunity to strike from the shoulder, hard and true. He was bitterly undeceived. The man who was nearly twenty years his senior jumped from the top of a low monument on to the flat coping stones of the wall. From that greater height he leaped down on Bower, who struck out wildly, but without a tithe of the force needed to stop the impact of a heavily-built adversary. He had to change feet, too, and he was borne to the earth by that catamount spring before he could avoid it. For a few seconds the two writhed in the snow in deadly embrace. Then Stampa remained uppermost. He had pinned Bower to the ground face downward. Kneeling on his shoulders, with the left hand gripping his neck and the right clutching his hair and scalp, he pulled back the wretched man's head till it was a miracle that the spinal column was not broken.

"Now!" he growled, "are you content?"

There was no reply. It was a physical impossibility that Bower should speak. Even in his tempest of rage Stampa realized this, and loosened his grip sufficiently to give his opponent a moment of precious breath.

"Answer!" he muttered again. "Promise you will obey, you brute, or I crack your neck!"

Bower gurgled something that sounded like an appeal for mercy. Stampa rose at once, but took the precaution to close the gate, since they had rolled into the cemetery during their short fight.

"Saperlotte!" he cried, "you are not the first who deemed me helpless because of my crooked leg. You might have run from me, Marcus Bauer; you could never fight me. Were I at death's door, I would still have strength left to throttle you if once my fingers closed round your throat."

Bower raised himself on hands and knees. He cut an abject figure, but he was beyond all thought of appearances. For one dread moment his life trembled in the balance. That glimpse of death and of the gloomy path beyond was affrighting. He would do anything now to gain time. Wealth, fame, love itself, what were they, each and all, when viewed from the threshold of that barrier which admits a man once and for ever? In deep, laboring gasps his breath came back. The blood coursed freely again in his veins. He lived—ah, that was everything—he still lived! He scrambled to his feet, bare-headed, yellow-skinned, dazed and trembling. His eyes dwelt on Stampa with a new timidity. He found difficulty in straightening his limbs. He was quite insensible of his ridiculous aspect. His clothing, even his hair, was matted with soft snow. In a curiously servile way he stooped to pick up his cap.

Stampa lurched toward the tiny patch of grass from which he had cleared the snow soon after daybreak. "Kneel here at her feet!" he said.

Bower approached, with a slow, dragging movement. Without a word of protest, he sank to his knees. The snow in his hair began to melt. He passed his hands over his face as though shutting out some horrific vision.

Stampa produced from his pocket a frayed and tattered prayer book—an Italian edition of the Paroissien Romain. He opened it at a marked page, and began to read the marriage ritual. Though the words were Latin, and he was no better educated than any other peasant in the district, he pronounced the sonorous phrases with extraordinary accuracy. Of course, he was an Italian, and Latin was got such an incomprehensible tongue to him as it would prove to a German or Englishman of his class. Moreover, the liturgy of the Church of Rome is familiar to its people, no matter what their race. Bower, stupefied and benumbed, though the sun was shining brilliantly, and a constant dripping from the pine branches gave proof of a rapid thaw, listened like one in a trance. He understood scattered sentences, brokenly, yet with sufficient comprehension.

"Comiteor Deo omnipotenti," mumbled Stampa, and the bridegroom in this strange rite knew that he was making the profession of a faith he did not share. His mind cleared by degrees. He was still under the spell of bodily fear, but his brain triumphed over physical stress, and bade him disregard these worn-out shibboleths. Nevertheless, the words had a tremendous significance.

"Pater noster qui es in coelis, sanctificetus nomen tuum . . . dimitte nobis debita nostra sicut et nos dimittimus debitoribus nostris . . ."

It was quite easy to follow their general drift. Anyone who had ever recited the Lord's Prayer in any language could realize that he was asking the Deity to forgive him his trespasses as he forgave those who trespassed against him. And there came to the kneeling man a thrilling consciousness that Stampa was appealing for him in the name of the dead girl, the once blushing and timid maid whose bones were crumbling into dust beneath that coverlet of earth and herbage. There could be no doubting the grim earnestness of the reader. It mattered not a jot to Stampa that he was usurping the functions of the Church in an outlandish travesty of her ritual. He was sustained by a fixed belief that the daughter so heartlessly reft from him was present in spirit, nay, more, that she was profoundly grateful for this belated sanctifying of an unhallowed love. Bower's feelings or convictions were not of the slightest consequence. He owed it Etta to make reparation, and the duty must be fulfilled to the utmost letter.

Strong man as he was, Bower nearly fainted. He scarce had the faculty of speech when Stampa bade him make the necessary responses in italian. But he obeyed. All this time the devilish conviction grew that if he persisted in this mummery he might emerge scatheless from a ghastly ordeal. The punishment of publicity was the one thing he dreaded, and that might be avoided—for Etta's sake. So he obeyed, with cunning pretense of grief, trying to veil the malevolence in his heart.

At last, when the solemn "per omnia secula seculorum" and a peaceful "Amen" announced the close of this amazing marriage service, Stampa looked fixedly at his supposed son-in-law.

"Now, Marcus Bauer," he said, "I have done with you. See to it that you do not again break your plighted vows to my daughter! She is your wife. You are her husband. Not even death can divide you. Go!"

His strong, splendidly-molded face, massive and dignified, cast in lines that would have appealed to a sculptor who wished to limn the features of a patriarch of old, wore an aspect of settled calm. He was at peace with all the world. He had forgiven his enemy.

Bower rose again stiffly. He would have spoken; but Stampa now fell on his knees and began to pray silently. So the millionaire, humbled again and terror-stricken by the sinister significance of those concluding words, yet not daring to question them, crept out of the place of the dead. As he staggered down the hillside he looked back once. He had eyes only for the little iron gate, but Stampa came not.

Then he essayed to brush some of the clinging snow off his clothes. He shook himself like a dog after a plunge into water. In the distance he saw the hotel, with its promise of luxury and forgetfulness. And he cursed Stampa with a bitter fury of emphasis, trying vainly to persuade himself that he had been the victim of a maniac's delusion.

CHAPTER XIV.

Wherein Millicent Arms for the Fray.

Millicent was wondering how she would fare in the deep snow in boots that were never built for such a test. She was standing on the swept roadway between the hotel and the stables, and the tracks of her quarry were plainly visible. But the hope of discovering some explanation of Bower's queer behavior was more powerful than her dread of wet feet. She was gathering her skirts daintily before taking the next step, when the two men suddenly reappeared.

They had left the village and were crossing the line of the path. Shrinking back under cover of an empty wagon, she watched them. Apparently they were heading for the Oriegna Gorge, and she scanned the ground eagerly to learn how she could manage to spy on them without being seen almost immediately. Then she fell into the same error as Helen in believing that the winding carriage road to the church offered the nearest way to the clump of firs and azaleas by which Bower and Stampa would soon be hidden.

Three minutes' sharp walking brought her to the church, but there the highway turned abruptly toward the village. At one side of the small ravine faced south, the sun's rays were beginning to have effect, and a narrow track, seemingly leading to the hill, was almost laid bare. In any event, it must bring her near the point where the men vanished, so she went on breathlessly. Crossing the rivulet, already swollen with melting snow, she mounted the steps cut in the hillside. It was heavy going in that thin air, but she held to it determinedly.

Then she heard men's voices raised in anger. She recognized one. Bower was speaking German, Stampa a mixture of German and Italian. Millicent had a vague acquaintance with both languages; but it was of the Ollendorf order, and did not avail her in understanding their rapid, excited words. Soon there were other sounds, the animal cries, the sobs, the labored grunts of men engaged in deadly struggle. Thoroughly alarmed, more willing to retreat than advance, she still clambered on, impelled by an irresistible desire to find out what strange thing was happening.

Hurrah, No More Lame Backs!

This Case Proves That the Best and Strongest Liniment Ever Made Is Nerviline.

When it comes to determining the real merit of a medicine, no weight of evidence is more convincing than the straightforward statement of some reliable and well-known person who has been cured. For this reason we print the verbatim statement of Juan E. Powell, written from his home in Carleton, "I am a strong, powerful man six feet tall, and weigh nearly 200. I have been accustomed all my life to lift great weights, but one day I overdid it and wrenched my back badly. Every tendon and muscle was sore. To stoop or bend was agony. I had a whole bottle of Nerviline rubbed on in one day, and by night I was well again. I know of no liniment possessing one-half the penetration and pain-subduing properties of Nerviline. I urge its use strongly as an invaluable liniment and household cure for all minor ailments such as strains, sprains, swellings, neuralgia, sciatica, lumbago, rheumatism and muscular pain."

No better medicine for curing pain was ever put in a bottle than Nerviline—rub it on and rub it in—that rubs out all aches, pains and soreness. Large family size 50c, trial size 25c, all dealers, or The Catarrhozone Company, Buffalo, N. Y., and Kingston, Ont.

BRITISH CONNECTION LOVED BY CANADIANS

Senator McMillan Winds Up Address Debate in Senate With Patriotic Speech.

Ottawa, Nov. 29.—The debate on the address in reply to the speech from the throne was closed today in the Senate, which is now ready to receive the naval bill or any business which may be brought before it. The address was adopted.

A resolution was adopted declaring vacant the seat of Senator Michael Sullivan (Conservative) of Kingston, who has failed to give his attendance in the Senate during two consecutive sessions.

Senator McMullen (Liberal), Mount Forest, Ont., resuming the debate upon the address, said he would not have spoken but for a senator's intimation that Canada would do well to join her fortunes with those of the United States.

Senator McMullen said he thought that there was not now a single man in Canada who held such views. In the past this view was held by an organization known as the Fenians. However, that organization had disappeared, to the great comfort of everyone. Canadians warmly cherished the connection with Britain.

Blessed Under Flag.

The mother country had carefully guarded Canada to the present day. Britain had kept regiments and ships guarding Canada for many years, had established the Canadian canal system, and had developed commerce in every way possible. He contrasted the British management of colonies with that of other countries. Canada was greatly blessed in being under the British flag, and he hoped that flag would never cease to fly over the Dominion.

Discussing the trade reference in the speech, Senator McMullen said: "I was at one time opposed to a protective tariff, but as we grow older we grow wiser. I have come to the conclusion that all classes of people benefit under a well-considered and prudently-managed protective tariff."

He held that England was able to flourish under free trade by reason of the great accumulations of wealth in that country. Senator McMullen objected to increasing the membership of the Senate, and passing to the redistribution bill for the Commons, said that what really should be done was to reduce the membership of each Chamber. Canada was greatly over-represented in the two chambers of the Federal Parliament. The Senate, House and Governor-General cost every Canadian annually fifteen cents each, or seventy-five cents a family, which was entirely too much. Congress cost each American only five cents each per year.

He was glad to see that the Hudson Bay Railway was under construction, and thought no time should be lost in carrying out the construction of the Georgian Bay Canal.

The debate was closed by the adoption of the address. The Senate adjourned until Tuesday.

WINTER TOURS TO THE LAND OF SUNSHINE AND SUMMER DAYS.

At this season of the year a great many are planning their winter tour, some to the Sunny South, others to California, while a considerable number prefer the flowers and sunshine of Florida, together with the very even climate.

The Canadian Pacific Railway offers particularly good service to Detroit, where direct connection is made for Florida, via Cincinnati, Ohio, and Atlanta, Ga, Jacksonville, Fla., is reached second morning after leaving Detroit. Excellent connection can also be made to Florida via Buffalo.

The Canadian Pacific—Wabash Route will be found the ideal line to Chicago, where direct connection is made for the Southern States. New Orleans, La., is reached second morning after leaving Toronto.

Direct connection is also made at Chicago for points in California, Mexico, Texas, Arizona, etc.

The dining, parlor and sleeping car service between Toronto, Detroit and Chicago, is up-to-date in every particular. Connecting lines also operate through sleeping and dining cars.

MILLIONS OF DOLLARS FOR ROLLING STOCK

Enormous Sum of Money Spen by the Canadian Pacific Railway in One Year.

Forty-eight millions of dollars in rolling stock ordered in one year! That is what the Canadian Pacific Railway has done during 1912. It is an enormous sum of money for one corporation to appropriate in twelve months for equipment. It's double the amount ever ordered by any other railway system in North America in the same period, and is tangible evidence that the C. P. R. is keeping pace with the development of Canada—no matter how swift it may be. Part of the orders have already been delivered, and the balance are to be furnished as quickly as the shops can turn out the work. When the orders are completely filled, the C. P. R. will have in commission 2,225 locomotives, 90,416 freight and stock cars of all kinds, 2,164 first and second class passenger coaches, and 512 tourist sleepers, standard sleepers, diners and cafe cars, 1,383 conductors' vans, 4,329 boarding, tool and auxiliary cars and steam shovels—to be operated over 12,500 miles of track.

The new equipment ordered during 1912 included 467 locomotives, 26,653 box cars, 630 flat cars, 401 coal cars, 300 stock cars, 227 refrigerator cars, 94 first-class sleepers, 3 compartment cars, 20 observation cars, 25 diners, 57 tourist cars, 117 first-class and suburban cars, and 138 baggage, mail and express cars. Four motor cars, which will climb up the side of the mountain from Laggan to the Lakes in the Clouds will also be placed in commission—the tracks having already been laid—and will prove a great convenience to the army of tourists which invades that picturesque region yearly. The expenditure involved is $48,000,000, of which locomotives cost over $9,000,000, the passenger cars nearly five and a quarter millions of dollars, and the freight and miscellaneous cars over thirty-four million dollars. The equipment is being chiefly procured in Canada, but different shops, being unable to fill the orders in their entirety, the remainder had to be purchased in the United States in order to obtain delivery within a reasonable time.

The already enormous carrying capacity of the C. P. R. will be greatly increased when the new equipment is secured and distributed. The passenger cars would, if filled with travellers, move simultaneously, 165,000 people—who would constitute a good-sized city, nearly double the entire population of Ottawa, or the combined populations of St. John and Halifax, with Moncton, Fredericton, Amherst, Truro, Sydney, Windsor, etc., thrown in, or a couple of Calgarys, or the population of both Hamilton and London together, while the cars would carry comfortably all the men, women and children of over fifty of the average-sized Canadian towns.

The immensity of these orders suggests the hundreds of thousands of tons of steel, the many millions of feet of lumber, and the gigantic army of men required to produce these huge quantities of material from their earliest stages in the mines and forests of Canada until the finished rolling stock is placed in service. Then, too, the host of people employed in the finishing and furnishing of the cars, and its various industries engaged in supplying the material, are to be counted; and when it is realized that a very large percentage of the cost price of any finished product is paid for labor, a fair idea may be gained of how largely the prosperity of a great railway system is an integral factor in the prasperity of Canada.

LAND LAWS INIQUITOUS

Great Grant Necessary, Says Lloyd George in Non-Committal Speech.

Aberdeen, Nov. 29.—In his speech here this evening, David Lloyd George, Chancellor of the Exchequer, said that a great change "in the present iniquitous land laws" was imperatively necessary. In the Highlands thousands of acres which could be used to produce the finest soldiers in the world had been transformed into deer preserves. He added that statistics showed large numbers of robust fellows were leaving the country annually as though it were plague-stricken, and declared that much of this emigration would be stopped by a free land system.

SEEKS VINDICATION

Long Statement by Patrick, Pardoned After Serving Murder Term.

New York, Nov. 29.—Albert Patrick, who was released from Sing Sing yesterday, issued a long statement this afternoon, in which he went into the details of the two wills left by William Marsh Rice. He said, however, that while he intended to "fight vigorously for his vindication," he had not decided whether he would contest the will probated, which left the Rice millions to the Rice Institute at Houston, Texas.

"Whatever action is taken," he said, "must be formal, and must only be taken after long consideration." He added that in any event he was never a direct beneficiary under the disputed will, merely a trustee.

Popular Young Westminster Residents Celebrate Their Nuptials.

A quiet wedding took place at the Presbyterian manse, Wilton Grove, on Thursday afternoon, when Lydia B., only daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Alex. Hyslop, Westminster, was united in marriage to Mr. Joseph Rennison, of Glanworth. Dr. McCrae performed the ceremony. The bride, who was unattended, wore a very pretty dress of Alice-blue tamaline silk, trimmed with crystal fringe, and top-coat of brin broadcloth. Her hat was a large tur beaver, with band and rose of swan-down.

Mr. and Mrs. Rennison will side on the sixth concession, and will at home after Jan. 1.

Backache is a symptom of organic weakness or derangement. If you have backache don't neglect it. Get permanent relief you must reache root of the trouble. Read about M Woodall's experience.

Morton's Gap, Kentucky.—"I suffered two years with female disorders, my health was very bad and I had a continual backache which was simply awful. I could not stand on my feet long enough to cook a meal's victuals without my back nearly killing me, and I would have such dragging sensations I could hardly bear it. I had soreness in each side, could not sleep and tight clothing, and was irregular. I was completely run down. Once I took Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound and am enjoying good health. It is now more than two years and I have not had an ache or pain. I do all my own work, washing and everything, and never have backache any more. I think your medicine is great and I praise it to all my neighbors. You think my testimony will help others you may publish it."—Mrs. OLLIE WOODALL, Morton's Gap, Kentucky.

NAVAL AND TRADE POLICIES OF LIBERALS UNCHANGED

Hon. Mr. Pugsley Shows Party Strong for Canadian Built, Canadian Manned Ships—Fowler Starts Catechizing and Catches a Tartar.

Ottawa, Nov. 29.—There was a lively time in the House today between Hon. Wm. Pugsley and Geo. W. Fowler, the Conservative member for Kings, N. B. They have met on many a field in New Brunswick.

Mr. Pugsley favored a Canadian navy. Mr. Borden and colleagues had gone to England to find an emergency, and it was evident they were disappointed.

Perhaps the most striking portion of Mr. Pugsley's deliverance related to the part which Sir Rodolphe Forget played in the Richelieu by-election. Sir Rodolphe, in the presence of Mr. Lemieux and another M. P., and also as reported in La Patrie and the Montreal Star newspapers, told the electors at Sorel that he was authorized by Hon. Mr. Rogers to promise a subsidy for the marine railway in case a Conservative candidate was returned at the by-election. Now Mr. Rogers having denied that he ever heard of the marine railway, or in any way authorized Sir Rodolphe to make this announcement, the latter, declared Mr. Pugsley, was guilty of conduct unbecoming a member of Parliament.

For Canadian Navy.

The ex-minister of public works, during the course of his speech on the address in reply to the speech from the throne, took occasion to succinctly restate the Liberal policy on the naval issue, to reassert the principle and wisdom of a Canadian-built and Canadian-manned navy, and to point out the real "emergency" which now actuates the Government's course in the matter.

"I do not think the Government has acted properly in keeping Parliament and the country so long in the dark in a matter of such great importance as the naval policy," said Dr. Pugsley. "Even in the Hochelaga campaign, where I am glad to say the Secretary of State succeeded in defeating his Nationalist opponent by an overwhelming majority, Hon. Mr. Coderre was not able to tell the electors what the naval policy was. All he could say was that he knew nothing about it."

Her Own Ships.

Dr. Pugsley said he and a great many other people were not satisfied with the forecasts of the Government's naval policy. Canada should put herself in a position to do her duty to the Empre with her own ships and her own men, and not hire other people to do the work for her. The Laurier Government had had faith enough in Canada to believe that a navy could be built in Canada. The late government had called for tenders for warships, and had found great British builders willing to come to Canada, establish shipbuilding yards, organize great forces of skilled workers, and build warships for the Canadian navy.

"Several British firms tendered," said Dr. Pugsley, "and among them the great firm of Cammel, Laird & Co., which has a mile of shipyards on the Mersey, where great warships are turned out for the British navy, were the lowest tenderers. They offered to build in Canada, and were prepared to establish their shipyards at St. John, beside the drydock which is being built by Norton Griffiths.

The Liberal Government was defeated on the eve of accepting the tender of Cammell, Laird & Co. When the Conservative Government was formed, Hon. Mr. Hazen, as minister of marine, cancelled the arrangements, and returned the cash deposit of Cammel, Laird & Co. In doing so he struck a blow at St. John and at Canada which may never be repaired.

Dr. Pugsley believed the Conservative party, and even the Conservative Government, really favored the establishment of a Canadian navy. "I believe," he said, "it would do so but for the pledge given to its Nationalist allies in Quebec. I hope the Conservative Government will find strength to break away entirely from its Nationalist allies and cancel the secret pledge given them that Canada shall not embark upon a permanent naval policy, until after a plebiscite has been taken."

Buying Defence.

The foreshadowed emergency contribution of cash was too much like buying defence. It would not go down with the people of Canada. The proper policy, and the honorable and manly course, would be to establish a Canadian navy, and year by year develop it into an arm which would be a permanent source of strength to the empire in time of danger."

But the Government was pledged to the Nationalists, and the only thing left for it to fall back on was an emergency contribution. The Premier and his colleagues went to England this summer "looking for an emergency," and one of their supporters, the member for Brandon, Mr. J. A. M. Aikins, not satisfied with this, went to Germany looking for an emergency. He must have succeeded beyond his hopes, for he came back an announced that Germany and England were actually at war.

Fowler Defends Forget.

Mr. Fowler, in opening, declared that the member for Charlevoix (Sir Rodolphe Forget), was not in his seat, and was therefore being stabbed in the back. He assured the House that a satisfactory explanation would be forthcoming.

Mr. Fowler, referring to the navy question, said that Canada should be as patriotic as the Malays and the Hindoos.

He discussed the economic arguments of Messrs. Carvell and Pugsley. These gentlemen could not agree whether it was the producer or the consumer who paid the tariff.

Still For Reciprocity.

"And dare the ex-minister from St. John tell us if he is still in favor of reciprocity?"

"Assuredly," responded Dr. Pugsley, rising. "I answer, emphatically, yes." (Liberal cheers.)

"Well," proceeded Mr. Fowler, "but what about his leader, the right honorable gentleman who leads the party? Will he answer for himself as to this policy?"

Sir Wilfrid Laurier rose at once. "With pleasure,' he replied, amid prolonged Liberal cheering. "We are a united party on this side of the House in everything."

"Oh, yes, I know," put in Mr. Fowler, "but what I want to ask the right honorable gentleman is this: 'Has he changed his policy in regard to reciprocity?'"

Sir Wilfrid again rose. "I am aware that there are some Liberals who have changed their policy. I am not one of them. I stick to my ideals." The chief's declaration was greeted by ringing Liberal cheering.

"Then what about the member for South Wellington?" persisted Mr. Fowler. "Where does he stand? He is not in favor of reciprocity."

It was Mr. Guthrie's turn to rise. "I was, and I am still," he declared, while the Liberal cheering broke out afresh.

"Then you've changed your mind since you told this House that reciprocity was dead," was Mr. Fowler's rejoinder.

"Not at all," was Mr. Guthrie's response. "I said that reciprocity was dead at that time. It was dead then, for the time being. My statement was accurate at the time."

It was not until the Liberals ceased applauding that Mr. Fowler was able to continued his speech. He promptly dropped his catechising.

Coderre Cheered.

Mr. McKay, the Conservative member for Prince Albert, opened the debate upon the address this afternoon, dealing principally with the cut in the cement duty, which he said had been demanded by the entire west.

Hon. Mr. Coderre, secretary of state, was introduced by the Prime Minister as the member-elect for Hochelaga, and the Conservatives gave him a great ovation. No less enthusiastic was the applause which greeted Hon. George E. Foster when he entered the chamber for the first time this session.

The debate upon the address will be resumed on Monday by Mr. Wilson, of Wentworth.

The Borden Government, he said, has turned down this tender for the express purpose of destroying the prospects for Canadian-built ships for service in naval defence.

LITTLE MISS TESTIFIES TO SEEING DYNAMITERS

Picks Out Two Men Accused of Destroying a Plant Near Cleveland.

[Canadian Press.]

Indianapolis, Nov. 29.—As the youngest witness yet to testify, Miss Cleo Beard, 14 years of age, picked out from the 45 defendants at the "dynamite conspiracy" trial today two men, whom she said she saw shortly before an explosion at North Randall, Ohio, on March 25, 1911. In that explosion an ore conveyer was blown up by nitroglycerin with $50,000 damage.

The little witness, garbed in a pink dress, climbed the high witness chair, and, looking toward the accused "bomb plotters," told her story. She said, with her sister, she was going along a lonely road toward her home at North Randall.

"It was just before dark," she said. "On the road we met the men, who were carrying a box between them. The men were coming toward Randall from the direction of Cleveland. One of them had a funny face."

"A funny face?" asked District Attorney Miller. "Do you see him in the courtroom?"

"Yes, that's him," replied Miss Beard, pointing to George Anderson, Cleveland, a defendant. "He's the one that carried the box. And there's another one," she added, pointing to Peter J. Smith, Cleveland. "We hadn't been home more than an hour when the explosion, a mile away, knocked the dishes off the table."

Laura Beard, 18 years of age, also identified the men.

Anderson and Smith, ironworkers, are accused by the Government with having blown up the North Randall job, because it was re-erected on the "open shop" basis.

The box, which the sisters testified they saw in the hands of Smith and Anderson, was produced in court and was identified by other witnesses as having been found in the wreckage of the explosion.

GOOD INCREASE IN ONTARIO BIRTHS

Over One Thousand More Recorded Than for Previous Year.

MORE MIXED MARRIAGES

Deaths in The Province Numbered Thirty-Four Thousand and Births Over Fifty-Seven Thousand.

[Canadian Press.]

Toronto, Nov. 29. — The report of Dr. John McCulloch, deputy registrar-general of Ontario, has just been printed for the year 1911.

During the last year there were registered 57,235 births, 25,807 marriages, 34,341 deaths, making an increase of 1,364 births, 1,771 marriages, and 802 deaths over 1910.

The tables submitted in the report show that mixed marriages are on the increase. In 1910 there were 7,351 Roman Catholics married. Of this number 5,482 only married in their own religion, leaving 1,509 mixed marriages. In 1911, 7,266 Roman Catholics married, and of these 5,747 married in their own religion, and there were 1,519 mixed marriages.

In the 57,235 births there were 29,607 males and 27,628 females. There were registered during the year 1,262 multiple biths, being 622 pairs of twins and 6 cases of triplets. The twins were represented by 632 boys and 612 girls, and the triplets by 7 boys and 11 girls. There were 1,087 children born out of wedlock, 553 boys and 537 girls.

SERIOUS DILEMMA FOR THE OTTAWA TEACHERS

Ordered by Board Not to Sign Pledge to Enforce Bilingual Regulations.

[Canadian Press.]

Ottawa, Nov. 29.—A sensation was caused among local bilingual separate school teachers today by the receipt from the Ontario Department of Education of forms to be signed by the teachers pledging themselves to enforce all the regulations of the department with regard to English-French schools. The circulars were distributed by the bilingual inspectors and the trustees have ordered the teachers not to sign them. The situation thus resolves itself into a serious dilemma for the teachers, who must either disobey the trustees or lose their certificates from the department.

RANKS OF LIBERALS

Lansbury stood as an enemy to the Liberal party and a rebel even against the Labor party, to which he belonged, and, accordingly, neither the Liberals, Laborites nor Irish supported him, and his defeat was regarded as a gain and not a loss to the home rule cause.

