Mr. David Orlikow (Winnipeg North): Mr. Speaker, when the Minister of Transport (Mr. Jamieson) began this debate last week he said that this was one of the most important pieces of legislation with which Parliament would be concerned this session. When I looked at my file, which holds reports covering only a small fraction of the problems concerning automobile safety, I realized the minister had not exaggerated. If anything, he underplayed the seriousness of the problem.

Today I called the National Safety Council in order to get its most recent figures on deaths, injuries and property damage caused by automobile accidents. The most recent figures cover 1967 and 1968. The figures for 1969 are not yet at hand, but I am sure they will not show any drastic reduction. According to the Dominion Bureau of Statistics, 5,412 people died as a result of automobile accidents in 1967, 165,000 people were injured, and there were over 330,000 claims for property damage. The estimate of property damage in that year as a result of automobile accidents was in the neighbourhood of $650 million. In 1968 there was a slight reduction in the number of deaths caused by automobile accidents. In that year the figure was 5,375, but the number of people injured increased to 172,718. The number of claims for property damage rose to 360,000.

It is because of this kind of situation that finally in 1970, in both Canada and the United States, we are beginning to enact legislation which, if enforced, will cut the toll of deaths, injuries and property damage caused by car accidents. And if we are doing this in 1970 it is because a few individuals in the United States, one or two in Canada, and a few organizations put the spotlight of publicity on defects found in cars over the last 15 or 20 years.

In this situation the role of the automobile companies in Canada has been a disgraceful one, a despicable one. Mr. Speaker, let us face the facts. Automobile companies in Canada are 98 per cent controlled by the automobile companies in the United States, and from the beginning they have rejected the idea that there was anything basically wrong with their product.

Automobile companies tried to convince the public that automobile accidents were caused by improper driving habits or by defects in roads. Of course, some automobile accidents have resulted from those causes. But the automobile companies also tried to convey the idea that there was nothing wrong with automobiles themselves or, if there was, the companies had done everything possible to correct the defects.

• (8:10 p.m.)

Mr. Speaker, I am sure members of this House know that the person most responsible for publicizing the completely uncaring attitude and negligence of the automobile companies was Ralph Nader in the United States. I am sure that members of this House will know, too, that when Ralph Nader's arguments began to have an impact on the United States public, General Motors, the biggest automobile company in the world, or their lawyers, hired investigators to undertake detailed research into Ralph Nader's private life. What they expected to find, I do not know; and what they expected to do with the information, if they got any, I do not know. Whether the information they were after had anything to do with cars, or whether somebody hoped to find something about him that might be used to detract from his work, I do not know. But I do know that when the information was made public, General Motors had to beat a hasty retreat and apologize.

Mr. Nader did this work in the United States. As the hon. member from Edmonton West (Mr. Lambert) mentioned, a former Conservative Member of Parliament, Mr. Heward Grafftey, was also responsible for publicizing the need for very careful examination of the construction of automobiles. He also stressed the need for government inspection so that the defects which caused accidents could be controlled. The hon. member for Edmonton West then proceeded to ignore everything which Mr. Grafftey had suggested, when he argued that this legislation was too tough on the companies. The whole point of what Mr. Nader and Mr. Grafftey were saying to the public was that we had to get a great deal tougher with the automobile companies.

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a question of privilege. In regard to the comments made by the hon. member for Winnipeg North (Mr. Orlikow), I think that any remarks I made this afternoon were not in the sense he indicated, namely, that we were too tough on the companies. What I said was that there were some problems in regard to administration. I would not want those words to go unchallenged because they are a direct misinterpretation, albeit unintentional, of what I said.

[Mr. Orlikow.]

Mr. Orlikow: Mr. Speaker, I do not want to spend time debating with the hon. member for Edmonton West what he said or what I interpreted. I will be content to let the record speak for itself. Anybody interested in the subject can draw their own conclusions from the speech made by the hon. member for Edmonton West and my own.

I am glad that the Minister of Transport, on behalf of the government of Canada, is bringing forward the motor vehicle safety bill which will set standards for the first time. I am concerned because the minister in his speech admitted rather candidly that this legislation will bear the United States stamp of approval and that the possibility of Canadian standards varying substantially from those in the United States is virtually nil. This reflects a continuing abdication by this federal government in regard to legislating standards in all areas in accordance with the needs of the Canadian people. Canadian auto safety standards will, in effect, be set in Washington where there has been, and still is, consistent opposition by the automobile industry which has so far frustrated genuine efforts in this field. The United States government has tended to accept standards set by the industry.

I am afraid that in adopting similar standards—the 29 points which will be dealt with by regulation later—we will in effect be adopting the United States standards which have consistently proven to be completely inadequate. Besides that, I presume the safety features required for Canada's climate, such as rear-window defrosters, will not be included because they are not necessary in a large part of the United States; therefore, neither the government nor the auto companies will make them a standard feature of United States automobile manufacturers.

Even if this is true of the United States, it certainly is not true of Canada and we should make it a requirement of new car manufacture that rear-window defrosters are included. I drive a Swedish car, a Volvo, which has a rear-window defroster, and I can tell the minister that it works very effectively even in the Ottawa winter. A clear rear-window makes it possible for me to be a better and safer driver. I hope this feature will be included in the Canadian legislation. In effect, the legislation is meaningless unless Canadian auto safety standards are specifically spelled out.

Mr. Speaker, a few moments ago I said that the United States automobile companies have been conspicuous by their refusal not only to take the lead in promoting safer automobiles but in their opposition to anybody else getting involved in this field. In hearings before a U.S. Senate subcommittee a few years ago headed by Senator Philip Hart, Senator Edward Kennedy was questioning the president of General Motors. He inquired how much profit General Motors had made in the year before the hearings. After some protest it was admitted that in the last fiscal year General Motors had made $1,500 million profit. When Senator Kennedy pressed a question to elicit how much had been spent in research for automobile safety, the president of General Motors had to admit that the figure was less than $5 million. As Senator Kennedy pointed out, that was less than one-twentieth of one per cent of their profit.

When people like Ralph Nader bring to the attention of the public the research findings of engineers and medical scientists at universities such as Cornell, Harvard, California, Minnesota and institutions such as the Liberty Mutual Insurance Company, and John F. Gordon, the president of General Motors, ridicules amateur engineers for trying to take over responsibilities that belong to competent engineers in the industry, it makes one stop and think.

Indeed, the only honest thing Mr. Gordon said was that the responsibility lay with the engineers of the industry but, in fact, the industry had completely abdicated its responsibility. The institutions which I have mentioned, Cornell, Harvard, California and Minnesota, uncovered auto designs which led to 40,000 fatalities per year in the United States at that time. They found that cars were likely to have doors pop open when there was an accident, had cardboard-like roof structures, uprootable seats, flying cushions, flying metal dash-knobs, chisel-like rear-view mirrors, and above all dangerous parts of the steering wheel. These were just a few of the 100-odd design defects found by the research engineers.

• (8:20 p.m.)

The United States Optometric Foundation performed a series of studies, and the projects director, Dr. Merrill J. Allen, reported:

> Not a single car provides a suitable visual environment for daytime driving.

Similarly, a Cornell group established substantial variations in the strength of door-latches among various makes, but all were below minimum adequate safety regulations. The Liberty Mutual Insurance Company in the United States some years ago arranged for the construction of what they called safe survival cars. The company took four standard 1960 Chevrolets, removed the gingerbread, the chrome geegaws and unsafe features, and replaced them with dozens of safety improvements that would have added not more than $10 to the cost of production. Among those improvements were collapsible steering assemblies, automatic fire protection systems, roll bars to strengthen roofs and safety braking devices.

Every one of these safety features has been known to Detroit for years. Detroit engineers have known for years that impacts against steering columns are responsible for a large percentage of serious injury-producing accidents and deaths. But when it was suggested to General Motors that collapsible steering wheel assemblies should be built into General Motors cars, the company said that was not practical. However, one year later when the heat was turned on by the Senate investigating committee, lo and behold, the company installed collapsible steering wheel assemblies in certain cars as an optional feature. Now, a few years later, after considerable pressure by those who are really interested in automobile safety, collapsible steering assemblies are to be made part of an automobile's standard equipment.

It is interesting to note that automobile companies are more concerned about the appearance of cars, because that is important from the point of view of selling them. You change the appearance when you want to introduce a new model. But safety features which protect the lives and well-being of passengers have been made available only very recently as optional features for which the purchaser has to pay more money. It has been demonstrated conclusively that automobile companies have not cared about safety because in their opinion safety features do not sell cars. At hearings in 1965, General

Motors chairman, Frederic Donner, said that the——decision to offer an item as optional equipment recognizes what I believe is the basic freedom of the customer to pay the cost of tailoring a car to his own specifications or rejecting whatever he may not want.

In other words, if the customer wants a safety feature, he must pay for it. I have already said that styling will sell a car, but apparently safety features will not. Similarly, faulty tires have been responsible for a substantial percentage of automobile accidents and fatalities. In 1965 John Floberg, secretary and general counsel of the Firestone Tire and Rubber Company, made this comment at the end of the hearings before the United States subcommittee:

I submit that the best standard, the time-tested and proved standard and the appropriate free enterprise standard of quality should be the one that has in the case of tires, as in the case of other consumer products, worked most satisfactorily; namely, the discriminating and sophisticated taste of the American consumer.

Senator Gaylord Nelson of Wisconsin has introduced several bills covering tire standards. I will refer to them soon. It became obvious during Congressional hearings that the consumer really could not choose because he was never given information on which to base his choice; therefore, he could make no meaningful choice when it came to tires. I wish to refer to some of Senator Nelson's discoveries, because I think we realize that what applies to cars in the United States also applies to cars in Canada; defects in United States cars become apparent in Canadian cars and measures that will make cars safe in the United States are also applicable in Canada. Among several comments that Senator Nelson made on February 23, 1965, are the following, as reported in the Congressional Record. It is significant that only now, almost five years later, are we in this country and in the United States beginning to consider legislation in this field. The report I have in my hand reads in part as follows:

If cars were built so that protection could be provided for the head alone, at least one out of five people who are now dying in auto accidents would be saved.

If cars were built with seat and shoulder belts which would hold people in the car in an accident, thousands of lives would be saved: If a person is thrown from the car, the chance of death is five times as great.

If cars were built with only three basic changes, occupants could probably survive any crash up to 35 miles per hour—and statistics show that 87 per cent of all accidents occur at impact speed of 35 miles per hour or below. The three basic changes are: shoulder harnesses; doors which will stay closed in a crash; and collapsible steering shafts—

The need for changes is obvious. But one factor impedes progress in this area. That factor is the conviction in Detroit that 'safety doesn't sell.' It is the stylist who reigns supreme in the automobile industry, not the safety and engineering experts.

Senator Nelson advocated the following safety features on motor vehicles: collapsible steering wheels, shoulder harness safety-belt anchors, specific types of safety glass, smog removing exhaust systems, standardized transmission controls to avoid confusion, and uniform bumper heights. We used to think that bumpers were designed to protect cars from damage in accidents, but if one looks at a car one will notice that they are becoming fancier and fancier and will only hurt a person or a car coming into contact with them. The automobile companies are making bumpers like that because they are not so much interested in safety as in the look of the car.

In 1966 Senator Nelson began to press for a bill to set tire standards. It would have given the consumer some protection against faulty tires. Disturbing stories came to light in the inquiries he conducted and the evidence submitted. The following was found:

• (8:30 p.m.)

That many new automobiles are being sold with tires which are designed to carry the normal load for which the automobile was designed.

I submit, Mr. Speaker, that this still applies. It was also found:

That size labels on tires—the only basis a motorist has for determining load capacity—were never meant to indicate the precise size. An 8.00 by 14 tire, which official tables indicate should carry an 1,180-pound load, may actually be smaller than a 7.50 by 14 tire, which is supposed to carry only 1,090 pounds.

That quality labels on tires, such as deluxe, premium, and first-line, have no meaning whatever and "there is no way to tell one tire grade from another."

Senator Nelson reported that he wrote to the presidents of the four major automobile manufacturing firms to ask them directly whether the tires supplied with their new cars were adequate to carry the loads for which the cars were designed. Not one of them replied with an unqualified yes.

American Motors replied that its cars could safely carry a full load, provided—

I think this should be noted.

—the tires were specially inflated.

General Motors stated that the design guide in selecting tires was three passengers, but that its sedans could safely carry six passengers plus 200 pounds of luggage, provided the tires were specially inflated.

Chrysler said simply that its tires were adequate "provided they are properly maintained."

Ford Motor Co. said that it has been customary to make tire selections on the basis of a three-passenger load. But Ford said its sedans could carry six passengers plus luggage if the tires were specially inflated.

This was the testimony they gave Senator Nelson. Consumers who purchased the cars were never told that special measures were required for inflating the tires. In other words, consumers had no way of knowing whether the tires they were purchasing were of adequate quality to give them the protection they needed.

I do not have time to put it on the record this evening, but Senator Nelson was able to document hundreds of cases where cars with new tires which had been used for less than 1,000 or 2,000 miles had been involved in serous accidents because the tires collapsed. Why? It was not because they were necessarily inadequately built, but because the people operating the cars had not been given the information that the tires simply could not carry the load which they expected them to carry. I refer to sedans and station wagons that people use to take their families on camping trips, etc. This was the record in 1965 and 1966, and it has not really changed. In November, 1968, Ralph Nader was able to publicize a partially completed study by the Federal Trade Commission staff in the United States which said:

—U.S. auto dealers and manufacturers have not lived up to guarantees they give on new cars—

The study says that auto industry "quality control . . . has apparently yielded under the pressure to produce more cars."

It said warranties are designed primarily to help sell cars and have not resulted in improved quality or service.

The report further stated:

"The failure of the warranty to provide new car buyers with substantially defect-free cars . . . results from slack quality control at the manufacturer's level, combined with soaring car sales of dealers, shortages of skilled mechanics and inadequate allowance to dealers for pre-delivery inspection."

We know that since Mr. Nader and others began publicizing the defects in cars, the car manufacturers have finally realized that when they discover a number of cars, sometimes hundreds, thousands or tens of thousands, have defects they should not do as they did until a couple of years ago; I refer to their very quietly informing the dealers that there was something wrong with the Buick, Cadillac, Chrysler or Ford. In an almost surreptitious manner the dealer would then get in touch with the purchaser and try to persuade him to bring his car in to be checked, to see if the defect was as serious as the manufacturer thought it was. The manufacturers now make regular public announcements when defects are discovered. This was not done for a long time. They scoffed when Ralph Nader and Heward Grafftey publicized the built-in defects in Canadian and United States cars. Public attention forced the automobile companies to make these announcements.

This is the record of the North American automobile manufacturers. It is a record of refusal to face up to their responsibilities, one of refusing to spend money on research to make automobiles safe. As I mentioned earlier, research has been left to universities and non-profit organizations. Publicity has been carried out by organizations such as the Consumers' Union in the United States. The automobile companies have dragged their feet.

I am worried about two aspects of this bill. I am worried that the standards the minister will be working with, and the regulations which will be drafted to cover the 29 points which he proposes to bring under review by means of this bill, are to a large extent those which have been agreed by the United States auto manufacturers. I submit this is not good enough.

I submit that the government should be prepared to establish a research and testing organization financed by it. I feel this should be undertaken by the government in co-operation with one or more Canadian universities to carry out scientific and objective research and testing of automobiles. We should not leave it, as we have in the past, to the automobile companies. As the record proves very conclusively, they are completely disinterested. They have done as little as possible. I submit that the leopard has not changed its spots; it is the same leopard. They will do no more than they are forced to by the government and by public opinion.

The second major reservation I have about this legislation is, what will happen after it is passed? Who will police the legislation? Who will ensure that the automobile companies live up to the specifications and regulations drafted by the government? I am concerned about the hesitancy of this government and the government of the United States to act. I am concerned about the desire of this government to pare the budget and reduce the number of civil servants. I am concerned because even though there will be legislation and laws will be passed, there will be little, if any, enforcement of the regulations and therefore little, if any, inducement for the automobile companies to live up to the rules and regulations which will be enacted.

If the minister means business, and if the government wants to protect the Canadian people, it will not be enough to simply pass this law. It will not be enough for the department simply to draft regulations and to get an order in council proclaiming them. A very effective agency, with sufficient staff will be required to police the automobile companies to ensure that they do what up until now they have not been prepared to do, that is, build cars which are safe, cars which the people of Canada can drive with reasonable assurance that they are as safe as can be built. Hopefully, this legislation will become effective so that the automobile companies will be required to manufacture 1971 model cars in such a manner that consumers will know they are safe.

• (8:40 p.m.)

Mr. R. L. Whiting (Halton): Mr. Speaker, I wish to participate in this debate because many of the ramifications of Bill C-137 find a focal point in my constituency of Halton. This bill affects the actual lives of people, and this very month hundreds of Canadian citizens will become victims of accidents involving automobiles.

Transversing Halton are two of the busiest highways in Canada and, indeed, on this continent. I refer to the Queen Elizabeth Way and the Macdonald-Cartier Freeway. Literally tens of thousands of automobiles and other vehicles use these highways each day. Hardly a day passes when someone is not brought into our hospitals because of an accident due to drivers who may be careless or unthinking, or whose vehicles may be mechanically defective. Although this bill cannot and does not attempt to regulate highway traffic, it is nevertheless encouraging to know that the minister, in introducing Bill C-137, indicated that his department is co-operating with the provinces to improve safety standards in connection with highway traffic throughout Canada.

In Halton we have one of Canada's largest automobile and truck manufacturers, Ford of Canada. Their standards of practice and their attitudes toward measures of safety are of vital concern to practically every Canadian. The Canadian automotive companies producing north American-type cars and trucks have for the past two model years been complying voluntarily with United States federal safety standards legislation. This has been done primarily because of the Canada-U.S. automotive trade pact which allows free passage of automotive vehicles and parts across the Canada-U.S. border.

It follows that when cars are being produced in both countries for sale in both countries, it is most efficient and economic to have them identical. This leads up to the desire of all Canadian automotive companies that the standards be identical with those now in force in the United States. Any variation would lead to horrendous problems in the manufacturing area and would, in effect, work against the program as contained in the auto pact. Any deviation would also result in higher manufacturing costs which undoubtedly would be passed on, at least in part, to the consumer.

I think the minister is moving in the right direction at this point by having the first list, as contained in this bill, conform to the American safety standards. However, this should not be another area in which it might be said we are being dictated to by forces outside our country. I believe that we in Canada can show leadership in the field of automotive safety. I would strongly urge the minister and his department to enlist the co-operation of those organizations and individuals who are concerned with the safety of our people when they venture out onto our highways.

We have the people in Canada who, through their observations and experience, have the knowledge to tell us what can be done. We also have the people who know what can be done. This latter group would involve the automobile manufacturers. I understand they are already working with the Department of Transport to develop better standards. It is my opinion, Mr. Speaker, that we should use these people to the fullest advantage so that we as Canadians can become leaders in establishing international automotive safety standards.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Whiting: However, in all this matter there is something of a paradox. I venture to say that far less individual concern on the part of the Canadian public will be shown to this bill than to practically any other piece of legislation. If you wish to see the opposite end of the spectrum from the White Paper on Tax Reform, this is it. While there is public concern expressed about motor vehicle safety, there seems to be little personal concern. As an example I would remind hon. members that back in 1956 Ford included a safety package in their cars of that year. What happened? Public apathy was such that there was little interest on the part of purchasers in acquiring a car equipped with this safety package, and as a result it was withdrawn the following year. Does this kind of public apathy exist today?

Let us start with the doctors. They of all people, one would think, should concern themselves with highway safety. Dr. William Ghent, professor of medicine at Queen's University, speaking recently at a seminar held by the Hamilton Road Safety Conference, openly admitted that the medical profession takes less care of itself than any other profession. Only 15 per cent of driving doctors wear their seat-belts. He also went on to say that none of them has regular maintenance done on their cars. If the doctors themselves, men who every day witness the tragic results of highway accidents, are so little concerned with the causes then they, indeed, in my opinion, are a source of cold comfort. Doctors talk a great deal about preventive medicine. Should they not be leaders in preventing accidents?

Mr. James C. Thackery of Montreal, vice-president of the Canadian Safety Counci, said in a speech given recently in Fredericton, New Brunswick:

> We can engineer improvements in our roads and automobiles; we can pass legislation and enforce it; but the only one who can prevent an accident is the driver himself.

He further stated:

> Engineering, legislation enforcement and education must be blended into a balanced program to prevent accidents.

● (8:50 p.m.)

Because of this public apathy the federal government would be well advised to incorporate in their thinking on highway safety a program of education to arouse public opinion and public feeling. In my opinion the federal government should bring to the attention of the Canadian driver a greater respect for the highways and those who use them. This legislation we are considering is a guard for the safety of your life and mine, and indeed for the life of every person who travels our roads. It should be stressed that any safety device incorporated in a vehicle is put there for the benefit of its occupants and is to be used. It is not there as an ornament.

In my opinion public awareness and public co-operation in making Canadian standards effective will remove one of the biggest roadblocks in any drive to cut the death toll on our roads. I do not know what the economic cost of road accidents is in Canada today. I read that in Great Britain it amounts to over £200 million annually. I would think it certainly must equal that amount in Canada. Therefore, any money spent on a program of highway safety would be economically sound.

There is one more point I should like to discuss in connection with this bill, and I would like the minister to consider it in future amendments. I refer to the manner in which the manufacturers are promoting supercars which are sometimes called motorized missiles. According to insurance authorities, these super-powered cars represent 50 per cent larger accident losses than other motor vehicles. They are certainly not conducive to moderate driving; indeed, they are powered well above the needs of the prudent, defensive driver and certainly above the traffic capacity of most streets and roads. While it is my view that many of these cars have a romantic sales appeal which has evolved into a competitive lock-in among the auto manufacturers, I think this romanticism can be maintained, and I appreciate that this is an important factor in modern day selling.

In closing Mr. Speaker may I say the amendment which I should like considered would evolve around a limitation of horsepower for public automobiles as an added safety measure on our highways. In my opinion we do not need faster cars; we need safer cars and safer drivers. The driving public must be educated to realize that the vehicle he drives can be one of two things. In the hands of a responsible person a car can be a highly efficient and most pleasant means of transportation. In a split second it can become a weapon of death and destruction. The final choice still remains with the driver.

Mr. Mac T. McCutcheon (Lambton-Kent): Mr. Speaker, I do not propose to delay the proceedings very long. In the first instance, I do not like to kick a man when he is down. According to tonight's papers GM and Chrysler are down. They were down drastically in the last quarter of 1969. These companies and Ford are undergoing pretty stringent lay-offs. As a matter of fact, I am told today that Chrysler of Windsor laid off 2,000 workers.

I should like to make one recommendation before this matter goes to the committee. It has to do with a private members' bill I have on the Order Paper. I think it is No. 96, but it might as well be 960 for all the chance it has of coming forward. I am particularly concerned with the safety features in our so-called muscle cars. A muscle car in the trade is rated as one with a standard domestic chassis and a sports-type body, with about 450 cubic inches of engine under the hood, or a 440 cube hemi. The companies have named these very excitingly; they have called them the Barracuda, the Sting-Ray, the Cobra—or you name it.

An hon. Member: What about the Bearcat?

Mr. McCutcheon: That was another generation. What I object to is that these are standard engineered vehicles equipped with tremendous power plants, with no regard for safety or for the ability of people who buy them to drive them. For example, take a Chevy Biscayne. The engineers tell us that they have 184.3 square inches of braking surface. The engineers have worked out that the braking power to ton ratio is 93.9.

An hon. Member: Tell us about your own product.

Mr. McCutcheon: I will come to that in a moment. Compare this family sedan with a car having a 400 cubic-inch engine. You still have 184.3 square inches of braking surface. Compare that again to a VW 1500, a car that I would not even own; you could not expect me to drive it home. However, it has a braking power to tons ratio of 140, which is about 60 per cent greater than our domestic cars. Let us compare the 93.9 ratio of a Chev Biscayne to a Ford Fairlane, which has 116 and Maverick which has 104.

There is nothing which makes a young man's red corpuscles work better than a drive in a nice, finely-tuned sports car. I have respect for sports cars. I admire them, and I am in good company; the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) likes them too.

Mr. Howard (Skeena): Have you other, similar interests?

Mr. McCutcheon: The important point is that these cars being sold on the North American continent are killers. They are standard automobiles souped-up with powerful motors. Is it not a great thing to see one with a set of shackles on the back which lengthen it, and a set of slicks which stick out at least three or four inches wider than the fender. The provinces of this country licence these vehicles, but if you go out on the highway with your truck, and you do not have fender-flaps on it, the OPP or the QPP will pull you over and give you a ticket.

• (9:00 p.m.)

Last year in Essex county one of these muscle cars was involved in an accident. It went out of control and, believe it or not, it went into the second storey of a house. You talk about flying low, Mr. Speaker; that sure was it. We had an inquest in Lambton county when a young man departed this vale of tears. At the inquest it was disclosed that this guy had bought a compact car with a 400 cubic-inch engine in it. The judge, in handing down his decision, said it was obvious there was too much car for this man to control.

As you drive through our villages and towns, more particularly on quiet streets, have you ever seen so many black marks in your life? There are more black marks on some of those pavements than there are on the runways at Malton Airport which are used by jet airliners. On a Sunday in summertime, if you go out for a drive with your wife and you see a crowd, you know you are on a drag strip. Those drag strips should not be the public highways.

These cars I am describing, which are really good only for a drag strip, should not be licensed to travel the highways and byways of the country. Apart from reading today that automobile companies were laying off people, another item caught my eye. It reported that insurance in Canada on muscle cars is about 25 per cent higher than insurance for a standard car. But United States auto insurance firms are ahead of us in this matter; on October 8 last they announced a 50 per cent increase in coverage rates for 1970 super-powered cars. The installation of huge motors in cars, without related engineering covering brakes, suspension, etc., is something which should be watched closely. I believe a formula should be established giving a ratio of weight to horsepower and of weight to braking surface.

Before sitting down may I say there is one other area in which the standing committee could do a wonderful job, a job that should have been done years ago. It should consider the standardization of traffic acts all across Canada so that one would know what the heck he was doing when he drove into another province. The committee should also make recommendations on standard road signs. In this regard international road signs would be best. For example, in Ottawa one can make a right turn on a red light. In other places that is not allowed, and if it happens a driver is in deep trouble. In the interests of automobile safety I would urge the committee to recommend standardization of traffic acts for the whole Dominion of Canada.

Mr. Randoph Harding (Kootenay West): Mr. Speaker, I have listened with great interest to the debate on this bill, and have read a number of the speeches made by hon. members. It is a measure that is of great interest not only to members of this House but to all the citizens of our nation who are well acquainted with motor vehicles and with the hazards associated with those vehicles. Most facets of safety have already been covered by hon. members and it is not my intention to go over all the points again. However, I feel I should briefly outline several points that in my opinion should be considered hand-in-hand with the present regulations and with the provisions outlined in this measure.

I feel that in dealing with the problem of highway safety there must be full co-operation between the federal, provincial and municipal levels of government. Sound, sensible and enforcible safety measures must be enacted and enforced by every level of government. Only in this way can we cut down appreciably the tragic number of motor vehicle accidents which occur every year.

For year there has been need for a national automotive safety code. It is amazing that something more concrete was not done about it prior to 1970. Car safety has now become a No. 1 health problem in Canada. I believe it can be called a health problem. The large number of people who are killed and crippled on our highways makes it a national disgrace. Many accidents could have been avoided, and the intensity of injuries lessened, had a national automotive safety code been established years ago.

• (9:10 p.m.)

As we look back on our laws and regulations it is an amazing and remarkable fact that our government protects our food, protects our water to a degree, especially drinking water, protects other aspects of health; we have building codes to make sure that our housing is up to standard, we have standards for electrical wiring, and a large number of other protective measures are taken to look after our citizens; but for years we have neglected one of the greatest causes of death and injury to Canadians, that is, the modern automobile. I believe that is why the bill before us has given rise to so much interest among hon. members and, I am quite sure, among the general public. Improvements in this field are being made and a measure of government action, both federal and provincial, is being taken. However, we have still a long way to go to cover all the points which we should be covering.

There are two or three aspects of traffic safety which I should like to cover very briefly and point out that in my opinion they must go hand in hand with the various codes which we are trying to establish in this piece of legislation. The three aspects of traffic safety which complement legislation of this type deal first with the drivers of automobiles, second with highway design, and third with the safety features of vehicles which automobile manufacturing firms and governments have neglected for generations.

In so far as training of drivers is concerned, I am not putting all the blame on the deferral government because much of the responsibility is provincial. It is the provinces which have the licensing of automobiles under their jurisdiction. We have driver training programs in schools in various provinces of this nation. In my opinion the training of drivers should be undertaken by schools all across Canada. I have heard people say that this type of training does not necessarily result in a decrease of traffic accidents. This is just not so. Training of drivers must complement legislation of the type we have before us. This is why I urge full co-operation among federal, provincial and municipal governments to ensure that this type of training is made available to the young people of this nation who are the future drivers of vehicles and who, according to statistics, are involved in the greatest number of accidents.

I urge that the federal government approach the provincial governments which have not proceeded with this program. I urge hon. members to help ensure that this type of driver training is undertaken by schools all across Canada from the Atlantic to the Pacific, so that when our young people get behind the wheel of a car they know what hazards and dangers they are likely to face on the highway.

Another action which should be taken by the government and which should complement this legislation is research. I am referring now to research in highway design. I think that too much is left to chance at present. I realize that every highway department has a group of very competent engineers who work on highway design; but as we get more powerful vehicles and as the average speed of our cars gradually increases, there is more need than ever for the federal and provincial governments to enter into research of highway design in co-operation with each other. I believe that if this were done, a great number of accidents which presently take place would be eliminated. I suggest that this is a field into which the federal government should enter, and it should support, at least financially, research programs which are desperately needed.

The third point which I wish to make has already been covered by speakers on all sides of the House. It concerns vehicle safety. Other speakers have said, and I say it again, that we are very fond of putting flashy chrome on our cars. The manufacturers of automobiles know that automobile owners everywhere in the world are real suckers for something that looks flashy. They have neglected—there is absolutely no doubt about it, so I will not go into all the details again—many safety features which should be incorporated into motor vehicles before they are allowed on the highways of this nation.

I will give the House one example—the height and quality of bumpers. On many of our vehicles bumpers are placed at different heights. The statistics which are available to individuals who wish to obtain them indicate that a number of injuries and deaths could have been avoided if the height of bumpers had been standardized. Also, the quality of bumpers should be improved because most bumpers would be dented if they hit a package of popcorn.

This is an area in which we need a safety council and a government which will check on the facts and then insist firmly that this type of safety feature be incorporated into vehicles. We can still get good design in a car and a vehicle that will operate efficiently, without losing any of its effectiveness, with many more safety features incorporated into it than we have today.

[Mr. Harding.]

There is one more aspect of vehicle safety which I will mention very briefly. I refer to testing. I believe that motor vehicles should have compulsory testing in Canada. After you have had a motor vehicle for a period of time, you should be forced to have it tested at a proper testing station by competent mechanics. There are motor vehicles being driven around Ottawa and, in fact, in every city in Canada that have no right to be on the highways of this nation. What are we doing about it? The neglect is nationwide for the simple reason that compulsory testing has not been introduced in every province. One or two of the provinces may have this requirement.

I know that two or three years ago we had some interesting information from the city of Vancouver which had introduced compulsory testing of motor vehicles. The number of accidents caused by faulty mechanism was very low compared with the number of accidents in the provinces in which there was not compulsory testing.

I am convinced that the older a vehicle gets, the more chance there is of the vehicle breaking down. That is why we need this type of testing. We are not trying to put the driver of an automobile in a straitjacket by saying that he must do this, that or the other thing; but a driver who is on a public highway should realize that it is his duty, not only to protect himself but to protect other drivers on that highway.

• (9:20 p.m.)

An individual can have an up-to-date automobile in top-notch shape, and yet can have his family wiped out because the vehicle belonging to another driver had not been properly checked for defects. I have no hesitation in urging most strongly that the testing of motor vehicles should be part and parcel of the safety code from one end of Canada to the other.

A previous speaker mentioned the standardization of signs. I should like to say a few words on this subject. Thank goodness it is coming, because signs should be standardized. When I cross the bridge into Quebec, or go to any other province, I should know that I will be driving on highways in exactly the same situation as I would in my native province of British Columbia. This is just common sense, Mr. Speaker. Signs should be standardized throughout the North American continent.

I realize that some of these points have been made before, but I felt I should comment on them and stress what I feel is also needed to make some of the safety codes work. As legislators we must do our best to obtain the type of safety measures which will protect the ever-increasing travelling public in Canada.

Mr. Speaker: The Minister of Transport (Mr. Jamieson). The House will realize that if the minister speaks at this time he will close the debate.

Hon. Donald C. Jamieson (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, it is not my intention to take a great deal of the time of the House to recap the debate. I simply want to say thank you very much to those hon. members who have supported the principle of the bill as I anticipated they would. There has been, I think, that degree of unanimity which I forecast when introducing the measure a few days ago.

It seems to me the most logical course to take is to give this bill the thoroughgoing questioning in committee that has been predicted in various parts of the House. At that time it will be possible for me and officials of my department to provide hon. members with the explanations that many have been seeking. Let me hasten to add that if it appears, as a result of committee discussion, that there are ways in which this legislation can be improved, I will be more than pleased to consider such revisions.

There are only three or four general comments I should like to make in winding up this debate. It will become evident in committee that the effectiveness of this measure will to large degree depend upon the kind of co-operation we can achieve with the provinces. For this reason I have worked with the appropriate ministers in the provinces from the outset to ensure that companion legislation is introduced at the provincial level so we will have a measure that will go beyond the competence of the federal government in defining what is a safe car, or a reasonably safe car at the time it leaves the factory.

Once it gets into the provinces, replacement parts, new tires and various things of this kind, and the matter of testing, are within provincial jurisdiction. I believe we have established the most effective level of co-operation and an awareness on the part of both levels of government of the need for co-operation. I am sure this will produce the desired result.

From the beginning I have been concerned with what might be described as off-highway vehicles, namely, snowmobiles, and have wondered how we might come up with an effective nationwide set of standards. Under his legislation I am satisfied that we have the competence to introduce safety standards so far as the new vehicle is concerned. We have had discussions with the provinces to see if we cannot arrive at some sort of standards on licensing, because in some instances snowmobiles are permitted to cross highways and in other instances they are not licensed at all. In other cases they are licensed to travel on the shoulder of the highway. While agreeing completely with hon. members who feel there is a need for regulation in this field, I believe we have to get the various jurisdictions to agree on a set of standards and then introduce as many of them as possible into the new vehicle.

I was most impressed with the comments of the hon. member for Vancouver East (Mr. Winch) who talked about the need for some kind of homing device and coupled this with reference to the need for a similar mechanism on aircraft. Even knowing your indulgence, Mr. Speaker, I do not wish to drift too far from the subject, but I still do not understand why this is not part of the mechanism of aircraft. I have received submissions from various aviation clubs and the like, and I find myself in complete agreement with the hon. member that this device seems thoroughly logical in terms of aircraft. I have asked if there is good reason why we should not have it, otherwise it would be my intention to bring in this type of legislation.

As far as surface vehicles are concerned, we may have to make some distinctions because there is a difference between a vehicle being used for pleasure in the immediate vicinity of the home and one being employed for commercial or transportation purposes in the north. I undertake to see whether there is any kind of homing device that might be used in this way. There is no doubt that search and rescue is a costly business as far as governments are concerned, but it is tragic that sometimes lives are lost when people are only a few miles from the rescue party because there is no means of locating them.

There were many other interesting and constructive comments during the debate. The only point that I felt was not emphasized as much as I would have expected was my reference to the role of research into causes of accidents. As we have said repeatedly, and members opposite also commented on it, you can build the safest automobile in the world, but if it hits a child, the child is probably maimed or killed. No matter how safe the automobile is, if it topples over an embankment and rolls 50, 60 or 100 feet, the risk is very great. Apart from making the car as safe as possible, we must try to find the scientific reason for so many accidents happening. Ruling out the impaired driver, there is still a surprisingly large volume of accidents caused by apparently normal people not driving at excessive rates of speed. But there seems to be very little interest in research into this area.

A related question is highway design and its affect on accidents. I believe the research and development section of the Department of Transport can be of considerable help to the provinces in trying to determine, not merely standards of size but to see if we cannot recommend standards on a nationwide basis to reduce many of the problems and make the roads safer.

In conclusion, Mr. Speaker, I believe this bill will help us considerably, but I would ask that members not lay too much emphasis on the 29 standards. They happen to be the ones in existence at the present time, but if anyone comes up with other improvements we will be more than glad to introduce them once they have been tested. I suggest this is only a small part of the problem. If we are to attack the problem as effectively as I believe we can, we must consider the driver, the causes of accidents and also the "ways" system—if we can use that expression—that is, the highway itself.

• (9:30 p.m.)

In any event, I still consider this an historic piece of legislation. I believe if we bring it before the committee shortly we can provide the kinds of answers for which hon. members are looking. I for one look forward to bringing the bill back to the House and completing a progressive move forward for the people of Canada. I thank all hon. members for their help.

Motion agreed to, bill read the second time and referred to the Standing Committee on Transport and Communications.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

BROADCASTING OF DEBATES BY RADIO AND TELEVISION

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (President of the Privy Council) moved:

[Mr. Jamieson.]

That the Standing Committee on Procedure and Organization, in consultation with Mr. Speaker, be directed to study the question of radio and television broadcasting of the proceedings of the House and its committees, including the legal, procedural, and technical aspects thereof, and the question of arrangements made for reporters for the electronic media in the Parliament Buildings.

He said: Mr. Speaker, I will not take much of the time of the House in speaking on this matter. May I indicate that in the English version of the motion there is typographical error. The printed words on the second line reading, "ratio and television broadcasting", should read "radio and television broadcasting." I think a comparison with the French language version will confirm that this is so.

Perhaps I ought to refer the House, as the most effective way of dealing with this matter, to the debate which took place some ten months ago on March 26, 1969, when the question of having a committee to study the broadcasting of the proceedings of the House was being considered. At that time I said, as reported at page 7164 of Hansard:

Thereafter, I expect that the house will want to ask the Standing Committee on Procedure and Organization to make a preliminary study of the question of working out appropriate procedures for broadcasting in the House. I repeat, however, that I believe we should let the committee complete the work we have given it.

At that time I suggested it would be desirable to let the committee consider procedures of the House as they related to radio broadcasting and television, after the discussion of the general procedures of the House then underway was concluded. The committee had an opportunity of discussing in a general way last spring the question of broadcasting of House procedures by electronic media and, as a result of these discussions, I understand that the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation has prepared certain information which will be of assistance to the committee this year, assuming that this motion passes.

May I make some brief references to the actual terms of the motion. It says, among other things, that the standing committee be directed to study the question of radio and television broadcasting in the House, including the legal, procedural and technical aspects thereof. It is obvious that there will be technical problems from the point of view of broadcasting from the chamber itself. This is patently not a forum which lends itself readily to the broadcasting medium, and this motion will give an opportunity for the committee to try and solve some of the technical problems.

In addition, the committee must refer to the practice that has grown up in the House of providing facilities for those who report to the radio and television media and interview members outside the Chamber itself. The committee is therefore being asked to examine the arrangements which might be made for the media so that from a technical standpoint radio will be able to obtain a good signal and television a good picture for the purposes of public broadcasting.

A reference is made to the legal considerations involved. I made a number of references to these considerations in the debate last year. Hitherto, the laws of libel and slander have not applied to proceedings inside the House. The proceedings, in such circumstances, have been guided by the principle of parliamentary privilege and, perhaps more important, by the general traditions of the House and have tended to guard against remarks which might be in the nature of slander. Some changes may have to be introduced in this area so that the reputation of no person may be damaged as a result of remarks inside the House or its Committees, that is, so that as a result of anything said by an hon. member inside, no one may be attacked with impunity before the public media and the country. Therefore, the committee will have to look into the legal aspect and the effect on the country's laws of providing for the proceedings of the House and its committees to be broadcast.

Finally, from the procedural standpoint the committee will have to determine what changes in the procedure of the House will be desirable so that the House may have its proceedings broadcast most effectively and so that hon. members, whether in the front benches or the back benches, will have almost equal opportunities to appear. There is an inevitable bias in our system in favour of those sitting in the front benches on either side of the House. The committee will therefore have to consider how to give hon. members on either side comparable opportunities to be heard on a public broadcast.

As I say, the committee will have to consider the proceedings of the House as they now exist in order to see what changes may have to be instituted if we are to adapt to the new medium, just as I assume the proceedings at Westminster had to be adapted some two centuries ago when Mr. Hansard was first permitted to go into the Commons gallery and take a note of the parliamentary proceedings.

I will delay the House no more, Mr. Speaker. This will be an important step in the history of the Canadian Parlliament. Other parliaments such as that in Westminster have studied this difficult question and pronounced negatively against televising the proceedings of the House. We, in our turn, will have to reach our own decision. I am sure that the committee will bear in mind the observations of the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Stanfield) when he remarked in the debate last March that in this area there is a substantial difference of opinion not so much among parties but among members within parties. On this question I am sure that all hon. members, whether they are members of the committee or not, will have the opportunity to contribute to and involve themselves in the proceedings so that the committee might have the opportunity of hearing their views and arriving at a consensus as to the best method of dealing with this question.

Mr. G. W. Baldwin (Peace River): Mr. Speaker, in responding to this motion moved by the minister I think I can say that I was the one who moved the resolution some ten months ago which was referred to by the minister and which formed the basis of a very useful discussion and debate at that time. In concluding his remarks the President of the Privy Council (Mr. Macdonald) referred to the statement made by the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Stanfield), who said that not only are there differences among parties but within parties as well. I think this is parallel to the situation that existed in the United Kingdom, where the cleavage was horizontal and ran across party lines. We in this party have a variety of opinions. I think it is proper that this is so. I think it would be very difficult to be otherwise on an issue of this kind, which belongs to the members of the House of Commons. It does not belong to the government. It does not belong to political parties. It is an issue on which for members should be guided by their own conscience, point of view and responsibility and come to a decision. What I have to say will represent my point of view. Other members of my party will have views to offer either in this House or before the committee. I have no doubt that they will vary from the point of view I expressed in the debate ten months ago and which I will again express tonight.

Broadcasting of House of Commons Debates

• (9:40 p.m.)

It is my hope that when the committee is convened and organized it will, for the purpose of this issue, hold public hearings. During the course of the proceedings when we were considering the proposed rules to be brought before the House, the meetings were held in camera. Whether this was wise or not is beside the point; it is now water under the bridge. I strongly recommend that when the committee is convened and organized its meetings be held in public.

I do not envisage any great rush on the part of the public to attend the meetings, but members of the media who are involved, and interested members of this House, may wish to attend. By that time members of the other place may have completed their own close and interesting examination of the media and may wish to attend the meetings to hear what the House of Commons has to say on the question. I hope this will be the case.

I hope after reasonable consideration, when the committee presents its representations to the House the Whips will not be called upon and individual members will be permitted to vote according to their own point of view. I want to make that quite plain. I know there will be problems. There will be a lot of pain and suffering attached to either a permanent or experimental introduction of radio and television into this House and its committees. However, I think the benefits will outweight any drawbacks. Nothing is born without pain and suffering. It may well be that members of this House will have to undergo a certain amount of pain and suffering in this regard.

I feel there are two points which must be considered on this issue. What is paramount is the right of the public of Canada who have elected us and in respect of whom we are trustees. The people of Canada have a right to the fullest, most complete and best information which can be obtained from the proceedings of the Parliament of Canada. Many arguments will be made. Some will be very persuasive and some will be convincing as to why it is not a good thing. I will listen with care to those arguments because I am open to persuasion. I think some of the arguments will be the same as those made the time Hansard was introduced into this House several years ago. I think that 20 years after we attempt this timid experiment people will wonder why there was ever any objection to it.

We are not without precedents to observe. Before going on to that however, may I point out some of the problems which will arise. There is, of course, the problem in his House of the two official languages. This will certainly form a technical problem of considerable size. There is the question of cost. We do not know what that will be. We have some idea of the cost of the experiment which took place in the United Kingdom with relation to the House of Lords. There is the question of the relationship between this House and its committees.

If there is to be an experiment and later a permanent proposal to televise the House and committees, obviously there will have to be some rationalization of the proceedings of both the House and its committees. There is, of course, the very difficult legal problem to which the minister referred which in my opinion will involve remedial changes in the statute. Perhaps I may deal with that question for a moment or two.

I have read the report of the Clerk of the House of the United Kingdom. I have also read the statements and some of the documents in connection with the experiment in Australia with relation to radio, and those in connection with New Zealand. In examining the Senate and House of Commons Act in Canada, sections 4 and 7 explain the privileges and immunities of the members to the actual use by the written media of extracts from official documents of the House. The privileges are extended to cover those, but it is a specific restriction to the written extracts. I think we will probably have to follow the same practice with regard to privilege as exists in the United Kingdom.

I will give an example. Perhaps even on an experimental basis the proceedings of this House or its committees may be televised or broadcast by radio. A statement made in this House is of course protected by the traditional rights and privileges of members of the House. If the proceedings are being broadcast live, and a statement is made which could well have a slanderous effect, although it is protected in this House, what would be the position of the member or the network which broadcast the slanderous statement which was received outside the House?

In spite of what was said in New Zealand, this seems to be a legal proposition. It might well be that we will have some trouble. Apart from the question of fair comment, there is some likelihood of being sued for slander. If we are going to do this, I hope the committee will receive adequate legal advice and will review the proposals made in Australia and the United Kingdom. I hope the committee will consider the excellent and learned article by the Clerk of the United Kingdom House. I hope it will take a hard look at the necessity of amending the Senate and House of Commons Act.

I will now deal with the question of merits. I know the problems, technical and otherwise, which will result. I know it will probably be a long, hard, arduous and difficult process to evolve a system which will be acceptable to all members. I think it would be best if the committee recommended a trial period of radio broadcasting. Australia has almost 25 years' experience in radio broadcasting, and some limited experience in televising. Despite the fact that the arguments advanced in Australia in 1945 and 1946 paralleled the arguments advanced by people in the United Kingdom at the time of the proposal to inaugurate a written record of the proceedings of the House, the Australian people have now come to accept this system—radio broadcasting in particular.

I am not suggesting there is any great national outcry that proceedings of this House of Commons, the other place or the committees of either are essential for entertainment, amusement and the advancement of the knowledge of the people of Canada. What has been happening in the past is that by a gradual process which at times we were not able to perceive, the emphasis on Parliament has been slowly moving out of this chamber and into other places. I am not about to rehash the problems that Your Honour and others have had in connection with the difficulties of the electronic media. Radio and television reporters have attempted to obtain clarification and expansion from members of this House of statements made here and repeated outside.

• (9:50 p.m.)

The trouble is that this practice developed in the course of a year or so to a point at which in the minds of a great many Canadians there was some doubt whether what took place in this chamber, or immediately afterwards outside it, constituted in fact the proceedings of the House of Commons. It is probable that no one was at fault. The practice just grew; it just came about. The Chair finally came to a wise decision. All the decisions which the Chair makes are wise, of course, particularly since there is now no right of appeal against Your Honour's rulings. I did not mean that to be a backhanded compliment. The fact is we were in grave danger of losing the usefulness and advantages of this democratic institution of the House of Commons.

There will still, of course, have to be means by which members of this House can be requested, under suitable arrangements satisfactory to all concerned, to explain and amplify statements made here. I hope we will not then be met with the situation which arose when we attempted to raise in this House questions of privilege, or challenge statements made outside. When we tried to do this we were advised, and quite properly according to the precedents, that we were not able to proceed along those lines. I should like to think that having examined some of the statements made in the House and some of the statements of clarification made outside, the committee would find itself able to examine this question of privilege in relation to the connection between the two.

The other point I should like to make is this. Because of the diversity and size of our country we do not possess what is known as a national press. It is no one's fault. There is, of course, the Canadian Press, and there are a number of writers and commentators covering events on a national basis. But we tend to take a regional approach to events. Much of the press gives greatest prominence to matter which are of the greatest interest to particular cities or regions. This is natural, and it is obviously the case. I suggest this is why an increasing interest has developed in national television and radio coverage; it is because these media have instant access to a national audience, and because what was said or televised outside this chamber had more national significance than the articles which appeared in the press.

This is another reason for considering the advantages of continuing the practice in some form, since they may well outweigh the disadvantages. Indeed, in my view the advantages of tackling this problem along experimental lines do, indeed, outweigh the disadvantages. I hope sufficient hon. members will agree with me in this regard.

I said earlier that I would mention the situation in Australia and in New Zealand. I was particularly interested in a statement by the late Sir Gilbert Campion, the well-known

Clerk of the United Kingdom House, who had this to say on a visit to New Zealand in 1949:

> If one considers only the popular reaction, the experiment of broadcasting debates would seem to have justified itself. People have learned much more about the purposes and proceedings of Parliament. Some are shocked to find that the tone of a democratic assembly is not that of an areopagus or a Roman senate. Many have developed a live interest in the debates and both parties agree that discontinuance is unthinkable.

Another interesting comment was made by an Australian visiting New Zealand who happened to turn the radio onto the wavelength which covered the proceedings broadcast from the New Zealand legislature. His comment was the kind one would expect to hear. He said that the speeches might not have been of the highest quality, and there were probably mistakes in the syntax and in the English, but they had an agreeable element of spontaneity. The interruptions, the arguments and the questions were a spontaneous reflection of the people in the chamber who, in their turn, represented the people of the country as this man summed it up, "This house is the people of New Zealand with all their virtues, all their defects, all their warts."

I realize there will be a long and arduous period of experimentation before us, but in my view we cannot struggle against the fact that this is a medium which no one can escape, and one which offers advantages. Nevertheless, I think we should be most careful that whatever results will have its origin in a logical basis acceptable for a trial period to all of us. I hope the committee will undertake its task with this thought in mind and make its report in an objective way to face a good, freewheeling debate with, hopefully, a free vote at its conclusion.

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, I have on occasion demonstrated an ability to compress a speech into a very few minutes, but I can hardly limit my remarks to 30 seconds. I should like to speak in support of this motion but there are a few comments I wish to make, so I propose that we call it ten o'clock.

Some hon. Members: Ten o'clock.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): Mr. Speaker, before the proceedings on the adjournment motion begin, may I confirm that on Wednesday we shall call as the first item of business the bill to amend the Yukon Placer Mining Act, followed by second reading of the National Parks bill, after which we would return to the measure we have just been debating.

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

A motion to adjourn the House under Standing Order 40 deemed to have been moved.

HOUSING—1970 CONSTRUCTION TARGET FOR HOMES FOR ELDERLY AND THOSE ON LOW INCOMES

Mrs. Grace MacInnis (Vancouver-Kingsway): Mr. Speaker, right after the Christmas recess I reminded the minister in charge of housing that last year the federal government gave direct assistance under the National Housing Act to the building of some 20,000 dwellings for elderly and low-income people with families. I asked him what the target was for 1970. We were glad to have the suspense ended this afternoon when he answered that funds would be available to construct 35,000 housing units specifically for low-income families. Although this total is greater than last year's, it still falls far short of the need. In Toronto alone I am told there is a waiting list of 15,000 applicants, enough to take up almost half the number of units to be provided for all Canada.

Since the minister answered my question this afternoon, I want to do something rather unusual and ask him further questions so as to get a march on his next statement in the House. The hon. gentleman's statement raised fully as many questions as it answered. I am glad he promised to make a detailed statement soon, and I should like to draw his attention to some of the questions which people are still waiting to hear answered.

• (10.00 p.m.)

The first relates to my question this afternoon. Can the minister assure us that all these 35,000 new, low-income dwellings will have modern facilities for the recreational needs of the tenants of all ages, both inside and outside the housing units? If people with good incomes need space for play and other leisure activities, people with low incomes need this a great deal more. People with good incomes can get away and find the recreation, the space and places for other activities they require. People with low incomes are forced to stay, and consequently their needs are very much greater. They have fewer advantages and their needs and the needs of the whole community by extension are greater.

My second question: When does the minister propose to announce the new rental scale for public housing which has been hanging fire for so long? To be an improvement over the existing one it needs to be based on net income, not gross income as at present. A single-parent mother, to mention only one type, needs to be able to deduct the cost of child care before the rent is calculated, and to be able to deduct other legitimate expenses. Otherwise there is no use whatsoever in expecting that such families can get off welfare and back into the living and working stream of the community.

A Canadian Welfare Council survey last year found that mothers on welfare across Canada, single-parent mothers with four children, to give one example, spent half their income on rent. That is out of all reason. A rent of that dimension leaves too little for the other needs of the family.

My third question: Is the minister giving consideration to a program of outright grants to enable low income homeowners to improve their older homes? These people simply cannot repay loans and the interest on them. There is no use in the minister saying we already have legislation to cover these people. The grants could be made returnable on the death of the owner and/or the sale of the house, but they must be grants and not loans.

My fourth question: The minister announced that the allocation for student housing is to be $45 million this year compared with $55 million last year. Does he really consider this 20 per cent drop a "modest decline" as he says? Faced with the need to repay student loans, and with the bleak prospect for summer jobs ahead, a good many students will be hard put to it to get the education they need and which Canada needs them to have.

All these people on low income, and many other types, need proper housing now. They need it so that they can support their families in modern homes with the attractions that keep families together. They need it so they can afford to go out and get the training and the jobs that will make them part of the community and will give them self-respect and the right to carry their share of the load. They need it to keep their homes in repair in order to live out their lives in comfort.

I trust that when the minister makes his promised further statement it will be such as to give these people hope based not on promises or on next year but on further proposals for this year such as I have suggested. It is all very well to talk about the war on inflation, but a war on inflation ought not to be carried to such lengths as to become a war on the poor by refusing to extend housing to the required amount. This is carrying the war to the most vulnerable part of the civilian population, those people on low incomes. That is not the place to wage a war on inflation. Let us wage it in those areas where the people can stand it and not in those areas where the people, unless we give them help will become greater burdens on the community. This will only add to our burdens instead of allowing them to carry their own share proudly and effectively.

Hon. Eric W. Kierans (Postmaster General and Minister of Communications): Mr. Speaker, I should like to take issue with the last remarks of the hon. member for Vancouver-Kingsway (Mrs. MacInnis). I think the statement which my colleague the minister in charge of housing made in the House this afternoon is a clear refutation of her charge that we are carrying on a war against inflation with the low-income or poverty groups.

As my colleague indicated, a total of $570 million out of CMHC's capital budget of $854 million has been reserved for the purpose of providing housing for low-income families and elderly persons. These funds will permit the corporation to arrange in 1970 for the construction of 35,000 housing units specifically for low-income families.

As hon. members know, during the 20 years prior to 1969, 82,000 homes for low income families were built in Canada. In 1969, in line with government policy, provision was made for 27,000 units of low-income housing in that year, a number that will be increased to not less than 35,000 units in 1970. The total allocation of capital funds for low-income housing in 1969 and 1970 at 62,000 units therefore represents 75 per cent of the previous 20 years' production, which is a clear indication that this government and the minister have very much in mind the needs of the low-income group. In addition, my colleague also mentioned that the direct lending activities of CMHC under section 40 will be devoted to the needs of families in the lower income bracket.

Proceedings on Adjournment Motion

Referring to the later points raised by the hon. member for Vancouver-Kingsway, I may say that my colleague is very much aware of the need for providing recreational facilities in these low income housing areas. He has asked his colleagues for much greater flexibility in managing the budget and his responsibilities during the coming years. I think he will be making statements both on the subject of grants and rentals in weeks to come.

With respect to student housing, a matter raised by the hon. member, I would simply say that if one takes in broad context over recent years the amount of funds devoted to student housing, and relates that to what has been spent in the low-income area, one will find that on balance we are attempting to do now—in the area of low-income housing—that which we have done, not entirely but at least have attempted to do in the area of student housing.

[Translation]

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The hon. member for Champlain.

I am sorry I did not recognize him sooner, but he was not in his seat.

POST OFFICE—FINANCIAL POSITION FOLLOWING INCREASED RATES

Mr. René Matte (Champlain): Mr. Speaker, I am sorry but I thought three questions would be discussed this evening.

Here is the question I put to the Postmaster General: Have his decisions with regard to new postal rates and new working conditions for postal employees finally put the Canadian postal service on a profit-earning basis?

It will be recalled how protests greeted the increase from 5 to 6 cents in the postal rate for first class mail. It will also be recalled how all newspapers and magazines, especially weeklies and monthly publications, protested vehemently for being thus threatened with bankruptcy.

In fact, protests are still being raised. A number of magazines and weeklies which were already in a difficult position though acknowledgely excellent have disappeared or are bound to do so very soon.

[Mr. Kierans.]

Several trades and industries rely, for their publicity, on the efficiency of the postal service. What has happened since the day these decisions were made?

People are complaining. The delivery of second and third class mail is slow. In the urban districts, the fact that services are discontinued from Friday night on is bringing a lot of other services to a standstill.

Last year, I sent to my electors in La Tuque a notice calling them to a meeting. Imagine my surprise on discovering that I had arrived in La Tuque before my notice!

Where are all these changes leading to. Mr. Speaker? Has the volume of mail increased? And the number of money orders, of registered letters and other postal matter?

• (10.10 p.m.)

Should good service everywhere not be the foremost objective? Should some areas be deprived of postal service for a matter of earnings?

I am under the impression that the minister went the wrong way about it, but stubborn as any good Irishman, he may not be willing to admit it.

The minister should inform the House as soon as possible whether his department is moving ahead or losing ground. I know one can always juggle with figures. I do not want to be given just any figures. I wish to be provided with statistics I can compare with those of the 1967-68 financial year.

I am convinced that the Canadian postal service is losing a lot of money and I should like the minister to contradict me. I would be happy if he could.

All newspapers and magazines, all businesses and industries are striving hard to discover new means of distribution other than those of the post office.

I think that the postal service will become less and less economical, and, once more, further rate increases will be suggested.

Therefore, I ask the minister to tell us whether the decisions taken last year have been effective.

Hon. Eric W. Kierans (Postmaster General and Minister of Communications): Mr. Speaker, postal rates and increases in effect since 1968 were not intended to make ends meet in the Post Office Department nor to provide a surplus.

For the fiscal year 1969-70, the Post Office Department anticipates a deficit of about $75 million. It is obvious that such a deficit would have been a lot higher had the House not passed the postal rate increases suggested by the department.

[English]

Motion agreed to and the House adjourned at 10.15 p.m.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Tuesday, February 3, 1970

The House met at 2 p.m.

ROUTINE PROCEEDINGS

TRANSPORT AND COMMUNICATIONS

Fourth report of Standing Committee on Transport and Communications—Mr. Turner (London East).

[Editor's Note: For text of above report, see today's Votes and Proceedings.]

ORAL QUESTION PERIOD

TAXATION

WHITE PAPER ON REFORM—CONFLICTING ESTIMATES OF INCREASED REVENUES

Hon. Robert L. Stanfield (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the right hon. Prime Minister whether, in view of the fact that one of the basic calculations underlying the white paper on tax reform, namely, the federal government's estimate as to the amount of increased revenues that the white paper proposals would raise, has been challenged by the province of Ontario, the government is reconsidering its estimate, or is the government going to stick to the figure of $630 million as its estimate of the increased revenues which would result from the recommendations in the white paper?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): I have not looked into it, Mr. Speaker. It was brought to my attention, but the Minister of Finance is in Quebec meeting with the provincial finance ministers. It appears that the computers are not arriving at the same results, but certainly I will be discussing the matter with the minister when he returns.

Mr. Stanfield: I have a supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Will the Prime Minister assure the House that if the studies which the Prime Minister has indicated show that the government has underestimated the revenue yield from the white paper proposals it will immediately reconsider and alter the tax changes and tax increases proposed in the white paper?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Before the Prime Minister says it, I would suggest that the question is hypothetical.

Mr. Stanfield: Then I will ask the Prime Minister a question which is by no means hypothetical. In view of the immense confusion and disagreement that exists as to the amount of new federal revenue which would be produced by the white paper proposals—I am not referring only to the estimate prepared by Ontario but also to estimates made by private individuals—will the government now agree to publish the detailed research and background studies underlying the white paper conclusions, and particularly the estimate of increased revenue resulting from the proposals in the white paper?

Mr. Trudeau: Mr. Speaker, I do not know how the departmental officials and the minister will want to handle this, but obviously the computers in both centres are feeding out different results because the programming is different.

We have a model of the Canadian taxpayer who, incidentally, is a model taxpayer, and when we made our decisions on the white paper we made them in view of the results that we received from the computer. We were not using tax reform as a way to increase taxes surreptitiously. If in looking at the Ontario figures, it is established that in some way their model is better than ours it perhaps will be because the Ontario taxpayer is richer than the average Canadian. Perhaps there is some difference in calculation because of this.

I cannot tell the Leader of the Opposition how we will resolve this matter, but obviously if there is an informed estimate by the Ontario officials we will recheck our own figures.

Hon. George Hees (Prince Edward-Hastings): A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. How is the model taxpayer feeling about this whole white paper approach?

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): He feels you are wasting his time.

Inquiries of the Ministry

POLLUTION

PROJECTED SECOND TRIP OF "MANHATTAN" THROUGH NORTHWEST PASSAGE—IMPOSITION OF REGULATIONS

Mr. T. C. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the Minister of Transport regarding the announcement that the Manhattan is likely to make a second trip through the Northwest Passage. Has the minister been notified, either by the Humble Oil Company of Texas or the United States government, of this impending trip, and will his department be providing the pilot services and the ice-breaking escort required?

Hon. Donald C. Jamieson (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, there has been no official request from either the Humble Oil Company or from any United States government agency. Like the hon. member, I only know what I read in the papers. I am assuming that the report is correct and that we will be getting such a request. If so, we will then decide whether we are in a position to comply with it, but at the moment I cannot say.

Mr. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Is it the minister's intention to impose any regulations upon the Manhattan, or upon any other vessel granted the right of innocent passage through the Northwest Passage, having regard to the possibility of pollution in the event of an accident? Have any such regulations been drafted, and will the Manhattan be subjected to those regulations?

Mr. Jamieson: Certainly the Manhattan, were she to make a second trip, would be subject to any regulations now in effect or to any that may be in effect at that time. I say the latter because, as I have indicated to hon. members, it is our intention to make changes in the Canada Shipping Act with regard to pollution. On the other hand, there may have to be some special regulations with regard to the Manhattan, but these would be more of a navigational nature because I understand there is no expectation that it will be carrying any pollutants on an experimental basis at this time.

Mr. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): In view of the widespread concern about possible pollution in the north, can the minister assure the House that such regulations will be put into effect prior to the second trip of the Manhattan?

[Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale).]

Mr. Jamieson: Mr. Speaker, as I said a moment ago, so far as the actual vessel, the Manhattan, is concerned, (a) we are not sure she will be making this second trip and (b), we are quite certain that if she does the trip will be experimental and she will not be carrying any cargo. In so far as legislation is concerned there will be two areas in which we will be moving, I think in a matter of weeks. One is in respect of pollution measures in the North and the other concerns the more general changes in the Canada Shipping Act having to do with shipping and pollution around our entire coastline.

Mr. G. W. Baldwin (Peace River): Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask the minister a supplementary question. Would he obtain a copy of the third report of the Standing Committee on Indian Affairs and Northern Development, send it to the Humble Oil Company and advise them that it substantially represents the views of the great majority of the people of Canada?

Mr. Jamieson: Mr. Speaker, I have no doubt the report is already in their hands.

Mr. James E. McGrath (St. John's East): A further supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Will Canada be obliged to underwrite the costs of icebreaking services for any subsequent trips by the Manhattan?

Mr. Speaker: Order. The hon. member for Lotbinière.

[Translation]

TRADE

GLASS—EFFECTS OF IMPORTS ON CANADIAN INDUSTRY

Mr. André Fortin (Lotbinière): Mr. Speaker, I want to put a question to the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce.

Is he aware that imports of sheet glass from Poland, Romania, East Germany, the Soviet Union and Czechoslovakia are likely to cause the closing down of two important plants in Montreal and Toronto?

Mr. Speaker: I think this question could be put on the order paper. The hon. member is asking the minister to tell him if he is aware of certain circumstances. I do not think the question, as worded, is admissible at this time.

Mr. Fortin: Mr. Speaker, in view of the importance of the question, I should like, if I may, to rephrase it.

Could the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce tell the House whether or not his department was approached with the problem of the possible closing down of two sheet glass manufacturing plants, one in Montreal and the other in Toronto, because of the importance of sheet glass in certain countries such as Poland, Romania, East Germany and Czechoslovakia?

Hon. Jean Luc Pepin (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): Mr. Speaker, the minister was not aware of this until now. He is now, and he is going to inquire into this matter.

[English]

GRAIN

WHEAT—DETERMINATION OF XCAN PRICES—ASSISTANCE TO NEW AGENCY

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prince Albert): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce. Now that the government has decided to give assistance to the Wheat Board by having available a consortium of grain dealers and elevator companies in order to endeavour to recover the 11 per cent of international trade in the export of wheat that Canada has lost, will the minister state whether the prices at which the sales are to be made by these companies will be determined by the Wheat Board? If not, is the government returning to the policy of 1936 when, so far as prices were concerned, the plug was pulled?

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): Mr. Speaker, the question is not too clear to me. If the right hon. member is referrring to the creation of the new company called XCAN created yesterday by the four co-operatives, we welcome this announcement. We are very pleased with it. I understand that XCAN is going to become an agent of the Wheat Board. We wish them luck and we wish us luck at the same time.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Mr. Speaker, I join in wishing them luck but with regard to prices can the minister say whether these will be determined by the Wheat Board rather than by grain dealers and grain storage companies to whom the price of wheat is of no special concern?

Mr. Pepin: Mr. Speaker, as an agent of the Wheat Board they will have the same rights and privileges as other agents, including the services my department will be giving to them.

Mr. A. P. Gleave (Saskatoon-Biggar): Mr. Speaker, my question is also for the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce. In view of the announcement that the three western wheat pools and the United Grain Growers are jointly setting up an export agency, can the minister inform the House if they will receive any assistance from the government and what will be their relationship with the Canadian Wheat Board?

Mr. Pepin: Mr. Speaker, I understood this was the meaning of the previous question and I would consider that the same answer applies. I understand that the new group will be an agent of the board like any others and will benefit from the same advantages.

Mr. Diefenbaker: What advantages?

MOVEMENT BY RAILWAYS

Mr. A. B. Douglas (Assiniboia): Mr. Speaker, I have a related question for the minister who is answering for the Wheat Board. Are the railways meeting their commitments to move grain at a rate which will fill the terminals at the Lakehead well in advance of the opening of navigation?

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): Mr. Speaker, this has already been indicated by the minister responsible, again yesterday by the chairman of the Wheat Board and was confirmed to me this morning.

While I am on my feet I might say that I had a telephone call from the Minister of Labour—his smile came through the telephone beautifully—who told me that agreement has been reached between the two parties in Vancouver, subject to ratification by the union members before Thursday.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Mackenzie.

Mr. Gleave: A point of order, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member is rising on a point of order?

Mr. Gleave: Yes, Mr. Speaker. I did not receive an answer to the question I directed to the minister in which I asked if this exporting agency was going to receive any assistance from the Canadian government.

Mr. Speaker: That, of course, is not a point of order, but I shall return to the hon. member in a moment. I understand he has a supplementary. For the moment the Chair recognizes the hon. member for Mackenzie.

Inquiries of the Ministry

TRADE

POSSIBILITY OF BUYING TRACTORS FROM SOVIET UNION

Mr. S. J. Korchinski (Mackenzie): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce. Since the several Senators who visited the Soviet Union seem to have been authorized by the Department of Industry, Trade and Commerce to promote trade between Canada and the Soviet Union, can the minister enlighten the House and the country about the possibilities of trade agreements between the Soviet Union and Canada and whether Russian tractors may be sold in this country, especially since United States tractor companies are not being too co-operative in reducing their prices?

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): Mr. Speaker, negotiations between Canada and the Soviet Union on the renewal of the trade agreement will begin shortly. In these negotiations it is obvious that all subjects of the type the hon. member has raised will be taken into consideration. We shall be talking about the future of Canadian exports to the Soviet Union and about Soviet Union exports to Canada. As the Minister of Agriculture has already indicated if other countries, if the Soviet Union for one, has some good tractors to sell to Canada, I am quite sure Canadian farmers will be very interested.

Mr. Korchinski: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Can the minister say whether in their travels the Senators approached the authorities of the Soviet Union about this specific matter?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I think that question ought to be asked in the Senate instead of in the House.

GRAIN

WHEAT—ASSISTANCE TO XCAN

Mr. A. P. Gleave (Saskatoon-Biggar): Mr. Speaker, may I again ask the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce whether the government is giving any financial assistance to the new exporting agency, XCAN?

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): Mr. Speaker, I have already said that to my knowledge the new agency would be an agent of the Canadian Wheat Board much like the other 30-odd agents the Wheat Board has. As such it would be entitled to benefit from the good services of the Wheat Board and of the Department of Industry, Trade and Commerce as well.

Mr. Diefenbaker: I hope this agency will be more successful than others have been.

Mr. A. B. Douglas (Assiniboia): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a further supplementary question to the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce. How do grain stocks in Lakehead terminals at the present time compare with levels at this time last year?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I doubt whether this question should be asked during the question period.

Mr. Andras: On a question of privilege, Mr. Speaker, I implore hon. members to recognize that the two cities of Port Arthur and Fort William, formerly known as the Lakehead, have now been formally amalgamated and the proper name to describe them is Thunder Bay.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

PROPOSED U.S. NUCLEAR TESTS

Hon. George Hees (Prince Edward-Hastings): Mr. Speaker, may I direct my question to the Prime Minister. Since there is great uncertainty among scientists regarding the effects of the greatly expanded tests which the United States government is planning to carry out in the near future at Amchitka Island, is the government of Canada planning to ask the United States government to put off these tests until it can satisfy itself that no ill effects will be suffered by the people of the west coast of Canada?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I have nothing to add to the answer given yesterday to a similar question by the Secretary of State for External Affairs. Perhaps the hon. member will look up Hansard.

Mr. Hees: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Are we to take it that the government is perfectly willing to have these tests go ahead regardless of their ill effects on the citizens of the west coast of Canada? The Prime Minister nods his head, meaning no doubt that he is perfectly willing that this should be so.

Mr. David Anderson (Esquimalt-Saanich): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a supplementary question to the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources. Has his department or any other department of government received from the United States data on the results of the first tests at Amchitka from which we can judge whether or not the second proposed series of tests is desirable or otherwise from the Canadian point of view?

Mr. Trudeau: Mr. Speaker, I apologize to the hon. member; I am afraid I was not listening to him. I was listening to the hon. member for Prince Edward-Hastings trying to smuggle a remark into the blues.

Mr. Anderson: Mr. Speaker, may I repeat my question. It was not directed to the Prime Minister but to the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources. Has the minister's department or any other department of government received from the United States data on the results of their first tests at Amchitka so that we can judge whether or not the second series of tests will be desirable or otherwise from Canada's standpoint?

Hon. J. J. Greene (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, I have no knowledge of whether these reports were received, but I will be glad to take the member's supplementary question as notice.

IMMIGRATION

DEPORTATION OF JERRY MYRIC MIHM AND FAMILY—REQUEST FOR INTERVENTION

Mr. David Lewis (York South): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Manpower and Immigration. In his absence last Wednesday I asked the Prime Minister a question arising out of the decision of the Supreme Court of Canada that the deportation of Jerry Mihm, his wife and Canadian-born child should be carried out. Will the Prime Minister and the Minister take into consideration the possibility of letting the family stay in Canada in view of the great hardship that will follow their deportation to the United States?

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Minister of Manpower and Immigration): If I may answer the question, Mr. Speaker, I would advise the hon. member that following the announcement of the decision of the Supreme Court of Canada in this case, counsel for Mr. Mihm filed a formal motion with the Immigration Appeal Board for the reopening of the hearing and an appeal against the order for the deportation of the family. I understand that is under consideration at the present time. I think the hon. member understands that at this stage the matter is under the exclusive jurisdiction of the Immigration Appeal Board.

Mr. Lewis: I appreciate that and I thank the minister for informing the House about the application for reconsideration. Can the minister assure the House that he will watch the progress of this case with great care and do everything possible to prevent Mr. Mihm, his wife and Canadian-born child from having to suffer the hardship of the father being in jail for a lengthy period?

Mr. MacEachen: Mr. Speaker, I will certainly watch the progress of the case and do anything within my power, but I think it should be made clear that under the law passed by Parliament the minister and the department are powerless at this stage. The outcome depends upon a decision of the board. The matter is now before the board and until a decision as to a rehearing is made I think further comment from me would be inappropriate.

Mr. Lewis: I have a further supplementary question.

Mr. Speaker: I believe the hon. member has already had two supplementaries on the same question.

Mr. Lewis: One, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Speaker: Perhaps we should go on to another subject. The hon. member for York West.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

An hon. Member: Don't let us down.

Mr. Hees: Let's see if you really mean all those things you have been saying.

Mr. Givens: I always mean what I say.

HOUSING

LOCATIONS OF NEW URBAN RENEWAL PROJECTS

Mr. Philip G. Givens (York West): I wish to direct a question to the Minister without Portfolio in charge of housing.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Hees: That is not the guy you are after.

Inquiries of the Ministry

Mr. Givens: Is the minister now in a position to reveal the locations of the 12 new urban renewal projects he referred to in his statement last December?

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Hon. Robert K. Andras (Minister without Portfolio): Mr. Speaker, to quiet the catcalls of the opposition may I say this question was put to me in December by the hon. member for Hamilton West. We offered to the provincial ministers concerned participation in 12 schemes, one in St. John's, Newfoundland, one in Moncton, one in Montreal, two in Quebec city, one in Cornwall, three in Toronto, two in Winnipeg and one in Kamsack. In addition hon. members will recall that there were six schemes under negotiation from August. In some cases the provincial ministers have indicated a desire to reallocate part of these funds to other schemes and we are receptive to such suggestions. These are the 12 schemes to which I referred.

ALLOCATION OF MONEY FOR EXPERIMENTAL PROJECTS AND RENT SUPPLEMENT

Mr. David Orlikow (Winnipeg North): A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Does the minister contemplate the use of any of the $200 million for new or revised techniques to which he referred to establish federal experimental housing projects?

Mr. Andras: Mr. Speaker, that sort of approach will be most welcomed.

Mr. Orlikow: A supplementary question. Is the minister prepared to use any of the $200 million for new approaches for the purpose of rent supplement programs for low-income earners?

Mr. Andras: The whole question of the rent-to-income scale in public housing is now receiving close examination. We now have the final recommendations of all the provinces—the last was received a few weeks ago—and I hope to be in a position to announce shortly to provincial ministers some ideas for an adjustment of the rent-to-income scale.

Mr. A. D. Hales (Wellington): Can the minister advise the House when the other areas which were under consideration for urban renewal will be reconsidered?

Mr. Andras: I have nothing to add to the statement I made in December in that regard.

[Mr. Hees.]

REQUEST FOR STATEMENT ON AVAILABILITY OF MORTGAGE MONEY

Mr. Lincoln M. Alexander (Hamilton West): In light of recent reports that inflation and the government's attempt to curb it through a tight money policy have combined to reduce seriously the amount of mortgage money available in Canada through insurance companies, would the minister be prepared to make a statement on motions as soon as he can regarding this very serious situation, with some reference to pension funds and building societies?

Hon. Robert K. Andras (Minister without Portfolio): We are encouraging through a specific program of contact the investment of pension funds in the mortgage field—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I regret I must interrupt the minister but the question was simply whether a statement would be made. A statement cannot be made at this time.

FUNDS FOR PURCHASE OF OLDER HOMES

Hon. Marcel Lambert (Edmonton West): Having regard to the unexplained absence of Hansard, or the non-delivery of Hansard—

An hon. Member: It is here.

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): —would the minister indicate, in verification of his statement made in the House yesterday, whether any provision has been made for the continuation or addition of funds for the financing of the purchase of older homes, a move which would also be of great assistance in the housing of those in the lower income group?

Hon. Robert K. Andras (Minister without Portfolio): I think I answered that question in a reply I gave yesterday. But the answer is yes, we are continuing the program of loans for the purchase and rehabilitation of existing homes.

Mr. Speaker: I wonder whether hon. members do not feel we should now pass on to another subject. We have had a number of supplementaries on this question. We might return to the subject after other questions have been dealt with.

INDIAN AFFAIRS

INVITATION TO PRIME MINISTER TO VISIT SIX NATIONS RESERVE

Mr. W. B. Nesbitt (Oxford): I have a question for the Prime Minister, Mr. Speaker. Will the Prime Minister accept the invitation extended to him by the Six Nations Iroquois Confederacy to visit the reservation at Brantford and consult with the Indians in connection with treaty rights and other matters which concern the confederacy?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): I have no exact recollection of such an invitation, Mr. Speaker. I did correspond with the secretary, I believe, of the Six Nations Confederacy, but as I recall it this correspondence had to do with other types of representations and my answer was no.

Mr. Nesbitt: Would the Prime Minister check with his office to ascertain whether the invitation to which I referred in my question was not extended to him this morning or last evening? An invitation was also extended to His Excellency the Governor General.

[Translation]

FINANCE

ABOLITION OF JOINT PROGRAMS—PAYMENT OF FISCAL EQUIVALENT TO PROVINCES

Mr. Roland Godin (Portneuf): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Prime Minister.

Is the government considering terminating cost-sharing programs and transferring the corresponding tax funds to the provinces, as was suggested yesterday in Quebec City?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I do not know who suggested that in Quebec City yesterday but as early as 1966 Mr. Pearson's government, through the then Minister of Finance (Mr. Sharp), put forward a similar proposal which, as you know, was accepted by one province and not by the others.

[English]

THE CANADIAN ECONOMY

INFLATION—INCREASE IN TRUCKING RATES BY QUEBEC TRANSPORTATION BOARD—INCREASE IN GLASS CONTAINER PRICES

Hon. Herb Gray (Minister without Portfolio): Mr. Speaker, last week I undertook to provide an answer to a question asked by the Leader of the Opposition about increases in trucking rates. This situation is a complex one because it involves matters of provincial administration which are handled differently in different provinces. The government will be exploring appropriate ways to go into it in light of these differences in provincial practices and laws and in light of what is disclosed in the information it has requested as to the basis upon which the Quebec board authorized the increases in question.

I should like to take this opportunity to inform the House about something in which I am sure the Leader of the Opposition and all other members will be interested. It concerns the action taken by the government with regard to increases in prices proposed by another industry, that of manufacturing glass containers. Discussions have been held with the major manufacturers of glass containers concerning the importance of avoiding major discretionary price increases while the Prices and Incomes Commission is working to secure the support of the business community for a price restraint program.

Some hon. Members: Order!

Mr. Speaker: Order. I have to interrupt the minister. It seems the statement he is making now is of the type which is normally made on motions.

Mr. Gray: I wonder if I could have your indulgence, Mr. Speaker; since I have reached the last couple of words and the House may be wondering what I am leading up to.

Mr. Speaker: The Chair was wondering too. Perhaps, with the consent of the House, the minister might be allowed to complete his statement.

Mr. Gray: As a consequence of these discussions the two largest manufacturers of glass containers in Canada, Consumer Glass and Dominion Glass, have agreed to suspend until March 1 price increases announced last December.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Hon. Robert L. Stanfield (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased with the information about glass, but we shall not allow it to distract us from the trucking problem. Am I correct in assuming from the minister's answer that the government does not propose to take any action at all with regard to the increase in trucking rates?

Mr. Speaker: I have some doubts as to the form of the question. I would think it was somewhat argumentative.

Mr. Stanfield: I am seeking clarification, Mr. Speaker. In my original formulation of the question I asked whether the government proposed to take any initiative with regard to this matter. I am simply asking the minister now whether the government does intend to take any such initiative.

Mr. Gray: The initiative will depend on the result of our assessment of the information we have sought from the Quebec board as to the basis on which they granted an increase, and on the results of our analysis of the different regulatory practices followed by the provincial governments. These are questions about which we are concerned, and a decision will be reached in the light of the information we receive.

Mr. Stanfield: One further question: is the government fighting inflation in 1970 or in 1980?

INDIAN AFFAIRS

LEASE OF CAUGHNAWAGA LAND AS GARBAGE DUMP—GLENDON COLLEGE REPORT

Mr. Frank Howard (Skeena): I should like to direct a question to my favourite minister, the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development. Has the hon. gentleman received a complaint within the last few days about the process in dealing with the lease of Indian reserve land at Caughnawaga as a garbage dump and, if so, does he intend to conduct an inquiry?

Would the minister also take the opportunity to deal with a question I posed to him last week about a report from Glendon College?

[Translation]

Hon. Jean Chrétien (Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): Mr. Speaker, I am particularly pleased to answer the hon. member. I do not know anything about the new land rental agreement at Caughnawaga. I have not received any information. I shall investigate and gladly report to the hon. member if need be.

As to the Glendon College report, it was prepared by the students. It deals with the attitude of white people towards the Indians and we are aware of it. The report clearly indicates that some of the attitudes of white people should be changed. We always do our best to help the Canadian people better understand our Indian brothers.

[English]

Mr. Howard (Skeena): I am familiar with what the report contains. The question I posed to the minister through his Parliamentary Secretary a few days ago was whether the minister would be prepared to make a statement on motions about government action with respect to the findings and recommendations in that report.

[Translation]

Mr. Chrétien: Mr. Speaker, I do not think it is necessary to make a statement on the matter. The government policy as regards the attitude to be adopted by people generally towards Canadian Indians is well known and time and again I have asked people to treat the Indians in a more humane way. It is my intention to continue making such appeals.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

[English]

AIR TRANSPORT

CRASH IN BRITISH COLUMBIA—EQUIPMENT OF PLANE

Mr. Bruce Howard (Okanagan Boundary): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct my question to the Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of National Defence. Was the aircraft that is missing in southern British Columbia and currently the subject of search and rescue operations equipped with a crash position indicator?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I have some serious doubts as to the form of the question asked by the hon. member. The hon. member is asking for information about a situation which is behind us. Perhaps he might formulate his inquiry in another manner.

Mr. Howard (Okanagan Boundary): Mr. Speaker, perhaps I could ask a question of the Minister of Transport. In view of the fact that approximately 50 aircraft have been missing in a small area in southern British Columbia in the last 10 years, all of which have been the subject of search and rescue operations, what progress is the department making in respect of the proposal to have regulations requiring such aircraft to be equipped with crash position indicators?

Hon. Donald C. Jamieson (Minister of Transport): A very good question, Mr. Speaker. I will try to home in on the answer and see whether I can find out for the hon. member in a couple of days.

HARBOURS

GENERAL CARGO FLOW—REQUEST FOR EXAMINATION AND REPORT

Mr. Robert McCleave (Halifax-East Hants): Mr. Speaker, I have given the Minister of Transport written notice of this question which is urgent in respect of at least several Canadian ports. Will the minister ask the National Harbours Board to examine the flow of general cargo, apart from containerized cargoes, through ports operated by the board in light of changes in January and cuts in employment at certain ports? Will he cause the findings and any recommendations to be made available to the House, perhaps on motions?

Hon. Donald C. Jamieson (Minister of Transport): Yes, Mr. Speaker, I will be glad to do that.

GRAIN

COMPOSITION OF DELEGATION TO GREAT BRITAIN

Mr. A. P. Gleave (Saskatoon-Biggar): Mr. Speaker, in view of the fact that the Minister without Portfolio in charge of the Wheat Board is in London and is reportedly discussing the grading of grain, among other matters, with British importers, will the Minister of Agriculture inform the House whether there are representatives of the Board of Grain Commissioners or the Department of Agriculture with the delegation?

Hon. H. A. Olson (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, I do not believe there are members of the Board of Grain Commissioners with this delegation, but I believe there are three or four members of the Canadian Wheat Board.

AIR TRANSPORT

CTC DECISION RESPECTING PRAIRIE SERVICES

Hon. W. G. Dinsdale (Brandon-Souris): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct my question to the Minister of Transport. In view of the hon. gentleman's reputation for fairness, will he review the recent decision of the Air Transport Committee respecting class 1 regional air services on the Prairies, particularly with a view to annulling the decision to suspend services into western Manitoba?

Hon. Donald C. Jamieson (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I was not aware that there was a suspension of service. I will certainly take a look at the situation and if it is a matter which could be the subject of appeal to me presumably somebody will appeal it and I will look at it in that form.

[Translation]

POST OFFICE

MONTREAL—EFFECT OF WORK-TO-RULE ACTION OF G. LAPALME INC. EMPLOYEES

Hon. Martial Asselin (Charlevoix): Mr. Speaker, I should like to put a question to the Postmaster General and Minister of Communications.

As a result of the apparent refusal of the department to renew the mail delivery contracts of G. Lapalme Inc., of Montreal, the employees of that company are working to rule.

I would like to know whether the minister has taken the necessary measures to restore order and to ensure satisfactory mail delivery and whether the employees of G. Lapalme Inc. will be hired by other companies which have secured contracts from March 31?

Hon. Eric W. Kierans (Postmaster General and Minister of Communications): Mr. Speaker, it is true that G. Lapalme Inc. is contractually bound with the department to collect mail and carry it to relay boxes, but it appears that the slowness is due to the recent contracts awarded for mail transportation in the Montreal area and also for highway services. Unfortunately, the employer, G. Lapalme Inc., did not put in a tender and this has obviously put his employees in a position of insecurity.

As usual, we have called for tenders in all cities of the country and we have since advised the contractor and the unions, four or five months ago—

Mr. Speaker: Order. I am sorry but I have to interrupt the minister. I believe his answer should be shorter and I ask him to be as brief as possible in answering the specific question of the hon. member.

Mr. Kierans: To give a direct answer to the hon. member for Charlevoix, Mr. Speaker, the Post Office and Communications Department does all it can to settle the situation in Montreal and, naturally, the Lapalme company and its employees are asked to get back to work according to the terms of their contract.

Mr. Asselin: I have a supplementary question for the minister, Mr. Speaker.

Being aware that troubles of this kind occurred last year in Montreal, can the minister assure the House that he will offer his good services to the G. Lapalme Inc., in order that mail delivery will be made regularly in Montreal, even if a strike breaks out—

Inquiries of the Ministry

Mr. Speaker: I suggest to the hon. member that the supplementary question is hypothetical.

Mr. Asselin: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker.

Already, the employees of G. Lapalme Inc., who are delivering the mail in Montreal, have started to work to rule and if they should continue, the patrons are the ones who will suffer. What I want to know is whether the minister will take whatever measures are necessary to ensure delivery of the mail?

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member has made representations. He must assume that the minister has taken note of them.

[English]

AIRPORTS

LOCATION OF NEW FACILITY AT TORONTO

Mr. A. D. Hales (Wellington): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct my question to the Minister of Transport. Is he now in a position to name the location of the airport which will be an auxiliary to the Malton airport and, if not, when does he expect to make such an announcement?

Hon. Donald C. Jamieson (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, unfortunately I am not in a position yet to name it, primarily because of the hazards or risks of land speculation if there were a premature announcement. We are now examining the possibility of maximum disclosure and I should hope to be able to indicate this within a week or ten days following discussion with the Metro council and the council of the city of Toronto.

GRAIN

REQUEST FOR REPORT ON BOOTLEGGING IN PEACE RIVER AREA OF BRITISH COLUMBIA

Mr. Robert Borrie (Prince George-Peace River): Mr. Speaker, in the absence of the Minister without Portfolio responsible for the Canadian Wheat Board I should like to direct this question to the minister answering for him today. Is a progress report available on investigations currently being conducted by inspectors of the Canadian Wheat Board in the Peace River area of British Columbia on the effect bootlegging of grain has on the local economy?

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): I will try to find out the results of the investigations that were held.

[Mr. Asselin.]

AGRICULTURE

ENLARGING OF BARBER COMMISSION TERMS OF REFERENCE

Mr. H. W. Danforth (Kent-Essex): Mr. Speaker, in view of the startling charges contained in the Barber report regarding farm machinery prices, will the Minister of Agriculture indicate whether the government plans to enlarge this inquiry to include other major agricultural input costs and specifically agrochemicals of all kinds?

Hon. H. A. Olson (Minister of Agriculture): No, Mr. Speaker. If the hon. member is asking whether we should have further inquiries, perhaps I should say I think we ought to investigate thoroughly the actions we can take respecting farm equipment, particularly tractors and combines, in view of Dr. Barber's report.

POLLUTION

EFFECT OF CONVERSION TO SMOKELESS AIRPLANE ENGINES

Mr. Randolph Harding (Kootenay West): Mr. Speaker, in view of the report that Air Canada and Canadian Pacific Airlines are preparing to convert to smokeless engines during the next two years, and that it is possible the new burners could emit even more noxious and damaging fumes, I should like to ask the Minister of Transport whether his department has done any research on this matter or whether research is under way, and whether the department has full information on the results which would occur from such a change? If no information is available, will this be checked out by the department responsible?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member's question should be placed on the Order Paper.

PUBLIC SERVICE

FREEDOM OF SENIOR EMPLOYEES TO AIR PERSONAL VIEWS ON POLICY

Mr. J. P. Nowlan (Annapolis Valley): Mr. Speaker, in view of the Prime Minister's answer to me yesterday that it is now government policy to permit senior public servants to make public their personal views on matters of public policy, when does he intend to call a spade a spade and announce his preference and intent to implement a presidential system in this country?

Mr. Speaker: Order. The hon. member for Wetaskiwin.

Mr. Nowlan: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Nowlan: You can groan all you want. I am rising on a serious point of order which I do not do lightly today or on any other day. There may be some aspects of the Prime Minister's conduct in respect of United States takeovers that we cannot debate in this House, but as far as the business of this House and this country is concerned, surely there comes a time when we should start to debate some aspects of this procedure.

We have heard for the first time under this Prime Minister the interesting doctrine that cabinet ministers can express individual viewpoints on matters of government policy until they become government policy. Perhaps no one took exception to that, but it was a new practice. But as a result of the Prime Minister's answer to my question yesterday he is defining for the first time a most fantastic doctrine of parliamentary business.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member is making a speech. I fail to see how this is a point of order, but if he has one he should make it as soon as possible.

Mr. Nowlan: I was coming to the summation of my point of order, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Perrault: Hear, hear!

Mr. Nowlan: I am sure the hon. member for Burnaby-Seymour never heard this type of doctrine enunciated in British Columbia when he sat opposite the then Premier of British Columbia. My point of order is that it may be one thing for the Prime Minister to let his cabinet ministers give their viewpoints on public policy but I suggest it becomes quite another matter if senior public servants are to be allowed to give their personal viewpoints on matters under government study.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. If that is the hon. member's point of order, I would have to rule that there is no point or order. It is obviously a question of debate. The hon. member may have a good point to make in connection with a debate on that subject, but I have to rule that this is not a point of order on which the Chair should be called to rule at this time. Orders of the day.

Mr. Nowlan: Mr. Speaker, if it is not a point of order, then I think it becomes a question of privilege involving what members of the House, be they on the government side or on the opposition side, have to say either with regard to the third report of the B and B Commission, the white paper on taxation or any other government policy which affects all members, and how we are to conduct ourselves in the House in face of this new doctrine according to which senior federal public servants can say one thing and cabinet ministers can say another. How do we come to grips with any issues in the country when we have this fantastic, academic, theoretical display of viewpoints?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Orders of the day. Is the Prime Minister rising on a point of order?

Mr. Trudeau: I wish to correct an error in Hansard which has just been brought to my attention.

Mr. Speaker: This can be done by unanimous consent of the House. Is it agreed?

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. Speaker: The Prime Minister does not have the consent of the House.

Some hon. Members: Shame!

An hon. Member: This is in accordance with our parliamentary system.

Mr. Trudeau: That is how you get a presidential system.

An hon. Member: Macdonald has to go.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I believe there was an agreement among party representatives as to the possibility of limiting speeches in today's debate to 15 minutes, apart from the mover of the motion and the government member replying thereto. If I am correct that this was agreed to, I wonder if it could be made an order for the day.

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): As I understood it, in addition to the mover of the motion and the government respondent, representatives of each of the two other parties would be allowed more time. Subject to that, other hon. members taking part in the debate would be limited to 15 minutes. We are certainly agreeable to that.

Mr. Speaker: Is this agreed? If hon. members do not agree they should indicate so. It is very difficult for the Chair to guess whether there are yeas or nays. Is there unanimous agreement?

[Translation]

Mr. Fortin: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker.

In connection with the point of order raised by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre, I wish to ask the President of the Privy Council if the agreement applies only to today's debate or if it will serve as a precedent with regard to the other days allotted for opposition motions.

[English]

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): First I should make it clear that the suggestion was not my own, but I am willing to accede to it. I understand that this rule is to apply to this debate only and in the case of further debates it would be subject to a decision as to whether this might be desirable.

Mr. Speaker: Is this agreed?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Speaker: It is so ordered. Orders of the day.

• (3:00 p.m.)

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

BUSINESS OF SUPPLY

ALLOTTED DAY, S.O. 58—FAILURE TO CO-ORDINATE REGIONAL DEVELOPMENT POLICIES AND TO REFER ISSUE TO STANDING COMMITTEE

Mr. James A. McGrath (St. John's East) moved:

That this House condemns the government's failure to co-ordinate its regional development policies under the Department of Regional Economic Expansion with other government activities, and its failure to bring in an appropriate reference to place this issue before the Standing Committee on Regional Development.

He said: Mr. Speaker, this motion is brought forward today out of the sense of frustration that we have experienced since this session started; first, our frustration in trying to receive information from the government regarding their regional development policies and regarding the various development programs that are in operation under the Department of Regional Economic Expansion, and second, our utter frustration over our unsuccessful attempts to have a meeting of the Standing Committee on Regional Development convened.

[Mr. Speaker.]

Notwithstanding the fact that we are now well into the session, and that the members of the Standing Committee on Regional Development, which is supposedly the committee of this House charged with the responsibilities that come under the Minister of Regional Economic Expansion (Mr. Marchand), have been appointed since the first day of the session, the government—and we can only believe it is the government that has this responsibility—has failed to convene an organizational meeting of this committee for the purpose of electing a chairman and a vice chairman. As a consequence of that, we have been frustrated in our attempts to bring before Parliament what we feel to be one of the most serious problems facing the country today, namely that of regional development, and also what we believe to be the government's failure to this date to deal with that problem adequately. So, we use this device in the hope that perhaps the minister, whom I am glad to see in his place and whom I hope to see on his feet today, will get the message from what I have to say and from the remarks of other hon. members during the course of this debate.

The aim of regional development is not a new one to this country. As a matter of fact, it is as old as confederation, but certainly since that time we have had a series of new programs. We have had revised programs and replaced programs, all supposedly to be the panacea to deal with the problem of regional development. But, Mr. Speaker, we still have regional disparities in this country. We still have the consequences of regional disparity notwithstanding grandiose attempts by the government and the minister, notwithstanding what has been said by the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) and the promises he made to the country during the course of the last election campaign.

In 1961, we saw the beginning of the ARDA program, a program designed at that time to improve land use in the poorer rural areas of Canada, and hence designed to upgrade the economies of these areas. Then, in 1968 the original ARDA program was replaced by what became known as the FRED program, the Fund for Rural Economic Development, which was to provide money for other purposes as well as land use improvement, which was to provide for long-range planning of rural development, with consultation to take place between the federal and provincial governments. We know what happened to poor FRED. Poor FRED is dead.

In the meantime, the Area Development Incentives Program was begun with a view to encouraging industrial development. Under this program, started with such great promise in 1963, special areas were designated because of their high levels of unemployment, and firms willing to establish in these special areas were given concessions or grants by the government. We all know what happened to ADIA.

