Poetry.

QUEENSTOWN.

Since Bard Anon, has ceased to write
Old Queenstown's noble praise,
I now shall take my pen in hand
And follow in his ways.
The Woodville poet, somehow thought
Anon's fair muse disgrace;
But he is now in Lady Smith,
A dwelling with his race.
And now I undertake to tell
How Queenstown's projects shine;
I live in ancient castle here,
My name is Ranadine.
And here, alike all other towns,
You find the young and old,
You find the timid and the shy,
You find the gay and bold.

Thy glorious face
Is leaning towards me and its holy
light
Shines in upon my lonely dwelling
place—
And there is no more night.

On my benched knee,
I recognize Thy purpose clearly shown;
My vision Thou hast dimmed, that I may see Thyself—Thyself alone.

I have sought to fear;
This darkness is the shadow of Thy wing,
Beneath it I am almost sacred,—here
Can come no evil thing.

Oh, I seem to stand Trembling, where foot of mortal ne'er hath been,
Wrapped in the radiance of Thy sinless
hand,
Which eye hath never seen.

Visions come and go,— Shapes of resplendent beauty round me throng;
From angel lips I seem to hear the flow
Of soft and holy song.

It is nothing now—
When heaven is ripening on my sight—
less eyes,
When airs from Paradise refresh my brow,
The earth in darkness lies

In a purer clime.
My being fills with rapture—waves of thought
Roll in upon my spirit—strains sublime
Break over me unsought.

Give me now my lyre!
I feel the strings of a gift divine;
Within my bosom glows unearthly fire,
Lit by no skill of mine.

One-Sided Woman.

The woman who gives her entire attention to any one, regards her so at the risk of spiritual loss to herself, no matter
if it is home-making, housekeeping, care of children, business, self cultivation in any form, religion; her relations with life
in general are thrown out of the normal, and her power is weakened, says the Pittsburg Despatch. To great development in any direction, to the exclusion of everything else, makes a one-sided
character, usually unlovely and unloving.
An all-round experience in life begets love and sympathy for others, and is the very best teacher we can have.

Treatment for Mosquito Bites.

These torments, in some localities, render what might otherwise be a comparatively happy existence, a miserable failure. Some infants and children suffer terribly from the poisonous stings. I once saw a case where an infant three months old received a sting of the outer corner of one eye. The eye closed with the swelling, and suppuration set in; and after careful attention it was healed, but much anxiety was felt about the eye for 4 time. In spite of careful screening, one will often find its way into the children's room at night, and being unnoted, will do serious damage.

Fortunately all do not suffer to the same extent from the poison, but I have seen a child's hand swelled to twice its natural size from three stings on the hand and wrist. If the bite is fresh, an application of listerine will sometimes neutralize the poison altogether. Applications must be made gently, as rubbing will swelling and a more inflamed condition.
A thick cream made of ivory soap and applied at once will remove the itching, then as there is no scratching the bite soon disappears. For some serious bites that are some hours old and are "angry"
and swollen, make a bath of half a pint of hot water and one teaspoonful of saleratus; bathe gently, as hot as the flesh can stand. Keep it hot and repeat often;
if on the hands let the child play in the water and it will soon disappear. Try in every way possible to prevent their becoming stung, and save them the discomfort and suffering. Very often extremely dangerous conditions arise from blood poisoning by these summer pests.

MILTON'S PRAYER OF PA- TIENCE.

I am old and blind!
Men point at me as smitten by God's frown;
Afflicted and deserted of my kind,
Yet am I not cast down.
I am weak, yet strong;
I murmur not that I no longer see;
Poor, old, and helpless, I the more belong
Father Supreme, to Thee.
O merciful One!
When men are farthest, then art Thou most near;
When friends pass by, my weakness t
shun,
The chariot I hear.

Thy glorious face
Is leaning towards me and its holy
light
Shines in upon my lonely dwelling
place—
And there is no more night.

TEMPERANCE COLUMN.

TRIPLED WITH DANGER.

"I was sitting at the table of an Irish merchant in Sigo a few years ago. He had eight children. He had his wine and brandy on the table, and, of course, asked me to drink, and I had to give my reasons for declining. This gave me an opportunity to put in a little temperance, and, while I was making my little speech, my eye caught a man who could truthfully say, 'No relative or friend of mine ever fell through intemperance.' I saw that this had struck him. His knife and fork fell from his hand, and he remained silent for some seconds.

