ADMINISTRATION OF OATHS OF OFFICE.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD introduced Bill (No. 1) respecting the Administration of Oaths of Office. Bill read the first time.

SPEECH FROM THE THRONE.

Mr. SPEAKER. I have the honor to inform this House, that when the House attended His Excellency the Governor General this day in the Senate Chamber, His Excellency was pleased to make a Speech to both Houses of Parliament, and, to prevent mistakes, I have obtained a copy of the Speech, which is as follows:—

Honorable Gentlemen of the Senate:

Gentlemen of the House of Commons:

In again meeting you for the despatch of business I have to congratulate you on the abundant harvest with which Providence has blessed our country and upon the general condition of the Dominion. Its commercial prosperity, although it has to some extent shared in the depression which has prevailed in Great Britain and in the neighboring Republic, rests upon foundations which no temporary or partial disturbance can remove.

I trust that the present year will be one of peace and progress.

The flow of population into Manitoba and the North-West Territories, although impeded by various and unexpected causes, has been substantial, and the testimony of members of the British Association and other visitors of the North-West last summer as to the well-being, contentment, and hopefulness of the settlers, is most gratifying.

A Bill introducing into those Territories a more simple and economical system for the transfer of land will be laid before you.

The Report of the Commission for the consolidation of the Statutes affecting the Dominion has been completed and will be submitted to you for legislative action.

You are again invited to consider a measure relating to the representation of the people in Parliament and for the assimilation of the Electoral Franchises in the several Provinces.

A provisional arrangement of matters for some time under discussion with the Government of Manitoba has been entered into, and a measure confirming the same will be submitted to you so soon as it has been accepted by the Provincial Legislature.

I deemed it expedient to issue during the Recess a Commission to consider and report upon the whole subject of Chinese immigration with reference to its trade relations, as well as to those social and moral objections which have been taken to the influx of the Chinese people into Canada.

The Report of the Commissioners is very nearly completed, and will be laid before you during the present Session.

The necessity of encouraging the speedy construction of lines of railway through the North-West Territories has pressed itself on my Government, and you will be asked to aid railway enterprise by liberal grants of land.

Urgent representations have been made by the Boards of Trade of the chief towns in Canada, as well as by some of the Chambers of Commerce in Great Britain, of the necessity that exists for the adoption of some system of bankruptcy or insolvency giving adequate protection against undue preferences, and your attention to this important subject is earnestly invited.

In pursuance of the vote of last Session I caused a vessel to be fitted out and dispatched to Davis' Straits and Hudson's Bay, in order to obtain more accurate information as to the navigation of those waters, and test the practicability of the route for commercial purposes.

A report of the progress of the expedition during the last season will be laid before you.

An International Exhibition will be opened at Antwerp during the present year, and a Colonial and Indian Exhibition is to be held in London in 1886. Canada should, I think, be represented in her various manufactures and natural productions on both occasions, and I invoke your consideration of the best means of aiding in these important objects.

Several other measures of importance will be submitted to you; among them will be Bills to amend the Insurance Act of 1877, the Civil Service Act, and the law relating to contagious diseases among cattle, as well as measures for taking, at an early period, a census of the population of the North-West Territories, and one relating to the North-West Mounted Police.

Mr. SPEAKER.

Gentlemen of the House of Commons:

The accounts for the past fiscal year will be laid before you. You will find that notwithstanding the very considerable reduction in the prices and volume of many of the leading imports, the income has exceeded the expenditure chargeable to Consolidated Revenue.

The estimates for the ensuing year will also be submitted. They will be found, I trust, to have been prepared with due regard to economy.

Honorable Gentlemen of the Senate,

Gentlemen of the House of Commons:

I am sure that your earnest consideration will be given to the subjects I have mentioned, as well as to every matter which may affect the prosperity and good government of Canada.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD moved that the Speech of His Excellency the Governor General be taken into consideration to-morrow.

Motion agreed to.

SELECT STANDING COMMITTEES.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD moved:

That Select Standing Committees of this House, for the present Session, be appointed for the following purposes:—1. On Privileges and Elections. 2. On Expiring Laws. 3. HOUSE OF COMMONS.

FRIDAY, 30th January, 1885.

The SPEAKER took the Chair at Three o'clock.

PRAYERS.

MEMBER INTRODUCED.

The following Member, having previously taken the Oath according to law, and subscribed the roll containing the same, took his seat in the House:

HECTOR F. McDUGALL, Esquire, Member for the Electoral District of Cape Breton, introduced by Sir John A. Macdonald and Hon. Mr. McLelan.

ADDRESS IN ANSWER TO HIS EXCELLENCY'S SPEECH.

The House proceeded to the consideration of His Excellency's Speech at the opening of the Session.

Mr. TASCHEREAU. (Translation.) Mr. Speaker: Having been called upon as the youngest member of this House, by virtue of a time-honored tradition, to move the Address in answer to the Speech from the Throne, I feel that, less than any of my predecessors, would I be justified in leaving aside that other time-honored tradition which makes it my duty to begin by craving the indulgence of this House. When I consider that, in order to deserve the interest of the House, I must comment on this document in a new and able manner, and when, on the other hand, I am struck with my own want of experience, I feel that the duty which I have undertaken to fulfil is quite out of proportion with my ability. However, in the idea that this invitation has been extended to me out of respect for the people by whom I have been chosen as their representative here, of the fine electoral division for which I am a member, and in my deep sense of gratitude for my constituents, I shall find courage enough to pursue this difficult and honorable task. Moreover, Mr. Speaker, when I throw a glance on this document and when my mind is fixed upon the numerous and important subjects of new legislation which it announces, and when at the same time I consider the general condition of the country, I feel that my task becomes easier as it becomes more agreeable to me. In fact, how could I not feel happy while inviting all members of this hon. House and the country at large to congratulate themselves on the abundant harvest with which Providence has blessed our country, and upon the general condition of the Dominion? Therefore, to Providence we owe our thanksgivings, but we should not forget to offer also to the Government our congratulations on the results of their financial policy. In fact, when we remember the disastrous effects in the country of the commercial crisis which has preceded the actual depression, when we have been in a position to have such a clear insight into the great depression which prevailed last year in Great Britain and in the neighboring Republic, when we consider the intimate and constant commercial intercourse between these countries and our own, if we look at the actual condition of our trade, we cannot certainly refrain from making a comparison between the old financial system and the present one, and this comparison being made, the superiority of the new system is not only made apparent by speeches or by words, but is perfectly established by accomplished facts and by experience. Neither can we help admiring the clever direction given by our legislators to our commerce whose prosperity to-day rests upon foundations which no temporary or partial disturbance can remove. If then, Mr. Speaker, the stability of our institutions, the safety of the present and the prospect of the future which cannot but improve the wealth and welfare of the inhabitants of this country, are as many tokens of peace and prosperity, why should we not feel confident that the year now commencing will open an era of peace and prosperity? Of peace, Mr. Speaker, not only with foreign nations, but of peace also in the union and harmony which ought to exist among citizens of a nation to enable them to make more rapid strides in the high road to progress. Our legitimate aspirations, like those of all new nations, must necessarily tend to lead us in the way of progress, and, indeed, no one can pretend that our advance in that direction has been too slow up to this day. Let us see: the immense wilderness of the North-West whose soil was heretofore untrodden except by savage tribes or by a few bold explorers endeavoring to discover the unknown, and whose echoes had only been awakened by the howling of wild beasts, that wilderness is to-day covered by a network of immense railways. Closely following in the wake of the constructors, thousands of laborers, settlers, and diligent workers have inaugurated a new era in that great country, and to-day the shrill whistle of the locomotive is heard in these new regions and proclaims loudly in all parts of that country that civilization and progress have conquered the great wilderness. But, in spite of all that has been accomplished up to this day, we have only made our first step in that direction. It is true our institutions are well established, but our traffic is daily increasing its scope, new routes of communication are furrowing the country in all directions, and soon, in a few months hence, a line of railway will cross it through and through, from one ocean to the other. Notwithstanding this, what a great amount of work remains to be done! What a great number of resources remain undeveloped! What an extent of unsettled territory and what an amount of wealth still lies in the bosom of the earth! Even apart from the older provinces, what a great field for work is offered in the development and settlement of Manitoba and the North-West Territories! Our efforts must, therefore, be pushed in that direction, by promoting emigration in these rich and yet unsettled Territories, by aiding their colonization and development, in order that the sacrifices made in the hope of seeing one day that immense region transformed into a vast empire, may not be lost. With this purpose in view the Government have felt the necessity of encouraging the rapid construction of a railway line across these Territories, and have decided to ask the House to help the construction of that line by a liberal grant of lands. We may also congratulate the Government for the impulse which they have, by legitimate means, given to the advancement of the country. For my part I am an admirer of the system which tends to facilitate by grants of land the construction of railways, for this system gives to the immense area of lands still remaining in the hands of the Government a great increase of value, and at the same time makes of every individual interested in those grants a devoted and zealous agent of colonization. The efforts of the Government have, besides, during the course of last year, been admirably seconded by the eulogistic reports on the country made by members of the British Association for the Advancement of Science. A visit on the part of such prominent men, whose reputation for science and general knowledge is so widely spread in Europe, cannot fail to have the most happy results. Therefore, I feel confident that in the near future, the results obtained from such a visit will be made clear to us by the great increase in the number of settlers coming to our Canadian North-West. The Government, on their part, must also contribute as far as they can to promote this immigration, and they can do this by extending to the settlers coming into this country all the legitimate and efficacious protection in their power, and by giving them a simple and economical means of transferring their properties, while giving to their title deeds an indisputable character of authenticity and of validity. It is, therefore, just and right that we should respond to the appeal made by the Government to this House, in order to pass a law which will authorize a safer and more economical mode of transfer of real estate. Before leaving this question aside I beg to be allowed to allude to that part of the Speech from the Throne, which informs us that a provisional arrangement has been entered into with the Government of Manitoba on matters which have been for some time under discussion, and that a measure confirming the same will be submitted to us so soon as it shall have been accepted by the Provincial Legislature. No doubt, Mr. Speaker, that this information will be greeted with satisfaction by the whole House. Every question which has heretofore arisen between the various Legislatures and Parliament has been amicably settled. This is one of the strongest arguments in favor of our constitution, and it speaks well for the foresight of those who have conceived the plan and have carried it out. Let us hope that such differences will always be settled in the same amicable manner, so that prolonged quarrels and acrimonious contests may not trouble that harmony among the people which is so necessary to the advancement and progress of the provinces. The Speech from the Throne, Mr. Speaker, after giving us a knowledge of those measures of legislation more especially adapted to that part of the country called the North-West, points out to us measures which are proposed in the general interest of the country. I read with pleasure the paragraph which informs us that the work of the Commission for the consolidation of the Statutes affecting the whole Dominion is completed, and that the report will be submitted to us for legislation. I attach to it a great deal of importance, not only as a member of the legal profession, but furthermore, and above all, in view of the very great advantages which will be derived from the measure by citizens of this country who are not familiar with the study of our laws. During the eighteen years which have elapsed since the establishment of Confederation, so many amendments to existing laws have been passed that even legal men were obliged to make long and patient enquiries to discover all the bearings of a law. Still more numerous were the difficulties met with by people who were not familiar with our laws. But to-day, thanks to this consolidation, every one will have easy access to the laws passed by Parliament, and more than any others, members of the legal profession will owe a debt of gratefulness to the Government. The next paragraph of the Speech from the Throne tells us that we will be again invited to consider a measure relating to the representation of the people in Parliament, and for the assimilation of the electoral franchises in the several provinces. It would be useless for me, Mr. Speaker, to deal lengthily with this paragraph, for I could only repeat that which was so eloquently said last year by the mover and seconder of the Address. However, I cannot help calling the attention of the House on the importance of defining the class of voters which shall elect its own members. Is it not an anomalous fact that by the system which prevails to-day members of the House of Commons should be elected by voters chosen and pointed out by Local Legislatures? If, in order to act with more freedom in its own sphere, each Local Legislature must be thoroughly independent from the control of the Federal Parliament, for the same reason the House of Commons must be absolutely independent, either directly or indirectly, from the control or action of Local Legislatures, and, above all, not be exposed to fall, sooner or later, into the hands of an electoral division created against their will. We all wish that the relations existing between Local Legislatures and the Federal Parliament should be relations of peace and good-will. Well, Mr. Speaker, the surest means to keep them such is for all parties to entrench themselves behind their rights, to carefully watch over them and to maintain them with all their might. In such a way the positions of each will be beyond attack, and peace and harmony must necessarily prevail. The Government cannot be charged with not having worked constantly to maintain this union, not only among the various institutions, but also among the different races and nationalities coexisting in the country. I find the proof of this in that part of the Speech from the Throne which promises us that the work of the commission named to consider and report upon the whole subject of Chinese immigration with reference to its trade relations, as well as to those social and moral objections which have been taken to the influx of the Chinese people into Canada, will be submitted to the House during this Session. No doubt, Mr. Speaker, that in preparing this report due consideration has been given to existing treaties between Great Britain and China, and that, at all events, the determination to be taken on this point will be taken after that careful study which is the guarantee of sound legislation. Our attention is next called to the following paragraph:—

"Urgent representations have been made by the Boards of Trade of the chief towns in Canada, as well as by some of the Chambers of Commerce in Great Britain, of the necessity that exists for the adoption of some system of bankruptcy or insolvency giving adequate protection against undue preferences, and your attention to this important subject is earnestly invited."

Mr. Speaker, if I remember aright, when the repeal of the Insolvent Act, which existed some few years ago, was moved in this House the great majority of the House of Commons of Canada voted for the repeal. I think that the House then reflected the opinion of the people, and I am not aware that there are to-day any reasons for a change of sentiment. But before deciding on this question it might be well, perhaps, to form a just idea of the wants of the people on this point. As for us, members of the Province of Quebec, we have, by virtue of our civil law, an equitable mode of distributing the estates of insolvent debtors. Perhaps it would be just, perhaps it would be advantageous, for the Dominion at large to accept the mode of legislation now existing in the Province of Quebec. The next paragraph informs us that in pursuance of the vote of last Session a vessel has been fitted out and despatched to Davis' Straits and Hudson's Bay, in order to obtain more accurate information as to the navigation of those waters, and test the practicability of the route for commercial purposes. The progress of science and human faculties have, for a certain number of years, developed the natural resources to such an extent that feats which were considered as impossible even at the beginning of the present century, may now be accomplished with astounding facility. If I remember aright, Mr. Speaker, the general impression has long been entertained that it was impossible to navigate the Strait of Behring; to-day, this problem has long been solved. Why should not we be as justified to think to-day that the Hudson's Bay is navigable as people were a few years ago in believing that the Strait of Behring could be navigated? What great advantages would result for Canadian trade if we could come to the conclusion that Hudson's Bay is navigable for commercial purposes? Another paragraph of the Speech from the Throne tells us that an International Exhibition will be opened at Antwerp during the present year, and a Colonial and Indian Exhibition is to be held in London in 1886. Canada should be represented in her various manufactures and natural productions on both occasions. Mr. Speaker, the success already obtained by Canada at the various exhibitions to which it has been represented during the last few years, is certainly a great encouragement for the future. At the Philadelphia, London and Paris Exhibitions, Canada has been very successful, and I think we should send our productions to the two exhibitions which will soon take place; and increase, if possible, the quantity of articles to be exhibited, the more so as we are pursuing a policy of immigration to our country, in order to cause the richness of our soil and the great variety of our resources to be known abroad. Finally, Mr. Speaker, I beg to conclude as I have commenced, by congratulating our country on the happy condition of affairs, and on its prosperity during the commercial depression which has prevailed of late years. In spite of the numerous expenses necessitated by the administration of such a vast country as ours, a country whose population is disseminated on all points, still, the fact that the receipts exceed the expenses chargeable to the Consolidated Revenue is a proof of the spirit of economy, and of the ability of our rulers who have foreseen all coming emergencies, and have managed to throw the balance on the surplus side. Moreover, I think that I reflect the opinion, if not of the whole population, at least of the greatest part of the population, when I state that the inhabitants of this country are satisfied with their lot; that they live happy under the protection of Great Britain, and that they do not intend to transfer their fealty and homage, but that they wish to continue to live, grow and prosper under the folds of that glorious flag which ensures to them peace and prosperity for a long time to come. I have the honor to move the following Address in answer to the Speech from the Throne:—

That an humble Address be presented to His Excellency the Governor General, to thank His Excellency for his gracious Speech at the opening of the present Session, and further to assure His Excellency:—

That we rejoice to know that in again meeting us for the despatch of business, His Excellency is able to congratulate us on the abundant harvest with which Providence has blessed our country, and upon the general condition of the Dominion, and to express his belief that its commercial prosperity, although it has to some extent shared in the depression which has prevailed in Great Britain and in the neighboring Republic, rests upon foundations which no temporary or partial disturbance can remove; and that we trust with His Excellency that the present year will be one of peace and progress.

That we are glad to learn that the flow of population into Manitoba and the North-West Territories, although impeded by various and unexpected causes, has been substantial, and that the testimony of members of the British Association and other visitors of the North-West last summer as to the well-being, contentment, and hopefulness of the settlers, is most gratifying.

That any Bill introducing into these Territories a more simple and economical system for the transfer of land, laid before us, shall receive our best attention.

That we learn with pleasure that the report of the commission for the consolidation of the Statutes affecting the Dominion has been completed and will be submitted to us for legislative action.

That we shall carefully consider any measure relating to the representation of the people in Parliament and for the assimilation of the electoral franchises in the several provinces, which may be laid before us.

That we thank His Excellency for informing us that a provisional arrangement of matters for some time under discussion with the Government of Manitoba has been entered into, and that a measure confirming the same will be submitted us so soon as it has been accepted by the Provincial Legislature.

That we learn with great interest, that His Excellency deemed it expedient to issue during the recess a Commission to consider and report upon the whole subject of Chinese immigration with reference to its trade relations, as well as to those social and moral objections which have been taken to the influx of the Chinese people into Canada, and that the report of the Commissioners is very nearly completed and will be laid before us during the present Session.

That we thank His Excellency for informing us that the necessity of encouraging the speedy construction of lines of railway through the North-West Territories has pressed itself on his Government, and that we shall be asked to aid railway enterprise by liberal grants of land.

That we feel with His Excellency that the urgent representations which have been made by the Boards of Trade of the chief towns in Canada, as well as by some of the Chambers of Commerce in Great Britain, of the necessity that exists for the adoption of some system of Bankruptcy or insolvency giving adequate protection against undue preferences, demand the earnest attention to this important subject which His Excellency invites us to give to it.

That we learn with much satisfaction that in pursuance of the vote of last Session His Excellency caused a vessel to be fitted out and dispatched to Davis' Straits and Hudson's Bay, in order to obtain more accurate information as to the navigation of those waters, and test the practicability of the route for commercial purposes, and that a report of the progress of the expedition during the last season will be laid before us.

That we thank His Excellency for informing us that an International Exhibition will be opened at New York during the present year, and that a Colonial and Indian Exhibition is to be held in London in 1886; that we agree with His Excellency in thinking that Canada should be represented in her various manufactures and natural productions on both occasions, and that we shall attentively consider the best means of aiding in these important objects.

That any other measures of importance submitted to us, including among them Bills to amend the Insurance Act of 1877, the Civil Service Act, and the law relating to contagious diseases among cattle, as well as measures for taking at an early period a census of the population of the North-West Territories, and one relating to the North-West Mounted Police, will receive our attentive and earnest consideration.

That we thank His Excellency for informing us that the accounts for the past fiscal year will be laid before us; and that we shall be glad to find that notwithstanding the very considerable reduction in the prices and volume of many of the leading imports, the income has exceeded the expenditure chargeable to consolidated revenues.

That we shall respectfully consider the estimates for the ensuing year to be submitted to us, and which will be found, we trust, to have been prepared with due regard to economy.

That His Excellency may rest assured that our earnest consideration will be given to the subjects he has mentioned, as well as to every matter which may affect the prosperity and good government of Canada.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. In rising to second the motion for an Address in reply to His Excellency's Speech, I beg the indulgence of the House while I make a few remarks. There is nothing contained in the Speech from the Throne which is more deserving of the attention of the House and the country than the reference made to the recent visit of the British Association to this Dominion. The presence in Canada of a body of such eminent men would, under any circumstances, be an advantage to the country at large, but coming as they did and meeting here, and afterwards visiting every portion of the Dominion, seeking to inform themselves as to the resources of our country with the same eagerness as they have displayed in prosecuting scientific enquiries in other countries, their visit gave to Canada a double advantage. We find that far from confining themselves merely to the objects of their meeting as an association they traversed this country from one end to the other acquainting themselves in the most thorough manner with its resources and capabilities; and having obtained that information they have carried it with them to England and to Europe generally, dispersing it in all directions in a manner most advantageous to this country, and in a mode by which, under no other circumstances, could the same advantages have been secured to this Dominion. The utterances of such men as visited this country with the British Association, such men as Sir Richard Temple, Professor Tanner, Professor Sheldon, Professor Gilbert, General Lefroy and others—for I have only mentioned a few of the most prominent—with the fact that they sought this information and gave it to the British public, cannot but be of immense advantage to us, because these men speak with authority. It is with no ordinary pleasure that I have had the opportunity of perusing some of the letters and speeches of those gentlemen since their return to the Mother Country, in which they have spoken in the most glowing terms of this great Dominion of ours, impressed as they were with our great agricultural and mineral resources—in fact, with all the great material resources of this country—to such an extent as thoroughly to surprise them; and I repeat that their views given to the public cannot but be of inestimable advantage to us. Indeed, I consider that nothing which has taken place in the history of Canada during the present century has been of more consequence to the people of this country than this visit, and it is an event which speaks well for the intelligence of Parliament and the Government in affording the association so much assistance in visiting the different parts of this country. There was nothing that struck me more forcibly—and I think it must have struck almost every one—than the contrast between the eloquent and truthful statements of these gentlemen—statements which were made and published by men unbiassed in the slightest degree—and some of the doleful utterances which have been spread broadcast through Canada itself. Sir, the contrast was so striking that it would be hard to pass over it without comment. These statements by members of the association came from men who are utterly without bias, and without any political ends in view. I think, Sir, that this country will ever remain under a debt of deep gratitude to these men who have spoken so well of us and have taken such pains, even at much cost and trouble to themselves, to find out what our resources really are, and what this Canada really contains. Now, Sir, the general condition of this country is spoken of in His Excellency's Speech. The revenue, we are told, will again give us a surplus. I rejoice, and the country must rejoice, that the days of surplusses are not yet gone by, and, Sir, this is the more gratifying when it is remembered that at the last Session of Parliament a considerable reduction was made in the taxation of the country. I refer principally to the tax on tobacco, which was reduced from 20 to 12 cents on the pound. This, with some other reductions, if I remember rightly, was estimated to cause a loss in the revenue of over a million dollars; and yet, Sir, we find, notwithstanding that, and in spite of the large expenditures made in the country, that the Government are able to meet Parliament with the announcement of a surplus. This is the first year that we have felt the effect of this great reduction in the taxation. We might also have expected a considerable diminution in the revenue from other causes. We know from the returns that the duties collected on spirits have been very much reduced, which I attribute to the greatly diminished quantity of spirits consumed throughout the length and breadth of the Dominion, owing to the general temperance sentiment which is happily now prevailing. I hope, Sir, it may long continue so. Now, Sir, while on the subject of revenue, I may be permitted to refer to what must be a cause of congratulation to this country—the loan effected in England last summer by the Finance Minister—effected on terms, I believe, never obtained by any colony before, and at a rate of interest lower than we ever had enjoyed up to this time. As to the details of that loan, whether it might have been for a larger amount, or whether it was the best which could have been obtained I say nothing; but this I do know, that eminent financiers on both sides of the Atlantic have pronounced it an admirable transaction; and I think it speaks well for the credit of this country, and should convince us that we are not going backwards, that such is the opinion of men best able to form a judgment on the matter. Now, Sir, the trade and commerce of the country have been referred to by His Excellency. It is true there has been a certain amount of depression common to this country with the United States and Great Britain; but, Sir, we have the consolation of reflecting that if there is a depression here, it is less trying and less damaging in every respect than in either the United States or England. Any person who reads the terrible accounts of the trade depression in England—of closing factories and unemployed operatives—and the same thing in the United States, and compares that condition of affairs with what exists in Canada, must at once be convinced that the trade of this Dominion, if depressed at the present time, at least rests on sound foundations. The trade of our country consists chiefly in fisheries, coal and other mineral products, agricultural and animal products, lumbering and manufacturing. From these we should find the best index of the condition of the trade of this country. Now, taking the six months ending the 31st December, 1884, I find that the exports of the products of the mines, as compared with the corresponding period in 1883, have increased $683,000, of animals and their products, $1,900,000, of agricultural products, $500,000, and of manufactures, $45,000; showing a steady increase in the value of our exports in these important branches of industry in which our people are engaged. This is convincing evidence that the tendency of the present fiscal tariff is to broaden and extend the base upon which our commercial prosperity must rest—that instead of having, as was the case when the former depression overtook the country, to depend solely upon our agricultural and mining interests, we have other industries which have been created by the present fiscal policy, to supply the deficiencies that existed. Now, Sir, with regard to our shipping interest. I come from a Maritime Province—a province which, I think, is the largest shipping province in the Dominion; and, notwithstanding the fact that there is a decrease amounting, I think, to some $20,000,000 in the value of the imports and exports of the Dominion during the past year, yet we find that the tonnage of the sea-going vessels, inwards and outwards, has largely increased. The increase, I find, amounts to 558,291 tons, showing that a larger quantity of goods has been moved during the year than previously; and the increase, compared with 1879, reaches the very large amount of 2,712,214 tons. This I take to be very strong evidence of the soundness of our trade policy; for I believe I am not wrong in saying that, according to eminent statisticians, there is no better evidence of the soundness of a country's trade than the extent of its inward and outward shipping. I find also that the coasting trade, notwithstanding the development of railways and low freights which have prevailed, has steadily and satisfactorily increased, that trade now amounting to 15,473,000 tons. These figures afford strong testimony to the healthy state of trade, particularly in connection with the shipping interest. I had my attention drawn the other day to a very excellent and clear statement made by Mr. Fairweather before the Board of Trade in St. John, N.B., in which he exhaustively discussed the question of inter-provincial trade. He gave figures which, I think, were unknown, or at any rate unappreciated, up to this time. From his statement we find that the trade between the provinces amounts to the very large sum of $16,271,332. Six years ago, before the introduction of the present fiscal policy, our inter-provincial trade amounted to only one-eighth of this figure. This is a remarkable and healthy state of affairs, and is clearly the result of the fiscal policy adopted at that time. From these figures we can draw our own conclusions as to what in the near future this trade must grow to. From the steady increases it has shown we may expect, when the great North-West is more fully connected with the Eastern Provinces, that an infinitely larger trade will spring up between them and that portion of the Dominion. Now, Sir, there is one fact in connection with our trade to which I may be permitted briefly to refer, and that is that the exports from the Maritime Provinces during the past year were much larger than the imports. I think the excess for consumption amounts to $2,137,000; that is the excess of exports over the imports entered for consumption; while on the other hand in the Western Provinces the imports very largely exceed the exports. For those who contend that the excess of exports over imports is evidence of a country's prosperity, these figures, I hope, will make them once and for all appreciate the value of the Maritime Provinces to the Dominion. When you add to that the fact that our vessels, sailing in every sea, manned by the expert and hardy mariners who belong to our provinces—when you reflect that those vessels are returning to this Dominion the freights earned by them, you will see that the Maritime Provinces are a still greater source of wealth to the Dominion. Shipbuilding is said to be on the wane; we were told that that industry would be ruined by the introduction of the present fiscal policy. Now, I am not in a position to speak for the other provinces, but I can say for Nova Scotia that, so far from that being the case, the tonnage is greater; I can say that, although the number of vessels has slightly diminished, the tonnage has actually increased. In 1883 the result of the National Policy was to show that in Nova Scotia we were building a much larger class of vessels. In 1883 we built 202 vessels with a tonnage of 35,765 tons; in 1884, while we only built 175 vessels, the tonnage was 42,000 tons, thus showing that so far from that industry diminishing it is on the increase. The tonnage is also—and that is another fact worthy of note—the largest tonnage since 1878. There are some other facts in connection with this matter to which I will refer further on. I will take now the fisheries, an interest also connected with my province, and I am happy to be able to congratulate the country on the fact that the catch of fish steadily increases. Thus, notwithstanding the decrease of prices, the total value of the catch last year exceeds that of the year previous by a million dollars. Now that is a satisfactory result for us in view of the fishing interest, and it bears testimony to the wisdom of the policy adopted by this House in giving bounties to fishermen. I find on reference to some reports that I hold in my hand that the effect of the bounty was to increase the number of vessels employed in the deep sea and in-shore fishing. Last year we had about 40 fishing vessels built in the county of Lunenburg alone. Another fact, which I also claim as proof of the wisdom of the policy of giving bounties, is that, in 1883, we had 902 vessels against 116 in 1882, an increase of 786 vessels, 26,711 tons, which increase was made up almost entirely from Nova Scotia, principally in the counties of Lunenburg, Shelburne, Yarmouth and Digby. Reference has been made in the Speech to the Hudson's Bay expedition. I have no doubt, from what we have learned on the subject, that even if that expedition does not realize all the happy results anticipated by this country—even if all the objects for which it was sent are not accomplished—and that we cannot know yet—it will, in the matter of fisheries, be a large gain to this country. From reports we have already received we find both in regard to the salmon and cod fisheries that the Hudson's Bay expedition will give us important information. In fact it has already shown us that in addition to the great sea pastures which we have, both in the Eastern Provinces and British Columbia, we will have one more very important field added in the north. A great deal has been said with reference to the treaties about to be made between the United States and Spain. While we would regret being excluded from any advantage we might gain by trading with the West India Islands on equal terms with our neighbors, yet we must not forget one fact, that we possess the great fisheries of this continent, and that the United States have not sufficient to supply their own consumption. From some figures I have, I find that, in 1884, the Americans exported $4,742,000 while they imported $5,579,000, showing that they actually have not enough for their own consumption, and that, should they make these treaties, they will have to look to us for their supply. In this connection I may be pardoned for referring to the Washington Treaty, and expressing a hope that, if, when the fishery clauses expire in June next, they cannot be renewed on as favorable terms as were obtained by our worthy chief, the Premier of this Dominion, at Washington, formerly, such measures will be taken as will guard and protect this our national heritage. I may be permitted to add one thing more. We have another industry in the Maritime Provinces which we trust may be protected at the same time. I refer to our great coal industries, and I cannot forbear expressing the hope that the United States may remove duties from the coal, thus enabling our great collieries to immensely increase their output. I hope for this, unless, indeed it would have the effect of raising the price of coal in Ontario by enabling the Pennsylvania coal owners to increase their price. I find that the total exports of animals and animal products for this year is some $24,500,000, making an increase of over $3,000,000 as compared with 1883, and that for the past six months the increase in this export is $1,875,000, showing a much larger increase than in the previous year. While on that subject and referring to the immense importance of that industry to the people of this Dominion—becoming, as it must, greater year by year as the North-West is more settled and developed—I cannot help alluding to the vigorous and wise action of my predecessor in the representation of Cumberland, Sir Charles Tupper, who so ably represents this country in England, and whose wise management has done so much to assist and improve this trade. Taking into consideration the large ranches now existing in the North-West and the millions of dollars that have been invested in that industry, we can hardly estimate the immense importance it is going to be to this country. But, Sir, there is one thing that we may anticipate. Perhaps it may be received with an incredulous smile by some persons, but I believe the day is not far distant, when communication is effectually made between the North-West and the Eastern Provinces, when we shall have the cattle bred and fed on those ranches in the North-West brought to the shores of the Bay of Fundy and fattened on the marshes which surround its borders, thus enabling them to be transported to England with the least loss of flesh, which is the great difficulty that now exists in bringing the cattle from so great a distance. The lumbering industry, it is true, is to a certain extent depressed. That is a matter which is beyond the control of any fiscal policy. What the Government could do has been done by enabling the lumbermen to obtain their supplies at the very lowest rates. On examining the returns, however, it will be found that the volume of exports from the forests is actually greater during the past year than in the previous year, while we know the price has been less. This is convincing evidence of the fact that our hardy lumbermen are receiving employment, although those interested in buying from them may not receive such large returns. It is also a matter of congratulation to us that the latest reports show that the market is rising. I find that the export of manufactures during the past fiscal year is greater than in the previous one, and during the past six months it has been proportionately larger than for the previous twelve months. This, Sir, shows that this important industry, the creation, we may almost say, of the National Policy, is not in such a depressed state as we were led to suppose. I can only refer, in support of this, to the remarks made by the Finance Minister recently in Toronto, as very satisfactory evidence on that point. He showed that the artisans have increased since the introduction of the protective policy 9,500 a year, while during the previous ten years the increase was only 6,500. Take that statement in connection with Bradstreet's, where we find that the decrease of artisans and mechanics in the United States was 130 for every 10,000, while in Canada it was only 65 in ten thousand during the same period. In the matter of immigration—although it is true that there is a falling off, owing, as His Excellency says, to various causes to which I need not now allude—we find that a much better class of substantial settlers is coming amongst us, and becoming permanent residents. I find the total number of immigrant settlers is, in round numbers, 100,000 for the past year. I think these few facts which I have been enabled to give to the House will verify the first statement in His Excellency's Speech, when he says that the "commercial prosperity, although it has to some extent shared in the depression which has prevailed in Great Britain and in the neighboring Republic, rests upon foundations which no temporary or partial disturbance can remove." Reference is made to the railways in the North-West. Now, Sir, we can all appreciate the immense value which the North-West is to this country. It is not for me to descant on that subject, but I do believe that, if the North-West is important to the Dominion, it is equally important that everything should be done by Parliament to help and develop that country. It is to be remembered that every extra cent of freight which the farmers have to pay for want of railway communication in that country handicaps them in the English market. The country can congratulate itself upon the near completion of the Canadian Pacific Railway, that great trunk line which we must regard as a national achievement of which every Canadian may be proud. I regard it as a work, not only of importance to Canada, but to England and to the Empire itself, and we may expect at no distant day that it will form the great highway from England to her Eastern possessions. While we are fully convinced that Parliament has done well to aid railways in the North-West, there are some railway matters in connection with the Maritime Provinces to which I beg leave to refer. Parliament gave large assistance to railway communication throughout the North-West, and at the same time some compensation to the Maritime Provinces was given by subsidising our railways. Respecting the construction of the road from the Intercolonial to Louisburg through the Island of Cape Breton, the House will learn with regret that the company have failed to carry out the object Parliament had in view. I am sorry to have to say that the people are suffering in consequence of the default of that company, but I trust I am fully justified in believing that ere the Session closes, such provision will have been made by the Government, either by negotiation or legislation, as will remove all cause of discontent and lead to the early completion of that road to the Port of Louisburg in Cape Breton. Now there are many other matters in the Speech, but I do not propose to allude to them at any length. The franchise, for instance, is of great importance to this country, and it is time that it should be dealt with. Having, as we now have, different franchises on which members are elected to this House, it is important those franchises should be made uniform, and any measure of that kind, I have no doubt, will have ample consideration. The revision of the Statutes, also, is a matter of great importance to the country. The subject of a bank-ruptey law, we must all admit, is a difficult one to deal with—a most difficult subject, indeed, to deal with. It has been found so in the United States; it has been found so in England; and I can only trust that any measure that may be brought forward in reference to that subject, will have a just and proper regard to the relations between debtor and creditor. The exhibitions at Antwerp and London are also matters of great importance to this country, and as they will be an excellent advertisement of the country's resources, it is our duty to encourage manufacturers and others to show the world what our country can do. In conclusion, Sir, I cannot forbear referring to the gratification we must all feel at finding still at the head of the Government of this country the distinguished leader of the Liberal-Conservative party, who, with undiminished vigor, is still able to sustain the responsibilities of his office. It was with feelings of gratification that the people of this country, from one end to the other, heard of the honors conferred upon him by Her Majesty; and I think I am safe in saying that throughout this Dominion the hope is indulged that he may long be spared to preside over, and guide, and guard the destinies of this great Dominion of ours.

