HOUSE OF COMMONS DEBATES

OFFICIAL REPORT

SECOND SESSION—TWENTY-EIGHTH PARLIAMENT

18 ELIZABETH II

VOLUME III, 1970

COMPRISING THE PERIOD FROM THE TWELFTH DAY OF JANUARY, 1970, TO THE SIXTH DAY OF FEBRUARY, 1970, INCLUSIVE.

INDEX ISSUED IN A SEPARATE VOLUME

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Monday, January 12, 1970

The House met at 2 p.m.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

PRESENCE OF TELEVISION CAMERAS IN FOYER—PROVISION OF OTHER SPACE

Mr. Speaker: As hon. members are aware, television cameras have been located for some time in the foyer adjacent to the House of Commons. Propriety of this procedure has been considered by the Chair in consultation with House Leaders and with the executive of the Press Gallery. It was agreed by all concerned, in the course of these lengthy discussions covering several months, that the decision should be left with the Chair. The decision has been made that on an experimental basis, the foyer should no longer be used for this purpose. To give effect to the decision Room 110-S, located at the foot of the stairs leading to the foyer, has been made available to the Press Gallery for the purpose indicated, in addition to Room 154-D which was already available to members of the Press Gallery for radio and television interviews. Technical objections having been made to the use of this particular space, Room 238-S has also been allocated to the Press Gallery on a temporary basis for interviews following Orders of the Day.

This decision has had the effect of bringing into focus a long-standing problem, that of television and radio coverage of the House and its committee proceedings. In view of the wide interest shown in the situation, I have taken the liberty of consulting with the House Leaders and suggesting to them, as they are representative of the members of all parties in the House, that the whole issue should be considered forthwith by the Standing Committee on Procedure and Organization. I propose to have a further meeting with the House Leaders in the hope that a suitable reference will be made as soon as possible.

I think I should insist that in so far as I am particularly concerned, as the custodian of the dignity of the House of Commons and its proceedings, I feel as strongly as ever today that the foyer should not be used as it has in the past for the purpose of radio and television interviews. It is my hope that the House Leaders and the Committee on Procedure and Organization, in consultation with representatives of the Press Gallery, can find a solution which will be acceptable to all concerned.

ROUTINE PROCEEDINGS

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

NIGERIA-BIAFRA—PLANS FOR RELIEF SUPPLIES AND ADDITIONAL OBSERVERS FOLLOWING CEASE-FIRE

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, hon. members will no doubt wish to know what steps the government is taking with regard to the rapidly changing situation in Nigeria. The latest information we have is that the Commander in Chief of the Biafran forces has ordered his troops to stop fighting and has asked General Gowon for an immediate cease-fire. The government welcomes General Gowon's statement of reassurance to the supporters of the Biafran cause. Bringing hostilities to an end in a territory like that of Eastern Nigeria inevitably results in confusion. The government hopes that General Gowon will spare no effort in maintaining the discipline of his forces and protecting the lives of all the peoples of Nigeria.

We have, at the moment, two senior officers of the Canadian Armed Forces in the area of operations as part of the International Military Observer Team. The government is offering to provide more observer personnel.

The need for relief is bound to increase very rapidly. The government considers it of first importance that outside relief activity should be co-ordinated on an international basis in co-operation with the government of Nigeria, preferably under the aegis of the Red Cross. With this in mind, we are in touch with the Nigerian government and other governments concerned with relief activities. There are considerable stocks of food and other supplies in Nigeria and neighbouring countries, including ports like Cotonou and Sao Tomé. The immediate problem is to move these supplies rapidly and effectively into the areas where they are most urgently required.

Now that hostilities have ended we hope that it will be possible to open up land supply routes. We have also asked our High Commissioner in Lagos to reiterate to the Nigerian government our willingness to mount an air drop operation without delay if this is the only means whereby relatively large stocks of food can be delivered quickly to otherwise inaccessible areas.

As announced on Friday, the government is providing $500,000 to the Nigerian Red Cross, $500,000 to the Nigerian Rehabilitation Commission and $250,000 to the International Committee of the Red Cross to aid in the delivery of food and other relief operations. Immediate steps are being taken to make these funds available and the government is exploring ways in which additional funds might effectively be used. As and when it should be required, we are prepared to provide aircraft for an airlift. Canadian Armed Forces Hercules are standing by for these operations. These should be regarded as essential interim measures because, in the long run, supplies in the quantities needed must be delivered by surface transport.

To assist our High Commission to deal with a vastly increased work load and with the special requirements that will be placed upon it, we are sending a small group of experts in relief, transportation and other fields to Lagos.

I am sure that members on all sides of the House will agree with me that we must spare no effort in co-operation with other interested nations to ensure that the tragic war in Nigeria is not followed by disastrous famine and unnecessary suffering.

Hon. Robert L. Stanfield (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, this is certainly not a time for recriminations about government policy touching on this very tragic situation. Nevertheless we must say that the maladroitness and ineffectiveness of the government's policies with regard to the Nigerian-Biafran difficulty to date have created a feeling of uneasiness on the part of all those in this country who are concerned about what may happen there now. After a very bitter and bloody war there is bound to be a legacy of bitterness which one can only hope will be overcome by appropriate arrangements. There has also been a very genuine fear of genocide on the part of the Biafrans, and it is not merely confined to the Biafrans because His Holiness the Pope and others have expressed concern about the possibility of genocide, either actively or through starvation.

The government of Canada is now offering to supply additional military observers, but the Secretary of State for External Affairs has not indicated the extent to which Canada is pressing for this; neither has he indicated acceptance of the government's proposal or where that proposal stands. It is vitally important not only that the team of observers be enlarged but that it should have freedom of movement. It should have not only the theoretical right to go to various parts of the country but the ability to get there. There has been a terrible loss of life, sir, and we must do all we can to keep any further loss of life to a minimum.

We, like the government, welcome the willingness expressed by the governments of Britain, United States, France and other countries to participate in measures to bring relief, but surely this has to be considered in its totality. The government should not simply offer to make observers available but should take the initiative to ensure that such a team is at work in the field to report on what is actually going on there. Furthermore, the relief that is needed should be in a forward position.

The Secretary of State for External Affairs stated that a lot of supplies were available nearby. Can he assure us that the supplies that are immediately required are available? For example, will additional truck transportation be required immediately to make this relief available to the various parts of the country? Is the government now using Hercules aircraft and is it doing its part to ensure that trucks are being put in a forward position to be able to respond when required?

I agree with what the Secretary of State for External Affairs has said about the importance of co-ordination. Obviously it is of vital importance; otherwise relief efforts could degenerate into chaos. The minister has said that Canada has made a proposal, but what response has the government of Canada received? Time is of the essence. It is not a matter for long discussions with the government of Nigeria and personal emissaries going to Lagos. There must not be the sort of delay there has been in the past. Time and vigour are of the essence.

We want more than just a general statement of intentions. We want to know what is going on. We need to send observers there in adequate numbers. We need far more information than the Secretary of State for External Affairs has given us regarding the response. What is the actual state of these proposals put forward? To what extent are they being received? What action in fact is being taken? All we have heard from the Secretary of State for External Affairs are general assurances about the willingness of the government of Canada to do certain things. We want to know what is going on. We want action and not only pious declarations.

At the conclusion of the comments on the statement made by the Secretary of State for External Affairs I will seek the unanimous consent of the House to have the House give instructions to the Standing Committee on External Affairs and National Defence with regard to the continuing surveillance of the government's program.

Mr. Andrew Brewin (Greenwood): Mr. Speaker, it has now become clear that the military operations in Nigeria and Biafra are coming to an end, but that does not necessarily mean that the immense tragedy that has taken place there cannot be compounded and continued unless there is urgent and immediate action within a matter of hours. I want to reinforce what the Leader of the Opposition has said, that this is a question of hours, not of days or weeks. Something must be done right away.

The present method of feeding four million people in this unhappy country by airlift has necessarily been disrupted for the time being. Many people are on a knife-edge; threatened daily and hourly by death through starvation. In these circumstances it will be necessary not only to mount a massive international effort in the long run but to use the existing facilities provided by the people who are already there, the people who are operating the feeding centres, in the short run, which means within the next day or two. I put it to the Secretary of State for External Affairs that if there was ever a need for urgent and immediate action it is now.

I wish to pay tribute on this occasion to those gallant people who fought so tenaciously for independence and survival, as they saw it, against heavy odds. I wish to pay tribute also to all those who planned, executed and carried through the magnificent, imaginative and heroic air operation which, as I said earlier, has saved up to two million people from starvation despite immense hazards and difficulties. I refer to the operations under Joint Church Aid and, initially, the International Red Cross.

It seems to me the new situation imposes heavy obligations on the international community which permitted this situation to develop. There is need not only for an expanded military observer team, as the Secretary of State for External Affairs indicated, but for a substantially expanded team whose membership would not be confined to the military alone. There is an obligation on the international community to ensure that the fear of genocide does not turn into one of the tragic facts of this generation.

There is also a long term need to organize an international community which would be able to intervene even in civil wars to preserve human rights and lives. We cannot afford in this world to experience tragedies like Biafra.

In view of the large number of questions which still arise despite the statement of the Secretary of State for External Affairs, and the immense concern of the Canadian people, I shall put forward, when the occasion arises, a motion that this matter be debated further today.

[Translation]

Mr. Bernard Dumont (Frontenac): Mr. Speaker, since the beginning of 1970, we have gone through very tragic hours and very dark days. The Ralliement créditiste has been calling the attention of the government to the problems of Biafra and Nigeria for the past two years.

We note, following the minister's statement, that the government can act quickly when it wants to. It is unfortunate that this action has not been taken without any political consideration, in order to prevent the starvation of Biafrans and Nigerians. The genocide of Biafrans is really an unfortunate event.

We cannot understand why Canada did not intervene before today. I think that love of lucre was stronger than Christian charity. Unfortunately, pressures to prevent England from selling arms to Nigeria failed. We have rendered valuable services to that country in the past and stronger pressures from us would surely have brought results.

Finally, since the tragedy is now over, I would suggest to the Secretary of State for External Affairs that we could send to Nigeria, besides military observers, representatives of all parties of the House who could examine the problems on the scene.

If members of Parliament can attend United Nations meetings as observers, can go to Paris, to India or to any other country, why would it not be possible for representatives of each party accompanied by military observers to visit the scene of the hostilities in order to get clear and precise information about the situation and to report to the House so that the government will be in a position to take the steps necessary to eliminate misery from that part of the world.

NIGERIA-BIAFRA—REQUEST FOR UNANIMOUS CONSENT TO MOVE MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Hon. Robert L. Stanfield (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, pursuant to Standing Order 43 I ask unanimous consent of the House to move the following motion:

That the Standing Committee on External Affairs and National Defence be instructed to take under consideration immediately the plans of the government to give assistance to the victims of the Nigerian-Biafran conflict; that the committee exercise continuing surveillance over the efforts of the Canadian government in this respect; and report with all possible speed to this House as to the adequacy of the measures proposed and recommend any further measures it considers appropriate.

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): Mr. Speaker, on a point of order, we on this side of the House would be quite prepared to have the committee study this question if it is agreeable that the question on the motion be put without debate today.

Mr. Speaker: Order. Hon. members have heard the motion proposed by the Leader of the Opposition, which can be accepted only by unanimous agreement. There may be a difficulty in that the President of the Privy Council has placed a condition on putting the motion which places the Chair in a somewhat embarrassing position. Since there can be no debate under the rules I can only ask whether there is unanimous agreement to the motion proposed by the Leader of the Opposition, though I am willing to hear any member on the point of order raised by the President of the Privy Council.

Mr. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): Mr. Speaker, I should like to raise one point. The motion has been placed before the House under Standing Order 43.

[Mr. Dumont.]

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): No, it has not.

Mr. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): All there is for the House to decide is whether or not unanimous consent is forthcoming. I do not think that any member or any party in the House can put a proviso on their approval. As far as we are concerned we are prepared to give unanimous support.

Mr. Speaker: Order. I am in agreement with the point of order raised by the hon. member for Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands, who raised the same point I had in mind. I was trying to be helpful to hon. members, but according to the terms of Standing Order 43 I can ask only whether there is unanimous consent to the putting of the motion proposed by the Leader of the Opposition.

[Translation]

Is there unanimous consent of the House for the Chair to put the motion submitted by the Leader of the Opposition?

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. Speaker: As there is not unanimous consent, the question cannot be put to the House.

QUESTIONS ON THE ORDER PAPER

(Questions answered orally are indicated by an asterisk.)

PUBLIC SERVICE—FILLING OF VACANT POSITIONS

Question No. 2—Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre):

How many vacancies by category of position in each department of the Public Service were filled by persons (a) from outside the Public Service and (b) from inside the Public Service, between July 1, 1969 and October 1, 1969?

Hon. Gérard Pelletier (Secretary of State): I am informed by the Public Service Commission as follows: The total number of appointments made under the Public Service Employment Act between July 1 and October 1, 1969, in each category of positions, is as follows: (a) From outside the Public Service: Administrative and Foreign Service, 428; Administrative Support, 465; Operational, 328; Scientific and Professional, 524; Executive, 5; Technical, 286.

(b) From within the Public Service: Administrative and Foreign Service, 613; Administrative Support, 552; Operational, 52; Scientific and Professional, 98; Executive, 36; Technical, 47.

This information is not segregated by departments in the Commission's records.

URBAN RENEWAL—FREEZING OF FEDERAL ASSISTANCE

Question No. 4—Mr. Gilbert:

1. On what date this past summer did the Minister responsible for Housing announce a freeze of federal government assistance for urban renewal projects?

2. On what date were cities and municipalities in Canada informed of the federal government's decision in this matter?

3. On what date were the provincial governments informed of the federal government's decision in this matter?

Hon. Robert K. Andras (Minister without Portfolio): 1. On August 14, 1969, the Minister responsible for Housing issued a public statement which in part indicated that "Until a more well-defined and logical long-term Canadian urban renewal policy can be formulated and enunciated, municipalities with urban renewal schemes presently in preparation will have to elect either to susped further study or, alternatively, to complete their work in the knowledge that additional federal funds for implementation of the schemes may or may not be forthcoming." Discussions with the provincial governments during the summer dealt with the urban renewal program among other matters of mutual interest and the provincial and municipal officials concerned were notified officially of the government's decision immediately after the public announcement.

2. See answer to 1. above.

3. See answer to 1. above.

URBAN RENEWAL—BAN ON PLANS

Question No. 5—Mr. Gilbert:

1. Is there presently a ban on all urban renewal plans in Canada financed by the Government of Canada?

2. When is it expected that the Government of Canada will formulate its policy on urban renewal projects?

Hon. Robert K. Andras (Minister without Portfolio): 1. No.

2. See the statement made by the Hon. R. K. Andras in the House of Commons December 18, 1969.

URBAN RENEWAL—PLANS AFFECTED BY SUSPENSION OF ASSISTANCE

Question No. 6—Mr. Gilbert:

Which urban renewal plans submitted to the federal government have been affected or cancelled by the suspension of all urban renewal projects funded by the Government of Canada?

Hon. Robert K. Andras (Minister without Portfolio): The processing of applications for financial assistance for urban renewal studies, the preparation of urban renewal schemes and the implementation of urban renewal schemes, was suspended following the announcement of August 14, 1969. The following is a list of applications received by Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation which have been affected by the suspension.

Questions

URBAN RENEWAL PROGRAM STUDIES

Question No. 11—Mr. Gilbert:

1. What specific studies have been undertaken regarding urban renewal programs in Canada as mentioned by the Minister responsible for Housing in his statement at the press conference in the National Press Conference Theatre, at 9:30 a.m. on Thursday, August 14, 1969?

2. Which civil servants or outside individuals or groups are working on each of these studies and when are each of them expected to be completed?

Hon. Robert K. Andras (Minister without Portfolio): 1. The comprehensive study of urban renewal policy currently underway covers the over-all social, physical and economic aspects of urban renewal.

2. The study is being undertaken by the officers of Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation responsible for urban renewal and the related professional services within the Corporation. The study will take into account the views of the provinces, municipalities, residents' associations, academics and other interested outside individuals or groups. It is anticipated that this study will be completed next year.

PUBLIC SERVICE JOB APPLICATIONS

Question No. 35—Mr. Gleave:

1. How many applications for jobs in the Public Service were there during each month of the year of 1968?

2. How many applications were successful?

3. How many applications were not successful because the RCMP would not grant security clearance?

4. Is the RCMP obliged to explain to the department, or the individual concerned, the reasons for their decision?

Mr. Yves Forest (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Privy Council): 1. These statistics are not available. It is the usual practice to destroy applications for candidates who are not appointed after a period of one year.

2. Same as above. Figures are available on the number of appointments by month to the Public Service commencing with the period July 1, 1968. They are listed as follows: July, 860; August, 1,138; September, 1,157; October, 1,234; November, 941; December, 3,048.

The total number of appointments to the Public Service for all of 1968 were 20,379.

3. It is not the Royal Canadian Mounted Police, but each department which hires an employee through the Public Service Commission that has the responsibility of ensuring that a prospective employee is not a security risk.

4. Not applicable.

[Mr. Andras.]

TAX CONCESSIONS, SHAHEEN NATURAL RESOURCES

Question No. 70—Mr. Orlikow:

1. When did Shaheen Natural Resources Inc., first apply to the Government of Canada regarding federal tax concessions for a refinery to be built on Trinity Bay, Newfoundland?

2. What was the response of the Government of Canada to this request?

3. What changes were made in the October 22, 1968 federal budget governing the tax-free status of Crown corporations that are under purchase option by private interests?

4. Has the Government of Canada now agreed to federal tax concessions for Shaheen Natural Resources of New York regarding this refinery and, if so, what are they?

5. For what reasons has the Government of Canada now allowed Shaheen Natural Resources Inc. of New York federal tax concessions for its refinery?

6. What is the estimated loss in federal government revenue due to these tax concessions?

7. What is the estimated period of tax-free operations of the refinery due to these federal tax concessions?

8. Is Mr. Charles R. Granger, a former Member of Parliament, an officer of Shaheen Natural Resources Inc., and if so, what is his position?

9. What other provincial or municipal tax concessions have been provided to Shaheen Natural Resources Inc. for its refinery?

Hon. E. J. Benson (Minister of Finance): 1. Shaheen Natural Resources Inc. did not make an application to the government of Canada regarding federal tax concessions for a refinery to be built on Trinity Bay. The government of the Province of Newfoundland did make representations to Ottawa concerning the tax position of this refinery and of certain other Newfoundland corporations.

2. Not applicable.

3. The Budget Speech on October 22, 1968 announced that Parliament would be asked to amend Section 62(1)(c) of the Income Tax Act. This was subsequently done by Section 14(1) of Chapter 44 of the Statutes of 1968-69.

4. No measures have been taken applicable to a specific company. The Income Tax Regulations were amended on August 15, 1969, by Order in Council P.C. 1969-1643 to allow a fast deduction of the capital cost of certain depreciable property. This was intended to ease the transition from the old to the new law provided by the amendment to Section 62(1)(c) of the Income Tax Act.

The amendment to the Regulations allows any corporation, commission or association in existence on October 22, 1968 that would have qualified for tax exemption under Section 62(1)(c) of the Income Tax Act, if that section had not been amended, to claim capital cost allowance at a rate of 100% in respect of property acquired by the corporation, commission or association before October 23, 1968, or after October 22, 1968 and before 1974 where the property is acquired under an agreement in writing made before October 23, 1968 and ratified by a provincial statute that came into force before October 23, 1968. By this amendment, all of the corporations affected were enabled to use the full cash flow of their businesses to meet debt obligations and repayment schedules which they undertook at a time when they did not expect to be subject to corporation income tax.

5. See reply to part 4.

6. Given the nature of accelerated capital cost allowance, there may be some postponement of federal tax by some of the corporations involved, but there should not be any loss of federal government revenues.

7. Not available. It will depend on the future profits of the refinery and its applicable capital cost allowances.

8. It is believed that in August 1968 he was appointed a Vice-President of Shaheen Natural Resources Company Incorporated.

9. This is not a matter within the administrative responsibility of the government.

"MANHATTAN" PROJECT—ASSERTION OF SOVEREIGNTY

Question No. 91—Mr. Thomson (Battleford-Kindersley):

1. Did the Government of Canada at any time in the course of the planning of the Manhattan project assert its sovereignty over the waters between the Arctic islands and, if so, in what way?

2. Does the Canadian Government have an obligation of any kind to undertake a rescue mission should a vessel run into trouble in the waters between the Arctic islands?

3. Does the Government of Canada have any plans to establish navigational aids in the Arctic?

Mr. Yves Forest (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Privy Council): I am informed by the Department of External Affairs and the Department of Transport as follows: 1. The government has outlined its position concerning the Manhattan exercise on a number of occasions and will in due course announce further measures that will be taken with respect to the waters of the Arctic archipelago.

2. Canadian legislation requires any Canadian ship at sea to go to the assistance of any other vessel that is in distress. No Canadian government has ever accepted direct responsibility for all rescue at sea, but the government has assumed a supporting role through the provision of an organization for the co-ordination of all marine rescue and has directed that all government ships will participate in these rescue efforts. There are no particular geographical limits to these undertakings and to the extent that they are practicable they would apply in Arctic waters in the same way as anywhere else.

3. Aids to navigation are currently established each season as required by traffic and further aids with possibly greater sophistication will be considered as traffic develops.

CBC SPORTS TELECAST SPONSORS

Question No. 98—Mr. Mather:

1. Which brewery company sponsors CBC Canadian football telecasts?

2. Which brewery company sponsors other CBC sports telecasts?

3. In August, was there a sponsor conflict which prevented the CBC from carrying, on a later newscast film, the remaining minutes of the Hamilton Tiger-Cat and Montreal Alouettes football game which was not televised due to a technical breakdown?

4. If so, what actions is the CBC taking to ensure that such conflicts do not reoccur?

[Translation]

Hon. Gérard Pelletier (Secretary of State): I am informed by the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation as follows: 1. Labatt Breweries of Canada Limited sponsor one-quarter of the CFL Football telecasts.

2. With respect to regularly scheduled CBC sports events coverage, Molson Breweries of Canada Limited sponsor one-third of each of the Hockey Night in Canada telecasts; Canadian Breweries Limited sponsor one-quarter of each of the NFL Football telecasts and, during the baseball seasons, sponsored 15 Montreal Expos games plus one-quarter of the World Series. With respect to TV sports reports, O'Keefe Brewing Company Limited, Canadian Breweries Limited and Labatt Breweries are the sponsors of local programs on some individual stations.

3. No. The coach's film could not be processed in time for the CBLT Sports Report on Saturday, August 9 but the two minutes that were missed were telecast over CBLT on the late night Sports Report on Monday August 11. It was decided not to schedule the film on the Sunday Sports Report in order to preclude the possibility of impairing relations with the CFL and the sponsor of the live telecast.

4. See answer No. 3.

"GUIDE TO RELATIVE PRECEDENCE AT OTTAWA"

Question No. 109—Mr. Howard (Skeena):

1. How many employees are engaged in all aspects of the publication "Guide to Relative Precedence at Ottawa"?

2. For each fiscal year since, and including 1965-66, what has been the total cost of all aspects of the said publication?

3. Is there any intention of discontinuing this publication and, if so, when?

[Translation]

Hon. Gérard Pelletier (Secretary of State): 1. Four.

2. 1965-66, $1,673.86; 1966-67, $1,969.55; 1967-68, $3,297.97; 1968-69, $7,025.65.

3. Consideration has not been given to discontinuing the publication.

COST AND REVENUE, CBC TELEVISION SHOWS

Question No. 174—Mr. Broadbent:

1. What is the cost to CBC-TV of each of the prime-time U.S. shows it imports?

2. What is the total cost to CBC-TV of each of the prime-time Canadian shows it presents?

3. What is total advertising revenue for Canadian prime-time shows and U.S. prime-time shows?

Hon. Gérard Pelletier (Secretary of State): I am informed by the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation as follows: 1 and 2. It has not been customary to require the CBC to disclose specific program costs since such details would affect the corporation's competitive position. However, it usually costs more to produce Canadian programs than to import U.S. programs.

3. No such breakdown is available.

FEDERAL FINANCIAL AID FOR URBAN MASS TRANSIT FACILITIES

Question No. 210—Mr. Mather:

1. Does the federal government make available to provincial or municipal administrations financial aid in regard to long-term planning and development of urban mass transit facilities?

[Mr. Pelletier.]

2. Is consideration being given to reviewing the present federal role in this matter?

Mr. Yves Forest (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Privy Council): I am informed by the Department of Regional Economic Expansion as follows: 1. The Department of Regional Economic Expansion may do so in slow growth regions.

2. No.

PRIVY COUNCIL PERSONNEL

Question No. 216—Mr. Orlikow:

1. How many people were employed in the Privy Council Office and/or the Prime Minister's Office as of September 1, 1963, 1965, 1967, 1969?

2. Of these people, what were the numbers receiving salaries in each of the ranges $4,000-$7,000; $7,000-$10,000; $10,000-$15,000; $15,000 plus?

Mr. J. E. Walker (Parliamentary Secretary to the Prime Minister): 1.

$ 4,000- 7,000	79	67	94	106
$ 7,000-10,000	25	12	18	37
$10,000-15,000	28	9	15	23
$15,000 plus	8	12	31	53
	140	100	158	219

Note: Figures are for September 1 in each year.

ELEVATOR DELIVERY POINTS

Question No. 285—Mr. Stewart (Marquette):

1. How many elevator delivery points are there for grain in each of the Provinces, Manitoba, Saskatchewan and Alberta?

2. Of these delivery points, by province, how many were unable to accept a 5-bushel quota at the crop year ending July 31, 1969?

3. By provinces, of these delivery points unable to accept a 5-bushel quota at the crop year ending July 31, 1969, how many were located on the C.P.R. and how many were on the C.N.R.?

4. As of October 28, 1969, how many of these points have been able to complete the 5-bushel quota for the last crop year?

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister without Portfolio): 1. Manitoba, 324; Saskatchewan, 983; Alberta including Peace River Block of British Columbia, 509; Total, 1,816.

2. Number of stations submitting deferred delivery permits: Manitoba, 166; Saskatchewan, 683; Alberta including Peace River Block of British Columbia, 281; Total, 1,130.

683. Alberta including Peace River Block of British Columbia, C.N.R., 124; C.P.R. 97; C.N.R. and C.P.R., 6; N.A.R., 49; G.S.L., 4; C.N.R. and N.A.R., 1; Total, 281

4. Information not available as bulk of Deferred Delivery Permits were not mailed until October 18, 1969.

PUBLIC WORKS—PROJECT TENDERS, CONTRACT AWARDS

Question No. 297—Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre):

1. Would the Minister of Public Works give consideration to publishing the complete list of tenders for each project in his monthly announcement of major contract awards?

2. Would the Minister also give consideration to publishing the cumulative amount of contract awards for each company awarded another contract?

Hon. Arthur Laing (Minister of Public Works): 1. and 2. After careful examination it is considered that the administrative procedures involved in providing the requested information would be very onerous. Therefore it will not be possible to institute such a report on a regular basis. Lists of tenderers for any specific project will continue to be available on request.

HOUSING—ALLOCATION OF FUNDS TO PROVINCES

Question No. 319—Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West):

1. Has the Minister without Portfolio, responsible for housing, or any member of the government received a brief from the Government of the Province of Alberta complaining about the apparent unfair allocation of funds between provinces for housing arising out of the application of general monetary policy changes?

2 Has a reply been given and what was the nature of the reply?

Mr. Yves Forest (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Privy Council): The Hon. F. C. Colborne, the Minister of Municipal Affairs for the Province of Alberta presented a housing brief from the Province of Alberta to the Hon. Robert Andras on Monday, the 27th October. The brief dealt mainly with the flow of mortgage funds and in the private sector recommended that consideration be given to shielding the flow of mortgage funds from the full effect of the anti-inflation program. In the public sector, the brief gave the strongest support to the policy of the federal government of using the largest part of the Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation capital budget to provide housing for low income families. Mr. Colborne was assured that the priorities of the provinces would be carefully considered in developing the 1970 program.

A copy of this brief was referred to the Prime Minister for information by the Minister without Portfolio responsible for housing.

COMPLAINTS RESPECTING POSTAL SERVICE

Question No. 325—Mr. Coates:

How many written complaints have been received by the Postmaster General and his department regarding the service presently available to the public since June 25, 1968?

Hon. Eric W. Kierans (Postmaster General and Minister of Communications): 16,217.

Note: The Post Office handled, in total more than 7 billion pieces of mail in this 17 month period.

In addition to the figure stated, departmental managers at headquarters and the field received a limited number of complaints of the miscellaneous category. These are not recorded and determining the total number would involve search of thousands of files at headquarters and in hundreds of field components, entailing delay in replying and a very substantial amount of labour hours and cost.

CBC PROGRAMS ON PROGRESSIVE CONSERVATIVE AND NDP MEETINGS

Question No. 340—Mr. Macquarrie:

1. Between October 9-14, 1969, how many CBC "Viewpoint" or "Preview Commentary" programs dealt with the Niagara Falls Conference of the Progressive Conservative Party of Canada?

2. When and by whom were such broadcasts made?

3 For what other CBC programs (television or radio) was the conference the subject matter?

4. How many actuality broadcasts originated from the Niagara Falls conference throughout its proceedings?

5. What was the total coverage given to the Niagara Falls Conference by the CBC?

6. How many interviews with participants at the Niagara Falls conference were carried by the CBC radio-television networks and who were the persons interviewed?

7. What sessions of the Niagara Falls conference were broadcast "live" by the CBC radio or television and what is the total time of such coverage?

8. How many CBC "Viewpoint" or "Preview Commentary" programs dealt with the 1969 convention of the New Democratic Party held at Winnipeg?

9. When and by whom were such broadcasts made?

10. For what other CBC programs (television and radio) was the convention the subject matter?

Questions

11. How many actuality broadcasts originated from the New Democratic Party convention in Winnipeg?

12. What was the total coverage (TV and radio) given to the New Democratic Party convention by the CBC?

13. How many interviews with delegates to the New Democratic Party convention were carried by the CBC (television and radio) and who were the persons interviewed?

14. On how many special affairs programs, news casts or public affairs programs did Professor Melville Watkins appear?

15. Is it the policy of the CBC to allocate time on its networks to political conventions of opposition parties in inverse ratio to the proportion of the votes received by the respective parties in the last preceding election?

Hon. Gerard Pelletier (Secretary of State): I am informed by the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation as follows: 1. There were no "Viewpoint" programs on the subject during the period specified but there were two following the Conference. There was one "Preview Commentary" program on the subject during the Oct. 9-14 period.

2. "Viewpoint"—Oct. 15 by W. A. Wilson (Montreal Gazette) and Oct. 21 by Dennis Smith (Trent University). "Preview Commentary"—Oct. 14 by Ron Blain.

11. Closing address by T. C. Douglas plus 22 actuality clips used as items on the English network; 19 actuality clips used as items on the French network.

12. Total CBC radio and television coverage on the English networks was just over 3 hours; total on the French networks was 1⅓ hours.

13. Fifteen. T. C. Douglas (2), David Lewis (2), Melville Watkins (2), Charles Taylor (3), Laurier Lapierre, Mr. Lassiter, Dawn Carrol, Roy Atkinson, Enid Paige, Rolland Morin.

14. Five appearances in news programs, three in current affairs programs and two in special programs from the convention; plus one French network appearance.

15. It is the policy of the CBC to make convention coverage decisions on the basis of program judgment following assessment of the degree and kind of broadcast coverage warranted. Special attention is paid to leadership contests where the party concerned is consulted to ensure the most effective coverage possible.

GRAIN MOVEMENT MEASURES

Question No. 356—Mr. Burton:

What measures, other than the block system, are being considered to deal with the problem of grain movement?

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister without Portfolio): The Grains Group which was recently established by the government, is examining further measures to improve the grain handling and transportation system. Specific measures considered feasible will be outlined from time to time.

COMBINING OF SOCIAL WELFARE TAXES

Question No. 386—Mr. Robinson:

Will the federal government consider the advisability of combining the Old Age Security Tax, Canada Pension Plan Tax, Guaranteed Income Supplement Tax in order to provide one comprehensive payment for the aged, widowed and orphaned?

Hon. John C. Munro (Minister of National Health and Welfare): The purpose of the Old Age Security program is to provide for Canada's senior citizens a universal flat rate pension as a base on which they can build for their retirement years. This plan is financed by a special tax on personal income, corporation income and sales. These taxes are not identified with the individuals who pay them and eligibility for the pension is not based on their payment.

The Canada Pension Plan is complementary to the Old Age Security program and is intended to provide Canadians with additional financial security through the payment of retirement, disability and survivors benefits. This is a contributory plan under which the amount of the graduated benefits paid is related to the earnings of employees and self-employed persons.

When the Canada Pension Plan was introduced it was realized that there would be some persons who would not qualify for full benefits during the ten-year period of transition while there would be others who would not have any entitlement due to non-employment. The Guaranteed Income Supplement program was brought into being as a means of augmenting the Old Age Security pension for this group of persons. Payments are made from the Old Age Security Fund.

Since these programs are based on two different principles, namely graduated benefits and a flat rate benefit, and since the Canada Pension Plan is not operative in Quebec, which has a comparable provincial plan, it would be extremely difficult to combine them as suggested. If in the future a decision is made to effect any changes, they will be announced at the appropriate time.

PAYMENTS TO NORTHLAND NAVIGATION COMPANY

Question No. 411—Mr. Howard (Skeena):

For each fiscal year since and including 1964-65, how much money has been paid to Northland Navigation Company for (a) providing service to B.C. Coastal communities (b) carrying of mail (c) other purposes?

Mr. Yves Forest (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Privy Council):

	The Department of Indian Affairs and Northern Development	The Canadian Transport Commission
(a) 1964-65	$15,000	$387,448
1965-66	18,000	388,000

CBC POLICY ON POLITICAL CONVENTIONS

Question No. 439—Mr. Broadbent:

What is the policy of the CBC regarding radio television coverage of conventions of the major political parties in Canada?

[Translation]

Hon. Gérard Pelletier (Secretary of State): I am informed by the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation as follows: It is the policy of the CBC to make convention coverage decisions on the basis of program judgment following assessment of the degree and kind of broadcast coverage warranted. Special attention is paid to leadership contests where the party concerned is consulted to ensure the most effective coverage possible.

ASSOCIATION QUÉBECOISE DES TECHNIQUES DE L'EAU BRIEF

Question No. 449—Mr. Matte:

1. Did the federal government receive a brief from the Association québecoise des techniques de l'eau concerning the management of water resources and, if so, has the government reached an agreement which would extend to the Province of Quebec the same benefits as the other provinces?

2. Does the federal government intend to accept the AQTE recommendation advocating the creation of a federal water board in which the federal and provincial governments, various agencies and private enterprise would participate?

3. By what methods does the federal government intend to take maximum advantage of this natural resource?

Mr. R. J. Orange (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): 1. No brief has been received to date but recent correspondence from officers of the Association indicates such a brief may be expected in the near future. Canada is prepared at any time to negotiate with the province of Quebec toward the development of an agreement or agreements concerning the management of water resources. The proposed Canada Water Act will provide the appropriate legislative basis for such agreements.

2. Presumably the Association québecoise des techniques de l'eau recommendation will be contained in its Briefs, which will have to be received and studied before any comment can be offered.

3. Enactment of the proposed Canada Water Act will provide the basic legislation which will facilitate federal-provincial co-operative activities concerning the management of water resources.

URBAN RENEWAL, QUEBEC—SUSPENSION OF CONTRIBUTIONS

Question No. 467—Mr. Matte:

1. Did the federal government suspend its contributions to urban renewal programs in the Province of Québec and, if so, does it intend to grant to the Government of Québec equivalent fiscal points in order to permit projects already planned or under way to be completed without delay?

2. If not, is it the government's intention to grant any other assistance to the Government of Québec in the field of housing?

Hon. Robert K. Andras (Minister without Portfolio): 1. The announcements made on August 14, and December 18, 1969, regarding the federal government's policy in relation to urban renewal schemes had application in Québec as it had in all other provinces.

2. Pursuant to an administrative agreement made between Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation and the Québec Housing Corporation, CMHC is making loans to the Québec Housing Corporation in respect of low rental housing projects, public housing projects and student housing projects under the relevant provisions of the National Housing Act, 1954. This agreement covers the period to March 31, 1970. The amount provided for such loans is $124.9 million.

LOANS TO STUDENTS IN QUEBEC AND ONTARIO

Question No. 473—Mr. Latulippe:

1. In 1968-1969, how much has the federal government granted in loans to students in (a) Quebec (b) Ontario?

2. What is the percentage granted to Quebec students in relation to Ontario.

Mr. Yves Forest (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Privy Council): I am informed by the Department of Finance as follows: 1. (a) No loans. Quebec does not participate in the Canada Student Loans Plan. (See 2 below) (b) 53,911 loans in the amount of $27,538,820.

2. The Province of Quebec has its own student assistance program and has chosen not to participate in the Canada Student Loans Plan. An alternative payment is made to Quebec each year and is determined by applying the ratio of the general population in the 18 to 24 year age group in Quebec to the same population in the rest of Canada at the beginning of the loan year to the total of the statutory costs incurred by the federal government during that loan year.

The alternative payments to Quebec have been as follows:

Loan year in respect of which payment made	Amount of payment
1964/65	74,262
1965/66	757,448
1966/67	1,230,572
1967/68	2,402,552
1968/69	2,915,698

INTEREST FREE LOANS TO PRAIRIE GRAIN GROWERS

Question No. 474—Mr. Robinson:

1. How many prairie grain farmers took advantage of the interest free federal government loans after August 1, 1969?

2. How many took the maximum loan and how many of them actually needed the loan?

Questions

3. Is there any definite time limit as to when the loan is to be repaid and, if so, when and, if not, what is the maximum time the interest free loan can remain unpaid?

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister without Portfolio): 1. As of December 12, 1969, the Canadian Wheat Board records indicate that 97,653 producers took advantage in the current crop year of the Prairie Grain Advance Payments Act.

2. 5,443 producers took the maximum advance payment of $6,000. The Canadian Wheat Board records do not indicate how many producers actually need the advance payment.

3. Under the Prairie Grain Advance Payments Act the advance payment is to be repaid within a reasonable period of time after the quotas have been increased to the extent that the producer can deliver sufficient grain from which one-half of the gross value, when deducted, would equal the original advance payment.

VIEWER RATING, "SING ALONG JUBILEE"

Question No. 486—Mr. Coates:

1. What is the present viewer rating of the program "Sing Along Jubilee" on the CBC Television Network which replaced "Don Messer's Jubilee"?

2. What was the rating of "Don Messer's Jubilee" at the same time last year?

Hon. Gérard Pelletier (Secretary of State): I am informed by the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation as follows: 1. On the metro network of eleven CBC-owned TV stations which carry "Singalong Jubilee", usually at 9-9:30 p.m. on Fridays, the program currently has an average weekly audience of about 1.14 million viewers. "Singalong Jubilee" is not carried by any of the CBC affiliated stations which make up the full CBC network.

2. At this same time last year, in that same part of the country now served by these eleven stations, "Don Messer", seen normally at 8:30-9:00 p.m. on Fridays, had virtually the same size of audience, an average 1.13 million viewers weekly. On the full network of over 40 CBC and affiliated stations which carried "Don Messer" throughout the country, the program's total weekly audience, at this time last season, averaged about 2.71 million viewers.

CABLE TELEVISION, CALGARY, EDMONTON, REGINA, SASKATOON

Question No. 495—Mr. Southam:

Is it the intention of the government to make available to the cities of Calgary, Edmonton, Regina and Saskatoon, microwave transmission for cable television purposes and, if so, how soon can this service be expected?

[Mr. Robinson.]

[Translation]

Hon. Gérard Pelletier (Secretary of State): I am informed by the Canadian Radio-Television Commission as follows: In a fully-documented decision (CRTC No. 69-397) issued on December 3, 1969, the Canadian Radio-Television Commission stated: "The Commission will not licence broadcasting receiving undertakings (CATV) based on the use of microwave or other technical systems, for the wholesale importation of programs from distant U.S. stations and thereby the enlargement of the Canadian audience and market areas of U.S. networks or stations."

INDIAN-ESKIMO RADIO NETWORK

Question No. 499—Mr. Howard (Skeena):

1. Is the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation giving favourable consideration to the request of the Indian-Eskimo Association that a radio network be established to serve the Indians, Eskimos and Metis?

2. What assistance is being provided by the Canadian Radio-Television Commission in assisting the native peoples in the above project?

[Translation]

Hon. Gérard Pelletier (Secretary of State): 1. I am informed by the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation that the Corporation has not had an opportunity to study the details of this request which was presented recently to the Canadian Radio-Television Commission. However, the CBC would be prepared to consider the request as part of its continuing review of overall CBC coverage and programming development.

2. I am informed by the Canadian Radio-Television Commission that on November 10, 1969, the Canadian Radio-Television Commission received a delegation from the National Indian Brotherhood of Canada, The Canadian Metis Society, The Indian Eskimo Association of Canada and representatives of the Alberta Native Communications Society. A brief was presented which has been studied. Spokesmen for the Commission advised the delegation to concentrate their efforts on producing programmes for Indians, Eskimos and Metis and in securing fuller distribution through existing facilities, rather than become involved in setting up separate facilities.

The CRTC is engaged in studies with the Department of Communications and the CBC on the extension of services in general, and in particular with the requirements of this group.

ANSWERING OF ORDER PAPER QUESTIONS

Question No. 502—Mr. Robinson:

1. Who is the individual in each department of government responsible for seeing that questions placed on the Order Paper of the House of Commons are answered?

2. What department of government is responsible for co-ordinating the answers to questions placed on the Order Paper?

3. (a) What are the qualifications of each person so designated in each department of government to answer questions placed on the Order Paper (b) is this function a part of his or her duty (c) what other duties does the individual perform (d) how many years has each been with their respective department (e) what is the degree of competence required for such a position?

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (President of the Privy Council): 1. The Minister.

2. The President of the Queen's Privy Council for Canada.

3. (a) A Minister of the Crown must be a member of the Queen's Privy Council for Canada and a member of the House of Commons or of the Senate or must become a member of the House of Commons or of the Senate shortly after becoming a Minister; (b) in general, a Minister's function is to be answerable to Parliament both for matters of policy and administration; (c) a Minister may perform many other duties in addition to being responsible for the administration of his department; (d) this is a matter of public record; and (e) the maximum competence obtainable is required.

FREE TIME FOR POLITICAL PARTIES ON CBC

Question No. 511—Mr. Matte:

Have requests been made to the CBC concerning the possibility of making free time available each week to each of the political parties and, if so, when will this policy be implemented and, if not, is such action being considered?

[Translation]

Hon. Gérard Pelletier (Secretary of State): I am informed by the CBC that, to the best of the Corporation's knowledge, no such requests have been received and the CBC is not considering such a policy.

LOAN APPLICATIONS, P.E.I.

Question No. 521—Mr. McQuaid:

1. How many applications were received during the past fiscal year from the Province of Prince Edward Island for (a) Farm Credit Corporation Loans (b) Farm Improvement Loans (c) Small Business Loans (d) Fisheries Improvement Loans?

2. How many of the applications were accepted for each of the above categories and what was the total amount loaned in each case?

Mr. Yves Forest (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Privy Council): I am informed by the Farm Credit Corporation and the Department of Finance as follows: 1. (a) 164, (b), (c) and (d). Information is not available. Under the administration of these Acts, the chartered banks report particulars only in respect of loans which have been approved. No record exists, therefore, of applications for loans which may have been declined by lenders.

2. (a) 112 loans for total amount of $2,612,200, in the fiscal year ended March 31, 1969. (b) 399 loans for $923,035 in the calendar year ended December 31, 1968. (c) 19 loans for $190,675 in the calendar year ended December 31, 1968. (d) 22 loans for $42,290 in the fiscal year ended March 31, 1969.

CESSATION OF USE OF SILVER IN COINS

Question No. 531—Mr. Barnett:

1. When did the Royal Canadian Mint cease to use silver in the minting of Canadian coins?

2. For a period immediately prior to this date, did the market value of silver in Canadian coins exceed the face value of the coins, and, if so, for how long a period?

3. What is the actual or estimated cost to the government during this period resulting from excess of market value over face value of silver used in minting of Canadian coins?

Hon. James Richardson (Minister of Supply and Services): In so far as Royal Canadian Mint is concerned: 1. On August 1, 1968.

2. In September 1967, the Mint reduced the silver content of coins from 80 per cent to 50 per cent, which gave a break-even point of $2.67⅔ per ounce troy of silver. Market price for silver exceeded this point for one day only in 1968.

3. None. The minting of coins composed of 50 per cent silver resulted in seignorage to the government.

Questions

PURCHASE OF YACHT BY CANEX

Question No. 554—Mr. Winch:

1. Has CANEX, operating at CFB in Chilliwack, British Columbia, decided to purchase a $35,000.00 yacht out of its funds and, if so, who made the proposal and was it carried by a democratic vote of the members?

2. Is this for the use of officer staff or all ranks?

3. What opportunity will there be for non-officer ranks to use the yacht?

4. Was the base commander in any way involved with the decision to purchase this yacht?

5. Could this money have been spent to revive community facilities for all ranks?

Hon. Léo Cadieux (Minister of National Defence): 1. The Canadian Forces Exchange System (CANEX) is responsible for issuing directives and guidelines to the Non-Public resale outlets in the Canadian Forces. The original proposal to purchase a 42 ft. ketch which will sleep eight was submitted by the Base Commander to the Base Fund Committee (of which he is not a member). After thorough discussion by the Committee, a vote was taken from all members of the all-ranks committee representing all units on the base, and it was agreed that the Canadian Forces Central Fund be asked to lend the Base Fund Committee, Canadian Forces Base Chilliwack, B.C., the necessary non-public money to purchase this sailing boat which would be berthed in Vancouver for the use of personnel at CFB Chilliwack when they proceeded on vacation.

2. The aim is to provide recreational sailing facilities for all ranks.

3. The schedule of fees is scaled so that junior ranks will be able to participate equally with senior non-commissioned officers and officers. For example, should three privates and their families decide to rent the ketch for one week, they would share the cost equally, i.e. $27. per family. At the present time, 19 men and 10 officers are undergoing winter training in sailing.

4. Only insofar as he proposed the idea to the Base Fund Committee for study.

5. The purchase of this sailing boat is only a small part of a comprehensive non-public fund program now underway to provide the military community at Canadian Forces Base, Chilliwack, with recreational facilities. The extension to the Junior Ranks Club, swimming pool, curling rink is now under construction and is expected to be completed on target. During the past year an auto-hobby club, a bowling alley and an extension to an all ranks lounge was completed. Further community facilities for the use and enjoyment of all ranks at Canadian Forces Base, Chilliwack, B.C., are in the planning stage.

IMPORTS OF DDT

Question No. 573—Mr. Harding:

1. How many pounds of DDT were imported in each of the years 1960 to 1968 inclusive and in that part of 1969 for which records are available?

2. From what countries was DDT imported?

3. What was the total value of these imports?

4. Is DDT produced in Canada and, if so, where and in what quantities for each of the above years?

Mr. Yves Forest (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Privy Council): I am informed by the Dominion Bureau of Statistics and the Department of Industry, Trade and Commerce as follows: 1. and 3. See table p. 2225.

2. DDT is imported only from the United States of America.

4. There was no production of DDT in Canada during the years 1960-68, inclusive, nor is it being produced at present.

Imports of DDT for the Years 1964 to August 1969

NUCLEAR RADIATION TESTING PROGRAM

Question No. 574—Mr. Robinson:

1. Does the federal government have a program of testing the atmosphere for nuclear radiation and, if not, for what reason and, if so, how many locations are there in Canada, how often are samples taken and what is the permissible levels of fallout and has this level been reached at any time in Canada and, if so, where and what action was taken as a result?

2. Have any studies been carried out in Canada to determine the effects of nuclear fallout on the population and, if so, what are the results and, if not, will such studies be carried out as a preventive measure for protecting Canadians from the effects of nuclear fallout?

3. Have any studies been carried out to determine the effect of Strontium 90 entering adult bodies by food or air and, if not, for what reason and will such studies be carried out and, if so, what were the findings?

Hon. John C. Munro (Minister of National Health and Welfare): 1. The Department of National Health and Welfare has been regularly testing the atmosphere for nuclear radiation since 1958. Samples of air particulates are collected continuously at 24 stations throughout Canada and analysed daily in Ottawa. In assessing the data, the Department of National Health and Welfare is guided by the Recommendations of the International Commission on Radiological Protection. These Recommendations identify various "permissible" levels for specific radioisotopes, but nuclear fallout may consist of mixtures of radioisotopes and its "permissible" level varies accordingly. The "permissible" level relates to conditions of continuous exposure and the Commission has recommended that, in practice, the annual average level should be used in health assessments. The annual average at all the Department's stations has remained well below the "permissible" level each year.

2. No direct determination of the effect has been made. For a scientifically valid study, extensive data would be needed on the incidence of various diseases, both in population groups exposed to fallout and in population groups not so exposed. Sufficient data of this kind are not available in Canada.

3. The Department of National Health and Welfare is carrying out a comprehensive program to determine the amounts of Strontium-90 entering adult bodies by food or air but it has not been able to determine directly the effect of Strontium-90 on the incidence of disease for the reason given in answer to question 2.

DESIGNATED REGIONS, NEWFOUNDLAND

Question No. 577—Mr. Burton:

1. Did the Government of Canada consult the Government of Newfoundland regarding the selection of designated regions in that Province under the Regional Development Incentives Act and, if so, when and in what manner did the consultations take place?

2. What specific proposal or proposals were placed before the Government of Newfoundland by the Government of Canada?

3. What view was expressed by the Government of Newfoundland regarding the federal proposal?

4. Did the Government of Newfoundland submit any counter-proposals and, if so, what proposals were made?

Mr. Martin P. O'Connell (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Regional Economic Expansion): 1. Yes, by discussions.

1, 2, 3 and 4. The details of such consultations are confidential matters.

DESIGNATED REGIONS, QUEBEC

Question No. 578—Mr. Burton:

1. Did the Government of Canada consult the Government of Quebec regarding the selection of designated regions in that Province under the Regional Development Incentives Act and, if so, when and in what manner did the consultations take place?

2. What specific proposal or proposals were placed before the Government of Quebec by the Government of Canada?

3. What view was expressed by the Government of Quebec regarding the federal proposal?

4. Did the Government of Quebec submit any counter-proposals and, if so, what proposals were made?

Mr. Martin P. O'Connell (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Regional Economic Expansion): 1. Yes, by discussions.

1, 2, 3 and 4. The details of such consultations are confidential matters.

DESIGNATED REGIONS, ONTARIO

Question No. 579—Mr. Burton:

1. Did the Government of Canada consult the Government of Ontario regarding the selection of designated regions in that Province under the Regional Development Incentives Act and, if so, when and in what manner did the consultations take place?

2. What specific proposal or proposals were placed before the Government of Ontario by the Government of Canada?

3. What view was expressed by the Government of Ontario regarding the federal proposal?

DESIGNATED REGIONS, MANITOBA

Question No. 580—Mr. Burton:

1. Did the Government of Canada consult the Government of Manitoba regarding the selection of designated regions in that Province under the Regional Development Incentives Act, and, if so, when and in what manner did the consultations take place?

2. What specific proposal or proposals were placed before the Government of Manitoba by the Government of Canada?

3. What view was expressed by the Government of Manitoba regarding the federal proposal?

4. Did the Government of Manitoba submit any counter-proposals and, if so, what proposals were made?

Mr. Martin P. O'Connell (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Regional Economic Expansion): 1. Yes, by discussions.

1, 2, 3 and 4. The details of such consultations are confidential matters.

[Mr. Burton.]

DESIGNATED REGIONS, SASKATCHEWAN

Question No. 581—Mr. Burton:

1. Did the Government of Canada consult the Government of Saskatchewan regarding the selection of designated regions in that Province under the Regional Development Incentives Act, and, if so, when and in what manner did the consultations take place?

2. What specific proposal or proposals were placed before the Government of Saskatchewan by the Government of Canada?

3. What view was expressed by the Government of Saskatchewan regarding the federal proposal?

4. Did the Government of Saskatchewan submit any counter-proposals and, if so, what proposals were made?

Mr. Martin P. O'Connell (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Regional Economic Expansion): 1. Yes, by discussions.

1, 2, 3 and 4. The details of such consultations are confidential matters.

DESIGNATED REGIONS, ALBERTA

Question No. 582—Mr. Burton:

1. Did the Government of Canada consult the Government of Alberta regarding the selection of designated regions in that Province under the Regional Development Incentives Act and, if so, when and in what manner did the consultations take place?

2. What specific proposal or proposals were placed before the Government of Alberta by the Government of Canada?

3. What view was expressed by the Government of Alberta regarding the federal proposal?

4. Did the Government of Alberta submit any counter-proposals and, if so, what proposals were made?

Mr. Martin P. O'Connell (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Regional Economic Expansion): 1. Yes, by discussions and correspondence.

1, 2, 3 and 4. The details of such consultations are confidential matters except for correspondence tabled in reply to Notice of Motion No. 140.

DESIGNATED REGIONS, BRITISH COLUMBIA

Question No. 583—Mr. Burton:

1. Did the Government of Canada consult the Government of British Columbia regarding the selection of designated regions in that Province under the Regional Development Incentives Act and, if so, when and in what manner did the consultations take place?

2. What specific proposal or proposals were placed before the Government of British Columbia by the Government of Canada?

3. What view was expressed by the Government of British Columbia regarding the federal proposal?

4. Did the Government of British Columbia submit any counter-proposals and, if so, what proposals were made?

Mr. Martin P. O'Connell (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Regional Economic mic Expansion): 1. Yes, by discussions.

1, 2, 3 and 4. The details of such consultations are confidential matters.

POST OFFICE—DATA INPUT UNIT INSTALLATIONS

Question No. 585—Mr. Macquarrie:

1. In what post offices were "data input units" (manufactured by Pylon Electronics Development Co.) installed?

2. How many such units were installed and at what total cost?

3. What other equipment or material was installed to make these units functional?

4. At what cost for material and installation?

5. For how long was the equipment in Parts (1) and (3) above used?

6. For what reason was its use discontinued?

7. How does the function of "time clocks" in Canadian post offices differ from that in use before the installation of "data input units"?

8. What reasons prompted the introduction of "data input units"?

Hon. Eric W. Kierans (Postmaster General and Minister of Communications): 1. Toronto Post Office. These units were installed and maintained by Bell Canada.

2. (a) 77; (b) $19,500 for wiring and cabling.

3. A central scanner which is an electronic scanning device which can poll up to 100 data input lines. Magnetic tapes required for the two tape drives which were used by the central scanner as data capturing devices.

4. Total cost for installation and material, $41,333.67 (this includes the $19,500 for 2 above).

5. From February 1968 until November 1969. It was a Pilot experiment necessary for the development of a future integrated Management Information System.

6. It was considered that information sufficient to establish the feasibility of using data input devices in a Post Office operation environment had been collected. Continuing the operation would have entailed unnecessary additional costs.

7. Prior to the advent of the input devices Toronto used a standard I.B.M. time clock which provided a visible printed record of the time clocked in. The data input device functioned manually, except that there was no visible record of the time a man clocked in or out, as this was captured (or relayed immediately) to the central scanner and kept on magnetic tape. An employee determined a successful clocking by receiving a "Remove" light signal or, on an unsuccessful clocking, a "Reinsert" light signal on the input device.

8. The electronic data input devices were tested in the Pilot Project to examine the potential of a more immediate and accurate form of data collection (it did not have to be transposed to a machine readable electronic configuration). This data was then manipulated to prepare production control and personnel information reports.

CBOT-TV COVERAGE OF OTTAWA CIVIC AFFAIRS

Question No. 586—Mr. Coates:

1. What participation has CBC Television through CBOT TV taken in civic affairs in Ottawa and the Ottawa coverage area associated with the Civic Election held December 1, 1969?

2. How many hours of free time were made available to those involved in Civic Election campaigns within the area?

3. What was the total cost to the CBC of their participation in civic affairs?

PUBLIC SERVANTS' RIGHT TO STRIKE

Question No. 591—Mr. Southam:

Is it the intention of the government to take away the right of Public Servants to strike as was suggested on November 28, 1969 by the President of the Canadian Manufacturers Association?

Hon. C. M. Drury (President of the Treasury Board): The suggestion made by the Canadian Manufacturers Association and by other individuals and organizations will be reviewed at the appropriate time along with many other suggestions which have been made from time to time to amend the Public Service Staff Relations Act.

SELECTION OF DESIGNATED REGIONS, NEW BRUNSWICK

Question No. 596—Mr. Burton:

1. Did the Government of Canada consult the Government of New Brunswick regarding the selection of designated regions in that Province under the Regional Development Incentives Act and, if so, when and in what manner did the consultations take place?

2. What specific proposal or proposals were placed before the Government of New Brunswick by the Government of Canada?

3. What view was expressed by the Government of New Brunswick regarding the federal proposal?

4. Did the Government of New Brunswick submit any counter-proposals and, if so, what proposals were made?

Mr. Martin P. O'Connell (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Regional Economic Expansion): 1. Yes, by discussions.

1, 2, 3 and 4. The details of such consultations are confidential matters.

SELECTION OF DESIGNATED REGIONS, P.E.I.

Question No. 597—Mr. Burton:

1. Did the Government of Canada consult the Government of Prince Edward Island regarding the selection of designated regions in that Province under the Regional Development Incentives Act and, if so, when and in what manner did the consultations take place?

2. What specific proposal or proposals were placed before the Government of Prince Edward Island by the Government of Canada?

3. What view was expressed by the Government of Prince Edward Island regarding the federal proposal?

4. Did the Government of Prince Edward Island submit any counter-proposals and, if so, what proposals were made?

Mr. Martin P. O'Connell (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Regional Economic Expansion): 1. Yes, by discussions.

1, 2, 3 and 4. The details of such consultations are confidential matters.

SELECTION OF DESIGNATED REGIONS, NOVA SCOTIA

Question No. 598—Mr. Burton:

1. Did the Government of Canada consult the Government of Nova Scotia regarding the selection of designated regions in that Province under the Regional Development Incentives Act and, if so, when and in what manner did the consultations take place?

2. What specific proposal or proposals were placed before the Government of Nova Scotia by the Government of Canada?

3. What view was expressed by the Government of Nova Scotia regarding the federal proposal?

4. Did the Government of Nova Scotia submit any counter-proposals and, if so, what proposals were made?

Mr. Martin P. O'Connell (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Regional Economic Expansion): 1. Yes, by discussions.

1, 2, 3 and 4. The details of such consultations are confidential matters.

PLANS FOR LEBRETON FLATS

Question No. 599—Mr. Mather:

Is the Government of Canada presently reconsidering its plans regarding LeBreton Flats and, if so, is it giving favorable consideration to turning the Flats into a National Park?

Mr. Yves Forest (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Privy Council): I am informed by the National Capital Commission and the Department of Indian Affairs and Northern Development as follows: (a) The prospective use of LeBreton Flats has been under study for some time by the National Capital Commission. (b) No.

"PART-TIME" EMPLOYEES, INDIAN AFFAIRS AND NORTHERN DEVELOPMENT

Question No. 602—Mr. Nesbitt:

1. Has Treasury Board acknowledged that so-called "part-time" employees of the Department of Indian Affairs and Northern Development were "full-time" employees under the terms of Section 2 of the Public Service Staff Relations Act, and hence entitled to full benefits in terms of salary, isolation pay, cost-of-living allowances, pensions, etc.?

2. Did the Department of Indian Affairs and Northern Development, before the Treasury Board acknowledgement was made, spend public funds in legal action to oppose the argument that such employees were full-time employees and, if so, how much was spent?

3. How many "part-time" employees were reclassified as "full-time" employees after complaints were lodged against the Department of Indian Affairs and Northern Development?

4. (a) Have all the affected employees now been reclassified as full-time (b) how many employees were affected?

5. Have all reclassified employees been retroactively paid the salary, allowances, pension and other benefits to which they were entitled as of the 1967 date of the passage of the Public Service Staff Relations Act and, (a) if so, what was the cost of the settlement (b) if not, how many have been so paid and how many remain to be paid?

6. (a) Have all the former employees, who should have been reclassified during their term of employment, received retroactive payments and, if not, how many have been so paid and how many remain to be paid (b) what will be the total cost of this part of the settlement?

7. What were the occupations of the employees involved in this reclassification?

8. How many of these employees were Indians or Eskimos?

Mr. Russell C. Honey (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): 1. Treasury Board acknowledges that if a part-time employee of the Department of Indian Affairs and Northern Development is an employee for purposes of Section 2 of the Public Service Staff Relations Act, that person would be entitled to the benefits flowing from the applicable collective agreement.

2. No.

3. One.

4. (a) Yes; (b) one.

5. Yes. (a) $2,674.32; (b) not applicable.

6. (a) This Department gives full consideration to all requests from former employees as to the possibility of their warranting retroactive payments. No such claims have been identified as requiring such payment to date. (b) Not applicable.

7. Indian Day School caretaker.

8. The employee is Indian.

RADAR AND COMMUNICATION SCHOOL, CANADIAN FORCES BASE, KINGSTON

Question No. 629—Mr. McKinley:

What is the estimated cost of additional facilities or of renovating facilities that will be required at Canadian Forces Base Kingston to facilitate the Radar and Communication School now at Canadian Forces Base Clinton for the Department of National Defence?

Hon. Léo Cadieux (Minister of National Defence): Prior to integration, the three services operated similar training facilities for the electronic and mechanical trades at Clinton, Kingston and Camp Borden. It is now proposed to operate one school for each of these two trade groups at Kingston and Borden. It is estimated that it will initially cost up to $500,000 to relocate the Communications and Radar School into existing accommodation at Canadian Forces Base Kingston. In the long term, certain temporary facilities will have to be replaced or expanded but detailed studies and estimates will not be available until spring of 1970. As announced on August 13, 1969, the closing of CFB Clinton will result, when completed, in estimated annual savings of $4.6 million.

CBC-TV SERVICE, KOOTENAY REGION

Question No. 630—Mr. Harding:

1. (a) Is CBC-TV for the Kootenay area of British Columbia being brought into that district from Calgary, Alberta instead of from Vancouver, B.C. and, if so, for what reason (b) when was this service instituted?

2. Does CBC-TV plan on giving the Kootenay area access to all CBC programs and news through Vancouver, B.C. and, if so, when will the change be made

3. Is it possible, with its present facilities, for CBC-TV to provide the Kootenay area with the B.C. regional news and the B.C. weather reports and, if so, why has this service not been instituted?

[Translation]

Hon. Gérard Pelletier (Secretary of State): I am informed by the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation as follows: 1. (a) The network service is fed from east to west via Calgary to an unmanned network relay station at Trail, B.C. from which rebroadcasting stations in the Kootenay area receive network service. Some B.C. regional programming is videotape recorded at Vancouver and sent to Calgary for use in non-network periods to partly circumvent the lack of direct programming from Vancouver. A separate west to east network to serve the Kootenay area would require the CBC to rent additional microwave circuits from Vancouver back to Trail. (b) The network service from Calgary to Trail, B.C., was instituted in 1960 when the Trail station began operating.

2. The Corporation has recognized the desirability of programming B.C. regional service from Vancouver but it is a large and costly project which cannot be undertaken in the near future, particularly with current financial restrictions.

3. It is technically possible to supply B.C. regional programming eastward from Vancouver to Trail and other stations in the area at times when the national network service is not being relayed westward. However, this is not being done because it would be costly to maintain such a service on a regular basis. There are many communities elsewhere in British Columbia and in other provinces which are still awaiting the network service already available in the Kootenay area and these less fortunate communities must be given priority.

APPROVAL OF DEVELOPMENT INCENTIVES

Question No. 639—Mr. McGrath:

1. Under what program or programs were the approvals given for the 278 development incentives recently announced by the Minister of Regional Economic Expansion?

2. When will the new plants and expansions involved in the incentives approved come into operation?

Mr. Martin P. O'Connell (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Regional Economic Expansion): 1. Area Development Incentives Act—261, Regional Development Incentives Act—17.

2. At varying dates, some in 1969, most in 1970 and early 1971.

CONNECTION WITH GOVERNMENT OF HARRISON McCAIN

Question No. 645—Mr. Skoreyko:

1. Is Mr. Harrison McCain of Grand Falls, N.B. whose firm, McCain Foods Limited, was recently given a grant amounting to several millions of dollars by the Department of Regional Economic Expansion connected in any way with the present government and, if so, in what capacity?

2. Does the Minister or his departmental officials approve grants of such amounts of public funds to applicants without question and with some system of checking the reputation and standing of the application and his firm?

Mr. Yves Forest (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Privy Council): 1. No.

2. No.

REGISTRATION OF CHARITABLE ORGANIZATIONS

Question No. 648—Mr. Howard (Skeena):

1. For the years 1967, 1968 and 1969, how many applications were received by the Department of National Revenue regarding registration of charitable organizations in Canada?

2. For each of the above years, how many applications were approved by the Department?

3. For each of the above years, how many charitable organizations missed their annual deadline for filing a report of their operations with the Department?

4. What action is required under the Income Tax Act for those charitable institutions who have not filed their annual returns?

5. What action has been undertaken by the Department of National Revenue to enforce compliance with the law?

Hon. Jean-Pierre Côté (Minister of National Revenue): 1. 1967, 34,630; 1968, 4,322; 1969 (to December 9), 2,055.

2. 1967, 31,373; 1968, 3,213; 1969 (to December 9), 979.

3. 1967, 13,250; 1968, 11,237.

1969 Returns are to be filed three months after the end of each fiscal period. Most organizations are on a calendar year basis and their 1969 returns are not due until March 31, 1970.

4. Section 27(3c) of the Income Tax Act provides that a charitable organization's registration may be revoked for failure to file an information return.

5. No action was taken for 1967 because that was the first year the requirements to register and to file an annual return were in effect. In the summer of 1969 requests to file returns, together with copies of the required forms were mailed to all registered organizations that had failed to file for 1968. Over 8,000 returns have been filed to date as a result of this action. No decision has yet been made as to what further action will be taken to obtain the balance of the returns not filed.

GARBAGE DUMPS, CAUGHNAWAGA INDIAN RESERVE

Question No. 649—Mr. Rondeau:

1. How many garbage dumps are in use on the Caughnawaga Indian Reserve?

2. How many tons of refuse are discharged daily into each dump?

3. How much are the Indians paid per ton for the use of these dumps?

4. To whom is the Kanawaki Golf Club in Caughnawaga leased, for what period and at what annual rent?

Mr. Russell C. Honey (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): 1. Two.

2. It is not possible to estimate the tonnage of refuse discharged daily into each dump. Information supplied by the Permittees for 1968 showed an average up to 900 loads a week being deposited by vans with a capacity of 20 cubic yards.

3. The rental is on area, rather than tonnage, basis. The rate paid is $200 per acre per annum.

4. The corporate body of the Kanawaki Golf Club holds 8 separate leases on the Caughnawaga Reserve to September 30, 1995.

The Kanawaki Golf Club annually pays $1,000 into Band funds and a total of $5,518.44 to individual land owners.

IMMIGRANTS WITH PROFESSIONAL QUALIFICATIONS

Question No. 650—Mr. Rondeau:

1. During the past ten years, how many immigrants with professional qualifications have entered Canada?

2. How many of them have elected to take up permanent residence in Canada?

3. How many have returned to their countries of origin (other than the United States)?

4. How many of them have emigrated to the United States?

Mr. Yves Forest (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Privy Council): I am informed by the Dominion Bureau of Statistics and the Department of Manpower and Immigration as follows: 1. During the past ten years the number of immigrants with professional qualifications entering Canada is as follows: 1959, 6,947; 1960, 7,436; 1961, 6,696; 1962, 8,218; 1963, 9,640; 1964, 11,965; 1965, 16,654; 1966, 23,637; 1967, 30,853; 1968, 29,250 —Total 151,296.

2. 151,296 (an immigrant, once landed, becomes a permanent resident of Canada).

3 and 4. Permanent residents of Canada are not required to report their whereabouts or movements to the Department, hence the Department does not compile the kind of data required to reply to these questions.

INDIAN AFFAIRS AND NORTHERN DEVELOPMENT—APPROACH AND ACTION OF CERTAIN PERSONS

Question No. 653—Mr. Howard (Skeena):

Has any attempt been made to identify the person or persons in the employ of the Department of Indian Affairs and Northern Development who engaged in an approach termed "insidious" by the Crockett Writers Company in its quarterly report for the period ending March 31, 1969 to the Department of Indian Affairs and Northern Development and which approach involved "Xerox" processing and the distribution of copies of a contract marked "confidential" and, if so, what is the name and position held by each such person?

Mr. Russell C. Honey (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): 1. Yes, an investigation into Crockett Writers allegations was launched when their report was submitted and appropriate steps were taken to ensure that the firm receive the cooperation it required to perform the duties as outlined in the terms of the contract. Xerox copies of the contract were sent to all regional offices to ensure cooperation with the firm.

INDIAN AFFAIRS AND NORTHERN DEVELOPMENT—CO-OPERATION IN IMPROVING IMAGE

Question No. 654—Mr. Howard (Skeena):

Has any attempt been made to find the identity of the persons referred to in the Quarterly Report for the period ending March 31, 1969 by Crockett Writers Company to the Department of Indian Affairs and Northern Development as being "some department heads who will never co-operate with us in trying to improve the image of the Branch" and, if so, what is the name and position held by each such person?

Mr. Russell C. Honey (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): 1. Yes, as mentioned in the reply to Question No. 653 appropriate steps have been taken to ensure that the firm receives the cooperation it requires to fulfil the terms of the contract. It would not, however, be in the public interest to divulge names.

DISCONTINUANCE OF OPERATIONS BY KNITTED OUTERWEAR MANUFACTURERS

Question No. 666—Mr. Saltsman:

1. How many manufacturers of knitted outerwear have discontinued knitting operations in the years 1965-66, 1966-67, 1967-68 and 1968-69?

2. How many jobs have been lost as a result of these changes?

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): 1. The information required is not available from the Dominion Bureau of Statistics. However, according to industry sources, the numbers of companies discontinuing operations during the years requested were as follows: 1966, 3; 1967, 5; 1968, 8; 1969, 4 to date.

2. The numbers of jobs lost as a result of these changes were: 1966, 125; 1967, 170; 1968, 520; 1969, 155 in two companies. Information concerning the jobs lost as a result of the closing of the other two companies is not available.

Questions

DISCRIMINATION AGAINST CANADIAN MACHINERY MANUFACTURERS

Question No. 671—Mr. Saltsman:

1. What action is the Department of Industry, Trade and Commerce taking to combat discriminating practices facing Canadian machinery manufacturers, arising from their exclusion in the bidding on Canadian projects due to tied foreign financing?

2. What action is the Department of Regional Economic Expansion taking regarding the exclusion of Canadian machinery in projects receiving aid from the federal government due to tied foreign financing?

Mr. Yves Forest (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Privy Council): I am informed by the Departments of Industry, Trade and Commerce and Regional Economic Expansion as follows: 1. The Departments of Industry, Trade and Commerce and Regional Economic Expansion are in the process of completing a study of the impact on Canadian industry of tied foreign financing involving subsidized rates of interest and other concessional financing terms. This study will contain specific recommendations on appropriate measures to curtail this practice.

2. Section 11 of the Regulations under the Regional Development Incentives Act provides:

"It is a condition of a development incentive in respect of a facility that the applicant shall provide reasonable opportunities to Canadian manufacturers to supply the machinery and equipment included in the eligible assets of the facility, where such machinery and equipment are competitive in performance, price and delivery."

IMMIGRATION FROM CERTAIN COUNTRIES

Question No. 685—Mr. Dinsdale:

1. What has been the number of immigrants from the following countries for each year since the implementation of the point system (a) United Kingdom (b) France (c) Italy (d) Greece (e) Hong Kong?

2. What was the number from each of these countries for each of the three years preceding the application of the point system?

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Minister of Manpower and Immigration): 1 and 2. See following table.

Immigration to Canada from Selected Countries

Country of Former Residence	1965	1966	1967(1)	1968	To Sept. 1969
United Kingdom	39,857	63,291	62,420	37,889	24,128
France	5,225	7,872	10,122	8,184	4,238
Italy	26,398	31,625	30,055	19,774	8,112
Greece	5,642	7,174	10,650	7,739	4,828
Hong Kong	4,352	4,094	6,409	8,382	6,655

Note (1): New Immigration Regulations embodying norms of assessment, and a points evaluation system, were introduced on October 1, 1967.

GRANTS BY DEPARTMENT OF AGRICULTURE TO CERTAIN ORGANIZATIONS

Question No. 688—Mr. Gleave:

For the fiscal years 1968-69 and 1969-70, what are the estimated grants made by the Department of Agriculture to the (a) Canadian Seed Growers Association (b) Canadian Horticultural Council (c) Canadian Council on 4-H Clubs (d) Advanced Registry Board for Dairy Bulls (e) Canadian National Livestock Records (f) Canadian Hunter, Saddle and Light Horse Improvement Society (g) British Columbia Beef Cattle Growers Association (h) Canadian Council on Plowing Associations (i) Federated Women's Institutes of Canada (j) Royal Agricultural Winter Fair, Toronto?

Hon. H. A. Olson (Minister of Agriculture): Annual grants made by the Department of Agriculture for 1968-69 and 1969-70: (a) Canadian Seed Growers Association, $44,000; (b) Canadian Horticultural Council, $8,400; (c) Canadian Council on 4-H Clubs, $23,000; (d) Advanced Registry Board for Dairy Bulls, $4,500; (e) Canadian National Livestock Records, $50,000; (f) Canadian Hunter, Saddle and Light Horse Improvement Society, $5,000; (g) British Columbia Beef Cattle Growers Association, $900; (h) Canadian Council on Plowing Associations, $5,000; (i) Federated Women's Institutes of Canada, $10,000; (j) Royal Agricultural Winter Fair, Toronto, $50,000.

LICENSING OF B.C. CREDIT UNION LENDERS

Question No. 689—Mr. Coates:

1. Are lenders associated with the British Columbia Credit Unions licensed under the Small Loans Act and do they make a complete annual report to the Superintendent of Insurance for Canada?

2. Was the Superintendent of Insurance informed by the Government of the Province of British Columbia of an order-in-council which increased the interest rate on loans made by British Columbia Credit Unions and, if so, on what date was the Superintendent of Insurance so informed?

Hon. E. J. Benson (Minister of Finance): 1. No.

2. The Superintendent of Insurance was not informed by the Government of British Columbia of an order-in-council that increased the rate of interest that might be charged on loans made by credit unions in British Columbia. However, he was informed of this order-in-council by representatives of the credit union movement of that province on October 23, 1969. Credit unions would be required to become licensed under the Small Loans Act if they wished to charge more than 1% a month on loans of °1,500 or less. The licensing of credit unions under that Act is now under consideration.

SUBSIDIES TO P.E.I. MILK PRODUCERS

Question No. 691—Mr. McQuaid:

1. During the past fiscal year, how many milk producers in the Province of Prince Edward Island were in receipt of subsidies payable by the Canadian Dairy Commission?

2. What was the total amount of the subsidy paid during that period to producers in Prince Edward Island?

3. How many producers in Prince Edward Island during that period had deductions made from their subsidy payments because their production exceeded their assigned quotas?

4. What was the total loss in dollars to producers because of these deductions?

Hon. H. A. Olson (Minister of Agriculture): 1. 2,554 milk and cream shippers.

2. $1,696,868.84.

3. Deductions from subsidy payments for the export equalization fund were made against each shipper's total deliveries, at the same rate for deliveries up to quota and over quota. 1,202 shipped more than their quota.

4. The figure of deductions on account of over quota deliveries is not available.

REGIONAL DEVELOPMENT INCENTIVE GRANTS

Question No. 692—Mr. Rondeau:

1. How many applications for grants have been received by the Department of Regional Economic Expansion since the coming into force of the Regional Development Incentives Act?

2. How many applications have been granted?

3. What was the total amount requested?

4. What amount has the Department decided to grant?

5. How many applications have been made to the Department for grants of (a) more than $1,000,000 (b) from $500,000 to $1,000,000 (c) from $250,000 to $500,000 (d) from $100,000 to $250,000 (e) less than $100,000?

6. What was the percentage approved in each of the above categories?

[Translation]

Hon. Jean Marchand (Minister of Regional Economic Expansion): 1, 2 and 4. This information is contained in the reports on the operation of the Regional Development Incentives Act tabled monthly in Parliament.

3, 5 and 6. The applicant does not request an amount. Within the maxima provided for in the legislation, the Department makes the offer judged appropriate to the particular case.

REPORT ON CONDITIONS IN VIET NAM

Question No. 703—Mr. Mather:

Did Doctor A. Vennema report to the government concerning conditions as he found them in Vietnam after the Tet offensive of 1968 and (a) if so, was this report confidential (b) if not, is a copy of the report available?

[Mr. Benson.]

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Yes. (a) Yes. (b) Not applicable.

ACCEPTANCE OF GOVERNMENT CHEQUES BY COMMERCIAL BANKS

Question No. 706—Mr. Nesbitt:

1. Are commercial banks required to accept cheques issued by the Government of Canada, provided that the payee is properly identified?

2. Has the government received complaints that commercial banks are refusing to accept government cheques and, if so, what action has the government taken in this regard?

Hon. E. J. Benson (Minister of Finance): 1. No provision of the Bank Act requires a bank to accept cheques issued by the Government of Canada or any other cheques if the person presenting such cheques does not maintain an account with the bank.

2. There have been a few complaints from persons who did not maintain an account with the bank at which the cheque was presented. Letters have been sent to those who have complained, explaining the situation set forth in (1) above.

HALIFAX—POSTAL DELIVERY TO APARTMENTS AND HOMES

Question No. 711—Mr. McCleave:

1. How many apartment buildings and homes in the City of Halifax are eligible for postal delivery by mailmen but cannot receive same under the austerity programme?

2. How many extra post office employees would be required to service such?

Hon. Eric W. Kierans (Postmaster General and Minister of Communications): 1. None.

2. Not applicable.

TOM LONGBOAT MEMORIAL TROPHY

Question No. 712—Mr. Howard (Skeena):

1. Since January 1, 1960, what is the name of each person who has been awarded the Tom Longboat Memorial Trophy?

2. In each case, did the recipient of the award have possession of the said Trophy and, if not, where was the Trophy located?

3. What form does the said Trophy take and is there any monetary aspect to it?

Mr. Russell C. Honey (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): 1. 1960, Mr. Arthur Obey; 1961, Mr. Bruce Bruyère; 1962, Mr. Tom Watts; 1963, Mr. John Lewis; 1964, Miss Vivian Underwood; 1965, Mr. George H. Brown; 1966, Mr. Ron Jamieson; 1967, Mr. Wilton Littlechild; 1968, Miss Phyllis Bomberry; 1969, Bert Mistaken Chief.

2. In most cases the recipient is presented with the trophy but it is customary for it to remain in his Agency Office, where everyone can see it.

3. (a) It is silver approximately 18 inches high, and a new crest is placed on it each year with the recipient's name. (b) No money is awarded; however, each recipient receives a medal which he keeps.

CANADA SAVINGS BONDS

Question No. 716—Mr. Harkness:

1. As of December 10, what is the amount of 1969 Savings Bonds which have been sold?

2. What amount of this is represented by previous years' Canada Savings Bonds having been turned in for the 1969 issue?

3. What is the amount of new money actually secured?

4. What has been the cost of this operation broken down into (a) advertising (b) commissions to dealers and agents (c) payments to banks (d) cost of the new bonds (e) other expenses?

Hon. E. J. Benson (Minister of Finance): 1. Total sales of the 1969/70 Series of Canada Savings Bonds to December 10, 1969 amounted to $4,721 million.

2. Canada Savings Bonds were redeemed between October 1st and December 10th in the amount of $2,591 million. The purpose for which Canada Savings Bonds are redeemed is not known and it is, therefore, not possible to state what portion of the total redemption was made in order to permit purchase of the 1969/70 Series.

3. The amount of the net increase in Canada Savings Bonds outstanding from October 1st (the date on which the 1969/70 Series went on sale) to December 10th was $1,130 million.

4. (a) $1,576,000. (b) and (c) The total sales commission and issuing fee payable to banks, investment dealers and other sales and issuing agents on sales made to December 10th is $42.2 million. Sales commission payable to investment dealers included in this figure is approximately $5.2 million. It is not possible at this time to determine the exact division of the remaining sales commission and the issuing fee between banks and other agents. (d) $1,260,000. (e) $787,000.

HMCS "KOOTENAY"—USE OF ARMED FORCES TUGS

Question No. 719—Mr. McCleave:

7. Have these consultants been chosen, and, if so, (a) what expenditure is involved in each study (b) was there a competitive tender for each of the outside studies?

8. If no competitive tendering has taken place, what are are reasons?

9. Will each of these specific studies, undertaken both internally and externally, be made public and, if not, for what reason?

CANADIAN WHEAT BOARD—PRICE QUOTATIONS

Question No. 252—Mr. Burton:

What were the daily price quotations announced by the Canadian Wheat Board for each day since June 1, 1969?

Return tabled.

ACCESS TO TELEVISION NETWORKS

Question No. 315—Mr. Dinsdale:

1. What cities in Canada have access to the two Canadian television networks, CBC and CTV and, what is the population of each of these cities?

[Mr. Thomson.]

2. What Canadian cities of 20,000 and more population do not have access to the two Canadian networks?

3. What plans are in process to make the two networks available to all populous areas of Canada and, when is it expected that this objective will be realized?

MOTION TO ADJOURN UNDER S.O. 26

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

NIGERIA-BIAFRA—CANADIAN ACTION FOLLOWING CEASE-FIRE

Mr. Andrew Brewin (Greenwood): Mr. Speaker, I ask leave, seconded by the hon. member for Yorkton-Melville (Mr. Nystrom), to move the adjournment of the House under Standing Order 26 for the purpose of discussing a specific and important matter requiring urgent consideration, namely, the situation arising out of the destruction of the Uli airport and the possibility of the collapse of Biafran resistance, to the end that Canada may play an effective role in organizing and participating in an expanded observer team in Biafra, so as to ensure that guarantees given by the federal authorities against reprisals upon Biafran personnel be fully observed, and that a massive international relief operation be urgently organized, utilizing where possible existing relief distribution personnel, so as to minimize the widespread starvation which is imminent.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member for Greenwood has given the Chair the required notice of the proposed motion. I have had occasion to consider the matter very seriously, and I have listened to the contributions made earlier today following the statement made on motions by the Secretary of State for External Affairs.

On reflection and after taking into account all the factors in this matter I tend to the conclusion that this is the kind of urgent situation to which the House might want to direct its attention on an urgent basis. Considering all the factors and all the circumstances I would rule that the motion should be put and, if it is carried, that the debate take place at eight o'clock this evening. Therefore I will seek the opinion of the House on whether or not the hon. member has leave to move the motion for the purpose of discussing the matter stated by him under the terms of Standing Order 26.

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Speaker: The debate on the proposed motion shall stand over until eight o'clock this evening.

ORAL QUESTION PERIOD

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

BIAFRA—SAFETY OF CANADIANS—LOCATION OF AIRCRAFT

Hon. Robert L. Stanfield (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I realize that we are going to have a debate this evening on this question but I should like to direct a related question to the Secretary of State for External Affairs. Will the minister say whether he has been in touch with the High Commissioner in Lagos to ascertain the whereabouts and safety of Canadians engaged in relief work in Biafra?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, before the collapse of the Biafran resistance it was our understanding that there were only three Canadians working in that area. Our information is that they were all safely evacuated.

Mr. Stanfield: Mr. Speaker, will the Secretary of State for External Affairs inform the House whether or not the Canadian aircraft are being moved into forward positions in order to be able to provide relief, or are these aircraft being maintained in Canada at this juncture?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I will allow the question asked by the Leader of the Opposition and certainly will allow the minister to reply. However, I think it should be in order for me at this time to caution hon. members that in view of the fact there will be a debate tonight these questions might perhaps be asked at that time. I assume the minister would then make a statement in reply to points raised by hon. members. As I have said, the question asked by the Leader of the Opposition is quite in order and it might be replied to at this time by the minister.

Mr. Sharp: Mr. Speaker, we have been looking at this question very carefully. The advice we received from the military authorities in this country is that under present circumstances, if we have our planes ready here to fly, they are probably in as good a position to fulfil the vital role of relief operations as they would be if they were at a place like London, for example. There is no question, of course, about moving them into Lagos until we have an agreement with the Nigerian authorities.

NIGERIA-BIAFRA—REQUEST FOR CONSIDERATION OF SITUATION BY STANDING COMMITTEE

Mr. David MacDonald (Egmont): Mr. Speaker, I wonder whether I might put a supplementary question to the Government House Leader rather than to the Secretary of State for External Affairs. In view of the motion made a few minutes ago and the apparent willingness of all hon. members to deal in some continuing way with the situation, and because of the necessity at this point of having a small body of people able to look at some of the details which undoubtedly will be presented in a general way during the debate this evening, would the Government House Leader be agreeable to meeting with other House Leaders some time during the day with a view to bringing forward a suitable motion, perhaps this evening, so the committee might be empowered to carry on this type of activity?

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, there is a House Leaders meeting scheduled for 3:30 p.m.

While I am on my feet perhaps I could point out that there was agreement that the business to be called for today, Bill C-12, would be disposed of at today's sitting. Perhaps we might have an agreement that private members' hour be suspended in order that Bill C-12 be disposed of by six o'clock this afternoon.

Mr. Baldwin: Possibly we could discuss that also at 3:30, Mr. Speaker.

Inquiries of the Ministry

NIGERIA-BIAFRA—USE OF CANAIRELIEF SERVICES

Mr. T. C. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): Mr. Speaker, I wonder whether I might direct a question to the Secretary of State for External Affairs in relation to his statement on motions which he can answer now or answer tonight when we are having the debate. It might give the House some information that would be useful in that discussion. The minister has mentioned the fact that the Red Cross will be used and that there may be an air drop to supply relief to the people of Nigeria. He has made no mention of utilizing the services of Canairelief which is associated with the Joint Church Aid Program. I want to ask him whether it is the government's intention to use that organization, and will the $1 million which was to be appropriated to assist them in this task be available to that organization?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, this morning when we received the news that the Biafran resistance had collapsed I was in touch with both General Wrinch of the Canadian Red Cross and Dr. Johnson of Canairelief to discuss the resulting situation. I informed General Wrinch, of course, about our desire to use the Red Cross as the acknowledged international authority as far as possible. I spoke to Dr. Johnson who told me that Canairelief had supplies on the island of Sao Tome and was ready to co-operate. He wanted me to convey this to the government in Lagos. I asked him in return, if Canairelief was not acceptable to the Nigerian authorities, whether the available supplies would be available to any other organization. He answered in the affirmative.

Mr. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): Have any direct representations been made to the government of Nigeria in Lagos in respect of allowing Canairelief to fly into Uli and has any favourable reply been received?

Mr. Sharp: Our High Commissioner has, of course, quite recently been in touch with the government in Lagos about the operation of Canairelief. Needless to say, because Canairelief operated night flights contrary to the wishes of the Nigerian government its position is not as strong in that regard as it would otherwise be. However, I do accept the statement of Dr. Johnson that they would wish to co-operate with whatever agency is in control, and I hope the supplies can be moved quickly into position.

NIGERIA-BIAFRA—DETERMINATION OF RESPONSIBILITY FOR CONFLICT

Mr. André Fortin (Lotbinière): Mr. Speaker, I wish to put a question to the Secretary of State for External Affairs.

Since the nations which supply the belligerents with arms as well as armament makers are among those mainly responsible for the situation in Nigeria and Biafra, does the minister intend to propose, at the next session of the United Nations, that a study be made on the position of those countries and on the military assistance they have granted to Nigeria and to Biafra, with a view to determining who is actually responsible for this war, and preventing further military disorders of this type?

[English]

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Well, Mr. Speaker, I suggest that the cause of the war did not lie particularly with those who, contrary to our wishes, supplied arms. It lay, of course, in the internal situation in Nigeria.

MANITOBA CENTENNIAL

SUBSTITUTE FOR CANCELLED WORLD HOCKEY TOURNAMENT

Mr. George Muir (Lisgar): Mr. Speaker, since the Biafran situation is to be debated this evening might I change the subject by asking a question of the Minister of National Health and Welfare. In view of the fact that the world hockey tournament has been cancelled and because the hockey series was an important item in connection with Manitoba's centennial celebration, what alternative is the government considering in order to compensate Winnipeg for the expense already incurred?

Hon. John C. Munro (Minister of National Health and Welfare): The CAHA and Hockey Canada, on which body the government of Canada is represented, are now working out some other suitable arrangements whereby we can have, we hope, a very interesting, hockey tournament of very high calibre in Winnipeg during the centennial. We think it will have attractive features. The details of the tournament, as I say, are not yet developed but are being worked out.

[Later:]

Mr. A. B. Douglas (Assiniboia): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of National Health and Welfare which is supplementary to an earlier one. Can the minister assure the House that Canada's national team will not be disbanded and will continue to be available for games throughout the nation?

Mr. Munro: Mr. Speaker, my advice is that the national team is carrying on its operations in respect of outstanding commitments it has had in Canada for some time. How long after that the team will continue has not been decided.

RCMP MUSICAL RIDE—ASSUMPTION OF MAINTENANCE COSTS

Mr. George Muir (Lisgar): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question for the Solicitor General in respect of the centennial celebration. In view of the importance to the Manitoba centennial of the appearance throughout the province of the RCMP musical ride, will the government give consideration to helping Manitoba communities to finance the ride by assuming the maintenance costs of the personnel and horses during the tour?

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member is making a suggestion which is really not a question. I think he must assume the suggestion has been placed before the government for consideration and will be considered in due course.

[Translation]

Mr. Roch La Salle (Joliette): Mr. Speaker, I wish to put a supplementary question to the Minister of National Health and Welfare.

Could he not make it possible for the existing parliamentary hockey team to participate in the Winnipeg festival?

[English]

Mr. Speaker: That is also a suggestion which we can assume will be considered by the government.

DISTINGUISHED SERVICE AWARDS

REQUEST FOR RECONSIDERATION OF ABOLITION

Mr. Jack Marshall (Humber-St. George's-St. Barbe): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Secretary of State. On behalf of the war veterans of Canada would the minister agree to take steps to have the serious question of the abolition and reclassification of military awards referred to the Standing Committee on Veterans Affairs before a decision is made so that the opinions of some one million veterans in Canada can be heard?

[Translation]

Hon. Gérard Pelletier (Secretary of State): Mr. Speaker, this is a proposal that we are willing to consider, but no decision has yet been made to that effect.

[English]

Hon. D. S. Harkness (Calgary Centre): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question. I should like to ask the Secretary of State why British Commonwealth gallantry awards have been suspended since, I understand, February of last year?

[Translation]

Mr. Pelletier: Mr. Speaker, I am not aware that any announcement was made along this line. However, I know that a committee has been formed in which six federal departments are represented at the civil servants level in order to study the question of gallantry awards.

I want to point out at the same time that some press reports these last few days were somewhat absurd. Indeed, they were dealing with awards granted only in war time, which is irrelevant at present since Canada is not at war with anybody.

[English]

CANADIAN NATIONAL RAILWAYS

DISCONTINUANCE OF CERTAIN SERVICES—REQUEST FOR POSTPONEMENT

Mr. David Orlikow (Winnipeg North): Mr. Speaker, this question is directed to the Minister of Transport. In view of the adverse effect on railway passengers and railway employees as a result of the discontinuance of certain CNR trains from Vancouver to Winnipeg, would the minister discuss with officials of the CNR the possibility of at least continuing those trains until the application for permanent discontinuance is heard and decided by the Canadian Transport Commission?

Hon. Donald C. Jamieson (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I shall be very glad to bring these representations to the attention of officials of the CNR. I have already discussed the matter with them.

Inquiries of the Ministry

While I am standing may I apologize to certain members to whom I inadvertently gave an incorrect assessment before the recess. I said in the committee that there would be a hearing, but I was thinking in terms of a discontinuance. The CTC does not have authority to hold a hearing on this particular matter, but as I say I will discuss the matter in line with the representations made.

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question which is based on the undertaking the minister gave us on December 10. What has happened in respect of the offer he made to convene a meeting of the CN management with members of constituencies affected in order to discuss the discontinuance of trains 5 and 6.

Mr. Jamieson: Nothing has happened. Perhaps it is my fault. I was under the impression that hon. members interested would get in touch with me and indicate a time. If you will let me know the time I will be glad to do it.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): The offer was accepted on December 10.

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prince Albert): In connection with this discontinuance of railway service will the minister press Canadian National Railways not to act in the arbitrary and altogether cavalier manner it has? After all, Parliament votes the money for the CNR and Parliament should have some right to say whether or not such action is justified.

Mr. Jamieson: Yes, Mr. Speaker. I repeat that I shall be very glad to make these representations to both railways, but I have to emphasize that where it is only a reduction in service there is no legal mechanism that can be employed. Where there is a discontinuance the CTC has indicated it will hold hearings on such discontinuance.

Mr. Diefenbaker: I realize this is so, but what about Parliament? Parliament votes the money, and surely these railway services should not be discontinued in the manner in which the CNR is now carrying on.

Mr. Orlikow: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. In view of the fact that the so-called reduction is in fact a complete cancellation, if only for some months, would the minister consider the possibility of amending the legislation so that this kind of discontinuing could be considered by the CTC?

[Mr. Jamieson.]

Mr. Jamieson: I shall be glad to consider that, Mr. Speaker.

LABOUR CONDITIONS

SAINT-ROMUALD—LAY-OFF OF 325 EMPLOYEES OF B.V.D. COMPANY

Mr. Bernard Dumont (Frontenac): Mr. Speaker, I should like to put a question to the Minister of Regional Economic Expansion.

Could he tell the House what steps the government intends to take to prevent the dismissal of 325 employees at the B.V.D. plant at St. Romuald?

Hon. Jean Marchand (Minister of Regional Economic Expansion): Mr. Speaker, I met the mayor of St. Romuald, on Saturday, in Quebec City. Today, he is in Ottawa and we are in contact with the Department of Trade and Commerce of both the federal government and the province of Quebec. We are trying to find a way to prevent the closing of this plant.

Mr. Dumont: Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask a supplementary question.

Has the minister considered the possibility for the government to subsidize the construction of 24 Greek ships so as to prevent the Davie Shipbuilding yards in Lauzon from closing down?

Mr. Speaker: This is not a supplementary question.

[English]

BILINGUALISM AND BICULTURALISM

INQUIRY AS TO LEGISLATION BASED ON THIRD REPORT OF COMMISSION

Hon. George Hees (Prince Edward-Hastings): Mr. Speaker, I would like to direct a question to the right hon. Prime Minister. Does the government expect to introduce at this session legislation based upon the recommendations in the third report of the Royal Commission on Bilingualism and Biculturalism, which report was given to the government early in December, and may I say I feel sure that the Prime Minister and his colleagues have been studying it assiduously in the weeks that have intervened?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Well, Mr. Speaker, if the hon. member has been studying it as assiduously as I have he will know that I do not see that it necessarily involves legislation at this session to implement some of its recommendations.

Mr. Hees: Mr. Speaker, the Prime Minister has not answered the question. When does the government expect to make known its views on the recommendations in the third report—

Mr. Trudeau: That is not what you asked.

Mr. Hees: Yes, I did. I asked first of all—Mr. Speaker, I will ask my question again. Does the government expect to introduce at this session legislation based on the recommendations in the third report of the Royal Commission on Bilingualism and Biculturalism—

Mr. Trudeau: That is what you asked.

Mr. Hees: —which has been in the hands of the government for several weeks and which I feel sure members of the government have studied very hard. Can we have an answer, Mr. Speaker?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

Mr. Hees: Then may I ask another question—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member has asked a question, and I understand that the hon. member for Annapolis Valley has a supplementary.

Mr. J. P. Nowlan (Annapolis Valley): Yes, Mr. Speaker, and again it is to the Prime Minister. I hope he will come down out of the clouds and off the ski slopes to answer my question. In his statement on December 19 last the Prime Minister said that after he had reviewed the third report of the commission he would make a statement to the House on motions. Is he considering making a statement and when will it be made?

Mr. Trudeau: I am not certain.

Mr. Hees: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Is it not true that the government has decided to shelve this whole report because it is a little too hot to handle?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

THE CANADIAN ECONOMY

INFLATION—MONETARY AND FISCAL POLICIES AND UNEMPLOYMENT

Mr. David Lewis (York South): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the right hon. Prime Minister. Arising out of a press conference which he held, according to my information, on December 22 last I would like to ask the Prime Minister whether it is now government policy to pursue monetary and fiscal policies that will result in an unemployment rate of 6 per cent across the country which, of course, would mean a much higher rate of unemployment in some parts of the country?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member has asked the question in such a way that it is difficult for the Chair to accept it procedurally. He has asked merely for a statement of government policy. I would think the question as asked in this way is not in order. Perhaps it might be rephrased.

Mr. Lewis: May I first ask the Prime Minister whether his reported statement that the government is prepared to have an unemployment rate as high as 6 per cent was a statement of government policy?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Not of policy, Mr. Speaker. It is something we hope will not happen but it is something that might happen if the private sector does not combat inflation as vigorously as the federal government has.

Mr. Lewis: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker, following upon the answer which the Prime Minister gave. Is he stating to the House that the government will not change its policies even though the unemployment rate may go up to 6 per cent?

Mr. T. C. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. In view of the Prime Minister's concern about getting the co-operation of the private sector of the economy, may I ask whether or not his government is prepared to accede to the request of the United Steelworkers of Canada that a public inquiry be held into the increase in the price of steel, which they claim is completely unwarranted and unjustified?

Hon. Ron Basford (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): Mr. Speaker, if I may answer that question, it is quite clear that there will be a public inquiry when the report of the Prices and Incomes Commission is referred to the committee. The motion for the setting up of that committee is on the order paper and I hope it will be debated very soon so that the committee can be set up and can consider the report.

Mr. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): As a further supplementary question, will the inquiry by the Prices and Incomes Commission be a public inquiry or a hole-in-the-corner inquiry which will make it impossible to question the steel companies with respect to their exorbitant profits?

Hon. George Hees (Prince Edward-Hastings): Mr. Speaker, I direct a supplementary question to the Prime Minister. In view of his recently expressed desire to have the private sector agree to reasonable guidelines, is he now willing to call a meeting himself of the leaders of industry and labour to try to persuade them of the necessity for coming to such an agreement?

Mr. Trudeau: Mr. Speaker, the ministers of the government in various departments have been consulting with various sectors of industry to ensure the results that the hon. member is seeking. There is no need at this point for me to convene a general meeting of all industry.

HAZARDOUS SUBSTANCES

USE OF PICLORAM TO DEFOLIATE BORDER STRIP

Mr. G. H. Aiken (Parry Sound-Muskoka): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the Secretary of State for External Affairs. Has the government agreed to a proposal to defoliate a strip of the eastern section of the Canada-U.S. border with a chemical called picloram?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, for years brush and tree cutting was done by hand in this area. Since the mid-1950s the Boundary Commission has benefited from the experience of hydro companies, highway departments and other organizations maintaining brush-free rights of way and has used selective herbicides. The commission has consulted conservation authorities to ensure that the herbicides used not only permit desirable growth such as grass and ferns but are also non-toxic to animal life.

Mr. Aiken: As a supplementary question, Mr. Speaker, am I to take it from this that the minister's department and the other departments involved are satisfied that there is no danger to the environment through the use of this chemical?

Mr. Sharp: Yes, Mr. Speaker.

[Mr. Douglas (Nanamo-Cowichan-The Islands).]

DRUGS

INQUIRY AS TO REPORT OF LEDAIN COMMISSION—LEGALIZING OF MARIJUANA

Mr. Eldon M. Woolliams (Calgary North): Mr. Speaker, I would like to direct a question to the Minister of National Health and Welfare. Can he tell us whether the LeDain Commission on drugs has finished its report, and when it will be brought before the House of Commons?

Hon. John C. Munro (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, my latest information is that the preliminary report of the LeDain Commission will be available some time during the latter part of February. As to whether it will be made available to the House of Commons I cannot answer that because no decision has been made.

Mr. Woolliams: As a supplementary question, does the minister follow the Prime Minister's stand in reference to legalizing marijuana or the Solicitor General's stand? What is the policy of the government at this time prior to the presentation of the commission's report?

[Translation]

Mr. Marcel Prud'homme (Saint-Denis): I should like to direct a supplementary question to the Minister of Justice. Does he intend to order the suspension of proceedings against the users of marijuana and hashish until the LeDain report is published?

[English]

Mr. Munro: That matter has not yet been decided.

Mr. Woolliams: Mr. Speaker, may I—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please! May we have some order, please. We might go on to another question.

Mr. Woolliams: But I have just started it—

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member says he has just started. That is what I am afraid of. There are a number of hon. members anxious to ask questions, starting with the right hon. member for Prince Albert.

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prince Albert): Mr. Speaker, my question would not be exactly supplementary—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I regret that I have to interrupt the right hon. member but I believe the hon. member for Saint-Denis has a question of privilege.

[Translation]

The hon. member for Saint-Denis on a question of privilege.

Mr. Prud'homme: Mr. Speaker, my point of order is that the Minister of Justice was preparing to answer the question when the Minister of National Health and Welfare did answer it.

[English]

Mr. Speaker: In the circumstances, it might be in order to allow the Minister of Justice to reply to the question.

Mr. Turner (Ottawa Carleton): The answer to the question is, Mr. Speaker, that we are not in any way prejudging the issue and as the law is the law the Department of Justice will attempt to give the appropriate advice to the courts on the basis of existing law.

Mr. Woolliams: I wonder if I might follow that up, Mr. Speaker. I should like to ask the Minister of Justice whether he intends to amend the law to fit the Prime Minister's philosophy or the Minister of National Health and Welfare's philosophy?

Mr. Diefenbaker: Mr. Speaker, my question arises out of a statement made at a press conference. Would the Minister of National Health and Welfare be able to inform the House whether, when the Prime Minister at a press conference made the announcement that marijuana was going to be legalized, he was speaking for the government or just speaking ex cathedra?

LABOUR RELATIONS

VANCOUVER WATERFRONT—STATUS OF NEGOTIATIONS

Mr. Harold E. Winch (Vancouver East): I should like to direct my question to the Minister of Labour, Mr. Speaker. In view of the imperative necessity that there should not be a lock-out or strike on the waterfront in Vancouver and the three-month peace arrangement made with the Minister of Labour, which is rapidly nearing an end, could he inform the House now as to the status of negotiations?

Hon. Bryce Mackasey (Minister of Labour): Briefly, Mr. Speaker, I have been informed that the negotiators representing the workers on the various waterfronts in Vancouver have submitted new or revised demands to management and a meeting is going ahead as scheduled.

[Later:]

Mr. Winch: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker, regarding the Harbours Board in Vancouver. Could I ask the Minister of Labour if he understands that both the employer and the union will conclude their new negotiations and report prior to the deadline of three months which he was able to arrange, after which there is the right to strike?

Mr. Mackasey: Mr. Speaker, theoretically the right to strike exists at this moment. It was the unions themselves who volunteered not to strike before February 5 in an effort to arrive at a satisfactory settlement with management. I am hoping that such a satisfactory settlement will be arrived at, and I am rather encouraged by the fact that both parties are now meeting for that very purpose.

MONTREAL WATERFRONT—PUBLICATION OF REPORT

Mr. G. W. Baldwin (Peace River): A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Is the minister going to make public the report dealing with conditions in the port of Montreal?

Hon. Bryce Mackasey (Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, I can assure the hon. member that no senior official of any department, no member of the House of Commons on either side nor anybody in private industry has suggested that the report be suppressed or not made public. What I said stands. As I said on December 17, I received the report in October, sent it out for translation and printing and it was then put before a departmental committee of the Department of Labour for analysis and study. That work was completed during the holidays and it has now been referred to the Department of Transport and the National Harbours Board for their observations. When and if the report is to be tabled will be announced in due course.

CAPE BRETON DEVELOPMENT CORPORATION

INQUIRY AS TO APPOINTMENT OF CHAIRMAN

Hon. Robert L. Stanfield (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the Minister of Regional Economic Expansion a question which I have asked on two previous occasions concerning the fact that the position of chairman of the Cape Breton Development Corporation, a position of great importance, is vacant. Is the minister in a position to inform the House as to who the new chairman will be? I find it difficult to believe that it is beyond the capacity of this government to fill this position with a competent person.

[Translation]

Hon. Jean Marchand (Minister of Regional Economic Expansion): Mr. Speaker, unfortunately, I am not in a position to announce that appointment. I hope I can do so shortly. Several people have been approached; however, some refused and others were probably not able to fill the job. As soon as we can appoint somebody, we shall be glad to proceed.

[English]

ALLEGED ILLEGAL USE OF UNEMPLOYMENT INSURANCE COMMISSION FUND

Mr. Donald MacInnis (Cape Breton-East Richmond): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Regional Economic Expansion also. I should like to ask if he has received a protest wire from Local 4527 indicating illegal use of the UIC fund by Devco and, if so, what would the nature of his answer be?

Hon. Jean Marchand (Minister of Regional Economic Expansion): Mr. Speaker, I have not received it. I shall check with the departments to ascertain if they received the wire and who received it.

Mr. MacInnis: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. I wonder if the minister would speak to the authorities who have been quoted on several occasions but to my knowledge have yet to come forth with any decision. Would he look into the question of the legality of the plan put forth by Devco? I think it is a matter of interest to all members of this House that legislation passed by this House has been used as a back-door method to violate existing contracts.

Mr. Robert Muir (Cape Breton-The Sydneys): A short supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. May I ask the Minister of Labour if he received a wire with reference to this particular problem of unemployment insurance?

[Mr. Stanfield.]

Hon. Bryce Mackasey (Minister of Labour): Not to my knowledge, Mr. Speaker. It is possible that the Unemployment Insurance Commission received such a wire. Indeed, I think members will recall the fact that, contrary to the opinion expressed, the procedure is a legal one not unique to Devco; there are 100-odd such arrangements. The Unemployment Insurance Commission and the then Minister of Manpower got together to do what they thought was in the best interests of workers and miners. As a result of that action, many people who would have been prematurely out of work with no income are at least guaranteed a substantial income.

Mr. MacInnis: Mr. Speaker, I am not aware of any legal opinion because I have already asked for such an opinion from the law officers of the Crown. I ask the Minister of Labour if he does not consider that the fact a man, who is released from his position is forced to use the UIC fund to pay for his retirement, is a violation of the insurance fund?

Mr. Speaker: I would think that the question as asked would invite an expression of opinion by the minister and, therefore, the question is not phrased properly.

Mr. MacInnis: The Minister of Labour has tried to imply that a legal opinion has been given, but that is not the case because I have put the question to both law officers of the Crown, the Solicitor General and the Minister of Justice. I put it to them verbally and in writing some time last September, but as yet neither one of those law officers has expressed an opinion. Therefore the Minister of Labour is not in a position to state what the law officers of the Crown have said on this matter.

PESTICIDES

FAO RECOMMENDATIONS RESPECTING RESIDUE TOLERANCE IN FOOD

Mr. Randolph Harding (Kootenay West): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Agriculture. In view of the important two-week December meeting in Rome of pesticide experts from the Food and Agriculture Organization and the World Health Organization on the evaluation of the hazard to man of pesticide residues in food, have the recommendations arising from the meeting on residue tolerance for use in regulating residues in food moving in commerce been received by his department? If so, what action is planned on these recommendations? Is it the intention of the minister to make a statement to the House on this important matter?

Mr. Speaker: Perhaps the last part of the hon. member's lengthy question might be in order. I think it might be concentrated in these terms to inquire of the minister whether he proposes to make a statement on motions.

Hon. H. A. Olson (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, my department is constantly in touch with the activities of the FAO. Whether or not they have received the report that the hon. member speaks of, and whether or not I can make a statement on motions I am not sure, but I shall look into it.

PARLIAMENT HILL

HEIGHT RESTRICTIONS ON ADJACENT GOVERNMENT BUILDINGS

Hon. Marcel Lambert (Edmonton West): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Public Works. I wonder if the minister could consult with his colleague, the Minister of Regional Economic Expansion, and make a statement in the House with regard to the applicability of height restrictions on federal government buildings in the neighbourhood of Parliament Hill, with particular reference to the new National Defence building?

Hon. Arthur Laing (Minister of Public Works): Yes, Mr. Speaker, I think that could be arranged.

Mr. A. D. Hales (Wellington): A supplementary question for the Minister of Public Works, Mr. Speaker. Did the minister or anyone on his behalf apply to the city of Ottawa for a building permit before commencing work on this building?

Mr. Laing: Yes, Mr. Speaker, about two months ago.

FISHERIES

RATIFICATION OF ICNAF RECOMMENDATION RESPECTING HADDOCK

Mr. Lloyd Crouse (South Shore): I have a question for the Minister of Fisheries, Mr. Speaker. In view of the serious decline in the supplies of groundfish on the east coast, especially the supply of haddock, can the minister indicate whether the recommendation of ICNAF calling for a maximum annual haddock yield during the next three years beginning in January, 1970, of only 12,000 metric tons from Georges Bank and 18,000 metric tons from Browns Bank, has been ratified by all member countries of ICNAF?

Hon. Jack Davis (Minister of Fisheries and Forestry): Mr. Speaker, we have high hopes that all member countries will take note of this recommendation and act accordingly.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Spadina.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

IMMIGRATION

MEASURES TO REMEDY DECLINE IN NUMBERS FROM EUROPE

Mr. S. Perry Ryan (Spadina): Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and I thank hon. members on this side of the House. My question is directed to the Prime Minister. Does the government intend to take measures to remedy the drastic two-year decline in immigration to Canada from Europe?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The question asked by the hon. member should normally be answered by way of a statement on motions.

Mr. Ryan: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Will the Prime Minister make a statement in the near future about the drastic decline in immigration from Europe to Canada?

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Minister of Manpower and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, shortly before the House rose for the Christmas recess I made a statement on the question of immigration from Europe. I will look at that statement and if there is anything further I can add, I will be glad to do so.

Mr. Ryan: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Will the hon. member kindly resume his seat. I might recognize him in a moment. This is an opportune moment for me to remind hon. members that we are running out of time and perhaps we ought to have as few supplementary questions as possible. I recognize the hon. member on a point of order.

Inquiries of the Ministry

Mr. Ryan: Mr. Speaker, it is true that the Minister of Manpower and Immigration made a good statement; at least, it was good in part. It only went into the negative aspects of the whole situation and made excuses. It did not indicate what positive steps were being taken to encourage immigration from Europe.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

Mr. Baldwin: They were not even good excuses.

NATIONAL FILM BOARD

LAY-OFFS OF EMPLOYEES—CHARGES FOR USE OF FILMS

Mr. John Burton (Regina East): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Secretary of State. Has reconsideration now been given to the decision to lay off National Film Board employees and to introduce user charges for films? If so, will the minister indicate what decision or action has been taken?

[Translation]

Hon. Gérard Pelletier (Secretary of State): Mr. Speaker, the hon. member is no doubt aware that, upon the request of the National Film Board Commissioner, I have asked an independent person to study this double question and that a report in this regard is to be submitted to the Commissioner himself with copies going to the interested parties, on January 15, which leaves another 72 hours for such submission.

CRIMINAL CODE

PROCLAMATION OF REMAINDER OF AMENDMENTS RESPECTING BREATHALYZER

Mr. Robert McCleave (Halifax-East Hants): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Justice. It arises out of the proclamation of only part of the Criminal Code amendments dealing with the breathalyzer. When is the minister expecting those parts giving rights to accused people to be proclaimed as well?

Hon. John N. Turner (Minister of Justice): Mr. Speaker, I will not accept part of the preamble to that question because we believe the accused has sufficient rights under the legislation as it stands. In so far as that part of the question relating to providing a sample of breath is concerned, that matter will depend on an appropriate container being approved.

GRAIN

PROVISION OF SUFFICIENT BOXCARS FOR MOVEMENT

Mr. R. R. Southam (Qu'Appelle-Moose Mountain): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Transport. In light of the heavy build-up of space for grain at our terminal elevators, what action, if any, is the minister taking to ensure that sufficient boxcars are made available to move grain into market position and thus greatly improve the serious cash position in which prairie farmers presently find themselves?

Hon. Donald C. Jamieson (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, the direct responsibility in this matter is, of course, that of the Minister without Portfolio from Saskatoon-Humboldt. However, I am working with him on a daily basis and had consultations with the railways as recently as Saturday. I am assured that they are taking all necessary or possible steps to bring about the most desirable situation.

REGIONAL ECONOMIC EXPANSION

REQUEST FOR REPORT ON MEETING IN SAINT JOHN, N.B.

Mr. James A. McGrath (St. John's East): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Regional Economic Expansion. Will he take the House into his confidence as to the outcome of the meeting that took place on Friday last in Saint John, New Brunswick, involving himself, the deputy minister, the Atlantic Advisory Council and Devco?

Hon. Jean Marchand (Minister of Regional Economic Expansion): No, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. McGrath: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Did such a meeting take place? If so, can the minister tell us whether, as a result of this meeting, we shall finally obtain a development strategy, to quote the communique, for the Atlantic provinces?

[Translation]

Hon. Jean Marchand (Minister of Regional Economic Expansion): Mr. Speaker, I believe it is common knowledge that the meeting did take place. This was the second meeting with a committee which is supposed to advise the department and the minister. As and when the committee wishes to submit such advice to me, it will do so and if the matter seems to warrant it, we will discuss it and report to the House.

IMMIGRATION

PROVISION OF CHINESE INTERPRETER SERVICE AT VANCOUVER

Mr. Steven E. Paproski (Edmonton Centre): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the Minister of Manpower and Immigration. On December 11, 1969, I asked the minister whether, in view of difficulties encountered by the Chinese people in conversing with immigration officials in Vancouver and surrounding areas, he would consider reinstituting the Chinese interpreter services which have been eliminated without any explanation. At that time he did not answer. Is he willing to answer my question now?

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Minister of Manpower and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, I can assure the hon. member that all services of that character will be furnished as required in that area.

DERAILMENT AT TORONTO—ADEQUACY OF MAINTENANCE FORCES

Mr. John L. Skoberg (Moose Jaw): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the Minister of Transport. In view of the recent derailment of a CNR passenger train near Toronto as a result of faulty equipment, will the minister say whether adequate maintenance forces are employed to maintain track and equipment in a safe condition for the travelling public and employees?

Hon. Donald C. Jamieson (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, that is obviously such a complex question that I prefer to take it as notice.

INQUIRY OF THE MINISTRY

Mr. R. Gordon L. Fairweather (Fundy-Royal): Mr. Speaker, I have a question with alarming implications to direct to the Minister of National Health and Welfare which results from a statement made by a member of Her Majesty's Privy Council, the Hon. Judy LaMarsh, during the recess to the effect that the Prime Minister has no heart. What arrangements are being made for a transplant and which minister will volunteer?

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Speaker: I must bring to the attention of hon. members that the question period expired a few moments ago. A number of hon. members were anxious to ask questions. I have tried to take note of them and will perhaps give them precedence tomorrow.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. On the last day before the recess, namely, Friday, December 19, 1969, as recorded at page 2184 of Hansard, a statement was made from the Chair, and appropriate action ought to be taken. In view of the statement from the Chair—and the Chair is always right—that "the Senate has now expired", I wonder if appropriate steps will now be taken to advise their Honours that they need not bother to come back on January 27.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

INTERNATIONAL DEVELOPMENT RESEARCH CENTRE

PROVISION FOR ESTABLISHMENT

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Secretary of State for External Affairs) moved that Bill C-12, to establish the International Development Research Centre of Canada, be read the second time and referred to the Standing Committee on External Affairs and National Defence.

He said: Mr. Speaker, this measure is one of the most promising and exciting proposals to come before this House for some time. The bill provides for the establishment of an International Development Research Centre of Canada. This can be a new and dynamic element in Canada's contribution to the global struggle to improve the quality of life in the less privileged areas of the world.

It is now two decades since Canada first entered the field of co-operative international development as a founding member of the Colombo Plan. The recent meeting of the Colombo Plan Council in Victoria demonstrated how greatly our understanding of the complex problems and possibilities of international development has changed as a result of our collective experience during these two decades. We have learned that direct transfers of capital and knowledge cannot by themselves provide all the ingredients necessary for the advancement of the less developed countries. Their problems cannot be resolved by mere transfers of some of our wealth; they must be helped to develop their own capabilities of producing the wealth they require to meet the needs and aspirations of their people. If capital and technical assistance are to be effective, they must take root in the specific setting of each of the developing societies. This calls for a clear understanding of the basic social, economic, political and cultural forces which affect the processes of growth and development in each society. It requires the development of new ways of applying existing technologies to meet the particular needs of the less developed countries. It also requires a greater knowledge of the factors which enable such technologies to be used to achieve the social goals of the societies. It requires a concerted attempt to discover new technologies.

The gap between the low income and the wealthier nations of the world is to a large extent a science and technology gap. There has always been a gap between rich and poor within most societies, but the massive disparities between the nations of the less developed areas of the world and the more industrialized nations is a fairly recent phenomenon. The average inhabitant of Southeast Asia, prior to the industrial revolution, enjoyed a standard of life not so very different from his counterpart in Europe, despite the differences in their cultures and modes of life. Certainly, the vast material gulf which separates them today did not exist then.

In the last century, those nations which were in the vanguard of the industrial revolution have achieved unprecedented levels of economic activity. This has come about in large measure because of their ability to unlock the secrets of science and to develop technologies and techniques for the application of scientific knowledge to the processes of production and distribution. The burgeoning market economy of these nations continues to provide powerful incentives for the employment of our scientific and technological resources in the search for new products and processes for the affluent consumer.

There is no similar incentive to apply science and technology to the problems of the less developed world. The very science and technology which has provided the key to the wealth of the industrialized nations has added to the difficulties of the less developed nations. Eradication of disease by mass immunization and the use of antibiotics has reduced death rates in the developing countries dramatically and brought about rapid increases in population. It has proven much more difficult for these countries to develop the increased productive capacity required to provide their growing populations with the basic ingredients that enable men to live in dignity. At the same time, science has devised synthetic substitutes for many of the natural products which these countries have depended upon for most of their export earnings. Despite the fact that in absolute terms the less developed nations have made a significant amount of progress in recent years, the gap between them and the wealthy industrialized nations continues to grow.

A recent study indicates that some 98 per cent of all of the world's research and development expenditures continues to be made in the wealthy, industrialized nations which already have high growth rates. There is almost as much money spent on research and development in the field of synthetics alone in the industrialized nations as is spent on all forms of research and development in the less developed world. The scientific advances and the new technologies which will shape tomorrow's world will come out of today's research and development expenditures. The relative position of the less developed nations can only worsen if the balance in the deployment of the world's scientific and technological resources remains so heavily biased against them.

It is not likely that this bias will be rectified except by a deliberate act of policy on the part of the industrialized nations who possess a near monopoly on the world's scientific and technological resources. A larger share of these resources must be made available to the less developed nations. One of the most practical methods of doing this is by devoting a portion of the funds available from wealthier nations under their development aid programs to this purpose.

Despite the fact that this need is fundamental to the whole development process and that this field is a new and complex one, less than one-half of one per cent of the aid budgets of donor countries is currently devoted to development research at a time when the average growth corporation in North America spends approximately 6 per cent of its annual income for these purposes.

This situation is of great concern to those who are close to the heart of the international development process. The report of the Commission on International Development headed by our former Prime Minister, the Right Hon. Lester B. Pearson, highlights this concern and recommends, and I quote:

> —aid suppliers should devote a significant share of their research and development resources and facilities to projects specifically related to problems of developing countries.

This Commission proposes that by 1972 such expenditures should amount to 5 per cent of all public expenditures in the industrialized countries for research and development, of which at least half should be put to work in the developing countries. The United Nations Advisory Committee on the Application of Science and Technology goes further and has proposed that donors be asked to allocate 10 per cent of their research and development resources to projects of concern to lower income countries and an additional 5 per cent to help create institutional infrastructure for science and technology in these countries.

This is an area in which Canada can play an important role and it is for this purpose that we propose to establish the International Development Research Centre of Canada. This bill results from two years of careful investigation and planning by the Canadian International Development Agency with the active assistance and participation of a number of other government departments and experts outside government, particularly the Canadian universities and a number of international institutions. A great deal of care has been taken to design an instrument that will complement and supplement the work that is being carried on by others in this field. I can assure the House that Canada's initiative in creating this body is welcomed by the entire international development community.

The centre will be basically a Canadian institution with an important international dimension. The chairman and most of the members of the centre's board of governors are to be Canadian as well as the majority of its executive committee. Both the board and the staff will include specially qualified people from various parts of the world, including the developing countries. The centre will be structured so as to provide the best possible environment for creativity and problem solving.

The centre will identify, initiate and encourage, support and undertake research into the problems involved in the development of economically deprived regions of the world. It will seek to develop the most effective application of the results of this research to the needs of the people of those regions. It will give high priority to programs that assist the developing countries to build their own scientific and technological capabilities so that they will not be mere welfare recipients, but contributors in their own right to the solution of their own problems.

I have said that the centre will be "problem oriented". A small expert headquarters group will identify specific development problems and develop programs designed to focus resources upon them. In the development and implementation of its programs the centre would work closely with other government departments and non-governmental institutions, particularly Canadian universities and industry. A typical project might consist of a number of programs carried out on a decentralized basis by institutions and individuals chosen for their specific capacity. The centre will also be able to provide financial support to specific research activities of other institutions that contribute directly to its own programs and objectives.

For example, a program designed to improve the protein content of cereal grains might be spearheaded by a Canadian university with special experience in that field. It would involve a number of other Canadian and non-Canadian organizations, each of which would be engaged in a specific aspect of the work as part of a co-ordinated program. Appropriate authorities in the less developed countries would be involved in the crucial work of applying and adapting the results of all the work to the environmental and social conditions of those countries.

After a project has been undertaken, the function of the headquarters group will be to oversee the programs and to audit and disseminate their results. Discussions with the OECD Development Centre, the United Nations and some of the United Nations Specialized Agencies indicate that the centre's headquarters might also provide a centralized system for assimilating, storing, retrieving and disseminating scientific and technical data relevant to international development. In this way the centre would help provide an important and presently missing link in the co-ordination of world international development programs.

It is too early to be specific about the centre's programs, but emphasis will certainly be given to those problems to which Canadian capabilities seem especially applicable. Final decisions on program priorities will be reserved to the centre's board of governors. CIDA and the United Nations Advisory Committee on the Application of Science and Technology to Development have already indicated several possible areas of special interest: the development of new techniques for identifying and evaluating mineral resources, improved methods of preserving food and reducing waste; the development of genetically improved plants of high protein value; the study of some specific aspects of the world population problem; and the development of efficient, labour-intensive industrial techniques.

Most of the problems with which the centre will deal will require co-operative effort by both the physical and social sciences. The very nature of the development process requires that the special skills and perspectives of the engineer, the physicist and the chemist be harmonized with those of the economist, the sociologist and the anthropologist. The centre will be concerned with the application of science and technology to the effort to improve the quality of life, not only the processes of material production.

We should not overlook the important benefits the centre will bring to Canada. The funds provided for its support will be an addition to the funds normally available for Canadian research and development. It will create new opportunities for the use of Canadian human and institutional resources in the field of science and technology. It will help to attract to Canada highly qualified people in various fields, including Canadians who have had to leave Canada to pursue their special interests. It will also help to keep in Canada some who might otherwise leave.

In all its programs, the centre will provide important linkages between Canadian and foreign science and technology, enabling Canadian specialists to obtain international experience which could make a valuable contribution to our own development.

The funds needed to finance the centre's operations and programs will come out of Canada's international development assistance allocations. Within these allocations the amount of funds made available to the centre will depend upon the specific programs and activities which are developed by the centre's board and management after it is established. The government intends to give priority to this aspect of our international development program and I foresee the allocation of as much as 5 per cent of our total development aid funds to the centre. The government is prepared to allocate a minimum of $30 million for the administration and programs of the centre over the first five years. About one-third of this would be for the headquarters operations and the remainder for programs to be carried out outside headquarters.

Successful operation of the centre will call for the full co-operation of the Canadian scientific and technological communities and an especially close relationship with Canadian universities. The science secretariat, other departments of the federal government directly concerned with science and technology and the university community, have contributed to the studies leading to the proposal for the establishment of the centre; they will be equally involved in its direction and operation. The proposed legislation provides for this.

I am sure hon. members will agree with me that the passage of the bill to establish the International Development Research Centre of Canada will provide Canada with a unique opportunity to make an exciting and worthwhile contribution to the cause of international development while enlarging the horizons and enriching the experience of Canadian science.

Mr. R. Gordon L. Fairweather (Fundy-Royal): First, it is reassuring to know that the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Sharp) is reporting on this legislation, in spite of the fact that Bill C-12 leaves parliament in some doubt as to which minister will be assuming responsibility for the new research centre. We in the Official Opposition are happy that the responsibility is to lie with the hon. gentleman. If a more imaginative proposal were to be forthcoming, it might be that authority should rest with a new minister for international development, and perhaps we shall see the establishment of such a post in this country before long.

The original hopes for rapid economic progress in the developing countries have been only partially and spottily achieved. We know this to be a fact, regardless of which party we support. There will, of course, be other opportunities to discuss the uncertain record in this field as well as Canada's external aid program. Today we are dealing with one method which the government has proposed, namely, the establishment of an international research and development centre in Canada.

The Official Opposition welcomes this bill. We shall deal with it, hopefully, in a constructive as well as in a critical manner. We intend to offer a series of amendments which we hope will commend themselves as being sensible and worthy of adoption.

It used to be part of the doctrine connected with the development of emerging nations that economic growth was just a matter of time—that the process was an inevitable one. The harsh fact is that since the end of the second world war no new country has joined the ranks of the wealthy and advanced nations of the world. This is despite a good deal of energy, a massive injection of capital and, I would say, a considerable amount of goodwill. There are three crucial questions which must be asked about the proposed research centre; they were posed for us at a meeting of a sub-committee of the Committee on External Affairs and National Defence, the sub-Committee on International Development, by Professor Irving Brecher of McGill. They are:

1. Is there a basic need for the agency?

2. Has Canada the capacity to carry through the projects envisaged for the centre?

3. What kind of results can Canadians expect?

To answer the last question first, and in a general way, I would say that Canadians cannot expect any quick results. This is, of course, one of the problems of our epoch, it seems to me—the epoch of instant coffee, instant answers, instant results. I suspect it will not be in the next five years or even in the next decade that the results of the research projects shared with the world through this research centre will make themselves felt in the poorer countries. We do not need to be reminded of the veritable maze of organizations already dealing with development problems around the globe. There is a jungle of alphabets in the international development field. I do not think we need worry about this as long as there are well defined trails through it.

It seems to me we have learned a good deal in the past few years about development aid. We have learned that we cannot superimpose on others, as we used to think we could, our culture, our ethics and institutions as the price for aid. In fact, this used to be the rationalization for aid in the early years before the introduction of that great project, the Colombo plan. We have learned that ways of doing things, which may be perfectly acceptable to Canada, are not necessarily wise or valid in other countries that are at a different stage of development and which have divergent histories and a variety of cultures. We have also learned—and this seems to me the core of wisdom—that we need to know a great deal more, that we require a vast amount of research in the field. We have, as the minister said, no real focus yet upon the provision of external aid.

Another thing we have learned is that a good many organizations, including those that are adjuncts to the United Nations itself, are hidebound by outmoded procedures. The Secretary of State for External Affairs reminded us of this when he spoke to the United Nations during the 24th General Assembly.

Just as an aside, may I say that the jargon in the field of external aid has evolved during the years. It seems to me that we have now a rather more hopeful set of words which are clearer than most others—"external aid".

In the 20 years since the inception of the external aid program, the underlying motives have shifted considerably. With the research centre in operation, and with the studies that have been commissioned during the past couple of years by the welter of agencies now involved in this field throughout the world, we can surely expect to be in a better position to give aid and to understand the consequences to be expected from the giving of aid.

As we abandon the old certainties—not a unique happening these days since we are abandoning certainties everywhere, much to the benefit of mankind, I think—we come to see that it is not a question of promoting this or that political philosophy; that it is not a matter of expecting, in a sort of selfish way, some long range economic reward because we have been good fellows and extended aid; that it is not even that we can expect these results to flow within a measurable time, by which I mean five or ten years. Rather it is that the goals are much clearer now, and they are clearer because the premise on which those goals were based has been simplified. I suggest we are arriving at the point where we recognize that external aid has but one focal point—the development in the world of the poor countries.

International Development Research Centre

One of the most imaginative pieces of paper issued by the United States Information Agency is the magazine Dialogue. In the 1969 fourth edition there is an interesting article on economic development, productivity and talent by Peter Drucker, wherein he discusses some of the implications of aid and economic expansion in the poor countries. I should like to share with the House one or two sentences taken from this interesting article. Mr. Drucker says:

> In the 19th century, industrializing countries financed their development out of farm exports, even though population growth in Europe, North America and Japan was almost as rapid then as it is in developing countries today. Instead of putting pressure on the food base of the economy, this growth created markets in the more industrialized nations of Western Europe for the expanding agriculture of Germany, Hungary, Russia, The Ukraine—

Then, he continues.

> It is no longer possible, however, to finance development out of agriculture. Today most of the developed countries have become food-surplus producers. And most of the underdeveloped countries need all the food they can produce to feed their own people, in any event.

There are, of course, exceptions which will be obvious to those who have studied this whole problem.

> Capital investment from abroad is no longer the answer to development.

The Pearson report on partners in development made it tragically clear that a good deal of the inflow of money to so many poor countries was being used for foreign exchange and to repay hard loans. Drucker comments on this in these words:

> But the bulk of development investment today is of a different kind. It aims at creating capacity to produce for the domestic markets of the country in which the investment is made. It does not, in other words, generate the exports with which to repay the investment.

Then, Mr. Drucker talks about the hazards of aid:

> Investment of capital in the developing countries, therefore, tends to create a foreign-exchange liability.

I am not going to bore the House by citing a long list of examples, but if one area of the world needed to be singled out, it would be Latin America where there has been, I think it is right to say, a very substantial amount of capital investment. Yet there the crisis looms as a result of the serious difficulties in which the various countries on that continent find themselves in repaying capital investment.

[Mr. Fairweather.]

I have said that during the 20 years since the inception of external aid program the motives have shifted. I like this because I think that the motives today are a good deal more honourable than they were. However, I think it is a little self-righteous to stand here today, armed with hindsight and the experience of the last two decades, and say: "Well, it might have been better to have made the nationalization for aid a good deal plainer when the programs were first introduced following the second world war".

This point was made, as a matter of fact, by the Secretary of State for External Affairs. Indeed, somebody might do a doctoral thesis on the evolution of the language of Canadian statesmen in this whole field, which seems to get cooler as the years go by. It used to be that we would use the Dullesian phrase "rolling back Communism". It was said we had to buy our way out of the Communist menace. No such—I had better be careful here; I was going to say—

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): Jargon?

Mr. Fairweather: Certainly, there is much jargon attaching to aid, and there are a good many interesting articles on the subject. I prefer to say that there are poor countries and there are rich countries; that Canada is a rich country which should help the poor countries. Others can find more complicated philosophies and ways of expressing this concept.

The reason for the present program was stated by the Secretary of State for External Affairs in what I think was language that was a little negative. He asked: "In what kind of a world do we want our children and grandchildren to work? In what kind of a world do we want to retire?" The answer to that double-barrelled question should be a determinant as we assess our motivations for foreign aid.

The Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) then referred to the threat of poverty in the world as greater than foreign investment, foreign ideologies or foreign nuclear weapons. Appealing to fear and increasing paranoia about the world is a politically ill-advised posture I suggest. It may result in an attitude of retrenchment rather than generosity.

Our committee on external affairs heard some interesting evidence from Dr. Theo

Sommer, a lecturer on international relations at the University of Hamburg. He said:

> The North-South confrontation is a myth, as far as we can look ahead. They cannot get at us, to put it in very crude terms. There will be no political catastrophe resulting from the difference in living standards and development. There will be a moral capacity, of course, if there are many Biafrans or if 50 million Indians die in famine.

This, then, surely is the crucial issue. If development growth does not overtake population growth the rich nations face the prospect of an intolerable moral crisis by the year 2000. This is a crisis furthermore which cannot be solved by the use of palliatives like food aid.

I realize that the house leaders are trying to work out a timetable, but there are one or two points I should like to highlight. These are points in respect of which the official opposition will be making amendments when this bill gets second reading and goes to the committee. Perhaps some of the points are obvious but nonetheless are worth repeating.

First of all, the centre is not the first organization to do research for international development. Other groups like OECD, FAO, UNESCO, the U.N. development program, the International Rice Institution, the United Nations Advisory Committee on the application of science and technology to develop third world plans, plus non-government organizations such as the Rockefeller and Ford foundations are even now doing very important research in this whole field.

I assume that one of the obligations, and this is one about which the new board and executive officers will be undoubtedly enthusiastic, is how to co-ordinate the plans of the research centre with existing research being done in the world today. I stress that perhaps the centre will have to keep the very closest liaison with all the various organizations in the field so that our efforts will be co-ordinated and so that the work will not be duplicated.

I think the minister made this point, but if he did not perhaps I can make it for him. Obviously, we will want to do research in respect of things that Canada can do well. We can do a good many things well and I presume that in the list from which the directors and managers will have to choose projects the easier choices—there will be some hard ones—will be made in respect of those fields where there are Canadian experts available.

I am still a bit uncertain after the minister's statement about the relationship of the new research centre and CIDA. The funds for the centre it seems to me should not just be taken from CIDA's budget. The financing of the centre should be added to the money we are giving each year to CIDA. This may be government policy now.

After the centre has completed a project, it seems to me we must make sure that it will be picked up and something constructive done with it. I do not mean that we should impose the results of our research on the world. Presumably countries will make application to the centre for projects in connection with every aspect of aid, as was made clear in Mr. Pearson's report from the commission on international development. We really should have the machinery for assessing the way in which various projects are to be carried out. I know there is a very fine line that has to be drawn. We cannot be the guardians of poor countries, checking on them all the time as to how the dollars are spent, but in most instances we have embassies or high commissions, part of the responsibility of which will be to see that the value is received for Canadian dollars spent.

I wish I had made this point earlier, but perhaps it is manifestly clear. I certainly hope that no research will be done or is contemplated in any military field. Perhaps this goes without saying. I will have an amendment to propose to make this certain. Perhaps the minister or somebody else will want to checkmate me by proposing an amendment to make clear that there are no military implications whatsoever in the proposed research centre. The developing countries should be involved in the research that will be promoted by the centre, whether through Canadian universities or universities in those countries to get the benefits of this research. One aim of the policy should be that the countries getting the benefit of the research will eventually be able to take over. This is a hopeful thing, but I hope that the research centre's ultimate future is to be phased out. Nobody present in the House will live to see that, but the hope does not become pious for having been made.

This is perhaps a simple thing, but the Bill uses the phrase "underdeveloped" countries. I mentioned earlier in my remarks that there is a jargon in this external aid field, but is not the current jargon the word "developing"? In order to avoid being in any fix about whether a country does or does not like to be called underdeveloped, perhaps we could use the word "developing". I presume everybody is developing, and in this way we could get over a bit of a bind.

Let me make another suggestion very seriously. In view of the present hopeful movement in the world, I suggest that a couple of directors should be from eastern Europe, particularly if we are really serious about setting up an international research centre. There is some very excellent work being done and I think particularly of Yugoslavia. I do not wish to tie the minister down to this or that country. But if we are to have an international research and development centre, we should not shy away from an obligation to invite members from countries in eastern Europe and the U.S.S.R. to serve on this board.

There is one other point. The bill needs re-drafting in so far as the provision for budgetary control is concerned. Perhaps the minister will note this point and it will be covered when the committee discusses the bill. I hope the centre will report to Parliament through the Secretary of State for External Affairs. I would even hope the government would see fit to appoint a member of Parliament. Perhaps the government is not yet daring enough to appoint any member of Parliament, but at least it could appoint one of its own members to serve on the board of governors. I believe this would be a very hopeful initiative on the part of the government because it could be a technique for bringing to the attention of Parliament the work done in this research centre.

The minister said that over the next five years some $30 million will be spent on research projects, about one-third of which will be spent in respect of the headquarters, presumably in order to get the thing into operation. In respect of this centre which has been so long aborning and which has been the subject matter of a good many studies over the last couple of years, I hope the government will see fit to ensure that it has no military purpose, that there is some better technique for reporting to this Parliament, that the possibility will be considered of having a member of Parliament on the board of governors, and that at least five representatives of the board come from developing countries. This numbers game is dangerous, but I would think one or two members of the board at least should be from eastern Europe and that we should consider very carefully the tie-in this centre should have with the universities and colleges of Canada.

I hope the minister does not slough off this centre as some type of new toy in the international aid field to be used as an excuse for not coming to grips with the very serious implications of extending foreign aid budgets. I do not think this is the time to be negative about the centre. I do not believe it is a panacea in the development field by any means, but I hope that with some of the suggestions I have made, and some which undoubtedly will come from other parts of the House, the International Development Research Centre of Canada can make a contribution in a field of world concern which presses upon us urgently.

Mr. David Lewis (York South): Mr. Speaker, I begin my remarks on second reading of Bill C-12 by agreeing with the minister and with the hon. member for Fundy-Royal (Mr. Fairweather) that the proposal in the bill is a useful and imaginative one and that the research centre could be, and I hope will be, of immense value in the development of the most useful methods of giving aid to the developing countries of the world and the most useful methods for those countries to make use of the aid made available.

I wish to express some concern I have about the philosophical approach to the problem of international development and international aid. In doing so, I want to make clear that I am not carping critically in respect of the proposal but am trying to get the minister and his colleagues, and indeed myself and my colleagues, to look at the problem of international development in what I think might perhaps be the more appropriate context in 1970.

Paul Hoffman is reported to have said at some point that it is wrong to speak of giving international aid. One does not give international aid. The proper way to express the situation is to talk about the developing countries receiving aid and not the developed countries just handing it out to them. This is the first problem I have in respect of the suggestions in this bill and the speech introducing it made by the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Sharp). It seemed to me that all the time he was speaking in the usual terms used by statesmen of developed countries concerning international development; that is—and I hope I am not doing him an injustice—we, a developed western nation having all the scientific and technical know-how, are going to provide a research centre in our capital that will involve Canadians in certain elements and areas of research and that we will provide the facilities for the developing countries to use if we can arrange with them for such use. In other words—and again I say I am not carping about this but am worried about it—we appear to be saying that we a rich, developed and knowhow nation will hand out to you, the poor ignorant developing nations which do not have it, all the wisdom we have and all the great things we have accepted in our kind of society.

My study of the subject, Mr. Speaker, which naturally has been as limited as that of any other member, has convinced me that when we speak in the field of international development we are wrong if we speak merely of scientific and technological matters, if we speak merely in terms of providing the developing nations with technical knowhow and the application in their countries of methods which may or may not be suitable for them, and if we speak of introducing into their societies a culture which they may or may not want introduced into their societies.

Mr. Sharp: That is why I said we had to consider the social and anthropological factors involved.

Mr. Lewis: The minister says that we must consider the social and anthropological factors involved. Precisely, but how can this be done with a board when, as I believe he said himself if I heard him correctly, the headquarters group would decide the priorities or the areas, whatever the term he used was, in respect of the research to be undertaken. Who is to be included in this headquarters group? We see in the bill that the board of directors must be composed of a majority of Canadians, 11 out of the 19 or 21, whichever the figure is. We find that the executive committee must consist of a majority of Canadians. There are other proposals of that sort.

I appreciate it is difficult to sell to people the idea that there is a need for international aid when it would cost the people money. This involves taking out of the production in Canada a certain amount in order to assist people elsewhere and it is necessary to persuade the Canadian constituency that this is a worth-while thing to do. My own personal experience with my fellow Canadians has persuaded me for many years that Canadians are ready to make this kind of offer to people who need assistance and are ready to make the kind of sacrifice involved if they are informed about what is being done and are informed about the purposes to be served by international aid.

I have personally, therefore, no worry about persuading the Canadian people to support an appropriate and imaginative program of assistance to developing countries to develop themselves. Therefore, I ask why the emphasis on having a majority of Canadians? What worries me, Mr. Speaker, is this: if you have a board of directors a majority of whose members must be Canadian then you will have some others, and in that case who are the others going to be?

If I remember correctly there is a total of 21 members. There is a chairman, a president, and not more than 19 others, and of this total of 21 a minimum of 11 must be Canadian. Who are the other 10 likely to be? I bet that of the other 10 there will be someone from the United States, someone from the United Kingdom, someone from the Netherlands and someone from France. In other words, in addition to the 11 Canadians there will be a number of other representatives or citizens of developed countries.

The hon. member for Fundy Royal says that he wants at least five members of the board to be from the developing countries. Why only five, Mr. Speaker? I want to emphasize that I am not playing the numbers game. I am saying to members of this House and through you, Sir, to everyone concerned, that in my estimation, after some considerable study and thought, the developing countries ought to have a full say in the kind of research that takes place which is supposed to serve their needs.

This is not only a matter of science and technology. It is a matter of the infrastructure that must be built in these developing countries—the educational facilities, the health facilites, the roads and all the other things that support a modern society. It is a matter of fitting into the culture of developing nations, their system of government, the desire they have and the objectives which they have for the future of themselves and their peoples. Who is going to determine that? A group of Canadians and citizens of other developed countries will have a majority say in this centre, and they will decide the priorities and the areas of research that are to be undertaken.

I am concerned about that. I am worried about it. I do not see the need for insisting that there be a majority of Canadians, and I suggest to the minister that he ought to leave himself free to appoint anybody in the world who can make a contribution to the choice of the priorities, a choice that has to be made in order to carry on the most worth-while and relevant research in various aspects of international development—economic, scientific, social, educational and all the other aspects which must be considered. I am convinced that this cannot be done in the proper atmosphere and in the proper context if it is handed to the developing nations as a decision of a group of men representing mainly the developed countries of the world, which is what the bill now proposes.

Perhaps when the bill is before our committee some explanation will be given as to why we must have a majority of Canadians at every stage. At the moment I do not see it. In fact I see very great disadvantage, as I have indicated, in making the board and the centre mainly representative of the developed countries, once again telling the developing nations what they ought to have, instead of the developing nations having a full voice in what is to be done on their behalf and for their needs by this centre.

This is the first worry I have because if the plan is not implemented in an imaginative way, this research centre will simply be a duplication of research done in the United States, in Europe, and elsewhere throughout the world.

Indeed, Mr. Speaker, without belittling the effort which the minister has placed before us today, I would like to indicate that I have some doubts as to whether this is the best way in which to set up research for the developing countries, and whether the better way is not to set it up inside those countries, or inside regions of those countries, rather than in Canada. I say this tentatively, Mr. Speaker. I can be persuaded that I am wrong about this, but I notice in the "Partners in Development" report of the Pearson Commission there is great emphasis laid throughout the book, and particularly at page 207, on the need for goal-oriented research in regional and national areas of the developing nations, that there ought to be regional or national laboratories and research institutes to study techniques of natural resource utilization and to make other improvements in the developing nations, and that there ought to be nationally based corporations for the purpose of developing products and processes in the developing areas.

[Mr. Lewis.]

It seems to me there is an obvious advantage in having this done in Asia, in Africa and in South America rather than in Canada. It seems to me there is an obvious advantage in having the research institute located in the area that is going to make use of the results of the research, so that the nations in the area, the representatives of the peoples of the area, can have a say in the field of research, the areas of research, the subjects of research, and the objectives of the research that will be undertaken.

You can do the same kind of thing, or at least you can assist that sort of development by a research institute located in Canada if the developing nations are given adequate representation on the board and on the executive which is to make the choice of research subjects and research areas. But when they are given only token representation the situation will be a different one.

I am worried about that because I notice that even the Pearson Commission, if I remember correctly, had only one or at most two members from developing countries. One was W. Arthur Lewis from the Caribbean countries. There may have been one Latin American person. I cannot remember where Campos was from, but most of the others were very fine people, extremely intelligent and competent in their areas but, as I say, most of them were from developed nations. I do not know why that was needed—

Mr. Sharp: Mr. Speaker, if I may interject to reply to this question, may I point out that one of the purposes of the Pearson Commission was to encourage the developed countries to give greater aid, and one of the ways to do this was to have a number of distinguished representatives of developed countries on the commission, who would try to encourage the citizens of their own countries to give greater aid.

Mr. Lewis: I thank the minister. I was going to make that suggestion myself, as to why the commission had this overweight of developed nations. In my opinion, the other reason was that it was an organization set up by the World Bank, and in my humble opinion the World Bank's approach to international development has been a disastrous one, concerned primarily with the superiority of the developed countries, concerned mainly with supporting development in developing countries which seemed to the bankers to be desirable and necessary, but which may not at all have been what the local governments and the local people considered necessary and desirable. This World Bank approach was partly responsible for the choice of the commissioners, although I hasten to say that the report they produced was one of very great value.

I have emphasized this concern, Mr. Speaker. Perhaps I have belaboured it. At the moment, although I am subject to persuasion by the minister and his assistants, I am personally very unhappy about the composition of the membership and leadership of the centre, the board and executive of the centre, which inevitably will mean mere token representation from the developing countries, so that again we will have an international undertaking by the developed nations—in this case Canada and its associates—to tell the developed countries what in our view they ought to have. More and more in the last number of years, Mr. Speaker, I suggest there has been evidence that the developing countries resent this approach and personally I sympathize with their resentment. When one visits the United Nations and listens to delegates of developing countries speak officially, and when one chats with them unofficially, more and more is there evidence that they resent the notion that the developed countries are going to have control of the methods and processes and goals of their development, which is what has happened to date.

I say to the minister that there is not very much difference between what he has proposed in his bill and in his speech this afternoon and the whole, in my opinion, ill-advised concept of tied aid which we have had up to now. This is another form of tied aid and the entire developing world has protested against this notion that when a government gives assistance to a developing country, then X per cent of that assistance must come in the form of goods produced in the donor country. In its report the Pearson Commission uses a great deal of space criticizing the tied aid idea and pleading with the donor countries to drop it.

In a sense, this research centre is a tied aid notion. It was significant that the minister emphasized the fact that the centre was going to give Canadians an opportunity to have certain experience, was going to promote research in Canada. In other words, they were going to use Canadian products and Canadian goods in the sense in which international assistance is tied in the normal way. That is not the objective that the minister and his advisers ought to have for the international research centre.

As a matter of fact, Mr. Speaker, I am concerned that this centre should be merely a source of funds for research projects for universities, and which would have been carried on anyway if the centre were not available, except that there will now be another source of funds to which the universities will be able to go to promote research projects that members of their staff or post graduate students have set for themselves. That is not the purpose of the centre. If assistance for research in our universities is to be given, let it come from the Secretary of State (Mr. Pelletier) and not from the Secretary of State for External Affairs; let it come from the Home Office; let it come from the Canada Council; let it come from whatever other source we may have for assisting research in our universities and for the development of our research and our universities. That surely is not the purpose of this international research centre, I am sure the minister would be the first to agree.

I am not therefore concerned, and I ask the minister that he not be concerned, with promoting research in our universities, with the development of Canadian research. Certainly, we will have a by-product, as will have every other country in the world, from any research carried on in this increasingly important field, but that is not the purpose. It worries me that the minister should have emphasized that because again we will have an emphasis on the things we want to do that we may think of value in promoting Canadian research, rather than an emphasis on what developing countries may require or think they require.

I agree fully with the hon. member for Fundy-Royal who spoke ahead of me. I want to support him without any reservation on the need to make absolutely clear that this research centre will have nothing to do with any military research, defensive or offensive. I am a little fed up anyway with this distinction made between defensive and offensive research. We should have nothing to do with any kind of research related to military activity in developing or developed nations, and we must make that clear. We must make it clear by the necessary provision in the bill, later to become an act, where the powers of the board or the centre are set out. We must underline that no research in military matters will be undertaken directly by the centre or indirectly by financing any such research in the universities or elsewhere.

I hope, Mr. Speaker, that the minister will reconsider the personnel of the leadership of this centre and open it up to people of developing countries to a larger extent than can now be possible. There are many people, and the minister probably knows them personally, in the fields of planning and development in countries like Ceylon, India, some of the African countries, Latin America or the Caribbean countries who could make a tremendous contribution to the research centre. They should be on the board and have something to say about the choice of research subjects.

Finally, Mr. Speaker, I have said on many occasions and so have other members, that any law and any institution can be reduced in value—and I am picking words carefully—if the people chosen to administer that law or run that institution are not the right people. In my study of history I learned that more good laws have been perverted by bad administration than by the Parliaments that passed them. Therefore the personnel chosen for the positions of President, Chairman, Vice-Chairman and other leaders of the centre are of immense importance.

There have been occasions, Mr. Speaker,—and I cannot help saying this though I hope I have a benign smile on my face as I do—when people have been chosen for positions of importance because they were defeated in a prior election. There have been such occasions.

Some hon. Members: Shame, shame.

Mr. Lewis: There have been occasions when people have been appointed to important positions because of political affiliation or because they have friends in high places.

An hon. Member: Saskatchewan and Manitoba.

Mr. Lewis: And elsewhere in Canada, Mr. Speaker. I made no distinctions and pointed no fingers. The minister's reaction is merely a measure of the guilt he feels.

Seriously, I want to emphasize that the people at the head of this research centre ought to be people who have had direct personal experience in the field of international development and have worked in this area, not merely academic people or public servants or whatever. There are such people in Canada and outside and I am sure the minister knows them as well as I do.

I merely throw out some names—I am not proposing any of them—to remind ourselves that there are Canadians who have given a great deal of time to this particular area. There is Dr. Hugh Keenleyside who was attached to the United Nations Technical Assistance Program very early in its life. There is King Gordon and Louis Sabourin here in Ottawa who have had a great deal of experience. There is Ben Higgins, an economist now with the University of Montreal, and who used to be with McGill University, who has had experience of this sort in the field. Of course there are people outside Canada like Gunnar Myrdal, and Arthur Lewis of Jamaican University and many others of that calibre.

What I am emphasizing and pleading for is that when the heads of this institute are appointed, the minister makes certain that they are people who themselves have had personal experience in the field of international aid and development. This ought not to be an academic exercise, but an exercise in practical, realistic, international co-operation and development. And if that is to come about you must have people who have lived with the peoples in the developing areas, who have a sense of their attitudes and desires and some understanding of how they think, act and react. What is done must be of the greatest use to the developing peoples of the world in order that the developing countries may have full confidence in the research institute and not consider it as just another bit of North American largesse which they distrust. It is because Canada can do this without awakening distrust that I greet the bill and the imaginative ideas contained in it. If this kind of institute is to be set up by a developed nation on its own soil, then I submit Canada is one of the few countries that can do so without arousing the fears and distrust of the developing countries.

A great deal has been written about the motivation behind international aid. Many kinds of motivation have been suggested. Some people are motivated on purely political grounds; they think international aid will help the world go in the direction in which they want it to go. I think they are blind and deaf, and quite possibly dumb. No international aid will affect the historical development of the various continents of the world unless and except that international aid helps the developing countries to develop in the direction they have decided to go. There are other people who say that international aid is necessary if we are to assure peace in the world. This, surely, is obvious. It is surely obvious that hunger, disease and ignorance across many parts of the world are a great threat to the peace and order of the world.

There are some who say that international development is good because it will assure the developed countries of future economic growth. That is also true, Mr. Speaker, and one need not be ashamed of emphasizing the fact, because it is a fact, that the future prosperity of the people in the developed countries depends on developing prosperity in the presently undeveloped areas of the world. If at the end of 25, 30 or 40 years from now the poverty of two-thirds of the world remains as deep as now, the welfare and standard of living of the developed parts of the world will undoubtedly suffer.

Finally, there is the sheer motivation on grounds of humanity, the motivation of people wanting to help other people in need. I am not ashamed to accept that as a perfectly proper motive for the giving of imaginative and effective assistance to the needy peoples of the world. We ought not to apologize for feeling that morally we are brother's keeper, whether he is in Africa, Asia, Latin America, or here, on Canadian soil. We shouldn't feel embarrassed to admit that we are anxious to deal in a humane way with great international human problems and it should not be necessary for the minister or anyone else to emphasize Canada's advantage in this undertaking rather than the sheer, decent, civilized humanity which must impel us to help people who now suffer unnecessary want to overcome their degrading and depressing condition. These are good reasons for Canada's playing a much bigger role in international development than it has played until now. All these are perfectly good reasons why this measure should be supported by all sections of the House. I hope that when the bill comes before the committee the minister and his advisers will be prepared to accept suggestions for change which may improve the bill and improve the centre when it starts operations.

[Translation]

Mr. André Fortin (Lotbinière): Mr. Speaker, the House is now discussing the bill to establish the International Development Research Centre of Canada.

After reading this bill, I have come to the conclusion that it is intended to establish some sort of corporation under the direction of a board of governors.

Secondly, under this bill, we would make available to the Centre the sum of $1 million to help them begin their research activities.

Mr. Speaker, this bill is of the greatest interest, and I wish to congratulate the minister on presenting the bill, because, as the previous speaker said, it shows great imagination as well as a desire to improve Canadian aid to developing countries.

It seems that the minister and his officials interested in Canadian aid to developing countries are trying to find new methods.

On the other hand, one should not be overenthusiastic as Canada is still in search of a policy. The actual aid given by Canada to developing countries since it joined the Colombo plan has often been inefficient.

Although Canada is an extremely wealthy and highly industrialized country, Canadians have voiced well founded criticisms of the government aid to developing countries. Canadians are perhaps right in asking their government for increased and gratuitous aid.

Mr. Speaker, the Canadian policy concerns not only the members of this House but also our fellow-citizens, who do not only contribute to Canada's production and expansion, but also express their opinions unhesitatingly. And to support my views, I have here a letter from Father Fernand Noël, from Victoriaville, which I would like to quote:

> I would ask you earnestly to intervene in the House so that Canada's efforts in favour of the developing countries may be intensified. It is not necessary for me to make a statement to suport my request. I rely on you.

Mr. Speaker, that Canadian feels there is no need for him to give his opinion, as he considers that Canadian aid is necessary anyway although it is definitely inadequate.

I have here a letter signed by Mrs. Germain St-Pierre, 180 Notre-Dame Street West, Victoriaville, who says, and I quote:

> I have read in a newspaper your wishes for this New Year.
> And particularly your wishes for peace among men and between alien countries and for the development of underdeveloped countries as well.
> —I dare hope that you will use your influence with the government to promote a more equitable distribution of the funds allotted to developing countries as compared with the appropriations assigned to arms.
> I rely on your support.

I could also read a letter written by Mr. Fernand Turcotte-Dostie, 24 Onil St., Victoriaville, in which he expresses his views on world peace and on the problems of developing countries, and points out that affluent countries are asking themselves questions on the assistance they must extend to them while two-thirds of the world is dying from hunger.

Mr. Speaker, I have no intention of boring the House by reading other letters of this nature. I did read a few because I wanted to show that Canadians living in urban or rural areas take great interest in these problems and ask that the government take measures designed to solve them immediately. In that respect, Bill C-12—I am glad to say—seems to drive the first stake in the search for an answer to requests by Canadians.

This bill provides for the establishment of a centre for research aimed at determining the value and effectiveness of our assistance to developing countries. I must say, repeat or suggest that this research centre must be more than the faithful echo of the government's voice, but rather—and that is our hope—its conscience as regards external aid policy.

We want the Centre to make suggestions without taking the government policy into account. We want it to be, so to speak, free from instructions emanating from the Minister of External Affairs (Mr. Sharp) or any other Cabinet member, and to engage in serious, intensive research, using facilities available in each of the countries involved. The Centre should, in fact, serve as the conscience of our present policy and a source of information for the government.

Now and always, Canadian policy in this field has been a believe-or-else policy, in short a policy of coercion.

And although Canadians wonder about it, nobody demonstrates to the government its lack of efficiency.

We hope that this centre will help to demonstrate the lack of efficiency of the government policy in connection with the developing countries so as to oblige us to improve it all the time and render it more efficient and see that it really reaches its goal.

Since Canada is one of the best industrialized countries in the world and although a certain amount of poverty exists here, we must be keenly interested in the poor countries. Canada must also devote its efforts to research. That is why we welcome the introduction of this bill.

Finally, in this same context of aid to developing countries, Canada must increase its financial, human and technical aid to these countries.

The Canadian policy must be restated, and we hope that this centre will give the government an opportunity to do so.

Canada should try to eliminate the exploitation factors in the developing countries. I shall give here an example which is a real scandal and I should like to suggest to the Secretary of State for External Affairs that he take note of it, so as to become aware of the contradiction contained in his own policy.

Mr. Speaker, on the one hand, primary responsibility for the tragic situation in Biafra and Nigeria lies with the countries that supply arms to the belligerents and that manufacture weapons. With regard to this, Canada has done nothing. As a matter of fact, this afternoon, during the question period, I asked the minister whether he intended at least to ask that there be an investigation into this by the United Nations. He answered that no problem existed and that those responsible for the hardship and poverty of certain countries were not those thought to be so.

Mr. Speaker, that is nonsense. One knows very well that those who supply arms have an interest in keeping those countries in poverty and hardship in order to be able to exploit them better.

The Canadian policy is inconsistent in this respect and only throws dust in the eyes. On the one hand, we would like to increase our aid up to 1 per cent of our estimates, which is insufficient, and on the other, we become the accomplices of those who take unfair advantage of the poor countries until there is bloodshed.

Mr. Speaker, it seems that we should be logical and reconsider our external aid policy, so that it would not be inconsistent.

In the United Nations, Canada has not taken any valid stand against the countries which provide arms to the belligerents and keep alive the ferments of war for the sole purpose of making a profit even if harmless victims must die.

I was talking about Biafra and Nigeria. The latter is precisely a developing country. I could also talk about Viet Nam which is another developing country. We know that many arms suppliers and financiers make money through the sale of arms and other destructive devices to those countries. Canada, the United States, England and other rich and industrialized nations promote destruction and the spreading of poverty.

Such a situation seems absurd to me and it shows the inconsistency of our external affairs policy.

I would not want to delay uselessly the business of the House. The previous speakers have sized up the present situation rather well. However, I want to emphasize that the minister should see to it that this Centre is independent from political parties, in order to really be the conscience of Canada in its foreign aid policy. Through the creation of this Centre, it is proposed to the government and to the Members of Parliament to make a review of our policy, namely, to continually assess our investments. Canada should not impose its aid on any country. It goes without saying that we must make this recommendation, because if Canada imposes its views, various conflicts will result. In this connection, let us remember the failure of the American policy.

The present aid of Canada is ridiculous. We shall never repeat it enough. It is high time that Canada, in addition to founding new research centres, should increase its financial, human and technical investments. When reading the reports of development agencies, it does not take long to realize that Canada is a country which cannot boast of the aid granted to developing countries.

It is already scandalous to note that two thirds of mankind are starving. Poverty, starvation, illness and ignorance prevail. It is unfortunate to note that owing to our non-participation policy regarding conflicts such as those in Nigeria, in Viet Nam, etc., we help widen the gap between the affluent countries and the poor countries that we want to assist.

Such a contradiction, I feel, should be recognized by the Secretary of State for External Affairs and his officials. The establishment of this new Research Centre should have priority. The Centre will suggest a global policy to the government, enabling it to dissipate the present scandal. So, Canada might really reach a top place among countries providing foreign aid.

At the present time, we can draw great lessons from the achievements of several other countries. I have here before me the September 1968 issue of the publication entitled International Development. Canadians will not find in it any reason to be proud of themselves. That publication shows the shameful shallowness of the Canadian policy. Indeed, it is again the consequence of its inconsistency. I therefore want to insist strongly on that point. Besides, it is the only one I want to rise now because I do not care to delay the debate needlessly. And once more I urge the minister to revise our external aid policy, in the light of his external affairs policy, so that we do not build on the one hand and destroy on the other but rather see to it that our country leads the way without expecting any return in order to eliminate poverty and hardships in two thirds of the world. We have in Canada, according to the minister, surpluses of wheat, of milk and of many other products still to be sold because the government is incapable of selling them. Those goods keep accumulating, while there is growing poverty in Canada, and two thirds of the world's population is starving to death.

Mr. Speaker, this should weigh heavily on the consciences of Canadians. That explains the intervention of my fellow-citizens of Victoriaville, in the riding of Lotbinière, who have asked me to urge the minister to revise that policy. Indeed, Canadians would be proud to increase their help to co-operate with the minister, and to tighten their belts, as the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) has asked, provided it really helped to check poverty and hardship. Otherwise, this is nothing but a farce, and a lack of responsibility.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

STATEMENT ON PROCEDURAL AGREEMENT

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (President of the Privy Council): On a point of order, Mr. Speaker, I wonder if I might indicate to hon. members the substance of what I believe has been agreed between representatives of the parties with regard to this debate and to the proceedings this evening. I understand that there are others who wish to speak on this bill. It has therefore been agreed that Private Members' hour should be suspended for today's sitting and that if second reading of the bill now under debate should not have been completed by then, at six o'clock the question on second reading would then be put. If, however, the debate concludes before six o'clock and the question has been put, the House would at that point rise until eight o'clock and commence with the debate under Standing Order 26.

It has also been agreed that debate under Standing Order 26 shall be concluded by 10.30 this evening; it would be terminated at that time and the motion proposed by the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Stanfield) under Standing Order 43 earlier today would then be put to the House without debate.

If I have given a correct understanding of the results of our discussions, and if the House is agreeable, perhaps this could be made an order for today's proceedings.

Mr. G. W. Baldwin (Peace River): I think that is quite correct, Mr. Speaker. I myself would be inclined to put it in a somewhat different way—that the House would deem the debate on second reading to be concluded at six o'clock, and the motion for second reading be then put.

Also, I would assume that the order which the hon. gentleman is proposing assumes that unanimous consent has been given pursuant to Standing Order 43 for the motion of my hon. friend the Leader of the Opposition to be put at 10.30.

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): Yes, Mr. Speaker, the order would assume that the notice requirement would be waived in order that the motion might be put.

With regard to the debate under Standing Order 26, perhaps I might be allowed to make what amounts to an exhortation rather than a procedural point, namely, that the 20-minute limit be strictly observed in order that as many members as possible might have an opportunity to contribute to the debate.

Mr. Baldwin: The House always listens to exhortations.

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): The points which have been made, especially the last exhortation, represent what we have agreed to.

[Translation]

Mr. Fortin: Mr. Speaker, the Ralliement créditiste supports the proposals of the government house leader of parliament. It will be pleased to co-operate with a view to speeding up the business of the house.

[English]

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Béchard): The House has heard the proposal by the President of the Privy Council. Is it so agreed?

An hon. Member: Ordered.

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

[Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale).]

INTERNATIONAL DEVELOPMENT RESEARCH CENTRE

PROVISION FOR ESTABLISHMENT

The House resumed consideration of the motion (Mr. Sharp) that Bill C-12, to establish the International Development Research Centre of Canada be read the second time and referred to the Standing Committee on External Affairs and National Defence.

Mr. Leonard Hopkins (Renfrew North): I should like to say a few words on this bill to establish an International Development Research Centre in Canada.

First of all, Mr. Speaker, I should like to congratulate the minister for bringing forward this imaginative and constructive piece of legislation, the forerunner of its kind in this field of international affairs. I think the minister would support me if I were to extend my compliments also to Mr. Maurice Strong and to his righthand man, Dr. Peters, both of whom have done outstanding work behind the scenes in connection with this legislation. They are two men who are very well qualified indeed for the positions they hold.

This bill establishes a more efficient means of expending money under what used to be known as our foreign aid plan. Many countries, including Canada, have in the past allocated a great deal of money to assisting under-developed and developing countries without really placing a great deal of emphasis upon the efficiency with which the money was being used. This is understandable; it is difficult to tell other people how to spend money once they have it in their hands, especially at the international level. The bill now before us establishes a system which enables a research centre in Canada to find the best means of solving problems experienced by the countries to which we are providing assistance. It is necessary, of course, that this research organization should not become too centralized. If it is to provide information covering many different types of industry in developing countries having widely different needs, it is self-evident that the necessary research cannot be carried on in any one centre in this country.

The central proposal in this bill is that we should set up an international development research centre which is to be problem-oriented, and much of the work to be done will find its way to other research institutions and other areas of Canada. This is as it should be. Personally, I should not want to see the establishment of an organization which is too strongly orientated toward the universities. In the past we have depended to a large degree upon university staffs for research, ignoring the fact that we have a wealth of scientific knowledge and experience at our disposal in industry and in many of the Crown corporations of Canada—a wealth of scientific staff who are not directly concerned with education in universities.

In this regard I can think of several, including Atomic Energy of Canada. We also have federal forest research stations across Canada. I am sure much can be done, for example in tree genetics, to assist some of the developing countries.

Last September when a group of us visited South America to participate in the Interparliamentary Conference at Lima, Peru, we were told that in various parts of Peru scientists had discovered several species of wood hitherto unknown. I agree with an earlier speaker in this debate who said that South America is certainly one place where a great deal of emphasis should be placed on assistance. It is only by helping people to help themselves that we are going to cure the social ills of other countries. Countries like the United States and other industrialized nations, regardless of financial wealth, cannot hope to provide all of the information and educational facilities required to assist the underdeveloped nations; the only way we can assist them is to help them to help themselves. This we can do through research programs of this type.

The humanitarian aspects of this bill have been mentioned and they are indeed very important. I think anyone who has visited South America and other countries of the world, where there is poverty, will realize that through research we can better their conditions. We must give these countries a plan and the trained personnel to solve their problems, and it is for this purpose that we require financial resources. In proceeding in this way and reaching solutions of this kind, we will be spending our money wisely.

In the Middle Ages scientists in the world did not gather together very often. Only recently have the best scientists of Europe and North America gathered together at the international level. In the old days scientists jealously guarded their knowledge; today the results of research in one country is almost straight-away passed on to scientists of other nations. This is one of the main purposes of this bill, and it would not be possible to put a bill like this into operation were this not the case.

This bill also breaks new ground in the field of international affairs by making provision for people from other developing countries of the world to sit on the board of governors. I think this is an excellent road on which to start out. While the majority of the board of governors will be Canadians, which I think is only right since Canada is providing the program, it is interesting to note that finally we are permitting people from other countries, who know their own problems firsthand, to sit on the board of governors of the International Development Research Centre of Canada. This is a step that will make the research program more effective. We will know the problems we have to face, the solutions we must work toward, and we will know the local conditions within which they must be applied.

I was pleased to hear the minister state in his speech that $30 million would be directed toward this plan over the first five years of operation. Although much of this $30 million is going to be spent in Canada, the nations we are assisting directly, with the balance of this money, will still benefit from this expenditure in Canada. This is a joint agreement. It is a plan whereby we will be solving our own problems both industrially and economically as well as solving similar problems in other countries.

I was astounded to learn that in the past only $1 out of every $200—I believe that is the correct figure one-half of one per cent—that was spent on foreign aid, has been directed toward foreign research aid programs. I think we have now come to realize that we could not continue to spend so little on research because we do not know whether our foreign aid program is being properly directed, and is actually solving problems in recipient countries. In fact, there have been times when past governments of Canada have not looked very seriously at this question of finding out how much good has been done by money spent in developing countries.

This bill starts us off on a new and very enlightened approach. Not only will we obtain first hand knowledge of problems existing in developing countries as a result of close relations with the representatives of other nations on the board of governors, but we are also going to work together in research programs in order to find a plan to meet those problems and thereby help those nations to develop their economies. I think this in turn cannot help but build a better scientific and technological core, and hence a wider middle class society in developing countries.

As some of the members of this House have seen for themselves, one of the big problems in developing countries in the world today is that there are the two extremes: you have the very rich and the extremely poor. Developing a middle class society in such countries will give greater stability, and hence a better standard of living will result.

It is estimated that by the year 2000, 80 per cent of the world's population will live in those countries that today are classified as developing nations. One thing that we as a nation must strive toward is a plan to prepare the people of developing countries to look after themselves relatively well by the year 2000. I say this because if 80 per cent of the people of the world are still living in countries where they do not have enough to eat, proper clothing and the comforts of life, then we cannot help but have international problems that stem directly from such economic and social conditions.

I hope other countries in the world will follow this example and set up new agencies with a board of governors of an international character. I hope these agencies will go to work in this field of research as problem solving agencies. We in this Parliament must not only attack the problems of today. We must always attack those problems, but when we face a serious situation such as the suggestion that 80 per cent of the world's population faces possible poverty by the year 2000, we must look beyond today's horizon and do something constructive.

In this respect, I should like to give my full support and the support of a very interested group in my constituency. They support and congratulate the minister and his staff on the passage and implementation of this legislation. I am very pleased by the great interest of the Science Association of Deep River. The several hundred professional scientists and technological people in that association are interested in doing all they can to assist the government to implement this plan.

[Mr. Hopkins.]

We also have a forest research station at Chalk River. This staff is extremely interested in providing assistance where it is needed in the field of forest genetics and other scientific projects. I know I speak for them when I say to the minister that he can count on the wholehearted support of this large body of scientific and technological people. I wish the minister and his staff every success in the implementation of this measure.

If there are things about this measure that must be revised in years to come, we should not hesitate to make changes which will make the plan more workable. No one group could bring in legislation of this far-reaching type that is 100 per cent efficient. This measure is certainly off to a flying start and I am sure that members on all sides of this House will agree that if in years to come changes are necessary, the government will meet with the same co-operative attitude which exists at this time.

In closing, let me once again compliment the minister and his staff on this far-reaching legislation. I compliment the government in general for the international character of the board of governors. This is a new plan that we hope will provide for more efficient spending of the money provided to assist the developing countries of this world. By the year 2000 we will be in a position to say that at least Canadians have done something useful to create peace in the world. We have taken the humanitarian and economic steps necessary to provide the people of developing countries with the mental tools to look after themselves.

Mr. A. D. Hales (Wellington South): Mr. Speaker, I should like to use a few minutes of the time of the house to say a word or two about this bill before it is referred to the committee. I am sure all members of this house would endorse any policy or program this or any other government might introduce that is of benefit to developing countries. I have always been one of those who feels it is far better to teach a man how to grow a bushel of corn than it is to give him the money to purchase that corn. I hope this is the philosophy of the bill now before us. Anything we can do to encourage and support research in an international sphere such as this should be done.

Let me caution the minister and the government about the possibility of overlapping or duplication in the field of science. There is not a university in Canada which is not conducting a great amount of research useful to developing countries. There are a number of agricultural experimental stations doing research across this nation. The Canada Council is supporting a great deal in this regard, as well as the Department of External Affairs. Many foundations such as the Ford Foundation are contributing large sums of money to research. We must make sure that we do not introduce another body or corporation that will duplicate this research. I hope this will be a more efficient way of conducting research for the developing countries.

This research must be channelled and brought together in one central organization, I hope this is what the minister has in mind. The bill sets out that this board shall meet at least twice in each year with at least one such meeting at the head office, which I understand is to be in Ottawa. It shall meet at other times and places as the chairman may deem necessary. Let me remind the minister and hon. members of the outstanding facilities which are available at the University of Guelph in the riding I have the honour to represent, particularly in relation to agriculture. This university is known throughout the world as being outstanding in the field of research, in soil science, crop science, animal science and veterinary science. It is also engaged in research and teaching household science and provides a home economics course, as well as facilities at the arts college. If this board is to meet from time to time in other places, I can think of no better place than the campus of the University of Guelph. The subjects taught there are those subjects of interest to developing countries. I am sure there would be a great wealth of knowledge available to such a meeting on this particular campus.

In concluding, let me repeat my hope that some of the duplication and overlapping in the various sciences will be overcome as the result of the establishment of this International Development Research Centre. It is my hope that this will provide a more efficient way of assisting those countries which so badly need our assistance. There is hardly a university in Canada that does not have a large number of students from foreign lands. They are learning the technical ways to improve the lot of their countrymen. I fully support this bill, providing it is not just another means to duplicate research at a great cost to the Canadian taxpayer.

There is no mention of the operating costs. There will be a grant of $1 million but there is no mention of the cost involved in respect of the operation of this centre. I believe, when we approve these things we should have some idea of the cost involved and the number of persons to be employed. Let us know where we are headed. So, I repeat what I said in the beginning. I endorse this bill provided it is not another example of duplication in the field of research.

Motion agreed to, bill read the second time and referred to the Standing Committee on External Affairs and National Defence.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Béchard): Pursuant to special order made this day I do now leave the chair until eight o'clock.

At 5.22 p.m. the House took recess.

AFTER RECESS

The House resumed at 8 p.m.

MOTION TO ADJOURN UNDER S.O. 26

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

NIGERIA-BIAFRA—CANADIAN ACTION FOLLOWING CEASE-FIRE

Mr. Speaker: Order. Leave has been granted to the hon. member for Greenwood (Mr. Brewin) to move the adjournment of the House pursuant to Standing Order 26 for the purpose of discussing a specific and important matter requiring urgent consideration, namely:

—the situation arising out of the destruction of the Uli Airport and the possibility of the collapse of Biafran resistance, to the end that Canada may play an effective role in organizing and participating in an expanded observer team in Biafra, so as to ensure that guarantees given by the federal authorities against reprisals upon Biafran personnel be fully observed, and that a massive international relief operation be urgently organized, utilizing where possible existing relief distribution personnel, so as to minimize the widespread starvation which is imminent.

[Translation]

Therefore, the motion is as follows:

That the House do now adjourn.

[English]

Mr. Andrew Brewin (Greenwood): Mr. Speaker, the subject matter which requires the urgent consideration of this House is the situation arising out of the recent damage to the Uli airport in Biafra and the collapse of Biafran resistance. I do not propose to rehash the past or attribute praise or blame for the past. History may have something to say about that. I do want to talk about the extreme urgency of the present. I want to stress that there are two things that are urgently required by the present emergency. The first is the necessity of organizing an expanded observer team. The second is the need for massive international relief efforts.

It is quite impossible for me to exaggerate the stark urgency of the situation, the immensity of the tragedy that lies just days ahead. The statement made to this House today by the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Sharp) speaks of the need to co-ordinate outside relief activity on an international basis in co-operation with the government of Nigeria.