"Well," said he, at length, "I am not that man. My first Sunday-school superintendent was a man of genial spirit and noble mind. He went into the wine trade, and died a drunkard before he was forty. My first class leader, I believe, was a good, intelligent, useful man; but he, too, yielded to the habit of intemperance and died a drunkard. My own father suffered through intemperance."

"Yes," I exclaimed, "and you yourself are speaking before your friends and your children the instruments of death which slew your first Sunday-school superintendent, your first class leader, and your father. The very rope with which they were hung you are adjusting to catch your children. I can not afford to put my head into such a halter as that."

W. Taylor in London Prim. Methodist.

THE BAR-ROOM.

Young men have not your eyes been frequently attracted to a sign having the following ominous word on it: "Beer?" Avoid the place; it is no misnomer. The experience of thousands has proved to be—

A bar to respectability;
A bar to honor;
A bar to happiness;
A bar to domestic felicity;
Every day proves it to be—
The road to degradation;
The road to vice;
The road to the gambler's hell;
The road to the brothel;
The road to poverty;
The road to wretchedness;
The road to want;
The road to robbery;
The road to murder;
The road to prison;
The road to the gallows;
The road to the drunkard's grave;
The road to hell.

Some, it is true, do not pass through all these stages; but intemperance, persisted in, always ends in the drunkard's grave, and we have too much reason to fear, in hell.

The bar-room is truly—
The curse of the drunkard's wife;
The curse of the drunkard's child;
The curse of the drunkard's home.

Those only who have known the bitterness of being a drunkard's wife or child can know the misery and the horror of a drunkard's home.

Young men! before you enter the bar-room, stop! ponder the path of your feet, ere it be too late!

Man of family! flee the bar-room, as you would in honor to fulfil the pledge of love made to her who is the companion of your joys and of your sorrows.—Baltimore American.

Available Testimony.

The following story was told by Major Menes of a Vincennes lawyer who appeared for the defendant in a trial by jury and put on the witness stand a boy from whose testimony he expected to gain a great deal. In the confusion of the moment, the story told by the boy was greatly to the detriment of the defendant, and the attorney set to work to show that the boy was "worthless."

"What is your occupation?" he asked the boy.

"I work on my father's farm," the witness replied.

"You don't do much but sit around, do you?"

"Well, I help my father."

"But you're worthless, aren't you?"

Was the attorney's decisive question.

"I don't know whether I am or not," retorted the witness warmly.

"Then the attorney took another tack. "Your father's a worthless man, isn't he?"

"Well, he works about the farm."

The attorney then fastened his eye which gleamed with triumph on the jury and nailed the boy with a glance from the other and said, "Isn't it true that your father doesn't do enough work to prevent his being called worthless?"

The boy had chafed under these unflattering questions, and, emboldened by his courage, he said loudly: "If you want to know so bad whether my father's worthless, ask him. There he is on the jury."—Indianapolis Journal.

Believed in Signs.

Stubb—You remember that merchant over the way who had a "Please Close the Door" sign in his window?

Penn—Yes.

Stubb—Well, the other day the sheriff went over and put a padlock on his door.

Telescope Proprietor—Stop up, ladies and gentlemen, and view the planet Mars. One penny, mum.

Old Lady—Oh, my! Hain't it round and smooth!

"Will the bald-headed gentleman please step away from the front of the instrument!"—Success.

Mark Twain's rule—"When in doubt tell the truth."—would be a good motto for assessors to print at the head of schedules.

An Innocent Oath.

Governor Roosevelt is always glad of a laugh. A short time ago he enjoyed an opportunity and paid for it. The incident happened while he was visiting Cornell University during a convention. The students, glad of a chance to display their enthusiasm, entertained the governor at one of the fraternity houses. Just as he was about to leave, one of his staff said to him:

"Governor, the boys have the foundation of a capital library, and I think they would appreciate a copy of your 'Rough Riders.'"

"All right, boys," said the governor heartily, "I'll be glad to send you a copy with my compliments. The book would be a but small return for your hospitality."

Whereupon one of the students broke in excitedly:

"That's so, governor, I've read it."

A Thoughtful Husband.

"You asked me to bring you some pin money this morning," said the young husband.

"Yes," she replied with an air of expectancy.

"Well," said he, "I thought I might as well save you a trip down town, so I brought you a paper of pins instead."

Lime-water will sweeten jars and jugs which soap and water fail to cleanse. It is admirable for cleaning milk vessels and nursing bottles.

