Technical and Bibliographic Notes/Notes techniques et bibliographiques

origi copy whic repro	Institute has attempted to obtain nal copy available for filming. Fer which may be bibliographically h may alter any of the images in duction, or which may significat sual method of filming, are chec	atures of this unique, the atly change	L'Institut a microfilmé le meilleur exemplaire qu'il lui a été possible de se procurer. Les détails de cet exemplaire qui sont peut-être uniques du point de vue bibliographique, qui peuvent modifier une image reproduite, ou qui peuvent exiger une modification dans la méthode normale de filmage sont indiqués ci-dessous.
	Coloured covers/ Couverture de couleur			Coloured pa Pages de co
	Covers damaged/ Couverture endommagée	•		Pages dama Pages endo
	Covers restored and/or laminate Couverture restaurés et/ou pelli				red and/or la urées et/ou p
	Cover title missing/ Le titre de couverture manque	· •	\checkmark		loured, staine lorées, tachet	d or foxed/ ées ou piquées
	Coloured maps/ Cartes géographiques en couleu	r		Pages detac Pages détac		. a a second the formation of Coloured ink (i.e. other than blu Encre de couleur (i.e. autre que			Showthroug Transparence		, , ,
	Coloured plates and/or illustration Planches et/ou illustrations en c			Quality of p Qualité inég	rint varies/ jale de l'impre	sion
	Bound with other material/ Relié avec d'autres documents			Includes sur Comprend o	pplementary r iu matériel su	naterial/ pplémentaire
	Tight binding may cause shadov along interior margin/ Lare liure serrée peut causer de	l'ombre ou de la		Only edition Seule éditio	i available/ n disponible	• distortion le long de la marge in Blank leaves added during resto appear within the text. Wheneve have been omitted from filming Il se peut que certaines pages b lors d'une restauration apparaiss mais, lorsque cela était possible	ration may er possible, these / lanches ajoutées lent dans le texte,		slips, tissue ensure the b Les pages to obscurcies p etc., ont été	s, etc., have b best possible i btalement ou bar un feuillet	partiellement d'errata, une pel uveau de façon à	ure, pas été filmées. Additional comments:/	·.			v	- -
Ļ	Commentaires supplémentaires:	· · · · · · · · · · · · · · · · · · ·			: ;
	item is filmed at the reduction ra ocumerit est filmé au taux de réd		isous.
10X	142	197	22 Y	· · ·	ж ү "	30 X

10X	14X			18X			•	22X			26X			30X
					\			•
	12X			. •	16X				20X	~		•	24X		·		. 28X				32X

MEMOIRS

OF THE

Marchion. of Pompadour.

WRITTEN BY HERSELF.

Wherein are Difplayed

The Motives of the Wars, Treaties of Peace, Embassies, and Negotiations, in the several Courts of Europe:

The Cabals and Intrigues of Courtiers; the Characters of Generals, and Ministers of State, with the Causes of their Rife and Fall; and, in general, the most remarkable Occurrences at the Court of France, during the last twenty Years of the Reign of Lewis XV.

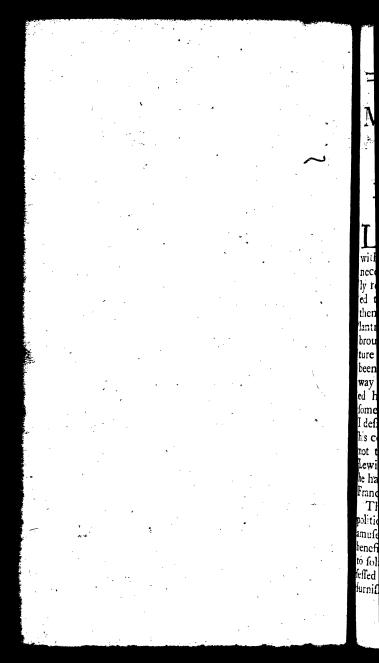

Tranflated from the French.

IN TWO VOLUMES.

VOL. II.

DUBLIN:

Printed for W. and W. Smith, P. Wilson, J. MURPHY, E. WATTS, W. SLEATOR, D. CHAM-BERLAINE, J. POTTS, J. HOEY, JUR. J. WIL-LIAMS, and W. COLLES.

OF THE

EMOIRS

.25

Marchioness of POMPADOUR.

LEWIS XV. as I have faid in another place, vifited me habitually He could not difpenfe with my company, which was become abfolutely neceffary to him : but this inclination had not entirely removed a tafte for transitory amours. He yielded to them by conflication; but never reflected on them without repentance. After an adventure of gallantry, he was more constant than ever. Remorfe. brought him back to himfelf and to me. I may venture to fay, that I enjoyed his infidelity; and had he been entirely divested of it, he would have given way to fome other pattion, that would have feparated him from me. I was under apprehenfions for fome time that his mind would take a warlike turn: Idefired Maurice count Saxe, who regularly paid is court to him, after the campaigns in Flanders, not to dwell to much upon battles and fieges : but lewis affured me, as I have already mentioned, that he had factificed this inclination to the welfare of France.

The king had for fome time devoted himfelf to politics; but this fludy no way interfered with his anufements. He applied himfelf to it through that bench, ent difposition, which naturally prompts him to folace his people. He was defirous of being posfeffed of the prefent flate of Europe : M. De Belleisse furnished him with it. The king shewed it to me :

B

it

it was a fyftem of political-topography. The Mar. fhal entered into a minute detail upon the power of each government. He took a review of all Europe, and ft pulated the ftate of the forces of the different people.

M. de Noailles, who faw this ftate of Europe, faid, "" That there was too much geometry in it; " that the republic of Chriftendom was fubject to " fo many revolutions, which derived their origin " from fo many fecondary caufes, wherewith poli-" tics had no kind of connexion, that cabinets, fre-" quently obtained honour from what was the mere " effect of fortune. France, faid he to me; exerted " her influence to acquire Lorrain : Cardinal " Richelieu could not fucceed in the bufinefs, and " Mazarin mifcarried; accident threw it into the " hands of France under the administration of car " dinal de Fleuri.

d ป

"

0 ď

w

is as ci nd

wl

ha

he day

to

the

ing

hin

get a ti go ing.

with vers

with

alkii

"Europe was engaged for near two hundred year in negociation and war to prevent the crown of Spain_devolving to any branch of the houfe of Bourbon. The will of a weak and languithing prince bequeathed it entirely to France, at a time that Lewis XIV. did not even think of being in cluded in the treaty of partition.

"The English never could have imagined mak ing a conquest of Gibraltar, which gave them a a conquest of Gibraltar, which gave them a a conquest of Gibraltar, which gave them master a conduction of the Mediterranean; when the same acciden that gave Spain to the house of Bourbon, produce that gave Spain to the house of Bourbon, produce ed them the acquission of that important fortres which they have ever fince retained, though the reasons that induced them to gain possession of i mo longer fublist," &c.

" If we were to recur to the origin of great revo " lutions, we fhould find that fortune governed the " world, and that policy, which would reduce al " events to rule, prevails too much in the cabine

" of princes. He added, that these enumerations of "the power of the states of E rope are useles, as "it is not strength that regulates the state of governments, but a certain combination of accidents, in opposition to which neither negociati-"ons nor armies can prevail."

I do not at prefent recollect the precife terms in which this memorial of M. de Belleifle was conceived; I only remember that he concluded with these words: France cannot be hurt by all the "great flates of Europe: Pruffia only is to be "feared, and England dreaded."

Though the king had for fome time been fond of talking of ftate affairs, he was fo polite as to dwell but little upon them in my company. Notwithftanding what I have faid of his gravity, there is no man in France fo agreeable at a téte-a-tête, as Lewis XV. He is fome days fo happy and vivacious, as even to infpire mirth and joy.

I have frequently mentioned his goodnefs; I fhall now give a little anecdote, which will corroborate what I have faid upon that head. One night, after having been pretty late with me in my apartments, he told me he fhould not dine with me the next day (as he frequently ufed to do) having refolved to go to Marli, where he fhould remain till towards the evening. My brother Marigni paid me a morning vifit that day, and as I was quite alone, I defired him to ftay and dine with me. We converfed together for fome time, after which he went to take a turn in Verfailles gardens, till it was the hour to go to dinner.

The king altered his mind and did not go a riding. Inftead of going to Marli, he came to dine with me. He observed the table laid with two covers, and as he had the day before acquainted me with his intended journey, he testified his furprise, afking me for whom I had intended the fecond coe Mar. wer of Europe, ifferent

Lurope, in it; ject to origin h polits, free mere xerted ardinal fs, and is, and of car d yean own of oufe of a time ng inmak em an nafters cident roducrtrefs ch the ch of i d the ce al abine "o ver.

ver. "Sire, I replied, my brother came to fee me "this morning, and as I was alone, I invited him "to dine with me; but as your majefty does me "that honour yourfelf, I thall fend to acquaint "that honour yourfelf, I thall fend to acquaint "thim that he cannot be a gueft." No, replied the king, your brother is one of the family; inflead of removing the cover that was laid for him, only lay another, and we will all, three dine together. My brother returned, and the king behaved to him with all poffible politencis. This is not an important anccdote, but it difplays this prince's regard, even in the most minute affairs.

M. Rouillé furnished the king every day with fresh estimates, by which it appeared that the marine was re-established. This minister publickly faid in 1751 that he had feventy ships of the line, and thirty frigates; but he faid that he had more than there really were. Ministers in general, increase their plan; they all most constantly confound the establishedments already made, with those that shill remain to be made, and these latter frequently never take place.

A man of underftanding faid to me at that time, that if France had a fleet of feventy men of war or frigates, ready to put to fea, the great object of the French marine would be accomplifhed. This fame perfon averred, that we wanted no more to face the English, who have not a greater number of fhips fit for engagement; for, added he, we must not confound the coasting cruizers, and those which are deflined for convoys; they are not comprifed among the number of fhips of the line.

The English embassiador was ordered to keep a watchful eye upon M. Rouillé and all his operations, in order to acquaint his court therewith. He no longer asked the administration, as was customa ry with him, what we intended to do with fo many ships, because he had frequently had for answer, that ம் G

17

me we abo

do

" (

"

" v

the

noe

in a repu

gair

the

The

whie

ever

Hatı

med

their

a diz

told the (" W

" the " wi

" wł

" the

 \mathbf{N}

Marchionels of Pompadour.

that the court of France was not obliged to give. Great-Britain an account of what fhe did.

e me

l him

s me

uaint

eplied

ıstead ly lay

My with rtant

even

with

arine id in thir-

here

blan;

hed.

in to take ime,

ir or

t of This

e to nber

we hofe

cm-

p 2

rati-

He

ma

any

ver, that The king m ide a promotion of fea officers; commodores were appointed, captains and old lieutenants were promoted, and there was fo much buffle made about the flate of the marine, that the court of L_a ondon began to take umbrage at it.

A foreign embaffador, told me one day upon thisoccafion, that he differend a great error in the French government, that is to fay, "that we make a flew "of ourfelves to all Europe and our enemies. He. "added, there are no fecrets of flate at Verfailles; all-"Chriftendom is informed of the defigns of France, "long before fle is in a condition to execute them, "whereby they are fruftrated."

An affair that no way related to France, excited the attention of the king for a fhort time. The Genoefe (an unfteady people, and who have never been in a ftate of tranquillity fince the foundation of their republic) had carried on a war for a long time againft the Corficans, whom they ftiled rebels, whilft the Corficans gave them the appellation of tyrants. There had been feveral engagements between them, which ferved only to protract the war, as peace muft ever be the refult of a reconciliation of fentiments. Hatred and antipathy had barred all the avenues to a mediation. Their averfion to each other furpaffed their reciprocal dread. If religion itfelf had fomented a division, it could not have been more animated.

Marfhal Belleifle, fpeaking to me of this war, often told me that the Genoefe would never be rulers over the Corficans; for which he affigned this reafon; "When the principal ftate combats with its fubjects, "the firft battle muft decide the quarrel, otherwife it will remain for a long time undetermined. Rebels, "who by fieges and battles, poife the fovereign au-"thority, no longer bear the name of fubjects, but" B 3 "adopt

MEMOIRS of the

" adopt that of enemies; for the force of arms, " which deftroys all privile: e, reftores the level "

ſa

ſe ot

ef

no

Ъl

be

Ġ.

"

"

"

"

ple

ma

ftri

we

ma

2 C

All

at-tori

bar

ears

a fy ora

loq

two upo

tive

that

ing

goc

faill

А

Such people as are in fubjection to kings, would no longer be fe, if they were capable of throwing off their fubmiffion; for fubordination was not agreed upon by convention, but compelled by violence or open force. So that a people who throw off the yoke, are not rebels any farther than their ill conduct in the revolution, and their ignorance to procure the means of fuccefs, give them this title.

The Genoefe, after fru tlefs endeavours to reduce the Corficans, took a wrong ftep in addreffing themfelves to foreign powers; France, of whom they had afked fuccours, furnified them with fome troops and a commander. The Venetian embaffador, who was then at Paris, faid upon this occafion ; "That the "Gen efe, who we'e reckoned to be people of great "memory, had loft their recollection with regard to "France, as they forgot that the bombarded Genoa "in the time of Lewis XIV. and that the republic "the reign of Lewis XV."

The Genoefe officers, whom the fenate had appointed and fent to that island for the defence of their rights, were greater foes to the republic than they were to the Corfians, feeking difputes with the French mediators, under pretence that they excited those islanders to hold them in contempt. If the al'egation had been juft, they should have connived at it, and purfued, without interruption, the reftoration of peace. But envy, that vice fo natural to Ital ans, and particularly the Genoefe, occafioned this diffention. They faw with jealous eyes, foreigners interfering in a peace, all the honourof which they were defirous of keeping to themselves. The republic, equally jealous of their own officers, as these were of the French, took another ill-judged measure, by making application to the court of Verfailles.

6,

Marchionels of Pompadour.

rms,

"

rould

g off reed

te or bd...&

e the

duce

hem-

had

and was

t the great

rd to enoa

ublic

er, in i ap-

ke of

than

h the cited

the lived

efto-

al to oned

hich

The

lged

/er-lles,

25 fo-

the

failles, to know how they should act against themfelves, and what fatisfaction the king required. Any other nation would rather have given up their intereft with respect to Corfica, which even France could not bring back to its duty, than to have thus humbled themselves, but the republic of Genoa have been long accuftomed to meannefs and fubmiffion.

" The Genoefe, faid the King, deferve to be " punished, by my interfering no longer with their " affairs : but they have paved the way for my fon " Don Philip into Italy, and I owe them fome ac-, " knowledgment — this predominates in my heart " over the refentment which their conduct deferves."

Lewis XV. who had appointed M. de Chauvelin plenipotentiary in the island of Corfica, to terminate matters in an amicable manner, gave him fresh instructions to hasten his negotiation, and new orders were dispatched to the marquils of Cursai, who commanded the French trops.

These two mediators settled the place for holding a congress, and peace was in appearance concluded. All formalities were observed : Harangues were made at the opening of the affemblies, and flowers of rhetoric were fcattered amongst an ignorant and bar-The Corficans ftretched their large barous people. ears to these studied orations, but did not understand a fyllable. They replied with acclamations, and the orators imagined they had feduced them by their eloquence.

After these speeches, the treaty, or regulations between the Republic and the Corficans, was brought upon the carpet. Each party thereby retained prerogatives which made them independent of each other; that is to fay, the subjects of this republic were treating for their liberty. The Corficans terminated by negociation, what they could not accomplish by arms. When the articles of the treaty were fent to Verfailles, Marshal Belleifle publickly faid, " That the " Republic

B 4

MEMOIRS of the-pea

we wh

the

had

in any

ed

the {yfŧ niu

chin him

and of a

gov

his

Thi

the

gen

him

they grat

men

lifhe

vant

witł

they

thef

turn king fay, I

and

previ

ever

T

⁶⁶ Republic had fubmitted too much : that they, ⁶⁶ fhould have granted an amnefty to the rebels, and ⁶⁶ not have treated with them : that fubjects who ⁶⁶ have thrown off the yoke, in returning to their ⁶⁶ duty, fhould obtain nothing but pardon. He ⁶⁶ added, that the Corficans fhould either be punifhed ⁶⁶ as guilty of treafon, or elfe abandoned as rebels; ⁶⁶ for fubjects who are f. fficiently powerful to ob-⁶⁶ lige the fovereign to treat with them, are not ⁶⁶ faithful enough to fubmit long to obedience."

These reflections appeared to be the more justly founded, as all these negotiations forn became useles, and a war was prefently after kindled.

Be this as it may, the Genoese were for the prefent leit here, the attention of every one being taken up with news from Asia, which greatly flattered the king's expectations. We were informed from India, that the Nabob had confidence enough in France, to place his political interest in the hands of a Frenchman, named Dup'eix; and that the nation of the Marats, who were subject to the Nabob, had appointed him their commander in chief.

It is faid that Lewis XIV. who was animated with every kind of glory, was fenfibly ftruck with the information given him by an ambaffador from the king of Siam, who was delegated to acquaint him that his name was held in great veneration in those ftates. He teftified more public joy, and was more flattered with this honour, than it he had obtained an important conqueft.

The peace concluded with the Nabob, and the confidence which this prince reposed in France, were objects of far greater confequence. They increased the riches of the flate, whereas the embasify from Siam had no other effect than flattering the monarch's vanity.

Dupleix became at once plenipotentiary and generaliffimo; he flipulated the terms of the treaty of peace, t they pe els, and we s who o their ha He nifhed ebels; to obre not juftly e ufe-

e pretaken ttered from gh in ds of ation , had with e inking that ates. ered por-

the were afed rom ch's

ene-7 of ace, peace, and received the command. These two posts were preceded by an important negociation, without which he could never have obtained them; he fixed the unsteady disposition of the Marats. This nation had been hitherto divided into various factions, who, in weakening themselves, prevented France de iving any advantage from them. This foreigner upbraided them with their impositic conduct, and taught them to pursue connected views, and an uniform.... system.

This Duple x was not, however, any great genus: but there are pe ple who perform great chings with very little capacity. We have fince feen him at Pars fallen from the pinnacle of his fame, and at length give up his breath with the reputation of a many who, fo far from having been ca, able of governing India, had not talents fufficient to regulate his own houfhold affairs.

He had a great law fuit with the India company. This quarrel is equally remarkable by the nature of the demand, as by that of the refufal. The Nabob's general declared, that the directors were indebted to him feveral millions, and the directors fet forth that they owed him nothing. There is, in generals ingratitude on the one fide, and but little acknow edgment on the other. The memorials that were publifhed upon this occafion, produced at leaft this advantage, they opened the eyes of the government with refpect to many things relative to India, which they would never have been a quainted with, had not thefe publications taken place.

I made bufinefs, pleafures, and amufements, by turns fucceed at Verfailles, which ftill prevented the king's ferious refle ions. Lewis XV. exifted, I may fay, by a confliction which I communicated to him, and this factitious temperament hindered his own prevailing. I believe he would have been at length overcome without that art which I employed to re-

B.5

press

. T

"

"

"

"

"

ы

۵۵ ۵۵

66

"

66 66

66 ħ

fath

a go

fana

mig

ing

cauf

henf of cl

drea is fre

N

P

fron

of it

mea.

of v

part them

by a confi

avoi

I fion

prefs nature. Notwithftanding this precaution, there were moments in which he gave himfelf up to melancholy. It was then neceffary to invent new pleafures, in order to excite fresh fensations. As foon as I percei ed these pr duced no effect, I redo abled my attention to substitute others that might be more prevalent.

Re igion was the greateft obstacle I had to furmount, f. r the king was very devout. He prayed regularly, and went every day to mass, but did not pe form his Easter-devotions. This estrangement from the factaments arole rather from an excels of delicacy, than a contempt for the communion. His transfitory amours separated him from the factament, which he feared to prophane. The jesuit who enjoyed the title of his confession, had made various attempts to conquer his delicacy upon this head. His power - ould have been more extensive, as his penitent would have been the more at his devotion; but Lew is XV. never submitted.

I was judged a proper infrument to hint fomething to the mona ch upon this fubject; but it was neceffary that I flood d begin by convincing myfelf, in ther to perfuade the King. This was thought an eafy matter; people of the firft rank, and of confiderable dignity in the church, but who flad not be named here, fearing that the Roman catholic religion might appear to lofe ground to the enemies of the flate, undertook this great work.

I was not much verfed in this kind of matters; for the women of Paris have no more religion than what is just necessfary to prevent their having none at all.

These able theologists fettled it as a principle, "That feandal in a king was the greatest evil he "could be guilty of : that he is the mirrour, where every one looks to see himses : that his example for carries with it that of the state : that from the "could be guilty of the state : that from the "could be guilty of the state : that from the "could be guilty of the state : that from the "could be guilty of the state : that from the "could be guilty of the state : that from the

there

me-

blea-

foon bled

nore

lur-

ayed

not nent

s of

His

ent,

en-

at-

His

eni-

but

me-

was felf, ght

l of not res of

rs ;

han

bne

ble,

he ere

ple

the

ne

" time the King did not commune, there were up-" wards of a million of fubjects in France, who no " longer part ok of the facraments: that the defer-" tion from the holy table was become general," " &c. &c.

Then speaking of constitutions, they added, "That God had given power to his ministes to "absolve pass fins; that repentance effaced in hea-"ven crimes committed upon earth: that the Di-"vinity, in forming man, had been obliged to give "wav to his weakness: that we should always "fulfil our christian obligations, notwithstanding "the continual tem tations with which the heart " of man is furrounded," &cc. &cc.

In a word, I faw through these maxims of the fathers of the church, that the King, in order to be a good catholic, should be regularly guilty of profanation of the facrament once a year.

I refuted taking upon myle if this moral committion. I had a glimple of those confequences which might have affected mylelf. This prince's approaching the communion table, must neceffully have cauled a revolution in him. I was under lefs apprehension for the King's religion, than the intrigues of churchmen. The confessor was particularly to be dreaded. He is always powerful, when the monarch is frequently at his feet.

Neither did I advife the King to absent himself from the holy table. I left things just as they were. Peace, which had reftored political tranquillity, of itself produced fresh divisions in the state. Churchmen, the clergy; and the parliament, who in time of war, unites themselves to the administration, to part cipate of public misfortunes, in their turn create them, when battles and fieges are passed: fo that by a fatality, which is, perhaps, derived from the constitution itself, F ance must always be armed to avoid domestic quarrels; or continually wage, war with with herfelf, to prevent that of the enemy. I have heard very able politicians fay, that this arifes from the government's not being fufficiently powerful to fupp els di ifi ns abroad, nor fufficiently abfolute to deftroy differitions at home : a mixed flate that willone day make it a prey to its enemies, or a victim to its fubjects.

A trifing affair gave rife to a great mifunderftanding between the court and the parliament, which was the diffribution of the alms collected for the mendicants. The directors of the holpital of Paris had ne er yet been blamed by either the court or the sity, because the war had engaged the attention of the government; but peace being reftored, which gave them leifure to infpect into the minuteft affairs, they at length took this into confideration.

The archbishop of Paris claimed this jurification by ight; the King was of the fame opinion; but the parliament judged differently, and henceforward repreferrations and deputations took place. A Prince of the blood royal faid upon this occasion, The parliament of Paris mult have very litter to do, when they quarrel with the King about beggars.

Lewis XV. iff ied an arret in favour of the archbifhop; it was to be regifteed, and now diffention broke out. The parliament went to Verfail is and came back—they met, they adjourned; but the King fhewed himfelf abfelute. He wrote in thefe terms to the chambers affembled. " If I have " thought proper to allow you to make remon-" ftrances to me upon the edicts and declarations " which I fend you to be regiftered, I never pave " you the power to annul or alter them, under pre-" tence of mod fication — It is my will that my de-" claration concerning the hofpital be regiftered " purely and fimple. I fhall fee that my parliament " obey my orders."

This

2 ri p

m rá

W fu

h

w

66 66

66

66 66

"

"

"

66

66 66

56 лd

in

th

re th

ac laf

fef

the pa fol

M the 13

This was fpeaking like a mafter: the King was animated at certain moments to fupport all his rights; but the goodnefs of his heart, his love of peace, and the tranq tillity of the flate and perhaps more than all, an undetermined character, difcouraged by difficul ies and ppolition, made him yield.