We in this party are in agreement as to the necessity of international action. We are agreed as to the necessity of co-operation from the government of Nigeria. But the fact of the matter, as was stated by Mr. James McCracken, director of the Church World Services of the United States of America, today is that there are 4 million people in the hospitals and feeding camps who have been receiving one meal a day and are facing imminent starvation. Mr. McCracken estimates that if supplies remain cut off—as they are now by the cutting off of Uli airport and the relief operations there—1 million people will die within 48 hours.

A statement issued today by Canairelief—I remind the House that Canairelief is the agency which, on behalf of Canadians, has been working in this field and knows what it is talking about—points out that virtually no food has been sent in during the past two days. Some 5 million people, according to its estimate, face immediate death by starvation or disease unless emergency steps are taken to increase the flow of relief supplies.

The statement by Canairelief goes on in these words:

> Thus the appalling death rate already standing at 2,000 to 3,000 a day could mount astronomically. This is a situation in which hours count.

I do not have the precise text, but I wish to read from what I understand was a telegram sent to the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) by Canairelief today. It says:

> Some 5 million have virtually no food and relief supplies have stopped. Death rates will reach catastrophic proportions if relief supplies are delayed.

[Mr. Brewin.]

> Hundreds of thousands of people could face death within 48 hours. Action is needed not in days not in weeks, but in hours.
> Second: Canairelief and various agencies of the Joint Church Aid Organization could supply 500 to 1,000 tons tomorrow if permission is secured for use of the Uli airstrip. Our Sao Tomé based groups have supplies for immediate delivery in the neighbourhood of 5,000 tons.
> Third: we urgently request your government to secure permission from Nigeria for the free daily use of the Uli airstrip so as to deal with this interval until larger government programs can be set up.

I wish to add to this, Mr. Speaker, that if too much time is spent co-ordinating and discussing what is the appropriate action, the problem will have disappeared because the people whose need for action is so urgent will no longer be there. There has been much debate on the issue of genocide or destruction of a race. I do not propose to resume that debate here. I do assert that in the absence of effective, international action in the very near future the result will be precisely the same as if genocide had been deliberately planned. History, I suggest, will be the judge of this generation if the appalling result of the destruction of a gifted race by starvation stems from deliberate genocide or from inaction in this emergency.

The present method of supporting and distributing the food has been carried on by Joint Church Aid, the consortium of churches in which Canairelief has played a substantial part. In order to get on with the job, this organization has in the past acted heroically, imaginatively and effectively without the support of the Nigerian government. If it had waited for Nigerian approval it could not have saved the millions of lives it has already saved.

It must now be realized that the Nigerian government may wish to exclude this agency from the management of the emergency interim relief measures so urgently required. It is, however, a fact that the supplies immediately available for distribution in the next week or so are at Sao Tomé, under the control of Joint Church Aid. It is also true that the means of flying in these supplies immediately available for distribution in the next week or so, before land transportation or water route can be organized, is in the aircraft at present owned and controlled by Joint Church Aid at Sao Tomé.

It is also true that although some of the personnel have left, the people in charge of the relief distribution centres are the only people capable of carrying on the job in an orderly way in the next short while. They are the personnel who have worked for Joint Church Aid and the International Red Cross, and they are still in Biafra.

If the existing stocks are not used, if the aircraft facilities available at Sao Tomé are not used, if the present distribution system is not used in the interim until some other assistance can be organized, there will probably be few people left in the country to be saved by the time other routes of supply by land, water or otherwise can be organized. It is for this reason that the executive working group of Joint Church Aid, meeting today in Stuttgart, Germany, said:

> According to reports from medical staff the physical resistance of the civilian population in the afflicted areas is at such a low ebb that if supplies are cut back for even a week, a high percentage of the population may not survive.

Joint Church Aid officials are fully confident that the Nigerian federal government will make possible the immediate continuance, and even an increase of the relief flights until such time as massive relief supplies are brought forward by normal surface routes. It is for this reason that Joint Church Aid in the United States has offered its facilities to the Nigerian Red Cross. It is for this reason that Canairelief, the Canadian agency, said that its personnel, its supplies and its aircraft will be handed over to whatever agency will do the job.

This is the reason why I urge upon this government that the highest priority be given to co-operation with other friendly governments—I am thinking of the governments of the United States, the United Kingdom, France and many other countries—to urge the Nigerian government forthwith to approve the Nigerian Red Cross accepting the offer made by Joint Church Aid on an interim basis, and continuing to use the present channels until plans for the rehabilitation of a more permanent system can be worked out on an international basis. The relief of starvation could start tomorrow if this method were used. The food is there, the aircraft are there and the method of distribution is there. All that is needed is that the button be pressed, and the only people who can press the button are the federal government of Nigeria. I suspect that the only people who can persuade them to press it and agree with this method are the governments of the countries I have mentioned and the government of Canada.

With the stocks of food and drugs at present in Sao-Tomé, with the co-operation of the Nigerian government to enable daylight flights, and if necessary night flights, it is anticipated that from Sao Tomé alone 14 or 15 aircraft using the warehouse facilities now available at Sao Tomé could transport upwards of 500 tons a day to Uli airport. Joint Church Aid had in its warehouses at Sao Tomé at the end of December a stock of approximately 5,000 tons, with 1,600 tons en route. If these supplies could be flown into Uli at the rate of 500 tons a night, they could tide over the dangerous interim period while the land and water corridors are organized and a new set-up created.

It may be that the Nigerian government feels it has a grievance because of what it regards as the unauthorized activities of Joint Church Aid in the past, but no such grievance should be allowed to stand in the way of saving the lives of virtually a whole people. The Nigerians must be magnanimous in victory or it will be a hollow victory, a victory which has turned an important part of their country into a graveyard.

Mr. Speaker, I do not tonight propose to discuss details. The urgent needs are food, drugs and medical supplies. The Canadian government should consider once again making its Hercules Aircraft available for all necessary transportation. If land routes are to be organized, trucks will have to be flown in. Portable medical field hospitals are essential. During this period some degree of security must be afforded those working in the distribution centres. The Nigerian government should be ready to give such guarantees of security as long as personnel work under the direction of the Nigerian Red Cross.

I should now like to say a word or two about the observers. The statement of the Secretary of State for External Affairs today indicated that the government was prepared to provide more observer personnel. There are two Canadian officers there at the present time. I urge that here, too, there is necessity for immediate and vigorous action.

This war arose out of fear of genocide. It started in an atmosphere of coups, countercoups and pogroms. It has been attended by massacres, the bombing of civilians and massive starvation. The international committee has entered into a solemn agreement which imposes upon it a moral obligation to see that genocide does not occur. The Nigerian government has intimated its willingness to accept expanded observer teams, but we are in an area of great confusion with the population running into several millions.

To be useful the observer teams must be large enough in number to undertake a reasonable surveillance of all areas. It is important, in my judgment, that observers include not only military personnel but others qualified to consider and report the facts. Indeed, it is my suggestion that included in the observer teams should be experienced jurists who could be suggested by the International Commission of Jurists, and experienced representatives of the press whose function is not only to observe but to record facts. If the code of conduct described by the Nigerian government is to be carried out, if the issue of genocide is to be laid to rest, it is necessary that there be adequate and impartial observers and it is essential that they be on the spot now, when the strain is greatest.

I hope that during the course of this debate the Secretary of State for External Affairs will tell us, in more precise terms than those of his earlier statement, his plan in both these areas; I hope he will tell us what representations are being made as to relief, who he is in touch with, what instruments are proposed to be used in dealing with the immediate emergency I have described? In the observer field, how many observers are planned? Where they are to come from? Has contact been made with the Nigerian government for the acceptance of an expanded observer team? If the government is serious, and I believe it must be, about the events of the Biafran tragedy which has aroused the conscience of the people of Canada and of mankind, it must be prepared to act now, to act urgently and to give in the debate tonight precise answers to these questions.

In the past, Mr. Speaker, Canada has been proud to lead the world in humanitarian concern and in the field of peacekeeping. The time is now, tonight, to demonstrate that Canadians can and will give effective, vigorous and urgently needed leadership in this tragic situation. Humanity, respect for human life and the future of the world community alike demand that we do not fail.

Mr. R. Gordon L. Fairweather (Fundy-Royal): Mr. Speaker, it is only the extraordinary nature of this debate that would make me impose myself on this Parliament twice in the same day, but you will have to put up with me and I make no apology for the necessity for the debate itself.

Canada and the world know where Biafra is now as countries scramble to provide food and medicine, freed from any political or diplomatic hang-ups. However, in a word or two I should like to recall the particularly brave people from various countries of the world who saw the need and responded, untroubled by diplomatic nuance, heedless of arguments about whether hundreds of thousands of deaths are an internal matter.

There is a great deal of cynicism about the relevancy of churches in today's order of things, but I suggest that without the churches the death toll would have been even more ghastly. Without the action of Joint Church Aid and Canairelief during the awful months from June until a day or two ago no food and medicine would have got into Biafra. It seems to me that on the occasions I have taken part in discussion on this issue I have been unable to get across what I think is the fundamental issue, that of man being willing to stand by. God knows, we have stood by enough in our generation, and that is what I cannot get out of my head.

I wish to read from what I think is one of the most splendid pieces of writing about this whole matter. The article was written by Renata Adler and appeared in New Yorker magazine last October. It summarizes the context that I have always felt applies to this matter. Why should I presume to suggest that others do not feel the same way? This is the context, surely, in which this tragedy should grip mankind. I read from this article as follows:

> The absurdist element keeps coming up in Biafra.

Of course, now "keeps" will have to be changed to "kept". I continue:

> The sense here is of a people about to die in isolation and pretending not to know it—convinced in any case by their recent history that they have no choice. Victims are seldom pure, or even entirely attractive, and a case can certainly be made against any victim of murder before some higher court of absolute irrelevance. But Biafrans (fighting a war, in a sense, for a position argued in Hannah Arendt's 'Eichmann in Jerusalem') are determined to avoid at least the accusation of passive complicity in their own destruction and resist, trusting their own interpretation of what the risks of capitulation and the costs of survival might be. Once the foremost advocates of Nigerian unity, they have been persuaded by a series, both before and since the war, of broken accords, systematic exclusions, and outright massacres, both total and selective (including the killing of all males over ten years old in a captured Biafran town whose civilians did not leave), that Nigeria intends to eliminate the peoples of the region that is now Biafra, and that the intention of genocide is not one that you test, passively, until the last returns are in. In the massacres of summer, 1966 (nearly a full year before Biafra's secession from Nigeria), thirty thousand natives of the Biafran region were murdered. "I have just been reading 'Exodus'", Professor Nwosu told a group of friends, some time after his night of waiting at State House. "Before the war, a novel to me was a trivial thing. But I should have known the west would not be impressed by thirty thousand. Some of you literary people should have told me."

I suggest that there are some assurances—the hon. member for Greenwood (Mr. Brewin) mentioned some of them—that the government of Canada is entitled to obtain from the Government of Nigeria. They relate to these points: First, that no purges will take place and that prisoners will be fairly and humanely treated. The committee which studied this matter read a little booklet put out by the Nigerian government about the humane treatment of prisoners. I presume the contents of this booklet will be noted by the authorities. The second point is that the observer force be strengthened in scope and number and will be given carte blanche permission to travel throughout the entire country.

Third, experience and memory have made the Ibo people believe that mass slaughter will be their fate. The British government, which has a major responsibility for this war, now has an obligation to the peoples of Biafra, Nigeria and the world to ensure that the Biafran surrender is accepted honourably. Fourth, General Gowon will have to account to the United Nations, to the Organization of African Unity and to the Commonwealth, to say nothing of the ordinary peoples of the world who have watched the terrible war unfold. General Gowon has a heavy responsibility, and I sincerely hope that he will be persuaded to act mercifully by those governments which have seen fit to send him arms. Fifth, the United Nations and the ICRC must somehow evolve a formula which will allow the provision of humanitarian aid so that countries will no longer have an excuse to stand on the sidelines, waiting for permission to feed the people and administer medicine.

Recriminations have a hollow ring, particularly tonight. What might have been is conjecture. Surely we agree that self-righteousness is unacceptable when men have watched their brothers die. General Gowon has asked other countries to avoid or stay out of what he classifies an internal Nigerian matter. I ask the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Sharp) does this interdiction still hold? Does Canada know about this? If the interdiction still holds, what have we done to force the government of Nigeria to change its mind?

Everybody is being bold now. The United Kingdom is flying in an aircraft and the Netherlands are flying 16 aircraft to Nigeria. President Nixon has telephoned the Prime Minister of the United Kingdom. Have we telephoned anybody? If so, for what purpose?

Some people have questioned the amount of time our Parliament has taken on this issue. Some doubt the wisdom and efficacy of any involvement in what people classify as other men's troubles. Some are content to mask their sterility of policy with excuses. I suggest that those of us with public responsibility should heed the warning that I suspect is being given to us by a majority of thoughtful people who have been profoundly frustrated by the insensitivity of the United Nations to this issue.

Many people of good will consider it unacceptable for men to do nothing in these circumstances. These people have reason to be disillusioned because of the long months of inaction and indecision over the basically simple matter of feeding people who are starving. I think it would not hurt if we reminded ourselves that we are being overwhelmed by a surfeit of boasting about our technological achievements while at the same time we cannot carry a loaf of bread across a highway.

Since the dawn of history men have been able to feed other men. We have spent a year congratulating ourselves on our advances in the field of human rights and what we like to call fundamental freedoms. But hospitals, marketplaces and feeding stations are still strafed in the name of "one country". Man has landed on the moon and has transferred human hearts, but cannot land on a neutral airstrip and transfer food and medicine. Men say, knowingly, that war is ugly. This is their excuse. If we know that, and God knows we have reason enough to know it in this century, why cannot we evolve a formula to stop war?

Is a slogan worth a life? Is a concept of sovereignty worth a village? Is a boundary drawn by man worth redrawing with man's blood? The governments of the world are hurrying to help in a veritable tumble of concern, but many nights were filled by the sound of aircraft flying dangerously low, paid for by modest people, inspired by the strangest collection of religious leaders ever gathered together to share a task. If we seek heroes, here they are. We should remember them as we pick up the pieces and wrest a formula for stopping this madness in which men engage.

Mr. Bernard Dumont (Frontenac): Mr. Speaker, we have heard today the statement of the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Sharp) concerning the Nigerian tragedy.

On reading that statement, we realize that the government is disposed even to airdrop supplies, now that it knows the Nigerians have crushed the Biafrans. And yet two years ago, the government was told that it was time to help the Biafrans who were dying by hundreds of thousands through lack of food. If it had been decided then to airdrop supplies, our country would have helped to counterbalance the sale of arms by England and Russia to the Nigerians.

It must be said that the Canadian government behaved somewhat like Pontius Pilate saying it was not responsible for the Biafran victims. For my part, I prefer to have been one of those who demanded the adoption of emergency measures rather than an irresponsible member who would not have asked a majority government to take the necessary action.

If we recall briefly the history of this civil war, we discover that already in 1966 the "Southerners", also called Ibos, were being massacred.

At that time, they were already amputating the hands of Biafran civil servants to prevent them from writing. Trains of refugees from the South were being stopped by Northern Nigerian troops, and men, women and children tortured and butchered.

To show the Ibos what to expect if they came back to the northern part of the territory, some of them were deported after having had their noses, lips, ears and hands cut off. Despite such a massacre, one and a half million refugees were successful in reaching the Eastern province and on May 27, 1968, the Nigerian authorities attempted to divide this Biafran region into three parts. They wanted furthermore to deprive it of a very vital seaport, that of Harcourt, to protect British-owned oil wells. I feel that this was already unacceptable to the Biafrans. It is why they fought stubbornly until death rather than surrender.

History repeats itself. We have at the present time a government which, to my way of thinking, was not firm enough when firmness was called for, a government without backbone which would rather see a people assassinated than express its disapproval to a country that we know well, a country to which we did immeasurable services in money and in human lives during the last two wars.

The Canadian war effort has saved England from disaster. Therefore it seems to me that this country should have listened attentively to our representations, had they been strong enough, and stopped selling arms to Nigeria to protect certain economic interests controlled by the British government: oil wells, peanuts or cocoa. To sacrifice human lives in order to secure control over the economy of a country is what we call a criminal act which will not go unpunished. I know that some will feel guilty for having watched the genocide of a people without saying a word.

What kind of arms did England sell to Nigeria? Firstly, the 120,000 Nigerian soldiers got ultramodern material, especially many British "Salodin" tanks, 18 bombers and many other British planes, six coast-guard vessels and all the military equipment that a modern army needs. All this has been furnished in order to ensure the protection of the interests of the British Shell company which discovered oil in 1955.

And in the meantime, our government said in the House that we cannot interfere in the domestic problems of a country. In my opinion, all this was nothing but deceit and even, sometimes, hypocrisy—just like the ostrich which would rather bury its head in the sand.

I would like to draw the attention of the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) to the prose of a young 18 year old student who made an appeal to Canadians, and I quote:

L'APPEL AUX CANADIENS

Amitié, Fraternité.
De quoi êtres-vous les symboles?
De cet univers plein de cruauté,
Êtes-vous bien l'auréole?

Des hommes meurent par milliers
Là-bas, dans ce pays du Biafra,
Personne ne bouge, et, tel des piliers,
Chacun se dit: «Ce n'est pas le Canada» ...

Le Gouvernement se meurt d'insolence
Tandis que d'autres expirent de souffrance
Notre premier ministre fait la bise
Les autres subissent la crise.

D'innocentes victimes s'éteignent tous les jours
Et ce doit être un peu de chaque Canadien qui part aussi

Pourquoi alors, dans le dédale de notre vie,
Employer ces deux mots: Amitié, Amour?

Disons plutôt: Égoïsme, Injustice
On atteindra alors la vérité
Et cette vérité régnera sous d'heureux auspices
Dans notre fausse et futile cité.

Canadiens, écoutez le cri de ces malheureux
Au nom de l'amitié, de la fraternité,
Cessez votre double jeu

Délivrez votre conscience de ses faux atouts
Afin que dans le monde et partout,
Règne la «Paix» et la «Bonté».

If a young 18 year old student can write such things, I think that a responsible government should have also taken the steps which would have prevented, at that time, the enormous mistakes which were made.

Besides, as evidenced on page 15 of Hansard for September 13, 1968, I said, and I quote:

I should like to direct a question to the Right Hon. Prime Minister. Could the Prime Minister say whether the government intends to intervene as concerns England—which he knows well—to stop the shipping of arms to the federal troops in Nigeria now guarding the Shell Company oil wells?

On September 18, 1968, as can be found on page 190 of Hansard, I said that since the beginning of the war in Biafra more than 2 million people had died because the federal troops of Nigeria wanted to protect the oil wells and I wondered whether we should not discourage the Nigerians who were pushed by England to commit that genocide. I also asked the Prime Minister and his government if the Shell Company was not one of those which puts in office governments of its choice, with amounts of money which too often explain why election funds are so well filled.

And still England continued selling arms and airplanes which made possible the murder of civilians and the bombing of hospitals maintained by the Red Cross.

I said then that mothers begged the Prime Minister of Canada for help, because we have, as Canadians, the reputation of being a pacifist people. These mothers said that children were writhing in pain, crying their misfortune and begging for mercy. I implored the Prime Minister to put an end to that tragedy. In fact I said to him that if he had any children of his own and if he heard them cry: Mommy, I am hungry, he would hurry to England in order to ask the authorities to stop selling offensive weapons responsible for that war which should never have been.

On October 10, 1968, as can be read on page 1020 of Hansard, I asked the following question:

In a statement on the troubles in Biafra, the Secretary of State for External Affairs reaffirmed that Canada would support Nigeria against the secessionist rebels.

The Prime Minister was then asked if the Canadian government policy consisted in giving Nigeria aid which permitted it to murder Biafrans.

To another question, the Secretary of State for External Affairs answered he believed one of the essential reasons for not wanting to deal with such a problem was that we did not want to get mixed up in the internal affairs of a country. But all that time, countries such as England and Russia kept on selling arms.

On June 19, I asked the Prime Minister if the International Red Cross, that had put into service a maritime route to Nigeria's capital, could be permitted to provide for the transportation of food on such a route in order to assist Biafrans. And as one may read at page 10405 of Hansard, the Prime Minister replied and I quote:

I will have to rely upon the Secretary of State for External Affairs to answer that question, which I will pass on to him.

On February 10, 1969, the Pope himself made the following appeal to bring that civil war to a stop:

Before God and our conscience, we feel that we failed to resort to the action in our power in order to find a solution that would have reduced arms to silence.

The Christian conscience cannot bring itself to yield to discouragement and resign itself to mutual destruction.

In the meantime, our country refused to interfere in spite of our repeated requests and those of all the opposition.

One can see all the crimes a government is likely to commit when it stands for out and out federalism. The most sensible statement I have read is that made by the President of Tanzania. According to the Tuesday, October 28, 1969, issue of the newspaper Le Devoir he said:

"As President of Tanzania, it is my duty to protect the integrity of the United Republic. However, if the whole of the Zanzibar people, without any foreign aid and for reasons of their own, were to decide that the Union is prejudicial to their existence, I could not recommend that bombs be dropped on them until they surrender."

"No foreign aid! Were the Biafrans in the same situation? The President of the UAO did not think so and I will quote again from the same newspaper. He contended that:

> —the sole explanation for the Nigeria-Biafra conflict was the greed of the colonialists and the imperialists and their determination to weaker the will power of Africa, to scatter its forces and to dissolve its great unity in order to stifle it before getting hold of it once more."

Since the people of Biafra, to whom Irish Catholics preached the gospel, tried to hold their heads up again, it was decided they were to be crushed. These people wanted to get an education. In 1961, out of 41,000 federal public servants, only 400 came from the North. Out of 437 graduates, 10 only came from the North and today, 5 million Ibos Biafrans, are waiting for death. These people, who in the old days, provided 20,000 slaves for America, in the 17th century, deserve a better fate, in my opinion, and America as a whole should have opposed this mass slaughter.

That is why in order to prevent the murder of our brothers, I urge the Secretary of State for External Affairs, as I did this afternoon, to delegate representatives of the four political parties and send them immediately as observers to the battle front in order to request first of all an immediate end to the slaughter and to the arms shipments which should be replaced right away by shipments of food, for Canadian neutralism has hitherto reeked far too much of oil. Such protection of economic interests has silenced the consciences and smothered all human feelings. No ideology whatsoever can justify this scandal. Indeed, the present crisis is that of the conscience of humanity as a whole.

To conclude, Mr. Speaker, I will add just one more word: War! Never more.

[English]

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I am sure all members of this House, and indeed all Canadians, share with me a profound feeling of relief that the long and agonizing conflict in Nigeria seems finally to have come to an end. I have just received a bulletin which indicates that the last remaining town is now in the hands of the Nigerian forces. I have also received information that General Gowon has announced an amnesty to all those who were led into futile attempts to disintegrate the country, adding: "We have arrived at one of the greatest moments in the history of our nation." This seems to indicate that the war has, indeed, finally reached a conclusion.

The task which faces the world community today is to give to the government and the people of Nigeria every possible assistance as they face the task of reconciling their differences and rehabilitating the areas where the fighting has been taking place.

I need hardly tell hon. members who have been following these events almost as closely as I have that the situation is this: Open warfare has now come to an end and the major obstacles to the supplying of relief and the rehabilitation of the country, which lay in the fact that there were fighting lines and the resources of the country were being used in a terrible war, are now being removed. Both General Gowon and General Effiong, who is now the active leader of the Biafrans, have made statements of a conciliatory nature expressing the hope that outstanding differences will be settled amicably and quickly. I was impressed when reading the statement made by General Effiong today, in which he said:

> I am convinced, now, that a stop must be put to the bloodshed which is going on as a result of the war. I am also convinced that the suffering of our people must be brought to an immediate end. Our people are now disillusioned and those elements of the old government regime who have made negotiation and reconciliation impossible have voluntarily removed themselves from our midst. I have therefore instructed an early disengagement of troops.

It is quite clear, when we look back on this terrible period, that there were difficulties on both sides. Very often an attempt had been made to paint one side or the other as trying to impose their will. In fact, I think the situation was of such a nature that the differences had to be composed either peacefully or by violence within the country, and that efforts at intervention from outside very often only had the result of prolonging the conflict.

• (8:50 p.m.)

Mr. MacDonald (Egmont): Especially when countries supplied arms.

Mr. Sharp: Yes, especially when they provided arms. I am very glad that this country never participated in that kind of intervention.

The hon. member for Fundy-Royal (Mr. Fairweather) asked whether there was evidence that General Gowon still maintained his position on outside intervention, and the answer to that is in the affirmative. I should like to quote an excerpt, not from General Gowon's actual speech, a copy of which I have seen, but his words in the form in which I have them here:

The federal military government has warned foreign countries, organizations and individuals not to interfere in the internal affairs of the country in order not to prolong the sufferings of those trapped in the rebel held areas.

An hon. Member: When did he say that?

Mr. Sharp: Yesterday.

The government has also given the assurance that efforts as to rehabilitation and reconciliation among all Nigerians would continue. This is contained in the head of state's message of congratulations he sent to the federal troops for their capture of the rebel administrative headquarters, Owerri, and other successes in the war. The Commander in Chief renewed his call on the soldiers to adhere strictly to the code of conduct issued to them at the beginning of the military operations.

Mr. MacDonald (Egmont): Would the minister indicate why newsmen have been excluded from the front during this period of engagement?

Mr. Sharp: I am sorry, I do not know the reason for that. I will go on to say something about the experience of our observers, who have not been excluded.

Mr. Lewis: Mr. Speaker, may I ask the minister a question about the statement concerning non-intervention from outside?

Mr. Sharp: Yes.

Mr. Lewis: Does the minister read that statement as referring to relief as well as to intervention in the political settlement that has to take place?

Mr. Sharp: No, I do not think so. I am very hopeful that the Nigerian government will be prepared to co-operate with all countries of the world in accepting relief and in facilitating its distribution. I do not think that that is the kind of intervention that General Gowon had in mind. I am quite confident that what he had in mind was the kind of intervention where countries sometimes acted without full agreement by both sides to the conflict, particularly without the agreement of the Nigerian government which is now apparently fully in control of affairs in that country.

Mr. Lewis: Has the minister had any assurance that General Gowon will agree to relief from outside?

Mr. Sharp: Not as yet. Reports have been coming from representatives of the Nigerian government which seem to point to that conclusion. My own conclusion is that the Nigerian government will certainly be ready to accept co-operation. The war was over only this morning, but I should think that without undue delay arrangements can be made.

Joint Church Aid and Canair food flights appear to have come to an end, for the time being at least. There are stocks of food available in Nigeria and in neighbouring countries sufficient to meet the immediate needs of the Nigerian population for the next few weeks, if not for the next few months, and these stocks will be replenished as required.

The immediate problem is to distribute this food in the areas where it is needed, without delay. In the first instance—and I say this to all hon. members—we must rely on the Nigerian Red Cross and the Nigerian Rehabilitation Commission, both of which have already been in operation in this field. The reports we have received from our observers in Nigeria during recent months have referred to the way in which the Nigerian Red Cross has been following the troops and looking after the refugees as they have streamed across the lines. The Nigerian Rehabilitation Commission, on the other hand, has been concerned with the problem of rehabilitation rather than immediate relief. It is upon these agencies that essentially we must rely. This is one of the reasons that last week, before the war had come to an end and when we were expecting it might go on for some time, we had decided we should support those operations which were concerned with the welfare of those who were formerly in Biafra as well as those who had been in the federally-controlled areas of Nigeria all the time.

As I have said, Mr. Speaker, we have contributed $1 million to those two organizations within the last few days. We have also made a contribution to the International Red Cross which, as the House knows, the government has been supporting throughout the whole of this unhappy war.

We have felt—and I am sure the House will agree with us—that since the Red Cross is the one internationally recognized agency available to meet disaster of various kinds around the world, it is most important that that institution should always have the support of the Canadian government. As it turned out, it became relatively ineffective because it was not able to operate at night, the Nigerian government failing to agree to night flights. It was unable to operate by day because Biafra refused to accept daylight flights. But as an institution the International Red Cross had to be supported. It continued to work behind the lines on both sides, and we shall continue to give it our support. I hope the International Red Cross will be the focal point of international efforts, because I think its workers have the greatest experience and can bring about the best co-ordination of international relief.

The government will provide additional funds and supplies as they are required and in co-operation with other interested nations. According to reports from our High Commissioner in Lagos and from our observers on the International Observer Team, these institutions have been operating effectively among refugees in the war area as the Nigerian armies have advanced.

The government is prepared to provide Canadian Armed Forces' aircraft to supplement the work of the organizations presently in Nigeria by way of airdrops to inaccessible areas or by making airlifts when landing facilities are available. We have three Hercules aircraft standing by and are prepared to activate others if they are needed.

In the end, however, the effective distribution of food to the population of eastern Nigeria requires the use of land routes. We today have a report from our High Commissioner in Lagos assuring us that the roads are in better condition than might have been expected in view of the fighting that has taken place in that area. Indeed, I read a report yesterday from our High Commissioner which spoke about a Red Cross team that had run quite freely up and down the roads. Therefore, we are not in the position of not having land routes; some are available and can be put to use immediately.

What is required over the next few weeks and months is a carefully planned, co-operative relief operation. It is our view that this can best be carried out under the aegis of an international organization, preferably the Red Cross, and with the co-operation of the government of Nigeria, which is after all in control of events there. We cannot do anything except in co-operation with them. We in this House should offer our sincere and hearty co-operation to the government of Nigeria, and I am sure we all do so.

Mr. MacDonald (Egmont): Would the minister permit a question on the point about the Hercules aircraft and the necessity of having them in a forward position? I am wondering whether the government has conveyed to the officials in Lagos the possibility of moving aircraft like the Hercules and other transport equipment into a forward position, in order that we can assist the people in eastern Nigeria as soon as possible?

Mr. Sharp: We have been looking carefully at what we can do in this respect most effectively. One of the things we have already done is to make available to the Nigerian Red Cross and the Rehabilitation Commission money with which to purchase trucks which are as close as possible to the areas affected.

The best place from which to get trucks is neighbouring countries. Taking them across the Atlantic is not the quickest way of getting them there. It may be possible to airlift trucks from some part of Europe down to Lagos, but to transport them across the Atlantic is a very doubtful proposition. Therefore, our judgment of the best way of helping was to make money available so trucks could be purchased there as close as possible to the area. That we did, and we told the Rehabilitation Commission and Nigerian Red Cross what the offer was.

For a year or more Canada has had a senior officer of the Canadian Armed Forces in the area as part of the International Observer team. The senior observers with the team have all had combat experience. They have assured us that they have been given every opportunity to carry out their responsibilities and that they have so far found no evidence of genocide. Some people have said to me, "These observers are not given freedom of action." This is not so. We have had no complaints whatsoever from our observers charging that the Nigerian government has prevented them from going where they wanted to go. Indeed, they have reported that the Nigerian forces have helped the Red Cross and the Nigerian Rehabilitation Commission in caring for refugees and restoring, to the extent possible, normal conditions as they have advanced.

I should like to point out to hon. members that it is both an unusual and a fortunate circumstance that we have in the field, and operating, an observer team, and that the Nigerian government long ago consented to have these observers there. This has certainly helped to remove any fears up until now that genocide is taking place. I agree with hon. members that if possible there should be an increase in the number of observers. This is a decision, of course, that has to be made by the Nigerian government.

Our High Commissioner in Lagos has been instructed to offer the Nigerian government further observers, and a number of other countries have done likewise. I spoke to the French ambassador tonight. He told me that he hoped he would have the support of the Canadian government to a French initiative which is in favour of a greater number of observers, even though the French government is not represented on this team. I assure the House that we are in favour of that. We are prepared to offer them, but we cannot force them upon anyone. That responsibility must rest with the Nigerian government.

I think it is an indication of the essentially humanitarian approach of the Nigerian government in this field, at least until now, that they have permitted observers to observe the actions of their troops. I do not think there has ever been a civil war in history in which this has happened.

Mr. Stanfield: Would the minister permit a question? Has he or anyone on behalf of the government of Canada engaged in conversation with countries such as Britain and the United States about a common approach to Nigeria regarding enlarging the team of observers?

Mr. Sharp: Yes, we have informed our friends in Britain, the United States and France of our proposal to the Nigerian government. They are likewise making representations, and I hope that our joint efforts will be successful.

Mr. MacDonald (Egmont): Mr. Speaker, can we be assured that the observers presently located in Nigeria are moving at the front lines and not, as was the case very often in the past, following at some later time the military engagements that take place?

Mr. Sharp: We expect a report within the next day or two on the situation in Nigeria today. The observers are due to make a report, I think on January 13, so we should be getting a report within the next day or two, which I hope I will be able to publish, which will give some indication of their observations of the recent past. The reports may not be up to date, of course, because there have been very dramatic developments within the last few days.

Mr. MacDonald (Egmont): Were they instructed to be at the front during this extremely critical period?

Mr. Sharp: Yes, those are their general instructions. The International Observer Team has instructions to observe the conduct of the Nigerian troops and to report any evidences of genocide. So far they have found none. Indeed, they have reported, as I have said, that the Red Cross and the Nigerian Rehabilitation Commission have been following the troops and that refugees have on the whole been very well looked after, or as well as they can be.

Mr. Brewin: Mr. Speaker, before the minister concludes his remarks, will he deal specifically with the suggestion I made regarding the emergency in the next few days, namely, that the stocks of supplies in Sao Tomé, the aircraft, the crew and the distribution machinery which is in existence be handed over perhaps to the Nigerian Red Cross for use, before millions die in the country?

Mr. Sharp: That was the next point of my remarks. I have today had conversation with Dr. Ted Johnson of Canairelief on the future of that organization. Canairelief has, as hon. members know, for many months been engaged in carrying out night flights in Biafra without the consent of the Nigerian government. Therefore, there must be some doubt whether they will be allowed to continue this activity. At least, this is the information we received from Lagos. I am passing on the views that have been expressed to me. Dr. Johnson told me that if they cannot continue their flights, they are willing to put their foodstocks at the disposal of the Red Cross. It is unclear what role Canairelief may be able to play. I have advised them that the most likely way for them to help is by co-operating fully with the Red Cross.

Dr. Johnson and Dr. McKay jointly sent me a message in which they urged me to make representations in Lagos to the effect that Canairelief be allowed to carry on its operations. I think we have to consider what is the best way of getting these supplies used. This does not really involve a question as to whether Canairelief continues, but rather a question regarding the quickest way of getting these supplies from Sao Tomé into the area. I have told Dr. Johnson that on that point we are fully agreed. We will have to decide what is the most efficacious way. If the Nigerian government says it cannot trust Canairelief because they acted in contravention of their orders, we will have to find some other way of dealing with the problem. I certainly share the views of hon. members of the House that these food supplies should get in there, because they form part of the immediate reserves available. As the hon. member says, there are some 5,000 tons of most valuable foodstuffs and we should make every effort to see that they are moved into the area.

Mr. MacDonald (Egmont): Mr. Speaker, the minister has indicated—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. Before the hon. member for Egmont (Mr. MacDonald) seeks to ask another question, I should draw the attention of the House to the fact that the ministers' time has expired, unless it is the disposition of the House that he continue. Is that agreed?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. MacDonald (Egmont): Mr. Speaker, the minister has indicated that Canairelief officials have consented to the movement of their foodstocks by any other transfer agency. My question, which has not yet been dealt with in the minister's remarks, has to do with the transportation of these materials. Since the equipment, the crews and the system is there ready to operate, has any discussion taken place regarding another method that might be adopted, using the transportation facilities that are ready for use immediately?

Mr. Sharp: The answer to that question is that we have had some discussions but no decisions have yet been reached. As I said a little earlier, the war ended only this morning and within the last few hours the situation has been transformed out of all recognition. I think it is unreasonable to expect that at this particular moment all these problems should be settled. I assure hon. members that we are as anxious as they to see that this food is made available in these areas. This is one of the reasons we are making transportation available. Perhaps Canadian government planes could be used for this purpose. Perhaps the Red Cross could use the planes, if Canairelief is unacceptable as the agent. I hope it is not, to be quite frank, but this is something that is not entirely within our control.

Mr. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): Mr. Speaker, I think the House wants to know whether the minister will give his assurance that he will make immediate representations to the government of Nigeria asking that the stocks of food, planes and personnel of Canairelief be allowed to operate either under Canairelief, the Nigerian Red Cross or the International Red Cross—I do not think it is important which one—and whether these personnel will be allowed to operate immediately to meet the situation which is so pressing and so distressing at this time. We want some assurance from the minister that such representation will be made immediately.

Mr. Sharp: I can assure the hon. member and the House that we are very anxious that those food supplies be moved into the area immediately. I did say earlier that the means is quite important. If we were to insist that Canairelief do it, that might hold up the operation.

An hon. Member: No one is asking that.

Mr. Sharp: I suggest we are trying to find a means to move the food whether it is done by Canairelief or otherwise makes no difference to us. This is one of the problems with which we are engaged and upon which we are trying to get decisions.

Perhaps I should say a further word about my talk with Dr. Johnson. When he was speaking to me on the telephone this morning, and in a later message, he spoke about the particular difficulty being encountered by Canairelief because they were not sure whether in fact their equipment, and so on, was going to be useful. He urged upon the government some assistance to Canairelief to meet the immediate costs. I said to Dr. Johnson that no decision to spend money in that way had been reached, and that we had made a decision to spend money in transporting food to the airstrip at Uli. Of course, he could make representations to us for assistance in this immediate problem.

This is another reason I agree with the hon. member who asked about the urgency of the matter. It is urgent from every point of view. The difficulty is that the equipment and planes standing there are costing Canairelief money while they are inactive. It is essential, from the point of view of Canairelief itself, that there be action as soon as possible.

Mr. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): What possible objection could there be to the Canadian government guaranteeing the cost of maintaining those planes for 48 hours or 72 hours until a decision is reached?

Mr. Sharp: We have not yet had an opportunity to discuss this question. I thought the House would be interested in hearing the position of Canairelief at the moment. This representation is now under consideration.

In conclusion, I agree with hon. members that this is a time for action rather than talk. It is also a time, of course, for effective action and not simply for propaganda. We have to be, and I think have been throughout this whole bloody and despicable war, careful to avoid participation in propaganda exercises.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Sharp: Our purpose is to help. That is the only purpose we have. Our motives are as pure as those of any government.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Sharp: They are related entirely to humanitarian considerations. Certainly we do not want to engage in propaganda and we do not want to lay blame on one side or the other. Our only purpose is to help. I think if we act in co-operation with the Nigerian government we will achieve the most effective results.

Mr. R. N. Thompson (Red Deer): Mr. Speaker, I am sure everyone in this House, the people of Canada and the people of the world who have had their attention so vividly drawn to the tragedy of Nigeria during the last year or two rejoice today in the news that actual military activities have stopped. While this poses a tremendous challenge in so far as the immediate need in the next weeks and the longer range need so far as rehabilitation is concerned, we can rejoice that we can now look toward something positive.

I have spent most of today meeting with a church-oriented group in the city of Toronto in an effort to work out an emergency program for the most urgent need at the moment. I refer to the need for doctors, nurses and social workers who can take over or assist with the tremendous problem of distributing food and relief supplies that are presently stockpiled either on the Nigerian side or in some of the countries adjacent to Nigeria.

I believe I am right in saying there were between 500 and 1,000 workers in the area which we know as Biafra. Many of those workers have been evacuated in recent days. I believe it is also correct to say that many of them will not readily be able to go back and pick up what they have left. In other words, there is a need for replacements as well as an additional task force of people to handle the food and medical needs that are so urgently necessary for the survival of millions of people.

I do not think that most of my colleagues in the House are familiar with the fact that I spent a number of days in the early part of December, just a month ago, in Africa in relation to the situation in Nigeria. I was particularly concerned about speaking to the representatives of the member nations of the Organization of African unity who make up the special committee which had been set up by the OAU to deal with the Biafran situation. Emperor Haile Selassie is the chairman of that committee. At that time there was a major offensive to bring Nigeria and Biafra together to negotiate a final end to hostilities in order to prevent the heavy military action which took place during the last week.

To the credit of the Biafran administration at that time, which I believe was clearly able to see the writing on the wall, a delegation came from Biafra and arrangements were set up for negotiation away from the public eye where not only could they negotiate but also sign an agreement which would allow a settlement to be made by negotiation. Unfortunately, some of the interference that has come from European countries during the whole course of this tragic experience in Nigeria took place again, and the Nigerians were probably advised that it was in their own interest to continue the military activity which at that time they were prepared to begin.

There are several observations I should like to pass on which came out of the discussions I had with the various African leaders who are members of the OAU and are directly concerned with the Biafran situation. I do not intend to go back and try to review the situation which led up to the Secessionist action of General Ojukwu. However, perhaps I should go back briefly to the massacres in 1966 and the obvious hostile attitude of many of the Nigerian people and elements of the government at that time which led to the massacres of thousands of Ibo people.

One would also have to go over the history of the two coups. The first was the elimination of the original government of free Nigeria, which as we are told was basically instigated by Ibo officers in the army and which gave governmental leadership to General Ironsi. Then there was the second coup, reportedly led by General Gowon which eliminated General Ironsi and the subsequent establishment of Lt. Colonel Ojukwu as governor of the eastern area where the Ibo people have their traditional home and where several hundred thousand fled following the massacres of a year or two earlier.

• (9:20 p.m.)

One would also have to recapitulate the trek home of the Ibo people. Certainly this is one of the tragic chapters in the history of independent Africa. However, I think we must at this time be pragmatic. It is not good enough now to try and lay the blame at the doorstep of this one or that. The people of Canada and the government of Canada have a tremendous responsibility to pick up the pieces wherever we are able, to attempt to prevent the deaths of tens of thousands of people, deaths that will take place in the next week or two unless efficient and prompt action is taken. The situation is far more tragic there today than we here can understand.

I wish to make a few observations as a result of my discussions with representatives of member countries of the OAU committee which was set up to deal with the Biafran situation. I was told there was no doubt that more than 2 million civilians had lost their lives during the course of this conflict over the last two years. I was also told that unless the war stopped within three months, it was conservatively estimated that there would be another 3 million deaths because the masses of people in the little enclave which was Biafran territory at that time were living on the threshold of death by starvation, malnutrition or disease.

One thing which was made very clear to me was that the political differences between Nigeria and secessionist Biafra would have to be settled by Nigerians with the aid of Africans who were members of the Organization of African Unity, and that there had already been far too much interference by European nations. Much has been said about the actions of the United Kingdom, Russia and France in this war. The inference was that their actions were not only concerned with the supplying of arms but were also political in nature.

I am convinced that those who criticized the Canadian government and said it should have gone in and stopped the war did not know what they were talking about. The question which immediately posed itself to me was: How could this have been done?

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Thompson: It was legitimate to try to convince Great Britain that her policies were wrong and to make appeals to Russia, France and the United Nations, but how could Canada have involved itself in the internal affairs of Nigeria? Could it have been done by moving in an army? Of course, this could not have been done. Could we have tried to club Great Britain over the head until she saw some reason in the situation? This we could not do, either. We had a responsibility to use our influence, and I hope this has been done in the most effective way possible. If it has not been done, Mr. Speaker, then part of the responsibility for what has happened in Biafra will also be ours.

Again I say that the point of my remarks is not to try to accuse somebody but to try and outline the facts as they were explained to me by Africans. I discussed the matter of genocide with African leaders and expressed to them our concern. I explained to them how the emotions of the Canadian people had been roused in a very unique and commendable way through fear of what was happening in Nigeria.

I was reminded by these Africans, who wanted a settlement just as much as we did, and even more, that the International Observer Team which had gone to Nigeria could not substantiate with evidence the charge that there had been an intentional attempt by the government of Nigeria to eliminate or destroy the Ibo people. In fact General Gowon is not a Hausa, or even a Mohammedan; he is a Christian and belongs to one of the small tribes of central Nigeria. This is also the case with many of his leaders. Many Ibo people retained senior positions in the Nigerian government throughout the war years. In fact, General Gowon's own wife is an Ibo girl.

One of the things General Gowon has said to people who know him personally is that he did not want to have to accept the blame for military action killing millions of people, or at least tens of thousands of people more than had already been killed by direct military action and thus held back indirect military action. So, Mr. Speaker, there is another side to the story.

Without trying to minimize the situation in Nigeria that led to the secessionist action of General Ojukwu, it is important that we evaluate the situation from the standpoint that it is General Ojukwu himself who really must carry the brunt of the blame for the war and for the death of so many of his people, especially during the last few months when surely he could have seen the handwriting on the wall and realized that it was impossible for him to win the war.

I urge hon. members of this House to consider the matter carefully. We must accept our responsibilities. There are those who say that Canada should have done more to stop the war. I remind them of what we thought of General de Gaulle when he came to Quebec and uttered just a few words extolling the independence of the province of Quebec. Certainly his cry of "Vive le Quebec libre" was not accepted by Canadians. In the same light, it was impossible for a foreign country such as Canada to go in and settle the war in Nigeria.

In relation to the situation in Africa, I would also point out that if the Biafran secessionist movement had succeeded and a country of Biafra had been established, there are a dozen potential Biafran situations in African countries. The tribal situation in many of the new countries in Africa is such that if some tribes thought there was the possibility of gaining their own ends, they would follow the lead provided by Biafra. I can give no better example than the crisis through which Kenya has passed in recent months.

Without belabouring this situation any further, may I commend to the House an article which appears in tonight's Telegram. It was written by Peter Worthington, a reporter who has spent several months on both sides. The article has much merit and is worthy of our consideration.

Before closing, Mr. Speaker, I wish to point out that during the last few weeks food shipments could have been made to Biafra if a land corridor had been used. But the Biafran leaders made it clear that they could not accept the use of a land corridor because they feared the food would be poisoned by the Nigerian authorities, even though assurance was given of international supervision. I also suggest that if the Biafran officials had allowed daylight flights it would not have been necessary for the International Red Cross or the World Relief Commission to stop its food flights, which occurred only a few weeks ago.

I wish also to refer to the statement issued today by General Philip Effiong, which I think is worthy of note. As I read it, I think he meant it to be interpreted as saying clearly that those officials who have been responsible for enforcing the continuance of the fighting in recent weeks have now been removed from the scene, meaning General Ojukwu and his senior officials, and he hopes to achieve as honourable a settlement as can possibly be worked out. I think this is commendable.

I am also concerned about the present attitude of many humanitarian agencies and many people who have been interested in relief efforts in Canada in recent months and years. I am concerned about why in some areas their reaction has been negative to the news that the war has stopped. It seems to me that we ought to be lifting our hearts in thanksgiving to the Almighty that this has been the case, and then ready ourselves for the responsibility which is the challenge of this debate.

I say to the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Sharp) that the government has a responsibility to the tens of thousands of Canadian people who in the last year or two have been so concerned and have shown it in active participation by their contributions. The government must receive direct assurance from the Nigerian government that they will allow full and free distribution of food and relief supplies. If the Nigerian government intends to fulfil its stated policy, there is no reason, why they should not give this assurance.

Second, I think it is imperative that we ready the aircraft which the minister has said is available at the present time to move in and transport the supplies which are stockpiled. There are ample supplies for at least the weeks ahead. These should be moved into the area where fighting has ceased. Without four, five or six million people in that small area the confusion and breakdown of communications and the administration of law and order, except such as the military forces of Nigeria are able to provide, demands immediate action. This is of first importance.

Third, from reports which I have received today through a church oriented relief organization in which I am personally involved, it appears that the immediate need, in addition to the transportation of food supplies, medicine and relief supplies, is personnel. I am very pleased to say that one Canadian organization is moving to send a team of a dozen or twenty doctors, nurses and social workers. I believe there will be much response from the private sector in Canada in this regard through non-governmental organizations, but the government must take the lead to make sure that relief supplies are moved in by supplying aircraft where necessary and helping to fill the general needs of the people as they relate to the distribution of essential supplies and services.

Fourth, I hope that we can interpret the remarks of the minister as meaning that the observer team will be strengthened. I believe that the government could very well assure the Organization of African Unity, as well as the Nigerian government, that it is ready to do all that is necessary in so far as international supervision is concerned. The government should request additional members for the observer team to ensure that the possibility of reprisals is minimized.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. I am sorry to interrupt the hon. member but his time has expired.

Some hon. Members: Carry on.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is there unanimous agreement for the hon. member to continue?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Thompson: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I have only a few more comments to make. I am very pleased to say that from conversations today with church leaders and members of various organizations who have been able to carry on relief work on both sides of the issue that there is going to be a further response by the Canadian people. I would emphasize, though, that the rehabilitation and reconstruction task in Nigeria will be tremendous. This is not just a problem for the next month or two until law and order is established and relief distribution centres are set up; there will be a continuing need over the next few years.

The Canadian government must show leadership here as well. It is one thing to rationalize; it is another thing to use our position to make demands of the Nigerian government whilst at the same time giving assurances of co-operation to the OAU, the Nigerian government, the International Red Cross and any other organization that might be able to participate directly. Someone will have to be responsible for the over-all supervision of the international relief effort, and this should probably be the International Red Cross. I hope the Canadian government will take steps to ensure that a single body supervises all international assistance and provides administrative co-ordination and leadership.

Mr. Speaker, I conclude by saying that the events of the last day or two have been some of the most momentous that have taken place in this House as we approach the decade of the 1970s. There is no question that this decade will probably be the most critical in the history of the world or even the history of civilization. We should be able to take some encouragement and hope from the fact that so early in this decade at least one international crisis seems to be subsiding, and I hope it will come to an end before too many more days have passed.

Mr. Lorne Nystrom (Yorkton-Melville): Mr. Speaker, in rising to participate in this debate one cannot help but over-emphasize the importance of this issue which must be of the highest priority. All members of the House should take this matter very seriously because it is one of the greatest tragedies affecting the modern world.

Just today one of my friends in the press gallery pointed out a very ironic incident that occurred at the question time. He noted that we were discussing the tragedy of the Biafra-Nigeria situation and then started asking questions about hockey and the troubles in the international hockey world. Many members seemed to view this as a more important question and feel more pain about it than they do about the matter now before us. There were then questions about the RCMP musical ride, veterans affairs and the British Commonwealth gallantry awards.

The question before us now concerns a matter of life and death. However, I was very disappointed in the speech and the statement given by the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Sharp) in the House today because they demonstrated that the government did not feel any real sense of urgency in the issue. Also, when the Secretary of State for External Affairs was speaking just a few minutes ago he seemed to have a great deal of information from Lagos. I wonder why communications are so fast now, when a few weeks or a few days ago there seemed to be difficulty in communicating with Lagos when trying to arrange relief for people dying of starvation in Biafra. It used to take weeks and sometimes months to get an answer from the Lagos government, but that does not seem to be the case today.

Some members on this side of the House, and probably some on the other side as well, were frustrated by the lack of urgency in the speech of the Secretary of State for External Affairs. It was basically a manifesto of formalities, niceties and he gave many excuses for the lack of government action in the past. His speech was filled with procrastination and showed that Canada was refusing to accept the role of a leader in the international community, which would get some relief into the war zone immediately.

On reading the statement the Secretary of State for External Affairs made to the House this afternoon one can see that he has displayed hesitancy and nebulousness. These are attitudes the government has displayed in the Biafran tragedy. He said in his statement that the government hopes that General Gowon will spare no effort in maintaining the discipline of his forces and protecting the lives of all the peoples of Nigeria. He does not demand; he is asking.

He is not saying that we shall send over observers immediately to make sure no atrocities or massacres are committed as Nigerian soldiers overrun the unconquered parts of Biafra. The statement goes on to say that the government considers it of first importance that outside relief activity should be co-ordinated on an international basis. That point is of first importance to this government. It does not consider that bringing relief supplies immediately to the war zone is of first importance; it considers that precedence must be given to co-ordinating actions with other governments.

If we do all this and waste time, there may not be in the war zone many Biafrans left alive to be helped by our relief and church organizations. The whole statement was ambiguous and hesitant in tone and displayed an attitude that has plagued Parliament and this country too long when the Biafran tragedy has been discussed.

When the minister speaks later in the debate, I hope he will tell us why there was so much delay in giving the money requested for relief purposes. Was the government of Canada aware that Nigerian federal forces planned to mount a full-scale attack on Biafran positions before the announcement respecting financial aid was made? You will recall, Mr. Speaker, that Canairelief had asked for assistance and the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) had promised to reply before Christmas. No reply was given. Then the Prime Minister promised to reply after Christmas. Once again there was a delay. Then, suddenly, the government announced it would give Canairelief assistance to the tune of $1 million, and the next day we discovered that Nigeria had mounted an offensive to capture the remaining Biafran-held territory.

I ask the minister to clarify what happened, because many Canadians do not think it a coincidence that Canairelief should be offered money one day before the offensive that was to wipe out Biafra was mounted. I demand an answer to this question, and the people of Canada also demand an answer.

Mr. Pringle: Will the hon. member permit a question?

Mr. Nystrom: If the hon. member does not mind, I should like to finish my remarks, at the end of which I shall try to oblige him. All along the government has been delaying. It was aware that arms were going to Nigeria not only from Russia but from Britain. Yet the Secretary of State for External Affairs has come to us tonight with excuses. He still talks about protocol and technicalities that must be overcome before relief can be flown to the war-torn zone. He may still be worrying about daylight flights. By the time he has made all the appropriate and correct arrangements, many of the people we are concerned about, who are dying of starvation, will not be alive and the relief will do them no good.

The hon. member for Greenwood (Mr. Brewin) told us earlier this evening that a director of a church-operated service in the United States stated today his organization estimates that unless relief is flown to the war zone immediately, within 48 hours as many as 1 million people will die. The relief must be provided immediately; it is crucial. For that reason we should not just sit down and talk about the problems and technicalities involved in giving relief. Canada must take the lead in this matter and must not be reluctant to act.

According to press reports a number of countries appear to be taking hypocritical action in this connection, but other countries are doing something. Although Britain was one of the main culprits in the Nigerian-Biafran tragedy, at least that country is trying to provide assistance. They have sent a cabinet minister to the area and have organized supplies which are ready to be flown in. Canada seems too hesitant and reluctant to act.

There was a time in our history when we led the world as peacemakers. In 1956, when a man who was to become our Prime Minister won the Nobel Peace Prize, many Canadians felt they had participated with him in winning this prize. But in the last year and a half we seem to have been hung-up with nineteenth century theories and attitudes. Instead of tackling the realities facing us in the world today, our Prime Minister seems to hide behind a very cold, academic approach. That is true of this issue and many others.

The Secretary of State for External Affairs has fallen into the same trap and is showing the type of attitude displayed by the Prime Minister. If something looks good on paper, if it is good in theory and if there are precedents for it, the government will accept it. Yet we seem to be hung-up with our concepts of federalism and with a constitution that seems sacred. We have hidden behind our concepts of sovereignty and territorial integrity, and just look at what has happened! This is not good enough. In this matter Canada must act immediately: It must delay no more, because the lives of millions of people are involved. They may die of starvation and disease unless we take action immediately.

We cannot any longer tolerate past attitudes. Is it not ironic that countries making up the United Nations would not intervene in this struggle or even bring relief because this was a so-called civil war, and now that the war is over they are all anxious to provide help? That is one of the biggest contradictions in this matter. That is why governments must find alternative solutions to problems like these which confront peoples in this modern world. In our modern world of technology and electronics new solutions must be found. If we and others had taken different attitudes to this question, the tragedy in Biafran might have been averted. What has happened today is history. The immediate problem is how we are to act now. Hours count, not days; we must act within hours, and not within days or weeks. We must bring relief to these unfortunate people within a matter of hours.

I think we all know the history of the Nigerian-Biafran conflict, and most of us know that about 2 million people have died in it. But does anyone realize the seriousness of the situation today in Nigeria and Biafra? One has only to look at newspaper reports to know what is happening. May I read from an article that appeared in this evening's Ottawa Citizen. It was written by Richard Hall, who was the last foreign correspondent to leave the war zone on Saturday night. The headline at the top of the newspaper in bold red letters is, " 'They run like rabbits' in hail of fire". The correspondent gives us this story:

> Biafra is dying bloodily and terror-stricken.
> The triumphant Nigerian army is advancing into the chaotic heart of Ojukwu's breakaway country.
> The demoralized Biafran army has been stunned by the blitzkrieg onslaught mounted by the federal forces and is now offering little resistance and fleeing.
> Five million civilians are running rabbit-like from the remaining crowded areas.
> Several Nigerian MiG fighters add to the confusion by rocketing and machine-gunning lines of refugees.
> Amid the crowds are wounded and shell-shocked Biafran soldiers.

• (9:50 p.m.)

Further on he says:

> During the inevitable overrun of Biafra, their lives lie in the balance.
> As I left, Owerri was being shelled and rocketted. It is now a ghost town, yet last Thursday night it contained some quarter of a million people.
> As I went north, I saw appalling sights of Biafra's death throes.
> They are burned in my memory: men, women and children carrying pathetic belongings, some collapsing weeping at the roadside.

I could read more of the article. It describes the situation there at the present time. There is in today's issue of the Ottawa Citizen another article written by the same foreign correspondent. He talks about the soldiers at the war front and the situation many of them are facing, and says:

> Soldiers at the front ate on an average once every three days. They had only ground cassava with soup.
> A doctor told me: "Abdominal wounds are hard to operate on—the men are so thin."
> Against them the Biafrans faced well-fed and better armed troops.
> The Nigerians knew they had their enemies at their mercy. When the final push came, the line buckled.

This, Mr. Speaker, once again paints a very vivid picture of the real situation in Biafra and Nigeria tonight. This is why the Canadian government must act now. The member for Greenwood (Mr. Brewin) and the member for Fundy-Royal (Mr. Fairweather) mentioned a number of plans or alternative activities this government could adopt.

In the motion before us today there are two suggestions that should immediately be adopted by the government. I do not want to repeat the details at this time. Basically, we are calling for observers to go to the front lines and into the villages that have been overtaken, to ensure that no massacre of Biafran civilians will occur. Activity of this sort will often take place in a situation like this, even though at times it is quite unintentional. There must be immediate action to prevent any such activity taking place.

I am not referring to military observers. It has been stated that military men should not be sent to observe military men. Civilian men are required as well and, as has already been suggested, we could include some jurists. We could send other people as well. Members of the press could be sent to expose the situation. This must be done immediately. A delay of even a few hours could be vital to the lives of many people on the west coast of Africa.

The second point we are making is that relief must be sent immediately. We cannot afford to delay even a few hours. Relief planes have been grounded for about two days and supplies in Biafra are virtually nil. When relief supplies were flown in at night, they were distributed the next morning. There is no stockpile of food or medicine in Biafra. In a few days many hundreds of thousands of these people could die like flies. This should be obvious to anyone who has knowledge of the situation.

I appeal to the government to immediately send observers into these areas that have been recently taken over. As I have said, these need not be military men. Relief must be given immediately. Canairelief and Joint Church Aid have issued statements that they have food supplies available and they will turn them over to anyone who will fly them in, such as the Nigerian Red Cross or the International Red Cross. This food must be delivered before it is too late. I ask the Secretary of State for External Affairs to act on this suggestion tonight. I ask him to contact as many governments and relief agencies as possible. Then by tomorrow morning Canada could be well on the way to doing something in Nigeria which would ensure that the minimum amount of death and starvation will occur from the tragic situation which already exists in that area.

Mr. Ray Perrault (Burnaby-Seymour): Mr. Speaker, at four o'clock this afternoon the Biafran army surrendered to Nigerian federal forces and the final desperate chapter of the Nigerian civil war was acted out. Hopefully, an end will soon come to the misery and bloodshed which has affected both sides of the battle-line. There is no disagreement in the House that when that end comes, Canada must and will be among the very first to make food and medical aid available.

This was indicated today in the statement by the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Sharp). All parties should have been encouraged by that excellent statement. Valuable suggestions were made in the debate today. Some of them related to the role of Canairelief. It seems logical that the demonstrated resources and abilities of Canairelief should be enlisted as quickly as possible. If food is ready to be delivered, staff is on hand and distribution facilities exist, let us act to bring these Canairelief resources to the area in need as soon as this can be negotiated with the Nigerian government.

We have 24 Hercules aircraft in Canada. Each one has a trained crew and is able to carry over ten tons of relief materials. They could fly non-stop from here to Lagos. Loading procedures on these aircraft should begin tonight, each with ten tons of needed foodstuffs. The crews are available and ready. They should leave in waves of at least three a day so that within a week all these Canadian mercy ships of the air would be there. If we err on any side in this dispute—it is now no longer a dispute but a situation in which we hope a settlement will occur—then let us err on the side of generosity.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Perrault: Let us do too much rather than too little. Let us show the world that Canada is interested and concerned. Let us get the planes to where they are needed, and when they are there let us use them to ferry supplies from all over Europe and Africa to Nigeria. Some people will say they may have difficulty landing, but Hercules aircraft can land on a grassy meadow. Where they land and where they are used are questions which could be countered by, who will stop them from landing? Landing strips are available. We should bestow on the situation as much Canadian generosity as possible. After that we can send them a copy of today's Hansard.

Some estimate that 2 million people have died in the war. In the United Nations meetings in New York in the early part of December 1, as one of the group of Canadian delegates, was told by officials of the Organization of African Unity that the figure is closer to 5 million.

Harsh words have been uttered in this House by the opponents of the government in this and in past debates, words which suggest that Canada has been unduly legalistic in its approach to the civil war, that we have failed to act promptly to alleviate suffering, that we have failed to exercise sufficient influence within the Commonwealth to persuade Britain and others to refrain from arms shipments and, above all, that we have failed to play an effective role by refusing to inscribe the subject of Biafra and Nigeria on the agenda of the United Nations.

Some hon. Members: True.

Mr. Perrault: Some hon. members say "True". The great tragedy is that in this entire controversy many people have spoken out very eloquently without having full possession of the facts. That in itself is a tragedy. The same words have been uttered outside the House.

• (10:00 p.m.)

Some profess they cannot comprehend why Canada has not made unilateral efforts to end the civil war and bring aid to starving people. I think it is proper to consider the Canadian position in its true light and determine what Canadians can best do to help. Hon. members are aware that Canadians observers have been on the scene in Nigeria for the past 15 months and we have been assured that other observers may be sent; that Canadian supplies and aircraft are available.

The Canadian effort will continue to be a humanitarian one, as it should be. It is an unspeakable tragedy that the suffering should have endured until this time. This point was touched upon by a member of Her Majesty's Loyal Opposition, the hon. member for Red Deer (Mr. Thompson) who knows considerably more about Africa than do some of his hon. friends. Relief supplies could be in the area now but for the intransigence of Ojukwu who has stubbornly resisted the efforts of the International Red Cross to schedule daylight flights. This is the view which is held almost unanimously by representatives at the United Nations, including those of the socialist countries. Well, he has fled Biafra, reportedly aboard a Fokker Friendship aircraft together with tons of luggage, his family and his Mercedes-Benz. He is no longer a factor in the civil war.

In a debate in this House in late November it was stated that massive daylight relief flights under the IRC formula represented the best hope of relieving starvation in Biafra. Despite Nigerian assent and guarantees from the United Kingdom, the United States and Canada, Ojukwu refused to provide for his people the one kind of relief which would have saved lives.

In early December after the debate in the House I had an opportunity to meet again in New York with the Nigerians and the Biafrans, separately, in the presence of a representative of Canairelief. At the Biafran meeting, objections to the Red Cross daylight lift proposal were again voiced. What were those objections? They were that Nigerian planes might bomb Uli during or immediately following Red Cross flights, despite assurances that this would not happen.

The Biafran representatives in New York and Washington were questioned with respect to other types of aid. These are the questions they were asked, "Would you accept an air drop?" The answer was, "We would not. We are afraid the parcels would damage our huts; we have lost so many huts in this war." The exchange continued, "But, surely, that is a remarkable reply. Would it not be possible to designate a drop area and fly food and medical supplies into that area?" The answer was, "No, we are afraid our people would be killed or injured by the falling food cannisters." Only after the incredible nature of these replies had been questioned was it suggested to us that perhaps—just perhaps—aid by helicopter might be accepted.

A few days later, on December 15, in order to meet Biafran objections to daylight aid, the Nigerian government removed all possible doubt about military action interfering with International Red Cross shipments under the ICRC agreement. Nevertheless, there was still no affirmative answer from Ojukwu and no suggestion that the Red Cross plan might proceed on a test basis. Yet Ojukwu is lauded by some as a saviour of his people, a great emancipator.

As the hon. member for Red Deer suggested, perhaps it is time to question some of his motives. Indeed, that time may be more than overdue. Many who are deeply sympathetic to the Ibo people have reached the conclusion that several months ago General Ojukwu and certain of his advisers made a cold-blooded decision to reject daylight flights in favour of the night-time cover provided by the gallant people of Canairelief. He must have known full well, when making this decision, that in order to obtain greater shipments of arms many lives would have to be sacrificed. He, at least, was prepared to make that sacrifice. But his family was safe. When we talk about this tragedy resting on the conscience of the Canadian people, I suggest to the House that most of it must lie on his conscience. He must assume responsibility for the deaths of thousands of women and children.

The starving faces of Ibo youngsters haunt all Canadians. We have to ask ourselves whether we have done enough for the Ibos and will do enough for them during the next two weeks. Are the Biafrans all Ibos? Nigeria was a nation made up of over 250 ethnic and language groups. There was only one tribe that was Ibo. When Ojukwu unilaterally declared Biafra independent, he did so on behalf of hundreds of thousands of non-Ibos in eastern Nigeria who were offered no plebiscite or vote in regard to that decision.

The faces of little children that haunt the conscience of the world, the faces of little children which were paraded on the lecture platforms across Canada during recent weeks and days, include as well the tragic faces of thousands from other tribes and language groups who were never asked whether they wanted to be liberated by Ojukwu. Yet he declared liberation in their name.

Ironically, Mr. Speaker as Ojukwu filed in recent hours he left Biafra to a non-Ibo, Major Philip Effiong of the Efik tribe, a man who surrendered at four o'clock this afternoon and stated, as the minister told us earlier, that now that those opposed to a peaceful resolution of the dispute had left, perhaps a peaceful solution could be arranged.

All of us are concerned about the possibility of genocide. There are some in Canada who have said that the Nigerian federal government and its troops cannot be trusted. All of us must hope that genocide will not occur. Significantly, although the Ibo massacres of 1966 undeniably took place, since then the Ibo people in federal Nigeria have existed peacefully. Before the surrender yesterday, 2 million Ibos lived within the enclave. There were 7 million outside the enclave, in federal Nigeria. Our observers have reported no bloodshed in the Ibo areas, and let us hope that this situation continues.

In a civil war, where there are perhaps more shades of grey than black and white, there is also bitterness—as our friend from Red Deer has suggested—about alleged Ibo complicity in murders associated with the overthrow of the federal government before 1966. Let those who claim that they want to bring fair minds to bear on this dispute, even those who have been lecturing Canadians in recent weeks about their responsibilities, some of whom are perhaps in the gallery tonight, take this factor into consideration. When we are attempting to develop a feeling of trust and confidence on both sides, let us not distort the facts.

The idea of an expanded observer team is a good one. Every Canadian initiative must be undertaken to urge restraint and moderation so that rehabilitation can proceed. I understand that news dispatches have been broadcast to the world to the effect that the federal government of Nigeria is welcoming additional observers from other nations. The government has been criticized for failing to raise the question of the Nigerian civil war at the United Nations. I served there for three months and it was an interesting experience. These criticisms ignore the fact that months ago Canada discussed this very possibility with the Secretary General of the United Nations. This is to the credit of our Secretary of State for External Affairs and is another fact that has been glossed over by the eloquent critics of this government, who should have spent more time getting the facts and less time on the lecture platforms.

The Secretary General reflected the general United Nations view that such action would do more harm than good. Many of the 126 nations at the United Nations are deeply committed to humanitarian causes. Yet significantly not one of them moved to inscribe the Nigerian civil war on the agenda. Not even one of the four black nations that recognized Biafra undertook the initiative called for by Biafra to ask the United Nations to take action. Why was this? It was because any attempted initiative would come crashing down to defeat and frustration.

Some have said, quite incorrectly, that because of its inability to inscribe the Nigerian civil war on the UN agenda this government is racist. That charge is nonsense whether it comes from Nova Scotia, British Columbia or any other province of this country. You might as well charge the other 125 members of the United Nations, including every black country in the UN, with racism. I resent that kind of statement made in the context of Canada.

It is said that Canadians unilaterally should have convened a meeting, a conference or a peace session to arrange a settlement. This is part of the popular mythology about Biafra-Nigeria. Canadians have been urged to bring about some sort of peace conference or understanding between the factions. People who say this really exist in dismal ignorance. If before their eloquent speeches they had consulted with the black nations of Africa, they would have found out how anxious they are to have white intervention.

The hon. member for Yorkton-Melville (Mr. Nystrom), who is a sincere, dedicated young man, says we are entering a new world. That is exactly what they told us at the United Nations. But the world of 1970 is different from the paternalistic pre-war days. Non-whites in other parts of the world have come to resent white interference whether or not it is well motivated or even well-justified. A new generation of capable African leaders say to us. "Keep out. This is an African dispute and Africans will resolve African problems." They say they need no do-gooding, white paternalists. This may be hard news but it is the news of new Africa. They welcome Canadian initiatives to feed the hungry but they say they will not tolerate outside interference in their political problems from any quarter.

I ask hon. members how much outside interference they would be prepared to tolerate in the internal problems of Canada. These may be hard words for those motivated by a sincere desire to impose on others their white humanitarianism, but it is a fact which Canadians in the realm of international relations have come to know all too well. Anyone serving abroad knows that these are the facts of the changing world referred to by the hon. member for Yorkton-Melville.

It is in the face of these tough realities that Canada has acted in the Nigerian civil war. Now that it has concluded, our efforts must again proceed in the face of these realities. Our efforts should come through recognized and established channels. This may not be very dramatic or as dramatic as Canadian planes flying through Nigerian and Biafran flak, unilaterally dropping aid to these people, but those who fought on either side of this struggle have to be helped and we must find channels which can and will bring aid to all of them. We must find non-political initiatives which will not give rise to hostility and resentment, which in turn might serve to retard our humanitarian efforts. We want efforts which will result in the maximum amount of aid being provided.

Many things could be said in a situation of this kind which would get headlines in the newspapers and make a great story, but which might effectively cut off aid to the people who need it most. Happily, at this time when aid must be brought to the starving of the Biafran region, Canada enjoys good working relations with the International Committee of the Red Cross and with other nations which have worked with us toward a common goal, such as the Scandinavian countries and the Nigerian federal government. This is an important consideration at this time.

I conclude with this thought: Co-operation is the key; Canadian co-operation with effective international agencies, co-operation with the government of Nigeria and co-operation to assure that the people who have suffered so much will be the recipients of the aid that Canadians in all parties are so anxious to bestow.

Mr. David MacDonald (Egmont): Mr. Speaker, in rising to speak again about the terrible tragedy that has been occurring for many months in the territory known as Nigeria-Biafra I find myself following the hon. member for Burnaby-Seymour (Mr. Perrault). When he began his remarks he seemed to be making eminently more sense than often in the past with regard to this subject, but he reverted to type and added a primarily irrelevant comment.

When the suggestion was made earlier today that we might have an emergency debate, I was somewhat reluctant about the idea in the belief that the situation was so confused that little by way of worth-while debate on the subject could be achieved. As events have transpired this afternoon and this evening in the House, I think it has become abundantly apparent that this debate of all the many discussions we have had in this House may indeed be the most important in terms of the possibility of what Canada can do.

The minister suggested to us that we should not be too surprised that we have not completed plans and have not yet made arrangements for transport facilities, and that there are still a number of questions to be resolved before relief can be resumed. If members on this side of the House express concern—and I think the concern, fear or even scepticism which exists is not only on one side of the House—it is because we have spent far too many months waiting for the government to take action. If we are concerned this evening and talk about action being taken not in a matter of months, weeks or even days but in a matter of hours, this is not terribly surprising if one recognizes some of what I consider to be the universally accepted facts of the case.

Each war, each human conflict has its own particular marks or characteristics. Without doubt, throughout the piece and surely for over 15 months the most pronounced characteristic of the conflict in Nigeria has been the fact that millions of civilians have literally been starving or have starved to death. Are our people simply to wait in the hope that somehow the situation will either go away or by itself be resolved? Anyone who has taken any time either to visit the area or study the facts of the matter realizes this is not likely to happen. When grim predictions are made that within the course of a few days literally millions more could starve to death, it is not hysterical or inaccurate to make that comment.

We know people have literally been living the most threadbare kind of existence, sustained one might almost imagine by hope itself. If the kind of confused chaos which is recounted by those recently on the scene is at all accurate, one can think, apart altogether from the physiological aspect of the situation, about the psychological uncertainty which must be almost productive of death itself.

The minister has asked for time. There are too many millions in east Africa today who do not have that time. Unless this government is prepared to act, not tomorrow morning but tonight, then whether we like it or not we will be suffering the kind of recriminations that far too often people have experienced in this century because of the failure to act and respond to the urgent need that has been laid before them. The hon. member for Burnaby-Seymour expressed that kind of urgency when he talked about the movement of the Hercules aircraft. However, I think he should have said that all of them should have been moved on the first day.

Mr. Perrault: As many as could be.

• (10:20 p.m.)

Mr. MacDonald (Egmont): We know there are 15 aircraft available now. They have crews. There is food. Within the space of a few hours they could be activated and directed to a suitable landing point. I know that the officials of Canairelief have sent a telegram to the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) suggesting that tomorrow, if given permission, the consortium of planes now available at Sao Tomé, with the food stocks available, could land some 500 tons, enough to sustain life during this interim period until more satisfactory and permanent arrangements can be made.

It seems to me not only eminently sensible but necessary that the government act now. If the Secretary of State for External Affairs is concerned about our undue haste, I say that we hasten because of the situation and we can do no other. All of us are alarmed because it has taken such an interminably long period of time for the government to respond to each and every request on each and every opportunity.

Whether or not, as some members have suggested, it was more than circumstantial that agreement was reached last Friday to finance relief agencies supplying the Biafran people just at the moment when hostilities were coming to a conclusion, may never be known. The fact of the matter is that long before this government was installed in office and ever since it has been in office, members on this side of the House, indeed on all sides, have urged the government to take action. There is little, if any, evidence of the action it took.

What action can we point to that the government has taken? It is not a happy picture. We can talk about the foodstuffs deposited in Fernando Po, Dahomey and Lagos, but when we talk about the food supplies delivered to the starving millions we talk about ten or eleven flights, some 200 tons at most. But when we talk about the efforts made by the Canadian people through volunteer organizations, through Canairelief, we are talking about 11,000 tons and over 660 flights. This may not have been much in terms of those who did suffer and die unnecessarily, but it was hundreds and hundreds of times better than the government was able to do while it hid so often behind the failure to get accurate communication.

I am not at all buoyed up by the indication which the Secretary of State for External Affairs has given us this evening, that he has had word from the officials in Lagos. It does not make me feel particularly proud to wonder how effective these communications have been. The government must have realized how ineffective communications have been when it continually sent special representatives to Lagos to try to devise an effective means of communication. It is not only futile but stupid for us this evening to discuss past events, discuss who was responsible for what fault, or where we should lay blame. Surely our concern at this point is to make sure that the relief supplies are effectively delivered.

As I said at the beginning of my remarks, Mr. Speaker, this debate can be the most important one we have had. In fact, it can make all the questions raised in this House, all the special debates we have had and all the inquiries of the parliamentary committee valid if the government realizes this evening that on this matter there is no time to wait, and that action must be taken now.

In discussing with Canairelief officials this afternoon the situation in the area known as Biafra, in terms of the relief supplies available there, one of them scratched his head and said there were a few bags of salt left—and this, Mr. Speaker, for a physically deprived people of whom 2 million have already starved to death and of whom another 2 million or 3 million could starve to death perhaps within a week.

Are we prepared to see that final accounting of this tragedy? Are we prepared to see a figure, not only of the 2 million deaths that have already taken place but of an additional 2 or 3 million deaths that could take place soon? I do not believe that any member of this House, including the Secretary of State for External Affairs, wants to see that occur. I believe the minister has indicated this by the fact that he has been present throughout the debate this evening and by his willingness to make sure that all available channels are used. But I say to the minister that we must do more than we have done in the past. We have not the luxury that the government seemingly thought it could enjoy throughout this tragedy that of waiting until all the "i's" were dotted and all the "t's" crossed, because if we wait any longer we will only see very many more graves.

Mr. Jean-Pierre Goyer (Parliamentary Secretary to Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, would the hon. member allow me a question?

Does he claim that the Canadian government did not do as much as Canairelief, etc. for it is confirmed that the situation of Canairelief is such today that it will probably no longer be able to serve humanitarian ends, that is transport food and medical supplies to Nigeria?

Would the hon. member want the Canadian government to find itself in a similar situation when the war is over, and be unable to help the Nigerian people?

[English]

Mr. MacDonald (Egmont): Mr. Speaker, I am very grateful for that question because I think it points up the sterility of our situation in regard to the whole issue. The United States government has done that, and they actually sold planes at scrap value so that the whole operation could work. Had we had the courage of that government over the past year we could now view with pride our actions to alleviate unnecessary suffering.

We are now pressing for the most reasonable kind of request possible. The food is there; the facilities are there. We know there are some diplomatic niceties to be observed, some political lobbying and other time-consuming activities that will do nothing but threaten the hopes and lives of people living this threadbare existence in Nigeria.

I would urge, as do all members here tonight, that the government not wait until tomorrow to take the kind of action requested of the Prime Minister by Canairelief, in consultation with other governments such as the United States and Great Britain. If necessary, transportation facilities could be placed under a management group acceptable to the officials in Lagos. Surely to God we do not have to sit and watch another period go by involving all kinds of legalisms that result only in a sterility of action and unnecessary death for millions.

Mr. Speaker: As it is now 10.30 p.m., and pursuant to the special order adopted earlier today, it is my duty to interrupt the proceedings.

MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

NIGERIA—BIAFRA—REFERENCE OF GOVERNMENT ASSISTANCE PLANS TO COMMITTEE

Mr. Speaker: Pursuant to the special order adopted earlier this day, the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Stanfield) moves:

That the Standing Committee on External Affairs and National Defence be instructed to take under consideration immediately the plans of the government to give assistance to the victims of the Nigerian Biafran conflict; that the committee exercise continuing surveillance over the efforts of the Canadian government in this respect; and report with all possible speed to this House as to the adequacy of the measures proposed and recommend any further measures it considers appropriate.

Motion agreed to.

At 10.32 p.m. the House adjourned, without question put, pursuant to special order.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Tuesday, January 13, 1970

The House met at 2 p.m.

PRIVILEGE

MR. BURTON—ADEQUACY OF ANSWERS TO ORDER PAPER QUESTIONS

Mr. John Burton (Regina East): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a question of privilege concerning answers to questions placed on the Order Paper. On October 23 I placed on the Order Paper a series of questions, Nos. 256 and 259 to 264 inclusive, asking for information about the designation of areas under the Regional Development Incentives Act. My questions concerned all provinces except the three maritime provinces which were completely included in designated areas. My first question with respect to each province was: "What criteria were used by the Department of Regional Economic Expansion in the selection of designated areas for the province...". The answer provided to each question was: "Weighted measures of rates of economic growth (employment, income and population) and of potential for secondary industry"—a clear case of bureaucratic gobbledegook.

I then placed a motion for papers on the Order Paper asking for a copy of all correspondence between the government of Canada and each of the provinces regarding the selection of designated regions under the new Regional Development Incentives Act. The answer I received was that correspondence was exchanged only with the province of Alberta. This correspondence was subsequently tabled in the House of Commons and provided information on the views of both the government of Canada and the government of Alberta with respect to the designation of areas in that province. This was then followed by a series of questions in which I asked for information about the specific proposals placed before the government of each province by the government of Canada and the views of the provinces concerning these proposals. The standard answer submitted to each of these questions was that "the details of such consultations are confidential matters."

My question of privilege is that there has been a systematic attempt to evade the provision of information to which this House is entitled. Legislation passed by this House provided for consultations to take place with the provinces and now members are denied access to information on these consultations. We are told we have no right to know.

Furthermore, I submit that there is a conflict between the answer provided to questions 577 to 583 inclusive, and 596 to 598 inclusive, which indicated that the details of such consultations are confidential matters while the government had already provided full information on consultations with one province in response to motion for papers No. 140 concerning correspondence exchanged between the government of Canada and the government of Alberta. If it is possible to provide information on one province, how can the government hide behind confidentiality with respect to other provinces?

If Your Honour thinks there is a question of privilege I am prepared to move a motion to refer this matter to the Standing Committee on Privileges and Elections for further consideration.

Mr. Speaker: I thank the hon. member for having given the Chair the notice required under the Standing Orders. It has given me an opportunity to look into the complaint which has been made by the hon. member for Regina East. I have reached the conclusion, after giving the matter serious thought, that although there might be a grievance on the part of the hon. member, in the circumstances to which he has alluded I cannot find that there is a question of privilege. I think I should refer the hon. member to citation 181 of Beauchesne's fourth edition, among other citations, which provides that in circumstances such as those mentioned by the hon. member for Regina East there cannot be a ruling that there is a legitimate question of privilege requiring the referral of the matter to a committee. In the circumstances I cannot put to the House the motion to which the hon. member referred a moment ago.

THE CANADIAN ECONOMY

INFLATION—SUSPENSION OF COPPER PRICE AND BANK INTEREST INCREASES

Hon. E. J. Benson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, as part of the national effort to curb inflation the Prices and Incomes Commission is working to secure the support of the business community and professional groups for a program aimed at limiting price increases and charges for services. If meaningful progress can be made in this direction, this initial step will be followed by efforts to restrain increases in wages, salaries and other cost elements that affect prices. This will help to restore a balance between total money incomes and the total quantity of goods and services produced in the economy.

It is important that major discretionary price changes in the Canadian market should be avoided while these discussions are taking place. Such price increases, even if planned well in advance, could easily be interpreted as being made in order to avoid the scrutiny which would follow the adoption of a program of price restraint.

With this in mind, the government has requested the copper producers and the railways to suspend the price changes announced around the turn of the year and they have agreed to do so. On behalf of the government, I have also had discussions with representatives of the two banks which had announced increases in their interest rates on instalment loans for consumers; they also have agreed to meet the government's request to suspend these increases.

I want to make it very clear that the government will adopt the same attitude toward any similar proposals to raise prices between now and March 1.

Hon. Robert L. Stanfield (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I think it is very obvious that if the Prices and Incomes Commission is to have any real chance of persuading the country to adopt a program of voluntary restraints, this kind of holding operation is essential. The mystery has been why the government did not realize this long ago.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

[Mr. Speaker.]

Mr. Stanfield: The Prices and Incomes Commission would have had a better chance to succeed if some of the other increases in prices of important commodities that were allowed to take place had been put off at least temporarily. The fact that they were not has made the task of the commission that much more difficult. I think the reason is that the government did not in its heart really believe in the importance of a program of restraints. The Minister of Finance, in his interim budgetary statement, was very quick to dismiss them at that time as having already failed. I hope the government now realizes that if this program is to succeed it must give the program its active support. I hope the government realizes the importance of this program succeeding at this time.

While a program of fiscal restraint and tight money may be perfectly satisfactory to the government and while the Prime Minister and the Minister of Finance may be prepared to tighten the screws further, the rate of unemployment contemplated by the Prime Minister is not acceptable to the country.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Stanfield: I hope this statement by the minister indicates that the government has finally stopped pooh-poohing such efforts and intends to support them. The government must recognize that any program of restraint must be phrased in specific terms. It must be comprehensive and not just related to part of the economy. This should not be too difficult since the Prices and Incomes Commission is talking about something temporary of about a year's duration.

It is late in the day for the government to be acting, but I am glad to see that those approached have co-operated. I think other industries would also have co-operated and thereby have made the task much simpler. The policy of the government to date has been one of deliberately creating unemployment in order to control inflation. It has not worked. It is not acceptable. I hope the minister's announcement today means that the government is finally getting down to a serious, effective and acceptable anti-inflationary program.

Mr. T. C. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): Mr. Speaker, on December 10 last, as recorded at page 1814 of Hansard, I asked the Minister of Finance what the government intended to do about the proposal of the copper industry to implement a further increase in the price of copper. The minister said he would take the question as notice. I want to say that action has been a long time coming and now it is here it seems to be totally unsatisfactory.

In the first place, there is no roll-back in price. The price of copper on January 1, 1969 was 45 cents a pound. Even foregoing the latest price increase it will now be 57 cents a pound, or a very substantial increase of approximately 26⅔ per cent. The company that has been a leader in making these increases is not a poor company. Between 1967 and 1968 its profits increased by 20 per cent and preliminary figures show a substantial increase in its profits for 1969. As a matter of fact, this company has been able to get away with four increases. It has cancelled the last one, but it has had four increases in the price of copper within the last year. Meanwhile the government has sat idly by and done nothing. Now the hon. gentleman comes along and says he has persuaded them to forgo this last increase but only for a two-month period.

During the question period I shall want to get from the Minister of Finance and the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce information as to the price which is being paid for this two-month moratorium. According to a story in the Globe and Mail this morning, it is being granted by the copper companies in exchange for easing the new tough controls on copper shipments. I think the government will have to make it clear whether or not there has been any quid pro quo attached in persuading this industry, which has experienced the highest profits in its history, merely to forgo an additional and unjustified price increase for a period of two months.

With reference to the agreement by which the banks will forgo a proposed additional increase in interest rates on consumer loans, I think the government ought to be ashamed that it has taken so long to step into the picture. Most of us in this House can remember when the predecessor of the present Minister of Finance was assuring hon. members that by taking the ceiling on interest rates out of the Bank Act we would see lower interest rates at the consumer level. But even discounting the proposed increase, interest rates on most consumer loans have doubled.

The result for the banks has, of course, been phenomenal. Preliminary figures show that in 1969 the banks increased their profits by 26½ per cent and increased their combined assets by 15 per cent. Surely the government will have to do something much more effective than getting a two-month moratorium on unjustified and unwarranted proposed price increases. Surely the time has come when the government ought to allow and organize public inquiries into these price increases.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): The minister has done something. He has managed to forestall two price increases—one in copper and one in interest rates. But what about the increase in the price of steel which will lead to increases in prices of almost every other commodity used in Canada? What about the increase in the price of oil, the increases in the price of automobiles? The Minister of Consumer Affairs pleaded with the auto industry not to implement them, but they were implemented despite his pleas and protests. Surely the public ought to know whether the financial position of these companies makes it necessary for them to increase their prices or whether they are merely taking advantage of an inflationary psychology to pick the pockets of the public.

What the minister has done here is not to roll back prices. He has allowed price increases both for the copper industry and other industries and he has permitted the banks to make increased profits. He has done so without lifting a finger. All he is doing now is to say: Boys, you are pushing things too far. It is like catching somebody who has picked your pocket, taken $100, and then he gives you back 25 cents for carfare to get home.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

• (2:20 p.m.)

[Translation]

Mr. Réal Caouette (Témiscamingue): Mr. Speaker, the Minister of Finance will no doubt again hit the headlines in the papers. He has actually stated today in the House his intention to fight inflation with outdated, inefficient methods, i.e. by useless statements and programs. As a matter of fact, the minister knows perfectly well, as we also do, that after the Christmas and New Year holiday season prices are more liable to drop than to rise. If the minister wants to see this for himself, let him come with me along the commercial streets of Ottawa, Hull or any other Canadian city and see the special sales now on in every line of business, with some stores offering 40 or even 50 per cent off their regular prices.

But the minister says that in order to stop inflation it is necessary to ask the Prices and Incomes Commission to get the support of the business world. Indeed the businessmen did not wait for the recommendations of the Minister of Finance or of the Prices and Incomes Commission to put goods on sale at reduced prices.

Mr. Speaker, it is not by saying that the minister has asked two banks not to raise their interest rates, as they wanted to do, that we shall manage to curb inflation or restore the economic balance or, as the minister said in his statement, that his intervention or that of the Prices and Incomes Commission will help to restore a balance between total money incomes and the total quantity of goods and services produced in the economy.

Mr. Speaker, the minister is deliberately misleading the entire Canadian population. He must think that hon. members are ignoramuses because never in the history of Canada have total money incomes been sufficient to buy the total quantity of goods and services produced in the economy. That is why consumers are forced to mortgage their income for three or four years ahead of time in order to buy products which are already one, two or even ten years old. And the minister states that, on the whole, balance between the purchasing power and available goods will be restored. What a misleading statement!

Mr. Speaker, why do the minister and the government tolerate, for example, that a province such as Quebec to finance Quebec Hydro should have to go and borrow $50 million in the United States at an interest rate of 10 per cent for a period of 25 years? As a matter of fact, in 25 years the province of Quebec will have paid $125 million in interests on a $50 million loan, which is in fact a net loan of only $45 million since the brokers will get a $5 million commission on the transaction.

Mr. Speaker, that is the cause of inflation in Canada. It is the entire system which must be revamped. I understand that the minister's statement will get the headlines, but truth nonetheless has its rights. We must admit that our system is obsolete even if tolerated by an irresponsible government.

ADJUSTMENT ASSISTANCE BOARD

TABLING OF ANNUAL REPORT

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): Mr. Speaker, could we revert to motions for a few seconds?

Mr. Speaker: Does the house agree to revert to motions?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Pepin: Mr. Speaker. I should like to table in both official languages the annual report of the Adjustment Assistance Board.

[English]

MOTION TO ADJOURN UNDER S.O. 26

GRAIN

ALLEGED INADEQUATE PLAN TO UTILIZE THUNDER BAY TERMINAL SPACE

Mr. Les Benjamin (Regina-Lake Centre): Mr. Speaker, I ask leave, seconded by the hon. member for Regina East (Mr. Burton), to move the adjournment of the House under Standing Order 26 for the purpose of discussing a specific and important matter requiring urgent consideration, namely, the inexcusable situation involving some 70 million bushels of space in the grain terminals at Thunder Bay, and the wholly inadequate plan for filling this space by mid-April, when such terminal capacity can and must be utilized before the end of February to allow a two-bushel quota to be provided at affected shipping points many weeks sooner than will be the case under present plans; and the urgent need for the government to require the railways to begin immediately to deliver up to 1,000 carloads per day to these terminals to alleviate the worsening farm income crisis in the prairie provinces and the very serious repercussions this crisis is having on the economy and on the employment situation in all of Canada.

Mr. Speaker: As the hon. member knows, in determining whether the House should be adjourned under the provisions of Standing Order 26 as suggested by the hon. member, the Chair must have regard to a number of factors, including the probability of the matter being brought before the House within a reasonable time by other means. It would appear that there will be such opportunities for debate in the days and weeks ahead. With this in mind I must rule that the hon. member's motion cannot be put to the House at this time.

ORAL QUESTION PERIOD

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

NIGERIA—PROVISION OF RELIEF—INCREASE IN OBSERVERS—ADMISSION OF BIAFRANS TO CANADA

Hon. Robert L. Stanfield (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, in the absence of the Secretary of State for External Affairs I should like to direct my question to the Prime Minister. In view of the importance of the time factor in connection with starvation difficulties in Nigeria I should like to ask whether the government of Nigeria at Lagos has given the go-ahead on programs to provide relief from outside the country to the starving and whether the government of Nigeria has as yet given any indication whether or not it is prepared to allow an increase in the number of international observers in the country?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): I do not know, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Stanfield: Mr. Speaker, I suggest it is of the greatest importance to the House that members be fully informed as to progress in these matters. Would it be possible for the Secretary of State for External Affairs or his Parliamentary Secretary to appear before the House to give us this information in view of the grave importance of each day that passes?

Mr. Trudeau: It is always possible, Mr. Speaker, but yesterday the House set up a parliamentary committee in order to exercise this kind of discretion.

Mr. J. M. Forrestall (Dartmouth-Halifax East): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the Minister of National Defence to indicate to the House and to the Canadian people in general whether he would be prepared to authorize the diversion of HMCS Bonaventure from exercises to the relief of Nigeria by utilizing its capacity to carry food, drugs, medical supplies and portable hospitals and, if necessary, for the purpose of evacuation?

Hon. Léo Cadieux (Minister of National Defence): As indicated by the Prime Minister, Mr. Speaker, this afternoon at three o'clock there is to be a meeting of the Committee on External Affairs and National Defence at which time I believe some suggestions will be forthcoming. I can say that the Department of National Defence has all sorts of contingency plans. If there is a suggestion to divert the Bonaventure and it is accepted by the government, the minister would, of course, divert the Bonaventure and put it into service.

Mr. Stanfield: Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary which I should like to direct to the Minister of Manpower and Immigration. Is the government of Canada prepared to adopt an open-door attitude towards Biafrans who might wish to come to this country which would give them treatment comparable with that previously offered to Czechoslovakians?

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Minister of Manpower and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, as my hon. friend knows, Canada in the past has adopted in the case of Czechoslovakia and Hungary a very generous attitude. The situation has not developed in Biafra to the point where we can develop the same attitude. The matter is under very careful scrutiny at the moment.

Mr. Lincoln M. Alexander (Hamilton West): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a supplementary to the minister. Can he assure the House and the people of Canada that in the event there is a mass exodus the government will look with sympathy upon all applications?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I respectfully suggest to the hon. member that the question has hypothetical overtones and asked in this way perhaps it should not be received.

Mr. David MacDonald (Egmont): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary for the Prime Minister with regard to earlier questions. In view of the continuing difficulties in terms of resuming some form of relief operation in the area formerly known as Biafra, has the Prime Minister taken any step directly or through his personal representative to see if the difficulties can be overcome quickly so that some form of arrangement may be set up in order that relief supplies may be distributed in the areas where they are drastically needed at the moment?

Mr. Trudeau: I repeat that this afternoon the committee will be dealing with this question. The Secretary of State for External Affairs will be appearing before that committee at 3.30 and can be questioned in detail. But our information is that at present there are no particular difficulties about which we are in a position to do anything. The roads are open and the supplies are there. It is a matter of finding enough available trucks to transport supplies into the more remote areas. The Canadian government has offered money to the Lagos government to be used for the purchase of such trucks. We have observers there on the front. We have two military observers who are in a position to report to the Canadian government when they find themselves able to do so. At this stage we are doing everything we can.

Mr. Alexander: On a point of order—

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Broadview.

Mr. John Gilbert (Broadview): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary for the Prime Minister. In view of the need for an experienced man on the Canadian observer team in Biafra, would he consider the appointment of Mr. Stanley Burke to the Canadian observer team?

Mr. Trudeau: We have already appointed a team of people who are leaving tonight or tomorrow as soon as commercial flights are available to get over there.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Trudeau: We have asked General Wrinch—

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Hamilton West.

Mr. Alexander: Mr. Speaker, the question I asked earlier of the Minister of Manpower and Immigration may have been hypothetical but because of the importance of the matter I hope the minister will be allowed to reply. I was seeking information about whether the government would give equal treatment to Biafrans who may seek refuge in Canada to that accorded to people from several European nations under similar situations of duress.

Mr. MacEachen: Mr. Speaker, I want to say to my hon. friend that the situation is not exactly on all fours with the other countries he has in mind and to which I earlier referred. Obviously we are concerned about the situation. I am in very close consultation with the Department of External Affairs on this matter. But the situation has not developed to the point where it is possible for the government to reach a decision. Until the situation has developed to that point I think it would be unwise to make a decision based on conjecture.

Hon. George Hees (Prince Edward-Hastings): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question. The Prime Minister just mentioned that the very necessary observer team is waiting for commercial aircraft to become available. Would he consider sending the Jetstar if it is available?

Mr. Trudeau: It would have to refuel in the middle of the Atlantic Ocean.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Hees: Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Speaker: I suggest to the hon. member—

Mr. Hees: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker, I bought the plane for the government and I know it can make the flight with the proper stops on the way.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands.

Mr. Trudeau: I do not think it would have to stop if the hon. member went along and breathed into the tank.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

THE CANADIAN ECONOMY

INFLATION—CONTINGENCY RESPECTING AGREEMENT TO SUSPEND COPPER PRICE INCREASE

Mr. T. C. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): Mr. Speaker, may I ask a question of the Minister of Finance arising out of the statement he made on motions. Is the agreement by the copper producers to forgo until March 1 the further increase in the prices which they had proposed contingent on any agreement by the government to abate the directives which it issued requiring the companies to increase the amounts of copper available for use in Canada this year?

Hon. E. J. Benson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, in respect of the allocation of copper to the Canadian market, as my friend knows the Canadian market is supplied at a much lower price than the world price of copper. As a matter of fact, the 57-cent price that the copper companies have agreed to continue compares with the London metals exchange price of last week, that is the world price of 82 cents a pound, and is also substantially higher than the United States domestic price.

The matter of the quantities required for Canadian consumption comes under the Minister of Trade and Commerce. I would ask him to refer to this matter although I believe the understanding was that there would be adequate copper available. However, I leave it to the Minister of Trade and Commerce.

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of Trade and Commerce): Mr. Speaker, the policy of the government has been and is still to satisfy the normal legitimate requirements of Canadian users. Even in normal times what is legitimate is a relative concept. The concept is even more relative now in view of the fact that we now have three prices, the Canadian price, frozen for the next two months, the United States price and the London Metals Exchange price. At a lower price a copper user can develop new requirements. So in normal times it is difficult to assess what is legitimate and it will be even more difficult now.

A few weeks ago, after my previous announcement on copper, my department assessed the legitimate demand of Canadian user manufacturers and has now re-assessed it. There is a difference between the two assessments. I shall not deny that. Quantities will be provided to copper users on the basis of historical levels.

It seems to us at the moment that everybody must make a sacrifice. Producers are making one and the users must make one too.

Mr. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): Mr. Speaker, do I understand that the directives which were issued to the various copper producers setting forth the higher amount of copper which they must retain for domestic consumption have now been revised downward and that this is part of the price the government is paying for getting a two-month moratorium on the proposed price increase? Do I take it that the minister's answer is yes?

Mr. Pepin: Mr. Speaker, you might look at it that way; you might look at it another way too. The users who might have been expected to pay 66 cents or more, will now get their copper at 57 cents for a period of time. We have here a difficult distribution of advantages and disadvantages, and it is being done in the fairest way.

Hon. Marcel Lambert (Edmonton West): I have a supplementary question for the Minister of Finance. Would he advise the House whether there is any significance or any quid pro quo with regard to the date of March 1? Is the roll-back, or the maintenance of present prices by the copper companies, tied in with a promise of the release from these quota restrictions as of March 1, and does the same thing apply to the banks in question?

Mr. Benson: What we have asked these people to do is to suspend any increases until we have a chance to see the results of the meeting which the Prices and Incomes Commission is trying to arrange. We expect it to be held in February, as will the meeting of first ministers at which inflation will be discussed. We are hopeful that out of the conference which the Prices and Incomes Commission is trying to arrange a formula will be developed which will be applied with respect to any proposed changes in prices.

[Translation]

Mr. Réal Caouette (Témiscamingue): Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Speaker: Does the hon. member for Témiscamingue wish to put a supplementary question?

Mr. Caouette: Yes, Mr. Speaker. I wish to put a supplementary question to the Minister of Finance.

The Noranda Company announced, two weeks ago, a 9 cent increase in the price of copper, from 57 cents to 66 cents a pound. Now, under the steps taken by the minister, will Noranda mine be selling copper at 57 cents a pound or has the company been authorized to increase its price to 66 cents?

[English]

Mr. Benson: The agreement is that there will be a suspension of the price increase and that prices will not be increased in the period from January 1 to March 1. I might say that this does involve a roll-back in price because the price was increased on January 1. The matter is to be reconsidered in March. There is no authorization to increase the price at that time, but this matter will be considered in view of the results of the conference of the Prices and Incomes Commission and that of the first ministers.

Hon. D. S. Harkness (Calgary Centre): I have a further supplementary question for the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce. What action has the minister decided to take on the request for a further embargo on the shipment of scrap copper, which would be an extension of the present embargo on shipments of this commodity?

Mr. Pepin: Scrap is on the control list. There is to be a meeting with these people tomorrow in the department on a number of issues. But I might add that the administration of these measures will be difficult, of course, because producers will quite legitimately want to maximize their advantage and so will users. There will be administrative difficulties, but my department is equipped to do the best possible job in trying circumstances—

Mr. Harkness: I have a further supplementary question.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I should like to suggest to hon. members that we should soon move on to another subject. I hope there will not be too many further supplementary questions. I will allow the hon. member for Calgary Centre to put his question, followed by the hon. member for Edmonton West.

Mr. Harkness: So I take it from what the minister said that we can expect some information tomorrow or the next day on the decision taken. My further supplementary question is: what is the reason for excluding British Columbia copper producers from the government's request not to increase the price of copper for two months?

Mr. Pepin: This again is part of the complexity.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Pepin: Part of the complexity is that we only have control over certain forms of copper and not over unrefined copper such as the concentrates in British Columbia. Some people in the copper industry make the point that some companies are asked to make greater sacrifices than others and that is not an unfair comment.

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): My further supplementary question is directed to the Minister of Finance. It arises out of the last paragraph in his statement. Can it be taken from that paragraph that anyone who dares raise his price between now and March 1 will be expected to roll it back or to maintain his present price if he is tempted to raise it?

Mr. Benson: What is meant is that the government urges people in the interim, before the conference which we hope will take place and the meeting of the first ministers, that is, before March 1, not to make major price changes. Of course we do not have the power to order people to roll back prices, but we urge them not to increase prices in the hope that the conference will be successful and that guidelines will be developed.

ALLEGED INVITATION TO PRIME MINISTER TO VISIT COMMUNIST CHINA

Mr. Gilbert Rondeau (Shefford): Mr. Speaker, I wish to put a question to the Prime Minister.

Could he tell us whether it is true that he intends to visit Communist China next spring, and more specifically in May, following an invitation that he reportedly has received from Peking?

GRAIN

ACCEPTANCE OF DEFERRED DELIVERY PERMITS

Mr. Craig Stewart (Marquette): I should like to direct my question to the Minister Without Portfolio in charge of the Wheat Board. In view of the fact that close to two-thirds of all delivery points were unable to accept a five-bushel quota in the last crop year ending July 31, can the minister advise the House when these points can expect acceptance of their deferred delivery permits?

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister without Portfolio): The simple answer is, of course, as soon as space is available since deferred delivery permits are in the hands of the farmers and therefore, along with unit quotas, are a first entitlement when space opens up. Of course the objective of the Wheat Board has been generally to allow space to be opened for unit quotas as well as deferred delivery points before opening bushel quotas, but the Wheat Board decided to open bushel quotas where space is clearly available and still attempt to assure space where unit quotas and deferred deliveries remain to be made.

Mr. Stewart (Marquette): I have a supplementary question for the minister. Could he tell the House why in Manitoba there were twice as many CPR as CNR delivery points that were unable to accept a five-bushel quota in the last crop year?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The supplementary question is clearly argumentative.

UTILIZATION OF LAKEHEAD TERMINAL SPACE

Mr. Les Benjamin (Regina-Lake Centre): I have a supplementary question, Mr. Speaker, which I should like to direct to the minister in charge of the Wheat Board. In view of his statements in recent days concerning the schedule of unloading at Lakehead terminals, will the minister say whether or not the government will consider requesting the Wheat Board and the Canadian railways to increase their unloading capacity up to 1,000 carloads a day in order to fill that space earlier than was originally planned?

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister without Portfolio): No, Mr. Speaker. The plan which has been drawn up with regard to the shipping of grain to the Lakehead has been carefully arranged to ensure that the Lakehead space will in fact be full before the opening of navigation. It is important not only to have a fairly steady flow to the Lakehead from the point of view of the best use of facilities but also to ensure a fairly steady flow toward the end of the period as we fill the space because immediately after navigation opens we will be expecting the railroads and terminals to unload well over 1,000 cars per day.

APPOINTMENT OF LAKEHEAD MOVEMENT CO-ORDINATOR

Mr. A. B. Douglas (Assiniboia): I have a supplementary question for the minister in charge of the Wheat Board. In view of the fact that the minister has recently arranged for the appointment of a co-ordinator for the handling of grain at the west coast terminals, is he now prepared to appoint a similar co-ordinator to expedite the movement of grain at the Lakehead?

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister without Portfolio): We are giving consideration to the Lakehead terminals' operation, and of course the logic which led to the appointment of a co-ordinator at the terminals in Vancouver is even stronger in the case of the Lakehead. We are working toward the objective of appointing such a co-ordinator prior to the opening of navigation.

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prince Albert): In view of the fact that for months members of the opposition have been suggesting the appointment of a freight car controller, a suggestion which has always been resisted by the government, when did the minister finally come to the sensible conclusion, in so far as British Columbia is concerned, that it should have a controller?

Mr. Lang: I was curious to find out whether the right hon. gentleman would react to the appointment by saying it is a good thing which he had suggested or by saying it is a bad thing and insufficient. I am glad to see that he welcomes it.

Mr. Diefenbaker: That is the type of nonsense that has placed the western farmers in the position in which they find themselves today.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Has the right hon. gentleman a supplementary question?

Mr. Diefenbaker: Yes, Mr. Speaker. I have been trying to get an answer from the minister. I ask the minister: when was it that his mental operations finally brought him to the conclusion that action should be taken which should have been taken six months ago?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

Mr. Baldwin: After he picked up Thatcher's permit book.

HOUSING

1970 CONSTRUCTION TARGET FOR HOMES FOR ELDERLY AND THOSE ON LOW INCOMES

Mrs. Grace MacInnis (Vancouver-Kingsway): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the minister in charge of housing. In view of the fact that last year the federal government gave direct assistance under the National Housing Act for the construction of some 20,000 dwellings for elderly and low income people with families, could the minister say what the target is for 1970?

Hon. Robert K. Andras (Minister without Portfolio): An increase over that figure—

Inquiries of the Ministry

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I think the information sought by the hon. member should normally be given by way of a general statement on motions.

FORILLON—PROSPECTION RIGHTS GRANTED TO PRIVATE ENTERPRISE

Mr. Georges-C. Lachance (Lafontaine): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development.

Have the Quebec provincial authorities informed the minister or the federal government that prospection rights had been granted to private enterprise a few days before the signature of the agreement between both governments on the creation of the Forillon park?

Hon. Jean Chrétien (Minister of Indians Affairs and Northern Development): No, Mr. Speaker.

TAXATION

REQUEST FOR POSTPONEMENT OF DATES FOR FILING AND PRESENTATION OF BRIEFS ON WHITE PAPER

Hon. J. W. Monteith (Perth): Mr. Speaker, I was going to direct this question of the Minister of Finance so he could relay it to the chairman of the Finance, Trade and Economic Affairs Committee, but as the chairman is here maybe I can put my question directly to him. Would he consider suggesting to the committee on Finance, Trade and Economic Affairs that the date of January 19, 1970, for notification of intention to present briefs on the white paper on taxation, and the date of March 1, 1970, for actual presentation of such briefs, might be delayed somewhat to enable many important organizations to prepare their briefs properly for presentation?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member has made a submission which he has to assume will be taken into account.

INVITATION TO PRESIDENT OF FRANCE TO VISIT OTTAWA

Mr. Gérard Laprise (Abitibi): Mr. Speaker, I wish to put a question to the Prime Minister.

[Mr. Andras.]

Could he indicate whether on behalf of the Canadian government he extended an official invitation to the President of France, Mr. Pompidou, to visit Ottawa at the time of his coming trip to Washington?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): No, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Laprise: Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question.

Does the Prime Minister intend to extend such an invitation on the occasion of this trip or at any other time?

Mr. Trudeau: At this very moment, Mr. Speaker, I have no such intention.

BILINGUALISM AND BICULTURALISM

INQUIRY AS TO ACTION BASED ON THIRD REPORT OF COMMISSION

Hon. George Hees (Prince Edward-Hastings): Mr. Speaker, I should like to address a question to the right hon. Prime Minister. Would the Prime Minister take the first opportunity on motions to outline to the House what action the government intends to take, either legislative or otherwise, on the recommendations contained in the third volume of recommendations issued by the Bilingualism and Biculturalism Commission?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Perhaps in due course, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Hees: A supplementary question. Is it not a fact that the government has simply poured $9 million down the drain for propaganda purposes inasmuch as the government obviously intends to take no action on this report whatsoever?

PUBLIC SERVICE

DELAY IN ISSUING RETROACTIVE PAY CHEQUES

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, I should like to address a question either to the President of the Treasury Board or to the Minister of Supply and Services. Can we be informed what the present situation is with respect to the retroactive pay cheques for federal public servants?

Hon. James Richardson (Minister of Supply and Services): Mr. Speaker, I spent an hour and a half at the Central Pay Office this morning—

Mr. Baldwin: Did you get it?

Mr. Richardson: I did not write any cheques myself but I am pleased to say that the Central Pay Office is current with respect to collective agreements and that the backlog with respect to other pay changes is being reduced substantially each day.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): I have a supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. In view of the fact that we had the same answer some weeks ago about the situation being current, would the minister tell us why it is that so many federal civil servants have not received their cheques and are even going as far as taking their cases to court?

Mr. Richardson: Mr. Speaker, I am referring to the Central Pay Office. As the Central Pay Office is at the end of the pipeline it can only process the cheques and issue them after it has received the documentation or necessary information from other sources.

Mr. Baldwin: Okay, Bud, it is your turn now. You ducked the first one.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, I now have a supplementary question for the President of the Treasury Board. Since he must be farther ahead in the pipeline, can he tell us when this matter is going to be cleared up?

Hon. C. M. Drury (President of the Treasury Board): Mr. Speaker, it is hard to say when no delays in the pay service will ever be encountered. We hope this will be the case but it is unlikely it will ever come about, perhaps in the next millenium. In the meantime, as the minister has indicated a very large effort is being put forth and substantial progress is being made in clearing up what was a great backlog.

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prince Albert): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question for the minister. In view of the uncertainty arising from the two statements that have been made, why is it that there are so many civil servants entitled to retroactive pay who have not received it and in fact, have been denied it? I ask him also if, with regard to the actions that have been taken in the Exchequer Court, the government intends to settle those in a manner favourable to the plaintiffs?

Mr. Drury: Mr. Speaker, I am sure the right hon. gentleman, as a famous lawyer, would not expect me to answer that question.

Mr. Hees: Or any other.

Mr. Drury: I have had some training as a lawyer, though rather brief—

An hon. Member: Very brief.

Mr. Drury: —but he can understand, perhaps better than I, why I should not answer that question.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I appreciate that the right hon. gentleman has a supplementary question but I have to appeal to hon. members again to give an opportunity to other hon. members who are waiting anxiously for a chance to ask questions.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Since when did it become difficult or impossible for a government to say whether it was going to do justice to its employees?

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member for Winnipeg North.

Mr. David Orlikow (Winnipeg North): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the President of the Treasury Board if he can tell the House how many civil servants are waiting for back pay? Several dozen, several hundred or several thousand?

Mr. Drury: Mr. Speaker, we have been engaged in a series of rounds of collective bargaining. The first round is virtually complete and some 72 separate agreements have been concluded. We are in the process of negotiating another 23. This is going on and agreements are being signed almost every week. In the course of each signing a new pay situation arises so that although, as the minister has indicated, we have been successful in meeting the adjustments in pay respecting agreements concluded some time ago, a new set of pay adjustments arises virtually every week.

Mr. Orlikow: Mr. Speaker, on a question of privilege, months ago the Minister of Supply and Services told the House that things were current and people were being paid. We now find out through representations from the Professional Institute and the Public Service Alliance that there are suits against the government and that there are hundreds of people waiting as long as six months for the back pay granted to them—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

Inquiries of the Ministry

Mr. Orlikow: My question of privilege is that I submit the minister misrepresented the facts to me and to other members of the House.

An hon. Member: Discrimination.

Another hon. Member: You should have gone skin-diving too.

STATUS OF NEGOTIATIONS INVOLVING AIRPORT FIREMEN

Mr. C. Terrence Murphy (Sault Ste. Marie): Mr. Speaker, my question is also directed to the President of the Treasury Board. In view of the fact that some 1,500 or more firemen employed at federal airports across the country have been working without a collective agreement for more than 14 months and are now considering wildcat strike action, can the minister assure the House—

An hon. Member: Good for them.

Mr. Murphy: —that everything possible is being done by representatives of the Treasury Board to finalize the negotiations with representatives of the Public Service Alliance or to have the matter in dispute submitted to arbitration?

Hon. C. M. Drury (President of the Treasury Board): Mr. Speaker, I can give the assurance that the Treasury Board is making every effort to bring these negotiations to a conclusion. The choice of proceeding to arbitration is, of course, an option open to the employees. It is an option which at any time they are free to exercise. It is exercised at their option. This is not, indeed, an indication of impatience and frustration on the part of the government.

Mr. Murphy: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Will the minister advise the House whether it is open to the representatives of Treasury Board, as well as of the Public Service Alliance, to have the matter in dispute submitted to arbitration so that a decision may be arrived at more quickly?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I do not think that question is in order.

CAPE BRETON DEVELOPMENT CORPORATION

ACTION RESPECTING ALLEGED DISCRIMINATION

Mr. Donald MacInnis (Cape Breton-East Richmond): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Prime Minister.

[Mr. Speaker.]

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

An hon. Member: Ask him, anyway.

Mr. MacInnis: Is the government going to take any action to stop the discrimination carried on by the Crown corporation, Devco, which has been referred to by the Minister of Regional Economic Expansion?

CONSUMER AFFAIRS

TIME OF RELEASE OF PRICE INDEX FIGURES BY BUREAU OF STATISTICS

Hon. George Hees (Prince Edward-Hastings): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce. Can he advise the House why it is that the Dominion Bureau of Statistics, which comes directly under his control, has suddenly changed the time of making available figures relating to the consumer price index from eight o'clock in the morning, as has been customary, to 2.30 p.m. in the afternoon, half an hour after the House begins sitting?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

Mr. Hees: Has the government that little confidence in its programs?

Mr. Speaker: I suggest to the hon. member that the question might be raised at ten o'clock.

Mr. Hees: Obviously very embarrassing figures are coming out. Is that how badly your programs are working, Ben?

Mr. Greene: You are not even up at eight o'clock.

Mr. Hees: Yes, I am. I have half my day's work done by eight o'clock.

Mr. Trudeau: That's one hour.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

NATIONAL CAPITAL

REQUEST FOR ESTABLISHMENT OF COMMITTEE

Mr. Barry Mather (Surrey): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the Prime Minister. Having in mind the current controversy between the city of Ottawa and the National Capital Commission, would the Prime Minister give consideration to implementing the decision of the previous Parliament and encourage the establishment of a committee of Parliament to deal with all matters pertaining to the national capital?

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, perhaps I might answer this question. I would be prepared to take that matter into consideration again, bearing in mind the present heavy committee studies of many questions and the opportunity of studying other questions, including this one, on the estimates within a month's time.

Mr. John L. Skoberg (Moose Jaw): A supplementary question to the Prime Minister, Mr. Speaker. In view of the unappreciative attitude of the city of Ottawa with regard to the importance of federal civil servants to the economy of Ottawa, will the Prime Minister give serious consideration to decentralizing federal civil servants by moving government departments to the west and to the maritime provinces in order to give those areas a shot in the arm, so to speak?

POLLUTION

ACTION RESPECTING CONTAMINATION OF SASKATCHEWAN RIVER BY MERCURY

Mr. G. H. Aiken (Parry Sound-Muskoka): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Fisheries and Forestry. Have his departmental officials yet pinpointed the source of the mercury contamination in the Saskatchewan River? If so, what action is the minister planning with regard to the guilty parties?

Hon. Jack Davis (Minister of Fisheries and Forestry): Mr. Speaker, we suspect that the source of the mercury pollution is among several plants in the Saskatoon area. Our engineers and biologists are already in these plants at the present time.

POST OFFICE

REFERENCE TO PARLIAMENT OF ESTABLISHMENT OF CROWN CORPORATION

Mr. Heath Macquarrie (Hillsborough): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the hon. and gracious Postmaster General. It is prompted by the announcement of the appointment of a general manager for the Ontario region of the Post Office Department whose job is declared to be the implementation of recommendations of the latest Kates, Peat and Marwick task force report. Can the minister advise if he contemplates even a fleeting reference to Parliament before he establishes his Crown corporation?

Hon. Eric W. Kierans (Postmaster General and Minister of Communications): Yes, Mr. Speaker.

IMMIGRATION

REPRESENTATIONS FROM FRENCH IMMIGRANTS TO QUEBEC DESIRING TO MOVE TO ALBERTA

Would the Minister say whether he has received further representations from large numbers of dissatisfied French immigrants, presently settled in Quebec and wishing to move to Alberta?

[English]

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Minister of Manpower and Immigration): Yes, Mr. Speaker. I have had representations from them.

[Translation]

Mr. Prud'homme: Mr. Speaker, I want to ask a supplementary question.

Could the Minister say whether he intends to convey to the House the written representations that he received?

[English]

Mr. MacEachen: Mr. Speaker, I have received a letter and an accompanying statement. I believe I replied to it yesterday. I have no objection to tabling the correspondence later if that is desired.

Mr. Eldon M. Woolliams (Calgary North): May I ask a supplementary question, Mr. Speaker, and make a suggestion. Would the minister advise these people that the vacant land in Alberta that is being talked about is non-existent?

Mr. Donald MacInnis (Cape Breton-East Richmond): A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. When the minister is tabling that information would he also table information with respect to the amount paid to the displaced Cape Breton miners who went west to British Columbia or Alberta?

AGRICULTURE

DAIRYING—RECONSIDERATION OF DECISION TO REDUCE SUPPORT

Mr. R. E. McKinley (Huron): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the Minister of Agriculture. In view of the dairy producers' widespread dissatisfaction with the government's proposal to cut $10 million from the next dairy year's allotment and the dissatisfaction expressed by many hon. members, including government supporters—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Will the hon. member kindly ask his question and not make a statement.

Mr. McKinley: I am about to ask my question, Mr. Speaker. Is it the intention of the minister to review this decision with a view to allotting the same amount of money to the dairy program next year as was allotted to it this year?

Mr. Olson: Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I doubt whether the question as asked is in order. The hon. member has made a representation and a submission, and the matter must be considered in that light.

HOUSING

ONTARIO—ACTION TO OFFSET FREEZE ON CERTAIN CONSTRUCTION

Mr. John Gilbert (Broadview): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the minister in charge of housing. In view of the considerable drop in housing starts in the Toronto region last year and in view of the announcement by the Minister of Trade and Development of Ontario that there is to be a freeze on public, student and senior citizens' housing, what steps does the government propose to take in order to meet its program?

[Mr. Woolliams.]

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The answer to that question, I suggest to the hon. member, ought normally to be given to the House by way of a statement on motions.

INDUSTRY

POSITION OF FAIREY OF CANADA CONTRACTS

Mr. J. M. Forrestall (Dartmouth-Halifax East): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the Minister of Supply and Services. Could he indicate whether National Defence contracts awarded to Fairey of Canada have been taken away from the company and awarded to other contractors?

Hon. James Richardson (Minister of Supply and Services): Mr. Speaker, I do not have the information on these contracts immediately at hand but I will be glad to obtain it.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

CANADA CORPORATIONS ACT

ADMINISTRATIVE AND CONSEQUENTIAL AMENDMENTS

The House resumed, from Monday, November 10, consideration of the motion of Mr. Basford that Bill C-4 to amend the Canada Corporations Act and other statutory provisions related to the subject matter of certain of those amendments, be read the second time and referred to the Standing Committee on Finance, Trade and Economic Affairs.

Mr. Arnold Peters (Timiskaming): Mr. Speaker, this matter was before the House on November 10 of last year, at which time a number of hon. members participated in the debate. Since then hon. members have received many submissions concerning the ramifications of Bill C-4. I presume hon. members have had an opportunity of examining the various clauses of this bill. This is not, Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. I wonder if we could have some order in the chamber?

Mr. Peters: This is not the first bill which has sought certain disclosures on the part of corporations. If hon. members will reflect, several years ago we passed a bill for the disclosure of certain information by companies and labour unions in Canada. Surprisingly enough, there was considerable objection at that time by the companies concerned to disclosing this information. When we review the situation, we find that very little use has been made of the information sought at that time and there has been very little comment about the information that was disclosed.

The unions were willing to participate, although some of the companies did so reluctantly. Not much use has been made by either the public or the corporations of the information obtained by the disclosures of the trade unions or the corporations.

This particular bill, Mr. Speaker, has great potential. It has a potential for re-establishing a much more modern and up-to-date Companies Act which would allow for the orderly operation of corporate business in Canada. It asks for considerable information. The hon. member for Calgary North (Mr. Woolliams) indicated this was a snooping bill. Unless the minister goes further than he has, that is exactly what this bill is going to be. It will snoop out a lot of information, but nothing will happen to that information.

The industrial sector in Canada is expanding very rapidly. Our corporate wealth has grown greatly. We in Canada have been able to develop industrially more rapidly than most countries, and possibly more uniformly. We have now reached the stage where we have a great corporate structure which almost supersedes government in the operation of our nation.

Several ministers were asked about the price of copper today. It was indicated that an arrangement had been made whereby a two-month stay on price increases would be retained. The decision was arrived at in spite of the great difficulty in deciding whether this applied to all the domestic producers in Canada, whether the copper consumers in Canada were all affected and how it would apply to the general public. This is an indication that our corporate structure in Canada has reached a level where it has more influence on the average person's life than has the federal government or the combination of the eleven governments which govern this country.

If the International Nickel Company decides it does not want to have a contract with its employees and pushes the situation until a strike develops, then the dispute between the mine workers in Sudbury, Falconbridge and the International Nickel Company of (Canada) is not necessarily related to labour relations. As history has shown, this dispute provides an opportunity for a large corporation with international monetary control over a total industry to decide whether to have a price increase. The labour relations situation was set up in such a way that the Corporation would have the support of the community and of the workers in that industry in helping it to obtain an increase.

I made a statement in this House that this was the reason for the International Nickel Company strike and that before there would be a settlement there would be a large international increase in the price of nickel. This has now taken place. What control did the government have over the nickel we could buy or the commodities we could purchase? they had absolutely no control. They could ask, beg or take action. The only action they could take was the implementation of legislation such as is before us today, legislation with some teeth in it.

The minister is asking for all kinds of disclosures. He is asking us to look into the intricate dealings of corporations and companies. He has said we should look into them to the extent of knowing whether a shareholder is getting a fair shake from his company. The other day I was looking at some figures. I noticed that a company with a multi-million dollar investment, and stock running between $50 and $60, was paying a 71 cent dividend. I strongly suggest that a person having stock in that company, knowing the volume of business that company was doing and the expansion it has experienced,—would wonder why he was receiving a 71 cent dividend on a $50 share. It just would not seem reasonable.

In my opinion, the shareholder would have absolutely no say in any investment that company might make. He may not even be told what other subsidiary industries were being purchased with money that would normally be used for participating share dividends. It is for this kind of protection the minister is asking, and I am glad the government is finally interested in it. I have said that we have developed a very sound and stable industrial structure. The corporate structure in our country has not caused great difficulty by over-expansion, bankruptcies and the other unfortunate events that occur in many countries. At the same time we really have not had any control over this development. It has been stable from the point of view of the companies. The minister is now saying it will have to be fair as far as the shareholders are concerned.

I have been interested in a number of the problems of shareholders such as proxy votes; how they are arrived at; the legitimacy of companies using proxy votes which are left over after everyone has indicated who will be attending the shareholders meeting. I am interested in the takeovers that have occurred and the inability of the average shareholder to decide whether a takeover is in his interest or what the financial purpose of the takeover is in terms of this interest. I am not speaking of the interest of the companies because that is well looked after. It has almost become a third dimension in the economic way of life of the Canadian people. The minister is to be congratulated for his interest in the shareholder. I feel, however, that he has missed the real role of government in demanding the disclosures, that is the role that the government itself will play not only on behalf of the shareholders but on behalf of the Canadian public.

One of the problems involves our inability, as shareholders in Canadian corporations to keep these corporations Canadian owned. When Canadian corporations are investing in trust companies, investment companies or making other forms of investment, we should be advised whether they are investing in Canada or investing in foreign owned corporations. It is interesting to note that Canadians have invested more money in the United States than United States investors have put into Canadian corporations in the last ten years. This would indicate there is some reluctance on the part of the investing public in Canada to share in the development of Canadian corporations or to acknowledge they have a role to play in that development.

It is 34 years since this act has been before us for major revision. Ten years ago, when four or five people were running the branch there was not much need for an 80-page act to enable them to deal with this operation, which was very small, inefficient, ineffectual. In Canada only a very small part of our corporate development has been brought about through use of the letters patent procedure. Most of the incorporation necessary has been done through special acts of Parliament. Over a period of years several members of this party—latterly, quite a number of us—have become interested in this incorporation procedure particularly as it affects finance companies, trust companies and insurance companies. The minister is now proposing to turn over to the companies branch authority to set up trust companies, finance companies and insurance companies by legislation.

Many of us are concerned about this policy. We are not opposed to companies being set up by letters patent. What we are opposed to is the absence of proper machinery to ensure a number of safeguards along lines already adopted in the banking field and in the insurance field generally. No agency has been established with power to determine whether a new finance company, for example, is needed, what role it would play and whether it would be Canadian owned. No account is being taken of the investment program or policies of such a company. What the government is saying amounts only to this: Because a fuss has been made in the House about foreign ownership by a limited number of hon. members, these matters will be taken out of parliamentary jurisdiction under the special acts and placed under general legislation. As I have said, we have no particular objection to that. Indeed, we have recommended such a course on a number of occasions. Surely, though, the government must provide some kind of machinery to satisfy some of the criticism which has been raised by the general public with relation to the finance companies, in particular.

Over the years it has been interesting to hear members of Parliament argue that it is necessary for Parliament to control the Canadian banking structure. For years members of the Social Credit party have contended that all banking should be in the hands of the Bank of Canada and that the Bank of Canada should be controlled by the government. Most of us agree that the Bank of Canada should play a dominant role in the banking structure and all of us, I believe, acknowledge that all banking in Canada should be Canadian-controlled—that only 10 per cent of any banking institution may be owned by foreign interests. Yet we have allowed the proliferation of loan companies, trust companies and insurance companies without any such reservations until thousands of these institutions are in operation in Canada today.

What has been done about these institutions? Over the years complaints have been made by members of Parliament on all sides that the loan and trust companies were charging exorbitant interest rates, up to 28 per cent a year. They pointed out what a terrible thing this was when the banks could only charge 6 per cent. What happened? Did Parliament reduce the interest rate which could be charged by the trust and loan companies, bring them to the level of the banks at 6 per cent? No. The decision was made to remove the ceiling from the rate chargeable by the banks and allow the banks to catch up with the loan companies. We have not stopped that process yet.

It is my opinion that authority to incorporate a trust company or a loan company is as good as a licence to print money. We have seen representatives of such companies come back to Parliament after as little as three years and ask for amendments to their charters allowing for capital increases from $5 million to $20 million. As I say, incorporation amounts to a licence to print money. The capital expansion some of these companies have been able to achieve in a short period is fantastic.

The minister has indicated he is concerned about this. He is concerned, all right—concerned to the extent that these companies must report along with everybody else. But does he take into account the fact that they occupy a different position from other corporations inasmuch as they play a large role in setting the pattern of the daily lives of many of our citizens? These are the companies which have offices down the street identified by little signs offering immediate loans. A former member of Parliament called them friendly people to do business with. Many of the workers and farmers of this country drop in from time to time, and are charged exorbitant interest rates. Is the minister interested in this aspect? Is he interested in controlling the trust and loan companies? I am not sure. I would think he is not. There is no doubt the minister intends to accumulate information. But what use does he intend to make of it?

If there is any field in which the federal government can take credit for having done a good job over the years it is in the field of insurance. A number of inspectors of insurance have done excellent work in this area. The last two inspectors, in particular, have done an excellent job. I believe they would tell the minister they do not have the power to deal with the aspects of this problem to which I referred a few moments ago—indeed, that such power should only be exercised jointly by Parliament and the inspector of insurance. On a number of occasions the inspector has told the committee that he did not wish to take responsibility for deciding whether or not a particular type of insurance company should be authorized to do business in a new field without Parliament having some say in the matter.

Today, without any provision having been made in the legislation to enable the inspector of insurance to take on the responsibility of others, it is proposed to turn over the insurance field to a branch of the minister's department. I would point out that this is not without interest to some who are outside the Canadian investment sphere, people who know that a licence to issue insurance in Canada is a valuable asset, one which has been eagerly sought by foreign-owned corporations.

The minister has admitted to some extent that there is a difference, in the need for disclosure of the operations of a large corporation as opposed to those of small industries. I think he would agree that when a company reaches the size of the Canadian Pacific Railway there is need for public disclosure very similar to that which arises in the case of large public corporations. Air Canada is required to make certain disclosures since it is a crown corporation. I am sure the minister would agree that since CP Air is in the same field of transportation any disclosures made by that corporation, even though it is privately owned, exercise the same kind of influence on the Canadian public as disclosures made by a public corporation.

So, I think there is this kind of class to which I have referred, a class to which I am becoming more and more sympathetic. I have talked to farmers who find themselves having to incorporate for various reasons under Canadian law, and the amount of work they have to do in supplying information to the government almost demands the services of a full time accountant. Although the total amount of money involved is very small, the same cannot be said for the number of government agencies that are demanding information from our farmers.

My brother tells me that every month he is asked to fill in a form for his two hired men for unemployment insurance purposes. Every month he has to send in his contribution for these two employees. He has told me that he would be quite happy to make a blanket payment either at the first of the year or at the end of the year and have the government do the bookkeeping, but he has been told this is not possible. He also thinks that the Canada Pension Plan contributions should be paid by way of a lump sum to the government, which would relieve him of monthly bookkeeping on behalf of the government.

It is these kind of inquiries that I think adversely affect some of the very small companies that incorporate for other reasons, companies whose influence upon the pricing of Canadian commodities is nil. Although this information might be of assistance to some, demands for information are becoming oppressive in number and people are becoming disillusioned because either they cannot understand the demands or meet the demands made upon them. Unless these demands do serve some purpose, surely we as legislators must give some consideration to the problems encountered by this particular class of people.

Over the past few years the New Democratic Party has been as concerned as anybody about the problem the minister is attempting to solve by the introduction of Bill C-4. We decided that any review of prices and profits must be a public review, and as a result of the review the general public must be placed in a position to take some action.

The other day we had a report from the minister's department on Imperial Oil, and this information has been made public to a certain extent. An investigation of Imperial Oil was made in Sudbury which revealed that Imperial Oil is not really a Canadian company, as many of us thought, but is owned by Standard Oil of New Jersey. This company owns oil wells, oil leases and oil exploration companies. It controls the largest oil pipe line in Canada, as well as a large number of oil refining facilities. It owns a large amount of real estate in such towns as Sudbury.

Instead of selling gasoline to the retailers at the wholesale price in the Sudbury area, this company sold them gasoline on a consignment basis and received payment on delivery to the retailers' tanks. So what it amounts to is that we have Imperial Oil—Standard Oil of New Jersey—supplying Canadian produced gasoline to consumers in Sudbury, charging them 4, 5 or 6 cents more than the price in other areas, and at the same time telling the small branch operators that unless they play ball they will be out of business in a few days since they are but consignees of the company.

What has the minister's department done about this situation? This information is available to the minister. We have stated that this information should be publicized; that this kind of hearing should be held in public so that the general public are made fully aware of the facts. I think everyone in Sudbury should be made aware that by buying Imperial Oil products they are, in effect, cutting the throats of the small operators further down the road who are pseudo-entrepreneurs in the buying and selling of gasoline for automobiles.

I should like to know whether we have set up machinery that will make available to the public the fact that Imperial Oil treat their operators as hired hands that sell gasoline on a consignment basis. I think if we are going to influence prices and tackle the problem of price increases in Canada, we shall have to do much more than we have.

The article that I read did not indicate whether any fine had been imposed on Imperial Oil. I presume none was. If you really wanted to make Imperial Oil pay a fine that would hurt, you would have to levy a fine of $100 million, perhaps $500 million, I do not know. I often wonder why we do not levy a fine that is commensurate with the profit that has been made by what we would consider to be an unfair practice. All we do is charge something like $25,000, a sum that would not even pay the liquor bill of the officers of Standard Oil of New Jersey, let alone be a deterrent.

Although I am sure the type of disclosure for which we are asking will remedy some situations, we have not tackled the subject in which the general public is interested, namely the establishment of the sort of agency that has been set up in the United States to control mergers and monopolies. We have not passed such legislation in Canada, but people in the United States believe that to some extent they are now protected by legislation against monopolies. The Canadian people are not so protected. They are not even protected in cases where the monopolies are U.S. controlled and owned.

We have been fighting in private members' hour mainly against the proliferation of insurance companies and the broadening of their operations. We have been interested in how trust companies should develop their operations, what kind of policy an investment company should adopt, and so on. On several occasions when we dealt with these companies directly we were able to commit them to exercise a certain amount of Canadian preference; even though the parent company in the U.S. might put up all the money, they would sell at least 50 per cent control in the company to members of the Canadian public after a specified period of time.

This commitment was guaranteed by the legislation, which usually provided that the directors of the company would normally be resident in Canada; that their avowed purpose would be to establish a Canadian arm that was separate from the parent corporation in the United States. For example, we were able to do this in the case of United Accumulative Fund Distributors and two other companies. I would suggest that the amount of investment being made in Canada is indicative of the fact that Canada, as far as corporations are concerned, is a good place to do business.

If we put on some restrictions we may find we have not established a method of buying Canada back but we will slow down the rate of takeover of our economy by United States corporations. We will also establish incentives to Canadians to buy into industries which they know are Canadian and will expand in Canada. This will give them an opportunity to advance and progress.

It seems to me the minister has gone part way by this piece of legislation in correcting a number of faults that have existed in the company's branch legislation. Certainly, in my opinion this branch has not enjoyed a good history in Canada. It has not done any of the things being done in other countries by similar legislative bodies to protect national identity. It has done nothing to prohibit mergers and takeovers, and as a result the public interest has not been served. This branch has not been able to supervise companies which suffer financial difficulties. As a result, shareholders and those interested are not made aware of those problems which could have been solved had a Canadian securities commission been in existence. Such a commission might have done some of the work the minister I am sure considers will now be done by the company's branch.

Perhaps this will be the case when the minister brings forward the legislation on which he is now working. The minister has gone part way in rectifying some of the mistakes of the past. I only wish he would indicate that he is as concerned as some of us have been about the legislation he is now removing from our books, and that by doing so Canadian identity will be improved. Perhaps he will make an effort similar to that of the Minister of Finance (Mr. Benson) as indicated by his white paper. In this way, Canadians will not only be encouraged to buy into Canadian corporations but into companies outside Canada. Foreign investors should be penalized if they do not establish structures that will eventually, under the terms of their letters patent, become totally Canadian owned. The trouble Canada has found itself in—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. I am sorry to interrupt the hon. member but his time has expired. Is there unanimous consent to allow the hon. member to continue?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Peters: I was going to conclude by saying that the only difference between the legislation of other countries and Canadian legislation is that the main theme in other countries is the development of nationally owned corporations. In most cases they have legislation restricting the voting stock to nationals holding more than 50 per cent of the stock. In Canada we have not yet taken that step. Until we do we will not be happy when reading on the financial pages of our major newspapers about foreign takeovers of major industries. We will not be happy about figures published in respect of the control of major industries in Canada by foreign owners without any indication of an opportunity in the future for Canadians to control these companies.

Mr. Steven Otto (York East): Mr. Speaker, this is an opportune time for the introduction of this bill. There are two things involved. First, we have reform of our taxation procedures as embodied in the white paper on taxation. This is very important to corporate structures as well as to the wide distribution of shares, profits and so on. If we have a faulty corporate structure, then the ideas expressed in the white paper on tax reform will not work. There is a great demand and need at the present time for reform of our laws regarding corporate structures. It seems that most of the people who want reform do not want change. This creates a great difficulty. We have thousands of experts who are knowledgeable in the old ways of doing things. No one is quite sure what the new way will be. Consequently, the old order has loyal friends and the new order has lukewarm friends at best.

It has been said that the minister has not gone far enough. I am sure he would like to go a lot further, but the minister has already gone further than his advisers have suggested. Like all presidents of corporations, I am sure the ministers are advised by experts. They suggest the minister should not go too far because the business community is very powerful and it should not be encouraged to move to southern climates. The bill itself is an indication that the minister will go a lot further. I suggest he could have gone further now but I am pleased that he has gone as far as he has.

Let us review the corporate image. I agree with hon. gentlemen opposite, especially those in the N.D.P., that most people picture a corporation as an individual who is corpulent, wearing a top hat, tuxedo and bow tie, and having dollar signs instead of eyes and ears. It is surprising how many Canadians have given personalities to corporations.

The corporate structure is the only feasible or workable method of participating in enterprise as it has developed in the world up to this point. This is a continuation of the English business community which created a personality without personal characteristics for corporations. In this way, people can invest money with limited liability. A corporation is nothing more than a group of investors who have limited their liability and act as an individual. It is for this reason the United States has become extremely powerful. This corporate structure has made great nations in this world. The lack of a corporate structure has been the nemesis of many nations. I have in mind France, particularly. It has never adopted the corporate structure method. The United States, England, Canada and Germany, to a great extent, as well as Japan, have accepted this system. It is still a good system, and I dare anyone to suggest something different which would accomplish the same thing.

There is a presumption that a corporation has a conscience. The late hon. Mr. Winters said that a corporation was expected to act as a good Canadian citizen. Of course, it is impossible for a corporation to act at all. For this reason, the conduct of corporations must be regulated to a great extent. Because a corporation has no conscience, it will make the last dollar wherever it can and it does not care how it makes it. That is taken for granted because a corporation has no ethics, no morals or personality. We recognize that corporations must be controlled and regulated, yet allowed to function within these regulations. We cannot presume that corporations are going to behave in any one way. They will behave in accord with their purpose, and that is to make money through a limited corporate structure.

I should like to deal with the item of information. There has been a great deal of repercussion from this provision. I am sure the minister has had a great kick-back on the question of information, the financial information. I agree with this bill entirely. Whether the company be private or public, I cannot see the reason that it should hold certain parts of its activities secret. It deals under a public licence. It limits its liability under public law. If the officers of the company want secrecy, they can work entirely as individuals and be liable for everything they are worth. If they do not take advantage of the corporate structure, then they do not have to inform anyone. But I do not think they should give us the argument that certain information is very valuable to them and that they do not want their competitors to know about it. This is nonsense. The telephone books are full of the names of espionage agencies which will tell anyone the real worth of a company or person despite the credit ratings that are published and despite the financial statements.

There are many worth-while industrial espionage agencies which will give the financial standing as well as information concerning the habits, good and bad, of the directors of a company. Any information which would possibly be of value is open to scrutiny. If, indeed, information were secret, we would not have all these successful agencies which supply this information and make a good deal of money doing so. I do not believe there is a good argument that companies and corporations, private and public, which depend upon the law for certain protection should try to take advantage of another phase of the law by saying they do not have to give certain information. I can see no justification for that. I believe it is an argument concerning secrecy, and the argument that secrecy must be maintained because of competition is nonsense.

The minister has attempted to deal with the second phase of corporation law, that having to do with insider trading. This, of course, is one of the faults in our corporate structure. If we intend that our tax reform measures are to be successful, if we intend that our corporations are to grow and if we intend that the Canadian public should invest in shares of these corporate structures, we must make sure the shareholders are given an even break. They are not given an even break today under the Canadian corporate structure. As has been pointed out by Professor John Porter in one case, and Mrs. Marjorie Keller recently, about 85 per cent of all our large corporations are controlled by a limited number of people, indeed 180 families at the moment. We have the tightest establishment in the world. Mind you, there is an establishment in Germany which is a family establishment. The Germans have a consaguinal family system which includes uncles, aunts, cousins and so on. If Mr. Krupp wanted to pass the business on to a member of the family, he had 413 heirs whom he considered to be family. Out of the 413 there would probably be one who would be able. In Canada, however, we think of the family as a conjugal matter and therefore consisting of sons and daughters. This limits us very much.

I have no particular quarrel with the establishment, provided it has ability and is fluid; but it is not. Our establishment does not depend on ability or success. Indeed, many members of the so-called élite—not so-called because it is actual—have not been successful. But they have been pure. Purity is the most important part of our establishment. You may never have a divorce. Once you have had one you are finished in the establishment. You may fail in business. I know one who has been bankrupt three times and is back in business. You must have a family which goes back at least 400 years. I recall discussing this matter. E. P. Taylor was never quite a member of the establishment because his father was a brewer. That was not far enough. You must go back at least four generations, and that makes you acceptable.

There is also an establishment in the United States, but it is fluid. If you are successful, you are in; if you are not successful, you are out. This is not the case in Canada. There is no new blood flowing into the corporate structures. This is what we are dealing with in respect of insider trading. The minister has tried to regulate this. There is an assumption that all transactions take place on the stock exchange. For instance, it is assumed that if I were to buy shares I would buy them there. But, no, control of shares is decided in clubs. It is not even polite to own your own shares. You say to Joe, a friend of yours, "You take about 7,000 of these shares and hold them for me and I will do the same for you." This is done in Toronto in three clubs. There is the National Club and the York Club. Perhaps it is not done in the York Club because it is not polite to discuss business there.

Unless there is included in this bill, either directly or indirectly, a rule to restrict insider trading, even the friendly arrangement, we will not get very far. I think it is necessary to have some control, at least in the form of information, so that Canadians who are investing in Canadian companies will know that their investments are not going to go down the drain merely because the people at the top want to make a quick buck on a share transaction. I think the emphasis should be on a good, productive investment and not on a quick gain. The history of Canadians especially—and it is not their fault but that of our corporate structures—reveals that they would rather invest in penny mining stock, even though they know that 99 cents on the dollar will go into bridle path post roads and promotion rather than the development of the property. They should put their money in a good investment which would produce over a time. This is not the Canadian way because our Canadian structure does not guarantee this.

Then, we come to the question of proxies.

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): Mr. Speaker, before the hon. gentleman leaves the point of insider trading I wonder whether he would answer a question.

Mr. Otto: Yes.

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): In view of the fact that all listing in respect of insider trading would have to be done in Ottawa, and in view of the hon. member's strictures concerning Toronto, would he contemplate that the scene of operations be transferred to the Rideau Club?

Mr. Otto: No. The hon. gentleman did not quite understand what I said. I said that I agree with the purpose of the bill, but if it merely deals with the recorded transfer of shares it is of no value because there are the unrecorded transfers. It would be the gentleman's agreement made at the Rideau Club. That club is not that effective in this business. Let us say at the National Club. This is what we must control. This has been done in other legislation by the inclusion of the words "directly or indirectly". If the department has any evidence that a corporation is controlled by a certain individual, they can assume he has control and let him prove he has not.

Getting back to proxies, I think the proxy vote is one of the bad elements of our corporate structure. Anyone who has had anything to do with corporations as a shareholder will know that he will receive a proxy from the directors and be asked to sign it. In this way, he will allow someone else who will attend the meeting to vote for a certain director. What is not prohibited by the act, and what we do not all know, is that the present directors of the company, the people who now control the corporation, can send out proxies at the cost of the corporation. First of all, they know who the shareholders are and they have their addresses. They send out proxies at the company's expense, and it is almost certain that they will be re-elected because if a stranger to the board of directors disagreed with the choice of directors and wanted a new board of directors, first he would have to get the list of shareholders. This bill certainly improves the situation by providing only 20 days during which directors may be elected, and any shareholder can get a list of shareholders. This is a new provision.

If I wanted a new and efficient board of directors to be appointed, I would have to obtain the list of shareholders and at my own expense send them the proxies. My chances of getting the directors I wanted elected would not be good, whereas the existing board of directors can send the proxies out at the company's expense and it is certain that they will be re-elected.

Then, we have this fatherly distribution of directorships. Not long ago, a late senator gave 12 directorships to his son as a wedding present. It is difficult to comprehend how this can be done, but this is what happened in all likelihood. The senator said to a friend: "Look, my friend, my son, Jim, is getting married and I would like to do something for him. How about putting him on the board of your company?" His friend said: "All right. I have known Jim since he was knee high to a grasshopper". Of course, Jim has never been in the business, and in fact he had hardly been through law school, but on his wedding day he receives 12 directorships. That was a nice present.

A director does not receive a large salary because he only gets $500 a year. One wonders at the eagerness of people to become directors of companies, but there is a side benefit in being one. A director decides the time when the next distribution of shares will take place and who is to subscribe to them. Someone has to write: "I, John Doe, will take 100,000 shares at $10 a share". He does not even have to invest a nickel because the shares are not yet issued. So, he puts down his name and has the right to get a certain number of shares as a director. Then, he can sell the rights to those shares. When the directors meet they ask whether everyone has disposed of the rights to their shares, and everyone agrees. The shares are then issued. So, although they have not invested a nickel, they make a lot of money for themselves. That is the great plum in being a director.

There is a good reason behind the U.S. law which requires that 50 per cent of the directors come from within the corporation, that is people who make their living from the company. These are production managers, advertising managers and distribution vice-presidents. They are the people who make their living from the company and who want to make sure that the company functions. In our case only one man, the president, makes his bread and butter from the company, and 90 per cent of the directors are not at all interested in the corporate structure. Therefore, when we talk about proxies it would be a good idea for the minister—and I urge it upon him—to add a provision to the act that if the present directors or any shareholders send out proxies, they will be paid for by themselves. In the alternative, anyone who puts up a list of directors can send out proxies at the cost of the corporation. But you cannot have it both ways because it will not work. You will have a succession of the same directors over and over again and you will continue to have the same problem which exists today, that of an inefficient corporate structure.

In conclusion, I would like to congratulate the minister for presenting this bill. I think it is long overdue. I am sure he is aware of the failings of our corporate establishment, and I trust he will be able to continue to amend this act as quickly as possible in order to make our corporations workable and profitable, thus putting an end to the constant belittling of our corporate image. There is no reason for it. In this modern world we can only act under a corporate system, and if we keep lashing at our corporations because of faulty regulations, which are not their fault, we will not be doing our country any good. But if we word our regulations in such a way as not to give leeway to corporations to do something which Canadians believe should not be done, then we will solve the problem raised by an hon. member who said that Canadians would rather put their money into U.S. investments than Canadian. I would do the same, and I would advise all hon. members to do so also because under the U.S. corporate structure shareholders are protected. They are assured that the best people direct the companies, that the Federal Securities Exchange Commission will protect their investment, and also that they do not have to depend on a limited number of self-perpetuating directors to run their companies.

If they invest in a Canadian company, they will be almost 100 per cent certain that it will be a family company using their money and that they will have absolutely no control over the conduct of that company.

Mr. G. W. Baldwin (Peace River): Mr. Speaker, after listening to the hon. member for Timiskaming (Mr. Peters) and the hon. member for York East (Mr. Otto) I think that the course which this debate has taken indicates that a much better method should have been adopted for dealing with this issue rather than the one that has been taken here. Obviously what the hon. member for York East and the hon. member for Timiskaming were saying, and to which there was agreement from at least one member, was that there were defects, that there had been irregularities, that there probably have been frauds and abuses of the corporate structure. It is essential, therefore, that there should be some means of dealing with this situation. But the divergence of opinion shows that in doing as he has done, the minister, together with his colleagues, the minor gods brooding on the top of Mount Olympus in the shadow of the major god, has handed down his divine judgment on just how we should deal with these problems. This way of acting has not made it possible for the House to discuss this matter thoroughly, and this is an essential condition for the passage of good legislation.

Surely, the legislative process might have been involved to bring about the appointment of a committee, with the fullest possible terms of reference, before the bill was actually introduced. Such a committee would have provided an opportunity for debate and discussion with people from all areas of our society who were involved and concerned in this matter, including the corporate people themselves and their representatives. So if it were established, as it should have been some time ago, this committee might have brought to the House and to the government its views, after a wide open discussion and national debate which I think is essential, and recommended the terms of a statute. I think this is a procedure which could be adopted far more often. We hear a lot of rumblings today about the parliamentary system, its value and benefit. In my humble opinion, we do not seek the opportunity to make the best use of this system, and I think this is a typical illustration.

It might well be that in such a committee we would find divergencies. I might find myself parting company with the hon. member for York East in certain of his views, although he seems to have an adequate knowledge of the corporate structure. I might find myself in distinct opposition to the hon. member for Timiskaming. However, the public would have had an opportunity to peer through the plate glass window—of Parliament and watch the formulation of proposals. The whole parliamentary system would have been involved.

The minister, anticipating objection to this particular measure in the form it has taken, has attempted, in the way that honourable and learned members who belong to the same profession as he and I, to rebut anticipated objections. At page 706 of Hansard, in the course of a lengthy preliminary statement, the minister is reported as follows:

> I can hardly believe that in this day and age they—

And, here he means people who would object to the proposals

> —want the government of the land to stand beyond the reach of the criticism of the citizens; that they want to allow the government of the land to take decisions that affect us all on the basis of information not available to the public.

The minister may correct me, but it seems to me he has the opportunity to have the last say, at least at this stage of the proceedings. He may assert that there are other statements in his speech which go beyond that but I think that here he is anticipating the objections which may be taken. I submit that this is a weak, insipid and illogical basis on which to rest legislation which gives such great authority to this government.

If the minister were to some extent honest about this he would admit that he is a young and ambitious minister. I have nothing against youth and ambition. I only wish I could have youth back without ambition! The minister and his ambitious departmental establishment seek to add to their already substantial power. He is a member of a government which has already obtained great authority and which seeks to make itself an even more powerful government. This bill, together with several companion measures dealing with financial institutions, indicate the power the government seeks. The Investment Companies Act, which is still to come forward, was taken to pieces in the other place the last time it was presented. According to my information, the government intends to bring it back, basically in its original form,—I cannot accept the minister shaking his head at this time—in the belief that having passed it through this House, the senate will be compelled to accept it as a bill which has been passed by this body.

In my opinion, these measures all form part of a rather devious scheme of the government which would potentially have the effect of intimidating corporations both large and small, compelling them to fall in line with whatever the government may wish from time to time.

Let me make it quite clear, Mr. Speaker, that there is no doubt, as I said before, that there is ample room, ample need and a requirement for the improvement of the corporations Act and many of the other statutes which govern the incorporation and operation of other corporate bodies under federal jurisdiction.

But the over-all effect of this bill is to place in the hands of a government of partisan politicians authoritarian rights which I am convinced can be and will be exercised from time to time for political purposes. Of course, there have been instances in the past of improprieties and wrongs committed which resulted in losses to individual shareholders and I suppose this will happen again. There has been fraud, inadequate information and failure to take action at the appropriate time to prevent such losses. But I submit that it would be possible to cure these instances of company iniquity by other means, and it was not essential for this government to seize to itself the powers they have sought to swell themselves up to the proportions of Big Brother, peering, poking or threatening to do the things I have mentioned.

The Minister of Justice (Mr. Turner) and others have talked solemnly about the right to privacy. What a farce this contention is now revealed to be in the light of the various corporate statutes which this government is seeking to have amended at this session. What we have is big government becoming ever bigger, with more employees, more bureaucracy and the everswelling establishment.

As I sit back and watch the operations of this government I can only say, "God help the poor individual". There will be little place left for him in our society by the time the present administration is finished with its various proposals. In every session we find more and more of the rights and freedoms of individuals being circumscribed. It would be bad enough even if this were a government which was doing something to bring about the just society, what my friend from Calgary North (Mr. Woolliams) would probably call the red herring which was dangled before some of the electors of Canada. The situation would be bad enough, even if it were a government trying to do something about the ever-increasing problems of rapid urbanization and all its ancillary problems, a government really making some substantial effort to tackle the environmental problem of pollution and all the other problems and difficulties facing our society today. Even if it were trying to do something, making some effort, I would still be unhappy. But I am even more concerned about giving these powers to a government which is doing nothing. I say that we are in danger of giving a great deal more power to a government which obviously seeks to exercise that power for the sake of power alone.

In proof of this, Mr. Speaker, I could list some of the bills which are on the order paper. If they were relative I could quote the clauses in the bills which the government has cited as part of their legislative fare for this session. However, it would take too much time and in any event I would probably be out of order. I shall reserve that pleasure for another day, Mr. Speaker.

At page 709 of Hansard, in a speech dealing with a question of the investigative rights being taken by the government or at least by an emanation of the government, the minister says that since 1950 the department has received only 11 formal requests for inspection. In other words, there have been only 11 requests for inspection over a period of 20 years. The minister went on to say that there had been a number of informal complaints but he did not indicate whether these informal complaints had any substance to them and ended up by saying, "that the inspection was useful in showing that suspicions of irregularities or misconduct were groundless and baseless."

For some reason or other, Mr. Speaker, despite what the minister mentions in his own speech, there is obviously a very limited need for the kind of investigative opportunity he seeks to obtain. Nevertheless, the procedures must be altered to allow the minister and other government people almost unlimited opportunities for these fishing expeditions.

In my view there is no doubt that the proposals would give the government an opportunity to harass and destroy corporations which might have angered or annoyed the government, a government of partisan politicians. This is a situation we should be very careful about, particularly in the light of the record of this particular administration.

My hon. colleague from Edmonton West (Mr. Lambert) has dealt with a number of provisions of the legislation. I want to limit my specific discussion now to clause 11 which gives almost unlimited power and right of investigation.

The Financial Times is certainly not a periodical which can be said to be unfriendly to this government, but they have taken a look at this situation. In the editions of November 10, 17 and 24 there are statements and editorials which bear clearly and succinctly on the point I am making. My friends on the other side of the House and others may say that this particular publication speaks for business. Probably it does, but there is nothing wrong in having a publication which speaks for businessmen. Most of us are, or at some time have been, in business. Most people are in some form of business and many who are not would like to be in business—except if they have read the white paper on taxation. Merely because a man is a businessman that does not mean that he is free from the bad habits to which other individuals may be subject. There are defects in societies as well as in individuals, and corporations are composed of businessmen who are individuals. Those individuals are all subject to the frailties of human nature. When those individuals are combined together, their combined frailties can sometimes create more danger and havoc than would be possible for any ordinary individual.

I do not think we should assume that merely because a person is carrying on a business or merely because a corporation is carrying on a business, that that person or corporation is thereby to be condemned automatically and subjected to unwarranted and unjustified investigation and interference. That should not be permitted unless a prima facie case can be made.

May I now read from the editorial of the Financial Times of November 10, which reads in part:

> The federal government's bill to revise The Canada Corporations Act has been lying around since last May and will soon be coming up for examination by a committee of the House of Commons. It needs a drastic overhaul. In its present form it is intolerable not only to business but to every Canadian with a concern for civil liberties....
> Some of the most objectionable proposals are outlined in the report on page 3, and we hope they will be widely studied. Many of them can be met with quite simple amendments, but there are two fundamental flaws in the draft sponsored by Mr. Basford as Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs.
> The first is the almost unrestricted power Mr. Basford wants for himself and the bureaucrats of the combines branch who report to him. Without any outside check beyond the approval of the government-appointed Restrictive Trade Practices Commission, Mr. Basford (or any ambitious politician who may succeed him) is authorized to 'investigate' any company whom he may choose to suspect of doing something wrong or damaging the interest of even one shareholder.
> 'To investigate' means to provide a team of bureaucrats with legal sanction to enter any premises, seize, examine and copy any documents it wants; examine any witnesses it likes under oath; search, prod and probe as long as it wishes for anything it may hope to discover....
> To give such powers as this to a minister and his bureaucracy smacks of a totalitarian regime, not a democracy. In the hands of an unscrupulous government they could be used to threaten, harass or destroy any company which happened to incur a minister's displeasure. It is unthinkable that Parliament should accept them in their present form.
> The second thing basically wrong with Mr. Basford's bill is that it virtually invites any shareholder to harass and disrupt any company at the expense of all the other shareholders without risk to himself. It is a charter of irresponsibility for every nut and crank who enjoys making a nuisance of himself....
> The federal bill seems to have been drafted on the assumption that every unhappy shareholder is being victimized and that every company director is a criminal. It ain't necessarily so. And the danger of the assumption is that honest men will be deterred from becoming directors rather than face so many almost impossible duties under the threat of going to jail.
> The Corporations Act needs revising. The purpose behind the revision is right. But the end can never justify the means Mr. Basford is proposing.

A good case can be made for allowing a powerful investigative function to be exercised, not by government, but by the courts or a division of the courts with jurisdiction to deal with problems of this kind. I know that the courts are also subject to the frailties of human nature. But the judicial process is still sound and there is a court of appeal. With the introduction of provisions involving a limitation on costs it may be possible for those who have legitimate grievances to have these matters examined. I do not think it is beyond the ingenuity of the minister and his officials to draft proposals which are acceptable, so that real and potential irregularities which may occur will be subject to examination. That examination should not be conducted under the provisions of this bill; neither should this government be given the powers it is seeking in the bill. My remarks would apply to any government, but particularly to this one.

Mr. Otto: Will the hon. member permit a question. The editorial the hon. member read stated, I think, that civil liberties are being denied to corporations, or will be denied if this bill passes. Does the hon. member support the theory that a corporation is entitled to civil liberties, or does he say that individuals only are entitled to civil liberties?

Mr. Baldwin: Mr. Speaker, clearly, in the first instance, the answer is that a corporation is composed of individuals. I meant to make that point clear. I do not deny that there is a right to investigate, but I object to the way the government is proposing to do it. We should not put so much power into the hands of government and government officials. That is my primary objection. There is a good case no doubt for relief and reform, but I object to the end result the passage of this bill will entail. Perhaps this government will be replaced by another, who knows. Who knows what the situation in this respect may be in the next year or the next decade. All too often we have seen the tragic example of governments saying to their people, "We are only adopting these powers in theory; we may never use them, and we will certainly never abuse them."

All too often we find that governments break their promises. At the same time I say that if more care and thought had been exercised, and proper attention paid to due processes of law, it would have been possible for the government to bring in appropriate amendments. I agree with hon. members who have spoken before; we could have had a completely new corporations act. That could have been the subject of examination by committee. The Committee could start ab initio, bring forward proposals for legislation based on needs, requirements, knowledge and experiences of the past, and thereby introduce a bill which would deal with the problems which have been mentioned. In such new bill I think it might be possible to devise a simple and inexpensive procedure to bring these matters before the judiciary. It might be possible to have investigations conducted by independent bodies which would work completely outside the ambit of government interference. It could be a quasi-judicial body. In any event, I do not like the powers suggested in the bill to be in the hands of a minister or at the disposal of a government.

It has become apparent in the last year or two that a significant characteristic of this government is that it seeks to take unto itself powers which should be exercised by bodies such as the courts, which have an independence which is absolutely essential if we are to secure the free, independent and non-political evaluation of certain matters. Such an evaluation is required in order to preserve a proper balance in our society where we have the mixture of the executive, legislative and judicial functions.

If, on the other hand, it appears that the courts might not have the capacity, either because of lack of facilities or overloads of work, to make these inquiries and investigations, I think it would have been preferable if we had established tribunals which would have the same degree of independence as the courts. The members of these tribunals would have the same amount of freedom as is exercised by the judiciary—freedom resulting from the terms of their appointment and tenure of office.

In saying this, I am by no means downgrading the effectiveness and the usefulness of the Restrictive Trade Practices Commission. I think these people do a very fine job, particularly having in mind the limited nature of the terms of reference given to them under the constitutional limitation which, to some extent, plagues the federal administration.

I repeat that I am becoming more and more alarmed at the trend of the government of the right hon. gentleman and his friends to arrogate to themselves, to take into their own hands, the strength and the power to unduly dominate our society. The whole thing smacks too much of a star-chamber procedure. The bill provides that there can be an ex-parte power given to direct an investigation.

The inspectors are appointed ex-parte and the order for the examination of a person is made ex-parte. A person being examined is not, as of right, entitled to counsel, as I understand the bill. In any case, counsel would not be of much assistance since the powers granted to the Commission are so broad that a witness cannot refuse to answer any question, even if it might tend to incriminate him. This is a power which our courts are loathe to grant to the prosecution, even in criminal cases of the most serious nature. An inspector appointed by the commissioner is granted the widest conceivable powers of search. It is incredible that in a country where the rule of law is supposedly respected such an inquisition should be permitted. If such powers were granted to magistrates under the Criminal Code there would be an immediate outcry, even if such powers were used for the purpose of detecting the commission of extremely serious criminal offences.

I call attention to proposed section 112D which provides for the payment of the cost of investigation. It is surely against the principles of natural justice that in all circumstances a person should pay for the investigation of his own affairs in preparation for possible prosecution, whether or not he is convicted of an offence at a later date. What about the possibility of the power being used for improper purposes? Some individual or group might propose that an investigation be held. Having conducted the investigation it might then be found there was no need at all for the investigation and, as a matter of fact, it was brought about only for the purpose of harassment. Surely, under such circumstances, provision should be made and the cost of such an investigation should be paid by the instigator. This would include the Crown. This, of course, shows the one-sided nature of this type of investigation when such power is placed in the hands of this government.

In my view, it would have been much more practical to have appointed an all-party committee of this House with the widest possible terms of reference, with power to inquire fully into this problem and propose legislation after having given an opportunity for all interested persons to appear and make their point of view known.

Mr. T. C. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): Mr. Speaker, John Kenneth Galbraith in his book "The New Industrial State" points out that since the turn of the century North American business has moved steadily from being an accretion of small business enterprise to the development of large and powerful corporations. He points out that these corporations have now become multinational in scope and that they have developed what are commonly called conglomerates that have moved into different fields of industry. They have established vertical integration. They control a product from its raw state right through to the marketing and, in some cases, the retailing of the product.

He points out that many of these gigantic corporations have incomes which exceed the budgets of some smaller nations, that they control their source of supply, that they are able to generate their own capital; they are able to virtually set their own prices and by vast advertising campaigns to largely control the buying patterns of the public. In his book Galbraith establishes the fact that on the North American continent we have now developed what he calls a corporate oligopoly with a huge technostructure that has a life of its own and that is virtually a state within a state.

He quite properly points out that in spite of all the indignation that may be generated about this development, no one in their right senses thinks that we can ever go back to the small businessman and the free enterprise economy of the nineteenth century. With mass production techniques and industrial rationalization, with a large pool of trained manpower and the research which is essential for modern industry, these gigantic corporations will continue to operate and it is needless to talk about breaking them up, as was talked about many years ago in the United States when the Sherman anti-trust laws and other legislation was passed. We must now devote our attention to ensuring that these large corporate bodies are made responsible to the public interest in one form or another. That certainly ought to be the purpose of the legislation which is now before the House.

I understand it is some 34 years since this Corporations Act was amended to any great degree. I think it is a great pity that when it does come before the House it is not going to cover a wider scope than is envisaged in the bill. The bill does propose some steps which will certainly improve the situation.

The point I want to make this afternoon, Mr. Speaker, is that a Corporations Act ought to do more than concern itself with mere corporation housekeeping. It ought to be concerned with more than merely providing for increased information and increased protection for the investor. This legislation ought also to concern itself with protecting Canada's national sovereignty and with diminishing the increased takeover of the Canadian economy by foreign investors. It is serious enough when a country is controlled by a corporate elite, that is a negation of true democracy, but when a country is controlled by a corporate elite outside its own borders, its capacity to resolve the situation is tremendously reduced. No country is truly free when the development of its economy is controlled by foreign investment. Our political democracy is curtailed when a corporate elite controls the economy of our nation. But when a foreign corporate elite has a nation in its grip we have lost any chance of building genuine social democracy and even political democracy itself is in jeopardy.

We in the New Democratic Party believe that the issue of Canadian economic and political independence is now and will continue to be the central issue of this decade. We do not think this issue can be evaded much longer. The constant drift to continentalism of past and present Liberal governments threatens to paralyze our efforts to establish a distinctive national identity in Canada. The escalating foreign control and take-over of our economy has reached alarming proportions and continues virtually unimpeded. As a result, Canada's options for the future are being increasingly closed off.

The Liberal government itself recognized this growing menace to Canadian independence. This is why under the administration of the Right Hon. Lester B. Pearson they set up a royal commission which has come to be called the Watkins Commission. That commission, consisting of some of the ablest economists in Canada, brought in its report. I shall not take the time of the House by going over the various recommendations; some of my hon. friends may do so in the course of the debate. The interesting thing is that although this report has been in the hands of the government for several years, and though it has been discussed in the press all over the country, no statement has yet been made by the government as to what it proposes to do about the recommendations—which of them it considers impracticable and which of them it considers acceptable and deserving of implementation. No statement at all has been forthcoming.

In the meantime, the situation which caused the commission to be set up has grown immeasurably more serious. The Watkins Commission pointed out that Canada was the only country in the world which allowed so much of its economy to be owned by investors outside its borders. It pointed out that some two-thirds of our economy was under foreign control. Since that time the rate of takeover has accelerated in an alarming way. The Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs (Mr. Basford) tabled an answer to a question by my hon. friend the hon. member for Waterloo (Mr. Saltsman) a short time ago showing that since 1963 some 606 corporations coming under federal jurisdiction had been bought out by foreign corporations. This is to say nothing, of course, of the hundreds of companies coming under provincial jurisdiction which have also been bought out. Many of them are major companies, long established firms which have done business in Canada and which have now been brought under the direct control of foreign corporations.

The Watkins Commission pointed out that no other industrialized nation in the world has permitted such blatant takeovers of its economy as did Canada. Nearly all the industrialized nations have imposed restrictions upon economic takeovers. Most of the countries of Europe, Great Britain and the United States itself, have imposed restrictions, in some cases severe in nature. Japan, a country which has received a great deal of United States investment since the end of the second world war, passed legislation two years ago restricting foreign investment in any industry to 49 per cent and in the case of certain key industries such as transportation and steel production, to 20 per cent. In banking, finance and the communications media no foreign investment at all is permitted.

I would point out to those who get nervous when we discuss this subject in case we might frighten off United States capital, that the Americans, who have tremendous investments in Japan, did not pack up their bags and go home. They accepted the situation, recognizing that the Japanese were justified in drawing the line and saying they could not allow their entire economy and the decision-making power of the nation to be vested in people from another country.

The Canadian government has taken no such action. We took action on the question of the banks only after one bank had been taken over. We took no action with respect to finance companies until Merrill, Lynch and Associates took over Royal Securities. We have taken no other action with respect to the acquisition of Canadian corporations by foreign investors. The Canadian government has done nothing, either because it has been cowed into submission or because it is convinced that economic absorption is inevitable. Whether the reason is cowardice or indifference I suggest the result is the same; the result is that in Canada we shall lose not only the control of our economy but eventually even the control of our decision-making power unless we stop this steady erosion of our sovereignty, this diminution of our independence.

If history teaches us anything at all, Mr. Speaker, it is that political control always follows economic control. We had an example of this not many years ago. We know that legislation was introduced by a Liberal government to make two United States periodicals, Time and Reader's Digest, virtually and legally Canadian corporations in order that they might get the benefits of being Canadian publications. The Minister of Finance at that time, Mr. Walter Gordon, has since stated publicly that pressure was brought to bear upon him and upon the government by the government in Washington which had obligations to Mr. Henry Luce and to other powerful figures in the United States. Economic control always lays the basis for political control. Once a country loses its power to make economic decisions, increasingly it loses its power to make decisions with respect to an independent foreign policy, with respect to developing its own culture and with respect to establishing its own national identity.

One of the latest signs of this which gives us concern is the talk about integration of resources in North America. I should like to refer to a meeting held in Washington by the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Mr. Greene) and Mr. Walter Hickel, Secretary of the Interior of the United States. At this meeting preliminary discussions were held with regard to an integrated energy policy for North America, and in this connection I should like to quote a report in the December 5 edition of the Globe and Mail of the press conference that the minister held in Washington:

> Asked whether this approach would lead to a substantial economic integration of the two countries, Mr. Greene replied: "Yes, I think it would."

The minister went on to say:

> If Canada had refused any economic integration with the United States for nationalist reasons, it would be no more than "a banana republic."

The minister must have got his facts back to front, because it is the banana republics that are the very ones that have succumbed to complete economic control and domination by outside investors. If we in this country succumb to the same kind of domination, although we may be a little more sophisticated and better off than some of the South America banana republics, the fact remains that we will become an economic colony of the United States.

Mr. Greene: But only if we have a weak government.

Mr. Woolliams: That is what we have now.

Mr. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): There is no argument about that, Mr. Speaker; it seems to be agreed on both sides of the House. This is why we are worried about the question.

Then the minister, according to the report, went on to say:

> It is "sufficient" for Canada to retain political control. It is not important who gets the dividends, Wall Street or Bay Street—

Mr. Greene: That is right.

Mr. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): The minister says that is right. I want to point out that it makes a great deal of difference who gets the dividends. First of all, if the dividends are paid on Bay Street, they are taxable in Canada. The companies are subject to Canadian law and to Canadian control. They are subject to the policies of the government of Canada. On the other hand, foreign investors have taken the position that they are not subject to Canadian law but to the law of the United States or whatever country within which the parent company is located.

Much more important than that, the corporation that owns an operation in Canada has decision making power. For example, it has the power to decide whether certain materials will be developed now, or left in the ground for 25 or 50 years while the company uses up resources it owns in other parts of the world; whether our natural resources will be shipped out of the country in their raw state, providing Canada with minimal employment, or whether they will be processed here, thus developing the Canadian economy and providing employment for Canadian workers; whether the price charged the parent company will return a profit to Canada and pay taxes to Canada, or whether Canadian raw material will be sold to the parent company in the United States at a price that realizes virtually no profit to Canada, thus depriving the Canadian government of revenue. That is the type of decision making power we are giving away as well as giving away control of our resources.

The fact of the matter is that the United States has been, and is, using our resources to expand its industry. From the point of view of the U.S. this is, of course, a perfectly proper thing to do. The United States has developed the greatest industrial complex in the world and requires more and more raw materials and more and more sources of energy. The closest source of those materials required to meet the needs of the expanding economy of the United States is Canada.

So, it is natural that the United States wants an integrated policy that will supply particularly those resources which are in short supply or almost entirely depleted. What this Parliament has to be concerned about, and particularly the minister who is piloting through this legislation, is whether or not our resources are going to be used first and foremost to develop and expand the Canadian economy, to provide jobs for Canadian workers and to raise the standard of living of the Canadian people, we being able to export the surplus commodities that we do not require. Such decision making power does not lie here in Ottawa on the treasury benches; more and more it is being delegated to the boardrooms of large corporations that are not located within the borders of Canada.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please.

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

SUBJECT MATTER OF QUESTIONS TO BE DEBATED

Mr. Deputy Speaker: It is my duty, pursuant to Standing Order 40, to inform the House that the questions to be raised tonight at the time of adjournment are as follows: the hon. member for Hillsborough (Mr. Macquarrie)—public service, Bilingualism—use of instant translation computers in classes; the hon. member for Calgary South (Mr. Mahoney)—broadcasting; effect of CRTC decision respecting cablevision; the hon. member for Winnipeg North (Mr. Orlikow)—combines; request for investigation of nickel price increases.

[Mr. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands).]

It being five o'clock, the House will now proceed to the consideration of private member's business as listed on today's order paper, namely public bills.

PRIVATE MEMBERS' PUBLIC BILLS

PARLIAMENTARY COMMISSIONER

PROVISION FOR ESTABLISHMENT OF OFFICE

Mr. R. N. Thompson (Red Deer) moved that Bill C-13, to establish the office of parliamentary commissioner, be read the second time and referred to the Standing Committee on Justice and Legal Affairs.

He said: Mr. Speaker, Bill C-13 is one that I have had the privilege of presenting to the House for the last seven years. It would establish in this country at the federal level the office of ombudsman. Unfortunately, the Liberal party, which has been responsible for forming past governments, has not decided to institute such an office, in spite of the fact that four years ago a parliamentary committee that studied this bill in depth unanimously recommended to the House that a parliamentary commissioner be appointed.

In the Speech from the Throne in the 1965 session, it was stated that the government would establish an ombudsman during that session. Yet the government saw fit to take no action. Many times I asked the previous Prime Minister, Mr. Pearson, as well as the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau), when the government intended to go ahead and establish such an essential office. The most recent reply was that the Minister of Justice (Mr. Turner) could very well be the ombudsman for Canada. The Minister of Justice is a very fine gentleman. I think a great deal of him and know he is very efficient and able, but it just seems to me that he has not a hope in the world of ever serving the people of his country as ombudsman. I do not say that against him personally, but because the very nature of his office makes this impossible.

Let me cite an example of my experience during my years in this house. This concerns the Department of Veterans Affairs. During session after session I have had veterans of our armed forces bring legitimate gripes and complaints as they relate pension treatment to my attention. I had one just a few weeks ago which concerned a man who applied for his release, I believe in the month of June, at which time there would be a separation or rehabilitation allowance provided him. The military forces had lost his medical file and finally located it at Kingston, although he was based at the Canadian Armed Forces base at Penhold in my constituency. It took a matter of weeks to get this medical file sent back to the place where the man was stationed and where he was to take his discharge.

In the meantime, a new regulation was passed which denied him the allowance which would normally have been his upon retiring from the force. This allowance was denied simply because his medical papers did not get back until two days after the decision had been announced that this was no longer going to be provided. Surely, this man is being discriminated against by bureaucratic regulation. I had this reconfirmed by the Minister of Veterans Affairs (Mr. Dubé) in a very definite and specific way. This man has no recourse.

I have heard some people speak critically of the office of ombudsman. I heard the Minister of Justice some time ago speak in this way. He said that we are 264 ombudsmen and we can look after the needs of people when they have complaints about the bureaucratic administration of various departments of government. This is something which is inherent in the very basic structure of government. I want to say to the Minister of Justice, who is listening at the present time, that I cannot be an ombudsman for this man because I cannot go any further. I am going to write a really tough letter to the Minister of National Defence (Mr. Cadieux) and the Minister of Veterans Affairs because I think this is something the government would never tolerate as far as the private sector is concerned.

Certainly, the injustice being done to this particular veteran, and I could name 20 of them from my files without any difficulty, should be looked at in light of the moral obligation of the government to this person. Because the government can hang its argument on some peg that relates to a legal definition in a piece of legislation or regulation passed by the department, this individual citizen, who has served his country faithfully and well, has absolutely no recourse and I can do nothing about it. I have nowhere to go to appeal except here, as I am appealing now in the hope that somehow I can convince the minister that he should overrule this decision.

I am not too critical of ministers because I know the load of administration they carry. Most of the replies that are written follow a pattern. I can almost repeat by rote the phrases used by the various departmental heads. These replies are actually written by the departmental heads and signed by the ministers who probably do not even know what is in them. This is why we need an ombudsman. I do not think it is good enough to just continue passing the buck when the government formally committed itself to this course in a Speech from the Throne, and when the Committee on Justice and Legal Affairs which dealt with this bill five years ago, unanimously adopted it. It is high time the government took some action.