Blow to Suffragettes.

As Lansbury stood avowedly in the interest of the militant suffragettes, his defeat also is regarded as the coupe de grace to that section which has been steadily losing ground since one suffragette threw a hatchet at Premier Asquith in Dublin and another tried to set fire to the Dublin theatre. This defeat to the violent suffragettes also eases the ministerial situation with regard to the suffrage bill which comes before the House of Commons immediately after the home rule and Welsh church disestablishment bills are acted on. It has been feared that if women suffrage advocates in the House of Commons might make war on the Government and the home rule bill, and thus produce a fatal division in the Liberal ranks. It now seems probable that the women will not get suffrage from the present House of Commons, and that the Liberal ranks are keeping ground.

Constant Danger.

But the present situation with the constant danger of snap divisions, imposts a tremendous strain on all the supporters of the ministry and home rule. From the first moment of each sitting, nearly every Liberal, Laborite and Irishman has to be present in the House of Commons and elaborate precautions are taken to prevent a repetition of the disastrous misadventure of two weeks ago.

The present prospect is that the home rule bill will pass its third reading in the first week of January, will be rejected by the House of Lords in February, and will be passed the second time by the House of Commons about May 2. The possibilities then present themselves that either the Unionists will resolve to continue the fight to the bitter end and postpone home rule till April, 1914, which is the latest day they can act or the more rational section will suggest negotiations for the purpose of finding some means of giving further concessions.

Many southern landlords and Unionists are ready to declare themselves in favor of accepting the bill with some modifications.

There is a tendency to accept the accomplished fact and find a compromise between the extremes which reign in all classes of Englishmen. This tendency possibly will come into play and push the home rule bill through a year earlier.

We have just started the fight for the Welsh church bill. The Unionists are even fiercer against this bill than the home rule bill. They kept us up all through Thursday night, though we had to start the Friday sitting at noon.

The majorities were adequate, but not so large as on the home rule bill, and nearly eighty Irish members voted in every division, and frequently gave the whole majority.

COUPLE LOSE LIFE IN BAY OF QUINTE

Ice Cut Boat So Badly That It Filled and Went to Bottom.

[Canadian Press.]

Belleville, Nov. 29.—Two lives were yesterday sacrificed in the Bay of Quinte, the victims being Mr. and Mrs. Daniel Sweeney, aged respectively 44 and 40 years. The couple were in a motorboat proceeding from Point Ann to the city, when the craft ran into a cove, which was frozen over. The ice cut the boat so badly that it filled and sank, and Sweeney and his wife were drowned. Mrs. Sweeney's body was recovered, but her husband's has not yet been located.

KYOSHK IS ENJOYING NEW FOUND LIBERTY

Young Indian Is Staying With Pastor Who Saved His Life.

SARNIA BRANCH OFFICE,
209 Front Street.
Office hours, 9 a.m. to 9:30 a.m., 2:30 p.m. to 7:00 p.m.

[Special to The Advertiser.]

Sarnia, Nov. 30.—Steven Kyoshk takes his newly-acquired liberty calmly and spends most of his time in the company of Rev. Walter Rigsby, at whose home on the Sarnia reservation, he is staying.

Yesterday afternoon the young Indian drove into town with Mr. Rigsby and sat quietly in the buggy while his benefactor transacted his business in several stores.

Very few if any of the passersby knew that the Indian youth, with the slouch hat pulled well over his eyes, was the Kyoshk whose case has attracted attention all over the country. t

Kyoshk expresses himself as feeling fine, but is as non-committal as ever.

HOLD COAL WHILE FAMINE THREATENS

Twenty-five Cars Consigned to Detroit Stalled at Sarnia.

[Special to The Advertiser.]

Sarnia, Nov. 29.—Twenty-five cars of coal, billed to Detroit coal dealers and routed to Detroit, are being held on side tracks here and at Point Edward, a suburb of Sarnia, must to the dissatisfaction of local shippers who are unable to get the number of cars they desire for shipping purposes.

These cars are loaded with chestnut coal, and owing to their continued presence here it is estimated that the coal is being held for speculative purposes. O. S. Clark, customs officer at Point Edward, is powerless to move the cars.

Notwithstanding that these and many other cars along the line, loaded with coal, are being held, reports have reached this city that a coal famine is threatened in Detroit.

berths, while on Dec. 5 navigation closes on the American side.

The coal barges appear to be among the most numerous now, as the many factories, dealers and other large consumers of coal are anxious to get in as much as they can before the winter, the transportation rate being much cheaper by water than by railroad.

The lumber boats are also hustling to get through the season before the ice sets in, but nevertheless navigation in general is drawing to a close until next spring.

TWO DROWNED IN ST. CLAIR COLLISION

Captain Nicholson and John Precious Lost Lives When Boat Sank.

[Special to The Advertiser.]

Sarnia, Nov. 29.—Captain Alfred Nicholson and his brother-in-law, John Precious, were drowned when the sand scow Hustler, sank in St. Clair River shortly after 1 o'clock this morning, opposite Port Lambton, after colliding with the barge Chinook. The other members of the crew were saved.

Confusion of the signals is said to be responsible for the accident. Both men are residents of Port Huron.

The Hustrier is a sailing vessel, built in 1893, and is 44 feet long. The Chinook is a large two barge, and was manned by Capt. James Allen. The cause of the collision is not known. The Hustler turned turtle.

FERRY LANDING TO BE AT BUTLER ST.

Inconvenient Situation, But Best Possible Under the Circumstances.

[Special to The Advertiser.]

Sarnia, Nov. 30. — It is likely that the Port Huron and Sarnia Ferry Company will land at Butler street at Port Huron within the course of a week or two. The boats have been and are still landing in Black River at that city, but owing to the construction of the new bridge there they will probable be crowded out for a couple of months.

The Butler street landing is a long way from the heart of the town, and very inconvenient for the travelling public, but under the circumstances it will be the best that the company can do until the work on the cofferdam of the bridge is completed.

If the boats run to the temporary landing place it will result in a considerable saving of fuel for the company as the trip can be made across the river in half the time.

The lumber barge Lillie Smith, which is lying at the LeBel lumber dock here, will make one more trip this season. She will leave some time this week.

THREE SUSPENDED

Thorough Investigation Will Be Made Into Recent Fire.

[Special to The Advertiser.]

Sarnia, Nov. 30. — The police committee of the council have suspended three of the patrolmen of the Sarnia force until a thorough investigation has been instituted as to why these officers did not discover the blaze. It will be remembeerd that the alarm was turned in from Port Huron across the river. The suspended officers are Nelson Taylor, Samuel Taylor and Andrew Johnson.

Clever Boy Thief Comes Up For Hearing on Monday.

J. M. DIVER RESIGNS

Will Likely Take Over Big Cleveland-Sarnia Sawmills Company.

Sarnia, Nov. 29—Mr J. M. Diver announced today that he is resigning the position of vice-president and general manager of the big Cleveland-Sarnia Sawmills Company here. He has made no statement as to his future plans, but it is known that he has been negotiating for the exclusive control of the plant here for some time past, and developments are expected shortly.

POTATOES PLENTIFUL, PRICES WERE EASIER

About 25 Loads Were Offered For Sale on the London Market Today.

The attendance both of buyers and sellers at the market today was larger than that of any day for the last two weeks. As has been the case during the last two months the vegetable section was by far the largest part of the market, and potatoes and cabbages were the largest single offerings of the day.

Potatoes, of which there were almost twenty-five loads offered today, were somewhat easier in price which was unexpected as the dealers stated during the earlier part of the week that a general advance in the price would soon be made. The importers have ceased to bring in any offerings from New Brunswick and other points and the local supply is now dependent upon the farmers of the surrounding country. The prices today were from $1.00 to $1.10 per bag by the load, and from $1.10 to $1.15 per single bag. Cabbages were also plentiful, but the prices remained the same, being quoted from 30 to 40 cents per dozen. Carrots, turnips, parsnips, beets and onions were also offered in fairly large quantities, but the prices remained unchanged.

The fruit section of the market was composed chiefly of offerings of apples, both in barrels and bushel lots, but the prices were the same as quoted throughout the week. Choice Spies were sold at $1 75 per barrel. A few lots of grapes were sold at 15 cents per basket, but the sales were far from brisk. Quinces were quoted at 40 cents per basket, and citrons ranged from 75 cents to $1 50 per dozen, according to the size. Citrons were not as plentiful this season as last and in consequence the prices are somewhat higher than those which prevailed last year.

The prices of the various qualities of butter today were the same as have been quoted during the week, but eggs were somewhat firmer in price. Early in the morning the sellers seemed afraid to put a price on the eggs they possessed for fear the price would advance during the day. In the dairy hall the average selling price was stated to range between 40 and 45 cents per dozen, and there were rumors that several sales had been made at 50 cents.

The hay offerings this week were very large, and in consequence the prices today were somewhat easier. The highest price paid was $16 per ton, but the majority of the sales were made at $15 50 and $15 75 per ton. The prices of straw, oats and wheat remained unchanged.

Although no price was announced for the weekly shipment of live hogs on Monday, in all probability it will be in the neighborhood of $7 90 or $8 per cwt.

Live hog prices for Monday will range from $7 75 to $7 85 per cwt.

ONE LADY ACCUSED ANOTHER OF CHEATING

And a Cut Glass Berry Bowl Was Smashed in Altercation at Card Party.

One lady accused the other, who had won, of cheating, and tried to grab a cut-glass berry bowl. In the melee that ensued in full view of the guests at a card afternoon some days ago in South London, the berry bowl slipped onto the hardwood floor and shattered into many little pieces.

The story goes that a large party was held, and that the contest for the prize was between two very skillful players. One lady won, and the other lost her head, and said that the playing had not been fair. While the guests looked on aghast, it is said that some hair pulling was about to follow when the berry bowl was broken, which ended the dispute.

The hostess was chagrined at the unpleasant result, and one lady made a reputation as "a poor loser." The hostess vows there will be no more cards for prizes at her home.

NO ACTION AS YET BY THE ALLIANCE

But Sunday Cars in London Will Be Considered Shortly.

No official action has been taken as yet by the Lord's Day Alliance regarding Sunday cars, although it is understood that at the next regular meeting early in the coming week, the decision of the city council to submit a bylaw will be dealt with. It was stated that the alliance will make a strong fight against the operation of Sunday cars here.

"We have not seen the resolution as yet," said Rev. J. G. Stuart to The Advertiser. "Until we do, I cannot say what action we will take. It is necessary that we understand the terms of it before committing ourselves to any course of action whatever."

WEEKLY HIGH COURT

Orders Made in Regard to Several Motions.

Mr. Justice Kelly presided at the sittings of the weekly high court this morning, at which five cases were disposed of.

In the case of Hobbs vs. McCutcheon, an application was made to confirm the report of the local master declaring the vendors to have a good title in certain lands. An order was made confirming the report, R. G. Fisher for the vendors, and T. W. Scandrett for the purchaser.

An application was made in regard to the estate of Elizabeth Clements, in which infant children are interested, for the sale of the infants' land. The order will be issued upon the consent of the infants being obtained. R. G. Fisher for the petition, and F. P. Betts, K.C., representing the official guardian.

There were two motion in the suit of Hall against Boyd, for vesting orders made after judgment for partition and report of the master on sale, to vest certain lands in the purchaser, Charles Clark. The purchase money has been paid into court. Both orders were issued. J. B. McKillop for the applicant.

A motion was made in connection with the estate of Jane McGill for the construction of the will of the deceased. The application was made on behalf of Margaret McGill for payment by the executors to her now of the amount of a legacy bequeathed to her in the will, the question before the court being whether the executors should pay over the legacy at the present time. Judgment was reserved. W. R. Meredith for the applicant, and J. C. Elliott, of Glencoe, for the executors.

MR. YEATES REPLIES

of the Blake Company, complimented me on the high efficiency of work on the pumps, backing it up in a more substantial manner.

The Hydraulic Pumps.

If Mr. Glaubitz has reference to the hydraulic pumps, they were the ones selected by the water commissioners of that year, and were furnished by the Canadian General Electric Company, of Toronto, and installed by me, furnishing the gearing only, the William Hamilton Company, of Peterboro, furnishing the water wheels. These pumps were installed over ten years ago, and as there are some mortise wheels, with wooden teeth, required to eliminate the noise, these would naturally wear away as time went on, but for a small amount of repairs these could have been made good, and the pumps kept in commission, largely reducing the amount, $7,290, mentioned in your article.

A Saving of 600-Horsepower.

It is a pity that such a plentiful supply of river water should be allowed to go to waste, when the hydro used could have gone to furnishing power for industries that Mr. Henderson has been working so hard to secure for the city. It simply means that if the $7,000 had been applied to furnish power for the city, to place London on the same plane as Hamilton, some 600-horsepower and over could have been handed over to your incoming industries, and would have been far better than offering loans or bonus. If Mr. Glaubitz wishes any more information about Springbank Blake-Yeates pumps, I can furnish same. Sincerely yours,

WM. YEATES.

English Plum Puddings.

The ladies of the Askin Street Methodist Church will have a sale of plum puddings of the "English" kind on Friday next at 3 p.m. in the schoolroom of the church. Many moments of worry and trouble will be saved housewives if they attend this sale. The ladies say that the puddings will be just as good as mother made.

PROTEST AGAINST THE BILINGUAL PLEDGES

Monster Deputation to Place Matter Before Government at Toronto.

[Canadian Press.]

Ottawa, Nov. 30. — Protest against the pledges being demanded of bilingual teachers by the Ontario Government that they carry out the regulations of the provincial department of education relating to English-French schools will be the principal note struck at the public meeting to be held by the separate schools board here on Monday.

A special meeting of the board will also be held next week, at which the matter will be taken up and preparations will be commenced for the organization of the big deputation which is to go to Toronto next month to interview the Government.

The teachers have everywhere refused to sign the pledges, according to a statement of Trustee Genest this morning. "The Government, which cannot reach us, is striking at the children and the teachers, both defenceless," he said.

AMBULANCE CALLED ON WILD GOOSE CHASE

Police Are Seeking Identity of Some Person Who Thinks He's Funny.

The police are endeavoring to ascertain the identity of a certain individual who maliciously sent an ambulance call to the Carling street station last night that had a very serious effect upon the horses.

The person who sent in the alarm stated that a man had had both legs cut off by a Grand Trunk train at London Junction, and that he was bleeding to death. The horses were raced with all speed on the long run, but on the arrival of the ambulance it was found that some alleged joker had been at work.

The necessity for better ambulance and patrol equipment was emphasized, for the same horses which had been busy an day, were again required to make a couple of patrol trips during the night.

BUILDING PERMITS TOTAL $109,739

November Showing a Good One—Figures for the Year.

The building permits for the month of November numbered 102, the total value of which was $109,739.

This brings the total for the eleven months of the year to $1,107,220, as compared with $849,327, a gain of $257,893.

The total for all of 1911 was $1,036,880, so that the first eleven months show more than the whole of the year. In fact, there is a gain of $70,340.

L. & P. S. R. OFFER EARLY NEXT WEEK

C. N. R. Officials Will Be Here on Monday or Tuesday.

The representatives of the Canadian Northern Railway—Judge Phippen, Col. Davidson, and Chief Engineer Macrae—will be in London on Monday or Tuesday of next week to make a definite offer for the London and Port Stanley.

It was expected that they would be here on Friday and Saturday, but Mayor Graham received word last evening to the effect that they were in Ottawa, and could not get to London before the beginning of the week.

A rumor was in circulation today that the men were here on Friday and went over the line with Mayor Graham. This his worship emphatically denies.

"They were not in the city," said Mayor Graham. "I did not see them, and I do not think any person else did. I received a wire from them, dated Ottawa, and I presume they were in the capital city."

Personal Mention

Miss Ella Kennedy, of Duluth, Minn., is visiting Mrs. Geo. Edwards, 564 King street, city.

Mrs. Aaron Child, 788 Wellington street, has returned after a month's visit in Cochrane, New Ontario.

A very pleasant surprise party was tendered to Miss Piper, 115 Wellington street, by a number of her friends. After spending the evening in games, singing, etc., a dainty supper was served by the ladies.

Returned From the West.

Cyril Hayes, of this city, has just returned from an eight-weeks' recital tour of the Canadian West, where he filled engagements in all of the cities from Winnipeg to Victoria. His work was received with the greatest enthusiasm, and everywhere he appeared they were desirous of securing his promise to return next fall. Mr. Hayes will spend the rest of the winter filling engagements in Ontario.

DAN CUPID BUSY MANY MARRIAGES IN NOVEMBER

Increase of Over 65 Per Cent Is Shown in London—Stork and Reaper Also Busy.

The local vital statistics for the month of November show a decided increase in births, deaths and marriages. The stork visited 88 homes during the month, an increase of 11 over the same month in 1911. That is considered an excellent thing by the advocates of Sunday cars. While the new-comers cannot vote, their presence sends the population figures over 50,000.

The grim reaper was more than ordinarily busy, too, 64 deaths being recorded. This is an increase of 16 over November, 1911. The death rate among the very old and the very young was rather high. Of the total number, 32 were persons over 70 years of age or under 1 year. There were 16 old people and 16 infants. There was no particular epidemic in either case. The oldest person passing away during the month was 96 years of age.

Tuberculosis was responsible for five deaths, cancer four, pneumonia two, and typhoid fever one.

The marriages for the month increased over 65 per cent. There were 30 in November, 1911, while this November there were 50.

NEW ORGAN INSTALLED IN THE FIRST CHURCH

Presbyterians Will Hold Anniversary Services on Sunday —Splendid Instrument.

The new organ recently installed in First Presbyterian Church will be played for the first time at the anniversary services in that church tomorrow. The organ is not yet complete, as one of the motors is not in action yet, but part of it can be played, and the choir, under the leadership of Mr. Vivian Reeve, the organist, will render a program of special music. An expert from Philadelphia is expected in the city next week to put the organ in complete operation.

The First Presbyterian Church now boasts of the best organ in the city. It was installed at a cost of $10,000, and there is nothing like it in Western Ontario. It is operated by electricity, and is built on the high-wind pressure principle. The First Methodist Church are contemplating the purchase of a similar organ.

REAL ESTATERS FAVOR SELLING OF PORT LINE

Two Hundred Dollars a Day Would Be Required to Meet Indebtedness.

The Real Estate Owners' Association of London are not enthusiastic in favor of electrification of the London and Port Stanley, but on the contrary are decidedly opposed to it.

At the meeting of the association on Friday evening the question came up in an informal way, and in a short time a spirited discussion on the merits of the proposal of Hon. Adam Beck was under way.

The gathering was larger than usual, and when the subject was first broached it was thought that the opinion of the meeting would be in favor of it, as a number of Mr. Beck's personal followers were in the gathering.

Will Not Follow On.

It soon developed, however, that the majority were not in favor of the scheme.

Ex-Ald. H. M. Douglass and Mr. John Hayman spoke for the project, but found no supporters.

No resolution was passed by the meeting, as the matter had not come up in the regular way. At a subsequent meeting such a resolution will be introduced.

The members adhered to their former opinion, expressed in a resolution passed a year or so ago, to the effect that the best interests of the city would be served if the L. and P. S. R. were sold, and the proceeds expended in encouringing other radial lines into London, and reducing the now rapidly growing indebtedness o fthe city.

$200 a Day Required.

It was pointed out that it would require $200 a day to pay off the civic indebtedness, and these men, who own much property here, were of the opinion that it would be better to obtain a revenue from the London and Port Stanley rather than sink another million dollars in it.

"The discussion was quite pointed," said a member to The Advertiser. "The meeting was almost unanimous against Mr. Beck's scheme."

OPTIONS SECURED ON CHELSEA GREEN LANDS

Real Estate Man Busy in Growing Suburb.

A real estate agent, named Mr. H. Aimsby, was in Chelsea Green on Friday, and secured options on two pieces of property on that district. One option was on the land owned by Mr. W. E. Mitchell, comprising 1½ acres, at $2,300.

The second was on the land owned by Mr. John Manning, whose property adjoins Mr. Mitchell's, and has an area of 10 acres. The agent secured the option on this land at $4,000. Both options are to expire the 31st of January.

The agent stated that he now had options on 30 acres of land in Chelsea Green. When questioned what firm he was acting for, Mr. Aimsby refused to commit himself, saying he was under instructions not to divulge his plans to anyone.

INJURED BY A FALL.

Louis Perelman, an employee in the Grand Trunk carshops, fell from a truck this morning, and sustained severe injuries. He was taken in the ambulance to Victoria Hospital, where Dr. Seaborne examined him. The examination revealed that one rib was broken, and the doctor fears his liver is ruptured.

A VENISON SUPPER.

Mr. and Mrs. Alex. Muir entertained about thirty of their friends at their home, 638 King street, the evening being spent in progressive euchre, in which there were many close and exciting contests. The first prize went to Miss Element, who secured the highest number of points, the booby honor being accorded to Mrs. Jack McKay. After the contest came the treat of the night—a venison supper. The remainder of the evening was spent in dancing, and at its close the guests encircled the host and hostess, singing "They Are Jolly Good Fellows," proving that Scotch hospitality, along with that of Old Erin, is hard to beat.

After the Boys.

BAZAAR A SUCCESS

Splendid Affair in the Southern Congregational Church.

Splendid exhibits of ladies' work and a well-organized executive, were the principal factors responsible for a successful two-day bazaar held in the Southern Congregational Church on Horton street. The sum of $160 was realized from the sales.

The booths and circles were decorated in attractive style, each one being controlled by a separate church organization. The Ladies' Auxiliary were in charge of the home-made cooking department and had a very appetizing display. The Girls' Circle presided over the fancy work booth and ice cream counter, while the Mission Band were responsible for the sales of candy and handkerchiefs. The numerous customers fully occupied all the time of the committees in charge.

A BROTHER OF LATE ANNIE PIXLEY

Mr. S. L. Pixley Saw the Rosenthal Murder in New York.

Mr. Starr L. Pixley, of New York, is in London at present, representing his Broadway theatre interests in this city, and tells an interesting story of the murder of Herman Rosenthal, the New York gambler, to which crime he was an eye-witness.

Mr. Pixley states that the murder was a carefully planned affair, and a most cold-blooded one. He was standing in front of the Elks' Club at the time, and saw an automobile containing seven men drive up to the Metropole Hotel, and a boy sent into the hotel by one of the septette to call Rosenthal out. When the latter appeared, four shots were immediately fired, and then, the work being done, the automobile sped on its way, and though the police were standing near by, they made no attempt to stop the murderers.

Mr. Pixley believes in the innocence of the four convicted gunmen, and says that justice has been served to the wrong men. He also feels confident that Becker will yet regain his freedom as he has the power to drag into the affair men who are "higher up."

SCOTT---FORSYTH

Pretty Wedding at Bride's Home in Delaware Township.

A very pretty wedding took place at the home of Mr. and Mrs. John Forsyth, lot 9, con. 3, of Delaware, on Wednesday, at 7 o'clock, when their second eldest daughter, Emma Mildred, was married to Lloyd A. Scott, a prosperous young farmer of the same vicinity. The bride entered the parlor leaning on the arm of her father, to the strains of the Wedding March, played by Mrs. Chester Howlett. She looked charming crowned with a wreath of orange blossoms, and was daintily attired in a gown of cream silk with overlace, fringe and satin trimmings.

After receiving hearty congratulations, the bridal party led the way to the dining-room, where the guests, numbering about 75, sat down to a sumptuous wedding dinner. The groom's gift to the bride was a brooch set with pearls, and to the pianist beauty pins set with pearls.

The bride's going-away dress was of Alice-blue, with black velvet hat. The happy couple left for London, Lucan and other points. Mr. and Mrs. Scott will reside in Delaware Township and will be at home to their friends after Dec. 10.

Temperance Field Day.

Sunday, Dec. 1, will be recognized throughout Middlesex County as a Temperance Field Day, when services will be held in about eighty-five churches by speakers sent out under the auspices of the Ontario branch of the Dominion Alliance. These field day services are part of the great educational campaign, being carried on by this organization, whose ultimate aim is the abolition of the liquor traffic for beverage purposes.

Last year something like 2,500 meetings were addressed by representatives of the alliance, speaking in different parts of the Province of Ontario. The speakers represent different religious denominations, different professions, and it may be assumed that almost every phase of the temperance issue is touched upon.

ORIENT CLUB IS NOW OF AGE

Popular Club Held Banquet on Friday Night in Local Hotel.

A JOLLY TOAST LIST

Orators of the Club and Several of the Guests Were Amongst the Speakers.

The coming of age of the Orient Club was fittingly marked last evening when the members of the club and their friends to the number of over sixty attended the twenty-first annual banquet of the club in the City Hotel. Dr. C. Windsor, the president, was chairman, and called upon a number of the orators of the club and several of the guests to respond to the various toasts on the program.

Those to "Canada" and "The King" were greeted with the singing of "The Maple Leaf" and "God Save the King."

Dr. Windsor in replying to the toast "Ourselves," stated that the club was at present in a more prosperous condition than ever before in its history, having doubled its membership within the last two years, and this condition of the club was due in a large measure to the adoption of sports by the members. He referred to the baseball team which won the championship of the Commercial League the last two seasons. The other officers were also responsible for the good fortune that had followed the enterprises of the club which now boasts of an active membership of over fifty.

Absent Members.

Mr. John A. Connor in responding to the toast of "The Absent Members," said that he considered the present condition of the club due to the untirin gefforts of the past members. "The members of the club in its early days are to be complimented upon their firm stand to make the club among the best of the city, and could they be but here this evening there is no doubt but what they would consider themselves repaid for all their efforts in that direction. The secretary has received a large number of replies from old members who are scattered over this country and the United States, and they one and all wish the club every success."

Messrs. William Cody and S. K. Milroy responded to the toast "Bachelors and Benedicts," and were introduced by the toastmaster as being the most capable men connected with the club to speak from the two standpoints. Mr. Milroy, who has lately joined the benedicts, advised all the younger members of the club to take that step which creates a larger sense of responsibility in a man. Mr. Cody on the other, declared that the single man has many more opportunities to enjoy himself and better his surroundings.

The Baseball Team.

Messrs. Sam. O. Turner, president of the City Hockey League, and W. J. Connor recounted the achievements of the club in the various lines of sports and particularly those of the baseball team. The Orients have also entered a team in the City Hockey League, and the speakers promised that the team would be near the top when the winner of the season was declared.

The toast, to "The Ladies," was coupled with the names of Messrs. Ken. Murray and Ralph Page, and both gentlemen presented the many attributes and graces of the fair sex in a manner that could not be denied. Mr. Lorne Spry, of the Hermitage, told of the very cordial feelings that exist among the different social clubs of the city, and expressed the hope that such relations would continue for all time to come.

Messrs. William Thomas and A. Moore spoke behalf of the new members of the Orients.

During the evening excellent solos were rendered by Messrs. W. J. McKeough and Ken. Murray, and Mr. W. Ashplant acted as accompanist of the soloists. Messrs. McKeough and Moran also gave an exhibition of the dancing that they were taught while members of the Orient minstrel croupe.