I often complained to him of this difposition, which induced him to grant what he had at first refufed. "What would you have me do, madam ?"" he faid to me with that complatiance and fweetness which are to natural to him. " I know I fhould " harden mvself against certain bodies, who want " to raife their authority upon a 'evel with my. " throne. But I facrifice my refentment to the ge-" neral tranquillity. I tremble to think of the mf-" fortunes, that the people fuffered under the reign " of my great grandfather, by the qua rels which " arole between the court and the parliament. " These quarrels renewed wivil wars, which imse merfed France in the deepeft defolation. I would " rather be complaifant than oftentatious, as the " conjequences of the latter might be fatal to my "Mubjects."

The majority of the members of the council were not of this way of thinking; one of the most penetrating faid, that under a firm and abfolute government, the laws were reftored to their vigour, and abufes reformed; whereas indulgence and relaxation were the effects of a weak and irrefolute administration. I acknowledge that I differ much in opin on from this last, and I could have wished that the King had poffeffed a little more refolution. The affair relating to the hospital terminated, like most of those of the parliament, that is to fay, by modifications.

The King of his own accord, and without being follicited, app inted the count de St Florentin and M. Roudlé ministers of state: They were each of them fecretaries of state. A courtier at that time faid.

have irom ul to e to will ftim andhich

the Paris

t or tion hich airs, tion. but. vard in ີຄ bar-: ihen. chtion. and the heſe ave onions ave hredered ent his

MEMOIR S of the 14

faid, that the King had done a great deal in appointing them his fecretaries, and that he had done too much in creating them minifters. It is certain that thefe two men had done nothing to entitle them to that rank. M Rouillé in particular, was far from being bright, having no other recommendation than his affidu ty and application, which most constantly deftroy every thing, when they are not accompanied with genius. í e t pti cl

n

n

ti

ni

in

to

"

gi

qu

teg

"

"

66

"

"

nio

alr

thi

do

up

wh

affi

app

lifh

vail

ex∤

to.

It was faid at Paris that I induced the King to make this nomination. The truth is, that I no way interfered in it: Nay, it was added, that M. de St. Florentin had fold himfelf to me, and that I jaid him for the letters de cachet which. I had occasion for to drive fuch perfons from Paris as difpleafed me. Those who spoke in this manner were ignorant that the great letters de cachet were not issued but in the name and by the confent of the King. The sovereign commands and the min-fter obeys.

I had very little acquaintance with this fecretary of ftate; he paid his court to me like the other minifters: but he feldom fpoke to me about private affairs. I found him at court, the King employed him, and this fufficed me.

M. Rouillé had been recommended toome. I mentioned him to the King. I recommended him to this Prince, not as a great minister, but as an honeft man.

M. de Puifieux, fecretary of flate for the department of foreign affairs, begged lea e to retire. This office was difficult to manage: feveral perfors had refufed it. Those who had before filled this employment, had fown diforder in this department, and the last troubles of Europe had compleated its confusion. France was not in a fituation to hole that the last treaty of peace could long fublish, and in time of was there was m re business in this department than in all the others. One minister is fearce fufficient.

int-

too.

that

h to om

han

hily

hied

r to

way:

St.

aid

ion

ne.

lhat

the

fo-

ary her ate

ved

I

im

ho-

rt-

his ad

•v− nd

n-

hat

in

tce nt.

I٢

-*`

fufficient when every thing is in order, but when every thing is in confution, before fieges and battles take place, it is impossible for him to go on.

I very feldom faw M; de Puifieux. Those who were perfonally acquainted with his min fter, have old me that he had knowledge and understanding; but that he was deficient in that superiority of genius which characterizes a statessman. He had gone through the negociations for which he was appointed with such middling talents, as never confer any suture reputation. He may be ranked with th se common ministers, who atter having compleated their career in this world, never enter upon any in history.

After the letrear of M. de Puisieux, the King faid to me: "Well, madam, to whom shall we give "the department of foreign affairs?" And without giving me time to reply, he added This office requires an able minister, a man of assiduty and integrity. Do you know of such a one in my kingdom?

"Sire, I replied, what you require is pretty dif-"ficult to be found; but fome of your fubjects may "poffefs all these qualities; and amongst this num-"ber, I may venture to presume, that the marquis "de St. Contest, your ambassiador at the Hague, "deferves a distinguiss of the trans." I am of your opinion, the King immediately faid; M. Contest has already done me such services, as have entitled him to this place : I will give it to him; and the ambassiado immediately left the Hague, to come and take upon him this office.

I fhall in this place mention an effablishment which I planned, and to which the King gave his affiftance, in order to put it in execution: This will appear but a triffing affair to the fe who effimate effablishments in proportion as they are firiking. I prevailed upon Lewis XV to change the object of the expence made for public rej icings, by applying it to the increase of the human species, which luxury and 16 and debauchery conftantly diminifh in France. Hist Majefty gave orders in conference, that 600,000 lives, which we eas be exceeded for file-works, on account of the birth of he dake of Burgundy, fheild be divided into portions an night a certain number of young women, to be married in the capital. It was then intended that the fame orders fhould be ferminto the provinces. The population of Paris is but the fixteenth parts of the whole monarchy; fo that, if all the other parts of France had followed the fame example fet them by the metropolis, population would have been confiderably increafed in France.

M. de Belleisle, who made all the calculations, averred that these marrages would furnish near-20,000 citizens annually to the mona chy: thus do finall things promote reat ones, and one fingle additional turn in the finances contributes to aggrandize a flate. No one suffected that I had tramed this establishment, any more than several others which I. created for the advantage of France, and from which many perfons who had no hand in them, derived honour to themselves; whils I was reproached with others that were detrimental to the government, and of which I was entirely ignorant.

The fweets of peace began to be elifhed, when the first sparks of the torch of war were perceived from a diffance. The duke of Mirepoix complained to the court of London of f me grevances with which the French re oached the English, and the English ambaffador at Paris rem instrated against the conduct of the French with respect to the English. They wanted to make in ractions upon the treaty of peace, but they did not know where to begin. The time for fighting was n't yet come; battles by fea and land, that were to c eate great revolutions, were anticipated by preparations on both fides.

The

to de

аb

na

cle

bel

of tra

to ĥοι

tha

dan

the.

gra

plac

. whi

his/

lovi

thei

fore

Lew

birth

perio

that this

happ

of lo

der, T

fourc

felf t

or fo langu

and t

kin s

great

Marchionels of Pompadour.

His

000 - rks,

h jv,

lain :

ca-

ders

hole

nce -

me-

ably •

5 bns, ear∙

do

gle

an-ned ·

lich

om

de-

hed

nt,

hen

ved∙

hed∙ ith

he.

he

ſh.

of

he

lea.

hs,

ha

tion

The birth of the duke of Burgundy came in time to divert the occupations of the court. The diforder in the administration, the difficulty of finding able ministers, the confusion in the state of the finances, the mifery of the people, the obftinacy of the clergy, the perverseness of the parliament, and the behaviour of the English, who th eatned war in time of peace; these all united to interrupt the King's tranquillity. He, however, yielded for fome time to the pleafure of feeing his crown fecured to his houfe. Kings are more fenfible of this kind of joy. than is imagined. They fancy, that in their defcendants they fee their regn perpetuated ; it feems to them as if they did not die, if when they go to the grave, they have an heir in whofe hands they can place the sceptre. The rejoicings of the people, which the King was made acquainted with, increafed his felicity. The Parifians, who make a point of loving their fovereign, furpaffed themfelves in their demonstrations of joy.

There were great feftivals at court. All the foreign minifters flrove to be first in com limenting Lewis XV. who congratulated himself upon this birth. I never faw him to happy. This was the only period of his life, whilst I remained at Verfailles, that I found him completely joyful : I also felt at this inftant a fensible pleafure, to fee the King fo happy. His usual gaiety was much increased, and of longer duration. Our interviews were more tender, and our conversation more lively and animated.

This epocha made me reflect upon the few refources which the human heart has within itfelf to be happy. Favourable combinations of nature or fortune are neceffary to draw it from that flate of languor, in which it is almost constantly immersed: and this fatal law must furely be general, when even kings are not exempt from it. But there is a still greater misfortune attendant on humanity, which is.

MEMOIR S of the

the

Dut

hen

they

exaE

cial.

I

thefe

and have

form

Bona

me fo

maki

carrie

peop

pliant

court

Lewis

reign

our a well a

but w

were

The

in pro

cant.

Th

Auchi

Cardir

enjoyi

others.

duchy

King's

tier say

for Ca

ŤЪ

is, that pleafure is almost constantly counterbalanced by pain. One might fay, that in the human heart there are two equal measures of joy and mifery, and in proportion as the one is emptied the other is filled.

State affairs, and advices from foreign courts, foon overcaft the court w th ferious looks, and the King loft his gaiety, and became more melancholy than ever.

Every time there was any important post to fill, or any confiderable employment to be given away, the courtiers great'y increased their complaifance towards me. I had a conftant train of folicitors. The Marquis de St. Contest having entered upon the post of fecretary of state for foreign affairs, the embasiy in Holland was vacant. M. de Bonac was mentioned to me in a favourable manner. I had but very little knowledge of him; I acquainted myfelf with his talents for negociation, and in confequence of the picture that was drawn to me of him, I interested myfelf in his favour. I spoke of him to the King, who appointed him his embaffador to the States Ge-As many courtiers interceded for the place, neral I made myself as many enemies as were refused it. The King's fervice and that of the flate determined me in favour of M. de Bonac, who, it was faid, had the neceffary qualifications to do honour to his country.

The Prince of Soubife faid, that of all the embaffies in Europe, that of the Seven Provinces was the most difficult, as, in all the other courts, negociations are carried on with princes of a generous turn of mind, who often lofe fight of their own advantages; whereas in Holland, the minister treats with merchants, who have their interest constantly in view. He added, that Holland is fo fituated, that in the wars between France and England, it may derive advantages from the one, and contribute to the.

iced -

eart

and

r is

oon

Ling

han

fill,

vay,

to-

The

b∩ft affy

nti-ery vith

of

eft-

ng,

Ge-

ce,

it.

hed

id,

his

mvas

zo-

bus

wn

ats

tly

hat

ay

to he .. the other. Wherefore those who treat with the Dutch should have a great share of address, to make them declare when their succours are necessary; and they should have great abilities to keep them in an exact neutrality, when their arms may be prejudicial, &c.

I do not know whether M. de Bonac poffeffed all these qualities; for every thing is difguised at court, and people are not known till fuch time as they have been tried, and it is then too late to form a judgment that can be advantageous. M. de Bonac was an officer; this circumstance alone made me for fome time hefitate upon the choice I p opofed making. I never had any great faith in negociations carried on by military men. They are a kind of people that feldom have a turn of mind, and that pliant disposit on necessary to succeed at foreign courts : but this is the age of warlike ministers. Lewis XV. has employed no others during his whole reign : and this, perhaps, is one of the reasons, why our affairs at foreign courts have not succeeded to well as we might have expected.

Those churchmen who make vows of poverty, but who are more covetous of riches than laymen, were also very affiduous in paying their c urt to me. The number of these that attended me, increased in proportion as abbeys and bishopricks became vacant.

There were many candidates for the abbey of Auchin, but the King disposed of it in favour of Cardinal York, brother to the Pretender, who by enjoying this benefice, with the possession of feveral others, was richer than the real possession of the duchy of York. This opulence, which in England the King's fons and brothers do not enjoy, made a courtier fay upon this occasion, that it was very lucky for Cardinal York, that the house of Stuart had been

M E M O I R S of the

.#6

"

"

"

"

"

"

"

"

"

"

"

" ł " r

" -r

« j

" r

" ci " h:

" gi

" ar

" fa

" w

" ric " of

" m

،، for "

" ind

" də

" wh

" cor " bei

" 1

" ft " d

" d " b

"

been difpoffeffed of the throne of G eat-Britain; forwithout this accident, he would have been only a poor Englifh citizen, inftead of a rich Roman prince. People, however, complained of the King's nothaving given this benefice to a Frenchman, who would have expended the revenue of it in the kingdom, inftead of its being carried into Italy, which was now the cafe by this nomination. But those who reason in this manner did not know that kings who waged war against reigning families, gave alms to those families whose reign was expired. Moreover France had obligations to this unfortunate house. In the wars which France carried on, the Pretender was brought upon the carpet, and fent off, in the fame manner as an actor is upon the ftage.

In politics, those who perform a part muft be paid; and I believe I have faid in another place, that France never ferioufly thought of placing the Pretender on the throne of England.

M. de Machault, keeper of the feals and comptroller general, who laboured to re-effablish the finances, fucceeded therein but flowly. The King, who had an effimate of the national debts laid before him every month, found them always in the fame fi tuation. The financiers engroffed all the money of the ftate, which made M. de Machault fays to the King, Sire, I fee but one method of bringing the money back into the treasury, which is to tax hôtel des fermes, or office of the farms.

This propofal of the minister agreed perfectly well with an anonymous memorial, which was dedicated to me at Verfailles, and which I had read to the King: it was conceived in these terms. "The actual riches "of the state confiss of about eleven hundred milli-"ons of specie. This sum, in order to animate the "whole body politic, should every where circulate geometrically. But this proportion is far from being settled in France, where it may be demon-"fratively

20

" ftratively proved, that two hundred individuals " poffels half the coin of the kingdom. Thefe in-" dividuals are the financiers : their cash is that of " the ftate : it contains the fortunes of all the " citizens. Riches are daily buried in their coffers " as in a gulf. The crown, by yelding to a com-" pany the duties upon the entry of goods, never " intended to fubfcuibe to the ruin of the flate. It " granted the power of collecting those imposts to " clerks, who by their activity and industry ought " to enrich the flate, and not impoverish it. This " was the inflitution of farms; and inafmuch as they " have fwerved from this plan, they are become a " monopoly of the company. The King has a " right to reform abufes; and every contract that " includes a grie ance is of itfelf void.

"It is not propoled to cor ect paft errors, but to "remove prefent evils. If an attempt is never made, "fuccefs cannot be expected. In dangerous diforders violent rened es are neceffary. There is "but one method of reftoring the courfe of general circulation, which the monopoly of the company has interrupted. This is the effablifhment of an ardent chamber, wherein the financiers fhould give an account of their management of the farms, and which fhould enquire into the title "whereby they are in pofieffion of fuch immenfe riches, fin order to transfer them for the benefit of the crown, as foon as the glievance and the "mon poly fhall be afcertained.

"To prevent the outcries of avarice, and the "fordid love of pelf, against this regulation, two "incontestable principles must previously be laid "down.

"I. That the great profits of royal companies, "when exceffive, no longer bear that name, but "come under the denomination of monopolies, "being contrary to the intentions of the prince, who "neither late

om.

onvely

; for nly a

2 I

MEMOIRS of the

" neither could nor would diveft himfelf of great advantages upon any confideration whatever."

 2. That a King is always a minor, in regard  to any grievance in the general finances: and that  he is authorized by all the fundamental laws to  annul a contract that is permissions to the flate and  his people.

"That to proceed legally against the financiers,
"the ardent chamber thould nominate commissions"
"to examine the books of the farmers-general.
"After having made an abstract thereof, they should "report the monopolies used to accumulate these "great riches, of which the company is possible."

"From thence they fhould have recourse to the annual sub d visions, in order to pursue the ne ceffary clue, and ascertain the real state of the accounts

"This operation being compleated, all the farm "ers-general fh uld be fummoned, one after ano "ther, before the tribunal of the ardent chamber to give an account of the fum which they mul have appropriated to themfelves, according to the intelligence obtained.

"They should be directed to reftore it all, ex cept fix per cent. which should be granted them as interest for their advanced money.

⁶⁶ In cafe of difobedience, they fhould be confine ⁶⁶ and kept in prifon, until they had made entire ref ⁶⁶ titution of the whole fum, without deducting an ⁶⁶ intereft.

"The chief clerks, fuch as directors; register comptrollers, &c. should be fubpœnaed before th ardent chamber, and obliged to make restitution ⁶⁶ in the fame manner as the farmers general.

⁶⁶ None fhould be exempted, but fuch only a ⁶⁶ received nothing but wages of the company.
⁶⁶ &c. &c.

" According

6

"

"

"

"

"

"

"

8

m ha

fin

lif

is pe

fta

Sat

wł

Tha

laid

Ĩŀ

the

com mar

ben

per is k

befd

mor

was but

com

22

of great ver." n regard and that laws to ftate and

anciers, miffarie general y fhould te the ffeffed." fe to the the ne of the ne farm ter ano hamber ey mul g to th > all, ex ed them

confine tire rel ting any egiften fore the itution l. only a mpany cording "According to a calculation made hereupon, 300, 000, 000, will return into the royal treafury, without imposing any tax upon the people.

"The eftablishing of an ardent chamber to com-"pel the farmers to produce their accounts, is not "(according to this memorial) an infraction of the "rights of the people, nor a breach of civil liber-"ty. Fouquet, intendant-general of the finances, "in the former reign, was by a private commission "adjudged to be divested of those immense fums, "which he had accumulated by monopolies," &c. &c.

This memorial was not put in execution, any more than the greater part of those plans which have fince appeared for the re-eftab ishment of the finances. Much has been faid in France of demolifting the farmers-general; but when this fcheme is to be executed no one dare affift, becaufe those people have a great deal of money, and every body stands in need of them. I one day asked Marshal Saxe, who was very intimate with La Poupeliniere. what engaging qualities this farmer-general poffeffed, that could fo much attract the Marshal. Madam. faid he, be has one that to me is excellent; for when I have occasion for a hundred thousand livres, I find them in his coffer; whereas when I apply to the comptroller-general, he constantly tells me he has no maney.

A prince of the blood faid, that these people were beneficial, for the very reason that they appeared pernicious: for that fince they were appointed, it is known where the riches of the state lie, whereas before no one knew where they were deposited.

The farmers ceneral got information of the memorial drawn up against the company, and another was penned to refute it. But this confisted of nothing but mere words. It chiefly difplayed the util ty of the company, who could instantaneously furnish confiderable derable fums to the government in preffing exigencies: but the memorial took no not ce that this money belonged to the state, and that the farme is are nothing more than agents to advance it, the money being raifed upon the people.

MEMOIRS of the

M. de Belleisle, who read this answer, faid to me, " These people, among whom there are ma-" ny perfons of fenfe, are fo prejudiced in favour of " their interest, that they are always extravagant " when they are upon the fubject of the finances. " There is a capital error in the contract of the " farms, which is, that it puts too much money " into the pockets of a few individuals."

I have often at Verfailles met with advocates who pleaded the caufe of the farmers general: but I never met with any judges that were favourable to them.

In the midft of domestic affairs, which occupied the administration and afflicted the King, a thoufand different people eagerly endeavoured to prefent memorials to me for promoting arts, and increasing manufactures. I was unacquainted with the particulars upon which they turned ; I defired the minister; who was fometimes bufy with the King, to acquaint me with the advantages which the flate derived from the prodigious number of manufactures established in France.

" This, madam, (faid this flatesman) is a matter  that would take great time to impart to you: it * would be neceffary to recur to the age of Lewis "XIV. in which he made many alterations in " France, and who was called Great, becaufe he " ftruck fome great ftrokes.

" This Prince, who poffeffed every kind of am-" bition, was not devoid of that of multiplying " manufactures. Colbert his minister completely " backed his defigns; he paffed his life in effablish-" ing trades as well as increasing arts; and as he had

æ

" "

"

"

"

" "

"

"

" h

" g "

" cl " es

kc vd

"

a v

"

p

66 " fo

m ĸ du

" " tha

" dei " fhe

"p,c tha

as i M.

gined

the de he ric

he fai

gricu

mifts duction

hole f

Vor

"

kigen-

s mos are noney

lid to e ma-

bur of agant

ances.

f the honey

who

I ne-

le to apieä

thou-

efent

afing

ticu-

ifter;

uaint

from

ed in atter

1: it

ewis

s in e he amving

telv

ifhs he had

" had occasion for a great number of workmen to " accomplish his design, he sent for five hundred " thousand husbandmen from the country to pro-" mote the industry of cities. From that time such " lands as were in want of hands remained unculti-" vated. This minister did not confider, that to " increase the form he should multiply the matter. " This the King over-looked also. Lewis XIV. " was entirely taken up with the thirst of dominion, " and this passion favoured those of all his ministers, " who were desirous of sharing this ambition with " him.

"The kingdom was filled with handicraft fmen; great luxury, the neceffary confequence, took place, and from that time France, whole happy climate fhould made it fuperior, in point of riches, to all the other flates of Europe, was impoverifhed.

"Neverthelefs, the minister, who has fince followed the plan of M. Colbert, has continued multiplying the arts, at the expense of the produce of agriculture.

"This policy is fupported by a reafon, which is, "that this induftry lays all the flates of Europe under contribution; but France does not fee that fhe begins by taxing herfelt, in diminifhing the produce of her first fubflance: a difadvantage that immediately affects the power of the flate, as it flops the prog efs of population."

M. de Belleisle was not of this opinion : he imained that industry could supply every thing, even the deficiencies of production; for according to him the riches of a state depend upon its circulation; and the faid that arts made money circulate better than agriculture: but he was missible. Eminent ceconomiss have fince demonstrated to me that the productions of the easth create real riches, whereas those formed by industry are only fictuious. Be this Vol. II. C 25 as it may, I determined to protect arts, and in torder to encourage manufactures, I furnished the neceffary unds to bring fome into effeem.

Though the King's habitual disposition to visit me, made all France confider this inclination as his determined tafte; the women conftantly preferved a fecret defire of supplanting me in the heart of this Prince. Lewis XV. always met with some in ambuscade. He could not go up or down flairs in his way to his own apartment, without meeting a beauty. The women of Paris, who are feldom in love with any thing but the opera or the play-house became enamoned with Versailles. They vesited this place pretty regularly.

ł

3 ī

Ī

b ť

h

F

Ň

fc

ŧh

m

N

pa

VO

Ita

ph pla un

Bo

bu

The cuftom which Lewis XIV. eftablished of being applied to in perfon, when any favour was to be afked at court, and which was almost abolished fince the death of this Prince, now revived. Many fair fuitereffes addreffed them felves to Lewis XV. Their eves petitioned more than their memorials. Lewis yielded to their folicitations, and often gave them what they asked. He acquainted me, with all these accidental intrigues, and this confidence enbled me to support them. I should have confidered my influence as in its wane, if he had concealed them from me. I have faid in another place, that unable to fix the conflitution of this Prince, I was compelled to give him up to his inclination. His infidelity did not diminish the ascendency I had over him. I reigned at Verfailles, in the midft of the very causes which ought. to have fubdued my empire. By a contradiction inherent in the human heast, his inconftancy made him constant to me Remorfe drove him fresh to my arms, which he only quitted to yield again to love and repentance.

What fecured him to me, was, that of all the women, whom I knew he faw, there was not one, who was possessed of fuch qualities as were ncceffary to wreft him from me. Most of them had beauty; but they were wanting in those mental engagements, without which the charms of the face are of no effect. They all wanted to rule at court, to dispose of the first employments in the flate, to acquire the Prince's favour; and the only means they used to obtain those ends, was to prostitute themfelves to flim; which was an infallible method of not fucceeding.

: 26

A new object drew the attention of the court. This was to fecure the tranquillity of Italy—a boifterous country, where the first clouds of war always gather. All the treaties which have been concluded bet veen fovereigns fince Charlemain, cou d never give it ftability, becaufe it is the most happy continent upon earth, and the most feeble country in Europe.

Ma fhal Saxe faid before he died, that if France could give a permanent peace to Italy, her populati n would become more flourifhing. This general had demonstrated, that for two centuries, more Frenchmen had pe ished in Italy, than all the other wars had carried ff in the reft of Europe.

I have fince been told by another general, that the foldiers do not fall there by cannon. They perifh there by heat and voluptuoufnefs; enemies by far more dangerous than the indefatigable labours of the North.

Lewis XV. found an advantage in this plan of pacification. He thereby fecured the Dukes of Savoy, ever ready to introduce German troops into Italy, and to make incurfions themfelves into Dauphiny, upon the first mifunde standing that takes place in Europe. Naples, Parma, and Placentia, under the government of princes of the house of Bourbon, would have enjoyed a lasting tranquility, but this negociation produced no effect.

C 2

Martha

27 instar heine-

o ŷilit

as his

ferved of this ı aminchis beaun love fe beed this led of v. as to blifhed Many XV. orials. n gave th all · en.idered cealed , that I w25 His d over thole emumat o me. ch he ce. ll the one, effary , t0 Marthal Be'leiste faid to the King upon opening the conferences: "Sire, we may enter upon the "p'an of giving a lafting peace to Italy; but I ap-"prife your Majefty, that the negociation will not terminate but at the end of the world."