Mr. BLAKE. I have to congratulate my hon. friends who have just addressed the House on the manner in which they have discharged their somewhat difficult and onerous task. It is true that we observed at some stages slight signs of hesitation, but upon the whole, if I were asked to say in what particular art of oratory they have most shown their abilities to-day, I should say it was in the euphemistic and hyperbolic style. We have heard an account of the country, we have heard an account of its progress and prosperity, we have heard an account of its condition, which we should be only too glad if we could adopt as correct, but which, unfortunately, from the point of view from which we look at that condition, from the facts which are visible to our eyes, from the accounts which reach our ears, we are utterly unable to assent to; and I must repeat my congratulations to my hon. friends, having undertaken the task of seconding and bettering the expressions in the Speech, that they have been able to go through their business with so much gallantry, and, upon the whole, with so little hesitation. I am sorry that we are met so late. I had hoped that after the promise made the Session before last, and which was very measurably kept last Session, we should have adhered to the notion of coming here as soon as our friends and colleagues from the most distant parts of the Dominion could reach Ottawa, after passing their Christmas week at home. I believe that that is the most convenient time for the discharge of the legislative business of the Dominion, and it is a very important thing for us that that business should be discharged at the period at which it can, with the least inconvenience to the country, and to the members who compose the Legislature, be discharged. I trust that we shall not on future occasions go further into the year than to-day, but rather that our future Sessions may commence at the time at which the hon. gentleman brought us together last year, if not a few days earlier. I join in the congratulations which have been addressed to the House in the gracious Speech, and referred to slightly by the hon. gentlemen who have moved and seconded the Answer, as to the abundant harvest which, no doubt, has been a very great blessing. I have not observed upon this occasion a repetition of those further eulogies with reference to harvests which have accompanied some former Ministerial utterances upon that subject. I recollect very well the occasion of a Ministerial demonstration in the western part of this province a few years ago—I think in honor of the Minister of Public Works—when a then member of Parliament representing an Ontario constituency, declared that he had voted for, and intended to support, the Government that had raised the price of wheat from 77 cents to $1.40. He did, I admit, vote for and support that Government, whether upon those or other grounds I know not. He was faithful, and he has received his reward. He no longer adorns these benches, at least during the sitting of the House, but he receives a handsome salary for inspecting the Colonization Companies of the North-West. I dare say, under similar circumstances, some other hon. members, with similar expectations, may be induced to say that the price of wheat is to-day satisfactory; but that stretch of audacity has not yet prevailed in this House. And we are told besides, in effect, that we are enjoying commercial prosperity as well as a good harvest; and the hon. member for Beauce (Mr. Taschereau), several times felicitated us upon the condition of the country. He opened his speech with felicitating us on our general prosperity, and he said he could not do better than close it with a repetition of the same felicitation. It is admitted, indeed, that we have a share, a slight share, a modest share hardly worth mentioning, to be mentioned only in a whisper at all events, in the depression which is said to prevail in the neighboring Republic and also in Great Britain. But we are told that we are ever so much better off than they are—the great exemplars of Free Trade on the one hand, and of Protection on the other. We have, I presume, reached the happy medium with respect to our fiscal policy. We are, I suppose, just right. They protect too much in the United States, and so their depressions are deeper; they protect too little in England, and so their depressions are deeper; but happy Canada, its financial destinies presided over by the hon. gentleman who smiles so blandly upon me, and who, no doubt, would smile in the same way on a platform in St. John, if he happened to be there to-day,—I say happy Canada has found the medium. She neither indulges in Free Trade nor does she indulge in Protection, and so, by consequence of that the depression is ever so much lighter. But there is a depression. It is now acknowledged. It was faintly denied last year. I remember, two or three years before, the hon. Minister of Finance prophesied—standing as he does on a great eminence, with means and sources of information not available to the general public, responsible as he is, at least to some extent for giving the tone and turn to public opinion, which is important in these respects—ten years of prosperity, and invited those who might trust in him to clap on all sail for that time and then to take it in. Last year he offered us a modified prosperity. Three years had elapsed so he did not offer us the ten years then; but he gave us seven years, to date from last Session. It was not absolute prosperity, it was not an all-sail kind of prosperity; you were to take in a reef or two, and if only you took in a reef or two, and were prudent, you would get seven years of prosperity. Well, we have had one year of the hon. gentleman's half-breed prosperity; we have had one year of going under reduced canvas, and I am afraid in too many instances with masts gone and running under jury masts, and in some other instances with wrecks on divers rocks and reefs, some of which were created by the hon. gentleman himself. I say we have had that little time, and now we are told that there is depression, but that it is only a modified depression. What a contrast that is to the ten years of full-sail prosperity, and even to the seven years of modified prosperity promised last year! What a contrast the condition of the country presents in the light of the promises made by the hon. gentleman just before the General Election of 1882! What do we hear to-day of the increasing industries which were to be established, provided he secured the verdict which the hon. gentleman solicited and which he obtained upon the faith of fallacious promises made in 1882? The hon. the First Minister speaking in Toronto, said:

"I tell you this, and this is not a matter of supposition but of certainty and knowledge on my part, that there are millions of dollars waiting to be invested in Canada, millions in England and large sums in the United States waiting to be invested in every kind of industry, in mines and manufactures of every kind."

And then a little later he said :

"All that is wanted by capitalists in Canada, England, and the United States, aye, in France and Germany, is to learn whether the country is of the fixed, constant opinion that the National Policy shall be continued as settled in 1878."

He promised us, not as a matter of speculation, not as a matter of expectation, not as a matter of belief, not as a matter of calculation as were the hon. Finance Minister's promises of continued prosperity, not as a matter of supposition, but of certainty and knowledge, that if he got the verdict which a few weeks afterwards he did get, we would see not merely a continuance of the existing industrial activity, not merely a continuance of existing industrial investment, but an enormous influx of capital in addition, to be invested in various industries. Where are they? I ask again, where are those millions which the hon. gentleman certified to us as a matter of absolute certainty would be here if he was retained in power? The gracious Speech assures us that our commercial prosperity rests upon foundations which no temporary or partial disturbance can remove. There is a sense in which I agree to that proposition. I am glad to do so, because I do not desire to move an amendment to the Speech. There is a sense, I say, in which I agree to that proposition. Such commercial prosperity as in this country we can enjoy does rest on permanent foundations. It rests on the land and on the sea. It rests upon the fertility of the soil, upon our agricultural products, upon our great timber resources, upon our minerals, upon our ships, upon our fisheries; but important and large as all these interests are, it rests, and will for many generations mainly rest in Canada, upon the land. And it depends, these being the foundations, upon the well-applied energy and industry of our people and the frugality of their expenditure. If those energies and abilities and that frugality are properly applied we shall grow in trade, commerce and manufactures. But the hon. gentleman obviously reads the Speech in another way. It is not upon these great foundations to which I have referred, which the hon. Finance Minister may indeed shape, which he may indeed to some extent interfere with, but it is upon Acts of Parliament that he thinks our trade and commerce and prosperity depend. We should, circumstanced as we are, having gone through a very long period of liquidation, of depression, of economy, during which all the weak houses in business were eliminated, and having made a fresh start a very little while ago, we should, in the natural and ordinary course of things, have had a right to expect, not indeed the Finance Minister's promised duration of prosperity, but we had a right to expect a very considerable number of years of extraordinary prosperity. That is what past events, and the experience of different commercial countries, would have indicated to us. What we have got is a too brief gleam of prosperity. What we obtained by the hon. gentleman's arrangement was not an increased permanence of that prosperity but an abbreviation of it. It has been contracted, its term has been shortened, and difficulties have been created by the system which he lauds as the very foundation of prosperity itself. How has this been done? Disturbances the hon. gentleman speaks of. He talks of temporary and partial disturbances. There have been disturbances not very partial but pretty general—not very temporary, for they have lasted a good while. There have been disturbances which he has created. There has been the disturbance of a high, an excessive taxation. There has been the disturbance of an unequal, an unjust taxation. There has been the disturbance of a sectional taxation. There has been the disturbance of an unnecessary amount of taxation. There has been an unnecessary withdrawal of the people's earnings from the conduct of the people's business. There has been a diversion and a lock-up of money, causing an entire loss and annihilation of capital as an effect of his policy. There have been great inflation and speculation promoted by the hon. gentleman's policy. There has been an unnatural stimulus administered to certain favored industries, giving to them a brief opportunity of fleecing the public with the higher rates they were enabled to charge while they were practical monopolies, and producing, natural, inevitable, predicted results at a time even earlier than we might have expected them. These disturbances are due not to visitations from on high; they are not due to the natural difficulties of our situation. They are due to the action of this Government and the preceding and present Parliament. It is natural, under the circumstances to which I have alluded, that the hon. gentleman should propose to press upon our attention a bankruptcy or insolvency law. It was the natural out-crop of his policy. He has delayed it as long as he could, but he feels that the situation is so serious that that measure must be brought into the prominence which all measures receive when they are introduced in the Speech from the Throne. We are told that Canadian boards of trade and English chambers of commerce alike have pointed out the necessity of such a measure. We were quite familiar with the views of Canadian boards of trade. They have been pressed upon us for more than one Session past. Strong representations have been made by the principal boards—the Montreal board, the Toronto board—and, I think, one of the hon. gentlemen from Montreal introduced last Session a Bill, based on a report or proposal by the board of trade of his city, and we know the active course which has been pursued by some of our western boards. They did not have much effect; but I observe by the papers that the First Minister has taken a trip to the other side of the water and has seen there some of the English chambers of commerce. The Finance Minister has also seen them, and I am glad to know that their representations have had more effect than the representations of our home-made boards of trade, and that they have given so much attention to the subject as is involved in suggesting its consideration in the Speech. The First Minister, indeed, in that country, in which it seems there is something in the air—I do not know what it may be—which makes our tongues wag a little wildly sometimes, told one of the chambers he addressed, that we were principally a rural population, with the prejudices of a rural population; that we naturally represented those prejudices ourselves, and of course there were difficulties in passing such a law. If we were an urban population, if we had the superior intelligence and knowledge of affairs which belong to urban populations, there would be no difficulty in the matter; but having only poor homespun country people for our constituents and representing them in this House, there were difficulties in carrying out the measure. However, he said he would do what he could with us; he would do his best to open our eyes and remove these scales of prejudice from our vision. And I suppose he has satisfied himself that if his influence is so great, and indeed I observe that the Secretary of State has said l'état, c'est moi—that he will do what he will—and I suppose from the utterances of the hon. gentleman that he has decided that he will do what he will in this matter. Now there were glorifications on this subject some time ago when, after a long period of depression, the threat of the removal from the Statute Book of the existing bankruptcy Act had frightened all the weak houses into, in some cases, premature assignments. We had pointed out to us as the effect of the policy of the Administration the short bead roll of the bankruptcies and insolvencies when they were something between six and eight millions for a period of three years. In 1883 they became heavy, though not so heavy as in the old days, and they became very heavy in 1884. The list of liabilities for 1883 was about $15,900,000 while for 1884 they were about $19,000,000, and these figures become still more remarkable when we look at the distribution of the bankruptcies by Provinces. Quebec has fared much better in this regard in 1884 than in 1883. The Province of Manitoba has fared better still, for if I rightly recollect its insolvency liabilities amounted to only about one-fourth of the liabilities for the year before. But the other Provinces, Ontario, Nova Scotia, New Brunswick and Prince Edward Island, present very different features. The liabilities for Ontario, in 1883, are stated at $1,700,000; for 1884, $9,600,000. Nova Scotia, 1883, $1,075,000; in 1884, $2,075,000. In New Brunswick, in 1883, the liabilities were $750,000, and in 1884, $1,675,000. The liabilities in Prince Edward Island in 1883 were $40,000, and in 1884, $150,000. In all cases I have given the round figures, and they make a gross result for 1883 in these four provinces of $6,550,000, and in 1884, $14,400,000, an increase of about 140 per cent. As to the numbers, I observe that the hon. First Minister the other day stated that we compared favorably in that respect with the United States. But that was a statement made on very inaccurate information indeed, because the number in proportion to the number of traders in Canada was one in fifty, while in the United States it was only one in eighty-four; and it would be difficult even for my hon. friend from Beauce (Mr. Taschereau) or my hon. friend from Cumberland (Mr. Townshend) to make out that that was a sign of comparative prosperity. The bank returns show similar results. The current commercial loans have decreased over eighteen and a-half millions between 1882 and 1884, and the larger portion has taken place in 1883. Overdue debts have more than doubled between 1882 and 1884. They were $3,190,000 in 1882, and $4,400,000 in 1883, and $6,440,000 in the year which has just expired. The circulation has decreased more than four and a-half millions between 1882 and 1884; public deposits have decreased about the same amount in the same period. Government deposits have decreased about one half—in fact we do not know where the money has gone. On the whole I maintain, notwithstanding the smooth phrases of my hon. friend, that the condition of the country in the large is one of dulness and depression; of stagnation, of short hours, of reduced wages, of reduced opportunities for working men, of lost capital, of vanished opportunities, of hard times generally, and hardest chiefly in those industries which were but a while ago the chief and prime glories of the hon. gentleman's fiscal policy. Take the cotton industry. In New York the First Minister was candid enough, I observe, to admit that there was a little trouble in cotton, but when he got to England he almost forgot the existence even of that trouble, and said there was a condition of tolerable general prosperity. Take the iron industry; take the sugar industry; take important branches of the woollen industry. I will give as an example the general production of knitted goods. All these were cases for the application of unbounded praise but a short time ago to the fiscal policy of the Administration, which had, it was said, revived and almost recreated these industries, and put them in a position of stability, permanence, and great prosperity. What is their condition to-day? What has it been for the past year? Does any man doubt that there has been an immense permanent loss of capital in the cotton industry? Does any man doubt that there has been an unproductive diversion of capital in that industry, as well as in the industry of knitted goods? There is another great industry—an industry which if you take the output, may be said to be almost the largest—the milling industry. I do not perceive that the millers are entirely contented with the present tariff. The degree of protection the hon. gentleman has given them does not seem to satisfy them. On the contrary, they seem to be so blind as to suppose that they are discriminated against. They are so foolish as to allege that there is a positive premium placed on the importation of flour in place of wheat from the United States; and I see that they are presenting a petition, whether to the Government or the Parliament I know not, asking that the duty on flour should be raised to a dollar a barrel, and I observe that the Finance Minister has more than once stated lately that serious consideration would have to be given to the difficulties of the milling industry. Having stated so much generally with reference to the condition of the country, I would allude again to the City of St. John. It is the constituency of the Finance Minister, and in its fate and fortune he is no doubt specially interested. I do not believe things have been so bad in the City of St. John for forty years as they have been in the last year, and I do not believe the hon. gentleman would find his old and faithful friends in that city rally around him in support of his policy as they might do in support of himself individually. I believe they have had amongst the saddest and most difficult experiences of the failure of the hon. gentleman's policy to do the great things which he promised it would do. Take the capital city of Nova Scotia, the City of Halifax, and ascertain what its condition is. Ascertain in each case what the condition of the specially-protected industry is. Look at the cotton industry of St. John; look at the cotton industry of Halifax, the sugar industry of Halifax, the West Indian trade of Halifax which this policy was going to do so much to develop. Go to the far West, and look at the City of Winnipeg, and what is its condition this year as compared with the last? Manufactures, of course, have not been developed there; but take the returns of Customs duties, of populations, of assessment, take the general condition of the people, and tell us whether Winnipeg has prospered. And so, whether you go to the far East or to the far West on this side of the Rocky Mountains, can you find prosperity? Take the old City of Quebec, and notwithstanding the statement of the hon. member for Cumberland that the timber and ship-building industries are flourishing in Nova Scotia, I ask what is the condition of these industries in Quebec? There is another view, however, not quite so pleasant, which the hon. gentleman overlooked when he told us of the change that has taken place in the system of construction of ships in Nova Scotia, and that is, that it is found that the ships of the tonnage formerly prevalent can no longer live, that they cannot do a business to keep them afloat, and that vessels of larger tonnage for longer voyages have to be constructed. There has been a change in the system owing to a change in the times. In the long struggle between steam and sail and between wood and iron, it is found that the only chance for wood must be in vessels of large tonnage and built for long voyages, and if so ships constructed before that change took place must be doing an unprofitable business. So, when the hon. member for Cumberland spoke of the large amount of tonnage employed, and said it was in an active condition, I must say he surprised me, because it is the common talk of the world that there has never been a time when tonnage was so unprofitable as it has been in the last year. It is certain that there has been a great over-production in the world's tonnage. It is also certain that freights were never lower and that ships are carrying freights at prices which cannot pay. It happened only the other day that there were tenders for carrying a certain lot of stuff from Liverpool to London, and an Atlantic liner agreed to carry it by way of New York for six shillings. That is the state of the shipping industry of the world when the hon. member for Cumberland finds cause for congratulation in the state of the shipping industry of Nova Scotia. The hon. member having told us that his province was flourishing so greatly, it was natural that out of the abundance of his heart he should have had regard for the poor Province of Ontario. I thank him for his consideration when, in expressing the hope that the article of coal should be admitted free into the United States, he coupled with it the reservation that he would have regard for the Province of Ontario, and that he should not like to have the price increased there by the removal of the present duty on that article imported from the United States. I do not know whether the hon. member's remark was serious or a joke. If a joke he will allow me to say that it was not a very good one; if serious, I will not waste time upon it. To go a little farther west than Montreal, take the town of Cornwall, one of the glories of the National Policy, a place the hon. Minister of Finance was good enough to visit shortly after the election of 1882, and find what the condition of the main industry in that town is. Go to the City of Kingston, to Cobourg, to Oshawa; go even to Toronto, which has exceptional opportunities of prosperity and growth, and which has fortunately only a few protected industries. It is true we have a couple. We have the bolt works, but they are shut up—yes, they bolted, as my hon. friend from East York (Mr. Mackenzie) says; we have also the glucose works, but they were never opened. Other industries we have, and they are in a happier condition. Then take Hamilton, Dundas, London, St. Catharines, Guelph, Chatham—it would be too tedious, Sir, to prolong the list, but with very few exceptions you will find that the story of the cities and towns and industrial centres of Canada is the same everywhere. It varies in degree, but it is the same in kind; it is one of difficulty and depression instead of life and animation. No wonder. The hon. gentleman, as I have said, has done what he could to disarrange the natural progress and growth of these industries, and we have in the lumbering industry, the farming industry and, notwithstanding the statements of the hon. member for Cumberland, the fishing and shipping industries, great sources of difficulty, owing to this process of disarrangement. You could not give that permanent prosperity you talked of, but you could take it away, you could shorten it, and that you have done. The Speech rather regrets than otherwise the diminution in imports, but it announces, I observe, that notwithstanding that circumstance and notwithstanding the lessened prices and volume of imports, the revenue exceeds the expenditure. At the close of the financial year a surplus was announced of about $1,600,000—$700,000 from the other sources of the revenue and $900,000, in round figures, from Dominion lands. The expenditure on Dominion lands was omitted, and I am afraid it was very large, but as the hon. gentleman charges it to capital account, he finds it is of no account at all. We borrow the money to pay for the expenditure on Dominion lands which I am afraid was about $700,000. This would leave a modest margin of $200,000 as the net revenue from Dominion lands instead of $900,000: or if you leave your revenue from Dominion lands intact, it would absorb the surplus from all other sources. Perhaps I am uncharitable, but I suspect the hon. gentleman of having put to capital account some of those railway aids which we have been granting so lavishly out of our revenues, from time to time, until to-day; and I shall look with some anxiety for the production of the Public Accounts to see whether this surplus, small as it is, compared with former surpluses which the hon. gentleman gloried in, is real or in large part fictitious. With reference to the question, adverted to in the Speech, of the lessened price of imports, it is to be remembered that that circumstance is not of such great importance under the present as under the old ad valorem tariff, because there is now a very large proportion of the duties specific, and you pay the same duty to that extent, however cheaply the goods may be bought. But this is also to be remembered, that your revenue—although you very nearly produce an equilibrium—is still very large. In 1879 and 1880 the imports were from eighty-two to eighty-six and a half million dollars, and the hon. Minister said they were too large and ought to be reduced. He said that one of the great sources of evil and difficulty in this country had been the expansion of imports; he congratulated us on their being down to these figures, but he wanted to break them down still further in order to make things safe and tidy and comfortable. Now in this year of reduced imports they are still $30,000,000 to $35,000,000 more than they were in the year when the hon. gentleman said they were too large, so that it is not for you, whose policy it was to make the imports smaller than $85,000,000, to congratulate yourselves, because they are $35,000,000 more than what you said was too much. If, on the one hand, the imports have decreased and the revenue has diminished, on the other hand the hon. gentleman is getting back slowly to his policy which was to have less than $85,000,000. But about the same time the hon. gentleman denounced the adverse balance of trade and gloried very much in the circumstance that in one year that adverse balance had been turned the other way, and I recollect well how the Ministerial organs generally crowed over that event. The good time had come and we were going to keep it up. We were going to keep up our exports and to keep down our imports. Well, that has not happened. At the time that the hon. gentleman said he did it, he had succeeded, in pursuance of his policy, in so arranging that he had, I think, one or two millions excess of exports over imports and he was happy. But if his policy is to be measured by his statement at that time, what sort of value must be given to it when there is an adverse balance of $25,000,000? In 1878 he declared $13,000,000 was about the sum required for Customs duties to carry on the public service, and in 1881 he gloried in having obtained a revenue of eighteen and a-half millions, which was a very handsome revenue and produced a very large surplus. This year the hon. gentleman has a Customs revenue of more than twenty millions, or more than one and a-half million greater than in the year 1881, when he got this eighteen and a-half millions which produced so large a surplus as the surplus of that year. Yet we learn now that the hon. gentleman almost seems to regret the revenue is reduced, and says that notwithstanding its reduction he is still able to produce a modest surplus. Well, I admit the growth of Canada in one respect; we have grown in many things, in various degrees, but there is one thing alone in which it may be said we have grown enormously—a growth, I think, almost too great to be natural and wholesome, though the hon. gentleman has thought differently. What I refer to is the amount of money we take out of the people in the way of Customs—an amount which has increased 50 per cent. Whether we have grown equally in any other respect, except in our ability to extract from the people their national life, I leave to the most ardent supporters of the Government, not to assert but to establish. Our public debt has increased very largely; we shall get the account very soon. With the engagements of the year preceding, and looking to those engagements which are to be added in the coming year, it is clear that there must be an increase of the public debt to a very large extent. That general result affected our credit. Notwithstanding the great commendation of hon. gentlemen opposite on the great loan, we find it drags; we find that it is a drug in the market; we find it stated in an important London paper the other day that a portion of it was taken by a few persons who hold it still, as they have been unable to unload. And that is the condition of things, arranged by the hon. gentleman, in which we have to effect the important operation of exchanging a very large proportion of our 5 per cent. debt in a very few months. I hope, however, Sir, that whatever else the hon. gentleman may have done with reference to our finances, he has been more careful of his investments than he was last year. I trust he has not invested any more money in banks like the Exchange Bank, and that no item of that description will reappear in our Public Accounts as an investment. All the circumstances which have since become manifest to the general public with reference to the disgraceful management of that institution throw light upon what ought to have been the conduct and the policy of the Administration, when they lent, under the peculiar circumstances under which they did lend, that sum at the time at which they did lend it; and I cannot but conceive that the hon. gentleman will have a very difficult task, even in this House and to this House, in vindicating, with that added light, his conduct in that transaction. We seem to have stopped a good many gaps. We seem to have filled up many voids. We seem to have handed over to Mr. Craig some $100,000 I think it was, and I suppose that settled that little gap that was made in that anomalous account which placed a sum of $6,500, I think it was, to the credit of the Conservative election committee. I forget which division of Montreal it was, but I dare say the hon. member to whom it belongs will rise and say. Now, Sir, it was in this state of things with reference to the country that the First Minister in England in November last declared that at that juncture there were no industries materially suffering and that every industrious man could get a good day's pay for a good day's work. It is indeed quite true that the hon. gentleman has assumed a new rôle. Who does not remember the diatribes that were uttered against my hon. friend from East York (Mr. Mackenzie), and those who acted with him when they modestly said that they thought it was of some consequence to Canada that it should be a cheap country to live in? Who does not remember that we were almost told it was a disreputable thing to have a cheap country to live in—cheap and nasty—that what was wanted was a dear country to live in and plenty of money to pay the high prices? That was the argument, and it was said that the argument to the contrary, of its being of some consequence that the prices of commodities should be low and that people should pay as little as possible for what they wanted, was a despicable argument, an argument to be swept away by hon. gentlemen opposite. But it is his argument to-day. He repeats on two occasions the statement that we are suffering to-day from too great plenty. There is too much wheat in the country and so wheat and flour are too cheap; there is too much cotton in the country, enough for three times as many people as there are, and so we are suffering because cotton is too cheap; and so forth and so forth. Well, in part, of course, this is due to that general reduction of values which the hon. gentleman mentions in the Speech itself, which he declares exists, and which applies necessarily to imports and, by reflex action, to a considerable extent to home manufactures. For example, sugar. I read the report the other day of the Connal stores in Glasgow for the close of the year, and I find from it that for the last few weeks of the year a fair quantity of yellow sugar was retailed in Glasgow at a penny a pound, and it was not due to the fiscal policy of Great Britain, in the way of protection at all events, that that was achieved. But I hear hon. gentlemen talking about relatively cheap sugar, not relatively cheap as compared with the price in England, but as compared with the price here a little while ago, and declaring that this is the result of their fiscal policy here. But the effect of these values being reduced, as far as their policy has affected them, is that, instead of there being a slaughter of the foreign goods to the prejudice of the foreign maker, there is a slaughter of the domestic goods to the disadvantage of the domestic maker. We have brought to our own doors, to our own homes, and amongst ourselves an unnecessary and abnormal degree of demoralization of trade, of depression of values, and of difficulty. The consumer is reaping a temporary advantage, it may be, which we know will not be a permanent one, which will very soon be disposed of; but, in the meantime what has happened to the industries the hon. gentlemen were so anxious to protect and secure, and to the workingmen whose wages are reduced, whose numbers are diminished, whose hours of remunerative toil are shortened? What is wanted in some of these industries is a blessing of some kind or another. There are natural blessings which may relieve the hon. gentleman. A flood or a fire would relieve him. If we could sell some of our surplus cotton manufactories to an insurance company, it would relieve him. If we had a violent storm of some kind that would carry them away, that would help the thing a little bit. Short of that, if what we hear is to be believed, we want a ring or a combination by which half the machinery can be kept idle and the other half worked; by which the operatives may be cut off to the extent of one half in numbers, the rest worked, and the general consumer may be obliged, by the effect of the high tariff, to pay such a price as will remunerate the capitalist in respect, first, of the mill he is working, and, secondly, of the mill he is keeping idle. These are the things we want, and in regard to cotton and knitted goods I observe that there is some hope of something of the kind being accomplished. It is a difficult matter to accomplish, it takes time to arrange, and afterwards very often it is broken. Still, it is getting along, and by means of these natural or these artificial blessings it is possible that the hon. gentleman may be able to report some improvement in some of these industries on some other and happier day. While this is the condition of matters, we hear nothing now about the foreign trade. Oh, I beg the hon. member for Cumberland's pardon—we did hear a little of it from him—we heard that the export of manufactures had increased by $43,000 over the previous year. Has the hon. gentleman taken the average of the years before the present fiscal tariff and compared it with the average of the years under the present tariff, which was to develop our manufactures, and promote our trade? If he does so, he will find the comparison gives a very different result. I know not the figures for the last six months. No doubt he has stated them correctly, but the excess which he gives, not an excess over the figures of the old days, but an excess over those of 1883, is no indication of the improvement of trade. We heard in the past a great deal of the efforts made to encourage trade with foreign nations. We have appointed High Commissioners, first one and then another, specially to accomplish that object. We have had missions to France, Spain and elsewhere with the same view. As yet, however, there has been no result that we can ascertain, and I am entitled to assume, in the absence of any statement to-day in the Speech from the Throne, that there is no result—that there is nothing to be communicated to us. So with reference to that which is of course also foreign trade, but which naturally assumes an exceptional prominence in our eyes—reciprocity with the United States—we hear nothing except the statement that we are not to move, that we are to do nothing, that we are not to approach them, that we must wait until they approach us. It was our view, and we emphasised it last Session by a vote, that the expiry of the articles of the Washington Treaty rendered it prudent to enter into negotiations with the United States upon the subject of the fishery arrangements between the two countries, and in connection with that the subject of reciprocal trade between the two countries. The hon. gentleman caused that resolution to be amended; he declared it was inopportune, and the policy of masterly inactivity seems to have been pursued until now. We drifted along without effort, that we know of, that we are told of, to secure better relations than are likely to occur from the policy of drifting. Now the hon. gentlemen who have spoken, having found grounds for congratulation as to the past, and as to the present, found it very easy to be congratulatory as to the future. I am not surprised that when they were able to felicitate us upon our present condition they should come to that conclusion with reference to our more immediate future; and I hope that the early apprehension by the public of Canada of the fallacy of the views of the hon. Finance Minister, their early reaching the conclusion that he was not a trustworthy guide, the determination which they evinced—not, indeed, until after there had been, under his advice, an unhealthy expansion, a diversion of capital from which we are suffering to-day, but still much earlier than we would have expected them to do—their reaching, I say, the conclusion that they must retrench and draw in, will enable us to pass through what one hon. gentleman called the present crisis, and pass through the present period of depression, at any rate, within a period of not very protracted length nor of very great severity. But I do not believe that there are indications which would render it justifiable in the Legislature of this country, in members of Parliament, or in Ministers, to invite the commercial and the general community to launch out at this time. I believe that we have before us a year of considerable difficulty; I believe we have before us a year in which it will be requisite to exercise the virtues of prudence, of frugality, and of retrenchment in public and in private affairs, and that the true advice to give to the people is what I have just now suggested—not to befool them with statements as to their immediately returning into the state from which they have recently gone, but rather to point out the true method by which it is alone possible to hope for a recurrence of good times. I am quite aware that the hon. gentlemen opposite, many of them, denounce statements of this description, that they declare that they are unpatriotic, that they declare that it is wrong to deal with facts as they present themselves to the mind of the speaker, if those facts are not grateful to their ears; but I believe that it is our duty not to exaggerate but to state facts, and the conclusions from them, as we really understand them, and that honest advice of that description is what we owe to our country; and, therefore, notwithstanding these denunciations, I am determined, for my part, to “tell the truth and shame—the Tories.” Now, Sir, the second paragraph of the Speech deals particularly with Manitoba and the North-West; and some later paragraphs with railways there and with the financial status of the Province. I am very glad to hear the account of the well-being, the hopefulness and content of the settlers there, which are said to have been manifested to the visitors from the British Association. We all cheerfully voted the supplies which were asked from this Parliament in order to carry out the projected visit of the British Association; we were all very glad that it took place; we all expected considerable benefit from it, and there was no dissenting voice as to the pecuniary arrangements that the Government proposed upon that occasion; but it did strike me as one of the most cogent proofs of the excellence of the hon. member for Cumberland, in that particular part of oratory to which I referred, namely, hyperbole, that he should have declared that no event in the history of Canada during the present century has been so important, or redounded so much to its advantage, as the visit of the British Association. I remember in my own experience a good many things, and I have read of many more which I conceive to have been of infinitely greater importance to our country, which have conduced more to its credit and prosperity than the visit of some two hundred, or whatever the number may have been, of eminent British gentlemen, could by any possibility do. Now, Sir, the expectations of immigration, it is said, have been disappointing but by the hon. gentleman's account, not so very much so. He says about 100,000 came in. I shall not enter into the controversy which is going on from Session to