Surely, the government can take a lesson from some of the provincial governments. Alberta was the first province to establish such an office. Now, we have an ombudsman in Quebec, New Brunswick and Manitoba, and other provinces intend to establish such an office. In fact the report of the commission of inquiry conducted by Mr. Justice McRuer contains one of the most profound arguments in favour of this position. The fourth chapter of that report, which is a book in itself, made such a recommendation. The commission was in favour not only of provincial ombudsmen but even municipal ombudsmen. It is also very significant that Mr. Robarts, the premier of Ontario, has committed himself to the recommendations of Mr. Justice McRuer because of the very valid and forceful arguments he put forward.

It is very interesting also, and I bring this to the attention of the Minister of Justice, that just the other day Mr. Justice Milvain brought down a ruling relating to the office of ombudsman in Alberta. The Alberta government was of the opinion that the authority of the ombudsman did not extend to the investigation of commissions of inquiry or the recommendations of such commissions. The government said this was something that did not enter into the terms of reference of the ombudsman. The ombudsman for Alberta, Mr. McClellan, asked for a legal ruling on this because he felt his own authority and effectiveness was being hamstrung by not being able to pursue the legitimate complaints of the citizens of Alberta as they related to certain things that may come within the area of such commissions. Mr. Justice Milvain ruled in favour of the ombudsman. This ruling, given just a few days ago, is very significant.

The Minister of Justice knows very well what an ombudsman is and knows very well the need for such a position. He knows how well this has worked out in Alberta, Quebec and other provinces. He ought to take the initiative and move on it. He should go to the Prime Minister and say, I cannot be the ombudsman for Canada. I cannot serve the Canadian people adequately or effectively in this position. I know that members of Parliament, while they can do a great deal of work in relation to investigating and correcting the grievances citizens may have regarding the administration, cannot do certain things and we need an ombudsman.

I am reminiscent of the last election when so much was said about the just society. The Minister of Justice ought to say to the Prime Minister that one of the most effective ways of bringing about this just society would be by giving the Canadian people an ombudsman who could look after their grievances.

I know very well the ombudsman for New Zealand, Sir Guy Powles. He has often said to me that one of the greatest benefits of his office is derived not so much from the fact that he investigates and recommends to the government and its various departments, but from the fact that he is there. This has a salutary effect upon government officials who tend to forget about individual needs. They are dealing with rulings and regulations and tend to look at cases from a legal point of view rather than from moral responsibility. The fact that an ombudsman is present has a very wholesome effect on the attitude of senior civil servants. On the other hand, it has a very wholesome effect on the general population because people who feel the government is injust in its tax policies or various decisions that affect them know they have a man to whom they can appeal without spending $30,000 on an appeal to the Exchequer Court, for example, or without having to go to the courts when they feel they cannot afford to or when it would not really be worth the effort.

Sir Guy Powles has said publicly in his report, and I believe Mr. McClellan has reaffirmed this on several occasions, that one of the greatest advantages of the office of ombudsman or, as we call it in this bill, a parliamentary commissioner, is the fact that he is there. This is good for the populace and is good for senior civil servants. Incidentally, I think it is very helpful to the ministers of the crown. Perhaps the Minister of Justice would find himself free of many petty things he has to deal with which consume his time and perhaps prevent him from devoting his attention to things that would seem to be more important.

[Mr. Thompson.]

Thus, speaking now to the members of this House, I hope that tonight we can give second reading to this bill and refer it to the committee. Then, the Committee could hear the evidence that has been gathered since it last considered this bill favourably, evidence relating to the established practice and use of this office in the provinces.

• (5:10 p.m.)

In closing, I should like to say I believe it is very important that members of this House understand that a man who is doing a real service to the people of Canada in the area of decision making, even though not commissioned to do so and not paid for it, and even though it is not really included in his terms of reference, is the Auditor General. The Auditor General, of necessity, finds himself dealing with cases which ought to belong to the office of an ombudsman. I am grateful he is there and I am glad he does this.

An hon. Member: And they cut his staff.

Mr. Thompson: I do not understand why they cut his staff. If the office of an ombudsman is not to be established, they ought to expand his staff so that at least in the areas of taxation and financial administration the people of Canada might have some recourse.

I would commend this bill to the members of this House and to the Minister of Justice. I hope the government will do something about it.

Hon. John N. Turner (Minister of Justice): Mr. Speaker, I am glad that the hon. member for Red Deer (Mr. Thompson), whom I have heard before on this very important subject, is again by the luck of the draw able at an early opportunity to bring this matter to the attention of the House.

Mr. Thompson: Lucky for whom?

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): For all of us. This is an educational process. It gives me the opportunity to express some views on the concept of this avenue of remedy against administrative decisions in a modern complicated government. The hon. member did not go so far as to define what he meant by ombudsman.

Mr. Thompson: We have talked about it many times.

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): As I understand it, what he is talking about is an independent person, one independent of the executive and independent of the legislature but one who reports to the legislature.

Mr. Thompson: Responsible to parliament.

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): Responsible to parliament and given authority and certain statutory powers to investigate matters of governmental administration, in this case federal administration, which give rise to individual grievances on the part of the citizens of this country. In other words, his terms of reference would be to review the administration or more particularly mal-administration within the ranks of the federal public service.

At the outset I want to concede that one of the threats to individual well-being in Canada is the dwarfing of individual rights compared to the growing complexity and strength of government, whether it be at the federal or provincial level. One of the thrusts, as I have tried to state before, of the Department of Justice is to seek ways to balance the rights of the individual Canadian against his government. As the hon. member said, we are faced with a situation where government has become more remote from the average Canadian. Government has become larger, more complex, more bureaucratic and perhaps more arbitrary. Certainly, it has become less sensitive. I believe it is incumbent upon this House to review continually the avenues of appeal, of redress and of remedy against arbitrariness in the governmental structure.

I am personally very concerned about the motivation behind the hon. member's bill. I was in the United Kingdom last October where I had discussions with the law officers of the Crown, the members of the Law Reform Commission that they have in England and Wales and the members of the Scottish Law Reform Commission. I took the opportunity at that time to go to Sweden where I met the Swedish ombudsman, Alfred Bexelius, on October 2. I spent four hours with him that morning. I had lunch with him and was able to return his hospitality by inviting him to dinner. As a matter of fact, I told him he was one of the famous men of the world representing what had become a very celebrated institution. I told him that the word "ombudsman" had become as familiar to people outside Sweden as the word "smorgasbord" and that the institution which he fills and which dates back to 1809 when the new constitution of Sweden was first written was something all modern governments were looking to for guidance.

As a matter of fact, there are now three ombudsmen with equal jurisdiction in Sweden because the work available for a single ombudsman has gone beyond what he was able to handle personally. When I returned to London I spent two hours with Sir Edmund Compton, the parliamentary commissioner who is responsible to the Parliament of the United Kingdom. His office has been established since 1967. I had the opportunity to discuss the institution and efficacy of the ombudsman with the attorney general of England, with the Lord Chancellor, the Solicitor General and a good many members of Parliament. I inquired of them what their views were of the institution and how it was working within a parliamentary system based upon the British tradition.

I am quite aware that the institution has become contagious. We have in Canada three provinces which now have their own ombudsman. The hon. member for Red Deer represents Alberta and he will know that Alberta is represented by Mr. McClellan, formerly the commissioner of the Royal Canadian Mounted Police. New Brunswick has an ombudsman and last year the province of Quebec established the office of Protecteur du Peuple, the citizens' protector. Now, we have three ombudsmen at the provincial level. There are ombudsmen not only in Sweden but also in the other Scandinavian countries, Denmark and Finland, as well as in New Zealand and now in Hawaii.

Mr. Thompson: Might I just remind the minister that the province of Manitoba passed legislation in this regard but the appointment has not yet been made.

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): I am half right and half wrong.

May I suggest in the comments I am going to make that there is some difficulty in accepting the precedents of other jurisdictions and that Parliament here in Ottawa ought to scrutinize the traditions under which these offices have been established in other jurisdictions to see whether they apply with equal force to Canada. In Sweden the ombudsman has almost complete jurisdiction to investigate administrative discretion. There are virtually no limits on his authority. He can review any aspect of governmental administration in the country, including military administration, ecclesiastical administration and the courts. But there are certain aspects of government in Sweden which differ substantially from our own. More importantly there is no ministerial responsibility as we know it in Canada. The ministers of the Crown in Sweden are not responsible before the legislature for the acts or omissions of their departmental officials.

The public service in Sweden is not governed by a system of subordinate responsibility whereby a man in a lower position automatically is responsible to his superior and so on through the deputy minister to a minister, but is governed instead by statutes and laws and is responsible only to themselves on the basis of the interpretation of their powers as found in the statutes and regulations.

There being no ministerial responsibility, there is no way in which the people of Sweden can challenge maladministration on the floor of their parliament. Secondly, and this is a fundamental difference, the Swedish member of Parliament has no fundamental right to voice a grievance on behalf of his constituent or of any citizen of Sweden. He cannot challenge on the floor of his Parliament a factual situation relating to a particular grievance; he is limited to challenging the principles of the law governing that situation.

I might also suggest to the House that when we are talking about the Scandinavian countries, New Zealand and the other jurisdictions that have adopted the ombudsman idea, we are dealing with small, relatively homogenous populations. As a matter of fact, those members of the House who have had the opportunity to visit Sweden know that the Swedes are such a homegenous race that they need not speak to each other. They can sit silently over a meal, say nothing, and yet instinctively know what the other thinks.

The only country of any sizeable complexity and sizeable population that has adopted the idea—

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): We should try not speaking to each other here.

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): I want to say to the hon. member that we on this side can usually predict with a fair deal of accuracy what is going to be said by members of the NDP.

In any event, the United Kingdom is the only country of substantial population and administrative complexity that has adopted the institution. I think it is important to note that in the statute setting up the parliamentary commissioner in the United Kingdom, his jurisdiction is very limited indeed; in fact, far more limited than the jurisdiction which the hon. member for Red Deer gives his ombudsman in Bill C-13. The parliamentary commissioner in the United Kingdom has no jurisdiction whatever over the courts or over any governmental agency that is non-departmental. He has no jurisdiction over local government. As a matter of fact, there is an opinion among members of the House of Commons at Westminster to the effect that if the institution of Parliamentary Commissioner is to become properly effective, if he is to have any real effective power of redress, his jurisdiction must be extended over the municipalities. Finally, he can receive no complaint from any citizen of the United Kingdom unless it is referred to him first formally by the member of Parliament from that constituency.

Mr. Thompson: No one is suggesting that we follow Great Britain.

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): I am suggesting to you that in the only country with any sizeable population in which that institution has been adopted extreme limitations have been put on the jurisdiction of that commissioner.

Another difficulty—I am trying to point these out as best I can—is that we are living in a federal state with a divided jurisdiction and shared responsibilities among federal and provincial governments. I will not be the first to point out that a good many of the complaints that would inevitably reach the office of any federal ombudsman would involve matters not within the federal jurisdiction but falling under the authority of the provinces and the municipalities. My friend, the hon. member for Red Deer, knows as well as I do that most Canadians really do not know whether a matter is a local one to be dealt with by municipal or town authorities or a matter involving the province or the federal government.

Mr. Thompson: That is no argument at all.

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): I am suggesting also that in a large geographical and territorial area like Canada it would be difficult—and I think we have to anticipate this—for any federal ombudsman to be able to see the complainant personally, review the file and render his decision. I have had a chat with Mr. McClelland, Alberta's ombudsman, and he tells me that it is essential that the volume of work never exceed what the ombudsman personally can review, that he should not operate with more than a small staff. That was echoed by the other gentlemen to whom I talked. The reason is that unless the ombudsman is personally able to review the file, and if necessary personally able to interview the complainant, then all he establishes is a second bureaucracy superimposed on the first. This is something that in a federal state, particularly a federal state with a large geographical area, we would have to be concerned with in Canada.

I also have some concern about what appeal there would be from an ombudsman's decision. The very concept of that office gives a lot of discretion, jurisdiction and omnipotence to a single man. There is no appeal from him. In the event that an ombudsman would render an adverse judgment against a citizen, to my mind any further avenue of redress would virtually be foreclosed. I remember that during the discussion of the powers of the official languages commissioner, whose powers are very similar to those of the ombudsman in Alberta, concern was expressed on the other side of the House about the powers given to the commissioner and about the fact that there was no right of appeal. Our reply was that this was not a judicial office or judicial proceeding—nor is the ombudsman—and that the commissioner's only power was the power of publicity and the power to bring the grievance to public notice and to the notice of parliament. I recall that at that time hon. members were concerned that there were no methods of appealing the commissioner's decision.

Let me look now at what the government is doing to try to remedy the situation for which the hon. member has suggested the institution of an ombudsman, what we are trying to do both by way of parliamentary redress and by way of judicial review to enhance the rights of the individual citizen against administrative decisions. First of all, we are committed to the establishment of a federal law reform commission, and I hope to be able to submit to the scrutiny of Parliament a draft of that bill in first reading within the next month. That reform commission will be charged with the review of the general terms of the criminal law and of the substantive administrative public law of this country. The throne speech also commits the government to a wide area of administrative law reform. We intend to set up a wider system of judicial review by the courts of all decisions of federal administrative boards and federal administrative tribunals. Within parliament, we have tabled in the House the report of the Special Committee on Statutory Instruments, the committee on regulations under the able chairmanship of the hon. member for Windsor-Walkerville (Mr. MacGuigan).

This committee examined the scope of delegated legislation, that is legislative power by regulation that has been delegated by Parliament to the Governor in Council or to individual ministers or departments. The committee report suggests ways whereby, first of all, Parliament should have more control over the nature of the enabling power in that statute which gives authority to make those regulations. I need only refer the House to the seventh recommendation of that special committee, where all enabling acts for regulation making authorities should be in accord with a number of principles. Those principles are set forth quite thoroughly on pages 90 and 91 of that report.

The committee suggests that the Minister of Justice should have the authority and should have the duty to review the scope of the enabling clauses to ensure that such clauses do not contain hidden privity provisions or do not contain a subjective element to allowing the department to avoid the review of the courts. The report speaks for itself, and I believe that if Parliament accepts and enacts the recommendations of the committee we will have gone a long way toward curing some of the ills of which my hon. friend complains.

The committee also recommends the establishment of a parliamentary scrutiny committee and that a new committee on regulations should be established. The recommendation is No. 19, which states that it should be a standing committee of the House of Commons; all regulations should stand permanently referred to it; it should strive to operate in an objective and non-partisan way; it should have a small membership to enable it to operate effectively; it should have adequate staff and should examine regulations on the basis of six criteria, four of which are as follows:

(a) Whether they are authorized by the terms of the enabling statute.

(b) Whether they appear to make some unusual or unexpected use of the powers conferred by the statute under which it is made.

(c) Whether they trespass unduly on personal rights and liberties.

(d) Whether they have complied with the provisions of the Regulations Act with respect to transmittal, certification, recording, numbering, publication or laying before Parliament.

The other two criteria are set forth. Hon. members who have had the opportunity of reading my testimony before that committee will know that I am committed to the principles of its report. I would hope that if we can achieve a more alert, more all-embracing system of parliamentary review—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Béchard): Order. I regret to interrupt the hon. minister but his time has expired.

Some hon. Members: Carry on.

An hon. Member: He is talking the bill out, so let him have more time.

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): I will not take too much time. I thank the House for its usual indulgence. I believe that if we are able to achieve a public scrutiny of the regulation-making power and of the regulations as they are adopted in Parliament, if we are able to achieve by way of legislation a continual, non-episodic review of our laws in this country, if we are able to give the courts wider judicial review over the decisions of administrative boards and tribunals, if we are able to make legal counsel more accessible to the citizens of this country, then I believe that by way of parliamentary and judicial remedies we will have gone a good distance, or indeed the whole of the distance toward curing the ills that the hon. member is attempting to cure.

His argument is persuasive. I have had the advantage of conversations with Sir Edmund Compton and Mr. Alfred Bexelius. I admit that one of the advantages of an ombudsman is the very fact of his presence—the fact that he is there. In gaining a reputation as the people's protector, he becomes a psychological barrier to arbitrariness; he is a safety valve. People have the idea that there is someone to whom they can turn.

I believe we can succeed in improving the scrutiny of Parliament, in enhancing the role of the individual Member of Parliament in his ability to bring a grievance of the people before this chamber, in controlling the scope of the enabling power to make regulations and in widening the legal remedies of the citizen. If we find that those wider parliamentary powers of the legislature as against the executive, and thereby the administration—wider judicial powers of the citizen against administrative tribunals—fail to do that, I admit there is a case for an extralegal and extraparliamentary remedy along the lines of an ombudsman.

I want to warn the House that procedural safeguards—and this is a type of procedural safeguard from which there is no appeal, the only remedy being publicity and report to Parliament—cannot substitute for an improvement in the scrutiny of Parliament and an improvement in our public administrative law.

Chief Justice McRuer, in the fourth volume of the second report of his monumental study of civil rights in Ontario at page 1389, says that he is not convinced that the ombudsman is one of the most urgent needs in the process of democratic government in Ontario. He had a conversation with Sir Guy Powles, the New Zealand ombudsman, who says the ombudsman is not the complete answer to all the problems of the administration of justice.

This government is going to do its best to widen the scope of parliamentary and judicial review. We are going to do our best through a broadening of the committee system, through a broadening of the avenues of grievance available to the individual Member of Parliament—who, after all, is the fundamental protector of the people of Canada—to achieve what the hon. member wants achieved. That being so, Mr. Speaker, the mind of the government is not closed on the issue. I have tried to suggest what we are attempting to do. My file is still open.

[Translation]

Mr. André Fortin (Lotbinière): Mr. Speaker, my remarks will be brief, but I feel it is my duty to support Bill C-13, sponsored by the hon. member for Red Deer (Mr. Thompson), and entitled: "An Act to establish the Office of Parliamentary Commissioner".

Mr. Speaker, I am happy to have given my place to the Minister of Justice (Mr. Turner); this has enabled me to get to know his arguments concerning Bill C-13.

I am surprised to note that the Minister of Justice whom I have always regarded as the protector of public rights, as the defender of citizens' rights and as the promoter of justice and equity even on behalf of the most humble people has not given his opinion on this bill while using the time allotted to him. In fact, he has told us in details of his trip to England and to other countries, thus proving to us that the trips he is making are more serious than those of the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau).

However, that does not tell us whether the minister agrees with the principle of Bill C-13. His arguments seem to me very weak and this leads me to believe that the bill in itself is perhaps not so bad.

Among other things, I recall an argument put forth by the minister and that surprised me, coming from a man that I have always held in high esteem. He said that the function of parliamentary commissioner might not be as necessary and desirable as might be expected at the federal level, because we have, in Canada, a federal system. True, there are ten provinces, with different needs, concepts and objectives, and the federal govenment has its own jurisdiction, in accordance with the British North America Act.

The minister said that the office of parliamentary commissioner is not as necessary and desirable as it is claimed for the simple reason that the citizens do not know from whom they must seek information and that the role of this parliamentary commissioner would only be to tell them. Now, even if the parliamentary commissioner's only role were to tell the citizens where to apply to solve their problems it would be a marked and obvious improvement on the present situation.

Besides, without playing politics, I would like to tell the minister that whether they are on the government side or in the opposition all hon. members are now considered by the citizens as social workers. In fact, people come to us and ask that we help them and represent them not only in the House, which is part of our functions, but also with the civil servants of various departments.

Personally, I have kept a record of all such requests received since my election. I have compiled them and made statistical tables. However, a study of these requests reveals that more than 80 per cent of them pertain to fields of provincial jurisdiction. I do not necessarily conclude to the inefficiency of the member of the legislative assembly, but rather that people do not really know which government is involved in a given problem. They cannot be blamed for it. In fact, governments have never actually enlightened the population in this regard. Moreover, the governmental administration is constantly expanding. It has become a mammoth that can only be stirred with great difficulty in order to draw from it equity, justice and humanity.

I remember a recent television interview with the Ombudsman of Quebec. This telecast was very instructive for me because it gave me the opportunity to realize the important role such a commissioner could play at a time where the administration of our governments gets more and more complicated.

Mr. Speaker, the argumentation of the minister is inconsistent and has nothing to do with the true situation in Canada. It is precisely because the jurisdictional fields of the various governments are increasingly overlapping that people no longer know where to go, even members of parliament. If we consider the problem of social security, economic expansion, agriculture, transportation or justice, we note that the departments are overlapping at all levels of government.

As for the citizen, he does not know where to go and when he receives a negative reply he has no resort, even if the minister denies it. He can appeal a criminal or civil case to a superior court, but he cannot appeal the decision of an official. Even if the minister told me that it can be done, he knows quite well that due to the complexity of the administration and to the fact that officials generally only perform bureaucratic work and very often unfortunately forget the human aspect, it would be difficult to obtain justice.

Since the average citizen, the poor, cannot afford to start proceedings or to appeal, we must establish the office of parliamentary commissioner and on that subject, I wish to draw the minister's attention to something that recently happened in the federal capital.

A University of Ottawa professor, Mr. Raoul P. Barbe, whom the minister probably knows, recently published a manual of administrative law which is the work of a team. An expert whose political neutrality is above any suspicion says clearly that federal and provincial administrations should tend increasingly to get closer to the people under their jurisdiction. It is also said that the relationships between those who govern and those who are governed should gain in justice and fairness.

Now, if an expert agrees that the gap is widening constantly between the administrators and the administered and, being well versed in administrative law, suggests that other solutions be tried and some imagination be shown to promote the rights of the citizens, I believe that Parliament should welcome the principle of Bill C-13, even though it might disagree with some aspects of it.

I had hoped that the minister would congratulate the hon. member for Red Deer (Mr. Thompson) for this private member's bill, recognize the principle of the proposal and admit that Canadian citizens, whatever their race, their language, their creed, their age or their resources, should be allowed to assert their rights before the federal administration.

I think that the minister could then have confirmed my previous opinion of him. It would be to his advantage to read the bill over again and think about it seriously because, the further away the federal government gets from the people, the further away the people will get from the government. The latter will then be the first loser.

In my opinion, the Canadian people and the government have a common interest in seeing to it that everyone is given justice.

[English]

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, because I should like to see this bill referred to the Standing Committee on Justice and Legal Affairs, where it can be studied much more thoroughly, I shall speak for only a few minutes. In any case, I find it is not necessary to speak at greater length; the Minister of Justice (Mr. Turner) knows our thoughts, after his sojourn in Sweden, and it is good to know we are understood.

I think the Minister of Justice made an excellent case today, as he has on other occasions, for law reform, for strengthening our judiciary, for improving our parliamentary system and for all those other ways he has in mind to protect the rights of individual Canadians. I think I speak for all hon. members of the House when I say that we welcome his commitment to the kind of program on which he is working. We wish him well.

I suggest to him that although an ombudsman would certainly not be a good substitute for the kind of thing he is proposing, it strikes me that it would be a real comfort to our people if they were to know that apart from Parliament, apart from the government, the opposition, the bureaucracy and the courts, there was an ombudsman, an independent authority to whom reference could be made. I recognize that the responsibility of such a person, even if he has a staff to help him deal with cases that come up, is a frightening one. But we have solved other problems of that kind. I think the greatest value of an ombudsman would stem from the realization in the minds of the Canadian people that there was an independent authority to which a person could go if he felt aggrieved and if he felt that the established institutions had not resolved that grievance for him.

I recognize that there are defects in this bill. As a matter of fact, even if passed the bill would not have much effect because there is no provision for an ombudsman's salary. The hon. member had to countenance that omission to get his bill accepted as a private member's bill. I noted that the minister did not object to that omission.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Béchard): Order, please. Is the hon. member for York-North (Mr. Danson) rising on a point of order?

Mr. Danson: I rise on a point of order, Mr. Speaker. I did not mean to interrupt the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles), but on behalf of all members of the House may I officially welcome a member of the Conservative front benches who has been sitting here for a long time without saying a word. I am, of course, referring to the hon. member for Saint-Hyacinthe (Mr. Ricard).

Mr. Ricard: I will make allowances for the hon. member's ignorance, Mr. Speaker.

• (5:50 p.m.)

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, I am sure that helpful remark has contributed to the debate, although I have not quite figured out how. As I started to say, there are defects in the bill. I indicated one of them. I think we do have to sort out the question of how far the ombudsman can go. Is his authority to be like that of the Auditor General, who can make recommendations but cannot put them into effect? Is he to have further authority? These are details that can be sorted out.

As for the proposition that things are different here from what they are in Britain, Scandinavia and New Zealand, of course we always have to tailor our arrangements to our own situation. These are details that can be gone into. Surely what the idea of an ombudsman calls for is not opposed to the line that the Minister of Justice is taking, but rather is an expansion of it. I hope the government will be willing to let this bill have a formal second reading so that it can go to the committee and there be considered further.

Mr. Yves Forest (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, I regret that in the few minutes at my disposal I shall not have time to discuss fully this important bill. Through the hon. member for Red Deer (Mr. Thompson) has left the House a good while ago, still I wanted to congratulate him for giving us the opportunity to study the question of establishing the office of parliamentary commissioner.

I believe that it is in 1964 only, when such a bill was introduced, that the House had the opportunity to discuss this matter and, as the hon. member who sponsored the present bill said, at that time it had been referred to the Committee on Privileges and Elections.

I believe the committee had recommended its adoption, with certain reserves. I believe that, for instance, the Canadian Bar Association and different political specialists such as Professor Rowat had also approved this project of appointing a Parliamentary Commissioner in Canada, as has been done in many other countries.

There is nothing new about this institution. I see that in the distant past they already had such a commissioner in China, a supervisor who checked the administrative decisions of the government and could have them altered. But after that, it is only in 1809 that the Scandinavian countries, Sweden particularly, tried out this institution which seems to have worked out well.

Recently, in some Canadian provinces, and in Quebec in particular, this office of ombudsman has been instituted, but we may have to wait for a little while to find out what will come out of it.

I am afraid that in spite of the impartiality of that ombudsman, his powers are not really very wide. He is merely an investigator who may draw the government's attention, or the people's attention, to certain situations, and make recommendations. But, really, he does not have any real power, except that of hearing grievances. I am wondering if this is not a weakness that might weaken the effectiveness of the measure, while there might be other means, such as administrative tribunals, as mentioned by the Minister of Justice (Mr. Turner), to protect citizens against bureaucracy.

The case of the Scandinavian countries was mentioned; these countries, however, cover a limited area and have a unitary system; moreover, their confederative constitution differs from ours. This is also the case of New Zealand, where the constitutional system, of British origin, is similar to that of Canada in some respects.

This bill should be considered in the light of our constitutional system and, particularly, of the size of the country.

However, I agree with the hon. member when he says that the huge development of our administrative services, giving very large powers to governmental administrations, as well as the constant increase in the number of courts and agencies holding powers over the person and the property of the ordinary citizen, increase the risk of the individual's freedom and civil rights being violated.

Today, since most scientific discoveries require to be understood specialized knowledge which the average man usually lacks, hon. members are satisfied.

[English]

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Béchard): Order. The hour appointed for the consideration of private members' business having expired, I do now leave the chair to resume the same at eight o'clock p.m.

At six o'clock the House took recess.

AFTER RECESS

The House resumed at 8 p.m.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

CANADA CORPORATIONS ACT

ADMINISTRATIVE AND CONSEQUENTIAL AMENDMENTS

The House resumed consideration of the motion of Mr. Basford that Bill C-4, to amend the Canada Corporations Act and other statutory provisions related to the subject matter of certain of those amendments, be read the second time and referred to the Standing Committee on Finance, Trade and Economic Affairs.

Mr. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): Mr. Speaker, when the debate was adjourned at five o'clock I was endeavouring to point out that our criticism of the bill which is before us arises from the fact that it fails to produce any measures which would protect our sovereignty and arrest the rapid drift toward foreign domination of our economy. I was seeking to make it clear that our objections were not based on any petty nationalism, as the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Mr. Greene) has suggested.

Rather, we say that ownership implies the power to make decisions and that the decision-making power affecting the welfare of the people of this country, their jobs, their standard of living and their future, ought to be vested increasingly in the hands of bodies and organizations accountable and responsible to the people of Canada.

Those who are content to allow this drift toward continentalism to continue try to explain their inertia and inaction by contending that Canada cannot secure sufficient capital unless it allows these takeovers. This is one of the myths which was successfully exploded by the Watkins Commission. As a matter of fact, over the past ten years Canada has been an exporter of capital. In recent years we have been providing over $500 million a year to purchase equities in the United States, because most of the subsidiaries in Canada are wholly-owned United States subsidiaries which do not offer their shares to the Canadian public. Consequently, those who manage the investment for pension funds, insurance, mutual funds and the like find it necessary to go to the United States market to buy equities in order to balance their portfolios.

Moreover, it should be remembered that the capital which is being used to buy out Canadian companies comes largely from Canadians. Over the past ten years, only 15 per cent of the capital which is being used to take over Canadian companies has been new United States capital; the other 85 per cent is an accumulation of dividends and interest earned in Canada on previous investments. In other words, the people of Canada have supplied the capital necessary to permit the foreclosure of their own economy.

Adequate capital could be found in this country to develop the economy of Canada. Should it be necessary at any time to secure additional funds to enlarge our infrastructure, this could be done by going into the markets of the world to secure loan capital in the form of bonds and debentures where no ownership is involved. Once we pay off the interest and the principle, ownership rests entirely in Canadian hands. Surely there are sufficient savings generated by Canadian people to enable us to provide the major part, if not all of the capital we require for equity in the development of our economy. After all, during the second world war the Canadian people, rising out of a great depression, equipped nearly 1 million men and women in the armed services, built ships, tanks, guns and planes, waged a war entirely out of Canadian resources and in addition gave very large sums of money to the United Kingdom to help that country in its hour of need.

Our problem would not be capital. The area in which we would really need foreign assistance would be that of technical know-how, something which is much more difficult to secure. But this could be obtained, as Israel and other countries have done, by entering into partnership with foreign companies, allowing them to have a one-third equity, to supply the patents and in some cases to operate under management contracts. But we would retain control in Canada and keep the decision-making power in this country.

We in this party are disappointed that this legislation does not set out the steps the government intends to take to prevent a continuation of this growing takeover of the Canadian economy. We think there are steps which should be taken, some of them short term and immediate. For instance, we think there ought to be a takeover tax. A former Minister of Finance, Mr. Walter Gordon, did introduce legislation into this House providing for such a tax. Then, under pressure, he withdrew it. I am not in a position to say from whence the pressure came, but when Mr. Gordon writes his memoirs and we get another "Bird in a Gilded Cage", we shall know where it came from. Such a measure ought to be reintroduced. Many countries impose takeover taxes, and we need one in this country.

In the second place, there should be full disclosure of ownership so that we know the extent of foreign ownership of the various corporations in this country. Disclosure legislation will only be meaningful, however, if it is enforced. It will have to be better enforced than the legislation provided in the Corporations and Labour Unions Returns Act because in 1967, although 2,990 companies made no returns, no legal action was taken against them despite the fact that provision exists for taking such action.

Mr. Basford: Most of them are out of business.

Mr. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): If the minister wants to give us the facts, we shall be glad to hear him when he closes the debate. I doubt that 2,900 companies are out of business, but if it is true the minister should put that information on the record.

Third, we need legislation restricting foreign ownership particularly in key sectors of the economy. An agency ought to be set up, as was recommended in the Watkins report, to investigate these takeovers and to make sure that the subsidiaries in this country are acting as good corporate citizens. We need amendments to the Combines Investigation Act to provide that in cases where takeovers constitute mergers—which is what happens in most cases—it must be determined whether they are contrary to the public interest.

Fourth, we need a state trading corporation, as was recommended in the Watkins report. There has been a problem with U.S. subsidiaries in this country which have refused to trade with Communist countries because the parent company in the United States might be prosecuted under the U.S. Trading with the Enemy Act. These subsidiaries have taken the position that they are subject to United States law, not Canadian law. This difficulty can be obviated, in one way at least, either by establishing a state trading corporation or by giving such trading powers to the existing Canadian commercial agency.

The fifth suggestion, which we have made from time to time, is that we ought to use a floating exchange rate. At the present time we are taking hard-earned United States dollars which we have earned to help our balance of payments position, and selling them for Canadian dollars to prevent the Canadian dollar going above the pegged rate. I suggest it would be difficult to find a more asinine situation. We in this group have for a long time advocated that a floating exchange rate, even operated within certain limits, would give the government greater freedom of movement in conducting its monetary policies.

There are other long-term measures, of course, that ought to be initiated by the government. First is the establishment of the Canada Development Corporation that the Liberal government has included in the Speech from the Throne in every session since 1963. It was left out of this session's Speech from the Throne, probably because the government felt there was a limit on how long it could kid the public. In spite of this, the Minister of Finance (Mr. Benson) keeps saying that the corporation is coming. Personally, I will believe it when I see the legislation on the order paper. We want a publicly financed and publicly controlled Canada Development Corporation that will make possible the mobilization of the savings of the Canadian people to be used for the purpose of developing Canada's resources, processing Canada's raw materials and developing and expanding Canada's economy.

The second long-term requirement is balancing our trade with imports from the United States, as well as shifting some of our purchases to countries that are prepared to trade for Canadian goods. One of our difficulties is that we are so completely dependent upon the U.S. market. As the Right Hon. Lester B. Pearson said when asked whether the government would protest the United States presence in Viet Nam: When you depend on one country for 60 per cent of your trade, it is not easy to quarrel with them on a matter of this sort.

Because of our proximity to the United States and our long-standing relations with that country, the United States will always be our major customer. In all probability we will continue to be their major customer. But the steady imbalance in our payments position keeps us in a constantly inferior position in our dealings with that country.

My plea is that a young country like Canada must think in terms of centuries, not just in terms of decades. There is little value in rapid growth if the end result is economic dependency. Canada's future lies in developing secondary and tertiary industries that will provide jobs and more stable prices. For us to be a mere supplier of raw materials and energy resources is to relegate us permanently to an inferior level of economic performance. We can never have a society devoted to the greatest good for the greatest number if our economic decisions are made in a country other than Canada and in the interests of a country other than Canada. Even our political and cultural identity is being eroded. Certainly our economic sovereignty is already threatened.

We can hope some day to make corporate power responsible to the public interest of this country, but only if that power has its roots in Canada. When that corporate power is vested in another country and we have little or no control over it, increasingly we will become an economic colony of another nation. We may be better off, though even that is debatable; but we will not be a free and independent country.

We in the New Democratic Party are prepared to offer the Canadian people independence as an alternative to the paralytic continentalism which is followed by the government.

Mr. Greene: Then why didn't you support Watkins? You had your chance, but you voted him out as leader.

Mr. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): The minister of Energy, Mines and Resources is, as usual, talking about something he knows nothing about. We did not vote Watkins out; he became an executive member of the New Democratic Party in Canada.

Mr. Greene: I did not see you supporting him.

Mr. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): The minister should read the resolution passed by the convention. If I had time I would read it to him, but briefly it stated that the New Democratic Party believed that Canada must assert its economic sovereignty if it is ever to build social democracy and preserve the political democracy of this country.

The choice that faces the Canadian people is whether we will begin now the long process of building economic and, incidentally, political independence, or be prepared to trade away our future for a mess of pottage. I hope before this debate concludes the responsible ministers of the government will be prepared to tell us what the government intends to do about foreign domination of Canada's economy, what action the government proposes to take on the Watkins report and what it is going to do about the increasing number of takeovers in Canada.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. I am sorry to interrupt the hon. member but I am afraid his time has expired.

Some hon. Members: Continue.

• (8:20 p.m.)

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for the hon. member to continue?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): I have only a few sentences left, Mr. Speaker. I hope the government will tell us what it considers to be the point of no return. How far can foreign ownership go without our having reached the point where we cannot recover economic control? About two-thirds of our economy is now in foreign hands. When we reach 75 per cent or 80 per cent, do we then lose control of the Canadian economy? At what point does the government consider that danger signals will go up and action must be taken? In my opinion we have only a short time left. I think this decision will be made in this decade, in the 1970s. Unless we act, Canadians will have lost the power to make economic decisions regarding their future. If we make that decision, the time will have come to stop talking about "the true north, strong and free."

Mr. Greene: Mr. Speaker, would the hon. member permit a question? The hon. member did me the honour of quoting me in a context which actually was in reference to the sale of greater quantities of oil in the United States market than has up to now been the case. Does his party believe that Canada should not expand her United States market for crude oil because it is not in Canada's interest?

Mr. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): The minister knows perfectly well that we are not opposed to expanding our market for oil in the United States, but I might point out the minister also knows two other things: first, he knows that we are a net importer of oil, in spite of the fact that we have oil wells operating at only 35 per cent capacity. We are bringing into Canada more oil than we are shipping out. We have been trying to get information and the results of studies on whether it would be economic to ship western oil to eastern Canada rather than stopping the shipment of western Canadian oil at the Ottawa River. There is a great market for oil in Montreal and the Maritimes. We want to know, and we feel we have the right to know, the economics involved in this question. There is no reason why Canada should be a net importer of oil.

The second thing the minister knows is that when he talked to Mr. Hickel, he talked about getting more oil. Mr. Hickel said, "You want to sell oil, but there are a lot of other things we need. We need gas and we are interested in water and hydroelectric power. If you want to sell more oil, we are prepared to give you a rabbit for a horse." I am afraid that in that kind of trading the minister will come home pretty badly plucked.

Mr. Greene: For the purpose of clarity, Mr. Speaker—and I am sure my hon. friend wants the record to be clear—let me say that I am pleased he is so clairvoyant and knows what went on between myself and Mr. Hickel in a closed room. For the purpose of making the record very clear, I take it that the hon. gentleman's party would not deem it a dimunition of that Canadian sovereignty about which he preaches so loudly if we sold a greater quantity of oil to the United States than we have in the past. Am I correct in that assumption?

Mr. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): Since I have been asked a question, perhaps I might answer it. I have no objection to selling more oil to the United States, and certainly I have no objection to our selling more oil to those parts of Canada from which western Canadian oil has been excluded. I do not want to sell oil if that is to be used as an excuse for giving away the vast resources which we have, resources which the United States have depleted there and now want to ransack here.

Mr. Greene: But oil is not one of those.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. I think I have been extremely lenient in allowing this exchange, which I might point out, retrospectively, is quite irrelevant to the matter now before the House.

Mr. Hyl Chappell (Peel South): Mr. Speaker, just recently I was shocked to read in the newspaper that trustees for two bankrupt estates in Montreal had to apply to the Quebec Superior Court for injunctions to prevent the liquidators of the Bank of Western Canada transferring over $3 million of the bank's money to the bankrupts through a company in Nassau controlled by one of the bankrupts. The machinations by which this might have been accomplished are many and involved. The saving action, of course, must now be under the bankruptcy laws, but the near defeat of Canadian creditors to the extent of over $3 million of the Bank of Western Canada's money gives some indication of the need to tighten corporate control.

The purpose of the proposed amendments to the Canada Corporations Act is to give Canadian shareholders in closely-held companies, and all shareholders in widely-held public companies greater protection in that the company and those who control it, commonly referred to as management, are required to provide investing shareholders with much more information on which to base their decisions whether to invest in it or, if they have invested, whether to continue their support of existing management.

Under this new legislation those who have a substantial interest in the company either by way of shares, 10 per cent or more, or as officers of the company, known as insiders, must disclose all dealings with their own shares by filing with the Department of Consumer and Corporate Affairs what are called insider reports. Management must prepare and send to shareholders before the annual meeting detailed statements called information circulars, which presumably will have to show the benefit that any member of management may have received from the company or any subsidiary company, and describe the company's activities during the year and management's grounds for seeking re-election. These new sections also provide for some control on the solicitation of proxies, including the necessity to identify in the information circular those proposed for re-election or election as directors.

In 1967, Ontario introduced much the same protective provisions into the Ontario Corporations Act, most of which followed the New York State Act. This bill, while adopting a great deal of the Ontario legislation, has changed and enlarged some of the sections. Obviously the bill is hoped to be a Bill of Rights for investors. Certainly, some abuses will be prevented if potential manipulators know that shareholders are in a position to exercise a reasonable scrutiny of the company's affairs during the year and are informed of management's share ownership and dealings with the company prior to the annual meeting. The new provisions have certainly opened the door for scrutiny, but I suggest we should go further and turn on some lights so that shareholders may always see and understand what has gone on and the significance of it to them.

The drafters have avoided some unnecessary confusion by following much of the format of the Ontario act as to arbitrary time periods for compulsory filing and description of documents, for example, insider reports, information circulars and proxy solicitation. But although many of the sections are intended to have the same meaning, they are not identical in words. Surely, when there is uniformity of intention there should be greater uniformity of language. I suggest that the federal authorities consult their opposite numbers in Ontario to establish greater uniformity in terminology so that a shareholder who masters one set of rules will understand the other. This type of legislation, with its supporting regulations, is perhaps the most complicated and sophisticated of any Canadian law. If we are to protect the investors we must see that they, as well as management and those who enforce the legislation, understand it.

Because the legislation is new there could be uncertainty until legal decisions have supplied interpretations. If there was greater uniformity between the federal and Ontario acts, at least where the sections are intended to accomplish the same purpose the jurisprudence under one act would be of assistance in interpreting the other, and both could gain from the New York legal decisions.

This bill, as does the Ontario act, provides that insider reports must be filed and thus be available for examination by shareholders who have the knowledge and facilities to go to the registration office to extract the information. However, there will be many shareholders who do not know the information is available, or who perhaps would find it difficult and expensive to go to the proper office to obtain it. In fact, if every shareholder did so, the burden on the registration office would be intolerable. A provision should be added to the new sections which would provide that there must be attached to or included in the information circular a summary of the insider reports that have been filed so that all shareholders are brought up to date in respect of the insider trading before the annual meeting.

Although there is provision for disclosure of actual trading by insiders, the control should reach further and provide for similar disclosure in respect of options, shares pledged to brokers or other trustees, and any other indirect interest in shares by insiders either in the main company or in any subsidiary or related company. So, also, should insiders be precluded from dealing in shares for some days before any takeover bid becomes public knowledge. Penalties and a right of civil action should be provided for any breach of these provisions.

In the large companies of today management's right to solicit proxy votes is a powerful weapon. Abuses must be guarded against or the protection which we seek to give may be circumvented. The bill may appear to be a complete legislative triumph, but it should go further. We should take advantage of the recent review, by the Supreme Court of Ontario, of the Ontario sections in respect of solicitation and voting of proxies by management and prevent what was there disclosed to be an abuse, before it happens again.

In a case in which I was personally involved as counsel, Charlebois v. British International Finance, the company then had control of the Bank of Western Canada, management solicited proxies and at the same time implied by the information circular that management as a whole proposed to support the old board of directors. However, although management voted the proxies which it collected in favour of the old board, one or two powerful members of management voted their own shares for, and elected directors whom they caused to be nominated at the meeting without any prior notice. This was obviously a deception on those who had given their proxies to management. It was necessary for us, in that case, to go to the courts, and after a long and expensive hearing the court found that this was constructive fraud and granted an injunction prohibiting the new board taking office.

This loophole should be plugged. It would be better if the section were enlarged to provide that if management puts forward a list of directors, they must vote for those directors or the meeting is void. If an individual member of management wishes to oppose the board which the majority of management has agreed upon, and vote his shares for another, he should be required to so inform the shareholders.

The new sections provide that if insiders or certain others associated with the company should use their special knowledge of the company's affairs for their own trading gain, they are accountable to the company in legal action which may be taken by the department. I suggest this provision would have a greater restraining effect on those who would seek to gain improperly at the expense of others if in addition a group of shareholders could commence and conduct an action either in their own names or in the name of the company for the benefit of the company and thus indirectly for themselves.

Mr. Speaker, if this appeals to the minister, the cases referred to in Charlebois v. British International Finance (Canada) Limited, which was reported in 1967, outlined how it can be done.

Mr. Cliff Downey (Battle River): Mr. Speaker, many of the opinions and concerns that have been voiced here this afternoon and evening regarding the corporations bill, C-4, I think have been of great concern to many of us through the years. Certainly, we must acknowledge that in many areas greater control of corporate entities is necessary and desirable. We heard a great deal, particularly from the leader of the New Democratic Party, about foreign ownership and the bogey of the corporate entities. There was basis, in many respects, for many of his remarks, but I hope his attitude toward foreign ownership will set a precedent when it comes to dealing with matters like international unions and labour relations which are based outside this country.

The corporations, of course, typically have been great whipping-boys in this and other countries. There is not too much sympathy for the politician who defends these companies. But we owe them a great deal in connection with our standard of living. There are in this bill a few clauses which I feel are worthy of comment and which have not been covered very extensively this afternoon and evening. The bill, of course, is a mixture of the Ontario Corporations Act, the Securities Act of 1966, the Combines Investigation Act and the U.S. Securities and Exchange Act of 1934. It is rather a conglomeration of all these statutes. Therefore, some portions of the bill can be defended on the basis of precedents.

I notice in one area of the bill, however, a tendency to bypass the directors as representatives of the shareholders and the substitution of direct intervention by the shareholders in the affairs of the company. This could lead to problems. As I believe any Member of Parliament is well aware, any large constituency contains a number of eccentric or disgruntled people who will take advantage of any opportunity afforded them to inject themselves into the affairs of an institution of which they are members. Therefore, I believe in this area we should be very careful to see there is at least some financial obligation placed upon shareholders who would initiate an investigation, so that it is done in a manner which does not warrant concern. The hon. member for York East (Mr. Otto) this afternoon suggested that the arguments in respect of secrecy in corporate affairs were invalid because we can go to any phone book and find the names of various companies through which we can employ the financial espionage system.

I believe his remarks to be very true. But at least the person who is investigating or spying for the so-called financial espionage outfits has to pay for his investigation and the company is not liable for the costs of the investigative procedures. In the past few years investors have lost large sums of money through the action of directors and officers of certain companies. Some of the regulations in the legislation before us are aimed at correcting this. The companies which I might name as examples are Windfall, Atlantic Acceptance and Prudential Finance.

The cases involving these companies have attracted a great deal of public attention. However, when we examine the events closely we find that in the case of Windfall some of the amendments proposed in the bill before us would have prevented the situation that occurred. This would not necessarily be the case with regard to Atlantic Acceptance and Prudential Finance, because no matter what legislation we enact, the losses occasioned in many instances to the investors are due to their own greed and foolishness, and we cannot legislate against this.

We have heard about insider trading and selling short by insiders. I think that sometimes we make more of these things than is warranted. Selling short is sometimes made into a bogey procedure, while in fact it is a transaction which saves the person the trouble and expense of borrowing funds to exercise an option.

It really surprises me that when so much is said about policing corporations there is no mention of philanthropic organizations and some of our charitable organizations.

The other day a pamphlet was received in my office with regard to an investigation which was conducted, through the office of the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs (Mr. Basford) into several charitable and philanthropic organizations in this country. Investigations were made as to the right of the average citizen to scrutinize some of the purposes of the officers of organizations which are purporting to conduct charitable appeals. The Department of Consumer and Corporate Affairs looked into this matter, as did the Department of National Revenue. They found that the present legislation contains some loopholes, although not much has been said about that.

We are informed that information regarding the officers of such organizations and their purposes, fund raising costs, actual expenditures for charitable purposes, etc. is confidential; it is restricted to both departments and is not open to the public. In some instances the sums involved are as high as those involved in large corporation activities. Further, we find that a non-profit organization need not have a federal charter in order to obtain a charitable registration number which enables it to receive tax deductible gifts.

If one were to find that a group is using a charitable registration number to cover up a racket, one cannot seek a review or a revocation of the registration number. If one feels that a non-profit charter has been denied or granted unjustly, recourse can be sought only in the courts. I cannot understand why something is not also being done in this area.

A great deal is being said about corporate entities, which are the basis of our standard of living, and it is surprising that more attention is not paid to the internal workings of charitable organizations which deal in hundreds of thousands of dollars and which sometimes use up 80 per cent or 90 per cent of the funds received to cover their so-called administrative costs.

I think that something should be said about the requirement to submit a list of the shareholders of these corporations. This may be well and good, but it would also assist in takeovers by other firms, resulting in the establishment of larger conglomerates and foreign takeovers. Now it is up to the company to decide whether they wish to disclose the names of their shareholders, but if they were forced to do so, a corporation planning the takeover of a company would be able to approach the shareholders individually and make deals with them. This may have some undesirable effects.

I think a parallel could be drawn between Bill C-4, the omnibus bill on the Criminal Code and the white paper on taxation, which we were asked to accept as a package. In all three cases, in order to sell the product some attractive points were incorporated in them. I am very concerned about the purported infallibility of the department that is to administer and conduct the investigations and would legitimize any such investigations, because we are saying that one group is god-like while another group, in this case the company, is perhaps under suspicion. I think a parallel could be drawn between this bill and the white paper. We would be remiss in our duty were we to avoid comparing the corporate control that is envisaged in the bill with the control that will be possible when the white paper on taxation is implemented, because the white paper proposes to take away from small business a marked degree of control. In fact, small business may very well disappear, at least to the extent that now we know it.

[Mr. Downey.]

The white paper proposes no control of the large corporations, but almost complete government control over the smaller ones. If this bill were implemented it would be possible for the government to control the large corporations. It would in fact give the government almost complete control over the economy at the expense of the private sector. We would have shifted into the type of state where the government and the bureaucracy is all-powerful. Mr. Speaker, that is all I have to say on the matter at this time. I repeat that I share these concerns with a great many hon. members.

Mr. Rod Thomson (Battleford-Kindersley): Mr. Speaker, this afternoon when the hon. member for York East (Mr. Otto) was speaking I was quite entertained and interested when he spoke of the family compact in Toronto. The only time I can tell an interesting story is when I talk about my relatives. The hon. member spoke about the one thing that did not exclude them from the family compact—that was failure in the business sense. It makes me think of Bob Hope who, when he spoke of the time he was attending Harvard, said that the university was so exclusive that those who failed to graduate were bums of distinction.

I suggest to the Minister of Corporate and Consumer Affairs (Mr. Basford) that he listen to the member of his own party who has some knowledge of and interest in this area. I would also suggest that the bills the minister is introducing should contain a clause insisting on better management, as United States bills in this area have done, particularly in regard to corporations. If he wants people to invest in Canadian corporations, he should make sure there is no one waiting to take them for all they are worth. This has been the case in the past, when there has been no return or a poor return—even embezzlement in some cases—because of lack of control.

As a farmer, I agree that a corporation has some advantages, such as the availability of more adequate research funds, management skills, better sales techniques, and so on. These benefits have come with this modern age and will benefit us all. It is agreed that there should be more adequate representation of the Canadian people and the Canadian investor to make sure that corporations work to the advantage of all. It has been suggested that a corporation has no heart, no soul and no national identity in the sense of its responsibility. This has been shown to be true except when a country insists that the corporations recognize its national law. The best illustration I can think of is foreign subsidiaries of American companies operating in Canada, Canadian subsidiaries if you will, which feel more responsive to United States law than to Canadian law. I strongly suggest to the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs that he take a firm stand in this regard. As it is, when Big Daddy speaks, all these companies say "Yes, sir", "Yes, pa", and so on.

What is our responsibility in Canada? I would suggest to the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs that he should stand up, have some gumption and make sure that Canadian law applies to Canadian companies, whether or not they are subsidiaries of foreign companies. It is time we insisted on recognition of Canadian rights in this respect. If the United States government tells an American parent corporation not to trade with Cuba, China or the moon, Canadian subsidiaries will obey this direction. I suggest this is not right. If we in Canada decide this is the situation, fine; but if we do not, these companies should obey our laws and face a fine or penalty of some kind.

I am quite concerned about the large percentage of Canadian trade with the United States. I am not suggesting trade with that country is necessarily a bad thing, but we lock ourselves in. When we look south of the border and see some of their problems in connection with race riots, one wonders if they may not have a civil war in parts of that country. I hope they do not, and I am not suggesting that they might, but it is a possibility. If they withdraw from the Viet Nam war, they may have a depression, and a depression in the United States in these circumstances means a depression in Canada.

I suggest that we encourage trade with other countries; that we try to enlarge our trade with countries like Japan, China and the European common market in order to attain a greater degree of independence. It behooves us to establish markets elsewhere, and we should set up our corporation law accordingly.

I should like to give an illustration of what might be done to encourage Canadian ownership. A Saskatchewan power corporation was established by borrowing money in the form of bonds, with interest at 5 per cent. A sinking fund was set aside to pay for the corporation over a period of 33 years. They applied the full amount of depreciation and still had several million dollars left to pour into the treasury of the Saskatchewan government. This is an indication of what could be done if we encouraged this type of set-up in Canada.

Foreign companies tend to take mining resources and do with them what they will, perhaps refining them elsewhere. The Ontario government has passed legislation calling for an indication of intent. In effect they say: You may mine here if you wish, but it must be refined here if it is mined here. The Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs should look very closely at the Ontario legislation. It is legislation that might be initiated all over Canada. If secondary industry were encouraged, this in turn would increase jobs and encourage the growth of capital investment here. In the long term it would benefit everybody. To the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs I would say, "Go thou and do likewise."

Recently there has been talk about Arctic sovereignty. This is just so much hot air unless we place emphasis upon who owns the Arctic. If we are going to sell it all to foreign corporations—and sometimes they act as if they own it already—what does it really matter which flag flies there? They may be glad that the Mounties keep the peace there and that the Canadian icebreakers keep the sea open for the movement of American and other foreign ships. They have the glory; they have the return on their capital investment; they have the ownership of the oil—so what is left for us except to fly the flag and break the ice? When the minister is setting up changes in the Corporations Act, I suggest that he look closely at some of these matters which affect Canadian citizens.

Mr. Eldon M. Woolliams (Calgary North): Mr. Speaker, I wish to make a few brief remarks about this bill. I want to comment on what the leader of the New Democratic Party has said. I trust that our differences will basically be philosophical, because I have always had the highest respect for him. At this time when the NDP has been making inroads in Saskatchewan, not only in the farm areas but in the cities, the people of western Canada are worried about becoming a colonial outpost, not of the United States but of central Canada.

I think we are all getting a little tired of hearing certain Canadians say that United States investment in this country is the greatest evil that could possibly befall this nation. I ask the members of the New Democratic Party and those union leaders in this nation who support them, what would happen to our standard of living if someone pulled the plug out of the sink and allowed foreign investment to drain out of Canada? How much unemployment would be created here overnight?

We have made mistakes in the past in trying to control our corporations; we may have made mistakes that the United States avoided when it began developing its resources. But let us not worry about what happened in past years. Let us see, first, just how much United States capital is invested in Canadian industry. Again, in this context, I ask the leader of the NDP and his union supporters, how much unemployment would we have in this country if someone pulled the plug out of the sink and allowed United States foreign investment to drain away?

I wish to refer to a survey of United States investment in Canada. This is taken from the Globe and Mail and has been confirmed by the Toronto Star. When those two newspapers quote the same figures, one may place some reliance on them. I have also checked them in the Canada Year Book. What does the survey show? It shows that in 1967 there were $371 million invested in this country in mining and smelting. In 1968 there was invested in the petroleum industry $645 million in the manufacturing industry, $854 million and in other industries $259 million.

Altogether, there was invested in the mining, smelting, petroleum, manufacturing and other industries, $2,129 million. Apart from amounts invested in the manufacturing sector, there was invested in the chemical industry $166 million; in the machinery industry $132 million; in the transport equipment industry $201 million and in other manufacturing industries $356 million. In these industries alone there is invested a total amount of $2,295 million.

Let us look at these industries and at unions in Canada which are financed by unions operating across international boundaries. My remarks are not meant to be critical. We are all working together; our unions and businesses are economically interlocked. It seems to me that we can make the economy of this country function smoothly only when we work with the United States. I sympathize in part with the position the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Mr. Greene) has adopted toward the petroleum industry, but let us look realistically at that industry. If the United States were to pull the plug from the sink tomorrow with respect to export of crude petroleum from western Canada, the tragedy that would hit the urban centres of the west would be even greater than the tragedy that has hit our wheat farmers. I do not think we in the west can stand two major collapses at the same time.

An hon. Member: What about Montreal?

Mr. Woolliams: I am aware of what is happening in Montreal and would be prepared to speak about that. The United States and Canada must work together harmoniously; that is the idea underlying our national oil policy. When the leader of the New Democratic Party was Premier of Saskatchewan he realized how necessary our national oil policy was and approved it. But let us not talk about controlling corporations, because they are operated on a global scale. These are big conglomerates and operate only partly in Canada. Canada has only about 20 million people. While we must make sure that the rights of our people are not usurped, at the same time we must realize that we need the investment of these corporations. We must all work together.

I am sure that the minister and the leader of the NDP will forgive me if I speak for a moment about the Conservative Party. When the hon. member for Prince Edward-Hastings (Mr. Hees) was the minister responsible, he met with the United States authorities and worked out a national oil policy under which we all understood that because of transportation factors, western Canada would supply the western states with crude petroleum and our market would extend as far west as the Ottawa Valley; Venezuelan oil, financed by the United States companies, would go to the eastern market. In 1961 we hoped we could consume approximately 800,000 barrels per day as a result of export and our own domestic market.

Our idea was that we should work with the United States in evolving these oil policies. If we took the position that we would act in these matters without considering the interests of the United States, between 15 per cent and 20 per cent of the Canadian labour force would become unemployed overnight. That is why we must take a concrete look at the existing situation before we say that foreign corporations have invested too much money in this country. It is very easy to say, "Let's take over these foreign corporations."

Mr. Speaker, when I was in Mexico in 1964 I noticed that the government there had taken over the petroleum industry. Yes, they had socialism—and what happened? The standard of living in Mexico is so low that every time you step out of a hotel at night little boys run up to you begging for pesos. I have yet to see that happening in Canada. It is true that we have problems; but no matter whether we are governed by Liberal, Conservative or even NDP governments, we must as Canadians develop Canada. I think and speak as a Canadian Member of Parliament and that is why I say we depend on foreign investment and cannot develop our resources without it. Anyone who says we can is talking sheer nonsense.

You are being an economic hypocrite if you say Canadian productivity can be maintained without the kind of foreign investment we have enjoyed, because it is obvious that it cannot. I do not know on which side of the fence the leader of the NDP stood at the convention—and all parties in this House have conventions—but I know that it was not the Canadian managers of the international conglomerates who came down against accepting the Watkins report. It was the union leaders in Canada, people like those who support me now and did before. I am talking about the United Mineworkers of America. I could name names. These people realize full well how dependant we are on foreign capital.

Let us look at what the oil industry means to Canada. I would like to be able to say to the people of Alberta that they should receive 100 per cent of the Canadian trade, but everyone knows that the cost of production in Canada, per unit, is a little more expensive than it is in the United States. We cannot even build pipelines and be in a position to compete with the foreign crude oil coming into Montreal. We have to be practical. Even if it was my lot to be Prime Minister or a cabinet minister, I still could not go into the city of Montreal and say to the people there that as of tonight they will pay 20 cents a gallon more for gasoline because it is produced in the province of Alberta. Concrete economic facts must be taken into consideration.

Canada is an anomaly in the world with regard to oil. We can currently produce 200 per cent of its consumption. We can also produce far more than our consumption of grain. Yet we have a net trade deficit in oil of over $200 million per year. The need for a new oil policy is apparent. This need has been pressed by myself and other members of my party. I am sympathetic to the fact that we cannot go into the United States with a big club and say we are 20 million people and we are going to enter their market. The United States would ignore us because they have great developments in the north.

I say to the members of the New Democratic Party that the United States can afford to send a man to the moon. They can afford to find and produce oil inshore and offshore. They can afford to do this at far more expense than buying it from Canada, and they can tell us to go to hell. These are the cold economic facts of life that must be faced. It is time we paid attention to them.

I see young people waving signs which read, "Take away American capital", "Down with American companies". These same young people will be at my desk this summer asking me as their Member of Parliament to assist them to obtain a summer job. If we close the companies and take away the investment, these Canadian students will not get summer jobs as roughnecks drilling for oil in Alberta. These are some of the facts which we have to face.

Everyone loves to wave a flag. Politicians have been waving the national flag on platforms ever since Confederation. When someone talks to me about something made in Canada, or Canadian sovereignty, because I was born in Canada and my people have been here for three generations I feel proud and can naturally become emotional. There is a time when you have to start ignoring your heart and using your head, because if we do not use our heads many Canadians will be unemployed.

I have knowledge of economics and political science. In my opinion we are facing a very serious period in North America. If the war in Viet Nam came to an end—and I hope it will—there would be a cooling-off of productivity, not only in the United States but also in Canada. No matter which government is in office, we will be faced with serious unemployment. I have stated that I do not agree with the policies of the government.

I think they are aggravating the situation. The white paper has had a serious reflection on the stock market of Canada as well as on investment needed to develop our resources and keep a high degree of employment.

The government talks about socialism. I think it is a great ideal. If we can encourage investment and keep reasonable control over the investment that comes into Canada, in order to develop our resources and increase our productivity, then jobs will be available for Canadians. There will be less taxes for the home-owners and the wage earners. Canada has changed. It is not what it was during the forties, fifties and sixties. The union man today is in the middle-income bracket. Union men are earning between $12,000 and $15,000 a year. The white paper will not help them or develop this country.

There are two points I want to make. We need foreign investment. Politicians in Canada should be very careful when they talk about foreign investment at this time. We are spending on importing crude petroleum $200 million more than we receive from exports. I agree that if this $200 million were spent in Canada for Canadian crude oil, it would have a total effect on the Canadian economy, through secondary and other industries, of approximately $700 million annually. But we must have the capital to develop the resources, the petroleum, the mines and the manufacturing industry so that we can turn them into manufactured goods. Unless we do this, we cannot have the standard of living I would like to see.

We will never have prosperity in this country by taxing the people to death and driving out foreign investment. These are two things I oppose, and I would say so from a platform in my constituency. This is the second constituency I have had the privilege to represent in the House of Commons. I think I can talk to the average man. I say to the leader of the New Democratic Party that I can go to the miners in East Coulee, where the houses are boarded-up and there are only one or two mines left, and point out the importance of foreign investment.

When the Kaiser Company came into Canada we had combined Japanese and United States investment. The coal industry took on a new life. I repeat that only through the development of our resources can the productivity of the nation increase. When this happens, the taxes can be cut for the wage earners, small businessmen and everyone else. Surely that makes economic sense.

We must take a serious look at the situation. It is possible to win elections on what the leader of the New Democratic Party has said. I could get a crowd together and talk like he does. I think he was a good Premier. I did not agree with some of the things he did in Saskatchewan, and I told him so. I cannot believe that with his knowledge of economics, business experience and running the government of the province of Saskatchewan he believes we can chase out foreign investment and still help the labourers and unions of this country develop their resources so that we can cut taxes.

I say to members opposite, beware of the white paper. I oppose it. Don't dish it up in a capsule and tell the little man that he is going to save on taxes through the small exemption he is being offered. As soon as a Canadian tries to get out of poverty row and is earning $4,000, his taxes will be increased by an additional 9 per cent. This is no time to be playing ducks and drakes with the economy by using something like the white paper.

I told the members of the New Democratic Party who come from the farm belt that they should read to the farmers what the Carter Commission said. They should tell the farmers that the white paper will cause the ranchers and farmers to pay a capital gains tax. Every day the NDP and Progressive Conservatives question the government with reference to the grain problem. The farmers are desperate. They are ready for a change, but they should realize and appreciate that the NDP endorse not only the white paper but the driving out of foreign investment, which would give this country a depression greater than that of 1929.

I have made my point and emphasized it two or three times. It is high time some people were told the facts. I would rather be defeated in my constituency in the next election than not have made this speech, because I believe it is time the people of Canada were told some of the economic facts. A healthy oil industry means jobs not only in Alberta but throughout the manufacturing sector of the Great Lakes golden triangle; it means jobs in the manufacturing industries, jobs in the mining and smelting industries. It is only through trade that prosperity comes. Without trade, Canada will fade.

What do hon. members on my left want to see? Do they wish us to enter a period in which there is no development? Do they want us to live on the productivity we have achieved to date, despite a growing population? We lost the grain market because the United States moved into the vacuum when the International Wheat Agreement was not signed. They dumped their wheat throughout the world at fire sale prices.

Propagandists tried to tell us the present situation arose because of a world surplus. Let them look at the facts in the Canada Year Book. I say to the government: If it is due to a world surplus, why was Canada the fifth of the exporting nations in 1969, when it was the first three years ago? Get us back into first place, and the board can allocate six and seven-bushel quotas tomorrow and get the grain trade moving again. I am a Conservative who believes in development. I do not believe in laissez faire. Of course, we need some control. But when we have to listen to the economic nonsense we have listened this afternoon, I say it is time somebody stood in his place and put the record straight.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. John L. Skoberg (Moose Jaw): Mr. Speaker, let me say first of all, on rising to take part in the discussion on this bill, that I have just heard a speech by the hon. member for Calgary North (Mr. Woolliams) the logic of which seems to be that if everything in Canada were owned by the United States, everything would be fine and dandy.

Mr. Woolliams: I rise on a question of privilege. I respect the intellect of the hon. member, but at no time did I make such a statement. Maybe he did not understand what I said. My contention was that foreign investment is necessary for the development of our country. I said that, and nothing more. Of course, I do not want any foreign country to take over here, but I do not want 15 or 20 per cent of our workers unemployed, as the hon. member is recommending.

Mr. Skoberg: I am proud that I was able to get the hon. member on his feet to clarify the record. If I understand him correctly, his point is that everything is good in Canada because of United States investment here. In that case I wonder why political experts, political scientists, sociologists and many others are telling us we should learn a little lesson. I shall read from Myers' Finance Review, which comes from Switzerland. I do not know the origin or the background. It reads in part as follows:

> Canada faces the most trying monetary and economic days in its history. Canada is strong with natural resources, relatively strong in gold despite some foolish policies of 30 years. Canada can survive to become, in the next two decades, the richest country in the world. It will depend upon how the Members of Parliament handle the up-coming situation.

If I understand the hon. member for Calgary North correctly, the method he would adopt to handle this situation in Canada, and perhaps in the Calgary oilfields, would be to turn over control to United States interests. The article continues:

> Canada can be saved only by every MP studying this monetary situation as he studies nothing else, and using his voice not for political popularity but for the salvation of the country.

Whether members of this House are really concerned about saving this country is something every one of them will have to go to bed and dream about. They will have to consult their consciences. I know many men engaged in the oil industry in the Calgary area and elsewhere. Does the hon. member realize that when the pipeline was put in in Alberta, United States interests were disposed to use an entirely United States labour force—Canadians were excluded from the construction of oil pipe-lines mainly because, it was said, they were not experienced. It was only through the vigilance and determination of the organized workers in Alberta and elsewhere that Canadian workers were given their rightful place. I do not agree at all with the philosophy which the hon. member for Calgary North has expounded tonight.

I am not an economist, but I am convinced that when the people of this country fill in the questionnaires which are sent them asking what they think about various Canadian issues, one of their greatest concerns relates to our national origin, our national identity, whether or not we are being taken over by foreign interests. It amazes me we should hear philosophies of the kind expressed tonight by the hon. member for Calgary North. What would become of us, he asks, if it were not for foreign capital? Surely hon. members are aware of the existence of the Canadian Development Corporation? Do hon. members not realize that the people of Canada are quite prepared to invest in this corporation if they have confidence in the government to use the resources of our country to the best advantage. The idea that foreign capital is necessary to protect employment in Canada is a myth, and the hon. member for Calgary North is well aware of it.

Mr. Woolliams: I am not aware of it. You are saying all this.

Mr. Skoberg: The hon. member was entirely taken up with his picture of the United States, with its huge size, telling we poor 20 million people to go to hell if we do not adhere to their ideas of what we should do. I wonder whether he would be concerned if the Liberal government were to introduce regulations requiring all foreign corporations in Canada to return a fair share of their profits to the Canadian economy. I wonder whether he would say: We must not do that because the United States and other people much bigger than us will tell us to go to hell.

The philosophy embodied in his speech tonight amounts to saying to these corporations: You do not have to be good Canadians or good corporate citizens; just come in and take our resources, rape us, then go away gently because we shall not say a word. It amazes me that an hon. member should stand up and suggest Canada does not have the ability and the integrity to get along on its own but must depend almost entirely on foreign capital.

I have heard many statements on the subject of whether labour is getting more than its fair share, more than it is entitled to. I am sure the remarks the hon. member has made will indicate where he stands on many of the issues facing the Canadian worker today. Is he really concerned about employment in Canada?

To deal directly with the measure before us, Bill C-4, I suggest to the government that if it was really concerned about taking constructive action at this time, it would have added a few words to the title of the bill to make it read, "An Act to amend the Canada Corporations Act and other statutory provisions related to the subject matter of certain of those amendments and to provide for the supervision of foreign ownership and control of the Canadian economy." This is what the government should do if it is really concerned about the Canadian economy, instead of trying to lay the blame for present difficulties on areas which are not really responsible for the situation in which we now find ourselves.

[Mr. Skoberg.]

For example, the government itself has suggested that labour is not prepared to discuss voluntary restraints. I suggest that if the government started at the top of the ladder and brought an end to increased prices of all commodities in Canada, labour would collectively sit down at the table and discuss the imposition of voluntary restraints.

While we are talking about imposing voluntary restraints at this time, we are telling those on very low incomes that although prices are going up their wages cannot be increased correspondingly, and they are not to rock the boat. I shall be very interested to see how successful the government is in its talks with the business community. I hope the talks will be successful. I hope they will be so successful that business in general will roll back prices, removing any justification for pay increases.

When the minister introduced this bill on November 10 I am sure many of us agreed with some of his comments. As reported at page 703 of Hansard, he stated that the maintenance and strengthening of investors' confidence and investors' protection is of real concern to the government. The New Democrats have never at any time said that people are not entitled to a fair return on their investment. We have said that we must determine what constitutes a fair return on an investment. We say that people who invest money in this country are entitled to know how their money is being used. I unhesitatingly congratulate the minister for introducing Bill C-4, though many large corporations in this country have criticized the action he is taking, as set out in the terms of the bill.

One matter that causes me concern is that legislation passed by this Parliament means absolutely nothing unless regulations made pursuant thereto are enforced. Not long ago, namely on December 2, 1968, I filed a question, No. 932, which asked, among other things:

How many corporation have not filed returns under the Corporations and Labour Unions Returns Act?

It was answered as follows:

The number of corporations not filing returns under the Corporations and Labour Unions Returns Act is not available.

I asked another question:

What is the total number of corporations for which returns must be filed?

According to the answer, 2,990 firms failed to file returns in 1967 under the particular section of the act. I suggest that if we are not more vigilant in enforcing the requirement of Bill C-4 that returns be filed, this Parliament is wasting its time. Bills that pass this House mean very little unless the government has the fortitude to enforce their terms. I hope the minister in charge of this department will see that corporations do file returns in accordance with this bill.

The Toronto Daily Star of March 27, 1969, carried an article headed, "733 Companies Ignore Ottawa". The article said:

> Hundreds of Canadian companies have failed to file annual reports to the government as required by law but the government imposes no penalties on defaulters, Auditor-General Maxwell Henderson says in his annual report.
> Companies are required to report annually under two provisions of the Canada Corporations Act—first a copy of its financial statement and also a report about the company and its directors.
> As of March 31, 1968, there were 733 companies in default of filing a financial statement, including 257 which had never filed since their incorporation. In some cases, defaulting has persisted for 50 years.

I hope the minister will take a close look at the whole question of filing returns under the legislation; otherwise, as I say, we are wasting out our time passing it.

The previous speaker seemed to be particularly concerned about where the New Democrats stand on this issue. I can think of no better piece of literature to read into Hansard than an article that was written in December, 1969, by Wilf Hudson. This was following the NDP convention, which the previous speaker suggested resulted in a split between the two factions, which is, of course, quite inaccurate. Mr. Hudson writes:

> There was general agreement that in order for Canada to control her own destiny she must have economic control and in order to do this we must reverse the trend of foreign control. Presently our economy is determined mainly by the major investment decisions taken by large corporations.

May I digress to say we are all aware that many economists have prophesied that what happens economically in the United States will happen in Canada, too. I am sure in many cases this has been true. Mr. Hudson continues:

> This has meant to a large extent, an inefficient branch plant manufacturing industry and natural resources largely serving the U.S. market, consequently a great deal of the investment and development decisions have little reflection on the priorities and needs of Canadians.
> —Canadian independence and Canada's survival as a free nation have been and are the determined goals of the New Democratic Party.

I subscribe to that 100 per cent.

> Old party spokesmen are fond of decrying concern for Canadian independence as anti-American. Nothing shows more clearly how little they understand the feelings of Canadians. Anti-Americanism is as barren and negative a concept as is anti-French or anti-English or anti any other country or people. Canadians have always known this.
> What New Democrats seek is to make and keep Canada free to realize her full potential and greatness.

As we all know, Mr. Speaker, Canada has large resources. Recently we obtained a large export order for the shipment of coal to Japan. How much better would it be to have industry on the west coast of British Columbia make use of our resources, instead of sending them out of the country to be manufactured in other countries and re-importing those products. This would be a great boost for employment in British Columbia, rather than providing employment in Japan.

Finally, Mr. Hudson said:

> —New Democrats will use all the means available in a modern economy: expansion of public investment and public ownership, government planning, investment controls, a just tax system, purposeful monetary policies freed from the restraints of a fixed exchange rate, and necessary laws to limit and regulate foreign investment and subsidiaries in Canada.

May I repeat the stand of this party. If foreign corporations invest money in Canada, they should be controlled by regulations, as are Canadian corporations, to ensure this investment accrues to the betterment of all Canadians instead of to only a few individuals.

Before the supper adjournment one member on the other side of the House put on the record what he considered to be the meaning of the word "corporation". I should like to refer to the definition of that word in the Dictionary of Sociology and Related Sciences, which I think gives its true meaning:

• (9:40 p.m.)

> A socio-economic organization composed of individuals and born of legal sanction for the purpose of manipulating property rights and other interests to the benefit of those who compose it.

It does not say, to the benefit of the people of Canada or to any other country. The definition continues:

> If the function is primarily to create and distribute profits to a relatively limited membership it is a private corporation. On the other extreme if the dominant purpose relates to politically organized general welfare it is a public corporation.

Virtually all corporations in some degree partake of both functions.

There is little doubt that the most successful method to date of aggregating capital is the private or business corporation. But it is more than a mere method of holding property. The modern business corporation has become the prevailing method of organizing economic effort.

I suggest that the main reason for some of our problems is that the modern business corporation is an organized, economic effort for the benefit of the corporation and not for the benefit of pensioners, farmers and those people who have to purchase the produce that corporations provide at prices much above their cost. The definition continues as follows:

With all of its advantages over simpler organizations in increasing production many new social changes have occurred. The tremendous growth in size is one consideration. The assets of a few business corporations even exceed the assessed valuation of some states of the U.S. This concentration and control of capital has restricted the area of competition as it existed in the earlier stages of a free-pricing economy. A further factor is the growth of two classes: a managerial class to replace the old type of entrepreneur and an absentee-ownership class. Control is thus separated from ownership.

The old-time, private entrepreneur that we knew in the past is practically non-existent. Many people who tried to become private entrepreneurs in their communities failed because the corporate structure took over completely. I am sure these people are not the ones who are really concerned about the white paper. They are the people who really made the communities in bygone days. Now our whole community, our way of life and the social atmosphere in this society are impaired to the extent that the absentee owners make the decisions in Canada, and they are not really concerned about our economy. I am sure that with the passage of Bill C-4, this situation will not be changed. Hopefully, the reporting required will mean something to the people of Canada.

Let me refer to an article that appeared in the Toronto Star on November 11, 1969. It states:

A nationalism sigh of relief went up from many Canadians last spring when Rothmans of Pall Mall Canada beat U.S.-owned Philip Morris, another tobacco giant, for control of Canadian Breweries Ltd.

It was a good-guys-over-the-bad-guys feeling—a "hurrah for our side" cry. Canada had rallied and driven off the foreign invaders, many seemed to feel. They were dead wrong.

It was merely the victory of a South African based company over an America one. And it was symptomatic of a new trend in foreign ownership of Canada—a rise in the non-American share of our foreign-owned industries.

To make the record very clear, once again let me say that this party has never deliberately campaigned to belittle our neighbours to the south. We have had to look to our neighbours to the south because of their tremendous input into our corporations and into the over-all control of our economy. We are now in a position where other countries are outdoing our neighbours to the south, and the same regulations must apply to them. I hope that any thought in anyone's mind that we are criticizing the United States will not persist. We want to know the source of this investment.

Let me quote from the bottom of page 705 of Hansard for November 10, 1969. The minister said:

Some people say that the government has the information it needs in its files, especially in the files of the Department of National Revenue, in the files of Calura and the Dominion Bureau of Statistics; that if it does not have the required information the government has the means of getting it. The claim is made, however, that there is no need to make public the information relative to the affairs of private companies; that to do so would amount to an unwarranted invasion of privacy.

I agree with the following sentence of the minister:

Those who speak that language surely do not appreciate all the implications of their position. I can hardly believe that in this day and age they want the government of the land to stand beyond the reach of the criticism of the citizens; that they want to allow the government of the land to take decisions that affect us all on the basis of information not available to the public. The public, even the otherwise well-informed public, the analysts, the academics and commentators, cannot appreciate, discuss or criticize policy as effectively as possible because of lack of access to the same information as is available to the policymakers or to the government.

If this government and the minister are sincere in respect of that statement, I hope the minister will stand in his place and provide answers or the information requested in many Notices of Motions for the Production of Papers. These motions really ask for the information which the minister recommends should be provided. He suggests the information will be made available as a result of this bill.

It has been suggested that the provisions of this measure will make this information public, through the press, and that in this way people requiring the information will obtain it. I have in mind the small investors who now receive no information. When the time comes, I feel that the minister will not be quick to jump to his feet to provide the information to those people who want it. Before this debate is concluded I hope the minister will indicate that he agrees wholeheartedly that everything should be made public in order that everyone concerned may know what is going on.

Earlier I referred to the questionnaire that was sent out, in all sincerity, by many members. The answers contained in the majority of the 23,000 questionnaires sent out indicated a prime concern in respect of the control of our economy by foreign investors. When this bill goes to the committee I hope the minister will extend its term, in order that there may be real supervision of foreign investment. I am sure the Canadian people believe in Canada as a whole for Canadians. That is the position many people take in respect of this situation.

The primary method this government has of giving out information is undoubtedly through the Information Canada Service about which we have heard so much. I am wondering whether the minister's department will take advantage of this method in order to give the public the information required, or whether the public will have to pay for the information. Surely somewhere along the line this service should be made available to investors. This is one way in which we can make the general public more aware of what is taking place.

Some time ago the minister said there would be one change in the House regarding bills presented to us. At page 710 of Hansard for November 10 he referred to the method now used to handle the Canada Corporation Act and amendments, and said:

> The pressure of other business does not always permit the setting aside of sufficient parliamentary time to consider and dispose of requests for special acts to incorporate new companies or amend the original incorporating statutes. As a result, great inconvenience can at times be caused to the companies involved because of the uncertainty of the procedure and lengthy delays which are sometimes involved. We therefore propose an alternative procedure to the special act machinery.

It has been said many times in the House that members of this party have held up bills deliberately, without any justification. I should like to put on the record a letter one of our special assistants wrote to the editor and publisher of the Financial Post, dated April 21, 1969. It reads as follows:

> Members of the NDP Caucus have been disturbed by your front page editorial—"Where a fix is badly needed"—March 1, 1969.
> The New Democrats participating in the debate during private bills hour, are pursuing motives other than simple 'harrassment' as you have stated.
> I draw your attention to a release dated February 22, 1969. Messrs. Peters, Howard, Gilbert, Schreyer, Harding, and Saltsman point out:
> In addition to opposing further U.S. encroachment into the insurance business in Canada, the NDP members object to the proliferation of insurance companies—there are already more than 1,000 of them in this country—and to the subsequent diversion of more and more savings capital into private investment rather than into the financing of social needs."

In fact, Mr. Speaker, my colleague the hon. member for Broadview (Mr. Gilbert) referred to the deep penetration of foreign ownership in Canada and suggested that the government halt the incorporation of U.S.-owned insurance companies until it had made a full examination of this takeover problem.

When the representatives of corporations appeared before a committee of this House and gave an indication that in time the majority of their shares would be owned in Canada, there was no hesitation on the part of members of our party to let the bills go through, because it meant these companies would be Canadian-owned in time and that the policy would be made in Canada by Canadians and hopefully we would have more control over our economy.

It has never been proved that the more than 1,000 insurance companies have reduced their premiums. It has always been said that supply and demand will dictate the cost to the user, but today in any industry it would seem that the more companies there are, the more the price increases. If insurance companies were really competitive, one would wonder why premiums would not be reduced. As I have said, no one has seen this happen and I am certain no one ever will in so far as these companies are concerned.

I am sure that if the regulations the minister intends to establish in respect of Bill C-4 are adhered to, the bill will be of some assistance. But I am doubtful about this because the government has so far not seen fit to enforce other acts. However, if all this bill does is set up another bureaucracy, involving duplication of services to the detriment of the people, I cannot see any purpose in it. If this bill means that the government is concerned about making sure that it will be a law of the land and will be enforced, I will vote for the bill when it returns from the committee, provided certain amendments are made.

I hope this measure is not merely window-dressing once again and an exercise in going to the people and saying, "We are protecting you, Mr. Small Investor". If it is, then it is merely an exercise in futility and a waste of the taxpayers' money. It would be merely a case of trying to tell the people of Canada that we are really not concerned about them, and that this legislation is window-dressing only. I wish the minister well in bringing forward this bill and hope he will live up to the proposals contained in it.

Mr. John Gilbert (Broadview): Mr. Speaker, during the debate on the drug bill, in a friendly way I called the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs (Mr. Basford) the shadow-boxing champion of Canada. He has fairly well lived up to that title. When I look at Bill C-4 I am convinced that he should retain that title. I could also say he is the tinpot dictator of big business in Canada. He makes a great deal of noise and gets very little action from big business. Nevertheless, he beats his chest and tells them he will put them in their place, and so on.

When I heard the hon. member for Calgary North (Mr. Woolliams) speak tonight I was prompted to suggest that he cross the floor and join the great right wing of the Liberal Party, because on most occasions he really out-rightwings the right-wingers of that party. When I heard him say he would rather be a colony of the United States than a colony of central Canada, I felt it indicated his lack of concern for Canadians.

Mr. Aiken: Mr. Speaker, on a point of order, I should like to point out that the hon. member for Calgary North (Mr. Woolliams) was here to defend himself when a previous member misinterpreted him. I think the present comment is quite wrong and misquotes what the hon. member said.

Mr. Gilbert: Mr. Speaker, I will have an opportunity tomorrow afternoon to continue my remarks. I hope the hon. member for Calgary North will be here, because I never wish to misquote him. Therefore, may I call it ten o'clock?

ROUTINE PROCEEDINGS

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS AND NATIONAL DEFENCE

TABLING OF AND CONCURRENCE IN FIRST REPORT

Mr. Laniel: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order—

[Mr. Skoberg.]

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask unanimous consent of the House to revert to Routine Proceedings in order to table the first report of the Committee on External Affairs and National Defence on the matter placed before it, i.e. the question of Nigeria. Should unanimous consent be given, I also intend to recommend that the report be concurred in.

[English]

Mr. Deputy Speaker: It might be redundant to point out that it was not necessary for the hon. member to rise on a point of order. I believe he could have risen at ten o'clock when the hon. member would have resumed his seat. However, I believe there is no objection to our proceeding this way. Is there unanimous consent to allow the hon. member to present the report?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for the hon. member to move concurrence in the report?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): Mr. Speaker, perhaps the hon. member should be given permission to read the report before it is concurred in.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I would point out that when concurrence is sought at the time the report is presented, the practice of the House is that the Clerk read the report.

Mr. Bell: You would think the House leader would know the rules by this time.

[Translation]

Mr. Laniel: Mr. Speaker, I take pleasure in tabling the first report of the Committee on External Affairs and National Defence and recommending that it be concurred in.

[English]

The Second Clerk Assistant:

Pursuant to its order of reference dated Monday, January 12, 1970, your Committee has the honour to present its first report.

• (10:00 p.m.)

Recognizing the natural wish of the Federal Nigerian Government to come to the aid of its own countrymen, but also having regard to the disparate emergency food and medical supply situation which the committee understands exists in parts of Nigeria, your committee urges the Canadian government to continue and strengthen its representations to the government of Nigeria to approve and arrange for the utilization of the facilities offered by Joint Church Aid and Canairelief for the immediate delivery and distribution of the supplies available to these agencies, under the supervision of any agency or authority appointed or approved by the government of Nigeria, in the hope that such delivery may commence within the next 24 hours and continue for whatever interim period may be considered necessary by the Federal Nigerian Government.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is it the pleasure of the House to concur in the report?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

A motion to adjourn the House under Standing Order 40 deemed to have been moved.

PUBLIC SERVICE—BILINGUALISM—USE OF INSTANT TRANSLATION COMPUTERS IN CLASSES

Mr. Heath Macquarrie (Hillsborough): Mr. Speaker, I asked my question nearly two months ago. Having followed it through with some research I am convinced that it is even more important than it was at the time it was first asked. I have been reading some documents from the Commission on Bilingualism and Biculturalism, and my appraisal is further reinforced. Language is tremendously important in Canada today, both symbolically and realistically. Administrative efficiency is, of course, tremendously important in our times when the apparatus of the state is so powerful and its influence so pervasive.

I have always been an advocate of bilingualism in the government structure, but how we bilingualize institutions and departments of the government through the bilingualizing of individuals is a ques ion of great importance and great delicacy. Certainly government institutions should and must be bilingual, but what of the process whereby the individuals go through what we may describe as the bilingualizing course?

It is a great and valuable asset to know two languages, but it is very difficult for many people. Indeed, one of our finest neurologists pointed out that it was almost impossible for anyone past the age of puberty to become thoroughly and fully proficient in a language other than the original one. The process of bilingual training is very hard on many people who are doing hard and important work in the service of the country. Perhaps it would be well to appraise the expenditure of time and effort and the laborious, difficult and often times, alas, unsuccessful immersion courses which many of our public servants are now taking. The sad part is that many who are immersed do not stay immersed, and this may well have deleterious effects upon their work output.

I will not dwell upon the emotional aspect of this question, the kind of thing which is stirred by the remark of the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) about the running of elevators by unilingual people. But these things are involved. Nor will I dilate upon the great cost. I note a recent item which indicates that last year we spent $5,770,000 to give training to 5,000 employees of the government. So there is indeed a great cost involved. I was therefore delighted when I read the speech of that most excellent public servant, Mr. Gotlieb, Deputy Minister of the Department of Communications last fall when he spoke about the possibility of language computers which, in his words—> —can translate French to English and English to French. And the equipment has no inhibitions about who uses it.

> We may soon reach the stage where telephones and television can be equipped with small, inexpensive translation computers that can instantly translate either of our official languages into the other.

I have read that one of the officials of the Department of the Secretary of State said that this happy state of affairs may be ten years away. But I wonder how far we are away from full, not to say perfect, thoroughgoing bilingualism. So the ten-year period does not upset me at all. It was once said by a great French philosopher that to govern is to foresee. I am sometimes dubious about the ability to foresee of the present government. But surely in an age where technology is so advanced and the acceleration of scientific development is still increasing, we must and should be alert to every opportunity to make the best use of modern technology for the best of national purposes.

I think that the rapid development of computerization in this field is something to which the government should give full attention as quickly as possible. I understand from financial institutions in the United States that great steps are being taken in this area.

I do not propose that we should expect miracles in a political institution, but perhaps this might be as close to a miracle solution of an important matter as we are likely to reach. We all want full-fledged, functional bilingualism in this country. Institutions must and should be bilingual, and it must be achieved without pain to individuals and without developing a state where linguistic qualifications transcend all others. I believe the leading scientist in the government is going to reply to this question, and I would ask that urgent attention be given to this very important, potential breakthrough.

Hon. C. M. Drury (President of the Treasury Board): Mr. Speaker, the honourable and learned gentleman has raised questions on what he describes as the "foreseeability" of the present government. This, perhaps, is indicative of the problem which he has set the computers. I would defy him, and a number of other well-known forensic experts, to translate that expression in the exact sense he intended, that is, the question of the "foreseeability" of the present government.

I think this illustrates the nature of the problem. Language, French or perhaps even more particularly English, is capable of tremendous nuances, tremendous shades of meaning, part of which is conveyed by phonetics and inflections of speech, and part of which is conveyed by different pronunciations of different words spelled in the same way.

An hon. Member: And by shrugs.

Mr. Drury: Part of the meaning is conveyed in the order in which the same words are used. As yet we have not found a computer, even the largest, capable of programming, comprehending and producing all these shades and nuances which the human brain—perhaps the world's greatest computer—has been able to achieve in a number of instances.

For some time now the National Research Council has been supporting research work at the universities of Saskatchewan and Montreal, designed to produce a reasonable and practicable system of machine-translation from English into French. The hon. gentleman is probably well aware that considerable additional work is being done in this field, particularly in the United States, in languages rather less mundane than English and French—some of the eastern European languages and some Asiatic languages—but to date no one has achieved more than a rudimentary system of translation. This, of course, has to be extensively edited by a human computer or a person trained in translation.

I think it is rather more likely that we will reach a level of bilingualism in primary, secondary and higher education in this country which will be more widely effective and more usable than the kind of machine program indicated here. We can now and in the reasonable future will be able to do primitive work, if nothing sophisticated.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please.

BROADCASTING—EFFECT OF CRTC DECISION RESPECTING CABLEVISION

Mr. P. M. Mahoney (Calgary South): Mr. Speaker, this participation in the adjournment debate arises out of my dissatisfaction with an answer given me by the Secretary of State (Mr. Pelletier) as reported at page 92 of the English edition of Hansard of December 17. The question was a follow-up of questioning by myself and other members, on December 4, reported at pages 1587 and 1588 of Hansard, concerning the ruling announced on December 3 by the Canadian Radio-Television Commission denying the use of microwave or other technical systems for the importation of television programs from United States stations to Canadian markets.

Effectively, the ruling denies access to United States television for Canadians living too far from the United States border to receive the signal off the air, either directly or via community antenna television systems. This does not affect Vancouver, Winnipeg, Toronto, Ottawa or Montreal. It does deny United States television to Calgary, Edmonton, Regina, Saskatoon, Sudbury, Halifax and St. John's. No Canadian will dispute that the Canadian broadcasting system envisaged by the Broadcasting Act is essential to our national identity. Most will dispute that geographic discrimination has a valid place in the development of that policy.

The CRTC expressed concern about enlarging United States advertising markets in Canada. That consideration is purely fatuous. The CRTC is, or should be, well aware that it is entirely within the competence of today's technology to delay the signal and edit out the bulk of the commercial content. The advertising aspects of this competition can be readily resolved. The sanctity of the idea that cablevision must transmit the signal, the whole signal, and nothing but the signal, was destroyed on June 25, 1968, when cablevision companies were required to delete the eastern election results from United States signals distributed in Vancouver while the polls were still open there.

In reaching its decision, the CRTC determined, "The fact that through force of circumstances many U.S. stations now cover other parts of Canada ... does not justify a decision ... which would further accelerate this process." The corollary of this position is: the fact that through force of circumstances many parts of Canada are not now covered by U.S. stations justifies a decision which would perpetuate this situation.

It is with considerable trepidation that an ordinary Canadian enters into the never-never world of the professional Canadian. But I am compelled to ask, does the CRTC really feel that it is serving the national interest by creating yet another division in an already overly-divided Canada: those who should be permitted access to U.S. stations because a fact of geography prevents the CRTC from denying such access, and those who shall be denied access to U.S. stations because a fact of geography permits the CRTC to deny such access? While the question of which are the first class citizens and which the second may be open to dispute by the professional Canadians, there is no doubt in so far as those who have been denied a right on purely geographic grounds are concerned.

Section 2(b) of the Broadcasting Act reads as follows:

> —the Canadian broadcasting system should be effectively owned and controlled by Canadians so as to safeguard, enrich and strengthen the cultural, political, social and economic fabric of Canada;

It is in the execution of its mandate to achieve and maintain this basic purpose—and let it be emphasized that while "safeguard" embraces the concept of maintenance, "enrich and strengthen" embrace the concept of achievement—that the CRTC must justify its decision.

If, in the process of safeguarding the cultural, political, social and economic fabric of Canada, the CRTC is right in refusing a licence permitting "the enlargement of the Canadian audience and market areas of U.S. networks or stations" then surely, in the process of enriching and strengthening the same fabric, its obligation is to reduce the same audience and market areas where it can. This will involve the simple policy of not renewing existing CATV licences as they expire, except on condition that the applicants not distribute U.S. programs. Let us not only prevent the extension of this rupture in our cultural, political, social and economic fabric; let us also mend it where we can. Let us not only preserve the fabric where it remains intact; let us patch it where it has been torn. Let us not only safeguard the pure; let us enrich and strengthen those already corrupted.

When the Secretary of State first answered questions on this subject on December 4, I felt his instincts were right. He indicated that the decision "could very well justify a statement on motions" and, again, that the CRTC's autonomy did not prevent the government giving it guidelines. This instinctive reaction was the right reaction. It was, therefore, particularly disappointing to find, on December 17, that the minister had got his instincts well under control and was relying on the letter of the law. The commission is independent, and cannot be instructed by the government.

This ruling has profound political implications. It is the government, not the CRTC, that will be held politically accountable for the decision. Surely, with the adventures of another independent body, the Company of Young Canadians, rather fresh in its memory, the government recognizes that reality.

We were pretty happy with the work of the CYC in Calgary. That opinion was not shared in Montreal, and for very good reason. As far as I know, Montreal is reasonably happy with the CRTC. That opinion is not shared in Calgary, and for very good reason. Nor is it shared in Edmonton, Regina, Saskatoon, Sudbury, Halifax and St. John's for the same good reason.

We are all awaiting with interest to see if the government will react with the same vigour to the politically unacceptable conduct of the independent commission as it did to that of the independent company, or whether it has certain geographic priorities of its own.

Hon. Robert Stanbury (Minister without Portfolio): Mr. Speaker, as the hon. member has observed, the Canadian Radio-Television Commission is an independent body established under the Broadcasting Act to supervise and ensure the development of the Canadian broadcasting system, free of partisan political control. If that act should be amended, the Secretary of State (Mr. Pelletier) would welcome the suggestions of hon. members. However, the Broadcasting Act, section 23, allows the Governor in Council to set aside or refer back to the commission for reconsideration its decision to issue, amend or renew a broadcasting licence, but there is no such authority in the case of a rejection of an application, nor was any such authority suggested by the Secretary of State on December 4.

Because of the concern expressed by the hon. member for Calgary South (Mr. Mahoney) and others, the House has already referred the annual report of the commission to the Standing Committee on Broadcasting, Films and Assistance to the Arts to give members an early opportunity to explore this decision of the commission.

I understand that arrangements have been made for the chairman of the commission to appear before the committee this Thursday. There should then be a full opportunity to question him and to consider the matter fully. I hope all interested members will take this opportunity to study the question as carefully as it deserves and give the commission the benefit of their views.

COMBINES—REQUEST FOR INVESTIGATION OF NICKEL PRICE INCREASES

Mr. David Orlikow (Winnipeg North): Mr. Speaker, on November 27 I asked the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs (Mr. Basford) whether the anti-combines division of his department would investigate the simultaneous increases in the price of nickel announced within two days by three of the major nickel producers of this country.

My question was motivated by the very sharp increase in the price of metals produced and sold in Canada and the disastrous effect these increases will have on the government's plea to all sectors of the Canadian economy that they exercise moderation and restraint so that the galloping increase in the cost of living might be moderate.

The Financial Times of January 5, 1970, reported that the price of lead in 1969 increased by 27 per cent; the price of nickel increased 24 per cent; zinc, 15 per cent; tin, 12 per cent; aluminum, 7 per cent and copper, about which we had some considerable discussion this afternoon, increased by 26 per cent. This does not include the latest increase which was announced and which the government persuaded the companies to put off for two months. This will increase the price of copper by 45 per cent in one year.

What happened? On October 25 the International Nickel Company of Canada announced that nickel prices were being increased by a record 24.8 per cent. Inco's new price for electrolytic refined metal was $1.28 (U.S.) per pound, up $1.03 (U.S.) per pound. Sherritt Gordon, another of the major producers, matched Inco's 25 cents a pound increase for nickel sold in the United States and overseas but raised its Canadian price by 23 cents a pound. The next day the third large producer, Falconbridge, completed the round of nickel price increases when it raised the base price of electrolytic nickel by 25 cents (U.S.) to $1.27 (U.S.) a pound f.o.b. Thorold.

The district organization of the United Steelworkers, the union which represents all the workers employed in the mining and processing of nickel, called on the Prices and Incomes Commission to hold a public hearing, offering to demonstrate on the basis of the research done by the union's research department that the companies' profits were so substantial there was no need to increase prices as they had done.

Industries affected were quick to announce that the sharp increases would inevitably and almost immediately lead to increases in their prices. Mr. Togham, President of Chrysler Canada Limited said—and this is reported in the Globe and Mail of October 26—that the 25 cent price increase in the metal was bound to increase the price of cars. Similarly, Mr. O.S. Leslie, President of Atlas Steels Limited, probably the biggest domestic user of nickel, said the new price increase was certain to have an effect on the cost and price of stainless steel.

I want to put on record the financial position of the companies concerned. One can find these figures in the Financial Post. The net income of International Nickel in 1967 was $141 million. In 1968 it showed a modest increase to $143 million, but the total assets had grown from $115 million to $396 million; in other words, by about $275 million in one year. This is a pretty substantial increase and one which does not indicate any need on the part of this company to increase its price by 24 per cent at one time.

Sherritt Gordon's net profit in 1966 amounted to $3,760,000. In the next year it had increased to $5,392,000, and I am sure 1968 showed a further increase. The net income of the Falconbridge Corporation dropped a little in 1968 as compared with 1967, from $25 million to $23 million. But the total assets increased from $248 million to $284 million, a substantial increase and one which would indicate that this company, too, could very well have done without an increase at the time announced.

What I am saying is simply this: the anti-combines section of the hon. gentleman's department should exercise the responsibility given to it by the law to investigate these simultaneous and identical price increases, which in my submission indicate clearly that we have here a combine in any sense of the word and one which ought to be prosecuted to the end of obtaining an order to discontinue the kind of collusion which is obvious in the price increases announced in October, 1969.

Mr. Paul Langlois (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): Mr. Speaker, when the hon. member for Winnipeg North (Mr. Orlikow) first raised the matter of increases in nickel prices in the House of Commons on November 27, he requested the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs (Mr. Basford) to ask the combines section of his department to investigate whether there had been illegal collusion. The minister replied, as reported at page 1305 of Hansard:

> The director of research under the Combines Investigation Act watches specific price movements and if there is a possibility of a breach of the act he has a statutory duty to take proceedings.

As the minister has pointed out, it has been the policy in the House for the minister responsible for the Combines Investigation Act not to reveal what inquiries are under way, in accordance with section 28 of the Combines Investigation Act, until such cases are either taken to court or reported in the annual report of the director. The minister remains aware of the price increases referred to by the hon. member, as does the director, who is keeping a watch on the situation in accordance with his usual practice. Identical price increases in such industries, however, are not by themselves strong evidence of collusion. I can only add that we can continue to expect proper enforcement of the legislation.

Motion agreed to and the House adjourned at 10.30 p.m.

PRIVILEGE

MR. HEES—TIME OF RELEASE OF PRICE INDEX FIGURES BY BUREAU OF STATISTICS

Hon. George Hees (Prince Edward-Hastings): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a question of privilege to set the record straight on a matter of importance affecting the integrity of the government.

Yesterday I implied, by my question about who ordered the change in time for making public the monthly cost of living figures from 8 a.m. to half an hour after the House meets, that the government was employing some nefarious means of hiding the facts in an effort to blunt a possible attack on itself.

I have examined this situation carefully in the intervening 24 hours and I find that this variation in the time of release was made at the request of the Press Gallery to give the morning papers an even break on this important news each month. I also find to my great surprise that the minister who authorized this variation is none other than the present member for Prince Edward-Hastings.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

ROUTINE PROCEEDINGS

JUSTICE AND LEGAL AFFAIRS

Third report of Standing Committee on Justice and Legal Affairs—Mr. Tolmie.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

NIGERIA—CANADIAN ACTION FOLLOWING CEASE-FIRE

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I am sure that the House would like to have the latest information we have received from Lagos. First, may I report to the House that the resolution passed last evening was forwarded within an hour to our High Commissioner in Lagos and delivered by him to the Nigerian authorities.

While we have not yet received the official report of the observer team, we have had a preliminary message from Brigadier General Drewry, who returned last night from the Third Division area. Major Bristoe, who went to the First Division area, is still in the field. Brigadier General Drewry visited Aba, Ikot-Ekpene, Umuahia and Owerri. He reports that the Biafran forces are surrendering en masse and discarding their uniforms and equipment. He found no evidence of any atrocities. The physical condition of the refugees is much better than was feared, and they are being fed by the army wherever possible.

Brigadier General Drewry reports that the military authorities in the area are confident that they can cope with the refugees and prisoners of war problems in their areas of responsibility, and that the Nigerians are determined to sort out their relief problems on their own. Brigadier General Drewry's message refers, however, to the shortage of trucks which is also underlined by the report we have today received from our High Commissioner in Lagos.

The problem of delivery of food and drugs has been greatly simplified by the Biafran collapse. Road and river routes are now open and delivery distances are much shorter.

Although there is reassurance in the reports I have received, no one would wish to underestimate the gravity of the problems in the battle area and Eastern Nigeria generally.

One of these problems appears to be the shortage of trucks. We have already made money available which can be used by the Nigerians to purchase trucks locally. The government has instructed CIDA to check urgently the availability of suitable trucks in Canada and is investigating means of delivery. As the House knows, our Hercules aircraft remain on the alert, and are available for delivery purposes to Nigeria or a neighbouring country if this proves to be feasible.

The House will also be interested to learn that we are contributing $200,000 to UNICEF to support its increased program in Nigeria.

Hon. Robert L. Stanfield (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I do not know whether the statement made by the Secretary of State for External Affairs was intended to give comfort, but it certainly does not do so.

It is clear that the government has received no word from the government of Nigeria with respect to the approval of any plan to provide relief through Canairelief or any other agency. Indeed, to judge from the rebuff received by the British in their attempt to make arrangements to fly in a modest amount of medical and other supplies there is every reason to believe that the government of Nigeria does not intend to accept assistance from outside. This would not be a cause for concern if there were not widespread fear of genocide and if there were confidence that the government of Nigeria was sufficiently well organized and had the capacity to bring the massive relief to these areas which is necessary immediately. Some, at least, who are familiar with the area—and I understand this view was expressed to the committee last night—doubt very much that the Nigerian authorities, including the armed forces, are in a position to make this kind of relief available.

We are confronted here with a very serious situation. This government all along has pursued a policy the only justification for which was that it would enable the government to remain on friendly terms with the government of Nigeria and thus be in a position to be helpful after hostilities ceased. This attitude prevented the government from furnishing relief to starving Nigerians on a scale which would have been possible while the fighting was going on. It looks, now, as though it will produce nothing at all by way of results. Meanwhile, as far as one can judge the Secretary of State for External Affairs and the government are sitting quietly by, sending messages to Nigeria and getting a certain amount of information from our observer team but taking no steps at all to bring home to the government of Nigeria the concern of the civilized world, not about the intentions of the government of Nigeria, which we are not entitled to assume are ill, but about its capacity and ability to prevent massive starvation, as well as our concern that the civilized world should not be prevented at this time from affording the relief which it is in a position to supply.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Stanfield: This situation, in which there are masses of people in danger of starvation while outside countries are in a position to assure that this danger can be relieved if they are permitted to take action in co-operation with the constituted authorities, is surely absurd. I do not think the government is doing anything like enough to bring home to the government of Nigeria the concern felt about this situation by the people of Canada and, indeed, of the world.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Stanfield: The government has evidently indicated that it is prepared to make more observers available but we have not even yet received an assurance from the minister that he or any minister of the government has urged or, indeed, insisted that the international observer team be enlarged so that it can do a proper job.

Mr. Sharp: How do you insist?

Mr. Stanfield: You do so by making representations directly—

Mr. Sharp: That is what I did.

Mr. Stanfield: —which the hon. gentleman did not do.

Mr. Sharp: Oh yes, I have.

Mr. Stanfield: Furthermore, you participate in organizing civilized opinion. Other countries are interested in this situation, and the United Nations is still in existence.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Stanfield: The Secretary of State for External Affairs has the responsibility. If he wants us to exercise that responsibility we shall exercise it. I say to him that the kind of complacency indicated during recent days and in his statement today is unfortunate. The hon. gentleman refers to a shortage of trucks. I pointed out on Monday—it was not just my idea; it was recognized generally—that there would be a shortage of trucks and suggested that Hercules aircraft should be made available to fly them into the area of difficulty. The Secretary of State for External Affairs cavalierly dismissed this as an impractical suggestion. Yet today, two days later, he is bringing it forward as his own idea.

I urge the government, particularly the Prime Minister and the Secretary of State for External Affairs, to exert pressure and influence upon the government of Nigeria, and I do this for two reasons.

Mr. Sharp: Patronize them; treat them as inferiors: that is the attitude of the Leader of the Opposition.

Mr. Stanfield: The first reason is to make certain that a tragedy does not occur. The second is to ensure that other countries, such as Canada, are permitted by the government of Nigeria to co-operate with the Nigerian people in avoiding a great tragedy. There is no sign in the statement of the minister that the government is taking the necessary measures.

Mr. Andrew Brewin (Greenwood): Mr. Speaker, in the face of the vast, unfolding tragedy which is taking place in Nigeria I can take no comfort from the statement of the Secretary of State for External Affairs. I am glad that the message contained in the resolution unanimously passed by the House last night has been so quickly conveyed to our High Commissioner in Lagos. May I suggest that in order to underline it the government adopt a procedure which has been adopted before and send a special envoy to speak to the Nigerian head of state about this matter. We do not think that the normal diplomatic channels are adequate for the purpose of conveying the urgency of this message. Having unanimously passed the resolution we think it requires more immediate action than that available through the usual channels, which have not been too effective in the past.

We are not in the least bit reassured by the soothing words of the military observers. Often before they have issued soothing statements having had very little real opportunity for observation. The function they performed before was to blind the eyes of the people of the world to what was going on.

Some hon. Members: Shame!

Mr. Brewin: Hon. members say "shame", and I say shame too. Nevertheless the fact is, whether members of the government wish to acknowledge it or not, that these observers have issued soothing reports in the past which have turned out to be without foundation.

Mr. Sharp: These are Canadians you are talking about.

Mr. Brewin: Let the government not shelter behind these people who, as I say, do not have adequate means or opportunity to observe what is going on.

Another part of the statement indicates the complacency of the government in that the minister said that the problem of food and drugs has been greatly simplified by the Biafran collapse. That is, of course, true if you look at the situation in the long term. However, the reason a committee of this House urged immediate action in regard to the supplies that are available in Sao Tomé was that the committee knew that the ultimate solution of delivering food and drugs via land routes could not come about at once and that there was an immediate need for the supplies that were available. Somehow the urgency of this message of the committee has not registered itself on the government; if it had we would not have had the kind of complacent statement we have been given today.

I want to emphasize once again that in expressing itself through the resolution presented by the committee this House has said that the only immediate answer is to use the supplies in Sao Tomé and to urge the Nigerian government to accept the offer of those personnel who can do what is required now. I believe that chaos and starvation, hardly paralleled in history, exist. I hope I am wrong in deducing from the statement of the minister that we are really having a continuation of the complacency to which we have become accustomed.

[Translation]

Mr. Gérard Laprise (Abitibi): Mr. Speaker, in his statement, the minister informed us that following the resolution passed last evening concerning Canada's position on the Nigerian policy, a message was forwarded to our High Commissioner in Lagos. This is a commendable action, but it is practically the only thing to be learned from the minister's statement.

The minister states that he received reports from both Canadian observers in the field; those reports are quite at variance with those we heard last night during the session of the Standing Committee on External Affairs and National Defence.

Last night, a representative of Canairelief actually told us that if major steps were not taken within 72 hours, most people located in the Biafran sector would die, and the statement had already been made several hours before.

It is therefore obvious today that nothing has yet been done to remedy the situation. The minister has merely forwarded to our High Commissioner in Lagos the motion passed unanimously last night. Considering what the government is now doing, we can only admit that its policy copies much too closely that of Great Britain on the Nigerian-Biafran problem.

Some hon. members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Laprise: We were informed last night that Britain had to order the unloading of an aircraft full of drugs which was ready to fly to Nigeria, because General Gowon refused to allow a military plane to fly over his country. Yet, when it was a matter of sending military planes to fight Biafra, General Gowon agreed, and Britain did not hesitate to send them. We were told, yesterday afternoon, that Canada is prepared at a few minutes' notice, to send by air to Nigeria, a portable hospital and that it is still awaiting General Gowon's permission.

In connection with this war which has been going on for three or four years in Nigeria, we see the wish of one tribe to annihilate another. In spite of the unconditional surrender made three or four days ago, we find that the same tribe still wants to destroy the Ibos.

I suggest, therefore, that strong measures be taken. If it is necessary to make General Gowon understand these things through force, or else if aristocracy can serve any purpose at the United Nations, it is time to see to it.

HARBOURS

TABLING OF REPORT ON PORT OF CHURCHILL

Hon. Donald C. Jamieson (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, because of the interest to all hon. members and the public, and in light of the commitment I made some time ago, I have the honour to submit a report intitled "Port of Churchill—Potential for Development" in the two official languages.

QUESTIONS ON THE ORDER PAPER

INVESTIGATION OF DEATH OF SEALS

Question No. 84—Mr. Harding:

1. Has the Department of Fisheries and Forestry undertaken an investigation of the 3,000 to 10,000 seals which died in the Gulf of St. Lawrence last spring when they were caught in a vast oil slick near the Strait of Belle Isle and, if so, what are the results of this investigation?

2. What action is contemplated by the Department to prevent further occurrences of oil pollution?

Mr. E. F. Whelan (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Fisheries and Forestry): 1. Yes. There was no oil slick in the Strait of Belle Isle. While a number of seals there were covered with oil in varying degree, some of these animals bore tags which were affixed about three weeks earlier off northwestern Prince Edward Island where there was an oily layer on the water at the time of tagging. This oil is presumed to have come from an accidental spill at Cape Tormentine, New Brunswick, on the night of January 30, 1969, which ran into the harbour and under the shore ice before corrective action could be taken. Some seals died from the oil pollution, but it is felt the numbers reported have been greatly exaggerated.

2. Contingency plans for nullifying the adverse effects of oil spills have been developed. There is also a growing awareness amongst users of oil of the need to prevent occurrences of this nature.

RATE OF RETURN AND EARNINGS, BELL CANADA

Question No. 119—Mr. Orlikow:

1. For the years 1966, 1967, 1968 and 1969, what was the permissible rate of return for Bell Canada under the regulation of the Canadian Transport Commission?

2. For the same years what was Bell Canada's actual earnings on the rate of return?

3. Will the Government of Canada rescind the September 29 ruling of the Canadian Transport Commission which allowed an assortment of increases of service charges?

Mr. Gérard Loiselle (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Transport): The Canadian Transport Commission advise as follows: 1. No regulation was made. However, by Judgment dated May 4, 1966, the Board of Transport Commissioners for Canada found the over-all rate structure of the Company to be just and reasonable at that time by reference to a permissive level of earning ranging from 6.2 per cent to 6.6 per cent on total average capitalization. By decision dated September 25, 1969, the Railway Transport Committee of the Canadian Transport Commission decided not to fix a permissive level of earnings at this time.

2. 1966, 6.5 per cent; 1967, 6.8 per cent; 1968, 6.9 per cent; 1969, not available.

3. The matter of review and appeal of orders or decisions of the Canadian Transport Commission is governed by sections 52 and 53 of the Railway Act.

ESTIMATE RESPECTING ARCTIC SHIPPING

Question No. 140—Mr. Skoberg:

1. What is the breakdown of the one billion dollar estimate stated by the Minister of Transport if commercial shipping begins using Canada's Arctic?

2. Is the above estimate based on any comprehensive study, and if so, who are the authors of this study?

Mr. Gérard Loiselle (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Transport): 1. No firm estimate was given. Figure was used to represent order of magnitude that might be involved, having regard for the possible need for a few very large icebreakers, some aids to navigation and probable extensive harbour works at various points including dredging and protection from ice. The harbour component might well be provided by private enterprise.

2. Answered by 1 above.

ROBBERY, VIOLENCE—PERSONS UNDER 25 ARRESTED

Question No. 189—Mr. Mather:

What percentage of persons arrested for robbery or crimes of violence are under 25 years of age?

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): The Dominion Bureau of Statistics reports that: Information available in the Dominion Bureau of Statistics, for the years 1963 to 1967, is shown in the following table.

It should be pointed out, however, that not all persons arrested by the police appear in court; some are sent to mental hospitals and some have charges dropped before appearing in court. In addition, many Juveniles appear "informally" and these cases need not be reported to the Dominion Bureau of Statistics.

Sources: Statistics of Criminal and Other Offences (DBS Pub. No. 85-201) Juvenile Delinquents (DBS Pub. No. 85-202).

AIRPORT NOISE ABATEMENT PROCEDURES

Question No. 197—Mr. Goode:

What noise abatement procedures and rules are enforced and planned by the Department of Transport at the following international airports: Vancouver, Toronto and Montreal with regard to (a) take-off and landings of commercial aircraft (b) run-ups of jet aircraft engines on standing aircraft and (c) run-ups of jet aircraft engines being repaired after removal from aircraft?

Mr. Gérard Loiselle (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Transport): Vancouver—(a) None; (b) None; (c) None.

Toronto and Montreal—Special procedures for the abatement of aircraft noise are applicable to all turbo-jet aircraft.

(a) Runways at these airports have been assessed from the viewpoint of noise abatement and an order of preference established for their operational use. Whenever practicable and considering wind and weather conditions, the most preferential runway will be used.

At Montreal, where residential development is close to the airport, departing jet aircraft follow a noise abatement climb technique until they are 2,000 feet above ground level. This procedure is no longer in effect at Toronto where it has been determined that most aircraft can attain 2,500 feet above ground level prior to overflying residential areas.

With respect to arriving jet aircraft every effort is made to ensure that: Turns on to final approach are completed at least six miles from the runway; the use of thrust, undercarriage and flaps shall, consistent with safety, give the best possible performance with respect to noise abatement; the aircraft maintains an altitude of 2,000 feet above ground level as long as practicable before commencing final descent to the runway, and when conditions permit, the aircraft remains on or slightly above the approach slope angle as projected by the landing aids in use for the runway. (b) None. (c) None.

C.N.R. PENSIONS

Question No. 206—Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre):

1 How many retired employees of the Canadian National Railways are in receipt of pensions of less than $25.00 per month?

2. How many are in receipt of a pension of $25.00 per month?

3. How many are in receipt of pensions of (a) $25.01 to $29.99 per month (b) $30.00 to $39.99 per month (c) $40.00 to $49.99 per month (d) $50.00 to $59.99 per month (e) $60.00 to $69.99 per month (f) $70.00 to $79.99 per month (g) $80.00 to $89.99 per month (h) $90.00 to $99.99 per month (i) $100.00 to $124.99 per month; (j) $125.00 to $149.99 per month (k) $150.00 to $199.99 per month (l) $200.00 to $299.99 per month (m) $300 per month or over?

Mr. Gérard Loiselle (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Transport): The management of Canadian National Railways advises as follows: The information shown being as of December 31st, 1968. 1. 387.

Amount of Pension				Number
25.01	to	29.99	a month	594
30.00	to	39.99	a month	1,178

125.00	to	149.99	a month	2,260
150.00	to	199.99	a month	3,694
200.00	to	299.99	a month	4,907
300.00	and over			2,891

In a number of cases the amounts of pensions paid by Canadian National Railways do not represent the total pensions payable to employees for railway service. Pensions payable by the C.N.R. to international employees (service in both Canada and the United States) relate to their service in Canada only. Such employees also receive annuities payable under the U.S. Railroad Retirement Act or the Social Security Act for service performed in the United States. For example, in the group receiving pensions of under $25 from the C.N.R., there are sixty-three former international employees who also receive U.S. Railroad Retirement or Social Security annuities in respect of C.N.R. service rendered in the United States. The balance of this group consists of employees who elected early retirement (before age 65) with reduced basic ($25) pensions, and employees who had very short service and small contributions.

Questions

C.N.R. PENSION FUNDS

Question No. 207—Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre):

1. What was the total amount of money on the books of the pension funds of the Canadian National Railways as at (a) December 31, 1964 (b) December 31, 1965 (c) December 31, 1966 (d) December 31, 1967 (e) December 31, 1968?

2. What rate of interest does the C.N.R. pay on this money?

3. What amount of interest was credited to the above noted pension funds during the year ending (a) December 31, 1964 (b) December 31, 1965 (c) December 31, 1966 (d) December 31, 1967 (e) December 31, 1968?

4. What was the total amount paid out of the above noted funds in pensions during the years ending (a) December 31, 1964 (b) December 31, 1965 (c) December 31, 1966 (d) December 31, 1967 (e) December 31, 1968?

Mr. Gérard Loiselle (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Transport): The management of Canadian National Railways advises as follows: 1. The total amounts of the investments, cash and other current assets on the books of the Pension Trust Funds were: As at 31 December 1964, $531,627,361; 31 December 1965, $575,887,009; 31 December 1966, $626,818,658; 31 December 1967, $684,962,758; 31 December 1968, $743,321,106.

2. The C.N.R. does not pay interest on these assets which are held separately in the Pension Trust Funds.

3. Net earnings on the investments of the Pension Trust Funds were: Year ended 31 December 1964, $23,830,471; 31 December 1965, $25,932,593; 31 December 1966, $28,763,156; 31 December 1967, $34,541,149; 31 December 1968, $39,214,027.

4. Total amounts of the pensions paid out of the Pension Trust Funds were: Year ended 31 December 1964, $32,145,649; 31 December 1965, $34,575,142; 31 December 1966, $37,595,615; 31 December 1967, $40,688,714; 31 December 1968, $46,065,616.

INDUSTRY, TRADE AND COMMERCE—MARKET ANALYSIS BRANCH

2. The resources of the branches of the Office of Economics are directed primarily to the provision of analytical background, briefing and advice required for the development and implementation of Departmental policies and programs and for dealing with particular issues requiring the attention of the Department. Thus the output of the Office consists mainly of analytical material which comprises an integral part of departmental decisions and operations and does not take the form of independent, self-contained studies in published form.

The Market Analysis Branch maintains a continuous forward-looking analysis of significant developments in major farm, forest, mineral and energy sectors, and in the principal manufacturing industries. The branch also undertakes research into the economic aspects of industrial growth and organization, into the effects of tariffs and other factors affecting Canadian industries and into the structure and trend of foreign country markets and international commodity markets.

INDUSTRY, TRADE AND COMMERCE—GENERAL ANALYSIS BRANCH

Question No. 225—Mr. Peters:

1. Who are the staff members of the General Analysis Branch of the Office of Economics in the Department of Industry, Trade and Commerce, and what are their respective classifications and annual salaries?

2. What specific studies have been undertaken by the General Analysis Branch of the Office of Economics?

The work of the General Analysis Branch involves the continuing assessment of Canada's over-all economic and trade performance and related domestic and international developments.

INDUSTRY, TRADE AND COMMERCE—PRODUCTIVITY BRANCH

Question No. 226—Mr. Peters:

1. Who are the staff members of the Productivity Branch of the Office of Economics in the Department of Industry, Trade and Commerce, and what are their respective classifications and annual salaries?

2. What specific studies have been undertaken by the Productivity Branch of the Office of Economics?

Thus the output of the office consists mainly of analytical material which comprises an integral part of Departmental decisions and operations and does not take the form of independent, self-contained studies in published form.

The work of the Productivity Branch involves the analysis of industrial productivity and the assessment of the significance of factors contributing to productivity changes and variations, such as technological progress, management performance, specialization, and size of plant including the development of measures to facilitate inter-industry, inter-firm, international and trend 'comparisons'.

INDUSTRY, TRADE AND COMMERCE—INVESTMENT ANALYSIS BRANCH

Question No. 227—Mr. Peters:

1. What specific studies have been undertaken by the Investment Analysis Branch of the Office of Economics in the Department of Industry, Trade and Commerce on programs related to foreign investment in Canada, Canadian investment abroad and the operators of international companies?

2. Who are the staff members of the Investment Analysis Branch of the Office of Economics in the Department of Industry, Trade and Commerce, and what are their respective classifications and annual salaries?

Questions

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): 1. The Investment Analysis Branch is engaged in the following specific areas of work relating to foreign investment: (a) The implementation of follow-up action to the issuance of "Some Guiding Principles of Good Corporate Behaviour" including the collection, quarterly and annually, of data from the larger foreign-owned subsidiaries in Canada on various aspects of their operations and financing. The information is useful in assessing performance of foreign-owned subsidiaries in relation to objectives set out in the guiding principles and contributes to a better understanding of their role in the Canadian economy. An initial report on the results of these surveys was published in 1967 under the title "Foreign-owned Subsidiaries in Canada". An updated report is now nearing completion; (b) The monitoring of overseas capital transfers by non-financial companies in Canada which is necessary as part of an arrangement with the United States under which Canada is exempted from U.S. regulations affecting capital flows; (c) The maintenance of an intelligence system on the ownership and structure of international concerns operating in Canada and of Canadian companies with investments abroad; (d) The examination, as required for departmental purposes, of the impact and implications of various aspects of foreign investment in Canada; (e) The review as required for departmental purposes, of foreign government actions affecting international direct investment which may have an impact on Canada.

BASLE CONFERENCE "NUCLEX 69"—PROMOTION EXPENSES

Question No. 249—Mr. Gilbert:

What is the breakdown in the sharing of promotion expenses between (a) Atomic Energy of Canada Limited (b) Eldorado Nuclear Limited and (c) private Canadian firms, regarding the triennial Basle Conference, called Nuclex 69, this year in Switzerland?

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): This exhibit was sponsored by the Department of Industry, Trade and Commerce as part of its 1969-70 Trade Fair Program.

There were nine participants whose contributions were based on the formula employed by the Department in all such events. This requires payment of a flat fee per square foot, the same for all participants, and a higher percentage of cost depending upon the number of occasions on which the same exhibitor has participated. (i.e. 25 per cent of cost of space for 1st time exhibitors, 50 per cent of space cost for second time exhibitors, 75 per cent of cost of space for 3rd time exhibitors and 100 per cent of space cost for fourth time exhibitors.)

On this basis charges were made to: (a) Atomic Energy of Canada Limited (1st time exhibitor), $1,750.00; (b) Eldorado Nuclear Limited (2nd time exhibitor), $576.00; (c) Seven private Canadian firms (1st and 2nd time exhibitors), $2,794.50; Total $5,120.50.

In addition, contributions for an official reception were made by participants on a voluntary basis in the following amounts: (a) Atomic Energy of Canada Limited, $300; (b) Eldorado Nuclear Limited, $200; (c) Seven private Canadian firms, $659; Total $1,159.

SALE OF HMCS "BONAVENTURE"

Question No. 342—Mr. Crouse:

1. Has the government offered for sale the 22,000 ton aircraft carrier HMCS Bonaventure and, if so, what are the terms of sale and the asking price?

2. Have bids been invited from other countries on this ship?

3. Will bids from other countries on this ship be acceptable to Canada and, if not, what are the names of countries whose bids are unacceptable to Canada?

4. Will the bill of sale on the Bonaventure be conditional, so that it cannot be resold to any country unacceptable to the Canadian Government?

Mr. D. W. Groos (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of National Defence): 1. Yes. The terms of sale and asking price are subject to negotiation.

2. Yes.

3. Bids from foreign governments would be assessed relative to established Canadian Government policy and regulations regarding the export of military equipment.

4. Yes. Conditions of sale would include this provision.

FUNDS FOR LEVEL RAILWAY CROSSING ELIMINATION

Question No. 353—Mr. Harkness:

1. How much money has been made available in each of the past ten years for the purpose of eliminating level railway crossings on the Trans-Canada and other main highways?

2. How much money is it planned to be made available for this purpose during each of the coming five years?

[Mr. Pepin.]

Mr. Gérard Loiselle (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Transport): The Canadian Transport Commission advises as follows: 1. The records of the Canadian Transport Commission and the former Board of Transport Commissioners have not been maintained in a manner to differentiate between the Trans-Canada and other main highways, or other designated types of thoroughfares, where money has been applied from the Railway Grade Crossing Fund for the elimination of level crossings. In the past 10 years contributions from the Railway Grade Crossing Fund have been authorized in the following amounts towards the cost of construction of new grade separations and/or highway or railway diversions for the purpose of eliminating existing level highway railway crossings: 1959, $11,121,399.03; 1960, $10,084,244.96; 1961, $8,870,527.43; 1962, $10,909,940.99; 1963, $6,439,091.99; 1964, $10,672,076.28; 1965, $9,708,350.12; 1966, $13,301,414.06; 1967, $14,707,363.98; 1968, $12,859,896.51; Total $108,674,305.35.

2. The amount to be made available will be determined by the appropriation voted annually by Parliament.

SALE OF HMCS "BONAVENTURE"

Question No. 367—Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West):

1. Are efforts being made to sell the HMCS Bonaventure and on what terms?

2. What agency or agencies of the government are pursuing enquiries as to potential buyers?

3. What would be any restrictions or conditions which might be applicable to such a sale?

4. In the event of no satisfactory buyer being available, would it be proposed to scrap the Bonaventure?

Mr. D. W. Groos (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of National Defence): 1. Yes. The terms of sale and asking price are subject to negotiation.

2. The Crown Assets Disposal Corporation, the Department of Industry, Trade and Commerce and the Department of Supply and Services.

3. Apart from normal commercial conditions, bids would be assessed relative to established Canadian government policy and regulations regarding the export of military equipment.

4. Yes, after having removed all equipment of any value.

RAILWAY CAR CONSTRUCTION FOR CNR

Question No. 400—Mr. Latulippe:

1. Has the C.N.R. awarded an exclusive contract amounting to $10,000,000 to the National Steel Car of Montreal for the construction of railway cars?

2. Did the National Steel Car have all the cars built in Hamilton, Ontario and, if so, why was part of the work not carried out in the Province of Quebec?

Mr. Gérard Loiselle (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Transport): The Management of Canadian National Railways advises as follows: 1. Following an invitation to tender sent to five firms and pursuant to the Company's policy respecting awarding of contracts an order was placed with National Steel Car Corporation, the low bidder, for the construction of 500 box cars at a total cost of approximately $10,000,000.

2. The information requested is not within the knowledge of the Railway.

SECURITY PERSONNEL, PORT OF VANCOUVER

Question No. 454—Mr. Winch:

1. Was a recommendation made by National Harbours Board Security Director, Donald Cassidy of Ottawa, that the security personnel in the Port of Vancouver should be changed to a dockyard police force?

2. Was the reason for this recommendation that it was felt necessary to introduce an experienced force of qualified policemen to ensure that Vancouver's reputation of having a low pilferage and damage rate was maintained and, if so, was any provision made for former personnel to receive special training in order to be accepted on the new police force?

3. Were any accepted and, if not, were they given alternative employment?

4. Was a decision made by the National Harbours Board for a similar change in Halifax and, if so (a) are former personnel being given the opportunity of training in order to qualify for the change-over (b) was the procedure similar to that followed in Vancouver and, if not, for what reason?

Mr. Gérard Loiselle (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Transport): The National Harbours Board advises as follows: 1. Yes, as part of the reorganization of the N.H.B. Police along professional lines comparable to other major police forces in Canada.

2. Yes. Security personnel were invited to make application for employment on the new police force.

3. Yes.

4. Yes.

ANTI-SMOKING ADVERTISING

Question No. 536—Mr. Knowles (Norfolk-Haldimand):

1. How often does the Department of National Health and Welfare broadcast anti-smoking advertising on the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation television stations?

2. What has been the cost of such advertising per week, per month or per year?

3. What is the total cost of this program to date?

4. What steps has the Department taken to ensure that these advertisements observe the Canadian Code of Advertising Standards?

Hon. John C. Munro (Minister of National Health and Welfare): 1. The Department of National Health and Welfare does not control the number of occasions a public service announcement appears on television. Scheduling public service announcements is the concern of the broadcasting industry.

2. No cost. Public service announcements are made free of charge.

3. The cost of producing public service announcements since the inception of the program in 1967 is approximately $120,000.

4. Public Service announcements are produced in consultation with broadcast organizations and the National Film Board, all of whom subscribe to the Canadian Code of Advertising Standards.

1. What is the agreed location of a second National Park for Prince Edward Island and how many acres of land are involved?

2. What steps are actively being taken by the federal government to acquire the required land?

3. Has a survey of the proposed site yet been made?

4. Have any of the land owners within the proposed site yet been contacted with a view to making their land available for park purposes and with what results?

Mr. Russell C. Honey (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): 1. Discussions have been held with the Provincial Government with regard to establishing a second National Park in the Eastern portion of the Province namely, Kings County. No firm boundaries have been determined as yet but both governments are looking for an area of approximately 8,000 acres.

2. The acquisition of land is a provincial responsibility, however, there has been active discussion respecting land acquisition between the two governments.

3. Aerial and ground reconnaissance surveys have been carried out in co-operation with Provincial Officials, but no legal surveys have been made in any special areas.

4. The Federal Government is not involved in negotiations with individual land owners as this is a provincial responsibility.

WHEAT EXPORTS

Question No. 695—Mr. Korchinski:

1. What was the amount of wheat exported in each month during the crop year 1968-1969?

2. What was the corresponding export of wheat in the present crop year?

MARIJUANA AND HASHISH TRAFFICKING CHARGES

Question No. 739—Mr. Mazankowski:

How many charges of trafficking in marijuana and hashish were laid by the RCMP, in Canada, in the first half of 1969 and for the year 1968?

Hon. G. J. McIlraith (Solicitor General): 1969, first half, 423 charges; 1968, 544 charges.

DIVORCE RATE

Question No. 740—Mr. Mather:

1. In 1958, what was the Canadian divorce rate per 100 marriages?

2. In 1968, what was the same rate?

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): The Dominion Bureau of Statistics reports that: 1. In 1958, the Canadian divorce rate per 100 marriages was 4.8.

2. In 1968, the Canadian divorce rate per 100 marriages was 6.2.

Note: Both these figures exclude Yukon and Northwest Territories for which data are not available for 1958. If Yukon and Northwest Territories are included for 1968, the divorce rate per 100 marriages would be 6.3.

REPAIRS TO SAULNIERVILLE WHARF

Question No. 756—Mr. Comeau:

1. When were the first estimates for repairs to the Saulnierville wharf brought before Parliament and voted upon?

2. For how many years has money been allocated for this project?

3. What are the reasons for not having this project approved?

4. To where have the monies allocated for this project been diverted?

Hon. Arthur Laing (Minister of Public Works): 1. 1968-69 Estimates.

2. Two years.

3. It was found necessary to allocate funds to other marine works with higher priorities.

4. Answered in Part 3.

WATER POLLUTION—CHARGES LAID UNDER MIGRATORY BIRDS CONVENTION ACT

Question No. 758—Mr. Harding:

1. For the years 1963, 1964, 1965, 1966, 1967, 1968 and 1969 to date, how many charges were laid against individuals or companies by persons in the department responsible for the enforcement of the Migratory Birds Convention Act and Regulations regarding violations of the Act and Regulations dealing with pollution of waters?

2. How many of the above charges resulted in (a) convictions (b) dismissal of the charges (c) withdrawal of the charges?

Mr. Russell C. Honey (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): 1. None.

2. N/A.

COST OF PURPLE CHAIRS, FEDERAL-PROVINCIAL CONFERENCE ROOM

Question No. 765—Mr. Crouse:

1. What was the total cost of the purple chairs purchased for the 1969 Federal-Provincial Conference, used by the Prime Minister and the Premiers sitting at the conference table?

2. Were these chairs purchased directly by the government, or were competitive bids obtained prior to their purchase?

3. If bids were called, what are the names and addresses of the companies invited to tender, the amounts of their bid, and the name of the successful bidder?

Hon. Arthur Laing (Minister of Public Works): 1. The cost of the purple chairs purchased for the Canadian Government Conference Centre which were used at the 1969 Federal-Provincial Conference by the Prime Minister and Premiers sitting at the conference table was $105.50 each for a total cost of $2,637.50.

2. The chairs were purchased directly by the Government from the manufacturing firm of Henderson Furniture Limited, St. Lambert, Que. Other capable firms were approached and their chairs reviewed, however, delivery requirement could not be met.

3. Not applicable.

VALCARTIER ARMED FORCES BASE DEVELOPMENT PLANS

Question No. 768—Mr. McCleave:

1. What projects are included in development plans for the Canadian Armed Forces base at Valcartier and, what is the expected total cost?

2. Are a ski chalet and golf course included in the development plan, and, if so, what is the estimated cost?

Mr. D. W. Groos (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of National Defence): 1. The overall development plan for the Canadian Forces Base Valcartier will not be completed before spring 1970, and it is not possible at this time to identify and cost specific projects. The first phase of this program, to provide vehicle and operational equipment support facilities and related accommodation for 5e Groupe de Combat, has been started and is expected to cost up to $4.7 million.

2. No. These facilities are part of a recreational development program being financed from non-public funds.

ARMED FORCES ADVERTISING FOR RECRUITS

Question No. 782—Mr. Diefenbaker:

1. What has been the total cost of the advertising for recruits for the Canadian Armed Forces since the first of July 1969 to date?

2. As a result of said advertising campaign, how many recruits have been secured since the said date?

Mr. D. W. Groos (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of National Defence): 1. Accounting records are based on a complete fiscal year and as a result it is not possible to isolate costs from July 1, 1966, to November 30, 1969. However, expenditures in each fiscal year are as follows: 1966-67, $841,000; 1967-68, $665,500; 1968-69, $515,000; 1969-70 (Estimated), $886,500.

2. Since 1 July, 1966, recruiting statistics show that approximately one out of every four applicants have been accepted for training as men and one out of every six applicants for officer training for a total enrolment up to 30 November, 1969, of 5,281 officers and 28,859 men.

MOTIONS FOR PAPERS

[Translation]

Mr. Yves Forest (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, notices of motions for the production of papers Nos. 39, 56, 279 and 283 are acceptable to the government.

[English]

ADMINISTRATION OF JUSTICE INVOLVING INDIANS

Motion No. 39—Mr. Howard (Skeena):

That an Order of the House do issue for a copy of the correspondence between the Prime Minister of Canada and the North American Indian Unity Conference regarding an investigation of the administration of justice by police and the courts involving Canadian Indians.

Motion agreed to.

OIL POLLUTION

Motion No. 56—Mr. Thomson:

That an Order of the House do issue for a copy of the studies on the environmental effects of oil pollution in Canada by Professor R. E. Warner of Memorial University and sponsored by the Fisheries Board of Canada.

Motion agreed to.

RESEARCH BRANCH STUDIES, MANPOWER AND IMMIGRATION

Motion No. 279—Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre):

That an Order of the House do issue for copies of all available research studies undertaken by the Research Branch of the Department of Manpower and Immigration mentioned in answer to Question Number 1 as reported in Hansard of November 24, 1969.

Motion agreed to.

NEW JERSEY GUARANTEED ANNUAL INCOME PLAN

Motion No. 283—Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre):

That an Order of the House do issue for a copy of any descriptive material concerning the New Jersey guaranteed annual income plan obtained by officials of the Department of National Health and Welfare, as indicated on page 1260 of Hansard for November 26, 1969, and of any notes prepared on the basis of the conversations referred to on the same page.

Motion agreed to.

[Translation]

Mr. Forest: Mr. Speaker, would you be so kind as to call notices of motions Nos. 29, 160, 200, 210, 212, 230, 231, 255, 280 and 294?

I ask, Mr. Speaker, that the remaining notices of motions be allowed to stand.

SOCIAL WELFARE LEGISLATION

Motion No. 29—Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre):

That an Order of the House do issue for a copy of the Willard reports and reviews on social welfare legislation in Canada.

Mr. J. E. Walker (Parliamentary Secretary to Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, motion No. 29 and motion No. 160, both in the name of the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles), may most conveniently be dealt with together.

The report of the special committee referred to in motion 160 deals with costs and benefits involved in the whole of the social security system, including the issue of pensions of retired civil servants. The Willard Report, referred to in motion 29, deals with the entire field of social welfare. These reports form the basis of reappraisals of government policy in their respective areas. As such, they are part of the internal function of government and their release is not in the public interest. In view of this perhaps the hon. member would agree to withdraw motions Nos. 29 and 160.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): First, Mr. Speaker, may I raise a point of order. I am not willing that the two be dealt with at the same time. I think Your Honour will see they are different matters. It so happens I am prepared to agree to the request that has been made in respect of one but not the other. I suggest they be called separately.

Mr. Speaker: The motion called now is No. 29 which is the motion before the House.

Mr. Walker: Is it agreed that motion No. 29 be withdrawn?

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): No.

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): Transfer for debate.

Mr. Speaker: Transferred for debate.

RETIRED PUBLIC SERVANTS' PENSIONS

Motion No. 160—Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre):

That an Order of the House do issue for a copy of the report of the special committee on increasing the pensions of retired public servants referred to by the President of the Treasury Board in his speech on May 8, 1969, to the Canadian Pension Conference, and noted in Hansard on May 16, 1969, at page 8782.

Mr. J. E. Walker (Parliamentary Secretary to Prime Minister): I have just read the answer to motion No. 160, and I wonder if the hon. member will agree to withdraw it.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, it is obvious that it was within my rights to ask that these motions be dealt with separately. I was not willing to withdraw the other motion. In this case the announcement made on December 19 that something will be done about the pensions of retired civil servants is worth a million times more getting a copy of this report. Therefore I am happy to withdraw the motion.

Mr. Speaker: Motion dropped.

Order discharged and motion withdrawn.

Motions for Papers

SUMMER JOBS FOR STUDENTS

Motion No. 200—Mr. Broadbent:

That an Order of the House do issue for a copy of the plan of the Special Task Force to study the question of summer jobs for students as stated by the Minister of Manpower and Immigration in his address to the Canadian Vocational Association on May 23, 1969.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Stand.

Mr. Speaker: Motion stands.

COMMUNITY DEVELOPMENT PROJECTS

Motion No. 210—Mr. Skoberg:

That an Order of the House do issue for a copy of the consultant report by Strathmere Associates on a survey of community development projects in all ten provinces, the Northwest and Yukon Territories understaken in the fiscal year 1965-66 for the Privy Council Office, as mentioned in answer to Question Number 1,323 of the past Session.

Mr. J. E. Walker (Parliamentary Secretary to Prime Minister): Again we have the problem of double motions, Nos. 210 and 212. The reports requested by motions Nos. 210 and 212 were intended for use—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. May I respectfully suggest to the Parliamentary Secretary that perhaps it would be better if these motions were dealt with separately because at the present time there is only one motion before the House, motion No. 210. It does cause confusion when a reply is made on two motions when only one is before the House.

Mr. Walker: I see my efforts to save time had the reverse effect. In connection with motion No. 210, the report requested by the motion was intended for use only by government officials and is not in a form suitable for other than internal use. The firms acted collectively as a staff extension of the special planning secretariat, supplying an expertise that was not available internally at that time. For these reasons, perhaps the hon. member will agree to withdraw motion No. 210.

Mr. Skoberg: Agreed.

Mr. Speaker: Motion dropped.

Order discharged and motion withdrawn.

INFORMATION MEDIA AND WAR ON POVERTY

Motion No. 212—Mr. Skoberg:

That an Order of the House do issue for a copy of the consultant report by Heward, Newman and Associates and Julian, Hebert and Associates, Montreal, regarding information media relative to the war on poverty updertaken in the year 1967-68, for the Privy Council Office, as mentioned in answer to Question Number 1,323 of the past Session.

Mr. J. E. Walker (Parliamentary Secretary to Prime Minister): The report requested by motion No. 212 was intended for use only by government officials and is not in a form suitable for other than internal use. The firms acted collectively as a staff extension of the special planning secretariat, supplying an expertise that was not available internally at that time. For these reasons perhaps the hon. member will agree to withdraw motion No. 212.

Mr. Skoberg: I would like to call for a vote on this motion.

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): Transfer for debate.

Mr. Speaker: Transferred for debate.

MANPOWER MOBILITY PROGRAM—STUDY OF THOSE RECEIVING GRANTS

Motion No. 230—Mr. Skoberg:

That an Order of the House do issue for a copy of the consultant report by Kates, Peat and Marwick, Company, a study of persons and families who have moved and received grants under the Manpower Mobility Program, undertaken for the Department of Manpower and Immigration, in the fiscal year 1967-68, as mentioned in Question Number 1,323 of the past Session.

[Translation]

Mr. Rosaire Gendron (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Manpower and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, the hon. member is asking for the copy of a report prepared for the department by a private firm of business consultants. The report deals with confidential matters of exclusive interest to the department and, consequently, I regret being unable to table them. I therefore ask the hon. member to withdraw his motion.

[English]

Mr. Skoberg: I call for a vote.

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): Transfer for debate.

Mr. Speaker: Transferred for debate.

MANPOWER AND IMMIGRATION—DESIGN OF MANAGEMENT-INFORMATION SYSTEM

Motion No. 231—Mr. Skoberg:

That an Order of the House do issue for a copy of the consultant report by Operations Research

Industries, a study and recommendation on the design of a management-information system supporting the departmental planning, programming and budgeting system, undertaken for the Department of Manpower and Immigration in the fiscal year 1967-68, as mentioned in answer to Question Number 1,323 of the past Session.

[Translation]

Mr. Rosaire Gendron (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Manpower and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, for the same reasons the answer is the same.

[English]

Mr. Skoberg: I call for a vote.

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): Transfer for debate.

Mr. Speaker: Transferred for debate.

REPORT ON UNIVERSITY RESEARCH LABORATORIES

Motion No. 255—Mrs. MacInnis:

That an Order of the House do issue for a copy of the Report of the findings of the survey team which, under the direction of Dr. H. C. Rowsell, inspected university research laboratories across the country earlier this year and made an assessment of the conditions surrounding the use of animals for experimental purposes.

Mr. Stanley Haidasz (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, the Minister of National Health and Welfare wishes to advise the hon. member that although the Canadian Council on Animal Care receives support from the National Research Council and the Medical Research Council, it is a totally independent body and is not in any sense an agency of the government. Furthermore, the report prepared by the Canadian Council on Animal Care is confidential.

For these reasons, my minister regrets that he is unable to produce the information requested and asks the hon. member to withdraw her motion.

Mrs. MacInnis: I am afraid I cannot agree that the taxpayers do not have the right to receive this report.

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): Transfer for debate.

Mr. Speaker: Transferred for debate.

PRICES AND INCOMES COMMISSION RESTRAINT GUIDELINES

Motion No. 280—Mr. Saltsman:

That an Order of the House do issue for copies of all correspondence, memoranda, etc., between the Prices and Incomes Commission and the Government of Canada in which the Commission suggested guide-lines for restraint that the federal government might follow referred to by the Prime Minister as reported in Hansard of November 25, 1969 on page 1201.

Hon. Ron Basford (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I have been informed by the chairman of the Prices and Incomes Commission that exploratory consultations between the Prices and Incomes Commission and governments have been held on a confidential basis. The commission does not believe that it would be in the public interest to divulge the contents of any written material concerning these consultations at this time. In view of this I ask the hon. member to withdraw the motion.

Mr. Saltsman: Transfer for debate.

Mr. Speaker: Motion transferred for debate.

CONSUMER COUNCIL FUNCTIONS

Motion No. 294—Mrs. MacInnis:

That an Order of the House do issue for copies of all correspondence between the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs and members of the Consumer Council of Canada regarding the functions of the Council, as mentioned by the Minister and reported in Hansard of December 3, 1969.

Hon. Ron Basford (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): Mr. Speaker, the correspondence which was exchanged between myself and the members of the Consumer Council of Canada regarding the functions of the council and which is mentioned in this motion is of a confidential nature and therefore it would not be in the public interest to release it.

Mr. Lewis: Is the council a secret body?

Mr. Basford: No, it is not.

Mrs. MacInnis: In view of the fact that about half of the report has already been made public, I would now like to see the other half.

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): Transfer for debate.

Mr. Speaker: Transferred for debate.

Inquiries of the Ministry

ORAL QUESTION PERIOD

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

NIGERIA—CANADIAN ACTION FOLLOWING CEASE-FIRE

Hon. Robert L. Stanfield (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the Secretary of State for External Affairs, in view of the fact that a request has been made to Nigeria with regard to Canairelief and Joint Church Aid transport and inasmuch I judge from his statement that no response was received by the government of Canada, whether he proposes to take any further steps with regard to this matter, or does he intend to sit by and await a response from the government of Nigeria?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Secretary of State for External Affairs): We have been in touch with the Nigerian authorities and we have made our offers of assistance known. We have made representations that food on Sao Tomé should be made available as quickly as possible if this food is required by the Nigerian authorities. So far the results of the representations we have made and that have been made by other governments confirm what I have said earlier in the House, that it is very doubtful whether Canairelief and Joint Church Aid will be acceptable instruments for this purpose. The question of how the supplies can be moved is one on which we are awaiting word from the Nigerian authorities. We are ready to provide any assistance we can. I should add, however, that one of the real difficulties that we have is represented by the attitude taken by the Leader of the Opposition in the statement he made today. He represents the superior and condescending attitude that is taken by some with regard to the Nigerian authorities.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Stanfield: Mr. Speaker, if it gives the Secretary of State for External Affairs any relief in his predicament to attack me, that is all right.

Mr. Sharp: It is not I but you who are attacking.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

[Mr. Speaker.]

Mr. Stanfield: I am attacking and I will continue to attack until the minister does something.

Mr. Hees: Sock it to him.

Mr. Stanfield: I ask the Secretary of State for External Affairs whether any consideration has been given, for example, to sending a personal message from the Prime Minister of this country or to flying a special representative of the Prime Minister directly to Lagos to bring home to the Nigerian government the very genuine concern of the people of this country in this matter?

Mr. Sharp: The Prime Minister is today sending a message to General Gowon on a number of subjects, including this subject.

Mr. Hees: By regular mail?

Mr. Sharp: And the attitude of the Leader of the Opposition toward these matters, whereby he is attempting to preach to the Nigerian government regarding their responsibilities, is not acceptable.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Stanfield: I am sure—

Mr. Muir (Cape Breton-The Sydneys): You should take some lessons from Paul Martin. He is a good guy.

Mr. Hees: He sounded better, anyway.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

Mr. Stanfield: I am sure the Secretary of State for External Affairs has to find some scapegoat for his failure. I ask the Secretary of State for External Affairs, with all his claque behind him, whether, in view of the urgency of the situation, if there is no early response—and I mean a response in a matter of hours—from the government of Nigeria, he is giving any consideration to seeking the cooperation of the Secretary General of the United Nations, not from the point of view of imposing anything on the government of Nigeria but from the point of view of bringing home to that government the well-based concern about what may happen, and this not through any deliberate intent on the part of the government of Nigeria? Has the Secretary of State for External Affairs taken any initiative in this connection?

Mr. Andrew Brewin (Greenwood): A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. In view of the deep concern of members of all parties in this House, will the Secretary of State for External Affairs undertake that as soon as any message is received from the Nigerian authorities, in response to the resolution passed unanimously by this House, he will convey it to the House just as quickly as possible?

Mr. Sharp: Yes, Mr. Speaker. I share the very deep concern of all members of the House and I undertake to see that any response is conveyed immediately to the House.

[Translation]

Mr. Bernard Dumont (Frontenac): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question for the Secretary of State for External Affairs.

Can he tell the House whether the Canadian government intends to protest against the statement of the Secretary General of the United Nations who has condemned the secession of Biafra?

Mr. Laniel: Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Dumont: If I may rephrase my question, Mr. Speaker, I believe the minister did not get it.

I would ask the minister to tell us if, in his opinion, the Secretary General of the United Nations can establish the boundaries of a country?

Mr. Speaker: I do not think that the question as asked should be allowed.

[English]

Mr. R. Gordon L. Fairweather (Fundy-Royal): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question for the Secretary of State for External Affairs. In view of reports that the war zone has been closed to outsiders, has the minister assured himself that this interdiction does not apply to the observer force and, if he has not, will he do so soon?

Mr. Sharp: Mr. Speaker, I received the same message this morning about the closing of this area, and it is one of the problems I hope to be able to discuss with our High Commissioner and through him with the observers.

[Translation]

Mr. Gérald Laniel (Beauharnois): Mr. Speaker, I wish to put a supplementary question to the Secretary of State for External Affairs.

In view of the difficulties relating to the use of available food and medical supplies, would the minister consider the suggestion that General Wrinch, a member of the special team sent to Lagos and national commissioner of the Red Cross, who is due to leave tonight at eight o'clock, be instructed to negotiate with the Nigerian government the accreditation of some international agency, such as the Red Cross for example, to take care of the transportation and distribution of food and medical supplies, given precisely the functions that he holds within the Red Cross?

[English]

Mr. Sharp: Mr. Speaker, the House will remember that in the first statement the government made on this subject we urged that all international efforts should be co-ordinated through the International Red Cross. I would hope that Canairelief and other organizations will now co-operate with that agency.

Mr. David MacDonald (Egmont): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question related to the functions of the observer team. In view of the fact, as the minister himself indicated yesterday, that the nature of the situation has changed with respect to the observers, in view of the importance of having direct and accurate information from the area, and also in view of his remarks today with respect to information coming primarily from the military, has the minister taken steps, in concert with those countries that are contributing to the observer team, to request the government of Nigeria to allow the observer team to look at the relief and refugee question now as well as the question of genocide and atrocities?

Mr. Sharp: Yes, Mr. Speaker. We have opened discussions with the Nigerian government. General Gowon, I am informed, is looking sympathetically at the whole problem, and I hope he will give a favourable answer.

Mr. Lorne Nystrom (Yorkton-Melville): A further supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. In view of the urgency of the problem, will the Secretary of State for External Affairs or the Prime Minister consider sending a special representative to Lagos immediately to help clarify the situation?

Mr. Sharp: Yesterday I announced the sending of four people to Nigeria and I think that the quality of these people is quite sufficient for the purpose. In particular, I think it is valuable that General Wrinch, who is the head of the Canadian Red Cross, should be there to give an impartial and objective view.

Inquiries of the Ministry

[Translation]

Mr. André Fortin (Lotbinière): I would like to ask a supplementary question, Mr. Speaker.

On Monday, January 12th, the hon. member for York South (Mr. Lewis) asked the Secretary of State for External Affairs the following question:

Has the minister had any assurance that General Gowon will agree to relief from outside?

The minister answered and I quote:

Not yet. Reports have been coming from representatives of the Nigerian government which seem to point to that conclusion.

I would like to ask the Secretary of State for External Affairs if he is willing to produce copies of the reports pointing to acceptance of outside relief by the Nigerian government?

[English]

Mr. Sharp: Well, Mr. Speaker, I am very hopeful, contrary to the view of the Leader of the Opposition, that the government of Nigeria will accept international aid. It is a matter only of the form.

[Translation]

Mr. Fortin: Mr. Speaker, on a point of order. I would like to remind the Secretary of State for External Affairs that I am not the leader of the opposition but the member for Lotbinière and that I am the one who asked the question.

The minister said that he had received reports that gave him to understand that Nigeria would accept outside aid. Is he in a position to give hon. members copies of the reports that gave him to understand, at that time, that Nigeria would accept aid from outside?

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member is only asking the question he already asked a moment ago and, to me, the supplementary is not acceptable.

[English]

THE CANADIAN ECONOMY

ACQUISITION OF CANADIAN COACHWAYS BY GREYHOUND LINES

Mr. T. C. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the Minister of Transport regarding the decision of the Canadian Transport Commission to allow the takeover of Canadian Coachways Limited by Greyhound Lines of Canada, which is a subsidiary of Greyhound Corporation of Chicago. Would he look into this application by Greyhound and the decision of the Transport Commission to allow it, and would he say whether or not he intends to use his powers under the act to recommend to the Governor in Council the disallowance of this takeover?

Hon. Donald C. Jamieson (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, to this moment the Canadian Transport Commission has been going through regular processes. I have asked for a copy of the decision, and I will consider it and the representations that have been made by the hon. member.

Mr. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): May I ask the minister if he has read or if he will read the transcript of representations of those who have intervened, who claim that Canadian Coachways Limited is the third largest line in Canada and that its elimination will lead to a lack of competition and be prejudicial to the public interest? Would the minister undertake to look into the representations of those who intervened before he makes a final decision?

Mr. Jamieson: Yes, Mr. Speaker, I will read the entire transcript.

INFLATION—MEASURES TO COMBAT INCREASE IN CONSUMER PRICE INDEX

Hon. George Hees (Prince Edward-Hastings): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Finance. As the consumer price index, which as we know indicates the cost of living, has risen by a further four-tenths of one per cent during the month of December, or at an annual rate of increase of 5 per cent a year, indicating that the increase in the cost of living and inflation have not slowed down at all—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Will the hon. member kindly ask his question?

Mr. Hees: Yes, Mr. Speaker. My question is: Would the government, in view of these facts, agree to give consideration to adopting the positive measures for controlling inflation which were presented to the government in the House by the Official Opposition on December 15 last, inasmuch as the government's policies for controlling inflation have proven to be complete failures?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

Hon. E. J. Benson (Minister of Finance): I would love to answer the hon. member.

Mr. Hees: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker, the minister rose exactly at the moment I sat down. Could he be given a chance to answer this important question?

Mr. Speaker: I realize that the question asked by the hon. member is important, but I respectfully suggest to him it was not quite a question he posed but perhaps a statement he made. This being so, I did not feel the hon. member should be allowed to ask a question in that way. If the hon. member would kindly ask a question in the proper way, of course it would be allowed.

Mr. Hees: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I am more than happy to abide by Your Honour's ruling—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Hees: —because the government obviously, has no policies or suggestions to offer for controlling inflation in this country.

Mr. Benson: Neither has the opposition.

ADMINISTRATION OF JUSTICE

CONTRAVENTION OF BILL OF RIGHTS BY HATE LEGISLATION

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prince Albert): Mr. Speaker, I think I am safe in directing a question to the Minister of Justice about the hate bill because it does not apply to members of the House of Commons or even to the Secretary of State for External Affairs who made an improper attack on the Leader of the Opposition.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Diefenbaker: Since the Drybones case was decided by the Supreme Court of Canada after the hate bill received second reading, would the minister secure the opinion of the law officers of the Crown on whether the hate bill contravenes the Bill of Rights?

Hon. John N. Turner (Minister of Justice): Mr. Speaker, the bill was drafted by the law officers of the Crown and in accordance with the usual practice they would, as they are bound to do, have cleared the matter so far as the Canadian Bill of Rights was concerned. However, I would not think that the Drybones case would have had any bearing on that situation.

Mr. Diefenbaker: The bill was drafted before the case was heard. Will the minister secure the opinion of the law officers of the Crown regarding what apparently is a direct contravention of the Bill of Rights?

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): Mr. Speaker, I cannot accept the preamble but I will accept the right hon. gentleman's suggestion.

INFORMATION

REQUEST FOR POLICY STATEMENT—OPERATIONS OF INFORMATION CANADA

Mr. David Lewis (York South): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the Prime Minister arising out of his undertaking, given before the House adjourned for the Christmas recess, that he would make a statement to the House either before the Christmas recess or immediately after on government policy relating to Information Canada. He has not yet done so. When may we expect such statement?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I thank the hon. member for reminding me. I have reminded myself and my staff about this matter several times in the last few days.

An hon. Member: Get some more staff.

Mr. Trudeau: Yes, I must get some more staff. I hope to be able to live up to that declaration and make a statement soon.

Mr. Lewis: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. If the Prime Minister requires more staff in the Privy Council office before he can make that statement, I would sooner he did not make it.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member cannot make a statement. He must ask a question.

Mr. Lewis: I merely wanted to preserve the austerity program, Mr. Speaker. Will the Prime Minister say whether there is already existing and operating an Information Canada staff, with an office? If so, are the staff in that office concerned about planning the future of Information Canada, or is it already acting as an information centre?

Mr. Trudeau: Mr. Speaker, there are a very small number of officials who are perhaps calling themselves "Information Canada", but they are not actually Information Canada because the government has not yet taken a policy decision on the matter. This small number of officials is working on the precise statement that I hope to make in the very near future.

Mr. Lewis: A further supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Inasmuch as the Prime Minister has just said that the government has not taken a policy decision on the matter, will he explain to the House by what right this small group of officials calls itself "Information Canada", as appears on the door of their office? They are acting as the centre for information even now.

Mr. Baldwin: Especially for a government which gives no information.

Mr. Trudeau: There's the answer.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

An hon. Member: You admit it.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Is the hon. member for York South rising on a point of order?

Mr. Lewis: Mr. Speaker, I do not wish to take too much of the time of the House. Like most other members, I prefer the Prime Minister when he is in a mood of humour rather than in a mood of scholastic obfuscation.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I remind hon. members that more than half the question period has already elapsed and we should get on with our business as quickly as possible.

Mr. Lewis: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I think the matter is serious. I have asked the Prime Minister whether there is an office called "Information Canada." As a member of the House I am entitled to receive an answer from the Prime Minister instead of seeing him give a flippant turn of the hand toward a member of the opposition.

POLLUTION

ACTION RESPECTING CONTAMINATION OF SASKATCHEWAN RIVER BY MERCURY

Mr. Gerald Richard Cobbe (Portage): Mr. Speaker, I have a question to put to the Minister of Fisheries and Forestry. Can your department stop, now, the mercury poisoning from entering Manitoba and destroying our fishing industry?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member knows he must address his question to the Chair. I do not think the question has been asked in an appropriate way and I doubt that it is in order. Perhaps the hon. member may wish to give advice about the matter to the Chair so that it may be considered at the time of adjournment.

[Later:]

Mr. Jerry Pringle (Fraser Valley East): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Fisheries. Has the source of the mercury pollution on the prairies been located and identified?

Hon. Jack Davis (Minister of Fisheries): Our fisheries task force on the prairies has visited the plant of the Interprovincial Co-operative just downstream from Saskatoon and is now of the opinion that this Chlor Alkali plant is the principal, if not the only, source of mercury pollution on the prairies. I should like to add that all the fish which were contaminated in any way are being paid for by the Freshwater Fish Corporation and destroyed.

Mr. Cobbe: Will the fishermen suffer by having deducted from their final payments the amount of money spent on destroying these fish?

Mr. Davis: The fishermen are being paid what would have been the going market price had the pollution not occurred.

AIR TRANSPORT

DISCONTINUANCE OF WESTERN MANITOBA SERVICE BY TRANSAIR

Hon. W. G. Dinsdale (Brandon-Souris): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Transport and arises from the application of Transair to discontinue class 1 air service into western Manitoba. Will the minister give assurances that a regional air policy will be implemented that will be in harmony with the government's regional development program and adequately meet the growing air transport needs of the prairie region?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I suggest that the hon. member is asking for a policy statement which ought to be made on motions.

Mr. Dinsdale: Mr. Speaker, may I rephrase the question. The matter is of great urgency because of the imminence of the decision. Will present services be continued until such time as a regional policy is implemented?

Hon. Donald C. Jamieson (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, the regional policy is in operation at the present time. Regarding the matter of specific concern to the hon. member, discussions are going on today between the airlines that are involved. I believe the hon. member who asked the question has received reports directly, at my request, from the Canadian Transport Commission. I believe that the ultimate solution now being discussed with the CTC will be entirely satisfactory to the hon. member and those he represents.

PENSIONS

RETIRED CNR EMPLOYEES—INQUIRY AS TO INCREASE

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the Minister of Transport. In view of the very welcome announcement of December 19 that the pensions of federal superannuates are to be increased in April, will the minister discuss with the officials of the Canadian National Railways the possibility of the same thing being done with respect to CNR pensions, also in April of this year?

Hon. Donald C. Jamieson (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I will be glad to do that. I understand that the matter of pensions of retired CNR employees is one that will be considered by the House of Commons Standing Committee on Transport and Communications and officials of CNR in the near future. I will be glad to ask those in the House who will be party to that consideration to speed up consultations.

AIR TRANSPORT

REALLOCATION OF ROUTES BETWEEN CANADIAN PACIFIC AIRLINES AND AIR CANADA

Mr. Gordon Ritchie (Dauphin): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the Minister of Transport. Does the government intend to reallocate overseas air routes between Canadian Pacific Airlines and Air Canada in the near future?

Hon. Donald C. Jamieson (Minister of Transport): No, Mr. Speaker.

POLICY FOLLOWING THIRD REPORT OF COMMISSION

Mr. Patrick J. Nowlan (Annapolis Valley): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Prime Minister. It is succinct and in three parts, and I ask it that way for purposes of clarity and to avoid the necessity of supplementary questions. In light of the third report of the B and B Commission, has the government decided that it is necessary to review its policy with regard to bilingualism? If so, has it, and when will the Prime Minister make a statement?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): No, no, and never, Mr. Speaker.

DEER LODGE HOSPITAL—INCREASE IN COST OF DOMICILIARY CARE

Mr. George Muir (Lisgar): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Veterans Affairs. In his absence perhaps I could direct it to his Parliamentary Secretary or the acting minister. In view of the fact that the cost of domiciliary care at Deer Lodge Hospital in Winnipeg has been raised to $300 a month from $120, an increase of 150 per cent, effective January 1, 1970, will the minister explain to the House why such a great increase was felt necessary?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The question should be placed on the Order Paper.

INQUIRY OF THE MINISTRY

Mr. P. M. Mahoney (Calgary South): Mr. Speaker, my question is to the Minister of Finance. It arises out of his statement yesterday and particularly the government's attitude to proposals to raise prices between now and March 1. Does the minister see any connection between this policy, the announced intention of the Toronto Star to raise the price of its weekend edition from 15 cents to 20 cents or 33⅓ per cent, effective next Saturday, and the editorial page headline in Monday's Star, "Pierre Trudeau's inhuman campaign to halt inflation"?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

PUBLIC SERVICE

DELAY IN ISSUING RETROACTIVE PAY CHEQUES—SETTLEMENT OF LAWSUITS

Mr. Eldon M. Woolliams (Calgary North): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Justice. What kind of a settlement is the minister recommending in regard to actions commenced in the Exchequer Court by members of the Public Service respecting their long-awaited retroactive pay cheques?

Inquiries of the Ministry

Hon. John N. Turner (Minister of Justice): Mr. Speaker, I think the hon. member will appreciate that the actions he refers to are before the courts and in accordance with the usual practice I should not comment on them.

Mr. Woolliams: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Are the minister or officials in his department negotiating a settlement of these actions regarding retroactive salary increases that should have been paid and have not been because of the ineptness of the President of the Treasury Board?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

BIOLOGY

ECOLOGICAL CONSEQUENCES OF NEW CHEMICALS

Mr. Lloyd R. Crouse (South Shore): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Fisheries. Was Dr. Peter Larkin, Director of the Federal Fisheries Institute in Vancouver, stating government or departmental policy when he said that federal legislation should be adopted to ensure that new chemicals are not used until their ecological consequences have been researched adequately?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member will appreciate that the question as asked is not in order.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

NIGERIA—COST OF MILITARY OBSERVERS

Mr. Lorne Nystrom (Yorkton-Melville): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Secretary of State for External Affairs. Can the minister inform the House whether it is a fact that the cost of the military observers operating in Nigeria is being paid by the Nigerian government?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member cannot ask the minister to confirm or deny a statement.

Mr. Nystrom: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member cannot ask a question supplementary to one which is not in order. Perhaps he could ask a new question.

Mr. Nystrom: I will rephrase the question, Mr. Speaker. Is the minister in a position to inform the House who is paying the cost of military observers in Nigeria?

[Mr. Woolliams.]

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Secretary of State for External Affairs): I will take the question as notice, Mr. Speaker. I would like to give a completely accurate reply to such an important question.

MEAT

USE OF DIETHYLSTILBESTROL

Mr. Percy V. Noble (Grey-Simcoe): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct my question to the Minister of National Health and Welfare. Owing to the concern of our society about the health problems being created by the adulteration and contamination of food, will the minister assist in the process of eliminating this contamination by banning the use of diethylstilbestrol in the production of meat?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I have the impression that this is a rather technical question, and I am not sure to what extent it is urgent. If it is urgent, the minister will have recognized that fact and might want to reply.

Hon. John C. Munro (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, I believe the Food and Drug Directorate is looking into the very matter to which the hon. member is referring. I hope to be able to give a more definitive answer later.

Mr. Noble: This material has already been banned in the poultry industry and I am wondering why there is an inconsistency in the policy.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The supplementary question is argumentative.

CANADIAN NATIONAL RAILWAYS

ATLANTIC REGION—EFFECTS OF RESCHEDULING AND CHANGES IN WORK METHODS

Mr. Robert Muir (Cape Breton-The Sydneys): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Transport. As a result of the great inconvenience caused employees and the travelling public by Canadian National Railways in the Atlantic region as a result of rescheduling trains and also changes in work methods, which I am informed will cause still further lay-offs, will the minister ask the vice-president, Mr. MacDougall, and other top-level officials to meet with representatives at Sydney, where the effects of this rescheduling will be most serious?

Hon. Donald C. Jamieson (Minister of Transport): I will be glad to convey that representation to the representatives of the CNR, who have usually co-operated with me in complying with such requests.

Mr. Muir (Cape Breton-The Sydneys): A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. In the minister's promised conversation with Mr. MacDougall and other officials, will he ascertain whether it is the continuing policy of the CNR to discourage the public from using trains?

JUVENILE DELINQUENTS ACT

NEGOTIATIONS RESPECTING AMENDMENT--INTRODUCTION OF LEGISLATION

Mr. John Gilbert (Broadview): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Solicitor General. Have the minister and his officials completed negotiations with the Attorneys General of the provinces with regard to amendments to the Juvenile Delinquents Act, and is it his intention to bring forth legislation in the near future?

Hon. G. J. McIlraith (Solicitor General): Mr. Speaker, the answer to the first part of the question is no, and the answer to the second part is yes.

RETROACTIVITY OF PENSIONS TO FORMER DOSCO EMPLOYEES

Mr. Donald MacInnis (Cape Breton-East Richmond): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Regional Economic Expansion. Now that the Treasury Board has approved the pension paid to coal miners formerly employed by Dosco, will this pension be made retroactive to the date on which Devco took over from Dosco?

[Translation]

Hon. Jean Marchand (Minister of Regional Economic Expansion): Mr. Speaker, the agreement took place between Devco and the miners' union and we will simply abide by it. We are not prepared to negotiate the miners' working conditions with the hon. member.

[English]

Mr. MacInnis: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Has the minister reviewed the legislation setting up Devco which was passed by this House and makes the payment of this pension mandatory? Has he ascertained from Mr. Blackmore why this was a negotiated part of the contract and whether he intends to use the contract as a threat to carry the one that has just been put over?

[Translation]

Mr. Marchand (Langelier): Mr. Speaker, it seems to me that the miners are very well represented by their union which discharges its obligations properly.

[English]

Mr. MacInnis: A further supplementary, Mr. Speaker. I again ask the minister responsible to explain how something that was made mandatory by legislation passed by this House can become part of a negotiation, when these men are not even employed at the present time.

Mr. Marchand (Langelier): That is your opinion.

POLLUTION

CANADIAN POSITION AT BRUSSELS INTERNATIONAL CONFERENCE

Mr. James A. McGrath (St. John's East): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Transport. In view of the absence of a statement on government policy regarding the Brussels conference on oil pollution of the high seas, and in view of the debate which is to take place shortly on second reading of the Canada Water Act, is the minister prepared to make known to members of the House Canada's position at that conference?

Hon. Donald C. Jamieson (Minister of Transport): Yes, Mr. Speaker. While I am on my feet I should explain that I have received a detailed report from our ambassador, who was the head of our delegation. I will look it over. I do not see any reason why it should not be made available to the committee. I will certainly do so unless there is some restriction. I also hope to make a statement.

UNEMPLOYMENT INSURANCE ACT

AMENDMENTS TO ASSIST THOSE OUT OF WORK

Mr. W. B. Nesbitt (Oxford): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Labour. In view of the considerable increase in unemployment in industrial areas of Ontario and Quebec, will the minister bring forth as soon as possible long-awaited, appropriate amendments to the Unemployment Insurance Act in order to clear up many of the difficulties in obtaining unemployment insurance experienced by those presently becoming unemployed?

Hon. Bryce Mackasey (Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, the suggestion is useful. Happily, it does not require legislation but perhaps more efficiency on the part of the administration. I am pleased to say that despite the fact that more and more people are applying for unemployment insurance, we are able, with rare exceptions, to process their claims more efficiently than ever before.

COMMITTEE RECOMMENDATION FOR INQUIRY INTO CONTRACTORS' CLAIMS

Mr. John L. Skoberg (Moose Jaw): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Transport. In view of the fact that contractors who have claims against Canadian National Railways have recommended the appointment of Mr. Justice Samuel Freedman to head a one-man inquiry, will the minister say when he is prepared to accept the report of the Standing Committee on Transport and Communications recommending this one-man inquiry?

Hon. Donald C. Jamieson (Minister of Transport): As soon as I get the letter which reached the hon. member before it did me.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

NIGERIA—USE OF CANADIAN DOCTORS AND NURSES

Mr. Robert McCleave (Halifax-East Hants): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Secretary of State for External Affairs. Will the minister ask the government of Nigeria whether Canada can make available volunteer medical doctors and nurses?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Secretary of State for External Affairs): As the House knows, one of its distinguished members went to Nigeria yesterday on just such a mission. I would encourage all voluntary agencies to work with their counterparts in Nigeria, because I think these voluntary workers would be welcome.

GRAIN

POWERS OF VANCOUVER MOVEMENT CO-ORDINATOR

Mr. R. R. Southam (Qu'Appelle-Moose Mountain): I wish to direct a question to the Minister of Transport, Mr. Speaker. Has the recently appointed co-ordinator of grain movement through the port of Vancouver been given the power to resolve fundamental conflicts in this area of transportation?

Hon. Donald C. Jamieson (Minister of Transport): This question should more properly have been directed to the Minister without Portfolio from Saskatoon, but I will undertake to bring it to his attention.

Mr. Southam: Perhaps the hon. gentleman would direct this question to him also. Is it the policy of the government that in situations where fundamental conflicts cannot be resolved between the participants the government should give the co-ordinator power to impose an arbitrated solution?

POLLUTION

HALIFAX HARBOUR—SOURCE, REMEDY AND COMPENSATION

Mr. J. M. Forrestall (Dartmouth-Halifax East): Mr. Speaker, I wish to ask the Minister of Transport whether his departmental officials have discovered the source of the most recent, serious oil pollution in Halifax harbour. If so, what remedial action is being taken, and is consideration being given to the payment of compensation?

Hon. Donald C. Jamieson (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I should like to take that question as notice. I shall try to answer it as soon as possible.

SCIENCE SERVICES

RATIONALIZATION OF MEDICAL RESEARCH COUNCIL

Mr. Louis-Roland Comeau (South Western Nova): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the President of the Treasury Board. On December 19 I asked whether he would make a statement regarding government policy for the rationalization of the Research Councils and he said he would do so in the new year. I am wondering whether we can expect action soon.

Hon. C. M. Drury (President of the Treasury Board): Soon, Mr. Speaker.

AIR TRANSPORT

WEST KOOTENAYS—UNSUITABILITY OF SYSTEM

Mr. Randolph Harding (Kootenay West): I have a question for the Minister of Transport,

Mr. Speaker. Having regard to the completely unsuitable and costly passenger air transport system now serving the West Kootenays, which was forced upon us last June by the Canadian Transport Commission, will the minister personally look into the matter and try to resolve the problems which have been upsetting this whole area?

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member has made a representation and he must assume the minister will take it into account.

CANADIAN CONSTITUTION

INQUIRY AS TO DATE OF DEBATE

Mr. Roch La Salle (Joliette): Mr. Speaker, I should like to put a question to the Prime Minister.

Referring to an answer that he gave some time ago according to which he was to meet with the leaders of the opposition parties about a debate to be held on constitutional matters, may I ask the Prime Minister whether he did meet with the leaders of the parties and whether he can still assure us that this debate is going to take place during the present session?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I shall answer yes to the last part of the question. As the hon. member said, it ought to have taken place before the Christmas recess but the leaders of the parties represented in the House agreed to postpone it. I think that other negotiations will take place with the leaders of the opposition parties in order to set the date.

NATIONAL PARKS

BONNE BAY—SIGNING OF AGREEMENT WITH PROVINCE

Mr. Jack Marshall (Humber-St. George's-St. Barbe): My question is for the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development, Mr. Speaker. Would the minister indicate when he expects an agreement to be signed between the province of Newfoundland and the federal government in connection with handing over the land necessary to establish the proposed national park at Bonne Bay?

[Translation]

Hon. Jean Chrétien (Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): Mr. Speaker, I met the minister responsible for the implementation of this project in Newfoundland in December. Progress has been made as regards negotiations but I cannot say at this time when an agreement can be signed.

CANADIAN NATIONAL RAILWAYS

ADDITIONAL COSTS OF TURBOTRAIN

Mr. Charles H. Thomas (Moncton): I direct this question to the Minister of Transport, Mr. Speaker. Since a spokesman for the CNR announced yesterday that a new series of tests on the turbine-powered train is beginning, and since the modification program will increase the cost orginally estimated by several million dollars, will the minister assure the House that these additional costs will be borne by the prime contractor and not by the railway?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. This question should be placed on the Order Paper.

NATIONAL REVENUE

REFUND OF SALES TAX ON GRAIN STORAGE EQUIPMENT

Mr. Rod Thomson (Battleford-Kindersley): I have a question for the Minister of National Revenue, Mr. Speaker. Has the minister received representations from farmers who applied for the 11 per cent sales tax refund on grain storage but were refused because it had been paid to the manufacturers of the storage equipment? If so, is he considering taking any action?