These were the national programs, but there were also special programs such as the Atlantic Development Board, which was started in 1962 and which recognized the special needs of the area known as the Atlantic provinces. In its short history, the Atlantic Development Board certainly fulfilled many of its expectations. It did great things in the four Atlantic provinces. It took on the responsibility for the over-all economic development in the region and for the stimulation of new regional programs. It made special aid available to the provinces for highway construction and for power development, all designed to make this traditionally backward area of the country more attractive to industry. Mr. Speaker, we know what happened to the Atlantic Development Board.

By 1968 we had a hodgepodge of government programs, some of them in conflict with the others, all with the general aim of improving the poorer regions of the country, but we had little or no co-ordination between them. For example, ARDA was first administered by the Department of Agriculture and then it went to the Department of Forestry. The Area Development Agency, which was responsible for industrial incentives, was under the Department of Industry. The Atlantic Development Board passed through different hands several times.

The result was administrative chaos. But also the result was one of continuing hardship for the people of the regionally disadvantaged areas who had been led to believe, by the introduction of these programs, that a new day had arrived. The promise of these various programs, which are now supposed to be co-ordinated under the minister, has never been fulfilled, perhaps with the exception of the Atlantic Development Board and it died before it had a chance to implement its program fully.

By the summer of 1969 it was obvious that something would have to be done to bring some order into the whole area. Now, we have the new Department of Regional Economic Expansion, which brings together all of these various programs dealing with regional disparity, and indeed which is charged by Parliament with co-ordinating them.

The minister in charge of this department—this point was made during the course of the debate setting up the department, and it is well to repeat it now—was vested by Parliament with enormous powers, powers that in my view no other minister of the Crown has ever had in peacetime. He was authorized, on his own initiative and on his own authority, to designate areas which he felt were in need of special assistance to improve the economic opportunities of their residents. He could virtually do anything which he felt would improve the economic conditions within these areas. He could make grants to provincial governments. He could make provision whereby provincial services could be expanded. He could make loans. He could even make outright grants to firms planning to locate in the areas. He could secure the co-operation of a special body to undertake development projects in an area. Hon. members who follow me in this debate will be making special reference to what has been taking place in the province of Prince Edward Island since the minister became responsible for regional development.

But more important, Mr. Speaker, the minister was supposed to co-ordinate all the programs of all of the other federal departments which would have some influence on the area of regional development and regional incentives. Those of us who had doubts about the advisability of Parliament granting such vast power to one minister could draw some consolation from the thought that the minister was genuine and enthusiastic in his intent. Consequently, we could expect that the power which Parliament had entrusted to him would be used in a very fast and very dramatic way, and that by virtue of these powers he would be able to deal with some of the glaring examples of regional disparity without going through a great deal of bureaucratic red tape. That is what Parliament intended at that time.

Unhappily for us, and in particular more unhappily for those people who live in the regionally disadvantaged areas, we now have the feeling that all isn't well with the government's regional development efforts.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. McGrath: All we had to do was look around. I am glad to see the minister applauding my remarks, and I hope he will shed a little more light on the subject than we have been able to get from him since this session started. We know that all is not well. Conditions in the weaker spots of Canada's economy are not even showing a slow improvement, are not even showing as much improvement as the minister would like us to believe. In one of his official releases last November, the minister boasted that the federal government's regional development program was creating new employment four times as fast as it did in 1968.

• (3:10 p.m.)

I can only say that we must have four times as much unemployment as we did in 1968 if we are to accept that statement because, according to the minister, the grants made so far for 1969 would create 17,938 new jobs. Where are these new jobs that the minister spoke about so glowingly in one of his press releases last fall? The latest unemployment figures from the Dominion Bureau of Statistics show that in the Atlantic provinces, where the minister claims 9,000 new jobs have been created, unemployment rates have not changed from last year. If anything they are worse at this moment. I know they are worse in the province of Newfoundland. In the province of Quebec the minister claims, in the same press release, to have created 5,000 new jobs. For the rest of the country the claims are too insignificant to mention.

When I asked the minister for further information about these new jobs I was informed, and these are the minister's own words, "that some would be created in 1969, some would not appear until 1970 and some would not appear until 1971."

An hon. Member: Some would not appear at all.

Mr. McGrath: And perhaps, as the hon. member suggests, some would not appear at all. To unemployed people in the depressed areas of this country, this does not appear as a very great effort.

What are the achievements for a minister who has been given so much power by Parliament? Nearly 18,000 new jobs have been created over a period of three years. That would not even solve the unemployment situation in the eastern area of Newfoundland. The real problem is not related to what we read in the minister's press releases because these can be examined and scrutinized; the real problem in this country today is that, except for the minister and his deputy, Mr. Kent, nobody in this Parliament and consequently nobody in the country knows what is happening.

Mr. Stanfield: Hear, hear.

Mr. McGrath: I think it is fair to say that the extent of the minister's power under the new legislation is only exceeded by the extent of the secrecy surrounding his activities.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. McGrath: It has only been through the efforts of hon. members on this side of the House that the country knows anything about the new department's operations. It was our party which insisted that an amendment be made to the Regional Development Incentives Act to require the minister to report monthly to Parliament. It is because of this that we now have the information concerning 17 of the 278 grants referred to by the minister in the press release in which the creation of new jobs was glowingly reported. Of the remaining 261 grants made under the Area Development Incentives legislation, Parliament and the country know nothing. Perhaps we may know a little more after we hear from the minister today, if in fact we do hear from him.

We are equally in the dark concerning the signing of federal-provincial agreements under the present legislation. Of course, we hear all kinds of rumours, statements made by provincial premiers, provincial cabinet ministers and provincial politicians. Apparently they have information which Parliament is denied. For example, the Premier of Newfoundland has said, in superlatives that only he can use, that a great one-year plan will be signed by his province and the federal government on April 1 of this year.

An hon. Member: Is he still Premier?

Mr. McGrath: Incidentally, Mr. Speaker, I suggest that April 1 is an appropriate date for the signing of such an agreement. The premier has also suggested that he is going to sign a great five-year agreement in July of this year. We hear little about that from the minister—as a matter of fact we hear nothing about it from the minister, no official announcement whatsoever; nothing. He will not even reply to questions, either orally or on the Order Paper, so we must be content with reading what provincial politicians have to say in the daily press.

Then, Mr. Speaker, we should refer to the Atlantic Advisory Council, the foster child of the Atlantic Development Board—one could almost call it the illegitimate child. As a matter of fact if I were in Newfoundland I would say bastard child, but since I am not I can only say the illegitimate child of the Atlantic Development Board. In keeping with this government's policy of not telling Parliament anything, we know nothing about this new council other than the fact that it did meet in Saint John, New Brunswick, with the minister and his deputy. Some mention was made of the fact that the Atlantic Advisory Council was now concerning itself with regional development strategy.

Regional development strategy—what an excuse for inaction, Mr. Speaker! What a lame excuse for inaction in this area where unemployment will reach crisis proportions by March of this year. Surely, the members of that council must be aware that the Atlantic Development Board made the same statement when it was set up in 1962, but it was not given a chance to devise development strategy for the region. Surely, it is not too much to expect that, after almost ten years, there would be some over-all plan for the region. We know there is not, and we know that apart from what is taking place in Prince Edward Island, there is no strategy for the Atlantic provinces.

On January 19 last, the minister and five of his cabinet colleagues met with the Premier of Manitoba to discuss economic development. What official report did we get of this meeting? The report referred to, "General discussions to see how the two governments could best work together in the area." That is all we got; just that simple phrase. The consultations with Indian groups and provincial governments before the introduction of the new Indian policy were also kept secret. This secrecy was never intended by Parliament when the new legislation was passed but it now leaves the minister free to do whatever he wants. It makes him the most powerful man in Canada, the reigning czar of Canada. This concerns us, Mr. Speaker, and since this session started we have been pressing for a meeting of the regional development committee. We hope the minister will shed some light on exactly what is taking place.

We have seen this pattern emerge before. The designation of regions for industrial incentives under the Regional Development Incentives Act was also carried out in complete secrecy, "in consultation with the provinces". I would like to know the definition of the term "province" used in that context. Who else is concerned other than provincial governments? Because of the provincial consultations, the minister said, the government cannot discuss why some areas, such as Cornwall for example, are not designated despite evident and pressing need.

• (3:20 p.m.)

At the same time we know that one provincial government, Alberta, is loudly disputing the federal government's story concerning what went on during the discussions. It seems that we are witnessing a great charade; we are the unwitting participants in this game the minister is playing. The ministers go from one end of the country to the other holding consultations which are so confidential and so secret that we hear nothing about them. The deputy minister, Mr. Kent, is sent to these consultations, but no communiques are issued, no reports are made and the House is not informed. The ministers return to Ottawa and do what they decided to do before they left for these consultations. This is this government's operational definition of participatory democracy. You hold consultations, say nothing about them and then do exactly what you intended to do before you began those consultations. That is the government's version of participatory democracy.

The Minister of Regional Economic Expansion is going even farther. He, too, is determined to bypass parliamentary scrutiny. Questions on the Order Paper go unanswered; yet the minister is always very concerned to protect the interest of companies which are to receive capital grants. He seems less concerned about protecting the interest of the Canadian taxpayer. That is why we are here.

Most flagrant of all, in the view of some hon. members here, has been the minister's persistent refusal to convene the Standing Committee on Regional Development. This important committee has not met since the beginning of the session. Actually, it has not met since last June. Last spring, the committee set out on a tour of the country to look at the minister's great program in operation. We got only as far as the prairie provinces. The tour was cut short; the rest of it was pre-empted, and quite justly so, because we had to deal with legislation to set up the new department. That should not provide an excuse for preventing the committee fulfilling its obligation to visit other areas of the country, especially eastern Quebec and the Maritime provinces. But, no; the minister does not want the committee to meet, let alone go on the road, because he knows the committee will discover that absolutely nothing has been happening.

He knows, for example, that if the committee were to go to eastern Quebec, where the unemployment rate is rising steadily, it would discover exactly what has been done—nothing. He knows if the committee were to go to my province, Newfoundland, it would report to Parliament exactly what the minister has been doing about the problems of the area—Nothing.

Mr. Marchand (Langelier): Is the hon. member quite sure we have done nothing?

Mr. McGrath: He knows that if the committee were to visit Belle Isle, Parliament would soon know that nothing has been done to remedy the ills of this area that have been crying for attention. It is for these reasons that the minister does not want the committee to meet. I can understand why the minister does not want the committee to visit Cape Breton. He does not want problems connected with the Cape Breton Development Corporation, which have been alluded to in parliament by my colleague, the hon. member for Cape Breton-The Sydneys (Mr. Muir) and other hon. members from that area, to be brought to the committee's attention because it will see exactly what has been done about them—nothing.

Mr. Muir (Cape Breton-The Sydneys): The minister does not even know what has been happening in the area.

Mr. McGrath: On four different occasions, we have called on the government to convene a meeting of this committee, and these are all recorded in Hansard. On December 1, there was a motion under Standing Order 43 asking that the Standing Committee on Regional Development be convened. On another occasion, there was a motion proposed by my colleague, the hon. member for Athabasca (Mr. Yewchuk) under Standing Order 43 to convene this committee in order that it might deal with the closing down of the Newstart program in his constituency. The minister gave a solemn undertaking before the Christmas recess that the committee would be convened. He said it would be convenient to convene a committee meeting in January. We have now reached February 3rd, and the committee still has not met.

No government makes a secret of its successes and I submit that the foregoing facts alluded to, coupled with the very skimpy information we have, is strong evidence that the regional development policies of this government and this minister have been a total failure.

Mr. Lorne Nystrom (Yorkton-Melville): Mr. Speaker, in rising to participate in this debate, may I say that I welcome the opportunity that has been afforded us by the motion proposed by the hon. member for St. John's East (Mr. McGrath) to deal with this entire subject. The members of this party have been as frustrated as the hon. member for St. John's East has been in trying to obtain information about the government's regional development program. We have been frustrated also because of the failure to convene a meeting of the regional development committee. This failure, I think, reflects on the government.

Just before ending his remarks, the hon. member for St. John's East said that the minister does not want the committee to travel around the country, and to eastern Quebec and the Maritimes in particular, because it will discover how little has been done. I am very happy he alluded to that situation. I, and other members of my party, will mention a number of areas of endeavour that we think should receive immediate priority and consideration from the government. Regional development, since the 1968 federal election, should have been an aspect of government activity meriting high priority. Many people in this country were happy to hear the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) say during his election campaign that as soon as possible economic disparities, regional disparities and economic inequities existing in this country would be removed and corrected. Those people were sadly disappointed because so little has been done. It appears to me that little is being planned for the future in this area.

You know, Mr. Speaker, in the last year and a half we have heard much about problems of Canadian unity, separatism and alienation. There is real talk of separatism. In western Canada, people who feel alienated from the central government in Ottawa are beginning to talk of separating. The main reason for their attitude in my opinion is economic alienation, the alienation of these people from the mainstream of Canadian life. Many of these people are unemployed or working for wages which are insufficient to support the standard they are entitled to in a country as rich as Canada. These people are frustrated. Unless we bring about social and economic changes in many regions of Canada suffering from inequities and unless all regions of Canada can be equal partners in confederation, no one can say that this country will stay together for the next 100 years.

• (3:30 p.m.)

Our party has long said that present regional inequities in Canada are intolerable and that we must upgrade the living standards of the people of some regions. Since the 1920's, the gap between the "haves" and "have-nots" in Canada has not narrowed. This cannot be tolerated in a country with the riches and know-how we have. We cannot afford to perpetuate the differences of wealth existing in various regions of the country and the situation in which a man's fate or income is determined more on the basis of where he lives than on the basis of his ambition or ability. Often the region in which he lives is a very dominant factor in deciding his opportunities for employment, the kind of education his children will receive and the future of his family. There are many examples of this. What is the result? The result is that the skills of many Canadians are not developed. In many cases, the skills they do have are not used to their fullest potential. These people do not have an opportunity to explore to the fullest what they wish to explore and to do what they wish to do.

Speaking in harsh economic terms, this lack of development is very costly to the country as a whole. According to economic predictions, hundreds of millions of dollars are lost every year because people are not given the opportunities they would like to have in various regions of the country. Underdeveloped regions of Canada are caught in a vicious circle. I am sure many members who speak this afternoon will mention many of these facts. We see that the underdeveloped and depressed regions are suffering from low incomes, unemployment and a low amount of capital to create new jobs. As a result, there is low productivity in these areas. This leads to a lower level of education, poor health and welfare services and a lower standard of living.

There are many ramifications to this problem. This is another reason why we cannot sit back. We must start exploring and initiating new ideas and programs in the whole area of regional economic development. In my own province of Saskatchewan, many of these things are very true. I know that there is a continual migration of young people from the rural areas to the cities, as well as from the poorer areas to the richer areas of Canada. These are the areas in which there are opportunities for people with skills and university educations. This only complicates and worsens conditions in some of the economically depressed areas of Canada.

Last year, the Economic Council of Canada presented its fifth annual review. It dealt with poverty in this country and I think opened the eyes of many people to the fact that there was poverty in Canada and that something had to be done about it. I wish to read a short extract from the report of the Economic Council on the problem of poverty:

> Poverty in Canada is real. Its numbers are not in the thousands, but millions. There is more of it than our society can tolerate, more than our economy can afford, and far more than existing measures and efforts can cope with. Its persistence, at a time when the bulk of Canadians enjoy one of the highest standards of living in the world, is a disgrace.

We must realize the significance of this poverty both in rural and urban Canada. I do not want to suggest that the Department of Regional, Economic Expansion is the only government department that should be fighting poverty. It isn't. Poverty is a many-headed beast. It must be attacked from many different directions. The Department of Manpower and Immigration and the Department of National Health and Welfare also play a part. However, the Department of Regional Economic Expansion and its minister are among the key people in the fight against poverty.

In 1967 the Dominion Bureau of Statistics said that approximately 45 per cent of Canadian families with incomes falling beneath the low income lines lived in non-urban areas. This income line was determined by the Economic Council of Canada. We know that the incidence of poverty is much higher in areas such as the Maritimes, eastern Quebec and indeed in the Prairies. It is also much higher among our Indian, Métis and Eskimo population. This is a problem which the committee responsible for this department should discuss here and now. We cannot continue procrastinating. If we do, the problem will become more and more complicated and more difficult to solve.

I have mentioned some areas and groups where the incidence of poverty is very high, but they are not the only areas. It is also very high among the white population in the big cities. The Economic Council of Canada said that perhaps one-third to one-half of the poverty in Canada today exists in the big cities of this country. This has very many serious complications and ramifications. It is not a simple problem of income distribution. It is not a simple, economic problem. It has many side effects, one of which is a sense of helplessness and alienation for these people from the society in which they live. There is a culture of poverty. It is a never ending circle in which many people are trapped, creating many social and economic problems. I will give an example of this.

In the United States, a commission was set up to study the unrest, violence and alienation in many of the big cities in that country. They said that one of the reasons for this was poverty and that there was a very high correlation between poverty and crime. This is not very surprising because many of these people are put in situations that are vastly different from those of the majority of the people in that country. Some of these people have to resort to crime because of necessity, because they are alienated from the society in which they live or because of bitterness. These are things which we must also face up to in this country and which will have to be faced very soon by this government.

When John F. Kennedy was President of the United States, a commission was established to investigate much of the unrest in the big cities. They found that one reason was that people were leaving the rural areas of the United States, the farms, towns and villages, and moving into the cities. They were unskilled, in a strange atmosphere and became completely lost and alienated in this atmosphere. They were the rural poor and became the urban poor. This is why we must be concerned with these people now living in the rural and urban areas of our country. This is where the Department of Regional Economic Expansion must start to work immediately. Often, it is difficult to readily detect many of the poor people in this country. We must bear in mind that collectively the poor people are quite inarticulate. They are not organized and to a large extent are voiceless. They do not have a Chamber of Commerce, Bar Association or union to speak for them, to outline their conditions and particular circumstances. This is one reason why, for so many years, these problems have been overlooked. Another reason is that we have been too content to file these problems away under different headings in the various departments of government.

The poor people of this country need to have something done for them soon. This government will have to react because the poverty in this country is very great. It is a great problem to the individual. This is my greatest concern because the individual is being condemned to a life of low income, a life that does not give him or his family an opportunity to do what he wishes. He is sometimes victimized by the lack of proper medical attention or care. He does not have the employment or educational opportunities and often finds himself in a way of life where he does not seem to have a sense of purpose or does not seem to know what he should be doing. These are matters that must be studied. These problems must be solved.

Poverty is also very costly to our society. Every year it costs this country hundreds of millions of dollars because the poor people are held back and are not allowed to do what they want to do. I wish to quote a very short paragraph from an article that appeared in the Ottawa Citizen on November 11, 1969. It reads:

> Poverty may have cost the country as much as $2,284,600,000 in 1961 in loss of output that would otherwise have been achieved if the poor had been properly employed, says an analysis of census figures.

• (3:40 p.m.)

This is just one indication that if we fail to act now, society as a whole will suffer. As I said earlier, this is not my main concern—my concern is principally for the people who live in poverty.

There are one or two other things I might say on this subject, but my time is limited and some of my hon. friends will be bringing out a variety of other points. However, in closing, I do wish to mention one other matter which is of great concern to me and to many hon. members from western Canada in all political parties. When the government announced last summer the areas to be designated under the new Area Development Incentives Act, I was unhappy to note that only a small area of Saskatchewan was included under the plan. We all know about the economic crisis which presently exists in Saskatchewan. Without going into details, let me say that it affects not only farmers but small businessmen and working people alike.

I should like the minister to explain, when he arises to make a statement in the House, why most of Saskatchewan has been excluded, in the main, from the benefits of this legislation. I would suggest to him that because of the present crisis the whole of the province should be designated as a special area, having regard to the economic situation which confronts almost all of the people in that province. In the circumstances, I ask the minister to seriously consider including all of Saskatchewan as a designated area.

Before I sit down, I wish to move an amendment to the motion which is before us today; I hope it will enable us to bring out a few more points. It is seconded by the hon. member for Timiskaming (Mr. Peters) and it reads as follows:

That the motion be amended by changing the period at the end thereof to a comma, and by adding immediately thereafter the following words:

"and this House further condemns the government for its failure to lessen regional poverty across Canada, and for its failure to create job opportunities so sorely needed at this time."

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Carried.

Mr. Nystrom: With this I should like to conclude, once again urging the government to take this debate seriously and convene a meeting of the committee as soon as possible in order that we may discuss the direction in which the government is moving in the sphere of regional economic problems and the whole question of poverty across this country.

[Translation]

Hon. Jean Marchand (Minister of Regional Economic Expansion): Mr. Speaker, I was in Quebec city yesterday for the meeting of Finance ministers and I learned that a debate would take place today on regional development. Even though it meant altering my schedule, I was most happy to do it, because that debate was to give me the opportunity to rise in the House and deal with an extremely complex problem affecting a great number of Canadians. I also thought that it would at least lead the spokesmen for opposition parties not only to express their views but also to give us food for thought on regional development.

Even though I have clear ideas on a professional and moral basis, I do not doubt that there is a way to improve the tools we have given ourselves. I already notice loopholes in pieces of legislation passed hardly a few months ago. It was rather logical for me to expect, especially from the spokesman for the official opposition, a comprehensive study of the whole philosophy of regional development and not merely meaningless and unproductive generalizations. And such was the substance of the remarks made by the hon. member for St. John's East (Mr. McGrath). I have been trying to remember some meaningful point of his speech, which I unfortunately cannot do, because there is none. It was a general lament about unemployment and the alleged secrecy shrouding the Department of Regional Economic Expansion.

It is certainly difficult to eliminate regional disparities in Canada. As the hon. member for St. John's East mentioned, probably as far back as the time of Confederation governments have been trying to wipe them out, but with little success. The only success worth mentioning is that, had we not implemented some of the programs, the gap would perhaps be wider still than it is now. But this is only an assumption, and I do not want to rest my argument on it.

At any rate, it is obvious that we have failed to bridge this gap. Through legislation passed last year, we have tried to give ourselves efficient tools which might enable us to reduce considerably these disparities. While we are attempting to make them disappear, there are things happening at the economic level which affect the implementation of our programs.

In a country as diversified as ours, where there are flagrant contradictions in the field of economics, how is it possible to reach the aims we have set for ourselves? For instance, how do we go about priming the economy in underdeveloped regions while some areas of the country are battling with inflation and others fighting recession? What monetary policy should we adopt? What kind of fiscal policy should we advocate to help certain regions without further aggravating inflation in others? The hon. member for St. John's East could have told us which monetary policy would allow us to reach that goal. It may be that opposition members have excellent ideas which they could share with us.

In our opinion, there are but two possible solutions to our problems: an anti-inflationary policy has to be adopted in an effort to curb the inflationary trend in some regions of the country, and a development policy has to be implemented in the underdeveloped areas.

These are two different policies and we believe it is the only way to reach our objectives. In fact, when inflation pushes prices up in Ontario, Alberta or British Columbia, we realize as well as anyone else that they also climb in St. John's, Moncton, Quebec City and everywhere. If we have to apply a restrictive monetary policy to combat inflation, we notice that such a policy brings adverse consequences on the under-developed areas where a more liberal monetary policy would be called for. This renders the problem much more acute than it would normally be.

We have developed a new policy which implies a considerable increase of industrial incentives in order to persuade business to establish in less developed areas. What was the result? So far, 544 applications made to the department under the new legislation have been approved by the minister. Comparing the impact of the new legislation with what happened when the Area Development Incentives Act was passed in 1965, we see that the first application made after the law came into force was approved in January 1966. This year, in the same month, close to 80 applications had been approved.

When the legislation was passed in July or August last, the department was ready to operate though, of course, it was necessary to proceed to such adjustments as, for instance, training personnel. Some think that it is easy to find the required personnel in order to promote industrial development or to conclude with provinces agreements relating to regional development. Let those who claim they can train personnel more quickly tell us how they do it. As to ourselves, we had, first of all, to find the necessary personnel and it is what we did.

Moreover, negotiations had to be conducted with the provinces as regards regional development, which brought into play what we call infrastructures.

The hon. member for St. John's East asks us: where are the jobs that have been created? That is a very well-timed question, because in fact, there is more unemployment than before. A very pertinent question indeed! He should have given us the answer himself, because this is not only a group of irresponsible people that we have here. Everyone knows that when the department approves an application for some industrial incentive, two years, on the average, are needed before the firm is established and in a position to hire workers.

• (3:50 p.m.)

[English]

Mr. Forrestall: Stop claiming jobs where they don't exist.

Mr. Marchand (Langelier): Will you listen? I listened to your representations a few minutes ago.

Mr. Forrestall: Stop misleading us, then.

[Mr. Marchand (Langelier).]

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker: Order. The minister has the floor.

Mr. Marchand (Langelier): Mr. Speaker, if they definitely want to hold the debate in that vein, I can fight back, for I have enough experience, but their behaviour gives a good idea of the state of mind I denounced a while ago.

I was simply saying that when we approve an application for industrial incentive, an average of two years usually elapses before the plant becomes operational. Some industries might need one year or a year and a half, others three years, depending on the character of the industry concerned.

In 1969, we approved 359 applications, against 98 in 1968, and this should normally create 22,000 new jobs and not 17,000 as stated by the hon. member for St. John's East, who should revise his figures. However, if the number of jobs he mentioned was for November, I must admit that the hon. member was right.

Who in the opposition is able to create employment at a moment's notice?

Have the opposition members a policy that would enable them to achieve this miracle? If so, why do they keep their secret? It is important! How do they create employment overnight?

Mr. Speaker: Order! I have to remind the minister that he should address himself to the Chair.

Mr. Marchand (Langelier): I am sorry, Mr. Speaker, but this is what happens when the debate takes a bad turn. Obviously, such things can happen.

The Regional Development Incentives Act has a purpose: to create employment, and we can already see its effects. As a matter of fact, when the hon. member for St. John's East says that nothing has been done, that no new job has been created since the enactment of the legislation, I suggest that he is acting in an irresponsible manner and that he is playing politics as I would not like to do so myself, and as I would not like to see others do it. They can accuse us of not having—

[English]

Mr. McGrath: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a question of privilege. The minister is imputing motives, and under our rules he is not allowed to do this.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. That is not my interpretation of what the minister said. I cannot interpret his statements as imputing motives. He made a statement but did not impute motives, and that is my ruling.

An hon. Member: You are very sensitive.

Mr. MacEwan: Much ado about nothing.

[Translation]

Mr. Marchand (Langelier): Mr. Speaker, under that legislation, I was authorized to pay some grants to companies willing to settle in underdeveloped areas. I will merely mention that since that legislation was passed, 350 applications have been approved, for investments totalling approximately $639 million. This is what we did in connection with that legislation.

Evidently we have not solved every problem, but what else could we have done under that legislation, except approve a certain number of applications about industrial development? On the other hand, is that figure less than the previous one? Not only it is not, but it is four times higher. In my opinion, next year the growth rate will be much more considerable. I would like to know what hon. members of the opposition are aiming for, in order to see if our activities are really falling short of what the people expect.

As for this first tool at our disposal, we have tried to use it. In that regard, hon. members know how many applications were received and approved and how many jobs will eventually result. I must say "eventually", Mr. Speaker, because that will not happen overnight. I do not see how we could do it by tomorrow morning!

Moreover, with regard to the second part of the legislation which allows us to pay for the infra-structure in the provinces that are unable to establish all the essential services for industrial development, I have this to say: This part of the legislation establishing the department enables me to sign agreements with provinces in order to define priorities, to determine the necessary services and to plan a program for designated areas.

Of course all this leads to discussions. We are to meet the representatives of the provinces. They submitted their projects to us and it is only normal that we discuss them to ensure that they are best for developing the regions concerned. In short, what do we do when we conclude agreements of this nature? The federal government defrays the cost of services for which Ontario, Alberta and British Columbia pay, but some provinces are simply not in a position to set up this basic structure on their own. Therefore we take money from people in Ontario, Alberta and British Columbia and other prosperous provinces and give it to provinces or municipalities that need it.

It is our duty to see to it that the projects submitted are rational and intended to reach the objectives on which we have set our sight. It takes a while to read agreements with the provinces, Mr. Speaker, it cannot be done overnight. Indeed, it supposes several meetings. We have set a target date, next April 1st, to start spending money in that field. I have every reason to believe that we will do so in just about every province in Canada. Agreements are being reached in almost every area. In a few places, there are still a few details to straighten out. But I wonder why the commotion because it took us a few months to sign agreements that are extremely complex and difficult, because we did not report to the House every day or every week on those agreements. How can you negotiate an agreement publicly? We are negotiating agreements dealing with objectives and matters of provincial jurisdiction.

We would like the province to agree before we announce what the agreement is all about. It seems to me there is nothing shocking about the way we proceed and hon. members will get an opportunity to know about all the agreements negotiated with the provinces.

Why such secrecy? Precisely because the agreements deal with matters of provincial jurisdiction. We have no jurisdiction when it comes to sewage systems, roads, education or hospitals. We have to negotiate with the provinces and try to establish priorities in agreement with them.

What is shocking about that? The hon. member for St. John's East would probably want me to say: Well, here is what we suggest, what the province puts forward, what Mr. So-and-so says. Who will venture to imagine that it is possible to negotiate in this way? It is impossible. Once an agreement is reached, nothing prevents hon. members to criticize and to tell us that we went too far or not far enough. This is quite a normal process and I think that we can then arrive at constructive criticism. But simply to suggest to the public that we did not keep them informed about the various stages of our negotiations with the provinces, this is really childish.

I will deal now with the matter of co-ordination of activities. We know that the work which is carried out by the provinces and the municipalities, by degree of importance, is fairly more significant than that carried out by the federal government itself and that is why there must be some co-ordination within the federal government of course, but most of all between the agencies of the various levels of government, federal, provincial and municipal, and that is our obvious purpose when negotiating agreements.

Our friend, the hon. member for Yorkton-Melville (Mr. Nystrom) has laid a general charge when dealing mainly with the problem of poverty. Poverty is like sin. I, too, am against it. But I believe that we are trying and we shall continue to fight it within our own departmental jurisdiction. Of course we do not deny the fact that poverty exists in Canada but we are trying to fight it and I think that we must continue to exert pressures in order to get rid of it.

This is not a problem particular to Canada; it is also an American problem and one that plagues the western world, it may also be a world evil. It is probably most legitimate to require more efforts on our part in that field but there again, it might be a great, general, and even generous idea but it does not give a specific answer to the current problems.

The overall proposal made by the opposition, betrays their ignorance of the whole matter and also indicates a lack of courage. When you want to come to grips with a policy, you have to identify it and point at is weaknesses and failures. Those responsible for it must be brought back to their senses. All they can do is to use one big word: "coordination". This leads nowhere. It simply gives some hon. member a chance to take the floor for half an hour.

This question is of paramount importance for the future of Canada, and it should be a matter of concern for us. All they can find to say, however, is that there is a lack of coordination, putting the blame on the government.

This is truly what can be called "wasting a little time".

Anyway, I have indicated what we have done to stimulate industry and how far we have progressed in our agreements with the provinces. As the estimates will soon be tabled, hon. members will see the extent of the endeavours planned in the field of regional development. Possibly they will say that it is not enough, but they will realize that it is considerably more than was done previously.

The hon. member claims that it is less than before. According to him, things were not so bad at the time of the Atlantic Development Board but since then the eastern provinces have obtained less. This is wrong. The estimates will give the lie to his statement in enabling members to check the facts. The House of Commons is too dignified a place for such grave and general charges to be made without hon. members first taking the trouble of checking their facts to make sure that they know what they are talking about.

At all events, the estimates will be tabled. Discussions will then be more definite and constructive because hon. members will be aware of the financial extent of our efforts. I do not say that it will be sufficient and that it will settle all problems. I am convinced that were I to be allocated twice as much money to spend, I would find areas where to spend it.

It is to be noted, however, that there is here a substantially increased effort. Once the estimates are tabled, I will be the first one to want the committee to convene to consider them and scrutinize all the information which I am prepared to supply in connection with regional development. I do not object to sittings of the committee. On the contrary. Five or six months after the implementation of the act, one cannot claim—

• (4:00 p.m.)

[English]

Mr. Peters: May I ask the minister a question, Mr. Speaker?

[Translation]

Mr. Marchand (Langelier): I have almost finished my speech.

An hon. Member: Carry on!

Mr. Marchand (Langelier): The department is a new one and has been operating only for a few months. Agreements with the provinces have not all been finalized. Within a few weeks, it will all be settled and I believe it will be normal at that time for the committee to review the agreements and see how we want to proceed, and look into the statistics that the estimates will provide. In this way, the committee will be able to do something constructive, instead of merely making general recommendations about coordination.

[English]

Mr. Peters: Mr. Speaker, will the minister now permit a question? I should like to ask him whether he would say a word or two on what action is being taken with regard to the development of growth centres, which was the only change in the new program as opposed to the old one? What negotiations with the provinces are taking place in this regard, and are any of the proposals that are being made to the government in a particular area being reviewed or extended as a result of the growth centre concept?

[Translation]

Mr. Marchand (Langelier): Mr. Speaker, if the hon. member had read the act, he would realize that it does not deal with "growth centres". It does deal, however, with "special areas". Thus we have the power irrespective of designated areas, to designate, in agreement with any province, special areas where we can implement measures that we are not allowed to take under the industrial incentives legislation.

The act does not deal with "growth centres". However this may result in centres—

[English]

Mr. Peters: This is just semantics.

Mr. Marchand (Langelier): It is not only semantics. It is different from that.

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker, if the hon. member wishes to know what special areas will become designated areas, I must tell him that I cannot give this information at this time. It is already quite difficult for provincial governments and for us to exert our efforts on certain areas, even though we are aware that several regions are in need. If we are to reach an agreement, we cannot make them public before agreements are entered into with the provinces.

We do not want to play hide-and-seek. But as we cannot make the whole of Canada a special area, we must make a choice, and an extremely hard one for that matter. And the choice is even harder for the provinces.

If we publicize the various proposed projects, it would never be possible to reach a conclusion.

We do not want to play hide-and-seek, but simply to create an atmosphere enabling us to reach specific conclusions.

[English]

Mr. John Lundrigan (Gander-Twillingate): May I ask the minister one question? While I agree with the minister that we need consultation to enter into negotiations and to draw up a full-blown plan, could the minister give us an answer to a question which is causing most of us a great deal of concern, that is the reason the government is not moving now as it has been over the last 20 years in areas which are clearly under federal jurisdiction, such as public works, fishing facilities, postal facilities, airport facilities, and other facilities that are as clearly needed as the nose on your face. Why is it the government has not been moving in these areas? Why is it that austerity has been applied to the slow growth areas just as it has to other areas?

• (4:10 p.m.)

Mr. Marchand (Langelier): I think this question can be answered only when we know the details of the agreements which are going to be signed with the provinces.

Mr. Lundrigan: It is a completely federal problem.

Mr. Marchand (Langelier): We are putting together all the aspects and establishing the priority, whether it is under federal jurisdiction or provincial jurisdiction.

Mr. Lundrigan: And you will do nothing until then.

Mr. Marchand (Langelier): We are doing a lot of things, but maybe we are not doing enough.

Mr. Lundrigan: That is the answer.

Hon. Robert L. Stanfield (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, the minister started off by describing the remarks of the hon. member for St. John's East (Mr. McGrath) as banal, general and insipid. I would have to say it is a long time since I heard such a banal defence of a program as that given by the minister, but I would not describe the minister's speech as insipid because obviously he tried to make up in heat what he failed to generate by way of light.

I am very concerned about the lack of a program generally with regard to this question of regional economic expansion. We supported the creation of the department. We co-operated in getting the measure through the House, although it was not the way we would have proceeded ourselves. Nevertheless, we wanted to give the government every opportunity to develop a plan of operation. But the fact is that nothing of substance has yet come from the minister or the Department of Regional Economic Expansion. Meanwhile a good many regions of the country are losing ground economically vis-à-vis the rest of the country.

I wish to say to the minister on behalf of myself, the members of my party, and I am sure the country as a whole, that the honeymoon is over for the minister and the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) with regard to the question of regional disparities. It is time that the minister really told the country what he and his department are doing, and it is time the government permitted the committee concerned to examine in a reasonable way the program of the government with regard to regional disparities. I do not mean a rushed job when the estimates are before the Committee. It is impossible for the minister and the government to justify their refusal to allow the appropriate committee to examine the minister's program. It throws suspicion on the whole approach of the government.

It is two years since the election, but the department has done so little and the government as a whole has done so little, that they will not permit the committee to examine what has been done. Sure, there have been some grants made in some of the provinces, but nothing very much in others.

The minister pleads that he needs time. He says he could not create jobs tomorrow. Yet he did not attempt to deny that disparity is deepening in the country and is spreading in the country. For example, consider the position of the province of Saskatchewan. Two or three years ago this province became qualified as a have rather than a have-not province and yet the provisions for equalization payments to it were eliminated. Consider the situation in that province today, and the help and positive measures being given and taken by the federal government with regard to it.

Saskatchewan has reached the point where its premier had to beg the Minister of Finance (Mr. Benson) not to smile when he was discussing its problems. The federal government cannot claim that it has even started any program there. I do not think the minister would even pretend that he had done anything, and we are not aware of any measures undertaken by the Department of Industry or any other department. The government is displaying a cold-blooded, disinterested attitude toward the problems of that province, and it is not much wonder that there is a certain amount of talk about western separatism.

As far as I can see, the minister and the government have written off the whole idea of developing the near north, and are apparently content to leave it flounder as best it can. Parliament has given this minister extraordinary powers so far as his own department is concerned, but the only way these powers have been used so far has been to put a strangle hold on the province of Prince Edward Island.

The federal government claims to be making a contribution of $225 million under the plan agreed with Prince Edward Island, but that is very misleading, Mr. Speaker. There is no such contribution over a period of 15 years so far as new federal money is concerned. A good deal of that amount is made up of bookkeeping transfers, as well as the phasing out and consolidation of existing programs. I would estimate that not more than $60 million at most of this alleged $225 million is new federal money going into Prince Edward Island over a period of 15 years.

There is also the danger that the federal government will not extend new programs as they arise to Prince Edward Island, with the excuse that Prince Edward Island is covered by a plan of its own. We had the announcement last spring that $6 million would be granted for highway projects to the Atlantic provinces, but none of this was to be allotted to Prince Edward Island on the ground that other arrangements had been made under its plan. How realistic is it to expect the province of P.E.I. to put up something like $500 million over a period of 15 years? I hope the plan will produce dynamic growth on that island so that it can meet that commitment, but I am very suspicious of any federal government that would put such a price tag as that on Prince Edward Island's entry into the plan.

I am concerned that the federal government is looking forward, if it is not already doing so, to running P.E.I. like a piece of federal property. I say that no federal plan, department or government should deprive the people of that province of their right to self-government. The plan now in operation for Prince Edward Island is extremely centralized. Every decision is centralized here in Ottawa. Whatever degree of decentralization there used to be under the Atlantic Development Board has been removed, and everything is concentrated here in Ottawa. We have to ask, what are the minister and his colleagues up to?

Certainly, the policies of the federal government are placing very heavy financial pressures on all of the eastern provinces. We must recognize, as the Economic Council has pointed out time and time again, the importance of all these provinces being able to render a satisfactory degree of services, particularly growth related services, if they are ever to overcome the problems of economic disparity. Yet three of these five provinces have not yet been able to bring in the medicare plan, a nationwide program, although I believe that two at least are committed to doing so. The federal government must recognize the financial problems in all of these provinces which are suffering economic disparity, yet it seems to me it is exerting constant financial pressure on them and refusing to recognize their financial difficulties in providing services in any effective way. The minister made a great play about asking how one would apply a monetary policy in an effective way. Well, he could at least try. I would like to try. And what about fiscal policy? I say to the minister that the government has not made the slightest effort to adjust its fiscal policy to these areas. The whole effect of its fiscal policy down there has been to cut back and to aggravate the problems of slow growth. It is essential that these provinces be able to provide these services in order to participate in development programs, but as far as I can see the whole tendency, if not the intent, of the present policies of the government is to grind down these provinces.

The tax structure committee forecast the rapidity of the growth and the financial needs of the provinces for basic government services, yet no recognitition has been given to that. As far as I can see, after using an anti-inflation program as an excuse, and perhaps using negotiated plans as the implement, the tendency if not the intent of the federal government seems to be to bring all of these provinces into a condition of financial subserviency to the federal government.

• (4:20 p.m.)

Mr. Marchand (Langelier): They were before.

Mr. Stanfield: The minister does not deny it; he says they were, Mr. Speaker. I do not think the province of Quebec would accept that statement nor would some of the other provinces. I am saying that this is a tendency with very, very serious consequences. It is clear that the financial and fiscal policies of the minister's colleagues have set back the work to eliminate economic disparity. I would feel a little sorry for the minister had he not tried to defend himself so vigorously. I think his colleagues have crept from under his feet, and certainly in the past year they have created far more disparity than the minister has eliminated. The country is falling back. The minister speaks about generalities and here is a generality he cannot deny: he has not made a bit of progress and the economic policies of his colleagues and the government as a whole have broadened and deepened economic disparity in the past year. It is the task and responsibility of the minister and his colleagues to get away from these general policies which are depressing all parts of the country and to adopt a positive approach.

In other words, Mr. Speaker, if the minister wants to help, let him bring the committee together and give the House a chance to consider what he is doing in detail and to make suggestions. Why is the minister afraid of doing that? I do not know, unless he is afraid of exposing how little has been accomplished. Let him speak to his colleagues, not ask us in this House to tell him how to apply an appropriate fiscal policy. Let the government abandon a fiscal policy which has been applied across the country and which, in spite of all the government says, is deepening our economic difficulties.

Hon. Donald C. Jamieson (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, when some hon. members opposite were still in the childhood stage I sat in the gallery of the other place and watched when the terms of union between Newfoundland and Canada were signed. It was a very unhappy incident for me, as I had opposed the idea of Newfoundland entering the Canadian confederation. I suppose most of my motivation at that time was emotional, although a bit of logic did creep into the various arguments. At one stage most of the comments that I made publicly on the subject were based on the standard complaint that I have been hearing for many years from such provinces as New Brunswick, Nova Scotia and Prince Edward Island, the basic argument being that confederation was a bit of an abortion, both geographically and economically, and that Newfoundland would be a dory tied on to the schooner.

I made my decision very early following confederation that if we were to be Canadians, despite my best judgment of those days, then we ought to be good Canadians. Over the last 21 years both in public life and before, I have commented upon and tried to find solutions for and make recommendations about, so-called regional economic disparity. Of course, we did not call it that in the early days. I do not know what word was used but there was generally a feeling on the part of those living in Newfoundland, and probably those in the Atlantic provinces as well, that in some way or other we were not getting our just dues, as it were, out of the promise of confederation. In 100 years we had not been able to achieve the general objectives, the promises, that seemed to be implicit in the original concept of one nation from sea to sea. I have to say, however, that over that period of 21 years I am satisfied that my own province has probably gone ahead more than it would have under any other arrangement. But I am also compelled to say that most of the progress and gains made were obvious for the simple reason that for such a long period there had been relatively little progress that what we gained seemed like a great deal. I suppose what it amounted to was that half a loaf appeared as good as a full one, and certainly better than no bread at all.

Today, as I strenuously grapple with this problem of regional economic expansion, I am conscious that the basic difficulty is the same as it was 21 years ago. It has been compounded, complicated by developments that have taken place, but the basic problem remains. I do not know the degree to which it is common to all four provinces, but in Newfoundland it seems to be a matter of trying to find sufficient gainful employment for a growing population. One of the miracles of confederation as far as Newfoundland is concerned is that we have managed, despite a decline in one end of the scale, to keep our population moving up slightly. We have not had the massive exodus that many people, including myself, forecast once the immigration barriers between Newfoundland and Canada were removed. Even though we have been able to keep the population static, the fact of the matter is that job opportunities simply are not there.

To hon. members opposite who are critical of this program I would say that, while I share their frustration and concern, I believe that if we were to announce tomorrow more attractive incentives than those the minister has outlined, which must rank with the most attractive in any western country, it still would be very very difficult to find people prepared to introduce the kind of industrial development necessary to take care of those now unemployed. As well as this group, there are others coming along at an ever-increasing rate, that is assuming our population will remain at the level it is now and that we have the normal increase.

[Mr. Jamieson.]

When the minister spoke about the number of jobs the program has generated I have no quarrel with the figures. I can see some evidence already of the effect of the incentives program in Newfoundland. A week ago today, I was present at the opening of a new fishing installation which will give employment to many people. The cost is in the neighbourhood of $2½ million, of which the federal government's contribution was substantially more than one-third; but this is really still only a drop in the bucket.

Perhaps the hon. Leader of the Opposition is right when he says that only if we can get together in terms of a committee discussion will these problems disappear. But I suggest in all honesty that as the former leader of a Conservative government in the province of Nova Scotia, he knows that it is not as simple as that. In fact, we are going to have an extremely difficult job even with incentives, even with growth centres and the like, to provide the kind of employment and the levels of employment which are necessary.

It is because of this complexity and because the history of the last 21 years has shown that many of the programs have not been successful that I do not criticize the Minister of Regional Economic Expansion (Mr. Marchand) for what hon. members opposite referred to as his slowness in moving. Rather, I commend him for having the good sense to make sure that this time we have covered as many bases as possible. We do not want to go off in all directions and then find, ten years from now, that we have not achieved very much.

Hon. members from Newfoundland should be the last to suggest that there should be some sort of a precipitate haste in setting up industrial enterprises of any kind. We really must be sure that we have the right answers.

The fisheries, of course, are still pretty basic in terms of our Newfoundland economy. About a year or so ago we had a situation which all of us agreed was desperate. As a result of actions which were taken there has been a remarkable transition. The fact of the matter is that the fresh frozen fish industry is in an extremely buoyant state now and looking better all the time. The danger is, and I only mention this because this is one of our problems, that the incentives program may well attract more people into the fresh frozen fish industry, with the result that we will have a repetition of the depreciated position and sales picture we had a year or so ago. The hon. member for St. John's East (Mr. Mc-Grath), and other members on his side of the House, can say all they want about regional economic expansion and development programs. Despite what the Leader of the Opposition said about it not being the responsibility of hon. members opposite to make specific suggestions, let us hear something more about this program than criticism.

• (4:30 p.m.)

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Jamieson: I say, Mr. Speaker, that to suggest right now, for instance, that incentives should be provided in order to increase sales further and to raise the production of the fresh frozen fish industry in eastern Canada would be detrimental, in the long run, to the future of the area. We must examine that problem and look at it extremely carefully. That is what was meant when the minister referred to the need for consultation and thorough planning. I have heard repeatedly, when travelling to Newfoundland and other parts of the Maritime provinces, that the only answer to providing quick relief to economically depressed areas on the coast is "Give us another fish plant".

There is an awful parallel, and it is terribly striking, to what was said a few years ago to our wheat farmers on the prairies. It will be remembered that they were told to grow all the wheat they could because everything looked great. Let us not fall into that pitfall, and there is a great danger here.

There is a second danger when it comes to providing incentives in the fishing industry and that is,—I believe the hon. member who is the spokesman for the official opposition might be inclined to agree—in moving into the herring fishery simply because there is a market and providing fishermen with the means of getting into it. Again we would be, to use a familiar old expression, killing the goose that lays the golden eggs. There is a limit to the amount of job creation that can be performed within the fishing industry of the Atlantic provinces, and this is basic to the whole object of regional economic expansion.

These fisheries problems are related to something else about which hon. members in opposition will have to make up their minds. I do not blame them for their difficulty in doing so, but I say that the issue of centralization, in one form or another, must be decided one way or another. If we are to help people in the fishing industry in the small communities around the coast of Newfoundland, and I am confining myself to that area because it is the one I know best, if we are to provide those people with the kind of future they have a right to expect, if they are to realize the full promise of confederation, as I have called it, then we cannot do it in many of these smaller places without moving the people out. So, the growth centre concept to which the minister has referred and on which, as I happen to know, he and his officials have worked extremely hard in recent months, is a very valid one. But it contains difficulties as well. I can see that when a designation is made hon. gentlemen opposite will look at it and say, "Why is it in this area; why is it not somewhere else?" Inevitably, naturally, understandably and defensively hon. gentlemen are going to say, "But there is not enough in my riding to be of special interest."

What is the alternative? If you are not going to have development areas, if you are not to have growth centres or points round which you can polarize the population and try to provide employment opportunities for them, the answer is that we shall have to continue with what I have called the pastoral syndrome in Newfoundland. I suggest that many people think of that as the easiest way out. It is very easy, when one goes into a community or some backwood area of Newfoundland, to say, "We could not agree more; you are entitled to all the services and to all the improvements that you like."

But surely to goodness, if we are to take any real interest in these people we have to try at least to help them by getting them to move to growth centres and there provide employment for them. I know the stock answer to that is that we have put the cart before the horse and, in some respects, we probably did. Centralization may have moved ahead faster than was wise in some circumstances because, and I agree with those hon. members who have levelled this criticism at us, those who moved in did not have jobs. That is quite true. But I will tell you what they do have. They have better schooling, better access to hospitals and medical services and greater mobility than they ever had before. And if they do not have jobs where they are now, let us also remember that they would not have had jobs if they had remained behind either. So, I say that centralization in some form has to be part of the development program.

A question was asked this afternoon of the Minister of Regional Economic Expansion why certain projects have not gone ahead in Newfoundland. To answer this, may I recount a story that took place in my community. I was involved in it and it took place on the Island of Sagona, on the south coast of that fine riding, Burin-Burgeo. At one point there was a community, and a man coming to the community saw a wharf worth about $75,000 being built. He said, "I can see that you are building a wharf; does that mean you are going to stay?" The answer given to him was, "No, we are moving as soon as we have finished it.".

As the hon. member for St. John's East said, there is a need for co-ordination if we are to ensure that the objectives of the regional economic expansion program and of the growth centres are logical, and if we are to avoid the anomalies to which I have just referred. Consequently we must look twice before proceeding with the construction of useless facilities costing $75,000 or $100,000 or $150,000, because once that money has been spent, it is not available for something else. In the constituency of Burin-Burgeo, there are approximately $2 million worth of marine facilities which are not being used today because, shortly after having been completed, the communities that erected them were moved to more logical places—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. I am sorry to interrupt the minister but I am afraid that his time has expired.

Mr. Lundrigan: May I direct a question to the minister?

Mr. Deputy Speaker: A question may be asked now only by unanimous consent of the House.

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Lundrigan: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, I am disappointed because the minister has become an Upper Canadian. I do not blame him because he now has a better chance to succeed, since he is not now in Newfoundland.

Mr. Jamieson: With respect, Mr. Speaker, I will permit a question but not an insult.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Peters: I wish the hon. member would withdraw that remark.

Mr. Lundrigan: I apologize, Mr. Speaker. I do not want that remark to stay on the record. I indicated that the minister had become an Upper Canadian, and I will withdraw that. The minister spoke about what the Leader of the Opposition had said, and he referred to the remarks of the Minister of Regional Economic Expansion. I ask, why is the government's austerity program being applied to my province? I realize that the Minister of Finance (Mr. Benson), the Governor of the Bank of Canada and other experts argue that this austerity control is good from the standpoint of regional planning. I ask, why have these austerity goals been applied to my province?

[Mr. Jamieson.]

• (4:40 p.m.)

Mr. Jamieson: I will not ask Your Honour's indulgence to continue as long as it would take to answer in full. I deny the fact there has been this cut-back on a general basis. As the hon. minister said, when the committee has the figures and statistics in front of them, it will become evident that in fact there has been an increase in the last year or so in expenditures, at least in the area with which I am most familiar, over what it was 12 months before. In any event, I will be glad to get these figures now for the hon. member and also, if it is permissible for me to do so, to participate in the committee discussion.

Mr. Don Mazankowski (Vegreville): Mr. Speaker, back in the old days before the present Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) kidnapped the Liberal government and transformed it into his own image, in the days when the present Minister of Regional Economic Expansion (Mr. Marchand) and the present Secretary of State (Mr. Pelletier) were still private citizens in Quebec being ardently wooed by the Liberal hierarchy, these men were commonly referred to as the three wise men. I have not heard this expression used very frequently in recent times. As a matter of fact, recent events have somewhat obliterated this myth. The three wise men have now been supplemented by another trio to which I will refer as the three blind mice. These men, I suggest, are the Minister of Regional Economic Expansion, the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Olson) and the Minister of Manpower and Immigration (Mr. MacEachen).

The reason I make this assertion is that I believe these three individuals are blind to Canada's regional difficulties. They are either too obsessed with their positions or too timid to grapple with the problems that confront them. This failure to promote effective action to overcome problems of regional disparity is serious in all parts of the country and very much so in western Canada.

Not only has the government's consistent and obvious disinterest in the west bred a feeling of isolation from the rest of Canada, but it has aggravated westerners to a point where separatism can no longer be treated as a joke. It has become a very real and much talked about alternative to second-class Canadian citizenship and a policy of alienation. The west today, as it has been since confederation, is in a position of economic inferiority to central Canada. It is still largely dependent upon a few basic industries, agriculture, mining, petroleum and forestry. Some of these are in a grave state of depression, while the others are barely holding their own.

Economic good sense indicates free trade as the best bet for the west, yet this area is still a captive behind the bars of freight rates and tariffs erected in the interest of eastern industry. We have heard many times in this House that the agricultural industry is in a desperate plight. The agricultural population is declining and urbanization is increasing. However, the west lacks the commercial and industrial facilities to handle a relatively painless transition from a basically rural and agricultural society to one that is urban and industrialized.

The inadequate industrial base in the west has accentuated all the familiar problems of rapid urbanization experienced in other metropolitan areas. I refer to poverty, lack of housing and all the social problems and ills which confront other urban centres on the North American continent. I feel this situation should be the prime target for those who profess to be interested in Canada's regional problems. Their solution is a vital national necessity.

The contribution of the west to the nation in the past and the potential contribution in the future demand action by the central government in the national interest. Instead, the west has apparently been written off by this trio to which I have referred. I am forced to conclude from the attitude of this government that it has no priority. We in the west must sink or swim on our own. Is it any wonder there is growing talk of western separatism?

Anyone who listened to the Minister of Agriculture when he addressed the Canadian Federation of Agriculture in Winnipeg a few days ago would have thought the government had everything well in hand. I wish to quote a couple of sentences from his presentation:

> It is our goal in the federal government that we will be able to devise programs that will ease the transition off the farm... We would assist those who wish to retire to be able to do so with dignity.

The minister said much more. He said practically enough to make an angel weep. He went on to say that the Department of Agriculture would not be the only department involved in providing the promised answer to all the ills of the west. He said the Department of Manpower and Immigration would assist with training and relocation grants and that the Department of Regional Economic Expansion would provide programs to create jobs to upgrade those areas which are economically depressed.

The facts are as follows: The Department of Agriculture has not come up with a program of its own to assist the transition of the farmer to the city. The Department of Manpower and Immigration has not come up with anything significant by way of training or relocation programs. The Department of Regional Economic Expansion had not provided one penny of assistance to Saskatchewan, Alberta or British Columbia as of December 31, 1969. This lack of assistance includes the only area of southern or central Alberta that is included as a designated area for regional assistance, the largest portion of that being the home area of the Minister of Agriculture.

By the end of last year, approximately $15½ million had been spent by the Department of Regional Economic Expansion in financial assistance to industry as an incentive to establishing in the designated zones. Of this amount, approximately $11 million went to the province of Quebec; $3.1 million to New Brunswick; $1.2 million to Manitoba; $151,000 to Newfoundland and $95,000 to New Brunswick. Not one cent went to Saskatchewan, Alberta or British Columbia to give substance to the empty promises of the Minister of Agriculture.

Let no one in this House doubt the need of the west for a fair share of industrial and commercial enterprise. As of 1966, the last year for which I have been able to find reliable government figures, the west had only a meagre 5¼ per cent of Canada's steel production; 99.5 per cent of Canada's production of crude oil, but only 27.1 per cent of our refining capacity; 14 per cent of Canada's total manufacturing capacity; 17.8 per cent of the total number of manufacturing establishments; 27 per cent of Canada's service businesses and 25 per cent of the retail trade establishments. I could go on ad infinitum.

According to the 1969 edition of Taxation Statistics, in 1967 westerners provided 30 per cent of Canada's personal income tax on only 17.5 per cent of the nation's total of taxable returns. In the face of such figures, it is difficult for a western Canadian to understand why he is almost totally ignored by Ottawa, except when taxes are levied, and why common sense and common justice do not compel this government to stop making empty promises and start acting.

It is particularly difficult to understand why the west has been excluded from assistance by the Minister of Regional Economic Expansion. The boundaries of his designated area were set arbitrarily by himself and his officials and from what I can see, with no set of rules or universal criteria. The minister claims the provinces were consulted fully before the lines were drawn, but this is at variance with what is claimed by provincial authorities, particularly the premier of my own province.

There was an exchange of letters last year between myself and the Minister of Regional Economic Expansion. In a letter addressed to me dated October 10 last, the minister said:

> Our conclusion, after consultation with the provincial government, (that is the government of Alberta), was that the program would produce the greatest benefits for the province as a whole if the southern region was designated.

My information is that the minister consulted no one in Alberta except his colleague, the Minister of Agriculture, who just happened to represent a riding that coincided roughly with the designated area. In another part of the same letter, the minister stated:

• (4:50 p.m.)

> We are talking about the kind of program that my department can best employ to ease the necessary adjustment process and cushion its effects on the people of the prairies.

At that time he said he was negotiating with the provincial government about instituting such a program. This is as far back as October 10. But no one has heard a word about the program since, or seen any sign of one being initiated. This is the type of windy delusion which comes from the offices of the trio to which I have referred—pronouncements which have led westerners to doubt the integrity of this government and to lose faith in the viability of Canada under such management.

It is more than a co-incidence that the minister has consistently refused to table in this House copies of the letters he claims were exchanged between him and various western premiers on the topic I have just been discussing. Reference to questions 581 and 582 will indicate this clearly.

[Mr. Mazankowski.]

Another glaring example of injustice and a further ground for the build-up of western animosity is to be found in the government's dairy policy. The government now proposes a $10 million cut in funds available under the Canadian dairy policy on the professed ground of aiding its austerity drive. What will happen, in fact, is that the share of western dairy farmers will be reduced in proportion to that of the central region. It is true there is over-production in Canada's dairy industry—but it is not in the west. The over-production happens to be in Quebec, but this fact is ignored. The committee is being asked to develop a national policy, the results of which will simply penalize those regions which have exercised a discretion in the field of supply management, and have not significantly over-produced. There is little use in prolonging this recital of the many shortcomings of the government's regional economic expansion and agriculture policies. They are so blatant that we can all see them.

I turn, now, to the third element in the trio of departments which the Minister of Agriculture claimed would solve the problems of the west. I listened with interest the other day to the Minister of Manpower and Immigration making much of little in his announcement of that department's success in finding jobs for students. As far as I and others are concerned, they were mere empty boasts. Let me cite only one case, that of a graduate student for whom no job can be found. This young man is now being badgered by solicitors for repayment of a student loan. He is Mr. Kenneth R. Powley of Vegreville, Alberta, an architect who graduated in June of 1968 but could find only fleeting employment until January 1969, and none since. He visited the nearest manpower centre seeking assistance, and according to a letter I received from the Minister of Manpower last September, he registered for employment with the manpower centre at Edmonton shortly after his graduation in 1968.

To date, the result has been nil. He is still unemployed, and I have a sheaf of application letters to show that it is not for lack of trying to get a job. He is willing to work in practically any field and at any location. Yet this great department, with its policy of job mobility, has totally failed to assist him. The case of Mr. Powley symbolizes the current condition of the west. He is a victim of federal promises which are without substance or good faith. He is a symbol of the utter and complete failure of the government's promise of regional assistance through a combination of the three departments most closely concerned. Had he lived elsewhere he might have been more fortunate.

These are some of the feelings of westerners which have been communicated to me in my travels. It is a combination of such inequities with little promise of hope which has created the prevailing hostility toward the federal government and a growing sense of alienation. The result has spurred discussion of separatism, talk of forming a regional power bloc and of possible union with the United States. In the interest of preserving Canada, the reversal of this trend must be considered a basic priority of the government. I firmly believe that if the present callous disregard of the west continues we, as Canadians, will all suffer the consequences.

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

SUBJECT MATTER OF QUESTIONS TO BE DEBATED

The Deputy Speaker: Before I call on the hon. member for Madawaska-Victoria perhaps I might inform the House of the items to be discussed at the time of the adjournment. They are as follows: the hon. member for Kootenay West (Mr. Harding)—transport—coal—application by Great Northern and Kootenay Elk railways; the hon. member for Halifax-East Hants (Mr. McCleave)—Criminal Code—proclamation of remainder of amendments respecting breathalyzer; the hon. member for Vegreville (Mr. Mazankowski)—Health and Welfare—representations by Diabetic Association respecting cyclamate ban—availability of substitute.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

BUSINESS OF SUPPLY

ALLOTTED DAY, S.O. 58—FAILURE TO CO-ORDINATE REGIONAL DEVELOPMENT POLICIES AND TO REFER ISSUE TO STANDING COMMITTEE

The House resumed consideration of the motion of the hon. member for St. John's East (Mr. McGrath):

That this House condemns the government's failure to co-ordinate its regional development policies under the Department of Regional Economic Expansion with other government activities, and its failure to bring in an appropriate reference to place this issue before the Standing Committee on Regional Development.

and the amendment thereto of Mr. Nystrom.

[Translation]

Mr. Eymard Corbin (Madawaska-Victoria): Mr. Speaker, the most important features of the presentation made by the hon. member for St. John's East (Mr. McGrath), who sponsored the motion under study this afternoon, are the following: he spoke for approximately half an hour; he spoke in very loud tones; he even sweated quite a bit, but he said absolutely nothing. That is remarkable but also typical, and there is nothing to be done in this desperate case, in my view. I doubt that even St. Jude could be of any help to him.

As the motion presented by the hon. member for St. John's East has no meaning, it is very difficult to address oneself to it in an intelligent manner. It is a skeleton, some sort of noble cause without a defending knight. If the motion had at least some substance, we could comment on it intelligently, but, in the circumstances, this is rather difficult.

Mr. Speaker, the opposition motion presented today reads as follows:

[English]

That this House condemns the government's failure to co-ordinate its regional development policies under the Department of Regional Economic Expansion with other government activities, and its failure to bring in an appropriate reference to place this issue before the Standing Committee on Regional Development.

[Translation]

I intend first of all to let you know what I think of the advisability of such a motion and I will afterwards comment on the general economic expansion policy of the government.

I have naturally no right to impute motives to the mover, but nevertheless, I can ask myself what he had in mind when he presented that motion. I think it is a weak motion, even from a strictly political point of view. We all know to what extent the hon. member is imbued with political motives. This motion—I cannot help saying it—is not worth a cent.

A motion of censure brought in against the government always contains a great many negative elements. It is normal, they say. But when they stoop to childish and silly things, we can wonder, and rightly so, if money put at the disposal of opposition members for research purposes is not a total loss. I thought that there was still a little unseasoned timber among the opposition members, but I realize that they are all ready to go into action.

I was recently reading over the proceedings of the standing committee on regional development for Tuesday, June 10, 1969. The minister was testifying before the committee, on which sits the hon. member for St. John's East. Bill C-202 had been referred to the committee for study. Obviously, the minister had been called upon to answer questions from members. To my great surprise, no reference was then made by the members of the committee to a need for coordinating the regional development policy and the other regional activities of the federal government, of other governments and of governmental agencies. The hon. member for St. John's East himself said absolutely nothing about the matter. He chose to rail against the minister. On that occasion, he really went too far, as shown by the official report.

As usual, the hon. member took the floor for fifteen minutes but had nothing to say about the bill. Then, he did not speak another word during the other two days this committee held sitting.

The minutes of proceedings show in fact that the hon. member for St. John's East did not attend the other two meetings when the committee studied the bill. Is that an indication of his interest in economic development problems? As I said, I do not want to impute motives to the hon. member and should he have had serious reasons for his absence, they ought to be accepted.

I have noted, however, several remarks made by the hon. member on that occasion. According to him, it is obvious that a great deal of co-operation, of co-ordination and of discussions with the provinces is necessary before conclusions can be reached on such or such an agreement. This was mentioned by the Minister in the House this afternon.

He stated in June last, when he appeared before the committee, that he intended to ask, for example, the advice of the Central Housing and Mortgage Corporation on housing, when the matter would be related to others such as employment.

I know that the minister, before approving an important grant for the establishment of a factory, gets in touch with the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce on marketing, the Minister of Agriculture to check some data, the Manpower Centre to learn about the employment opportunities in the area where the industry wishes to settle. This is obvious, it is the daily routine. The Minister of Regional Economic Expansion (Mr. Marchand) shows his common sense when proceeding in such a way.

The Atlantic Area Development Board is one of the bodies especially established to advise the minister where co-ordination, plans and programs are concerned. The minister himself made clear what he expected of the Board. To prove it, I shall quote from proceedings No. 14 of the Committee on Regional Development, dated June 10, 1969. Here is what it says:

• (5:00 p.m.)

[English]

If there are abuses in that field—

[Translation]

He was talking about the field of regional economic development.

I quote further:

[English]

—I think we have to rely on that council to point out to the public that something is going wrong; the government is not doing what it should and so forth, the provinces or the federal government.

Then the council should say as was stated:

The majority of those men are surely in the position to resign if they do not agree with what we are doing. It will be the first one to underline what is going wrong.

I suppose this is what the hon. member for St. John's East (Mr. McGrath) undertook to do this afternoon. The minister said a little further one:

You know how those councils operate and you may be sure that if anything goes wrong, seriously wrong, it will be known. This is democracy and I accepted this from the start.

[Translation]

What is surprising, Mr. Speaker, is that to date no criticism has been made by the Atlantic Development Board. None of its members has resigned, which does prove that they do not see eye to eye with the member for St. John's East, that they are far more broadminded.

What does the member for St. John's East want when he speaks of co-ordination? Just what is his problem? He indicated at the beginning of his remarks that he was doubly frustrated. That is his problem, Mr. Speaker. For my part, I do not suffer from that disease and I feel very sorry for the hon. member. But I feel powerless to help him, for he refuses to listen to reason.

He read off a litany of agencies, sections and departments which have appeared since the fifties within the federal government. Some of them were active for a while. Others did not live up to expectations, but that is quite normal. The rapid economic growth of Canada, the problems and difficulties that follow inevitably, dictate from month to month changes in the objectives originally set; of necessity, our programs, set-ups, and solutions must be modified.

The Progressive Conservative party obviously does not like change. The New Democrats, for their part, tell us we do not change rapidly enough, and the members of the Ralliement créditiste say change is good, inasmuch as it suits them.

Mr. Speaker, I followed closely what the member from St. John's East had to say; I resigned myself to it unwillingly because there are far too many exaggerations in what he says for it to deserve much credibility. What surprised me most, is the absence of suggestions, of constructive criticism likely to prompt the government to improve its administration. The member and his party prefer to retire into their shells, when they do not offer the government destructive criticism.

What does the member for St. John's East means by co-ordination? Does he mean complex structures to the extent that we might loose sight of our objectives? As for me, I am satisfied that—projects and policies are co-ordinated between the various departments of the federal government on one hand, and the provinces on the other, in the struggle against regional diaparity. I learned it from the Minister of Economic Development of New Brunswick himself. He has nothing but praise for this co-operation. But if my friend from St. John's East has eyes and sees not, ears and hears not, that is his business.

Mr. Speaker, I would like in the few minutes left to me to deal with some projects that are taking shape in my constituency. One can find there, as I have already told the House, a regional council for the development of north-western New Brunswick. That council is made up of men chiefly and of a few women who have worked voluntarily for five years in order to study the economic development conditions in the Upper St. John Valley. They adjusted the structures of their organization to the purposes they have in mind. My fellow-citizens are not afraid of changes, provided they bring results.

• (5:10 p.m.)

The members and directors of CRANO, namely the Conseil régional d'aménagement du Nord-Ouest, obtained the support of the provincial and federal governments. Moreover, the provincial government has lent them the services of public employees to help them in the administrative work, including economic surveys and statistics.

A black cloud is looming up over the horizon, since the agreement with the province of New Brunswick under ARDA expires on April 1st. CRANO members are wondering whether they will be able to keep on without the federal government's help that was guaranteed them in the past.

I wish to vouch for the work accomplished by that council in our area. I am personally convinced of the necessity of CRANO. I know the results of their work up to now. That organization is most useful. I am aware of the earnestness of those members, as regards the development of north-western New Brunswick. I am also aware of their sincerity and they deserve every possible support, whatever form it may take.

As I said, the first project approved under the new regional economic expansion legislation is located in my constituency of Madawaska-Victoria. In addition to appreciably stimulating our regional economy, this new industry will create 400 new jobs. It will certainly provide a valuable incentive for the potato industry. I would even call it a real stimulus. If we succeed in developing other markets, we shall be able to build other potato processing plants, with the help, again, of the federal and provincial governments.

That plant is located at Grand Sault and construction is now under way in spite of the frost which is six or seven feet deep. This helps to demonstrate, however, that the program of the Department of Regional Economic Expansion is yielding tangible results. The plant is steadily coming up and next fall, we hope to employ at least 300 people to start, and possibly 400. This means that the policies of the Department of Regional Economic Expansion are beginning to bear fruit and no doubt we shall, in due time, bear of other wonderful projects.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Béchard): Order. I regret to interrupt the hon. member but his time has now expired.

[English]

Mr. Melvin McQuaid (Cardigan): Mr. Speaker, in the short time at my disposal this afternoon, and at the risk of being perhaps parochial, I should like to attempt to place on the record of this House as clearly and as succinctly as I possibly can the very serious situation which faces the government and the people of my province of Prince Edward Island. I do this in the hope that I may possibly foster a desire on the part of this government to do something immediately to relieve a very distressing problem. Action must be taken to reduce the growing gap between the rich and the poor provinces of Canada. Each region of this country must be accepted as an integral part of Canada and must be developed according to its special needs and according to its potential.

The reduction of the growing gap between the rich and the poor provinces is a national problem, and the major responsibility of solving it must rest with the federal government and no one else. I say that if the so-called just society is ever to be anything more than a flimsy and meaningless promise it must be based on the right of every citizen of this country, first of all, to acquire an adequate income and, second and just as important, to be able to enjoy the same essential public services as are being enjoyed by the people living in the so-called richer provinces. The federal government must be made to realize, as apparently it has not realized yet, that the major burden of financing regional growth in the poorer provinces is its responsibility. Why is it its responsibility? Primarily because money is necessary to do that job and the poorer provinces just do not have the money nor, unfortunately, do they have the opportunities now to raise the necessary money through taxation.

Let me return, if I may, to my own province. Under present conditions, how can the government of Prince Edward Island possibly raise more money through the medium of taxation? The average weekly wage of the worker in our province is $75.97—that is $38.06 a week below the national average. In November of 1969 our unemployment rate was 7.9 per cent of the labour force. At that time that was the highest of any province in Canada. We depend very heavily on agriculture, and yet more than one half of our island farmers gross less than $2,500 a year, before taking out their expenses. The situation is growing worse. For four consecutive years now, the capital investment in the province has been decreasing, and I suggest that we cannot have the base for levying taxes unless we have capital investment. Our business establishments are small—75 per cent of the firms in our province have sales of less than $5,000 a year.

[Mr. McQuaid.]

Perhaps more serious than all of this is the fact that many of our young people who are just entering the productive year of their lives are leaving our province, and for good reason. They are leaving because they cannot find jobs there and wish to take advantage of the opportunities which are offered in the more rapidly growing regions in this country. I suggest that perhaps they cannot be blamed. When our province entered confederation in 1873, our population was 97,000 people. Today, 97 years later, the population is still only 110,000 people. That is an increase of 13,000 people in 97 years. Young people have to move out; there is just nothing there for them to do.

This migration is general all over the maritime provinces. In 1851, 22 per cent of all Canadians resided in the maritime provinces. In 1961, 11 per cent resided there. Unfortunately, these young men and women leave, as I said before, in the most productive years of their lives. We rear and educate them at a cost which is estimated to be $20,000 per child, and just as they reach the age at which they are able to contribute something to our economy they leave for Ontario or some other province in Canada or for a state in the United States where they can earn an adequate wage. Only 55 per cent of our population is in the age group of 15 to 64 years, that is the age when they are likely to be in the labour force and when they can make a valuable contribution to our economy. Our population, therefore, is made up of a disproportionate percentage of the very young and the very old and of course we know that the very young and the very old, instead of contributing to the economy of the province, are more inclined to draw out of it.

There must be a narrowing of the gap in personal income between our region and other regions of Canada, and this must be accomplished through the generation of income within the region. This narrowing of the gap is a national responsibility. The task is to discover how to do it wisely. The minister says the government has been studying that situation, but I very seriously suggest that pouring subsidies into the area is not the full answer. What the government should be striving to give the Atlantic area and the other poorer provinces of Canada is a sound economic base. Our objective must be one of development, not one of welfare.

• (5:20 p.m.)

I was very encouraged when I read the speech the Minister of Regional Economic Expansion delivered to the annual meeting of the Atlantic Provinces Economic Council back in October, 1968. I would like to place part of that speech on the record and then ask the minister what he is doing to follow-up the statements made therein. This is what he is reported to have said in speaking about his own department:

> The new department is being created essentially because regional development is a matter of top priority for the federal government. If the underdevelopment of the Atlantic provinces is not corrected—not by charity or subsidies but by helping them become areas of economic growth—then the unity of the country is almost as surely destroyed as it would be by the French-English confrontation. Our job is to see that economic growth is dispersed widely enough across the country to provide equal access to opportunities of productive employment for Canadians everywhere. This is what I mean by a regional development policy. I mean that the federal government is prepared to take special action where it is needed to bring opportunities up to standard. There has to be a comprehensive structuring of government action to regional needs.

That, Mr. Speaker, is a very weighty statement. It is one with which I entirely agree. But I say to the minister through you, Mr. Speaker, that mere words are not enough. Let us get on with the job.

In my own province, we have heard a great deal from the government and from the minister about the famous regional economic development plan. Let me take a look at that plan, Mr. Speaker. The minister says, and I want him to correct me if what I say is not correct, that the plan provides that $728 million will be spent to spark expansion in Prince Edward Island over the next 15 years. Some 95 per cent of the people of Canada think that the federal government is going to pour $728 million of the taxpayers' money into P.E.I. Nothing could be further from the truth.

Two-thirds of that money, $503 million of it, is going to be the responsibility of the province of Prince Edward Island. In other words, P.E.I., with a per capita debt which is now the highest of any province in Canada, is going to have to raise $503 million in order to participate in this plan. That leaves $225 million. Of this amount of $225 million, and correct me if I am wrong, Mr. Minister, $36.6 million is repayable by the provincial government. Some $38.6 million of that $225 million is only a loan, with interest, by the federal government to the provincial government. It is an interest bearing loan. So now, getting down to hard facts, this reduces the share of the federal government to $188.4 million.

But even all of that $188.4 million is not new money. It includes Ottawa's share of joint programs which are already in existence. If these contributions had continued, even at the 1968 rate of $8.5 million a year, in the 15 year period the total amount would have been $127.5 million. So, Mr. Speaker, how much new money are we getting? Instead of the $728 million we are now down to $60.9 million. If these figures are wrong, I want them to be corrected.

How much of that $60.9 million is going to get into the hands of the people? It is estimated that it is going to take 400 people to administer this plan. Put their salaries at $10,000 per year, and I suggest that is low because some of those who are now attempting to administer the plan are getting as high as $15,000 and $16,000 a year, and over the 15 year period you have $60 million gone in salaries. So, what have you got left? You have $90,000 for the people of P.E.I. If these figures are not correct, I hope the minister will correct me immediately.

Mr. Jerry Pringle (Fraser Valley East): Mr. Speaker, when I, as a member from British Columbia, look at the designated regions map I see there is probably more white area in British Columbia than in any other province. I have to concede, therefore, that this must be one of the prosperous provinces. So, I suppose I speak possibly as someone who is vitally interested in all of Canada but as one coming from an area which is not really considered to require any help. In other words, we know what economic expansion is, but we are not quite too sure about disparity.

I would like, first of all, to congratulate the minister. I have watched this program, and I would suggest that some of my good friends from the Maritimes might be standing so close to the forest that they cannot see the trees. As a British Columbian, I had an opportunity to participate in some development in the Maritimes for a period of five or six years. I know some of the problems with which the people of the Maritimes are confronted. I know some of the problems with which industrialists there are confronted. I know a number of the problems with which the Minister of Regional Economic Expansion (Mr. Marchand) is confronted.

I see the definition of the word "disparity" is inequality of rank, station, degree or excellence. I am a little bit concerned about this word. I noticed that the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Stanfield) stated the government had a stranglehold on P.E.I., and I have just heard a fine speech by the hon. member for Cardigan (Mr. McQuaid), in which he referred to one of the poorer provinces that does not have money. He said it is the sole responsibility of the federal government to fix this up, and that there is no provincial responsibility. I wonder does the hon. gentleman really mean this? Does he mean to say it is the sole responsibility of the federal government?

Have you ever been involved in endeavouring to suggest to a fine group of happy people that they were poor, and have them say, "Who, Me? Poor?" The happiest people I have ever known in my life lived in Prince Edward Island. And then somebody said to them, "Tomorrow you shall be producers of food and as producers of food you will somehow or other get rich. What are you going to do about that? We are going to bring you in money." And they answered, "Well, that is fine. There is no complaint there. We will take that. When the fishing season starts, we will be on our boats. If you think we are going to stand in a line and peel potatoes, then we will take a second look at this proposal."

• (5:30 p.m.)

An hon. Member: Nobody fishes in British Columbia?

Mr. Pringle: These people said, "If you feel we should all come to work when we have a blizzard or snowstorm, you might be disappointed." I do not blame the people of Prince Edward Island for this attitude. It is a way of life with them, and it is a great way of life.

The foreman of our field division told me—he may be wrong, of course—that the people of Prince Edward Island never had it so good as during the depression. They had plenty to eat, plenty of coal, and on Saturday night they could row out three miles and pick up a keg of rum.

Some hon. Members: Shame!

Mr. Pringle: The point I am trying to make, Mr. Speaker, is that this situation is not the complete responsibility of the government. We may provide, through the taxpayers of the country, the funds to do the job, but it is a joint effort. I would think that members from the Maritimes especially would feel it necessary for everybody to get together.

As I said before, I come from Fraser Valley East which is about the size of Prince Edward Island. It has a population of 70,000 people, whereas the population of Prince Edward Island is 110,000. Fraser Valley East has one Member of Parliament, while Prince Edward Island has four. Fraser Valley East has no Senators, and Prince Edward Island has four. The cost to the federal government to have Prince Edward Island represented in both places is about $132,000. For Fraser Valley East the cost to the government is only $18,000. The per capita cost for Fraser Valley East is 26 cents; I am worth only 26 cents to each of my constituents. I should like the worthy gentlemen from Prince Edward Island to know that they are worth $1.20 per capita.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Pringle: I want to make it very clear that this is not a criticism of the provincial government and certainly not of the way of life in that province, but I feel there is a sociological problem involved here. We cannot go in there and say we will give them one-third of the amount of money required to build a plant. A real dandy fish plant was built to the tune of $13 million, but it closed. I do not know why. Perhaps it was a question, not just of the plant but of the engineering of the entire project. I would say that the pro forma arrangements were a little biased, the market projections were a little wrong or the engineering was horrible. The plant was a duplicate of one built in British Columbia.

In dealing with the Prince Edward Island farmers we cannot just go there and tell them how to run their business. They have been farming for many years and are not sure that the information from agronomists about fertilizer is very good. We must go into the distressed areas, talk to the people and find out what they want. We must ask them, "Do you want a plant of this kind? Do you feel that this is the way you want to live? Will this program upset your way of life to the point that you will refuse to function?" In regard to this plant in the east, the unit labour cost was almost double that of the plant in the west.

I prophecy that in the not too distant future things will start to percolate in Prince Edward Island if we can get members of the opposition to adopt a positive approach similar to that advocated by the hon. member for Yorkton-Melville (Mr. Nystrom). I thought his criticism was objective and that he took a positive approach. I hope that our friends from Newfoundland, Nova Scotia, Prince Edward Island and parts of New Brunswick would adopt the same positive approach to problems of regional expansion. This will not be achieved by standing up in this House and preaching blue ruin.

Another point which bothered me today was this business of expecting instant employment. We know there are plans on the books and applications approved for plants with an employment potential of 22,000 people. To stand up in this House and ask, "Where are the jobs?"—

An hon. Member: There aren't any.

Mr. Pringle: I was asked that question a couple of times by the hon. member on my left. Let us take the example of a fish plant. Do you go out in the morning, turn a key and have a fish plant? Have you any idea of the amount of planning, programming and engineering required for any industrial plant? When it is built, you cannot start it off at maximum production; it takes three formative years before it gets off the ground. The plant I referred to in Prince Edward Island was built in six months and has taken six years to get into worth-while production. In the first five years it was not even possible to pay the interest on the loan.

An hon. Member: What plant are you talking about?

Mr. Pringle: The plant in Montagne, Prince Edward Island.

An hon. Member: A fish plant?

Mr. Pringle: A fish plant. There is no food plant there.

An hon. Member: You are all mixed up. Fish or fowl; which is it?

• (5:40 p.m.)

Mr. Pringle: Mr. Speaker, I thank hon. gentlemen for the kind remarks they are making. I hope we shall be able to realize the benefits that can accrue from the incentives act. Before ending my remarks may I say a word about a matter on which I am in complete agreement with a number of opposition members from one of the Maritime provinces. I do not believe you can build and operate industry in isolated areas. Transportation is one of the most important facets of any industry, because people and goods must be moved into and out of the industry.

Mr. Dinsdale: That includes air transport.

Mr. Pringle: I come from Fraser Valley East, but I recommend most strongly that the government construct the Prince Edward Island causeway.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Pringle: If we build the causeway we shall be in a better position to help the people and industries of Prince Edward Island.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. I must interrupt the hon. member because his time has expired.

Mr. John Burton (Regina East): Mr. Speaker, when the legislation to establish the Department of Regional Economic Expansion was introduced and debated in this House last summer, and when the principal item of legislation proposed by the department during that year—the Regional Development Incentives Act—was brought forward, I think it will be agreed that in all quarters of the House there was general agreement upon the need to develop an adequate regional development program and an adequate program of regional economic expansion.

While there were some points of disagreement on the specific aspects of the government's proposal, and in some cases serious disagreement in areas which members of this party felt could jeopardize the prospects for success of the program, I think there was general agreement upon the principle of developing such a program, and therefore agreement as to the principle of the legislation passed by this House. Thus it can be said, Mr. Speaker, that the government embarked upon this new program with a high degree of good will in all parts of the House and in Canada generally.

However, it seems to me that a good deal of this good will has been dissipated and washed away during the past several months as a result of some of the actions of the government, some of the things it has done and some of the things it has not done. No better example of the type of thing that has been done by the government can be found than the department's news release of last November 19. That news release issued by the department stated, "Regional program creating more new jobs." It went on to say:

> The federal government's regional development program is creating new employment four times as fast as it did in 1968.

Then there was some elaboration on this matter. It was pointed out that from January to mid-November the department has approved 278 development incentives for firms intending to establish new plants or expand into slow growth regions of Canada. There were further details in the release about the estimated permanent employment which would result. There was also the statement that this activity was a good deal higher than in previous years.

It all sounded very fine, and consequently I asked for more information on this annoucement by the department. I moved a motion for papers in which I asked for a copy of the list of the 278 development incentive grants and for some other information. I was informed on January 28, Wednesday last, by the parliamentary secretary that "the cases referred to are not grants paid out but offers made." He went on to say, as reported at page 2928 of Hansard:

> The details requested will be made public in all cases when the project is proceeded with, and before any grant is actually paid. But at the offer stage, confidentiality is essential to the program.

I want to make it clear that I am not blaming the department for bragging a little about getting a larger number of applications than in previous years, even though many of these applications would be from firms which were trying to get in under the deadline of the old legislation because in many cases they would not be able to qualify under the new legislation in view of the change of boundaries. I am not blaming the department for wanting to take a little credit for this. But it is clear from the answer given that these are not firm projects; there is nothing concrete about them.

They are only offers to the extent that the government is carrying out its commitment. They are only offers of grants if a decision is made by the private firm involved to proceed with the development project in question. Thus, it seems to me that the department's news release creates a false impression of what is being done under the aegis of this department.

It seems to me that there are a number of drastic failures and shortcoming in the government's program as it has developed up to the present time. The first major point is that the department has not developed an effective program that can be used as a weapon in the war on poverty. I think all hon. members will recognize that problems of poverty cannot and will not be solved overnight. I believe it must be said that to date we have not seen any evidence that the department is developing any sort of program that can really be described as a attack on the whole problem of poverty. I do not intend to go into this matter in any further detail because the hon. member for Yorkton-Melville (Mr. Nystrom) dealt with it in his address this afternoon.

The second point I wish to draw to the attention of the House is that the government has failed with its program in this department to counterbalance the impact of its policies of fiscal and monetary restraint in regions which are suffering economic setbacks or which are economically deprived and underdeveloped. Our attention has been drawn to the fact that the government will tolerate a high level of unemployment. The Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) indicated that he is willing to tolerate a 6 per cent level of unemployment without any difficulty.

This means a 10 per cent rate of unemployment in Quebec, a 12 per cent rate in the Maritime provinces, and for my own province of Saskatchewan a 10 per cent rate of unemployment in the urban centres and communities. Thus, we see that the government's program in the area of regional economic expansion has not been effective and I suggest it will not be effective, within its present framework, in counterbalancing many of the ill-effects of the government's present program and policy of fiscal and monetary restraint.

Third, Mr. Speaker, I suggest that there has been political chicanery in the establishment of designated areas under the Regional Development Incentives Act. I have found it rather difficult to obtain answers and adequate information on government policy and approach in dealing with this particular matter. I have asked a good many questions on this subject during the current session of Parliament. One question I asked with respect to seven out of our ten provinces was the following:

> What criteria were used by the Department of Regional Economic Expansion in the selection of designated areas for the province—

The answer provided to each question was, "Weighted measures of rates of economic growth—employment, income and population—and of potential for secondary industry". This is a clear case, so far as I am concerned, of bureaucratic gobbledegook. Thus, we see what wording was used to set out the criteria for the designation of areas under this new legislation. Subsequently, I placed a motion for papers on the Order Paper asking for a copy of all correspondence between the government of Canada and each of the provinces regarding the selection of designated regions under the new Regional Development Incentives Act. The answer I received was that correspondence was exchanged only with the province of Alberta and the government of Alberta, and that with respect to the other provinces there was no correspondence.

• (5:50 p.m.)

This seems to be a pretty strange way of running a government, a business or anything else. There is not a single scrap of correspondence dealing with the matter under consideration—a matter, incidentally, wherein it was a requirement of the legislation that there be consultation between the federal government and the province concerned before the federal government made a decision.

Subsequently, I obtained information regarding the proposals of the government of Alberta. This is information to which I felt I was entitled, and which I received. When I asked for information about the views of the federal government and the views of the other provinces across Canada, I was told that the details of such consultations were confidential. I suggest this is in conflict with the fact that I received information respecting one province. I suggest this sort of secrecy in carrying on the operations of the department in the long run will not stand the department in good stead in bringing these programs to the point of success.

I did obtain information subsequently when I asked for documents which would describe the criteria used by the department in selecting the designated areas across Canada for seven of the provinces. I obtained a table in each case entitled, "Economic growth measures for DBS regions". I examined each of these tables that I had requested for seven of the ten provinces, the other three being the Maritime provinces which were completely designated under this legislation. There was a series of tables. There was no indication given of the correlation among the various columns of figures in the tables. There was a table entitled "Income per capita 1966". This set of figures ranged, for example, in the province of British Columbia between 88 and 127. It is not quite clear to me what the 88 and 127 represent. It seems to be a pretty strange way of running a program, if this is the kind of information they use to establish their criteria.

There is a further set of figures dealing with population, comparing 1966 with 1961. It appears to be some sort of percentage change figure, but again this is not completely clear. The same is true with respect to a comparison of employment between 1968 and 1961, also income per capita comparison in 1964 to 1966 with 1961 to 1963.

Finally, Mr. Speaker, there is a composite change index. I found that this composite change index was apparently used as a starting point in establishing the regions across Canada. I have before me a map which I requested and which was supplied to me through the courtesy of the parliamentary secretary to the minister. It sets out the boundaries for these different DBS areas. I then took the figures supplied to me, the composite change index, and I found there were many cases—I could go into them in some detail if I had the time—which indicate that political influence was brought to bear in the final selection of designated areas across Canada. I hope to deal with some of these points on another occasion.

I wish to deal briefly with several other failures of the government in developing this legislation. The government failed to develop the growth centre concept in developing its program. It seems there is even conflict between the Minister of Regional Economic Expansion (Mr. Marchand) and the Minister of Transport (Mr. Jamieson) in their approach to this matter. I suggest, as well, there has been a give-away to the private sector of our economy. This has been carried on in the form of a shotgun approach; the government simply made grants to firms as they applied for them. This was done in quite a haphazard, scattergun manner. This policy involves a failure to develop any sort of an overall-comprehensive program for orderly development. At the same time, it represents a give-away to the private sector of the economy.

I have before me a list of firms for whom grants have been approved over the past several months. In total these firms, most of them in the eastern part of Canada, intend to spend approximately $28.7 million in developing various projects. Of this $28.7 million, approximately $11.5 million will be provided by way of grant through the Department of Regional Economic Expansion. This represents a straight give-away of public funds. The only benefit arising out of this expenditure is the hope of the government that there will be some form of stable, permanent economic activity. However, the government holds no equity in these projects once it has made a grant. This seems to be an inadequacy of the program.

I suggest there has been gross failure by the government in allowing grants to be made to foreign-owned and foreign-controlled firms. There is a good deal of concern about this matter at the present time. Some ministers have expressed concern about it. Nevertheless, when my colleague the hon. member for Oshawa-Whitby (Mr. Broadbent) and myself suggested to the minister, when this legislation was before the committee last summer, that before a grant is given an attempt should be made to ensure Canadian ownership of firms, he said this could not be done; there could not be discrimination against some firms.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. I am sorry to interrupt the hon. member, but his time has expired. The hon. member for Algoma (Mr. Foster).

Mr. Foster: Mr. Speaker, may we call it six o'clock?

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is this agreed?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

At six o'clock the House took recess.

AFTER RECESS

The House resumed at 8 p.m.

Mr. Maurice Foster (Algoma): Mr. Speaker, the opposition motion seeks to condemn the government for failure to co-ordinate its regional development policies under the Department of Regional Economic Expansion with other government activities, and for failure to make an appropriate reference to place this issue before the Standing Committee on Regional Development.

I suppose the hon. member for St. John's East (Mr. McGrath) who introduced this motion did so with sincerity. Nevertheless, I cannot easily imagine weaker wording for a motion designed to bring the activities of the Department of Regional Economic Expansion under review on an opposition day. Mr. Speaker, the co-ordination of the activities of government departments is precisely what this new department is all about. In April, 1969, the Department of Regional Economic Expansion was established for the express purpose of co-ordinating government activities in the field of regional development.

The hon. member for St. John's East dealt in considerable detail with the shortcomings of various programs which have now been incorporated into the responsibility of this department. Surely, if there are shortcomings in the FRED program or the ADA program, for example, and if these shortcomings were related to a lack of co-ordination among government departments, as the motion indicates, the establishment of the Department of Regional Economic Expansion would put an end to these shortcomings, since it would bring all the various programs together.

I believe we should be careful not to underestimate the difficulty of bringing together programs as numerous and as various as the following:

1. The Rural development branch of the Department of Fisheries and Forestry;

2. Agricultural re-development (ARDA);

3. The fund for regional economic development (FRED);

4. The Maritime Marshland Rehabilitation Act (MMRA);

5. The Area Development Agency (ADA);

6. The Atlantic Development Board (ADB);

7. The Canada Newstart Program;

8. The Prairie Farm Rehabilitation Act (PFRA);

9. The Cape Breton Development Corporation (Devco);

10. The Atlantic Provinces Power Development Act.

I understand that the administration of these various programs has created the need for a new department with a staff of approximately 1,400 people. Indeed, in the department's annual report we find the final annual reports for these many programs as separate entities—the last occasion upon which they will be so listed.

Let us consider the degree of co-operation which exists among the various government departments. I have here an application for a development incentive grant under the Regional Development Incentives Act. Question No. 7 on this application form is: Will the operation produce wastes which would pollute air, water or soil? It seems clear to me that once the form has been filled out, the application must be directed to the attention of the Department of Energy, Mines and Resources, should the enterprise be likely to cause pollution to soil or water.

If it were likely to cause air pollution, reference would have to be made to the Department of National Health and Welfare. I understand, too, that applications for incentive grants on the part of major industries are appraised by the Department of Industry, Trade and Commerce to ensure as far as possible that these enterprises will be economically viable. Thereafter, assistance is made available as might be necessary in the field of trade or external sales.

It is interesting to note that when the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) announced the austerity program last summer involving cutbacks in the operations of many government departments, the Department of Regional Economic Expansion was exempted from these measures because of the need to stimulate economic activity in the slow-growth areas. Though no one likes an austerity program, it may well be that this program, by bringing about a lack of funds for economic development in certain parts of the country, has increased the interest of industry in applying for the incentive grants available only to assist development in the slow-growth regions.

As one who comes from the constituency of Algoma, parts of which have been designated for many years, I welcome this increased interest shown by companies in establishing themselves in slow-growth areas. I am aware that there was a flood of applications for incentive grants during December, 1969. In the 1969 calendar year, 359 offers of incentive grants were made, resulting in 22,100 jobs. This compares with 98 approvals and 5,350 jobs expected for the year 1968. I believe this trend will continue and that the economic disparity which has existed for so long among various areas of Canada will be lessened in the years ahead.

Good co-ordination between federal government policies and departments does not always mean, however, that economic development will take place immediately. It should be remembered that many fields of governmental responsibility for development lie within provincial responsibility, and that unless the provincial government concerned is willing to co-operate with the federal government in its incentive program, little progress can be made.

For example, in my own constituency of Algoma, the town of Blind River has lost its only industry, the McFadden Lumber Company, which employed more than 300 people. The province of Ontario controls the forest limits which provide the wood fibre for this mill. There are about one million acres of merchandisable timber in the area to supply an integrated forest industry. Although the federal government, under the incentives program approved last spring, now offers incentives of up to $12 million for the establishment of a pulp and paper mill in the town, the province has not advertised the availability of these limits on a world basis since 1966.

• (8:10 p.m.)

One would think that with over a million acres of merchandisable timber waiting to be utilized, the provincial government would get moving and advertise the availability of these limits after four years. Just the fact that the federal incentives grants have increased during the past six months from $6 million to $12 million should have stimulated the provincial government to advertise these limits again. Meanwhile, Mr. Speaker, this town of 3,500 people waits and hopes that a new forest-based industry will establish there.

With regard to the special areas provided for under the act establishing the Department of Regional Economic Expansion, I realize that there is a strong feeling within the department that these areas should be established only in the Maritimes. The rationale for this policy is that the wealthier provinces, like the province of Ontario, have fiscal resources to provide infrastructure for industrial development. This may be a very well thought-out plan and perhaps the province of Ontario will provide sewer, water and other services necessary to provide the infrastructure for industrial development in the slow-growth areas of northern Ontario, but so far it has not and there is little indication that it will.