Session as to the accuracy of these figures. We will get them, and they will be analysed in due time. But extravagant expectations of immigration were, no doubt, entertained. At one time we hoped great things from the railway company and we were told when the contract was let that one of the burdens from which the country would be relieved was that of getting immigration into the North-West, because the railway company would do that for us. I have not observed, in any accounts that I have received, any large expenditures, as yet, by the Canadian Pacific Railway Company upon immigration, but I do observe per contra that our own expenditures have been very largely increased, and this year they will be found considerably to have exceeded half a million of money. Notwithstanding that glowing picture which the Speech gives of hopefulness, well-being and content in Manitoba and the North-West, I am obliged to reiterate the view that there have been great blunders and errors in the policy of the Administration, with reference to that country; that the railway monopoly, the policy as to other lines in Manitoba in the earlier years after the contract with the Canadian Pacific Railway Company, the locking up of large blocks of lands, the speculative sales which were made, and the operation of the tariff, have all been extremely adverse to the creation and permanent existence of that condition of hopefulness, well-being and content which we all agree is so essential to the growth of that country and the prosperity of Canada at large, dependent, as it is, for its prosperity upon the prosperity of the North-West, so great is the stake it has taken in that country. The hon. member for Cumberland pointed out in a sentence that fact. He says one cent on a bushel of wheat to the farmer of the North-West is of the greatest importance; we must not handicap him in his effort to get his wheat to the markets of Europe. That is the great difficulty. That is the difficulty which we have got to combat, a difficulty largely of our own creation, in view of the policy of the Government with respect to the whole Canadian Pacific Railway. The anxiety of the people of that country to obtain some other mode of communication, their anxiety to reach Europe by some other means, cutting off us of the East by a short run to Hudson's Bay, their proposals with respect to the expenditure, the zeal which they display in pressing the construction of that railway, are to my mind the strongest evidences of the feeling that must exist there, as to the vital importance of procuring some other means of communication or some competition with respect to moving their produce. I was very sorry to hear—I suppose it was a half inspired utterance—from the hon. member for Cumberland (Mr. Townshend), when, in referring to the expedition to Hudson's Bay he told us that whatever difficulties it might have evidenced as to its primary object, the establishing of the possibility of a route between the North-West and Europe, we had at all events to congratulate ourselves more than to console ourselves with the reflection that we had found a new salmon fishery. That will, indeed, be balm to the people of the North-West. I am very glad under these circumstances to hear, and I hope it is not now too late, that a liberal land policy with respect to railways in the North-West is about to be adopted. When the Pacific Railway Company was chartered we were told that it would supply us with branch lines; that a very large proportion of the land grant was to be taken in districts off the main line, and that interest and policy would necessitate their building the branches; and in the earlier days, after the execution of that contract, they adopted that view themselves and they projected very lengthy lines—I cannot now give you the mileage, but in one year the projects transmitted to the Minister covered more than one thousand miles of branch lines. But a change took place in their policy and in the policy of the Administration, and it was determined to make it the primary object, to the exclusion and sacrifice of the branch lines, in the meantime, to finish the ends of the main line; and so, although something has been done by the company in that direction, something where it was necessary perhaps to meet competition, something where it was necessary to push to one side rival enterprises, something where it was necessary to provide another means of connection with the second line of the St. Paul, Minneapolis and Manitoba Railway, yet what has been done in that direction has been trifling compared with the expectations which were held out to us, trifling compared with their own projects as laid before us years ago. I cannot blame them,—this policy having been adopted—because if all the resources they possessed, if all the money they could borrow and raise, were to be devoted to the construction of the ends of the line, it was clear there could be nothing left for the branches. One observation only I will make. Long ago, in the last Session, I think, of the Parliament of the hon. member for East York (Mr. Mackenzie), a proposal was made to grant liberal aid to local railways. That proposal has been the subject of much animadversion and criticism on the other side. Hon. gentlemen were going to do the thing a great deal better; they were going to help the railway companies and at the same time make money out of it; they would not give the land away, not they; they would sell it at $1 per acre and the company would make $1 or $1.50, and so both the railways would be benefited and the Public Treasury replenished. But now we find free grants are to be given to railways. I will add this caution to hon. gentlemen opposite. I hope, whatever arrangement is made with any railway for a free grant of land, it will be coupled with such restrictions as will secure those lands being open for settlement at fixed moderate prices. I maintain that that is of vital importance. We have suffered enough in the North-West from not keeping that before us as a leading, cardinal principle in the land and railway policy of the country. To repeat that policy now would be more than a blunder; it would be a crime. I hope that the golden dream has not altogether vanished, and that it is not too late for the Government to have awakened to the necessities of the situation, because I have always believed that the rapid settlement of that country demanded numerous railways through it, and I stated in my place here years ago, that you might as well talk about rapidly settling the North-West with one cart road as with one railway. The hon. First Minister has not upon this occasion said anything in the Speech about the Canadian Pacific Railway Company—and for this much thanks. We were a little afraid there might be an announcement made to us. We were reassured by a statement made that the company had, during a certain period, made $800,000 or $900,000 of net profits. We were reassured by a statement that out of those profits the company would be able to pay its February dividend in excess of the guarantee dividend, $625,000, making a profit to investors in that enterprise of from 11 to 12½ per cent., according to the rate at which they acquired their security. We are glad to know by this fortunate omission in the Speech that we will not be called upon to put our hands into our pockets again. We are glad to know that no demand for further help will be made; we are glad to know that the second final settlement is final, at all events for this Session, and that we have therefore nothing to apprehend in that direction with respect to the Canadian Pacific Railway. But while that is so, I had expected that the circumstances of the road, its approaching completion and the great through trade that is about to be developed, would have been the subject of a glorifying paragraph. I had really expected that when the hon. gentleman could extract so much sunshine from cucumbers as he has done with respect to those matters which he has put into the Speech, he would have certainly found, particularly when we regard the floods of oratory which we have heard within the last few weeks on this subject, something in regard to the completion, before we next met, of the great Canadian Pacific Railway and its through trade, and the new impetus which is to be given to Canada. And the hon. member for Cumberland (Mr. Townshend) felt there was an omission there, and he bettered the Speech by himself introducing the subject, and pointing out to us that the road was going to do great things for us, of which the Speech does not tell but of which orators tell us. I hope it may be so. I hope the trade will be quite as large as the hon. gentleman depicted, and quite as profitable; but still I would have had a stronger assurance had I found it certified by Ministers whose every prediction has hitherto been verified to the letter. There is one point on which I should like to have heard something, and that is with respect to the grades in the Rockies and the Selkirk Range. The time has now arrived when Ministers must have settled and approved the route of the road. I have more than once called their attention to the fact that the reports of engineers indicated that grades could not be obtained within the contract, and that there was no power to approve grades heavier than those specified in the contract. I trust no violation of the law has taken place, and that no grades have been approved or sought to be approved in excess of those which Parliament sanctioned, because it seems to me that a grave breach of the duty of the Administration to Parliament will have been committed, as well as a course taken which may be, in the future, extremely prejudicial to the permanent interests of the railway, if that result has taken place. Nor do we hear anything this time about the colonization companies. I am sorry for that. I had hoped to hear they had paid their instalments and that the Treasury was getting filled from their resources. Instead of that, a rumor is in circulation that they are calling for relief. It is actually said that they talk about a change; that they require some modification in their position, and that they make the change in the policy of the Government with regard to branch railways a basis for their application. They say, if you are going to give branch railways lands free along their roads, the companies will sell them at prices at which people who have free lands can sell them and make a handsome profit; and how shall we make a profit when we have to pay for our lands which will come into competition with these free lands at the disposal of railway companies, and therefore as you have conceded it for the others, so you should for the colonization companies. Under these circumstances it is to me a great pleasure and satisfaction to refer to solemn estimates, to ascertain and carefully calculated results, to feel that whatever difficulties may sometimes oppress my mind and make me rather gloomy as to the financial results of the lands in the North-West, we know that the Government, on an occasion when they were calling upon Parliament to take an important step, when they were demonstrating the consequences of that step, took their officers into their confidence, and obtained from them statements which reassured my sinking spirits. On the 4th of May, 1883, the late hon. Minister of Railways was about to address the House on the subject of the Canadian Pacific Railway, and on that day, doubtless with a view of confirming his own statements—as if those statements should need confirmation—read a letter from the first officer of the hon. First Minister, which letter the late Minister of Railways read in the House, and which I have read several times in the last few months, whenever I felt low spirited about the financial results of the sales of our lands in the North-West. That letter is as follows:—

“OTTAWA, 4th May, 1883.

“SIR,—Having given the subjects my best and fullest consideration”—

You see how careful he was, Mr. Speaker—

“I estimate that the receipts of this department from the sale of agricultural and coal lands, timber dues, rents of grazing lands, and sales of mineral lands other than coal, with the royalties from the minerals, between the 1st January 1883, and the 31st December, 1891, both inclusive,"—

Mark you the precision of detail. The 1st of January and the 31st December, were both included in the calculation—

"will amount to not less than $58,000,000.

"A. M. BURGESS."

That, Sir, is testimony which makes me feel happy under the most desperate circumstances. We are sorry to observe that the receipts from Dominion lands this year do not quite come up to the proportion. In fact, I am not aware of any particular year in which they may be said to have reached those figures. But doubtless the hon. gentleman was just stooping to conquer. He was withdrawing only to make the better leap, and what little has been done in the way of permitting arrears to accumulate in the North-West lands will be made good; the assurance given to Parliament by the Ministry will be implemented, and our debts will not only be paid but we will have a handsome revenue from the sale of North-West lands—between the 1st of January, 1883, and the 31st December, 1891, "both inclusive." But while I feel thus assured as to the West, while I stick to my text and insist on its accuracy in spite of all difficulties, I am not so certain about the Eastern part of our expenditure. One of the hon. gentlemen who have addressed the House—in fact both of them—alluded to the East. The hon. member for Beauce (Mr. Taschereau) said something about one East and the hon. member for Cumberland (Mr. Townshend) said something about another farther East, and it seems we have not received any assurance or statement as yet as to the effects of the policy of last Session in the East. What of the Short Line route? What of the Bill of last Session for reaching the city of Quebec? As to the arrangement for reaching that city, one alternative of that arrangement was to take effect, if at all, within six months after the passing of the Act; the other within twelve months. I do not know whether the fatal hour has struck, but at any rate it approaches very nearly, and we begin to be anxious about the arrangement in that regard. As to the route of the Short Line we really thought last Session that we had something to say about it. Some of us were audacious enough to suggest that the people's representatives should have an opportunity of deciding whether the view of the Government, after receiving the report of a competent engineer, was good or not, and that the route should not be finally fixed by executive action. We were pooh-poohed. My hon. friend who sits close to me tested the sense of the House on that view, but his motion was denied, the Government resisting it, and we were refused the opportunity. But I see something in the newspapers, which always are accurate, that seems to indicate that after all my hon. friend was not so far wrong. I see that something was said by the First Minister, and corroborated by the Minister of Public Works—as if the statement required corroboration—in the city of Three Rivers, in the county which he so ably represents, indicating that we were to see the surveys, that we were to have some opportunity of dealing with the selection of the route. Clearly then the decision which was reached last Session was a wrong decision under the circumstances. To what do we owe this new light on the part of the hon. gentleman? Was it to reconcile his supporters, or what, that, having us completely in his hands, having procured from this confiding Parliament the consent that he asked for, he should now say that he will be gracious enough to permit us to do our duty in the matter? From the hon. member for Cumberland (Mr. Townshend) we learned that nothing has been done in the far East, and that the counties of Cumberland and Fictou are in a sad condition by reason of that failure. Now that surprises me. I begin to lose faith in assurances, however plausible. I had myself doubts about this matter; I expressed them frankly as I always do. I questioned the hon. gentleman's predecessor, the late hon. Minister of Railways, as to whether he had satisfied himself that the companies were all right, that they were solvent, that the matter was bonâ fide, and the Minister of Railways assured me, with every positiveness, that it was all right, that he had satisfied himself as to the bonâ fides and good standing of the corporations, and that everything was going through. Now, the hon. gentleman from Cumberland says that his predecessor was all wrong. He assures me that nothing—no, that some small work has been done, which has not been paid for, and that the poor laborers lack, and the store keepers lack, and they call on the Government whom they have faithfully supported in two elections, notwithstanding the offer held out to them of a railway through the country—they call on the faithful Government to pay these debts and procure the construction of this railway. And has it not gone to Cape Breton either? We had a positive assurance on that point, too. My hon. friend from Digby (Mr. Vail) declared that he thought that the amount was too small, and I was obliged to say to him that the Minister of Railways had told us it was enough and that the work was going to be done; that if we wanted more money to spend on railways we should spend it where it was wanted, but not to ask us to take more money out of the Treasury than was needed to secure the railway. Is the hon. gentleman serious in saying that no arrangement has been made for the building of that railway? Whom shall I believe? As to the Manitoba settlement, I am glad to hear that there has been another final settlement in that Province. But I want to know if it is final for this year, or really finally final. There are some things which it is utterly impossible to settle finally. You cannot provide finally with reference to that Province on the population basis. And with regard to that question, I suggested, two or three years ago, that there should be more frequent censuses to regulate the adjustment of the population subsidy to that Province. But, apart from that, there was no reason why these matters should not have been settled once for all. I see, however, that the hon. gentleman declares that we shall have a Bill to confirm the settlement as soon as the Local Legislature has accepted it. Therefore, I presume that the Province will be called upon to deal with the matter in the first place, and I am not called upon to pronounce upon the merits of this settlement until the details shall be laid before us. But I am very glad to see that the hon. gentleman has succeeded again in conciliating his stern opponent, the Premier of that Province, and actually capturing his confidence. We are treated with the statement, for the third time repeated, that we are to have a Representation Bill, and I suppose the third time is the charm, because twice before we have had it up to a certain point, but no farther. I trust, however, that as the story goes that this is to be a very short Session, the hon. gentleman will have reconsidered the provisions of that measure as introduced on two former occasions, and that he will have taken heed to the objections rather suggested than elaborated; because it was not proper that the measure should have been fully discussed until the hon. gentleman opened that discussion by an expository speech in introducing the measure, which he has never yet made, and that the measure introduced will be more satisfactory than the former one was. For my part, I declare my unswerving adhesion to the view, notwithstanding the statements of the hon. gentlemen who have spoken on this occasion, that simplicity, economy, convenience and the public welfare are to be served most by our adopting, until there is some good reason given to the contrary, the franchises of the Local Legislatures. I shall not anticipate that question, but I maintain further that a measure which proposes, as the former measures of the hon. gentlemen proposed, that persons to be appointed by the executive of the day shall practically control the revision of the voters' lists, is a measure that should not be accepted by a free and independent Parliament.

It being six o'clock, the Speaker left the Chair.

After Recess.

Mr. BLAKE. The hon. member, Mr. Speaker, was very much pleased with the paragraph in the Speech with reference to the question of Chinese immigration, and thought it evinced great care and great diligence on the part of the Administration in the prosecution of their duty. I am not surprised that the hon. member for Cumberland, who is new to this House, should have apprehended the state of the case somewhat differently from the way in which some of us are disposed to look at it; because I find in the Commission to which reference is made in the Speech that a most inaccurate recital has been made of the facts of the case. That Commission, speaking from memory, as it was published in the papers, was issued upon a report of the First Minister to the effect that a motion which had been made in this House on the subject of Chinese immigration had been withdrawn upon a pledge made by the Government that they would issue such a commission. Now, this is wholly incorrect, and I am astonished that the hon. gentleman should have so soon forgotten the events of the Session, or that he should have trusted to his memory, and not have referred to the record. It is quite true the hon. gentleman used his most persuasive tones to induce the withdrawal of the motion. It is quite true he asked my hon. friend, who is a supporter of his, and who was pressing on the motion very earnestly, to withdraw it, but he was not successful on that occasion. The hon. gentleman insisted, and the First Minister then proposed some slight modification of the terms of the motion, or of the amendment moved by the hon. member for North Grey (Mr. Allen), and with that amendment the motion passed. So far then, from this Commission issuing upon a pledge of the Government, the fact is that we unanimously resolved "that in the opinion of this House it is expedient to enact a law restricting or regulating the incoming of Chinese into the Dominion of Canada." That was the state of the case at the close of the Session; that motion was carried with the assent of the Government; and now we are informed that a Commission has been issued, that the report is nearly ready, and that it will be presented to us during the Session, which I suppose is intended to convey to those interested in this subject that they shall see the report, but that the measure which the House agreed should be brought down, and which it was understood should be brought down this Session, will not make its appearance. I do not think, Sir, the report ought to be delayed. There is one member of the Government at any rate—the hon. Secretary of State, who also fills the position of Commissioner—who cannot admit the necessity of delay. Therefore, I hope, the report will come, not during the Session merely, but at once, so that we shall be in a position to grapple with the question in accordance with the resolution of the House to which I refer. The hon. member for Cumberland paid a very natural and graceful compliment to his predecessor—whom he will permit me to say we miss from his place this Session. His disappearance from that place is the practical result of the view taken by this side of the House last Session. We insisted that the holding of the two positions which that gentleman then held was inconsistent, inconvenient and improper. My hon. friend from Bothwell (Mr. Mills) moved a resolution indicating that it should not be continued; the hon. gentleman resisted it, and his usual majority sustained him; but immediately, at the close of the Session, the position we took prevailed, and the holding of the double office ceased. The office of Minister of

Mr. BLAKE.

Railways has not since been filled for now a long time—for more than two years, if we except the actual period of the Session, during a considerable portion of which it was the opinion of a large number of the members of this House that the office was not filled either—at any rate by a member of Parliament—there has been no Minister of Railways practically. It is of some consequence to us, particularly when important transactions are taking place with reference to the Pacific Railway route and other matters, that there should be a Minister of Railways. It is of some importance to us to know who should be the successor of the late Minister of Railways. It is of little consequence when a Robitaille succeeds a Robitaille, but it is of some consequence who should be the successor of the late member for Cumberland. Now, we are promised some measures, mostly of an amendatory character—measures to amend the insurance law, the Civil Service Act, a contagious diseases measure, a North-West census measure, and a measure in relation to the North-West Mounted Police. These are indicated to us as some of the principal subjects of legislation of the Session. But we find on both sides of the House—the hon. member for Cornwall and Stormont has shown that he found it too—that certain measures which were promised once or twice before are not mentioned. There is no factory Bill promised, though, like the franchise Bill, it adorned former Speeches from the Throne. The franchise Bill survives, but we cannot say, in this instance, that it is the survival of the fittest. The factory Bill seems to have disappeared, obviously, as the hon. member for Cornwall and Stormont thinks, for good. It is not among the alia, the other things which it was not thought worth while to mention in the Speech from the Throne, but which are to be brought forward as special plums in the pudding. Nor do we find anything more promised to the North-West than the census. I had hoped some measure would have been promised for the representation of the North-West Territories. That question was discussed in both branches of the Legislature last Session. My hon. friend from Huron (Mr. Cameron) brought in a Bill to provide for representation in the Territories, but the hon. gentleman does not see fit to offer them representation, and tells them instead he will count their numbers. Nor is anything said with reference to the grand schemes of which the hon. Minister lately declared himself a supporter. We had some reason to expect that when a gentleman in his position had announced, in his view, the importance of these schemes, they would, at any rate, have been brought forward in that Speech. But upon them nothing is said. I shall not, under these circumstances, discuss them, but I cannot pass by the occasion on which the hon. gentleman made statements on these subjects without protest, for my part, with reference to certain names he used. When in England, as the First Minister of Canada, the hon. gentleman ought to have been particularly careful, if he chose to make allusions, to make them with regard to accuracy and fact, and not to have used his position unfairly, as I conceive he did, to discredit those who are opposed to him in this country. As reported in the English papers, he said in one of his speeches:

"The Canadian Liberal-Conservatives are those who draw their inspirations from England, who believe in the English constitution, and would loyally follow English precedents. Opposed to them we have the Liberal party, but they are not the true Liberals. The majority are, I believe, as loyal as any Conservatives. They have an earnest desire to continue the union which happily exists between Canada and the Mother Country, but they do not draw their inspirations from England. We have contiguity to a great nation, to a people who speak the same language, deal with us and trade with us, and it is therefore very natural that their institutions should offer some attraction to a considerable body of our people."

I maintain that was an inaccurate statement of the opinions of the Liberal party. I maintain that the Liberal party has a well settled and reasonable preference for that system, as more flexible, as giving earlier and apter opportunities for the triumph of the popular will, which we have here according to the British system, than it has for the presidential system which prevails on the other side of the line. I have never heard any gentleman who represented in any shape any section of the Liberal party or any constituency in the interest of the Liberal party, express a preference for the presidential as opposed to our parliamentary system, and I maintain it was an unfair use to make of the position the hon. gentleman occupied in England, that he should make a statement eminently calculated to discredit his political opponents and without any foundation in fact. At the same time, the hon. gentleman was good enough to say that :

"Any Englishman, in coming to Canada, if he was a man of education, invariably joined the Canadian Conservative party, no matter what his home politics may have been."