Hon. Jean-Pierre Côté (Minister of National Revenue): I do not recall having received such representations, Mr. Speaker, but I will look into it.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

CANADA CORPORATIONS ACT

ADMINISTRATIVE AND CONSEQUENTIAL AMENDMENTS

The House resumed from Tuesday, January 13, consideration of the motion of Mr. Basford that Bill C-4, to amend the Canada Corporations Act and other statutory provisions related to the subject matter of certain of those amendments, be read the second time and referred to the Standing Committee on Finance, Trade and Economic Affairs.

Mr. John Gilbert (Broadview): You will recall, Mr. Speaker, that last night I was finding difficulty in giving an appropriate name to the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs (Mr. Basford). During the debate on this bill earlier I called him the shadow-boxing champion of Canada. I thought this was an appropriate name at the time. But he has been making a great deal of noise with regard to consumer prices, and some people want to change the title of his ministry to the ministry of high prices. It seems to me he is making so much noise with regard to high prices that he should really be called a tinpot dictator. He is making a great deal of noise, but when it comes to action it is simply ineffective action.

I heard the Minister of Finance (Mr. Benson) talk yesterday about the results he had achieved in combating inflation in cooperation with the corporations, about the tenderness and kindness of the copper companies in agreeing to withhold price increases until March 1. He also told us that the banks had agreed not to increase their rate of interest on mortgage loans. Taking into account the fact that the copper companies had benefited from a 26 per cent increase before attempting to make the last increase, I must conclude that the minister is a man who makes a great noise but is capable only of ineffective action.

Bill C-4 is an 83-page bill which proposes to deal with 17,500 federal companies, of which 2,350 are public corporations. In introducing the bill the minister said that the bill would tend to modernize the laws governing financial statements, insider trading, takeover bids, proxy solicitation, inspection and investigation, and would otherwise conform with the standards and practices of other jurisdictions. Second, the bill would require the filing of financial statements each year by private companies of economic significance, defined as companies with either assets or gross annual revenue greater than $3 million. The bill would also require companies conducting more than one class of business to disclose the volume and profitability of each class.

This measure is designed to shed new light on conglomerates, but due to its complexity it will not be proclaimed for some time. In his eloquent and persuasive opening, the minister said that the bill had been brought forward to meet the recommendations of the Special Joint Committee of the Senate and House of Commons on Consumer Credit, and that it was the first legislative step taken as a result of the disclosure recommendations of the Watkins inquiry into foreign ownership and the structure of Canadian industry.

Reviewing the bill, it seems to me that these measures are an attempt to block sophisticated financial fleecing of shareholders, thereby giving them some protection against white-collar fraud and malpractice. This bill gives no protection to Canadian financial independence and Canadian sovereignty, and certainly offers no protection against foreign domination.

Our business structure has moved a great distance, from sole proprietorships and individual entrepreneurs to the complex industrial and corporate society that we have today. Most people are confused and bewildered by this complexity. When one speaks of mergers, conglomerates, horizontal integration, vertical integration, insider trading and proxy voting, most Canadians are left far behind in understanding the meaning and application of these terms within our society.

Our society has had within it the growth of a corporate elite that exercises an economic power far greater than any political power that is exercised by the government. This is why it is very important that we be protected. The government has a first responsibility to require corporations not to act to the detriment of society, to make them respond to our national independence and sovereignty, as well as to fulfil the consumer needs of all Canadians to the best possible advantage.

Bill C-4 does not attain these goals. We would be greatly impressed had the government brought forward legislation setting up a Canadian Development Corporation. I say that because it is necessary to assemble the savings of Canadians and to direct their investment into social needs and requirements; it is also necessary to help rationalize our industries and to make them more competitive in world markets. Canadians are excellent savers; the record has indicated that. Yet they are finding difficulty investing in Canadian equities, and Canadian manufacturers are losing ground in the field of research and development. In some instances Canadians are experiencing employment difficulties as a result of foreign takeovers.

There is a myth that we in Canada are dependent upon foreign capital to continue our economic growth, and this myth is having serious consequences. Sixty five per cent of Canada's economy is now owned by foreign companies and that percentage is rapidly increasing. No halt has been called by the government, and one suspects there has been encouragement in certain instances.

Statements made by the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Mr. Greene) have alarmed many Canadians. He appears to want to negotiate away our energy resources of oil, water and electricity without informing the Canadian people about our inventory of these resources, our present and future needs and what price or trade-off he is prepared to accept with regard to these very valuable resources.

Canadians should be aware that Canada is a greater exporter of investment capital to the United States than the United States has been to Canada. Canadians should realize that 15 per cent of U.S. foreign expansion and growth in Canada during the last ten years has been financed by new U.S. capital, and that 85 per cent of the capital has been generated from profits derived in Canada.

I cannot help but recall an experience I had last year when I boarded a plane from Ottawa and found myself beside a businessman, a complete stranger to me, who told me he operated a small manufacturing concern. He had been to his bank to ask for a loan of $50,000 for the purpose of expanding his business. His "friendly" bank manager said he could not lend him the money because of the tight money policy of his bank and of the government.

A week later he was invited to lunch by his bank manager, who informed him that he had had a meeting with the representatives of a United States company who wanted to purchase this man's business, and that the bank was prepared to finance the purchase. So here we have a Canadian bank that was not prepared to lend a Canadian businessman $50,000 so he could expand his business, yet wants this Canadian businessman to sell his business to a U.S. company on the assurance that the bank would stand behind the purchase.

Canadians should realize that foreign investment in Canada has, according to the Watkins report, reached $27 billion book value. The book value of shares is usually rated below market level, and if a market value were placed on the shares it has been stated that the shares would be worth between $55 million and $60 billion. Consequently, it would be impossible to use the Gordon technique of buying back Canada; it cannot be done. But we must find ways and means of restraining the intrusion or invasion of foreign capital into Canadian business.

When I heard the hon. member for Calgary North (Mr. Woolliams) say last night that he approved of the millions of dollars that had been invested in Canada by our U.S. friends, and his opening assertion that he would rather see western Canada a colony of the United States than a colony of central Canada, I—

Mr. Woolliams: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a question of privilege. The hon. member is a reasonable person; he, like I, is a member of the Justice and Legal Affairs Committee. When I heard him make that statement last night I went and read my speech, and I challenge him to show me on Hansard where I made that statement. What I did say is recorded in Hansard. I was talking about U.S. investment in western Canada.

I have no intention of withdrawing anything that I said, but if the hon. member is going to quote me, let him at least use my words rather than putting words in my mouth. I know he has always been a fair member, but I have noticed that whenever these pseudo-socialists or Liberals get hit, as I hit them last night on the subject of unions, or whenever they are hit on economic matters, they just cannot take it; they try to misconstrue or misrepresent the facts.

Mr. Gilbert: Mr. Speaker, I have not had an opportunity to read the speech that the hon. member made last night.

Mr. Woolliams: That is obvious.

• (3:30 p.m.)

Mr. Gilbert: I was certain that he prefaced his remarks by saying he would rather western Canada were a colony of the United States than a colony of central Canada.

Mr. Woolliams: Mr. Speaker, I rise again on a question of privilege. How can the hon. member make such a statement when he says he did not read and has no knowledge of what I said? What manner of nonsense is that?

Mr. Gilbert: Mr. Speaker, I had the privilege and pleasure of listening to the hon. member last night.

Mr. Woolliams: You had better check the record.

Mr. Gilbert: Then the hon. member quoted the Toronto Daily Star and the Telegram in relation to the millions of dollars invested in United States Companies operating in Canada. It seemed to me he was suggesting that Canada should become the 51st state of the United States. Surely, this is not what Canadians want.

Surely, Canadians want to retain our economic freedom, culture, sovereignty and political freedom. It has been said many times that once the economic freedom of a country is in the hands of another country, political freedom is lost shortly thereafter. We in Canada must export to survive. With the intrusion of foreign companies into Canada we have become a branch-plant economy, which does ensure our economic freedom. The intention of branch-plant companies is to serve the domestic market, not world markets.

I recall representatives appearing before the Standing Committee on Finance, Trade and Economic Affairs in respect of the Kennedy Round. We had representatives of the Canadian Manufacturers' Association and the president of Electrohome. He told us a story which I think is worth repeating. He said we had nine television manufacturers in Canada, seven being American firms and two being Canadian. He mentioned that the two Canadian firms were Electrohome, of which he is the president, and Clairtone, which has had limited success in Canada.

Without the help of the government of Nova Scotia the latter firm might have had serious difficulties. As a matter of fact, it is facing serious difficulties now. This project was an attempt by the government of Nova Scotia to invite United States firms to invest in eastern North America in order to provide more employment in that area. The president of Electrohome said that many people had suggested we should not complain about our position because we have in Canada a population of 20 million compared with a population of 200 million in the United States, and that this provides a vast opportunity for Canadian exporters.

He suggested that this situation reminded one of the father who bought his son a big dog. The son looked up at the dog and said, "Dad, is the dog for me, or am I for the dog?" He was attempting to illustrate that for Canadian manufacturers to intrude into United States markets is almost impossible. He suggested that the service requirements which agencies must meet and the response of United States T.V. representatives make it impossible for Canadian companies to compete. He added that we are in a very disadvantageous position in respect of the development of our television and radio industries because of the vast financial and other resources of our United States friends. This makes it very difficult for small Canadian firms to compete. We find one of the two remaining T.V. firms in Canada trying to compete with United States firms which have set up branch offices in Canada, not to create markets for export but just to service the market here.

Representatives of the chemical industry appeared before the same standing committee. One of those representatives said that when an order is placed for a chemical, multinational corporations place the order in a computer which arrives at a price for labour, a price for materials, a price for transportation and a price for insurance. The computer then gives an answer in respect of which country can make the product at the lowest price. In other words, no consideration is given to developing Canadian markets as far as the chemical manufacturers are concerned.

These are some of the problems which small Canadian manufacturers face in respect of the growth and development of the Canadian economy. We should realize that we have no control over the automotive industry. As a matter of fact, this government encouraged the making of an auto pact with the United States. The result has been a lack of opportunity to compete in this industry. I was disappointed to learn that Canadians must depend upon United States know-how in the field of manufacturing, sales and promotion in the automotive field, particularly when small countries such as Sweden, France, Italy and Japan have developed their own automotive industries. We are at the mercy of our United States friends in this field.

If some of our Liberal friends on the other side had their way, we would have complete integration of United States and Canadian societies, not only in respect of the auto pact but in other areas. The Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources has conducted with his United States counterpart negotiations regarding energy resources. I do not like this trend and I am sure many Canadians feel the same way. We should think of the significant control we have in the oil, rubber and chemical industries and the fact that at the moment our oil fields operate at only 35 per cent capacity. We are net importers of oil. This situation is not good. Let me hasten to add that we do not object to the co-operation of our foreign friends in the development of this country, but we certainly do not want the integration which is beginning to take place.

The hon. member for York East (Mr. Otto) seemed to express cynicism yesterday with regard to corporate entity. He said that some of the disclosure provisions of this bill were not necessary, and that the main purpose of a corporate entity was to make money rather than to satisfy the social and economic needs of Canadians. He has had experience in this field. I should think he would shudder at the trend that is developing in respect of the integration of our economy with that of another country. I have in mind integration of a nature which includes control and decision-making, rather than investment of equity capital.

The sophisticated measures adopted by corporations make it very difficult to trace or determine ownership. The leader of our party has set forth measures which should be taken by the government to protect Canadian industry. First he referred to takeovers. He talked about supervision of takeovers and determining whether they are in the best interests of Canadians. He also referred to a state trading agency to promote exports. We all recall the sad experience in respect of exporting trucks to China and wheat and flour to other countries.

We realize that many United States branch-plant firms are contravening their own Trading with the Enemy Act. This should not be so. According to the Watkins recommendation, the establishment of a state trading agency would help solve this problem. I should like to see amendments to the Combines Investigation Act. When I read the report in the Globe and Mail yesterday or the day before about the $40,000 fine imposed on ERCO, I realized that the imposition of a fine on these companies is not sufficient because of their great financial strength; a $40,000 fine does little or nothing to prohibit their activities in Canada. The New Democratic Party has also suggested there should be a floating exchange rate, which would give Canada more flexibility in respect of foreign exchange and foreign reserves.

I conclude, Mr. Speaker, by reminding you of the great Canadian song, "This land is your land, this land is my land, from Bonavista to Vancouver Island". I would prefer that we continue to sing this song rather than have the Americans sing that our land is their land, from the Arctic waters to the tip of Texas. Unless we have a government which takes immediate steps to implement some of the stronger recommendations of the Watkins report and some of the suggestions the leader of our party has made, I am afraid I will have to join in the song with the Americans that our land is their land, from the Arctic waters to the tip of Texas.

Mr. A. D. Hales (Wellington): Mr. Speaker, when Bill C-4, to amend the Canada Corporations Act, was before the House on December 10 I did not have the opportunity to speak. Therefore, I appreciate this opportunity to make a few brief remarks. There has been a great free-wheeling debate on this subject. We have heard all about how to be good corporate citizens. We have heard about the control of our economy, the flow of United States capital, United States takeovers and many other subjects. I should like to confine my remarks under two headings; the first would include some of the practical applications and practical problems which will be involved if these amendments are instituted, and the second would include some of the principles involved in legislation of this type.

I say at the outset that so far as this legislation contributes to the protection of investors, creditors and the public generally, it has my support. However, I believe attention should be paid to the matters under the two headings which I have mentioned. Corporate businesses and the owners of big companies have been looked upon as the big, bad boys who cause all the trouble in this country. Let me remind the people who say these things that these companies provide jobs and make a useful contribution to the economy of our country. I do not think we should introduce legislation which would make it more difficult for large corporations to operate.

I turn to the heading of practical problems. Under this piece of legislation we are asking the companies to do more bookeeping and maintain more records. These are the firms which now collect Canada Pension Plan contributions, Unemployment Insurance contributions and money from the sale of Canada Savings Bonds. They also collect federal and provincial sales taxes. They do a great deal of the bookkeeping for the government. Now the minister would ask them to do even more; he would have them file more returns and perform additional functions for which there is no return or compensation.

Members on all sides of the House very often receive representations from companies who say that they are working overtime in order to provide statistics for the government and to fill government files. They say they are continually being asked to file too many statistics. They find themselves working longer hours in order to provide this data. I believe it can be said that government curiosity quite often leads to government interference. This legislation will also mean an increase in the number of civil servants.

Many other practical problems will arise should this legislation come into force. I believe there should be unification in respect of legislation. The minister is asking for reports from corporate companies. We find that already our provincial governments have enacted legislation asking for similar information. Regrettably, however, the information asked for is not always the same. The requirements in respect of disclosure apply to many corporations governed by the Canada Corporations Act. In order to avoid confusion on the part of shareholders and the investing public in general, maintain administrative efficiency and avoid multiplicity and duplication of costly returns, I think the minister would be wise not to bring into force these particular amendments until the legislation respecting disclosure is uniform throughout Canada.

The provisions in clause 16 relating to section 120A of the act should not be proceeded with until similar provisions are in effect in all provinces and in respect of all companies doing business in any part of the western world; otherwise, a company falling under federal legislation would be placed in a most disadvantageous position vis-à-vis its competitors. If these companies were required to give such information, their foreign competitors would know a great deal about their business and there would be a tendency toward more takeovers of Canadian companies than has been the case in the past. These are some of the observations under the heading of practical problems as I see them.

There is also a principle involved here. I think this policy involves an invasion of privacy. I do not think the information being asked for is necessary in all cases. I realize the minister said that this provision would be applicable only with respect to companies with sales or assets in the amount of $3 million or over, but is there any guarantee that it will not be amended later to reduce the figure to $2 million and then to $1 million?

Is there any guarantee that in time the government will not choose to have the affairs of Joe Smith Limited published, and will later suggest the same thing for plain Joe Smith? In respect of private companies or businesses owned by members of a family or by an individual, where there is no prospect of extending share ownership to others, I suggest that if the act is amended to require this type of information to be filed it will constitute a gross invasion of privacy which in no way serves the public good. When the committee studies the bill it should look into this matter very thoroughly.

This bill contains some drastic amendments. It must not be taken too lightly and skipped over. I hope that when it comes before the committee, many of these companies and corporations will appear before it and prove to the minister and the committee that some of the amendments are too drastic and are not in the best interests of our country.

Mrs. Grace MacInnis (Vancouver-Kingsway): Mr. Speaker, when the government house leader was speaking on the radio the other evening he said that it was the business of the government to bring forward legislation, and of the opposition to criticize and pass it. However, the government house leader left out the fact that if the government did not bring forward the legislation which seemed to the opposition to be important and of top priority, the opposition must speak about the legislation that should have been introduced and was not.

I think that perhaps the reason for a good many of the speeches on this bill on our side is that we feel that the type of thoroughgoing and strong legislation that should be introduced by the government in this session, dealing with problems affecting consumers, has not been introduced. Consequently, we have to deal with measures which are inadequate, and with the government's sins of omission rather than their sins of commission. Of course, we get a swipe at the sins of commission in passing, but their sins of omission are much greater.

I think when this legislation first appeared it came as a great shock to many people across our country to learn that under the Canada Corporations Act the only federally-incorporated companies required to file financial statements with the department are public companies, those with at least 50 shareholders, offering shares to the public and placing no restrictions on the transfer of shares. I think that a great many people were astounded to learn that Canada was so far behind in this type of legislation.

Many people were shocked to learn that no Canadian government, before the passage of this legislation, had required private companies, no matter how large or influential, to file financial statements with the department. We welcome this legislation in so far as it will require all public and private companies with assets or gross annual revenue in excess of $3 million to file annual statements with the department.

Had this legislation been introduced half a century ago or even a quarter of a century ago, it might have been hailed with real enthusiasm by those who are concerned with protecting the consumer's interest. But this is not 1920 nor 1945. In view of the tremendous growth of corporate power, this legislation falls far short of what is required to protect the Canadian public and now it is largely irrelevant. It is all right so far as it goes, but it gives us an inch when we require miles. Consequently we have to point out what is needed and what should be done by the department at this time.

The reason that this legislation falls far short of what is needed—I do not intend to go into its good points because they have been outlined by various people—and has shortcomings is the rate at which the economy of this country has become the happy hunting-ground for large corporations and particularly huge, foreign firms with branch-plants in Canada.

I need only review very briefly what was put on the record yesterday by the leader of this party when he mentioned the latest release in response to a question asked by the hon. member for Waterloo (Mr. Saltsman). He mentioned the acquisition of Canadian businesses by foreign corporations as reported annually by the Director of Investigation and Research under the Combines Investigation Act. In 1963 there were 35 takeovers of Canadian companies; in 1964 the number rose to 87; in 1965, 74; in 1966, 74; in 1967, 79; in 1968 there was a great jump to 155, and in 1969, there were 102 takeovers. It does not take great imagination, after watching the press these days, to see that the figure will jump up again.

While I am dealing with this matter I would like to finish setting the record straight. Whenever the hon. member for Calgary North (Mr. Woolliams) is referred to, he seems to be out of the chamber. I will not run the risk of failing to set the record straight and will do so even in his absence. Here is exactly what he said, as reported in Hansard. Perhaps he will realize that the ears of my colleague, the hon. member for Broadview (Mr. Gilbert), were not at fault when he heard the following statement yesterday, as recorded at page 2339 of Hansard. The hon. member for Calgary North said:

> At this time when the NDP has been making inroads in Saskatchewan, not only in the farm areas but in the cities, the people of western Canada are worried about becoming a colonial outpost, not of the United States but of central Canada.

Our genial and gallant friend from the prairies who was bent on carrying everything before him, like the great west wind, in his attack on the NDP made a beautiful frontal sortie but he did not realize that he left exposed a beautiful posterior and an extremely vulnerable one. In his anxiety to attack the NDP what he actually said was that the people of western Canada are worried about becoming a colonial outpost, not of the United States but of central Canada. Many of us from the west may be concerned about central Canada, but compared with the dangers of being taken over from outside the country the dangers of being taken over by central Canada are much less of a hazard.

The takeover of Canadian companies at the present time, and the galloping rate at which it is proceeding, has one serious effect which has already been mentioned but which I would like to again emphasize. The most serious aspect of these takeovers entailing the risk of Canada converting to a branch-plant economy, is that it is not Canadians who are making the big decisions for consumers in this country, but outsiders. The outsiders make the big decisions for the consumers of this country. As proof of this I will quote one excerpt of a statement made by someone who is in a good position to know the situation. This is taken from an article published in the Montreal Star late last year. It says in part:

> —this week, an officer of one of the greatest international corporations, said with complete frankness:
> "It is clear that our living standards depend upon the investment decisions made by those who own our corporations."

This was Frank S. Capon, Vice-President of Du Pont of Canada, and in his case the crucial decisions are made by the handful of men in the United States who control E. I. Dupont de Nemours and Co. Mr. Capon was speaking to the meeting in Montreal of the Society of the Chemical Industry and, entirely apart from his frankness, it was a meeting worthy of attention by the people of Canada.

The chemical industry is generally regarded as one of the main sources of rapid growth in an industrial society, yet the president of a Crown corporation, Dr. E. R. Rowzee of Polymer Corp., warned that in its present condition in Canada it may require old-fashioned subsidies to survive. Very quietly, the Department of Trade and Commerce has been studying the industry's problems and a confidential report has been drawn up.

I suppose this will mean that some member of the New Democratic Party will have to put a motion on the Order Paper seeking an order for return with respect to that confidential report, once again battling the secrecy of the government which uses the taxpayers' money to draw up such a report. Now I return to the article:

If one of the great growth industries of the industrial era is in difficulties in this country, one must begin by questioning the quality of the decision making that has been involved and we immediately encounter the fact that in this case we are not concerned with a decision making process that takes place in Canada. As Mr. Capon frankly admitted, it takes place elsewhere: so far as this particular industry in Canada is concerned, largely in Britain and the United States.

That the foreign decision making process can be questioned can be seen in the comment of a highly responsible, industry-oriented official in Otawa who was discussing the Rowzee and Capon speeches:

"The basic problem is that the units of production are not large enough, but one must say that the industry takes very surprising decisions at times —astonishing ones. Rivalry leads it to create overproduction and then the industry encounters difficulties which it foresaw in advance."

If we had overproduction and the decisions leading to it were made in Canada, that would be one thing; but when Canadian consumers find their hands tied because they have no control over decisions made in other countries, it is another thing. The Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs (Mr. Basford) should introduce legislation to deal with this situation.

I well remember when the minister and I both sat on a joint committee of the House and Senate, a committee of which he was joint chairman, and the question of a great international cartel controlling quinine supplies, including the drug Quinidine, was discussed. At that time men and women in this country who were heart sufferers needed this drug, but its price went up astronomically due to the operations of this cartel in Britain, Holland and the United States. Nothing could be done about it in Canada because of the law that existed then, and nothing can be done about it today because of the law as it exists now. That is the indictment that can be laid against this legislation. In a way, Mr. Speaker, this legislation is motherhood. Most of us can agree with it, but motherhood resolutions are not sufficient to deal with the problems facing consumers.

Yesterday I was amazed to hear a prominent frontbench member of the official opposition worry about the civil liberties of corporations and the possible invasion of those liberties by this proposed legislation. If we have to choose between the civil liberties of corporations and the consumers' right to know, I am sure in the minds of most Canadians the top priority must be given to the consumers. The civil liberties of corporations effect a relatively small percentage of the population, and it seems to me we should at all costs be prepared to protect the interests of the majority of consumers.

I hope the minister will recall that he has another and a better half—and I am not referring to his wife. While he may be Minister of Corporate Affairs, he is also Minister of Consumer Affairs. I have always thought it was wrong to include a conflict of interest, such as between corporations and consumers, within one department. From past experience I know that in such a case the consumers get the short end of the stick.

Canadian consumers are looking to the minister to help them. They hope he will introduce legislation of a worth-while kind to protect their interests, interests that have been badly damaged in recent months by some takeovers and by the activities of certain huge corporations. As I say, Mr. Speaker, this legislation provides protection for shareholders and people connected with corporations. But many people are not shareholders and have nothing to do with corporations. The great majority of the Canadian people need protection provided by the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs. The sooner we have a divorce in that department, the better I will like it.

I would like to see the minister emerge as the Minister of Consumer Affairs and leave the corporations to the tender mercy of somebody else. There is on the other side of the House a lot of tender mercy for corporations and they would not have to look too far to get it, whereas consumers badly need a friend.

Although in some respects we agree with this legislation because it is long overdue and it is housekeeping legislation, and we are prepared to go along with it, we in this party know it is merely a sop. The affairs of the country should be organized in such a way as to protect the consumers. The minister should not be misled into thinking that we will accept this bill as a substitute for genuine legislation to put the affairs of the country into order so that consumers can have a fair show.

Mr. John Burton (Regina East): Mr. Speaker, this legislation brings a very important subject before hon. members, and one that urgently requires debate. Corporations operating within the framework of our economic system are an important and essential instrument for carrying on economic activity and for carrying through our economic organization. They enjoy a special status in law, and their importance has grown with the evolution of our economic system.

The role and importance of corporations have changed throughout our economic history, particularly over the past 50 to 60 years. In many respects the role of the corporation and the power it enjoys has resulted in it becoming something of a monster, a monster which we have created and which in many respects is now beyond our control, particularly in view of the type of government we have, which fails to take any action to ensure that corporations operate in the public interest and that the public interest is adequately taken into account.

The situation necessitates very careful consideration of this legislation. It must be examined in a context far beyond the particular contents of the bill, far beyond the particular recommendations which the government is placing before us. This bill, Mr. Speaker, tinkers with the present structure of corporations and corporation law and it attempts to effect a number of repairs which, it is thought, will fix up the law, fix the system and make it work adequately.

In themselves, some of these changes and recommendations are important and some of them are very useful. Provisions with respect to the handling of and requirement for financial statements, the whole situation with respect to insider trading, takeover bids, proxy solicitation, inspection and investigation, are important matters in themselves. They require and deserve adequate consideration by this House and they do have a place in our corporate law. There is also a provision which is a rather weak, timid step along the lines that some of us have advocated. I refer to the provision to allow companies to restrict their shareholders to Canadian citizens. I hope that this weak, faltering step is only the first step among further measures that will be taken to ensure a greater degree of Canadian control over our economic activity.

I want to deal in particular with two features of this legislation. They refer to financial disclosure and with respect to the incorporation of certain types of companies and with changes that are made in the bill with respect to incorporation procedures. But first, Mr. Speaker, there is a basic comment that I think should be made. This bill, I suggest, by implication states the government's faith in the ability and willingness of corporations and of the entire economic system, as it is now structured and as it now operates, to respond adequately to the needs of the time.

In my view, Mr. Speaker, such faith is ill-founded. In fact, we have seen many examples of the degree of corporate control over our economy. Corporations do exert a control which ignores the public interest and which does not take into account the views of governments. Within the past couple of days there have been a couple of weak steps which the government will certainly play up in its favour; but I suggest that there are other, more ominous developments in the offing in that respect.

I also suggest that the faith exhibited by the government in the present corporate structure and in the operation of our economy is ill-founded, because of our present economic situation. We have seen many illustrations of corporations failing for the most part to respond to attempts made by government, however weak these attempts might be, to take action to hold off with price increases or to exercise some degree of restraint in order to ensure a measure of stability and balance in the economy.

Within the past couple of years in particular, corporations have completely ignored the public interest. They have carried on their programs with the sole thought of bettering their own operations and of bettering their profit and loss picture. They have ignored the well-being of the economy as a whole.

I think this is very well demonstrated by the fact that the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce (Mr. Pepin) very recently in a year-end review indicated that a survey of major corporations in Canada indicated that their capital spending plans in 1970 would be 14 per cent higher than their capital spending in 1969. I think it is quite obvious that this is not in line with the policy of restraint which the government has been advocating and pleading with corporations to adopt. Certainly, I think this demonstrates a degree of irresponsibility on the part of the private, corporate sector of the economy.

Finally, of course, we have the fact that much of our economy has been sold to foreign interests. I will have more to say about that later in my address. Thus, Mr. Speaker, I feel that we need a much more fundamental consideration in dealing with this legislation than is evident in the bill now before us. The tinkering changes that are proposed by the minister will be of little value unless basic changes are effected and unless we consider some of the basic questions. Obviously, the government is unwilling to take any basic steps is order to deal with some of the problems of corporate operations.

As I indicated earlier, Mr. Speaker, I want to deal with two particular matters which are contained in this legislation. The first has to do with the question of financial disclosure. This is of particular interest to me because in some of my work over the past several years, prior to my entering the House of Commons, I had many occasions to look into the affairs of corporations and companies, as provided for under the laws of the province of Saskatchewan, where I live, and the laws of Canada.

Sometimes I was able to obtain the information I needed because the company involved was a public company and had to file certain information. But on many occasions I found that information I needed in order to adequately study questions of public interest could not be obtained because the companies in question were registered as private companies. Thus, information was denied to me and anybody else who might have been interested. Therefore, last year I introduced a private member's bill in the House of Commons, Bill C-61, which was an act to amend the Canada Corporations Act. It had to do with the filing of returns.

[Mr. Burton.]

This bill provided that every company, whether or not it was a public or a private company, would be required to submit financial statements to the Secretary of State, with a further copy to be made available to the Department of Consumer and Corporate Affairs. This financial statement would be filed with the department and would be available for public inspection.

The bill that I proposed last year was entirely in line with the recommendations of the Watkins task force, which was commissioned by a Liberal government a number of years ago. The legislation now before us proposes some changes with respect to financial reporting on the part of private companies. It proposes that any company with a gross revenue of over $3 million a year or assets of over $3 million be required to submit financial returns which would be open for inspection. This is a step in the right direction. Indeed, it is obvious that the present law based on the classical capitalistic concept that businesses or individuals can do whatever they want, regardless of the effect on other people, is simply not good enough today.

I suggest that the proposal advanced by the minister in this bill is still not good enough. I suggest that there is a good case to be made for corporations under the $3 million level in revenue per year, or assets, being required to make available to the government and to the public information on their financial operations. I suggest that the minister should give consideration to a further amendment to his bill to provide that companies coming below the $3 million mark be also included. I have often found from my experience and studies that there are companies under the $3 million mark, either with respect to revenue or assets, which are operating in a way that would make adequate disclosure of information with respect to their financial operations a matter of public interest.

There is an old saying that big oaks from little acorns grow. Many big companies grow from very small businesses. Once they reach the $3 million level, information will have to be made available; but I suggest that it is important to secure information about some of them while they are still below the $3 million level of activity.

The importance of obtaining adequate information was highlighted in the Watkins report on foreign ownership and the structure of Canadian industry. This report stated in part:

• (4:20 p.m.)

It is a prerequisite to public discussion of government policy and the formulation and implementation of actual policy that more information be available on the activities of corporations, particularly large corporations, both Canadian-owned and foreign-owned. Information presently available is generally deficient, and in some respects grossly so, for meeting the three distinct purposes for which information is needed: public disclosure, economic analysis, and governmental surveillance of firms.

I would also draw to the attention of the House the recommendation of the Watkins task force on foreign ownership and the structure of Canadian industry. This report stated at page 398:

It is a prerequisite to public discussion of government policy and the formulation and implementation of actual policy that more information be available on the activities of corporations, particularly large corporations—

The report goes on to recommend that all private companies be required to submit information on their financial operations. I suggest that the government should give further consideration to this matter. There may be cases where it is not necessary, or even desirable, to reveal the financial situation of a particular corporation, but I suggest there are ways and means by which this could be taken into account.

I was interested to note that John Saunders, a staff writer of the Toronto Star, did some follow-up work after this bill was introduced last session. Mr. Saunders, who has written a thesis on the subject of financial disclosure and certainly knows what he is talking about in this respect, went to see some owners of large businesses about the question of financial disclosure. I would like to place on the record some of the comments he received when he interviewed some of the heads of large corporations. He went to see John David Eaton, the head of the T. Eaton Company. He had this to say about the interview:

John David Eaton was very much to the point before he hung up abruptly. The man who employs 50,000 people and reputedly sells $750 million worth of merchandise to Canadians each year made it clear he thinks the operations of his company are nobody's business but his own. Would you want to reveal your plans like a bankrupt in court? Eaton and many other executives of private firms may not be able to take this approach much longer. Amendments to the Corporations Act introduced by the federal government would force large private companies like his family-held department store chain to reveal as much to the public as other publicly incorporated competitors. As yet this idea of corporate disclosure cuts little ice in Eaton's Queen Street office. I had asked Eaton if he feels the affairs of the T. Eaton Company Limited are his personal private concern. "Naturally I do", was his reply. Seconds later a loud click ended our minute-long phone conversation.

This is an indication of the attitude of some businessmen. In all fairness, I should say that some of the other interviews which Mr. Saunders had demonstrated that some businessmen were prepared to meet this change in legislation. I indicated that Mr. Saunders of the Toronto Star wrote a thesis entitled, "The Politics and Practice of Corporate Disclosure in Canada". He went into the matter very thoroughly. Among other things, he discussed the evolution of the corporation and the whole question of public interest, the protection of the public, equality and fairness in disclosure and the value of disclosure to firms themselves.

He also noted there had been many recommendations throughout the years for changes in disclosure legislation, and that there was a good deal of pressure against any such change which involved a variety of factors such as interest groups, passive government and also business-government co-operation. Finally, I wish to place on the record Mr. Saunders' conclusion—after the study in relation to his thesis. He states:

The levels of corporate disclosure required in Canada are clearly inequitable in many cases, and almost as clearly insufficient in all cases. Extensive recommendations for reform have been made. The objections to reform which business is willing to raise in public are negligible. Yet the progress toward improved laws has been so gradual and halting that it's sometimes hard to discern movement at all—or to be sure that it's forward. Considering the obvious need, the indicated course is to enact legislation immediately to bring all firms up to the level of disclosure now required of public companies; and to follow this as quickly as possible with measures to increase the over-all level as far as is needed and to rationalize the methods of collecting and distributing the information.

But to accomplish these aims a number of other reforms would probably first have to be implemented—and these byproduct reforms could well be vastly more important for justice and social efficiency than the mere provision of information. They would, if fully put into effect, go a long way toward remedying the imbalance between the power of large corporations and that of individuals and between the political influence of wealthy, organized interests and of weak, diffuse ones.

The first necessary step would be to discredit once and for all the ersatz liberalism which endows corporations with such human rights as privacy.

This warping of a worthy philosophy will undoubtedly have to be eradicated eventually in any case if corporations—perhaps even private enterprise—are to be permitted to operate in a relatively unfettered manner.

He says later:

Disclosure remains corporations' most promising course. As Mill implied, secrecy—when combined with such other advantages as large size, permanence and limited liability—gives corporations an unacceptable edge over individuals in both financial and political transactions; without disclosure other methods must be found to even the odds. The acceptance of effective corporate reporting would be symbolic of rejection of the old, perverted liberalism and would create the possibility that a workable modern version of Mill's liberalism might be developed—

He suggests it is essential to effect a number of changes in order to ensure that such a change will be effective.

I would now like to discuss the amendments with respect to incorporation procedures. The bill provides that certain pipelines, oil and gas pipelines in particular, will no longer have to be incorporated by obtaining a charter from parliament. As a result of this legislation they will be able to obtain the necessary charter from the minister.

Various money lenders, with the exception of banks, insurance companies, trust and loan companies and certain railway companies, will also be able to obtain a charter without coming before Parliament. As a mechanical procedure, Mr. Speaker, I suggest this provision might make some sense. I also suggest that because of the importance of these institutions, this type of economic corporation to the Canadian economy, and the role that they play in the Canadian economy, it is very difficult and in fact impossible to go along with the provision contained within the framework of this bill.

If in fact the bill provided for adequate control or regulation of corporate activity as a whole, I think a good case could be made for changing the incorporation procedures. On the basis of the bill now before us, I feel it is essential for Canada's future economic welfare that Parliament retain some control over the manner in which this type of company is established and is able to carry on its activities and operations within Canada.

Turning to some of the important considerations involved in this bill, we have to ask ourselves why the government has not gone further in this legislation, why it has avoided some of the basic questions which a number of my hon. friends have attempted to place before the House during this debate. There are probably a number of reasons. The timidity of the government in dealing with this issue is obvious. While the Minister of Finance (Mr. Benson) and other ministers have promised hon. members from time to time that a clear enunciation of government policy would be made with respect to foreign ownership and other aspects of corporate activity, no such announcement has been forthcoming up to the present time.

The manner in which the government operates was made clear by an answer which I received to a question I placed on the order paper last year when it became evident that the government was considering certain changes to the Corporations Act. It had been made known that a number of panels had been set up to discuss those changes. I directed a question to the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs (Mr. Basford) on February 3, 1969, as follows:

What are the names, addresses and occupations of the team of experienced businessmen and lawyers who are being consulted respecting proposed changes in the Canada Corporations Act?

The answer was:

Three panels of lawyers, accountants and businessmen were formed and met early in 1968 to review and comment, in confidence, on the recommendations for changes which were made by the task force on the Canada Corporations Act. These individuals are not involved in the current drafting of the bill and will of course bear no responsibility for its contents.

There followed lists of businessmen, accountants and lawyers from across the country. I have no doubt that each of the individuals named to these panels was a competent and able person in a position to offer useful advice to the government. But I would also suggest that they were considering this legislation from their own points of view. No group of people was called upon by the minister to deal with this question of amendments to the act solely from the point of view of the public, one might say from the point of view of the layman, even—the average working man, farmer and small businessman.

An hon. Member: What do you think the task force was doing?

Mr. Burton: I think it important that the kind of consideration I have suggested should be given. I mentioned a few moments ago that there are certain fundamental considerations which ought to be taken into account. I have already referred to the role of the corporations in the economy, the fact that corporations have a great deal of power within the framework of our economic structure. I noted, also, that we are talking about large corporations, not about small companies. Large corporations are able to exercise a great deal of control over the degree and circumstances of economic activity in Canada. Many of them have the size and power necessary to influence the course of economic activity and affairs. In addition, there is the factor of foreign ownership and control. This comes into the picture when we examine the performance of Canadian companies and corporations over the past number of years.

The fact is that the government has carefully avoided dealing with the issue. There is, really, no policy with regard to it and Canada is the only country without such a policy. This was made clear by Professor Melville Watkins when he spoke to the Montreal Society of Financial Analysts in January, 1969. He said at that time:

> The current situation is well known to this audience: Canada is strong on foreign investment and weak on policy. The extent of foreign ownership of Canadian industry is unique among the industrialized nations of the world. We are also unique in the matter of policy by having the least. I note that only in Canada am I invited to speak on Canadian policy toward foreign ownership. In the United States, the invitation typically says "Canadian attitudes toward foreign investment". The Americans are more realistic; we don't have a policy, only an attitude.

He then went on to say that the absence of policy could not be attributed to the recentness of the problem, and outlined some of the history as it has developed. I am sure nobody will quarrel with Professor Watkins' words. Most hon. members are familiar with the history of these institutions, the history of economic development in Canada, and I believe an examination of our economic history gives cause for hesitancy in relying upon Canadian capitalists and Canadian corporations as guardians of the Canadian interest. We can see that at the time of confederation Canadian businessmen obtained a base for commercial expansion. The national economic structure was at that time protected by tariff walls and assured of captive markets, in many instances.

In the last quarter century we have witnessed a great sell-out. Many Canadian businesses and enterprises have sold out and opted to become junior partners of United States corporations. Not only United States companies have shown an interest. I have an article here which shows that a number of business interests in other nations are attempting to obtain a chunk or share of the Canadian economy.

For example, Algoma Steel Corporation is now 25 per cent owned by Mannesman International Corporation of West Germany; the Anglo-Canadian Pulp and Paper Mills is 96 per cent owned by the Reed Paper Group, London; B.P. Canada Limited is wholly owned by British Petroleum, London; Canadian Breweries is 49.5 per cent owned by Rembrandt Controlling Investments Limited of Stellenbosch, South Africa, through Rothmans Holdings, Canada Limited; and Canadian Industries Limited is 73.4 per cent owned by Imperial Chemical Industries of Canada Limited, a wholly owned subsidiary of Imperial Chemical Industries Limited, London. Many other companies are also listed, including some which play an important role in the Canadian economy.

I also read with interest the statement by Professor Watkins in an article he wrote for the Montreal Star on May 16, 1969, analysing developments in recent years. Referring on that occasion to the spread of conglomerate firms not only in the United States but in Canada, he said:

> There is more to it than that. If foreign investment, or foreign takeover, rests on the superiority of the foreign firm, its converse is the inferiority of the domestic firm. To be not only a giant company in its own right, but owned in turn by a giant holding company, was apparently not to gain immunity from takeover.

This, of course, refers to the Canadian Breweries case.

> For those who believe that having Canadian-controlled firms was a protection against foreign ownership, without any additional government policy being necessary, the case of Canadian Breweries should have provided food for thought. This time there was no U.S. department of justice around to save the day.

That reference has to do with the attempted takeover of the Molson firm by the Schlitz Company in the United States. Later on, Professor Watkins had this to say:

> E. P. Taylor can bask in the sun of a Caribbean tax haven. As John Porter observed in his book The Vertical Mosaic, Canadian capitalists have not been known for their willingness to put patriotism above dollars, or country above cash—a point which Labatts, that old establishment family, had already demonstrated so far as this industry was concerned.
> Nor is that surprising; the nature of capitalism is to create an ethic that at best transcends, at worst erodes, nationalism. If there is a Canadian national interest then there has to be a government able and willing to formulate and exercise it.

I would ask the minister to note those words carefully. There is no question that Canadian corporations and financial institutions, with government acquiesence, have allowed large blocks of Canadian savings and capital to escape Canada unnecessarily in the past. This has increased our dependence upon foreign capital.

I think two questions need to be asked on the subject of importation of capital. The first is: In what form is capital imported? Is the capital imported as equity capital, or is it imported as debt capital? If it is equity capital, then the development is carried out and is owned by the foreigners who supplied the capital. On the other hand, if the capital is debt capital, when the debt is paid off Canadians own the development or industry concerned.

The second question is: Have Canadian capital resources been adequately mobilized? I think the very simple answer to that question is: No, much more could have been done throughout the years and could be done today to mobilize Canada's capital resources. For example, one thing that could be done is to establish the Canada Development Corporation, one of the promises of the present Liberal government.

This project has had a very interesting and rather speckled history. Some former Liberal cabinet ministers publicly advocated its establishment and made it quite clear that the legislation would be introduced in and passed by Parliament. That, of course, never happened. For several years in a row the legislation was promised in the Speech from the Throne at the beginning of each session. This year the proposal was not even included in the Speech from the Throne, which I suggest shows that this government is now even more at sea on this whole issue than it was last year and in previous years.

I suggest that at the present time the government is preparing to scrap the Canada Development Corporation as part of its program. I suggest the government wants to give it a burial of some sort in the near future. The fact is that the government is going to scuttle this proposal, and I do not think the Canadian people will in the long run accept this action.

At the recent federal New Democratic Party convention in Winnipeg, consideration was given to the proposal to establish a Canada Development Corporation, and a very strongly-worded resolution was passed in this connection. It was pointed out that the people of a nation possess the right and the power to agree on the use of their human and material resources through political decision, that in this way they determine the nature and the purpose of their existence.

The resolution passed by the convention went on to state that our national goals have remained unfulfilled by governments traditionally allied to corporate interests and committed to continental integration of our society. The major conclusions affecting our lives are still being made on the basis of equating the profit of corporations with the good of humanity. This philosophy has been, and continues to be, challenged by democratic socialists.

It is clear that we cannot rely on private enterprise alone to give us an economy designed for Canadian needs. That is why our convention proposed the establishment of a Canada Development Corporation. We should bear in mind that it is very important to distinguish the type of Canada Development Corporation that we want—not just some sort of mutual fund, which has been the notion of some members opposite. I should like to set out what we feel should be contained within the framework of a Canada Development Corporation. I quote eight points set out in a resolution passed at our convention at Winnipeg:

(1) To mobilize funds and to channel them into investment serving the public interest of Canada as a whole.

(2) To expand the public sector of the economy where necessary for the growth of the economy, for national planning and for increasing Canada's independence. This will normally be done by the creation of crown corporations. However, the CDC may also enter into consortium arrangements with private concerns where it has or can acquire effective control.

(3) To act always as an instrument of government planning and development policy and be directly responsible to Parliament through a Ministry.

(4) To stimulate the rationalization and greater specialization of industry in Canada in order to create a more productive economy.

(5) To be involved in regional development policies with provincial bodies and agencies in order to insure that every part of Canada capable of supporting viable development is extensively involved in the industrial future of this country.

(6) To promote worker participation plans in enterprises established or assisted by the Corporation, as a model for such plans in industry generally.

(7) To finance and develop new initiatives in research, scientific and technological developments which will increase the ability of Canadian industry to specialize and compete in world markets.

(8) To assist companies and individuals to fashion economic opportunity out of inventions and to ensure that Canada derives the benefits therefrom.

The resolution then went on to point out:

As secondary objectives, the Canada Development Corporation would be involved in marketing services and the provision of entrepreneurial talents.

It would provide joint marketing arrangements with the private sector for export purposes. It would also enter into partnership with other groups in order to protect the public interest.

An important aspect of the Canada Development Corporation is that it will insure the benefits of competitive forces where they are desirable, through yardstick operations and the stimulation of new firms.

I think this would be a very worth-while course of action to follow, and I recommend this set of proposals for the consideration of the minister, though I am not too hopeful that he will give them much consideration. The New Democratic Party convention at Winnipeg also dealt with the issue of foreign ownership and came up with a very strong policy to deal with this very serious problem. I suggest we must regain mastery over our own economic destiny and be master of our own house.

Coming from the province of Saskatchewan, I was very interested to note some recent developments regarding potash operations in that province. These were reported in an article in the Globe and Mail of October 9, 1969, and reference was made to a somewhat curious situation. Anti-dumping hearings were being held in the United States at the time in connection with imports of potash from Canada, and the article asks the question:

Are U.S. potash producers setting the price at which some imports from Canada are being dumped to the alleged injury of the U.S. producers?

As I say, Mr. Speaker, we have a curious situation here. For the most part U.S. companies are shipping potash from Canada to the U.S. through their Canadian operations or subsidiaries at a price level which results in a finding of anti-dumping by the United States government. This is indicative of some of the problems we encounter when we have the degree of foreign ownership of our economy that we have at the present time. This is one of the many questions that requires consideration if we are to ensure that our economic development is for the benefit of Canada as a whole.

Finally, I suggest there is one other area that requires very serious consideration. I refer to the development of multi-national corporations. This is a new phenomenon in our society. Some people, like George Ball, the former Undersecretary of State in the Johnson administration in the United States, have stated that power in the world in the future will be held, not by national states but by multinational corporations.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Béchard): Order, please. I regret to interrupt the hon. member but his time has expired, unless unanimous consent is given to the hon. member to continue. Does the house give its unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Burton: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have two or three more sentences to conclude my remarks. As I was pointing out, the Undersecretary of State, Mr. Ball, indicated that the economic power of the world in the future would be held, not by national states but by multinational corporations. I suggest this philosophy introduces an entirely new dimension in dealing with our economic problems. It is a problem in respect of which none of us has as yet come up with an adequate solution. We will have to look at this problem and find solutions, because multinational corporations will be with us for some time.

We can take into account the manner in which they operate under our laws, but technological developments have in many instances given them an advantage in carrying on operations. This is a matter to which the government should be paying considerable attention. How do we ensure that corporations operating on a world wide scale operate in the best interests of the people, whether in Canada or any other nation? In some instances we may have to look for international solutions to these problems, if we are to ensure that the predictions made by George Ball do not come true. Thus, I urge that this question and many others which have been outlined during this debate be taken into account by the minister.

Mr. Randolph Harding (Kootenay West): Mr. Speaker, I should like to take a few minutes this afternoon to deal with Bill C-4, to amend the Canada Corporations Act. It is a rather voluminous bill and I do not intend to deal with all its clauses. I should like to speak about the aspect of foreign ownership which has been touched upon by a number of the members of this group, and also with one or two of the main points of the bill.

There are some very interesting and acceptable amendments contained in the proposed legislation but the government, as usual, has failed to come to grips with one of the greatest problems and dangers facing Canadian sovereignty today. I refer to increasing ownership and control of the Canadian economy by foreign interests. An increasing loss of economic control will inevitably erode our political independence. This is resulting in an inadequate industrial structure in our country and threatens the very survival of a Canadian national entity. It does not meet in the aspirations and objectives of the Canadian people.

There has been a host of warnings from economists over the years which governments of the day have seen fit to ignore. As a result, the erosion of Canadian independence has continued. A previous speaker summed up this legislation very aptly when he said that after 34 years the cabinet had finally come to the conclusion that public investors are entitled to expect that there will be disclosure of business activities, that inside trading will be restricted and reported, and that proxy solicitation will be more restricted than in the past.

Apart from these rather interesting but relatively minor points, the bill has in my opinion failed to tackle the real problem facing the Canadian people today. The recent Watkins report on foreign ownership warned the government that Canada had a limited time in which to stop this trend toward foreign ownership. Only two years ago we were given from ten to 15 years at the most to stop the trend or forever lose the ability to stop it. That report pointed out that no other country in the world was prepared to tolerate the high degree of foreign ownership that there is in Canada.

Most countries in the world have laws limiting the extent of foreign equity investment and controlling investment. Countries with this type of legislation include the United Kingdom, France, Japan, Sweden, Denmark and practically all others in the western world. The way they have used their power has been to limit the control exercised by foreign investors. It is difficult to understand why Canada should not take a similar course.

The laws other countries have passed have not materially affected either their industrial growth or investment from outside. Their good relations with other countries have not been affected because of the desire to be master in their own house. Why cannot Canada follow a similar pattern and at least pass the legislation required to keep us economically and politically independent? It seems to me that the old line parties are tied-in so tightly with the economic powers of this country that they are afraid to act or speak out against the controls which are slowly but surely strangling the economic independence of this nation. If thoughtful Canadians would only study and understand the extent of these takeovers and their eventual influence on Canadian independence, they would rise in wrath against those parties which have controlled the destiny of this nation for so many years.

A quick look at the economic control which Canada has lost to foreign ownership over the years is both upsetting and deeply disturbing. In 1968 alone, the Combines Investigation Committee reported 159 takeovers of Canadian firms. Many of these firms over which we have now lost effective control are among the most substantial in Canada. When the final list is out for 1969 we will find that a similar pattern of takeovers is evident.

Since 1962 more than 600 Canadian firms have passed into the control of foreign companies. This shows the extent to which we are rapidly trading away the future independence of our nation. The Watkins report on foreign ownership states that no other country seems prepared to tolerate the high degree of foreign ownership that exists in Canada. We cannot find this degree of ownership even in the so-called backward countries of Africa. This report confirms the fact that between 50 per cent and 80 per cent of our manufacturing, petroleum, natural gas, mining, smelting and other industries are owned by multinational corporations which have their headquarters in the United States. In some industries we find that foreign control is almost complete.

The Watkins report points out that in 1963 foreigners controlled 97 per cent of the capital employed in the manufacture of automobiles and parts, 97 per cent in the manufacture of rubber, 78 per cent in the manufacture of chemicals and 77 per cent in the manufacture of electrical apparatus. It pointed out, also, that in 1963 there were in Canada 414 corporations with assets greater than $25 million each. The total value of these assets amounted to $37.9 billion. It was estimated that 53 per cent of the total assets of these firms were in companies more than 50 per cent owned by non-residents of Canada. The picture is more serious today.

I suggest we cannot long delay making those moves which will reclaim for Canada both her political and economic independence which the vast majority of Canadians desire. An hon. member has already quoted the late John Foster Dulles. When speaking about an Asian country he said, "There are two ways to conquer a foreign nation. One way is to gain control of its people by force of arms. The other is to gain control of its economy by financial means." This statement should be a warning to all Canadians that economic control of our country will be followed by political control. If this is undesirable, we have no option but to institute those counter measures which will stop the present trend of foreign ownership and eventually reverse it.

The present administration is receiving warnings from many people in its own ranks about the danger of excessive foreign ownership. Walter Gordon, a former Liberal cabinet minister, as recently as May, 1969, pointed out that the United States will dominate Canadian politics if we allow it to control our resources and public enterprises. He called for policies to counter this influence and to keep Canada a truly independent nation. As recently as two months ago, at the Liberal think-in at Harrison Hot Springs, we find that a number of delegates were interested in Canadian economic sovereignty and were desirous that this administration move to protect it. One of the panelists at the Liberal Party conference pointed out that much of the capital required to expand Canadian ownership of industries is already present. The only thing lacking is Canadian organization to bring these funds into the investment picture.

The New Democratic Party believes the answer to this problem is the establishment of a Canadian Development Corporation. In fact, the Liberals have been promising a development corporation for a number of years. We are hopeful that legislation along these lines will be introduced this session and that a start will be made along the arduous road of expanding Canadian ownership of industry and repatriating some of the industrial enterprises which have already been lost. The member who preceeded me dealt at some length with the Canadian Development Corporation. It is not my intention to repeat the points he made.

The first reason why this corporation has not been set up is that the old line parties are fearful of being tagged with the label of having at least some public participation in the area of resource development. This seems to be a nonsensical position for any party to take. All we need do is look around us to see the grave disparities in many parts of Canada. Oftentimes we see areas in which industries could and should have been established. If these should be marginal operations, I can assure you that foreign-controlled companies would not be interested in coming in and setting up industry.

I urge this government to take another, close look at the question of a Canadian Development Corporation and see that legislation is initiated at this session of Parliament. When we consider the question of foreign ownership, I am always amazed to hear politicians both in the House and outside talk about the need for outside investment. They seem to think that Canada is a poverty-stricken nation with no money. On numerous occasions it has been pointed out that there are vast amounts of money available in this country for investment which could and should be used for the type of development foreign-controlled firms are taking over each and every day.

I note that in the speech of the hon. member for Calgary North (Mr. Woolliams) last night he was very critical of our party. That is his prerogative in this House. I have no objection to his attacking us on the stand we have taken. I am certain, however, that not for a long time has so much valuable ammunition come to hand as that contained in the speech of the hon. member for Calgary North last night. One statement he made is the following:

> While we must make sure that the rights of our people are not usurped, at the same time we must realize that we need the investment of these corporations. We must all work together.

If the rights of the people are not to be usurped, how does he propose to protect the rights of Canadians? How does he propose to protect our independence economically and politically when control in the hands of big corporations can directly control the political direction of this nation?

There have been examples in Canada of firms from other countries dictating to their branch-plants and thereby stopping the sale of goods to other countries. An example is the automobile industry. The sale of trucks to mainland China was stopped because the parent company in the United States told its subsidiary in Canada it could not sell them. There are other examples. A recent example is the control of a flour mill establishment in respect of the sale of flour to Cuba. This sale was stopped by outside interests. I say, Mr. Speaker, that this is direct interference with the political life of this country. This picture cannot help but get worse as the economic control of some of the key sectors of our industry accelerates.

There is another aspect of economic control which has worried me for many years. I want to say at this point that I am not anti-American or against any other country in this world. However, I am convinced as a Canadian that it is our duty, regardless of the party to which we belong, to see that we keep Canada a strong, independent nation both economically and politically. As soon as a move is made, whether it be for the control of our resources or of a key sector of our industry, which will upset this independence, it is up to members in the House to speak out against it. They should not only speak out but also take steps which will retain for us for all time the independence which we so proudly proclaim and which the vast majority of Canadians desire to retain. I see the independence of our nation gradually slipping away. I am astounded that more members on the government side of the House have not made very clear their position on this question.

I will refer to my own province of B.C. for a few moments and point to several resource acquisitions by foreign-owned firms which I think are detrimental to British Columbians generally. Before I deal with any specific resource I will speak about a treaty which was signed in the early 1960s—the Columbia River Treaty. It was debated in this House and many hon. members remember the debate which raged for weeks all over Canada. The treaty was signed and the Liberal administration of the day finalized it, together with the province of British Columbia. In effect it gave away the control of one of our great river systems and its water resources.

At the time—I have read the debate and am well acquainted with the story—the Premier of B.C. sold the people of that province on the idea that we were going to get a bonanza in return for the signing of the treaty. The Liberal government, without adequately examining the aspects of the treaty, went along with it and, to their discredit, finally agreed to signing the treaty, which in my opinion has done a great deal of harm not only to the people of B.C. but to all Canada.

[Mr. Harding.]

I should like to outline two or three points in this respect. In my opinion this is how resources are given away without proper thought or research. Consider the case of the Columbia River Treaty. It was signed, sealed and delivered. The dams have been built. The last dam is in the process of being built and is to be finished in 1973. What do we in B.C. get out of this? Where is the economic empire that we were promised would result from the development of the Columbia River? Where is the economic development, after we have spent hundreds of millions of dollars? I will tell you. There are not even 20 jobs on the Arrow dam, and on the Duncan dam just a handful of engineers are employed to lower or raise the gates in order to feed the turbines south of the line. We sold our power in B.C. for 30 years for $274 million. We were told that this money would build the dams, clear the reservoir basins and adequately recompense everyone.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. I am sorry to interrupt the hon. member, but I have been listening to his remarks very carefully and I am having difficulty in reconciling them with the subject matter before the House. I realize that there is a specific principle involved, and I do not want to infringe upon the hon. member's right to deal with the principle. However, I would be happy if he would deal with an example that falls within the purview of the bill, rather than the specific example with which he is now dealing.

Mr. Harding: The point I am making, Mr. Speaker, is that in this bill we should guard against the allocation to foreign countries of specific resources either through treaties of this nature or through the alienation of a particular resource in a province. These precautions have not been taken, and as a result the economic development of Canada has suffered.

If you will bear with me for a moment or two, Mr. Speaker, I would like to point out how this policy has affected our area in particular. We have sold the power for 30 years. We will end up over $200 million in the hole, money which must eventually come out of the pockets of the taxpayers of B.C. And where is the economic development that was promised us? It is south of the line. Just south of the border a very large number of aluminum plants are operating on the hydro power which we sold so that we could construct the dams to flood our land. Those plants are providing tens of thousands of jobs for Americans while we in British Columbia have created about 20 residual jobs out of this over-all development.

This sort of blind reasoning which leads governments to make treaties and deals of this sort is not good for Canada. We export our raw materials, we export power, and then we turn around and export the most precious product we have in Canada, our educated young boys and girls who have no jobs. Unemployment is soaring because we are exporting jobs every time we make a deal in which we export material which could and should be manufactured in Canada. This is where the Canadian Development Corporation comes into the picture. Why has it not been set up to develop our copper, iron and asbestos resources?

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. I have the impression the hon. member will not permit a question, but I do not want to prejudge the issue. I believe the hon. member for York East (Mr. Otto) wishes to ask the hon. member a question.

Mr. Otto: Mr. Speaker, would the hon. member permit a question? It will not take long. He had mentioned the Canadian Development Corporation so many times, and so did his leader. Is he aware that there is presently an incorporated company known as Canadian Development Corporation, with its head office at 85 Richmond Street West, Toronto, with directors in London, Ontario, and its solicitors being Thompson, Brown and Broadfoot? Surely he does not suggest that the Canadian government support the promotion of the stock in this private company?

Mr. Harding: That was a rather facetious question. The hon. member should have known better than to ask it. He is aware that the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) has indicated on numerous occasions that the government will introduce a bill along the lines which I have been discussing.

I wish to emphasize that I am particularly upset over the lack of plans to process our copper concentrates in British Columbia. Every pound is shipped out of British Columbia. For every job we have in the extractive industries there are dozens of jobs even in the first stages of manufacture. We do not even have a copper smelter to do the refining of the copper. This is where a Canadian Development Corporation could easily come into the picture and give assistance if proper direction were given by the government.

There is just one more point I would like to make before I sit down. It is in connection with insurance companies. These are financial institutions. Over the years many of them have passed out of Canadian hands. I note that back in 1956 the Royal Commission on Canada's Economic Prospects said in its preliminary report:

> Foreign ownership of the stocks of the Canadian chartered banks and of life insurance companies, which are incorporated under Canadian law, is not particularly large at the present time. It is desirable that Canadian control of these institutions be maintained. The commission suggests, therefore, that appropriate action be taken to prevent any substantial measure of control of the chartered banks and of life insurance companies from coming into possession of non-residents. One way in which this might be accomplished would be to provide by statute that any shares in such institutions which are acquired by non-residents of Canada in the future would be ineligible to vote. This restriction should not be applied to existing non-resident holders of such shares.

That recommendation was made 13 years ago. Since that time many insurance companies have passed from Canadian control. Every year we see a list of companies which have been lost so far as Canadian ownership is concerned. This is not an NDP story. This is the finding of economists who have been given a job to do. They have taken a look at the picture. They have come up with recommendations, but apparently those recommendations have not been acceptable to governments that have been in charge of Canada since 1956.

I see that my time has almost expired, Mr. Speaker, and I presume there are other hon. members who wish to say a few words on this bill before six o'clock. In closing I urge hon. members, regardless of party, to examine seriously the situation regarding foreign control. If they are convinced, as I am, that our independence, both economic and political, can be jeopardized by foreign control, I believe we should all make an effort to put teeth in the legislation in order to keep Canadian sovereignty in our hands for all time.

Motion agreed to, bill read the second time and referred to the Standing Committee on Finance, Trade and Economic Affairs.

WATER RESOURCES

PROVISION FOR MANAGEMENT INCLUDING RESEARCH AND PLANNING AND IMPLEMENTATION OF PROGRAMS

The House resumed from Thursday, November 20, consideration of the motion of Mr. Greene that Bill C-144, to provide for the management of the water resources of Canada including research and the planning and implementation of programs relating to the conservation, development and utilization of water resources, be read the second time and referred to the Standing Committee on National Resources and Public Works.

[English]

Mr. Louis-Roland Comeau (South Western Nova): Mr. Speaker, this is my third attempt to try to speak on the matter of pollution. Last spring we had a debate on water. We had an opposition day debate, and I was the last speaker scheduled. Last November we spent a couple of days discussing the subject, and again I was the last speaker scheduled. Today I am glad to be the first speaker.

Let me say at the outset that any measure introduced by the government to curb pollution is certainly welcomed by all members of the House. The minister explained this bill four or five weeks ago. The pollution of water is not a problem for the future; it is a problem which requires our immediate consideration. It is in this context that I wish to make a few remarks on this bill known as the Water Act.

Man is living through an environmental crisis of his own making. Early in his evolution man was a passive agent in his surroundings, largely controlled by the factors of the environment. But modern man has become much more powerful. He can even use his technology to regulate elements of his environment. The extent of man's influence on his surroundings is escalating rapidly. Indeed, scientists warn us that the environmental changes brought about in this generation of human hyperactivity have been greater than those of all the years since the appearance of man on earth. But while we have learned to control or affect individual elements of nature, we are still far from understanding the complex interrelations between ourselves and our environment.

Too often human technology is used in ways which unintentionally worsen, not improve, the quality of life in our society. Too often the by-product of our progress is pollution, pollution of our surroundings or the disturbance of the delicate interrelationships of our environment. Striking examples of unintentional effects resulting from all kinds of activity abound. For example, on its introduction, DDT was heralded as a successful agent for the control of insect pests, but now its effects have led to its removal from the majority of its applications.

The unintended effects of man's efforts may go far beyond the potential pollution of his world. Scientists are also beginning to wonder whether man's "progress" will substantially affect such important processes as those which control the volume of oxygen in our air and the earth's heat balance. The potential effects of such changes are obvious. They have led one eminent ecologist to state:

> What is now popularly known as 'progress' begins to look very much like the path to extinction.

Pollution has been referred to as a patient assassin which chokes its victims ever so slowly and silently. We must learn to consider all the effects of our actions. We must preserve a clean, healthy, enjoyable environment and we must safeguard the biological balance of nature. Man must not be allowed to pollute himself out of existence.

Pollution has been around for a long time. But what has happened in Canada? We have been very fortunate, Mr. Speaker; we have a big country with a lot of water and a lot of air. But anyone who has smelled the river outside this building, travelled the Gardiner expressway in Toronto on a still morning, or makes his living providing the country with herring from Placentia Bay knows what pollution is.

We cannot afford to sit back in confidence. We should count ourselves lucky that we have no Los Angeles, where carbon-dioxide levels are 10 per cent higher than normal. We cannot afford to be complacent. At the moment this bill does not deal completely—I underline "completely"—with pollution.

Let us first look at fishing. Forest spraying in New Brunswick has led to observations of fish mortality running between 50 and 98 per cent. Pollution has seriously affected shellfish beds. It is estimated that 25 per cent of the clam and oyster beds have been closed as a result of pollution making the shellfish unfit for human consumption. I have experience in this matter, Mr. Speaker, because in my constituency a good clam-digging operation had to be stopped because the beds were contaminated. It becomes a vicious circle. Pollution leads to higher costs for everyone. Fish-processing plants have been forced to bring in water from far out at sea because of local pollution.

To show hon. members how serious the situation is, let me tell them that the Atlantic Development Board has subsidized operations like this. I am not blaming it; I am merely telling hon. members what is happening in order to show them how much concern there is over this matter.

The west coast salmon and herring fisheries add about $70 million to our economy each year and governments have taken great pains to ensure that power projects and pollution do not interfere with the lives of these fish. But the recent—when I say recent I am talking about last year—Placentia Bay experience should prove to us all that we cannot be complacent about past successes.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Comeau: New developments are bringing danger from oil pollution. I am not talking only about oil tankers travelling in the north but also about offshore drilling. The Department of Fisheries and Forestry should supervise these operations. It should not stop progress in oil discoveries, but it should protect our fisheries. Nowadays some of our best fishing grounds are being examined in the search for oil. There is a danger of pollution here. The Department of Fisheries and Forestry should carefully supervise these activities and make sure that the waters are not contaminated.

Let us look at the related problem of freshwater fisheries. There are many lines that we could follow here. Problems of pollution for commercial fishermen on our big lakes need no elaboration. The problem is much larger than that, however. We cherish our outdoor life and recreation; but who enjoys fishing in water he cannot bear to smell? There are hidden costs which governments must weigh and act upon.

I could talk about other areas, such as agriculture and what has happened with regard to pesticides and the cost of providing good and clean drinking water. That also is becoming a problem. Pollution is a testament to a collective failure of man to live in harmony with his environment.

We have had many conferences and studies and, unfortunately, need more. Despite all its protestations of concern, this government has until recently remained pathetically inactive. Its cry of "We have got to do something", is becoming political jargon. Oh, yes, we have the Water Act. When we have argued our case over the past two years, or talked about pollution, the minister or member responsible for matters of pollution has come forward and said, "Why not wait until the water act is passed?". For the past two years we have advocated such a measure, and now it is on the statute books.

I do not wish to repeat all the arguments that were raised in the previous debate. Although there are some good provisions in the act, it does not, to my mind, alleviate immediate problems associated with pollution—and I am speaking not only of water pollution but of air and soil pollution. In my opinion, the fastest action the government can take under this legislation is the setting up of water quality management agencies.

I would not be too critical of this step being taken on a long-term basis. The act does not provide for the solution of immediate problems to do with pollution. It makes no provision for minimum standards relating to water quality, which I think are absolutely essential. We must have across-Canada minimum standards applicable to water quality. While there is a good argument for having different standards in the various regions of Canada, minimum standards should be spelled out and adhered to. In fact, it is still open for one province or region to encourage industry because of lower standards of pollution control. I am aware that the minister has marshalled arguments to counteract this statement. He says that we have the act. I suggest that the committee should look carefully at suggested amendments that deal with points I have raised.

Of course, the provinces know that federal involvement involves a financial commitment. When you talk to the provinces and want to get them involved in anything, the first thing you hear mentioned is money. Here there is no firm commitment of funds from the federal treasury. The control of pollution involves funds, Mr. Speaker. This point could be summed up by saying, "You either put up or shut up."

I could mention many more areas which the committee will have to scrutinize very carefully, but I wish to speak more specifically on action the government should take immediately, to which I am sure the House will give its consent. I refer to action which should have been taken several years ago. According to the Minister of Fisheries (Mr. Davis) at present we have an effective tool to deal with the problem of pollution. I quote from one of his speeches:

> We are fortunate in that we have a clear-cut avenue for federal participation in the battle against pollution. We are fortunate in that we have an effective tool in the Fisheries Act.

The minister went on to say:

> In this country, the nation has full authority over our "sea coast and inland fisheries". It makes our fishery laws and it approves our fishery regulations. True, Ottawa has delegated some of its authority to the provinces in respect to freshwater lakes and rivers. But our provincial government, if they want to make a change in any of our fishery regulations, must first submit them to us for approval. Any change in the Fisheries Act itself of course, is a matter for Parliament alone to decide. Our federal Fisheries Act, in other words, must be updated. It must include a few clauses which are essentially anticipatory in nature. It must not only say what kinds of chemicals can, and which cannot be discharged into Canadian waters, but see to it that our municipalities and our industries are aware of these guidelines ahead of time. It must provide certain penalties for non-compliance, of course.
> With a new and amended Fisheries Act, we will no longer have to find dead fish in order to prove our case. We will no longer have to wait until the damage is done to our environment. We will no longer have to discipline maverick companies which themselves have failed to look ahead and to plan for the future. We will no longer have to plead with municipalities to do the right thing for themselves and their citizens.
> Being simple and straightforward, it should also be economical in terms of manpower and red tape. So we can use our existing establishment to do a job on pollution, to do it quickly and to do it well.

The minister puts it very plainly. That is a long quotation, but I wanted to put it on the record because according to the minister there is no problem in immediate action being taken by the government to control pollution of our waters. Why hasn't some action been taken in the past, or why is it not being taken now?

Since May 30, 1969, when the minister delivered his speech, why has not the department drafted the necessary legislation to update the Fisheries Act? This would be much simpler matter than the bill we are now considering, and it would control pollution of our waters. This bill only talks about water. However, it is much more complicated than that. In fact, it might be so complicated that many Canadian citizens will not know what it is all about. It sounds good, but I am sure there are many who do not realize the complications involved. It does not do away with the red tape.

Of course, the Fisheries Act is concerned only with water, and a more broad approach to pollution is desired. When talking about pollution we must consider more than just water. However, this could be done and would probably be more effective for immediate water pollution. This bill, which is the major piece of legislation concerning pollution that the government has introduced, could then encompass pollution in all its aspects. The bill is not really attacking or getting at the root of the problem of pollution because, it concerns itself only with water. According to the Minister of Fisheries, effective action could be taken under the Fisheries Act. This bill might create more red tape and confusion. I do not understand how it will cut out the interdepartmental maze that now exists between the various departments of government.

The problem of pollution is national as well as regional and local. Co-ordinated national action is required to combat this national problem. One of the greatest failures of the present government is its failure to realize this fact and take the appropriate action. Consequently, the attack on pollution, water and air, has been frustrated by the action of numerous intergovernmental and intragovernmental agencies and bodies. Every department spends money in the field of pollution, but nobody can tell us exactly how much.

The Progressive Conservative Party has long recognized the need for co-ordinated action in pollution control and has repeatedly proposed the establishment of a single federal agency called the Canada Pollution Abatement Commission, reporting to Parliament through the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Mr. Greene) with the single purpose of providing technical and financial assistance in pollution control to existing agencies in the federal, provincial, municipal and industrial fields. The purpose of such an agency would be the undertaking of research programs and the co-ordination of existing programs. The agency would also be responsible for the development of a national pollution abatement policy.

To these areas of responsibility should also be added that of providing emergency information and assistance. If the federal government were to keep abreast of the technological means of combating pollution or, better still, providing leadership in pollution control research, such an information centre would be of great assistance in emergency situations. Experience gained from one emergency situation could be applied with possible modifications to a similar emergency situation. Some even advocate a department of environmental control. This might not be a bad idea, because at the present time every department is concerned with pollution and not one is really getting at the root of the problem. The Minister of Fisheries has already stated plainly that his department could have introduced legislation to update the existing legislation in order to provide effective water pollution control.

This new legislation could have attacked the whole problem of pollution. Recently a new and as yet unpatented method of dealing with oil pollution was implemented to correct a threat of crude oil pollution in Israel. This was considered to amount to a breakthrough in pollution control. I think it saved the Jordan River and even the Sea of Gallilee from contamination. Pollution is a global problem as well as a national one, and valuable information could be gained from foreign experience. Such information should be acquired, kept on file and made easily accessible to parties concerned. This is one way in which a Canadian pollution abatement commission could operate, thereby affording some co-ordination to the present hit-and-run tactics in fighting pollution.

I hope hon. members will consider the suggestions I have made along with others which have been made in earlier debates. There appear to be many loopholes in this bill. It is far too complicated. Since hon. members can read, I shall not repeat the points raised during the incomplete debate which took place on the subject before the Christmas recess. There are many areas which could, of course, be dealt with now and perhaps I ought to refresh the memories of hon. members with regard to them. Nevertheless, I shall end my remarks within a few moments.

As I say, the bill is much too complicated. It will involve far too much red tape and its machinery will take a long time to become effective in controlling water pollution. For example, the setting up of all these agencies is bound to take a long time and no one knows how long it will be before effective action results. I shall conclude by adopting everything said so far by my hon. friends, particularly my hon. friend from Parry Sound-Muskoka (Mr. Aiken), when he replied to the minister after the bill had been introduced. In raising our objection to this bill I move, seconded by my hon. friend from Halifax-East Hants (Mr. McCleave):

That all the words after "that" be struck out and the following substituted therefor:

"since it does not spell out, declare or assume a federal jurisdiction in pollution control matters; since no specific commitment of federal funds has been made; and since provision for establishment of water use standards, pollution offences, and penalties are not nationwide but are limited to water quality management areas, this bill is therefore ineffective as a basis for a national water pollution control program and the minister is directed by the House to redraft Bill C-144 to include these and other fundamental omissions before it is read a second time."

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. Perhaps I might simply read the amendment rather than put it to the House, because I must confess I have grave doubts as to its admissibility. I would prefer to consult Mr. Speaker on the point, but for the benefit of the House I shall read it so that it may be clear on the record.

It is moved by Mr. Comeau, seconded by Mr. McCleave:

That all the words after "that" be struck out and the following substituted therefor:

"since it does not spell out, declare or assume a federal jurisdiction in pollution control matters; since no specific commitment of federal funds has been made; and since provision for establishment of water use standards, pollution offences, and penalties are not nationwide but are limited to water quality management areas, this bill is therefore ineffective as a basis for a national water pollution control program and the minister is directed by the House to redraft Bill C-144 to include these and other fundamental omissions before it is read a second time."

Mr. Greene: Mr. Speaker, I have a point of order to raise as to the propriety of the amendment. I could commence argument now, or call it six o'clock. In any case, I wish to inform the Chair that I have an objection to the form and nature of the amendment and suggest it is not in accordance with the rules of the House.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Six o'clock.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: There may be procedural argument arising on this point. I have expressed the doubt which I myself feel, but rather than begin a discussion at this point I think we might consider it at a later date.

At six o'clock the House adjourned, without question put, pursuant to standing order.

UNEMPLOYMENT—REQUEST FOR UNANIMOUS CONSENT TO MOVE MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Hon. George Hees (Prince Edward-Hastings): Mr. Speaker, I ask the unanimous consent of the House to move a motion under Standing Order 43, and I base my reason for obtaining unanimous consent on the following facts:

During December the number of unemployed persons in Canada rose from 354,000 to 383,000, an increase of 9 per cent over the previous month, and showing a further steady increase in unemployment from month to month.

What is particularly alarming is the government's refusal to take positive action to increase employment, specifically:

1. A greatly expanded drive to increase exports, rather than the steady contraction of our efforts in this field during the past year which has caused our exports to increase at only one-third to one-half of the rate of increase of all of our principal competitors.

2. The introduction of tax incentives to increase productivity, thereby making possible lower costs and lower selling prices and enabling our products to sell more easily against foreign competition, with the result that more jobs would be available.

3. The introduction of tax incentives to induce more industrial research to improve the quality and style of our products, thereby making them more saleable and capable of providing more jobs.

In short, the attitude of the government toward expanding production and jobs has been a completely negative one, and must be changed immediately to a positive, constructive approach if further serious unemployment is not to develop.

I therefore move the following motion under Standing Order 43:

That this House, comprising the elected representatives of all of the people of Canada, consider and recommend a more effective method of increasing exports, productivity and sales, and thereby increase employment in this country.

Mr. Speaker: Hon. members have heard the motion proposed to the House under Standing Order 43. I shall not comment at this time on the form of the motion as proposed by the hon. member. The matter he has raised is an important one, but before the motion can be put to the House we must obtain unanimous consent and I must inquire whether there is such unanimous consent on the part of hon. members.

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. Trudeau: We have already heard the speech, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Speaker: I heard at least one objection.

Mr. Trudeau: The facts are wrong in the speech, too.

Mr. Hees: You will not be happy until it hits 6 per cent.

ELECTORAL BOUNDARIES READJUSTMENT ACT

MEASURE TO CHANGE NAME OF CONSTITUENCY

Mr. Antonio Thomas (Maisonneuve) moved for leave to introduce Bill C-177 intitled "An Act respecting the Electoral Boundaries Readjustment Act".

Some hon. Members: Explain.

Mr. Thomas: Mr. Speaker, the purpose of this bill is to give back to the riding of Maisonneuve its former name, to wit, "Maisonneuve-Rosemont" to avoid its being mistaken for the provincial constituency of Maisonneuve, a great area of which is located within the limits of the federal constituency of Maisonneuve.

Motion agreed to, bill read the first time and ordered to be printed.

ORAL QUESTION PERIOD

OIL

AGREEMENT WITH UNITED STATES—ASSURANCE AGAINST LESSENING OF CONTROL OF WATER RESOURCES

Hon. George Hees (Prince Edward-Hastings): I should like to address a question to the Prime Minister. Would the right hon. gentleman assure the House that any agreement which the government works out with the United States government regarding greater sales of Canadian oil to the United States market will not include the handing over of any degree of control of any of Canada's water resources to the United States or the lessening in any way of this country's sovereignty over our Arctic waters?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): I think I can give that assurance, Mr. Speaker.

CRUDE PETROLEUM—POSITION RESPECTING EXPORTS TO U.S.

Mr. Eldon M. Woolliams (Calgary North): I am sorry the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources is not here today, Mr. Speaker, though his name is on the roster. I trust the Prime Minister will give the House an answer to my question. In the many discussions that both the Prime Minister and the minister himself have pointed out are continuously being held between our officials and those of the United States in regard to the export of crude petroleum, has there been any recent suggestion by the United States officials that there be a cut-back in our exports of crude petroleum to the United States or tariffs placed thereon; and are we working toward an open and free trade policy on crude petroleum?

Mr. Speaker: Order. I have the impression that the hon. member is asking a question of such wide import that perhaps it should be answered by way of a general statement on motions. However, if there is a short answer perhaps it might be made available to the House now.

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister without Portfolio): Mr. Speaker, the only short answer is that the question itself was very long. Many aspects of the answer have been previously put before the House. The discussions are in fact covering very many aspects of our relationships, and they are still going forward.

[Mr. Thomas.]

Mr. Woolliams: A further supplementary question. In view of Your Honour's suggestion, which I thought was a good one, would the minister have the minister in charge make a full statement on this subject in view of the fact that the president of the Independent Petroleum Association has raised the question of tariffs on crude petroleum exports from Canada to the United States?

Mr. Lang: Mr. Speaker, I will bring that suggestion to the attention of the minister.

Mr. T. C. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question which I should like to address to the Prime Minister. In view of the fact that a United States cabinet committee, headed by Mr. George Shultz, Secretary of Labour, has recommended to the president the removal of all restrictions on imports from Canada into the United States in return for Canada being willing to negotiate a total energy package deal, may I ask the Prime Minister whether the Canadian government at any level has had such a proposal put to it?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I am not aware of that particular proposal having been made to the minister, but the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources has, of course, been in discussion with authorities in Washington regarding this question for some time now.

Mr. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): A further supplementary question which the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources, who has just entered the House, may care to answer. In view of these developments in Washington would the government be prepared to refer this whole matter to the House of Commons Committee on National Resources and Public Works with a view to enabling its members to ascertain what are the known potential resources in Canada, and what our requirements are likely to be for the foreseeable future?

Hon. J. J. Greene (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, if I might answer that question, the National Energy Board has, of course, very comprehensive information regarding resources, the totality of those resources and their availability for export. In any application for export the very issue that the National Energy Board has to decide is whether or not the resources in question are surplus to Canada's needs and available for export. From the standpoint of any negotiations with the United States, Canada's position would, of course, be that only resources that are clearly surplus to Canada's needs now and in the future would be available. We have made no commitments or decisions; all we have done is to express our willingness to discuss any matters that might affect Canada's interests in regard to energy resources.

Mr. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): A further supplementary question. In view of the fact that any integrated energy policy between Canada and the United States would have to be approved by this House, and that not only the National Energy Board but members of the House ought to have the relevant information, I again ask the minister whether he would be prepared to refer this whole question to the appropriate committee of the House in order that members may be fully aware of what is our known potential and what our long-term needs are likely to be?

Mr. Greene: I would be very pleased to consider that suggestion. I am sure that at least some, if not all, of the information can be obtained when the estimates of the National Energy Board are before the committee. However, I will consider the specific suggestion of the hon. member as well.

CANADIAN SOVEREIGNTY

WATERS OF ARCTIC ARCHIPELAGO— OPPORTUNITY TO DEBATE COMMITTEE REPORT

Mr. W. B. Nesbitt (Oxford): I wish to put a question to the government House Leader, or perhaps I might raise the matter as a point of order. When is the government going to arrange to move for concurrence in the first report of the Standing Committee on Indian Affairs and Northern Development instead of continuing to bury this report as it has been doing for some time?

Mr. Baldwin: Mr. Speaker, I have a question of privilege on this particular point and I raise it now because I think this is the only appropriate time to call Your Honour's attention and the attention of the House to a breach of privilege which has affected all members of the House. It arises because of a failure to allow hon. members their right, under tradition, practice, precedent and rules, to debate the report in question.

I do not intend to take up much time now because I will conclude by indicating the course I propose to take. The fact remains that while all reports of standing committees are not the subject of debate, a report of this character, in which the committee says that the waters lying between the islands of the Arctic archipelago have been and are subject to the sovereignty of Canada, and that without exercising such sovereignty the possibility of pollution and danger to the Arctic environment may be very great, should be presented to the House in such a way that it can be debated. I am in a position to establish this later, but rather than take up the time of the House during the question period I propose to give oral notice now, to be supplemented by written notice later, that a member of this party will give 48 hours notice under the appropriate Standing Order that the report of this committee be debated on a motion that it be concurred in. I would urge that such a motion be presented for discussion during Routine Proceedings.

OIL

UNITED STATES INVESTMENT IN CANADA

Mr. Eldon M. Woolliams (Calgary North): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct this question to the minister who has just come into the chamber, and I make nothing of that fact. It relates to questions posed by the leader of the NDP and members of this party about the situation regarding our petroleum trade and the serious implications in the question by the leader of the NDP. Has there been any suggestion or pressure brought to bear by the Canadian government regarding cutbacks by the United States of investment in Canada in the petroleum industry, with particular reference to developments which would directly or indirectly affect the employment of thousands of men and women in Canada as a result of a decrease in exports of crude petroleum from this country to the United States?

Hon. J. J. Greene (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, as I have said before, the Canadian posture during our discussions with the United States in connection with its review of United States oil policy has been that it would be in Canada's interest as well as in the interest of the United States to have an open market for Canadian oil in the United States. If such is achieved as a result of our negotiations it will enhance employment in Canada as well as oil sales, which would be very much in Canada's interest.

CONSUMER AFFAIRS

INCREASE BY EATON'S AND SIMPSON'S IN CHARGE ACCOUNT INTEREST RATES

Mrs. Grace MacInnis (Vancouver-Kingsway): Mr. Speaker, in view of the absence of the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs perhaps his Parliamentary Secretary might deal with this question. In light of the announced intention of Eaton's and Simpson's to raise their interest rates on revolving and instalment charge accounts, can the minister inform the House whether he or his officials are investigating this apparent collusion with a view to prosecution under the Combines Investigation Act?

[Translation]

Mr. Paul Langlois (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): I will take the question as notice, Mr. Speaker.

[English]

Mrs. MacInnis: Mr. Speaker, will the minister indicate whether he is preparing legislation to restrict the interest charges that retail stores and others may impose on their customers?

[Translation]

Mr. Langlois: I will also take the second part of the question as notice, Mr. Speaker.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

NIGERIA-BIAFRA—SUGGESTION THAT POPE ACT AS MEDIATOR

Mr. Bernard Dumont (Frontenac): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Secretary of State for External Affairs.

Since we have established diplomatic relations with the Vatican, could the minister not ask the Pope to act as mediator in the Nigeria-Biafra conflict, in order to alleviate the suffering in that part of the world?

[English]

GRAIN

RAPESEED—AVAILABILITY AT TERMINAL POSITIONS

Mr. S. J. Korchinski (Mackenzie): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister without Portfolio who answers for the Canadian Wheat Board. Since, according to the weekly grain letter issued by James Richardson and Sons, exporters of rapeseed have not been able to take advantage of markets because of the unavailability of rapeseed at terminal positions, could the minister indicate whether this is the fault of the railways under the block system or is it the fault of the Wheat Board?

[Mr. Greene.]

Mr. Speaker: Order. I think I should bring to the attention of the hon. member that the question as asked is hardly in order. He is asking the minister to express an opinion whether a particular situation is the fault of one party or another. I do not think the question as asked is in order.

Mr. Korchinski: Mr. Speaker, may I rephrase the question. Can the minister indicate to the House whether in fact there is a shortage of rapeseed at terminal positions so that exporters cannot fill their orders?

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister without Portfolio): Mr. Speaker, there are good quantities of rapeseed available at the terminals and any shipments required for sales are certainly provided in quick order.

Mr. George Muir (Lisgar): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary for the Minister without Portfolio from Saskatoon-Humboldt. In view of the fact that space for rapeseed in the west coast terminals was apparently allocated before wheat acreage reduction caused a heavy increase in rapeseed production and subsequent sales, does the minister now consider the space allocated for this grain adequate under present conditions?

Mr. Speaker: I wonder whether that supplementary question is in order, but in view of the importance of the matter the minister may wish to reply.

Mr. Lang: Mr. Speaker, I believe it is adequate but the matter is under review with the prospect of major markets in mind.

[Later:]

Mr. Korchinski: Mr. Speaker, I have a further supplementary question. Since the two agents of the Wheat Board, Mr. Joe Caplan and Humboldt Milling Company, have been suspended as agents for the Wheat Board, I should like to ask the minister whether it is the intention of the Wheat Board to reinstate them as buying agents for the Board?

WHEAT—REASON FOR LOSS OF SALE TO JAPAN

Mr. R. R. Southam (Qu'Appelle-Moose Mountain): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister without Portfolio from Saskatoon-Humboldt. Could he indicate to the House whether the loss of a Canadian wheat sale last week to the United States and Australia, based on the tender prepared by the Japanese food agency, resulted from Canada's asking price being raised by ⅞ of a cent per bushel?

Mr. Speaker: This question is in the form of debate. I do not think it is in order.

WHEAT—ABILITY TO TAKE ADVANTAGE OF SUPPLEMENTARY QUOTA

Mr. Cliff Downey (Battle River): I have a supplementary, Mr. Speaker. Could the minister in charge of the Wheat Board tell us what provisions are being made to rectify the inequitable position that grain producers are placed in whereby they cannot take advantage of supplementary quotas that are offered if they do not have any acreage seeded in a given year to the type of grain to which the supplementary quota applies? Does the minister not believe that a specified number of bushels on a supplementary quota would be a fairer way of administering a supplementary quota and—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member's question is argumentative.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

NIGERIA—COST OF MILITARY OBSERVERS

Mr. Lorne Nystrom (Yorkton-Melville): Mr. Speaker, yesterday I asked the Secretary of State for External Affairs whether he was in a position to inform the House who is paying the cost of the military observers operating in Nigeria. He said at that time he would take the question as notice. Is he now in a position to answer the question?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I have a general answer but there is one detail I want to check to satisfy myself. The next time I am in the House I will give the answer.

NIGERIA—ACCESSIBILITY OF WAR ZONE TO OBSERVERS

Mr. R. Gordon L. Fairweather (Fundy-Royal): I have a supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Yesterday I asked the minister about the accessibility of the war zone to the observers and the minister indicated he was not certain about the situation. Is there an answer now and can we be assured there are no restrictions on the military observers throughout the entire zone?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Secretary of State for External Affairs): The observer team composing some eight members representing Canada, Poland, Sweden, the United Kingdom and the United Nations has made a report. It is to be released tonight. I think the time is 9 a.m. Greenwich mean time or something like that. I have glanced at it and could table it were it not for the embargo. It indicates that they have been close to the troops constantly during the recent fighting and were never denied access.

[Translation]

INQUIRY OF THE MINISTRY

Mr. Léonel Beaudoin (Richmond): Mr. Speaker, I should like to put a question to the Secretary of State.

In view of the fact that the play "Hair", now showing in Toronto, is the target of much criticism as to whether or not it respects our standards of morality, would the Secretary of State tell us whether or not he or the government intends to set up an inquiry into this matter, in order to determine if that play meets Canadian standards?

Mr. Speaker: Order. I am not sure this matter is the responsibility of the minister to whom the question was put.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

ALLEGED DISCRIMINATION AGAINST FRENCH-SPEAKING EMPLOYEES

Hon. Martial Asselin (Charlevoix): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Secretary of State for External Affairs.

A study on the Department of External Affairs, made by professor Lalande from the University of Montreal, gives facts and figures which indicate that French-Canadian employees are being discriminated against in that department. In view of this, does the minister intend to ask an independent commission to investigate the matter thoroughly so that French Canadians may know that a stop will be put to all such discrimination?

[English]

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, this report related to conditions some years ago. It has been reviewed recently by the department. While I have no objections to an inquiry, I would be very happy to answer questions arising out of that report to satisfy the hon. member that there is in fact no discrimination and that in particular the Department of External Affairs practises the principle of bilingualism at least as effectively as any other department.

CONSUMER AFFAIRS

ALLEGED MISLEADING ADVERTISING BY IMPERIAL TOBACCO COMPANY

Mr. Don Mazankowski (Vegreville): My question is directed to the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs. However, in his absence may I be permitted to direct it to his Parliamentary Secretary. I might add that I have given the minister notice of this question.

Will the minister undertake to investigate the misleading and probably fraudulent advertising by the Imperial Tobacco Company with respect to its Casino brand cigarettes marketed in Canada, indicating that prizes in amounts from $5 to as much as $100 are contained in every package? Would he also check with the residents of the Smoky Lake district in Alberta, where some citizens are claiming winnings of $20,000 to $30,000 as a result of participating in this Casino game, and the fact that Imperial Tobacco now refuses to honour such claims?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I think this is a question which should normally be put on the Order Paper. If there is urgency, the hon. member may suggest that it be considered at the time of adjournment.

Mr. Mazankowski: I rise on a question of privilege, Mr. Speaker. May I say with all due respect that I think this is a matter of urgency. Imperial Tobacco has claimed in its advertising promotion that every package of Casino cigarettes contains a voucher worth as much as $100, and in light of the refusal by the Imperial Tobacco Company to honour—

Mr. Speaker: Order. That is hardly a question of privilege. If the hon. member is convinced that this is a matter of urgency, the question can be considered at the time of adjournment.

[Mr. Asselin.]

Mr. Mazankowski: Ten o'clock, Mr. Speaker.

NATIONAL FILM BOARD

LAY-OFFS OF EMPLOYEES—CHARGES FOR USE OF FILMS

Mr. David Orlikow (Winnipeg North): I would like to direct a question to the Secretary of State. When will he be prepared to make the statement which he promised some time ago would be made today dealing with the situation at the National Film Board?

[Translation]

Hon. Gérard Pelletier (Secretary of State): I think, Mr. Speaker, that the hon. member is mistaken. I have never undertaken to make a statement today. I said that the unbiased person appointed to review some decisions made by the authorities of the National Film Board would submit his report on the 15th. I know that it has been handed to the Board Commissioner and it is up to him to forward it to me. I have never undertaken to make a statement today, and it would have been very unwise for me to do so, because I knew beforehand that I would not have any information on the matter before tomorrow.

[English]

Mr. Orlikow: I am sorry I made a mistake, but in view of the great interest throughout the whole country, would the minister give consideration to making a statement on the situation at an early date?

[Translation]

Mr. Pelletier: Mr. Speaker, once I have read the report, I will be able to see whether it is advisable to make a statement.

[English]

Hon. W. G. Dinsdale (Brandon-Souris): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a supplementary question to the Secretary of State. In view of the CRTC's decision on cablevision, cutting off many communities in Canada from access to American T.V. culture, and the NFB's decision cutting off many isolated communities, in the main, from Canadian film culture, when the minister makes a statement would he indicate what action he is planning to take to fill this void?

[Translation]

Mr. Pelletier: Mr. Speaker, I do not agree with the second premise of the question. How can the hon. member express the opinion that the situation at the National Film Board is isolating the various Canadian regions from one another from a cultural point of view?

As for a statement on the matter, I shall willingly consider whether it would be useful.

Mr. Georges Valade (Sainte-Marie): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the Secretary of State whether he would be ready to defer this report to the House committee instructed to study these questions as soon as he receives it?

Mr. Pelletier: As soon as I receive the report, Mr. Speaker, I shall be able to determine whether the suggestion of the hon. member is advisable under the circumstances. I must advise him right now, however, that it may well not be the case, since the report will not be submitted to the minister, but to the Commissioner with whom I shall have to discuss the matter. It is not impossible, however, that this report could be tabled in the house and referred to the appropriate committee.

[English]

Mr. Donald MacInnis (Cape Breton-East Richmond): Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask the minister a supplementary question arising from the fact that he could not accept the premise in the question of the hon. member for Brandon-Souris in reference to the National Film Board. Does he not consider that when the Film Board places a cost on its services which is beyond the ability of communities to pay it is cutting off access to Canadian culture as mentioned by the hon. member?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The supplementary question is argumentative.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

ASSISTANCE TO CANADIAN CITIZENS IN UNITED STATES

Mr. R. Gordon L. Fairweather (Fundy-Royal): Mr. Speaker, I would like to direct a question to the Secretary of State for External Affairs. If he does not have an answer, perhaps he would like to take it as notice. Will the minister say if instructions have been given to Canadian consular personnel in the United States to deny assistance or advice to Canadian citizens in the United States who may be in difficulty because of the U.S. draft law?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I shall take that question as notice. It is the first time it has been brought to my attention.

PENSIONS

RECIPROCAL AGREEMENT BETWEEN CANADA AND FEDERAL REPUBLIC OF GERMANY

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the Minister of National Health and Welfare. On November 20 last, as noted in Hansard at page 1034, the minister indicated that an agreement between this country and the Federal Republic of Germany regarding reciprocal pension arrangements might be concluded shortly. Can he say whether that agreement has been concluded and, if so, will a copy of it be tabled?

Hon. John C. Munro (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, I wish to advise the hon. member that the agreement has not been concluded. However, negotiations are currently going on and we are hopeful that they will be concluded as soon as possible. When that is done I would be happy to announce it to the House.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): In view of the fact that the answer last time was similar, can the minister say when "as soon as possible" might be?

An hon. Member: Soon.

HOUSING

AVAILABILITY OF MONEY FOR PUBLIC HOUSING

Mr. Lincoln M. Alexander (Hamilton West): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the Minister without Portfolio in charge of housing. Can the minister inform the House if he has indicated to the provinces when moneys will be available and the amount which will be allocated for the year 1970 in regard to public housing?

Hon. Robert K. Andras (Minister without Portfolio): Mr. Speaker, I think we will be giving that information to the provincial ministers concerned within a matter of days.

SPORTS

FINANCIAL SUPPORT FOR OLYMPIC GAMES BIDS

Mr. Jerry Pringle (Fraser Valley East): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the Minister of National Health and Welfare. Because of the urgency with respect to confirmation deadlines and in order to clarify confused reports, will the minister advise the House whether firm commitments of federal financial support have been given to the sponsors of the Montreal bid for the summer Olympic games and to the sponsors of the Garibaldi winter games bid and, if so, the amount of federal aid pledged to both?

Mr. Speaker: I have some doubts as to the urgency of the question asked by the hon. member. If there is urgency that is not apparent to me, perhaps the hon. member would like to give notice of the question so that it might be considered and debated at the time of adjournment. Insofar as the supplementary question is concerned, that is the type of statistical or detailed information which normally is given by way of a written answer.

LABOUR CONDITIONS

UNEMPLOYMENT INCREASE—CHANGES IN MANPOWER TRAINING RULES

Mr. David Lewis (York South): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Manpower and Immigration. Arising out of the increase in unemployment during the month of December, which historically is likely to have increased by another one per cent to 2 per cent by now, I wish to ask the minister whether, in view of the fact that the largest group of unemployed is in the 16 to 19 year bracket, he has considered or is considering changing the rules with regard to manpower training so that these young, unskilled people may be given training during their enforced unemployment?

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Minister of Manpower and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, I am aware of the rule to which the hon. member refers. It has been under consideration in the past and at present that aspect of the program, as well as others, is before the Advisory Council on Manpower and Immigration. It is also being considered by the deputy minister in conjunction with the provincial deputy ministers. I cannot say whether any change will be made or when, but I want to assure the hon. member that the matter is under active consideration.

Mr. Lewis: A supplementary question. In view of the fact that these discussions are likely to take some time, have the minister and his department evolved some way by which these young unemployed Canadians may be given some opportunity for retraining, advanced education, or some other opportunity to enter into remunerative work immediately?

[Mr. Pringle.]

Mr. Speaker: It appears to me that the information sought by the hon. member should be given to the House in the form of a general statement on motions.

Mr. Lewis: Then may I ask the minister whether he would make a statement on motions with regard to this particularly difficult and painful part of the unemployment problem affecting young people from 16 to 19 this winter?

Mr. MacEachen: No, Mr. Speaker. I cannot give an undertaking at the moment to make a statement on motions on this matter.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

NIGERIA—RESPONSE TO OFFERS OF AID

Hon. J. A. MacLean (Malpeque): Mr. Speaker, I would like to address a question to the Secretary of State for External Affairs. Would he bring the House up to date with regard to any response which may have been received by the government from the government of Nigeria regarding either offers of direct aid by the Canadian government or offers of aid by Canadian and other organizations such as Joint Church Aid?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I cannot add anything to what I said yesterday about the position of Joint Church Aid and Canairelief. I think the statements by the leaders of the Nigerian government speak for themselves. However, I would like to say to the House that the money that was approved by the government and turned over to the Nigerian authorities is now being spent for the relief of hunger in Nigeria, including the amounts of money turned over to the Nigerian Rehabilitation Commission, the Nigerian Red Cross, and UNICEF.

Mr. MacLean: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Would the minister assure the House we are correct in assuming that the government made clear to the government of Nigeria that the offer of Canairelief and Joint Church Aid was made on the basis that this food and these facilities would be made available under the management of any organization acceptable to the government of Nigeria?

Mr. Sharp: Mr. Speaker, the hon. member will recall that the House of Commons passed a resolution to that effect which was transmitted immediately to the Nigerian authorities.

POST OFFICE

MAILING OF HATE LITERATURE FROM NIAGARA FALLS, N.Y.

Mr. Robert Muir (Cape Breton-The Sydneys): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Postmaster General and Minister of Communications. Is the minister aware that some of the most nauseating hate literature, which can only be described as filthy, is being mailed to Canadian citizens, including Members of Parliament, from Niagara Falls, New York, on behalf of what is called the Natural Order of Gooderham, Ontario, whose mailing privileges have been cancelled? Would he be prepared to check with the American postal authorities to ascertain if they will co-operate to have this practice stopped?

Hon. Eric W. Kierans (Postmaster General and Minister of Communications): This is normally our practice, Mr. Speaker, and we go farther ourselves. After we get a ruling from my colleague in the Department of Justice we deny mailing privileges to those who send out such pornographic material. I am not aware to which particular instance the hon. member is referring, but I shall certainly take notice of it.

Mr. Muir (Cape Breton-The Sydneys): A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Since the literature apparently prepared by these congeni al fools also reflects upon the presiding officer of this assembly and our Jewish citizens, would the minister consider referring the matter to the justice committee?

Mr. Kierans: Absolutely, and with all the more reason, Mr. Speaker.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

PROPOSED RECOGNITION OF COMMUNIST CHINA

Mr. Randolph Harding (Kootenay West): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Secretary of State for External Affairs. What recent progress has been made in the negotiations for the recognition of the Peking government?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, the state of play is that some weeks ago we presented to the Peking authorities proposals to which we have not yet had a reply.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Is it play or ploy?

[Translation]

INDUSTRY

GOLD MINING—POLICY RESPECTING GRANTS

Mr. Oza Tétrault (Villeneuve): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Prime Minister.

Could he tell us whether the government intends to keep on granting subsidies to gold mines after December 1970?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I shall certainly pass on this question to the minister concerned.

[English]

IMMIGRATION

REQUEST FOR POLITICAL ASYLUM BY POLISH SEAMEN

Mr. Robert McCleave (Halifax-East Hants): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Manpower and Immigration. Has a decision been made yet on the request by the nine Polish seamen seeking political asylum in Canada. If not, when may a decision be expected?

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Minister of Manpower and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, a decision has not yet been made. The matter is currently being actively considered and a decision will be made very shortly.

CAPE BRETON DEVELOPMENT CORPORATION

ACTION RESPECTING ALLEGED DISCRIMINATION

Mr. Donald MacInnis (Cape Breton-East Richmond): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Regional Economic Expansion. Has the minister taken any steps to stop the discrimination carried on at Devco and which he himself has admitted?

Some hon. Members: Shame!

Mr. MacInnis: A supplementary, Mr. Speaker. I did not get an answer so I will clarify my question by repeating it. Has the minister taken any action to stop the discrimination carried on at Devco, which he himself has admitted?

[Translation]

Hon. Jean Marchand (Minister of Regional Economic Expansion): Mr. Speaker, I do not know when I made such a statement. It is true that Devco has hired a number of foreigners, and I believe I have told those responsible that it would be more advisable to give preference to Canadian citizens.

[English]

Mr. MacInnis: A further supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Would the minister check Hansard when this question was asked previously and see how far his present answer is removed from the truth?

[Translation]

Mr. Marchand (Langelier): Mr. Speaker, I should like—

INFORMATION

AMALGAMATION OF DEPARTMENTAL SERVICES UNDER INFORMATION CANADA

Mr. A. D. Hales (Wellington): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct my question to the Minister without Portfolio responsible for the direction of Information Canada. Is it the government's intention to disband the information sections of each department and amalgamate them under Information Canada?

Some hon. Members: Order!

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Moose Jaw.

Some hon. Members: No information.

Mr. Hales: Mr. Speaker, maybe a minister has not been officially designated to that position. Therefore I will direct my question to the right hon. Prime Minister. Is it the intention of the government to disband the various information sections in each of the government departments and amalgamate them under Information Canada?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I think it was only yesterday that I answered the hon. member for York South—

Mr. Hees: No, no.

Mr. Trudeau: —that we would be making an announcement on the operations of Information Canada which as yet has not been officially set up. Therefore, I am not now in a position to make this announcement; it is not ready.

Mr. Hales: A supplementary question—

[Mr. Marchand (Langelier).]

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

Mr. MacEwan: Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I interrupt the hon. member only to say that I think we should go on to another subject as we are running short of time.

GRAIN

REQUEST FOR PAYMENT OF FARM STORAGE COSTS

Mr. John L. Skoberg (Moose Jaw): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the minister responsible for the Canadian Wheat Board. In view of the plan announced by the minister to move grain slowly to the Lakehead, which in effect means more grain being left on the farms for a longer period of time, would the minister say whether he will give favourable consideration to some payment to the producers for farm stored grain storage costs?

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister without Portfolio): Mr. Speaker, the plan to promote steady movement to the Lakehead is one of deliberateness in moving the grain as effectively as possible. General plans with respect to the grain industry are under consideration.

TRANSPORT

PURPOSE OF MEETING BETWEEN FEDERAL AND QUEBEC MINISTERS

Mr. Georges Valade (Sainte-Marie): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Transport or to his Parliamentary Secretary, but since both are absent, I shall put it to the Prime Minister.

Could he tell the House—I wonder if he can hear me—whether the purpose of the meeting between the federal Minister of Transport and the Quebec Minister of Municipal Affairs is to discuss matters concerning the airport at Sainte-Scholastique?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, the minister actually told me about that meeting, but he has not indicated whether the Quebec minister and himself had agreed to divulge the purpose of the meeting. Therefore, I believe we shall have to wait until the minister is present to know if, by providing such information, I would infringe some agreement between the two ministers.

Mr. Valade: Mr. Speaker, a supplementary question.

Will the location of the Sainte-Scholastique airport be actually discussed at that meeting?

[English]

BILINGUALISM AND BICULTURALISM

POLICY FOLLOWING THIRD REPORT OF COMMISSION

Mr. J. P. Nowlan (Annapolis Valley): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the right hon. Prime Minister. In view of the very brief answer yesterday regarding the third report of the B and B Commission, I should like to know when the government will make up its mind about that report?

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Joliette—

Mr. Nowlan: Mr. Speaker, he has not had a chance to answer. I am rising on a point of order.

Mr. Speaker: Perhaps the hon. member might make his point of order in a moment. I was going to suggest to him that to ask when the government is going to make up its mind is hardly a proper question.

Mr. Nowlan: I will rephrase my question, Your Honour. Since the third report of the B and B Commission was tabled, questions asked, starting before the House rose for Christmas, have been handled in a cavalier, callous and very facetious way by the Prime Minister. That is why questions have to be phrased somewhat differently—

Mr. Perrault: Oh, oh.

Mr. Nowlan: I am speaking to His Honour and not to you, Burnaby-Seymour.

An hon. Member: Who the hell is he?

Mr. Nowlan: Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Prime Minister. In view of the three-part question asked yesterday and the first answer that no decision had yet been made on the third report of the B and B Commission, can the Prime Minister inform the House when the government will make a decision on the B and B Commission report? Could a statement be made in the House even though the Prime Minister said yesterday he would never make one?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, the report is under consideration and we will make a statement of government policy in this regard in due course. When I said "never", it was in answer to the question that the member had asked about whether we had to reconsider our past policy.

LABOUR RELATIONS

STATUS OF GROUP OF SPECIALISTS IN CONCILIATION AND ARBITRATION

Mr. Roch La Salle (Joliette): Mr. Speaker, the Minister of Labour being absent, I would like to direct my question to the Prime Minister.

The Minister of Labour has announced today the setting up, within the Conciliation and Arbitration Branch, of a group of experts in labour relations. May I ask the Prime Minister whether in the government's opinion this will be a permanent negotiation committee?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): I know nothing about the matter, Mr. Speaker. I will take the question as notice and I will discuss it with the minister in charge.

ENERGY

ASSISTANCE TO GLACE BAY HEAVY WATER PLANT

Mr. Rod Thomson (Battleford-Kindersley): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources. In view of the inability of the Glace Bay plant to produce heavy water, will the minister make a statement on motions indicating what the federal government is prepared to take on this urgent problem?

Hon. J. J. Greene (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, as I think my hon. friend knows, the Glace Bay Deuterium plant is, I believe, owned by a corporation which is a part of the Nova Scotia government and is not in any way a part of the federal entity in this regard.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. There are three or four members rising on supplementaries. We have already gone beyond the question period by approximately three minutes. I thought I would give the last row members a chance to ask questions even though the time had expired. Perhaps we would be in order to now call Orders of the Day.

Business of the House

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

Mr. Baldwin: Mr. Speaker, I wish to ask the President of the Privy Council what the business is for the balance of this week and next week.

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): Mr. Speaker, it is the intention to continue today with the Canada water bill which was commenced yesterday. That business will be followed by the four bills with respect to financial institutions.

In more detail they are government order 44, Bill S-8, with regard to trust companies; government order 45, Bill S-9, with regard to loan companies; government order 42, Bill S-6, with regard to the Canadian and British Insurance Companies Act, and government order 43, Bill S-7, with regard to the Foreign Insurance Companies Act. I might say in that regard that there has been some discussion about the possibility of making a special order so that these four bills, which all concern a similar subject matter, might be treated as a package.

The next three bills will be with regard to fisheries. They are government order 17, Bill C-133, with regard to the Deep Sea Fisheries Act; government order 18, Bill C-134, with regard to the Coastal Fisheries Protection Act, and government order 56, Bill C-175, with regard to the Canadian Saltfish Corporation.

Whatever the outcome of this particular business, Tuesday of next week will be an allotted day under the auspices of the Official Opposition.

Mr. Aiken: Could I ask the minister whether it is the intention of the government to carry the second reading of the water bill through to conclusion before proceeding with other matters?

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): It is difficult to predict, Mr. Speaker, since it has not been possible to make any arrangements to allocate time for the second reading debate of that bill. That will depend very much on the circumstances that develop.

Mr. MacInnis: I rise on a point of order, Mr. Speaker, with respect to the question time of members of this House. I call Your Honour's attention to the fact that earlier in the question period there were quite a number of questions which had to be repeated for the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources because he was late arriving. I do not think hon. members should have to sacrifice their time for a minister who is on today's roster and cannot get to work on time.

[Mr. Speaker.]

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Without going into the matter, the hon. member will recognize that I mentioned that a few additional minutes were added.

Mr. MacInnis: We wasted five.

Mr. Speaker: Perhaps we wasted five and added three so we may be short two minutes. I might take that into account tomorrow.

Mr. Greene: On a question of privilege, Mr. Speaker, it is sometimes better to be late and be of some use than to be here on time and be of no use.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

WATER RESOURCES

PROVISION FOR MANAGEMENT INCLUDING RESEARCH AND PLANNING AND IMPLEMENTATION OF PROGRAMS

The House resumed from Wednesday, January 14, consideration of the motion of Mr. Greene that Bill C-144, to provide for the management of the water resources of Canada including research and the planning and implementation of programs relating to the conservation, development and utilization of water resources, be read the second time and referred to the Standing Committee on National Resources and Public Works, and of the amendment moved by Mr. Comeau (page 2411.).

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker: On adjournment last evening, I think that the hon. member for South Western Nova (Mr. Comeau) had moved an amendment to the motion for second reading of the bill before us, and some hon. members had indicated their intention to object to that amendment, which seemed contrary to Standing Orders. If the hon. members wish at this time, to put forward arguments either for or against the amendment on procedural grounds, I would be glad to hear them before making a ruling.

[English]

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): Mr. Speaker, I wish to say a few words with respect to the admissibility of an amendment in this form.

The amendment which the hon. member has put forward is perhaps not as clear in its terminology as it might be, but it seems to me that it might be objected to under the existing precedents with regard to amendments on second reading on several grounds.

In the first place, the hon. member seeks to oppose second reading of this bill and to refer it back for redrafting so as to add certain additional provisions to the bill which he feels have been omitted and which should be included.

Perhaps it might be useful for me to make a number of references to the relevant rules in May's 17th edition, page 527, dealing with the question of amendments at this stage of public business. The first of the rules is that the principle of relevancy applies to an amendment here as it does elsewhere and the amendment must not include in its scope other bills then standing for consideration in the House. No objection could be made to the amendment on that basis.

Perhaps of greater importance is the second of the two rules to which reference is made. I quote:

> The amendment must not be concerned in detail with the provisions of the bill upon which it is moved, nor anticipate amendments thereto which may be moved in committee; nor is it permissible to propose merely the addition of words to the question, that the bill be now read a second time, as such words must, by implication, attach conditions to the second reading.

I suggest that the hon. member in his proposed amendment is at least in part suggesting certain propositions which it might be competent for him to move when the bill is before the committee or indeed at the report stage. To that extent, his amendment falls under the second of the two rules cited and for that reason the amendment should not be received.

The third of the rules would also appear to be relevant since, in effect, what the hon. member is doing is asserting a direct negative to the proposition that the bill before the House be read a second time. I quote this rule from page 528 of May's 17th edition:

> An amendment, which amounts to no more than a direct negation of the principle of the bill, is open to objection.

I suggest that the best interpretation of what is a rather complicated amendment is that the hon. member is intending to negative altogether the proposition involved in the second reading and for that reason his amendment falls under the third rule. What seems more likely is that he is negativing the proposition in part and making certain suggestions as to possible inclusions in the bill, suggestions which could be carried out by the hon. member or other hon. members at a later date by way of an amendment at either the committee stage or by taking advantage of the report stage. For those reasons, I suggest the amendment not be received.

• (3:00 p.m.)

Mr. Aiken: Mr. Speaker, this amendment is presented in a form somewhat different from others which have been submitted in the past. It is designed, however, to be in harmony with the new rules under which we are operating.

I submit the amendment meets all the established criteria provided for an amendment on second reading. First, it declares principles adverse to and differing from the principles of the bill. I think this is obvious from the wording. In the second place, it opposes the progress of the bill. These are two of the essential criteria set out in citation 382 of Beauchesne at page 277. The amendment does not seek to change any words in the bill itself. It seeks, rather, to give reasons for opposing second reading until the bill is redrafted.

The amendment does not anticipate amendments which may be moved in committee. Such amendments would largely be amendments concerning detail. The amendment we are moving affects questions of principle involved in the bill as a whole. For these reasons, I contend that the amendment meets the criteria established by citation 389 of Beauchesne. It is a reasoned amendment in that it sets forth the basis upon which the bill is held to be unsatisfactory.

If it is thought—and this view has not been expressed by the President of the Privy Council—that the conclusion of the motion which asks that the bill be redrafted differs from the normal wording, I would say that the House is surely master of its own proceedings and may direct such redrafting if it is so inclined. The amendment would not be out of order for that reason.

The motion to which the reasoned amendment has been moved is that Bill C-144 be read the second time and referred to committee. This motion is made pursuant to Standing Order 74(1) which provides that:

> Every public bill shall be read twice and referred to a committee before any amendment may be made thereto.

This new Standing Order combines the two motions which existed under the former rules, namely, the motion for second reading and the motion to refer to committee.

Under the new rules, a reasoned amendment can therefore be directed to the motion in its present broader form, combining the motion for second reading with the motion for referral to committee.

A further change was made under the new Standing Order 62(2), which provides:

> The message and recommendation of the Governor General in relation to any bill for the appropriation of any part of the public revenue or of any tax or impost shall be printed on the Notice Paper and in the Votes and Proceedings when any such measure is to be introduced and the text of such recommendation shall be printed with or annexed to every such bill.

I call Your Honour's attention in particular to the words: "and the text of such recommendation shall be printed with or annexed to every such bill".

Under the new standing orders, therefore, a motion for second reading now imports the motion for second reading, the motion for referral to committee, and, additionally, in the case of a money bill or purported money bill, the financial recommendation by the Governor General that the House appropriate public moneys to the purposes of the bill.

In other words, a reasoned amendment can now be directed against the bill in any or all of its three aspects: second reading, referral to committee and the financial or appropriation resolution which is now incorporated in the bill.

In the time at my disposal I do not intend to discuss the principles applicable to a reasoned amendment; they are dealt with in May's 17th edition at page 526 and following. However, I will refer to the following paragraph which appears in May at page 527:

> A reasoned amendment is placed on the paper in the form of a motion and may fall into one of several categories. (1) It may be declaratory of some principle adverse to, or differing from, the principles, policy or provisions of the bill. (2) It may express opinions as to any circumstances connected with the introduction or prosecution of the bill, or otherwise opposed to its progress.

I submit that the reasoned amendment put forward by the member for South Western Nova (Mr. Comeau) meets these criteria.

[Mr. Aiken.]

The bill, in its long title and in the financial resolution printed with it, claims that it provides for the management of the water resources of Canada, including research and the planning and implementation of programs related to the conservation, development and utilization of water resources. This it does not do. The government admits that the bill, as drafted, does not live up to the long title and the financial recommendations in the third paragraph of the preamble where it is set out that comprehensive programs—and therefore programs which are vital to the bill—would be undertaken by the government of Canada in co-operation with provincial governments. Unless the co-operation of all ten provinces is obtained, the bill does not provide for the management of the water resources of Canada or for the implementation of programs for conservation, development and utilization of our water resources. These objects of the bill, which are essential to it, would be provided for and implemented, if at all, under federal and provincial agreements.

In the second place, the recommendation as printed with the bill and in Votes and Proceedings does not appropriate any public moneys and therefore does not comply with the requirements of Standing Order 62(2). The relevant portion of the recommendation says:

> All expenditures for the purposes of the Act, including any expenses or allowances of any advisory committee, shall be paid out of moneys appropriated by Parliament therefor.

It should be noted that Clause 31 provides:

> All expenditures by the minister for the purposes of this Act shall be paid out of money appropriated by parliament.

The clause does not follow the resolution inasmuch as it restricts the appropriations by Parliament to expenditures made by the minister only, that is, the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources as defined in Clause 2(1)(i) of the bill. All expenditures made under the Act are not made by the minister—if he makes any at all. Clause 15(1)(b) provides for contributions or loans by the Government of Canada.

In conclusion, the most serious defect in this connection is that precedents of this House hold that a bill which provides that expenditures thereunder be paid out of moneys appropriated by Parliament is not a bill which requires an appropriation recommendation under Section 54 of the British North America Act. The money would be provided later under an appropriation, and it is this latter appropriation which would be accompanied by a resolution. This is a general subject on which a previous ruling has been made. The fact I am trying to prove is that this amendment is, indeed, adverse to and opposed to the principle of the bill as it is recommended and as it is printed. For all these reasons, I believe it is a perfectly valid reasoned amendment.

I rather like the form of the amendment because it provides for something we have not been able to do prior to this time. Previously, we were able to move simply that second reading should not now be given, and this, if it were accepted, was the end of the bill. The purpose of the type of motion now proposed is to assert that the House is dissatisfied with the form in which the bill has been brought down—the form in which it appeared after the first reading had been agreed to. By approving the motion of my hon. friend, the House can advise the minister that it is not satisfied with the bill in its present form. The measure can then be redrafted and then proceed without any necessity for the earlier formalities being repeated. The object of an amendment, of course, if accepted, is to start again and go through the recommendation procedures, and so on.

For this reason, I would urge Your Honour to give serious consideration to the form of this amendment. We feel it is one that would be eminently acceptable and satisfactory under the new rules that have been adopted, and it otherwise complies with the fundamentals that have been laid down in relation to an amendment on second reading.

Mr. Speaker: May I express my appreciation to those hon. members who have taken part in this brief debate on the procedural point that has been raised by hon. members following the amendment that was proposed last evening by the hon. member for South Western Nova (Mr. Comeau). The fact that this amendment was proposed shortly before the adjournment, and that some reservation was expressed to the House at the time, has given me the opportunity of looking into the matter from a procedural point of view and of considering the arguments that might be advanced either for or against the form and substance of the amendment proposed by the hon. member.

I have spent some time studying the different procedural aspects of the matter, and keeping in mind the point of view that has been expressed by the President of the Privy Council (Mr. Macdonald) and the hon. member for Parry Sound-Muskoka (Mr. Aiken), I should like to give my view of the matter.

At the outset I should like to restate for the record both the motion and the amendment proposed by the hon. member for South Western Nova. To the motion for the second reading of Bill C-144, the hon. member proposed an amendment which reads as follows:

> That all the words after "that" be struck out and the following substituted therefor:
> "since it does not spell out, declare or assume a federal jurisdiction in pollution control matters; since no specific commitment of federal funds has been made; and since provision for establishment of water use standards, pollution offences, and penalties are not nationwide but are limited to water quality management areas, this bill is therefore ineffective as a basis for a national water pollution control program and the minister is directed by the House to redraft Bill C-144 to include these and other fundamental omissions before it is read a second time."

The hon. member for Parry Sound-Muskoka has very rightly brought to the attention of the House the fact that this is a new form of amendment. We will all recognize that this does not automatically make it out of order, but it does perhaps bring it more particularly to the attention of the Chair from a procedural standpoint. My original reaction, which I gather is the same as the one which the learned Deputy Speaker had last night, was that the proposed motion did not appear to be an amendment but, rather, a statement or declaration of principle in itself, it is more a substantive motion than an amendment.

As hon. members have pointed out, citation 382 of Beauchesne's fourth edition states that, at the second reading stage:

> It is also competent to a member who desires to place on record any special reasons for not agreeing to the second reading of a Bill, to move as an admendment to the question, a resolution declaratory of some principle adverse to, or differing from, the principles, policy, or provisions of the bill, or expressing opinions as to any circumstances connected with its introduction, or prosecution; or otherwise opposed to its progress; or seeking further information in relation to the Bill by Committees, Commissioners, the production of papers or other evidence or the opinion of Judges.

This citation in Beauchesne originally came from one of May's editions, to which I believe the President of the Privy Council has alluded. The operative words in the citation are that an amendment must propose "a resolution declaratory of some principle adverse to, or differing from, the principles, policy, or provisions of the bill".

Recognizing this, the hon. member for Parry Sound-Muskoka has sought to indicate to the Chair that this type of principle is exposed in the amendment proposed by the hon. member.

There are two other citations which I would commend to hon. members. Section (1) of citation 393 of Beauchesne's fourth edition states, in part:

> An amendment purporting to approve the principle of a Bill and at the same time enunciating a declaration of policy cannot be moved to the second reading. It must oppose the principle of the Bill.

The most pertinent of the two citations, I suggest, is section (3) of citation 393 of Beauchesne's fourth edition, which reads as follows:

> An amendment which is not adverse to the principle of a Bill but proposes that certain provisions be added to the Bill cannot be moved on the motion for second reading.

It seems to me that this citation is very relevant to the procedural question that is now before the House. The hon. member for Parry Sound-Muskoka suggested in his argument that this amendment is drafted so as to be in harmony with our new rules. I find it difficult to agree with this suggestion. It is still possible to amend new sections of a bill in committee. It is still possible to amend a bill on second reading according to the forms and principles that are long established and recognized by the practice of the House. In addition, detailed amendments can still be proposed at the report stage; and amendments on third reading can be proposed in the same way as they could prior to the adoption of the new rules.

In my humble view there is nothing in the new rules, I suggest, that can be taken to broaden the scope of the amendments which can be proposed to the House and received by the House as in order. To my way of thinking, the amendment proposed to the House is not a reasoned amendment because it does not, in my view, oppose the principle of the bill.

I am not suggesting that it would not be possible to move an amendment at this stage which might include some parts of the amendment that has been presented, and which could be moved in the acceptable form of a reasoned amendment. I would think that could be done quite easily. But at that point hon. members would be called upon to vote for a principle which opposes the essence of the bill before the House; and at that point hon. members are in fact invited to vote against second reading of the bill, which is not what this amendment seeks to do.

For these reasons, it seems to me that the Chair has no alternative but to rule that the proposed amendment of the hon. member for South Western Nova cannot be received at this time. Again, I do not want to insist that the same purpose might not perhaps be achieved in other ways. However, I have very serious reservations that the purpose can be achieved in the ingenious way proposed by the hon. member for South Western Nova, and I must refuse to put the amendment to the House at this time.

Mr. Aiken: Mr. Speaker, we do, of course, accept your ruling. We will examine your words of wisdom very carefully and try again.

Mr. Speaker: I trust the hon. member will not look at them too closely.

• (3:20 p.m.)

Mr. Rod Thomson (Battleford-Kindersley): Mr. Speaker, I listened with considerable interest to the procedural arguments, but not being an authority in this area I naturally will not refer to procedure.

I first came to Ottawa as a member of Parliament about a year and a half ago. I was not nearly as aware then of what pollution meant as I am at the present time. I recall the first time I smelled the miasma from the pulp mill across the river. I thought the House was on fire or that something was smoldering. I went to the Sergeant-at-Arms and suggested that he make a check. I am sure he did not know what I was talking about, but that is the way it struck me. I thought we had a fire.

An hon. Member: There has been some pollution here.

Mr. Thomson: Someone suggested the House has suffered some pollution, but that is of another kind. I hope I can clear the air so far as this party is concerned.

Certainly, everybody today is talking about this very urgent problem. Let me read from an editorial that appeared in the Canada Month. This is the apostle of free enterprise in which appeared an epistle. I should like to read one or two excerpts from it as follows:

> We ought not, at this point, to need the creative capacities of little men stacked in offices at Ottawa to advise us as to how we shall avoid the pollution of our neighbours' environments. The highly creative private economy should be more than sufficient to the task of providing the answers, as the belatedly active automobile industry is now ably demonstrating.

The people who subscribe to the private enterprise theory should take a good look at what some areas of North America have become. If they are going to respond it is high time they did so. Let me read another paragraph from this editorial:

Let us simply hope that we who pollute will recognize our obligations under the social contract, so that the potential harshness of the police power will be unnecessary. Let us take advantage of the huge technological creativity that the private economy is, more than any other power, capable of supplying to solve a problem we have left unsolved—excuses aside—for just a little too long.

I agree with the writer in this respect. It is high time we did something. If private industry will contribute from its own resources and initiative, more power to it; but I suggest that it get on with this. If it does not, then the police powers which the writer spoke of should be used to enforce regulations whether they pertain to private industry, government or municipalities.

This editorial also referred to the expense of cleaning up the pollution from which we suffer in Canada. I grant you there is a considerable expense involved. We never paid too much to get rid of our sewage. We do pay at the city level, but anything we do costs money and it is high time we started to spend money in this respect. We have used what nature has given us and we must now look after our own problems.

I read another item which appeared in the Christian Science Monitor and which contained a picture of mountains and water with the caption "U.S. Flourished on a water-rich continent". The United States has now used up many of its resources and is looking to Canada for some of our water. The United States has squandered its inheritance and now wants some of ours. We have argued this party's point of view that the minister should not barter away Canada's good water for a pittance. If the United States wants to squander its water, that is fine; but let us not squander ours. Let us insist that we get at least adequate compensation and make sure that Canada's future needs will be met before we commit ourselves.

Let us consider for a moment the cost of getting rid of our wastes. As a farmer, I raise beef cattle. The cattle are put in a corral for the winter and I have to clean out that corral at my own expense in the spring. I suggest this is one cost of raising beef cattle. It represents part of the price per pound or unit for the production of beef. Why should industry not pay the same charge on the same basis? Industry should include this cost of disposal of waste as part of the cost of production. I must do this so why should someone else be allowed to pollute the water, air or surrounding land?

In all fairness, I should admit that some industries take care of their own pollution problems by spending large sums of money, and it is not fair to them when others do not do the same. I suggest we should enforce the regulations in this regard.

In this day and age, when provinces and municipalities are competing with each other for various industries, it seems to me that the province which is willing to offer cheap labour and allow industry to ignore pollution clean-up is the one which will get the industry. This is not right and these provinces should not be shopping around for industries which in turn are looking for areas in which they can dispose of waste products. We should insist that industry take care of pollution wherever it is situated.

Some industries are contributing much toward pollution control. I have before me a feature article which appeared in the Dofasco Illustrated News. This is a very well-written and illustrated article. I do not know whether it has accomplished its entire goal but the article reads well and I want to commend the people who published it. The article refers to the production of steel, galvanizing and tin plating. I understand there is a considerable amount of waste as a result of this production. The article states in part:

Unfortunately, during these processes many undesirable by-products are produced. As steel productivity is increased by improved technology to meet the market demands, the quantities of these potential pollutants increase accordingly. Dofasco is keenly aware of this potential threat to the public welfare and realizes this problem must be met and dealt with.

This is why, over the last decade, Dofasco has spent $14,000,000 on air and water pollution control installations. Eight million dollars of these expenditures have been made since 1963.

I would compliment this particular steel company for the effort it has put forward. If the effort is not yet adequate, hopefully it will be continued until it is adequate. As a leader in this area, I think this company should be complimented for doing something in a field of which we should all be more aware and in respect of which we should all be doing something more constructive. I spoke to a chap who works in a Crown corporation. He told me that sometimes when nobody is around they will dump waste from the plant into the river on which the plant is situated. He said occasionally the inspector comes around and they do not dump it then, but sometimes at night when they have a problem they just turn a valve and dump the waste into the river. When an employee of a Crown corporation admits this has been done at a time when the government is trying to do something about pollution, I think this is an incompatible situation about which the minister should be doing something.

I mentioned how the plant across the river pollutes the air in the city of Ottawa. Then, we had the example of the co-operative in Saskatchewan which, because it did not use sufficient wisdom, polluted the water of the Saskatchewan River. This pollution resulted in the poisoning of fish. Whether it is a Crown Corporation, a private corporation or a co-operative corporation, I say we need some adequate policing to make sure that pollution control is implemented. In fact, we need a law. We need a law with penalties and one which will be policed by an administration which has enough gumption to enforce the law in a manner which will result in improvement for the entire society. We want to clean up pollution but we also want to be fair to those who are spending a great deal of money in this area so that one does not benefit at the expense of another.

Recently I attended a conference on the subject of pollution. One of the gentlemen at that conference said that a commandment to cities which were taking their drinking water from a river might read in this way: Thou shalt take thy drinking water from below thine effluent. That is different from the present practice. At present a city takes its drinking water from a river, uses it, muddies it, and then passes it on downriver for somebody else to drink. This is not a very pleasant situation when we think of the inadequate sewage disposal systems of some cities. It is time we looked for some other and more adequate method to clean up this pollution rather than just passing along the problem to someone else. Sometimes I wonder whether, instead of taking water for a plant from a river and then passing it on downstream filled with waste, it might be better if the plant were to take water from a river, lake or well and then dump it into a series of ponds where, at the expense of that plant, the water would be cleaned to the point where it could be used again. This in effect, would be a cycling system.

Although for the purposes of some plants I do not think the water would have to be too pure and could contain a certain amount of taint, if this practice of dumping tainted water into a river were followed at a number of points a serious problem could result with consequent danger to fish and other life in the waters of the river, sea or ocean. I think perhaps we should look at some other methods which are at our disposal, particularly in respect of some industrial plants. As I said previously, we had the example of a plant in Saskatchewan which caused the poisoning of fish. This will result in an expense to the taxpayers of Canada or to somebody in Canada. I am not picking on this plant particularly, but it is one which came to light just recently. There are a number of different types of pollution in Saskatchewan. I do not believe there is normally as much industrial pollution there as there might be in British Columbia, Ontario or some other areas of the world.

However, there are some things we should be more careful about. Nearly every farmer there uses 2-4-D which may or may not have some long range harmful effect. Hopefully, it will not. As a farmer, I would not like to be denied the use of it. Farmers in Saskatchewan have used DDT for control of a number of items. I recall occasions when the Department of Agriculture in Saskatchewan called back some types of grasshopper spray which they found left a residue in the tissue of animals. We should be constantly aware of situations like this. In Saskatchewan there has been a fair amount of pollution in the sense of erosion of land. This has occurred in other areas of the world as well. The Chinese have had long experience with this type of pollution. The Yellow River is noted for its great floods. The sands silt the river further downstream. The Chinese used unwise forestry policy. They cut down the trees for fuel and other purposes and this is the net result.

While we seem to have unlimited forests and land in Canada, I suggest we too could suffer if we do not use a little more wisdom in this regard. This is particularly true when we consider the heavy rain areas of Canada, such as British Columbia and some sections of Ontario. We have not used wise methods in respect of the control of erosion. Last spring in some sections of rural Ontario there were floods and a considerable amount of pollution of lakes and rivers because the soil washed away in some sections.

I believe there should be a co-ordinated policy in respect of pollution, whether it be related to farming operations, lumbering operations or industrial operations. I think one reason we have done some of the things we have in respect of pollution in Canada is that we have sort of a "big thing" complex. This is particularly true in the United States. We have large acreage farms, big fields, and have a large erosion problem. We carry on lumbering operations by the use of large efficient units. We cut down our trees and when there is heavy rain or heavy snowfall in the winter, we have a large erosion problem. We have a large pollution problem which requires a large anti-pollution program. Perhaps a little more judgment should be used along the way. Much of Canada is not yet spoiled. Much of the country is still covered by forests and virgin sod. Surely we have benefited from our experience to the extent that we can save ourselves some expense in the future in respect of what we still have. I should like to see the clean air and water that we have preserved. I should like to see the oxygen and carbon dioxide in the lakes, rivers and oceans in and around Canada kept in proper balance. By using a little wisdom, we might at least contribute to our share of the total environment control on this planet.

I would like to make another comment in a slightly different area. I do not think it would be fair to industry, to municipalities or to anyone else who has to set up pollution control to say that overnight they must install in their plant for pollution control. I think they must be given an opportunity to adjust the prices of products to cover pollution control or waste disposal. A municipality must be given the opportunity to raise taxes or in other ways raise funds or to build facilities, and, within limits, we should accept this as being just and right. I think that the federal and provincial governments should be prepared to assist financially, whether by grants or by loans as the case may be. We might give aid through Central Mortgage and Housing or through some other means. I suggest that the present act is not adequate in this respect.

I think that fines—if that is the right term—should be imposed on those who pollute. How about putting the fine from a company or a municipality into a fund, and if that company or municipality installs pollution control or whatever is required in that area within a specified time they will get their money back. I do not think that a fine should be imposed as a punishment. This should be done to induce these people to build adequate pollution controls. I am sure that this is the purpose of the bill, so why not do something that will make it attractive for those involved to obey the law? This should be the intent of the bill. Let us do something about improving our environment and let us do something practical to encourage these companies or municipalities to make this move now.

I was in the Arctic this summer and I noticed around the Resolute air base the remnants of several planes lying about. It looked as if the accident had occurred yesterday. The remnants were bright and untarnished. It might be a little scary for a fellow landing at the airport in a fog to see parts of an almost new plane lying around. This is what happens in the Arctic. Some of these planes have been there for years, and apparently no one has made an effort to gather up the parts lying around the airport. I have suggested that there are special problems in the Arctic with regard to pollution. Material lying on the ground does not rust, deteriorate or sink into the ground to become part of the soil as it does elsewhere, so some special action must be taken regarding this problem. Much of the Arctic is virgin territory so far as industrial pollution is concerned—let us keep it that way. I do not think anyone really knows what an adequate pollution program in the far north would be, in view of the freezing temperatures and the perma frost. Perhaps we should carry out some further studies there. I know there have been some minor ones done but perhaps further studies should be carried out on how to dispose of waste from plants, municipalities or residents in that area.

I should like to speak for a moment about the oil industry in the Arctic. Some efforts have been made internationally to control pollution on the high seas. We in Canada are very concerned about what might happen in our Arctic in this respect. We do not know how long an oil slick might last in the Arctic because of the particularly cold temperatures that exist there, what damage it might do or how large an area it might cover before it is finally cleaned up. We do not know whether any satisfactory means are available for removing this oil from the Arctic waters. I believe that some research should be conducted in this respect. I would like to see the Canadian government put some pressure on other countries and on international companies to do some research in this area to see if we cannot protect our future. Two or three large tankers within the last few years have broken up on the high seas. The Torrey Canyon off the coast of England caused a great deal of harm to that area and to the marine life and birds in the region.

There is some talk of making the companies which ship oil responsible for this damage. I think that the insurance companies are edgy about the whole problem and do not really want to cover the type of damage that might occur. Perhaps there should be further international co-operation in this regard, and perhaps the governments concerned might offer to carry a portion of the insurance if no other means are practical.

I believe pollution control is an important project. As a Canadian, I would like to see us do something specific about it. This act is not strong enough to do the job which we would like to see done. I am sure that Canadians will resent it if we do not take adequate steps now. I think that such steps would be politically palatable for most people at present. They have come to realize now that it is a sufficiently important problem to warrant the raising of money, whether by taxation or by any other means, and that it requires a government with sufficient gumption to say: "let us do something about it starting today".

Mr. Robert McCleave (Halifax-East Hants): I had not intended to take part in the debate until I found myself seconding the abortive motion of the hon. member for South Western Nova (Mr. Comeau) last evening. I had an opportunity then to study the bill, the second reading of which is proposed. I do not think this is a half-hearted measure because I suppose there is an intention to do something. However, I think this is a very strange way to deal with pollution which is a very serious problem in Canada. As I shall prove, we are increasing the number of people who are already dealing with the problem without, I think, doing anything to set up an authority which will make the management of pollution problems more coherent and comprehensive.

A few years ago I brought into the chamber for the purpose of asking a question a bottle full of water from Halifax harbour, and about half the bottle contained oil. People simply could not believe that in this day and age harbour water could be so polluted, but unfortunately from time to time that is what happens in Halifax harbour when some pollutant is at work.

The reason I did not bring that bottle down this afternoon to display it on my desk during my speech is twofold. First, Your Honour tends to frown on these little exhibitions, and second, it might upset the stomachs of many hon. members. If they were to rush out of the chamber our quorum might be in serious jeopardy. But anyone who wants to see a practical example of what pollution can do might want to go to room 553D in the House of Commons.

• (3:50 p.m.)

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Is the window open?

Mr. McCleave: The window isn't always open but the jar is very securely secured on top, so that one just looks. One does not smell this particular specimen.

Mr. McGrath: Good Nova Scotia rum would offset the effects.

Mr. McCleave: I shall ply that to the hon. member when he visits me.

In any event, Mr. Speaker, I mentioned the proliferation of bodies dealing with the problems of pollution. This came to my attention very dramatically a few days ago when a large slick of oil was sighted near Eastern Passage, actually on the shoreline at Eastern Passage, causing considerable hardship with the lobsters stored there, messing up the beach, and making it very difficult for the fishermen to carry on their profession. The fishermen who called me and drew it to my attention asked me to take steps to see that the matter would be pursued.

I called the Steamship Inspection Service of the Department of Transport ten minutes before closing time that day, and the gentleman there asked me whether this oil slick had come from a vessel in the harbour or from some other source. The reason this question was important was that if it did come from a vessel leaving Halifax harbour, the Steamship Inspection Service of the Department of Transport would investigate. If they could pin the blame on a certain ship, they would then take appropriate action in the courts. However, if the slick came from a land source, say, an oil refinery or from somebody jettisoning oil on shore, it would be some other board, the National Harbours Board, or some other section of the department that would have to carry out the investigation.

My friend in the Steamship Inspection Service, whose office overlooks the harbour, could not see at that moment any ship in the vicinity of Eastern Passage that could have created that particular oil slick. Upon investigation, however, it turned out that a ship, which might or might not have been the guilty party, had just cleared the harbour so the Steamship Inspection Service of the department did get into the act.

The point I am making, perhaps rather laboriously, is that I might have been left phoning both parties, the National Harbours Board and the Steamship Inspection Service, with each of them saying, "No, it is the other fellow's responsibility." Then, the poor fishermen would have had no recourse whatsoever. It is a matter of disappointment that in this bill there is not spelled out specifically some over-all authority that would cut down the interventions of various federal departments and establish one over-all authority to deal with pollution whether it came by land or by water, as happened in this case in Halifax harbour.

My puzzlement has become even greater in that a few days ago the Department of Fisheries got into the act. It carried out an intensive investigation of the conditions in Bedford Basin, that great body of water back of the peninsula of Halifax, which is familiarly known to most Canadians as the great gathering place for the wartime convoys. At one time the Bedford Basin used to have fish life in it. The fish are getting fewer and worse looking as time goes by.

Mr. Greene: That applies to a lot of us.

Mr. McCleave: Yes, the minister may well say that this is happening to a lot of us. But it is happening to the fish because of pollution in that body of water. Part of that pollution comes from the Halifax city dump, and part from the effluents from the Bedford Basin shoreline on which are located several large government enterprises such as the Bedford Institute of Oceanography, conducted by the minister himself, a naval magazine, a great number of homes and several villages. I do not know if the Bedford Institute of Oceanography pours its sewage into the basin, but certainly a lot of sewage gets in there and the Department of Fisheries has found that this is really wreaking havoc with the fish in the basin, so that eventually we are going to have a very large open sewer in the back part of the city of Halifax.

As I say, the Department of Fisheries getting into the act greatly increased my puzzlement. Then, just before Christmas the CMHC simply ran out of the money which had been allocated to sewage loans, and here I mention such places as Hamilton and the city of Halifax which were in line for loans. Therefore, while the minister, with that burst of eloquence that so characterizes him and which we hope will never diminish, presents this bill to us and talks about the brave new world in which we will fight pollution, another member of the cabinet in this chamber, the Minister without Portfolio (Mr. Andras), finds that the sewage disposal plants that the city of Halifax, the city of Hamilton and other places want, have to be postponed because money is not available.

Yet, Sir, around the peninsula of Halifax, the old part of Halifax, there are probably 50 to 60 sewer outlets into Halifax harbour, into the Northwest Arm and into Bedford Basin. So, one minister preaches and the other minister says, "Boys, you will have to wait because we don't have money to carry out some pollution remedies at the present time." If one tried to spell out an intelligible war on pollution from these things one would be left very badly adrift.

On looking into the bill itself there are points about it that strike me as even more curious than the arguments I have related up to now. For example, there is the setting up of the management authorities. This brings another new body on to the scene, which in some cases can be set up unilaterally. In other cases it is set up in consultation with provinces or with a province.

What will happen if either Ontario or the Quebec government becomes obstreperous over the setting up of such a water quality management authority for the Ottawa River which, as the hon. member who just preceded me noted, is the source of noxious smells of its own? What happens if the minister is able to wheedle one of the two provinces into agreeing to set up the authority but his powers of persuasion fail with the other provincial government? Above all, what happens during all the delay while this diplomatic stuff goes on? I think the approach is certainly open to question.

While our amendment was thrown out, the points that were advanced so ably by my colleague have all the validity in the world. I hope we will yet come up with something that will pass muster with the Chair or with the chairman of the committee, whereby some teeth can be added to this particular venture.

Then, Sir, another body makes its appearance on the pollution scene through this bill. He is an inspector. He has power to traipse about on land, and in the water too if he gets aboard a ship, and he may make certain inspections. Perhaps this gentleman can replace those various other people I noted earlier. But looking at the powers set forth in the bill for him, I am not sure that in all cases he can replace all of those others I have mentioned. It would be a good thing if these powers were very carefully examined, so that what now exists within the empire of the Department of Transport and what now exists within the empire of the Department of Fisheries, could be brought under one roof when we are dealing with problems of water pollution. If that does not happen, then I suggest we are going to face the same proliferation when we get into the problems of dealing with land or soil pollution and when we deal with the problems of air pollution.

I believe we should be building up one authority that can tackle these problems instead of adding a new body that would be engaging in a tug-of-war, or rather the reverse of a tug-of-war, resulting in some gentlemen in the government of Canada saying to each other, "It isn't my problem; it's your problem," and thus keep on passing the buck. If the minister thinks this is not a serious problem or that I am being facetious, I can tell of an actual case that occurred some years ago in Halifax. Whilst a ship was being fuelled, some oil escaped and the question was whether the breakage in the line feeding the fuel into the ship occurred on the land jurisdiction or on the water jurisdiction. Was it that part of the line which was out from the oil refinery itself which broke or was it that part of the line attached thereto which was on the ship? If it were the former, one fellow from the Department of Transport had responsibility for investigating and, if there was a criminal offence, taking court action. If it was another part of the line that broke or the coupling, then it was up to our old friends from the steamship inspection service to take action.

While great debate raged as to who was responsible for investigating where this break had actually occurred, and whether any fault was involved, the time for action passed and another great example of pollution went unpunished. I think the case actually went to court, and the poor magistrate had to give the defendant the benefit of the doubt because responsibility for the break that poured hundreds of gallons of oil into Halifax Harbour could not be clearly established. The harbour suffered, but no penalty could be applied at that particular time.

So I am pointing out, Sir, that we should recognize we have a serious duty in dealing with water pollution or any kind of pollution, and it is up to us to draft the best legislation possible. I am suggesting that a bill which causes proliferation of the established bodies rather than drawing them together into a cohesive authority with fairly wide powers should be replaced after a new look at the problem. Unless we can weld these organizations together in a form which can be more easily dealt with, we will simply add to the confusion which exists in the field at the present time.

Mrs. Grace MacInnis (Vancouver-Kingsway): Mr. Speaker, I am sure that if the people of Vancouver and the lower Mainland could see what a very thin House we have this afternoon when the matter of pollution is being discussed, they would be astonished. It is thin all around. When I was at home at Christmas time there was no topic as much discussed as that of water, air and soil pollution. However, I am very glad that the minister is present because it may well be that during this debate he will be brought to consider changes which would make this legislation really effective.

My colleague, the hon. member for Kootenay West, (Mr. Harding) who led off this debate on the Canada Water Act, for the NDP, went over its shortcomings. I shall merely enumerate what these were, under headings, but I intend to deal with only one of them. In the first place, the act falls short in not setting Canada-wide standards for water quality, leaving various areas to set their own standards. This is not good enough in a country with such mobility of population. If we want to make the country unified we should do so in the matter of water standards. Water, too, is mobile; it does not stop at provincial or other boundaries and quality in one area affects the quality in another. Secondly, the legislation fails in that it does not spell out the cost-sharing federal-provincial arrangements for the $3 billion or $4 billion which the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Mr. Greene) says will be needed for the next decade to handle the problem. Neither does it suggest any possibility of federal grants or federal matching monies for provincial or regional water control systems.

In the third place, the legislation fails to provide financial help for municipalities all across the country whose resources are very, very limited. Some municipalities have asked for Central Mortgage and Housing Loans to instal sewage treatment plants, but the minister states that such loans are not available. I do not know whether he intends such loans to be made available when the present period of belt-tightening and austerity is over; we have not heard about that.

In the fourth place, this legislation falls short because it is not anti-pollution legislation. It is not legislation to stop pollution; it is legislation to permit pollution. It promulgates a "pay-as-you-pollute" policy which will permit industry to pollute and then pay public authorities to take out pollution. In my view that is not what the people of this country want nor is it good national housekeeping in any sense of the word.

The reason for this, Mr. Speaker, is not hard to find. This law was not framed to provide clean water for Canadians. This law was framed to suit the convenience of big industries whose operations pollute the waterways of Canada. The minister admitted as much when he said he had sought to devise "a method compatible with our free enterprise system." Had he reflected a little he would have realized that it is quite impossible to devise any method of keeping Canada's water clean that would be compatible with the will of individual industrialists to pollute the water and then leave it to municipal sewage plants to take out the pollution.

Whether fees are paid is not the main issue because no amount of fees will get the pollution out of the water and, as my colleague said earlier in this debate, there is no sense in loading onto the public something which ought to be the responsibility of the polluting industrialists. The result of this legislation will only be to allow the waste-dumpers to continue to foul the water. In my view, that is not a good piece of legislation. Sure, they will have to pay for the privilege of doing this, but what the people of Canada need now is a law to ban pollution; not to take dirt out of the water but to prevent dirt being put in.

Now I should like to talk about the one issue of phosphate detergents and what they are doing to the lakes, rivers and waterways of Canada. People are becoming aroused about this matter. If there are excuses to be made for the shortcomings of government in this field or for those of anybody else, such excuses can rest on only one thing and that is the speed with which this matter is developing.

In the fall of 1969, the International Joint Commission issued a report on this subject which was quite specific. It stated that 67 per cent of all the phosphorous in the form of phosphates being put into Lake Erie and Lake Ontario comes from municipal sewage. Of this amount, 50 per cent to 70 per cent is the direct result of phosphates in detergents. I see no reason why the minister could not have acted upon that finding of the International Joint Commission when framing this legislation.

Women all across Canada are suddenly realizing that all these detergents which they have been using with claims to make clothing whiter than white and brighter than bright have assisted in the process of killing the Great Lakes and are well on the way to murdering the other lakes and waterways into which they find their way. The women of this country are becoming alarmed and disgusted at having been made unknown accomplices in this process of ruining and wrecking the waterways of this country under the guise of getting clothes whiter than white and brighter than bright. It is too great a price to pay.

A group of consumers near Montreal last fall said quite definitely that a not-quite-so-white wash is a small price to pay if it helps make our choked and stinking rivers clean again. They were even prepared to again start using non-polluting laundry soaps in order to save the rivers of this country. Not only would it save our rivers from pollution but it would keep the health of children of this and other generations from being wrecked and ruined in the same way that the rivers are being wrecked and ruined because of pollution.

An article in the October 18 edition of the Montreal Star, commenting on the International Joint Commission's report stated:

> The daily use of detergents by housewives is doing more to ruin our waters as a major balancing factor in the ecological cycle than almost anything else.

The reference was to the fact that the International Joint Commission had urged that there must be a ban on phosphate detergents by 1972 to save Lake Erie and 1975 at the latest to save Lake Ontario from eutrophication, which is a polite word for death.

The Montreal Gazette, on November 5, quoted the past president of the Quebec Wildlife Association as saying that it was crazy that the city of Montreal got its drinking water from the polluted St. Lawrence. He is quoted as saying:

> In New York they get their water from lakes 100 miles away, but here we drink sewage.

It is not only the Great Lakes which are in jeopardy. Many members have been reading about what is happening to the lakes and waterways from one end of the country to the other. With regard to Placentia Bay, where the Electric Reduction Company of Canada is located, last winter because of a proliferation of algae this plant killed the fish, thereby taking away the livelihood of the fishermen.

I read the other day that Lake Osoyoos in the beautiful Okanagan is today well on the way to eutrophication and the other nearby lakes are close behind. Housewives all across Canada are appalled at having been made accomplices to the twin crimes of murdering the lakes and rivers and poisoning the water that people have to use. There have been many letters on the subject. One appeared not long ago in the Globe and Mail and I quote most of it:

> I would like to ask if we women are ignorant, stupid or criminally selfish.
> If we are none of these, why is it that despite the terrible effect of detergents on our streams, rivers and lakes, and the life they support, we continue to use these products? Would we deliberately pour poison, if it were clearly marked "Poison", by the millions of gallons into these dying waters, to the increasing detriment of ourselves, our children and their children, if any, not to mention wildlife?
> I think not—then what are we waiting for?

I have already mentioned what consumers near Montreal have had to say. In my opinion, legislation is required along the lines suggested by the International Joint Commission, including a ban on phosphate detergents. This Commission states that these must be banned by 1972 in order to save Lake Erie and by no later than 1975 to save Lake Ontario. I see no reason why the other rivers and waterways should not receive equal consideration and I urge that there should be a Canada-wide ban.

Naturally, the producers of detergents and other large firms do not want a ban, but if it is a matter of deciding between helping two or three large industrial firms or preserving the life and health of our people and the beauty of our country, I know what the decision of the government should be. What is the hold-up in banning these detergents? I think the reason is obvious. It is because of detergent companies such as Lever Brothers, Colgate-Palmolive-Peet and the Proctor and Gamble Company of Canada Limited. I have copies of correspondence that has been sent to these firms asking why they apparently have not been working hard on getting a substitute. Two of these replies are very similar, the one from Lever Brothers and the one from Proctor and Gamble. They both point out that at the present time there is no replacement. I may say these letters were sent prior to finding a replacement which I shall mention in a few moments.

These companies point out that it is going to take a long time to develop a replacement, although they must be aware that in Sweden there has been a replacement for some time which is working very well. They advocate that the best plan is to have the municipal sewage plants remove the phosphates after the detergent has been used. It is this statement that makes me wish I could have been a fly on the wall to watch their extra-sensory perception arrangements with the minister who drafted this legislation. He could not have drafted anything more in line with the thinking of the big detergent companies as to what is required in the Canada water act. It is interesting to note that the vice president of the Electric Reduction Company, the firm which manufactures all phosphates for detergents in Canada, the same firm which has been pumping pollution into Placentia Bay, killing the fish and taking away the livelihood of the Newfoundland fishermen, also happens to be the Chancellor of Toronto University and the president of the Science Council of Canada.

On December 20, 1969 an announcement was made by Dr. Philip Jones, a pollution specialist at the University of Toronto, to the effect that he had discovered a non-phosphate, non-toxic substitute for phosphates in detergents. A group of housewives had been trying out these detergents made with non-phosphate compounds for three months and found them to be eminently satisfactory as a substitute for phosphate detergents and in some respects they were better cleaners.

Dr. Philip Jones announced that this was safe and had been thoroughly researched; the same materials were used in it as were successfully used in Sweden in non-phosphate detergents there. Dr. Solandt was very cool and sceptical in his response to this news. He admitted at a press conference some days later that because of his connection with ERCO his views on the subject might be, and I quote, "slightly biased". He admitted that this Swedish detergent did exist. He sounded a little dubious about it, but he admitted that it was in existence and working.

It is interesting to note that Dr. Solandt was not the first person to be cool about this discovery. Not surprisingly, perhaps, the firms making detergents had also been cool about it. On a CBC program "Weekend" around the middle of November, Brian Kelly was forthright in saying that the reluctance of the detergent companies to come to grips with the problem of harmful detergents arose from the existence of long-range contracts with ERCO. I believe this is precisely the case.

This then is the situation. A suitable replacement does exist; it has been researched and publicized by a pollution specialist at the University of Toronto. Now, I want to finish off the story of the Electric Reduction Company of Canada to date. Two months later, on January 13, 1970, the press reported that the Electric Reduction Company of Canada had been fined a total of $40,000 and forbidden to make long-term contracts with either customers or suppliers after pleading guilty to three violations of the Combines Investigation Act. It had been convicted on charges of maintaining a monopoly against the public interest and the special prosecutor accused ERCO of tying up the two biggest detergent manufacturers, Proctor and Gamble and Lever Brothers, with 10-year contracts to make it uneconomic for a new competitor to enter the market. The prosecutor also said that ERCO had paid between $800,000 and $900,000 as a bonus to acquire Dominion Fertilizer and thus eliminate competition. These are facts which we should bring out when we are talking about pollution and the need for action rather than indulge in the delightful poesy which the minister used to introduce this legislation.

These are hard facts. Now, we know why the big detergent companies were lax in looking for phosphate substitutes; it was because they had long-term contracts tying them securely to ERCO. Now, we know why the Chairman of the Science Council of Canada was so cool in his reception of the news that a non-phosphate detergent had been found.

We have heard a good deal in this House recently about the danger of conflict of interest. I suggest that this is an example of a more dangerous conflict of interest than even the ones we have heard mentioned in this House; it is as dangerous a conflict of interest as any which is likely to come to notice. Here we have a man who is the Chairman of the Science Council of Canada, a man who is supposed to be in a special position to look judicially at discoveries and inventions and improvements in science in order to make pronouncements upon them. At the same time, we learn, this man is the Vice-President of the company which makes all the phosphates which are used in detergents in Canada and which are responsible for between 50 and 70 per cent of the municipal sewage pollution flowing into lakes Erie and Ontario.

I think it is time we did something about this. How can a man who is supposed to be above influence and above conflict of interest, a man who as head of the Science Council of Canada makes decisions affecting science in this country, command the confidence of the Canadian people when at the same time he is the Vice-President of the firm which makes the phosphates which have polluted almost to the point of sterility Lakes Erie and Ontario? And this substance is being used in every city and small hamlet across Canada.

I want to say quietly and with deliberation that in my view it would be a good thing if the government were to look very seriously at this particular case of conflict of interest with a view to requesting the resignation of the Chairman of the Science Council of Canada and his replacement by somebody who is free from special interests. This is a matter of grave concern to the people of this country. Here is a situation where big industry is allied with big scientific institutions and big educational institutions—the University of Toronto is the largest university in this country, I believe—and allied also, as I firmly believe up to this point—with big government which has drafted this type of water legislation and tried to put it across as an act to ban pollution. When this happens I think it is time the people of this country sat up and took notice.

This is not a matter of party politics. It is a matter of whether we are likely to survive in our own environment. I have been reading books by scientists this winter, and I have reached the conclusion that many scientists today are worried as to whether the animal, man, has enough brains to enable him to control these scientific processes in time to prevent the pollution of the environment and his own destruction by his own technology. This is a case in point. I think it is completely wrong to allow these conflicts of interest to go on, as well as entirely unfair to the men who are placed in these impossible situations. They are gagged, bound and helpless from the point of view of being public servants. I believe it is wrong to put people into positions where conflicts of interest can threaten their usefulness to the people of this country. And it is lethal to the people that such situations should exist.

I want to appeal to the minister to take a hard look at this legislation when it goes to the committee. I appeal to him to acknowledge that this bill is not an anti-pollution measure and that sooner or later the Canadian people, when they are up against it, will recognize that it is not.

What this bill desperately needs is some provision by which municipal bodies would receive funds for the establishment and improvement of sewage plants, either by way of a shared program between the provincial governments and Ottawa or by some other means of making grants available for such a purpose. In the second place, the minister must take action to ban the use of phosphate detergents completely. One of my hon. friends said earlier that there might need to be a time lag. I think the target date of the International Joint Commission, 1972 for Lake Erie, is a good one. A time lag of that length would give an opportunity for readjustment. But the idea of a time lag extending until the detergent companies and ERCO have unloaded their supplies of phosphate on the unsuspecting people of this country is not my idea of the way in which this should be done. It would be too long. It might well be too late.

That is all I have to say, Mr. Speaker. I hope it is enough to ensure that some action, at least, is taken to ensure that we have an effective Canada water act when it comes back again to this House.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

• (4:30 p.m.)

Mr. Greene: Mr. Speaker, before the hon. lady sits down may I say that I was not too sure whether she was in favour of the basic premise contained in the bill, namely that the polluter should pay for rehabilitating the water, or whether in fact water quality should be achieved by the rehabilitation or by restricting the use of various substances, the cost being met out of general tax revenue.

Mrs. MacInnis: Mr. Speaker, I believe the people causing the pollution ought to pay for preventing pollution; and pollution should be prevented by keeping it out of the water in the first place. In other words, industry should see to it that it adopts methods that cut out pollution entirely.

I do not know whether it is possible to do this in every case straight away or in the period I have suggested. However, from everything that I have learned about pollution, detergents are far and away the biggest single pollutant. An alternative to detergents has been discovered and is already in use in Sweden, and I suggest that there is a good place to begin. I suggest a ban be imposed on phosphate detergents, to take effect not later than 1972, which I do not think would be unrealistic. In fact, this is probably the best solution that could be devised.

I did not go into all of the other forms of pollution this afternoon so I am not prepared to say what should be done in regard to them. I have confined myself strictly to detergents because it is detergents that are threatening the very life of our biggest lakes.

I do not want to go further afield since I have not had time to study other pollutants, but I am sure of the facts that I have put on the record this afternoon. I believe there is a good place to begin, and no doubt other members will suggest other remedies. But certainly the polluter should be responsible for the cost of eliminating his pollution; and wherever possible pollution ought to be eliminated at its very source.

Mr. Colin D. Gibson (Hamilton-Wentworth): Mr. Speaker, the bill before the House today will have wide repercussions on the development of Canada as a healthy resource controlling nation, a nation which is opening up new frontiers in every direction and, at the same time, is conscious of the need to preserve our environment free from the curse of pollution.

I commend the minister for a very forward looking piece of legislation. I also commend him—and here I disagree with the comments of the last speaker—for the flexibility of drafting. The bill is designed to adapt itself to differing water conditions throughout an intensely diverse water-supplied country.

Mr. McGrath: Save your breath.

Mr. Gibson: Thank you, I will. The bill before the House represents a systematic attack on the problem of water pollution, jointly with the provinces wherever possible but alone, if necessary, to achieve the aim of clean water. In order for this bill to succeed, it is necessary that industry, municipal and provincial governments give their full co-operation.

The member who last spoke exhorted the minister to provide finance for city sewage systems. This question is already actively being studied by the government and efforts are being made to provide finance. Largely due to the minister's efforts, lots of industries, in co-operation with the provinces and federal government, have provided large sums of money to combat pollution. In the Hamilton area large sums of money have been earmarked to clean up the bad spots of Hamilton Bay. This has been a joint project, a co-operative effort, largely instigated by the minister, and it has resulted in this approach to pollution problems.

This bill is a big step forward in the control of our resources. It represents a constructive approach to the protection of our environment. It is a great bill, and I am sure that it will lead to a vast improvement in this difficult area.

Obviously, the bill contemplates water pollution control in the new areas of regional development. I hope that this extremely important aspect of pollution control will be kept in mind when areas of the country are newly developed under our regional expansion plans as well as when we open up the great north of this country. I hope that in the matter of pollution control we will not make the mistakes of the past but guard against them with sensible, well co-ordinated pollution regulations. I suggest this legislation provides the right sort of signpost to point the way to the achievement of this end.

We are conscious of the need to protect the regions of the Northwest Territories, the Yukon and the Arctic areas as well as the heavily populated areas to the south. The per capita use of water in urban centres is rapidly increasing, and total urban consumption is likely to have more than doubled by 1980.

Programs on pollution on CBC television and also the publicity given to the problem on radio and in the press have all played a substantial part in bringing to the attention of the public the necessity for action by all levels of government and industry to deal with this vitally important subject.

The real issue can be summarized as follows: Will we permit the development of our natural environment to be ruined by pollution? The federal government has a vital responsibility in this regard and it has assumed it.

I wish for a moment to speak to the question of pollution in the Great Lakes and along the international boundary. With the Canada Water Act now before us, I suggest that the federal government commence negotiations with the federal government of the United States, the governments of border states and our own provincial border governments with a view to establishing an international pollution control agency. The purpose of the agency would be to prevent pollution of the Great Lakes and of the boundary waters between Canada and the U.S.A. We should give this agency power to enforce pollution control by means of fine or injunction against offenders along the borders of Canada and the U.S.A.

Some might say that this is far too precipitate action; that we are just starting out on pollution control and it will take a long time to work out a constructive agreement with the United States. I agree it will take a long time, but let us start now at this early stage of our initial phases of pollution control.

Perhaps this agency could operate under the aegis of the International Joint Commission. Nevertheless, it seems to me that since we are preparing now to clean up our own waterways, this is the time to urge the United States to co-operate in a joint venture within which the international body could take action to establish enforceable anti-pollution controls.

It may be said that such a venture of this kind would be difficult and cumbersome and unlikely to succeed. But it is obvious to me that the good work done on the Canadian side of the border should be augmented by a co-ordinated effort by our neighbour to the south.

I am compelled by a sense of urgency to suggest that preliminary steps be taken now to illustrate to the United States governments concerned that we mean business. Since it may not be possible to devote large sums of money to this type of project now, I suggest it may be possible to bring it about without a great deal of expense. Perhaps the Canada-U.S.A. parliamentary association could deal with the question, or perhaps it could be dealt with on an informal basis. But at least we should make an enthusiastic start.

The governments in the U.S. will be obligated to co-operate, and I suggest publicity alone would tend to trouble any state government that malingered in this vital field of legislative control. The means are at our disposal under the International Joint Commission. Prosecutions could be undertaken on each side of the border on complaint by the International Joint Commission. Persuasion, Mr. Speaker, is not enough. We need a vibrant, effective, alert board to police pollution offenders. I believe that if we commence action now it will not be too late to save the Great Lakes and St. Lawrence River from the perils of pollution.

• (4:40 p.m.)

Mr. James A. McGrath (St. John's East): Mr. Speaker, when listening to the hon. member who took his seat I began to wonder whether I had perhaps suffered a lapse of memory or a momentary lapse of consciousness, or that the debate had changed because I could not recognize the bill he was describing. Certainly, he was not describing Bill C-144 regarding the Canada water act. As a matter of fact, the extensive background material provided to hon. members by the Minister in this attractive green folder had no relation to what he was saying. It probably came from the Minister's green environment. I am sorry to say that the Minister could not be called the jolly green giant in his fight against pollution if this Bill is to be considered as a criterion.

One of the background papers entitled "Proposed Canada Water Act—background notes" reads in part:

> The Canada Water Act is expected to give the federal Government and the provinces an administrative framework for managing and developing Canada's water resources and coming to grips with some of the country's major water problems—particularly the pressing problem of pollution. It calls for a close working partnership between Ottawa and the provinces.

That is all very well if you can achieve such a close-working partnership with the provinces, but there is a very important fact which seems to have escaped the attention of the government in this particular regard. Let me quote briefly from a periodical issued by the Montreal Star entitled "Pollution—everybody's business". On the last page there is a very interesting comment by Professor J. R. Dales of the University of Toronto. It reads:

> To a large extent ... pollution is whatever people (most people, or the typical person) consider it to be.

Consequently, Sir, it follows that pollution control under this legislation is whatever the particular province involved considers it to be. This is not the type of pollution control needed to solve what many people believe to be one of the most serious problems facing this country today. When you talk about the control of Canada's water resources and coming to grips with pressing problems of pollution, there is a tendency to lose sight of the fact that there is existing on the statute books of Canada a measure which in my opinion has considerably more teeth than any provision in the bill now before us. I refer to the Fisheries Act.

Section 33 of Chapter 119 of the Revised Statutes of Canada, 1952, deals extensively with pollution and the pollution of water in all aspects. Perhaps it might be worthwhile to put the substance of the section on the record. It states that the Governor in Council may deem any substance to be a deleterious substance for the purposes of Section 2 of the Act, which refers to the offence of polluting waters of Canada by any deleterious substance.

Then, it goes on to outline some punitive measures by stating that every person who violates any provision of this section is guilty of an offence and liable on summary conviction to not less than $100 and not more than $1,000 or a term of imprisonment not less than one month and not more than six months. It goes on to deal with the punishment becoming more severe in respect of a second offence.

I submit that the Fisheries Act gives the federal government the constitutional authority to deal with pollution of the waters in Canada without having to enter into any type of agreement with the provinces. This aspect of the legislation now before us is, in my view what makes it a weak and ineffective bill. The Fisheries Act deals with this in quite specific terms without any reference whatsoever to the provinces.

One illustration of how this measure can be brought to bear in a particular instance was the case of the pollution of Placentia Bay by the Electric Reduction Company of Canada. The sad part of that story is that apparently the pollution was allowed to take place and reach the extent it did before the federal government realized its obligations and its responsibilities under the Fisheries Act.

Why is it necessary to enter into an agreement with the provinces whereby each province will be placed in a position to adopt its own definition of just exactly what constitutes pollution? I suggest that instead of dealing with this as a problem of national urgency we will be dealing with it from ten points of view, if indeed we are fortunate enough to get agreement with all the provinces. That, to my mind, is the basic weakness of this legislation.

The government of Newfoundland is a good example. It knew full well what it was doing when it gave a financial inducement to ERCO to establish a phosphorus plant in Newfoundland. It knew the consequences of a phosphorus plant located at tidewater. It also knew that this province, backward economically with a large and growing problem of unemployment, would have an industry providing jobs. So, Newfoundland turned its eyes away from the immediate threat to the fisheries of the province—the pollution threat to the bay and the displacement of the fishermen involved in that fishery—and went along with the short-term advantage of creating employment for two or three hundred people.

That is an example of how one province might be expected to react. I cannot see for the life of me the province of Newfoundland co-operating in any way, shape or form with this government under this bill if it interfered in any way whatsoever with that province's plans and efforts to induce industry to establish there. The same would apply to any other province in the country. Certainly, it would apply with a great deal of force to some of the regionally disadvantaged provinces such as New Brunswick and Prince Edward Island.

We have what I consider to be a major weakness in the legislation in that it does not even come close to doing one of the things it is supposed to do. Let me refer to a statement issued by the Minister's office. It is suggested the new bill calls for the pooling of federal-provincial resources across the country to control and combat pollution. That is what the proposed Canada water act is supposed to do.

I am literally astounded at the manner in which this government is treating this problem. There is no reference in the bill to the contiguous waters of Canada. Notwithstanding the immense threat posed to our coastal waters by the opening of the oil reserves of the Arctic and Alaska, the opening of the Northwest passage to supertankers, the possibility of oil being discovered and exploited on the continental shelf on our east and west coasts and the disastrous consequences of these efforts in respect of the contiguous waters, and indeed the whole ecological balance of life itself, there is no reference whatever to this. Indeed, the bill in my view in its present form is a useless ineffective piece of window-dressing. It is a farce, nothing more and nothing less. It tries to do what the Fisheries Act now could do quite efficiently and effectively if it were properly administered. It is trying to do something in a puny and ineffective way. I am concerned about this. I am concerned about pollution. I am sure many people in this country are concerned about it. Indeed, it is becoming a world problem.

I am concerned about this government's approach to this problem. There is a jurisdictional haze; there is no question about that. There is the Navigable Waters Protection Act which is administered by the Department of Transport. There is the Fisheries Act administered by the Minister of Fisheries. There are various measures which come under the Department of Energy, Mines and Resources. Indeed, there is quite a bit of ambiguity about who has the ultimate responsibility. Surely, however, the Fisheries Act is quite explicit in setting out what Parliament at that time considered to be the responsibility of the Minister of Fisheries. That responsibility is to ensure that the waters of Canada remain clean. So, why do we have this bill? Why do we have the legislation which is before us?

Mr. Gibson: There are different types of waters in different parts of the country.

Mr. McGrath: Mr. Speaker, we have already heard the submission of the hon. member and most of us were unimpressed. I suggest he restrain himself until I finish my speech. There are other areas of pollution which are not even covered by this legislation. We are concerned about this. For example, we are concerned about the pollution of the air. In this age of the Apollo when we can reach the moon, we have yet to come up with an effective means to have a clean automobile engine which will not pollute the atmosphere. We are concerned about the pollution of our environment. No one seems to be doing anything about such things as the non-returnable bottles which are littering the countryside. We are concerned about the pollution of the high seas. We are concerned about the pollution of our coastal waters. In this House we have been pressing the government to state its position on the conference which recently took place in Brussels on oil pollution of the high seas. Surely, it was reasonable for us to expect the government would make its position known before this debate took place because this subject is directly related to this debate.

Only yesterday I asked the Minister of Transport (Mr. Jamieson), in the absence of the statement he promised to the House on Canada's position taken at this conference on the pollution of the high seas, whether he would make Canada's position papers available to members of Parliament so that we could relate them to the debate taking place now. This was a reasonable request. Yet, we were denied this and do not know what the Canadian position is. I am glad the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Sharp) is in his seat because the United Nations is about to sponsor a conference on pollution in 1972. It might be worth while if he were to indicate what Canada's position will be at this conference.

We are faced with very serious problems of pollution but nothing will be solved by this type of legislation. In my opinion it is bad legislation and does not do what it is supposed to do. I regret that the Chair did not accept the amendment we proposed today because we feel the only way to effectively deal with this matter is for the government to withdraw the bill now before us and redraft it in a meaningful way so that it will take into account the jurisdictional problem to which the amendment referred. A redrafted bill could take into account the power the government now has under the Fisheries Act, and the power the government has under the Navigable Waters Protection Act. Perhaps the government could convene a conference on pollution in this country so that everyone would know of the urgency and gravity of the problem. Then, having come to a full realization of the urgency of the problem, perhaps the provinces would be prepared to give up some of the constitutional responsibilities they enjoy in the area of pollution. But instead, we have a bill which is inadequate. All it does is set up the machinery for the government to enter into negotiations with the provinces which will have the final say in this matter.

Mr. Aiken: Machinery for more machinery.

Mr. McGrath: Yes, machinery for more machinery. It is really setting up more jurisdictional bureaucracy. It is not cutting through the haze. It is creating more haze. In fact the crisis is so severe that it calls for a precise definition.

May I call it five o'clock, Mr. Speaker.

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

SUBJECT MATTER OF QUESTIONS TO BE DEBATED

Mr. Deputy Speaker: It is my duty, pursuant to Standing Order 40, to inform the House that the questions to be raised tonight at the time of adjournment are as follows: the hon. member for Halifax-East Hants (Mr. McCleave)—Criminal Code—proclamation of remainder of amendments respecting breathalyzer; the hon. member for Kootenay West (Mr. Harding)—Transport—Coal—application by Great Northern and Kootenay Elk Railways; the hon. member for Vancouver-Kingsway (Mrs. MacInnis)—Consumer Affairs—charges respecting operations of council.

It being five o'clock, the House will now proceed to the consideration of private member's business as listed on today's order paper, namely, Private Bills.

PRIVATE BILLS

PITTS INSURANCE COMPANY

Mr. J. A. Jerome (Sudbury) moved that Bill S-10, to incorporate Pitts Insurance Company, be read the second time and referred to the Standing Committee on Finance, Trade and Economic Affairs.

He said: Mr. Speaker, I think this bill and the one next following, S-11, are probably bills in respect of which members of the House will not find much to debate. However, I shall go through them briefly. Both are connected with and arise out of the same matter. Both have already been dealt with by the Senate having first been introduced there on Thursday, November 20, having been referred to the Senate Committee on Banking, Trade and Commerce, where both were dealt with on Wednesday, November 26, and then having been returned to the Senate where they were given second and third reading on Wednesday, November 26 and Thursday, November 27.

The subject matter of Bill S-10 is the incorporation of Pitts Insurance Company and the subject matter of the one following it, S-11, is the incorporation of Pitts Life Insurance Company. Pitts Life Insurance Company was incorporated on March 1, 1963 under the Ontario Corporations Act and Pitts Insurance Company was incorporated under the Ontario Corporations Act on July 5, 1956. The principal place of business of both companies is London, Ontario, which is where the head office of both companies is located. They are small companies The Life Insurance Company having commenced business in 1963 had a paid up capital of $260,000. It has had a good record of development since that time. Its capital and surplus now total in excess of $1 million. Similarly, the general insurance company started in 1956 with a capital of $100,000 and has grown to have a combined capital and surplus figure in excess of $600,000.

The most important feature of these companies is that they are both wholly Canadian owned. They started their existence through their connection with the Dominion Automobile Association, whose directors and shareholders are virtually the same as those of the companies we are now considering. The members of the Dominion Automobile Association have the benefit of a certain coverage under the life insurance company and the general insurance company. All the directors and shareholders are Canadian and are in fact employees of the companies.

The reason for the federal incorporation is that the membership of the Dominion Automobile Association has expanded considerably since its inception, the companies have substantially increased their volume of business and now do business in several provinces. However, there are several provinces in which the Automobile Association is able to solicit membership but in which there are certain technical difficulties about doing business under an Ontario provincial charter. Since it is very natural at this stage for these companies to extend their businesses into these provinces, they are desirous of obtaining incorporation under an act of the federal Parliament.

This matter came before the House in December, at which time, upon the request of some members opposite, I agreed to stand the matter over until this time because in December there had not been sufficient time for some members opposite to familiarize themselves with some of the information that was pertinent to their decision as to whether incorporation by an act of the federal Parliament should be granted. I think those members have now had time to explore the background of these companies and to satisfy themselves that they are indeed wholly Canadian owned companies, and that their motive in applying for a federal charter at this time is to enable them to do business on a wider basis throughout the Dominion of Canada. In fact their plan, if the present trend continues, is, perhaps in three or four years, to expand their business into the United States, which, I am sure, hon. members will find is a welcome and refreshing change from the usual trend of American companies expanding their business in these fields into Canada.

I trust that hon. members have taken the trouble to examine the Senate minutes and Hansard records that are relevant to these matters and to otherwise inform themselves about the affairs of these companies to satisfy themselves on the points that I have mentioned. I hope that they will have found that these companies are indeed worthy of receiving a federal charter. I believe that wholly Canadian owned companies doing successful business should indeed be encouraged to expand their operations on a national basis, for which a federal charter is a virtual necessity. I also believe that they should be encouraged further to expand their business into the United States.

