The Cause of Constitutional Liberty Threatened in the United States

New York, July 12.—Three years ago Congress, by resolution, declared "that the people of the Island of Cuba are, and of right ought to be, free and independent"-that they were then independent, and were justly entitled to be independent. This country intervened to establish their independence, and by the same resolution promised not to exercise "sovereignty, jurisdiction or control over said island, except for the pacification thereof." To-day the President is the absolute ruler of Cuba. He spends the revenues of the island as he pleases. No Constitu-tion, no law, fetters his power. At his instance Congress has violated the The "independent" nation's pledge. Cuban people have been told that they will not be allowed to establish any government in their own land, unless they surrender in part the control of their finances and foreign affairs; unless they give to this country the possession of strategic points on their territory, and unless, in addition, they give to it the right to intervene in the domestic affairs whenever in the judgment of our authorities the occasion shall demand such intervention. They are offered no option to refuse these demands, which are backed by the presence of American troops on their soil. Thus to the whole world our course has become an example of national perfidy. The enforced submission of the Cubans to these unjust requirements has made the stain on our national record in-

The Supreme Court has spoken, but has left the law in doubt. Some of its members have given their countenance to views urged by the Ad-ministration, of which their asso-ciate, Mr. Justice Harlan, says. "If the principles thus announced should ever receive the sanction of the mafority of this court, a radical and mischevious change in our system of government will be the result. government will be the result. We will in that event pass from the era of constitutional liberty, guarded and protected by a written Constitution into an era of legislative absolutism." Where such a revolution is threatened, and when Congress and the Supreme Court both fail; there is no help save in the people. If they would avert the impending calamity they must help themselves. Let us not be misled by names. Imperialism is not a question of crowns and sceptres, of names and titles. It is a system of government. Where a man, or body of men, an Emperor, a President, a ongress or a nation claims the absolute right to rule a people, to compel the submission of that people by brute force, to decide what rights they shall have, what taxes they shall

In organized society there is no liberty that is not constitutional liber-Even-in America, where we have only to fear the abuse of power by our own fellow citizens, we all rely on constitutions, national and State. to protect our rights. We cannot conceive an American community without these safeguards. Do not the inhabitants of Luzon need against us the protection that we need against ourselves? It has ever been the Anterican method to incorporate acquired territory with representation; it is now proposed to revert to the Roman method and hold conquered territory by force without representation. This policy, which we oppose, gives to the Filipinos and Porto Ricans no constitutional rights, no American citizenship, no hope of statehood, no voice in the Congress which rules them; it leaves them without a country, the subjects of a Republic. To believers in free government this policy is monstrous

"Let it be remembered," said the Continental Congress, "thut it has ever been the pr de and boast of America that the rights for which she contended were the rights of human nature." When this country denies to millions of men the rights which we have ever claimed, not only for ourselves but for all men, its policy is suicidal.

Az Linsoln sald: "Those who deny liberty to others deserve it not themselves, and under a just God cannot long retain it." Indifference to liberty anywhere breeds indifference to liberty everywhere. No man can defend despotic methods abroad and long retain his loyalty to democracy at home. The common speech of those who support our new policy gives us daily examples of this truth. We cannot have citizens and subjects under the same flag. "A house divided against itself cannot stand." For

"Laws of changeless justice hind oppressor with oppressed, And close as sin and suffering joined we march to fate abreast."

We insist that constitutional liberty shall be the inalienable right of every man who owes allegiance to our flag; that freedom shall belong to man and not to place; that our Constitution shall be no respecter of persons, colors or races; that it shall recognize the equal rights of all. Ours is the policy of liberty. Ours is the cause for which the American Revolution was fought and which triumphed again in the Civil War. It is the cause of human freedom now threatened in the house of its friends. niakes little difference under what name we rally to its support. As Daniel Webster said, "arbitrary governments may have territories distant possessions because arbitrary governments may rule them by different laws and different systems. . . We can do no such thing. They must be of us, part of us, or else strang-

With Reniamin Harrison we are unable to rejoice in the acquisition of lands and mines and forests and commerce, at the cost of the abandon ment of the old American idea that a government of absolute powers is an intolerable thing, and under the Constitution of the United States, an impossible thing." We agree with him that this view "will not limit the power of territorial expansion; but it will lead us to limit the use of that power to regions that my safely become part of the United States, and to peoples whose American citizenship may be allowed."

We urge all lovers of freedom to organize in defense of human rights rain you may omit these prayers as

The gravest danger our country has known till now has come from a denial of those princi-ples. The incoming Congress is not yet committ d to the policy of incurporating the island peoples into our system without rights. Let it resume its place in the government, in defense of the inalienable 115 ts. of man.

Prayers For Rain.

The following is the letter, which has been sent to the pastor of every Catholic church in the diocese:

St. Louis, Mo., July 8.

"JOHN J. KAIN,

"Archbishop of St. Louis." A translation of the Latin prayer that is ordered, and which was said yesterday, is: "Oh, God, in whom we live, move and exist, grant unto us desired rain, that, having been assisted in present need, we may more confidently desire everlasting good." The last time that special prayer was ordered by Archbishop Kain was at the outbreak of the Spanish-American war, when they were said for peace. The ordering of a special prayer by the Archbishop of a diocese is not a very unusual thing in the Catholic Church, and yet it is not of sufficient frequency not to attract attention. Archbishop Kain said this morning: "There are only about twenty spe cial prayers in the Prayer Book. They are set down for use as the Archbishop directs, and their use varies in different parishes according to his conclusions regarding their necessity. At the present time the entire counfry is suffering from drought. bhall continue them as long as they are necessary. If our prayers are answered, as they seem to us they should be, and we get sufficient rain, they will be stopped. The priests will know when to cease reading the prayers."

John Daly on Public Responsibility

London, July 15 .-- At a meeting of Limerick Corporation recently Councillor Whelan moved that the Maver or any other official who attended sports, regattas or other amusements at which an English military band was present, did so without the approval of the Council. He did not see why the Mayor should listen to "God Save the King" or other airs played which would make their blood boil. The encouragement given to military bands would have the effect of beguiling the youth of the country into the army, which was now engaged in crushing the brave Boors The Mayor said he would refuse to recognize the resolution if passed. As John Daly he was a Nationalist, but us Mayor he would not enter into the contemptible secturian split. Nine voted for the resolution and nine against it, and the Mayor's casting vote delcated it.

on Maria street, one of the leading thoroughfares of the Dominion Capital. The new building, upon which operations are about to commence immediately, will be ready for a home for Irish patriotism before the snow of next December starts to fly, at an estimated expenditure not much below $20,000. Situated within the Parish of St. Patrick's, and almost equidistant from St. Bridget's, St. Joseph's and St. Patrick's Churches, its central location will be highly appreciated, whilst a glance at the plan of the structure itself accompanied by a detailed statement of its internal arrangements will satisfy the average mind that the new St l'atrick's Hall will be worthy of the cause which it is intended to promote, and that it will bring down to unborn generations the name of Mr. D'Arcy Scott, who has been the chief-instrument of launching so grand an enterprise. OTTAWA AS A FRUIT MARKET.

Ottawa has grown to the dimensions of a leading market for the immense quantities, of excellent fruit grown in the Counties of Lincoln, Welland and South Wentworth, which form the Niagara Peninsula. A fruit Exchange has been in operation for some time, where weekly sales ere held, and the general testimony is that the fruit imported to Ottawa has all the freshness which it postessed when plucked from shrub or tree in the garden of its growth. This happy state of affairs on the banks of the Ottawa is attributed to the genius of MR. JOSEPH F. HANRAHAM, a clever Irish-Canadian, who has made the principles of refrigeration the study of a lifetime. Exporters of fruit in the Niagara District have adopted the practical application, of his theory of cold storage, and whether it be exporter, importer, or conrunter, all pronounce his plans for the protection, in transit, of delicate products of the orchard or the vineyard as unequalled. Canadian statesmen are now busily engaged in the work of enlarging trade relations with England, and if they adopt the cold as strongly urged by the fruit and poultry raisers of Canada, a scheme will be perfected to guard against such losses as the past have entailed. I am not aware that he has had any negotiations with the Canadian Government leading to so desirable a consummation, but if not no time should be lost in doing so, and if approved, as I am certain it will be, the Canadian produce and the Canadian people generally will be the gamer.

A happy household here has been recently thrown into mourning occasioned by the death of the kind-heart-

In the death of this most exemplary woman the poor will miss a hand that was ever real to go out for their relief, the asylums of charity, to the usefulness of which the best years of her life was dedicated, will sadly miss her presence, and St. Bridget's congregation will miss the loss of one of its grandest exemplars. A DOUBLE-BARRELLED CRITI-CISM.

Certain comments of mine touching the removal of Rev. Dr. Fallon which appeared in your issue of the 4th-inst., have evoked a wind blast of criticism. The lotter of "Canadian"! Mr. M. J. Gorman is entitled to some notice. He tells both myself and the public that he is matter, style and phrascology of my communication of the 4th inst., and further on he says that Rev. Dr. Fallon must be "surprised" if not pained lon must be "surprised" if not pained also.

Regarding the pains which Mr. Gorman' is tortured with, and the desire which exists in his own mind; for their removal; I beg to say that, no word of mine either written or spoken in a Catholic sense has ever brought. "pain" to priest or laymen, and maintaining now that the communication under review was not unworthy of a good Catholic, I cannot withdraw a word of it even if my learned critic continues on suffering physical torture.

His adroit manoeuvre for antagonizing Rev. Dr. Fallon was unworthy of him, whilst it handsomely became a pettifogging advocate in a Police Court. He says that a deputation will proceed to Rome, if necessary, to try and relieve St. Joseph's Church from the charge of a "foreign head"—to borrow an inclegant phrase of his own. Just so. Mr. Gorman thinks it is in order to forge bolts and barry for the stable door after the grand steed has been transferred to foreign fields. What has he been doing since the able priest took charge of. St. Joseph's Church, and why did he not take into account the existence of a "foreign head?"

I shall be glad at any rate that the deputation is sent to Rome, and that Mr. M. J. Gorman joins it; and 'if he succeeds in emancipating St. Joseph's Church from the government of a "foreign head?"

I shall be glad at any rate that the deputation is sent to Rome, and that Mr. M. J. Gorman joins it; and 'if he succeeds in emancipating St. Joseph's Church from the government of a "foreign head," and fully conquers that acut, attack of billiousness which has recently played and havoc with his whole system, no one will be more rejoiced than his 'esteemed friend" the RAMBLER.

AN IRISH GIFT TO THE POPE The Osservatore Romano of to day gives a very interesting account of a gift that has been sent from Ireland to His Holiness Pope Leo XIII The paper, relating an event that occurred some months ago, and of which the recent gift is the outcome, says that the Right Rev. Dr. Clancy, Bishop of Elphin, during his recent visit to Rome, presented to the Hely Father the parish priest of Roscommon, Vicar-General of the diocese, who is the author of an interesting project for the construction and adornment of the church creeted in that parish, and dedicated to the Sacred Heart of Jesus. The Bishop of Elphin also presented to His Holiness Mr. Hardman, who executed the said project, and submitted to the Pontiff the designs of the building.