49th YEAR — LONDON, ONTARIO, SATURDAY, NOVEMBER 30, 1912. — PRICE TWO CENTS

THE CANADIAN ABROAD DOES NOT HIDE CANADA'S LIGHT.

"Britain Doesn't Want Charity," Says Sir George Ross; Canadian Navy Is the Only Policy For Dominion of Canada

Former Ontario Premier Says a Contribution Is Not a Policy—Resents Assertion That Britain is On Her Knees—Let Us Build Up Our Own Naval Strength With Own Skill, Labor and Materials.

Sir George Ross, signalized his election as Liberal leader in the Senate by a powerful speech on the motion in reply to the address from the throne. Particularly significant was his reference to the naval question, as follows:

I come now to the important clause, number 8, with regard to the naval policy. Honorable gentlemen will have noticed, as I did, with some regret how, shall I say gingerly, both the mover and seconder skimmed over this important clause. The mover, of course, referred to the wealth of the Empire, to our great commercial prosperity, and the necessity for their defence. The seconder said nothing upon the question of naval policy. I may not say much; I may say a little. I may say, in the first place, that it was the naval policy of the Government that we looked forward to with the greatest of interest when called to meet and counsel as to the affairs of the nation. We thought, well, we can manage trade and commerce fairly well. They are the ordinary experience of every parliament, and we understand something about making treaties and about revenue and expenditure of money on railway legislation, but there is concealed in the bosoms of the ministers a policy on a most important matter affecting Canada and affecting our relations with Great Britain, and in regard to which our anxiety is growing greater and greater every day. The speech says:

"During the past summer four members of my Government conferred in London with His Majesty's Government on the question of naval defence."

If four members conferred and each has the secret in his heart, we should, from some one or other, obtain some knowledge of what that secret is, particularly since on so many occasions in the old land and in this they received unbounded applause for the speeches they made and for the patriotic manner in which they alluded to the Empire and to the readiness with which Canada was going to assert herself and contribute of men and particularly of money for the defence of that Empire against all assault.

Great Expectations.

The Premier made speeches before the Constitutional Club, speeches which were quite appropriate, I am bound to say, and worthy of the position he held. And here I may remark that we were glad to know, irrespective of political lines, that the representative of Canada, the head of its Government, conducted himself with so much dignity and so much self-respect, and reflected the highest tone of Canadianism, although he did not say much in regard to what we wanted to know, and we welcomed him back, feeling that we were receiving a man who had filled his position in that respect with credit to the country and honor to himself. He made various speeches in the old land, and in every one of these he led up to the circumstance that something was going to be done, but what it was going to be nobody was any the wiser, because of his guarded and reticent remarks. Premier Asquith and Lord Churchill, first lord of the admiralty, also gave assurance over and over again that Canada was going to do the right and patriotic thing, and you have no doubt read their speeches with interest, your interest growing greater every line you read.

Like Banquo's Ghost.

Now you say we are going to know all about it, but as you finished the speech the ghost of this naval policy vanished like Banquo's ghost from the feast of Macbeth. Our Premier came to Toronto and spoke there and received a banquet beyond anything given to any previous premier. Every man in the audience rose up and applauded, and in their hearts if not vocally sang "The Army and Navy Forever," but there was no navy or naval policy that gave piquancy or permanency to their enthusiasm. What is it that is said in this paragraph? We have to find out more about it. We have to compliment the Premier upon his ability to, shall I say play? That is not exactly the word I want to use, but to speak of the subject and say nothing about it. What is said here? In the first place it is said that four of the ministers went. That is proper. It is a large number and I believe is a quorum of the cabinet, and I think is quite a sufficient number. I do not complain of that. The subject was great enough for a delegation consisting of four members, and I think the Government was wise in proceeding to the old land and to consult with the Premier. The paragraph says:

"Conferred in London with His Majesty's Government on the question of naval defence."

I do not know where they could go or where they could get information of a more conclusive character, and I do not know wiser men whom they could select, and so they went and they consulted no doubt, and it says important discussions took place. What are these discussions? We are told at the end of the clause, as by a sort of irony, after that a bill will be introduced accordingly. When this bill comes what will "accordingly" mean? In the first place by this clause it would mean that important discussions took place. We must know what these discussions were. Perhaps there was no dictagraph to take them down. My position as a member of this House and a Canadian is that, before a naval bill is brought down, this House ought to know as much about the basis upon which a grant is paid as the members of the Government know. Whatever information they possess we should have. We should know the character of these discussions. Did they refer to a grant of ten, twenty or thirty millions, or what did they refer to? Did they include a permanent navy, or what is commonly called an emergency grant? Did they discuss our ability to give thirty or forty million, or did they discuss the necessity for a grant being paid because of the improvised condition of the British exchequer? Did these discussions occur and how was the decision arrived at?

What's the Matter With Old England?

The next expression is that "conditions have been disclosed." What does it say?

"Conditions have been disclosed which in the opinion of my advisers render it imperative—that the effective naval forces of the Empire should be strengthened without delay."

Notice that strong word—

Now we are on the brink of a volcano. We are confronting a yawning chasm. The Empire is in process of dissolution. If not it looks as if this commission of four members, after conference with the Imperial Government, after important discussions, came to the conclusion that conditions had been disclosed which, in their opinion, rendered it imperative—not optional—not a matter of discussion—but rendered it imperative that the effective naval forces of the Empire should be strengthened without delay. Now what are these conditions? What is the matter with old England? Has she lost her virility? Has she no sailors to man her ships? Is her exchequer impoverished? Has she reached the limit of her resources? Pray what were these conditions? Is she no longer able to float her navy and are the conditions so serious that her effective naval forces must be strengthened? If it is not within herself the danger lies, is she imperiled from without? Is the Kaiser prepared to pounce upon her like a lion upon his prey? Have her enemies strengthened their naval equipment beyond her capacity to do so? Who is to attack her? From what source is the danger to come? Who is the enemy who is at her gate?

William Watson's Great Poem On the Turk's Downfall

[Wm. Watson in the Nation, London, England.]

MOONSET AND SUNRISE.

The forts of midnight fall at last;
The ancient, baleful powers
Yield up, with countenance aghast,
Their dragon-guarded towers.
Henceforth, their might as dust being trod,
'Tis easier to believe in God.

What were the great ones of the earth,
Kaiser and Czar and King?
Small thanks to them, for this glad birth
Whereat the daystars sing!
The little lands, with hearts of flame,
Have put the mighty thrones to shame.

Tomorrow, who shall dare deny
The heroes their reward,
And snatch from under Victory's eye
The harvest of the sword?
Not we ourselves, a second time,
Could dye our hands with such a crime.

Idle the dream, that e'er the Turk
Can change into a Man!
Have we not seen his handiwork
Since first his reign began—
Since first he fed his lust and rage,
On ravished youth and slaughtered age?

If, of his power, no lingering trace
Remained to insult the sky,
Were not this earth a better place
Wherein to live and die?
If he could vanish from the Day
What but a stain were cleansed away?

Three lustrums have in turmoil sped,
Since Greece, unfriended, hurled
Her javelin at the python's head,
Before a languid world,
While the great Kings, in far-off tones,
Mumbled upon their frozen thrones.

She dared too much, or dared too soon,
And broke in disarray,
Where, underneath his crescent moon,
The coiled Corruption lay.
Heartened anew, the scaly thing
Returned unto his ravening.

But now his empire, more and more,
In narrowing confines penned,
An old and putrefying sore,
Hath festered to its end;
Nor far the hour, when he at last
Shall, like a foul disease, have passed.

Pity for others had he none;
In storms of blood and fire
He slew the daughter with the son,
The mother with the sire;
And oft, where Earth had felt his tread,
The quick were envious of the dead.

But since his fierceness and his strength,
His faded pomps august,
His courage and his guile, at length
Sink into night and dust,
For him, too, let Compassion plead,
Ev'n as for all of Adam's seed.

O lands by his dominion curst,
Throughout five hundred years—
That never could appease his thirst
With all your blood and tears—
In this new day that breaks divine
He shall drink deep another wine.

The cup of lowliness shall slake
Lips that nought else might cool,
When hurricanes of terror shake
The towers of Istamboul,
And blasts blown on that Golden Horn
Aroused the City of Dreadful Morn.

For now the hour of dreams is past;
The gibbering ghosts depart;
And Man is unashamed at last
To have a human heart,
And lo, the doors of dawn ajar,
And in the East again a Star!

Loveless and cold was Europe's sin,
Loveless the path she chose,
And self-upbraidings deep within
She strangled as they rose;
But that dark trespass of our own
Forbids that we should cast a stone.

Enough, if hands that heretofore
Labored to bar His road,
Delay henceforward nevermore
The charioteers of God,
Who halt and slumber, but anon,
With burning wheels, drive thundering on.

—William Watson.

Radical Changes Asked in the British Divorce Laws

Report of Royal Commission—Majority Recommends Five New Grounds For Divorce—Incurable Drunkenness One of Them—Minority Report Less Sweeping.

The report of the British Royal Commission on Divorce, appointed three years ago, has just issued its report.

The majority report advises that divorce and remarriage shall be made lawful upon five new grounds in addition to the present ground of adultery. The minority recommended that valid marriages shall continue to be indissoluble except for adultery.

The Commissioners.

The majority report is signed by these commissioners:

Lord Gorell, chairman, ex-president of the divorce court.

Lady Frances Balfour.

Mr. Thomas Burt, the first miners' M. P.

Lord Guthrie, a Scottish judge.

Sir Frederick Treves, the great surgeon.

Judge Tindal-Atkinson, county court judge.

Mrs. Harold Tennant, formerly an inspector of factories.

Mr. Edgar Brierley, Manchester stipendiary.

Mr. J. A. Spender, editor of the Westminster Gazette.

The minority report is signed by:

The Archbishop of York, Dr. Cosmo Lang.

Sir William Anson, M. P., the constitutional historian.

Sir Lewis Dibdin, the great church lawyer.

Here are summaries of the two diverging reports as given by the Daily Mail:

The Majority Report.

The two sexes should be on an equal footing as regards divorce.

Divorce should be obtainable on the following grounds:

1. Adultery.
2. Desertion for three years and upwards.
3. Cruelty.
4. Incurable insanity, after five years' confinement.
5. Habitual drunkenness, found incurable after three years from a first order of separation.
6. Imprisonment under a commuted death sentence.

Facilities should be given for hearing divorce cases in courts throughout the country in cases where the joint income of man and wife does not exceed £300 and their property does not exceed £250.

Power should be given to declare marriages null in cases.

(a) Of unsound mind.

(b) Of epilepsy and recurrent insanity.

(c) Of specific disease.

(d) When a woman is in a condition which renders marriage a fraud upon the husband.

(e) Of wilful refusal to perform the duties of marriage.

Restriction should be placed on the publication of divorce reports, and no publication till after the case is finished.

Judges should hear divorce cases without a jury.

The Minority Report.

The minority agree that there should be equality of the sexes.

They recommend emphatically that the grounds of divorce should not be extended.

They agree that there should be local divorce courts with facilities to the poor, but not on a scale so extensive as the majority recommend.

They agree that marriages should be rendered null on the grounds (a) to (e) set out above.

They agree in limiting the publication of reports.

They agree that a man should be presumed dead after a continual absence without communication for seven years.

To understand the difficulties before the commissioners it must be recalled that, put briefly, the law at present allows a man to divorce his wife on proof of one case of misconduct on her part, but a wife must prove, in addition to misconduct on the man's part, cruelty or desertion. As to desertion, refusal to comply with an order of restitution of conjugal rights is enough.

The question: "What is cruelty?" has led to a wide extension of the meaning. Even now the majority has found it difficult to draft a precise definition.

They propose, however, the following:

Cruelty is such conduct by one married person to the other as makes it unsafe, having regard to the risk of life, limb, or health, bodily or mental, for the latter to continue to live with the former.

ODD NAMES OF COUNTRY ESTATES

Curious and Original Appellations—Some of Historic Origin.

In a list which a writer in Suburban Life has collected there are many striking ones. Hardscrabble, for instance, is the name of Fancher Nicholl's place at Pleasantville, N. Y., and has an interesting historical origin. The old highway near the house was originally used by Gen. Washington's troops. On one occasion when Major Andre attempted to pass the British lines he took the old road, stopping here and there at farmhouses inquiring his way. To one of the owners he remarked that as the road was so rough, stony and hilly it should be called "Hardscrabble," which name clung to it for many years. Recently several attempts have been made to change it. But the Nicholls determined to preserve the original name given it by Major Andre and called their place Hardscrabble, as it is one of the roughest and stoniest little hills on the road.

The charm of inherited titles is found in the summer home of George Clay Hollister, on the Quaker Ridge road at New Rochelle. His place, Little Hillandale, embraces some ten acres on the end of an ancestral place, Hill and Dale Farm. When the Hollisters went out to their place the most natural thing in the world was to take the name as a part of the whole. It came as a quick thought and was carried unanimously.

The charming summer place of Henry W. de Forrest at Cold Harbor has been known by its present name for half a century or longer, as the records show that in the early '60s a former owner selected it. Nethermuir seems to suggest pastoral scenes. It means "lower meadow."

Anson W. Hard's country place at Lawrence, N. Y., bears the Portuguese name Chacara. It has required so much explanation that its owner is considering dropping it, but the charm of his place makes it appropriate in its Brazilian interpretation. "Chacara" is the word used in Brazil for all country seats, like the hacienda of Mexico. Where we speak of "our country places" the Brazilians speak of their "chacaras."

Sir Roger Casement Tells of Rubber Horrors In the Wilds of Peru

His Plain Statements to Select Committee of British Parliament—Attempts to Cover Up Crimes—A Reign of Terror---Abominal Cruelties.

Sir Roger Casement, whose report on the rubber horrors of Putumayo officially exposed the cruelties perpetrated in that region, was the witness before the select committee which is inquiring into the responsibility of the British directors of the Peruvian Amazon Company. Mr. Charles Roberts presided, and the directors of the company were represented by Mr. Astbury, K.C., and Mr. Raymond Asquith.

Sir Roger said the company had accepted the truth of his report. There was no foundation for the statement that the atrocities had been caused through the action of British or American firms and syndicates who "jumped" claims or territory in Putumayo.

The Chairman: Then are the Arana Bros. responsible?—I suggest they are criminally responsible.

Discussing the system in Putumayo, Sir Roger said that in his opinion it had not grown up by chance or neglect. "I think," he added, with intense feeling, "that this criminal system was deliberately designed. The Putumayo directors were, in my opinion, cognizant of things in Putumayo."

Covering Up the Crimes.

Raids had been carried out on certain Colombian estates. Natives were murdered, their houses taken possession of, and their property confiscated. In one case 23 tons of rubber found in a Colombian trading settlement were actually brought to London as the property of the Putumayo Amazon Company. Senor Arana was perfectly aware of that. He visited the region subsequent to those crimes.

The Chairman: To see what should be done? — No, in order to cover up the crimes.

Men were sent out with Winchester rifles to catch Indians, just as though they were wild animals. Those who ran away were shot down, and the Indians, after being driven from their homes, were hunted in the forests. After capture, if they collected too little rubber they were flogged, and if they ran away commissions armed with Winchester rifles were sent out to shoot them.

The Chairman: The company used British subjects to collect rubber by a series of crimes and murders which were punishable?

The Witness: I have no doubt they used their subjects in a criminal way.

A Reign of Terror.

"The essence of the system was terror," declared the witness.

Sir Roger had several consultations with the directors. "But I soon realized," he said, "that the directors were much more preoccupied with their financial position. Unless the company could be saved there was no possibility of the company making any reforms. Their position was very difficult, for Arana was in effective ownership."

"I made it quite clear that the whole thing was organized piracy," said Sir Roger, speaking of his interviews with the board in London. He believed the Putumayo conditions were now improved.

The Chairman: Two directors who habitually sat in London as a matter of fact knew of these criminal methods; they knew that their firm was using British subjects for the purposes of murder?—I have no doubt of it.

The Chairman: It by no means follows from that, that that knowledge was communicated to the British directors?—No.

The Chairman: But that knowledge was in the London office when those two gentlemen were there?—Yes.

"I Went Unarmed."

"Was it necessary for any agent of the company to go armed?" asked Lord Alexander Thynne.

"I went unarmed," replied Sir Roger, laconically.

An Englishman and an Australian were among those employed in the Putumayo. The Englishman, a young man, who acted as storekeeper, told him that "the whole thing was organized piracy." The Australian thought his inquiry was an unwarrantable interference; and was subsequently heard to remark, "If he had gone to the district where I used to work he would have been shot, and serve him jolly well right, too." (Laughter.)

Replying to Mr. Joynson Hicks, witness said that when he saw the British directors he told them that they were presiding over a system of organized piracy.

Mr. Joynson Hicks: Did they throw up their hands in holy horror?—I think they were very much ashamed of what had taken place.

Mr. Joynson Hicks: But didn't they deny it?

Witness: They had already denied it, and I think the Foreign Office had accepted it, or had placed on record its belief that the British directors were not responsible.

Abominably Cruel.

Sir Roger stated that some 30,000 Indians had disappeared from the territory within a short period of years, and most had fled in terror from the Aranas. Others had died of hunger and exposure.

"I myself saw a woman who could not walk any further," said Sir Roger. "I took the load from her back and threw it away in the forest, and set some of my men to guard her lest she should be flogged by Arana. The things that went on were abominably cruel."

In the books of 1911 there appeared an item of £4,600 owed to the company by the Peruvian consul-general. "Was that a bribe?" asked Mr. Joynson Hicks.

"Speaking frankly, yes."

"A sham," was the description witness gave to the letter written in November, 1909, to the agents at Iquitos by Senor Alarco, the London manager, instructing them to treat the natives with all kindness. Right up to September, 1910, the atrocities still went on.

In cross-examination by Mr. Asquith, Sir Roger said that the British directors would not be likely to hear of any atrocities from the Aranas.

The committee adjourned.

Benjamin Disraeli's Love Letters Revealed In the Second Volume of His Biography

His Great Love For His Wife—Their First and Last Quarrel Was Over Her Money—Devoted For Thirty Years.

"I retired to a sofa with the duchess, who told me that her majesty had pointed out 'Dizzy,' saying, 'There's Mr. Disraeli.' Do you call all this nothing?"

This is the way in which Mrs. Disraeli wrote to her husband's mother and father, telling them of a great house party at Stowe in 1845, at which Queen Victoria, Sir Robert Peel, and others were present.

A Wonderful Ten Years.

The queen's saying, "There's Mr. Disraeli," is a fitting text for Mr. Monypenny's second volume of "The Life of Disraeli," for in it we see Disraeli himself. Mr. Monypenny is but a letter-opener and sorter, but of the most accomplished kind.

Disraeli's variegated waistcoats and fancies in canes are not so prominent in the new Vol. II. as in Vol. I., but throughout the book we see a man of the most attractive type—charming, clever, versatile, humorous, picturesque, and with a seriousness of mind which many of his other qualities tended to obscure.

The book opens with the famous scene in the Commons, when Disraeli warned the House that "there will come a time when you will hear me," and takes us through those lively ten years which close with his appointment as chancellor of the exchequer and leader of the House!

We see how Disraeli became interested in the condition of the people, of his attiude during the repeal of the corn laws, and we watch him writing those three extraordinary novels, 'Coningsby,' "Sybil," and "Tancred."

A Perfect Wife.

But above all we see Disraeli in love, Disraeli married, Disraeli in love with his wife, and this is one of the most charming stories which a biographer could give.

When his novel "Sybil" appeared, Disraeli dedicated it to his wife in these terms:

"I would inscribe this work to one whose noble spirit and gentle nature ever prompt her to sympathize with the suffering; to one whose sweet voice has often enocuraged, and whose taste and judgment have ever guided its pages. The most severe of critics, but—a perfect Wife!"

Among the odds and ends from Disraeli's pen preserved by his wife's pious care, there is a bundle of little notes which he wrote to her while he was composing "Coningsby," and "Sybil": reports of his progress, inquiries after her health, invitations to a stroll, requests for a glass of wine or permission to smoke a cigar, and one calling her to a consultation. "I wish you would come up and talk a little over a point, if you are not particularly engaged"—which seems to show that this compliment to her taste and judgment was no mere pretence.

Such a Gay Lady.

When Disraeli was contesting Shrewsbury in 1844, he wrote to his wife, saying:

"Wherever I go I hear of nothing but 'Mrs. Disraeli.' and why she did not come, and when she will come. When the railway is finished, then they count on seeing her very often. Among the shopkeepers, whom I wish most to please, your name and memory are most lively and influential. 'Such a gay lady, sir!' and I tell them all that you are a perfect wife as well as a perfect companion, and that, separated from you, for the first time after five years, we are (alas! alas!) parted on our wedding day. The women shed tears, which, indeed, I can barely myself restrain. "Our wedding feast must be on Thursday, but if I die for it I will write you some verses tomorrow."

The Most Cheerful Woman.

When Disraeli first met his wife she was Mrs. Wyndham Lewis, the wife of an M. P., "a pretty little woman," a "flirt," a "rattle," whose volubility astonished him when he met her at Bulwers in 1832. She was a widow at forty-five, and Disraeli was twelve years younger. They married in 1839, and when, after thirty years, death came to part them. Disraeli said: "There was no care which she could not mitigate, and no difficulty which she could not face. She was the most cheerful and the most courageous woman I ever knew."

But Disraeli had all the lover's ups and downs before he won her. When she had left his father's house after a visit he wrote:

"Their talk is insipid after all that bright play of fancy and affection, which welcomes me daily with such vivacious sweetnes. . . . I have not recovered from the stupefaction of yesterday. All is dull, silent, spiritless; the charm is broken, the magic is fled. All this may be incvitable, and I will believe it all may end well. But what future joy and prosperity, what fortune, even what fame, can compensate for this anguish? . . . I wrote your name in large characters and placed it before me. There is no hell on earth like separated love."

My Ideas of Love.

"My ideas of love are the perpetual enjoyment of the society of the sweet being to whom I am devoted, the sharing of every thought and even every fancy, of every charm, and of every care. Perhaps I sigh for a state which never can be mine, which

ON THE EDGE OF WAR—AUSTRIA KEEPS AN EAGLE EYE ON SERVIA, WHILE RUSHING TROOPS TO FRONTIER.

This time Austria is hopping made because Servia is winning a seaport on the Adriatic as a prize of the Balkan war, Austria is determined that Servia shall not have such a port, and may fight to prevent it. For Austria is jealous of the growing prestige of her little neighbor, and she herself would like to acquire a seaport in Albania and another on the Aegean Sea.

Austria is again making a warlike demonstration on the Servian border, just as she did four years ago when she grabbed Bosnia and Herzegovina, and mobilized her army along the Danube as a warning to Servia to keep hands off. Here is a striking picture showing how she guards her frontier.

The picture shows an Austrian watch tower on the Servian frontier, with its sentinels constantly on the lookout. Such outposts extend all along the border, and are linked together by the field telephone, ready at any moment of the day or night to give warning of the approach of Servian troops.

Music and Drama

Attractions at the Grand.

Today—Guy Bros.' Minstrels.

Wednesday, Dec. 4—"Alias Jimmy Valentine."

Thursday and Friday, Dec. 5, 6—Bernard Daly, in "Dion O'Dare."

Saturday, Dec. 7—"The Fortune Hunter."

Thursday, Friday and Saturday, Dec. 12, 13, 14—"Milestones."

Guy Bros.' Minstrels.

After several years' absence, the Guy Bros.' Minstrels appear at the Grand today. It is one of the oldest minstrel organizations on the continent. Among the many specialties on the program this year are the following: Ludwig, impersonator; Herman, the human bird; Imperial Quartette, Davis Bros.' musical act, Vally and Arnold, dancers, etc. Guy Bros. need no introduction. It is a well-balanced company, and no doubt many will be glad to hear them.

Was Made Famous in New York.

The name of "Alias Jimmy Valentine," the bank burglar, with fingers so sensitive that he can open a vault by the sense of touch, without knowledge of the combination, has become a household word throughout the country, though the play in which he figures has been seen in a few cities only. Great has been the success of Paul Armstrong's play by that name in its two years in New York, at the historic Wallack's Theatre. The country-wide reputation of "Alias Jimmy Valentine" has emanated hitherto largely in the favorable reports of the play sent out from the Eastern metropolis. This season, however, the famous play is being sent on tour by Liebler & Co., and local theatregoers will have a chance to see him next Wednesday night, when he fills an engagement at the Grand. Seats for the local engagement of "Alias Jimmy Valentine" will be placed on sale Monday at 9 a.m.

Irish Musical Comedy.

Five songs, which will be whistled and sung in all parts of the city the next day after his appearance here, are introduced by Bernard Daly during the action of his play at the Grand for two nights, next Thursday and Friday. The titles are, "Many Years Ago," "A Rose of Yesterday, "Love Is Like a Shoogy-Shu," 'Call of the Wind," and "Macushla." Also a new feature of Mr. Daly's play is the incidental music, which is played during the performance. Instead of the audience being tired out by long overtures or selections from popular operas between each act, original music in keeping with the story is played by the orchestra, and this is far from being the least enjoyable part of the performance. Seats Tuesday, 9 a.m.

"The Fortune Hunter."

In "The Fortune Hunter," which comes to the Grand next Saturday, Winchell Smith presents a clean, breezy, American comedy, convulsively funny in its conception, with a unique and carefully developed plot, that catches the fancy and holds the tense attention of the audience. The story is about a young man who, reared in wealth and luxury, with an impractical education, finds himself at the death of his father obliged to work for a living. After many unsuccessful attempts to get along, he finally accepts the proposition of a mutual friend to go to a small town, where eligible men are scarce, and win the hand of some girl, whose father is wealthy. A set of rules is laid down, and a small Pennsylvania town is chosen as the place of action. How he eventually succeeds, how his experiences evelop hitherto hidden business ability, and how he eventually works out his own salvation, and makes a huge success of his life, is left to the story to unfold.

Extraordinary Engagement — "Milestones."

Laughter and tears alternate through the three acts of "Milestones," the famous comedy by Arnold Bennett and Edward Knoblauch, which Klaw & Erlanger will present, under the direction of Joseph Brooks, at the Grand for three performances, Dec. 12, 13 and 14, with a company of distinguished English actors The play deals with the lives of two families through three generations, and you see the romantic young folks of the first act develop into maturity and finally old age, while with each successive generation other young people carry on the spirit of romance that pervades the entire story. You get a view of the days of crinolines and candle, of the days of "basques" and gaslight, and finally of the up-to-date gowns in the age of electricity. There is much of historical interest, besides the beautiful love stories that are woven into this charming dramatic fabric by those two masters of modern literature—Bennett and Knoblauch.