Accordingly, I have pleasure in commending the bill to hon. members.

Mr. Arnold Peters (Timiskaming): I do not want to say very much except that this type of bill will not have to come to Parliament after the legislation concerning insurance companies is passed later on in this session.

I am pleased to note that the company which is to be incorporated is wholly Canadian owned and is operated by Canadian personnel. I also note that the bill contains a few other items of information other than the fact that the company is connected with the Dominion Automobile Association. The fact that the company is Canadian, and that it is operated by Canadians, meets the criterion that we suggested should be a requirement for companies being chartered in Canada. Personally, I will be interested to hear the arguments advanced by counsel in the committee indicating their support of the idea of insurance companies operated by Canadians and for Canadians.

Mr. John L. Skoberg (Moose Jaw): Let me say very briefly that I also am pleased to note that this company is to be wholly Canadian. However, I should like to say that regardless of whether the company is Canadian or owned by foreigners applying for such a licence here in Canada, it is just as incumbent upon it to observe the laws of Canada. Too often we have heard it said that because such companies are Canadian they might have an edge in the business. I hope that the hon. member who sponsored this insurance bill tonight can assure the House that this company will pass on the benefits that will accrue through its operation to its policyholders. I would also like to suggest that this company take cognizance of the bills which are before the House at this time and supply information to its shareholders in a manner that can be clearly understood by them. All too often insurance companies use language that is not readily understood by the average policyholder. I suggest that the hon. member sponsoring this bill should pass on this information to those who have asked him to bring the bill before the House.

I believe that since we are still in the process of passing these insurance bills the insurance companies should lower their premiums to their policyholders and to those who will apply for their insurance under whatever the terms may be. All too often the reverse has applied. There are many thousands of insurance companies, and this fact does not do the user a bit of good. I hope that the hon. member can truthfully tell the House that the company he is sponsoring will take cognizance of these few facts.

Mr. Randolph Harding (Kootenay West): It is not our intention to talk out this bill, I can assure the hon. member who is sponsoring the bill. Over the years, members of this party have examined this type of bill very closely and we have been accused by some members of the House and by certain individuals outside it of trying to block this type of private bill. The two hon. members who spoke previously have indicated that Canadian owned insurance companies bringing in private bills, which will eventually lead to Canadian control of these companies over the years, need have no fear of being blocked by discussion or debate in the House by members of the NDP. I should like to point out, as one of the members has done already, that this is one of the few remaining bills which will be debated in the House.

I understand that under the amendments to the Canada Corporations Act this task will be passed on to a board, and I am a little apprehensive that a board will not give the same amount of consideration to the desire for Canadian ownership that members of this party have supported. This is one of the amendments to the Canada Corporations Act which I view with some apprehension, because I believe it has been good, for Canada and Canadians, to have people stand up in this House and review legislation of this type.

That is about all I have to say, Mr. Speaker. We welcome the formation of Canadian companies, although not all insurance companies. In this particular case, we have no objection to the formation of this company, and we welcome second reading of the bill and its reference to the finance committee for discussion and questioning.

[Translation]

Mr. André Fortin (Lotbinière): Mr. Speaker, I have a few comments to make about Bill S-10 entitled "An Act to incorporate Pitts Insurance Company."

I have heard the sponsor of this bill say that the House seems unanimous in wanting to pass this bill. Perhaps the hon. member has never heard about the general agreements which are made in the House from time to time and personally I am a little hurt by his attitude. Besides, this is not a reason to stop that bill since we recognize that a Canadian entreprise is involved. But when he says that a general agreement has been reached in the House, I would remind him that he spoke as if the members of the Ralliement créditiste did not exist, as nobody asked us if we agreed.

Mr. Jerome: On a point of privilege, Mr. Speaker, I did not say that there had been any such agreement as described. What I did say was that I hoped the contents of this legislation were such that members of the House would not find much with which to disagree. I did not refer to any agreement because there has been no agreement among parties in the House that this legislation would pass today.

Mr. Fortin: In any event, Mr. Speaker, perhaps I misunderstood what the hon. member for Sudbury (Mr. Jerome) meant. So, I wish to apologize to him. However, it seems I am not the only one who did.

However that may be, Mr. Speaker, I want to say, on behalf of my colleagues, that we support the principle of that bill. However, I want to stress the fact that it is a thoroughly Canadian undertaking, with Canadian capital, controlled by Canadians, and this pleases us very much.

I realize that many foreign companies come to Canada to obtain capital, and that they do not necessarily reinvest this capital in our country, not even to a very small extent.

If we, personally and as Canadians, do something to promote private enterprise and economic expansion in our country, we shall be doing our duty. That is why we should vote in favour of this Bill.

Insurance companies and private firms in other fields in Canada never fail to report annually to the House on their operations. They are under no obligation to submit their annual reports to the House and to the newspapers, but members of Parliament greatly appreciate their doing so, because this allows us to realize all they do for the development of Canada.

Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask the directors of Pitts Insurance Company to send us every year the report of their activities as well as their financial statements, not necessarily in order to control their operations, but to obtain some information and convince us further that this Canadian insurance company is serving the Canadian people.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Béchard): Is it the pleasure of the House to pass the said motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

[English]

Motion agreed to, bill read the second time and referred to the Standing Committee on Finance, Trade and Economic Affairs.

PITTS LIFE INSURANCE COMPANY

Mr. J. A. Jerome (Sudbury) moved that Bill S-11, to incorporate Pitts Life Insurance Company, be read the second time and referred to the Standing Committee on Finance, Trade and Economic Affairs.

He said: Mr. Speaker, I do not propose to speak at length on this bill. It is identical with the previous one. I just want to say to hon. members opposite who have spoken, particularly the hon. member for Moose Jaw (Mr. Skoberg) and the hon. member from Lotbinière (Mr. Fortin) that I will see to it that today's Hansard will be placed in the hands of the directors of the company. Since some of the directors of the company were present at the committee meetings previously held on this bill I would expect that they would return to the standing committee meetings, to which I would invite the hon. member for Moose Jaw so that he could ask his questions of them there.

Mr. Skoberg: Let me know when.

Motion agreed to, bill read the second time and referred to the Standing Committee on Finance, Trade and Economic Affairs.

McOUAT INVESTMENTS LIMITED

Mr. Robert-B. Major (Argenteuil) moved that Bill S-15, respecting McOuat Investments Limited, be read the second time and referred to the Standing Committee on Finance, Trade and Economic Affairs.

He said: Mr. Speaker, the purpose of this bill is to revive the charter of the company known as McOuat Investments Limited. The McOuat brothers live in and operate a rental and wholesale agency in Lachute for outboard motors, chain saws and allied products. The purpose of the bill is to clearly spell out the ownership by various members of the McOuat family. By the way, Bill S-16, which is also before the House at present, concerns the company known as Buccaneer Industries Limited, which is actually engaged in the running of the family business. Both companies are owned by the same family. They are small companies which forgot to file the annual reports required by the Department of Consumer and Corporate Affairs.

The McOuat family is an old Lachute family of United Empire Loyalist stock and has operated this business successfully over the years. The failure to file the proper reports was clearly an oversight on the part of a small company. I therefore propose, seconded by the hon. member for Sudbury (Mr. Jerome), that this bill be referred to committee.

Mr. Arnold Peters (Timiskaming): Mr. Speaker, this problem has developed a number of times. While I agree with the hon. member who introduced the bill that there probably is not anything sinister about it, yet I must point out that according to the bill the notices given on June 20, 1968, and May 7, 1969, which were published on June 22, 1968, and July 12, 1969, in the Canada Gazette instructed the company to file certain returns under the Canada Corporations Act, and obviously it did not do so. When the bill is examined in committee, members of the committee should be very interested in knowing why it failed to do so.

It was not exactly an oversight. It had been a matter of government discussion with the company at a fairly high level. During the period set forth in those Canada Gazette notices these companies could have retained their incorporation by filing the reports. As I say, I know the hon. member probably has an intimate knowledge of the companies and the people involved, and knows there is nothing sinister about them, but since there have been several such instances over the years we would be remiss in our duty if we did not inquire into the failure of these companies to file the required reports over a two-year period of time.

• (5:20 p.m.)

The refusal to make the returns demanded by law should, I think incur some penalty. These returns should be made or the companies should not be reinstated. I think the companies should be forewarned that when they come before the committee they had better be prepared to give some good explanation for this oversight and an assurance that it will not occur again. We have now modified the Canadian Corporations Act to allow the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs (Mr. Basford) to examine each company's activities under its licence. Though it may have been an oversight on the part of the company we are dealing with, it was not an oversight over the whole period. A number of notifications were given to them and, knowing some of the government officials concerned in inspection, they were probably hounded over the two-year period. Unless they are prepared to meet the requirements we should be skeptical about re-issuing their incorporation and they should know that we are concerned on this point.

Mr. Major: Mr. Speaker, may I answer the member?

Mr. Speaker: If the member answers, he will be closing debate. Is it agreed?

Mr. Major: May I point out to the hon. member that I am not familiar with these people; I do not know them. All the information I got was from the solicitor and what I gave to this House was given in good faith. I agree with the member that the government has perhaps been remiss in not pursuing these people, but I understand that in the new department this is not done. They do not notify and if a report is not filed apparently the charter is annulled.

Mr. Speaker: Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the said motion?

Some hon. Members: Carried.

Mr. Speaker: Carried.

Motion agreed to, bill read the second time and referred to the Standing Committee on Finance, Trade and Economic Affairs.

BUCCANEER INDUSTRIES LIMITED

Mr. Robert-B. Major (Argenteuil) moved that Bill S-16, an act respecting Buccaneer Industries Ltd., be read the second time and referred to the Standing Committee on Finance, Trade and Economic Affairs.

Mr. Speaker: Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the said motion?

Mr. Arnold Peters (Timiskaming): Mr. Speaker, I presume that the hon. member relates his remarks to both bills. Sometimes it is fortunate that we have these bills in pairs as we do not always get sufficient time for rebuttal. If what the hon. member said in respect of the company being notified is correct, then in these two bills we may have an opportunity to ask officials of the Canadian Corporations Act about the methods used in requesting information. It may be that we should look at the question of notice of request for information and with these two bills before us perhaps we will have an opportunity to see how it works. We should be concerned with the method of notification, ensuring that companies understand it and their responsibility to comply with the regulations. The committee is going to look at this and we appreciate the opportunity the company will have of bringing this to our attention. I wonder if there is any relationship between the two, Mr. Speaker, because this company is operated by United Empire Loyalists?

• (5:30 p.m.)

Mr. Speaker: Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the said motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Motion agreed to, bill read the second time and referred to the Standing Committee on Finance, Trade and Economic Affairs.

ICG TRANSMISSION LIMITED

Mr. John M. Reid (Kenora-Rainy River) moved that Bill S-17, to incorporate ICG Transmission Limited, be read the second time and referred to the Standing Committee on Transport and Communications.

Mr. Peters: Is the sponsor going to indicate what the bill is about?

Mr. Reid: Mr. Speaker, this bill to incorporate ICG Transmission Limited will be an affiliate of Inter-City Gas Limited, a Manitoba company in the business of distributing natural gas throughout the province of Manitoba. The company has signed a contract with Boise Cascade Corporation to fulfil its requirements through a plant to be built at Fort Frances, Ontario.

Because of the particular terrain in the northern part of my constituency, it is less expensive for the line to drop down south from Falcon Lake, Manitoba to the United States than to cross over at Rainy River, Ontario and go the 50 or 60 miles to Fort Frances, cross over at International Falls and also provide service for the Boise Cascade operations, one at Fort Frances and the other at International Falls.

The contract signed by this company is to run for 20 to 25 years and will provide an alternative source to a company which has been using lignite coal and which produces a great amount of air pollution in the town of Fort Frances. I might say the sponsors of the companies are all Canadians. I anticipate this will be the condition in which the company remains.

Mr. Orlikow: Could I ask the hon. member a question, Mr. Speaker? To what areas does this company distribute natural gas?

Mr. Reid: My information is that it distributes natural gas throughout the southern part of Manitoba and parts of the city of Winnipeg.

Mr. Skoberg: For the record, Mr. Speaker, I want to ask the member a very short question. When he concluded his remarks, he referred to the Inter-City Gas Company. I presume this is a company formed within the province of Manitoba and that shareholders are throughout the province of Manitoba or are they throughout the country generally?

Mr. Reid: This is a publicly held company, Mr. Speaker, and I understand the shareholders are concentrated in the province of Manitoba.

Mr. Speaker: Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the said motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Motion agreed to, bill read the second time and referred to the Standing Committee on Transport and Communications.

Mr. Reid: May we call it six o'clock?

Mr. Speaker: Is it the wish of hon. members that we call it six o'clock or that we go on with other business?

Some hon. Members: Six o'clock.

Mr. Speaker: It being six o'clock I do now leave the chair.

At six o'clock the House took recess.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

WATER RESOURCES

PROVISION FOR MANAGEMENT INCLUDING RESEARCH AND PLANNING AND IMPLEMENTATION OF PROGRAMS

The House resumed consideration of the motion of Mr. Greene that Bill C-144, to provide for the management of the water resources of Canada including research and the planning and implementation of programs relating to the conservation, development and utilization of water resources, be read the second time and referred to the Standing Committee on National Resources and Public Works.

Mr. McGrath: Mr. Speaker, we believe the legislation now before the House falls far short of what the country expected and what this Parliament expected as a means of dealing with a serious and growing problem. We believe the government of Canada has already set the necessary constitutional precedents involved in the use of the Fisheries Act, so the constitutional complexity of effectively dealing with pollution is no longer relevant. I believe the Fisheries Act clearly establishes the precedent that the federal government does in fact have a well-defined responsibility in this area, covering the entire country. What concerns me is that this bill would make the application of the government's anti-pollution policy more complicated throughout the whole area inasmuch as it envisages the setting up of ten separate standards applicable to pollution throughout the country. It does not attack the problem of pollution in its entirety.

Reference has been made to the serious oil pollution threat not only to contiguous waters but to all our navigable waters, especially major waters such as the St. Lawrence River. In addition, we must consider the serious effect of pollution from an ecological point of view. At this point I would refer briefly to a paper prepared for the Canadian Wildlife Service by Professor Richard E. Warner of Memorial University in which specific recommendations are made for coping with the serious threat of oil pollution. One of the serious shortcomings of this bill is that it contains no reference to the effect of oil pollution on the ecological balance of nature. The paper to which I have referred calls for the carrying out of a national survey to identify sites of special importance preparatory to the development of special protection programs. The criteria suggested for the evaluation of these sites are as follows:

1. Their ecological significance to wild life and/or to man.

2. Their aesthetic, recreational and scenic values.

3. The presence of highly susceptible life forms, for example, Atlantic sea birds and inshore water fowl.

4. The presence of rare or endangered species.

5. The uniqueness of the area as representative of Canadian habitats.

The paper goes on to suggest that the survey should be linked with present Canadian activities in the international biological program and with whatever activities Canada is carrying out in an effort to obtain international agreement. I believe this is an important recommendation not only because of the threat pollution poses to man himself but because of the fact that many of our wildlife species are threatened with extinction.

We feel that the legislation should incorporate the government's total approach to this problem. All that this bill provides is some pussyfooting around the problem, and this notwithstanding the very eloquent speech of the minister in introducing the bill on second reading.

I am sorry that the Minister without Portfolio (Mr. Lang), who while the minister was ill carried the message of the bill across Canada and met representatives of the provincial governments, has not participated in this debate. Indeed, I am sorry he is not in the chamber, because I am sure that he would be able to confirm what in fact many of us believe to be true, namely, that there are no standards applied across the country in the matter of pollution. Each province will approach the problem of pollution in its own way, as best suits its own interests.

I suggest that is not the way to approach the problem of pollution. Pollution is a national problem and requires a totally national, federal approach. It has already been established that the federal government has constitutional authority to deal with pollution, and in fact has exercised this authority under the Fisheries Act.

The picture of pollution is a total one. There is pollution of our water by phosphates, industrial and human waste; there is air pollution by industry, and by probably the biggest polluter of the atmosphere of all, the automobile. We have environmental pollution, such as that posed by the introduction of the non-returnable bottle which is now littering the countryside. We have pollution of our contiguous waters by oil and industrial waste. We have the increasing threat that is posed by the advent of the exploitation of oil resources on both the east and west coasts of Canada and by the opening up of the Arctic oil storehouse, Alaska, and the transportation of its oil through the Northwest Passage; and lastly, we have pollution of the high seas. You cannot isolate one source of pollution from the others, and in order to make a total approach to the pollution threat all these factors must be taken into consideration.

The bill now before the House is a very sad attempt to meet the challenge presented. It is a very sad attempt to live up to the expectations of Canadians who are very concerned about the threat of pollution. They are concerned not only with the destruction of this natural environment but, indeed, the threat to their very survival. We in North America are reaching the stage where pure water, like pure air, is practically as rare as some of our wildlife species that are threatened with extinction.

We believe very strongly that the government should reconsider this bill with a view to making pollution an offence in Canada as a whole, not just in the designated water management areas which this legislation will set up if agreement can be reached with the provinces. I believe water quality standards for the whole country should be defined and enforced. We are concerned that none are set out in the bill, with the exception of the standards to be applied in the water management areas.

This legislation should spell out the federal government's jurisdiction in water policy control. The federal government should be prepared to enforce this jurisdiction, as it has already as evidenced by the Navigable Waters Protection Act, the Fisheries Act and the agreements that we are negotiating to try to obtain some meaningful international control of pollution of the high seas.

Further, we believe that the bill should be strengthened by co-ordinating all federal water efforts in some manner, and we suggest there be a more precise definition of how the total federal approach to the problem can be co-ordinated. In addition, the bill should spell out the terms of federal financial support. We in Parliament should be told exactly what will be the cost-sharing formula. We also believe the bill should indicate that where new local water boards are necessary, a lot of the bureaucratic red tape in connection therewith should be removed. We believe that in this way the bill could be strengthened and made much more meaningful and effective than it is in its present form.

I feel very strongly that before the government concludes the legislative passage of this bill it should convene a national conference among representatives of provincial governments, the Northwest Territories, the Canadian Wildlife Service and other similar organizations, and scientists from our universities and research centres across Canada who are continually preoccupied with the grave problem of pollution.

Surely it would be logical to expect that from such a meeting of minds and expression of opinion as to how to deal with the problem there would evolve, first of all, a recognition of the federal government's responsibility meaningfully to legislate for pollution control for the entire country; and second that the provincial governments for their part would, as they have in many other cases, be prepared to yield whatever jurisdiction they feel they may have. Only in this way do we feel that the government will be able to bring in meaningful legislation which would be able to cope in the coming decade with this new challenge of pollution which poses a threat not only to our environment but to the environment of the entire world.

If, in fact, the government is sincere in its intentions, this bill is a misrepresentation of those intentions. We strongly believe that the minister should reconsider the bill and should be prepared to do so when it gets to the committee. The minister should be prepared to call witnesses from across Canada, such as learned scientists, scholars and wildlife experts, who would present papers to the committee. The government, as I say, for its part should be prepared to enter into discussions with these groups before finally concluding the legislative passage of the bill. In its present form this bill, in my submission, is not only a disappointment to this House, but will prove to be a disappointment to the entire country.

Mr. Ray Perrault (Burnaby-Seymour): Mr. Speaker, it is unfortunate that even the issue of pollution must be converted into a political football by some of the opponents of this government. If ever an issue existed which confronts Canadians it is the issue of pollution, which should be met on a non-partisan basis. Beyond that, we must not only meet it nationally on a non-partisan basis but we have reached the point in our human existence on planet earth where we have to meet it on a non-political, non-ideological and international basis.

The statement is made that there has been federal failure, yet members of this government have explored the situation and initiated action designed to overcome some of the very real constitutional problems inherent in the pollution problem. I look back on the years when our friends to the left had the responsibility of governing this country and call to mind all the excuses that were cited for their inability to fight pollution in Canada.

An hon. Member: Two wrongs don't make a right.

Mr. Perrault: The hon. member admits there was something wrong with the preceding government and many Canadians thought the same way. One of the reasons this government was elected to power was that the Canadian people were concerned about the do-nothing, lack-lustre policy with respect to pollution which was a feature of that preceding régime. The last thing I want to do is become political tonight.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Perrault: The important measure before us reflects the concern of Canadians of all parties. We are all concerned about it, because we are all affected by it. It does not matter whether we vote Liberal, Conservative or NDP, we are all concerned with the quality of our environment and the pollution of that environment in recent years. We are concerned with the pollution of air, water and soil because this costs Canadians an estimated $1.175 billion per year, or $72 per capita. About $22 per year per capita is attributable, we are assured by experts, to water pollution; yet there are people parading around this country, some occupying responsible positions, who say the smell of pollution is the smell of money. That is the old theme song. In terms of the cost to Canada today, we are all losers even on the economic side, let alone the sociological and health side.

When our environment is threatened by industrial wastes, sewage, chemicals or by any other agent, we know we are on a collision course with disaster unless we act now to guard our heritage of natural resources. Increasingly the problem of pollution threatens to render this planet uninhabitable. Some regard this kind of statement as scientific fiction—you meet these people every day in Canada—and a vast overstatement of the fact. They say the "in" thing now is to talk about pollution; everybody is talking about it and you might as well join the parade, but don't believe what you hear, Charlie! In their hearts they still regard the smell and sight of pollution as one of the inevitable byproducts of industrial progress; they still see in Canada a land with limitless possibilities for further damage to the environment without any measurable harm being done.

The fact is that man's technical ability to create and destroy, combined with a rapid increase in world population, has been associated with alterations in the environment which are not only unpleasant and harmful to health, but which may be altering, quite irreversibly, man's natural habitat. It is no longer true to say that the effect of mankind's activities on his environment are minimal.

The Canada Water Act was attacked here tonight and earlier during the debate as being insufficient and lacking the power to stop pollution in Canada. I do not think anyone on the government side suggests for a moment that this legislation is an end. We say it is a beginning; it is one step in the national effort to arrest this trend before it is too late.

We are blessed with the largest freshwater supply in the world, and the Canada Water Act expresses Canada's determination to protect that water. The days of unlimited exploitation are over: that is the message of this bill. We are seeing the beginning of a cooperative attack, with the provinces, against pollution and a joint program for comprehensive water resource development based upon the most modern management methods available.

The Canadian Water Act reflects—this was touched upon by the previous speaker—the limitations of confederation under the BNA Act. Some have been critical of the federal government for failing to end pollution a long time ago. We all know the BNA Act gives the provinces jurisdiction over water resources; the federal government's powers have been limited. Despite this fact, previous governments have enacted legislation dealing with water resources, fisheries, pollution of the sea by oil, navigable waters and harbours, protecting waterfowl from oil and other harmful wastes. This is hardly the record of a party not concerned about the problem.

The Boundary Waters Treaty signed in 1909 provided for the establishment of the International Joint Commission, which apportions control of the Great Lakes between the United States and Canada. The commission has recommended action to compel industries and municipalities to treat their waste before dumping it into the lakes and river basins.

A major step foward is to be found in this measure, that of greatly broadening the scope of federal action in conservation and pollution control. This measure can work to the maximum benefit of Canadians only if cooperation is forthcoming from other levels of government. There is no reason to suppose that most of the provinces and municipalities are not thoroughly alarmed about the problem of pollution. Unfortunately, because of the lack of a clear definition of lines of responsibility, pollution has been the pathetic orphan of Canada, shuttled from one jurisdiction to another.

The effort of the federal government at this time should not be condemned but should be encouraged as a step in the right direction. With the full knowledge that a great many people have said much about pollution in recent months, and said it very well—many important things have been said—I suggest that the Canada Water Act and similar measures are vital in the context of worldwide efforts to protect this planet.

Many issues were discussed at the recent session of the United Nations in New York. Almost all the debates were featured by disagreements in respect of different ideologies. This is characteristic of debates at the United Nations and in this Parliament, and there is nothing unhealthy about it. Significantly, on perhaps one of the rare occasions in the history of an international assembly of nations—capitalists, communists, yellow, white, black and brown races—all were thoroughly aware of the threat which hangs over the world. There are few illusions left about the future of mankind unless we protect the environment. The feeling of all nations is that during the generation of which we are a part, planet earth could be converted into a tragic graveyard unless we get together on the problem of pollution.

We may succeed in solving the Middle East crisis and the hundreds of disputes, large and small, which threaten nuclear war; but beyond that lies the very challenge of survival. I should like to quote to members of the House part of a report which was prepared by world scientists and made available through the Secretary General's office at the last session of the United Nations. This is the kind of report which has seriously disturbed not only the United States, Canada and South America, but Soviet Russia, South Africa and all black and white nations throughout the world. In this work entitled "Problems of the Human Environment" the Secretary General—and he is not given to overstatement—said this:

—for the first time in the history of mankind, there is arising a crisis of world-wide proportions involving developed and developing countries alike, the crisis of the human environment.

He continued:

It is becoming apparent that if current trends continue, the future of life on earth could be endangered. It is urgent, therefore, to focus world attention on those problems which threaten humanity in an environment that permits the realization of the highest human aspirations, and on the action necessary to deal with them.

He then said:

The need to provide food, water, minerals, fuel and other necessities for such increasing numbers of people will place pressures upon virtually all areas of the earth and demand the most careful planning and management of natural resources. No nation can any longer be isolated from these global pressures. It has become clear that we all live in one biosphere within which space and resources, though vast, are limited.

Some people may say these are just words and that the Secretary General himself is given to overstatement. But let us not exclude scientific evidence about the possibility of the world running out of oxygen, and the possibility that in 40 years' time we may not be able to breathe. I quote directly from the United Nations report:

Some agricultural chemicals have side effects on the environment that we are now only beginning to comprehend. Thus, the maintenance of both atmospheric oxygen and the productivity of marine environments depends upon photosynthesis by marine plants, mostly the floating algae of microscopic size. Minute amounts of such pesticides as DDT have been found to inhibit photosynthesis in these algae by 75 per cent.

These are the algae which produce the oxygen for the people of the world to breathe. The report continues:

Nevertheless, we have dumped an estimated billion pounds of DDT into our environment and are adding an estimated 100 million pounds per year.

This DDT has found its way into the waters of the earth, some of it from Canadian rivers which drain into the oceans.

The total world production of pesticides is estimated at over 1,300 million pounds annually. The United States of America alone exports over 400 million pounds per year.

Based on the scientific evidence produced by scientists, if anything, the danger to our environment from pollution has been understated. This is relevant to what my friend from Newfoundland said about air pollution. The scientists of the United Nations tabled this evidence during the discussions of the General Assembly at the 23rd session. I read from the report at page 5:

—the reliance of modern technology upon the combustion of fossil fuels has brought a 10 per cent increase in atmospheric carbon dioxide over the past century. With increased rates of combustion, this could rise to 25 per cent by the year 2000 A.D. The consequence of such an increase upon world weather and climate are uncertain, but could eventually be catastrophic.

This report was not prepared by the National Liberal Federation, by the Conservative Party or by any other party; it was produced by the scientists of the world who in the gravest possible terms say that we are in danger of ending life in the biosphere unless we end pollution.

The increased use of modern technology has brought major increases in the amount of waste products which serve as environmental pollutants. It has been stated that in the United States of America alone, this amounts each year to 142 million tons of smoke and noxious fumes, 7 million automobiles, 20 million tons of paper, 48,000 million cans, 26,000 million bottles and jars, 3,000 million tons of waste rock and mill tailings and 50 trillion gallons of hot water along with a variety of other waste products. Other industrialized nations make their comparable contributions of debris and toxic materials.

I give the undertaking tonight that I will try to obtain copies of this report for members of all parties in the House who wish to have a copy, because this matter goes far beyond party lines. We talk about the deaths in Viet Nam. Today in North America more people are dying from emphysema, caused by air pollution and cigarette smoking, than are killed in Viet Nam each year. Some may say that these scientists are nothing but alarmists. Those who say that have not taken into account the fact that there are dangerous levels of nuclear radiation which, depending upon the type of radioactive material in the radiation will be in the earth's biosphere for the next 1,000 years.

The report I have quoted was tabled in the United States. Representatives of all parties were there and they will know of it. Fifteen of the world's leading scientists, including Canadian and Soviet scientists, produced absolute evidence that nuclear radiation causes carcinogenesis in man, genetic defects and birth defects. These have been among some of the early, clearly identifiable byproducts of the nuclear age. Through the statistics being made available from all over the world we now know that nuclear pollution, let alone everything else, is a terrible threat.

The clean water act, in its own modest way, does not claim to solve these problems. It does not say it will end pollution in Canada. Solving this problem clearly calls for co-operation by municipalities and provincial governments. We cannot be successful unless there is this kind of co-operation. But the clean water act and counterpart measures adopted by other nations of the world—Britain, Soviet Russia and the Scandinavian countries—can do more than just confer national benefits upon the citizens of these countries. Measures such as this are for all mankind. These are measures which may serve to preserve a healthy biosphere for generations to come.

Water from Canada which flows to the sea burdened with pollution and harmful waste containing everything from DDT to human effluent, industrial pollutants and nuclear pollutants, contribute to the death of the earth just as surely as clean water from Canada gives hope for a new and better earth in the future. Pollution control measures in Ontario and British Columbia confer a benefit on those provinces. But beyond that a benefit is conferred upon mankind. A clean water program and a clear air program will cost money, but it is a price we must all pay.

A short time ago 26,000 questionnaires were sent to every home in my constituency. The replies overwhelmingly called for tough pollution control measures. The people are fed up with raw sewage being dumped into the sea, the belching smoke of oil refineries in their back yards and the ominous chemical wastes from industries and homes which in one instance at least killed all plant growth in an area of Burnaby. The growth of algae is killing beautiful lakes in British Columbia.

I think we all realize that as elected members we must establish the basic laws and guidelines under which we want to operate in Canada. We must have the courage to bring in more bills like the clean water bill, as imperfect as they may be.

The tidings we must bear to the people and the industries of Canada are that pollution control will cost money but the end benefits will confer untold blessings on all of us.

Some industries in this country are acting as good corporate citizens; other industries belch forth noxious fumes and dump industrial pollutants into the water, oblivious of the harm they are doing. They are bad corporate citizens and have to be made to clean up or close down. We cannot afford to destroy the environment. Our health is in danger; upper respiratory infections are on the increase from coast to coast. The photochemical reactions which take place are a deadlier killer than war. Incinerators, heating and process furnaces, automobiles, buses and trucks—they are not directly relevant to the bill but I refer to them because they were first touched upon by the preceding speaker—all constitute problems with which we have to cope.

In the short run, some products that we buy may cost more, and more public funds may be required. In saying this, I subscribe to the growing view that the cost of dumping industrial waste in the water should be placed on the people who are responsible for it. Is this unfair? A prominent leader in public life in North America said:

> But this is a proper cost because there are a lot of alternatives to dumping waste in the water ... These alternatives range right up to relocating the plant.

There must be heavy penalties imposed on those who dump waste in natural waterways. Pollution must be traced to its source. We must tax until it costs more to pollute than it does to clean up. Pollution can be controlled at levels consistent with the greatest good of the community. If water quality is lowered by an industry, that industry must pay for the deterioration.

Let us all hope this measure will be but the beginning of a whole range of enactments which, as was said by my friend in the official opposition a few minutes ago, will place Canada in the forefront of those nations determined to protect and to preserve the biosphere of this planet. Beyond the borders of this country there must be international punishment for pollution of the environment. We need international machinery that would be empowered to propose, prepare and execute common, co-operative plans of action.

When the tanker Manhattan came into dry dock in New York—and I was there—people were shocked to find gaping holes in the hull. They said, "Isn't that interesting. That ice is really hard". What if the Manhattan's tanks had been loaded with oil instead of sea water, and the oil had seeped into our Arctic seas? There has to be punishment for the violation of international principles in respect of pollution control, and these must be established on the international level. The time to do so is now, not some time in the future when a tanker like the Manhattan will have ruined the ecology of some sections of our Canadian coast.

As the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) said, we invite the international community to support our initiative for a new concept, an international legal régime designed to ensure to human beings the right to live in a wholesome environment. This is just one step in the government's program to battle pollution in all its forms in the face of difficult constitutional obstacles.

The record of the government has been clear. In essence, we have established a program of support for conservation in its broadest sense—a shift in purely economic thought to include consideration of social capital and profit. That is an enlightened attitude. We have established a program of support for research and development to fight pollution and to emphasize environmental conservation. That is an enlightened attitude. Our aim is the integration of pollution-control planning with regional, river basin and district planning and land, water and air conservation and development, use and management at all regional levels from local to provincial to international and global. This is an enlightened attitude.

This bill is not perfect but it is a step in the right direction and deserves the wholehearted support of all members of this House, regardless of party.

Mr. Gordon Ritchie (Dauphin): Mr. Speaker, in rising to speak on this bill I should like to say that I think it is like a bulldog without any teeth. It pretends to be an effective answer to water pollution, but it will not impress either industry or the provincial authorities. Most important of all, it will not meet adequately the challenge of rapidly accelerating pollution.

It is appalling to me that this government should have hesitated so long before acting, and once having decided to act has produced only this one, anaemic piece of legislation. It will be a tragedy if the bill is passed in its present form because it will lull the public and the executive into lethargy and the belief that an adequate pollution measure has been passed.

Surely, it is not necessary at this stage in our national development to have to demonstrate the need for control of pollution. Surely, even this government is conscious of the urgency of solving this problem. For months now various ministers have been promising quick action to control existing pollution and to prevent future pollution. They trumpeted their determination to wage all-out war on pollution of our land, air and water to whoever would listen. What have they produced? They have produced a bill that attacks only one part of the complex, over-all problem and attacks it half-heartedly. This is merely shadow-boxing. As I described the bill before, it is like a bulldog with rubber teeth, no bite, and not even much of a growl.

The imperative nature of the fight against pollution has been brought home to all of us in recent months in numberless examples of the pollution of every facet of our environment. The previous speaker, the hon. member for Burnaby-Seymour (Mr. Perrault), documented many of these. Those who read in the recent issue of the National Geographic magazine the struggle for the conservation of Lake Baikal in the Soviet Union against the industrialists and their pulp mills, will find that situation duplicated many times on this continent. This problem exists in many countries. The latest, of course, was the discovery of mercury in remote lakes and streams in Manitoba, an area which up to that time most Canadians thought to be beyond taint.

What has the government done while faced, as it is, with such an urgent challenge? It has produced a bill that utilizes none of the powers at the exclusive disposal of the federal authorities; a bill which, to be effective at all, requires the full consent and co-operation of the provinces. This government has always been very exact and meticulous about its exertion of power and financial assistance in the area of personal health care services. Why are they not so aggressive and positive in meeting a social problem which I believe to be of far greater proportions and of even greater urgency?

As far as I can see, this bill simply provides that certain action may be taken in some restricted areas, and only after agreement is secured from a province to act jointly. Its provisions apply only to a river basin for which a joint federal-provincial water control board has been established. Aside from the fact that the establishment of such a board will be a long and cumbersome process, the bill fails to provide for the essential financing of the work of the board once it has been established. I presume the intent is that the province or the community affected, or both, will be asked to foot the bill. I can well imagine the speed and effectiveness of any action when three levels of government are left to haggle over the bill.

This bill only permits federal action by agreement with the province. There is no provision for the federal authority to act of its own volition. In other words, Mr. Speaker, there is nothing in the bill that will permit the federal government to provide the aggressive leadership and set the pattern for comprehensive, anti-pollution action that this critical challenge demands. Above all, the bill fails to stipulate any financial backing for action that might be contemplated under its provisions.

One of the greatest gaps in the bill is its failure to prescribe any standards of water purity or any standards of control and prevention methods. There is no national code; there is no national goal. The ideal of pollution-free waters is not even hinted at in this shockingly defective piece of legislative drafting. Reading the bill leaves me with the distinct impression that the federal government has deliberately shirked its responsibilities to protect Canada's natural resources and environment, and the health and well-being of her people. This bill is a legislative mirage; it appears to tackle the problem but in reality avoids it. The ball has been successfully tossed back into the lap of the provinces.

There is clear authority in the provisions of the British North America Act for federal leadership and action in the area of a national anti-pollution battle. Within its constitutional jurisdiction the federal government controls vast areas of land, water and air, certainly sufficient for a determined federal government to establish anti-pollution procedures, standards of purity, a pattern of public behaviour hostile to pollution, and a clear example to be followed by other governments.

The federal government does not have to wait upon the provinces in starting the fight against pollution. It has more than ample scope to go it alone if necessary. So far it has failed dismally to give a lead or inspire action. It could make a good start by co-ordinating anti-pollution action in all federal jurisdictions, departments, agencies, and under all federal statutes. Pollution is a national problem requiring national leadership and national co-ordination.

The bill permits the federal government to act only in the restricted area of water pollution control and to act alone, free of provincial agreement, only in the very restricted area of inter-jurisdictional waters. This, I presume, means such waters as the Ottawa River, which constitutes a provincial boundary. Even here, stinking as it does under the very noses of Parliament, the Ottawa River has not been tackled by the federal authority. The bill provides only an endless array of federal-provincial commissions, boards and other agencies, each with its own program tailored to the needs of the locality in which it may be situated, and each with its own standards and procedures.

An attempt has been made to give the bulldog the illusion of teeth by providing for a penalty of $5,000 a day for committing the offence of pollution. But where are the standards set out, the violation of which would constitute an offence punishable by a fine of $5,000? What, indeed, is water pollution according to this bill? Under the provisions of the bill it is conceivable that an industry discharging effluent into a body of water common to two or more provinces could be guilty of pollution in one and not guilty in the other. There is no national standard. I wonder what is the intent behind this suggested fine of $5,000. Is it a deterrent, or is it a punitive measure? Has the accumulation of such fines been designated for financing anti-pollution work, or will the money simply go into the general fund of a province?

I am of the opinion that the bill should be withdrawn and redrafted to give it a national purpose and some hope of being an effective instrument. As it stands, it will do very little in only a small part of a very large, very complex and very urgent problem that affects all Canadians and, indeed, the whole future of the Canadian people.

This bill should be only one of a series of bills designed to wage determined and vigorous war on the pollution of our natural environment. Environmental control is not something that can be divided and sub-divided between elements of our environment and between various governmental jurisdictions. The enemy is one, and must be fought as one by all Canadians.

In my opinion, Mr. Speaker, it is the constitutional and moral duty of the government of Canada to prepare, lead and sustain the fight. In my opinion, this bill is hopelessly inadequate. What provisions it has are weak and full of future pitfalls. It is notable chiefly for what it does not contain. Let us kill it and then work together to prepare a proper measure that we will find useful in the coming years.

[Translation]

Mr. Bernard Dumont (Frontenac): Mr. Speaker, we are now studying Bill C-144 entitled: "An Act to provide for the management of the water resources of Canada including research and the planning and implementation of programs relating to the conservation, development and utilization of water resources."

As far as this bill is concerned, I have in hand a statement made by Mr. Richard Nelson, a well-known citizen of Hull, urging us to look seriously into this problem. At the very beginning of my remarks, I should like to quote his statement to show you that pollution reaches into every corner in Canada, and even right here in the Canadian capital area. That statement appeared in the July 4, 1969 issue of Le Droit, and I quote:

> And as if to back up our scientists, two sad or downright tragic pieces of news were reported in the newspapers during the ensuing days: the first one, the poisoning of the Rhine waters over a distance of 150 miles, All aquatic wildlife actually perished because of damage caused by an insecticide. Two countries, Germany and Holland, had to resort to their water reserves because of the potential effects of water pollution on humans. For her part Holland considered the event a national disaster.
> The other no less disturbing fact is the pollution of the waters of the Rideau River. For the past week, according to Dr. Nelson, it has been impossible to use the beaches because of slime. Would-be bathers would have come out black with oil. And the worst of it all is that the source of this evil is not known, "at least officially". For the city of Ottawa, this is a major disaster, unthinkable in a region that is not industry-saturated and where lakes and mountains are a mere bicycle ride away. The Ottawa, into which the Rideau flows, is in no better condition. Polluants discharged into it also spoil the waters all the way to Lake St. Louis in Montreal. Where, then, is that pure water our forefathers drank?

Mr. Speaker, I could also add that in this region of Lévis and Quebec City, the St. Lawrence river, where small fishermen used to increase their revenue by fishing, is so polluted, in particular because of oil waste dumped in it by ships, that fishing is no more possible, even at Rivière-du-Loup. Fishermen are therefore obliged to forget about this revenue which allowed them to make ends meet.

• (9:00 p.m.)

Mr. Speaker, it is true that most governments have fairly well succeeded in their fight against water pollution. The federal government itself can say that it has passed four different pieces of legislation in this respect, namely the Fisheries Act, the Navigable Waters Protection Act, the Canada Shipping Act, and the Criminal Code.

In Newfoundland, the Minister of National Health and Welfare is the prime responsible for the control of water pollution under a section of the health and welfare act.

The Nova Scotia water act has been amended so as to give the government the power to approve the building of water and sewer systems. On the basis of what had been done in New Brunswick, Nova Scotia has created a water administration whose jurisdiction includes all water bodies in the province.

As for Prince Edward Island, no special step has been taken against water pollution.

The Ontario Water Ressources Commission, which is responsible for control and regulation of water pollution by industries and municipalities, must approve all sewer and water installations.

Since its inception in 1957, the Commission has assisted more than 200 municipalities in the construction of sewage treatment plants.

The Provincial Hygiene Control Board, established as far back as 1935, is responsible for the implementation of water anti-pollution measures in Manitoba. The standards are spelled out in the Water Pollution Prevention Act enacted in 1954.

In Saskatchewan, the ministers of Health and of Natural Resources are responsible for control of water pollution. They must approve the construction of sewage treatment plants and the disposal of industrial wastes.

The Minister of Health in Alberta has the necessary authority to compel municipalities to instal sewage plants.

In British Columbia, under the anti-pollution legislation, a five-member committee was created to approve the discharge of sewage water into the Columbia and Fraser Rivers basins as well as on the East coast of Vancouver Island.

In the province of Quebec, the Quebec Water Board is being reorganized with a view to give it full authority in matters of surface and underground waters. Under the new legislation, municipalities may allow private companies to build and operate sewage treatment plants.

The Quebec Water Technology Association has been studying for several years the various aspects of the water question in the province.

According to the studies which have been conducted, it does not follow that it is compulsory nor even desirable for the federal government to take upon itself the responsibility of the whole water problem but that it should take a strong interest in all the aspects of the problem with regard to the whole country.

In my opinion, the water problem may be divided into three parts:

(A) Supply of municipal and industrial waters.

In this regard, it is recognized that provincial jurisdictions have been adjusted and that they are generally accepted in Canada.

(B) We should consider waste treatment.

It is a relatively new problem the solution of which rests mainly on the collective will to take the necessary action.

The total cost of waste treatment remains essentially the same, whether the means to do so are provided by federal, provincial or municipal governments and private industry.

From this point of view, the federal Government can and must contribute financially to eliminate certain regional disparities and provide the required incentives.

Water as a basic environmental element.

[Mr. Dumont.]

I feel that the quality of the environment must go with the way of life of all Canadians. There may be some different concepts from one province to another. However, a general concept of the minimum requirements is necessary and the federal government can and must play a constructive role in channelling objectives.

With regard to all these aspects of the management of water resources, each government level must take its own responsibilities within the framework of Canada's political institutions, and that in a spirit of co-ordination and co-operation.

Any federal initiative or action liable to interfere with the provincial jurisdictions would have effects contrary to those which are sought. Furthermore, any more by Quebec to refuse federal co-operation would also indicate short-sightedness and regression.

Bill C-144 clearly shows the federal government's intention to establish new administrative methods of water management in co-operation with the Canadian provinces. I fear, however, that the measures suggested go beyond the legislator's intent. From our experience with the evolution of administrative methods with regard to water, we are led to believe that in practice the rigid enforcement of this act may result in the complete control of water by the federal government and in the consequent lapse of the provincial powers.

Besides, the Quebec Water Association, comprising the titular heads of state Health Engineering Services in the U.S., has clearly expressed its disapproval of the American government's intention to replace the states' jurisdictions in the fields of supervision and inspection. Its point of view is shared by most experts in the field of water management and sanitation on the North American continent.

The action taken by the federal government ought, on the one side, to be very energetic in the fields where it holds an individual role and, on the other side, to be complementary only in the fields pertaining by tradition to the provincial jurisdiction.

Therefore, we strongly oppose the establishment of Crown agencies to operate in mixed federal-provincial undertakings in the fields of services operation or water quality management. We cannot see any benefit deriving from direct or indirect participation of the federal government or its representatives in these fields.

Incidentally, we once opposed a project to set up provincial agencies in which the state would have usurped the role of private enterprise, because we of the Ralliement Créditiste are and will always remain in favor of private enterprise in the field of planning as well as implementation.

However, the interest of the provinces is to use all financial and technical assistance the federal government is willing to grant them. In our opinion, initiatives and planning should come from the provinces. On the other hand, the federal government can and must act as—catalyser of opinions in promoting the direction of national objectives and in adopting measures which will create a collective urge towards action and eliminate regional disparity.

For this purpose we suggest that federal government action at first be concentrated on research, information, technology and public education. There must be co-ordination in research and information. Canadians should be made to realize in a rational way the problem of water and environment.

Secondly, minimum standards should be set up concerning quality of water and sewage in cooperation with the provinces. Progress has already been made by proposing Canadian standards. All that remains is to improve these standards and incorporate them into our legislation.

Thirdly, an inventory of our Canadian water resources should be made in cooperation with the provinces because every province is interested in such an inventory, yet without overlooking the overall viewpoint.

Fourthly, mechanisms for federal financial participation should be set up on the basis of long term financial liabilities. In other words, we suggest that a cost study be undertaken for each province and for Canada as a whole. The distribution of costs among levels of government and the mass of consumers should be established on the basis of those estimates and within the framework of a financial program tailored to the estimates. Every effort should be made in order to devise fairer and more reasonable financing methods. At the present time, municipalities and industries are faced with a financing problem which impairs the implementation of the necessary programs. We think the federal government can give without delay the required financial assistance.

Finally, I feel that setting up a Canadian water commission to plan the overall, long term management of water in Canada is a must. We are convinced that the federal government must assume its role in the field of water management. Its presence in that field must generate more co-operation than friction, more efficiency than administrative complications, and stimulate rather than impede present means of action.

Finally, and I feel this is one of the most important points, I suggest that the Bank of Canada should grant low-interest loans to municipalities and cities to enable them to deal with those problems themselves. If low interest rates can help foreign countries, namely developing countries, it seems to me there is all the more reason for the Bank of Canada to be allowed to use them in the case of the municipalities.

Mr. Speaker, some Canadian citizens want to help solve the problem of water pollution. They see the problem but, led as men are today by filthy lucre, they will die of poisoning tomorrow, victims of their own cupidity, unless they use the methods we advocate.

• (9:10 p.m.)

[English]

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Béchard): The hon. member for Brandon-Souris (Mr. Dinsdale). I mean, the hon. member for Oxford (Mr. Nesbitt).

Mr. W. B. Nesbitt (Oxford): The hon. member for Brandon-Souris (Mr. Dinsdale) and I have occasionally been mistaken for each other, so I can understand Your Honour's temporary confusion in the matter.

Mr. Pelletier: You can't play the trumpet!

Mr. Nesbitt: I appreciate the remark of the minister in that regard. A great many remarks have been made on this bill this afternoon and this evening, and I have no desire to be repetitious. There is one thing on which we are all quite clear. I am quite sure every member of this House, regardless of which side he or she sits on, is very anxious to make sure that not only the water, but the air, soil and other elements in our country are free of pollution as much as possible in years to come.

I do not think there is any disagreement as to the objectives in this matter. The only question is how best to go about achieving them. As has already been indicated by the hon. member for South Western Nova (Mr. Comeau) and others, it is the feeling of this party that the legislation presented to this House by the government is quite inadequate to accomplish the objectives and purposes that are intended.

Ordinarily, I do not take time to reply to members who have spoken, but earlier this evening the hon. member for Burnaby-Seymour (Mr. Perrault) made some of his customary non-political observations. I sincerely feel that some of the observations he made should not be left completely unanswered inasmuch as he referred to the previous Conservative government with which some of us were associated. The hon. member said nothing whatsoever had been done at that time with regard to pollution control. A great many things were done, including granting loans to municipalities for sewage disposal.

There is one matter I feel should be brought to the attention of the hon. member for Burnaby-Seymour and other hon. members who were not in the House at the time. I refer to what the government of the day did at the United Nations in connection with worldwide pollution. I believe we were the first government in the world to take steps at the United Nations to control pollution. In the early sixties, as I am sure many here will recall, there was a great fear throughout the world about fall-out from nuclear testing. All of us remember movies like "On the Beach," and the general apprehension throughout the world about what would happen because of the constant testing of bombs by the major powers, the United States, the Soviet Union, the United Kingdom and France. There was great concern about what would happen to nuclear fall-out. People asked: Where does it go? Does it fall uniformly around the world? What will happen to the soil, air, basic foodstuffs and the like? We were very concerned about this problem.

At that time I had the honour of looking after our country's affairs at the United Nations. We put forth a resolution at that time requesting the United Nations to insist that all member nations take samples of soil, water, air and basic foodstuffs for analysis so that the effects would be known throughout the world. There was a great deal of opposition to our resolution. The Soviet Union objected to it. As a matter of fact, even our good friends to the south, the United States, were not very enthusiastic about it. Many other countries were enthusiastic. We received great support after long and prolonged negotiations and we finally succeeded in obtaining unanimous passage of the resolution at the United Nations. I believe this fact should be remembered.

At that time the then Leader of the Opposition, who later became Prime Minister, the Right Hon. L. B. Pearson, was very enthusiastic and supported our project. I think it had the support of all Canadians at that time. I mention that in passing because I do not think it is fair to say that the former Conservative government did nothing with regard to pollution. I think it took a major step at that time.

I now wish to deal with the details of this bill. It is always interesting to look at legislation that is placed before Parliament to see what is really intended to be done. As is often said, Mr. Speaker, you can lose sight of the forest when looking at the individual trees. It is necessary to take a good look at legislation such as this to see what is expected.

This measure was vigorously promoted and received much publicity. Nice green pamphlets were sent out stating what was to be done. The measure received all the publicity available from the government's publicity resources. Naturally, we expected a great deal would be accomplished. There were some misgivings. Many of us found that very little action was proposed. Other of my colleagues have already pointed out many of the shortcomings of the legislation and the reasons we feel the government should withdraw this bill, reconsider it and present to Parliament a bill that has some teeth in it, not one that has all the appearances of a propaganda effort.

One of the implications inherent in this legislation is that in matters of pollution the government does not have jurisdiction, and therefore it has to make agreements with the provinces with regard to water. This is getting into the legalistic aspects of our constitution. I am rather surprised the government would present this point of view. All that is necessary is to look at the Fisheries Act, the Navigable Waters Protection Act and the Canada Shipping Act to see that the government has already assumed complete jurisdiction in all sorts of matters which, from a de facto point of view, affect pollution.

In the first session of this Parliament legislation was presented with respect to amendments to the Navigable Waters Protection Act. At that time I had a responsibility on behalf of my party to look after these matters. I remember the highly detailed discussions that went on in committee. I have the committee reports in front of me, but I will not take up the time of the House to refer to them; they are readily available.

• (9:20 p.m.)

I point out that the federal government has absolute jurisdiction over any kind of navigable water—"navigable", apparently, being defined as anything upon which one can float a canoe—and with respect to any matter affecting those waters. One of the amendments imposed severe penalties upon people putting sawdust and other pollutants into the water. Then again, the Canada Shipping Act provides for the imposition of penalties in respect of those who allow oil to get into the waters.

The excuse used by the law officers has always been that the presence of oil, sawdust, and so on, in the water might affect its navigability.

The Canada Shipping Act covers the ships which carry the oil, so for all effective purposes the federal government has already assumed control with respect to the direct aspects of pollution in all the waters of Canada. This being so, I completely fail to see why the government, in bringing forward this legislation, did not take bold steps to take the lead in presenting strong legislation which would put teeth into the fight against pollution.

If anyone wants to challenge the federal jurisdiction, let them do so in the courts. It may well be that one or two provincial institutions will do so. But let them try it. The federal government should take the lead. It has every right to do so. If there are jurisdictional disputes, let the courts settle them. If any provincial government sees fit to take responsibility for objecting to federal control of pollution, let it do so. The government had a good chance to take a lead, but it has completely missed this splendid opportunity to set an example by leading the attack against pollution. Everybody in Canada wants to see this problem solved.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Nesbitt: Members of the opposition are always suspected of looking for the worst possible motives on the part of the government. Their fears are not always justified, but one cannot help coming to the conclusion that this piece of legislation is designed largely for propaganda purposes; that it is intended mainly to escape responsibility in this field, particularly in relation to the cost of pollution control. This, when one gets down to dollars and cents, is what counts. The present government, not only in this legislation but in other measures, has done everything it can to avoid responsibility for paying anything, and to throw the burden on the provinces who simply do not have the financial capacity to bear it.

Hon. gentlemen opposite may say that this is a broad charge and ask whether I can substantiate it. There is legislation on the statute books which provides for payment by the federal government of 37½ per cent of the cost of water conservation projects. This has been of particular importance in provinces such as Ontario. I refer, of course, to the Upper Thames Conservation Authority, the Grand River Conservation Authority and others. These projects have been financed jointly by the federal government and the provincial governments, the federal government paying 37½ per cent, the provincial governments 37½ per cent and the municipalities 25 per cent. Great benefit has resulted from the multi-purpose projects which have been developed for flood control, conservation, recreation and the like. They have been highly successful all over Ontario.

When this legislation passes, the federal government will no longer be obliged to pay 37½ per cent of the cost of these projects. There is nothing to say the federal government could not pay anything; I suppose it could pay something toward this type of project, if it chooses. But there is nothing to insist that it do so. The legislation is silent in this respect. Again, it is a case of sloughing off federal responsibility on to the provinces while trying to gain propaganda kudos without putting the money where the mouth is, as the saying goes.

From time to time the federal government has tried to weasel its way out of paying anything toward these projects. In the past their capital cost was paid in part by Ottawa. When requests were made by Ontario, for instance, for assistance in meeting some of the maintenance costs, the federal government refused on the grounds that such a responsibility was not specifically spelled out. The question was raised as to whether the federal government should pay something toward the capital cost of the land which was acquired for recreational purposes. On this point, the spirit of the legislation as explained by a former minister, my hon. friend from Brandon-Souris, is clear.

It is interesting that Your Honour should have confused that hon. member with myself. My hon. friend, when he was minister, made a statement in the House making it clear that federal participation in these conservation projects covered conservation and recreation. The spirit and intent of the legislation were made clear at that time. Nevertheless, subsequent administrations failed to honour that intention.

Although the conservation authorities have sought to obtain federal moneys to improve parkland and the like, the federal government has on every occasion declined to provide any money on the ground that authority was not specifically given in the act, despite anything the minister may have said or whatever commitment had been made. I blame this entirely on the senior civil servants of the department. One is not supposed to mention these people; they are faceless, sacred cows who should never be criticized. I do not think that is a valid attitude. We have plenty of information to indicate that senior officials of the department are always opposed to any contribution being made by the federal government for recreational purposes, and they have been able to persuade subsequent ministers to adopt this point of view.

The federal government has succeeded in welching and weaseling out of paying its share of these conservation projects. With the advent of this legislation, welching and weaseling will be a little simpler. No argument will be necessary, because it will not be obliged to pay a cent from now on if it does not wish to do so.

For this reason, as well as for others, many of us are entirely opposed to the legislation in its present form. The federal government is anxious to project a good image as a government which is taking the lead in conservation and opposing water pollution. I am sure everybody in the country would support it in taking such a position. But now the legislation is before us it is clear that its main purpose is to gain all the kudos it can from the point of view of public relations, without putting up a nickel—while abdicating most of the financial responsibility it has undertaken in this regard in the past.

The minister is a man for whom I have high regard and with whom I have enjoyed a very pleasant association over the years. I sincerely hope he will give consideration to the suggestions made by members of the opposition; that he will withdraw his bill and incorporate some of our proposals in a new one. We cannot all be wrong, you know! I am sure that should he do so, he would receive a great deal of acclaim and support from all sides of the House, particularly if he would put a few teeth into the legislation he presents.

• (9:30 p.m.)

Mr. John Gilbert (Broadview): Mr. Speaker, it has been rightly and justly said that we get the government that we deserve. It can be rightly and justly said that we are getting the pollution we deserve. We are moving from an affluent society to an effluent society. When we think of the spewing out into our lakes, rivers, soil and air of vast quantities of waste and spent products that pollute and poison our air and water and impair our ability to feed ourselves, is it any wonder that we are moving from an affluent society to an effluent society?

We have been graced this evening with the speech of the hon. member for Burnaby-Seymour (Mr. Perrault) who put the debate on a very high level. He put the question into the international sphere and spoke well and ably about it. We also heard from the hon. member for Oxford (Mr. Nesbitt), who gave some credit to his party for initiating action in the United Nations and set forth some problems with which we may be faced if this legislation passes.

I hope that when the bill goes to committee, or perhaps when the minister closes the debate, he will answer some of the questions put to him by the last speaker, particularly the point about the 37½ per cent contribution in regard to conservation projects, which the hon. member indicated a former minister of the government had said included recreational projects. We are discussing a very important matter and I am sure we could have 264 speakers on the subject of pollution, because pollution affects all the areas that we as members represent. As the hon. member for Burnaby-Seymour said, it has international implications of a startling nature.

I have had the good fortune of being a member of the Standing Committee on National Resources and Public Works. The committee has had before it the estimates and officials of the two departments. I gained the impression that their presentations to the committee and their answers to the question put to them by members were indicative of inaction on the part of the government.

Indeed, they indicated an attempt to study the problem of pollution without bringing forth any real solution.

I also had the privilege of visiting the Inland Water Centre at Burlington with other members of the committee, and I could not help being impressed by the work that that centre is doing. It is up to us as members to translate into effective action some of the projects being developed by the centre. This we must do in legislative form; we cannot just tinker with the problem of pollution.

I have an uneasy feeling that this bill is no more than an administrative framework to deal with the jurisdictional problem that exists in the matter of pollution between the federal government and the provinces. This point worries me in view of the necessity of immediate and direct action. By that I mean a joint, co-operative effort with the provinces and municipalities to study the problem, find solutions and raise money to implement those solutions.

I have read the bill. I have read comments in periodicals in regard to the bill. I feel that I should bring to the attention of the House the comments made by the Minister of Energy and Resources Management for the province of Ontario. In an interview reported in the Executive magazine for the month of November, 1969, which we have all received, George MacKinnon put to that minister the effect the new water act would have on the province of Ontario. In order to save time I shall summarize some of the answers given, because I think the views of the Ontario minister responsible for pollution should be known by this House.

In this regard, I hope that when the bill goes to committee representatives of provincial departments will appear and give their views on the operation of the act and its effect on the different provinces, because this is an important aspect of the whole subject.

The bill was presented by the Minister without Portfolio (Mr. Lang), who I thought made a rather stiff, sober and sterile introduction of it. We are very happy, indeed fortunate, to have back in this House the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Mr. Greene), because he carries with him a flair for speech. He is the Abe Lincoln of the House and carries with him a vast store of ideas as well, I think, as the determination and initiative to carry those ideas into effect. I hope that when the bill reaches the committee the minister will listen, and listen hard, before making the appropriate changes.

When the Ontario minister was asked about the announcement of the introduction of this legislation by the Minister without Portfolio, he said:

> I think that the idea of federal legislation dealing with water quality across the country is a good one. However, I am disappointed in the way it was presented to Ontario and the way it was presented to other provinces. I think that there has been too great an attempt to impress on the people of Canada that no one has been doing anything about the pollution of water and the treatment of waste ... and now the federal government is coming in and will solve all our problems.

Then he said that the Ontario Water Resources Commission had been in operation for 13 years and had done a very effective job in this particular area. The point was then raised about having so many different federal agencies concerning themselves with water quality, and the minister set forth 17 federal agencies involving at least nine different departments of the federal government. There was the Department of Agriculture, the Department of Transport—which was involved with commercial shipping—and the Department of Public Works which was involved with harbour installations. He said the dumping of waste into our harbours was the responsibility of the federal government. The Department of Fisheries is also involved, as is the St. Lawrence Seaway Authority.

The minister went on to point out that it is very important that there be only one federal agency dealing with water pollution and water quality control in areas of federal jurisdiction, rather than nine departments and 17 different federal agencies. Then he said:

> This is why I welcome the suggestion that the federal government is finally planning to do something about its role in combatting water pollution.

His next point is well taken:

> The disappointing aspect of the federal government proposals and the way it was made and the comments in the background notes and in their press releases is that they are involved almost directly in areas of provincial jurisdiction. It is important that the federal government not worry about municipalities and not worry about establishing river basin agencies which would control the various watersheds. These are things which, as far as Ontario is concerned, the OWRC and our Conservation Authority Branch are already looking after.

He claims that federal jurisdiction involves—> —our lakes...our navigable waters...commercial shipping and our harbours have been neglected and not properly looked after. This is where I would like to see the federal government involved and working in concert with the Ontario government to eliminate pollution. They have their areas of responsibility. Let them do something about it. If there is to be an overall policy on water—

• (9:40 p.m.)

This raises the problem of jurisdiction. The Ontario minister is pointing out that there appears to be an evasion, as far as he is concerned, in respect of Ontario government projects in the municipalities; the federal government has neglected its responsibility. There should be a shift to assuming its responsibility, working in co-operation with provincial governments, to take care of some of the problems of municipalities.

His next point is with regard to the question of uniform standards across Canada. He pointed out that the federal government does not recommend uniform standards across Canada—this, of course, concerns the provinces—and said:

I realize that the same standards should not apply to some small lake or stream in northern Ontario as, for instance, Toronto harbour—this is something for the experts to decide. But if there are too many variables, too many different standards, this will lead to trouble. You will give certain areas of the provinces, because of the nature of their waterways, an advantage over others.

He gives an example as follows:

—in other words industry which is polluting may say, "well, if the waterway that we wanted to establish our plant on in Ontario is class A...we had better look for a class C one...as defined by the Canada Water Act".

This is a problem in not recommending uniform standards across the country, and it is certainly of concern to the minister. The Ontario minister's final point was that there were no incentives given industry by the federal government. He suggested that there should not be any imposition of federal sales tax in respect of pollution equipment. He went further and said there should be no municipal taxes on buildings that house pollution equipment. He stated on behalf of the province of Ontario that he was prepared to recommend this to his government, and hoped the federal government would take another look at the suggestion of lifting the 11 per cent sales tax on pollution equipment and buildings that house such equipment.

Hon. members have seen, from the short analysis I have given of this interview with the Ontario Minister of Energy and Resources Management, that there are four or five points with which he is very concerned. These include the lack of national federal standards, the lack of incentive and the existence of so many federal agencies with not one federal authority dealing with the problem of pollution. I hope when we get to the committee the minister will consider these problems and solve them to the advantage and benefit of all Canadians.

I suppose at the very basis of the problem is money. The federal government has been very cautious in respect of committing itself to contributing any money toward the implementation of its ideas. The minister should come clean, so to speak, and give us an idea of how much money the government is prepared to spend to meet this problem. I hope the minister will have at the committee meeting a representative of Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation. It is very commendable that we advance moneys to municipalities for sewage treatment and disposal plants. In September and October of this year there was a directive to CMHC not to accept any more loan applications for sewage treatment plants.

I should like the Minister without Portfolio to assure us that if we are really going to deal with this problem and battle and solve pollution, he will guarantee so many million dollars to municipalities for sewage treatment projects. Therein may lie the key to the solution of this problem. So much for the attitude of the minister of Ontario regarding this bill.

May I now direct the attention of the House to the attitude of the Canadian Wildlife Federation. This short statement was made by Mr. R. C. Passmore on November 21, 1969, after this bill was introduced in the House:

Although the Act seemingly bristles with defences against water pollution it actually nips only cautiously at the periphery of the problem.

Then he set forth some of the salient features of the Act in this way:

It would allow the minister of Energy, Mines and Resources to enter into arrangements with the provinces and form joint committees which would consult on water resource problems, develop programs and co-ordinate their implementation.

It would allow establishment of regional federal-provincial boards wherever there is a "significant national interest" in water resources; collect information on their quality, distribution, and use; conduct research and undertake programs designed to conserve and develop water resources.

It would allow establishment of joint federal-provincial water quality management agencies in regions or water basins where water quality management has become a matter of urgent national concern. The agencies would design, build, and operate sewage treatment plants; conduct continuing surveys of water quality and potential sources of pollution; and set water quality standards for the area.

It would make water pollution an offence for which a polluter could be fined up to $5,000 for each day that the release of polluting substances occurred, but only within an established water quality management area.

This is his approach to this measure:

All of which adds up to a piecemeal geographic approach to solving what is now a full-scale national emergency. Is this another case of pussyfooting through the jurisdictional maze of our "co-operative federalism"? Surely, the magnitude of the problem requires bolder action.

He then indicates that Canadians would welcome more meaningful participation by the federal government. He points out that there are insufficient resources available to provincial governments with which to make full use of any program to solve the problems of pollution. He states:

People everywhere would welcome comprehensive multipurpose water resource management. But the need is everywhere, not just where "there is a significant national interest"—

He then states:

—success will depend on massive inputs of capital through loans, grants and shared-cost programs. But the Canada Water Act in its present form, is extremely cautious about committing the federal treasury.

He ends by saying:

Unless the Canada Water Act can be given a stiffer backbone, Canadians will still be looking for ways to curb pollution.

He suggested that we are entitled to the human right of a clean, healthy environment and that this right should be part of Canada's Bill of Rights, thus giving any Canadian legal backing in his search for a high quality, unpolluted life. I hope the chairman of the committee will invite a representative of the Canadian Wildlife Federation to set forth its ideas in respect of this problem.

I am going to become very parochial and discuss the Toronto scene. In Toronto we have two main rivers, the Don and the Humber. In metropolitan Toronto we also have the Credit River. The industrial and human waste that flows down these rivers is a disgrace to the fair city of Toronto. The beaches along the lakefront are unusable. There is no swimming in the summer. This fall, ducks died as a result of the pollutants in the water. The commission was not able to prove this, but the evidence did not indicate that they did not die from the drug called diacid.

The air in Toronto is polluted by the emission of waste from the factories and industrial centres. At times this makes Toronto a very unpleasant place in which to live. In fact the people in my constituency have had to put up with pollution from the Consumers Gas Company for many years. They have had to put up with having a glue factory, and the emission of ash from a project which produces electricity in the west end of Toronto. These are three ways in which the people of my riding have suffered.

I recall that when we had the minister and officials before us in the committee, the hon. member for High Park (Mr. Deakon) spoke strongly and urgently about the government taking action concerning the pollution which prevailed in the south end of his riding. I recall the former mayor of Toronto, the member for York West (Mr. Givens), speaking in his usual flamboyant and eloquent way about the pollution problems in Toronto. I would think the former mayor would get up and tell us just what he thinks of this bill and the remedies he thinks should be taken.

Just the other day we heard the news that the Ontario Water Resources Commission had laid a charge against Gulf Oil of Canada for having polluted the water of Lake Ontario as a result of its operations at the lakeside. I would think the hon. member for Peel South (Mr. Chappell) would get up and tell us what he believes the government should do with regard to this pollution caused by Gulf Oil on Lake Ontario, because there in that area are many other oil companies. The people in the area have the right to have their member ask whether this bill will be an effective instrument to control pollution.

I do not like to continue being colloquial and speaking of the problems in my constituency and the city of Toronto, because the problem of pollution embraces the Great Lakes of Ontario. The Great Lakes probably represent the largest natural water resource in the world. This area is quickly becoming polluted to the point that a crisis is occurring. In 1964 the International Joint Commission, composed of three Canadian and three United States representatives, studied pollution in the Great Lakes. That commission has been very active because some people have said that Lake Erie is now a dead lake and that Lake Ontario is quickly becoming the same. It has also been stated that Lake Superior, Lake Michigan and Lake St. Clair are in danger of becoming much like Lake Erie.

It behooves us to take immediate action in this House. Just recently I saw an article entitled "Lake Ontario Program" which appeared in a periodical I obtained. I believe it is interesting and indicates how much Lake Ontario is polluted. It states:

> To preserve the usefulness of Lake Ontario and other waters in an 18,000-square-mile area of upper New York State is the objective of a program now being conducted by the Federal Water Pollution Control Administration.

That is in the United States. It continues:

> The threat comes from municipalities and industries—mainly pulp and paper mills, food processing plants, and chemical plants. While requiring enormous amounts of water, these industries at the same time are discharging wastes which in quantity and complexity inevitably damage water quality and make further use of the waterways difficult if not impossible.
> More than 40 pulp and paper mills are operating on tributaries to Lake Ontario. The food processing plants—more than 240 in number—freeze, can, grind, package or otherwise process meat, dairy products, fruit, vegetables, beet-sugar, and wines. Chemicals and allied products are manufactured in about 20 large plants, mainly in the Lockport, Syracuse, and Rochester areas.
> Few of the pulp and paper mills treat any of their process wastes. The discharged material is extremely demanding on the oxygen resources of a stream. Deposits of one to two feet of fibrous pulp material, to cite one example, have been found as far as two miles downstream from some of the mills on the Black River.

He points out that wastes from chemical plants are toxic to fish. This indicates the enormity of the problem with regard to Lake Ontario. This is a report by a federal commission of the United States. I am sure we could indict ourselves with regard to the pollutants from factories and the human waste which enter Lake Ontario.

Mr. Speaker, I should like to continue tomorrow morning. May I call it ten o'clock?

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

A motion to adjourn the House under Standing Order 40 deemed to have been moved.

CRIMINAL CODE—PROCLAMATION OF REMAINDER OF AMENDMENTS RESPECTING BREATHALYZER

Mr. Robert McCleave (Halifax-East Hants): Mr. Speaker, on November 19 of last year the government proclaimed a portion of the omnibus Criminal Code amendment dealing with the breathalyzer provisions, but it adopted the curious course of specifically omitting in the proclamation one subparagraph, one clause and one paragraph of the breathalyzer provisions. The government omitted in each instance a portion which dealt with the right of an accused to receive, in an approved container, a sample of the breath that had put him behind jail bars.

My curiosity was aroused when I found this out, for several reasons. The first was that in the debate and the disputation which led up to this provision being put into the Criminal Code, many lawyers had a doubt about the breathalyzer clause because, after all, people were being asked to incriminate themselves out of their own mouths. However, the Members of the Bar felt the sting of their criticism blunted because there were these three safeguards in respect of the breathalyzer test. It puzzled me that the government should take this step, flying in the face of the Bar. I was puzzled because I had never heard of a proclamation in this form.

I note that it has been accepted over the years that certain sections of acts can be proclaimed, and indeed have been proclaimed, without the whole body of the act being proclaimed at one time. But I have never heard of a package within an act being proclaimed and little snippets and pieces of that package being cut out and held-up until a future proclamation.

My understanding that this was a very unusual course was reinforced when I spoke to two members of the class of 1940 in the House, the right hon. member for Prince Albert (Mr. Diefenbaker) and the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles). In their vast parliamentary experience—and nobody is their equal in that regard—they could not recall such a course being adopted. So I think it is a very fitting and proper subject to be raised. If my research leads me further into it, and I think it is serious enough, I suppose a motion will have to be presented to the House so that we can in some way obtain the opinion of the House on the unusual course taken by the government. What particularly hurts about this action is that the Minister of Justice (Mr. Turner), a man sworn to uphold the laws of Canada, should adopt a wholly new approach by selecting the method of proclamation that he did.

There was a third member of the class of 1940 with whom I might have checked when I was trying to find out if this procedure had ever been used before, and that is the Solicitor General (Mr. McIlraith). But I suggest that he is an accessory to this rather dastardly crime, and so I did not go hunting for advice in that direction. Besides, sometimes he can be a very persuasive fellow and he probably would have overwhelmed me with a lot of words which would add up to nothing but which might have kept me off the case.

There are three sections that are withheld from the proclamation of November 19. Section 224A (1) (c) (i) reads:

> at the time the sample was taken, the person taking the sample offered to provide to the accused a specimen of the breath of the accused in an approved container for his own use, and, at the request of the accused made at that time, such a specimen was thereupon provided to him.

I think this is a pretty substantial right which the government has seen fit not to give an accused person. The second part that was held up concerns a qualified technician taking a sample of the breath. It contains wording which is similar to that which I have just read, and is again a substantial right.

The third one is in subclause 6(b), which is the definition of the approved container and reads as follows:

> "approved container" means a container of a kind designed to receive a sample of the breath of a person for chemical analysis and that is approved as suitable for the purposes of this section by order of the Attorney General of Canada.

I suppose the whole difficulty was that they have not yet, and never could, come up with an approved container. But because this is such a substantial part of the right that is given to an accused within this part of the amendments to the Criminal Code, I suggest there has been a very serious breach of what we regard as the practices of this House in dealing with legislation.

I do not think anyone in this chamber, at the time we gave the government the right in the last paragraph of that omnibus bill to proclaim certain provisions, ever thought that little bits and pieces would be hacked out of one part of the Criminal Code. I suggest that no matter what the expression of the will of the House of Commons is as we set it forth here—and the only way we can express our opinion is by putting it down in writing—our will is not what we say but what we put down, as best we can in words, in legislation. No matter what our will is, if the government can use the proclamation approach to proclaim certain parts of the act and leave out others and perhaps never proclaim them, it means that the government itself and not Parliament has the say in what legislation comes out of the two Houses of Parliament.

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, before getting into the substance of the matter I might say to the hon. gentleman that in consulting the class of 1940 representatives on the question of drinking he might have introduced a little more balance than just consulting the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles) and the right hon. member for Prince Albert (Mr. Diefenbaker) on this question.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): He wanted a sober opinion.

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): I will not say that necessarily my colleague the Solicitor General (Mr. McIlraith) would have provided an equal balance on the other side, but I am sure he would have had a viewpoint on this question.

In the absence of the Minister of Justice (Mr. Turner) who, I regret to say, had a previous engagement this evening, and the illness of the parliamentary secretary, I have been asked to exhale a few remarks on the subject raised by the hon. member for Halifax-East Hants (Mr. McCleave). The hon. member said that he had thought, when the law passed, that this part of it would be proclaimed. But I am advised with reference to section 224A, subsection (6)(b), which deals with the approved container in which to provide the accused with a sample of his breath, that it was dealt with at length by the Standing Committee on Justice and Legal Affairs on March 18, 1969. The Attorney General at that time indicated to the Justice Committee that evidence given to a previous standing committee dealing with Bill C-195, that is, that a suitable container was available, was in fact inaccurate.

The Attorney General explained to the committee that at the time of their considering Bill C-150 no suitable container had been developed and that in fact the Canadian Forensic Society, which was working on a suitable prototype, did not expect to have a container ready for production until later this year. In view of this, the Attorney General undertook to the Justice and Legal Affairs Committee that he would not proclaim the section dealing with an approved container until such a device was available for distribution and use at a reasonable cost.

The Minister of Justice has kept that undertaking, and it is the view of the law officers of the Crown that the legislation in question affords enough protection to an accused as it now stands, through strict control over the type of breathalyzer machine which may be authorized. It is still open to an accused person, if he so wishes, to request a urine or blood sample in addition to being required to take a breathalyzer test. This, of course, would be a voluntary act on his part and would be dependent upon the appropriate facilities being available to accommodate such evidence. For that reason I would demur to the comments of the hon. member for Halifax-East Hants as to the propriety of this procedure, since it was predicted before the bill was carried into law, but I shall be glad to convey his remarks to my colleague, the Minister of Justice.

CONSUMER AFFAIRS—CHARGES RESPECTING OPERATIONS OF COUNCIL

Mrs. Grace MacInnis (Vancouver-Kingsway): Mr. Speaker, on December 3 of last year, as recorded at page 1548 of Hansard, I asked the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs:

> In view of the serious charges by members of the Canadian Consumers Council that the council has spent a year in almost total idleness, is torn by bitter internal dissension and is gagged by the chairman, will the minister investigate these charges and inform the House of his findings?

The minister replied that he had written the members of the council and asked each of them for their views on the role and structure of the council, and said he intended to discuss these views with them when he got them. I thought it was rather frivolous when he said:

> I have read the report to which the hon. member refers and from reading the report all I can say is that one can only have some sympathy for the chairman in view of the divergent views which were expressed.

I thought it not only frivolous but a mild way of putting it, because one member of the council had told the press:

> The public didn't know what we were doing, which was nothing. But they should have been told we are doing nothing.

[Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale).]

Another, a former president of the CAC, said:

> The council is certainly not effective at the moment. After a year of fruitless meetings next to nothing has been accomplished.

The chairman, referring to the minister's original request that the council produce a charter of consumer rights, said:

> We have got no tangible results on this so far.

Another member, referring to the minister's request that the council look into ways to help the low income consumer, said that "nothing meaningful" had been done about this.

In view of all this, I asked the minister, as a supplementary question, whether he would now consider appointing to the council representatives of low-income consumers. He dodged that question and said he was going to weigh the views of the council members as to whether there should be a change in the role and structure of the council. Later I asked, through a motion for the production of papers, for the full correspondence on the matter between the minister and the council members. Yesterday, January 14, the minister refused my request saying that this correspondence was "of a confidential nature and therefore it would not be in the public interest to release it."

• (10:10 p.m.)

Mr. Speaker, in view of the fact that last year the taxpayers of Canada paid $100,000 for the operations of the Consumer Council of Canada, I do not think council could be considered the private property of the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs (Mr. Basford), nor even of the government. Also, in view of the opinions which council members gave to the press, it seems to me eminently reasonable that there should be an investigation into what has been going on in the council and that the elected representatives of the taxpayers, the members of this House, should have access to the full text of the correspondence between the minister and members of the Consumer Council.

Mr. Rosaire Gendron (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Manpower and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, I have listened with interest to the remarks of the hon. member. I should point out that when a decision was taken to appoint a council with members drawn from various economic sectors, consumers, manufacturers, the advertising industry, labour and the universities, it was expected that there would be vigorous discussions and differences of viewpoint. The task of the chairman could not have been easy, and we are grateful to him for the leadership he has given in the council.

As the minister indicated last month in answer to the hon. member for Vancouver-Kingsway (Mrs. MacInnis), he is engaged in a review of the role and structure of the council. This review has not yet been completed, but the results will be announced when it is. I will, of course, draw the minister's attention to the remarks made in this debate.

Motion agreed to and the House adjourned at 10.15 p.m.

CONSUMER AFFAIRS

SUSPENSION OF INCREASE BY EATON'S AND SIMPSON'S IN CHARGE ACCOUNT INTEREST RATES

Hon. E. J. Benson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, members will have noticed a news item in the press yesterday to the effect that two major retail establishments in Canada were planning increases in their interest charges on certain charge accounts. I wish to inform the House that I have been in touch with the two companies and that each has agreed to suspend its decision in this matter until March, pending the outcome of the Prices and Incomes Commission's current discussions with the business and professional community aimed at limiting price increases. I wish to express the government's appreciation of the co-operative response of these two companies.

WEIGHTS AND MEASURES

TABLING OF WHITE PAPER ON CONVERSION TO METRIC SYSTEM

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): Mr. Speaker, before tabling it, I would like to comment on the white paper entitled "Proposal for Metric Conversion in Canada". In this paper the government sets out its proposed general policy for conversion to the metric system of measurement from the traditional inch-pound system. To quote from the white paper:

> The government believes that adoption of the metric system is ultimately inevitable—and desirable—for Canada. We also consider it appropriate for the government to assume a leading role in the planning for and in the implementation of this change.

This matter is of direct concern to all Canadians, to our industry and to all levels of government.

Today in Canada, although the metric system and units such as metres and grams are being used in many important sectors, it is the inch-pound system which predominates. In the world at large, however, the great majority of countries have already adopted the metric system or are now in the process of converting to it.

The white paper addresses itself to the importance of timing in connection with metric conversion in Canada and to the complexities involved. For example, in a modern industrial country such as ours, there will be costs associated with a move to the metric system. These costs will be offset by benefits which are expected to accrue from metrication. They will also be reduced to the extent that the change takes place over a reasonable period of time in relation to the real needs in the various sectors of activity in Canada. We must be aware of the possibility of incurring even greater costs if we do not start to plan now for the ultimate adoption of the metric system.

[English]

Metric units today form the accepted basis for international measurement and standardization. A country employing the metric system is, therefore, in a favourable position in an increasingly interdependent world economy. The countries of the European Common Market are long established users of the metric system. Both Britain and Japan, two of Canada's leading trading partners, have already embarked on a changeover. The United States, our principal customer, is now conducting an extensive study of this subject.

As a matter of fact, just four countries—Canada, United States, Australia and New Zealand—are still using the inch-pound system at this time. Canada's ability to maintain and expand its vital export trade with countries in the metric sphere will directly benefit from the move we have decided to make.

Changing to the metric system will have important benefits for the Canadian consumer. These benefits will derive principally from the inherent simplicity of the system and its convenience in general use. The ease in converting from one metric unit to another —from kilograms to grams, for example,—will simplify the arithmetic in making value comparisons of competitive consumer products.

• (11:10 a.m.)

For these reasons and many others which are indicated in the white paper, as I have remarked earlier, the government believes that the adoption of the metric system is ultimately inevitable and desirable for Canada. However, no legislative action is contemplated which would make mandatory a general use of metric in place of inch-pound units.

The white paper outlines what is the start of a long process on the road to metrication. It proposes certain organizational arrangements to plan for and encourage conversion. For example, the government intends to appoint a preparatory commission which will act at the federal level to co-ordinate the study and planning. A mandate will also be given to the proposed standards council of Canada—a bill on this subject is now before the House—so that it may fill a similar role in the more limited area of its responsibilities, that is, the industrial sector and physical standards. Planning and preparation will be encouraged so as to obtain the maximum benefits at the minimum cost to the consumer, to industry and to government at all levels.

Our intention is to study and consult extensively and so to determine what is the best process for this transition. It will be necessary, for example, to decide on the timing of changes appropriate to each individual sector of the economy. In issuing this white paper the government is inviting comments from all interested parties. We hope to obtain the widest possible involvement and co-operation of the community as a whole. Participation of other levels of government, of industry, and of the public at large in this effort will be welcomed and will be of the greatest importance in the attainment of the ultimate objectives for Canada in this area of measurement and standards.

[Mr. Pepin.]

Mr. Speaker, I wish now to table, in both official languages, under Standing Order 41(2), copies of a white paper entitled "Proposal for Metric Conversion in Canada".

[English]

Mr. G. W. Baldwin (Peace River): Mr. Speaker, I am appreciative of the courtesy of the minister in providing this statement to members of the opposition early enough so that, with their natural ability, they can become instant experts and make a reasonable reply. I say quite seriously that these statements on motions should really be commented on with light rather than with heat, and to receive a document in ample time to make an adequate reply is much better than receiving it, as we sometimes do, just five minutes before the time for making a response.

In keeping with the objective of non-partisanship I might properly say that we on this side feel very much as the minister does. I think I am entitled to get in a little commercial for the hon. member for Malpeque who has tabled a private member's bill calling for a metric system inquiry commission. I thought I might be entitled to say that at this time, Mr. Speaker.

Let me say at once that we will co-operate in our approach to the suggestions contained in the statement by the minister. There is no question at all that there is a movement in the world toward the adoption of the metric system, or the international system as it is more correctly defined. This is part of a whole movement toward international co-operation and I think we would be foolish if we did not recognize this and attempt to do something about it. I think it is correct to say, in the same spirit of non-partisanship, that the previous government under the leadership of the Right Hon. member for Prince Albert did undertake certain studies in this regard.

There have been a number of problems associated with this matter and I will deal with them very briefly. While there is no question that the jurisdiction lies with the federal government, I think we have to bring the provinces in from time to time because of the educational and other situations which will exist if we are ultimately going to change over to the metric system. Those of us who remember our school days when we were exposed to the metric system only to abandon it when we left school will realize how important it is that the educational systems of the provinces be adapted to keep pace with what this government and the governments of the world are doing.

There is a division in the countries of the world today. By far the greatest number of countries have adopted the metric system, but we cannot forget, of course, that the countries which have retained the inch-pound system have by far a preponderance of the world's trade. We should think particularly of our trading relations with the United States, which of course is and has for some years been examining its position with regard to adoption of the metric system. Whether we like it or not, what we do must to a considerable extent is keep pace with what is being done in the United States. I think it might well be suicidal for us to adopt the metric system without considering what is being done in the United States. It is in connection with the dangers and difficulties with relation to trade that the greatest problems will be generated. In the world of pure science and academic research I think we can say that the metric system has largely been adopted and has world-wide ramifications now.

I agree that there must be a continuous and detailed study. We are prepared to co-operate with the government in this regard. Shortly after 1951, when the matter first came up for discussion in the United Kingdom, there was a considerable amount of examination and later the minister of technology submitted the whole question to a standing committee. I recognize that a committee of the House might not be best equipped from a technical standpoint to make a decision, but from the viewpoint of keeping the public abreast of what is going on I would strongly urge the minister to give some thought to having the white paper he tabled today submitted either to a special or to a joint committee so that there might be a continuous study and reports from time to time to this committee by the boards the minister proposes to set up.

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, like the hon. member for Peace River I should like to thank the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce for having given us an advance copy of the white paper which he has now tabled and the statement he has just made to the House. Also like the hon. member for Peace River, I might indulge in a brief commercial by drawing the attention of the House to the fact that Bill C-42 on the Order Paper in the name of my colleague from Timiskaming calls for the introduction of the metric system. If my friends on our left have a similar bill, that will make it unanimous.

Speaking of the minister's courtesy in letting us have a copy of the paper and of his statement in advance, I think everyone knows that when this courtesy is extended to us it is usually extended to our friends of the Press Gallery as well. When I sat at the coffee table with some of our friends at ten o'clock this morning I found they were already applying their special talents and their superior intellect to some of the problems which would arise if we switched from the inch-pound system to the metric system. I did not understand all the things they were talking about.

An hon. Member: Neither did they.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Maybe not. One of them told me that when we switch to the new system a perfect figure, instead of being 36-24-36, would be 90-60-90. I gather some hon. members know what that means. In my own way of figuring things I thought about my friend the hon. member for York West and the hon. member for Edmonton Centre who, once this system comes into effect, will no longer have to give their weight in astronomical figures but will be down to 150 or even less, and some of us, of course, may disappear altogether.

• (11:20 a.m.)

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Baldwin: When we ski in Europe we will know what the measurements mean.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): I assure hon. members that even if I am a ghost I intend to stay here.

Mr. Baldwin: As long as you do not get too holy.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): I am trying to inch into this subject, Mr. Speaker, but I seem to be having difficulty.

Speaking seriously, however, as one of my colleagues at the press coffee table said this morning, whatever system we use the dimensions of the government's failure will be extreme. I think it is generally agreed that this is the kind of step Canada will have to take, and we agree with the statement made by the minister, both in the white paper and in his words to the House, that the decision is not one that can any longer be postponed.

It is quite true that there will be difficulties. Great expense will be involved and, as the hon. member for Peace River said, the change will reach right down to our educational system. Our children and grandchildren and those who come after them will have to spend not just a day or two on the metric system but will have to learn it all the way through. But even though there are difficulties connected with such a change, it is obvious that the advantages outweigh the difficulties and the cost and that we should move in this direction. Therefore it is good that some planning for it is being done.

As has already been said, very few countries in the world are on the inch-pound system, but it does happen that one of them is the giant alongside us, the United States of America. We in this party frequently suggest that we should not be influenced in certain matters by what they do in that country, but I think that in this matter we and our American friends will have to act together. I hope that the kind of public action being taken in Canada will be viewed by them as a lead and a suggestion to them that they should step up their studies and activities in this field as well.

We welcome the fact that, as the minister has said, there will be liaison with the provinces because they will be involved not only in the changes generally but with their particular effect on education. All told, we shall be glad to co-operate with the government in hastening the day when this change can be made with as little confusion as possible.

While we are making this kind of change, perhaps we might also do something about our cold temperatures. We might shift over from fahrenheit to centigrade. Some thought might also be given to a simplified world calendar that would make many of our computations much more comprehensible.

In general terms we thank the minister for giving us the information in advance, and we shall be happy to do what we can in connection with the work that needs to be done in preparation for a change to the metric system.

[Translation]

Mr. Gilbert Rondeau (Shefford): Mr. Speaker, I do not intend to repeat the comments of the previous speakers concerning the new policy of the federal government in connection with the metric system, but I would like in my turn to thank the minister who was kind enough to send us in good time copies of the white paper on the conversion to the metric system, in order to enable us to study it in both languages, had any of us wished to do so.

The advantages of the metric system are known throughout the world. On account of its coherence and other recognized advantages, as, for example, its accuracy, the metric system is the only valid system for the measurement of values based on decimals.

As this system is the most exact there is and as it is becoming more and more widespread, I believe that, as it is proposed today, Canada should adopt it.

In North America, according to the white paper, the commercial gallon has two different values. The same difficulty arises in a number of other fields. The United Kingdom has recently adopted the metric system. Most countries of the world use it.

As a matter of fact, only four countries, as it is said in the white paper, have not yet officially adopted this system but are considering doing so in the near future.

The conversion to the metric system would bring problems. The government will have to act very carefully in this respect, because we could not adopt this system at a moment's notice. Yet, the government proposes to us this morning the creation of a commission with a view to preparing the Canadian economy to this conversion so that the transition will be so smooth as can be.

On page 8 of the report are indicated the disadvantages that would result from converting to this system too rapidly. It is also mentioned that this system should not be introduced without the provinces being consulted, and more especially the industrialists, for they will be the most affected by this change.

Here is an excerpt from page 8 and I quote:

—that it is not essential that conversion should proceed equally and evenly in all sectors.

—To do so permits each sector of industry to assess the problems of conversion and consider practical solutions, including timing, without the inhibitions which compulsory immediate changes in physical standards would involve. Metric conversion may be conceived as a variety of programmes extending over periods of years as determined by the needs and problems in different sectors of the economy.

If the government wants to adopt the metric system by complying with these recommendations, we fully agree since it would permit all the sectors of the economy to adapt to the new situation and to carry out the conversion process as soon as possible which is as necessary to Canada as to the other countries.

AGRICULTURE

TABLING OF SPECIAL REPORT ON PRICES OF TRACTORS AND COMBINES

Hon. H. A. Olson (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, I would like to table copies in each of the official languages of a "Special Report on Prices of Tractors and Combines in Canada and Other Countries." This is a report of the Royal Commission on Farm Machinery. The importance and thoroughness of this report and its implications for Canadian farmers are recognized by the government, and it is the intention of the government to consider the report and its recommendations most carefully.

Since the report covers matters that are the concern of or fall within the jurisdiction of several departments, an interdepartmental working group has been formed, the function of which will be to make recommendations to the government. Already this group has initiated discussions with officials in the United States and Britain. It should be noted that this special report covers only one phase of the commission's investigations and that the final report will be available in late summer.

In the meantime the government would welcome the views of organizations, firms or individuals in respect of this important matter.

Mr. H. W. Danforth (Kent-Essex): Mr. Speaker, I should like to deal with the statement made by the Minister of Agriculture to the House this morning because I think it reveals to the House and to the country as a whole the actual capability of the government in dealing with this major problem.

Some years ago it became apparent to those in the agricultural industry as a whole that they were in difficulty in trying to make an economic living, and since the government was little disposed to increase the prices that farmers could receive for their produce the emphasis of farm groups was placed on in-put costs, the major proportion of which, other than that of land, lay in the realm of farm machinery.

As long as four years ago the agricultural industry in Canada found there was a great deal of difference between what Canadian farmers had to pay for their equipment compared with what farmers in other nations had to pay. As a matter of fact, farm groups in this country took the initiative and found that it was possible to procure farm machinery in Great Britain at a much lower cost than in Canada. As a result, representations were made to this government to such a degree that the government appointed a commission to study the cost of farm machinery in other countries.

This morning the minister has tabled a special report, and he indicates it should be noted that it only covers one phase of the commission's investigation. Without having seen the report, Mr. Speaker, I am quite prepared to believe that it is perhaps an edited or elaborated version of what was presented to the agricultural congress almost 12 months ago. Now we have it presented to Parliament.

It is an interim report, Mr. Speaker, and the government says it is going to take it under consideration. But before it does so it is going to set up another committee to study the report's ramifications in respect of various departments and this committee is to make a report to the government. This is just further procrastination and it shows, to my mind, that the government has no initiative, no aggressiveness and very little appreciation of the problem facing the agricultural industry today.

The real attitude of the government was amply portrayed by the minister in his statement. This commission was set up on the basis of representations made to the government by the agricultural industry of Canada, but his last words were that "in the meantime the government would welcome the views of organizations, firms or individuals in respect of this important matter." Mr. Speaker, in four years all this government has done is go round in a full circle.

Mr. Rod Thomson (Battleford-Kindersley): Mr. Speaker, while we were supplied with a copy of the minister's statement, for which we thank him, we would have also appreciated a copy of the press summary supplied to the news media.

It has been so long since the Barber Commission held its first hearings that farmers were beginning to wonder whether a report would ever be filed. Since farm machinery capital and repair costs represent such a proportionally large percentage of total farm expenses, great interest will be aroused by the filing of this report. Farmers have long felt that Canadian farm machinery prices are exorbitantly high. Ontario farmers have proved this by importing British-made tractors at a considerable saving. If the Barber report suggests action under the Combines Investigation Act, we trust the government will act promptly in this regard. Because of the awkward financial situation of farmers in western Canada, we are very concerned whether there are going to be any farmers left to offer service to or any dealers left to offer it, since the companies have and are withdrawing service from many points.

The minister mentioned the forming of an interdepartmental committee to deal with the report and make recommendations to the government. We trust that somewhere in the process an opportunity will be provided to farmers and other interested groups to make recommendations to the government, because the farmers want and need action now, not ten years from now.

[Translation]

Mr. Bernard Dumont (Frontenac): Mr. Speaker, the Minister of Agriculture advised us this morning that pious wishes would be expressed once again by a Royal Commission on the prices of tractors and combines.

Mr. Speaker, I should like to remind you that the road to hell is paved with good intentions. Since the final report will not be available before the end of the summer, companies selling their products at exorbitant prices will continue to exploit the Canadian people. Needless to say that manufacturers of farm implements—who contribute to election funds—will welcome this two-and-a-half-year postponement granted them by this government—who was to bring about a just society—for they will be able to keep on exploiting the Canadian people.

Mr. Speaker, Canadians want action. They are fed up with royal commissions. Reports slumber in desk drawers under a two-inch coat of dust. To give an example, last spring we met with representatives of all the farmers' organizations of western and eastern Canada, and we have still received no reports because the briefs submitted at the meetings were detrimental to the reputation of the government.

Finally, Mr. Speaker, we hope the investigations will not end up with just reams and reams of reports, but rather by the adoption of energetic measures to prevent man from exploiting his fellow men.

[Mr. Thomson.]

ELECTORAL BOUNDARIES READJUSTMENT ACT

MEASURE TO CHANGE NAME OF CONSTITUENCY

Mr. Robert-B. Major (Argenteuil) moved for leave to introduce Bill C-178 intituled "An Act respecting the Electoral Boundaries Readjustment Act".

Some hon. Members: Explain.

Mr. Major: Mr. Speaker, the purpose of this bill is to change the name of the riding of Argenteuil into that of Argenteuil-Deux-Montagnes, in order to avoid confusion between the provincial county of Argenteuil and the federal electoral district of the same name, and also to pay a tribute to the Iroquois people after which the area was named hundreds of years ago.

Motion agreed to, bill read the first time and ordered to be printed.

ORAL QUESTION PERIOD

GRAIN

FINAL PAYMENTS FOR 1968-69 CROP YEAR

Mr. Gordon Ritchie (Dauphin): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the Minister without Portfolio in charge of the Wheat Board. When will the minister be in a position to announce the final payment for the 1968-69 crop year for wheat, oats and barley?

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister without Portfolio): Mr. Speaker, I do not at the moment have a specific date for the announcement. The hon. member knows the pattern of the past and it may well be that the timing will be about the same as in past years.

Mr. Ritchie: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Has the government any other plans to assist cash-short farmers in the event that there is no final payment for this crop year?

Mr. Lang: That, Mr. Speaker, is a matter of policy for consideration by the government, and any such decision will be announced at the appropriate time.

Mr. Baldwin: Do not hold your breath.

Mr. Les Benjamin (Regina-Lake Centre): A further supplementary question, Mr. Speaker.

When the minister is able to report on this point and announce the final payment, if any, would he consider advising the House what additional costs there were to the Canadian Wheat Board for that crop year for the drying, extra shipping charges and handling costs of tough and damp grain?

Mr. Lang: I shall be glad to look into the question of whether that particular statistic can be isolated, Mr. Speaker, in the course of the Wheat Board's operations. It may well appear in the Wheat Board's annual report, or earlier if possible.

Mr. George Muir (Lisgar): In view of the fact that barley is being traded on the export market at approximately 20 cents below the domestic price, has the government in fact established a two-price system for barley?

UTILIZATION OF LAKEHEAD TERMINAL SPACE

Mr. Craig Stewart (Marquette): Mr. Speaker, can the minister tell the House if a special agreement has been made between the grain handlers union and the Wheat Board to trickle grain into Lakehead storage facilities, thus cutting down lay-offs of grain handlers between now and the spring shipping season?

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister without Portfolio): Mr. Speaker, as I said to the House on an earlier occasion, the arrangement which has been arrived at for moving grain from the prairies to the Lakehead is one which, to my mind, is the most effective and efficient way of taking the grain there and ensures that the handling system is in the best possible shape to handle the very large amounts of grain which will have to be handled after the opening of navigation. The plan was arrived at without discussion with the grain handlers at the Lakehead, but in subsequent developments of the plan members representing the union were in discussion with us and we were able to explain to them the objective which we had in mind in dealing with the scheme alluded to.

PROPOSED FARMER SUPPORTED SALES AGENCY PLAN

Hon. W. G. Dinsdale (Brandon-Souris): A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Now that the Canada Grains Council has considered the proposed farmer supported sales agency plan and given its approval to it, can the minister indicate when this excellent idea will be implemented, under the jurisdiction of the Wheat Board?

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister without Portfolio): Mr. Speaker, there are, I know, very good ideas being developed within the Canada Grains Council and we are in constant touch with them about these ideas. Of course, the implementation of any specific ideas and the work that has to be done by the government in preparing to meet any of these proposals may be complex matters, and any decisions of this sort are matters to be announced by the government in due course.

Mr. Baldwin: The minister loves the phrase, "in due course".

APPOINTMENT OF LAKEHEAD MOVEMENT CO-ORDINATOR

Mr. Lorne Nystrom (Yorkton-Melville): A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. In view of the minister's statement a few days ago to the effect that a grain handling co-ordinator will be appointed for the Thunder Bay region, when will he be making an appropriate announcement to the House?

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister without Portfolio): When I am ready to make it, Mr. Speaker.

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prince Albert): Mr. Speaker, in view of the minister's explanation in such optimistic terms of how well wheat is moving, why is it that only 100 boxcars a day are being unloaded at the Lakehead when there are facilities for 400 box cars a day to be unloaded. Why is this failure being explained as a success by the minister?

Mr. Lang: Mr. Speaker, I do not have before me figures regarding unloadings. The pattern has been maintained at a fairly constant rate of about 400 boxcars a day in all the reports I have had to date. The target is between 400 and 500 boxcars a day for the immediate future, and it will of course rise to over 500 in later stages. We want to be in a position to work on over 1,000 boxcars a day once navigation resumes.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Mr. Speaker, may I bring to the minister's attention some information that apparently he has not obtained from the Saskatchewan Wheat Pool—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I apologize for interrupting the hon. gentleman but he knows, of course, that at this point of the proceedings he cannot bring information to the attention of the minister. He may only ask questions.

Mr. Trudeau: Send the information over.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Mr. Speaker, it is difficult to ask a question when one meets with such evasion as this minister constantly practises in this House.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Diefenbaker: I ask him this: Is it not a fact that up to the fourteenth day of this month and in the last few days especially only 100 boxcars a day were being unloaded, whereas there are facilities for 400 being unloaded. Is that a fact or is it not? Let the minister answer without evasion. Let us have the truth.

Mr. Lang: Mr. Speaker, the fact is that approximately 4000 boxcars to be unloaded are on the way to the Lakehead at the present time. The last figures I saw, and they are up to the day before yesterday, show that unloadings are running at more than 400 cars a day for the Lakehead region. I will be very glad to produce these figures and these daily reports so that the right hon. gentleman may obtain his facts accurately.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Diefenbaker: Mr. Speaker, that is not the first time the minister has misled the House with false information.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Some hon. Members: Shame!

Some hon. Members: Withdraw!

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

Mr. Diefenbaker: The Solicitor General had better stay with marijuana.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The right hon. gentleman cannot suggest that the minister has wilfully misled the House.

Mr. Diefenbaker: No, no, Mr. Speaker. I did not say wilfully.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Diefenbaker: I rise on a question of privilege.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I appreciate the point the right hon. gentleman is trying to make. He did not suggest that the minister had wilfully misled the House. I appreciate that point. Perhaps we might go on.

Mr. Diefenbaker: One moment please, Mr. Speaker.

[Mr. Speaker.]

Mr. Speaker: I understand the point of order the right hon. gentleman is seeking to raise.

Mr. Diefenbaker: I do not know whether Mr. Speaker does. I will never charge deliberate misleading of the House when stupidity affords an excuse.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I note that a number of other hon. members are anxious to ask questions about the same subject. Perhaps we might allow two or three further supplementaries, after which hon. members might agree to go on to another subject.

Mr. A. B. Douglas (Assiniboia): Mr. Speaker, before I ask my supplementary question perhaps I could resolve the present difficulty by saying to the right hon. gentleman from Prince Albert that his figures are for the Saskatchewan Wheat Pool terminal only.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member is indulging in debate. Perhaps he might ask his question.

FINAL PAYMENTS FOR 1968-69 CROP YEAR

Mr. A. B. Douglas (Assiniboia): Mr. Speaker, could the minister indicate to the House what is the expected possible or probable level of final payments for Durum wheat and hard red spring wheat?

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister without Portfolio): Mr. Speaker, I am not in a position at the moment to make a statement about this. I have in the past indicated that the prices for grain have been for some time running at levels below the levels required to meet the initial payments which were made to farmers for the crop year in question. Accordingly there is significant doubt about money being available in the pool, if it were to be closed at the present time. Of course, these matters can change. The actual closing of the pool itself will affect the final amounts. That, certainly, is the situation at the present time. There is no reason at all for us to be optimistic about the pool; indeed, the likelihood is that the treasury will be involved with fairly significant amounts in order to make up the difference between initial payments and amounts realized.

Mr. R. R. Southam (Qu'Appelle-Moose Mountain): A further supplementary question,

Mr. Speaker. In view of the minister's statement to the effect that quite possibly there will be no final payment for the 1968-69 crop year, would the minister and his officials and the government support the principle of making a substantial acreage payment to western farmers in lieu of the government's failure to make these final payments?

EFFECT OF COLD WEATHER ON MOVEMENT

Mr. S. J. Korchinski (Mackenzie): A further supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Inasmuch as last year it was stated that grain deliveries could not be maintained to terminal elevators because of cold weather and inasmuch as today the temperature at Camrose, Alberta, is 50 below zero, at Fort Qu'Appelle, 35 below zero and at Winnipeg 27 below zero, a factor that may jam up the working of the master plan that has been arrived at, will the minister indicate whether for the present year plans have been made for contingencies such as cold weather so that the terminals will be filled by the time the shipping season opens this coming spring?

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister without Portfolio): The problem last year in connection with unloading at Vancouver, Mr. Speaker, was more complicated than one simply involving cold weather, because at that time it involved the clogging of the system with damp grain, as well as the cold weather which extended not only throughout the prairie region, where it is expected, but also throughout the mountains and other areas where it is not expected. The position at Vancouver is that there is in storage about the right supply of grain for the ships that are expected. We do not foresee any difficulty with regard to the movement of the grain required to meet the needs of the ships which are expected.

Mr. Speaker: Perhaps the Chair might be allowed to grant one more supplementary to the hon. member who brought this question up in the first instance.

Mr. Les Benjamin (Regina-Lake Centre): In view of the fact that Saskatchewan Wheat Pool terminals are receiving 100 cars a day and say they can handle 400, and since more than 200 grain handlers have been laid off, would the minister seek to persuade the Wheat Board and the railways to increase immediately the number of cars arriving at the Lakehead each day?

Mr. Lang: I have explained to the hon. member why the number of cars arriving is, in fact, an appropriate number of cars, and I do not think I need give that explanation again.

AGRICULTURE

DAIRYING—POLICY RESPECTING GRANTS

Mr. Henry Latulippe (Compton): Mr. Speaker, I wish to ask the Minister of Agriculture a question relating to the dairy policy.

Would the minister indicate to the House whether the total amount of dairy subsidies will be increased this year in order to provide for the re-adjustment of a certain number of quotas which are inadequate and raise a great deal of criticism from many farmers?

[English]

Hon. H. A. Olson (Minister of Agriculture): There are a number of ways in which the net return to producers of dairy products could be increased, and one of the most important would be a reduction in the cost of exporting surpluses. The standing committee of this House is addressing itself to the matter now and we are holding discussions with the dairy farmers of Canada and many of the other producer organizations which have a direct interest in this subject.

COMBINES

ACTION TO PREVENT TAKEOVER OF CANADIAN COMPANIES BY FOREIGN FIRMS

Hon. George Hees (Prince Edward-Hastings): I should like to ask the Minister of Finance whether he would take the first opportunity on motions to outline to the House what action his department and the government intend to take to deal with the problem of the very large number of Canadian companies which are being taken over each year by United States interests? The minister advised the House in December that his department had been studying this problem very hard for some time.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member will appreciate, I am sure, that the information he is seeking now should normally be given by way of a statement on motions.

Mr. Hees: With great respect to Your Honour, I began my question by asking the minister if he would consent to advise the House at the first opportunity on motions. I am just asking him to say yes or no.

Inquiries of the Ministry

Hon. E. J. Benson (Minister of Finance): In due course, when our studies are complete, I shall make the House aware of our decision on this matter.

Mr. Hees: In the meantime, is it the intention of the minister to become a modern Nero who fiddles while large sections of the Canadian economy are absorbed by United States interests?

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Trudeau: If we have a Nero, you have got a zero.

Mr. Hees: I just asked.

THE CANADIAN ECONOMY

INFLATION—REPRESENTATIONS FROM ORGANIZED LABOUR CONCERNING VOLUNTARY RESTRAINTS

Mr. Robert Muir (Cape Breton-The Sydneys): My question is directed to the Minister of Finance. Has he received any direct representations from representatives of organized labour concerning his proposed temporary voluntary curbs on prices and wages?

Hon. E. J. Benson (Minister of Finance): No, Mr. Speaker, I have not.

Mr. Muir (Cape Breton-The Sydneys): Does the minister intend to meet with representatives of labour in the near future, shortly, or at some time, to discuss this matter?

Mr. Benson: As I explained to the House, Dr. Young of the Prices and Incomes Commission has indicated he hopes to be able to hold a conference in February at which industry, business and the professions will be represented. I believe his next step would be consultation with organized labour. Although I do not report for this commission and I am not in continuous contact with Dr. Young, I believe he is in touch with organized labour from time to time in this regard.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

NIGERIA—ACCESSIBILITY OF WAR ZONE TO OBSERVERS

Mr. Andrew Brewin (Greenwood): I should like to direct a question to the Prime Minister. Having regard to the fact that the military observer team in Nigeria has stated in the course of a recent conference that it was only able to spend about three hours at Owerri and several other towns on the periphery of the former Biafran-occupied territory before returning to Lagos, will the govenment request the Nigerian government to enable observers to visit immediately the areas formerly occupied by Biafran forces in order that they might be in a position to observe and report from the areas in which the main threat of massive starvation is believed to exist?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): I shall ask the minister to take that suggestion into consideration, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. R. Gordon L. Fairweather (Fundy-Royal): Has the Prime Minister received any response from the President of Nigeria to the message the right hon. gentleman dispatched to him?

Mr. Trudeau: I have had no answer yet, to my knowledge.

DISTINGUISHED SERVICE AWARDS

STATUS OF PAST AND INTRODUCTION OF NEW AWARDS

Mr. Gordon Blair (Grenville-Carleton): I should like to direct a question to the Minister of National Defence. Is it the intention to introduce new Canadian awards for bravery and, if so, can the minister give the House an assurance that awards granted to Canadians in the past will not be considered as falling within the same category as foreign awards?

Mr. Diefenbaker: That is what they were described as in another department.

Hon. Léo Cadieux (Minister of National Defence): Consideration is being given to adopting new Canadian awards for bravery. It has been realized that the single award now authorized, the Medal of Courage, does not cover the whole range of courageous acts by civilians and members of the forces. I would assure my hon. friend that there is no intention whatever to downgrade the awards which gallant and brave Canadians have received in the past from the Sovereign on the recommendation of the government of Canada. It is unthinkable that these would ever be regarded as foreign awards.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Muir (Cape Breton-The Sydneys): You had better tell that to Pelletier.

Mr. Diefenbaker: The Secretary of State said they were foreign awards.

Mr. Jack Marshall (Humber-St Georges'-St. Barbe): Would the minister tell us whether a report has been prepared on the reclassification of military awards and, if so, would he be prepared to table it in the House?

Mr. Cadieux (Labelle): I am not aware that such a report has been prepared. It is intended to prepare such a report when the new awards are decided upon.

Mr. W. B. Nesbitt (Oxford): Will these awards come under the auspices of the minister, as we hope, or under the auspices of the Secretary of State?

An hon. Member: As we do not hope.

Mr. Cadieux (Labelle): I think it is likely to develop this way: the decorations committee would look after the civilian side of awards and I would hope that the Minister of National Defence would deal with the military awards.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Marshall: I should like to direct this supplementary question to the Prime Minister. Is the Prime Minister aware of a report prepared on the reclassification of military awards and would he be prepared to table such report?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): I am not aware of such a report, Mr. Speaker. I do know, as the Minister of National Defence has said, that work is being done to establish awards which would supplement the present ones and which would be tied in with the Order of Canada awards instituted some time ago. As far as I know this is being done under the auspices of Government House and not of any particular minister.

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prince Albert): The Secretary of State is not here today, being on the official absentee list. He gave us to understand yesterday that the report was in the hands of the Prime Minister. Is there any basis for that statement? The chairman of the committee is the Undersecretary of State.

Mr. Trudeau: I am not aware of the precise nature of the report to which the right hon. gentleman refers. I repeat that work is being done by officials under, I believe, the titular supervision of Government House rather than of any minister. Of course, the Undersecretary of State and other officials are members of such a working group. If they have produced a report and have sent it to my office, I have not yet taken cognizance of it.

ENERGY

POLICY RESPECTING INTEGRATION OF U.S. AND CANADIAN RESOURCES

Mr. G. W. Baldwin (Peace River): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources whether, since his original discussions in Washington with Secretary Hickel, there have been further communications which would have the effect of varying the original proposals discussed in Washington?

Hon. J. J. Greene (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, I have been in communication with Mr. Hickel since that date, but there have been no specific proposals with the exception of my specific proposal to Mr. Hickel that it would be in the interests of the United States as well as Canada that we be afforded a wide-open market for our crude oil in the United States.

Mr. John Burton (Regina East): A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Would the minister table in the House any relevant documents that are made available or issued in regard to this matter either by the Canadian government or the United States government? Is the minister also prepared to table now the studies that were carried out by the Canadian government relating to energy policy, particularly the feasibility study on an oil pipeline from western Canada to Montreal?

Mr. Greene: Mr. Speaker, such documents will be tabled by me as are in accord with the rules of the House as well as in accord with the public interest. With respect to studies of pipelines from the west to Montreal, I believe the Borden report is a public document and is a fairly comprehensive study dealing with that issue. I would refer the hon. member to it.

Mr. Burton: A further supplementary question. In view of the fact that the minister has established an advisory team consisting of oil industry executives to advise him on oil policy, would the minister consider expanding this committee or establishing a separate committee composed of people who will be able to advise him on matters affecting the public interest?

Inquiries of the Ministry

Mr. Greene: Mr. Speaker, I think the committee as constituted is an extremely good one, and the country is very fortunate that men of this calibre and capacity are willing to serve on this advisory committee. For the present, I have no thought of enlarging or expanding that committee.

PUBLIC SERVICE

COMMENTS BY TRADE MINISTER ON UNILINGUAL FRENCH-SPEAKING UNITS

Mr. J. P. Nowlan (Annapolis Valley): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Prime Minister. Was the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce flying a kite or was he giving us a peek at government policy when he is reported to have said in Toronto yesterday that unilingual French-speaking units within the public service "are second best" and "one of last resort which I hope and believe will not materialize"?

Mr. Speaker: Order. I am not sure whether the hon. member's choice of words is procedurally correct. The hon. member can ask the Prime Minister whether a minister's statement is an expression of government policy, and I assume that that is what the hon. member is asking the Prime Minister now.

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, obviously the minister was not stating government policy in this regard because government policy has not yet been established. This I said a few days ago. I have not read the speech in question, but from the part quoted by the hon. member it seems to me that it would not be a difficult position to accept that it is second best. I suppose first best would be to have everyone in the country speaking both languages.

Mr. Nowlan: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. I quite agree with what the Prime Minister says, and in view of his answer to me yesterday I did not intend to ask him any further questions about the matter since I understood that government policy was under review. However, in light of the speech made by the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce yesterday, and in view of the statement made in the House by the Secretary of State, who expressed the opposite point of view that it would be a logical extension of existing bilingual services to have French unilingual units in the public service, is it the policy of the government to allow other ministers to contribute their thoughts in a personal way, as in the case of the NATO debate, so that we may obtain a full expression of cabinet opinion before government policy is actually defined?

Mr. Trudeau: Mr. Speaker, I believe we received applause and encouragement from the members of the opposition with regard to this form of dialogue, and we intend to continue it when it is opportune to do so.

HEALTH AND WELFARE

USE OF ORAL CONTRACEPTIVES

Mr. Louis-Roland Comeau (South Western Nova): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for whoever is responsible for fielding questions to the Minister of National Health and Welfare in his absence. In asking this question I run the risk of being branded by my wife, but I ask it since many Canadians are interested in the subject. Can the minister tell the House what the government is doing to assure the public that no danger exists, if such is the case, in the use of oral contraceptives?

Mr. Stanley Haidasz (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker I should like to assure the hon. member that the minister recently reviewed the reports relating to the adverse effects of oral contraceptives. Steps have been taken to check further into the latest reports of the adverse effects.

Mr. Heath Macquarrie (Hillsborough): A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. In asking this question I assure the House my interest is purely objective. Can the Parliamentary Secretary advise whether the department has made any study of the drug known as L-dopa which is reputed to have amazing rejuvenative powers?

Mr. Haidasz: Yes, Mr. Speaker. Approximately 13 neurologists have been given permission to carry out an investigation of the drug known as L-dopa and its use in relation to Parkinson's disease.

Mr. Macquarrie: A further supplementary question. May I ask the Parliamentary Secretary whether he is asking for volunteers from his own party in this regard?

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Bell: Refer it to the Senate.

ENERGY

GLACE BAY HEAVY WATER PLANT—LEGAL ACTION AGAINST NOVA SCOTIA

Mr. Rod Thomson (Battleford-Kindersley): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources. In view of the inability of the Glace Bay plant to deliver heavy water to the government of Canada, is the government considering legal action against the government of Nova Scotia for defaulting on its contract with Atomic Energy of Canada?

Hon. J. J. Greene (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, I am glad the hon. member referred only to the inability of the plant. To date there has been no government decision that I know of in this regard.

[Later:]

Mr. A. B. Douglas (Assiniboia): Mr. Speaker, my question for the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources is really supplementary to an earlier one. In view of the fact that the heavy water plant in the Maritimes is not making very substantial progress, is the minister considering reviving plans for a heavy water plant at Estevan, Saskatchewan?

INQUIRY OF THE MINISTRY

Mr. Donald MacInnis (Cape Breton-East Richmond): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Finance. In the interest of showing some government initiative in its so-called fight against inflation, will the minister suspend until March 1 the increase in the price of cigars in the parliamentary restaurant?

Hon. E. J. Benson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I have given up smoking cigars.

WATER RESOURCES

AMENDMENT OF BILL TO PROVIDE FOR NATIONAL QUALITY CODE

Mr. G. H. Aiken (Parry Sound-Muskoka): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources. It arises from a statement made last night by the Minister of Fisheries and Forestry who proposed a national water quality code with regional guidelines. Is it the intention of the government to propose such an amendment to the Canada water bill?

Inquiries of the Ministry

Hon. J. J. Greene (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, I have not read the speech, if speech it was, of the minister referred to. Under the aegis of the Canada Water Act I think we will achieve, if the Act is effective—and we believe it will be—national standards by the introduction of water quality management areas under the Act.

Mr. Aiken: A supplementary question. In closing the debate on the water bill is it the intention of the minister to outline the changes that the government is proposing to make in the bill?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. It seems to me this is the kind of question which might be asked later during the debate when the bill is being considered.

Mr. Aiken: Mr. Speaker, the reason I raise this now is that the Minister of Fisheries and Forestry has made a statement and probably other ministers will be doing so also. At this time I think it essential that we know whether these various statements are to be consolidated at the conclusion of the debate, so that we will not be asking questions all the time.

NORTHERN AFFAIRS

NORTHWEST TERRITORIES—CONSERVATION AND LAND USE REGULATIONS

Mr. Randolph Harding (Kootenay West): Mr. Speaker, I am not certain whether this question should be directed to the Department of Indian Affairs and Northern Development or the Department of Energy, Mines and Resources. In view of the recent oil discovery by Imperial Oil in the Canadian Arctic and the statement by Stewart Hodgson, one of the commissioners of the Northwest Territories, about the urgent need for the federal government to establish adequate conservation and land use regulations in the territories, I should like to ask the minister whether such regulations are lacking and when the department will lay down adequate policies to meet the situation?

Mr. Speaker: I have serious reservations as to the form of the question but perhaps the minister might wish to reply.

Hon. J. J. Greene (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, I think there is regulation now and it is the intention to take an over-all approach to pollution in the North which will no doubt include provisions in respect of assuring the well-being of the ecology in the event of oil exploration.

THE CANADIAN ECONOMY

INFLATION—RESPONSE OF ORGANIZED LABOUR TO REQUEST FOR VOLUNTARY RESTRAINT

Hon. George Hees (Prince Edward-Hastings): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the right hon. Prime Minister whether he has any information he can pass on to the House regarding the success the Prices and Incomes Commission is having in persuading the leaders of organized labour to keep wage demands within agreed-upon guidelines?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): No, Mr. Speaker; the commission does not report to me in any sense. I had one meeting with them and that is all, to my recollection.

Mr. Hees: Would the Prime Minister ask his colleague, the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs, to take the first opportunity on motions to report to the House on this matter?

Mr. Trudeau: Yes, I will ask him, Mr. Speaker.

NATIONAL CAPITAL COMMISSION

EFFECT OF REMARKS BY CHAIRMAN

Mr. Robert Muir (Cape Breton-The Sydneys): Mr. Speaker, in view of the recent eruptions by the volcanic Mr. Fullerton of the National Capital Commission, I should like to ask the right hon. Prime Minister whether it is the intention of the Minister of Regional Economic Expansion to resign and make way for Mr. Fullerton?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): I doubt it, Mr. Speaker. The minister is in Quebec city on other business.

GRAIN

MALTING BARLEY—DENIAL OF SHIPPING PRIVILEGES

Mr. Don Mazankowski (Vegreville): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister without Portfolio, now that he has had a bit of a break during the question period. In view of the fact that producers in some areas of central Alberta are being denied shipping privileges for certain varieties of malting barley because of unfavourable freight rates, will the minister conduct an investigation of this matter, particularly in relation to the Alberta Wheat Pool and Canada Malting, in order that these producers may enjoy a fair and equitable share of the malting barley market?

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister without Portfolio): Mr. Speaker, I have been looking into the complaint to which the hon. member refers to see whether there is any substance to it and what solutions may be required. I hope to be able to make a report soon.

INDUSTRY

POTASH—PROPOSAL TO ESTABLISH EXPORT BOARD

Mr. John Burton (Regina East): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce whether a decision has been made in respect of the proposal to establish a potash export board to deal with potash marketing problems?

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): No, Mr. Speaker, as a result of conversations that have been taking place between this government and the government of Saskatchewan, we have reason to believe that changes will be made to the present system as defined recently by the Saskatchewan government. I should not like to preclude the success of this operation and I will not comment further.

Mr. Burton: Did the Premier of Saskatchewan inform the minister or the federal government of the nature of the discussions to be held with potash officials in Germany, or was he acting in any way on behalf of the government of Canada in respect of these discussions?

Mr. Pepin: Personally, I did not need any explanation, Mr. Speaker.

LABOUR CONDITIONS

LAY-OFF OF GRAIN HANDLERS AT THUNDER BAY

Mr. G. W. Baldwin (Peace River): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the Minister without Portfolio responsible for the Wheat Board whether he has had discussions with his colleagues who have responsibility in respect of problems anticipated as a result of a number of lay-offs of grain handlers at Thunder Bay occasioned by the inability of the government to maintain and sustain an adequate flow of grain?

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister without Portfolio): Of course the very premise of the question is false, Mr. Speaker, because in fact a sustained and steady flow of grain is planned. However, notwithstanding that there have been discussions concerning this whole situation between myself and a number of my colleagues.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

MEETING TO DISCUSS BROADCASTING OF PROCEEDINGS

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the President of the Privy Council in his capacity as Government House Leader. I wonder whether the hon. gentleman is yet in a position to meet with other House Leaders to discuss possible terms of reference under which the question of broadcasting the proceedings of the House by radio and television might be considered by a committee?

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (President of the Privy Council): No, Mr. Speaker. I expect that probably next Thursday afternoon I will be able to talk about that.

GRAIN

PICKING UP OF QUOTA BOOKS

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prince Albert): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the Minister without Portfolio, the hon. member for Saskatoon-Humboldt, whether or not orders have gone out to discontinue the picking up of quota books which has become a source of deep concern and resentment, as he knows, in western Canada?

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister without Portfolio): No, Mr. Speaker. The enforcement of the rules concerning the orderly marketing of grain is going forward in the usual way, and where these enforcement procedures require the collecting of evidence that evidence is collected. Normally, of course, this involves the picking up of permit books. According to the Wheat Board Act, as it has stood since I believe 1947, these permit books must be returned or a duplicate issued to the farmer within 15 days. In fact, the Wheat Board is able to get them back much quicker than that.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Did the Wheat Board get his quota book back to the Premier of Saskatchewan within 15 days?

UNEMPLOYMENT INSURANCE

ALLEGED DISCRIMINATION AGAINST RESIDENTS OF TOWNS AND VILLAGES

Mr. Jack Cullen (Sarnia): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the minister answering for the Minister of Labour. Is the Unemployment Insurance Commission practising discrimination against residents of towns and villages by refusing to pay unemployment insurance benefits to claimants residing in these communities unless they are prepared to accept jobs in cities, which often entails many miles of travel?

Mr. Jim McNulty (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Labour): I would be glad to take the question as notice, Mr. Speaker. If the hon. member for Sarnia has a specific case in mind, I would be only too glad to talk it over with him after the question period.

Mr. John Lundrigan (Gander-Twillingate): Mr. Speaker, will the Parliamentary Secretary discuss with the minister the possibility of investigating the lack of efficiency in a number of unemployment insurance offices across Canada where many people, and I am sure all hon. members agree, are not getting a very efficient response to their claims and consequently are waiting months for legitimate payments?

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

WATER RESOURCES

PROVISION FOR MANAGEMENT INCLUDING RESEARCH AND PLANNING AND IMPLEMENTATION OF PROGRAMS

The House resumed from Thursday, January 15, consideration of the motion of Mr. Greene that Bill C-144, to provide for the management of the water resources of Canada, including research and the planning and implementation of programs relating to the conservation development and utilization of water resources, be read the second time and referred to the Standing Committee on National Resources and Public Works.

Mr. John Gilbert (Broadview): Mr. Speaker, last night in the course of my remarks I indicated to you that we are getting the pollution we deserve because of our conduct and inaction. We cannot continue to dump sewage and industrial wastes into our rivers, lakes and streams and also emit pollutants into the air, without getting the results we are now obtaining. I said we should move from an affluent society to an effluent society. I mentioned that as a member of the Standing Committee on Energy, Mines and Resources, I obtained the impression from the presentation of the minister and the answers to questions by officials that they seemed to be dealing in the area of studies rather than the area of action. They seemed to be hung up with the jurisdictional problem when in fact they had adequate legislation before them to take effective action to deal with the question of pollution.

Then, I proceeded to outline to the House the reaction of the minister of energy and resource development of Ontario and pointed out that he was concerned about the lack of co-ordination between federal agencies in dealing with the problem of pollution. I mentioned that he was also concerned about the importance of having a single agency which would gather together the enforcement provisions of the different acts in order to make them really effective. This Ontario minister was also concerned about the lack of national standards and incentives related to pollution equipment. He indicated the willingness of the province of Ontario to give municipalities tax exemptions in respect of buildings that house pollution equipment. He also pointed out that the Ontario government is willing to forgo the 11 per cent sales tax with regard to pollution equipment and is asking for a response by the federal government on this important matter. He mentioned the lack of incentive forthcoming from the federal government.

Then, I referred to the Canadian Wild Life Federation brief which indicated that we are pussyfooting through the concept of co-operative federalism and providing an excuse for the federal government's inaction in respect of this important problem. The brief stated that Canadians want a meaningful federal participation by this government in combating this problem. It also indicated that the success of this legislation would depend on a massive input of federal funds. At that time, I said I hoped the minister, in his closing remarks, would meet some of these comments of the Ontario minister of energy and resource development and of the Canadian Wild Life Federation.

[Mr. Gilbert.]

I suggested that when the bill is referred to the committee we should have an opportunity to call witnesses from the different provinces and different organizations to give their views in respect of this important bill. Then, I became slightly parochial and set forth the situation in the city of Toronto where, as a result of sewage disposal and industrial waste, there is a pollution problem in respect of the Don River, the Humber River and the Credit River. A disgraceful situation has developed in the city of Toronto. The beaches cannot be used for swimming and in the fall of the year ducks die as a result of pollutants in the water. I pointed out that in 1964 a large program in respect of pollution in the Great Lakes system was referred to the International Joint Commission which is composed of three Canadian and three United States representatives. At the close of last evening I pointed out, by reference to a United States commission report, the number of pulp mills, chemical plants and food processing plants that are pouring their industrial waste into the Great Lakes in Ontario.

When we appreciate the fact that the Great Lakes in Ontario are the main pure water source in the world, it certainly behooves us to take immediate action. I mentioned that Lake Erie is now considered to be a so-called dead lake. In Biblical times we had the Dead Sea and now in modern times we have Lake Erie referred to as the dead lake. There is an imminent danger of the term "dead lake" being applied not only to Lake Erie but to Lake Ontario and the other Great Lakes.

I should like to refer to an article by Mr. Peter Calamai which appeared in the Montreal Gazette for October 13, 1969 under the heading "Pollution: point of no return?". In this article Mr. Calamai is commenting on the pollution report released by the International Joint Commission with regard to the health picture of Lake Erie and Lake Ontario. The article reads:

> The deciding factor will be how fast and with how much enthusiasm governments and industries seize the one last hope which the joint U.S.-Canadian research committees left for them.
> To save Lake Erie all these groups should take multi-million dollar action within three years; to save Lake Ontario they have six years.

The main problem in respect of the lake is the deposit of phosphates. I continue quoting:

> While the pollution report outlined a whole series of water quality objectives and recommendations it offered one, fast and sure method of curbing the gross pollution of the lakes.

"Stop phosphorus going into the lakes", the researchers said, and they will be healthy as can ever be hoped by 1986.

Failure to stop phosphorus inflow into Lake Erie within the three-year limit, the report warns, will bring the prospect of the lake regenerating its own pollution from phosphorus in the bottom muck.

While the report continually uses the word "phosphorus" the researchers made it clear they were referring largely to phosphorus compounds such as phosphates, which is phosphorus combined with oxygen.

These compounds occur in municipal sewage—coming largely from detergents housewives rinse down the sink—and in fertilizers and some industrial processes.

Four years of study by the pollution experts who wrote the report convinced them that phosphorus was the key to pollution in the lower lakes area where population has increased 100 times in the past 150 years.

The phosphorus—44,000 tons annually into the two lakes from all sources—is plant food for the algae rapidly coating lagoons and beaches. The more plant growth there is in the lakes the less oxygen is available for fish and for the biological processes necessary to neutralize other sewage.

Then, the report continues and points out the following:

Even more vital, one of the researchers commented, is that the same process is taking place in all Canadian lakes. Within this century the same point-of-no-return could be reached in Lake Superior or Huron.

How to stop the phosphorus?

Cut it off at the source, says the report.

About 67 per cent of all the phosphorus input into the two lakes comes from municipal sewage; another eight per cent comes from industrial wastes. Of the municipal share anywhere from 50 to 70 per cent is directly related to the phosphates in detergents.

So the report recommends an immediate reduction to minimum practical levels of the phosphorus in detergents and the complete elimination of such phosphorus compounds by 1972.

How practical is this?

Phosphates make up about 30 per cent of a box of detergent.

• (12:30 p.m.)

One U.S. manufacturer already has a brand on the market with 25 per cent less detergent than other products and sales are going well, according to one researcher.

The article concludes:

If the detergent companies do replace their harmful products by 1972 that action will probably save Canadian taxpayers $5 million annually in sewage treatment costs alone.

This indicates that the problem we are having is phosphates, the main source of which is the detergents used by women.

I think I should relate to members of the House that just recently one of the research experts at the University of Toronto has come forth with a phosphate free detergent. I should like to ask the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Mr. Greene) to call that expert before the committee to give us the benefit of his findings. I ask that the minister contact that professor, if he has not already done so, so that we could have the joint cooperation of the professor and possibly of the Polymer Corporation of Canada to produce this phosphate free detergent because the main source of the phosphate in the detergents comes from ERCO, the Electrical Reduction Company. Just this week that company was fined $40,000 for infractions to the Combines Investigation Act. It seems to me that we have a public duty, if a professor has found a phosphate free detergent, to use a crown corporation like the Polymer Corporation which would be suitably geared to produce this detergent and make it available.

Mr. Speaker: I have to interrupt the hon. member to remind him that his time has expired. He may continue if he has the unanimous consent of the House to do so.

Some hon. Members: Continue.

Mr. Gilbert: I will not trespass on the generosity of hon. members any longer than about five minutes at the most.

As I said, I would like the minister to take immediate action with regard to the finding made by the professor from the University of Toronto, and also to delve into the feasibility of the Polymer Corporation, which I understand is looking for other lines to produce, developing this product.

I could go on ad infinitum on the problems of pollution in the air, but before doing so I should like to say that we also have a problem of oil pollution in Lake Ontario. The other day the Gulf Company of Canada was charged by the Ontario Water Resources Commission with polluting Lake Ontario. Again the International Joint Commission studied this problem very seriously, and in the Globe and Mail issue of December 3, 1969 the findings of that commission are reported as indicating a conflict between the Ontario and the federal officials with regard to the possible effects of oil in Lake Ontario.

The article reads:

Six submissions from the gas and oil industry argued against any curtailment of drilling. A thick brief from the Ontario Petroleum Institute Incorporated told of elaborate plans to deal with a leak should one occur—

In contrast to the industry briefs were submissions from the city of Buffalo, the town of Hamburg, N.Y., and Toronto Alderman Anthony O'Donohue, all of which called for a moratorium on drilling.

Harold Baumler, counsel for Hamburg, said the greatest danger posed by drilling "is not an oil spill such as recently occurred in California but an accidental leak of salt brine".

He said experts have warned that a spill of salt brine from an oil well "would be one of the greatest natural catastrophes that could strike the Great Lakes". Within 48 hours of a major spill all of Lake Erie would be polluted with salt.

"If enough salt water got into the lake it would kill every fresh-water fish and plant."

I am sure that the minister has jurisdiction in this area and I hope he will take immediate action to call an immediate moratorium on oil drilling in Lake Ontario and Lake Erie.

I cannot do better than to quote from the main speech by the member from our party who led off the debate. He said:

(1) There are no uniform water quality standards, nor a set of various plans to meet specific situations. This means that in areas of Canada where public opinion is not well organized, pollution control agencies will follow the path of least resistance and allow industry and hesitant municipalities to dictate policy.

(2) The bill will allow industry to pay a fee for the right to pollute. The people of Canada want clean water, not money.

(3) Many municipalities do not have the finances to make a serious effort at pollution control. The government's vague promises about loans are not sufficient if Canada is really going on a clean up campaign.

(4) There is little scope for the influence of citizens' groups and popular opinion generally to affect the plans of local pollution control agencies. Industry will maintain powerful influence and this should be balanced by the organization of public committees.

May I say in conclusion that my reading of this bill leads me to the belief that all we have really is a new administrative framework for overcoming federal-provincial conflicts, and that we have not taken a hard look and come forth with solutions to meet the problem of pollution. We have to help municipalities financially, tighten regulations applying to industry, set national standards and, above all, we have to have federal leadership in the enforcement of this act.

I look forward to having the minister before the committee to resolve some of these problems and come forth with solutions which will make Canadians proud of their clean air, clean water and clean environment.

Hon. W. G. Dinsdale (Brandon-Souris): Mr. Speaker, at this stage of the debate, it has been made crystal clear by the various members who have contributed to the discussion that there are great inadequacies in Bill C-144. I will not be repetitious at all in the contribution I want to make because I think that the inadequacies and deficiencies have been clearly defined. As you are well aware, the members of this group have felt so seriously about the matter that we endeavoured to have the bill referred back to the government, so that the obvious inadequacies and inefficiencies could be eliminated. It was because there have been such long delays in moving to deal in forthright terms with the problems of renewable resource management that we felt the most strenuous action available in this House should be taken. It is not for me to judge why the government has failed to come to grips with the vital aspects of pollution in our environment.

However, there is a new report that has become public which indicates that perhaps the explanation is that the government is not fully aware of the nature of the problem. The Minister of Fisheries and Forestry, the Hon. Jack Davis, speaking yesterday to the North Vancouver Chamber of Commerce—and I am reading from the press despatch—said that he does not subscribe to alarmist talk about pollution. Quoting directly from the speech, I read:

• (12:40 p.m.)

"I don't believe all that I read about dying lakes and sickening seas. Most of it is poppycock . . . written by novices who are reaching for headlines . . . "

Mr. Davis said there are pollution problems in Canada "but the ecological situation is still basically under control."

The minister called for a national water quality code, with regional guidelines drawn to meet regional needs.

In this statement, delivered as recently as yesterday, we have the reason for the half-hearted, half-baked approach to the problem of dealing with the control of water pollution outlined in the bill that is before us.

As I indicated in my opening remarks, Mr. Speaker, I am not going to repeat the problems in the legislation that have been outlined by earlier speakers in this debate. We shall have an opportunity to deal with those in some considerable depth when the legislation finally comes before the committee. But in the light of the statement made by the Minister of Fisheries, a minister who has basic responsibility in the field of our renewable resources, it is important to underline that the legislation will in no way deal with the fundamental problem that he has outlined, the necessity of establishing a national water quality code. I have looked carefully through the legislation and I see no provision in it at all dealing with this major problem that was referred to by the Minister of Fisheries.

My purpose in speaking today is to refresh the memory of the minister responsible for conducting this legislation through the House, the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Mr. Greene). In his statement introducing the legislation, he delivered a speech that was typical of the flowery Irish oratory to which we have become accustomed. Throughout his career in the House of Commons, the hon. gentleman has established himself as a Lincolnesque Irish sort of orator, who can best be described in the well-known phrase, "He has kissed the Blarney Stone." I do not think that kissing the Blarney Stone is the sort of solution that is required in dealing with the problems of pollution of our rivers. I sit right across the floor from the hon. gentleman, and I have known him from the days when he served in the Royal Canadian Air Force. He and I received those foreign medals that were referred to by the Secretary of State (Mr. Pelletier) the other day and we could make a good night-fighter crew—

Mr. Blair: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker, I am sure the hon. member would not wish to have the record misstate the facts. It has been made clear that the medals he and other gallant people have received will never be treated as foreign medals.

Mr. Dinsdale: Mr. Speaker, I was merely quoting the statement of the Secretary of State, within whose department I understand this matter is being considered, and he did use the phrase "foreign medals", including those that were awarded for service in World War II. As I was saying, the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources was a navigator and I was a pilot, so we could form a very good night-fighter crew. Maybe we are dealing in the dark with respect to the present legislation, and perhaps I can throw some light on the matter.

We should recall the public discussion and consideration of this subject that has taken place over the last 20 years. These discussions have brought us to the position where everybody is concerned. I am not just referring to novices interested in alarmist talk, but I include the most responsible people in the field of renewable resource conservation and development, those who have been in the vanguard in warning us, we are reaching the crisis point because of our failure to deal adequately with the problem not only in Canada but more particularly south of the border in the United States of America. I repeat that everybody is concerned.

There is another old Irish saying that the sweetest memories of life are the recollections of things forgotten. Obviously, the minister has forgotten much of what has transpired in the past, or has not been aware of it. Certainly, this would apply to the Minister of Fisheries in the light of what he said yesterday.

The Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources has stated that the decade of the 70's will be known as the pollution decade when at long last governments not only in this country but in other countries will come to grips with this critical problem. Actually, I think it was the decade of the 60's when governments and responsible public leaders became deeply concerned over the dangerous trends that were becoming all too obvious in the area of our natural resources.

The United States talked frequently about the necessity of conserving resources for the future. A private organization under that name emerged, with the intent of alerting governmental officials to the growing problem. The Secretary of the Interior under the former Democratic government, in fact under several Democratic governments, the Hon. Stuart Udall, wrote a very significant book that received considerable attention in the early 60's. Its title was "The Quiet Crisis," the crisis that had come upon us almost in the night as it were, and he was no novice who was trying to grab newspaper headlines. He was a man knowledgeable in the field, who had the responsibility of leading the fight for better conservation measures in the great republic to the south of us.

In Canada the study of the problems of renewable resources focussed around the Resources for Tomorrow Conference held in 1961, and because of the body of information brought together at that conference it was expected that remedial action would be forthcoming within a few years. We have waited until 1970 and, as hon. members have indicated, there is not much of substance provided in the bill now before us.

The hon. member for Burnaby-Seymour (Mr. Perrault) indicated that nothing had been done in past years. Obviously, he has not read the three volume report that came out of the Resources for Tomorrow Conference. It is because of this that I want to review briefly the record of the past two decades.

Water Resources

We must give credit to the government of Ontario for early initiative in this field. It was because of that province's concern over what was happening to its natural environment that pressure was put on Ottawa for federal assistance in the late 40's and early 50's. Because of this pressure, ad hoc arrangements were made whereby Ottawa assisted with specific projects. There was some realization that this was quite inadequate, and in 1953 the Canada Water Conservation Assistance Act was passed, which remained on the statute books of Canada and was not used to any great extent really until the latter 50's and the early 60's. This lack of use resulted from a general lack of awareness on the part of the general public to the crisis that was upon us. However, between 1957 and 1963 several major water conservation projects were undertaken which involved the direct participation of the government of Canada. I could refer to the greater Metro Toronto scheme, the Winnipeg floodway and water control project, the South Saskatchewan dam and the Passamaquody project in the maritimes as well as other similar projects in other parts of Canada. This was the first real attempt at federal government leadership in this field.

It was soon realized that the Canada Water Conservation Assistance Act was quite inadequate because it placed the initiative on the provincial government in getting projects started. It had been felt that direct participation by Ottawa to the extent of 37½ per cent of the total cost of the projects would be sufficient incentive. We are fully aware that the management, conservation and development of our renewable resources is going to be an expensive proposition. However, in view of the remaining financial obligations, even the 37½ per cent was not sufficient to arouse provincial governments, who have the direct responsibility in this area, to take the necessary action. This experience of course arises from the fact that there is a fundamental jurisdictional problem, and it was for that reason the government of Canada, seizing the leadership responsibility which must inevitably devolve upon them, called the Resources for Tomorrow Conference in 1961.

The provinces own the renewable resources. Water moves from one province to another. There is interprovincial jurisdictional division. There are international complications that must be dealt with. It is obvious that the federal government had an obligation to provide encouragement and leadership in the resource development field, within the constitutional framework of course.

Fundamentally it was realized, because of the unhappy experience with the Canada Water Conservation Assistance Act, there must be some federal financial assistance on a guaranteed basis, on the basis of a specific formula underpinning the scheme.

Notwithstanding the recommendations of the Resources for Tomorrow Conference, as has been pointed out by several hon. members in this debate, the basic ingredient of federal leadership in the wise management of our renewable resources, including water, is lacking. There is no provision whatsoever for financial participation. Instead, I would say this is a retrograde step and we are going back to the laissez-faireism and ad hocism, if I may use that phrase, that existed before the Canada Water Conservation Assistance Act was passed.

The bill and preliminary publicity material issued in connection with it are full of "it is expected" and "we hope". There is no specific terminology to indicate that the government of Canada has decided to take a firm lead in this matter. It is designed to deal with the area of jurisdictional dispute. However, this area has already been adequately dealt with by the Resource Ministers' Council, which is very seldom referred to these days but does exist with a secretariat located in the city of Montreal for the precise purpose of overcoming the areas of jurisdictional dispute.

The Resource Ministers' Council has done excellent work, notwithstanding the relative neglect by the Liberal administration since they returned to power in 1963. It has reviewed all the cost-sharing agreements; it has collected all the basic data concerning Canada's water resources; it sponsored the Pollution of Our Environment Conference in the fall of 1966 and it has encouraged Canada's participation in the hydrological decade which is from 1965 to 1974.

It is not necessary, Mr. Speaker, to bring forward a piece of legislation now, which, in pious terms reinforced by Irish oratory, hopes to deal with the problem of jurisdictional division in the field of resource management. We have the machinery; what we need now is federal leadership in the renewable resource field.

In his speech the minister emphasized, and I must give him credit for this, that he recognized that the greatest source of inadequacy was the failure of the government to put its money where its mouth is. There is no provision for financial support and I can assure him, on the basis of the brief summary I have made here, that if there is no promise of financial support from the federal level of government then there will be no action on the part of the provincial governments. They are concerned, they are greatly exercised on the matter, but the federal government has been withdrawing its financial support from so many areas of joint participation and co-operative federalism that I am sure it will be almost impossible, as it has been over the previous two decades, to get them to take leadership in the field. The leadership responsibility lies solely and entirely with the federal government. This was demonstrated beyond the shadow of a doubt at the Resources for Tomorrow Conference, Mr. Speaker, and this is the point I emphasize in bringing my remarks to a close.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Béchard): It being one o'clock, I do now leave the chair to resume same at two o'clock.

At one o'clock the House took recess.

AFTER RECESS

The House resumed at 2 p.m.

Mr. P. V. Noble (Grey-Simcoe): Mr. Speaker, I believe a water act could be one of the most important pieces of legislation to be put on the statute books of this nation. There will not be a dissenting voice in this House or in the country in respect of setting up an adequate water policy. However, there will be much resentment if this Bill C-144 is not amended so that it is meaningful and effective. In a few words, it lacks teeth, strength and direction.

Water pollution should be an offence in any part of the country by any person or company, and effective deterrent measures should be prescribed in the bill. Financial support to the provinces should be specified where joint programs can be arranged; and these should be uniform. In fact, our amendment pretty well covers this field and should be accepted. If we can proceed from there without undue delay some relief from the serious pollution situation might be forthcoming.

Time is of the essence and this has been forcibly brought home to us when we realize that DDT now pollutes all waters. It has been found in the penguins of the Antarctic and the polar bears of the Arctic. The Great Lakes are polluted with DDT to a point where the Cohoe salmon caught in Lake Huron were condemned for food because they contained DDT beyond the tolerance of the human body. The pollution in some areas of the Great Lakes such as Lake Erie has reached a point where some species of fish have been eliminated.

Much of the pollution, Mr. Speaker, in the Great Lakes could be corrected by the installation of sewage disposal plants in some of the cities. The city of Owen Sound in my constituency is one of those municipalities that values and enjoys a clean environment and is making use of such a plant. The Georgian Bay area, which constitutes much of my constituency, enjoys comparatively clean water when one thinks of the conditions in Lake Erie. We do not have large cities dumping raw sewage into the lakes in our area and our municipalities are progressively accepting and using sewage disposal systems.

The extreme pollution in Lake Erie is the result of run-off from the tobacco producing areas where large amounts of DDT are used, along with nitrates and phosphates which are used in fertilizers on all farm lands. Added to this, there is the sewage from several large cities on the United States side of the lake. The result is massive mats of algae covering as much as 800 square miles and fouling most of the beaches of Lake Erie. These conditions are not conducive to the production of fish or clean water. Georgian Bay is not plagued with the growth of algae. However, it is not free of DDT, as we have over 3,000 acres of orchards bordering the south shore which use pesticides in their operations. The residues no doubt find their way to our water. We have other pollution, but to a minor degree compared to the country-wide picture.

Water is undoubtedly the most important of the four renewable natural resources because the other three namely, soil, forests, fish and wildlife, are dependant on it; but all four are inter-related. For example, forests and good farming practices prevent the carrying away of the topsoil which silts into the lakes and reservoirs. It is, therefore, obvious that conservation work in all its phases should be co-ordinated, and the unit in which it can best be co-ordinated is the river valley. At this point the people are closest to their river. They know its vicissitudes best and, helped by some technical advice and financial assistance, they are the ones best able to ensure that the water in its fresh water lakes is used to the best advantage for all.

We in the Georgian Bay area have a beautiful country which attracts tourists by the thousands both winter and summer. For many years now we have come to the realization of the value of clean air and pure water. Our people began conservation projects of various kind with a view to preserving these great assets. We were given encouragement and financial support by a provincial Conservative government and a federal Conservative government to the tune of 37½ per cent each. The result was the establishment of two authorities, the Sauble Valley Authority and the North Grey Conservation Authority. These authorities are extremely active and have completed many conservation projects. We feel their accomplishments have made our area a virtual tourists' paradise. All water can be improved and no doubt Georgian Bay and Lake Huron are no exception. I know our people will co-operate in any way possible, but they will need direction and financial assistance.

Mr. Speaker, DDT presents this nation with the biggest threat to our health as it is the most powerful of the water pollutants and is reputed to be killing the vegetable plankton in our lakes and in the sea, the source of 80 per cent of man's oxygen supply. Some scientists estimate the oxygen supply contained by the sea will last only 40 more years at the present rate of wastage. It has been authentically stated that since creation every drop of water has been used by someone at some time. There is no such thing as pure water. It has all gone through the normal natural cycling process. It is an accepted fact that since the turn of the century the population explosion and the industrial revolution have upset the normal recycling process..

As long as things were found in nature, bacterial action could take care of them. Man has developed thousands of compounds which are not found in nature and these cannot be broken down through natural action. In many parts of this continent as well as in Europe people are living in oxygen-deficient atmosphere. More oxygen is being used than is being replaced and we continue to destroy the oxygen-producing parts of nature.

Hydro-carbon pesticides are claimed by scientists to be similar to atomic wastes. DDT is 50 per cent effective after 15 to 20 years of exposure. Of the billions of pounds of DDT used in the last 20 years, 90 per cent is still active. If any one of us were sold as food we would be labelled unfit for human consumption because of the pesticide levels in our bodies.

It is now evident we have been careless about our environment, and the position in which we have placed ourselves is almost as catastrophic as the migration of the lemming into the sea to destroy themselves.

We may ask what is being done about present supplies of DDT which are to be disposed of. Are people being warned not to pour it down the drain or dispose of it in some other way which would make a further contribution to the problem which exists? In Owen Sound we have alerted our people by radio to bring any DDT to be disposed of to a central collecting point. This is an area in which I feel the federal government has an immediate responsibility. Advice should be given to all the provinces as to what is the proper and safe method for the disposal of DDT. I would suggest that if unused stocks were exposed to a high degree of heat in a smelter the harmful effect would be neutralized. There may be other methods which would be just as effective.

I pay tribute to the minister for the finely polished phrases he used in presenting Bill C-144. He gave the impression that this legislation would cure all our water ills, but this is not so. In plain words, this bill lacks guts and leadership and contains no commitment regarding financial assistance. If passed in its present form Bill C-144 will nullify the federal assistance of 37½ per cent now provided in the statutes and would foist all financial responsibilities on to the provinces. Nevertheless, the government would hope to bask in the sunshine of popularity for its water policy but in reality the bill in its present form is only another exercise of the government's austerity program.

Mr. F. J. Bigg (Pembina): Mr. Speaker, the water bill now before the House is perhaps the most important piece of legislation we have tackled in 20 years. This is a sweeping statement, but facts are available to prove it.

The explosion of an atom bomb is something which happens in a moment; we can all see the mushroom cloud and we all know its devastating effect. Pollution, on the other hand, is something which is creeping up on us day by day. It is creeping up at an increasing speed. I do not think that even those who appear to be exaggerating realize the terrible danger which confronts the whole human race, the whole animal kingdom and even, perhaps, the trees and the grasses of the planet on which we live.

This water bill at least opens up the subject. That is about all it does. I shall not spend much time criticizing the bill itself because there is nothing in it which comes to grips with the real problem. The real problem is the destruction of the water resources of the planet and I suggest we are not thinking big enough, if hon. members will pardon the pun, when we try to tackle it. It is an international problem of immense proportions. I understand the nations of the world intend to hold an international conference on water pollution in 1971. That is just a year and a half too late.

We have no need to be modest about water in Canada. We are one of the nations which is still blessed with vast reserves of pure water. But we are going about destroying this great resource at an alarming rate. The old excuse is trotted out that we do not have the money to control pollution. I shall not run down the list of directions in which we have been wasting money. The number is legion. I maintain that money does not need to be an obstacle in this case. If we attack this danger with half the enthusiasm with which we attack lesser matters, such as putting out new medals or building art centres, we should get to the root of it.

The root of this menace is international, and its solution lies through international co-operation. There is no sense talking about international co-operation unless we are first willing to set our own house in order. We are destroying Canada's lakes and rivers. Not only that, but we are destroying the land which surrounds these water resources. I do not think we can entirely separate one form of pollution from the other because if we pollute the land in Canada with insecticides and detergents it is obvious that the rain will wash this material into our rivers which, in turn, will carry it to the lakes and to the seas.

The first thing to do to solve the problem is immediately to outlaw pollution of our streams, rivers and lakes. I do not think there is any constitutional problem involved, and not only can it be done but, if we are to survive, it must be done. As I said before, Canada has what is probably the greatest fresh water supply in the world, and consequently it is our duty to conserve it.

If we take quick action that is successful, then we might even have the answer to the problem of finances. After all, we have a resource that is saleable. If we plan properly and do not give away our water to some other country in perpetuity—in other words, if we sell it by the gallon rather than give concessions—then we can finance the whole deal.

In this regard we cannot escape our duty by passing the blame on to the provinces. Nor can we expect the provinces to handle the prevention of pollution piecemeal because it is too big a job for them to tackle. I started by saying that this problem is an international one that affects all mankind. However, we cannot wait for all mankind to become alerted to the danger. Those who have no fresh water left are too late to solve the problem, but we are not.

I suggest as a fair and concrete proposal that the federal government call now a conference with the provinces to inform the provinces what the federal government is going to do and the standards it is going to insist upon to conserve our fresh, pure water, not in 1971 or 1981 but as of January 1970. I can assure the government that it would receive no opposition from us if this were done.

In light of the speeches so far in this debate, it seems to me that all the prodding is coming from members on this side of the House. I am very disappointed that my colleagues on the other side of the House are not rising to their feet to flay their own government for the inadequacy of this bill. I know there are many talented members on that side, and I should like them to tell us their ideas with regard to taking effective steps not only to protect the water of Canada and North America but the water resources on this planet.

If this sort of thinking is too big for them, then let them resign their seats and abdicate their responsibilities. They have abdicated practically everything else already; the only thing remaining is for them to move out. I suggest there is a vacuum in this respect that must be filled; and if hon. members opposite have not thought about it till now, then it is time they did.

If hon. members do their homework, they will discover a great deal of thought has already been given to this subject. A magnificent article, which arrived in the mails yesterday, has been written outlining the horrors of pollution. Although it does not propose many answers for dealing with it, the answers are fairly obvious.

The first action we must take is immediate and effective steps to stop pollution now. In this regard we must give leadership. Let us not wait for Peru to tell us what to do; let us tell them what to do. Let us tell the great American republic to the south, which is getting a lot of criticism these days in every other regard, that they are failing in their international obligations.

What are we doing to meet our obligations? I think the republic to the south of us, which has the money, is willing to buy fresh water if we have a sensible plan for supplying it. I suggest in this way we will be able to finance the very measures that I am suggesting.

A lot of research has been done on which, as yet, no action has been taken. However, we need a great deal more research. Why not give our young men an opportunity to study water control and proper methods of conservation? In order to do this we need more money devoted to research in this country. We require additional scholarships at Canadian universities. If we have no diplomas in water control, then let us beg our universities to open up schools to teach our young people about water and water conservation.

The problem of pollution is so great that I suggest we require hundreds of trained people to tackle it. Having trained our young men, let us give them something to do. We have the water resources and the need to preserve them; we have young men of ability and brains, with sufficient drive to take on this responsibility. What they are expecting from us is leadership. These young men want to cut their hair and go back to work. They do not want to loaf around as they think we do here. But they are fed up with the lack of leadership being shown by the government, and so am I. I could not go down to Yorkville and tell these young men that they are wrong and that we are right, because in this respect I think we are wrong.

It is not the responsibility of the provinces to show leadership in this field, but it is their responsibility to co-operate with the federal government in devising a national plan of water conservation which is acceptable to the provinces. Certainly, we cannot shift the financial responsibilities to the provinces and municipalities, which are already carrying a back breaking burden of debt. Although we have not given leadership in fields like housing, intercity transportation, and things like that, let us take responsibility here. The field is wide open.

As I have said, there are no constitutional hurdles in fighting pollution. The main hurdle is raising the money. If we first have a sensible plan to deal with pollution, then I suggest the very water resources that we wish to save and conserve will foot the bill for the job that we have to do. Water is probably the most important national resource that we have next to men; and we have the manpower. Let us put our young people to work helping to clean up our streams and stop further pollution. If this is done the government will find it will receive more co-operation than it dreamt was possible.

This is not a partisan matter but something in which every member of the House should be vitally interested. It is also something that every department of government should concern itself with. It has been said by several members who preceded me that the Department of Fisheries and Forestry has a sufficiently wide interest in the subject to police anti-pollution laws without in any way running into constitutional difficulties. To claim that such difficulties would exist is to drag in a red herring; and red herrings are a specialty of the fisheries department. So, let hon. members stop that kind of talk.

Unemployment in Canada is rising, 6 per cent of the national labour force being now unemployed. Let us put to work about 3 per cent of the labour force to deal with water conservation. This would be a direct answer to the unemployment problem and is the kind of thing that should be done. This would be a national investment, though it would take courage to follow such a course.

I do not pretend to be some sort of Jeremiah standing alone in the wilderness. I am reinforced in my views by some words of the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau), and I think they should be on the record. He said:

• (2:30 p.m.)

> We all know how easy it is to dissipate our natural heritage by a short sighted attitude towards industrial and commercial development. In recent years many members of the public, certain industries, and all levels of government have become more conscious of the dangers of resource mismanagement and pollution.

So, it is known by the Prime Minister, and I presume by every member of his cabinet, what pollution will eventually do. This should be known by every member of this House. If it is not hon. members need do nothing more than read this supplement on pollution published by McMaster University, which I am sure all members received in the mail. I do not think it exaggerates the situation. I think it understates the facts.

After reading this publication I was reminded of something I first read many years ago. I went down to the table of the House of Commons and drew a book in which this whole situation is very vividly described. I refer to the Holy Bible, and particularly the book of Revelation. That is worth reading. There is a reference to God pouring out his wrath. There is a pretty accurate description of air, land and water pollution in the book of Revelation. If that book has any validity in this day and age, then we should know that this pollution will end civilization unless we smarten up and do something about it.

This is the same old challenge and we still blame money or the lack of it for the present situation. The book challenges us to follow the suggestions contained in it. Are we unselfish enough to take the bull by the horns and master it? Are we willing enough to dig down deep enough in our pockets and pay the taxes necessary to at least get this plan on the road? Are we brave enough to talk turkey to the provinces, having set our own house here in order, and brave enough to tackle this problem on an international basis? If the world wants fresh water we have it, but we expect international co-operation, particularly from our great neighbour to the south and the other great nations of the world. Fresh water is not the only thing Canada possesses. If we are going to pollute our oceans with DDT and oil slicks as a result of digging into the bowels of the earth below sea level, allowing wildcat oil wells to spew their venom, as I call it, into the ocean, killing all the fish, then co-operation is of a great significance.

It has been pointed out by a man with a great deal more scientific knowledge than I have that life on earth lives on a very thin but evenly balanced rhythm. When you interfere with that rhythm by polluting the air and water you upset the whole system. It might well be that the book of Revelation is much closer to what is going to happen to us in a very few years than one might think, unless one takes note of those things told us not only in the Good Book but by our own well-trained and well-qualified scientists.

Most of the articles I read in this paper have been backed up by men with doctorates in biology, chemistry and engineering. These are men we have trained under our free educational system. They warn us of the difficulties we face. What is the point of sending these people to university and on post-graduate courses when we completely ignore the warnings they bring to our doors?

There has been a great campaign throughout the country in the press and over the radio about what I would refer to as some of the small aspects of this matter. It has been suggested we are poisoning our song birds. The situation is much more serious than that. I believe these people when they say we are not only poisoning our song birds but poisoning ourselves by the very food we eat from the Safeway stores and the corner grocers. These foods contain a great deal more pollution than any man would willingly take if he could see the amount of poison he is taking into his system three times a day.

The same people who are complaining about the loss of our song birds like to point to certain industries, like the E. B. Eddy Company, and say they are poisoning us with refuse. However, those people refuse to stop using the dangerous commodities which they put down their sinks every day and which poison our rivers and eventually our oceans. They should stop waving this flag of horror and pointing to the other fellow. They should ask themselves what they are going to do in their own homes and what the government is going to do with the taxpayer's dollars to stop this enemy of mankind before it stops us.

I have only one main criticism of this bill and that is it just contains a pious hope. It does not do anything significant. It does set guideposts. That is all very well, but the guideposts have been there for at least 2,000 years. We have been warned about what is going to happen if we abuse the soil, air and water which God gave us free and unpolluted. It is not good enough to put up a flag and say we believe in non-pollution or in pure water unless we give strong leadership.

I do not agree with the suggestion that because we built these factories we cannot stop them from polluting the air. At least we can see that no more factories are built without proper cess pools, smoke stacks and electric machinery for taking these poisons out of the air, water and waste products before they are dumped into our rivers or left on the hillsides to be washed down at a later date.

In order to appreciate the amount of pollution taking place one need only take a trip through the Crowsnest Pass. Only 50 years ago it was one of the most beautiful mountain areas in the world, equal to the Alps. If you travel there today you will see that it is blackened like the Ruhr Valley. You might think you were in Birmingham, England on a foggy day. You cannot see the sun for the smoke. All the rivers have been polluted from the mines and the fish in the creeks are dead. The trees on the mountainside are dying and turning brown because of the polluted air.

We have done this and I think we are going to continue to do it unless we solve this problem before 1971. One university professor suggested that we could not get around to doing anything significant about this problem until 1981. One of the articles I read contained the statement that, because of the increasing tempo of pollution, we may not have ten years of reasonable life left on this planet unless we do something about it.

I am told that the DDT we are putting into the ocean today has already made serious inroads on the existence of plankton. As most of you know, this is the microscopic green plant life floating around in the ocean. It is responsible for renewing the oxygen we breathe. As we cover more and more square miles of our planet with concrete this process of renewing the oxygen is being left almost entirely to our oceans. If we continue to destroy our forests by covering the surface of the land with concrete buildings, we will double the burden of the plankton of the ocean. We are already wearing down the ability of the plankton of the ocean to reproduce that green material which in turn produces food for the fish and oxygen to replenish the air we breathe.

Some scientists say we may not have ten years left at the present rate of pollution. Last week I drove through Pittsburgh. About five miles out of the city the air was not fit for human beings to breathe. I wondered that my automobile operator could even see the road through the smoke, sulphur and fumes. This was a foggy, overcast day and all the poisons going into the air were trapped between the cloud banks and the earth. We were coughing and sputtering and we had to turn on the headlights at two in the afternoon. It was difficult to see the road. This is what we are doing to our atmosphere.

This pollution in the atmosphere is going into our plants. We are putting these poisons into our sewers and eventually into our oceans. I thoroughly approve of the idea of attacking the pollution problem, but this bill represents only a bit of flag waving. At the present time a non-partisan and non-political attitude is required. This is a problem in respect of which every province of the country will have to co-operate and one in respect of which the Prime Minister will have to give leadership. This is not a situation in which we should find it necessary to sit here and make fun of the Prime Minister. The bill may have to be strengthened, completely revised and brought up to present standards. It is not necessary that we should wait until we have all the knowledge and information available. Let us use the information and knowledge we do have, and use the power we have, to stop pollution and to bring the provinces together to work on this problem immediately. If we cannot obtain agreement from the factory owners and shareholders, then we will have to be tough and tell them they will no longer be in business unless proper action is taken.

I am one of the strongest free enterprisers you are ever likely to meet, but I do not believe free enterprise should be permitted to destroy the air I breathe and the water I drink. The air and the water which support the trees, the game and the marine life in the provinces of Canada are very vital to their survival. It would be a very short-sighted premier of a province who would not co-operate with the minister in respect of this water bill if it were a bill which would offer a real solution. He would find he would be very popular for having given this kind of leadership. I, for one, would say "Good luck, Mr. Minister". If he can make this bill work I will be one of the first to stand up and give him the proper kudos. However, I want to make sure that he does not take a wooden attitude toward Pollution Control. I want him to convince his colleagues in the cabinet that this bill is far from being adequate in its present form.

We should welcome aid from every source. We should welcome every ounce of co-operation in order to prevent a national and international disaster. If we think big enough we may well be able to do this. We still have the water resources here. The task involved would not be an impossible one but would require a good deal of courage in the initial stages. The very factories and industries which may have to be disciplined, and perhaps taxed, in order to make this scheme work would thank the government in the end because they would then have a chance of being around on this planet for another 100 years or so. Many people are thinking about this. I like to think some of them are here. I do not even know who put out this pamphlet to which I referred because I was so busy reading the suggestions and some of the answers contained in it. A suggestion has been made that we should have a new bill or revamp the present one in order to put some teeth in it. We should not wait for someone else to do this. It is further suggested that we should present the firms with a plan to prevent further pollution of any lakes, rivers or other water supply source.

I believe high priority should be given to this matter. I believe we should spend a significant amount of money on pollution control measures. It may be necessary to set up a special branch in the department for this purpose. I know in the great United States of America they are seriously worried about the water problem. In the next 25 years they will have to supply water to great cities like New York and Chicago. With proper planning, I believe we could supply that water. If the plan were well worked out I believe we could sell that water on a gallonage basis and not seriously lessen the supply of water in this country. I think we could sell the United States a great deal more water than they are getting at the present time. I think we could do this at reasonable prices and it would be a source of income. Some of this income could be used to train people to take more of an interest in this subject. This income would also help pay for some of the dams and hydro systems which are necessary for the transportation of this water from one part of the country to the other.

I think if we use our natural resources properly we will also have more water for our power network. Here again, cheaper power would mean that our industries might be able to afford to contribute more money to help pay for the over-all plan. The Prime Minister has assured us of his direct interest in this matter. The minister made a very fine speech in which he said what a wonderful thing it would be if we had lots of fresh water and could give this blessing to the rest of the world as well. I think we should get on with the job and stop hiding behind the excuse of no money, no co-operation or the problem of the constitution. We should send this bill to a committee composed of members who could keep an open mind about it. We should take the suggestions which I know will be made by members of the committee and then with courage, imagination and grit put this plan into effect. The type of popularity the minister and Parliament will end up with in a very few years will be well worth while, and probably the industries and the taxpayers will welcome the amount of dollars appropriated in the next budget to handle this problem in an efficient manner.

Mr. J.-A. Mongrain (Trois-Rivières): Mr. Speaker, I very seldom refuse a challenge. The hon. member for Pembina (Mr. Bigg) challenged us on this side of the House to stand up and speak up. I should like to outline a few observations I made while he was speaking. I like to listen to the hon. member for Pembina. He is always colourful and always has some purpose in his remarks. What struck me, Mr. Speaker, was that he did not look at you for two minutes during his speech. He watched his own colleagues. He turned around and, noticing there were only two or three members on the Conservative side, insisted on watching them during the whole of the speech in an effort to convince them that this is a very good bill and that they should be here to support the government at this time rather than somewhere else.

The hon. member challenged a member on the government side to get up and speak out. At the same time he said what we need is action and leadership, not talk, not discussion, not haggling and all this kind of thing. I can tell the hon. member that we have studied the problem. We have had our own ad hoc committees. We have discussed the matter with our ministers and their officials. We know what we are doing. We also think we need action now and not talk. We know the bill will be sent to the appropriate committee where we will have another opportunity to amend it. That is why we refuse to stand up here and talk for nothing. This would only contribute to wasting the time of the House.

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker, to meet the challenge put to us by a member of the opposition, I will merely lend my voice to the Canadian municipalities which are also greatly concerned about the problem of water and air pollution. However, because certain provinces refuse for various reasons to co-operate adequately with the federal government, the means to fight pollution are denied to them.

It is not necessary to review the whole history of water and air pollution to conclude that we have now reached a critical point. This is a national, a provincial and a municipal problem which this bill attempts to remedy. But before undertaking anything the municipalities, the provinces, the federal government and the neighbouring countries should reach an agreement. The problem of pollution may indeed concern more than one country.

This is an urgent problem and it seems to us that the time has come to act rather than to indulge in endless discussions and studies.

• (2:50 p.m.)

In the many letters I receive, people often write about this problem because my riding is affected by pollution. I am talking about central Quebec, one of Canada's most attractive regions; my friends will not resent these remarks because they too are proud of their constituency. Since we also have our problems, people write to me asking why the government has failed to take the necessary steps.

The reason is that the federal government is limited in its action as a result of some futile discussions on the distribution of powers. The difficulty does exist, but it should not be given priority over another, much more serious problem involving the health of an entire nation, of the whole world.

Mr. Speaker, I have in hand a letter which I shall not quote in full and this for two reasons: First, because the remarks are not all fair and then, because it is obvious that the author is not aware of how the governments of his province, his municipality and his country work. But I think that this letter is an alarm call. Therefore, the government should take concrete action rather than getting lost in endless discussions.

Here is an excerpt from that letter:

Why don't the governments do something—

This is an alarming alternative: either we wake up around the year 2000 in a world where mankind is poisoned through water and air or in a world in which it is still good to live. I come back to the quotation:

Why don't the governments do something besides setting up royal commissions?

Instead of doing that, they merely discuss things in the house. And I replied to my correspondent that it was precisely on account of those conflicts of jurisdiction and party politics that nothing was being done.

The letter says further, and I quote:

What are they waiting for to make available to the automobile manufacturers the plans (which exist) for a hydraulic motor—?

I must say this is something new to me, which goes to show that the relationship between a member of parliament and his electors can be useful to him from time to time.

What are they waiting for to force, in the public interest on an international scale, all this country's industries to reduce pollution through the use of filters that would precisely eliminate most of the pollutants?

The writer of this letter may not know that this is about to be done and that we would have made much more progress without the conflicts of jurisdiction.

The letter says further on:

What are they waiting for to prohibit, again in the public interest, the use of detergents "re-enforced" with enzymes which keep on fighting against everything even once in our waters?

What can the U.N. do—?

Why are they still concerned about frontiers when pollution does not care a rap about it and attacks our whole planet without discrimination as to colour—?

As you can see my correspondent simplifies the problem. He is probably a candid innocent sould but who at last saw with his own eyes this urgent problem.

I continue to quote:

Why is the government always or nearly always late as far as its legislation is concerned—?

The reason of these delays is precisely that too many governments spend their time quarrelling with each other rather than achieving practical results. However, I must make a concession to my friends of the opposition. I said a while ago that they give us the impression that they want to protract the debate, but some of them are making positive interventions. I hope that they will continue to do so during the sittings of the parliamentary committee where the final touch will be given to this bill.

I continue quoting the letter:

Why do some people kill with "pleasure, indifference and pride" animals which do not harm anybody and which, on the contrary, destroy some of the pollutants, thus contributing to the survival of life on earth?

What can we do?

The writer speaks of bombs. He adds and I quote:

Is the status of a nation more important than the survival of the human species (4 billion people in the year 2000)?

He obviously forgets that Canada cannot solve the problems of all other countries, not even those of all the provinces in Canada without the agreement of these provinces.

Is it impossible for a supposedly rich country such as Canada to help efficiently two thirds of the population who—?

are treatened to be poisoned to death.

This letter appears like the alarm call now raised by the Canadian population as a result of the educational campaigns that were conducted in the country by magazines such as the one that was mentioned before by my friend and of certain studies initiated by technicians and scientists. The time has come for the Canadian people to call for better understanding between provincial governments, and better co-operation with the municipal authorities so that at every level of government everyone might be able to bring, as soon as possible its own contribution, for the problem is urgent indeed. It is all very well to complain because some people are starving or killing each other for reasons beyond our understanding but we had better stop our idle talk and take effective steps in order to convince the other governments that they ought to work in harmony with us so as to answer this pressing problem which threatens to annihilate humanity as a whole.

The present bill is a first step, and a very important one, in the right direction since it encourages peace and understanding between the provinces. The municipalities affected by pollution should also have their say and the provincial governments should stop considering the representatives of the municipal administrations as poor relatives or simpletons.

Mr. André Fortin (Lotbinière): Mr. Speaker, first of all, I wish to make it clear that I am rising on a point of order, not to express my views on the bill.

I rise on a point of order and I want to draw the attention of the House to line 22 of the preamble of Bill C-144.

In order to explain my point of order, may I read in part the preamble of the bill. I quote:

[English]

And Whereas the Parliament of Canada is desirous that, in addition, comprehensive programs be undertaken by the Government of Canada and by the Government of Canada in cooperation with provincial governments,

• (3:00 p.m.)

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker, the French text reads as follows:

Et considérant que le Parlement du Canada souhaite, en outre, que des programmes d'ensemble soient entrepris par le gouvernement du Canada agissant seul ou en collaboration avec les gouvernements provinciaux...

My point of order is the following: in my humble opinion, the use of the particle "and" in the English text and the particle "ou" (or) in the French text gives more power to the minister in one case, and that raises a problem with regard creates some to the interpretation of the powers granted.

Mr. Speaker, people might say that the powers conferred under a bill do not derive from the preamble; nevertheless, the fact remains that the bill itself follows from the preamble and that both make up a whole.

My point is this: Regarding the particle "and" in the English version, it is conjunctive. If I say apples "and" oranges, I add up. The particle "and" does not really offer any alternative. One thing is not automatically excluded by another when the particle "and" is used; on the contrary it is added to the other. The particle "and" excludes nothing.

As for the particle "ou" (or) in the French version, Mr. Speaker, it has an opposite effect. It adds nothing. You can choose one thing or another: apples or oranges.

The particle "or" really offers an alternative. It is one thing or another and not both at the same time. However, the minister could interpret the English version differently. As for the particle "or", it excludes an entity, while if the particle "and" is used and if one of the entities is chosen, the other is not necessarily excluded.

I will undoubtedly be told that those considerations deal with linguistics and syntax, but it seems to me that this is important since it is one of the basic principles of the bill and it is especially important because it defines the government policy outlined in Bill C-144.

Consequently, Mr. Speaker, the French text does not give the same definition of the power as the English text.

With all due respect, Mr. Speaker, I wish to point out that the words "by the Government of Canada" do not exclude possible participation by a third party which, non-officially or officially, could co-operate with the government in the application of this policy. In the French version, the exclusion is automatic. The words "par le gouvernement du Canada agissant seul" automatically exclude all provincial consultation or participation.

Mr. Speaker, it follows, in any event, that the minister, using one version or the other, could, to his advantage, work against the wishes of the provinces.

I wanted to rise on a point of order because, in my view, if one version rather than the other were invoked, this could undermine federal-provincial relations, because the French version states, and I quote:

—comprehensive programs be undertaken by the Government of Canada—

That means that the minister, owing to that expression since it is followed by the particle "ou" (or), could neglect to consult the provinces and decide on his own accord to undertake something or implement any policy. According to the English version, it is not excluded that, should the federal government decide to act because that would be within its jurisdiction, experts or provincial counsels could co-operate in formulating or implementing the policy.

Consequently, without necessarily introducing a motion against the principle of the bill, since we agree with it, I feel that Your Honour should take the matter under advisement and give an opinion on the various possible interpretations of the two texts, so as to make them as identical as possible and avoid errors in their interpretation, and in order to have a uniform text in both the English and the French versions.

If we were dealing with a text of secondary importance, the interpretation of a sub-paragraph would not matter as much. But in this case we are dealing with the policy and the principles of the bill. Mr. Speaker, I want you to know we would greatly appreciate your intervening with regard to the interpretation of those two versions.

[English]

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, I wonder if I might say a word on the same point of order. I should like to make clear that it does not come by surprise so far as I am concerned; the hon. member for Lotbinière (Mr. Fortin) was kind enough to inform me that he was going to raise this point of order, and I have been looking at the wording of the preamble. As a result, it seems to me that the hon. member does have a point that should be looked at by someone, and I know of no better place to look for protection around here than the Chair.

The British North America Act, in section 132, and the Official Languages Act in one section—I have not got it in front of me, but I know it is there—both make it clear that so far as the Statutes of Canada are concerned, both versions are authentic—the English version and the French version. I submit there is a danger that if we pass this bill in its present form we will have an English text that seems to say one thing, and a French text that seems to say another.

[Mr. Fortin.]

Like a good many other members of the House, I cannot claim to be very proficient in French, and I do not claim to be extremely proficient in English; but I do know the difference between the English word "and" and the French word "ou". One puts two things together, and the other gives a choice. Therefore, Mr. Speaker, it seems to me this should definitely be looked at as a point of order, and perhaps Your Honour can give a ruling on the matter either today or the next time this bill is before us.