I do not know, I am sure, under what circumstances the hon. gentleman made such a statement, but I say he inflicted a gross insult on a very large portion of the most intelligent part of this community, who have come from England, are educated men, and are warm adherents of the Liberal party. The hon. gentleman made another statement on the same occasion. In giving what he thought was a historical résumé of past history, he declared, with some very violent language which I will not read, for we are accustomed to it from the hon. gentleman, that the conduct of the Liberal party had been that of demagogues in Canada, and then he went on to say :

"And they charged Sir George Cartier with being little better than a French speaking Englishman."

That was the climax of the hon. gentleman's attack upon us that we had charged Sir George Cartier with being no better than a French speaking Englishman. Why, I fancy, if the hon. gentleman's audience had been present when Sir George Cartier was in England on a former occasion, they would have heard him making the same statement. That was Sir George Cartier's public statement with reference to his position. But the hon. gentleman turns this speech, which came from the lips of his own colleague, into a dreadful accusation hurled at him by political opponents. I hope the hon. gentleman, on future occasions, when in England, will be a little more accurate when he attempts to describe the actions and conduct of his political opponents. The hon. gentleman ought to have remembered, when he gave that account, which I have read, of the principles and views of the Liberal party, that the only man of the quondam annexationists of 1849 now prominent in public life, Sir David Macpherson, is a colleague of his own. He ought to remember that the most prominent advocate of independence in Canada was a former colleague of his own, his Minister of Finance for many years, who declined to receive the honor of knighthood except upon the distinct understanding that he held views on independence which he would be at perfect liberty to uphold; and who denounced the hon. gentleman in 1875, but, as a repentant sinner, was afterwards received by the hon. gentleman into his service. Under these circumstances, it little becomes the hon. gentleman to make such attacks as he has made in the absence of those whom he was aspersing. Besides the absence of those subjects in the Speech, there are some other little omissions. The hon. gentleman had found place in the Speech from the Throne last year for the decision of the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council in Russell and the Queen. There has been a greater decision since then. There has been a decision on the boundary question. The Russell case settled a point of law with reference to what the hon. gentleman thought were the relative jurisdictions of the Dominion and the Provinces. The decision of the boundary question decided the fate, as the hon. gentleman described it, of a kingdom, and yet we find no statement of it. There is much said upon this subject, which I am a little compelled to disagree with. People seem to think that the issue is very different from what I have always thought the issue to have been. A great question has been settled; a question between Canada and one of the Provinces; a question promoted by this Administration, in one point of view, which it afterwards thrust upon one of the Provinces, and which has ultimately been decided adversely to that Administration. I say adversely to that Administration. The issue was, as to what the boundary of Ontario was, and upon that subject, as long ago as March, 1872, the Government presided over by the hon. gentleman made this declaration with reference to that boundary :

"The boundary in question is clearly identical with the limits of the Province of Quebec, according to 14 George III, chap. 83, the Quebec Act, and described as follows * * * Extending along the river Ohio westward to the banks of the Mississippi (that is the junction of the two rivers) and northward to the southern boundary of the Hudson's Bay territory. The southern boundary of the Hudson's Bay territory is well understood to be the height of land dividing the waters which flow into Hudson's Bay from those entering the valley of the Great Lakes, and forming the northern boundary of Ontario."

Therefore, the position the hon. gentleman took at that time was that the boundary of Ontario was the due north line from the junction of the Ohio and the Mississippi on the one part, and the height of land upon the other part. The Government of Ontario stated its position in the course of that correspondence, which was practically the boundary of the Lake of the Woods to the westward and on the north a line to the northward of the height of land. Then the hon. gentleman, on the 17th November, 1872, reported, stating this :

"The northern boundary of Ontario the Government believe to be the line of the watershed separating the waters that run towards Lake Superior from those which run towards Hudson's Bay, and the western boundary a line drawn in accordance with the provisions of 14 Geo. III, chap. 83, from the conflux of the Mississippi and Ohio rivers northward, that is, by the shortest northward course to the southern boundary of the Hudson's Bay territory."

There, Sir, were the two statements of the Administration on that subject. Then there came an attempt to ascertain what the boundary was, and the arbitration was arranged, and the award took place, and the hon. gentleman, in opposition to the contention from this side of the House, that the award ought to be accepted, declared that it should not be accepted. Why? Because he said it was all wrong, that we ought to have an entirely different boundary from that which was found by the award. He said this :

"They"—that is the Dominion Parliament or Government—"say it is not a true boundary—that the Dominion wants simply what by law is their right. The Ontario Government and Legislature have no right to ask more, but they say no. They passed a law accepting the award, because they saw it added an additional kingdom to Ontario, as was the remark of its Premier, and they will not do anything else."

Once again :

"The effect of settling the boundary between these Provinces will compel, I do not say the Province of Ontario, but the present Government of Ontario, to be reasonable, and not to insist upon a boundary which cannot be supported in any court or tribunal in the world. They will come to terms quick enough when they find that they must do so. To use an expression which is common in Scotland, it is land hungry they are for that country, and they are resolved to get it rightly or wrongly."

Then again :

"Nor is it the duty of the Dominion Government to accept their idea of the facts; because, according to my idea, the whole case was given away before the arbitrators. Anybody reading the case would see that it was most wretchedly managed on the part of the Dominion. An inferior man, though a respectable man in his way, Mr. McMahon, was chosen to conduct the whole case, instead of employing the first legal ability in the country—in the Minister of Justice himself conducting the case before the arbitrators. The whole case was thrown away—it looks almost as if it was deliberately thrown away. Never was such a case so given away as the case of the Dominion was on the very face of it."

Now we find that this subject is once more discussed; but, before it was discussed, and at the very time at which this debate took place from which I have been reading these extracts, the hon. gentleman was arranging to thrust the issue upon a sister Province and to hand over to Manitoba the controversy which he had been, up to that time, himself engaged in, between the Dominion and Ontario, and the Province of Manitoba endeavored to take possession of a portion of that which had been awarded to be, and is now found to be, territory of Ontario. And hon. gentlemen opposite said it was all right for the Province of Manitoba to do it; and the Province of Ontario resisted the attempt of Manitoba to take possession of what is determined to have been Ontario's territory. And hon. gentlemen opposite said it was all wrong for Ontario to attempt to resist such a taking of possession—they ought, like good Christians, to have allowed the Manitobans to take possession of the territory which it is now established was all along their own. The question has been practically settled according to the award, as far as the committee have decided. They have decided, it seems, not that the award was wrong, not that it was a conventional boundary, but that it was the real boundary. As far as the committee have decided, the case was not given away before the arbitrators, deliberately or otherwise, and the issue which the hon. gentleman, in the year 1872, joined, as I have shown from these extracts, between the Dominion of Canada and the Province of Ontario, in which he contended for a due north line from the conflux of the Ohio and Mississippi as the western boundary and for the height of land as the northern boundary, as far as it is decided, so far is decided entirely against the contention of the hon. gentleman and in favor of the contention of the Province; and those oceans of learning and erudition which we heard poured out in the debates upon the subject in this House from supporters of the Administration seem to have been all wasted and thrown away, inasmuch as the decision has been altogether opposed to them. Yet the whole question is not settled. The hon. gentleman, for some reason or other, although it was agreed in this House that the reference should take place between the Dominion as well as Manitoba and the Province of Ontario, although it is said that there was an assent on the part of the Dominion to such a reference, at the end it seems withdrew, and so the decision only formally and effectually settles the question as far as the boundary of Manitoba and Ontario is concerned. Still one is led to the hope that, inasmuch as what has been declared by the arbitrators settles the principles upon which the rest of the boundary ought to be determined, there will be no further controversy and the award will be accepted, in reference to the rest of it, on the principle which appears to have guided the Judicial Committee so far as it has gone. Nor is anything said as to the hon. gentleman's attitude in regard to the lands. He has arranged another controversy with the Province; he is at issue as to the ownership of the lands in this territory. He has declared that, even if the territory be within the boundary of the Province of Ontario, still the lands are the property of the Dominion. It will be important for us to know, if that contention is to be maintained, whether there is still to be a controversy, or whether this question is not to be, as I say it ought to be, at once settled in all its parts. There is yet another omission which is proper to be remarked upon—nay, two. The first is with reference to the Streams Bill. Since we last met here, there has been a decision of the Judicial Committee on that subject also. It was alleged by the hon. gentleman that the legislation in the Local Legislature, declaring what the law was, was not legislation; that it was robbery. He used language which, coming from anybody else, I should have said was strong. He said these things:

The Ontario Government, "dressed in a little brief authority, Jack-in-the-box, trampling on the man, as they said they would do, pleased Mr. Caldwell and robbed Mr. McLaren. An hon. member has stated that the Streams Bill was not intended for Mr. McLaren, but for general application. But it is meant for the sneak who creeps down the back stairs and steals the kitchen utensils, or the fellow who comes behind you and picks your pockets—they are men more to be despised than the highway robber. It would have been more manly if the Ontario Government had introduced a Bill to hand over Peter McLaren's property to Wm Caldwell; they dare not do so, and therefore they passed a Bill respecting rivers and streams. It was a wretched, flimsy and transparent device; it deceived nobody, but it was only by being a public bully that the Government could introduce and carry it; otherwise there must be a petition. It had the effect of depriving Mr. McLaren of his property, under the pretence that it was in the public interest. Nothing more contemptible or sinister could be done by a Government or Legislature. It was a Bill to take from Mr. McLaren his property and hand it over to Mr. Caldwell. True, Mr. McLaren had spent, some say $250,000, and hon. gentlemen opposite say from $100,000 to $150,000. I do not know how much it was—but it was Mr. McLaren's property. The river at that spot was not a navigable river, and the judge who heard the evidence and viewed the facts stated that it was clear that at the place where the improvements were made it was not only not navigable but not floatable. It would scarcely allow a plank or a slab to go down any more than upon a ditch. Caldwell's timber and logs could not go through there until the improvements were made. Mr. McLaren, with his usual industry and perseverance, in order to carry on his extensive business, made a dam and a slide out of his own timber, for his own purposes and on his own soil. Mr. Caldwell had no right to use it without his consent and without paying for it. It was absolutely the property of Mr. McLaren."

Mr. BLAKE.

And again he says:

"Supposing an honest old farmer's wife should expropriate her neighbor's hen and say: 'I shall keep this hen, and you shall feed it right and see that it lays at the proper time, and I will pay you by giving you a share of the eggs.'"

Now that was the attitude of the hon. gentleman. But the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council have decided to the contrary; they have decided that it was not Mr. McLaren's right to interfere with Mr. Caldwell's coming down this stream; they have decided the law was correctly declared by those who advised the local legislation; they have decided, in fact, that the Bill which was said to be a means of taking away Mr. McLaren's property with an illusory compensation, was the only Bill that could protect him at all, or give him any reasonable compensation for the use of his improvements over property in respect of which there was a public easement under the existing law of the land. So the infallible disallowers who disallowed this measure on the ground that it was an unjust interference with Mr. McLaren's property, turned out to be all wrong, and the reason upon which they acted, insufficient as I conceive that reason to have been, turns out to have been no valid reason at all. I say insufficient, as I conceive that reason to be, because I am convinced that upon the true reading of our constitution the mere circumstance that in the opinion of these gentlemen a different kind of compensation ought to be given, that it was interference with private rights, was no ground whatever for exercise of the power of disallowance. But it turns out that the very basis of their action was an error. And yet, Sir, we do not find any reference to Caldwell and McLaren in the Speech from the Throne. Then, Sir, there was the very case in which the hon. gentleman introduced this custom of giving an account to us of the decision of the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council—the case of the license question. The license question was raised last Session on several occasions, but it was last raised on the floor of this House on the motion of our lamented friend, Frederic Houde; and I may say that all of us who watched his course here must receive the mention of his name with sadness. He has since passed from amongst us. He was a man of marked independence of character, of frankness, of honor, of indomitable spirit and energy; and no man who has seen him here for these many years past but must have been touched with the exhibition of that spirit and energy which he made when he struggled against weakness and disease in the discharge of his duties in Parliament. We know that he exhibited that independence of character to which I refer in a very marked way, outside this House, with reference to the journalistic career to which he was attached. We have observed in this House, with what emotion he, on one or two occasions, separated himself from his friends, feeling that it was a painful thing to do, knowing that it was a painful thing to do, but rising superior to his emotions at the call of duty. And he was a man of great kindness of spirit as well. He was kind to all of us, opponents as well as friends; and I cannot omit mentioning here the marked kindness and generosity of feeling with which, during many years, he treated myself who am now addressing you. More than once it has happened to me to receive from him, sitting on these opposite benches, before he came to sit near my hon. friend from Montreal East (Mr. Coursol)—I have received from him a little note, after I had said something that pleased him, expressing satisfaction with the way it was said, though not always concurring in the sentiments I uttered. Such was the spirit in which he treated his opponents, and the manliness he exhibited towards them I am sure was exhibited in a redoubled spirit towards his friends. How would he, who has gone from amongst us, have rejoiced at the late decision in this case, the last of his efforts; how would he have rejoiced to see that by the unanimous decision of the Supreme Court the view which he took as to the law was sustained in this case. Now we have no reference to that, and yet it was an important transaction. Parliament, by a Bill, decided that there should be a reference of this subject to the Supreme Court. It was thought important enough to do so, and a reference was made. The Provinces were called upon to take part in the proceedings, and five, I think, did take part—the Province of Ontario, the Province of Quebec, the Province of Nova Scotia, the Province of New Brunswick and the Province of British Columbia. From the Province of Manitoba, as we are aware by public documents, there had proceeded a protest against this license measure of the Government, although I do not observe that they took part in the case. I am not aware what was the attitude of the Province of Prince Edward Island. But we find most of the Provinces taking part in this transaction on one side, and the Dominion on the other; yet a transaction of that description, taking place under authority of that Act of Parliament, resulting, as it has resulted, is not thought worthy of being admitted into the Speech from the Throne. Why? Because the result is unpleasant to the hon. gentlemen, I suppose. Now, I ask the House, is it too late to retrace our steps? Remember that we meddled in this matter for one reason, and for one reason only, because it was said by the hon. gentleman that the local laws were waste paper, and that it was absolutely necessary that we should intervene. Remember that was the ground upon which he invited his supporters to sustain him in passing his Bill. Remember that that alleged necessity was wholly disproved by the decision in the case of the Queen vs. Hodge; that since that time the insistence of the hon. gentleman that the local license laws were waste paper, has been by him withdrawn; that it was admitted they were valid, and therefore the pretence upon which Parliament was induced to interfere has disappeared and disappeared forever. Remember that from that time out it was only as an expedient and not as a necessity that we were told we should interfere; that it was admitted to be true that the local laws, which had been in force for seventeen years, were good and valid laws, and it was only because it was thought better in the interests of the whole Dominion that we should interfere, and if we could supersede them, invalidate them—submerge them, as the hon. member for Glengarry (Mr. Macmaster), I think, said—by federal legislation, we should interfere. Remember that in this policy of interference, of abstraction from the Provinces of that which it was decided by the Committee of the Privy Council is their right, we, in this Parliament, are engaged in a conflict with each one of six out of seven Provinces; and I have no reason to suppose that the attitude of the Province of Prince Edward Island differs from the attitude of the other Provinces. Now, remember that we are engaged in an effort to take away, against the will of the Provinces of Canada, a right which they have been exercising—validly, as decided by the court of last resort—ever since Confederation. Remember, again, that since last Session, the Supreme Court has decided unanimously, not that the local laws are waste paper, as the hon. gentleman alleged, but that his Act is waste paper, that the Act which he passed because the local laws were waste paper is itself waste paper; and consider for yourselves whether it is useful, in the interests of this Confederation, to continue this struggle; whether it is calculated to strengthen the bonds of union, to strengthen our confidence in the federal system, to proceed into this Parliament further in a controversy in order to take away from the several Provinces a right which is theirs under the laws of those Provinces, that you may be able, by legislation of your own, to do the same things which they are doing, according to your fashion, and by that means, as the hon. gentleman stated, submerge their legislation. I do think we ought to retrace our steps, that we ought not to prolong this controversy, that we ought to repeal the objectionable parts of the Act which the hon. gentleman passed, and leave the Local Legislatures, according to the wants and wishes and the condition of public sentiment and opinion in each locality, to deal with the license question. I do trust that wiser counsels will prevail. I know full well that it would be a humiliating act for the First Minister. He made great pretensions. On the stump and elsewhere he declared himself infallible. He declared he had never been mistaken, but had always been sustained. It was a foolish action. It was not necessary to have done it, and he should have allowed his followers to have sounded his praises in that regard rather than have sounded them himself, because just so soon as he began to do so defeat after defeat took place. Once he began boasting of his infallibility, day after day the hon. gentleman found that he was mortal and fallible like the rest of us. Is it not much better that we should acknowledge that we are all fallible, even if some are immortal, and decide that we will not continue this struggle to save the hon. gentleman's amour propre, but we will leave the matter where it was for seventeen years, whence the hon. gentleman himself said he would never have dragged it, except under the belief that it was necessary in the public good, because the local laws were only waste paper? Let the local laws remain. If I could hope that my words have any weight I would pray the House to recognise, though it may be late, our true position; to apprehend the fact that we are, by our general policy, and have been for some time, rather weakening than strengthening the true bonds of union; that our centralising policy, our tariff policy, our policy of high and sectional taxation, our policy of extravagant expenditure, has been and is alienating important elements in Canada from sympathy with the union itself; that it is our duty to recall the promises that were made to the various Provinces which were induced to enter into this union, the promises of economical government and of low taxation, the promises with respect to trade, the promises with respect to a fiscal policy, the promises with respect to expenditure, which were made, particularly by the leaders in the Maritime Provinces, at the time the union measure was brought before them; and that we ought to set about the initiation, I might almost call it so, of a true federal policy, including that of a reduction of expenditure and such a reduction of taxation as the past extravagance permits—a policy suitable to our actual circumstances, instead of one based on hollow dreams already proved untrue, and which will, too late, if persisted in, end in a disastrous awakening.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. Mr. Speaker, I can join, in the first place, most cordially in the commendation passed by the hon. gentleman opposite upon the mover and seconder of these resolutions in their maiden efforts. The hon. gentleman could not well do otherwise, and he has shown the sincerity of his belief in the ability with which those hon. members addressed the House by making as the basis and text of his remarks the speech of the seconder of the resolution. I do not know what the hon. gentleman would have done if the hon. member for Cumberland (Mr. Townshend) had not furnished him with the text on which he preached such an eloquent, and at the same time, a rather discursive, amusing and instructive address. All three speeches were eloquent; but there was a difference in the style of their eloquence. The hon. gentleman stated, while paying a compliment to my hon. friend behind me, that all his language was euphemistic and hyperbolic. It cannot be said, in regard to any remarks made by the hon. gentleman opposite, with respect to the development of Canada, that his remarks were either euphemistic or hyperbolic. He is pessimistic—and I was going to say maledicent. The hon. gentleman said with a very grave face—he had to admit it, though he did so with some reluctance—that we had had a very good crop, an abundant harvest. He said that gloomily, but his countenance lighted up when he added that the prices are very low; and he alluded to a remark made by my old friend Rufus Stephenson, some years ago, that $1 was the normal value of that important cereal, wheat. The hon. gentleman was quite cheery at the idea that this country was not so prosperous—at all events that the Speech did not announce universal prosperity, as previous Speeches from the Throne had done. Well, we had to tell the truth; we did tell the truth: that Canada was suffering, but in no very great degree, from the depression which existed alike in the protectionist country of the United States and the free trade country of Great Britain and Ireland. The hon. gentleman stated that the chief cause of the depression in this country was the high, unjust taxation which oppressed the people. I would ask him, I would ask this House and the country, if there is any evidence of the people objecting to the present system of taxation. In 1879 the tariff was introduced with the general assent of the people and of their representatives. The tariff has in no great degree been altered since that time. The oppression, if it took place, took place in and from 1879. Since that time there has been an appeal to the people. Has there been laid on this Table any petition from any body, large or small, important or insignificant, showing that the country is suffering from excessive, unjust, sectional, exorbitant or oppressive taxation? No. We hear throughout the country that the millers and some other interests are asking an increase of taxation; but no body, party or individual is complaining of the policy of the Government in establishing this protective tariff. The hon. gentleman should not set up his own opinion, for it represents but a small minority in the country who are free traders. The hon. gentleman knows, if he will admit it, that a very large body of those acting with him, and called Reformers, those having general confidence in him and want of confidence in the present Administration, aye, those hon. gentlemen who sit behind and cheer him, would not allow him, if he occupied my position, to carry out the extreme views of free trade which he has enunciated to-night here, and has enunciated elsewhere. They would not allow him to do it, and he knows this right well. The hon. gentleman made, however, one very important admission in his speech. He admitted for the first time in his life that there had been a brief gleam of prosperity—a too brief gleam of prosperity; and it was, I repeat, the first occasion on which he, as the leader of the party which he leads so ably, admitted that there was any prosperity. Let us look back to the faithful Hansard; let us read the speeches made by him in the years 1879-80-81-82-83-84, and we will find that during the period of this brief prosperity, in every Session and in every speech, without one single admission of there being even a gleam of prosperity, the same pessimistic cry was raised that the country was ruined and oppressed; that this enormous taxation was ruinous to the country's best interests; and now the hon. gentleman is obliged to admit that there has been a gleam of prosperity. And it has passed; it was too brief; it only lasted a short time. Mr. Speaker, it exists at this moment.

Mr. MILLS. Hear, hear.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. Yes; the hon. gentlemen will laugh and sneer and regret it, as they do regret it, but I say that this country at this moment is substantially prosperous. It is a prosperous country, and when the hon. gentleman or any other hon. gentleman says there is anything like real poverty, in the European sense—aye, or in the American sense of poverty—by which a man cannot get bread for himself and family, I deny it. I say he is libelling this country; he is making an untruthful statement regarding the condition of the people of this country. I say that, looking at the country as a whole, from one end to the other, any industrious man can earn a fair day's wage for a fair day's work. To be sure, the hon. gentleman says, "Look at the factories; look at Cornwall and Kingston, and several other places where the cotton trade was suffering, where there was depression." Well, we all know, and we said at the time the tariff was introduced—my hon. friend the Minister of Finance said it, and I in my place said, when we were told that the consequence of introducing the National Policy would be that there would be a great number of cotton lords having a monopoly of the trade, that they would build up enormous fortunes at the expense of oppressing the people, that there was an absence of free competition—we said no, there will be home competition; the natural competition which will arise when our manufacturers find that when they are protected from the free influx of foreign goods, the struggle, the competition between man and man, between capitalist and capitalist, will bring down the price. Is not that so? Are not prices lower than ever before? Is not the price of cotton lower than it ever has been? Is not nearly every article which is produced by industries introduced into Canada, at less than the normal price? The consequence of that competition has been that in the cotton industry, for instance, there was an undue rush into it; there was a speculative spirit arose, and more money was invested in that particular industry than the restricted market required. That was prophesied. But it is all for the benefit of the consumer; the bloated aristocrats are the sufferers, and the people of the country are the gainers. This condition of things will remedy itself, and we see how it is being remedied. The manufacturers meet; they say, we make too many grey cottons, for instance; we will diminish the quantity so as to suit our market; we hope the Government and Parliament will get us foreign markets, but in the meantime we will diversify our industries; we will go into prints or other cottons; we will use our machinery for other purposes than those for which it was originally established. That kind of thing regulates the supply until there is such a diminution of the supply as to bring it to an equality with the demand; and meantime the country has been the gainer. Then the hon. gentleman says that we see the miserable operatives' sufferings. The operatives are not suffering. There may be, in places, a diminution of wages, but there is enough wage left to enable an industrious man to support himself and his family in comfort. There may be workmen on short time in some places, but that only exists until the balance between the demand and supply is adjusted. In the meantime what would the condition of things have been but for the National Policy? The hon. gentleman will not deny that the sufferings among the operatives in the United States are greater than in Canada; that their sufferings in England are greater than in Canada. He cannot truthfully deny it. Then the hon. gentleman says that the exodus of our population, over which he used to gloat, is going on. Our people were seeking among the manufacturers of the United States for the employment which they could not get in Canada. But if they had gone to the United States factories which are suffering from the depression which exists there, and the starvation which exists there—away from their Canadian homes, without any money to bring them back—in that case there would have been real suffering amongst them. But instead of that we have kept them in our own country. They are here; on the whole, well-doing fellow subjects of ours and furnishing a home market for the great industry of all, our agricultural industry. The hon. gentleman contemplates a return of that happy state of affairs when our factories shall be closed, when all the vigor and energy and constructive skill and enterprise of those who are not fitted or inclined to follow agricultural pursuits must go to the United States. The hon. gentleman would be glad to return to that state of things, but he does not express the opinion of the country; he does not express the opinion of the representatives of the people in this House. And I tell the hon. gentleman if he goes to the country as the leader of his party, as the exponent of free trade, and I go to the country as the exponent and supporter of the National Policy, we will beat him at almost every poll.

Mr. COCKBURN. Try it to-morrow.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. We have been trying it, and of the nine members who were introduced to you, Mr. Speaker, seven went to the polls as advocates and supporters of the National Policy—as advocates and supporters of the Government which introduced and maintained the National Policy, and two, I believe, occupy seats on the opposite benches. We are quite satisfied with the opinion of the country. We have the declaration of the majority of the country, and I believe that as seven is to two, so is the majority in the whole country in favor of the National Policy. My hon. friend was merry over all this kind of thing. He is not usually playful, but to-day he was excessively merry, and, like Mark Tapley, he wished to show that he was jolly under adverse circumstances, and certainly the portentous sight of seven gentlemen walking in one after the other, declaring continued confidence in the Government and their policy, was enough to arouse all his energies and make him as happy and as smiling as Mark Tapley himself, even at the Garden of Eden. The hon. gentleman says he knows that he and his party have been charged with belittling the country and undervaluing its position, but, he says, I must tell the truth and shame the—Tories. Well, I do not know that the Tories will accept the comparison drawn by the hon. gentleman, but certainly it will occur to him in that case that the Tories have played the very devil with him and his party. The hon. gentleman alluded to my speeches in England. Well, Mr. Speaker, I was in England, and I made some speeches. I am not ashamed of those speeches, and I adhere to what I said. I believe what I said was true, in substance and in spirit; I intended to speak the truth, and I am not ashamed of what I said. The hon. gentleman spoke of my speech as to a Bankruptcy Act, and he said I sneered at the prejudices of the rural population. I simply told the truth. I stated that the boards of trade in Canada, representing the commercial interest, were, as a whole, in favor of the introduction of a bankruptcy or insolvent law; I said that the rural population were opposed to a bankruptcy or insolvent law—that they had strong prejudices against it. Is that not so? Is it not so, in this House and out of this House, that while the commercial men desire an insolvent system with protection against undue preferences, the representatives of the rural constituencies as a whole are opposed to a bankruptcy law? That is what I stated, and I stated the truth. The hon. gentleman said that I stated that I was going to do the best I could for them. The hon. gentleman has not read my speech carefully, or he has forgotten it. I carefully guarded myself from expressing any opinion upon the question. When the representatives of the chambers of commerce, some of the most important chambers in England, asked what course they should take to express their views, I said I really did not know that they could do anything better than to pursue the course which they had already commenced—to keep up their communications with the various boards in Canada, and through them to use the powers and arguments they wished to use for the purpose of showing that a bankruptcy law was a necessity. Now, Mr. Speaker, it was my duty and my pleasure to receive with all courtesy these important bodies. The trade of England with Canada is of great importance, and I believe is going to be of still more importance; and it was of the utmost moment that I should receive such great representative bodies as the chambers of commerce when they wished to state that they believed sincerely that the commercial intercourse between England and Canada, and the development of that intercourse, were greatly prejudiced in consequence of the absence of a bankruptcy or insolvent law. I believe they have taken my advice. They are communicating now, or have communicated, with the various boards of trade in Canada; and, Mr. Speaker, the Speech did not say that there was not going to be any measure introduced. I may give the hon. gentleman this information in advance, that it is the intention of the Government to ask this House to strike a special committee, carefully formed, for the purpose of examining into the whole subject. They will have before them the petitions, the memorials and the remonstrances of these various commercial bodies, and we shall get a report upon the whole subject, and especially upon one point of the greatest importance, which dwells most particularly in the minds of the members of the English chambers of commerce, that is to say, the possibility of there being undue or fraudulent preferences. Those who have read my remarks may, perhaps, remember that I explained to those bodies, that unless the measure amounted, in the fullest sense, to a bankruptcy or insolvent law, the jurisdiction did not rest with us, but with the Provincial Legislatures. In order, therefore, that this whole subject may be reviewed in its commercial and constitutional aspects, it is the intention of the Government to ask this House to strike a committee of competent men to deal with this subject. The hon. gentleman has spoken about a reciprocity treaty, and treaties in general, and if I understood his remarks, he desired that we should go again to the United States and renew our efforts to secure a reciprocity treaty. Mr. Speaker, the public men of the United States, from the President down, know that Canada has always been ready to enter into negotiations for a reciprocity treaty. They know that upon our Statute Book there is a provision that in case the Americans at any time choose to enter into negotiations with us, the Government are empowered by the Parliament of Canada, without a new Act, without any legislation whatever, to reduce the tariff, or wipe away the duties altogether, on condition that the Americans reciprocate. And, Sir, what more do they want? It is not by going down on our knees that we shall get reciprocity, or by doing what those people at St. John did the other day. Because there has been a treaty entered into between the United States and Spain, giving the United States exclusively the trade with the Spanish Antilles, they said. We must have annexation with the United States—anything in order to get this trade as well.