The Prince of Conti faid upon this occasion, "That if a king of France were willing to prevent a war in Italy, the Italians would oppose him. This country, which with regard to money, is of itself poor, stands in need of foreign armies, whose military chefts may supply their want of cash." The same thing has been faid of Germany.

The King received a flate of his naval force, according to which it confifted of fifty fhips of the line and twenty frigates. I remember that a fenfible man then faid, that we had a navy, and wanted nothing but fail rs that is to fay, we had half the neceffary in redients for forming a fleet. It was to pro ure this other half, which proved fo ufelefs fome time after to France, that M. Rouillé was fo affiduous.

The Count of Maurepas faid, in his diftant exile, " I know my fucceffor—he will do fo much, " that he will at laft defiroy the French marine."

Those who decide at court the fate of the adminifitrations of important departments, may ne that the province of the marine does not depend upon the minister who is at the head of it; that there are primary causes which counteract its progress. They are of opinion that France is formed to direct affairs by land, and England those that relate to the fea.

A ftatefman to d me, neverthelefs, one day at Verfailles, that it was not impoffible for France to have a marine; but to do this the fystem of the ftate must be changed, and the monarchy entirely subverted.

The

dea Phi mo exa ters

> tion ing

1

1

Ł

i

1 п

t o

0

1

0

w ju

10 q١

fea

B

Bı

the dic

pai

the

wł

the

The minister affured Lewis XV. that besides this fleet, there was another upon the stocks, ready to be launched and put to sea.

The people, who ought always to be imposed upon by preparations, were fatisfied with what was doing in the marine; but politicians and those who calculated the resources of England were diffatisfied.

At the time that we were endeavouring at the means of navigation, a projector prefented a fcheme to the King, for rendering France navigable. The object was the junction of two feas, by the means of two rivers. This man at first applied to me, and I fent him to M. Belleisle, who thought this project of great utility to the state. But feveral politicians were of a different opinion. They faid that this junction would lessen the navigation, which should on the contrary be encreased. The English were quoted, who might easily shorten the course of their fea voyages, and who endeavoured to prolong them. But what may be judicious in this respect for Great Britain, might be very impolitic for France.

I mention these particular transactions, because they fell immediately under my notice, and the King did me the honour to confult me upon them. I shall pass over in filence such schemes as were offered to the administration during my residence at court, and which did not take place.

When the King acquainted me with the death of the duke of Orleans, who died the fourth of July 1752, he feemed greatly affected at it. Sudden deaths made a great imprefiion upon Lewis XV. Philip of Orleans finished his career at that age when most men begin theirs. This prince was a striking example of the contrast there often is in the characters of a father and a fon.

This prince had nothing of the Regent's difpofition. He had paffed his time in praying and beftowing alms. Each day of his life was diffinguifhed by

29 ening n the I apl not fion, event him. y, is nies, nt of Geracfible nothe s to ome fiduexich, inithe the are hey fairs at e to tate ub-

The

MEMOIRS of the

fome chriftian act. Brought up in the center of pleafures, he fhunned them at an age when the pai-3 fions ftrongly plead for gratification, and when it is, very difficult to refift their intreaties.

20 -

The curate of St. Sulpice faid, that if he had been. Pcpe, he would have canonized the Duke of Orleans, had he poffeffed no other virtue than having, refifted the example of the royal palace. We well knew that the Regent's houfe was not the model for chriftian virtues. The Cardinal du Bois, who ridiculed men, politics and religion, made it the refidence of vice and debauchery.

But the Duke of Orleans, who is the fubject of our prefent confideration, poffeffed none but thofevirtues which do honour in heaven, and not thofe which characterize great princes upon earth. His houfe which he had divefted of all regal magnificence, refembled a convent, of which he was the fuperior. He fupported by charity an infinite number of people, who having no other care than that of receiving it, lived in televies and effeminacy. His bigotry had made him retire from public affairs, and induced him to-let the flate take care of itfelf, at a time that it flood in the most need of affiftance.

It is well known that the Princes of the blood who have a watchful eye over the government, keep the ministers in awe, and prevent their being guilty of malversation. Such is the fate of the French monarchy, that the great in France either gives themselves up to debauchery, or turn hermits.

The death of Madame Henriette, which fucceeded that of the Duke of Orleans, filled the court with mourning, and the King's heart with forrow. This Princefs was endued with those qualities which endear the great : naturally gentle and affable, fhe was beloved by all that approached her. A good heart and a compaffionate fympathetic foul, formed her general character; the Parifians did not fufficiently lament lan K fai

of دد : دد :

"

"

"

66 3

in i ftre

his abi

rig

effe

ະວັນ

was red dict

com ligic

no i to d

the .

of i

learr

made

was man

be f

them

confi

Si

lament her loss; they have no affection but for their Kings; they have none remaining for the royal family.

A foreigner, "who was acquainted with the genius of our nation, faid to me," If France were deprived "of the Dauphin, before he mounted the throne, "no one would regret his loss," but that if he died "fix months after having wore the crown, all the "world would weep for him." He added, that it "was not the loss of the perfor, but the name of "King that was regretted in France."

By the death of Madame Henriette, I discovered in Lewis XV. the qualities of a good father. Tears fireamed from his eyes, and his melancholy surpassed his usual hypochondriac disposition. I exerted all my abilities to affwage his grief: but he paid all the rights that nature could extort; before they took effect.

Literature once more diffurbed the King and the court: The council was informed that a large work was printing at Paris, under the title of the Encyclopedia. This was a rhapfody compiled from all the dictionaries extant, to which was added, by the compilers, reflections of a fufpicious tendency on religion and politics. This heap of reafoning conveyed no inftruction how to think, but only taught how to doubt. A man of letters faid to me at that time, the Encyclopedia could only increase the number of ignoramus's, and warp the minds of men of learning.

Such writings as tended to fupport materialism, made an imprefiion at court, and this production was ranked in this predicament. The King commanded the two first volumes of this production to be fupprefied. The fame arret which prohibited them, condemned the publishers of them to pay a confiderable fine.

C · 4

r•of Dai-3 it is.

een Oring. vell fort idi-of. ofeofe-

His

ce,

ior.

ble,

it, ,

had.

du-

me,

bod

eep

lty,

hch

ive

led,

ith.

his.

łn-،

vas.

art

her lje nț " This

3≰≦

This fupprefiion gave birth to an aponymous memorial upon this fubject, which appeared to me very fenfible, and which was conceived in these terms.

"The government has established a tribunal to "examine the productions of the mind. It confists "of a minister and twenty-four royal cenfors, whose fole employment is to revise manuscripts defined for the prefs.

" A book that is fubmitted to the examination of " this tribunal, is under the protection of the go-" vernment. The author has done all that the laws " required of him. He is not answerable for the " effects that the publication may produce. This " literary minister should be its voucher, and liable " to fuch penalties as the author would incur, if " he had printed it in a clandeftine manner. It ne-" verthelefs, daily happens, that a book meets with " the approbation of this tribunal, and is often cen-" fured by the government. The writer is profe-" cuted-he is punished in such a manner, as if it " had been concealed from this jurifdiction. The " parliament takes cognizance of it, the book is " burnt, and the author fent to the Bastile. What " could be done more, if he had acted in defiance " of the ordonnances made upon this fubject ?

"

"

"

٢,

"

"

"

"

"

"

"

fon

onl

of

nifl

the

that are beft

mer

I

"There is an error in literary jurifdiction, which will always occafion grievances and divitions in the republic of letters. The minifter who prefides at this tribunal, has neither the capacity nor leifure to perufe all the MSS. that are prefented for the prefs: they are put into the hands of cenfors, who have neither more time nor more genius than himfelf.

"They are frequently upon abstracted subjects, "and above the capacity of both—then the censors "read them without comprehending them, and fign them without understanding them. Their approbation being thus obtained, the work is ac-"cordingly

£

33

" cordingly printed, the book appears, and the pro-" fecution begins just where it fhould end.

us me-

e very inal to oblifts

whofe

eftined

lion of e go-

laws

br the

This

liable

ur, if

It ne-

with cen-

brofe-

if it

The

ok is

What

iance rhich

hs in pre-

acity

preands

nor ects, fors

and heir

ac-

gly

ms.

"The inconvenience that refulted from it would "be of no great importance, if the fentence pro-"nounced against the author put an end to the "dispute; but it almost constantly happens, that "the public interest themselves in the contest. "The erroneous maxims it contains are credited; "the more they are condemned, the more the "book comes into vogue. Its suppression is of "no effect, the editions increase in proportion as "they are prohibited: for it is only necessary to "censure a book in order to raise its reputation. "Many works that would have been despised had "they passed unnoticed, have acquired importance "from the government's condemning them.

"Hence those various divisions that have im-"mersed the flate into greater missortunes than "have been produced by civil wars.

" Inftead of chaftifing the author that has written " a dangerous book, the minifter who allowed it " to be printed, fhould be punifhed. The first fub-" mitted his performance to the established police " for preventing the publication of dangerous works, " and the other published it. The first only in-" jured himself, the other injured the state," &c. &c.

The King had this memorial examined, the reafoning it contained was thought to be juft; but it only met with approbation, like an infinite number of others upon the different branches of the adminiftration, the utility of which is acknowledged, but they are, notwithflanding never executed.

I have observed during my refidence at Verfailles, that the schemes which succeed are not those that are the most advantageous, but those which are the best recommended.

I have fince learned from a man of great difcernment, that " fo much rigour on the part of the government

C 5

M E M O I R S of the

f

r

t

t ŕ١

Ŀ

in a

T

of t'n

vp

fin

a÷

eve

fur

int

Ro

thі

dra

the

But

fuğj

lam.

" E

" t

"a "a"

" it

" po " po

1

⁶⁶ government with refpect to literary productions,, ⁶⁶ would be attended with many inconveniencies;
⁶⁶ that printing in France is become a very exten⁶⁷ five manufacture, which promotes an infinite.
⁶⁸ number of others dependent on it, and which ex⁶⁶ cites induffry; that it comprehends a very im⁶⁶ portant branch of trade, the fupprefilion whereof ⁶⁶ would greatly cramp circulation; that by dimi⁶⁶ nifhing this profeffion, many others muft be abo⁶⁶ lifhed, that tend to form the library: that France, ⁶⁶ would be thereby a great fufferer, and neighbour⁶⁶ in particular, covetous of all induffrious vocations, ⁶⁶ would feize upon this.

"He added, that Cardinal Fleury having fup-"preffed the printing of romances in France, the "United Provinces availed themfelves of this pro-"hibition, to encrease their workmen. The num-, "ber of their preffes was greatly augmented, and "the kingdom overflowed with these very prohi-"bited romances; fo by this suppression, the flate, "loft its industry without abolishing romances."

Though the King conftantly visited me, he converied with other women. But his visits to them were, as has been already faid, merely cafual. Thele women, who had neither tafte nor delicacy, were gratified with those moments that he could beftow upon them, and thought themfelves happy to pass a few hours by stealth with this Prince. They had no regular plan, except two or three, whoformed the defign of supplanting me, and feizing upon the King's favour. The pleasure of having the King for a lover sufficed them. This idea, which occupied all the powers of their foul, left no room for ambition; fo that they were not very dangerous rivals. I knew the King's temper; enjoyment always diffusted him. The act of gratification

34

ſ

cation was followed by contempt : this is what every woman muft expect, who has no other attractions " for men than mere perfonal poffeffion.

The difputes of the clergy, which were renewed, notwithstanding the affiduity of the court to fupprefs~ them, kept the state in a constant ferment. All the prelates who diffurbed the court, owed their fortune to the King; and this the more afflicted him. Lewis XV. has often faid to me, that of all vices . ingratitude the most shocked him.

It happened in this dispute, as it does in most? others, that it was not confined to the first object. The original point in debate was, a fum demanded of the clergy, to fupply the exigencies of the state : the minister carried his views farther ; he reflected upon the diforders occasioned by this body to the finances of the Rate a calculation was made that a very confiderable fum went out of the kingdom every age for purchasing of bulls, and that this treafure of the political government, which was fent into Italy, never returned back to France : that Rome, to whom we paid large fums, granted nothing in return but indulgences." The means of withdrawing-front this spiritual dominion, which rained the temporal frate," came next under confideration. But after every thing was thoroughly 'examined, supputed, and ealculated, things were left full in the ame fituation as they were found. ---

The Chevalier de Belleisle formerly told me. " that the process between the court of Rome and " that of Werfailles had continued for feveral-ages, " and that it would not be terminated till-fuch time " as a King" of France arole equally enterprifing " with Henry VIII. of England. He added; that "the ministry had hit upon the wrong object of " power to deffroy ; that we had wrested the sword " of excommunication from Rome, but that we had 66 Jernise 01197. ies ; _;

ten-nite.

ex-

im-

reof

imiabo-

ance.

burland .

ons,

ſup-

the.

pro-

,,

M E M O I R S of the

•

2

P

С

7 n

tl

ti

Ií

tł

b

DI

th

K

w

be

dif

th

pa th tio

rat

tha

fte

me

the

to

the

had

the

Th XV

Wi

med

here

facr

" left her in full power to fleece the flate ; and that " we had better let ourfelves be excommunicated " than reduced to poverty."

The general body of the clergy inceffantly engaged the attention of the court : one of their members diffurbed a-new the King's repofe, and troubled the ftate. The archbifhop of Paris forbad the adminifration of the facraments to a certain abbé, who was ill and defired it. The fick abbé was required to name his confeffor ; and as he was known to be a Janfenift, he was afked to accept of the conftitution, and the difputes it occafioned in the government. The abbé obftinately refufed accepting of it, and the archbifhop refolved that the facraments fhould not be adminiftered to him.

Lewis XV. was informed of this debate, the example whereof might be productive of a fchifm in the kingdom. I was witnefs to his grief; his uneafinefs arofe from his affection. He loved his fubjects, and he was chagrined to fee that the difputes of fchools fhould deprive them of the only remaining confolation upon their death-beds. The Princes of the houfe of Bourbon have always acted more reafonably in religious than in political matters.

The bull Unigenitus put Lewis XIV. to death; fome old courtiers have, at leaft, affured me, that father Le Tellier fhortened his days by dint of talking to him of the conftitution. The refufal of the facraments was cognizable by the general police; fo that this fchifm in the fpiritual government was attended with a double inconvenience, as it might produce one in the political ftate.

The parliament of Paris, who feize upon every occasion to reform abuses, and let none escape that may extend their prerogatives; fummoned the curate, who had been guilty of no other crime than that of obeying his bishop. A penalty was inflicted of on him which the prelate fhould have been mulcted, and he was forbid relapfing on pain of lofing his temporalities. The chief point was to know whether the curate fhould obey the parliament or his bifhop. The cafe would not have been difficult to determine, if the clergy had been appointed judges, or if the government had been to decide : but the queftion was who was the competent judge in this cafe? If the church were permitted to decide the affair, this would be infringing upon temporal rights; and by allowing the parliament this prerogative, fpiritual privileges would thereby be usurped. There was a third inconvenience still greater, which was, that the King himfelf, according to the opinion of the clergy was incapable of appointing judges.

In this fort of difputes, a national council should be convened; this council is never held, and the diforder always continues. The King commanded the parliament not to interfere in the matter, and the parliament determined that they ought to interfere therein. Lewis XV. had difplayed fufficient refolution in the laft mifunderftanding about the adminifration of the hospital; but this body always forget that they yielded, that they may remember to be ftedfast. The King undertook to have the facraments administered to the fick man; but this method had its inconveniencies, for it was neceffary to command priefts, and they obeyed none but their bifhops.

The parliament would have thought that they had given up their rights, if, upon this occasion, they had not opposed the will of their fovereign. They commanded by arret the curates, whom Lewis XV. only wanted to engage to fulfil their duty. Without this decree the affair would have been immediately stifled, whereas many other priests were hereby difposed to refuse the administration of the facraments.

eniemroul the bbé, relown the e gobting hents ex-

that

ated

m in unlfubbutes haininces more ath ; that talkf thè lice; was night every that cuthan i&ed 03

66

66 .

cau

eve

pref

that ≪itl had they ftrai

do&

Wh

exp

to ti "n

" у

been ſeffe

ber miffi

loue

infer

be lo

"

a li

" th

" tł

" to " d

" td

" fr

Ť

F

I have often heard it faid at Verfailles, "that : "the body of the parliament, by reafon of their "define to veform abufes, are the fource of a great : "inumber of abufes." A prince of the blood was of opinion that the parliament thould be abolifhed, if it were only to prevent that fpirit of contention and obfimacy which they differe in the kingdom. Huit thele who are effected fagacious judges of things; pretend that this fame fpirit of oppofitien to the will of the court; is the bulwark of the ftate.

Accountellor of the great chamber faid one day in my hearing; to a courtier who was highly complaining of the reiterated remonstrances made to the King; Perhaps; Sir, we may be mistaken in the form; but we cannot err with respect to the object, as we constantly plead for the prevogatives of the nation, and the happiness of the people.

The prefident de Maupeau faid to me one day, upon returning from an audience he had with the -King, when he met with a very difagreeable recep--tion. " You muft allow, Madam, that there is a s a particular fatality annexed to our fituation; we " are always feolded without obtaining juffice." Ne-" verthelefs, hif things were thoroughly examined-" with care; it would appear that we have no in-" tereft in view by making continual representions " to our Prince, and being compelled to fay difa-" greeabled things to him. It we did not intereft " burfelves to much as we do for the good of the " people, we must substitute flattery for truth, and " fhould be benefited by the fmiles of the court; " whereas we now meet with nothing but refufals " from it." In another of these visits, when this fame prefident did not meet with a more favourable reception, he added in fpeaking of the counfellors of state, " It is furprifing that men of understanding " do not see through the uprightness of our inten-" tions; and that prejudice, which we thought 66 only

" only actuated the populace, falls to the lot of " " " those who furround the throne."

Be this as it may, these people displeased me, because they put the King into a bad humour, and every time they repaired to Versailles, to make representations to him, Lewis XV. was more serious s than usual.

The affair of the bills of confeffion was attended with confequences. The members of parliament had hitherto fpoke as orators; upon this occafion they fpoke in the ftile of preachers. Their remonftrance to the King refembled a fermon. The pope's doctrine, dogmas, and faith, were called in queftion. When a body of people quit their proper fphere, they expose themfelves to raillery. A pleafant courtier faid to the King,—" Sire, we may now attend a ho-" mily in the great chamber; the members of " your parliament know how to make fermons."

These representions made to Lewis XV. having been printed, every one was defirous of being polfeffed of them : but there was not a sufficient number for every body. The discourses of these new miffionaries were fold at a dearer rate than Bourdaloue's fermons, and were more in vogue. I shall infert them here, left this learned production should be lost to posterity.

SIRE,

21 1:

ir -

at 1

23--:

d, bn -

n.:

of

to-

in-

h-∶

he

be:

7,7

7-...

, ,

e -

j*≟1*)-

is is e ti

-

e di

50 H D I

is t

> "Never did fo important an affair lead your par-"liament to the foot of your throne. The religion "the ftate, the rights of your crown are equally "threatened. A fatal fchifm has burft forth, lefs "to be dreaded from the blaze of division it kindles amongft your fubjects, and the fhock it gives "to the fundamental laws of the monarchy, than "from the prejudice it does to religion.

··· Your

61

66

"

"

"

"

"

"

"

64

"

"

"

"

"

"

"

"

"

"

"

"

"

Ġ

"

"

"

"

"

66 f

"h

". to

65 S

"Your majefty, ftruck with the diforders occafioned by the difputes daily renewed on account of the bull Unigenitus, has at all times been fenfible, and particularly in 1731, of the neceffity of fuppreffing a division fo dangerous, and fo contrary to the common good of the flate and of religion.

"We shall make use of the same terms in which " your majefty then expressed yourself, in declaring " your will. You forbad, in the most express " manner any of your fubjects, of what flate or con-" dition foever, to do or write any thing tending " to fupport the difputes that had arifen in regard " to this conftitution, or to create new ones. You " forbad them to attack or provoke one another, " by injurious terms of innovators, heretics, schif-" matics, Jansenists, Semi-pelagians, or any other " party names, as any fuch delinquents would be " treated as rebels difobedient to your orders, and " feditious perturbators of the public tranquillity. " In a word, you enjoined all the archbishops and " bishops to watch each in his particular diocefe, " that peace and tranquillity were charitably and " inviolably obferved, and that thefe difputes were " no more renewed.

"It were to have been wished, that such fagacious orders had been followed by the most rigorous execution, and that you had armed your avenging hand against fuch ecclessifiers as dare contemn your Majesty, and withdraw from the bedience that was due to you! But this they have dared, and the attempt had remained unpunished, their passionate zeal has no longer known any bounds; they have declared those who were not of their opinion rebels to the church, and as such unworthy of partaking of its benefits, and they have inhumanly refused them the facraments at the point of death. These abuses " have

"have been daily increased—and how much has "not religion fuffered by them?

41

" Implety has availed itfelf of difquifitions that " prevailed amonft the minifters of religion, to at-" tack religion itfelf.

" The uncertainty that was introduced with regard to the foundation of the legitimacy of faith, " " hath been the means employed by impiety to infi-" nuate into people's minds its mortal poifon. "What advantage hath it not derived from the " melancholy circumstances wherein we faw the " holy fathers, who had paffed their lives in exer-" cifing the laborious functions of the ministry to " which they were confecrated ? enlightened doc-" tors, still more recommendable for their piety than " their understanding: pious maidens, who, in " their reclufe retreat entirely engaged with God " and their falvation, paffed their time in the moft 66 austere works of repentance, treated like refracto-" ry members of the church, deprived with igno-" miny of the benefits it dispensed to its children, " without its being known what truths decided by " the church, these children refused to believe, or " what errors prefcribed by it, they refufed to " condemn !

"The oftentatious philosopher, who foolifhly "jealous of the divinity itself, fees with regret the "homage that is paid to him, judged this to be the "favourable moment for producing his monstrous "fystem of incredulities.

"This fyftem promulgated abroad has unhappily made but too rapid progrefs. A torrent of writings, infected with these detestable errors, rushed forth; and to complete the misfortune, they have infensibly crept into those schools destined to form proper defenders of faith and religion. Strange calamity for a most christian King ! Er-" ror calint of lenfity of conf rerhich

aring

prefs

con-ding

gard

You

her,

chif-

ther

l be and lity. and tefe, and vere igat ritour lare the hey unger lofe ch, nethe lfes V S

MEMOIR S of the :

44'

⁶⁶ Error gains ground, and is not removed; the' ⁶⁶ principal minifters of religion are employed only ⁶⁶ in exacting the acceptance of a decree, which ⁶⁶ offering nothing certain, alarms timid conferences ⁶⁶ by the confequences that may be drawn from it ⁶⁶ againft the falutary doctrine, and whilft they with ⁶⁶ the greateft rigour profecute thofe, who, by at ⁶⁶ leaft a pardonable, if not a well grounded fcruple, ⁶⁶ refufe fubfcribing to it; they neglect what is ⁶⁶ cffential, and let religion the flaken to its very ⁶⁶ foundation.

"The impious become more refolute, and audacity is carried to its greateft height; and it was referved for us to be eye-witneffes of a public thefis being maintained without oppofition, in the first university of the christian world, whereby all the false principles of incredulity are systematically eftablished *.

"Your parliament, Sire, who by the authority you have conferred upon them, fhould principally attend to whatever regards the religion of the flate, are moved at the fight of fo fcandalous a proceeding. They have fummoned the agents of the univerfity. The attention of the magiftrates has called the faculty back to their duty, has awakened the zeal of the paftors ; and foon after appeared the cenfures of the Thefis, accompanied with the most diffionourable fentence, with which help who had the audacity to maintain it, was "branded.".

"Such here the wounds that the growing fchilm "has from nits bith given to religion." What may ""two not dedcait thas to fuffer in the fequel; and

* Then Thens of the Abbe Prade.

* We'did not know that the magistrate first brought the Bobbohne back to their duty; and awakened the zeal of the pastrol symbol shept in tranquillity by the fide of the wolf.