The said church has thirty-three windows, that is the number corresponding to the invocations of the Sacred Heart contained in the Litany

and the emblems of which are borne by the stained glass in the windows The Holy Fatner was greatly pleas ed with the project, regarding it as the first time the idea arose of representing in stained glass the Litany of the Sacred Heart, and as a testimony of his sovereign approbation h conceded certain privileges to the new church, he raised the parish priest the author of it-to the dignity of "Monsignor," and granted the title and Cross of Knight of Saint Cregory the Great to Mr. Hardman, who exe-

Within the last few days the said Mr. Hardman has caused to be presented to the Pope the emblematic desig s of the thirty-three stained glass vindows, which are to be placed i. the new church of Roscommon These designs are contained in a very rich album, bound in red leather, with gilt fornaments, bearing on it the follow ing inscription:

The album opens with a photype picture of the new church, and in the following page the author makes known in a Latin inscription that he has deduced the emblems from Holy Scripture, from the Liturgy, and from the words of Saint Augustine. In the following pages are shown the designs of the stained glass, four on every page, each having beneath it the Invocation in the English language, and in the corresponding page the Latin text, and the authority from which the emblem was taken. The personages represented in the stained glass and supporting the emblems all belong to the Sacred Scriptures and to Ecclesiastical History. The stained glass windows are thirty-two in tryform, and one which will be placed in the end wall of the church, and in which is represented the Invocation-"Heart of Jesus, delight of all the Saints"-is round, and there is represented the Sacred Heart of surrounded by a myriad of raints.

The work, executed in an admirable manner, is very beautiful, and the gift af it to His Holiness has been a great delight to him.

on his feet by any mean; whatever, first wife, joined the Catholic Church and gave him a good cheer, you would under circumstances which led to a have a most cloquent speech afterrather lively correspondence in The Time. For Lord Fielding had begun to creet at Pantasaph a church with the intention of presenting it to the (Protestant) establishment. The foundations had been laid by the (Protestan ) Bishop of St. Asaph, and there was a local legend that Lady Fielding's mother, Lady Emma Pennant, had, before her death, carmarked a sum of £7,000 or £8,000 for the purpose of its foundation. When it became known that the converts were taking their bricks and mortar to Rome with them, and that a Capuchin Church and monastery would stand where otherwise an Anglican church and rectory would have stood, hard words were the order of the day. "Alienation to Rome," said The Times; "I have a moral claim," eried (Protestant) Bishop; and the Rev. Richard Briscoe, a neighboring vicar, recalled a visit to Lady Emma Pennant during which he heard her tell her daughter to found a church at Pantasaph, who, on hearing her mother insist "Now, Louisa, you will remember," accordingly acquiesced Very difficult was the dilemma which presented itself to Lord and Lady Fielding. Lord Fielding, judging of his own particular circumstances, came to a conclusion that was conveyed in a letter to the Anglican Bishop, in which he said: Fielding and I designed this church for a thank-offering to Almighty God on our marriage, and naturally believing the Established enough, Church of England to be Catholic, fully intended to give it to her through you as soon as the building was fit for consecration. Subsequently, however, the awful truth forced itself upon us that we had been mistaken all our lives, and therefore we felt bound to submit to the true Catholic and Apostolic Church. Were I to fulfill my intention to the letter as it was expressed and deliver up this church to a communion essentially anti-Catholic, I should be denying that Holy Catholic Faith by my deed which I professed with my heart and mouth. In fact, I should be guilty of the grossest inconsistency and be acting a lie in the face of God and man." As to the "moral" bond implied by the promise, Lord Fieldinga man of his word if ever there was one-appealed for his justification to Scripture and to history; to St. Paul, who, after his conversion, broke his promise, made in ignorance before the synagogue, to crush the infant Church of Damascus, and to the fact that if the original intention of the founders were to be held inviolable, Westminster Abbey itself should be at once restored to Cardinal Wiseman. - Tac

IRELAND

MAYNOOTH UNION. Dublin, June 28 .- The annual meeting of the Maynooth Union took place yesterday at St. Patrick's College, Since the formation of Maynooth. the Union the annual gathering has come to be regarded as an event great importance, and its proceedings have been followed with deep interest not only by the members of the Union, but also by ecclesiastics and laymen throughout Iceland and the English-speaking world. bers of the clergy who flocked yesterday to Maynooth from all parts of Ireland and from Great Britain indicated how deep is the interest taken in the deliberations of the Union by its niembers, the scenes of whose missionary labors lie so far apart. The interesting papers read during the course of yesterday's proceedings, and the important discussions marked by many eloquent addresses which followed them, were of a kind calaculated to win for this year's reunion a wide share of public attention. The weather was ideal, and the visitors derived a considerable amount of enjoyment from strolling through the extensive grounds attached to the College during the brief intervals that lay between the events set down in the day's programme. The 915 a. m train from Dublin bore a large contingent to Maynooth to swell the numbers of those who had already arrived and stayed at the College over night. The United States was represented by the Most Rev. Dr. Heslin, Bishop of Natchez, and the Rev. Hugh O'Gara M'Shane. The Most Rev. Dr. Dunne, of Wilcania, represented Australia, and South Africa was also actually represented; and a telegram of congratulation was received from the Most Rev. Dr. M'Sharry, of the Eastern Vicariate, South Africa, and his priests.

His Eminence, who was loudly applauded, said: I see on this agenda paper, which has just been put into my hands this moment, that after the reading of the minutes the first item Fielding when; in 1850; he, with his is an address by the chairman the principle on which the managers of the Maynooth Union expect an address from me, I don't know upon what principle thay have gone. However, very few words are necessary to introduce the important business of the day, and for myself I can say, as I said on an early occasion, when I had the honor to preside at the opening session of this Maynooth Union, I feel myself more deeply impressed with the importance of the Union and its work. It is the solitary occasion that we have in each year upon which the priesthood of Ireland can assemble together in this old home of learning to exchange ideas and concert with each other things which may contribute to the welfare of our holy religion here in Ireland. It is the only one opportunity they have, and judging by the experience of the past they turn this opportunity to the very best advantage. We always have here some very learned, very eloquent members of the Union, who contribute very useful papers on the various subjects of the day, and I believe, my lords and very reverend fathers, that there never was a time when reunions of this kind were more necessary for the well-being of religion than they are at the present day (hear, hear). We find that there is a very active and very hostile spirit among the enemies ci the Church in every country in the world except, than God, Ireland (applause). Saint Patrick, my illuslustrious predecessor (applause), is said to have banished cerpents from Ireland, and I think in sending off the serpents he sent the brood of the serpents along with them (applause). Hence it is that while we have disturbances in other countries, and a very hostile spirit manifested against C'urch and her ministers, the priesthood of Ireland never had a stronger hold upon the people of Ireland than they have at the present moment (hear, hear). I mention that subject in order to direct attention to the necessity that exists of meeting this hostile movement against religion by a corresponding movement upon the part of the members of the Church. Hence, we find that in every country in Europe there are congresses got up, scientific congresses, philosophic congresses, but, above all, religious congresses, got up on the part of Catholics to meet this assault which is being made To be sure the upon the Church. Church herself is safe, she is indefectible, unassailable as a body, but while the Church must last to the end of time, the individual members of the Church may be led away by the various principles which are being promulgated through the agency. and very active agency, of the ene-mics of the faith, and hence it is these congresses are organized under the sanction of the Head of the Church in the various countries for the purpose of safeguarding the interests of religion. Now, thank God, we are not so much in need of that in this country, nevertheless it often occurred to me that we are somewhat behind in our co-operation with this active movement that is made by the friends of our holy faith to counter-act and defeat the schemes of the Church's enemies, but I think that a great deal of the defect which may exist among us, and which arises no feel the necessity like the others that a great deal of this defect is supplied by the meeting here every successive year of the past students of May-nooth, and of their friends and sympa-And I have always been glad to observe on the occasion of these reunions that they are made up not only of the past students of the college, but of numbers of others who never had the privilege of studying in Maynooth here. It is a proof to me that there is a strong fellow feeling among the priesthood of Ireland and their friends from beyond the sea, who come on these occasions (applause). It is a proof that the spirit of the Maynooth Union is not a narrow or sectarian, but a Catholic spirit (hear, hear), that we are prepared to see and welcome all those who sympathize with us and join with us in holding this very remarkable meeting at the end of the academic ye r here in Maynooth. And I think if we wanted a prood of this Catholic spirit, this spirit of charity, and spirit of fellow feeling which, thank God, exists, binds together the clergy in bonds stronger thin steel, we have a proof of this to-day in the preser of two distinguished prelates (applause) one from the very opposite end; of the earth, the Bishop of Wilcania

(applause). I remember on one occasion ny immediate predecessor was mak g a speech, and in his speech

(laughter). This circumstance leaves | he was expressing his regret for the loss of the illustrious Cardinal who presides over the destinies of the Church of Australasia, and he was very lachrymose on the occasion, and he said: "My dear friends, we all miss him; still I believe if we dug now just straight down under our feet and kept digging on, we would find him at the other side" (laughter). We may say the same of the Bishop of Wilcania. He has come here to grace our reunion, and I am perfectly sure, I may say, on the part of the Fathers here assembled, and certainly on the part of the Bishops, that he is heartily welcome (applause). Then we have a distinguished prelate here from America (applause). I have not the advantage of knowing whether His Lordship, the Bishop of Natchez, is an Irishman or not (laughter). I take it he is (applause), but one thing is certain, he presides over an Irish church (applause). I remember the last time I was in Rome I happened to be at a large reception given by the Duke of Norfolk, and he was proud of it. I never saw a larger social assembly in Rome, and I said to him, and he did not contradict me -I said: "Your Grace, if I took my children from among those you would have very few left for your reception" (laughter and applause). think we Irish people may say the same to the American bishops. If we take away our Irish people from among them they would have a large number to be sure, larger in America than in England or Scotland; they have the Germans, magnificent people; and they have the Italians; but still the Irish were the pioneers of the Church, and it was our pride to think and feel that although we are s very small handful of people here in Ireland, and becoming beautifully less, that we have a country beyond the seas that we can always fall back upon whenever we stand in need of sympathy, and above all, whenever we stand in need of assistance. Hence I am sure vou are delighted to see the good prelate of the Western Church here in our midst to-day (applause). It is a young Church, but it is a great Church (applause). I remember saying to an American pre late a few days ago that I myseif recollect the time when you could count the bishops of America almost on the fingers of your two hands, but now behold the magnificent body you have, archlishops and bishops and priests, and I believe that there is no pla in Christendom at the present day where the Catholic religion is making greater progress and more intelligent progress, and has more life in it, and more vigor and energy thun in the Church of America (appinuse). Hence I am perfectly sure that I may welcome his lordship of Natchez here with a "Cead mile failte" on the part of the number of my colleagues of the episcopate who are here present, and especially on the part of the priests. Now, I think, if they put me in for an address I paid them off well. Whenever they start a person as they started me to-day, they are likely to have their patience tried before all is over, and hence I think I have my revenge on Dr. Mannix and