What we are looking at is line 21 on page 1 of the English version where we have the words "government of Canada and by the government of Canada in co-operation with provincial governments," as opposed to line 22 of the French version where we have the corresponding phrase "seul ou." I submit they say quite different things. It is altogether likely that the hon. member for Lotbinière and I would disagree as to what we think the bill ought to say, but he and I would at least agree that the two versions ought to say the same thing. I hope Your Honour will take the point of order under advisement.

[Translation]

Mr. Eymard Corbin (Madawaska-Victoria): As far as the point of order is concerned, Mr. Speaker—

[English]

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. I am prepared to hear further contributions on the point of order, but I might indicate right away that the point of order raised by the hon. member for Lotbinière (Mr. Fortin) is a valid one and I am ready to agree to the suggestion that the Chair reflect on it over the weekend. However, if hon. members want to make further contributions, it I am prepared to hear them. The hon. member for Madawaska-Victoria (Mr. Corbin).

[Translation]

Mr. Mongrain: Mr. Speaker, I shall be brief. I do not rise to—

[English]

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. I have recognized the hon. member for Madawaska-Victoria.

[Translation]

Mr. Corbin: Mr. Speaker, I think the hon. member for Lotbinière (Mr. Fortin) might have been justified to rise on a point of order in this connection, since, for all practical purposes, it is only a matter of construing in the same way two versions of the same act. Yet, I do not think the French text means the same thing as the English text.

However, I did not rise on a point of order to discuss the syntax or the structure of the French or English wording. I can see that the two versions are at variance, and that is why I think that the hon. member for Lotbinière is probably right in rising on a point of order. But I do not believe that this is the right time or the right place to do so. This is now the debate on second reading, the purpose of which is to refer the bill to the appropriate committee.

I would suggest that such representations should be made during a committee meeting, in the presence of the department's legal advisers. Then, clarification of the meaning of the text can be given. At any rate, today we are not preparing to adopt the bill as a whole. There are other points which might have to be debated. However, I feel that this kind of point of order should be made to the proper committee.

Mr. Mongrain: Mr. Speaker, what my colleague has just said is substantially what I myself wanted to say. Obviously, there has been a mistake in the translation. Before I took the floor a while ago, a government member told me that he intended to bring up, during a committee meeting, the question raised by the member for Lotbinière. Whether this is in order or not, it is perhaps not the main point which, I suggest, is that the correction be made, because there is an unexplainable error in the translation.

• (3:10 p.m.)

[English]

Mr. Aiken: Mr. Speaker, just a word on the point of order. I think it is very well taken, because the whole fundamental objective of the bill is in question. Perhaps the wording of the main operative section of the bill is not affected, but certainly the difference between the two proposals that are mentioned in the preamble is of substance in the French version. Therefore, I concur in the decision to consider this matter further. I just add that I am very glad to see a number of Liberal members jumping up to speak when they can do so in the safety of not having to talk about the bill.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is the hon. member for Winnipeg North (Mr. Orlikow) rising on the point of order?

Mr. Orlikow: No, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I might indicate, as I have already, that I shall be very pleased to reflect over the weekend upon the point of order raised by the hon. member.

Mr. David Orlikow (Winnipeg North): Mr. Speaker, I rise to make some comments on this bill. Today is January 16, and when the minister made his speech on November 20 he said:

> I begin the debate on this bill with a great sense of urgency, and with the knowledge that what we say and do here over the next few weeks will affect the lives of all Canadians for decades to come. We must act, and we must act today, to rehabilitate, to protect and to develop our priceless national heritage and our most important single natural resource, our water.

That was said on November 20. Then the bill disappeared from the face of the earth and we did not get it back until almost two months later. So much for the extent of urgency that the minister expressed. The minister was in his usual fine form and we got everything from poetry to philosophy—

Mr. Greene: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a question of privilege. I might point out that the bill would have been passed long ago if the opposition had not wasted so much time obstructing matters that could have been passed much more quickly and much more effectively—

Mr. Orlikow: Mr. Speaker, that is not a point of order. I suggest to the minister—

An hon. Member: He is just polluting the atmosphere.

Mr. Orlikow: —and to the House leader who has been expressing his views outside the House about the iniquities of members on this side holding up the business of the House, that if being a Member of Parliament is a full-time job we should have been back here shortly after Labour Day, rather than October 22. We lost six weeks when we could have been discussing matters of importance. We do not need any lecture on that matter from members of the government side.

Some hon. Members: Order.

Mr. Orlikow: Members on the other side call "order." They should have objected when the minister was speaking. The minister gave a very eloquent speech and dealt with the reasons why we need to act in the field of water pollution. At pages 1048 and 1049 of Hansard he summarized the things which this bill will achieve, how the various forms of government will act, what their responsibilities will be, and what are the purposes of the bill. But he left out just one thing. At page 1051 of Hansard he raised the question, but did not supply the answer. He asked:

> Who will pay the gigantic costs involved? The answer to that is that just as everyone is responsible, so in the end everyone must pay.

Mr. Speaker, I want to mention just how bad is the record of some of the largest municipalities in Canada and how necessary it is that the federal government do more than talk, more than pass legislation such as this, more than lecture provincial and municipal governments. The federal government, which is the major tax collecting agency in this country, must help the municipalities meet their obligations in the field of sewage disposal and the treatment of the water used in our cities. At present the municipalities are unable to do this because they simply do not have the money.

As other members have pointed out, pollution is prevalent in every province and virtually every city of this country. Just four days ago there was a report from my own province that in Red Sucker Lake water pollution is a growing problem. The effects on the Manitoba fishing industry—

Mr. Greene: Red Sucker Lake—is that an NDP lake?

Mr. Orlikow: This report reflects the effects on the Manitoba fishing industry as a result of mercury being found in fish caught in that province. It has now been established that the mercury is waste from industries in the province of Saskatchewan. What can the province of Manitoba do about that situation? Very little, I should think, although my former colleague, the Premier of Manitoba, has threatened to sue the federal government for its lack of control.

Every day in the newspapers one finds reference to pollution and the problems created by it from one end of Canada to the other. I looked at some of the newspapers of the last couple of days and found from British Columbia a report that the Utica Mining and Smelting Company wants to dump 9 million gallons of waste into Rupert Inlet. With regard to Nova Scotia there is a report that the Scott Pulp Mill is polluting the water in the Pictou area; and in Preston, Ontario, a potato chip factory is dumping waste into the Grand River. In Sudbury, International Nickel Company, one of the most profitable companies in Canada, is dumping effluent into the rivers and poison into the air. As I drive through that city I can imagine what the world will look like if and when an atomic bomb is dropped.

What are the federal and provincial governments doing about this tremendously wealthy company? Virtually nothing. Indeed, one does not need to go to Nova Scotia, Vancouver Island or northern Ontario; one needs only to walk 100 yards from this building to see the Ottawa River—one of the largest in Canada, if not in the world—becoming in effect an open sewer. It is so bad that scientists at the University of Ottawa suggest that in the very near future all forms of life in the river will die.

In the 80 miles between Ottawa and the mouth of the Ottawa River near Montreal, 14 communities, ten of them in Quebec and four in Ontario, are pouring raw sewage into the Ottawa River. Paper mills, four in Quebec and two in Ontario, are dumping an enormous amount of waste into the river every day; so much so that, as I have already said, it has been predicted that soon no life will be possible in the river. The city of Ottawa sewage disposal plant treats primarily only that sewage which Ottawa dumps into the river, the result being that only 30 per cent of the suspended solids is taken out of and removed from the sewage in the river. This means that a city with a population of 200,000 is dumping its raw sewage into the river.

On the other hand Hull, across the river in Quebec, with 57,000 people has no sewage treatment facilities at all. Only 8 per cent of 143,000 people in Quebec living along the Ottawa River treat their sewage. The paper mills on both sides of the river pour 130 million gallons of effluent into the river every day. Is it any wonder that when one steps outside this House sometimes the stench of the river is unbearable? That is the situation regarding the Ottawa River. In Montreal, a city represented in Parliament by the Prime Minister himself, 2.5 million people pour into the St. Lawrence River 500 million gallons of virtually untreated sewage every day.

The minister made a most eloquent speech; he is one of the most eloquent speakers in the chamber. But on analyzing his speech one realizes there is little meat in it and little indication that the federal government intends to remedy the problem of water pollution. From my reading of the speech it seems that the federal government is saying in its proposed bill that the provinces now have, and should continue to exercise, the main responsibility in the field of water pollution control and water resource management. The federal government supposedly will help the provinces by providing research, advice and a communications network among the provinces in respect of water matters. Apparently it will do little else. The bill promises little action by the government.

We think that water pollution matters ought to be considered within a more comprehensive framework embracing water resource management; that national standards with regard to water should apply to all parts of the country and that the agency to introduce these standards is the federal government. From my reading of the bill, I do not think the government proposes to do this.

The bill is deficient inasmuch as many waters in the country are not covered by the legislation. The bill covers only those waters which may be considered interprovincial or international in nature. It does not set uniform standards and gives us no assurance of stopping wastes being dumped into the rivers and lakes of this country. We are told that the bill is to be flexible. I suggest, instead, that we shall see laxity of enforcement in those cases where it is against the interest of an industry or province to enforce the measure.

For example, it is conceivable that the Irving interests in New Brunswick, which are not noted for being overly concerned about the public welfare, could bring pressure to bear on the government of that province or on the local municipality, and in that way not be forced to clean up the pollution which is being created. It seems that this bill will allow industry to pay for its right to pollute. This is an iniquitous proposal. If we are serious about controlling pollution, we should not merely offer incentives to industry but we should make a decision collectively after consulting provinces and municipalities. We must insist that all bodies which permit pollution to occur, including municipalities, obey the law.

Although the government says that it wants to decrease the incidence of pollution, from my reading of the bill I doubt the seriousness of the government's intention. To illustrate my point, to apprize hon. members of what is happening and to show the extent to which municipal governments are guilty of permitting pollution to occur, I refer to figures contained in the Sixth Annual Review of the Economic Council of Canada entitled, "Perspective 1975".

The following cities have virtually no facilities for the treatment of sewage being dumped into rivers or the sea: St. John's is listed as having 100 per cent no treatment; Dartmouth-Halifax, 99 per cent no treatment; Saint John, 99.8 per cent no treatment; Quebec City, represented in this chamber by that great humanitarian, the Minister of Regional Economic Expansion (Mr. Marchand), 100 per cent no treatment; Montreal, which the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) represents in part, 91.6 per cent no treatment. Then Windsor, represented in part by the progressive new Minister without Portfolio (Mr. Gray), 85 per cent no treatment; Saskatoon, represented by the Minister without Portfolio (Mr. Lang) responsible for the Wheat Board, 93 per cent no treatment; Vancouver, represented in part by the Minister of Public Works (Mr. Laing) and the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs (Mr. Basford), 59 per cent no treatment; and Victoria, British Columbia, is listed as having 98.9 per cent no treatment.

This table indicates those few cities which have primary treatment facilities. Ottawa is listed as having primary treatment facilities to the extent of 100 per cent, that is, all Ottawa sewage receives primary treatment. This treatment affects only about one-third of the waste materials being dumped into the river. Hamilton treats its primary sewage to the extent of 100 per cent. That city contains the Steel Company of Canada and Defasco. Millions of gallons of polluted water from those steel industries are poured every day into Hamilton Bay. This is the record, Mr. Speaker. One finds that municipalities are well aware of their problems and have been calling upon federal and provincial governments to take action to solve them. If municipalities have failed to take action, it is not because they have been unaware of the extent of the problem they face.

I have before me a pamphlet prepared by Mr. Eric Beecroft, chairman of the Department of Political Science, University of Western Ontario, for the Canadian Federation of Mayors and Municipalities entitled, "The Municipality's Role in Water Management". On page 7 of the pamphlet Mr. Beecroft says the following:

> (b) Planning grants should be offered—by federal-provincial agreement—to encourage provinces and municipalities to make an early start in surveying their problems and preparing their programs. Such planning grants should be generous enough to ensure that studies will be undertaken promptly, on a regional basis, wherever needed.

(c) There should be a long-term program of financial aid, guaranteed to last for at least five or possibly ten years, along the lines outlined in more detail in the main text. The aims of such aid should be:

(i) to give not only loan support but generous grant aid, to municipalities or regional groups of municipalities, to enable them to proceed with essential programs of general benefit to the health and economy of the nation as a whole;

(ii) to assure that no undertakings essential to pollution control (for example, projects to relieve the overload on combined sewers) should be omitted for lack of municipal financing—

At page 14, in discussing major obstacles to action, he says:

The second is that senior government financing, when offered at all,

(a) is not offered in a form which encourages regional cooperation;

(b) is limited generally to loans which only add to an already heavy municipal debt burden—

• (3:30 p.m.)

We know that the municipalities and the provincial governments are now paying an interest rate of 10 per cent and upward whenever they borrow money. Therefore, it is not surprising that faced with the prospect of sharp increases in municipal taxes and the opposition of local taxpayers they should be, to say the least, loth to proceed as rapidly as they should with the extension or construction of sewage disposal systems. It would probably cost Montreal $100 million or more to build the treatment facilities necessary to clean up the sewage which flows from a city of 2½ million people, and in the light of its financial difficulties it is hardly surprising that the city of Montreal has not been inclined to move in this direction. Mr. Beecroft goes on to say:

Senior government financing . . . is seldom effective in bringing industries into conformity with water quality standards and into co-operation with municipalities in their region.

He talks about the capacity of the municipalities to pay for this work, and says:

A factor to be taken into account is that municipalities do not have the revenue-raising capacity necessary to warrant a substantial enlargement of municipal debt and that furthermore to make matters worse for municipalities, other requirements of very high priority and very costly—education, transportation and traffic, and comprehensive measures of redevelopment—are competing with water supply and water purification for the limited revenue resources.

It is true that the minister in his speech in November spoke about the increased aid which municipalities could get from Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation. I do not know on what information the minister based that part of his speech, but a return on October 23, 1969, in response to a series of questions asked by my hon. friend from Kootenay West (Mr. Harding), gave an entirely different impression. We were given a list of municipal sewage loans approved under the National Housing Act and the applications received by CMHC from June 1 to December 30, 1969. Among the towns whose applications were refused were Halifax, Hamilton and Saskatoon. I mention them because they are among the largest cities in a long list of municipalities whose applications were turned down.

These are the facts. The municipalities have a major role to play if we are do deal effectively with the pollution of Canada's waters. The municipalities have made it clear repeatedly over the last ten years, in representations to the federal government, that they simply do not possess the financial resources necessary to play the part which they must play if we are to deal effectively with this problem.

What has been the government's answer? Partly, I suppose, because of the constitutional view taken by the Prime Minister that the municipalities are creatures of the provinces and that the federal government cannot, therefore, deal with them directly, hon. gentlemen opposite take the position that the federal government cannot do more than it is doing. For my part, I think the Prime Minister's view on this question is a mistaken one. However, I do not wish to discuss this aspect of the government's policy in detail. I would refer hon. members who are interested in this subject to the speeches made, unfortunately outside this chamber, by a former mayor of Toronto, the hon. member for York West (Mr. Givens) regarding the failure of this government to deal with the problems of the cities.

In addition to all this, we are faced with the determination of the government to follow a program of austerity. Mr. Speaker, we cannot follow a program of austerity, we cannot cut down the funds expended by the federal government, while attacking a problem of this magnitude. The federal government cannot follow a program of austerity while at the same time helping the municipalities to extend or build new sewage disposal facilities by means of generous loans or subsidies whose effect would be to lower interest rates for such work.

Because of the government's mistaken view of its responsibility in relation to the cities of this country, and because of its austerity program, the fact is that in the next few years the cities of Canada will not meet their responsibilities; they will not move with the speed with which they should in modernizing their sewage disposal and treatment facilities. This is a fact, and all the speeches the minister may make either in Parliament or across the country will mean nothing until the federal government gives to the municipalities and the provinces the kind of meaningful financial assistance which would encourage them to meet their responsibilities in this field. This has not been done to date, and I believe it will not be done in the coming years as a result of the mistaken and niggardly policies of the federal government.

Mr. Ian Watson (Laprairie): Mr. Speaker, I am delighted with Bill C-144. Its main objective is to provide for the management of the water resources of Canada, their improvement, development and utilization. I am happy that the federal government has moved off the sidelines and that it will now be saying to the provinces, including my own province of Quebec, that it is prepared to enter into agreements to establish on a national, provincial, regional or lake or river basin basis, intergovernmental committees or other bodies which, among other things, would maintain continuing consultation on water resource matters, advise on priorities for research, planning, conservation, development and utilization based on the formulation of water policies and programs, and facilitate the co-ordination and implementation of water policies and programs.

I should like to direct a question to the minister in this regard. Perhaps the point does not require clarification, but I would appreciate some assurance when he replies. I presume that since no reference is made in clause 3 to national interest, these bodies could be established, in agreement with the provinces, in regard to any river covered by the legislation, which would include both boundary and international rivers.

There is a river in my constituency, the Chateauguay River, which crosses the international border as a stream but is nevertheless described as a river both on the United States side and on the Canadian side of the border. It develops into a river on the Canadian side, and in turn has a tributary or two, which themselves are called rivers and originate a few miles across the international boundary. I know that it is a matter of very immediate interest to the people in the counties of Chateauguay and Huntingdon, through which these streams and rivers flow, that the Chateauguay River basin be included under the terms of the act. I know that they hope it will be possible, by agreement with the government of Quebec, to establish a consultative body, as provided by the bill, for the Chateauguay River valley.

We have in the Montreal region a number of bodies of water associated with the St. Lawrence River and which I presume are of national interest in the same way as the St. Lawrence River. The Lake St. Louis portion of the St. Lawrence River was, until a few years ago, Montreal's major water playground. On the south shore, the major water recreational area has been the Laprairie basin. Both of these bodies of water which form part of the St. Lawrence River are now seriously polluted and unuseable for swimming purposes.

The pollution of Lake St. Louis and the Laprairie basin has been so serious over the last few years that we now find small craft navigation is being impeded by the growth of weeds, which have primarily been caused by phosphates entering the St. Lawrence River system from farm and industrial waste as well as from household detergents. Pollution has rendered these two most beautiful Montreal area sections of the St. Lawrence River practically unusable for recreation. It is a situation that we realize has required attention for a long time. Happily, this bill is finally going to provide the impetus for action.

This bill provides that the federal government may enter into an agreement with a province to establish an intergovernmental committee with jurisdiction for, among other things, river basins. The bill also provides that where there is a national interest in water resource management, the federal government can enter into an agreement with the provincial government concerned to establish and maintain an inventory of the waters, to conduct research, and to formulate comprehensive water resource management plans, including detailed estimates of the cost of implementation of those plans. It also provides for the designing of projects for the efficient conservation, development and utilization of such waters and, finally, for the implementation of any plans or projects referred to in paragraphs (d) and (e) of clause 4.

This last provision is of particular importance because it clearly implies that the federal government is prepared not only to formulate plans but to implement them. There is the further implication that the federal government will pay for a substantial portion of that implementation. I hope the federal government is planning to make a substantial contribution—by "substantial" I mean at least 50 per cent—to the cost.

The dramatic feature of this bill is that, in cases of significant national interest, where all reasonable efforts have been made by the federal government to reach agreement with the provincial governments on water resource management and its ancillary aspects have been unfruitful, the federal government can then act on its own. Thus, we in the Montreal area can now expect action to be taken within the foreseeable future.

I both hope and expect agreement will be reached with the province of Quebec to establish the necessary anti-pollution programs for our rivers in Quebec, and more particularly for the St. Lawrence. It would be in the interests of Quebec, and especially the citizens of the Montreal area, if such action were taken soon.

The fact that there is a possibility of direct federal action if no agreement is reached with Quebec and Quebec does not move on it itself within a reasonable time, is an incentive to provincial action. I am singling out my province because I represent the most populated constituency in that province, but this indirect form of pressure applies to any province which is going slow on anti-pollution measures. The threat of possible direct federal action will give the necessary incentive to Quebec to devise and initiate, in collaboration with the government of Canada, measures to deal with pollution of this most important body of water in our province—a matter which is of vital concern to all residents of the federal constituency of Laprairie.

My constituency borders on Canada's major water artery, the St. Lawrence. For too long the citizens living in the Montreal area generally, and in particular those living in areas bordering the St. Lawrence, have been deprived of the recreational benefits of its use. I should like to hear a brief indication of what the minister considers to be significant national interest. I suspect this would not apply, for example, to the Chateauguay River which flows across the international boundary. It would be useful to the House if the minister today or next week gave an indication of how he will determine those matters which are of significant national interest. Will it be water flow or the non-recreational use which has been made of particular water bodies in the past? I should like clarification from the minister as to this definition.

[Mr. Watson.]

The other matter to which I draw the minister's attention is the desperate need which exists in Canada and throughout the world at this time for cheaper methods of sewage disposal. We know how to deal with water pollution of our rivers and streams. We know that several alternative sewage disposal methods are available to municipalities. We also know that up to now these methods have proven terribly expensive. Surely, with our advanced technology we in Canada are in a position to develop less expensive methods of dealing with pollution. Surely, there is a way of dealing with pollution without bankrupting ourselves in the process.

I will give an example of just how expensive an anti-pollution drive can be and how, if proper planning is not instituted, it can result in ridiculous situations. Five years ago, in a part of my former constituency a town built a sewage disposal plant on the recommendation of its engineers. It cost about $500,000. No other town bordering the Chateauguay River has since installed a sewage disposal plant. The result is that this town with a population of approximately 2,000 is saddled with a plant that costs $40,000 a year or more to operate. It is cleaning the sewage and pouring the cleansed water into a river which is polluted.

In my view there has been in this instance, a mis-allocation of public funds. The federal government is involved in that Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation approved the loan to the municipality. Officers of CMHC have argued that once an application by a municipality has been approved by the municipal affairs department of Quebec, they are duty-bound to allocate the funds. CMHC has not fulfilled its duty to the public by simply accepting, without submitting any views of its own, a request from a municipality for a loan to construct a plant which is without question too expensive and which has proven to be an almost unbearable load on the taxpayers of the municipality.

This incident has demonstrated to me, and should have demonstrated to CMHC, that what is now needed in Canada, more than anything else, is serious research into the development of inexpensive sewage disposal plants. Less costly disposal units are desperately needed. I hope that when the minister responsible for the implementation of Bill C-144 decides on priorities, he will give first priority to the development of inexpensive sewage disposal plants. I hope he will at the same time establish an apparatus through which we can make available information concerning the least expensive type of sewage disposal facilities which can be made available to all the municipalities of Canada. I am convinced that this would be the best first step the minister could take in implementing the attack on water pollution which is the objective of this bill.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. It being four o'clock, the House will now proceed to the consideration of private members' business as listed on today's Order Paper, namely, public bills.

PRIVATE MEMBERS' PUBLIC BILLS

SPORTS

MEASURE TO ESTABLISH LITTLE LEAGUE WEEK

Mr. E. F. Whelan (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Fisheries and Forestry) moved that Bill C-22, respecting Little League Week, be read the second time and referred to the Standing Committee on Health, Welfare and Social Affairs.

He said: Mr. Speaker, this bill was introduced during the previous Parliament by my colleague, the hon. member for Windsor West (Mr. Gray). He has since been promoted to a higher position but retains an interest in the Little League and is desirous that we do something with this Bill. I agreed that I would reintroduce it in this Parliament. In the city of Windsor, which we represent, many dedicated people are doing a tremendous job in connection with the Little League organization. We have watched this program closely and have seen the wonderful things they have done in helping young boys become better citizens.

Little League baseball is an avenue through which early training, teamwork, sportsmanship, discipline and character-building are instilled. The volunteer leaders in Little League baseball, certainly those I know personally in my area, have made the program part of our way of life. It does one's heart good to see the tremendous crowds that follow Little League baseball games and participate in the program.

Little League baseball boys have the opportunity to play the game under advantageous conditions. This contributes to their welfare. More than 750 Little Leaguers have joined the ranks of professional baseball players in the United States, and thousands more continue to play the game at high school and on the sandlots. These people assume leadership in all walks of life. I was a baseball player when I was young. I do not say that it gave me great leadership ability, but I know it helped me become a better politician.

Little League baseball not only fosters friendship among boys; it develops co-ordination and good health habits. It also breaks down social barriers and makes for a more closely-knit community. It knows no national boundaries, because leagues have developed in 27 countries and baseball is played with equal enthusiasm everywhere. Little League baseball also fosters the healthiest kind of father-son relationship. Through baseball father and son meet on common ground from which blooms companionship, respect and love. All parents strive to give their youngsters a happy childhood that will prepare them for the ups and downs of life. The Little League is only one avenue of reaching this goal.

The managers, coaches and other officials of the league who devote so much of their time, thought and energy to providing constructive direction for the boys, deserve our respect and gratitude. I do not think they are seeking too much when they ask that the second week in June be designated as Little League Week in recognition of the efforts of the Little League to help boys develop qualities of good citizenship and sportsmanship through baseball and to make them better citizens.

Over 2½ million boys take part in Little League baseball in Canada and in 23 other countries. Canada has more Little Leagues than any country with the exception of the United States. In Canada nearly 50,000 boys participate, with the assistance and guidance of over 7,000 adult volunteers. I would ask the House to favourably consider this bill.

Mr. Thomas M. Bell (Saint John-Lancaster): Mr. Speaker, although not a heavy-hitter like the hon. member for Essex (Mr. Whelan), I should like to take part in this debate. My colleague just interjected that perhaps the heaviest-hitter in the government is the Minister of Labour (Mr. Mackasey). I should say for the record that I did try to get one of our athletes to take part in the debate this afternoon, but they are either too stiff to get around after the Governor General's skating party or are at home with the 'flu.

Seriously, as one who has had a very sincere interest in baseball all my life I give my full support to this bill. I think it is a very worth-while measure. Many of us have had a connection with Little League baseball in our constituencies. I suppose, like most members of this House, my interest is good but my ability to participate is diminished by my activities here.

Those who assist Little League baseball, the fathers and others who are community-minded, deserve a great deal of credit for this type of activity. I take the opportunity to personally congratulate these people for the work they do. They unselfishly devote many hours to the Little League. I know something about this matter. So far as the value of Little League baseball is concerned, one of its greatest advantages is that where there are Little Leagues, juvenile delinquency is probably at a rate lower than any other part of the country. In other words, this type of activity reduces one of the problems with which we are so concerned these days.

I am also pleased to take part in this debate because of the diminishing interest there now seems to be in baseball. It is not as popular as body-contact sports such as football and hockey. Television presents these sports to greater advantage. Nevertheless, baseball is deeply rooted in our lives. I think a measure such as this would not only help our young people but would cause more attention to be directed to a very honourable sport and one which has not quite the glamour of some others.

Some thought should be given in committee to the considerations in respect of declaring such-and-such a week to be an official week, because it may be that everyone who has a pet project would want to have it authorized as one of the 52 that could have a week of recognition during the year. With that one qualification, I should like to congratulate the honourable, heavy-hitter from Essex for bringing forward this measure. I support its referral to the committee and hope something will come out of this proposal.

[Mr. Bell.]

Mr. Les Benjamin (Regina-Lake Centre): Mr. Speaker, I, too, wish to congratulate the hon. member for Essex (Mr. Whelan) for sponsoring this bill. I am pleased to support it. Like the hon. member and like many other members of this House, I am a ball player —but I come from the prairies, where we play more and better ball. There was no Little League baseball when I was of the age when I might have played it. I did not have an opportunity to play baseball until I was 20 years of age. I am sure I would have been a much better player had there been a Little League in those days. However, when one watches the efforts of the House of Commons team and the young PCs Allstars on the lawn of Parliament Hill each year, one realizes that the Little League would have been useful in earlier days.

I should also like to add to what the previous speaker said about the interest in baseball these days. Baseball has always been my favourite sport. It requires a great deal of effort and organization to promote and keep it going. It is a sport which requires modern equipment, facilities, grounds, and so on. I believe it also requires a greater degree of thinking while one is playing than most other sports. In my opinion this is needed in the sporting world as well as the physical training that goes with all sports.

The other point I wish to make also pertains to something said by the previous speaker. While I have nothing against pancake weeks or basket-weaving weeks, and so on, I believe a program such as the Little League is more deserving of this type of recognition than some of the commercial-product type national weeks and days we have all year, every year right across this country. Again I wish to congratulate the hon. member who is sponsoring this bill. We are pleased to support it.

Mr. Lloyd Francis (Ottawa West): Mr. Speaker, I, too, am pleased to commend the hon. member for Essex (Mr. Whelan) who moved this bill. I hope he will not be disturbed if I contribute one or two matters which represent the sort of second thought that must be given to the bill before it is adopted. The hon. member has the office next to mine. He is known for the forthright way in which he expresses his opinions. I am sure that it will not in any way disturb him if I make one or two suggestions which are perhaps worthy of further consideration.

The Little League of Canada is an outgrowth of an organization in the United States. The Little League was incorporated in the early 1950s and has its headquarters in Williamsport, Pennsylvania. It is a very good example of an organized group which conducts research, maintains statistics and does its very best to promote the sport with proper regard to safety and the type of equipment that must be developed and provided. It also pays attention to public relations. The activities of the Little League leads to a Little World series which is held in the United States and which we also have in Canada.

The mover of the bill was kind enough to show me a few minutes ago the report on the Little World series which was held on August 20, 21, 22 and 24, 1968, in Williamsport, Pennsylvania. A similar program was held in Canada, and there are pictures of the team at Sherbrooke. The western team at Santa Anna, California, was declared the champion. The Little League is very well recognized. Its players are young people under the age of 16. It has extended into Canada and, I believe, involves 50,000 young people. In my constituency there is a very active organization, and the parents who donate their services to promoting baseball among the younger generation perform a service for which the community has every reason to be thankful. In other words, there is no question in my mind nor, I am sure, in the mind of any member of this House, that the program of the Little League is a wholesome and highly desirable type of activity.

I have several questions which I believe should be asked. The bill before us proposes to designate a Little League Week. About 40 national sports organizations in Canada have at one time or another expressed to the department their interest in a similar type of designation. The hon. member for Regina Lake Centre (Mr. Benjamin) suggested this would still leave open twelve weeks in the year. It would, but I am sure he would be the first to say that we must have priorities in this regard. It is possible that other worthy causes not related to sports will seek a similar designation. We all agree that there is a limit to how far we can go in designating weeks for this type of cause.

I wish to go on record as wishing that some recognition be given this group. I say that without reservation. But I do not believe our neighbours to the south have yet designated a Little League Week. They operate under a national charter and within the last two years they have sought to establish a similar type of organization in Canada. Until two years ago all the funds collected, entry fees, membership fees and insurance premiums, were paid in U.S. funds through the head office in Pennsylvania.

I believe they have taken steps to build a Canadian organization to meet the concern that at one time was expressed on that score. But apart from the basic question of how far we should go in designating the Babe Ruth League, the Little League or the various football leagues and other organizations, I suggest hon. members should think about policy before we make such designation by an act of the House.

The basic question that remains relates to the place of this organization and its structure in Canadian sport.

Parliament has established a National Advisory Council on Fitness and Amateur Sport. There have been discussions at various times to the end that the Little League organization be affiliated with a group which is known as the Canadian Federation of Amateur Baseball. Unfortunately, up to this time no resolution on this matter has been put forward. Funds are provided through the National Advisory Council to assist in a number of activities in Canada, among which is baseball.

There has been no affiliation of the Little League group with any of the established sports organizations that are receiving official or semi-official recognition through the Department of National Health and Welfare. I am not prepared to say that it is necessary that they should do so. I feel that the matter should be discussed and reviewed in an appropriate forum. In other words, if we have a national policy on sports, if we have established grants to encourage and develop various sports activities, the proper question to pose is: What is the relationship of the Little League to the bodies that have been given official or semi-official recognition?

I hope there will be further discussion of this matter. I am confident that there is nothing that cannot be resolved in a fair and amicable way, recognizing that everyone concerned is serving the younger generation, trying to develop activities that are healthy and in which we want our young people to engage.

Another comment that has been made—I simply wish to mention it without associating myself with it—relates to the question of the degree of Canadian control of the program. I have referred to the discussions that took place regarding the lack of affiliation of Canadian-organized bodies. There is no question that the Little League is highly organized through the head office in Pennsylvania which continues to direct and control the program.

I listened to the hon. member for Regina-Lake Centre and to the hon. member for Saint John-Lancaster (Mr. Bell). I was pleased that neither of them raised the question of Canadian control. It has been raised in other quarters. The question of the development of institutions and organizations which are controlled within our own society is one which leads to a discussion which cannot always be productive.

I have listened to those who support the Watkins point of view in regard to industry. The last speaker is a member of that group. I am not one of those who share that point of view. I do not share the concern that is often expressed in this regard. I do not think we can make lacrosse our national sport in the sense in which some hon. members have proposed it at different times. It is probably the only truly distinctive Canadian game with a wide following and participation. We have long given up trying to make cricket the national sport of this country because it has not "taken" here and does not receive the response of other games.

There is no doubt in my mind that the influence of T.V. has resulted in the promotion of sports such as hockey, football and baseball. I believe our neighbours to the south will have to accept Canadian hockey players and we will have to accept U.S. football players. I suspect that there will be an expansion of baseball in our country. It is the kind of sport that is adapted to television and to the kind of spectacle that our people love to see.

I am one of those who enjoy these sports as much as any member of the House, and I am not at any point going to say we should look down on the sports that are gaining a broad North American audience, and in any way deplore them. We have a broad range of athletic, social and cultural activities which are common to the North American continent, and baseball is one. The associations and organizations which have devoted themselves to the sponsoring of this kind of sport commend themselves for favourable consideration. I believe the Little League should receive all the encouragement that can be given it, because of the program it has demonstrated it is capable of generating. It is a very well organized group. There is a wide degree of participation by younger people, and by parents in a voluntary capacity.

I am told that there is a series of interleagues between Canadian and American cities at border points. When Canadian teams are not sufficiently numerous, they fill in and play back and forth with teams from the United States. I think this is a very helpful, healthy sign and is the type of activity that builds international good will from a very early age.

In reviewing this bill, Mr. Speaker, I have called to the attention of hon. members that there is still an unresolved problem in relation to some of the other groups that are receiving official recognition and support. I believe that hon. members should also consider the basic question of what form of encouragement and recognition we should give. We must decide how many weeks we can give to baseball, football, hockey, the Babe Ruths, the Peewees, the Juniors, the Little League, and the various age groups that are organized in this way. I think before we make the decision that this week will be Little League Week, we should consider a policy and be prepared to say to other groups, "This is the kind of encouragement and recognition we are prepared to extend to you, and we wish you all the best in developing your program."

Mr. F. J. Bigg (Pembina): Mr. Speaker, it is good that we have a private members' hour, because every once in a while we get a refreshing suggestion like this. I hasten to give my unqualified support to the idea that we give as much publicity, encouragement, financial and every other type of assistance as possible to the people who run Little League baseball.

As a member of the Mounted Police I was thrown into close contact with young people who got off on the wrong track, and from my experience and the experience of others with whom I have worked I find that when young people are involved in something like Little League baseball, the incidence of juvenile delinquency falls off dramatically.

I recall in a certain town the juvenile court had to hold special sessions every week. Then a young corporal in the Mounted Police set up a boxing class in the town. He had been running it only a few months when the juvenile court had to close entirely; there was no outward manifestation of juvenile delinquency. After having a record of being the worst community in Canada, in a few weeks, it became one of the best.

The hon. member for Essex (Mr. Whelan) is to be congratulated for taking up the ball from where it was dropped. Discussion on this bill opens up a whole field of interest. Some people, and perhaps they are dreamers, say there is no such thing as a bad boy, but there certainly is such a thing as a bad boy if you do not give him something to do. But given a proper outlet for their over-abundant energies, very few young people will go wrong. I think this is the point the hon. member is trying to make, and I support it.

In our day young people were called bad or difficult; they were not called juvenile delinquents. Society is vitally interested in helping these young people, but methods have changed over the years. The wood shed and the strap were used in my schooldays. Now we use a lot of fancy psychology. Perhaps we need a happy medium between the two. When you give a boy proper leadership and there is family teamwork, juvenile delinquency becomes a minimal problem.

The community of Sherwood Park, a satelite town near Edmonton, Alberta, is so well organized that I believe all girls and boys of school age have an opportunity to participate in Little League baseball. It also provides a wonderful opportunity for parents to get out, to get a little fresh air and keep in contact with their own and other children in the community, all of which makes the family work together and play together. I do not think it is necessary to add that Sherwood Park is not a nest of juvenile delinquents.

The service clubs of Canada have always been helpful with regard to the young. The Optimists' clubs across Canada have supported the Air Cadets, a natural place to which young people graduate from Little League baseball. At a later age our magnificent Air Force caters to these young people who, when mature, may have a role in defending Canadian skies.

This bill also brings to mind the need for a well-organized, national physical fitness program. I am not alarmed about setting aside a week for Little League baseball because I am quite sure in that week, basketball, hockey, skiing, and so forth, would also receive more attention and promotion. Perhaps a better name could be found for it. Youth Appreciation Week is recognized in many areas, and perhaps Little League Week is an offshoot of that. I give my support to this type of activity.

I feel that if the CYC had been involved in this type of thing, its reputation might have been saved and the thousands of dollars of taxpayers' money used to much greater advantage. I hope that even at this late stage the CYC might be revamped, with a little encouragement and the proper terms of reference. Most of its members, if not all, joined with the intention of carrying out projects like this. If we have a plan for them, a little supervision and well-defined terms of reference, the CYC may yet have a fully up-to-date physical fitness program for the country.

Mr. Speaker, no doubt other members wish to speak on this subject. I hope we will send the bill to committee.

Mr. P. M. Mahoney (Calgary South): Mr. Speaker, my intervention in the debate on this very interesting bill will be brief indeed—and I am as gratified as hon. members opposite at that. However, I think the hon. member for Essex (Mr. Whelan), coming from a somewhat deprived area of Canada where, unfortunately, the Canadian Radio-Television Commission is unable to intercept the signals from the five Detroit television stations across the river, may have a somewhat distorted view of what is good for Canada. I make this point before the bill goes to committee because I note the first two words of paragraph 2 of the bill are "throughout Canada". I am not sure it is a good thing for the fabric of Canadian culture that we observe and honour an institution that has been enshrined by legislative action of the United States Congress as the national sport of the United States of America.

Mr. Baldwin: Wait until they hear about this in Calgary.

Mr. Mahoney: I wonder if we would not be wiser, Mr. Speaker, to limit the geographic purview of this bill to a long baldhead, or perhaps a sinister-free, distance from the United States border. Seriously, I join other members in endorsing this bill. I hope it will present a more realistic approach to the fact of the continental entity which we enjoy, rather than some of the things which we observed and heard in areas of entertainment in the last few weeks.

Establishment of Little League Week

Mr. D. Gordon Blair (Grenville-Carleton): Mr. Speaker, I wish to participate briefly in this debate. We have listened to a number of our colleagues who have a great love of baseball, and one or two of them are young enough to recall the days when they played it themselves.

Mr. Bell: We all are.

Mr. Blair: I am not claiming any great record as a baseball player but perhaps I have one distinction, that of having been an executive of one of the local Little Leagues in Ottawa, the McKellar Park Little League, located in the constituency of my good friend the hon. member for Ottawa West (Mr. Francis).

We are all aware that governments are taking a greater interest in sports than in years gone by. Many of the facilities used by Little Leagues are provided by the communities, and principally by the municipalities. There is considerable support for sport from various agencies of the provincial governments. Lately, the National Advisory Council on Fitness and Amateur Sport has played what I consider to be a significant role in encouraging worth-while sport in Canada. I do not wish to recall recent history unduly, but I feel that as Canadians we can all take pride in the efforts which our government and its agencies recently made to reinforce Canada's position in international hockey.

It is against this background of wider government interest in sport that we should consider this bill. Emphasis must be laid on the degree of citizen participation in Little League baseball and similar leagues which support hockey, football and other sports available to boys and young men across Canada. Long hours of voluntary work are spent by those who undertake the responsible jobs of coaching and managing the teams. They virtually dedicate three or four months of the year to the activities of Little League and the children in the community. Anything that we in Parliament can do to encourage this very important degree of citizen participation in the community should be of first importance.

The hon. member for Ottawa West brought some problems to our attention. It is quite obvious that there are not enough weeks in a year to properly recognize or commemorate every sport in this country. After a further study it may well appear that the designation of weeks in support of different branches of sport is not the best way for Canada to show national support for sporting activities. When this matter is studied further, we will have to consider the degree of public support which should be given to branches of particular athletics rather than to the total sport itself. Perhaps there is a question whether there should be a week for the support of hockey, baseball, or whatever other athletic activity we think of, rather than for a particular branch or a particular league.

Having made these comments, I think the very fact that the time of the Parliament of Canada is taken up with the considertion of a measure of this type is indicative of the growing importance of organized sport in our community. In conclusion, I emphasize that the kind of baseball played by the youngsters who have the benefit of participating in Little League is far different and perhaps far better than the kind of ball we played as boys. These youngsters are well equipped with uniforms, bats, balls, clothes and all the other paraphernalia; they are properly coached and trained. The same goes for the youngsters in the hockey and football leagues. All this volunteer activity is a credit to our community. I hope the substance of this bill will be given serious considertion by an appropriate committee of the House.

Mr. Gerald Richard Cobbe (Portage): Mr. Speaker, I rise to support the member for Essex (Mr. Whelan) in this bill because I feel it is very important to a great many young people in our country that we designate a week in the second week of June as Little League Week.

The Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Munro) has done, and is doing, a tremendous job in promoting sports activities and providing physical fitness programs across Canada. Perhaps he cannot do that in the House of Commons, owing to the lack of facilities. In many areas of the country there is a tremendous increase in sports participation. Many people are involved in the activities of the Canadian Baseball Association. Those trying to establish a countrywide organization understand the problems confronting the Little League Organization in trying to establish rules, regulations and the type of equipment that is to be used across the country.

Attempts are being made to establish age groups, because in sports organizations across the country there is a tremendous overlapping in this respect and sometimes people do not have the opportunity to participate in sports. We will be benefiting all Canadians by introducing Little League Week, and assisting those who have worked so hard to accomplish what has been done in this field. We have done a great deal under the Little League organization. It is true that we have worked with people and sports organizations of the United States, but we have found it more practical to establish our own organization and either consult or be affiliated with our friends across the border.

Other facts must be taken into consideration. The hon. member for Regina-Lake Centre (Mr. Benjamin) indicated that he did not have the opportunity of participating in Little League. I have found across Canada an increased interest in baseball perhaps because I come from an area which hosted the Pan-Am games. We had difficulty in creating a team to participate in the Pan-Am games because there was no organization in Canada which gave our young people an equal opportunity to participate. If they did nothing else, the Pan-Am games established a greater measure of unity across the country.

I think we all applaude the aims of the Little League and its attempts to set age limits. It is most important for us in the House of Commons to show interest in our young people. We hope that our young people will take an interest in what we are doing in Ottawa, and by passing this bill we shall show them we are interested in what they are doing.

It has been suggested over 7,000 adults work hard for many hours to give many of our people an opportunity of participating in Little League baseball. These people do a tremendous job. Sometimes our young people are disappointed and discouraged, especially when they see what some adults are doing behind the scenes. Perhaps we need a new program which will teach these people how to behave when our young people are participating in sports activities.

As it is established, the organization is not designed to produce athletes. Perhaps that is why we have separated from other athletic organizations. The organization is designed to build better citizens in our country. I say this because the organization's regulations state that the organization does not exist for the purpose of putting professionals into the field; it exists to give youngsters the opportunity to participate in sport, to compete and to understand what happens when you win or lose.

I hope that the National Advisory Council and the Committee on Fitness and Amateur Sport will give further consideration to the provision of facilities for organizations such as Little League. It is difficult for Little League to function effectively because when your young people wish to enter sporting events one finds there is difficulty in finding enough space and in obtaining the facilities to enable them and our older people to enjoy themselves. Also, the smaller diamond which Little League players use makes it necessary for the league to play on specified fields. This factor makes Little League operation more expensive.

I therefore hope that financial assistance will be given those who manage the Little League and who have worked long and hard to establish the existing facilities. I repeat, the League does not exist in order to create athletes. To reinforce this point may I read from the Little League pledge, printed on the back of the Little League leaflet. It says:

> I trust in God
> I love my country and will respect its laws
> I will play fair and strive to win
> But win or lose I will always do my best

Boys wishing to participate in Little League baseball take this pledge which indicates that the organization is not necessarily designed to produce athletes. I realize that there are only 52 weeks in a year and that almost every organization wants a week set aside for its own purposes. I would not mind combining Little League week with, say, national salad bowl week or pancake week. To some extent, the work carried on by various organizations overlaps in nature, and I should not mind if Little League Week were combined with another national week. I hope the committee will consider the second week in June. That was chosen in preference to one near the end of July; toward the end of July you would have difficulty bringing young people together to play Little League baseball because of the summer holidays.

The second week of June is usually the last week in which we can bring young people together to compete in Little League baseball before the play-offs and exam time. I also think the second week in June fits in best with the over-all program of the organization. I hope this bill will go to committee and that the committee will do a good job of studying and discussing the measure with the people involved in the organization.

Mr. Speaker: Is the House ready for the question?

Establishment of Little League Week

Mr. Bernard Pilon (Chambly): Mr. Speaker, I move:

That the said bill be not now read a second time but that the subject matter thereof be referred to the Standing Committee on Health, Welfare and Social Affairs.

Mr. Speaker: Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the said motion?

Motion (Mr. Pilon) agreed to.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Cinq heures.

Mr. Speaker: Is it the pleasure of the House that we call it five o'clock?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

At five o'clock the House adjourned, without question put, pursuant to standing order.

PRIVILEGE

MR. DUMONT—INTERFERENCE OF MEMBER FOR DOLLARD IN THE PREPARATION OF CBC PROGRAM

Mr. Bernard Dumont (Frontenac): On a question of privilege, Mr. Speaker. I want to remind the House that on Wednesday, January 14, at 2 p.m., I received a phone call at my office, asking me to prepare to appear on a CBC broadcast on Nigeria-Biafra which was to include participants from the four parties represented in the House. At 4 p.m. the same day, the broadcast was cancelled by another telephone call.

Well, on Friday, January 16, at 10.15 p.m. on Format 60, only a representative of the Liberal party appeared on the program. I therefore accuse the Parliamentary Secretary to the Secretary of State for External Affairs and member for Dollard (Mr. Goyer) of having prevented the representatives of the CBC here in Ottawa from preparing a broadcast where the four parties would have been able to make their voices heard and of having requested the Montreal bureau of the CBC to prepare a broadcast where he alone would speak favourably on behalf of the government.

If the Nigeria-Biafra issue is to be presented favourably to Canadian citizens, the voice of the opposition should be heard. I therefore ask that an inquiry be initiated in order to find out who is to be blamed, because the population needs to know the whole truth about the Nigeria-Biafra dispute and must in no way be muzzled by this government, particularly in view of the fact that the Crown Corporation is financed by all Canadians, who have a right to unbiased and detailed information.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Frontenac (Mr. Dumont) has given the Chair advance notice of the question of privilege he intended to bring to the attention of the House today.

I have had since then the opportunity of studying the matter raised by the hon. member. I wish to point out to him that, even though, under the circumstances he set forth, he had a substantiated claim against the parliamentary secretary to the minister or against the CBC, this would not be necessarily a prima facie case of privilege.

I do not see how the special rights or parliamentary privileges of the hon. member have been affected in any way whatsoever under the circumstances he described.

I must reach the conclusion that the matter cannot be considered any further, and I must add that, in view of the fact that the hon. member did not move any motion, his question of privilege cannot be studied any longer by the House.

ROUTINE PROCEEDINGS

INDIAN AFFAIRS AND NORTHERN DEVELOPMENT

MOTION FOR CONCURRENCE IN FIRST REPORT OF STANDING COMMITTEE

On the order: Motions—Mr. Yewchuk:

That the first report of the Standing Committee on Indian Affairs and Northern Development presented on December 16, 1969, be concurred in.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Athabasca.

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (President of the Privy Council): On a point of order, Mr. Speaker, I should like to take exception to the propriety of putting on the order paper at this point the motion standing in the name of the hon. member for Athabasca to which you have just referred.

The basis of my argument will be that as a private member, lacking any authority whatsoever from this particular committee, the hon. member cannot, according to our rules, raise the question he proposes to raise, which amounts to a motion to concur in a substantive proposal, which can only be done by a private member by way of a private member's notice of motion.

Motion for Concurrence in Report

I intend to refer the Chair to a number of precedents which may be cited with respect to this particular course of action and to refer in a more general way to our Standing Orders as they bear on this question. Later I wish to make some reference to the relation which certain of our Standing Orders have to the general policy governing the course of action proposed by the hon. member.

First, with regard to the proposal that the House concur in this particular report, I am advised by members of the committee that though the hon. member for Athabasca may be the vice chairman of the committee, neither he, nor the chairman nor any other member of the committee had any instruction to make this motion to concur in the committee's report. In fact, I am advised that this matter was not discussed in the committee.

I think it must be perfectly clear, therefore, that the hon. member cannot lay any claim to be speaking with the authority of the committee when putting forward this motion. The committee arrived at no such conclusion itself. Further, I suggest it is inconsistent with the hon. member's position as vice chairman of the committee to take this particular action. As vice chairman of the committee he is under an obligation to act fairly with regard to all sides.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): Hon. members opposite laugh at that, which must indicate a certain attitude on their part with regard to the chairmanship—

An hon. Member: Smile when you say that.

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): I notice the Leader of the Opposition laughed at that.

An hon. Member: We are laughing at you.

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): The Leader of the Opposition has suggested from time to time that members of his group might be given positions of responsibility at the committee table, but there is some evidence in his conduct right now to indicate why we should hesitate to accept any of his nominees.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Speaker: Order.

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): It is perfectly clear that the hon. member for Athabasca had no right as vice chairman of the committee to take this course of action. He had no instruction from his fellow members on the committee to do so; he is putting forward this motion merely as a private member and not in any official capacity.

The hon. member for Peace River has raised objection from time to time, both here and in the press, to the absence of consultation concerning the way in which the business of the House is conducted. But there was no consultation on his part with me concerning the kind of action—

Mr. Baldwin: On a question of privilege, Mr. Speaker; on Thursday last I announced publicly in this House to all who were here that I intended to file a notice of motion which would come up in 48 hours.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): Here again, we have an interesting illustration of the attitude of the official opposition with regard to consultation. If consultation on House business is to take place through public announcements or press releases we shall not get very far.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Who taught us that?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I wonder if the discussion on this matter might be limited to the procedural aspects of it.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): Mr. Speaker, I apologize. I was interrupted by hon. gentlemen opposite who perhaps were worried about the merits of their case. I would refer them to the Standing Orders, and may I refer in particular first to the fact that the House, in establishing the Standing Orders, considered the problem of conducting the business of the House in the light of the desirability from time to time of permitting private members to divert the business of the House in order to debate questions of substance which may be of interest to them.

We have several Standing Orders which deal with this question. The first, and perhaps best known, is Standing Order 26, which was amended as recently as last year, and which permits any hon. member to make a motion to divert the planned business of the House for the purpose of discussing a particular public question. As I pointed out, the rights of hon. members in that situation are very carefully circumscribed by the Standing Order.

They were the subject of very extensive discussions, and finally agreed to by the House last year.

Secondly, in the last year or so, we have had a proliferation of motions under Standing Order 43, which is a change in the practice of the House. There have been applications under Standing Order 43, which makes it perfectly clear that, with the unanimous consent of the House, the course of the business may be diverted for the purpose of discussing another matter of substance which has not already been listed as an item of business for the House.

May I point out, Mr. Speaker, that there are obvious reasons of good sense and policy for not permitting individual members in all parts of the House to divert the business of the House which has been proclaimed, and which has been the subject matter of consultation. When I refer to consultation I mean discussion in private with hon. members opposite and not announcements to the press or in the House. Consultation of that kind is the only effective way of putting the business of the country before the House. I may add that it is the responsibility of the government to put it before the House.

I do not contest the hon. member's right to put this motion under Private Members' Notices of Motions, but might I point out that the consequence of accepting the motion put at this time by the hon. member for Athabasca (Mr. Yewchuk) under the heading of "Motions" would be to make it virtually impossible to continue to plan the business of the House, to continue to plan the manner in which the House would deal with the business of the country, because one can foresee here, as has been the case under Standing Orders 26 and 43, that there would be a proliferation of motions by hon. gentlemen opposite to divert the House from the business already planned for that day.

The Standing Orders have provided for a number of situations in which hon. members may seek to divert the House from carrying out its announced business. Their rights in those situations are very carefully circumscribed by the Standing Orders, and I would argue that their rights having been so determined by the House in that way, then the rights of the House as a whole to deal with the business as put before it should not be derogated by this kind of motion. This particular precedent, therefore, should not be established.

I should like to deal with a number of instances in the past that have been drawn to my attention in which there have been motions by private members at the initiative of private members, as opposed to motions by, for example, the chairman of a committee. Here, I cite the example of the hon. member for Gatineau (Mr. Clermont) who has a motion on today's order paper standing in his name, and who did not move it because, I believe, the hon. member for Waterloo (Mr. Saltsman) asked him not to do so today so that there could be further consultations in that regard. It has long been established that the chairmen of committees, who have instructions from their committees, may move concurrence in committee reports under the heading of "Motions". But I would suggest that we should not adopt, and there is no precedent for adopting, a practice whereby substantive questions would be raised for debate at this point rather than the other ways, under the rules.

I refer to two instances. The first was on May 23, 1932, a motion for concurrence by an hon. member in a report which stated that the price of gasoline was too high and recommended that the question be investigated by the Standing Committee on Banking and Commerce. I suggest the effect of adopting that motion would not have been that of stating an opinion on a matter of government policy. In fact, the motion was not adopted on that particular occasion because it was moved that the orders of the day be read, so the question was never brought forth for decision.

I would emphasize that what was involved was a procedural action on the part of the hon. member in that case. He was not seeking to procure a statement of the House on a question of substantive policy; he was raising the question of which of the particular bodies within this chamber should consider a particular question. As such, that particular motion is distinguishable from the kind of motion we have before us today.

The other instance which has been brought to my attention was on May 19, 1947 when the redoubtable former member for Temiscouata, Mr. Jean François Pouliot, at that time moved concurrence in a report which would have had the effect of referring a petition to a special committee on redistribution for its information. There again, the effect of the motion, which was related to the inclusion or non-inclusion of a particular geographic area in the member's riding, was not that of asking for a statement of opinion on a matter of government policy; it was again a procedural motion and, to give the committee an opportunity to discuss the matter, the motion was carried.

I argue that both these motions were of an entirely procedural nature. They did not involve the discussion of a substantive question, raising questions of underlying policy. On that basis, neither of the two precedents should be regarded as restricting you, Mr. Speaker, in your decision. I therefore argue that this being, if not the first time this question has been discussed certainly the first time in recent years, you should have an opportunity now to make a decision.

An hon. Member: Shoot down the committees.

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): I invite Your Honour to make a decision in favour of the House being able effectively to plan the way it will carry on business from day to day. I would therefore ask, Mr. Speaker, that the motion put by the hon. member, being a private members' notice of motion, not be dealt with at this point but be transferred to the appropriate place under the Orders of the Day so that it may be discussed in due course.

An hon. Member: There is not much support for that decision.

Mr. G. W. Baldwin (Peace River): Mr. Speaker, I am glad to have a chance to speak to this point of order, which has been raised by the government House leader, because I think it involves a very important question for Your Honour's consideration.

I should like first of all to deal briefly with the whole question which has been adverted to by the minister from time to time. I think the point concerns the type of motion being made, and it relates to the type of report being considered. The hon. member for Athabasca, as a member of this committee, is entitled to base a motion on a statement contained in the report which reads:

> Your committee recommends that the government of Canada indicate to the world, without delay, that vessels, surface and submarine, passing through Canada's Arctic Archipelago are and shall be subject to the sovereign control and regulation of Canada.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Baldwin: That statement does not ask the government to involve itself in the expenditure of money; it asks the government to get off its iceberg and make a statement on what should be done about Canada's Arctic North. If we are not to move farther in the direction of a presidential form of government, members of the House, and particularly government members as well as those in opposition, must have the right to seize the initiative when the government has failed to do so and put certain types of motions. Because a very important principle is involved I should like to quote from the Standing Orders of the House, beginning with Standing Order 57 which reads

> Whenever a resolution is reported from any Committee of the Whole, a motion to concur in the same shall be forthwith put and decided without debate or amendment.

I ask Your Honour to take note of the mandatory wording, "shall be forthwith put and decided". It may appear that if that rule were to be complied with there could be no debate. May I, therefore, also read standing Order 32(1)(b), which says:

> The following motions are debatable:
> Every motion:
> (b) for the concurrence in a report of a standing or special committee;

Finally, to complete an examination of pertinent Standing Orders, may I read standing order 65(10) which reads:

> In a standing or special committee, the standing orders of the House shall be observed so far as may be applicable, except the standing orders as to the seconding of motions, limiting the number of times of speaking and the length of speeches.

Clearly, the Standing Orders indicate that in committee proceedings you apply the same procedures as are applicable in the House, so far as they may be brought into effect. Consequently, when the committee of the whole House makes a report, according to the Standing Orders of the House that report shall—not may—be subject to a motion of concurrence. I submit Your Honour must consider the Standing Orders I have cited in deciding whether or not a motion to concur must be put. That begs the question, of course, as to who shall be entitled to put the motion.

May I also refer Your Honour to Bourinot's Parliamentary Procedure, Fourth Edition, which provides at page 477 as follows:

> It is the practice to move concurrence in the reports of committees in certain cases. For instance, the reports on printing are invariably agreed to, as they contain recommendations for the printing and distribution of documents, which must be duly authorized by the house—Also reports containing certain opinions or resolutions are frequently concurred in on motion—

Illustrations are given dating back to the time of confederation which show that in our parliamentary history motions of this kind were put to the House. Unquestionably, the House has the right to decide and when a committee has made a report of this kind I submit it would be wrong for Your Honour to deny the House the right of considering any recommendation contained in that report. One cannot compel the government to accept the report because, if it does not like the report, it need only call out its troops to defeat the motion for concurrence. But, I submit our parliamentary history clearly indicates that motions of this kind ought to be entertained by this House. They should be the subject of debate and decision.

May I re-inforce my argument with one more point. Until this particular committee report has been the subject of a motion to concur, it is in limbo. A motion to concur may be moved in this House. The House may also say that the report ought to be sent back to committee and changed, altered or amended. Until that is done there can be no conclusion to this most important report containing extremely important recommendations that are vital to our national security at this particular time.

• (2:30 p.m.)

I cite to Your Honour, from page 692 of Beauchesne's Third Edition, a decision of Mr. Speaker Lemieux:

> The report of a Standing Committee should be considered final only when it is adopted because the House can refer it back to the committee with instruction to amend it in any particular.

As I understand these three propositions, when read together, this report must be put to the House pursuant to the Standing Order. Until a report has been discussed and a decision made with respect to it, it is susceptible to change and referral back to the committee. No one knows where we stand on this matter. This is the situation which exists today. Practice and precedent of the past indicate that reports of this kind have, in fact, been put.

In so far as the right of the hon. member is concerned, I defy the President of the Privy Council (Mr. Macdonald) or any hon. member in this House to indicate that it is the sole privilege of the chairman of a standing committee to put a motion to concur. As far as propriety is concerned, it would certainly be best if this were done as frequently as possible. But if there is a reluctance on the part of the committee chairman to put the motion because it may be embarrassing to the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) or the government, I say that leaves a vacuum which can be entered by any member of the committee. I suggest to Your Honour there is no rule, practice or precedent which denies the right of a member of a committee to put a motion to concur when the chairman of the committee has failed to do so.

The President of the Privy Council said the committee decided it did not want to put the motion. Nothing to that effect appears within the four corners of the committee report. If that was the decision of the committee, it probably would have indicated they were not going to bring in a report and the committee would have acted accordingly. There has been too much of this business of hon. members opposite being strong and bold in words, but weak and snivelling when it comes to action in the House.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Baldwin: It is about time we struck out and reinforced the right of a member of this committee to put this kind of motion to the House for a decision.

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, I rise to support the right of the hon. member for Athabasca (Mr. Yewchuk) to make this motion at this time.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): I hear members across the way expressing surprise. I suppose it will also surprise them if I say that I rise to support the action of the Chair and the table in placing the motion on the order paper at this time.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): I listened with great interest to the non-political statement made by the President of the Privy Council (Mr. Macdonald). When he began his statement, he said he was going to give us a number of precedents, Standing Orders and citations in support of his case. Being interested in this and being anxious to deal with any of these if I could, I took pen and paper in hand ready to take down all of these precedents, citations and Standing Orders. My sheet of paper is still almost blank.

Some hon. Members: Shame!

Motion for Concurrence in Report

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): I have noted 1932 and 1947, two years in which he indicated attempts to move motions something like this were not allowed.

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): On a question of privilege, Your Honour. The hon. member may not have been listening too well. I said the exact opposite to what he just said.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): I thank my hon. friend for correcting me. He gave these two as motions that were allowed, but he tried to make the point that something entirely different was involved in them than is involved in the motion now before us. In the matter of citations from the authorities and Standing Orders, my sheet of paper is still blank. The President of the Privy Council just does not have any that he can give to this House.

An hon. Member: It is another white paper.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): In this area of the right of a private member to move a motion for concurrence in the report of a committee, our authorities say very little. At least there is nothing that I can find that denies the right of the hon. member for Athabasca or any private member of this House to place such a motion on the order paper and have it considered. As a matter of fact, I want by way of parenthesis to make that point, namely, that this right is open not only to the member for Athabasca, but that it is open to any member of this House.

Once a committee has made a report, that report has been given to the House. It is up to the House to decide whether it wants to adopt it or otherwise, not the chairman of the committee, not some individual member of the committee, not some government members of the committee, but it is up to the House to decide. The only way the House can decide is by having a motion placed before it.

I have attempted to chide the President of the Privy Council for not at least giving us one or two citations, so I better have some to offer on the other side. I draw Your Honour's attention to parts of citations 321 and 325 of Beauchesne's Fourth Edition. I said parts, but before I am through I may read all of those citations. Citation 321 reads:

> If it be expedient the House appoint the consideration of the report of a Select Committee for a future day, by a motion made on the presentation of the report, or by a subsequent motion for that purpose.

[Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre).]

I submit that when the report was tabled on December 16, no motion was made then for its consideration. What we have now is a subsequent motion made by the hon. member for Athabasca. I continue with the citation:

> The House may appoint the consideration of the report of a Select Committee for a future day by giving forty-eight hours' notice. It will then be taken up when "motions" are called at the commencement of the sitting.

This is as plain as it can be, Mr. Speaker. The member for Athabasca gave 48 hours' notice. Having given 48 hours' notice, where do the Chair and the table place the motion on the order paper? They look at citation 321 and see that it should be placed under motions. That is where it is, and I submit that is where it has the right to be.

I now ask Your Honour and members who are interested to listen to citation 325:

> (1) When the report does not contain any resolutions, recommendations or other propositions for consideration of the House, it does not appear that any further proceedings in reference to it as a report are necessary. Every session, Select Committees make reports of this description, containing a statement of facts, or of the evidence on the subject of enquiry; but as they do not contain any proposition which can be agreed to by the House, they are simply printed for the information of the members.

There are many reports like that, but that hardly applies to the report on Arctic sovereignty. I continue:

> (2) Concurrence in reports from Select Committees is, in non-controversial cases, moved when motions are called by the Speaker during routine business.

That often happens where a motion for concurrence is agreed to on all sides of the House.

> If it be expedient, the House will appoint the consideration of a report for a future day. By a motion made for that purpose in the British House, the report of a committee presented during a previous session has been taken into consideration.

• (2:40 p.m.)

Paragraph (3) refers to Standing Order 41 which is now Standing Order 42 of our revised rules and it states:

> —notice must be given for the motion for concurrence in reports of committees, said concurrence being a resolution of the House. If such a motion is brought up without notice, it can only be allowed to pass by unanimous consent.

There again is a clear instruction not only to the hon. member for Athabasca but to the Chair and the table. Here is a motion for concurrence in a report. Since it will not be allowed to pass by unanimous consent it has to be given under Standing Order 42 and that is what was done.

Then paragraph (4) of Citation 325 reads:

When a motion is made for concurrence in a Select Committee Report, it is competent for the House to adopt it, reject it, refer it back to the committee or decide that consideration of the report will take place "this day six months".

I thought since I referred to Citation 325 I should read the whole of it, but surely the crucial part of it is in paragraph (3) which gives the right, under what is now Standing Order 42, for a motion to be made and dealt with under motions for concurrence in the report of a committee. I emphasize that there is nothing in either of those citations, and I cannot find anything anywhere else, which says this right is limited to the chairman of the standing committee or says it is even limited to a member of a standing committee. It says the House shall make this decision, and every time there is any reference as to when the House shall make such a decision it says it shall be done under Routine Proceedings. It shall be done under motions, which is precisely where it is on today's Order Paper.

I submit, therefore, that in the absence of any prohibition against the hon. member for Athabasca making this motion at this point, and in the light of statements that this is the place to deal with motions for concurrence in a report of a committee, that the hon. member had every right to ask that his motion be placed where it is and that Your Honour had every right to see that it was put on the Order Paper in this place and that it be called at this time.

The other comment I wish to make is perhaps in the vein in which the President of the Privy Council (Mr. Macdonald) was speaking. At least, in a sense, it is in the same vein. He talked about the implications of this course of action in relation to the planning of the business of Parliament. I should like to talk about the implications of what he wants to deny to this House in relation to the professed aim to strengthen the work of our committees.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): What on earth is the value of strengthening our committees, so they can make these strong reports and say the excellent things that are said in this report, if those statements are to die once the reports are tabled in the House of Commons? I do not have them in front of me, and perhaps it is a good thing I do not or I would be reading at length from the reports of one of our procedural committees back in November and December of 1968 when we went into this whole business of the work of committees and our desire to strengthen them. This is like motherhood around this place. We all support this. Committees are wonderful. They must be given more to do and more support. Private members on the government side welcome them because in committees they can speak their minds; they can pass resolutions and bring in reports and say something. To what effect is the result of all that if, when the report is presented in the House, it is printed not even in Hansard but in Votes and Proceedings, which not very many people see, and that is the end of it? If we are going to talk about implications let us talk about the implications of what we are trying to do for our committee structure and accept the fact that when a committee goes to the trouble of making the kind of report this committee did we should have the right to deal with it here in the House of Commons.

I recognize that there are not very many precedents for this being done. It is the usual and traditional thing for the chairman of a committee or for someone designated by the committee to make the report, but there is no rule under which such a person does it. There is no rule which says no one else can do it. In fact, as I have already said, I go so far as to say that any private member of the House should be able to make the motion. Supposing for example the hon. member for Athabasca had been removed from the committee after it had made its report, would he not still have the right to move the motion? And what about some of the rest of us?

In any case, because there are no rules against it, because this is in line with what we are trying to do to strengthen the work of committees, and because Your Honour and the table saw fit to put the motion where it is, I suggest it should be called and proceeded with at this time.

[Translation]

Mr. André Fortin (Lotbinière): Mr. Speaker, Standing Order 51 of the House of Commons reads as follows:

51. Whenever Mr. Speaker is of the opinion that a motion offered to the House is contrary to the rules and privileges of Parliament, he shall apprise the House thereof immediately, before putting the question thereon, and quote the standing order or authority applicable to the case.

Mr. Speaker, the President of the Privy Council (Mr. Macdonald) is asking that you consider the motion of the member for Athabasca (Mr. Yewchuk) as affecting the privileges and rules of Parliament and, therefore, that you reject it.

In that respect, Mr. Speaker, I rather agree with the two previous speakers. While I agree with their comments, I would like to put forward the arguments which, perhaps, they have not stressed enough.

Mr. Speaker, I think the problem is of paramount importance. In fact, the question is whether a member can influence in any way the proceedings of the House or its committees without violating the Standing Orders.

Mr. Speaker, I suggest that if the motion or the point of order of the President of the Privy Council were accepted, the Chair would seem to favour force, instead of democracy. It seems to me that for some years, the successive majority governments have been tempted, because of their numerical strength, to impose their views on the House and the committees.

Mr. Speaker, I wish to recall that members of the Opposition have always been anxious to co-operate with the government with a view to speeding up the proceedings by agreement, as the President of the Privy Council said, among the various party representatives. But this has nothing to do whatsoever with the power or basic rights of a House member.

Mr. Speaker, an attempt was made to improve committee work. I would point out two precedents of the last session to show the government's negative attitude. It will certainly be remembered that the government disagreed on the contents of a committee report and that on another occasion, it was defeated through its failure to maintain a majority in this House. The Chair was made aware of the situation. Now, on those two occasions, the President of the Privy Council stepped in and succeeded so well in imposing his views on the dispute that the matter was referred to the Committee on Privileges and Elections.

Mr. Speaker, I would humbly submit that instead of accepting the proposal of the President of the Privy Council, the Chair recommend that the subject-matter of the dispute be referred to the Committee on Privileges and Elections, since the rights of the members are involved.

• (2:50 p.m.)

Mr. Speaker, this aspect is more important than is generally believed. It is agreed that hon. members, the government, the opposition parties have rights.

But when we ask the ministers for information during the oral question period, we know what happens. Either we receive a haughty answer, or none at all. Hon. members cannot demand a reply, as at that moment Your Honour steps in to say that the minister can rightfully act that way. Even at the information level, the part of the private member is practically nil. It is the same within the committees. When a private member wants to say something, to put forward a motion, right away the majority principle is invoked and put in operation and he is defeated.

When a private member tries to bring in a motion giving rise to an expenditure of public funds, the Speaker says: "A private member cannot do this."

Mr. Speaker, since the adoption of Standing Orders 75A, 75B and 75C, the length of the debate is restricted and is determined by the majority in order to further reduce the part played by private members.

I suggest that this is a basic question of very great importance, and that the decision that the Chair may give shortly will protect the rights of the minority, those of private members, and not necessarily those of the strong.

In my view, some government members are really doing a good job in using their strength to crush the private members.

Now, if the part played by a private member is reduced to nothing, I wonder what we are doing here?

Mr. Speaker, you agree, I feel, that hon. members should fully and consciously do their duty, that they should take part in the discussions and bring in motions, in accordance with the Standing Orders and the practices of the house.

Hon. members are waiting for your decision, in order that their right to intervene, not to foist their views on the House concerning the order of proceedings, be protected. Hon. members honestly wish to carry out the business of the house.

[English]

Mr. Ian Watson (Laprairie): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. As a result of certain remarks made by the hon. member for Peace River, I feel I should clarify one or two points. Just before the Christmas recess the hon. member for Athabasca prematurely attempted to move a motion for concurrence in this report. Because he had failed to give 48 hours' notice, I understand his motion was not accepted at that time. Immediately after that attempt to move the motion a meeting of the steering committee of the Committee on Indian Affairs and Northern Development was held. At this meeting, which was held either in the afternoon or the day after the attempt to move the motion, the consensus was it was neither wise nor desirable for the committee to ask for concurrence in its recommendations. The reason for this consensus was that the committee did not want unanimity in respect of its recommendations contained in the report to be in any way diluted by any artificial divisiveness which might be the result of a motion for concurrence in the House.

In respect of the comment made by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre, surely the committee is the master of its own tactics. If it decides by making a very strong report that it can push the government in the right direction, then it should have the right to decide on the tactics to be employed. If it should be the committee's decision, as it certainly was in this instance, to deliberately not ask for concurrence, then surely it is in its power to take this position. I submit it should be obvious to everyone in this House that any kind of division in respect of this extremely urgent and important question could be misinterpreted outside the House and would not be in Canada's interest.

Mr. Speaker: Order. I appreciate the point being made by the hon. member for Laprairie, but it would seem that if we are to continue the discussion at this time it should be limited to the procedural aspect of the matter. It would seem that we are getting more and more into the substance of the report. When there is a discussion today or later on in respect of the report itself, it would seem to me that might be the proper time to bring up the kind of argument being made now by the hon. member for Laprairie and perhaps by other hon. members taking part in the debate.

I realize how important this point is and I have no intention of limiting the discussion. However, I invite hon. members who take part in the debate in respect of the procedural aspect to limit their contribution to this aspect of the matter which is the procedural point raised by the hon. President of the Privy Council.

Hon. Marcel Lambert (Edmonton West): Mr. Speaker, I have no intention of referring to authorities. However, I wish to make two very brief arguments. First of all, in complete answer to the hon. member for Laprairie, I would say that the report, having been presented to the House by the committee, belongs to the House and not to the committee. That is the short answer. The committee has reported to the House. It has presented the report. The report then belongs to the House and not to the committee. Therefore, whether the committee decides yea or nay with regard to continuance is immaterial. This is a decision for the House. This was amply pointed out by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre and in the citations to which he referred.

The second point is that the situation in respect of the rephasing of the recommendations so-called, and participation of hon. members in the business of the House, is completely contrary to the situation in this regard as argued by the President of the Privy Council. When he suggests that this House must be subservient at all times for all things to the dictates of the cabinet, he misstates the situation. The situation is that the cabinet is responsible to this House. Let us underline that fact.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): Somehow or other, it seems that hon. gentlemen across the way who occupy the treasury benches now have the idea that this House at all times will do everything they think fit. That is not so, Mr. Speaker. They are part of this House and are responsible to this House.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): There is no question about that. If there is to be any validity to the importance of committees, surely it is quite wrong for the government House leader to argue that it is the chairman, who is there at the behest of the government, who should move concurrence in the report. We have often seen examples where a chairman who was too independent was changed. Something was done or something happened. Perhaps he was just not reappointed. Pressures are brought to bear. Now, if a committee is to do its job it may bring in recommendations which are adverse to what the government is thinking. Well, the government does not have a monopoly on, shall we say, having the right conclusions. Goodness knows, this government makes more mistakes than any other group of mortal men. But here we have a House committee, composed of members from all sides, which makes a recommendation which may prove to be embarrassing and which may be critical. If the House and Your Honour should accept the argument of the government House leader, then any criticism can be stultified at the whim of the cabinet.

The report does not belong to the cabinet or to the committee. It belongs to this House.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): True enough, it is customary or at least it is a matter of courtesy that the chairman shall present the report and then ask for concurrence in it. But in his absence, it may be presented by the vice-chairman or by any other committee member on behalf of the chairman. It is not the chairman's motion—not at all. It is the motion of the member who proposes the adoption of the report. In this case, I would say everything has been done properly. I would say also that the strictures advanced by the government House leader are a reflection on the Chair and the officers who decided that the motion should be put where it now stands on the Order Paper.

• (3:00 p.m.)

Since it has been placed there, the hon. member for Athabasca has a perfect right to put his motion for the consideration of the House. I ask hon. members to accept this view, and trust I have persuaded Your Honour that it is the right course.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Paul St. Pierre (Coast Chilcotin): I assure Your Honour that I shall heed your warning to speak directly to the subject and that I shall try to be extremely brief.

I make no apology for entering this debate. I raised this question in the House when the so-called watchdogs in the opposition had not uttered a single yelp. They are interested in this subject very late. I am one of those who feel that the government of Canada has been dilatory in this matter; I believe it should have moved long before now. I am also one of the committee members involved in this report. To speak directly to the question at issue, I believe there is a difference between a recommendation from a committee as to a policy line, and detailed, close recommendations involving the expenditure of public money, acceptance of which by the government would not be merely the acceptance of a principle.

[Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West).]

The hon. member for Peace River gave the impression—I do not suggest he was trying to mislead the House—that by accepting these recommendations the government would merely be accepting a certain principle voiced by myself and by a large number of other members of this House that Arctic sovereignty must be proclaimed and proclaimed soon. But a reading of the report does not bear this out. There is one paragraph on Arctic sovereignty, an extremely important one with which I fully agree, but there are others which involve the expenditure of money. On page 210 of Votes and Proceedings dated December 16, 1969, we read, for instance:

> Your committee recommends that appropriate agencies of the government move immediately to conduct a search in the Arctic to gather information on the following—

Then a number of subjects for research are listed.

A little later we read a recommendation that further research studies be undertaken into the effects of pollution and so on. These are recommendations intended to influence the government, and I certainly hope they do, but I believe there is a fundamental difference between the expression of a point of view by a committee with the intention of putting pressure on a government, and the setting out of detailed policy which amounts, in effect, to a committee taking on the job of the cabinet by spelling out policy in detail—policy which the government would then be obliged to follow to the smallest particular.

Mr. Harold E. Winch (Vancouver East): I hope I may have your indulgence, Mr. Speaker, while I draw to your attention a matter which cannot be allowed to pass without comment, and one which is disturbing me immensely. I refer to the fact that during the discussion this afternoon, for the first time to my knowledge in the 17 years in which I have had the privilege of being a member of this House, an hon. member—a member on the government side, it so happens—has seen fit while talking about a matter before the House, to disclose the discussions, consideration and decision of a steering committee of a committee of this House. This is a matter of the utmost importance.

A steering committee is appointed by a committee, and it reports only to the standing committee which appointed it. The disclosure to this House of the discussion, consideration and decision of a steering committee establishes such an extraordinary precedent that I feel obliged to draw it to Your Honour's attention. If this practice is to be allowed in the future, Your Honour should make it known.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Speaker: I thank hon. members for their learned and useful contributions to the debate during the last hour or so. All hon. members who have spoken have pointed out that this is a very important matter. The decision which the Chair is called upon to take is, of course, an important one.

As hon. members may have guessed, this matter has been under consideration for some days and it is as a result of this consideration that the Chair has come to at least the temporary conclusion that the motion of the hon. member for Athabasca should be placed where it has been placed on the order paper, that is, under Motions.

I doubt whether I can agree with the suggestion of the hon. member for Edmonton West that the raising of this matter as a point of order at this time is in any way a reflection on the Chair. I must say I cannot agree. If the proposed motion had been placed under private members' notices of motions, I assume the honourable and learned member for Peace River would have raised a point of order seeking to have it upgraded to where it is placed at the present time. I would think the intervention of the President of the Privy Council is quite in order in the sense that I fully expected that the points he has made would be made, and that the Chair would then be placed in the position of having to review the matter further.

The only two precedents which have been quoted in the course of the debate are those which go back to 1932 and 1947. It is of interest to note that in both instances a member of the House who was not the chairman of the committee concerned was allowed to make a motion of the type now standing in the name of the hon. member for Athabasca. In the absence of any precedent contrary to this situation in previous years it was felt by the Chair that the motion should be given the precedence which it has been granted on the order paper. I realized that it would be in order for the Chair to give the matter very serious consideration within the next 24 hours or so in order that a lucid, logical and understandable ruling might be made, because in a way this is a precedent setting situation—the two precedents which were referred to by the President of the Privy Council did not include a procedural discussion, so they are not finally binding on the Chair.

The direction which the Chair tends to take at the present time is obvious. It was as a result of lengthy consideration that the motion of the hon. member for Athabasca was placed where it is, and I would think this is the decision which should be reached. I shall not prejudice the matter, however. If hon. members will allow me to do so I will reflect further on the matter and give a ruling within the next 24 hours which I hope will be acceptable to the House.

There is a difficulty in the sense that if a decision were made tomorrow and if, perchance, the decision were favourable to the hon. member for Athabasca, he would be called upon to make his contribution—and perhaps subsequent contributions would be made to the debate—in conflict with the arrangement which has now been concluded to the effect that tomorrow would be an opposition day. I would not consider the hon. member's motion as an opposition day subject, but I would consider it to be a committee day, in a sense. It might be that discussions should be held between representatives of the parties to decide if, theoretically a decision were reached in the hon. member's favour, a debate on the motion might be postponed to a subsequent day in order to allow the House to devote itself entirely to the motion which stands on the order paper at the present time in the name of the hon. member for Mackenzie. This having been said, I will postpone a decision until tomorrow, if hon. members will allow me to do so.

• (3:10 p.m.)

Mr. Baldwin: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker, I am sure there will be the usual willingness to co-operate, in consultation with the President of the Privy Council, as to an appropriate time when Your Honour's decision might be made.

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): I see you are learning.

Mr. Baldwin: What was that?

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): I said, I see you are learning.

Questions

QUESTIONS ON THE ORDER PAPER

(Questions answered orally are indicated by an asterisk.)

CBC COVERAGE, 1968 LIBERAL CONVENTION

Question No. 443—Mr. Broadbent:

1. For the Liberal Convention held in Ottawa in April 1968, what was the total coverage given to the convention by CBC (a) English radio and television (b) French radio and television?

2. What sessions of the Liberal Convention were broadcast "live" by the CBC radio and television and what was the total time of such coverage?

[Translation]

Hon. Gérard Pelletier (Secretary of State): I am informed by the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation as follows: Since this convention was a leadership contest, extensive coverage was given on CBC English and French radio and television networks. Combined total radio and TV coverage which included live coverage of speeches, voting for leadership candidates etc., amounted to approximately 43 hours on the English networks and 24 hours on the French networks. Of these amounts approximately 31 hours on the English networks and 19 hours on the French networks were devoted to live coverage from the floor of the convention.

CBC COVERAGE, 1969 NDP CONVENTION

Question No. 444—Mr. Broadbent:

1. For the New Democratic Convention held in Winnipeg in October, 1969, what was the total coverage given to the convention by CBC (a) English radio and television (b) French radio and television?

2. What sessions of the New Democratic Party Convention were broadcast "live" by the CBC radio and television and what was the total time of such coverage?

[Translation]

Hon. Gérard Pelletier (Secretary of State): I am informed by the CBC as follows: The combined total radio and TV coverage of this biennial convention amounted to approximately three hours on the English networks and 1⅓ hours on the French networks. While there were numerous actuality clips used during the period of the convention, the only live coverage in full from the floor was the hour-long closing address of T. C. Douglas on the English networks.

[Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale).]

NORTHUMBERLAND STRAIT CROSSING

Question No. 452—Mr. Macquarrie:

1. Are any officers of any department of the Government of Canada studying the feasibility of the building, or in any way giving attention to a permanent crossing between New Brunswick and Prince Edward Island across the Northumberland Strait?

2. What was the estimate of Colonel Edward Churchill as to the total cost of such a crossing?

3. On what date was such estimate presented to the government?

4. Have the 4.98 miles of railway on the New Brunswick side of the proposed crossing been declared surplus material and, if not, what plans are being made for disposal of this railway spur line?

5. In each of the years since 1962, what was the total amount expended on research and construction for the Northumberland crossing?

6. Has the Government of Canada received any offers from private firms to construct such a crossing and, if so, from whom and what was the response of the government in each case?

7. Has the Government of Canada any indication that any provincial government is giving consideration to proposals from private interests concerning the building of such a crossing?

Hon. Arthur Laing (Minister of Public Works): So far as the Department of Public Works is concerned: 1. No.

2. $176 million including prior expenditures as listed in Part 5.

3. January 24, 1969.

4. Yes. The rails and ties have been declared surplus and have been disposed of through Crown Assets Disposal Corporation to the Canadian National Railway.

5. Expenditure by fiscal years:

Fiscal Year	Amount
1961-62	$ 9,141
1962-63	49,296
1963-64	499,796
1964-65	1,239,077
1965-66	1,650,101
1966-67	4,317,352
1967-68	4,764,733
1968-69	3,905,052
1969-70 (to November 1969)	299,801
Total	$16,734,349

Note: The above figures include all payments relating to consultants, land acquisition and construction.

6. A consortium of contractors represented by Northumberland Consultants Limited last summer presented to government officials an outline of the elements of a proposal to construct the crossing on the basis of private financing. Northumberland Consultants Limited was advised that a firm proposal, based on the outline discussed and supported by adequate assurances with regard to private financing, would be considered for presentation to the government. No such firm proposal has resulted.

7. No.

RAILWAY TRACK RELOCATION GRANTS

Question No. 459—Mr. Thomas (Moncton):

In the last three years, have any grants been made from the Railway Grade Crossing Fund to cities, towns or municipalities for the specific purpose of railway track relocation and, if so, to which cities, towns or municipalities and in what amounts?

Mr. Gérard Loiselle (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Transport): The Canadian Transport Commission advises as follows: Grants from the Railway Grade Crossing Fund are made to railway applicants for track relocation only when the purpose of the relocation is the elimination of existing level railway-highway crossings. Two such grants were authorized by the Canadian Transport Commission as follows: (1) $500,000 to the Canadian National Railways, in October, 1967, for relocation of the Sorel Subdivision in the Towns of St. Bruno-de-Montarville, St. Hubert and Boucherville and the City of Jacques Cartier in the Province of Quebec; (2) to the Canadian Pacific Railway Company, in January, 1969, for relocation of the Halifax Subdivision in the Town of Windsor, Province of Nova Scotia.

CAROLINE POST OFFICE TENDERERS

Question No. 544—Mr. Thompson (Red Deer):

1. How many firms tendered on the construction of the Caroline Post Office?

2. What are the amounts of the tenders and the names of the contractors?

3. What sub-contractors were not paid by the general contractor and what are the amounts?

4. Other than a percentage deposit, what standards had to be met in order to tender on this contract?

5. Does the previous record of a firm have any bearing on acceptance of a tender?

6. If a firm fails to pay its sub-contractors, is its name removed from future lists to tender on contracts?

7. What protection does a sub-contractor receive when the contractor does not pay for the work he completed?

Hon. Arthur Laing (Minister of Public Works): 1. Five.

2. Contractors are: Dynacon Construction, Calgary, Alberta, $24,014; Bond & Leitch (Calgary) Ltd., Calgary, Alberta, $24,780; Jason Construction, Calgary, Alberta, $24,950; F. Avery Construction (Division of A.N. Holdings Ltd.), Stettler, Alberta, $26,488; W. R. Sandquiet Construction Ltd., Red Deer, Alberta, $32,368.

After tenders were called, it was decided to make certain changes in the work. In accordance with departmental policy, the three lowest bidders on the original tender were asked to submit new quotations.

Two of the three low bidders submitted the following tenders: Dynacon Construction, $22,151; Bond & Leitch (Calgary) Ltd., $22,450.

3. Sub-contractors claiming unpaid accounts are: Menzies & Herbert Ltd., Red Deer, Alberta, $968.00; Westview Plumbing & Heating, Rocky Mountain House, Alberta, $1,880.00; Dunrite Plasterers, Red Deer, Alberta, $450.00; Spruce View Co-op, Spruce View, Alberta, $14.40; Heathfield & Hilderman, Spruce View, Alberta, $493.50; V. R. Nielson, Spruce View, Alberta, $12.00; Bob Jorgenson, Spruce View, Alberta, $152.60; Revelstoke Building Materials Limited, Calgary, Alberta, $1,072.29; H. Kenda Agencies, Red Deer, Alberta, $209.50;

Harold Ogilvy, Red Deer, Alberta, $180.00; The Red Deer House of Decorating, Red Deer, Alberta, $463.60.

4. Government Contract Regulations do not require deposits on tenders under $25,000. Tenders must be submitted on forms supplied by the Department.

5. Yes.

6. Since tenders are mainly obtained by public advertisement, past performance on payment of accounts is a factor in determining acceptability of tender or alternately requiring the posting of a labour and materials payment bond.

7. Clause 21 of the general conditions of the contract permits Her Majesty to discharge lawful obligations of, and satisfy lawful claims against the contractor or a sub-contractor arising out of the execution of the work to the extent that moneys are available to do so under the contract.

CBC "WEEKEND" PROGRAM—APPEARANCE OF JAMES HARDING

Question No. 638—Mr. Dinsdale:

1. Was James Harding on the CBC Weekend Program on Sunday, November 30, 1969?

2. How much exposure in time was he given on national television?

3. What are Mr. Harding's credentials and, on whose behalf was he speaking?

4. What was the purpose of Mr. Harding's television appearance?

[Translation]

Hon. Gérard Pelletier (Secretary of State): I am informed by the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation as follows: 1. Yes.

2. 10 minutes, 45 seconds.

3. Mr. Harding is considered to be one of the more prominent spokesmen in Canada for the "new left". He is a former teaching assistant at Simon Fraser University and was a guest speaker at the recent Liberal party conference at Harrison Hot Springs. He spoke for himself on the CBC program.

4. The purpose of Mr. Harding's appearance was to provide a significant viewpoint about the Canadian political scene.

COST OF UNUSED DESIGN FOR NATIONAL DEFENCE BUILDING

Question No. 646—Mr. MacLean:

1. What was the total cost of the unused design for the Department of National Defence building which was to have been built in the LeBreton Flats area in Ottawa?

[Mr. Laing.]

2. What was the cost to (a) the Department of Public Works (b) the Department of National Defence (c) any other government departments or agencies?

Mr. Yves Forest (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Privy Council): 1. $1,355,-885.95.

2. (a) Cost to Department of Public Works, $1,355,885.95; Salary of D.N.D. personnel seconded to D.P.W. $10,458.00; Total cost to Department of Public Works, $1,366,343.95. (b) $372,576 for salaries and travel for a planning group which varied in strength from three to seven personnel over a five year period. $33,047 for consultant services. (c) Not applicable.

*NATIONAL FILM BOARD RENTAL FEE

Question No. 668—Mr. Fairweather:

1. Is the National Film Board proposing to charge a film rental fee effective January 1, 1970 and, if so, will schools and other educational institutions be exempt from paying the rental fee?

2. Were the budgetary implications of the new policy discussed with provincial departments of education before the announcement about change in policy?

[Translation]

Hon. Gérard Pelletier (Secretary of State): Mr. Speaker, I am informed by the National Film Board as follows:

1. The National Film Board proposes to institute a service charge for the use of its films, effective January 1, 1970. Schools and other educational institutions will not be exempt from paying this service charge if they wish to use NFB material.

2. The budgetary implications of this new policy were discussed with provincial departments of education in New Brunswick, Nova Scotia, Prince Edward Island and Newfoundland, before the change in policy was made known; elsewhere, provincial departments of education were consulted shortly after they received, in the third week in November, a letter intimating the change in policy.

SMALL BUSINESSES LOANS ACT VIOLATIONS

Question No. 693—Mr. Rondeau:

1. Did the Minister of Finance receive complaints from ACEF of Montreal concerning violations by finance companies of the Small Businesses Loans Act and what is the date of each complaint?

2. What companies were mentioned in these complaints?

3. Did the Minister of Finance order an enquiry into the cases of violation submitted by ACEF?

4. Have any sanctions been applied and, if so, what were they?

5. Has the Minister granted the request of ACEF to exercise a closer control in the administration of the Small Businesses Loans Act?

Hon. E. J. Benson (Minister of Finance): It is assumed that the question intended to refer to the Small Loans Act rather than to the Small Businesses Loans Act. 1. Letters of complaint were received in 1969 by the Superintendent of Insurance from the Association Coopérative d'Économie Familiale. Copies of these letters were sent by ACEF to the Minister of Finance. The letters that contained direct reference to companies licensed under the Small Loans Act were dated April 11, 1969, April 22, 1969 and July 3, 1969.

2. Beneficial Finance Co. of Canada, Household Finance Corporation of Canada and Niagara Finance Company Limited.

3. The basis for the complaints was investigated by the office of the Superintendent of Insurance.

4. It was considered that no violation of the Small Loans Act had occurred; consequently no sanctions were necessary.

5. No such action was considered necessary since the administration of the Small Loans Act is, and has been, carried out in a satisfactory manner.

DEPARTMENT OF NATIONAL REVENUE—USE OF COMPUTERS

Question No. 718—Mr. McCleave:

1. Does the Department of National Revenue use computer-operated machines to send out assessment notices to taxpayers and, if so, how much did the computer cost?

2. How many assessment notices does it deal with daily?

3. How many different types of letters is the computer programmed to send?

4. Were any parts of the information supplied in answer to this question given by the computer itself and, if so, which?

Hon. Jean-Pierre Côté (Minister of National Revenue): 1. Yes. The Department of National Revenue, Taxation, has two large and one small computer systems which are used for centralized processing of individual taxpayer returns, accounting functions in respect of individual taxpayers and payroll deductions as well as research projects and statistical programs. The processing of individual returns is done on these computers and notices of assessments are printed by printers which are part of these systems. The purchase price of these systems is $5,073,000.

2. The 1969 assessing program has one or two "outputs" per week depending on workloads. At peak filing time in the 1969 program the output of assessments was over 600,000 per week—321,831 on the highest day.

3. The computer is not programmed to send actual letters as such. In respect of assessments of returns, the computer is programmed to print up to four of 99 different messages in either English or French on notices of assessment. Where such messages do not fit typewritten explanations are sent. In the areas of other functions, forms in respect of individual accounts including instalment payments and payroll deduction accounting forms to employers are used on which various messages are computer generated. There are ten such forms.

4. The information supplied re question 2 was obtained from computer generated statistics.

REPLACEMENT OF STORM WINDOWS, CENTRE BLOCK

Question No. 747—Mr. Diefenbaker:

1. What was the total cost of the replacement in 1969 of the storm windows on the Centre Block of the Parliament Buildings?

2. In what year were the previous storm windows installed?

Hon. Arthur Laing (Minister of Public Works): 1. In 1969, four storm windows were replaced in Rooms 103A and 105A at a total cost of $280.

2. Various storm windows were installed during the past ten years as per individual Member's request and approval by the Sergeant-at-Arms.

Questions

PETITION RESPECTING CJCL-TV PROGRAMMING

Question No. 755—Mr. Peddle:

1. Has the Northern Service of CBC received a petition from Labrador City, requesting a change in programming on station CJCL-TV, to allow the showing of movies on Saturday night, and hockey rebroadcasts on Saturday afternoon?

2. Will CBC accede to that request and, if so, when will the change in programming commence?

[Translation]

Hon. Gérard Pelletier (Secretary of State): I am informed by the CBC that the Corporation has received a brief from Labrador City and that the broadcasting service provided to the area is presently being reviewed.

REMISSION OF CERTAIN TAXES FOR AIRLINE COMPANIES

Question No. 769—Mr. Crouse:

1. Under what Order in Council are Canadian airline companies eligible for remission of customs duties, sales and excise taxes on the purchase of aircraft and parts to be used in international service?

2. Were companies with extensive international operations permitted to defer payment of taxes on the domestic portion of their operations until the year end and, if so, who made the ruling to permit such deferments and under what authority?

3. Was permission for such deferments rescinded recently and, if so, by whom and under what authority?

Hon. Jean-Pierre Côté (Minister of National Revenue): 1. Order in Council P.C. 1966-18/1495, dated August 10, 1966.

2. Companies with extensive international operations were permitted to defer payment of taxes on certain aircraft used in a combination of domestic and international service until the year end. This deferment of taxes on the domes ic portion of the aircraft was necessary as the extent to which the aircraft was used domestically was not known until year end and an accurate calculation of the amount of sales tax to be remi.ted was not possible until that time.

3. The application of the Order was suspended temporarily but was reinstated pending a new submission to Council to replace the present Order.

FARM IMPLEMENT PRICES COMMISSION

Question No. 784—Mr. Diefenbaker:

1. What was the date the Commission on Farm Implement Prices was set up?

2. When is a final report by the Commission to be expected?

[Mr. Laing.]

3. How many members are on the Commission?

4. What is the total expenditure by the Commission to date?

5. What is the anticipated total expenditure that will be made by or for the Commission by the time the final report is received by the government?

Mr. J. E. Walker (Parliamentary Secretary to Prime Minister): 1. The Royal Commission on Farm Machinery was appointed by Order-in-Council 1966-978 on May 26, 1966.

2. By mid-1970.

3. One.

4. $1,288,635 to December 31, 1969.

5. $1,581,409.

COST OF BILINGUALISM AND BICULTURALISM COMMISSION

Question No. 809—Mr. Mather:

What, in dollars, has been the cost to date of the Bilingual and Bicultural Commission?

Mr. J. E. Walker (Parliamentary Secretary to Prime Minister): Total cost of the Royal Commission on Bilingualism and Biculturalism to December 31, 1969, is $8,433,162.

UNION OF PRAIRIE PROVINCES AND NORTHWEST TERRITORIES

Question No. 834—Mr. Robinson:

To the knowledge of the federal government, have the Provinces of Manitoba, Saskatchewan and Alberta discussed unity with the Northwest Territories and, if so, is the government prepared to consider this proposal?

Mr. J. E. Walker (Parliamentary Secretary to Prime Minister): No.

QUESTIONS PASSED AS ORDERS FOR RETURNS

GOVERNMENT PUBLIC RELATIONS SERVICES

Question No. 217—Mr. Orlikow:

1. Which government departments have made arrangements either by contract or any other method with private public relations firms to publicize the work, the programs, the activities of each department or its personnel?

2. How much did each department agree to pay to the public relations firms involved?

3. Were the arrangements made following competitive bidding and, if not, what criteria were used in choosing the firms concerned?

Return tabled.

EXPO '70—COST TO GOVERNMENT

Question No. 362—Mr. Howe:

1. What is the total sum set aside by the federal Treasury to pay the cost of Canada's participation in EXPO '70, Osaka, Japan?

2. What is the cost of the building programme, the musical and entertainment programme and the social programme?

3. Have grants been made to individuals or organizations who have been invited to participate in this Exposition and, if so, what are the names of the individuals or organizations and the amount of the grant provided?

Return tabled.

ORAL QUESTION PERIOD

FEDERAL-PROVINCIAL RELATIONS

FEBRUARY CONFERENCE—DISCLOSURE OF PROPOSALS

Hon. Robert L. Stanfield (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, in light of the statements yesterday by the Minister of Finance I would like to ask the Prime Minister when is it the intention of the government to disclose the proposals it intends to make to the premiers of the provinces in relation to the forthcoming federal-provincial conference?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): To disclose to the House?

Mr. Stanfield: No, to the provincial governments.

Mr. Trudeau: I am not quite sure if I understand the question correctly, Mr. Speaker, but I have been in correspondence with the premiers of the provinces in relation to this conference and we are in the process of agreeing on an agenda and on a format for the conference.

Mr. Stanfield: But is it the intention of the Prime Minister to lay before the provinces, prior to the conference, the proposals that the federal government intends to make in connection with the agenda?

Mr. Trudeau: For some of the items, yes, Mr. Speaker, the proposals will be put to them. One is in the form of a white paper by the Minister of Finance, and another is by way of a report of the Tax Structure Committee. There will be certain documents given to the participants in the meeting.

Mr. Stanfield: Is it the intention that the agenda and these documents will be made public prior to the conference?

Mr. Trudeau: We will follow the usual practice, Mr. Speaker. As regards the agenda, if the premiers want to make the agenda public we will do so. It will depend on whether the meetings are private or public, or partly private and in part public. I repeat that I am in correspondence with the premiers. Until there is final agreement on this I do not want to commit myself because, as the hon. member no doubt realizes, there is a great deal of consultation involved.

Mr. Stanfield: One further supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Is the government of Canada willing to make public its proposals to the provinces prior to the conference if the provinces have no objection to this?

Mr. Trudeau: Mr. Speaker, when the conference is a public conference and when the documents are meant to be public, what we have done in the past has been to get agreement by all parties that any province, or the federal government, wanting to make its proposals public could do so on a date agreed upon by all parties, generally a week in advance. In this particular case the question is a bit hypothetical because, as I say, there is no final agreement yet, and I have not heard from all the provinces on the final wording of the agenda or on the format of the conference.

Hon. Marcel Lambert (Edmonton West): A further supplementary question, Mr. Speaker, with reference to the remarks of the Minister of Finance dealing in particular with anti-inflationary proposals that the government may wish to make. Is it the government's intention to disclose these to the provinces in ample time for the provinces to study them and engage in a meaningful dialogue in order to deal with the problem effectively at an early date?

Mr. Trudeau: Mr. Speaker, even there we cannot make any commitment because the course of the conference will in large degree depend on the results obtained by the Prices and Incomes Commission. As the hon. member knows—it has been said in the House previously—the Prices and Incomes Commission is aiming toward a date in late January or early February. Therefore I am not sure what time we will have between the two events to engage in what the hon. member calls meaningful consultation. The purpose of the federal-provincial conference is to have meaningful consultation.

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): A further supplementary question. Could it be that the Minister of Finance was misdirecting himself when he indicated during his remarks that the Prime Minister would be disclosing the proposals dealing with anti-inflationary measures to the provincial premiers prior to the conference?

Mr. Trudeau: I would have to refer to the statement of the minister on that point. I am not aware of this particular statement, Mr. Speaker.

AGRICULTURE

ACTION TO LOWER TRACTOR AND COMBINE PRICES

Mr. A. P. Gleave (Saskatoon-Biggar): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the Minister of Agriculture. In light of the recently tabled report of the Barber Commission, which states that Canadian farmers are being charged excessive prices for farm machinery by multinational firms, can the minister indicate to the House what immediate action is being taken to make farm machinery available at lower cost to Canadian farmers?

Hon. H. A. Olson (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, up until the present, action has not been directed along that line. What I said on Friday was that an interdepartmental committee had already been established because there are some implications contained in Dr. Barber's findings and recommendations that deal with such things as anti-combines law, anti-trust law, and so on. He also recommends that discussion be held with counterpart officials in the United States and in the United Kingdom. This has already been initiated. I think it would be wise, and indeed fair, for the people who are affected by the findings and recommendations of the royal commission to have at least a day or two to look at the report, which has been in the public domain only since eleven o'clock or 11.30 last Friday morning.

Mr. Gleave: I appreciate the minister's statement that the report has been in the hands of the government for only a short while. However, in light of the fact that for some time it has been public knowledge that tractors were being sold more cheaply to people overseas than to Canadian farmers, would the minister act with all expedition to see that this situation is corrected as rapidly as possible?

Mr. Olson: Yes, Mr. Speaker. As has already been pointed out, a number of actions have already been taken because as you, Mr. Speaker, and the hon. member will recall, there was a preliminary report or position paper written by Dr. Barber for the agricultural congress held last March. This indicated in a preliminary way what he has now substantiated by evidence. During the intervening period a number of actions have been taken and, indeed, last September I visited the tractor factory in Czechoslovakia that he referred to to ascertain whether or not they would be interested in expanding in a substantial way exports of this type of equipment to North America, particularly Canada.

Mr. W. M. Howe (Wellington-Grey): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question for the Minister of Agriculture and I hope he will bring it to the attention of the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs. In view of the fact that the report describes tractor prices in Canada as being maintained at discriminatory, artificial levels, now maintained arbitrarily by a few large multinational corporations dominating the Canadian market, will the government use the same procedure as it has with the drug manufacturers and suggest that if prices are not reduced the government will seriously consider a definite program of its own?

Mr. Olson: Mr. Speaker, this is part of the recommendations in the report. I think we should have a discussion with several ministers, such as the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs who is responsible for anti-combines legislation, and then have a discussion with the farm machinery and equipment companies named in the report.

Mr. Howe: A further supplementary for the Minister of Agriculture, Mr. Speaker. Would he consider referring to the Minister of Finance the possibility of a reverse dumping factor in order that there might be equalization of prices, as between the farmers of Canada and the farmers of England?

Mr. Olson: The Minister of Finance is already aware of that recommendation in the report.

Hon. W. G. Dinsdale (Brandon-Souris): A supplementary question for the Minister of Agriculture, Mr. Speaker. In view of this evidence of price exploitation, would the minister consult with his colleague the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs with a view to a rollback in the price increase announced by the major farm implement companies last fall?

Mr. Olson: The Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs is very well aware of the recommendations in the report, Mr. Speaker, and I have already had a number of discussions with him related to this matter.

Mr. John Burton (Regina East): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question for the Minister of Agriculture. Will the minister give consideration to the establishment of a buying agency to carry on the purchasing of tractors and farm equipment from other countries? Also, is the government planning to conduct any further studies, possibly through the royal commission, with a view to the reduction of manufacturing costs in Canada on the basis of the experience of firms now producing tractors in this country?

Mr. Olson: Mr. Speaker, that is not one of the recommendations in the report, although perhaps it will be included in discussions of matters to be considered in order to remedy this unsatisfactory situation.

Mr. R. R. Southam (Qu'Appelle-Moose Mountain): Mr. Speaker, a supplementary question for the Minister of Agriculture. Is it the minister's intention to refer the Special Report on Prices of Tractors and Combines in Canada and Other Countries to the Standing Committee on Agriculture at an early date?

Mr. Olson: We could do that, Mr. Speaker. However, I believe that the Standing Committee on Agriculture has one matter referred by this House before it which will take up most of the time available between now and February 17. There is also a further question of grain marketing on the Order Paper which will have to be taken into consideration as well.

Mr. Robert Simpson (Churchill): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary for the Minister of Agriculture. In the minister's discussions in Czechoslovakia with manufacturers of farm machinery did he take the opportunity to point out to them the very evident savings they could make by shipping tractors to western Canada through the port of Churchill?

Mr. S. J. Korchinski (Mackenzie): Mr. Speaker, my supplementary question is for the Minister of Agriculture. Has he set a schedule for this interdepartmental study to be completed within the next two months, say, or does he intend to let it drag on as long as necessary?

Mr. Olson: Mr. Speaker, this study is not going to start in the next two months or so; it started several days ago.

Mr. Korchinski: A supplementary, Mr. Speaker. I do not think the minister understood my question. I want to know when it will be completed rather than when it commenced.

Mr. Olson: Mr. Speaker, I do not think it is either possible or proper to attempt to predict with confidence, when commencing a task, when it will be completed.

Mr. John L. Skoberg (Moose Jaw): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question for the Minister of Agriculture. In view of the removal by persons or persons unknown, of plates over serial numbers of tractors imported from England, would the minister say whether he would request his colleague the Solicitor General to have the RCMP investigate this cloak and dagger operation in order to determine the person or persons responsible?

Mr. Olson: Mr. Speaker, I think the police were informed of that some time ago.

Mr. Speaker: May I bring to the attention of hon. members that we have had quite a few supplementary questions on this subject and it might be in order to move on to another subject and return to hon. members before the end of the question period if there is time.

THE CANADIAN ECONOMY

INFLATION—SUGGESTED MEETING OF PRIME MINISTER WITH NEW QUEBEC LIBERAL PARTY LEADER

Mr. Roland Godin (Portneuf): I should like to put a question to the Prime Minister.

In view of the fact that during the weekend the great economist Robert Bourassa was chosen as leader of the Quebec Liberal party, could the Prime Minister tell us whether he plans to meet this talented man to discuss with him the steps required to check inflation?

[English]

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Edmonton Centre.

[Translation]

Mr. Godin: Should I infer that the Prime Minister would rather fight it alone?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): The inference should rather be that the question is not a serious one, Mr. Speaker.

[English]

INQUIRY OF THE MINISTRY

Mr. Steven E. Paproski (Edmonton Centre): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the right hon. Prime Minister. In view of the fact that the right hon. gentleman granted a one-hour private audience to Mr. and Mrs. John Lennon during his busy schedule before Christmas, would he inform the House whether he was one of the 20-odd people who paid $1,350 for John and Yoko prints?

HEALTH AND WELFARE

LEGISLATION RESPECTING CIGARETTE ADVERTISING

Mr. Barry Mather (Surrey): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of National Health and Welfare. Would the minister indicate whether he will be able to make a statement soon in regard to his legislative intentions in line with the report of the Standing Committee on Health, Welfare and Social Affairs on the phasing-out of cigarette advertising?

Hon. John C. Munro (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, I would advise the hon. member that we are now giving consideration to the committee's report in the department. Our deliberations will then go to the cabinet and government for final determination. Subsequent to that time a policy will be announced.

FISHERIES AND FORESTRY

ACTION ON RECOMMENDATIONS IN TWELFTH REPORT OF STANDING COMMITTEE

Mr. Lloyd R. Crouse (South Shore): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Justice. In keeping with the undertaking he gave at the close of the last session, is the minister now in a position to report on the examination of evidence by law officers of the Crown in accordance with the recommendations contained in the twelfth report of the Standing Committee on Fisheries and Forestry?

[Mr. Speaker.]

Hon. John N. Turner (Minister of Justice): No, Mr. Speaker. We would not comment on the evidence except that, if charges were warranted, we would put it in the hands of the proper authorities. It is not the practice to comment on evidence one way or another.

IMMIGRATION

ADMISSION OF POLISH JEWS

Mr. R. Gordon L. Fairweather (Fundy-Royal): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Manpower and Immigration. Is the government considering any special arrangements to admit to Canada, under the classification of refugees, people who have been forced to leave Poland because they happen to be Jews?

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Minister of Manpower and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, applicants coming forward from this group to our offices have been very sympathetically received and will continue to be received in this way.

Mr. Fairweather: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. How many people in this refugee category have been admitted or given permission to come to Canada as a result of our sympathetic plans?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I doubt whether the question as asked is in order.

ENTRY OF DANIEL COHN-BENDIT

Mr. Steven E. Paproski (Edmonton Centre): A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. In view of the apparent entry into Canada of Danny the Red, can the minister state how this situation has come about when Cohn-Bendit, alias Danny the Red, is restricted by order from coming into this country?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

[Later:]

Mr. Paproski: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker, I think the Minister of Manpower and Immigration wanted to answer my question about Cohn-Bendit. After all, the man has come into this country illegally. I understand that his entry is restricted and I merely wanted to know why he had been allowed into the country.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. It was my impression that the hon. member's question was asked in an argumentative way or implied argument. Unfortunately, I am not familiar with the details of the situation the hon. member referred to. If it is a matter of immediate interest and does not relate to past circumstances, perhaps the minister will want to reply.

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Minister of Manpower and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, Cohn-Bendit has been admitted to Canada for a period of six or seven days. He is not a prohibited person so far as Canadian immigration laws are concerned and has therefore been admitted to Canada.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

NIGERIA—INQUIRY AS TO MEETING WITH FATHERS KEVIN AND MICHAEL DOHENY

Mr. Lorne Nystrom (Yorkton-Melville): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Secretary of State for External Affairs. I gave him notice of it. Is the minister or the Prime Minister going to accept the invitation to meet with Fathers Kevin and Michael Doheny in order to discuss the most recent developments in the former Biafran region?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I have had no representations from Fathers Kevin and Michael Doheny, but I would be very happy to see them if they should ask to see me. I have had a telegram from Donald MacPherson, Director of News and Features for the CTV network in Toronto, but I have not had any contact with these gentlemen.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

ROSTER SYSTEM—ABSENCE OF CERTAIN MINISTERS

Mr. James A. McGrath (St. John's East): Mr. Speaker, I have a question to direct to the Prime Minister prompted by the absence today of six ministers who, according to the roster system, are supposed to be present. The system, incidentally, is illegal and contravenes the provisions of Standing Order 5 of this House. Will the Prime Minister revise the present roster system or take disciplinary action against the ministers who are not present and thereby are depriving hon. members of the opportunity to discharge their duties responsibly?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, we are thinking of taking disciplinary action against the flu virus.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

NIGERIA—ACCESSIBILITY OF WAR ZONE TO OBSERVERS

Mr. Andrew Brewin (Greenwood): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the Secretary of State for External Affairs. On Friday last I asked the Prime Minister a question and he said he would ask the minister to consider it. My question is: Will the government request the Nigerian government to enable observers to visit immediately the areas formerly occupied by Biafran forces in order that they might be in a position to observe and report from the areas in which the main threat of massive starvation is believed to exist?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I am sorry, I missed the key words in the question. What were the hon. member's opening remarks?

Mr. Brewin: Mr. Speaker, I said by way of preamble that I asked this question of the Prime Minister on Friday, but perhaps that is beside the point now. Will the government request the Nigerian government to enable observers to move immediately into those areas previously occupied by the Biafran forces where the greatest threat of starvation apparently exists?

Mr. Sharp: Mr. Speaker, we depend to a very large degree upon the observers themselves, and this applies not only to ourselves but also to the Secretary General of the United Nations and the governments of Sweden, Poland and the United Kingdom. So far there has been no indication that the observers have been denied access to any parts. Indeed, the observers have been in some of the most troublesome spots quite recently. In addition, many other observers are now appearing in the area—for example, newspapermen, representatives of the United Kingdom government and General Wrinch of the Red Cross. Therefore we ought to be most careful in making representations which would throw doubt on the good intentions of the Nigerian government.

NIGERIA—COST OF MILITARY OBSERVERS

Mr. Lorne Nystrom (Yorkton-Melville): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a supplementary question to the Secretary of State for External Affairs. On two occasions last week I asked the minister to inform the House who is paying for the cost of the military observers operating in Nigeria. He said on Thursday that he would answer the question when next he was in the House. Can he reply now?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Yes, Mr. Speaker. The answer is that Canada pays the salary and the normal allowances drawn by Department of National Defence officers assigned to overseas duty. We also, of course, cover the transportation costs of the Canadian observers to and from Nigeria. While in Nigeria the Nigerian authorities meet the local accommodation and food expenses of the team and provide transportation, although we are ready to provide transportation if the observers should request it. I understand that this arrangement applies both to Canadian observers and to the nationals of other countries comprising the observer team. The value of rations and quarters is placed at $36 per month and is deducted from the allowances paid to the officers.

Hon. Robert L. Stanfield (Leader of the Opposition): A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. In view of the statement that has been made to the effect that international observers admitted into Nigeria have not had access to the area surrounding Uli airstrip, the area in which there is possibly the greatest concentration of refugees, is the minister prepared to say that the observers have been given access to all of former Biafra or is he simply basing his position on the fact that no complaints have come forward from the observers?

Mr. Sharp: Mr. Speaker, I make the assumption, which I hope the Leader of the Opposition makes, that as good Canadians our observers are just as interested in observing conditions and reporting to the Canadian people and the world as either one of us would be.

Mr. Brewin: A further supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Has the minister's attention been drawn to the statement of the United Nations observer on the team to the effect that they have not been able to go into any area except that close to advancing troops and that their reports to date were pointless?

Mr. Sharp: No, Mr. Speaker, I have not seen this report.

CITIZENSHIP

REDUCTION OF FIVE-YEAR RESIDENCE PERIOD

Mr. Heath Macquarrie (Hillsborough): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the Secretary of State. It is prompted by the widespread interest of many established residents of Canada in the attainment of the right to vote and the right of citizenship. Is the minister giving consideration to bringing in an amendment to the Citizenship Act which would reduce the mandatory five-year residence period where that is now applicable?

[Mr. Nystrom.]

[Translation]

Hon. Gérard Pelletier (Secretary of State): Mr. Speaker, this matter is included in the interim study pending publication of a White Paper on citizenship.

[English]

NATIONAL FILM BOARD

LAY-OFFS OF EMPLOYEES—CHARGES FOR USE OF FILMS

Mr. Robert McCleave (Halifax-East Hants): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the Secretary of State. Can he report now on the matter of the rentals being charged by the National Film Board, which libraries and other educational institutions have asked be withdrawn?

[Translation]

Hon. Gérard Pelletier (Secretary of State): Mr. Speaker, I cannot give a final reply yet in this matter, in spite of the fact that the answer to the starred question gave the particulars as I had heard of them from the National Film Board. But as I said to the House before, this matter was studied by an impartial party appointed by me for the purpose at the request of the Commissioner of the National Film Board. The report was submitted to the Commissioner who then sent it to me. It is now being translated into English and I understand, from talks with the Commissioner, that he has certain remarks and comments that he would like to publicize concurrently with the report, which should be soon.

[English]

Mr. Jack Marshall (Humber-St. George's-St. Barbe): A supplementary question to the Secretary of State, Mr. Speaker. In view of the fact that the charge for films by the National Film Board is causing serious hardship in the province of Newfoundland where people cannot afford it and as it results in denying many thousands of students the right to this educational facility, will the minister investigate this situation and eliminate the charge in those areas where people cannot afford it?

[Later:]

Mr. David Lewis (York South): Mr. Speaker, I direct my question to the Secretary of State. He informed us that the report of the person he appointed to look into the program of possible dismissals by the Film Board and the charges to be made for use of films is in the hands of the commissioner of the Board. Has the report also been made available to the employees' association at the Film Board?

[Translation]

Mr. Pelletier: Yes, Mr. Speaker, and the report is also in the hands of the department but it is being translated. As I said a moment ago, the Commissioner, to whom the report was given, wishes to add certain comments. Naturally, union leaders who feel involved will have the same opportunity. The report was given to all negotiating units of the Board.

[English]

Mr. John Burton (Regina East): A supplementary question to the Secretary of State. In the meantime is the National Film Board proceeding with any further lay-offs or have the proposed lay-offs been suspended? I would also like to inquire about the status of the user charges which were announced prior to the Christmas recess.

[Translation]

Mr. Pelletier: Mr. Speaker, I believe I have dealt with the matter of expenses incurred by those who will be using the National Film Board's films from now on and I have nothing to add in reply to this further question, which is the same as the one directed to me a few minutes ago. In so far as the report is concerned, it contains considerations on this matter.

Finally, I did not quite understand the other part of the hon. member's question. Oh yes, he asked whether there had been any lay-offs. No, there have been no further lay-offs, and there will be none before the report is issued.

[English]

IMMIGRATION

REQUEST FOR POLITICAL ASYLUM BY POLISH SEAMEN

Mr. J. M. Forrestall (Dartmouth-Halifax East): My question is to the Minister of Manpower and Immigration. Can the minister indicate when his department will make a final disposition of the cases of the nine Polish seamen still in detention at immigration facilities in Halifax?

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Minister of Manpower and Immigration): Very soon, Mr. Speaker. The case is before me at the present time and I hope to deal with it very soon.

REGIONAL ECONOMIC EXPANSION

LAC LA BICHE NEWSTART PROGRAM—REQUEST FOR FINANCIAL ASSISTANCE

Mr. Paul Yewchuk (Athabasca): My question is directed to the Minister of Regional Economic Expansion but in his absence I will direct it to the Prime Minister. Because of the government's insufficient supply of operating capital to the Alberta Newstart training centre in Lac La Biche, Alberta, the school was closed about a month ago. The native people have become very incensed and have occupied the school for some three days. They plan to stay there until the school is re-opened. I ask the Prime Minister to ensure that the small sum required to re-open the school will be available very soon.

Mr. Speaker: As the hon. member is making a representation he has to assume the suggestion he is making to the government will be considered.

COMMUNICATIONS

NORTHWEST TERRITORIES—REVOKING OF RIGHTS OF CANADIAN NATIONAL TELECOMMUNICATIONS

Mr. Don Mazankowski (Vegreville): My question is directed to the Postmaster General. In view of the fact that a December survey of calls from Ottawa to the Northwest Territories showed that only one in ten could be completed due to the busy lines, can the minister indicate to the House whether consideration is being given to the suggestion that the area rights of Canadian National Telecommunications be revoked?

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member is making a suggestion. In any event I think this subject, to the extent that it is put in the form of a question, ought to be placed on the Order Paper.

WOMEN

INQUIRY AS TO ROYAL COMMISSION REPORT

Mrs. Grace MacInnis (Vancouver-Kingsway): My question is directed to the Prime Minister. Can the right hon. gentleman say when we may expect the report of the Royal Commission on the Status of Women?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): I have no idea, Mr. Speaker. I will inquire. The commission, of course, decides its own timing and procedures. They may wish to tell me when they expect to report.

TAXATION

MODIFICATION OF WHITE PAPER

Hon. Robert L. Stanfield (Leader of the Opposition): I wish to ask the Prime Minister what is to be the scope of the supplementary white paper on taxation that the Minister of Finance has referred to? Is this supplementary white paper to be confined to certain aspects of capital gains taxation or is it to include other aspects of taxation as well?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): I have not heard of the supplementary white paper, Mr. Speaker. I will confer with the minister.

Mr. Stanfield: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. I seriously direct this question to the Prime Minister, the head of the government, in the assumption that the Minister of Finance alone does not decide the taxation policy of the government. Has the government itself decided upon modification of the position set forth in the white paper?

Mr. Trudeau: Not yet, Mr. Speaker. We have published the white paper and we have told the Canadian public that we are going to wait for representations from them. Until we have heard from all interested parties, those who want to make presentations, we are not going to revise the white paper.

Mr. Stanfield: A further supplementary, Mr. Speaker. Are we entitled to assume, therefore, from what the Prime Minister has said that the indication by the Minister of Finance is correct and that a supplementary white paper will be presented or a supplementary paper will be presented with modifications? I ask the Prime Minister whether this is necessarily so, and has any such decision yet been made by the government of this country?

Mr. Trudeau: Quite to the contrary. When we published the white paper it was the government's position that we were doing it in order to hear representations and, if necessary, to modify our views on certain points. This is the purpose of a white paper, so that it can be discussed before being put into legislative form. We intend to do this.

Mr. Stanfield: May I suggest that the Prime Minister had better consult with the Minister of Finance—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

Mr. Stanfield: —in view of the fact he also indicated—

Mr. Speaker: Order.

HEALTH AND WELFARE

BANNING OF SALE OF CERTAIN TOYS CONTAMINATED BY DDT

Mr. John L. Skoberg (Moose Jaw): My question is for the Minister of National Health and Welfare. In view of a television program last night concerning various types of children's toys being contaminated by DDT, will the minister indicate to the House what action he has taken to assure the buyers of all toys made in other countries as well as Canada that toys found to be contaminated with DDT will be banned from sale?

Hon. John C. Munro (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, I will be pleased to look into this matter. I believe this would be an area of responsibility of my colleague the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs, on the advice of the Food and Drug Directorate.

ELECTIONS

POLICY RESPECTING PROCESSES

Hon. W. G. Dinsdale (Brandon-Souris): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Prime Minister. Was the President of the Treasury Board enunciating government policy when in a speech the other evening to the National Conference on Science and Engineering he looked forward to the day when politicians will not have to go through the "rather tiresome charade" of present-day electoral processes?

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Vancouver East.

Mr. Dinsdale: On a question of privilege, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member rises on a question of privilege.

Mr. Dinsdale: I regard this question to be of some considerable urgency because it appears to be the beginning of the government's process of bypassing the electorate in the same way it now bypasses Parliament.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

STUDY OF MEMBERS' INDEMNITIES, ETC.

Mr. Harold E. Winch (Vancouver East): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the Prime Minister? Two hundred and sixty-four members of the House are interested in the matter but nobody seems to have the guts to ask the question so I will do so. Does the Prime Minister have under consideration the appointment of a commissioner or commissioners to study all aspects of salaries, expenses, research facilities, offices, indemnities and everything else with regard to members of the House of Commons and perhaps the Senate? If so, when does he expect to name the commissioner or commissioners?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Yes, Mr. Speaker, the government has this matter under consideration and we hope to make an announcement in due course.

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, I trust that "in due course" will be as long as it usually is.

Mr. Trudeau: I am glad we have the support of the hon. member on this very important question.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): The Prime Minister knows he is misunderstanding me. He does not have my support.

Mr. James A. McGrath (St. John's East): Mr. Speaker, I was merely going to say that, before the Prime Minister appoints a commissioner or commissioners, in the interest of all hon. members perhaps he should consult with the hon. member for York West.

MANPOWER

ATLANTIC PROVINCES—INQUIRY AS TO PROGRAMS TO ALLEVIATE UNEMPLOYMENT

Mr. John Lundrigan (Gander-Twillingate): Mr. Speaker, I have an urgent question for the Minister of Manpower and Immigration arising out of the statement yesterday by the Minister of Finance that the government has some special programs to offset the forced unemployment in the Atlantic and other areas of Canada. Will the minister say what the nature of these special programs is and, if he is not in a position to give a detailed statement now, will he take the first possible opportunity to make such a statement on motions?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The question is in order to the extent that the hon. member invites the minister to make a statement on motions.

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Minister of Manpower and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, I will be happy to make a statement when the circumstances justify it.

Mr. Lundrigan: I rise on a point of order, Mr. Speaker. Approximately two months ago I posed this question and the minister gave me the same supercilious and senseless answer. Approximately 20 per cent of the people of Newfoundland are unemployed and about 16 per cent are unemployed in Atlantic Canada. Surely to God there has been time for the Minister of Manpower and Immigration to prepare a statement indicating what plans, if any, the government has to offset unemployment. This is a useless situation.

Mr. J. M. Forrestall (Dartmouth-Halifax East): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question related to the request just put to the minister by the hon. member for Gander-Twillingate. Will the minister also deal with the situation that is developing as a result of the situation at Fairey Aviation of Canada and indicate what is to be done to offset this unemployment? We have heard absolutely nothing or very little in this regard. What are the department's plans for rehiring and relocating these several hundred employees?

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Minister of Manpower and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, if the hon. member will put a question onto the Order Paper I will be happy to give him all the details about departmental activities in this situation.

Mr. Forrestall: Is that going to put food in their stomachs or money in their pockets?

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

ACTION TO MAINTAIN GOOD RELATIONS WITH WEST INDIES

Mr. Lincoln M. Alexander (Hamilton West): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Secretary of State for External Affairs who has left the House, but it is of such importance that the Prime Minister might deal with it. In view of the fact certain persons studying here in Canada are returning to various parts of the West Indies and indicating that this country is racist, would the Prime Minister, the Secretary of State for External Affairs and other ministers give the required publicity and meet with the several high commissioners in order to impress upon them that this country does not follow racist policies and that it never will, so that the relationships we enjoy with these countries in the Caribbean will not be affected to such an extent that the faith they have in us now will be less?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): I will very gladly take up this important suggestion with the Secretary of State for External Affairs, Mr. Speaker.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

WATER RESOURCES

PROVISION FOR MANAGEMENT INCLUDING RESEARCH AND PLANNING AND IMPLEMENTATION OF PROGRAMS

The House resumed from Friday, January 16, consideration of the motion of Mr. Greene that Bill C-144, to provide for the management of the water resources of Canada, including research and the planning and implementation of programs relating to the conservation development and utilization of water resources, be read the second time and referred to the Standing Committee on National Resources and Public Works.

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker: Last Friday, while the House was studying a motion for second reading of Bill C-144, the hon. member for Lotbinière (Mr. Fortin) rose on a point of order to call the attention of the House to a difference that existed at least on the surface between the French and English texts in the preamble of the said bill.

What the hon. member said is reported on page 2497 of the official report of House of Commons' Debates of Friday last. Several members took part in the ensuing debate on the point of order and it was agreed that a ruling would be handed down later on, so that the Chair could have a chance to study the contested point.

The French text of the preamble has this sentence:

Et considérant que le Parlement du Canada souhaite, en outre, que des programmes d'ensemble soient entrepris par le gouvernement du Canada agissant seul ou en collaboration avec les gouvernements provinciaux...

[Mr. Alexander.]

[English]

On the other hand, the English text reads:

And whereas the Parliament of Canada is desirous that, in addition, comprehensive programs be undertaken by the government of Canada, and by the government of Canada in co-operation with provincial governments—

It would appear that there is a difference between the two texts in that the French version uses the disjunctive form while the English text uses the conjunctive "and". It should be pointed out that the English text would not make sense unless the conjunction "and" were interpreted as being both conjunctive and disjunctive, so that in substance there may not be any real difference between the two texts. It seems to me that the difference is more one of form than one of substance.

At the same time, while the Speaker might be expected to know something about procedure interpretation he is probably not expected to be at the same time a grammatical expert. I suggest, indeed, that it is not the duty of the Chair to interpret the language of a measure when one text appears to be at variance with or different from the text of the other official language. The difficulty is compounded in this sense that if it were found that there was a real difference between the two texts it would be difficult for the Chair to rule on which of the two reflects the intention of those who have drafted the bill.

[Translation]

During the debate last Friday, it was suggested that the problem could be more usefully considered at the committee stage, when the question could be submitted to the minister's advisers. That suggestion seems to me both practical and reasonable. In fact, any amendment to the preamble or any clause of the bill at the second reading stage would be contrary to the rules.

Is it necessary to add that, according to many precedents, a private member cannot move an amendment to the preamble of a bill. In this connection, I quote May's Parliamentary Practice, 17th edition, in particular the following paragraph to be found on page 548:

• (4:00 p.m.)

[English]

Amendments may be made in every part of the bill, whether in the clauses or the schedules. Clauses may be left out and new clauses and schedules added. Amendments to the preamble and title are also admissible where amendments have been made to the bill which render them necessary.

It would seem that while a substantive amendment to the preamble cannot be proposed even in committee, a modification proposed for purposes of clarification or uniformity would not come under the prescription stated by May.

I would therefore suggest that the amendment, if any is required, should be proposed at the committee stage.

[Translation]

I hope that the hon. member for Lotbinière will accept what I am suggesting to him, namely that the very valid question which he raised last Friday could be considered in a more logical, more practical and more efficient way when the bill is studied by the committee.

[English]

Mr. J. M. Forrestall (Dartmouth-Halifax East): Mr. Speaker, in order to place in some context the remarks I want to make this afternoon I should like with your permission to remind hon. members briefly of the inseparability of water as a resource not only for this generation of Canadians but for many future generations.

The measure now before us has been dealt with fully and the lack of what we would expect as being a meaningful suggestion regarding methods of controlling the pollution of waters in Canada has been pointed out. Most glaring of all is the fact that there has been no comment by a spokesman from the government side or from anybody else in the House during this debate or on previous occasions when water has been discussed, regarding the thousands and thousands of miles of contiguous and still fresh, pure water on both coasts and off the Arctic shelf. I have not been able to find any such reference. It is the lack of any such reference in the Bill before us that prompts me at this time to take part in the debate which will result in deciding whether or not the bill should be referred to the committee.

It seems to me, as I am sure it must seem to thousands of Canadians, that water whether it be salt or fresh is a priceless human resource. Four of the many things that live in water can be found in the waters contiguous to our country. This fact alone brings me to my feet in dismay over the failure of the government and the minister, even in terms of fresh water pollution, to establish guidelines and to bring forward a policy for a country which has one of the largest coastal lines in the world. Senator Claiborne Pell, reporting in Saturday Review of October 11, 1969 under the title of "The Oceans, Man's Last Great Resource" had this to say:

> After millenniums of exploiting and often destroying the riches of the land, man is now hovering acquisitively over the wealth of the oceans that cover three-quarters of the earth. In the no man's land of the seabed, a scramble for minerals and oil, for new underwater empires secured by advancing armies of technology—

He points out that people are concerned with and are desirous of tapping this wealth and establishing what he goes on to describe as moral commitments.

I suggest that the failure of the minister and his departmental officials in drafting this bill to establish the first national guidelines in recent times on the question of pollution of our waters is not acceptable to myself and certainly is not acceptable to thousands upon thousands of fishermen upon both our coasts. It cannot be acceptable to the thousands of people who during the summer must look out daily, for example, on the waters off Vancouver and off the beautiful city of Victoria and physically smell and see the pollution which is there. I cannot understand, in these first guidelines, why there was no reference to the contiguous salt waters of Canada, let alone waters such as the Gulf of St. Lawrence, our great national harbours, the Arctic, Hudson Bay and many others. I cannot understand this and I am sure the constituents in our maritime provinces, as well as the citizens of Canada, cannot understand it either.

In his remarks in this debate the hon. member for South Western Nova (Mr. Comeau) lamented the failure of the government to move effectively in respect of a national standard concerning water pollution and water control. I believe he was correct in making that observation. I think the hon. member for Parry Sound-Muskoka (Mr. Aiken), when he replied to the minister, was right when he commented on the failure of the proposals in this bill to meaningfully attack or even approach the great problem involved in this question of pollution. One of the problems which perhaps the minister faced, and one that I can understand although I do not accept it and do not believe anyone accepts it, was the failure of the government and the draftsmen to make provision for minimum standards of water quality.

The hon. member for St. John's West (Mr. Carter) spoke of the pollution of one of the great fishing areas of his native province of Newfoundland. He spoke about the failure of the government to act under the authority contained in the regulations under the Fisheries Act. In connection with this point, I wish to suggest that I do not believe Canadians are afraid to spend the required dollars and cents in respect of water purity and water control, if those expenditures will mean that incidents such as occurred in Newfoundland will not take place in the future. Indeed, on the contrary, I think any national sampling of opinion would indicate approval for the immediate and urgent expenditure of money. I am concerned about the salt water immediately off both our coasts. I am concerned about the failure of the minister and the government to include any meaningful thoughts in their present bill.

It is rather interesting to note that the bill simply refers to water and does not define salt water or fresh water. I have not heard anyone imply that the bill is to cover salt water, so I am making the assumption that it does not and that the bill was designed to cover only inland fresh water systems. I am disturbed about this because even a casual study of the efforts of other maritime nations around the world with regard to the water over the continental shelves lying off their immediate coasts suggests they have a real concern and one which Canada has not begun to approach. We have a continental shelf covered with water to the extent of some 1½ million square miles. That is almost half of Canada's total land area. The failure of the government to deal, in this bill, even in passing, with the danger to Canadians and to the world through pollution of these waters is inexcusable. It is very difficult to understand. Indeed, I suppose in many respects it displays a weakness of thought and unconcern with the question.

I sometimes wonder, because the pressure to do something about pollution has grown so rapidly in the last two or three years, whether there was a politically motivated fear that if the government did not do something that failure might be misconstrued. I suggest that if the government had any strong or moral convictions, it would have done something meaningful and useful for Canadians.

It is interesting to note that there has been no comment on this bill from large Canadian industries. I sometimes wonder whether they are just sitting back, keeping their fingers crossed, in the hope that nobody will find what they consider to be the glaring omissions from this bill.

[Mr. Forrestall.]

It is not my desire to deal today with the inland or fresh waters; I wish to stay, if I can, with the subject of the off-shore waters, the salt waters. In recent years we have witnessed the failure of the federal government to resolve satisfactorily the question of off-shore mineral rights. In this field alone there has been considerable delay in the application of applied research to methods of reaching the resources of the sea. This is simply a consequence of the government's failure or inability to resolve the more fundamental question. Today we are talking about water rather than minerals, but the connection is an obvious one. If we have failed to resolve so straightforward a matter as the ownership or right of interest in the mineral contents of the continental shelf, how in the name of the Lord shall we ever resolve the question raised by effective control over the quality of our coastal waters?

In the years ahead, life on earth may well depend on the quality of our water. In an age in which we talk about famine and starvation and when doubts are expressed as to the ability of the planet to feed mankind in the not too distant future, it seems extremely short-sighted to me that we have not turned much sooner in our development to the resource that is the sea. Some day we shall, and I hope that when this day comes our people will be able to look back to the closing years of the 20th century and say: Some Canadians were concerned; some people, at least, were beginning to protect the quality and the purity of our salt waters. Failure to do so now would represent an abdication of our responsibility and duty to future generations. If we fail to act now, what is there to show that the next generation will take the step we should have taken? If we intend to do something, let us do it today, let us do it this year—let us establish guidelines and enforce meaningful ways to control the pollution of our salt waters.

I am not one of those who believe we shall never clean up our fresh waters. I believe we shall. Significant work is going on now at Burlington, the inland centre for fresh water studies. But it is a damned shame nothing is going on at the Bedford Institute of Oceanology with regard to this question—as a matter of fact, it is inexcusable. If we do not find a way to approach our neighbours in the maritime communities around the world, if we have not by the turn of this century effectively established minimum standards for the protection of the quality of these salt waters,

I am afraid the task of cleaning up our oceans will make the task of cleaning up our fresh waters seem like the rinsing out of a wash basin or bath after a shower.

We can clean up our fresh water, and we shall do so. This bill, meagre and fainthearted as it is in its approach, is at least one step. I commend my hon. friend from Parry Sound-Muskoka and my hon. friend from South Western Nova for their restraint in dealing with it—they recognized, as I do, that this measure is at least a step—but I shall never understand the government's cowardice in not going all the way; I shall never understand the failure of the government to come to grips with the problem of pollution by big industry. By foisting this off on to the provinces it is saying there is no way by which federal standards can be brought to bear. This avoidance of responsibility is cowardly. This is not what Canadians want, at least not the ones I talk to. Constitutional issues be damned! The preservation of our fresh water is important. The cleanliness of our salt water is also important. If we are to wait until we see what the provinces do in terms of establishing quality control areas in order that the federal act can be applied, I am afraid we are only delaying the solution to these questions, nothing more.

The cleaning up of our rivers, lakes and streams will be a costly process but if we fail to do something of consequence soon, either unilaterally or on a multi-national basis to protect our salt waters, it will take hundreds of years and untold expenditure to remedy the damage.

There are dangers, and they are becoming increasingly evident. Three major explosions have occurred aboard oil tankers off the coast of Africa—inexplicable explosions which have crippled and sunk three 200,000 ton oil tankers. They were empty, thank God, but what would have happened if they had been full—if 200,000 tons of crude oil, or however many tons or barrels of oil their cargo represents, had been spilled into the ocean? I do not say that something is not being done. The oil companies concerned have moved swiftly; they have accepted their responsibility for trying to determine the cause of these accidents. They realize the long lasting effect of the breaking up of large supertankers on the high seas. All the world realizes the danger. We have all seen what happened in California. We have all seen what happened when the Torrey Canyon broke up in the Bristol Channel. Well, we in Canada, with one of the longest coast lines in the world, have failed to include any reference whatsoever in this bill to what may be the greatest resource we possess—the waters contiguous to our three coasts.

I hope that when this bill goes to committee, the committee members will call before them people who will tell them about the danger of pollution to our salt waters, people who can speak with some exactness and on the basis of knowledge about the cost of cleaning up polluted salt water as compared with that of cleaning up inland water. For example, I would hope they would take a look at Bedford Basin, which is already dangerously close to being in a very serious situation. I have been told that a body of fresh water similar in size to Bedford Basin could be cleaned up in a matter of a few short years, but that Bedford Basin would require many years' work because it is salt water.

Again, Mr. Speaker, I lament the failure of the government to recognize the oneness of the resource that is water. I lament its failure to mention the oceans that surround us. I regret the failure of Canada to bring the matter of pollution before international bodies. This has lessened our international reputation. Certainly, we are concerned with and join international debates on the peaceful uses of the sea bed. We have great concern over the location of detection devices on our continental shelf, and over the strategic value of undersea weaponry.

Earlier today we heard one hon. member express concern about the report of a standing committee on which he serves. Yes, Mr. Speaker, we are concerned, but I suggest it is only in a casual, superficial way. When it comes to translating our thoughts into action, we pussyfoot. We use every device known to us to avoid facing fundamental truths and facts.

I am pleased to belong to a party which would never bring a bill of this nature before the House of Commons, a bill which goes only part way down what is a very long road. That road is a two-way street. I hope members of the committee which will examine this bill will accept the responsibility of tidying it up, of making it worthy of our intentions to combat pollution not only of our fresh waters but of the oceans surrounding us, waters that are our greatest human resource.

Mr. John Skoberg (Moose Jaw): Mr. Speaker, on rising to take part in the discussion on Bill C-144 I wish first to deal briefly with the situation in my province of Saskatchewan. Numerous comments have been made about the Saskatchewan River, which also flows into Manitoba, and all of the reports and observations we have read are far from what we consider adequate explanations of what could be done to stop its pollution.

We have been informed that the North Saskatchewan River is polluted by the pulp mill that exists at Prince Albert. Spent acid and caustics are being dumped into the river. The water below the mill is black, and the foam markings on the river banks are an indication of the lack of pollution control. I have been told that enough caustics have been dumped into the river by that pulp mill to make any form of fish life impossible for many miles downstream.

Some provinces have regulations requiring that effluent discharges be treated by aeration, but there are no such regulations with respect to this location at Prince Albert. Instead, all that is done is to provide settling ponds, and all hon. members know, particularly the minister in charge of this bill, that no effective type of pollution control can be achieved with only the use of settling ponds.

I am positive that if federal legislation were introduced that had teeth, the people of the nation would support it wholeheartedly because they are awake to the dangers of water pollution. No doubt certain power groups would lobby against the enforcement of such legislation, the adoption of which might cut into their profits, but the people generally, including those who work in factories, pulp mills and mining enterprises would appreciate the government taking positive action.

At present we have a hodgepodge of provincial regulations and authorities. A waiting game is being played. The status quo is being maintained. I believe the time has come for the federal government to implement positive legislation that will enforce pollution control.

A release by Canadian Press, which appeared a short time ago with reference to the Prince Albert pulp mill, stated in part:

> The Prince Albert Pulp Mill is not contributing to mercury poisoning in fish in the North Saskatchewan River, Paul Naftel of Regina, said during the weekend.
> Mr. Naftel, of the Natural Resources Department's Fisheries Branch, said although mercury was found in fish at the ferry below the pulp mill, it also was found in fish up river from the plant.

The Toronto Globe and Mail of January 19, today's date, contains an article headed, "Lack of Information and Equipment Hampers Study of Mercury Pollution." It reads in part:

> Investigators of mercury pollution in the Saskatchewan River, uncertain about the source of the problem, are hampered by a lack of information and research equipment.

Further on, it reads:

> It isn't that the problem didn't exist until six weeks ago. Nobody had ever checked Saskatchewan River water for mercury pollution before.

This indicates to me that the federal government does not provide the necessary resources to the provinces to enable them to do the proper research into water quality. Unless sufficient funds are provided to the provinces to enable them to investigate the quality of their waters, nothing will be done to combat pollution until it is too late, and until fish have died by the millions.

I quote another press article as follows:

> Grant C. Mitchell, Executive Director of the Saskatchewan Water Resources Commission, said Friday his department will deal next week with a plant at Saskatoon accused of polluting the North and South with mercury.

This investigation results from complaints from Manitoba. We should not have to wait for complaints from another province before launching such an investigation.

It has been said many times that there is no excuse for giving a licence to any company or individual to pollute our waters. This must be repeated time after time if we are really concerned about the over-all situation. I am sure that some members have referred to the Canadian Churchman, January issue, where certain comments appeared that I think should be put on the record. One article is written by Maurice Western, entitled "Ottawa Comment", and it reads:

• (4:30 p.m.)

> In the session of 1960, pollution rated a few scattered questions, speeches by a pair of backbenchers and a private member's bill in the name of Bert Herridge. The bill received first reading and then consigned, as usual but unfortunately, to parliamentary oblivion.

Now, Mr. Speaker, this pollution question has not just come upon us today. Here is a report, which indicates that as far back as 1960 the member had a private bill on the order paper but he accomplished nothing that would help mankind or animal life to survive. The article continues:

> The complaining backbenchers are now gone from the Commons. What they said about dead birds, oil spills and ruined fishing grounds has since been abundantly substantiated. But nothing much happened to disturb Marx and Technology or to check the pace of pollution.

Now suddenly a floodtide of public concern is out-dating the plans of all governments before they have even taken effect.

It appears that the only time any government will act is when the public demands that something be done, regardless of which government is in power. In the following paragraph, Mr. Western states:

In addition, the government, following the Swedish lead, has clamped down on the use of ddt. It is under pressure to take similar action against other polluting products.

Again, Mr. Speaker, when I asked the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Munro) about pollution and DDT on children's toys, I got the stock answer, "we do not know but we will look into it." Mr. Speaker, that is not good enough. This government must take positive action today, not tomorrow, about pollutants which the scientists tell us exist, the facts about which are well documented beyond any reasonable doubt. The government could pass legislation or enforce the present legislation to ensure that the people of this country are not subjected to complete contamination by all pollutants. In another paragraph, the article reads:

Unhappily, we are constitutionally handicapped as compared with other countries in committing ourselves to international co-operation. We have not ratified the 1962 Convention on the High Seas, which dealt with ocean pollution, and we have been unable to take advantage of the opportunities for co-operation in interstate and international waters created by the U.S. federal water pollution control act of 1956.

The reason is the inability of the federal government to enter into treaties which impose obligations on lower levels of government in Canada.

While we talk about being constitutionally handicapped, I again emphasize the fact that this government has the backing of the people of this nation. If the government of any province suggested that it would not agree to strong antipollution measures, it would never be re-elected.

As one citizen of Davidson, Saskatchewan, Mr. E. Laird, said:

My first concern is to have enough money to eat and my second concern is to be able to stay alive or survive in this pollution-riddled world.

Most people in this nation today, Mr. Speaker, are positive they will no longer be able to survive in this polluted atmosphere. The provincial governments of this country are still prepared to use petty arguments on a political basis in order to try to substantiate their condemnation of federal legislation. I think it is very very important that we find out at an early date what these provinces will do, and if any of them object to strong federal legislation this House and the Country should be well aware of it.

I cannot understand why, as far back as 1962, the Convention on the High Seas was not ratified. As we look at the provinces standing in the way, it makes us wonder where we are going and how we are going to get there.

In the October, 1969 issue of Reclamation, there are comments on the new Canada water act as follows:

Toronto: Ontario's Energy and Resources Minister J. H. Kerr yesterday welcomed the proposed Canada Water Act and said Premier John Robarts is even more determined than I that we are going to co-operate with Ottawa in this. He hoped there would be no jurisdictional problems.

I will add "Amen" to that, Mr. Speaker.

Victoria, B.C.: Ray Willison, British Columbia's Minister of Resources, said the province would co-operate with Ottawa but, in the manner one would "when someone points a revolver at your head."

That is a disgraceful statement by the minister in British Columbia and one typical of a defendant of the status quo. Any minister who stands up in the provincial legislative assembly and says, "We will co-operate when someone puts a revolver at our head" is not too concerned about pollution control.

Winnipeg: Natural Resources Minister Sid Green called the federal government "a move to dramatize the seriousness of the pollution problem." However, he expressed concern that the administrative body set up to govern pollution would be unwilling to enforce strictures against pollution.

At the same time, Health Minister Leonard Evans commented, "The federal government's intention is good, there is no doubt." Of course, intentions are not good enough, Mr. Speaker; it is action that the people of Canada are concerned about. Then, we move to Edmonton where Health Minister James Henderson said:

Ottawa's proposed Canada Water Act will not solve the problems of water pollution.

Here again, we can ask who is the Edmonton Health Minister concerned about? Is it the people of Canada and their health or is he concerned about sticking up for the status quo and making sure that the industries polluting the water in Alberta are not affected by antipollution measures?

Medicine Hat News: Alberta's Health Minister threw some cold water on Ottawa's proposed Canada Water Act. His grounds were poorly chosen. The minister, James Henderson, said the act will not solve the problems of water pollution because the major generators of pollution are population centres. His point about sources of pollution may be correct but this does not mean that industrial pollution can be ignored, it must be curbed.

I can add my thanks to the editorial writer in the Medicine Hat News for stating a situation as it actually exists.

Quebec: Paul Allard, Quebec Natural Resources Minister, was critical yesterday of the federal government's announcement of a federal-provincial water clean-up campaign. Mr. Allard chided the government for what he said was its failure to consult with the provinces before announcing a proposed Canada Water Act.

Once again, we are back to the constitutional question. Here are some examples, Mr. Speaker, of provinces that are not concerned about pollution but only about political gain by opposing federal legislation, even though that federal legislation in my opinion is very weak and was only brought forth so that the feelings of the provinces would not be hurt. Surely, these provinces could look intelligently at the over-all situation and not try to put roadblocks in the way of pollution control measures brought in by the federal government. Hopefully, then, in committee we will be able to make amendments to this legislation, Bill C-144, so that it will really mean something and help the people of this nation.

Now, Mr. Speaker, I am quite sure it is a straight case of the government of this day looking at the over-all situation as elimination or survival. If any so-called constitutional legal experts attempt to use pollution to feather their nests then there can be only one answer, the tar and feather philosophy. Then, we will see how long they can survive when resembling a bird. We all know birds of a feather stick together. But the only place for opponents of the national pollution policy is at the end of a pipeline which is discharging untreated, contaminated effluent into our streams, rivers and lakes and they should be kept there long enough to know what pollution is all about. Unless we make these people realize what pollution means, then there is nothing we can possibly do about it.

We see that various governmental bodies are to be used to deal with pollution control. It is said that there will be a federal program co-ordinated by the Department of Energy, Mines and Resources through an interdepartmental committee. It seems that the Department of Agriculture will not be involved in this matter and I hope that when the bill goes to committee, the views of the Department of Agriculture will be sought, because it can be most useful in over-all programs relating to pollution control. Also, I think the Minister of Finance, (Mr. Benson) Treasury Board and the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) himself ought to be drawn into these discussions. Unless those who hold the purse strings can be interested in a proposition for pollution control, no money for pollution control measures will be forthcoming. Although the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Mr. Greene) appears sincere in his desire to curb pollution, little has come from the Prime Minister's office on the subject, except pollution in the form of verbiage.

• (4:40 p.m.)

As I see it, the bill before us expounds a philosophy but will do little to correct the present situation. The Minister without Portfolio (Mr. Lang) representing Saskatoon-Humboldt and the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources, have asked members of the public to make representations to those repsonsible for pollution control. The public has been asked to participate in the discussions pertaining to this bill. There are many instances of people having tried to approach provincial or municipal governments on the subject of controlling pollution, but without success. In Moose Jaw, Mr. Gerry Hudson, first vice-president of the Moose Jaw and District Labour Council, made a survey of the incidents of pollution in the Moose Jaw area and presented his findings to council. Nothing was done about his report. Mr. Hudson and his assistants took photographs of surrounding waters and documented their findings. On November 18, 1969, they presented the findings to council in the hope that the matter would go to the provincial or federal governments. The newspaper report in my hand regarding this incident reads as follows:

Gerry Hudson, first vice president of the Moose Jaw and District Labor Council, attacked city council Monday for not acting on a labor council pollution brief.

The article continues. Answering an alderman who asked if someone could be accused of polluting something already polluted, Mr. Hudson expressed surprise and said:

'Surely, this could be characterized as the idiocy of the year' . . . 'The logic of the observation escapes us . . . an analogy to this might be—if a woman is raped once would it be pointless to accuse someone if she was raped a second time?'

In essence, this bill says that because our rivers and streams have been raped, they will therefore continue to be raped again, again and again. They will continue being polluted.

I hope no one will say that just because rivers and lakes are evil smelling, our conclusions that they are polluted are unscientific. In 1954, Moose Jaw city council had on its books a bylaw prohibiting the pollution of streams or rivers of the area. Unfortunately, no one enforced the bylaw. It is pointless having bylaws that are not enforced. I was as guilty as anyone for not making sure that our anti-pollution bylaws were enforced because at one time I was a member of city council. Unfortunately, I was as ignorant as the next man about the extent of our pollution. This shows how necessary it is for us to have strong federal laws if we are to control pollution. At the same time, I hope we shall not be accused of being unscientific if we say that evil smelling waters are polluted. Municipal authorities and those involved with pollution matters must make their views known, and we must therefore make certain that the members making up the committee to study this bill will not adopt an arrogant attitude and say that allegations of pollution are not being substantiated with scientific evidence.

According to the bill, it seems that the Governor in Council alone will decide whether the minister has made all responsible efforts to reach agreement with the provinces in this area. I do not think the Governor in Council alone should have the right to make this decision. I ask, after it has established a treatment plant in a designated water quality management area, how will the federal government collect revenues with repsect to that?

For the last couple of years, the federal government has only talked about pollution but done nothing concrete. Its approach to the problem is typified by saying it wants to help but that Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation has no money available for pollution control purposes. We need water quality standards in Canada to apply especially to interprovincial waters. The federal government measures quantities of water throughout Canada; why could it not, by using the same staff and facilities, measure the quality of those same waters? Prairie Farm Rehabilitation engineers, who are the people on the spot in many instances, could do useful work in measuring water quality.

Replying to motion for papers No. 51, which I believe was in the name of the hon. member for Kootenay West (Mr. Harding), the Minister of National Health and Welfare indicated that there are a certain number of municipalities which have done absolutely nothing to control the pollution of their waters. On the one hand, the government cut the allotment in its 1969 budget for pollution control and, on the other, the minister has been going around the country expounding the philosophy that we must control pollution. Some municipalities do not even have adequate sewer or lagoon facilities. A few have lagoon treatment systems. Municipalities in need have asked the federal government for assistance, but they have been told there is no money. Question No. 107 on the Order Paper is in the name of the hon. member for Kootenay West. It asks whether the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources has announced that incentives for the construction of municipal sewage plants exist under the National Housing Act. Part 7 of the question asks, "If so, which cities and municipalities have been informed of this decision?" As I look at the list before me, I see listed municipalities in Nova Scotia, New Brunswick, Ontario, Saskatchewan, etc.

As I go down the list, there are many, many areas, including British Columbia, which intended doing something but which have been told by this government, sorry, there just is no money. The government makes the pretence of telling the people of these provinces that really they are prepared to help with pollution control, but there is no money. The provinces and municipalities cannot do this alone. They alone were not responsible for this pollution. There is no other way of looking at it than from the standpoint that they must receive assistance from the federal government if we expect to accomplish anything.

I noticed that the comments I received in one of the questionnaires I sent out could apply to the entire nation. A letter from Davidson, Saskatchewan, refers to the DDT in the tissues of all Canadians. In fact, there is more DDT here than is permitted in animals slaughtered for human consumption. DDT comes into the over-all picture of pollution, but not necessarily too strongly in the Canada water act.

Another comment I wish to put on record is from a gentleman in Moose Jaw. He says:

—inflation and pollution are closely related. They have their roots in the profit system.

I think everyone in this House realizes that these people who are making the profits must also be obligated to erase completely the pollution we have in our environment. I now wish to put on the record a few comments with regard to pollution generally. The questions asked these people were, what action they considered should be taken with regard to pollution and were they in favour of strong federal pollution controls? These are some of the replies I received:

By all means, any city or town should be compelled to control pollution at their own expense.

The sooner the better.

We need to keep a healthy and sanitary Canada.

No sewage should be allowed to run into any river or lake.

The problem can't be ignored.

As I look at this list, I see there are many other comments from various other parts of the area.

Definitely. Crack down on all offenders, big and small.

Should be federal laws on pollution so individual provinces could not sacrifice to get industry.

I believe this is one of the main points this government should realize. There must be strong federal measures or individual provinces may have to sacrifice pollution control because industries will not locate where they have to worry about pollution control. Some more of the answers are as follows:

It is long past time of being needed. It is most important now.

Emphatically and now.

It is becoming a serious problem and is vital to our survival.

T.N.T. today—not tomorrow.

Yes, and make the polluters pay for it.

More money is spent on less important items.

It has got to be done or we will all be poisoned eventually.

Hopefully it isn't too late.

Definitely. I am a strong conservationist and think Rachel Carson's book is not exaggerated.

It should be done now before it's too late.

National policy in this regard to date is a disgrace. Much more must be done and soon.

The people most responsible are often not too concerned—only for profits.

Strict control must be put into force immediately.

If they don't take firmer measures, the whole country will suffer and it would cost a great deal more and perhaps it would be too late.

Long past due.

It is long overdue.

Yes, especially raw sewage from cities and industrial waste from industry going into rivers, lakes, etc.

We wish to have clean air and water for us and our future generations.

The Minister of Fisheries and Forestry (Mr. Davis) addressed a meeting in Vancouver on January 15, 1970. I wish to quote one short paragraph from his statement:

A national water quality code is essential.

We need to know what the performance standards for each industry are. We also must get each industrial association into the mood where their membership is prepared to carry out joint research and to recognize the public relations advantages of voluntary measures control.

Regional guidelines must also be drawn because each area of the country has its own requirements and may want to set higher standards still.

[Mr. Skoberg.]

In my opinion Bill C-144 does none of the things the Minister of Fisheries mentioned. Later on, he states:

In industry we must keep the worst pollutants to ourselves.

I suggest that keeping the worst pollutants to ourselves refers to the industry or municipality that is polluting. It is not good enough to suggest that we will put in primary pollution control measures which in effect would only take the lumps out and that is all. As we look at the speech the minister delivered in Vancover, it makes us wonder. He talks about industry-hungry New Brunswick being able to see the river dying, and mining seriously affecting the Atlantic salmon industry:

The mining industry currently employs 200 men the year round; the fishery 600 New Brunswickers on a part-time basis. One, the mines, has a limited 15 year life. The other, hopefully, has an unlimited life.

I hope the minister will have some influence on his cabinet colleagues with regard to pollution control measures. I feel that the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources, as well as the Minister of Fisheries and Forestry, is concerned about pollution controls. Their concern is to no avail, unless the resources are at their disposal to do something about this problem.

According to the statistics we have, it is absolutely impossible for this country to survive much longer unless money is made available to these various departments which are concerned. When this bill goes to committee, I am certain we will ensure that there are strong federal measures put into the bill so that the pollution control measures envisaged by the average individual in this country will be implemented by federal legislation. Provincial legislation will never be able to handle it. When this bill is considered, I ask that the cabinet reintroduce those loans under Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation which are directed towards pollution control so there will be some funds available to do something about this problem.

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

SUBJECT MATTER OF QUESTIONS TO BE DEBATED

Mr. Deputy Speaker: It is my duty, pursuant to Standing Order 40, to inform the House that the questions to be raised at the time of adjournment tonight are as follows: the hon. member for Broadview (Mr. Gilbert)—Housing—inquiry as to allowances; the hon. member for Vegreville (Mr. Mazankowski)—Consumer Affairs—alleged misleading advertising by Imperial Tobacco Company; the hon. member for Frontenac (Mr. Dumont)—External Affairs—Nigeria-Canadian action following ceasefire.

Order, please. It being five o'clock, the House will now proceed to the consideration of private members' business as listed on today's Order Paper, namely, notices of motions.

PRIVATE MEMBERS' NOTICES OF MOTIONS

THE SENATE

MOTION TO ESTABLISH COMMITTEE TO EXAMINE ROLE IN PARLIAMENTARY SYSTEM

Mr. David Orlikow (Winnipeg North) moved:

That, in the opinion of this House, the government should give consideration to the appointment of a Special Committee of this House which shall have the power to hold hearings in various parts of Canada, take testimony and hire experts, with the following terms of reference: That it shall examine the role of the Senate within Parliament and in its general constitutional functions and report with recommendations on whether the Senate should continue as it has been and is, or whether it should be abolished (and if so, by what means) or whether some form of reformed Senate is worth while (and if so, what reforms).

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Having read the motion to the House, I feel it is incumbent upon the Chair to draw the attention of the House to the fact that a decision has been taken with respect to one of the provisions in this proposed motion.

• (5:00 p.m.)

On December 16 last, the House negatived a motion for second reading of Bill C-18, which bill proposed the abolition of the Senate. Having made that statement, I refer hon. members to citation 194 of Beauchesne's fourth edition. I will read it in part:

A motion or amendment cannot be brought forward which is the same in substance as a question which has already been decided, because a proposition being once submitted and carried in the affirmative or negative cannot be questioned again but must stand as the judgment of the House.

In view of the provisions of that citation I will allow the debate to proceed, but it could be difficult for the House to reach a point where a decision might be taken. However, I think in all fairness to the hon. member and in view of the fact that in part his motion goes beyond the specific point, dealt with in Bill C-18, I will allow the debate at this time.

Mr. David Orlikow (Winnipeg North): Mr. Speaker, in spite of the decision which was made last month, I want to make it clear that as I move this resolution I am, have been, and will continue to be a believer in the abolition of the Senate. The reason I moved the resolution in the form in which I did was that I realized it was unlikely the House would approve a resolution calling for the outright abolition of the Senate. That being the case, it seemed to me possible that the House might be willing to approve a resolution which gave consideration to the appointment of a committee to study, not just the question of whether or not the Senate should be abolished, but how the Senate could be reconstituted to make a better contribution to the democratic life of this country.

Anybody who studies the evolution of the democratic system in society, whether it be in Canada, Great Britain, France or any other country, will quickly realize that second chambers such as the Senate or the House of Lords are actually the survivors of a predemocratic age. They are survivors of feudal institutions and constitutions which were in effect in medieval Europe before democratic systems such as we know them came into existence. The upper houses in most countries in early generations represented not faith in democracy but a hedge against democracy. The House of Lords in Great Britain was the bulwark of privilege and property, while the House of Commons was the protagonist of the rights of the people. I suggest that anyone who looks at the books which have been written about the Canadian Senate will come to the conclusion that the same is true of our upper house.

Robert MacKay in his book "The Unreformed Senate of Canada" said that of 308 Senators who served in the Senate of Canada from 1925 to 1963, 71 per cent were recruited from the realm of law, business and agriculture. Professional fields such as medicine, engineering, education and journalism, not to mention the very substantial percentage of Canadian people one can classify as workers or labour, have been grossly underrepresented in the membership of the Senate.

If one looks at the Parliamentary Guide and considers individual Senators, one can quickly see to what I have reference. I made no exhaustive study, but if my figures are wrong at all they are not wrong to any great extent. Let me give a couple of examples of what I have in mind.

Senator Hayden is a director of 10 companies in Canada. Senator Aird is the director of eight or nine companies Senator Molson is the director of eight companies. Senator Gelinas is director of 15 companies and Senator Thorvaldson is a director of nine companies. There is nothing illegal about this and I do not suggest that for a minute, but I do want to say that in a chamber which has the tremendous legal power which the Canadian Senate has, this could be and is a very dangerous situation.

Robert McKeown, who writes in Weekend magazine had a column on September 12, 1969 headed "Senators should be above suspicion—but they're not". He quoted from Section 53 of the rules of the Senate as follows:

> No senator is entitled to vote upon any question in which he has any pecuniary interest whatsoever, not held in common with the rest of the Canadian subjects of the Crown; and the vote of any such senator so interested will be disallowed.

Robert McKeown goes on to detail how three bills dealing with bank charters were tied up for several weeks in the Senate Banking and Commerce Committee, the memberships of which included four directors of chartered banks and whose chairman, Senator Salter Hayden, was a director of the Bank of Nova Scotia. Senator Hayden did not consider that being a director of a bank meant he had a pecuniary interest in the matter before the Senate. Robert McKeown said, and I agree, that Senator Hayden's definition may satisfy Senator Hayden and some other senators but it should not satisfy Prime Minister Trudeau or the Canadian public. I do not believe it does.

The situation in the Senate is not new. Goldwin Smith said this about appointments to the Senate:

> The Senate is a bribery fund in the hands of the Government . . . nor on its present footing will it ever be anything else—

Stephen Leacock, and certainly he was no flaming radical, said:

> Liberals and Conservatives combined, we made our Senate not a superior council of the nation, but a refuge of place-hunting politicians and reward for partisan adherence.

I could not agree often with what Stephen Leacock said or wrote about public affairs, but I can agree with every word he said in that passage more than a quarter of a century ago because it is still true.

If we consider the appointments former Prime Minister Pearson made to the Senate in his five years in office, we find that he made 31 appointments to that chamber. George Bain has analyzed them and points out that five were appointed because of their devotion to duty in the backrooms of the Liberal party, five because of their uniformly distinguished service in the House of Commons, four for their tenacity in hunting down campaign contributions in the role of party bagmen, three were recognized because of valour in the face of unequal odds, their inability to get elected in the Liberal cause, and five more because of miscellaneous contributions of time and effort to the Liberal party in the provinces.

In my own province of Manitoba, I can think of one senator appointed by the former Prime Minister. His main claim to fame is that he was the campaign director for the Liberal party during two elections in Manitoba. In one they elected two members out of 14 and in the second they elected one out of 14. That may be too many, but it does not speak well for his organizational ability.

Mr. Osler: You took over his policies.

• (5:10 p.m.)

Mr. Orlikow: We took over his policy—ha ha. I wouldn't mind taking over his financial status. However, this is the situation. Mr. Pearson will be remembered, and given credit, for a great number of things. He gave this country many years of distinguished service. One thing for which he will not be remembered and given credit is the calibre of the appointments he made to the Senate. Let me say, somewhat in defence of Mr. Pearson, I do not suppose his appointments were any worse than those of Mr. Diefenbaker, Mr. St. Laurent, Mr. King or Mr. Bennett before him. That is the way the system works. I submit that it is a bad system. Frequently, the Canadian Senate has been compared by those who would defend it to the British House of Lords. We must keep in mind, however, that the Senate, unlike the House of Lords, has a fixed number of members.

The British prime minister, if his legislation is threatened by the House of Lords, has a certain right. When Lloyd George, the Liberal prime minister of Great Britain in I believe 1908 or 1910, proposed to introduce legislation which was very progressive for that time he found that the House of Lords threatened to block it and made clear that if the legislation were blocked by the House of Lords he would appoint sufficient new members to the House in order to get the legislation passed. No Canadian prime minister can do that because the number of seats in the Senate is fixed by our constitution. The House of Lords and the Canadian Senate are entirely different in respect of the powers they have to amend or reject legislation. I do not intend to outline the powers of the British House of Lords but I suggest that the committee might take a look at them. The power of the House of Lords to reject or even hold up for more than one session legislation proposed by any British government is very limited.

Our Senate has virtually unlimited powers which can be exercised. I suggest this is not consistent with a democratic way of life. In Great Britain, the House of Lords has no power at all over money bills. That again is different from the situation in respect of the Canadian Senate. A number of proposals have been made for the abolition of the Senate. I do not wish to speak about this in view of the vote taken last month. A number of proposals have been made in respect of reforming the Senate. There was the suggestion, for example, that Senators be appointed for a limited term of office. There has been the suggestion that the power of the Senate be limited much in the same way the British system has led to the diminution of the power of the House of Lords in that country. Both these suggestions have some merit. They could both be dealt with by the committee which I am suggesting.

Now, I should like to deal with one other suggestion which has been made. I refer to the suggestion made by this government in the document entitled "The Constitution and the People of Canada" which was presented to the constitutional conference called by the federal government which was attended by the representatives of all the provinces. This constitutional conference was held on February 10, 11 and 12, 1969. At page 30 of the English section, we find the following:

> The Government of Canada feels that the Senate should be reorganized to provide for the expression in it, in a more direct and formal manner than at present, of the interests of the provinces. At the same time, the interests of the country as a whole should continue to find expression in the Senate to maintain there an influence for the unity of Canada.
> The Government of Canada would therefore propose a new approach to the organization of the Senate to achieve this end. The Senate could be partly selected by the federal government and partly selected by provincial governments.

Later on, at page 32 of the same document, we see this:

> —the provincial governments themselves—

would get—

> —a means of naming people who could give direct and clear expressions to the views and interests of the provinces—

Then, it reads:

> We feel however, that a reconstituted Senate should have certain special powers flowing from its role as an important institution of federalism. It should have a new jurisdiction to approve nominations by the federal government of judges of the Supreme Court of Canada, ambassadors and heads of cultural agencies.

I completely reject that proposal, because it would lead to more power for the Senate. What is even worse, I believe it would lead to more power for the provinces to do indirectly what they cannot do directly, namely block programs evolved by governments elected by the people of Canada as a whole. I believe this would be a very bad decision for the people of Canada to make. As I understand it, this proposal made by the federal government would require a change in the constitution and would therefore require the unanimous consent of the provinces. I wish to make clear that I have not discussed this matter directly with the present premier of Manitoba, my former colleague, at that time the hon. member for Selkirk, and I am not saying for a moment that I am speaking officially for him. However, I have known the present premier of Manitoba for a long time and I believe I know how he thinks. I am certain he would not agree to those proposals made by the federal government. That being the case, those proposals can be put into mothballs right now.

I shall close by suggesting to the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) that if he is not prepared to abolish the Senate, he might as well make the 12 or 14 appointments to fill the vacancies. I suggest that he make them in the usual way they have been made by former governments; that is, that he appoint well deserving political hacks from the Liberal Party. My colleague, the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles,) is not happy with my suggestion. I am not happy with it either, but we will be able to deal with the provinces.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): I just wish Hansard would show the smile on your face.

Mr. Orlikow: I would hope that members who are not prepared to vote for abolition of the Senate, and who may not be in agreement with all the criticisms I make of present or past Senators, will realize the important function, the important rights and the important veto powers the Senate of Canada has, and will therefore be willing to support this resolution which calls on the government to appoint a committee which would study the whole question of what role, if any, the Canadian Senate should fill.

[Translation]

Mr. Guy LeBlanc (Rimouski): Mr. Speaker, I am glad to express my views on this question.

I have listened very carefully to the remarks of the hon. member for Winnipeg North (Mr. Orlikow), who has just resumed his seat.

I have noticed that the hon. member has talked mostly in favour of abolishing the Senate, instead of insisting on the chief merit of the motion he was proposing to us, namely, the desirability of recommending to the government that a special committee be established to study the reorganization of the Senate and, perhaps, its abolition.

• (5:20 p.m.)

The abolition of the Senate is only one important point among several raised in his motion.

The hon. member begins by saying that he will always be in favour of abolishing the Senate. It is obviously his right to hold this opinion but what astonishes me is that, as far as I know, those who advocate most strongly the abolition of the Senate, of that institution which seems useless, backward, obsolete, a relic of the past, as he said, are precisely his own colleagues.

I am not sure of it but, a few years ago, was not one of his colleagues appointed to the Senate?

I am wondering whether the reason which leads the hon. member to fight with such frenzy for the disintegration of this venerable institution would not be that he feels disappointed and desperate about the improbability of his appointment to the Senate.

All of us speak more and more about evolution, but it seems to me that we could go too far when speaking of the evolution of our democratic society. It may be that the hon. member has exaggerated in saying that the Senate is a frivolous, pre-democratic and medieval institution.

[Mr. Orlikow.]

There are still many institutions which we all find valuable and which date from the Middle Ages or from a still more remote period.

However, I commend the hon. member for having brought in that motion, because I personally feel that it would be desirable to reform the Senate. The term "unreformed Senate" struck me, because it is surely partly accurate.

When considering the reform of the Senate, we could envisage the possibility of a fairer representation of the various ethnic groups of the Canadian population. Bilingualism and biculturalism, for example, are realities in our country. Right-minded citizens from all groups are proud to say that Canada is a bicultural and bilingual country.

It was even proposed that senators be elected, a system which could well be applied in the future and which has its merits since some countries, the United States included, elect their senators.

That senators should be company directors or that they should have some money interests, as the hon. member said, there is nothing illegal in that. Besides, is it as dangerous as he claims? When a senator is appointed while he is well on in years, it is obvious that he has not been waiting all his life for this post and that he certainly had other activities in the past. That he should already hold important offices in business or industry seems normal to me.

If we want our senators to be practical occasionally and to know how to join theory to practice, it is necessary that we should give them a chance to be realistic.

Having practical duties to perform in society could help them prove more useful to their country, I believe.

As concerns financial questions, they must be discussed, since we are all interested in them, including the hon. member.

When income tax or other tax matters are debated, we are all concerned, for we all have to pay taxes.

One of our past prime ministers, and others before him, came under fire for having made some political appointments. The hon. member said a while ago that the former prime minister had named 5 of the 31 present senators; it was their reward as party supporters, for having rendered great services to the party now in office. It seems to me that the proportion is not that great and, furthermore, who would blame those men for having worked for their party? Would that prevent them from having the qualifications required to do their task properly as senators? Let us not forget that a member for Parliament belongs to a party and that as long as the present system of political parties last we will not be able to work without taking that into account. Is it not also a most honest game? And if it is played according to the rules, I do not see any thing wrong with it.

However, I do congratulate the hon. member for his motion, a very substantial one, in my view. Every one of its points is of great importance. Once again, I am surprised that the hon. member has dealt with only one aspect of it, the last but one, that is the abolition of the Senate.

I am convinced that the other aspects of his motion were well-founded and very objective, showing the way for concrete and effective ways to improve the organization of the Senate.

From another standpoint, I wonder, in spite of the soberness of the wording of his motion, if the hon. member has not submitted something that should be considered in reverse order, that is from the end to the beginning, if we are to deal with the matter in an intelligent, sensible and serious manner.

• (5:30 p.m.)

I wonder if we should not rather endeavour to tackle the matter of the abolition of the Senate, as well as other very serious related problems, in a more comprehensive and logical way, going right to the heart of the matter. I also wonder why we should not follow a practice that has been followed for several years within the Canadian government. That method has passed the test in spite of the criticisms of some people and it has been recognized by most Canadian thinkers and serious businessmen.

A few years ago, after 1960, task forces and Royal Commissions have been set up. I think they have shown their worth. To the best of my recollection, the Glassco Royal Commission on Government Organization finalized its work.

The members of this Commission studied the whole public administration system. The study was comprehensive and dealt with essentials. Later on other commissions examined administration in detail. Their approach was more concrete and more analytical than synthetical, which in my opinion should come first. These commissions studied secondary and less important aspects of the problem that the Royal Commission on Government Organization had failed to analyse. I refer particularly to the Royal Commission on Taxation, to the Montpetit Commission which studied postal administration, to the Laurendeau-Dunton Commission which made the extensive and very important survey on bilingualism and biculturalism.

I wonder if this process could not instead be the basis of a recommendation to the government to study our parliamentary institutions as a whole, including the Senate and the House of Commons, so that they be more efficient, more practical and more interesting for all Canadians.

For several years now we have come to believe again in the relative importance of the Senate. The Senate has some importance, but it might be a good idea to evaluate it once and for all. In many quarters, and this is the hon. member's opinion, people are under the impression that it is useless.

It is currently said that the Senate seems to rubber stamp all the decisions taken by the House. It is accused of inefficiency. However, for me, the Senate—as the House—is a body which confirms the freedom of speech of the Canadian citizens. That is therefore to the advantage of the Senate or the House.

Without being a traditionalist, because I am a Liberal, I would rather favour changes but provided safety is not jopardized as some people have been saying for some time in some quarters.

However, one can say, given the past, that since the world began, wise men of any nation have always been of great importance and usefulness.

Let us also refer to the old popular saying, which still is valid and practical, yet reflecting a spirit of youth and renewal: "If the young knew, if the old could".

Although the future is said to belong to the young, and although the trend is that even the present is theirs more and more, we must not lose all sense of proportion. The young have some value, but the old too. We must not forgot that. We must be able to draw a distinction between them and let them play their own role.

If I speak of elders, everybody will recognize that any Canadian citizen over 30 may be appointed to the Senate. Generally speaking, senators are old men, citizens who have already proven themselves often enough in the course of a fairly long career; in short, those we can classify in general among the wise men of the nation are the ones who are appointed to the Senate.

When it comes to drawing a parallel between young and old people, some verses from a great French poet may serve as a rather good illustration of the problem raised by the different set of values cherished by young and old.

I remember some verses from the poem: "Booz endormi" by Victor Hugo. Booz was sleeping near sheaves of wheat. Here is what Victor Hugo wrote:

Les femmes regardaient Booz plus qu'un jeune homme. Car le jeune homme est beau, mais le vieillard est grand.

If the young have qualities, but their elders have theirs also. And Victor Hugo said:

Et l'on voit de la flamme aux yeux des jeunes gens—

It is true that as a rule young people are full of spirit and life, and that is as it should be.

But he added:

Mais dans l'œil du vieillard, on voit de la lumière.

If we need the eager strength and enthusiasm of youth, we also need the controlled strength and enthusiasm, if cool at times, of those nearing the end of a life filled with many past achievements and efforts, which have after all borne fruit.

But in this matter—

[English]

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. I am sorry to interrupt the hon. member but his time has expired.

