Sunday in Europe.
The phrase, "The Continental Sunday," is not to be taken as having precisely the same meaning which it would bear here at home. Although, if we look into the matter closely and without the prejudice of habit, we shall probably find that the same thing substantially is intended. There has been much talk about it and much discussion during the last few years in continental countries. The object aimed at is the securing of cessation of work, either total or partial, on the Sundays, nothing more. The delay in affording a settlement on the matter has not been waste; it has afforded opportunity for arguing the matter, for clearing the air and for ascertaining what may be fairly looked for and what must not be expected. A general review of the treatment of the subject is certainly not diffusing. It shows how very far public life in Europe has receded from a religious standpoint, how little men will allow themselves to be influenced by moral, or, at least, admit that they are so influenced by the religious ideas and principles which a little more than a century ago were admitted to be the foundations of public order in Europe.

MORALITY AND LEGISLATION.
Many will say that this is all the better, that there is less hypocrisy, less sham, and therefore, that things are more healthy. We do not propose to discuss the latter, but we will content ourselves with noting what chances of improvement present themselves on the much lower, perhaps more practical, but hardly more staple, basis which the idea of our holiday days afford. We are often told that it is not possible to make people moral by Acts of Parliament. Nevertheless, legislators will interfere, when, at last, they are made to see the socially or physically mischievous result of conduct which would otherwise pass unheeded. This is the ground on which our modern reformers seek to restor to the Sunday its character of "The Day of Rest." Perhaps it is urged that to scrutinize the motives of granting a boon which will be very welcome.

FRANCE'S IRRELIGIOUS LAW-MAKERS.
The question came lately before the French legislative body in a way which afforded a remarkable illustration of the spirit of that Assembly. A projet de loi was under consideration, the object of which was to secure protection for working people against excessive periods of labor. It was agreed, for example, that women and young people not yet eighteen years of age should not be allowed to work for more than ten hours out of the twenty-four. The legislators had even got so far as to recognize the advantage of giving every working person one day free out of every seven.

NOTES FROM ROME.
The distribution of prizes to the pupils of the school of the English Sisters, Via S. Sebastiano, was a ceremony of much interest to the English colony. In the presence of His Eminence the Cardinal-Vicar, the pupils gave various recitations in English, Italian and French. The recitations were extremely creditable. Several of the pieces were taken from the works of Cardinal Newman. Surrounding the Cardinal-Vicar were Archbishop Stonor, Archbishop Pateo, the Bishop of Newport and Manera, the Bishop of Christchurch, New Zealand, Mgr. O'Connor, Mgr. Campbell, Mgr. Smith, Canon Altieri, Rev. Jerome Vaughan, Rev. Stanislaus White, Prior Hickey and others. As to the lady there were about three hundred present, the parents and relatives of the pupils, and the elite of the English colony in Rome.

THE CONGREGATION.
The Congregation of the Holy Fathers, which is a society of the Holy Fathers, was recently re-elected by the Pope. The new members are: Mgr. Perrin, who has arrived in Rome from Paris. His mission here is to arrange for the housing of the French pilgrims during the past week was one of Mgr. Gilly, Bishop of Oaxaca in Mexico, together with Mgr. Colonghi and Signor Angelo Angeli, for the purpose of placing in His Holiness' hands an offering of Peter's Pence, partly collected in the archdiocese of Guadalajara, and the other portion from the Bishop of Vera Cruz. Signor Angeli presented to His Holiness a magnificent amon, beautifully embroidered in silk by a lady in Guadalajara. The Holy Father expressed his great pleasure at receiving the present as a mark of the devotion of the people of that distant land, and said that all the apostolic blessing, Dr. Grimes

THE ARCHBISHOP OF NAPLES.
Cardinal Sanfelice, Archbishop of Naples, has arrived in Rome. He has come to confer with His Holiness on several matters concerning the Neapolitan diocese, and to present his formal visit ad limina, to present to the Holy Father a purse of Peter's Pence from the same diocese.

THE BISHOP OF CHRISTCHURCH.
The Bishop of Christchurch, New Zealand, had also the honor of being received by His Holiness. His audience took place on Thursday, and he presented to the Holy Father a large sum of Peter's Pence from the diocese of Christchurch and a beautifully-bound album containing addresses, finely illuminated, from the clergy and sisterhood of the same diocese.

REQUIREMENT FOR CARDINAL NEWMAN.
On Thursday morning was celebrated in the Church of S. Maria in Vallicella a Solemn Requiem Mass for the repose of the soul of the late Cardinal Newman, through the care of the Oratorians of the Filippini. The Rev. Father Scaramucci, General of the Oratorians of the Filippini in Rome, officiated. At the funeral ceremony, which was most impressive, there assisted, besides their Eminences Cardinals Ricci and Mermillod, the Rectors of the English, Irish, Scots, and American Colleges, Archbishop O'Connell, the Rev. William Whitman, the Rev. Father New, the Rev. Lionel Goodrich, the Very Rev. Prior Hickey, the Very Rev. Prior Glynn, and many others of the English and American colonies. The church was magnificently draped in black, while in the middle of it rose a rich catafalque surmounted by the Cardinal's tiara. Father Scaramucci also gave the absolution at the end of the service.