Beasily Cured.

A correspondent thus tells how a man addicted to the spitting habit was cured: The captain of an Atlantic steamship was at a loss how to induce a passenger to desist from the filthy habit of spitting on deck. Among the passengers was a gentleman well known in Toronto forty years ago, who undertook to stop him if a quartermaster was placed at his disposal. The captain closed with the offer, and the man was directed to fetch a bucket of water and mop, and to follow the offender up and down the deck. The result was completely satisfactory.

DEATH OF MRS. BROWN.

The death occurred at Margerville, at eleven o'clock on Wednesday morning, of Mrs. Charles Brown, who had been ill for about ten days with pneumonia, and during which illness she was attended by Miss Tweedie of the Victoria Hospital staff. The late Mrs. Brown, who was a most estimable lady, was sixty-eight years of age. She was the only daughter of the late Capt. F. A. DeVeber. She leaves a beloved husband and two daughters, Mrs. Thos. Robinson of Lower St. Mary's and Miss Gertrude at home. The funeral took place from Mr. Brown's residence on Saturday forenoon at ten o'clock and service was held at the Episcopal church at Lower St. Mary's—Gleason.

MILL COMPLETED.

Mr. Charles Brown has completed the construction of his new grist mill at this place. Grinding of buckwheat was commenced the latter part of last week and judges pronounce the flour the best ever seen here. Mr. Brown has spared no expense to make the mill first-class and has it equipped with the very latest machinery that could be purchased. The mill has a grinding capacity of over thirty bushels per hour. Mr. Brown has also a first-class miller (Mr. Redstone), in charge of the mill and his patrons will receive nothing but first-class work. There is also a cracker for cracking grain for feeding purposes attached to the mill. Mr. Brown deserves great praise in having supplies a long felt want in Gagetown and surrounding places by the erection of a grist mill.

Went to Texas.

Mr. George Palmer, of Victoria, Carleton Co., has gone to San Antonio, Texas for the benefit of his health, where he will spend the winter. Mr. Palmer was formerly a resident of Central Hamstead Queens Co.

DEATH AT McDONALD'S CORNER.

Interment took place in the McDonald's Corner cemetery. Mr. Lloyd leaves to mourn his loss a widow, one son and a large circle of friends.

'Growing Times' Indeed!

These are certainly growing times for the 'Family Herald and Weekly Star,' of Montreal, and its readers, for 'growing times' are heard more and more of that great paper this year. It is a serious question for the publishers whether they will be able to meet the demand for their handsome premium pictures. The people of Canada certainly never had such a dollar's worth offered them. Quite a number of copies of 'Alma' and 'Pussy Willows' have been received by subscribers in this neighborhood and they are greatly admired. A gentleman remarked on seeing the little picture 'Alma,' 'Why that picture alone is worth five dollars of any man's money.' We notice both pictures are sent to every yearly subscriber to the 'Family Herald and Weekly Star.'

PERSONAL.

We are pleased to note that Mr. R. T. Babbitt, who has been confined to his room, through sickness, for the past few days, is improving.

Mr. Chas. Babbitt, who has been ill for three weeks, is recovering.

Mr. Jas. Allingham spent Sunday at Mr. John Corbett's, Summerhill.

Mr. W. A. McKeague has returned from Boston.

ORONOTO.

Dec. 4.—Mr. George L. Brown, Judge of Probates for Sunbury County, is very ill. He is attended by Dr. Peake.

Charles Grass, of this place, succeeded in trapping a wild animal one night last week, the like of which was never seen before in these parts. It was four feet long, of a grayish color, and was pronounced by authorities to be a kind of lynx. When found it had a fox trap on each fore leg and resisted its captor savagely until it was killed.

Mr. John Gilmer has his new house about completed, and expects to occupy it soon.

The funeral of the late Mrs. McMonagle took place yesterday and was largely attended. Interment was made at the 'Court House' cemetery. Services at the house and grave were conducted by Rev. O. P. Brown, Pastor of Margerville Baptist church. Two sons of deceased, Messrs. Miles and Thayer McMonagle were present. Two sons and one daughter reside in the 'States.' Deceased was 68 years old.

Vail-McMullin.

On Wednesday morning last at 8 o'clock a. m., St. John's church, Gagetown, was the scene of a very happy and interesting event, when Mr. Harry Vail was united in marriage to Miss Cecie McMullin, daughter of the late Edward McMullin. The ceremony was performed by the Rev. Mr. Cody, of Oak Point.