Mr. Ross Whicher (Bruce): Mr. Speaker, like the hon. gentleman who has just resumed his seat, I would like to congratulate the mover of the motion. Looking at its wording, one can see it has much to commend its being passed by the House. However, I cannot congratulate him on the speech he made, which was completely political. He was crying because there are not many members of the NDP in the Senate. The reason is that appointments are made according to the population of the country, and we have in Canada many more Liberals of ability than we have among the supporters of the NDP. However, we did have an NDP member in the Senate, and no doubt there will be other members of that party in it in the future.

I congratulate the member on what he said. As I understood it, he suggested that a committee be set up to investigate all aspects of the Senate. I agree with this, Mr. Speaker, because there is no doubt that we are the most over-governed country in the world. According to the last census figures there are less than 21 million people in this country; yet we have 102 members of the Senate, 264 Members of the House of Commons and 634 members of provincial legislatures. We have municipalities with councillors and aldermen, boards of education, public utilities and, in some areas, county councils. In rural Ontario it is a most unfortunate citizen indeed who has not six or seven bodies for whom to vote. In addition to these elected bodies we have the Lieutenant Governors of the provinces and the Governor General of Canada. Overriding the whole legislative system is the Queen.

I think I am correct in saying that as far as Canada is concerned, with all due respect to the Indians, we have far too many chiefs and not enough Indians. Let us consider some examples. The province of Saskatchewan has 962,000 people, about half the population of the cities of Toronto and Montreal, but it is allowed 13 members of the House of Commons, six Senators and 59 members of the provincial legislature. Mr. Speaker, with all due respect to that great grain-growing province, that is simply too much government. There are in addition the municipalities, county councils, public utilities, etc.

My own province of Ontario is the most densely populated in the country, with about 7½ million people. We have 88 members of the House of Commons, 24 Senators and 117 members of the legislature. There are also the Toronto city council, the metro council, the hydro commission and the public and separate school boards. One does not have to delve too deeply to appreciate that we are over-governed.

If the motion of my hon. friend would bring this state of affairs to the attention of the general public so that the Senate—and I give this only as a hypothetical situation—might be abolished or changed, or that the other governing bodies might be restricted, I would support it.

I had the privilege last summer of flying over the great and beautiful province of Prince Edward Island. It has a population of only 110,000 people, but it has four Senators compared with 24 for Ontario which has 7½ million people, or Quebec with 6 million. Surely, Mr. Speaker, there is room for change here. It is time the government set up a committee to study the Senate and all other governing bodies in Canada. Prince Edward Island has four members in the House of Commons and 32 members in its provincial legislature.

I agree with the last speaker that the Senate has done much to help this great country of ours and has brought us through many rough times and situations. But perhaps it should be changed or reconstructed. Perhaps the whole system of governing Canada should be changed or reconstructed in some way.

The province of Manitoba has less than one million people but it has 57 members in the legislature, six in the Senate and 13 in the House of Commons. It is a great province and will be celebrating its centennial this year, but I wonder if it has not too much government.

Mr. Orlikow: Let's start by removing the Senators.

Mr. Whicher: My hon. friend says we should start by removing the Senators, but he does not say that in his resolution. As I read it, he suggests there should be a committee to examine the role of the Senate within Parliament. Perhaps the Senate should be eliminated. Perhaps my hon. friend's seat should be eliminated. I do not know about that; but there is too much government here, it should be investigated by a committee and something should be done about it.

It is not my intention to take up further time, Mr. Speaker. As I have said, for a country of 21 million people to have 634 members of the various legislatures, 102 members of the Senate and 264 members of the House of Commons apart from all the municipalities, etc., is simply too much government. I would, therefore, support my hon. friend's motion that a committee be set up to investigate the role of the Senate. At the same time, I suggest that the committee's terms of reference be enlarged to investigate the role of other governing bodies in Canada.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

• (5:50 p.m.)

[Translation]

Mr. André Fortin (Lotbinière): Mr. Speaker, I listened with much interest to the mover of this motion and I was surprised at the comments of the hon. member for Rimouski (Mr. LeBlanc). In fact, perhaps I paid more attention to him than to the mover because, first of all, he spoke in French and he brought up something new.

As for the mover, since we already knew his position concerning the Senate, there was nothing unexpected in his remarks.

The hon. member for Rimouski surprised us a bit and much as I esteem him, I do not agree with some of the views he expressed. I would like to see opposition members show to an increasing degree the same open-mindedness as the hon. member for Rimouski.

I feel I should stress the fact that the mover of this motion has shown that he sincerely wished to improve the role of the Senate, and it is his privilege.

The motion itself is divided in three parts. First, it should be recognized that the Senate raises a problem which requires consideration. In the second place, if it must be established whether the Senate should be abolished, improved or modernized, the members should be informed through the findings of a committee.

In my opinion, the mover does not impose his views on the house, but rather expresses a worthwhile opinion, because it is obvious that the Canadian people are not satisfied with the Senate, and they would like that body to be more efficient, whatever its future might be.

I agree with the hon. member for Rimouski that the older people deserve our respect and I felt involved when he mentioned the old and the young. We, younger people, may be full of enthusiasm, but we must recognize that those who are no longer young have experience.

Although I am in agreement with the principle set forth by the hon. member for Rimouski, I must point out that appointments to the Senate are the result of political favours. Under any government, when an individual has served the party well, or when it is deemed advisable to get rid of a member who creates problems for the party, he is appointed to the Senate.

We are expecting appointments to the Senate in the near future, as there are several vacancies there. And once again it will be seen that appointments to the Senate are used as a reward for services rendered more to a political party than to Canada.

What is wrong with the Senate is that Canadians have no say in the matter of appointments. Secondly, Canadians have no say insofar as the fixing of their emoluments is concerned.

Thirdly, Canadians get no report regarding the business of the Senate.

Fourthly, it is rather unusual to see the Senate oppose the decisions of the House of Commons. I could go on and on.

Our parliamentary system is surely out of tune, because in spite of all possible good intentions, talents and goodwill, the Senate has become a club where are found people most of whom would be better off to get their old age pension and to remain at home, not because they can no longer serve Canada, but simply because their duties have been cut down to nothing, and under our parliamentary system, this is ridiculous.

Mr. Speaker, I hope the hon. member for Rimouski is made a senator and then, he will have to realize as we do—he who shows such devotion—that he will be allowed to do very little when it comes to formulating legislation. All he will have to do is get up and sit down, that is do as his leader does, and cash his cheque.

He will not really be able to give the Canadian people leadership. Nor will he give advice to the House of Commons.

I have been in the House long enough to know this for a fact. No senator has ever met with us to give us advice about formulating legislation or to go over certain matters they know better than we do.

I see the hon. member for Chambly (Mr. Pilon). I hope he is appointed to the Senate that he might also realize that when one is made a senator one can only bless the Prime Minister for the appointment, because it is a reward. I do not wish him the appointment to get rid of him, but rather to reward him because he serves well the interests of the Liberal party.

It is rather ridiculous to deal with such an important motion on that level, but I do because to me that is obvious. As a good Liberal, one should welcome such a motion which, in fact, does not impose views on anyone and does not ridicule anyone. On the contrary, I feel it reflects to some extent the views of Canadians generally who would like a review to be made of the role of the Senate within Canadian parliamentarism, that there might be complementary ties between the House of Commons and its counterpart the Senate.

If the Senate were to disappear overnight, it would be a good thing for all Canadians. There would be less patronage, fewer political appointments. Indeed, what do the senators contribute as legislators? They make inquiries which in the final analysis solve very little, and whose recommendations are never implemented.

I could give several examples of inquiries conducted by the Senate. The reports usually gather dust somewhere, and are never studied. It seems to me that problem should be studied in depth.

[English]

Mr. Lloyd Francis (Ottawa West): Mr. Speaker, I have listened with a good deal of interest to the speeches made in this debate and, in particular, to the speech of the hon. member for Winnipeg North (Mr. Orlikow). The motion before this House would set up a special committee. The proposer of the motion went into some detail regarding his complaints about the Senate: he alleged that it does not represent the populace, that conflict of interest situations arise in it, and so on.

However, the proposer of the motion did not deal with the central issue of the procedure by which the Senate is to be amended or reformed. He read into Hansard proposals brought forward by the government of Canada at the constitutional conference. They included one that the manner of choosing members of the upper chamber should be discussed and reviewed with the provinces, and that the provinces should have the opportunity of naming some of the members of the Senate.

At least the motion before us is a little more sophisticated than the one brought forward recently by my hon. friend, the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles). His proposal would have amended the British North America Act by a resolution of this House, and was a little more difficult for some of us to follow. The notice of motion before us is more sophisticated because it suggests another line of action or investigation parallel to that which has already resulted from discussions that have taken place in federal-provincial conferences.

Those of us who have watched the Senate have, I think, mixed feelings about it. We know the problems. Thirty-five years ago as an undergraduate—and I am dating myself with this remark—I studied Professor Mackay's book, "The Unreformed Senate of Canada". Nevertheless, those of us who have come here and watched the other place must concede that useful work has taken place in it. I am thinking of the studies of science policy under Senator Maurice Lamontagne as chairman of the committee, the special committee on poverty under Senator Croll and the studies currently in progress under Senator Davies.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. the hour appointed for consideration of private members' business having expired, I do now leave the chair until eight o'clock.

At six o'clock the House took recess.

AFTER RECESS

The House resumed at 8 p.m.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

WATER RESOURCES

PROVISION FOR MANAGEMENT INCLUDING RESEARCH AND PLANNING AND IMPLEMENTATION OF PROGRAMS

The House resumed consideration of the motion of Mr. Greene that Bill C-144, to provide for the management of the water resources of Canada including research and the planning and implementation of programs relating to the conservation, development and utilization of water resources, be read the second time and referred to the Standing Committee on National Resources and Public Works.

Mr. W. M. Howe (Wellington-Grey): Mr. Speaker, on the news tonight a United States Senator made the statement that we are polluting ourselves into disaster. The Canadian Labour Union indicated that lack of pollution control could be an item for decision on strike action some time this year. For years we have talked about the necessity of carrying out proper conservation procedures and methods. To my way of thinking, conservation is the practice of one generation looking after the heritage with which it has been endowed, passing on to future generations a heritage unsullied and in the same shape and form in which it was handed down. I am afraid that every one of us in Canada is guilty of breaking conservation practices. Every one of us at some time has thrown away a piece of Kleenex, a chocolate-wrapper, a gum wrapper or an empty cigarette package. By the same token, pollution is being effected by our big industries in the tailings of mines and the pollutants from vats which are being poured into our lakes and rivers.

Now we are advised that the chemicals that we thought were doing so much good for mankind contain elements which can have dire effects upon ourselves and future generations. So that in fact, Mr. Speaker, we have not practised good conservation methods. In spite of all the programs of research, studies by commissions, discussion and debate in this House, we in Canada today are guilty of not doing as we should and we shall not be able to pass on to future generations—to our sons, daughters, grandsons and granddaughters—the heritage that was handed down to us.

Thus have fallen civilizations of the past, Mr. Speaker. Unless serious, thoughtful and considerate steps are taken, having in mind all the phases of this tremendously important question, we may soon—as some people have said—be wallowing around in our own garbage. We see this demonstrated on every hand these days, particularly in our rivers and lakes. We see the fish floating belly up; they are being washed ashore by the thousand due to the fact that life-giving ingredients have been destroyed by the chemicals we have poured into the lakes and rivers which were handed down to us in a pure state.

As I have said, there has been a tremendous amount of research carried out and a great number of articles written about the necessity of cleaning up our rivers and lakes; in fact, considering the whole question of pollution. I have been interested in this question for a great many years, Mr. Speaker, because in my own area in 1905 an engineer by the name of William H. Breithaupt walked from the source of the Grand River to its end. At that time he advocated some conservation measures, but it was not until many years later—1942, in fact—that the first conservation dam was built on the Grand River. This was the first effect of his advice given many years previously. Because of the water conservation bill that has been in force since 1952-53, two subsequent dams were built on that river. These were for flood control and to provide proper conservation methods. That conservation program has been of tremendous benefit to the whole area, and around each one of these lakes there has been a tremendous growth of summer colonies which have attracted tourists to the area. This program has been well worth the money spent on it.

Let me say something about the conservation measure that we are removing from our statute books by this bill. It was a good measure whereby municipalities, the provinces and the federal government took part. As a result of the union of these three forces, a great many conservation programs were started in the province of Ontario. I do not know about the other provinces, but I know the areas along the Grand River and the Saugeen River have been improved tremendously as a result of efforts by the municipality. The people interested in their areas were able to get into the act and do a tremendous job of providing conservation programs.

That was not enough. We knew there was need for more teeth in a bill to make it possible for law enforcement officers to bring to task those who unwittingly or knowingly pollute our rivers and are responsible for their condition today. The bill now before us was introduced with great fanfare. After talking about this situation for many years, we now have Bill C-144 which, as it says, is an act to provide for the management of the water resources of Canada including research, planning and implementation of programs relating to conservation, development and utilization of water resources. When we consider the various parts of the bill that begin with the word "whereas", it would seem that this might be the perfect bill. Considering the high-sounding phrases and window-dressing by the minister in introducing the bill, the people of Canada should expect great things from this measure.

It is rather difficult to understand why some of the agencies we have had in this country have not done a great deal to correct the situation. Rather than a bill with all this window-dressing, we should have a bill that would co-ordinate all the government agencies involved in this question. Had that been the case, we might have found some substance in this bill. Let me mention some of the government agencies that are involved. There is nothing in this bill about correlating all the services we have, and there are a great many.

In the federal government alone we have the Department of Energy, Mines and Resources; the Department of Agriculture, which takes in the Prairie Farm Rehabilitation Act and its administration; the Department of Forestry and Rural Development, which takes in the Agricultural Rehabilitation and Development Act and its administration and the Maritime Marshland Rehabilitation Act. We also have the Department of National Health and Welfare, the Department of Public Works, the Department of Transport, the Department of Indian Affairs and Northern Development, the Department of Evternal Affairs and the International Joint Commission.

[Mr. Howe.]

Let us consider the federal government agencies. We have Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation which makes loans for sewage-treatment plants, the Municipal Development and Loans Board which makes loans for water treatment, the Atlantic Development Board and the National Research Council with its committee on water pollution research.

We must also remember the international bodies. There are the International Joint Commission, boards of control, engineering boards, advisory boards on pollution, the Council for the International Hydrologic Decade, the International Committee on Irrigation and Drainage and the Great Lakes Fisheries Commission.

We should also keep in mind provincial agencies. In every province we have agencies set up to deal with conservation and the pollution of our rivers and lakes. If this bill is to be of any advantage to areas which require assistance, we should establish an organization with this end in mind, rather than all these local agencies. Perhaps we could correlate all the provincial, municipal and federal bodies into one tremendous organization that could attack this problem and find the solution so urgently required in our nation.

It is interesting to note that the bill points out that for a fee one can pollute the waters of this nation. This measure is not aimed at stopping pollution; it is aimed at licensing pollution. This situation should be rectified. We have been discussing Canada's water resources for years. We must continue to discuss it. We must make sure that this is the best possible bill and that it comes to grips with this great national problem.

I have in my hand the report of the Special Committee on Land Use in Canada which was handed down in 1963. One recommendation of that committee was the following:

> That the work of various agencies in the study and management of our water resources be expanded—specifically that work relating to drainage and erosion problems, irrigation, levels of water tables and present and likely future water requirements.

That report was published in 1963, yet in 1970 we are discussing a Canada Water Act. I also have the report of a study made by the University of Toronto, Great Lakes Institute, entitled "The Great Lakes and their problems". This study was conducted in 1965. In its introductory remarks, with reference to our Great Lakes it is stated:

> The Great Lakes constitute the largest single reserve of fresh water in the world and although we can say this very proudly it soon becomes apparent that the very size of the lakes can work to their disadvantage as well as being their strength. Because of their size it has been assumed that they will always be here with the same quality and quantity of water and there is nothing that man might do in the way of use or abuse that could change the natural regime.

We have seen what has happened to Lake Erie and Lake St. Clair because their lakes were not big enough. The report states further:

This was the thinking that motivated our forebears when they carried out their onslaught on the seemingly unlimited resources of this continent. It is not necessary to remind ourselves of the results of the wanton destruction that took place, but we should keep this image before us and realize that we are at present committing a similar monstrous destruction of the last large resource left to us in this area. We must also constantly remind ourselves that the Great Lakes are a natural resource which is far more vital to us than any of those which were destroyed in the past.

We have a great fund of knowledge and material in connection with problems confronting us in the field of conservation and the necessity of taking care of the great Canadian water resource. Anyone who wants to make a study of pollution should read this document which I have in my hand. It was published by the Department of Biology, McMaster University. It is entitled, "Up the Pyramid" and contains a passage headed, "Pollution as a road to nowhere". It states that the important question is not can man progress, but can we survive at all.

We have been warned about what we are doing. We have set up commissions, government agencies and bodies to study the situation; yet we go on and on polluting. This could be disastrous, as was said by a United States Senator. At times it seems that we are getting very close to disaster.

I suggest to the minister that before Bill C-144 is completely studied and reported back by the committee, he should call in all the expert opinion he can find. He should ask for interpretations and suggestions by the organizations which have made a study of this matter, including experts from the University of Toronto and almost every other university in Canada. Before the bill is brought back into this House, I sincerely hope a great many changes will be made to it. In this way, those who pollute the waters of Canada can be brought to task. I hope every step that can be taken will be taken to ensure that the waters of Canada remain pure and unpolluted.

• (8:20 p.m.)

Mr. R. J. Orange (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, having read and listened to the contributions to the debate on the Canada water bill from various parts of this House, I think all of us recognize that the problem of the control, management and proper use of our water resource in Canada is not only of concern but is of urgent importance to all Canadians.

Members from each corner of this House have expressed in their own way, sometimes effectively and at other times not too effectively, how they feel about the use and management of our water. Hopefully, as the bill moves into the committee stage all those who have spoken out so strongly and effectively will make their views known before the committee, which body will have the responsibility of coming back to this House at the report stage with the best possible Canada water bill that can be devised.

After listening to the various members who have spoken, it would seem that there are two or three areas in respect of which I might devote a little time this evening in an effort to clear up some of the misunderstandings which may exist at the moment. I believe I can leave to the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Mr. Greene) some of the specific answers to questions which have been raised by members. However, there are two areas with which I intend to deal at the moment.

The first is the question of national standards. There is a feeling among members in the House that there should be a national standard for water and in respect of water pollution. I think we might say briefly that this bill is intended to be designed for the management and use of our great national and natural resource—water. Although it is not so intended, it will no doubt be used as an anti-pollution measure.

I must emphasize strongly that it simply is not an anti-pollution bill. A bill framed to combat pollution alone would miss the point that we must seek a balance among all uses and all benefits. If one were to write a bill that would simply combat pollution, it would not be any more effective than one to control flood alone. Therefore, we have spoken of water resource management, comprehensive planning and water control management to indicate the breadth of this approach.

One of the facets of this broad management approach is, indeed, the setting of water quality standards. These standards must be the best possible for the river or river basin in question. They must be compatible with the nature of the river, the resource base of the region, the growth rate of population and industry and the variety and concentration of uses of that river. I think we seek to analyse and plan each river in detail and set the best standard.

The standards will be for full protection of human health and aquatic life and for the preservation of recreational values and scenic beauties as well as all other benefits. But to set a common denominator that suits both Lake Louise and Hamilton harbour is entirely inappropriate. Since all waters can never be entirely pure, we would have to set a standard for the nation that would be less than pristine purity. That being the case, anyone without stricture could pollute our finest waters down to the national standard.

I would ask members of this House whether that is the proper way to treat our purest water resources. My opinion, which I am sure is shared by most, is that it would be a licence, and a free one at that, to pollute. Yet that is precisely what a national standard would do. We want to improve the quality of polluted streams and keep those that are now beautiful and clean in that ideal state. This is why we say there should not be uniform standards but optimal standards. These optimal standards will not be set by local agencies. These agencies are only empowered to analyse, plan and recommend. The two senior levels of government are jointly responsible for the final decision, and hopefully, in the unlikely event that there is not co-operation at the provincial level of government, this bill will provide the federal government with the tools to move ahead on its own.

One of the great attributes of the Canada water bill is that it represents a positive approach toward the management of this nation's vital water resources. By embodying all the forces at the command of governments, and by providing for the effective utilization of these forces, it avoids the chaos of constitutional issues which in the past have inhibited or prevented a sound approach to water resource management and development. In the conservation of our natural resources, particularly in husbanding our scarce and critical ones such as water, we must use all the tools at our disposal. Through education and information we can bring moral suasion to bear; through prohibition and penalties we can bring punitive measures to bear, and through effluent discharge fees we can bring economic forces to bear. The bill before us incorporates all three.

I should like to devote some time to the discussion of the economic forces and the concept of effluent discharge fees which critics of this bill in their frequent reference to financing have somehow or other failed to comprehend or even note. One of the first principles of economics is that items of value have costs. These costs may be expressed in terms of money as determined by the market process. We are all familiar with the concept of the balance sheet whereby all the costs of doing business are totalled and compared with the revenue received from sales, which results in either a profit or a deficit. These are internal costs. But where costs are incurred, say, by another firm outside the framework of the balance-sheet, they are external to it and hence not considered in the accounts or in determining the value of production, the processes used or the combinations of labour and capital. The social costs of pollution are analogous to these external accounting costs and, indeed, include the costs of treating polluted water for downstream use.

By far the larger costs of pollution are borne by downstream users in the form of health defects, depressed land prices, closed recreation areas and destruction of our fish, wildlife and aesthetic resources, all of which have been brought forcefully to the nation's attention, through the public information media, by conservation groups and by this debate. Yet up to the time of this bill there existed no mechanism whereby these social costs could be integrated into industrial and municipal decisions; one had to rely upon moral suasion and the corporate image concept. While there have been some outstanding examples of social responsibility, these have been isolated and weak and have varied from industry to industry and from company to company.

Alternatively, one could choose to rely solely upon standards and penalties, but these punitive measures come into effect only after a plant has been built, after it has operated, and after the damage has been done. The cost and time required to determine the source of pollution, and carry through court action, mitigate against the use of these instruments for the day-to-day control of millions of tons of wastes.

Punitive measures do, however, have a place where flagrant and persistent violations are committed, or where tangible damage has resulted. National standards induce people to deposit harmful wastes to degrade water down to that standard and, as has been mentioned several times during this debate, general or national standards cannot possibly take into account the many special factors which apply to individual river basins or regions. I do not wish to be interpreted as saying that these punitive instruments have no place in pollution control. Clearly they have, but taken alone they have proved historically ineffective in maintaining and improving water quality.

The concept of effluent discharge fees embodied in the bill, to my mind, is one of its boldest and most imaginative features. It takes into account:

1. That there are social costs in the form of pollution resulting from many productive processes

2. That these social costs vary, depending upon the nature of the pollution, its aggregate volume, the characteristics of the receiving waters and man's use and enjoyment of these waters

3. That the contribution to pollution which industry makes is specific to the industry or plant; and

4. That there are a number of alternatives open to the firm or industry such as a change in production processes, recirculation, reclamation of waste and advanced forms of waste treatment.

The operation of the effluent discharge fee system would be straightforward. With the designation of water quality management areas and the constitution of the water quality agencies as provided for by the bill, a schedule of fees would be devised based on waste loadings, the characteristics of the water quality management area and the use of the water resource. These fees, when approved by government, would be levied on the firms and industries within the area for specific discharges and volumes.

The effluent dischargers would thereby be given a discreet and tangible incentive to undertake alternative courses of action such as recycling, advanced waste treatment, recovery of byproduct or a change in the production process. Fees could be used by the agency to undertake construction of treatment facilities for the effluent if it deemed this course of action advisable. Periodic review of the fee structure would ensure that water quality was maintained and, over the longer term, substantially improved.

I hope that without going into economists' jargon about "internalizing external economies and diseconomies," and so on, I have succeeded in drawing the attention of hon. members to at least one important aspect of the bill. Land, forests and minerals in this country were once in the category of free, or almost free goods which were open to exploitation or misuse. Over the decades this situation has changed, until today they are conserved and husbanded; it is recognized they have a value and a cost.

I believe this principle should be no less applicable in the case of water quality. Those who claim the fees which put a price on quality constitute a licence to pollute, miss the point. These fees are a penalty. They constitute an incentive not to pollute. They are a preventative force. On the other hand, standards and fines alone do give a free licence, with full legal and moral support, to pollute down to that standard. The record, expert opinion and commonsense all say they are not enough.

As to the bill now before us, the House has an assurance from the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources that when it is in committee amendments will be considered, and if they are in the national interest and compatible with the principles of the measures, they will be accepted. I hope that as we continue the discussion this evening those who wish to express their opinions on the bill will not hesitate to do so, and that the legislation will then be sent to the committee as quickly as possible.

Contrary to the opinion which has been expressed on more than one occasion in this House, I believe there are many in this country who will wish to acquaint the committee with their views on water management in Canada. I hope that people across Canada who are concerned with the maintenance of this resource and its preservation in the best possible state for Canadians of this and future generations will come forward.

I have sought to deal with two or three of the objections which have been raised by members of the opposition in respect of this bill. I hope that when the committee meets, those who have expressed their concern along these lines will make their views known once again to the committee. I can give the House an assurance such as which the minister himself will give later—that the matter is still open. We are prepared to discuss these things and do our best to come up with the best possible water management bill for the people of Canada.

Mr. Cliff Downey (Battle River): Mr. Speaker, while the problem of pollution is not a critical one in the area from which I come, it is a current crisis in many regions of Canada. I feel this measure is of great importance to us all because it is becoming increasingly evident, at least to all who keep themselves up-to-date on world affairs, that if we do not get worldwide pollution and rising birth rates under control in this decade, our civilization may well not last beyond the year 2000.

We human beings, with all our great intelligence and initiative, are much like common rats in this regard; if left to our own devices we shall pollute and breed ourselves out of existence. I do not think it would be fair to point the finger of blame for pollution in any one direction. Government and industry are both blamed from time to time. But I do not think it is as simple as that. Every human being contributes to pollution to some extent. Every member of this House has, over the years, made his or her contribution to pollution.

Another trait which is common to man is the compulsion to bite the hand that feeds him; to share responsibility for pollution and then to blame government or industry for the results. We all appreciate the standard of living that a profitable industrial complex affords us, while criticizing it as though it were completely responsible for all the pollution that has occurred. If there were ever a matter upon which we need complete cooperation among all parties in this House, among governments, industry and business at all levels, it is the whole area of pollution.

We cannot segregate and classify one type of pollution that might come under the Water Act because all pollution is tied together—air pollution, land pollution, soil pollution. One progresses to the other. They form a pollution chain and eventually will have to be dealt with under one agency. Industry must realize the futility of growth and profits if within a matter of two or three decades our once great civilization lies as quiet as a lunar landscape because of pollution. Governments, not just ours but all governments in the world, have their heads in the sand if in their governing they believe that matters like ideology, language and culture are of any real significance. These are matters that should be used only as talking points for people who are otherwise unoccupied, because the real battle—the battle that, if lost, will effect the eventual demise of many of the younger members of this chamber—is the battle to keep man from polluting his environment to an uninhabitable level.

Citizens, men, women and children should all be made to realize the futility of material success, the futility of almost everything upon which we put value today, if there will be no tomorrow. I reiterate, Mr. Speaker, that worldwide pollution is one of the greatest problems facing mankind. I will not mention the individual instances and problem areas in the country that are concerned with pollution. Members who have preceded me have done a more than adequate job in citing examples. Likewise, the shortcomings of the bill have been stressed many times.

In summary one might say that the bill will make no effective change in our pollution control. As several hon. members have pointed out, we have the power under several other acts, the Navigable Waters Act and the Fisheries Act, to enforce many of the pollution measures, if not all, that are proposed in this bill. But what worries me is that we might tie ourselves to so many regulations and red tape, and establish so many agencies, boards and petty empires that we will be in the same position as we are now with our grain marketing system. There we are so sorely overloaded with red tape, regulations, commissions, agencies and boards that we can do nothing but present claims and counterclaims, and in the final analysis we are storing half of the world's wheat, with the storage and handling charges eating away at the total value of the product.

In conclusion, I say to the minister who will be in charge of anti-pollution measures, "Yours, sir, is by far and away the most important portfolio in the government, for it is in this area that the continuation of civilization will depend." It would be the tragedy of this Parliament, even the tragedy of the century or of time, if any politician for the sake of expediency were to court the popular vote or the industrial establishments at the expense of pollution control.

Mr. B. Keith Penner (Thunder Bay): Mr. Speaker, I congratulate many of the speakers who preceded me in this debate because the concerns which they expressed about the water resources of the country are concerns that I share. As I look at the title of Bill C-144, the aspect of the bill which I would like to stress in my contribution is that which has to do with the management of water resources.

When the topic of water resources comes up, the people of northwestern Ontario become both interested and concerned, for this region of Canada has an abundance of the freshest water that is to be found anywhere in the world. I have had the personal pleasure of travelling in small craft along such rivers as the Winisk, the Severn, and the Attawapiskat, which flow northwards into James Bay. It is possible for one to dip a cup into these rivers and enjoy the sweetest, purest water imaginable; in fact, water that is safer to consume than that which you get from a tap in your own home. This is certainly not the place to tell fish stories, but there are in those rivers some of the largest and most enjoyable fresh water fish to eat that you can find anywhere in the nation.

We in northwestern Ontario want very much to preserve this precious resource of fresh water, along with as much as possible of the wilderness area that surrounds it. This is not for selfish reasons, not just for our own benefit and enjoyment, but rather for the enjoyment of those who live in what we sometimes refer to as the Great Lakes basin, an area that within the next 100 years will have a population of 200 million people. These 200 million people, living mainly in large, concentrated urban areas, will be looking northward for their recreation and for an escape from the rigours and tensions of urban living. We can offer them this in the region which I represent. It is therefore essential that industries, groups of people or individuals should not be permitted to pollute these valuable fresh waters or to destroy the recreational resources that we have in such great abundance.

It is always heartening to see industry respond in a positive way to the problems of pollution. Recently in the Thunder Bay area a major program was announced by the Domtar Company at Red Rock. The headline to the story indicated that Domtar was about to spend $18,300,000 on an expansion program, and that $7 million of that sum is to be used for pollution abatement. This company has been charged by the Ontario Water Resources Commission with polluting freshwater streams. I think the lesson is obvious—that corporations, like individuals, respond to good laws, and if these laws are acted upon, corporations as individual citizens will respond in a favourable way. My constituents and myself therefore applaud the federal government for introducing the Canada Water Act, which apparently is designed to permit the federal government to mount a systematic attack on water pollution problems jointly with the provinces, but unilaterally if necessary.

There have been those who have described the Canada Water Act as mere window-dressing, or as a ploy to convince the Canadian people that something is being done about pollution when in fact very little action will transpire. Just from looking at Bill C-144 it is difficult for me to judge whether this is the case or not. The effectiveness of this act, I suppose, depends upon the determination with which it is implemented by the Department of Energy, Mines and Resources, and also the degree of co-operation which may be forthcoming from the provincial governments. The other question is how much the government is prepared to spend in the implementation of this act.

It has been said that the management of Canada's water resources is a regional problem, requiring a regional approach. Under the new act, the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Mr. Greene) may enter into arrangements with the provinces and form joint committees for the purpose of consultation and development of programs and to coordinate their implementation. This could be established along national, provincial, regional or even lake or river basin lines.

It is said by the minister and his officials that where necessary regional-federal-provincial boards will be set up to take inventory of water resources, collect data on their quality, distribution and use, conduct research and direct a variety of programs designed to conserve and develop regional water resources to the full. Such a concept pleases us in northwestern Ontario, because we feel very strongly about regional development. We want a say in these plans and we want a say in government programs designed specifically for our region.

I think it is well known in this House that northwestern Ontario, a vast wilderness region in that rich province, has always been a little suspicious of governments, whether in Queen's Park or Ottawa. There is a strong feeling among the people I represent that they want to be involved and informed whenever important and far-reaching decisions are being made about our region and its resources, whether we are talking about mining, the forest industry or our water resources.

This is not always the case, however. Frequently we are not consulted and are left in the dark, presented with a fait accompli when it is too late for us to offer any suggestions or have any input regarding these decisions. For example, from the year 1966 to 1970 the amount of money spent by the federal government on studies of northern Ontario water resources will amount to $2,203,000. This is the federal government's contribution to the Co-ordinating Committee on Northern Ontario Water Resource Studies which was established in accordance with announcements made by the Prime Minister of Canada and the Premier of Ontario in the early part of 1965.

I do not know what the provincial contribution to these studies is, but I assume that it will be on a shared-cost basis, 50-50. This means that about $5 million has been spent in the last few years to study water resources in northern Ontario. This information interested us greatly, Mr. Speaker, but to the best of my knowledge no one in the region has been involved or even kept informed of the purposes or results of these studies.

This situation has of course led to a great deal of fear and suspicion. There are rumours about ambitious plans to divert northward-flowing rivers southward into Lake Superior. Those who live on Indian reservations and settlements, people who operate as tourist camp outfitters, and many other citizens, have approached me for information. They do so in a spirit of anxiety. Some ask whether our governments are making plans for the massive exportation of water to the United States. My reply is that I do not know but I will endeavour to find out; I will make inquiries so that we know the purpose of the extensive water resources studies that are going on in our region. Some people claim that the American Corps of Engineers is involved in taking stream-flow measurements. They want to know what these people are doing there. The minister has assured us that to the best knowledge of the Canadian government such people are not involved.

Recently I attended a meeting at which a number of concerned citizens discussed questions of the diversion and exportation of fresh water. I think the announcement which went out indicates how citizens feel when they are not informed or involved when something that affects them directly is going on under their very noses. This is what the letter said in part, Mr. Speaker:

> We in the area have been made aware of a gigantic plan by our federal government and that of the United States, to divert huge flows of water now flowing north to flow south to the U.S. Many of us have viewed a detailed mapped plan of the project and are very much concerned over the scheme. The secrecy of the whole plan so far is certainly undemocratic and, according to the mapped plan, could be most devastating to our north country. This is all contrary to what we as Canadians fought for in two world wars. Surely we have a right to know what is going on and how it will affect the future destiny of our children and the country as a whole.
> This meeting has been called to discuss this enormous plan and its effect on wildlife and many other aspects. We trust we may have the pleasure of your presence and your views on the project.

I went to that meeting, Mr. Speaker, and met citizens who were deeply concerned and quite disturbed. They had fears and anxieties that the balance of nature, the ecology of northern Ontario would be upset by the diversion of the swift, northward-flowing rivers. This turned out to be an organization meeting. What came out of it was an organization with the interesting name of KNOW, Keep Northern Ontario Water.

They wanted to know what I could tell them about this project. All I could say was that up to the present, eight progress reports had been submitted to the government of Canada and the government of Ontario and, more specifically, to the Co-ordinating Committee on Northern Ontario Water Resource Studies. I was able to acquire progress reports Nos. 6 and 7 through the courtesy of a member of the Ontario legislature. Looking through these, I found a statement of objectives prepared by the Co-ordinating Committee for Studies to be carried out separately by agencies of the two governments. This statement of objectives reads as follows:

> With respect to waters draining into James Bay and Hudson Bay in Ontario, to assess the quantity and quality of water resources for all purposes; to determine present and future requirements for such waters; and to assess alternative possibilities for the utilization of such waters locally or elsewhere through diversions.

The latter phrase is the one that catches the eye immediately—"utilization of such waters locally or elsewhere through diversion." Responsibility for hydrologic and engineering studies required to attain these objectives has been divided between the Division of Water Resources of the Ontario Water Resources Commission and the Inland Waters Branch of the federal Department of Energy, Mines and Resources. Economic Studies are the responsibility of the Economic Planning Branch of the Ontario Department of the Treasury and Economics and the Policy and Planning Branch of the Federal Department of Energy, Mines and Resources. Other federal and provincial agencies are actively participating in this work.

This leads us, Mr. Speaker, to ask the question whether there really are plans in the wind to divert and export fresh water to the United States. Of course, I do not know whether there are such plans buried somewhere deep within the minister's department. I do know, however, that in the United States there are people who are talking very clearly about the need for water to be imported into the arid zones of their country. Before the turn of the century the western United States may be using Canadian water to augment its meagre supplies. This is the opinion of Dr. Donald W. Calvin, vice-president of the Federation of Western States.

• (9:00 p.m.)

Denver water engineer Lewis Smith is also quoted as telling the July meeting of the Western States Water Council that the key to obtaining Canadian water was the understanding that the Canadian economy would benefit from any diversion program. Western gubernatorial eyes were also cast on Canadian waters during the recent meeting of the Western Governors Conference in Seattle, Washington. The Los Angeles Times quoted Wyoming Governor Stan Hathaways' apparent majority view as follows:

—many of us feel the real answer is to import water from Canada.

California Governor Ronald Reagan added the note, "We'll trade a university for some water." A question regarding diverting and exporting water to the United States was asked of the minister in the House on November 19. He replied that no such discussions are presently going on between Canada and the United States. Nevertheless, this entire question remains a pressing matter in the minds of many Canadians. I should like to read some of the views expressed at the Interprovincial Conference held in Quebec City last August. The views expressed are interesting and are worth relating to the House. I read from a report contained in the Globe and Mail of August 6, 1969. It says:

Premier John Robarts of Ontario put great stress on the need for information on water needs and resources. 'I would insist on a very, very, very serious study before we sold a drop of fresh water and I don't believe that these studies have taken place.

'I am not in favour of flushing away somebody else's pollution with fresh water, Mr. Robarts said. I believe that pollution has to be cleaned up at the source.

'But, if water were needed, the question would be where it would come from?'

The last question I believe can be answered. The water would obviously come from those areas that can supply fresh water. Manitoba Premier Ed Schreyer is reported as having said that who controls water will become a serious issue when proposals are made for the sale of water to others, especially to the United States. He added that he does not think water should be exported for industrial use; if it is to be exported it should be sold first as a developed commodity such as electricity. That is an interesting point.

One of my constituents said, perhaps in jest, "If we are going to sell water, we can do it one way only: bottle it, then sell it." Premier Schreyer advocates converting it in to electricity and then selling it. He added, however, that if there are large bodies of water in the northern parts of provinces, that cannot be used for any other purpose, it would be foolish to refuse to consider future sales of water beyond the needs of the Canadian people.

I would quote information as to how much water actually is available. There is some information about that, and I shall refer to it in a moment. I quote from a paper entitled, "The Rationale of Water Export and its Implications for Water Resources Research in the North," presented in 1968 by a professor of geography at the University of Alberta. The paper says in part:

The total water supply in Canada available for use in the future will probably not be much over 1 billion acre feet. At present we withdraw about 2 percent of this amount for use, consume 0.3 to 0.47 and temporarily damage through pollution dilution about 10 percent . . . By the year 2000 it is unlikely that we will withdraw more than 10 percent, or consume more than 2 percent of the available supply. With the help of our neighbours, in particular the Great Lakes region, we may pollute between 20 and 30 percent of the supply. The greater part of the supply will flow into the sea virtually unused.

One of the Premiers has suggested that any excess water flowing into the sea might be exported in some form or other to the United States. According to the Globe and Mail report, another Premier at the conference, Premier Thatcher of Saskatchewan, said:

We most definitely oppose the sale outside of Canada until the needs of our province, such as in the Palliser area, are met. In principle we are against the exporting of water and in particular we are against it from our part of the country.

The report also says that Premier W. A. C. Bennett of British Columbia was almost equally adamant, saying:

Under no circumstances would we sell fresh water to the United States. Where water flows naturally, we will do nothing to interfere. But water is a basic element of life— It is Our No. 1 resource.

When one talks about diversion schemes on the North American continent, Canada seems to figure prominently in the discussions. About eight large-scale, long distance water diversion schemes have been proposed on paper, but these are engineering schemes and are privately sponsored, having been promoted at water resource conferences where such schemes are discussed. One such scheme for diverting Canada's waters to the United States was discussed at a conference held at Sherbrooke, Quebec, in 1966. A very important man was present at the conference, General McNaughton, Chairman of the Canadian section of the International Joint Commission from 1950 to 1962. General McNaughton called the scheme for diverting our waters for export a monstrous proposal, saying:

The promoters would displace Canadian sovereignty over the national waters of Canada and substitute, therefore, a diabolic thesis that all waters of North America become a shared resource of which most will be drawn off for the benefit of the United States midwest and southwest regions where existing desert areas would be made to bloom at the expense of development in Canada.

These schemes for diverting our waters for export are really no more than academic exercises on paper, because apparently not all the water authorities in the United States have been convinced of the need of an international diversion of waters. One of the more thoughtful views on United States water management problems was given in 1966 by the Committee on Water, of the National Academy of Sciences. The report begins with these words:

This report is not prompted by a national shortage of water, for there is no nationwide shortage, and no imminent danger of one—

This view is contrary to that expressed often in magazines and newspapers but must be accepted with some degree of confidence because of the body that expounds it. Some have suggested that the United States government is more concerned with increasing its efficiency in water use and in alleviating pollution levels. When asked whether he had any designs on Canada's water, former Secretary of the Interior Udall made this decisive statement:

We've suddenly begun to realize in the United States that if we do the right job in pollution control, we are going to increase our water resources enormously . . . we are not looking hungrily at Canada's water resources, we are looking at our own.

I think what interests those I represent and what ought to be of concern to Members of Parliament is the government's present position on this matter and what has been the position of preceding Canadian governments. If one looks through the records and summarizes statements made by responsible ministers and officials at both federal and provincial levels of government during the past several years, a number of points emerge which seem at this moment to represent Canada's policy with respect to its water resources. Six of these points are as follows:

(1) Canadian waters are not a continental resource; they are as Canadian as any other resource found within the national boundaries.

(2) There is no identifiable market as yet for Canadian water in the United States.

(3) Canada would be unwilling to negotiate any sale of water at present even if there were a market, because Canadian water supplies have not yet been adequately inventoried and Canadian water requirements into the future have not been assessed. Canada must satisfy its own requirements first.

(4) An accelerated effort is underway in Canada to this end, but it will take at least several years to complete.

I assume the studies going on in northwestern Ontario are a part of this accelerated effort to assess our own resources.

(5) Federal and provincial governments in Canada must both agree before international negotiations can begin.

(6) Canadian waters will never be sold under conditions which would jeopardize their permanent ownership and their repatriation if and when needed in Canada.

If that summary of statements is the position of the present government, it is one that can be supported. It is said that the Canada Water Act, now being debated, will provide a multi-dimensional, co-operative approach for a dynamic, new attack on our water problems appropriate to today's concerns and according to today's concept of federalism. I would appreciate receiving assurance from the minister that local and regional interests will be consulted in all policies concerned with water resources, both their protection and utilization, and also that the regional water management agencies which will be established under this act will enlist and use people who possess both knowledge and concern for the region that is involved.

If something so drastic as the diversion of rivers is actually to be carried out, we in northwestern Ontario are not concerned merely with the engineering feasibility and accomplishment of something that is as expensive and vast as this; we are also concerned with other important factors such as the ecological effects, the effect on the balance of nature. What would be the effects of major diversion and storage upon river scour and deposition patterns? Would micro and macro climatic patterns be changed? Would vegetative cover and wildlife patterns be affected, and would these effects be positive, negative or both? Would patterns of water development and land use in Canada be affected, and in what ways? Can the negative effects be reduced or modified, possibly to our advantage?

One of the disturbing things about the studies going on in northwestern Ontario is that apparently engineers are almost exclusively involved. Where are the ecologists and the social scientists? Should they not also be having an important input regarding a decision to radically alter the environment of a large and important part of this nation?

I understand that this is not the only country studying the question of diverting rivers. Apparently it is also being done by the Soviet Union. A few months ago there was in a daily newspaper a small item from Paris. It raised the interesting question of diversion of rivers. This article is entitled, "Diversion of rivers could 'brake' earth," and reads as follows:

> A U.S. scientist warned Wednesday that proposals to divert large rivers in North America and Russia could slow the earth's spin or make it wobble.
> Dr. Raymond L. Nace research hydrologist with the U.S. Geological Survey, said proposed river diversions to supply water to thirsty southern areas could shift weight from the pole toward the equator and slow the earth's spin.

Not being a scientist, Mr. Speaker, I have no idea whether that would be a bad thing or a good thing. It does illustrate, however, that many learned people realize that the diversion of rivers, a massive engineering scheme, would have drastic effects on our environment. If ever our fresh water is to be exported, we want to be assured that our future needs are given precedence, and that the region which I represent will benefit greatly from such exportation and will not be adversely affected. If this act succeeds in preventing further pollution and restoring presently polluted waters to their original state, and if it provides for greater utilization of the great resources that we have, this government will have earned the gratitude of the people who live in the land of lakes and forests, namely, northwestern Ontario.

Mr. Walter C. Carter (St. John's West): Mr. Speaker, at the outset I would like to congratulate the minister on his excellent speech on November 20, at which time he introduced the bill now before the House. The minister is obviously thoroughly familiar with the problems of pollution and the devastating effect it is having upon our environment. The minister's way with words, his great oratorical ability, is all the more appreciated when one realizes that the bill he introduced to deal with this very serious problem is nothing more than window-dressing. The government's grandiose plan is designed to accomplish nothing.

One thing that can be said for this government—it is consistent. When it makes up its mind not to do anything, it does not do anything. I need only draw the attention of hon. members to the government's great plans to cure regional disparity, its promise of a just society and to deal with rising costs and unemployment. These are things this government promised to tackle. It promised them in the same vein as it now promises to tackle the serious problem of pollution.

A large number of people in my riding of St. John's West were seriously affected by pollution and the effects of it on their livelihood last year because of what happened in Placentia Bay and St. Mary's Bay. Their livelihood was affected, and indeed in many respects completely destroyed by the results of pollution. These people have first-hand knowledge of what pollution can do to them. They share my disappointment with the government's wishy-washy, meaningless approach to the entire problem. To say it falls short of the desired objective of such an act is the understatement of the year.

The people of this country were led to believe—and I speak with some authority for the people of my riding—that once enacted, this legislation would have the necessary teeth to prevent another Placentia Bay tragedy, and would in fact be capable of effectively dealing with the problems of our environment and its pollution, generally considered to be one of the major concerns of Canada, in fact North America, in this decade of the seventies. Instead of seeing presented to the House legislation with teeth and able to deal with the problem effectively, we see legislation that is complicated and largely ineffective.

• (9:20 p.m.)

For example it deals only with water and does not touch upon soil or air pollution. Even as it concerns water, it does nothing to improve the interdepartmental maze or sort out the federal jurisdictional problems as among the various departments of government. It does not make provision for the establishment of national standards for water quality, equipment or monitoring. It does, in fact, still leave it for one province or one area of the country to encourage industry, because of lower standards of pollution control in other parts of the country.

There is no indication that the federal government is going to put up any money for pollution control. There is no provision in the act for preventive measures. Areas not designated will apparently wait until their waters are polluted before receiving attention. There is no provision for equal treatment by the federal government of one water quality management area compared with another. In each case everything will be done by separate agreement. One of the other inefficiencies of this proposed legislation is the absence of criteria to justify the amount, or percentage, of federal involvement in each case; and as I mentioned before, there is no fixed cost-sharing formula. The measure provides for the setting up of water quality management agencies, dumping the problems of water management and pollution control on these agencies without giving them sufficient power to carry out their functions.

Some of the questions that should be answered by the minister during the second reading stage of this bill are the following: Will the local agencies have the facilities or knowledge to carry out what will be expected of them? Will they have the power to collect the fees they will be authorized to collect? How will they enforce collection, and are they taxes to be charged against the land? I believe these questions have a very serious bearing on this measure and must be answered before the bill is given approval by the House.

I mentioned at the outset that the minister did an excellent job of introducing the bill. He showed the House that he has a thorough knowledge of the problems of pollution, and expressed a need for immediate attention. I am sorry to say that is where he stopped. It should be said, in all fairness, that the minister cannot be expected to perform miracles or wave a magic wand and have the problems of pollution disappear. After waiting patiently for this legislation, and having listened to ministers talk about its "all-cleansing power," the least we should expect is a measure that might provide some hope for our people.

For my part—I think I share the views of my colleagues on this side of the House—I had visions of a national department or agency being set up to co-ordinate pollution control efforts of all departments and to deal effectively with water quality as part of their over-all approach. I had visions of a bill that would deal with water quality as part of a national priority for pollution control, one which would commit the necessary funds from federal tax revenue. I hoped that the government would establish national minimum standards for water quality management, not just for special areas, and provide for pollution prevention on a national basis.

Getting back to the pollution problem experienced last year in the waters of Placentia Bay as a result of the establishment of the ERCO plant in that area, I see nothing in this bill that would have altered the course of events there had it been in effect at that time. I submit that the Fisheries Act gives the government a greater degree of authority to deal with pollution of our waters than anything embodied in this bill, that is, if the Minister of Fisheries (Mr. Davis) is prepared to exercise his authority.

In the case of the pollution of Placentia and St. Mary's Bay, the minister was not prepared to act with the necessary haste because while he was pussyfooting, the waters became more polluted, the economic plight of those affected worsened, the destruction of marine life in the area continued and the cause of pollution became harder to remedy. The Minister of Fisheries and Forestry, not unlike his cabinet colleagues, has been heard to say on a number of occasions about the Placentia Bay episode, as well as on other occasions when the subject of pollution control has been raised, that the shortly-to-appear Canada Water Act would be the answer to the problem. Surely, the minister was not serious, nor did he expect to be taken seriously by the Canadian people when making such utterances. Surely, the minister must have been aware of the meaningless and ineffective attempt being made by the government to deal with the problem, at least as indicated by this bill.

The problems experienced by the people of my riding last summer were probably unique to all of Canada. All of us have talked about pollution and the dangers and serious effects it will have upon our environment; but the people in my riding were the victims of this terrible tragedy. A large number of them had their livelihoods affected. Indeed, in many respects their chance to earn a living from their trade and vocation completely destroyed.

A number of questions with regard to that tragedy have not been answered. I am now trying to get these answers from the government. This government had knowledge of the problem that would exist with the establishment of the phosphorus plant. It has been suggested that reports were exchanged by the federal government and the provincial government, the company itself and the Bedford Institute of Oceanography. I contend that the people of that area who suffered this injustice have a right to know all the facts concerning the pollution of their water, the cause of that pollution and whether it could have been prevented by the federal government and the provincial government. I hope the information I have requested will be forthcoming in the very near future because the people are entitled, as I am as a Member of Parliament, to it.

The House is entitled to this information. I ask the government to take the necessary steps to ensure that the information which I am so anxious to obtain is made available to me. I consider it my duty as a Member of Parliament to join my colleagues on this side of the House in their efforts to have the Canada Water Act amended so that it will contain the anti-pollution measures needed to save Canadian waters. I am sure we have the support of all Canadians who, like us, are demanding an end to the continual corruption of our natural environment.

Our party has consistently demanded tough federal action to deal with pollution. The government has responded to our demands and the demands of the Canadian people with the Canada Water Act—a pitifully weak and wishy-washy bill which in my opinion betrays the hopes and expectations of all Canadians.

• (9:30 p.m.)

Mr. Barry Mather (Surrey): Mr. Speaker, in rising to take a brief part in this discussion of the Canada water bill, I do so very conscious of the fact that the people in the part of Canada from which I come, the lower mainland of British Columbia, are perhaps more conscious and more concerned about the dangers of pollution in all its forms than the people in any other part of the country. In British Columbia we now have more than two million people. Over one-half these two million people live in less than one-half of one per cent of the land area of the province. I am speaking of the lower mainland area from which I come. There is a concentration of population comparable to that of many older industrial countries of Europe.

Through that area flows the Fraser River, into which over the years the waste from homes and industry has been discharged. The people of the lower mainland of British Columbia are extremely conscious, and daily reminded, of the problems and health hazards of pollution either by water or air. I should like to briefly cite three or four recent developments in this area in regard to pollution. First, a week or two ago the International Salmon Fishery Commission approved an investigation of the Fraser River to determine the level of the pollution and the extent to which the pollution there is responsible for the reduction of the fishing runs over the last several years.

Second, next year British Columbia will be celebrating the centennial of that province's entry into confederation. It has been seriously proposed to the centennial committe of British Columbia that a major project which might be undertaken would be the cleaning-up of the Fraser River starting in 1971, the year of our centennial of confederation. In the knowledge that the federal government has granted the province of Manitoba for its centennial celebration this year the sum of $6 million or $7 million, which I think is excellent, the people of British Columbia are looking for at least a similar grant for the purposes of their centennial celebration in this coastal province.

Another development of public concern with relation to pollution in British Columbia is the organization and spread of a voluntary, anti-pollution organization called the Society for Pollution and Ecology Control, in short SPEC. This group has branches in many parts of the province; the organization is growing almost each week. The concern of this organization is to find out how individuals can work to combat air, water and land pollution. I believe this organization is doing an excellent job and is setting a good example to the public authorities in British Columbia in this field.

I see that the minister responsible for piloting this legislation through the House is here this evening. I should like to refer him to a bulletin put out by the SPEC organization concerning what they are looking for from him. I believe they are too optimistic, but in any event this is what they say under the heading "Joe Greene is Coming to B.C.":

> At the end of Jan. J. J. Greene Fed. Rec. Minister is coming to B.C. to meet with his provincial counterpart Mr. R. Williston. We are all aware of the complete lack of commitment in the area of pollution control on the part of the provincial government. We urge each and every SPEC member, their friends and associates to write Joe Greene in Ottawa immediately urging him to be tough in his dealing with Williston and Bennett. Many SPEC members say they want to do something. Here is their oportunity. WRITE: The Hon. J. J. Greene, Federal Recreation Minister, Parliament Buildings Ottawa Ontario.

I hope the minister has noted what I said is expected of him. I doubt very much whether he will live up to the expectations of the people who put out this bulletin, but I hope he will. So far I have been speaking about the reaction to the water bill and to the subject of pollution by the people of British Columbia. However, the same feeling exists in a great many parts of our country. Pollution in all its forms is a collective problem. Private enterprise has not only failed to deal with this problem but is actually the chief culprit.

If one could express in a phrase what the people in my part of the country want from the government in respect of pollution control, I would say it is an all-out national war effort led by the national government against all forms of pollution. After looking at this bill which we are discussing, it would seem that instead of that we are getting from the government a sort of quiet diplomacy aimed at gaining a truce which would be acceptable to private enterprise or, in this case, big industry. The legislation before us is really too liberal and too late. It will add another administration in respect of water control. We have many such organizations now. The Glassco Commission some years ago pointed out that in Canada no less than 168 water control administration agencies were either federal or provincial. No doubt a few more have been added since that time.

The proposed legislation will create further legislation. At the present time I believe we have four or five federal statutes, a notable example of which is the Fisheries Act. If the government had the will to do so, it could really clamp down on water pollution across the country with the authority it has. The proposals before us will mean the employment of more experts and the spending of more tax dollars for the purpose of examining the problem of pollution. But I am told we already have 13 or 14 government departments carrying on this work. This bill might have been good 10 or 15 years ago as a start along the right road, but today I am afraid it will further pollute or further muddy the waters in which pollution breeds.

There are several kinds of pollution in Canada, about which we have heard very eloquent speeches in recent days. There is water pollution, air pollution and land pollution. These are all evil and must be met by a collective plan led by the federal government. But there is another type of pollution which perhaps is equally injurious to the public. This is constitutional pollution. This type of pollution is with us and is growing through the years. We have the situation that in respect of many fiscal matters, either federal or provincial, the federal and provincial governments say that they cannot do this or that because of the constitution.

The constitution was made for Canadians; Canadians were not made for the constitution. I contend that if the present majority government had the will, it could control pollution under existing legislation. However, if it does not think it can, I would suggest that it has just as much a responsibility in this regard as it has for pollution by liquor in respect of drinking drivers. Action in this regard was taken recently under the amendments to the Criminal Code. I suggest that the government equally has a responsibility in respect of pollution of water.

If we can outlaw pollution by liquor, why can we not at the same level outlaw pollution by water? The federal government could rally the whole country behind it, if it would declare war on pollution of air and water. The public is sick of talk, delay conferences and workshops. The public is anxious, ready and calling for action at the national level for clean air and water. The people want a massive national attack on pollution. Having in mind what it did in respect of liquor pollution, I am sure that if this government gave the people of Canada the same kind of leadership in the area of pollution, about which so many thousands are concerned, it would do a great deal for national unity in this country.

It is at this level, the level of a common denominator among our problems, that the federal government could really take the lead and rally the people of Canada behind it. Had it done so in this case, I am sure no province, no city, no industry could have withstood such an initiative. But the government has failed to take such a lead. It is a great pity, in the circumstances, that hon. gentlemen opposite should have missed the boat, thereby letting the country down.

The measure before it does not commit the treasury to any expenditure to help the provinces or the municipalities in their efforts against pollution. It fails to set national water standards. If passed it will simply add legislation to existing legislation. The onus is still left with the provinces and the municipalities. This bill is not good enough. It should be rewritten with the 1970s in mind rather than the 1940s.

[Translation]

Mr. André Fortin (Lotbinière): Mr. Speaker, I have been waiting for some time for the opportunity to express the views of the Ralliement créditiste on Bill C-144 and I have heard in the House well-researched speeches explaining the positions of the various parties.

It seems to me that this bill is stirring up a debate such as we have seldom seen in the House. For once, all hon. members, on the government side as well as in the opposition, recognize with one voice the urgency of getting down once and for all, to the task of preserving Canada's natural resources, especially its water resources.

However, even though we rejoiced at first sight at the introduction of this bill, we do not approve of it unreservedly.

The basic principle of the water conservation policy is therefore to provide on the one hand, for a sound administration and on the other hand, for the most rational utilization of Canada's water.

The bill before us now rests upon undeniable facts, namely that we have in Canada huge water reserves but in view of the shameless waste of such wealth, the federal government is at last compelled to action.

We fervently hope that the measures the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Mr. Greene) has in mind do not come too late.

The federal government has decided to take action but, paradoxically, it does not say a word about how much money should be invested to control pollution to any effective degree.

In my opinion, Bill C-144 is an excellent description of global policies but it fails to indicate, from the practical point of view, anything that might lead us to believe that the government is serious about this problem which, according to the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources should be given a priority.

There is no doubt, Mr. Speaker, that we have shamefully squandered our wealth, in the past. And there is no doubt that we must do something now. But I doubt whether this is possible without money.

The minister makes no bones about saying this bill is a joint and global undertaking. Joint, because of the hope of ensuring the participation of the provinces, and global, because it aims at pooling all the conceivable initiatives, whether regional, municipal or provincial, in a huge program devised to eliminate pollution.

In consideration of what, if the provinces did not agree to support this pollution control, the federal minister would keep the right to act on his own. This is one of the privileges he secures for himself in the bill.

We are guilty of having squandered our water resources. We have invested a lot of money in industry and trade. However, we have lacked inspiration, foresight and wisdom; we are investing, on the one hand, to improve the situation while, on the other hand, we are squandering our wealth in the most shameful way.

We have completely forgotten our natural resources; our water policy was non-existent. A release published by the minister's office says that some order will be put once and for all in the bureaucratic and juridictional maze. I shall come back to this in a moment, but I suggest that we shall really have a basic problem to solve.

In the past everything was left to chance. When a provincial government was asked to help in the solution of a pollution problem, we got the following answer: This does not come under our jurisdiction. This belongs to the federal government. However, when the federal government was asked to solve the same problem, the answer was that it did not come under federal jurisdiction.

I have here the letters of a provincial minister and of a federal one which expose the problem created by pollution. The bureaucratic and jurisdictional maze with regard to water pollution is such a huge problem that Bill C-144, in my humble opinion, will not solve it.

Water Resources

During the month of November 1969, I had the opportunity to consult with the Quebec Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce, with the Quebec Minister of Game and Fisheries, as well as with the federal Minister of Fisheries and Forestry (Mr. Davis).

It was about the problem of water pollution in the St. Lawrence river. Indeed, a fisherman of the Lotbinière riding used to catch two eels a day on average after having invested $5,000 in fishing equipment. This situation is common in my riding.

When this problem is referred to various governments, because it has water pollution as a direct cause, they claim, in view of the bureaucratic and jurisdictional intricacies, that it is not their responsibility.

I would say that Bill C-144—and that may be its greatest failure—will not bring a solution to this problem. In order to call the attention of the minister to this matter, I will read a letter of the Quebec Associated Deputy Minister of Trade and Industry, Mr. Maurice Lessard, dated November 10, and I quote:

• (9:50 p.m.)

The Department of Tourism, Game and Fisheries has referred to us your letter of October 20 concerning the fishermen of your constituency plagued with water pollution.

Water pollution is a major problem with which all governments are concerned; these last years, pieces of legislation have been introduced at all levels to control that plague and counteract its ill effects. However, some time will have to elapse before we can see their beneficial effects.

This means that the inconvenience about which the fishermen of the Lotbinière constituency complain are similar to that suffered by a very great number of fishermen in the province of Quebec. We deplore such a situation, but no legislation at the present time provides for assistance to offset the inconvenience that you outline.

I was then inquiring about the provincial government policy on water pollution and as can be seen, I did not get any reply.

I had also written to the Quebec minister of Tourism, game and Fisheries but I will not put the reply on record. However, I should like to call the members' attention to the other side of the picture, that is, what the federal government thinks about the problem. I have in my hand a letter from the minister of Fisheries and Forestry, dated August 14, 1969, and I quote:

Sir:

I acknowledge receipt of your letter of July 14th expressing your concern about the fishermen and the fish likely to be affected by the pollution of the St. Lawrence, from Montreal to Quebec.

Unfortunately I must remind you that under an agreement, fisheries management in Quebec comes under the juridiction of the province, more specifically under the Department of Tourism, Fish and Game.

In the event that such steps as you suggest should be taken, they will no doubt be prepared by that department.

Yours sincerely,
Jack Davis

According to the two ministers, this seems to close the matter. What do we see? The problem is still there and dead fish litters all the shores of the St-Lawrence. Moreover, swimming is prohibited. The water stinks. Our great river, one of Canada's matchless resources, has become a national disgrace.

Neither the provincial nor the federal government tries to find a global and joint solution, as the minister put it, to solve the problem. They pass the buck and say: This does not come under our jurisdiction, this is the responsibility of such and such government.

The minister claims that Bill C-144 will solve the problem.

I have here a communiqué issued by the Department of Energy, Mines and Resources, which is entitled: A new Water Act designed to unravel the bureaucratic and jurisdictional maze.

What a problem! The department acknowledges itself the problem to such an extent that it set it forth in a press release.

It reads in part as follows:

Hon. Otto E. Lang, the minister responsible for energy and water resources, has stated that the proposed Canada Water Act just announced by the government is aimed at unravelling the bureaucratic and juridictional maze which so far has stifled all initiatives concerning control over pollution and conservation.

What high-sounding words to say nothing!

The people of Canada are increasingly worried by the failure to undertake a long term project and by the lack of co-operation at all levels of government.

The release continues, and I quote:

The federal government must take the initiative, in a concerted action—

I dare anyone to find in Bill C-144 the excerpt which elaborates what the minister means by "take the initiative", and "a concerted action".

Under cover of a new piece of legislation, and with the help of the huge publicity machine, Canadians will be made to believe that the pollution problem is settled at last.

Also, we shall be made to believe that the provincial governments are in this fight till the end and that, right now, there is no longer any co-operation problem. Now, you will note that in the preamble—and this is one of the problems I have raised recently—the minister takes the initiative and goes it alone in the fight against pollution.

What guarantees have we that before using this privilege he has granted himself, the minister has accepted to co-operate with the provinces so that it will be a total fight?

In the past, in this field as in so many others, the ministers, under cover of an act, have resorted to all kinds of reasons to avoid taking action.

Some may doubt my words, but if we consider how pollution control will be financed, we are flabbergasted and necessarily disappointed, since we cannot foresee any financing means.

In conclusion, may I say that the bill is in itself excellent, considering the government's slowness in taking action to control pollution in order to protect our very rich water resources.

On the other hand, Mr. Speaker, I should like to express reservations with regard to federal-provincial, interprovincial and intergovernmental relations in this field.

Finally, I suggest that the financing provisions of the anti-pollution program will merely contribute to an increase of Canada's indebtedness, since to finance these measures the governments through their various agencies, depatrments and corporations will have to borrow at exorbitant interest rates and thus put Canadians into greater debt.

The fight would be a truly serious project if the government adopted effective means of financing, in other words if it used the Bank of Canada, since this concerns the development of a natural resource which does not belong to the minister nor to any particular Canadian but to all Canadians. Considering that this resource is here and now public property, it seems to me that the financial instrument which belongs to all Canadians, the Bank of Canada, should be responsible for the financing of such programs. Then we could say the minister is really serious and that he is not misleading the population.

To conclude, I wish to say again to the minister how grateful I am for this bill, and I would like him, in turn, to acknowledge that the financing of sewage disposal programs by the Bank of Canada, at interest rates not exceeding management rates, would be most useful. We could thus finance sewage disposal plants and municipal projects in that field.

At the present time, this is a major factor of debts for the municipalities, and if the minister agreed to use this method, as proposed by the Créditistes, we would have a genuine solution to the problem of pollution, and we would not get Canadians deeper into debt.

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

A motion to adjourn the House under Standing Order 40 deemed to have been moved.

HOUSING—INQUIRY AS TO ALLOWANCES

Mr. John Gilbert (Broadview): Mr. Speaker, on Thursday, November 27 last, I directed a question to the Minister without Portfolio (Mr. Andras) in charge of housing, with regard to housing allowances. This question was prompted by a submission by Mr. H. W. Hignett, president of CMHC, when he and his officials presented a brief to the Senate Committee on Poverty. In that brief it was suggested that a guaranteed annual income and system of housing allowances would help as part of a drive to provide decent housing for every Canadian.

In a report in the Globe and Mail of November 26, Mr. Hignett was quoted as saying that these steps were necessary, and they would have to be coupled with an expansion of the supply of housing for all income groups in both the public and private sectors. He also warned that exclusive reliance on private production and distribution methods to provide an adequate stock of houses would harden the dangerous trend to physical segregation of income groups in the country's big cities.

He also pointed out, Mr. Speaker, that if the trend were to continue that housing was determined by the income of the individual, we would have the segregation of homes based on the income of the occupants. He noted that cities like Montreal, Toronto and Vancouver were prime examples of the segregation trend that was taking place.

With regard to housing allowances, Mr. Hignett said the system put forward by CMHC would mean an income supplement to families and individuals to acquire housing of their own choice in the private market. Housing would have to meet a required standard and there would be limits on household income and rent. Mr. Hignett said that the advantages of the scheme are that it gives people a greater choice as to where they live and how they live than public housing, allowing for increased diversity and mixing of neighbourhood populations. He said:

> It allows greater flexibility in helping those whose problem is not necessarily inadequate or poor quality housing, but rather the proportion of their income spent on rent which prevents them from properly providing for other necessities.
> Finally it does not identify those in receipt of subsidy in the way that occupancy of public housing does at present.

He and his officials pointed out that this system has worked with some success in countries like England, the United States and Sweden. At the same time, Mr. Speaker, the president indicated that CMHC predicted a rent reduction in public housing, that the six-year old scale with regard to rent geared to income was being reviewed and that in the near future changes would be made, with a corresponding increase in subsidies paid by the federal and provincial governments to meet operating losses in public housing projects.

Mr. Speaker, I recall that when the estimates came before the Standing Committee on Health, Welfare and Social Affairs, the former minister in charge of housing indicated that we would have some form of housing allowances in the near future. That was a year ago, and to date we have not had any. I welcome the statement by the president with regard to how CMHC feels in this important area.

Michael Wheeler, the former executive director of the Canadian Welfare Council, set forth in an article in "Canadian Welfare" for September-October, 1968, the pros and cons of a national housing allowance. On page 3 of this article he said:

> The allowances could be used to advantage in conjunction with non-profit and co-operative sponsored housing and also with existing public housing; rents for these dwellings would be set at a level sufficient to cover debt charges and management costs without subsidy and the tenants would then be entitled to a housing allowance designed to ensure that their gross incomes were sufficient to pay an approved rent after deducting the cost of a defined level of consumption varying with size of family.

In other words, Mr. Speaker, we would take into account the available income of a person and then try to determine the average basic expenditure with regard to the necessities of a household and the number of people in it, not taking into account items like housing, and from that a housing loss would be determined.

In the Nevitt scheme which is available in England, for example, if the monthly joint income of the husband and wife is $360 and the monthly basic expenditure for a family with two children is $285, the amount available for housing is $75. If the actual gross then were $100, the housing allowance would be $25.

Mr. Speaker, this is one of the many ways in which we could increase our supply of housing and lessen the burden with regard to heavy rents. I hope the minister will not refer to the housing loss as applying exclusively to private accommodation, but will apply it also to public accommodation. I look forward to his answer and I thank him for attending here this evening.

Hon. Robert K. Andras (Minister without Portfolio): Mr. Speaker, I return the compliment and thank the hon. member for his remarks which are, as usual, quite valuable. The president of Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation was speaking before the committee in the other place and had reference to many options which we are examining in the search for better forms of housing for low income citizens. I have examined the transcript of his comments, and to set the record straight I think it should be recognized that it was a statement of options to be considered rather than a statement of commitment to any one at this stage.

It is an interesting concept, and the more sophisticated approach of giving people a free choice through income to seek their own type of accommodation intrigues me. However, I should be less than responsible if I said that that sort of thing will be brought in in the foreseeable future. I doubt very much whether it will be.

Touching on some of the other points raised by the hon. member, we are looking at revisions to the rent-to-income scale. We shall be talking to provincial governments very shortly about changes pertaining to the rent-to-income scale, and these will do many of the things the hon. member mentioned in his comments. We have offered the provinces a formula relating to housing allowances. As a matter of fact, we are negotiating with the Minister of Trade and Development of Ontario to see if he wishes to go ahead with the acquisition of existing housing units which are now vacant in the city of Toronto. The houses would be taken on a prime lease of between three and five years and we would, of course, offer the federal subsidy as if these were newly-produced, public housing units. This would disperse the units throughout the community and would alleviate the shortage to some degree.

I am anxious to look into the public housing interim policy as soon as possible. I mentioned in a comment in December that this matter had taken longer than I had expected, mainly because of the very definite need to consult with the provincial governments. We have all their recommendations, the last one coming in just prior to the Christmas holidays, and I am hopeful that we can put before the provinces a composite recommendation. We shall keep the hon. member's comments in mind in any changes we hope to introduce at least in the 1970 program.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS—NIGERIA—CANADIAN ACTION FOLLOWING CEASE-FIRE

Mr. Bernard Dumont (Frontenac): Mr. Speaker, on January 14th last, I asked the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Sharp) if he would address a protest to the Secretary General of the United Nations, Mr. U Thant, following his statement that the UN would not tolerate or recognize a secession in Nigeria. Furthermore, I asked on what authority he took it upon himself to make such a statement and whether he had jurisdiction to declare that present boundary lines were immutable.

Moreover, immediately after U Thant's statement, the Russians found a valid excuse to ship to Nigeria powerful guns which crushed Biafran resistance. In my opinion, when the Secretary General of the United Nations makes a pronouncement without being authorized to do so he shows irresponsibility. The African countries inherited boundaries established by former colonial powers and a number of governments object to them.

Moreover, I know that the Secretary General of the United Nations was well aware that the rebellion of Biafra was the result of a series of assassinations and the Secretary of State for External Affairs also knew that England having some economic interests to protect had only to undertake some military operations on July 6, 1967, which were only supposed to be a march designed to prevent the Shell Company from paying to the Biafrans 90 per cent of its production.

The Secretary General of the United Nations answers that Russia was also an arm supplier. It is true that Russia supplied some arms. After the events of Prague and Budapest, we have nothing to expect from that country. Since we are making a stand against the communist ideology, we should not, in my opinion, consider as normal the strange alliance between Russia, Great Britain and the United States.

When the Cameroons wanted to recognize Biafra, the American delegate, Mr. Joseph Palmer, was sent to that country to say that American aid would be cut off if the Cameroons took such a step. This only appearance of Mr. Palmer on the scene of the Nigeria-Biafra conflict was a turning point. Besides, through its secretary John Foster Dulles, that country often declares: "The United States have no friends, only interests."

In this conflict, even Pope Paul VI expressed the fear of retaliation. He is against the massacre of unarmed people. It seems to me that if the United Nations did not intervene to promote a peaceful settlement of the war, they had no right to condemn the secession of Biafra. I ask myself the following: On what authority do the United Nations or U Thant act this way? The world is so full of areas of friction and conflict that such a clear-cut attitude appears provocative.

I conclude therefore that the United Nations Secretary General is at the mercy of English and American trusts, and his attitude will lessen what little regard countries may have had for his authority. Through such gestures, the UN wants to act as a world government which would have the right of life and death over all nations, and soon it will be said that the control exercised by the UN and its Secretary General represents an economic dictatorship and that without their permission nobody will be able to live.

Mr. Speaker, if the Rockefeller Foundation, Standard Oil, Esso and the Manhattan Bank supply more assistance to Lagos University than to seven of the poorest states of the American Midwest, because there is no oil in Kansas, we have a clear proof that U Thant is the puppet of those financial tycoons who do not hesitate to destroy a nation in order to protect their interests. To let 4 million people die to keep, in collusion with the United Nations, the control of the oil reserves of a country, constitutes in my opinion a criminal act.

Mr. Speaker, when Canadians are misinformed by the C.B.C., when the parliamentary secretary to the minister falls back on the statement of the Secretary General of the United Nations, when he schemes to prevent the opposition from telling the truth, he is as responsible as U Thant who, up to now, has not shown the slightest indication that he was ready to ensure the shipment of relief as quickly as possible, in the hope of saving human lives.

It seems that the Charter of human rights states clearly that each man is entitled to life, freedom and security, that all human beings are born free and enjoy equal dignity and equal rights, that any individual is entitled to freedom of religion, speech, meeting and association, and that nobody can be held in slavery or bondage. It is added that any person has some effective recourse before the courts concerned, against acts that infringe upon the fundamental rights recognized as his under the constitution or the law.

Taking the rights of the individual into account, the Canadian government should strongly protest before the UN which has gone beyond its rights, to make sure that such errors will not happen again. Otherwise, the Secretary General of the United Nations should yield his post to a man imbued with social justice, for nowadays, many people speak of freedom, but very few concern themselves about it.

Mr. Jean-Pierre Goyer (Parliamentary Secretary to Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, accusation by association is an old tactic of Communist parties, and I am surprised to see that the hon. member seems to be using it with regard to the Secretary General of the United Nations.

In any event, I believe the hon. member intended to allude to the reply given by the Secretary General to a question put to him during a press conference at the time of his trip in Africa.

It certainly does not behoove me to interpret what the Secretary General has said, and all the less so because I have not had the opportunity of reading the text in extenso. In any event, I should like to refer the hon. member to paragraph 6 of resolution 1514 adopted by the General Assembly of the United Nations during its 15th session, on December 14, 1960, and I quote:

> Any attempt towards the partial or total destruction of the national unity or territorial integrity of a country is incompatible with the purposes and principles of the United Nations charter.

PRIVILEGE

MR. KNOWLES (WINNIPEG NORTH CENTRE)—ACCURACY OF "GLOBE AND MAIL" REPORT

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a question of privilege. In this morning's issue of the Toronto Globe and Mail there is a report on certain exchanges that took place in the House yesterday in which there is attributed to me a statement that is the very opposite of what I actually said.

Mr. Trudeau: It happens all the time.

Mr. Benson: Join the crowd.

Mr. Bell: Impossible.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): The Ottawa chief of the Globe and Mail has already apologized to me personally.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Trudeau: I never get any apology.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Perhaps he should get his name in the paper too. In any case, I feel that the record should be corrected. The offending sentence in the Globe and Mail reads as follows:

When Mr. Trudeau said he expected to make an announcement "in due course," Stanley Knowles (NDP Winnipeg North Centre) said sarcastically: "I hope the phrase 'in due course' will not take as long as it usually does."

Mr. Speaker, I understand the confusion. In fact, I learned yesterday afternoon there was some confusion so I went to the office of the Canadian Press to find out what that bureau put out over its wire. I have in my hand the words the Canadian Press sent out, which were as follows:

Mr. Trudeau said it is and the government will report to the House "in due course." Stanley Knowles NDP—Winnipeg North Centre said he hopes "in due course" takes as long as it usually does.

Mr. Speaker, I am sorry my subtle sarcasm was not understood. When I suggest that "in due course" sometimes takes a long while I have in mind a certain commission which was appointed in 1965 and took two years to make its report, following which it took a year for the report to be translated and then there was a white paper which is still before a committee. It is that kind of pace which I would like to see if and when this matter is dealt with. Indeed, if the Prime Minister has any idea of acting on this matter in this Parliament he can count on me to oppose him, all the way.

ROUTINE PROCEEDINGS

FINANCE, TRADE AND ECONOMIC AFFAIRS

CONCURRENCE IN FIFTH REPORT OF STANDING COMMITTEE

Mr. Gaston Clermont (Gatineau) moved that the fifth report of the Standing Committee on Finance, Trade and Economic Affairs, presented to the House on Friday, January 16, 1970, be concurred in.

Motion agreed to.

INDIAN AFFAIRS AND NORTHERN DEVELOPMENT

MOTION FOR CONCURRENCE IN FIRST REPORT OF STANDING COMMITTEE—RULING BY MR. SPEAKER

On the order: Motions—Mr. Yewchuk:

That the first report of the Standing Committee on Indian Affairs and Northern Development presented on December 16, 1969, be concurred in.

Mr. Speaker: The House will recall that yesterday, when the motion listed in the name of the hon. member for Athabasca was called, the President of the Privy Council raised a point of order concerning the propriety of placing the notice of motion by the hon. member under Routine Proceedings. The basis of the submission made by the President of the Privy Council was that in the absence of any authority from the Standing Committee on Indian Affairs and Northern Development the hon. member for Athabasca could propose his motion, since it purported to concur in a substantive proposal, only as a private member's notice of motion. Later in his comments the minister suggested that the House should not adopt a practice whereby a private member might raise a substantive question by means of a motion to concur in a report of a standing committee rather than by the other methods provided for such under our Standing Orders.

There may be considerable merit in that position, but on this occasion it is the sole and only duty of the Chair to look at the notice of motion to ensure that it has been prepared in accordance with the practices and usage of this House.

The most important question is whether it is competent for any private member or any unauthorized member of a committee to propose a motion to concur in a report of a standing committee. It is apparent that there is a dearth of precedents to which the Chair may revert for guidance in regard to the question now being considered. At the same time the Chair must not disregard any precedents that in fact exist.

The precedent of May 23, 1932, and that of May 19, 1947, both of which were cited by the President of the Privy Council yesterday, seem to establish the point that a member who is not a member of a committee may move concurrence in a report.

A review of the Journals for 1964-65 will indicate that no fewer than four different members moved concurrence in various reports of the Special Committee on Procedure.

An extensive search of the records of the House has failed to disclose that any objection to a motion made under circumstances similar to those now under review has ever been made. Taking into account these precedents, few though they may be, I am of the opinion that the motion may be proposed by any private member.

The next point to be reviewed is whether the notice of motion has been properly placed on the Orders of the Day. Notwithstanding the persuasiveness of the submission made by the President of the Privy Council to the effect that private members or unauthorized members of a committee should not be able to raise substantive questions in the manner proposed by the hon. member for Athabasca, the provisions of the report of the Special Committee on Procedure, as adopted on July 12, 1955, and recorded at page 944 of the Journals for that date, make it obligatory to place a motion to concur in a report under heading "Motions." That provision reads as follows:

> That motions for concurrence in reports of any standing or special committee, for the suspension of any Standing Order, or such other motions made upon routine proceedings, as may be required for the observances of the proprieties of the House, the maintenance of its authority, the appointment or conduct of its officers, the management of its business, the arrangements of its proceedings, the correctness of its records, the fixing of its sitting days or the times of its meeting or adjournment shall be listed, when notice is required, called and disposed of under "Motions."

The relative words in this citation of course are, "motions for concurrence in reports of any standing or special committee." The motion to concur in the report is, I suggest, in its proper position on the Order Paper.

By way of conclusion I should like to make the following observation and suggestion, if I may. Under our new Standing Orders the standing and special committees have assumed a more important role in the legislative process. For obvious reasons our authorities do not take account of this development. In view of the decision I have taken to allow the motion of the hon. member for Athabasca to stand under motions and in light of the necessary proliferation of committee reports, there is the risk that the business announced each Thursday by the President of the Privy Council could be seriously disrupted by committees who feel their reports should be debated rather than government business. This was the point made very forcibly and clearly yesterday by the President of the Privy Council and it is a difficulty which the Chair fully recognizes. My suggestion would be that the Standing Committee on Procedure and Organization might like to examine this situation to suggest ways in which the business of the House can be arranged in order to reconcile the demand of committees to have their reports brought forward for debate with the requirements of government business.

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, there have been some consultations between the parties on this point and agreement reached to stand the hon. member's motion for today's sitting and also for tomorrow. Perhaps I could ask that the matter be allowed to stand.

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Baldwin: At the request of the government.

Mr. Trudeau: At the request of the government.

NATIONAL PARKS

RENTAL INCREASES—REQUEST FOR UNANIMOUS CONSENT TO MOVE MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Hon. Marcel Lambert (Edmonton West): Under the provisions of Standing Order 43, Mr. Speaker, I ask for unanimous consent of the House to move a motion which I will present in a few moments. Recently there have appeared in the press and in correspondence expressions of grave agitation and concern by both commercial and residential leaseholders in the national parks of Canada as a result of demands being made on behalf of the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development for rent increases under long existing leases of up to over 4000 per cent. This has created a great deal of controversy and unrest. As a matter of fact, it goes to the root of the long-festering struggle between the residents of Jasper, Banff and Waterton National Parks in the province of Alberta and the officials of the parks branch. In addition, Mr. Speaker, yesterday—

Some hon. Members: Order, order!

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): I am allowed to explain the purpose of my motion.

An hon. Member: Briefly.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member says he is allowed to explain the purpose of the motion. I understand the Standing Order allows him to explain the urgency of the motion.

• (2:20 p.m.)

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): Mr. Speaker, yesterday in Banff townsite a plebiscite was held by the residents and on Saturday I am told a similar event took place in Jasper townsite. The question was whether the people wished to remain under the jurisdiction of the Department of Indian Affairs and Northern Development.

Because of the urgency of the matter I move, seconded by the hon. member for Lethbridge (Mr. Gundlock):

That the whole question of recent rental increases demanded of commercial and residential leaseholders in the national parks of Canada by the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development and the circumstances leading to the holding of a plebiscite by the residents of Banff National Park on January 19, 1970 be referred to the Standing Committee on Indian Affairs for investigation and report to this House.

I ask the unanimous consent of the House to move this motion.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Hon. members have heard the motion proposed by the hon. member for Edmonton West. Under the terms of Standing Order 43 the question cannot be put unless there is unanimous consent. Is there such consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. Speaker: There is no unanimity.

ORAL QUESTION PERIOD

THE CANADIAN ECONOMY

INFLATION—SUBMISSION OF CRITERIA TO CONFERENCE ON PRICE STABILITY

Hon. Robert L. Stanfield (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I direct a question to the Minister of Finance arising from the press release of the chairman of the Prices and Incomes Commission on the matter of the proposed conference on price stability. Does the government intend itself, or through the Prices and Incomes Commission, to submit specific pricing criteria, to use words used by the chairman of the Prices and Incomes Commission as another way of referring to guidelines or specific restraints?

Hon. E. J. Benson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, it is a great relief to know that my hon. friend, who indicated earlier in the session that he was against the Prices and Incomes Commission, now thinks it may be making progress. Although the Prices and Incomes Commission has indeed secured a great deal of co-operation from business, industry and the professions and has been supported by the government, I believe it will be the objective of this meeting to work out criteria and it will not be for the government to impose criteria upon industry and business in this country.

Mr. Stanfield: Mr. Speaker, I thank the minister for his lecture and for the small bit of information contained at the end of his remarks. May I ask a supplementary question. Will the government feel committed to arrange the work before the Prices and Incomes Commission or will the government reserve, until after the conference has taken place, its decision on whether any restraints actually approved of will be supported by the government?

Inquiries of the Ministry

Mr. Benson: Mr. Speaker, I think there is a general belief that it will be best for those who are going to be involved in voluntary restraints to work out the criteria. Of course, the government has all along supported the efforts of the Prices and Incomes Commission, which is a good deal more than the opposition has done.

Mr. Stanfield: A further supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. In light of the minister's suggestion that everything is to be left on a purely voluntary basis, what comment has the minister to make on the indication by the chairman of the commission that if violations take place the commission will resort to the government for sanctions? Will the minister indicate to the House what sort of sanctions the government might impose in the case of violations of the criteria that may be agreed on?

Mr. Benson: Mr. Speaker, we have from the beginning supported the laudable efforts of the Prices and Incomes Commission, and when they approach the government for support we will do everything reasonable to support them in their very laudable efforts.

Mr. G. W. Baldwin (Peace River): A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Will the minister not relieve the mind of the Leader of the Opposition and the minds of the people of Canada by indicating that he is taking steps to persuade the automobile insurance companies to hold back on their announced premium increases, which in some cases will be in the order of 13 per cent?

Mr. Benson: Mr. Speaker, having just returned to Ottawa today after visiting the wonderful new city of Thunder Bay, I have not had the matter brought to my attention. I have not had an opportunity to deal with this matter, but at the suggestion of my hon. friend I will look into it.

Mr. Stanfield: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. May I take it from the reply by the Minister of Finance that the government does not have in mind any specific sanctions in case of violations?

Mr. Benson: Mr. Speaker, this government keeps thinking, which is more than the opposition does.

Mr. John L. Skoberg (Moose Jaw): A supplementary question to the Minister of Finance. In view of the continuous rise in consumer food costs, is the Prices and Incomes Commission making any attempt to determine such price increases being made by the food processors and distributors concerned?

Mr. Benson: Mr. Speaker, the minister who usually answers for the Prices and Incomes Commission is not here. However, I will refer the hon. member's query to the commission.

[Later:]

Mr. Donald MacInnis (Cape Breton-East Richmond): A supplementary question to the Minister of Finance. Is the minister not aware of the Prime Minister's statement to the effect that only two-thirds of his cabinet are worth while?

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

SCIENCE COUNCIL

CONFLICT OF INTEREST OF CHAIRMAN

Mrs. Grace MacInnis (Vancouver-Kingsway): Mr. Speaker, my question is to the Prime Minister. In view of the fact that the Science Council of Canada must be free to function in the best interests of the public and in view of the fact that its present chairman, Dr. O. M. Solandt, is also vice-chairman of the Electric Reduction Company of Canada, a firm which has contributed substantially to water pollution in Canada, is the government giving consideration to ending this serious conflict of interest by requesting the resignation of Dr. Solandt?

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Cape Breton-East Richmond.

Mrs. MacInnis: The Prime Minister was rising to answer, I believe, Mr. Speaker.

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I was trying to get help.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mrs. MacInnis: May I ask a supplementary which may help? I would like to help and I direct this supplementary to the Prime Minister for his consideration. Since Dr. Solandt has publicly discounted the importance of phosphate water pollution, and since his firm is the sole manufacturer of phosphates in Canada, will the Prime Minister investigate this matter and indicate to the House what action the government intends to take?

[Later:]

Mr. Randolph Harding (Kootenay West): A supplementary question to the Prime Minister. Will the Prime Minister look into the recent conviction of ERCO under the Combines Investigation Act for maintaining a monopoly against the public interest, and Dr. Solandt's position as chairman of the Science Council and vice-president of ERCO?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

Mr. David Lewis (York South): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct my question to the President of the Treasury Board. In view of the fact the Prime Minister was seeking advice from him when the hon. member for Vancouver-Kingsway asked her question, I would like to go straight to the fount of knowledge of this government and ask the President of the Treasury Board—

Mr. Trudeau: Where is this presidential system going?

Mr. Lewis: —whether the government is considering asking Dr. Solandt to resign as chairman of the Science Council in view of the obviously evident conflict of interest because of his high office in the corporation to which reference has been made?

Hon. C. M. Drury (President of the Treasury Board): Mr. Speaker, I think in any instance where we as a country endeavour to secure the part-time services of a distinguished citizen of Canada, some incidence of conflict of interest is bound to arise. If the man heading the Science Council of Canada had no other interest than that, he would not be a distinguished Canadian. In the present circumstances I think one has to take into account one's view as to the ability of Dr. Solandt to rise above this type of conflict, and in him we have confidence.

Mr. Lewis: Would the President of the Treasury Board undertake at least to consider searching for another qualified person who would not be tarred by a conflict of interest which can do nothing but harm to the work of the Science Council of Canada?

Mr. Drury: The government is always on the lookout for good and better people. When the hon. member suggests that we might look for a replacement for Dr. Solandt on the Science Council on the basis of the representation he has just made, the answer is no.

Mrs. MacInnis: Can the minister not find somebody who is not connected with a firm which was fined $40,000 for offences against the Combines Investigation Act?

Mr. Speaker: Order.

[Later:]

Mr. S. J. Korchinski (Mackenzie): A supplementary, Mr. Speaker. I should like to ask the Prime Minister whether the principle advocated by the President of the Treasury Board is the principle which the government is following in accepting members into the cabinet who have a conflict of interest—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

[Later:]

Mr. Korchinski: Mr. Speaker, I should like to rephrase my question to the Prime Minister. Is the principle which is advocated by the President of the Treasury Board accepted by him when considering as candidates for cabinet office hon. members who have outside interests in corporations—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

AIR TRANSPORT

ACTION TO END POLLUTION BY JET PLANES

Mr. P. V. Noble (Grey-Simcoe): My question is intended for the Minister of Transport but in his absence perhaps the Prime Minister will take it. In view of the fact that the United States government has advised all its commercial airlines that they must end pollution of the air by jet engine smoke by 1972, does the Canadian government contemplate issuing a similar directive to our own airlines?

[Translation]

Mr. Gérard Loiselle (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, in the absence of the Minister of Transport, I am taking the question as notice and shall submit it to him as soon as he returns.

[English]

Mr. G. H. Aiken (Parry Sound-Muskoka): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question with regard to pollution by jet engines and I wish to direct it to the Minister of National Defence. Has the minister ordered a similar conversion to clean burning fuel systems of jet aircraft within the military service?

Hon. Léo Cadieux (Minister of National Defence): Not to my knowledge, Mr. Speaker.

NATIONAL PARKS

ALLEGED REMARKS BY MINISTER TO RESIDENTS

Mr. W. B. Nesbitt (Oxford): I have a question for the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development. Did the minister tell the residents of Banff, Jasper and certain other national parks that if they did not like the situation in the parks at the present time they could leave? If not, what did the minister say?

Mr. Speaker: Order. I have some doubt as to the form of the question. I would not think it was in order for an hon. member to ask whether or not a minister had made a certain statement outside the House. Perhaps the question might be rephrased.

Mr. Nesbitt: Thank you. As Your Honour might expect, there has been considerable controversy in the press and the other media in connection with this matter. In order to clear the air, so to speak, I thought the minister might like an opportunity to make a statement. Possibly I could put it this way: would the minister make a brief statement to the House, perhaps by asking to revert to motions, on the subject of leases in the national parks?

Hon. Jean Chrétien (Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): I can make a very short answer to that. With the permission of the House I will table a letter written in January, 1962, when the then Minister of Northern Affairs, the hon. member for Brandon-Souris, announced the policy which was to come into effect today—the policy of the opposition.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Speaker: Would the hon. member for Oxford kindly resume his seat? I gather that the minister has asked leave to table a document. Is that agreed?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Nesbitt: Now that we have heard those interesting remarks by the minister, perhaps the hon. gentleman will answer the question he was asked.

Mr. Chrétien: I have just said—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member for Rocky Mountain.

Mr. Allen B. Sulatycky (Rocky Mountain): Bearing in mind the results of the plebiscite held in Banff yesterday, which showed clearly that 80 per cent of the people of that community are dissatisfied with the present method of administering the townsite, will the minister deal with the citizens of Banff and Jasper in a reasonable and sensible manner from now on rather than make the kind of ill-informed statements attributed to him in the press last week?

Some hon. Members: Hear hear.

Mr. Speaker: Order.

[Translation]

[Later:]

Mr. Chrétien: While I have the floor, Mr. Speaker, I would like to comment on the question of the member for Rocky Mountain because I did not have the opportunity to answer. Concerning national parks, the policy of the government is always to put the interests of the Canadian people before those of businessmen.

[English]

[Later:]

Mr. G. W. Baldwin (Peace River): Mr. Speaker I have a supplementary question for the minister arising from a question asked previously by the hon. member for Rocky Mountain. Is it the view of the minister and the government that citizens of the national parks who do not like the unfair tactics of the government should secede and join the provinces?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

INDUSTRY

COPPER—AMOUNT RETAINED FOR DOMESTIC CONSUMPTION

Mr. T. C. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): May I direct a question to the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce. I understand his department recently issued a new directive to the copper producers stipulating the amount of copper which must be retained in Canada for domestic consumption. Can the minister give us some idea of the percentage which must be retained and the extent to which the new directive differs from the directive issued only a few weeks earlier?

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): The amount is 23,500 tons a month in the next two months, which is about 55% of the monthly tonnage of refined copper produced in Canada. This is based on average supplies of the first six months of last year, a period when supply was the highest in Canadian history. As I said the other day "legitimate needs" are difficult to assess. This tonnage is less than the fabricators could use at the price of 57 cents but it might be equal to what they would have asked for had it been 66 cents.

Mr. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): Do I take it the minister is saying that the amount set aside for domestic consumption is less than the Canadian fabricators could use? If this is the case, may I ask what value is there in holding the price down to 57 cents if the users cannot buy any copper?

Mr. Speaker: Order.

EXPO '67

INQUIRY AS TO DISPOSITION OF CITÉ DU HAVRE

Mr. Warren Allmand (Notre-Dame-de-Grace): My question is directed to the Minister without Portfolio in charge of housing. Is the minister now ready to make an announcement with respect to the development or disposal of the Cité du Havre property in Montreal?

Some hon. Members: Order Paper.

Mr. Speaker: I have some doubt whether particular urgency attaches to that question. If there is such urgency it is not apparent to me at the present time. The hon. member might wish to give notice of the question for consideration at the time of adjournment.

AGRICULTURE

ACTION TO LOWER TRACTOR AND COMBINE PRICES

Mr. George Muir (Lisgar): I have a question for the Minister of National Revenue. In view of the fact that the Barber Commission report on farm machinery prices, just released, contains the shocking information that Canadian farmers are being gouged by the machine companies to the extent of at least $2,000 per item through the overpricing of tractors sold in Canada, what action is the government contemplating to meet this serious situation?

Hon. Jean-Pierre Coté (Minister of National Revenue): Mr. Speaker, there is a recommendation in the report that asks for the imposition of a reverse dumping duty on these importations. This has never been done and right now there are no such duties being applied.

Mr. W. B. Nesbitt (Oxford): Mr. Speaker, will the Minister of Finance give consideration to the provision of a tax incentive to all-Canadian companies such as Versatile in order to lower the price of farm machinery?

Hon. E. J. Benson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, this is a broad policy matter the hon. member is asking about. I think all policies such as this would normally be announced during a budgetary statement.

Mr. Nesbitt: I was only asking whether the minister would consider the matter.

Mr. A. B. Douglas (Assiniboia): I have a supplementary question for the Minister of National Revenue, and I might say I was not able to hear the answer he gave to an earlier question. In view of the recommendation contained in the interim report on farm tractor prices to the effect that the government should in certain circumstances impose a reverse dumping duty on tractor imports, will the minister inform the House whether or not reverse dumping duties are now or ever have been applied to Canadian imports—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I have the impression that the hon. member is repeating the question which was asked previously.

Mr. Douglas (Assiniboia): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I did not intend to repeat the question. Perhaps the answer was an appropriate one but I could not hear it.

Mr. Côté (Longueuil): Mr. Speaker, I said that the so-called reverse dumping duties are not now applied nor have they ever been applied to imports into Canada.

POLLUTION

PHOSPHATES—REPRESENTATION AT IJC HEARINGS

Mr. G. H. Aiken (Parry Sound-Muskoka): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources whether officers of his department are engaged at the hearings of the International Joint Commission being held this week in certain places in the United States and in Ontario concerning the reduction of phosphates?

Hon. J. J. Greene (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, officers of my department take cognizance of all hearings of the IJC. I am unaware whether they are physically present at the hearings this week, but I will take notice of the question and give my hon. friend an answer at the next sitting.

Mr. Aiken: Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the minister whether the federal position on the IJC proposal that phosphates should be banned by 1972 is being propounded?

Mr. Greene: Mr. Speaker, when the IJC report in this regard came out we took immediate action. This question has been given study by an interdepartmental committee. Some of my officers returned from Sweden only yesterday I believe following a specific study of the situation, and I hope to have a comprehensive report within a few days.

NORTHERN AFFAIRS

NORTHWEST TERRITORIES—REQUEST FOR STATEMENT ON GOVERNMENT

Mr. Frank Howard (Skeena): Mr. Speaker, may I preface my question to the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development by saying how much I enjoyed the radio broadcast he made to the citizens of the Northwest Territories on the occasion of their centenary during which he used such phrases as—

Some hon. Members: Order!

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Does the hon. member intend to ask a question?

Mr. Howard (Skeena): Oh, indeed, Mr. Speaker, indeed. Because of the fine phrases the minister used during that radio broadcast I should like to ask—

Some hon. Members: Question!

Mr. Howard (Skeena): Don't be impatient. I should like to ask the minister when he will be making a statement, either in the Northwest Territories or to the House, about the question of self-government for the Northwest Territories?

[Translation]

Hon. Jean Chrétien (Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): Mr. Speaker, I have already made a statement in the House about this matter.

[English]

Mr. Howard (Skeena): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. The Minister has just engaged in misleading the House when he said he made a statement to the House about self-government for the Northwest Territories. He did no such thing. If he made any statement it was for continued colonial status.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

FINANCE

REQUEST FOR REDEEMING OF PERPETUAL BONDS

Mr. A. D. Hales (Wellington): Mr. Speaker, in view of the extremely low interest rate of 3 per cent on Dominion of Canada perpetual bonds I should like to ask the Minister of Finance whether he will consider calling in these bonds which are held mainly by elderly people and those on fixed incomes, and also in view of the fact that yesterday they were quoted at $36?

Hon. E. J. Benson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, when people buy perpetual bonds they are buying an interest rate. In effect the bonds go on forever. The perpetual bonds issued have changed hands a great many times, and in most circumstances people generally buy at a price that will produce the kind of interest rate they want. This is the nature of perpetual bonds.

Mr. Hales: Mr. Speaker, I do not think the interest rate of 3 per cent would substantiate the minister's remarks. However, will he give those people who are in possession of these bonds the opportunity to register them and give proof of date of purchase, and will the government then withdraw them up to say the year 1955?

Mr. Benson: Mr. Speaker, one would have to look at this very carefully. For example, if the government redeemed perpetual bonds at par someone who bought them at $47, for example, would make $53 per $100 invested.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I hesitate to interfere but it seems to me this is becoming a debate between the minister and the hon. member.

POLLUTION

ACTION RESPECTING CONTAMINATION OF SASKATCHEWAN RIVER BY MERCURY

Mr. Robert Simpson (Churchill): Mr. Speaker, will the Minister of Fisheries and Forestry say what action, if any, has been taken to eliminate or control the mercury pollution of the Saskatchewan River, which has been acknowledged by the government?

Hon. Jack Davis (Minister of Fisheries and Forestry): Mr. Speaker, the source which I identified the other day in the House of Commons is the plant of the co-operative producing soda and chlorine near Saskatoon. The necessary steps have been taken to make sure the effluent stream containing mercury is kept within the plant itself. Mercury is meanwhile being removed by treating the effluent.

Mr. Simpson: Mr. Speaker, does this mean that the pollution of the Saskatchewan River by this mercury effluent has been discontinued?

Mr. Davis: The pollution from that plant has certainly ceased, and we think it is the principal, if not the only, source of mercury pollution. However, it will take a spring freshet to flush out the river completely.

Mr. S. J. Korchinski (Mackenzie): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the Minister of Fisheries whether any of the compensation he announced earlier will be paid to those people who caught fish that were contaminated or will the federal government contributions be made to a general pool for distribution?

Mr. Davis: Mr. Speaker, there is no question of compensation to fishermen in this case because all the fish they have been able to catch has been bought from them at the going market price. The fishermen have not suffered in any way. There is still the question of recovering the amounts paid to the fishermen by the federal government because we have had to destroy all the fish in question.

Mr. Simpson: Mr. Speaker, could the minister indicate at this time how long the purchase of contaminated fish by the Freshwater Fish Marketing Board will continue?

Mr. Davis: I cannot be certain. However, it will continue as long as the level of contamination observed in the fish comes anywhere near the United Nations standards with regard to mercury.

Mr. Lloyd R. Crouse (South Shore): Mr. Speaker, in view of the poisonous effect of mercury has the minister taken any steps to make certain that no fish caught in this area are bootlegged to another lake which may be clear of mercury so that they can then be sold?

Mr. Davis: Mr. Speaker, this is the main reason we have continued to pay what would have been the market price and, indeed, have followed the upward trend in prices normal at this season of the year. There has been no price incentive whatsoever for fishermen to sell to anyone else and under the freshwater fish legislation there is no legal buyer other than the Freshwater Fish Corporation.

Mr. T. C. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): I have a supplementary, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Speaker: I will recognize the hon. member for Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands on a further supplementary but I must remind hon. members that we are running out of time.

DUMPING OF MINE TAILINGS IN QUATSINO SOUND

Mr. T. C. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): Mr. Speaker, may I ask the minister a question about the application of the Utah Mining Company to dump into Quatsino Sound some 9.3 million gallons a day of tailings which have a quantity of cyanide residue. What action is the minister's department taking to prevent this dumping which could be very detrimental to the fishing industry of Vancouver Island?

Hon. Jack Davis (Minister of Fisheries and Forestry): We have been keeping this situation on the west coast under very close review. My department does not issue permits to pollute or dump any effluent in the fisheries waters of Canada. Its powers are well known in respect of imposing fines. So individual mining companies like Utah Mining Company have kept in close touch with the department and have cleared their processes and practices with the department. We believe they will be following the right procedures.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

Mr. James A. McGrath (St. John's East): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct this question to the Government House Leader. Has there been any departure in the order of business set out for the House by the House Leader last Thursday? I am particularly interested in the second reading of Bill C-175 respecting the Canadian Saltfish Corporation since there are a number of people in the five provinces concerned who are quite anxious to be here for that debate.

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (President of the Privy Council): It is difficult to predict the order of business without some firm agreement as to the time each particular measure will take. I expect there might be some agreement to conclude the debate on the Canada water bill in the early afternoon tomorrow.

It is hoped to follow that with the four financial bills. At the present time it would look as though there would be no prospect of reaching the Fisheries items I have mentioned before Thursday of next week, it being assumed that on Monday and Tuesday next week there probably will be a debate on a motion in respect of a constitutional committee.

THE CANADIAN ECONOMY

SCOPE AND EFFECT OF AUSTERITY PROGRAM

Hon. Robert L. Stanfield (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, in view of the criticism levelled at the government by a former prime minister, Mr. Pearson, suggesting that the austerity program now being followed may do irreparable damage particularly to such institutions as the National Film Board, I should like to ask the Prime Minister whether he is prepared to review the across-the-board application of this policy and reconsider its effect on such institutions as are causing special concern to Mr. Pearson?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Well, Mr. Speaker, first of all it is not an across-the-board expenditure cut. The guidelines, as the hon. member knows, made certain exceptions and also made certain provisions for increases in other departments. The suggestion of the Leader of the Opposition, if applied to the Film Board, would certainly apply to almost every department and there would be no reduction in expenditures of the federal government. There would also be no surplus and we would be blamed for not combating inflation. The opposition should take a clear position on whether they want the government to spend more, or less. If they want us to spend more they should state that quite clearly and we will thank them for the mandate.

INFLATION—INCREASE IN RATES BY B.C. HYDRO

Mr. Barry Mather (Surrey): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Finance having in mind his efforts to restrain inflation in Canada by getting agreements from various industries to refrain from rate increases at this time. Would he consider taking similar action in British Columbia where B.C. Hydro has announced a 15 to 20 per cent rate increase, which is an inflationary measure?

Hon. E. J. Benson (Minister of Finance): Well, Mr. Speaker, as I said earlier I do not think I can approach everybody in Canada who increases the price on anything. What the government has indicated is its support for the efforts being made by the Prices and Incomes Commission, which in addition to consulting with industry, business and labour has been consulting with the federal and provincial governments with a view to having general restraints on a voluntary basis in the country.

POWER

MINAS BASIN—PUBLICATION OF STUDY

Mr. J. M. Forrestall (Dartmouth-Halifax East): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources. In light of the recent press statement concerning Minas Basin tidal power, may I ask the minister when we will receive this most important study and whether the government has decided yet whether or not it will be made public once received? It has been over a year now since the study was completed.

Hon. J. J. Greene (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, I might answer the latter half of the question first. No decision has yet been made concerning publication. I am instructed the report will be made available soon. I am not sure whether that is the "soon" of yesterday or of other days, but in any event that is the information I have.

Mr. Forrestall: Could the minister say whether it is being held up because of the translation or because of governmental or departmental studies?

Mr. Greene: It is held up within the administrative structure of government but whether because of translation or otherwise I have not been informed. I will inform myself and if that is the particular reason I will instruct the hon. member accordingly.

IMMIGRATION

DISCUSSION BETWEEN OTTAWA AND QUEBEC RESPECTING FRENCH-SPEAKING IMMIGRANTS DESIRING TO MOVE TO ALBERTA

Mr. Roch La Salle (Joliette): Mr. Speaker, I would like to direct a question to the Minister of Manpower and Immigration.

Considering the great number of French-speaking immigrants to Quebec who apparently wish to settle in another province, could the minister tell us whether he discussed that matter with the Quebec Minister of Immmigration? If not, does he intend to?

[English]

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Minister of Manpower and Immigration): No, Mr. Speaker, I have not had any discussion. In the circumstances I do not see the need of such a discussion.

COMMUNICATIONS

NORTHERN CANADA—INQUIRY AS TO INVESTIGATION

Mr. Don Mazankowski (Vegreville): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct my question to the Minister of Communications. In light of the current difficulties encountered in respect of telephone communication with the northern parts of Canada, could the minister say whether there will be a detailed investigation into communications in the north and would he undertake specifically to study the frequent and prolonged breakdowns in telephone communication between Hay River and Uranium City?

Hon. Eric W. Kierans (Postmaster General and Minister of Communications): Mr. Speaker, we have already formed an internal committee in the Department of Communications to investigate the reason for delays not only in the area of telephone communication but also in respect of the provision of telegraph services.

TAXATION

WHITE PAPER ON REFORM—NUMBER OF PROTESTS

Mr. P. V. Noble (Grey-Simcoe): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Finance. Could the minister indicate to the House approximately how many protests he has received in respect of the white paper on taxation? Are they in the hundreds or in the thousands?

Mr. Speaker: Order. The hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre.

HEALTH AND WELFARE

REQUEST FOR STATEMENT ON USE OF PHENACETIN AND EXPERIMENTS WITH MINI PILLS

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, in the absence of the Minister of National Health and Welfare I wonder if I might address a question to his Parliamentary Secretary. If he does not have the answer he might give notice of the question to his minister. In view of reports from British Columbia that doctors there are banning the use of phenacetin, a drug used in headache pills, can the government say whether this action would be supported by the department, and would the minister also make a statement in respect of reports that Syntex Laboratories are testing or experimenting with certain mini pills?

Mr. Speaker: I have some doubt whether questions such as the one being asked now by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre should not normally be placed on the Order Paper. It is always difficult for a non-medical man to determine whether or not there is any urgency to such a question, but I would think that generally speaking this is the type of question that would normally be placed on the Order Paper.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, on a point of order, I believe there is some urgency, and that is why I thought it would be appropriate to ask the question today so that it could stand as notice for the minister tomorrow.

IMMIGRATION

ENTRY OF DANIEL COHN-BENDIT

Mr. Steven E. Paproski (Edmonton Centre): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the Minister of Manpower and Immigration. Yesterday I asked him about the entry of a troublemaker, a known activist, Danny Cohn-Bendit, alias Danny the Red. The minister, knowing very well that this person has been barred from France and, I believe, the United States—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member should ask a question. He cannot make a statement.

Mr. Paproski: My question is: in view of yesterday's disturbance by Danny the Red and Stanley the Gray in a court of law in Montreal, would the minister see fit to deport this individual immediately and send Stanley along with him?

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Gander-Twillingate.

Inquiries of the Ministry

LABOUR CONDITIONS

REQUEST FOR STATEMENT ON PROGRAMS TO COPE WITH UNEMPLOYMENT

Mr. John Lundrigan (Gander-Twillingate): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Finance. Would he take advantage of the first opportunity on motions to make a statement to the House outlining the nature of the programs which the federal government has to offset forced unemployment in the Atlantic region, in accordance with the statement which he made on national television on Sunday evening?

IMMIGRATION

ENTRY OF DANIEL COHN-BENDIT

Mr. Steven A. Paproski (Edmonton Centre): Mr. Speaker, on a point of order, I hope that I can receive an answer from the minister. I consider this to be a very important matter. If we can afford to have such hoodlums come to Canada and not look after the Jewish population in Poland, then he should be able to reply to this question.

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Minister of Manpower and Immigration): On the same point of order, Mr. Speaker, I would like to point out that I am not administering the immigration laws of either France or the United States, and under Canadian immigration law this person is not prohibited. I do not intend to take the hon. member's description of "troublemaker" as a basis of preventing admission to Canada. We intend to apply the normal policy, which I think has stood up and which has been supported in this House and elsewhere, with respect to these cases. With respect to the rather snide comment made by the hon. member in reference to our treatment of Jews from Poland, somewhat similar to the comments he made about immigration from Asia—

Mr. Paproski: On a question, of privilege—

Mr. MacEachen: —I would want to tell him—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

Mr. MacEachen: Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I understand the minister was speaking to a point of order. I gather that the hon. member is now rising on a question of privilege.

Mr. Paproski: Mr. Speaker, I do not think I should be impugned at any time by any member of this House intimating that I have any racial discrimination, as the minister has just been doing—

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): Your words speak for themselves.

Mr. Paproski: —or by innuendo, and I don't want him to carry on in this way.

Mr. MacEachen: Mr. Speaker, I will be happy to co-operate with the hon. member and follow his standards of behavior. His words on that occasion are in Hansard.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Perhaps the minister might like to reply to the question, and I understand the Minister of Finance also has to reply to the question asked by the hon. member for Gander-Twillingate.

Mr. MacEachen: On a question of privilege, Mr. Speaker, a very important question was raised by the hon. member on a point of order, with the implication that somehow this government was eager to admit such persons as Cohn-Bendit and prevent the admission of Polish refugees. I stated yesterday, in reply to a member of the opposition, that we were treating refugees from Poland in a very sympathetic way, and our record in that situation is above reproach. I offered to discuss this matter in greater detail with any member of the opposition because the success of our program to help these Polish refugees depends to some extent on the manner in which—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. As I already pointed out, the question period expired a few minutes ago. But at the same time the question by the hon. member for Gander-Twillingate got lost among the points of order and questions of privilege, and perhaps the minister might like to reply to it at this time.

LABOUR CONDITIONS

REQUEST FOR STATEMENT ON PROGRAMS TO COPE WITH UNEMPLOYMENT

Hon. E. J. Benson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I will consider the representations made by the hon. member.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

BUSINESS OF SUPPLY

ALLOTTED DAY, S.O. 58—NON-CONFIDENCE MOTION—USE AND SUPPLY OF GRAIN STORAGE FACILITIES

Mr. S. J. Korchinski (Mackenzie) moved:

That this House condemns the government's failure to make full use of existing facilities that are available for grain storage, its failure to provide adequate additional facilities, its failure to adopt and implement a system of payments for the resulting storage of grain on farm lands, by reason of which failures the farm grain economy and dependent industries are suffering serious and continuing harm.

He said: Mr. Speaker, a press release on December 5 last, issued by the Minister without Portfolio (Mr. Lang), stated in part:

On October 15th of this year the Prime Minister announced that the complexities of international grain marketing problems combined with the importance of the grain trade to the Canadian economy, had led to the decision to make grain marketing a focus of effort by a minister without general departmental responsibilities.

This seemed to send off the Minister without Portfolio (Mr. Lang). It was like a quotation from Shakespeare. We knew there was thunder and lightning. We knew there were announcements, with heralds, and there was a blast—

Mr. Muir (Cape Breton-The Sydneys): Of hot air.

Mr. Korchinski: I suppose of hot air, and the minister made his entry. Since then, we have had occasion to observe his operations.

I think he wanted to impress the world with the fact that he had just entered the ministry, but if he has impressed the world he certainly has not done anything for the western farmer. He has not done anything to put a few dollars in his pocket. Oh yes, Mr. Speaker, after that he made a few announcements.

He cushioned the blow for the Wheat Board. He cushioned the blow for the railways. He cushioned the blow for himself. He set up a grains group, and this group was to take the brunt of the attack. After a series of mishaps last year the Wheat Board reckoned that it had better clear itself, and the railways wanted the minister to make their lives a lot easier in connection with arranging their box car allocations.

The importance of my motion may well be emphasized by the questions that were asked in this House last week. Anyone who cares to look at Hansard will notice that not only did the Official Opposition ask questions pertaining to this particular problem but so did the NDP. Even supporters of the government asked questions pertaining to this problem. I say, good for them. But where does it end? Does it stop with a question or can we expect members of the government to emphasize their concern by voting in favour of this motion? I hope that the NDP would show their concern by voting for it. I also hope that members of other opposition parties would show their concern in other parts of this country where there are difficulties. Many members must have had questions asked of them during the Christmas recess and I hope they take the opportunity to express their concern by way of a vote. When the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) was in western Canada last year he was peppered with a little bit of wheat but that is a small inconvenience for a public man to suffer when you consider the difficulties encountered by most of the people in western Canada. To a large extent, the difficulties stem from the action of this and the previous government.

When people tell me that they can no longer borrow money at 5 per cent interest, I remind them that it was the Liberal government that insisted it was going to make borrowing easier. I am a farmer myself and my operation requires a lot of financing but I cannot borrow money at 5 per cent any longer. Farmers are renewing their notes.

There was a series of articles in the Toronto Star setting out some of the farmers' difficulties. When the Minister without Portfolio was appointed his seat mate said, "You know, the east does not understand the west." The minister's big role was to convince the east that they had to understand the west. He did make an announcement to the effect that he would be the champion of the western farmer.

I have been through a few campaigns in my day and one of the criticisms levelled during them was that I did not know enough members on the government side. After all, Saskatchewan used to send 17 members into the House of Commons but with a Liberal government we did not get an opportunity to express our point of view to the cabinet. Now, we have that opportunity and what a wonderful thing it is except that mum's the word.

Instead of sending boxcars to pick up the wheat, the minister sends inspectors with the RCMP. At the Lakehead there is space available for 70 million bushels and this represents almost a one bushel quota per farmer. When you consider that the grain from the western half of the province of Saskatchewan will be shipped to the west coast, it represents more than a one bushel quota. Yes, there would be approximately 85 billion bushels taken in on the one bushel quota. The grain from the eastern half of the province would be taken to the Lakehead and Churchill.

During the election campaign the minister declared, "I am the man who will speak for you in the Liberal cabinet, I will do everything possible." Why is he not speaking? What is he doing?

An hon. Member: Nothing.

Mr. Korchinski: Nothing. I would not mind if he did anything, but he annoys people in the process because he has made it very nice and comfortable for the railways and he has found a way out for the Wheat Board. Now, I have supported Wheat Board action over the years though I often wonder what wisdom there is in it. I think I have a right to question it. I have also acted as chairman of the local wheat pool and know their concerns. I also know that it is this government that raised the interest rate from 5 per cent to the 9½ per cent I pay now. The gentleman referred to in the Toronto Star report only paid 9 per cent, but he was lucky.

It is not only the interest rate that bothers me. I know there are some who would question the authority of Joe Caplan and say he had no right to act as he did in connection with rapeseed. However, he has provided me with some figures on the volume of wheat sales. The figures do not mean anything until translated into percentages in terms of world sales. With your permission, Mr. Speaker, I should like to put this table on record. It shows the figures from 1953 to 1968-1969 for the volume of sales and the percentage in terms of world trade. I think this table is important because of what is behind our complaint. So with your permission, Mr. Speaker, and with the permission of the House may I include as an appendix to my remarks in Hansard Table 3 of a report entitled "A Farmer's Reflections on Grain Marketing" by Joseph Caplan.

Our complaint is simply this. We have the necessary volume of space available at the terminals. There is space there for 70 million bushels of grain. We do not want to cram all that space immediately with every available bushel of grain because we must have some working room. It seems that the minister in charge of the Wheat Board who represents a western constituency, is more concerned about the efficient operation of terminal elevators than about the welfare of our farmers. He is afraid that a man here or there will be laid off. These men who are laid off will receive unemployment insurance in any event. High interest rates are driving many people out of business and if the minister thinks that his policies work for the ultimate benefit of the farmer he had better revise his thinking.

The government set up this nice Grains Council. We are supposed to be fighting inflation and yet when organized labour asked for a 30 per cent wage increase, its demands were met. According to a report tabled the other day, the banks have enjoyed tremendous increases in earnings. We told the Minister of Finance in 1967, I believe, that with increased bank rates farmers were going to suffer. And what do we find? We find that banks have enjoyed increased earnings of between $154 million and $250 million odd. With your permission, and with the consent of the House, I am also prepared to table supporting figures included on pages 2233 and 2234 of Hansard as an appendix to my remarks.

I have some figures before me which indicate the elevator price for wheat, oats and barley. I want all members in the House to remember that not everybody produces No. 1 wheat and that last year, because of damp grain, few farmers were paid on the basis of No. 1 wheat for their grain. There were all kinds of wheat grades last year. The last time I obtained the No. 1 wheat price for my crop was in 1961 when there was a drastic shortage of grain.

May I also include as an appendix to my remarks table 1 of the document entitled, "1969 Elevator Prices for Prairie Grains" indicating that as between the 1966-67 crop year and the 1969-70 crop year, there has been a drop in initial prices, even when one takes into account the 20 cents per hundredweight freight charge, ranging between 25 per cent and 30 per cent. What other segment of our economy can claim to have suffered as much in the name of fighting inflation? I do not think anybody can absorb losses ranging between 25 per cent and 30 per cent and still stay afloat. These remarks apply not only to wheat but to barley, oats and other grains. I hope Your Honour and the House will permit the pertinent document to be appended to my remarks in Hansard since, if one is to make a careful analysis and study of the situation, it is essential for one to see the figures.

Farmers have had reduced incomes. What must they do, therefore? They must look for increased sales. But what is the picture? Last year the situation was difficult, and no doubt the minister will tell us that special circumstances prevailed last year. There was damp grain and we had to have special quotas. But in the last 20 years I do not remember a situation in which farmers had not delivered any grain beyond the initial quotas by the middle of January. It is over six months since we made our last delivery, and anyone who can live on the income derived from 400 bushels at $1.20 a bushel is a miracle worker. And what is our minister doing? He is staggering sales in order to make things nice and comfortable for a few men at the Lakehead and because he is worried that a few men, who will receive unemployment insurance anyway, may be laid off. He could not care less about the farmer who will have to make his payments at the end of December and who must now pay 9½ per cent interest on loans he formerly obtained at a 5 per cent rate.

He could not care less about the men who are going out of business but he does want an efficient system of grain handling. It all looks very good on paper. Nowadays it is hard to find anyone who goes into town especially on Saturday night and stays longer than is absolutely necessary. At one time we were worried about our villages; but now we should be worried about our towns because they are suffering also. You can no longer depend on a businessman being there when you need him and you can no longer expect the machinery dealer to be in business. Our costs of production are high enough but now we shall have to travel 50 or 60 miles in order to get a machine repaired at prices which the Barber Commission called outrageous.

Seven years ago I with members of the Liberal party and of the NDP sat on a committee of this House which looked into this matter. The Committee came to the conclusion now reached by the Barber Commission. It has taken seven years for this miserable government to come to that conclusion. And what is it doing? The Government is setting up another committee to see what is to be done. What must we do to convince this government that we now have to pay 9½ per cent interest on loans for machinery that is $2,500 overpriced? No one in Britain, France or anywhere else pays more for farm machinery than we in Canada but this government still sets up another commission. Are we supposed to sit here while the children go unattended and communities fall apart? In the meantime the minister sets up commission after commission. I have pleaded with the government before. It is not only members in my party who have been pleading with the government but I also hear expressions of concern from the government side. This is what disturbs me.

When the Prime Minister visited western Canada all he could utter was, why should I sell your wheat? I say to the Prime Minister that we want to live in Canada.

There was a four page report in the Toronto Star on the subject of separatism in western Canada. It is not separatism that we want. We are as good Canadians as will be found anywhere in Canada. We have taken our lumps in the past but do not compare us to beggars.

Much of the beneficial results of the legislation on our books is defeated by other governmental actions. We have regional development areas yet the banks in my area are charging the same rates as are being charged in Toronto. The Prime Minister stated that Toronto and the province of Ontario are contributing to inflation. I ask the Minister without Portfolio whether he thinks Saskatchewan, Alberta and Manitoba are contributing to inflation. I dare him to make that statement. He knows that is not the case.

I intend to leave one thought with the government today because over the many years that I have been here I have found that the Liberal government can only absorb one idea at a time. I am not sure they will act but I think they can comprehend one idea. What I intend to say may not be received too well by some of the elevator companies. However my concern is for the farmer and his family who have for many years struggled, worked and manipulated in order to make a go of it. The minister has expressed himself to be somewhat in favour of this idea. The fact that the government intends to spend $71 million this year does not make any sense to me. It may be the basis for a very good speech indicating what the government is doing for the farmer but it does not make sense for the elevator companies to have this money in order to keep operating. It is not the elevator companies that are in difficulty but the farmers.

I am going to table a report which was provided by the Dominion Bureau of Statistics. This is also another report by Joe Caplan. I want to incorporate these reports as part of my remarks.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Perhaps this might be a good point to interrupt the hon. member and refer him to his requests submitted to the House in the course of his speech that the documents to which he referred either be tabled or incorporated in his speech. When the hon. member first alluded to these documents he was content to ask that they be tabled. I reserved until the end of the hon. member's speech the occasion to ask the House whether there was consent to do that, but before asking the House whether there is any objection to the hon. member tabling these documents I should refer to his suggestion that these be incorporated as part of his speech. I suggest to the hon. member that it is contrary to the long established practice of the House that such documents be incorporated in a member's speech. If the hon. member wants to have part of such documents reported in Hansard as part of his speech, he has to quote them. In this way, they will appear as part of his speech.

There are exceptions to this general rule, such as official or ministerial statements, where official documents are, by consent of the House, allowed to be included as part of the ministerial or official government policy statement. This would not apply, I suggest, to a statement such as the one now being made by the hon. member.

I am not charging to the time of the hon. member the minutes I have taken to bring this to the attention of the House. In the circumstances, my suggestion would be that the documents to which he has referred might be tabled. These would then be available to all hon. members who might want to consult them in conjunction with the hon. member's speech.

Mr. Baldwin: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker. In view of the importance of these documents, the minister might be prepared to agree that they not be tabled or not be made a part of his speech, but made an appendix to Hansard.

Mr. Lang: Mr. Speaker, I have some hesitation about that departure from principle, especially in view of the variety of documents to which reference is being made. I would be delighted to have them tabled.

Mr. Speaker: From a procedural standpoint, I would have the same objections as those which I have just mentioned to the suggestion now made by the hon. member for Peace River that they be included as an appendix to Hansard. I think that, too, would not be in accordance with the established practice of the House. My suggestion should be taken into serious consideration by the hon. member that these important documents, tables and statistics, be filed for the consideration of members who may want to study them in conjunction with the member's speech.

Mr. Korchinski: I have four different documents that I am particularly interested in having incorporated as part of my remarks. I reserve the right to ask to have them incorporated as part of my remarks rather than take up the time of the House by making the same request for each one individually.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. When I interrupted the hon. member, I thought he had concluded his remarks on this point.

Mr. Korchinski: Do I have permission to incorporate these tables into my remarks?

Mr. Speaker: I mentioned to the hon. member that this would be contrary to the practice of this House. I have sat in this Chair and have very often heard hon. members seek the same privilege. The question was never put to the House. Of course, the House is master of its own proceedings. Of course, if the House wants to have any documents, statistics and tables incorporated into a member's speech and appear as part of Hansard, it has the right to do so, but it would be a very serious departure from a long established practice. I suggest we should think twice before we allow this to be done. If this is done for the hon. member for Mackenzie it should be done for every other member and instead of receiving Hansard at eleven o'clock the next morning, we may not get it until 5 p.m. or 6 p.m. the next day.

• (3:40 p.m.)

Mr. Korchinski: I am quite willing, if Your Honour will allow me, to table these documents as part of the proceedings.

Mr. Speaker: Is that agreed?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Korchinski: How are we to get round this problem? It is evident we must put some money into the hands of the farmers. Over the last 15 years the amount of money put into the hands of the elevator companies, not only by the federal treasury but by the farmers themselves, is in the order of $974 million. If we were to distribute this money among the farmers, something positive would be accomplished. I realize it is difficult to do without any storage at all, so there is one proposal I wish to leave with the government. It is that they should set up a series of inland terminals. Let us do away with a lot of the temporary storage facilities which have accumulated profits for their owners for years. Take the case of a 20,000 bushel capacity storage facility in a temporary building for which some $2,500 a year is paid. At this rate, the building has been paid for time and time again.

The next thing the elevator companies will want will be handling charges. Bearing in mind that one half of the world's surplus of grain is in Canadian hands, it is time the government came out with a storage proposal for farmers. This would help to put money where it is most needed.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Korchinski: It would also cause the elevator companies to realize that for the last 30 years they have not reorganized their system.

Mr. Speaker: I apologize to the hon. member but I have to interrupt him again, this time to call his attention to the fact that the time allotted to him has expired; he can continue only by unanimous consent.

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Korchinski: I shall not take up much more time of the House. I want to say simply this; it is time the government realized that it is not important we should have elevator systems in this country. It is important, though, we should have farmers who are making a living. By implementing a farm storage program, the government would be able to put the money where it is so badly needed.

If an adjustment is necessary, as predicted in the economic report, let us make it as easy as possible for people to get out of the business of farming, and avoid forcing them out needlessly.

Mr. A. P. Gleave (Saskatoon-Biggar): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased that the Official Opposition should have chosen this day to bring to the attention of the House, of the government, and indeed of the people of Canada to the situation which exists on the prairies, placing emphasis on the storage and handling of grain and urging the government to consider ways and means of improving the present state of affairs.

As I come to the end of the time allotted to me today, I shall introduce an amendment on behalf of the New Democratic party which we hope will contribute toward a solution if the government in its wisdom chooses to take some advice. It badly needs some advice. I suppose I would be safe in saying that it has succeeded in allowing the wheat economy of western Canada to drift into the worst position it has occupied since the 'thirties. I say this in the light of the experience of one who has farmed continuously in Saskatchewan since that time, and as one who has been active in farm organizations there.

The Department of Agriculture has lately put out an official news release advising the farmers that they should reduce acreage next year to 20 million acres—the extent of our marketing ability in the year to come as far as the department can see. If anyone cares to do the calculation he will find that a reduction to 20 million acres means a reduction of around 5 million acres in the coming year, equivalent to a reduction in productive capacity worth between $90 million and $100 million. This would be a reduction of about the same size as was effected last year. Hon. members can look at the net figures; anyone can carry them into the House and quote them; they are published by the Dominion Bureau of Statistics. But what we are talking about in real terms is the productive capacity of the farms in the west, and it is the productive capacity of these farms, together with the saleability of the product, which will make or break the prairie economy and, particularly, the Saskatchewan economy. This is what we are talking about today.

We do not have to look far for evidence of what is happening and what is likely to happen. The Globe and Mail is carrying a series of articles on the outlook for 1970. Their reporters have been going from one part of Canada to another. The particular article before me appears under a sub-heading: "Hard Times in Farming Likely to Continue". The writer says that the cash position of Canadian farmers is a major factor to be taken into account when assessing the outlook for the companies which sell machinery and other supplies. In other words, those people the Barber Commission were talking about, the machinery manufacturers who have been stealing the farmer blind in western Canada, are going to find that the object of their depredations, like the turkey after Thanksgiving Day, has been picked pretty clean.

• (3:50 p.m.)

The article, in part, reads:

The farm market at present is in a depressed state and projections by federal Department of Agriculture economists show gloomy prospects in the coming year and probably the next two years.

Then, it reads:

> Provincial governments are offering farmers some assistance, particularly in diversifying from grain production into livestock, but this is spotty. The federal government is cutting programs as part of the federal austerity policy and there is little likelihood of any new assistance from that quarter.

This last statement in the article I have just quoted, if it is a true assessment of the situation—and from my personal observation I cannot quarrel or disagree with it—would indicate that provincial governments, particularly the government of Saskatchewan, has made some attempt to deal with this situation. Whether what they have attempted to do is right or wrong I do not know, but they have tried.

It has been announced that the government will lend money to farmers to increase production. What the outcome of that will be remains to be seen. In any event, there have been some shortcomings. Action should have been taken already but it has not been taken. Therefore, there will be some difficulties in this regard. I do not intend to go into these this afternoon.

What has been the contribution of the federal government in respect of the situation it knows exists? The government could not help but know this situation exists because, as the previous speaker said, never before in the history of western Canada have we reached the middle of January and found the majority of our delivery points not yet on a one bushel quota. The government's contribution has been to jack up the interest rate on farm improvement loans and farm credit loans. If we do have to make a shift, the result of this increase in interest rates will make it more difficult for the farmer to decide where to get the money to do the job. This decision will be difficult no matter which of the limited alternatives he decides upon—beef, hogs, dairy cattle or oil seeds.

In spite of this situation, subsidies are being reduced rather than increased. The proud boast of the Department of Agriculture is that it will progressively phase out bonuses or premiums on grade quality hog production. The sad irony of the situation is that during meetings of the agriculture committee, we have learned that the Department of Agriculture has been saddled with the task of deciding the manner by which the income of dairy farmers is to be reduced to the extent of $10 million. The division has already been decided to take away that $10 million but we have not yet decided where to prick this industry in order to let out the blood.

[Mr. Gleave.]

We are now faced with price reductions and a reduction in income from wheat. The January 15 issue of the Western Producer gives the price of Wheat Board offerings for last year and this year. For No. 4 wheat the price is approximately 30 cents below that of a year ago. For No. 3, the price is approximately 22 cents lower. The price for No. 2 is 13 cents lower and the price for No. 1 is 15 cents lower. I have not referred to the fractions of $\frac{5}{8}$, $\frac{3}{4}$ and so on in which our prices are usually quoted.

In the face of this situation, we received a statement from the Minister without Portfolio, as reported in the January 17 issue of the Saskatoon Star-Phoenix, under the byline of Stirling King. The heading on this article reads, "1969 Final Wheat Payment now remote, says Lang." This final wheat payment is no further away than I thought it was going to be five months ago. This is exactly what the Star-Phoenix meant when it referred to the payment as being remote. It means that for the 1968-69 crop year, unless the government decides to do something, farmers cannot expect final payments of any significant size on spring wheat.

The least the government can do under these circumstances, and I suggest this to the minister whose constituency is adjacent to mine, is guarantee to the wheat farmer of western Canada that he will receive not less than the floor price under the International Grains Arrangement for the wheat he delivered in the 1968-69 crop year. This amount would at least help to save the economy of Saskatchewan from continued disintegration.

If we can believe a report which appeared recently in the Globe and Mail, certain industries are to be curtailed in Saskatchewan. This will result in the disintegration of small businesses in small towns because they depend on farm production. When these businesses disappear, the services they provide farmers will also disappear. Not only will the livelihood of these businessmen be eliminated, but the farmers will lose their services.

The argument for the government to do something constructive to prevent this happening is actually the reverse of the government's stated policy. According to government statements, regional differences in Canada must be eliminated. Equality of opportunity and income in various regions of Canada must be provided. This is the other side of the coin. If it is decided by the advisers to the government that an adjustment has to take place in respect of farm operations in western Canada, it is up to the government to bridge the gap between now and the time such an adjustment takes place. This is more than a moral obligation, it is an economic necessity because it will cost a great deal more to correct this impending disaster than it will to prevent it.

This is the main point I want to make to the government this afternoon. The space at the Lakehead or some place else can be filled, because it is merely a matter of moving cars. But what about the over-all policy with regard to storage? What is to be the real policy and what are to be the real decisions in respect of how much grain we will keep in storage? Is there to be a real decision as to where we will keep it in storage and how much we will be ready to pay to keep it in storage? These decisions have not been made; they have been avoided for the last number of years. The farmer in western Canada will accept answers if they are given to him. He will live with a policy if it is established. But he cannot live when there is no policy and when he does not know where he is going. He cannot, and neither can the economy of the nation or the economy of a part of a nation, live under circumstances in which the people do not know where they are going. If they do not know where they are going, they surely cannot plan how to get there.

It is answers of this type that are being awaited. The Canada Grains Council has been sitting for a year—or standing or sleeping, we do not know which. I hear some reports in Saskatoon that people have said some nice things about it. Possibly we may get some answers. Since my time is expiring, I should like to move the following amendment, seconded by the hon. member for Regina East (Mr. Burton):

That the motion be amended by changing the period at the end thereof to a comma, and by adding thereafter the following words: "and that this House urges the government to give immediate consideration to the taking of steps to deal with the prairie farm crisis by: 1. Providing a deficiency payment for the 1968-69 crop year sufficient to assure the farmer a final return equivalent to the $1.95½ minimum price established under the International Grains Arrangement, and 2. Appointing a Transport Controller to co-ordinate the movement of all western grains."

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. Possibly I might be given an opportunity to reflect on the amendment. I have just one or two initial reservations about it. First, I should like to discuss these with Mr. Speaker. I do not wish to delay the House and shall make a pronouncement on the amendment in a few minutes.

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister without Portfolio): Mr. Speaker, the motion before the House of the hon. member for Mackenzie (Mr. Korchinski) refers in several respects to the use of storage facilities, the proper amount of storage facilities for the future and the place at which they should be. It was to this aspect the hon. member for Saskatoon-Biggar (Mr. Gleave) referred just before proposing his amendment.

I should like to say a few words about the issue which seems to have caught the interest of hon. members in respect of the storage question. The specific issue of course relates to the storage situation at Thunder Bay where, quite in the usual fashion, the amount of grain in storage at the close of navigation drops to a fairly low point. The drop this year took place very rapidly at the end of the period of navigation because of the flow of sales at that particular time and the requirement to move grain eastward from the Lakehead in those last days of navigation.

I emphasized to hon. members before, and should like to do so again, that this decline to a low point in storage at Lakehead facilities is a perfectly natural, normal and efficient thing to have happened. The question that is really fundamental here has to do with the most effective and efficient use of the grain handling and storage system. The Lakehead must be filled to capacity at the time of the opening of navigation whenever heavy sales are in prospect. This is the case this year, so it is important that we attempt to ensure that the Lakehead will be full at that time.

Normally, during the course of the navigation season, stored grain is used to supplement the additional inputs of grain throughout the period when meeting the demand for export, and at the end of the period the storage capacity is not nearly all used but is at a rather low point. There is ahead, of course, the period when navigation is closed and no grain is moving out of the Lakehead. Accordingly the storage space can gradually be filled again in anticipation of the navigation season.

The issue which has been put before this House from time to time is the speed at which that space should be filled. The interest of the farmer in a general way, of course, is to see that there is enough there to meet sales at the time navigation opens. I have given assurance about that as being a matter of grave concern and grave interest to us. Beyond that, the most effective way to fill the storage space is to arrange the deliveries fairly steadily over the period, taking into consideration, however, the fact that generally speaking at the end of the period a marked increase in deliveries must take place. There is, therefore, a situation where there should be put into use a growing number of railway cars in the movement of grain toward the close of the winter season in preparation for the extremely rapid movement of grain which is required thereafter.

It is not in the farmer's interest to pay the additional storage costs of grain simply sitting idly in the Lakehead facilities, but more than that it is certainly not in his interest to have the whole system operate inefficiently and more expensively. I say to hon. members opposite that surely any time there is a choice between doing the thing efficiently and inefficiently, it would be better to do it efficiently and then find a way to pass on those savings to the producer. This surely should be the objective with regard to our handling and transportation system.

There is this year in prospect an extremely heavy movement of grain, and I want to emphasize this because of the important bearing it has upon the state and the condition of our handling system as we move on to the opening of navigation.

I indicated some few days ago the prospect of exports this year of 375 million bushels of wheat, and unusually high exports of barley. That figure alone should indicate the significance of the movement of grain in the remaining months of the crop year, but I would like to analyse it even further.

The hon. member for Mackenzie has referred to the slow movement of grain during the first part of this crop year, and I will come back to that. To the turn of the year about 115 million bushels of wheat were exported. Therefore, to reach the 375 million figure there must be an export of 260 million bushels between the beginning of January and the end of July. That means a very rapid movement of wheat indeed, particularly in the several months of open navigation from the Lakehead, when we will see one of the most rapid movements of wheat out of the country that we have ever seen.

I mention the fact that exports were slow during the first portion of the year. Our China contract had a gap of two months in it. We were paying the price in terms of sales for the period during which we attempted to hold the price at the International Grains Arrangement level, and that period is now behind us. Not only did this mean a slower movement of grain out of the country, to the extent of the 115 million bushels only which were exported in that period, but from the point of view of the individual farmer the problem was even greater during that time because of the fact that toward the end of the last crop year a very large quantity of grain was placed into box cars in an attempt to equalize quotas throughout the prairies. I am told that perhaps as much as 35 million bushels of grain were in box cars at that time. That is not an efficient use of a handling and transportation system, and it is not a use which really ought to commend itself to this House.

I would like to commend the hon. member for Mackenzie for having dealt briefly with the issue of storage, which I suggest is a phoney issue, and then turning his attention briefly to some of the fundamental questions which do face us, some of the fundamental problems which must be solved in the days ahead.

Surely, it is clear to most people that the problem with regard to wheat in this country is more one of too much wheat than of too little storage space. It is clear that we must examine rigorously the issue of how much inventory we ought to carry in this country, and particularly on behalf of the farmer how much inventory, he ought to pay for because he pays most of the costs. This is a decision which must be arrived at in a hard-headed fashion.

Most people have reached the conclusion that the inventory we have now is far and away too large, and that the emphasis should not therefore be on additional storage space but on reducing the grain that we have in store.

The hon. member for Mackenzie did touch on several other important questions, several of which again were referred to by the hon. member for Saskatoon-Biggar. After we have examined with rigour the question of how much grain we ought in fact to store in this country, there is clearly the second question of where it ought to be stored. I have asked that question in that way quite a few times now in speeches throughout the prairie region. If I ask the second question, which is should it not be stored where it is least expensive to store it, usually someone in my audience suggests that this means it ought to be stored on the farm.

I think it is important for us to face the proposition with regard to storage, as with our handling and transportation system altogether, we must look hard at the question of where and how we can do the job most effectively and at least cost to the producer.

We have some real challenges facing us with regard to the total handling and distribution system, and again I would like to commend the hon. member for Mackenzie for apparently reading the speeches I am giving across the country on this subject. It is certainly a real challenge to produce a system for today's needs which is as effective and efficient as possible, and to remove from the farmer's shoulders any cost which is unnecessary because it is the child of inefficiency.

This is the challenge which faces us, a challenge upon which I welcome suggestions from hon. members opposite, a challenge which we will be picking up in the days ahead in discussions with farmers throughout the country, because I say to them that in large measure the choice is their's.

What farmers are entitled to know is the relative costs to them of various systems which may be possible. Then, in large measure, they ought to have the choice as to which cost they will bear, considering the incidental burdens, or difficulties, or changes in their environment or way of living which are implicit in the system or systems. It seems to me that this is a thing in which we must all join. We must examine these questions now, not in a spirit of partisan politics but with a view to coming to grips with the issue itself of providing as effective a system for the handling and transporting and dealing with our grain as it is possible for us to provide. That is why it grieves me when hon. members opposite, instead of accepting this challenge to go to the country to talk to the farmers about the efficiency of the system and ways of changing it, choose to concentrate on whether there should be more bushels or not at a given point in time at Thunder Bay or, even worse than that, suggest we should not use the most efficient and effective system of moving grain into those elevators.

Instead, it has been suggested we should move that grain in a way that would entail more storage costs to the farmer, because in the ordinary case he pays for storage. What the government pays for storage is calculated on the grain in storage on August 1 and is not affected by the flow in or out of Thunder Bay during the year. More important than these costs involving small transfers from the farmers to the terminal companies are other costs involved in opposition members' proposals. They would have us use the elevator and transportation systems in an inefficient and unnecessarily expensive manner. Surely, hon. members opposite know that, the cost of inefficiency forced upon the railroad system is borne by us in the end, either by higher rates within the system or by subsidy payments through the treasury. I suggest, Mr. Speaker, that is not the best use of our money; it could be used to much better purpose if we would run the system efficiently and pay the money saved direct to producers.

To the hon. members opposite I say, by all means accept this challenge; join with us on this side of the House in talking to the farmers of this country about the problem of quickly and effectively making the changes which will put the grain industry and the individual farmer in the best possible position to develop a viable and happy industry. There is no doubt in my mind there is a place in this great country of ours for the family farm and all we must do is see that those parts of the system which are touched or affected by the government are made as efficient as possible as soon as possible. This will enable the benefits to flow to the individual farmer.

[Translation]

Mr. René Matte (Champlain): Mr. Speaker, I should like to say a few words about the motion before us.

Opposition members have said time and again that it would be possible to solve the problem of marketing the supposed surplus of western grain.

It is quite normal, before going into the matter of grain storage, to talk about grain marketing. We know in eastern Canada, and particularly in Quebec, that it is possible to use up a good portion of the grain produced in western Canada.

We always wonder why the government did not promote the study of certain solutions and also why it will not tackle the problem.

Before talking about storage, I wish to say that the surplus should be stored and then ways to market it should be studied. Even if the eastern population is considerable, it is probably not considerable enough to consume the western surplus production. That would be one way to market the surplus production because one must live in our regions and hear with his own ears our farmers' complaints.

It is stupid, as they keep telling us, that they should have so much trouble getting adequate supplies, when western farmers do not know what to do with their surplus production. This is an illogical situation. Our good farmers realize it and complain about it, of course. In reviewing this problem, we should first seriously consider the possibility of selling a good part of these surpluses in eastern Canada, especially in Quebec.

The motion under consideration reads as follows:

> That this House condemns the government's failure to make full use of existing facilities that are available for grain storage, its failure to provide adequate additional facilities, its failure to adopt and implement a system of payments for the resulting storage of grain on farm lands, by reason of which failures the farm grain economy and dependent industries are suffering serious and continuing harm.

The whole problem is being boiled down to a question of storage. My remarks were intended to widen its scope to a certain extent.

Surpluses must be disposed of, and to destroy them is a most stupid, not to say a most morbid, solution. Thousands of people are dying of hunger around the world. It is unthinkable that some produce that could bring relief to large numbers should be destroyed.

A study of the problem shows that elevators should be built across Canada and not only in the West. In 1962, the hon. member for Bellechasse asked that elevators be erected in Quebec. Had the proposals of the Ralliement Créditiste been heeded since then, this non-confidence motion might have proved useless today.

It is time the government pondered and considered a little more seriously the proposals made by the opposition.

It should, from now on, show at least its goodwill and stop saying over and over again; Sorry, nothing can be done.

• (4:30 p.m.)

We have surpluses that we are unable to sell, which would be the thing to do if we want to solve the problem. If not, we must stop accumulating them. However, such a measure would condemn many producers to unemployment and would eliminate the trade of a lot of people. This is unthinkable! And the government keeps on saying there is no remedy.

We reject this attitude, because we would like the government to show much more willingness and take concrete and effective measures. I therefore support the motion of non-confidence even though, in my opinion, we could also blame the government for its failure to seek solutions not only with regard to the storage problem, but also to the problem of grain marketing.

Some people should stop making profits out of storage alone, because it is indeed a ridiculous situation. Products should not be intended only for storage.

While the motion before us has some merit in that it puts the blame on the government, it is perhaps not clear enough. In fact, it might be possible to find all kinds of solutions to the grain storage problems but in the end, production would be intended for this sole purpose, which would be ridiculous. Marketing this grain should be our first concern.

Mr. Speaker, those are the remarks I wanted to make about this motion.

[English]

Mr. Cliff Downey (Battle River): Mr. Speaker, I feel compelled to take part in this debate. Conditions I have seen and experienced first hand in my riding as recently as the early part of this month have convinced me that it is almost impossible to overstate the gravity of the situation facing the prairie community today as well as our national economy. I congratulate the minister for the apparent sincerity evident in the remarks and comments he has made on his tours across the country. I would agree with some of his suggestions, but we have yet to learn whether the government intends to act on them.

His closing remarks today indicated that he wanted the opposition to take up the challenge, so to speak. May I remind him that he is a member of government and that the government must meet its challenges, not challenge the opposition by asking it to solve the desperate situation in agriculture.

The producers of grain are in desperate straits. Mortgages are being foreclosed. I know of three or four large farms, lying between 20 and 30 miles of my community, on which the mortgages are in the process of being foreclosed. We have spent much time in the House discussing subjects like Biafra; but you will notice, Mr. Speaker, that not too many prairie members were involved in the debate on Biafra, simply because we have poverty enough out west. We have our own problems out west and need not go as far as Biafra to find any.

There has been much talk about the huge assets of some farmers. The people down east and in Ottawa laugh at us, and say, "Why, some of these fellows are worth $100,000 and others are worth $500,000." These figures are bandied about, and when you speak of the poverty of the western farmer people laugh. I remind the minister that it does not matter how great your assets are or how much your land is worth, because, if you renege on your taxes for three years, all your assets become the assets of the state. How the minister expects the farmers on these pitifully low quotas to even pay taxes, let alone retain their holdings, even when those holdings are worth hundreds of thousands of dollars, is beyond my understanding.

When you foreclose on a farm you do much more than simply put a farmer off the land. These people are not only farmers; they are customers and taxpayers and contributors to the nation's export trade. Supposedly the government is most concerned about this matter and makes much of it. Nevertheless, on top of the load our farmers already have to bear, which in many cases is intolerable, we now have the proposals of Minister of Finance (Mr. Benson) contained in the white paper. One proposal is that farmers be taxed on recaptured depreciation of equipment. For instance, when a farmer trades in a machine or a piece of antiquated equipment for a piece of new equipment, he will have to add recaptured depreciation to his income. It will have to be included in his income calculations. Also, the method of evaluating basic herds is to be changed. The value of these herds has been established through income tax returns, but that value will not be taken into consideration. Apparently the value of the herd will be its market value on V-day. These are all matters which lead members of the opposition and those involved in this country's agriculture to doubt the government's sincerity in dealing with agricultural problems.

When a farmer is put out of business, you start a process of economic subtraction that seriously affects not only local merchants, but community administrators and Canadian workers all the way back to the assembly lines of central Canada. Canada's trade is vital, as is its agriculture. Perhaps the minister may think that I am prejudiced in my remarks because I come from western Canada. May I, therefore, read what the Agricultural Economics Research Council of Canada has said about agriculture. I quote:

> On the basis of Canada's gross national product in 1967 of $62 billion, agriculture and its directly related enterprises generate a total economic value to the Canadian G.N.P. of $26 billion. (This) represents the measure of involvement of the agricultural industry in the overall economic activity of Canada—The $26 billion figure, equal to 42 per cent of G.N.P., excludes consideration of the effect of agriculture on the demand for other products.

Finally, the Agricultural Economics Research Council concludes with the words:

> —At this juncture Canada cannot afford to let agriculture disintegrate for lack of positive information, constructive policy and vigorous implementation.

This debate has been launched on the basis of unfilled storage space for grain under the jurisdiction of the Canadian Wheat Board, but this is only one facet of the whole problem. I believe the basis of the problem lies directly under the aegis of the government and the Wheat Board, and the system under which that body operates. The answer to the problem must be found in the same place. From the years 1953 to 1969 Canada's share of world wheat markets dropped from 30 per cent to 19 per cent; Canada's share of the barley market declined from 35 per cent to 11 per cent over the same period; and in the case of oats the figures relating to the same period show a drop from 51 per cent to 4 per cent. If we had a similar percentage of world trade to that which we had in 1953, and in many years since, we would be selling over 500 million bushels of wheat a year.

• (4:40 p.m.)

I wish to quote from the minister's press release of December 1, 1969:

> Mr. Lang also warned that farmers may have to reduce wheat acreage. But he stressed that the sales effort of the Canadian Wheat Board has maintained Canada's share of the world market in face of stiff international competition.

I do not know where he got the information that we have kept our share of the world markets. Admittedly, in the last few years there has been a decline in world wheat trade, but when I take figures from the FAO production yearbooks, I find that the long term trend for world wheat is double today what it was in 1953. In 1953 it was 856-odd million bushels. In 1969 it was 1,605,000 bushels. Over the long haul, world wheat trade is up. We certainly do not have any evidence that we have maintained our percentage of world wheat trade.

I might also add a word about world wheat production figures.

Mr. Lang: Those are the ones that are up.

Mr. Downey: I am again referring to FAO figures. In 1953, the world production figure for wheat was something over 6 billion bushels. In 1969, the world wheat production was 10½ billion bushels. There is certainly a trend towards more world wheat production. The responsibility for failure cannot be sloughed off. This responsibility is right here with our government, Wheat Board and all the complicated machinery that we have administering the whole wheat and grain industry. The Canadian Wheat Board has exclusive power over the Canadian grain industry in every aspect of sales, except those within the province of origin.

It is probably true that the tremendous power now enjoyed by this centralized agency of government was largely conferred upon it with the agreement, and even at the urging, of the producers. However, this was many years ago in times that were vastly different. Conditions of world trade and production are greatly changed today.

In the desperate days of the mid thirties, a Conservative Prime Minister, the Right Hon. R. B. Bennett, created the Wheat Board to help farmers sell their wheat. It was, in its original concept, a help, not an autocratic and all-powerful government body. The concept of that day of the Wheat Board was that farmers were free to sell in the open market, selling only to the Board when the world price fell below that offered by the Wheat Board.

The exigencies of World War II persuaded the government to give the Board exclusive jurisdiction in the field of buying and selling all wheat produced for sale beyond provincial boundaries. After the war, barley and oats were added to this compulsory marketing set-up. Since that time, although it has no responsibility for purchase or sale, the Board has gained effective control of the trade in rapeseed, flax and rye through its control of storage and transportation facilities.

My chief criticism of this evolution of the Canadian Wheat Board from an agency of assistance to one of dominance and dictatorship is that the Board failed to measure up to the responsibilities that automatically went with additional power. This tight little group of five all-powerful czars accepted all the exclusive rights and powers thrust upon them by government and by events, but they neglected to keep abreast of events. They failed to keep up with the times, to modernize their methods and to shift to meet changes in the export and domestic markets. Most dramatically, they failed in their primary task of selling grain. They simply delegated this job to designated agents and became an agency for purchase and storage of grain. That is primarily their function today.

What the Canadian grain industry needs most in today's world market is a modern, aggressive sales agency, directly responsive to the demands of that market and in particular to the best interests of the Canadian producer. Under the existing system of selling, the actual sellers, the designated sales agents of the Board, have no direct interest in Canadian grain as such and no compulsion is on them to feel patriotic about Canadian grain.

The result in recent years has been that Canada has lost sale after sale to old and reliable customers such as Great Britain and Japan. Only recently Canada lost all of its share of the Japanese monthly tender for barley to the United States and Australia.

One of the most disturbing features of Wheat Board operations is the cost to the farmer-producer of their operations. The cost of storage, interest and administration are all deducted from the final payment to the farmer. Over the 15 year period I mentioned earlier, 1953 to 1969, the cost of storage in this country has mounted and has cost the producers and taxpayers almost a billion dollars.

If you visit the prairies, look around to see what we have for all these storage payments. We have supported an elevator system rather than people. Storage payments should be made to the producers. Instead, a vast inadequate elevator system of some 5,000 delivery points was built when, with modern transportation facilities, we could very well have gotten along with possibly 400 to 500 delivery points. We should have plants in the country that have drying, cleaning and blending facilities. Think of the assistance this would be in the eventual transportation and lining up of the appropriate type of grain to sell at our terminal markets.

Administration costs of the Wheat Board run at about $3½ million. I calculated storage costs and interest to be on an average of approximately $55½ million, but I notice in one of the minister's press releases that government costs this year will be in the order of $71 million. These might be acceptable cost factors if the grain were moving regularly, but they are intolerable when the system is clogged and no wheat is moving. This static condition emphasizes one of the worst features of the present system of marketing grain: a premium is placed on the storage of grain in Canada, not upon its sale. Consequently, there is no real incentive to move it.

We often hear it said that Canada is not pulling its weight in the area of aid to less developed countries. Certainly, when we look at the figures it would seem that our contribution is one of the lower ones. But really we are doing a terrific service to mankind inasmuch as we are storing over half the world's grain surplus. Canada, at a tremendous cost to her own economy, is one of the world's largest food banks. Canada, which grows approximately one twentieth of the world's wheat is storing over half the world's surplus. If that is not an important service to mankind, I have never seen one. But can we afford it?

As I have said before, since 1953 the grain producers and taxpayers of Canada have paid out almost a billion dollars for grain storage to the terminal elevator companies, in return for an antiquated system of grain storage, an empire which is basically the same as it was 50 years ago. In what other area of our economy can we find the standards of 50 years ago applying today? At our present rate of wheat sales we are only revolving our wheat stocks every four years, which means that total storage charges, including handling, interest, and so on, are costing Canadian taxpayers and grain producers between 80 cents and one dollar on every bushel. Let us not kid outselves; we shall have to move this wheat even if we are obliged to take a little less on world markets. If we take a little less, the ECC could very well open up again as a market to us. At the present time the ECC is spending $300 million a year subsidizing its agriculture; it might not stand this expenditure for long if there were a slight drop in our prices. When we maintain or raise our price above a certain level, other countries subsidize their wheat growers; if we remain below that level we can move ahead.

What we need is a government supported basic floor price for wheat. I spoke earlier of the importance of agriculture to the whole national economic picture. If our economy is to continue to progress we must keep agriculture healthy. Many cut-backs have already been put into effect in agriculture and others are proposed. It was drawn to my attention the other day that support was to be withdrawn from straight-bred steer classes at the Edmonton exhibition next year. I cannot understand why we should be presented with cutbacks affecting agriculture while expenditures by other departments of government are increasing.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. I am sorry to interrupt the hon. member but I am afraid his time has expired.

Some hon. Members: Continue.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is there unanimous consent to allow the hon. member to continue?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Downey: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I was saying that other departments have increased their expenditures. Take the Department of the Secretary of State (Mr. Pelletier). In the last five or six years expenditures there have risen from something like $5 million to $342 million. Consider the basic policy which the CBC has laid down! I quote from the annual report for 1968-69:

> The Corporation's basic policy is that efforts to increase commercial revenues must not dominate program decisions.

Why should we have to put up with these cutbacks in agriculture in an area which we have shown to be so important to the Canadian economy while other departments are taking an entirely different attitude?

I shall not continue for much longer Mr. Speaker. As for the statement the minister made with regard to cutting down the practice of grain bootlegging, I say it is all very well for the minister in charge of the Wheat Board to make a virtue out of upholding the law, but it means nothing, and will accomplish nothing. If this country had been laid out properly to start with, the borders between Alberta and Saskatchewan and between Manitoba and Saskatchewan would not exist; this whole prairie region has, generally speaking, the same problems, the same topography and the same climate; it should be one province, under one administration.

It is all very well to talk about upholding the law. It is easy to make self-righteous statements, but it is something else for the farmer who must feed and clothe his family with nothing negotiable but the grain that is sitting on his farm—grain he cannot sell for cash.

I want to emphasize one further point. We should not bind ourselves with red tape, rules, boards and commissions until we destroy our ability to be flexible. To function successfully in the marketplace of the world, our agencies must be flexible, in tune with world trends and demands. Canada's grain marketing agencies have forgotten this basic business requirement and this is why we find ourselves in the mess we are in today. There is evidence of this even in our domestic feed grain marketing arrangements. We spend our own feed freight assistance money importing United States corn into Ontario and Quebec while western Canada is sitting on a mountain of feed grain. It is time the government, working through all channels including the Wheat Board, got down to business in this country instead of being pre-occupied with a lot of wishful thinking, superfluous talking and announcements with which we have been plagued over the years.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The House will recall that when the hon. member for Saskatoon-Biggar (Mr. Gleave) moved his amendment I expressed some initial misgivings about its admissibility. On reflection, I am prepared to admit it unless there are objections which I have not heard. My initial thought was that the first paragraph, dealing with deficiency payments, did raise a new question and that the amendment might have been out of order on that ground, but in the circumstances, and in view of the fact that this is an opposition day, I am prepared to give the hon. member the benefit of the doubt. On that basis, the amendment moved by the hon. member is now before the House.

Mr. Les Benjamin (Regina-Lake Centre): May I call it five o'clock, Mr. Speaker?

Mr. Deputy Speaker: There is no private members' hour today.

Mr. Benjamin: I am sorry, Mr. Speaker.

An hon. Member: That is the best speech you have made yet.

Mr. Benjamin: You are just jealous! A few days ago I sought to initiate an emergency debate in this House concerning the use or misuse of the space available in the terminals at Thunder Bay. The Chair quite properly ruled against me, and I accepted that decision. I am pleased that the official opposition chose the topic of the plight of western agriculture today in order that we might have an opportunity to discuss this matter at some length with the government. May I say at the outset there is very little difference between the Minister without Portfolio and myself, and I suspect with all hon. members on this side, concerning the necessity to think about, plan and do something about the long term problems facing the agricultural industry generally. In relation to western agriculture, the whole system of grain handling, storage, pricing, planning, production and inventory needs to be thoroughly considered. Surely, there can be no argument on that score.

• (5:00 p.m.)

Certainly, the minister will agree that most of these items will take many months to consider. Some will take years to change. My colleagues the hon. member for Saskatoon-Biggar (Mr. Gleave) and the hon. member for Regina East (Mr. Burton) have or will deal with some of these aspects. Therefore, I should like to deal with what we must do in the interim while planning and discussing. We welcome every opportunity to co-operate with the minister and the government in order to arrive at new policies and programs.

What do we do in the interim? The farm cash income position and the whole of the economy of the three prairie provinces, as a result of low delivery quotas, have never been so bad as they are now. That is a broad statement but the facts bear it out. This is in great measure an emergency debate because an emergency situation exists.

It is incumbent upon the minister and the government to consider temporary emergency measures to deal with the present situation. We cannot just continue to accept, as we have during previous debates in this House, the admonishments of the minister that we should look at this in the long term and come up with long term answers. There has never been any argument in that regard, but the minister has not provided us with answers as to what should be done at the moment. He and his officials continue to use or misuse the idea that our grain handling system should be continued because that is the method which has been used before.

Having regard to the space at Lakehead terminals, the minister is wrong in suggesting that it is more efficient to fill that space gradually until the opening of the shipping season around the tenth or the middle of April. I make this statement partly from my own knowledge about transportation and partly as a result of consultation with people actually involved in loading and unloading railway cars, terminals and ships. I have also consulted with people actually involved with the operations of elevators and those employed by the railways.

The practice being followed by the minister is backwards. I admit that at the outset the filling of space immediately will incur greater storage charges, most of which will come out of the farmer's pockets. That is not what the farmers are concerned about now. They are concerned about delivering some wheat and getting some cash, and they are prepared to accept some additional storage charges later on.

Let us consider the situation in respect of quotas now as compared with a year ago. The situation a year ago was even worse than normal. I am sure the minister will agree with that statement. A year ago we had delivery problems and problems regarding tough and damp grain. On January 12 a year ago, we had in the neighbourhood of 840 shipping points in the three prairie provinces on two and three bushel quotas. As of the same date this year, there were none on two or three bushel quotas.

I completely support the minister in his enforcement of Wheat Board regulations in respect of delivery, permit books and bootlegging. The tragedy is that as a result of the failure of shipping points in the three prairie provinces to deliver their unit or one bushel quotas, or even the supplementary quota of five bushels from the previous crop year, farmers are forced to go to inordinate lengths to obtain cash. Therefore, they are breaking the Wheat Board regulations. Farmers do not like to do this. The overwhelming majority of farmers support the Wheat Board. They will even accept penalties or fines when they break the rules. The fact is they have not been able to deliver grain and are desperate for cash. They are forced to go to these lengths.

It is time the minister adopted opposite measures in the practice of filling space at the Lakehead terminals. It is normal that at the end of the shipping season the terminals are nearly empty. It is normal to fill up this space in the wintertime. If the farmers could deliver their quotas during the wintertime, this would be of no concern. They would be happy to fill this space. As a result of not being able to deliver their quotas—and this has resulted in their desperate cash situation and extra effort is required to make space available at the country elevators so farmers can deliver these quotas and receive cash, in spite of the fact extra storage costs will be incurred.

The 60 million to 70 million bushel space in the terminals at the Lakehead is equivalent to a two bushel quota for all shipping points that normally ship to the Lakehead. This would include all the shipping points in Manitoba and half the shipping points in Saskatchewan and would represent about 31 million acres, some 62 million bushels of grain or over $100 million in farm cash income. Once this grain was delivered to the country elevators half of this amount would be used by the Wheat Board to cover cash advances. This would leave something over $50 million in the hands of the farmers. Such a program could be carried out within the next five weeks.

I suggest that the space at the Lakehead terminals could and should be filled by the end of February rather than by the middle of April. This would allow farmers at all shipping points in Manitoba, and at over half the shipping points in Saskatchewan, to deliver two bushel quotas some six or seven weeks earlier than would otherwise be the case.

The minister claims it is more efficient to complete the filling of this space close to the opening of the shipping season at the rate of 1,000 cars per day. He suggests it is more efficient to bring this grain in at the end of the loading period. I have talked with grain handlers at terminals and elevators, and they have told me that it is more efficient to unload a thousand cars a day at the beginning of this period when you have space for 60 million or 70 million bushels.

Terminals at the Lakehead, when worked on full capacity, can handle 1,200 or more cars per day. During the wintertime it is true that trains must be short, but it is certainly reasonable to suggest that 1,000 cars per day could be unloaded, and that this space could be filled by the end of February. The number of cars could then be reduced as the terminals were filled. When available space is reduced to 10 million or 20 million bushels there are fewer bins from which to choose for specific grades. There is also less space for drying grain. It stands to reason that when you unload up to 1,000 cars per day at the end of the period, when you have a shortage of space, you will have a backlog of 6,000 to 8,000 cars. It is much easier to unload 1,000 cars per day when you have maximum space at the terminal. I have been assured of this by the head of the grain handlers union, by officials of the grain companies and by railway people. The reason the grain is not being handled in this manner is that it is more convenient for the railway companies to supply a larger number of cars later on.

I, for one, am not one bit interested in the convenience of the railways. I plead with the minister, because it is an emergency, to adopt the idea of filling this space quickly, thus providing space at shipping points which are eligible to ship to the Lakehead. This, in turn, would provide space at country elevators for the two bushel quota, thereby enabling the farmers to deliver the grain sooner than they would otherwise be able to do. When one looks at the performance of the railways, in spite of their protests and the assurance of the minister that everything is carefully planned, it smacks of sheer incompetence and indifference. A look at the DBS weekly report of car loadings shows that in the period August 1 to December 21 last, a period of about 20 weeks, 21,109 fewer cars of grain were loaded than in the same period in the year 1968. That was a slow and rough year. In this crop year 21,000 fewer cars were loaded. Compared to the year 1967, 29,000 fewer cars were loaded in the same period.

The minister assured the head of the grain handlers union at the Lakehead on Monday, January 17 that 3,000 to 4,000 car loads would arrive at the Lakehead. The information I have is that between 1,500 and 2,000 cars arrived during the week ending January 17, half the number the minister said would arrive. The Saskatchewan Wheat Pool states it could now handle, on a five-day week working three shifts a day, 400 cars a day and that they received during the eight working days between January 2 and January 13 an average of 71 cars per day. They are not even getting the 100 cars a day they had expected. The total number of cars under load was something over 4,000 fewer on January 14 this year than on January 14 a year ago. There were some 12,000 cars in transit and under load on January 14 a year ago and 8,400 on January 14 this year. There were 726 cars under load and in transit to the Lakehead on January 15 and that was an accumulation of two days of loading.

The whole thing has not been properly co-ordinated. This is the effect of an improper plan of the minister and his officials to gradually fill the Lakehead storage by the opening of the navigation season somewhere around April 10 or April 15. In the meantime, the farmers must wait seven weeks longer than necessary in order to get another one or two bushel quota to the shipping points which are permitted to move grain to the Lakehead. The railways may claim a shortage of equipment. This may not be an important matter, but I understand there are something in the order of at least 1,000 potash cars sitting idle. These are more easily and more quickly loaded and are more easily and quickly unloaded. Now, when there is a shortage, these cars are sitting around idle. It is true they must be cleaned in order to prevent corrosion, but there is no excuse for their not being used when they are sitting idle.

I ask the minister to review his program because this is an emergency situation. I agreed earlier that when conditions are normal what is being done now and what has been done before can be understood, but this is not a normal situation. It is in fact an emergency which affects not only the farmers of the prairie provinces. When one goes into the communities, talks to the small businessmen and employees and sees what is and has been happening in the last few months, and when one goes downtown in Regina and finds several business places vacant, one finds evidence of the situation which exists. When one finds people employed by farm implement plants and others who should be handling grain laid off, surely the minister will agree there is an emergency situation and that he should take extraordinary measures to fill the space in a record time. It can be done. The equipment and the men are available to do it. The space is available in which to put the grain. I hope the minister will agree that some other measure must be taken rather than the one he is taking at the moment.

The amendment to the motion calling for a guaranteed price for the farmers also calls for the appointment of a transport controller, who I submit should have complete authority and control over all aspects of grain movement between Vancouver and Thunder Bay. When we tried this system before it worked reasonably well, although there was room for improvement. This must be done again. Because of the confusion in respect of authority, and because of the great number of agencies involved, the problem is too difficult to be handled properly in the present way. So I hope the minister will do more than just appoint a co-ordinator for the terminals at Vancouver and the Lakehead. I expect he will appoint a terminal co-ordinator at the Lakehead, but I suggest over and above that, what is needed is someone who would be in complete command, who would have the authority to act when action is required and when it could be taken much quicker than if it had to have approval of the minister or the House of Commons.

I hope, therefore, the minister will look at the plan he has for the filling of this space, will consult with those who have some knowledge of the situation and be prepared to change the plan and adopt an extraordinary technique in order to provide cash for the farmers now.

Mr. Gordon Ritchie (Dauphin): Mr. Speaker, in rising to take part in this debate I do so in the hope that today's discussion will do much more than simply focus attention on a few specific weaknesses in our present system of handling and marketing wheat.

I believe it is essential that all Canadians realize that these are merely symptoms of a general malaise that is sapping the strength of a large and important segment of our society and of an industry that is vital to Canada's economic well-being. I am hopeful that this discussion will at last bring home to the government, and the people of Canada, that the agricultural industry and the farm community of this country must be preserved in the national interest. The farm unit must be retained and strengthened for sound social and economic reasons. In the prevailing depressed state of the grain trade, individual farms are disappearing fast, properties are being broken up and going out of production and farmers are leaving the land for good.

• (5:20 p.m.)

One of the long-term contributing factors undoubtedly is the lack of adequate government support for agriculture. It has recently been calculated that federal government expenditure on agriculture works out to about $286 per person active in farming in Canada. In the United States, the equivalent figure is $1,287 per head for such things as research, extension, price stability and so on. The myth is firmly established in this country's urban areas, and apparently too in the inner circles of government, that Canadian farmers, particularly western grain producers, are a pampered political pressure group that prospers on government hand-outs at the expense of other Canadians. The per capita figures on government expenditure in Canada and the United States that I have just quoted give the lie to that myth.

But there is other sound evidence to the contrary. For instance, the net out-put per man in commercial industry in Canada has increased at an annual rate of 3.5 per cent since 1946. In the seven major industrial groups used in that calculation, agriculture was best with an annual rate of increase of 5.5 per cent. Since 1961, the rate of increase has been even better. Agriculture's net output per man shot up to an annual rate of 6.5 per cent while the productivity of other commercial industry declined and limped along at 2.9 per cent. This dramatic increase in productivity has been made at the expense of farm labour and agricultural employment. But while the purely agricultural population has shrunk, agriculture as an industry has contributed in an outstanding manner to national productivity and national prosperity.

A recent economic survey in the United States showed that some 30 per cent of all employment in that country was farm based, that is, dependent upon the requirements of the industry of agriculture in its widest sense. I do not know of any similar study for Canada, but I believe it would be even higher than 30 per cent in this country. With this in mind, I am sure the government owes it to western agriculture at this point in time to take a good look at its present condition, and to be ready with subsidies, either in the form of payments on farm stored grain or acreage payments for this coming year. These measures would tide Western agriculture over this very difficult period of its existence.

Despite that fact that agriculture today enjoys only 11 per cent of Canada's total merchandise trade, it still accounts for more than $1 billion a year in balance of payments credits, and as recently as three years ago this was nearly $2 billion. These figures alone I believe are enough to give Canadians some rough idea of the magnitude of the agricultural industry and of its tremendous importance to our business and social life.

One of the major afflictions besetting the industry today is a situation regarding the grain trade. One cannot talk about the grain trade without immediately coming slap up against the Canadian Wheat Board and the other government apparatus that has grown up over the years to handle what, in all important aspects, is really a federal government monopoly.

I have no wish to throw stones at the Canadian Wheat Board, or to make life more difficult than it already is for the board and its members. I think they are probably as much victims of circumstances and government disinterest and lethargy as they are of a failure to keep abreast of the times and the changing world market. To begin with, Mr. Speaker, I believe the name of the board is wrong and misleading. The Canadian Wheat Board has exclusive jurisdiction over all aspects of trade in grain outside the province of origin. In addition, it effectively controls the trade in oil seed by virtue of its powers over storage and transportation facilities, although it has no responsibility for the export or sale of such produce.

This makes the problem of the Wheat Board a very complex one. The members control the purchase, movement and sale, and I believe each of these aspects requires separate detailed study and radical over-haul. At the very least, the apparent failure of the board to handle adequately its responsibilities with regard to the grain trade in existing conditions calls for a formal and extensive investigation. I am not suggesting a punitive type of investigation, but one the aim of which would be to find better ways of doing what needs to be done.

The fact that the transportation pipeline for grain has become hopelessly clogged while terminal storage facilities stand half empty shows that the Wheat Board has relapsed into being an agency for the storage of grain, not for the movement of grain. This problem is aggravated by instances where flax, rapeseed and other oil seeds cannot be sold to foreign buyers because they have not been placed in a position to be shipped readily. These oil seeds, being beyond the board's responsibility yet dependent upon the board's transportation and storage facilities, come off second best. This is doubly unfortunate when the world appetite for such products is said at this time to be almost limitless.

I believe it is vital that the actual relationship of the board to the producer be studied with a view to improving the flow of market information. The movement and storage questions must be studied individually and, of course, the outmoded Canadian system of merchandising and selling must be drastically reviewed.

The fact that Canada's share of the world market has declined from 30 per cent in the crop year 1953-54 to 19 per cent in 1967-68 is reason enough to investigate. These figures are only for wheat. The situation is even worse when we look at two other grains for which the board has sole responsibility as regards sales, namely, barley and oats. In the year 1953-54 we enjoyed 35 per cent of the world market in barley. By 1967-68 this had shrunk to 14 per cent. Oats were even worse off, declining in the same period from 51 per cent to 5 per cent.

To my mind, one of the most serious deficiencies of the present system is its failure to provide up-to-the-minute market information to the producer. The events of the past few years have demonstrated this many times over.

Last October, in an address to the Saskatchewan Institute of Agrologists, Mr. J. E. McWilliam, president of the Winnipeg Grain Exchange, noted the dramatic changes in the world market picture resulting from the increased production of new varieties, changes in demand due to new methods of baking, and other changes in the traditional areas of export sales. He said in part:

> The awareness of these developments by the Canadian producer has been rather remote, due to our separation of the market system from the production end of our market system.

He went on to mention other changes in the area of new demands, notably feed grains. I quote:

> The demand for feed grain is the fastest growing segment of the export agricultural field. It has increased from 13.6 million tons in the years 1935-39 to 42.4 million tons in 1967. This is over a 300 per cent growth factor in 30 years which is a tremendous market potential.

Last year the Wheat Board was selling barley for export at approximately $1 a bushel. In September, the board dropped the price of export barley in one day by approximately 23 cents a bushel. In other words, it seemed to have arrived at the stage where it felt our barley had to be competitive on the export market. When we place this fact beside the substantial demand for flax and rapeseed and then consider that the majority of grain producers were not even aware of the demand abroad for these products, we can appreciate the dire need for better information for the primary producer on potential markets, and for closer liaison between the seller and the producer.

Another instance of the failure to keep abreast of changes in the market place, and failure to disseminate vital information to the producer, is found in the radical changes brought about in Great Britain by the adoption of a new baking method. In this traditional market Canada sold 78 million bushels in 1960. In 1968, this amount was reduced to 55 million bushels. The decline was caused by a radically new system of baking adopted in the United Kingdom, whereby bakers there can utilize up to 80 per cent soft wheat and get by with as little as 20 per cent hard spring wheat. In addition, this soft wheat can easily be secured by Britain in soft currency areas, thus saving the expenditure of hard dollars.

Coupled with that is another change made by our chief export competitors. The United States, Australia, and Russia too, have all swi ched over to a system of a guaranteed uniform protein basis. This appears to be what today's customers want, and yet Canada persists in selling wheat that varies in protein content from 12 per cent to 15 per cent.

When we consider that Japan is making plans to adopt the new British baking system which requires higher percentages of soft wheat and a guaranteed protein content, we would be blind if we did not see the import for Canadian producers and Canadian export sales. This is one of the chief reasons for my desire to see a thorough and impartial study of our whole system of handling and selling grain, not with any idea of trying to pin blame on anyone or any agency but rather to try to evolve a system that is more adequate, more flexible and more suited to the conditions of the modern market place.