Important ecclesiastical ceremonies have been taking place at Brebieres, in Picardy, in connection with the consecration of a new Basilica Brebieres has been called the northern Lourdes, and its shrine has long been sacred, and a place of pilgrimage. Two Cardinals and thirty-four Archbishops and Bishops took part in the consceration of a new Basilica of Notre Dame de Brebieres. The place was crowded during the week and the religious demonstration effected on the occasion was a powerful counterblast to the infumous actions of the aggressive Atheists and Freemasons of the North of France, who have heen endeavoring to stop Corpus Christi processions, and who have grossly insulted Catholics. TICS

I would like to call the attention of the readers of The Tablet to a learned article in the latest issue of the Monitore Reclesiastico on the subject of Marses for those who are not in communion with the Church. The writer-probably Cardinal Gennary, who was lately promoted to the Sacred College from the post of Assessor of the Holy Office-lays it down that it is never lawful to offer Mass for the soul of a deceased Protestant. He draws his conclusion from two principles; the first is that the general and special fruit of the Mass, spoken of by the thrologians, may never be offrered by the priest except in his public capacity as a min ister of the Church in the name of the Church, the second is that the Church positively excludes from the benefit of hr, suffrages those who do not belong to her body or who have not belonged to it at the moment of death. The distinction of public and .ivate celebration of Mass as far as its general and special fruit is concerned, has no existence. He quotes Bonacina De Excomm. to show that the Mass can only be the work of a privat person acting in his own individual capacity when it is regarded in its third fruit; or, fructus specialissimus, i.e as a good work, like any other good work depending on the dispositions and fervor of the person who performs it. It would follow from this that a priest could never offer Mass in the ordinary sense of the word for a deceased heretic; even if his intention were so secret that no one but himself knew of it; he might, however, pray for such a soul in the Memento. Nor could a priest accept an alms for the celebration of Mass for a deceased Protestant, as the offering of the Mass means the devoting of the special fruit of the Mass for the intention specified. Father Billot, S. J., the distinguished theologian, who has occupied the chair of dogma in the Gregorian University in Rome for some fifteen years, gives it as his opinion in his treatise on the Eucharist that Mass may be offered for any soul which has departed this life in a state of disgrace, because in purga-tory there is no distinction between the soul and the visible body of the Church. There is no doubt that every soul in purgatory, as every soul in the state of grace, belongs to the Communion of Saints, and enjoys the benefits that naturally flow from that communion. But, as Suarez remarks 'Disp. 9, Sect. n. 5), the Commanion of Saints is one thing, and participation in the suffrages of the Church is another. The only obstack to the former is mortal sin, while an obstacle to the latter is ecclesiastical censure, which may remain after guil, has been taken away And Bellarmine says (De Missa lib. vi., cap. vi.): "The Church has forbidden public pravers fo those who are excommunicated, and consequently for heretics, who are all excommunicated; wherefore she has forbidden the Sacrifice to be offered directly and expressly for them; for the Sacrifice is always public." The Moni'ore Reclesiastico is an authority of unusual weight on account of the well-known learning of ts director, Cardinal Gennari, and his successful tenure of the responsible post of Assessor of the Holy Office or many years. Naturally, its word alone does not decide a disputed the ological question, and theologians will probably continue to hold their own opinions on the subject. But the view it puts forward is clear and intelligible. In that view private celebration of Mass does not mean the offering of sacrifice at al, in its peculiar character of sacrifice, but only the performance of a good work, something well done, that may benefit the loer and those to whom he wishes to give a share of what he has gained by his own good actions. This seems to be in corsonance with the various decrees of the Church on the matter, in which no distinction is made between public and private celebration. Perhaps the true view of the matter is that the sacrifice of the Mass can be offered for any soul that may be presumed to be in purgatory, as far as its institution by our Lord is concerned: but, as a matter of fact, the Church has in the fuliness of her power excluded some from the benefit. And she has done so on account of the same reason for which she continues to exclude from the use of the Sacraments those who have incurred her censures, even after they have recovered the state of grace Privation of the Sacraments is a greater penalty than the loss of suffrages.-London Tablet.

THE DESTINY OF ROME.

(Voce della Verita.) To the Rome of Augustus was assigned a lofty destiny which has been consecrated by an immortal verse of Virgil-the destiny of governing nations.

Papal Rome, the heir to the Rome of Augustus, not only maintained this mission but still further elevated it mainuch as the ideal of the Rome of the results than that of the Rome of Augustus R the Rome of Augustus, For the gov- Perry Davis'. 25c. and 50c.

MASSES FOR DECEASED HERE- ernment of nations, then became incarnated in the Republica Christiana, subject to the hegemony of the Popes, which saved Europe and the whole world from barbarism, and put it on the true road to progress

When the wars of the Middle Ages threatened the shipwreck of science, letter and art, the Popes, thoughtful and warthy representatives of the destiny of Rome, raised aloft the torch of knowledge and passed it on through the gloom that lowered on all sides, realizing the classic conception of the Roman poet Lucretius of the strong and lithe athletes who passed on from one to another the torch of life.

The papal corch threw far and wide ts rays of saith and knewledge. Thus in distant Scotland, then entirely and cordually united with the Holy Sec, through the instrumentality of that great protector of studies, Nicholas V, the august patron of the Italian and European Renaissance, there shone a beam of that light, not vain and fleeting but fixed on the lofty tower of the University of Glasgow, destined to illuminate from age to age 'he land of Robert Bruce and Mary Stuart.

Since those days the surroundings have been unhappily changed testantism succeeded in breaking the bonds of affection which united Scotland with the Holy Sec, and the kingdom itself has been submerged in the great British covenant. But high above all religious and political struggle, above the clouds of prejudice and the storms of passion, Papal Rome ever holds the fatidic torch; and the beacon of Glasgow, on its four hundred and fiftieth anniversary, salutes from afar the other beacon whereat it was first kindled.

To-day Protestants, and even rationalists, cast every prejudice underfoot, and proclaim aloud the social blessings conferred on the world by the Papacy during the uninterrupted succession of its enlightened Pontiffs; they extoll the great figure of Leo XIII., the worthy heir of Nicholas V., in the practice and protection of intellectual activity.

Thus lives on unshaken the worldwide destiny of kome, inseparably connected with the Apostolic See; and now in presence of this solema mani-festation from Glasgow all rightthinking men must bow, and all who have not sold their pens to the anti-Catholic sects must subscribe to it.

Horace's epic prayer that the sun might never look upon a greater city than Rome has been fully heard. Cities vaster, richer, and more powerful there have been, there are, and enere will be - yet none of them greater than Rome.

But which Rome? The one whom friends and focs alike antonomastically call "Rome;" the Rome to which the howls of the Los von Rom party and the knightly greeting of the members of the University of Glasgow alike render a very different but always very eloquent tribute.

That paitry Italian anti-clericalism which has dared to speak of a "Third Rome," heir to the destiny of imperial and Papal Rome, and which has symbolized this "Third Rome" in the intellectuality of men like Rudini and Pelloux, in the sublime and imperishable art of embankments that topple into the tide before they have been well erected, and of pornographic fountains—this pattry and anti-clericalism is no new pheromenon as is commonly thought. Rome has seen it time and again since the days of Raphael The only difference is this-that hitherto to observe this exhilarating spectacle one had to go to the Vatican and gave on Raphael's picture of the vision of Constantine with its famous fool of a dwarf who endeavors to put on his head the helmet of the imperial and Christian hero; while in our own happy days, one has only to put his face to the window to see the dwarf at his ludicrous buffoonery.

But a truce to all this. Echoing the homage of Glasgow, let us all hail Rome the immortal, and to its living genius let us raise the cry with which the Roman people greeted Charlemange: To the Pope, pious, august, crowned by God, life and dictory!

WHAT CARLYLE SAID.

In the beautifully illustrated "Pil" grim Magazine" we find, among other good things, a most interesting description of Count Tolstoi, by Ernest H. Crosby, and "What Carlyle said about war," telling how English artisans were enlisted in the army and shipped to the South of Spain to fight French artisans who were forced into the French army. "Straighway the word 'fire' is given, and they blow the souls out of one another, and in place of sixty useful artisans the world has sixty dead carcases which it must bury. Had these men any quarrel? Not the slightest. They were entire strangers. Their rulers had fallen out, and instead of shooting one another, made these poor fellows do the shooting."

NO HOME should be without it.

Fresh ink stains on carpets or tablecloths can be removed by repeated applications of dry salt. Carpets are freshened and colors brightened if wiped with clean cloths wrung from salt water. Coarse salt sprinkled occasionally around the edge of carpets is a moth destroyer.

Ribbons and other silks should be put away for preservation in brown paper, as the chloride of lime used in the manufacturing of white paper frequently produces discoloration.

They may be cleaned and made to look like new by sponging them with equal parts of strong tea and vinegar. Iron with a not too hot iron.

In selecting an occupation for life it is as important to consider its effect on any physical disorder as to count on its wages. As an example, take hay fever. This complaint is considered a rich man's disease, .svociated with frequent ocean trips. The occupations which a hay-fever patient will find most healthful are those that tend to keep the body at a low temperature. The iceman or helper in an ice-house or refrigerating or coldstorage plant is practically immune from hav fever. A New York artist, suffering from hay fever, recently shut himself up in a cold-storage room for hours at a time to find relief. The smell of salt water also tends to cure hay fever. A sufferer who would live the life of a saitor or lighthousekeeper would be pretty certain of being cured. * * *

SULPHUR A PREVENTIVE OF MOSQUITO BITES.

One of our readers informs us that, having seen a statement in some English medical journal to the effect that sulphur, taken internally, would protect it as a preventive of mosquito bites. Accordingly he began taking effervescing tablets of tartar-lithine sulphur, four daily. He provided himself with several lively mosquitoes, and having them put into a wide-mouthed bottle inverted the bottle and pressed its mouth upon his bare The mosquitoes settled on his skin but showed no inclination to bite him. If this gentleman's experience should be borne out by further trials, it might be well for persons who are particularly sensitive to mosquito bites to take a course of sulphur during the mosquito season, especially in view of the growing opinion that the mosquito is the comnon vehicle of malaria.-N. CANADA AT THE FAIR.

The Dominion of Canada has erected at the Pan-American Exposition what is in many respects the finest and best furnished of the foreign buildings at that great assemblage of the achivements of Pan-America. The dedication of this building on July 1st, Dominion Day, was a notable event and will do much to draw closer the relations between Canada and the United States and other portions of the three Americas.

