Just be Glad.

O, heart of mine, we shouldn't Worry so!
What we've missed of calm we couldn't Have you know!
What we've met of stormy pain,
And of sorrow's driving rain,
We can better meet again.
If it blow!

We have erred in that hour, We have known, When the tears fell with the shower, All alone—
Were not shine and shower blent
As the gracious Master meant?
Let us temper our content
With his own.

For, we know, not every morrow
Can be sad;
So forgetting all the sorrow
We have had, We have hau,

Let us fold away our fears,

And put by our foolish tears,

And through all the coming tears

Just be glad.

WRITTEN FOR THE MONITOR. Johnny Comelately.

Ted Gaviller's countenance wore an anxius, worried expression; an unusual circumstance, but nevertheless a fact. The cause of this was the contents of a sheet of foolscap which consisted of two itemized columns of Considering all circumstances this was not surprising state of affairs. On Ted's 21st universary of his arrival in this hard old world he was informed by the sole executor of his father's estate (his only surviving uncle) that owing to the failure of the business in which the greater part of his capital was invested his resources were little more than sufficient to put him through college. This was rather a surprise to him, for although he had always held a vague notion of earning his own living, he had never considered it from the standpoint of necessity. However, he lost no time. Of the professions he considered he was best fitted for law and at once directed all his efforts to that end, with alost incredible success. On finding himself a full-fledged lawyer he endeavored to secure partnership with a long-established law firm, but the decease of his uncle depriving him of the only influence he could bring to bear he found that such openings were hard to find. Nothing daunted he decided to strike out for himself, and accordingly secured offices on Adelaide St., and boldly hung out his shingle.

Anyone who is acquainted with professional life in Toronto will know that his was no easy task; to carve his name on the tablets of fame and fortune in such an atmosphere of over-crowded professionalism seemed to be nore than he was capable of. It must neces arily in a measure be a matter of chance. and fate did not favor him.

Clients were few and dollars were scarce. One retrenchment followed another. First it was the dismissal of his office boy: the few expenses of his office were reduced to a minium. Then he economized in his personal expenses such as his tailor's bill and lunches; he quit McConkey's altogether. He was even forced to consider such small matters as street-car tickets and finally resorted to a pipe instead of the frequent cigar. But it was all to no purpose; there must be a decided change in his income or he must leave ome or he must leave Toronto to accept the only available position he considered himself fitted for—the editorship of a department of minor importance or a New York daily; to grind out a stated mount of reading matter every twenty-four hours (of questionable logic) in order that he might have porridge for his breakfast and a coat on his back. His direct financial difficulties were not his only source of anxiety. Ted was interested in one of Toronto's fairest young ladies; no other than Miss Ethel Lacoste, second daughter of S. F. Lacoste, Q.C., of the law firm Lacoste & Merritt. Gossip said that his affections were largely tempered by the probability of his admission to partnership with the firm if he was successful in his suit for the hand of the fair Ethel; but while this might or might not be true, it is certain that Ted was extremely anxious to make the young lady Mrs. Gaviller. Allowing that gossip was not very far astray I think he was rather to be admired for his ability to unite his material aspirations with the poeti-cal and infinitely loftier side of his nature than to be condemned from a standpoint of false sentiment. For mark you! In all ages it has been demonstrated that the woman with the large bank account is capable of one who is lacking in material possessions, and how much wiser is he who chooses for his helpmate one who will be a help materi- injured person, and possibly it was this feelally than he who takes for his partner one who is a continual source of expense. Ing of injured innocence that soothed his ruffled spirit; or it may be that he did not who is a continual source of expense.