The bride looked charming in a becoming travelling suit of lawn-colored broadcloth and was unattended.

After the marriage ceremony the happy couple repaired to their home where a wedding breakfast was served, only the near relatives of the contracting parties being present. After breakfast the bridal party drove to Welford and took the train for St. John.

The evening before his marriage Mr. Vail was presented with an address and purse by his Gagetown gentleman friends.

The many useful and costly presents, received by the bride show the high esteem in which she is held by a large circle of friends.

The following are among the presents: Silver butter dish, Mrs. McMullin, mother of the bride; Silver Caster, Mrs. Bowring, St. John; silver pickle dish, Mrs. Armstrong, pit vases, Mr. Charles McMullin; cut glass set, Mr. Amos McMullin; silver cake basket, Miss Mary Vail; pair vases, George and Gilbert Browning; 1 doz. silver knives and forks, Mr. Albert Vail; 1 doz. silver dessert spoons, Miss Cecie McMullin; 1 doz. silver teaspoons, Mrs. Harris, Boston; lemonade set, Mrs. Wm. The December Number of the De-lin-eator is Called the Yuletide Number.

And with its innumerable illustrations is certainly one of the most artistic magazines ever sent out. As to being the best choice literary matter from the pens of well-known authors. The Household and Social discussions are ably dealt with and are of real worth. The delightful humorous fantasy over the Plum Pudding, by John Kendrick Bangs, is thoroughly witty and enjoyable. There is an admirably illustrated article on the Dewey celebration in New York. An interesting story, The Poppy Lady, by Cornelia Atwood Pratt, dispenses the impression that the nation of artistic temperaments is hostile to domestic happiness. Fidelio, by Helen Choate Prince, is a dainty sketch of the implicit, odd devotion animal pets have for masters and friends. A Christmas poem, The Legend of the Yuletide, by Edith M. Thomas, is an impressive effort; in a somewhat lighter strain are the verses, Kisses Kept are Wasted, by Edmund Vance Cooke. A timely and suggestive article is Same Women's occupations, by Lafayette McLaws. Concluding the series The Great Scourges of Humanity, by Grace Peckham Murray, M. D., is a valuable paper on Cerebral Disorders. In College News Carolyn Halsted gives an interesting analysis of the inspiration and strength of college friendships. In the department Club Women and Club Life, Helen M. Winslow writes charmingly of the 'Woman's Club of Kansas. A very clever and instructive article by Emma Hayward gives directions for making Christmas gifts. Of particular interest are the Household topics; Inexpensive Christmas Gifts and Some Holiday Desserts. In addition, the regular departments are unusually bright and original—Social Observances, by Mrs. Frank Learned, The Milliner, The Dressmaker, Crocheting, Tatting, Knitting, the New-eat Books, etc.

All's Well That Ends Well.

Hardly less agitated, Sir Frederic tries to disengage himself, and having succeeded, rushes off, after the intruder, while Lady Haworth sinks down upon the grass covering her face with her hands, only conscious that something terrible—she hardly knows what—is going to happen. How long she remains there she has no idea, but many minutes cannot have elapsed when her husband comes back to her side, lifts her—not ungently, but without a touch of his usual and until now untiring tenderness—from the ground, and half leads, half carries her back to the drawing-room, with such a strange, stern, terrible look upon his face, that May can only sink helplessly back upon the cushions of the sofa on which he has placed her and cover her face with both little shaking hands, too much terrified even to weep.

For a few moments the silence in the room is unbroken save by Sir Frederic's hurried steps as he moves up and down the room, and by the faintest of sounds, but he has not time to speak; he has to look at the woman who is sitting on the sofa, and address his wife.

"May," he says, in a quiet, stern voice, which falls upon Lady Haworth's heart like a blow, "I am waiting."

May lifts her head and tries to speak, but the words die away upon her lips as she meets the accusing, reproachful glance of her husband's eyes, and the pretty head droops once more.

"Have you nothing to say to me?" he asks, after a short pause. "Have you any explanation to give me of the scene of which I was an unwilling spectator last night?"

Once more Lady Haworth tries to speak; once more she fails. "I am sorry to distress you so terribly," she continues, "but I have nothing to say. The person who was with me," she speaks with a great effort, and her face is deadly pale, "was not my husband. I could not tell him, so that I am forced—"

"Ah!" The exclamation breaks from her like a little cry of relief, and Sir Frederic's eyes flash fire as he thinks that all her agitation and anxiety are for the man who has escaped his just anger, and not for the pain which she is giving him—her husband.