Sir LEONARD TILLEY. Not many said that.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. I am very glad to hear from the Minister of Finance that very few said that. Yet they were men who held out to the United States the supposition that we must have annexation if we do not trade with the Spanish Antilles. Why, Mr. Speaker, the consequence was, as happened before, and as has happened again and again with United States statesmen. They desire to enlarge the boundaries of the country; they would like to add Canada to the United States; they said, let us hold off a little longer; let us refuse them reciprocity, and Canada will fall like a ripe plum into our mouths. What was the result? It turns out now during the present sitting of Congress that there is not the slightest chance of this same Spanish treaty being ratified at Washington. The hon. gentleman has stated that he has heard a great deal about our attempt to develop the trade of Canada—that we had two commissioners appointed to England, and yet we have not heard of any results. The United States has had ambassadors appointed to France and Spain, and you do not hear of any results yet. Believe me, Mr. Speaker, and the majority of this House and of this country will believe me when I say that the Government keep their attention constantly, earnestly and most actively directed to the development of the trade of Canada, and the obtaining of commercial treaties with the various civilized countries of the world. And I say this, that we have, I am happy to say, from Her Majesty's Government, every assistance in doing so. They have, for instance, taken the step which the hon. gentleman may perhaps consider insufficient, but which I consider all sufficient. They have joined our High Commissioner, Sir Charles Tupper, with the Spanish Ambassador at Madrid as joint envoys in order to attempt to negotiate a treaty between Canada, as part of England, and not only the Spanish Antilles but the mother country—Spain. So with respect to France. The attention of the Government has been steadily given in that direction. The continual changes in government in France and the various circumstances connected with their own government are such that we have never been able to induce them to approach this subject with an earnest desire to come to a conclusion, but by and bye we may have successful negotiations. At all events we will keep "pegging away," to use the homely phrase of Abraham Lincoln; we will lose no opportunity of extending and developing the foreign trade of Canada. The hon. gentleman congratulates the House on there being no mention of the Canadian Pacific Railway. Well, that is all very well. There is no necessity for mentioning it, inasmuch as there is no legislation that we are going to lay before the House—that we propose to lay before the House just now. What we may do in the immense future, and with the immense future of that railway, we must leave to the future. At present we do not mention the Canadian Pacific Railway, as we do not propose to lay a measure before the House on this subject. But the hon. gentleman asks a great many questions about the progress of the work, the grades, and other cognate questions. I will take it that the report of the hon. Minister of Railways will settle that question, and therefore there was no necessity for encumbering the hon. gentleman's speech with any remarks about them. I do not think that it will answer any good purpose to follow the hon. gentleman in his discursive remarks on the various subjects of public interest. It was rather a waste of time, when the facts and papers are not before the House, to discuss the question. Therefore, I will say not a word more about the railway policy or about the land policy, or about the receipts for land sales, and so on. By the way, however, I will call the attention of the House to the rather unfair—I was going to say uncandid—remarks of the hon. gentleman, in which he pooh-poohed the receipts for the sales of land. He says that the receipts were so much and the expenditure was so much, and that there is a very small balance left. The hon. gentleman ought to have told the House that the receipts for the sales of land were for a particular year, while the expenditure, on the other side, was for the surveys, which will last for all time to come. The Government have been going on surveying township after township—we have surveyed a kingdom, almost, in area, and we have paid the expense of those surveys. Those surveys will last for all time; the receipts were merely the receipts for one year. The hon. gentleman would like to know very much whether there is going to be a Factory Bill introduced or not. The hon. member for Cornwall (Mr. Bergin), has rushed to the rescue at once for fear there should be a dereliction of duty. We will see, by and by, when we have my hon. friend's measure before the House, how that will be dealt with. With respect to the factory law, the case stands thus: Already in two of the Provinces there is factory legislation. If at any time it is found requisite for the protection of life or property that offensive breaches of the factory law should be made a crime, a misdemeanor, of course we must act here. The Provincial Legislatures have no power to declare any breach of the law a misdemeanor; they can of course fix certain penalties in civil law to any breach of their law. The constitutional Act provides that they may by decision imposing a fine, protect their legislation, but they cannot interfere with any portion of the criminal law. Now, the hon. gentleman says that we ought to have mentioned an Act to give representation to the people of the North-West. I think before we can do that we must know what people are there, how they are divided, where their settlements are, what divisions are to be made, how the electoral franchise is to be exercised, what the electoral franchise is. We can have no satisfactory adjustment of that question until we know the number of people that are there, where they are situated, how they are scattered, in order that we may, hereafter, if Parliament thinks proper, give them representation in Parliament. The time must come ere long when these districts will be made Provinces, and if made Provinces they will, as a matter of course, be represented in this Parliament like any other Province. In the meantime, the first and necessary step must be taken of having a census. The hon. gentleman objects very much to some remarks I made in England, to the effect that the Liberal-Conservatives are the true Liberals. Well, I have said so in the House and in the country; I have not the slightest reason for not repeating the same thing in England. I believe the Liberal-Conservative party is the progressive party, the party that is going to develop this country. I believe that if hon. gentlemen opposite succeeded in taking our place, a restrictive policy would be introduced, and the prosperity of this country retarded and obstructed. I said so there and I say so here. The hon. gentleman said I spoke unfairly of their party when I said the Conservative party drew its inspiration from England and the other from the neighboring Republic. I thought I was doing them full justice when I said I believed they were as loyal a party and as true to British interests as were the Conservatives. I could not go further than that. I did not state in my speech, though I might have done so, that they were anxious for any constitutional changes. I simply stated that in their legislation, their general legislation, they drew their inspiration from the United States, from the neighboring Republic, and I believe, if you look at the Statute Book, from 1874 to 1878, you will find the proof of my assertion.

Mr. MILLS. Fiscal policy, for instance.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. Well, the hon. member for Bothwell has really mentioned the exception which proves the rule. That is the only case in which we have adopted the policy of the United States. The hon. gentlemen laugh over there. I wonder if the members do not think we were right in adopting, in that instance only, the policy of the United States. I know many of them do. Then the hon. gentleman, in order to wind up his speech, although it had not anything to do with the Address from the Throne, brought up, in the first place—

Mr. LANDERKIN. The License Bill.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. Yes, he brought up the License Bill.

An hon. MEMBER. Streams Bill.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. We will come to the Streams Bill just now. He brought up the License Bill. Mr. Speaker, we have the decision of Russell vs. the Queen; we have the decision of the Queen and Hodge. Unfortunately, in the reference to the Supreme Court here, it was presented to them in such a way that we have not the reasons given by the judges for their decision. They have not decided according to Russell and the Queen—that is quite clear. They have not decided according to the case of the Queen vs. Hodge—that is quite clear. The only way in which we can judge of the reasons which induced the Supreme Court to decide or give an opinion as they have done is from the remarks of the judges during the course of the argument. During the course of that argument it was said by more than one of the judges that the two decisions in the Queen and Russell, and the Queen and Hodge, were antagonistic; that they were contradictory; that one opposed the other, and so apparently the court has split the difference; it has declared that all the wholesale licenses belong to the Dominion, and all the retail and tavern licenses belong to the Provincial Legislatures. Now, Mr. Speaker, I think it is of very great importance that we should get such questions settled. After that decision, not one of the Provincial Governments can issue licenses or receive a dollar for any wholesale licenses or for licenses on any vessel; and it is strange that the words "wholesale" and "retail" have different significations in the different Provinces. In one of the Provinces, a wholesale license covers five gallons and upwards; in another it covers one pint and upwards. We must get these questions settled, and it is, I consider, of the very greatest importance that, so early in the history of Confederation, while we are yet just laying the basis of the Dominion under our present constitution, all possible questions of conflict of jurisdiction should be settled. You see what the consequences of allowing the contrary practice to obtain were in the United States. They culminated in a great war. Now we are, one after the other, settling these questions, and I hope this question will be settled in the same way, finally and for ever. The hon. gentleman says we should have no more legislation about it. How can we help ourselves, Mr. Speaker? Who is to decide what "wholesale" means and what "retail" means? If the Provincial Governments, for a matter of revenue, wish to tax all sellers of spirits and wines, they are cut off from a great branch of the trade. They cannot charge a license fee to any wholesale dealer in wines or spirituous liquors. That must be settled in some way, and can only be settled by the final tribunal. The hon. gentleman then spoke about the boundary question. Mr. Speaker, if the proffer, the repeated proffer, the solemn proffer of the Dominion Government had been accepted, the boundary question would have been settled ten long years ago. He has quoted remarks of mine, and state papers issued by the Government, alleging that the boundary line was due north from the confluence of the Ohio and the Mississippi. The Government were obliged to take that ground, and why? Because there had been a solemn decision of a court of competent jurisdiction, the Queen's Bench, in the then Province of Lower Canada, which was a court of competent jurisdiction specially charged to deal with the subjects before it. In the Queen and Reinhart, it was a question of the greatest importance, on which the life of a man depended. The man was tried for murder, and the question whether that man could be tried or could be executed depended upon the decision of that court, and it decided that the line was a line drawn due north from the confluence of the two rivers. Until that decision was reversed it was the law of the land, and the hon. gentleman knows that Judge Armour, who before he was a judge, was selected specially by the Government of which that hon. gentleman was a member, to manage the case for the Dominion in respect to this boundary, in his evidence before the committee, declared that he would feel himself bound by the decision in the Queen against Reinhart. It was the law of the land until it was reversed by a superior tribunal. So the Dominion Government were bound to hold to that decision as a decision of a court of competent jurisdiction, until it was reversed. But the Government had no disinclination to have it reversed if the Supreme Court decided it was erroneous. They offered, in 1872, and repeated the offer again and again, but it was too valuable a political plaything to give up. It was kept to be used at the polls and on the stump, and therefore the plain, straightforward offer of the Dominion Government to go at once with the question and leave it to the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council was set aside and was only at last forced and dragged out of the Provincial Government. The hon. gentleman says: "But that boundary question was handed over to the Province of Manitoba, so that that Province might intervene in the matter." The Parliament of Canada was enlarging the boundaries of that Province, and it was necessary that there should be no interval between the Province of Manitoba and the Province of Ontario. The piece of land there would be too small to form a Province or to form a territory, and therefore the Government proposed, and Parliament adopted it, and it was declared that the western boundary of Ontario should be the eastern boundary of Manitoba. The reason and common sense were obvious. There was no use in having a small piece of land which was not fit to make into a Province or into a territory, and therefore the Government and Parliament adopted the suggestion made by the Government of which the hon. gentleman was a member, or at least by Mr. Mackenzie's Government, when they formed the Territory of Keewatin. In the statute forming that territory it is provided that the western boundary of Ontario shall be the eastern boundary of the District of Keewatin. And we did exactly the same thing. We copied the Act of the late Administration, when we made the boundary of the one the boundary of the other. Why the hon. gentleman brought in the Streams Bill I cannot well understand. Why did he bring that in? In order, he said, that he might show that I was not infallible. Well, Mr. Speaker, I had pretty good authority for my opinion on that subject. I know, of course, I had the authority of Mr. Mowat, the Attorney-General of the Province of Ontario, because he was so satisfied that according to law Mr. McLaren could hold those rights and exclusive privileges that he thought it necessary to introduce an Act to take them away. He believed that the law of the land would not take them away, so he introduced that Bill for the purpose of taking them away. It was on account of that course, it was because the Dominion Government held that it was a question of law then in litigation that should be left to the courts, and if the courts decided that Mr. McLaren was right it would be wrong to pass an Act to take that right away; and if the courts decided that Mr. Caldwell was right, then there was no necessity for the legislation at all, and therefore the Government disallowed it, in order that the case might go before the proper tribunals and be settled according to law and not according to the political exigencies of the Ontario Government. But not only was it the opinion of Mr. Mowat, but I believe I am not wrong when I say that the hon. gentleman himself, in his professional capacity as counsel for Mr. McLaren, gave his opinion that Mr. McLaren's contention was right.

Mr. BLAKE. No, you are not right.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. Then if I am not right I am informed very erroneously, and when another member of Parliament is in his place perhaps I shall bring up this question again in order that we may have this point settled. At all events, it was asserted in this House and not denied.

Mr. BLAKE. Not that I know of.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. Now, Mr. Speaker, I do not know whether there is to be an amendment moved to the Address or not. I thought I gathered from the hon. gentleman's remarks that he did not intend to move an amendment. The Speech I believe and consider to be a plain, straightforward, business-like document. The subjects to be submitted to Parliament are important, and we invite the earnest consideration of Parliament to those measures. We believe the time of the House will be usefully employed in the discussion of those measures. We have not put into the Speech, inserted into the mouth of the representative of Her Majesty, long essays upon constitutional law or upon the question whether myself was right or wrong, fallible or infallible. We have called the attention of the House to important subjects, and if it carries, as I believe it will, the measures that we are going to submit, the members of this House will have the pleasure of knowing and feeling, when they go home, that they have passed a useful Session and done great service to the country.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Mr. Speaker, I think it may be fairly left to the impartial judgment of this House, and also of the country, when they read the report of the two speeches, whether my hon. friend for West Durham (Mr. Blake) or the First Minister is the more obnoxious to the charge of having unduly wasted the time of the House on the present occasion. I partly agree with the First Minister, that it would not be expedient to enter on a discussion in detail, particularly as I propose at the earliest opportunity to discuss a good many questions to which the First Minister has alluded. I think I may also fairly congratulate the First Minister and the House on the fact that on the present occasion the First Minister has observed a moderation of tone and statement which it might have been well had he observed on other occasions. The First Minister, Mr. Speaker, is no bad type, on the whole, of that Spanish hero immortalized by Punch, who was awfully determined when he had twenty men to one, but who, when the odds were less enormously in his favor, usually found it convenient to remember that discretion was an important part of a general's duty. The First Minister, in old time, in fact, in very recent times, as some of us know to our cost, has found it much more convenient to gerrymander his political opponents out of existence than to face them on the floor of Parliament. Now, Sir, as I have said, having this propensity and this habit of mind, it might have been as well had he been less valiant, less pot-valiant, I might say, on the occasion of some recent demonstration in his honor when that hon. gentleman made certain statements to which I propose to call the attention of the House to-night—not solely on account of the personal elements they contain, but because there are certain important questions greatly affecting the welfare of this country underlying that hon. gentleman's utterances. He has had the opportunity to-night, if he had chosen to use it, to retract or to modify some of those statements, but he tells us that he adheres, if I understand him aright, to every word he has uttered. Sir, I propose to edify and amuse—perhaps to instruct—the House, by giving them a specimen of the statements to which the hon. Minister adheres, and which he is not disposed to modify or alter. I must apologise to the House if my own unworthy name appears a little too prominently in some of the statements I am about to read. It was not I who introduced it. I find that by reports in his organs, the First Minister is represented, on a very recent occasion to have delivered himself as follows:—

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD.

“He was an old Tory, the son and grandson of old Tories—and if it be true, as we believe, that grandfathers and fathers can look down upon what is going on among their descendants, how they would shudder, they who have sacrificed everything to their country and their Conservative principles, when they could see the honor conferred upon him because he had sold his party. (Loud cheers.) Ah, yes, gentlemen, he was a knightly man, was Sir Richard Cartwright. We know that knighthood is an order of chivalry, and that a knight should be a chivalrous man, and the first duty of every man is to be true to his allegiance, to be loyal to his party. (Cheers.) The duty of the knighthood, when occasion calls for it, is to surround the Sovereign and the Crown, and if necessary to fight in defence of that Crown. But Sir Richard Cartwright has set himself up as the champion of independence; he is set up to see how such a thing will be received by the people of this country. Mr. Blake will not commit himself to the policy yet; he will wait to see how the cat will jump—(laughter and cheers); and so they tried it the other day, and gentlemen, only think of it, the man who is a Privy Councillor of Canada, who has sworn allegiance to Her Majesty, Her heirs and successors—only think of it, the man who has accepted the order of knighthood at Her hands, who is supposed to have knelt at her feet, kissed Her hand and received the accolade on both shoulders—”

Now, Mr. Speaker, a question has arisen here of very great practical moment. I recollect, Sir, on the occasion that I received the honor of knighthood, I only received and the hon. Finance Minister only received the accolade on one shoulder. Now, I want to know, in my own interests and in the interest of the Finance Minister, in the interest of several of his own colleagues, has there been a mistake? Looking at the subsequent language of the hon. gentleman it may become an important question to the hon. Finance Minister and all the rest of us, who only got the accolade on one shoulder. Are we only half knights? I refer the question to the hon. gentleman, because knights of high degree, like the First Minister, are expected to be well up in the science of heraldry as well as of constitutional law. I refer to him—do knights of his high degree get the accolade on both shoulders, and do knights of the inferior order—Knights Commander—only get it on one? I only mention the question because, really, it seems to me that if it be otherwise then, Mr. Speaker (and I only venture the suggestion as a possible explanation of an otherwise inexplicable difficulty), is it possible that when the First Minister says he received the accolade on both shoulders, I say, is it possible he may have seen double? However that important question may be decided, and I commit it with all confidence to the Minister of Finance, who is interested with myself. It appears that the hon. gentleman continues:

“saying, ‘Rise, Sir Richard Cartwright, true, faithful and loyal’—fancy him preaching independence; fancy him casting aside the loyalty he has sworn to maintain and still flaunting the title of K.C.M.G.”

Up to this point the hon. gentleman had confined himself to simple prose, but here his feelings become too much for him and so he finally dropped into poetry, in the following remarkable fashion:—

“Mr. Chairman and gentlemen, when reading of this I think of the language put into the mouth of Lady Constance by Shakespeare, when he addresses the Archduke of Austria, after he had caused Prince Arthur to be killed—

‘Now, cold-blooded slave,
Didst thou not speak like thunder on my side,
Being sworn my soldier, bidding me depend Upon thy star, thy fortune and thy strength,
And dost thou now pass over to my foe?
Thou wear’st a lion’s hide—doff it for shame,
And hang a calfskin on thy recreant limbs.’”

Mr. Speaker, it is only fair to the First Minister to say that that great rhetorical effort from which I have quoted, and of which I make no doubt the hon. gentleman and his friends are justly proud, abounds with passages like these, passages of equal stateliness of diction, of equal loftiness of thought, of equally exquisite good taste. These little outpourings, as one may say, of a thankful heart and mind, tinged probably with a little glow of after-dinner enthusiasm, do infinite credit to the First Minister. I know from old recollection that the First Minister was always more conversant with Hudibras than with Shakespeare, and with Rabelais than either; but I really did not think that the First Minister's memory, in former times at all events, would have led him to make such an inapt quotation as that with which he wound up. If I remember anything of the play of King John, the identical language he quotes is uttered by a certain Sir Richard to a certain craven Grand Duke or Grand Cross, as the case might be, who came to condign punishment afterwards at the hands of the aforesaid Sir Richard. And if I recollect anything of my Shakespeare, and I knew something of his works in former days, it was not the Grand Duke who killed the unfortunate Prince Arthur, but his own uncle, King John. I do not want to criticise too severely these utterances of the hon. gentleman, but I advise him when he next drops into poetry to take the trouble to read the whole play, and then he will be able to quote it a little more correctly. But not content with poetry, the hon. gentleman went on, as he has not infrequently done before, to invoke the spirits of my ancestors, in order that they may inflict on me such punishment as he would like to inflict if his power were equal to his will. I recollect that about seven or eight years ago the hon. gentleman could hardly make a speech in which my name figured in which the ghosts of my ancestors did not appear, until at last, in pure self-defence, I had to do a little spirit raising on my own account, and on one occasion, before a large audience at Aylmer I invoked the spirit of my esteemed grandfather. I enquired of him how he would deal with the hon. gentleman under certain circumstances, and the reply, I remember, satisfied me and the large audience I referred to, that if the First Minister had lived in my grandfather's days and indulged his predatory and other instincts then as he has done in later times, the First Minister would undoubtedly have had infinitely more cause to shudder at the doom which my ancestor would inevitably have inflicted on him than ever my ancestor would have had to shudder at me. I may further tell him that, even if it should turn out, which is not so clear, that my grandfather's opinions and my own might differ on other matters, from all I know of the character of that worthy gentleman, I feel most positively certain that in the opinion he and I would have formed as to the hon. gentleman there would have been perfect unison between grandfather and grandson. But, Sir, the hon. gentleman undertook to speak of the sentiments which actuated the United Empire Loyalists of former times. I have to tell that right hon. gentleman that I do not admit that a man who never struck one honest stroke, who never spilled one drop of blood, who never lost a dollar, who never risked a foot of land in proof of his loyalty, is quite capable of understanding the feelings and sentiments of men who sacrificed everything that men hold dear for the sake of allegiance to their country. Sir, I do not mean to say that the hon. gentleman's loyalty is not very sincere. He says it is, and he ought to know. But this I do say, that that hon. gentleman's loyalty, ever since I have known him, has proved a most lucrative investment, politically and otherwise; that his is the sort of loyalty that pays; and if he wants a further certificate of character, I am prepared to assure Her Majesty that so long as it continues to pay, She will have no more ardent and devoted servant than the present First Minister of Canada. But these are minor matters; there are other and much more important ones to which I desire to call the attention of this House. I do not at all agree, I do not at all approve of the idea or the conception of the duties, and obligations of Canadian statesmen which underlies, not merely the passage I have quoted, but almost every word of the first half of the speech delivered by the hon. gentleman to his friends and admirers at Montreal—I say that his words and the ideas they imply are of the most mischievous character, and that it is in the interests of all of us that they should be repudiated by some person, at all events, on the floor of this House. We can gather from the language used by the hon. gentleman what his ideas are of the duties and obligations which Canadian statesmen owe to their country. For myself, I have to tell him that I stand here as the representative of a Canadian constituency, and as a Privy Councillor of Canada I am bound to give to Her Majesty or Her Majesty's representative that advice which in my heart I believe is best in the interest of the people of Canada. That is my plain duty, and that I propose to do at any cost. I can tell the hon. gentleman this, that the Canadian who does anything else, who fails to state what he believes to be for the interest of Canada, who allows himself to be silenced for any consideration whatever, is a traitor to his country. I say he is a traitor to his country. I am prepared to maintain here or elsewhere, against the hon. gentleman or against his friends, that the advice, or more correctly speaking, the warning I gave once or twice to the people of Canada, contained advice which is good for the people of the Dominion, and good also, when rightly understood, in the interests of the whole empire. But that is too large a subject to enter upon just now. What I mean to say is this, that if the view put forward by the right hon. gentleman, or implied by the right hon. gentleman, with reference to the duties and obligations which are assumed by Canadians who accept Imperial decoration be correct, if by receiving an Imperial decoration a Canadian statesman is bound to be silent when the interests of Canada require that he should speak, then, Sir, those decorations are not honors, but bribes. I wish the hon. gentleman to understand that, and it is well that the people of Canada should understand it too. Sir, the idea which the hon. gentleman has given utterance to are ideas which may suit political adventurers who have no drop of Canadian blood in their veins, no spark of honest regard for the true interests of Canada in their hearts. For myself I utterly repudiate those ideas, and I know this, that British statesmen of the highest rank, were they asked if the granting of Imperial honors to Canadian statesmen bound them to be silent when the interests of their country called upon them to speak, would repudiate the idea with the same disdain with which I repudiate it now. The truth is, that the whole tenor of the First Minister's speech is only one of a good many proofs of how far he is in reality, with all his pretence, behind the age—a proof that he is retrograde and reactionary in the highest degree. He goes to the middle ages for his fiscal policy; he takes as his guide, in the method of conducting a Government, the teachings of Sir Robert Walpole, and his ideas of free discussion are based on the times of the Stuarts and on those disgraceful periods of English history when it was ruled from the bench that the greater the truth the greater the libel, a doctrine which would suit the First Minister most admirably. Sir, I tell the First Minister that he knows very little—and perhaps it is unfortunate that he does know so little—of questions which are now seething in the public mind, questions which are not to be ignored, questions which he will soon discover, and perhaps some of his colleagues could tell him, will have to be faced before we are many years older. The hon. gentleman claims to be ultra-loyal, but I can recollect the time when the First Minister was not so ultra-loyal. It is true that at that period the First Minister was in Opposition, and it is possible that the fervent loyalty that he now professes does, sometimes, I do not say fall to zero, but experience a great cooling in the shades of Opposition. At any rate, I recollect when the First Minister was, if not the instigator of, at least the ardent sympathizer with that mob of disloyal partisans who burned the Parliament House of Canada, and pelted the Governor General, the representative of royalty, through the streets of Montreal. Sir, I recollect perfectly well the discussion which took place in this House with respect to the appointment of a certain Mr. J. M. Ferris to an important post under the Crown, and I remember that it was publicly stated here by many members of this House, several of them supporters of the First Minister, that one of his claims to recognition was the fact that he was a very old friend of the First Minister and a very active promoter of the burning of the Parliament House in the City of Montreal. My hon. friend from Durham (Mr. Blake) called attention to the fact that a certain well-known annexation manifesto is ornamented with the signature of an important member of the present Cabinet. My hon. friend might have added that if you choose to go back through the old Gazettes you will find the name of a certain Lieut. David Lewis Macpherson, who was turned out of the militia for rank disloyalty, and I would ask if this is the same David Lewis Macpherson who is now the friend and the associate of the First Minister. Upon the same manifesto is the name of no less a person than Sir John Rose, ex-Finance Minister of Canada. A little further down you will find the name of one Alexander Tilloch Galt, of whom it may be remembered, that before accepting the decoration which I now wear, he addressed a formal communication to Lord Carnarvon, then Secretary of State for the Colonies, in which he wished that it should be known before accepting that decoration that he was an advocate of the independence of Canada, and to whom Lord Carnarvon, than whom no more honorable nobleman exists, replied that he saw no reason in that fact why that gentleman should not accept that decoration. Must I recall the language of the Mail, which, if not the hon. gentleman's organ, is the next thing to it, in which, when it was pointed out that the fiscal policy which he inaugurated was likely to prove injurious to British connection, we were told that if that were the case it was so much the worse for British connection. Lastly, must I recall the conduct of the First Minister to Lord Lorne. Sir, this House remembers how Lord Lorne was exposed to unmeasured obloquy, how he was assailed by the right hon. gentleman's supporters and the press which supports those supporters, and we recollect the reason why. We recollect that at the earnest request of the First Minister, in order to extricate himself from a grievous political difficulty, Lord Lorne consented to refer a certain matter to England, and therefore he was assailed in a most virulent manner by a good many members of this House and a good many of the newspapers of this country. I have here the express and positive declaration of Lord Lorne that "on Wednesday, the second day of April, Sir John A. Macdonald again came to me and informed me that as an alternative to his (Lord Lorne's) refusal to dismiss Mr. Letellier, he suggested that the question involved in the dismissal of the Lieutenant-Governor of Quebec should be referred to Her Majesty's Government. I referred to this, and Sir John produced a note of the statement he proposed to make to the House on the subject." In another place he says that "on Wednesday Sir John again came to me, and informed me that, as an alternative, he suggested that the question involved in the dismissal of the Lieutenant-Governor should be referred to Her Majesty's Government." The man who gave the advice that Lord Lorne acted upon, that loyal and chivalrous person, sat mute, did not raise his hand, did not open his mouth, but allowed the representative of royalty, the Queen's son-in-law, to be assailed and traduced by his supporters, when one word from him would have closed their mouths. And having done so, he is the man who now lectures hon. gentlemen on this side of the House on their imagined disloyalty to the British Crown. I would advise the hon. gentleman to caution; I would remind him that persons who live in glass houses should be careful of throwing stones. Although I do not at the moment see the hon. Secretary of State in the House, it strikes me that on the occasion to which I have referred that hon. gentleman, to his credit be it said, took occasion to separate himself from his leader, and declare that he was not altogether averse to discussing the future of Canada. I say that the First Minister, not content with the assaults to which I have alluded, must needs make insinuations of a somewhat offensive character regarding certain Liberal leaders. They were to the effect that they had sought and supplicated for these honors. I do not know whether he meant to insinuate that I was one who had done so, but I can tell the First Minister that not only was that insinuation not a fact, at any rate as regards myself, and I believe as regards the other members of the late Cabinet, but it was the exact reverse of the fact. Not one of us, that I know of, ever sought or asked for any honor. Honors were tendered to us, and under circumstances which made the tendering of them peculiarly gratifying, because they were tendered after we had ceased in any way to control the destinies of the country. But, Sir, it is perfectly well known that so far from the Liberal leaders suing or supplicating for honors, my hon. friend here (Mr. Blake), my hon. friend who usually sits beside me (Mr. Mackenzie), and my hon. friend the late lamented Mr. George Brown, were all severally tendered honors, and all, for reasons which did them honor, saw fit to decline them. Can the First Minister say as much for his own colleagues? Will he rise in his place and say that his own colleagues did not sue and supplicate for honors? Sir, we know better. We know that members of his own Cabinet did sue and supplicate for honors. I think that Canadian statesmen, when they are freely and spontaneously tendered to them, may freely accept Imperial decorations tendered in the way I have described; but I can tell the hon. gentleman this, that no Canadian statesman worthy of the name, or worthy to hold such an important place, will ever stoop to sue or supplicate for honors in any quarter; and if, besides suing and supplicating, it is understood that men who accept them are bound to silence when the interests of their country demand that they should speak out, the case is ten-fold worse than that to which I have alluded. I fear that on the occasion I have referred to the First Minister's head was a little turned, and I am sorry for it, because, with all his faults—and they are neither few nor far between—I confess I had a better opinion of the First Minister. I thought there was enough self-respect and manliness left in him to prevent his using the language I was sorry to see he used with respect to the honor recently conferred upon him. That honor, Sir, was one of considerable importance. It was intended, no doubt, as a graceful recognition by Her Majesty of the growing importance of this great Dominion, and it is fitting that it should have been acknowledged, but acknowledged in a respectful and manly fashion. It was not a fitting thing that the First Minister of this Dominion should talk of a thing of that kind as an overwhelming honor conferred on him. Does the First Minister not know that within the last few years, again and again, honors of that kind, and of a much superior kind, have been conferred upon English statesmen, of Cabinet rank, it is true, but of no very high grade in their respective parties? Sir, I object on my part altogether to the use of such language, and I tell the First Minister that he ought to learn that the First Minister of Canada occupies such a position that he should not speak of overwhelming honors conferred upon him by any parties whatever. I tell the First Minister that the use of such servile and debasing language has only shown how unfit he is to be trusted in any matter affecting the honor of Canada. And if the hon. gentleman imagines that we are awe-struck on this side of the House because he is entitled to wear across his breast a red ribbon six inches wide instead of a red ribbon three inches wide around his neck, and to write after his name G.C.B. instead of K.C.B., all I can tell him is that long before this Session closes his mind will be wholly disabused of any such idea. Now, I am not going to allow the First Minister or his followers or press to allege that I in any way oppose or depreciate the honors which Her Majesty has conferred upon him. I may tell him that when I heard that the honor had been conferred upon him, the first feeling that filled my mind was one of lively gratitude, sympathy, and admiration, and I will tell him why;—in the first place, lively gratitude, because, when She saw fit to do this thing, Her Majesty had been graciously pleased to select the Order of the Bath, and not the Order of St. Michael and St. George; in the second place, I have the honor myself of knowing a reasonable number of Knights of the noble and honorable order of the Bath, and I know them to be gallant, truthful and upright gentlemen, and, therefore, for reasons which I will not go into at this moment, I feel they deserve the sincere sympathy of everybody who is acquainted with the antecedents of the hon. gentleman; and in the last place, if it be true, as asserted by the First Minister's press, that there are certain purifying and cleansing influences inherent in the ceremonial of the investiture of the Grand Cross of the Most Honourable Order of the Bath, then, Sir, I am filled with the profoundest admiration for the great wisdom of Her Majesty's advisers, inasmuch as I am perfectly satisfied that of all Her Majesty's three hundred million subjects, black, brown, white, yellow and copper coloured, there is no one who stands more desperately in need of every cleansing and purifying influence it is possible to bestow upon him than the last recipient of that distinguished honor. Moreover, I am bound to tell the House that there is precedent for it. I am not disposed myself to hunt up musty old precedents, but you know precedents are dear to every rightly constituted British mind, and I have a very recent precedent for the hon. gentleman's case which goes with it almost on all fours. About twenty-five years ago, under peculiar circumstances, Her Majesty was advised to bestow, and did bestow, the honor of the Grand Cross of the Bath upon another Prime Minister—the Prime Minister of the Principality of Nepal, Jung Bahadur. Now, Nepal, I may mention for the special information of the Finance Minister, is a Chinese Principality, paying tribute to Peking, and inhabited by a race of Chinese extraction; and from what I have heard, from the writings of Mr. Lawrence Oliphant, and from information that came to my knowledge while in London, I am inclined to believe, in point of scrupulousness, in point of regard for his word, and in point of dexterity in getting rid of his political opponents—although the oriental method had the merit of being considerably simpler and more effectual than the occidental one—and in what one may call his common walk and conversation, I believe there was not a pin's point of difference in the way of practical morality between the Prime Minister of Nepal and the present Prime Minister of the Dominion of Canada; and, therefore, I conceive that there was a good precedent for the bestowal of the distinguished honor of the Grand Cross of the Bath upon our Prime Minister. I mention that, because I know there are many who felt that it was rather to be regretted, taking all things into account, that Her Majesty's advisers should have been moved to take this particular action; and I wish here to say that I hold that it is not fair to throw any blame upon Her Majesty's advisers for their action in the matter. Let us be just. I think that the thing for certain reasons may have been regrettable, but not that Her Majesty's advisers are to blame. The parties who are to blame, to say the truth, are the majority of the electors of Canada—