I have no wish to labour my point about the importance of the agricultural industry to Canada. To my mind this is quite evident to any thinking Canadian. But I do wish to emphasize that I believe it is the urgent duty of the government to help an important segment of our na'ional economy which today is in serious trouble. A large number of our people are directly or indirectly dependent upon the industry of agriculture both for export and domestic use, and the high levels of taxes paid by this industry are vital in maintaining such things as our extensive social and welfare services, not to mention many hundreds of small municipalities.

As an example of the situation of farmers in my own province of Manitoba, in 1969 the actual cash income, from all sources, of farmers was about $250 million. The value of production was about $450 million, according to the Dominion Bureau of Statistics. This means that about $200 million worth of grain is still in the storage bins. If this grain is not moved and turned into cash, disaster will ensue and not only will the farmers of Manitoba suffer but many thousands of Canadians from the prairies to the Atlantic coast.

I urge this government to regard the situation in agriculture as one of national crisis and to take immediate, effective action to modernize the whole system of buying, transporting, storing and marketing our grain crop whether it be wheat, barley, oats, flax or rapeseed. We have the skills, the know-how and the adaptability; all we need is action and leadership at the national level.

Mr. D. R. Gundlock (Lethbridge): Mr. Speaker, it gives me great pleasure this afternoon to take part in the discussion on what the minister in charge of the Wheat Board described as a phony issue. When I look across the House I am reminded of the many times that we, the opposition in this chamber, have been accused of being a great nuisance and worth nothing. We have been told that the other side of the House received the mandate of the people and therefore we might just as well save our breath. Mr. Speaker, I wish people who gave that mandate were in the galleries today to see the empty seats on the other side of the House.

An hon. Member: Count your own.

Mr. Gundlock: This is no phony issue. The minister invited us to talk to the farmers, to listen to what they said and to tell them what a good, efficient job he is doing. Well, Mr. Speaker. I should like to ask him—

Mr. Lang: You missed the point.

Mr. Gundlock: —why he does not even listen to the farmers who sit with him at the Privy Council table. Does he not receive advice on the shipping and handling of grain from any of his colleagues? Does he ignore the fact that there are dozens of people directly concerned with this problem—and I mean directly? In 1932 I worked on a farm. In 1936 I managed a large farm, and in 1939 I had my own farm.

I think it is about time the minister responsible took some of the advice he gives. What better place is there for a farmer to speak than in this chamber? I know a farmer cannot speak personally, but as an MP he can speak, in spite of what the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) has said about an MP not amounting to a hill of beans. I take exception to that remark, although as a matter of fact I think he has said worse. I have heard that the Prime Minister has 30 advisers.

Mr. Baldwin: He should have more.

Mr. Gundlock: Perhaps he should have another name for them—trusties. They are trusted all right, but we do not see or hear anything of them. I have heard it said that as a person goes through life he is lucky if he has one trusted friend. The Prime Minister is exceptionally lucky; he has 30. But why does he not listen to those who sit around the Privy Council table? I do not find fault because he listens to the people he trusts—I do not mind that at all—but he does not have to believe them and pass on their advice.

This is not a phony issue, Mr. Speaker, but one of the most important before this country today.

Mr. Dinsdale: Hear, hear.

Mr. Gundlock: It is not confined to western wheat or grain growers; it is felt all across the country. One has only to read the newspapers from coast to coast to learn that the trouble in this very important area of the Canadian economy is making itself felt in other facets of our economy.

The minister goes across the country making speech after speech, saying the same thing. On December 1 he said that the Wheat Board had maintained Canada's position in world exports. I do not know where he gets his figures. Honest and worth-while contributions have been made in this House. We on this side do not oppose simply for the sake of opposition. Many good suggestions have been brought forward, but the government does not listen to them. Indeed government members are not even in their seats there is only one minister here this afternoon.

Mr. Baldwin: Shame.

Mr. Gundlock: They are the party with the mandate of the people, and I repeat—I only wish the people could see that they gave their mandate to empty seats.

Mr. Dinsdale: They would be awfully disillusioned.

Mr. Gundlock: The minister talks about blocks of cars. I do not know what it is, but it is supposed to be a great improvement in the shipping of grain. However, the rapeseed growers are having trouble moving a very small amount compared with the wheat involved. Where is the block system and where is the improvement, Mr. Speaker?

I should like to remind the minister that I am a farmer and I have not had a quota on my farm for nearly a year. But still he talks about equalizing quotas. This does not make sense to me and I think I have very good reason to speak about it. I ask the minister through you, Mr. Speaker, why there has not been a quota on my farm since last May.

Mr. Lang: Did you get your deferred delivery permit?

Mr. Gundlock: I am talking about the quota. There has not been a quota on my farm since last May. What can we do without quotas when we are supposed to deliver wheat and other grains under the quota system? I should not have to spell it out, but I suggest that the system is run on financing, borrowing money at 9½ per cent, whereas the average rate of interest paid—and I know whereof I speak—is about 15 per cent. After two or three years of not selling the product, this not only creates a hazard but makes it darned hard to live.

• (5:40 p.m.)

The Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Olson) went to Chatham and set out some guidelines. I think he is the one who is being guided. He said:

> We in the federal government do not make trade decisions based primarily on one commodity or class of commodity. The people of Canada demand and rightly so that we should take into account the interests of the entire Canadian economy and make what is, on balance, the best decision.

The government does not take any one commodity or any one facet into consideration. I refer to the automobile pact, with which we are all very familiar so I need not go into detail. If that pact does not take into consideration one particular facet of our economy, I should like to know what does. Another example with which we are familiar is the Department of Regional Economic Expansion. Although we are discussing the Canadian economy and the grain producers of Canada, I think it is pertinent to consider this example. As I understand it, the Department of Regional Economic Expansion is financed to the tune of nearly $.5 billion. Again, that department will be involved with a special part of the economy. Yet when we raise in the House one of the most important issues affecting the economy of Canada, we are met with deaf ears and empty seats.

Just four years ago wheat was our No. 1 export. A few months ago it was about fourteenth, and where it stands today I shudder to think. When an important facet of the economy such as wheat deteriorates so quickly, what are we to do? I suppose because I am in the opposition no one will expect me to offer suggestions, but I raise two points. First, I suggest that the facet of the Canadian economy which we are now discussing should at once be treated at least as fairly as other facets. Other countries show more respect for our grain.

May I also remind the minister that there is in the world less wheat on hand than there was one year ago, and much less than there was ten years ago. There is on hand only enough wheat for one year's supply. There is not a glut in any way, shape or form when you have only one year's supply. A drought in Canada or in any of the great wheat supplying countries would change this picture. But we are told to cut down, cut down, cut down on wheat production. We are cutting down; we cannot get rid of our wheat. The minister should be cognizant of the fact that there is only one year's supply of wheat in the world, and he should be careful. We do not have to do the cutting down, because mother nature can do that very well.

Other countries in the world are looking at Canadian agriculture, even though our own government does not seem to be interested in it. The Japanese government has entered into a direct contract with growers for delivery to Japan of a rapeseed crop to be grown on hundreds of thousands of acres in Canada. It seems that other countries realize our potential and our own government does not. The government's attitude just does not add up.

When the Minister of Agriculture spoke in Chatham he reminded the people that there is one good thing in this situation: the consumer has been the major beneficiary. That is only a smokescreen put out by this government. To say that the consumer is the beneficiary, when the cost of living is higher than it has ever been, when interest rates and unemployment have never been higher, is nonsense.

How can a member of this government go around making fatuous statements like that? I am sure he was putting up a smokescreen because he wanted to divert people's attention from the real problem which he hates to face. He is a farmer and rancher; therefore, I cannot understand why he should be talking about these so-called guidelines and flexible programs. I agree with him that we should be flexible in our approach to agriculture, but where is the flexibility? There is absolutely none. A moment ago I told hon. members that it is nearly a year since we had a quota on our farm. Where, then, is the government's flexibility?

Several hon. members said this afternoon that space for grain is available at the Lakehead. The minister said, "Why do you not tell farmers what a good, efficient job we are doing? We want to get this space filled by April or May". I ask, why not fill it now? What would be the difference? Action such as this would make a difference to people who have not had a quota for a long time, who have no money in their pockets and who are paying, and have been paying for two or three years, ridiculously high rates of interest.

There ought to be another name for interest rates like that, because no one in agriculture or industry who has to find money under these conditions can look forward to making any kind of profit. I ask, why not fill the storage facilities now? Why must the government be what it considers orderly and efficient in this regard? The minister may call it flexibility, but it is no such thing. The government cannot even move a few loads of rapeseed to the coast and get them shipped to overseas customers. That is how flexible it is.

What else could we do? We could change our system of grading, because that is long overdue, and bring in a system that would encompass the protein content of wheat. This system is being used by buyers, particularly high class buyers such as millers and distillers as well as many of our overseas customers. I think they know more about our crops than the government does. They know what regions produce wheats containing large amounts of protein.

I point out that millers and distillers in particular consider wheat with high-protein content much more valuable than wheat with low-protein content. If we could introduce a new grading system along these lines, we might be able to introduce a two-price system on the domestic scene and, in addition, charge two different prices to export customers who would be quite willing to pay more for high-protein wheat. I will leave these thoughts with the minister; I suppose he will have to read them, because he is not listening to my remarks.

What can we do immediately? I strongly advocate that we immediately pay farmers for on-farm stored grain. If we paid for grain in storage that way, it would mean that farmers would receive about 18 per cent of the value of their crop, which would just about equal the interest which they pay on loans. I believe this would help our farmers, and we could do it immediately. We should do it if we are serious about giving to our agricultural sector the consideration that we give to other facets of our economy.

The government could go a little further. I am not talking about money that comes from the treasury and is provided by the taxpayer. This system could be paid for by the farmers, because they are paying now. I have heard it said that they do not pay it, but if they were paid for farm-stored grain, the government would not have to pay storage on amounts above 178 million bushels because it would not be in the elevators.

The payment should be made to the farmers. Let the elevators be handling companies. I do not mind saying that. I have belonged to elevator co-ops for 30 years and I believe their position should be that of handlers. Railway companies are shippers. We have never had any real complaints from the railway companies as shippers. I do not see any cause for so much talk. Ministers are running around the country talking about a new boxcar system. There was never any trouble delivering wheat when there were sales.

According to the minister, the Wheat Board has maintained our world position. I again say that I fail to understand this, because some world exporters have lost only 2 per cent or 3 per cent of their position in the world market. Others have lost 4 per cent, 8 per cent or 15 per cent. Canada, Mr. Speaker, has lost 45 per cent of its world trade. How does the minister explain that? Here again he is using the Wheat Board as a scapegoat. They are not salesmen; they are buyers. They are the sole purchasing agent. I am sincere when I say the minister uses the Wheat Board as a scapegoat.

How can the minister say that we have maintained our place in the export of grains when in fact we have lost nearly 45 per cent of our market? The whole thing just does not add up, Mr. Speaker. As I said earlier, the government shows absolutely no interest in this problem. I am serious when I say that the minister does not even know what he is talking about. I have talked to the farmers and listened to what they have said. I hope that for once the minister will listen to what they say through farmers who are members of the House.

Mr. Dinsdale: They are willing to subsidize a sales agency under the Wheat Board.

Mr. Gundlock: The government will probably turn it into a Crown corporation, appoint its friends to the corporation and thereby get the responsibility off its back.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Béchard): Order, please. I regret to interrupt the hon. member, but his time has expired. The hon. member for Qu'Appelle-Moose Mountain (Mr. Southam).

[Mr. Gundlock.]

Mr. Southam: Mr. Speaker, may I call it six o'clock?

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Béchard): Is it the pleasure of the House to call it six o'clock?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Béchard): It being six o'clock, I do now leave the chair to resume the same at eight o'clock.

At six o'clock the House took recess.

AFTER RECESS

The House resumed at 8 p.m.

Mr. R. R. Southam (Qu'Appelle-Moose Mountain): Mr. Speaker, I welcome this opportunity to take part in the debate and I should like to begin by complimenting my hon. friend from Mackenzie (Mr. Korchinski) for having introduced this motion of non-confidence in the government with respect to its agricultural policies and, more particularly, with respect to grain storage and movement.

If there was ever a period in Canadian history during which the people of Canada, especially those who live on our farms, had no confidence in their government, that time is now. Time and again members of the opposition have sought to adjourn the House to discuss agricultural problems; hundreds of questions have been directed to the government on the subject, opposition days were used for the same purpose last fall. Today, once again, we find the official opposition devoting its first opposition day to the subject of agriculture. Surely, in these circumstances, the government should finally come to life and take remedial action.

I listened very carefully to the Minister without Portfolio from Saskatoon-Humboldt when he spoke before we adjourned for the dinner hour. What did we hear? We heard that this motion was a phony. Just imagine a statement like that coming from a new minister who is charged with the responsibility for looking after the interests of western agriculture. I was never more surprised in my life. I am sure the government's supporters will have red faces for some time over this statement. In regard to grain storage at the Lakehead he referred repeatedly to normal conditions. But, let us face it, these are not normal times. Indeed, the times are most abnormal. The minister referred repeatedly to the efficiency of the present system, quoting pious platitudes. At least he appreciates that a problem does exist. His remarks—thank goodness—were at least an improvement over those of the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Olson) on the last two or three occasions when he spoke during a debate on agriculture. On those occasions all we could discern from the hon. gentleman's statements was that the farmers "never had it so good".

This afternoon the minister talked at length about long-term planning and policies yet to be formulated. In the long haul, long-range planning is, of course, important. We all realize that policies concerning marketing, pricing, storage, transportation, production and quality have to be reviewed. But what about plans for dealing with the present emergency? I would remind the House that at the present time wheat sales are the lowest for several years. Moreover, farmers are receiving the lowest prices in years, the lowest quotas in years and the lowest net income—if any at all—in years. At the same time, input costs are the highest in Canadian history. All this has resulted in more people than ever leaving or wishing to leave our farm communities. The total effect has been to place the agriculture industry in the most serious position it has occupied in our time. To add insult to injury, the minister tells us there will not even be a final wheat payment this spring. This is another indication of how bad things really are.

I ask the minister: What does the government intend to do to meet the cash crisis on western farms? If hon. gentlemen opposite have not already made up their minds, let me make a couple of suggestions. First, steps should be taken at once, not a week or a month from now, to move wheat into the space presently unoccupied at the Lakehead. I understand that 60 million bushels could be accommodated there, and that if the railroads would provide 1,000 cars a day—and they have done so before—this amount of grain could be stored at Thunder Bay within six weeks.

This would mean something like $75 million of new money being placed in the hands of farmers in the eastern part of Saskatchewan and all of Manitoba, a sum represented by approximately a two-bushel quota, even after they had paid back a portion of their cash advances. It is true that if we allow time to fritter away the grain will eventually move to the Lakehead and fill up this space three months from now. My point is that the farmers need this cash today, tomorrow and the next day; they require it very soon in order to meet the commitments of spring seeding operations.

The second suggestion I have is, I feel, an important one which would take up the serious slack caused by the absence of a final payment this spring. I have made it on other occasions in this House. It is that the government should make a substantial acreage payment available. This should amount to at least $2 an acre up to 400 acres. A larger payment would be even better, provided the treasury, whose accounts are now showing a substantial surplus, would loosen up. Assistance of this type was forthcoming on three occasions through legislation brought forward by a government I had the honour to serve. It proved very effective in conditions which were far less trying than those which now exist. If the government wishes to approach the problem in another way, it could introduce wheat acreage reduction payments with the stipulation that the money made available be used to establish livestock herds of cattle or pigs.

I believe a further suggestion should be put forward at this point. I have made it on previous occasions and the minister told me he would take note of it. I have heard it put forward in many areas of western Canada. It is this: farmers would appreciate a moratorium in connection with repayments due under the Farm Improvement Loans Act, the Farm Credit Act and the new farm machinery legislation. If these demands were postponed for one year, I am sure it would assist the farming population to a great extent in meeting the present emergency.

In any event, the problems of agriculture require immediate action. If the House wants evidence of prices in the west, let me read some newspaper headlines. I have before me the Toronto Daily Star of January 17, 1970. This indicates that even in eastern Canada people are beginning to appreciate the situation. The headline is, "The disenchanted prairies". The next headline is, "Gusher of prairie discontent will alter our future". The next sub-heading is, "Alberta leaders start looking enviously at the fruits of separatism". Those are headlines in just one newspaper.

Let me quote again from the Toronto Daily Star of the same date. The headline is, "Prairies rage at grain glut and money famine". The next sub-heading is, "A Manitoba farmer goes carpentering". Another heading is "It's really worse now than the 30's". The next sub-heading states, "People are fleeing the prairie". Another sub-headline states, "Wheat pool demands 'federal help or else' ".

Let me refer to an article in the Leader-Post of December 19, 1969. The headline reads, "Early grain movement requested". That is what we have been talking about this afternoon and this evening. Another article appearing in the Leader-Post of November 15, 1969 had this headline, "Elevator system on prairie must be rebuilt says Winter". Another headline is, "Grain surplus made last year frustrating". Another is, "Hard times in farming likely to continue". Another headline reads, "No storage space for bumper crop". An article, again in the Leader-Post states, "Lull in grain-handling hit".

So goes the story, Mr. Speaker. Every day when you pick up the paper you see indications that this crisis is becoming worse. In conclusion, let me beg the indulgence of the House in quoting for the record an editorial which appeared in the Western Producer of Thursday, January 8. This is a very interesting article and is very applicable to the present situation. It should be read thoroughly by every individual who lives in an urban centre in order that he may become aware of the importance of the agricultural industry to the economy of Canada. This article reads in part:

> The agricultural economy's research council of Canada has performed a valuable service to Canadian farmers by spelling out the value Canadians derive from the presence of a strong agricultural industry in this country. It did this in a statement to the Canada Grains Council which was reported fully in the Western Producer for October 9. The statement is worthy of careful re-examination.
> What the economic research council reported in essence was this:
>
> "On the basis of Canada's gross national product in 1967 of $62 billion, agriculture and its directly related enterprise generate a total economic value to the Canadian GNP of $26 billion."

Imagine that figure! It further states:

> "(This) represents the measure of involvement of the agricultural industry in the overall economic activity of Canada ... The $26 billion figure, equal to 42 per cent of GNP, excludes consideration of the effect of agriculture on the demand for other products."
> Finally, the economic research council concludes: "—at this juncture Canada cannot afford to let agriculture disintegrate for lack of positive information, constructive policy and vigorous implementation."
> What the council took into account in arriving at its figure of $26 billion for industry included: gross agricultural production, the "value added" in processing these products in Canada, the return at retail level and lastly a "multiplier factor" to take account of services rendered in the whole process including agricultural commodities and their products in position where consumers can use them or they go into the export market.
> These economic concepts of "value added" and the "multiplier factor" are common to the economic analysis of implications in production of all raw products. They are an element that has been frequently overlooked in assessing the importance of agriculture as a stimulant to further business activity.

I think this is a very good article and I commend it to those hon. members who are particularly interested in agriculture. I was very interested in the remarks of my neighbour, the hon. member for Assiniboia (Mr. Douglas), who on a number of occasions has voiced some very good suggestions that I have supported. They have also been made by other hon. members. I will listen very closely to learn what excuse that hon. member has for not supporting the amendment now before the House.

Mr. A. B. Douglas (Assiniboia): Mr. Speaker, at the outset of my remarks I should like to comment on a charge made by the hon. member for Timiskaming (Mr. Peters) in an earlier debate on agriculture. I am sorry he is not in his place this evening. He called me a "paper tiger", apparently in reference to the fact that I adhered very closely to my notes. I wish to apologize for doing that then, and for doing the same thing today. I offer in explanation the fact that I have been active in farming ever since I finished high school in 1927, and I have only a little over one year's experience in this awe-inspiring chamber. I therefore have not overcome a certain amount of nervousness when I rise to speak in this House. I have not yet succumbed to the temptation to fortify myself with stimulants or sedatives, as obviously some hon. members have.

It is all very well for the hon. member for Timiskaming to criticize me, but he should remember—and I hope Your Honour will take this into account—that he has practically made a career out of being a Member of Parliament and I am only a freshman, so to speak, even though two-thirds or more of the members are younger than I. I might add that I am quite willing to submit my notes to any handwriting expert to verify that they are my own. I might also add that some speeches I have heard would have been improved by a little thoughtful preparation.

May I now say a few words about the motion itself. I agree that there has been a large degree of failure of those responsible, including ultimately the government, to make adequate use of our grain storage facilities in Canada. The extent of the government's failure lies mainly in the fact that until recently it relied on the voluntary co-operation of the owners and operators of the storage facilities, the labour unions, the railways, the exporters and all others involved in the movement and storage of grain. This co-operation has not been forthcoming in adequate measure.

Mr. Yewchuk: Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the hon. member a question.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member for Athabasca (Mr. Yewchuk) is rising to ask a question. I should point out that it is the option of the hon. member for Assiniboia (Mr. Douglas) to accept the question or not.

Mr. Douglas (Assiniboia): Mr. Speaker, I have about 20 minutes to deliver the material I have here. If at the end of my speech I have time, I will be glad to answer questions. Hon. members will recall that I have on several occasions urged the government to follow a previous precedent and appoint a transport controller who would have control over boxcar distribution as well as terminal and other storage facilities. If this had been done a year or more ago, I believe grain farmers, the grain trade and all Canada would be better off today. However, this was not done, partly because the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce (Mr. Pepin) had too many other important things to look after and was forced to accept bad advice given him by some of his advisors.

Most farmers, and I hope most hon. members, were very pleased and encouraged when the government appointed the Minister without Portfolio, the hon. member for Saskatoon-Humboldt as the minister in charge of the Wheat Board, who would devote his full time to the urgent problems of the grain industry. By doing this the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) and the government indicated their concern for western farmers. They showed that they recognized the size and the seriousness of the problem by giving one minister exclusive responsibility for the Wheat Board and for the grain industry, something that had never happened before. I say again that this was a tremendous forward step.

One of the benefits we have already derived from that unprecedented appointment was evidenced in the recent announcement by the minister of the appointment of a co-ordinator for the movement of grain and the operation of the terminals at the port of Vancouver. A detailed study had proved the need for such a co-ordinator. In response to a question I asked in the House, the minister indicated that a similar co-ordinator will likely be appointed for Thunder Bay before navigation opens in early April.

Farmers are very pleased with these appointments because they indicate the government is genuinely concerned about the past bottlenecks and difficulties and is willing to do something to prevent a recurrence. They also hold the promise of a better service being provided to our customers. This eventually should be reflected in better sales, which is the best way to solve our grain problems. This should always be uppermost in the mind of those who attempt to find solutions. I am sure it is the primary concern of the minister in charge of the Wheat Board.

I should like to warn the minister again that I am not as confident as he concerning the ability or willingness of the railroads to move the large quantities of grain which will have to be moved in the last four months of this crop year. I urge him to watch their performance very closely and to immediately appoint a boxcar controller if they fall even a little way behind. For heaven's sake do not let them put off measures to effectively equalize quotas until the last month or two. It cannot be done in this manner, and if it were attempted we would again be in the intolerable situation we experienced last summer.

Grain farmers have three main concerns. The first is that they want as much grain as possible moved into the markets. Second, they want an equitable sharing of those markets among grain producers through an improved quota system. Third, they want the best possible price consistent with the first two objectives. Incidentally, the rational and orderly use of our storage facilities would probably save the farmers money.

In passing may I also say I am happy to note that a special committee has been set up to make specific proposals in the very near future regarding revision of the grain quota system. I suggest to anyone interested who reads or hears these words that he or she should immediately submit to the Wheat Board their ideas about quota reform. I also point out to the minister the urgency of publicizing the new quota regulations before spring seeding starts, because they could have an important effect on rationalization of production.

No doubt the minister is studying the most effective methods of transporting, storing and marketing our grain. I am confident everything will be done without undue delay to make the best possible use of all these facilities. I would be surprised if such a study did not reveal the need for more storage facilities at the west coast and possibly overseas. It may well reveal the need for more interior terminals which would dry our grain if necessary, clean it, blend it and prepare it for direct loading into ocean-going vessels for our customers. These interior terminals could receive grain directly from our farm trucks. Enough of them strategically placed could eventually supersede our present elevator system, which with some exceptions, has remained relatively unchanged since trucks came into common use by farmers.

With regard to farm storage payments, I have never been convinced there would be any over-all advantage to farmers if they paid themselves through the Wheat Board for storing grain on their own farms. I am still of that opinion, so long as delivery opportunities remain reasonably equal. On the other hand, recent developments, including the block system of grain gathering and transportation, may result in a continuing inequity in respect of delivery privileges. If this should happen—and we should be able to judge this by July 31—then I say steps should be taken to pay the farmers for their authorized production of grain, with a small holdback, while it still remains on the farm. Furthermore, those farmers who are not allowed to deliver their normal quota should be paid a reasonable amount for storing that grain until it can be accepted.

It is a great temptation to digress and talk about many other farm problems such as the many desirable and necessary changes in the quota system, the expansion of markets, market research and production advice, a more realistic two-price system, what final payment may be expected this spring, and the need to set up separate accounts in the Wheat Board for Durum and bread wheat. Then there is the matter of the cash shortage, the reformation of the Wheat Board, the International Grains Arrangement, and a new grading system.

I hope to persuade the government—and I have already spoken to some members of the government about this—to change the Wheat Board Act, if necessary, in order to make sure the Wheat Board accounts for Durum wheat are kept separate from those for other types of wheat, so that at least the Durum producers will receive a final payment next spring on their 1968-69 deliveries.

Mr. Speaker, I could talk about all these things but I shall attempt to stay within the terms of the motion before the House. Before I sit down, however, I wish to anticipate some remarks that may be made later, possibly along the line of the remarks made on November 18 in a similar debate by the hon. member for Timiskaming (Mr. Peters). In effect, he said I should vote against the government if I had the courage of my convictions.

My position is quite clear. This is related to something the hon. member for Qu'Appelle-Moose Mountain (Mr. Southam) just said. I was elected as a Liberal and will, the Lord willing, remain a Liberal at least until the next election. But this does not mean I must be silent if I do not agree with the government's actions or lack of action. I have told my constituents, and I firmly believe it, that I can do more for them as a member of the government party. I believe I have accomplished a few things—more than I could have accomplished as a member of the opposition.

I further believe that the Liberal Party, even with its admitted imperfections, will continue to govern this country in the foreseeable future. If I thought I could do a better job in the opposition, I would cross the floor. The parties opposite, I believe, will remain in opposition for a long time and I might look forward to a long and ineffectual career. I submit that the two small opposition parties have no hope of ever becoming the government. The official opposition is so split, and so badly in disarray, that I cannot imagine any revival of their fortunes for many, many years.

I believe I was elected because my constituents wanted a representative on the government side of the House. I shall continue to speak up in the House on matters affecting my constituents whether or not my opinions differ from those of the government. The Liberal Party is big enough to welcome a difference of opinion within its ranks on many subjects. I shall continue to battle for my constituents in the House, in caucus and on every other possible occasion. But I shall not indulge in the foolish luxury of voting against the government and thereby risk alienating the only federal political organization which is in a position now, and will be in my opinion for many years to come, to do something effective to solve our problems.

In closing, I say it would be fine if farmers could deliver enough wheat now to immediately fill the Thunder Bay terminals. This would permit those who have grain piled outside to get it under cover. It would let us use the roads before they become completely clogged with snow or before the spring thaw makes them impassable. Most of all, it would get some badly needed cash into the hands of grain farmers. But one must balance these considerations against the need to make rational use of our transportation facilities, to maintain a steady movement to the west coast and to have our system geared and adjusted to the much expanded movement which will be required after navigation opens. We must consider, also, the fact that about 111,000 farmers have already obtained over $250 million in cash advances since last August 1, some of this being taken out since January 1.

Perhaps there is good reasoning behind the minister's decision to have a steady but increasing flow of grain to Thunder Bay this winter, ensuring that the terminals will be at capacity well before navigation begins about April 10, instead of a crash program as suggested by opposition speakers, followed by weeks of stagnation.

An hon. Member: What is your quota?

Mr. Douglas (Assiniboia): Nothing. I agree that there are many serious problems in respect of our grain industry, but I do not believe the matter raised in the main motion before us is as vital as many other aspects the opposition might have selected for us to discuss today. For these reasons, and others, I cannot support the motion of the hon. member for Mackenzie (Mr. Korchinski) even though he is a fellow Saskatchewan grain farmer.

• (8:30 p.m.)

Mr. Yewchuk: Mr. Speaker, would the hon. member who just spoke inform the House why he felt it necessary to state publicly that he does not use stimulants or sedatives before speaking?

Mr. George Muir (Lisgar): Mr. Speaker, in spite of the minister's protestations this afternoon in regard to inefficiency in making use of available commercial storage, and in spite of the shocking and irresponsible statement he made that this motion was just another phony issue advanced by the opposition for political purposes, the very low quota situation prevailing on the prairies and the fact that there is a reported 70 million bushels of unused storage in the terminals at the Lakehead, to be filled at leisure between now and the opening of navigation, are, to put it mildly, beyond comprehension. Even allowing for about 15 million bushels working space, the 55 million bushels needed to fill the remaining space would bring a welcome infusion of income to the cash-short farmers of Manitoba and Saskatchewan served by the Lakehead terminals. There is certainly no question of not being able to find selected grades, since a variety of grades were harvested in good condition in that area last fall, and the local elevators could supply almost limitless quantities of any variety.

Apart from cash advances, delivery to the elevator system is the only means grain-producing farmers have of turning their grain into income, unless of course they are willing to accept the lower prices offered by feed mills and by others in the feed supply business. Any withholding of grain storage space, with the farmers in a critical cash position, does not appear to be in their best interest. In fact, if this practice were to become commonplace, the request for payment on farm-stored grain would become even more valid because the Wheat Board is the sole grain handling agency. The minister speaks of the cost of this storage to the farmer as the main reason for the empty space, but this is of little comfort to the farmer who has to borrow money at extremely high rates of interest, and even less to the man who has used up all his credit and cannot borrow at any cost.

The low quotas which the farming community has experienced in the last two years —and there are indications that this condition will prevail at least for the foreseeable future—mean that the farmers will continue to bear the burden of storage facilities, grain deterioration, interest charges and other expenses connected with the proper care of the grain, without receiving any compensating financial benefit. Under these circumstances it is to be hoped that the government will seriously consider some form of compensation being made to farmers who provide proper storage on the farm.

Another problem that will loom large as spring approaches, and the Wheat Board has arrived at its final figures on the 1968-69 grain pool, is that it is doubtful there will be a final wheat payment out of the pool, regardless of what the hon. member for Assiniboia (Mr. Douglas) says, and this for the first time since the 1940-41 crop year.

Mr. Douglas (Assiniboia): On a point of order, Mr. Speaker, the hon. member for Lisgar (Mr. Muir) has intimated that I said there would be a final payment. I did not say any such thing.

Mr. Muir (Lisgar): I took the hon. member to intimate that there would be a final payment. When we read Hansard I think we will see that is the inference he was making. The Minister without Portfolio (Mr. Lang) in charge of the Wheat Board approached this subject cautiously the other day. However, he left the impression that he believed the assumption that there would be no final payment was correct. Furthermore, since the initial payment basis for No. 1 Northern at the Lakehead was reduced from $1.70 last year to $1.50 for this crop season, farm income is reduced at this critical stage and works a real hardship on farmers who because of lack of space were unable to fill their quota before the end of the last crop year.

The announcement by the manager of the Farm Credit Corporation in Saskatchewan that payment arrears in that province were running at about 20 per cent of outstanding loans, compared with less than 1 per cent during the previous 15 years, is a sad commentary on the situation in the prairies. This unhappy situation is compounded by the fact that some farm equipment dealers are barely hanging on and others have already given up the ghost. When the lack of orders begins to be felt in eastern Canada, this will no longer be just a regional problem; it will become a matter of national concern. The opposition has tried many times to point this out, but the government refuses to listen. All available statistics would seem to indicate that a further reduction of wheat acreage is desirable, but at least up to the present neither the government nor any of its appointed boards or commissions have been able to offer alternatives that could achieve this objective without causing embarrassing surpluses in other grains.

Short-term objectives such as feeding more hogs, or long-term objectives such as raising more cattle, may be ways to spread the risk or, to put it more appropriately, to diversify farm operations; but they do nothing to meet the pressing problem of cash shortage which conceivably could reach crisis proportions before seeding. The federal government must accept responsibility in this area if agriculture is to remain a viable industry and thousands of farmers are not put out of business because they are unable to sell enough of their products to pay expenses. I need hardly suggest to the government how this could be done; there are many precedents which the government could follow in regard to assistance for the agricultural industry.

Assistance to help establish industry in various parts of the country is a continuing program. A classic example is the subsidy paid to the automotive industry in working out the U.S.-Canada automotive agreement, and the subsequent payments that were made to that industry last year. A comparable amount paid to western agriculture in the form of acreage payments would give that industry a much needed boost and the nation as a whole would reap dividends. While the government hopefully, may be giving serious consideration to this suggestion which has been brought to its attention on several occasions by members of the opposition, I hope that in the interim everything possible will be done to open quotas in order to make available much needed cash.

The minister has told us he is going across the country talking to the farmers about their problems. He invited members of the opposition to join him in this so-called crusade. I suggest, Mr. Speaker, that the farmers of western Canada are thoroughly fed-up with talk by ministers, government members and commissions, and are looking for action from those who are responsible for the transportation, storage, distribution and sale of grain. In this respect, no amount of government waffling, no amount of academic discourse from the minister, and no further delay can relieve the government of its responsibility to adopt policies which will enable agriculture to remain solvent in the face of disaster.

Mr. John Burton (Regina East): Mr. Speaker, when the Minister without Portfolio, the member for Saskatoon-Humboldt (Mr. Lang), spoke this afternoon in the debate, we heard the same soothing words that we have heard from government benches for the past year and a half, a cover-up operation for the inaction of Liberal government policy or failure to take concrete action to help the western farmer deal adequately with the present crisis. He invited members of the House and people in the west to join in the challenging task of coming up with changes to improve the present system; then he made a call for efficiency.

Mr. Speaker, I did not think any Liberal cabinet member would have the audacity to come into the House and invite members of the opposition or anyone else to join them in getting more efficiency in grain-handling and marketing problems. After their handling of the problems of last year—damp grain, inefficient boxcar allocation, transportation difficulties, low prices and export figures—I did not think any Liberal minister would have such nerve. With such a dismal record, I should think shame would prevent them issuing such an invitation.

Let us look at some of the latest quota figures. I have a statement dated January 19, 1970, which shows that over half—that is, 894—of the delivery points in the prairie provinces are still on a unit quota while the other 893 points are on a one-bushel quota. This compares with over 900 delivery points which were on either a two, three or four-bushel quota at the same date in the last crop year. In the minister's province of Saskatchewan, and mine, at the present time there are 540 delivery points on a unit quota and only 419 on a one-bushel quota. Is this a record of which to be proud? Will it encourage anyone to join the minister or the Liberal government in proceeding to meet the great challenge of the future?

Mr. Speaker, it seemed to me that the minister may even have had visions of grandeur when he invited everyone to join with him, that perhaps he would be the Messiah to lead the west out of its wilderness. But I think most people have realized that they cannot look to the Liberal government or a Liberal minister to lead them anywhere except into deeper trouble. I suggest it will take more than the same old words to deal with the present crisis. The farmers are sick and tired of the bungling evidenced by the present situation. They want performance, action, policies and a square deal. That is all they want, but many of them feel they are being "taken" in more ways than one.

Last Friday the report of the Barber Commission on farm machinery costs, dealing particularly with tractors and combines, was presented to this House. The report noted that in 1968 prices for various tractors in Britain ranged from $837 to $2,287 lower than in Canada. This has been common knowledge for some time, but in spite of questions from farm organizations and others the Liberal government put off the evil day when they would have to face the facts.

The commission report went on to suggest that multi-national corporations, such as are represented by the large farm machinery companies, are independent of the national authority which applies to individual companies. At the present time there is no international authority to exercise control over them. With Canada's industry and trade largely in the hands of multi-national corporations, the independence with which these companies operate has far-reaching implications. The farmers of western Canada have recognized this situation for a long time and now expect the government to take concrete action in dealing with the report of the Barber Commission.

When it comes to elevator companies, I have one example before me of a farmer who sold malting barley to the Pioneer Grain Company. I think the Minister of Supply and Services (Mr. Richardson) has knowledge of this company. The sale was for 1695 bushels. I saw the invoice and it contained a list of deductions as long as your arm. First of all, government inspection and weighing, $4.50; cleaning, a half cent per bushel. Then there were 415 pounds of screenings for which he received 99 cents credit; removal of stones, five cents per bushel—although in this case the land was stone-free—elevator and handling charges, 3¾ cents per bushel; service charge, one cent per bushel; storage for 34 days, $19.21 total. This was because the farmer had asked that the cheque be made out in 1970 because he preferred to receive payment then for income tax purposes. Interest on freight—again this was because the farmer asked for his cheque in 1970 even though the grain company had the grain at its disposal and probably moved it into its own market channels—for 39 days was $1.62; bank exchange, one-eighth of one per cent. These deductions were made from the farmer's cheque before he received any money for his malting barley.

Mr. Speaker, a good deal has been said in this debate about the transportation tie-up at the present time and over the past year. I suggest that the railways are guilty of gross negligence in dealing with this matter. My information is that in the last three months of 1969 the railways were 8,000 cars short of what the Canadian Wheat Board asked them to place in Lakehead positions. This situation is partly responsible for the situation at the Lakehead. Is this another example of efficiency?

At the present time the railway companies are taking cars out of grain movement, claiming this is because they have introduced the block system which will ensure greater efficiency. But they did not have enough cars in operation in the first place. It is probable that there will be another pile-up at the Lakehead on April 1 when the navigation season opens.

Mr. Speaker, the economic effect of the present situation is obvious. With the shortage of cash, farmers are not able to pay their bills. We already have reports of what is happening regarding payments due on Farm Credit Corporation loans. We also have many examples of reduced employment on the prairies. Many people are moving from Saskatchewan, in particular, for this reason. In my own city of Regina the cement plant closed down for the first three months of 1969 and it will probably be closed for four months this year. In 1969 it was closed for a total of 18 weeks. Some of the major motor car dealers are experiencing considerable difficulty, as are the farm implement dealers. As the member for Regina-Lake Centre (Mr. Benjamin) pointed out, we have never seen so many "For rent" signs on premises on the main streets of the city.

There is a population drain from Saskatchewan greater than anything seen since the time of the previous Liberal government prior to the election of the CCF government. Last year the population of Saskatchewan decreased by 6,000. Add to this figure the natural increase in population, and we see that the situation is really much worse than that figure indicates. Thus, the income situation in Saskatchewan is quite desperate for many farmers, yet we find that the government has failed to deal with this situation.

Farmers find it very frustrating when ministers and spokesmen of the Liberal party and the government point to cash advances as the big thing that was done to help farmers. Mr. Speaker, everyone acknowledges the important role of cash advances, but everyone knows that they are not a solution to pressing problems. Farmers become increasingly frustrated and resentful when they find Liberal Party spokesmen and government spokesmen falling back on this sort of argument. Is it any wonder that at the present time there is talk for secession in the west? There is no need for this sort of talk. It is not the way people really feel and it is not what they want to do. But this type of situation arises out of frustration and resentment because of the failure of the federal government to take any concrete action and to review grievances over the past year.

[Mr. Burton.]

It is for that reason that my colleague the hon. member for Saskatoon-Biggar (Mr. Gleave), seconded by myself, moved the amendment which asked the federal government to consider a deficiency payment for the 1968-69 crop year sufficient to assure the farmer of a final return equivalent to the $1.95½ minimum price established under the International Grains Arrangement.

I suggest that a case can be made for this amendment on the ground that the International Grains Arrangement was entered into by Canada as a nation. It was not entered into by the Canadian Wheat Board, the farmers or the farm organizations; it was ratified by Canada as a nation. When Canada entered into that agreement, by implication it also made the commitment to its farmers that they would be paid at least the minimum grain prices over the life of the arrangement. We see what is happening this year. The Minister without Portfolio made it quite clear that there will be no final payment on the 1968-69 crop pool. We feel that this is the very least the federal government should do in dealing with the present situation.

The second part of our amendment calls for the appointment of a transport controller. Recently, after months and months of pressure, we had the announcement of a transport co-ordinator or controller at the Vancouver terminals. It seems to me that the appointment of this official supports and backs up the need for our having an official with the authority necessary to deal with all aspects of grain movement in the prairie region and right through to the Lakehead. I think it should be made clear that the block system is not the final answer to transportation problems. I think it should be said that it is a help, but that it does not deal with the total transportation situation.

Thus we see the record, Mr. Speaker. The problems of farmers and of agriculture have probably been debated more than any other topic in this House over the past year. Is it any wonder that the events of the past year and the inaction of the government have led to despair? Finally the government comes along and says, "It is too late to do anything about the problem because the time to deal with it is past." That is the government's usual way of getting out of many situations.

I could quote a number of figures to show the dismal record of the Liberal government in dealing with agricultural problems. I have noted in particular that over the past few months, whenever agriculture has been debated the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Olson) has quoted the 1963-68 average figures and compared them with the 1958-62 average figures. While this is very nice, and I suppose the minister has his own reasons for trotting out these sets of figures, we want to know what has happened since he became Minister of Agriculture. It is a rather dismal record, Mr. Speaker.

Farm cash receipts have gone down steadily since the minister assumed office. We have a dismal record with respect to farm markets, with respect to export sales and export prices. I will not go into statistics at the present time. This afternoon we heard a speech from the Minister without Portfolio in which he criticized some aspects of the motion before us. He did not deal at all with the amendment that was moved by my colleague. His address in the debate this afternoon reminded me of a lecture in a law school such as he might have delivered at one time. It is perhaps a good idea for the minister to keep in practice, because I predict that he will be back in the classroom before too long.

It is also good to know where the Liberal backbenchers stand on this question. I listened with a great deal of interest to the remarks of the hon. member for Assiniboia (Mr. Douglas). I do not doubt his sincerity in wishing these problems to be solved. I have noted that he has made some very fine statements in various parts of the country, and on occasion in this House. He has from time to time asked for a number of very useful things. But it is quite obvious, Mr. Speaker, that when it comes to anything important, he is not listened to by the government. More important than that is the old saying: Talk is cheap. It is how the hon. member votes that counts.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Burton: We want to see how the hon. member will vote this evening. He has indicated that he will vote for the government. It is his right and privilege to decide how to vote. It seems to me that unless the hon. member and other Liberal backbenchers representing agricultural areas in the west support our amendment, they will make it quite clear that they are not in favour of a deficiency payment or the appointment of a transport controller. I suggest if they really mean what they say, those Liberal backbenchers will support the amendment moved by my colleague. I suggest, Mr. Speaker, it is time they put their vote where their mouth is. We have had enough talk in this situation.

In addition, we have to ask where the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) and the rest of the western members of the cabinet stand on this matter. We have a number of cabinet ministers from the west; they are called upon to do the government's dirty work whenever the powers that be within government circles say "No" to requests from the west for farm legislation or assistance to farmers. Either that, or they do not understand the situation; they cannot have it both ways. I submit, Mr. Speaker, that if they have any guts at all, the western representatives in cabinet will tell the Prime Minister and the cabinet, "If you want us to continue in cabinet, you will have to approve better policies than you have up to the present time." They will have to say, "We now have a bankruptcy of policy."

If they are not willing to do this, if they have any integrity they will have no choice but to resign from the cabinet. On the other hand, if they are content to sit on their little pedestals of glory until the next election, that is their choice. In that event, I suggest that the people of western Canada will deal very harshly with them at the next election.

Mr. E. B. Osler (Winnipeg South Centre): Mr. Speaker, although I do not come from a farm constituency, the area I represent depends to a great extent on the well-being of western farms and the western economy. I do not like to pre-suppose anything, but I dare say I feel very much as the proposer of the motion feels about the west and the western economy.

The hon. member for Mackenzie (Mr. Korchinski) and I both have in common our geography. We are both people who earn our living in, and both of us call home, that part of the country west of the Lakehead. We are both conscious of a feeling of alienation in this country that we call home. There is a feeling of alienation in the world generally and in western Canada specifically.

Some of us have a vague feeling that the last 100 years have somehow let us down. I think this feeling has some justification, because in 1867 when Canada became a confederation as we now know it, the combined liabilities of the original colonies that came together were composed, to the extent of 60 per cent or so, of debt for transportation and canal systems that had been built up with the expectation that they would get the cream of the trade from the western United States. Our people did not get it. The people of the United States outfoxed them by building their own canals. Thus, the colonies of the regional parts that became Canada were in great trouble and in great debt. Their inspiration was that if they could only persuade the other colonies to the west of them to come in, somehow or other they could utilize these assets which were built but not paid for such as the canals, railroads and other facilities with which they were stuck. There is no doubt we in the west were consciously or unconsciously considered a colony by the original part of Canada when we joined confederation 100 years ago. There is a vague feeling still of discontent and disappointment in the 100 years that have passed.

The hon. member for Regina East (Mr. Burton) mentioned the matter of tractors a moment ago. This is another nail in the coffin. In Winnipeg there is a tractor company that makes profits which are certainly healthy by any capitalistic standard, yet it undersells other farm machinery companies in a market stretching from the Peace River to Texas and from the Rocky Mountains to Pennsylvania. This indicates there must be something wrong with the farm machinery business, if a medium sized manufacturer in Winnipeg can do so well and still undersell the big fellows.

I think this feeling of alienation will grow if the government does not accept the challenge offered to it by Mr. Barber's report and look into this matter. The government has muscle. It must be able to do something about manufacturers who ride roughshod in the manner that Mr. Barber has indicated.

I must say reluctantly that I was disappointed when the hon. member for Mackenzie (Mr. Korchinski) presented his motion. While I agree with his sentiments and feelings of frustration, I cannot agree with his motion. The motion in substance censures the government for its failure to use its existing facilities, failure to provide additional facilities for grain and the movement of grain and for the failure to implement a system of payment for grain stored on farms, by reason of which failures the farm grain economy is suffering serious harm. I think the hon. member missed the mark on this motion. The amendment does not help either, because it talks about deficiency payments and a transport controller. I think this also misses the point.

Mr. Korchinski: How would you have worded it?

Mr. Osler: In my mind this is the mark of irrelevance. The farm grain economy is suffering harm, not from these minor details which anybody could tinker around with whether they were bright or stupid, but because it is growing unsaleable crops and grades of grain that cannot be sold. This is a hard fact. It is a fact that I, as a westerner, do not like to admit; but I think the beginning of wisdom is to admit hard facts and act on them.

Our own surveys have belatedly begun to show this. The FAO underlined the fact by saying: Thank God we are liable to have a food surplus in the world in the next little while, and those who grow food in bulk had better watch out because they may be in financial trouble. This is something for mankind to rejoice about. It is something the people of western Canada have to consider seriously. Let us not waste time, then, with motions, amendments and talk about facilities and details. Our facilities have more grain in storage now than they have had in the last two years.

Last year there were 497 million bushels of grain in storage; the year before there were 504 million bushels, and this year there are 516 million bushels. Grain has therefore been moved and put into storage. All we are really saying is that the world has not bought as much grain as we have grown and would like to sell.

An hon. Member: What about the quotas?

Mr. Osler: I will speak to the hon. member later. I repeat, there is something wrong with western agriculture today, but the items referred to in this motion are irrelevant and wide of the mark. Vague feelings of alienation are shared by the hon. members for Mackenzie, the member for Regina East and myself. Westerners will not be served by having these vague feelings of alienation fanned, deliberately or otherwise, by members of this House. The problem is a deep one and must be looked at in a long-term manner. The farm organizations who asked to see the Liberal members from Manitoba during the Christmas recess to talk about their problems were unanimous in saying that the long-term approach that is appearing looks good. The Grains Council looks as though it may work and will be a good, long-term solution.

I submit the appointment of a Minister without Portfolio to be responsible for grain was a good thing. We have a good man for this job. The block system for boxcars is also good. The fact that serious people are considering the modernization of the standards of grading grain is good, and I understand this House will be asked to make amendments to the Grains Act to this effect. Developing market research and forecasting activities, which this industry never had before, is a good thing. The member for Regina East spoke of diversification that is causing the Japanese to look for oil seed facilities, etc. All of these are good.

Predictions indicate that the demand for grains will catch up with supply during the next decade. On the other hand, if there is a slack in the long-term industry, the Department of Regional Economic Expansion will help to pick up that slack. This was evidenced in my own hometown last month when Boeing located there. The federal government assisted in this venture to the amount of approximately $1 million.

In the long term the federal government is facing up to the situation. It appears that ultimately the correct decisions will be made, divorced of politics, by the men who should make them in this free economy of ours. I refer to the people who live at the head of the Lakes and west of there who are mostly concerned with the grain trades.

Everyone I talked to in the Winnipeg area told me there is a healthy feeling of co-operation, co-ordination and long-term optimism. People are putting aside their petty regional, bickering politics—I do not mean this in a "political" sense,—and grappling with the long-term problems. It will not be too long before the people of western Canada start looking after their own knitting in a way they have not done before. When this happens, they will not have to look to politicians other than for genuinely political decisions.

In the short term, I suggest that because this country has been involved in politics up to the armpits in the grain trade in the last 80 or 100 years, politicians cannot pull right out just because the people themselves are beginning to make decisions in a sophisticated, twentieth century way, as they should be doing.

How does one maintain now the ability to produce at present levels, so that opportunities can be seized when present levels of production are again required in the next five or ten years? How does one see these farm people through the present crisis without wrecking this wonderful producing machine? How does one help individual farmers to get through this cash crisis period without encouraging people, falsely from an individual point of view and, I would say, sinfully from the point of view of the country as a whole, to grow unwanted grain? How does one help them without falling into this trap? These are the matters we should be debating today, not details which, I maintain, have been brought forward with the best of good faith by hon. members but which are wide of the mark.

To fill the Lakehead terminals now, as some have suggested, would accomplish little. Some farmers might receive small amounts of instant cash, but the handlers at the Lakehead would soon run out of work because the elevators would be full; they would be laid off after a couple of months. More important, the pipeline feeding through to the Lakehead elevators would soon have done its job. Then boxcars would be dispersed all over the country even more widely than they are today; it would take God knows how long to get the railroads cranked up to do their jobs properly so that when navigation opened they would be able to feed the Lakehead again.

Is it not more sensible to arrange for a crescendo of build-up, so that when navigation opens things will be running full blast at the only time it really matters? The figure of 1,000 boxcars a day has been mentioned. They would have to be hastily assembled, then dispersed, then reassembled again. I maintain it is better to do what is being done now. Hon. members should not forget that grain is moving at the present time; about 20 million bushels a month are moving to Vancouver, grain is moving steadily to Halifax, and the Lakehead will be going full blast when navigation opens. Grain cannot move out before that, because neither the government nor the opposition parties can persuade the ice to melt earlier on the Great Lakes. I note that 375 million bushels will be moved during this crop year, 260 million bushels in the final six months. There will be lots of work for everybody when the ice goes off, and nothing will be gained by trying now to move more than is being moved.

To get back to the original argument, grain is moving at the rate of about 20 million bushels a month. Everybody in Canada is benefiting from this movement, except the farmer. It does not matter where we live—Halifax, Montreal, Toronto or Winnipeg—the movement of grain through the country is creating jobs for people, for oil workers in Alberta, for the railway men, for grain brokers, for vessel brokers, for insurance men—for everybody who is in any way connected with the trade however remotely. Everyone, that is except the farmer.

Farmers who survive this short-term crisis will ultimately benefit, too. At the moment, what is keeping the wolf from the door is $252,700,000 worth of advances, which is good. It cannot be ignored. True, these are only loans, though no interest needs to be paid on them. The people of Canada, who are benefiting from all this movement of grain, are taking up the slack, helping the people of western Canada, by paying interest charges on these loans of $252 million, as well as by paying some storage fees. That is just about all.

To get back to the story of confederation, I have no doubt that the long-term solutions which are being worked out by this government and by private individuals of great competence will ultimately see western Canada through this crisis. However, I suggest that the people of Canada as a whole, and we as parliamentarians who represent them, are not being very good Canadians or acting as deeply committed partners in confederation, nor are we acting as very intelligent people, if we do not keep pressure on this government to come up with ways and means of helping these farmers get through their short-term crisis in a manner which will not delude them into growing a heck of a lot more grain, but in a way which will assist them to get through this period of changeover, by diversifying their operation or contracting it to a point at which only the amount of grain presently needed will actually be produced.

This is a challenge to Canada which will not be met by putting forward motions which inadvertently seem to be futile, like the one we are discussing this evening, or motions like the one to abolish the Senate which everyone knows is an illegal proposition, brought into the House to waste its time.

[Mr. Osler.]

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Who said so?

Mr. Osler: Instead, what we must do is find ways and means of helping these people through a short-term—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Béchard): Order. I regret to interrupt the hon. member, but his time has expired.

Mr. Craig Stewart (Marquette): Mr. Speaker, I do not believe there could be a more opportune occasion for a debate on agriculture, or more urgent need for such a debate. As we all know, this is the first day since the resumption of the session on which the official opposition has been able to designate the subject of the discussion to take place in the House. I thank my colleagues on this side for agreeing to have this debate on agriculture. It is obvious that the government does not want to discuss our farm problems.

• (9:20 p.m.)

The federal constituency of Marquette is mainly a rural riding. During the Christmas recess I had the opportunity of touring my riding and talking to many farmers and businessmen. I have never seen the western economy in the deplorable condition it is in today. The lack of grain sales and the existence of the largest wheat glut in our history is affecting everybody in western Canada. Many businesses will be lucky to survive this year, and most farmers are desperate for cash.

According to figures released by the Canadian Wheat Board, as of January 5 in Manitoba there were 271 delivery points on initial quota and 51 delivery points on a one-bushel quota. For the benefit of hon. members in this House who do not understand what an initial unit quota means, it means that all the income these farmers have received since July 31, 1969, from grain is approximately $500. How would anybody like to survive for six months on $500?

Mr. Bell: That's even worse than $30 a week.

Mr. Stewart (Marquette): The government might say that the farmer can get cash advances up to $6,000 in any one crop year. This sounds good, but an individual has to be a mighty large farmer to qualify for the full amount of $6,000. The average farmer in my area, and I stress the word "average", is lucky if he can get $1,500 to $1,800. I say to the government that when we start talking about farm income at this time we are getting pretty close to the poverty level.

During the last crop year farmers only reached a four or five-bushel quota, and from all indications their deliveries will not be any higher this year. I have told this House before, and I repeat, that our farmers cannot exist on a five-bushel quota. This low quota has existed for three or more years and there has to be a day of reckoning. This day is fast approaching if our family farm operations are to survive.

I support the motion this party has placed before the House. Farmers should be paid storage on farm-stored grain. Under present conditions farmers are asked to carry abnormal amounts of grain and it is not their fault that we have a glut of grain. There are other things this government could do to help the farmer. It should investigate the possibility of overseas storage facilities for unsold grain. I understand that at the present time the only grain in this forward position is sold grain. Most grain moves through Rotterdam or Tokyo. Often a customer wants 200,000 bushels or less in a hurry, perhaps in five to ten days. Because we have no unsold grain in this forward position, we cannot take advantage of these orders. I realize these are not large sales, but small sales often lead to large sales and we should investigate every possible way to sell more grain.

The government must look at our entire sales policy. No matter what figures you look at, we are not getting our share of world markets. I realize all wheat producing countries are facing problems similar to ours; however, nobody has lost a greater share of markets than Canada. This situation cannot be allowed to continue. Not only must we stop this downward trend in sales; we must recover the markets we have lost. Whenever I am home I hear farmers questioning the effectiveness of Wheat Board sales. These farmers want the Wheat Board but they feel it is slow to react to market conditions. Perhaps it is time we had a shake-up in the Wheat Board, with no appointees serving for more than five years until we see how effective they are.

The government must show leadership in facing up to our agricultural problems. It should, through the Department of Industry, Trade and Commerce, set up a special sales force to assist the Wheat Board in selling our surplus grain. The government should eat, sleep and talk grain until we sell our surplus and recover our markets. Let the government become aggressive about wheat sales. It has been stated that if Canada had maintained the share of world trade in wheat, oats and barley we had 15 years ago, we would have no surplus of grain today.

Until this government has recovered our wheat markets there must be immediate assistance to western farmers. This assistance could be in the form of an acreage payment to tide the farmers over the present serious situation. Our party has asked many times during this session for acreage payments. The need was never greater than it is now. Acreage payments do not represent a long-term solution to our agricultural problems, but at least a substantial acreage payment would tide the farmers over until the government came up with an effective long-term policy. Surely, a government that can wipe out Expo's debt to the tune of $125 million, and give $80 million to the Ford Motor Company, can give the western farmer a small slice of the pie.

We have contended that no other industry could survive the cost-price squeeze the farmers have been faced with in the last ten years. This was never brought more to light than by the special report on farm machinery prices tabled in the House last Friday. This is a prime example of how the farmer has had to sell in open world markets, yet buy his equipment in a protected Canadian market.

I have received many letters from constituents who indicate their alarm over recent government action. I should like to quote from a letter I received last week from a constituent who is a farmer. He said:

> Hon. Otto Lang's attitude to farmers selling grain at below Wheat Board price seems to indicate a total lack of understanding of western farmers' problems. No one would willingly sell his grain at less than market price unless he was desperate for cash. Surely instead of attacking farmers, Mr. Lang would do better to spend his energy on finding legitimate ways for the farmers to obtain cash for their product.
> Another thing, this is not the time for the government to cut back on funds for agricultural research. Agriculture is not to blame for the present inflationary trend and the government should be making every effort to help the farmers function better, not make things more difficult for them.

This letter is very indicative of western feeling. Other members wish to speak, and I will not continue much longer. Before I close there are several points I want to stress to the government. The situation in western Canada is very serious, and time is running out. I believe it is time the government got off the cultural kick it is on and got back to the bread and butter issues facing this nation.

When people see their lifetime work going down the drain, they become desperate. This is happening to the farmers and people of western Canada. They are fed-up with talk of Quebec separation and ask what is the point of saving Canada if we cannot survive economically in the west. No matter what meeting I attended during the Christmas recess, I found this feeling. This is not meant as a threat that western Canada wants to separate. The people there feel, as we all feel, that Canada is a great nation with a wonderful future. However, let me again stress to the government that the situation in western Canada is critical, and it is a shame that this should happen because of lack of action by the government. The government seems to have two speeds in facing up to agricultural problems—slow and very slow. Let us have immediate action from this government to alleviate the serious situation in western Canada.

Mr. Stan Schumacher (Palliser): Mr. Speaker, during my few remarks this evening I do not intend to add to the waves of criticism that have been washing over the Canadian Wheat Board in recent months. I believe there are faults both in the make-up of the board and in the manner of its operation. Many of these faults have already been mentioned. It is my firm conviction that the board has been largely the scapegoat for the shortcomings of others, notably a long line of Liberal ministers whose only contribution in recent years has been to manipulate the Canadian Wheat Board for purely political advantage.

• (9:30 p.m.)

The real culprit in bringing Canadian agriculture, and western grain producing agriculture in particular, to its present critical state is the Liberal Party that turned its back on this country's agricultural community deliberately and which has kept it turned for the past five years or more. The sorry mess in which we find ourselves today is as much due to the inadequacies of the present Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Olson) as to any faults in our system of marketing grain.

[Mr. Stewart (Marquette).]

Instead of spending his time trying to sell the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) and the cabinet to the west and trying to engineer the merger of the provincial wing of his new party with his old party, he should have been selling the west to this administration, which in so far as action or interest is concerned appears to be completely ignorant that the west exists within confederation. It is apparent from the attitude of this government to the west, and people and things western, that the Prime Minister's Canada ends at the Lakehead.

As long as we have a federal system of buying, handling and selling our wheat, as long as the whole apparatus is dependent upon the government of the day, it will continue to be effective or ineffective in direct proportion to the amount of importance and support accorded it by Ottawa. We could have the best and most up-to-date grain marketing set-up in the world, but it would still be unsatisfactory as long as the federal government continued to callously disregard the needs of the agricultural industry and gave it no priority among the items of national business. I suggest, therefore, the first and most necessary thing Parliament must do is generate a real and informed concern within this government for agriculture. Then, and then only, will we be able to get anywhere in completely overhauling and modernizing our system of marketing Canadian grains.

In respect of the grain industry, the fact is that while the primary producers, the farmers, have taken giant strides forward in adapting modern technology and methods to their end of the business, the rest of it has remained in the horse and buggy era of the 1920's and 1930's. As was pointed out by the hon. member for Dauphin (Mr. Ritchie), farmers have increased their per capita productivity at a tremendous rate which surpasses that of any other industrial classification in Canada. Yet the system of marketing their output—and in the area of grain-handling the government has denied the farmers any responsibility—remains archaic. This system of marketing is not only cumbersome and ineffective but is petrified in a mould that could operate at all only in the best of all seller's markets. It is useless in the world market place of today and in a market that has become, and is likely to remain in the foreseeable future, a buyer's market.

This is clearly demonstrated by considering the process by which Canadian grain is shipped and exported, which demonstrates that Canada's marketing facility consists of four large foreign firms, two controlled by French capital and two controlled by United States capital. Let me illustrate this simply by quoting a few paragraphs from an article by John Schmidt, agricultural editor of the Calgary Herald. In it he expresses some interesting facts about Canada's international wheat sales:

> Is it really a serious matter that Canada has no major exporting firm selling any volume of Canadian grain?
> The answer is yes.
> And the reason is that if any large import order by a major wheat user was put up for tender tomorrow Canada would probably get last chance at supplying the order.
> This is because four major international trading companies perform most of the shipping and exporting arrangements for the Canadian Wheat Board. They are Dreyfus and Bunge (controlled by French capital) and Cargill and Continental Grain Company (controlled by American capital).
> It was Dreyfus and Company which got wind of the Russian wheat shortage in 1961. This company's representatives undertook to dig up wheat supplies for Russia.
>
> The first move was to buy all the surplus French wheat.
> That wasn't enough so Dreyfus sold the Russians all they could buy of the remainder of a short Argentine crop.
> Then the company picked up a significant portion of the Australian crop.
> Fourthly, it came to Canada for what was left of the Ontario winter wheat crop.
> And finally—after all other supplies were exhausted—they came to Western Canada because Dreyfus knew the Canadian Wheat Board would give it the smallest working margin for shipping insurance, credit arrangements and delivery dates for acting on its behalf. The only point at which the wheat board entered the negotiations was in setting the price at which it would sell Canadian wheat.
> Most commercial sales of Canadian grain are made by these shipping and exporting companies—or rather it would be true to say that they go around and dig up the orders.
> Even when the wheat board signs a sales contract with a government importing agency of a buying country (in the case of countries where free enterprise has been eradicated) the final arrangements are left to either Bunge, Dreyfus, Continental or Cargill.
> Naturally the Canadian Wheat Board would give the business to a Canadian company if there was a Canadian company now in this business. Canada has no merchant princes who want to work at the small margins the wheat board offers.
> This may explain why France, for instance, is cutting into Canada's barley market in Japan.

With all our know-how and ingenuity Canadians could surely set up such a selling agency of their own. Mr. Schmidt has suggested a consortium of all the private and co-operative handling companies together with the banks. Whatever form it might take, it would be a great improvement on our present system of subletting our sales prerogative to disinterested, profit-conscious foreign firms. Another thing that is desperately needed in my estimation is establishment of a close liaison between the market-wise scouts and salesmen of Canadian grain and the primary producer, the farmer.

It seems to me it is vital to have a swift and direct channel of market information by means of which the Canadian producer can be made aware of what types of crops and what quantities are in demand around the world. The weekly Richardson letter on the grain trade for January 15 states that we have lost and are continuing to lose sale after sale of crops such as barley, flax and rapeseed because the physical crop was not available at the ports for shipping.

This market demand must have been foreseen months ago, yet lack of liaison and dissemination of pertinent information prevented adequate supplies being moved to suitable sites in time for sales. This letter, incidentally, mentioned the loss of any possible share of this month's Japanese tender for 180,000 tons of wheat because the Wheat Board raised the price ¾ of a cent only a day before the tender. According to the Richardson letter, the Japanese buyers were more offended by the act than by the price increase. The result was that Canada lost every bushel of that large sale of about 9 million bushels to Australia and the United States.

Mr. Speaker, through you may I ask the Minister without Portfolio (Mr. Lang) how we can explain this scandalous blunder to those farmers who are being forced to sell their wheat at the present time for 60 cents or 50 cents a bushel?

I would adopt the suggestion made by the hon. member for Marquette (Mr. Stewart) in respect of overseas storage. Then we would not be restricted to the sale of grain in boatload quantities. This would enable the operation to be more flexible.

I believe a very good place at which to start a general overhaul of our system would be cleaning up the confusion that exists within the government concerning which minister is responsible for what particular phase of agriculture. There is no sense subdividing responsibility and having the Minister without Portfolio responsible for the operation of the Canadian Wheat Board and the Minister of Agriculture responsible for other aspects of the industry. Neither one, in my view, is capable of the action required to bring the system up to modern standards. One is beguiled by the idea of an efficient handling and storage system, and the other by the idea of trying to convince his party colleagues that he is really a Liberal. While the former, apparently, is at least trying to do something constructive, albeit in a very cold-blooded manner, neither appears to be at all concerned with solving the basic problem, which is selling wheat.

Speaking of efficiency, Mr. Speaker, I would ask the Minister without Portfolio whether he considers it efficient to have hundreds of thousands, if not millions of bushels of grain lying exposed to the elements and deteriorating while millions of bushels of storage space is lying idle at the Lakehead.

The stubborn refusal of the government to recognize the just claims which the agricultural community has upon the rest of the country is baffling. It is well established today that the west feels it has been disinherited by the government. This feeling is even more pronounced among western farmers who have waited in vain for a few crumbs from the government's table which has been laden with good things for Quebec and Ontario. As an example, one might point to the recent $125 million write-off, in one day, in respect to the Expo Corporation which, by the way, equals three annual acreage payments made by the former Conservative administration to western farmers.

Canada's agricultural community has begun to realize it has been declared expendable by the government. Members of that community are becoming suspicious that they are being used cynically and callously by the government to carry the main burden of the fight against inflation. Many farmers now believe that the government is deliberately withholding action to stimulate the sale of grain, in order to cool-off the economy of the west and, eventually, the economy of the country as a whole. It is hard to find a more logical explanation. If there is one, I am sure the people of western Canada would like to be let in on the secret.

Much more could be said on this question, Mr. Speaker, but if the government's ears are wilfully closed to all advice and exhortation, it will profit us little to belabour the point. I would simply say in closing that the need for immediate and drastic action in regard to our whole process of handling and selling grain is clearly apparent. Suggestions have been made over and over again by many people knowledgeable in the field, and these are readily available. All that is required is government backing and leadership. The government has a clear responsibility to act, and a duty to act quickly and effectively to preserve an historic, valuable and necessary segment of Canada's social and economic life.

[Translation]

Mr. Adrien Lambert (Bellechasse): Mr. Speaker, I thank all hon. members who have kindly helped the member from Bellechasse get an apportunity to say at least a few words.

The matter we are now examining is so important, in my opinion, that it should be approached in an unbiased way. When we were dealing with the problems of Canadian farmers, whether in western or in eastern Canada, I always felt that they should be given serious consideration in order that we could recommend solutions to the government.

Last spring, the Committee on Agriculture travelled throughout Canada primarily for the purpose of examining the important problems of western farmers and in order to determine whether the representations of the members for those regions were really justified. I deeply regret that the report of the committee has not yet been put before the House for lack of some highly important briefs as yet not submitted, although the solutions they offer are likely to correct the situation to a certain extent.

I am not a feed grain producer, but I must say that in my constituency large quantities of western grain are used. Co-operative milling plants import more than two million bushels of feed grain a year.

Were the movement of grain from western to eastern Canada made by ship—in accordance with the proposals of certain studies which have been made—thousands of dollars could be saved.

Mr. Speaker, I notice that it is 9.45. I would not wish to delay the question unduly. Perhaps we will have another opportunity to express the views of Quebec farmers on the problem of western feed grain. I do hope I shall then be able to inform you of the suggestions made by eastern flour mills and the Federated Co-operative, and explain the advantages stemming from co-operation, because the consumption of feed grain is highest in the province of Quebec.

In fact, we are interesting customers for western farmers and they can be sure of our full co-operation.

Mr. Speaker: It being 9:45 p.m., it is my duty to interrupt the proceedings pursuant to section 9 of Standing Order 58 and put every question necessary to dispose of the business now before the House.

Mr. Speaker: I declare the motion lost.

At 10.19 p.m. the House adjourned, without question put, pursuant to standing order.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Wednesday, January 21, 1970

The House met at 2 p.m.

PRIVILEGE

MR. DINSDALE—LETTER RESPECTING NATIONAL PARKS TABLED BY MINISTER OF INDIAN AFFAIRS AND NORTHERN DEVELOPMENT

Hon. W. G. Dinsdale (Brandon-Souris): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a question of privilege. Yesterday afternoon the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development tabled a letter bearing my signature. I was out of the House attending a meeting with the chairman of the Canadian Transport Commission, the Hon. Jack Pickersgill, in the company of the Premier of Manitoba, the Manitoba Minister of Industry and Commerce and the mayor of Brandon.

An hon. Member: What a group!

Mr. Dinsdale: The meeting was convened to discuss ways and means for continuing the present class one air service into western Manitoba which has been threatened by Transair's application to suspend the service. Because of the implications of the proposed change in regional air policy for continuing economic progress in western Manitoba, I think you will agree that the meeting had top priority. This, then, is the first opportunity I have had to deal with the minister's action.

The issue raised in the House yesterday brings into focus the whole question of leaseholds in western national parks. It is also closely tied in to the feeling of isolation and alienation that is growing to an alarming degree in western and northwestern Canada, as has been pointed out recently in press articles. The government has demonstrated a congenital incapacity to deal with the serious special problems in these important areas of Canada.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I have to interrupt the hon. gentleman immediately to remind him that he has the floor now under very special rules and the requirement at this time is that he should indicate how his privileges as a member of this House have been violated by the tabling of the letter to which he alludes in the notice he has given me. If he will indicate in what way he thinks there has been a breach of privilege, then further action might be contemplated. Certainly this is not the time to discuss the general policy which is perhaps the background of the tabling of the letter yesterday by the minister.

Mr. Dinsdale: I accept your ruling, Mr. Speaker. I merely made that reference because the problem is peculiar to the west inasmuch as there are no national parks in Quebec and only minor ones in Ontario. In tabling the letter the minister implied that it endorsed a policy that the Liberal government has been pursuing in respect of western national parks since 1963.

My question of privilege revolves around two fundamental matters: first, the right of the minister to table a letter signed by another Privy Councillor without first seeking the customary permission from the author and, second, the ethics of using this kind of cheap politics to stir up further trouble in the west.

The letter, of course, in no way endorses what the minister is attempting to do in the western parks today. It merely outlines the orderly plan that was adopted in 1962 for the development of national parks in western Canada based on the principles of wise management and multi-use that emerged out of the Resources for Tomorrow Conference in 1961. It carefully preserves the right of perpetuity in the original leases.

Mr. Speaker, the letter was tabled. It is now the property of the House. It was tabled without my permission, and I do not think hon. members will have the opportunity of perusing it unless they make special efforts to do so.

The implication was left by the minister that it endorses his policy. I shall be as brief as I can on this fundamental point. It does not endorse that policy because the minister has arbitrarily cancelled perpetuity in original leases. The issue was taken to the Exchequer Court by the residents of the western parks and their position was upheld by that court. The minister has now referred the matter to the Supreme Court, hoping to get that decision reversed. It is because of these situations that there is a growing feeling of alienation.

Finally, Mr. Speaker, the same situation is involved in the question asked by the hon. member for Oxford with reference to the rental reassessments that are now taking place in the national parks. This, again, was a policy agreed to only after long consultation with the advisory councils and the people in the parks, and it has nothing to do with the current increases of up to 4,000 per cent.

On the strength of the points I have made, Mr. Speaker, I would suggest that I be allowed to table some documents, with the consent of the House, which put the record straight. I am sure all hon. members would want this to be done in light of the distortions arising from the discussion yesterday.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. As I indicated a moment ago, the hon. member got the floor on a question of privilege of which he had given the Chair due notice according to the Standing Orders. The observations of the hon. member were not followed by a motion so that in the ordinary way we cannot pursue the matter further. In any event, I have serious doubts whether there is an actual question of privilege.

The minister tabled the letter or document yesterday under the provisions of Standing Order 41(2) which gives a minister the right at any time to table a document or a paper. The hon. member suggested that the minister should perhaps have obtained his prior consent or permission. This is certainly not a requirement under the Standing Order and the Chair has to be guided by the Standing Orders.

I respectfully suggest to the hon. member that it would have been competent for any hon. member, under a motion for production of papers, to request the tabling of this and any other paper in the possession of the minister, under the terms of the Standing Orders. This is perhaps all obiter dicta because the hon. member has made his point. He has not followed his point by a formal motion which the Chair would have to put to the House. That would conclude my ruling on the question of privilege raised by the hon. member.

As a sequel to his observations he has suggested that additional papers might be tabled. The House is responsible for its own procedures. The House can accept the tabling of any documents whether it be by a minister or by a private member on one side or other of the House. If that were the wish of the House I am sure that so far as the Chair is concerned there is no objection to the tabling of the documents to which the hon. member for Brandon-Souris has alluded. But that would not be in accordance with any of the Standing Orders of the House. Standing Order 41 to which I have referred, under which the minister has tabled the letter in question, provides as follows:

> A Minister of the Crown, or a Parliamentary Secretary acting on behalf of a Minister, may, in his place in the House, state that he proposes to lay upon the Table of the House, any report or other paper dealing with a matter coming within the administrative responsibilities of the government—

That Standing Order does not appear to extend to a private member. If there is unanimous consent the papers can be received at the table. If there is not unanimous consent perhaps the hon. member would wish to seek another way of bringing them to the attention of the House. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): No.

An hon. Member: You wouldn't, Macdonald.

Mr. Dinsdale: For my own information, Mr. Speaker, do I take it from your decision that ministers have the right to table partial documentation that distorts the situation and misleads the House?

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Speaker: We should not get into debate on this matter. I do not make the rules. I took the trouble of reading all of the Standing Order and it gives the minister the right to table the document. If there is agreement by all hon. members that additional documents be tabled the Chair, as I said, has no objection, but my ruling is simply a reading of the Standing Order. I did not write it. The Standing Order is a rule of the House, and I can only bring it to the attention of hon. members. It is unfortunate if the Standing Order has the effect that the hon. member suggests and difficulties result, but I would not think I am in a position to rectify the situation as a procedural matter.

Mr. Nesbitt: I rise on a question of privilege, Your Honour. This matter arose as a result of a question I directed to the minister yesterday. The minister requested permission to table the document in question to clarify his answer and of course all members of the House, including myself, gave the minister permission. I should like to say, Mr. Speaker, that it is shocking that the President of the Privy Council has taken this attitude. It is very unfair.

REGIONAL DEVELOPMENT

NEWSTART PROGRAM—REQUEST FOR UNANIMOUS CONSENT TO MOVE MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Paul Yewchuk (Athabasca): Mr. Speaker, I ask the unanimous consent of the House to make the following motion under Standing Order 43:

That the abandonment by the government of the Canada Newstart Program be referred to the Standing Committee on Regional Development for consideration and report, and

That the Standing Committee on Regional Development be convened for purposes of organization.

By way of brief explanation, Mr. Speaker, I would point out that the Standing Committee has not yet been organized although there have been several requests from hon. members interested in the many questions of regional development which urgently need examination. One of the most urgent problems to be considered is the apparent abandonment of the hopeful Newstart program, which is causing great consternation amongst the native and other people in all areas where the program has been in operation and in particular in the Lac-la-Biche area in Alberta. The Lac-la-Biche centre has been occupied by Métis and Indian people since last Saturday and some immediate response from the government and Parliament is necessary.

Mr. Speaker: Hon. members have heard the motion of the hon. member for Athabasca. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. Speaker: As there is not unanimous consent the motion cannot be put.

QUESTIONS ON THE ORDER PAPER

(Questions answered orally are indicated by an asterisk.)

STUDIES OF PHARMACEUTICAL FIRMS' DRUG TESTS

Question No. 55—Mrs. MacInnis:

1. Is the Food and Drug Directorate of the Department of National Health and Welfare undertaking special studies to evaluate whether drug tests submitted to the Directorate by pharmaceutical firms are ineptly designed and deficient, as disclosed in some tests reported in the United States.

2. Is the government considering legislation which would take away the major responsibility for evaluating new drugs from the pharmaceutical manufacturers and give it to the federal government?

Hon. John C. Munro (Minister of National Health and Welfare): 1. The Food and Drug Regulations require pharmaceutical manufacturers to submit details of all animal and clinical studies to the Food and Drug Directorate of the Department of National Health and Welfare before a new drug is marketed. This research data is carefully assessed and evaluated by officers in the Directorate. If the safety and effectiveness of the drug has not been clearly demonstrated, either by reason of deficient or poorly designed studies, the Notice of Compliance is withheld until properly designed studies have been conducted. In addition, officers of the Directorate frequently discuss proposed plans for both animal and clinical studies with manufacturers and with individual investigators.

2. The majority of new drugs that reach the market are the result of the research and development activities of the pharmaceutical industry. Existing legislation under the Food and Drugs Act ensures that a proper evaluation of the safety and efficacy of all new drugs is made before they reach the Canadian market.

IMMIGRATION APPLICATION, DR. A. A. SOLOOJEE

Question No. 58—Mr. Nystrom:

Did a Dr. A. A. Soloojee, a citizen of South Africa apply for immigration to Canada and, if so, were any conditions laid down by the Department of Manpower and Immigration regarding Dr. Soloojee's application?

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Minister of Manpower and Immigration): Dr. Saloojee's application for admission to Canada as an immigrant was assessed and approved under the same standards used for all immigrants. No special conditions were laid down in his case. Because he was engaged to be married to a person whose application had been refused, both Dr. Saloojee and his fiancee were informed that should he proceed with his plans to migrate, this would result in separation from his fiancee. In addition, he was asked to sign a document which in effect indicated that he had been given this advice and understood its significance.

ADMISSION TO CANADA OF MISS EDNA WILCOX

Question No. 59—Mr. Nystrom:

Is Miss Edna Wilcox, of South Africa, being denied admission to Canada and if so, what is meant by the statements of officials of the Department that her admission would not be in the national interest?

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Minister of Manpower and Immigration): Yes, because she is prohibited for admission to Canada under subsection (1) of section 5 of the Immigration Act.

SUBSIDY TO DAY AND ROSS, TRUCKERS

Question No. 136—Mr. Skoberg:

1. What is the present subsidy being paid to the trucking firm Day and Ross, Hartland, N.B., under the Atlantic Region Freight Rate Assistance Act?

2. What are the specific reductions in both its class and commodity rates of the above trucking firm as mentioned in the Department of Transport's news release of October 3, 1969?

3. Have all other trucking firms operating between the Atlantic Region and Central Canada instigated similar rate reductions and, if so, what are the names of these trucking firms and for each, what have been the specific rate reductions?

4 Which trucking companies have not reduced their freight rates?

Mr. Gérard Loiselle (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Transport): The Department of Transport advise as follows: 1. To be answered by the Canadian Transport Commission.

2. The rate reductions are on file with the highway transport boards of Quebec and Ontario and can be obtained from that source.

3 and 4. To be answered by the Canadian Transport Commission.

[Mr. Nystrom.]

The Canadian Transport Commission advise as follows: 1. The present subsidy being paid is that provided for by sub section (2) of Section 3 of the Atlantic Region Freight Assistance Act. As of October 23rd, 1969, $56,125.43 had been authorized for payment to Day and Ross, Hartland, N.B.

2. To be answered by the Department of Transport.

3. No.

4. Information not available.

NEW JERSEY GUARANTEED ANNUAL INCOME PLAN

Question No. 160—Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre):

1. Has the Department of National Health and Welfare sent any officials or outside consultants to investigate the guaranteed annual income plan introduced in New Jersey in the United States?

2. If so, who are the officials, and what was the specific purpose of their investigation?

3. For what time period were these officials in New Jersey?

Hon. John C. Munro (Minister of National Health and Welfare): 1 and 2. The Department has obtained information about the guaranteed annual income plan introduced in New Jersey in the United States. Information about United States developments in social security and other anti-poverty measures is obtained by the Department of National Health and Welfare from government agencies in the United States directly and through the Canadian Embassy in Washington.

Discussions concerning social security and other anti-poverty measures which included the New Jersey pilot project, have taken place between departmental officials and U.S. officials in Washington.

These officials include the following: Dr. R. B. Splane and Mr. L. Shifrin, in December, 1968.

3. Discussions were with officials of the Office of Economic Opportunity and the Department of Health Education and Welfare in Washington. Officials were not in New Jersey.

SOUTH AFRICA—WITHDRAWAL FROM COMMONWEALTH

Question No. 296—Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre):

1. On what date did South Africa withdraw from the Commonwealth?

2. On what date did Canada cancel Commonwealth trade preferences with South Africa?

3. If preferences are still granted to South Africa, is it the government's intention to cancel them?

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): 1. May 31, 1961.

2. Canada continues to exchange preferential tariff treatment with the Republic of South Africa under the provisions of the Canada-South Africa Trade Agreement, 1932.

3. No.

*MOTOR VEHICLE STANDARDS COMPLIANCE TESTS

Question No. 428—Mr. Mather:

Will motor vehicle standards compliance tests be conducted by the federal motor vehicle safety authority and, if so, will the results of such tests be published?

[Translation]

Mr. Gérard Loiselle (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, Bill C-137 (Motor Vehicle Safety Act) envisages the use of a national safety mark for motor vehicles, and in connection with these marks there will be required a statement by the manufacturer indicating that such vehicles and their components comply with all applicable safety standards. The manufacturer will support his statement with tests which may be subject to scrutiny by federal inspectors. Consideration is presently being given to the need for additional independent tests by the federal government to verify compliance as certified. The benefit that might accrue to the Canadian public from the publication of test results is also being studied.

BREATH ANALYSIS OF DRIVERS

Question No. 493—Mr. Robinson:

Is the federal government giving consideration to a change in the present breath analysis legislation to reflect the widely held view that 0.10% blood alcohol concentration level is the point at which all human beings, regardless of their drinking habits, are considered impaired in respect to safe performance of the driving task?

Hon. John N. Turner (Minister of Justice): In so far as the Department of Justice is concerned: No. Our information indicates that there is more support for .08 including support from such sources as the Canadian Bar Association, the British Medical Association (the Canadian Medical Association recommended .05), the Standing Committee on Justice and Legal Affairs and by resolution of the Manitoba Legislature adopted on May 22, 1968. In fact, it was considerations related to this greater support that led the Government to change the figure from .10 in Bill C-195 to .08 in Bill C-150.

CONSTRUCTION OF SCHOOLS, PORTNEUF

Question No. 547—Mr. Godin:

1. Since 1966, has the federal government undertaken to contribute financially to the construction of schools in the Constituency of Portneuf and, if so, for what types of schools were such grants given?

2. How many such schools have been built to date and where are they situated?

3. How many projects have been approved to date or are being considered at the present time?

Mr. Yves Forest (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Privy Council): I am informed by the Departments of Manpower and Immigration and Indian Affairs and Northern Development as follows: 1. Yes. For schools which provide occupational training facilities.

2. Eight: Ancienne Lorette, Donnacona (2), Neufchatel, St. Emile, St. Raymond, Charlesbourg, Loretteville (1961 to 1969).

3. Ten. Including those in 2 above.

*MOTORCYCLE ACCIDENT DEATHS

Question No. 550—Mr. Southam:

1. What action if any, is the government taking in relation to the heavy increase in motorcycle deaths and related high injury rate on our Canadian highways?

2. What scientific research, if any, is presently underway in Canada with a view of curtailing this heavy death toll due to motorcycle accidents?

[Translation]

Mr. Gérard Loiselle (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, in view of the fact that the answer to question No. 550 is somewhat detailed and lengthy and that I would probably not be allowed to read it in full, I beg leave of the House for the reply to that question to be taken as read and reported in Hansard.

Mr. Speaker: Is that agreed?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Loiselle: 1. Of the 29 motor vehicle safety standards that are already available as a basis for issuing regulations after passage of the proposed Motor Vehicle Safety Act (Bill C-137) there are 9 that will include requirements applicable to motorcycles. An additional group of 5 safety standards are also under consideration.

Questions

The Road and Motor Vehicle Traffic Safety office has also undertaken to correlate research being done in Canada that will deal with motorcycles as well as other motor vehicles. The office is also participating in international efforts aimed at greater uniformity in traffic signs and rules of the road that should make driving safer for all types of vehicles.

In addition, the government is financially supporting the work of the Canada Safety Council and the Traffic Injury Research Foundation of Canada, organizations that promote safety research and driver training programs that contribute to the safety of motorcycle drivers. It also is anticipated that implementation of the recent amendments to the Criminal Code with respect to the blood alcohol content of persons in charge of motor vehicles will also tend to decrease accidents involving motorcycles and their drivers.

2. The Ontario Department of Transport has studies underway to determine the effectiveness of protective devices, in particular headgear, in reducing motorcycle fatalities and injuries.

CANADA MANPOWER CENTRE, VICTORIAVILLE

Question No. 552—Mr. Fortin:

How much has the Canadian Government spent annually on the premises reserved for the Canada Manpower Centre in Victoriaville since its opening (a) on administration (b) on rental (c) on maintenance (d) on repair (e) for other purposes?

Mr. Yves Forest (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Privy Council): I am informed by the Departments of Manpower and Immigration and Public Works as follows:

	1962-63	1963-64	1964-65	1965-66	1966-67	1967-68	1968-69
	$	$	$	$	$	$	$
(a) Administration:
Salaries						106,000.	109,000.
Operations						6,000.	6,400.

The Department of Manpower and Immigration records for Victoriaville cover the above mentioned periods only.

(b) Rental	5,225.	11,280.	11,208.	11,280.	11,280.	11,280.	11,280.

Note: Canada Manpower Centre opened in Victoriaville on September 14, 1962.

INDIAN AND MÉTIS UNEMPLOYMENT, ALBERTA

Question No. 569—Mr. Yewchuk:

1. How many Indian or Metis people are presently unemployed in the Province of Alberta?

2. How many of these would be suitable for work, if trained, in Alberta's coal mining industry?

3. How many miners are required for work at Grande Cache, Alberta at the present time and in the foreseeable future?

4. How many miners have been brought to work in Grande Cache (a) from other parts of Canada (b) from countries other than Canada (c) how many from each of the countries, other than Canada?

5. What financial assistance has been made available to each of these miners and their families (a) for moving them to Grande Cache from other areas of Canada (b) for moving them to Grande Cache from countries other than Canada?

[Mr. Loiselle.]

6. Does the Department of Manpower and Immigration have plans to train Canadian Indians or Metis for employment at Grande Cache and, if so, how many trainees will be trained and when will training begin?

Mr. Yves Forest (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Privy Council): I am informed by several Departments as follows:
1. and 2. Information not available.

3. The Company at Grande Cache has a staff of about 216 persons. The Company is not hiring additional workers at this time because of the need to consolidate their existing staff into an effective working group. Eventual requirements are not known precisely but the best estimate possible at this time is 400 to 600 employees when the full work force is developed.

4. (a) About 100 workers are from outside Alberta. (b) About 65 workers are immigrants. (c) Nearly all immigrant workers have come from the United Kingdom.

5. (a) Seven workers and their families were assisted under the Manpower Mobility Program to move from other parts of Canada to Grande Cache at an average cost of $671. The Company made private arrangements with other workers. (b) Immigrants proceeding to Grande Cache from other countries receive from this Department all ordinary assistance available to immigrants which could include Assisted Passage Loans if required.

6. There is a nucleus of 150 experienced miners at Grande Cache and in addition approximately 50 inexperienced workers have been recruited by the Company and are reported to be in training now. More unskilled workers will be phased in during the next two or three years through training on-the-job. Manpower officials will continue to press the Company to hire as many local workers as possible, including Indians and Metis. If Indian and Metis workers require any special training in order to qualify for the Company training on-the-job program then the Department of Manpower and Immigration is prepared to consider the provision of the necessary training under the Occupational Training for Adults Program.

OIL AND GAS EXPLORATION PERMITS, WEST COAST

Question No. 595—Mr. Harding:

1. How many oil and gas exploration permits were issued by the federal government for the west coast area of Canada for each of the years 1967/68, 1968/69 and 1969/70 to date, and (a) to whom were these permits issued and what was the acreage involved in each case (b) what was the total revenue from these leases for each of the above fiscal years (c) how many of the leases are still valid (d) did any of the leases cover any part of the Strait of Georgia and, if so, which leases included this area, when were they issued and what was the acreage involved?

2. Have any permits for seismic testing for oil in the Strait of Georgia, apart from the above, been let by the provincial government and, if so, was approval sought and obtained from the federal government prior to the issuing of the permits?

Mr. R. J. Orange (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): 1. (a) and (b) No oil and gas leases have been issued to date off the West Coast. Oil and gas exploratory permits issued off the West Coast for the periods designated are as follows:

Fiscal Year	Permits issued	Acres issued		Revenue (Permit fees)
1967-68	1	42,238	Ranger Oil (Canada) Ltd.	$ 250.00
	11	478,930	Offshore Oil & Gas Corpn.	2,750.00
	6	294,698	Chermarc Developments Ltd.	1,500.00
	18	815,866		$ 4,500.00
1968-69	8	247,828	Offshore Oil & Gas Corpn.	2,000.00
	5	192,806	Shell Canada Ltd.	1,250.00
	5	197,030	Ranger Oil (Canada) Ltd.	1,250.00
	5	327,312	Citizens Pipeline Ltd.	1,250.00
	23	964,976		$ 5,750.00
1969-70	Nil	Nil		Nil
Totals	41	1,780,842		$10,250.00

(c) All permits issued since 1967 are still in force.

(d) No permits or leases were issued in the Strait of Georgia during the above designated periods.

2. The Department of Energy, Mines and Resources has no record of approvals that may be issued by the British Columbia Government for marine seismic programs. The federal government has approved, prior to their commencement, four seismic programs in the Strait of Georgia since 1967, all of which were carried out with air-gun type seismic equipment which is harmless to fish. The duration of these programs ranged from two days to ten days.

Questions

ABM SAFEGUARD SYSTEM—BIDS BY CANADIAN FIRMS

Question No. 643—Mr. Broadbent:

1. Are Canadian firms presently, under the Canada-U.S. Defence Production Sharing Agreement, attempting to bid for components, materials, etc., to be used in the construction of the U.S. ABM Safeguard System and, if so, what firms and specific materials are involved?

2. Is the International Programs Branch of the Department of Industry, Trade and Commerce presently attempting to pursue contracts for Canadian firms regarding the construction of the American ABM Safeguard System?

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): 1. The Department is not aware of any Canadian firms bidding for contracts relating to the U.S. ABM Safeguard System although, under the Canada-U.S. Production Sharing Program Canadian companies would be eligible to compete.

2. The International Programs Branch of the Department of Industry, Trade and Commerce is not actively seeking contracts for Canadian firms regarding the construction of the U.S. ABM Safeguard System.

*EXPORTS TO U.S. BY ALCAN

Question No. 644—Mr. Broadbent:

For the years 1965, 1966, 1967, 1968 and 1969 to date, what products, and in what financial magnitude, have been exported to the United States from the Canadian firm ALCAN, under the Canada-U.S. Production Sharing Agreement?

Mr. Yves Forest (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, the information requested is not releasable since it is provided to the Canadian government for statistical purposes only and on the understanding that it is to be treated as commercially confidential affecting the competitive position of the company involved.

EMIGRATION OF McGILL GRADUATES TO UNITED STATES

Question No. 651—Mr. Rondeau:

1. During the past ten years, how many students from McGill University have emigrated to the United States upon completion of their studies?

2. What percentage is this of the total number of students graduating from that institution?

Mr. Yves Forest (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Privy Council): I and 2. Information not available.

REFORM OF EXCHEQUER COURT

Question No. 658—Mr. Fortin:

1. What stage has been reached in the studies relating to reform of the Exchequer Court?

[Mr. Orange.]

2. Is the government studying means of improving judicial control of government decisions so that citizens may be better protected?

Hon. John N. Turner (Minister of Justice): In so far as the Department of Justice is concerned: The government is studying ways and means of improving judicial control of administrative decisions and it is anticipated that legislation will be introduced during the present session dealing with the Exchequer Court and judicial control of administrative decisions.

PAYMENTS UNDER HOSPITAL INSURANCE AND DIAGNOSTIC SERVICES ACT

Question No. 673—Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre):

What was the total amount paid by the federal government under the Hospital Insurance and Diagnostic Services Act to each of the provinces for 1968?

Hon. John C. Munro (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Newfoundland, $18,042,-070; Prince Edward Island, $3,451,496; Nova Scotia, $26,338,314; New Brunswick, $21,056,-614; Quebec, NIL; Ontario, $264,800,153; Manitoba, $32,943,818; Saskatchewan, $33,800,232; Alberta, $55,281,166; British Columbia, $65,-772,481; Yukon, $459,634; Northwest Territories, $1,028,417; Total: $522,974,395.

The above payments are advance payments and amount to approximately 97 per cent of the estimated contributions by Canada. Final settlements for 1968 will be made when all the audited cost returns have been submitted by the provinces.

Payments are not made to the Province of Quebec under the Hospital Insurance and Diagnostic Services Act, but equivalent contributions are allowed to that province under an agreement made under the provisions of the Established Programs (Interim Arrangements) Act. Had advance payments been made to Quebec for 1968 under the Hospital Insurance and Diagnostic Services Act, these advances would have totalled $223,398,983 for the year.

DEMURRAGE CHARGES, SHIPS WAITING FOR GRAIN

Question No. 699—Mr. Korchinski:

What amount of demurrage charges were paid for ships waiting for grain in the last two years and at what ports were the delays?

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister without Portfolio): As indicated in the Annual Report of The Canadian Wheat Board for the 1967-68 crop year, $86,187 was paid in respect of demurrage charges in that crop year. Of this amount $80,601 was applicable to vessels loading at the port of Vancouver and the balance of $5,585 to vessels loading at the port of Montreal. Particulars of demurrage for the following crop year, that is 1968-69, will appear in the Annual Report of The Canadian Wheat Board for that crop year when it is tabled in Parliament.

AEROMAGNETIC PROSPECTING, ABITIBI

Question No. 704—Mr. Laprise:

Has the federal government ceased aeromagnetic prospecting in Abitibi and, if so, when and for what reason?

Mr. R. J. Orange (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): The aeromagnetic survey of Abitibi County was completed in 1962 mainly by the federal government. However the aeromagnetic survey for the whole of Abitibi electoral district is presently going on under a federal-provincial program. It is complete as far north as 52° north latitude and work is now being carried out between 52° and 55° north latitude.

*REGIONAL AND ECONOMIC EXPANSION—NUMBER OF PROJECTS APPROVED

Question No. 705—Mr. McKinley:

1. What projects have been approved in Canada under the Minister of Regional and Economic Expansion within the conditions contained in Bill C-202, passed in the First Session of the 28th Parliament?

2. How many projects have been approved under this Act in each province of Canada?

3. What amount of money has been approved under this Act in each province of Canada?

Mr. Martin P. O'Connell (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Regional Economic Expansion): Mr. Speaker, the answer to this question is that the numbers of offers made and accepted are available in the report tabled each month in parliament, and details are given in that report of all projects under way.

RURAL POST OFFICE CLOSURES, HALIFAX COUNTY

Question No. 745—Mr. Forrestall:

1. Since 1965, how many post offices servicing rural areas in Halifax County have been closed?

2. Where were such offices located and how many jobs were eliminated through the closing policy?

3. What alternate service is being provided with respect to money orders and other services?

Hon. Eric W. Kierans (Postmaster General and Minister of Communications): 1. This information is not available by county. However, two post offices have been closed since 1965 in Dartmouth-Halifax East Electoral District.

2. (a) Post Offices: Gaetz Brook and Oakfield. (b) Two positions were eliminated.

3. Alternate Service: Head of Chezzetcook R.R. No. 1 and Enfield R.R. No. 1.

WATER POLLUTION—CHARGES LAID UNDER NAVIGABLE WATERS PROTECTION ACT

Question No. 759—Mr. Harding:

1. For the years 1963, 1964, 1965, 1966, 1967, 1968 and 1969 to date, how many charges were laid against individuals or companies by persons in the Department of Energy, Mines and Resources responsible for the enforcement of the Navigable Waters Protection Act and Regulations regarding violations of the Act and Regulations dealing with pollution of waters?

2. How many of the above charges resulted in (a) convictions (b) dismissal of the charges (c) withdrawal of the charges?

Mr. R. J. Orange (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): 1. None. The Navigable Waters Protection Act and Regulations are administered by the Department of Transport and not by this department.

2. Not applicable.

WATER POLLUTION—CHARGES LAID UNDER FISHERIES ACT

Question No. 760—Mr. Harding:

1. For the years 1963, 1964, 1965, 1966, 1967, 1968 and 1969 to date, how many charges were laid against individuals or companies by persons in the department responsible for the enforcement of the Fisheries Act and Regulations regarding violations of the Act and Regulations dealing with pollution of waters?

2. How many of the above charges resulted in (a) convictions (b) dismissal of the charges (c) withdrawal of the charges?

Mr. E. F. Whelan (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Fisheries and Forestry): 1. and 2.

COST OF FREE DELIVERY OF FEDERAL MAIL

Question No. 801—Mr. Mather:

What, in dollars, is the annual cost to the Post Office Department of the free delivery of federal mail?

Hon. Eric W. Kierans (Postmaster General and Minister of Communications): 1968-69—$8,386,700.

QUESTION PASSED AS ORDER FOR RETURN

VALUE OF COMPUTER PURCHASES

Question No. 44—Mr. Benjamin:

What is the total value of Canadian government purchases of computers and auxiliary equipment, by manufacturer, that were purchased in the last fiscal year?

Return tabled.

MOTIONS FOR PAPERS

Mr. Yves Forest (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, notices of motions for the production of papers Nos. 211 and 315 are acceptable to the government.

[English]

Mr. Speaker: Is it the pleasure of the House that notices of motions No. 211 and 315 be deemed to have been adopted?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

TRAINING MATERIALS FOR COMMUNITY DEVELOPMENT

Motion No. 211—Mr. Skoberg:

That an Order of the House do issue for a copy of the consultant report by Strathmere Associates on the planning and production of training materials for community development for use by the Company of Young Canadians in the fiscal year 1966-67, as mentioned in answer to Question Number 1,323 of the past Session.

Motion agreed to.

CANADIAN ELECTRONIC MAIL IN-FARM MANAGEMENT INFORMATION SYSTEM

Motion No. 315—Mr. Skoberg:

That an Order of the House do issue for a copy of the consultant report on the Canadian Electronic Mail In-Farm Management Information System, undertaken for the Department of Agriculture by the firm Kates, Peat, Marwick and Company, as mentioned in answer to Question Number 2,452 of the past Session.

Motion agreed to.

[Mr. Whelan.]

[Translation]

Mr. Forest: Mr. Speaker, notices of motions Nos. 260 and 268 are acceptable to the government, subject to the usual reservations concerning confidential papers and to the authorization of the government authorities concerned.

[English]

Mr. Speaker: Subject to the conditions expressed by the Parliamentary Secretary, is it the pleasure of the House that Notices of Motions No. 260 and 268 be deemed to have been adopted?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

CBC TELEVISION ADVERTISING REGULATIONS

Motion No. 260—Mr. Mather:

That an Order of the House do issue for a copy of the CBC regulations regarding TV commercial advertising as mentioned in answer to Question Number 153 reported in Hansard on page 864, November 17, 1969.

Motion agreed to.

RESOURCES RESEARCH CENTRE STUDIES

Motion No. 268—Mr. Harding:

That an Order of the House do issue for copies of all research studies undertaken by the Resource Research Centre of the Department of Energy, Mines and Resources mentioned in answer to Question Number 86 as reported in Hansard on pages 1137-38, November 24, 1969.

Motion agreed to.

NATO COMMUNICATIONS RESEARCH PROGRAM

Motion No. 21—Mr. Lewis:

That an humble Address be presented to His Excellency praying that he will cause to be laid before this House a copy of the memorandum of agreement among eight participating NATO countries, including Canada, regarding the second phase of the NATO communications research program established in 1967.

[Translation]

Hon. Léo Cadieux (Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, the document referred to in this motion is a memorandum of understanding between the governments concerned, and is classified. Such confidential documents are considered to be privileged and I wonder if the hon. member from York South is prepared to withdraw this motion.

CANADA—U.S.S.R. WHEAT CONTRACT

Motion No. 125—Mr. Gleave:

That an humble Address be presented to His Excellency praying that he will cause to be laid before this House a copy of the wheat contract between the Government of Canada and the Government of the USSR signed on June 20, 1966, on the sale of 336 million bushels of Canadian wheat to the USSR.

Mr. Yves Forest (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Privy Council: Mr. Speaker, the Minister without Portfolio (Mr. Lang) wishes to inform the hon. member that it is not the practice of the government or the Canadian Wheat Board to make public wheat sales contracts as such information might be prejudicial to the board's marketing operations. In view of this, the minister would ask the member to withdraw his motion.

Mr. Gleave: Stand for debate.

Mr. Speaker: Transferred for debate.

METRIC MEASUREMENT

Motion No. 156—Mr. Peters:

That an Order of the House do issue for a copy of the interdepartmental committee report on the applicability of metric measurement in Canada as mentioned in answer to Question Number 2,706 as reported in Hansard on October 22, 1969, page 11,702.

Mr. Yves Forest (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce wishes to inform the hon. member that the report of the interdepartmental committee is a report to ministers which includes recommendations and is, in consequence, an internal memorandum and thereby privileged. The white paper on metric conversion, tabled last week, sets forth the conclusions of the government. In view of this, the minister would ask the member to withdraw his motion.

Mr. Peters: Because of the importance of this matter, Mr. Speaker, I do not think it should be privileged and I therefore ask Your Honour to put the question.

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): Transfer for debate.

Mr. Speaker: Transferred for debate.

SUMMER JOBS FOR STUDENTS

Motion No. 200—Mr. Broadbent:

That an Order of the House do issue for a copy of the plan of the Special Task Force to study the question of summer jobs for students as stated by the Minister of Manpower and Immigration in his address to the Canadian Vocational Association on May 23, 1969.

[Translation]

Mr. Rosaire Gendron (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Manpower and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, the documents requested in the present motion are working papers for internal use, for the officials of the department and, as such, traditionally privileged.

I therefore request the hon. member to kindly withdraw his motion.

[English]

Mr. Broadbent: Mr. Speaker, I think this document is precisely the kind of document that should be readily available to every Canadian; therefore I request that the question be put.

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): Transfer for debate.

Mr. Speaker: Transferred for debate.

FINANCIAL MANAGEMENT, AIR TRANSPORT COMMAND

Motion No. 209—Mr. Skoberg:

That an Order of the House do issue for a copy of the consultant report by Simpson, Riddell, Stead and Partners on the financial management in Air Transport Command undertaken in 1966 for the Department of National Defence, as mentioned in answer to Question Number 1,323 of the past Session.

Hon. Léo Cadieux (Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, the report referred to in this motion was classified by the consultants undertaking the study and was for internal use in my department. Under the circumstances I wonder if the hon. member for Moose Jaw is prepared to withdraw his motion?

Mr. Skoberg: I see no real national security involved and I call for a vote.

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): Transfer for debate.

Mr. Speaker: Transferred for debate.

RESEARCH AND DEVELOPMENT IN FURNITURE INDUSTRY

Motion No. 221—Mr. Skoberg:

That an Order of the House do issue for a copy of the consultant report by Woods, Gordon and Company on research and development in the Canadian furniture industry undertaken for the Department of Industry, Trade and Commerce in the fiscal year 1967-68, as mentioned in Question Number 1,323 of the past Session.

Mr. Yves Forest (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, this particular consultant report was already tabled in the House in response to a motion for production of papers in the last session, No. 119, which was dealt with in the House on July 2, 1969. The member may wish to consult sessional paper No. 289G. I would be pleased to send the member a copy of this study. In view of this, the member may wish to withdraw his motion.

Mr. Skoberg: Agreed, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Speaker: Motion dropped.

Order discharged and motion withdrawn.

INTERNATIONAL MARKET FOR SATELLITE COMMUNICATIONS SYSTEMS

Motion No. 247—Mr. Skoberg:

That an Order of the House do issue for a copy of the consultant report by Acres Intertel Limited on international market for satellite communications systems undertaken for the Department of Industry, Trade and Commerce in the fiscal year 1968-69, as mentioned in answer to Question Number 1,323 of the past Session.

Mr. Yves Forest (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, this particular consultant report was already tabled in the House in response to a motion for production of papers in the last session, No. 119, which was dealt with in the House on July 2, 1969. The member may wish to consult sessional paper No. 289G. I would be pleased to send the member a copy of this study. In view of this, the member may wish to withdraw his motion.

[Mr. Cadieux (Labelle).]

Mr. Skoberg: Agreed, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Speaker: Motion dropped.

Order discharged and motion withdrawn.

"PROJECT PHOENIX" CORRESPONDENCE

Motion No. 261—Mr. Nystrom:

That an humble Address be presented to His Excellency praying that he will cause to be laid before this House copies of all correspondence, agreements, etc., between the Government of Canada and the provincial governments regarding "Project Phoenix".

Hon. Léo Cadieux (Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, I had some correspondence with the hon. member for Yorkton-Melville regarding this motion and it is my understanding that he is prepared to withdraw it.

Mr. Nystrom: Agreed.

Mr. Speaker: Motion dropped.

Order discharged and motion withdrawn.

"PROJECT PHOENIX" PROGRAM

Motion No. 262—Mr. Nystrom:

That an Order of the House do issue for a copy of the Department of National Defence's Program "Project Phoenix"—a five year plan aimed at organizing the recovery of Canada after an all-out nuclear attack on North America.

Hon. Léo Cadieux (Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, I have had some correspondence with the hon. member for Yorkton-Melville regarding this motion and he has been provided with a copy of the Project Phoenix Report. Under the circumstances I wonder if he is prepared to withdraw this motion?

Mr. Nystrom: Agreed.

Mr. Speaker: Motion dropped.

Order discharged and motion withdrawn.

INTERDEPARTMENTAL COMMITTEE REPORT ON WATER

Motion No. 301—Mr. Harding:

That an Order of the House do issue for a copy of the interdepartmental committee report on water, referred to by the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources, as reported in Hansard, November 4, 1969, on page 468.

Mr. Yves Forest (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, I do not think any such report as requested by the hon. member is available.

The interdepartmental committee on water has not yet completed its study of this matter of water pollution through the input of phosphates. As the minister stated in the House of Commons on November 4, he is to receive the ICW recommendations as to appropriate federal government action in this regard and refer them to his colleagues for consideration.

The minister expects to be in a position to take this action in the latter part of January or in February following completion of the ICW study of and report on this very complex subject. I would therefore request withdrawal of this motion.

Mr. Harding: Agreed.

Mr. Speaker: Motion withdrawn.

Order discharged and motion withdrawn.

AGREEMENT BETWEEN WHEAT BOARD AND V/O EXPORTKHLEB

Motion No. 304—Mr. Burton:

That an Order of the House do issue for a copy of the agreement entered into in June 1966 between the Canadian Wheat Board and V/O Exportkhleb for the sale of Canadian wheat and flour to Russia and a copy of any agreement, letter of understanding or other documents pertaining to the extension of this agreement beyond its expiry date.

Mr. Yves Forest (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, the Minister without Portfolio (Mr. Lang) wishes to inform the hon. member that it is not the practice of the government to make public details of Canadian Wheat Board sales agreements as such information might be prejudicial to the board's marketing operations. In view of this, the minister would ask the hon. member to withdraw his motion.

Mr. Burton: I cannot agree to withdraw this motion, Mr. Speaker, and I would ask that the question be put to a vote.

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): Transfer for debate.

Mr. Speaker: The motion is transferred for debate.

CANADA-QUEBEC AGREEMENT ON LANGUAGE AND CITIZENSHIP COURSES

Motion No. 310—Mr. Orlikow:

That an humble Address be presented to His Excellency praying that he will cause to be laid before this House a copy of all documents covering the agreement between the Government of Canada and the Province of Quebec under which 50% of the cost of language and citizenship courses available to Quebec immigrants will be paid for by the federal government.

Hon. Robert Stanbury (Minister without Portfolio): There is an agreement between the government of Canada and the province of Quebec covering the sharing of costs of language and citizenship courses. If that is the document required by the hon. member, the motion is accepted subject to the consent of the province of Quebec.

Mr. Orlikow: That is agreeable, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Speaker: Subject to the reservation expressed by the minister, does the motion carry?

Some hon. Members: Carried.

Motion agreed to.

RECONNAISSANCE REPORT ON NORTHERN MILITARY EXERCISES

Motion No. 325—Mr. Thomson (Battleford-Kindersley):

That an Order of the House do issue for a copy of the reconnaissance report undertaken by General Gilles Turcot, Commander of the DND Mobile Command, regarding military exercises in the Canadian North.

Hon. Léo Cadieux (Minister of National Defence): As this report is an internal military document which was prepared by a group of officers for the Commander, Mobile Command, and Canadian Forces Headquarters, it is considered to be privileged. Under the circumstances I wonder whether the hon. member would be prepared to drop his motion?

Mr. Thomson (Battleford-Kindersley): Mr. Speaker, had the minister communicated with me as he did with the hon. member for Yorkton-Melville, I might have agreed. As it is, I should like the motion transferred for debate.

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): Transfer for debate.

Mr. Speaker: Transferred for debate.

Mr. Burton: Mr. Speaker, I wish to make an inquiry about motion No. 256 which has been on the Order Paper since November 20. I wonder when the government might be prepared to call this motion.

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): I shall inquire of the Minister of Regional Economic Expansion and try to reply to the question.

Inquiries of the Ministry

ORAL QUESTION PERIOD

THE CANADIAN ECONOMY

INFLATION—USE OF SANCTIONS IN DEPARTURES FROM PRICING CRITERIA

Hon. Robert L. Stanfield (Leader of the Opposition): I am happy to see the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs in the House today, Mr. Speaker, because I tried to get some information from the Minister of Finance yesterday and he did not seem to know too much about the subject. I should like to ask the minister this question. In the event of an agreement being reached at the forthcoming conference with regard to pricing criteria to be followed by Canadian firms during 1970, is it the intention of the government to use sanctions in cases where the Prices and Incomes Commission reports a departure from those criteria by a Canadian firm?

Hon. Ron Basford (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): As the Minister of Finance said yesterday, we are working in very close harmony with the Prices and Incomes Commission. I think the Minister of Finance answered that question yesterday.

Mr. Benson: You just did not understand the answer.

Mr. Stanfield: I understand a snow job when I see it.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Stanfield: Am I to understand from the answer of the minister that the Chairman of the Prices and Incomes Commission did not have the approval of the government when he said that in the case of departures from the criteria established, should an accord be reached, it was the intention of the commission to ask the government for sanctions?

Mr. Basford: I think the Leader of the Opposition is misrepresenting the statement made by the Chairman of the Prices and Incomes Commission. It is his hope, and it is our hope, that the program of restraint he is endeavouring to work out will be as effective as possible, and it is our intention as a government to make it as effective as possible. In this I hope we shall have the co-operation of the hon. gentleman.

Mr. Stanfield: Just one other question, Mr. Speaker. Would it be correct to assume that the program of the government as far as this announcement is concerned is still one of purely voluntary restraint and that there is no question of government sanctions being involved? Is that correct?

Mr. Basford: The Chairman announced yesterday that a meeting will be held to word out procedures by which a program of price restraint can prevail across the country.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Thomas M. Bell (Saint John-Lancaster): A supplementary question to the Minister of Finance in connection with this matter of restraint or lack of restraint. Bearing in mind the recently disclosed information that the Minister of Finance led all cabinet ministers in travel expenses at $10,000 a year, can the hon. gentleman say if that is where he gets his ideas about living on $30 a week?

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Hon. E. J. Benson (Minister of Finance): The Public Accounts Committee will have full opportunity to question the legitimacy of departmental expenditures, including travelling expenses. I believe the people of Canada wish to be informed concerning matters of interest to them. Indeed, it should be the duty of ministers to visit various parts of Canada to keep them so informed.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Speaker: Order. I have doubts about whether the original question was in order. The minister was allowed to reply to it in any event, but I do not think supplementary questions on that subject should be allowed.

INCREASE IN AUTOMOBILE INSURANCE RATES

Mr. T. C. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): May I direct a question to the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs regarding the announcement by the insurance companies that they intend to raise automobile insurance rates by approximately 13 per cent with effect from February 1 in most areas? Since the minister is the custodian of the rights of consumers I should like to ask him whether he has looked into the question of possible collusion in view of the fact that all the companies seem to be applying an increase of approximately the same amount at the same time. Has the minister looked into this matter and can he indicate what action he proposes to take?

Hon. Ron Basford (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): The situation relative to the law and to jurisdiction is an extremely complicated one, but since the announcements were made the matter has been receiving urgent examination.

Mr. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): Bearing in mind that the only areas in which these increases will not come into effect are those in which government car insurance is in operation, or where the possibility of introducing government car insurance is under study, has the minister given any thought to the possibility of promoting a government car insurance scheme across the country in order that automobile drivers may receive protection at cost?

Mr. Basford: I think the hon. member well knows that the provision of automobile insurance, the kind of insurance he is talking about, is a provincial matter.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

ASSUMPTION OF OBLIGATIONS OF CANAIRELIEF

Mr. Gérard Laprise (Abitibi): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Prime Minister.

It is known that the Canadian government has made some moneys available to Canairelief for assistance to Biafran refugees. In view of the recent decision to wind up shortly the agency's operations, does the government intend to give that relief organization the assurance that all their justified debts will be settled?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, this matter is not under consideration for the time being.

[English]

CONSUMER AFFAIRS

INABILITY OF ONTARIO FEDERATION OF AGRICULTURE TO PURCHASE ENGLISH TRACTORS

Mr. W. M. Howe (Wellington-Grey): I have a question for the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs, Mr. Speaker, and I hope he will co-operate with the farmers of Canada. In view of the apparent difference between the prices charged to English farmers and those charged to Canadian farmers by machinery companies, as indicated by the Barber commission report on the prices of farm tractors in Canada, has the minister been in touch with the restrictive practices tribunal in England to ascertain why the Ontario Federation of Agriculture cannot purchase English tractors directly from English dealers or directly from the manufacturers of tractors in England at the lower prices prevailing there? I ask this question in view of the evidence in the Barber commission report to the effect that machinery dealers in England have been threatened with loss of their franchises if they sell tractors to Canadian farmers.

Hon. Ron Basford (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): As the Minister of Agriculture made clear on Friday, discussions have already been held in Washington and London by officials of the government. Those officials included officials of my department together with anti-trust people in both London and Washington.

REQUESTED REFERENCE OF TRACTOR AND COMBINE PRICE INCREASES TO COMMISSION

Hon. W. G. Dinsdale (Brandon-Souris): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary for the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs. In view of the obvious evidence of price exploitation in respect of farm machinery would the minister refer the question of the price increases announced last fall to the Commission on Prices and Incomes for its careful review?

Hon. Ron Basford (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): Well, Mr. Speaker, I think it would be a more desirable course to follow the course the government is following. We are examining the Barber report recommendations. We have an interdepartmental committee of government examining all the recommendations and what possible course of action the government could follow.

CAPITAL PUNISHMENT

ACTION RESPECTING WILLIAM ROY ROSIK—GENERAL POLICY

Hon. Martial Asselin (Charlevoix): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the Minister of Justice.

In Windsor, a certain William Roy Rosik has been sentenced to death for murdering a policeman. I would like to know whether the minister intends to submit his case to the cabinet so as to have the death penalty commuted into life imprisonment, as the cabinet has always done in such cases for several years, or whether the minister will allow justice to take its course.

Inquiries of the Ministry

[English]

Mr. Speaker: I have some doubt concerning the hon. member's question. He is alluding to the royal prerogative and I have some doubt, because of precedents, whether the question can be asked in that form. The hon. member might like to give the Chair a moment to reflect on the matter.

[Translation]

Mr. Asselin: Mr. Speaker, as my previous question was unacceptable, I shall reword it.

Given the considerable increase in the crime rate, both in Quebec and throughout the rest of Canada, does the minister intend to introduce soon in the House a bill to put back in force the death penalty for anyone found guilty of qualified murder, a measure which I think is imperative at the present time?

[English]

Hon. John N. Turner (Minister of Justice): Mr. Speaker, we are of course reviewing the statistics constantly. I do not feel that at the moment those statistics lead to either one conclusion or the other.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

PROPOSED U.S. NUCLEAR TEST

Mr. Barry Mather (Surrey): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Secretary of State for External Affairs. Having in mind the announced intention of the United States to conduct an underground nuclear test in the north Pacific approximately six times more powerful than the one they conducted last year, can the minister say what Canada's position is in respect of this potentially dangerous situation?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Secretary of State for External Affairs): I answered a similar question some weeks ago. Briefly, the position is that the United States is now looking at the results of the test that was conducted. If there is to be another test it will not be before another couple of years. If at that time we feel it would be desirable to ask them to reconsider, we would do so.

COMPENSATION FOR FORMER CANADIAN MILITARY BASES IN FRANCE

Mr. Gilbert Rondeau (Shefford): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Prime Minister.

Could he tell the House whether he has received an answer from the French government about the Canadian government's claim for $10 million subsequent to the withdrawal of the NATO forces stationed in France?

[English]

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Yes, Mr. Speaker; Canada has put in a claim to France, as have other countries, which is separate of course from the claims of the NATO organization as a whole, since we had some investments in France which we lost as a result of moving to Germany.

[Translation]

Mr. Rondeau: Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question.

Does the government intend to forget about this debt or rather to remind the French government of it?

[English]

Mr. Sharp: I do not think it is necessary to remind the French government. It has notice of our claim and I am sure will deal with it fairly.

AIR TRANSPORT

TRENTON, N.S.—DISCONTINUANCE OF SERVICE BY EASTERN PROVINCIAL AIRWAYS

Mr. H. Russell MacEwan (Central Nova): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Transport. In view of the importance of air service to the area would the minister advise whether he has received a communication from the government of Nova Scotia asking that the appeal against Eastern Provincial Airways application to discontinue its service at Trenton, Nova Scotia, be heard by the Governor in Council.

Hon. Donald C. Jamieson (Minister of Transport): Yes, I have had such a notification from the government of Nova Scotia. I find that a discontinuance of this kind is not the kind of case which is subject to appeal either to the minister or to the Governor in Council. However, in an attempt to resolve the problem I have held meetings in adjacent Antigonish and the area to discuss the possibility of possible alternative sites. This is the course we are following now.

Mr. MacEwan: In looking into these possibilities would the minister consider continuing government assistance to the Trenton airport?

Mr. Jamieson: Yes, Mr. Speaker.

HARBOURS

COME-BY-CHANCE—PROVISION OF DOCKING FACILITIES FOR OIL REFINERY OPERATIONS

Mr. Walter C. Carter (St. John's West): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Public Works. Has the minister received representations from the Newfoundland government in respect of the provision of docking facilities at Come-By-Chance in order to facilitate the operations of an oil refinery in the community, and when may we expect a decision in this regard?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. This is a question which might well be placed on the order paper.

CANADIAN NATIONAL RAILWAYS

REDUCTION OF SECTION HANDS—EFFECT ON JOB SECURITY AND SAFETY

Hon. J. W. Monteith (Perth): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the Minister of Transport whether he would inquire of the management of Canadian National Railways whether full consideration has been given to the job security of sectionmen and section foremen, the safety of operating crews and the safety of the travelling public when reductions in the number of such section hands are ordered such as the latest which was to have taken effect on January 15?

Hon. Donald C. Jamieson (Minister of Transport): I shall be glad to make such an inquiry, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Monteith: I wonder if this subject could be dealt with when the CNR management is appearing before the House committee on transport?

Mr. Jamieson: I would suspect, Mr. Speaker, that various members will find ways and means to get such questions in.

Mr. John L. Skoberg (Moose Jaw): Mr. Speaker, in view of the death yesterday of one of the passengers because of the derailment of a CNR train, I wonder whether the Minister of Transport could now answer the question which he took as notice on January 12 in respect of adequate track inspection?

Mr. Jamieson: Mr. Speaker, on the matter of the unfortunate accident, the railway committee of the Canadian Transport Commission is now carrying out a thorough investigation. I have asked for a complete report as quickly as possible. This will only have a bearing on the broader question asked by the hon. member.

Mr. Skoberg: In order to ensure that trains may operate over the Weston subdivision safely, would the minister give immediate consideration to the installation of automatic signals in this area?

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member is making a representation which he can assume has been noted. The hon. member for Sarnia.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

REPARATION FOR DAMAGE CAUSED BY U.S. ICEBREAKER

Mr. Jack Cullen (Sarnia): Thank you, Mr. Speaker, et mes amis. I have a question for the Secretary of State for External Affairs or the Minister of Transport. I do not care which minister answers because they are both capable men. In view of the fact that an American icebreaker operating in the St. Clair River after the shipping season closed has caused widespread property damage to Canadian property owners, will the minister demand or negotiate reparation payments from the United States government and/or the owner of the icebreaker?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Secretary of State for External Affairs): This is the first time the matter has been brought to my attention. I thank the hon. member and will make inquiries immediately.

TAXATION

MODIFICATION OF WHITE PAPER

Hon. Robert L. Stanfield (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the Minister of Finance a question on which there would appear to be some misunderstanding. On Monday the Prime Minister indicated there had been no changes in government policy regarding tax reform. What is the correct situation? Does the white paper represent government policy on tax reform or has this policy been changed in some manner undisclosed but which may be revealed in a subsequent document?

Hon. E. J. Benson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, if my hon. friend would contact his members who were at the committee he would find out exactly what I said with regard to what he has referred to on Monday.

I said before the committee that certain problem areas had arisen regarding the proposals which were put forward by the government. My friend is confusing proposals with government policy. These are proposals put to the Canadian people for discussion. I said that my department would present a paper to the committee indicating what difficulties had been pointed out by people in respect of a particular area of tax reform.

Mr. Stanfield: Mr. Speaker, I am happy that the Prime Minister is not the only one who is confused; I am in the same position he is. May I ask the Minister of Finance whether, in view of his statement that the proposals put forward by the government are to be changed, he considers it proper that interested and affected Canadians should be asked to prepare and submit briefs in respect of government proposals which have been changed in an undisclosed manner?

Mr. Benson: Oh, Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

An hon. Member: That is a good question.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The suggestion has been made that this is a good question. I have to consider the question from a procedural standpoint. The Leader of the Opposition is asking whether the minister considers it proper that some action ought not to be taken. Certainly a question in those terms is not in order. The hon. member is asking the minister to express an opinion.

Mr. Stanfield: Perhaps I could put it in a different way that might be more acceptable to you and the Minister of Finance, whom I am always desirous of pleasing, Mr. Speaker. Will the minister do all he can to assure that those Canadians who are interested in submitting their views on these proposals will have a full opportunity to consider their positions after the supplementary changes are made? Will the minister do all he can to assure that adequate procedures are followed by the committee and himself so there will be plenty of time for this?

Mr. Benson: Mr. Speaker, the proposals for tax reform, one can assume, would not represent the exact form of the legislation or one would not put them forward as proposals. We are looking for people's opinions in this regard. The white paper is now in the hands of the committee and it is my intention and that of the officials of my department to supply the committee with information that comes to us from various sources in order that the committee may have that along with the information submitted to it so that it may come up with recommendations in respect of the proposals that have been placed before it.

Mr. Stanfield: Mr. Speaker, I am sorry to be persistent about this matter but it is giving a great many Canadians much concern. Will the minister use his good offices to ensure not only that he and his officials supply all the information necessary to the committee but also that Canadian citizens who are interested in this matter will be given a full opportunity to make their submissions after having full knowledge of what the government's proposals are?

Mr. Benson: Mr. Speaker, I trust that interested Canadians will follow the proceedings of the committee and make their submissions in light of what takes place there. I am sure they will do this after carefully reading the white paper, something which I sometimes wonder whether the Leader of the Opposition has done.

Mr. Stanfield: You don't understand things too well.

THE CANADIAN ECONOMY

INFLATION—INCREASE IN BANK DIRECTORS' FEES

Mr. David Orlikow (Winnipeg North): Mr. Speaker, in view of the government's desire for restraints in order to deal with inflation I should like to ask whether the Minister of Finance will consider discussing with officials of the Toronto-Dominion Bank their recent decision to increase fees paid to directors of the bank from $6,000 per annum to $8,100, since this 33 per cent increase in one jump can hardly be considered moderate or in keeping with the government's austerity program?

Hon. E. J. Benson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I am very pleased to hear that my hon. friend is also supporting moderation in wage demands.

CONSUMER AFFAIRS

ALLEGED MISLEADING ADVERTISING BY IMPERIAL TOBACCO COMPANY

Mrs. Grace MacInnis (Vancouver-Kingsway): Mr. Speaker, like other hon. members I want to welcome back the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs with a question.

In view of the fact his department has asked the Department of Justice for an opinion on alleged fraudulent advertising of Casino cigarettes by the Imperial Tobacco Company, can the minister say whether this opinion has yet been received by his department and, if so, has a decision been made to lay charges?

Hon. Ron Basford (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I understand that the hon. member has a letter from the department regarding the matter referred to in the question. I do not think I can go beyond what is said in the letter she has received.

Mrs. MacInnis: No, Mr. Speaker, the letter did not cover the point at all. If I may say so, the letter merely covered the fact that an opinion had been sought from the Department of Justice. I am asking whether the opinion has been received from the department and, if so, has a decision been made to lay charges?

Mr. Basford: I am not able to add to the letter the hon. member has, Mr. Speaker.

[Later:]

Mr. David Lewis (York South): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary to the question asked by the hon. member for Vancouver-Kingsway. Will the Minister of Justice inform the House whether his department is or has looked into the alleged fraudulent advertising in connection with Casino cigarettes, whether his law officers have arrived at any conclusion about the matter and, if so, whether any action is contemplated?

Hon. John N. Turner (Minister of Justice): Mr. Speaker, I think the hon. member is aware of the practice of the office of the Attorney General not to reveal whether it is conducting an investigation of any person or company. If charges are laid, charges are laid; if charges are not laid, the matter rests there. But in order to protect the reputation of private individuals and corporations it has been the tradition, which I think is quite proper, for the Attorney General not to describe in particular terms the existence of an investigation.

Mr. Lewis: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker. I am sorry but it has already been made public by the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs or one of his officials that the Department of Justice has been asked to look into the matter. In view of that, I rephrase my question and ask the minister whether officers of his department are in fact investigating and looking into the allegations made, whether any conclusions have been reached and whether any report has been made to him and/or to the Department of Consumer Affairs?

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): I am not going to expand on my answer, Mr. Speaker. The letter to which the hon. gentleman refers will have to speak for itself.

Mr. Don Mazankowski (Vegreville): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a supplementary question to the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs. Will he be in the House tomorrow night at ten o'clock so that we may debate this matter?

Mr. Basford: If the matter is on the agenda, yes.

Mr. Speaker: Perhaps that question might be considered at ten o'clock.

CANADIAN BROADCASTING CORPORATION

REPRESENTATION AT QUEBEC LIBERAL PARTY CONVENTION

Mr. Roland Godin (Portneuf): Mr. Speaker, I should like to put a question to the Secretary of State.

Can he tell us whether it is true that the CBC sent 195 employees to the Quebec Liberal party convention last weekend?

Hon. Gérard Pelletier (Secretary of State): Mr. Speaker, I am not in a position to say whether it is true that the CBC sent 195 employees to the convention. I can however, forward the question to the Corporation itself which will send the hon. member its answer.

NATIONAL PARKS

BANFF AND JASPER—NEGOTIATIONS FOLLOWING RESIDENTS' REQUEST TO COME UNDER PROVINCIAL JURISDICTION

Mr. Eldon M. Woolliams (Calgary North): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development arising out of his answer yesterday in my absence. It has reference to the fact that the citizens of Banff and Jasper, through a plebiscite have asked that they be placed under provincial jurisdiction. Is the minister now in a position to advise that he will negotiate with the premier of Alberta in this regard?

Inquiries of the Ministry

Hon. Jean Chrétien (Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): No, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Woolliams: Is it the minister's intention to contact the premier with the idea of negotiating in regard to the request of these citizens that they be placed under provincial jurisdiction?

[Translation]

Hon. Jean Chrétien (Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): Mr. Speaker, this is an hypothetical question which is irrelevant at the present time.

FISHERIES AND FORESTRY

ACTION ON RECOMMENDATIONS IN TWELFTH REPORT OF STANDING COMMITTEE

Mr. Lloyd R. Crouse (South Shore): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the Minister of Justice to indicate whether any action has been taken by his department following examination of the evidence by the law officers of the Crown, in accordance with the recommendations contained in the twelfth report of the Standing Committee on Fisheries and Forestry?

Hon. John N. Turner (Minister of Justice): Mr. Speaker, when I received the recommendation of the committee, as I said in an earlier answer, I asked the officers of the department and the Royal Canadian Mounted Police to investigate the facts or allegations contained in the report. I understand they have not completed their investigation, but when they have I will be glad to report to the hon. member.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

ASSISTANCE TO CANADIAN CITIZENS IN UNITED STATES

Mr. R. Gordon L. Fairweather (Fundy-Royal): Mr. Speaker, last Thursday I asked the Secretary of State for External Affairs about instructions under which officers of the Canadian consular service were alleged to have refused to assist Canadian citizens who happened to be in the United States and in trouble with United States draft laws.

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, Canadian consular officials in the United States regularly provide Canadian citizens who approach them on such matters with advice as to the course they may follow in dealing with problems which may arise in connection with liability for military service. The report to which he refers, and which I have already had drawn to my attention, is quite false.

AIR TRANSPORT

ACTION TO END POLLUTION BY JET PLANES

Mr. G. W. Aiken (Parry Sound-Muskoka): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the Minister of Transport, similar to one asked in his absence by the hon. member for Grey-Simcoe. Is the government preparing regulations to require jet aircraft using Canadian airports to convert to clean burning engines, in accordance with instructions being issued in other countries?

Hon. Donald C. Jamieson (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I was in Washington yesterday for conversations with Secretary Volpe on this matter. We have determined what it is that the American authorities are doing because there is a necessity for consistency on both sides of the border. We will be moving to impose the same kind of regulations, although I may say in the first instance I do not know if imposition and voluntary restraint are exactly compatible, but we will be talking to the airlines about what they are doing in the United States. This does not relate to fuel but to adapters which are placed on jet engines and which accomplish the same end results.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

NIGERIA—USE OF CANADIAN DOCTORS AND NURSES

Mr. Robert McCleave (Halifax-East Hants): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the Secretary of State for External Affairs. Would the hon. gentleman say whether the government has had an opportunity to consider the suggestion I made last week as to whether the Nigerian government needs and would welcome volunteer Canadian doctors and nurses?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Yes, Mr. Speaker, I believe that this is one of the needs in Nigeria. The Canadian Red Cross will be reporting to us on this question, when General Wrinch returns, but it is also my understanding that there is an opportunity for volunteers to get permission to go into Nigeria. Many of them are there now and I imagine they would be used in the present emergency.

SPORTS

PAN-AMERICAN GAMES—INQUIRY AS TO FINANCIAL ASSISTANCE TO WINNIPEG

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the Minister of Finance. On December 16, 1969, when I asked him about a certain letter regarding Winnipeg's request for assistance in connection with the deficit in respect of the Pan-American Games he told me he would try to get the letter to me that afternoon or the next day. When it did not arrive I thought he must have put it in the mail—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): —but he told me two or three days later that he was redrafting the letter—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I have to interrupt the hon. member because the hon. member for Gander-Twillingate wishes to raise a point of order.

Mr. Lundrigan: Mr. Speaker, to facilitate the question period can we have the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre phrase his questions like other members of the House, succinctly and clearly?

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): If the hon. member would like me to start over again, I shall be glad to do so.

Mr. Trudeau: Learn the rules.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Since the Minister of Finance told me he was redrafting this letter, I wonder if he is now in a position to send it to me or tell me in the House what is going to be in it?

Hon. E. J. Benson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I am still not happy with the answer I have drafted at the moment and the matter is still under consideration. As I have explained to the hon. member, it is a long outstanding matter. I hope he will have patience and give me a little time to have it settled before I send him a letter I would not like to send him.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): May we expect an answer this year?

Mr. Benson: Well, Mr. Speaker, I have hopes—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

NATIONAL DEFENCE

PURCHASE OF SUPER-TANKS

Mr. Henry Latulippe (Compton): Mr. Speaker, I wish to put a question to the Minister of National Defence.

His department announced yesterday that it had authorized the mass production of MBT-70 super tanks, each of which will cost about $600,000. Would the minister tell the House how Canada will use those tanks?

Mr. Speaker: Order. The question could be put on the order paper.

HIGHWAY SAFETY

EFFECTIVENESS OF HEADRESTS IN AUTOMOBILES

Mr. Don Mazankowski (Vegreville): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the Minister of Transport. In light of the recent announcement by the Winnipeg Chief of Police regarding the removal of headrests from all city police vehicles because of visibility obstruction and inconvenience, can the minister indicate to the House whether his department is reassessing the effectiveness of this safety device for the average Canadian motorist?

Mr. Speaker: I have some doubts whether the question can be asked at this time, but perhaps the minister might be allowed to answer.

Hon. Donald C. Jamieson (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, we are constantly reassessing the various safety devices but we are rather limited in what we can do until the legislation now before the House is in fact law, which I hope will be in a matter of a few weeks.

REGIONAL ECONOMIC EXPANSION

NEWFOUNDLAND—SIGNING OF AGREEMENT ON FIRST PHASE OF DEVELOPMENT PLAN

Mr. Jack Marshall (Humber-St. George's-St. Barbe): Mr. Speaker, in the absence of the Minister of Regional Economic Expansion I should like to direct my question to his Parliamentary Secretary. In view of the serious economic difficulties being experienced in the province of Newfoundland would the minister confirm that the agreement on the first phase of a five-year regional development plan for that province will be signed in April, and would he table its contents so that Newfoundlanders can be made aware of the benefits to be derived under such plan?

Mr. Martin P. O'Connell (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Regional Economic Expansion): Mr. Speaker, I will draw that question to the minister's attention.

HEALTH AND WELFARE

HAZARD TO CHILDREN FROM TOYS CONTAMINATED BY DDT

Mr. James A. McGrath (St. John's East): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs. Has the minister examined the question of plastic toys coming into Canada from abroad contaminated by dangerous proportions of DDT, and does he not consider this to be a hazard to the health of Canadian children?

Hon. Ron Basford (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): Mr. Speaker, my officials have been in touch with Dr. Mastermattio, Director of the Environmental Health Services Branch of the government of Ontario, and we have arranged for joint testing of a large number and variety of plastic toys to determine if there is any great degree of hazard.

FISHERIES

EXTENT OF JURISDICTION OVER RESOURCES

Mr. Thomas S. Barnett (Comox-Alberni): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the Secretary of State for External Affairs. It arises from the statement made by the Minister of Fisheries in the House before Christmas to the effect that Canada should assume management and jurisdiction of its fishing resources as far out as the continental shelf. I wish to ask the Secretary of State for External Affairs if the government supports Bill C-91, to amend the Territorial Sea and Fishing Zones Act, or whether it has some other methods in mind to achieve the ends announced by the Minister of Fisheries?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I would not think the question as asked is in order.

NATURAL RESOURCES

DEVELOPMENT OF CONTINENTAL SHELF

Mr. Randolph Harding (Kootenay West): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Prime Minister. Has agreement been reached between the federal government and the provinces on the resource development of our continental shelf? I have another short question, Mr. Speaker. Which level of government is currently responsible for the drafting and the enforcement of pollution regulations in these areas?

Mr. Speaker: I would think that the second question might be placed on the Order Paper. If the Prime Minister wishes to respond to the first question I see no difficulty.

COMBINES

INVESTIGATION OF QUEBEC AND NEW BRUNSWICK NEWS MEDIA MONOPOLY

Mr. Bernard Dumont (Frontenac): I direct my question to the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs.

Does he intend to hold an inquiry in Quebec and New Brunswick in order to ascertain whether the ownership concentration of news media might deprive Canadians of the objective news reports they are entitled to?

[English]

Hon. Ron Basford (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): Mr. Speaker, as the hon. member may know, there is an inquiry going on at the present time in the province of New Brunswick which became public because those being inquired into made it public. The hon. member will also know that it is not usual policy to reveal those instances in which there is an investigation under way.

CANADIAN BROADCASTING CORPORATION

OBJECTIVE OF NEWSCASTS

Mr. W. B. Nesbitt (Oxford): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Secretary of State who reports to the House on behalf of the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation. Would he make inquiry of the President of the CBC in order to find out whether or not CBC newscasts are designed for Canadians or for citizens of the United States? I ask the question, Mr. Speaker, in view of last evening's news broadcast when almost one-third of the time was spent on communist propaganda from North Viet Nam, obviously directed toward the citizens of the United States.

Mr. Speaker: The question as asked is argumentative.

HEALTH AND WELFARE

APPOINTMENT OF DEPUTY MINISTER

Mr. P. B. Rynard (Simcoe North): I should like to address a question to the right hon. Prime Minister, Mr. Speaker. In view of the deep concern felt in many quarters that the Department of National Health and Welfare is operating without the services of a deputy minister since the resignation of Dr. Crawford last August, and in view of the many urgent problems in this field, would the Prime Minister say whether there has been any recommendation made to him by the minister to fill this post?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I am glad the hon. member recognizes that since the days of Sir Charles Tupper the nomination of deputy ministers has been the prerogative of the Prime Minister. Everyone does not seem to know this. I have been discussing with the minister this particular appointment and possible appointees, and I think we will shortly be in a position to state the name of the person who will occupy the post.

HARBOURS

COME-BY-CHANCE—PROVISION OF DOCKING FACILITIES FOR OIL REFINERY OPERATIONS

Mr. Walter C. Carter (St. John's West): Mr. Speaker, earlier in the question period I asked a question of the Minister of Public Works concerning the provision of docking facilities at Come-By-Chance. In Your Honour's wisdom the question was not allowed but I wonder, in view of the fact that statements have been made by the Premier of Newfoundland to the effect that these facilities are essential and that the establishment of the plant hinges on them, whether Your Honour would allow the minister to answer the question?

Mr. Speaker: I am not sure whether we can accept the hon. member's suggestion that the Premier of Newfoundland has procedural authority in this House, but perhaps the minister might want to reply to the question the hon. member asked earlier.

Hon. Arthur Laing (Minister of Public Works): Mr. Speaker, we have had less representations seeking federal government investment in that area from the government of Newfoundland than from the private investors who plan to make the investment there. The representations have been supported by the government of Newfoundland.

Mr. Carter: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. In view of the urgency of this matter, can the minister say if early consideration will be given to the application by the private company concerned or the Newfoundland government for the provision of these facilities?

Mr. Laing: Mr. Speaker, consideration has been given to the representations for some time and we have requested a continuing amount of information which will be of a nature that could justify and indeed command the federal government to participate. So far that has not been forthcoming.

REGIONAL ECONOMIC EXPANSION

LAC-LA-BICHE NEWSTART PROGRAM—REQUEST FOR FINANCIAL ASSISTANCE

Mr. John Burton (Regina East): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Regional Economic Expansion but in his absence I shall direct it to the right hon. Prime Minister. Is the government reconsidering its decision not to provide the funds necessary for the continuation of the Newstart program at Lac-la-Biche, Alberta?

Mr. Martin P. O'Connell (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Regional Economic Expansion): Perhaps I should answer that question, Mr. Speaker. This situation is being given very close examination by the department in order to seek a solution. I wish to give the hon. member the firm statement that the budget for this program has not been cut.

Mr. Burton: Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question for the President of the Privy Council. Will the Newstart program and the regional development program be referred to the Standing Committee on Regional Development to examine their effectiveness in dealing with problems of regional disparities and poverty?

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, I think the time to discuss this would be when the estimates of this department are before the committee, which should be in several weeks' time.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

WATER RESOURCES

PROVISION FOR MANAGEMENT INCLUDING RESEARCH AND PLANNING AND IMPLEMENTATION OF PROGRAMS

The House resumed from Monday, January 19, consideration of the motion of Mr. Greene that Bill C-144, to provide for the management of the water resources of Canada including research and the planning and implementation of programs relating to the conservation development and utilization of water resources, be read the second time and referred to the Standing Committee on National Resources and Public Works.

Mr. Robert Simpson (Churchill): Mr. Speaker, in taking part in this debate today, I should like to commence my remarks by stating how extremely gratifying it is to many of us as elected representatives to observe the very great interest Canadians are taking in the subject of pollution. More and more people are becoming deeply interested in the implementation of methods to control or eliminate, to the greatest possible extent, the pollution of our environment. Until about ten years ago, water pollution did not seem to attract much attention. When I first came to this House some years ago many statements were made by my colleagues and myself to the effect that water would probably become one of Canada's greatest natural resources, but at that time there was not the interest in the subject that there is today.

Mind you, some Canadians do not seem to realize that this House is debating the matter. I have contacted many of my constituents and some have stated how pleased they are to see the government taking some action, whilst others do not seem to know that the debate is taking place. However, even those who mentioned their interest in the government's action did not seem to have had an opportunity of perusing Bill C-144. If they had read it I am sure they would have realized, as we do, that this bill is an inadequate measure to control pollution. As I mentioned before, the Canadian people have been demanding an end to the continual corruption of the environment. We in the Progressive Conservative Party have continually recommended action against pollution and the government has responded with the Canada water act. This, I feel, is a pitifully weak bill, one which betrays the hopes and expectations of concerned Canadians. It simply does not provide any basis for effective action.

Members of our party are concerned and disturbed at the absence of comment in depth outside Parliament. Despite the profuse writings on the dangers of pollution, the dire warnings on the future of mankind and the constant call for action, there seems to have been very little study of the real content of the bill. The advance publicity last summer, and the flowery words of the minister as to his hopes and aspirations when introducing the bill, seem to have had the desired effect of lulling the country into a feeling of satisfaction. It is easy enough to understand the silence of industrial concerns and interests against whom the real control program would be directed, because they can see immediately the inadequacies of it and find no danger to themselves in it. The bill made its appearance well before Christmas and debate began on it almost immediately but many concerned Canadian writers have not had the opportunity to fully examine it.

We of the Progressive Conservative Party, the official opposition, are appealing for public support in our fight against a largely useless piece of legislation. We ask all those people concerned about pollution control to study this bill and to give opinions on it, because only an outraged public can force the government to strengthen its proposals and put teeth into this bill; and teeth are very, very necessary. I think that this points out very clearly one of the great values of Parliament. The government seems to play down the role of government and feels that it does not have a great role to play in our democratic society. However, I think this is one matter which is of great concern to all Canadians, and once again it demonstrates the value of Parliament and the value of debate.

As I said before, and I wish to underline this, I think it is very, very important for all Canadians interested in controlling and eliminating pollution as far as possible to read Bill C-144 and find out for themselves just what we of the opposition are trying to bring to the government's attention. We want to emphasize the idea that it is necessary to have amendments to this bill.

The success of the Canada water act is based on the fond hope that the federal government can persuade the provinces and municipalities to set up dozens of new water management boards without federal money, without national standards and without proper research. Then, they will have to persuade the boards to collect their own money, organize their own projects and do battle with water pollution, with nothing from the federal government but advice and the inevitable necessity of having everything approved at provincial and federal levels. The result will be a new form of pollution, namely, large bundles of red tape.

Our party has clearly set out its alternative proposals on many occasions, dating back in their present form for two years. We would have the federal parliament pass a law applying to federal jurisdiction and proceed alone, where possible, or by agreement when working in a divided jurisdiction. Yet, we would go along with the government's plan if it had any real strength or hope of success. In its present form we see neither. It must be substantially re-written.

Recently we experienced a situation with respect to the Saskatchewan River in which serious contamination occurred as a result of mercury pollution. This has resulted in almost all of the species of fish in the lakes which are formed by this river downstream from the source of pollution being declared unfit for human consumption. I might add that this has taken place in a lucrative fishing area. I hope it will once again become lucrative for fishermen.

A considerable number of people residing downstream from the source of this contamination derive a good portion of their livelihood from commercial fishing, including a number of our Indian citizens, and their catches during the last month of yellows or pickerel, jacks and sauger have been ordered destroyed. The white fish on the other hand have been given a clean bill of health, apparently because they are not predator fish. I hasten to add at this time that the recently established freshwater fish marketing board has continued to purchase the contaminated fish from the commercial fishermen; but there will be an additional cost for destroying them.

In answer to questions in the House last week, the Minister of Fisheries and Forestry (Mr. Davis) said that the fisheries task force on the prairies had visited the plant of interprovincial co-operative downstream from Saskatoon and were of the opinion that this Chlor-Alkali plant is the principal if not the only source of mercury pollution on the prairies.

Answering a question of mine in the House yesterday, the Minister of Fisheries and Forestry said, as reported on page 2583 of Hansard:

> The necessary steps have been taken to make sure the effluent stream containing mercury is kept within the plant itself. Mercury is meanwhile being removed by treating the effluent.

Naturally, we were very, very pleased to hear this statement and I am sure it will be well received by the fishermen concerned on the lakes downstream from the polluted area. But we are left with this further thought. For instance, it would be very interesting to know whether this was a voluntary move on the part of the industry concerned or whether the government had authority to order that this be done. I hope the minister will make a statement in the House and tell us just how this solution was arrived at in this particular instance.

Answering a supplementary question, the Minister of Fisheries and Forestry said that it will take a spring freshet to flush out the river completely. That also brings up interesting problems because the river, as the minister no doubt knows, empties into Lake Winnipeg. I am wondering, as are many other people, just what will happen to this mercury pollution when it is flushed out of the river and into Lake Winnipeg. Of course, it will go into the Nelson River and, eventually, into Hudson Bay. I can recall years ago, when asking questions in the House about the quality of water in northern Manitoba rivers such as the Nelson, being assured by the minister of the day that inspections were taking place from time to time and that there was no occasion for any of us to be concerned about the purity of the water in the Nelson river. Well, this is not the first time that we have seen pollution coming from the Saskatchewan River which empties into Lake Winnipeg. The water then flows from Lake Winnipeg out through the Nelson River.

Undoubtedly pollution is a very, very important subject for our consideration and I, personally, think it is one of the most important matters confronting Canada today. I could mention many other important subjects, such as inflation, national unity, unrest among our youth, the population explosion, poverty and aggression by force. All these are very, very pressing problems. However, I think that the question of pollution and pollution control ought to have a priority at least equal to that of many of the most important problems confronting us and should have greater priority than some.

I am quite sure that a reasonable person will realize that this bill dealing with pollution ought to be in the same category as any bill dealing with inflation, national unity, unrest among our youth and so on. But he could well expect to be charged with being an alarmist. Without doubt, at least one minister on the government's treasury benches feels that the people who talk this way are alarmists. I am sorry that the Minister of Fisheries and Forestry is not here today, because I should like to read to him some statements he has made on this very matter. Of course, in doing so I shall be trying to demonstrate that the government is not too concerned about the matter, as evidenced by the contents of Bill C-144.

Speaking to the Vancouver Chamber of Commerce last Thursday, the minister said that he does not subscribe to alarmist thought about pollution. I quote from what the minister said:

• (3:30 p.m.)

"I don't believe all that I read about dying lakes and sickening seas. Most of it is poppycock—written by novices who are reaching for headlines—"

I have already mentioned that I feel pollution deserves top priority, along with the other subjects I mentioned of inflation, national unity, unrest among our youth, population explosion and aggression by forces. The Minister of Fisheries and Forestry said people who talk like this are alarmists, that most of it is poppycock and they are novices reaching for headlines.

I have a document which was introduced in this House earlier this session. I quote from it as follows:

The evidence of past failure to rehabilitate our water resources is there for all to see—befouled water, despoiled beaches, rotting marine vegetation, and diminished fishing.

The document I am quoting from is the Speech from the Throne introduced in this House by the government.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Simpson: Here we have the Minister of Fisheries saying that people who talk in an alarmist fashion are nothing but novices reaching for headlines. I think this is a clear example of one of the ministers of the treasury benches strongly disagreeing with those who support the tidying up mentioned in the Speech from the Throne.

The minister went further when he said, "the ecological situation is still basically under control". I do not know where the minister finds any basis for saying this when all the reports, and the Speech from the Throne, admit that we have diminished fishing. That in itself upsets the ecological balance.

I have some interesting information before me, Mr. Speaker. It is contained in a letter written to Mr. R. C. Passmore, the Executive Director of the Canadian Wildlife Federation. This letter is signed by the President of the Flin Flon Wildlife Association. It is further evidence of the interest that wildlife and conservation groups are showing in this very important subject. The letter advises that a conservation seminar was sponsored by the Flin Flon Wildlife Association on January 10. The seminar was entitled "The Value of Water as a Natural Resource".

There were two papers presented, and I quote from a report:

The morning paper, "Water and Man" was given by Nes Mudry, Chief of the Planning Division, Water Control and Conservation Branch, Dept. of Mines and Natural Resources, Manitoba. The other paper was given by Jack Howard who is a biologist with the Manitoba Renewable Resources Branch.

The House may be interested in some of the findings:

At the morning session an attempt was made to define clean water and to identify some of the problems and pressures affecting our water resource. They decided that water was clean when it could be taken directly from a lake or stream and used for human consumption.

Over the years, this idea has been in the minds of the people living in our northern areas. Up until now they have had the advantage of an abundance of fresh water in lakes, water which could be taken directly out of the lakes and used for human consumption. These people are very concerned about the fact that pollution can and is taking place slowly but surely and will continue to increase unless strong measures are taken to control it.

I continue quoting:

Pollution was high on the list of problems—not only industrial pollution but people pollution too. Further, all the groups agreed that Canada should not export water, that if industry needs water, then it should be required to move to the water and not vice versa.

—the participants were asked to make recommendations that would correct some of the problems. And here, I think, a rather amazing thing happened. When the groups reported back to the plenary session their recommendations were almost identical.

All were agreed that Canada must have uniform pollution levels and that these must be rigidly maintained. There was also unanimous agreement that the federal government should establish these standards, with the provinces being given the responsibility of administering them, providing Ottawa retains the authority to police the provinces.

This is one thing which is certainly not included in Bill C-144.

It was also agreed that educators have a bigger role to play in teaching Canadians the importance of a clean environment.

I am sure these conservationists feel that there is a place in the curriculum of our educational institutions for the teaching of the benefits of a clean environment and of the dangers of pollution. I continue:

Two of the groups looked into the future and decided that Canada will, some day, be short of water if she continues to ditch, drain and generally waste water at the present rate. They looked at the drainage authority in Manitoba where the municipality makes the decision to drain and it was agreed that authority should come from a less biased body. There was even discussion on the feasibility of underground storage for water.

It was decided that, if we can in fact foresee a time when Canada will be short of water, we should be making plans today and determine what can be done about it rather than waiting until there is an actual shortage. It was suggested, for instance, that if all marginal land were taken out of agricultural production today, much of it would return to marshland and this alone would provide extensive water storage.

It was suggested to me that the House should be made aware of the findings of this seminar. It is gratifying to know that groups such as wildlife associations are taking a keen interest in this very important problem. This group feels that in order for water in our lakes to be classed as clean, it must be fit for human consumption.

Recently a task force has been travelling throughout northern Manitoba visiting most, if not all, of the isolated areas. It has reported that there is more and more evidence of pollution in the lakes in these extremely isolated areas. This has been of great concern to this task force. Much of this pollution comes from the settlements on the shores of many of these lakes, but there is evidence of pollutants such as DDT. It is not too long ago that evidence of DDT contamination was found in polar bear carcasses in the high Arctic.

There is no use in believing that pollution is only a matter of concern to the urban centres. It is spreading very rapidly. When I was going to school we were taught that water would generally purify itself in a distance five to seven miles by running over rapids, etc., but this is not the case with the pollutants we have today. I have already mentioned the situation in the Saskatchewan River where the actual source of pollution is several hundred miles upstream. It would appear that the old saying about water purifying itself does not hold up under present day conditions.

• (3:40 p.m.)

The problem raised by the pollution of our environment is generally considered to be one of major concern to Canada, and indeed, to North America as a whole. Control of the pollution of our waters, air and soil was determined at the Niagara Conference to be one of the highest priorities of the Progressive Conservative party, as something urgently needed for the preservation of our quality of life. Federal involvement in the work of pollution control has been spotty and uncertain. The first positive steps were taken in the early sixties by a Progressive Conservative government when grants and loans were made to municipalities for the installation of sewage disposal facilities. This was authorized by legislation.

During the past few years there has been an increasing demand that the federal government should involve itself in pollution control as a national priority—that the federal government should take firm action to coordinate its efforts and end the jurisdictional maze in which half a dozen federal departments pass responsibility back and forth. We are urging that the government set up one agency with which provincial and international bodies can deal. As against these desirable objectives, the proposed legislation has a number of shortcomings in its general approach. One of these shortcomings is that it deals with water alone. It does not touch on soil or air pollution. Even to the extent that it concerns water, it does nothing to improve interdepartmental communications or to sort out the jurisdictional fields among the departments.

At present the departments of Energy, Mines and Resources, Fisheries, Agriculture, External Affairs and Transport all have some kind of jurisdiction, as does the Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation. Nor does the bill make provision to establish national standards for water quality, purification equipment or monitoring. It is, in fact, still left open for one province, or one area of the country, to encourage industry to develop there by setting lower standards of pollution control.

I was gratified to see that the Canadian Wildlife Federation took a strong stand on this very matter. In addition, the federation deplored the absence of provision for any federal financial assistance to make it possible to achieve the objects of Bill C-144. The measure makes no provision for federal contributions to assist the provinces or to assist those who will administer the water quality areas which are to be set up, and enable them to carry out their responsibilities.

Many hon. members on this side of the House have drawn attention to the alternatives which are available to the government. We hope that when the minister speaks later today he will give us an assurance that some of the suggestions, at least, will be considered seriously and incorporated in the bill. I intend to repeat some of these suggestions because we believe strongly that the government should take cognizance of the alternatives which have been put forward.

One of the our proposals is that the government should set up a national department or agency to co-ordinate pollution control efforts in all departments and that it should deal with water quality as part of this over-all approach. The bill before us is not part of any integrated plan; it is just another of these bits and pieces.

The second proposition we put forward is that the government should deal with water quality as part of a national priority to control pollution, and commit the necessary funds from taxation. We feel, also, that the government should ensure provincial co-operation before bringing in legislaiton.

In connection with this latter point, I should like to refer again to what was contained in the Speech from the Throne. On this subject of water resources, it stated that the government had made known its views on this serious matter and had begun discussions with the provinces upon the completion of which it would introduce legislation to enable it, in co-operation with the provinces, to improve and preserve our water resources. I ask hon. members to note the words which refer to the completion of these discussions. My understanding is that a further conference has yet to take place with the provinces on this very matter, and that it will be held in February. This being the case, I find myself wondering why the government should have brought forth the wishy-washy legislation before us at this particular time, though it was clearly stated in the Speech from the Throne that legislation would be presented only after conferences with the provinces had been completed.

We in the Official Opposition further believe that the government should establish national minimum standards for water quality management and provide for the prevention of pollution on a national basis, not just for special areas. As for the water quality management area system proposd in this bill, it is only one of several possible approaches. Since the government has selected this particular one we shall try to clear up its many shortcomings and attempt to make it work.

In conclusion, I want to make it very clear that we on this side of the House are particularly interested in this subject and that we sincerely hope the people of Canada will have an opportunity to look over the contents of Bill C-144 and send in their own ideas as to the improvements which we know they will find necessary. We trust, too, that they will support us in our efforts to persuade the government to make amendments to the bill which would allow it to do the imporant job which faces Canadians in controlling, or eliminating as far as possible, the menace of pollution.

Mr. Arnold Peters (Timiskaming): A few months ago, Mr. Speaker, a meeting was called by the Minister of Mines in Ontario to discuss the development of secondary industry in northern Ontario. At this meeting there was a large representation from the community, from labour, management, the professions and the provincial civil service. A few federal civil servants were there too, to take part in a discussion on the potential of the area and how it could be developed.

It was an interesting conference, but what surprised me were the views of one of those present who told us, during the discussion of development of secondary industry, that as far as he was concerned he did not want any such development in northern Ontario. It would mean, he said, that the air would be polluted, that the water would be polluted and that the earth would be polluted. He lived in northern Ontario because he liked clean air and clean water. If the price he had to pay for this was the sacrifice of the development of industry, or of the opening of new mines, he was ready to pay that price. Any factories that wished to do so could establish themselves in Toronto where their employees could live in the smog, but he himself had no desire to do so.

This surprised me because I had never really thought of all the things which are lost as a nation develops. There is a price exacted for everything and the price may sometimes be higher than the value received. In Toronto people who look out at the lake see the recreational facilities and perhaps decide that the environmental loss they have suffered may not be worth some of the development that has been achieved in the area. However, probably the purpose of this bill is not to cover matters of environmental control. It is concerned mainly with the matter of water pollution. From my reading of it, it would appear to be a good bill. The criticism that has been made is that it does not go far enough, does not establish federal standards and does not make provision for the federal government to do the things it perhaps should do. All these are good criticisms. However, the minister probably does not have an answer to these criticisms because a great deal of money is involved. To date, the public has not really decided whether the price is worth paying. Until the public makes up its mind, we will have the type of pollution control the government decides to establish.

I do not intend to be nasty to the government. The government now has legislation by which it can control many of the problems that exist. Our harbours could be controlled by the National Harbours Board legislation which is very extensive and autocratic. The same is true in respect of the Navigable Waters Protection Act. This again is old legislation which was brought into effect without fanfare. It is my hope that discussions between the federal and provincial governments will progress to the point where the jurisdictional problems will be ironed out. If we are not willing to invest the money in something, then we really are not in a position to do anything about it.

It is interesting to note some objections which have been raised by people at the head of the lakes. There are reports that the United States Corps of Engineers is directly asking Canadian citizens to provide them with water information. These questions have been asked over a period of time. The provincial government has become concerned about this and has raised the matter with the RCMP. The provincial authorities demand that this type of inquiry by a United States agency be made through the Department of External Affairs of the federal government or at least through the provincial government.

The federal government has indicated that it has no information about the problem. I have a question in this regard which appears on the Order Paper. The RCMP has asked me for information to enable them to make inquiries about this matter. In northern Ontario, and I believe throughout the mid-Canada corridor a situation exists in which Canadians are becoming perturbed not only about our water resource but also about the fact that the United States authorities are looking at our resource and are applying pressure in respect of it in the hope that we will sell it. At the head of the lakes, individuals are asked to measure the water, prepare weather reports and so on and then are paid $3.50 per week. This information is being provided to the United States army authorities by 40 or 50 Canadians. It seems strange that the RCMP is not in a position to obtain the information they desire. However, I would be prepared to reveal the source of my information and I am sure other members from northern Ontario could do likewise.

I do not think most Canadians believe this is the proper way for our resources to be administered. It is being done this way because the Canadian government is not really interested in obtaining information. The United States authorities want to know what they will have to pay and the Canadian authorities do not have the necessary information available. It seems to me that in the mid-Canada corridor we will be faced with the choice of selling our water as a resource or keeping it, managing it, conserving it and enticing industries to come to the water rather than allowing the water to be diverted to the industries. Most people believe water is for drinking, for washing and then for dumping into the lakes. They believe that eventually it will come back again and there will always be nice clean water. I understand that where industries are situated on, and are using, a body of water, that water is used to the extent that even if pollutants are not employed it no longer has any friction reducing properties. Therefore, the normal properties in water can be used up by industry and the only way they can be replenished is by bringing in new water.

The United States authorities look at our water and think of taking it to the United States where it can be utilized in their environment. So, I believe we must pay some attention to this, set up a standard in respect of our resource and maintain it. The federal government will have to do this job. The federal government has the jurisdictional authority. The jurisdictional division will come into play when the provinces decide to have their own standards. However, we have a responsibility to catalogue and conserve this resource wherever possible. The area which I represent may be called the upper Ottawa River basin. Those of us in Ottawa are in a position to observe the lower Ottawa River basin. These two basins together make a very formidable source of water in Canada and that water finally ends up in the Atlantic ocean. Many studies have been undertaken in an effort to increase the supply of water from the Arctic watershed. The dividing point between the Arctic watershed and the Atlantic watershed is in my area. The difficulties in diverting considerable amounts of water from one area to another are not insurmountable. Distribution, however, is a horse of another colour.

I do not think there is any great disagreement between the people of Ontario, the people of Quebec and the people in other parts of Canada who are concerned about this watershed about having the water diverted to the Great Lakes where it would become a useful commodity in the United States.

Before we leave the difficulties in respect of the great Lakes, I would point out that there is now an agency in the United States which is deeply involved in the establishment of a connection between Lake Michigan and the Mississippi watershed. If this were established, it would eliminate some of the problems south of Chicago where the water is contaminated and is of no industrial or other use. It has become dead water. The only solution here is to bring in larger quantities of water from the Great Lakes system, which water of course would have to come from the Arctic watershed. The Canadian people would be involved just as the United States is now.

I am more interested in this piece of legislation as it will affect the Ottawa River, Lake Timiskaming and the Upper Ottawa Valley. This area should be studied by all members of Parliament. All one has to do is look out over Parliament Hill and one can see and smell the pollution of the Ottawa River. Presumably, in Ottawa we are drinking this water. We are in a very good position to decide whether this large water source is being contaminated.

This river will fall under federal jurisdiction. I note that in this bill there are sections which will allow for control and the establishment of a water authority on Lake Timiskaming and the Ottawa River chain. They would allow for the control of that body of water, for the control of pollution and the establishment of an agency for the orderly operation of the resources in the Ottawa River basin. Therefore, I am very interested in this measure.

[Mr. Peters.]

When my father went to Northern Ontario he went by boat. He went there in 1898 on a steamer that left Mattawa and travelled to Lake Timiskaming, visiting the various ports on the Quebec and Ontario side. All the cattle, mail and everything that went to Northern Ontario went in that manner. From reports I have read, this was a beautiful waterway and a trip well worth taking. Many people went as sightseers to observe the benefits of this newly developing country and stayed to become residents of that area, remaining the rest of their lives.

Lake Timiskaming forms a boundary between the province of Ontario and the province of Quebec. It is obviously under federal control. In the early days, transportation on it was controlled by the federal government. The driving of logs was controlled by the federal government. In fact all the resources that passed through that area, and there were a great many in terms of lumbering and the fur trade, were under the direction of the federal government.

In recent years, because of the establishment of a dam and the new use of that water, this authority of the federal government has been dissipated in a number of directions. I have a letter which was written in reply to a question by a provincial member of parliament for the area. He asked what effect the establishment of a dam at Lower Notch would have on the waterway. The reply came from Ontario Hydro in the form of a letter to the Hon. George Kerr, Minister of Energy and Resources Management, Parliament Buildings, Toronto. It reads in part:

> The water level of Lake Timiskaming is controlled by the federally-owned dam at the south end of the lake, which is operated according to the decisions of a regulating committee made up of representatives from Quebec Hydro, federal Department of Public Works and Ontario Hydro. The discharges required through this dam and the subsequent elevations of Lake Timiskaming are a direct result of the rate of inflow to the lake. The Montreal River on which Lower Notch is situated contributes only a small part of the total flow, and daily flows on the Montreal will not generally be altered by Lower Notch. No change in the operating arrangements for Timiskaming is contemplated.

I live on the shores of Lake Timiskaming and it is very interesting to note how well this committee can control the level of that lake. The level varies about eight or nine feet. You must realize that the lake level was raised by some 12 feet when this dam was installed. This is a low lying farm area and the water level in the newly flooded part has risen about twelve feet. The people who own land in that area previously farmed this land.

When the water level rises and falls eight or nine feet, there is considerable difficulty controlling the flow. If the water level in Lake Timiskaming rises abnormally in the spring, then the people who have cottages all the way along the Ottawa River are in difficulty. If the dam on Lake Timiskaming went out there would probably be four feet of water over most of the city of Montreal. The lake forms a fairly substantial source of water, and one which has to be controlled over a large distance.

One of the problems that is developing results from the use or misuse of the water by both Quebec Hydro and Ontario Hydro who have not thought of anybody except themselves. This means they maintain as high a water level as possible, and to hell with the tourist operators, the recreation facilities, the shoreline, the pulp and paper industry, the logging industry and other industries using this water. The hydro companies believe they have a divine right as a result of their public utility position.

The federal government has neglected to use any influence it might have. The federal government built the dam and has repaired it on a number of occasions, but it has not really made any effort to see that the fishing industry has not been hurt. It has not been particularly interested in facilitating logging operations on the lake or in seeing that one of the greatest forms of pollution in any area—soil pollution—is controlled. It has not really done anything about the sewage which flows directly into this water.

If we are really interested in controlling pollution it seems to me there are enough teeth in this measure, if they are used, to enable the federal government to immediately supply the controls necessary for the orderly management of any large water resource. Such control measures would probably start in rural areas where dams would have to be installed to stop the runoff which carries a great amount of silt into the Ottawa basin. This will cost many municipalities a great deal of money. They do not have the money and apparently the provincial government does not give a hoot. If the federal government says it is interested in orderly management, it must be prepared to make money available to the municipalities for the basic control of water levels and soil pollution, such as the kind taking place in almost all agricultural areas along this whole water chain from the head of the lake at Notre Dame du Nord to Montreal. Unless the federal government is prepared to make this kind of an expenditure on behalf of the municipality, it really does not matter what is done along the line. It does not matter whether the river is polluted with chemicals or anything else if the runoff of silt is permitted.

As you fly over the watercourse, you note that a great deal of it is a dull muddy colour. There are hundreds and hundreds of tourist operations, both private and commercial, along this watercourse. These people have not had the resources to provide proper sanitary control. The federal government will have to make enough money available to them through CMHC so that they may upgrade their facilities.

Many of the municipalities down-river are still dumping raw sewage into this lake. The minister knows this. When he lived on the Ottawa River I imagine that area got so polluted that he decided to move to another water resource area in his new riding, but I think he will find the same applies there also.

If we are not willing to make money available to the municipalities to treat the waste going into our water resources, then we can laugh at this bill. What would be the point of laying charges against some small municipality for dumping raw sewage into a river when everyone knows that the municipality does not have the financial resources to build the necessary facilities?

In Northern Ontario we embarked on a unique method of handling municipal waste. We put it in lagoons, and every year the lagoons freeze over very hard. When spring comes in the ice is quite high and these ponds are full. The one in my home town is situated quite close to the river. Water runs down off the hill into the lagoon and flushes it into the river, so that instead of getting a little pollution every day we get a lot of pollution during the spring run-off, but apparently the Ontario Water Resources Branch decided that this was fine.

Since the beginning of commercial development in Northern Ontario logs have been driven on the Timiskaming lake. In some places the bark and other things which come off the logs have polluted the lake to a depth of five feet, but no regulation is being drafted to ensure that the logs are peeled before they are put in the water.

I am sure that the departmental officials who drafted this bill have no intention of enforcing it. What they and the government want is to have this bill to deal with cases of obvious pollution, cases where they will be obliged to do something. To this government, obvious pollution means sufficient pollution to kill all the fish in a river or lake. When they are found floating belly up, then the government will get after somebody and make him pay a few bucks. But, Mr. Speaker, that will merely be a licence to pollute.

The people of Canada are now concerned about the uses of water. They see the abuses perpetrated by hydro, and in some cases by provincial departments of lands and forests. In some areas these provincial departments placed poison in lakes to kill all the fish, but when they tried to restock those lakes at a later date they found it impossible to do so.

People are also giving considerable attention to the recreational and transportation uses of water. In the interval between two elections a few years ago, the Liberal party in Northern Ontario came out with a grand scheme to cope with the problem of Lake Timiskaming and the Ottawa River. Not only did they propose to bring barges up to Ottawa on the river, but also to bring them up through Lake Timiskaming. They were even going to take them into the French River and over into Sault Ste. Marie. But the Liberal party was not interested in controlling the environment of that water facility.

This is a nice bill. I hope all hon. members will support it, but it will not do any good. It is a sop to those people who believe that pollution has become a problem. In my opinion the government has no intention of providing enough money to municipalities or to provinces to establish the necessary controls. The federal government will not even make a survey of our water resources so that their orderly development may be planned. The only time the federal government will make use of this bill is when nothing else works, or in the case of a calamity.

For years the International Joint Commission has been looking at the problem in Lake Erie, smelling it, measuring it and tasting it. Every year the problem gets worse. We will never solve it until we decide to devote enough money to its solution. The amount of money that will be provided through this bill will be very small.

For these reasons, I say the bill is a nice one, but it does not meet the aspirations of almost all Canadians who want to avoid the water pollution problems that are besetting the United States. Canadians wish to develop the controls that will make it possible for them to pass their natural water resources on to their children and their children's children in as pure a state as possible.

Mr. W. C. Scott (Victoria-Haliburton): Mr. Speaker, this piece of legislation reflects perfectly the attitude of the government to the whole question of pollution and environmental control. This attitude continues to be timid, indecisive and confused. The bill before us contains all these undesirable qualities and more. Perhaps this is not to be wondered at when we realize it is only a hastily prepared answer to those who have been reproaching the federal government for being indifferent to the menace of pollution.

• (4:20 p.m.)

The minister and the government of which he is a member have come into the antipollution picture very late—at the 59th minute of the eleventh hour, one might say. The circumstances under which this measure was announced by the Minister without Portfolio last fall indicate to me that the purpose was more to save the government's face than to take any serious steps toward solving our water pollution problems. The minister and his aides have consistently striven to usurp the credit built up by those provinces that have already done much within their own jurisdictions to fight pollution and to make the Canadian public believe that the only thing holding back decisive action is the failure of the provinces to co-operate with the central government. The fact of the matter is that this government and its predecessor did little or nothing about pollution, even within the exclusively federal jurisdiction. It was never accorded any priority. The only real effort to meet and master pollution of our natural environment has come from the provincial governments.

In this regard I will speak only of the government of the Province of Ontario because that is something of which I have first hand knowledge as a former head of a municipal council. Over a period of roughly 15 years, Ontario has evolved an extensive program of air, water and soil protection. For more than a decade the Ontario Water Resources Commission has been active in water control and, in that area of antipollution work alone, the province has sunk more than $3 billion already.

This has been a tremendous effort. It has been an effort carried on with only lip service co-operation from the federal government. Under Premier Frost and, later, under Premier Robarts, the Ontario government tried repeatedly to get federal assistance and co-operation in cleaning up the Ottawa River. When the Ontario authorities tackled this problem they quickly found that it was hopeless without the full co-operation of both the Province of Quebec and the federal government—the government whose job it is to take care of interjurisdictional waters such as the Ottawa River interprovincial boundary.

It was no dice. There was no action. There was no interest. It was the same story when Ontario tried to co-operate with some seven states of the United States across the Great Lakes. Intentionally or not, the minister inferred in his pre-introduction publicity campaign that federal action was now being taken because the provinces had shirked the job. It is time to set the record straight. The failures of omission were federal, not provincial.

Finally, the federal giant has awakened. Unfortunately, this bill represents only the giant's yawn before rolling over and going back to sleep. The general concept of strict control of our natural environment—water, air and soil—we, as a party, support wholeheartedly. What we are attacking in this bill is the half-hearted approach to the problem. The utter inadequacy of the means so far advanced is illustrated by this shoddy piece of legislation. What we want to see is strong federal leadership, federal initiative to establish national standards, national goals, a national crusade.

In Canada today we have a very sorry and confused picture of antipollution effort. Some provinces and municipalities have done much. Many private industries have also done a great deal. Many private citizens have made an outstanding contribution. But the sad fact is that the federal government has done little or nothing and many industries and individuals will never do anything until the machinery to compel them to conform to standards of environmental control are established on a nation-wide basis. One cannot blame them too much. Until pollution of our air, water and soil is made an offence in every part of the country and until Canada as a whole proceeds positively against the threat, the industries and the citizens of the country are unlikely to observe antipollution measures.

To confine concern to a restricted list of specified bodies of water, as this bill does, is a useless gesture. It begs the question. It makes no sense to say, as this bill in effect, does say, "pollution is only officially pollution in this lake or that river because we have been able to set up a joint board to control its waters".

What about the lake next door or the water in the river farther downstream? Despite the fatuous statements made the other evening by the hon. member for Hamilton-Wentworth (Mr. Gibson) about water being different in different areas, it is obvious that water is water wherever it is when you are dealing with pollution of it.

We must have national standards of water quality. We must have national definitions of pollution and the offence of pollution. We must have uniform methods of controlling water and protecting it. We must ensure that pollution can be controlled wherever there is water, not simply in a scattering of designated areas under some cumbersome type of joint control board. Reading this bill, the impression is given that pollution only exists where there is a joint interest. What about all the vast areas of this country where the federal jurisdiction is paramount and absolute? I am thinking of the Arctic, for instance or the territories or the off-shore waters? Perhaps the federal government is hoping to set up a joint control board with the United States in these areas. Having heard the views of the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources on the benefits of pooling continental resources, I can imagine that this may well be in his mind.

The truth of the matter is, Mr. Speaker, that the federal government has consistently refused to recognize the menace of pollution and has evaded its responsibility for leading a national effort on what is, clearly, a national problem. Now, it has suddenly awakened to the realization that Canadians want action and has rushed into the field too late and with too little.

Pollution does not stop at provincial boundaries. It is not susceptible to being neatly allotted to various political jurisdictions. It is all-pervasive and truly a universal threat. Pollution is a national threat and an international threat. The federal responsibility to act in this area is just as clear and urgent as it would be in the field of national defence were Canada to be threatened by hostile forces from outside our borders.

I find it amazing that the federal government is being so coy about invading provincial jurisdiction in this field and so scrupulous about staying within its own narrow constitutional areas. It never was so nice about things in the past. We can all recall the thinly disguised invasion of provincial rights and jurisdiction that accompanied the imposition of a nation-wide pension and medicare plan. Those plans were successfully forced upon many of the provinces by coercion. If such coercion were necessary and acceptable in the case of pensions and medicare, why not try a little in the far more pressing and serious problem of preserving our national physical environment?