Two fine little 6-year-olds are playing important parts in the two biggest theatrical productions of the year. On the road, little Tom Harris is making a strong appeal as the baby Boris in "The Garden of Allah," last season's Century Theatre production, and at the Century Theatre, New York, young Norris Millington is nightly appearing as the Emperor of China in "The Daughter of Heaven," the Pierre Loti $100,000 spectacle, which is filling that great playhouse. Master Tom Harris began his career of captivating with Miss Dorothy Donnelly, who plays Domini in "The Garden of Allah." Then he captivated the audience and the critics. After that, the Berber tribe, which lends additional color to the Hichens drama, fell in line, the compatriots of Rais Uli, the bandit, have made few intimates in this country, but the sunny-tempered little Tom won them at last, and after their capitulation, they couldn't do enough to show their affection for him. A dispatch from "The Garden of Allah" today announced that Tom had been adopted into the tribe, with appropriate "mysterious rites and ceremonies." At performances of "The Daughter of Heaven," Master Millington is the object of so much feminine admiration there is danger of his losing his head. Already he has lost his heart several times, once when Miss Viola Allen took him riding in her motor car, again when Mrs. Alexander Salvini brought him chocolates, and likewise at a tea party given in his honor by the Misses Ruth Rose, Miriam Collins and Rosina Henley. Master Millington will submit to interviewing if properly approached, but he would much rather proceed, uninterrupted, with his art. For example:

"What are you going to be when you grow up?"

"A great actor"—then, "All right, Mr. Ford, I enter now, do I not?"

"And how do you like acting?"

"I love it. Excuse me, that is my cue—I must not keep Mr. Gill waiting. Good-bye."

Last season Norris was Peter the child in "Passers-By." This year he is the Emperor of China—but just a little, happy-faced boy, for all that.

BERNARD DALY, in his new Irish musical comedy, "Dion O'Dare," at the Grand next Thursday and Friday nights.

Lewis F. Bostelmann, the author of "Rutland," a book which aims to prove that Roger Manners, the first Earl of Rutland, was the author of the Shakespeare plays, has requested E. H. Sothern to head a committee "to examine and pass upon new and convincing documentary evidence" going to prove his theory. Mr. Sothern has consented to form a committee of prominent professional people for this purpose. Mr. Bostelmann, whose office is in the Park Row Building, New York, has devoted the past twenty years to this study, and has written two books on the subject. He lately returned from England, where he secured the important documentary evidence in question. Mr. Sothern disclaims being an advocate of the Rutland theory, and, despite his strong leaning towards the Shakespearean side of the question, is not adverse to examining any new evidence which might dethrone the Bard of Avon.

Mr. Sam Bernard has scored a great success in his new musical comedy, "All For the Ladies," which opened last week at the Alvin Theatre, Pittsburg. He will be in New York for his regular metropolitan season just as soon as a theatre becomes available for his use.

Miss Jose Collins, who is singing the title role of "The Merry Countess" at the Casino Theatre, New York, recently received a very flattering offer to appear in grand opera. Miss Collins, however, feels that her natural forte is light opera, and considers that, with a growth of popular interest in good music, any reasonable artistic ambition can be satisfied in such productions.

The "All-Star" Gilbert and Sullivan revival company, which is incomparably the most successful musical company on tour this year, is now at the Shubert Theatre, Kansas City.

One of the New York dramatic critics is authority for the statement that there have already been 61 new, first-class productions in the metropolis this season. Throughout all last year there were only eighty-four productions of this class. This statement, from a careful observer, is startling and shows the rate at which theatrical productions are now being multiplied.

The Dolly Sisters, who do sensational dancing in "The Merry Countess" at the Casino Theatre, New York, announce their determination to separate after the termination of their joint engagement in this piece. These twins are Hungarians by birth, and have been in America only about five years. They scored their first success in "The Midnight Sons" and have since then obtained startling popularity. They both have learned to sing and to speak English fluently and they feel that it would be better in the future for them to work independently and become real musical comedy artists rather than to continue as a "dancing team."

The no-encore rule established at the Winter Garden, New York, earlier in the season will continue in force for the engagement of Miss Gertrude Hoffman and "Broadway To Paris," which opened last Wednesday night. The musical director has been instructed to ignore the demand for repetitions, and even bows will come under the ban. The performance will begin at 8 o'clock. Max Hoffman will conduct.

The Messrs. Shubert announce that they have combined two of the great Winter Garden organizations now on tour—Gaby Deslys in "Vera Violetta" and "The Whirl of Society" with Al Jolson—making the most stupendous musical attraction ever sent "on the road." Not satisfied with presenting at the head of one company the most noted and high-salaried musical artist in the world today, the management insisted upon surrounding her with the best talent at its disposal for the purpose of establishing an attraction which should be absolutely without a rival, and which should spread the fame of the Winter Garden throughout the land. "The Whirl of Society" tour has been discontinued, and this production has been merged with "Vera Violetta." Gaby Deslys is, of course, at the head of the combined organization, with Al Jolson second in importance, and supported by a cast of all the leading players from both companies, including Ada Lewis, Melville Ellis, Fanny Brice and other favorites.

The idea that thirteen is an unlucky number should be dispelled by the success of "The Red Petticoat" at Daly's Theatre, New York, under the management of the Messrs. Shubert. "The Red Petticoat" to begin with, opened at Daly's Theatre in New York on the 13th day of November. In the second place, after the first performance 13 sheets of music were sold in the lobby. Thirdly, there were 13 curtain calls after the different acts during the evening. Moreover, Helen Lowell, who is the "featured" player, says that 13 is her lucky number, and that she was 13 years of age when she made her debut in the chorus of "Olivette" at the old Sans Souci Opera House in Providence, R. I.

FOR SALE—A SHOTGUN, CHEAP, NO further use for it. Apply Grace George, Royal Alexandra Theatre.

This was a little ad that Miss Grace George might have inserted in the Toronto papers after Monday night, but she probably didn't think the gun worth the price of the ad, says the Toronto Star.

As her new play, "Carnival," ended on the first night, Grace George, as the heroine, was shot by her stage husband.

MALCOLM CHERRY, as John Rhead in "Milestones," as he appears in 1860, 1885 and 1912 at the Grand, Dec. 12, 13, 14.

The shock of the killing by the insanely jealous husband was too brutally blunt for the nerves of the audience, and Miss George and her husband-manager, Wm. A. Brady, decided to take the advice of a local critic and change the climax. Accordingly the shooting was cut, and a far more effective and pathetic climax was secured by the simple device of the heroine taking her little baby out of the cradle and, candle in hand, carrying the child up the dark and gloomy old staircase of the Cornish home, after sending her pleading lover out into the night. This quiet renunciation of the joys of her old gay London life, and her grim, heartbreaking decision to remain with her brutal and fanatic husband had in it a touch of tragedy more intense than the strongest shooting scene ever staged. The changes in the play made the rewriting of much of the third and fourth acts necessary. Whether "Carnival" lives as a play or not, it has revealed Miss George's dramatic power most effectively.

Also—we regret to report after quoting Mr. George C. Tyler a week ago in praise of Toronto audiences as compared with New Yorkers—the audiences who saw "Carnival" failed to recognize pathos, and laughed in the wrong places.

A Seven-Minute Sermon On the Golden Text

[Copyright by E. S. Davidson.]

Dec. 1, 1912.

And Jesus said unto him, If thou canst! All things are possible to him that believeth.—Mark, ix., 23.

The FAITH FACULTY.

I. Every man Has the Faith Faculty.—Our text occurs in connection with the story of a father who brought his lunatic boy to Jesus to be cured. The poor fellow was possessed with an evil spirit of a violent nature. The disciples had tried to cure him, but had failed, but the father in his great anxiety brought him direct to Jesus; it was then that the Master said to the father, "If thou canst! All things are possible to him that believeth." Jesus knew that faith was possible for this man in common with every other man. Faith in God when a man is in a condition of innocence, is perfectly natural. Little children have absolute faith in their parents until they find their faith has been misplaced. Children also have faith in God and trust, or depend upon him in a very beautiful way.

All men have the faith faculty no matter what condition that faculty may be in. It may be dormant or undeveloped, or it may have been weakened by the man's own actions, bt the potential power to believe or to trust in God is inherent in every man. We are commanded to have faith in God, we are expected to believe in His word, we are required to trust in Him for our needs in time and for our salvation in eternity. Neither God nor Jesus would appeal to that which did not exist.

II. Wrongdoing Destroys Faith.—It was after Adam had sinned that he mistrusted God and went and hid himself before he ate of the forbidden fruit he had perfect faith in God. "Conscience makes cowards of us all" in more ways than one; it not only makes us afraid of our circumstances, and cuts the nerve of our courage, but it makes us doubt God. It is impossible to have faith in the Unseen for the answer to our prayers, or to have confidence concerning our future, when we know that we are living in rebellion against God. Sin blurs the spiritual vision when it does not absolutely destroy it. Those who are in complete rebellion against God cannot exercise any faith. Their only happiness is in blotting the Divine Being out of their thoughts; in thinking that there is no God; in doubting the story of revelation, as contained in the Bible, or in the experience which they may have had of God's voice in their own souls, during the times when they have been living in more or less obedience to Him.

It is quite unthinkable that a man can be a great sinner and have great faith at the same time. The men of faith have always been righteous, and the reason why today so few of us have great faith is because we are not living in perfect obedience to the will of the Heavenly Father.

III. Faith Always Rises to the Level of Our Obedience.—It is a common expression that "our experience cannot rise higher than our faith," and although this is not true in every instance, I think it is true that our faith never exceeds the measure of our obedience. If you will think of "Abraham, the father of the faithful," and the select list of great men in the Bible who were distinguished for their faith, you will see that they were also distinguished for their obedience. There are some powers, both of heart and mind, which are possessed by sinners as well as saint, but faith can only be fully exercised by those who are living in perfect obedience to God. Obedience is, through the power promised by God, possible for all. The Lord only commands that which He gives us power to perform, and it therefore depends upon our own will and effort whether we are obedient to Him or not. We can be true to our duty, and if by prayer and holy effort, day by day, with humble dependence upon God, we earnestly strive, we may succeed in doing the will of God upon the earth, as the angels do it in heaven. When this is accomplished, faith is as easy as breathing. Then, when we pray, we believe we receive what we ask of Him. There is no need to try to have faith, for it comes without the asking when we are living right with God.

IV. Faith Is Mighty.—Jesus states in the text that "all things are possible to him that believeth," and it is no exaggeration. Living in close touch with the Heavenly Father, we find that our desires are formed and controlled by Him, and all our prayers are inspired by the Holy Spirit; therefore we only pray, or ask God to do that which ought to be done, and which God is willing to do, and such prayers are always answered. The reason the disciples could not cast out the evil spirit in the young lad was, of course, because they were not fully spiritual. They were not living in sufficiently close touch with God, nor as sensitive to His will, as it was their privilege to be, and as a result, in the great emergency, their faith failed them. If we desire to be men of great faith, it can only be accomplished by an utter consecration of ourselves to the will and plans of God. We must do His will in all things; be men of prayer, and lay up our treasure in heaven, and not on the earth.

First of Three Articles on Care of Winter Babe. Column For Little Folks.

WHAT EVERY WOMAN WANTS TO KNOW

London Ladies Present at National Council Meeting. Playgrounds in Ontario.

WINTERING YOUR BABY—HOW TO DRESS IT

Noted American Nurse Tells What an Infant Should Wear, Day and Night, To Be Happy and Healthy in Cold Weather.

Editor's Note.—Elsie L. Burks achieved her expert knowledge of baby care ,and her fame as a nurse, in the great St. Luke's Hospital, New York, where she used her talents as head of the training school for nurses. She is particularly qualified to tell mothers how to care for their babies, and at this very moment is herself personally directing the care of 150 infants in the Children's Memorial Hospital, Chicago. This is the first of three articles:

By Elsie L. Burks.

I believe most mothers make the mistake of dressing their babies too warmly in winter. Great heat is not so much to be desired as sanitary clothing and hygienic conditions.

For the normal baby in winter, a long-sleeved flannel shirt, diapers, a pair of long stockings of wool pinned to the diaper, a flannel petticoat made like a slip without sleeves, and a slip, are all the necessities for day wear.

At night be sure and take off everything that has been worn by the baby in the daytime. A great many mothers do not seem to understand the importance of this. A flannel night dress or one made of flannelette, a diaper and stockings are all that is necessary to put on the baby at night. Many mothers run a string around the bottom of the night dress and draw it together. This is not as healthful as to leave it open and put stockings on the baby. If you are situated so that you can let your baby sleep outdoors put over its ordinary night dress a heavy wrap of eiderdown flannel with a hood that will come well over its head and add mittens for its hands.

If possible have your baby sleep in a separate room, but at least have the temperature as low as 68 at night, with plenty of fresh air, being very careful to keep the draft from blowing directly upon the baby.

For the indoor bedding there should be a quilted tidy over the mattress, and then a sheet, another sheet over the child, and one good, warm blanket. This will be found to be entirely sufficient in a room which grows as cold as 65 degrees at night, provided baby wears a flannel night dress and stockings.

When you bathe your baby in the morning be sure that it has had its feeding at least one hour before. It is a good thing to time its bath so that you will have it bathed and dressed just in time for its next feeding. It will then go to sleep for a couple of hours.

Be very careful when you dress it that there are no drafts. The room should be 70 degrees when you bathe and make its morning toilet.

Frills Don't Bring Any Baby Smiles— It's Comfort That Makes the Son Shine.

Don't use fancy frills upon your baby's dresses; make them of the plainest, softest material, and have enough of them so that you can have a clean, nnstarched outfit every day, if possible. An outfit of eight little slips, perfectly plain, eight flannelette petticoats, eight night dresses, eight flannel shirts and eight pairs of stockings can be purchased for about $7, provided you make the night dresses, petticoats and slips, and these should last the baby until it is old enough to be put into short dresses. If you feel that you cannot go to this expense, get half the number, as it only takes a few minutes to wash them out every day.

Laces, frill and burbelows add nothing to the baby's health and comfort—indeed, they are very discomforting to its tender flesh, no matter how much they please the mother's vanity.

"If you want to make some little dainty wearing apparel, crochet a little hood and jacket to put on baby when it needs a little extra warmth.

When your baby is sleeping do not cover with too many blankets. If you think it is not warm enough, use a hot water bottle or heated brick in the bed.

NATIONAL COUNCIL OF WOMEN HOLD EXECUTIVE MEETING

London Ladies Present in Hamilton—Annual Meeting To Be Held Next May.

Mrs. H. A. Boomer, president of the Local Council of Women, and Mrs. Yarker, the corresponding secretary recently attended a large meeting of the executive committee of the National Council of Women in Hamilton, when some forty-seven delegates from many points in Canada were present to discuss matters of importance to the organization.

The Single Tax Association, which demands that all woman paying taxes should be allowed the franchise, applied for affiliation with the National Council, and after much debate, the executive committee decided to accept their application. Whether this will materially affect the attitude of the council as a whole towards the suffrage question is, as yet, but a matter of surmise.

Many Problems Discussed.

Many problems relative to social and moral reforms were brought before the meeting, and a number of resolutions recommended for presentation to the Dominion Government. A petition will be made asking that a law be passed requiring both contracting parties, before obtaining a marriage license, to present a doctor's certificate of mental and physical fitness. The department of education will be asked to establish night schools throughout the Dominion, where technical training, similar to that now given in the Industrial School here, may be obtained. A recommendation will be made for an increase in the number of factory inspectors, and also that women inspectors be included.

Another important resolution was that the National Council emphasizes the need of provision in the Normal Schools for a course of training for playground supervisors. Heretofore, the supervisors have been engaged from the United States, and it is deemed very necessary that this training may be made possible for Canadian students. Pensions for mothers, the establishment of a Federal Bureau of Health, and efforts for the prevention of tubercular diseases, were also among the subjects discussed.

Annual Meeting in May.

The annual meeting of the National Council of Women will be held in Montreal early in May, one of the most successful conventions in the history of the order is anticipated.

Before their return home from Hamilton, Mrs. Boomer and Mrs. Yarker also visited the Local Council at Brantford, and gave excellent addresses to a large meeting.

Problems of the Fair Sex Solved by Cynthia Grey

[Correspondents are requested to make their inquiries as brief as possible, and to write on one side of the paper only. It is impossible to give replies within a stated time, as all letters have to be answered in turn as they are received. No letters can be answered privately.]

Keep On.

Dear Miss Grey,—I am seventeen years old, and am considered nice looking. Now, I would rather go out with a bunch of girls and have a good time than to go out with a fellow. I am not boy crazy, like some girls. Sometimes my girl friends will say: "Why don't you go out with the boys more"; but I can have just as good a time with a bunch of girls. Now, do you think I ought to change my ways for my own good?

Hoping to see this in print soon, I remain, yours truly, DORABELLE.

A.—Since you are contented with girls' company, I should advise you not to worry about boy friends. As time goes on, no doubt you will add a number to your list if you are pleasant and agreeable. By all means don't start "running after" them.

Pickling Recipe.

Dear Miss Grey—Would you be kind enough to give me a recipe for pickling pig feet, or ask your readers to do so? Thanking you very much for your favor. Yours truly, M. J. T.

A.—Put them in strong brine and leave for one week; then take out and boil in water to remove the brine; then pour vinegar over them, adding bay leaves, allspice and mace.

Kitty's Catechism.

Dear Miss Grey—As I wrote to you before, but never got an answer, I hope to see this soon in print: 1. How can you make your hands white? 2. Is a black dress suitable for a girl of 14 years of age? 3. How long should she wear her dresses? 4. What is the birthstone for the month of October? 5. What do you think of my writing?

KATHLEEN K.

A.—I am sorry your former letter was not answered. I have no recollection of having received it. Perhaps you failed to address it properly. 1. Apply a lotion every night before retiring, rubbing it well into the hands after washing in warm water; then draw on a pair of soft, old gloves. Here is an excellent formula and inexpensive as well: One ounce glycerine, one ounces rosewater, ten drops carbolic, juice of half a lemon.

2. I should prefer some other color, as brown, blue, or dark red, I think.

3. Half-way between the knee and shoe-tops.

4. Opal.

5. It is rather large, but very fair for a girl of your age.

The Groom's Duties.

Dear Miss Grey: What are the duties of a groom to his groomsmen? Does the groom pay for the flowers used by the attendants? Who provides the carriages for bridal party?

COMMERCIAL.

A.—Usually it is the bridegroom's pleasure to send his best man and ushers their ties and gloves, and he may give them a souvenir of the happy occasion in a way of a scarf-pin, sleeve links or studs. This latter attention cannot be classed as a duty. The bridegroom pays for and sends the flowers for the bride and her maids, and he pays for the carriage that takes him and his best man to the church or house where the ceremony is to be performed. All other conveyances are provided by the ones who give the wedding, usually the parents of the bride.

Advice on Dress.

Dear Miss Grey: As I have been reading your column for quite a while and like it so much, as it aids me in many things, I have concluded to write for some help. Do you think a suit of serge, made Norfolk style, would be suitable for a Sunday suit And would you advise black or tan shoes for Sunday wear? from

AN ANXIOUS READER.

A.—Serge suits, especially of blue, are just the thing made Norfolk style and unless the suit happens to be one of the many shades of brown I prefer black shoes, as they are less conspicuous. I am very glad you like the department and find it helpful.

Loves Him Dearly.

Dear Miss Grey: I have been keeping company with a young man two years. We had a quarrel over some simple thing, and he got angry. I love him dearly. WORRIED.

A.—If you provoked the quarrel, apologize. If he was the aggressor, let the apology come from him. But in neither event must you worry. If he is worth loving he will come back voluntarily. And remember this: A laughing face brings a man back quicker than a tear-stained one.

Ink Stains.

Dear Miss Grey: Kindly let me know through your columns when convenient, what will take an ink stain out of a very light tan serge dress without taking the color out of it? Thanking you in advance, I remain, CONSTANT READER.

A.—This will, I fear, be very difficult to remove. I think, however, that to soak the spots in sour milk, or buttermilk, carefully changing the milk as it becomes the least bit discolored, and then rinsing the spot through clear water without soap, should be effective, without injuring the color. Afterwards, press dry with a moderate iron.

The Birthday Calendar

NOVEMBER 30

IF THIS IS YOUR BIRTHDAY

Some illness or accident threatens you, and you are especially cautioned to avoid crowds and be moderate in your attendance on social affairs. Your business will require your best attention.

Those born today will be active and impulsive, and many accidents will be the result. From these they will learn caution, and later in life will be successful. A natural carelessness in everything will be their greatest fault.

DEC 1ST

IF THIS IS YOUR BIRTHDAY

Attend to the things at hand. If this is done well you will have no time for new enterprises. If in employ, your best attention should be given to your own special work.

Those born today will make great progress if well directed. They will have many talents, but will not be able to decide for themselves, what course to take. Their faults will be those of frivolity.

PLAY CENTRES IN THE ONTARIO CITIES

Mrs. F. Y. Miller Describes Them in Recent Article on Supervised Playgrounds.

A most interesting article on "The Supervised Playground," by Mrs. F. Yorke Miller, appears in a recent number of the Canadian White Ribbon Tidings. in reference to the playground movement in Ontario, Mrs. Miller writes as follows:

"Our Governor-General is in hearty sympathy with this movement, and the Capital City opened a well-equipped ground this year. Its success has been so marked that the Ottawa ladies are working hard toward the equipping of a second ground. . . . Belleville, Stratford, Orillia and other places have also opened successful play centres.

"Toronto has taken up the work with a whole-heartedness that is characteristic of the Queen City. One hundred thousand dollars has been used on apparatus, $15,000 of which is being spent this year. This season closed with a play festival in which hundreds of children from eleven playgrounds participated. The workers report that another year will see the work progressing on broader lines, for there is 'much to do.' This 'much to do' embraces 'guilds of play' to instruct young-old little people (whose parents live in mansions on the avenues), who even when gathered into playgrounds are ill at ease because they have never mingled with other children, and do not understand even the rudiments of play. Realizing what an educational factor the moving picture may become, this dear delight of the children is to be added to the equipment, with only strictly supervised films allowed.

"London has successfully launched a playground system. A three-weeks' campaign by Dr. Curtis—probably the greatest expetr on this question—resulted in a "good citizens' day"—when the whole city was canvassed. The houses, not the people, were tagged, and everywhere the green card was to be seen bearing silent testimony to the fact that 'This house is interested in the welfare of the children of London.'

"Those who assisted that day had many amusing, many pathetic and withal many encouraging experiences, all of which sent the workers home with more than ever a faith in the cause. Telephones buzzed busily that evening, and at last 500 workers went to rest, tired, but rejoicing over the final word—$4,000 for the children!"

Burlap Rugs

An ingenious woman who claims to have something new in her method of making rugs says she uses the common feed-bag material. She tells of her work thus: The burlap was washed and pieces dyed in several suitable colors. The threads were pulled from these and wound in balls, each color to itself. Then a piece of burlap the desired size of the rug is hemmed with a small hem. It should be dyed the leading color in the rug. A frame is used consisting of four pieces of wood the desired length and only wide enough to make them strong. The colored threads of burlap are then pulled through with a large hook of bone or well-seasoned wood. The work is done the same as when making them of rags, but these are far superior and wear much longer. Any number of threads may be pulled through together; two or three make a very nice rug. The beauty of these rugs is in being able to blend the colors well. The blending of green, red, brown and tan worked in Oriental design makes a good seller. These rugs bring good prices because of their wearing so long, and they are something new. It is nearly all clear money except the price of the dye.

A TRICK OF FASHION.

A new trick of fashion merges the waist and skirt into each other in all sorts of unique ways. Perhaps it is that the blouse opens diagonally from the shoulders, when its line at the waist is taken up and carried on by the beginning line of the tunic; or, possibly it is by a small, triangular piece of embroidery, one of whose edges continues the line of the blouse, that tunic and blouse are connected. Surpliced bodices, top surpliced tunics, and a great deal along this line is done with the tunic that is made to appear at the same time to be a peplum or skirt belonging to the blouse; or contrarily, with the skirted blouse that is so arranged that it is difficult to distinguish whether it is really an adjunct of the blouse or the top portion of the tunic.

NEW USE FOR OLD THINGS.

Empty spools and the flat tin disks that are frequently to be found as extra inside covers to lard pails, make the finest sort of covers for small stewpans if a little cleverness is used for bringing the two together. The spool is sawed in half and is attached by a nail or a screw to the disk. The end of the nail or screw is flattened on the underside of the disk, and the cover is made. Being equipped with a wooden handle it will not be too hot to remove at any time.

THE DAY'S WORK

The day's work counts—
It isn't what
You mean to do a week ahead;
It isn't what you know you'll gain
When all annoyances have fled,
It isn't what you dreamed and planned—
Such hopes are but a phantom band—
The day's work counts.

The day's work counts—
The foot you gained
Since yonder sun dispelled the dark,
Next week, next month, next year are vain,
Unto the present summons hark;
How have you fared ahead since morn
In garnering life's oil and corn?
The day's work counts.

The day's work counts—
It isn't much,
The gain of those few painful hours
The content of there is shown
Some product of those sacred powers
Which guide each mind, uphold each hand,
Strive with the best at your command—
The day's work counts.

A "CHAIR OF SMILING"

A professor in one of the western universities has suggested a Chair of Smiling and a course in Good Fellowship.

We have courses in decorum and courses in composure and courses in the direction of energy.

Then what reason is there against inaugurating a course in optimism? Why shouldn't our young people be taught to think along the path of sunshine; to look for the brightness in life in a scientific, methodical way?

Too much of the present-day learning is inclined to make gloomy people of us. Smiling, which is a sort of a banner of optimism, has too long been the uncertain matter of temperament instead of a reliable habit of life.

As a rule the majority of persons are attracted to others who smile easily. These SMILERS succeed in business so that success is often said to be the cause of their smiling when perhaps it is the opposite which is true.

They seem to radiate happiness and opulence and we say their paths lie in pleasant places.

But, maybe, they lighted the paths with their own smiles first.

There must be a way in which thought can be brushed up with light touches. Athletics teach the man to control his temper, the gymnasium limbers up his muscles; a course in ethics sets his face toward the moral standard. There surely is a place for a course in smiling.

And there is no reason why it should not come into the medical department, for smiles make light hearts, light hearts aid digestion and digestion is the root of health.

"Mother's Man"

Some day when mother dresses me
She puts my rompers on,
Of course I have to romp an' play,

But sometimes if I coax her to,
An' coax as hard's I can,
She puts my overalls on me,
I get my workin' cap, an' see
How I can help—there's lots to do;
An' then I'm "Mother's Man."

The Stone in the Road

A long time ago there lived a king who took great pleasure in teaching his people good habits. "Bad luck comes only to the lazy and the careless," said he; "but to the busy workers God gives the good things of this life."

One night he put a large stone in the middle of the road near his palace, and then watched to see what the people who passed that way would do, says the Southern Presbyterian.

Early in the morning a sturdy old farmer named Peter came along with his heavy ox-car loaded with corn.

"Oh, these lazy people!" he cried, driving his oxen to one side of the road. "Here is this big stone right in the middle of the road, and nobody will take the trouble to move it."

And he went on his way, scolding about the laziness of other people, but never thinking of touching the stone himself.

Then came a young soldier, singing a merry song as he walked along. A gay feather was stuck in his hat, and a big sword hung at his side; and he was fond of telling great stories of what he had done in the war. He held his head so high that he did not see the stone, but stumbled over it and fell flat into the dust. This put an end to his merry song, and as he rose to his feet he began to storm at the country people.