The Canadian building is a handsome structure, 60x108 feet in dimensious, and two stories nigh. The style of architecture is Elizabethan, and staff work representing stone in the first and timber in the second The shingled roof is stained with case of amail children, or of any sick person where great masses is present or there is a weak, delicate strong, but is not case of white in the case of amail children, or of any sick person where great masses is present or there is a weak, delicate strong, but is not case of the strong, it is not case of uninitiate litter or otherwise dispressible to the case of amail children, or of any sick person where great masses is present or there is a weak, delicate strong, and a case of the case of amail children, or of any sick person where great masses is present or there is a weak, delicate strong, and the case of amail children, or of any sick person where great masses is present or there is a weak, delicate strong, it is not possible to conceive of the case of amail children, or of any sick person where great masses is present or there is a weak, delicate strong, it is not possible to conceive of the comment of the present of the case of amail children, or of any sick person where great masses is present or there is a weak, delicate strong, it is not present or there is a weak, delicate strong, it is not present or there is a weak, delicate strong, it is not present to the case of quinting with the case of amail children, or of any sick person where great masses is present or there is a weak, delicate and the case of any sick person where great masses is present or there is a weak, delicate and the case of quinting with t with creosote. There are two wings extending from the front at the sides the Mall to the cast of the Agrucilture Building and near the great Stadium for athletic sports, The Grand Canal of the Exposition, with its avenue of poplar trees, runs along in front of it. It is convenient of access from the big live stock barns to the south of the Mall. The building resembles somewaht the British Building at the Chicago World's Fair, of 1893, although it is by no means a copy of this building. Flowers and fruits are used to brighten the appearance of the building. The interior presents a most effective appearance, arranged as it is with the exhibits of Canada in a most attractive manner. Although Canadian exhibits are seen in the various exhibit buildings in greater extent and variety, the notable productions of the Dominion have been arranged so as to give on the whole a most interesting presentation of the products of this vast country. The cereal products of the Canadian farms are woven into figures and patterns suitable for the decoration of the walls of the building Conspicuous in the display are the specimens of game animals and birds. The New Brunswick Legislature has loaned to the Intercolonial Railway for exhibition in this building some of the most interesting articles in its collection. One of the features of the decoration of the building upon the interior is a splendid buffalo. This stuffed buffalo is one of the largest specimens to be seen. There are also fine specimens of the musk ox. The bison shown was the giant of a herd in the Canadian Northwest Territory and was killed by Warburton Pike, an American writer, who had it stuffed and mounted and presented to the Dominion Government. Other stuffed animals shown are moose, elk, caribou, beaver, links, wild cat. mink, seal, merten, fox, bear wolf and different varieties of birds and fish.

There is a splendid moose head with antlers spreading 68 inches, loaned by Col. Charles E. Turner, U. S. Consul-General at Ottawa, who shot it 150 miles north of the Dominion capital. It is said to be the most perfect specimen in existence.

The Canada Building has apartments for visitors and for the officers of the Commission, and these are handsomely furnished throughout. Just offthe main court is the office of Commissioner J. Hutchinson and his Secretary, Wm. A. Burns, and here there is a register where Canadian visitors are requested to inscribe their names.

The Canada Building is illuminated at night in harmony with the other Exposition buildings, so, that it is a beautiful sight in the evening as well as under the sunlight of the day. The Ontario Fruit exhibitors made special graparation for Canadian Day in the way of a complete display of choice apples from their ample supply in cold storage. There is also a very complete and attractive exhibit of strawberries, gooseberries and cherries. In addition to this a large number of patriotic Canadians sent over for the embellishment of the exhibit a plentiful display of the finest cut flowers of the season, including roses, carnations, lilies, sweet peas, verbenas and a multitude of other va-

What do the robins whisper about From their homes in the elms and birches?

I've tried to study the riddle out; But still in my mind is many a coubt, In spite of deep researches.

While over the world is silence deep, In the twilight of early dawning, They begin to chirp and twitter and peep,

As if they were talking in their sleep, At three o'clock in the morning.

Perhaps the little ones stir and complain That it's time to be up and doing

And the mother-bird sings a drowsy strain To coax them back to their dreams again,

Though distant cocks are crowing.

Or do they tell secrets that should not be heard

By mortals listening and prying? Perhaps we might learn from some whispering word

The best way to bring up a bird Or the wonderful art of flying.

It may be they speak of an autumn

When, with many a feathered roamer,
Under the clouds so cold and gray,
Over the hills they take their way
In search of the vanished summer.

It may be they gossip from nest to nest, Hidden and leaf-enfolded; For do we not often hear it confessed When a long-kept secret at last is That "a little hird has told it?"

Perhaps; but the question is wrapped in doubt,
They give me no hint or warning.

A BROKEN THREAD.

It was one of the boy's duties to carry the mail from the summer hotel where he worked to the postoffice in the neighboring village. He was an honest boy, but apt to be careless at times.

One day on his return from the oflice he found that a letter had remained in the bag unnoticed when he took out the others. He took it now and looked, at it. It was directed to some town in France.

He could still mail it in time for the noon train if he ran all of the way back; but it was a scorching day. the road was dusty and he was tired Besides, there was a game of ball go ing on that he wanted to see. It did not look like an important letter. A thin, light thing, directed in a wo man's hand! Pshaw! Women were alwave scribbling!

He threw it into the bag and went whistling to the ball field.

The letter was mailed two hours later. It reached New York just an hour too late for the steamer, and was thus delayed four days.

Old Jeanne, the cook at the hotel, went about that summer crooning happily to herself, muttering and laughing when she was alone paring the potatoes When her mistress asked her one day why she laughed, she

THE MODIFIED DECLARATION

On another page we give the cable despatch containing the King's Declaration as modified by the Select Committee, upon which only Protestant peers served. Reading the amended form by itself does not enable one to perceive the exact extent of the change But taken with the Coronation Oath, and remembering the horrible expressions against which the Catholic protest has been made, we are forced to the conclusion that the Protestant peers have done expecially well by British subjects who are not yet ashamed to call themselves Protestants. The complaints of the future, if the modication be carried out, are more likely to come from the adherents of the Established Church, who are in the habit (honestly enough according to the light that has been given them by the High Church bishops) of calling themselves "English Catholics. Let us see what the Protestant triumph is. The modified Declaration would give a definit Protestantwould give a definit ism which the King tain, "I do believe that in the Sacrament of the Lord's Supper there is not any transubstantiation." "I do believe that the invocation or adoration of the Virgin Mary, or any other saint, and the sacrifice of the Mass as they are now used in the Church of Rome are contrary to the Protestant religion." This is the sum of Pro-Protestants should be satisfied with it. As long as they are in the position to impose a Protestant test upon the King, this De-claration contains all they should ask of him.

A very large number of English subjects, members of the State church, do believe and declare they do believe, that in the Lord's Supper there is transubstantiation. But they are not in the majority, and the avowed Protestants fairly enough have their way. The case as between the two classes is not a hard one to understand. The King goes with the ma-

The change recommended by the Lords omits the horrible insult to Catholics that their faith is "superstitious and idolatrous." comits the insult to the Pope that he licenses liars and perjurers. The modified Declaration concludes with the word "unreservedly;" which is substituted for the following in the old form: "I do make this declaration and every part thereof in the plain and ordinary sense of the words read unto me, as they are commonly understood by English Protestants, without any evasion, equivocation or mental reservation whatsoever, and without any dispensation aircady granted me for this purpose by the Popesor any other authority or person whatsoever, or without any hope or authority whatsoever, or without thinking that I am or can be acquitted before God or man, or absolved of this declaration, or any part thereof, although the Pope or any other person or persons or power whatsoever should dispense with or annul the same, or declare that it was null and from the beginning. '

Taking the report of the Protestant pe -i all in all, it gees no further refraining from blasphemous in-- after strengthening the declaration of Protestantism. Catholics, as far as we under tand the matter, have asked for nothing more than that they should not be insulted. As have already said, the umended declaration wipes out the blasphemy from the old insult, but the insult itsell semains as long as all reference to the doctrine of transubstantiation and the invocation of the saints has not been eliminated. It is the duty of the Catholic subjects of the King in every part of the Enpire to repeat their emphatic protest against the wording of the revised version.

THE ONTARIO TORY

The Outario, Tory has come along and introduced itself to ve. The manner of the introduction is somewhat startling; but then the new comer with the reactionary name is nothing If not startling. It is in truth a atormy youngater, with a cross cilt. Clearly the creature, but its mother knows its out, if lantile alienation.

we accept its assertion of "the enthusiasm with which it has been taken up and circulated by the rank and file of the Conservative party ' Not to put too line a point upon it, The Ontario Tory seems to be looking for trouble And if the rank and file of the Conservative party are filled with enthusiasm to the same amiable end, they won't in the nature of the case, have long to wait. The announcement is made that "there appears to be a general desire in the party ranks that the paper (The Ontario Tory) should be issued at shorter intervals than a month." But this would be extravagance. Monthly applications of The Ontario Tory can be guaranteed to produce trouble enough to keep the party uproariously happy

But we are getting away from the introduction to ourselves. It was the 12th of July edition and the editor did not like to see us keeping the peace with Brother E. F Clarke Orange Sentinel and The Catholic Register are both "as mild as asses" milk!" What a happy thought! It is disgust and disappointment. "Asses" milk!" what a happy thought! It is prescribed for choleric babies, a class in which The Ontario Tory takes a conspicuous place.

·Fight, fury and disruption are its infantile sentiments. Signs, also, of the old insanity for smashing confederation by making war upon the French-Canadians are strongly written upon its convulsed features. The following is its truculent comparison of Ontario and Quebec.

"A province of educated men is superior to a province of uneducated men. A province of progressive men is superior to a province of fossils. A twentieth century province is superior to a province which at the dawn of a new era lies wrapped in the slumber of medievalism and cherishes institutions which were characteristic of Europe in the dark ages.

"When one part of the country forges ahead of the rest and displays an energy, vitality, and a capacity for new ideas, and another part of the country remains stagnant and clings to antiquated methods, ancient ignorance and departed ways, the interests of confederation require that the more civilized province should be paramount in the councils of the nation

"If the progressive province is not the paramount province, if the primative province becomes the paramount provioce, then the dry rot of medicvalism will infect the whole nation, and Canada will nk to the level of a South American Republic where the forces of re-action and stagnation prevail over the forces of civilization and progress.

"Such a country as that will never draw the flower of mankind to its shores. The great aggressive races of the earth will avoid is as they would a pestilence. The sturdy youth of Europe passing westward will turn aside from Canada and seek another land where the sun of civilization is not forbidden to shine and where the crown of dominion is placed not on the brows of the ignorant."