To all appearances Miss Ethel seemed disceive Ted's attentions favorably;

she certainly did not resent them. Everything progressed swimmingly until the arrival in Toronto of a certain Englishman, Reginald Bovelle by name. This fellow opened up an office in the same building as Ted's and proceeded to do business as an insurance agent. Owing probably to his audacity he was more than ordinarily successful. He was one of those drawling, insolent individuals, who do not recognize such a letter as "R" in the English alphabet, or that anyone is entitled to gentlemanly treatment who cannot be of some material benefit to ferred to different of the nobility he evidently had made a study of Burke, and all his references savored of such a decidedly con- they certainly would be pleased to go with him, but feared they would be imposing upon temptuous familiarity that to Torontonians his good nature." On the proper assura he almost assumed the proportions of a real, to the contrary on his part they accepted

Whether it was his implied association with the English nobility or his vast possession of unmitigated cheek that procured him an entrance to the elite society of Toronto I know not; he not only gained an entrance but was lionized. As a matter of fact his conduct was not at all indicative of gentle breeding; notwithstanding that it was generally known that he was inclined to be wild the "poor fellow" was "sowing his wild oats," and although his actions were such as would have ostracized any Toronto boy, Toronto was very lenient where he was concerned.

It is probable this story would never have been written had not Mr. Bovelle singled out Miss Ethel from among the host of his young lady admirers, and made her the object of his most marked devotions. There may have been something really fascinating about the fellow, or it may be that she was flattered by his attentions, (for they would certainly have been welcomed by many of the fair sex). At any rate she did not appear to object very seriously to his advances. To Ted this was more than galling; to have could abide. But scheme as he could the hand but his opponent's as well.

The relations between Ted and Ethel were ming more and more strained; he naturally feeling indignant that she should allow such a fellow as Bovelle to pay her such marked attentions, and she, doubtless possessing the spirit so common with girls, rather enjoyed creating in Ted the spirit of jealousy. The latest offence (that which was fighting with Teddie's financial difficulties for prominence in his "massive brain") was the fact that Ethel had appeared at the opera on the previous evening escorted by Bovelle and or approbation. She "fully realized the companied by a chaperone. As long and as intimately as Ted had been acquainted with the family he had never enjoyed such a out due consideration; she would give him privilege, and to have Bovelle enjoy a confidence which he was denied was, to say the she would not say. least of it, exasperating. He decided that he must have an understanding with Miss a hopeless one. Possibly it was the tone of Ethel at once. Considering his finances, and prospects, unless she gave him some encoursome way he had an intuition that his suit agement the sooner he got clear of Toronto | would be considered favorably, and in con-

The voice was that of the fair-haired Reggie and the number that of Lacoste's resider

the gale of the previous night must have tangled up the telephone wires, crossing his with Bovelle's, which would account for his ability to hear Bovelle so distinctly, and ossibly the tinge of a desire for revenge he concluded to try a little interruption of the

One honeful feature of the case was the fact that Ethel did not answer the call in person as she was wont to do when Ted was n the habit of spending a half hour (more o ess) every morning saying pleasant nothings to call up. Of late these telephone conversations had been discontinued.

On Miss Ethel being summoned to the intrument, and in answer to her inquiry as to who was speaking, she was told by Teddie in a feigned voice that it was Johnnie Comelately, before Bovelle had an opportunity of making himself heard. This was followed up with a considerable amount of nonsensical rubbish of the same type. Just about the time that Miss Ethel was beginning to think that someone was attempting the practical joke act, and in consequence feeling a trifle indignant, Bovelle regained his vocal powers and endeavored to communicate an invitation to the opera for the following evening, but "Johnnie Comelately's" interruptions were so frequent and of such a varied character that it was altogether impossible for him to express the meaning he wished to convey; failing in this he for some strange cause fel swear words; strange to say the swear words travelled over the line without the sign of an interruption. At this Miss Ethel was sur prised and even disgusted, leaving the teleone without a word. It is needless to say Ted was more than amused; he was intensely

On Bovelle realizing how his conduct had with rage; he rang up the central office to ascertain who his line was crossed with, and before the operator could answer he was informed that Johnnie Comelately was the party; however, he finally succeeded in getting the central and requested a connection with the Manager's office. Succeeding in this he proceeded to pour out his "little tale of woe" and lay serious complaint against the Telephone Co., but was informed by the Manager that there were many lines out of that the Company had all the men they could employ repairing them, and that his line would have to take its turn. This did not improve the state of his mind very materially giggle and a whispered "Johnny Comelately" coming over the line.