In my constituency there are eight incorporated towns, only two of which have complete water and sewage treatment plants. The lack of this infrastructure prevents industry coming to these communities. One small town was offered sewer and water service from the Ontario Water Resources Commission, at a cost of around $400 a household per year for a period of 20 years. In a slow-growth area this kind of fee structure is impossible, and unless it is changed sewer and water service will never be provided.

Therefore, Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask that when the special areas are established across Canada this spring, the minister and his departmental officials take another look at their present policy for special areas because I doubt whether the province of Ontario plans to provide the infrastructure necessary for industry, and in the end industry will not come to the slow-growth areas of northern Ontario without it.

I note that the ARDA agreement between the federal government and the provincial governments is due to expire at the end of March, 1970. The ARDA program on Manitoulin Island in my constituency completely refutes the opposition's motion today about co-ordination among government departments. May I give the House some examples. This winter, under the ARDA program, we have some 60 farmers taking a course called "Business of farming" in the Algoma and Manitoulin areas. This involves co-operation among the Canada Manpower centre, the Ontario Department of Education, the Ontario Department of Agriculture and the ARDA program under the Department of Regional Economic Expansion.

This program is designed to augment management skills of young farmers interested in the business of farming in the years ahead. At the same time, they are provided with allowances to assist them to arrange for the extra help needed on their farms during their absence for this training program. It gives them an opportunity to receive information about new farming techniques which could lead to the reorganization of their farming enterprises.

The ARDA program has also provided a farm enlargement program for some 60 farmers where a farmer with an economically viable farm is able to lease additional land for up to 25 years before purchasing it. This, at a time when capital is scarce, is of great assistance. Other ARDA projects which have involved cooperation among many government departments include the development of four community pastures. Some of these have involved development on Indian reserves, including one at Wikwemikong Indian reserve, which involved co-operation among the Department of Regional Economic Expansion, the Department of Indian Affairs and Northern Development, the local Indian band, and the Ontario Department of Agriculture.

With these few remarks, which cover only a few of the ARDA projects in my constituency, I believe it is apparent that a new agreement should be signed between the two levels of government so that the many worth while projects which have been started and developed over the past five or six years will continue to expand in the future. I believe that the whole outreach of the Department of Regional Economic Expansion must be toward helping people. Certainly the last nine months that this department has been in existence indicates that this is the direction in which it is going.

[Mr. Foster.]

Mr. Charles H. Thomas (Moncton): Mr. Speaker, when the regional development incentives bill was introduced to the House last June, we on this side welcomed the legislation as something we had been advocating for a good many years and to which we hoped the government would give first priority. The Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Stanfield) pointed out at that time that we had been waiting a long time for this legislation, that the government had wasted too much time already in bringing it in, and that he hoped that now it had been introduced in the House it would be passed quickly and the government would move a little faster in bringing help to areas suffering regional disparity.

He also pointed out that because of the failure of the government to do anything for four or five years, a great deal of time had been lost in the Atlantic provinces and it behooved the government to move a little faster to make up for this lost time. He also expressed doubts that there had been any real change in government thinking and he wondered if they would actually move any faster once the legislation had been put through. The doubts that our leader expressed at that time were very real ones, and many people in the region, including myself, are beginning to question the government's good intentions in implementing this legislation.

Leading papers in the area have carried editorials on the subject, and in every case they are beginning to wonder if the government really means to take any immediate action to correct the problems of the region. Like most people in the Maritimes, I was quite happy to hear the minister's remarks in Saint John early in January, that his department was prepared to spend millions and millions of dollars in the Maritimes and that this could be done without adding anything to the inflationary pressures. But our enthusiasm likely will be tempered by native caution. Maritimers will, not unreasonably, await specific results before getting carried away by the minister's words, for his remarks are really nothing new.

We in that part of Canada have been saying for years that while there may be a cost-push inflation in the rest of Canada, that is certainly not the problem in our area. Inflationary pressures may remain very high in the rest of Canada, but in the Atlantic area people are getting the worst of both worlds. We are already afflicted with high unemployment and low wages, and we are likely to be seriously hurt if the government in Ottawa does not tailor its financial policies to fit situations which exist in the depressed areas of the country.

It is little comfort to us in the Atlantic region to hear the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) remark that he is prepared to take measures which might increase unemployment in the country up to 6 per cent or more. The Prime Minister recognizes that Ontario has been the chief cause of inflation, and he says that he is prepared to take stern measures to reduce these inflationary pressures.

What the Prime Minister does not seem to realize or care about is that we in the Atlantic area cannot wait much longer for this government to do something about unemployment. It is true that in New Brunswick we are hearing all sorts of vague rumours about great new developments to take place, but nobody says when. That will-o-the-wisp, the president of the New Brunswick Development Corporation, is chasing all over the world trying to entice industry to come to New Brunswick and only he knows what promises he is making. I have been told he does not even answer to his own Minister of Economic Growth. Our people are asking why there is this veil of secrecy. Public funds are being spent, and people are entitled to know what promises are being made. How could you expect the people of New Brunswick to have any confidence in a provincial government which could perpetrate the Fundy Chemical Park fiasco on them? Let the minister and his colleagues be frank and tell us what is going on.

The minister has given us some figures. He has told us about 17 grants that have been approved and how they are spread across the country. These figures in themselves suggest that the system of a single grant structure for all the slow-growth regions will not work. If a firm has a chance of receiving a grant in either Nova Scotia or Quebec, it is far more likely to choose Quebec as its location because it is so much closer to the main marketing and productive centres of Canada.

• (8:20 p.m.)

Professor T. N. Brewis in his book published last year and entitled "Regional Development Policies in Canada" noted that this problem of a uniform system of grants had been a problem of the area development incentives program. Under that program the underdeveloped areas of Ontario had been the obvious beneficiaries. There are also other indications that the regional development programs are failing to achieve their aims. The industries which are being attracted to the designated regions do not always come from the overcrowded, industrial centres of this country.

One example was brought to the attention of the House last December by the hon. member for Parry Sound-Muskoka (Mr. Aiken). He referred to the Glaverbel Glass Company of Belgium which had sound intentions of locating a plant in Parry Sound but was suddenly attracted away to Quebec city by the regional incentives people. Parry Sound is hardly an area from which an industry should be lured away. Yet this is exactly the result of the programs being pursued by the Department of Regional Economic Expansion. No wonder the minister is so anxious to keep quiet about the activities of his department.

So far I have dealt with what might be called incidents of failure in the regional development program. But a far more serious consequence than these incidents has been the gross failure of this government to co-ordinate its other policies with its regional development policies. There are three prime examples of the government's flagrant disregard for regional development in the over-all policies, namely, the proposals of the white paper on taxation, the anti-inflationary policies of the government, and the austerity program in government spending.

The white paper hits hard at small business—despite the protest of the Minister of Finance (Mr. Benson)—which is the type of business most commonly found in the slow-growth areas. It proposes to remove the special, lower tax rate for small businesses and thus raise their tax bill and reduce their ability to plough earnings back into the business. Owners of small publicly-traded businesses will have difficulty maintaining ownership when faced with a tax bill every five years for the capital gains on the stock they hold in their companies. Farmers, too, will be hit by the new tax proposals. Capital gains taxing of their sales of livestock and equipment, and the removal of tax concessions previously granted to farm co-operatives, will certainly cut into farm income.

The government also has unfavourable changes in store for the extractive industries. In other words, the tax paper manages to strike at the three staples of the slow growth areas: small business, farming, and extraction. Is this an indication of the government's sincerity about improving regional economies?

Another example is the anti-inflationary measures taken by this government. The Prime Minister says his government will fight inflation even if the national unemployment rate goes as high as 6 per cent. But the unemployment rate in Quebec is already 7 per cent; in the Atlantic provinces it is already 7.4 per cent, while the national rate is 4.8 per cent. If the national rate is allowed to go to 6 per cent, these high unemployment areas will be hit much harder. C. R. McFadden, head of the Atlantic Provinces Economic Council, estimates that unemployment in the Maritimes could go as high as 10 per cent. In other words, the government is quite prepared to let the slow-growth areas of the country underwrite the cost of restoring price stability.

The spending of the government under its program of austerity is equally lopsided. With cries of "Economy" and "Let's tighten our belts" the government has cut back spending on the Newstart program and has frozen hiring for the Cape Breton Development Corporation. At the same time, it feels no pangs of conscience about spending $27 million for a new defence headquarters in Ottawa.

In fact, the spending of the Department of Public Works in general is an instructive case. Take, for example, the department's release concerning contracts let during the month of November. In all the areas which the government did not single out in its budget for restraints on capital spending, Public Works awarded contracts with a total value of $2,383,781. In Toronto alone, its contracts were worth nearly three times as much. In Ottawa, its contracts were worth nearly ten times as much, and construction worth $50 million more is planned for Ottawa beginning this summer.

The government is preaching restraint for the weaker areas of the economy while pumping money into the centres of inflation, and this despite the minister's statement in Saint John early last month that the government could spend "millions and millions of dollars in the Maritimes without adding anything to inflationary pressures". Of course, he did not say anything about the rest of the country—I admit that—but it hardly ties in with the government's war against inflation to spend millions of dollars in inflationary areas and not in the depressed areas.

[Mr. Thomas.]

To summarize my main points, the Minister of Regional Economic Expansion (Mr. Marchand) has created great anxiety in those of us who are interested in regional development by his persistent refusal to remove the secrecy which surrounds the operations of his department. Such secrecy, along with the small bits of information which have managed to leak out about the department's performance, lead us to believe that the program is foundering badly.

No matter how well the department's own programs were doing, they could not possibly compensate for the department's utter failure to fulfil its role in co-ordinating other government programs with regional impact. The fiscal and monetary policies of the present government are such as to wipe out entirely any good which might have been done under the regional development program.

Almost no one disagrees with the aims of the Department of Regional Economic Expansion. If the minister would only re-open the channels for discussion of his policies, he might find that he has gained valuable allies for the struggles in which he is obviously engaged with other members of the cabinet.

Mr. Martin P. O'Connell (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Regional Economic Expansion): Mr. Speaker, I did not intend to participate in this debate. However, I feel that not only do I want to express my appreciation of the views I have heard here—and I will welcome meeting the members of the committee to hear their views—but, more important, I want to correct the impression which may have been left by the hon. member for Cardigan (Mr. McQuaid) in figures which he quoted for the Prince Edward Island plan. Either he is not familiar with the financial aspects of that plan or he was speaking in a very jocular manner. None the less, the impression was left that there is very little federal money in that plan. That, of course, is nonsense.

The hon. member said that what there was in the plan was meaningless, because the money would have been there anyway as a result of the standard shared-cost programs. That is not the case, either. He also said that other funds would be spent for personnel, on salaries for people administering the plan. That is certainly not fair to the P.E.I. plan or to other hon. members who want to understand what is actually happening.

• (8:30 p.m.)

I trust that when the committee meets we will have a more serious and valuable input than that.

Now, Mr. Speaker, let me run over very briefly the basic outlines of the Prince Edward Island development plan. These facts can be found in a small booklet published by the department last year. The financial aspects are set out on its back pages for all to see. The total development plan is designed to cover a 15-year period. The total investment in that plan by the two levels of government is expected to be $723 million, of which the federal contribution would be in the order of $225 million and the provincial contribution $498 million. But the plan includes all the educational costs of the province of P.E.I. and many other normal provincial expenditures.

I would like to present the members of the House with the costs of the plan broken down in some detail—and only for the first five to seven years, which is the first phase of the plan, after which it is subject to review. The figures for those five to seven years are outlined in the little booklet that I mentioned. This five to seven-year period, known as phase 1, is designed to cover total spending of approximately $243 million, of which the federal share is forecast at $125 million and the provincial share at $118 million; that is to say, in phase 1 the federal spending exceeds the provincial spending. That is part of the design. The federal spending exceeds the provincial spending in order to put some momentum into the development plan at the start That is the time to have the maximum federal contribution. Of those provincial costs of $118 million, education alone comes to $97 million. That is approximately 80 per cent of the provincial spending forecast under the plan. All the rest, so far as the province is concerned, are normal provincial expenditures.

The whole of the extra spending on the Prince Edward Island Development Plan in phase 1 is federal spending of some $125 million. Of this sum, it is true that approximately $6 million would be spent on vocational training programs in any case. However, the rest is not available under any standard shared-cost, federal-provincial programs as they operate in other provinces. I think that is the point which the hon. member for Cardigan failed to recognize. It is true that the federal govenment will be doing some of the same things in other Atlantic provinces, and to some extent also in Quebec and in the prairies. But none of this represents standard programs available in, say, the province of Ontario. It is all extra development spending; it is extra because of the regional disparities recognized in the province of P.E.I.

It is also true that of this $119 millon federal spending, $36 million will be credit. The hon. member drew attention to the credit features. It is credit because it is to be used, for example, for purchasing land. The province recovers this investment. That is the nature of the plan. But the remaining $83 million in the federal portion over the next five to seven years is a pure contribution from the taxpayers of Canada to the development plan.

How is it to be spent? The hon. member said that most of it would be spent on salaries. This is sheer nonsense. I do not know where he got his figures. Of course, some will be spent on salaries because personnel providing services will be involved in the development plan—for example, agricultural extension officers.

Let me list a few of the facts of the spending proposed: tourism, the development of campsites, etc., $4 million; housing, to reduce housing costs, $6 million; highways, $7½ million; industrial financing, $3 million; pollution control, $1 million; fisheries services, $5 million—I stress that this is additional federal spending to put the plan in momentum —agricultural services, $12½ million; health and welfare services, $3 million; and then an additional general development grant, not specified, to help the province cover extra provincial costs, $20.6 million.

All these facts are available in the booklet I have mentioned. I do not think it does a service to this House or to the people of Prince Edward Island to try to reduce all this federal spending to $90,000, or whatever figure the hon. member mentioned. If the hon. member had gone on a little longer, he would have had the province of P.E.I. contributing to the development of some other region of the country through this development plan. It just does not make sense to pursue that line of thought.

It seems to me the hon. member took the same approach as, unfortunately, the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Stanfield) did in saying that nothing substantial is being done. The facts refute that. Surely the people of the provinces, and indeed all the people of Canada, will not believe that nothing substantial is being done.

[Translation]

Hon. Théogene Ricard (Saint-Hyacinthe): Mr. Speaker, I believe I would not fulfil my duty if I did not take a few minutes to draw the minister's attention to the difficult conditions prevailing in Saint-Hyacinthe and the area, and to ask for his co-operation in order to eliminate them because they worry a great many workers, industrialists and businessmen in my riding who live from their daily work or the operation of their business.

Other reasons also prompt me to take part in this debate as the province of Quebec is now going through a period of severe unemployment which causes misery and concern.

• (8:40 p.m.)

We must think, for example, about the situation existing in the Lower St. Lawrence valley to realize that the minister is surely justified in using all available means in order to speed up the program that he has outlined and to assist as soon as possible these people who are in the most unfortunate circumstances.

In the St. Hyacinthe area, unions describe the conditions as alarming. In the course of the last few months many industries have had to close down due to lack of business, throwing hundreds of workers into the street. Many other industries have had to reduce their work force drastically with the result that in the St. Hyacinthe region alone there are at the present time nearly 4,500 unemployed.

The minister knows that the Central Council of the City of St. Hyacinthe has been justifiably concerned with the difficult situation now prevailing there. Recently the local Union officials invited the minister to meet them in St. Hyacinthe in order to discuss this situation.

I would like to briefly recall to the minister what journalists and labour leaders have had to say about prevailing economic conditions in our region. I had the pleasure of attending the conference held by the minister on January 21. Some 300 persons were present, greatly concerned with the economic situation and with whatever proposals the minister could offer.

The St. Hyacinthe newspaper, Le Clairon, briefly reviewed the situation, mentioning that 17 per cent of the St. Hyacinthe labour force is now unemployed.

[Mr. O'Connell.]

That is one of the most affected areas in the province of Quebec, and the people that live there certainly deserve particular attention from the minister. Unfortunately, I did not receive a copy of the brief presented to the minister and containing an in-depth study of the situation. That is why I must trust the newspaper and say that the officials of the CNTU, workers in general and business leaders agree that the minister should, having thoroughly looked into the matter, declare that St. Hyacinthe is if not a designated area, at least a special area. The Quebec government has already taken similar action so that industries interested in settling in St. Hyacinthe may avail themselves of the advantages provided by the provincial government.

As it was clearly suggested to the minister when he visited St. Hyacinthe, it is wrong to consider the town of St. Hyacinthe, as well as the rest of the area at that, as being part of the area of Montreal. The minister will have in mind the great number of arguments proving that the area of St. Hyacinthe is entirely different from that of Montreal.

And I need no other evidence than what the mayor of Saint-Hyacinthe himself said. I hope that the minister will carefully consider the arguments that were submitted to him. He will certainly remember that when he came to Saint-Hyacinthe, the first citizen of the city told him that because the city is not considered as a designated area, it is subject to unfavourable competition from cities like Drummondville, Saint-Jean and Granby.

I know of some firms which would have been interested in coming to Saint-Hyacinthe but because of the disadvantages due to the fact that this city is not considered as a designated area, they went elsewhere, to Granby, Saint-Jean or Drummondville.

It is difficult for the people of Saint-Hyacinthe, who pay their taxes, as well as for those of Granby, Saint-Jean and Drummondville—

Mr. Marchand (Langelier): Yes, but if it is argued that my department's program was fruitless, they could not have existed.

Mr. Ricard: —for the minister's information, Mr. Speaker, I must say that I have proof to the contrary.

Mr. Marchand (Langelier): You would have to convince my colleague. It seems that the program was fruitless.

An hon. Member: There is nothing to be done.

Mr. Ricard: In any event, I am sure that, because of Bill C-202, several industries did not settle in Saint-Hyacinthe. Our electors are not jealous because those industries settled elsewhere, but a matter of justice is involved and I think that the Minister's former colleagues in the labour movement have made it clear. I would now like to speak on their behalf and request earnestly all the attention to which the city of Saint-Hyacinthe is entitled.

If there is one thing I could reproach the minister with, it is that the Queec point of view has not been sufficiently taken into account, especially in connection with the location of the new international airport. In my opinion, that was a mistake. Indeed, it was quite wrong to dismiss the views of Quebec, since it had several reasons to choose another location. This has surely embittered not only the authorities of the province of Quebec, but many citizens who shared their opinion.

It is also difficult for the workers at the Lauzon shipyards, for exemple, to forget the promises made to them during the last election campaign.

Mr. Marchand (Langelier): What promises?

Mr. Ricard: The promises to get contracts in order to give jobs to the workers of the Lauzon shipyards.

Mr. Marchand (Langelier): That is wrong.

Mr. Ricard: Today, we realize that those shipyards are in jeopardy, which does not help the workers of that part of the province, who are faced with many difficulties.

Mr. Speaker, I do not want to take too much of the time of the House, but I urge the minister ro reconsider the case of the Saint-Hyacinthe area and to make it a designated area so that the efforts of the federal and provincial governments will be better co-ordinated with a view to bringing new industries into our region which offers every possibility of providing jobs to those who need them.

Mr. Marcel Lessard (Lac-Saint-Jean): Mr. Speaker, it is with pleasure that I take this opportunity to discuss the merits of the projects and achievements of the new Department of Regional Economic Expansion and those of the former Department of Forestry and Rural Development.

This opportunity is given to us through the motion introduced by the hon. member for St. John's East (Mr. McGrath) to condemn an alleged failure to coordinate policies within the department. The hon. member may be right to some extent but he should not put all the blame on the minister. Rather, he should commend him for his good work, for a job well done up until now, since he has succeeded in putting some order in the various organizations dealing with economic promotion that had been operating for many years in Canada, particularly in the Maritime provinces, under various departments.

• (8:50 p.m.)

Quite possibly and even most probably, there was a lack of co-ordination in the past, because of the situation prevailing in some provinces and of somewhat tense relations between the two levels of government when priorities had to be established.

We must also consider that regional development is a new way of approaching economic expansion. Criteria are not clearly set out, for conditions are far from being identical from one area to the other and each project has to be studied within a local context. Moreover, no development project could fully succeed without unreserved co-operation from the local population and all levels of public administration.

I appreciate the anxiety felt by the hon. members and I do share in it, because, like them, I expect much of that department's ability to provide the assistance required for the recovery of our depressed areas. It must be recognized that the challenge is great and that the work to be done is quite complex. However, nothing is impossible when competent and willing men like those who are now running this department accept the challenge and get to work with vigour and realism.

As for me, I am confident that the results sought will soon be coming and that again our economic situation will improve in the underprivileged regions of our country.

It is easy to criticize in a negative way, as have done some members of the opposition since the beginning of the debate and I might ask the hon. member for St. John's East to tell me what the party, to which he belonged from 1957 to 1963, has done while in power.

The Atlantic Development Board was actually set up under the Diefenbaker administration in 1962, of which the hon. member for Cardigan (Mr. McQuaid) from Prince Edward Island, who made a speech this afternoon was a member, I think. Unfortunately, this Board had no authority whatever and no budget. It is indeed the Liberal government which, when it came into power in 1963, not only gave powers to this council but also—which was far more important—a budget of $100 million.

But this is a thing of the past; speaking about it or discussing it further will not change anything. Let us turn to the present and the future instead, and worry about what can be done to improve the situation.

A department was created, barely six months ago, to tackle squarely the problems of regional disparities.

Since then, an important bill was adopted, Bill C-202, to provide financial assistance to such industries as will settle or prosper in the designated areas. That act replaces Bill C-129, adopted in the early sixties, which had become—it was soon found out—slightly too restrictive.

Bill C-129, Mr. Speaker, in spite of its weaknesses, gave very good results. According to the report of the department on its activities, as tabled by the minister last Friday, the Regional Development Agency had approved, to March 31, 1969, 1040 applications for capital grants, totalling over $2,600 million and representing 65,000 new jobs.

Obviously, all those plans were probably not carried out, and this, for various reasons beyond the control of the federal government. But it certainly is not fair for the opposition to say that nothing has been done as they have been doing since the beginning of this debate.

Looking at the table which appears on page 19 of that report, I see that the Atlantic provinces, particularly, benefitted the most from this bill. In fact, 301 projects were approved, representing investments of $897 million, and 21,000 new jobs. Quebec follows with 289 projects, amounting to investments of $800 million and 16,000 new jobs. Ontario comes next, with 220 projects, representing only $420 million in capital investments and 16,000 new jobs.

It is therefore obvious from this report, that the Atlantic provinces were the ones that benefitted the most from this act and from many others administered by the Department of Regional Economic Expansion.

I come from the Saguenay-Lac-Saint-Jean area, one with a population of about 300,000. If the people from my constituency could benefit as much as those of Prince Edward Island from the act during the next five years, we would be in the seventh heaven, for should this project become a reality, Prince Edward Island will get from the federal government, and only out of this investment project, more than $125 million. The same amount of money should be invested in the four constituencies of the Saguenay-Lac-Saint-Jean area, where there are 300,000 people. We would be most happy about that. Instead of criticizing a government that would grant such amounts of money, the 300,000 citizens of the Saguenay-Lac-Saint-Jean area would be most happy and grateful.

But what do we see instead? The government is blamed and pilloried for seemingly not doing enough.

The area I represent also benefitted from that act, in a much lesser way however, which is understandable, as it has but few very large firms. We do have some large ones, but they do not expand very fast. Nevertheless, Alcan was given a development incentive by the department for the building of a new plant in Arvida.

The act was restrictive enough, as I said a while ago, and in many cases, on account of requirements from the inspectors and from the act, the amounts spent to qualify for an incentive almost cancelled out the benefits thus obtained, especially for projects involving less than $75,000.

Another weakness which I have been able to notice in Bill C-129 is the time gap between when the applications are made and when the subsidy is paid, which has been so long in some cases that the business has been obliged to pay to the bank rather large amounts in interest on a temporary financing of the subsidy it was going to receive.

I hope that such problems will not arise again in practice, and I think that Bill C-202, in the case at least of small projects, has rectified this situation.

My area is among the designated areas and during the last few years, the federal government paid for an extensive study of the conditions and the economic potential of our area. That study has been carried out by a highly qualified expert, Mr. Pierre-Yves Pépin of Montreal, and recently a very interesting report on the matter has been presented.

Nearly a year ago, a mission of economic planning was appointed by the provincial government in order to carry out a study of the whole area and a plan is starting to take shape which no doubt will soon be submitted to the federal and provincial authorities for approval and implementation.

The Department of Regional Economic Expansion will certainly be asked for its support and I am confident that the present minister will listen with sympathy to that request so that the beautiful Saguenay-Lac-Saint-Jean area, which he knows well, can have once again a strong economy which will keep there thousands of young people educated today at very great expenses and whom unfortunately we see now move out of the area every day.

• (9:00 p.m.)

Mr. C. A. Gauthier (Roberval): Mr. Speaker, I would not want to miss this opportunity to say a few words on the motion introduced today and which reads as follows:

That this House condemns the Government's failure to coordinate its Regional Development policies under the Department of Regional Economic Expansion with other government activities, and its failure to bring in an appropriate reference to place this issue before the Standing Committee on Regional Development.

I would also like to make a few remarks on the amendment which adds, and I quote:

and this House further condemns the government for its failure to lessen regional poverty across Canada, and for its failure to create job opportunities so sorely needed at this time.

Have we actually the right to blame the government? Surely if we study all the aspects of the problem, we can certainly do so, because, in everything, there is always some good and some bad, and men are not more perfect than the laws that they enact.

The new department had in mind, I think, a comprehensive project, and it urges all groups: provincial governments, municipalities, companies, industrialists, to come and co-operate with a view to reducing unemployment across Canada.

If the government is to be blamed in some instances, we also have to examine our own conscience, since that question is of the utmost interest to us. We must ask ourselves whether we have done our duty and have informed the population on the aims of the department.

The minister, in the introduction to the report of his department for the year 1968-69, stated the following, and I quote:

The first phase in the establishment of the new department was dealing with the re-grouping under the authority of a single minister of all the federal organizations and programs devoted to regional development and social progress. The oldest of those programs dated back to 1935, but most of them had been initiated since 1960; each was designed to settle what was originally considered distinct and isolated cases—

As a matter of fact, a few years ago, when the famous ARDA program was introduced, I had the opportunity to rise in the House and to congratulate the then Minister of Forestry. I drew to his attention in particular the fact that, thanks to the ARDA program, many blueberry operations had been set up in my region. We got grants totalling more than $3 million to that effect. I then told the minister that he was making a big mistake by setting up those blueberry operations.

Six or seven years later, it turned out that I had been right. The blueberry fields have become public places where pickers are fighting for the blueberries. Once everything had been levelled down, I told him: You should not have caused all those trees to be chopped down, because you should know that blueberries grow in the woods with trees a necessary protection.

Well, what is being done now? Just a return to what I recommended six or seven years ago. I quote from a November 1969 newspaper:

Parcels of land will be distributed to the pickers.

So the blueberry fields which had almost been regionalized are going to be returned to the owners.

I believed it was a mistake at the time and I had censored the government for thus venturing into areas it was not too familiar with. I had precisely told the minister that he knew nothing about blueberry operations. This was no fault of his, but he should have heeded my advice.

Today, because of these failures, blueberry production has considerably decreased. However the new arrangements should result in correcting these mistakes.

This organization has been established recently, as I said a moment ago. Its aim is to centralize all efforts in an attempt to solve the problem as a whole.

If we really want to solve it, co-operation is essential on the part of the provinces, companies and industrialists.

The Quebec government has certainly understood the aims of this department, since in September 1969 a newspaper stated that it intended to invest $50 million in the program for financial assistance to primary industries.

Reading this article, I understood immediately that the province of Quebec was aware of the part it had to play, since it allocated funds for joint programs which the Department of Regional Economic Expansion will help to put into effect in each of the regions.

As far as my riding is concerned, much work has been done. In fact, we have benefitted from the planning mission as well as from the REC which is doing an excellent job in determining means to promote industry, agriculture and tourism.

We have obtained an excellent report of some 450 pages which is full of valuable information. On reading that report, some deficiencies are discovered, even in my area. Indeed, some authorities, such as reeves, have violently criticized it. In my opinion, it has given too much importance to the Upper Saguenay area in comparison with others, namely the Lake St. John and Roberval areas.

Apparently, all the industry has been centered in the Upper Saguenay, while the Lake St. John area becomes an experimental farm. In fact, it is considered as being mainly a farming district, while the best farm lands happen to be in the Roberval area where the future of forestry operations looks very promising.

• (9:10 p.m.)

It will probably be necessary to retimber the present lands in order to start a forest development.

If one of our distinguished citizens, a reeve, expressed straightforwardly his opinions on that matter, he was sometimes right. If it had been arranged to have the study made by people of the area, I think the results would have been different.

Anyway I do not wish to destroy everything that has been done because there has been some progress. What has been achieved is surely not useless since it has already given rise to discussions and certainly it has helped the minister realize that the people of the Saguenay-Lac-Saint-Jean area are not only awakening but want to study the problems and get out of the present dead-lock.

We have already seen some results in our area, since we have received a grant for one of our most prosperous industries, one that manufactures machinery used in forestry, such as motor chain-saws and, in my opinion, this is quite an achievement. We hope this assistance will be continued, in order that other similar industries will contribute to the recovery of our economy which is not based entirely on the forest industry because the people there also go in for farming. We also hope that in this field we will be able some day to note some progress.

We have also a very interesting project in St.-Félicien and there is no need for me to cross the t's, as the Minister knows what I am alluding to. Besides, I contacted him on that subject and I am sure that the Minister will do what he can so that the studies about St.-Félicien be carried out as soon as possible, because the region needs it. This industry would create 2,000 or 2,500 jobs. I think that it is a constructive project and I feel sure that the Minister is very much interested in it.

Besides, I received the other day from the city of Roberval—the Minister must have got one too—a copy of the memorandum which it submitted to the economic mission—

The Deputy Speaker (Mr. Béchard): Order. I regret to interrupt the hon. member, but his time has expired.

[English]

Mr. J. B. Morison (Hamilton-Wentworth): Mr. Speaker, this afternoon I was talking to the leader of the House, my hon. friend from Rosedale (Mr. Macdonald), and he expressed concern about some of the comments which had been made in connection with the tardiness of the regional development committee in convening again after the fall recess.

As the chairman of that committee, and in an effort to be fair and objective, I feel that with all due respect to members of the House, and in answer to their complaints that they have been left in the dark about what the committee and the department have been doing, I should review what the committee has done over the past 18 months.

As many members know, this was a new committee, one made up of people here for the first time and who were not familiar with committee procedure. The committee encountered a further handicap in that it was immediately presented with the estimates of two government departments which were being phased out. In studying these estimates and listening to hon. members such as the hon. member for Cape Breton-East Richmond (Mr. MacInnis) and the hon. member for Cape Breton-The Sydneys (Mr. Muir), we probably heard more about coal mines and found out more on the subject of coal and steel than we ever realized we did not know. As we progressed through the Maritimes and into the west we picked up an idea of just what the government had been trying to establish through the fragmented departmental programs and the ARDA development plan. We had a taste of what might be accomplished by the new department which was being instituted.

Having made progress through the estimates, we decided at the steering committee meetings that we would go to the west and investigate on site the FRED, ARDA and Newstart programs. These were, of course, older programs and it was easier to judge how they were accomplishing the ends which the departments had sought to achieve. Nevertheless, the committee kept in mind the eloquent plea from Bell Island. It decided, and fully intended, to go to Newfoundland and the Maritimes to look into the problems of transportation which we knew existed there. However, we decided to go west first.

I recall, as we got to Prince Albert, our first stop, the sense of frustration which I felt. It is curious that the hon. member for Yorkton-Melville (Mr. Nystrom) should have opened his remarks by talking about frustration. Members of the opposition refer to their frustration when they look across to the government benches. I will always remember the frustration I experienced, because I understood what those kids must have felt when they got to the airport, having driven 80 or 100 miles to see that bright young member of the committee, the hon. member for Yorkton-Melville, and found that after all he was not with us. I sensed their frustration and I, too, was frustrated. I knew that this young member's mind was probably filled with his marriage and his forthcoming nuptials, and that he just could not be with us. I am sure he, too, was frustrated—not with his marriage, of course, but with his inability to be present at that time.

• (9:20 p.m.)

Here we have different frustrations and they probably all revert back basically to the people. You cannot think of government; you must think of the people. This was true of our committee work. I was impressed, and I know members of the committee were, with Newstart. The people, particularly those from Newfoundland, had never seen anything like it. As a matter of fact, they had never had a program like this on the island. We found that ARDA programs had worked wonders.

After returning to Ottawa with the experience we gained in the west, we knew what we intended to do. We were prepared to go to the east, study the existing programs there and make recommendations as to how they could be improved. The hon. member for St. John's East (Mr. McGrath) generously suggested, when we got back and were confronted with the bill to establish the Regional Development Incentives Act, that we did not have much choice. If we postponed the committee study of this bill and decided to go east, the whole program would have been put off for six or nine months because of the summer break; we probably would not be having this debate tonight because we would just be considering the first stage of the measure.

The committee in its enthusiasm for this measure, and with its tremendous responsibility—I cannot praise the members too highly—studied the bill and returned it to this House in time to pass it by the end of June in order that the new department could commence with the program hon. members have been discussing tonight. Following this we adjourned for the summer.

There was some discussion about going to Newfoundland and the Maritimes even at that time. I would have been very happy to go there even though it might have been too early for tuna fishing. I still think it would have been a good trip. But hon. members were tired, they had worked hard during the spring, and the consensus was that it would be better if we waited until the fall.

Had we gone to the east in the summer, a double load would have fallen upon the shoulders of hon. members. Had we gone there and presented ourselves as the great white hope, if you will, or the seviour to the people suffering regional disparity, we might have raised their hopes for no real reason, because we were going just to look. We were not prepared immediately to say we intended to enter into constructive programs. In any event, it was decided to put off that trip.

During the summer numerous letters were exchanged, there were telephone calls and there was a meeting. Often the 264 members of this chamber have a hard time reaching agreement. I realize that the "famous five" who were attempting to plan the Newfoundland trip were probably experiencing difficulty in reaching agreement on priority and the areas the committee should visit. I have no direct knowledge of this, but knowing their enthusiasm, and with my interest in their problems, I am sure if there had been a meeting of minds we would have done something before October or November.

I do not wish to ingratiate myself with the minister, and certainly I am not the type to ingratiate myself with the government. However, I take complete responsibility for the committee not being reconvened in December. The House Leader spoke to me about this matter. In fact, he advised the committees branch that we should reconvene. Perhaps I did not have the authority, but after talking to the members of the committee I decided there was no real purpose in reconvening and that nothing of significance could be accomplished if we did reconvene in December.

The members of this committee are young and enthusiastic. They are not the type of committee members who want to sit in committee just for the sake of doing something. There were other committees sitting in December which demanded much of hon. members' time. On that basis, I advised the House Leaders that we would be better advised to wait until we had the first full year's estimates of the department before the committee for study.

Let me say without any malice, and not as a snide remark, that opposition members have the advantage of the research people which this government has provided. They are a great deal better off than we, for this reason. If they have had any spare time during the time the House has been sitting, I hope they have used their research people to prepare themselves for the committee's study of the estimates. I hope when this study commences they will present many constructive ideas. Let them tear the estimates apart, without knocking them just for the sake of knocking them.

Mr. McGrath: Would the hon. member permit a question?

Mr. Morison: I am certainly no expert on research and development, but having been the chairman of this committee I have a warmth and fondness for research and development. Because we initiated this matter, I like to think of it as our baby.

Mr. McGrath: Would the hon. member permit a question?

Mr. Morison: As I listened to opposition spokesmen today, all I can say is: Wait until the baby can walk and talk before you beat it over the head.

[Mr. Morison.]

Mr. McGrath: Mr. Speaker, the hon. member took it upon himself to accept full responsibility for not reconvening the committee. What right did he have to take that responsibility upon himself, since he was no longer the chairman of the committee?

An hon. Member: Think fast.

Mr. Morison: I do not think I really have to think too fast on that question. Mr. McGrath—

Some hon. Members: Order.

Mr. Morison: The hon. member for St. John's East—I am sorry. That was probably a Freudian slip. I have known the hon. member for St. John's East for a pleasant six or seven months. I have become a little informal with him at times, and therefore I made that Freudian slip. Whether I was the chairman or not, having been the chairman with a fair knowledge of how members of the committee were thinking, and being the logical person to discuss the problems of the committee, I gave this advice to the House leader and I take full responsibility.

Hon. W. G. Dinsdale (Brandon-Souris): Mr. Speaker, it is quite obvious that the government which was elected in 1968 intended that the Department of Regional Development should be the keystone in the so-called just society. This afternoon the latest report from the department came into my hands. I notice that the second paragraph on page 1 confirms this viewpoint. It says, with reference to the establishment of this department:

> The announcement stemmed from the Prime Minister's previously declared policy of making regional development a matter of top priority for the government.

• (9:30 p.m.)

I think it will be equally obvious from the worth-while debate that has taken place today that, while the government might have intended to make the Department of Regional Economic Development the cornerstone of the implementation of the just society, it has fallen far short of the mark with respect to implementation. Notwithstanding the large amount of propaganda, as demonstrated by the many press releases that have been issued, this program unfortunately has not yet got off the ground. In fact, I would think the amount of attention that has been paid in speeches and press releases to this subject has aggravated a situation which is inherent in the Canadian body politic, that is, the problem of creating economic equality and equity from sea to sea by raising beyond the level of realization what might be called the revolution of rising expectations.

It is not entirely the fault of the department that this unhappy situation has occurred, because it was preceded by the so-called war on poverty which began three or four years ago. In view of the sound and fury which ushered in the commencement of the war on poverty, everyone anticipated that Utopia would be just around the corner. Unfortunately, and unhappily for the good of national unity, this has not occurred.

I want to speak briefly this evening on a subject that has been drawing increasing attention from the press, namely, the growing protest that is emerging in western Canada. It has reached such a crescendo that the former premier of Alberta, Hon. Ernest Manning, says that there is a greater feeling of isolation on the prairies now than at any time in his 35 years of public life. It is interesting to note that this period of time includes the great depression.

I was encouraged to note, also, that the Toronto Star, which has the largest circulation of any daily in Canada, has become aware of this growing feeling of disenchantment and recently assigned five of its top writers to examine the situation. They came up with the conclusion that the west is hopping mad. This is accentuated by the fact that the west is long-suffering; it is "slow to anger" as the Bible says.

I am sure that the person who could confirm the situation to the minister is the deputy minister who, when he was editor of the Winnipeg Free Press, helped to overthrow the last complacent Liberal government with his editorial policy. The government was out of touch with the west at that time and the Winnipeg Free Press back in the 1950s constantly harped on this theme. I recall the minister's deputy making very significant speeches on the necessity of implementing a new national policy and referring with great enthusiasm to John A. Macdonald's original national policy.

The reason this debate is so important today is that it has enabled us for a few moments to focus on the fundamental problems that are causing this feeling of alienation and isolation in the west, that is, the economic problems that are peculiar to that part of Canada. I need not recite them in any detail. They have been with us almost since confederation. I am referring to the tariff through which the west subsidizes industry in central Canada to the tune of about 25 per cent, and inequitable freight rates which are being aggravated by the fact that transportation facilities, which are the lifeblood of confederation in the more remote parts of Canada, are being phased out purely according to whether they are operating in the black or in the red.

This is a new interpretation of national policy. The national government has always seized its responsibilities in this regard. Indeed, this was fundamental to the original national development policy of providing adequate transportation, not only for economic reasons but for sociological reasons. So we are batting our heads against the wall, not only because of the persistent and inequitable freight rates but because of the phasing out of transportation facilities which is occurring at an alarming rate.

The essence of the current problem is the plight of the wheat growers who are in the hands of a government agency, the Wheat Board, and the fact that the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) who heads the campaign for the just society, according to the statements on the subject, is not even aware that the Wheat Board is a government agency which has prime responsibility in coping with this very difficult economic situation.

Now, to the old economic problems that I could recite at length tonight have been added new ones. Instead of concentrating on a fundamental, national economic policy the government is concentrating on symbolic and cultural matters. The white paper has exacerbated the problem because it is aimed directly at the small businesses and at the farmers who are clustered in great profusion in western Canada.

The statement has been made that the opposition has been entirely negative in the course of this debate. I want to be positive. I want to interpret for the minister why, to quote the Toronto Star, the prairies are "hopping mad" at this time. I hoped some government backbenchers would speak in this debate. They speak outside the House, but unfortunately they do not get the ear of the government or of the minister in this respect. I know the minister wants to be loved. Everybody wants to be loved. But he has a golden opportunity to become the hero of confederation during these critical economic days, because economic policy is more important than any other in binding this nation from sea to sea.

I think everybody who understands the problems of Canadian confederation will agree with that. Under this new department the minister has that opportunity. Solving regional economic disparity is not an easy task because our climatic and geographic conditions aggravate the problem. For years Ottawa stayed clear of its obligation in this regard and we did not advance very much on the original national policy that first brought Canada together. Nothing happened really until the late 1950s.

Much can be done through policy decisions of this government. The minister said during the course of his speech that some areas are affected by deflation and others inflation. I wish he would communicate this information to his colleague, the Minister of Finance (Mr. Benson), because one of the reasons for the misunderstanding concerning the government's approach to regional disparity is the unequal application of the austerity program.

• (9:40 p.m.)

The austerity program has slowed down or cancelled programs that were actually on the drawing board. This applies particularly to some projects under the Prairie Farm Rehabilitation Act, and I would say this situation is more apparent in western Canada than in any other operation that the federal government might carry out. It offsets all the propaganda and the press reports about increasing job opportunities.

As a result of the growing problems in the west, the Premier of Manitoba visited Ottawa not long ago to bring some of these difficulties to the attention of the minister and a few of his colleagues. I would point out that the provinces actually were ahead of Ottawa in coming to grips with special regional, economic incentives which have become necessary in our post-World War II economy. Manitoba introduced a dynamic program in the late 1950s. In close co-operation with Ottawa it introduced power development programs such as the Shellmouth Dam project which has been in progress all this time and will be completed this year, the erection of vocational schools, the Winnipeg floodway, and so forth.

Following his talks in Ottawa, the Premier of Manitoba was interviewed by the Winnipeg Free Press. In a red headline, almost as large as those that used to be created by the deputy minister, it stated, "Schreyer Unsatisfied with Talks", with a subheading "Federal Piecemeal Approach Disappoints Manitoba Premier." This is why the west is hopping mad. The premier said that no matter how hard Manitoba pressed its counterparts in the federal cabinet, it could get no clear picture of the federal funds that would be available to Manitoba through the Department of Economic Regional Expansion.

To use a quotation I picked up just this evening from the Ottawa Journal, Mr. Speaker, I say that the government has been sounding the bugle long enough concerning the success of its programs. Now it must teach the bugler to play "Charge!" and get to the essence of the problems. If no funds are available from Ottawa, no programs will be implemented at the provincial level.

Even though this motion is not coming to a vote, I hope that everything said in the chamber today will not be lost on the minister. Our approach is positive. We have tried to bring to his attention some of the difficulties in various parts of Canada. I hope he has listened to what members have said about the growing disenchantment of the west, and that he will seize his responsibilities as leader of this new department and see that the new national development program, which the Winnipeg Free Press used to talk about, will be implemented in fact as well as in propaganda.

[Translation]

Mr. Ovide Laflamme (Montmorency): Mr. Speaker, I just want to add a few words after hearing some members of the opposition. This motion is to say the least untimely under the circumstances.

I think that the government is the least to blame when it comes to restructuring all its activities in order to stop economic disparities.

Some members of the opposition want, as a matter of fact, a little childishly, to force the government to solve within less than a year problems which have always existed. In my opinion they just want, as the previous speaker said, to give rise to hate among the people instead of appealing to their reason.

If we upbraid the Department of Regional Economic Expansion for inaction and question the implications of the legislation, namely those of Bill C-202, passed on June 27, 1969, that is barely six months ago, this in no way settles the economic problems of this country, nor suppresses the regional economic disparities. Above all, this shows a lack of understanding of the means of action at the government's disposal.

Regional disparities exist and they would tend to increase at the expense of the future well-being of our citizens in the absence of governmental intervention. Then, how should we behave? There will never be efficient governmental action without concurrent initiative on the part of private citizens and private enterprise.

Unless we create basic structures designed to urge the private citizens or private enterprise to act, and unless some economic controls are imposed, only initiative and incentives will generate action.

Bill C-202 which was passed by the House last June deals with industrial incentives required for developing depressed regions. Within a very short period and thanks to their initiative, the people will manage to eliminate these regional disparities.

I represent an economically underprivileged region. Before introducing Bill C-202, the department acted with wisdom and clear-sightedness by selecting the disadvantaged regions; earlier, this was rather like a straitjacket which effectively prevented the government from acting.

What is more desirable yet is coordination. It already exists within the department, but it must also exist within provincial government and municipalities. The latter claim that they do not have the necessary financial means to honorably discharge their duties, but they have however the first say insofar as the development of the territory is concerned. Because of the very large number of municipalities, such action deteriorates and is often lacking in co-ordination and planning.

But at the provincial level, industrial incentives work together with economic wealth, thus creating a force which goes against solutions likely to eliminate regional disparities.

If we are able to take advantage of natural means of action, namely natural resources, the implementation of Bill C-202 and the action of the Minister of Regional Economic Expansion (Mr. Marchand), with the help of personal initiative and co-ordination at all government levels, will bring, I submit, concrete results.

In spite of what certain members may think, we are at the present time faced with the serious problem of unemployment. We hope that the legislations passed by this government will enable us to solve partly the problem of unemployment, as well as the one not less serious, concerning regional disparities.

Instead of blaming the government which is setting itself to a mammoth task, I suggest it would be better to bring forward constructive suggestions.

I shall conclude my remarks by saying that the measures adopted by the Department of Regional Economic Expansion and by the agencies it has set up, are quite efficient, and that the government will attain its objectives.

• (9:50 p.m.)

[English]

Mr. Arnold Peters (Timiskaming): Mr. Speaker, I feel I have been "had" without the benefit of osculation. I am particularly interested in this bill because it affects the part of Canada that I come from, where not too much is being done. The minister would deserve a great deal more credit if he would agree to set up a committee to make reports, instead of leaving that to his parliamentary secretary. One of the problems of his department is that he has always left things to somebody else. He has a background of national attachment in his former occupation. I had a long period of international attachment, and now I have become a strong nationalist and he a strong provincialist.

All afternoon I have heard complaints from the maritimers; but if anything has been done anywhere, that is the place. I would like to hear some maritimers ask the Department of Regional Economic Expansion to put money into the heavy water plant which was to bring so many benefits to the province of Nova Scotia. Surely they cannot afford to tie up $100 million in this project. It was built on federal advice, and it is up to the federal government to salvage it. The people of the Maritimes cannot afford to lose their investment in the project. The minister should look into the whole matter before they lose any more money.

Mr. Speaker, I recommend to the minister the documents of the mid-Canada corridor concept put out by Acres Research. I am well aware of the merits of this document as well as its weaknesses. As a socialist I have no intention of turning over all of the mid-Canada corridor for private enterprise to exploit, but they have indicated the resources that are available, the massive expenditure involved and the rewards of such development. This will never happen under this minister, for the simple reason that the provinces will not allow the federal government to have full control of the area unless the federal government states how much it is willing to spend.

It seems that the Minister of Public Works (Mr. Laing) has considered this kind of project in relation to northern development because he has been interested in the development of a concept where business and government get together and evolve the total concept of a given area. The time has come for us to look forward. Shared-cost programs have failed and the people will not again become excited about ARDA, FRED or any similar projects.

If the federal government has a role, it is to look at the total concept of what can be done and set about doing it in an orderly fashion. As long as the federal government is willing to put up the money, the provinces will not throw any roadblocks in the way. I am sick and tired of all this bickering back and forth about what areas are to be designated. The federal government has to make the decision. The provinces are willing to let them put up the money, but they want the say in how the projects are run.

This program is not bringing new industry into my area, where resources are plentiful. We have put out money for a sawmill to be built or expanded, for a plywood factory or some other factory that was proposed for the area. I have no quarrel with the priority given to this program by the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau), but let us look at it on a national basis. I have listened with great patience all afternoon to complaints about projects in individual areas. Surely, in the national Parliament we are interested in a national concept. We know that the area of Canada which is not developed is the mid-Canada corridor, and we know that industry from the Golden Horseshoe will not go into that area unless it is provided with great incentives. Such incentives need not necessarily be monetary; they may have relation to the total concept of what can be done in the area. It is here that the government should be giving leadership to industry.

I hope that before the committee meets the minister will state what is to be done about the one project that has cost the Maritimes more money than any other and which will go down the drain unless the federal government gives assistance. I hope he suggests that certain things be done in conjunction with Atomic Energy so that at least that problem will be solved to the satisfaction of all Canadians.

The concept of regional development, Mr. Speaker, is national, not provincial and not parochial. I suggest we get on with the national concept of regional development.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. It being ten o'clock, it is my duty to inform the House that by virtue of section 11 of Standing Order 58, these proceedings are deemed to be terminated. A motion to adjourn the House is under consideration. The motion is that this House do now adjourn.

• (10:00 p.m.)

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

A motion to adjourn the House under Standing Order 40 deemed to have been moved.

TRANSPORT—COAL—APPLICATION BY GREAT NORTHERN AND KOOTENAY ELK RAILWAYS

Mr. Randolph Harding (Kootenay West): Mr. Speaker, on December 3 I directed the following question to the Minister of Transport (Mr. Jamieson), as recorded at page 1554 of Hansard:

> Has the Canadian Transport Commission received an application from the Great Northern Railway Company and the Kootenay Elk Railway Company for permission to build lines into the United States and back into Canada at the Pacific coast for the purpose of carrying coal to the Pacific coast via the United States?

This question is of vital importance to the economy of British Columbia and to Canada in general. I welcome the opportunity to raise it at this time so that further information and facts on the situation can be placed on the record. Perhaps the minister will give the House tonight some information on both these applications and the hearings which I understand are now under way.

Since raising my question in the House there have been several articles in the various news media from information supplied by Crows Nest Industries Limited, one of the applicants interested in building a rail link to the United States and shipping Canadian coal via United States railway lines. This company is trying to tell the Canadian public that CPR lacks the carrying capacity to meet the demands of the Japanese steel industry for Canadian coal. It indicates that the freight rates asked by CPR are higher than the company can afford to pay.

Last year a similar controversy took place when the Kaiser Coal Company advocated the shipping of Canadian coal via the Great Northern Railway to Roberts Bank. At that time I thought this matter had been settled. The CPR apparently negotiated an acceptable freight rate of $3.50 per long ton of coal for a 15-year period. I understand that since that time it has added another contract for two million tons annually at the same rate.

However, the charge that CPR lines cannot handle the coal which will be mined in East Kootenay is a disturbing one and, in my opinion, is not based on any factual evidence which Crows Nest Industries Limited can produce. I am opposed to the shipment of Canadian resources over United States railway lines if we can possibly ship the material via an all-Canadian route. Any time we use our transportation systems in Canada, we are providing more jobs for Canadians and we are also adding, as in the case of this huge coal contract, many millions of dollars annually to the Canadian economy.

There are other advantages to shipping by an all-Canadian route which might not be readily discernible to the general Canadian public. One advantage is the employment which the supplying of the equipment gives to Canadians in many parts of our country. For example, the coal cars are built in the Hawker-Siddeley plant in Nova Scotia; steel for these cars comes from Hamilton; the locomotives are built in Montreal; the steel rails come from Algoma Steel at Sault Ste. Marie; the wooden ties for the track come from various parts of Canada; workmen on trains come from our own railway unions. Their money, plus the freight rates, accrues to individuals and companies within Canada. It is worth millions of dollars to our economy.

Here is an estimate of the Canadian labour income which results from coal traffic moved on Canadian lines. From the Kootenay area of B.C. to the West Coast, for each one million long tons of coal moved annually there is a return of about $1.2 million annually. This means an annual outlay of labour income from the present five million tons of coal being moved of about $6 million. This labour income represents wages, salaries and related railway employee benefits. There is little enough return to the Canadian economy through the development of this resource. We cannot afford to lose the jobs and the purchasing power involved by shipping coal by way of the United States.

At present the CPR has two contracts for hauling coal. One contract is for 15 years at three million tons per year. The second contract is for three years at two million tons per year. During the period in which it will be hauling five million tons per year they plan to use two trains per day with 88 cars in each. On April 1, 1972, the Fording Coal Company plans to ship another three million tons per year in addition to the figures I have given. This will require another 105-car train.

I am surprised that Crow's Nest Industries Limited has applied to build a connecting link with the Great Northern Railway in the United States. To my knowledge, this company does not yet have a buyer for any of its coal. This fact alone should void its present application. In my opinion, its charge that CPR does not have the carrying capacity to handle all the coal in the Fernie area is also unfounded. From information I have been able to obtain it would appear that CPR has ordered 578 cars, 37 diesel locomotives and 5 robot cars which will be sufficient to handle the contracts they now hold. Other equipment can be added as required. I understand the main CPR line from Calgary to Vancouver averages 7 trains per day in each direction. Sometimes there is a peak of ten trains per day, if there is a rush on wheat, potash and coal at the same time.

In 1968 a centralized traffic control system on this line was completed. It can now handle a minimum of one train an hour in each direction. Taking the present peak of 10 trains per day, it means that another 14 trains, minimum, per day could travel this route. I am informed that the present 3 million tons yearly contract requires only one train per day which consists of 105 cars. This is based on 345 days per year. A 20-day period in the year should cover any line interruptions or breakdown at the mine or shipping port. Trains can be made longer if needed and can go to a maximum of 115 cars. These longer trains would still fit the siding capacities and the facilities at both ends, because the loading and unloading has been designed to handle 150 cars if needed, together with the motor power. This additional available capacity of 10 cars per train would add a further safety factor as far as delays and interruptions are concerned.

In addition, we have an alternate route over the Kettle Valley line which serves my own constituency. There are also several interchanges where Canadian Pacific Railway trains can transfer to Canadian National Railways' tracks in the event of trouble. There is even an interchange near Grand Forks, British Columbia, where trains could transfer to the Great Northern if a real and lengthy emergency occurred.

The picture is clear to me, Mr. Speaker. I feel that CPR has the equipment or can obtain it. It has the line capacity. It has Canadian workmen using mostly Canadian-produced equipment. If CPR is anywhere near competitive in freight rates, and apparently it is, there should be no hesitation in the Canadian government insisting that these Canadian resources should be hauled to Canadian ports via an all-Canadian route.

Mr. Gerard Loiselle (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I wish to congratulate the hon. member for Kootenay West (Mr. Harding) on his plea to have coal transported through his province by Canadian railway companies rather than United States companies. Surely the hon. member wishes me to reply to the question he asked on December 3. I will attempt to inform him what has occurred since that time.

The Canadian Transport Commission advises as follows with respect to the status of applications received in the matter of the Kootenay & Elk Railway Company. The Railway Transport Committee of the commission received on November 28, 1969, the following applications:

1. Application under section 255 and other applicable sections of the Railway Act to join the proposed line of the Kootenay & Elk Company with the line of Great Northern Railway Company at or near the border between British Columbia and the state of Montana, near Rooseville West.

2. An application under section 255 of the Railway Act to cross the railway of the Canadian Pacific Railway Company near Hosmer in British Columbia, with the proposed line of Kootenay & Elk Railway.

3. An application under the Crowsnest Pass Agreement, chapter 5 of the Statutes of Canada, 1896-97, for running rights over the line of the Canadian Pacific Railway Company between Natal and Elko in the province of British Columbia.

Applications two and three are said to be alternative applications and the applicant states that if its application for running rights under the Crowsnest Pass Agreement is granted, the application to cross the Canadian Pacific Railway Company's line north of Hosmer will be withdrawn. The three applications were served on the Minister of Commercial Transport for the province of British Columbia, the Canadian Pacific Railway Company, the Attorney General of Canada and the Attorney General for the province of British Columbia.

Since November 28, two interventions have been received, one from the regional district of Kootenay Boundary and the other from the corporation of the city of Grand Forks, both of which have been circulated to the parties of record. It should also be pointed out that solicitors for Kootenay & Elk Railway Company have since asked for an early hearing on the question of whether the Canadian Transport Commission has the power to make the order sought.

I am informed that the Canadian Pacific Railway Company was given notice to file an answer to the applications within 30 days. The CPR applied for and were granted an extension of the time to answer. Before the expiration of this time, CPR filed with the Canadian Transport Commission a motion for an order seeking particulars on the applications, and for a stay in the proceedings until they had an opportunity to study such information. This is now being considered by the commission.

HEALTH AND WELFARE—REPRESENTATIONS BY DIABETIC ASSOCIATION RESPECTING CYCLAMATE BAN—AVAILABILITY OF SUBSTITUTE

Mr. Don Mazankowski (Vegreville): Mr. Speaker, my purpose in bringing forth this matter this evening was prompted by the questions I posed to the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Munro) a few days ago concerning the recently announced ban on cyclamates and the resultant hardships created as a result in the dietary planning of those afflicted with diabetes.

• (10:10 p.m.)

The questions, as recorded in Hansard at page 2969, were as follows:

In view of the recent ban on cyclamates and subsequent representations made to the minister by the Canadian Diabetic Association indicating that as a result severe hardship has been imposed upon those inflicted with diabetes, is any consideration being given to making available a substitute in order that diabetics may acquire some relief?

To which the minister answered: "Yes, Mr. Speaker." The exchange continued:

In the meantime, is the minister giving any consideration to permitting the use of controlled amounts of cyclamates by those afflicted with diabetes?

Mr. Munro: Depending on what is meant by controlled, yes, Mr. Speaker.

I had hoped to extract more detail than that, Mr. Speaker; frankly, I found the minister's answer somewhat vague. I trust that tonight the House and the country will be given an opportunity to learn exactly what steps are being taken to overcome the confusion which presently faces doctors and patients who are finding difficulty controlling their diets following the ban.

I realize that the minister is not able to be present this evening, but I am sure his parliamentary secretary, the hon. member for Parkdale (Mr. Haidasz), himself a medical practitioner, can provide us with some of the details.

According to a newsletter issued on October 21 by the department, dietetic canned fruit containing cyclamates is to be banned on September 1, 1970. I am told that wholesalers in many areas have informed retailers, distributors and hospitals that they will no longer be able to supply these canned fruits after February 1. I am advised that this raises a difficult problem for diabetics in formulating a proper diet, particularly in areas where fresh fruits are not always readily available.

I am not a medical man, so, with your permission, Mr. Speaker, I would like to quote from a letter which I received from a medical doctor who has some misgivings about the way in which the question of cyclamates is at present being handled. He writes:

I have found that statements made concerning cyclamates have been very confusing to the many diabetic patients that I have to see. The one thing which I think might help would be the issuing of some statement as to the amount of cyclamates which could safely be taken each day. I am also wondering if it would be possible to have the amount of cyclamates present in the various diabetic foods stated clearly on the food labels. I think if this information were available it might not be necessary to take these foods off the market; I believe that such action is likely to impose real hardship on the many diabetics who attempt to keep good control of their disease.

The letter goes on to say:

I also wonder whether the labels on the diet foods for diabetics could be printed so they would show the food exchange value. All diabetics understand how to use these food exchanges which are listed in the meal planning booklet put out by the Canadian Diabetic Association.

Again referring to the newsletter of October 21, issued by the Minister of National Health and Welfare, the following is stated:

—we have no scientific evidence at this point to indicate that cyclamates have caused cancer or any other harmful effects in humans.

The newsletter also states that while there was evidence of cancer in rats, it was prevalent after extremely high dosage, 50 times higher than that accepted as that being safe for adults as prescribed by the World Health Organization. The newsletter goes on to say on behalf of the minister:

Let me repeat and emphasize the fact that there is no evidence that cyclamates have caused cancer or any other disease in humans.

The newsletter states further:

Four days ago, however, new evidence appeared that cyclamates produced tumours when fed to rats at very high levels for long periods of time.

Further on it says that no tumours developed in rats given cyclamates at doses equivalent on a body-weight basis to that of 200 bottles of soft drinks per day throughout the lifetime of a 150-pound man. The newsletter continues:

It is obvious, therefore, that the danger to humans from cyclamates is undoubtedly very small.

I am sure most Canadians have no objection to the banning of cyclamates if sufficient evidence can be produced that the product is potentially capable of producing harmful side-effects. However, if harmful effects have not occurred until exorbitant amounts are consumed and this seems to be backed by many members of the medical profession they would be acceptable.

Perhaps if a standard could be issued dealing with safe amounts of cyclamates or the tolerant factor, indicating the amount which could be consumed without causing harmful effects, this would go a long way in assisting those who must practice dietary control. It is also my understanding that the United States has modified the ban on cyclamates and permits the sale of foods containing cyclamates, but it will maintain its ban in respect of beverages. I think this fact does have significance, and I hope the minister will undertake to take steps so that diabetics in Canada may once again look forward to leading normal lives.

Mr. Stanley Haidasz (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, on October 21, 1969, the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Munro) made a statement on the restricted use of cyclamates in Canada after having decided it was a course of action that afforded the greatest protection to the health of the Canadian public.

The minister is also well aware of the problems of diabetics in Canada. Officers of the Food and Drugs Directorate have had discussions with the Dietetic Counselling Commission of the Canadian Diabetic Association on the subject of cyclamates. They have also discussed the matter in some detail with representatives of the various industry groups concerned.

As a result of these latter discussions we know that it is possible to produce dietetic beverages, spreads and foods, without the use of cyclamates. This is accomplished by modifying the formulas and the use of permitted flavours along with a sweetening agent known as saccharin. The use of these new foods should permit diabetics to have a suitable variety of diet without running the risk of using cyclamates.

I would also remind the hon. member that my minister has never at any time questioned the need of diabetics for sweetening preparations for home use. These products will continue to be available under special labelling, the details of which have not yet been fully determined. It is anticipated, however, that their labels would carry a warning to the effect that they should be used only on the advice of a physician. With these measures being taken, my minister believes that Canadian diabetics should have no cause for concern over the ban of cyclamates in special dietary foods.

Motion agreed to and the House adjourned at 10.20 p.m.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Wednesday, February 4, 1970

The House met at 2 p.m.

ROUTINE PROCEEDINGS

OIL

ANNOUNCEMENT OF FURTHER GOVERNMENT INVESTMENT IN PANARCTIC OILS LIMITED

Hon. Jean Chrétien (Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): Mr. Speaker, I wish to announce today another major step in the development of Canada's north.

Members of the House will recall the announcement made on December 12, 1967, of the government's decision to enter into a unique partnership with 20 oil and mining companies to carry out a joint oil exploration and drilling program in Canada's Arctic islands through the creation of a new Canadian company, Panarctic Oils Ltd.

To finance the first stage of Panarctic's exploration program, costing $20 million, the federal government put up $9 million for a 45 per cent equity, and private capital $11 million for a 55 per cent equity.

Both government and industry recognized, at the time Panarctic was formed, that the program contemplated would require additional funds in the future. Each participant was given the right to extend his equity interest pro rata when the time came to increase the initial investment to $30 million or more.

Last fall Panarctic gave notice of its need to raise an additional $10 million and will give notice this spring of a need to raise a further $20 million to finance the next phase of its exploration activities in the Arctic islands.

The government recently reviewed the extent of its future involvement in Panarctic and whether it should retain its whole 45 per cent equity interest by investing in the next stage of the company's enlarged exploration and drilling program. Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to announce that the federal government will invest an additional $13.5 million in Panarctic Oils Ltd.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Chrétien: The government will be issued further preference and common shares in respect of its subscription, and this will maintain for the people of Canada its 45 per cent equity interest in Panarctic. This will bring the federal government's total investment in this daring and imaginative venture to $22.5 million.

Should Panarctic's program be further extended and additional capital be required above the present $50 million, the government retains the option of extending its interest pro rata. In addition, the agreement with Panarctic empowers the government to control the transfer of shares and, therefore, the degree of Canadian ownership and control in the company.

Maintenance of the government's 45 per cent equity in Panarctic will ensure for the people of Canada a direct interest in what promises to become Canada's largest oil company and a highly profitable business venture. And it will continue to provide for the original government objectives, namely, stimulation of oil and gas exploration in Canada's Arctic islands, maintenance of Canadian ownership and the control of the oil and gas rights over a very large sector of this potentially very rich oil basin, creation of employment opportunities for northern residents as well as other Canadians, and the development of Canadian technology suitable to northern terrain and climate.

• (2:10 p.m.)

Since Panarctic was formed the international oil industry has focused its eyes on the Arctic following the discovery of oil at Prudhoe Bay, Alaska, 200 miles west of the Yukon border. The recent oil discovery at Atkinson Point, 40 miles northeast of Tuktoyaktuk in the Northwest Territories, has further accelerated interest in the Canadian north.

Exploration activity has increased remarkably in Canada's north since the start of Panarctic's operations. In early 1968, less than 190 million acres were held under oil and gas exploratory permit north of the 60th parallel. Today, more than 440 million acres are held under exploratory permit in this region. Expenditures on oil exploration in Canada's north were less than $25 million in 1967, rose to $45 million in 1969 and are expected to increase rapidly to an annual expenditure of $75 million by 1975.

The Arctic Islands, Mr. Speaker, are believed by many to be the most attractive oil basin in the world remaining to be explored. However, until major oil discoveries are made, Panarctic remains a high risk venture. The government has accepted this risk which clearly demonstrates its faith and commitment to northern development, as well as its determination to ensure active Canadian participation in the development of this last vast resource in Canada's last frontier—the Arctic Islands. The government's investment which I have the pleasure in announcing today is truly an investment in the bright and rich future of Canada's north.

Hon. Robert L. Stanfield (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I should like to say a few words in response to the statement of the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development. When the government first announced its intention to participate in this venture in 1967 the Hon. Alvin Hamilton, speaking on behalf of this party, endorsed it as a useful way in which the government of Canada could assist in the development of the north. We supported the proposal at that time, and I see no reason why we should take any different position now. It is a vehicle for northern development through which the Canadian people can participate to some extent in the profitable aspects of any development that takes place.

I think the minister might have been a little more cautious in referring to this enterprise as prospectively Canada's biggest oil company. This sounds a little like puffing and I think we should see our chickens before we start to count them. However, Mr. Speaker, I hope the minister's optimism is justified and I certainly wish the minister well. I am glad that the poor tired Minister of Finance is able to find this money, no doubt with great sacrifice to himself, in order to provide this additional support to the venture.

May I just say, Mr. Speaker, that I think the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development might interest himself a little in the pollution or preferably the antipollution practices followed by this company, because the Committee on Indian Affairs and Northern Development drew to the attention of the House one or two rather unfortunate aspects of its work in the far north. I hope there will not be any more of this sort of thing but on the contrary that this company, of which the government of Canada is a major shareholder, will set an example to all other companies operating in our northern environment.

In addition to its participation in this venture, I hope the government of Canada will recognize fully its responsibility in improving transportation in the north. One of the difficulties in northern development is the high cost of such development, and one of the reasons for the high cost, although not the sole one, is the high cost of transportation which does not appear to be highly organized in any respect. I take this occasion to remind the minister and the government as a whole of their obligation to improve transportation in the north. We are not going to see the sort of development we want to see in the north until there is adequate transportation there. There is no indication as yet that this government has fully recognized its responsibilities in this regard.

Mr. David Lewis (York South): Mr. Speaker, every Canadian is necessarily and unavoidably interested in the kind of development which is reported in our Arctic area. I want, on behalf of my party, to put on record some of our fears about the way this is being done and some basic objections to the way it is being done. We do not object to Panarctic being a consortium involving a large number of private corporations, but we do not see any reason at all why the government of Canada, and through it the people of Canada, should not have majority control in Panarctic instead of having only 45 per cent control and 2 out of 12 directors on the board. I cannot understand the logic of that and the result has already begun to show, as I will indicate in a moment.

I am not at all certain that the exploration for oil in the Arctic is the best way to develop the north, that oil reserves are the greatest need for the people of Canada or, indeed, the people of the world in view of other oil reserves that are now available. I am not certain that the $20 million-odd spent by the government could not have been spent in some other way to assist the people living in the north. But if we are to spend this money, then surely we ought to be in total control of the operation, instead of only partial control.

The minister reminds us that the government has authority to authorize or to refuse to authorize the transfer of shares between various companies. That is true, Mr. Speaker. Despite that, as the minister well knows and as is shown in a background paper which I have read, Canadian ownership of the enterprise is now down to 70 per cent, whereas at the beginning it was somewhere around 90 per cent in Panarctic. Already the slide away from Canadian ownership to foreign ownership has begun. Furthermore, when you look at the background paper you will find that Panarctic is engaging in a method of farming out some of its operations in parts of its lands. A sentence in the background paper says, "In this respect Panarctic recently farmed out 945,000 acres of its various farm-outs jointly to Triad Oil Co., Ltd., and B.P. Oil Ltd.". I am sure the minister knows that Triad Oil Company Limited is a subsidiary of B.P. Oil Company Limited. Clearly, these lands are being farmed out to one corporation. The background paper then goes on to say, "These companies will jointly complete exploratory projects estimated to cost about $8 million and earn 50 per cent of Panarctic's interest in these lands."

There is a definite promise that Canadian ownership will be further eroded by this farming-out process that Panarctic conducts. It is that to which we, Mr. Speaker, of the New Democratic Party object. We see no reason why this natural resource should be handed over to foreign controlled companies, to a consortium of private corporations that are inter-related, that have members on each other's boards of directors, that own each other's shares and that have one single objective, to derive as much corporate profit and power as is possible. We see no reason why the Canadian government should not have invested in this corporation at least enough to give it 51 per cent control, in order that all the corporation's operations may be carried on in the public interest.

• (2:20 p.m.)

Let me make another point, Mr. Speaker. I will not be long because I know what the general rule is with regard to these statements. If I recall correctly, Mr. Speaker, the minister made the statement that the government is concerned with the creation of employment opportunities for the people in the north. It is significant and important to note that despite the concern of the government, only two or three native people are now being employed in the whole of the Panarctic operation. This is according to information which I have received. If an operation is going to be carried on in the north, particularly one that is not labour-incentive but capital-incentive, with only two or three native people employed, the concern of the government for the employment of northerners does not impress me very much.

Finally, I wish to emphasize the point made by the Leader of the Opposition on the problem of pollution. I summarize by saying that every time our country has had an opportunity to exploit and explore the great and rich natural resources of this country, we have leaped to give them away to the private corporations in this country and we have just as readily leaped to give them away to private corporations owned elsewhere. This, in our opinion, is a sell-out of the interests of the Canadian people and we wish to protest against it.

[Translation]

Mr. René Matte (Champlain): Mr. Speaker, we can only rejoice at the progress and growth which this investment by the Canadian government is likely to spur. Still, we wonder about the wisdom of a decision to invest an additional $13.5 million in an undertaking which the minister describes as very risky.

The government ventured to invest $22.5 million in Panarctic Oils Limited, a decision which did not fail to surprise the people in certain areas of Quebec where mining and even oil resources are plentiful, because they realize that the paralysis which delays the development of these resources happens to result from a shortage of funds.

In other words, Mr. Speaker, the question is: Should we spend millions of dollars to help a company whose economic viability is questionable, at a time when we are in the midst of an austerity program, as the Prime Minister never fails to remind us?

Let there be no mistake about it. If his department has millions to put in risk ventures, the minister should inform us accordingly, and we will be able to suggest to him some very good investments.

Mr. Speaker, we would like to know more about the terms and conditions of that agreement so that the population may assess its value.

[English]

LABOUR RELATIONS

TABLING OF SMITH REPORT ON LABOUR UNREST AT QUEBEC PORTS

Hon. Bryce Mackasey (Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, it is my intention to table in a few moments, in English and in French, what is known as the Smith report, a report of an inquiry into the abnormal causes of labour unrest at the ports of Montreal, Trois Rivieres and Quebec.

I wish to take this opportunity to make a brief statement and point out the terms of reference of this commission which, briefly stated, are as follows: to investigate conditions, conduct and matters not part of normal trade union activities, giving rise to labour unrest. These included such subject matters as pilferage, theft, and corruption. The terms of reference also included employer and business practices not part of or dealt with in collective bargaining but giving rise to labour unrest. These included methods of dealing with cargo at the ports, the methods of exercising discipline and the methods of maintaining a standard of good conduct. The full terms of reference may be found in the report which I am about to table.

The commission commenced its work in the autumn of 1968, after Mr. Justice Smith retired from the Court of Queen's Bench of Quebec. The commission presented to me, as Minister of Labour, its report in October of 1969 and since then the report has been translated, duplicated for distribution and is now being tabled.

On behalf of the government, I would like to thank the commissioner for the efforts he has made to deal with the problems he encountered during this lengthy and difficult inquiry. The inquiry grew out of the settlement of the stoppage of work in 1966 which tied up the St. Lawrence River ports for 38 days. It is encouraging to note that since the settlement of 1966, and more particularly since the recent three year contract signed in April of last year, there has been a marked improvement in labour relations in the port of Montreal. This year there has been no time lost through illegal work stoppage, and the collective agreement is being respected to a much greater degree than in previous years due, in no small part, to the work of Judge Alan Gold of Montreal, who acts as mediator and arbitrator of day-to-day problems in the port.

That there has been shown a greater responsibility on the part of the various union locals involved, as well as a serious effort on the part of management this year to deal with the unions through their newly formed Maritime Employers Association, should also be noted. Last week, the Canadian Importers Association indicated that the number of cases of pilferage reported had been reduced from 400 to 7, indicating that certain measures introduced in recent years by the National Harbours Board are proving effective.

[Mr. Mackasey.]

I am also pleased to note that many of the recommendations of the report have already been implemented. Nevertheless, it would be unfair of me to leave the impression that labour-management regulations at the ports of Montreal, Trois Rivières and Quebec do not leave much to be desired. The survival of these three important ports depends to a great degree on their ability to compete with similar ports in the United States, and a greater joint effort will have to be made in the future if these ports are to achieve their full potential.

A reading of the report will disclose that the Commissioner has been very critical of labour, management and port administration. The report is a very sobering document to which careful attention will have to be paid. While the government will take no action on any of the recommendations until all parties concerned have had an opportunity to give consideration to them and have made known their views with regard to them, it is my intention to implement as soon as possible those recommendations which the government thinks will improve industrial relations at the three ports, regardless of what temporary disruptive effects this may have on certain groups of employers or unions.

[Translation]

Mr. Georges Valade (Sainte-Marie): Mr. Speaker, we are pleased to see that the minister has finally agreed to table in the House the Smith report which has been so long awaited not only by members of the House but also by all Canadians. I regret, however, that this report, which was submitted to the minister on October 2, should reach us three months later.

It should, I believe, be pointed out how difficult it is for opposition members, to submit their party's point of view about motions and reports the ministers table here, particularly when they are as bulky as the document that has just been tabled.

I therefore invite the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) and the government house leader to give consideration to the feasibility of giving at least 24 hours' notice to opposition members before tabling reports or papers in the House. Members would then be able to go through the reports so as to criticize them in a positive and objective way.

This being said, I think that the government will want to examine the said report, in order to improve the administration of the nation's business. I can comment on some recommendations only in a very general way, but I feel that the Smith report does not show, at least at first sight, anomalies or facts which were not already known by those who closely followed the events which occurred in the above-mentioned ports.

I hope that the Smith report will not be a source of conflict or disagreement between the employees of the ports concerned, the unions, the owners and the users of those three main ports.

In addition, according to public opinion, the report would tend to emphasize among the general difficulties three specific conditions existing especially in the ports of Montreal, Quebec City and Trois Rivières, while the government would have been wiser, in my opinion, to make comparative study of all Canadian ports and to relate them to port operations throughout the world, in the United States as well as in Europe. This would enable us to make a true evaluation of the port operations that are mentioned in the Smith report and of those occurring elsewhere. My reason for saying this is that some recommendations contained in the report are such that they question the honesty and efficiency of some workers, at those ports.

Since I represent a riding directly affected by those operations, I am in a position to say that most workers are conscientious and honest, although as it happens in all fields, there may be some questionable things going on.

I hope that the report will not be such as to aggravate or revive the difficulties that have already endangered relations between management and labour.

As I have stated, we cannot make a thorough examination of each of the recommendations on such short notice. For that reason, I take the liberty of pointing out that the report does not appear to give any thought to having, within a committee, a board of directors, or a local or national harbours board, representatives of the riverside municipalities that are directly affected by port operations.

I suggest that this is a glaring omission which the department should remedy.

I hope that the minister of Labour (Mr. Mackasey) and the Minister of Transport (Mr. Jamieson) will undertake to take action in order to assure the Canadian people that port operations will not be troubled again by local difficulties and that following their immediate and efficient action, ports will enjoy an economic activity beneficial to Canada as a whole.

• (2:30 p.m.)

[English]

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, when the Minister of Labour announces that a report he is tabling is a sobering document that is fair warning not to enter into an elaborate comment upon it until one has had an opportunity to study it. In the few minutes I have had to look at the report, I have come to agree with the position taken by the minister that it makes some far-reaching proposals which affect the three parties involved, namely labour, management and the port administration. I notice the minister has given the assurance—and I welcome it—that before any recommendations are implemented an opportunity will be given to these three parties to study the report and make their comments and their recommendations thereon. But I am glad to note the minister has recognized there has been an improvement in matters at the three ports as a result of the excellent work of Judge Alan Gold, as well as the fact that the union has taken a great deal of responsibility with respect to the things that take place at the ports, and the efforts of management in its dealings with labour.

We are glad to have the report tabled. As the minister says, it is a document which requires study. We welcome in particular the minister's statement that the three parties concerned will be able to make their recommendations to him before action is taken.

[Translation]

Mr. Réal Caouette (Témiscamingue): Mr. Speaker, as mentioned by the Minister of Labour (Mr. Mackasey), the ports of Montreal, Trois Rivières and Quebec were strikebound for 58 days in 1966. At that time, the government decided to institute a commission to study the problems that were leading to labour unrest in those ports as well as those which had nothing to do with regular union activities but which had caused discontent among workers. In fact, the latter had been involved in looting, theft and corruption.

It is undeniable that thieves operated in the ports of Montreal, Quebec and Trois Rivières as is the case about everywhere. However, as the hon. member for Sainte-

Marie (Mr. Valade) was saying, the great majority of the employees in these ports are honest family men who work with courage and objectiveness.

This commission was therefore set up and went to work in 1968. In February 1970 the report is laid before us.

The minister stated a while ago and I quote:

> It would be unfair of me to leave the impression that labour-management regulations at the ports of Montreal, Trois Rivières and Quebec do not leave much to be desired. The survival of these three important ports depends to a great degree on their ability to compete with similar ports in the United States.

It is not a question of competing with Vancouver and San Francisco but with U.S. ports on the Pacific coast. The minister added and I quote:

> A greater joint effort will have to be made in the future if these ports are to achieve their full potential.

It is evident that if it costs two or three times as much to use the ports of Montreal, Trois Rivières and Quebec than that of Halifax or those on the U.S. coast, we will lose a lot. That is why, I think, the minister honestly appealed to employers and employees, particularly the unions, to behave objectively, to open their eyes and their ears, to approach the problem in a constructive way, in order to help the ports of Montreal, Trois Rivières and Quebec, to win them patrons and to develop their facilities to the maximum.

In my opinion, the Smith report will help the parties concerned to better understand their responsibilities. Even if they assert their rights, they should not forget that they also have duties to discharge.

We have rights in every field. However, we also have duties that urgently need to be fulfilled. In this respect, trade unions, labour, management and the department are all considering together what has to be done to improve the situation, to prevent costly strikes in the future and to stabilize the economy in this particular field, which will enable workers and their families to foresee better days.

[English]

AIRPORTS

TORONTO—REPORT ON PROGRESS IN PLANNING FOR EXPANDED FACILITIES

Hon. Donald C. Jamieson (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, for some time I have been anxious to advise the House of the progress being made in connection with the Department of Transport's over-all planning for expanded airport facilities to serve Toronto and the surrounding regions. From the outset we have been anxious to consult to the maximum extent possible with all of the parties who have a legitimate interest in this important project. I am referring to the province of Ontario, the municipalities in the area in question, and certain business and industrial interests.

• (2:40 p.m.)

When the decision was made late in 1968 to seek alternative solutions to the original plan which was to expand the existing Malton airport a committee was established jointly with the government of Ontario, and this committee has been working most co-operatively ever since. From time to time we have sought means through which the other interested groups to whom I have referred could be made aware of the progress being made.

Hon. members will appreciate that this is not an easy task. At the outset, close to 60 different locations were involved as possible sites for the proposed airport. These regions are represented by more than 90 different municipalities. It can be seen, therefore, that worth-while consultation with such a very large group was not practical. This is especially true in view of the fact that the great majority of the locations were not in fact particularly desirable from a site standpoint and were therefore eliminated when the first of the long list of criteria was applied to them. As a result of this elimination process, it has now been determined that all but four or five of the sites considered originally are not usable. I want to emphasize that this does not mean that any or all of the sites still being considered will prove to be adequate. Much more investigation must be done on each of them before a final selection can be made.

Some indication of the complexity of the process of investigation can be obtained from the fact that such questions must be considered as passenger origin and destination studies, aviation technology, safety, ground transportation systems, noise capability, pollution, ecology, topography, economics and essential services such as water, sewage, power, etc. It is also essential that we take into account Ontario's long-range regional development plans and the effects of the proposed airport development on these. It can be seen, therefore, that a great deal of further study is necessary on the various potential sites still being examined.

Hon. members will appreciate that because of the risk of land speculation it is extremely important that there be no premature disclosure of the specific areas now under consideration. I appreciate that this necessity for secrecy is in conflict to some extent with our already expressed desire to consult as fully as possible with those other parties that have a very great and legitimate interest in this project. I feel, nevertheless, that there cannot be additional disclosure at this time. This view, I may say, is shared by the government of Ontario.

In the case of the so-called waterfront site the same considerations are not present, and therefore it has been possible for us to hold lengthy and detailed discussions with the city of Toronto, Metropolitan Toronto and the Toronto Harbour Commission. I can tell the House also for the reasons I have mentioned that while there will undoubtedly be some type of airport development along the waterfront at some time in the future it is now our judgment that this site is not appropriate for a full scale international airport. Rather, the downtown location is more likely to be developed as a facility limited to the accommodation of intercity and short-distance air traffic. I may say, too, that in so far as our planning for the waterfront location is concerned the various civic authorities to whom I have referred have representation on our technical subcommittees.

I anticipate that by fall of this year the necessary further investigations will have been completed, thus permitting the formulation of an airport system master plan for the Toronto and surrounding regions. At the earliest possible moment between now and then and as soon as it appears appropriate to do so, I am sure that the government of Ontario will agree with us to provide the fullest possible information to all interested parties. We are now exploring with the province the best approach to take in order to have a mutually advantageous exchange of information and views with the political, industrial and business communities.

If the House so wishes, Mr. Speaker, and presumably an opportunity will present itself when the main estimates are discussed, I will be pleased to appear before the Standing Committee on Transportation and Communications to elaborate on the contents of this statement.

Mr. Lincoln M. Alexander (Hamilton West): Mr. Speaker, this matter was just brought to my attention but that is not really too important in any event because what was stated, of course, was a disclosure of the thoughts that all of us have in mind in regard to international airports. I believe the minister indicated in his closing words that he would be prepared to go into further detail in respect of the generalities and the nothingness in his statement.

One of the most important points in the minister's statement is the fact that there has been consultation. This is extremely important for the simple reason that we are now involved in considering amendments to our constitution. We have set up a joint committee on the constitution. It is extremely important that this continual dialogue or consultation, as the case may be, be regarded as of prime importance and always be a factor in the making of decisions. In other words, what I think is extremely important here is that the government has not acted arbitrarily.

I note there are four or five sites now being considered. I can appreciate the embarrassing position of the minister as a result of not being able to disclose these sites. The minister is now seeking information, through the province, from political and business interests as to the best way to approach this subject. It is most important, however, to obtain somehow a consensus of the views of the residents because it is they who may experience a great deal of frustration in terms of noise, land values and traffic.

I am pleased also that the minister is still interested in the waterfront, though not in terms of an international airport. But there should be a continuing dialogue with Toronto, Metropolitan Toronto, and also Hamilton harbour officials. This is the age of supersonic and jumbo jets. The minister should proceed with all due haste so Canada can play its role in this most important means of transportation, and so that he can make a further statement and, if at all possible, put his entire plans before the House by the fall.

Mr. Andrew Brewin (Greenwood): Mr. Speaker, as one of the representatives of the metropolitan area of Toronto I welcome the core of the minister's announcement. The core, as I found it, was that airport development along the waterfront in the east end of Toronto will not be for a large-scale international facility. This is no longer contemplated. The site should have been a non-starter from the word go. It is perfectly obvious to anyone who knows the area that such a venture should have been rejected as unthinkable from the beginning, and probably would have been if the local people had been consulted. The noise pollution and the immense traffic problems that would have been created seriously would have depreciated the value of an attractive residential area which has been the home of many thousands of Canadians for more than 50 years.

The minister's statement refers to the civic authorities being represented on technical committees dealing with the proposed airport. The large urban areas and municipalities have responsibility for populations larger than some provinces. They must be made effective planning partners at all stages of dealing with developments of this sort. If there are constitutional difficulties that must be overcome it may be impossible or impractical, as the minister's statement indicates, to deal with all municipalities concerned. But there is no reason why, in the consultation between the federal and provincially elected and politically responsible officials, members and representatives of the major municipalities affected should not be consulted.

I suggest to the minister that technical consultation is not enough. What is involved goes far beyond the question of airports; it concerns all the great problems of urban development facing us today.

The minister spoke of the danger of land speculation. I hope he will consult his colleague the Minister of Justice, who I believe will be able to inform him that under the Expropriation Act any effort to speculate in respect of expropriated land will probably be fruitless. If he will speak to the Minister of Finance and get an adequate capital gains tax we will not have to worry about such speculation at all.

I welcome the core of the announcement which will be received with relief by many of my constituents and other people in the city of Toronto. I hope that the process of consultation will continue and improve as time goes on.

[Translation]

Mr. Réal Caouette (Témiscamingue): Mr. Speaker, we are always glad to listen to a statement made in the House about any kind of improvement. The statement made a few moments ago by the Minister of Transport is one of those. Indeed, we can expect that there will be speculation, that consultations will take place and that the best possible site will be selected in order to improve Toronto's airport. On page 3 of the statement, I read these words, and I quote:

[Mr. Brewin.]

[English]

We are now exploring with the province the best approach to take in order to have a mutually advantageous exchange of information and views with the political, industrial, and business communities.

[Translation]

To my mind, the minister should have proceeded the same way with the government of the province of Quebec before selecting the St. Scholastique site. The Quebec government was consulted only after the decision had been taken and not before. Today we are told that discussions are taking place at the federal and provincial levels.

As regards the Montreal airport, the decision has already been taken. However, if there had been previous consultation with the provincial government, the Chambers of Commerce and intermediate bodies, that would have been fairer, more honest and sensible.

The statement further says, and I quote:

[English]

We are now exploring with the province—

Not without the province but with the province.

—the best approach to take in order to have a mutually advantageous exchange of information and views with the political, industrial and business communities.

And in this way to take a decision which will be shared by the province with Ottawa.

[Translation]

In my opinion, the same procedure should have been applied with respect to the St. Scholastique airport.

In any event, we are happy to see the government bring about some improvements in Ontario, in connection with the Toronto airport, and we congratulate the minister for consulting the organizations concerned, in short the population of that province, in order to find the most suitable site for the airport so as to control noise, air and water pollution, to the entire satisfaction of the population.

[English]

QUESTIONS ON THE ORDER PAPER

(Questions answered orally are indicated by an asterisk.)

AUTOMOBILE PRICE INCREASES

Question No. 27—Mr. Broadbent:

1. Is the Government of Canada aware of the recently announced price increases for Canadian automobiles as indicated by Canada's auto manufacturers?

2. Did the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs maintain that if there were increases this year of Canadian automobiles, he would undertake an investigation by the Combines Investigation Branch or other types of inquiries by the Prices and Incomes Commission?

Hon. Ron Basford (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): 1. Yes.

2. No.

SHIPMENTS OF CERTAIN GRAINS FROM PEACE RIVER

Question No. 323—Mr. Borrie:

How many bushels of wheat, oats and barley have been shipped from Peace River, B.C. to the Canadian Wheat Board and the feed market?

Hon. H. A. Olson (Minister of Agriculture): During the crop year 1968-69: 2,472,000 bushels of wheat, 173,000 bushels of oats, and 462,000 bushels of barley were delivered to the Canadian Wheat Board at points in the Peace River area of British Columbia. In addition, shipments of grain in the crop year 1968-69 from stations in the Peace River area of British Columbia to the feed market in that province were: wheat 2,236,000 bushels, oats 1,938,000 bushels and barley 4,920,000 bushels.

INFORMATION AND PUBLIC RELATIONS, PRICES AND INCOMES COMMISSION

Question No. 365—Mrs. MacInnis:

1. From the date of the establishment of the Prices and Incomes Commission to the end of October, 1969, what are the names of the individuals who have worked for the Commission on information and public relations matters?

2. In each individual case, what has been the length of working service, and the amount of remuneration?

Hon. Ron Basford (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): I have been informed by the Chairman of the Prices and Incomes Commission as follows: 1 and 2 (a) Mr. R. A. Ralfe, 11 working days, $653.84. (b) Desroches, Jasmin et Associés Inc., seven working days, $1,650 for professional services and $97.30 for expenses. (c) Girard, Bruce and Associates Ltd., two working days, $400 for professional services and $15 for expenses. (d) Hopkins, Hedlin Limited, 16 working days, $4,090 for professional services and $508.59 for expenses. (e) National Film Board (During this period the National Film Board began the preparation of three film clips, in both English and French, for the Commission. However, work has not yet been completed on these film clips and, therefore, an invoice for this work has not yet been submitted.)

In addition, individual members of the staff of the Prices and Incomes Commission have devoted part of their time to information activities.

PROPOSED CPR TRAIN SERVICE WITHDRAWALS—EMPLOYEE LAY-OFFS

Question No. 447—Mr. Orlikow:

How many employees will be laid off by the Canadian Pacific Railway in each region if it is permitted to discontinue the train operations it has proposed to the Canadian Transportation Commission?

Mr. Gérard Loiselle (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Transport): Information not available.

RAILWAY PASSENGER SERVICE ABANDONMENT APPLICATIONS—LOSS OF EMPLOYMENT

Question No. 492—Mr. Skoberg:

1. For each of the 18 applications filed with the Canadian Transport Commission covering all of Canadian Pacific Railways passenger services and discontinuation of these services, what would be the estimated loss in employment for CPR employees involved in these operations?

2. For each of the 13 applications filed with the Canadian Transport Commission covering some of Canadian National Railways passenger services and the discontinuation of these services, what would be the estimated loss in employment for CNR employees involved in these operations?

Mr. Gérard Loiselle (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Transport): 1. The subject matter being one with respect to which a private company has sole responsibility, the information is not available.

2. The Management of Canadian National Railways advise as follows: The filing of applications for discontinuance of uneconomic passenger train services is a procedure which the Railways must follow under provisions of the National Transportation Act of 1967 to obtain decision from the Canadian Transport Commission as to the individual services that may be terminated and those which must be continued. It is only after a decision is made by the CTC that it will be feasible to trace through the seniority rights of the employees engaged in these services and estimate the number, if any, who will suffer loss in employment. Of those affected, many will find work in their own craft (engine and train crews), some will be transferred to other employment and others will be absorbed by normal attrition.

ADVERTISING ON USE OF BREATHALYZERS

Question No. 507—Mr. Mather:

1. Did the Government of Canada appeal to a wide sector of private industry to finance a $1,334,000 advertising campaign on the use of breathalyzers to test drinking drivers?

2. When did meetings on the above subject take place?

3. What firms were invited to attend these meetings?

4. What individuals representing these firms attended these meetings, and in each case, what was the response to the government appeal for financing this advertising campaign?

5. Is the Government of Canada now planning any advertising campaign on the use of breathalyzers to test drinking drivers, and, if so, what are the estimated expenditures?

Mr. Gérard Loiselle (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Transport): 1. Yes.

2. October 27, 1969.

3. The automotive industry, gas companies, tire manufacturers, insurance companies, distilleries, breweries and the wine industry.

4. The responses ranged from negative to excellent. Propriety does not permit the release of each reaction in response to the offer of participation in this public education program.

5. A public education campaign on the Criminal Code amendments is presently being conducted by the Departments of Justice and Transport at a cost of approximately $50,000.

OPERATION OF RAIN-MAKING DEVICES, QUEBEC

Question No. 548—Mr. Godin:

1. How many rain-making devices are in operation at present in (a) the Province of Quebec (b) in the Constituency of Portneuf?

2. Is there another name for such equipment?

3. Which company manufactured such equipment?

4. Did the federal government contribute to the installation of such equipment and, if so, to what extent?

5. Is the maintenance of such equipment the responsibility of a government department or of private industry?

6. Does the government regulate the operation of these devices?

[Mr. Loiselle.]

Mr. Gérard Loiselle (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Transport): 1. As no information is normally filed with the Federal Government when a rain-making device is placed in operation, it is not known how many, if any, are in operation in these areas.

2. and 3. Not known.

4. No.

5. Private industry.

6. No.

JOB OPPORTUNITIES FOR WORKING POOR AND WELFARE CASES

Question No. 592—Mr. Southam:

Is it the intention of the government to increase the number of job opportunities as a key element in the program to assist Canada's working poor and hard-core welfare cases?

Mr. Yves Forest (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Privy Council): Yes, in so far as the Department of Regional Economic Expansion is concerned.

The Department of Manpower and Immigration increases the number of job opportunities open to Canada's working poor and hard-core welfare cases primarily by making such persons more competitive in the labour market. In this way, their earning power is increased and their vulnerability to unemployment and underemployment is reduced.

The programs of the Department of Manpower and Immigration increase their productive skills, their employability, their knowledge of jobs and their mobility. The Canada Manpower Centres assist their placement in the labour force market or if unable to place them, refer them to training so that they can be better equipped to fill available employment opportunities. If employment is not available in their local community, it assists their movement to communities where employment is available to them. The Department is also supporting community agencies in experimental projects designed to assist poverty groups not normally reached by manpower services.

Using the Economic Council of Canada's definitions of poverty, the proportion of poor persons for whom the Department provides training is twice as high as the proportion of poor people to the population as a whole. In 1968-69, over $100 million was spent in the provision of training for such poor persons. The proportion of poor people, particularly with larger families is also higher among those helped under the Mobility Program, and almost all of the physically or mentally disabled persons prepared for jobs through the Federal-Provincial Rehabilitation Program were poor and without employment. These programs continue to reach more persons each year and in 1969-70, the Department of Manpower and Immigration spent over $396 million in the manpower field alone to help people including a very substantial proportion on welfare or in poverty to find productive and worth while work.

STATUTE REVISION COMMISSION

Question No. 660—Mr. Fortin:

1. In what year was the Statute Revision Commission established?

2. Who are the members of the Commission?

3. When will the revision of the Statutes be completed?

4. Who will publish the revised Statutes?

Hon. John N. Turner (Minister of Justice): In so far as the Department of Justice is concerned: 1. The Statute Revision Commission was established on May 4, 1965.

2. The present members of the Commission are: the Hon. John N. Turner, Q.C., Minister of Justice; Mr. D. S. Maxwell, Q.C., Deputy Minister of Justice; Mr. R. Bedard, C.R., Associate Deputy Minister of Justice; Mr. D. S. Thorson, Q.C., Associate Deputy Minister of Justice; Mr. Jean Miquelon, C.R., President, Crown Assets Disposal Corporation; Mr. J. W. Ryan, Q.C., Director, Legislation Section, Department of Justice.

