A Strange Sot.

A correspondent of the Sackville Post says that there is at Capt. Macdonald's, or as they are more generally called, "Shakens". This sot traces its origin to one Macdonald, who broke away from the Scottish Kirk nearly a century ago, and, banding about him a few followers, established a denomination on the Island, which has grown to large proportions in the past quarter century. While it is ever in bad form to smile at things religious, yet a person unaccustomed to the service cannot possibly follow it and not smile. The men and women sit on different sides of the sanctuary, and no matter what tides may exist, be they of kin or sentiment, this rule is inviolable. The children, however, are not bound by this—the young members being educated, she all ladies—who in a peculiar nasal dialect intone the psalm after the leader lines it. No instrument is permitted in the church. The service consists of a sermon, several hymns, and concludes with a prayer by one of the brethren. It is in the latter feature of the meeting that the "shaking" is done. The worthy brother arises, clasps his hands, and without preamble, commences to deliver a stock prayer which, judging from the rapidity of his utterances, has done duty many times before. He writes in apparent agony as he condemns the action of what he terms "the filthy rage of humanity, flaunting in the soul-destroying beauty of sin." The sot is becoming disordered, his garments dishevelled, and he does his utmost to affect his harness. The cry "Glory!" "Hallelujah!" and throw their arms about, knocking off hats and going through a wild kind of dance, which usually ends in their falling to the floor through nervous excitement. All the while the praying elder is shaking with emotion, now and then scolding in a deep bass voice, and beseeching in a high tenor, yet all in a monotonous nasal tone, which is mirth-provoking, however solemn.

Last of the "Great Eastern."

ALL THAT IS LEFT OF WHAT WAS ONCE ONE OF THE WONDERS OF THE WORLD.

Who would recognize the shattered hull which now lies at low tide high and dry on the new fiery shore of the Mersey or the Great Eastern, which in 1858 was the wonder of the world? When once was her stern the rudder-post, with the tiller attached to it, towers out of the water like a gaunt skeleton; and when down the rudder-post is all that is left. For 70 or 80 feet forward the bulwarks and sides have disappeared nearly to the keelson and all that connects this part of the vessel with her amidships section in the keel, and, above it, the enormous shaft which, with its casing removed, lies exposed to view. Her bows have also disappeared completely. Of course her masts, her funnels, and her paddle wheels have all gone long ago. Viewed closely by means of a boat, a vivid realization of her immense strength can be formed. Everything is massive and solid, and we are informed that the plates forming both her inner and outer skin—for the Great Eastern was built with a complete outer cage—are as good as when they were originally put on. It is this obvious strength and thoroughness of workmanship and material that makes her demolition all the more pitiful. —Post-Mortem Gazette.

The Difference.

There is one point in which city and country people differ greatly. A city man never speaks to a pauper unless he is an acquaintance, while in the rural districts one meets so few people on the roads that it is the custom to accost every passenger. Most country people leave the rural habit when they visit the city, but this morning a citizen was accosted by a sunburned granger, who smiled warmly and extended his hand to the pauper.

The citizen responded the remark and went his way, while the farmer started down Vine Street, speaking to everybody he met and hailing every driver on the street. Several electric cars stopped at his greetings, and he rashed out and gave the conductors a warm shake, replying to their invitation to get on. "No thanks, I'd rather walk; I ain't goin' for it." People began to "catch on" and when last seen the venerable son of the soil was wending his way along the streets, and received a perfect ovation.

A Most Singular Death.

Mrs. Anna Beatty, who lived with her family at Bay View, Wisconsin, died a most horrible death lately. Two weeks ago a fit got into one of her nostrils, and it was some time before she was able to remove it, and when she did an itching sensation seemed to spread over her head and down her back. A week ago on Sunday a physician was called. Since that time Mrs. Beatty had been suffering in a manner almost indescribable, and the doctors say a similar case is unknown to medical science. It is stated that soon after she was sick maggots were discovered in her nose and throat, and for several days Mrs. Beatty was unable to swallow food. She was literally eaten up with maggots. A post-mortem showed that the portion of her nose was gone, a hole had disappeared and the throat was tightly closed.