"Can

¢.d

¥ .a

" е

^к е

"• 0

"a

" a

4. a)

"~0

" qi

". y

"/ m

"· ve

"•th "•by

" со

" en

" on ^{u}∙up

" is

" yo

" the

" in

" to

 $^{*}H$

" cen

" mig " Ga " don

con

" moj

" pen

" due

66

ء، at^{::} at

"

,thc':

only hich

nces :

n it :

vith

y at

ple,

t is 7ery

au-

was blic the all ally

rity

balthe

is à

i of tes ater ied

ich vas

m ay_. nd

ht

of lf.

an.

"can we view it without being penetrated with "affliction ? With fome it will be totally deftroy-"ed, and if others preferve it, the fpirit will be-"entirely loft.

"Hatred, animofity, and perfecution, feize up---"on their hearts; those divine characters of union and charity, which diffinguish the catholic church, are no longer to be known; and religion will be almost universally destroyed, either in the mind, or in the heart.

"But, Sire, if your parliament owe their first-"attention to the interest of religion, they are e-" qually engaged by the fidelity they have sworn to-" you, to guard the preservation of those great-" maxims which conflitute the effence of your fo--" vereignty.

"And how could they avoid eppofing with all?" their might, the progrefs of a fcheme framed "by fome minifers of the church, to erect the "conflictution Unigenitus, as a rule of faith. This "enterprize, inafmuch as it is prejudicial to religi-"on, is contrary to the principles of public right, "upon which the independency of your authority "is founded. When this bull came into France, "your parliament acquainted Lewis XIV. with all the danger of the condemnation which was therein pronounced against the proposition that relates., "to the matter of excommunication.

43 :

M E M O I R S of the

44

" hilated, or at least suspended in the minds of the "people, folely by the impression made on them by a " menace of excommunication, though unjust.

" Lewis XIV. was fenfible of the importance of " these reflections. The bull was not received but " with fuch modifications, as are not fo much mo-" difications as an abfolute affertion of the condemn-" ed propofition.

" These wife precautions, the ramparts of our " liberty, judged neceffary by the late King, con-" firmed by your Majesty upon every occasion," " carefully repeated in the declarations you made to establish the authority of the bull, conformable " to the fentiments of the bifhops, who gave their explanations in 1744, and corroborated by the " formal decifion of the Sorbonne, as they folemn-" ly declared it verbally, by their Syndic in 1732; " how are these to be reconciled with the eminent " character that is now wanted to be given this " bull, in erecting it into a rule of faith?

" Dogmas of faith are not fusceptible of modifi-" cation; fo that giving to the bull the qualificati-" ons or effects of a rule of faith, and exacting its " pure and fimple acceptance upon this foundation, " is by a neceffary confequence deftroying the mo-٢Č difications which have been opposed to it, fub-" verting the great principle of your abfolute inde-" pendence of all other power whatever; it is en-" deavouring to obtain the acknowledgment of an " authority, capable of annihilating or fufpending " the rights of your fovereign authority.

"Your Majesty, convinced of this truth, how-" ever favourable you may have expressed yourfeli " upon the bull, has never allowed it to be deno-" minated a rule of faith. All those writings which " have appeared, wherein it has been endeavoured " to reprefent it in that light, have been proferibed

66 hy

65

"

"

"

"

"

"

"

"

"

" v

"

" f

" c if

"

" a

" cł

" w

" if pr

frd

6 ha

th giv fay

fail

fac 6

the 1

the

of f

6 d , ſ "

"

" 1

⁶⁵ by judgments which you yourfelf have given: ⁶⁷ and when your parliament reprefented to you in ⁶⁷ 1733, their uncafinefs at the conduct of fome ⁶⁷ ecc efiaftics, in various dicefes, who appeared ⁶⁷ to give this character to the bull; your Majefty ⁶⁷ reproached them for having forefeen that it could ⁶⁷ happen, that the figiritual authority fload defire ⁶⁷ to e ect into a degma of faith, propositions con-⁶⁷ trary to the inviolable maxims of France.

"Your Majeffy told us that fuch an undertaking "would not revolt lefs againft the church of your "kingdom, than againft the magiftrates; and that "we might have been in fecurity by the precauti-"ons which the bifhops took in 17:4, for the pre-"fervation of maxims, with regard to the ninety-"first condemned proposition.

"But, Sire, of what fignification are thefe precautions taken by fome bifhops of your kingdom, "if the others do not adhere to them, if they exact the pure and fimple acceptation of the bull, "if they look upon those as out of the pale of the "chu ch wh do not de lare their fubmiffion to it, "without any reft intion or referve, and if they "pretend to exclude them up in this foundation "from the participation of a l factaments?

"There are few amongst them, it is true, who "ha e openly decla ed themselves by faying, "that the c nftitution is a rule of faith; but by "giving it the effect of a rule of faith; is not that faying that it is a rule of faith? In matters of "d strine, none but those who err in a point of "faith, can be excluded the participation of the facraments of the chu ch; therefore a refusal of "the facraments to whose er does not fubmit to "the constitution, is making the constitution a rule " of faith.

" The

ed but n molemnof our conafton.

made

mable

their

y the

emn-,

732;

inent

this

of the n by a nce of

odifificating its ttion, fubindes enof an uding > nowprfeli enohich ured ibed by

⁶⁶ The condemnation that the confliction hat ⁶⁶ pronounced againft the ninety firft proposition, ⁶⁷ is manifeftly contrary to the great maxims of the ⁶⁶ kingdom, and is abfolutely incompatible with the ⁶⁷ obfervance of thefe maxims. Therefore, when ⁶⁶ we fee the minifters of the church, when we fee ⁶⁶ the bithops eftablish the confliction as a rule ⁶⁶ of taith, we fee that by a fatality, which, Sire, ⁶⁷ your goodnels could not prefume that they want ⁶⁶ to erect into dogmas the faith of opinions, ⁶⁶ contrary to the most inviolable maxims of France,

" They in vain proteft their attachment to our "" liberties. Their conduct belies the fincerity of " their words: Or, if it is really nothing more than " an extravagant zeal for the bull that actuated " them, they teach us how dangerous it is for " them to decide arbitrarily in caufes that may ex-" clude the participation of the facraments. Their " pretended zeal becomes a paffion that blinds them; " prejudice fluts thei eyes to the confequences of "" their conduct. Add to this, that if this tyranny " were once introduced, we fho ld foon fee it br " a ftill greater abuse, if poffible, extending itself " over matters entirely foreign to the d gma, and " purely temporal. The point would not then only " be what might relate to conference; they would " make themfel es arbiters of the flate, and of the " form of the citizens, and would render the ad-" miffion of the facraments just as conditional a " they pleafed

"These a e not vain fears that agitate us. W "know but too well, that even in this case, no "thing could con use the obstinacy of an unjuk "refusal; and that neither the most respectable "birth, nor the most pure, constant, and exempla-"ry virt e, would be f fficient titles to claim, at "the point of death, these facred benefits, the difpensations

for t the true, favo

*****() (()

6: €

. ...

. ...

-16

۰۵ دد

66 66

"

. 66

"

٢٢

٢٢

"

٢ç

cc ,

$6. 56 -

"

"

" I

" ?

۲, ۵

66 j

" t

**

"performation: whereof cannot depend upon human "Inmotives, and which by right belong to the faith-"If ful.".

"". Your parliament, Sire, ftrangely furpfiled at fo ", many abufes, daily committed before their eyes, ", have been made ftill more ftrongly fentible of the ", danger, when having fent a deputation to the arch-", bifhop of Paris, with regard to the frefth refulal of ", the facraments, by the curate of Sti Etienned du ", Mont; this p elate, without making any reply, " imperioufly declared, that this was done by his " orders. What reflections mult thermind make at ", fuch a declaration! We fhall now fupprefs them " out of refpect.

". It will be fufficient to fay, that your parliament " have judged it to be their indifpentable duty: to act " with rigour against this curate, in olderato deach " the inferior minifters of the church, that whatever " orders they may have received from their fipperi-" o s, they are answerable for putting themine execu-", tion, when these orders tend to diffur hepublic " tranquillity, and pasticularly when they ardinole " to foment a fchifm, the confequencesobfwihich " cannot be confidered without horror. May we " be permitted, Sire, to supplicate you to take into " confideration the remonstrances which your parli-" ament had the honour of prefenting you laft year/ "You will there find it demonstrated, that the error " in the reprefentation of a bill of confeffion, which " the curate of St. Luénne du Mont alledged for

* The features of this portrait were certainly drawn for the late Duke of O leans, to whom, we are affured, the a chbifhop efficient the factaments. If this be true, who dare think himfelf worthy of alpiring to this favour?

bn ha

the

M E M O I R S of the

86

**

"

"

"

ćć.

"

"

"

" r

"t

" t

" о

" fe

" ſc

" ez

" m

٠, ag

an ſh

to

if I

as

ou

crd fhd

gra

côn

" I

hav

tear

tage

peri

owe

Vor

"

48 the reason of his refusal, cannot be a legal cause for refusing the holy viaticum to a dying perfon, and that the exaction of this bill is only a vague presence for refusing the facraments to those who are sufficient of not accepting the constitution.

"May we be allowed to recal to your memory, the p inciples effablished in the reprefentations which your pa liament made previously to you in 1731, and 1733, upon the first refutal or the facraments that came to their knowledge. The Bull Unigenitus is not a rule of faith. The church alone could give it this supreme character, and the church has not given it. This bull is even of such a nature that it cannot be a rule of faith. It offers in thing ce tain. The different qualifications it gives to the propositions which it condemns, and this indetermination, abfolutely cppofe its ever being a dogma of faith : Thefe maxims of France, which form the basis of our liberties, would otherwise foon be deftroyed.

"Will you, then, Si e, permit the torch of fchifm to be lighted up in the heart of your kingdom, on account of the acceptance that is menacing to an empire, than divisions in religious matters : They become ftill more fatal when the caufe is unjuft Let them not be introduced into your kingdom, ftiffe the in their birth, and to that end let your parliaments act. They alone can refto e a calm, by the vigilant exertion of their inflitution. A dving performant at every inftant have recourfe to the magistrate, to claim the benefits that may be inhumanly denied him.

"If you referve to yourfelf the care of making provision in this cafe, however ta ourable your intentions may be, the diffance of places, "the

"the importance of your occupations, the difficul-"ty of gaining accels to the foot of your throne, " will prevent their effect.

" Severity will not fo effectually fupprefs the de-" figns that vel the fchifm, as difpatch. Its pro-" grefs is to be dreaded. Preachers already arife, " who endeavour to diffurb the people's minds,, " and make our churches echo with their feditious " fermons. If the fire encreases, it is to be feared " that the flames will foread to fuch a degree, that " no authority will be fufficiently powerful to ftop " the conflagration.

" Let us call to mind in the hiftory of paft ages, " those bills of affociation ; those extorted declarati-" ons in the tribunal of penance; those scandalous " fermons which fpread the alarm in timorous con-" fciences; those bloody wars carried to fuch an " excefs, that fhook even this throne.

" Struck with dread at the fight of thefe great misfortunes, we fhall not ceafe, Sire, to rife up against all fuch proceedings as tend to fchifm; and we fhall not ceafe to lay before you their shocking confequences. To prevent our acting, to flifle our voices, we must be annihilated. And if by an event which we fhould confider ourfelves as almost guilty to forefee, it should happen that our conftancy to support the rights of your crown, those of the state and of religion, we fhould draw upon ourfelves your Majetty's difgrace, we fhould lament without altering our conduct.

" Incapable of betraying our duty, we should have nothing to offer you in homage but our tears, till time should convince you how advantageous it is for you, that your parliament at no period fwerve f om the inviolab'e fidelity they owe to religion, to their country, and to their Vol. II. " King; D caufe erfon, vague t who bn. nory, ations ou in he fa-The hurch and .even faith. alificony cp-Thele our 1. h of your at is nore gious the into d to lone n of rery to nied akab!e ces, the "King; and that in their archives may be found "the uninterrupted tradition of conduct and max-"ims, which fecure the tranquillity of your king-"dom, and the independance of your fovereignty.

"Such, Sire, are the most humble and respectful "remonstrances which the counsellors in parlia-"ment affembled, have the honour of presenting "to your Majesty.

" Done in parliament, this 13th of April, 1752.

" S'gned,

" DE MAUPEOU."

This fine difcourfe, written with energy, did not proclaim peace, but was, on the contrary, a declaration of war, founded in appearance upon the exigencies of the police, and the tranquillity of the flate; the fpirit of party was, however, its only dictator: The parliament being composed almost entirely of Jansenists, wanted to deftroy the Molinist cabal. Each purfued his private prejudices, and no one thought of the advantage of the flate.

The King, in anfwer to thele reprefentations, declared, that he should take upon himself to punish such priests as gave offence to the state, by refusing the facraments, and forbad the parliament interfering in the matter: but this court took care not to obey. So far from submitting, they published an arret, expressly ordering the priests to ask no bills of confession from the sick people, and to administer the facraments to them, without interrogating them in any shape upon the subject. As ordonnances are generally of greater latitude than they should be, this body, having become all at once Theologists, availed themselves of this opportunity to forbid the preachers using certain expressions, and they

fhe

of t!

A

ŧ

ſ

n

ſ

tł

c cl bi

٤,

۲۵ ۲۵

"

"

th

pa pri

be

hei

Tł

to nig

ble

1

-

1

g

•

t

;-

e

e

y ft

)-

5,

3, l-

3-

1-

·e

1-3

0

-

)•

.

y

e

y

d

y

they specified the terms in which their fermons fhould be conceived.

· Idle people, who deride every thing, even the most serious affairs, turned this arret into ridicule. The wits of Paris faid that the Parliament had pared the preachers nails in fuch a manner, that they could not fcratch the Jansenists any more.

Such fick people as wanted to commune, purchafed an arret, which they prefented inftead of a bill of confession. The retailers of bon-mots faid, " That the parliament of Paris were going to efta-" blifh a communion office at Paris, where the " Jansenists might furnish themselves with each " facrament, at the rate of forty-two fols tournois, " for an arret.

The court iffued another ordonnance in favour of the Bull Unigenitus; but the parliament, without paying attention to it, fent forth decrees against the priests who refused to administer. The two parties became inveterate, by their reciprocal obstinacy.

The Dauphin's illnes, which happened at the height of this dispute, produced some short truce. This Prince found himself indisposed, as he retired to his apartment on the first of May, 1752, at night. His diforder was the finall-pox, as was vifible from the usual fymptoms. He happily recovered from it; and the King, who was at first alarmed, teffified great joy upon this Prince's recovery.

Lew's XV. is very fond of his children, and particularly the Dauphin: never did a father fympathife to much at the vicifitudes of his family. He pays remarkable attention to all those who belong to him. Whenever the Queen is the leaft indifposed, he flies to her apartment, and never leaves her till fhe is better.

All France congratulated him upon the recovery of the prefumptive heir to the crown. Each body of the flate demonstrated their joy by fome particular rejoicings, and the people displayed theirs by general feftivity.

5 I.

I refolved in turn to teffify my fatisfaction at this happy event, by an analogous feaft; but I would do nothing without confulting the King. I imparted to him my defign, which he approved of, and my plan, which he applauded.

Every one that has heard my name mentioned, knows that I obtained BELLE-VUE, where I had exhaufted the refinements of art to make an agreeable receptacle for the King. These kinds of feasts must be allegorical, otherwise they do not express the subject of the rejoicing.

Ł

١

С

a fe ti

is c: ni te

rυ

go

of

go I o

af

hi

rat

the

wi

bu

hav

A

My decoration reprefented various dens furrounded with a piece of water, in the middle of which was feen a luminous dolphin. Several monfters attacked it, in vomiting flames; but Apollo, who was its protector, hurled his thunder at them from above, and a large quantity of fireworks compleated their deftruction, as well as that of their refidence. The fcene then inftantly changed, and became the brilliant palace of the fun, where the dolphin re-appeared, in all its fplendor, by means of a magnificent illumination, which lafted all night.

Scarce had the Dauphin recovered from his diforder, before the parliament and the bifhops engaged a-new the attention of the court and the city. It was the peace that gave fufficient leifure to attend to thefe difputes. In time of war, they would have had other objects to engage their attention than bills of confeffion. The court would have defpifed fuch an affair; and the parliament would not have allowed it to be mentioned.

The obflinacy of the parliament, and the flubbornnefs of the curates in refufing the facraments, increased the King's melancholy. I endeavoured to multiply cu-

by this uld

ted

my

ed,

hađ

ea-

hAs fefs

hd-ch at-ho

hni

at-ſι٠

bebl-

of

.

iſ-

g-

y.

hd

ve

lls

Ŀh

v --

b-

s, ło

ļy

multiply the amufements of his private parties, in order to remove that flate of languor which bufinefs had brought upon him. I detained him with me at night as late as I poffibly could, and did not let him retire, till I had diffipated the clouds of his mind, by every method that I thought would produce the effect. Music was a great affiftant to ine. Rameaux was very ufeful to me in this respect. The King had a tafte for light airs, and this mufician excelled in this kind of composition. Tellict executed still better than Rameaux composed. He was unrivalled in giving life to expression, and grace to found. I may venture to fay, that this performer. by the gaiety that he foread over the King's mind, was often the mediator of the most important affairs of Europe.

We know that all our refolutions fpring from the actual difposition of the foul. A monarch that refufes every thing when his mind is feized with a certain melancholy, grants every thing when this vapour is diffipated.

This difpolition, the ufual effect of fecondary caufes, and which derives its origin from an harmonious found, a wink, and most frequently from the temperature of the air, does not always purfue the rule of justice. It is unhappy for the people to be governed by mortals fubject to a machine fusceptible of every kind of impression. It would be for the good of mankind if they were governed by angels. I often repeated, that Lewis XV. was extremely affected by these religious disputes. I often heard him fay, he would prefer being at war with princes rather than with Theologians, because with those the treaty of peace terminates the quarrel; whereas with these even the fpirit of reconciliation contributes to encrease it.

Marshal Saxe formerly faid to me, that if he were to have gained an advantage over the Tartars, he would have

 D_3

have giving them quarter; but that if he had conquered an army of Theologians, he would have exterminated them without mercy.

A man of wit, and a great politician, was of opinion, that the univerfities fhould be flut up, and their thefes forbidden upon pain of death. He fhewed me a manufcript work, whereby he pretended to to prove that all the wars, and all the crimes that had been committed in Europe fince the cftablifhment of chrift anity, derived their origin from religious difputes.

This is eafy to believe, he added, if we confider that the fpirit of contention, which fprings from dogmas, fpreads itfelf through every clafs, and that it is this general fpirit that forms the genius of nations. The war relating to the Conflication fill continuing, plenipotentiaties were appointed: thefe were commiffaries, who were to defide, whether the curates had a right to let the King's fubjects die with-Gut communing. The B thops faid, this was the bufinefs of a council; but the parliament were of cpinion, that the Bul Unigenitus was in fubordination to the police of the flate. Thefe commiffaries affembled very regularly; but they took care to come to no determination.

The Prince of Conti, who was alway in a paffion when this affair was mentioned before him, faid, it should be decided by a court martial.

To this kind of tragedy fome comic fcenes were united. A curate who was compelled to administer to a fick perfon, faid to him in a loud voice, I commune you by order of the parliament. Another expressed himself thus to a dying man : It is in confequence of an arret of the great chamber, that I bring you God Almighty.

The body of the clergy, who till now had appeared neuter in the affairs, entered the lifts. The bifhops asked justice of the King, for the attempt of the m th teo

٦

ł

2

2

g

C

2

v

t ti

ſţ

v

tl

Ь

fc

gi H

hi

hi

in ac

55 tions

the parliament, who interfered in what did not relate to them; and the reafon they affigned was, that only God, the Pope, the bishops, and the curates, had the right of administering. They pretended that the great chamber fhould make reparation to the archbi-Thop of Paris, for having accufed him of favouring a ſchiſm.

The King was very far from granting them what they required, as he could not obtain of the parliament what he afked of them. Here again it was neceffary to iffue arrets, to prevent licentious writings, and order certain books to be burnt by the hand of the hangman. These were so many fresh attacks upon the King's constitution, and what spread an additional gloom over his temper, already too grave.

Of all the royal family, the King was the only one who took this matter to heart. The Queen had accuftomed herfelf to lay all the viciffitudes of this world at the foot of the crucifix : the King's daughters would not allow the Bull Unigenitus to be mentioned: the Dauphin only faid that he could not fpeak, but that if he were King, he fhould know what he had to do; the Princes of the blood defpifed thefe difputes; the courtiers wanted to be meddling, but they knew nothing of the matter. It was happy for France that old Marshal Belleisle was no Theologian, for he would have embroiled matters still more. His higheft ambition was to fathom thefe things; but his age and vocations did not allow him to fignalize himfelf upon this occafion. He neverthelefs, engaged in a dispute upon predestination, to seem as if he was acquainted with what he was entirely ignorant of.

Both parties were very follicitous for my declaring myfelf openly; but befides my difcovering that they were both headstrong, my happines prompted me to wifh for the annihilation of the Constitu-DA cone ex-

opi-

and

hewid to that nent

tious

lider

rom at it

ons. nu-

vele

cuith-

the tpi-

lion

-m e to

lion , it

ere

fter

m-ex-¢∫€-

ing

arbi-

of

he

M E M O I R S of the

tion, as the King's repose fo much depended upon it.

I proposed to Lewis XV. that he should forbid all his subjects, as well ecclessifies as seculars, to pronounce the words Bull, Janfenist, or Molinist, on pain of being severely punished; and to sentence such priess as should be convicted of having refused the administration of the facraments, to perpetual imprisonment. But the goodness of his heart would not allow him to exercise any methods that had an air of violence or despotism. He wanted to be obeyed; but then, only by moderate and gentle means. Hunfett

V

re a

> v T

> ir

w pd

pr

m

to M

of

m ap

gr

ne the ref

do

to bit

gra tho

ma

vie the wa

ent

While it was debated what method to purfue, to terminate these disputes, a courtier faid to the King, "Sire, there is but one resource, which is, to re-"new the Vingtieme, and examine the ecclesiaftical "revenues'; the bishops will forget the Bull Uni-"genitus, when they are reminded that they must "give money to the state." In effect, this new object diverted their attention from the other.

The arrival of the Infanta of Parma completely diffipated that lowring difpolition which the Conflitution had fpread at court. Nothing was thought of but entertaining the princes. I advised the King to give a ball and an opera. In these diversions I frove rather to amuse the King, than to divert this fovereign princes his daughter.

The minifters of ftate, whom I often faw, told me that they were very much occupied. The war had thrown them into arrears for ten years. The King had given M. d'Argenfon a coadjutor in the war department. This was the Marquis de Paulini, a very able and intelligent man; but arts and literature engaged part of that time which might been employed for the benefit of the ftate.

He knew more than a learned man need to have done, and he was unacquainted with more things than upon

id all

pro-

, on

tence

fuled

etual

ould

H an

e oentle

, to

ing,

re-

lical

Ini-

huft

ew

ely

Ai-

of

ing s I

his

bld

ar

he

he

i,

rvе

e ζS

n

than a minister should have been ignorant of. TheKing had sent him to examine the military state of France. He had just visited the southern parts to reconnoitre the fortress, and the troops quarters. When he made his report to the King, he added, that he had seen the protestants of Languedoc, and that at a time they were suspected of taking up arms, they were assembled to offer up prayers to heaven for the recovery of the Dauphin. This intelligence greatly affected the King. It gives peculiar pleasure to fovereigns to find all their subjects attached to them. This, perhaps, is the most tender point of felf-love in princes.

Though the King, by an effect of that goodness which is fo natural to him, often laid afide his difpolition to make our conversation agreeable, the progress of melancholy was very rapid upon my mind. At certain moments every thing was inlipid to me. I was convinced of the propriety of what Madam de Maintenon once faid, that in every flate of life there is a dreadful vacuum. What increased my anxity was, that I was obliged to put on a gay appearance, at the very time that the most gnawing grief preyed upon me.

Here will I fay, to the fcandal of human greatnefs, that notwithftanding the favour I poffeffed, and the brilliant elevation of my fortune, I feveral times refolved upon quitting the court—Ambition alone doubtlefs with-held me, for we factifice all things to our predominant paffion. It was this fame ambition that, having raifed me to the pinnacle of grandeur, made me pafs more unhappy days than thofe which would have glided away, If I had remained in a lefs diffingu fhed ftate. Every body envied my fate, and no one thought but that I was the happieft of women : but the ftate of my felicity was far from corresponding with the idea the world entertained of it.