3. Except for matters affected by legislation enacted by this Session of Parliament, the manuscript of the revised statutes is completed and at the printers. Proofreading of page proofs from the printers is in progress. Because of technical difficulties encountered in 1969, the printing of the revision is behind schedule; publication is not foreseen now until the fall of 1970 although it is anticipated that the text of the revision will be available before then.

4. The Revised Statutes will be published by the Queen's Printer as required for the purposes of section 12 of the Statutes of Canada, 1964-65, c. 48.

INCENTIVE GRANT TO BERMATEX INCORPORATED

Question No. 676—Mr. Burton:

1. Has the Department of Regional Economic Expansion, under the Regional Incentives Act, authorized or provided an incentive grant to Bermatex Incorporated of Ste. Genevieve, Quebec and, if so, what is the amount of the grant?

2. What is the total estimated capital cost of the project for which the grant was provided and what is the nature of the project and its location?

3. Who are the directors and chief executive officers of Bermatex Incorporated?

4. To what extent is Bermatex Incorporated non-resident or foreign-owned or controlled?

5. What is the name and country of the known non-resident ownership of this company?

Mr. Yves Forest (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Privy Council): I am informed by the Department of Regional Economic Expansion and the Department of Industry, Trade and Commerce as follows: 1 and 2. This information was contained in the monthly report, tabled in Parliament on the operation of the Regional Development Act.

3, 4 and 5. Information requested regarding Bermatex Incorporated is not known.

Ownership of corporations in Canada is determined under the Corporations and Labour Unions Returns Act; such information is not available for corporations not required to report under the Act, and the company mentioned here is one of them.

INCENTIVE GRANT TO BONAVISTA COLD STORAGE LIMITED

Question No. 677—Mr. Burton:

1. Has the Department of Regional Economic Expansion, under the Regional Incentives Act, authorized or provided an incentive grant to Bonavista Cold Storage Limited of St. John's and, if so, what is the amount of the grant?

2. What is the total estimated capital cost of the project for which the grant was provided and what is the nature of the project and its location?

3. Who are the directors and chief executive officers of Bonavista Cold Storage Limited?

4. To what extent is Bonavista Cold Storage Limited non-resident or foreign-owned or controlled?

5. What is the name and country of the known non-resident ownership in this company?

Mr. Yves Forest (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Privy Council): I am informed by the Department of Regional Economic Expansion and the Department of Industry, Trade and Commerce as follows: 1 and 2. This information was contained in the monthly report tabled in Parliament on the operation of the Regional Development Act.

3. The directors and executive officers of Bonavista Cold Storage Company Limited are as at January 31, 1968: H. A. Russell, President; P. P. Russell, General Manager, R. A. Russell, Director; J. W. Mahon, Director;

J. P. Pike, Director; A. G. Swyers, Director; R. Young, Director.

4. Four per cent non-resident owned.

5. Unknown.

INCENTIVE GRANT TO BROOKFIELD ICE CREAM LIMITED

Question No. 678—Mr. Burton:

1. Has the Department of Regional Economic Expansion, under the Regional Incentives Act, authorized or provided an incentive grant to Brookfield Ice Cream Limited of St. John's and, if so, what is the amount of the grant?

2. What is the total estimated capital cost of the project for which the grant was provided and what is the nature of the project and its location?

3. Who are the directors and chief executive officers of Brookfield Ice Cream Limited?

4. To what extent is Brookfield Ice Cream Limited non-resident or foreign-owned or controlled?

5. What is the name and country of the known non-resident ownership in this company?

Mr. Yves Forest (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Privy Council): I am informed by the Departments of Regional Economic Expansion and Industry, Trade and Commerce as follows: 1 and 2. This information was contained in the monthly report, tabled in Parliament on the operation of the Regional Development Act.

3. The directors and executive officers of Brookfield Ice Cream Limited are, as at January 31, 1968: H. R. Luscombe, President; A. G. Luscombe, Executive Vice-President; C. G. MacLennan, Vice-President; G. Butler, Director; H. M. Maddick, Director; H. A. Pike, Director; O. L. Vardy, Director.

4. None.

5. None.

INCENTIVE GRANT TO BOULANGERIE RÉGIONALE DES ÎLES INCORPORATED

Question No. 679—Mr. Burton:

1. Has the Department of Regional Economic Expansion, under the Regional Incentives Act, authorized or provided an incentive grant to "Boulangerie Régionale des Îles Incorporated, Îles de la Madeleine, Québec" and, if so, what is the amount of the grant?

2. What is the total estimated capital cost of the project for which the grant was provided and what is the nature of the project and its location?

3. Who are the directors and chief executive officers of "Boulangerie Régionale des Îles Incorporated"?

4. To what extent is this company non-resident or foreign-owned or controlled?

5. What is the name and country of the known non-resident ownership in this company?

Mr. Yves Forest (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Privy Council): I am informed by the Departments of Regional Economic Expansion and Industry, Trade and Commerce as follows: 1 and 2. This information was contained in the monthly report, tabled in Parliament on the operation of the Regional Development Act.

3, 4 and 5. Information requested regarding Boulangerie Régionale des Îles Incorporated is not known.

Ownership of corporations in Canada is determined under the Corporations and Labour Unions Returns Act; such information is not available for corporations not required to report under the Act, and the company mentioned here is one of them.

INCENTIVE GRANT TO GLAVERBEL VERRERIE LIMITÉE

Question No. 680—Mr. Burton:

1. Has the Department of Regional Economic Expansion, under the Regional Incentives Act, authorized or provided an incentive grant to "Glaverbel Verrerie Limitée" and, if so, what is the amount of the grant?

2. What is the total estimated cost of the project for which the grant was provided and what is the nature of the project and its location?

3. Who are the directors and chief executive officers of "Glaverbel Verrerie Limitée"?

4. To what extent is this company non-resident or foreign-owned or controlled?

5. What is the name and country of the known non-resident ownership in this company?

Mr. Yves Forest (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Privy Council): I am informed by the Departments of Regional Economic Expansion and Industry, Trade and Commerce as follows: 1 and 2. This information was contained in the monthly report, tabled in Parliament on the operation of the Regional Development Act.

3, 4 and 5. Information requested regarding Glaverbel Verrerie Limitée is not known.

Ownership of corporations in Canada is determined under the Corporations and Labour Unions Returns Act; such information is not available for corporations not required to report under the Act, and the company mentioned here is one of them.

INCENTIVE GRANT TO BURLINGTON INDUSTRIES (CANADA) LIMITED

Question No. 681—Mr. Burton:

1. Has the Department of Regional Economic Expansion, under the Regional Incentives Act, authorized or provided an incentive grant to Burlington Industries (Canada) Limited, Lachine, Quebec and, if so, what is the amount of the grant?

2. What is the total estimated capital cost of the project for which the grant was provided and what is the nature of the project and its location?

3. Who are the directors and chief executive officers of Burlington Industries?

4. To what extent is Burlington Industries non-resident or foreign-owned or controlled?

5. What is the name and country of the known non-resident ownership in this company?

Mr. Yves Forest (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Privy Council): I am informed by the Department of Regional Economic Expansion and the Department of Industry, Trade and Commerce as follows: 1 and 2. This information was contained in the monthly report, tabled in Parliament on the operation of the Regional Development Act.

3. The directors and executive officers of Burlington Industries (Canada) Ltd. are as at July 27, 1968: A. B. Grossman, President and Director; C. R. Snively, Vice-President and Director; W. J. Mullins, Vice-President and Director; G. B. Bonney, Vice-President and Director; E. F. Davidge, Vice-President and Director; W. E. Greer, Jr., Director; S. G. Dixon, Director; L. Warren, Director.

4. 94.6 per cent non-resident owned.

5. Burlington Industries Inc., United States.

AIRCRAFT OPERATING LICENCES ISSUED TO U.S. RESIDENTS

Question No. 734—Mr. Penner:

1. How many 9-4 licences, permitting operation into points in Ontario, have been issued by the Air Transport Committee to residents of the United States in 1966, 1967, 1968, 1969?

2. What restrictions, if any, are imposed upon these licensees while operating in Canada?

3. What assurance does the Air Transport Committee have that these licensees are not violating the fish and games laws of Ontario?

4. What penalties are imposed for violation of Canadian laws by these licensees?

5. How many of these licensees have been penalized in any way during the past four years?

Mr. Gérard Loiselle (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Transport): The Canadian Transport Commission advises as follows: 1. 1966, by the Air Transport Board, 26; 1967, by the Air Transport Board, 27; 1967, by the Air Transport Committee, Canadian Transport Commission, 18; 1968, by the Air Transport Committee, 20; 1969, by the Air Transport Committee, 34.

2. Standard restrictions (in addition to usual conditions imposed upon licensees in other classes) relate mainly to type of aircraft to be used (maximum take-off weight on wheels not greater than 18,000 pounds), and to transportation of traffic (prohibition against transportation of traffic within Canada, restriction to traffic originating within a radius of fifty miles of the carrier's base, etc.).

3. None.

4. No special penalties except as provided in sections 4 and 13 of the Aeronautics Act. In addition the licence of any air carrier who has violated the conditions of such licence may be cancelled or suspended.

5. In so far as cancellation or suspension of licence is concerned: one.

PLANS FOR DARTMOUTH FEDERAL BUILDING

Question No. 746—Mr. Forrestall:

Have plans been made for a new federal building in the City of Dartmouth and, if so, when will such plans be proceeded with?

Hon. Arthur Laing (Minister of Public Works): No. Consideration had been given to the construction of a Federal building in Dartmouth. However, changes in Post Office Department requirements that included the leasing of space for Postal Station East and minor alterations at the existing building eliminated the need for a new Federal building at the present time.

INSTRUMENT RATING EXAMINATION OF AIRCRAFT PILOTS

Question No. 763—Mr. Forrestall:

1. When conducting an examination to determine whether a pilot of an aircraft, that only requires a crew of one, has the skill and competence to meet the requirements for issuance of an Instrument Rating, do inspectors of the Department of Transport, who are conducting the test, accept the responsibility of acting as "safety pilot" and "lookout pilot" when the pilot being examined is "under-the-hood"?

2. Do inspectors of the Department of Transport, prior to conducting the examination require that the person being examined sign a waiver and, if so, what is the purpose of such a waiver?

Mr. Gérard Loiselle (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Transport): 1. Yes.

2. Yes, to release and indemnify the Crown and its agent from claims with respect to the operation of the aircraft.

VETERANS AFFAIRS—SURPLUS STAFF REQUIREMENTS

Question No. 843—Mr. MacRae:

Of the 26 members of the Department of Veterans Affairs in New Brunswick who were notified they were surplus to staff requirements, which ones have now been placed in alternate employment?

Hon. Jean-Eudes Dubé (Minister of Veterans Affairs): Cooper, G. R., retained or reassigned within the Public Service. Harquail, T. D., retained or reassigned within the Public Service. Holmes, W. S., retained or reassigned within the Public Service. Lanteigne, Miss M. C. D., retained or reassigned within the Public Service. Mazerolle, J. F. A., retained or reassigned within the Public Service. Oakford, E. C., retained or reassigned within the Public Service. Parlee, Mrs. M. C., retained or reassigned within the Public Service. Waddell, A. D., retained or reassigned within the Public Service. Wilson, Mrs. M. A., retained or reassigned within the Public Service. Doncaster, A. A., accepted outside employment. Clark, J. L. J., resigned to take up training. Campbell, N., retired on superannuation allowance. Cosman, Mrs. I., retired on superannuation allowance. Wallace, Miss E., retired on superannuation allowance.

NATIONAL DEFENCE—4 CMBG MOVE TO BADEN-SOLINGEN

Question No. 845—Mr. Ryan:

1. By what date will the tanks of Canada's Fourth Brigade be completely moved to the Baden-Solingen, Black Forest area in Germany?

2. Is the terrain in such area, between the Rhine River and the Black Forest, suitable for tank training and tank warfare?

3. Will such tanks have the same freedom, upon payment of damages, to use the roads, lanes, barns and farmers' fields in such new area as they did in the Soest area?

4. Where is the nearest repair or servicing base for such tanks when moved to the Black Forest area?

5. Is there a probable threat in the Black Forest area that requires such tanks at hand?

6. How is it proposed to transport such tanks to the Black Forest area and what method of transportation will be required when they need servicing?

Mr. D. W. Groos (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of National Defence): 1. The tanks of Canada's 4th Mechanized Brigade Group will remain in their present area until at least 1 October, 1970. Firm timings for the move have not yet been decided.

2. Yes.

3. At this time, there is no indication of curtailment, nor are any difficulties anticipated.

4. Indications are that almost all repairs and servicing for tanks in the Battle Group will be done within the formation at its new location. The small amount of repairs beyond the formation's capability will be done by British Army of the Rhine Workshops in the Northern Sector to which they will be moved by rail.

[Mr. Dubé.]

5. On moving south the Canadian formation will be assigned tasks in the Central Army Group area which includes the Black Forest.

6. Shipment to the new location will be by railroad movement. Local movement in the new area will be by tank transporter or other means as appropriate.

BEAUCEVILLE-WEST, QUE.—POST OFFICE CONSTRUCTION

Question No. 851—Mr. Rodrigue:

1. Is the construction of a post office in Beauceville-West, Quebec, in the plans of the Department of Public Works?

2. How much did the site cost?

3. From whom was the site purchased?

4. Will this post office be built during the 1969-70 fiscal year?

[Translation]

Hon. Arthur Laing (Minister of Public Works): 1. Yes.

2. No site has yet been acquired.

3. Not applicable.

4 No. It is proposed for the 1970-71 fiscal year.

[English]

HONG KONG—IMMIGRATION APPLICATIONS

Question No. 859—Mr. Ryan:

1. What is the current backlog of applications, in respect to nominated relatives, in Canada's immigration office at Hong Kong?

2. At what rate per month is the Hong Kong police force processing applications, for the RCMP, in relation to the security risk aspect of (a) all applications (b) applications for nominated relatives?

3. How many applications were approved in 1969 by the Canadian immigration office at Hong Kong (a) from Taiwan and Hong Kong (b) from the Chinese mainland controlled by Red China (c) from other parts of the Far East?

4. Does the government plan to increase the size of the Canadian immigration office at Hong Kong, with relation to the security risk aspect?

5. Does the government plan to subsidize the Hong Kong police force so that they will be able to process more applications by intended immigrants to Canada?

Mr. Yves Forest (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Privy Council): I am informed by the Department of Manpower and Immigration and the Royal Canadian Mounted Police as follows: 1. Statistics compiled by the Immigration office at Hong Kong are based on the number of persons registered for examination. As of October 31, 1969, there were 4,374 applicants for admission to Canada in the nominated relative category in process at the Hong Kong office.

2. A monthly average of 529 applications based on a six month period. Applications for nominated relatives cannot be segregated as all categories are treated in a like manner.

3. The method of compiling statistics at Hong Kong precludes identifying those persons who have come from mainland China. The following table reflects the number of visas issued by the Hong Kong office in the categories shown, between January 1 and October 31, 1969.

	Sponsored Dependants	Nominated Relatives	Independent Applicants	Total
(a) and (b)	1672	2931	1774	6377
(c)	162	157	303	622

4. and 5. No.

*DEER LODGE HOSPITAL, WINNIPEG—INCREASE IN RATES

Question No. 870—Mr. Muir (Lisgar):

Have charges for domiciliary care at Deer Lodge Hospital in Winnipeg been raised from $120 per month to $300 effective January 1, 1970 and, if so, for what reason?

Mr. Yves Forest (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Privy Council): The answer is yes. The charge has not been adjusted since 1949, at which time a rate of $120 a month reflected the actual cost of providing this care. The new rate is somewhat less than current costs. It is emphasized that this rate will be paid only by those able to afford it. Between 400 and 500 patients out of a total of about 2,000 patients in this category at various departmental institutions across Canada will be affected, the majority of whom will be paying less than one half of the increase.

NATIONAL DEFENCE—REDUCTION IN RESERVES

Question No. 879—Mr. Mazankowski:

What savings are being effected by the reduction to nil strength of "C" Company, the North Saskatchewan Regiment and the closing of the Armoury in Lloydminster, Alberta?

Mr. D. W. Groos (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of National Defence): In arriving at an approximate cost of maintaining a militia unit certain factors that are difficult to estimate must be considered. The operating and maintenance costs of the armoury, pay of unit members, are basic costs, but there are other costs which are not as readily identified on a unit basis such as provision and maintenance of equipment, pay of regular force support staffs, travel, rations, clothing etc. It is estimated that approximately $50,000 will be saved by reducing "C" Company, North Saskatchewan Regiment, to nil strength and the closing of the Armoury in Lloydminster, Alberta.

VEGREVILLE CONSTITUENCY—POST OFFICE BUILDINGS

Question No. 880—Mr. Mazankowski:

1. Are any new post office buildings being considered for construction in 1970 in the Vegreville federal constituency?

2. What is the cost of the new post office now under construction at Holden, Alberta?

3. What firms submitted tenders for the Holden Post Office, what were the respective amounts and who was the successful tenderer?

4. What was the annual rental paid for the present Post Office facilities in Holden?

5. What was the effective date and length of duration of the lease for the present facilities in Holden?

Hon. Arthur Laing (Minister of Public Works): 1. The program is under consideration.

2. $29,720.

3. Holzer Construction Ltd., Edmonton, $29,720; Watson (Tofield) Ltd., Tofield, $34,000; Nor-Way Construction Ltd., St. Albert, $34,975; Polar Construction Ltd., Edmonton, $35,903; Senco Construction Ltd., Edmonton, $37,873.

Successful tenderer—Holzer Construction Ltd., Edmonton.

4. $2,100 per annum.

5. Effective date, September 1, 1969. Duration of lease, one month, thence month to month.

AMHERST, N.S.—DISMISSAL OF PUBLIC SERVANTS

Question No. 883—Mr. Coates:

1. How many employees of the Department of Regional Economic Expansion at Amherst, N.S., have been informed their services will no longer be required after March 31, 1970?

2. What action will be taken to assist them in retaining employment in the Public Service of Canada?

Questions

Mr. Martin P. O'Connell (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Regional Economic Expansion): 1. Six.

2. They will be given first consideration for reassignment to jobs for which they are qualified that are or become vacant in their own or other departments. The Public Service Commission co-ordinates such arrangements.

	Location
	Armstrong
	Beauceville-Est
	Beauceville-Est
	Saint-Ephrem
	Saint-Joseph
	Sainte-Marie
	Saint-Odilon
	Saint-Théophile
	Vallée-Jonction
2.	Location
	Sainte-Marie

[English]

NEWFOUNDLAND—REGIONAL DEVELOPMENT PLAN

Question No. 904—Mr. Marshall:

1. How many federal officers are involved in co-operation with the Province of Newfoundland in producing a Regional Development Plan?

[Mr. Coates.]

2. Who are the officers and what is their area of responsibility?

Mr. Martin P. O'Connell (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Regional Economic Expansion): 1. Three chiefly, with support from others.

*POLISH SEAMEN DETAINED IN CANADA

Question No. 887—Mr. Haidasz:

1. How many Polish seamen are detained in Canadian ports?

2. On what grounds did these seamen request permission to remain in Canada?

3. Has the Minister of Manpower and Immigration applied any of the provisions of the International Convention on Refugee Seamen to meet the request of the Polish seamen now being detained in any Canadian port?

4. To date, have any requests of presently detained Polish seamen been refused by the Minister or the Department of Manpower and Immigration?

[Translation]

Mr. Rosaire Gendron (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Manpower and Immigration): 1. None, but presumably this question relates to a group of seven seamen who deserted the Polish vessel Pomorze at Halifax in November and December 1969, and one seaman let off the Polish vessel Walsza for medical treatment on August 14, 1969 who subsequently requested permission to remain here, about whom there was some publicity.

2. These seamen cited the economic situation and the denial of basic religious freedom in Poland as their reason for requesting permission to remain in Canada. Seven of these people wish to remain permanently in Canada, and the eighth has sought temporary entry until he can obtain a visa for the United States.

3. No. The International Convention on Refugee Seamen, known as the Hague Convention, deals specifically with the problem of refugee seamen on merchant ships who, owing to a lack of documents permitting them re-entry to any country, are unable to set foot on shore legally. This Convention obliges Canada to grant permanent admission to refugee seamen serving on Canadian ships, and in certain circumstances to refugee seamen who had served on Canadian ships in the past.

4. The seamen concerned have been allowed to remain in Canada under minister's permits.

[English]

BEAUCE CONSTITUENCY—PUBLIC WORKS PROJECTS

Question No. 895—Mr. Rodrigue:

1. What projects have been carried out by the Department of Public Works in the constituency of Beauce during the current fiscal year and what was the cost of each project undertaken?

2. Of those projects for which plans have not yet begun or been completed, how many will be undertaken in the constituency of Beauce before the end of the current fiscal year?

[Translation]

Hon. Arthur Laing (Minister of Public Works): 1.

Project	Cost
Repairs	$ 4,060.
Interior painting	1,775.
Landscaping	686.75
Construction of Post Office	29,950.
Landscaping	1,950.
Repairs to heating system	663.46
Construction of Post Office	18,350.
Landscaping	1,595.
Additional postal boxes	1,700.

Project	Cost
Installation of new postal boxes	$3,000.

2. Mr. A. D. Crerar, Planning Division; Mr. J. G. L. Adams, Planning Division; Mr. R. P. Harrison, Implementation Division.

NATIONAL DEFENCE—AMMUNITION AND BOMB EXPENDITURES

Question No. 917—Mr. Rondeau:

1. Since 1960, how much has the Department of National Defence spent on the purchase of ammunition and bombs?

2. What kind of bombs were bought and from which company (ies)?

3. What became of them?

[Translation]

Hon. Léo Cadieux (Minister of National Defence): 1. From 1 April, 1959, to 31 December, 1939—$238,211,000.

2. Bomb Type	Source
500 lb. MK 28 GP Bomb	USN
500 lb. Mk 82 Inert Practice Bomb	USN
25 lb. BDU-33A/B Practice Bomb	USAF
750 lb. BLUIC/B Fire Bomb	USAF
750 lb. CBU-2BA Cluster Bomb	USAF
5 lb. MK 106 Practice Bomb	Kemp Mfg. Co. (Ont.)
2,000 lb. BDU-8/B Practice Bomb	Olsen Mfg. Co. (Ont.)
350 lb. Mk 54 Depth Bomb	USN
16½ lb. Practice Bomb	USN
5 lb. Mk 23 Mod 1 Practice Bomb	Kemp Mfg. Co. (Ont.).

3. Practice bombs are used continuously for operational training. Live bombs are held in war reserve stocks except for small quantities which are used during Fire Power demonstrations and other special training manoeuvers.

[English]

QUESTIONS PASSED AS ORDERS FOR RETURNS

PAYMENTS TO BELL TELEPHONE SYSTEM

Question No. 42—Mr. Benjamin:

What was the total amount of money paid to the Bell Telephone System by the Government of Canada during the last fiscal year?

Return tabled.

DISCUSSIONS WITH PRICES AND INCOMES COMMISSION

Question No. 333—Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre):

What organizations and individuals have been in discussions with the Prices and Incomes Commission?

Return tabled.

ARDA—PROJECTS UNDERTAKEN UNDER AGREEMENTS

Question No. 876—Mr. Corbin:

1. How many projects have been undertaken under Federal-Provincial ARDA agreements in each of the following electoral districts (a) Témiscouata, P.Q. (b) Madawaska-Victoria, N.B. (c) Restigouche, N.B. (d) Kamouraska, P.Q.?

2. Where are these projects located?

3. What was the cost of each?

4. What was the federal government's contribution to each?

5. What is the nature of each project?

Return tabled.

[Translation]

MOTIONS FOR PAPERS

Mr. Yves Forest (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, notices of motions for the production of papers Nos. 42, 61, 337 and 338 are acceptable to the government.

[English]

CORRESPONDENCE BETWEEN PRIME MINISTER'S OFFICE AND HAROLD KENDALL

Motion No. 42—Mr. Gleave:

That an Order of the House do issue for a copy of all correspondence between the Prime Minister's Office and Mr. Harold Kendall of Manitoba regarding the sale and purchase of farm land.

Motion agreed to.

ELECTRIFICATION OF RIDEAU CANAL LOCKS

Motion No. 61—Mr. Mather:

That an Order of the House do issue for copies of all correspondence between the Department of Transport and those protesting the decision to electrify the locks along the Rideau Canal System.

Motion agreed to.

Motions for Papers

REAPPOINTMENT OF CONSUMER ADVISORY COUNCIL MEMBERS

Motion No. 337—Mrs. MacInnis:

That an Order of the House do issue for a copy of the Order-in-Council of December, 1969, re-appointing members of a Consumer Advisory Council on a temporary basis.

Motion agreed to.

APPOINTMENT OF NATIONAL COUNCIL OF WELFARE CHAIRMAN AND MEMBERS

Motion No. 338—Mrs. MacInnis:

That an Order of the House do issue for a copy of the December, 1969 Order-in-Council appointing William Dyson to be Chairman of the National Council of Welfare and appointing twenty other members as well.

Motion agreed to.

[Translation]

Mr. Forest: Mr. Speaker, notice of motion No. 335 is acceptable to the government, subject to the usual reservations concerning confidential papers and to the authorization of the government authorities concerned.

[English]

Mr. Speaker: Subject to the reservations or conditions expressed by the Parliamentary Secretary, is it the pleasure of the House that Notice of Motion No. 335 be deemed to have been adopted?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

REGIONAL ECONOMIC EXPANSION GRANTS, IMPERIAL OIL, REDWATER

Motion No. 335—Mr. Mazankowski:

That an Order of the House do issue for a copy of all correspondence and other documents exchanged between the Department of Regional Economic Expansion and Imperial Oil Limited, Redwater, Alberta, concerning application and payment of two grants of $5 million by the Area Development Agency.

Motion agreed to.

[Translation]

Mr. Forest: Mr. Speaker, would you be so kind as to call notices of motions Nos. 1, 43, 90, 171, 174, 186, 202, 216, 246, 284, 300, 308, 343 and 348?

I ask, Mr. Speaker, that the remaining notices of motions be allowed to stand.

[English]

COPPER EXPORTS

Motion No. 1—Mr. Saltsman:

That an Order of the House do issue for copies of all export permits granted for copper exports for the period January 1, 1969, to September 30, 1969.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Stand.

Mr. Speaker: Stand.

WORLD FARM MACHINERY PRICES

Motion No. 43—Mr. Gleave:

That an Order of the House do issue for a copy of the report on world farm machinery prices by Dr. Clarence Barber.

Mr. Yves Forest (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, on behalf of the Minister of Agriculture I may advise the hon. member that as indicated by the minister in his statement on motions on January 16, the final report of the Royal Commission on Farm Machinery is not expected to be available until late summer. When available it will be tabled. Under the circumstances the hon. member may wish to withdraw his motion.

Mr. Gleave: I agree, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Speaker: The motion is dropped.

Order discharged and motion withdrawn.

FINANCING OF PAN-AMERICAN GAMES

Motion No. 90—Mr. Orlikow:

That an humble Address be presented to His Excellency praying that he will cause to be laid before this House copies of all correspondence between the Government of Canada and/or any minister or department and the City of Winnipeg, including the mayor, the city clerk and the city treasurer, since January 1, 1968, dealing with the financing of the Pan American Games in Winnipeg.

Mr. Stanley Haidasz (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, the papers called for by this motion passed between the Minister of National Health and Welfare and the city of Winnipeg, and are considered to be confidential. Under the circumstances the hon. member may wish to withdraw his motion.

Mr. Orlikow: Mr. Speaker, I cannot accept that suggestion. I would like to have it transferred for debate.

Mr. Speaker: Transferred for debate.

AUTOMOTIVE INDUSTRY COST STRUCTURE STUDY

Motion No. 171—Mr. Saltsman:

That an Order of the House do issue for a copy of the study by economist David F. Smith of the Mechanical Transport Branch, Department of Industry, Trade and Commerce on "The Effects of Canada-United States Wage Parity Upon the Cost Structure of the Canadian Automotive Industries".

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Stand.

Mr. Speaker: Stand.

PROGRAM TO ENHANCE PRODUCTIVITY

Motion No. 174—Mr. Saltsman:

That an Order of the House do issue for a copy of the preliminary cost-benefit study on the new program of the Department of Industry, Trade and Commerce to enhance productivity (PEP) as referred to in reply to Question No. 1,955 as reported in Hansard of June 4, 1969.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Stand.

Mr. Speaker: Stand.

LONG-TERM DEVELOPMENT STUDY, CITÉ DU HAVRE

Motion No. 186—Mr. Skoberg:

That an Order of the House do issue for a copy of the consultant report undertaken for Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation regarding the planning for a long-term development study of Cité du Havre in 1968, as mentioned in answer to Question Number 1,323 of the past Session.

Mr. Yves Forest (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, the Minister without Portfolio (Mr. Andras) responsible for housing wishes to inform the hon. member that the study contains recommendations to ministers and such documents are deemed to be internal and therefore privileged. In view of this the minister would ask the member to withdraw his motion.

Mr. Skoberg: I call for a vote, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): Transfer for debate.

Mr. Speaker: Transferred for debate.

TRADE PROMOTION COST-SALES RATIO

Motion No. 202—Mr. Broadbent:

That an Order of the House do issue for a copy of the study on the Department of Industry Trade and Commerce trade promotion policies showing a 12:1 cost-sales ratio as stated by Mr. P. Schutte, Chief of the Trade Fairs Abroad Division of the Department.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Stand.

Mr. Speaker: Stand.

GUIDANCE AND ASSESSMENT OF TEXTILE INDUSTRY

Motion No. 216—Mr. Skoberg:

That an Order of the House do issue for a copy of the consultant report by the Economist Intelligent Unit on guidance and assessment of the Canadian textile industry, undertaken for the Department of Industry, Trade and Commerce in the fiscal year 1966-67, as mentioned in answer to Question Number 1,323 of the past Session.

Mr. Yves Forest (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce wishes to inform the hon. member that this study is of a confidential nature, the release of which would be detrimental to the future relationship between the department, the consultant and the industry concerned. In view of this the minister would ask the hon. member to withdraw his motion.

Mr. Skoberg: I cannot agree to that, Mr. Speaker. I call for a vote.

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): Transfer for debate.

Mr. Speaker: Transferred for debate.

CANADIAN APPLIANCE INDUSTRY

Motion No. 246—Mr. Skoberg:

That an Order of the House do issue for a copy of the consultant report by the University of Toronto on the Canadian Appliance Industry undertaken for the Department of Industry, Trade and Commerce for the fiscal year 1968-69, as mentioned in answer to Question Number 1,323 of the past Session.

Mr. Yves Forest (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce wishes to inform the hon. member that this study has not been completed yet. There is an agreement between the University of Toronto and the Department of Industry, Trade and Commerce that a report, not including commercial confidential material, will be published within one year of data collection and analysis. It is expected that data collection and analysis will be concluded some time this year. In view of this the minister hopes that the hon. member will withdraw his motion.

Mr. Skoberg: I agree, Mr. Speaker, but retain the right to reintroduce it.

Mr. Speaker: The motion is withdrawn.

Order discharged and motion withdrawn.

Motions for Papers

FIXED COMBINATIONS OF ANTIBIOTICS

Motion No. 284—Mr. Orlikow:

That an Order of the House do issue for copies of all correspondence between ahe Department of National Health and Welfare and Canadian manufacturers of certain antibiotic combinations as mentioned by the Minister of National Health and Welfare in his statement to the House on November 27, 1969 and reported in Hansard, page 1297.

Mr. Stanley Haidasz (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, with reference to this motion my minister has requested me to inform the hon. member that the correspondence referred to does not exist. My minister's statement in the House on November 27, 1969, referred to discussions between officers of the Food and Drug Directorate and various drug companies. Officers of the department have offered to meet with the hon. member at his convenience to provide him with information. In view of this it is requested that the motion be withdrawn.

Mr. Orlikow: Agreed.

Mr. Speaker: The motion is withdrawn.

Order discharged and motion withdrawn.

REPORT ON ATTITUDES OF INDIAN PEOPLE

Motion No. 300—Mr. Howard (Skeena):

That an Order of the House do issue for a copy of the report on attitudes of Indian people based mainly on a visit to the Six Nations Reserve on July 16, 1969, submitted to the Department of Indian Affairs and Northern Development by Berger, Tisdall, Clark and Lesley Ltd., as referred to on page 6 of the quarterly report on public relations activity, June, July, August, 1969 by the said Berger, Tisdall, Clark and Lesley Ltd.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Stand.

Mr. Speaker: Stand.

FEASIBILITY REPORT ON ALBERTA-MONTREAL PIPELINE

Motion No. 308—Mr. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands):

That an Order of the House do issue for a copy of the feasibility report prepared in the Department of Industry, Trade and Commerce regarding the construction of an oil pipeline from Alberta to Montreal.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Stand.

Mr. Speaker: Stand.

[Mr. Speaker.]

TARIFF BOARD REPORT ON BINDER TWINE

Motion No. 343—Mr. Saltsman:

That an Order of the House do issue for a copy of the Tariff Board Report on Binder Twine and Twine for Baling Farm Produce.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Stand.

Mr. Speaker: Stand.

INTERDEPARTMENTAL REPORT ON FARM MACHINERY

Motion No. 348—Mr. Gleave:

That an Order of the House do issue for a copy of the interdepartmental report on farm machinery referred to by the Minister of Agriculture as mentioned in Hansard of January 19, 1970 at page 2530.

Mr. Yves Forest (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, on behalf of the Minister of Agriculture I may advise the hon. member that there has been no report made by the interdepartmental committee dealing with the Special Report on Prices of Tractors and Combines in Canada and Other Countries tabled on Friday, January 16. Since there is no such report the hon. member may wish to withdraw his motion.

Mr. Gleave: Agreed.

Mr. Speaker: The motion is withdrawn.

Order discharged and motion withdrawn.

Mr. Barnett: Mr. Speaker, I wonder if I might ask, as I did a week ago today, when I might expect motion No. 80, standing in my name since October 23, to be called? I might say that its subject matter is relevant to a recent statement on pollution of the sea made by the Minister of Transport, and it would be very useful to have this correspondence.

Mr. Orlikow: Mr. Speaker, I wish to inquire when I might expect that Notice of Motion No. 11, which I put down on October 23 last, will be brought forward? It deals with correspondence about tax concessions to Shaheen Limited of New York. In view of the interest in regional development and taxation matters, I think it is pretty important that we get that correspondence.

Mr. Forest: Mr. Speaker, I will look into this.

Mr. Skoberg: Mr. Speaker, with respect to Notice of Motion No. 32, in answer to question No. 2165 last year it was said that it was expected that this work would be completed by the fall. When can I expect an answer to this motion?

Mr. Forest: I will look into this matter as well.

Mr. Speaker: Shall the remaining Notices of Motions stand?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

ORAL QUESTION PERIOD

FINANCE

SUPPLEMENTARY WHITE PAPER ON TAX REFORM—RECONSIDERATION OF PROPOSALS

Hon. Robert L. Stanfield (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I am very pleased indeed to see the Minister of Finance back in the House today.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Stanfield: In view of the difficulty we have had getting information we look forward to the exact, precise and informative kind of answers that the minister always gives.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Stanfield: I ask the minister when we may now expect the supplementary paper on tax reform, which he had previously indicated elsewhere would be available, he hoped, by the end of January?

Hon. E. J. Benson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, what I said, and I explained it fully in the House, was that information would be provided to the House committee. My officials, from what I have read, are still appearing before the House committee. As soon as they have information they will provide it to the House committee.

Mr. Stanfield: That is a very disappointing start by the minister. I would ask him a supplementary question. Since it is now conceded by his officials that the white paper on tax reform has inflationary tendencies, are he and the government reconsidering the white paper with a view to eliminating these tendencies?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I have to suggest that perhaps the question as asked is not in order. The hon. member's question contains an allegation, and to this extent it would not be in order. Perhaps the latter part of the question might be replied to by the minister.

Mr. Benson: Having gone through one election my hon. friend is used to disappointing starts.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): Don't worry, you did too.

Mr. MacInnis: Whom are you going to support at the next convention? The boys are already at work over there.

Mr. Benson: You mean the next Conservative convention!

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

Mr. Benson: Mr. Speaker, if I might answer the question, the hon. member knows that the whole question of the white paper is before a committee of the House and the Senate. We expect representations to be made there with regard to the effects of the white paper, not only on savings and inflation but on business and a great many things. When these representations have been made to the committee, we will give them consideration.

Mr. Stanfield: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. May I ask the minister whether he has consulted the Prices and Incomes Commission as to the inflationary or non-inflationary aspects of the white paper proposals? I should also like to ask the minister whether he considers it sound policy, as no doubt he does, for him to put forward a paper containing admittedly inflationary proposals, while at the same time the government has retained the services of the Prices and Incomes Commission to advise us how to fight inflation?

Mr. Benson: Mr. Speaker, as my hon. friend knows full well, the earliest possible date for the white paper proposals to come into effect, or legislation arising out of them, is January 1, 1972. If we have the continued co-operation of the opposition, I am sure we will have the inflationary situation under control by that time.

[Translation]

Mr. Gilbert Rondeau (Shefford): Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask a supplementary question of the Minister of Finance.

Now that he is back, can he tell the House whether he is pleased with the talks that have just been held in Quebec City, since he managed to keep all the things that the provinces wanted to take away from Ottawa?

Inquiries of the Ministry

[English]

Mr. Benson: Mr. Speaker, I would like to correct what I said just a minute ago; the earliest date would be 1971. However, I should like to point out to my hon. friend that we had very constructive meetings with the ministers of finance and provincial treasurers in Quebec City. We have approved a report of the tax structure committee which is to be submitted to the first ministers' conference which will take place later this month. I should also like to say that I enjoyed the carnival. It is just terrific.

Mr. Bell: On $30 a week?

Hon. Marcel Lambert (Edmonton West): Mr. Speaker, I wonder if the Minister of Finance would arrange with the Prime Minister that there be a long weekend at Harrington Lake for the provincial and federal computers to arrive at some form of agreement?

Mr. Benson: Mr. Speaker, now that we have the details of the calculations from the province of Ontario, we are looking at them very carefully. I should point out that in just glancing at them I found an error of several hundred million dollars because they had assumed revenue from oil and mining would come in earlier than proposed. These proposals would not go into effect until after the five-year period.

Mr. A. D. Hales (Wellington): Mr. Speaker, could the Minister of Finance advise the House how many people have asked for the opportunity to present briefs to the Standing Committee?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I doubt if that question would be in order.

[Translation]

AVAILABILITY OF COPIES OF WHITE PAPER ON TAX REFORM

Mr. André Fortin (Lotbinière): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question.

In view of the importance of the white paper on tax reform and also, in view of the limited number of copies available, could the Minister of Finance indicate to the House if he is in a position to order more copies to meet the government's wishes to inform and consult the public on matters related to the tax reform?

[English]

Hon. E. J. Benson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, as I understand it we had approximately 150,000 copies printed. I will look into the availability of copies now, since I have been away for a few days. However, we do provide copies of the White Paper to anybody who writes and asks for them. It is proving to be a best seller.

Mr. Baldwin: So is Dante's Inferno.

Mr. Lewis: It is a best seller because it is a soporific, I suppose.

THE CANADIAN ECONOMY

INFLATION—POLICY TO BE PRESENTED BY PRICES AND INCOMES COMMISSION TO BUSINESS REPRESENTATIVES

Mr. David Lewis (York South): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask a question of the Minister of Finance dealing with the relationship between the Prices and Incomes Commission and government policy. In view of the fact that the Prices and Incomes Commission is meeting next Monday and Tuesday with representatives of the business community of Canada and is going to make, I assume, certain representations on policy, may I ask the Minister of Finance or the Prime Minister, whichever wishes to answer, whether there has been any discussion between the commission and the Minister of Finance as to the policy to be presented to this meeting next week?

Hon. Ron Basford (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): Mr. Speaker, as I have made clear to the House on several occasions, the Prices and Incomes Commission is endeavouring, and the meetings on Monday and Tuesday are the culmination of this, to obtain from the business community an agreement to restrict their discretionary price increases.

Mr. Baldwin: How is the price of milk?

Mr. Lewis: Mr. Speaker, I suggest this is an important matter for Members of Parliament to know about. I have heard it all before but I want to know from the minister if he knows, and perhaps he does not, in which case I will forgive him as usual, whether the Prices and Incomes Commission has been given authority by this government to make certain suggestions on policy when it meets representatives of business and labour, setting limits on profits or wages, or are these suggestions on policy made by the commission without consultation with the government?

Mr. Basford: Mr. Speaker, there has of course been discussion between officials of the commission and officials of the government, but the Prices and Incomes Commission is independent and speaks for itself, not enunciating government policy.

Mr. Lewis: Mr. Speaker, if I may—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I suggest to the hon. member it might be in order to go on to another subject.

[Translation]

FINANCE

QUEBEC—REQUEST FOR REFUND OF SOCIAL SECURITY TAX

Mr. Bernard Dumont (Frontenac): Mr. Speaker, I would like to put a question to the Minister of Finance about the possibility of Quebec imposing a double taxation system.

Would he consider giving back to Quebec the amount of the so-called social development tax of 2 per cent?

[English]

Hon. E. J. Benson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, we pay to Quebec far more than the amount raised in equalization every year.

OIL

PARTICIPATION IN PANARCTIC OILS LIMITED BY ADDITIONAL CANADIAN CORPORATIONS

Mr. Eldon M. Woolliams (Calgary North): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development. In view of his statement today with reference to Panarctic, and in view of the fact that the federal government has participated to the extent of 45 per cent with certain petroleum corporations in the development of the Arctic under a corporate syndicate known as Panarctic Oils Limited, would the minister and the government consider participation and sharing by more independent Canadian corporations in this development for the purpose of assuring continued Canadian investment? It is true you have listed the companies that—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

Mr. Woolliams: Mr. Speaker, may I put the question?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. It seems to me the question has been put. Perhaps the minister might be given the opportunity to reply.

[Translation]

Hon. Jean Chrétien (Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): Mr. Speaker, I did not understand very well the hon. member's question. If he could rephrase it a little more clearly, I might answer it.

[English]

Mr. Woolliams: I will be very happy to put it more clearly. With reference to the 55 per cent that is owned by corporations, and the minister used the word "international" today, will he assure the Canadian people that those corporations will be Canadian corporations and that further participation will be by Canadian investors?

[Translation]

Mr. Chrétien: Mr. Speaker, we would be most pleased if Canadians wished to buy shares in the Panarctic Oils Limited and we would also be quite willing to transfer the shares, if necessary.

[English]

Mr. Woolliams: May I put a supplementary question, Mr. Speaker? Would the minister be prepared, in view of his lengthy statement today, to give us a statement as to how many Canadian investors there actually are in those companies which carry Canadian names and which are participating in the 55 per cent?

[Translation]

Mr. Chrétien: Mr. Speaker, I had the opportunity—

[English]

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The minister should not attempt to give that information now. Perhaps he should wait and give it by way of a statement on motions.

Mr. Woolliams: A question of privilege, Mr. Speaker. I did not ask that he give it now, I asked that he give it later in a statement.

[Translation]

Mr. Chrétien: Mr. Speaker, it is quite easy to understand. At the present time, 70 per cent of the shares are controlled by Canadians, that is, 45 per cent by the federal government and 25 per cent by Canadian interests.

Inquiries of the Ministry

[English]

GRAIN

FINAL PAYMENTS ON DURUM WHEAT—DEFERRED WHEAT DELIVERIES

Mr. Jack McIntosh (Swift Current-Maple Creek): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the minister in charge of the Wheat Board, the Minister of Agriculture and the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce. Since none of those ministers is here, may I ask whether the minister responsible for the Wheat Board will make a statement on motions regarding the Durum wheat accounts in order to explain the lack of final payments on this type of wheat and to clarify and update information with regard to the deferred wheat deliveries for the 1968-69 crop year?

Mr. MacInnis: Nobody answers for the Wheat Board on Wednesdays.

[Translation]

Mr. Florian Côté (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, I am taking note of the question and I shall pass it on to the minister responsible.

[English]

TRANSPORT

INCREASE IN RAILWAY FREIGHT RATES ON WHITE BEANS

Hon. J. W. Monteith (Perth): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the Minister of Finance. In view of the minister's statement of January 13 to the effect that the railways had agreed to suspend any increase in freight rates at least until March 1, will he determine whether or not the rail rates for white beans moving to western Canada from Ontario have been increased by 2 per cent as of January 22?

Hon. E. J. Benson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I am not sure that beans were included in the agreement, but I will look into the matter.

Mr. Mac T. McCutcheon (Lambton-Kent): May I direct a supplementary question to the Minister of Transport, Mr. Speaker. Will he use his good offices to discourage the suggested further rate increase, reported to become effective as of March 1, on shipments of white beans to western Canada?

Hon. Donald C. Jamieson (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I will be glad to look into this and pass on the information to the railways.

[Mr. Chrétien.]

CONSUMER AFFAIRS

LISTING OF INGREDIENTS ON FOOD PRODUCTS

Mr. P. V. Noble (Grey-Simcoe): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs. Can he tell the House how soon the Canadian people can expect ingredient listing on food products?

Hon. Ron Basford (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): Mr. Speaker, we announced some time ago that this was the direction in which we hoped to go. Since that time we have received a great number of representations from different manufacturers about some of the technical and complicated problems that might arise. We will be introducing, during the present session as previously announced, a packaging and labelling bill which I hope will allow us to make more progress in this matter than has been made so far.

[Translation]

CANADIAN PACIFIC RAILWAY

MONTREAL-QUEBEC LINE—CLOSING OF STATIONS IN EVENINGS—DISCOMFORT TO PASSENGERS

Mr. J.-A. Mongrain (Trois-Rivières): Mr. Speaker, I wish to put a question to the Minister of Transport.

[English]

Has the minister received representations to the effect that all stations on the CPR railway line between Montreal and Quebec are closed in the evenings, thus forcing passengers waiting for trains to stay outside in severe weather?

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker: I think this question could be put on the order paper. However, if there is an emergency the Minister might answer it.

Mr. Mongrain: Mr. Speaker, on a point of order. I do not want to question your ruling but—

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member will agree that I have suggested the minister may answer the question if he thinks there is an emergency. He might do it now.

[English]

Hon. Donald C. Jamieson (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I will try to get the stations opened before the weather warms up.

[Later:]

[Translation]

Mr. Mongrain: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a question of privilege.

Since we care very much about the truthfulness and accuracy of what we say, in justice to the CPR I should like to correct an inaccurate statement I made a while ago, to the effect that all railway stations between Montreal and Quebec are closed in the evening. I must say that the station in the most beautiful city of the province of Quebec, Trois Rivières, remains open.

[English]

STATUTORY INSTRUMENTS

IMPLEMENTATION OF RECOMMENDATIONS OF SPECIAL COMMITTEE

Mr. Andrew Brewin (Greenwood): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the Minister of Justice? Some time ago the hon. member for Windsor-Walkerville presented to the House the report of the Parliamentary Committee on Statutory Instruments which contained a number of important recommendations about the control by this House over delegated legislation. Can the minister say whether the government proposes to take any action, and if so how soon, with a view to implementing the report and some of its recommendations?

Hon. John N. Turner (Minister of Justice): Mr. Speaker, I have had discussions with the President of the Privy Council about the substance of that report. The Department of Justice is currently drafting a proposal which we want to discuss together and present to our colleagues.

FISHERIES

SEALS—ACTION ON PROTEST BY INDUSTRY

Mr. Lloyd R. Crouse (South Shore): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the Minister of Fisheries. Would he inform the House whether he plans to take any action on the protest made by the Canadian sealing industry concerning his announcement on negotiations with Norway on the killing of whitecoats?

Hon. Jack Davis (Minister of Fisheries and Forestry): Mr. Speaker, I have no indication that any of our vessel owners who previously indicated they were going to sea have decided not to participate in the hunt this year.

Inquiries of the Ministry

Mr. James A. McGrath (St. John's East): A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Since the minister does not seem to be too well informed on this matter, would he consider meeting with the Canadian sealing industry to find out exactly what the position is in the industry vis-à-vis the statement made by the minister last Friday?

Mr. Davis: Mr. Speaker, we have had several meetings with the industry. I have been hearing from the industry in recent days as well.

Mr. John Lundrigan (Gander-Twillingate): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a supplementary question to the Minister of Fisheries. Can the minister say what is the position of Canada on the request by the World Federation for the Protection of Animals—friends of the minister—that Canada should ban what is left of the seal hunt?

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Red Deer.

Mr. Lundrigan: Mr. Speaker, maybe the minister did not understand my question.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member asked the question clearly, but under the rules the minister is not obligated to reply.

POST OFFICE

POLICY RESPECTING CLOSURE OF LOW-INCOME BRANCHES

Mr. R. N. Thompson (Red Deer): Mr. Speaker, in the absence of the Minister of Communications, may I ask the Acting Minister or the Parliamentary Secretary whether it is the policy of the government to continue the closing of low-income post offices throughout the country in view of the general protest of the population against this policy?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. It seems to me that the hon. member is reiterating a question which has been asked on a number of occasions. If the minister wishes to reply to this kind of question, he can do so by way of a general statement on motions.

Mr. Thompson: Mr. Speaker, may I transfer this matter for debate at ten o'clock tomorrow night.

ADMINISTRATION OF JUSTICE

LENGTHY DETENTION OF ACCUSED MAN WITHOUT TRIAL

Mr. David Orlikow (Winnipeg North): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the Minister of Justice? Has his attention been drawn to the case of the young man who was held in the Toronto jail for some months without having his case brought to trial? If so, will the minister look into the matter to see whether the rights of this person, as guaranteed under the Bill of Rights, were violated or whether new legislation is required?

Hon. John N. Turner (Minister of Justice): Mr. Speaker, we will have to discuss that with the Attorney General of Ontario as well.

Mr. Orlikow: Why, Mr. Speaker?

[Translation]

REGIONAL ECONOMIC EXPANSION

ABITIBI—CONSTRUCTION OF ACCESS ROAD

Mr. Gérard Laprise (Abitibi): Mr. Speaker, I would like to direct a question to the Minister of Regional Economic Expansion.

Has the minister received from the La Sarre Chamber of Commerce a letter requesting financial assistance from his department for the construction of the Villebois-James Bay road, and can he indicate to the House whether a favorable reply has been given in that respect?

Mr. Speaker: It seems to me that this question could be put on the order paper. I take the liberty to suggest to hon. members that such questions appear normally on the order paper, and when there is any urgency, hon. members can notify the Chair so that they may be debated at the time of adjournment.

CANADIAN CONSTITUTION

ESTABLISHMENT OF PRESIDENTIAL RÉGIME

Hon. Martial Asselin (Charlevoix): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Prime Minister.

Considering that for some time now the Prime Minister has apparently been giving thought to the establishment of a presidential system in Canada, and that he has stated, as shown on page—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member knows the Standing Orders. He knows that he must ask a question. It would seem to me that his remarks are not necessarily relevant to the question he wants to ask.

Mr. Asselin: Mr. Speaker, my question is related to the following remarks made by the Prime Minister in the House yesterday: "That is how you get a presidential system". My question is as follows:

Will the government submit to the committee responsible for reviewing the constitution a working paper on the possibility of establishing a presidential system in the country?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Oui, monsieur le président. In fact, we have already submitted to the constitutional conference a working paper stating the government position on this matter. I am surprised that the hon. member, who keeps up to date on these questions, has not read this document which is very explicit and states our position very plainly.

I might add that, as far as I am concerned, it is true that I am going to establish a presidential system and this is why I always address you as "monsieur le président" and not as "monsieur l'Orateur".

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

[English]

Mr. G. W. Baldwin (Peace River): A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Would the Prime Minister discuss with the President of the Privy Council the question of referring to the Standing Committee on Procedure and Organization ways and means of permitting members on both sides of the House to combat the very alarming and dangerous increase in executive power?

Mr. Trudeau: Mr. Speaker, as I just said to the hon. member for Charlevoix, the government's position on this has been made public. Documents tabled in the House of Commons on the constitution show what the attitude of this government is vis-à-vis parliament. But if the hon. member has not bothered to read these documents, I cannot suggest that going before another committee would be the solution.

[Translation]

Mr. Georges Valade (Sainte-Marie): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the Prime Minister if he speaks on behalf of the Liberal party or that of the Canadian government when he says that the position of the government is clear in this regard?

[English]

TAXATION

WHITE PAPER ON REFORM—REFUSAL OF CREDIT TO UTILITY SHAREHOLDERS FOR TAXES PAID BY CORPORATIONS

Hon. Robert L. Stanfield (Leader of the Opposition): I should like some further information from the Minister of Finance. I ask the minister whether the government is standing behind the proposal in the white paper to refuse to shareholders in gas and electric utilities in Canada any credit for taxes paid by their respective corporations? This proposal has already caused very substantial losses to shareholders in these corporations and is putting pressure on the provincial governments concerned to take over these companies.

Hon. E. J. Benson (Minister of Finance): As I have already indicated, our proposals in the white paper are exactly that, proposals. It is proposed in the white paper that all the taxes from these particular utilities go to the provinces. Therefore, it is not proposed that the gross up and credit be allowed to the shareholders by the government of Canada for money it has not received. That is the proposal in the white paper. We expect to have submissions on it to the parliamentary committee, which the hon. member will admit is the proper way of dealing with the matter. It is presently before this committee.

Mr. Stanfield: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Is it the policy of the government to pursue tax policies which encourage takeovers of these companies by governments in order to avoid the injurious effects of the minister's tax policies? Is it the minister's intention to pursue this unfortunate proposal or is he prepared to take it back and bring something forward along the lines in the—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. Minister of Finance will allow me to suggest to him, and to the House, that perhaps what he is being invited to do now is to make a statement which is much too general in scope and which should rather be made by way of an announcement of policy.

CONSUMER AFFAIRS

PROSECUTION OF IMPERIAL TOBACCO COMPANY FOR MISLEADING ADVERTISING

Mrs. Grace MacInnis (Vancouver-Kingsway): I have a question for the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs. I wish to assure the minister that I will not ask the nature of the decision but simply whether a decision has been reached to prosecute or not to prosecute in the case involving Casino cigarettes?

Hon. Ron Basford (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I am informed that charges were laid in Edmonton on February 2 against Imperial Tobacco Products Limited arising out of alleged monetary prizes of "$5 in every pack of New Casino". Charges were laid under section 33D(1) of the Combines Investigation Act. It would be improper for me to go any further.

LABOUR RELATIONS

VANCOUVER—ACCEPTANCE OF COLLECTIVE AGREEMENT BY LONGSHOREMEN

Mr. Ray Perrault (Burnaby-Seymour): I wish to direct a question to the Minister of Labour. Can the minister inform the House when it will be known if the members of the International Longshoremen's Union have accepted or rejected the collective agreement signed on their behalf by their committee recently?

Hon. Bryce Mackasey (Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, they are voting on that particular contract today. Having gone through this agony on two previous occasions, I imagine the final results will not be known until about eleven o'clock tonight, Ottawa time.

NEGOTIATIONS WITH LONGSHOREMEN AT EASTERN CANADIAN PORTS

Mr. Thomas M. Bell (Saint John-Lancaster): A supplementary question to the Minister of Labour. Can the minister give us a progress report on negotiations with longshoremen at eastern Canadian ports?

Hon. Bryce Mackasey (Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, I would like to be accurate in my answer in view of the hon. member's particular interest in the subject matter. I would prefer to make a more detailed answer tomorrow.

TRANSPORT

MOVEMENT OF GRAIN—RETURN OF CANADIAN BOXCARS FROM UNITED STATES

Mr. R. R. Southam (Qu'Appelle-Moose Mountain): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Transport. In light of the series of questions put to the minister last week with respect to the return of our wayward boxcars from the United States, can the minister advise the House what success he had with officials of the Canadian railroads in this regard at the meeting he indicated would be held with them at the first part of this week?

Inquiries of the Ministry

Hon. Donald C. Jamieson (Minister of Transport): Some success, Mr. Speaker, but perhaps not enough to satisfy hon. members opposite. They assured me they would do everything possible to repatriate as many of these cars as possible. In the meantime, both railways are undertaking a crash program to return to service a number of cars which I understand have been out of service for some time. There is a special effort under way in Winnipeg. I might add there is a search being made for additional locomotives in the United States which it might be possible to hire for use in this regard.

[Translation]

OFFICIAL LANGUAGES

APPOINTMENT OF COMMISSIONER

Hon. Théogène Ricard (Saint-Hyacinthe): Mr. Speaker, I should like to put a question to the Secretary of State.

Can he tell us when he expects to be in a position to give us the name of the Commissioner of Languages?

Hon. Gérard Pelletier (Secretary of State): In the very near future, Mr. Speaker.

Hon. Martial Asselin (Charlevoix): Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask a supplementary question. Indeed, whenever, in the past two months, we have asked the Secretary of State when he was going to appoint the Commissioner of Languages, he invariably answered: "Very soon".

An hon. Member: Be patient!

Mr. Asselin: Quite recently, he has appointed three directors for this organization without, however, appointing the president or the chief commissioner. I believe hon. members have a right to expect as soon as possible a clear and definite answer from the government since it has been two months—

[English]

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

UNITED STATES ABM SYSTEM—EVIDENCE RESPECTING ESCALATION—CANADIAN REPRESENTATIONS

Mr. Les Benjamin (Regina-Lake Centre): Mr. Speaker, I would like to direct a two-part question to the Prime Minister arising out of his answers last Monday concerning the United States anti-ballistic missile system. In the course of his remarks, the Prime Minister said that evidence which the government has does not show any evident escalation. Could the Prime Minister advise the House what his evidence constitutes since there has been no decision or no action by the U.S.S.R. and other countries which would indicate a similar view? Also, could he advise the House if it is the intention of the government, in a more formal and direct manner, to give notice to the United States government of the unhappiness of the Canadian government about the decision of that government?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): On the first part of the question, Mr. Speaker, I can only say that we have no evidence that the Soviet government, if that is the one the hon. member is thinking of, has considered this move as an escalatory one. I cannot add much detail to that. We have to rely on what information we get. The answer to the second part of the question, Mr. Speaker, is no, not at this time. I am not considering any further statement, nor is the minister.

PUBLIC WORKS

CHURCHILL—INQUIRY AS TO DEVELOPMENT OF TOWNSITE

Mr. Robert Simpson (Churchill): I wish to direct a question to the Minister of Public Works. In mid-November I directed a question to the minister asking him if he would enlighten the House in relation to the federal government's plans for the future development of the townsite of Churchill. At that time, the minister said it would depend entirely upon the relations between the federal government and the government of the province of Manitoba, and that discussions were then being held. I ask the minister if he has anything further to announce at this time or if he expects to make an announcement shortly.

Hon. Arthur Laing (Minister of Public Works): Not at this time, Mr. Speaker.

TAXATION

WHITE PAPER ON REFORM—CONFLICTING ESTIMATES OF INCREASED REVENUES

Mr. A. D. Hales (Wellington): I would like to direct a question to the Minister of Finance. Now that the minister has had a chance to communicate with the provincial treasurers, particularly the treasurer of Ontario, is he in a position to say whose computer was the most accurate and whether he proposes to make a new estimate on the proposed tax?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I have the impression that the question asked by the hon. member is substantially the same as the one asked by the hon. Leader of the Opposition earlier this afternoon.

TRANSPORT

EXPENSE OF ICEBREAKER SERVICES FOR SHIPS USING NORTHWEST PASSAGE

Mr. James A. McGrath (St. John's East): I wish to rephrase a question I directed to the Minister of Transport yesterday. What is the policy of the government regarding the expenses of icebreaker services through Canada's northwest passage for ships of the Humble Oil Company or any other United States oil company that may be using Canada's Northwest Passage?

Hon. Donald C. Jamieson (Minister of Transport): There are no firm rules, if I might describe them that way, in this regard. I think we have to measure the benefits that may come to us from any experimental activity. I may say on the last and only occasion that we have been asked for that kind of help, there was a good deal of reciprocity. For example, some of the fuels for the icebreaker were provided by the Humble Oil Company. We do not have a policy. If it becomes a matter of fairly regular use, I presume we would come to some specific arrangement.

AIR CANADA

REQUEST FOR STATEMENT ON SENIOR PERSONNEL CHANGES

Hon. Marcel Lambert (Edmonton West): I have a question for the Minister of Transport. Will the minister, at an early date, make a statement in the House with regard to the changes in the senior administrative positions of Air Canada outlining the motivations behind these changes?

Hon. Donald C. Jamieson (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I am not sure that is a proper matter on which I should make a statement. It is an internal arrangement within Air Canada. I will examine it. If it appears sensible for me to make a statement, I will do so.

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): Might I point out to the minister that he answers to Parliament on behalf of Air Canada and Parliament is asking the question.

Inquiries of the Ministry

HEALTH AND WELFARE

PROGRAM TO COVER COST OF DRUGS FOR OLD AGE PENSIONERS AND OTHERS

Mr. P. B. Rynard (Simcoe North): I wish to address a question to the Minister of National Health and Welfare. In view of the very severe hardships being suffered in many cases by old age pensioners and those on social services payments who find themselves covered by medicare but not for drugs, will the minister take immediate steps to implement a program of drug care so that these people will no longer suffer neglect?

Hon. John C. Munro (Minister of National Health and Welfare): I would advise the hon. member that under the provisions of the Canada Assistance Plan the provinces can initiate such measures themselves to provide drugs, and in some cases they do provide drugs to the poor and to the elderly under the plan. We share 50 per cent of the cost.

Mr. Rynard: I was addressing to the minister the question of urgency. I realize that this can be done, but in the case of urgency—

Mr. Munro: It can be done tomorrow.

[Translation]

CANADIAN CONSTITUTION

MODIFICATION OF EDUCATIONAL SYSTEM ACCORDING TO LANGUAGE

Mr. Gilbert Rondeau (Shefford): Mr. Speaker, I would like to put a question to the Prime Minister.

Can he tell the house whether the text of paragraphs 1 and 3 of section 93 of the British North America Act has been changed in order to enable the Quebec government to modify the education system according to the language used by the population and no longer according to its religious denomination as is stipulated in the British North America Act?

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member must admit that this question as put is not in order. He is asking a minister for a legal opinion and this is why, I think, the question is out of order.

[English]

THE MINISTRY

TYPE OF AIRCRAFT USED BY PRIME MINISTER

Mr. Robert Borrie (Prince George-Peace River): I have a question for the Prime Minister. Is the right hon. gentleman aware that Canadians across the country want their Prime Minister to travel by a means befitting his office, that is, by government aircraft?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I doubt whether the question is in order and I do not think a supplementary question would be in order. However, I will give the hon. member for Saint John-Lancaster the opportunity to ask a question in a few moments.

[Later:]

Mr. Thomas M. Bell (Saint John-Lancaster): One more question on the subject of air travel by the Prime Minister. Does the Prime Minister realize that while the Canadian people do want him to have the best while he is on government business, they never want him to use these planes for Liberal party trips?

SPORTS

PAN-AMERICAN GAMES—INQUIRY AS TO FINANCIAL ASSISTANCE TO WINNIPEG

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the Minister of Finance. Is the minister now in a position to tell me the status of the letter he promised me many months ago concerning the possibility of a further government grant to Winnipeg in connection with the deficit on the Pan-American Games in Canada's centennial year? Or perhaps he is in a position to say now that a favourable decision has been reached?

Hon. E. J. Benson (Minister of Finance): If I had mailed the letter, Mr. Speaker, the hon. member should take up this question with the Postmaster General. Seriously, though, I did not mail the letter, because I was not satisfied with it. I promised it to the hon. member as soon as possible and I hope he will give me some leeway—the usual leeway.

An hon. Member: At least two more years.

UNEMPLOYMENT INSURANCE

DELAY IN PAYMENT OF BENEFITS

Mr. W. B. Nesbitt (Oxford): My question is intended for the Minister of Labour. In view of the long delays which have occurred, and the complaints all through industrial Ontario concerning the processing of unemployment insurance claims, would the minister use his good offices with the Unemployment Insurance Commission to get these things speeded up?

[Mr. Barrie.]

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member has made a representation and he has to assume the minister will take note of it.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

PROPOSED U.S. NUCLEAR TESTS

Mr. R. Gordon L. Fairweather (Fundy-Royal): My question is directed to the Secretary of State for External Affairs. Will the minister recall that he stated, relative to the first atomic tests on Amchitka Island, that the results would be assessed by Canadian scientists, and will he assure us that the results of this study will be made public well before any other tests are made?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Our ambassador in Washington is inquiring of the United States government to obtain the results of the tests. This is in line with my answer the other day. These results will be examined by Canadian seismologists and other scientists. I am not sure whether the results of that study will be put out in a form suitable for publication, but I am satisfied I shall be asked the relevant questions in the House.

PUBLIC SERVICE

EXTRA CONTRIBUTIONS BY THOSE EMPLOYED TO COVER INCREASED BENEFITS FOR THOSE RETIRED

Mr. Robert McCleave (Halifax-East Hants): My question is for the President of the Treasury Board. Has the Treasury Board Secretariat advised the major bargaining agents for the public service that extra contributions will be made by those now working, and that part of those contributions will be used to help cover the cost of forthcoming increased benefits for those who have retired?

Mr. Speaker: I doubt whether the question is in order as asked. The hon. member is asking the minister whether such a statement has been made and the question cannot be put in that way.

Mr. Drury: I think I made it clear—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

Mr. McCleave: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a question of privilege affecting the privileges of Parliament, because I have documents and evidence of what is contained in forthcoming legislation. As far as I know, this is the only means I have of asking the responsible minister whether certain proposals or statements have been made. I am getting something through the back-door route which Parliament is not getting through the front-door route.

Mr. Speaker: Because of the circumstances he has outlined, the hon. member may have a grievance against the minister, but I do not think this would make it possible for him to ask his question in its present form at this time.

An hon. Member: Better lock your back door.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

LEGISLATION RESPECTING NATIONAL ANTHEM

Mr. J. M. Forrestall (Dartmouth-Halifax East): My question is directed to the Leader of the House. Does the absence from his list the other day, containing 74 items of business, of a measure to deal with the unanimous report of the Special Joint Committee on the Royal National Anthems indicate it is not the intention of the government to deal with this matter during the present session of Parliament as was promised?

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (President of the Privy Council): Yes, Mr. Speaker. I regret to say that some complications have developed in connection with copyright. Negotiations are now under way to resolve this problem but it looks very much, now, as though we shall not be in a position to place proposals before the House during the present session.

Mr. Forrestall: Could I ask whether this matter of negotiations with the copyright holders is something which is in process, or whether it is, in fact, dead?

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): It is my understanding that it is in process, but I have not received a recent report on the subject.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

APPLICATION RESPECTING FLOODING OF LAND NEAR SKAGIT RIVER

Mr. Randolph Harding (Kootenay West): I have a question for the Secretary of State for External Affairs. Has an application for further flooding of Canadian territory near the Skagit River, which is an international river in British Columbia, been received by the federal government from any source?

Mr. Speaker: This question should be placed on the Order Paper.

Mr. Harding: A question of privilege, Mr. Speaker. This is a current question which is vital to the people of this area. Rather than wait two or three months for an answer, I feel we are entitled to a reply from the minister on this important issue.

[Translation]

INVITATION TO PRESIDENT OF FRANCE TO VISIT OTTAWA

Mr. Bernard Dumont (Frontenac): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Prime Minister.

Since the Prime Minister seems very well disposed towards presidency and presidents as a whole, I wonder whether he is thinking today of inviting President Pompidou to visit Ottawa when he goes to New York.

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): I had not thought about it, Mr. Speaker, but I thank the hon. member for that good idea. I will consider it.

[English]

HOUSING

BUILDING SOCIETIES—REQUEST FOR FAVOURABLE TAX TREATMENT

Mr. Lincoln M. Alexander (Hamilton West): I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Finance, Mr. Speaker. Has the minister yet reached a decision regarding building societies and, if so, when can the House expect a statement from him?

Hon. E. J. Benson (Minister of Finance): I will look into this matter. I have reached a decision with respect to special tax advantages for building societies. I, personally, would not be in favour of special tax advantages for particular types of enterprises. There is nothing to stop them—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

CANADIAN NATIONAL RAILWAYS

NEWFOUNDLAND—DECISION AS TO INQUIRY INTO OPERATIONS

Mr. John Lundrigan (Gander-Twillingate): Mr. Speaker, this question is for the Minister of Transport. Can the minister indicate, in view of the request for an inquiry into CN operations in Newfoundland some three weeks ago, whether we can expect his decision in the near future?

Hon. Donald C. Jamieson (Minister of Transport): Yes Mr. Speaker. Some material relevant to the question asked is being prepared by Canadian National and I undertake to make it available to the hon. member as soon as it reaches me, which should be early next week.

TRANSPORT

ATLANTIC PROVINCES TASK FORCE

Mr. Charles H. Thomas (Moncton): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct this question to the Minister of Transport. Can the minister tell the House whether the Atlantic provinces task force on transportation is still in existence? If so, has he received any recent progress report from the task force?

Hon. Donald C. Jamieson (Minister of Transport): It is still in existence, Mr. Speaker. I have not received any report recently, but I understand there was a meeting in Moncton, if not last week, this week, and I have prodded and asked them to give me some recommendations as soon as possible.

Mr. Speaker: I apologize to the hon. member for Dauphin and the hon. member for South Western Nova for not recognizing them. We have already gone three minutes beyond time. I have personally referred to these hon. members so that I will remember tomorrow to give them precedence over other members.

PRIVILEGE

MR. NOWLAN—FAILURE OF PRIME MINISTER TO CORRECT "HANSARD"

Mr. J. P. Nowlan (Annapolis Valley): I rise on a question of privilege, Mr. Speaker.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Nowlan: That is all right, Mr. Speaker. Some hon. members may wonder why I rise now, after having sat through motions and the question period, but I had expected the Prime Minister to rise in his place to correct Hansard. It is because of the Prime Minister's failure to rise in his place to correct Hansard that I rise on a question of privilege which affects this institution and its procedures.

We have the interesting situation of the Prime Minister crying "foul" in the corridor but remaining mute in the House of Commons, not as the result of something that I or any other member of the opposition said, but something he said which is clearly and unequivocally recorded in Hansard for February 2, at page 3080.

[Mr. Jamieson.]

I might say, in order to assist some members opposite, that I have no desire to raise a picayune question of privilege on a picayune subject. The question I put to the Prime Minister on Monday, February 2, involved a very serious potential breach of parliamentary tradition on a most sensitive and potentially explosive subject. Certainly, it is a sensitive subject, Mr. Speaker. It involves the whole bilingual program and the third report of the B and B commission.

The interesting question I raised concerned whether the Prime Minister was trying to develop a policy whereby senior public servants would have the opportunity to express their personal views on this matter. I am glad that in the corridor, although not in this House, the Prime Minister corrected the record of the House of Commons. But that is not good enough. In view of the procedures of the House, I do not think members on this side have an obligation to try to correct ambiguous, controversial or contradictory reports of what a minister says in the House or what he says after going out into the corridor. I think it is incumbent upon the Prime Minister, if he feels he has been aggrieved because of problems in the House involving translation or because of commotion in the House, to stand up and clarify the record. I am glad he said something in the corridor. I still feel that he should have said it in the House.

What concerns me is that following the deliberations in this chamber, the Prime Minister clearly shouted foul because unanimous consent had not been given for him to make a correction. As has been demonstrated four times today, there is a time for members to rise in their places to correct procedural or substantive points in Hansard, and unanimous consent is not necessary.

I should like to refer to Hansard for February 2, page 3082, where it is recorded that I asked through you, Mr. Speaker, if the Prime Minister had correctly heard my question about the policy concerning federal public servants. You, Mr. Speaker, suggested the question was quite clear and that you had heard the answer. I repeated the question and answer before you started to cut me off, which it is within your discretion to do. After I had repeated the problem in respect of federal public servants concerning matters of government policy, the Prime Minister could have clarified the record and we would not have wasted the time we have. But because of the Prime Minister's peevishness, petulance or pique he would not speak. So, we have the situation today of statements being made in the corridor which would imply there is a concept in Parliament, I suggest, of a mock principle of Prime Ministerial participation, because the explanation or the excuse outside the chamber was that parliamentary procedure runs amok. I am not quoting the exact words, but I believe the Prime Minister said that if procedure in the House runs amok, the Prime Minister will answer yes to anything.

I shall conclude in about two minutes, Mr. Speaker. The first thing that came to my mind when I heard this statement by the Prime Minister was that it was a reflection on the Chair to suggest that the proceedings in the House run amok. You, Mr. Speaker, with your tact, experience and good sense, would assist the Prime Minister in understanding the question. What bothers me more is the flimsy, flim-flam excuse outside the House that the proceedings ran amok. If the Prime Minister had risen and said that he felt he had been misquoted, and had given us a reason, such as a problem in translation in the House, this whole matter could have been avoided. Indirectly, it is a reflection on Hansard.

Mr. Speaker: Order. The hon. member I believe has made his point. I do not think we should have a lengthy debate on the matter raised by the hon. member concerning whether the Prime Minister did or did not have an opportunity to make a correction to Hansard. I do not think we should go into all other aspects. At the same time, I think the Prime Minister may have some comment to make and I will invite hon. members after that not to pursue the matter further.

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My comments will be very brief. I am told I did not have the courage to speak in the House and went outside and cried foul. For the record, may I say that I did try to get the attention of the House to speak and it was because of some member in the hon. member's party that I was not given an opportunity to correct Hansard. Surely, under these circumstances, I cannot be blamed for having answered some questions outside the House which were asked of me on the subject on which I rose to get your attention, Mr. Speaker, concerning the fact that I said I wished to correct an error in Hansard which had just been brought to my attention. That is the fact of the matter. I had not seen Hansard earlier. I think an explanation is therefore in order.

The hon. member for Edmonton West referred to the unexplained absence of Hansard. The House did not have Hansard nor did I, at the time that we were on motions. Therefore I could not make my correction at that point. Hansard was just brought to my attention later. This is the very simple explanation.

Mr. Stanfield: May I ask the hon. Prime Minister what correction he wishes to make in Hansard?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. If the Leader of the Opposition wants to ask a question or has a point to make, I think he has a right to do so. I would suggest to hon. members that there is not much point, and I really do not see what can be gained, in pursuing the matter further.

• (4:00 p.m.)

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

YUKON PLACER MINING ACT

AMENDMENTS RESPECTING LOCATING OF CLAIMS, ETC.

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (for the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development) moved that Bill S-4, to amend the Yukon Placer Mining Act, be read the second time and referred to the Standing Committee on Indian Affairs and Northern Development.

Mr. Russell C. Honey (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): Thank you, Mr. Speaker. This bill is relatively simple and straightforward, but I think I probably should take a few minutes in introducing the second reading of the bill to explain and outline what is proposed in this amending legislation.

This bill was passed by the other place on November 17, 1969, and after second reading in that place the bill was considered in the Senate Standing Committee on Banking, Trade and Commerce and was reported back without amendment. Today, the placer mining industry in the Yukon does not have the importance it once held. As you know, Mr. Speaker, placer mining was at one time a thriving industry, particularly in the Dawson area, and represents an important and historic phase in the history of the Yukon. It is this phase that we intend to commemorate with the historic sites program to which I will refer in a moment.

From the period of 1897 to 1904, it is reported that the value of gold production exceeded $100 million. Most of this production was recovered by hand methods, such as pans, rockers and sluice boxes into which bold bearing gravel was shovelled and then washed. As transportation improved, thousands of tons of equipment were brought in and the scale of mining increased. Many claims were acquired and consolidated by corporations, with the individual miner being gradually replaced by large companies operating hydraulic and dredging plants. At one time, the Yukon Consolidated Gold Corporation had 9 dredges operating in the creeks in the vicinity of Dawson City. However, all dredging operations were closed down in the fall of 1966 when recovery of gold in this manner became uneconomic. Today, placer mining is conducted on a very small scale, comprising some 30 small one and two man operations, using bulldozers to push the gold bearing gravels into sluice boxes. Most of the creek beds in the Klondike area, where for the past 72 years placer mining was concentrated, have now been mined in one way or another. There is, of course, still some gold in the benches and in the hills, but it is extremely unlikely that further large-scale recovery of gold could be economical.

Under the Act which is proposed to be amended by this bill, the person staking a claim has all rights, not only to the minerals but all surface rights. The government does not even have the authority to set aside lands for roads, railways or pipeline rights of way, an historic site, national park, or any other public purpose. In the Yukon, all surface rights which have not been alienated for private purposes are still vested in the Crown in the right of Canada. All of these lands, at the present time, are now available to the placer prospector for claim staking. Under bill S-4, the government will have the authority where it feels there is a need for a road, airport, national park, or what have you for public purposes, to withdraw such lands as are required for such public purpose from the operation of the Yukon Placer Mining Act. Then, those lands could not be staked for placer mining purposes.

Of course, this legislation is not retroactive. In the case of existing claims under placer mining regulations, if the government required the land on which the claims were staked it would have to deal with the claim owner in the regular way by purchase or expropriation. Under the existing statute, which we propose to amend, only lands within the boundaries of a city, town, village, land occupied by a building, or forming part of an Indian reserve, are not subject to claim for placer mining purposes. I might give hon. members the following example of the application of the present law.

On November 1, the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development (Mr. Chrétien) announced in Whitehorse that the government had approved his recommendation for a $1.7 million historical sites program in the Yukon territory and also stated that the government had reached an agreement with the Yukon Consolidated Gold Corporation to purchase the "Gold Room" now located at the company's establishment at Bear Creek near Dawson City and which the government, through the department, proposes to move to Bonanza creek. There is already a commemorative plaque erected near the site of the "discovery claim" and a considerable amount of public funds have been spent in maintaining this site. As previously stated, there is no provision in the Act to protect such lands from its application.

Considering, therefore, the limited extent of the industry to-day, the amendments proposed in the Bill are of minor significance. As I have mentioned, these proposals are not retroactive and cannot, therefore, affect existing rights. As hon. members know, after second reading the bill will, of course, be referred to the Standing Committee on Indian Affairs and Northern Development.

Of course, hon. members of the committee will have an opportunity, if they wish, to examine this measure in more detail.

Mr. W. B. Nesbitt (Oxford): Mr. Speaker, I have a few brief comments to make on this bill because, as the parliamentary secretary has said, it will be referred to the Standing Committee on Indian Affairs and Northern Development, where questions in detail will be asked.

It is my hope, and perhaps the parliamentary secretary can give us some assurance in this regard, that there will be people from the Yukon who may wish to make representations before the committee. While I realize that this is up to the committee to decide, I hope the parliamentary secretary will use his good offices to ensure that those who might wish to make appropriate statements to the committee will have the opportunity of doing so. I hope such arrangements will be made for those from the Yukon who are interested in doing so.

Mr. Thomas S. Barnett (Comox-Alberni): Mr. Speaker, in introducing the bill the parliamentary secretary was, in effect, telling the House that there is no more gold in "them thar hills". I suppose this is one way of announcing the passage of an era that made Canada famous around the world at the time the original rush to the Klondike occurred. I am not sure that one should feel he is optimistic in hoping there might yet be some places within the boundaries of the Yukon or in some other part of Canada where the kind of activity that is characteristic of a placer gold mining rush might again occur.

The bill, as it is proposed, should find general acceptance by members of the House because it does meet some of the situations which arise, other than historic ones, in respect of placer mining in the Yukon. It does clarify the prior right for land use and other purposes, particularly public purposes. I was glad to hear the reference to the proposal, which this bill will safeguard, for the development of the Dawson area as a national historic site in Canada. Those of the members of the committee who had the privilege of visiting Dawson, and being entertained there, I think would all agree that it has an attraction which is unique and can properly be considered to be part of our national heritage. I suppose in discussing this bill one could raise the issue of whether or not the legislative jurisdiction which is being exercised by this Parliament should not more properly be put in the hands of the Territorial Council of the Yukon. However, I think perhaps there are, and will be, other more appropriate occasions on which to discuss this issue in a broad way.

• (4:10 p.m.)

There is one particular point that I would like to mention because I did not hear the parliamentary secretary touch upon it. I did some research into the proposed changes, and it may be important to note that the bill does not change the exemption of Indian lands which is provided for in section 17 of the Act. I took the trouble to check the meaning of the section, which refers to the Territorial Lands Act, paragraph (d) of section 18, and noted that reference is made in that section of the Territorial Lands Act to lands for the use of Indian people. Therefore, the bill does not forfeit, as I was initially afraid that it might, the exemption that is provided in the present act for lands that form part of an Indian reserve. This is a subject matter which we may wish to explore and have more fully clarified in the committee. As I understand the situation, however, that is the meaning of paragraph (d) as it appears in clause 1 of the proposed new legislation. The parliamentary secretary might wish to make some comment to clarify my understanding of it when he closes this debate.

Having said that, I agree with the proposal that full opportunity should be given to anyone, particularly from the Yukon, who wishes to make representations on the bill, to the committee, to do so when the bill is before the committee.

[Translation]

Mr. René Matte (Champlain): Mr. Speaker, at first sight at least, there should not be any objection to this bill, particularly in view of the fact that the Créditistes have been telling the whole world, and even our leading economists, that our currency was not based on gold.

Money should at least be based on real credit, on real values, on true potential. This is what is meant by confidence in money.

They used to poke fun at us a few years ago when we said to the people that the value of our currency was not based on the famous gold standard. Since then, everyone has recognized that gold has practically lost all its value. It costs more to mine than it is worth. Therefore, it follows that this bill—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Béchard): Order. I would suggest to the hon. member to confine his remarks to the bill which is now before the house because I think that he is now out of order.

Mr. Matte: I apologize, Mr. Speaker. I thought that the bill was dealing with gold.

As I was saying, we will not oppose this bill. However, it would be advisable to bring in a few amendments since, in any case, gold today has practically no value compared to the cost of mining it.

When the bill is before the committee, I might add a few other comments.

[English]

Mr. Rod Thomson (Battleford-Kindersley): Mr. Speaker, I would just like to raise one or two points with regard to this bill. I was wondering perhaps whether the minister would consider allowing the Yukon Council to help define what land should be set aside for public purposes rather than have this done by the Governor in Council. It seems to me that some of the unhappiness with Ottawa stems from the fact that decisions are made in Ottawa rather than by representatives who are closer to the developments in the Yukon and the Northwest Territories. I discussed some of these matters with these people and they argue, rightly or wrongly, that Ottawa does not understand the problems that they have in that area and that perhaps decisions could better be made by local representatives, people who live there and who are going to suffer or benefit from some of these recommendations or laws that we pass here in Ottawa.

I wonder if the minister would consider this point? I also wish to ask him whether the Yukon Council made representations on this or any other matter. Have they asked for some voice in this type of local legislation in which they are vitally concerned? I support the bill. I think that there are probably considerable amounts of minerals in the Yukon, but perhaps we will have a chance to have a closer look at the bill when it goes to the committee. However, I raised a point and I hope the minister will care to comment on it.

Hon. W. G. Dinsdale (Brandon-Souris): Mr. Speaker, this is in fact becoming a northern day in the House of Commons. Earlier this afternoon the interesting announcement was made that the government has decided to continue its participation in Panarctic's exploration in the Canadian Arctic. Now, we have a further indication of the government's growing awareness of the importance of the north in the form of Bill S-4, and also in some of the comments that were made by the parliamentary secretary when he introduced the bill before us.

I would like to join those who have spoken briefly this afternoon in encouraging the closest possible consultation with the Council of the Yukon Territory with reference to this bill and, of course, with reference to all the interesting developments that are taking place in the Yukon at present.

• (4:20 p.m.)

One of the growing concerns of Yukoners is the fact that they are not being permitted by the government to exercise sufficient control and influence in determining their own destiny. All they are really asking for is the acceptance of a fundamental principle of democracy, and that is the right of self-determination. I think that when this bill goes before the committee it would be an excellent idea if a member of the Council could appear before it so that he might comment on the attitude of the Territorial Council with reference to this important development.

[Mr. Thomson.]

The comment by the parliamentary secretary that drew my attention when he was introducing the bill was the fact that at long last the government is deciding to continue the program of historic restoration that was begun back in 1960. This has been a sensitive and delicate point to the Yukon Territory. I am sure hon. members are aware that following the upsurge of interest in historic prospects of the Yukon, largely centred in the old city of Dawson and the route that was made immortal by the gold rush of 1898, interest subsided. It was only the continuing enthusiasm of the Yukoners themselves that maintained interest in the historic prospects, and in the meantime other areas of Canada which I shall not mention—

Mr. Barnett: Like Edmonton, for example.

Mr. Dinsdale: —which I shall not mention to avoid being controversial, had picked up the idea of the Klondike theme and were exploiting it for commercial rather than historic purposes.

The result of that development, as those of us who are interested in the north are fully aware, was a Yukon Protective Society. Many of us joined it and gave financial support. We are proud owners of certificates which indicate we are a part of that relatively small number who are anxious that the historic rather than the commercial aspects of the historic past of the Yukon Territory should be preserved. I think it was largely due to the efforts of this Yukon Klondike Protective Society that certain parts of Canada, again that we shall not mention in order not to be controversial, were prevented from using the Klondike theme at the Great Canadian World Fair that was held at Expo in Montreal during our centennial celebrations.

Mr. Woolliams: Judy La Marsh wasn't very kind.

Mr. Dinsdale: I would think that this unfortunate and very diversionary tactic which detracted from the exact locale of the gold rush of 1898, could have been avoided if the government had shown more continuing interest. Perhaps I am a little over-sensitive on this issue because, when I was the responsible minister the expenditure of a sum of some $500,000 for historic restoration was severely criticized as being extravagant and wasteful. It was said the Yukon Territory was not worth that sort of expenditure, even though we were putting millions of dollars into the preparation of Expo, an event which lasted for one year.

The then Liberal opposition had the audacity to criticize this relatively small expenditure on the commemoration and preservation for posterity of what has now become regarded by all Canadians as our historic gem. The criticism at that time of course was more politically based than it was historically based, because the Yukon Territory, like other parts of the north, does not represent any substantial political force in terms of membership in this House of Commons. There have been these significant developments in the past few years in the north and the government has belatedly decided now to continue the program that began in 1960. We have already heard today that the government is continuing its support of Panarctic Oils. Last week the Anvil Mining Corporation officially began its operations in the Yukon. This represents a development that will have the same economic impact on the Yukon that the Pine Point Mining Development has had on the Northwest Territories.

It was rather an ironic twist of fate and fortune that the part of the north which gave the most enthusiastic support to the idea of commemorating the gold rush of 1898 during the festivities of 1961 was the State of Alaska. Alaska, a part of the United States, was far ahead in its development of its part of the north, further ahead than we were. As a result, again unhappily and unfortunately for the economic prospects of Canada, they were the first to discover a large reservoir of oil up on Prudhoe Bay. Now everybody wants into the northern act.

I am sure that if the government of Canada, since 1963, had continued to support enthusiastically the work that had begun in the north, without the long years of delay, it is quite possible that Canada would have had the first oil discovery rather than the United States of America in the State of Alaska.

In 1961 a ceremony took place at Bonanza Creek which officially declared the whole complex of Dawson City to be an historic site. The $1.7 million that the parliamentary secretary has mentioned as being made available for the continuation of the restoration in Dawson City and along the gold rush trail, will at least make up for some of the years that have been lost over the long period of the government's negative response to this positive program for the north.

The tragedy is that some of the pioneers who were still living in 1961 are no longer with us. There were still some of the old sourdoughs who had crossed the trail of 1898 in the land of the living when the cairn was unveiled on July 1, Dominion Day, in 1961. I had the privilege, as the responsible minister, of presiding at the ceremony on that occasion. They have gone but the story of romance and adventure that they left behind has been written for all to read in the works of Jack London and in the poems of Robert Service. I would commend the government for its decision, even at this late date, to carry on this important work of historical commemoration.

• (4:30 p.m.)

Mr. Randolph Harding (Kootenay West): Mr. Speaker, I should like to say just a few words on Bill S-4, to amend the Yukon Placer Mining Act. I have listened with interest to the explanations of the legislation given in short talks by the other members. However, there is one section here to which a reply should be given in closing the debate. I notice that section 19, which relates to surface rights, has been knocked out of the act. I feel that a little further information on this section could be given to the House when the debate is closed.

There are a couple of other points that I should like to draw to the attention of the department. I see that people can stake placer claims in most areas in the Yukon but one of the forbidden areas, of course, would be a national park. We have had occasion to set up additional national parks, and I do not think there is any doubt that some more will be opened in the Yukon area. There should be some provision in this bill to deal with the situation where an individual has a claim, and then a park is established around it. Now that the act is open, I see no reason why a technicality of this nature should not be dealt with.

When we talk about placer claims, Mr. Speaker, most people imagine that it means an individual going out with a little gold pan and testing the rivers and streams that abound in that area. But this is not always so. Sometimes placer mining is done on a huge scale, with dredges and sluicing though I believe most dredges in the Yukon have been shut down. The chances are, however, that in the years to come there will be very extensive dredge work in this area because there is no doubt that there is still lots of gold there. People will go back at a later date with more refined equipment to attempt to recover it.

In my opinion, every piece of legislation affecting this area should first be discussed fully with the Territorial Council. Some day the area will be self-governing, and we should be seeking the advice of people on the spot with regard to legislation such as this bill.

The other point that I should like to draw to the attention of the department relates to pollution regulations, in which I am extremely interested, but I am not trying to stop any placer miner from getting a panful of gravel or from carrying on a sluicing operation. This government has already indicated that during this session there will be a bill which will deal with oil and other pollution in the Arctic. This is urgently needed. Oil drilling and exploration is just one phase of the mining activity carried on in the north. There is no reason why some sort of pollution regulations should not be included in this act. As I say, I am not thinking in terms of the very small operation but in terms of the future when new equipment can be brought into the area, new techniques can be used, and when pollution could become a major hazard. I do not think there is any legislation that should not have this type of protection in it. It should not be so restrictive as to stop people from carrying out the normal operation of placer mining, however.

There is not very much more I want to say, Mr. Speaker. The amendments are fairly simple and the government seems to have made one or two steps forward in the changes they are making. I think there are other sections of the act, however, that should be looked at now that the act is open. I trust the two or three suggestions I have made will be considered by the department and perhaps followed up by some minor amendments to the bill before us.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Béchard): I must advise the House that if the hon. Parliamentary Secretary speaks at this time he will close the debate.

Mr. Honey: Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to have the opportunity to deal with the several items raised by hon. members opposite in the helpful participation of this debate, and possibly I should try to deal with them in the order in which they were raised.

The hon. member for Oxford (Mr. Nesbitt) suggested that he would be hopeful, and I join him in that hope, that interested people from the Yukon would be heard by the Parliamentary Committee. The hon. member knows that it is not within our respective jurisdictions to direct the committee, but I know that the chairman and members of the committee will be aware of his suggestions in this regard. I might just comment in passing, Mr. Speaker, that I hope, and I know my hon. friend from Oxford would agree, that there might be more interest shown than there was when this legislation was before the Senate Standing Committee on Banking, Trade and Commerce, when there were no witnesses or representations other than the departmental officials.

The hon. member for Comox-Alberni (Mr. Barnett) asked me to reassure him that the provision withdrawing Indian reserves from the operation of this legislation, which did exist in the previous legislation, was not removed in the amending legislation. I can give him that assurance and confirm what I gathered were the results of his research in this regard.

The particular section of the amending legislation now before the House, Mr. Speaker, is section 1 (2) (d) which says in effect that staking of placer claims will not be carried out in various areas, and one of them under subsection (d) does not apply to lands set apart and appropriated by the Governor in Council for any purpose set out in section 18 (d) of the Territorial Lands Act. Maybe I should read that particular subsection into the record. It provides that the Governor in Council may:

> set apart and appropriate such areas or lands as may be necessary to enable the government of Canada to fulfil its obligations under treaties with the Indians to make free grants or leases for such purposes, and for any other purpose that he may consider to be conducive to the welfare of the Indians;

I think that answers the concern expressed by the hon. member for Comox-Alberni.

• (4:40 p.m.)

Mr. Barnett: Mr. Speaker, I wonder if the parliamentary secretary will permit a question? If I heard him correctly, he made a reference to legislation respecting the Territorial Council. My understanding is that the Territorial Lands Act passed by this parliament is in relation to the Territories. Is this correct?

Mr. Honey: Perhaps I could deal with that question within the context of the matter raised by the hon. member for Battleford-Kindersley (Mr. Thomson). Under clause 1 (2) of Bill S-4, there is reference, to lands that are set apart and appropriated by the Governor in Council, that being the Governor in Council with respect to the federal authority, for any purpose described in paragraph (d) of section 18 of the Territorial Lands Act. The reference there, of course, is for purposes for which Indian reserves are set aside for the benefit of Indians. In that regard, the hon. member for Battleford-Kindersley raised the question of whether the Council of the Yukon Territories is consulted, particularly with respect to lands to be withdrawn for public purposes. I am assured that that is the case.

I think I might spend a minute to draw a distinction, because the hon. member for Battleford-Kindersley asked if the Yukon Territorial Council had a say in what lands are to be withdrawn from the operation of this act. Of course, I can assure him that there is consultation. It is important for us to keep in mind that under the Territorial Lands Act, the Council of the Yukon Territory may withdraw, appropriate or set aside lands for its purposes. Passage of Bill S-4 which we are now considering will not interfere with that right of the Territorial Council. That is not the intention. Subclause 2 of clause 1 of the bill refers to lands to which the Yukon Placer Mining Act does not apply. It refers to lands which are to be used in the right of Canada and, if I may use the expression, for federal purposes. It is important to keep that distinction in mind.

The next question or suggestion was made by the hon. member for Brandon-Souris (Mr. Dinsdale), who is concerned about the question of close consultation with the Yukon Territorial Council and groups in the Territory. I was in Whitehorse with the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development (Mr. Chrétien) in November last and had the opportunity personally of meeting with the executive of the Yukon Chamber of Mines. Among the things discussed was this legislation. The Chamber has copies of the legislation and I am sure it has considered it. So, I think I can put the legitimate concern of the hon. member at rest in that regard because the people who would be most directly affected, those whose mining interests are represented by the Chamber of Mines, have been consulted and are aware of this legislation.

Lastly, may I refer to the questions raised by the hon. member for Kootenay West (Mr. Harding), who asked why section 19 of the placer mining act has been removed by this amending legislation. If hon. members will look at the explanatory note they will see why section 19 is being repealed. When section 19 was in force, it was possible for a mine owner to tie up not only mineral rights but surface rights in a particular piece of land indefinitely, because he was given, and the Crown was required to give this to him, the first chance of refusal of the purchase of the surface rights. The effect of this legislation, together with the removal of section 19, will mean that it will be possible to have multipurpose uses of a particular piece of land, as is the general practice throughout Canada where mineral rights may be vested in one person or corporation and property rights in another. By repealing section 19, the effect of the amending legislation is that one person cannot tie up a whole estate in a particular piece of property. I do not say necessarily that this would happen, but there was that freedom of action.

Mr. Woolliams: The parliamentary secretary is filibustering his own bill.

Mr. Honey: Mr. Speaker, I think these are the only remarks I wish to make about the questions that have been raised. Perhaps I could deal with other matters in committee, when officials of the department will attend.

Motion agreed to, bill read the second time and referred to the Standing Committee on Indian Affairs and Northern Development.

NATIONAL PARKS ACT

AMENDMENTS RESPECTING DEFINITION, ACQUISITION, ADMINISTRATION, ETC.

Hon. G. J. McIlraith (for Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development) moved that Bill C-152, to amend the National Parks Act, be read the second time and referred to the Standing Committee on Indian Affairs and Northern Development.