Some hon. MEMBERS. Hear, hear.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT—who were ill-advised enough, knowing the antecedents of the First Minister, to elect him to the important office which he now holds, and to confirm him again in 1882. That these unfortunate people are likely to pay a most heavy penalty for their folly, will, I am afraid, be only too clearly shown when we have had an opportunity of perusing the Public Accounts, and of holding some further discussion on the results of the folly they then allowed themselves to commit. But if we are to blush for anybody, it is not for Her Majesty's advisers, but for that portion of the people of Canada who had so little sense of public honor and self-respect as, after what the hon. gentleman had done, to again entrust him with further powers of injuring his country. And I say that under these circumstances a decoration, more or less, is a very little matter. What is to be regretted is that being such as he is, having made such a use as he has made of the talents with which Providence has endowed him, the hon. gentleman should be to-day the First Minister of the country. Now, I have a warning to give the hon. gentleman. I can tell him this, that the next time he prates or vapors about his loyalty in this House, he will do well to wait until those gentlemen who, like myself, are acquainted with his previous career and antecedents, have ceased to have seats in the House. I can tell him that the next time he talks of the greed of Liberal leaders for honors he had better do so in the absence of two, at any rate, of his hon. colleagues who sit beside him and have recently received decorations. I can tell him that the next time he chooses to interdict free discussion in this House or elsewhere he had better do it in the absence of the hon. the Secretary of State. I can tell him that the next time he chooses to quote Shakespeare he would do well to read the drama from which he quotes before he introduces another quotation. I have further to say to the hon. gentleman, that I am perfectly aware of the extent of his patriotism and have tested the quality of his valor. I know what his loyalty is worth, and of one thing he may rest assured, that anything I choose to say elsewhere or here he will find me, fully prepared to maintain and to justify, and neither threats nor bribes from him or from any other party will prevent me, on any occasion I see fit, from advocating that course or from making any statements or tendering any advice which I believe to be on the whole for the interests of my native country.

Resolution agreed to.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD moved :

That the said resolution be referred to a Select Committee, composed of Sir John A. Macdonald, Sir Leonard Tilley, Sir Hector Langevin, the Hon. Mr. McLellan, Messrs. Taschereau and Townshend.

Motion agreed to.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD, from the committee, reported the draft of an Address, which was read the first and the second time and ordered to be engrossed, and to be presented to His Excellency by such members of this House as are members of the Privy Council.

SUPPLY.

Sir LEONARD TILLEY moved :

That this House will, on Tuesday next, resolve itself into a committee to consider of a Supply to be granted to Her Majesty.

Motion agreed to.

WAYS AND MEANS.

Sir LEONARD TILLEY moved :

That this House will, on Tuesday next, resolve itself into a committee to consider of the Ways and Means for raising the Supply to be granted to Her Majesty.

STANDING COMMITTEES.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD gave notice that he would move, on Monday next :

That a special committee of seven members be appointed to prepare and report, with all convenient speed, list of members to compose the Select Standing Committees ordered by the House on Thursday, the 29th inst., and that Sir John A. Macdonald, Sir Leonard Tilley, Sir Hector Langevin, Sir Richard Cartwright, Messrs. McLellan, Blake, and Vale do compose the said committee.

Mr. BLAKE. I should be very glad if the hon. gentleman would move that at once. Then we could meet on Monday. He might move instead of giving notice.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. I cannot do that, I think.

OFFICIAL REPORT OF THE DEBATES.

Mr. BOWELL. With the consent of the House, I will make the usual motion to appoint a committee to supervise the Debates of the House. It has been usual, on previous occasions, to make this motion without giving notice. I therefore move :

That a select committee be appointed to supervise the official report of the Debates of this House during the present Session, with power to report from time to time, said committee to be composed of Messrs. Béchar, Bergin, Colby, Charlton, Desjardins, Foster, Innes, Royal, Scriver, Somerville (Brant), White (Cardwell) and Woodworth.

It is the same committee as was appointed last year, with the exception of Mr. Woodworth, who is substituted for Mr. McDonald, called to the Senate.

Motion agreed to.

REPORT PRESENTED.

Annual report of the Department of the Interior, for 1884.—(Sir John A. Macdonald.)

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD moved the adjournment of the House.

Motion agreed to, and the House adjourned at 10:25 o'clock p.m.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.

MONDAY, 2nd February, 1885.

The SPEAKER took the Chair at Three o'clock.

PRAYERS.

REPORTS PRESENTED.

Trade and Navigation Returns for the fiscal year ending 30th June, 1884.—(Mr. Bowell.)

Report of the Minister of Public Works for the year ending 30th June, 1884; also, Report of the Minister of Justice on the Penitentiaries of the Dominion of Canada for the same year.—(Sir Hector Langevin.)

Public Accounts of Canada for the year ending 30th June, 1884; also, Report of the Auditor General for the same year. (Sir Leonard Tilley.)

Report of the Department of Indian Affairs for the year ending 30th June, 1884.—(Sir John A. Macdonald.)

Report of the Inland Revenue Department for the year ending 30th June, 1884.—(Mr. Costigan.)

COST OF PRINTING, AND ADVERTISING.

Mr. McMULLEN. I desire to enquire of the Government when they will bring down the Return ordered on the 14th of February last, showing :

The amounts paid by the Government to the Gazette Publishing Company, of Montreal, for printing, advertising, or any work done or material furnished during the years 1878, 1879, 1880, 1881, 1882, 1883, in detail.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD.

The hon. gentleman suggested that the words "and other newspapers of the Dominion" should be added, and the years 1874, 1875, 1876 and 1877 be also included, so that we might have a Return for the last ten years. The hon. gentleman at that time promised he would give this Return prompt attention. Eleven months have passed since and no return has yet come down. I would like to know what the probability is of that Return being laid before the House at an early day.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. I do not remember exactly the circumstances and have no doubt the Return was not ready at the end of the Session, but it will be brought down immediately.

Mr. McMULLEN. How soon?

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. There was a discussion on the subject, and I took occasion to point out to the hon. gentleman that the addition he proposed would probably entail six months labor for a dozen clerks, involving an expenditure unnecessarily of some thousands of dollars. He declared that all pains would be taken and all possible despatch used to give us the Return. It should be ready, therefore, by this.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. No doubt all those pains and this despatch were used, and the Return was not ready at the end of the Session. That was the reason it was not brought down, but it will be brought down immediately.

GRAND TRUNK RAILWAY STOCKHOLDERS.

Mr. MITCHELL. At this stage I would like to ask the Government, and I take the earliest opportunity of doing so that there may be no excuse with regard to time, whether they are yet prepared to lay before the House, in accordance with the Order of the House last Session, a list of the stockholders of the Grand Trunk and their residences.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. On account of the absence of the Secretary of State I cannot say whether that Return has yet been received or not. Of course it would be sent to him.

Mr. MITCHELL. I would like the hon. gentleman not to let it drift over for more than a week or two.

CIVIL SERVICE BILL.

Mr. CASEY. Seeing that the hon. Minister of Agriculture has been so prompt in giving notice of a couple of measures mentioned rather among the addenda in the Speech from the Throne, I would like to ask the Premier when the Civil Service Bill, also mentioned, will be brought down.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. That measure is under the charge of the Secretary of State. I believe it will be introduced in a few days.

SUPREME COURT.

Mr. LANDRY (Montmagny) moved for leave to introduce Bill (No. 3) to limit the appellate jurisdiction of the Supreme Court.

Mr. CASGRAIN. Explain.

Mr. LANDRY. (Translation.) The explanations which are asked from me, Mr. Speaker, are very simple, and the Bill itself will give them in full at the second reading. As the title indicates, it is intended to limit the jurisdiction of the Supreme Court as regards matters relating to civil law in the various Provinces. The object of the law is to withdraw those cases from the jurisdiction of the Supreme Court. If the Government intend to introduce a measure which would be better than mine, and which would be calculated to meet our views, I will not object to having it substituted for my Bill, but if they do not introduce a measure of that kind, I intend to ask the vote of this House.

Bill read the first time.

DISTRIBUTION OF ASSETS OF INSOLVENT DEBTORS.

Mr. CURRAN, moved for leave to introduce Bill (No. 4) for the distribution of assets of insolvent debtors. He said: This Bill has been prepared under the direction of the Boards of Trade of Montreal, Toronto, Hamilton and Winnipeg, and embodies the views of the commercial community of the Dominion.

Mr. MITCHELL. I would like to ask the hon. the mover of the Bill whether it contains any provision for the discharge of the debtors when their property is taken away. Without such a clause the Bill will be incomplete.

Mr. CURRAN. The promoters of the Bill have not thought proper to include a clause for the discharge of insolvent debtors. This Bill merely aims at an equitable distribution of the assets. However, as the matter is to be referred to a committee later on, any additions thought necessary will be made there.

Mr. MITCHELL. I understand that the Bill simply provides to take away the property of unfortunate debtors, but does not admit of the discharge of the debtors; I think it is a very one-sided affair.

Bill read the first time.

FIRST READINGS.

Bill (No. 2) to regulate the employment of children and young persons and women in the Workshops, Mills and Factories of the Dominion of Canada.—(Mr. Bergin.)

Bill (No. 5) respecting the liability of carriers by land.—(Mr. Coughlin.)

Bill (No. 6) to further amend the law of evidence in criminal cases.—(Mr. Cameron, Huron.)

THE FACTORY BILL.

Mr. BLAKE enquired, Whether it is the intention of the Government to introduce the Factory Bill?

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. That is under consideration.

CHINESE IMMIGRATION.

Mr. SHAKESPEARE enquired, Is it the intention of the Government to introduce a measure this Session restricting the immigration of Chinese into the Dominion of Canada?

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. Until the report of the Commission is received and considered, the Government have not come to any resolution on the subject.

PUBLIC DEBT OF CANADA.

Mr. CHARLTON enquired, The net amount of the public debt of Canada on January 1st, 1885?

Sir LEONARD TILLEY. The net debt of Canada on the 30th June, 1884, was $181,719,931.30; the increase of the debt from the 1st July, 1884, to the 31st December, 1884, was $7,194,953.75; total, $188,914,885.05.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Has the hon. gentleman the gross amount besides?

Sir LEONARD TILLEY. No. The question is not as to the gross amount.

CANADIAN PACIFIC RAILWAY LOAN.

Mr. CHARLTON enquired, Of the loan of $22,500,000 which Parliament at its last Session authorized the Government to make to the Canadian Pacific Railway Company, what amount has been paid over to that company up to January 29th, 1885?

Sir LEONARD TILLEY. The amount paid to the company up to the 29th January, 1885, is $18,591,600.

LIQUOR LICENSE ACT.

Mr. DESJARDINS enquired, Whether it is the intention of the Government to accept as final the judgment rendered by the Supreme Court as to the competency of the Dominion Parliament to pass the Liquor License Act, 1883?

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. A report is being obtained as to the effect the decision of the Supreme Court will have on the laws of the different Provinces. Until that is received—and it will be received in a few days—the Government cannot express any intention on the matter.

RESIGNATION OF CAPT. LUDGER BOLDUC.

Mr. LANDRY (Montmagny) moved for:

Return of all papers relating to the resignation of Capt. Ludger Bolduc, after the collision which occurred on the 20th May, 1884, between La Canadienne and the brig Alliance, of Jersey; covering complaint, enquiry, report, &c., and all correspondence relating to the matter.

Mr. LANGELIER. (Translation.) If the hon. member has no objection, I shall ask him to add to his motion a demand for papers concerning the appointment of that same Capt. Bolduc. The reason why I make the demand is this: Capt. Bolduc superseded Capt. Auguste Dupré, who commanded that steamer for several years without meeting with any accident whatever. For one reason or another means have been found to dismiss him and to appoint in his place Capt. Bolduc, to which the accident mentioned in the hon. member's motion has happened. Therefore, I shall ask him to add to his motion a demand for papers relating to the appointment of Capt. Bolduc.

Mr. LANDRY. I believe the hon. member wishes to mix up two questions which are altogether distinct and separate. If he wishes to get information he is at liberty to do what I am doing, by making a motion to that effect.

Mr. LANGELIER. I believe it is useless to make two motions for the same object.

Mr. LANDRY. It is not altogether the same object.

Mr. LANGELIER. Nothing is more natural than to ask for the circumstances of the appointment while asking for the circumstances of the resignation.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. I think the hon. member ought to give a notice of motion. I do not think there would be any objection, but at all events the Deputy Minister will be notified of the motion and he will be enabled to see whether the motion may be granted or not.

Motion agreed to.

GOVERNMENT DEPOSITS IN BANKS.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT moved for:

Statement showing the amount of money on deposit to the credit of the Government of Canada on the 1st day of January, 1885, whether in Canada or elsewhere, together with the names of the banks wherein the said moneys are deposited, with the amount in each bank respectively; also the amount at interest and the rate of interest, if any, allowed on the said deposits in each case.

He said: If the Finance Minister thinks that it would make no special delay I would make that the 1st of February, and save another motion.

Sir LEONARD TILLEY. Yes.

Motion, as amended, agreed to.

GOODS IMPORTED FOR CONSUMPTION.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT moved for :

Summary statement, similar to No. 2, in the Trade and Navigation Returns, of the goods imported for consumption, dutiable and free, in the Dominion of Canada, the amount of duty collected, and the rates of duty levied thereon, during the six months ending 31st December, 1884. Also, a similar statement to No. 5, in the Trade and Navigation Returns, of the goods, the produce and manufacture of Canada, exported from the Dominion of Canada for the six months ending 31st December, 1884.

Mr. BOWELL. There is no objection to the motion ; but the hon. gentleman must understand that it will be some time before the motion can be brought down as it involves a very large amount of labor and work.

Motion agreed to.

TIMBER LICENSES.

Mr. CHARLTON moved for :

1st. The total number of timber licenses or permits to cut timber granted since February 1st, 1883, and the total area covered by such licenses or permits ;

2nd. The total amount of bonuses or premiums paid on such licenses or permits ;

3rd. The name and residence of each grantee of a timber license or permit ; the number of the license or permit ; the area covered by each ; the date of application for the same ; the bonus or premium per square mile paid upon each : whether the survey of each berth or area covered by license or permit was made by the Government previous to granting the same, for the purpose of obtaining information as to its value ; and the information, if any, in the possession of the Government as to the quantity, quality and kind of timber upon each ; also, the location of each berth or limit ;

4th. The Crown dues or stumpage charged or chargeable on each license or permit ;

5th. Whether in each case where a license or permit was granted the berth was first put up at public auction after public notice inviting tenders was given, and was sold to the highest bidder, or whether granted upon application from the grantee without public competition being invited ;

6th. Copies of all petitions, remonstrances, claims, or communications sent or made to the Government respecting such timber licenses or permits ; and copies of all correspondence had with the Government respecting such lands, licenses or timber, and the action of the Government thereon.

He said : I notice in a Return laid upon the Table of the House very late last Session, in a statement showing the number of timber licenses and leases granted, area, bonuses, total amount of dues, etc., that the names of the grantees are omitted in each case ; in no instance are we able to say who were the parties to whom these leases were granted. I think this motion called for that information, and I consider it essential that the information should be given. I hope the Return to this motion will be made very soon, as there is nothing asked for here except the licenses actually granted, and I hope when that Return is made we may have the names of the parties to whom the licenses were given.

Mr. CAMERON (Huron). I think it is desirable to add, "assignees of Government licenses and the consideration expressed in the assignment of licenses."

Motion, as amended, agreed to.

MESSAGE FROM HIS EXCELLENCY.

OFFICIAL REPORT OF THE DEBATES.

Mr. WHITE (Cardwell) presented first report of the Committee appointed to supervise the official reporting of the Debates.

Mr. BLAKE. It would be convenient if the hon. member for Cardwell (Mr. White) would state when he proposes to ask the House to concur in the report of the Debates Committee which he has laid on the Table.

Mr. WHITE (Cardwell). I should like to do it to day. I have given the usual notice, but I will do it to-morrow if the House will consent.

CONSOLIDATION OF THE STATUTES.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD laid on the Table reports of the Commissioners appointed to consolidate and revise the Statutes of Canada. He said: There are two parts, and some tables are wanting to the second part. The whole of the revised Statutes are here, and the tables will be finished by the printers to-day or to-morrow. Then the whole will be distributed, with the tables. The French copies are not yet ready, but will be laid on the Table as soon as they are printed.
Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD.

Mr. BLAKE. I think that, with a reasonable notice of that kind, the hon. gentleman might move it, because it obviously involves a double impression being made in the meantime.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. I suppose the report will be printed in the Votes and Proceedings?

Mr. BLAKE. Yes, I suppose so.

ADVANCES TO PROVINCES.

Sir LEONARD TILLEY moved for leave to introduce Bill (No. 7) to amend the Act 37 Vic., cap. 17. He said: This is for the purpose of amending an Act which provides that the Dominion Government may, on application made by a Local Government, by Order in Council, advance to the Province or Provinces such sums of money as they may require for public works, out of the debt account. The amendment of the Bill requires that that application shall have the assent of the Legislature.

Mr. BLAKE. Of both Legislatures?

Sir LEONARD TILLEY. No; but, for instance, if an application should come from the Province of New Brunswick, the assent of the Legislature of that Province must be obtained to the proposal that the amount should be withdrawn from the debt account.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Does the hon. gentleman propose that this Government should have full power to refuse such application, or is the power to be given to the Provinces, as of course, to draw at any moment?

Sir LEONARD TILLEY. The law at the present moment is that this Government shall have the power to refuse any such application, but circumstances have occurred which have led the Government to believe that it is in the interest of all parties that the assent of the Legislature should be had to any such application.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. That is the only alteration?

Sir LEONARD TILLEY. Yes, that is the only alteration.

Mr. BLAKE. Of course it is quite competent for the Government, as an administrative act, to refuse to assent to the application of any Province unless it is backed by the assent of the Legislature. The Government is not under any compulsion to assent to any such application. It has power to say yea or nay; and, if at any time it thinks that the opinion of the Local Legislature, as well as that of the Local Executive should be given in regard to such an application, it has the power to say so.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. That is true, but the Government think it is well that no such responsibility should be thrown upon the Dominion Government, as, in refusing the application of a Provincial Government, it is at once brought into collision with that Government. We think that a vote of the Local Legislature should be obtained before any sum of money is withdrawn. Of course, no Government—either Dominion or Provincial—ought to use money without consent of Parliament. Hitherto, under the law which was introduced for a very good purpose by my hon. friend for East York (Mr. Mackenzie), the Provincial Government is enabled to apply for an advance out of the money at its credit for local purposes, but it does not appear on the face of the application whether there has been a vote of the Local Legislature or not; and this amendment is proposed in order to avoid all question in regard to the matter, and to avoid all possible collision between the Provincial and Dominion Governments in regard to it.

Mr. MACKENZIE. I suppose even Ontario will participate?

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. Even Ontario will participate.

Motion agreed to, and Bill read the first time.

LETTER POSTAGE.

Mr. HESSON enquired, Whether it is the intention of the Government to reduce the rate of postage on letters to two cents per $\frac{1}{2}$ oz.?

Mr. CARLING. It is not the intention of the Government during the present Session to reduce the postage on letters to two cents.

PACIFIC RAILWAY.

Mr. LANDRY (Montmagny) moved for:

Copies of all Orders in Council, instructions given, reports of engineers, and all documents whatsoever, in relation to the selection of the shortest and best line for a railway between the present terminus of the Canadian Pacific Railway and one of the seaports of the Maritime Provinces.

He said (Translation): Mr. Speaker, I do not intend to deal lengthily with this question, at this stage of the Session, for I understand that the papers, on which any debate ought to be based, to be of advantage to public interest generally, and to the Province of Quebec in particular, have not yet been brought down. But I take this opportunity of calling the attention of the Government to a certain rumor, now in circulation, and of which it is expedient to inform the Government. It has been recently stated that an exploration had been made from St. Charles station on the Intercolonial towards the Seven Island through the fifth or sixth range of the township of Montmagny. By taking this line we reach a certain knoll, a certain hill, whose summit is about 400 feet above the ordinary level in those parts. It seems a report on this question has been made to the Government who gave instruction to the explorer, Mr. Light, to discontinue the exploration. In spite of that, according to the rumor, the engineer took upon himself to make an exploration by going round the mountain, and discovered a route just as short, and even shorter, than the proposed line, if the grade is taken into consideration. Nevertheless, rumor has it—I do not wish to affirm anything, but rumors are always allowed to be repeated—that the Government have not yet given, or does not wish to give, instructions to this engineer to the effect that what is called an instrumental survey should be made on this new line. I wish to call the attention of the Government to these facts, at this stage of the Session, so that they may not, at a more advanced stage, come to us and say: We have encountered insuperable difficulties. Indeed, these difficulties are not unconquerable, as the Government may see for themselves, by referring to the last reports fyled by Mr. Light, the engineer. These are the only remarks I shall make to-day, and I have deemed it my duty to make them, so that I may not be charged, later on, with having failed to make them in proper time.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. (Translation.) Mr. Speaker, my colleague, the hon. Minister who is in charge of the Railway Department, is not present, but I shall not fail to repeat to him the remarks just made by the hon. member. I am convinced that he will be most happy to receive the information just given, and that he will not fail to give the necessary instructions.

Motion agreed to.

RETURN ORDERED.

Copies of all correspondence between the Federal and Ontario Governments and the Imperial Government, on the subject of the Imperial Act, 21-22 Victoria, Chapter 90, known as the British Medical Act, 1858; the Imperial Act 31-32 Victoria, Chapter 29, known as the British Medical Amendment Act, 1868; the Imperial Act 41-42 Victoria, Chapter 33, known as the Dentists' Act, 1878; and the amendments proposed to be made thereto, during the present Session of the Imperial Parliament.—(Mr. Bergin.)

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD moved the adjournment of the House.

Motion agreed to, and the House adjourned at 3.55 p.m.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.

WEDNESDAY, 4th February, 1885.

The SPEAKER took the Chair at Three o'clock.

PRAYERS.

OFFICIAL REPORT OF THE DEBATES.

Mr. WHITE (Cardwell). It was understood yesterday that I should to-day move the adoption of the report of the Committee on the Debates of this House. I may say that information has reached me since the report was presented, which will lead me to propose to refer the first part of it back to the Committee for further consideration—that is, the part having reference to the resignation of the head of the French translators' staff, the appointment of another in his place, and the appointment of another translator to fill the vacancy. I propose only to move, therefore, the other part of the report, which it is important to pass upon at once, because it involves a change in the distribution of the reports, and we ought to know the result as soon as possible. I beg, therefore, to move:

That so much of the first report of the Select Committee appointed to supervise the report of the Debates of this House during the present Session, as refers to the daily issue and the distribution of the bound copies of the said report, be adopted.

I may say that the effect of this, so far as the cost is concerned—and I have got the figures made up by the Printing Department—will be an annual saving of about $1,072. Last year we agreed to give to each member of the House five copies of the bound Report; this year some members of the Committee have had communication during the Recess with a number of members of the press, who have complained that the unrevised copies that are sent to the newspapers throughout the Dominion, are of practically little use, because they are not revised or corrected; that they may in fact be led into serious error by the Report—and none but serious errors are permitted to be corrected—and it may thus through the newspapers become the permanent record of that serious error in respect to the member of any particular constituency. Journalists would greatly prefer to have the perfected copies sent to them at the end of the Session, and give up altogether the daily distribution. With the view of accomplishing that end without adding to the cost, it is thought that the members will agree to give up three of their copies. Last year it was agreed to give five bound copies of The Debates to each member, so that they might be able to distribute some of them among their constituents; but I think experience has shown that the three or four extra copies for each member is not enough to make a satisfactory distribution, but just enough to make it really embarrassing. It is desirable to give bound copies to libraries, mechanics' institutes and institutions of that kind, and the proposal of the Committee is to have such a reserve of copies by means of this change that they will be able to give a bound copy of The Debates to each institution, so that they may be accessible to any person in the locality who may desire to consult them. In that case the members will receive only two bound copies instead of five, as heretofore. The number to be bound will be exactly the same as last year. The number of newspapers on the distribution list is about 500 English and 60 French. We will have 100 more English copies bound and 100 less French copies, so that in the aggregate the number of bound copies will be exactly the same. There will be a saving of 560 copies for daily distribution, which would, I have said, amount to a saving, according to a statement made in the Printing Department, of $1,072 on the whole.

Mr. BLAKE. Would the hon. gentleman state what is the saving effected on the daily distribution by itself—the diminution of the press daily copies?

Mr. WHITE. About 560 copies a day.

Mr. BLAKE. And how much is it in money?

Mr. WHITE. $1,072. Outside that saving the condition is precisely the same as before. We print and bind the same number of completed copies, but instead of giving five copies to each member we give him two copies, and the other three will go to supply the press with bound copies.