"So that I am forced to come to you for the explanation which is mine by every right," he goes on, mastering his emotion by an effort which drained every shade of color from his cheeks and lips. "What is the meaning of the touching tenderness which I surprised so inconceivably?"

"Fred," she begins, faintly, lifting her head and turning towards him without raising his eyes to his face, "be patient with me; do not be angry; I have done nothing so very wrong; I have—"

"Done nothing wrong," he repeats, with passionate disdain. "What is your standard of right and wrong? It must differ strangely from mine. Good Heavens! Is it possible! Am I mad or dreaming? I return home unexpectedly and find my wife—the woman I loved and trusted, the mother of my children—with a strange man, who sits at my appearance; and when I ask her for the explanation she says she has done nothing wrong! Who is that man? he continues, going over to the sofa, and taking the two slender wrists in his, forces her to face him. "I must be answered—I will have no preparation—no falsehood!"

She throws back her head, and her eyes meet his with a passionate, indignant glance. "Falseness! Have you ever found me untruthful that you insult me so?"

"Insult you?" he repeats, disdainfully. "I could hardly insult you after what I witnessed tonight. Who is that man? What brought him here tonight?"

There is a short breathless silence; then very slowly, very regretfully, May answers: "I cannot tell you," she says, faintly.

"You cannot tell me!" he repeats, with a strange menace in his voice. "You cannot! But I must know!"

"And I cannot tell you," she answers, unsteadily. "Oh! Fred, do not press me! Dearest, I am grieved, grieved beyond measure, to hurt you even a little; but try to believe me, my darling; it is not what you think. I shall never see him again—there is no need." so that I am

She has risen in her earnestness and has drawn near him, putting one little hand on his arm; but he shakes it off with contemptuous swiftness.

"Believe you!" he repeats, passionately. "How can I ever believe you? I trusted you as I loved you, with my whole heart, and you have betrayed me treacherously and basely. You feigned love—"

She interrupts him quickly. "I feign! I love you—you know that I love you with my whole heart!" she cries, passionately. "Fred, do you forget that I have been your wife, your true and loving wife, for nearly three years, and that I have never—"

She pauses abruptly, the slow hot color rises in her face and her eyes droop. "Ah! you cannot finish that sentence," he says, bitterly; "you have never deceived me! Never! But once, and that has been continuously from the time I saw you first. I thought you true, and steadfast, and—"

His voice falls. Angry as he is with her, his pain and anguish are greater than his anger. He has loved her so deeply, so passionately, so entirely, and she is so false—so false! His very heart seems breaking with the weight of sorrow which has been so suddenly laid upon him. The anger dies out of his face, and the first sign of a little with the misery he strives so vainly to struggle against.

At the first signs of softening on the face that has never until now looked with anger upon her, May springs to her husband's side and clasps her hand upon his arm in earnest supplication.

"Fred, dearest, listen to me. I have done wrong truly, but I have not deceived you as you think. Husband, listen to me. Try to trust me, dear, and to believe that I have never wronged you in thought, or word, or deed. Darling, don't turn from me! You know I love you—you know that all my heart is yours, so, as it has been and ever will be, Oh, forgive me if I have pained you; forgive me if I have—"

"You have done me no wrong," she says, her face pale as death, "and great chiding soles are shaking the slender frame with terrible violence; May bows her head upon her husband's arm in uncontrollable emotion; but Sir Frederic is not inclined to yield to prayers or entreaties until the mystery has been cleared up. His voice is, however, gentler now, and his touch less cold, as he gently places her upon a chair, and, standing beside her, until the nervous paroxysm has partly subsided; then, when she holds out a timid, trembling hand, he takes it into his strong clasp.

"You are better?" he said, gently. "You can listen to me? Forgive me if I was harsh; but I have suffered a lifetime of misery during the last half hour! May, what is this secret you are keeping from me so carefully? Who is the man you met to-night, and with whom I saw you sitting in the hall, and who has just been deceiving me, and who is this man?"

"I do not know," she says, faintly, letting her head droop against her husband's arm as he stands beside her. "You do not know?" he says, slowly, the tenderness dying out of his face.

"No," she repeats, wearily. "And yet you must know, as to say the least of it, a very unusual hour—and he dies at my approach!"