What a bouquet of Canadian loyalty for the heir to the throne upon his arrival in Canada! When the late Queen began her reign, we doubt if the Ontario Tory editor of that day wrote more violently insane stuff, though the country then suffered from the fever of rebellion. The Ontario Tory of that day went insane over the French. But the publication bearing the name to-day is insane on its own merits. Contrast the patriotic laudation of Ontario in the foregoing editorial with the following denunciation of Ontario appearing on the front page of the same issue: "Statistics show that the population of this province to-day is at a comparative standstill. There is hardwa country town or village in Or tario that has increased its population to any appreciable extent in recent years, and many of our country towns are declining in population and going back instead of forward. Many of the ablest sous of Ontario have abandoned the province because it could not afford an adequate field for their enterprise. The other provinces have been built up by energy drawn from this. Whole districts of the province have been depleted of their population. Multitudes have crossed the line and taken to the service of the American Republic talent and enterprise which would, in the natural course of events have been devoted to the upbuilding of Ontario. In a new country where everything should be prospering and going ahead we observe the amazing phenomena of reaction and stagnation and behold the grass growing on the streets of cities which should be the centres of everincreasing industrial activity.

Ontario is an example of "energy, vitality, twenticth century progress' to the rest of the world. Ontario ex hibits "amazing phenomena of re action and stagnation." These are the cross gusts of dementia. And the paper that howls in both keys in a breath is put forward as the mouthpiece of a political party! The same sort of incoherent reading may be read on every page of the issue before us. Clearly the creature is a freak of ining announce lent was made: "Robert Birmingham, in moving of vote of thanks to the speakers, remarked, incidentally, that during the coming visit of the Duke and Duchess of Cornwall and York Toronto would see the greatest Orange demonstration it ever saw.

THE PARTY OF THE PROPERTY OF THE PARTY OF TH

Mr. Birmingham-There will be no Duke . Newcastle with them.

Mr. Birmingnam is a deposed politician, and it is very likely he is only making a bold bid for his old laurely to the rank and file of the Orange Order. Mr Birningham, a few years ago, was a power in the Conservative party. The 12th of July afforded hun an opportunity to clutch at the keys of that power again Time will soon tell how his game fares. It is not a peculiar thing that Mr Birmingham was the one Orangeman of prominence in Toronto who thought of apringing this enterprise upon the publica has nothing to lose in the upshot. If he should succeed even to the extent of making a fuss he stands to gain something. His crying need is to be

Civic Reception Committee in wel coming the Royal visitors. On that committee the name of every Orangeman of prominence in the city is to be found. The general secretary is an Orangeman. Other classes are, howver, satisfactorily represented, the Catholic citizens of Toronto with the rest. No one complains, for there is little ground for complaint. The members of the committee one and all are, of course, under the impression that they are acting as citizens; and the highest proof of their loyalty and satisfaction with the institutions under which they live that they can show the son of the King when he comes among them is public evidence of their good understanding one with another. As they look at it, they have no party or religious representations to make to the Royal visitors; and that being the case have no occasion to appear in any other capacity than as citizens of Toronto. Now, in the name of all that is reasonable, why should the Orangemen attempt to seize upon the occasion for making the "greatest Orange comonstration Toronto ever saw?" The notion is so far astray from the remotest purposes of the visit that no one can for a moment conceive of the Duke of Cornwall and York allowing himself to be utilized as the incentive to such a demonstration as Mr. Birmingham dreams of. There is no need in this connection to discuss the tenets of Orangeism. There is no need to speak the position in which ordinary citizens would find themselves placed by such a conting sey. All that is pertinent is the absence of any call to Orangemen to come forth and turn the Royal visit into a second Twelfth If the preposterous thing could all be accomplished it might result in the rehabilitation of Mr Robert Birmingham to the place of comfort and prestige he so lately occupied. But Mr. Birmingham may as well give up thinking that he can manipulate kings and princes as he has manipulated politicians. If the Duke of York should hear that he was to be welcomed into Toronto by an unparalleled monster demonstration of Orangemen he would pass by the gates of the city. There is no doubt about this. The duke of Newcastle or any other duke could not affect the issue. There is no need to think of it at all. The only thing that does matter, of that may be affected by the announcement, the occasion chosen for making it and the terms in which it was made, is the good feeling and cordial co-operation reigning at present in the Citizens Reception Committee It would be a pity to strike a discordant note there. Toronto has the opportunity of showing herself as united, contented and progressive a city as any in the King's dominions The opportunity is eminently one for repressing party feeling, and avoiding that could only be regarded as regrettable by all well disposed persons. Mr. Birmingham if he cannot be easy in his temperary seclusion, should be as easy as he can

000 THE TERRIBLE HEAT.

It is the custom for some ministers to exchange pulpits and for some editors to swap chairs in the dog days. But one could hardly expect to see such an arrangement through between "he Orange Sentinel and The Irish Cauadian. Both papers come off the same press, and perhaps it may be that the "Make up" put that editorial on Father Fallon, intended for The Canadian, into The Sentincl, taking a few handfuls of choice tid hits suitable for the Boyne special edition to fill up the hole. At ail events The Irish Canadian of this week furnishes some unique Catholic sends us a copy marked in a dozen different places. The following is a specimen paragraph;

Father Icaza, a priest of the Church of Santa Catarina, is under arrest at Mexico City, charged with grave crimes by the husbands of women he is said to have been too intimate with.

Isn't it enough when these "clotheshne cables" from foreign parts appear in the anti-Catholic press, without date, authority or detail to give thein the semblance of legitimate news!

ARCHBISHOP WALSH AND NA-TIONAL SCHOOLS.

An incident of great importance as regards Irish primary education is the resignation of the Archbishop of Dubhn of his position as member of the Board of National Education The Archbishop has been a tower of strength to the so-called National system in Ireland, weakened and handicapped as it has been from the start by a contradiction in theory and practice. Theoretically a mixed system, it is strictly speaking thoroughly denominational. The influence of the Archbishop on the Board has been employed constantly to keep the schools abreast of the times; and it appears to be because of the hopeless failure of the officials to move in the direction of meeting him that he now makes his resignation serve as a practical protest. The officialism of the Irish Education Office appears to be a few centuries behind the stagnant officialism of the War Office, and the debate that has taken place in the House of Commons may knock some of the dust off. But it is a pity that such a leading educationist as the Archbishop of Dublin should be put to the necessity of resigning his position in order to have attention called to the need for reform.

EDITORIAL NOTES.

The Tablet announces that the Rev C. H. Arden, late curate of St. Philip's, Girlington, Bradford, was received into the Catholic Church on 1st July, at St. Marie's, Norfolk, Row, Newspaper reports concerning the position taken by Mgr. Routhier, of Ottawa, on union strikes, appear to have been misleading. The Ottawa Journal reports Mgr. Routhier at the Basilica on Sunday as making a fur-ther reference to the excitement in labor circles caused by statements alleged to have been made by him. The Vicar-General said that he had always been a true friend of the working man and is so yet. To prove that this was the case, he cited an instance of a man who had come to him for assistance. The man desired funds to take him to Toronto where he hoped to get employment, and the neces sary amount was given him. Father Routhier quoted other instances in which he had given assistance to He said he would working men. make no retraction as there was nothing to retract in his statements. He had not spoken with the object of interfering with the unions or the strikers, but he considered it his duty and privilege to give such advice as he deemed advisable, when the matter was likely to have a direct effect on his parishioners. He had seen disastrous results from previous strikes and feared that the present one would become most serious, particularly among the poorer classes, who in many cases have little work during the winter.

Conflicting reports are appearing in the press every day as to the Pope's attitude upon the present critical situation in France. The London Daily levis, a paper which speaks for Proestants rather than Catholics, puts the case in the following words: The feeling of the Vatican with regard to the Congregations in France and Spain grows more intense every day. The camp, however, is disided The Intransigients are in favor of fighting to the bitter end, the others advecate conciliation. To the latter party belongs the Pontiff, who, does not wish, by adopting an irreconcilable attitude, to bring about a state of feeling in the two countries which might have the effect of bringing more trouble upon the Orders. He has. therefore, instructed the various congregations to submit to the law. As a good diplomatist, in addition to the reason just mentioned, he does not desire to break with the French Republic to which he has already sacrificed so much. At the same time also this agrees with his personal feeling. Leo XIII. has always loved France, which has during his career been regarded as a pillar of the Roman Church. This policy, however, is bitterly opposed by the French Monarchists, who day by day are drifting further from Rome and working to encourage the Congregations against the Republic."

An interesting golden jubilee was celebrated last week in Ireland, at the Parish Church, Clontari. The Venerable Archdeacon O'Neill; P. P., V. F., news to its readers. A subscriber celebrated the 50th anniversary of his ordination to priesthood. After th Solemn High Mass, which was attended by a large congregation, addresses were presented on behalf of the parishioners and the teachers in the various schools of the parish, the latter declaring that they had ever found in the Canon "a true friend, a wise counsellor, and a most indulgent manager " Canon O'Neill's reply is extremely well worth reading lt takes us back to a time long before Emancipation, wher, as a boy in a peaceful home, looking down on the valley of the Suir, "he saw in every glade and on every mountain-top slope the silent abbey or the rained church left desolate and lonely, while no one had the courage to attempt replacing them, except by miscrabic structures, unworthy alike of their sacred purposes as well as of the noble traditions of the race " He saw and heard aged people who had reassed and felt the Penal Laws in all their cruelty and fury; and he himself and nowhere to learn even the rudiments of the Classics save within the hedgeschools of some obscure hamlet. Touching on the Emancipation Act, Canon O'Neill declared that, in his opinion, it marked "no part of the way in the life and influence of anti-Catholic Ascendancy. It benefited a class, not a nation, and enabled ascendancy to bestow on the lukewarm and indifferent the bribes it had hitherto reserved for the recreant and the Canon O'Neill is a man apostate." who takes little part in public affairs, and so much greater is reason for pondering on these weighty words, based on the experience of 70 years. He paid an eloquent tribute to Cardinal Cullen as a great Churchman; and, referring to the present Archbishop, deciared that in the brightest pages of the story of the Irish Church he is sure to be linked with Cardinal Cullen "as the one who did and dared the most in repairing the wreck and the ruin of the Penal Laws in Church and school in Ire-

OPENINGS IN KEARNEY.

Kearney, July 8th, 1901 Dear Sir-Will you please oblige by inserting in this issue of your worthy paper that a good opening is here for a shoemaker. Any active and industrious man in that line of work will have no difficulty in building up a good trade here in a short time The: is also a good chance for a competent painter and carpenter to establish themselves here and take hold of the work which in that line is very brisk this summer. A harnessmaker, too, would find plenty to do. Mr. T. Me-Gill, the representative head from England of the chair factory, a large industry established here, was nere for a few days and spoke very encouragingly of the future prospects of the place and that before many years the business would enlarge to greater proportions, a greater number of men would find employment and the population of the place would go on increasing. In connection with the concern there is room almost rt any time for good industrious men-married preferred, who would cettle down -where value is given for labor rather better than in many factories in Canada. Those thus engaged are well satisfied and more arc sure to come. Persons desirous of further information and find the same satisfaction. Any will please write to the undersigned, F. GALLAGHER.

Mr. atchford points out that the Proincial Engineer has approved of hat is known as the "Providence" nder. Any Street Ruilway Company having a poor or unpopular device upon its cars, if they are desirous of insuring the safety of the public by putting on a proper fender, may adopt the Providence fender, and the fact that it has been approved by the proper official is sufficient authority for the company taking such action. Mr. Latchford also states that the Provincial Engineer is about to make practical tests of designs of fenders submitted to him, and those which are found to be of the best class will be sanctioned with as little delay as possible.