"Silly drones!" he said, "to have no more sense than to leave a stone like that in the middle of the road?"

Then he passed on, but he did not sing any more.

An hour later there came down the road six merchants, with their goods on pack horses, going to the fair that was to be held near the village. When they reached the stone the road was so narrow that they could hardly drive their horses between it and the wall.

"Did anyone ever see the like?" they said. "There is that big stone in the road, and not a man in all the country but that is too lazy to move it!"

And so the stone lay there for three weeks; but it was in everybody's way, and yet everybody left it for somebody else to move.

Then the king sent word to all his people to meet together on a certain day near his palace, as he had something to tell them.

The day came, and a great crowd of men and woman gathered in the road.

Old Peter, the farmer, was there; and so were the merchants and the young soldier.

"I hope that the king will find out what a lazy set of people he has around him," said Peter.

And then the sound of a horn was heard, and the king was seen coming toward them. He rode up to the stone, got down from his horse, and said:

"My friends, it was I who put this stone here, three weeks ago. It has been seen by every one of you; and yet everyone has left it just where it was, and he scolded his neighbor for not moving it out of the way."

Then he stooped down and rolled the stone over. Underneath the stone was a round, hollow place, in which was a small iron box. The king held up the box so that all the people might see what was written on a piece of paper fastened to it. These were the words:

"For him who lifts the stone."

He opened the box, turned it upside down, and out of it fell a beautiful gold ring and 20 bright gold coins.

Then everyone wished that he had only thought of moving the stone instead of going around it and finding fault with his neighbor.

There are many people still who lose prizes because they think it easier to find fault than to do the work which lies before them. Such people do not usually blame themselves, but think it is all on account of bad luck and hard times.

Literary Notes From The British Metropolis

[From the New York Evening Post.]

The best bit of literary news for a long while is the appointment of Sir Arthur Quiller-Couch, whom novel-readers know as "Q," to be professor of English literature at Cambridge. The choice, as the Manchester Guardian puts it, is "quite exhilaratingly wise." "At least three or four men could have been found," says that paper, "any one of whom would have filled the chair with distinction. But 'Q' will do even better than that. He is an artist in letters, and yet he can say how the thing is done." He is "one of the rare writers who have both excellence in writing and zest in making plain the ways of the workshop."

In his Oxford days Quiller-Couch distinguished himself sufficiently as a scholar to be appointed classical lecturer at his own college, Trinity, as soon as he took his degree. In the vacations of that period he wrote "Dead Man's Rock," and this discovery of what he could do led him to adopt the literary calling in preference to the career of a don. At first he combined the writing of fiction with journalism of a scholarly type. For several years he was assistant editor of the Speaker, a now extinct periodical, which was started in the late eighties as a rival to the Spectator. Every week he used to contribute a short story, or a descriptive sketch, or a literary causerie. As soon as his books began to give him a name, he turned his back on London and retired to work quietly in the "delectable duchy" of Cornwall.

Professorial lectures at Cambridge are not largely attended unless they bear directly on Tripos subjects, but "Q" will doubtless draw as large a crowd as Ruskin did at Oxford, when, as professor of fine art, he delivered those fascinating discourses on any topic that happened to be uppermost in his mind.

Future of Poetry.

Not long ago, Edmund Gosse issued a rather despondent forecast of the future of poetry. As far as the English language is concerned, he said in effect, everything that can be poetically expressed has already been said. But Mr. Gosse is now sixty-three years of age, and has, therefore, reached a time of life that is prone to pessimism. Alfred Noyes, who is only thirty-two, finds the outlook brighter. In his opinion, the writer of poetry is discovering a new public, and it is a splendid public to write for. "Some kinds of prose," he says, "are getting so easy to write that people will get tired of reading it, and will begin to demand something that has cost the writer an effort. There is a real relief in turning to two or three pages of carefully-written prose." He thinks it significant that during the last two or three years some of the magazines have taken to publishing long poems. His own "Drake" first appeared serially in twenty-two numbers of Blackwood, and his "Tales of the Mermaid Tavern," an Elizabethan epic on which he is now working, will also be first printed in a magazine. Mr. Noyes, whose wife is a daughter of a late colonel in the United States army, is to visit America next February, when he will read papers at various peace society meetings. It will be remembered that he showed his interest in the peace movement by a poem he wrote in honor of President's Taft's proposals for international arbitration.

A Popular Weekly.

The most popular of English literary publications, T. P.'s Weekly, celebrated last week its tenth birthday. Its success is largely due to the ability of its successive managing editors, Wilfrid Whitten ("John o' London") and Holbrook Jackson, but above all to the rare journalistic gifts of its founder and editor-in-chief, T. P. O'Connor, M. P. Mr. O'Connor justly takes to himself the credit of having been one of the pioneers of a new fashion of reviewing in the English press. But the idea, he admits, came to him from America. When he was in New York in 1881 he was struck by the "lengthy and brilliant book review" contributed to the Sunday edition of the Sun by the late Mayo W. Hazeltine (whose name, with characteristic inaccuracy, Mr. O'Connor misspells as Haseltine). It seemed to him a great advance on the snippety notices that were given to books in English publications at that time, and it confirmed his own belief that the reader of a review should be told what the author said before he was asked to accept the critic's opinion about him. The idea was encouraged by the interest that was aroused by W. T. Stead's reviews, much after the same type, in the Pall Mall Gazette.

When "T. P." acquired control of a daily paper of his own, the Star, he followed up the suggestion to the satisfaction of his readers. Later, when he started the Sunday Sun, he made "The Book of the Week" a standing headline on the front page. It has held the same position in T. P.'s Weekly from the first. As generally happens in the history of journalistic ventures, most of his friends threw cold water on his proposal to found a paper which should make such reviews a prominent feature. It was not until the idea had haunted him for several years that he found some one willing to back the idea with financial support.

New Weekly.

A new two-cent literary weekly was started last month by J. M. Dent, the enterprising publisher, to whom we are indebted for the Temple Shakespeare, Everyman's Library, and several other series that combine high quality with an attractive get-up and low prices. The new venture is called Everyman. Mr. Dent has placed the editorship in the hands of Dr. Charles Sarolea, a Belgian scholar, who has become acclimatized in Edinburgh, where he is at the head of the romance department in the University, and edits Messrs. Nelson's remarkable collection of reprints of the French classics. Dr. Sarolea is a great book-lover, and has a private foreign library of 50,000 volumes. But he is anything but a bookworm. He is said to have known every notable man in Europe for the last twenty years. At any rate he has travelled widely, and has visited even such out-of-the-way places as the Caucasus, which has not yet got into the programs of Cook's tours. From the three numbers of Everyman already issued, one may predict that, in spite of its title, it will not reach so wide a public as T. P.'s Weekly. It appeals to the student rather than to the general reader, and emphasizes less that personal element which is always conspicuous in anything written or inspired by "T. P."

A Careless Critic.

To this generalization one exception must be made. The first number contained an article entitled "The Literary Confessions of Mr. Arnold Bennett." It was based on an anonymous autobiography, "The Truth About an Author," written by the now famous novelist several years ago. The critic, guessing a little too carelessly, declared that this book had been deliberately suppressed by its author. He went on to say, still trusting too much to his own conjectures, that Arnold Bennett had suppressed it because it was "an absolutely unveiled, irresponsible, and not always edifying confession." Nowadays he had a dignity to sustain, and he naturally preferred to divert attention from the indiscretions of his youth. The critic pointed especially to the following passage of the autobiography: "My aim in writing plays, whether alone or in collaboration, has always been strictly commercial. I wanted money in heaps, and I wanted advertisements for my books." From which the critic drew the conclusion that "on his own admission the author of 'Milestones' writes mainly to make money and to win the kind of fame which is convertible into hard cash."

Arnold Bennett's reply, published in last week's issue, should be a warning against too confident criticism of this type. First of all, he denies that he ever suppressed the autobiography. It was "remaindered" years ago by the publishers, who now probably regret their rash act as much as he always did. (I purchased my own copy, by the way, at a remainder sale for sixpence.) He has reissued it in America, and for years past he has included it in the list of his works which appears at the beginning of all his books. But in England it is controlled by his publishers, and unfortunately, he has not been able to inspire them with his own enthusiasm for "a very honest piece of work, of which I shall never be ashamed."

Then, as to the charge of commercialism. The basis of the accusation is that "in 1901, when I was poor and needed an advertisement for my realistic novels, I spent, on my own confession printed at that time, a trifling portion of my leisure in writing plays for money and notoriety." They were the best plays, he notes in passing, that he could then write. But he denounces it as a libel to assert, on the strength of this candor, that in 1911, when he had a great deal of money (for an artist) and more than enough notoriety, he must have written "Milestones" from the same motives. Mr. Bennett adds that, though he has not suppressed his early plays, none of which has ever been performed. He has been told by palned experts in these markets that in suppressing them he has incidentally suppressed, at a moderate computation, some £40,000 ($200,000).

S. R. Crockett's Library.

It has come out lately that S. R. Crockett's library is larger even than Dr. Sarolea's. There was a sale the other day, at one of the leading book auction marts, of what was announced as Mr. Crockett's library, and some surprise was expressed that he should be getting rid of his books. Thereupon he let it be known that he was not selling his library, nor the hundredth part of it. It is his custom every year or two to sell off books, especially long sets, in which he has lost interest, in order to make room for newer acquisitions. He cannot house comfortable more than 30,000 volumes, and he still has more than 40,000 to provide shelf-room for.

Woman Betrays Nation to Avenge Her Scorned Love and She Is Shot as a Spy

She Walked Proudly to Her Doom Beside the Open Coffin—Then "Fire!" and She Fell, Riddled.

[Special Correspondence to The Advertiser.]

Sofia, Bulgaria, Nov. 22.—A beautiful and wealthy young woman, the divorced wife of a Bulgarian army officer now fighting at the front, has been shot here as a spy and traitor against her native land.

Two Macedonians implicated with her died the same hour. The trio were led to three waiting coffins, blindfolded and tied.

A body of soldiers marched into the prison yard and faced the condemned spies. At the order, "Fire!" the woman and the men fell over, riddled with bullets.

So Bulgaria punishes spies. The woman was Mme. Helene Kovoff, former wife of Lieut. Kovoff, a hero of Kirk Kilisse. Mme. Kovoff became a spy and a traitor in a mad effort to avenge herself upon the man who had cast her off. Love, wealth and happiness were hers until a few months ago. Her mother is a rich widow. Her husband was a dashing, handsome army officer. They lived in a beautiful home on the main street of Sofia, a residence owned by the young woman. Both were social favorites and often entertained the small group of select society folks of the capital.

Then the other woman appeared — a Russian woman of wonderful alluring beauty. Rumors came to Mme. Kovoff's ears. The slighted wife tried to bring her recreant husband back to her, through jealousy. Covertly at first, then openly, she flirted with an attache of a foreign legation in Sofia.

Doors that still opened to her husband, despite his notorious infatuation for the Russian, closed to the young wife when gossip said she was too interested in the attache.

Her husband appeared at their home one evening while his wife's friend was there, and, although the mother was in the room with the young couple, he bitterly accused his wife of unfaithfulness and left her.

Suit for divorce was immediately brought by Lieut. Kovoff, and strangely enough was decided in his favor. Then he openly wooed the Russian. For weeks the cast-off, misunderstood wife secluded herself.

Then came the war against the Turk. Lieut. Kovoff went gladly to the front. His divorced wife emerged from her shelter and seemingly renewed her interest in life. But she had decided to take a horrible revenge on her former husband, and on the country, her native land, that had crushed her while cheering her ex-husband. She had decided to betray both; to give to her husband's and her country's enemies the military secrets confided to her during the days when she was still a happy wife and met the leading military men of Bulgaria.

One day Mme. Kovoff told a woman friend that she was going to Vienna. This friend saw her at the railway station, getting on a train for Constantinople. She made some remarks which were reported to the police, and the young woman was watched when she returned. It was found that she was in communication with two Macedonians, also under suspicion. All were arrested.

Proofs, it is said, were found in her house of her complicity with spies, and that not only had she disclosed what she already knew to Turkish officials, but had agreed to keep them posted as to future events and plans.

At the courtmartial she refused to talk, beyond exclaiming in dramatic fashion:

"My country's laws have taken away my happiness in life, they may as well take the empty shell!"

She walked boldly, fearlessly, to the death yard. Her body was disposed of secretly, as the Government always does with spies' and traitors' bodies, although the widowed mother begged piteously that she might bury it by the side of the young woman's father.

WHAT HAS PRESIDENT-ELECT WOODROW WILSON GOT IN HIS HEAD

Jessie A. Fowler, World's Greatest Phrenologist, Personally Examines the Winning Candidate's Bumps.

By Jessie A. Fowler.

President-Elect Wilson, I find, is a peer among his fellows for organizing ability and power to direct and block out work.

He is essentially a man of thought and reflection, and secondly a man of action, but action is always preceded by his thought.

TEMPERAMENT—Governor Wilson is largely of the mental-motive type; which enables him to use his brain with less fatigue than the average man. He can keep up his nervous energy by conserving his strength; and accomplish as much in a quiet way as those persons who exercise great vehemence.

He will need to guard against his tendency to take on too great a variety of work without allowing himself time for food or rest. His temparament will not incline him to take much leisure. Were his features more filled out and his body more rotund, such might be the case. Personally it might be an advantage to him to add ten or fifteen pounds weight by indulging in more leisure. The activity of his brain absorbs a large portion of his circulation, and his nutritive system is not so much to the fore as I would like to see.

He is wiry, and possesses unusual grit; hence his muscular system and substantial framework are sustained, and he shows much tenacity of mind and body.

His height and distinct outline of features denote the motive temperament which accompanies the energetic, executive, perceptive, fact-gathering and scientific faculties.

He is eager for knowledge. A smattering of any subject will not satisfy him. He goes to the root of any question he studies.

REASONING CHARACTER — He reasons about his work in a philosophic way, and the faculty of causality gives him capacity to reason from cause to effect. When he has gathered matter for future use he then shows originality in putting his ideas together.

PERCEPTIVE CHARACTER — His perceptive trend of mind gives him a wonderful memory of events and enables him to keep in his mind's eye facts and minutiae concerning what is taking place around him. This must have aided him much when writing his history.

ANALYTICAL CHARACTER—When examining Woodrow Wilson's head, I remarked that one of the chief sources of his intellectual power came from his phenomenal analytical faculty, which enables him to remember, classify and compare historical events. He admitted that it was a pleasure to him to dip down deep into the comparisons of things, and classify data on all important subjects. He knows how, through this faculty, to analyze a subject with great force and clearness.

ANIMAL TENDENCIES SMALL — He is not a man to be carried away by his appetites or passions. The basilar part of his brain shows this very distinctly. He has a remarkable control over this part of his nature. Mr. Wilson will enjoy a visit with some intellectual giant more than the finest dinner the chef of the White House can prepare.

He shows his control of mind in his cool, collected, matter-of-fact and business-like way of interpreting ideas and of sizing up a situation. Few men have better mental equipment for diagnosing facts.

INTUITIVE CHARACTER—Governor Wilson is quite intuitive in his perception of character, but he may not always trust to his intuitions. This was one characteristic that I mentioned when talking with him, and he seemed quite impressed with this interpretation. When he makes an analysis of his own mind he finds that he goes back to his first impressions almost invariably and allows these to guide his conduct.

His sympathies are quite strongly represented through his large organ of benevolence. Although he does not alter his views simply to agree with people, he is liberal-minded enough to make allowances for a wide latitude of other men's minds.

I was struck with his large veneration, which makes him a believer in constitutional policies, and while he is progressive up to a certain point, through large sympathy for important issues, his veneration will not allow him to give up any constitutional policy that he believes in. Neither will it allow him to use language that is undignified and calculated simply to cater to the public taste.

INDEPENDENT CHARACTER — The crown of his head indicates that he has an independent spirit, is manly, rather dignified, persevering in his work, knowing how to overcome impediments. He is respectful, deferential and courteous to others. He is not easily carried away by artificial hopes, nor does he build air castles. He dislikes flattery.

He has not a business type of head nor a large development of acquisitiveness.

WHAT KIND OF PRESIDENT?—He will make a thoughtful, dignified and considerate president, not one to yield to persuasions, yet desirous of being sufficiently popular to carry out reforms that he thinks necessary. What failures he may make will not be through lack of thought, but rather incapacity to carry out his plans.

He will be known for his fact-gathering faculties, for his forcible and convincing oratory, his practical arguments, his philosophical reasoning, his organizing ability, his availability of mind and adaptability of thought.

QUEEN GATHERS GIFTS FOR POOR OF LONDON

British Sovereign and Women of Court Prepare Clothing to Give Away.

Queen Mary is just now having one of the busiest and happiest times in her life. She is engaged with her ladies-in-waiting in arranging the annual gifts to the poor which she and her friends will distribute at Christmas. Nearly every day the Queen is at the imperial institute, where she changes her furs for a business-like apron and starts ripping up the packages which have arrived over night.

Fewer Misfits Found.

She has been pleased to find that there are fewer misfits among the clothes this year than usual. Many well-intentioned persons who cut out garments and make them up at home have little idea as to size and will often make a petticoat for a char-woman sufficiently long for a glantess of seven feet, but with a waist of eighteen inches. It amuses the Queen to see her maids of honor trying on with as much pleasure as if they were buying their own millinery the serviceable black headgear sent in for distribution among poor clerks or governesses. At the end of this month there will be an exhibition of the gifts and then will come the distribution.

The King and Queen have now decided to spend Christmas at York Cottage and not at Windsor, having been influenced in this decision by the fact that Queen Alexandra will be at Sandringham, and the King and Queen desire to be near her at that season.

To Spend Time Quietly.

There will be no special party at York Cottage during the holidays, but it is hoped the health of the princess royal will be sufficiently improved to enable her to spend Christmas in this country. Should this be so, her royal highness and her daughters will stay with Queen Alexandra at Sandringham.

The King will attend one or two of the meets of the West Norfolk hounds, and it is probable that the Prince of Wales will then follow the hounds for the first time. Early in the new year court is to be transferred to Windsor, where two large parties are to be entertained for the finish of the shooting season. The court season in London will begin in the early part of February, and two courts will be held at Buckingham Palace during that month.

Plans "Shopping at Homes."

Princess Christian, the president of the Royal Society of Art Needlework, has organized a series of shopping "at homes" to be held in the school galleries every Wednesday throughout the Christmas season and will be assisted by the Duchess of Wellington, Lady Glenconner and Lady Amherst of Hackney.

The Prince of Wales in enjoying Oxford. Not only his studies, but the sports engross him. So much is evident from the various reports as to his popularity which have filtered through from the old varsity town to the outer world. Everyone at Oxford is glad to see how the Prince is enjoying the life of an ordinary undergraduate. In sport he is especially prominent. He rides regularly, generally in the company of Major Cadogan, and of other undergraduates, in Nuneham Park.

Prince Plays Football.

Considering his light weight, he is a good football player, and at the association game has played five times for the second eleven at Magdalen and three times for the first eleven. But it is, of course, at long-distance running that he is most likely to make his mark than at anything else, and after his experience at Dartmouth Hills he has had no trouble at all in holding a good place with the beagles whenever he has been out with them. The Field goes as far as to say that "if he continued to show his present form and were able to find the time to train, we might not have to look much further for a first-rate English representative in Berlin."

Gentlemen: In July 1905 I was thrown from a road machine, injuring my hip and back badly and was obliged to use a crutch for 14 months. In Sept. 1906 Mr. Wm. A CHARACTER STUDY OF FERDINAND OF BULGARIA THE KING OF MELODRAMA

[By A. G. Gardiner, Editor of the London Daily News and Leader.]

In a house in Sofia, I have been told, there is a dead hand, preserved not as a relic but as a reminder. The house is the old home of the murdered Stambuloff, the hand is the hand of that rough-hewn patriot himself. One day the hand is to be buried. The day will be that on which Stambuloff's murder is avenged. It is an uncomfortable reflection for King Ferdinand.

And yet to live under the shadow of a dead hand seems the perfectly fitting destiny of Ferdinand, for he is the king of melodrama. Those people who suppose that melodrama is not true to life have not studied his story or his character. Both are Transpontine. He is the very stuff of which the dreams of the playwright and the romancist are composed. There are times indeed when you almost doubt whether he was not invented by Dumas or Stevenson or Mr. Anthony Hope; you seem to see the movement of the wires and the face of the author between the wings enjoying the success of his triumphant creation. When the curtain goes down the author will surely appear and thank you for your kind reception of the child of his invention.

As a matter of fact King Ferdinand was invented by his mother. It used to be said that Princess Clementine was the cleverest woman in Europe. This only meant that she was a very skilful and ambitious intriguer. The daughter of King Louis Philippe and the widow of Prince Augustus of Saxe-Colbourg-Gotha, she felt that her youngest and favorite child had a special claim upon Providence. She resolved that he should be a king by hook or by crook. Moreover, she had the assurance of a gipsy that he was destined like Macbeth for a throne, and Princess Clementine was not a person to bandy words with a gipsy. She took the practical course, and prepared her son, from the cradle, for the career marked out for him. He was whisked from capital to capital, habituated to the company of princes, indoctrinated with the diplomatic subtleties of "The Prince," taught the facile graces of the vharmeur, made to cultivate entomology as one of those hobbies that sit so prettily on potentates, coached in half a dozen languages, even in Hungarian, for one never knew from whence the call to kingship would come. Thrones might spring up or fall vacant anywhere. One must be ready to pounce. It is a beautiful idyll of maternal love—a modern inversion of the legend of the Roman matron who sacrificed her children to the state, or of the story of Catherine Sforza.

How He Came to His Kingdom.

The moment came. One day some twenty-five years ago there sat in a Viennese beer garden a group of Bulgarian statesmen. They were returning empty handed from their quest for a prince. They had a throne to offer, but had found no one hungry enough to take it. Nor was the reluctance of the European princelings surprising. Ten years had passed since Bulgaria had won its freedom after five centuries of Turkish misrule. But it had only escaped from the tyranny of the Turk to fall under the shadow of Russia. The Tsar meant it to be the pawn in his own Balkan game. Poor Prince Alexander of Battenberg—brave, courageous, and beloved by the simple Bulgarian peasantry—had been dethroned, and anyone who ventured to follow him had to face the menace of Russia. And without Russia none of the powers would give him countenance. In this emergency one man stood like a rock between Bulgaria and the Russian. It was Stambuloff, the innkeeper's son. Rude and violent, a man who combined a sincere patriotism with uncouth manners and a genius for statesmanship, he had been largely responsible for throwing off the yoke of Turkey, and now fought with equal passion to resist Russian aggression. It was he who had sent out the commission to find a prince—the commission that now sat forlorn and unsuccessful in the Viennese beer garden. Enter Major Laabe. He learned their business—knew their business, indeed, for was he not the advance agent of the Prince-in-search-of-a-throne? "Why, gentlemen, there is just the man you want," said he, pointing to a young officer in the white tunic and gold-laced kepi of Austrian Hussars who was sitting near by—how accidentally one can only guess. "He is Ferdinand of Saxe-Coburg-Gotha, grandson of Louis Philippe, a cousin of every crowned head in Europe, a favorite of the Emperor of Austria and the Tsar, and a man of wealth."

The Man.

The boat that a year before had brought the dethroned Alexander up the Danube took Ferdinand down. No prince ever entered upon a more precarious enterprise than his. Unrecognized by the powers without, faced by a masterful minister within, he seemed the princeling of an hour—a momentary incident in Bulgaria's troubled story. At the end of twenty-five years his throne is secure, his country is stable and prosperous, he is smiled on by the powers, his princeship has become a kingship, he stands at the head of a triumphant army, he may emerge from the war the Emperor of the Balkans as the King of Prussia emerged from the war of 1870 the Emperor of Germany. It is the triumph of a subtle diplomacy, motived by one dominating passion—personal ambition. There are those who, in their enthusiasm for Bulgaria, find in Ferdinand the chivalrous hero who has wrought the miracle. The success of his policy blinds their judgment of the man. But if we are to understand Ferdinand we must distinguish between public results and private motives. It may be that no other instrument could have accomplished what this purely artificial monarch has accomplished for Bulgaria. The determination to "arrive" himself has helped Bulgaria to arrive also. Between him and his people there is an immeasureable gulf fixed. A solid, somewhat dour, but very virile race, the Bulgarians have no point of contact in temperament or sympathies with their sovereign. He has had to conquer them, as he had to conquer the powers and Stambuloff. They, a simple, undemonstrative people, were revolted by the vanity of their prince. While his neighbor, Nicholas of Montenegro, sat at his door and was accessible to any peasant, Ferdinand assumed the pose and habits of the grand monarque. Within a few days of his arrival he had refused to see the representatives of England, Austria, and Italy because they did not appear in the presence in uniform. No king in Europe is hedged round with more pomp and ceremony than Ferdinand, travels in more regal style, assumes a more Olympian air, cultivates so extravagant an etiquette. Even his little son cannot ride abroad without a cavalcade and an ecclestiastical dignitary in attendance. His relative, the Comtesse de Paris, once said of him that he cared for nothing except titles and orders, and the industry with which for years he canvassed the courts of Europe for a crown gives color to the saying.

But vain though he is, his ambition soars beyond titles. Like Charles the First, he will be a "king indeed," and not a mockery of a king. He will stoop low to conquer, it is true. Neither his faith, nor his dignity, nor loyalty to those who have served him will stand in the way of his path to power. When he found that Russia remained obdurate, even though Stambuloff had been removed, he bartered his faith and his word to win her smiles. He himself is a Roman Catholic, and when he married his first wife, Princess Marie Louise of Parma, he agreed that their children should be brought up in the faith of Rome. But when all else had failed to placate Russia, he had his son Boris "converted" to the Orthodox Church, in spite of the scorn of the world and the flight of his wife with her younger son to escape the outrage to her faith. "The West has pronounced its anathema against me," he said, but he had won his prize. Russia smiled on him, recognized him, and with that recognition came the countenance of all the great powers. The path to glory was at last clear.

The Fall of Stambuloff.

But it was in the Stambuloff episode that the falsity of his character was most startlingly revealed. It is a dark story. History could not show a more dramatic contrast of personalities than that provided by Ferdinand and the minister who made him prince—the one all artifice, the other all primitive nature. Stambuloff was a ruthless man set in ruthless circumstances. He had one passion—love of his country. To that passion he sacrificed everything and everybody—most of all he sacrificed himself. Turkey had been driven out of his vineyard; but the spies of Russia were overrunning it. He was alone in the midst of a web of plots and intrigues. He fought like a giant, mercilessly, cunningly. And all the time he was consolidating the country, constructing railways, developing its resources, giving it education, building up its army, laying the foundations of that power that is the admiration of the world today. To him Ferdinand was only a necessary instrument in his scheme to defeat the machinations of Russia and to establish the freedom of his land. And he found him, instead, anxious only to be approved by Russia and the powers. The liberty of his kingdom was threatened; his very life was in daily peril; he lived on the brink of a volcano, and his dreams were the dreams of pomp and vanity. Two such men could not run permanently in harness. One may sympathize with the prince, for Stambuloff is "gey ill to live wi." He had no reverence for princes and a mighty scorn for the shows of things. He was fighting a tremendous battle and was apt to forget his manners. "I cannot and will not be seen with you if you don't take that frippery off," he is said to have exclaimed when, his mind full of fierce actualities, he found himself in the presence of his prince, who was clothed in a wonderful coronation mantle of purple and ermine. "Some people will think you are mad. There are more urgent matters to be attended to than coronation mantles. For instance, your highness might see that you get a more trustworthy bodyguard, or else—"

An uncomfortable master—a master who would neither flatter him nor betray him. For Russia intimated that she would be Bulgaria's friend if only Stambuloff would surrender this usurper—if Ferdinand could be sent the way of Alexander. But Stambuloff knew that to surrender the prince was to surrender Bulgaria. It was not the man he cared for, but the nationality of which he was the symbol.