"Won't you trust me, Fred?" she says, tremulously. "Oh, darling, believe me, when I tell you there is no sin—only—oh, if I could tell you—if I could tell you!"

"May, listen to me. Nothing you can have done can hurt me so cruelly as this suspense—nothing could equal this torture! Think what you are letting me suspect—think to what degrading suspicions you are exposing yourself—May, be frank with me!" he entreats, passionately—"think how I have loved you—think of what I must suffer in the thought—the awful thought that you are false—you, my wife!"

"False!" she repeats, pitiously. "Ah! no, I never loved you more dearly than now! Fred, try and trust me. I am not false; and yet—oh, if I could tell you—but tell you!"

"This is childish!" he says, angrily, disengaging his hand from her clasp. "You expect me to believe—"

He broke off with a little cry of exultation, and anger, and pain, which makes May lift her head in surprise, and follow the direction of his.

At the window she can see the outline of a tall, dark form, enveloped in a cloak; but before the cry of alarm and surprise which rises to her lips can find vent her husband has thrown open the window, and the stranger has advanced into the room.

He is a tall, slim, graceful man, of one or two-and-twenty, and eminently handsome in a dark, foreign style of beauty, which could not fail to be attractive.

White to his lips, Sir Frederic stands facing him, while May rises, leaning on a table near her for support.

"You must pardon such an intrusion," the stranger said, bowing with grave deference first to Sir Frederic and then to Lady Haworth, "but after my flight I thought it wiser to return and corroborate the explanation which Lady Haworth has probably given you, Sir Frederic."

He speaks easily and pleasantly, and with the least foreign accent giving piquancy to his speech.

"Lady Haworth refuses me any explanation!" Sir Frederic answers, haughtily.

"That is because she fears your indignation for an act of disobedience which is trifling in itself, but which—have I your permission to speak, Lady Haworth?"

May inclines her head slightly, but she says nothing; her lips are too dry and parched for speech.

"I first had the pleasure of seeing Lady Haworth at Homburg, two months ago," the stranger continues in the same easy manner. "You will remember your short stay there, and your careful avoidance of the gaming-tables at the Kursaal. I think you never entered them, Sir Frederic! No doubt, no doubt; but Lady Haworth had the natural curiosity of her sex, and one day when you were absent for an hour or two, she—"

"But I had so earnestly entreated you begins Sir Frederic, turning to his wife, and May springs forward.

"I know you had forbidden it," she says, pitifully; but I was so curious. I was so curious. I was wrong I know; but once there—oh my husband, forgive me!—I did not try to resist the temptation! I played and lost, and played and lost, until I lost more than I could pay; and but for this gentleman's kindness I should have—"

"It was but for a moment," the stranger continues, seeing that May's emotion choked her. "Lady Haworth was agitated and distressed, but she allowed me to lead her out of the gambling rooms, and it was arranged that I should meet her the following day to receive the money she had allowed me to advance. But that night I was called away from Homburg, and I left without having communicated with her ladyship. Three days ago chance brought me to this neighborhood, and with a romantic desire for an adventure—for which I cannot forgive myself now—I begged Lady Haworth to meet me to-night in the grounds. If I had known the pain it would have caused her, I would have cut off my right hand first!"

There is no mistaking the sincerity and earnestness of the man's explanation, and Sir Frederic is so overjoyed, and relieved that he can only hold out his hand and mutter some incoherent thanks for the kindness shown to his wife, while he offers Monsieur de la Freynay hospitality for the night—an offer which the latter declines, as he is expected at the friend's with whom he is staying; but he accepts an invitation to dinner on the following day, kisses Lady Haworth's hand with a low, earnestly spoken "Forgive me!" and Sir Frederic walks down the avenue with him, leaving May to recover the agitation she had borne.

Lady Haworth's thoughts are very mixed as she awaits her husband's return. He has such a horror of gambling, born not merely from his strict sense of honor and rectitude, but from the fact that a brother to whom he was most attached had committed suicide at a gaming table, and had been buried in the sea, and Sir Frederic is so earnest and so sincere; and she stands trembling and pale, waiting for her husband as a culprit might wait for his judge. But Sir Frederic is too overjoyed at the falseness of his suspicions, and too full of regret at the anger he has shown, to reproach his wife for her deception; and he is hardly less moved than himself when he takes her into his strong arms, and at the very same moment they utter an earnest "Forgive me!" and there is a confused sound of kisses and tender words and a sob or two in the pretty drawing-room.