SALISBURY GOVERNMENT GOES DOWN ONCE.
London, July 16.—The Government was defeated in the House of Lords this afternoon on a vote quite unimportant in itself. The incident arose from the question whether a model of the new War Office should be made and exhibited. Lord Lansdowne, the Foreign Secretary, refused to entertair this proposition, by on division the motion was carried by 41 votes against 20. The announcement of these figures was greeted with prolonged cheers.

THE CORONATION DECLARATION. The London Daily Chronicle is responsible for the statement that "the terms of the altered Coronation Declaration have been carefully considered by Roman Catholics, with the result that they will meet with no approval from the representatives of that religion in either House of Parliament. But even more opposed than Roman Catholics to the new form," the writer adds, "are the High Church Anglicans. Lord Halifax and this friends intend, therefore, to oppose strenuously the Declaration, which, they say, should-commit the King to the Church of England, and not to some clumsily delined Protestantism. It may be interesting to add, in the some clumsily defined Protestantism. It may be interesting to add, in this conbection, that the King eccived Lord Halifax in audience at Marlborrough House the other day, and discussed with him the Committee's decision."

FRENCH CATHOLICISM. Every Catholic should read powerful article from the pen of the Jesuit Father Thurston, which appears in the current number of The Saturday Review, under the title of "French Catholicism, a Clerical Reply to an Anti-Clerical Attack." In a few words introductory to the article the editor of The Saturday explains that when one of his reviewers came recently to deal with Mr. F. C. Conybeare's 'Roman Catholicism as a Factor in European Politics." he found the book to be nothing but a most violent polemic with which, as a neutral journal, The Saturday had nothing to do. The editor, however, considered it well to confront. Mr. Conybeare with the Jesuit controversialist, Father Thurston. He expresses no opinion on the merits of he dispute, and leaves each reader of his journal to take whatever view is most pleasing to him.

DEATH OF MR. GEORGE SIEGER-

SON. An Irish exchange says: Mr. Geo. Patrick Siegerson, M. A., whose death we regret to announce, had a collegiate career of injoir distriction, and showed high promise of more, whose fruition was marted by liness

His knowledge of literature was wide and accurate. He was a Mender of Council of the National Interary Soclety, and of the Dublin Chess Club. He began a series of articles in The Irish Monthly en "Irish Men of Science," but the state of his health unfortunately debarred hun from continuous work. Mr. Sigerson was the worthy son of a father to whom Ireland has good reason to be grateful, and in whose footsteps as a man' science and a lover of letters be was faithfully following. There will be the deepest sympathy with Dr. Sigerson in the loss of his son.

> COMPOSITION ON LOVE. From The New York Sun.

Love is a thing that makes people think each other pretty when nobody else does.

It causes two persons to be awful quiet when you're round, and also quiet when you're not round-only in a different way.

It also causes people to sit together on one end of a bench when there's heaps of room on the other end.

Nurses has it and sometimes policemen. That's when they don't know where you are, and you have lots of fun playing on the grass.

Husbands and wives has it, but most generally only lovers.

Old people don't have much, 'cause it has to be about dimples and red cheeks and fluffy curls and lots of things which old people don't ever have.

When I grow up é'll have to go and love some one, I suppose. Only she'll liave to let me say what to do.

I've written all I know about it till I do grow up. EDDY.

THE FIKES OF '98.

M. A.- Boston.)

Across lifteen of flashing steel, a double bevoled blade—
A nine-inch hook and gleaming axe for heavy hilt is laid,
Ten feet of ashen handle, etiff and Smooth and strong and straight,
Do vahal find a finer than the pike

Your Mauser and Mannlicher may be glorified to-day,
And Gatlings, poms and thirteens do their lighting miles away,
But since Ceasar's long legged legions drove the short sword home like fate,
Not a one has carried farther than the Pike of '98.

Witness Gorey, Ross and Wexford,
Slaney's slopes and Oulart Hill, See Saxon veteran panoplied, and pikeman's peasant skill!
The charge, shock, sword and rally,
all the tacteis up to date,
But Dundas breaks like spindrift on the Pikes of '98.

To slice a braggart heart of oak or smash a boasted square,
The Yankee, Sclav, or Boer goes and still finds time to spare.
But never swept their leaden hail such swift and stormy gait
As Wexford's gallant rebels with their Pikes of 'y8.

Then here's their hallowed memory, the dauntless souls that sleep— Whose blood bedewed the blessed sod -where Nore and Barrow sweep. We're the heirs of all their sorrow, all their woe and love and hate,

And we'll pay their rebel reckoning with the Pikes of '98.

How Dick Rutherford Regained Faith.

From an Exchange.

There was a sudden sileuce-a sort of listening hush; "the organ's pealng voice was stilled-the Vesper hymn was done," and a young religious who had been kneeling for a moment before the high altar rose and ascended the pulpit.

His face was a striking one; it bore the unmistakable impress of intellectual power, strength of will and holiness. Purity of mind and heart was writ large upon it, and the clear eyes and sensitive mouth betokened gentleness and tenderness of feeling. Altogether it was a countenance that compelled a second glance, and a handsome man sitting about hali way down the nave withdrew his somewhat contemptuous gaze from those immediately around him and fixed it upon the preacher.

"Great heavens!" he exclaimed, inwardly, "why, it's Raymond - dear old Rayl - by all that's wonderfull Ray, a full fledged friarl a fisher of men! Who would have thought it? 'And yet:" memory recurring of boyhood and youth, of school and col-lege life, "it is not so strange after all. He was always a bit serious, the very soul of honor and as stainless as Sir Galahad himself," with a half-sneering, half-envious sigh. "Well, well, it matters little to me, for, whether I had found him a saint or sinner, friar or worldling, Ray will ever be my best, nay, my only true friend."

Thus musing, Dick Rutherford leaned back with folded arms and prepared to listen to the sermon.

"Who hath called you out of darkness into His marvelous light." The words, spoken in a deep, thrilling voice, lost none of their singularly forceful beauty, and the bitter worldweary man-young in years, but old in experience—with a few illusions and less faith listened as to a longforgotten melody, listened and enjoyed, for Dick Rutherford, avowed agnostic though he was, keenly appreciated earnestness in any shape or

"Light!" he muttered, "Yes, more light and fuller is what I want; I have outgrown the simple beliefs, the pious fables, which satisfied my youth. I'm tired of old opinions, tired of facing life's unread riddles, the meaning of which must ever remain locked and barred. The permission of evil, the problem of pain-what use to search into the'r inner depths? What use to .ollo / knowledge like a sinking star beyond the utmost bound of human thought? What use, I say, to strive after the highest mental standard conceivable by us? We are no nearer to the light because the scale is infinite."

Meanwhile the old familiar truths of religion fell from the young preacher's lips, and Dick Rutherford listened, enthra sed, but not convinced. The logical conciseness of the arguments put forward, their clearness and calm, incontrovertible reasonableness, struck him forcibly-more forcibly, perhaps, than he would have cared to confess. The singular beauty of the speaker's voice and the graceful simplicity of his language pleased his hearer's

"Ohl the depths of the riches of the wisdom and of the knowledge of God!" exclaimed the young friar in those memorable words of St. Paul. "How incomprehensible are His judgments and how unsearchable His

Then the organ pealed forth once more; the sermon was over.

Scarcely half an hour later the two friends, whose lives for so long had flowed in such totally different channels, met in a typical monastic par-

Company of the Spinish Company

"Almost thou persuadest me to be a Christian," the elder man remarked, surveying the other with sad, cynical, yet wholly affectionate eyes. But, it's no good, Ray, old fellow. I honor you; I would never deride the faith, if only for your sake. And if it satisfies you, heaven knows it ought to satisfy me, for I don't possessa tenth part of your intellect. Nevertheless, I can't believe-what's more, I can't even pretend to-and I won't renew our friendship under false pretences!"

After that evening Dick Rutherford returned to the monastery again and yet again, as though drawn by some magic spell; but his mental attitude remained unchanged.

Sometimes in the shady garden or sunny library, sometimes in his firend's cell, he spent many a pleasant hour. No word of controversy passed between the two, no useless discussions, no word of reproach. The friar had other methods, known only to his soul and to his God-moments of strenuous prayer, secret penances that none saw and none guessed. Nay, a daily penance, a ceaseless self-abnegation; for when more than seven years ago, in that silent hour before the altar he had heard the Master's voice, he determined to offer his life to God in the religious state for the return of Dick Rutherford to the faith.

"You never irritate a fellow," the latter remarked on a certain evening as they paced one of the long gravel walks side by side, "you've no sentimental picty about you - not a spark! You're rational and sensible in spite of your cowl."

"Does it seem so extraordina" Dick, that a cowl and common seest should go together?" asked the young friar, with a whimsical smile. "Are reason and religion necessarily incompatible?"

"Not always. But you must admit, Ray, that good people are often confoundedly condescending and desperately unconvincing to somers like my-That's the fault I find with the generality of them. I never profess to lead a particularly virtuous life, yet I should hesitate to censure my fellowmortals as unmercifully as many of them appear to find pleasure in do-Still, to condemn any form of faith on account of the imperfections of those who practice it is, to say the least, illogical. No human institu-tion is flawless."

"And the Church is divine," returned the other, gravely, "but its members are human enough, God knows. Well, Dick are you coming to the ceremony on Sunday?".

"What, the crowning of the scatue? My dear boy, you forget I've put away chillish things!"

"Nevertheless, I ask you all the " 'Faith of our Fathers. Mary's Prayers.' I suppose that is what you have in mind." "Don't sneer, Dick; that remark was wholly unworthy of youf" "Yes, it was a wretched piece of cheap cynicism, and to atone for it I promise to be present at the ceremony next Sunday." Dick Rutherford was as good as his word. Long before 3 o'clock in the afternoon in question he had made his through the fast gathering crowd that thronged the church precincts and found a seat in the spacious building, which, despite some inward whispers of self-mockery, always brought him an unwonted sense of rest. The ceremony, simple in expressior, boyhood; the very scent of the flowers stirred vague sweet memories of a time when he "remembered to have been joyful and free from blame," the strains of the well-known hymn, "Welcome, Month of Mary," filled his heart with emotion to which it had long since been a stranger. Even the temporary altar of the sanctuary, upon which stood the statue of Our Lady, soon to be crowned, excited no movement of scoffing criticism. In truth, a feeling now far removed from religious enthusiasm swept over him as the grand organ rolled forth its surging waves of sound and the whole that filled aisles and naves, nay, every inch of standing room, to overflowing took up the familiar refrain and echoed triumphantly, "Welcome, Mouth of Maryl"

The sermon was short and simple, but touching and singularly eloquent. When it was over there followed a thrilling pause, while the pretty little child upon whom the pious task devolved, stepped forward and took the floral crown, only to appear high up a moment later, and deftly place it upon the head of the statue

Not a whisper, not the faintest rustle could be heard in all that vast assemblage; there was a strange hush, and then, across the listening silence, broke the sound of a strong man's

"God hath His mysteries of grace, ways that we cannot tell," and us the sermon proceeded, Dick Rutherford became more and more moved.