Mr. Russell C. Honey (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): Mr. Speaker, in introducing this legislation for debate on second reading may I spend a moment or two in referring to some of the legislation background of the bill. Hon. members who were in the House in 1967 will recall that the standing committee on northern affairs and natural resources dealt with this matter. No doubt they heard the minister of the day indicate to the committee that it was his intention to bring forward legislation with respect to a leasehold corporation within the reasonable future. He indicated he would recommend this type of legislation to Parliament. The minister of the day had under his name on the Order Paper a resolution indicating his intention to introduce this type of legislation. On May 10, 1967 the resolution authorizing the establishment of a Crown corporation for leasehold purposes in national parks appeared on the Order Paper. For reasons that are not relevant here, that particular notice of motion was not proceeded with. I expect hon. members have had an opportunity to read Bill C-152—

Mr. Woolliams: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a question of privilege. I hope that the parliamentary secretary today will not leave the impression that the standing committee he referred to met in Banff and Jasper, that briefs were presented by citizens of the area and that in one of those briefs they asked for this kind of legislation. I was a member of the committee and I say that if the minister made the kind of suggestion to which the Parliamentary secretary referred, it was not made in front of the people of Banff or Jasper. This is a cover up.

• (4:50 p.m.)

Mr. Honey: Mr. Speaker, I take it my hon. friend heard my remarks a moment ago and that he can understand them as well as anyone. They are on record in Hansard. I say to the hon. member that I did not intend to leave the impression that the remarks meant anything more than what the plain, ordinary sense of them on reading will indicate.

As I said before the interjection of the hon. member, Mr. Speaker, members have had an opportunity now for some time to read Bill C-152. I would like to say something about the bill and the reason we are asking Parliament at this time to amend the National Parks Act.

During the past few years the rate of social, economic and technological change has increased the complexity of administering Canada's national parks. Visitation to the parks has increased tremendously and is continuing at the rate of approximately 10 per cent per year. In addition to the basic requirement for additional visitor accommodation in the parks, the increased visitation has also underlined the need for many new national parks and for rationalization of the use that is made of existing parks. In other words, it has become more important than ever before to ensure that our parks are used consistent with the best national interest.

The department's leasehold policy, covering both private dwellings and commercial establishments in the national parks has gone a long way to ensure that private interests in the national parks do, in effect, serve the needs of the nation and the visiting public. Under departmental policy, persons in business or employed in the parks may reside there. Commercial leases are granted only where, in the minister's opinion, there is a need for this or that particular visitor service. Assignment and reassignment of leases are controlled by the department. Also under our policy, the duration and conditions of leases, and particularly commercial leases, must be such that full control is exercised by the government, on behalf of the people of Canada, on what services are provided, where they are provided, how they are provided and for what duration.

There is yet another aspect of our policy dictated by the underlying principle that national parks are public lands held in trust for the benefit, enjoyment and education of all Canadians. That aspect, Mr. Speaker, is the question of financial return to the Crown as a result of private commercial activity in the parks. Such activity thrives and grows, to a very large extent, by virtue of the very presence of the parks and the millions of dollars invested by the Canadian taxpayers in their acquisition and development. Consequently, it is important that there be a commensurate financial return from the commercial opportunities offered within the parks.

The point I wish to make here, Mr. Speaker, concerns not only the merits of our policy, but the need to choose the best instrument available to implement the policy. The minister thought it important to show, in a general way, how our policy is essential to the best use of Canada's national parks. I now want to show in more detail how and by what instrument this policy can best be applied. The instrument that is being proposed is the National Parks Leaseholds Corporation. The institution of this corporation is the main object of Bill C-152. The bill also deals with several other matters that I shall mention later.

The National Parks Leaseholds Corporation is conceived as a commercial Crown corporation to administer all leases in the national parks and those public park lands intended for commercial uses that may be entrusted to its management. It is not intended that the corporation engage itself in any way in the administration or management of park lands as such, or what may be more generally described as "green areas". We are convinced that a commercial organization is indeed best suited to administer what are essentially commercial interests. However, it must be a publicly owned commercial organization, accountable to the government and ultimately Parliament, because it will serve objectives that must be consistent with the purposes of national parks and more generally with the best public interest.

The establishment of the Leaseholds Corporation will have an important effect on the national parks administration. It will free the parks organization from the complex and specialized business of commercial property management, thereby enabling it to concentrate its efforts on the planning, development and preservation of national parks. Bill C-152, in so far as it concerns the National Parks Leaseholds Corporation, provides for the constitution, organization, financing and the powers of the corporation. The objects and powers of the corporation are such that it will be able to assume the control and management of such public lands in the parks, and of such commercial facilities within the parks as may be entrusted to it.

The powers of the corporation will be sufficiently broad to enable it to construct and operate commercial facilities in the parks or alternatively to arrange for the construction and operation of such facilities if it so chooses. The intention here is that the corporation be in a position to satisfy the requirements of the parks for visitor services in the most advantageous way within the context of the National Parks Act and Regulations. Thus, development could range from construction and operation by a lessee, through a partnership arrangement with the corporation to a situation where a facility is constructed and operated by the corporation itself.

In the latter regard, there have been and presumably will continue to be, instances where there is a need for visitor service facilities but where economic and/or social conditions are not conducive to an investment by the private sector of the economy. I am reminded of at least two instances in the relatively recent past, Terra Nova Bungalows, Terra Nova National Park and the Alpine Chalets and Motel, Fundy National Park, where a demand existed for public accommodation but where the prospective rate of return on an investment by the private sector was such that no one could be interested in fulfilling this demand. In these two instances, the department financed the construction of the required facilities and, in due course, leased them to private groups for their operation.

In all matters assigned to it, the corporation will operate within the context of the National Parks Act and regulations, and such other governing legislation as may apply. In the discharge of its responsibilities, the corporation will, with the approval of the Governor in Council and in respect only of limited estates or interests in public lands in the parks, have the powers of the Crown as provided for in the Expropriation Act. Thus, the corporation's powers of expropriation are less than those now available to the minister. The right of expropriation will enable the corporation to assemble public lands in the parks for redevelopment purposes or to extinguish, with compensation, certain rights previously conveyed by the Crown.

The corporation will be subject to legal recourse by its lessees, agents, contractors, or the general public; in other words, it may sue or be sued in any court that would have jurisdiction if the corporation were not an agent of Her Majesty.

It is intended that the corporation be allowed to borrow money from private sources at its discretion. Under such circumstances, however, these loans would not be guaranteed obligations of the government of Canada. This authority precludes the necessity of the corporation looking to public funds for such things as short term borrowings, working capital requirements, etc.

The financial provisions of the bill enable the Minister of Finance (Mr. Benson) to make loans to the corporation on terms and conditions approved by the Governor in Council. Such loans cannot exceed $20 million in aggregate. The corporation will be able, however, to borrow money from other sources, thus precluding the necessity for it to come back through government machinery for capital. This will provide the flexibility and initiative necessary for the corporation to develop, within the limits of what is appropriate in a park, all of the commercial possibilities with a maximum return to the corporation.

• (5:00 p.m.)

While the corporation must have considerable latitude in these and other matters, it will not have unlimited scope. The control of capital and operating budgets, as provided under section 80 of the Financial Administration Act, will apply. In other words, it is envisaged that the Leaseholds Corporation will function in a budgetary control sense in the same way as the Northern Canada Power Commission, Crown Assets Disposal Corporation and others. Also, Treasury Board may establish the maximum amount in terms of the Corporation's gross receipts that it may spend annually for administration purposes. I particularly want to emphasize that while the corporation should have as much freedom as possible in the conduct of its business, it will by law be restricted to enterprise that is consistent with the purposes for which the parks are dedicated. Inasmuch as the corporation will be subject to the National Parks Act and regulations, and inasmuch as the Governor in Council and the minister retain the right to remove from the corporation's control any lands or facilities, the minister will always have the authority necessary to control the activities of the corporation in all parks.

The net earnings of the corporation will be credited to a fund to be known as the Parks Development Fund. This fund will be used by the corporation in the conduct of its business. Provision is made whereby the Governor in Council may establish the maximum amount that the Parks Development Fund may contain, and earnings in excess will be deposited in the Consolidated Revenue Fund.

In conclusion, Mr. Speaker, I would like to summarize the remaining aspects of Bill C-152. The bill provides authority for members of the Royal Canadian Mounted Police to collect volun ary penalties for infractions of the National Parks Highway Traffic Regulations. Present regulations require that traffic violations be heard before a court of law. In many cases, this represents delays and inconvenience to visitors, especially to those who live far from the park and who are travelling on a schedule.

The bill also provides for new legal descriptions of Banff, Jasper, Waterton Lakes, Yoho, Kootenay, Mount Revelstoke, Prince Albert, Riding Mountain, Georgian Bay Islands and Prince Edward Island National Parks. As well, it provides for the deletion of Fort Beauséjour Historic Park and Fort Anne Historic Park from the schedule of national parks. It is proposed that these two parks be set aside as national historic parks by the Governor in Council pursuant to section 10 of the National Parks Act.

The amendment further provides for a legal description of Terra Nova National Park in Newfoundland to be added to this schedule. When Terra Nova was proclaimed a national park on May 11, 1957, a legal survey under the Canada Lands Surveys Act had not been completed. The legal description should now be included.

[Mr. Woolliams.]

Bill C-152 also provides for the establishment of a national park in the area of Kejimkujik Lake in Nova Scotia. Since 1963, negotiations have been taking place with the Province of Nova Scotia for the establishment of a second national park in that province. Agreement has been reached with the province on the boundaries of the proposed park and the province has made the land available, free of all encumbrances. The area of the new park, to be known as Kejimkujik National Park, is approximately 145 square miles.

The bill further provides legislative authority for the Governor in Council to add, from time to time, Crown-owned lands to the national parks. Under the existing legislation, additional lands acquired for park purposes can only be added to the schedule by amending the National Parks Act. Until such amendment is made, the lands cannot be managed under the authority of the act or regulations. Bill C-152 will enable such new lands to be brought under the National Parks Act and regulations by order in council. While the amendment will facilitate the addition of lands to the system, an act of Parliament will continue to be required before any lands may be removed.

I have to thank hon. members for allowing me this opportunity to introduce the bill on second reading. When it has been given second reading it will, of course, be referred to the Standing Committee on Indian Affairs and Northern Development. Interested people—and I know that a considerable amount of interest has been shown in this legislation, particularly by those in the parks area—will have an opportunity to appear before the committee as, of course, will senior officials of the department.

Mr. W. B. Nesbitt (Oxford): Before commenting on the substance of the bill before us, I must at this point register my strongest objection to the manner in which this legislation is being presented in the House.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Nesbitt: This bill has been put forward and presented by the government, with all the publicity available to it, as one of the major pieces of legislation to be dealt with during the present session. What happens? It was brought in this afternoon, and there was no minister here to present it. This is no reflection on the Parliamentary Secretary, who is doing his job very well. But there is no minister here to present the legislation, and it is my understanding that the minister concerned will also be absent from the House when the debate continues tomorrow. In all the years I have been here—and their number is considerable—I have never known Parliament treated in this cavalier fashion.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Deachman: On a point of order. If this is such an important piece of legislation, where are your members? Why are they not listening to it?

Mr. Nesbitt: I was just hoping somebody across the way would ask that question. I think they were so disgusted at the don't-give-a-damn attitude of the government with regard to this legislation that they didn't feel like coming; they chose to do other work. A few moments ago there were only 11 Liberal members in the House. It is up to you to keep a quorum.

An hon. Member: There are 15.

Mr. Woolliams: They are coming in, now. Here is the beard boy.

Mr. Langlois: I should like to see you with a beard.

Mr. Nesbitt: Members over on that side do all their talking from their seats. I have a great deal more to say on this subject.

This whole performance, this whole effort to play down the bill in front of us, may have something to do with the manner in which the minister was received when he was out visiting the national parks area of Banff and Jasper recently after he had addressed his wellknown admoni ion to the leaseholders out there: If you don't like it, get off the property; go east, go west, but don't stay here. This whole attitude is typical of what we have seen in the last few months in this Parliament.

As I say, this bill was announced as one of the great pieces of legislation to be presented to Parliament this session, though, of course, the government must have changed its mind in this regard because they do not seem to be treating it now with the importance they had previously ascribed to it. What does it do? It makes some relatively minor adjustments in the boundaries of the national parks, reducing the size of most of them, from what I have been able to gather. What else does it do? In a nutshell, it sets up a corporation to carry out the administration and to make policy for the national parks. If ever I saw a glorious, grand and blatant opportunity for patronage, this is it.

• (5:10 p.m.)

This is a deceptive bill. At first glance it does not appear to give an unwarranted degree of power to the National Parks Leasehold Corporation. The object of the bill, apparently, is to put into the hands of the corporation the day to day management of the properties of the federal government in its national parks. As the parliamentary secretary put it, this would have quite an effect on the management of the parks. I think that is putting it mildly. The bill is drafted in such a vague manner that in practice the powers to be exercised by the corporation may be considerable. There are many examples of such dangerous vagueness. I know it is not the custom at this stage of a bill to go into the detail of the clauses. I do not propose to do so, other than to illustrate the point that the bill is very deceptive and vague. In my view it is purposely drafted to mislead members of the House into voting for something for which they would not otherwise have voted. One example is new section 15(1) which reads:

> The objects of the Corporation are to develop, manage and maintain, on a basis that is economically sound and consistent with the purposes for which the National Parks are dedicated, property in the Parks the direction of the administration, management and control of which is entrusted to it.

Who is to decide what is an economically sound basis? What will be the situation if the public does not agree with what the corporation thinks on this question? Is the corporation itself to decide what is consistent in respect of the purposes of the national parks? What can be done should a citizen feel that the corporation's interpretation in this regard leaves something to be desired?

Another example of excessive vagueness is new section 15(2)(b) which states that the corporation may lease or otherwise make available on a commercial basis and subject to such terms and conditions as it considers necessary or desirable any property under its control. Again, this would seem to involve a rather wide authority. Presumably, the corporation could grant leases in such a way as to nullify zoning regulations in the parks. If it should set such lax terms in respect of leases that shoddy buildings are erected in the midst of great natural beauty, what can be done. There are a great many more sections to which I could refer. However, I think this might more properly be done before the committee.

I am concerned about new section 20 (1) which says that no by-law shall come into force until it is approved by the Governor in Council. Here we have a lovely situation. For all practical purposes, the administration and policy in respect of our parks is to be turned over to a Crown corporation. This is similar to the situation of a few years ago when, in respect of transportation, the power of this Parliament was removed and placed under the Canadian Transport Commission. In this case, the government is attempting to have the best of both worlds. It is setting up a corporation with a president, a vice-president and five directors.

Mr. Woolliams: A great patronage pool for the Liberals.

Mr. Nesbitt: You can bet your bottom dollar they will all be friends of the government. If something should go wrong which causes public controversy the government can shrug its shoulders, as a certain member of the government frequently does, and say this is a Crown corporation with which the government cannot interfere. The government can say it has been set up to deal with parks, leaseholds and everything else without interference from the government. On the other hand, if the government should not like what is done by these boys whom it has chosen, the cabinet has a veto over what is being done. That is having things both ways.

Mr. Woolliams: That is called the musical ride.

Mr. Nesbitt: My colleague says that is the musical ride. I would call it a musical snow job. There are quite a number of other items here on which I might comment. We have seen government press reports and have heard rumours to the effect that the minister hopes to undertake a vast program of expansion of our park system so that the land area encompassed in national parks will be doubled in ten years. Such reports also indicate that the minister plans to develop a series of non-wilderness parks located close to centres of heavy population and suited to intensive public use. It would seem from this bill that so far as actual parks are concerned, all the government is doing is altering the boundaries of existing parks so that there will be a net loss of park area. The bill is a downright dangerous piece of legislation in so far as the provisions for a leasehold corporation are concerned. The granting of power is extremely poorly defined. Secondly, where the granting of power is clear it is also clear that the corporation will have responsibilities in respect of what amount to policy making activities.

I say that this is a dangerous and repugnant situation with regard to the administration of our parks. The corporation is given power under section 95 (2) (b) to lease or make otherwise available on a commercial basis, and subject to such terms as it considers necessary or desirable, any property under its control. But the power to set the conditions of leases is the power to set over-all policy for the parks and to effect to a large extent the way in which the parks are developed. Suppose, for example, the corporation should decide, as the parks department has in recent years, to offer no guarantee to commercial leaseholders that their leases will be renewed or even that they will receive compensation for capital improvement to the land. This can only encourage the commercial developers to adopt a get rich quick attitude. Scalping of tourists is likely to result.

There are a great many other things with which I should like to deal. However, a number of other members of the House I am informed are anxious to speak on this bill. Many of them represent areas in which there are national parks. These members will wish to discuss in great detail the many complaints, fears, worries and apprehensions people have as a result of this bill. When the time comes my colleagues and I will certainly find it necessary to vote against this legislation. In our opinion it is a bad bill. It simply provides an opportunity to the government to evade its responsibility by establishing a corporation behind which it may hide. This corporation will be able to do what it likes in respect of leases and conditions of leases. It is such a blatant example of potential patronage I am surprised the government would bring it before the House. I suppose one becomes bolder and bolder as time passes.

More important from a long range point of view is the fact that for all practical purposes this bill would take the administration of our national parks virtually out of the control of Parliament. This is another example of what this government has been doing and which its immediate predecessor has done for a number of years. It has cut down the power and responsibility of Parliament. The government would appear to have one particular desire. I am not referring to government backbenchers. They have been very conscientous in committee work and in respect of matters such as this. I am referring to the members of the treasury benches. The intention would appear to be to cut down the responsibility of this House and the effective participation of members in the running of our country. This is being done consistently all the time. It is another example, if this activity is not stopped, of the fact that by the time this government's term of office has expired there may not be any use for this House at all.

• (5:20 p.m.)

I have heard the comment that the motto of this government is peace, power, patronage and perpetuity. If ever there was an example of this motto, this is it. As I mentioned earlier, the members of this party take great exception to the way this bill has been presented to the House. The minister has other engagements and I am not questioning the importance of those engagements. What I am objecting to is the way the business of this House is run by the government and the house leader. It is so bad that provision is not made to have the responsible minister in the House to present important legislation.

Possibly there is an excuse for the minister's absence this afternoon. We are told that all day tomorrow as well, the minister will be gallavanting, or perhaps attending to important business, out west visiting Indian reservations. There is just no excuse for this. It is the minister's duty to be in the House when measures as important as this are presented. No one would object or complain about his absence. What we are complaining about is the fact that when this major piece of legislation is presented he is not here. Representatives of his department are here, but he has responsibility for the bill. I think the minister should return to his duties. We are not prepared to continue the debate on this motion until he does return.

For this reason I move, seconded by the hon. member for Brandon-Souris (Mr. Dinsdale), that this House do now adjourn.

Mr. Sulatycky: Mr. Speaker, I should like—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. I do not know whether the hon. member is rising on a point of order, but the motion is in order and it is not debatable. Is the member rising on a point of order?

Mr. Sulatycky: Mr. Speaker, I would simply like to ask the previous speaker, the hon. member for Oxford (Mr. Nesbitt), a question.

Some hon. Members: No, no.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The question is on the motion by the hon. member for Oxford (Mr. Nesbitt) that this House do now adjourn. All those in favour will please say yea.

Division

Some hon. Members: Yea.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: All those against will please say nay.

Some hon. Members: Nay.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: In my opinion, the nays have it.

And more than five members having risen:

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Call in the members.

The House divided on the motion (Mr. Nesbitt), which was negatived on the following division:

• (5:30 p.m.)

YEAS

Messrs:

Alexander	MacInnis (Mrs.)
Asselin	MacLean
Baldwin	McCleave
Barnett	McCutcheon
Bell	McGrath
Benjamin	McIntosh
Bigg	McKinley
Burton	Marshall
Cadieu (Meadow Lake)	Mazankowski
Carter	Monteith
Coates	Moore
Code	Muir (Cape Breton-The Sydneys)
Comeau	Muir (Lisgar)
Crouse	Nesbitt
Dinsdale	Noble
Downey	Nystrom
Fairweather	Peters
Forrestall	Ricard
Gleave	Ritchie
Grills	Rose
Gundlock	Rynard
Hales	Saltsman
Harding	Scott
Howe	Simpson
Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre)	Skoberg
Knowles (Norfolk-Haldimand)	Southam
Korchinski	Stewart (Marquette)
Lewis	Thomas (Moncton)
Lundrigan	Thompson (Red Deer)
MacEwan	Thomson (Battleford-Kindersley)
MacInnis (Cape Breton-East Richmond)	Valade
	Woolliams—63.

NAYS

Messrs:

Barrett	Cantin
Basford	Chappell
Béchard	Chrétien
Beer	Clermont
Benson	Cobbe
Blouin	Comtois
Borrie	Corbin
Brown	Côté (Richelieu)
Cafik	Côté (Longueuil)

Division

Crossman	Lessard (Lac-Saint-Jean)
Cullen	Lind
Cyr	Macdonald (Rosedale)
Danson	MacEachen
Davis	MacGuigan
Deachman	Mackasey
Dionne	McIlraith
Douglas (Assiniboia)	Mahoney
Drury	Marchand (Langelier)
Dubé	Matte
Dumont	Mongrain
Duquet	Murphy
Émard	Orange
Forest	Osler
Fortin	Pelletier
Foster	Penner
Francis	Pepin
Gauthier	Perrault
Gendron	Pilon
Gervais	Portelance
Gibson	Richardson
Gillespie	Roberts
Givens	Rodrigue
Godin	Rondeau
Goyer	Roy (Timmins)
Gray	Smerchanski
Greene	Smith (Saint-Jean)
Groos	Stafford
Guay (Lévis)	Stewart (Okanagan-Kootenay)
Haidasz	St. Pierre
Hogarth	Sulatycky
Honey	Thomas (Maisonneuve)
Hopkins	Tolmie
Howard (Okanagan Boundary)	Trudeau
Hymmen	Trudel
Jerome	Turner (London East)
Kaplan	Turner (Ottawa-Carleton)
Laflamme	Wahn
Laing (Vancouver South)	Walker
Lambert (Bellechasse)	Watson
Langlois	Weatherhead
Laniel	Whicher
Latulippe	Whiting
Leblanc (Laurier)	Winch
Lefebvre	Yanakis—109.
Legault

• (5:50 p.m.)

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I declare the motion lost. Order, please. The hon. member for Comox-Alberni.

Mr. Woolliams: On a point of privilege, Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Barnett: Mr. Speaker, I think the situation has been very—

Mr. Woolliams: I just wanted to point out, Mr. Speaker, that the minister was not here this afternoon but he is here now.

Hon. Jean Chrétien (Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): On the point of privilege, Mr. Speaker, I think I have a very good parliamentary secretary. I have confidence in him but I understand—

An hon. Member: Honey for president.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. I do not know whether the hon. member for York South wishes to comment on the point, but I might say that I do not consider this a question of privilege unless—

Mr. Lewis: Mr. Speaker, the minister has answered—

Mr. Korchinski: The minister will go to the Senate.

Mr. Lewis: The minister's answer on the point of order, Mr. Speaker, entirely misses the point. It may well be—

Some hon. Members: Order, order.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member for Comox-Alberni.

Mr. Barnett: Mr. Speaker, there may not be any point of order or any question of privilege, but there is certainly a question of debate involved in what has just been happening. I supported the motion that the House adjourn because it was an attempt—

Some hon. Members: Order, order.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I wonder if we can have order, please. I recognized the hon. member for Comox-Alberni because I assumed he wanted to continue debate on Bill C-152. I wonder if we can have order. please. If he does intend to do that, I am certainly prepared to recognize him but I prefer that he confine his remarks to the bill before the House at this time.

Mr. Barnett: Mr. Speaker, had I had the opportunity of making the speech I intended to make this afternoon, I would have said that this bill had been on ice for a long time. I felt that once the ice thawed, it would appear to be a somewhat fishy proposition.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Barnett: What has happened here this afternoon has, I think, underlined the point I intended to make. As far as I am concerned, the members of this House are entitled to hear from the responsible minister.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. I am afraid it is now six o'clock. This House stands adjourned until tomorrow at 2 p.m.

At six o'clock the House adjourned, without question put, pursuant to Standing Order.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Thursday, February 5, 1970

The House met at 2 p.m.

ROUTINE PROCEEDINGS

LABOUR RELATIONS

BRITISH COLUMBIA—REJECTION OF COLLECTIVE AGREEMENT BY LONGSHOREMEN

Hon. Bryce Mackasey (Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, I think it is my duty to inform the House of developments that have occurred in the last 24 hours in the various ports of British Columbia. As hon. members may recall, agreement between management and the negotiation teams of the ILWU was reached on two previous occasions, only to have both agreements rejected by the general membership when submitted to them for ratification.

After the second rejection the unions agreed to extend the old contract for a period of 90 days. It was further decided that a new negotiating team would be formed and that negotiations would resume during this period. Sunday night this newly-formed negotiating team did arrive at a new settlement, which was presented yesterday to the membership for ratification.

The contract was rejected by a margin of 53 votes out of a total of 2,726 members voting. Hon. members will note that the percentage of votes against ratification has fallen steadily, from 70 per cent on the first agreement to 58 per cent on the second to 51 per cent on the third.

To further complicate the issue, three of the six ports voted for ratification. It is significant that in all three rejections the ports of Vancouver and New Westminster have been consistently opposed to any settlement.

Shortly before entering the House, I was informed that work is progressing at all ports other than New Westminster and Vancouver. However, it is significant that bulk cargo is being processed by the longshoremen in Vancouver.

Whilst I have consistently stated my respect for the rights of management and labour under the laws of this country to engage in free collective bargaining, including the right to strike or lockout, I have never hesitated in stating publicly that periodically the overriding importance of the public interest must be recognized as paramount.

The ports of British Columbia are not the property of the BCMEA or the ILWU. In the final analysis, they belong to all Canadians and they are of particular significance to British Columbia and western Canada in general. This fact, Mr. Speaker, should become more apparent by the hour to both the BCMEA and the longshoremen.

• (2:10 p.m.)

In view of the closeness of the vote and in view of the fact that work is proceeding almost normally, there is still an opportunity for both parties to show their concern for the public interest. If over the weekend they cannot resolve their differences or do not intend to, or should work come to a complete stoppage, then I shall not hesitate to recommend appropriate measures to my colleagues.

Mr. H. Russell MacEwan (Central Nova): Mr. Speaker, I listened with great interest to the minister's statement which I received just prior to entering the House. Although it is short, it deals with some matters that I submit we ought to look into closely. We must agree that of foremost importance to this country is the upholding of the public interest.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. MacEwan: In this regard we hope that as a result of the work of task forces such as the Woods task force the minister and his department will be able to bring forward quickly amendments to the present labour legislation. He pointed out that the ports of British Columbia are important to western Canadians because wheat and grain are transported through them. The ports are a channel which must be kept open, and the government has the responsibility to do this.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. MacEwan: It has been suggested that some of our markets for wheat and other grain have been lost, and we have had much debate in this chamber on the subject. I trust that, if necessary, appropriate legislation to deal with this problem will be speedily forthcoming. I note that recently the minister set up a mediation service, which is something that we on this side of the House might support. I believe he appointed five mediators who will deal with various industries in this country and important matters that arise before contracts terminate. I believe we can support this action and I hope it will work. In any event, we hope that up-to-date legislation will be forthcoming soon so that the interests of the public on the west coast and in other parts of Canada will be upheld.

Mr. David Lewis (York South): Mr. Speaker, in common with other hon. members and people throughout the country, I regret that a settlement has not been reached. I and my colleagues in this House do not take second place to anybody in our concern for the public interest. However, I suggest that before people become hysterical it should be remembered that part of the public interest in a democracy is the right of workers to organize, to collective bargaining, and to refuse work if the conditions of work are not to their liking. I suggest that this is as much part of the public interest in a democracy as any other consideration.

Mr. Woolliams: Tell that to the farmers of western Canada.

Mr. Lewis: Therefore I am glad, Mr. Speaker, that the minister has not taken any steps to interfere now. I express the hope with him that the parties will meet this weekend and arrive at a settlement. Indeed, settlement must be very close when the agreement was rejected by a margin of only 53 votes.

It has been my view for some years, and I stated it in the House in 1966, that the federal and provincial departments of labour ought to employ personnel who could become involved in these disputes before they reach the breaking-point. I am glad that the minister himself has done this in many instances.

I conclude by expressing the hope that the employees, the members of the union concerned, will find some way of reaching a settlement without putting the country and Parliament to additional difficulty.

GOVERNMENT ADMINISTRATION

ABNORMAL INCREASE IN POWER AND AUTHORITY—REQUEST FOR UNANIMOUS CONSENT TO MOVE MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. G. W. Baldwin (Peace River): Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent of the House to move the following motion:

That this House refer to the Standing Committee of the House on Procedure and Organization the question of providing for members ways and means of meeting the serious situation brought about as the result of the extent to which the government in general and the Prime Minister in particular—

[Mr. MacEwan.]

Mr. Trudeau: You can't be serious!

Mr. Baldwin:

—have obtained abnormal increases in power and authority while downgrading the role and decreasing the effectiveness of the House and to recommend ways and means of coping with this alarming situation including such changes in the Standing Orders as may be required.

As this motion speaks for itself, Mr. Speaker, the only comment I would make in urging hon. members to accept it is that it is becoming very clear that the whole structure of responsible parliamentary government is being threatened. A solution must be found—Your Honour has referred to some of these problems—that will provide ways by which private members may have a chance of bringing to a vote their resolutions and public bills and ways by which hon. members opposite may be able to express by their actions in the House the views they voice outside. Despite our understanding last session, no attempt has been made to call the committee and the only proposal is a very limited one with regard to television. If it will be persuasive, I am prepared to recommend that we have no debate on this motion and that the question be put to the House forthwith.

Mr. Speaker: Does the hon. member have unanimous consent to proceed with this motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. Speaker: There is not unanimity. The motion cannot be proceeded with.

MOTION TO ADJOURN UNDER S.O. 26

PRICES AND INCOMES COMMISSION

NATIONAL PRICE RESTRAINT CONFERENCE—AUTHORITY AND ESTABLISHMENT OF COMMISSION

Mr. Max Saltsman (Waterloo): Mr. Speaker, I ask leave, seconded by the hon. member for York South, to move the adjournment of the House under Standing Order 26 for the purpose of discussing a specific and important matter requiring urgent consideration, namely, the National Price Restraint Conference called by the Prices and Incomes Commission scheduled for Monday and Tuesday of next week and whether and to what extent the Commission will be acting on government authority when it makes recommendations of policy at this conference, the establishing of this commission by Order in Council, making it extremely important and vitally urgent that there be a full and comprehensive debate in Parliament in order to determine the relationship between the policies of the commission and those of the government prior to the National Price Restraint Conference.

Mr. Speaker: The motion proposed by the hon. member suggests the adjournment of the House under Standing Order 26 for the purpose of discussing three questions: the National Price Restraint Conference, the authority of the Prices and Incomes Commission and the establishment of the Commission itself by Order in Council.

In order that the House can be adjourned to discuss these matters, the Chair must be satisfied that the question raised is one which is in the nature of an emergency rather than one which has been of continuing concern to Parliament. Hon. members will recognize, I am sure, that the subject proposed for discussion at this time under Standing Order 26 is not by any means a new one. The point whether the commission will be acting on government authority when it makes recommendations was raised in question No. 331 placed on the Order Paper on October 30, 1969. The question was answered on December 8 last. During the last few months there have been daily oral questions directed to the ministry about aspects raised in the hon. member's proposed motion. The fact that a conference would be held has been common knowledge for some time and the actual announcement that it would be held next Monday and Tuesday was made more than two weeks ago.

• (2:20 p.m.)

The whole matter in all its aspects having been before the House on so many occasions, I find it difficult to agree that we should now have an emergency debate. While the Chair fully recognizes the importance of the question, I do not think I am at liberty to agree that an adjournment at this time for the purpose suggested by the hon. member for Waterloo would be warranted.

Inquiries of the Ministry

ORAL QUESTION PERIOD

POLLUTION

CHEDABUCTO BAY—ACTION TO PREVENT CONTAMINATION FROM GROUNDED TANKER

Hon. Robert L. Stanfield (Leader of the Opposition): In the absence of the Minister of Transport I should like to address a question to the Prime Minister, Mr. Speaker. What steps are being taken to prevent major pollution in Chedabucto Bay, Nova Scotia, as a result of the grounding of the Liberian tanker, the Arrow, in that body of water?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Yes, Mr. Speaker, I have a report on this event. As to the steps which are being taken I can say that the Minister of Transport and the officials in his department are looking at the problem. Inspectors of the department are on the scene now, and I am also informed that there is a Fisheries Department vessel in the area as well as another tanker which is on the way to take the oil off.

Mr. Stanfield: Is a foreign tanker such as this Liberian vessel subject to any control or supervision after it enters Canadian territorial waters?

Mr. Trudeau: I am sorry—

Mr. Stanfield: Is a foreign tanker entering Canadian territorial waters such as Chedabucto Bay subject to any controls imposed by the government of Canada?

Mr. Trudeau: I do not know whether the hon. gentleman is referring to legal controls or regulations—

Mr. Stanfield: Regulations.

Mr. Trudeau: If he is, I shall have to refer the question to the Minister of Transport who will be in the House—

Mr. Stanfield: May I request the Prime Minister to interest himself in this matter since there are, I am informed, some 8,000 tons of water on this vessel—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Stanfield: —of oil on this vessel. Oh, it may be a joke to some hon. members opposite, but 8,000 tons of oil could seriously contaminate the water in this area unless energetic measures are taken.

Mr. James A. McGrath (St. John's East): May I ask the Prime Minister this question:

who is legally responsible—the owners of the vessel or the charterers?

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member will recognize, I am sure, that the question as asked is not in order. He is asking the Prime Minister to express a legal opinion.

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, may I ask the Prime Minister or some other appropriate minister whether consideration is being given to setting fire to this ship and its oil as suggested by certain concerned biologists and oceanographers at Dalhousie University?

Mr. Trudeau: I repeat that the minister is very concerned about this problem and that he is working on it now.

Mr. J. M. Forrestall (Dartmouth-Halifax East): Can the right hon. gentleman tell us whether the information he has in front of him indicates a worsening in the amount of leakage as reported in the press earlier today?

Mr. Trudeau: No, Mr. Speaker, I have no confirmation of that report.

Mr. Randolph Harding (Kootenay West): May I ask whether regulations concerning liability for pollution damage have been laid down by the government as outlined recently at the Brussels conference?

Mr. Trudeau: This whole question, as the House knows, was brought up at the meeting in Brussels some months ago by the Minister of Transport. Until this date there has been no international agreement as to the way in which these matters should be settled, but Canada's position was made clear at the conference.

Mr. Harding: In view of the minister's statement that Canada was willing to go it alone if no agreement could be reached, are these regulations in the process of preparation by the government?

Mr. Forrestall: Perhaps I might direct my supplementary question to the Minister of Justice, Mr. Speaker. Can he shed any light on the question just asked as to liability in the event of oil spillage for removing the cargo from the ship?

Mr. Speaker: I have some reservations about the acceptability of the question. If the hon. member is asking the Minister of Justice to express his view as to liability, I do not think the question is in order.

[Mr. McGrath.]

Mr. Forrestall: Then may I ask the Minister of Justice whether or not this matter is under consideration by his department?

Hon. John N. Turner (Minister of Justice): Yes, sir.

IMMIGRATION

DEPORTATION OF DESERTERS FROM U.S. ARMED FORCES

Mr. David Lewis (York South): I wish to direct a question to the Minister of Manpower and Immigration arising out of a matter of which I have given him notice. The question concerns three young United States deserters who were admitted to Canada legally but who were deported to the United States by officers of the department or by RCMP officers without either hearing or authority. Can the minister inform the House whether he has instituted an inquiry into this incident and whether he has received any report concerning it?

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Minister of Manpower and Immigration): I thank the hon. member for giving me notice by letter today of his interest in this matter. Following receipt of the letter I asked for a report from the field. Before I came into the House today I again asked, but the report has not yet come forth. As soon as it does come forth I will be happy to report to the hon. member and the House.

Mr. Lewis: A short supplementary question. This matter is of such importance that I am constrained to ask the minister whether he will undertake, when he receives the report, to report not only to the hon. member but to the House?

Mr. MacEachen: Yes, Mr. Speaker.

[Translation]

INQUIRY OF THE MINISTRY

Mr. Gilbert Rondeau (Shefford): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Prime Minister.

Can he tell the House whether the government agrees with the President of the United States who said assistance will have to be given to Israel should the arms situation favour the Arab world?

[English]

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

REPRESENTATIONS TO RED CHINA RESPECTING ATTITUDE TOWARD VIET NAM WAR

Mr. Gordon Ritchie (Dauphin): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the Secretary of State for External Affairs. In view of the recent diatribe in Red China in favour of North Viet Nam continuing the war at all costs, will the government, through its officials in Stockholm, intercede with Red China to modify its inflammatory attitude and thus assist in a peaceful settlement in this troubled area?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I hope this means that the official opposition is supporting our efforts to try to bring about diplomatic relations with Peking so as to make such representations possible.

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prince Albert): Mr. Speaker, a supplementary question. Lest the minister run away with any idea that I support his position, may I say that I strongly oppose recognition. I ask the minister whether he has caught up with Mao's representatives in order to present on bended knee Canada's desire to recognize that country?

Mr. Speaker: Order. I have some doubt about the form of the question asked. Perhaps I might forget the form and give the minister an opportunity to reply to the substance of the question asked.

Mr. Sharp: Mr. Speaker, it is quite clear from the question that the opposition is divided on the matter.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Sharp: May I suggest to the right hon. gentleman that he catch up with public opinion and with his own party.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Mr. Speaker, may I ask the minister whether the answer he has given is in accordance with the lead taken by the Prime Minister the other day in indicating that on occasion he answers questions jocularly and means the House to understand them as serious.

Mr. Stanfield: Mr. Speaker, on a point of order, I recognize that when a minister of the government is asked a question he is not obliged to answer. However, I suggest to the minister and to the Prime Minister that a minister is not entitled to answer a different question. If a minister is not prepared to answer the question put to him, he needs only to indicate that he will not answer it, instead of making remarks or a speech on a different matter.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. That is a very interesting proposition. Perhaps the Chair should not be asked to rule on the validity of the procedural aspects of the point of order.

SCIENCE SERVICES

REQUEST FOR STATEMENT ON POLICY

Mr. Louis-Roland Comeau (South Western Nova): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the Prime Minister when we can expect a statement dealing with priorities, etc., as laid down in a good science policy for Canada?

MANPOWER

EFFECTIVE USE OF SCIENTISTS IN DEVELOPING POLICIES

Mr. Louis-Roland Comeau (South Western Nova): As the Prime Minister does not care to answer, I will direct a question to the Minister of Manpower and Immigration that is more serious and is brought about by the fact that the unemployment rate is rising rapidly. In Newfoundland I understand it is now up to 20 per cent. Is it the intention of his department to step up its programs by making more effective use of scientists in order to accentuate more effective manpower policies?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The question of the hon. member is, of course, a very good one. It appears to me that he has invited the minister to make a statement of a very general nature which should perhaps be made on motions. The minister might like to reply to the question along those lines.

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Minister of Manpower and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, the question is so general that I can answer the hon. member very briefly by saying yes.

[Later:]

Mr. Comeau: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Is the hon. member for South Western Nova rising on a point of order?

Mr. Comeau: Yes. The minister can say yes all he wants but the fact is that the President of the Canadian Association of Physicists has said he was very disappointed that he was not able to get co-operation from this department.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I submit that is not a point of order but rather a point of debate.

SUMMER EMPLOYMENT PROGRAM FOR STUDENTS

Mr. J. M. Forrestall (Dartmouth-Halifax East): Mr. Speaker, I wonder whether the minister is giving consideration to making a statement that will specifically indicate to the House what his department is doing about summer employment for university students?

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Minister of Manpower and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, to clear up any misunderstanding about the former answer, I answered yes to the question itself, not to the request that I make a statement. In reply to my hon. friend from Dartmouth-Halifax East, I will be making a further statement in respect of the plans for summer employment in the near future.

Mr. John M. Lundrigan (Gander-Twillingate): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question to the Minister of Manpower and Immigration. When may we expect a statement on motions in respect of summer employment for students?

Mr. MacEachen: Mr. Speaker, I made a statement just a few days ago in respect of the results of the program last summer. The results have been very encouraging. I hope to continue these plans for next summer and when there are additional elements to the program I will announce them to the House. I have no definite timetable at the moment for a statement to the House on this subject.

Mr. David Orlikow (Winnipeg North): Mr. Speaker, in view of the fact that the report of the department on last year's summer employment of students indicates that a very substantial percentage of students worked only about half of the summer and therefore their efforts to obtain enough money to go back to school were very seriously affected, I wonder whether the minister would look into that aspect of the problem?

Mr. MacEachen: Yes. I think my hon. friend has put his finger on a point which emerged from the survey. If there is an improvement to be made it is in the length of employment for a certain percentage of the students. We hope to promote this aspect of the employment situation next summer.

[Mr. Comeau.]

Hon. Robert L. Stanfield (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the minister whether he has any estimate as to the number of students who will be seeking employment this summer?

Mr. MacEachen: Mr. Speaker, it is difficult to give an exact figure, but I think about 500,000 would be the estimate we are working on at the moment.

HOUSING

ALLEGED FIVE-YEAR AGREEMENT WITH QUEBEC RESPECTING NHA FUNDS

Mr. Barney Danson (York North): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the minister responsible for housing. Will the minister offer Ontario the same five-year agreement in respect of NHA funds that Ontario's Minister of Trade and Development publicly declared has been given to Quebec?

Mr. Robert K. Andras (Minister without Portfolio): Mr. Speaker, the premise is inaccurate. The master agreements with the province of Quebec are for one year, not five years. There have been two agreements, one for 1968-69 and one for 1969-70. These covered only certain specific programs, not all NHA projects, and still required individual project approval by CMHC. Ontario chose to operate on a somewhat less formal exchange of letters although the other arrangement was available to Ontario as it is to all provinces. I am rather surprised at the inaccuracy because I conveyed this information to the Chairman of the Ontario Housing Corporation just a few days before Mr. Randall made his statement to the—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

[Translation]

Mr. Roch La Salle (Joliette): I have a supplementary question, Mr. Speaker.

Is the minister responsible for housing in a position to tell us whether it is true that the province of Quebec has turned down the $25 million offered by Ottawa for urban renewal in Montreal?

[English]

Mr. Andras: No such information has been conveyed to me, Mr. Speaker.

REGIONAL ECONOMIC EXPANSION

REQUEST FOR INCLUSION OF ALL SASKATCHEWAN AS DESIGNATED AREA

Mr. Lorne Nystrom (Yorkton-Melville): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Regional Economic Expansion. In view of the fact that Saskatchewan is facing a deepening financial crisis, is the minister now prepared to consider the inclusion of the entire province as a special designated area under the Regional Development Incentives Act?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I would not think that the question is in order. We have had similar questions in the past and I have suggested to hon. members that if questions are asked along similar lines about the different parts of Canada we would perhaps spend an inordinate proportion of the question period on such questions and answers.

Mr. Nystrom: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker, this question has been asked a number of times and there is a real emergency at this time. I think the minister wants to answer the question.

Mr. McGrath: On the same point of order, Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Is the hon. member rising on the point of order?

Mr. McGrath: Yes. In order to facilitate Your Honour on this matter, perhaps it would expedite things if the minister would designate the whole country.

[Translation]

THE CANADIAN ECONOMY

INFLATION—MEASURES TO LOWER INTEREST RATES

Mr. Henry Latulippe (Compton): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Prime Minister.

Could he tell the House whether he intends to adopt measures to reduce interest rates, which are one of the main causes of the rise in the cost of living, in order to halt the recession which is increasing daily?

Mr. Speaker: The Prime Minister might reply to the hon. member's question by a general statement on motions.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

POLICY RESPECTING DELEGATIONS TO MAURITANIA AND NIGER

Hon. Martial Asselin (Charlevoix): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Secretary of State for External Affairs.

Can he tell us whether a formula has been found for agreement about the membership of the Canadian delegation to the coming conferences in Mauritania and Niger?

[English]

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I do not think there will be any difficulty about the conference in Mauritania. The principles that were followed in the past for attendance at educational ministers' conferences are well established and will be followed. There is some disagreement about the constitutional conference at Niamey. There the discussions are continuing. I have hopes a solution acceptable to all will be found.

[Translation]

Mr. Asselin: Mr. Speaker, I should like to put a supplementary question.

Will the Canadian delegation have two co-chairmen, as was the case for the Niamey conference?

[English]

Mr. Sharp: Mr. Speaker, the important issue here is the signing of the international agreement. I think hon. members will agree that international agreements can be signed only by sovereign countries.

LABOUR RELATIONS

ASSURANCE FROM LONGSHOREMEN'S UNION RESPECTING MOVEMENT OF GRAIN THROUGH B.C. PORTS

Mr. Eldon M. Woolliams (Calgary North): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the Minister of Labour whether he has had any assurances from the Longshoremen's Union that they will keep the ports open in western Canada in view of the fact that British Columbia and the prairies could be seriously affected?

Hon. Bryce Mackasey (Minister of Labour): Is the hon. member referring specifically to wheat?

Mr. Woolliams: Yes, particularly to grain.

Mr. Mackasey: The hon. member knows that, to the union's credit, in the 39 days they were on active strike they moved the grain, and there has been as of this morning absolutely no change in that plan. However, should the union strike on Monday I have no assurance whether or not they will move some commodities and not others. I think I made clear in my statement that the public interest is becoming paramount. I am not unaware of the importance of grain in the over-all scheme of things in western Canada.

Inquiries of the Ministry

Mr. Woolliams: Mr. Speaker, is the minister or the government giving consideration, in view of what he has just said, to any legislation in this regard?

Mr. Mackasey: Mr. Speaker, important as grain is, I have had very strong representations from certain premiers telling me just how important potash is and others telling me how important lumber is and so on. Therefore it would be very hard and unfair to single out one particular commodity. I did do this for 39 days. I think the obvious and logical solution is to bring the strike to an end so that all commodities will be treated with equality in the future.

Mr. A. P. Gleave (Saskatoon-Biggar): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question for the Minister of Labour. Do we have the minister's assurance that if there is a tie-up over the weekend whatever action is necessary will be taken to see that these ports remain open and serve the country?

Mr. Mackasey: I think the hon. gentleman can refer to no better authority in Hansard tomorrow than the gentleman who spoke on behalf of his party about what should be considered as a very sound philosophy for a democratic country.

AGRICULTURE

POSSIBLE MORATORIUM ON DEBTS TO FARM MACHINERY MANUFACTURERS

Mr. J. H. Horner (Crowfoot): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Agriculture. In his discussions with the farm machinery manufacturing companies was the question of a possible moratorium on debts outstanding to those companies considered in light of the difficult financial position of the farmers of western Canada?

Hon. H. A. Olson (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, the discussions I had with the heads of the farm machinery companies earlier this week centred around the findings and recommendations of the Royal Commission on Farm Machinery. That particular point was not dealt with in the report.

Mr. Horner: Mr. Speaker, in light of the recent findings of the Barber commission on farm machinery, would the minister now consider the point I have raised and discuss it at the time of future meetings with the farm machinery manufacturing companies?

Mr. Olson: I suppose we could discuss it and it would be very easy to give an undertaking that we would consider it, but I think the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs, who is responsible in certain other areas respecting a number of federal acts, would be the appropriate minister to consult in connection with the question of a moratorium on debts or anything of that nature.

Mr. G. W. Baldwin (Peace River): Mr. Speaker, as a supplementary question may I ask the minister to advise us if he and the government have rejected out of hand the proposal made by the National Farmers Union and Mr. Goldenberg in respect of amendments to the Farmers' Creditors Arrangement Act?

Mr. Olson: I have not, Mr. Speaker, but I gave the hon. member an adequate reply to that question some time ago. Although it may be one with which he does not agree, that does not mean it is wrong.

FURTHER REPORT BY BARBER COMMISSION

Mr. George Muir (Lisgar): Mr. Speaker, can the Minister of Agriculture tell us whether we can expect a further report from the Barber commission on farm machinery prices and whether he is able to confirm that the report will indicate that the farmers of this country have been overcharged on combines as well as tractors by North American manufacturers?

Hon. H. A. Olson (Minister of Agriculture): In reply to the first part of the question, the commission has indicated to me there will be a further report dealing with costs and arrangements in respect of services, repair parts and that sort of thing. This will be available to us within a very few days. I cannot answer the other part of the question because that would require anticipating what would be in the report and I certainly do not know what will be in the report.

IMPLEMENTATION OF BARBER COMMISSION RECOMMENDATIONS

Mr. W. M. Howe (Wellington-Grey): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Agriculture. In view of the fact that the machinery companies have indicated they will not reduce prices in Canada, what steps is the government taking to carry out the recommendations of the Barber commission report in case this situation develops?

Hon. H. A. Olson (Minister of Agriculture): Both the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs and I have already indicated certain other action we are taking currently while the discussions with the farm machinery companies are going on.

Mr. Howe: Mr. Speaker, a few weeks ago when I directed a question to the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs he indicated his officials were meeting with officials of the United States and Great Britain in connection with the fact that machinery dealers in Great Britain were told they might lose their franchises if they sold machinery to Canadian farmers. What position has been taken by the officials of these countries with regard to this matter?

Hon. Ron Basford (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): The intention was to inform the officials of these countries of the nature of the situation. That having been done, the matter is being followed up by officials of other countries to see what they can do to alleviate the situation in Canada.

INDUSTRY

MASSEY-FERGUSON LAY-OFFS—TRANSFER OF WORK TO OTHER COUNTRIES

Mr. A. P. Gleave (Saskatoon-Biggar): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce. In view of the international nature of the Massey-Ferguson Company and in view of the Barber commission findings on the allocation of markets, is the minister conducting an investigation into the operations of the Massey-Ferguson Company in light of the extensive lay-offs affecting 2,400 workers in Canada in order to find out whether this work has been transferred to other countries?

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): Mr. Speaker, I do not know of such an inquiry but I was assured this morning that it is unlikely there will be further lay-offs in the foreseeable future.

FEDERAL-PROVINCIAL RELATIONS

AGENDA FOR NEXT CONFERENCE

Hon. Robert L. Stanfield (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the Prime Minister whether he is in a position to announce the agenda for the forthcoming federal-provincial conference.

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I do not recollect whether there was agreement between the provinces and the federal government to announce the agenda at any specific date. It is an in camera conference. This has been agreed to. I think I would have to wait until the conference begins to seek agreement from the premiers on whether or not we should release the subject matter of the discussions.

Mr. Stanfield: I have a supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. My recollection may be at fault but I understood from a previous answer that the Prime Minister would inquire of the provincial premiers whether or not the agenda would be released. My supplementary question is whether the government of Canada proposes to make any arrangements for observers from the opposition parties to attend the conference.

Mr. Trudeau: On the first part of the question Mr. Speaker, the hon. member's recollection is correct. But I recall that at the time I referred to correspondence I was having with the premiers concerning the whole question of whether the conference would be in camera and the question of the agenda itself. Now that the decision has been taken to have the conference in camera I cannot recall whether there has been agreement on the part of all parties to release the agenda. The federal government certainly has no objection to that. I will inquire whether there is any objection on the part of anyone and if not I will gladly tell the hon. member in the House what the agenda is. It is a very simple one. What was the second part of the question?

Mr. Stanfield: Whether any arrangements were being made for observers.

Mr. Trudeau: The answer, Mr. Speaker, is no. The decision has been taken to have the conference in camera. It will involve only governmental representatives of the provinces and the federal government.

HOUSING

CONSIDERATION OF INTEREST-FREE LOANS OR DIRECT GRANTS FOR REHABILITATION

Mr. Andrew Brewin (Greenwood): Mr. Speaker, my question is addressed to the Minister without Portfolio in charge of housing. The other day the minister referred to his hope that loans under section 40 of the Housing Act would be made available for rehabilitation of homes of persons on low incomes. In view of the fact that these loans carry high interest rates and are therefore inaccessible to people of low income, has the government given consideration to interest-free loans or direct grants for these purposes and would the minister make a statement on this some time in the future?

Hon. Robert K. Andras (Minister without Portfolio): Mr. Speaker, as with many other things we are giving careful consideration to this matter, but I do not think I can undertake to make a statement in the foreseeable future.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

ISRAELI-ARAB CONFLICT—STATUS OF FOUR-POWER FORMULA FOR SETTLEMENT

Mr. R. Gordon L. Fairweather (Fundy-Royal): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Secretary of State for External Affairs of which I have given him notice because of the seriousness of the situation. Will the minister advise the present status of the so-called four-power formula for settlement of the Middle East conflict?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I thank the hon. gentleman for having given me notice of this question. Perhaps I might be permitted to say that there are three things that might be helpful at the present time in the current dangerous situation in the Middle East. The first is a strict observance of the ceasefire arrangements on all sides. The second is that the countries supplying arms should refrain from another sterile and dangerous round of arms supplies and, third, I would hope there would be another attempt by the four powers to help Ambassador Jarring resume his efforts for a peace.

Mr. Fairweather: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Does Canada support the proposal current now in Britain that Europe's middle powers should step into the Middle East crisis with an effective guarantee of the territorial integrity of the countries in the Middle East, provided that such powers acted under the United Nations and in support of Ambassador Jarring's mission?

Mr. Sharp: Well, Mr. Speaker, the resolution of the Security Council that Ambassador Jarring is trying to promote does provide for secure and recognized boundaries. The question of how they can be best guaranteed is a matter for negotiation, I think.

[Translation]

TRADE

EFFECT OF IMPORTS ON CANADIAN KNITTING INDUSTRY

Hon. Théogène Ricard (Saint-Hyacinthe): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce.

[Mr. Brewin.]

Since representatives of the Canadian Association of Chemical Producers and of the International Garment Workers Union have said that the continuing increase of knitwear imports threatens both employment and production in Canada, what measures is he considering to deal with the situation and to protect the jobs of Canadian workers?

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): The matter is now before the antidumping court, Mr. Speaker. It would not be proper if I made comments on it at this time.

Regarding the total problem of textile products, I can only assure the hon. member that the government is making strong and constant efforts to develop a better policy than the present one with regard to the textile industry.

[English]

LABOUR CONDITIONS

LACK OF PROTECTION UNDER IMMIGRATION LAWS FOR CANADIAN ARTISTS AND WRITERS

Mr. Mark Rose (Fraser Valley West): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Manpower and Immigration. In view of the recent brief to the minister from ACTRA concerning the lack of employment protection accorded Canadian artists and writers by our immigration laws, is the minister considering proposing amendments to our laws to provide greater security for Canadian creative people?

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Minister of Manpower and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, the brief to which my hon. friend refers was prepared by ACTRA at my request following a meeting we had to outline the nature of the problem, and there is a problem. At present there are discussions going on between Canada and the United States in an effort to solve the matter in that way. If these discussions fail I believe we will have to consider some alternatives.

Mr. Rose: A supplementary question. In view of these discussions and their possible failure, will the minister confer with his colleague the Secretary of State so that the implications of this problem may be examined in great detail?

Mr. MacEachen: Yes, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member is making a suggestion or representation which we assume has been noted by the minister.

[Translation]

POST OFFICE

MONTREAL—EFFECT OF PARTIAL STRIKE OF DELIVERY EMPLOYEES

Mr. Georges Valade (Sainte-Marie): Mr. Speaker, I wish to address a question to the Postmaster General and Minister of Communications.

Could he inform the House on the actual mail delivery situation in Montreal due to the revolving strike of people employed in this service and what action his department intends to take to ensure adequate service to the population should a general strike occur?

Hon. Eric W. Kierans (Postmaster General and Minister of Communications): Mr. Speaker, I was informed that all truck drivers had reported for work this morning as usual. Of course, the Post Office and Communications Department is taking all necessary steps to ensure a normal service to Montrealers.

Mr. Valade: Can the minister state whether his department has taken action to see to it that employees fired by these firms are reinstated, especially by the Department of Manpower and Immigration?

Mr. Kierans: Reinstated where?

[Later:]

MONTREAL—JOBS FOR DISPLACED EMPLOYEES

Mr. Valade: I wish to put my question again to the minister, who seemed prepared to answer it but apparently did not understand it well.

Can he tell us what action he is taking with his colleagues to assure other jobs to those workers who will be displaced in the mail delivery service?

Mr. Kierans: Mr. Speaker, I met with officials of the C.N.T.U. Friday night, and I have advised them that they should contact my colleagues the Minister of Labour (Mr. Mackasey) or the Minister of Manpower and Immigration (Mr. MacEachen). In addition, the Montreal postmaster has discussed with the new contractors the possibility of hiring the drivers who are doing the work at the present time.

Mr. Valade: Can the Minister of Manpower and Immigration tell us if the officials of the C.N.T.U. have contacted him, and what action his department intends to take to assure jobs to laid off workers?

[English]

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Minister of Manpower and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, I would have to check with the regional directorate in Montreal to determine whether that contact has been made, and I will report tomorrow to my hon. friend.

RURAL CLOSURES—CONSULTATION WITH MUNICIPAL COUNCILS

Mr. Craig Stewart (Marquette): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a supplementary question to the Postmaster General. In view of the number of rural post offices being closed, does the Post Office Department consult with municipal councils before post offices are closed in their areas?

Hon. Eric W. Kierans (Postmaster General and Minister of Communications): We make a survey, Mr. Speaker, in each area.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

[Translation]

FEDERAL-PROVINCIAL RELATIONS

CONSTITUTIONALITY OF QUEBEC BILL 62

Mr. Gilbert Rondeau (Shefford): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask a question to the Prime Minister.

Can he inform the House whether he has received any requests urging him to give his opinion as to whether Bill 62 recently passed by the Quebec National Assembly is constitutional or not?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): I did not receive any such requests, Mr. Speaker.

[English]

POLLUTION

ABATEMENT PROGRAMS FOR FEDERAL PROPERTIES

Mr. John L. Skoberg (Moose Jaw): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources. Is the government giving any consideration to allocating X millions of dollars to pollution abatement programs in federally responsible properties?

Hon. J. J. Greene (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, I did not catch the question. Would the hon. member mind repeating it?

Mr. Skoberg: Is the government giving any consideration to allocating X millions of dollars to begin pollution abatement programs in federally responsible properties across the country?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member's question is a little general. Perhaps he might want to put it on the Order Paper.

Mr. Skoberg: If I may rephrase it, Mr. Speaker, has the government given any directives to federal agencies across the country as to a federal pollution abatement program?

Mr. Greene: Mr. Speaker, general directives have been given and this program is under immediate surveillance. I notice that in the United States the President has announced a program exactly on these lines and has stipulated an exact amount, but here we have not stipulated an exact amount.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. Leader of the Opposition.

Mr. Stanfield: Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs but he has gone, no doubt to attend to important business.

FISHERIES

SEALS—DECISION ON REQUEST FOR COMPROMISE IN DATES OF HUNT

Mr. John Lundrigan (Gander-Twillingate): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Fisheries who is now coming into the House. Could the Parliamentary Secretary indicate the position of the Department of Fisheries with respect to the request they have received from the seal fishermen on the east coast of Newfoundland asking for a compromise in the early and late dates of the opening of the seal fishery?

Mr. E. F. Whelan (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Fisheries and Forestry): Mr. Speaker, I do not believe any decision has been made and I do not know whether it will be changed at all.

Mr. Lundrigan: Would the Parliamentary Secretary or the minister indicate to the House tomorrow the decision they have taken on this request which was received today from the seal fishermen of the east coast?

Mr. Whelan: I will ask the minister to consider this, Mr. Speaker.

[Mr. Skoberg.]

FINANCE

INCREASE BY BANKS IN INTEREST RATE ON LOANS TO FARMERS

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prince Albert): Mr. Speaker, in the absence of the Minister of Finance this question could be directed to the minister who is acting for him today. It is matter of extreme importance to farmers who have borrowed money to buy machinery under the farm loan and farm improvement plans, under which the interest rate is 5 per cent. Would the minister communicate with the chartered banks and point out the injustice that is being done today by those banks in that as soon as a farmer finds himself unable to pay any portion of the principal, even when the interest is paid to date, the interest rate is increased from the level of 5 per cent to 10 per cent or 11 per cent?

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, I will bring that question to the attention of the Minister of Finance.

[Translation]

POST OFFICE

CLOSING OF BRANCHES—REQUEST FOR APPEAL BOARD

Mr. André Fortin (Lotbinière): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the Postmaster General and Minister of Communications? Could he tell the House whether he is planning at present to promote the setting-up of an appeals committee within his department in order to give the municipalities deprived of a post office following a unilateral decision by the minister the opportunity to put forward their arguments and thus to give the population a voice within the department?

Hon. Eric W. Kierans (Postmaster General and Minister of Communications): No, Mr. Speaker.

[English]

LIFTING OF FREEZE ON LETTER CARRIER DELIVERY

Mr. Thomas S. Barnett (Comox-Alberni): Mr. Speaker, I have been neglecting the Postmaster General for some time, so I should like to ask him a question today, too. Would he please tell me and the House when he is going to lift the freeze on the extension of letter carrier delivery services across Canada in communities which are entitled to have them?

Hon. Eric W. Kierans (Postmaster General and Minister of Communications): Mr. Speaker, over recent weeks I have been getting lonesome for the hon. member for Hillsborough, and I was going to ask the hon. Leader of the Opposition to bring him back. Today hon. members are making up for his absence. I think that question should more properly be addressed to my colleague the President of the Treasury Board.

Mr. Stanfield: On a question of privilege, Mr. Speaker, the hon. member for Hillsborough is trying to make up for the deficiencies of the Secretary of State for External Affairs in working out some of the problems in the Middle East.

AGRICULTURE

PROGRAM OF WHEAT ACREAGE REDUCTION INCENTIVES

Mr. A. B. Douglas (Assiniboia): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Agriculture. In view of the cash shortage affecting grain farmers and the fact that seeding will begin in the prairies in about two months, is the minister planning soon to introduce a program of wheat acreage reduction incentives?

Hon. H. A. Olson (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, my colleague the Minister without Portfolio responsible for the Wheat Board, the hon. member for Saskatoon-Humboldt, has made comments on this both in the House and outside the House in the last few days.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): Mr. Speaker, I should like to set out the business of the House for the coming week, if I may.

The business for today will be as announced previously, order No. 25, Bill C-138, with regard to the Cape Breton Development Corporation; order No. 7, Bill C-5, with respect to Criminal Records and the third item, order No. 29, Bill C-152, with respect to the National Parks Act.

Tomorrow, the first item will be order No. 46, Bill C-161, with respect to the Dominion Coal Board, followed by order No. 40, Bill C-158, with respect to Nuclear Liability.

On Monday, we will take order No. 23, the report stage of Bill C-136, the Expropriation Act, to be followed on Tuesday by order No. 61, Bill C-179, respecting investment companies; on Wednesday, order No. 49, Bill S-5, with regard to the Oil and Gas Production and Conservation Act.

Thursday of next week will be an opposition day under the auspices of the New Democratic Party, I understand.

• (3:10 p.m.)

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

CAPE BRETON DEVELOPMENT CORPORATION ACT

GUARANTEE OF REPAYMENT OF MONEYS BORROWED BY COMPANIES AND PERSONS

Hon. Jean Marchand (Minister of Regional Economic Expansion) moved that Bill C-138, to amend the Cape Breton Development Corporation Act, be read the second time and referred to the Standing Committee on Regional Development.

He said: Mr. Speaker, the purpose of this small bill is very simple. It is to bring the powers of the Cape Breton Development Corporation into line with those that Parliament has given to my department.

The corporation was established in 1967 with the power to make grants and loans to enterprises that can contribute substantially to the industrial development of Cape Breton.

In setting up my department, Parliament created the same powers to assist industrial development in other areas that are designated, in consultation with the provinces, as special areas. But there is an additional power. Besides giving grants or making loans direct from government, the departmental legislation also gives authority to guarantee loans from normal commercial sources.

This may be an important means of improving the availability of credit to enterprises in the special areas. A government guarantee may enable an enterprise in a special area to borrow at a reasonable rate of interest in circumstances where it would not otherwise be able to find a bank or investment company willing to lend.

It would be possible, of course, for my department to provide guarantees to enterprises in Cape Breton, by making it a special area. But that would be rather a complicated duplication. The Cape Breton Development Corporation already possesses all of the other powers that my department has to assist industrial development in special areas. It is therefore, better that in Cape Breton the corporation should have all of the powers that can be used to assist industrial development, rather than divide the responsibility between the corporation and the department.

[Translation]

Therefore, Mr. Speaker, this Bill would grant the Corporation the right to guarantee loans up to $100 million. The Corporation will have this means of action to fall back on when a guarantee appears to be the right way to help any industry wishing to settle or expand in Cape Breton.

I must point out that we are dealing with only one aspect of the work done by the Cape Breton Development Corporation. This amendment does not in any way change the function of the Corporation with regard to coal-mining operations on the island. The amendment to the present act deals only with the Corporation's activities for the development of industries other than coal mining.

For this reason, the bill is brief, simple and, in my view, not controversial. It is important, however, because it will round out the powers of the Corporation which will then have all the means required to promote industrial development.

[English]

Mr. Donald MacInnis (Cape Breton-East Richmond): Mr. Speaker, may I say to the Minister of Regional Economic Expansion (Mr. Marchand) how fortunate he is, and possibly how fortunate the people of Cape Breton are, that Mr. R. B. Cameron has made himself available to take over as chairman of Devco. It is hoped that Mr. Cameron, whose ability has been so well demonstrated by developing the Sydney steel operation into what it is today, will be able to do the same thing with the Devco Corporation.

The minister explained that this is a simple bill in that it adds to the powers of Devco and their ability to aid in the financing. He referred also to the fact that since Devco already have these powers there will be no need for his department to divide these powers in this area.

I want to start out, Mr. Speaker, by asking that every member present in the House relay to each and every one of his colleagues what I am saying to the minister. The president of Devco has accused the members of Parliament of passing legislation which violates existing agreements and contracts, despite the fact that following the passage of this legislation the minister himself indicated in this House that all existing contracts and agreements would be honoured. And Mr. Ord, the president of Devco, in addition to breaking the minister's word and placing the blame on Parliament where it does not belong, has written a letter which the president of Dosco co-signed guaranteeing no change in working conditions as a result of the take-over.

I have made many complaints here, Mr. Speaker. I though I might catch the Minister of Labour (Mr. Mackasey) before he left the House to indicate to him that my complaint about the Unemployment Insurance Commission fund is not a complaint about the operation of the unemployment insurance office. I have made that quite clear but, unfortunately, the minister has twisted this around to say it is quite all right for an employer to subsidize the unemployment fund of any employee working for him. I ask hon. members to consider this: Who is subsidizing whom when you consider that an employee with a family allowance of $3,000 a year is forced to retire, can collect $2,756 from the Unemployment Insurance Commission and receive from Devco, the Crown corporation, the difference between that amount and $3,000. Why, Mr. Speaker, some men are receiving less than $10 a month from Devco, whereas they were promised they would receive $3,000. I am sure that no UIC manager in any district would agree that the way UIC funds are being used in this regard is proper.

Mr. Marchand (Langelier): On a point of order, Mr. Speaker, I do not want to stop the hon. member talking about Devco, but we are now talking about a very limited amendment which would give authority to raise guaranteed loans from $20 million to $100 million. That is all this bill does. The House will have an opportunity to discuss Devco, and problems relating to Devco, when the Devco estimates are before the House. Personally, I intend to answer only questions which are related to the amendment. I ask, Mr. Speaker, should this debate be related to the activities of Devco?

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Béchard): The point is well taken. I was about to ask the hon. member to restrict his remarks to the bill.

Mr. MacInnis: Mr. Speaker, I could speak all day on that point of order or a question of privilege because, in his opening remarks, the minister said that the purpose of this amendment was to increase the powers of Devco. My submission is this: Mr. Ord and Mr. Blackmore should not be given further powers but should be immediately dismissed for their lying approach to this matter. I will again refer to what the attitude has been. Our miners in Cape Breton have been told, "If you have a complaint, sue us." That is the government's challenge. This is what I say to Messrs. Ord and Blackmore and I will be only too happy to repeat it to members of the press who hold a microphone up to my face or who have a notebook ready to take down notes. Messrs. Ord and Blackmore approached this matter with lies because the miners of Cape Breton were told with respect to what was done, "This is the law of the land." That is not so.

I had checked with the principal law officers of the Crown—these remarks are recorded in Hansard—and what was done was not according to the law of the land. What else did these men say? They said that 77 per cent of the men had accepted this program voluntarily. That is not so, and no one knows this better than the minister. I was in his office, along with the executive of the UMW and the executives of 26 locals, and the minister was told in front of those union executives that the suggestion that 77 per cent of the people involved had accepted the program voluntarily was a lot of nonsense. No doubt the minister can recall that. Therefore, Messrs. Ord and Blackmore were inaccurate when they said that 77 per cent of the men had accepted the program voluntarily. The program was perpetrated on many of the miners who have been forced to accept it under duress.

I maintain that what was done violated legislation that was passed in the House of Commons, and I ask hon. members on the government side to remember that we are accused of voting against labour. I ask any hon. member, including the minister, to stand up and show me where there is anything in Bill C-135 that could be construed by Messrs. Ord and Blackmore as supporting the contract violation. It seems to me that Messrs. Ord and Blackmore brought in a bylaw that violated existing contracts and agreements.

Mr. Marchand (Langelier): Mr. Speaker, may I ask whether the hon. member is still speaking on the point of order?

Mr. MacInnis: That shows you, does it not, that the minister does not know where he is, what he is doing or what he is here for. And this has been the situation since the Cape Breton Development Corporation Act was passed. Parliament passed the bill, and then the corporation passed the bylaw which it said was the law of the land. I submit that was not correct, because it was not the law of the land.

Let us look at what the approach was at the meetings of the committee on regional development. Is it any wonder that the former chairman packed up and left? He had been adding a good deal to the confusion himself. The chairman of Devco said on November 26, 1968, as recorded in the minutes of the committee which the minister can examine, that the immediate background of Devco comes from the Donald report on coal that was made in May, 1969. Two days later, the same chairman said before the same committee, "Well, the fact is that the Devco approach is based on the Cape Breton Development Act; it is not based on the Donald report." So, here we have the chairman completely contradicting his own approach to the matter within two days.

Then, there is a record of the minister's answers. How did the minister accept this? I say that the delegation made up of the executive of members of the UMW—

An hon. Member: What is the UMW?

Mr. Muir (Cape Breton-The Sydneys): That is a good one. The Liberals do not know what is going on; they do not know what the UMW is.

Mr. MacInnis: I will excuse that. After all, the government only spent $20 million in the Port Hawkesbury area and on Devco. When I first asked the present Prime Minister a question about Devco, he wanted to know who Devco was. This was after the government had spent $20 million on the idea. The Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Mr. Greene) tried to jump in and bluff an answer, but he was not the right minister. Then, the Prime Minister turned to the Solicitor General, (Mr. McIlraith) only to find out that he was the wrong minister. So, there we had three ministers, not one of them knowing who had authorized the spending of $20 million, and all the time the minister responsible was sitting alongside the Prime Minister with a smirk on his face. When a Liberal member asks, "what is the UMW", that is quite all right with me. Let them ask all the questions of that type they want, because it only proves to the miners and unions of Cape Breton that the Liberal party does not give a damn about the situation it has allowed to develop.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. MacInnis: Again I say, although you may accuse us of voting against labour you, yourself, stand convicted by the actions of the president of Devco.

• (3:20 p.m.)

An hon. Member: May I ask a question? How old is he?

Mr. MacInnis: I think he is about your age.

Mr. Smerchanski: And how old are you?

Mr. MacInnis: I have tried to indicate to the minister where the corporation has gone wrong, and what has been going on down there. I have referred to the approach Messrs. Blackmore and Ord have taken to the matter and, yes, that they have been lying to the public of Cape Breton. Why do I say that? How can I back that up? I can do that very simply. I am sure the minister can hear me. I am going to use him to support my charge that Mr. Blackmore has lied in this instance. I have made complaints in this House. I have asked the government to investigate the hiring policy of Devco as there are now men coming from outside Canada to work for this company.

Mr. Blackmore has interpreted the mining regulations of Nova Scotia to mean that it is necessary to have a man with a college degree to be a mine manager. He is entirely wrong. The best of our managers are those who came up through the ranks. Mr. Blackmore says we need professional men because it is sophisticated equipment that is going to be used in the coal mines. Let me put on record that there has never been a mine manager who has used sophisticated equipment or any other kind of equipment. No matter what equipment is to be used, it will be the miner who will use it. If he needs instructions or a demonstration, this will be provided by the supplier of that equipment. There has never been a manager in the Cape Breton coal mines who knew the equipment better than the man who was handling it. The approach of Mr. Blackmore is an underhanded method of putting in a bunch of outsiders as managers or senior officials of this corporation, thereby displacing qualified Cape Bretoners. That statement applies not only to Nova Scotians but to all Canadians because these people I have referred to came from outside Canada.

I complimented the government on the fact they made a choice of a chairman and did not have to go outside of Nova Scotia. This was the choice they should have made originally. This mess was developed by the former chairman, Mr. Fullerton, who I understand finally turned his back on it. Hon. members know who informed me that the government asked him to resign. I could not swallow that, despite the fact I received the information from a Liberal member of Parliament. I said I could not accept that fact because if he was asked to resign, then why would he be placed in charge of the National Capital Commission in the city of Ottawa where he could get himself all fouled up the same as he did in Cape Breton? Members of Parliament from the Ottawa area would be well advised to examine very closely what side of the argument they take, because I was severely criticized for taking the side of the argument they seem to be inclined to adopt.

Hon. members should take a close look at Mr. Fullerton because he turned out to be the wrong choice. He is the gentleman who told the committee that the immediate background of Devco came from the Donald report, and two days later said it was not based on the Donald report. This gentleman also made a statement that the minister came very close to repeating the other day. I refer to the statement the minister made following the representations by my colleague, the hon. member for Cape Breton-The Sydneys (Mr. Muir), on behalf of the CBRT team which had made complaints and the government was being asked to make certain investigations in respect of their claims.

The minister at that time said this was a group of superannuated employees who did not have any representation in the union. He practically said the union was not doing anything on their behalf. How wrong can be he? The CBRT is a bigger union than UMW District 26 is. The minister sloughed them off as some superannuated employees, not realizing that the objections were coming directly from people involved and working for Devco. The minister's statement came very close to the statement made by the chairman of the Cape Breton Development Corporation, this same Mr. Fullerton, who said:

> In terms of ability to apply pressure, however, the pensioners tend to be a dispersed force.

In other words, Mr. Fullerton, at that time the chairman of Devco practically said, forget about the pensioners; they are a dispersed force. This is very close to the answer the minister gave to the hon. member for Cape Breton-The Sydneys when he referred to the CBRT as a bunch of superannuated employees, an insignificant lot.

The minister is aware that many protests have been made. I have protested on many occasions. What gripes me most is the use of the unemployment insurance fund and the arrangement that is talked about. I wish to emphasize that is not a proper use of the unemployment insurance fund. I am sure any regional manager in the unemployment insurance offices would tell the miners that it is not a proper use of the fund. The minister keeps twisting it. The minister can say what he wants about the pressure I am trying to bring to bear on the Commissioner of the Unemployment Insurance Commission, but I want to make it quite clear that the UIC did not have a choice in this case.

These men are unemployed and therefore they are receiving their benefits. The legislation provided that a married man with dependants could collect $3,000 and a single man $2,400, yet $2,750 of this amount can be collected from the UIC. The miner who was forced to retire is eligible to collect, and the government says this is quite all right. How ridiculous can they get in their approach?

Devco have now notified the retired miners, those voluntarily retired as well as those forcibly retired, that they should make application for seasonal benefits. What is a retired miner to gain from that? It only means that he ties himself to the UIC office. If he is not collecting UIC benefits, then Devco is fully responsible for the $3,000 or $2,400, whatever the case may be. Devco is now instructing these men to collect the seasonal benefits. Devco is telling these miners that they should keep trotting back and forth to make themselves available at the UIC office.

I said to the head of Devco and, I now say to the minister, that this should not be called a pension. It is not a pension. It is a pre-retirement leave plan which is no longer available once the man qualifies for old age security. He then falls back on the original $75 which used to be the Devco gratuity. The minister is still worried about his point of order.

Mr. Marchand (Langelier): Let me hear a little bit about the amendment.

Mr. MacInnis: You left the door wide open, but then again you don't know what you are doing anyhow in this case. I intend to take full advantage of it. I say the minister does not know what he is doing. If he does know, then he is taking a very careless approach to the attitude developed in Cape Breton by Mr. Blackmore. While the minister was out behind the curtain I was going to call on him to support the lies Mr. Blackmore has used. I am using this word very liberally, but I am prepared to go on a public platform outside this House, make these charges and make them stick. The minister himself is going to make them stick because I have complained about the hiring practices of these people who came from overseas. I was thinking of the British Isles when I used the term "overseas". I did not want to say England because there might have been a Scotsman or Welshman. I could refer to these people as outsiders. The minister could check to see where these people came from. The minister referred to them as foreigners.

When I asked the minister a question in this House, he referred to a report given to him by the Devco people. Who in Devco is responsible for the coal division? Mr. Blackmore is. Any advice the minister has imparted to this House has necessarily come from Mr. Blackmore, the president of the coal division. The minister indicated to me the information he had. In fact, he showed me the information. I told him at that time he was still wrong and that his advisers were lying to him. The minister knows very well that I can substantiate that statement because he has put the proof in writing for me.

Why are these men permitted to get away with this? I have warned of the purchasing policies that Devco is following, but these warnings have been sloughed off. They say the representations of the member do not mean a thing, we will wait for the reports from the union. The unions have already made those representations that the purchasing policies of Devco were creating a safety hazard. I think any number of government departments could get themselves involved in this question. Does Devco have a purchasing agent who goes overseas to make these purchases, or do the suppliers send representatives here to make their sales pitch? What are the arrangements and who makes the profit on these purchases? It would be enlightening to look into this. I recall that previously, under Dosco, some very interesting things came to light with respect to supplies arriving from the old country.

• (3:30 p.m.)

The local unions have protested the purchasing policies of Devco on the ground, as I say, that they were creating a safety hazard. At the time, they were talking about a replacement of mine safety lamps. Here, again, is an indication of the high-handed methods of Mr. Blackmore. In this case Mr. Blackmore authorized the changing of these lamps without the approval of the Nova Scotia mines inspection department. Mr.

Blackmore has adopted a high-handed attitude, running roughshod over the miners and the people of Cape Breton. He is even disregarding the regulations laid down by the department of mines. I make these complaints, but because the minister does not read his mail, because the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) does not read his mail and because other responsible ministers do not read their mail, hon. gentlemen opposite are unaware that protests have also been made by the unions. These protests have been completely ignored. No doubt, my hon. friend from Cape Breton-The Sydneys (Mr. Muir) will refer to the minister's attempt to slough off union representations in the House the other day. I say these people have shown a callous, calculated, underhanded approach to the situation in Cape Breton.

The minister must know something of the background involved here. The former Secretary of State, who is no longer sitting in this House, was recently running a television program in which controversial subjects were discussed. She invited speakers concerned with different sides of the subject to discuss these matters on the air. I am referring to Miss LaMarsh, a former cabinet colleague of the minister's. She asked whether I would agree to appear on one of those programs and I volunteered to do so. Then, she wanted to know whether there was a miner available to speak directly from a miner's point of view, and one was found. Then, the people in charge of the program got in touch with Devco to arrange for someone to make the Devco position clear. All this can be checked out. Mr. Blackmore was not available. He was in England. There was a very odd suggestion made at the time, one which I do not intend to repeat here. Since then, developments have borne out the reason it was made.

In any case, Miss LaMarsh was not satisfied with the representation which Devco wanted to send along, so I guess further telephone calls and requests were made. Lo and behold, Mr. Blackmore appeared on the scene. He had got back in an awful hurry. In fact, he had not even been in England; he did not want to face a discussion of the situation which had developed in Cape Breton. When he did appear, he made a few faux pas. The Cape Breton retirement plan did not even go into effect until the spring of the year. Yet he told this miner who had been forced to retire: Had we known about this earlier, we could have done something about it. The miner told him right there and then that the situation had in fact been talked over with him in February. Mr. Blackmore lied again. He has continued to sell his lies to this government and they have continued to believe them.

The other day the minister made a statement about pensioners indicating, it seemed, that they did not mean anything. He was wrong there. He must be aware of the fact that the pensioners recently voted in an election in Cape Breton. He must be aware also of the fact that the miners were told, with respect to the vote on their most recent wage agreement and contract, that if the contract was not accepted the former miners would be denied any payments. The vote was carried successfully. The miners today will tell you it was a "sweetheart" vote in the first place; it was brought off just before Christmas when each and every miner has some back time coming. As the miner said on the television program, it was a "sweetheart" contract—the wives wanted this extra money to buy a turkey and a bag of toys.

But in addition to pulling off the contract vote at that particular time, what else did Mr. Blackmore do? He left the impression with the miners of Cape Breton that if they did not approve this contract former miners would receive no benefits. This is another lie. Why does the minister permit this man to come into the country, bring in his buddies to displace qualified workers in the area, and lie to the people and the government and get away with it?

After the vote had been taken, Mr. Blackmore patronizingly said he would bring it to the attention of Mr. Ord so that Mr. Ord could in turn bring it to the attention of the Treasury Board and the miners could receive what was due to them, tied in with the contract. This was the lying approach taken by Mr. Blackmore supported by Mr. Ord himself. These are the men who are running things in Cape Breton, men in charge of arrangements which are supposed to be for the benefit of Cape Bretonners. What have they done in the mining towns affected? The early retirement of 1,300 or more miners has simply had the effect of reducing considerably the money available to the economy of the area. Nothing helpful has been done. What about the alternative work which this legislation was supposed to provide? As I said, this pensions issue was tied directly with the recent vote; the indication was given to the miners of Cape Breton that if they did not approve the contract put before them, former miners would receive no assistance.

I asked the minister to check the legislation as it appears in section 18 of the act:

> The Corporation shall, by by-law, provide for the establishment, management and administration of ... all arrangements for the benefit of persons and dependents of persons formerly employed.

How in the name of Heaven can we, as members of Parliament, permit ourselves to be accused by these men of being anti-labour and stand by while legislation which Parliament has made mandatory is tied in with a contract? The legislation made it mandatory but they sold to the people of Cape Breton the idea that if they did not vote for this contract, former employees on pension would receive nothing. How much are we going to have to take from Blackmore and Ord? Are we going to allow Mr. Ord each and every day to continue leaving the impression that members of Parliament, through legislation passed by this House, have violated existing contracts and agreements? If so, then I declare that this is not the kind of assembly of which I want to be part. Never in my life have I agreed to the kind of hanky-panky that is going on now.

• (3:40 p.m.)

Oddly enough, I wrote a considerable amount of the story and released it to the press, but it never appeared in the press. Why? I will sign my name to it, and I will repeat outside this House my challenge both to Mr. Ord and to Mr. Blackmore. Let them come on a public platform with me in Cape Breton and I will call them what they are. I will point out to them, as I have tried to point out to this government, where they have been going astray, how they have been selling the men the idea that unless they support the contract there will be nothing available for them. The legislation is there in black and white for all to see.

People who do not wish to retire have been forced to retire, and we are told this is the law of the land. They were told they were making a big fuss and that everything was going to be perfect. Then, I reminded the officials that they had not even received the approval required from Treasury Board to make certain legislation valid, and for two or three days there was a great flap. Finally, they pulled in their horns, got the necessary approval and proceeded from there.

But just how did they proceed from there? What has been their approach to the matter? Why should miners in Cape Breton be under duress to vote on their own contract? They feel compassion for former employees, some of whom perhaps are fathers, uncles or older brothers, and are being asked to support a contract, which was not all it was said to be despite the glowing terms in which it was painted by Mr. Blackmore.

I think the minister should take a serious look at this particular situation. I repeat, since they sold the 77 per cent idea, the minister has had representations made to him—he cannot slough this off—by the union executive, by the local union executive and by municipal authorities. Yet, he has taken no action. He does not care.

The minister now says that the powers of Devco will be broadened, and that is fine. I am sure that under the able direction of Mr. Cameron drastic changes will come about, changes that will bring about much improvement. I ask the minister: Why not give Mr. Cameron an assist and make the task of the new chairman as easy as possible? Why not examine the representations that have been forwarded to the minister by Mr. Blackmore so that the minister can see where Mr. Blackmore has not been advising him correctly and he can dismiss Mr. Blackmore? That is not an unreasonable request to make.

If the minister thinks it is an unreasonable request, then I cannot see why. The minister made representations to this House based on information that was passed to him by Mr. Blackmore, supposedly a responsible officer in the coal division. The minister has made these representations to the House, and Mr. Blackmore—I hate to use this expression—has made a fool of him, an absolute fool.

The minister showed me the representations he received and I told him they were lies. The minister knows that I have in my office correspondence supporting the validity of the representations that I made at that particular time. The minister has a choice: Is he going to dismiss Mr. Blackmore from his employment, or is he going to rely upon this man, as head of the coal division, to keep feeding him information that is probably full of holes and false?

I made reference to purchasing policy and the desirability of examining that policy. When things are bought and sold there is always a profit involved. Have Devco appointed their own purchasing agent, and did they send him to England to purchase equipment? They would not send him anywhere else, because to my knowledge no equipment is coming from anywhere else.

I should like to know what is behind this. Let the minister examine the supply system, and also the regulations that are being run-over roughshod by Mr. Blackmore, who is completely ignoring regulations applicable to the province of Nova Scotia where he is operating. I realize there is a divided authority here which I understand has been called upon, for different reasons, during the last few days. But we cannot escape the fact that today Devco is a crown company under the jurisdiction of the federal government, and as such the federal government should take an interest in what these people are doing. I ask: Why were these regulations flaunted? Why was Mr. Blackmore allowed to do the things he has done in Cape Breton? And why does Mr. Ord support them?

I have referred to the fact that the legislation itself was set up in light of the prevailing social and economic problems in coal mining towns in Cape Breton. The legislation has seen fit to deal with the economy of the island of Cape Breton, which is quite acceptable. A few investments have been made at the other end of the island which are laudable. But what about the economic and social problems of the mining towns that are affected? What has been done in these mining towns?

I repeat, the only thing that Devco has done so far is to reduce the money supply available to the economy of these towns. The social problems of these towns have been completely ignored. Devco is of the opinion that it can dictate to the communities of Cape Breton. It long ago left the impression that the only way to save Cape Breton was to try and impose its opinions on the municipalities of the island. Possibly, in the long run that may be the answer; in the meantime Devco need not depend on this approach to tell the people of Cape Breton that Devco is their only salvation. Devco has a responsibility to the mining towns that are affected about which it has done nothing.

The minister is now asking to increase Devco's powers. All that Devco has done, I say again, is to violate existing agreements and to blame members of Parliament for passing legislation, which I claim cannot be substantiated.

Mr. Ord, the chairman of Devco, has also made some weird statements. The purpose of Devco is to promote industrial growth on the island of Cape Breton, and whether or not it has been anywhere near successful, I do not know. As I say, it has supported substantially an oil industry in the strait area, and no doubt has pumped quite a bit of money into the economy of that area. But what else has it done?

[Mr. MacInnis.]

I am sure the miners in the mining towns of Cape Breton, for whom nothing has been done, will derive quite a bit of comfort from the fact that, through the courtesy of the research department of the Cape Breton Development Corporation, it is now known that 376 cars crossed over the strait of Canso in the second week of July last year. Big deal! We are now told by the research department of the Cape Breton Development Corporation how many cars cross over the strait of Canso during any given week of the year. This is supposed to be a contribution to the economy of Cape Breton. Strangely enough these figures were always available to us through the tourist department.

• (3:50 p.m.)

Let me jump back again to the purchasing policy and the callous approach that these gentlemen have taken. I say "gentlemen" and I really take that back in a hurry. In referring to the approach that these men have taken in respect of Cape Breton, I ask the minister to look at something else. He is worried about the time. Again I say, Mr. Minister, you opened it up.

The minister is fully aware of the fact, and if he is not he should be, that the unions have been complaining about this purchasing policy. The unions have been complaining about the use of UIC funds to substantially meet the cost of the first year of retirement of the miners. He knows they have been complaining about the layoffs. He knows they have been complaining about compulsory layoffs and he knows they have been complaining about broken contracts.

Let me refer to the first appearance of the Devco people before the regional development committee at which time certain facts came to light. In order to clear up any misunderstanding about this, let me repeat that this early retirement leave plan was never a negotiated plan. Mr. Blackmore himself has put that on the record, although he has left an impression otherwise in Cape Breton, and the union leaders have left a different impression. The impression is that this was a negotiated plan. That is not the case. Mr. Blackmore is on record before the regional development committee as having said this was never the case and this was never a negotiated plan. He said there was nothing in the legislation that compelled them to negotiate. He said it was discussed. He said it was never negotiated but it was discussed among the union members.

There again, this is not true. This is not the case. Mr. Blackmore's own words can substantiate that this is not true. There are seven or eight unions involved. Mr. Blackmore said he only spoke to one union because this union makes up 92 per cent of the working force. That is not an excuse or a reason to exclude the other six or seven unions involved. It certainly does not substantiate Mr. Blackmore's statement, that Devco did not have to negotiate because they discussed it with other unions. This is not true.

I say to the minister that I have complained and my colleague the hon. member for Cape Breton-The Sydneys (Mr. Muir) has complained about this. These complaints have been forwarded to the government by wire and letter. I know of one case in which the government said it did not receive a wire that was sent. A check was made with the CN people in Sydney by the union concerned, and it was confirmed that the wires were delivered yet the government has not acknowledged having received them.

Once more I go back to the purchasing policy. Why is this not being investigated? Substantial amounts of money are being spent in England to bring in supplies that could be provided here in this country at lesser cost and of higher quality. If the minister does not care to accept that from me let him examine the correspondence he has received from the union.

Why did Mr. Blackmore arbitrarily change the safety lamps used in these mines and bring in a lamp that was inferior to the one already in use? This was done without the approval of the mines department. He was completely flaunting the laws of the province in which he was working.

While the minister is investigating that, would he also investigate why it is necessary to bring in a piece of equipment from England at a cost of $400,000 when there is other equipment available on the site which could do the job until the Lindgan mines are developed. At that time changes would have to be made in that particular equipment? I ask the minister why Devco should be authorized to spend $400,000 to purchase a piece of equipment from England when there is equipment lying around in Cape Breton that could do the job efficiently for now? Are we fighting inflation? If you are fighting inflation you have not got Mr. Blackmore on your side.

When the legislation to set up the Cape Breton Development Corporation was before this House I think it received unanimous support. I am not aware of anybody who spoke against it. I might add that the bylaws Devco adopted violated contracts and responsible agreements, in spite of what Mr. Ord said. Imagine the president of a corporation putting in writing that there would be no change in the working conditions of employees after the take over, and then before he gets the seat warm he violates not only the intent of the legislation but the promises in his own letter. The corporation brought in the early retirement plan.

I asked the minister to examine the legislation. Nowhere does it give the Devco people the authority to prematurely retire people at age 60. Somebody says this represents the greatest good for the greatest number. I subscribe to that philosophy in many instances, providing that the basis on which you start is related to a certain rung on the ladder and that this will bring them up the ladder. I do not subscribe to the philosophy of the greatest good for the greatest number if you are going to cut the feet out from under the fellow at the bottom and sink him deeper in the hole. This is what has been going on at Devco. This idea of the greatest good for the greatest number is a lot of nonsense and nothing but propaganda. This is part of the 77 per cent that was lost. It was made quite clear to the minister and his office that this was not the true picture, in spite of the fact that Devco provided the minister's parliamentary assistant with all this information before it was officially released to throw back at the members.

The least you could do, Mr. Minister, is familiarize yourself with what is going on down there. Up to now you have not been doing that. You have overlooked the representations made in your own office. You have overlooked the representations I have made in the House. These same representations in respect of what is going on in Cape Breton today have been forwarded to you by wire and letter.

How could Devco have tied in the most recent wage contract with what the legislation made mandatory? For that alone, Mr. Blackmore should be dismissed. I might say here and now that many of the labour problems, and there are a few that have developed within the UMW, can be laid at the feet of Mr. Blackmore. I think his intentions are to wreck the union. If it is not his intention to wreck the union, what he has been doing so far has gone a long way towards accomplishing this.

Look at what is going on and examine what these men are doing. They like to quote the law of the land and like to tell you that everything is above board, everything is being done right. I should like to ask the minister, in respect of the allowances made to these men, what happened to the four per cent they were supposed to get in respect of their earnings during any calendar year in which they worked? That is the law of the land. That is part of our legislation. They are forced to retire without the 4 per cent of earnings for the portion of the calendar year in which they worked. This is the law, Mr. Minister, and it is there for everybody to see. What happened to Mr. Blackmore and his just society? What happened to this outsider whom this minister referred to as a foreigner, and what is going to happen to the others he has brought in to displace Cape Bretonners?

• (4:00 p.m.)

You, Mr. Minister, have gone to Nova Scotia and have selected a chairman to run this operation. Co-operate with that chairman. Today, you have a chairman who has proven himself to be a very capable man. He has revived the Sydney Steel operation which was supposed to have been a gone goose. Despite the fact that representatives of this government appeared before 20,000 people in Cape Breton and said no stone would be left unturned, not a finger was lifted. The government of Nova Scotia was fortunate enough to have Mr. Cameron take over, and today this is cause for celebration in the city of Sydney because of the promise he has brought for the people of the area. Now that we have a man to operate the Cape Breton Development Corporation who has proven ability let us waste no time in making his job function as smoothly and easily as possible. I say, get rid of Mr. Blackmore and Mr. Ord and let us give Mr. Cameron the best possible chance to make this a going concern.

Mr. David Lewis (York South): Mr. Speaker, I do not intend to speak for long. I say to the minister I can well appreciate his desire to limit the scope of the debate to the couple of amendments which are proposed in this bill and which he suggested are not controversial. I remind him, however, with respect, that this is the second reading stage of a bill and that the general principles of this bill have to do with what Devco is supposed to have accomplished for the people of Cape Breton. It is therefore perfectly legitimate to tell the minister, as I do immediately, that from my knowledge of the situation in Cape Breton Island Devco has failed to accomplish anything worth while for the people of Cape Breton. The minister is faced with a population there which is becoming increasingly resentful and which has the same feeling of hopelessness the people of this island have had for many decades.

It is not enough for the minister to say he is giving us two simple amendments and then ask us to please let him have them so that he can go on to do what? To continue to do the totally ineffective and inadequate job which has been done in the past under two years of existence of this corporation. When this question was debated in this House both on second reading and in committee in 1967, if you will permit me to quote a sentence from Hansard during the second reading debate, I said:

> But it is totally wrong in principle, and does not deal with the problems of Cape Breton Island, to give the corporation the authority to throw miners out of work before alternative jobs are available. This is precisely what this bill does.

At the same time, as recorded at page 1662 of Hansard for June 19, 1967, I said:

> —I emphasize, underline and repeat this because it seems to me to go to the core of the problem. In my respectful submission the core of the problem is that no coal miner on Cape Breton Island should lose one day's work as a result of the reorganization by the corporation of the coal industry. Not a single coal miner should be laid off by the corporation until the other arm has created jobs to which those miners may go. Not until then should the closing down of mines or the reduction of coal production take place.

I said to the minister that whether the reduction in the standard of living of the miners is produced by an actual closing down of the mine or whether it is produced by a compulsory pre-retirement plan, the result is the same. The result in the case of the miners of Cape Breton who are affected is that their annual income is reduced from $5,000 or $6,000 a year as miners to a maximum of $3,000 a year under the compulsory pre-retirement plan. In other words, the income and standard of living of those affected has been reduced by about 50 per cent by the pre-retirement plan. To me, as I stated in 1967, this would seem to be contrary to the principle of the bill and a betrayal of the welfare of the people of Cape Breton Island.