The state of Bovelle's mind can see be imagined. He realized that he had (perhaps mortally offended) Miss Ethel, and being entirely unacquainted with self-restraint he failed to recognize that he -K. D. C. imparts strength to the wish to quarrel with his "bread and butter."

For he concluded to call around at St. George St., and endeavor to tender an apology that would be accepted.

A half hour later found him in the Lacost drawing room: both Mrs. Lacoste and Miss Ethel were at home. Miss Ethel received him rather coolly, but her mother made up what she lacked in cordiality. Mrs. Lacoste " quite understood how annoying it was to have one's conversation interrupted over the line" and "an apology was quite unnecessary." In answer to his invitation to the opera (which by the way included the mother this time) "they had just been remarking them. Arriving back at his office he called un Dunlop's to order roses to be sent to the ladies for the following evening, and was again interrupted by "Johnny Comelately;" n spite of all he could do Dunlop's took an order for five dozen roses instead of two This continued interruption was like heaping new fuel upon the smouldering embers of his anger; dropping the instrument he rushed out into the hallway and stalked up and down the hall in a towering passion. Yea, verily the air it was blue for a few minutes. Ted leisurely sauntered from his office as calm as lake Ontario on a windless day and meekly enquired of Bovelle if he had noticed anything wrong with his telephone; said he had trouble with his. Bovelle told him all about the matter in rather strong language, and added that if he could find the fellow who called himself Johnny Comelately, he would thump him within an inch of his life. such a cad forestall him was more than he This Ted did not doubt in the least, as Bovelle's pugilistic abilities were preached by Englishman always played his game with the assurance of one who not only knows his own at least 75 lbs. heavier than Ted. Fearing that he would in some way betray himself he concluded he had better betake himself to his office, which he did. That evening he called upon Miss Ethel and was fortunate enough to find her at home and alone; she received him very graciously. He plainly and concisely stated his case, forming her that he had nothing but his whole and undivided heart to offer her, and that whether she loved him or not she would have his eternal adoration. She heard him without expressing pleasure heart and despaired of regaining his footing in Toronto, for I understand he left town compliment he was paying her" but "could not decide such an important question withtry his fortunes in the Rainey River District. an answer in two days." More than this

Teddie felt that his case was not altogether the better; and for some reason the idea of a sequence his heart felt one hundred per cent. future without Ethel in it was not at all at- lighter. But all his hopes were doomed to destruction. As he was taking his leave he His cogitations were cut short by a telephone call. He finally came to the conclusion that Bovelle was at least atpartly prompted by a spirit of mischief with | tractive to Ethel, and considered that if he escorted her on the evening previous to the day on which she was to decide the all-im portant question, his (Ted's) chances for a phone episode certainly demonstrated that favorable consideration were rather slim. After another half hour's hard thinking h eft the club and proceeded to hunt up a very particular friend of his who had but lately arrived in Toronto, having just com pleted his course at Cornell. This fellow was an all-around athlete, having for four years played on the Cornell foot-ball team and pulled a strong oar in the famous Cornell crew. A superficial observer would scarcely credit him with ordinary physical ability, but a careful critic would discover that h was remarkably well-proportioned, being particularly solid in shoulders and chest. He was indebted to Ted for professional ad vice in defence, of rather a serious charge, and his inability to make any returns for services tended to intensify the friendly re lations existing between them, on his part at