D 5

Thofe

5.7

MEMOIRS of the

18

Those who aspire to a more elevated sphere than that wherein virtue has placed them, fancy that riches, rank, grandeur and titles, contribute to happinels, and that in these imaginary advantages felicity centers. This is a fallacious opinion; when once we are accustomed to these things, they feldom afford us any gratification. The idea which we frame of them, pleafes us more than poffeffion itfelf. Neither magnificent palaces, fuperb furniture, nor the most valuable jewels in Europe, which I poffeffed, could make me happy.

The Count de Maurepas, who had compelled me to request the King to grant him an exile, fignified to fome perfons about me, that he should I ke to obtain leave to refide in common at Pontchartrain. This caffle is fituated near Verfailles. and he was expresly forbid, upon leaving court, to refide there. I voluntarily took upon myfelf to obtain this permiffion for him. I asked it of the King, who faid to me, in granting it,-" Indeed, Madam, " I admire your noble foul ; the Count de Mau-" repas has grievoully offended you, and you, ne-" verthelefs, interest yourfelf in his behalf."

When the Count's friends found that the King fo ealily granted what was requested in his favour, they fooke to me about his recall to court : But I refused to employ my credit to obtain this fresh in-This was the only thing wherein Lewis " an dulgence. XV. poffeffed unfhakeable fortitude. I do not know, " N that notwithstanding all this Prince's favour, with which I was honoured, I could in this have fuccorru ceeded. The attempt might have been dangerous parlia to myfelf : We fhould never expose ourfelves to a that 1 refusal : it is the first step that leads to indifferwere ence. main

It was then publickly faid, that this minifter was indebted for this favour to the Cardinal de la Rochefoucault and the Duke de Nivernois, his relations, D₅ who

for and nior

wh

the

any fra

gen

the nac

that mof

of h thou

part

with

died. " • Ъ

" of

"tł

An a

was

com

pe 3t

this

It

heave

of G

they

T

who at that time had fome intereft at court: but the truth is, that we ither the one or the other had any fhare in it.

than

that hap-

feli-

vhen

dom

we

it-

ure,

ch I

elled

figbuld

bnt-

lles,

to ob-

ing,

am,

lau-

ne-

Ling

bur,

ut I

in۰

wis

bw,

vith

ſuc-

rous

o 2 Fer-

was he-

ons, vho

The King was always furrounded with remonfrances from his parliaments. I complained to the gentlemen of the gown, of the diffurbances which they themfelves created in the flate, by their obflinacy. They always answered me, that they laboured for the glory of the King, the welfare of the ftate, and the happiness of the people. It is, in my opinion, a great abuse of the administration in France. that private individuals, born in obscurity, and almost constantly without any other merit than that of having purchased an employment for two or three thousand louis d'ors, should confider themselves as part of the monarchy, and be continually flruggling with the royal authority. Marshal Saxe, before he died, told the King, Sire, " I advise you to reim-" burfe your parliaments; for it is from the value " of their employment, that these people derive " their confequence."

These disputes brought religion into contempt. An author, who, supposing that the Bull Unigenitus was entirely destroyed, as the parliament wanted to compel the curates to administer to sick people, sufpested of Jansenism, published a performance under this title, "The funeral oration of that most high " and powerful Princess, the Buil UNIGE-"NITUS."

It has been observed, that such books as these corrupt the morals more than herefy itself. The parliament, who would not submit to the King, faid, that they opposed the schiftn. The Jansenists, who were refused the administration of the facraments, maintained with all their might, that the gates of heaven were shut against them, in opposing the will of God; which was a schift in this doctrine, as they allowed of no flexibility in Providence : where-

fore

MEMOIRS of the

fore Mr. Maillebois, the father, faid, that the Janfenists were guilty of heresy against there own sect; for they wanted to force predestination, after having taught that it was immutable.

This fcene, which continued for feveral years, made France quite ridiculous. The proteftants of the kingdom, who were forbidden to fpeak, faid nothing: but those in foreign countries avenged their brethren's taciturnity, by publishing the most poignant fatires against those disputes, without considering that the fame principles amongst them produce the fame divisions.

Engraving was made a party in this affair; a plate was dedicated to me, wherein the hall of the parliament of Paris reprefented the fchool of the Sorbonne. All the prefidents and counfellors were dreffed like doctors, who inftructed the King and the bifhops of France in point of religion, and thefe were depicted as fcholars.

These farcasms, which afflicted the King, embittered my days. I spoke upon this subject to the first president, complained to the bishops, and had some curates introduced to me, to talk with them about it; but these measures procured me no relief, this dispute having given importance to these people, in the opinion of the world, which they would not otherwise have obtained.

F F

n n o t

h ß

fo

ti V

Whilft a proper medicine was fought to appeale these troubles, the clergy came to ask justice of the King, for the attack the parliament had made. This body had iffued arrets in regard to matters that were more connected with theology than policy.

The King appointed a commission to take cognizance of this affair. The deputies of the bission required preliminaries to be fettled, before they entered upon a negociation. They demanded, 1. The annulling of a certain arret, as an attack upon the authority

Tan-

ect; ving

ears,

s of faid their oig-

der-

Huce

; a

the

Sor-vere

and hefø

bit-

firit

bme

bout

this

in not eale

the ade.

hat

icy.

rni-

cps en-

The

the

ity

authority of the church. 2. The eftablifhment of bills of confeffion. 3. A reparation of honour from the parliament to the archbifhop, for having accufed him of favouring a fchifm. The King granted the deputies partly what they afked, and refufed them the other part. He annulled the arret, not only becaufe it infringed the rights of the clergy, but becaufe it attacked his own authority; "inafmuch, faid "the declarations, as the parliament have not a "right to make regulations; and that in cafe they "fhould have any to make, they fhould apply to "the King, to afk him leave."

In the fame arret it was fet forth, that no cafe could occur, wherein a prieft was entitled to refufe the facraments on account of the Bull Unigenitus. It was therefore added, " that with refpect to fpiri-" tual administration, the lay judges had no right " to take any cognizance, unlefs a law-fuit enfued."

These diffinctions did not restore peace, but war continued. They fought as before with the weapons of remonstrance. The parliament, who were defirous of interfering as a party in the affair relating to the administration of the facraments, would not content themselves with being only judges. New fatyrical writings made their appearance : they fpared neither church nor flate ; and the King was greatly mortified by them. I often entreated him to pay no regard to these wretched pamphlets, whose low obscure authors were more deferving of contempt But I could never prevail upon than chaftifement. him to take this revenge, which is the only one that should gratify fovereigns, with respect to these unfortunate fcribblers.

To convince him what fort of animals these authors were, I fent for one into my apartment at Versailles, after having promised him pardon for the book he had wrote, and also my protection. The King faw him, and spoke to him for fome time; after бr

MEMOIRS of the

after which he faid to me, in raifing his fhoulders, ff Indeed, Madam, you are right, those folks deferve more to be pitied than hated."

62

Though Europe enjoyed a flate of tranquillity in 1753, this was a period of troubles and divisions in France.

The nobility of Brittany fhewed themfelves equally turbulent as the bifhops, the clergy, and the parliament. They protefted in a very high file, againft what had been determined by arret, during the affembly of the ftates. They had no fuch right. This affembly in a body reprefent the royal authority; fo that their deliberations are above the proteftations of any individuals that compose it. Lewis XV. had feveral letters de cachet dispatched, which exiled the bifhops in their dioces, and the gentlemen in their eftates.

Marshal Belleisle faid, that " Letters de cachet " in France were the only fpecific for curing the " diforder of difobedience : but that they were fo " often used, that it was to be feared, they would " at length produce no effect ?" But this remedy is not always made use of by the King; ministers oftener apply it than the Prince : this is what renders the French administration fo odious to foreigners. I have, neverthelefs, heard a man of great fense applaud the use of them. He pretended that order was produced by this diforder. " It is faid. " continued he, that the King of England has no " authority to arreft the lowest of his fubjects. This " is very well in England, where a republican fpirit. " keeps every one within the bounds prefcribed to " him by the conftitution ; but, in France, where " nobody is acquainted with the laws, where the " climate and fociety excite every man's defire of " freaking, all would be loft, if the administration " had not the authority of ftopping this natural im-" petuofity of Frenchmen, &c. &c.

This

-

"

دc

"

، د د د

"

"

...

"

"

re

co da

on

66

66

۲۲ ۲۲

66

laf

COL

be

giv Po

ch

tor

tre

the

for

is,

elin

lin

e-

he

e,

g

it.

b-

b-

is

h

Ŀ-

έt

e

o d

y

s

t

t

,

" This authority lodged with the fovereign is, " perhaps, neceffary amongst us; without it the great " bodies politic would infringe too much upon the " rights of the crown. We have often feen in " France, the clergy, the third eftate, and par-" liaments, endeavouring to rule over the rights of " the King. If the fovereign had not then the power of stopping the proceedings of these bodies. " all government must have fubfided ; for it cannot " be imagined, that those, who represent the church 44 and the people, would rule with a fpirit of mode-" ration and patriotifm. In every flate of life, man " is animated with ambition, and the most dange-" rous kind of ambition is that which has for its " pretext the glory of God, and the happiness of " the people."

The fame year gave us one example of this, with refpect to the parliament of Paris, to whom the court paid too great deference, and who were fo daring as to fpeak to the King in these words, in one of their remonstrances.

" If those perfons, who abufe your Majesty's " confidence, pretend to reduce us to the alterna-" tive, either of failing in our duty, or incurring " your difgrace, we declare to them, that we feel " ourfelves posses possible of courage to become the vic-" tims of our fidelity."

M. de Belleisle, who perfonally attended at this laft reprefentation, faid to the Kind, that after this coup d'eclat (bold ftroke) the parliament must either be diffolved, or the administration of the kingdom given up to them. Lewis XV. banished them to Pontoise; but this did not increase their docility: chastifiement came too late; they had been accustomed to withstand the government. From the extremity of their exile they braved the authority of the King, who upon this occasion testified less fortitude than the parliament did weakness. They were were exiled to punish them for having interfered with the bills of confession; and they were no fooner at Podtoife, than he decreed the feizing of a priest, for having refused the administration of the facraments.

M E M O I R S of the

64

Two marriages took place, which in fome meafure diverted these parliamentary broils. That of the Prince de Conde with Madamoiselle Soubise. There were at first some difficulties raised, with respect to the titles of the house of Soubise; for this was a ticklish period, when obstacles were started on every hand; but the King sound out a modification, by granting to both the houses of Bouillon and Soubise the quality of seree highness.

Mademoifelle de Soubife brought the Prince of Conde a portion of five millions of livres in land, without reckoning her jewels and other expectancies at the death of her father. The Princes whom Lewis XIV. wedded, and the lady with whom Lewis XV. fhared his throne, were not by far fo rich.

The fecond marriage was that of the Duke of Gifors, fon to Marshal Belleisle, with Mademoifelle de Nivernois. The court is the region of metamorphose: the procureur-general Fouquet, condemned to death by nine judges, and banished France for his malversation in the finances, would never have imagined that his grandson would become the father-in-law to the daughter of the duke of Nivernois

This duke was at that time ambaffador at Rome, and I f equently faw him upon his return. He was, in my opinion, one of the foremost in merit among the lords at court. The characters of the great are generally composed of good qualities and defects, whereby they are lefs diftinguished by their virtues than their vices. This nobleman was exempt from those foibles which tarnish fuperior talents. He was an

g

"

6.

ci

w fa

to

P

fa

de

an active, vigilant, indefatigable minister; a great ftatesfman; a profound politician; uniting with the sublime qualities of a negociator all those which make a man amiable in fociety, being a good hufband, a good father, and a good friend—in a word, an honess man. Interess, that passion which viliss the great, found no refuge in his heart. I could willingly compare him to Prince Charles of Lorrain, for the virtues of his mind; and to one of the greatess of his head:—he may not, perhaps, be fo brilliant, but, then he has more folidity.

Thefe two marriages were neceffary to free us from that languid ftate, in which those mournful disputes had immersed us. It was in vain for me to attempt giving the King a gay turn of mind; those unhappy affairs constantly brought him back to his melancholy state. Besides, I did not now, as I have already faid, possible myself that gaiety and chearfulness which, before my residence at Verfailles, fo greatly characterized me; and it is difficult to transmit to others what we no longer enjoy ourfelves.

Lewis XV. who, in his lively moments, took a good deal of pleafure in reproaching me with this change of diffosition, faid to me one day, "Me-"thinks, Madam, that you throw a great share of "gravity into your behaviour. If this continues, I "must play my part to make you laugh; I must "fing little couplets to divert you." This was precifely the means I had ufed to diffel that gloom which overwhelmed him : upon my arrival at Verst failles I underftood his meaning, and I endeavoured to get the better of my penfive diffosition.

The parliament still continued in difgrace : the Prince of Conde endeavoured to restore them to favour. He exerted himself greatly to compass this defign. This prince, who had retired from Verfailles.

fooner fooner prieft, facra-

e meahat of oubife. with ; for were out a fies of neffes. nce of land, ancies whom whom far fo ike of emoif meconrance never e the Niome, was, nong it are fects, rtues from was an

M E M O I R S of the

66

failles, troubled himfelf very little with the perplexities of the court. When the King was informed of the tafk he had undertaken, his Majefty faid, li is furprifing that the Prince of Conti who has hither to never meddled with any thing, fhould give himfelj the trouble to bring fuch headsfrong people back to tkeir duty.

His efforts were fruitlefs; they would not fubmit to this Prince's reafons, and he faid upon his return to the ifle of Adam, " If the King had fent me ple-" nipotentiary to fome prince at enmity with " France, I fhould have terminated the war; but " I cannot negociate between him and his parlia-" ment

The King fet out for Compeigne, where the Court was very brilliant. All the Princes of the blood and the nobility of the kingdom repaired thither. It is by cuftom established, that the subjects eat with the King at Compeigne; in confequence of which feveral lords regaled the monarch. Among those who gave feasts to his Majesty, one Marquis Regnier de Guerchy, lieutenant general, and colonel of the King's regiment, diffinguillied himfelf the most. Methought he had taste and judgment; for both are necessary to treat a King of France with splendour and delicacy. This colonel's table at Compeigne usually confisted of two hundred covers, and it happened more than once in this journey, that he had upwards of three hundred guests. It was faid of this lieutenant-general, that he had ferved his country very well, which, ac-*cording to me, is the greatest elogium that can be given to a military man.

When the King was at Compeigne, he was lefs taken up with the difputes about religion and the parliament. Hunting and encampments entirely engaged his attention, which gave him an air of contentment, that he loft when he came to Verfailles.

The

a

t

F

pi di

ai

Τ

ft

pe ci fu

to

m

"

"

"

"

"

re

up co

T

wa

ces

net

no

to fur

gre

ma ma

to

The year 1753 was the epocha of remonstrances. The comedians turned their representations into state affairs. The opera of Paris, who faw with regret the fuccefs of the other theatres, finding that the French comedians had constantly full houses, thought proper to forbid their performing ballets. The comedians made application to the government, to obtain an edict of council to permit them to have dances. There was fomething whimfical in their remonftrances to the King; for it is difficult for a fet of people, who by their profession are defined to ex-. cite laughter, to acquire sufficient gravity to preferve fuch a ferious stile as is requisite in a piece dedicated to a fupreme tribunal. One of the deputies faid to me, "Madam, the modern productions are fo very " bad, that the greater part of them cannot be fup-" ported without ballets. Capering is a great auxi-" liary to declamation, I foretel you, Madam, that " if we are not allowed to dance, words will be of "no fignification." The King laughed when I related to him this flight.

Neverthelefs thefe fame French comedians flut up their theatre, and haughtily declared that they could not act unlefs they were allowed to dance. This theatrical vacation, which appeared triffing, was really an affair of flate. Dramatic performances prevent an infinite number of vices which idlenefs creates.

The parliament, who were always in part exiled, no longer officiating, it occafioned great detriment to public affairs. The King ordered them to refume their vocations; they did not obey. The great chamber fent a deputation to Verfailes; they made fresh remonstrances, and here things remained.

Happily for France, the Dauphine's was brought to bed, and those difputes, which had foread fuch a general formed faid, In hither bimfelf back to fubmit return ne plewith r; but parlia-

re the

of the

epaired

erplez.

he fubconfenarch. v, one eneral. uifhed e and King is co. f two nce in ndred , that h, acan be as leís d the y enconlles. The or g

an a done

But

his whic

Con

app troy

nd l

Т

b ir

rete blio

ende hem

Tł

En

div

of

bec

gio fecu " I

mie

gio

exp

time

and only

for a general gloom at court and in the city, were immediately forgot. Public rejoicings infpired fuch gaiety as dispelled this universal cloud. Frenchmen are feldom long bereft of their chearfulnefs. A marriage, or recovery, reftores to them their natural fprightlinefs. I do not know whether this continual transition from grief to joy, is not preferable to that penfive difposition of the English, which inspires them with a melancholy, from which no fecondary caufe can retrieve them. A Spanish Ambassad r faid to me, that the French have fome moments of exhat his fo iflence, but that the English are in a continual flate vard of morta'ity. reat

The new-born Prince was named Duke of Aquitaine. The King forfook bufinefs to give an entire loofe to pleasure, for which this happy event gave him a relifh. It made a fenfible change in my difpolition, as it infpired our conversation with gaiety, and renewed our fatisfaction. Verfailles was now the fcene of feftivity; when all the nobility belonging to court fignalized themfelves, and the courtiers Charl upon this occasion feemed transported with joy at efans an event, which in reality must have been a matter of indifference to them. 0 Fra The f

Such refources as these were necessary to refcue us from that languid state, wherein the fameness of amusement immersed us. I had employed the greateft refinements of art to diffipate the King's melancholy; but every thing is at length exhausted. Cuftom deftroys even that novelty, which alone can make impression on our senses.

The Duke of Richelieu, who was often of cur parties in the little apartments, afforded us great amusement. He related every thing with that infinuating art that fo happily pleafes; but even his wit betrayed too much of the courtier. One might read in his very looks his defire of fucces; never did any mortal facrifice more to fortune; he was re im-

l fuch

chmen

mar-

hatural

ntinual

to that alpires

ondary

Aqui-

entire gave

y difaiety, now

long-

rtiers

by at hatter

eſcue

els of reat-

elan-

Cul-

Can

cur

great

infi-

his i hight

ever

was

for or grafping all favour, and disposing of the state as m absolute master. He publickly said, that he had done all for me, and I had done nothing for him. But if I did not do better for him, he should blame his genius for intrigue, and his ambitious defires, which he had not always the power to moderate. Complaints were frequently made against him, which appealed. Several courtiers who had refolved to detroy him, had prejudiced Lewis XV. against him, and I reftored him to favour. But I was not willing ifiad t that he fhould fee the King too often; for I knew of ex- his fcheme was to gain his confidence, and after-fate wards to effrange from court all those who had too reat an afcendant over him.

> The bishops of France, who did not know in what b infult the parliament perfonally, whom they faid retended to regulate the Romifh church, took ocbion from the birth of the Duke of Aquitaine, to ender them odious to the nation, by comparing hem to the parliament of England in the reign of Charles I.

> The bifhop of Montauban, in vifiting his dioelans, to thank heaven for having given a grandlon oFrance, thus expressed himself in his mandate, " The fpirit of party and faction was predominant in England; there was no ftability in the laws, either divine or human; and in the midst of those clouds ⁴ of darknefs which gathered on every fide, all things became uncerta n or indifferent, except the facrilegious dogma of attributing fpiritual fupremacy to fecular authority.

" It was at this unfortunate period, that the enemies of epifcopacy having prevailed, true religion was entirely abolished, and the regal dignity expired in the opprobrium. We faw for the first time, revolted lubjects feizing fword in hand. and leading to a fhocking prifon, a King, whofe only crime was, having too patiently borne their

M E M O I R S of the

70

" their first fedition; the parliament throwing " off the Yoke of all fuperior authority, ftrik-" ing with one hand the bifhops, and raifing the " other against the head of their fovereign ; accufing " him with indecency, and calumniating him with-" out shame; condemning him without justice, " leading him to the fcaffold like butchers, and ex-" ecuting him with fury ; and the people infatuat-"ed with this execrable parricide, became deeply " intoxicated with fanaticifm and independence; " purfuing like ideots, a phantom of liberty, whilft " like flaves, they paid to a tyrant that obedience " which they owed to their lawful King. What a " dreadful feries of crimes ! Here a King affaffinated " in his bed-there another hurled from this throne " -all his family banifhed-the crown transferred " upon the head of a foreigner-ever tottering not-" withstanding the blood spilt to fecure it, " &c.

The Prince of Conti faid upon this occafion, that the bifhops fhould be forbid introducing the hiftory of England into public, prayers. This was a moft poignant fatire against the parliament, which foretold what the state had to fear from this body; but we had no Cremwell in France; and the commons of England act upon different principles from the parliament of Paris.

The English embassiador made great complaints, that any one in France should dare to reproach his nation with having put their King to death. He spoke to the minister about it, and the bishop's difcourse was suppressed. The fate of this kind of writings is always determined by the times. If France had been at war with England, the mandate would not have been suppressed ; but the peace which then subsisted between the two nations would not allow it to pass.

The

cu

lar

ped

Le

ons

cft

the

ber

Ch

ed ond

pen fay.

our

as

the

of difo

ack

fref

that

" Ы

"1

eye-

with íhou

be Id

The

mom

then

refuf

of tid

dorii

to:m

 \mathbf{T}

T

Marchionefs of POMPADour.

owing ftrik-

g the cufing

withuffice.

nd ex-

atuat-

leeply

ence :

whilft

lience

hat a

nated hrone

ferred

r not-

that ftory

meft

etold

we

ns of par-

ints,

his his

He

dif-

vrit-

ince

ould

hich

net

The

71

The parliament's arret, nevertheles, left a vacuum in the administration of justice, and business languished. I was applied to by a great number of people to prevail upon the King to create new judges. Lewis XV. for a long time refifted these folicitations; but he at length refolved upon doing it. He established a chamber of vacations, who performed the functions of the parliament, but this new chamber was fcarce established before the members of the Chatelet declared against it ; for divisions now reigned between the bodies of judicature. There was no one in the kingdom that did not declare itfelf independent of any other; which made a man of wit fay, that the Turkish constitution was preferable to ours, as the divan alone regulated the flate , whereas every parliament in France created confusion in the kingdom.

Some bailiwicks and prefidials in the jurifdiction of the parliament, wanted to fhare in the general difobedience, as well as difgrace They refufed to acknowledge the chamber of Vacations. Here was fresh subject for exile; which made a courtier fay, that " every corporation was concerned, and the " body of ushers would foon oppose the orders of " the court." The foreign ambaffadors who were eye-wanefles of this diforder, gave their fentiments with respect to the fystem of their governments. The minister from Venice faid, that a fenate should be called, wherein the supreme power should be lodged, and which no other body could oppofe. The English ambaffador spoke of a house of commons. The Spanish ambassador advised the establishment of the inquisition in France.

The parliament, removed to Soiffons, obffinately refuted refuming their functions; and the chamber of vacations rather increating the diforder, than rechoring the public tranquillity, it was neceffary to to m a royal chamber, to purfue the bufinels of the parliament.

MEMOIRS of the

72 parliament. M. de Belleisse faid, "the wished that "this chamber might continue till the end of "time."

8 ſe

ad

tiz

а

"

to an

Le

un

ret

abl

fol

tha

pre

tifi

by the second

po'n thoi

orde

A n

mer

parl

was the a

but nike

thori

mode

#Cu

V

All France was occupied with the parliament's exile. Another tribunal was fublituted in their place, for which it was neceffary to create fresh edicts, containing a new form of micature. The court and city were entirely taken up with these misunderstandings. Upon which occasion a prince of the blood faid, that " the court was very good to " trouble themselves with such trisles, whilst foreign " affairs of importance should engage the attention " of the cabinet."

The miniftry was in fact greatly weakened during these quarrels. Several members of the great chamber were related to those who filled the first employments in the kingdom. The parliament were by alliance connected with the finances; and many brave officers were either relations or friends of the exiles: Courtiers and those who had their fortunes to make at court, were for the King. I say nothing of the populace, for their opinion is of no weight in France, all divisions of this nature taking place in a region that is quite foreign to them.

These different parties animated the disputes with fo much heat, that they were often carried to extremities. Many duels have been fought in Paris, in defence of the great chamber.