Mr. BLAKE. I am very glad the hon. gentleman proposes to refer back the first part of the report—not that I have any information as to the individual who has been named, but because I think it will be a good thing, unless special circumstances require otherwise, that in all cases of vacancy on this staff an opportunity should be given, after knowledge of the vacancy has become public, for applications to be made to the Committee in order that they may have a large range of applicants from whom to choose. I say I know nothing of the individual, but I think that will be a wholesome rule to follow, and I hope that the Committee will adopt it with reference to this appointment. As to that part of the report before us, I must confess that I view with great regret the proposal of the Committee to discontinue the daily distribution to the press of the country. We have a system, whether it be for good or ill, of publishing an Official Report of The Debates, and the system necessarily impairs the fullness of the publication by the other media of communication to which the public has been accustomed to look. The great newspapers of the country do not publish as full reports as they otherwise would of the debates. Now, it is very important that the only medium practically superseding all other media the only medium by which the public can attain a knowledge of what goes on here, and as it goes on here, which is through the circulation, directly or indirectly, of their official reports—I say I think it of great consequence that the press of the country should have an opportunity, while the debates are going on, while Parliament is sitting and as soon as possible after the utterances of members have taken place here, of knowing what the views are of the public men of the country, the representatives of the people, what the current of discussion has been in respect of the matters which are in agitation. Full use is not made—I regret to be obliged to express the opinion that sufficient use is not made—of this daily issue. That we cannot help, but I think it is our business to give an opportunity to the daily press—I do not say of publishing our long speeches at all—but of having that information which is to be derived from a perusal of the debates and to express their views and frame their articles upon questions of public policy. I am not at all opposed, as long as the system of Hansard goes on, to arrangements being made by which the press of the country should receive a record in a permanent form of the debates, as well as the daily issue. That is another question. If we are so variable as to decide that what we solemnly determined last Session was a mistake, that it was an error to give five copies to members, as the Committee proposed last Session, well and good; if it is decided that some other use of these extra copies, which is a better use, can be made, well and good; but it does seem to me an important thing, as long as we preserve an official debate, that we should not cut off the supply to the press from day to day of the means of obtaining early and authentic information of what goes on here.

Mr. CHARLTON. I believe the conclusion arrived at by the Committee to send bound volumes of The Debates to the newspaper press in place of the daily issue, was in consequence of an application by the newspaper press of the country. Representations were made by those gentlemen that the daily issue was practically useless to them, that in point of fact it was not an authentic copy, not a revised copy, and that in being guided by it they were likely to make serious mistakes, and that, therefore, the bound copy would be much more valuable to them. It was to meet their views that the Committee took action with reference to substituting bound copies for the daily issue. The Committee sought to make an arrangement by which the expense of The Debates would not be increased by this change, and they have done so. It was thought the members of the House would give up the privilege of having five copies and taking two instead, in order that the expense might not be increased. I presume that the great mass of the newspapers in the country would prefer the bound volumes to the daily issue, and in that belief this change is proposed by the Committee.

Mr. CASEY. I do not know how thoroughly the members of the Committee have been able to consult the press in reference to this matter, but I am quite sure that the members of the press are not the only parties who should be considered in this matter. If they are under the impression for the time being that a bound volume at the end of the Session would be of more use than the daily issue, I do not know that we are obliged to accept that conclusion as final. I quite agree with the opinion expressed by my leader that the press ought to have both—I think I understood him to that effect. I quite agree that the unrevised reports of the speeches here are sometimes erroneous; but I must pay this tribute to the Hansard staff, that the reports are on the whole and in the average, remarkably good; that they are infinitely better, in my opinion, than any reports that could be secured by any newspaper sending reporters here at its own expense; that they, therefore, form an infinitely more correct representation of what passes in this House than any newspaper in the country could secure if the daily issue of unrevised reports were cut off. I am, therefore, strongly of the opinion that the daily issue should be continued as the only means whereby the press can comment intelligently, and at the time when comment is needed, on what passes in this House. We all know that the bound volumes do not come out until the middle of summer, and by that time newspaper comment on what passes this week or during the next few succeeding weeks would fall very flat. It is of the highest importance that the newspapers should possess for the purposes of comment the best obtainable report of the speeches here immediately after they are delivered. As regards the proposal to deduct three copies from each member of the House in order to provide bound copies for the press, I am not quite inclined to agree with the Committee. I have not found that the five copies which I have received this year were too many for the demands I had for them. I do not think any hon. member will say that he had any difficulty in disposing of his four spare copies. We nearly all have not only institutions that should possess a record of this kind, but in nearly every constituency there are leaders of opinion who likewise ought to possess the record to enable them to form their own conclusions and assist in forming opinion in the neighborhood as regards political matters. If it is necessary to retrace somewhere in order to provide bound copies for the press, I believe it can be effected in regard to the publication of other documents with which we are deluged, many of which are of very little general interest. Many of these documents, which are published at a large public expenditure, possess very little interest, and in many cases they possess interest only to members from one part of the Dominion. Retrenchment might be made in this direction, not only sufficient to give the press bound volumes of Hansard, but to provide us with a larger number of reports of general interest, in regard to which I shall take another opportunity of speaking.

Mr. HESSON. I am very glad to approve, for once, of the opinion expressed by the hon. member for West Elgin (Mr. Casey). No doubt the report expresses the feeling of newspapers which have representatives here; but there is a large number of papers which have no representatives here, and they are equally important in the different counties in which they are published. The work of the reporting staff has certainly improved very much as compared with that done during the first few years I had any experience of it in this House. I think their reports are very fairly correct, and where there are any errors worth noticing they can be corrected by members for the bound volume. As regards the distribution of the five copies allotted to members last year, I quite agree with the hon. member for West Elgin, that there was not much difficulty experienced in distributing them, and we could have distributed many more. I was able to supply the reading room of the Mechanics Institute and the reading room of the Grand Trunk Railway, and also two leading papers of my county, leaving myself one copy. I cannot conceive why the Committee propose to give us two bound volumes instead of five. I should prefer that one volume be given rather than two volumes. If we receive five copies I can distribute four to the institutions and newspapers of the county, but I should not know what to do with a single extra copy. It would be better to leave the matter as it is at present.

Mr. SOMERVILLE (Brant). The change in regard to the distribution of Hansard was made in the Committee at my suggestion. I took occasion during last summer to consult with a number of the newspaper men of Ontario, and from the views they expressed to me I am satisfied that the change proposed will meet with their approbation. The copies of Hansard supposed to be distributed daily from the House are not distributed daily, but they are often received at the newspaper offices in bundles of five or six issues. The newspapers throughout Ontario, to my knowledge, depend more especially on the reports which appear in the leading dailies for their reading with respect to the proceedings of Parliament. In sending to the press the advance sheets, the newspapers not only get incorrect reports which cannot be referred to with authority afterwards, but they do not receive an index, and consequently, if they desire to bind the Hansard at the close of the Session, they find they have not correct copies of the reports of the House as authorized, and have not an index by which they can refer to any particular speech that may be contained therein. I think in the interest of the newspapers the change which has been suggested is a good one, and I am satisfied it will meet with the approbation of nine-tenths of the newspaper publishers of the Dominion. The advance sheets are practically of no use to them at the present time, whereas the bound volumes would be of great service, especially during the progress of elections in the coming years. The change, I repeat, is a desirable one in the interests of the newspaper men. If it is the wish of the House to furnish the advance sheets as well as bound copies, the newspaper men will not object; but if it is to be a choice between the daily issue and bound volume, nine-tenths of the press will prefer to obtain bound volumes at the close of the Session.

Mr. MITCHELL. I have listened to this discussion, and I must say I entirely agree with the hon. member who opposed the report submitted by the hon. member for Cardwell (Mr. White). I have heard no other ground for the change advanced than this: That when the daily reports are sent to the newspapers, they fail to obtain an index with them, and at the end of the Session they have the loose copies which are not of the same service as a bound volume with an index would be. The difficulty can be surmounted very easily. I understand from a member of the Committee that it will take 500 bound volumes to supply the press with the complete report, index included, ready for the library. In the meantime the points presented by the hon. member for Elgin strike me as having a great deal of sound, common sense. The bound volumes do not get out till well on in the summer. The questions discussed are live questions only during the sitting of Parliament and for a very short time afterwards—at all events a very large majority of them are so. It is of the greatest importance that the press should have access to the debates at length, presented to them in an official character as the discussions go on. What difficulty is there in securing this? It is said that some of the debates so printed are issued in an incorrect form. I must say this for the gentlemen who occupy the position of official reporters in this House, that whenever I have had occasion to look carefully over the speeches I have delivered I have found that they have been reported generally very accurately, and I have heard from others no very serious complaints in that respect; and I think it would be depriving the public—the clientèle of the newspapers of the country—of an amount of information which they should not be deprived of, if they were prevented from having access to the daily official reports as printed by this House, and, therefore, I should oppose the portion of the report which makes a recommendation to that effect. I know that gentlemen who occupy positions on the Committee and have before them the reasons pro and con as to any particular change or amendment, should have every consideration given to any conclusions at which they arrive, but I have heard no sufficient reason to satisfy me that we should deprive the papers of these daily reports. If it is necessary to give them additional advantages let us add to the cost—I am told it will only cost something about $1,000 to furnish the bound copies of these reports—and give them to the newspapers, bound and indexed complete.

Mr. MILLS. I cannot say that I concur in the report of the Committee. I think the system which was followed last year is of more service than the one the Committee have proposed. It is my impression that it would be a great advantage to the press to have the bound copy, but if they are obliged to choose between the bound copy and the current publication from day to day, if the press does its duty, it appears to me that the current publication is of far more consequence than the bound volume. It is no doubt very useful during an election campaign to have these official reports to refer to, and newspaper men during an election find it very convenient to have a volume of the Debates at hand from which they can see what has been said upon questions which are made the issue in an election contest. But the members of this House have opportunities of acquiring information upon questions of public importance and public interest which are not open to the press, and unless the press have those daily official reports of The Debates of this House they have not the necessary means for criticising and discussing the views which are enunciated in Parliament by the representatives of the people.

Whether it be advantageous to issue a smaller number of copies to the members, each member is able to judge best for himself. If the Committee feel that it is necessary in the public interest, and with a view to the present condition of the public revenue, to economise in this particular, I do not make any objection, but I think it would be very unfortunate if the press of the country were deprived of the current numbers of The Debates as they are issued from day to day. I think it is well that they should have the bound copy, but I think it is of still more consequence that they should have the daily issue. If what the hon. member for Brant says (Mr. Somerville) is true it only shows that some person in the Post Office Department or the Distribution Office is not doing his duty, because members of the press should receive these publications from day to day precisely as members do. They should not be mailed in large bundles at long intervals, but should be issued to the press promptly as they are published.

Mr. WHITE (Cardwell). The question of the daily distribution to the press seems to be the point upon which there is great difference of opinion. If that distribution is to be continued and members will give up three of their five copies—

An hon. MEMBER. Make it four.

Mr. WHITE. No, three is the number mentioned in the report—I say in that case we go on just as we did last year in the matter of cost; that is to say, we can continue the daily distribution to the press without adding to the cost, and give them a volume at the end of the Session. I may say, however, that the suggestion to abandon the daily distribution came from the press itself. I think, as one knowing something about the matter, that there is no hon. gentleman in this House who is better acquainted with the sentiments of the press of Ontario, at all events, than the hon. member for Brant (Mr. Somerville), and the suggestion came from him as representing largely the feelings of the journalists of Ontario themselves. If it is desirable to give the journalists both the daily edition and the bound volume I would suggest that the better plan would be for some member who takes that view simply to move an amendment that the daily distribution to the press be continued, and then the part of the report providing that two copies be given each member and the other copies to the press might be adopted.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. It has been suggested, after hearing the discussion, that the motion stand over until to-morrow, when we shall have had an opportunity of considering it.

Mr. BLAKE. I would suggest for the consideration of the House that if it is desired to produce the same result of economy which is proposed by the report, it would be better done by our giving up one of our three daily copies, and letting that go towards the economical view of the question.

Mr. WHITE (Cardwell). Perhaps the First Minister would let the report go back to the Committee and we will reconsider the whole matter in view of the discussion which has taken place.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. I move in amendment that the report be not now received but that it be referred back to the Committee for further consideration.

Amendment agreed to.

JOINT COMMITTEE ON THE LIBRARY.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD moved that a Select Committee composed of Messrs. Blake, Cameron (Huron), Caron, Colby, Daly, Davies, Desjardins, Fortin, Laurier, Macmillan (Middlesex), Ouimet, Scriver, Tassé, Weldon, Mr. MILLS.

Wells, and Wright, be appointed to assist Mr. Speaker in the direction of the Library of Parliament, so far as the interests of this House are concerned, and to act as members of a Joint Committee of both Houses on the Library, and that a message be sent to the Senate acquainting their Honors therewith.

Motion agreed to.

PENSIONS TO WIDOWS OF VETERANS.

Mr. ROBERTSON (Hastings) enquired, Is it the intention of the Government to extend to the widows of pensioners of 1812-14, payment of the pension?

Mr. CARON. It is not the intention of the Government to extend the pensions of 1812-14 to widows.

McISAAC'S POND, INVERNESS.

Mr. CAMERON (Inverness) enquired, Whether it is the intention of the Government to grant any money during the present Session of Parliament to make McIsaac's Pond, Inverness, a harbor of refuge for vessels engaged in coasting and fishing on the north-west coast of the Island of Cape Breton?

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. In 1879 this matter was brought before my Department, and was reported upon by the Chief Engineer, who disapproved of the plan. In 1882 a thorough survey of the locality was made by an officer of the Department, and the matter was considered by the Chief Engineer and an estimate made of the cost. The estimate amounted to $145,000. Therefore, I must answer that it is not the intention of the Government.

CANADIAN PACIFIC RAILWAY—THE GOVERNMENT MORTGAGE.

Mr. BLAKE enquired, Whether any proposals or suggestions, written or verbal, have been made by the Canadian Pacific Railway Company, or by any of its officers or directors, to the Government, or any Minister, for any pecuniary relief, or for the postponing or any alteration in the status of the Government mortgage, or for the freeing of any pledged property, or for the purchase by or surrender to the Government of any lands, or for the surrender of the undertaking to the Government, or for any change of any kind; and, if so, what is the existing condition of affairs?

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. No applications have been made by the Canadian Pacific Railway Company of the nature suggested in this question. As to verbal conversations between members or officers of the company and members of the Government, I do not feel called upon to say anything.

TRADE WITH THE AUSTRALIAN COLONIES.

Mr. MITCHELL moved for:

Copy of all correspondence between the Government of Canada and the several Governments of the Australian and Tasmanian Colonies, or any one acting on their behalf, in relation to the establishing of a more direct communication and extension of trade between these Colonies and Canada; also, all correspondence between the Government of Canada and the British Government on the same subject.

He said: I will not take up the time of the House by referring at any length to this matter. I would simply say that in view of the agitation which has been started in England in favor of federating the Empire, I submit this resolution for the purpose of ascertaining whether Canada has had any negotiations with the next greatest colonies of the Empire, the Australian colonies, or whether the latter have expressed any desire, with reference to closer trade communication than already exists. I think it very desirable that information should be given to Canada in relation to the steps taken, if any, to open up trade between Canada and the Australian colonies. We know that between the United States and the Australian colonies a very large trade exists. We know that there is steam communication between those countries, and that lines of sailing vessels have been established, and have done a very large trade with New York and other American ports. I think it very desirable, in the interest of Canadian manufactures and of the Canadian people, that closer communication, for trade purposes at any rate, should be established between these colonies, and I make this motion to ascertain whether our Government are doing their duty by taking any steps to open up such communication, and what those steps are.

Motion agreed to.

THE RECENT LOAN.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT moved for :

Copy of the prospectus of the loan recently issued in London; also a statement showing the amounts of the commission and other charges paid thereon and to whom paid, together with the amounts of the said loan subscribed for by the Financial Agents of the Dominion, or by the Bank of Montreal, with the dates of the said subscriptions, and copies of all Orders in Council connected with the said loan.

Sir LEONARD TILLEY. There is no objection to the motion and the information will be furnished with the least possible delay, as far as it is in the power of the Government to give it, but, as the hon. gentleman who moved the resolution understands perfectly well, the Government do not possess the names of the parties tendering. In the Public Accounts laid on the Table of the House we have given in detail the information furnished us as to the different tenders, but the information in possession of the Government will be furnished immediately.

Mr. BLAKE. It is impossible then to give the names. I remember some very serious animadversions on my hon. friend (Sir Richard Cartwright) some years ago, because he declined to give the names, but the hon. gentleman finds it impossible to do that which my hon. friend was condemned for not doing.

Sir LEONARD TILLEY. I know nothing about that.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. The hon. gentleman was otherwise occupied then.

Mr. BLAKE. I do not say that the hon. gentleman said so; he was then in a happier place.

Motion agreed to.

ADVERTISEMENTS FOR LOAN.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT moved for :

Return giving the names of all newspapers in which the Loan recently issued in London was advertised, together with statement of length of time during which said advertisement appeared.

Sir LEONARD TILLEY. There is no objection to this. I would suggest to the hon. member, as he is no doubt anxious to get the fullest information before the House, that he include the loans of 1874, 1875, 1876 and 1878 as well.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. I have no objection, but I want to call the attention of this House to a practice which is becoming very inconvenient. Motions have been moved for again and again which could be granted in a few days as they were made; but for reasons of their own, such as those which were alluded to not very long ago, these returns are often encumbered by the Government with a huge mass of perfectly unnecessary and useless matter, costing unnecessary expenditure of thousands of dollars. I have not the faintest objection to the hon. gentleman altering that motion if he likes. I do not think it affects or will affect the question in the slightest degree. I suppose though that it is not going to cause this information, which is of very practical importance, to be delayed for several months until it will be of no use to me or anybody else.

Sir LEONARD TILLEY. I move that the motion be amended by striking out all after the word "which" in line 2 of the said motion, and inserting the following instead thereof:—

"the Loans of 1874, 1875, 1876, 1878 and 1884, were advertised, together with a statement of length of time, during which the said advertisements appeared."

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. How soon will that be furnished?

Sir LEONARD TILLEY. I imagine I can get the same information as for 1884, which is upon the charges made by the agents. We can turn them all up by going back a few years, the same as we can for 1884.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. No necessity to send to England.

Sir LEONARD TILLEY. No.

Motion, as amended, agreed to.

BANK ADVANCES TO GOVERNMENT.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT moved for :

Returns of amount of sums advanced to the Government of the Dominion by way of loan by any banks or persons in Canada or England on the 1st February, 1885.

He said: All I want to know is what amount, if any, has been loaned to the Government by those institutions.

Motion agreed to.

OPERATIVES IN FACTORIES.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT moved for :

Returns, statements or correspondence in possession of the Government, showing the number of operatives employed in factories in the Dominion in 1878 and 1884, together with the amount of capital invested and wages paid.

He said: This has reference to certain statements recently made by the hon. the Minister of Finance in another place. I understood him to say that his comparisons were made between 1878 and 1884. If not with the year 1884, I will alter the motion to whatever year the information he referred to was obtained for. I notice that there are certain sums placed in the warrants of the Governor General, certain charges made for this information, and it is obviously desirable that, even if it be in an imperfect state, whatever information the hon. Finance Minister possesses on the subject, on the strength of which he made these statements, should be laid on the Table at the earliest moment.

Sir LEONARD TILLEY. I may state for the information of the mover that it is scarcely necessary to press his motion, though we have no objection to it, as a Return is now being prepared, to be submitted to the House at once, and will be laid before the House before the financial statement is made. The information is now being put in form, so that it will be accessible, in the readiest possible form, for hon. members of the House.

Motion agreed to.

VOLUNTEERS OF 1837 AND 1838.

Mr. HICKEY moved :

That it is expedient that some suitable recognition be made by the Government to the Volunteers of 1837 and 1838 for the very valuable services they rendered in defence of their country at that time.

He said: In bringing this motion before the attention of the House I am quite aware that the claim which is presented in it has also been presented to this Parliament at previous Sessions by other hon. gentlemen. But, Sir, having the honor to represent a county in which many of those veterans reside, I have felt it my duty towards them to again press this claim upon the attention of the Government and Parliament, and also to pay my homage to those principles which actuated them to stand by their country and defend its Government. In doing so, I am not unmindful of the fact that those who were at that time in arms against the authorities have since become loyal, true and faithful citizens; nor have I forgotten that the cause which those people then endeavored to maintain might fairly be considered an honest and just cause; but this should not overshadow or obliterate the great fact that these loyal and forbearing men who turned out in 1837 and 1838 did so at the command and call of their country. It was not for them to ask or reason why they were called upon to stand by the Crown, theirs was to do their duty. I think that great principle should not be forgotten, and in these days, when we hear hon. gentlemen, who have attained to some fame, talking about annexation and about proclaiming the independence of Canada, it will not be unprofitable to take a retrospective view and learn something from the political scenes of the yesterdays of our country. The House well understands that the great result which was evolved from the patriotic devotion of those men in 1837-38 is that we have this great and glorious country of Canada to-day—a united Canada. Had these men failed at that time in obeying the call of their country, what condition we would have been in to-day it would be difficult to say. Canada might have been a thing of the past altogether, and we might not have had the glorious right of maintaining our nationality as we do now. It has occurred to me that, in the great wealth of the North-West, the Government might find some means of giving a homestead right or a portion of land to those soldier patriots of 1837-38, and in this way would satisfy, I believe, their just and honest claims. I think the present time is opportune, and that those claims might be acknowledged now.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. I quite appreciate the motive that induces my hon. friend to make this motion, and I agree with him in his sense of the loyal spirit which induced the volunteers to obey the call of their country during the disturbances in 1837-38. Those disturbances have long passed. They took place long before the Dominion existed. The claim of those volunteers either in Upper or Lower Canada is upon the Government of those two Provinces. The Dominion being composed of a number of different Provinces, which had no concern in those disturbances and are not called upon in any way to recognise those services. It appears to me that this cannot be the place where those services can be recognised. They should be recognised by the different Provinces where the disturbances took place and where the volunteers performed their duty.

Mr. BLAKE. I quite agree in the hon. gentleman's view on this subject, as I did before, and I am glad to seize an opportunity of agreeing with him—when the matter came up in a former Parliament, and I may say to the hon. gentleman, who was not a member of that Parliament and may not be aware of the fact, that that view has been already taken by the Legislature of the Province of Ontario in the first Legislature of that Province, under the lead of the late Mr. Sandfield Macdonald, when they felt that it was for them to deal with questions which might arise out of those disturbances, and acted accordingly, and compensated Mr. Montgomery for the burning of his barn by the volunteers.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. I think my hon. friend having expressed his views, had better withdraw his motion.

Motion withdrawn.
Mr. HICKEY.

PACIFIC RAILWAY.

Mr. LESAGE moved for:

Copies of all Reports of Government Engineers made previously to and on this day, in relation to the survey of the several proposed lines for the intersection of the Canadian Pacific Railway, from Montreal to a Port on the Atlantic Ocean.

He said (Translation): Mr. Speaker, I do not intend to take up much of the time of the House while asking that the papers mentioned in this motion may be brought down, for the proper time to decide upon these matters has not yet come. But the matter is of such importance to the people of the district of Quebec, that I shall take this opportunity to call the attention of the Government and of the hon. the Minister of Railways to a certain number of petitions which have been sent to this Parliament by the electors of the county of Dorchester with regard to the survey of the valley of the Etchemin River. This valley, as is well known by hon. members, is situated on the south side of the St. Lawrence and runs from Lévis towards the River St. John on the Maine boundary. It is one of the most splendid valleys of the south shore. At my request, last summer, the Minister of Railways has been pleased to give us a barometric survey. This survey has been renewed during the fall in the same way by a new engineer, who pushed his exploration in the east as far as Churchill Lake in the State of Maine. From that moment we had the satisfaction of learning, through the newspapers, that this valley is the finest and the best adapted for the construction of a railway. We have thus been enabled to ascertain personally, that on 67 miles of road from Lévis to the State of Maine there is a difference of level amounting to 1,218 feet from the platform of the Chaudière Junction to the boundary line, which gives an average gradient of 19 feet per mile, in no case exceeding 50 feet, and that on a very short distance. I do not come here, Mr. Speaker, to ask the House to pronounce at once in favor of extension of the Pacific through the valley of the Etchemin River, for I am not prepared to establish the facts and prove my statements by official returns, these returns not having yet been brought down, and my eloquence not being equal to the task of convincing the House, but I simply come to ask the Government, who have taken into consideration the numerous petitions which have been signed by all the electors of this important division, if after having examined the reports of the barometric surveys, they would feel inclined to grant, as soon as possible, an instrumental survey, such as has been granted to rival routes. I have no desire to involve the Government in useless expenses, but as there may be a debate on this question, I should like to be on an equal footing with my opponents. As to the question of personal interest, I do not deal with this matter from a sectional point of view. Nature has ordained that the Etchemin Valley should be well adapted to the construction of a railway and that it should be situated in my county. Once more I repeat that I do not come to ask the House to oblige the Pacific Railway to go through this valley, but I desire that the Government should take my demand into consideration and furnish me with the returns of which I would be in need should the question come before the House.

Mr. CASGRAIN. (Translation.) Mr. Speaker, if my hon. friend, the member for Dorchester (Mr. Lesage), will allow me, I would suggest to him to complete his motion by adding something to it. I would desire that the return asked for should be accompanied by the instructions and correspondence between the Government and the engineers. For this purpose I shall ask that the motion of the hon. member be amended by adding to it the following words:—

"also the instructions and correspondence which passed between the several engineers and the Government."

This would complete the return.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. (Translation.) In answer to the hon. member for Dorchester (Mr. Lesage), I must say that the Government will not fail to take into consideration the suggestion which he has just made, with regard to an instrumental survey, in order to obtain the greatest possible amount of scientific information concerning this route, and the Government will not fail to take into account the suggestion of the hon. member. As to the amendment moved by the hon. member for l'Islet (Mr. Casgrain), I would ask him to limit himself to the word "instructions" and not to ask that the correspondence should be brought down. Correspondence of this kind is never laid on the Table of the House, for, being exchanged between engineers and acting engineers it is of a confidential and private nature, and as such is never laid on the Table. As to the instructions, given they must be brought down the moment they are asked for by the hon. member. In consequence, I shall ask him to withdraw from his amendment the words "and correspondence."

Mr. LAURIER. (Translation.) It seems to me that there can be no objection to laying the official correspondence on the Table of the House. Of course my hon. friend has no intention of moving for the confidential correspondence.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. (Translation.) This correspondence will be comprised under the term "instructions." But if he adds the word "correspondence," the hon. member must see that the whole correspondence between an engineer and an acting engineer—which is of no interest whatever to the public—must be laid on the Table. The official correspondence, that, for instance, which refers to the instructions given by the engineers, will be included in this return.

Mr. LAURIER. (Translation.) The correspondence cannot be comprised in the word "instructions." The word "instructions" is well defined and can be readily understood by itself as well as the word "correspondence," which has also its meaning by itself. No correspondence of a purely confidential nature between the Government and the engineers can be laid on the Table of the House, and my hon. friend does not intend to ask for such papers, but the official correspondence exchanged with the engineers, and their instructions ought to be brought down.

Mr. CASGRAIN. (Translation.) To avoid further discussion, I will add the word "official" before the word "correspondence."

Motion, as amended, agreed to.

CUSTOMS COLLECTIONS IN ALGOMA.

Mr. DAWSON moved for:

Return of all Customs collections in Algoma during the six months ending 31st December, 1884, showing the amount collected at Port Arthur and its outports, and at Sault Ste. Marie and its outports, respectively; also, the amount collected at Spanish River and such other stations in Algoma as report to Collingwood.

He said: At this period of the Session, I fancy there can be no impropriety in members alluding somewhat to local matters, as there is very little else going on just now, and I desire to call the attention of the House to the fact that the Customs revenue in Algoma is increasing very rapidly and becoming an important item in the revenues of the country. Up to the end of the last fiscal year, the Customs revenue at Sault Ste. Marie was $23,808.95, and at Port Arthur $199,734.75, while at Spanish River there were collections which I cannot exactly make out, as that part of the district reports at Collingwood, but which I assume to have been about $6,000, making altogether an amount collected in Algoma of $229,543.70. Now, Sir, that is a very good showing for such a young country as Algoma, and I believe the revenue during the year now current will be quite as great as that during the last fiscal year. It is quite evident from this that the population of the district is increasing very fast, and indeed it is so. We hear a great many complaints of an exodus from other districts, that the people are running off to the United States and flying in every direction away from Canada. We hear that very often, but it is a very different story in Algoma. The population is increasing, settlers are coming in every day, and the people who have been lost from other districts are now in Algoma. I believe that is very largely the case. At the last census, the population of Algoma proper was only 20,000, or a little over, and that of the disputed territory 8,000 or thereabout, making altogether 28,000 people in the immense district of Algoma, that is some four years ago. Now, according to the best estimates that can be made, the population is up to 55,000. Port Arthur alone has increased from 2,000 to 6,097, according to a census taken last fall by the municipal authorities. Here we have an instance of the population increasing; there is no exodus from that part of the country. On the Manitoulin Island the population, which was barely 10,000 at the last census, is now estimated by the people themselves to be 13,000 or 14,000. On the north coast of Lake Huron settlement has also been increasing very rapidly, especially back of the Bruce Mines, in a section which used to be considered the most barren part of the whole district; settlements now extend 40 miles back in that particular section. I am sure this House will be much gratified to learn that we have at least one part of the country which is filling up very fast, and where the people are very comfortable and are doing well; in fact, I think they do much better, or at least as well, in these wooded countries as in the prairies of the west. Now, as another evidence of progress, and which is also connected with the motion, I may refer to the increase of the shipping of Algoma, which a few years ago was inconsiderable. The shipping at Port Arthur during the season of navigation of 1884 was as follows:—

	Number of Vessels.	Tonnage.	Tons Freight.	Crews.
Canadian.....	600	407,186	158,315	16,680
American.....	258	95,100	134,577	2,937
Totals.....	858	502,286	292,892	19,617

That is a very satisfactory showing for such a short period—all within two or three years since the district began to grow up. But while the shipping and the trade of that country have been increasing so fast I am happy to say that the losses in shipping from accidents during the past summer have been less than formerly. There have not been so many vessels lost; but still a great deal too many. Last year the hon. Minister of Marine brought forward an Act for inspecting vessels, and I must say that since then the duties of inspectors and all people connected with the shipping, have been pretty well attended to, and the condition of affairs that now exists is in a great measure due to the better supervision exercised by officers employed by the Government. Still, there remains a good deal to be done, as appears from statistics. In Lake Superior there were eight vessels wrecked by heavy weather, with a loss of $15,000; there were collisions of 12 vessels, involving a loss of $84,000; stranded, 24, involving a loss of $50,000; disabled, 8, which were repaired again, involving a loss of $10,000; ashore, 7, involving a loss of $66,000; sprung a leak, 7; exploded, 1; total 67 vessels, involving a loss of $250,000. It thus appears that a good deal is still to be done in the way of a better supervision of vessels. But a good beginning has been made. Fortunately there has been no serious loss of life during the past summer—indeed I think only five or six all told were lost during the whole season, and they were mostly from accidents. I merely call attention to these matters, Mr. Speaker, in making this motion, to show that that part of the country, at least, is progressing fast, that settlement and traffic are advancing, and that shipping has increased immensely.