A lengthy consultation ended in eviden satisfaction to both parties and Ted hurried himself to his room with light step. Whether or not his actions would come within the category of justice he certainly slept soundly. On the following evening Bovelle in due time arrived at St. George St. for Miss Ethel theatre. Miss Ethel had by no means forgotten the circumstance of the previous morning, and it must be remembered that it was not her acceptance that was accountable for his attendance; she treated him rather indifferently or even coolly, which he of cause. This brought the whole circumstance of the telephone affair back to him rather affected Miss Ethel he was almost frantic forcibly, and if possible his desire for revenge was very much strengthened by such med tations. Mrs. Lacoste's remonstrance at his extravagance in sending so many roses did not relieve his brow of the frown that had settled upon it. Arriving at the opera house the ladies proceeded to the dressing room. Bovelle having divested himself of his top-coat was awaiting their re-appearance and was amus-ing himself by thinking what a great satisfaction it would be to pummel the fellow who called himself Johnny Comelately, when he was attracted by a group of some four or five fellows who were in a similar position apparently enjoying a joke which was being to him, while waiting tor their friends. Frequent glances in his direction led him to suppose that possibly the joke had some connection with himself, and drawing a little nearer he distinctly heard above the levity of the listeners the two words "Johnny Comelately," but they were sufficient. > but they do it better. The Needs of Life.

To work well, eat well, and sleep well. Is not this what every man and woman esires to be able to do? Without this ability, life is robbed of en-himself when once it has been formed. "The law of the harvest is to reap more than you sow. Sow an act and you reap a habit; sow a character and you reap a destiny." And as, someone else has said, if you sow nothing but wild oats in your youth you will reap nothing but tares in your age.

To Clear the Skin.

The diet has such a decided effect upon the complexion that I wonder that more attention is not paid to it. Hot fats, breads, and highly seasoned dishes, tea and coffee, should not be indulged in to excess. Fruits, especially apples, oranges, currants and rhubarb, should be eaten. of late about the question of incorporation for this town and several of our citizens have risability of such a move. We have no ob jection to giving space to any one who wish es to discuss the question in our columns, as we are always willing to afford such an opportunity to any person who has anything to say on matters of public interest, or which in any way affects the welfare of our town or county. At the same time we do not care to assume the responsibility of advising such an important step as incorporation for this town, under present circumstances. A good many of the towns of the province, some of them not even as large as this one, have adopted incorporation, and so far as we are aware only one of them became dissatisfied with the change and wished to go back to the old order of things. That one, if we remember correctly, was Parrsboro. That town, after a few years' trial of incorporation, petitioned the legislature for an act permitting a return to the first condition of things, which, however, was not done.

It is true that some things can be said in favor of incorporation. It gives a town, or ought to give it, local self-government. It enables the people of any town to have direct and immediate control over the taxes they themselves pay, whereas under the present system these taxes, or a good part of them, are dispersed through the agency of the municipal council. Under some circumstances this might be a matter of grave importance. With us, however, such is not the case, as our municipal council has nevershown the slightest disposition to deal unfairly with this town, or to deny us any reasonably request. While, therefore, this is the case, while every interest of our town can be properly and effectively looked after under the present system, it would seem to be the part of wisdom to let well enough alone. For it must not be forgotten that incorporation brings into existence a certain.

And Still They Come.

More evidence of the wonderful growth of apples, pears, and root crops in this section of the Valley for the past season have been handed in since our last issue, and we are now preparing a cellar as a receptacle for storing away the many beautiful specimens, in order that we may conclusively prove to the unbelieving the statements published in our columns. Among the late donations is a basketful of apples known as the Gloria Mundi, presented by Mrs. Felch, of Clarence, weighing a pound apiece, and measuring in current each; specimens, of the valued Nonpareil from the orchard of Mr. Edward Messenger, of Centreville, and a turnip grown by Mr. Guilford Foster, of West Paradise, weighing fourteen pounds, with a circumference measurement of twenty eight inches. incorporation brings into existence a certain incorporation brings into existence a certain amount of civic machinery, all of which has to be ciled with dollars and cents. The salaries of certain officials, the expense of town elections, meetings of council, and the thousand and one other things incident to incorporation which have to be paid, must of necessity make this a more expensive method of carrying on the affairs of a town than where there are no such officials or expenses. These things mean heavier burdens to the taxpayer with or without compensating advantages, as the case may be. Doubtless, in some of the towns of our province which have become incorporated, the advantages have become incorporated, the advantages of the change have more than compensated for any additional expense incurred. We,

on a system of sewerage, which other places have secured only after incorporation.