"I will never, never deceive you again!" May whispers, presently. "I have been very wretched, Fred!"

"My poor darling, how could I be such a brute! If you get into a scrape again, love, you must come to your husband, and not accept assistance from good-looking foreigners. You must trust me all in all or not at all, May!"

"Forgive me, Fred, I was very wrong!"

"And forgive me, darling; I was unparadoxically cross; but if we were all punished as we deserved, sweet, few of us would escape a flogging."

"And I should have a severe flogging," said May, half smiling, half tremulous; but her husband silenced the sweet lips in a very effectual manner by the application of his own.

The lesson is a salutary one. Lady Haworth never dreams of deceiving her husband, and Sir Frederic has learned that it is not always prudent to judge by appearances.

(The End.)

Slaves of Circumstances.

All of us at certain periods of our existence are obliged to adjust our lives to altered conditions, which are sometimes of our own choosing, but often are forced upon us by circumstances. It requires a good deal of philosophy to accept the inevitable with good grace and to make the best of the situation, especially if, as is so often the case, a great wave of adversity engulfs us and our ships go down freighted with all that we consider necessary to our happiness.

In such a case nothing remains but to see what is possible to save from the wreck, and to reconstruct our lives on the new lines which fate has left possible for us. Often this patient readjustment is pathetically heroic.

An accident happens, for instance, whereby a man or woman full of life and happiness is stricken down and condemned to lead the life of an invalid. After the first great shock and impotent despair he or she begins slowly and painfully to enter the new existence with brave endurance. It is not uncommon to see a woman who, bereaved of husband and children, becomes a ministering angel, full of pity and sympathy for others; or to know people suddenly deprived of life long luxury show, in facing disaster, a heroism worthy of all admiration.

The world is full of these reconstructed lives, and it is to the credit of our human nature that we seldom succumb to misfortune.

Little May was showing the pictures in the album to the visitor, and on coming to the picture of her father's first wife she said: "That's my eldest mother."

End-of-the-Century Offer.

AN EXTRAORDINARILY LIBERAL PROPOSITION.

-------------------	---	--------------------

FIRST, and properly, in making a choice of reading for the home you select your own home paper. However good may be the reading of other papers, there is none that comes home so closely to you as your local weekly. It is to further increase this interest by adding to our lists that the following liberal proposition is made to subscribers. We have been careful to form combinations only where we knew we were touching safe ground and don't thoroughly recommend the publications offered. Read carefully every word of this offer for it means a saving of money to you.

Montreal Daily Herald

A GREAT METROPOLITAN DAILY

WE are pleased to announce that we have been able to make most extraordinarily liberal arrangements with the publishers of one of the greatest of Canadian dailies—The Montreal Daily Herald.

The Herald has achieved a well-deserved reputation for the remarkable value it gives its readers. It is one of the most enterprising newspapers in the Dominion, and in thousands of home circles is welcomed on account of the great interest it manifests in subjects of special interest to the family. It is admittedly the favorite daily of the women of Canada. To the farmer and business man, it appeals through its accurate market reports and business columns. To the young men, through the attention it bestows on clean, manly sport. To the lover of fiction, through the excellent stories appearing regularly in its columns. To the politician, through the calm and moderate tone of its editorial expressions.

The only reason which prompted the publishers of The Herald to make us the offer, which enables us to club the two papers at the extraordinarily low price given below, is their desire to immediately introduce the Daily Herald in large numbers in this neighborhood. The offer they now make will hold good for a limited time only.

It should be mentioned that subscribers to The Herald during the next few months will enjoy to the full the opportunity which this paper is offering to all readers to secure valuable books at merely nominal figures.

The . . .	A Copy for Every Subscriber
-----------	-----------------------------

IN the best sense of the term this is an Ideal Cook Book—ideal in being a practical book—a book which the housewife will want to keep constantly by her side and can depend on, because of the simplicity and reliability of every recipe. Starting with a chapter on soups, naturally the first course, throughout its three hundred pages and over there are to be found more than 1,000 recipes, winding section there is a department entitled "The Doctor," in which are recipes selected from excellent authorities, and which will be found invaluable where the doctor is not readily available. The recipes are numbered throughout the book, and each is prefaced with a list of the ingredients called for by the recipe, rendering it unnecessary for the housewife to hand some old-fashioned cook book, which would be a waste of space and time.