A lieutenant-general walking in the Elyfian fields, feeing an officer fighting with a counfellor's brother, faid to the military man, in parting them, "Sir, "keep your courage for the fervice of the flate, "we fhall foon have occasion for it, for we are "affured that the English are going to declare war "against France."

Marshal Belleisle, who wanted to be every where, but who could not enter into the disquisitions, because they had begun upon theological disputes, which

that

d of ent's

their

h e-

The

heſe

ince

d to eign

tion

ing

mmere any

the nes

ho-

no

ng

ith

x-

is,

ls,

er,

ir,

e, re ar

е, е-

s,

h

-which he did not understand, endeavoured to put an end to them. He faid to me one day; " In " God's name, Madam, bid the King abolish the " parliament, that they may be no more fpoken of " at court." Marshal, I replied, speak to him yourself, I give you the preference.

The members of the Chatelet, who would not acknowledge the royal chamber, had alfo their partizans, who excited murmurs in Paris; which made a courtier fay, that " the Chatelet should be fent " to the Baftile."

Most of the provincial tribunals refused in turn to fubmit to this chamber. Lyons fet the example, and this was fufficient to create general difobedience. Lewis XV. faw with indignation, that his fubjects, under pretence of fidelity and fubmiffion, fhould rebel against his orders. If this Prince had been as abfolute as Lewis XIV. a civil war would have defolated France; but the goodnefs of his foul, and that gentleness which characterizes him, made him prefer the general peace of his kingdom to the gratification of his own particular revenge. Had he fpoke, those who opposed him would have been enterminated.

The kings of France had formerly but very little power; but fince they have had three hundred thousand men at the'r command, who only wait for orders to obey their will, they can do every thing. A mandate from Lewis XV. to two or three regiments, would have been fufficient to have made the parliament return to their duty. But this Prince. was an enemy to every thing that carried with it the appearance of violence. He would be obeyed; but then only by gentlenefs and m deration. Miallers, who are usually as jealous of the royal authority as the King himfelf, pretended that this very moderation was the fource of all the diforders that ficturbed the flate. E

Vol. II.

Thefe

These ministers exhorted me to induce the King to have fortitude. They represented to me the dangerous confequences that would result to the ftate, by leaving the disobedience of the parliament unpunisted. Those who were in the interest of this body remonstrated to me on their part, the danger of keeping in exile the depository tribunal of justice, and who alone could administer it : a tribunal that were meritorious for their very resultance, as it was the strongest conviction of their zeal for the glory of the King, and the happiness of the people, &c.

If I had followed my inclination, I thould have infifted upon the royal chamber's being fuftained, to the exclusion of the parliament; but I knew the King's heart. I knew that his natural goodness would prevail over his refolution.

j

h

a ŧ(

ſ

e tł

p ē٤

"

•66

no

Ье

ſo

fhc

obi

the

The Duke of Richelieu was ever intriguing with the King, and had gained an afcendant over him. This courtier always fought for opportunities of converfing with the Prince in private, and of obtaining his good graces. I had frequently oppofed his defigns, and this had determined him to make one great effort for engroffing the King's favour, This conduct displeased me, and as he always itnewed the attack, My Lord, faid I to him one day in the prefence of the King, I have received letters from Languedoc, by which I am informed, that your presence is there required. I advise you to set out for Montpellier, which is in your department; for his Majefty will not have any bishops or governor of that province at Paris. The courtier understood my meaning. He fet out a few days after for Bourdeaux, and I feldom faw him upon his return.

The Duchefs de Talard, governefs to the children of France, being lately dead; the King-faid to me, Who fhall we entrust with the Dauphin's young family? Sire, I replied, Madam Talard was polfeffed

75

it

feffed of great merit, which makes it difficult to fupply " her place. I have thought upon all the women of " France, and I do not know of any but the Coun-" tefs de Marfan, who is capable of fucceeding " her,"

She was appointed, and this lady, who was acquainted with my interpolition in her favour, made me her acknowledgment. This preference I had given her, created me many enemies. All the ladies that were excluded, confidered me as the caufe of their exclution: thus is a King's favourite loaded with public hatred. When there is a vacancy, fhe can alk it only for one perfon, and most frequently all those who laid claim to it, become the enemies of her that disposed of it.

The birth of the Duke of Aquitaine had diffufed univerfal joy at court ; and his death immerfed the. royal family again in melancholy—tears fucceeded joy—but the fubject was foon forgot. Had it not been for the funeral pomp, which lafted feveral days, he probably would have been no more thought of after the firft. The fpectacle of his death made tears to flow; without these obsequies, his loss would fcarce have been mentioned. The court was ftill engaged in curbing the ftrides of the parliament and the Chatelet. This affair filled the flate with edicts. Appolitician faid, " that if the government had given." " the fame attention to the other branches of the " administration, France would have been the best " regulated kingdom in Europe."

This attention did not, however, reftore order; no one of the parties would yield to the other.

At length this great affair, by which France had been to much diffurbed, and given foreign nations to much fcope for fatire, was terminated just as it fhould have been terminated; that is to fay, by the obftinacy of the parliament, and the wearinefs of the King. Lewis XV. (I cannot too often repeat

E 2

danal of unal as it the &c. have ned, the Inefs with him. s of obofed hake our, one ived that fet | nt; rnor tood burbhild to ung -loa ffed

King

the

the ment

lt of

M E M O I R S of the

76 it in these Memoirs) is a good Prince; his tender and sympathising foul is not of the number of those that are irritated by resistance.

The felf-love of Kings who will be abfolute, creates diforders, which ufually fwallow up both ftates and politics. The prince, who was defirous of maintaining the peace of his kingdom, and advancing the happinefs of his peop'e, yielded, the very inftant he faw that, by oppofing his parliament, a general revolution might be dreaded.

The King's conduct in this respect, was by many greatly cenfured; he was accused of weakness. Perhaps he was animated only by respect. The shaft of ridicule began to fly; for kings of France, as absolute as they may be, are not exempted from their attacks. A prince of the blood thus expressed himfelf before several courtiers. "I always faid, gen-" themen, that the mountain in labour would bring " forth nothing but a mouse."

M. de Maupeou had a private audience of the King at Compeigne, where all the preliminary articles of peace were figned. The monarch declared to him, that he fhould recal the letters de cachet, and that the parliament might return to Paris, where the general treaty of reconciliation was to be framed.

The triumph was too great not to be accompanied with glory. The prefident immediately proclaimed his victory. He difpatched a courier to every court in the Kingdom, and gave intelligence to his brethren, who arrived at Paris in triumph. Although this peace reftored tranquillity at Verfailles, which influenced the happine's of my life; yet I acknowledge; my indignation was kindled to fee the lawyers thus get the better of the King's first refolutions. I was acquainted with their obstinacy, and this alone fet me against them.

Reports were spread that I was the instrument of this

this reconciliation, and that the King yielded only at my interceffion ; but this was rumoured like an infinite number of other things, which had no more foundation. I acknowledge, that I ardently wished that these parliamentary disputes were at an end ; but if a confidered my own tranquillity, I did not forget the glory of the King. I feveral times fcolded M. de Maupeou, in the minister's presence, for the little deference he paid to his master's orders, and for the formal disobcdience of his bedy. He constantly replied, with that gravity which is common to those who are at the head of an assembly, that he and his brethren were the most fubmisfive fubjects of the ftate; and this answer is ritated me ftill more. The King defired to fee this magiftrate once more before an entire reconciliation took place. He received M. de Maupeou with that politeness that is fo natural to him, and which gains him the hearts of all those who approach him.

"My intention, Sir, (faid the King to him) is, that my parliament fhould refume their functions in the capital: I hope I fhall have no farther cocafion to complain of them; and that the goodnefs with which I treat them, will engage them to fulfil their duty for the future, with that zeal which they owe to my fervice, and a ready fubmiffion to my orders."

The Queen was defirous of having her fhare in the event; the prefident waited upon her. "I conceive the most perfect joy, faid this Princes, at the "King's restoring the parliament of Paris to their "ancient functions. I have been greatly affected at "the interruption that has occurred; and it is with "fatisfaction I affure you of my, effect for that body."

Those who determine every thing at court and in the city, thought the King had shewn too much weakness upon this occasion; that he should either

ider iofe

oth of ncery , a

any Pert of ofoneir imening the rtired net, ere nce Alles, acthe lu-

be t of his

not

M E M O I R S of the

not have carried things to far, or elfe purfued them ftill farther. But those who determined in this manner, could they themselves have communicated to the government that forefight that is neceffary to be acquainted with events before they happen? The first disputes that arose between the court and the parliament were fo trifling, that to have judged of them by the usual course of things, they could not have occasioned the least disturbance in the state. The minds of people were infensibly irritated.

Fresh circumstances having changed the state of the question, they infensibly wandered from the firstprinciples, and then each party were cargied beyond their goal. The King often told me, at the very time that he was thundering forth edicts against the sarliament, that if he had known things would have been carried to such a length, he would have yielded at first.

The recal of the parliament had great influence over us. From that moment the King became gayer than ufual; our conversation was lively and joyous. "Sire, I faid to the King, if you have any subject "of complaint against your parliament, I entreat "you not to let them remain long in exile; for I thave too much at stake in the misunderstanding "and much to gain by a reconciliation."

P L H H L

a h

The death of the Marquis de S. Conteft, which happened at the time of the recal of the great chamber, occafioned a vacaricy in the ministry. I have in another place spoke of the talents and character of this minister; it was faid of him that he was fond of peace, because he did not know how to conduct a war. By his death there was a poss to be filled in the department of foreign affairs. There were many candidates, but sew ministers. The war had disposed every one's genius for arms. Few but the first clerks in offices applied themselves to business. The King fought about him, and I enquired of all those who furrounded

m nto

be

he

he

of

ot

te.

of

£.

hd.

ry

he ve.

ed

ce er

s. A

at-1

g

h

n

5

6

furrounded me, without finding what the ftate wanted. "Sire, I faid to the monarch, till fuch "time as fome happy difcovery can be made, I ad-"vife your Majesty to appoint M. Rouillé to fupply "the place."

All France was aftonished at this choice, and M. Rouillé himfelf as much as all France.

Many confiderations induced me to make this determination in his favour.

He was to be raifed or lowered at will. M. de Belleifle fuid, that he might be created King of France, and afterwards reduced to a clerk of the navy or war office. He had none of those brilliant qualities which attract admiration; but he was endued with probity, and a minister was then wanted who was an honeft man.

Many placemen had been guilty of malverfation; fome upright perfon was required to remove the diforders of the ftate. I heard a very honeft man fay, that the office of foreign affairs required a chief who had more equity than fenfe, and more probity than knowledge. He faid, that the northern nations, with whom this minister was continually engaged, have the character of franknefs, which they like to find in those with whom they are concerned. This fame perfon proved that all, or the greater part of the wars between France and Germany, derived their fource from the corruption of this minister.

The department of the marine was given to M. de Machault; he was already keeper of the feals, and comptroller-general. Many perfons had fpoken to me of him; but his qualifications alone determined me in his favour. He had great penetration, and was very proper to fill the poft he held; I could have withed that he had poffeffed not quite fo much ambition; for this paffion, when it has no bounds, makes the moft enlightened geniufes commit many errors. Ingratitude is moft conftantly its attendant, and I look upon a man who is wanting in fentimenta of acknowledgment, as a moniter in nature.

79

and

The comptrollership of the finances was given to M. Moreau de Seychelles. These changes puzzled the public, and gave a wide field for speculation. These who assure to these places, thought that the persons to whom the preference had been given did not deserve them. They were first murmured at, and then courted. M. de Machault in giving up the finances for the marine had degenerated. It was faid of this minister, that he had less a golden post for a wooden one.

I acknowledge that I would have induced the King to have placed at the head of these two first departments in the kingdom, two men of superior genius to those who were lately invested with them; but where were they to be found ? Marshal Saxe faid before he died, " that a ministerial school and not a " military school should be established; he pre-" tended that all Frenchmen were born foldiers, " and that no one came into the world with the " qualities of a minister."

The officers of the navy had for a long time complained that they did not enjoy the fame honours as those of the land-forces. They underwent more fatigue, and equally exposed their lives; it was therefore unjust not to allow them the fame prerogatives. Lewis XIV. who had done a great deal for the French navy, had not yet done enough. I interested myself in its favour, and only feconded the King's good intentions : he instituted a great cross of St. Lewis, with three commanders, the orders of which were to be diffributed according to the rank and merit of fea-officers.

The joy that forung from the reconciliation of the court and parliament, was fucceeded by greater. The Dauphine's brought forth a Duke of Berry. The fatisfaction the King received from the increase of

of his royal family, was unparalleled. Each new neir filled him with happinels. I may fay, that the fortnight following these two events, was the most agreeable per od of my life whilst I was at Versailles.

In the mean while the parliament was received at Paris with demonstrations of joy, rather infulting the court; all the avenues to the palace were illuminated, bonfires blazed, and the bells were rung. The King was difpleafed; but M. de Maupeou anfwered him, that none of his body had any hand in these rejoicings—and this should have rendered them the more fulfpected.

Edicts had been created for eftablishing a royal chamber of juffice; others were now issued for supprefing it: whereupon one of the members faid, "that it was not worth while to make a court-"gown for so fhort a time; and that if he had "known that the royal chamber would have been "revoked so foon, he would have bought neither "wig nor band, but would have judged the cri-"minals with a fword by his fide."

The King's letters-patent upon the return of the parliament, are worthy of being handed down to posterity. Lewis XV: there speaks like a master to a court who had opposed him, because they had confidered themselves as absolute, and whose fresh convocation was a manifest proof of their disobedience. The King expressed himself in this manner.

"The refolution which the officers of our parliament took on the fifth of May, laft year, of discontinuing the administration of justice to our fubjects, which they should perform from us; their refufal of refuming their functions, which form an indispensable duty of the functions of their fate, and which they have engaged by the fanctity of oath to perform, compelled us to testify to them our displeasure at their conduct: the pretext they gave for discontinuing their usual fervice

E۶

" was,

81 enta

n to zled

ion.

the

did iat,

up

Was

¢o[t ling

arts to

but

be-

bt a re-

ers,

khe

m-

23 bre

rees.

ch

elf

n-

is,

re

of

of

r.

y.

ſe

bf

đċ

"

"

"

"

"

"

"

"

"

66

"

..

"

"

"

"

66

"

66

66

"

"

"

"

66

80

m

M

"

"

66 ha

di

ni

bd

" was, a kind of additional fault on their part, the less excusable, as they could not doubt of the in-" tentions which we had, and by which we con-" ftantly abide, of liftening to what our parliament " might have to represent to us, for the good of our " fervice and that of our fubjects; and not being " ignorant that we were informed by their arrets, " of the object of their remonstrances, they must " have acknowledged that they had brought upon " themselves the refusal which we gave to hearing " those repeated remonstrances. But after having " for a time made them feel the effects of our difpleafure, we have willingly liftened to the dictates " of our clemency, and we have recalled to our se good city of Paris, the officers of our parliament. "Being, neverthelefs, ever attentive to the diffipat-" ing of those divisions, which have for some time « arifen, the confequences of which have appeared " deferving of our greatest attention, we have taken " the most effectual measures for procuring hence-" forward public tranquillity; and in hopes that our " parliament, earneftly fliving, by ready obedience " and redoubled affiduity, to repair the injury our " fubjects may have fuftained, will upon every oc-" cafion teftify their fubmiffion and fidelity to us, by " conforming themfelves to the wifdom of those de-" figns which animate us, we have refolved to re-" affemble them at Paris, to fignity to them our " intentions.

⁶⁵ Urged by these motives and others, with the ⁶⁶ advice of our council, and our certain knowledg ⁶⁶ full power and royal authority, we have by these ⁶⁶ prefents, figned with our hand, ordered, and do ⁶⁶ order all and every one of our officers of our par-⁶⁶ liament to reaffume their ufual functions, in our ⁶⁶ good city of Paris, notwithstanding any thing to ⁶⁶ the contrary, and to administer justice to our sub-⁶⁶ jects without delay or interruption, a cording to ⁶⁶ the

8ż

e ·

-

t

r

g

5 ł

n

g

Ş,

3

r

.

-

c

ł

1

•

r

e

r

.

7

.

" the laws and the duties of their pofts ; and being " fensible that the filence imposed for so many years, " upon matters that cannot be agitated, without " being equally prejudicial to the advantage of re-" ligion and to that of the flate, is the most proper " means of fecuring the public peace and tranquil-" lity; we enjoin our parliament to pay attention, " that there be nothing on any fide attacked, at-" tempted, or innovated, that may be contrary to " this filence, and to the peace which we defire " fhould reign in our dominions ; ordering them to " proceed against the offenders ag eeable to the laws " and ordonances. And, moreover, to contribute " to the gacifying of turbulent minds, and have what " is pair forgotten ; we will and expect, that all ⁶⁶ proceedings and profecutions, that may have been " carried on, and the definitive fentences that may " have been pronounced for contumacy, from the " beginning, and on account of the late troubles, " till the date of these presents, shall remain with-" out any confequence or effect, without injuring, " however, the definitive judgments that may have " been contradictorily given without appeal; pro-" vided always, that the parliament against whom " they may have been given, may have recourse to " fuch legal methods as remain, if fuch there be," &c. &c.

We were told at Verfailles, that this declaration met with many difficulties from the great chamber. Marfhal Belleifle faid to the King upon this occafion, "If your parliament after their exile, do not regifter "your letters patent, they muft be banifhed out of "the kingdom," &c. A courtier, on the other hand, faid, he fhould be very much furprifed if they did regifter them. His reafon for being of this opinion, was, that when too much refpect is paid to a body, they naturally abufe it. The declaration was " neverneverthelefs registered, but with the usual restrictions and distinctions.

After the parliament's recall, it was neceffary that they fhould pay a compliment to the King, and M. de Maupeou pronounced it. He acquitted himfelf like a fubtle and fkilful magiftrate, who, in cautioufly treating the prerogatives of the crown, difplayed those of his own body. This fecond piece deferves alfo to be handed down to posterity. It was as follows.

SIRE,

"The greatest missortune that can befal faithful "fubjects is, doubtlefs, to incur their fovereign's difgrace.

difgrace.
This trial, which your parliament has lately made, plunged them into fuch excels of grief, as cannot better be defcribed to your Majefty, than by the ftriking teftimony which we give you, in refpectfully acknowledging it:

"The union, Sire, which, through your good-"nefs, has taken place amongst those members, who "were for a long time dispersed, has enabled us to "testify our submission to your orders, and our love "to your facred person.

"Can any thing be more worthy of the beft of "Princes, than to ft etch out a paternal hand to the magnificates, who were totally incapable of giving "him frefh proofs of the zeal, with which they are animated for his fervice, and enable them to "lay before him the motives which induced them to take, as may be faid, againft their inclinations, fuch fteps as have been fo unfortunate as to difpleafe him?

"What glory, Sire, will ever be comparable to "yours! After having fo often conquered your enemies in perfon, your fole occupation, in the height of peace, is the happiness of your people. "You"

Aions

that

M. Mfelf

auti-

ayed

fol-

hful

gn's

tely

han

in odvho

to bve

of

the

ng

ley

to

m ns, il-

to ur

he

e.

as

"You love truth, and you endeavour to be acequainted with it; truth reaches even you, without any other aid than your own understanding: and it is no fooner known to you than it enjoys all its prerogatives.

"Truth alone made you fenfible how much the differition of all the members of a parliament is a dangerous example, by reaion of the blow it levels at all the fundamental laws of the kingdom; and by the immenfity of the evils that are derived from it.

"It was this fame truth that made you acquainted with the feelings of your parliament, at the dread of being for ever banifhed from your prefence, by your refufing to receive their remonstrances, upon the mere view of the nature of the objects that must have been introduced into these important representations.

"In a word, it was this truth that engaged you to remove their fears with that goodness which will transmit to future ages the true love which you have for fubjects, whose interests, you know are infeparable from your own.

"You have gone still farther; you have ex-"tended the wildom of your deligns throughout "your whole kingdom, by taking the unshakeable "refolution of maintaining therein that order and tranquillity upon which its splendor depends. It is in order to stop those divisions, the dangerous confequences whereof you are acquainted with, "that you have commanded the most profound fa-"lence to be kept with regard to matters, which cannot be discussed without being prejudicial to "religion, and the happines of the state.

"Ah! Sire, how could your parliament have re-"frained from confecrating, by registering, fo falu "tary a law, notwithstanding the pungent grief "with which they were afflicted upon reading the "" preamble

MEMOIRS of the

86

" preamble to this law ? Yes, Sire, we dare make this reprefentation to you; your parliament, in all the unhappy circumstances in which they have found themselves, have, by giving the preference to public affairs before private ones, only done what was exacted from them by the duties of their station, and the facred observance of their oath.

⁶⁶ Let us be allowed to tell you, Sire, that your ⁶⁶ parliament defires nothing fo ardently, as to know ⁶⁶ how fully to convince you of the firength and ⁶⁶ extent of their duty. They can do nothing of ⁶⁶ themfelves : they exercife that portion of authority ⁶⁷ you have entrufted them with ; and the only ob-⁶⁶ jeft to which all their efforts tend, fhall be to ⁶⁷ make themfelves agreeable to your Majefty, and ⁶⁶ to fulfil their duty : a duty, Sire, that compels ⁶⁶ them inceffantly to watch over the prefervation ⁶⁶ of that precious deposit of authority which you ⁶⁶ hold from the Almighty, and which fhould be ⁶⁶ transmitted in all its purity to your most remote ⁶⁶ posterity.

⁶⁶ How happy is it for us, to fee this fupreme ⁶⁶ power in the hands of a Prince, who governs with ⁶⁶ fuch wildom and moderation, as muft gain him ⁶⁶ all hearts ; and who knows that the real links which ⁶⁶ unite Frenchmen to their Sovereign, are those of ⁶⁶ love.

⁶⁶ So deeply, Sire, is it graven in our fouls, that ⁶⁶ we proteft to you, in the name of all the magif-⁶⁶ trates that compose your parliament, that they ⁶⁷ will be always ready to facrifice what is the most ⁶⁶ dear and precious to them, as foon as the intereft ⁶⁶ of your glory is concerned, and to fet an example ⁶⁷ to your fubjects of the fidelity and obedience ⁶⁶ they owe to the Sovereign will."

The bishops of France pretended that this was a groke of the most arrogant modesty that had appeared

pea diE

nari

the by con

inſ

ma

pre

wa

It v bef

I Aill

my nato tha

me

affa pred

diffi

to beloc

goc whi

all 1

fore

rece ing glift

"E Wh

erm

peared this century. Courtiers found many contradictions in it. The first prefident declared, in the name of his body, that the authority exercised by the parliament was a deposite entrusted with them by the King; how then, it was faid, could this trust confer to this body such independence as extends to opp fing the will of the Prince ?

æ

in re

ce.

he bf

ir'

r ₩ d у - о Ц

Towards the close of this difcourfe, we find an infult offered to the crown. This body, who had manifeltly oppoled the King's orders, and who had preferred exile to fubmiffion, fay, that they will always be found ready to fet an example of obedience. It was faid, that an example of obedience was never before given by difabedience.

Notwithstanding this reconciliation, there was ftill fome animolity remaining on both fides. For my part, I was delighted that this affair was terminated. I have frequently repeated in these Memoirs, that it troubled the King, and this was sufficient for me to defire a reconciliation.

To the parliamentary quarrels fucceeded political affairs. The English were making great warlike preparations; the last peace had not removed all difficulties. The plenipotentiaries were more eagure to put an end to battles, than to prevent freme bloodshed.

Marshal Noailles had often told me, that the negociators at a congress have only one point in view, which is to fign the treaty. Upon this they exhaust all their genius, so that they have not the faculty of forefight remaining.

The Duke of Mirepoix came from London to receive the King's orders. This Minister, in speaking to his Majeity of the preparations that the English were making, affured him, "That Great "Britain had no thoughts of interrupting the peace." Whence comes it then, faid the King, that they are erming as if they wanted to be at war?

" Sire,

"Sire, answered the Duke, it is a maxim with "the English, to avail themselves of the tranquil" "lity of Europe, to increase their forces."

This Minister, who was befides an honeft man, believed what he faid. French emission in London had written to court, that the English deceived him, that he let himself be imposed upon by appearances, and that the cabinet of St. James's concealed their views and defigns from him.