We have said that incorporation gives a town, or ought to give it, local self-government. As a matter of fact it does not quite do that, although there is no doubt that it should do so. The towns' incorporation act has been so amended every session since it has been so amended every session since it was first passed that it is not safe to make positive assertions as to what the law is at present. But, of late years, the local government has taken to itself some of the powers given to town councils when the act was originally passed. It was on this account that the quarrel arose with the town coun-large as it is, with interests which were at all likely to suffer under the present order incorporation. But under present circumstances it seems advisable, as already stated,

In 1891 there were 1,480,000,000 persons. In 1900 there will be 1,548,000,000 persons. In 1950 there will be 1,986,000,000 persons. In 2000 there will be 2,548,000,000 persons, and in about 600 years from now the population of the world will be equal to the number of acres of land on the globe, so that there will be on an average just one acre apiece instead of 23 as at present. Belgium is nearly as crowded as that now, having a population of 536 to the square mile.

The entire population of the earth could stand on a piece of land 22 miles square, and allow every person a square yard to stand hold nearly one-half the world's population at one person to the square yard. So we see there is not much danger from overcrowding

N THE VALLEY YEARS AGO - THE INTERNA AL EXHIBITION A GRAND SUCCESS TRAVEL BY THE PRINCE RUPERT AND

MONTICELLO—NOTES.

I have a good many pleasant recollections of your valley in the old time, when we journeyed by the Royal Mail coach from Annapolis to Windsor with Mr. Hamilton or some one of his conferers for a Jehu, and when the shriek of the railway whistle had never disturbed the quiet that always prevailed. In those days the Messrs. Runciman and Messrs. Henderson were among the principal merchants of Annapolis, and Mrs. Foster's and Mr. Hall's were the principal hotels. In Bridgetown, Miner Tupper did a large business; the MONITOR was published by the clever poet and historical writer, W. A. Calnek, and later by Mr. Gidney. Mr. Gibbon, of Aylesford, was well-known to every wayfarer; so was Mr. Lyons, of Kentville, and George V. Rand, of Wolfville, who still. I believe, has the handling of Her Majesty's mails in that place. The "Evangeline route" in those days was known to but a few comparatively, but that few enjoyed it as they could not now, most likely because they are older and feel a tender clinging to the customs and friends of bygone days. The valley, as I knew it in my youth, is recalled by the magnificent display made by its orchardists, stock raisers and manufacturers at the late International exhibition. The fruits shown were incomparable in quality and variety; so were the field grains, vegetables, domestic manufactures, everything which was contributed by your exhibitors. The show of fruit leads me to believe that before many years the Annapolis Valley will have its vineyards and peach orchards no less extensive and profitable than those of Ontario. Wherever apples and pears will grow to such perfection the grape and the peach are sure to flourish if planted in a favorable situation and prothe grape and the peach are sure to flourish if planted in a favorable situation and pro-

the grape and the peach are sure to flourish if planted in a favorable situation and properly cared for.

The exhibition was a grand financial success, the paid admissions numbering about 55,000. This assures their yearly continuance, which will be good news to the agriculturists and manufacturers of the maritime provinces. The splendid bay service which we now enjoy contributed largely to the success of the fair. Some days during the continuance the passenger lists of the Prince Rupert and Monticello numbered over 1000 people. The impetus given to trade here by this large influx of visitors is already observable. Many of our factories are running from 18 to 20 hours daily under a pressure of orders. Several of our wholesale merchants, like Manchester, Robertson & Allison, P. S. MacNutt & Co., Northrup & Co., and Dearborn & Co., are busier than they have been before for years. The career of the last named firm has been a phenomenal one. As coffee and spice grinders they entered into business less than thirty years ago; they became jobbers in fine groceries, and now they occupy the DeVeber building, one of the largest business blocks on Prince William street, and a building of about the same size on Union street, and have customers in every nook and corner of the maritime provinces. This shows what industry, integrity and business habits when combined can accomplish.