I say to the minister without any reservation, and knowing as I do that his own experience in the labour market should make him sympathetic to this situation, that it is significant that when the board of Devco presented a so-called plan under section 17 of the act it dealt with the problem of producing alternative jobs in very general terms so that one does not know exactly what is proposed. The only precise plan that was produced was the early retirement plan for miners. There was nothing precise or definite in respect of the other operations of the corporation to provide alternative jobs. However, there were very definite and precise plans in respect of the compulsory pre-retirement plan.

I am not sure I agree with every other criticism uttered, but I have been concerned about the use of unemployment insurance benefits for the purpose for which Devco is using them. The unemployment insurance fund does not belong to any one group of employees. It belongs to all employees and employers who have contributed to it. I see no reason in the world why Devco should be able to dip its hands into the unemployment insurance fund to meet its program on compulsory pre-retirement. I agree with the hon. member who preceded me that this kind of dipping into the fund is unjustifiable and is unfair to the fund and the people who have contributed to it. From the discussion in 1967 and 1966, from reading the various reports produced in an attempt to see what it is were are trying to do, the only point of importance would seem to be that the miners were not to be hurt, neither they nor their families, by the progressive reduction in the coal mining production of Devco. Devco has not laid off people in the normal way but has reduced the income of the miners affected by 50 per cent. It has forced them to reduce their standard of living by 50 per cent. How can the minister and the board of Devco justify this? Why is it possible for them to do it? In the second annual report dated December 31, 1968 there is a very pregnant sentence which begings at the top of page 8. This report was tabled about a year ago. The sentence reads as follows:

> While the Act does not demand it, Devco has undertaken to lay off men permanently without offering them either the Pre-retirement Leave Plan or reasonable alternative employment opportunities.

Two years and some months ago my objection to the bill was precisely that it did not state that the miners should not be laid off or have their income reduced without alternative employment. I moved an amendment at that time, supported by the hon. member for Cape Breton-The Sydneys (Mr. Muir) and others, to the effect that the act should contain a specific statement prohibiting Devco from reducing employment partially or wholly until such time as alternative work is provided by the corporation. That was denied by the then minister who guided the bill through parliament. So, there is nothing in the act which would make this a requirement. Therefore, the corporation is able to say the act does not demand it but that out of the goodness of its heart it will force some people to reduce their income by 50 per cent until there is alternative employment.

• (4:10 p.m.)

I, therefore, say to the minister that this bill is of little value. It does not contain important amendments to the act. What it proposes will be of little value to the people of Cape Breton, of as little value as many of the other things that are now in the hands of his department, and the result of which is that none of us is able to see so far the real development of industry in the disadvantaged areas or a real step toward eliminating or reducing the regional disparities which affect and afflict this country.

I think these are statements of fact, Mr. Speaker. And if one speaks a little bitterly about it it is because one warned the government that the way it is going about these things is not going to produce results. I remember pleading with the minister, and I plead with this minister now—I think the minister at the time is now the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce (Mr. Pepin)—that he is not going to be able to do good for the people on Cape Breton Island if he relies entirely, outside the coal mines, on private enterprise to provide him with job opportunities for the people of Cape Breton.

Just look at what he is doing. Look at what the treasury of Canada, the taxpayers of this country, are asked to do to attract a private company, maybe in Houston, to come to Cape Breton Island. First, this corporation can lend the company money with or without security and at such rate of interest as the corporation considers appropriate, or without interest. Secondly, the corporation may make grants to this private company that deigns to come to Cape Breton Island, or it may buy some of its shares. Finally, the minister adds the proposal that, in addition to loans without interest if considered necessary, in addition to grants, in addition to investment by the purchase of shares and securities of the company, he is now going to guarantee the repayment by the private company of loans which it may make elsewhere, loans from the banks. The corporation may guarantee the repayment of those loans to the banks and the interest on the loans.

What is the private company going to do, Mr. Speaker? What risk is it going to take? For what reason should it be there? For an attempt to make a profit? What are the people of Cape Breton Island going to get out of it when all the risks, all the capital, all the loans, all the grants are guaranteed by the federal treasury? And the minister says this is a non-controversial bill. So far as I am concerned, it is a very controversial bill because it will again leave the miners of Cape Breton Island, and all the people dependent on their income, in the same hopeless state they have been in for decades, from my personal experience and from the experience of those who have themselves suffered amidst the people of Cape Breton Island.

Obviously, if this is the way the government is going to go about it, to provide Devco with the right to guarantee loans up to $100 million instead of $20 million within the framework they support, that is the right thing to do. My colleagues and I do not propose to vote against the bill because at least it will give Devco a little more leeway with regard to private industry. But I repeat what I have said—

Mr. Marchand (Langelier): I rise just for the purpose of indicating what is the objective of the bill. It does not raise the $20 million to $100 million, it adds $100 million to it.

Mr. Lewis: That is right. I thank the minister. The $20 million was for another purpose. The $100 million is for the guaranteed repayments for which the bill provides. The minister is quite right, which makes my case if you like, Mr. Speaker, that much stronger. Anyone who knows Cape Breton Island, and I am sure the minister knows it as well as I do, and the people of Cape Breton, anyone who has watched the people of the island for the last 30 or 40 years, as those of us who have been there and particularly the people who have lived there, have done, know you have a community that has gone downhill almost irreversibly for three or four decades when coal was gradually being displaced by other energy sources. And all that time we assumed that if we paid subventions and held out carrots to private enterprise, this situation would be improved. However, during that period all that has happened has been that the situation has become increasingly worse. How much longer do we permit this to continue?

I fully sympathize with the hon. member for Cape Breton-East Richmond (Mr. MacInnis) for his vehemence and the depth of his feeling, and I am sure the depth of his sincere feeling about it. I might not use some of the words he uses, and sometimes I sit here and envy him that he does have the courage that I have not got to tell people that when they are misleading people they are not merely misleading, they are lying. There is some value in that. My particular upbringing makes it difficult for me to do it that way. But it is true, Mr. Speaker, that all that Devco has accomplished until now has been to reduce the standard of living of a number of the miners on Cape Breton Island.

Is that what we set it up for? Perhaps the minister hopes that in a year or two years from now something more may come. I hope he is right. I believe he is not. I believe that the whole structure of Devco and the approach to the situation in Cape Breton is a false one, just as I believe the whole approach to get rid of regional disparities is a false one. Just as I am depressed, disappointed and chagrined by the failure of his department in other areas of Canada, so am I disappointed and distressed at its failure in Cape Breton to date.

Maybe if we all live 100 years we may see some results from the hesitant and useless steps that are being taken, but I say to the minister that the only way to deal with a situation such as that in Cape Breton is not to be straitjacketed by ideological objection to public investment in enterprise but to go in there with the help of the Canadian people, with Canadian taxes.

I notice in the report of Devco that they undertook to build an apartment complex, and in a typical elitest approach, managerial approach which is not concerned with ordinary working people—I have not got the report before me now and I am going to state from my memory what I am certain is correct—the report said they had to set up this apartment complex in order that managers and other executives attracted to Cape Breton Island might have a decent place in which to live. To the devil with these managers and executives! Where is there a decent place in which the ordinary people of Cape Breton may live?

All that this board of Devco is able to tell us is that it is building this apartment complex in order to attract—I am paraphrasing—the managerial and executive personnel that industrial development in Cape Breton may require. What this points out, Mr. Speaker, is that you have got to have on the island the building up of a total infrastructure. Not only are apartments needed for managerial and executive types—they are entitled to live in decent places, I am not denying them that right, but so are ordinary people entitled to live in decent apartments and decent homes. You require schools not only to house the children of the managers and the executives but schools to house the children of the ordinary people. You require roads. You require all sorts of things to make it possible for industry to develop, and you require the courage and the desire and the readiness to innovate. You require funds from the public investment in order to make sure that the industry is there and that profitability will not be the reason, the only criterion for its remaining there.

• (4:20 p.m.)

If the minister is going to spend $120 million now and more tens of millions later to attempt to attract private industry, I wonder why it is not possible for him to add what I pleaded with the then minister in 1967 to add to the provisions, enabling Devco itself to undertake the establishment of appropriate industry so that the process might be speeded up, so that new jobs might be created more quickly than is now the case, so that the minister and his department do not have to go cap in hand, begging for private enterprise to come in, offering them all sorts of concessions such as grants, loans without interest, guarantees for loans from the bank and all the rest. Why should we do it that way? Why should it be necessary to lose the time that will be lost before obtaining suitable industries for Cape Breton Island if reliance is placed on dangling carrots before private companies who have not shown any interest before and are not likely to show interest now unless the minister can guarantee the kind of profit which these companies require?

It is in this framework that I look at this bill and I think it is horrible, shameful even, to add the interest for loans made by banking and other institutions to the other advantages which the act already offers companies who can be induced to come to Cape Breton. I think it is shameful that the most which Devco has to show now is the reduction of the standard of living of miners between 60 and 65 years of age. I think it is dreadful that as a result of Devco's operations to date all we have in terms of the morale of the people of Cape Breton is a great deal of uncertainty, a great deal of resentment and a great deal of bitterness. It is unforgiveable that the result of the government's action should be in most cases a division of the union, disagreement as to what should be done with this pre-retirement plan and a great deal of conflict within the ranks of the miners.

The minister may say that this is a little bill which makes only a small change and that it ought to pass quickly. I say to him that this bill, little though it may be, reminds us of the total failure of his efforts and the efforts of the minister who preceded him. It is a total, shameful, criminal failure and inadequate to deal with the problems that face the people of Cape Breton Island. Instead of that, Devco has done the things I have already referred to, the things that the speaker leading off for the Conservative Party referred to, the things that are mentioned in the hundreds of letters I have received from Cape Breton about the situation there.

I said I would not be long, Mr. Speaker, and I do not intend to be because I would just be repeating what I have said already. However, I want to say in conclusion that when a community in a country has suffered disadvantages such as the people of Cape Breton have for so many years, when at last the Parliament of Canada says to these people, here is a plan that is going to help you, it is little short of betrayal to let these people down. Canada as a whole, through the government, has raised the hopes of the people of Cape Breton that perhaps at last they can look forward to an improvement in their situation, the removal of the feeling of insecurity and the removal of the feeling of economic inferiority with respect of the rest of Canada, the feeling of hopelessness and helplessness which the constant reduction in steel and related production on that island has brought to them. But for the corporation to have been in existence for two years, for the people of Cape Breton not to have reason to feel that even a small step has been taken toward the achievement of that objective, is nothing short of betrayal of the interest of the people of Canada and of this Parliament.

I plead with the minister to take another look at this, at the bureaucratic cuts in the income of the compulsorily retired miners. I ask him to take a second look at a corporation which is approaching its job with little plan and even less imagination. I ask the minister to take a second look at a bill which continues to depend on private enterprise which has never shown any interest in Cape Breton Island and which continues to hold out guarantees to these companies which have not responded in a way the situation requires. I ask the minister to bring in a bill to amend the act that will mean something to the welfare and future of the people of Cape Breton instead of an act which will merely add to the bureaucratic control by his department in a hopeless situation.

Mr. Robert Muir (Cape Breton-The Sydneys): Mr. Speaker, I shall not be very long, either. I shall only take a few minutes to comment on this bill—

Mr. Marchand (Langelier): Half an hour.

Mr. Muir (Cape Breton-The Sydneys): The minister interjects, but I did not hear what he said.

An hon. Member: It does not matter.

Mr. Muir (Cape Breton-The Sydneys): In any event, Mr. Speaker, the member for Cape Breton-East Richmond (Mr. MacInnis) has certainly brought to the attention of the House and to Canada many of the problems with which we are confronted on the island of Cape Breton through the operations of what we term Devco, which is the shortened version of the Cape Breton Development Corporation.

We heard the views of the hon. member for York South (Mr. Lewis) with regard to many of the things that were happening—or perhaps I should say not happening. They are not happening because this minister does not seem to want too much to happen in the Cape Breton area. I say this, Mr. Speaker, because of the fact that time and time again we inquire from the minister about problems affecting the work force of Devco but he has a way of sloughing off his responsibilities and his duty to reply in this House regarding these problems.

I am only going to mention a few matters because the member for Cape Breton-East Richmond has pretty well covered the field, as has the member for York South. The greatest objection I want to raise is the fact—I regret the minister is leaving the chamber but he undoubtedly is going to smoke a cigarette and will be able to hear me from that vantage point—that a man who has a union background and has led unions in this country, has been involved with the working people of this country over many years, has shown such a lack of ability for proper liaison between those who are affected by the operations of Devco. I think he, of all people, should be in a better position to know that there should be good relations between himself and the members of this House, between himself and the unions involved, the work forces that are being directed by Devco. However, as I have already mentioned, he does not seem to want to co-operate.

With regard to the question of the method of paying the retirement allowance, I have on occasion brought this to his attention in the House and have made the suggestion to this minister, as well as to the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) and the Minister of Labour (Mr. Mackasey), that we all have views on the manner in which these moneys are being paid, where the moneys are being taken from and so on. I have suggested that there should be an investigation which could clarify the proper situation, but this request has been refused. It has been ignored by the Prime Minister, the Minister of Regional Economic Expansion and the Minister of Labour and for what reason I do not know. Surely, there is nothing to hide. Surely, nothing would be heard as a result of such investigation that the government would not wish to hear. The investigation would clarify the situation for all concerned.

• (4:30 p.m.)

I support the bill, although I cannot say that it is earth shaking by any means. If it will attract industry to Cape Breton Island, contribute to the progress of the area and assist the officials of Devco, I endorse it and hope that it will be successful in its aim of inducing industry to go to Cape Breton. That is not an easy job and, as I have said before in public forums, the people associated with Devco certainly have their hands full. They have a big job in trying to induce industry to go to the island, because all Canada wants industry and it is not easy for some areas to obtain industry. The people all over this country are trying to attract industry to their regions and as a result Devco faces much competition.

With regard to the recent appointment of Mr. R. D. Cameron, may I say that Bob Cameron has made his mark on the industrial life of Nova Scotia. It amazes me that for some months this government and this minister were looking for someone to be the new chairman of Devco, and undoubtedly the provincial government of Nova Scotia was as well, while the man who was needed was right under our noses. There is a man, I feel, who will do a tremendous job with Devco. These remarks are not a reflection on those who have served in that office before. We never heard the real reason the former chairman retired; personal reasons played a part in his resignation. I hope that in committee the minister will advise us why the resignation took place, and also advise us of many actions which have taken place within Devco.

The hon. member for Cape Breton-East Richmond talked about the change-over of the mine lamps that were used. Like the hon. member, I worked in the coal mines for many years. The lights used in the Cape Breton coal mines were provided by Mine Safety Appliances of Pittsburgh, Pennsylvania, through a Canadian outlet. To my knowledge, they were safety approved, but they are not to be used any more. We are to have different type of lighting equipment which must be purchased in Britain. I do not know the reason for this; this provision is unusual.

Another unusual provision is that the supervisory staff of Devco apparently must come from Britain. I really think that there are in this country Canadians with brains; I do not think we have to bring these people over from Britain. May I ask the minister a question that has to do with the people being brought over. Is it correct that Devco will allocate funds to the people coming from Britain for the purchase of or construction of new homes at low or no rates of interest, with the proviso that Devco shall have the option of buying back the homes if they are no longer used by the persons being brought in? Is this correct?

I should also like to know from the minister why there is such a rapid phasing out of the coal industry in Cape Breton Island. Oh, yes, we have been assured in the House by the minister, by others concerned and by the officials of Devco, that no one will walk the streets until alternative employment is provided. This, in large part, has been done by a method of shuffling around miners. When one mine has been closed, its personnel have been placed in another mine.

I am vitally interested also to know the future of Princess Colliery in the town of Sydney Mines. The mine is the backbone of the area's economy. According to evidence presented before the Standing Committee on Regional Development, before which Devco officials have appeared, the mine at one time had 1,110 employees. I understand that as a result of putting people on pension and, as the hon. member for York South said, making them submit to a lower, more meagre standard of living by virtue of the allowance provided to them, Devco has succeeded in reducing the work force to approximately 800 people. By the same token, because these people are being made subject to the provision of the retirement program, there is no money in the area to be expended on services. As a result, the whole economy of the area is suffering.

Then, will the minister tell us what is to be done about the new generation which is available for work in the area. True, the authorities have been trying, but without much success, to bring in new industry; and from time to time we hear great statements put out by the public relations people of Devco to the effect that a great new industry is to come to our area. I want to know how many jobs have been provided by Devco since it was created by legislation. I doubt whether we can point to many jobs which have been provided.

It is very difficult and almost impossible for us to obtain information from this minister, Mr. Speaker. I do not know why he is so close-mouthed about the operations of Devco or about other areas coming under his responsibility. I recall that when he first came to this place he was a most co-operative individual. In the past couple of years, it seems that he has not wanted to provide any information to the House. Maybe he cannot; maybe the poor soul cannot, because many times when you ask him a question he shakes his head, stirs himself a bit and gives an answer relating to something about which you have not inquired.

Mr. Marchand (Langelier): What information does the hon. member want?

Mr. Muir (Cape Breton-The Sydneys): I would appreciate receiving, now that the minister has certainly left himself wide open, answers to those questions which have been asked today by the hon. member for Cape Breton-East Richmond and—

Mr. Marchand (Langelier): Which ones?

Mr. Muir (Cape Breton-The Sydneys): I would appreciate full answers to every question asked. That is the only way the minister will be able to justify his existence. The hon. member posed some very penetrating questions.

Mr. Marchand (Langelier): Yes, very penetrating.

Mr. Muir (Cape Breton-The Sydneys): The hon. member for York South also asked some penetrating questions yet the minister says, "What do you want to know?" Well now, Mr. Speaker, this great fund of knowledge has shaken itself from its lethargy and is now about to open up and disclose to Parliament and the country answers which we have been seeking for so long.

The other day we posed a question because of representations that were received regarding the method of paying the pension allowances. I am speaking of the legitimate appeal that came from those members of the CBRT who are employed by Devco. They have a grievance. They have a problem and they want an answer. They want to be given consideration, but the minister sloughed off the question with the attitude that they constitute an insignificant group of people. His attitude was, "We have received no request from the officials of the United Mine Workers of America regarding these men. These people are not important. This is only a small handful of workers."

• (4:40 p.m.)

Mr. MacInnis: He called them superannuated.

Mr. Muir (Cape Breton-The Sydneys): That's right; he did call them superannuated. He did not seem to be aware that they are not superannuated. At the present time they are employed by Devco which comes under the responsibility of the minister. He was referring to those people on this allowance as superannuated. They are Canadian citizens who have a grievance which should be corrected. They should not be sloughed off as a group of old men on pension that we do not want to hear from any more.

Mr. Marchand (Langelier): I want the hon. gentleman to cite from the answer I gave to see if it corresponds. This is not correct, Mr. Speaker, and I do not think it is honest.

Mr. Muir (Cape Breton-The Sydneys): I am glad, Mr. Speaker, that we have aroused the minister to the extent that he will at least try to straighten out what he did say.

Mr. Danforth: You are being optimistic.

Mr. Muir (Cape Breton-The Sydneys): It is very difficult to be optimistic about this minister. It really is. I am stating what I think the minister said. Of course, when we read Hansard he is not in fact recorded as saying that. I checked Hansard because a number of my colleagues believed the minister referred to old men. I also thought I heard this statement, but I could not find it in Hansard.

Mr. Marchand (Langelier): No.

Mr. Muir (Cape Breton-The Sydneys): Isn't that most unusual?

An hon. Member: It was cleaned up.

Mr. Muir (Cape Breton-The Sydneys): There were many people sitting around me at the time. In addition to that, there were two ladies in the gallery who happened to be from a constituency in Cape Breton, not my constituency. They stated that they also thought they heard the minister say that. The hon. member for Cape Breton-East Richmond (Mr. MacInnis) seems to be of the same opinion as I am. In any event, the reference did not appear in Hansard and therefore I have no recourse other than to take the word of the minister.

Mr. MacInnis: Let him repeat his words.

Mr. Muir (Cape Breton-The Sydneys): I will gladly do that.

Mr. Marchand (Langelier): I never said it.

Mr. Nystrom: Check the tapes.

Mr. Muir (Cape Breton-The Sydneys): I wish the minister—

Mr. MacInnis: I rise on a question of personal privilege. The minister just interjected from his seat that we are a bunch of liars. He can deny that if he wishes, but my hearing is not that bad. I call Your Honour's attention to the fact.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. I suggest if that was said the minister did not intend it. As is well understood, and I think generally accepted by hon. members of this House, terms such as that are not used and I am sure it will not appear in Hansard. Being as generous as possible to the hon. member, I have some misgivings about the degree which we seem to be ranging from the bill. I realize it is a rather general subject, but I invite the hon. member to restrict his remarks as much as possible. With that suggestion, I invite the hon. member to continue.

Mr. Muir (Cape Breton-The Sydneys): As usual, Your Honour is very kind and courteous. I have listened with great interest to what Your Honour said. Maybe I misunderstood, and for guidance I ask Your Honour to help me. I thought I heard Your Honour say that possibly the minister said we were a bunch of liars, but it would not go on Hansard. Does that make it any more correct? If the minister did not say that, let him say so because I now rise on a question of privilege. I ask him to again make the comment he made a moment ago which was referred to by the hon. member for Cape Breton-East Richmond or is the record to indicate that we on this side are a bunch of liars?

Mr. Marchand (Langelier): Mr. Speaker, a few moments ago the hon. member was referring to people in the gallery who understood the words he was reporting, I believe not necessarily in the House. I say that those people who told him that are a bunch of liars. That is all.

Mr. Muir (Cape Breton-The Sydneys): Mr. Speaker, I think that is a weaseling and sniveling way to get out of something. The minister now says that I am not a liar, the member for Cape Breton-East Richmond is not a liar, the people in the Commons are not liars, but the people who sat in the gallery and told us that are liars. Good heavens, what are we coming to when a minister of the Crown acts like a child?

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

An hon. Member: He used to be a wise man.

Mr. Muir (Cape Breton-The Sydneys): Yes, one of the three wise men from the province of Quebec. Wise, Mr. Speaker?

Mr. Dinsdale: One of the three blind mice!

Mr. Muir (Cape Breton-The Sydneys): One of the three blind mice, that is correct. This minister should lean toward the working man so far as this bill and Devco are concerned because of his background.

An hon. Member: Where did he work?

Mr. Muir (Cape Breton-The Sydneys): I don't know where he worked. He was supposed to be involved with a union in the province of Quebec for many years. Surely, this minister who is piloting this small piece of legislation through this House should lean toward the working man for whom he professedly fought as a union leader for years. We are now told that people who sit in the gallery and state something are liars. These people's husbands are coal miners. However, the minister has clarified his statement in this august body. We, here, are not liars.

We wonder why there are so many problems with regard to Devco. How could it be otherwise, Mr. Speaker, when we do not have a minister who will smarten up, be responsible and do his utmost to work in co-operation with members of this House and representatives of Devco? Is it a fact that there is no liaison between the Devco officials and the minister? Is it a fact that he is minister in name only and that the deputy minister, Mr. Tom Kent, tells the minister what is going on, but the minister is not intelligent enough to carry little tales from the deputy minister.

An hon. Member: We have heard of Tom Kent before.

Mr. Muir (Cape Breton-The Sydneys): We certainly have; we have heard too much of him.

Mr. Peters: People knew what to do with him.

Mr. Muir (Cape Breton-The Sydneys): I ask this minister to make a statement as soon as possible with regard to the future of Princess colliery at Sydney Mines, the backbone of the economy of a town of 9,000 people. Up the present time, there has been no new industry brought into that area by Devco. It is my wish that the town of Sydney Mines get new industry. I think this minister and the officials of Devco owe to the mayor, councillors and the people of that town, advice as to what the future holds.

During the Christmas recess I was interviewed on television. I said it had been rumoured that the Princess colliery will close in approximately two years. This is what I have been told. When you are here a few years you get a few friends in different departments who advise you about a few things. I have been requested not to divulge that person's name and I will not do so, but I want the minister and Devco officials to correct me if I have been erroneously informed. This would be great. It would be wonderful. If I have been correctly informed, I ask them to come forward and say what is going to happen to Princess colliery.

• (4:50 p.m.)

I believe it is the duty of Devco and of the minister to take this responsibility seriously and disclose what is the future of the area from which men are drawn to work in the Princess Colliery. They do not know what tomorrow will bring. Will it bring industry, as a result of this amendment to the bill? Let us be reasonable. That will take some time even though we have Bob Cameron—and there are some good people in Devco who work hard. We cannot expect success overnight. You cannot turn a key and establish an industry the next day. We know there is a problem involved here. But let us be open with the people who are most directly concerned, those whose lives depend on what Devco plans to do. As a fellow by the name of Johnson said in the United States some time ago: "Come, let us reason together." Is that in the thoughts of the minister?

An hon. Member: Not likely.

Mr. Muir (Cape Breton-The Sydneys): "Not likely" is right. He continues, through the operations of Devco, to reduce the standard of living of those living in the towns affected by the phasing out policy at much too fast a pace. Until there is alternative work, no man should lose his employment. We were assured that this was what the government had in mind. Nevertheless, they are now engaged in this phasing out process and reducing the working staff of the coal mines, though no alternative employment is being provided.

At this moment I see the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Sharp) is telling weirdo jokes about Stockholm—how he crawled on his belly to the agents of Mao Tse-tung. And the minister is laughing his head off.

Mr. Marchand (Langelier): You say something, and I will listen.

Mr. Muir (Cape Breton-The Sydneys): Now, we are getting the hon. gentleman stirred up. Let me tell you, Mr. Speaker, that I do not agree with many of the things the minister says. In fact, there is very little he says with which I agree. Nevertheless, I shall defend to the death his right to be ignorant. It is only proper we should do that. I hope that when this amendment goes to the committee the minister will appear before that committee, together with some of the people from Devco, and be in a position to answer the questions which he said today he would be glad to answer. It may be that the minister will be able to answer our questions this evening. I am sure he will be glad to answer all the questions which have been posed to him this afternoon.

[Mr. Muir (Cape Breton-The Sydneys).]

Mr. Marchand (Langelier): Which one?

Mr. Muir (Cape Breton-The Sydneys): Oh, he acts like a stupid little idiot. He sits there and says "Which one? Which one?" The question is really so foolish. It is unusual to find one of Her Majesty's ministers behaving in such a stupid, silly, ridiculous, childish manner.

An hon. Member: Look at yourself.

Mr. Muir (Cape Breton-The Sydneys): Oh, someone who is still sitting on his little brain is commenting, now. Why doesn't he identify his constituency?

Mr. Gibson: Pursue your personal vendetta elsewhere.

Some hon. Members: Oh.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. I would ask hon. members, and the hon. member for Cape Breton-The Sydneys (Mr. Muir), to restrict their remarks to the subject of the debate. I must say I am a little troubled by the direction in which it is going; I do not know whether this concern is shared by other hon. members but I do invite the hon. member for Cape Breton-The Sydneys to restrict his remarks to the bill before the House.

Mr. Muir (Cape Breton-The Sydneys): I thank Your Honour for that advice. I certainly feel I should be reprimanded on occasion, but since all the members of this House got here the same way I think Mr. Speaker might take notice of other remarks which were made, especially by the hon. member for Hamilton Wentworth (Mr. Gibson)—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I was not restricting my comment to the hon. member. I was suggesting to all hon. members that we limit interventions and confine our observations to the bill. I was certainly not trying to single out the hon. member.

Mr. Muir (Cape Breton-The Sydneys): Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Let us hope the minister will do his utmost in the future to provide some information concerning Devco and the nature of its future plans for the areas concerned, particularly with regard to future employment. Let us hope the minister will give this information either in this House or before the committee at the first opportunity. There is great unrest. I should like to invite the minister to go to Cape Breton and conduct an on-the-spot investigation himself—not of Devco, not of anything in particular, but of the situation generally. Let him sit down with the miners' representatives, with groups of civic authorities from the towns concerned, and with his officials from Devco. We know the minister has a difficult job. We know how difficult is the task before Devco. But there must be better liaison, more information forthcoming about what Devco or the minister are trying to do. This is all we ask. I plead with the minister to follow this course.

The amendment is good as far as it goes—I have said that already. I shall close by making just one point. Despite the fact that the minister and I cross swords in the House, he knows that we can co-operate with him, and often do co-operate with him on various occasions. He does get a little peeved and upset at things which are said to him, but anyone who has spent as many years in the union movement as I have knows that you fight a little rough, sometimes—it is possible that the minister himself has done so on occasion. This is all we are asking. We want the minister to take some action, to smarten up the people in Devco, to take a little more interest in his portfolio as it concerns the Cape Breton Development Corporation.

Mr. Peters: Since it is almost five o'clock, Mr. Speaker, may I call it five o'clock?

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

SUBJECT MATTER OF QUESTIONS TO BE DEBATED

Mr. Deputy Speaker: It being five o'clock it is my duty pursuant to Standing Order 40 to outline the questions to be raised at the time of adjournment: the hon. member for Humber-St. George's-St. Barbe (Mr. Marshall)—Public Buildings—Stephenville, Newfoundland—construction of new facilities; the hon. member for Winnipeg North (Mr. Orlikow)—The Canadian Economy—inflation—increase in bank directors' fees; the hon. member for Trois-Rivières (Mr. Mongrain)—Canadian Pacific—Montreal-Quebec line—closing of stations after six o'clock—lack of comfort for passengers.

PRIVATE MEMBERS' MOTIONS FOR PAPERS

CABINET COMMITTEES

REQUEST FOR LIST OF COMMITTEES AND MEMBERSHIP

Mr. David Orlikow (Winnipeg North) moved:

That an order of the House do issue for a copy of the list of all cabinet committees of the Government of Canada and the federal ministers belonging to each of these committees, as mentioned by the Prime Minister at a press conference on October 15, 1969, at the National Press Building.

He said: Mr. Speaker, my motion calling for the tabling of a list of cabinet committees and their membership appears to me to be a simple and reasonable one. It is part of my belief that the business of government, which is the business of all the people of Canada, should be conducted as publicly and openly as possible.

It therefore appears obvious to me that if the public, members of Parliament and members of the press want to know which problems are being discussed by the government, and which ministers are involved, there ought to be no question about the government's willingness to table the information quickly.

I am not surprised that the government has refused to accede to this request. After all, there are now more than 350 notices for the production of papers on the Order Paper. Of those which have been dealt with, I venture to say that more than 90 per cent have been turned down by the government because, in the words one hears almost every week with monotonous regularity, it is not considered in the public interest to provide the information sought. It would be funny and ludicrous if it were not so serious and tragic.

• (5:00 p.m.)

We have a government that is led by a Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) whose reputation is based on his supposed belief in participatory democracy, in involving all the people in government and in a discussion of government problems and policies, a Prime Minister who is involved, as I think the young people say, in tuning-in the people to what is going on.

We have a government that has set up a task force to look into the information services of the government. Lord knows, we spend enough millions of dollars on information, supposedly for the public. This task force brought forth a report that recommended the setting up of something called Information Canada. In response to repeated questions about whether the government intends to implement the recommendation of the task force and set up Information Canada, the Prime Minister said he would make a statement in the near future.

As a matter of fact, some members of Parliament and some members of the press already know that a group of civil servants are working as part of Information Canada. What is Information Canada? Supposedly, it is a body that will give the people of Canada more information about government operations and policies. I submit that it is just one more attempt—which undoubtedly will be to an extent successful since the government has the power it needs to ram through the measures it wants—to set up a propaganda machine that will churn out information that is favourable to the government, information that the government wants disseminated.

I submit there is a basic philosophical difference between the Prime Minister and people in government and people like myself. I believe that the business of government should be public. I believe we ought to follow the Swedish example of making all government documents public unless, for special reasons that are explained by the government, they must be kept private. But the government follows a policy that is the exact opposite of this. Like the kings in past feudal societies, the government considers it should have absolute power; that it has the divine right to say that reports and studies done by the government or for the government are the property of cabinet ministers.

I submit that what we have here is censorship of the worst type. What we have are the makings—if the government has its way—of, in effect, a one party state. If the people cannot be given detailed information on which proposed government policies are based, then the people will not be able to make choices which, I submit, in a democratic society they are entitled to make. Without this information they are to a large extent powerless.

From the reaction of the government to what I submit is a very simple request on my part, and from the reaction of the government to other motions, we see what is the position of the government. The position of the government is that hon. gentlemen opposite are the government; that they have the right to ask for information; that they have the right to increase the Prime Minister's staff in the Privy Council office by 200 to 300 per cent in one year or less; that they have the right to spend millions of dollars hiring private consultants to make specific studies on behalf of the government, all of which information becomes the property of the government and must not be divulged to any member of Parliament, not just to any opposition member of Parliament. I suggest there is no member of the House who knows less about government, and can be less happy about his situation than the backbencher of this government who does not even have the right publicly to complain and criticize.

As a result of the government's attitude, members of Parliament have no right to information. Neither have the members of the press gallery, except those who might have toadied to the Prime Minister or to somebody else and had information leaked to them. Certainly, the ordinary citizens and voters have no rights at all in this connection, other than those that the present Prime Minister, who if he were not king of Canada would be God, deigns to favour.

The policy followed by the government is exemplified by its blanket refusal to release information on the most basic and fundamental questions, by refusing requests for information about studies done by the government and about policies that will lead to legislation which will be of long lasting importance to every citizen of Canada.

I submit that the people of Canada have the right to be given this kind of information. I submit the government is wrong in principle in refusing such requests, that it is wrong in its approach. Although the government talks of democracy, it just does not understand what democracy is. When it does understand what it is, it does not believe it. I submit that my request is not only a legitimate one, one to which the government ought to agree, but is one that the people of Canada have the right to expect the government to grant.

Mr. J. E. Walker (Parliamentary Secretary to Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I agree with one thing the hon. member said. He pointed out that a most important subject, a basic and fundamental question, is before the House today, because we are debating the problem of the dissemination of information to the public through their members of Parliament, as contrasted with the necessity to keep information in certain areas, on which the government might take action, confidential. I submit certain information must of necessity be kept confidential if indeed it might form the basis for future government action in certain areas.

The hon. member also pointed out that there was an unprecedented number of motions for the production of papers listed on the Order Paper. Both he and I have been in the House for a number of years, and personally I have never seen such a large number of requests for papers. If the impression I receive from the hon. member's remarks is the correct one, he appeared to blame the government for the number of notices of motions for papers presently on the Order Paper.

Mr. Orlikow: Remaining unanswered.

Mr. Walker: Just the contrary is true.

It is because this is such an important subject that I have gone into it very thoroughly. Having given some study to the matter, rather than address myself to the broad question—and I must say that I felt the hon. member addressed himself to a much wider area than called for by the motion—I will deal with the specific matter raised.

As a result of my research I feel I could make two types of presentations, one of which would deal with the broader aspects. I will save that for later, since I am aware that the hon. member has another motion on the order paper. When that comes up for debate I will at that time cover the waterfront and deal with the general situation, but for the moment I prefer to be specific and speak to the motion itself.

Although the motion has been read I should like to read it again. It provides:

> That an order of the House do issue for a copy of a list of all Cabinet Committees of the Government of Canada and the federal Ministers belonging to each of these committees as mentioned by the Prime Minister at a Press Conference on October 15, 1969 at the National Press Building.

• (5:10 p.m.)

On the surface this seems to be a very reasonable request. On looking into the whole question, I wondered whether the government and those on this side of the House were not being a little oversensitive on this rather small point. The government felt it was not proper, right or fitting, that the members of these committees should be revealed. I was interested enough to find out why.

I found that there are a great many precedents for refusing to reveal the composition of committees of the cabinet. There are many precedents in Canadian practice for the customary refusal by governments to disclose the names of ministers serving on committees of the cabinet. Because this is such an important subject I want to put on the record some of the reasons and some of the precedents so that the hon. member will not feel it is just this government, for small reasons, which refuse to divulge the names of cabinet ministers on specific committees. There have been several references to the British practice of not revealing the composition of cabinet committees. Here, we are concerned with what Canadian precedents there may be for such reticence.

The Right Hon. John G. Diefenbaker, then Prime Minister, put the matter succinctly on February 4, 1960 in reply to the following questions by Mr. Paul Martin, who was then the hon. member for Essex East:

> Has there been a meeting of the cabinet committee on economic and industrial development since September, 1957?

The Prime Minister of the day replied:

> The means by which the cabinet conducts its business are traditionally regarded as its own domestic affair, and questions on the subject are normally neither asked nor answered. It is well known that many committees of ministers are formed from time to time, and meet as and when required, to facilitate the working of the cabinet as a whole. Only the two established by statute have power to exercise any legal authority.

Earlier, on May 8, 1959, Mr. Diefenbaker had said in a parliamentary reply that the treasury board and the committee of the privy council on scientific and industrial research were established by statute. He provided copies of orders in council appointing members to these two committees. The orders contained the names or titles of the members. The Prime Minister also noted that a minister is chairman of the standing committee on public records and that ministers serve with the Speaker of the House of Commons on the committee of internal economy.

Mr. Diefenbaker was expressing the traditional view of Canadian governments that the inner workings of cabinet are not matters for comment or question, a tradition accepted on both sides of the House of Commons. He was expressing the distinction made between ad hoc committees of cabinet, formed to help in the orderly dispatch of business, and statutory committees. The names of those serving on the former are not made known by the administration. We will later examine some reasons why this practice commends itself to governments.

Cabinet Committees and Membership

Reticence about cabinet committees runs like a thread through parliamentary records. The Hon. Robert Winters, asked about the work of a special cabinet committee on labour matters, replied:

> Subject to correction, I do not believe it has been the policy to report to this House on the work of cabinet committees. If I am wrong, I would be glad to be so informed.

He was not corrected.

In June, 1966, the Minister of National Revenue—the hon. gentleman is now the Minister of Finance (Mr. Benson)—declined to give the names of the members of the Treasury Board and said:

> —as this is a cabinet committee, I should not like to disclose the names of ministers—

Perhaps the Minister of National Revenue of that day was too cautious. Mr. Diefenbaker had, in 1959, tabled an Order in Council listing the members of the Treasury Board, a statutory committee set up "pursuant to the Financial Administration Act." Nowadays, the Treasury Board is regarded "as a separate ministry with a separate deputy minister and its own staff", to quote the words of Mr. Benson on May 31, 1966. It is evidently quite different in nature to the other committees of cabinet.

The Hon. Judy LaMarsh, looking back on her days in office, said:

> The Cabinet's Committee on broadcasting was chaired by the Prime Minister. Although it has never been the practice to make the personnel of such Committees public, for some reason Mr. Pearson himself did so.

The Trudeau administration reduced the number of cabinet committees, gave them more power of decision and speeded up the whole process of committee work. Anthony Westell, that great newspaper columnist, reporting on these changes said—

An hon. Member: A government apologist.

Mr. Walker: This government needs no apologist. He said:

> It has not been the practice to name ministers serving on cabinet committees and Mr. Trudeau refused to announce committee membership yesterday".

It is clear from these examples that the custom of not supplying lists of members of cabinet committees has been followed and defended by several administrations.

Bourinot gives reasons why motions for production of papers may be refused. If one considers a list of cabinet committee members as a paper, the arguments of Bourinot are pertinent. It would be futile to contend that the safety of the state would be endangered or any serious harm done if cabinet committee names became known, but a government may rightly claim that, as Mr. Diefenbaker said in 1959, the way in which a cabinet does business is "its own domestic affair". Hence the ministry may reject inquiries for such lists by arguing with reason that they are confidential.

During discussion of a motion for production of a list of consultants said to have been prepared in the Postmaster General's office Mr. Pickersgill, then Secretary of State, said it was apparent from page 258 of May's 14th edition that:

> —the only kind of documents for which motions can properly appear on the order paper are papers and correspondence of a public and official character sought from government departments—

This is not a government rule, this is a rule of the people who are recognized as authorities on parliamentary procedure.

Speaker Macnaughton on the same occasion remarked:

> The general principle concerning the character of papers which may be asked for is set out in May's sixteenth edition, page 270, where it is stated: "Parliament is invested with the power of ordering all documents to be laid before it, which are necessary for its information."

Some would argue that it is not necessary for Parliament to know the makeup of cabinet committees any more than it is essential for the conduct of the business for Parliament to know the contents of messages passing between the federal and provincial cabinets.

We should note in passing that Speaker Macnaughton commented:

> There is no rule which states that confidential documents may not be asked for, and in some instances what are ordinarily considered to be confidential documents are tabled.

This is not to argue that when confidential papers are requested they must be tabled.

Tradition is based on unwritten rules to some extent, particularly parliamentary tradition. There is the custom that new ministers do not look back at the conclusions of the earlier administration but follow the well established practice of parliamentary government, by putting aside their conclusions. This is now a practice entrenched in our system. One may contend that refusing to disclose the composition of cabinet committees is a similar time-honoured practice established and maintained because it is useful, even though it may not be based on the kind of logic that one employs in establishing a mathematical proposition.

• (5:20 p.m.)

There are other considerations I wish to place on the record because the hon. member's speech will read very well tomorrow if one does not take into consideration that there are some very good Parliamentary precedents for the refusal of the government in this instance to make public to the House the composition of certain cabinet committees. Sir Ivor Jennings mentions the rule that, generally speaking, information should not be given about existing cabinet committees lest the responsibility of the departmental ministers be undermined. There would be danger that the chairman of a cabinet committee might be regarded as the exponent of government policy rather than the departmental minister.

Lord Morrison explains that during the war it was made known that the prime minister was chairman of the defence committee of cabinet and the Lord President co-ordinator of information services because, for special reasons, Parliament and the people should be aware of these functions. But it is inherent in the cabinet system that decisions of cabinet are supported by all ministers, even though in discussions leading to decisions ministers differ.

Secrecy about what occurs in cabinet is a vital part of the system. It is one of the elements that helps an administration perform heavy and complex tasks and ensure cabinet solidarity. The anonymity of committees appears to be a safeguard for this secrecy. Departmental ministers have the duty of defending their conduct of office in Parliament and may be rightly questioned about matters coming within their responsibility. However, it is not part of the responsibilities of ministers who happen to be chairmen or members of ad hoc or other committees to answer in Parliament for cabinet decisions taken in committee but affecting one or more departments. So, this is not as simple a proposition as the hon. member would make it. The committee is ultimately responsible to the cabinet as a whole and to the Prime Minister rather than to Parliament.

I wanted to place this argument on the record, Mr. Speaker, I do not say that many of the motions for the production of papers on the order paper are frivolous, but I should like to point out that I do not believe, up until this point, there has been any detailed answer other than just a government refusal to produce the papers. Now, we have an answer which gives some background in respect of the reason the government has taken this position on this particular matter of cabinet committees.

I could cover the broader subject, but as I said at the beginning I would rather speak on the specific point about cabinet committees. I believe the hon. member has other motions on the order paper. I think there is one which deals with correspondence between the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) and a certain scientific council. Later on when these motions come up I have a more thoroughly researched document which I shall place on the record which I hope will be of assistance to the hon. member. Then, I am sure he will be in a position to go out and acquaint his constituents and others with some of the traditional rules and precedents of Parliament. Therefore, if we are to have proper government operation, not always but from time to time, it is in the public interest and in the parliamentary tradition that these specific names not be revealed.

Mr. Lorne Nystrom (Yorkton-Melville): Mr. Speaker, may I say at the outset that I had not intended to take part in this debate. However, I am baffled by the remarks of the parliamentary secretary. I cannot help but think back to a year and a half ago when the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) was compaigning and portrayed an image of his party. Now, today, we hear the parliamentary secretary to the Prime Minister attempting to justify the activities of the government on the ground of rules and precedents. He has quoted authorities of years gone by to justify the government's refusal to divulge certain information. This is the government which went to the people and said: We are a different political party. We are not the same as we were last year or the year before. We will do things in a different way. We will bring government to the people and allow the people to participate. We are asking the people to become involved. We are throwing away some of the needless old traditions about which one hears so much.

The only justification the parliamentary secretary has given us this afternoon is that traditionally, according to all the precedents he has dug up, this is just not the thing to do. He has based his case strictly on these arguments. This is really baffling when it comes from a government which has called for participatory democracy. More and more we see, not participatory democracy but participatory autocracy, on the part of people in the Prime Minister's office. This is the sort of thing which bothers me more and more as time goes on. If the government is to be so sensitive in respect of something as minor as revealing the names of people on cabinet committees, then what is to be the situation in respect of the major issues of the day. If we are to rely so much on tradition in respect of a matter of this size and significance, on what are we to rely in respect of some of the social matters of significance we will have to face in the future.

I think many people who realize the nature of the reply we have received today in respect of a matter of this size will also realize very quickly the type of government we have. I believe many people have been misled. I am sure the people are beginning to realize this. I think the action of the government with regard to the production of papers in this instance will expedite this realization very rapidly. I and other members of Parliament at times do wish to know about the composition of the cabinet committees of this government. We desire this information because there are certain issues with which we are concerned. In my case, the desired information may have to do with the cabinet committee on agriculture or finance. The members of such committees will have great influence on the type of policy adopted. Such information is of great significance. I am sure it was of great significance in respect of the decision as to whether or not Canada should remain in NATO. I would think that the composition of that particular committee would be of importance.

I would have liked to have had this information. I was in favour of Canada withdrawing from NATO. Many other members wished Canada to remain in NATO. Regardless of our position, I believe many of us would have liked to know who the members were who influenced the decision of the committee. So, without taking up any more time on this issue, I would ask that we completely reevaluate the situation because it is a ridiculous one. We are moving further and further away from participatory democracy. We are moving toward participatory autocracy.

Mr. Steven Otto (York East): Mr. Speaker, the closing remarks of the hon. member who has just spoken might have been prophetic when he said this is absolutely ridiculous, but I think it applies to the motion. The hon. member for Winnipeg North (Mr. Orlikow) spoke at great length about the destruction of Parliament and democracy, as if the composition of a cabinet committee had anything at all to do with Parliament.

• (5:30 p.m.)

Let us suppose that we knew who were the members of each cabinet committee. Then what? Shall you reproach all ministers on such a committee dealing with one particular subject? Shall you blame, or shall you attach any responsibility to the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Olson), the Minister of External Affairs (Mr. Sharp), and the Minister of National Revenue (Mr. Côté) for policy on natural resources, if they happen to be sitting on that committee? Surely, ministerial responsibility attaches to the minister in charge of the department, and it does not much matter who is on the committee.

Hon. members opposite have misunderstood the Prime Minister's purpose and reason. At one time all issues were discussed more or less among all members of the cabinet, and the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) has said, "To make it more efficient we will break it up so that issues are discussed by certain committees, but the whole cabinet and the government take the responsibility." Let us suppose that the membership of a committee is changed. Shall the Prime Minister inform the hon. member for Winnipeg North of all the changes he intends to make in the composition of that cabinet committee? Shall he send him memos of what is to be discussed? To suggest this is utter nonsense.

Democracy and this House are in danger, but they are more in danger from the perversion of the rules with respect to Notices of Motions. The purpose of Notices of Motions is to give an hon. member an honest opportunity to call for papers which are needed and which should be debated. I shall read the names of the members who have Notices of Motions on today's Order Paper. Starting from the first one and continuing to the last, they are: Mr. Orlikow, Mr. Broadbent, Mr. Broadbent, Mr. Skoberg, Mr. Burton, Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre), Mr. Orlikow, Mr. Burton, Mr. Harding, Mr. Howard (Skeena), Mr. Mather, Mr. Harding, Mr. Orlikow, Mr. Gilbert, Mr. Gilbert, Mr. Gilbert, Mr. Saltsman, Mr. Saltsman, Mr. Saltsman, Mr. Howard (Skeena), Mr. Saltsman, Mr. Orlikow, Mr. Orlikow, Mr. Lewis, Mr. Orlikow.

Then we come to Mr. Comeau. How in the world did he ever get in there? I continue: Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre), Mr. Skoberg, Mr. Skoberg, Mr. Skoberg, Mrs. MacInnis, Mr. Saltsman, Mrs. MacInnis, Mr.

Gleave, Mr. Peters, Mr. Broadbent, Mr. Skoberg, Mr. Burton, Mr. Thomson (Battleford-Kindersley), Mr. Burton, Mr. Orlikow, Mr. Skoberg, Mr. Skoberg.

The rules are not being followed. They are being abused by that party.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Otto: None of these motions is sincerely meant to be put. They were devised secretly by that little research organization that they have over there, who think of everything to monopolize all the opportunities to speak, whether it is for private members' bills or Notices of Motions. In that way they will destroy Parliament, not the members of committees of the cabinet.

It is said that the government has refused to accept 90 per cent of these motions. Mr. Speaker, the government is justified in refusing to accept 100 per cent of them. They are not meant sincerely; they are merely for partisan purposes. That party has no intention at all of making this House more effective. It wants merely to embarrass the parliamentary system.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. If I read the expression on your face correctly, sir, I believe you were about to suggest the same point of order. I have no objection to the hon. member for York East (Mr. Otto) disagreeing with what we are doing—I quite enjoy his attacks—but I am afraid that as a Member of Parliament I cannot accept the charge that we do not put these motions on the Order Paper sincerely; that we do not want the information that is asked for in them.

My name was mentioned two or three times. One of the motions in my name seeks a study by the Department of Labour on the minimum wage; another seeks the Willard reports and reviews on social security. Mr. Speaker, I was never more sincere in my life in asking for documents of that kind, particularly the Willard report. The government may want to deny it to me, may even have reason to deny it to me; but it is not the privilege of the hon. member to question my motive or to say that I do not sincerely want that information, and I am sure he would like to correct what he has said.

Mr. Orlikow: Mr. Speaker, on the same point of order—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member for York East.

Mr. Orlikow: I rise on the same point of order—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles) made a suggestion at the conclusion of his point of order, and I anticipated that perhaps the hon. member for York East (Mr. Otto) wanted to respond. It seems to me a reasonable suggestion, and I am sure the hon. member for York East would want to respond to it. Therefore, I recognize the hon. member for York East.

Mr. Otto: Mr. Speaker, if you review my remarks you will find that I said it was the party, the NDP Party. I did not say it was any of the members. In fact, I also said it was the party organization and the research assistants employed by that party who do all this; and if my motives were imputed, it was to them.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): On the point of order, Mr. Speaker, the hon. member directly named us. He directly named me. He singled out motions that are mine, and he is now saying that I was not sincere in giving notice of my motions, particularly the one with regard to the Willard report. He says that it was put at the suggestion of the research people. I deny that categorically. If anybody in this House needs to be told of my interest in social security matters, and that I do not need to be prompted on that subject, surely it is not the hon. member. The offer I made to him to modify his language was one that in all wisdom he should have accepted.

Mr. Orlikow: I rise on the same point of order, Mr. Speaker. I am not quite the easy-going gentleman that my colleague from Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles) is. I knew, when the hon. member for York East (Mr. Otto) was speaking, that he was abusing his privileges, that he was imputing motives to me and to other members which he had no right to do; but I considered the source it was coming from. There may be stupider members of the House, but they know enough to keep quiet. Under the circumstances, I did not think it worth while to get up.

Mr. Otto: Well, it wasn't worth while for you to get up.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. I am not quite sure where this leaves us, but in view of the exchange we have had the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre might like to make a suggestion.

Agriculture Consultant Studies

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, I suggest that the imputation of motives on both sides be withdrawn.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I am sure that is a reasonable suggestion and that it would be agreed to by all hon. members. Is the House ready for the question?

Some hon. Members: Question.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the said motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: All those in favour will please say yea.

Some hon. Members: Yea.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: All those opposed will please say nay.

Some hon. Members: Nay.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: In my opinion the nays have it.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): On division.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Motion negatived, on division.

Motion negatived.

CONSULTANT STUDIES—DEPARTMENT OF AGRICULTURE

Mr. John L. Skoberg (Moose Jaw) moved:

That an Order of the House do issue for copies of all outside consultant studies undertaken for the Department of Agriculture as mentioned in answer to question No, 1,323, tabled on June 25, 1969, as reported in Hansard on page 10597.

He said: Mr. Speaker, before asking the minister whether or not he is prepared to accept this motion I think it only proper that we look at the question that is before us, look at the answer that was received, and see whether there was any reason why it should not be placed on the Order Paper as a Notice of Motion for the Production of Papers.

• (5:40 p.m.)

I was somewhat amused—and understandably so—by the hon. member for York East (Mr. Otto) in his latest barrage of inaccuracies. This follows along the line of what is wrong with this House of Commons today—the complete misunderstanding of hon. members from central Canada of the problems affecting the west and the Maritimes.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Skoberg: Listening to the hon. member for York East when he spoke today, and on an earlier occasion when I raised the question of notice for the production of papers, one could see that he is a strong supporter of political patronage in its worst form. If the hon. member would read "The Rise and Fall of the Third Reich," he would realize that this party in particular is determined that all documents shall be public and that all newspapers shall have access to them so they can inform the country in an enlightened way.

The hon. member for York West (Mr. Givens) appeared on television recently and suggested that because 80 per cent of the population of Canada lives in large urban centres, this House should devote 80 per cent of its time to the people of those areas. But, Mr. Speaker, 42 per cent of the people of Canada are either directly or indirectly connected with agriculture. It seems, however, that the people of central Canada are completely unaware of the importance of the agricultural economy.

Mr. McIlraith: That is not a fair charge.

Mr. Skoberg: It is most important, Mr. Speaker, that every Member of Parliament ask this government for all papers pertaining to those things that are important to the people of this country. It is no wonder the west is seriously talking of secession. It is time, before the patient dies, that the government look at this serious situation in an enlightened manner. I sincerely hope that members from central Canada will never sit on a committee looking at the problems of the east, or the west, because they do not understand them.

I should like to ask whether the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Olson) is prepared to accept some of this report I have before me in regard to my notice for the production of papers. I know the minister is well aware of the situation in regard to farming throughout Canada and its importance to our economy. I am given to understand that he may be prepared to supply some of this information. In the event that he is not, I wish to complete some of the statements I have to make at this time.

Mr. Olson: When the hon. member has finished his speech, I shall make mine.

Mr. Skoberg: It then appears, Mr. Speaker, that the minister is not prepared to produce the papers.

Mr. Olson: Mr. Speaker, it does not mean that at all. If the hon. member wants to be in committee of the whole, that is a different situation.

Mr. Skoberg: I am sorry, Mr. Speaker, but I thought we could find out whether the minister is aware of the situation as it pertains to this particular report.

Mr. Olson: You will find out as soon as I make my speech.

Mr. Skoberg: Although the minister comes from the west, it seems that he is not concerned. Too often in this House things that should be made public, for the benefit of all concerned, are kept private. All this report asks for is certain documents. If some documents are highly privileged, or could be embarrassing to the government, I could understand. I am very surprised that the minister would not make public, right now what has been asked for in the report and thus put a stop to this discussion.

The report says that in 1963-64 there was competitive tendering on various consultant studies; but as time goes on we find that there was no competitive tendering as far as this report is concerned. It is important to note that the report states as follows:

> Please note that the foregoing does not include special studies commissioned by the federal task force on agriculture.

Surely, Mr. Speaker, it is not necessary for me to remind the minister of the serious economic plight of the west. He knows as well as I that the people are quite prepared to accept situations that cannot be remedied immediately. If they get the reports, they can read them themselves; they can digest them and assess the situation as it exists.

In 1964-65 two studies on financial management were competitively tendered, but the study in 1965-66 was not tendered. The hon. member for York East suggested the other day that my knowledge of competitive tendering, and tendering generally, was somewhat limited. But I can assure him that I know that tenders are either private or invitational. I am sure that no one in this House would deny that invitational tenders smack of political patronage, and I believe it is up to us to do something about it. That is one of the reasons why so many notices for the production of papers appear in the name of this party, Mr. Speaker. I make no apology for this. I am prepared to accept my responsibility for any notice for the production of papers. The reason is very evident, and I am sure you will find that the people of Canada are prepared to accept the same reasoning.

Mr. Speaker, the book "Listen to the World" spells out the British system. It seems odd that the Parliamentary Secretary to the Prime Minister (Mr. Walker) would come here and quote history when we know quite well that the younger generation will not listen to us if we continue this train of thought.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Skoberg: I quote from this book as follows:

> Under the British system, which is ours, no political party can erect a prohibitory barrier to prevent the electors from getting information concerning the policy of government. Freedom of discussion is essential to enlighten public opinion in a democratic state; it cannot be curtailed without affecting the right of the people to be informed through sources independent of the government concerning matters of public interest. There must be an untrammelled publication of the news and political opinions of the political parties contending for ascendancy.

Perhaps the minister will now state that he will make available the various reports asked for. I do not think that is too much to ask, Mr. Speaker. The Minister of Supply and Services (Mr. Richardson) recently stated that he plans to hire a firm of consultants to make an examination of the entire government pay system. The same thing would apply here. All I am asking is that these reports be made public and that in practically all cases they be opened up for competitive tendering.

Hon. H. A. Olson (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, I think some of the remarks made by the hon. member who moved this motion, with respect to alienation of westerners or easterners, and that sort of thing, are completely irrelevant to the motion.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

• (5:50 p.m.)

Mr. Olson: As a matter of fact, he would have a very difficult time pointing at me and claiming to be more of a westerner than I am. I come from a part of the country that is probably farther west than his, and perhaps I have had as much experience as him, or even a little more, in that part of Canada in dealing with economic problems and many other matters.

Mr. Peters: And in raising hell.

Mr. Olson: I do not accept the hon. member's arguments. In fact, I do not think they are related at all. What the hon. member is asking, if you are to accept his argument, is that all documents relating to these consultant studies be made public. With respect to the hon. member's request for the list of such studies tabled in the House during the previous session in response to question No. 1,323, may I say that 19 consultant studies were undertaken between 1963 and the present year and I am prepared to show each and every one of them to the hon. member and, indeed, to any other hon. member of this House.

Mr. Skoberg: What about the press?

Mr. Olson: I am not prepared to put the public to great expense and reproduce all these documents in response to this kind of motion so that there will be copies for the hon. member and all hon. members of the House, and goodness knows how many thousand copies the hon. member might require in order to make the documents a matter of public information.

Mr. Bigg: It is not necessary to print them.

Mr. Olson: The government has a responsibility to do what is reasonable and to do those things that are useful and reasonable, having regard to the expense involved.

Mr. Bigg: I quite agree.

Mr. Olson: I hope the hon. member will withdraw his Notice of Motion. I will undertake that every one of the 19 consultant studies referred to in his motion will be shown to him and to any other hon. members who may wish to see them, at any time they want to see them, if only they will give us reasonable advance notice as to when they want to see them.

There is nothing in these 19 studies that is so confidential as to make us unwilling to show them. We are not trying to hide anything. This motion and many others like it on the Order Paper would require us to produce thousands and thousands of copies of the kind of material requested. To me that would involve an unjustifiable public expense and that is why I cannot accept the motion the way it is worded. It seems to me that it would be better for the hon. member to withdraw his motion.

I will see to it that he obtains these consultative reports or has a chance to look at them and read them. In future, if we have any such reports, if they are not confidential or involve security or like matters he is also welcome to look at those. There is no problem with regard to the 19 studies alluded to. They form 100 per cent of the list the hon. member has asked for. I therefore ask the hon. member to withdraw his motion.

If he chooses not to do that, we can vote on the motion. But even if the motion is defeated I will show the hon. member every one of the 19 consultative studies if he will give us reasonable notice as to when he wishes to look at them or read them.

Mr. Skoberg: Mr. Speaker, will the minister permit a question? Will he agree to make available to the press, under the same conditions, copies of all the consultants' reports? Also, is it not correct that whenever the government has received consultants' reports, only one copy has been made available to the member requesting same? Why is the minister, therefore, talking of thousands of copies that will be needed?

Mr. Olson: The hon. member's remarks seem to reinforce my argument. Is he arguing that the members of the public and all hon. members of the House are entitled to these documents, or is he saying that he is the only member who should see them? I do not understand him. I know that we table two copies of such reports, and these are available for hon. members of the House to see. Usually enough are printed for all hon. members to have a copy. It seems to me that the hon. member is asking for consultant studies that go all the way back to 1963, some six to seven years. We do not produce that many copies of each one, but the hon. member can see a copy of every study.

Mr. F. J. Bigg (Pembina): Mr. Speaker, I do not suppose the government needs me to defend it.

Mr. Stanfield: Oh, yes, it does.

Mr. Mongrain: The hon. member's kind words are always welcome.

Mr. Bigg: As a responsible member of this House, and as a member of the Public Accounts Committee, I have often wondered when the dumping of alarming amounts of printed paper on my desk every day of every week is going to end. For how long can our forests stand this drain of wood used in the manufacture of paper? I fill several wastepaper baskets several times a week and throw out the paper which I do not want and would not order for myself in any circumstances. It clutters up our mail boxes. If we received less of this type of mail, and more legitimate mail, perhaps our postal facilities would not be so jammed and perhaps the pressure could be taken off the Postmaster General (Mr. Kierans).

If Notices of Motions requested papers which enabled hon. members to become "genned-up", perhaps we would accept them unanimously. But requests of the kind now before us, which might involve the production of many thousands of pieces of printed paper, are beyond the capacity of our present staff to fulfil. This Notice of Motion goes too far. In case anyone thinks I am here to hand out bouquets, let me say that I think we have far too large a staff as it is. We should not waste public funds and the time of public servants. We must stop this terrific waste of paper and this terrific waste of the public's time in producing a mountain of useless information. As it is, the work of the Public Accounts Committee is behind. I am perfectly certain that if the hon. member wishes to obtain this type of information, he can obtain it.

At six o'clock the House took recess.

AFTER RECESS

The House resumed at 8 p.m.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

CAPE BRETON DEVELOPMENT CORPORATION ACT

GUARANTEE OF REPAYMENT OF MONEYS BORROWED BY COMPANIES AND PERSONS

The House resumed consideration of the motion of Mr. Marchand (Langelier) that Bill C-138, to amend the Cape Breton Development Corporation Act, be read the second time and referred to the Standing Committee on Regional Development.

Mr. Arnold Peters (Timiskaming): Mr. Speaker, I am sure most members who were in the House this afternoon listened with great interest to the remarks of the hon. member for Cape Breton-East Richmond (Mr. MacInnis) and the hon. member for Cape Breton-The Sydneys (Mr. Muir). This bill raises many questions for hon. members from other parts of the country. I had the distinction of being a miner for 15 years, and I am very sympathetic to miners in other parts of the country because there is a great similarity in the problems of the various mining communities. Many miners move from one community to another; they are probably the original transient workers of our nation.

I have been very sympathetic to the problem that has developed in Cape Breton over the years. These miners have not had the benefit of the same wages as miners in other parts of the country in the last few years, because of the position in their industry. Because of the interest of hon. members in this situation we undertook to provide the funds necessary to establish Devco, which was to end many of the problems plaguing miners in the Maritime provinces.

Some hon. members who participated in the debate a year ago said that possibly it would be better to pay all the miners in Cape Breton a pension and forget about the whole operation. They suggested that perhaps a more viable operation should be established which would provide employment for the people in that area. They felt it would probably be wise to use the money we were going to spend and pay each miner $5,000 or $6,000 a year until a reasonable retirement age, and close down the operation entirely. The minister of the day, when piloting the Devco legislation through the House, led us to believe that a number of things could be done with the complex in Sydney, and that Devco would not only undertake reclaiming some of the operations in the mines in that area but would expand into other fields.

We listened with interest to the hon. member for Cape Breton-East Richmond. I learned something that I did not know; I read several letters written by the Minister of Labour (Mr. Mackasey) which indicated that this must have been contemplated at the time of the establishment of Devco, that is, the unemployment insurance fund would be used to supplement the act which stated there would be a $3,000 retirement fund established for each miner.

I am sure that the miners as well as most Members of Parliament believed that the unemployment insurance fund would be used in a normal manner, and that the moneys we had appropriated would be in addition to this and not part of it. Certainly the unemployment insurance fund is not the type of fund that can be used to get over difficulties in which the government finds itself. It is still an insurance plan under, presumably, an impartial commission which operates in accordance with regulations it has established. Obviously, in this case it did not establish a regulation. The regulation established by the government and operated by Devco allowed them to integrate the amount that would be paid from the unemployment insurance fund to the workers as part of the $3,000 settlement that the miners were to receive. Three thousand dollars is not a very large sum for the pension plan of an industry in which many miners have spent 20 or 30 years.

I think the amount they normally would have received from the unemployment insurance fund should have taken into consideration the fact that the men were available for work and then, as in other parts of Canada, at the end of a certain period other parts of the Unemployment Insurance Act would come into effect. This would mean transferring the workers to areas of high employment. This obviously was not done. There must have been some very dishonest people working in the unemployment insurance office, because these people were not available for work in the true sense of the word. This must have been known to the Unemployment Insurance Commission. There was obviously collusion between these two groups.

When speaking in a debate involving another bill for which the Minister of Regional Economic Development (Mr. Marchand) was responsible, I mentioned that a number of schemes have been operated in the Maritimes. One of them involved a heavy water plant in the same general area as Devco. I suggested at that time there should be legislation which would pick up the tab for whatever must be done to either establish or dispose of the liability for the heavy water plant in Cape Breton. If the government intends to get into this project, I believe it should do so by the front door, not by the back door.

• (8:10 p.m.)

I am sure most hon. members would support the government in any decision to put some money into the heavy water plant, though I believe we would all demand a much greater degree of control over the operation of that plant. We would probably demand that the Atomic Energy Commission give serious consideration to whether it was right in the advice it gave about the best way of producing atomic power. The question as to whether heavy water or enriched uranium is the better material in these circumstances should be decided before Canada is called upon to spend any more money in this direction. We should be making a decision on this question.

The bill, in part, would allow the government, through Devco, to do something about this situation, because it would permit large sums of money to be borrowed. If the operation is not satisfactory, we shall have to pick up the tab anyway, in the event of bankruptcy, and I would prefer assistance to be provided openly rather than through the back door.

Some charges have been made with regard to management. These charges are serious and should be investigated. If staff are being brought from England, and in particular from the National Coal Board whose history is not without calamities, and the appointments include people who cannot operate well in a Canadian context, we should be doing something about the situation.

To judge from the speeches made so far, there is general acceptance of Mr. Campbell; most hon. members have paid tribute to his accomplishments. He is a tough customer, I understand, and he will probably be approaching the government shortly with demands for a clean-up as an alternative to his ceasing to be chairman of the operation.

What we are being asked, in effect, is to confer important new borrowing capacity upon a corporation which, apparently, has not succeeded in doing the job for which it was established. In his outline of the legislation the minister told us that the bill sought to add only two relatively minor amendments to the act which is now in operation. I do not think this approach was entirely fair. If the present legislation is not working as anticipated, when the minister appears before the committee he will be obliged to provide answers to some of the important questions which have been raised. If not, we will have a new minister.

Mr. Marchand (Langelier): Yourself?

Mr. Peters: There is no need for hon. members to travel personally to the Maritimes to find out whether these projects are working effectively. When the representatives from the Maritimes express their views in this House as strongly as they did today, I for one am prepared to allow that they know what they are talking about—that all is not well.

By simply pouring, say, another $100 million into a sick institution we are not accomplishing much for the institution and we are certainly not making the best possible use of the $100 million. Of course, I have no doubt that the bill will be passed. Politics enter into these considerations and I realize that a political decision will be made in the end. However, I am interested not so much in the politics of the decision as in whether we are doing the right thing by passing this bill, in light of the charges which have been made, supposing that those charges reflect the opinions of the people in the area most directly concerned. The bill refers to $100 million. I do not believe that in Canada we have this kind of money to throw away.

I have been shocked by what I have read, and seen on television, in connection with the heavy water plant. I know this was intended as a big experiment likely to provide additional industry in Nova Scotia. It was felt that a plant of this kind could lead to the establishment of many subsidiary industries in the area and would serve as a base for industrial development. It has not done this. Similarly, we were given to understand that by establishing Devco we were establishing a national agency which would take over from the former owners of the coal industry and provide the people of the area with a viable economic base—an industrial base capable of expansion.

The people who live in the area have a right to assistance, in my opinion, and I believe the people of Canada generally are willing to provide such assistance. But I, for one, am unwilling to provide $100 million as a basis for industrial development if the arrangements which have been established do not appear to be working.

The situation is comparable to that of the Company of Young Canadians, to the extent that one can let things ride for so long, in fact, until poor administration and bad management destroy the principle which it was intended to establish. Something like this is happening in the case of Devco. The minister may not have talked to the people who live in this area. Cape Breton people are, I know, highly political and extremely vocal in expressing their opinions, so this may be a highly political issue.

Nevertheless, if this agency is not working in the opinion of the average guy employed in the mines, or if the man who has been laid off and finds himself unemployed feels that the program is not in his interest, we have not done the right thing. In that case we do not need more, but less of it and we should set up a thorough investigation to find out whether the charges which have been made today are correct.

I listened to the speech of my hon. friend from York South (Mr. Lewis). He has visited Cape Breton Island many times and has many connections with the mineworkers' unions and other organizations there. Others among my hon. friends also have personal knowledge of conditions there. They are all of the opinion that the charges which we have heard are correct that there are abuses in the management of Devco and that the corporation has failed to produce the results it was established to produce. In these circumstances, the provision of another $100 million in borrowing power will not improve the situation.

In coming to Parliament for additional powers at this time, the corporation should be prepared to provide Parliament with an assessment of what has been accomplished to date. In what way has it eased the problems existing in the mining industry? Further, the corporation should provide Parliament with an indication of what use it intends to make of the resources which we are being asked to provide. If these things cannot be done, I think we would be well advised to vote against this legislation.

I am well aware of the consequences for the people of the maritimes, particularly of Cape Breton, who are in desperate straits. There has been little expansion of industry in the region; a large proportion of the population has moved from the island, leaving behind people who cannot easily be retrained to take employment in new enterprises. Devco was established to eliminate these problems, but apparently has been unsuccessful.

• (8:20 p.m.)

I suggest that the minister is shouldering a dual responsibility. I also suggest he may get into a great deal of trouble with me in the future in light of his background, which has consisted of working in the interests of those who have not had their share of the good life. In this regard he has accomplished things. He has, I am sure, been able considerably to raise the standard of living of those he has represented. In doing so he has also been able to increase his own ability and knowledge.

Now he has a personal responsibility to the people we want to help, and his knowledge of the problems and needs of people puts him in a special category. The minister really cannot say that he does not understand. He has represented people working in industries where there is no pension plan. He has represented people who have not received a fair reward over long periods of time. The minister has seen workers who were left in less than advantageous circumstances and who either retired or were forced to retire.

So I repeat that the minister does have an obligation to meet. So long as he holds this portfolio we have the right to expect him to make more than just an average contribution to these people whom he represents and whose problems he understands. I suggest he will have to make this kind of contribution. Certainly he will have to indicate that he is making this contribution when he appears before the committee otherwise I would be prepared to vote against this legislation on third reading.

Mr. J. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa-Whitby): Mr. Speaker, I hesitate to rise at this point in the debate since normally I like a little more time to prepare what I am going to say. I have just returned, literally within the hour, from Sydney which I visited last evening and today.

An hon. Member: An instant expert!

Mr. Broadbent: By no means do I claim to be an instant expert. I regret not being here to follow what has been said both by the minister and by members on this side of the House.

One thing I should like to convey to the ministers, in all seriousness, is the general feeling or atmosphere which I found in the Sydney area. It seems to me that, whatever the cause, there is overwhelming discontent in this part of Nova Scotia. I come from another industrial part of the country, one that is relatively well off, where there is relatively full employment and good industrial relationships, relatively speaking. Therefore, it was a rather unique experience for me to move into an area where there are unionized workers and firms that have established themselves for many years, and to find the kind of bitter frustration and antagonism which I observed in the Cape Breton area. I inform the minister that this is a genuine feeling that exists in the province, and the minister should be under no illusion that this sense of discontent and frustration is likely to pass quickly.

[Mr. Peters.]

Without going into the details of this bill, may I try to suggest to the minister the kind of problems about which the people of the area spoke to me. First of all, there was a feeling that things were being done to them, rather than by them or with them. There was the feeling that somehow outsiders were imposing their will on the people of the area, and there was little confidence that the outcome would be any better than what exists at the present time.

Second, and directly related to this, of course, was the feeling that the people themselves have had no active say in the operations of Devco. They have not been consulted about what should take the place of the mining industry there. They have not been asked to make any proposals, even with regard to the limited kind of tourist industry that has been newly established. They would like to play some role in this kind of decision-making.

I understand that the House was a little excited this afternoon by some rather blunt language from this side of the House, and some blunt language may be coming from the minister in reply. But I want to repeat to the minister that if the language this afternoon was blunt and forceful, it was probably a very accurate reflection of the feelings of the people in the Sydney and Glace Bay area in particular.

What I should like to suggest at this point is that the Committee on Regional Development move quicky into that area. I suggest this committee not wait a couple of months or until something serious develops in the form of violence; instead, I suggest that very soon the committee visit the Devco site itself. This committee, composed of members on both sides of the House, should make a genuine effort to understand the views of three sets of people. They should listen to the Devco officials. Then they should listen to the union leaders. Above all, they should talk to some of the people there who have this very genuine feeling, which I think has a great deal of foundation, that they are being unjustly dealt with.

It seems to me that this is the least we can do. The expense to the government would be minimal. The committee need not spend a week there; I suspect that two days would be quite sufficient to have frank talks with the people of the area. The committee could determine the basis for their grievances and see whether they are legitimately grounded.

The committee could see, in short, whether the minister has been right in what he has told the House—though I am not suggesting he has attempted to be dishonest, or anything like that.

It is my impression that if this effort is made there will be certain basic changes made, to the legislation if we act appropriately, and to the management attitude of Devco if they act appropriately. I cannot emphasize too much the feeling I had that violence, real violence, could break out at any time in this area. Anything that can be done to de-fuse the situation, to let the people of the area know that we, in this relatively distant place of Ottawa, are concerned at what is happening, should be done. Therefore, I close my remarks with the suggestion that the committee move into the area as quickly as possible and discuss with the people involved the problems that are facing Cape Breton.

• (8:30 p.m.)

[Translation]

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Béchard): Order, please. I must inform the House that if the minister speaks now he will close the debate.

Mr. Marchand (Langelier): Mr. Speaker, if I were not aware that there would be an early opportunity to answer all the questions raised in the House this afternoon, I would now go to the trouble of answering each and everyone of them. But I know that I will soon have the occasion to discuss with the hon. members in committee all the problems brought up in the course of the present proceedings.

To my mind all those who know anything of the problems involved in economic development realize how difficult it is for the government, as well as for a Crown corporation or any other agency, to ensure economic planning and development. This is not a simple matter in Canada, not any more than in the United States, England, Sweden or anywhere else. It is a complex and difficult process and I believe that, in its efforts to spur economic growth, it is desirable that the government be continuously submitted to sound criticism in order to reset its sights if need be.

I do not come here professing to be the saviour or healer who has instantaneously solved the problems of underdevelopment in Canada. On the contrary, I come very humbly knowing full well that results so far have not been satisfactory, nor tailored to the size of existing problems in Canada. Therefore I do not rise to apologize inconsiderately for our policy but simply to dispel impressions and question some statements made earlier this afternoon.

What I find hard to take is not that the government or a minister is attacked, because I have often been a target in my life, so that I have become inured. I for one have also often attacked. So I find all this quite normal.

However, there is an unfair and negative way to attack, particularly when the attacks do not lead to fire correction, and thus get off target. Such is the type of attacks that have been made this afternoon.

After all, the hon. member for Cape Breton-East Richmond (Mr. MacInnis) criticized the vice-president of Devco, asking the minister to get rid of him. I do not know why, but the hon. member does not seem to agree with him, and he talked at great length about him. I suggest that the hon. member for Cape Breton-East Richmond should at least read the legislation.

[English]

Mr. MacInnis: Mr. Speaker, may I be permitted to ask the minister a question?

Mr. Marchand (Langelier): My remarks will be very short, but all right.

Mr. MacInnis: I want to ask the minister this question to his face before he terminates the debate. I will ask him only one question at this time. Does he agree with the representations made by Mr. Blackmore?

Mr. Marchand (Langelier): This is not what I am talking about, Mr. Speaker. I think all this will be discussed in the committee. If the hon. gentleman is there, I think we can discuss it. I am not going to make a trial of Mr. Blackmore's position here in the House—surely not.

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker, anyone who had taken the trouble to just read the act, which is not complicated, could have seen that the vice-president is appointed by the board of directors and not by the minister. What do the members of the opposition want? That I control Devco? They would then be the first to say: the government wants to control that Crown corporation, depriving it of the autonomy needed for its operations. And there would of course be pathetic speeches on centralization.

The vice-president of Devco reports to the board of directors and more specifically to the chairman. There is a new chairman of the Board. The hon. member for Cape Breton-East Richmond says he has confidence in Mr. Cameron. I believe he is right because I also have confidence in Mr. Cameron. It might be the first time that we agree, since I have been sitting in the House. We will let Mr. Cameron act, because he has some authority on the board of directors of the Corporation. If the vice-president ever behaves like the hon. member for Cape Breton-East Richmond suggests, Mr. Cameron, whom he trusts, will also become aware of it.

Then, what do we do? A minister is asked to dismiss someone when it is a well-known fact that he does not have the authority to do so. Evidently, nobody, not even the members of the opposition, except the member concerned, would approve if I were to dismiss the vice-president of a Crown corporation solely on the opinion of the hon. member for Cape Breton-East Richmond. I am rather allergic to those personal attacks. If there are grievances, we could consider them. Most of those he raised this afternoon are unjustified and unfair for those concerned.

I shall point out another injustice. The member for York South (Mr. Lewis), whose intelligence and knowledge of the sector cannot be questioned, told the House that Devco had done nothing in Cape Breton, that it was a "complete failure". This is a serious accusation. He claimed that many of those who worked in this corporation, who are absolutely honest and whose beliefs are similar to those of some opposition members had accomplished nothing in two years. According to him, that was the summary of the government policy in Cape Breton Island, through the Devco Corporation.

In my opinion, this kind of accusation is serious.

One might well say that with the means that were available to Devco, the company could have done better. In point of fact, it did not manage well enough in the area of development. Its achievements as mentioned in its report, were not sufficient, something I can very well understand. But what I do not understand is the statement of the member for York South who says that we have done nothing for the miners and the people of Cape Breton.

Let us consider the facts, even if it is sometimes tedious. Of course, it is less exciting than talking of the exploitation of miners, because that is undoubtedly exciting. One can talk of the plight of the miners, of their difficulty to make a living, of that part of their lives they spent down in the mines. I, too, can make this kind of speech; indeed, I have all my life, and this is what is easiest. But what is difficult is to know the facts, and when you have a research staff at your disposal, it seems to me that it is imperative to do so. Now what are the facts? I shall quote only a few of them, not to report on the work of Devco, but only to draw attention to the fact that we have here a gratuitous assertion which I am not prepared to accept from a responsible, intelligent man who is able to check the facts. What has Devco done in the field of development? I can quote here a few of its achievements. Thanks to Devco the Nova Scotia Pulp, for instance, has developed to an extent which would not have been possible without Devco.

• (8:40 p.m.)

And what does it mean? That at least 1,000 jobs have been generated in the area. People should know that.

Devco has attracted a strontium development company to the area, thus creating employment for 125 persons. An electronic products manufacturing company employs 150 people, thanks to Devco. Gulf Oil has settled down in the Canso strait area, again thanks to Devco. The corporation helped them and made the necessary efforts to make it happen.

The Hustler Company, which is engaged in manufacturing dashboards for trucks, has 175 employees. They caused an apartment building to be erected. This can be criticized, as the hon. member for York South did this afternoon. There is nothing in the Bible that says that people must necessarily build hotels. It is easy to yield to demagoguery by saying that miners do not stay in hotels. That is the easy part. It is more difficult to find technicians when no adequate housing can be offered to them. That is debatable. However, some 1,700 jobs have been created more or less directly by Devco.

That Company had been asked by the House to progressively eliminate work in the coal mines. That is spelled out in the act. However, Devco was asked to find employment for the miners or to find some way to give them a pension. Has Devco endeavoured to carry out this task? They have succeeded in doing something that the miners understand. The miners do, but not the hon. member for Cape Breton-East Richmond—

[English]

Mr. MacInnis: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a question of privilege.

Mr. Marchand (Langelier): You spoke enough this afternoon.

Mr. MacInnis: The minister keeps bringing my name back into this matter. He is supposed to be explaining to the House what Devco has done. He referred to 1,000-odd jobs provided by Devco. I ask the minister, who says he is interested in the miners, to tell us how many miners got these jobs. On my question of privilege, I want to correct the minister on the remark he made about unsubstantiated charges made—

Some hon. Members: Order.

Mr. Marchand (Langelier): There is no question of privilege.

Mr. MacInnis: Mr. Speaker, you are not without help. The minister in referring to my remarks said—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Béchard): Order, please. This is not a question of privilege. The hon. member had the opportunity this afternoon to make his speech. He has already participated in the debate.

Mr. MacInnis: Mr. Speaker, on the question of privilege, how can you rule there is no question of privilege when I have not stated what it is. If Mr. Speaker wants to jump the gun again on behalf of his colleagues in the House—

Some hon. Members: Shame.

An hon. Member: The Chair has ruled.

Mr. MacInnis: When the minister stands in his place and says I have made baseless accusations against the officers of Devco, he must substantiate it. I can substantiate all the statements I made. They can be supported, and I will support them with no less than a letter written to me by this minister who claims my statement is baseless. I have in my file a letter signed by the minister himself, which makes a liar out of Mr. Blackmore and makes a fool out of the minister.

[Translation]

Mr. Marchand (Langelier): Mr. Speaker, that is the only way the hon. member can discuss things. He says that he can prove his charges. He did not say that he had so far. As for me, I am asked to prove that I am right. We are not before a court here. This is probably why one day when he was in my office with the officials of the United Mine Workers of America, the president said at one point: You know, the M.P. does not give our views on the matters we are discussing.

I recognize it was somewhat humiliating. It happened here, in my office, and there were many witnesses. That was not something new for as regards all the problems we had, to cope with, we tried to have consultations with the miners' union, as Devco has done. Problems may not always be solved to their full satisfaction, but the union leaders who are commissioned to speak on their behaf of the miners, do not speak the same language as the hon. member for Cape Breton-East Richmond. It is another story altogether and as for me, I prefer the opinion of the union leaders to that of the hon. member, who spoke to us all afternoon and is still making tonight assertions that are not only false but somewhat "sickly".

At any rate, what I am trying to say—

[English]

Mr. MacInnis: Mr. Speaker, on a question of privilege—

[Translation]

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Béchard): Order, please. The hon. member for Cape Breton-East Richmond on a question of privilege.

[English]

Mr. MacInnis: Mr. Speaker, my question of privilege arises from the fact that the minister has now stated that a statement I made was false. I would ask the minister to substantiate that statement, or do as would be expected of any hon. member in this House and stake his seat on the fact that he can prove it.

[Translation]

Mr. Marchand (Langelier): Mr. Speaker, I cannot reply to the hon. member as to the number of jobs created for the miners, the list of which I gave a while ago, but I am inclined to believe he is probably right in saying that the majority of those jobs are probably not filled by miners. Although I did not check that assertion, I am ready to admit a priori, that he is right, because such a thing is possible. At any rate, I will check that but I am inclined to think that, in that field, his information is correct.

However, I must say that the government asked Devco to create new jobs, to see to the development of Cape Breton Island.

I will simply say that the statements by the hon. member for York South disregard the facts. Indeed, they are too general and unjust, not for the government, because this Crown corporation is an independent body that was created by the House of Commons, but surely for Devco which has made efforts that we may analyze together.

To make here in the House a pompous declaration to the effect that nothing has been done by Devco is unfair and irresponsible.

In the field of coal mining, Devco had no compelling reason to make an effort, for instance, to open a new mine. They did open the Linden mine which employs over 1200 workers. Nothing in the legislation compelled them to do so but they were concerned with that problem and they did do something. You may argue that it is not enough, that more could be done. All right, say so, but do not say that nothing has been done. Nobody would dare to come and say that in front of the miners because they would be the first to deny it, as did their authorized representative when he contradicted the hon. member right in my office.

Just consider, for instance, the pensioners and the pre-retirement fund. Surely, this plan is by no means perfect. No doubt it could be much more generous. We could discuss the matter at length. However, there is something striking about the fact that the miners, 55 to 60 years old, were given the choice between going on working or accepting retirement. Do you know how many of them accepted it from their own free will? I am not speaking of those who had to retire. Well, 78 per cent of those between 55 and 60 chose retirement.

So, here is another field open to criticism. You may say it is not perfect but you cannot argue that nothing has been done. It would simply be unfair. It is the hon. members' duty to inform the House and the public accurately.

I do not want to prevent criticism, far from it. People can criticize but taking the facts into account and in a rational way.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear. Of course I know—

[English]

Mr. MacInnis: Mr. Speaker, would the minister permit a question? While he is hot on the subject, I want to ask—

[Mr. Marchand (Langelier).]

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Béchard): Order. The hon. member for Cape Breton-East Richmond (Mr. MacInnis) wishes to ask a question if the minister will permit it.

• (8:50 p.m.)

[Translation]

Mr. Marchand (Langelier): No, Mr. Speaker. If the hon. member behaved in a civilized way, I would have no objection to it. I never insulted him in the House. Seeing how he respects others, I do not see why I would show him more respect than he shows me.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Marchand (Langelier): I know about the lack of income of the miners. With $3,000 a year, it is not possible to spend the winter in Florida. I have no illusion. I say, however, that if we could repeat the experience made by Devco in all parts of Canada where there are problems, this would prevent a lot of human tragedies which happen every day in the country. I know that several factories are closing down and that the workers are not protected. They do not get a pension. They are not offered any. They are simply flat broke. Ask the former employees of Canadian Vickers in Montreal.

The government took the human factor into consideration and understood the nature of the problem by offering a pension to those who had lost their job or who did not want to work in the mines past a certain age. This can be criticized; if we could do more, we should do it. I have no objection to it. But to pretend that nothing has been done for the Cape Breton miners is an insult to the Canadian people who, with their taxes, try to solve the problem. It was not enough but it can be said that a greater effort has been made there than probably anywhere else.

I am thinking, for instance, about the Bell Island mine, in Newfoundland, and the Lauzon dockyards, in Quebec. It does not mean that it is enough; with more money, we could certainly do better.

Devco is a corporation which tried to do its job but which might not have succeeded fully and—

[English]

Mr. Broadbent: Would the minister permit a question? Has the minister investigated himself, or had his officials investigate reports that were given to me within the past 24 hours, that many of the miners accepted early retirement—I agree with the minister that they did so voluntarily—because they were under a mistaken impression of what that entailed?

[Translation]

Mr. Marchand (Langelier): Mr. Speaker, the pre-retirement plan was accepted by the union, which understood it, studied it and indicated to us that it was satisfactory. If I must choose between the judgment of the hon. member for Cape Breton-East Richmond and that of the executive of the union, I prefer that of the executive. If it is insinuated that the representatives of the United Mine Workers of America did not understand, that they allowed their members to be pushed around, it certainly does not prove much respect for the union leaders in Cape Breton. I say I have more respect for them than that.

If there have been new developments, I have no objection to studying them. On the contrary, I would be the first to do so. Still, it was recently stated in the House that we received telegrams from the United Mine Workers of America which, in fact, were official interventions. I looked everywhere; I asked Devco to supply me with them; we do not have any. We have received only one protest from the Retired Miners Union, and not from the United Mine Workers of America which officially represents the miners. I saw no other document. If there are any, I would be happy to see them. I should like to make sure that we were not the only ones to have received those documents and that they were in fact addressed to those concerned.

In any event, Mr. Speaker, we will have the opportunity in committee to study more closely each one of the grievances which may have been voiced. We will attempt, in a civilized manner, to determine objectively what the situation is.

What we are asking now is, as I have said, a simple amendment, not a simplistic one. It is not a series of provisions that must be interpreted by comparison with one another, but the bill simply says: We shall authorize the Cape Breton Development Corporation, the DEVCO, to guarantee loans for industrial development to the extent of $100 million. Why? In order to give to DEVCO the same powers which my department enjoys in special areas, which means that DEVCO must not be prevented at some time from developing the area because it has not been authorized to guarantee loans. This is not giving money away, as has been suggested. As a matter of fact, the bill does not provide for that. All the bill provides for is to authorize DEVCO to guarantee loans for industrial development purposes.

Moreover, I am told that this should be done directly by the government. Of course, we shall have occasion to discuss that point with the hon. member for York South (Mr. Lewis), since the corporations set up by the government do not necessarily offer guarantees of success. Besides, the hon. member knows very well that Deuterium of Canada Limited, a corporation controlled by the Nova Scotia government, has not met with much economic success. Because industrial development is carried on by a Crown company does not mean that success is assured automatically.

Anyway, an honest discussion can be entered into, and I am prepared to go along with it any time, except tonight, because now some hon. members are trying to show that this amendment will have very serious consequences, which is not true. It simply puts Devco in respect of the Cape Breton area in a position similar to that of my department in respect of the special areas. No more, no less. Therefore, the point is not to create a precedent, but simply to take steps to prevent the same people charging us with having prevented the development of Cape Breton by refusing to authorize the company to do what is provided for in the amendment.

In fact, it would be very easy to blame the government should we learn one day that a company had been unable to settle in Cape Breton because the government had been mean, had not treated the Island in exactly the same way as the special areas. No doubt we would hear all sorts of comments. We want this company to be unable to find excuses and the region to be on an equal footing with special areas, according to the provisions of the basic legislation establishing the department. The act does not aim at giving money, nor at looking after special friends, but at promoting industrial development, what the corporation has already started to do and, I hope will continue to do.

Mr. Speaker, in that sense it is a simple amendment. We will no doubt have the opportunity to start this whole debate over again in committee and also when the estimates for Devco will be introduced in the house, to criticize Devco again. It is normal that violent attacks should be launched and I will surely not get angry. But when speakers strike below the belt, I react like any human being. Mr. Speaker, in conclusion, I want to say that we have no right to leave the people of Cape Breton in an inferior condition compared to other special areas and this is what those objecting to the amendment will accomplish. It will be one way of saying to the Cape Breton people: You will not be dealt with like other people in special areas of Canada. In fact, I do not think that anyone would feel it advisable to create such a situation.

[English]

Mr. MacInnis: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a question of privilege. My question of privilege arises out of the fact that the minister has distorted a number of facts and has accused me of so doing. I would first call your attention, Mr. Speaker, to the fact that there is no pension plan for retired miners in Cape Breton, something which the minister implied on a number of occasions. He referred to this wonderful pension set-up among Cape Breton miners.

Mr. Deachman: Is this your point of privilege?

Mr. MacInnis: You wouldn't recognize it if you saw it.

Mr. Deachman: Tell the Speaker your point of privilege.

Mr. MacInnis: There is Leady Deach, who can do nothing better than make recommendations around the House which violate the principles of committees. You are the last one who should open his mouth.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Béchard): Order. The hon. member should address his remarks to the Chair. I would remind the hon. member, and other hon. members of the House, that Standing Order 37 provides as follows:

> No member may speak twice to a question except in explanation of a material part of his speech which may have been misquoted or misunderstood, but then he is not to introduce any new matter, and no debate shall be allowed upon such explanation.

Mr. MacInnis: Mr. Speaker, that would give me a lot of leeway, because all my remarks have been completely misunderstood. To begin with, on the question of pensions which has been entirely misunderstood—and you have just ruled that I can only get up and explain those things which were misunderstood—I say again to the minister that there is no pension for those Cape Breton miners who were pre-retired, forcibly retired, or whatever way you wish to look at it. This is his mistake; he continually refers to it as a pension. I do not even allow the Devco authorities to use the word. It is not a pension; it is a pre-retirement leave plan.

• (9:00 p.m.)

The minister also referred to a meeting in his office when the executive officers of the UMW said, "Never mind that fellow; he does not represent us". True, I do not represent the UMW, but I represent each and every person in Cape Breton, whether they be UMW members or not. As long as I have the responsibility to represent them, the minister and those hired in the Crown company who have been selling the big lie in Cape Breton are not going to get away with it.

With respect to the meeting in the minister's office,—and this only requires a yes or no answer—was the minister not informed by union members—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Béchard): Order, please. The hon. member raised a question of privilege; now he is asking a question.

An hon. Member: It is a question of privilege.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Béchard): The hon. member raised a question of privilege, and there is no privilege. I read the hon. member the Standing Order which states that no member may speak twice to a motion.

Mr. MacInnis: Mr. Speaker, on a point of order. My point of order is that it is impossible for me, when Your Honour is on your feet, to say anything. The only time I am permitted to speak is when Your Honour has resumed his seat.

An hon. Member: Stand.

Mr. MacInnis: Yes, I can stand. But, Mr. Speaker, you have already ruled that no member shall speak twice on the same subject unless it is to explain his remarks which have been misunderstood. I repeat, on the same question of privilege, that the minister made accusations about a certain meeting which took place in his office and which I attended. He also made reference to the fact that 78 or 65 per cent, or whatever percentage he used, of the men accepted this pre-retirement leave plan voluntarily. The question to the minister is this: Was it not at that same—

Some hon. Members: Order.

Mr. MacInnis: Was it not at that same meeting—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Béchard): Order. The hon. member is now asking a question. He rose on a point of order, and he is asking a question. I would ask the hon. member to state his point of privilege as briefly as possible.

Mr. MacInnis: As I said before, Mr. Speaker, my question of privilege is that I am entitled to explain certain of my remarks which were misunderstood. At the same time, I take exception to the remarks of the minister in answering me, which remarks were far removed from the fact.

In this meeting in the minister's office to which he referred, the minister was informed in the presence of the UMW executive, or one of the mine union locals, and the municipal authorities that the 77 per cent he referred to was a false figure and that many of the men had accepted pre-retirement on the basis of fear. I ask the minister to tell us if that is not so. Isn't that the truth? Isn't that the representation that was made in your office? He cannot deny it.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Is the House ready for the question?

Some hon. Members: Question.

Motion agreed to, bill read the second time and referred to the Standing Committee on Regional Development.

CRIMINAL RECORDS

PROVISION FOR RELIEF OF CONVICTED PERSONS

The House resumed, from Friday, January 30, consideration of the motion of Mr. McIlraith that Bill C-5, to provide for the relief of persons who have been convicted of offences and have subsequently rehabilitated themselves, be read the second time and referred to the Standing Committee on Justice and Legal Affairs.

Mr. Speaker: I understand that when we adjourned the debate the hon. member for Timiskaming (Mr. Peters) had the floor—the hon. member for Skeena (Mr. Howard) had the floor.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): I believe he had concluded his remarks, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Peters: I am willing.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member is always willing.

[Translation]

I believe that the hon. member for Portneuf wishes to take part in the debate, so I now give him the floor.

Mr. Roland Godin (Portneuf): Mr. Speaker, this small bill made up of eight clauses, running to four pages only and entitled the Criminal Records Act is of great interest to me. I hope that this piece of legislation will bring peace and some hope to those who have an undeserved criminal record or one which results from an extremely unfortunate situation.

Since it is quite easy nowadays, in our society, to have such a record, I think that this bill which provides for the expunging of records after five years have elapsed, is most welcome and I wonder why it has not been brought forward sooner.

Moreover, if this act is fairly applied, irrespective of race, language, religion or political affiliation, we can expect very good results from it.

A small enquiry is enough to show that, at the present time, there are too many people who, after having been charged, wind up with a record. Many people in my riding, from all walks of life, have had an opportunity to realize that cases of miscarriage of justice are more numerous than reported by the media. The victims resign themselves to their lot, often for lack of money, or because they just cannot pursue the matter further. This is often caused by a lack of confidence in the courts and because they are sure right from the start that they would lose their case. Whether it be in municipal, provincial or federal courts, I suggest that there are not enough judges, that they use obsolete methods and that they have to examine too many cases at the same time and also to pass judgments without having enough information on the case.