"Am I growing a sentimental fool?" he asked himself impatiently once or twice. And then the old, old influences began to work; he bowed his head on his hands and the tender tones of the Mother of Mercy seemed to call "like a friend's voice from a distant field."

A few minutes later the crowd streamed out into the sunshine, and the erstwhile agnostic was left alone before the tabernacle.

"You were right, Ray," he said, in rather an unsteady voice some hours afterwards, when, his confession over, he wrung the young friar's hand and reluctantly prepared to depart, 'Mary's prayers and your's have done what all else failed to do, and my storm-tossed soul has found peace at last "

THE CAT AND THE BURGLAR. A Denver correspondent of The St Louis Globe-Democrat writes as follows:

An old lady living alone in a large and dreary house in the western su-burbs of this city has just told the neighbors, or an attempt to burglarize her house, and the marvellous manner in which the attempt was thwarted. She is well known to have considerable money, as the income from her property exceeds her expenses; and as she has a horror of banks it is the general impression that she keeps the money about the house. She is quite alone, except for a servant woman who comes in the morning and does the work, returning to her home at night. She is always followed by an enormous cat, brindle and white, rejoicing in the name of Dot. He weighs at least sixteen pounds, and attracts a great deal af attention on account of his size, but allows no one to touch him but his mistress. On several occasions when dogs have strayed into the premises Dot has sent them howling from the place. "Last Wednesday night," she says, "I wasn't feeling well and went to hell as soon as the servant left. I rlcep up stairs in the south room. Before going to bed I went all around below stairs and fastened every door and window, just as I always do Dot was sleeping on my bed, just as he always had done all his life. In the night I was awakened by a snucen motion he made, and found when I put my hand on him that he had raised his head and was listening, trembling all over, he was so mervous. I thought he heard a rat, and was about to go to sleep again when he sprang to his feet and stood beside me ,growling very low Then I listened, and distinctly heard footsteps creeping up the stairs. I was so frightened that a smothering sensation came over me. In all the years I had lived there alone such a thing had never happened. I could hear the footsteps come up to the top of the feeling stairs, along the wall for the door of my room. Directly he found the door, and then the hand west feeling for the latch and having found it, turned it and the door opened. I knew well enough what was going on, but I could not move or even scream just lay there as though I were dead. I heard the feet begin to move slowly across the floor toward my bed, and soon he was touching the bed. Just at that moment Dot made an awful leap, and I am sure he must have landed square on that man's head, for of all the wild yells that ever came from a mortal throat that was the 'Dich! Dick! come an' help; the devil's got me!' he screamed, and ran for the door, Dot jumped off, but the man must have been blinded with blood, for he missed his footing at the top and fell down the whole flight of stairs. At the bottom Bor pounc-

THE LITTLE ARISTOCRAT.

"Birds have as much character as human beings," said a specialist on birds. "Some are the most arrant little aristocrats, while others are regular little plebians. I had a little fellow some time ago who, despite all my efforts, would not bathe. Each morning when, with his white porce-lain tub in my hand, I approached his cage he would resolve himself into the sulkiest, dreariest little ball of feathers you can possibly imagine. I coaxed and pleaded; I even bribed. Bathe he would not. So consistent was he in his determination not to bathe that I named bim Tramp. One morning I broke the tub, and in its place I took a shallow blue and white dish of Japanese ware. Tramp eyed me for a moment with all his old hostility, and then as he caught sight of the pretty dish he flew down from his perch with chirps of joy and darted into the water before I could take my hand from the cage. I had found the way to his heart, and his morning bath now became a daily source of joy to both of us. But one fatal morning I broke the blue and white In an apologetic manner I brought Tramp once more the regulation white bath dish, hoping that his cleanly habits were by this time so engrained that he would overlook the prosaic appearance of his tub. Not so. An angry flutter of wings, a threatening little beak, a perfect tempest of shrill cheeps and twitterings and then sulky silence on the topmost perch. So it went on till I secured another blue and white dish, and then

Captain McDonald, of Tulloch, who died in 1776, aged 66 years, is said to have known the white hind of Loch Treig for 50 years, his father for a ike period before him and his grandfather for 60 years before him. So in 1826 MacDonald of Glengarry is reported to have killed a stag which bore a mark on the left car identical with that made on all the calves he could catch by Ewen-MacIan-Og, who had been dead one hundred and fity years. Analogous stories, it may be noted, are told in countries on the continent of Europe where deer are to be found in any number .- Chambers' Journal.

The Color Blindness of John Macartney

It came upon him suddenly one tarblack night, when he was pulling a special train of "Raymond-Whitcombs" with the Five-nought-seven, and the effect of the visitation was to smash his nerve for the renainder of the run.

The special had been fifteen minutes late out of Grand Butte, the division station, and Macartney was cracking the whip on the curves with the rear Pullman in the endeavor to make Maverick junction on time. Maverick was his meeting point with a stock "limited," and whosoever delayed a live stock flyer on the C. and G. R. was likely to hear from the train despatcher in language more forcible than polite.

Macartney had regained all but two 'he lost fifteen minutes when her hurled the 507 at the long grade up the Crow Hill. From the top of the grade the lights of Maverick would be in sight, and with a minute to the good at the summit he would make the meeting point on time.

"Reep her hot, Tomi" ne shouted across to the fireman, and Tom, having three good names at stake - his wn, Macartney's and the 507's shoveled the coal with a willing hand.

So it came about that the hill was topped in good time, and with the lunge over the summit Macartney eased off on the throttle and leaned far out of his window to mark down the lights at the junction. Everything was as it should be.

aiding and the switch lamps on the hain line blinked yellow-eyed in the whistle lever, and in reply to the station winked twice, the iks meaning "No orders for you" d giving the train the right to run rough the yards without stopping. "All clear!" sang out the firement on his side, and Macartney reached the throttle and sent the tourist It was when the flying special was within twict its length of the nearest switch for 'he siding where the stock train stood-that the appalling thing appened. For a certain dizzying in stant the yellow eye of the switch list, burned a ghastly blue, then it flickered suddenly to red, and Macartmey was down from his box and fighting madly with the big eight-wheelnot to make the impossible stop, but to lessen, if so he might, by some few wheel turns the crash of the inevitable collision with the stock train a the siding.

Miraculously enough there was n ollisior. The 507 banged over the witch at full twenty miles an hour, for drive whoels sliding in the grip of the windjams and a stream of fire Histing from every brake shoe on the Song train of Pullmans; but never a wheel left the straight track of the main line. The straining engine came to a stand just opposite the station and in a twinkling Macartney was down and burnting into the telegraph office, a picture of handsome young Clant in a fory.

"Who's running that stock train?" he exploded, in white-hot wrath.

"Halsey, engineer; Logan, conductor," said the operator. "Why? What's the matter with you, Jack?" Macartney had the reputation of being the best-natured man on 'the division, and it was a new thing to hear him rave and swear like a buccaneer.

"Somebody was monkeying with that switch!" he stormed. "I went red on me just before I hit it. Who turned it?"

Just then Logan himself came in to ask gruffly why Macartney did not pull his blanked dude over the switch to let the stock train out. Explanations followed-hot ones on Macartney's part. There was already bad blood between these two for Phemie Tredwell's sake.

"You're drunk," sneered Logan. "There was nobody near the switch. Get a move on your varnished cars and let me out of here."

"I say there was!" insisted Macart ney; but now other witnesses came to refute him. The vardmaster, the engineer of the stock train, they had all seen the switch, and it had shown a white light, as it should.

"By the Lord Harry! I don't care who saw it," Macartney was beginning again, when his own fireman drew him aside

"Let up on it, Jack," he muttered. "Twas all right; I saw it just as you jerked the air on. Let's go.'

John Macartney took his place in the cab of the big eight-wheeler and the special was presently storming on its westward way again. But for that one night the engineer's nerve was gone. He stood down on the footplate to run and his hand never left the throttle.

The next time it happened he was 'dead-heading' over the division in the caboose of a freight train. Not liking the company around the red lobster of a stove-Logan was of it, dead-heading also-Macartney had climbed to a seat in the caboose lookout. Being off duty he fell asleep, and when he awoke the train was running into Rockton. He started up and rubbed his eyes. While you might count five every light in the Rockton yard glared at him with a fiery red eye through the glass front of the lookout v. indow. Then the curious hallucination passed and he saw the lights as they ought to be.

"Good Lord!" he groaned; "I've got it ugain! If this thing goes on"- He storped short, thinking of the lives that he held in his hand every time he climbed to the cab of 507, and being deep in the pit of trouble he did not hear a stealthy step on the caboose top or the slamming of the rear door a minute later.

Three days after the "dead-heading" trip Macartney went on the fast mail run. He had objected, as most of the men did, for the run was hard one. But the objection was only on general principles and at heart he was twice glad, for the mail run gave him a clear twenty four-hour lay-over at Lone Pine, the western end of the division, and Phemie Tredwill's father was the station agent at Lone Pine.

By that time there was a pretty fair understanding between the handsome young engineer and Phemic the brown-eyed, though as yet it paused short of housekeeping talk. Macartney was more than willing, but Phemic had a way of changing the subject on him at the critical moment, and far this Macartney feared in the calous corner of his heart that Barton Logan was responsible.

To add to his disquietude on this head Phemie was always "rubbing The stock train was waiting on the Logan in on hua," as he phrased it and she did it again on that first mail run lay-over evenings when Macartney hy darkness. Macartney felt for was sharing Phemic's watch in the telegraph office while her father went

"How is Mr. Logan now?" she asked, sweetly. "We don't see much of him since he took 16 and 17."

These were "doubling" trains, with no lay-over for the crew at Lone Pine, a fact for which Macartney was devoutly thankful.

"He's all right, I guess. I don't see much of him myself," said Macartney, wishing that the lit le might

"I am airaid you don't like him very well," said the brown-eyed maid, all innocence.

Now, Macartney was a lag fellow, with wide open blue eyes, a thick mane of red hair and a skin as white under his clothes as a woman's. Such men are not adepts in concealment. likes me, and that's precious little. I

"I like him about as much as he hear he has been making his brags that he will run me off the C. and G. R. before he gets through with

"Why, dear me! I didn't know you were caemies."

Macartney laughed-the laugh os good-natured giant. "I'm not an enemy but I guess he is."

"What is 'the trouble?" asked Phemie, again in all innocence.
"You:" Macartney blurted it out before he sould take time to consider if it were the wise thing to say. The young girl blushed very pretti-

no neck and check in all the world like a soft brown to color so deliciously under a blush. But if he imagined he had brought matters to a crisis at last, he was doomed to disappointment.

"Do you have any time at all in Grand Butte she asked, with one of her lightning changes of the subject, 'waking time, I mean."