Mrs. EDMUND BENT, OF THIS TOWN, LOSES A NEPHEW AND NIECE.

We publish below the particulars of the drowning of Mr. Robert Chesley and his sister Agnes, which melancholy event cast a deep gloom over the many relatives and friends in this town, whom they had visited on a number of occasions, and by whom they account of the disaster is taken from the Lunenburg Progress.

Shortly after ten o'clock Robert and Agnes Chesley, only son and eldest daughter of Stipendiary Chesley, of this town, boarded a sail boat at Young's wharf and headed for South. On arriving the boat was made fast to fishing stage of Israel Spindler, and Miss Chesley proceeded to Ritcey's Cove to keep engagements with piano pupils while her brother remained at South passing the day with some friends. At five o'clock-with the evening they again boarded the boat, put up jib and large mainsail and belayed everything hard and fast. At this juncture the wind was blowing very fiercely, and some of the good people of South, whome, sail dragging in the water. The Knickle boys of the soccupants of the small craft as she ploughed her way homeward. Sol. ### Correspondence.

We do not hold ourselves responsible for th

Transportation and the Discrimination Curse.

Mr. Editor,—Dear Sir,—In a recent issue of your valuable paper I gave some views as to certain disabilities under which the producers of this valley labor. In that article I endeavored to point out a few proofs of retrograde movements of a decidedly lamentable character. I crave the indulgence of your columns again to further exemplify this subject. In this we have ample scope for much to say upon things that we see and things that we know, and of the consequences and the causes.

One Henry J. Fletcher, in the April number of the Forum, told of how the population of all the rural districts of the North-Central States are decreasing in population, and how the cities are growing. He gave statistics to show that along with this swoop of the farmer's sons and daughters, the enterprise, hope and ability of the people from the farms to the workshops, a rapid increase is taking place of the numbers engaged in production, in capital and in plant, and yet the numbers of the individual enterprises constantly decrease. We know, too, how during the last dozen years our own county has decreased in population. And we know also that in the last thirty years if the number of our manufacturing enterprises have not decreased and weakened they have not made a progress at all commensurate with the general progress of the times,

In the Forum for August Mr. Fletcher

of the times,

In the Forum for August Mr. Fletcher
returns again to the subject and in re-introducing it says: "The closing decades of this century are witnessing no more remarkable phenomenon than that shown in the migration of population, not so much from country to country as from place to place in the same country."

Politicians may wrangle over the question of which country is faring worst in this particular, and still the stampede goes on every-Farther on Mr. Fletcher thus expatiates on some of these things we know:

"While the larger cities are rapidly absorbing the manufacturies of the smaller towns, and with them a large portion of the most enterprising citizons, the population of the latter is being recruited, not from abroad, but by retired farmers from the neighborhood. These are excellent people, but they are generally past their period of activity. Their interest is to live quietly and cheaply, and to pay as low taxes as possible. The more numerous they become, proportionately, the more effectually do they stifle organised efforts in the direction of local development. Hence the loss of the smaller towns is greater than the figures would indieate."

dicate.

We know that the deplorable condition indicated by Mr. Fletcher is well advanced in our country. District upon district in our own county has so far lost its acting population that those who are left behind are so far advanced in age that few are to be found to keep the roads of the district in repair, though once there was all that was required. As in proportion to the labor and enterprise which the roads once enjoyed in these localities are dropping away, so are all these localities are dropping away, so are all the enterprises of the district bereft of im-

CONSEQUENCES? Mr. Fletcher says:

Mr. Fletcher affirms, after proceeding from Mr. Fletcher affirms, after proceeding iro point to point:

"Against the multiplied influences ceaseless operating in favor of the great cities, the cortry and lesser towns contend in vain. They of the laws of nature, and are submitted patiently. But in league with them has be another potent agency—the transportation stem of the country—whose management in the past engaged activity in the work of helpithe strong absorb the weak. Prior to the pages of the interstate commerce law in 1887.