Another abnormal situation is that judges have not all been chosen wisely. Unfortunately, they are appointed to those positions as a reward for political or other services. That some persons whose behaviour has never been exemplary should be in a position to pass judgment on the behaviour of others, that is a puzzle to most people.

I have before me an article published on December 5, 1969, in La Presse, one of the most important dailies in America. It reads:

For shoplifting of goods worth $37.21: seven days; For stealing and receiving a value of $160,000: seven days.

Criminal Records

In municipal court, by mere chance, that police officer was shaking his head when a number of female shoplifters were sentenced to seven full days for stealing goods worth some ten dollars in Miracle Mart outlets.

Incidentally, none of them had a record, like that 19-year old girl whose eyes were wet with tears as she walked to a cell for having stolen some pieces of clothing worth $37.21 in all.

One question . . . !

"It's serious, the police officer told us".

"But, asked the same detective, don't you think it is as serious for a 35-year old habitual criminal to steal $160,000?

The people have lost confidence in the courts because some of the jurists have a doubtful past. And it is always the same question: are these people with a doubtful past fit to judge the actions of others? You can imagine a Conservative judge having to render a verdict in the case of a liberal organizer who was responsible for his defeat in the last election.

Besides, old racial grudges might flare up again. Just imagine a Chinaman being judged by a Russian or an English speaking Canadian from Ontario being tried by a Quebec separatist judge. Or else, a unilingual French Canadian of Quebec being judged by a unilingual English speaking judge from another province.

Past events provide us with enough evidence that too many people are given false records. A man from Rimouski visiting Quebec City last spring asked a taxi driver where the Court of Justice was. The driver replied: "Well, my friend, the Court is over there, but you will have to look for Justice!"

I think that legal proceedings are obsolete in many cases. They never end because giving oral testimony is an ancient custom dating back to the days when most people were illiterate, which made it necessary for people to meet personally in order to settle a number of issues.

In my opinion, we should consider giving written testimony as this would do away with much too many postponements.

Since Unemployment Insurance Commission officials generally solve most cases this way, I feel that other courts should consider doing the same thing.

• (9:10 p.m.)

Since in many cases the accused and the witnesses could prepare their own testimonies themselves, it would obviously save the parties concerned some expense as often the accused could dispense with an attorney's services.

[Mr. Godin.]

In police matters, self-examination is also necessary. In order to avoid the opening of certain files, the R.C.M.P. should never intervene without valid reasons. This police body is never too expeditious when it comes to find individuals of the calibre of Lucien Rivard or Georges Lemay. When it comes to arresting a peaceful citizen, however, it is something different. Just by placing a telephone call, anyone can have a man arrested. I am thinking precisely of the particular case of a Quebecer who had become a bit of a nuisance for certain citizens comfortably entrenched on the municipal council. A mere telephone call and our man was "penned" for two months following false testimony.

Such methods are of a blatant dishonesty and I firmly hope that means will be found to put an end to them.

If I might be allowed to make a comparison, Mr. Speaker, in order to qualify for a $200 yearly subsidy, a farmer must submit an affidavit to the Canadian Dairy Commission, and when it is attempted to destroy the reputation of a citizen, it is abnormal, I think, that one anonymous phone call should be enough to set in motion the police machinery. I will quote, if I may, a letter dated November 8, 1968 which was sent to me by the Commissioner of the R.C.M.P. It reads as follows:

I shall not mention the name.

On July 15th, 1968, our Quebec detachment was advised by a fictitious source that a stranger was bottlegging alcohol in a car—

Mr. Speaker, the investigation later revealed that the man in question had merely been the victim of a mean trick. As his friends were thinking of having him elected alderman, an opponent had simply put a gallon of "home brew" in the car that was seized.

Allow me to read you the next paragraph:

You will no doubt be pleased to hear that following further investigation no action will be taken under the Excise Act and we have asked our chief of police in Montreal to return the car that was being held.

I say again that my first letter was sent to the Commissioner of the R.C.M.P. on September 13th, and I point out that the reply was sent only on November 8th, that is four days after the municipal elections in the area concerned. Needless to say the taxpayer was defeated and finally the purpose of the anonymous phone call achieved.

I should now like to deal with another situation, that of the construction of prisons, federal and provincial. As you know those buildings are filled to capacity. It is not that the citizens have turned evil suddenly, but that with a few exceptions, our citizens are willing to abide by the law provided they are given a chance. Unfortunately, under our present political system, too many Canadians have been refused that chance.

We have proof of this in the number of State boarders in our prisons, which number always bears a relation with the number of unemployed. Every time citizens are drafted, statistics prove that our prisons become empty. On battlefields, in plants, everywhere, citizens find a way of selling their services.

Nowadays, in this quiet era where there is nobody to wage war against us, we must wait and what is more, we must make others wait.

Young people are fed up with waiting, waiting for a scholarship, for a job, for a meagre welfare assistance, for a chance to get married, for a buoyant economy, for their district to become a designated area, for inflation to be checked.

Mr. Speaker, one must not be surprised if all those people who are forced to wait decide at one time or other to help themselves. Thieves who are arrested may be less guilty than some others more clever, more able to monopolize what belongs to others on account of their profession or of the position they hold.

I certainly welcome Bill C-5 which will help to rehabilitate the alleged outlaw, but in my opinion, we need more than that. To pull an inmate out of prison and help him to make a new start in life is not bad, but we should do everything in our power to prevent the judges from passing unacceptable sentences. I feel that nowadays, too many irresponsible actions are done in the name of the law. When the government has reached the point of creating unemployment in order to balance the economy, we have a right to ask questions and the duty to state our views on the problems resulting from bad administration.

I have nothing against a bill suggesting to expunge judicial records after five years. However, we should take steps to prevent people from committing further offences.

Bill C-5 will be automatically ineffective if the Minister of Justice (Mr. Turner) for instance remains shut up in his office. I think that the economic field should also be considered.

Too many Canadians lack basic necessities and are induced to break the rules and to ignore the laws of the land. If the country has the right to make laws which must be obeyed, the citizens also have rights, the first one being the right to live.

The policy and legislation of the Canadian government will be just when they are obeyed by the administrators and all levels of government.

However, I rely on the understanding of this government and mainly of the Minister of Justice. I hope that he will convince the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) and the Minister of Finance (Mr. Benson) to set up a just and honest system, not in the name of the law but in the name of life and the right to live.

[English]

Mr. D. R. Tolmie (Welland): Mr. Speaker, I congratulate the Solicitor General (Mr. McIlraith) for bringing before the House this bill incorporating the practice of sealing records. From my subsequent remarks it will be noted that I feel if this bill is to be of any real benefit to a convicted person, it must have substantial amendments.

• (9:20 p.m.)

I first became interested in this subject in 1966 and brought in a private member's bill which was later studied by the justice committee. I had no intention that the private bill would become law and used it only as a vehicle to introduce the principle of sealing criminal records. The justice committee held four formal meetings with witnesses, all of whom agreed with the principle of sealing criminal records. A report was made to the House, and later the then Solicitor General, Mr. Pennell, made recommendations to the cabinet which were accepted.

In order to produce an effective bill, one must consider what we are really trying to do by sealing criminal records. This is not an attempt to be soft with criminals; it is not another bleeding-heart crusade. This bill should have one goal only, to restore to the offender as far as possible all the civil and economic rights he enjoyed before the offence was committed.

This type of legislation should relieve people who have paid their debt to society, and taken their place as law-abiding citizens, of the continuing stigma and harassment of past criminal records. The principle of this bill should be based on the concept that a sentence served is expiation for his crime, and on the grounds that the perpetual retention of a criminal record impedes rehabilitation. In addition, this proposed legislation should endeavour to eliminate the real disabilities a convicted person suffers by the retention of his record.

It has been stated that we sentence, we coerce, we incarcerate, we counsel, we grant probation and parole, but we never forgive. There is considerable evidence to indicate that the failure of the criminal law to clarify the status of the reformed offender impedes the objective of reintegrating him with the society from which he has been estranged. The more heavily he bears the mark of his former offence, the more likely he is to re-offend.

The most troublesome disabilities to the reformed offender are the economic and social reprisals engendered by his brand as an adjudicated criminal. The vagaries of public sentiment often discriminate against persons with a criminal past. This is especially true in the vital matter of employment, which perhaps as much as anything else influences a man's concept of himself and his worth and accordingly influences the values which guide his conduct. The effects of criminal stigma are felt even more strongly in the area of licences and government-regulated occupations than in the sector of public employment. In many cases, employment in the public service, enlistment in the armed forces, employment where bonding is required, and licensed employment such as taxi driving, is refused absolutely or seriously curtailed.

Perhaps in particular the purpose of this bill should be to assist the thousands of Canadians who in their youth incurred a record for some petty offence and are now completely rehabilitated and law-abiding citizens.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Tolmie: The recent number of convictions of young people for marijuana offences illustrates how necessary this type of legislation really is. Many of these young people who have paid their debt to society will continue to be harassed and hurt emotionally and economically to their dying days. I should also add, if one needed further persuasion about the necessity for such legislation, that since the introduction of my private member's bill I have received numerous pleading, heart-rending letters from across Canada urging the early passage of legislation to provide for the sealing of records.

Without going into too much detail, because I hope this bill will go to the justice committee for close scrutiny, I would like to make a few remarks about the principle contained in the bill now before the House. Frankly, although as I have already indicated that I commend the Solicitor General for introducing this legislation, in my opinion in its present form it will not achieve the objectives this type of legislation should achieve.

First, instead of pertaining only to offences under an act of the Parliament of Canada or a regulation made thereunder, this bill should apply to all records under federal jurisdiction even though the offence was against a provincial statute. This certainly would broaden the scope of the act and give relief to many more people, which I presume is the intention of the bill.

Second, after the applicant applies, the act should not state that the Parole Board shall cause proper inquiries to be made in order to ascertain the behaviour of the applicant. People who are applying for the sealing of their records will in the main be those who suffered a conviction years ago and since that time have been living an ordinary life, with the public completely unaware of their past indiscretion. Any investigation would vitiate the very object and spirit of the legislation. This type of applicant would not want officials prying into his private life, asking neighbours if he is a decent citizen and arousing suspicion. It should be accepted policy that if the five-year period has elapsed without a conviction, he has rehabilitated himself and the expungement of the adjudication of his guilt should be made mandatory unless strong affirmative reasons exist for denial. In addition, any judgment denying expungement should be made appealable by the applicant.

The mechanics envisaged by this bill seem unduly tortuous and complicated. An application must be started, followed by a National Parole Board inquiry, followed by a favourable report to the Solicitor General of Canada, followed by referral of the recommendation to the federal cabinet, followed by cabinet consideration and government approval. This is a cumbersome procedure. I submit the application should be made to a competent authority, be it the National Parole Board or a board of convictions review in the Department of Justice, adjudicated upon with the right of appeal to the Governor in Council.

Third, the effect of the pardon as outlined in the bill is of little or no practical benefit to the applicant. What tangible good is it for an applicant to know that the government is satisfied that he has behaved properly and that the pardon granted should no longer reflect adversely on his character? Brave, noble and pious words—but of no practical benefit. The applicant is applying because he wants relief from not only the psychological effect of a record but from the economic consequences. He wants to be able to compete in the marketplace for employment on equal terms with his fellow citizens. This desire is the whole crux of this bill. He has paid the penalty; he does not want a conviction, in many cases incurred years ago, to haunt and taunt him when he seeks employment.

The statute should expressly set forth the effects of the order in restoring the civil rights of the redeemed offender, and it should expressly annul the conviction and the offence. In addition to specifying that the person will thereafter be regarded as never having offended, it should provide that in all cases of employment, application for licence or other civil privilege, examination as a witness and the like, the person may be questioned only with respect to arrests or convictions not annulled or expunged. A person might be questioned about his previous criminal conduct only in language such as the following: Have you ever been arrested for or convicted of a crime which has not been expunged by a competent authority? It is submitted that to restrict the questioning about his offence places the focus where it belong, on the attitudes of society.

Mr. Solicitor General, there has been some indication—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I hesitate to interrupt the hon. member, but I would like to bring to his attention that his remarks should be directed to the Chair rather than to the Solicitor General.

• (9:30 p.m.)

Mr. Tolmie: There has been some indication that certain Crown corporations and government agencies no longer, in their employment application forms, ask questions about an applicant's record. The Solicitor General apparently favours this trend. Therefore, if such a clause pertaining to limited inquiry about records were placed in the statute, it would be crystal clear that all agencies over which the government has control would be forced to comply with this new concept. This would apply to corporations such as the CBC, Air Canada and the CNR. It would also apply to the Armed Forces and the public service.

I am aware that constitutionally the government of Canada cannot, by legislation, force ordinary employers, individual or corporate, to restrict themselves to the limited inquiry rule. But I do know the Province of Ontario is interested in this type of legislation and I urge the Solicitor General to contact the Attorney General for the Province of Ontario and ask him to introduce similar legislation in Ontario, particularly in relation to limited inquiry about records by employers.

In the fifth place, I believe the principle of limited disclosure should be incorporated into this bill. We know there is a lively traffic in facts about all of us, particularly facts relating to such matters as criminal records. Consideration should be given to requiring that every person, agency and business which keeps records of criminal conviction, whatever may be their purpose, inform the minister of the existence of these records and, upon sealing, all such persons or agencies, other than perhaps the commissioner of the RCMP, should be directed to destroy them.

It should also be noted that Canada is not pioneering this type of legislation. Other countries including Russia, France, Turkey, Bulgaria, Spain, Belgium, Hungary and Italy have legislation aimed at eliminating the effects of a previous conviction. California has held extensive hearings on the question of sealing criminal records and is in the process of drafting a bill. I hope the justice committee will have available for its deliberations memos of this comparative law, which I feel would be most helpful.

Associate professor of law at the University of Santa Clara, Aidan R. Gough, has written a comprehensive and incisive article on the expungement of records, which may be found in the Washington University Law Quarterly, volume 1966, No. 2, April, 1966. I would recommend this article to members who wish to learn more about this important subject.

I do not think that the bill before us, or any revised bill, will cure completely the disability suffered by those with convictions. However, I do feel that such legislation will be of benefit to many decent Canadian citizens. Only when the public generally is educated to the point of view that once a man has paid his penalty, society should not exact further punishment, will the offender find the path to true rehabilitation. Parliament creates the situation under which a record is brought into being. The use which Parliament allows to be made of that record is also its responsibility.

In conclusion, Mr. Speaker, I would like to quote from Professor Gough's article in the Washington Law Quarterly as follows:

> Most offenders do not remain criminals all their lives, and we should not treat them as if they do. It is manifestly not the purpose of the penal law to ascribe permanent criminality to a first offender, though that is largely its effect. This article is not intended as a panegyric for a soft-headed penology. It is rather an attempt to point up a serious flaw in our present legal system; the failure to provide means for redefining the status of the rehabilitated transgressor. It is submitted that an expungement process will not serve to hamper effective law enforcement, but will stand as an adjuvant to the goal of the correctional law. It should provide a potent incentive to reformation, and should render our response to criminality less febrile and more effectual. At the very least, it is deserving of serious trial.
>
> We would do well to bear in mind that it is a legal principle that correctional law is forgiving. Forgiveness is part and parcel of rehabilitation, whether of criminals or anyone else who has erred, or who has, in fact, what all of us have—the defects of being human.

Mr. Eldon M. Woolliams (Calgary North): Mr. Speaker, we are dealing tonight with Bill C-5, an act to provide for the relief of persons who have been convicted of offences. Basically, what we are trying to do here is, in certain circumstances—as the chairman of our Justice and Legal Affairs Committee has so ably put it—expunge the records of those who have been convicted. According to the Oxford Dictionary, "expunge" means to erase, omit or do away with.

First of all, I should like to say that we are very fortunate, I think, in the Committee on Justice and Legal Affairs, to have a chairman of such high calibre.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Woolliams: I would say to the minister in charge, through you, Mr. Speaker, that I adopt pretty well everything the hon. member said tonight. That is why my own speech can be brief. He has stated clearly that the bill before us is a great disappointment to anyone who has any knowledge of criminal jurisprudence, and that it will not do the job which the committee recommended to the minister before the measure was introduced in the House.

I now wish to deal with a subject mentioned by the hon. member for Welland (Mr. Tolmie) in a brief reference. I refer to the Criminal Code itself. When we talk about great reforms we should realize that the Criminal Code of Canada contains section 12, which states:

> No person shall be convicted of an offence in respect of an act or omission on his part while he was under the age of seven years.

Then it provides—this is section 13 on page 10 of Tremear's Criminal Code—as follows:

> No person shall be convicted of an offence in respect of an act or omission on his part while he was seven years of age or more, but under the age of 14, unless he was competent to know the nature and consequences of his conduct and to appreciate that it was wrong.

We are dealing today with a difficult situation. The Solicitor General (Mr. McIlraith) may close his eyes to it, but there is a problem facing us in many of our universities and high schools inasmuch as 50 or 60 per cent of the young people of this nation are, whether we like it or not, on marijuana or drugs.

The Code contains a section which provides that a person over the age of seven can be convicted of any offence while he is between the age of seven and 14, provided he knows the nature and consequences of the offence. In other words, we are faced with a situation to which I drew attention in the House of Commons some time ago, in which young men aged 15, 16, 17 and 18 across this nation, in urban centres where 80 per cent of Canadians will be living in the near future, are subject to the Narcotic Control Act and to the Food and Drugs Act, under which they could be incarcerated for more than two years. This would create for them a criminal record which would prevent, for example, their going to the United States.

The problem to which I refer is not confined to Canada and the United States; it is faced by all western countries. We are dealing with a most serious subject in an area in which the law has remained unreformed. Since I have been in the House I have on four occasions introduced a bill to amend this particular section of the Code with reference to the age at which a person may be convicted.

• (9:40 p.m.)

I have brought to the attention of the Solicitor General in the House of Commons cases of young men and women aged 15 or 16 who have been incarcerated in the penitentiary without being given any chance during that time to rehabilitate themselves and expunge their criminal record, thus enabling them to go if they so chose to the United States or any other country. That is the situation that exists today. In addition, once a young man or young woman who has a criminal record gets into some other difficulty in society and is charged under any section of the Criminal Code, what happens when bail comes to be set? In all our great, sprawling urban centres the Crown counsel reads out the record. If the record is A plus B equals C, what happens? A different scale of bail is set. The record is referred to every time the question of bail arises.

Once a young person has paid his debt to society and goes out to try to obtain employment, what is the situation if he requires to be bonded in order to obtain a job? Since he has a criminal record, the bonding company will not make him bondable.

Mr. McIlraith: Mr. Speaker, I wonder whether in making his last statement the hon. member is being up-to-date on that subject. The fact is that there is a procedure whereby bonding companies do grant bonds to persons who have been previously convicted. This fact was the subject of a public announcement last fall, when a great deal of detail was given.

Mr. Woolliams: The Solicitor General may want to make a speech on the subject, but he knows as well as I do that when an application is made to a bonding company by a person with a criminal record, the bonding company will take a tough look at it. The company uses its discretion whether to grant the person a bond.

Mr. McIlraith: The hon. member is not up-to-date at all on that.

Mr. Woolliams: As far as I am concerned, that is what is going on in Canada today. Let the minister check it out.

Mr. McIlraith: It has not been going on for the last six months.

Mr. Woolliams: My hon. friend says that I am not up-to-date. He is so up-to-date that when I asked him several months ago whether he had Crown counsel representing the Department of Justice in a matter dealing with drugs, a question I asked him as Solicitor General, as the person who appoints Crown counsel, who are generally Liberal—in politics that is how they are appointed—on the subject of sentence, he used the wishy-washy answer that he knew nothing about the charges or the appointments. I suggest a man who does not know anything about—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I wonder whether the hon. member is not straying from the bill now before the House. I invite him to revert to what we are supposed to be considering, which is the principle of Bill C-5 which is now under consideration.

Mr. Woolliams: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The only reason I put the question was that this is still a matter of court procedure and concerns the appointment of Crown counsel. Young men and women who come before magistrates and courts and who are dealt with by those the minister appoints, if convicted are given a criminal record. Therefore, I submit my point is admissible in so far as this particular argument is concerned.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member may think that, but if the Chair has to make a ruling I would tell the hon. member that what he is saying is irrelevant to the bill.

Mr. Woolliams: Mr. Speaker, I have always abided by your rulings, but may I say through you that the Solicitor General should be prepared to accept the argument I have put forward with regard to the bonding of young people. The situation today is that people with criminal records, irrespective of under what section of the Criminal Code of Canada they are charged, are not given a bond. I suggest it is high time we took a hard look at this situation.

May I come back to a matter I started with. We have developed a new committee system. The justice committee made certain recommendations to the government and to the minister. In spite of this, the bill has not been drawn along those lines. Committees make recommendations to a minister having made a study of a certain subject and having called before it witnesses from across the nation. In view of this, those recommendations should be accepted by the minister and the government. The committee hears all the pros and cons before making its decision.

The minister has not yet told the House, though he may when he closes the debate, why he has not accepted the recommendations made by the committee and as set out by the hon. member for Welland. If, as the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) said the other day, we are moving toward the presidential system of government, which means that our committees would take on a new type of responsibility in making recommendations to the government, then surely under such system the recommendations of committees should be accepted. On that ground this bill is a great disappointment; it has not incorporated the recommendations that have already been made by the committee.

How are committees of the House of Commons formed? The justice committee is probably fortunate in that it is made up of professional people. It is a pretty independent committee and does on occasion make recommendations that are contrary to the policy of the executive. However, if our recommendations are to be ignored, we might as well lock the door of the committee because we are just wasting our time.

If, under this new presidential system, the executive is to take the position that any recommendation made by a committee is all right as a recommendation, that members of the House who are very able are to be kept busy attending committees and studying subjects, but that their recommendations are to be put by the minister into the filing basket and he thereupon comes forward with a bill that is recommended by his own advisers, we are wasting our time. In view of what the chairman of the committee said tonight, what will be the position if the committee makes certain recommendations in regard to this bill? Will the minister come back to the House and tell us that the bill will go through, no matter what the committee has recommended? In the justice committee there are a number of backbenchers who are able professional men, just as able as the minister.

Mr. Deachman: Able men on both sides of the House.

Mr. Woolliams: I am glad the hon. member said both sides of the House. But are we to be merely rubber stamps? If the minister is going to bring in his own bill anyway, then as I see it the committee is wasting its time.

There is a very simple procedure for dealing with this situation. What we should do is to go through, as we are tonight, the sham of second reading of the bill and send it to the committee. No longer does the committee of the whole House study each clause of the bill. The standing committee can waste a few hours for each of two or three weeks studying the clauses and making recommendations to the minister. If the minister, in spite of the remarks made by the chairman of the justice committee tonight, is not prepared to accept the recommendations of his own chairman, a man who doubtless had the approval both of the minister and the Prime Minister, then he is setting himself up as a little tin god. He will be a member of an executive that is going to run to the country its way no matter what the members of the Liberal Party of the opposition say.

• (9:50 p.m.)

This emphasizes once again the waste of time of committees. If the government wants to keep its backbenchers busy—and they are getting wise to this—on projects such as contained in this bill, I hope it will not think we are naïve enough over here that we will be engaged in this kind of project which does not lead to fruition as far as reform of the Criminal Code is concerned.

The recommendation I make is the same as that of the hon. member for Welland. If we are to have effective reforms in respect of those who run afoul of the law so far as the Criminal Code is concerned and are sentenced to penitentiary where they are fingerprinted and catalogued, having served their incarceration and after another five years we should be able to expunge the record and let that man or woman start over again.

I should like to express one last thought. I ask the minister to reconsider his position. I hope when he comes before the committee he will be able to accept the unanimous recommendations of the committee and agree to amend the bill. We will then feel that the committee is doing something and functioning properly, and that the minister and the executives are actually listening to Members of Parliament rather than just running this country as little tin gods and dictators.

Mr. Hubert Badanai (Fort William): Mr. Speaker, I welcome the opportunity to participate in the debate on Bill C-5 which, when passed, will provide relief for persons who have been convicted of offences and subsequently have rehabilitated themselves. However, not being a lawyer like those who preceded me, I am not going to deal with the technicalities of the law but rather with the compassion that this legislation will rouse in the hearts of men.

I have a special interest in this bill because a member of my family has been very active in the work of the John Howard and Elizabeth Fry Societies of Thunder Bay. It is a bill, as was pointed out by the Solicitor General (Mr. McIlraith), that is an honest attempt by the government to bring forward legislation that will deal with the aspect of rehabilitation of persons who have been convicted of an offence and have subsequently shown evidence of good character, to whom the National Parole Board, upon application, would grant a pardon and cancel the conviction and, in addition, provide the withdrawal of criminal records.

Personally, I wish to congratulate the Solicitor General for introducing a bill which will enable the National Parole Board to consider deserving applicants for pardon.

I am also certain that the principle of relief for rehabilitated offenders will be supported by members of all parties and by the vast majority of the public. Punishment is the easiest but not necessarily the most successful way to deal with criminals. They are put behind bars, confined within walls of dreary rooms like so much surplus humanity. We are confident that while they are there they will not commit the same offences and hopefully believe that others warned by their punishment will avoid engaging in similar offences. The trouble is that it does not seem to deter crime. In the Middle Ages convicts were branded with hot irons, or their heads were cut off, but in spite of these and other punishments crime continued to flourish, especially in the slums of big cities.

The government of Canada is to be commended for introducing a policy which may well reduce the crime rate and at the same time save the nation millions of dollars a year. A few months ago the chairman of the National Parole Board made a statement to the effect that allowing a prisoner to return to a productive life produces savings in two ways: the state is no longer responsible for his maintenance and he is usually able to support himself, his wife and family.

He also gave us a very interesting report on paroled offenders. For one month it showed that 2,284, or 86 per cent, were gainfully employed. Their gross earnings for the month were over $673,000 and they were supporting 2,514 dependants. Multiply these earnings by 12, and the total income is over $8 million for the full year, with the parolees subject to normal income tax and other taxes that all Canadians must pay.

The cost of keeping an inmate in a federal penal institution ranges from $3,600 to nearly $5,000 a year, while the cost of keeping a man on parole is only $300 to $500. Money is a big factor, but not necessarily the most important one. It is also reassuring that almost 90 per cent of paroled men complete their parole periods satisfactorily.

Therefore, it is quite evident that parole is not only effective in rehabilitation but represents a tremendous saving to the taxpayer. But what is even more important is that in the year 1968, for which I have the figures, 3,689 paroles were granted and of this number only 480 paroles were revoked.

It may not be generally known that the Parole Board consults judges about prisoners whom they have sentenced. It is impossible to have a parole system unless we release persons from prison. Mr. Justice Ouimet once stated in a report:

> Parole is a treatment-oriented correctional measure, not a sentence-correcting method. It is in no way aimed at reviewing the sentence of the court... As part of the correctional process, its function is rather to determine the portion of the sentence which is to be spent in the community and the kind of control and supervision which will be needed...
>
> At the same time, for the offender, parole is an opportunity and a test of his self control and ability to get along in the community. For society it offers immediate protection through a degree of surveillance and control over offender behaviour and long term protection through a reduced likelihood of recidivism.

There will always be individuals who cannot be trusted as members of society because of problems which make them dangerous at all time. They must be kept segregated. On the other hand, this bill is a move to long overdue, more humane and more sensible treatment of the average person who breaks the law.

• (10:00 p.m.)

Some years ago Sir Winston Churchill, writing about crime and brutality, wrote these words:

> The mood and temper of the public with regard to the treatment of crime and criminals is one of the most unfailing tests of the civilization of any country. A calm dispassionate recognition of the rights of the accused, and even of the convicted criminal against the state; a constant heart searching by all charged with the duty of punishment; a desire and an eagerness to rehabilitate...tireless efforts, unfailing faith that there is a treasure, if you can find it, in the heart of every man. These are the symbols which... mark and measure the stored up strength of a nation... proof of the living virtue in it.

The substance of this bill is a heartwarming decision on the part of the government. The changes will depend largely on fuller use of probation and parole services.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I regret to interrupt the hon. member, but it is approximately ten o'clock. Has the hon. member unanimous consent to complete his remarks?

Proceedings on Adjournment Motion

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Speaker: I believe there is agreement to allow the hon. member to conclude his remarks within approximately five minutes.

Mr. Badanai: Thank you, Mr. Speaker and hon. members. The John Howard and Elizabeth Fry Societies are doing a tremendous job with limited and inadequate financial resources. Here I appeal to the Solicitor General to be more generous in granting financial assistance to these societies which are composed of men and women dedicated to the rehabilitation of the unfortunate young and old who happen to fall into the channels of crime.

To give an example, the executive secretary of the John Howard Society of Thunder Bay, who visits the Manitoba penitentiary 12 times a year to see the inmates from Ontario and who also looks after the parolees from the province of Ontario, receives only $1,500 a year toward an operating budget of $21,000. The balance has to be obtained from the Thunder Bay United Appeal and membership subscriptions. This is always a haphazard dependence because in some years the United Appeal fails to reach its objective, and membership decreases.

In 1969 the society looked after 14 parolees. It could handle more if it had more money. Therefore, I suggest that a revision of the relationship between the federal government and the John Howard Society be carried out with the object of increasing the latter's effectiveness by greater financial support.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): Mr. Speaker, on a question of order, before we move on to the next item of business perhaps I might confirm that it would be the intention tomorrow to call this measure after the two which have been announced.

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

A motion to adjourn the House under Standing Order 40 deemed to have been moved.

PUBLIC BUILDINGS—STEPHENVILLE, NFLD—CONSTRUCTION OF NEW FACILITIES

Mr. Jack Marshall (Humber-St. George's-St. Barbe): Mr. Speaker, I should first like to apologize to the Minister of Public Works (Mr. Laing) for having been brought back at this late hour, especially since I did not have an opportunity last year to thank him for announcing to me that my district was to have a $2½ million harbour development. This was much to the consternation of another minister who had wanted to make the announcement first. However, I was able to beat him to the punch.

I should like to deal with a question in respect of which I have difficulty in obtaining answers. Ordinarily I like to deal with members of the staff rather than bother the minister and take up the time of the House. Last year a meeting was held at the town of Stephenville among members of the town council, the chambers of commerce and all interested leaders of the surrounding communities to discuss the need for expanded postal facilities due to the projected expansion of the town by way of potential industry and the resultant need of expanded postal communication.

It was agreed by the district postal supervisor, who attended the meeting along with myself, that in view of the potential growth of the area a study should be made of the expanded projected growth commensurate with the planned increase in population due to growth of planned industry. Furthermore, it was agreed that the existing post office was located at a dangerous intersection where normal access was difficult due to the danger of being in a school area which endangered this access, and in turn endangered the safety of hundreds of children.

After serious consideration it was agreed after further study that to facilitate economy of purpose, consideration should be given to the establishment of a federal building not only to house the post office but other federal agencies which the government was leasing, which tended to destroy centralization of purpose to facilitate proper administration.

My grievance is not with the action of government but is only raised to indicate my inability to follow progress with regard to the eventual decision to provide the facility. I cannot understand why I cannot get a definite, straightforward answer with regard to progress, as a Member of Parliament who is only trying to obtain the information asked for by the people whom I represent. I would not mind if I were told to mind my own business or, "We don't tell you anything." But to be kept waiting and being offered procrastinating excuses, that I will have the answer tomorrow—and tomorrow never comes—is becoming difficult to bear.

[Mr. Speaker.]

Sooner or later, Mr. Speaker, we will have to treat one another with respect. I only ask to be told—as is my right on behalf of the people I represent—at what stage of progress is the consideration of the construction of a federal building for the community of Stephenville to serve the governmental needs of the people of the Port au Port peninsula. I ask the minister to indicate the intentions of the government, so that I can fulfil my obligations to these people who deserve an answer, and get on with the many other problems of my district. I request this answer with the great respect which I have for the Minister of Public Works.

Hon. Arthur Laing (Minister of Public Works): Mr. Speaker, after the double-edged speech that the hon. member has made, in which he first thanked me for having made an error, I do not know how I can handle this question. I will endeavour not to repeat the error that I apparently made last year, so that when he leaves tonight he will probably not know a great deal more than he knows now, and probably not a great deal more than I know.

I agree with the hon. member that we are speaking of an area that is a potential growth area, an area which has come to the attention of my colleague, the Minister of Regional Economic Expansion (Mr. Marchand). I agree with him that the present location of the post office is inadequate, in that it is directly across the street from a large school and the traffic is dangerous to the school children. Our difficulty is that the total plans of the government with respect to the growth of the area are not yet fully formulated.

If my hon. friend asked me tonight what is going into that federal building, I could not tell him now. Although some departments require space in it, they have not yet indicated to us their full requirements. But I can assure him that the longer this matter is put off, the larger the building will be, because that is generally the case.

It is our hope—and I am not going to publish tonight any indication of my estimates which will be tabled in the House in a week or two—that in my estimates there will be an item that will enable us to make an additional acquisition of property there of about 200 feet by 200 feet, and this in a good area of the city. In addition, it will enable us to draw up the plan for the building which might commence, subject to the approval of the government in respect of those estimates, in the following year.

• (10:10 p.m.)

THE CANADIAN ECONOMY—INFLATION—INCREASE IN BANK DIRECTORS' FEES

Mr. David Orlikow (Winnipeg North): Mr. Speaker, on January 21 I asked the Minister of Finance (Mr. Benson) whether he would give consideration to requesting restraint by officials of the Toronto Dominion Bank who had announced the day before that the annual fees paid to directors of the bank were to be increased from $6,000 to $8,100, an increase of 33 per cent at one time. In view of the government's program of austerity and moderation, it seemed to me that the minister might ask the officers of the bank for restraint.

The minister answered facetiously that he was pleased that I was a supporter of moderation in wage demands. I will come back to that in a moment. The policy of the minister and of the government is obviously influenced by the kind of advice they are getting from the governor of the Royal Bank of Canada, the chairman of the Prices and Incomes Commission and, I presume, the Deputy Minister of Finance.

I do not need to reiterate the kind of speeches the chairman of the Prices and Incomes Commission has been making. They are well known to every Canadian citizen who reads a newspaper or watches television. The governor of the Bank of Canada made a speech to the Canadian Club in Montreal a few days ago which was reported in the Globe and Mail of February 3. I read a couple of sentences from the newspaper report as follows:

> Louis Rasminsky, governor of the Bank of Canada, defended Canada's anti-inflation measures yesterday by saying that without the restraints, the situation would have been worse.

He went on to say:

> Wages and salaries in Canada continue to show a year to year gain in the range of 7 to 7.5 per cent which was greatly in excess of the trend of productivity increases—

> He put his support firmly behind the commission: "The Prices and Incomes Commission has recently taken an important initiative, which deserves the full support of the whole community."

Mr. Speaker, it is that kind of thinking which has led the governor of the Bank of Canada and the chairman of the Prices and Incomes Commission to urge working people to show restraint in the wage increases they are claiming, and to urge leaders of the labour movement to go to their members and try to sell this type of program. They have been joined by the press and other news media who have been, to say the least, unenthusiastic about a policy of wage restraint.

I do not believe wage restraint can work. I say to the Minister of Finance—or I would if he were here—and to the government that the only way wage restraint would have a chance of working would be if the government really meant business and were to show the ordinary working people that restraint is for everybody. I think they should start with just the people I have spoken about. The governor of the Bank of Canada recently had his salary increased from $50,000 to $75,000 a year. I submit that does not show much restraint.

In 1966 the Deputy Minister of Finance was paid a salary of $27,000 a year, but he now receives between $37,000 and $40,000 a year, which is an increase of at least 37 per cent in less than four years. The chairman of the Prices and Incomes Commission is also paid $37,000 to $40,000 a year, which I suggest is substantially more than he made as a professor at the University of British Columbia. I am not suggesting that they are being paid too much; I am simply saying there is not much restraint here.

Looking at self-employed people we see the same pattern. The income of doctors and surgeons in ten years from 1957 to 1967 has increased by 95 per cent to a total in 1967 of $27,000. The income of engineers and architects in those ten years has increased by 51.6 per cent to over $22,000. The incomes of lawyers and notaries has gone up on the average by 66.2 per cent, their average income in 1967 being over $22,000.

Again, Mr. Speaker, I am not suggesting this is too much, but I am simply suggesting that if the government believes in restraint it must demonstrate its belief by demanding equity. If sacrifices have to be made, in other words, I suggest it is unfair and completely wrong for the government to urge restraint and sacrifice by ordinary working people. We have heard a great deal about tremendous increases in wages, the so-called inflationary wage increases that have gone to our supposedly higher paid steel workers and auto workers.

The Minister without Portfolio (Mr. Gray) from Windsor knows how much auto workers earn. Few auto workers or steel workers in this country earn more than $8,000—not a great income but one which enables them to get by at a certain standard of living. If the government believes in restraint, it can demonstrate its belief by saying to people like the directors of the Toronto-Dominion Bank and other captains of industry, "Do not ask for restraint on the part of others. Do not try to stop inflation by putting the blocks to ordinary working people. Instead, let us see you setting an example by showing some restraint." If and when they do that—and I submit they have not yet begun to do it—the leaders of trade unions in this country might be persuaded to go to their members with the kind of appeal the government has been making in recent days.

[Mr. Orlikow.]

Hon. Herb Gray (Minister without Portfolio): Mr. Speaker, as the House knows, the government has set up as part of its fight against inflation the Prices and Incomes Commission. The commission has been working to create a program of voluntary restraint on the part of all sectors of the economy as a method of breaking into the inflationary spiral and in this way speeding up the process of stemming the pressures of inflation. In its efforts the commission appears to have taken into account the views of certain labour leaders to the effect that attention be given to restraining rises in prices before looking into ways of restraining wages and salaries.

The commission, therefore, has been working to obtain a consensus from the business community on a formula to limit increases in prices. The leaders of several large business groups have given their support to this concept. Several key companies and key industries have at the request of the government agreed not to put into effect certain prices increases at least until March 1.

The Prices and Incomes Commission will hold next week in Ottawa a conference of business leaders to attempt to develop and confirm such a consensus. Once this is done the commission will be able to turn its attention to the role of other sectors. As the hon. member has said, no one suffers more from the effects of inflation than the working man—people in the low-income group. That is why we are calling for the support of all sectors for the efforts of the Prices and Incomes Commission and for the efforts of the government to stem the process of inflation before it does further harm to the Canadian economy.

As the Minister of Finance (Mr. Benson) said, he was very pleased to hear the remarks that the hon. member made in the House which seemed to indicate support for moderation in wage demands. This is very significant, coming as it does from a member of the NDP, the party which some leaders of the labour movement refer to as the official voice of the labour movement. Many will say it is very encouraging, Mr. Speaker.

CANADIAN PACIFIC—MONTREAL-QUEBEC LINE —CLOSING OF STATIONS AFTER SIX O'CLOCK —LACK OF COMFORT FOR PASSENGERS

Mr. J.-A. Mongrain (Trois-Rivières): Mr. Speaker, I will confess right away that I have had a very innocent and interesting passion all my life: I have kept cats and dogs. I would have blamed myself, and my fellow citizens would have blamed me, if I had kept these charming animals freezing outside in cold weather such as we have had lately. But the Canadian Pacific does this regularly. The CPR has no heart or soul; sometimes we wonder if the CPR has any conscience when it leaves its customers frozen on the platforms of our railway stations.

• (10:20 p.m.)

[Translation]

I have raised that question because before the departure of the CPR evening train from Montreal to Quebec, the waiting rooms are kept closed, which forces the passengers, for all kinds of reasons, to wait in the cold on the station platform, while they sometimes come from far away or accompany sick women or children.

I ask the minister to intervene with the Canadian Transport Commission to have that situation corrected immediately, because I have the feeling that the Canadian Pacific deceives the people.

History will probably tell that it is the fraud of the century, since from the outset the CPR has obtained from Canadians fabulous wealth and exemptions which bring it fantastic returns and turned many Canadians into millionaires. The Canadian people have no objection to that provided that the Canadian Pacific supplies a proper service, but the company is not keeping its promise since it has created separate companies in paying sectors but complains that the passenger service is not profitable enough. It hopes to be able one day to turn its management over to the government.

It is time to remind the CPR that it is bound by a commitment to the Canadian people, that of giving proper service. One should not forget that the Canadian public has given with an overwhelming generosity very substantial sums of money to that company.

Those are signs of a gigantic fraud that should alarm Parliament and the public opinion, and which should be terminated very soon.

Mr. Gérard Loiselle (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I wish to commend the hon. member for Trois-Rivières (Mr. Mongrain) for his rousing speech against the closing of some railway stations between Quebec and Montreal.

I will not go so far as to say, as the hon. member did, that it is a gigantic fraud, but I shall limit myself to answering the question he asked in the House yesterday, to the effect that certain stations between Montreal and Quebec are closed at night.

I know the hon. member for Trois-Rivières is alarmed. The people who have travelled on Canadian Pacific trains and have had to wait at stations are right in complaining to their members. The hon. member for Trois-Rivières is right in pointing out the matter to the minister's attention.

On the other hand, it should perhaps be recognized—not that I want in any way to protect the Canadian National and the Canadian Pacific—that for certain reasons a few stations had to be closed. But between Montreal and Quebec, four stations are open at night: those at L'Épiphanie, Portneuf, Pont-Rouge and Lorette. I see the hon. member making signs that it is not so. I am sorry, Mr. Speaker, but that is the information I received this afternoon from Canadian Pacific officials. I shall have to tell them tomorrow morning, through the Minister of Transport (Mr. Jamieson), perhaps not that they lied to me but that they gave me inaccurate information. However, I must pass along the information I received.

Other stations have been closed because the employees leave at five o'clock. Formerly, a part of the waiting room remained open to passengers after office hours.

Vandalistic acts against office equipment resulting in heavy damages have compelled the management of the Canadian Pacific to close those stations.

As for the four stations which I mentioned a while ago, stating that they were open to the public, although the hon. member motioned to me that they were closed, representations were made by the citizens of those communities and as a result, the Canadian Pacific has accepted—I repeat has accepted, because I am told that those stations are open—to leave the waiting rooms at the disposal of the clients.

As for the other stations, seven trains are on a flag stop basis and two stop on Fridays.

If the hon. member has special cases to draw to the minister's attention, I will gladly point them out to him, especially since tomorrow morning I will communicate to whom it may concern the false information which I provided this evening. I shall check this point with the department tomorrow morning. I shall be happy to give this.

I am also happy to tell the hon. member that Canadian Pacific officials have assured us that the problem of waiting-rooms would be studied, each case separately. We hope that with the re-opening of this waiting-room, the hon. member for Trois-Rivières—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Béchard): Order, please.

[English]

Motion agreed to and the House adjourned at 10.23 p.m.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Friday, February 6, 1970

The House met at 11 a.m.

ROUTINE PROCEEDINGS

POLLUTION

STATEMENT ON PHOSPHATE CONTROL

Hon. J. J. Greene (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, the question of the control of phosphate nutrients as an essential step toward the cleaning of polluted waters is one in which this House and the public generally have recently demonstrated great concern.

The report of the pollution reference board on the lower Great Lakes to the International Joint Commission has recently highlighted the most critical aspects of the problem with respect to Lakes Erie and Ontario.

In view of the undoubted seriousness of the problem, my department has been active in looking further into potential solutions to the problem of eutrophication caused in some considerable part by the use of phosphates in Canada.

Shortly after the report of the reference board to the IJC was published, I held discussions with my United States counterpart, Secretary Hickel, and informed him of our point of view on the need for joint action. In addition, senior officials from my department specifically discussed the phosphate problem on the Great Lakes with senior officials of the Department of the Interior of the United States. Other officials from governments in Canada and the United States were sent to Sweden to investigate the phosphate control program in that country and still others were dispatched to discuss research and development of phosphate alternatives with a major United States detergent producer. Furthermore, I held discussions with industry representatives to hear their point of view and to inform them of the gravity with which we viewed the problem, and to determine whether action and self-discipline on their part on a voluntary basis could be the successful approach to the problem.

With respect to the Great Lakes, it clearly appeared that there was little point in Canada acting alone, since most of the phosphates entering those waters emanated from the United States. United States action, as well as Canadian, was therefore essential if any real solution to the question was to be achieved, and if Canadian action to ban or control was to be anything more than an empty gesture.

I am, therefore, most pleased to report to the House that on February 4 at hearings in Rochester the U.S. federal water pollution control administration took a fresh look at its position and is now calling for the reduction of phosphates in detergents as recommended in the report to the IJC. The U.S. federal water pollution control administration have asserted their willingness to control phosphates within minimum practicable levels immediately and to look to the complete replacement of phosphates as soon as possible.

My department supports the recommendations to the IJC concerning phosphate control and looks forward to the commission's report to the governments of Canada and the United States.

• (11:10 a.m.)

I have instructed my department to work in close conjunction with the United States federal water pollution control administration to attempt to achieve a co-ordinated plan of control and an imminent complete replacement of phosphates. I shall be consulting with my counterpart ministers in the provinces to attempt to achieve a plan of control and ultimate replacement of phosphates that is mutually acceptable and which will thus have the support of any provincial action required under our constitution.

I have further instructed my departmental officials to advise the IJC, at their public hearing today in Brockville, of our intention to act on this matter.

[Translation]

Mr. Louis-Roland Comeau (South Western Nova): Mr. Speaker, I suggest that intelligent comments are impossible, as we received the release only two minutes before coming to the House.

This problem which is of great interest to all hon. members has not only been mentioned in the House on many occasions, but has also been referred to the committee which is presently studying Bill C-144.

Though the release recommends that measures be taken with regard to the use of phosphates, it does not give any details with regard to such measures. We hope that the minister and the senior officials of his department will, within the committee, succeed in establishing a program and in determining the measures they intend to take.

The public can certainly and rightly ask that those products be taken off the market. The government is taking the very measures Ontario has already taken to ban the sale of such substances.

It is my opinion that the committee will be extremely interested in delving further into this matter.

[English]

Mrs. Grace MacInnis (Vancouver-Kingsway): Mr. Speaker, we in this party welcome most heartily the announcement of the minister today, particularly as it comes in advance of the International Joint Commission meeting in Brockville. It seems as though the government is doing a great deal. I commend the minister for having made public some of the things that the government is apparently doing because I firmly believe an informed public can and will support anti-pollution measures. This might not be the case if the public were kept in the dark.

I was pleased to hear that there have been discussions and that these discussions are continuing with the United States authorities, particularly with regard to the Great Lakes. Obviously this is essential so far as the Great Lakes are concerned.

We in this party feel that the Canadian government should take the initiative with regard to our waterways, lakes and coastal waters which do not come within joint jurisdiction. The federal government must take the initiative with regard to pollution of these waters and not wait until such time as there can be agreement with the United States authorities on an over-all program. I was pleased to learn that the minister caused his officials to go to Sweden to ascertain what is being done in that country, and also to discuss with a major United States detergent producer the development of phosphate alternatives.

We in this party are not sanguine with regard to the minister's opinion that perhaps voluntary action will achieve the desired result. We believe there will have to be definite target dates set not only for the reduction but also the elimination of phosphates. I know the minister referred to elimination as soon as is practicable. But this will not be hastened along without a good deal more effort than the hon. gentleman is putting into it now. I hope the minister is getting the kind of mail I am receiving these days—worried protests from women all across Canada who will not be satisfied to be told to go back to soap or to find out which detergent already on the market contains the least amount of phosphate. They want the government to arrange for the kind of research which will enable us to eliminate phosphate detergents completely.

We welcome the minister's announcement and urge him to continue the good work he is doing.

[Translation]

Mr. Gilbert Rondeau (Shefford): Mr. Speaker, the minister's statement, this morning, shows good intentions concerning pollution control. We have unfortunately had little time to study the document he tabled in the House, as we have just seen it.

Nevertheless, reading the first page of the statement, we see the government has good intentions in connection with control of water pollution, aiming to eliminate the use of chemicals such as phosphates as much as possible. However, one passage of the text surprises me. In effect, the minister says he will initiate discussions with a major United States detergent producer.

We know now that phosphates and soaps are the main factors of water pollution. What results can the minister expect from discussions with phosphate and soap producers if he wants to check pollution caused by the use of these products? In preparing his policy, I think he should instead consult scientists, who would likely recommend using biodegradable products which do not pollute water at all. He should confer with people who are not directly involved in phosphate or soap production or sales in order to be able to take measures likely to fight efficiently water pollution in Canada.

The minister has pointed out that the cooperation of businessmen involved should be voluntary. However, the problem of pollution is so acute in Canada now that we should do more than merely ask those who have been directly polluting our waters for 25 years to share voluntarily in the fight against pollution.

The proposed policy is not drastic enough, because it contains only pious recommendations which suggest no new means of scientifically controlling water pollution.

[English]

HOUSE OF COMMONS

PROVISION OF RESEARCH ASSISTANCE TO LIBERAL MEMBERS

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, in the autumn of 1968 the government made available to the opposition parties in this House sums of money for research purposes to assist them in their vitally important task of analysing and criticizing government legislative measures and offering constructive alternatives. Following discussions with the opposition parties, a sum of $125,000 per annum was made available to the Progressive Conservative Party and a sum of $35,000 per annum was provided to each of the other two opposition parties. This money permits the employment of special staff by the House of Commons upon nomination by the several party leaders, and available to them. I am informed that this sum of $195,000 per year has permitted the opposition parties the use of research offices which now employ some 22 full-time and 5 part-time employees.

• (11:20 a.m.)

[Translation]

I think it fair to say, Mr. Speaker, that this scheme has worked well and has given to the opposition Members of Parliament means to carry on research which have never before been made available. This was but one of several measures which this government has taken to permit the private Member of Parliament to play a more effective role, and in so doing enhance the importance of Parliament as an institution.

As a result of the visible benefits of this new system which, I repeat, has been available only to opposition members, the government has decided to make funds available to private members on this side of the House as well.

A sum of money smaller than that available to all of the opposition parties, $130,000 as compared with $195,000, has been allotted for this task, as recognition of the fact that a heavy task of research falls also, on the government supporters.

[English]

I am glad to see that all hon. members welcome this announcement, Mr. Speaker. It is another step in the conscious plans of this government to strengthen Parliament and to assist the members who play such a vital role in our democratic processes.

Hon. Robert L. Stanfield (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I am sure that we all welcome this effort on the part of the government to put its supporters in the House in a better position to enable them to play a full part in the work of Parliament. I do not know what will be the terms of reference of the grant, but I would think that quite possibly one of the major areas of research that private members on the other side of the House would have to undertake would be, at least in the initial stages, not so much research into specific subject matters but into how they can make their views known, how they can get their views across to members of the government.

I simply want to say that not only do I welcome this move to improve the position of the supporters of the government in the House, but if we can be of any assistance to members on the other side of the House in regard to how they may make their views be of more influence in their own ranks, then please, Mr. Speaker, may I convey the message to them not to be reluctant to consult us.

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, we are happy to indicate our support for the announcement made this morning by the Prime Minister. I suppose that the first and obvious comment to make about assistance being provided to government backbenchers is: "For heaven's sake, they need it."

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): I note that that sentiment is applauded by those on the government side of the House. Seriously, Mr. Speaker, the Prime Minister will recall that when the present deputy leader of this party and I called on him to discuss this matter shortly after the election in 1968 we made this very proposal, namely, that research assistance should be made available to all parties in the House. We repeated that suggestion when the matter was discussed on the floor.

I think it is perfectly correct that if research assistance is going to be made available to those who are not in the cabinet, then all members should be treated alike. In this respect I am sure that neither the Prime Minister nor anybody else will be surprised when I say that we think that the allocation of funds is not in proportion to the strength of the parties. We think that the amount accorded to our party should be greater, and we shall continue to press for this, but in any case we are making the fullest use that we can of the amount that is made available to our party.

A particular reason for our being in support of this proposition is that we believe it is proper that it should be the Members of Parliament, on whatever side of the House they sit, from whom the government should be getting its advice. We are disturbed over the extent to which the coterie of people who are attached to the Prime Minister's Office and the offices of ministers is growing and is producing what people sometimes refer to as the presidential system. I see the action announced today as an antidote to that.

When we complain about a presidential system we are not thinking just in terms of a name, of the Prime Minister being called the president instead of the Prime Minister, or being greeted with "Hail to the Chief" or something like that. We are thinking rather of the fact that under a presidential system the president makes the decisions on the basis of the advice he gets from those with whom he surrounds himself—his staff, which is responsible only to him. We think that is going in the wrong direction, and that it is to go in the right direction to get more advice from Parliament itself, either on this floor or from the members of the various parties. To the extent that strengthening the work hon. members on the government side can do is an antidote to any movement in the other direction, we welcome it. Therefore, Mr. Speaker, the Prime Minister was quite right when he noted that his proposal has the support of all parties in the House.

[Translation]

Mr. Gérard Laprise (Abitibi): Mr. Speaker, for some time I had been expecting such a statement. As a matter of fact, when the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) decided to make certain sums of money available to opposition parties for research purposes I wondered why members on the government side did not enjoy the same privileges.

At the time I surmised that the government was no doubt providing them with other documentation facilities. I feel that the action announced by the Prime Minister is excellent since the same advantages are given to all members.

On our part, Mr. Speaker, we have used the funds at our disposal to the best advantage, but people will admit that even before this became the practice we were not doing too badly.

[English]

Mr. Ryan: On a question of privilege, Mr. Speaker, it will be quite apparent to Your Honour and to all hon. members that there is discrimination here against the independent party consisting of yourself and myself, and I would hope that the government would hasten to remedy this situation.

An hon. Member: Come back to this side, Perry.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Douglas (Assiniboia): Mr. Speaker, I should like to make a comment on the announcement, if I may.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. It is not my impression that the hon. member has that status required by the Standing Orders. I should not think that he can make a statement at this time.

Mr. Douglas (Assiniboia): Mr. Speaker, on a point of order—

Mr. Speaker: Is the hon. member rising on a point of order?

Mr. Douglas (Assiniboia): Mr. Speaker, on behalf of the backbenchers who have not had an opportunity to express themselves, I was going to thank the government for this action.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

VETERANS AFFAIRS

ALLOWANCES AND DISABILITY PENSIONS—REQUEST FOR UNANIMOUS CONSENT TO MOVE MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Jack Marshall (Humber-St. George's-St. Barbe): Mr. Speaker, I ask for unanimous consent of the House to make the following motion under Standing Order 43:

> That the matter of increases in war veterans allowances and disability pensions be referred to the Standing Committee on Veterans Affairs.

I move the motion for the following reasons, and I will be brief. First, the concern with regard to the need for increases in assistance for veterans is continually being brought to the attention of the government and all Members of Parliament, which emphasizes the hardships being experienced. Second, it is alarming to note that at present the maximum allowable income for single and married war veterans falls far below the accepted poverty line as laid down by the Economic Council of Canada.

• (11:30 a.m.)

While it is realized that the government is reviewing the whole area of social legislation and while it is recognized on this side of the House that there is need to combat inflation, it must be considered of urgent concern that many veterans are reaching that age in life when immediate attention must be given to their needs and to the steadily increasing hardships caused to veterans due to rising costs and the effect on the living conditions of those citizens who are limited in their ability to earn for themselves due to service to our country.

Mr. Speaker: This is the type of motion which requires the unanimous agreement of the House. Is there unanimous agreement?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. Speaker: There is not unanimous agreement. Therefore it is not possible for the Chair to put the motion at this time.

ORAL QUESTION PERIOD

LABOUR RELATIONS

BRITISH COLUMBIA—ACTION TO REOPEN WEST COAST PORTS

Hon. Robert L. Stanfield (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, in the absence of the Minister of Labour who I had hoped would be here in view of the apparently deteriorating situation at some of the west coast ports, I should like to ask the Prime Minister whether the government has yet reached any decision concerning what action can be taken to reopen the ports or to ensure that the ports will open shortly so that the produce of the country can continue to move into export markets?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Yes, Mr. Speaker, we have already discussed this matter and have made a decision. Any further action will be announced in due course.

Inquiries of the Ministry

Mr. Eldon M. Woolliams (Calgary North): Mr. Speaker, may I ask a supplementary, please. In view of the fact that we in Parliament seem to be continually faced with these problems which affect the nation's exports, I should like to ask when the government will bring in legislation to bring about a better relationship between management and labour so that our exports can be kept moving to the markets of the world?

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Regina East.

GRAIN

WHEAT—STATEMENT RESPECTING REDUCED PRODUCTION—FINANCIAL INCENTIVES TO FARMERS

Mr. John Burton (Regina East): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Prime Minister. Was the Minister without Portfolio in charge of the Canadian Wheat Board expressing government policy when he indicated in London that prairie farmers will probably be advised to reduce wheat production in the next crop year? Also, is the government contemplating financial incentives for farmers who switch to alternate crops or increase their summerfallow acreage?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I have not verified what the minister said in London. As to the second part of the question, the minister answered that question in the House last week.

Mr. Burton: Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question. Is the government considering a price guarantee based on the International Grains Arrangement minimum or some other suitable basis if a limitation on crop production is introduced or encouraged? Is a similar guarantee contemplated for the 1968-69 final crop payment or for the current crop year?

Mr. Trudeau: Mr. Speaker, the hon. member is making various suggestions. Last week he made such suggestions and the minister told him he would announce his policy in due course.

Mr. George Muir (Lisgar): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary for the Minister of Finance. In view of the reported statement in London of the Minister without Portfolio in charge of the Wheat Board to the effect that farmers may have to leave their wheat land idle this year in order to reduce the grain surplus, has any decision been reached by the government to assist the farmers in achieving this objective so they will not be forced out of business?

Hon. E. J. Benson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I believe the Minister without Portfolio (Mr. Lang), as the Prime Minister has pointed out, said in respect of this matter in the House last week that if the government has an announcement to make in this regard it will be made in the normal manner.

[Later:]

Mr. Lorne Nystrom (Yorkton-Melville): Mr. Speaker, my supplementary question is directed to the Prime Minister. In view of the deepening financial crisis on the prairies, is the government now considering a deficiency payment to western farmers? I ask the question because the minister did not give us any indication in this regard.

Mr. Trudeau: This question was asked by the hon. member and answered by the minister, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Nystrom: Mr. Speaker, on a point of order, this is not the case. The minister did not make a statement regarding a deficiency payment.

Mr. Speaker: Order.

WHEAT—NEW QUOTA DELIVERY SYSTEM

Mr. J. H. Horner (Crowfoot): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question for the Prime Minister. In light of the previous questions, is the government able to announce whether it intends to come out with a new quota system for the delivery of wheat by farmers in the near future?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I keep repeating the same answer. The minister is constantly confronted with such propositions. The government has its own policy and will announce any further steps in due course.

FEDERAL-PROVINCIAL RELATIONS

AGENDA FOR NEXT CONFERENCE

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, while I am on my feet I should like to answer a question asked yesterday by the Leader of the Opposition concerning the agenda for the forthcoming federal-provincial conference. There are three items on the agenda. The first is the economic situation. The second is pollution and the third is the report of the tax structure committee. Of course these items are fairly broad and no doubt the provinces will want to elaborate on each of them.

Hon. Robert L. Stanfield (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, in view of the nature of the agenda and particularly in view of the importance of these topics, would the Prime Minister agree it would be desirable to have representatives of the opposition parties attend the conference as observers with a view to the opposition parties being fully informed concerning the nature of these discussions and the form of the conclusions?

Mr. Trudeau: Mr. Speaker, of course such a matter could not be decided unilaterally by the federal government. I must say there has been no inclination on the part of any of the governments at the time of an in-camera conference to invite opposition members as observers at such in-camera conferences. This I believe has never been the practice even at the time the hon. member was leader of a provincial government.

Mr. Stanfield: Mr. Speaker, would the Prime Minister not agree it has always been a matter for the leader of the federal government to decide who is to be included in the delegations and that if a provincial premier, for example, were to include the leader or a member of an opposition party no other delegation would have the slightest objection to this?

Mr. Trudeau: I believe that would be correct. If it so happened that a provincial government wanted to include in its delegation members of the opposition, certainly we would have no desire to exercise any veto over such a composition of the delegation, but this supposes that in some places they do find opposition members who are co-operative and constructive.

Mr. Stanfield: Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question. In view of what the Prime Minister has just said, would he not agree that if the government of Canada included—surely there are some co-operative members in the opposition parties in the House—representatives of the opposition parties he has no reason to believe that any provincial delegation would object?

Mr. Trudeau: I am sure the provinces would not be in a position to object, but as a government we have reached the quite firm conclusion that in the matter, for instance, of the economic situation the opposition parties in this House have proven to be a hindrance rather than a help to the government in its fight against inflation.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

Mr. Stanfield: Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I will give the floor to the Leader of the Opposition in a moment but I am wondering whether we are embarking on a debate and whether we should in a moment try another subject.

Mr. Stanfield: Mr. Speaker, with respect, I think we have made some progress in this matter. I simply ask the Prime Minister whether he has not in the past given the impression that the opposition to including members of opposition parties stemmed from some understanding with the provinces whereas now he is disclosing it is purely a decision of this government?

Mr. Speaker: Order.

[Translation]

THE CANADIAN ECONOMY

INFLATION—LESSENING OF FISCAL BURDEN

Mr. Roland Godin (Portneuf): Mr. Speaker I wish to put a question to the Prime Minister.

In order to help consumers faced with the economic recession the United States government recently reduced their so-called "Vietnam" surtax. Could the Prime Minister tell the House if he considers alleviating the tax burden of Canadians, and if so, what kind of action he intends to take?

Mr. Speaker: It seems to me that the hon. member's question is much too general. If he wants an answer he might put his question on the order paper.

FEDERAL-PROVINCIAL RELATIONS

INCLUSION ON CONFERENCE AGENDA OF RIGHT OF PROVINCES TO ENTER INTO CULTURAL AGREEMENTS

Mr. Georges Valade (Sainte-Marie): Mr. Speaker I should like to put a question to the Prime Minister.

In connection with the federal-provincial conference would the Prime Minister object to the inclusion on the agenda of the said conference of the opportunity or right of the provinces to conclude cultural agreements with other countries having the same culture?

Inquiries of the Ministry

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I am surprised to note that a member of the opposition wishes to have constitutional matters put on the agenda of that conference. Some have already complained that the government and the provinces spoke too much about the constitution and they have asked that such conferences should not deal with constitutional matters. Now a non-constitutional conference is proposed and the hon. member suggests that a discussion on the constitution should be put on the agenda. I am surprised.

Mr. Valade: I think the Prime Minister is greatly mistaken about my question, Mr. Speaker. It concerns the provinces and the opportunity they have to create cultural relations with other countries having the same culture.

[English]

POLLUTION

PHOSPHATES—VOLUNTARY CO-OPERATION BY DETERGENT MANUFACTURERS

Mr. Bruce Howard (Okanagan Boundary): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources in connection with his statement in the House earlier this morning. Does the minister intend to rely on voluntary co-operation on the part of detergent manufacturers to carry out his program?

Hon. J. J. Greene (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, I thought the statement was clear—possibly it was not clear enough.

An hon. Member: It was clear to us on this side.

Mr. Greene: As there are very few manufacturers of phosphates and detergents containing phosphates and as they are largely the same companies on both sides of the border, it was a very attractive thought that they might be willing to co-operate on a voluntary basis and on a basis of self-discipline to reduce gradually and ultimately eliminate the phosphate content in detergents. Hence, I tried this approach, but I fear that gentle persuasion would not be successful and therefore more forceful action is required as indicated in the statement.

Mr. Howard (Okanagan Boundary): I wish to ask the minister whether he has considered the possibility of requiring detergent manufacturers to print on their packages the percentage of phosphate contained therein?

Mr. Greene: We have considered that, but have discovered from research not only carried out in this country but in other countries where similar approaches have actually been tried, a strange manifestation of the female of our species, that she would be likely to buy detergents with the highest phosphate content which washed the old man's clothes cleaner.

Mr. Fairweather: His shirts may be white but his lakes are polluted.

THE CANADIAN ECONOMY

INFLATION—PROPOSALS BY MINISTERS TO PROVINCIAL PREMIERS

Mr. Gordon Ritchie (Dauphin): I should like to direct my question to the Minister of Finance. Can he inform the House what specific proposals for inflation control the four cabinet ministers are now presently carrying to the provincial governments?

Hon. E. J. Benson (Minister of Finance): The general discussions with the premiers of the provinces are taking place prior to the meeting merely to outline some of our thoughts in this direction.

Mr. Ritchie: I have a supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Does the government intend to introduce selective or regional anti-inflationary measures in the near future which would alleviate some of the worst effects on the depressed regions of the country?

Mr. Benson: If the government intended to do any such thing it would be our policy to announce it to the House in the ordinary manner.

CONSUMER AFFAIRS

INCREASE IN PRICE OF MILK—INQUIRY AS TO ACTION

Hon. Robert L. Stanfield (Leader of the Opposition): I should like to ask the minister whether it has been brought to his attention that while he was away a firm in Toronto announced an increase in the price of milk contrary to the expressed wishes of the minister before he left. Does the minister propose to do anything about this himself in order to keep the Prices and Incomes Commission in a position where it can have a satisfactory conference?

Hon. E. J. Benson (Minister of Finance): I understand that while I was away the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs looked into this matter and made a statement in that regard, but I am not sure of that.

[Mr. Howard (Okanagan Boundary).]

Mr. Stanfield: I have a supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Will the Minister of Finance consult the record and the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs to find out whether the latter really did anything because, according to his statement in the House, he was not going to do anything about it at all?

Mr. Benson: I am always pleased to consult even with the Leader of the Opposition.

THE BUDGET

INQUIRY AS TO PROBABLE DATE OF PRESENTATION

Mr. J. H. Horner (Crowfoot): I have a question for the Minister of Finance. In view of the concern expressed across the country about the white paper on tax reform, can the minister tell us when he hopes to bring down his budget so that we may view it in light of the white paper controversy?

Hon. E. J. Benson (Minister of Finance): Very early in March.

FINANCE

SUGGESTED REMOVAL OF SALES TAX ON MARGARINE

Mr. Barry Mather (Surrey): I have a question for the Minister of Finance. Having in mind his concern about inflated prices in the country, would he say what consideration is being given to the representations of consumer groups urging the removal of the 12 per cent sales tax on margarine?

Hon. E. J. Benson (Minister of Finance): The matter is being considered. I have received representations in this regard, both from manufacturers and consumers, and of course we are considering the matter.

FLOODS

NEW BRUNSWICK—ASSISTANCE TO VICTIMS

Mr. R. Gordon L. Fairweather (Fundy-Royal): I have a question for the Prime Minister, of which I have given him notice. Will the government agree to co-ordinate its efforts with the provincial government of New Brunswick to help the victims of the severe flood damage in southern New Brunswick, and will the Prime Minister agree to take extraordinary measures to alleviate the severe hardship caused by this unusual phenomenon?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Yes, Mr. Speaker. I thank the hon. member for having notified my office of his question. The steps he suggests are already under way. I received a telephone call from the Premier of New Brunswick at my office some time yesterday, but of course, before that, I had been informed by the province of the storm and its effects. We are assisting the New Brunswick government in every way possible.

The RCMP and the Canadian Armed Forces are engaged in assisting in the evacuation of persons from flooded areas. The forces yesterday commenced construction of a temporary 150-foot bridge to replace a highway traffic bridge that has been washed away, and the Emergency Measures Organization has offered its assistance to the New Brunswick Department of Municipal Affairs to form a joint team to assess the extent of damage and estimate the best method of repair as well as the cost. The federal Department of Public Works has instructed its local officers to assist in this respect. Finally, the financial assistance of the federal government is available to the province of New Brunswick under the formula employed in the past with all provinces once the damage estimates are complete and, of course, if the Premier of New Brunswick should request such federal assistance.

[Translation]

LABOUR CONDITIONS

ST. HYACINTHE—LAYING-OFF OF GOODYEAR EMPLOYEES

Hon. Théogène Ricard (Saint-Hyacinthe): Mr. Speaker, in the absence of the Minister of Regional Economic Expansion, I should like to ask a question to his parliamentary secretary.

Can he tell the House whether the minister has received a telegram from the Central Council of the town of St. Hyacinthe informing him that 40 employees of the Goodyear Company were being laid off?

Mr. Speaker: I do not believe that the hon. member can simply ask whether a telegram or a message has been received by the minister concerned. In such terms, the question is out of order.

Mr. Ricard: With your permission, Mr. Speaker, I should like to address my question to the Prime Minister.

As the economic situation deteriorates constantly in St. Hyacinthe, would the Prime Minister be prepared to give particular attention to the matter and to suggest to the Minister of Regional Economic Expansion to make of the St. Hyacinthe region a designated area?

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member is making a suggestion to the government and he should assume that it will be considered.

[English]

FISHERIES

ACTION RESPECTING DEPLETION OF RESOURCES BY FOREIGN FISHERMEN

Mr. Lloyd R. Crouse (South Shore): I have a question I should like to direct to the Minister of Fisheries. In his absence I would normally direct it to his Parliamentary Secretary, but since he is absent I can only direct it to the Acting Minister of Fisheries, whoever he may be. In view of the statement made by the Minister of Fisheries in Montreal that the U.S.S.R. and Poland are depleting Canada's fisheries resources, what steps has the government taken to bring this matter before the international panel of experts at the United Nations, and what steps will be taken to call an immediate international conference on this matter which is of such vital concern to Atlantic Canada?

Hon. Jean-Pierre Côté (Minister of National Revenue): I will take this question as notice, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. John Lundrigan (Gander-Twillingate): Mr. Speaker, I have a number of supplementaries. This is an urgent matter, and I think there is a question of privilege here. There is no Acting Minister of Fisheries here today, although the friend of the minister fielded the question and the Parliamentary Secretary is not here. This situation is continuing day after day even though the minister is designated to be present. Here is an urgent matter of international importance and we have no one to answer for the government. This is very critical.

GRAIN

FINAL PAYMENTS ON DURUM WHEAT

Mr. Jack McIntosh (Swift Current-Maple Creek): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct my question to the Prime Minister. Pending government action in reply to questions asked earlier this week on this subject, will the Prime Minister have an Order in Council passed authorizing disbursement of the surplus in the Durum wheat account of the Canadian Wheat Board to the Durum producers, which apparently is prevented at present because of a technicality in the Canadian Wheat Board Act?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, this is a suggestion which I shall refer to the minister when he returns.

NATIONAL DEFENCE

REQUEST FOR STATEMENT ON BASE CONSOLIDATION

Mr. J. M. Forrestall (Dartmouth-Halifax East): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to my good friend, the Minister of National Defence. In his poetic way is he now prepared to give some indication when his report on base consolidation in Canada will be ready? I ask the question in light of the very serious and worsening situation at Fairey of Canada's plant at Eastern Passage.

Hon. Léo Cadieux (Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, as everybody knows there is not much left to be done in the way of base consolidation except the final consolidation of the report which will not be possible before the end of April.

Mr. Woolliams: Abolish many more and you won't have a job.

POST OFFICE

LIFTING OF FREEZE ON LETTER CARRIER DELIVERY

Mr. Thomas S. Barnett (Comox-Alberni): Mr. Speaker, I should like to address a question to the President of the Treasury Board on behalf of the Postmaster General in view of his statement to me yesterday. When will the freeze on the extension of letter carrier services across Canada be lifted so that the Postmaster General can supply these services to which communities are ordinarily entitled?

Hon. C. M. Drury (President of the Treasury Board): Mr. Speaker, I thank the hon. member for raising this matter on behalf of the Postmaster General. I shall be talking to him about it soon.

TRANSPORT

RAISING OF RAILWAY GRADE CROSSING FUND CEILING

Mr. Max Saltsman (Waterloo): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the Minister of Transport whether he has given consideration to the restrictive ceiling on applications to the railroad grade crossing fund being raised?

[Mr. McIntosh.]

Hon. Donald C. Jamieson (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, the whole matter of the railway grade crossing fund is being examined. The problem is that it would have to be raised from somewhere in the neighbourhood of $250,000 to $25 million and we are trying to find some other solution. I have had discussions with the province of Manitoba on this matter, and others will be forthcoming in a few weeks.

Mr. Saltsman: Mr. Speaker, a supplementary question. I wonder when the minister might be in a position to make an announcement as to the changes?

Mr. Jamieson: Mr. Speaker, it may be some time, and by that I mean a matter of a few months, because of the complexity of the problem. Because of the meetings held with the government of Manitoba last Monday, for example, there is a committee representing Manitoba and my department and also the office of the Minister without Portfolio in charge of housing. We are all looking at it in that context. I hope we can speed up the discussions but I do not want to hold out any hopes that it can come within days or weeks.

[Translation]

POLLUTION

LEGISLATION RESPECTING BIODEGRADABILITY OF DETERGENTS

Mr. Gilbert Rondeau (Shefford): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask a question of the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources.

Does he intend to introduce in 1970 legislation to compel detergent manufacturers to make biodegradable or non-polluting products that do not contain phosphates?

[English]

Hon. J. J. Greene (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, these products have already been made biodegradable by virtue of voluntary arrangements that were made some time ago with the phosphate manufacturers. Unfortunately, biodegradability has not solved the problem, so it is not the issue. With respect to the measures whereby we enforce the announcement I made this morning, this is under very active consideration and as stated in the announcement, I will be discussing the matter with my provincial counterparts to try to enlist their co-operation.

[Translation]

Mr. Rondeau: Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question.

Since the minister has stated that he would initiate discussions with some detergent manufacturers in the United States, could he not also consult them about marketing at this time entirely biodegradable products, which are the only ones allowed in some American states?

[English]

Mr. Greene: Again, Mr. Speaker, the Canadian product is already biodegradable. I do not intend to have further consultations with the manufacturers as I think I did everything I could usefully have done in this regard. As indicated, I think governmental action is required, not a voluntary method of discipline.

[Later:]

Mr. Thomas S. Barnett (Comox-Alberni): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a supplementary question to the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources on the matter of biodegradable detergents. Can the minister explain whether biodegradability applies only to non-phosphate components of detergents or also to phosphate components? I think this is an important question arising out of one asked earlier.

Mr. Greene: Mr. Speaker, I am not sure of the technical connotation of the question. It is my understanding that biodegradability was achieved by a voluntary process in which the companies co-operated some time ago. It was because of successes in that regard that I was encouraged to think that possibly we could achieve similar successes in the entire field of phosphates. The companies have taken the view that, (a) there is no substitute at the present and, (b) that the answer is to build or develop sewage disposal plants to clear up the phosphates rather than prevent their use, inasmuch as phosphates themselves are not harmful. They merely enable algae to live and grow. The companies feel that cleaning up after the use of phosphates would be the answer. I deemed, therefore, that I could not obtain the kind of co-operation with respect to phosphate control which had been obtained on the issue of biodegradability.

TRADE

REQUEST FOR SPECIAL EMPHASIS ON SALE OF DAIRY PRODUCTS

Mr. H. W. Danforth (Kent-Essex): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct my question to the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce. Based on the apparent success of his department in obtaining a larger part of the Japanese market for food on a commodity to commodity basis, would he now consider placing special emphasis on the sale of dairy products to alleviate the very serious problem here in Canada?

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): I will consider that, Mr. Speaker, in regard to Japan or any other areas. We try hard in all areas.

An hon. Member: Do your very best.

POWER

MINAS BASIN—PUBLICATION OF STUDY

Mr. J. M. Forrestall (Dartmouth-Halifax East): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources. Further to his indication to me a couple of weeks ago, could he now give some indication when the government might be receiving or be in a position to release the feasibility study on Minas Basin tidal power?

Hon. J. J. Greene (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, I understand the problem now is a question of printing. It is at that stage, in which case I think we should have it available very soon.

Mr. Forrestall: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Can the minister indicate if he or his department has made any decision on whether this report will be released?

Mr. Greene: Mr. Speaker, the report was made in conjunction with the provinces and that decision will have to be the subject of negotiation. Such decision at the negotiation table has not yet been made.

TRANSPORT

DEFENCE OF CTC RAILWAY COSTING FORMULA

Mr. R. R. Southam (Qu'Appelle-Moose Mountain): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Transport. The importance of this matter relates to the pending applications for rail line abandonments and more specifically as they affect western Canada. Can the minister advise the House what steps, if any, he has taken to defend the Canadian Transport Commission's costing formula before the Supreme Court of Canada?

Mr. Speaker: I wonder whether the question asked is in order. The hon. member is inviting the minister to make a statement about action that has been taken or not taken previously. In these circumstances I think this information should be given on motions or the question placed on the Order Paper.

Mr. Southam: Mr. Speaker, this question has been put to the minister on several occasions and he has advised the House that he would look into the matter. I think it is important that he should give us some statement on this very important matter.

Mr. Speaker: My suggestion was that the question be answered by way of a statement. The minister might indicate whether he proposes to make such a statement.

Hon. Donald C. Jamieson (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, at some time very soon I will make a statement indicating that the whole matter is very much under consideration.

POLLUTION

REGULATIONS RESPECTING OIL TANKERS IN TERRITORIAL WATERS

Hon. Robert L. Stanfield (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the Minister of Transport whether his or any other government department exercises any regulation over the entry of oil tankers into our territorial waters?

Hon. Donald C. Jamieson (Minister of Transport): Yes, Mr. Speaker. This was a matter discussed during debate a few days ago. There are limitations on our authority at the moment. As outlined, we are proposing improvements in the Canada Shipping Act. With the indulgence of the Speaker, may I give a report on the situation as it stands in Nova Scotia?

The Imperial Acadia is now on the scene. It now appears that the Arrow struck on its starboard bow and five forward starboard tanks are tidal out of 30 tanks. The engine room and boiler rooms are intact. The engine-room crew is back on board proceeding to get up steam in an attempt to refloat the vessel and also, if necessary, to transfer the oil to other ships which are now moving into the area. Little oil is escaping at the moment and the oil slick, about three miles long but very narrow, is thin and not visible from another boat.

The Department of National Defence is arranging to provide a heavy lift helicopter for ferrying salvage equipment if required.

[Mr. Speaker.]

Mr. Stanfield: I have a supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. I should like to ask the minister whether he meant to indicate that the authority of Canada is restricted now with regard to such regulations within our own territorial waters?

Mr. Jamieson: No, Mr. Speaker. Perhaps I did not answer the question as fully as I ought to have. The position is, in terms of accidental spills of one kind or another, that we have quite adequate controlling and remedial measures at our disposal. What we do not have, pending the outcome of the Brussels conference and an international agreement, is a means through which to attribute liability in the event of accidents of this kind; we do not have it specifically yet. I indicated to the House a few days ago that we would be introducing amendments to the Canada Shipping Act giving to us within those waters under Canada's control the same kind of authority as we were seeking internationally but which we failed to obtain in Brussels.

Mr. J. M. Forrestall (Dartmouth-Halifax East): A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Can the minister confirm reports that Imperial Oil, the owners of the cargo on board the Arrow, have now accepted full financial liability for any damage that may be caused?

Mr. Jamieson: I would have to investigate that, Mr. Speaker, but I can say that Imperial Oil is co-operating fully in the salvage operation. As long as weather conditions remain moderate there is no major threat, as of this moment at any rate.

TRAINING OF COASTGUARD MEMBERS TO ENFORCE STANDARDS

Mr. Thomas M. Bell (Saint John-Lancaster): Mr. Speaker, can the minister answer my question of January 29 which he took as notice? Are members of the coastguard being trained in anti-pollution work?

Hon. Donald C. Jamieson (Minister of Transport): Yes, Mr. Speaker, some training is being done of coastguard crews, but we find that it is more appropriate to have a group of skilled people who can be moved either by coastguard or by other vessels to locations such as the one referred to. At the present time, a marine industry salvage officer of the department is on the scene in Nova Scotia.

AIR CANADA

ABANDONMENT OF SHORT-RUN SERVICES—PROVISION OF INFORMATION TO OTHER AIRLINES

Mr. Jack Cullen (Sarnia): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the Minister of Transport? In view of the fact that Air Canada will abandon its short-run services, will the minister make representations to Air Canada to the end that information this airline has already given to some airlines wishing to apply to the Canadian Transport Commission for this business will be made available to all airlines which may be interested in securing this business?

Hon. Donald C. Jamieson (Minister of Transport): Yes, Mr. Speaker. I will be glad to make these representations to Air Canada.

THE CANADIAN ECONOMY

PRAIRIE PROVINCES—DISCUSSION AT FEDERAL-PROVINCIAL CONFERENCE OF PLANS FOR ASSISTANCE

Mr. John L. Skoberg (Moose Jaw): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the Prime Minister. In view of the desperate economic situation facing the western provinces at this time, will the Prime Minister indicate whether the government will reveal its plans for the assistance of the western agricultural economy at the forthcoming federal-provincial conference?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, some aspects of the economic situation in all parts of the country will naturally come under discussion. I cannot predict what the representations of the provinces will be and, therefore I cannot predict what position the government will take in response to them.

Mr. Skoberg: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Can the Prime Minister not say whether plans the federal government has prepared for the assistance of the west will be revealed at this conference? Will the government not do that instead of merely taking into consideration what the west is proposing?

Mr. Trudeau: Mr. Speaker, hon. members are asking me to show more respect for Parliament and not make such announcements elsewhere but to Parliament. I will answer his question by saying that I will very seriously consider that suggestion.

Inquiries of the Ministry

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

UNITED STATES ABM SYSTEM—METHOD OF EXPRESSING DISAPPROVAL

Mr. R. Gordon L. Fairweather (Fundy-Royal): Mr. Speaker, I have a question that has alarming implications for the Prime Minister. Are we to believe that caucus leaks are a credible substitute for quiet diplomacy, as attested to in today's Globe and Mail which deals with the anger of the right hon. gentleman—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I apologize to the hon. member if I appear to interrupt him, but from what I have heard of the question so far it appears that I would be justified in ruling that it is not in order.

Mr. Fairweather: Mr. Speaker, I have rephrased the question to meet this contingency. Are there not more effective and orthodox means of registering Canada's disapproval of the ABM Safeguard build-up than caucus leaks?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I have some doubts about the rephrased question. I will rephrase my ruling and say that the rephrased question is argumentative.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

SUPPLEMENTARY PENSIONS BENEFITS BILL

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the President of the Privy Council with reference to the business of the House. Inasmuch as the order paper, particularly so far as government orders are concerned, is becoming a bit thin, I wonder if the bills to be dealt with between now and Easter can be introduced and given first reading so that we can study them, and so that the new research people will have something to put their teeth into? In particular, and very seriously, may I ask if we may expect very early the bill on supplemental pension benefits which the government promised would be in effect by April?

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (President of the Privy Council): Yes, Mr. Speaker. If the hon. member will read the notice paper he will see that three bills have been added today. Several others on the list, as he may have noted, have been given first reading in the Senate. The bill to which the hon. member referred in particular will, I expect, be available for first reading very probably in the week after next.

Inquiries of the Ministry

LABOUR CONDITIONS

ST. JOHN'S, NFLD.—CLOSING OF PORT FACILITIES—REQUEST FOR REPORT ON MEETING WITH UNION

Mr. James A. McGrath (St. John's East): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the Minister of Transport. Is he in a position to report on meetings he has held with the International Longshoremen's Union in St. John's regarding the closing down of port facilities there by Canadian National and the resulting unemployment in that city?

Hon. Donald C. Jamieson (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, the vice-president, eastern region, of the CNR will be in Ottawa on Monday for discussions with me on this and a number of other related matters, including some referred to by the hon. member for Gander-Twillingate.

Mr. Mark Rose (Fraser Valley West): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a supplementary question to the Minister of Transport. Since the new president of the Newfoundland Board of Trade suggested yesterday that large numbers of citizens should move away from that province, has the minister, in consultation with his colleague, the Minister of Fisheries, considered any action to relocate the hon. members for St. John's East, St. John's West, Gander-Twillingate and Humber-St. George's-St. Barbe?

AIR TRANSPORT

CRASH IN BRITISH COLUMBIA—SEARCH AND RESCUE ACTIVITIES

Mr. Bruce Howard (Okanagan Boundary): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the Minister of National Defence. Since an aircraft has been missing for over a week in southern British Columbia can the minister tell us what our search and rescue people are doing to find it?

Hon. Léo Cadieux (Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, they are doing their very best to find it. Actually to date they have flown over 325 hours and covered 29,000 square miles of territory. We have three Albatrosses and two helicopters engaged in the search.

FEDERAL-PROVINCIAL RELATIONS

INCLUSION OF TRANSPORTATION AND FREIGHT RATES ON CONFERENCE AGENDA

Mr. John Burton (Regina East): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the Prime Minister? Has the right hon. gentleman given assurances to the western premiers that transportation and freight rate matters pertaining to the western economic situation will be placed on the agenda of the forthcoming federal-provincial conference?

[Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale).]

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Yes, Mr. Speaker, there was a request to that effect made to the secretariat and the government accepted the suggestion that such subject be discussed, but I am not quite sure whether all provinces will be prepared to proceed with it. However, if they wish to do so it can easily come under the first item on the agenda, under the heading pertaining to the economic situation. There has been, in other words, some discussion of this. We have agreed to discuss it but we are not sure when it will be brought up and in what form. I can say that we have not received any briefs on this matter.

ESTIMATES

INQUIRY AS TO PROBABLE DATE OF PRESENTATION

Hon. Robert L. Stanfield (Leader of the Opposition): I wish to ask the President of the Treasury Board whether he is in a position to tell the House when he will be bringing down his estimates?

Hon. C. M. Drury (President of the Treasury Board): I hope it will be next week, Mr. Speaker, mid-week.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

GREECE—PROTEST RESPECTING TORTURE OF PRISONERS

Mr. J. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa-Whitby): I wish to direct a question to the Prime Minister with reference to at least half a dozen questions I have directed to him and the Secretary of State for External Affairs. Does the government of Canada intend now or at any time to protest to the government of Greece the fact that it is systematically torturing political prisoners in its jails?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): I cannot add anything to the reply the Secretary of State for External Affairs has already made to this question, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Speaker: Orders of the day.

[Translation]

Mr. Clermont: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a question of privilege in the interest of all hon. members.

Mr. Speaker: Order. The hon. member for Gatineau (Mr. Clermont) on a question of privilege.

Mr. Clermont: Mr. Speaker, I have just learned that members of a certain political party who sit on the Committee on Finance, Trade and Economic Affairs have handed over their report on interest rates to members of the press gallery.

Mr. Speaker, I have received myself phone calls from certain members of the press gallery who wanted to know what was in the report I intend to table in the House as soon as I receive the French version. I refused to disclose such information because I thought it was my duty to present the report to the House as instructed on June 25 and October 30, 1969.

[English]

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

DOMINION COAL BOARD DISSOLUTION ACT

MEASURE TO DISSOLVE

Hon. J. J. Greene (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources) moved that Bill C-161, to provide for the dissolution of the Dominion Coal Board and for the repeal of the Canadian Coal Equality Act, the Coal Production Assistance Act and the Dominion Coal Board Act, be read the second time and referred to the Standing Committee on National Resources and Public Works.

Mr. R. J. Orange (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, in introducing this bill, I would like to pay tribute to the excellent work of the Dominion Coal Board over the past 20 years and more. Without their efforts, our coal industry would not now be able to respond quickly to take advantage of the new markets which are developing for this resource.

The Dominion Coal Board not only brought the industry through difficult times, but working along with the mines branch of the Department of Energy, Mines and Resources, it took the initiative in opening up the Japanese market to Canadian metallurgical coal.

In the development of this important market, the Board arranged for the technical assistance required to make Canadian coal acceptable, in large volumes, to the Japanese metallurgical industry. The Board also provided financial assistance, during this market development program, to enable Canadian coal to break into this market and achieve viability. These efforts of the Board have been successful because the coal industry is now in a position to undertake large, long term contracts on a strictly commercial basis and consequently the program of federal aid will terminate in 1970-71. The total value of the long term contracts with Japan is now approximately $2¼ billion. Consequently, the yearly value of coal exports to Japan will rise from the present level of about $15 million per year to $125 million in 1970-71 and to $180 million in 1972-73. By the mid-1970's, the value of coal exports to Japan alone is expected to reach $250 million per year. This will make coal one of the leading Canadian exports to Japan.

The Dominion Coal Board was established in 1947 on the recommendation of the 1946 Royal Commission on Coal, the Carroll Commission. It replaced the Dominion Fuel Board which had been established in 1922. That body was composed of federal public servants under the chairmanship of the deputy minister of mines. To replace it, the Carroll Commission recommended that "a statutory board be created with a full-time chairman to keep Canada's energy requirements under continuous review and to advise upon and administer transportation subventions."

Since then, however, there have been widespread and fundamental changes in the energy market, largely because of the enormous increase of discovered reserves of oil and gas in western Canada. There has also been, since 1947, an increased utilization of our hydro power potential. More recently nuclear power has started to supply some of our energy needs, although this new source has yet to make any real impact on our total energy picture.

In 1947, when the Dominion Coal Board Act was passed, coal supplied 59.3 per cent of our national energy requirements, so it is not surprising that special steps were taken to safeguard the continuing supply of a fuel so vital to our national needs. However, in 1968 coal supplied only 9.7 per cent of our energy needs, a tremendous drop from 59.3 per cent. Of this total, Canadian mined coal contributed only 3.3 per cent.

Today, then, coal is only one of a number of energy sources, and as I have mentioned, it has become a relatively minor one. Consequently, it no longer seems appropriate to maintain special legislation and a special administrative agency with respect to this one energy source. Instead, it seems far better to develop programs and policies for coal in the context of all energy sources.

I would like to say a few words about some of the more important responsibilities of the Dominion Coal Board, to indicate their present status. At the same time, Mr. Speaker, I can tell of the arrangements being made to discharge the Board's remaining responsibilities. One of its major assignments has been to administer coal subventions. Over the years since the Coal Board was formed we have moved away from subventions conceived as merely part of the freight rate. Instead, we have given financial assistance to reduce the laid-down cost of coal at the point of consumption, to meet competition from imported fuels. This change has contributed to a steep climb in the annual expenditure for coal subventions. This rose from $1.7 million in the fiscal year 1947-48 to $33.3 million in the fiscal year 1967-68.

Since the subvention system was first introduced in 1928, total payments have exceeded $320 million. These have been administered by the Dominion Coal Board and its predecessor, the Dominion Fuel Board. In the past, subventions have been very useful in marketing Canadian coal. But changes in the Canadian energy industry, particularly the diminishing relative importance of coal, have made the subvention concept obsolete.

The work of the Coal Board has also been reduced by the creation of the Cape Breton Development Corporation, and by Nova Scotia's acceptance of full responsibility for the smaller coal operations in that province. This reduced workload was predicted in 1966 by the Donald Report on the Cape Breton coal problem. This report also stated that "such duties as remain could be administered directly by the Department of Energy, Mines and Resources and the staff of the Board absorbed into that department". Toward this end, the Donald Report recommended that the Dominion Coal Board Act be "reviewed and assessed".

The coal policy agreement between Canada and Nova Scotia was signed on June 13, 1967. Under this agreement Nova Scotia accepts complete financial responsibility for such support of the smaller coal mines as it deems appropriate and necessary.

The act to establish the Cape Breton Development Corporation received royal assent on July 7, 1967. Devco is now operating the Cape Breton mines and related facilities of the Dosco group of companies on Cape Breton Island.

[Mr. Orange.]

The Coal Board's subvention work has also been reduced by an agreement between the federal government and the province of New Brunswick, concluded March 26, 1968. This ended subvention payments to coal producers in the Minto field. Instead, the province is receiving lump sump payments over a five year period, and now is responsible for rationalizing its coal mining industry and attracting new industry to the Minto area. The province was paid $2.8 million in the fiscal year 1968-69 and the agreement calls for another four annual payments of $4,050,000. As well, the federal government transferred to New Brunswick the rights of outstanding loans granted to coal producers in that province under the Coal Production Assistance Act. The value of these loans, as of transfer date, was approximately $513,000.

• (12:20 p.m.)

In western Canada, three major coal operators are receiving subventions for export movements, but all three have now completed long-term contracts for the export of coal to Japan on a completely commercial basis. Consequently, subvention assistance to one of these firms will end this coming March 31 and assistance to the other two will end on or before March 31, 1971.

Subvention assistance is also paid on smaller amounts of coal from Saskatchewan, Alberta and British Columbia shipped to markets in Manitoba and Ontario. Last year this assistance amounted to $252,000, but these subventions also terminate on March 31.

When the Dominion Coal Board is dissolved, the remaining administrative functions concerned with subventions will be relatively few. The residual functions will be transferred to the Department of Energy, Mines and Resources. However, the Board has responsibilities other than administering subventions. Section 6 of the Dominion Coal Board Act requires the board to advise the government on policies and measures related to the production, importation, distribution and use of coal in Canada. Section 7 of the Dominion Coal Board Act empowers it to undertake a wide range of research. This may be concerned with such matters as methods of mining and marketing coal and the competitive position of coal vis-à-vis other sources of energy. The Board has also served as a coordinating agency within government, between government and with the industry.

The dissolution of the Coal Board will not mean that these continuing and important functions will be neglected. On the contrary, now that we are phasing out subventions it is in our interest to devote more time and money to research. This work will go on with a full knowledge of the relative importance of coal in our total energy picture.

The Energy Sector of the Department of Energy, Mines and Resources is responsible for co-ordinating federal efforts related to all our energy sources and their utilization. It is therefore planned to attach the Coal Board staff to this section where their knowledge will complement the existing expertise in the fields of oil, gas, uranium and electrical energy. Within this energy sector, and through its ties with other parts of the department, our coal resources will receive continuing and close attention. This will allow their maximum use within a broad national policy which assures that each of our energy sources makes its most effective contribution to our economy.

The bill before us also calls for the withdrawal of the Coal Production Assistance Act and the Canadian Coal Equality Act, both of which are now administered by the Coal Board.

Now that Devco has been established and the coal policy agreement signed with Nova Scotia, there will no longer be a need for special mechanization loans to Nova Scotia coal producers. In New Brunswick the provincial government has accepted responsibility for the coal mines in that province. Meanwhile, the new large-scale export contracts with Japan have shown that the coal industry in western Canada can operate on a sound commercial basis without special loans or financial assistance. These are the reasons why the Coal Production Assistance Act is being withdrawn at this time.

During the 19 years that this Act has been in effect, 31 loans totalling $16.5 million have been made. Of this amount $10.5 million has gone to eastern producers and $6 million to western producers. Needless to say, coal operators whose loans are still outstanding will continue to make repayment.

Now that Devco, a Crown corporation, has taken over the production and marketing of coal in the Sydney area, there will no longer be any need of the Canadian Coal Equality Act. This act was passed in 1930 to aid the Dominion Iron and Steel Company works at Sydney. Under its terms a bounty of 49 cents a ton was paid on Canadian bituminous coal used to produce coke for the manufacture of iron and steel—that is to say, on Sydney area coal for the Dosco steel plant. During the 37 years this act has been in effect, payments have amounted to some $10 million. Devco will now set its coal prices at the levels needed to keep the markets it wishes to retain. And so, Mr. Speaker, the Canadian Coal Equality Act is being withdrawn.

At this point, I should like to pay tribute to the members of the Dominion Coal Board who served on the Board since its inception in 1949. I believe they have performed a service not only to the coal industry but to Canada. The Board membership was completely changed last July; it now consists entirely of senior officials of the Department of Energy, Mines and Resources.

In summary, the repeal of the Dominion Coal Board Act does not mean that the government has a lessened interest in our coal resources or in the social problems still affecting some segments of the coal mining industry. Rather, it means we must now deal with these problems on the basis of a new approach more appropriate to present-day conditions.

Mr. Stanfield: Would the Parliamentary Secretary permit a question? Can he tell the House whether agreement has been reached with the Dominion Coal Board or with the other Dosco subsidiaries regarding the price the government proposes to pay for the coal mines?

Mr. Orange: I gather that negotiations are still continuing in this regard. I am told there has been a meeting of minds and I am hopeful the question asked by the Leader of the Opposition will be answered very shortly.