I often defi'ed the King to appoint another Ambaffador for the court of London : but he was afraid of difobliging this Lord, who, moreover, did honour to his employment; by his grandeur and magnificence.

Lewis XV. has fuch a beneficent foul, that he cannot refolve upon withdrawing his friendship from those whom he has once honoured with his confidence, unless he is convinced of some capital fault that compels him to it.

Verfailles became daily more and more melancholy; the unhappy affairs of the clergy, the bifhops; and the parliament, fpread a gloomy air over all those who frequented court.

To relieve the King from the languid flate into which these disputes had brought him, I had Beltevile built. It was a square pavilion, where the eye discovered more taste than magnificence: the King complimented me upon it. He often repaired thither. I had embellished this spot with simple works, and art was concealed behind nature, which prevented its discovery,

The gardens and groves were delightful. Lewis XV. often faid to me, that he was fuffocated at Compeigne, at Fontainbleau, and at Marli; but that he breathed at Bellevüe. We divided our time between walking and gardening, with other rural amufements. Flowers composed part of the plan of tÌ

h

Ь

th m T th of pl ed

re

fa

of di

fid

hi

pa

w

I

m ye

W2

ali

wa

cor

the

cor

la-Q

with uil-

han,

idon' im,

ces,

heir

/m-raid

ho-

ag-

he om

nfi-

ult

hops;

all

htð

el-

ilie

the red

ble

ch

via

at nit

ne

ral

an of of our recreations, and I had fome brought from every part of the world.

When the King entered this houfe, he laid afide that air of Majefty which regal pageantry obliged him to keep up elfewhere. I was always a gainer by this metamorphofis, as it rendered him gayer than ufual; and his fatisfaction, which increafed mine, fpread an air of joy over our converfation. There was, befides, another difference, which was, that at Bellevüe the King talked to me of his tafte, of his appetites, and other things that tended to his pleafure; whereas at Verfailles he never entertained me with any thing but difputes upon religion, the refufal of facraments, or other-matters, which were far from being agreeable to him.

This retreat gave him frequent occasion to speak of the advantages that accompanied private life. He discovered in it charms, that the perplexity of public business, and the tumults of the throne, made him the more fensible of.

The King, defirous of giving me marks of his particular protection, created the effate-of Marigni, which belonged to my brother, into a marquifate. I thanked him for this favour, which appeared to me the greater, as Vandiere had not done any thing yet to deferve it.

Let us return to general affairs. America, which was upon the point of exciting univerfal war, began already to difplay fome fparks of that blaze which was to inflame Europe. The English made the first complaints. The Farl of Albemarle reprefented to the court of France, that the French in Canada committed hostilities, contrary to the treaty of Aixla-Chapelle.

The court of France replied, that they were ignorant of fuch proceedings: but that to prevent any mifunderstanding, they would fend orders to suppress these first differences, on condition that the English

M E M O I R S of the

00

English would, on their fide, act in the fame manner. Both nations promifed, but neither kept their word. They were mutually deceived, as most usually happens upon these occasions.

I remember that when the English made these first complaints to our court, a foreign minister faid to me, that the cabinet of Versailles and that of St. James's knew very well they were going to war; but that they would not fay so, to make the thing more mysterious.

" In that cafe, Sir, faid I to him, the King is "not in the fecret, for he does not know a fylla-" ble about this war which you foretel." In fact, Lewis was quite ignorant that he was at the eve of engaging in a long fucceffion of fieges and battles. He was well informed of the motives which induced the Englifh to complain: but he had not been acquainted with their refolution of having recourse to arms.

Whilft the mifunderftandings in the new world were the fubjects of conversation, the religious war ftill continued in the kingdom. The King, who, in order to reftore tranquillity to the ftate, had done every thing that was defired of him, had the mortification to find that nothing was done that he defired. He was obliged to exile the Archbishop of Paris. I was witness to the affliction he was under, from the neceffity of giving this order. He had endeavoured to bring this Prelate back to his duty, by all the methods which his goodness, and his beneficent foul, could fuggest to him; and it was not till after he had in vain effayed them, that he refolved upon fending him to Conflans.

The conduct of this Archbishop, who had openly disobeyed his Sovereign's orders, irritated the courtiers to that degree, that the Monarch was advised by several of them to have him feized by the military power, and to keep him closely confined : but Lewis XV. add he ſho the pal chu M " " mo qua a li line faid the ifw WO rep anfi

ma

X

οu

tha

Hd

fte

pri

the

wh

the fide

pre

ing

the cou

bad

mantheir ulu-

thefe faid of St. war; hing ng is yllafact, re of ttles. uced acto orld war , in one ortichirof der, enby efitill ved urfed ary vis V. XV. was of too gentle a difpolition to put fuch rigorous counfel into execution. I have often heard him fay, that Kings fhould punish, but never think of revenge. He entrusted the letter de cachet to one of his minifters, with orders to fignily it to the Archbishop as privately as possible.

The King found himfelf again obliged to banifh the bifhops of Orleans and Troyes, two prelates whole fentiments were too conformable to those of the Archbishop of Paris. These two might be confidered as the fire-b ands of the kingdom. They prepared the people's minds for difobedience, in fhowing themselves rebels to their Prince's orders. One of thefe, from the extremity of his exile, infulted the court and the state by a mandate, wherein he forbad all his diocefans to have recourfe, in the cafe of administration, to any other priefts than those whom he prefcribed; and it was necessary that these priests fhould be vicars, or curates. This was conftraining the extent of priefthood; but as foon as the epifcopal authority is the least attacked, the Princes of the church are always ready to undertake any thing. Marshal Saxe faid, " That if God were to limit the " power of bifhops in France, these bishops would, " in turn, allot bounds to the power of God."

The exile of the Archbishop of Paris filenced his most confiderable partizans; but it did not finish the quarrel.

The minister of the marine laid before the King a lift of his navy : it confisted of fixty-fix ships of the line, and thirty frigates. A politician of the North faid, that this was not sufficient to make head against the Engliss ; and he prophesied, at that time, that if we did not avoid going to war, the French navy would be totally destroyed when we made peace. I repeated these words to several of our ministers, who answered, that this politician was unacquainted with marine prophecies. France has long fince been deprived

MEMOTRS of the

pred

adva

thar

se fe

66 V

the

ing

writ

herſ

cifel wer

the

ed

on ftill

ger

The

fecr

quei

çns bem

the

has

with

with

not of f

the

flue grea

pref

"

S

prived of those ftates men whose penetrating genius could unravel the most diftant events. We at prefent go mechanically and habitually to work, an the track we are compelled to follow. Marshal Saxe made use of a very fingular expression; he faid, that our government daily performed their day's work.

The naval force was kept in readinefs : feamen were enrolled ; but able fea officers were wanting: France has feldom had any good ones. Lewis XIV. formed fome but they expired with his reign.

The fpirit of party and animofity was ftill kept up at court. The cabal who ftrove to deftroy me, increafed with my favour. Envy difplayed all the latent fprings that human wickedness could fuggeft. All who furrounded the Prince, endeavcured to deprive me of his confidence.

Amongft those who conspired against me, there were people who were indebted to me for their fortune, and for whom I constantly interested myself. I pointed them out to the King. Lewis XV. detests ingratitude; these dark proceedings produced a very contrary effect to what my enemies had proposed. The King paid me more attention than before, and defpised those the more who would have deceived him. I shall not repeat here the low and scandalous artifices that courtiers, and even some ambitious women, put in practice to surprize the Monarch's heart. A detail of these intrigues is unworthy of history, and I have no design of transmitting to posterity the artifices of cabals, which relate to no one but myself.

M. Moreau de Seychelles, comptroller-general of the finances, was of fervice to the ftate. He was very affiduous in regulating the finances. I made the King take notice of him, and immediately this Prince made him minister of ftate. He had his enemies at court : it was faid that he had done nothing yet to deferve that post, and that fortune having fo precipiprecipitately forced his elevation, he would never advance above half way to favour.

When he came to court, to return the King thanks, I faid to him, "Sir, many people pretend to "foretel the deftiny of your administration, con-"vince all France that they are falle prophets."

The Duke of Mirepoix, who had always affured the court, that the English had no thoughts of breaking the treaty of peace, was at length obliged to write that they prepared for war. France haftily put herfelf into a ftate of defence, without knowing precifely whether she was coming to blows. Orders were dispatched from the office of the marine to all the ports and harbours. The ships that were finished were launched, and the others kept ready to fail on the first notice.

The treaty of Aix-la-Chapelle was, neverthelefs, ftill negociating at Paris. This bufinefs was no longer tranfacted with Lord Albemarle; he was dead. The interefts of Great Britain were in the hands of a fecretary of embaffy, who gave vague replies to the queftions that were put to him, upon the preparaticus his court was making.

Some politicians have affured us, that if Lord Albemarle had lived, the war, which afterwards rent the two nations, would never have taken place. It has been faid that minifter, who had great weight with George the Second, was that time connected with a woman of pleafure at Paris, whom he would not part with. This perhaps is only furmife, defititute of foundation; but after all, this would not have been the first time that the amours of a courtezan have influenced the affairs of Europe.

Upon the arrival of the difpatches from London, a great council was held at Verfailles, and the King expressed himfelf in the following manner to his minister.

"I am refolved I will not begin the war, and if the English break the treaty of Aix-la-Chapelle, "Europe, enius pre-1 the Saxe that men ting: XIV.

t up ine lacít. de-

here forfelf. teffs very vfeð. and ived lous W.Oart. ory, -the ſelf. l of was ade this neing ſo pi-

T

th ro

be

Fr

an

for th inf

du

to bu

arr ter

aga

ad

in

Le

len

ref

wh

 \mathbf{T}

in

the wa

fee

left

de

mif

twd

"

"

ss ,

" Europe, who shall be witness to my moderation, "fhall fee that they are the aggress."

M. de Maillebois, the father, faid publicly at court, that it were better to prevent them than to give them an opportunity, of doing it.

The King's moderation met with no advocates but those whose interest it was to avoid fieges and battles; for every one was concerned in the event according to his particular views of interest. Military people wanted war, merchants and financiers wished for peace.

The court of London fent my Lord Hertford to Paris, to replace the Earl of Albemarle. This Ambaffador was compared to a herald at arms : it was faid that he was come to declare war againft France. He fpoke, in fact, in fuch a tone, as teftified that every thing was ready in England to invade America. M. Rouille was fo intimidated, that he faid to the King: "Sire, Great Britain must have refolved to declare "war, for her Ambaffador talks in fuch a ftile, as "if the Englifh were ready to open the campaign."

Upon the first report of the preparations of an armament, the military men, who, fince the last campaigns in Flanders, had deferted Verfailles, came in shoals to make their court to me. All my apartments were lined with officers, who, in intreating my interes to recommend them to the Prince, set forth their talents in the military art.

The Bifhops war, neverthelefs, fill continued. The Archbifhop of Paris, banifhed to Conflans, was not thereby rendered more fubmiffive. He, from the extremity of his exile, braved the court and the city. He was removed to Lagny fur Maine, a little town that had neither the grandeur nor magnificence of Conflans. This retreat, by diminifhing his epifcopal pomp. no way changed his character, which remained inflexible. The other rebelious bifhops were treated with more feverity: but these lettres de cachet had a very opposite effect to what was intended. They

- 4

They ferved only to make them more important in the eyes of their partizans, which increased their arrogance.

A courtier faid to the King, that a feminary fhould be built at Rome, to which fhould be fent all the French bifhops who rebelled against his orders, with an establishment of 100 Roman crowns per head, for supporting their grandeur.

It is certain that too much respect was paid to these people; and the very chassifiements that were inflicted on them, when they swerved from their duty, were tempered with so much confideration, as to prevent their returning to it.

The bifhops having nothing to do in their exile but to write, and being unable to employ any other arms than their pens, France was deluged with letters and mandates. These were fo many manifestoes against the royal authority. The King was often advised to hang the Printers, who were instrumental in the circulation of these feditious papers ; but Lewis XV. would never have recourse to those violent methods.

The English, at length, explained themselves with respect to their warlike preparations, the news of which Fame had trumpeted throughout Europe. They declared to the government, that the French in Canada had made incurfions upon lands under the dominion of Great Britain, and that England was not inclined to fuffer fuch ufurpations. We have feen that the two crowns, when peace was concluded, left the decifion of this affair to commiffaries. Count de Argenson had foreseen, at first, that these commiffaries would completely ruin the interests of the "Sir, faid he, when two powers, two courts. " with arms in hand, cannot agree upon certain " differences, it is impossible for individuals to re-" concile them."

Never-

95 ation,

ourt, give es but

tles; ng to rantice. d to Amfaid Hé verv M. ng: lare 25 h. " arlme in ents inrth ed. vas the ty, wn of bal nre h-' d.

y

Neverthelefs, the English council did not fay that they should declare war, but only that they were discontented with the French in America.

This declaration afflicted the King, who did not defire war. The national debts were not yet paid, the fame imposts still sublisted as before, the people were always oppressed ; fo that a new war must overwhelm them. Lewis XV. spoke to me of the misfortune that threatened France, in such a manner as persuaded me he was sensibly affected. I was a winnels to his uneafinels upon this account; and it is but justice, which I owe this Prince, to fay he was penetrated with grief upon the occasion. This was not the case with the ministers and military courtiers, who were in hopes to advance their fortune by means of this new revolution. The difficulty was not to undertake the war, but to find generals to carry it on.

Marshal Saxe, the terror of France's enemies, and in whom the troops placed an implicit confidence, was dead. Of all the officers who had ferved under him, there was not any one who furnished the fame hopes of his abilities. They had courage and experience: but these were not fufficient'; for I have heard it faid, that to form a hero, requires an affortment of qualities, which are feldom found in the fame man.

Amongft the generals who had ferved in the late wars, Marthal Belleisse was the most defirous of commanding in chief; but besides his never having been a good general, his capacity was greatly impaired. He expressed himself in difficient terms, and was very verbole. It was taid of him at court, that of all the genius that had elevated him to the pinnacle of greatness, he retained nothing but loquacity.

The flate was now threatened with three different wars, two of which were declared. That of the Bull, as it was called, which was upon the point

V

E

t

0

W bi

n ar fti

fo

in ،،

"

66

"

"

"

٠.

٤6

•

Tł

Marchionels of Pompauour.

of caufing a revolution in the flate: that of the Barbarians, who, notwithflanding the faith of treaties, interrupted the trade of the nation; and that of the English, who were ready to give us battle.

97

A man of wit, who was told that the English were going to be our foes, said, God be praised, the bishops quarrel is now at an end, for those people are never at war but in time of peace.

The Archbifhop of Paris, who was fiill exiled, and fill obfinate, wrote a letter to the King in a file truly original, and without example fince the foundation of the monarchy. He faid to the King, in very formal terms, that "His power was fupe-"rior to that of the Sovereign, in matters relative "to the administration which God hath entrufted "him with; that his duty was that of conducting "his flock; that he acknowledged no other upon "earth; finally, he would not, nor could not, re-"tract from the first fleps he had taken; that thefe "were his last fentiments, which would continue "always the fame to the grave, &c. &c."

This was a period diffinguishable for disobedience. The clergy gloried in rebelling against the orders of the King. This obstinate disposition had made its way into the provinces. The deputy of Languedoc related to the King an event that happened at Montpellier, which pointed out to this Prince the neceffity of ftopping the progress of fuch abuses. This man faid, that the wife of a counfellor of that city, " who had refused to receive the Bull, and whose life was in danger, requefted the curate of her parish to administer the facraments to her. Upon her first request, the curate and four vicars fled. Application was made to the other parifhes, but it was found that all the clergy who administered had deferted. The chief juffice then ordered an independent prieft, and who was not belonging to any church, to administer to the Lady. This ecclefiaftic thought it was his VOL. II. F duty

v that were

d not paid.

eople

ift of the Inner

ras a nd it

v he

was urti-

e by

was

s to

and hce,

hder

ame

pe-

ave af-

the late

ot ing

៣-ınd

hat

inty.

er-

of

nt

duty to obey; but he had obferved that the hoft had accompanied the priefts in their retreat. He did not find a fingle wafer in the tabernacles of the different churches of the city. The curates and the fecondaries had eat them all before their departure. He confecrated one : but this was not fufficient; it muft be administered. A general infurrection was feared. The commander of the place was obliged to put the garrifon under arms, and appoint guards for the conducting of the hoft in fafety to the fick Lady's house.

ł

6

6

6

1 u

c

c te

h

n

la

fu

V

he

to na

th fiz

w

M

.66

66 .

••

rep

Such fcenes as thefe, in a city full of Proteftants, made the Romifh religion become a fubject of public derifion. The King was greatly affected at it, though he would not yet refolve to use violent remedies.

→ I have faid that the King did not defire war; to prevent which, if it were yet poffible, he fent Buffy to Hanover, where George II. was expected. I was not for employing this man, thinking he had not fufficient capacity to fucceed in a negociation of this importance; but Lewis XV. had been prejudiced in his favour.

Buffy's partizans faid he fpoke with refolution and an abfolute tone; qualities that were looked upon as effential at a free court, where moderation and fupplenefs are always unfuccefsful. But the contrary was the truth. Buffy negociated badly to prevent the war, and he failed fome years after to reftore peace; but I laid it down as a maxim, never to oppofe the King's fentiments.

Orders were difpatched to all the commanders in the American colonies, to fit out as many fhips as they could, to oppofe the defigns of the English. I heard Marshal Noailles then fay, that troops should have been fent, and not orders.

The death of Marshal Lowendahl, the pupil and companion of Count Saxe, that happened at this time, had

not ent

fe-

ure.

; it

was

i to

for

ly's

hts,

Ыic

it,

re-

to hffy

was not

this

l in

and

as μp-

ary

ent

ore bp-

in i

as . I uld

and his

ne,

time, created forrow, which in the prefent circumflances was the more fenfibly felt. His military talents had made us conceive hopes that his death deflroyed. The conqueft of Bergen-op-zoom had acquired him a reputation, from which France might have derived advantages in the war with which fhe was threatened. I teffified my chag in, upon this occafion, to the King. "You have reafon to la-" ment the death of this officer, he replied to me ; " he was among the number of those who were " most deferving of any confidence. It is in vain for " me to feek amongst my fubjects, I fhall find no " one capable of fupplying his place."

Lewis XV. who had honoured him during his life-time, was willing to befow marks of diffinction upon him after his death. He was at the expence of his funeral obfequies, and granted penfions to his children of both fexes; recompences that were due to his merit, and with which the King gratified his heirs. All those who were eclipfed by this general's merit, rejoiced at his death; none but real patriots lamented it.

Whilft France was employed about the means of fupplying the expences of the war, we learnt at Verfailles that England found voluntary refources in her fubjects for her's. Private perfons offered money to fuch failors as enrolled themfelves in the royal navy, and others engaged to support their families at their own expence during the war, had it continued fix luftrums.

Certain communities offered free gifts to thole who would bear arms againft France. I faid to Marshal Belleisse, who related these facts to me: "It appears to me, fir, that a people who act in this "manner, has the advantage over those who give "no money but what they are compelled to part "with, for the expences of the war." That is true, replied the old Courtier; but this fame English na-I' 2

tion, who thus voluntarily part with their riches for a war, which they think useful to the state, often lose all their advantages at a peace. A Lord who wants to make his way to the administration by a system of pacification, intrigues with the king, gains his confidence, and has his creatures. These set forth, that steges and battles ruin the state, that commerce is hurt by them, and that industry perishes. The cabal acquire strength, the candidate minister's party increases, he gains the ascendent, and the peace is signed, at the expence of the nation's blood and treafure.

M. de Mirepoix ftill continued his negociations at London : he conferred with Sir Thomas Robinfon, who gave him hopes; but this was only to gain time : the war was refolved upon. Count D' Argenion often faid to the King, that this ambaffador fhould be recalled, as his refidence in London only amufed the ftate, and made the French nation ridiculous. The King and council were greatly perplexed; Lewis XV. was not willing that Europe fhould be able to reproach him with having committed the firft hoftilities.

Marshal Lowendahl, who before his death was witnefs to this embarrafiment, faid publickly at court, that it was better to attack as a principal, than to be beat as a fecond. This counfel was not followed, but we repented of it.

As for me, I was neuter in this great affair. It was reported that I wifhed for war, to make myfelf more confiderable at court. I had no occafion for either fieges or battles, things conftantly deftructive to a flate, to fupport my credit with the King. Lewis XV. honoured me with his confidence : all thofe who had endeavoured to prejudice me had mifcaried in their attempt ; rank and grandeur had no longer any charms for me : the only ambition I had remaining was the fettling of my daughter ; but fhe was

.100

for ole

nts

em

bis

b.

·ce

he

tv

is

ahs

h۰

in

rbr

ly

1-

e

LS

ŧt

Ι,

)£

t

- resedr

was not arrived at an age to be married, and I did not doubt that the King would honour her with his protection.

Peace was still the subject of conversation at London and Paris; but we at length learned that the English had declared war against France in the new world; the court of Verfailles received advice, that Admiral Boscawen had with his fleet taken the Alcide man of war, upon the banks of Newfoundland. The manner in which he took this fhip aggravated the The Alcide fhould not have been attacked. offence. at the time fhe was attacked, for fhe had no fighting orders. It is a cuftom eftablished amongst all civilized nations, when they declare war, to publish a manifesto, containing the grievances which induce them to have recourfe to arms; and England had not published any fuch : therefore this ftep was confidered as a real piracy. This was observed to the King, who immediately fent orders to the duke of Mirepoix and Buffy to return to France, without taking leave of the court of England. Henceforward all means of accommodation were fufpended."

The King, who had been defirous of avoiding a war before it began, took his measures as soon as he was acquainted with this first act of hostility. His honour would let him no longer put up an affront offered to his flag. He faid, upon retiring from the council, " Madam, war is declared; the English are my enemies."

The operations of the war office took place: the armaments by land and fea, the augmentation of the troops, and the means of fupporting the army, were taken into confideration.

From this time the King lived more retired, he did not hunt fo often, and he debarred himfelf feveral diversions which he took before. He conferred regularly with his ministers. Count D'Argenson, with whom he was often locked up, gave him a circumstantial

F.3

M E M O I R S of the 102

cumftantial detail of his land forces, and the naval minifter laid before him a fimilar account of his navy. Lewis XV. made feveral objections to them concerning the principal points of their administration, to which these chiefs in office were obliged to anfwer.

The count D'Argenfon, whole administration was then the most important, as he was at the head of military affairs, told the King that his troops were in a good flate, that military discipline was well enforced, that the French were fond of war, and that we might flatter ourselves with fuccessful campaigns, provided the generals feconded the ardour of the troops, and were not themselves an obstacle to the grandeur of France.

The conferences with the minifter of the finances were of a flill more intricate nature; there weremany ancient debts unpaid, the revenues of the crown were mortgaged, commerce and induftry, which had juft recovered fome little vigour fince the peace; were upon the point of returning to their inactive Rate:

The comptroller-general faid to the King, "Sire, "the flate of things muft not be difguifed to your "Majefly; great forings muft be put in motion to "maintain the burthen of the war. I have made a "calculation from the flate of your finances, and "they will procure me refources for four years: "if at the end of that time peace flould not take "place, the campaigns cannot be carried on with-"out impofing very oppreflive taxes upon your people."

The King, who after this conference paid me a vifit, faid, that he had juft been converfing with a minifter, who was the honefteft man in all France; for fuch I must call him, he added, who has so much probity as to speak freely to his King.

The

103

The minister of the war department required an augmentation of 40000 men, which was granted him, and orders were iffued accordingly for raifing recruits. M. Belleisle told me, that fo many men were not neceffary for the defence of a handful of barbarians, that this would increase the expences of the ftate, and only tend to weaken it. He did not foresee that these levies were nothing in comparison of those that were to be afterwards made.

France had not been perfectly fecured by the treaty of Aix la Chapelle. Her ports were open and defencelefs. Upon the commission of the first acts of hosfility in America, it was refolved to reftore the works at Dunkirk. The prince of Soubife was appointed by the King to fee this operation take place : eight thousand troops were allotted him to favour the execution of this defign.

Upon the first reports of the revolution in Canada, two fucceffive squadrons were dispatched, of which no news had yet been received. The uncertainty of the success of this small naval armament suspended the grand operations by land:

The council of flate could not refolve upon any fixed plan of operations, the members being divided in their opinion. I was a witnefs to a great part of the diverfity of fentiments which then diffurbed the court, with refpect to this grand affair.