Murder.

But if the minister would not betray the prince, the prince could desert the minister. One day, during his absence abroad, Ferdinand wrote an official letter forbidding Stambuloff to report to him, and declaring that his conduct was "infame." Stambuloff resigned in a letter in which he said, "cela ne fait honneur ni au pepuple bulgare, ni a son prince, s'il' activite d'un ministre bulgare doit etre caracterisee par l'adjectif 'infame.'"

Ferdinand was free. "Henceforth," he said, "I mean to rule as well as to reign." He has kept his word. But while Stambuloff lived the shadow of that terrible man hung over his path. It was said that he was to be brought to trial. It would have been well if he had been. There were plenty of crimes against him, for he had dipped his hands deep in the blood of those enemies whom he believed to be the enemies of his country. But he was not tried. Instead, his house was surrounded by spies; his steps were dogged wherever he went. He appealed to be allowed to go to Karlsbad for his health. The request was refused by the Government. He then declared publicly that he was being kept in Sofia to be murdered. On the 15th of July, 1895, in the streets of Sofia, with the police looking on, he was brutally butchered—not merely murdered, but mutilated. Prince Ferdinand, who had gone to Karlsbad, telegraphed his grief to the widow and ordered his highest court official to tender his condolences to her personally. The telegram was unanswered; the official was refused admission. Europe rang with the murder. Petkoff, who narrowly escaped death with his friend, denounced the prince; the "Svoboda" openly accused him and his ministers of instigating the murder; the "Vossische Zeitung" said that if any ordinary citizen of any state had been so incriminated as Prince Ferdinand has been, the man would have been arrested." No one was arrested; no one was punished.

It will be seen that those who dismiss King Ferdinand as a mere scented popinjay are woefully mistaken. To have come a stranger into a land seething with rebellion—a land where he was to have been a prince in name and a mere instrument of policy in fact—to have matched himself against the Bulgarian Bismarck and overthrown him, to have won the crown and made himself a "king indeed," as despotic as any king in Europe, to stand at the end of twenty-five years at the head of an army that has astonished the world and at the head of a league that confronts Europe with a new political fact of the first magnitude—all this implies more than the vanity and the febrile futility with which his enemies credit him. He is "the artful Augustus" of a later Gibbon, a Napoleon the Third with more than Napoleon's calculation and statesmanship. "I am the rock against which the waves beat in vain," he said grandiloquently long ago—and his courtiers laughed. He is not that. But he is the supple artificer of greatness, innocent of scruple, swift to take fortune at the flood, one who "makes nice of no vile hold to stay him up," and has that wonderful instinct of self-preservation which enables him in all emergencies to fall lightly upon his feet. He applies the arts of the mediaeval prince to Twentieth Century conditions and Machiavelli himself would have little to teach him. His career is the romance of modern kingship. His success is as vast as his ambition. There is no spot upon his sun.

Yes, one. There is the dead hand of Stambuloff.

HOW ENGLISH CITY WAS BEAUTIFIED

Oldham Transformed by Efforts of Woman Mayor — Less Smoke, More Flowers.

"The mad and mistaken freedom of last century gave us towns like Oldham. Rows of hideous houses fronting cobbled streets; the air full of floating particles and a steady fall of soot from the belching chimneys which stood up like the towers of some huge diabolical cathedral, made the fair Lancashire land foul," says Reginald R. Buckley, in the World's Work. "Today a better class of mill, less smoke, and greater variation in house building, the increase of gardens, the presence of window-boxes in the smallest dwellings, and of trees in the meanest streets mark the very Cinderella of the north as worthy the name of 'Beautiful Oldham,' at least to the eye that looks to the future.

Beautiful Oldham, Why Not?

"Oldham is beautifully situated among hills, one valley especially inviting one to enter what days past must have been a fine site for a town. Thick-set in the midst squats man's handiwork, while through the very valley pours the sewage.

"The contrast struck many people, but the first organized attempt to harmonize man's work with nature's sprang from a letter to the local press, written by Mrs. Mary Higgs, entitled 'Beautiful Oldham, Why Not?' Naturally this aroused derision. Circe turned the suitors into swine. But who could turn pigsties into castles?

"Yet the practical nature of the letter, the idea of leading children into the country to study nature, of starting window-boxes, of mitigating the smoke nuisance, led to a meeting at the house of Mrs. Charles Lees, with the result that in 1902 the 'Beautiful Oldham Society' was founded.

"The problem that faced them differed entirely from that of the garden city movement, which was free to select an estate, plan out a city, and refuse to admit the slum, the excessive smoker type of mill, and the individual landlord.

"Oldham had all these. But like a man suffering from cramp, overwork, lack of fresh air, and general debility, Oldham, once in the doctor's hands, progressed rapidly.

"Oldham is the first place that has come within my knowledge in which a definite attempt has been made to transform an existent hell into a provisional paradise, or, shall we say, a desert into an oasis.

"Commercial success had raised large houses, and lack of forethought had grown slums. In Werneth Park stood two houses, symbolic of the time when the captain of industry planted himself in the midst of his grimy hordes on the smoky battlefield. One of these became vacant, and the Misses Lees, who lived in the other, bought it, and Miss Marjory Lees, who now owns it, has equipped it for use as a public hall, where dramatic performances, tea parties, and the meetings of the Beautiful Oldham Society can take place. The house has been reconstructed inside, and forms an admirable theatre.

A Park and a Slum.

"It was through the Beautiful Oldham Society that Miss Marjory Lees, who was mayoress during her mother's mayoralty, became acquainted with the slums. The worst area was known as the Cannon street insanitary area. The health committee had on more than one occasion urged the council to acquire the property, but the scheme was rejected on the ground of the cost.

"Many of the houses were closed, and stood like decayed teeth. Miss Lees offered the council the sum required on condition that they bought and cleared the property. One proud owner stood out. The larger portion of the area was cleared for playgrounds and for the erection of the Cannon street institute to provide gymnastics and recreative reading for those whose own houses provide no room for the strictly domestic side of life.

"And Werneth Park, instead of being the preserve of a few fortunate people, is thrown open to a more general use, and is the hotbed of constant plotting for betterment."

LITTLE FARMS WELL TILLED

Men Who Have Made Money on Twenty-Five Acre Tracts.

One of the most interesting farms in Ohio is a twenty-five acre tract of land near Arcanum, in Drake County, that is owned by Allen Geer. Of recent years the doctrine of "the little farm well tilled" has been widely preached, but rarely practiced. Farm and Fireside tells about it.

This practical farm which is worked by Mr. Geer is one of the few exceptions where the possibility has been matured into profitable actuality, by the intensive pursuit of modern methods and up-to-date management. The farm is divided into five acre lots on which a four-year rotation is followed, clover, corn, tobacco and wheat constituting the crops that are raised.

The land is of a rolling nature, while the soil is a rich, black loam which is never surfeited with water, due to 650 rods of tile laid at a maximum depth of thirty inches, which furnish adequate means for thorough underdrainage.

In the five years which he has owned his twenty-five-acre farm he has distributed 5,000 tons of manure over the fields. A large portion of this fertilizer he secured in the neighboring town for the hauling of it, while the rest of the manure cost him from 10 to 15 cents a load.

To show that his efforts to replenish the fertility of his soil have not been in vain it is only necessary to mention that last year this progressive countryman harvested 450 bushels of corn of fine quality from his five-acre cornfield, while for the last three years his wheat has never gone below thirty-nine bushels to the acre. His most profitable cash crop has been tobacco; his 1911 return from four and three-quarter acres amounted to $707.40. His tobacco usually averages around 1,350 pounds to the acre.

And the best part of the proposition is that the Geer place is a regular Klondike nugget in its ability to draw money. During the last five years the owner, in addition to gaining an ample livelihood for himself and his family from the farm, has annually disposed of more than $900 worth of produce that was raised on this little tract.

"She carries her age well." "Yes. She carries her age the same way she carries her money?" "How is that?" "Carefully concealed."—Birmingham Age-Herald.

"SUB ROSA" ILLUSTRATES THE GENTLE ART OF SATIRIZING A SNOB

Just at present most of the papers are compelled to give up so much space to war news that they have no room for the usual little attentions paid to Mr. Lloyd George. The Hampshire Chronicle, however, publishes a letter, signed "Athol Maudsley," filling a column of close print, headed the "Insurance Act," and this is how it begins:

"Of all the shortsighted and culpable acts of which the Chancellor of the Exchequer has been guilty none can exceed in iniquity the insurance act."

So now we know the worst—not only the worst that Mr. Lloyd George has done, but the worst that he ever will do, as "nohing can exceed in iniquity" this act, according to the gentleman who writes to the Hampshire Chronicle.

The letter-writer is a man of haughty views, as may be gathered from this statement:

"England, perhaps I ought to say Great Britain, never did better than in the old days, when the ship of state was steered by men of good birth, education, and distinguished ability, who could lay claim to be an ancient ancestry."

And so on. The reader will see the gentleman's line of thought, and it is not worth while to pause here in order to point out that there is a difference between laying claim to an ancient ancestry, and being able to establish that claim. That difference is recognized in the sound old jest about some people having ancestors who were among the Crusaders, and others whose immediate ancestresses came over with the Cunarders.

As I have said, we need not let such considerations delay us, for what the gentleman means is quite clear — he yearns for government by what are known as the "upper circles," and he alludes to Mr. Lloyd George's "humble origin" in a style that would have delighted Thackeray. I suppose that if these views are to be accepted we might as well do the thing well, and form a government entirely of dukes, and thus place our national affairs in the hands not of merely upper, but of tip-top, circles.

I know but little about such things, but I believe that there are dukes and dukes, and that one duke may perhaps look down on another. This great truth was recognized by that acute observer, the late Sir William Gilbert, when he wrote of the two dukes who paid atention to the periwinkle girl named Mary — Duke Bailey and Duke Humphy. The merits and the comparative splendor of the two are thus set forth by the poet:

Duke Bailey greatest wealth computes,
And sticks, they say, at no-thing;
He wears a pair of golden boots,
And silver underclothing.

The other duke, though, of course, a very worthy man, could not do things on such a scale, for

Duke Humphy, as I understand,
Though mentally acuter,
His boots are only silver, and
His underclothing pewter.

At the same time, a duke is a duke, be he never so humble, and that fact was recognized by the periwinkle girl, who encouraged them both.

Alas! in this unsatisfactory world, there are peers of lower rank than dukes, and Mary regarded them at first with a scorn as cold as that of Mr. Athol Maudsley for Mr. Lloyd George. The poet seems almost ashamed to introduce the next character, but truth will out, and so he tells us that

A third adorer had the girl,
A man of lowly station—
A miserable grov'ling earl
Besought her approbation.

This humble cad she did refuse,
With much contempt and loathing;
He wore a pair of leather shoes,
And cambric underclothing.

I am unable to say whether Mr. Maudslay would admit earls into the ranks of the governing classes—probably not, so long as any dukes or marquesses are available. It should encourage earls, however, to know that Gilbert's heroine in the end took the earl, because he was good, and she dismissed the two dukes, who were bold, bad men. This is all very well in romantic poetry—but there is danger in allowing sterling worth to recommend humble rank in public life.

Mr. Maudslay seems to recognize that danger, for he asks:

"Must we remain content with a counterfoil representation with the paste in place of the pearl? On great occasions we are told that heroes arise, who save for such an occasion would remain hidden in obscurity.

The gloomy gentleman seems to think that the hour has come, but not the man, and in his despair he writes:

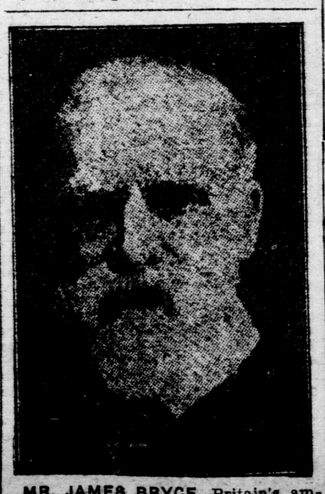

"Let us pray then for an occasion that will drag from obscurity a worthy successor to the men I have named, a leviathan intellect that can out of chaos evolve something worthy of our support, someone capable of sagacious political action, with the mind of a statesman, and those feelings of nobility which are in accordance with the best traditions of the English people."

Loud cheers. I should explain that the men he names earlier in the letter are Chatham, Pitt the Younger, Sir Robert Peel, Burke, Canning, Palmerston and Salisbury. It is becoming customary for modern Tories to include Mr. Gladstone in lists of this sort, but Mr. Maudslay deliberately rejects that statesman, because of his "unwise extension of the franchise." Possibly the honored name of Disraeli is omitted for the same reason.

These demands for a real leader, or, as Mr. Maudslay puts it, for a leviathan intellect, are quite commonly made today by Tories, and I think they are both unfair and offensive. Have they not Mr. Bonar Law to lead them? What right, then, have they to ignore him and to go on praying that occasion may "drag from obscurity" a worthy leader? And on each side of that gentleman, as well as behind him, are at least 150 others, each of whom is ready to say, "Here am I — try me." Old Thomas Fuller has said, in the "Worthies of England," that

"The word statesman is of great latitude, sometimes signifying those who are able to manage great offices of state, though never actually called thereunto."

The Tory benches in the House at present are crammed with honest gentlemen who feel sure that they come within those terms of reference. And I think they are entitled to one's sympathy, when, in spite of their brilliant performances, there are dreary people belonging to their party who keep on proclaiming aloud that what is wanted by that party is a leader—a leviathan intellect—someone who is strong enough for the place. Why the Opposition benches are stuffed with leviathan intellects—you can hardly move for them. —S. L. H.

MR. JAMES BRYCE, Britain's ambassador to the United States, whose retirement is announced.

At Garrison, N. Y., Dr. Theodore C. Janeway has occupied for several seasons a charming place known as Wing and Wing. At Barrytown Steen Valetze is owned by Mr. and Mrs. Richard Aldrich and Mr. Warner De Lano.

Among other places with names distinctly original and out of the beaten track, but the meaning of which is charmingly obvious, is a summer home down on Long Island known as Laffalot, another as The Leftover, and the Plas-ar-Llyn, owned by George R. Schieffelin, and "La Chaumiere," at Oyster Bay, owned by Frederic R. Coudert; the summer place of Christopher Woodward at Sodus Point, known of Charles E. Haymond, known among as Cobweb, and the summer residence the cottage colony as Wake Robin.

THE V ALIANTS of VIRGINIA

A GREAT SUCCESS

By HALLIE ERMINIE RIVES

More thoroughly characteristic of its author than even her great success, Satan Sanderson, the new novel, The Valiants of Virginia, is Hallie Erminie Rives from the first word to the last. Charming in atmosphere, original and striking in its character values, it should take high place among the Rives romances, if not indeed the highest place.

Never has its author shown a more ardent purpose, a more spirited execution, greater facility of treatment. It is richly and variously colored, and it is marked by the greatest dynamic energy and brilliancy of phase.

TWENTY-FIVE THOUSAND OF THESE BLOODTHIRSTY SCARECROWS---FIENDISH KURDS MARCHED TO CONSTANTINOPLE

COPYRIGHT BY UNDERWOOD & UNDERWOOD.

Twenty-five thousand Kurds marched through Asia to Constantinople. Though they will be a valued addition to the Turks' shattered army, their presence in the Turkish capital would add greatly to the peril of the Christian population, as the Kurds are the most barbarous as well as fanatical followers of the prophet. Their chief sport for centuries has been the massacre of Armenians and other Christians and raids for the capture of women.

GREATEST PROSE WORK OF NINETEENTH CENTURY IS SARTOR RESARTUS

Holbrook Jackson in London Daily News.

The greatness of a work of art, be it literature or painting, is not dependent upon technique alone, but upon the balance of technique and idea—upon a fine theme and a fine execution. Thus in endeavoring to indicate what is great in art, one does not confine oneself to craftsmanship or to mere artifice, one desires acquaintance with the thought and emotion behind and within the work of art, one must know about the fullness of the idea of which it stands. Is it big or little? Does it mean much for man, or is it but an indifferent incident, interesting but negligible? For fine artifice may enshrine a trivial thing, just as the same sort of artistic skill may execute symbols which are destructive of life. I have tried to apply this attitude to the prose works of the nineteenth century in the hope that I might arrive at some conclusion as to the finest of such works, a conclusion which should satisfy my own judgment and prove itself worthy of the consideration of others. Such judgments are necessarily subject to all the conditions imposed upon us by whim, mood and idiosyncrasy, and no one would suggest that they could in the last resort be other than personal, still, I believe there is less of whim and personal opinion in the conclusion that Carlyle's "Sartor Resartus" is the supreme British prose work of the last century, than in many other conclusions one might be inclined to form about many other subjects. Other books have better claims upon us by their grace and easiness, but "Sartor Resartus" does not depend upon such things. It is not a smooth book and it is not easy. Carlyle seems to have chosen the most difficult method, as though he desired the approval and comprehension of those only who were capable of winning through the formidable outworks of his thought. He had gazed long and pondered deeply the age in which he found himself, and declared it to be bad. How then could he say so? Shoddy and hypocrisy on every hand, fools and blockheads everywhere, and a nation being bled to death by the mad onrush of mechanical invention applied to commerce for financial gain. Far away in Craigenputtock, Thomas Carlyle brooded over the chaos, and in 1830 his broodings brought forth the strangest worded piece of philosophy England had ever known. All the traditions of book writing were flouted. It was not only that Carlyle did not write down to the comprehension of the crowd, he did not write up to the comprehension of the select few, the savants, the scholars, the philosophically minded, he flouted all by transcending all.

"Sartor Resartus" in those days in the pages of Frazer's Magazine, must have read like chaos, and many of "Fraser's" subscribers said so, demanding its suppression. For just as it was not formal philosophy, so was it nothing else formal and familiar. People debated the existence of Teufelsdrockh; they wondered whether the book was a translation; it was thought too long, too ambiguous, too dull, too pedantic, too vague; flashes of poetry were admitted here and there, but on the whole it was badly written, overvehement, an insane sort of a book which would win nothing but the forgetfulness of men. The critics were wrong not for the first time or the last.

The Influence of Sartor.

America, under the lead of Emerson, first recognized the prophetic qualities of the book, and later England followed. But there the matter ended so far as the nations, as nations, were concerned. The teaching of "Sartor Resartus" has been ignored and the evils denounced by Thomas Carlyle have developed and spread over the world. Yet few books have had so deep an influence. Its strong vision has penetrated many minds; its exalted prose has influenced many pens. But the fact that its influence has been deep rather than broad, is an earnest of its greatness. The ideal book would strike far as well as deep, but such books happen once or twice in aeons of time, not centuries; such books are bibles, and "Sartor Resartus" is not that. On the contrary it is a peculiarly local book; local to its day, and with some slight modification, to ours. Its truths, like truth as conceived by the imagination are eternal in essence, but modern in application; and yet one cannot conceive when such chapters as "The Everlasting Yea" and "Symbols" will be out-moded. These are epic in philosophic vision, eternal so long as man exists, superman may discard them—but even that is doubtful. The greatness of "Sartor" depends upon bigness and brightness of vision couched in equal prose. Carlyle said in that book what most needed saying, and if he said it in such a way that few could understand him, it was not his fault. Few understood him because few cared sufficiently; few would take the trouble. Those who did were of the best—John Ruskin, for instance—and they saw with the seer of Craigenputtock—and that fact has to be recorded in Carlyle's favor.

High-Seriousness and Humor.

But it is not necessary at this date to defend Sartor or Carlyle; the man and his books have stood the test of kicks and praise. No other book of the nineteenth century has anything approaching Sartor's high-wrought splendor of idea and craftsmanship. Its very faults of style and form, the use of impossible words, the exaggerations of thought and language, the complexities of its German framework, are but proofs of its greatness. The book as a book, the prose as prose, the idea as idea survive all such hindrances and difficulties, and when you have said your worst for it "Sartor Resartus" rises out of the trouble implacable and serene; a masterpiece among masterpieces. The nineteenth century was rich in great prose works—John Henry Newman's "Apologia pro vita sua"; Charles Reade's "Cloister and the Hearth"; Pater's "Marius the Epicurean"; Ruskin's "Unto This Last"; Meredith's "Egoist"; Macaulay's "History of England"; Hardy's "Jude the Obscure"; to say nothing of noble but less sustained masterpieces like the prefaces of Wordsworth, the essays of Lamb, Shelley, Hazlitt, Stevenson and Oscar Wilde, but none create quite the same impression of towering thought and inimitable art, nor do any of them approach the magnitude of harmony. Carlyle touches all themes in this amazing book; he plays the organ of thought equally well with all stops out and with one. He thunders and frowns, scolds and fumes, but he can be as quiet as a whisper, as tender as a caress. No other book in the English language can combine such high seriousness with humor without falling into pomposity, sentimentality, or mere funniness. When you laugh with Carlyle, you laugh with the gods. When you walk with him you walk upon Olympus. But you walk there and laugh there as a man; Carlyle does not arrogate to himself greater power nor greater dignity than manliness. He is the last and biggest of the humanists, and though never so big, he always meets you as a brother.

Keying Up The Spirit.

The strange and inspiring book which reveals the philosophy of clothes, reveals also Thomas Carlyle. But ingenious researches into its place names and other autobiographical characteristics are of little use. Sartor Resartus is the world of man apropos of Carlyle. As such it has played its part and left its mark. Meredith conceived the art of the pen as a means of rousing the inward vision, and no other English writer of the last century strove more to that end than Carlyle—except, perhaps, Meredith himself, who learnt much from him, learnt at least that vivid method of springing, as he had said, "imagination with a word or phrase."

Sartor Resartus does little else; it does not explain, it intimidates by flashing vision after vision upon the mind, by keying up the spirit to ecstacy without losing touch with earth. Since the book was written philosophers and scientists have sought out many inventions, but I know of no other work of its kind which has stood so well the test of time. This is due in no small measure to Carlyle's habit of standing high above catchwords and cant phrases. He does not risk being pigeon-holed, or imprisoned in a category; he keeps to the broad highway. Even his insistence upon duty and idealism—which might be questioned by the modern ammoralist—is not so old-fashioned as a superficial observation would lead one to believe. Carlyle is no advocate of blind and formal duties and ideals; duties and ideals for him are not less than the intuitions and needs of the moderns. They lie within the man and not without, and thus determine his value when expressed.

LORD ROBERT CECIL ON CO-PARTNERSHIP

Says That Industry Has Become Utterly Inhuman and Devoid of Interest.

Dismissing Socialism as a remedy for what he termed the present dehumanization of labor, Lord Robert Cecil, M. P., in a speech at Birmingham recently advocated co-partnership.

Industry, he said, had been so organized as to be utterly inhuman and devoid of the slightest interest for those engaged in it. The worker had been metamorphosed into a machine. His head and heart were sacrificed. He did his work because it was essential, but when he left the workshop it was all forgotten.

This attitude of the workers he regarded as a distinct impediment to labor advancement. Something was wanted to lift them out of it, to elevate them from the level of mere cog-wheels in a machine over which they exercised neither personal nor individual influence.

The employee should be put in the position of feeling that his work led to something more than mere carrying out of an individual process. "Can we enlist again [illegible]ead and heart in the operations upon which he is engaged?" asked the speaker.

Co-partnership was the method he advised to bring this into effect. Profit-sharing by itself was incomplete; the men must have a share in the capital and in the management, and in order that this might be done some portion of the profits divided should be put into shares.

GEN. SAVOFF LEAPS INTO WORLD FAME IN A NIGHT

A PERSONALITY SKETCH.

GENERAL SAVOFF.

Special Correspondence.

London, Nov. 22.—Over night—that was the night of the battle of Kirk Killissa—Michel Savoff, the Bulgarian minister of war, gained his niche in history, with such generals as Von Moltke, Napoleon and Grant.

Savoff was born within a stone's throw of Adrianople. To be born a Christian, in Turkey, in 1854, meant disgrace and oppression. Many of his Christian playmates spent their lives in practical serfdom to the Turks in the outskirts of Adrianople, and were not freed until the other day Savoff and his victorious Bulgarians came marching through Thrace, driving the Turks before them in a wild, crazed flight.

When Savoff was 14 his parents packed their few household goods and migrated into Bulgaria.

Savoff was always grim, silent, wilful. To be a soldier was his aim; he had even played soldier, as a boy, out in the outskirts of Adrianople, where later he was to march as a real soldier. He entered the Bulgarian military school at Sophia. His talents immediately marked him as a leader. His government sent him to the military school at St. Petersburg, in Russia. Upon his return, in 1885, he was made a captain. Before he was 35 he was a Bulgarian general and had won his spurs in the battle of Slivnitza. When, later, it was decided to reorganize the Bulgarian army, Savoff was selected for the job, but he couldn't agree with Stambouloff, then practical dictator of Bulgaria, so he retired. Savoff, when he could not have his own way, would follow no one else.

In 1897 his government again called him to service, giving him charge of the military school at Sophia. His was the task of training many of the men now officers in the victorious army. In 1902 the government decided to again renovate the army. Savoff was ordered to do his best. And his best is what the world is seeing today.

Savoff secured the law of 1904 making every Bulgarian, able to bear arms, a soldier. Old guns, old systems, old customs all went to the ash heap. Savoff built up, silently, forcefully, the great fighting machine with which, during three weeks, he shattered the cream of Turkey's army.

In 1908 Savoff retired. When the present situation began to develop the Bulgarians instantly called for Savoff. Every Bulgarian seemed personally convinced that under Savoff he could fight his best.

Off to the front started Savoff. Before he left he sent this message to a friend:

"Liberty for our brethren—liberty now or, never. For this we live and for this we are ready to die."

"He's a brute." "How so?" "When she promised to be his wife he said he would do everything in his power to make her happy." "Well?" "He spends all of his time at the club!" "Well, if he is really a brute that ought to help some."—Houston Post.

Mrs. Wayupp—So they have just had their first quarrel? Mrs. Blaze—Yes. After fifteen years of married life they have just discovered that they belong to opposite churches.—Life.

STAFFORD HOUSE BOUGHT FOR PUBLIC

Duke of Sutherland Sells His London Palace to Sir Wm. Lever.

It is officially announced that the Duke of Sutherland has sold Stafford House, London, through Messrs. Knight, Frank, and Rutley to Sir William Hesketh Lever.