Mr. R. Gordon L. Fairweather (Fundy-Royal): I shall not delay the House very long, Mr. Speaker. I rise to take part in this debate because the major effect of the legislation we are now considering will be felt in the Grand Lake area of the constituency I represent. I hope the plans of the New Brunswick government, which came about as a result of the grants to the Grand Lake Development Corporation, will do something to alleviate the grave anxiety felt for their future by many of the people who live in that area.

When the bill goes to committee I hope we shall be presented with a breakdown of the payments made not only to the government of New Brunswick but to various mines and individuals via the agency set up by the government of New Brunswick, that is, the Grand Lake Development Corporation.

Rationalization is, of course, current jargon quite acceptable to economists when they gather to plan the future of the country, but I plead that when we use such terms here we bring to them a great deal of understanding and sensitivity. Unless we are sensitive to the needs of individuals who have been displaced or who are about to be made redundant, to use another contemporary jargon term, very real hardship may result. Speaking personally, I have no real objection to the plans of the government, though I do take objection when they are so inflexible as not to show a great deal of sensitivity for the problems of miners and their families.

• (12:30 p.m.)

In summary, then, I plead for more humanity. I plead for full disclosure of plans, because this will in large measure allay the fears of people who have given the best of their lives in what is a very tough, dirty and hazardous job. Thirdly, I enter a caveat in connection with some information I have received. I am informed that the Grand Lake Development Corporation has a very large measure of patronage attached to it, and that a good deal of money is being directed toward certain people. This is very hard for the representative of a New Brunswick constituency to understand. Nevertheless, to have people driving around in half-ton trucks making inspections endangers the credibility of people in the future of the Grand Lake Development Corporation.

Lastly, I should like to share with the parliamentary secretary in the warm tribute paid to those members who have served the public interest as members of the Dominion Coal Board for many years. In particular, I should like to single out Mr. Percival Streeter, who has the good sense to live in the constituency of Fundy-Royal.

Mr. Randolph Harding (Kootenay West): Mr. Speaker, I too should like to say a few words about Bill C-161, which not only seeks to dissolve the Dominion Coal Board but also to repeal three acts relating to coal operations. We find in clause 4 the repeal of the Canadian Coal Equality Act, the Coal Production Assistance Act and the Dominion Coal Board Act. Personally, I feel the time has come to consolidate the work of the coal board within the Department of Energy, Mines and Resources, and I have no opposition to this bill in that respect.

I, too, would like to pay tribute to the members of the coal board who over the years have had a tough job to do. I think it is only right as this time that the members of this House recognize the job that they have done, and I believe have done well.

The Dominion Coal Board, as the parliamentary secretary has indicated, dealt with a variety of functions pertaining to coal. I think the primary function of the board was that of setting up and allocating subventions for the various coal mining areas of Canada. The parliamentary secretary has already referred to the amount of the subvention for the year 1967-68, which came to some $33 million.

Personally, I am pleased to see that one year from now most of the subventions, as far as British Columbia and most of the other provinces are concerned, will have disappeared. It is to be noted that the development of certain coal resources has become uneconomic. While subsidies were paid on each ton of coal mined, the number of employees in the industry meant that these subsidies reached as high as almost $3,000 per miner, which I think all will agree is very, very high. In other areas, the subsidy was well over $2,000 per miner. When you reach this stage you begin to wonder whether it is not time to take a look at the industry and see whether there is some other development that could be better served economically by payment of this type of subvention. I am not going to go into this particular question. I am still of the opinion that subventions might have to be continued in certain parts of the country. However, I note that the coal board will be attached to the department, and therefore the board will continue to look into this particular problem.

There are one or two matters I should like to draw to the attention of the House. It seems to me that when you dissolve a department whose whole outlook has been directed toward coal and coal problems you are apt to forget in its incorporation into some new department some of the very important functions that have been carried on, in this case by the coal board. One of these functions was the role played by the board in the setting of freight rates. The board was party to the negotiations between the coal and railway companies when the railway was hauling supplies of coal to various parts of Canada. The Board had to be in the picture. I hope that in the reorganization, if I may call it that, of the coal board this very important function is not going to be overlooked.

In this connection, I should like to spend a moment or two underscoring the need for taking a look at the important coal traffic problem in the Fernie area of British Columbia. Two of the big corporations with coal leases in the Fernie area have placed before the transport commission an application to build railway links hooking up with the Great Northern Railway in the United States for the purpose of transporting coal from this area over U.S. lines to the Pacific coast, and then back into Canada and up to Roberts Bank. I am 100 per cent opposed to this routing. The coal board had done a good job in getting the transport commission, the railways and the coal companies together to try to work out some kind of formula that would ensure that this coal was hauled over Canadian lines.

May I just put a few figures on the record to show how important this type of approach is. I submit it will be regrettable if the expertise of the coal board is thrown overboard with this transfer of duty. It is estimated that for every one million tons of coal hauled to the Pacific coast, $1.2 million is returned to the area by way of salaries, wages and other related employee benefits, such as pension funds and so forth.

• (12:40 p.m.)

We cannot afford to lose this revenue. Currently, the Canadian Pacific Railway has two contracts to haul coal involving some 5 million tons annually. This means some $6 million a year is returned to the community in the form of wages, salaries and related employee benefits. This just shows you the tremendous input which would be lost if we were stupid enough to allow these reserves from the Fernie area to be transported by another railway line to the Pacific Coast. I cannot express myself too forcefully on this particular matter. We have heard stories that the CPR could not handle the coal traffic from Fernie down to the coast. Mr. Speaker, this is utter rubbish. The CPR can handle many times the quantity of coal which is now being shipped. It could easily handle 20 million tons of coal a year and more without any trouble at all.

I trust that the department concerned, and the coal officials in the department, will make absolutely certain that we as Canadians do not allow this lucrative rail traffic to get away from a Canadian company. I do not want anyone to think I am here speaking on behalf of the CPR because I have given them a first class hammering on many occasions and they will get it again, for example, if they try to do away with our passenger service.

But when it comes to an issue of this nature, then I think we have every right to stand up and say that Canadian resources such as the coal resources in Fernie, should be transported, if at all possible, over an all-Canadian communications route to our seaports, if we have to export them. I just leave this thought with the parliamentary assistant and the minister. I can assure them they are going to hear lots about this in the committee stage because we are not going to drop this issue.

There is one other point I should like to raise in connection with coal. There have been talks about a pipeline to carry coal from the Fernie area to the Pacific Coast. Whether this is feasible or not, I do not know. Whether it is feasible in any part of Canada I do not know. The coal would go in the form of slurry. Again, I would suggest to the department that this is a problem which our research authorities could solve in so far as coal is concerned. Maybe this is another matter which should be looked into, because one of the drawbacks to the use of coal as energy today, Mr. Speaker, is the high cost of transportation. If it can be cut by methods such as this I think feasibility surveys and research should certainly be considered.

I am not going to say anything more, but I do trust that other members in the House, and especially in the committee, will do a lot of delving into the question about the transportation of coal resources, particularly from the Alberta and British Columbia areas, to the Pacific coast. I hope they will make absolutely certain that we retain this commodity for our own Canadian transportation system and keep the benefits which accrue to the economy from this transportation in our own nation.

Mr. Allen B. Sulatycky (Rocky Mountain): Thank you, Mr. Speaker. This bill provides for the dissolution of the Dominion Coal Board. It is not very often that a government, having created a board or agency, later sees fit to abolish it. Such bodies more often have a propensity to perpetuate themselves, regardless of whether the job they do is good or bad, or their existence necessary or unnecessary. The Dominion Coal Board is not being dissolved because it has not done its job. To the contrary it has fulfilled its role so successfully that, in the light of the vastly changing and changed energy demands, the functions of the board can now be carried on satisfactorily through ordinary departmental channels.

Dominion Coal Board Dissolution Act

When the Dominion Coal Board came into being in 1947, coal accounted for about 60 per cent of the energy sources in Canada. Today, it accounts for about 10 per cent. The foundation of the board resulted from the recommendations of the Royal Commission on Coal, composed of the hon. Mr. Justice W. F. Carroll, of Halifax, the chairman; the hon. Mr. Justice C. C. McLauren, Calgary, and Mr. Angus J. Morrison of Calgary. Commissioner Morrison, who was then Secretary Treasurer of district 18 of the United Mineworkers of America made a minority report and he was explicitly emphatic on the necessity of establishing a coal board. His report recommended that:

> A dominion government agency is needed to coordinate the administration of government activity relating to coal now handled by different departments; to undertake new research work with respect to both technical and marketing problems and to distribute information thereon.
>
> A large part of the work of the proposed Canadian Coal Board would deal with the expenditure of public funds and policy relating to such expenditure must be a responsibility of the government. The board would be an administrative and advisory body rather than a policy making body. It would therefore be appropriate to include upon it representatives of the coal mining industry, employers, employees, as well as of the dominion government.

As a result of that recommendation, the government acted quickly to set up the Dominion Coal Board.

It was not long after the coal board began functioning that the coal industry began to face its most critical test. Large scale discoveries of oil and gas in western Canada brought these energy sources into competition with coal, while in Nova Scotia extensive modernization requirements coupled with the competition from imported oil put extreme pressure on the industry. Particularly because of the grave situation in Nova Scotia, the board was asked to study the existing policy in 1953. The board's first recommendation to the government as a result of this study was that:

> The production of coal in Canada continue to be maintained at a level which would preserve the basic structure of the industry and permit rapid and efficient expansion to meet increasing future needs.

I submit that without this determined and foresighted attitude on the part of the board it is entirely possible that the Canadian coal industry could have succumbed. As it was, much of it did not die, particularly in western Canada. Following the oil and gas discoveries in Alberta, markets in western Canada commenced to deteriorate due to the dieselization programs of the railways, the greater use of fuel oil in industry and the building of a vast network of natural gas pipelines which soon covered all the cities and towns of western Canada. This resulted in the permanent closure during the 1950's of most of the bituminous mines, whose principal production was locomotive fuel, and most of the underground mines producing coal for domestic and commercial heating. The ultimate result was that, despite every effort made to assist them by way of subvention, 80 per cent of the mining operations in Alberta and British Columbia were forced to close permanently.

Because of the continuing difficulties faced by the coal industry, the government in 1959 appointed the Hon. Ivan C. Rand a royal commissioner to inquire into the problems relating to coal production. The report of Mr. Justice Rand was made in August, 1960 and amongst its recommendations was that the government cease assistance on the export of coal to Japan. The Dominion Coal Board, to its everlasting credit, reacted strongly in opposition to this recommendation. I am sure that many of the people who are today dependant on the coal industry in western Canada shudder to think what the future would hold for them if it were not for the strong reaction which the Dominion Coal Board took to this recommendation of the royal commission in 1960.

The board felt that such assistance for the export of coal to Japan should continue for at least two or three years, at the end of which time another assessment of the situation could be made. It was because of this insistence that the few western mines still operating were able to continue doing so on a limited scale. As far as the western coal industry is concerned, if the Dominion Coal Board did nothing else, it justified its existence merely by insuring the continuation of assistance to western mines exporting coal to Japan. This assistance was substantial and without it it is difficult to say whether the Alberta coal industry would be as sound as it is today. However, it is most likely that it would now be dormant rather than the thriving force it in fact is. This was ably pointed out by M. F. Clemmer of Kaiser Resources Ltd. at the last Canadian conference on coal when he said:

• (12:50 p.m.)

> The Canadian taxpayer subsidized the small amount of production that did take place just to keep the industry alive as he still does throughout Canada. Let me say that this last was extremely important, because if the industry had been allowed to die a natural death, it would have been doubly hard to bring it back to life—and that its resurgence might have been delayed much longer than it was. So there is very definitely something to say for keeping a function going even when it appears uneconomic if there is good reason for hope.

The fact that within the last five years the Alberta and Crowsnest coal industry has been rejuvenated as a result of huge export contracts with Japan, is history.

The development of this export business has been the result of a co-operative effort by the producers, the coal board, the mines branch and the federal government itself who, in spite of some doubts and misgivings, agreed to support the movement as long as it continued to show progress. This is one of the real success stories of the coal industry and the results thus far attained make the amounts expended on subvention assistance look very small indeed. A further bonus is that a greatly expanded export of Canadian coal to the western United States is likely to develop in future years so that the western bituminous coal industry now appears to have established itself on a solid basis for the foreseeable future.

The leadership shown by the board in finding stable markets for the western high rank coal presents a good example of the board's use of its intimate knowledge of and close contact with industry in guiding the latter from an uneconomic position to one of viability in its exports to Japan. Without the technical and financial assistance of the board with its specialized knowledge, it is doubtful that there would have been the same degree of success achieved in the development of this important export trade.

The board explored the potential and technical needs of the Japanese steel and gas industries. It suggested and guided a number of technical studies by the research arm of the Energy Mines and Resources Department. This included the implementation of its recommendation to establish in Canada a technical-scale coking coal evaluating facility.

Clearly, Mr. Speaker, the Dominion Coal Board has served its purpose very well.

I wish to turn briefly to the impact of some of the foregoing on my area of Alberta, in particular. I do so only because the full force of the operations of the Coal Board has been felt mainly in two regions, Cape Breton and the coal mining areas of the rocky mountain district. All these mountain coal mines are in my riding or immediately adjacent to it, so the significance of the impact is national in character.

Before the advent of oil and gas there were prosperous, boisterous communities throughout the Crowsnest Pass region and at Canmore within the Rocky Mountain riding. Towns such as Blairmore, Bellevue, Coleman, Frank, Hillcrest, Burmis, Cadomin, Robb and Canmore were well known because of the wealth that was brought out from under the ground by the people who lived and worked in them. Then, slowly at first, soon at a quickening pace, the mines started closing as a result of dieselization. The coal branch area became a series of ghost towns. In the Crowsnest Pass area, both in Alberta and British Columbia, communities also declined. The few mines which remained in operation, such as Canmore Mines Ltd. and the predecessors of the present Coleman Collieries Ltd., did so mainly because of the subvention payments made to support the sale of the products of these mines. These subventions were very impressive. Their total for Alberta and the Crowsnest Pass area is more than $60 million. They helped many miners retain their employment. They allowed many families to remain in the communities they loved and called home.

I had the great pleasure some months ago of visiting the mines at Canmore and going underground with the miners. I met many of them who had been working at this mine for thirty or forty years. They probably knew the rooms of the mine, as they are called, as well as most of us know the rooms of our houses. I know these men are very glad the government saw fit to continue the assistance to their mines so that they could continue to work at the jobs they knew best. The same applies to the miners in the Crowsnest Pass area. I recently was in this beautiful and historic region of western Canada and talked to many people regarding the coal industry there. I found that the people were pleased with the revival of the coal industry and optimistic about its future. They are proud of the fact that very soon their mines will be operating without any government financial assistance in the form of subventions, but they are also grateful that these subventions have kept their coal industry alive during its dark years so that there now is a future in the Crowsnest Pass area. Last year there were almost 500 people employed in the coal industry in the Crowsnest Pass area receiving wages of almost $3 million.

But it is not only in these long-time coal producing areas that the industry has been revived. It is also being extended to new areas. The coal branch deposits will again be mined and this is giving a great impetus to the nearby modern town of Hinton where most of the employees will be living. The most impressive development, however, is taking place around an entirely new mining operation, that of McIntyre Porcupine on the Smoky River some 300 miles northwest of Edmonton. There, an entirely new town,

Grande Cache, is being built to accommodate the employees of the new mine. It will be one of the most modern and scenic communities in the entire country. Within a few years it is expected to consist of about 5,000 people. The impact of this development, together with the revitalization of the coal branch, is being felt in almost all communities in the area, including the important towns of Hinton and Edson. All these foregoing developments are in large measure the result of the efforts and the foresight of the individuals who have served on the Dominion Coal Board and are tributes to these people.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is the House ready for the question?

Some hon. Members: Question.

Motion agreed to, bill read the second time and referred to the Standing Committee on National Resources and Public Works.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: It being one o'clock I do now leave the chair until 2 p.m.

At one o'clock the House took recess.

AFTER RECESS

The House resumed at 2 p.m.

[Translation]

ROUTINE PROCEEDINGS

FINANCE, TRADE AND ECONOMIC AFFAIRS

Mr. Gaston Clermont (Gatineau): Mr. Speaker, with leave of the house, I should like to revert to routine proceedings in order to table a committee report.

Mr. Speaker: Is this agreed?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Clermont: I have the honour to submit the tenth report of the Standing Committee on Finance, Trade and Economic Affairs, in French and in English.

[Editor's Note: Text of foregoing report appears in today's Votes and Proceedings.]

[English]

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

NUCLEAR LIABILITY

MEASURES RESPECTING CLAIMS FOR DAMAGES CAUSED BY ACCIDENTS

Hon. Léo Cadieux (for the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources) moved that Bill C-158, respecting civil liability for nuclear damage, be read the second time and referred to the Standing Committee on National Resources and Public Works.

Mr. R. J. Orange (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, the nuclear liability bill is intended to lay the basis for suitable financial protection against the consequences of accidents that may occur in the peaceful uses of nuclear energy, equipment and materials.

Like other industrial plants, nuclear reactors and other major nuclear installations may be subject to accidents involving injury to persons and damage to property. However, in the 27 years that have elapsed since the first reactor was operated, there has not been a single case anywhere in the world, as far as we are aware, of death or injury to health of a person outside a nuclear plant resulting from an accident in it. There has been no case in Canada, and only one abroad, of damage outside the plant property caused by such an accident. Moreover, waste materials from nuclear energy installations have not become objectionable pollutants in our rivers, lakes and atmosphere.

The good safety record of nuclear installations in Canada is partly due to the early provision of appropriate control legislation, establishment of suitable safety standards, and the introduction of adequate protective measures while the industry was still developing, as well as the careful safety review by the Atomic Energy Control Board before approving the design and licensing the operation of these installations. In other words, the legal nature of nuclear materials caused concern 20 or more years ago and action was taken at that time to ensure, not only public safety, but also the protection of our waters and other segments of our environment.

Had we as a nation, and possibly as a world, the concern about the pollution of our waters, our air and our surface then as we have today, and had we taken the effective steps at that time to control the situation, today we would not be facing as a world the serious dilemma we are facing at present in trying to improve and restore our environment.

In spite of the good record, it would be unrealistic to ignore the possibility of accidents causing personal injury and damage outside the boundaries of a plant. Nuclear installations differ from other industrial plants in that maloperation or malfunction may permit the release of radioactive material in quantities that might be hazardous to health outside the plant and cause contamination of property requiring costly decontamination or disposal. This fact raises a number of considerations which require special provisions in the bill.

Because the mention of radiation injury reminds us of the dreadful effects of nuclear weapons, it is important that we do not exaggerate the dangers from the use of peaceful nuclear installations and nuclear materials. It is physically impossible for a peaceful nuclear installation to explode with the violence of a nuclear weapon and produce such a powerful flash of radiation. Even apart from such unwarranted fears, the fear of being held liable for radiation injury could cause anxiety, for example, to manufacturers of equipment used in nuclear installations about the possibility of being exposed to exceptionally large damage claims. This bill, therefore, provides that each nuclear installation should have not only basic insurance but also subsidiary insurance that could provide, if necessary, for the highly improbable or almost inconceivable catastrophic event.

The need for protection of this kind has been recognized by other countries also. Canada is the only industrially important nation in the western world that has not yet enacted legislation to provide for it. The need in Canada has become more pressing since nuclear reactors are being constructed outside federally owned establishments.

• (2:10 p.m.)

Owing to the difficulties of establishing the contributory causes of a nuclear accident, and because some of its consequences may not be apparent for some time, a costly pyramiding of insurance, much litigation and interminable costly delays in settlement could easily result if unrestricted pursuit of damages were allowed. To meet these difficulties, the bill, resembling in this respect comparable legislation in other countries, would impose a duty on the operator to ensure that no injury or damage in Canada resulted from the operation of his installation. The operator would be absolutely liable for any breach of this duty without the claimant having to prove any fault or negligence. Financial responsibility would be channelled to one person, the operator, and subject to minor exceptions he would be the only one liable to third parties for injuries or damages.

The operator's financial responsibility would be limited to $75 million for any one nuclear incident. Toward this amount, the operator would be required to take out basic insurance with an approved insurer for an amount fixed by the Atomic Energy Control Board with the approval of Treasury Board. The amount of this basic insurance would be fixed after consideration of such things as the type and power of the reactor and its location in relation to population and to geographical features. This basic insurance might be quite small for, say, a research reactor of a well proven type. For large nuclear power stations it would probably approach the limit of commercially available insurance, understood to be about $25 million. Firm quotations for premium rates cannot, of course, be obtained until this bill has been passed, but on the basis of some figures suggested by insurers' representatives it would seem that the premiums should not unduly burden the industry. The terms and conditions of both the basic insurance, which would not be reinsured by the government, and the supplementary insurance, which would be reinsured, would require approval of the minister.

The difference between the amount of the basic insurance and the total of $75 million which is to be available for the protection of the public would be reinsured by the government under an agreement between the minister and the insurers approved by the Treasury Board. The bill provides that a fee may be charged for this supplementary insurance and the amount of this fee would be worked out with the Department of Finance.

If the claims exceeded the $75 million, Parliament could intervene to provide additional funds as it has in the past in cases of major disasters, and these funds would be administered under the terms of the act.

Due to the need for prompt relief in a nuclear incident of catastrophic proportions, the bill provides for setting up a Nuclear Damage Claims Commission when the circumstances warrant. This commission would have wide powers to determine and pay claims.

The bill provides also for compensation for injury or damage outside Canada where suitable reciprocal arrangements exist or have been made with another country.

At the present time, all operating nuclear reactors except one are the property of Atomic Energy of Canada Limited, and that crown company has agreed to indemnify all operators, suppliers and contractors against liability in the event of an accident in these reactors that is not due to gross negligence or wilful default of a senior officer of the operator. The one operating reactor not owned by AECL is a research reactor at McMaster University. Under an existing arrangement, it is indemnified by AECL against liability for claims in excess of $500,000 for which amount the university is required to carry insurance. This arrangement would be superseded by the application of this legislation. It is anticipated that the cost to the university would, if anything, be lower under this bill.

The bill provides that it shall not affect the operation of such things as employees' compensation, health and other insurance, and pension plans. Since the bill was introduced and received first reading in November last, it has been widely circulated among scientists, utilities and others concerned. To date, comments have indicated that the general principles of the bill are acceptable.

Mr. Speaker, as we move the bill to the Committee on National Resources and Public Works the committee will have an opportunity to examine some of the technicalities—basically I would say that the bill is a technical bill—and to provide assurances to the Canadian public that in the unlikely event of a catastrophe in the field of nuclear science there would be protection for the people of this country.

In conclusion, Mr. Speaker, I should like to pay tribute to the chairman of the Atomic Energy Control Board, Dr. Lawrence, and the former and still active legal adviser, Mr. Jarvis. Both gentlemen have been involved in the business of controlling and policing atomic energy uses in Canada. They have made a great contribution and I believe that we, as a Parliament, should recognize their contribution to our country.

Mr. Louis-Roland Comeau (South Western Nova): Mankind stands on the threshold of a new era. He is harnessing the greatest power known to man and beginning to turn it to his peaceful purposes. The potential peaceful purposes of nuclear power are immense. Indeed, the ultimate potential probably lies beyond man's limited imagination. Certainly, the most important of the present prospects is the generation of electricity.

The second half of the 1960's marks the time when the use of nuclear energy for the generation of electricity became a commercial reality after more than 20 years of research and development. In this achievement, Canada has been one of the pioneers. We owe a great debt to our scientists, researchers and nuclear administrators. Our dependence on nuclear energy for our supply of electricity is bound to increase. A recent study by the National Energy Board projected our energy demands to 1990. That demand will grow by over 6 per cent annually and it is forecast that nuclear installations will soon be providing about one-third of that requirement.

This harnessing of nuclear power is a double boon for mankind. The western world has suddenly awakened with a dreadful start to the pollution and corruption of its environment. Nuclear power will represent a positive step toward the control of air pollution since, unlike power stations using fossil fuels, they emit no fumes into the atmosphere. In fact, most industrial applications of nuclear energy cause little or no contamination of the environment. We will have to become very careful of what is being called thermal pollution. This is a general problem with thermal power stations but there appears to be a bigger threat from nuclear stations because of the greater heat discharge. When water drawn from adjacent rivers or lakes for cooling purposes is returned, it may disrupt the total ecology of aquatic life. We will have progressed very little, Mr. Speaker, if we simply stop killing our fish with phosphates to start killing them with heat.

However, mankind should be thankful that the advent of the peaceful use of nuclear energy is giving man another chance to come to a peaceful reconciliation with his environment. It is an opportunity we cannot afford to miss.

Nuclear power can be a great benefit to Canadians. Our first nuclear power station began producing in 1962 at Chalk River. Expansion has continued since then: Douglas Point on Lake Huron, Pickering, the Bruce plant at Douglas Point, Gentilly—these are the names of Canada's nuclear record. We have met numerable technological problems. Basic decisions have to be made with regard to the future orientation of our peaceful nuclear energy program. But today is not a time to dwell on these matters, however important they may be. The use of nuclear energy is spreading rapidly in our industries and universities. Transportation is another area of potential nuclear development.

• (2:20 p.m.)

The bill before us today, which I am sure will receive support from all parts of this House, relates to an important matter which I am sure is of general concern. We must insure that nuclear energy is a total benefit to mankind. We must make it safe. I hope, Mr. Speaker, that the provisions which are contained in this bill are never used. I hope we will never have a nuclear incident which could endanger the lives and surroundings of Canadian men, women and children. But we certainly must make provision against that unthinkable day.

We on this side of the House, therefore, welcome this bill. In general, we think it is a good bill, one obviously based on the experience gained from the operations of other Canadian claims commissions, especially the War Claims Commission. The provisions to do with ensuring absolute liability of the operator, the setting up of controls over the insurance carried by operators, and the establishment of the mechanism for possible claims commissions fill gaps in the Canadian law.

There are a number of points in the bill which I feel need very careful consideration by the committee. Four points in particular that I feel must be changed are as follows: First, there is a need for a review procedure. Clause 24, subclause 6, provides that a single member of the commission may hear and decide claims, and that his decision has the same effect as if it had been rendered by the entire commission. This is unacceptable in this form. There must be some procedure either in the legislation or in the administrative mechanisms of the commission which assures the right of appeal to every claimant. Only through such review can the uniformity of treatment which is the very essence of justice be preserved. Experiences of the War Claims Commission which operated during the 1950's must be instructive in this regard. I shall not belabour this point, but I submit it is something to which the committee will have to give serious consideration.

Second, unless the minister can come up with a good explanation, clause 28 will also have to be changed. As it reads now, the minister has the discretion to refuse to pay any claim awarded by the commission. No sensible, concerned minister would do so. However, I can see no good reason for leaving this discretion in the bill, and it is another point to which the committee must give its most serious consideration.

Third, perhaps the most serious point to be looked at with regard to this bill is the question of the setting of the limit of liability. Seventy-five million dollars is the limit set in the bill. The committee will have to look very hard at this figure and will have to cross-examine the minister and his officials very carefully to see what the basis was for the setting of this figure. A nuclear incident in one of our crowded cities could very conceivably cause damage to humans and surroundings which could exceed that figure. This fundamental principle must not be abridged; every person must receive full compensation for any injury or damage which is inflicted upon him. Human suffering cannot be repaid at 50 cents on the dollar. If this limit is not found adequate for every conceivable situation, then the committee must change it.

We have no reason to be complacent about the problems of regulating our nuclear activity. The recent problems which developed with the 3,000 megawatt Bruce Plant at Douglas Point are vivid illustrations of that. The belated shift of construction to avoid the risk of endangering the labour force with hydrogen sulphide emission is a clear signal that we must give more attention to the way we have been supervising the construction and operation of our nuclear installations. We cannot wait for a major mishap to stir us from our lethargy.

My fourth and last point is a small one, but it could be important. We must have an adequate explanation of subclause 4 of clause 34. As it reads this subclause gives wide, wide, power to the cabinet to amend the very legislation which we are passing. There may be some justification for having a leverage with which to negotiate reciprocal treatment of Canadians in foreign countries, but we must consider this section very carefully to guard against any abuse of it.

These four points I have mentioned are important and, as I have said each time, the committee must look at them carefully. But the general structure of the bill is good, and I must congratulate the minister on it. I only wish that the other bill he is presently involved with, the Canada water bill, could deserve similar applause.

Mr. Fairweather: The government gets a big zero for that bill.

Mr. Comeau: In rounding out my comments on this bill, Mr. Speaker, I should like to make this rather personal observation. This modern age continually forces us to think and talk about the "unthinkable". The catastrophe of loss of life and permanent injury of human bodies through a nuclear incident is one of those "unthinkables". As I said earlier, my sincerest hope is that the second part of this bill will never, never be used. And to insure that, Mr. Speaker, we must take a twofold approach to nuclear safety in Canada. This bill represents the second approach; the necessary but second approach. The first approach must be the most rigorous and vigilantly applied standards of operation, transit, and administration of our nuclear installations. Human safety of employees and the general public must be our primary concern. Only in this way will we ever realize my present hope that the provisions of this bill will never be used.

Mr. Mark Rose (Fraser Valley West): Mr. Speaker, our party does not wish to impede the progress of this bill to committee, where it will receive further consideration. May I point out in my introductory remarks that this bill, which was originally presented to the Liberal caucus as the nuclear hazards bill has now been brought in under the more comforting title of nuclear liability bill. I presume it was thus not as likely to frighten anybody. The parliamentary secretary attempted to play down the horror of a nuclear holocaust. In any event this bill, I feel, is enlightened in that it recognizes the growing use of fissionable material in Canada in industry, agriculture and medicine. We can expect the use of such material to grow in future. It will be a possible source of electrical energy. This, on one hand, may bring about improvements to our ecology but, on the other, harm our ecology. Possibly, the building of nuclear plants will make unnecessary large hydroelectric dams which block our rivers and desecrate large and beautiful valleys in different parts of rural Canada. Alternatively, the nuclear installations may raise the water temperature and, although that temperature may be adjusted only a few degrees by using river water to cool the plants, the whole spawning process of anadromous fish may be disrupted.

The bill looks forward to the time when nuclear power plants will drive ships, aeroplanes and perhaps even cars. It attempts to provide some measure of insurance protection against nuclear leaks or the failure of operators of nuclear installations to protect the public generally. From that point of view, the bill certainly is worth while.

I notice however, that under the definition of radioactive waste products, products to be used in medicine, agriculture and in commercial products are excluded from the provisions of the bill. I am disturbed by this omission. We are constantly learning that material we once thought to be non-toxic is toxic because of its cumulative effect. It is possible that the thousands of different and complex chemicals which are being put into our environment every day may, in the long run, cause us damage that, in the first instance, is not readily apparent. Certain chemicals, as is well known, build up in the body over a considerable period of time.

• (2:30 p.m.)

Consider problems associated with the uses of the drug thalidomide, pest control agents DDT and compounds of mercury, the latter being used on the prairies. These chemicals which formerly we thought were safe to use we now know, as the result of several years of experience, are not safe at all. I think the same thing might be said about nuclear material which will be used in medicine, agriculture and other parts of industry which we may not now feel has any toxicity but may, because of their build-up, lead to all kinds of horrors that at the moment we hesitate to contemplate. I think the public recognizes the horror of nuclear explosives. All over the world ban-the-bomb groups have marched to show their concern for the future of humanity. We are not dealing with some plaything when we are dealing with nuclear energy. But until recently only minor concern has been expressed over the threat to human survival on this planet if we fail to introduce bold anti-pollution measures. This is why I tend to be over-emphasizing my concern, so that it will be blatantly clear to anyone who will listen and read about this matter that the public is becoming alarmed at the dangers to its very survival.

Scientists tell us that we have just about one generation left to make a choice between a balanced ecology and disaster. Whether it is pollution disaster or nuclear disaster, it is really a Hobson's choice and the results will be the same. Since the public is becoming more aware and alarmed, it is getting to the point where a consensus is developing which will support strong and bold measures to protect the future existence of life on this planet.

I think there have been great and justifiable outcries about the underground testing of nuclear weapons, certainly over the testing in Amchitka in the Aleutian Islands last year. The proposed tests have raised considerable public concern not only in Canada, but in the United States, Japan and other parts of the world. Conservation groups are concerned as are seismologists about earthquakes. Even Governor Egan has expressed opposition to these tests on behalf of Alaska. Despite this, nuclear testing continues. It has not stopped, it has just gone underground.

We can now look forward to the detonation of an atomic test proposed to be three times as large as the original test last fall. A stupid and possibly devastating nuclear escalation is now going on through ABM and related underground tests. I think these tests pose a potentially greater threat than anything that could be covered by this bill.

While this bill is an important measure dealing with the peaceful uses of atomic material, there is nothing in it that accords the public any kind of protection for the kind of things that occur when we have underground bomb tests and other tests which go on from time to time. Our Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) made some stern remarks lately about the United States moves which are euphemistically called defensive measures. I hope Canada's stance will be much more stern than the last time. I asked the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Sharp) a question regarding Amchitka on July 15 and he did not get around to sending a note to the United States about this matter until September 19.

I notice this bill includes exemption from liability for damage caused during times of war. I can understand why no insurance company would be interested in providing this protection during times of war, but I wonder about the fact that the bill appears to neglect the possibility of mishaps in military installations where ground-to-air missiles or other like atomic weapons are stocked for defensive purposes. I think the committee should consider this particular matter. I think while war is one situation, a possible mistake or error causing unlimited damage by atomic weapons stored on Canadian soil is certainly a very serious matter for Canadians to consider.

I could go into a great deal of detail about the possible threats of radiation, fall-out and genetic adjustment concerning the island of Amchitka, but perhaps this is beyond the purview of this bill. While I would like to express it because it concerns me and many other Canadians very greatly, I will not trespass upon Your Honour's good humour and get into that discussion at this time.

I feel that Canada has had a very good safety record with the nuclear installations in this country. We have had no major disaster associated with these reactors. Since we have had no major disaster concerning nuclear and fissionable installations, I wonder why the insurance companies have been so reluctant to move into the protective field, and why it is necessary for the government to guarantee these insurance companies in the way it is planning to do in this bill. It seems if money were to be made and the risks were slight, this would be exactly the kind of situation into which the insurance companies would be delighted to move. Obviously, because the insurance companies have displayed reluctance up until now to get into this field, it has been necessary to produce a bill which would allow a limited liability backed by the government rather than an unlimited one.

This situation is closely paralleled by the oil spills on Canadian waters. As hon. members know, when we were considering the Canada Shipping Act, a subclause covering unlimited liability for such spills was taken out of the act on the grounds that no insurance company would cover all the damage caused by such a disaster. We are now faced with a potentially major disaster off Nova Scotia. Although the minister did assure me during the debate on the Canada Shipping Act that he would take this matter of unlimited liability to the international conference, which he did, the fact still remains that at the moment we have no real protection against the possibility of a commercial disaster of the proportions of the one which could possibly occur right now while I am speaking.

This may reflect the same kind of reasoning that is behind Bill C-158. It is because of the gargantuan costs involved in possible damages that no insurance company will cover them. In instances such as this a limited liability is imposed and the public must be responsible for any other remaining damage costs which result. The insurance companies will not cover this. They feel they cannot do so because the financial risks are too great. Whenever disasters of this kind take place the public, through taxes and other disaster measures are required to pick up the tab.

• (2:40 p.m.)

In case any hon. member feels there is no risk to atomic waste disposal, I wish to read a rather lengthy letter written to the editor of the Montreal Star recently by F. H. Knelman, chairman of the humanities of science, Sir George Williams University. It is headed: "The Peaceful Uses of Atomic Energy—Perils of Pollution must be Emphasized." Mr. Knelman is replying to a letter from Dean R. E. Bell of McGill, commenting on an article by Mr. Knelman "Myth of the Peaceful Atom".

Mr. Knelman, in his letter to the Star, takes up the specific points raised by Dean Bell. He writes:

1. Radiation Protection—The history of this issue offers so much support of my position, namely, the lag in the establishment of proper limits behind the total accumulated exposure from all sources, that it would require several issues of this newspaper to provide the evidence. After a dozen years of intense involvement in the issue of radiation hazards, I read Dean Bell's comments with a powerful sense of it all having happened before—the glib assurances of "tame" scientists and government atomic energy officials followed inevitably by the voluminous eating of their own words. I might paraphrase Dean Bell by stating that anyone who has the faintest knowledge of the subject couldn't possibly challenge my point. Ernest C. Tsivoglou, professor of sanitary engineering at Georgia Tech (chief of radiological water pollution control, U.S. Public Health Service, 1956 to 1966) has indicated that the International Commission on Radiological Protection (ICRP) constantly neglects both the problem of multiple sources and local conditions of high exposure. Moreover they ignore considerations of potential harm to lower organisms. Also they leave no reserve capacity for accident or expansion of radiation sources.

2. Water Pollution by Radioactive Substances—Here Mr. Bell reveals misquotation, misunderstanding and outright ecological ignorance. Let me cite some documented cases:

(a) A study of the Columbia River by Norman Lansdell revealed serious radioactive pollution and uptake by all forms of river life.

(b) Some radioactive isotopes from civil reactors such as Zinc 65 find their way into humans. Thus people in the Columbia River Valley have greater amounts of radiation in their systems than allowed for people in atomic energy installations.

(c) The fish kills and genetic mutations at White Oaks Lake, Tennessee as reported by Dr. Robert Pendleton of the University of Utah.

(d) A recent investigation found plankton in the ocean having radioactive levels 150,000 times that of the water. Dr. Lamont Cole, world famous ecologist at Cornell University, has argued that introduction of biologically active substances into the ocean could prove calamitous by destroying the diatoms which produce most of the earth's photosynthetic oxygen. Bell's supercillious, parenthetical date-dropping and public school posture just reflects his insensitivity to the hazards involved.

3. Thermal Pollution—there Bell once again reveals his ignorance. The fact that a coal fuelled power station can cause thermal pollution in no way detracts from the issue. Is Bell not aware of the Great Indian Point fish kill (Indian Point, N.Y.) or the Lake Cayuga controversy? A report by J. G. Terrill, Jr. to the American Society of Civil Engineers established that fossil fuel plants have thermal efficiencies about 1.5 times that of nuclear plants which therefore results in higher thermal pollution from the latter.

The letter continues at even greater length than I have quoted, Mr. Speaker. I shall not quote from it further. It goes on to indicate that we should be concerned not only about protection from possible atomic explosions, but also about the cumulative effects of radiation pollution.

I believe the committee, when it considers this subject, should propose amendments to the bill designed to prevent radioactive build-up, regulate transport of nuclear materials, and ensure that what has happened in the United States through neglect of such precautions does not happen in this country.

[Mr. Rose.]

Mr. Ray Perrault (Burnaby-Seymour): Mr. Speaker, I had the privilege of representing Canada at the United Nations during the recent session of the United Nations. After reviewing the report of the United Nations Scientific Committee on the effects of atomic radiation, and having listened to testimony at the United Nations I can only say there is no reason for complacency on the part of any of us.

Increasingly we are discovering that serious dangers are attached not only to nuclear testing in the atmosphere but to underground testing and even to minor, peaceful applications of nuclear power. The United Nations Scientific Committee studying the effects of atomic radiation was established in December of 1955. This marked the beginning of the kind of co-operation which I believe is required increasingly in this world. Here was a committee not concerned with ideological differences; it was not concerned with the battle between communism, capitalism or the other "isms" in the world. It was concerned with trying to save poor, battered mankind from making itself extinct. Argentina, Australia, Belgium, Brazil, Canada, Czechoslovakia, France, India, Japan, Mexico, Sweden, the Soviet Union, the United Arab Republic, Britain and the United States are among the nations which make up the Scientific Committee.

This must be one of the rare instances in the history of mankind when Soviet scientists sat down with United States, British and French scientists to decide what might be done to save mankind. This is what they have been doing. Today, I want to tell the House briefly some of the frightening evidence which has just come out. The terms of reference given the committee were as follows:

(a) To receive and assemble in an appropriate and useful form the following radiological information furnished by States Members of the United Nations or members of the specialized agencies:

(i) Reports on observed levels of ionizing radiation and radio-activity in the environment;

(ii) Reports on scientific observations and experiments relevant to the effects of ionizing radiation upon man and his environment already under way or later undertaken by national scientific bodies or by authorities of national governments;

(b) To recommend uniform standards with respect to procedures for sample collection and instrumentation and radiation counting procedures to be used in analyses of samples;

(c) To compile and assemble in an integrated manner the various reports, on observed radiological levels;

(d) To review and collate national reports, evaluating each report to determine its usefulness for the purposes of the committee;

(e) To make yearly progress reports and to develop by July 1, 1958, or earlier if the assembled facts warrant, a summary of the reports received on radiation levels and radiation effects on man and his environment and indications of research projects which might require further study;

(f) To transmit from time to time, as it deems appropriate, the documents and evaluations referred to above to the Secretary-General for publication and dissemination to States Members of the United Nations or members of the specialized agencies.

There is no secrecy in this field. Oh, there may be secrecy about the emplacement of ABM's or of Soviet missiles and the rest, but world scientists are sharing information relating to radiation in Iowa and Irkutsk, Desmoines and Minsk, centres in the United States and Liverpool over in England, and centres all over the world, and we have provided our quota of this information.

From 1955 to the present day there has been an admirable degree of co-operation between members of this committee and, indeed, between all members of the 126-member United Nations organization on this subject. The speaker who has just preceded me mentioned Amchitka. Many people harbour the thought that testing underground is a safe form of testing. This is a complete fallacy. I quote from the report of the World Scientific Community issued by the United Nations. On page 14 of the report reference is made to radiation levels in 1969:

• (2:50 p.m.)

Temporarily increased surface-air activities have been observed from time to time. The composition of the radioactive material suggests that it has originated from underground explosions.

There is also concern, and rightly so, about continued United States nuclear testing at Amchitka. We should make our position very clear on this point. We should also make it crystal clear that we are not concerned with criticizing one ideology or another. We should be just as stern and critical when talking to the Soviet Union about continued underground nuclear testing on Soviet territory. Such testing is a continuous threat to the whole world.

The report states that debris from nuclear tests in the atmosphere is still the major radioactive man-made contaminant of the environment. The report continues:

Small amounts of radioactive material have leaked from a few underground tests, and the crash of an aeroplane carrying nuclear weapons resulted in a localized contamination by plutonium-239 off the coast of northern Greenland in January 1968.

That instance did not result from an atmospheric test. We do not have to be concerned about the effects of radiation from peaceful uses of atomic energy.

What else did we learn from this discussion of radiation levels? We have learned that brain damage has resulted from radiation exposure in the case of unborn babies. As a result of this, safeguards to prevent exposure are increasingly being improved; nevertheless such radiation has done a great deal of damage and affected a great many lives.

What else have we learned from this report? I should like to make reference to paragraph 10 on page 5, which deals with a matter that relates not to atmospheric testing or underground military testing. The report reads:

That severe damage to the nervous system can be induced in man also is shown by a number of observations of children born to mothers irradiated for medical reasons during pregnancy. Doses are unknown but are believed to have been high. A number of cases of reduction of head size, often accompanied by severe mental retardation, have been reported among these children as a result of irradiation from the second through the sixth month of intra-uterine life. However, contrary to what animal experiments would lead one to expect, major structural changes of the nervous system have seldom been observed, perhaps because these would be incompatible with sufficiently long survival of the human embryo for the damage to be detected at birth.

This radiation resulted from the peaceful use of atomic energy, and that is why I suggest this is one of the most important bills to come before the House in years. The report continues:

In children, on the other hand, the evidence suggests that, at least with regard to the induction of malignancies, the nervous tissue might be about as susceptible as other tissues such as the thyroid and blood-forming tissues. It is, however, in the pre-natal period that the vulnerability of the nervous system is highest. There is clear evidence that, from the second to the sixth month of pre-natal life, doses from 50 rads onwards are associated with increases in mental retardation and microcephaly. Evidence on the effects of lower doses during this same period of pre-natal life is still extremely tenuous and does not permit exclusion of the possibility that increased incidence of the same effects may be a result of exposure in this lower range.

It is said that we must fight pollution today at all levels—pollution of our soil, our air and our water. And so we do, Mr. Speaker. But we also have a threat posed by nuclear pollution, and all of mankind is affected by that threat, regardless of ideology.

According to page 9 of the report, exposure to radiation may result in an increase in the number of chromosomal aberrations. These aberrations are clearly of genetic importance and may in fact comprise the major component of the genetic damage resulting from radiation exposure. Scientists of the world are working feverishly to check the findings gathered thus far, which indicate that the very chromosomes which decide the future genetics of mankind and the ability of man to survive are affected by nuclear testing.

I do not claim, nor does anybody else on the government side claim, that this was a Liberal inspiration because I am sure all Canadians give their support, but I am proud to say that at the United Nations Canada has acquired the reputation of being the nation that presents the resolution dealing with the continuation of scientific testing of nuclear levels throughout the world. This year Canada again moved a similar resolution, supported by Czechoslovakia. Although there may be some disheartening moments at the international level, when a Canadian resolution is supported by Czechoslovakia, the United States, the U.S.S.R., South Africa, Israel, Great Britain, France and all the rest of the nations, it is an indication that Canada is taking an initiative which mankind believes to be useful. We believe that in its 14 years of existence this committee of world scientists has conscientiously discharged its responsibilities. During this same period the world has experienced a rapid and alarming rise in radiation levels, happily followed by a substantial reduction as a result of the partial test ban treaty of 1963.

However, nuclear tests, be they atmospheric or underground are, I repeat, far from being the only source of radiation to which the world population is exposed. As the report to which I referred indicates, the peaceful application of nuclear energy, valuable though it is, carries with it a constant hazard. As these uses grow and spread, the importance of continued monitoring and the interpretation of contamination data will assume even more significant dimensions. In his speech to world scientists on May 7, 1969 the Secretary General referred to the assistance that the nations of the world derive from these scientific reports. He expressed the concern of all mankind when he stressed the importance of measures to deal with environmental radiation and its dangers.

There is one difficulty with this report that has been issued on the dangers inherent in military and even peaceful applications of atomic energy. That difficulty is that the report is a highly scientific document which it is difficult for people generally to understand. If the masses of the world were to understand what the scientists of the world were trying to tell them about the dangers of radiation, then they would be just as alarmed about nuclear pollution as they have now become alarmed about pollution of their water, air and the rest of the environment in this biosphere.

Next year the scientific committee will issue a popular pamphlet. The final chapter of this scientific report will be written in layman's language. I hope that a good journalist with a scientific background will write that chapter. A couple of members of this House have experience in that field. The report should be made available to every Canadian, hopefully to every resident of the world. In this way will they understand the dangers which are an inherent part of the scientific advances that have been made.

The report that the scientific committee has just completed represents a continuation of its previous activities. As I have already said, the Canadian resolution had the unanimous support of all nations at the United Nations. Another scientific report will be published next year and the scientific committee will be carrying on its work.

The importance and rapid development of three subjects critically reviewed by the committee, namely radiation carcinogenesis in man, the genetic risks of ionizing radiation and radiation-induced chromosome anomalies in man, will mean that they must be reviewed even more intensively during the coming 12 months and another report issued.

• (3:00 p.m.)

We said at the United Nations that we are confident that in the discharge of the full range of its responsibilities with respect to the levels of radiation to which the world population is or may become exposed, involving careful assessments of a wide range of data, the committee of scientists will continue to perform the excellent service we have come to expect of it.

I wanted to rise and express my support for Bill C-158 and to urge at the same time that this government not stop here, but continue its efforts at the international and at the national level to protect the citizens of the world and the citizens of this nation against nuclear pollution wherever it may occur.

Mr. Barry Mather (Surrey): Mr. Speaker, I rise not to make a speech but to ask a question. As I understand the bill which we are discussing, it would fix compensation for persons injured as a result of the peaceful use of nuclear energy. I think I am right in saying that. The parliamentary secretary to the minister in introducing this measure was at some pains to point out the unlikelihood of any such loss or damage, and the fact that it would be very small or almost negligible.

Having this in mind, I wonder whether the government, which has given so much consideration to fixing compensation in respect of people who very likely will not be injured, has considered providing compensation for those Canadians who are in more immediate danger of suffering loss as a result of the impending nuclear underground explosion to be conducted by our friends to the south, in the North Pacific within the next few months. I raise this question now because it will be recalled that last year, when a similar but much smaller test was undertaken, our government told Washington that it would hold the United States responsible for damage incurred by our citizens as the result of that test.

I thought it would be timely today—although it has nothing to do specifically with this measure—to ask the representative of the minister to accept this as a question which he might raise with the government. Inasmuch as we are going to provide some protection for civilians in respect of damage resulting from the peaceful use of nuclear energy, we in this group think it is much more timely to act to protect citizens who are in potential danger from this impending, very massive nuclear blast in the North Pacific.

I agree with the speaker who has just concluded his remarks, that Canada is playing an important role in seeking to bring about between the United States and the U.S.S.R. a test ban treaty on underground explosions. I hope that in line with general protection for civilians which the government has in mind, this effort will be stepped-up.

Motion agreed to, bill read the second time and referred to the Standing Committee on National Resources and Public Works.

[Translation]

CRIMINAL RECORDS

PROVISION FOR RELIEF OF CONVICTED PERSONS

The House resumed, from February 5, consideration of the motion of the Solicitor General of Canada that Bill C-5, to provide for the relief of persons who have been convicted of offences and have subsequently rehabilitated themselves, be read the second time and referred to the Standing Committee on Justice and Legal Affairs.

[English]

Mr. F. J. Bigg (Pembina): Mr. Speaker, we have Bill C-5 before us. It is an important measure, and if it is not carefully considered in the House and by the committee it may have very serious consequences to the welfare of Canada both as it affects the individual members of our society and the nation as a whole. At first view it may appear innocent enough, but for those who do not know what Bill C-5 is all about let me say it is an act to provide for the relief of persons who have been convicted of offences and have subsequently rehabilitated themselves. If we take the last part first, as a humanitarian and a person raised in the Christian ethic I would be the first to say let us destroy all criminal records and start anew. Unfortunately, those people who may find themselves responsible for making this decision do not have very many of the facts at their disposal.

This matter might be fairly simple in the case of a juvenile. We have had some very commendable suggestions both by the committee and in the House, that when the offender is a juvenile and becomes of age the sins of his youth should be largely forgiven. I go along with that provided of course, he has been rehabilitated. I agree with the last speaker that nobody wants to see a child of tender years carry a criminal record for the rest of his life after he has reached the age of discretion. This is particularly true if the mild correction he received from society had the desired effect and there is no real danger of his again breaking the law. We must have very firm guidelines.

As we learn more about penal psychology, which is the subject we are discussing, we find that in our genes inherited from our ancestors there are weaknesses or weak tendencies which do not necessarily have an effect upon character in so far as criminal make-up is concerned. Unfortunately, this relates to the behaviour pattern of the child or grown-up in society. We have to be very careful to separate, outline and define what we are talking about—a person's character or the mathematical chance, if you like to put it that way, of a recurrence of a very serious crime. I do not think we should be carried away by our sentiments, certainly not to any unlimited degree, in suggesting that we wipe the slate clean.

As I always attempt to do, I shall cite a number of cases other than personal ones in respect of which I think everybody would agree that we cannot wipe the slate clean. Let us consider a case where the prison psychologist or doctor is consulted before an individual is convicted of a sex offence, in order to determine whether the individual is in fact in his right mind. Such an individual, according to the prison psychologist or doctor, may not be dangerous in that he will necessarily repeat the offence. If that individual's behaviour was so abnormal, even in our permissive society, that he attacked another child or grown-up, the chances are that short of a miracle he will at some time in his life repeat the offence.

I remember one terrible case that occurred in the city of Winnipeg, I believe back in 1945. A small boy was murdered in a coal yard. I was not in the police force at that time, but the Winnipeg city police told me, as one who lived in the district where the offence occurred and as an ex-policeman who was trying to help solve the crime, that they had 300 deviates in their records and any one of them might have committed this offence. It was commendable that they went to the trouble of checking each one of these 300 people. They did not find the criminal among them; he was located in another urban centre. I understand he was found because the police did their work in checking all those persons who were capable of committing the offence and had done this sort of thing before, whether to a child or an adult. The police were able to come up with a solution to the crime.

• (3:10 p.m.)

If we are to wipe out the records of offenders, they should receive forgiveness and an opportunity to rehabilitate themselves. This is not only a Christian but a sensible approach, if these people are to be rehabilitated. I believe the chairman of the committee said there is great economic advantage to society in these people not being hounded for the rest of their lives by an overactive police force or ambitious members of a law enforcement body. Again, that is not to suggest that all offenders should be given carte blanche; nor does it suggest that because we have forgiveness in our hearts, the forgiveness should go to the point of wiping out all criminal records after an arbitrary five-year period.

There is also the situation in respect of the security of Canada involving a person who may have been actively engaged in a serious riot, subversive activity or violence toward a person or society. It might well be that such a person, having done his dirty work in Canada, would move to another country where the labour situation seemed ripe for the same kind of unrest, and after a period of five years when what he had done had been forgotten, he would come back and do it again.

Another point made during the committee hearings was that it is almost impossible to destroy records. One might think of the story about the small boy whose mother had a system of recording his small crimes by driving a nail in the wall every time he did something wrong. Pretty soon there were a number of nails in the wall. Then after the boy had a change of heart and began to fill the wood box or attend to his school work properly, his mother would pull out a nail until eventually there were none and he became well adjusted.

One day he came to his mother and told her he was not feeling very well. She asked him what was wrong. He told her that although she had pulled out all the nails, the holes were still in the wall. So I suggest when a person has committed a series of offences, or an offence, it is difficult for a policeman to forget that perhaps such a person had stolen a car in his youth. But it is equally true that by far the largest number of good policemen do forget, at least to the point that the person is forgiven. Policemen are not out to destroy the life of a young man. As a matter of fact, most policemen I have met I am proud to say have spent a great deal more time attempting to keep young people out of trouble than bringing them before the courts.

I hope that after a little more tailoring has been done to the bill, and a little more thought has been given to it, it will pass. I hope it will go a long way toward removing any chance of the persecution of people who have seen the light. If there is any way in which this can be done, it will certainly have my support and, I am sure, the support of every member of this House. But I suggest that we should not necessarily destroy all criminal records merely because those of us who are more adjusted in society believe a criminal should get a break.

There is another very important point to keep in mind. I refer to the protection of society. I could go so far as to say that one protection we have is by making sure that the criminal is not mollycoddled or treated too well, because the fact that he has a record may encourage him not to make it any worse.

In matters concerning the security of Canada I have no hesitation in saying that when a person has proven himself to be an enemy of society, some permanent record should be kept in the event that in the future he may endanger a citizen or Canada as a whole. Having served in the force myself, I am pleased to see that "commissioner" in the bill refers to a commissioner of the Royal Canadian Mounted Police. I think that permanent records such as those kept at the headquarters of the Royal Canadian Mounted Police would not be abused.

In cases where it is thought by the Solicitor General, the Attorney General of Canada or the Governor in Council that the person is dangerous, a permanent record should certainly be kept. I cannot imagine a safer place than the headquarters of our highly respected and responsible force. This is a great responsibility and I know that in the past responsibility has been undertaken with great decorum. I hope we never lose the feeling of satisfaction we have with the way this force has carried out its duties.

Because the treatment of our police in general has been somewhat severe in recent years, and because I am afraid there has been almost a campaign against the police, I suggest that we do not spend sufficient money to make sure that we have proper law enforcement officers across this nation. From my own experience I would suggest several things might be done. One would be to have a series of police colleges across Canada at which policemen who come in contact with members of the public in respect of law enforcement would have an opportunity to be properly trained. I believe we should take a broader view in respect of this whole problem and decide to spend the necessary money on training our police officers.

I would refer to the unfortunate incident which was recently reported in the newspapers involving an official of the British Columbia government who was manhandled. I shall not pass judgment on this incident, but from what I have read it would appear to be the type of incident which should not occur anywhere in the world and certainly not in Canada. I am sure this type of incident could be prevented if we had a proper school and screening for our law enforcement officers.

The type of police college I have in mind would be available to police officers preferably before they go out on the beat. At the colleges these persons would have instilled in them the spirit of police work and their duties would be outlined. This would involve the expenditure of a certain amount of money, but the money would be an investment not only in respect of the prevention of crime but in terms of the respect all citizens would have for law and order.

• (3:20 p.m.)

Revenge has largely gone out of our law. We have come a long way in the last 150 years when under the British law and our tradition at least 120 offences carried capital punishment. We thought nothing of sending our young men and women as far away as we could from their own country to prison camps in Australia for offences such as stealing a sheep, or in some cases for being suspected of stealing a sheep. It was a corrupt law, but we have come a long way since then.

However, I enter my plea that we must not become so soft that all our attentions are directed at making things soft for the criminal. We still have to protect society. We must not become so broadminded that our brains fall out. I am sometimes accused of being a little emotional, but I do not think this is one of the areas in which we can afford to be mere flag-raisers. I think that the protection of society is as important as the humanitarian treatment of the offender. Our security and the protection of past offenders is our main duty here.

I cannot possibly cover the whole question of rehabilitation in the short time that I have at my disposal. I agree with those who have said that it is no good putting our young people out of circulation unless we intend to do something positive for them. Revenge is out, and rehabilitation is expensive. It costs a lot of money to bring a boy back after he has started on the wrong road. I am not one who underrates rehabilitation, but I want to harp once more on an old and favourite belief of mine. The cost of rehabilitation can be cut down a great deal by taking another, very positive step, that is, by giving these young people proper guidance before they commit their first offence. Let us spend more money on physical fitness programs, backyard baseball and community efforts of the family, thus eradicating the need for rehabilitation after the event. The prevention of crime pays us off a hundredfold. The John Howard and Elizabeth Fry Societies have done noble work with limited funds and in the limited atmosphere in which they work.

Before I sit down I should like to make one more suggestion. In the treatment of criminals—and I use that word in a charitable sense, meaning people who have broken the law or who have been caught breaking the law—we should ensure that we keep in mind, first, when they come to court the importance of treating them like gentlemen or young ladies. Let us show them for the first time what their duty is to us, by the way we treat them. Let us make sure that our jails are not places of punishment but places of rehabilitation; I do not mean places where they run the jail, but jails which are fit for human beings. Instead of taking a boy out of a more or less innocent group of petty offenders on the street corner and putting him into jail for a long time among hardened criminals, where he has nothing to do but learn worse habits than he had before, let us rehabilitate him. This, again, will require the spending of a lot of our hard-earned money on well-planned and properly built places of incarceration.

We must encourage lawyers to not only exert themselves to win cases but to win back to society the men they have in their care, and to convince their clients that they should not perjure themselves and compound the felony. A young man who has only stolen a bicycle is now taught that if he lies convincingly he may be acquitted, or if he robs a bank he may be able to buy justice. I think that our trained professional men have to take another look at their profession and realize that they not only have a duty to protect young offenders but they must try to get these young men back on the rails as soon as possible.

My view is that hard and cruel sentences never did anybody any good. I venture to suggest that a young man going to jail suffers the greatest shock in the first 48 hours in jail. If you are ever to impress them that this is not the right environment for them, that is the time to do it. If being locked in a steel cage for 48 hours does not impress a young man with any pride or decency in him, he is a difficult case. I do not suggest that he should be sprung immediately. Perhaps he needs more time to think things over. I suggest that in a great many cases the sentences should be indeterminate. The offender should be taken immediately out of circulation and his rehabilitation should be started shortly after his arrest, not five or seven years later when it is far too late. His rehabilitation should start almost as soon as he is arrested, and he should be given fair treatment but not more than he is allowed.

Mr. Gibson: Let us first make sure that he is guilty.

Mr. Bigg: That is another point. My experience is that there are very few innocent people languishing in jail. If there were, I would be willing to take time off from the House of Commons to defend them. I am a lawyer as well as a tired, old policeman. I do not think there are many innocent people languishing in jail, but from my own experience I believe an indeterminate sentence would do the most good once a man has been convicted and put in a steel tank.

Once a man demonstrates that he has seen the error of his ways and is ready to co-operate, he might be given an indeterminate sentence. Then he could get out on parole almost immediately, particularly in the case of the first offender and the young offender. He could be put in the charge of someone from the John Howard or Elizabeth Fry Societies who will arrange for him a good, clean, satisfactory environment under control while on parole. This would give him time to rehabilitate himself, before there is talk of wiping out his record. Let us not concentrate on wiping out the record but, rather, as one of my hecklers pointed out so well, let us first make sure whether he is guilty. I was assuming that under our law he would be found guilty before he got as far as jail.

Let us ensure that the rehabilitation of an offender is started right away, instead of putting him in an environment much worse than the one in which he was when he committed a petty offence. The atmosphere in any jail that I have seen—and I have seen a good many of them—is not conductive to the formation of a better character and the longer you leave these young offenders there, the worse they are likely to be. We should adopt a common sense approach. On the other hand,

I do not think that coddling these people will make them into nice little boys, telling them that they did nothing wrong and society is the real offender, or that he would have been a nice fellow if his mother had loved him more and allowed him to have his own way. In a great many cases a boy has a much better chance of making something of himself if he is not given his own way and if society treats him fairly and firmly and starts him on the road back. This is where we should concentrate our efforts.

I hope this bill will be taken back to committee. There we will take a close look at it to ensure that we are not just using the whitewash brush, and that where serious cases are involved and the security of individuals or of the realm is to be protected, we will not be sentimental and do a big whitewash, erasing job. On the other hand, criminal records should not be abused. If we are doing this because of police brutality, I say we are working at the wrong end. We should improve the standard of our police force, because that is where the trouble lies. Presumably, if the right people are in charge of records no offender would have any complaint about the way he is treated in our Canadian society.

• (3:30 p.m.)

Mrs. Grace MacInnis (Vancouver-Kingsway): Mr. Speaker, it has become apparent during the course of the debate that practically everyone in this chamber is in favour of the general principle of this bill. I have no intention of going over that general ground because at this stage almost everything has been said not once but many times. I believe we all feel it has contributed quite a bit to straightening our thinking to have the bill in this form of granting a respite or a second chance to people, rather than trying to expunge records. I do not think it is conducive to straight-thinking to suggest that the past can ever be wiped out. It cannot be. As Omar Khayyam said:

The moving finger writes; and, having writ,
Moves on: nor all your piety nor wit
Shall lure it back to cancel half a line
Nor all your tears wash out a word of it.

The past is gone; yet its memory is still there. What this bill is trying to do is wipe out the possibilities of persecution once people have been rehabilitated and returned to society. There is one point which I have not heard discussed in this debate. I hope the Solicitor General (Mr. McIlraith) will listen carefully, and perhaps when he replies he will give me an answer to my question. The bill itself has gone far to straighten out our thinking on this matter, but there is still one point which is just not logical to me and that is the whole idea of a pardon.

If a person has committed an offence, if he has served his sentence and made restitution to society as far as he is able, he has paid his debt to society and that should be finished. I am not a lawyer but as a lay person I feel it is not logical to talk in terms of a pardon when the debt has already been paid. I can understand one saying that a person is rehabilitated, gets a second chance or that the slate is wiped clean, but for the life of me I cannot understand why he should have to ask for a pardon when he has already committed the sin and has been convicted and sentenced. Apparently he has paid his debt to society.

This may be a small point, but every time I have looked over the bill I wonder why we think in terms of a pardon. The man is not coming up for a pardon he is coming up to make sure that there will not be any discrimination when he starts afresh in society, that he will not be discriminated against because of his past.

That is all I want to say on this bill, Mr. Speaker. I should like to hear the reasoning of the minister as to why he talks in terms of a pardon. Maybe it is legal language that I do not understand. Goodness knows, there is a great deal of legal language that does not make sense even to lawyers.

I see the minister is now interested to the point that he will try to tell me what was in his mind when he talked about pardon. The only pardon I know of is one in connection with a crime when a person has committed a murder or a serious offence and is granted a pardon, so that the sentence is not executed against him. But in this case he has served a sentence and paid a penalty for his crime, so it is a pardon for what? It is not a pardon for his offence; he had paid for that. I would be extremely glad to know the reason for this, if the minister would be so gracious as to explain it.

I wish this bill well. I believe all of us in this corner of the House and in the chamber generally think this is a real attempt to give a person a fresh start and treat him like a human being instead of a second-class citizen for the rest of his life, and someone to be persecuted and made into a pariah. I will now resume my seat, Mr. Speaker. I hope the bill will have reasonably swift passage through the committee and back to this House.

[Translation]

Mr. René Matte (Champlain): The hon. member for Portneuf (Mr. Fortin) made a brilliant plea yesterday, the realism, truth and sincerity of which impressed me greatly.

The bill now before us concerning the records of criminals deals with a most controversial matter. Although our other institutions have evolved, our judicial system has remained the same. We indulge in senseless talk and pettifoggery while we forget the human being. We still act as if the convicted man was a horrible beast. Most of our prisons and penitentiaries are schools of crime, with small, dark quarters, and unhealthy atmosphere, which bring to mind conditions in medieval times. This situation is painful enough without having to add the indelible stigma, that 20th century disgrace: the criminal record.

The principle of this bill is therefore justifiable, for it is high time we should get rid of those antiquated laws because of which the individual who gets caught—and I repeat, the man who gets caught is branded for life. God knows that countless thieves, crooks, bandits go about freely, very often wear white collars and are considered quite respectable.

As I was saying, the man who gets caught thereby becomes branded for life with the seal of approbrium. It should therefore be proved that much more is needed than a mere "minor reform". Major reforms must be made. Rumour has it that the convicted will be granted a pardon. One should also wonder if a condemnation was always just. Is there anything more revolting than getting a police record merely because the police wants to get even, or because the Crown wants to win its case, or even because a judge has allowed himself to be influenced?

I should like to illustrate what I mean through concrete examples in order to convince hon. members. In today's Montréal-Matin one can read the following heading:

The deputy minister claims he was beaten and thrown naked into a prison cell—

• (3:40 p.m.)

In view of the fact that a deputy minister from British Columbia is involved, the matter will be dealt with more rapidly, the police will plead guilty and the Quebec government will simply apologize. However, had an individual been involved, the police might have wanted to be right at all costs. I am simply quoting a newspaper report regarding the misfortune of Mr. Redel. Here is what it says, and I quote:

Within the hour following his arrival at the police station, he received medical attention and then sent home.

That is what the police claim. However, Mr. Walter Robert Redel, from Victoria, deputy minister in the government of British Columbia, contends the opposite. I continue with the quotation:

—stripped of all his clothes and deprived of his personal belongings he was left in a cell, stark-naked, for three hours.

Finally Mr. Redel asked one of the guards to call for a doctor. Half an hour later a doctor arrived. Mr. Redel had a skull injury and the bone above his left eye had been fractured.

Later on, four or five men came to question him and they finally admitted their error, following a telephone call to the Department of Lands and Forests of British Columbia.

Mr. Speaker, is it conceivable that such things can happen in a civilized country such as ours? Is it possible that we can witness such stupidity, such errors? In most cases, when ordinary people are involved, they are unfairly convicted and this is how new criminals are made.

I am for criminal records being wiped clean after a certain time. If untrained police forces, as the Quebec police in particular, are left to do what they want and if we let Crown attorneys do what they want to win their cases at any price, we shall end by creating a kind of society that makes me think of the one described in the film "Z".

I have personally lived through very practical experiences which I would like to expound in this House. This will help prove that it is really time to do away with criminal records and to question our police methods as well as our legal system so that we can begin to really respect the human being.

Last August 23, I was stopped by two officers of the Quebec municipal city on the grounds that I was driving at 49 miles per hour in a 30-mile zone and that I had been spotted on the radar screen.

It can be said without exaggerating that all automobile drivers break regularly highway regulations, either by running through a red light or by forgetting to make a stop or by parking illegally or too long and especially by failing to drive within the speed limit. Therefore, it is not necessary to be a genius or even intelligent to arrest anybody at any time and for any reason. Thus, a good number of our policemen, whose worth is measured in inches, feet and pounds, go driver hunting with gusto. Their favourite weapon is the traffic ticket.

Another invention, radar, is still more deadly. On the look-out in the traffic jungle, they watch and stop just in case the first driver that comes along. It even becomes a game, sometimes. They decide, for instance, to stop the driver of every fifth car or of every green car, or so as to make it easier for themselves still, the driver of the car that came to a stop at the red light, as the others are getting away too fast. That is what happened on August 23, 1969.

Who will dare argue in such circumstances? The policeman, hunter and not protector as he should be, invested with the supreme authority that goes with his uniform and his revolver, is infallible. Insinuations, lies, perjury, he is allowed everything. His word is worth more than that of an honest and respected man in public life, even if he is supported by his wife and other eye witnesses. Why? There is the uniform, the club, the revolver, we know that, but there is also the fact that an ineluctable law has been established for the police, namely that they must not lose any case. With his club and his big flat nose, the policeman would sell his own mother if that could help him win a case or save his skin.

A Crown attorney asked me why I argued with the policemen who stopped me since, knowing the law, I could always speak for myself in court, and that is what I did. The results are there to be seen. The good people of this country have known for a long time that it is better to pay $3, $5, $10 or even $20, even when one is right, than to be insulted in court, where one's word is worth nothing compared to that of a hoodlum policeman and where any citizen can finally get ruined.

As I wished to prove that justice is justice after all, I pleaded not guilty on the four charges with which a sensation-hungry policeman had saddled me on that August 23, 1969. But it was a waste of time. The evidence from my wife and two eye witnesses, apart from myself, could not outweigh the untrue statements of a policeman, supported by a buddy who, wishing at all costs to keep his job and for reasons of solidarity, was willing to corroborate anything, provided he was told about it first. The judge had seemed very sympathetic to me, even though he was employed by the town, as the policemen, and the evidence of my innocence was so crushing that I took it for granted that the four cases would be won. The policeman's blatant insincerity about two charges could only confirm my innocence as far as the first two were concerned.

You might think that the incident has no relation whatsoever with the bill before us. Maybe, but the very fact I was charged with abusing the police, with opposing arrest, has made of me a criminal. When did you ever see a man driving at 49 miles per hour in a 30 miles per hour zone being handcuffed and taken to jail? Confronted with such flagrant injustice, I thought there would still be men able to use their common sense.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Béchard): Order. I believe the hon. member was right and that he is getting away somewhat from the subject.

Mr. Matte: Mr. Speaker, I could not be closer to my subject and that is what my remarks have tried to prove from the start. The point I am making is that one can have a criminal record simply because of an unfair sentence, thus proving that criminal records should be vacated right after the sentence has been rendered or the fine paid. But what I really want to show is that a lot of people have criminal records and that, for no reason whatsoever.

I would like to give you an example. I described in detail, in a letter addressed to the mayor of Quebec, copy of which I sent to the chief of police, the incidents in which I had been involved.

• (3:50 p.m.)

Mr. Speaker, completely disregarding the facts stated by a public man who is, I believe, respected as are all our colleagues here, a unilateral decision was rendered. The letter ends as follows:

> In view of the complete lack of ethics of these two brutes: I urge and demand that official apologies to my wife and myself be made by the City of Quebec and its police force.
>
> I strongly urge that the municipal police eliminate such fiends from its ranks.
>
> Obviously all charges brought against me should immediately be withdrawn.
>
> The foregoing is without prejudice of any action for damages that could be filed, particularly in relation to the effects of this incident on the health of my wife——who was eight months' pregnant at that time.

> We all work to build a just society. As a member of Parliament, I must defend fearlessly the interests of all my fellow-citizens.

I am not afraid to say, right in the House, in front of the Prime Minister himself, what I have in mind. And I shall not be deprived of that sacred democratic right by two ruffian cops badly in want of sensation.

I thank you in advance knowing that you will deign follow up my petition.

And what was done then?

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Béchard): Order. We are now debating a bill of federal jurisdiction and I would ask the hon. member to limit his remarks to the subject matter of the bill and not to refer to the jurisdiction of another authority.

Mr. Matte: Mr. Speaker, I just want to demonstrate that having a record is often due to the police seeking revenge, the Crown seeking to win at all costs, or a judge unwilling to commit himself.

The role of a policeman is above all to protect the citizen against incidents or persons who may attack his reputation and integrity. It too often happens that the public is seen by police as an opponent. Children fear them, teen-agers avoid them, and adults do not like their neighbours to see that police is inquiring in their homes. Why? Because there are too much "mini-brains" in "maxi-bodies" within the police corps.

I recognize their essential role for the smooth functioning of society and the maintenance of order, and I admit that they must be respected and helped. But support and respect must be conditioned by sound protection. If ever a citizen cannot defend himself fairly and win a case similar to mine, the public will gradually lose faith in the advent of the just society.

I would like to speak on behalf of an incalculable number of individuals who, injustly, are born losers. Besides having huge expenses to defray, they are unable to fight this unfair law whereby the police are always right. In these trying years, when public figures are always criticized, insulted, run down and often physically assaulted—remember for instance the Kennedy brothers, Martin Luther King and the Prime Minister of Canada when he attended the St. Jean Baptiste parade in Montreal—it is even harder for him, especially if he is on the wrong political side, to maintain his dignity and his honour if the police are allowed to mistreat him.

To put it another way, in the example quoted a minute ago, should there have been two charges because I was a member of Parliament? Should I have had to pay the maximum fine of $50 for having allegedly insulted a policeman? The next day another judge ordered an individual who had assaulted a policeman with his fists to pay the same fine.

This incident, which resembles somewhat La Fontaine's fable "The Wolf and the Lamb", took place on August 23, 1969. The assailant, a policeman, abused and handled an individual roughly. In order to justify his behaviour, he accused the other of the misdeed he himself is guilty of. The devilish satisfaction with which this police officer wrote up and gave out tickets was something to see. Since when is the victim to be condemned? I am puzzled by this situation and I would like to intervene in order to ensure the disappearance of this climate of constant conflict between the protector, which is the police, and the taxpayer who should have a right to protection.

Naturally, I am bitter, and the 50 witnesses to the disgraceful incident that took place on August 23, 1969, understand what I mean. Many immediately came to the aid of my wife, and I take this opportunity to thank them publicly. I believed that two or three of those witnesses would be enough at my trial, but I had believed in the impossible, since the police is always right.

We have a part to play here, that of safeguarding the rights of the citizen, of endeavouring to improve the lot of the human being and of allowing everyone to develop fully. We must not allow our police forces or our legal systems to be mainly responsible for the wave of crimes of which we are the unfortunate witnesses.

This extremely important matter prompts youth to lose faith in the established authorities. Why? Because it is too often the witness of those glaring injustices. It rests with us to see that a stop is put to those injustices, so that everyone may be truly himself, without having to experience the disadvantages of the offences which are becoming more and more serious.

Perhaps I let myself be carried away while making those comments, but I was involved in those incidents and this shows that it is time to do something. That is why I am making a suggestion which should be taken into consideration.

The fact that a man is arrested does not mean he is automatically guilty. Everyone has heard about the recent incident when a deputy minister of British Columbia had his nose and brow ridges fractured. That is absolutely ridiculous.

For the police, anyone who is arrested, is guilty. The law should provide better protection for the citizen. For example, if the police were not allowed to bring anyone to a police station or to put anyone in jail—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Béchard): Order. This has nothing to do with the matter before us and for the third time I would ask the hon. member to limit his remarks to the subject.

Mr. Matte: Mr. Speaker, if the bill does not refer to convictions, if the measure before us is not titled "An Act to provide for the relief of persons who have been convicted of offences and have subsequently rehabilitated themselves", I wonder what I am talking about, since it is what I am reading in the bill.

All I ask, Mr. Speaker, is that you do not lose patience with me, I have almost finished.

I just wanted to conclude by making a suggestion that has some merit, I think. If we accepted it, we would never see in the newspapers and on television what has happened recently and, what is in my view most unfortunate. I am a bit ashamed of being from Quebec when I see the Provincial Police doing such stupid things before the eyes of the whole population.

We must put an end to that, that is why I am making the following suggestion: When a person is arrested and jailed by a police officer, an impartial witness should be on the spot, to ascertain that the accused is not ill-treated, that he is not knocked on the head, that he is not handcuffed uselessly before it is ascertained that the charge is justified.

[English]

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Béchard): Order, please. It being four o'clock p.m., the House will now proceed to the consideration of private members' business as listed on today's order paper, namely notices of motion, public bills, private bills.

Mr. Bell: Mr. Speaker, I have checked on this side, and I think in the House generally there is some disposition to waive the private members' hour. The hon. member for South Western Nova (Mr. Comeau) has very graciously agreed to stand his motion, so it will not be charged against him and will be debated later. May I suggest we go on with this bill and, hopefully, finish it before five o'clock? Certainly we will not sit past five. In fact, if we could have another one or two short speeches we might finish a few minutes after four o'clock and we could repay the staff for the extra time we asked them to sit a couple of weeks ago.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Béchard): Is it so agreed?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

[Translation]

Mr. Matte: Mr. Speaker, I had decided to end my speech on these words, but if the House wishes to hear the rest, I can go on.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Béchard): Is it agreed?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

• (4:00 p.m.)

[English]

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Béchard): The hon. member for Sarnia.

Mr. Jack Cullen (Sarnia): Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I recognize it is somewhat hard for the Chair to see a backbencher this far back in the House, and sometimes it is difficult to be heard.

Mr. Comeau: I rise on a point of order, Mr. Speaker. I do not wish to delay our proceedings unduly; I wish to co-operate with the House by forfeiting the time available to me in the private members' hour. But what puzzles me a little is that last week a fisheries bill was under discussion in the House, the question was put and thereafter there was no chance for anyone to make a speech or to go back to the bill. However, today we have passed a bill and it appears there is an opportunity for someone to speak on it.

[Translation]

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Béchard): I should like to apologize to the hon. member for Sarnia (Mr. Cullen). I failed to notice him when he got to his feet and I had to recognize him afterwards. I should like to remind him that the House has agreed to go on with this bill.

[English]

Mr. Lundrigan: I rise on the same point of order, Mr. Speaker. I do not want to be difficult; I am interested in hearing from the hon. member for Sarnia (Mr. Cullen). Nevertheless, I should like to give Your Honour the precedent upon which we are basing our observations. Last week a bill came before the House, a vote was called and an agreement was made. Subsequently, even though the hon. member for South Shore (Mr. Crouse), who was sitting there, raised the point vigorously and six or seven members pursued it for almost an hour, we could not get the decision reversed.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Béchard): Order. I recognize the argument of the hon. member, but there was no condition attached to the unanimous consent given this afternoon.

Mr. Cullen: Thank you again, Mr. Speaker. I express my thanks to the hon. member for South Western Nova (Mr. Comeau) for giving up the time on his private members' motion. I do not intend to impose unduly on the time of the House, but I have a few remarks which I shall try to summarize.

I think it is incumbent upon me to compliment the hon. member for Parry Sound-Muskoka (Mr. Aiken), because I think he set a high tone for this debate when he led off for the opposition. I was not in the House when the hon. member for Skeena (Mr. Howard) spoke, but I have read his comments. I was very pleased to note that he commented on the contribution made by his colleague the hon. member for Vancouver East (Mr. Winch) who has done pioneer work in this field.

One other hon. member who I feel must be mentioned is my hon. friend from Welland (Mr. Tolmie), who is chairman of the Justice and Legal Affairs Committee. He put forward a private member's bill which was referred to that committee for study, and last meeting he gave what can be described as a comprehensive and thought-provoking address upon this subject for the consideration of the minister and of his committee.

I was not a member of the last Parliament and at the present time I am not a member of the Standing Committee on Justice and Legal Affairs. My opinion, therefore, might best be described as having been shaped by the citizens with whom I dealt in the 12 years I spent in the practice of law. During that time—although my practice was not solely dedicated to defence, prosecution or criminal work—I did have contact with officials of police courts and with members of the John Howard Society and the Elizabeth Fry Society, as well as with citizens who were endeavouring to organize homes which would provide a transitional home environment for men and women who had served prison sentences and had to make adjustments.

I was also involved with legal aid work both before and after the legislation passed by the province of Ontario. In this capacity I had occasion to deal with those who needed and sought the kind of legislation we have before us today. I feel, then, that I have been in contact with individuals who endeavoured to rehabilitate themselves and who subsequently found that their records still stood as a matter of public information—this was, so to speak, their albatross.

I want to congratulate the Solicitor General (Mr. McIlraith) for bringing in this bill and for devoting the time, effort and study which has obviously gone into the legislation. It is natural to criticize almost any bill on the ground that it does not go far enough. I think this is a valid criticism as far as the measure before us is concerned. I am cheered, however, by the minister's comment, recorded in Hansard of January 30 at page 3045:

> I hope it will get quick passage through the House, then be re-examined at the end of two or three years' experience when we shall be in a better position to know what improvements can be made in the administrative procedure and what changes and other improvements should be made to its provisions.

First, I want to say I am not too happy with the word "pardon". For a while I thought the hon. member for Vancouver-Kingsway (Mrs. MacInnis) and I must have been using the same research assistant. The hon. member said she was not a lawyer. Well, I am a lawyer, but it seems to me that in the ordinary context or use of this word one thinks of an individual who has committed a crime, perhaps served part of his sentence and then received a pardon.

We are dealing here with individuals who have served such time as was necessary and have afterward been successful in rehabilitating themselves. Now we are saying to them, "You are not only a free man, but you are free from this blight—your criminal record." We are, in essence, telling a man or a woman that they have wiped the slate clean; that they have not only served their sentence but have proved they can be good citizens in the community. This may not appear an important point, but in view of the fact we are breaking new ground I feel a more appropriate word might have been found. I still like the word "expunge" as applied to records, because it denotes the kind of thing this legislation seeks to accomplish.

The next point I wish to make bears repetition although it has been touched on by other hon. members, including the hon. member for Edmonton West (Mr. Lambert) and the hon. member for Parry Sound-Muskoka. I share the concern expressed with regard to the question which we find appearing on so many forms, namely, "Have you ever been convicted of a criminal offence?" I cannot imagine forms being changed in the way the minister has suggested. It is my view that a provision should be inserted in the bill clearly stating that when a man is asked this particular question he should be able to say, unequivocally, that the answer is no.

The hon. member for Welland referred to the countless letters he has received on this subject. I have received many myself, and there is one in particular from which I should like to read, because in many ways it is typical. This letter came to me after I had been elected. It was sent by an individual who was aware of my interest locally in this particular field. I shall not read enough of it to identify the writer; I simply wish to draw attention to the difficulty with which he is faced.

Dear Mr. Cullen:

I wish to enquire into the possibility of obtaining a pardon. At the age of 17 I was convicted of a break and enter charge and was sentenced to 12 months in the Ontario Reformatory at Guelph. I am now 29 years old and have been working steadily for 11 years. During this time I have increased my job qualification by passing numerous examinations and courses. At the present time I am employed in a supervisory capacity. I hold a current second-class stationary engineers certificate from the Ontario department of labour. I am married with children and I am paying for my own home. On different occasions I have tried to further myself and my experience by applying for other employment and each time I have run into the question on the application forms: Have you ever been convicted under the Criminal Code? In these cases I must answer, yes. This holds true even for civil service applications. Surely this must come under human rights or have I forefeited the right to be human?

I doubt very much that this individual would have difficulty is securing a pardon, as the word is used in the bill. I like to think of this legislation as amounting to an operation "clean slate" in favour of individuals who have proven to the community that they have rehabilitated themselves. Once a person has secured this pardon he is given a clean slate, and the records of his offence should be treated as dead records; they should not be trotted out again or revived for any purpose.

I was interested to hear the comments of the hon. member for Pembina (Mr. Bigg). I confess he raised arguments which I had not previously considered. Perhaps they ought to be considered. If the individual concerned subsequent to being pardoned commits a further offence, I believe it should be looked on as a first offence. I do not like the word "pardon," but I do like the idea of a provisional pardon.

• (4:10 p.m.)

In conclusion may I stress my final point. I am opposed to the individual having to make the kind of application that is suggested in the bill. An individual may not have chosen to tell his wife, his family or his neighbours about his criminal activities. If he seeks a pardon, are we not denying him the right to make even this choice? He has decided in his own mind to lead the life he feels best meets his need, and if five or ten years hence he wishes to apply for a pardon we are even taking away from him this choice.

I am also a little concerned about good behaviour and about what might be considered to be an exemplary life. In his comments the minister stated that the application should not be automatic. I should like to see something more dramatic in this bill. I think we should consider making the application automatic.

In the first instance there would be a flood of applications. Are we going to discourage those individuals who apply by making bureaucratic excuses to the effect that we have had so many applications that we have not had time to deal with them all, or that this is something new, that we are breaking new ground? If we are going to take a serious look at the act in two or three years' time, let us do something dramatic now. Let us remove the necessity of applying to any board. Let us set up a situation whereby an individual can say that he committed an offence on a particular date; that in his opinion he has rehabilitated himself; that he has now secured a job, has not committed an offence during the past five years and feels he should qualify for a pardon.

If this situation is abused, we will be able to change the act later. But let us at least give these individuals the benefit of our mistake, for a change. I submit that this kind of legislation is not only a second chance or a second opportunity for a man with a criminal record; but it is a second chance for a society which may have been responsible for the man's criminal record in the first place.

It may not seem appropriate to a layman's interpretation of the way the House should operate that a member on the government side should be critical. I disagree with this basic philosophy or tenet. I think government members have an obligation to be critical. However, they have an obligation to be critical in a constructive fashion, and this is what I am trying to do.

I endorse this legislation because I think it is a great step forward in the humane treatment of individuals who have found themselves in trouble, individuals who by dint of good work and decent living have been able to rehabilitate themselves. I have no hesitancy in supporting this bill, even in the form it is now, just as I have no hesitancy in offering what I hope will be taken as constructive criticism of some of its provisions. Hopefully, some of the provisions will be amended when the bill goes to the committee.

Many good points have been raised by members on all sides of the House. Knowing the minister's sympathetic tendencies in this particular field, I hope these suggestions will not fall on deaf ears. I hope that immediately this legislation passes the minister and his department will commence work on phase two of the bill, which seeks to bring into law some of the splendid ideas the minister has heard expounded in this House.

Mr. R. Gordon L. Fairweather (Fundy-Royal): Mr. Speaker, I will not be very long. I think the hon. member for Sarnia (Mr. Cullen) and others have put the core question, and I am sure the committee will be looking very carefully into it and perhaps the minister will want to give it new consideration. The core question is: What is the legislative position regarding the practice of pardon? Pardon is not a new phenomenon to criminal procedures, but how does the citizen reply to application forms given him by the civil service in this regard? A more serious, or potentially more serious matter is: How does the citizen answer certain questions on visa applications prepared by governments such as that of the United States?

I should like to recount to the House an incident in which I was involved. I had an office in New Brunswick and arranged parole for a person who had been convicted of criminal negligence. This person was a university graduate. He was paroled in order that he could attend university where he obtained his B.Sc., went on to get his M.Sc., and is now making a very worth-while contribution to the country. Incidentally, he also received a pardon. The unfortunate aspect is that he is still unable to travel to the United States since he is unable honestly to answer that question which is found on so many forms.

I do not think we should be alarmed at the technique of expunging criminal records. This is a phenomenon that any lawyer knows is found, for instance, in adoption cases. The birth certificate of an adopted child, once final adoption is made, bears no evidence whatever of the origin of the child; and for the purpose of filling in forms the child is regarded as a natural-born child.

Apparently the statisticians took a little time to swallow this practice since they were used to dealing with exactitudes. However, if this practice can be adopted in a human and proper way in the case of adoption, there is absolutely no reason why a similar technique could not be followed in the expunging of records of those who have been previously convicted.

It has been made plain throughout this debate that the usefulness of a Member of Parliament lies in his acting as a sort of ombudsman between state and citizen. I think that our role of ombudsman has been fulfilled in this debate. After all, as members we have an opportunity of meeting these individuals who may be hung up, if I may use the expression, over the effect of what they feel is an insensitive decision.

Like the hon. member for Sarnia and others, I wholeheartedly support the principle of this bill. Nevertheless, I think we will have to make some improvements when the bill gets to committee if it is to have full effect, certainly the effect that I have noted members on all sides of the House wish it to have.

I do not want to be anecdotal at 4.20 on a Friday afternoon, but I would like to give the House one other example of the sort of difficulty that can arise. Another parole that I recall involved a man who had committed a rather unpleasant crime. The crime was committed at a very young age and the person concerned had rehabilitated himself. His former employer was very willing to have him back and showed social conscience, and so on. Unfortunately, the Post Office Department of this country, where the man was engaged delivering special-delivery letters, refused to employ him in view of his previous conviction.

This is another example of the kind of bind we can get into unless departments of state are tuned in to the progressive reforms that the minister is putting before us within the terms of this bill. It is no secret if I tell you that it took the most intense pressure on the part of the then Attorney General of New Brunswick and the then Minister of Justice of Canada to get the Post Office Department to understand the social implications of their act, which was, of course, quite in conflict with this whole new theory of probation.

I make one last comment. The Chair has displayed generosity in regard to the tragic incident that recently occurred in Quebec. Apparently we are now free game. My feeling about this is that the tragedy, surely, was not that an official of the British Columbia government was concerned, but that any police department would render a beating to any citizen of this country, no matter what stage the proceedings in question had reached.

• (4:20 p.m.)

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. It is my duty under our Standing Orders to remind the House that if the Solicitor General (Mr. McIlraith) speaks now, he will close the debate.

Hon. G. J. McIlraith (Solicitor General): Mr. Speaker, I will seek to keep my remarks down to a reasonable length. The subject itself, the speeches which have been made, interest me very much. Much as I should like to go through each speech in a detailed way, I will try to refrain from that exercise. I hope that all hon. members who have raised points or questions with which I do not deal will understand that it is not that I think they may be unimportant points, but rather that they may be of a nature that can be more easily and more properly dealt with in the committee than during the second reading stage of the bill. I should like, if I may, to try to answer some of the main points raised.

The bill is an attempt to get something practical which will work to assist those unfortunate people who are not being treated fairly in society by reason of the fact that at one point in their lives they had a conviction registered against them, even though they have long since rehabilitated themselves. This involves finding a method of dealing with that situation. It does not involve the objective, because I think there is unanimous agreement on that. The debate has indicated that we should try and remove this unfortunate and unjust circumstance in respect of persons such as I have described.

After a lot of examination of the 1966 private member's bill, and the evidence given before the committee which studied it in an attempt to deal with the subject, it was finally found that it simply did not meet the objectives it was intended to meet. We can go into those reasons when we get the bill before the committee; at that time we can deal with this matter in a detailed manner.

After an examination of the many proposed methods of dealing with this situation—and there are not many statistics, much information or experience on this subject that is very helpful—we came up with this method. We decided we should adopt the idea of granting pardons. I will deal with that word in a moment. We said that the granting of a pardon would vacate the conviction. The significance of that has apparently been missed in the debate.

Once a conviction is vacanted, a lot of consequences in law flow from that action. For example, this means that the legislation or local provisions dealing with licencing by the various jurisdictions, or the running for local office and all sorts of other things, no longer apply, the conviction having been vacated. That point, which was covered by the hon. member for Portneuf (Mr. Godin), is one of the difficulties that confronts these persons but which will be removed by this legislation.

In addition to the granting of a pardon and making that pardon vacate the conviction, we have achieved the purpose of the earlier private member's bill. We have provided for the drawing in of the records and the sealing of them. That point seems to me to have been missed, but that is its significance. It was asserted that we should expunge the records. I think I should make it very clear that very early in our work we found that the use of the word "expunge" did not seem to meet all the needs we were seeking to meet by legislation on this subject. This is not a good word to use.

Having regard to the point raised in a more particular way by the hon. member for Vancouver-Kingsway (Mrs. MacInnis) as to the use of the word "pardon", let me say this is purely a matter of seeking to obtain a method to provide a satisfactory document which will achieve our purpose. The use of the word "pardon" seems to come closer to achieving this than anything else we came up with, because it became clear very early in our attempt to get this legislation into reality that a blanket provision which legislated out of existence these convictions would not achieve this objective.

If you had an automatic blanket removal of all convictions, it was thought that we would be right back where we were because the record of conviction would be found. Make no mistake about that, it would be found. There are always, shall we say, unfriendly friends who will disclose this. There are newspaper articles, letters and a dozen and one things which might account for such a disclosure. It became quite clear that such a conviction would come to light by some device.

We felt that we needed something for people who seem to have rehabilitated themselves, in order that they could get away from the consequences of having had a conviction registered against them. This measure is intended to cure this, and that is its objective. I think this is clear to hon. members on all sides of the House. The blanket legislation we tried to come up with did not seem to achieve this at all. Indeed, it seemed to put us right back where we were before we started to do anything on this subject. I do not know that I need labour that point any further at this time.

If you are discussing semantics, the word "pardon" may not be the perfect word, but by a considerable margin it certainly is the best we have been able to come up with and the best of any that have been suggested from all sources. There are some points raised by other hon. members which I think I should clarify at once. The hon. member for Parry Sound-Muskoka (Mr. Aiken), when dealing with this subject, suggested among other things that juvenile offenders are not covered by this bill. That is quite wrong. The Juvenile Delinquents Act is a federal statute and offences against that act are covered. There was a total miscomprehension of that point.

The hon. member for Skeena (Mr. Howard) raised a rather interesting point. He read one of the clauses of the bill in a way which indicated to him that there was no provision for granting a pardon where there was a suspended sentence. That is not a correct reading of that clause. Convictions followed by a suspended sentence are covered by this legislation just as fully as convictions followed by any other sentence.

The hon. member for Portneuf raised a point I was particularly pleased to hear. I must say I was trying to listen to his speech in French at the time. I think I understood the hon. member correctly when he pointed out that in this legislation we must remember we are dealing with individual persons, and that what we are seeking to do here is to assist such individual persons and make life fairer for them. It is not an academic exercise in theory or in creating a nice, paper structure.

I believe I understood the point he raised about persons who apply for local office, and so on. This legislation provides for vacating the conviction and therefore there is no longer a prohibition under other legislation. Many other interesting points were raised. The hon. member for Sarnia spoke about civil service applications. For some time now the question to which he referred has disappeared from civil service application forms; it is no longer asked. I have reference to the letter which related to this.

• (4:30 p.m.)

I think that matter is well under control. We can deal with it perhaps in a more particular way before the committee, but I want the hon. member to know this has now been removed from federal government application forms. I hope the person who wrote the letter has applied for a pardon, because under the royal prerogative of mercy, if the facts are as stated, the pardon would have been granted automatically.

I might say that in an effort to prepare for this legislation and institute a method to alleviate the situation in the meantime, we have been using the royal prerogative of mercy in a way that is very close to the procedure set out in the bill. In the last year 131 such applications were approved. That rate which accelerated in the latter part of the year is at a higher level now. Because of the present procedure there is every reason to expect it will accelerate again.

The machinery exists now in the National Parole Board to handle the legislation immediately it becomes law. We have gathered a great deal of practical knowledge from the considerable contact we have had with persons who have found themselves in the unfortunate position of having a record although they have long since rehabilitated themselves. Also, interestingly enough we have gained a great deal of experience from employers, particularly the larger employers. I shall welcome the opportunity at the committee stage for hon. members to give such information as they have and to learn exactly what we have found out in this connection.

It would certainly seem that by this method employers would be able to avoid considering the matter of a conviction when they know, if there has been no pardon, that they can obtain the information or, if there has been a pardon, they need not even bother attempting to obtain the information. I would also welcome an opportunity to have this subject examined at the committee stage. There are other aspects of the matter which are very important but I do not feel they should be dealt with at this point in the debate on second reading. I think they can be better dealt with in a more specific manner at the committee stage.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the said motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Motion agreed to, bill read the second time and referred to the Standing Committee on Justice and Legal Affairs.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Five o'clock.

At 4.35 p.m. the House adjourned, without question put, pursuant to Standing Order.