"O, yes; I have an hour or two in the evening before I turn in." "Will you do a little shopping for me ?" "I'll buy the whole town and bring it out to you in the cab of the Nought-seven if you say so," he replied, only too eager to serve her. "O, you foolish!" she said, laughing at him. "I want two yards of this and a spool of silk to match,' handing him a bit of dress goods. "Do you think you are equal to it?"

He took the scrap of cloth and held it off. "It's red, isn't it?" "What a question! Why, of course it is-cardinal red at that." "I thought it was," he said, musingly, and then the father came in and the talk of possibilities was at an end.

Macartney made the purchase of the dress goods and the silk the following evening, and then the clerk said they were a perfect match for the sample, he thought so, too. But the carrying of the small package to its destination came within a hair's breadth of being fraught with disas-

It was beyond the Divide, on the westward down grade. was late, as usual, and Macartney was pushing the 507 to the limit which limit on the Jack Mountain down grade was well up to a mile a minute

Train No. 7, the regular Overland Express, was just ahead of him, and ripping around the curves and racing free for the siding at the foot of the mountain to bet out of the way, for the mail had the right to track over all trains in both directions.

Macartney could see the smoke of rising over the dun swells ahead, and he was looking out for her in a way, though under the rules it was 7's business to look out for him. It was on the last of the curves, where the line runs down to a long tangent in the valley, that the crux came. Macartney had a glimpse of a patch of bunting-green, as he would have sworn-flaunting between the rails, another of a min running up the track and making frantic signals and a third of the tail end of No. 7, stopped! Then he went to work.

It was the closest possible shave. Luckily, all the conditions were favorable; a dry rail, automatic air in perfect working order, good brake shoes under every truck. Notwithstanding, the nose of 507 was fairly under the platform of the rear Pullman of the passenger train when the mail came to a full stop.

As a matter of course there was instant investigation, and profanity enough to pale the normal blueness of the crisp mountain air. Straightened out, the story of it was this: The track repairers had found a broken rail and had flagged No. 7, after which the foreman had run back to flag the mail. He swore by all the gods known to mankind that he had set up a red flag between the rails to stop Macartney, and in proof thereof showed the tattered remains of a flag which he said the mail had run down.

Now, Macartney had seen a green flag, or he thought he had and since green is merely a "slow" signal. he had done no more than to shut of the steam until he saw the rear end of the passenger tain blocking the way.

There was no time to fight it out on the ground, but both crews remarked that after the first burst of profanity Macartney shut up like a clain. And when the two trains were once more speeding on their way Macartney's fireman noticed that his mate did not climb to the box. He stood on the foot plate, with his left hand gripping the throttle-a thing he had been doing a good deal of late, as Tom Barkley remembered.

Macartney did not tell Phemie how near her bit of dress had come to figuring in a wreck on Jack Mountain. and since he was so preoccupied as to be almost rude, she was kinder to him than she had ever been before-as is the manner of women. Nevertheless he went back to his boarding house shortly after Agent Tredwill returned from supper and did not wait to take Phemie home, as was his custom. There be some things that will strike a man dumb even in the presence of the girl of his heart, and Macartney had fallen upon one of these thingsor rather it had fallen upon'him.

On the next lay-over in Grand Butte Macartney turned up at the office of the division surgeon.

"What's that you say, Mac - want to take the eye test?" said the kindly little centleman, whom the men on the division called the "bone joint-

"You're the first man on the road to some in for that till he had to What's wrong with you?" "Don't know as there's anything to bring about on the division.

ly, and the lover thought there was wrong. But I thought I'd like to be put through egain. And say, doc, make Itbbing.

Surgeon Kinnebrow did make it binding - as binding as if the blond giant were trying to qualify as a salesman at a ribbon counter. It was all to no purpose, so far as any discoverable flaw in Macartney's eyesight was concerned. He could distinguish perfectly not only the primary colors, but all the intermediate shades to the very blending point of blue and green by lamplight.

"You're all right," said the doctor. "Yes," said Macartney: but there was no assurance in him.

"What made you think you were not?"

"Two or three little things that I can't explain; red and white getting tangled, or seeming to get tangled, once in a while "

"It's that d-d electric headlight," growled the little doctor 'I've told 'em it would ruin every pair of eyes on the road,"

"Yes, but-" "But what?"

"The last time it happened in broad daylight."

'Oh ; did, eh? Then it's your liver, most likely. Be careful of what you eat, and make sure of your sleep; no overtime, mind you, till the symptom disappears altorether. I suppose by rights I ought to lay you off, but I shan't. You know your responsibility and I'm going to trust you not to take any bad chances.'

"Thank you, doc," and Macariney went to get some of the permitted sleep on the spot.

"For a fortnight after thise there were no more "symptoms," and hiacartney began to breathe freer - and to run less like a man whose nerve is evaporating. Moreover, he won golden encomiums on his masterly handling of the fast mail. There was a $500 government penalty for the non-delivery of the mail on schedule time at the terminals, and to safeguard against this the company gave its mail engineer a substantial bonus for all the lost time regained on any division iun. Mac's "bonus fund" grew with every trip, and as Phemie seemed to interest herself shyly in its accumulation, Macartney took courage and put in his dead time in Grand Butte haunting the house furnishing shor.

But the disappearance of the "symptoms" proved to be only temporary. Once , gain, when he was passing freight train at a blind siding, with the 507 plunging along at a fifty-mile gait, the nearest switch light sputtered and turned first blue and then red. But it went white again before he could do anything more than shut oil steam, so nothing worse than an other of the terrible nerve-shakings came of this.

Yet it was enough to send him to Phemie in despair, and the next evening, when they were alone together in the office at Lone Pine, he made clean breast of his troubles everwise

"You poor boy!" she said (he was five years her senior and big enough to make two such men as her father), "why didn't you tell me be-

"I haven't had the heart to tel! anybody. You see, it means a lot to me, Phemie. If I admit it as fact, I've got to throw up my job." "It would mean a lot to any one. Can't you account for it in any way?"

"No. Doc Kinnebraw said it was 'liver," but pshaw! I'm as strong as a mule and as well as any man can be and not burst "

She was sewing on a piece of red stuff he had bought for her, and for a time her needle flew in silence. Then

"Has it - have you ever thought that somebody might be playing trick on you?"

Macartney's tilted chair came to the fllor with a crash. "By George!" he said; then he shook his head. thought I had a notion, but it wen't fit all the times."

"Tell me," she commanded.

"The first time it happened was when I was passing Bart Logan's trair at Maverick. The next time I was dead-heading with him on No. 18. Last night it was his train again that I was passing at the blind siding. But he had nothing to do with the rip up on Jack Mountain. He was in Grand Butte that day."

"I am afraid he has a spite at you, John, and-I know he is a desperate man. You must be very careful."

That was all she would say, but it was enough to send Marartney of with his heart afire, also with a determination to lay the whole matter before the superintendent at the first opportunity. So much he owed to himself, to the company and to those whose lives he held in his hand on the arrow-flight bursts of the fast mail. But the climax came first, as climaxes are wont to come. When Macartney reached Grand Butte on his return trip the superintendent was away, and Mac went West again the following day with the fast mail hours late, a stiff head wind blowing a gale to still later and everbody swearing at the tangle the delayed train with despot rights was bound mail cars began to kill time. Then a freight train jumped the iron on the main line and threw the mail still farther off, with a three-hour wait while the wrecking crew was picking up the remains. Last of all, the .507 slipped an eccentric, and though Mac and his fireman worled like madmen to set it, another hour went to the bad.

It was a day of petty disasters

Taking it all in all, Macartney did as well as the best man on the division could have done under like hard conditions, but it was long past dark when the fast mail thundered into the deep mountain valley where Lone Pine nestles at the end of the mountain.

Two miles east of the station, when Macartney was getting the last possible wheel turn out of the 507 in a final spurt, a red glare sprang up between the rails less than a hundred yards in front, lighting up the frowning mountains and turning the foaming torrent at the trackside into a river of blood.

Macartney flung himself upon the throttle and airbrake like a man possessed, and the big flyer groaned and heaved and buckled, coming to a stand with the spluttering Bengal light fizzing beneath her machinery.

"Now, what-" He did not finish the objurgation. Iostead, he whipped out of the cab and sprang to the ground in good time to catch Phemie when she stumbled and would have fallen. "What is it, Phemie, dear? Are you hurt?"

She shook her head. No, not - not hurt," she parted. And then: "He's setting a trap for you, and I-I ran all the way.'

'Who is setting a trap for me?" "Bart Logan. I saw him doing something to the switch just opposite our house. I had no lantern, so I got some of Benny's Christmas fireworks and ran. Oh-h-h! I was so afraid it wouldn't turn out to be a red light after all! And John, that was a green flag you ran down on Jack Mountain. The section foreman told a-a story to save himself. I heard all about it on the wires this raorning."

He put her up into the cab without a word and was stowing her on his hox seat when the mail conductor came engineward, swearing piteously at this new delay. Macartney explained in a whispered sentence and the big conductor climbed to the footboard. "All right," he said. "Go on, and when you get to the switch give her the air sort 'o sudden and I'll drop off and nab him, Hewdy, Miss When the switch in front of the agent's cottage came in sight it showed a white light, as it should. But when the 507 was almost upon it, it turned blue and then red, and four pairs of eyes saw it. Macartney had the train well under control, and at the critical moment he checked its flight and the big conductor leaped from the gangway fair upon the shoulders of a man who was holding a piece of stained glass before the yellow eye of the switch lamp.

Macartney ran on to the station, lifted Phemie down from the cab and turned his engine over to the hostler before he spoke. Then he said: "May I take you back home, Phemie?"

She nodded, and they walked up the track together. Half way to the winking switch they met the conductor of the mail. "Confound his picture! he got away from me after all and broke for the hids. But I guess he took your color blindness along with him, Mac. Shall I report it?-or will you?"

"You report it?" said Macartney. "I'll tell the old man all about it first chance I get."

The conductor went on towards the station, and when they were alone again Macartney said: "What made you run so? Were you afraid some of Uncle Sam's mail boxes might get smashed?"

"Of course," she snapped. "How can you ask?"

"I didn't know. But-O, Phemie girl! now that he's out of the way. won't you give me just a little grain of a show?"

She laughed softly and slipped her arm in his; this though they were fairly at the cottage gate. "Can't you come in and let me get you a cup of coffee and something to eat? Supper is all over long ago at Mrs. Raffley's."
"No," he said, stubbornly; "not till you give me my answer.'

"Ol" with a little stamp of her foot, "I wouldn't be as dense as a man for anything in the world! What do you want me to say?"
"Say 'Yes.' "

"But I can't give you a 'little show,' as you put it." "Why can't you?"

"Because I gave you all there was to, give a long time ago-only you were color blind and couldn't see it. Now will you come in?"

And he went; stumbling beside her in a new blindness—the blindness of love undenied that saw no light save that in the brown eyes that were laughing up into his .- Francis Lynde in The New Orleans Picayune.