The commission in its report said: "The sense of justice receives a shock when one is told that the small dealer in the country town was made to pay three times as much for the carriage of his goods as the city merchant paid upon the like quantity for even a greater distance.

How is the village manufacturer to com-up its track without a word of warning to deprive us of a choice of route. It is time, Mr. Editor, that the British blood began to boil and petty jeakousies were cast to the

—A great colonial exhibition will be held in Montreal next year, opening on Oct. 12th. The exhibition will comprise the products of Canada, Australia, New Zealand, the exhibits at present in England will be sent over and supplemented by others. The government have guaranteed the sum of $250,000 to the exhibition.

Detween railway wharf and Smith's shippard, Wm. Anderson found the lifeless form of a smale. He at once aroused Capt. S. Silver and Mr. Benj. Morash, who appeared on the seene with torches. Failing to recognize one whom they had seen scores of times in life, they sent for Tr. DesBrisay, believing him the features, though slightly bruised and swollen, were those of Miss Chesiley. The body was forthwith removed to the store of Austin Young, near by, where it remained a short while, when Undertaker Hopps took charge and removed the remains to his rooms. A gafftopsail and the cap worn by Robert on leaving home were also found at the rear of the Corkum property, thus showing that the heavily ballasted boat sank and both occupants perished. Robert was 20 and his sister 19 years of age.

distant from where the boat was found yesterday. It is supposed that Chesley went down with the boat, tangled in some rope, and that the body fell out yesterday while the boat was being raised. The mainsail and jibs were set when the boat went down near head shoal. The funeral of both sister and brother took place this afternoon at 4 o'clock and was a melancholy sight. Both bodies were taken from their father's house to the Methodist church, where an appropriate funeral sermon took place. Rev. Mr. Day officiated, assisted by Reverends McGillivray, Haslam, Rafkin, Archibald and Grunland, all representing different denominations. Robert Chesley's body was drawn by the members of the fire department in one of their waggons. The deceased was a member of the company. The hearse containing the body of Agnes Chesley followed. The funeral was very largely attended. The sad catastrophe has cast quite a gloom over the town and everybody is ewe stricken at the sudden and sad termination of the lives of two young, bright and promising children.

—The Nova Scotia Marine Insurance com-pany decided Wednesday to take no more risks. This means virtually an early wind-ing up of the company. It has met with severe losses during the past two years.

"A year ago my father, William Thomp son, was taken suddenly ill with inflam-mation of the bladder. He suffered a great deal and was very low for some time. At last the doctor said he would not get well unless an operation was performed. At this time we read about Hood's Saraapathis time we read about Hood's Barapa-rilla and decided to try it. The Cannon of the Palais Royal.

The Palais Royal is in Paris, France. In the garden is a little cannon. It is sur rounded by a railing. Every morning it is loaded with powder and wadding. No one on earth is allowed to fire it, and yet it is fired every bright day. The thing that and precisely at twelve o'clock, if no cloud are in the way, bang! goes the cannon Now, you want to know how it is done. think I see some of you saying, "Impossible! impossible! I don't believe it!"

Well, it is very simple when you know how it is done. Most of you have seen a burning glass. The cannon is fired with one.

It is fixed so that exactly at twelve o'clock the rays of the sun are brought together on the touchhole of the cannon. They set the powder on fire. So you see that the sun, which is ninety-three million miles off, really fires the cannon. The sun never forgets.

A notable case of filial love came to light in Pittsburg a few days ago, when a 76-year old son came to the office of an aid society to claim his mother, from whom he had been separated by the long illness of both. It was shown that the man had remained a bachelor all his life in order to care for his mother. They came from Ireland thirty years ago and had lived together since that time, as they had previously in the old country, until five months ago, when both were taken sick and had to be removed to a hos

The child that cannot digest milk can digest Cod-liver Oil as it is prepared in Scott's Emulsion. Careful scientific tests have proven it to be more easily digested than milk, butter, or any other fat. That is the reason why puny, sickly children, and thin, emaciated and anæmic persons grow fleshy so rapidly on Scott's Emulsion of Cod-liver