A man of much good fenfe faid, like Marfhal Belleifle, "that great armies were ufelefs; that land "campaigns were not the object, but a fea war; "that the colonics fhould be put in a ftate of fecu-"rity which alone could be conquered; that the plan "of the Englifh was not to increafe their power in "Europe, but to extend their limits in America; "that all their defigns tended that way, and that we "fhould direct ours to the fame object; that France "was guarantied in Europe by the general balance; "but that there was no fyftem whereby our fettle-F 4 al y. nn, n-

of

re -

n-

at

s, le

ıe

es re n h

e

٠,

r ο

a

d

:

e

•

2

Ζ.

MEMOIRS of the

104

" ments in the new world were guarantied ; that " the crown would lofe its influence, when trade " would be entirely in the power of the English; " that the British navy was already superior to the " navies of all Europe, but that after the loss of " Canada and the other parts of the continent of " America, it would be the only one in Europe; " that this was the crifis for France, and that if the * opportunity was neglected of protecting ourfelves " from this last attempt, it would never return; " that all other plans of warlike operations fhould " be given up, to purfue that of the colonies, as " they interested the general republic ; but that this " perfonally and folely interefted France ; that A-" merica being once conquered, the whole body of " Europe could not reftore the equilibrium, becaufe  the power of the first states of the continent did " not extend to the fea; that the English in the " centre of the christian world, were separated from " Chriftendom ; that they could not be attacked in " their own islands ; that nature had fecured them " from all invafions in Europe, &c."

The oppofite party, on the contrary, faid, " that " great armies fhould be raifed to oppofe the allies " of England, who would not fail to form defigns " in Germany; that here the capital ftrokes would " be ftruck ; that the war in America was only " the pretext for that which was to be carried on " in Europe; that fome troops fhould be fent to " Canada; but that numerous legions should be " raifed for Germany; that we were miftaken if " we thought the English limited their enterprizes " to America, as it was visible that their defigns. " tended to excite a revolution in the north of Eu-" rope ; that the general balance guarantied France " no farther than the herfelf contributed to support " a just equilibrium ; that with respect to trade in " general, there was no reason to apprehend that " England

hat

ade

h;

the

of

of

e;

he

res

Ι;

lď

as

is bf

ſe

d

e

n

n

t

" England could engrofs it, as there were not fuffi-" cient materials in that country to compass the " defign ; that the English were compelled to have " recourfe to industrious nations, and where the " price of labour was not fo high ; that universal "trade confifted in exchanges, and that a people " who should confiderably diminish that of other "ftates, would greatly cramp their own; that with " refpect to the navy, one could not be immedi-" ately formed to balance that of England; that the " expences made upon this account would be end-" lefs, as the time was too fhort and the means " too circumferibed ; that the lofs of Canada was " not certain, the events of war being cafual; that " the favage nations loved the French and hated " the English ; that they would prefer being exter-" minated, rather than submit to the British yoke ; " laftly, that if Canada fhould be conquered in this " war, it might be retaken in another ; but that if " the English united with their allies, should avail " themfelves of favourable circumstances to gain " advantages in Europe, it would be then too late " to repair the damage, as the laft victories would " be guarantied by new treaties of peace ; whereas " in America the barbarous nations in alliance with " France, who are unacquainted with the laws of " nations, are always ready to create revolutions : " in a word, that it was France's interest to set on " foot numerous armies to fupport her pretenftons " by land, and to yield for fome time the dominion " of the fea, Er. Er."

A third party maintained that both thefe objects fhould be attended to: "We fhould (faid they) pre-"vent the English making conquests in America, " and hinder any taking place in Europe. France is sufficiently powerful for this; the need only "manage well her forces; the will prevail every " where, when those who govern the state unite in

F 5

" one

M E M O I R S of the

год

" one common interest; that is to fay, the glory " of the nation, and the happinels of the people. If " the northern powers of Europe are inclinable to avail themfelves of the mifunderstandings in Ame-" " rica, we must keep our engagements, and fend " 24000 men into Germany. A more numerous " army can only procure us a greater loss without " any advantage. These moderate succours will " enable us to fend more confiderable affiftance to " the new world, to protect our colonies; the re-" volution in Canada is not a maritime quarrel, it is " a land war. The point is to defend the continent, " and it is only neceffary to land troops there; and " this the English cannot prevent. They have taken " no measures yet to block up the passages ; but if " we do not make hafte, we shall be too late; for " the English, who keep a steady eye upon our ope-" rations, will no fooner find that we do not make " any great preparations by land, than they will be-66 gin to make very confiderable ones by fea."

There was also a numerous party inclined for peace : the reasons which they alledged, were founded upon our inability of carrying on the war ; but the minds of the people were too much agitated to listen to plans of pacification ; each had his fchemes for pushing his fortune, and private interest always prevails over the common weal. Subaltern officers who wanted advancement, were defirous of fieges and battles. Those who endeavoured to obtain the command of armies were desperate advocates for war ; and such as would be employed in furnishing the neceffaries for carrying it on, thought it indispensable : it is plain from these.motives, how little the interest of the flate was confidered.

During this crifis the clergy of France were affembled; they deliberated very feriously, whether fick people should have the facraments administered, or whether they should die without them. The bishops

ļ

ł

ċ

C

g

v

r

b

n

v

d

e

b

Y

y If

0 e-Id

us∙

it ill

lo

eis

t, d.

łn

if

٥r

eke

e-ŀ

t

b

s s łs

s le

br

g.

v ſ-

er

d,

he

Ds

bifnops who had been brought over by the court and the parliament, were of opinion, that they could not be refufed this affiftance. Those who expected nothing of the King, and who hated the parliament maintained on the contrary, that they should be refused them like heretics. At length, after many debates, they seemed inclinable to leave this great affair to the determination of the Pope.

I learnt this news with pleafure. Benedict XIV. then filled the papal chair. Many perfons who had been at Rome, gave me a very favourable opinion of this pontiff. He despifed his predecessors, refined policy of turning every thing to their own advantage; the first steps he took upon his obtaining the pontificate, made me conceive a real esteem for him. He had abolished at Rome those wretched equivocations, which in ferving as food for fuperfition, difhonour the Christian religion, He knew that God fometimes wrought miracles, but that he does not daily alter the course of nature. This prince of the church preferred the title of an honeft man to that of a holy one, and this quality raifed him above all the Popes that ever existed upon earth. Benedict XIV. had fo much understanding and fo little prejudice, that his decifion could not fail to reftore tranquillity to the Gallican church.

The administration of the facraments was not the only difquifition which engaged the clergy; the grand affair for which they were convened, and in which the whole body were unanimous, was to deny the authority of the parliaments, or any other body of laymen whatever. Lewis XV. who could not begin the war without opprefing his people, was willing to fet them an example of economy, by diminishing his houshold expences. He reduced his equipages, and the number of his hunting horfes in both stables. The expences of his little journies were regulated and diminished : it was refolved that there there fhould be no diversions this year at court, and the works of the Louvre were fulpended, &c.

108 MEMOIRS of the

The Count D'Argenfon faid, " that these favings " are fo fmall an object, that they will scarce enrich " a commission of stores during the war."

I was myfelf often inclined to have an eye to economy; but M. de Belleifle had told me that it was fcarce poffible to benefit the flate by fuch frugality; he added, "If it were an evil, it was im-" poffible to remedy it; but that all those that " ferved the King would enrich themselves; that a " reform would produce no advantage; that it was " better to cont nue employing the old officers who " were already opulent, than to replace them with " new ones, who would endeavour to become fo."

Neither the council of flate nor the warlike preparations deprived me of the King's company, who vifited me regularly, and communicated to me his defigns and intentions. The refolution he had taken of being revenged of his enemies, gave him an air of fatisfaction, which he had not before he had taken it; his only uncafinefs was for his people : he was afraid that the continuance of the war would exhauft them too much.

It was thought neceffary to review the troops, and there were three encampments. The prince of Soubife wanted the command of the camp of Hainault : I fpoke to the King, and it was granted him. M. de Chevert, and the Marquis de Voyer, in whofe favour I alfo interested myself, obtained the two others.

Though hoftilities were begun in America, Lewis XV. would not continue them in Europe. A frigate of the Breft fundron having taken an English frigate, the King immediately ordered it to be released, as he faid, he would not make war in time of peace, and be the first to infringe the treaty of Six ha Chapelle in Europe.

A general.

A general officer, who was in my apartment when the King told me he had just difpatched this order, could not retrain telling him, in my prefence, "Permit me, Sire, to reprefent to your Majefty, "that this moderation will no-ways alter the fystem of the court of London. The English have refolved to fall upon us, and to feize all fach ships as they think they have the superiority over : reprifals are neceffary, and we should feize all fuch vessels as are inferior in strength to our's that meet with them."

ď

zs

ĥ.

0

it

-

1-ıt

а

9

0

h

۶.

)

s

1

e 7

9

The fea-officers paid their court regularly to me: for the navy was to have the honour of this war. There was a promotion of officers, and I interefted myfelf in behalf of fome, in confequence of the characters that were given me of their capacity and courage.

I know that complaints have often been made in . France of my choice of certain perfons, as well in the army as in the administration : but those who condemned me were unacquainted with Verfailles. Every courtier has a party who cry up their talents and genius. It is impossible to defcry real merit through these extravagant eulogiums. All those who are interested in a courtier's advancement, either in the army or in the government, hide his faults, and display his good qualities; for every man has a favourable fide.

The death of Madame, daughter to the Dauphin, created fresh affliction for the King. I have often heard the happiness of Kings extolled, when they are in reality more to be pitied than other men. A citizen has scarce any thing but domessive troubles to afflict him : a Monarch unites family missfortunes with those of the state.

Scarce had Lewis wiped away his tears, before he had news of a battle that was fought in America, near いいにしたないためのないというないないできょうとうないので and the state of a second

South and the second second near the Ohio, between his troops and thole of England, in which General Braddock fell, and where the French gained a compleat victory. The blood that was fpilt in this affair, a detail of which may be found in the annals of Europe, clofed all avenues to an accommodation. The only measure to be taken in Europe was to be upon the defensive, and this was not taken. The English feized as many merchant-fhips in Europe as they met with in both feas. The commanders of these fhips had received orders to furrender without making any refissance. I defired the King to explain to me the motive of this policy, and he replied to. me as before; that he would hot break treaties, and make war in time of peace.

The English availed themselves of this moderation; they became absolute masters of the sea, and filled their island with French prisoners.

At the very time that the court of Verfailles piqued themfelves upon fulfilling their engagements, the court of London reproached us with breaking them. The reftoration of the works at Dunkirk was conftrued into an infraction of thefe fame treaties, for which France facrificed what power fhe had remaining at fea. In this manner each government endeavoured to juffify their defigns; and thus was ambition difguiled under every form to obtain its ends.

Marshal Noailles, who was not of opinion that France should let the remainder of her navigation and trade be crushed, to convince all Europe that the English made war like pirates, faid, that this external moderation deceived none, that the court of Versailles alone was deceived.

Those who agreed in opinion with the King, pretended that all these captures made without a declaration of war would be reftored; but real politicians thought otherwise, and experience has demonstrated, by the event, that these were not deceived.

Repeated

e

d

e

Э

1

s

Repeated orders were difpatched to all the feaports, and preparations were making for a landwar; but there was not a fufficient fund in the royal treafury to fupport the extraordinary expences. The Comptroller-general faid to the King, " Sire, " the farmers-general offer your Majefty money, it " fhould be taken. They will lend the crown fixty-" fix millions at 4 per cent. the flate in its prefent " exigence cannot purchase money at a cheaper " rate."

It may, perhaps, be thought that the financiers, affected at the ftate of France, made this voluntary propofal from a fpirit of patriotifm; but pofterity will know that the fame fordid intereft which conftantly actuates them, incited them to difplay this generofity. One of the first conditions was, that the leafe of the farms fhould be renewed. They afterwards infifted that there fhould be no under-farmers; that is to fay, that the profits ariling from the farms fhould be no longer divided, and that they fhould be fole mafters of the finances. They alfo wanted to have the difpofal of all the employments in the farms.

It was publicly faid in Paris, that I had framed the scheme of this loan. It is true that four farmersgeneral applied to me, to make the propofal from their body, and that I mentioned it to the King. Lewis XV. had it examined in his council, who approved of it; this is all the fhare I had in the transaction. Those who imagine that a King of France can raife money by the act of his own private will, are unacquainted with the government. This fum was far from being fufficient to put in motion all the machines of war that were forefeen to be neceffary. The King borrowed thirty millions upon the posts at 3 per cent. but even this additional fum was not enough. The King's fecretaries, as well of the upper as the inferior college, were taxed, and this this impost, the least burthenfome perhaps of any, because it fell upon such as purchased their employments through oftentation, produced a supply of forty-five millions.

ΙΙΙ

With this fund, it was incumbent upon us to oppofe the defigns of the English at fex and of fuch powers as were enemies to France by land.

I faw the King as ufual. He fupped almost every night with me, and communicated to me all his plans and defigns. Difficulties did not aftonish him. Lewis XV. is flow at refolving, but when he is determined, his resolution is firm. He appeared more gay than ufual: perhaps the internal tranquillity of the state greatly contributed towards it; for the broils with the court of England had produced fo good an effect at home, that schifms were no longer the subject of conversation. The curates adminiftered to the fick, and thus the clergy and parliament were reconciled.

We learnt at Verfailles that George II. who had made a voyage to his Electoral dominions, was returned to London. His prefence was there neceffary to expedite the military operations. We were at the fame time informed, that feveral councils had been held at Kenfington, in which it was refolved to make war. It had already been purfued for fome time; and these councils were held only to deliberate upon the means. The English had by this time taken from the French 250 merchantmen, and made upwards of 4000 failors prisoners of war.

The two nations mutually upbraided each other with the injuffice of their proceedings. The English reproached the French with having infringed upon the treaty of peace, and the French openly declared, that the English made war like pirates : and added, that the parliament of England might be compared to the Divan of Constantinople, and George II. to the Dey of Algiers.

IIL

The

p

The Duke of Belleisle faid, that these reproaches were carried too far; that there were sufficient grounds for the two nations fighting for five hundred years without declaring war.

Count D' Argenton afked a foreign minister, in my presence, Which of the two parties was the most equitable? " They are both unjust, faid the foreign-" er. France is in the wrong for having made in-" cursions upon the British dominions in America, " and for having fortisted Dunkirk; and England " has done amiss by seizing the ships of this nation, " and for having made prisoners of war in time of " peace."

 $\hat{\mathbf{I}}$ related this difcourfe to the King, who faid, that most of the foreign ministers were unacquainted with the origin of the dispute, and that they judged of things only by appearances, or according to the ideas they entertained of their own country.

These private discourses no way altered the general operations. The armaments by fea and land continued going on, and we prepared ourselves for war. The Pope offered his mediation; this was Benedict XIV. The matter might have been referred to him, had it been possible for him to have negotiated the affair in person; but it must have been entrusted to nuncios, who are as ambitious as they are ignorant, and who are acquainted with no other politics than those of the Vatican.

The King of Portugal alfo offered his fervice : but as he was incapable of throwing any weight in the fcale, he occafioned no alteration in the defigns that were formed for purfuing the war.

The duke of Noailles faid, he was furprifed that petty princes without power, fhould think of being the arbiters of the power of the firft flates in Europe.

I fhall not conceal from posterity that pacific proposals were made between the two courts; but they were 112 any, loyfor-

opuch

ery

his im. deore of the fo ger niiáad

e-ŕу

he en

to ıe

te

1-le

r

h

n

,

,

1

114 MEMOIRS of the

were fo diftant from their respective views, that it may be presumed they were offered only to make the torch of war blaze the more, though the pretext was to extinguish it.

France's demands were great, and the English required too much. This was the method of fucceeding in the defign that was formed of not agreeing. p

e

In order to increase the troops, and render the armies more numerous, recourse was had to an expedient which was of very little consequence. The invalids, who, by their services and their wounds, had obtained admission into the hospital, were ordered to bear arms and fight the enemies of the state.

A wit faid upon this occasion, that this was hav-"ing recourse to the dead to wage war against the "living."

In proportion as the quarrel between France and England increased, Lewis XV. gave me more power. It was imagined in the world, that I was the arbitrefs of this new revolution: it is true, the King asked my opinion upon many things; but I took care not to be answerable for such events as might give a new bias to affairs in general: I referred him to the council of state, leaving them to share all the blame, if any was incurred.

The minifters faw me more regularly, and the general officers who were defirous of commanding the armies, paid their court to me with remarkable affiduity.

. Whilft agreeable news was received from the new world, the court was very uneafy about two fquadrons which had fet fail for America; but advice came of their being returned to Breft. The King came himfelf to acquaint me with the news, at which he teffified much joy. It was natural to think that the fhips which composed these squadrons would fall into

if

into the hands of the English, who had fent very confiderable fleets to America.

The first advantage the French gained in Canada, produced a fecond. The Iroquois nation offered to enter into alliance with the French.

The count D'Argenfon fhewed me the difcourfe which the deputies of this favage people addreffed to M. Vaudreuil, who commanded the King's troops.

" May the Great Spirit preferve the captain of the " French and his valiant warriors ! May the extent " of their courage be measured by the number of " their wounds! We, whole nations are as ancient " as the ftars, and the most courageous upon earth, " come to offer thee the right arm of our warriors. " The black gowns who are amongst us, have ta-" ken care to make us acquainted with thy nation, " which is the most valiant of any after our own, " because they have seen that these warriors might " learn from ours what they did not know before. " Our nation, who reckon more than ten thousand " moons, come then to unite their forces to affift " thee, in order to regale our wives and children " with the dead bodies of the enemies of the captain " of the French. Receive the calumet of peace, " and as a mark of joy, give three fhouts to the fun, " which is rifen to enlighten our nations."

This lefter being made public at Verfailles, a courtier, who had read it, faid to the King: "Sire, we muft make an alliance with the Iroquois, for "they will eat as many Englifhmen as they can find. "Those people are to famished with glory, that "they devour their conquests." A few days after the return of the Brest fleets, the King faid to me: "The English parliament desire peace, the people "of England want war. I shall take no fleps to pro-"cure the last; but if it is proposed to me upon "honourable terms, I will accept of it." いたいで、 たいていたい たいない たいたい たいできょう しょうかい しょうしょう たいたい たい A STATE AND A STATE AN

M.-

MEMOJRS of the

M. de Belleisle told me, that no terms would be proposed, and that all the reports that were spread in England, were only defigned to amuse France, and surprise the government.

" Marshal, faid I to him, we may possibly be fur-" prifed, for it is above a year fince we were told " that we ought to be fo. "

Whilft warlike preparations were making on every fide, the minister often received memorials from individuals, pointing out the object of cur first attack.

The French have for fome time been greatly addicted to politics. It is pretended that we caught the infection from the Englifh, and that it was communicated to France by the way of Calais. A man of great wit faid to me one day upon this head, that fince this contagion had fpread, an infinite number of people, whose labour and industry might have been very beneficial to the ftate, became idle spectators. In England this rage is not so dangerous; the citizens engage themselves as well with their own private affairs, as with the administration in general. But in France, when a man gives himself up to politics, he paffes his life fystematically.

The Count D'Argenson shewed me a memorial; which he had received from an unknown hand, bearing this title, Important.advice to the government.

"We should not wage war, faid the anonymous "author, either in Germany or in America; the Eng-"lifh navy is superior to ours: the English will in "the end have the advantage over us. In opposing "ourselves to their forces, we shall only compleat-"ly ruin our own.

"We fhould take the field with a bold troke. It fhould feem for fome time paft, as if our ministers were paid by the English government, to go into all ⁵⁶ all the fnares that were laid for them. It is only ⁵⁶ neceffary that the court of London chalk out a ⁵⁶ plan, for that of Verfailes to follow them. This ⁵⁶ bold ftroke is to enter into alliance with Spain, and ⁵⁶ invade Portugal provifionally. The Portuguefe ⁵⁶ are allies of the Englifh, and this is a fufficient ⁵⁶ plea to conquer them : I fay this is fufficient, for ⁵⁶ princes have long fince thought they had no occa-⁵⁶ fion for a pretext to make war : it was only necef-⁵⁶ fary that an invafion favoured their defigns.

"That kingdom is eafy to invade; Portugal has "neither armies nor officers, for we fhould not con-"fider as foldiers, a few natives badly difciplined, "who never faw fire, and commanders that never "ferved. Some months must elapfe before the Eng-"lifh can fend them troops and generals. Lifbon "will be taken before the Englifh fleet can fet fail "to defend it.

" Portugal being once in the hands of the French, the English will attempt nothing; or elfe at the peace, they will give up every thing.

"To form a judgment of the importance of this invation, the advantages which Great Britain derives from Portugal should be confidered.

" All Europe knows that this kingdom has no manufactures, and that the Englifh furnifh the Portuguese not only with every thing which protimotes their luxury, but even their physical wants. Forty thousand artizans, in every kind of trade, are constantly at work for them. Portugal maintains forty thousand of King George's subjects. These contribute to the support of an equal number of other citizens; and as this primitive induftry is the source of infinite subordinate species of it, the interruption given to these manufactures would occasion a diminution in the general circutiation.

" Eight

vere vere nufe

ſur-

old

ve-

bm

atadthe

ni-

of

hat

of

en

rs.

ns

hf-

in ts,

1,

r-

us

g-

'n

g

t-

t

61

0

11

•

"Eight thousand merchantmen fail every year from the river Thames to enter the Tagus; twenty thousand English failors are therefore supported by this fingle branch of commerce.

"The mines of Brazil produce annually frefh "riches for England, which are the more advan-"tageous, as they furnish that nation with the "means of purchasing alliances, and paying subsi-"dies. It is partly with the gold of Portugal that "Great Britain maintains her fleets, and raifes " armies.

"It is true that the riches of Portugal are in A-"merica, and that the English fleets might possible themselves of the mines; but the English would "not derive great advantage from this conquest.

"The extraction of gold is a manufacture that "muft be rendered profitable, to draw advantages "from it : and this capacity is not the lot of every one. The Portuguefe, naturally fober, and who have but few wants, can alone derive thefe advantages from it; the Englifh, with whom labour is much dearer, would be lofers by it. Great Britain, inftead of being enriched, would be impoverifhed by the mines.

"It is a general rule, that mines always ruin their proprietors, as Spain and Portugal evince, which are continually impoverifhed in proportion as their mines become fruitful. The only nations that are thereby enriched, are those who barter their industry for the produce.

"The invation of Portugal would make a change in all the fyftems of Europe. It would caufe a general revolution in cabinets. The face of affairs in Germany would be entirely altered. The King of Pruffia would change his plans. The "Belligerant

"Belligerant powers, who are preparing for a certain war, would be obliged to carry on another which would greatly diffrefs many powers.

"France by this first cast would fave great armies, "and still greater fums. Portugal would be no "fooner taken, than the English would set about "retaking it : this war, which would at once en-"tirely occupy them, would divert them, from any "other.

"The English ministry are prepared for every "thing, except the invation of Portugal. They "have planned all their operations for the German "war, and that in America; but no fleps are "taken for the defence of Portugal.

"But this expedition fhould be equally fecret as fpeedy : these form the foul of fucces. The greatest part of our operations miscarry, because they are tardy and public. The enemy is almost constantly acquainted with our designs the very inftant that they are projected : this is the certain means of rendering them abortive. The English, it is true, are not prepared to oppose this invasion; but if they gain timely notice of it, they will fet afide fome other plans to prevent this. Expedition and penetration are, we know, the two characteristic qualities of that government.

"The court of Madrid fhould be made ac-"quainted with this fcheme by an extraordinary "courier, and their affiftance requefted; or, we "fhould rather purpose giving up Portugal to them, "after the invalion.

" If the court of Madrid has hitherto refufed en-"tering into alliance with France, it was becaufe "an expensive war was proposed to them, which "offered nothing but charges without conquest; "but us; 1pefh an-

'ear

hat fes

A -

eſs

ld

at es

гy

10 1-

l-łt

1-

n

•

n

s

r

the

 but when we propole giving them, as the fruit of  their alliance, a kingdom at hand, and to which  they pretend having ancient claims, they will not  helitate a moment.

⁶⁶ The troops that are in Roufillon, Languedoc, ⁶⁶ and Provence, fhould be forwarded by degrees ⁶⁶ nearer and nearer ; the marching of those that are ⁶⁶ more diffant would different the project."

END of the SECOND VOLUME.