Sir William's intention in buying Stafford House is to devote it to some public or national purpose, but nothing more definite can be stated at present.

Sir William has left for the Congo, and will be absent some four or five months, and has left the matter in the hands of Mr. George Harley, of Liverpool, and Mr. Howard Frank with full power to enter into the arrangements necessary to carry out his wishes.

Stafford House was built for the Duke of York in 1825, but before it was finished he died. His executors sold the shell for £72,000 to the first Duke of Sutherland, who completed it to one story. The second duke added a second story, and over half a million, it is computed, was spent in making it the most splendid town residence of any subject in the realm. Its chief glory is its marble staircase, but the apartments, like the dining-room, designed by the first duke, have been pronounced "worthy of Versailles."

Many famous men have been entertained there, but to Queen Victoria remains the honor of describing it in a trenchant and much-quoted phrase. To the last duchess she wrote from the royal residence: "I am coming from my house to your palace."

CHANGE OF CLIMATE DID NOT HELP

But GIN PILLS Conquered His Rheumatism.

THE fact that men of standing and responsibility do not hesitate to come out and state frankly how much good GIN PILLS have done them speaks volumes for this good old remedy.

Mr. W. G. Reid, of Hamilton, whose statement we publish below, with his permission, is one of the best known commercial men in Canada. His many friends throughout the country will be delighted to learn that he is quite himself again. He says:

"I have been for the last two years a cripple with Muscular and Inflammatory Rheumatism. I have tried almost everything known to medical science to relieve me of the intense pain and inflammation. I sought change of climate in Kentucky and other Southern points without relief. Your manager in this city recommended GIN PILLS and I have since taken eight boxes and am now cured. I consider GIN PILLS the conqueror of Rheumatism and Kidney Disease.

(Signed) W. G. REID."

Muscular and Inflammatory Rheumatism, Lumbago, Sciatica, and all other troubles arising from weak, inactive or diseased kidneys, have little chance against GIN PILLS.

The curative properties in these pills go straight to the root of the trouble—the failure of the kidneys to keep the blood free from the irritating Uric Acid which is continually being formed in the body. GIN PILLS help the Kidneys to perform this function properly, and the train of troubles vanish.

Just try it and prove it to your own satisfaction. There is no risk—money back if GIN PILLS do not help you.

Women of Turkey Still Bought and Sold For the Harem

Plain Truths and Facts About the Gentler Sex of Constantinople and the Ottoman Empire—Veiled Beauties Less Lovely Than Painted.

While the Turkish soldiers are being beaten by the Balkan allies and the inhabitants of Constantinople are fleeing across the Bosphorus, what about the Turkish women, who have been ignored in the news dispatches? They are still creatures of mystery. Here, however, are some plain facts about them.

The phrase "veiled Turkish beauty" is rather misleading. Turkish women have been considered beautiful chiefly because few outsiders have ever had a good look at them. Most of them are short and fat, and the mystifying veil and the "tchartchaff," or long cloak, only too often cover an ungainly form and haggish face.

The young girl is often pretty, but lack of mental activity, and lack of physical exercise soon do their deadly work.

The Sultan's harem, of course, holds many beautiful women; but most of them are Circassians or Georgians.

The infusion of modern ideas into the Turkish harems has made little change in the character and life of the women. Nearly all of them after reaching the age of 13, still wear in public the veil over the face and the black cloak reaching to the feet.

There are innumerable restrictions. For a woman to be seen on the street in the company of a man, even her own husband or father, would be a terrible breach of etiquette. A lady must be escorted by a eunuch, a household slave not rated as a man.

A woman never appears in a restaurant or theatre, and seldom in a place of religious worship. There are no ballrooms. Her life is confined to the women's quarters, or "haremlik," and there, even among the society folk of Constantinople, life is unspeakably dull. For there is no social intercourse at all between the sexes; a lady can only entertain other ladies in stiff, ceremonal fashion, and the talk at such "pink teas" is seldom anything but petty gossip.

Most Turks have only one wife. When they have more, they are supposed to maintain each one separately—and that is expensive. He may have women slaves, however. Four is the limit.

The Sultan hasn't any "wives" at all. It is bad form for a sultan to marry. He merely has a harem filled with slaves, sold or given to him.

The slave trade still exists, in spite of assertions to the contrary, and it is a blot on Turkish life in comparison with which the worst of the "white slave traffic" in American cities seems trivial. Women are bought in secret markets at prices proportioned to their beauty.

Most Turkish women smoke, but not in the presence of elders or superiors. Being Mohammedans, of course, they do not drink.

Much deference is paid to age. A girl every evening kisses her father's hand for "good night."

At 15 or 16 a girl comes engaged. Her mother usually makes the match, and she marries him without either ever having seen the other. For a while, she continues to live in her father's house. Before marriage her fiancee sends her presents. Afterwards her father gives the bridegroom a trousseau.

There is no real privacy for a woman, in spite of her rigid seclusion. She may not lock the door of her room and is never safe from the prying eyes of the male slaves. All her letters are handed first to her lord and master, to read if he chooses.

There is no relief from domestic monotony even in the visit of the grocer, butcher or iceman. The lady of the house deals with her tradesmen through a revolving cupboard at the kitchen door.

GOVERNMENT OF IRELAND BY R. BARRY O'BRIEN

[By a Reviewer in the New York Sun.]

We have had many reminders from Escott to President Lowell that the actual government of England is quite different from what is set down in the books as such, says a reviewer in the New York Sun. What is true of England in this respect is of course even truer of Ireland. But there can be few readers who will not find novelty in Mr. R. Barry O'Brien's Dublin Castle and the Irish People (Dutton). Naturally, the author writes as a convinced Nationalist and advocate of home rule. That circumstance does not affect either the interest or the value of the facts he has amassed to show what "Dublin Castle," the embodiment in building materials of English rule in Ireland, really represents the Irish people. One might truly sum it up by saying that it represents the government of the Irish people by the English people for the English people.

How could it be otherwise? The viceroy is commonly, though not invariably, a purely ornamental functionary who keeps out of politics and draws $100,000 a year for representing socially the majesty of England, together with a staff which draws $15,000 more. One ex-viceroy told Mr. O'Brien that the pay was too small and meant that the holder of the office must run in debt. The real ruler of Ireland is the chief secretary, who draws some $22,000, and he is a member of the British cabinet. That is to say, he is responsible altogether to English opinion for the discharge of his duties and not in the least degree to Ireland. It is true that in such a conjuncture of English politics as now exists, in which the Prime Minister is fain to conciliate the Irish members, since they are a factor in the coalition which keeps him in power, a chief secretary for Ireland who was generally odious to the Irish people would have to go. But the condition is not normal. When Mr. Arthur Balfour was chief secretary, his parliamentary discourse about Irish affairs was largely devoted to deploring the "general cussedness" of the Irish character and telling his sympathetic British hearers what a bad lot his charges were without thereby at all imperilling his place. Mr. Birrell could not do that, even if he were so disposed. The under secretary as a more permanent official and presumably of greater local knowledge than his chief may be of great influence in the Government, though of official power or responsibility. Mr. O'Brien begins his book by giving a list of all the persons since the union who have held the offices of lord lieutenant, chief secretary, under secretary or lord chancellor, and classifying them according to nationality and "sympathy with national feeling." His recapitulation is that out of 157 persons only sixteen have been "in touch with Irish public opinion." Out of these sixteen twelve have held office since Mr. Gladstone introduced his home rule bill. It does not appear that any Irish Catholic has ever held a higher post in the Irish Government than that of under secretary.

The "Castle" is not physically what you would expect from the name. It looks more like a barrack. Mr. O'Brien quotes an official as saying: "When Americans come here, they expect to find bastions and moats and drawbridges and dungeons, and they are disappointed when they see that there is really no castle at all." It is simply the executive office of the Irish Government, and the Irish executive is really the chief secretary. Mr. O'Brien calls him a Pooh Bah, to denote the variety of his functions. He unites many which are in all other Governments separated and form checks upon one another. But there is really no check upon him. Our author discusses him and his actions in his several capacities of prime minister and dispenser of patronage, as home secretary and commander of the Royal Irish Constabulary of 10,000 men, as president of the local government board, which is the English name for this part of his office; as minister of education, as minister of agriculture, as chancellor of the exchequer, and as minister of justice. Cases are actually cited to show that he performs all these functions. It is to some extent shown historically how the office grew and ramified under the magnification and multiplication of it by its successive incumbents. But the main reason is that nobody else is appointed or empowered to attend to things which must be attended to, and that the chief secretary, like Pooh Bah, is "the Lord High Everything Else."

You would not expect efficiency from such a state of things, and it is not really pretended that you get it from the Government of Ireland. The place has been held by many able and conscientious public servants; but probably not one of them would go so far as to assert that he made a real success of it. Justice is, of course, the first requirement that a people is entitled to demand of its Government. It is hardly too much to say on the evidence furnished in these pages that the administration of justice is very imperfect in Ireland, and that, where the foreign domination is in question, there is hardly a pretence of administering it. "We cannot get a verdict in Ireland in political or agrarian cases," a minister of the crown once said to me, "without packing juries." A remarkable letter is quoted from the late Lord Russell of Killowen, giving his reasons for going to England to practice his profesison. His reasons may be summed up in the one reason that too much subserviency was required of a lawyer who wished to get on at the Irish bar. "Though many, many honorable men are in its ranks, yet as a whole the profession in Ireland is attained with servility." When Peter O'Brien was promoted to be chief justice of Ireland in 1889, Mr. Gladstone said: "The attorney-general has been rewarded for his jury packing in Ireland, and for his mode of conducting public business by being appointed chief justice." The business of an attorney-general in Ireland is to get convictions in cases that have any political bearing, and apparently it is the business of the judge to help him, from the initial jury packing down. Amazing are the testimonies which are here adduced on that point. "The English Government makes judicial promotion in Ireland the reward of political services."

Education you could hardly expect to be effective in a country where the people are of one religion and the Government of another. The Irish church is disestablished, but the evangelical Protestantism of England still prevents the Irish people from having their way in the education of their own children. When Archbishop Whately was a member of the school board he struck out of the school books lines on "The Irish Harp," and even Scott's "Breathes there the man with soul so dead," but retained the following gem:

I thank the goodness and the grace
That on my birth have smiled.
And made me in these Christian days
A happy English child.

That was long ago. But only last year, after a series of "National Readers" had been adopted by the national board, and the publishers had gone to the expense of getting ready a suitable edition, the adoption was revoked on account of a protest of the "Imperial Protestant Federation," sustained by the "Resident Commissioner." It appears among other things of equal consequence that Clarence Mangan's fine "Lament of Tyrone" is in the book, and that it contains the damning line:

Embrace the faithful crucifix.

This horror could not be allowed by the English Protestant Federation to pollute the pages of a reading book for the national schools of a country in which Catholic children of school age outnumber all others three to one.

The account of the workings of the recent land acts is of great interest, but too technical and complicated to admit of an abridged presentation. The remark of a Nationalist member on the general subject is worth repeating: "There is no use in approaching an English minister unless you go to him with the head of a landlord in one hand and the tail of a cow in the other." It was Nassau Senior who said:

"The treaty between landlord and tenant in Ireland is not a calm bargain in which the tenant, having offered what he thinks the land worth, cares little whether his offer be accepted or not; it is a struggle like the struggle to buy bread in a besieged town, or to buy water in an African caravan." In spite of the dwindling of population and the amelioration wrought by the land purchase acts, this still seems to be the state of the case; partly, no doubt, by reason of the general failure throughout the island to diversify its industries. Meanwhile, the charges for a foreign government amount to $7 a head for the whole population. Mr. O'Brien imagines an invetsigation into the government of Ireland undertaken, exclusively from the points of view of efficiency and economy, by "that all absorbing business entity of the twentieth century, the American syndicate," and gives the questions which it would ask, and the answers which show what in his opinion Downing street would have to say for itself. Naturally, he makes out a case of very bad business against Downing street. The strength of it a stranger can hardly judge, but the stranger cannot help finding it full of interest and suggestoin.

Mr. O'Brien's book is not long, but it is packed with matter, is brightly written, and may be recommended to all readers who wish to know the Nationalist side of the home rule question.

How He Escaped An Operation

And Was Completely Cured of Piles of 14 Years' Standing by Dr. Chase's Ointment.

Mr. Chas. Beauvais.

Doctors say that about one person in every four suffers more or less from piles, and who can imagine a more annoying, torturing, disagreeable ailment?

After trying a few treatments without success, and as the ailment grows worse, the medical doctor is consulted. An operation, he says, is necessary. You think of the suffering, expense and risk to life itself, and hesitate before taking such a step.

In many thousands of such cases Dr. Chase's Ointment has made thorough and lasting cures. Read this letter for the proof.

Mr. Charles Beauvais, a well-known citizen of St. Jean, Que., writes:—"For 14 years I suffered from chronic piles, and considered my case very serious. I was treated by a celebrated doctor who could not help me and ordered a surgical operation as the only means of relief.

"However, I decided to try Dr. Chase's Ointment, and obtained great relief from the first box. By the use of three boxes I was entirely cured. This is why it gives me great pleasure to recommend Dr. Chase's Ointment to all who suffer from piles as a treatment of the greatest value."

LLOYD GEORGE WILL VISIT CANADA

Welshmen in America Secure Promise for 1913.

In the current issue of the Druid, a Welsh weekly newspaper published at Pittsburg, Pa., it is announced that Mr. Lloyd George, accompanied by Mrs. Lloyd George, will visit the United States and Canada in September next and speak in six of the principal cities in each country.

Mr. W. J. Jones, Pittsburg, was deputed to see the chancellor and convey the invitation to America on behalf of the Welsh people of the States. Mr. George, he states in the Druid, is most anxious to visit America, and has planned to do so in September, 1913.

"But," asked Mr. George, with a merry twinkle of the eye, "supposing that the Government is defeated in the meantime, and I am out of office, I don't suppose that you would want me?"

Mr. Jones assured him that that would make no difference.

Mr. George then assured Mr. Jones that he could rely upon seeing Mrs. George and himself in America in September, 1913.

A luxurious private family car and special train will be provided for the whole American tour.

Mr. D. T. Harries, president of the Chicago Welshmen, is arranging a great Western States demonstration welcome for the chancellor at Chicago.

The Canadian visit will be partly ministerial.

JOHN BURNS GETS IN A BODY BLOW.

[London Daily News.]

Mr. John Burns, president of the Local Government Board, scored off an Opposition interrupter in the House of Commons yesterday.

Answering Mr. Stanier (Unionist, Newport, Shropshire), Mr. Burns said that the question of continuing next year the investigation into the life-history of the house-fly and its relation to disease was receiving his consideration.

Mr. G. D. Faber (Unionist, Clapham)—When the right honorable gentleman has completed his inquiry into the history of the house-fly, will he extend his investigations into the history of the political limpet? (Opposition cheers.)

Mr. Burns—There are no limpets or flies on this side of the House—(Ministerial laughter and Opposition cries of "Rats!" and "Ask Churchill!")—but I see a few before me whose buzz is disproportionate to their sting. (Laughter.)

Was Afraid

COLD WOULD DEVELOP INTO

Bronchitis.

Bronchitis begins with a tightness across the chest, difficulty of breathing, and a wheezing sound comes from the lungs. There is also a raising of phlegm from the lungs, especially in the morning. This is at first white, but later becomes of a greenish or yellowish color, and is occasionally streaked with blood.

On the first sign of a cold or cough take Dr. Wood's Norway Pine Syrup and prevent it turning to bronchitis, for once bronchitis gets installed into the system it is only a short step to Consumption.

Mrs. F. Saunders, Toronto, Ont., writes:—"It is with great success I have used Dr. Wood's Norway Pine Syrup. My little girl had an awful cold which seemed to go to her throat and chest, and while she was sleeping one could distinctly hear her wheezing. I was afraid it would develop into Bronchitis, so as soon as my husband came home I sent him right away to get a bottle of Dr. Wood's Norway Pine Syrup. As soon as she wakened up I gave her a dose and continued its use until she became quite better. We only used half a bottle. I will never be without it as I consider it invaluable."

Be sure you get "Dr. Wood's" when you ask for it. The price is 25 and 50 cents per bottle. Put up in a yellow wrapper, and three pine trees the trade mark.

Anowquah, at Harrison, N. Y., the summer cottage of Dr. Samuel Wood Thurber, came into its own one summer evening when its breezes welcomed a guest who had recently returned from a polar expedition. The house was built in a slight depression where there is always a good breeze. The guest remarked upon the fine breezes and some one jokingly asked him the Eskimo name for breeze. The word "anowquah" is the Northern Indian and Eskimo name for "gentle breezes," and the Thurbers put the Indian name down as the name of their place. One occasionally sees the name written Arrowquah, but the real name is Anowquah.

Justamerehouse, the summer home of Col. Oliver B. Bridgman at Mamaroneck, was selected when the house was first built. There was a little discussion of names for country places and finally Col. Bridgman remarked that he did not know just what name would be most appropriate for his place, "for it is just a house," and then added "I have it! Let us call it 'Just a mere house.'" The four words made into one have become widely known.

Naming the baby is a simple problem compared with naming the country place. In the days when summer homes were less common than they are now people were satisfied with The Maples or The Oaks, or Windycrest, Deepdene, or some good old reliable of the sort. But the present search for originality has resulted in scores of remarkable appellations.

Woman's Flayed Arm Is Bound to Living Dog!

Held Tightly Together in Plaster Cast, Their Blood Intermingles as Puppy's Flesh Grows on the Human Patient —Remarkable Operation Performed to Save a Human Life.

[Special to The Advertiser.]

Chicago, Nov. 29. — There's a woman in a hospital here whose flayed arm is bound tightly to a living puppy —open flesh against open flesh.

Woman and puppy are literally growing together, the blood of each circulating in the veins of the other.

When the woman is given morphine, for instance, to quiet her pain, the puppy also feels its soothing influence.

All this comprises one of the most remarkable surgical efforts to save human life—not an ordinary skin-grafting case, but a startling new departure in the annals of wonderful, modern surgery.

The patient is Mrs. H. W. Johnson, wife of the postmaster of Menominie, Wis.,

The other patient is Nellie, a pretty Skye terrier puppy.

Dr. Carl Anderson performed the operation at the Rhodes Avenue Hospital.

Mrs. Johnson came to Chicago for treatment of a rodent ulcer, which covered a space of several inches square, on her left elbow and upper arm. Rodent ulcer is a very ancient disease, said to have been one of those prevalent when Jesus healed the sick of Palestine. It usually attacks the arms and legs, and while not as frequently fatal as cancer is not curable by medicine.

"What can you do for me?" asked Mrs. Johnson when Dr. Anderson told her how serious was her malady.

"Nothing," he answered, "unless you will submit to having the skin of an animal grafted on your arm."

"Go ahead," she said.

FROM A PHOTOGRAPH TAKEN AT THE HOSPITAL IMMEDIATELY AFTER THE OPERATION, WHILE MRS. JOHNSON AND THE PUPPY WERE STILL UNDER THE INFLUENCE OF THE ANAESTHETIC.

Two healthy puppies were taken and kept on a diet until their condition was ideal. Then one of them, Nellie, the Skye terrier, was called upon to risk her life to save a human being. Nellie did not choose to be a heroine, but she played her part bravely.

Mrs. Johnson was placed upon the operating table and given an anaesthetic. When her wound had been prepared the dog also was put to sleep. Then its abdomen was shaved.

The surgeons cut away from the puppy's abdomen three sides of a piece six or eight inches square, turning back a flap of skin, with much more of the tissue than is usually taken for skin-grafting.

One side of this flap was left upon the dog's body and the other three were stitched to the woman's arm. Dog and woman were strapped together by bands of gauze, and then incased in a plaster cast, so it is impossible for them to move.

The operation took only a short while and Dr. Anderson says that unless there is infection the wound will heal rapidly, and the dog can be cut away from the woman in a week, when the fourth side of the flap will be stitched to its place on the woman's arm.

"Will hair grow out on the skin that was grafted?"

Probably, for a while, the doctors say, but they hope in time it will take on the characteristics of the skin about it.

And what about Nellie?

Dr. Anderson says he will try to save her, too.

THE WONDERFUL STORY OF ST. SOPHIA IN CONSTANTINOPLE—ROMANCE AND TRAGEDY OF BEAUTIFUL MOSQUE ONCE A CHRISTIAN CATHEDRAL.

[E. Ashmead-Bartlett, a Balkan-Turko war correspondent, stationed in Constantinople where he resided for many years before the trouble started, has written the following article about this most interesting of churches, formerly a Christian cathearal, now a Moslem mosque.—Editor.]

[By E. Ashmead-Bartlett.]

If Constantinople falls St. Sophia, one of the greatest churches man ever built, or in which human beings ever worshipped will close its doors to the Moslem followers of Mohammed and again become a Christian cathedral.

It has been 459 years since a Christian prayer has been heard in the edifice erected by Christians for Christians. The last time when the name of Jesus Christ was audibly uttered in prayer was on the night of May 28, 1453, when Constantine XI., foreseeing the fall of his city to the Turks, even then battling down the walls, went to St. Sophia and prayed. Then he sadly mounted his horse and rode to his death fighting the intruders. That night the Christians of Constantinople filled the church and the streets about it frantically praying for a miracle to save them.

Even as they were kneeling the last defence gave way and the hordes of fanatic Moslems swept through the streets, killing, robbing and committing unmentionable crimes upon the citizens. The first place the conqueror, Mahomet II., visited was St. Sophia, in which the priests and many other Christians were hiding. Turkish soldiers beat down the doors and their ruler entered with upraised sword, and the loud voice of the Mohammedan crier rang out through the huge building: "God is great, and Mohammed is His prophet."

Then the carnage inside the cathedral began. Priests were slain or their eyes put out. Hundreds of nuns were outraged and sold into slavery.

Christian inscriptions on the walls were plastered over and the great image of Christ, it is said, was walled in. These inscriptions may be uncovered again if the city falls, and the statue of Christ may be brought to sight up in the immense dome where it is said to have rested for a thousand years.

Since that May 29, 1453, the Mohammedan religion has alone been worshipped there; for 300 years Christians were not allowed inside the church, and in recent years they have gone in only in company of a Mohammedan guide, leaving their shoes outside.

The original St. Sophia was started in 326 A. D., by Constantine, the Byzantine king, and was finished and dedicated Feb. 15, 360, during the reign of Constantius. In 404 it was burned; restored; and burned again in 415; and again rebuilt. In 532 it was burned for the last time, and what is the present St. Sophia was built by Justinian. It took 10,000 workmen five years, 11 months and 10 days to erect it. Untold sums were lavished upon its decoration and sacred furniture. As a mosque, the Turks have also beautified it at an expense of millions.

The building covers a square of 241 feet, forming interiorly a Greek cross. Its dome is 175 feet high. Turks added four minarets and many inscriptions taken from the Koran. Earthquakes have at different times destroyed parts of the building, which have been replaced by the Turks.

Tradition says that somewhere in the church are three pieces of the cross upon which Christ was crucified. Before the Turks came the cross was exposed to view three days a year, just before Easter. During the siege of the city, tradition says, the cross was walled up by the priests, and the Turks have been unable to find it. Tradition also says that in 628 the principal part of the cross, together with the spear and sponge, rested in St. Sophia, and was later taken to Jerusalem.

To the modern Greeks the church is Sancta Sophia; to the people of Justinian's day it was the Aghia Sophia, and to the Moslem of today it is the Aya Sofia Djami.

THERE'S MONEY IN CHICKENS A POULTRYMAN'S BUDJET

Carleton County Man Who Made a Profit of 71 Per Cent.

On Jan. 1, to find out how much profit there was in the poultry business, I decided to keep track of all receipts and expenditures, writes J. C. Stuart, of Carleton County, in the Farmers' Advocate. I had on hand 100 hens, and as I have a small farm of 50 acres I do not thresh, and all feed for the hens, except some of the scraps from the table, must be purchased. I therefore had to buy all the feed. The following is an account of my receipts and expenditures for ten months:

Receipts.

Jan.—30 dozen and 2 eggs, sold at 50c a dozen	$15 08
Feb.—14½ dozen at 50c a dozen	7 25
March—127 dozen at 28½c	36 19
April—141¼ dozen at 34½c	48 73
May—152 dozen at 33c	49 12
June—123½ dozen at 31½c	38 90
July—77 dozen at 28c	21 56
Aug.—71 2-3 dozen at 30c	21 50
Sept.—83 dozen at 33c	27 39
Oct.—27½ dozen at 40 cents	11 00
Total receipts for eggs	$276 72
Poultry sold	34 00
Poultry sold	7 00
Poultry sold	5 00
Young stock on hand, 68 pullets, 78 cockerels; these are worth $1.00 each	118 00
Making a total of receipts	$440 72

I paid out for feed, etc., as follows:

Jan. 1	$12.00
Jan. 3—Corn, bran, rolled oats	15 00
Feb.—Wheat, oyster shell	18 00
March—Corn	10 00
March 13—Oyster shell, grit	2 00
April 27—Wheat, bran	7 00
April 28—Chick food	3 00
April 5—4 gallons coal oil	1 00
April 26—4 gallons coal oil	1 00
June 3—Wheat, etc.	11 85
June 5—Cracked corn	4 20
June 11—Wheat	7 50
July 1—Wheat	2 00
July 15—Feed	7 75
Aug. 1—Corn	1 85
Aug. 3—Wheat	11 10
Sept. 2—Wheat	7 55
Oct. 1—Wheat, etc.	6 40
Total expenditure	$129 20
Making a credit balance of	$311 52

As I was going on a lecture tour, the present account is for only ten months. I expect that when I have sold my cockerels and the eggs which are being laid at present the profit will be increased slightly, making a profit for the year of slightly over $3.00 per hen. I have on hand at the present time 94 old hens, six having died during the year. This makes a profit of 71 per cent. These eggs were all sold to a retail grocer in the city of Ottawa. Eggs were shipped once a week in good clean boxes, holding one dozen each, and guaranteed fresh.

I live 25 miles from the city, seven miles from an express office, and ship my eggs by express. The dealer pays this, and allows me one cent per dozen extra to pay for the boxes, as these make a very handy package for delivery.

You will see by my distance from the city and railroad that I am no more favorably situated than any farmer in the eastern parts of Canada, and I found that I could not possibly supply the demand of this grocer, consequently any farmer can get the same prices I am getting for my eggs.

THE TURK'S NAME.

"The Turks are first heard of about the year 520," writes Professor G. H. Parker, in Chamber's Journal, "and it is made perfectly clear that they were merely a petty, neglected tribe of the Hun, who had been ironworkers for the leading politfcal tribes for many generations; and were originally so called from a prominent mountain of peculiar helmet-like shape on the lower slopes of which their encampments were pitched. The Turkish word for 'helmet' was then (and possibly is now) t'uhlkueh, an imperfect Chinese way of spelling syllabically the native sound approaching torko."

£15,000 TO THE DOGS.

A sum of £15,000 has been expended in furnishing the new "Dogs' Club,' a considerable proportion of that sum being devoted to the fitting and equipment of the dogs' cloakroom," says the Daily Citizen.