BRATIFICATION OF DON BOSCO.
The celebrated Don Bosco, who died at Turin in the beginning of the year 1888, will possibly be beatified. The initial steps are being taken for the presentation of the cause before the Sacred Congregation of Rites. The decision for presentation before the Sacred Congregation was settled by a council of the Piedmontese Bishops, comprising the archbishops of Turin and of Verceil, at the end of the last year. The Turin newspapers recount the devotion with which the people go in crowds to pray at his tomb and also say that continually flowers and wreaths are being sent to be laid on it even from other countries.

THE NEW PREMIER.
The Marquis di Rudini is also a Sicilian by birth, like the late Premier, but of quite another education. He has some respect for religion, is gentlemanlike in his manners, and courteous to those in connection with him. The fact of his having resigned his salary as President of the Council and Minister of Foreign Affairs so as to give that little more to help reduce the heavy deficit of Italy's finances does him credit, and shows some little real patriotism. During the short time that he has been in power he has made enormous reductions in the expenses of the different Ministries. He is likewise studying reductions and reforms in the Army and Navy Corps, to the extent of several millions without, however, touching the actual armaments or crippling the forces in any way.

CHRIST'S DYING PAINS AND WORDS

Come, reader, come and see the dying scene of Christ, and see how he agonized...

To hold, immovable, with changed hands, in silent sorrow too profound for speech...

To wipe the blood that round His temples flows, To moist His lips, His dying eyes to close...

To see His face, His dying agonies, To see His face, His dying agonies, To see His face...

How great His mercy to the humble thief, Who felt compunction for his sins and grief...

How great His mercy to the humble thief, Who felt compunction for his sins and grief, How great His mercy...

How great His mercy to the humble thief, Who felt compunction for his sins and grief, How great His mercy...

How great His mercy to the humble thief, Who felt compunction for his sins and grief, How great His mercy...

obliged to consent, though with reluctant reluctance; and, having paid his ransom...

In a short time the shores of the Northern coast were fast receding from them.

'Good-bye, Ireland!' said MacNevin, as the tall bluff of the Giant's Causeway...

'Good-bye, Ireland!' cried Francis, as he looked back at the hills of his native land...

'The Directory will never do anything more than if they did it a week ago.'

'They are not dead—their life is in them still,' said Eugene, in reply to a whisper from Francis...

'If he recovers we shall soon know, meaning Francis, who had left you to take care of them.'

'The very same. I could get for a moment remember. Your recognition confirms my own impression.'

'What could have brought him here? Heaven alone knows.'

'If he recovers we shall soon know, meaning Francis, who had left you to take care of them.'

'The very same. I could get for a moment remember. Your recognition confirms my own impression.'

'What could have brought him here? Heaven alone knows.'

'If he recovers we shall soon know, meaning Francis, who had left you to take care of them.'

Eugene was most cordial. 'Of all the pieces in the world the last I should expect to see you in.'

'How did it come about? I am impatient to hear it,' asked the latter.

'It is a story that I can only tell you in a few words, but I will try to do so.'

'I met some Irishmen whom I knew years before—men who loved their old land, and were ready to make sacrifices for her.'

'They were all of high position and education—to purchase this vessel, and to load her with firearms and ammunition.'

'Yes, the hold is stored from keel to underdeck with them at present. But she carried something as good as better—large funds for the support of the Irish cause—for the army in the field.'

'The captain passed, partly with emotion and partly with regret. But what has happened—what means this terrible scene outside?'

'That explains the sight outside? That explains it,' said the captain. 'And they bore off the gold?'

'I wonder that they did not kill you also? I intended worse; they left us to die, to bear all the agonies of knowing that the vessel was driving to destruction without power to alter her course, and to die a living death.'

'Where did this take place? At the entrance to the Channel? And you have been beating up the Channel in this manner all the time?'

'We have been pitching and tossing—driving hither and thither—in all the fury of last night's storm. It seemed to me before I grew unconscious, as if the spirits of all that ever were drowned at sea were whistling and shrieking in the rigging and on deck.'

'The wind was tearing through the ropes and sails. Perhaps it was; but the sounds were not like that. I should know the shrieking of the wind after twenty years at sea, but the cries and wails that were around us all night were not like that. Where are we now?'

'North of Antrim—off the North coast of Ireland. We would have been driven with great speed. The gale of last night was not likely to let a ship rest on the waters, said Eugene.'

'It is true. Singular how we steered clear of the shore on either side, to reach this far safely. Which puts me in mind to ask what brings you here—what good luck brought you to board?'

'The extraordinary chances of war. But I shall tell you again. We have other more pressing matters now on hand.'

'The word—how goes the insurrection in Ireland? Over—over for our lifetime. Crushed out—drowned out in blood.'

'And Tine? And the rest? Dead—or in prison. Some in the gibbet, some in the jail. Don't ask me further about them. It is necessary to me before I grow unconscious, as if the spirits of all that ever were drowned at sea were whistling and shrieking in the rigging and on deck.'

'That is the end—in our time. I can hardly believe it,' said the captain, lying back wearily and disapprovingly. 'A nation's life and liberties cannot be trampled out so summarily. A further effort will be made.'

'I wish I could hope with you, but I cannot. We shall talk these matters over again. Meantime it is necessary something should be done with the ship. Where do you propose going? Under the circumstances, now, I do not know. Then we had better sail for France. Are you going there? Yes, I think so, at least some of us. Then I suppose it is the best thing to do—run up the American flag. The one flying is tattered to pieces. Have you another? You will find one in the locker to the right,' said the captain, who shall be glad to go about myself presently.'