"Hitherto it has been the custom to say that the most miserably circumstanced of poor people have been condemned to a dog's life. Alack, thousands of them will not moan, in their deespair, that if they could but snatch the crumbs from the dogs' luxurious tables they would be more than grateful."

WORSE THAN ACCIDENTS.

"If the people who live in squalor were hurt in some big accident or afflicted by some epidemic, everyone would be all sympathy and generosity; cannot they see that to be born in such surroundings is worse than any big accident, and that thee sin and hopelessness to which they wake up every day is worse than the most malignant epidemic?"—Margaret MacDonald. (From the memoir by her husband, J Ramsay MacDonald.)

THOMAS H. DOUGLAS, a 97-year-old negro, who died recently in St. Catharines, where he had lived for 80 years. He drove a stage coach four-in-hand between Queenston and Hamilton for years before the coming of the railway, and of later years was employed as coachman by several medical men.

NEW HATS AND HEALTH

Well-Dressed People Usually of Happy Disposition.

"Although the origin of dress lies in vanity, and vanity is to be deplored, the man or woman who takes a pride in being well groomed and well dressed is healthier as well as happier than those who are too intelligently superior to find joy in a new spring hat."

Dr. Elizabeth Sloan Chesser's audience at the Institute of Hygiene at London, Eng., rustled self-consciously, and the well-dressed ones looked up satisfied.

Dr. Chesser's lecture was full of like good things. She defended ladies' evening dress on the ground that it was from muffling up the neck and pressing on the arteries, the throat, and the spinal cord, that neuralgia, headache, and colds often resulted.

"Health laws" were laid down by the doctor as follows:

Dress in the minimum of clothes which will keep you warm in the conditions you have to live in, and wear that little as loose as possible.

Be active, and go in for exercise, whatever the weather may be like.

Keep the feet well covered and impervious to the damp.

The secret of health is not to worry very much about it. Remember that work is the law of health.

A Harley street physician whom she knew gave this advice to many of his neurotic and dyspeptic patients: "If you want to get well, keep young, and live for a very long time, have twelve of a family and do your own washing."

Mr. J. Grant Ramsay placed heredity, food, clothing, and surroundings in their due order of vital consideration in regard to health. He never knew anybody healthy if badly fed or badly clothed, even in the best surroundings.

THE UNION SCHOOL

Founded in '49

(Vivit post funera virtus.)

O dost thou mind the Union School
Of London's early day?
Its broad Elizabethan roof
Has long since passed away.
Its generous acreage of ground,
With boys and girls at play.

The ante-knickerbocker days,
The days of ladies' "hoops."
Of pegtop pants and "copper-toes,"
And leather peaks like scoops;
When shinty was a thriving sport,
Professed by old and young,
When Campbell, mayor of London town,
Did swipe the nimble bung.

Then "Nick"—for so the man was called—
While wintry blizzards blew,
Wearing no gloves or overcoat,
Condemned the shivering crew
Of lesser wights who did resort
To mufflers, mitts and lugs—
What time the very pump befroze,
And lots of water jugs.
But later on when thinning blood
And unrelenting gale
Came o'er the ancient paladin,
He reached up to the nail,
Took down the winter overcoat,
The shoes of helpful felt,
And waited for the happier time
When things begin to melt.

O dost thou hear the noise again,
The blazing box-stove's roar?
Again, the prince of disputants,
"Nick Wilson" holds the floor.
Before his keen and busy eye
The shirker comes to grief;
He shrivels up the acted lie,
Like to an autumn leaf.
The youth who laid the carven trap,
All primed with powdered slate,
Perished, as doth the weak-kneed lamb
In foaming mountain 'spate.'
"Take hold and work." The battle cry
Rang like the knell of doom.
See how the nimble pencils fly
Throughout the ample room
—Like Grecian Athlete Johnny H.,
Pressed onward to the board,
The sable space, conspicuous place
Where the result was scored.

For knowledge ever is a race—
A course, where all may run,
Yet the most ardent in the chase
May lose the promised "bun."
But Johnny ciphered as he crept,
Like panther on the prey,
And though his brethren waked or slept,
Was oft the winning J.

But—if this was the outer court
Of learning's dread abode,
A man of an Olympic port
And royal eye bestrode—
As the Colossus did at Rhodes—
The inner haunts of fame;
Boyle was his name (which, when baptized),
James Beattie Boyle became.

A Majesty sate on his face
Which pen may not depict,
And when he met deserving case,
O thunder—how he licked.

A few—a picked and chosen few—
Drank knowledge from his tank
And plucked of Learning's flowers which grew
On this Parnassic bank.

There Vergil did retell the tale,
He told long years ago,
Of Hector and the wooden Horse,
And all the rest you know.
The ferule, for the time, did cease
Its diabolic swings,
And time put on some axle grease,
And spread his crumpled wings.

Inspector Boyle, no greater heart,
In all these years has passed,
Instructor, chieftain, guide and friend,
A warrior to the last.

His was the arm to stay the frail
When "Asses Bridge" they crossed,
Or seek the imperilled shaking sail
In seas of Syntax lost.

We hope to see him standing firm,
Amid creation's wrack;
Undaunted as the forest lord—
A lion—clothed in black.

Barney, the Great, has passed away,
And "Nick" has followed on,
And many of the host they led.
Have long been dead and gone.
The boys and girls are scattered wide
And some have "climbed the stair,"
And some are seated on the Bench
Or aldermanic chair,
But Barney Boyle is not forgot
We mind the lightning's flash,
Though we forget the chimney pot
It knocked to utter smash.
Not in the city council-house,
Not in the courts of law,
Senate nor stump nor anywhere,
Are heard such powers of jaw.

If any man has been a knave
Or paltry party tool;
He never learned the rudiments
In that Old Union School.

Peace to its ashes, good old shop!
It always "made the grade"
It always bore a "bumper crop,"
Ten thousand times it "paid."

At Mount Kisco is the summer home of William Sloane, which he calls Merestead, Hamilton L. Happin has a place there known as Aratorn. The handsome country place of Gustavus T. Kirby at Mount Kisco is known as Tanracken Farm. The name is that of an Indian chief who at one time with others owned the property and deeded it to those from whom the title started and was ultimately vested in the present owner.

The country place of Dr. William Tod Helmuth at East Hampton is known as Kumonin. It has caused much mystery and generally has to be explained. The significance of the word is practically a joke, meaning, "come on in," but spelled to cause a little mystery, which it cleverly succeeds in doing.

MINARD'S LINIMENT CURES DISTEMPER.

Would Spring Out Of Her Bed.

She Was So Nervous.

Diseases of the nervous system are very common. All the organs of the body may be sound while the nerve centres may be affected.

Many women become run down and worn out by household cares and duties never ending, and sooner or later find themselves with shattered nerves and weak hearts.

On the first sign of any weakness of the heart or nerves, flagging energy or physical breakdown, do not wait until your case becomes hopeless.

Get a remedy which will at once quiet the nerves, strengthen the heart, and build up the whole system.

Avail yourself of a perfect cure by using Milburn's Heart and Nerve Pills.

Mrs. E. Beers, Upper Main River, N.B., writes:—"I have used Milburn's Heart and Nerve Pills for over three months. I was so nervous I would imagine everything, and would spring out of my bed at night.

I tried the doctors, but they did me no good. My brother advised me to take Milburn's Heart and Nerve Pills, which I did, and I can give them the greatest thanks, as they completely cured me."

A Bubbly Fountain That Is Movable and Makes Sanitary Drinking Easy

This sanitary fountain, just installed in Washington opposite the White House, is a decided improvement over the usual style, which forces the drinker to stoop uncomfortably. A rubber hose carries the water to the bottom of the drinking cup, where it continually runs over so that one's lips do not come in contact with the metal.

John A. Smith and His Remarkable Rheumatism Remedy Cured Himself First and Now Proposes to Cure the World.

Cured Many Cases of 30 and 40 Years Standing

On the theory "that seeing is believing," John A. Smith, of Milwaukee, wants everyone to try his remedy for the cure of rheumatism at his expense. For that reason he proposes to send a 50c box FREE to everyone who will inclose this advertisement and send name and address. Mr. Smith has suffered all the agony and torture from rheumatism, tried all the remedies known, and yet utterly failed to find relief.

At times he was so helpless that he had to take morphine, and after considerable doctoring he gave up in despair. He began studying into the causes of rheumatism, and after much experimenting, finally found a combination of drugs which completely cured him. The result was so beneficial to his entire system that he called his new-found remedy "Gloria Tonic." Those of his friends, relatives and neighbors suffering from rheumatism were next cured, and Mr. Smith concluded to offer his remedy to the world. But he found the task a difficult one, as nearly everybody had tried a hundred or more remedies and they couldn't be made to believe that there was such a thing as a cure for rheumatism. But an old gentleman from Seguin, Texas, U. S. A., wrote him saying if Mr. Smith would send him a sample he would try it, but as he had suffered over 30 years and wasted a fortune with doctors and advertised remedies, he wouldn't buy anything more, until he knew it was worth something. The sample was sent, he purchased more, and the result was astonishing. He was completely cured. This gave Mr. Smith a new idea, and ever since that time he has been sending out free sample boxes to all who apply.

At the U. C. College, Toronto, it cured Mrs. J. Whitley, who had suffered excruciatingly. Fred K. McDonald writes from Sunny Brae, N. S., that "Gloria Tonic" has cured him of a case of rheumatism of many years' standing. From Ambrose M. Melanson, Meteghan River, Digby County, N. S., comes a letter that he has been cured of a severe case.

Even the first sample box cured Mrs. B. Brett, at 12 Powell street, Guelph, Ont. Two boxes left Mrs. Geo. Wright, of Coaticook, Que., well and happy.

Mrs. T. Deline, West Plain, Ont., writes that she could scarcely dress herself because of rheumatism, but that "Gloria Tonic" has completely cured her. Mr. George Lees, of Dundas, Ont., says that he tried many different remedies, but found no relief until he tried "Gloria Tonic," while Clarence A. Scott writes from Tooleton, N. B., that he feels that he owes his life to this great remedy.

A case of 13 years' suffering is reported by James McFarlan, of L'Amable, Ont., but "Gloria Tonic" cured it quickly. Even prominent physicians have to admit that "Gloria Tonic" is a positive success, among them Doctor Quintero, of the University of Venezuela, to whom it was recommended by the United States consul. In hundreds of other instances the result has been the same. It cured many cases which defied hospitals, drugs and electricity, among them persons upwards of 80 years of age.

Mr. Smith will send a 50c box FREE, also his illustrated book on rheumatism, absolutely free of charge, to any reader of The Advertiser, for he is anxious that everybody should profit by his good fortune. Simply tear out this advertisement and send it together with your name and address, to

This Wife and Mother Wishes to tell you FREE How She Stopped Her Husband's Drinking

By all Means Write to Her and Learn how She did it.

For over 20 years James Anderson of 395 Elm Avenue, Hillburn, N.Y., U.S.A., was a very hard drinker. His case seemed a hopeless one, but ten years ago his wife in their own little home, gave him a simple remedy which much to her delight stopped his drinking entirely.

To make sure that the remedy was responsible for this happy result she also tried it on her brother and several of her neighbors. It was successful in every case. None of them has touched a drop of intoxicating liquor since.

She now wishes everyone who has drunkenness in their homes to try this simple remedy for she feels sure that it will do as much for others as it has for her. It can be given secretly if desired, and without cost she will gladly and willingly tell you what it is. All you have to do is write her a letter asking her how she cured her husband of drinking and she will reply by return mail in a sealed envelope. As she has nothing to sell do not send her money. Simply send a letter with all confidence to Mrs. Margaret Anderson at the address given above, taking care to write your name and full address plainly. (We earnestly advise every one of our readers who wishes to cure a dear one of drunkenness to write to this lady today. Her offer is a sincere one.)

AWFUL DEVASTATION WROUGHT BY BULGARIAN BATTERIES IN STREETS OF KIRK-KILISSEH.

© BY UNDERWOOD & UNDERWOOD.

This photograph of one of the streets of Kirk-Kilisseh was taken immediately after the battle of that name as the victorous Bulgarian army pushed into the city. The Turkish army was driven from its strong position by the Bulgars in a fierce fight, in which the Bulgarian artillery fire made the Turkish position untenable and reduced whole sections of the town to ruins.

BRITAIN'S WONDERFUL TRADE
$5,000,000 IN 10 MONTHS

Figures for October Reach High Water Mark—Exports of the Manufactures Rose Rapidly.

BRITAIN'S WONDERFUL TRADE ao

Britain's trade boom continues. Last month's exports (not including re-exports) were the highest on record, topping the figure of October, 1911, by £4,787,679, and that of Octobeer, 1910, by £10,642,750. The total for the first ten months of this year was £27,892,387 more than last year, and £46,348,301 more than the total of 1910. The import and export figures for last month and the ten months ending with October are as under:

	Imports.	Exports.
Oct., 1912 ...	£ 71,026,531	£ 48,333,982
Ten months, 1912 ...	599,947,503	402,616,577

The imports for the month were £10,321,762 more than in October last year, and £13,015,909 more than in October, 1910. The re-exports in the month amounted to £10,044,724 (an increase of £1,371,617), and to £92,964,662 in the ten months (a rise of £6,757,941).

Manufactured Goods.

Once again the increase in exports was mainly due to manufactured goods, which rose by £3,526,241. The only articles showing declines on the month were wood manufactures £10,956 less), cotton (£168,721 lower), silk (£37,274 down), and chemicals (£22,469 decrease). Every category, however, shows a huge increase, totalling in all to £8,260,904 over the record for October, 1910.

The improvement in the export of manufactures in the ten months amounts to £19,022,514 over the 1911 figures, and to £35,201,566 over the figures of two years ago, the principal increases this year being:

Iron and steel	£3,719,742
Electrical goods	1,458,481
Machinery	2,057,878
New ships	1,260,870
Cotton	1,843,478
Apparel	1,694,944
Railway carriages, motor-cars, cycles, etc.	1,063,838

Growth of Food Imports.

Cotton this year is no less than £15,115,766 better than in 1910. Imports in the ten months increased by £49,886,840, the main growth being due to £10,668,931 more "grain and flour"—a sure sign that our prosperity is responsible for bringing more food into the country.

It will be noticed that the total external trade this year (imports and exports) already amounts to over £1,000,000,000. This is the first time it has happened at the end of ten months.

The first time the £1,000,000,000 was reached was at the end of 1907, which, it will be remembered was a great boom year. This year will beat that record magnificently.

"DOESN'T WANT CHARITY", SAYS SIR GEORGE ROSS

What are the conditions which make the peril so great? If her exchequer is being so impoverished and she is no longer able to defend herself, then let us out of our abundance replenish that exchequer and see that the peril is overcome and if this weary Titan is struggling under the weight of the burden, for God's sake let Canada take some part of the burden and let us relieve her distress, but let us know the reason why.

Canadian Help If Need Is Shown.

Let there be no secrecy about the fact of the case. Let those men who have hidden in their bosom the cause of her peril and danger not ask this House, nor any House, to vote one dollar or fifteen million dollars until they have made it as plain as a sunbeam that the Empire is in danger. If the Empire is in danger Canada is in danger, and Canada will have no hesitation to come to the rescue to the best of her ability, but only on a proof that the necessity has occurred, and that the consequences of refusal will be most serious. That is my view of a grant. I am prepared to give everything that is required to save the situation, but I must know what it is, and I would tell the leader of the House that when the bill comes down he must disclose to us what are the dangers to be encountered. We must know the reason why the forces should be strengthened without delay and why at this juncture it is the duty of Canada to render reasonable and necessary aid. Notice the word juncture. That means that there is a conjunction of circumstances. They may not have ever occurred before. They existed when this speech was brought down. They may not exist tomorrow. What is the conjunction?

What Is the Emergency?

Is there a league of Europe against us? Is the unmeasured and immeasurable power of Germany against her? Let us know in language unmistakable, and let the people of Canada, if asked to vote their money, do it, as I am sure they will, with the utmost readiness, provided the occasion requires it. But that is not all I want to say upon the question of naval defence. Do the members of this honorable House believe that an emergency grant, be it ever so large, is the best way to defend the Empire, or to defend Canada? I admit that a grant in an emergency is an exceptional thing. The blind man standing by the wayside received a sixpence in his tin cup, and for the moment that is the best that you can do for him, but if you are going to provide against his poverty and for his future comfort you must provide more. A naval policy on the basis of this speech is no policy at all. It is not a policy, it is a grant—an offering, a contribution. It is the money in the hat or the money in the blind man's tin cup. It is generous, kind and charitable, but Britain does not want charity.

Is Britain on Her Knees?

A minister has said somewhere during the summer, I do not know that I could name the minister, although I have a vague suspicion that I know who he was, and somewhere, I do not know just where, that England was on her knees. If she is on her knees let us place her there by all means. If a few millions to get her on her feet, let us place her thereb yall means. If she is on her knees, it is the first time in the history of Great Britain that she ever was. At one time she met a combination of every European power, from Blenheim down to Waterloo, and she never went on her knees to anybody, but planted her flag wherever the sun shone, on every parallel of latitude, exacted tribute from every nation on the globe, sailed the seven seas, and never bowed her head in submission to any kingdom, principality or power, and she is not going to do it now. That is my opinion, but I do not know as much as the ministers know.

Contribution Is Not a Policy.

I am unfortunately ignorant. I had no conference with His Majesty's Government in London. Nothing was disclosed to me. I am speaking without any information. Nobody has taken me into his confidence. I am very much at sea. In fact I have almost some justification for feeling offended. Every member of the Senate may have some justification, but after a while when the box will be opened and the secret will be out we will know the basis of this great policy, and we will be asked to exercise our judgment in regard to it, not in a political or party or penurious sense, but in that generosity which characterized Canada in all these matters. But I was going to say this is not the naval policy, it is a generous contribution. What is our naval policy? The policy that was on the statute-book. It is a policy which means something. It is the foundation of a navy which under proper circumstances will grow to be a source of strength to Canada and to Great Britain, it requires two minutes to sign a check and a few minutes more to draw the bills of exchange, and in a few minutes more the contribution is in the postal car and on its way to the Bank of England. What policy is that? Every businessman does that every day. There is no policy about it.

The Real Canadian Policy.

But think of the other method. You are building ships in your own navy yard. There is some policy about that. That is the Canadian policy. It gets at the very root of the matter. We have a navy yard in which to build ships. You are using Canadian steel, and there is no better, in the construction of these ships. We send our nickel to England to harden her steel against the guns of her enemy. We have our own nickel and steel. We have timber of every kind necessary to construct the ship, and that is an important thing. We give employment to our people and such skilled labor that will come and add thus to our population. We will man those ships with Canadian sailors. We have 98,000 fishermen today hardened by the stiff breezes of the gulf and by the perils of the sea to help us, as I am sorry to say some of them did the Americans during the Spanish war. No better men could be found to face the perils of the deep and to stand by the admiral on the bridge as he swings out his signal to hear down on the enemy. That is a Canadian policy. It looms large in itself. It presents before us ideals which we require to present to the young Canadian so that he may raise to the full stature of Canadian manhood.

How the British Navy Began.

What would England be without her navy? The first pulsation of true English nationality was in the days of the Commonwealth and Cromwell had laid the foundation of the British navy. He was confronted by the Dutch who were then the greatest sailors on the seas and whose admiral, Van Tromp, had nailed a broom to the mast head to indicate that he had swept Britain from the sea. The sturdy old Republican thought that England's dignity was insulted and straightway went to repair the breech and make preparations for a navy that would do credit to his land, and out of that has grown the British navy. We must begin sometime. We have an abundant revenue and now is a good time to begin. Our mineral resources are being developed, and it is a good time to draw on them. There is a good spirit among the people, a good time to give it something to do; and we have a great commerce, about one-half of which comes by sea. Who should defend it if not ourselves? Who profits by it? We in Canada, and shall we sit back and loiter in our places in Parliament and by our firesides and say to England you have nineteen million tons of merchant shipping, and so many ironclads and cruisers and gunboats and you can defend us; why should you not, for we are a British possession? That is not the Canadian spirit we want, nor is that the way to develop whatever spirit may be necessary for the purposes of defence.

Our Navy Should Be Building.

There should be no retreat from that position. Our navy should have been under way already. It might be required and we should be prepared to aid England wherever necessary. We should be prepared to send a warship to assist Australia in maintaining the defence of the Pacific unit, and in this way fill some proper efficient place in the navy of the Empire. Then if we give this money the vessels will be built in British navy yards. That is not so bad, but will it be spent to aid the present British navy, or will it be made to take the place of ships that would have been built by Britain had this grant not have been made? What are the conditions of the grant? Will the vessels float in Canadian waters when built? Will they go to the Mediterranean? Will they be identified as Canadian warships? If in a hot fight a vessel behaved in a proper way would our sailors receive the honor? The whole thing is as shady as the mists of Ben Nevis. No fog of Newfoundland is more difficult to penetrate than this naval policy to which honorable gentlemen refer in the address. I pass it over. I have said enough, perhaps too much, and will let it go until it is disclosed in the other House, and later to our benighted minds in this chamber a few days hence.

BENJAMIN DISRAELI

never existed. But there is nothing in my own heart that convinces me it is impossible, and, if it is be an illusion, it is an illusion worthy of the gods. I wish to be with you, to live with you, never to be away from you—I care not where, in heaven or on earth, or in the water under the earth.

"You told me once you required a year to study a character; our year has nearly elapsed, and your meditations may have made you dissatisfied with mine. What my feelings may be if I find that I am doomed ever to waste my affections, and that a blight is ever to fall on a heart which nature intended to be the shrine of sensibility, it matters not. At present I will believe that my fate is indissolubly bound up with yours, until your voice, or your conduct, assures me that all this time I have labored under a delusion.

I Am Mad With Love.

"Dec. 30, 1838.

"I am mad with love. My passion is frenzy. The prospect of our immediate meeting overwhelms and entrances me. I pass my nights and days in scenes of strange and fascinating rapture. Lose not a moment unnecessarily in coming. I cannot wait. I can scarcely believe in the joy of our immediate meeting. Will the time ever pass away until that rapturous moment?

"Dec. 31.

"The happiest of New Year's; and, indeed, I hope and believe it will be the happiest of our lives.

"Jan. 22, 1839.

"'Tis twilight after a lovely day, but I have no dark thoughts. All my motions are soft and glowing as the sky. Sweetest and dearest of women, our united loves shall flow like two rivers—as gentle and as clear. Bless you, and bless you.

"Jan. 23.

"I love you, if possible, each day more truly and more tenderly. All my hopes of happiness in life are centered in your sweet affections, and I wish only to be the solace and glory of your life."

A Serious Quarrel.

The story of the first and last serious quarrel of these two lovers is told in a letter from Disraeli, "found after Lady Beaconsfield's death carefully deposited among her papers."

The quarrel was about her money. She evidently had heard that he wanted her for that, and when he began to speak he says: "I succeeded so far as to be desired to quit your house for ever. I have recourse, therefore, to this miserable method of communicating with you. . . . Much as if it were the night before my execution."

"I avow, when I first made my advances to you, I was influenced by no romantic feelings. My father had long wished me to marry. My settling in life was the implied, though not stipulated, condition of a disposition of his property, which would have been convenient to me. I myself, about to commence a practical career, wished for the solace of a home, and shrunk from all the torturing passions of intrigue. I was not blind to worldly advantages in such an alliance, but I had already proved that my heart was not to be purchased. I found you in sorrow, and that heart was touched. I found you, as I thought, amiable, tender, and yet acute, and gifted with no ordinary mind—one whom I could look upon with pride as the partner of my life, who could sympathize with all my projects and feelings, console me in the moments of depression, share my hour of triumph, and work with me for our honor and happiness.

"Now for your fortune; I write the sheer truth. That fortune proved to be so much less than I, or the world, imagined. It was, in fact, as far as I was concerned, a fortune which could not benefit me in the slightest degree; it was merely a jointure, not greater than your station required; enough to maintain your establishment and gratify your private tastes. To eat and to sleep in that house, and nominally to call it mine—these could be only objects for a penniless adventurer. Was this an inducement for me to sacrifice my sweet liberty, and that indefinite future which is one of the charms of existence? No, when months ago I told you one day that there was only one link between us, I felt that my heart was intricably engaged to you, and but for that I would have terminated our acquaintance. From that moment I devoted to you all the passion of my being. Alas! it has been poured upon the sand.

"No; I would not condescend to be the minion of a princess, and not all the gold of Ophir should ever lead me to the altar. Far different are the qualities which I require in the sweet participator of my existence. My nature demands that my life should be perpetual love."

Come.

To this "Mary Anne" replies:

"For God's sake come to me. I am ill and almost distracted. I will answer all you wish. . . . I am devoted to you."

And she was for thirty tender years.

The Only Really Illustrated Bible

Heretofore the word "illustrated," as applied to a Bible, meant merely a few allegorical "pictures" of Biblical events taken from any source and "conveniently" placed in any part of the book, merely as embellishment inserts, but not directly alongside and explanatory of the verse intended to typify or make plain; but our publishers, at an outlay of $50,000, prepared accurate illustrations DESCRIPTIVE of the VERSE which they accompany, and placed directly next to the verse of the scene described — the only place it can be looked for or found quickly, the only place the illustration is a help to you—making this the FIRST and ONLY complete ILLUSTRATED Bible.

$50,000 Spent For Illustrations

More than 600 beautiful art pictures, by the world's greatest artists, are printed with the type matter, where they at once explain the subjects which they accompany. These magnificent illustrations alone cost $50,000. In addition thereto are full-page plates of the world-famous Tissot collection in colors. These beautiful color engravings are also carefully selected, with the object of further making plain obscure passages in this greatest of books. It can truthfully be said that never before have illustrations so vividly portrayed their subjects and embodied in them the spirit of living reality.

A Bad Heart Its Cause and Cure

Many, Firmly Convinced They Are Dying of Heart Trouble, Have Often the Strongest Hearts.

Sometimes you wake up at night, heart throbbing like a steam engine. Your breathing is short and irregular; pains shoot through the chest and abdomen, and cause horrible anxiety.

Your trouble isn't with the heart at all. These sensations are the outcome of indigestion, which has caused gas to form on the stomach and press against the heart.

Just read what happened to Isaac Malloux, of Belle River, Ont.:

"Three months ago I was a weak, sickly man. My appetite was poor, food fermented in my stomach, I had sour risings and indigestion. At night I would often weaken with gas in the stomach and heart palpitation.

"I consulted my doctor and used remedies that my friends advised. Nothing helped.

"One day I received a sample of Dr. Hamilton's Pills, and my cure commenced. Today I have a vigorous appetite, strong heart action, and no sign of indigestion. I feel younger and healthier than ever before."

Your druggist or storekeeper sells Dr. Hamilton's Pills, 25c per box or five boxes for $1.00. By mail from The Catarrhozone Co., Buffalo, N. Y., and Kingston, Canada.

A Successful Treatment

Mrs. Edward Kennedy, of Meriden, Conn., 40 years old, was advised by her Physician to try Dr. Martell's Female Pills. She did so with wonderful results. Thousands of others would say the same. Twenty years the standard. At your Druggist. ywt