Mr. BLAKE. Amongst the interesting information my hon. friend gave us, there was one thing he missed. Would he tell us where Algoma is now? He did not seem to know last Session.

Mr. DAWSON. I shall be very glad to give the hon. gentleman such geographical information as he may require. There is a special Act defining the electoral district of Algoma. It extends from French River on the east to the Winnipeg River at Rat Portage on the west, and from the great lakes on the south to Hudson Bay on the north. It is a pretty extensive district.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. That is according to the latest advices.

Mr. DAWSON. According to the Act forming the electoral district.

Motion agreed to.

THE LIBRARY—MR. BOURINOT'S WORK.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD moved the adjournment of the House.

Mr. LANDRY (Montmagny). (Translation.) I would call the attention of the House to the fact that it is impossible for us to get Mr. Bourinot's work in the Library. There are but few copies of it, and I think that those hon. members who wish to refer to this work ought to be enabled to get it, and that a few additional copies ought to be bought for the use of members.

Mr. SPEAKER. That matter will be brought before the Library Committee.

mittee on Standing Orders, the time for the reception of petitions for Private Bills be extended to Saturday, the 21st of February instant. He said: I wish to say for the information of the House and of those persons interested in Private Bills, that the Committee desire it to be understood that no further extension will be made.

OFFICIAL REPORT OF THE DEBATES.

Mr. WHITE (Cardwell). I beg leave to move the adoption of the second report of The Debates Committee. I may say that we have dropped all that part of it relating to distribution. The number of copies that will be printed will enable us during the Session to make a daily distribution for the press and also to give them a bound copy at the end of the Session if members should be disposed to deduct the copies given to them. But in the meantime we thought it better to leave it over for further consideration and consultation with the members. The other part of the report relates to the translating staff, and further consultation induced the Committee to adhere to the recommendation of their first report.

Motion agreed to.

MESSAGE FROM HIS EXCELLENCY.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD presented a Message from His Excellency the Governor General.

Mr. SPEAKER read the Message as follows:—

LANSDOWNE.

The Governor General transmits to the House of Commons an approved Minute in Council appointing the Right Honorable Sir John A. Macdonald, President of the Queen's Privy Council for Canada, the Honorable Sir Leonard Tilley, Minister of Finance, the Honorable Sir Hector Langevin, Minister of Public Works, and the Honorable A. W. McLellan, Minister of Marine and Fisheries, to act with the Speaker of the House of Commons as Commissioners for the purposes and under the provisions of the Act 31 Victoria, Chapter 27, intitled: "An Act respecting the Internal Economy of the House of Commons; and for other purposes."

GOVERNMENT HOUSE,

OTTAWA, Tuesday, 2nd February, 1885.

COURT OF RAILWAY COMMISSIONERS.

Mr. McCARTHY moved for leave to introduce Bill (No. 12) for instituting a Court of Railway Commissioners for Canada, and to amend the Consolidated Railway Act, 1879.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Explain.

Mr. McCARTHY. The only explanation I desire to offer is this: That I propose to take the sense of the House on the second reading of the Bill. It has been already referred to Committee, the matter has been fully discussed there; and both the public and the House are familiar with the subject; and I propose, as I have stated, to take the sense of the House on the second reading.

Motion agreed to, and Bill read the first time.

PARLIAMENTARY ELECTIONS.

Mr. CAMERON (Huron) moved for leave to introduce Bill (No. 14) to consolidate and amend the Acts respecting the election of members of the House of Commons.

Mr. McCARTHY. Explain.

Mr. CAMERON (Huron). The Bill which I have moved for leave to introduce is substantially the same as that which was before the House last Session of Parliament, but which, owing to the pressure of business at the close of the Session, we were unable to reach. One of its main objects is to make violations of the provisions of the Bill criminal offences—misconduct on the part of candidates and on the part of electors. The Bill contains several provisions, which I will discuss fully when I move the second reading.

Motion agreed to, and Bill read the first time.

THE SCOTT ACT.

Mr. TUPPER enquired, Whether it is the intention of the Government to indemnify the parties who prosecuted under the Scott Act, but failed in their prosecution solely in consequence of the proclamation of the Act being held by the courts to be of no force or effect?

Mr. COSTIGAN. I desire to say that, in the opinion of the Government, there is no reason for assuming any responsibility in regard to the prosecutions referred to.

OFFICE OF MINISTER OF RAILWAYS.

Mr. BLAKE enquired, How many days was the late Minister of Railways in Canada during the Recess between the Session of 1883 and that of 1884? At what date did he resign? Who has been acting as Minister of Railways since his resignation? Is it intended to fill the office of Minister of Railways? If so, when?

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. The memorandum with which I have been furnished does not answer the first part of the question—the part with reference to the number of days Sir Charles Tupper was in Canada during the Recess between the Session of 1883 and that of 1884—but I will give the hon. gentleman the information to-morrow. Sir Charles Tupper resigned about the first of June, 1884. The Hon. John Henry Pope has been acting Minister of Railways since that resignation. It is intended to fill the office of Minister of Railways ere long.

OFFICE OF LIBRARIAN OF PARLIAMENT.

Mr. BLAKE enquired, When did the office of Librarian of Parliament become vacant? Has a Librarian been appointed? If not, when is it intended that a Librarian shall be appointed?

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. The office of Librarian became vacant on the death of Dr. Todd.

Mr. BLAKE. I asked when.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. I say that it was on the death of Dr. Todd.

Mr. BLAKE. But when was that?

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. On the 22nd of January, 1884. A librarian has not yet been appointed, one will be appointed ere long—I was going to say to-morrow, only I know the hon. gentleman would laugh.

CANADIAN PACIFIC RAILWAY—SUBSIDY TO THE NORTH SHORE LINE.

Mr. LAURIER moved for :

Copies of all correspondence between the Canadian Pacific Railway Company and the North Shore Railway Company, for the purchase by the said Canadian Pacific Railway Company of the said North Shore Railway from St. Martin's Junction to Quebec, or to obtain control of the same, or to make such arrangements as would allow the said Canadian Pacific Railway to extend its railway to Quebec; 2nd, of all correspondence between the Government and the Canadian Pacific Railway concerning the extension of their railway from St. Martin's Junction to the Harbor of Quebec; 3rd, of all correspondence between the Government and any other persons for the purpose of incorporating such persons for the construction of a railway from the terminus of the Canadian Pacific Railway at St. Martin's Junction to the harbor of Quebec.

He said: It must be within the vivid recollection of hon. members of this House that last Session, when the Government introduced their policy concerning subsidies to railways, they allotted a certain sum to the Government of the Province of Quebec in consideration, as the resolution said, of their having constructed the railway from Quebec to Ottawa, forming a connecting link between the Atlantic and Pacific coasts via the Intercolonial and Pacific Railways, and being, as such, a work of national and not merely provincial utility. The reason which was thus summarily recited in the resolution was stated more fully by the then acting hon. Minister of Railways, Sir Charles Tupper, that reason being that the railway constructed by the Province of Quebec was really a part of the Canadian Pacific Railway and a part of our national system of railways. This argument of the hon. Minister did not apply simply to that portion of the road which has been acquired by the Canadian Pacific Railway Company, and which was, at the time that he spoke, actually part of their line, but applied to the whole of the railway as constructed by the Government of Quebec from the City of Ottawa to the harbor of Quebec. The hon. Minister then said further that in his opinion, and indeed in the opinion of the Government of which he formed a part, the best interests of the country required that the whole of the railway constructed by the Quebec Government should be a part of the Canadian Pacific Railway, and that the summer terminus of the railway should be the harbor of Quebec. Indeed, as far as I understood the Minister, he somewhat deprecated the action of the Government of Quebec in failing to secure that national requirement. But I cannot do better than quote the forcible language which was used on that occasion by Sir Charles Tupper. He said:

"We now come to the Province of Quebec; and I may say no person in this House, will question for a moment the fact that if provision had not been made by the Province of Quebec, for the construction of a railway from Quebec to Ottawa, this House would have regarded, the country would have regarded, the Canadian Pacific Railway as entirely incomplete, and would have been prepared to deal with that branch of the question, just as our hon. friends opposite dealt with the question of connecting the Canada Central from Pembroke to Callander, by an appropriation of a sum of money sufficient to accomplish the purpose. The fact that the Government of Quebec anticipated that action, the fact that the Government of Quebec have since Confederation, expended from their own treasury a sum, I believe, of over $14,000,000 in the construction of railways within the Province of Quebec, instead of diminishing their claim to consideration at this late hour, strengthens it, I think, very much; this fact increases the strength of their position in approaching the Government as they have done, and asking to be recouped a fair amount of that money and to be placed relatively in somewhat the same position as that which they would have occupied if they had not been so forward to promote that which is admitted on all sides to be the great national work of this country. Under these circumstances, the Government of Quebec, having contributed, as I say, over $14,000,000 in railway construction in that portion of the Dominion, came to this Government with a claim for fair and just consideration as regarded that section of railway construction which they had engaged in and completed and which might fairly be regarded as a portion of the great inter-oceanic line of railway connecting, in fact, across the entire Continent, through Canadian territory, the two oceans. After full and fair consideration of the proposals that were made, and of the fact that they had exhausted the resources of the Province of Quebec in this effort, this successful effort, to construct this most important link of the great national work, the Government came to the conclusion that the Government of Quebec were entitled to a grant of $12,000 per mile for that portion of the road that had already become a link and a portion of the Canadian Pacific Railway,—that portion lying between the city of Montreal and Ottawa; and as regarded the other portion, the only hesitation, the only doubt that existed as to the propriety of expending the $12,000 per mile from Montreal to the harbor of Quebec, arose from the fact that the Government of Quebec had parted with that portion of the railway, and that, at this moment, it did not afford that short and unrestricted line of communication for the Canadian Pacific Railway to make the harbor of Quebec that which it is believed, in the interest of the whole of this country, it is desirable it should be made, namely, the summer terminus of the Canadian Pacific Railway."

Indeed so convinced seemed the Government to be that the port of Quebec should be the summer terminus of the Canadian Pacific Railway that they thought it proper not only to appropriate the sum of $6,000 per mile to the Government of Quebec for the line from Montreal to the harbor of that city, but also to ask for an equal amount of $6,000 per mile to ensure the extension of the Canadian Pacific Railway at Montreal to the harbor of Quebec. The policy which had been propounded was to grant the Province of Quebec a subsidy of $12,000 per mile, but this subsidy was divided. For the part of the road which had been disposed of in favor of the Canadian Pacific Railway Company—that is to say, from the City of Ottawa to the City of Montreal—the Province was allowed $12,000 per mile. But for the part from St. Martin's Junction to the port of Quebec, they were only allowed $6,000 per mile, the difference of $6,000 being deducted from the subsidy which otherwise would have gone to the Province, in order that it might be applied by the Government in enabling them to extend the railway from St. Martin's Junction to Quebec. Respecting that part of the question Sir Charles Tupper used this explicit language:—

"Under these circumstances it was thought judicious to appropriate $6,000 per mile to the Government of Quebec, for that portion of the line extending from Montreal to the harbor of Quebec, and to ask Parliament for an appropriation for an equal amount of $6,000 a mile for the purpose of ensuring the extension of the Canadian Pacific Railway from its present terminus at Montreal to the harbor of Quebec. The resolution states very explicitly the mode in which that appropriation will be used."

It is fair to assume that the Government were impelled to the course which they then took by the strong force of public opinion which they found in favor of that project. The public mind had become uneasy as to the intention of the Canadian Pacific Railway Company. A speech delivered by the president of the company, Mr. Stephen, at Portland, had led people to believe, and not unnaturally to believe, that the intention of the company was not to extend their road farther east than the City of Montreal, and after reaching the City of Montreal, to diverge to the south-east, and then, if I may so speak, scamper off to some port on the other side of the line. Public opinion had been considerably agitated on the subject, and the unanimous consensus of opinion was that the railway should be extended along the north shore as far east as where the waters of the St. Lawrence are tapped by the Intercolonial Railway, and that Quebec should be the summer terminus, and some port in the Maritime Provinces the winter terminus; and I remember that a highly representative deputation, composed of delegates from Halifax, St. John and Quebec, had an interview with the Government on that matter. However, whatever may have been the impelling motive of the Government, there was no uncertainty as to their act. They undertook to procure the extension of the Canadian Pacific Railway as far east as the harbor of Quebec. I have already quoted the language of Sir Charles Tupper, in which he stated that ample provision for that extension was to be found in the resolution. The resolution to which he referred read thus:—

"For the extension of the Canadian Pacific Railway from its terminus at St. Martin's Junction, near Montreal, to the harbor of Quebec, in such manner as may be approved by the Governor in Council, $6,000 per mile, not exceeding in the whole $960,000."

When this resolution came before the House, my hon. friend beside me (Mr. Blake) pointed out that it was rather wide and indefinite in its scope. He was answered by the Prime Minister that it was made so wide and indefinite the better to enable the Government to carry out the end they had in view. His language was as follows:—

"It is framed so as to enable the Government to procure an extension of this railway from its terminus to the harbor of Quebec.
Mr. LAURIER,

There is no specific mode pointed out, nor is it desirable that there should be. It leaves the question open for the adoption of the best line that can be secured."

In the course of that discussion the hon. member for Bellechasse (Mr. Amyot), who I observe is absent to-day, spoke very plainly as to what he believed to be the intention of the Canadian Pacific Railway Company. He stated in so many words that he did not believe that they had any intention to go farther east than the City of Montreal, and that so far as could be inferred from their words and deeds, he was fully of opinion that their intention was to divert the trade of the Canadian Pacific Railway from Montreal to some American port, as Portland or Boston. He was answered by the Minister of Public Works, whose language as to what was the intention of the Government, and as to what the Canadian Pacific Railway should be compelled to do, was as forcible and definite as language can be. The hon. Minister of Public Works said:

"In answer to the hon. member for Bellechasse I must say this—the hon. gentleman speaks as if the extension of the Canadian Pacific Railway was not to be in the Province of Quebec. That extension is to be from Montreal to Quebec, and in the Province of Quebec, and for the benefit of the whole Dominion, but especially for the Province of Quebec. The intention is to make the harbor of Quebec the eastern terminus in summer of the Canadian Pacific Railway. This has been asked, the people and the press have asked it, and we have come down with these resolutions to carry it out; that is to say, we propose to give $6,000 per mile in order that the terminus of the Canadian Pacific Railway shall be in the harbor of Quebec."

So that, Mr. Speaker, there cannot be any ambiguity as to what was then the intention and the pledge of the Government in reference to this matter. They directly pledged themselves to procure an extension of the Canadian Pacific Railway as far as the harbor of Quebec; and if the language of the resolution was wide in its scope, the language of the statute, though more explicit, was equally wide. The statute which was framed on the resolution passed by Parliament provided two ways by which the Government could secure the proposed extension. One was that the Canadian Pacific Railway Company should buy the section of the North Shore Railway extending from St. Martin's Junction to the waters of the St. Lawrence at Quebec, and the other was that, failing this alternative, failing the co-operation of the Canadian Pacific Railway Company with the Government in that respect, another line should be built from some point near St. Martin's Junction to the waters of the St. Lawrence at Quebec. Here is the language of the statute:

"3. The Canadian Pacific Railway Company may, within six months from the passing of this Act, purchase the North Shore Railway from St. Martin's Junction to Quebec, or may obtain control of the same, or may make with the owners of the said railway such arrangements as will allow the said Canadian Pacific Railway Company to extend its railway to Quebec—failing which, the provisions contained in the three following sections may take effect.

"4. And whereas it may become necessary for the construction of a railway in conformity with the intention and purpose of the subsidy, for the extension of the Canadian Pacific Railway, from its terminus at St. Martin's Junction, or some other point on the said railway, to the harbor of Quebec, that a company should be incorporated with the powers requisite for such construction, and for making financial arrangements for the purpose thereof; therefore it is hereby further enacted as follows:—

"For the purpose of incorporating the persons undertaking the construction of the said railway, and those who shall be associated with them in the undertaking, and so soon as a contract shall be made with them by the Canadian Pacific Railway Company, for such construction, the Governor may grant to them, under such corporate name as he shall deem expedient, a charter."

Now, Mr. Speaker, such was the state of this matter at the end of last Session. What has taken place since? So far as we can judge, we are standing in exactly the same position as we occupied at the close of last Session. The six months within which the Canadian Pacific Railway Company were to enter upon negotiations for the purchase of the North Shore Railway have lapsed, and the North Shore Railway has not been acquired by the Canadian Pacific Railway Company, nor have the company obtained control of the railway, nor have they made any ar-agement for extending their road to the City of Quebec. And what has been the action of the Government in the matter? So far as we know, the Government have taken no steps to give effect to their intentions, expressed in Parliament during last Session. They began last Session full of fire and zeal, but their zeal appears to have lasted only as long as the Session lasted and to have come to an end with the Session. It would seem, as far as we can know, as if the Government had been compelled by some concealed power to promise what they did. Judging from their activity during the Session, and their inactivity during the recess, we would be led to suppose that they had undertaken an unpleasant duty, which they took occasion to cast off as soon as they could. For my part, I really believe the hon. member for Bellechasse (Mr. Amyot) told the truth when he said his belief was that the Canadian Pacific Railway Company had no intention of carrying their road farther east than Montreal. I concur in the statement made at the time by Sir Charles Tupper and assented to by the hon. the Prime Minister, and reiterated by the hon. the Minister of Public Works, that the best interests of the country required that the port of Quebec should be made the summer terminus of the Canadian Pacific Railway; and I add this that the winter port should be in some one of the numerous harbors of the Maritime Provinces. The duty of the Government, as expressed by the Government, was to see that the Canadian Pacific Railway Company should carry out that intention; if they failed, then some other persons should undertake the duty. At all events, it was the duty of the Government to do something in that matter. The Government, to all appearances, have been perfectly idle; they have taken absolutely no steps to do what they said should, in the best interests of the country, be done. Possibly, however, I may be wrong in my surmise; it may be that, although no result has come from any action of theirs, the Government have been very active, and in order to see how the case stands, I beg to move for these papers.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. The papers, of course, will be brought down, and I think that it would have been better for the hon. gentleman to have waited until the papers had been brought down. He would then see what has been done, and would probably avoid making some of the statements he has just made. Of course nobody can find fault with the manner in which the hon. gentleman made those statements. They are exactly in accordance with his way of making statements before the House. Of course we cannot find fault with that, but I think it would serve no purpose just now to undertake a discussion on this point before all the papers are brought down. They will be brought down as soon as possible.

Motion agreed to.

RESIGNATION OF CHIEF JUSTICE MEREDITH

Mr. LAURIER moved for:

Copy of the resignation of the Honorable Judge Meredith as Chief Justice of the Superior Court of the Province of Quebec, and of the correspondence which followed that resignation.

He said: Mr. Justice Meredith tendered his resignation in the month of September to the Government, as Chief Justice of the Superior Court of the Province of Quebec. I may be permitted to say at once that the resignation of Mr. Justice Meredith is a great loss to the public of the Province of Quebec. Courteous in manner, of genial disposition, with a high judicial mind, with a vast knowledge of the law, and a spotless character, the Hon. Chief Justice Meredith was a credit to the bench and enjoyed the universal respect of all classes in Lower Canada. Unfortunately the health of Mr. Justice Meredith had been failing some time, and some months previously he had received and accepted a leave of absence. At the expiration of his leave of absence, in the month of September, finding that his health was still impaired, and that, in all probability, he could not again ascend the bench, he sent in his resignation. If I am correctly informed the Government asked the hon. judge to withdraw his resignation and to accept a further leave of absence for six months. But the very high sense of honor of the hon. judge would not allow him to accept what was tendered. He persisted in his resignation, and ever since the office has been vacant. Five months have elapsed since then and the office is still vacant. Now, I submit it to the sense of the House and it must be apparent to everybody, without argument, that this state of things is highly detrimental to the public at large, and constitutes a great wrong to the other judges whose duties are thereby increased. It must be apparent to everybody, without any argument on my part, that a court which is composed of something like twenty-eight judges cannot work as harmoniously and effectively towards the public as it would, if it were presided over by a Chief Justice, and I put it to the Government and the sense of the House as well that there is no excuse whatever for so long a delay in making the appointment to the important office of Chief Justice of the Province of Quebec. Lawyers are not a scarce article in that Province and there could be no very great difficulty in making a choice, and though in the Province to which I belong the practice has not been followed of making appointments without regard to party, as is done in Ontario, still I submit that in the ranks of the Conservative party of Quebec—since a judge must be selected from the ranks of the Conservative party—it would be easy to find men perfectly competent to become worthy successors of the Hon. Chief Justice Meredith, whether from judges on the bench, or from members of the bar. If I must give the whole of my belief, I must say that I believe that no appointment has yet been made, simply because there have been some political intrigues at the bottom. I would be sorry to believe this, but I cannot see any public motive that can be given as a reason why this office has been kept vacant so long. If any can be given, I would, for my part, be ready and willing to accept it and also be happy to accept it. But, in the meantime, I must call attention to this state of things and say to the Government that it is their imperious duty to make this appointment without any delay—not simply ere long, but without any delay at all.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. I can heartily agree with the remarks of my hon. friend respecting the character and standing of Chief Justice Meredith, the great advantage it was to the Province of Quebec to have such a man at the head of the judiciary, and the corresponding loss it was when, from advancing age and ill health, he was obliged to retire. The hon. gentleman has, I think, correctly stated the facts concerning the resignation of the Chief Justice. He and I were neighbors at Rivière du Loup during last summer. He came to see me, and said that, after receiving the views of his medical men and in accordance with his own opinion as to his health, he could not perform his duties satisfactorily to himself. I was exceedingly distressed, I may say, because he was an old personal friend of mine, and, on that ground, and in consequence of my acquaintance with his great abilities and his distinguished standing as a judge, I was extremely sorry to receive the information. I pressed him to try to go on for a few months longer. I said: "I have no doubt that, with the universal feeling that you should remain at your post, the country will accept the action of the Government in giving you, say, six months' longer leave." He said: "I have had a long leave of nine months, which, with my vacation, amounts to nearly a year, and I do not think that I can apply for a further extension of leave." I said: "I am so satisfied that you ought to remain if you can that, if you think another six months will be of any service to you, I will take the responsibility of asking for the leave of absence from His Excellency without your making any application." So it stood over for a day, and then I received a communication from him stating that what he could not properly ask for he could not properly accept; so I said: "That being your feeling, I have no more to say." The resignation was accepted. The office has not been filled, but it will be filled ere long. There is no political agreement of any kind. There have been, perhaps, conflicting claims of individual judges who may think, each on his own behalf, that he should have the preference. However, we do not hear of any delay in justice, or any impediment to justice. No complaints have reached the Government in consequence of the non-appointment of the Chief Justice. In his absence the senior judge is practically the Chief Justice. I agree, however, with the hon. gentleman that the office should be filled, and it will be filled ere long.

Mr. BLAKE. I must say that I do not think the explanation of the hon. gentleman is at all satisfactory. I am not able to speak from personal knowledge of what the exigencies of the court may be, but I know the exigencies of a court in my own Province under a similar state of things, and I can quite understand the inconvenience which must be caused by the absence of the chief judge where he has the management of a court of twenty-eight judges, as my hon. friend has said. There are difficulties in reference to the disposition of business, which is often left in the hands of the Chief Justice, and it is of much more consequence in point of the want of judicial strength with reference to the working of the whole court than it could be in reference to the much smaller divisions of the High Court of Ontario. I can only express the regret that the Government did not feel the same sense of duty towards the public that the hon. gentleman has explained the late Chief Justice felt. He said that, after having a leave of nine months, and a vacation of nearly three, it was due to the public that he should not retain the office on an extended leave which left it practically empty when it ought to be filled. He declined to accept a further leave because he felt that the office ought to be filled. The hon. gentleman said, "I have no more to say." He acceded, as he must accede, to the view of the Chief Justice, but the Chief Justice might just as well have had the leave, because the office has not been filled, and, as far as the public business, of which he was so tender, is concerned, there has been no improvement consequent upon his resignation. The hon. gentleman speaks of filling the office "ere long" and so forth, but I remember that he spoke of filling another office "ere long"—the office of Minister of Railways.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. Is that a previous debate?

Mr. BLAKE. No, it was a question on which no debate was allowed, and consequently it could not be a previous debate. He said that he would fill that office "ere long." My opinion is that in that case it ought to have been one delayed. We have heard that in this matter there is an aspirant for this office, or an office that might be vacated when it is filled, from the centre of Quebec, from the very middle of the city; and that difficulties connected with a subject which was before the House this afternoon have been amongst those which have caused this long delay, to the detriment of the administration of justice, though perhaps to the advantage of the hon. gentleman.

Motion agreed to.

HIGH COMMISSIONER FOR CANADA.

Mr. BLAKE moved for:

Copies of all correspondence relative to any payments, claims or allowances on any account whatever in respect to the office of High Commissioner not already brought down;

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD.

And separate statement in detail, with dates and sums, of all payments made on any such accounts in respect to the office during its tenure by the present incumbent;

An estimate in detail of all sums payable on any such accounts up to this date and yet unpaid;

Also, copies of all correspondence not yet brought down as to the letting or purchase of a residence for the High Commissioner, and as to the repairs and furnishing thereof, with copies of all accounts in connection with the same;

A statement in detail of all sums paid in respect of such letting or purchase or furnishing or repairs;

And an estimate of all sums payable, but not yet paid, in respect thereof.

He said: This motion is practically the same as one carried last Session. It will be in the recollection of the House that sums in round numbers, of about $28,000 for a residence, and about $12,000 for furnishing the same, were voted for the High Commissioner. I see by the Public Accounts that the sum of $41,000 has actually been paid on those accounts. There was also brought down last Session correspondence between the High Commissioner and the gentleman whom he employed in London to negotiate with reference to the purchase or rent of a residence; also, as to the furniture, with the inventory of the same. It would be satisfactory to get further statements which will indicate the completion of the transaction.

Motion agreed to.

CANADIAN PACIFIC RAILWAY—ALLOWANCES TO CANADIAN MANUFACTURERS.

Mr. BLAKE moved for:

Copies of all correspondence, reports and Orders in Council not covered by the previous Address relating to the allowances proposed to be paid to the Canadian manufacturers of certain goods required by the Canadian Pacific Railway; of all applications for such allowances, and correspondence in connection therewith; a statement of the calculations on which the allowances have been based, and an estimate in detail of the probable sums payable out of the Treasury in respect of each class of goods, assuming them to be made in Canada, to the extent of the company's requirements, and of the ad valorem percentages of all allowances on each such class.

He said: This is largely a repetition of motions formerly made. A resolution passed three years ago permitted us to ask separately for these matters which the House unanimously agreed should be brought down ten days from the opening of the Session. These are on other lines, which experience has demonstrated were not covered by that resolution.

Motion agreed to.

CANADIAN PACIFIC RAILWAY—ROUTE.

Mr. BLAKE moved for:

A statement of the various matters required to be returned under "The Consolidated Railway Act, 1879," and amendments thereto.

For the fiscal year 1883-84, in each case, separately, as to,—

1. The line of railway specifically provided for by the contract of the Canadian Pacific Railway Company.

2. The branches and extensions already acquired or controlled by the company.

Like statements with like particulars, separately, as to,—

1. The Eastern Division, and (2) the Western Division of the Canadian Pacific Railway.

Statement of the total sum expended up to the 30th June, 1884, by the company under their contract,—

1. For work of construction on the line to be built by the company as particularly specified in the contract.

2. For rolling stock for the line of the Canadian Pacific Railway as particularly specified in the contract.

3. For works of construction on extensions and branches and lines controlled by the Company, not embraced in the Railway particularly specified in the contract.

4. For rolling stock for all extensions and branches not so embraced. Like Statements to those hereinbefore mentioned, up to the 31st December, 1884.

Statement of the receipts of the company up to the 30th June, 1884, on account of:—

(1.) Cash subsidy.

(2.) Land Grant Bonds.

(3.) Bonuses.

- (3.) Land sales or transactions not embraced in the operations connected with the Land Grant Bonds.
 (5.) Number of acres of land subsidy.
 (6.) Amounts of bonuses agreed for though not paid.
 (7.) Government loan.
 Like Statements up to the 31st December, 1884.

He said : This, with the exception of No. 7, in the addition, is precisely a copy of a former motion which was carried.

Mr. POPE. I would remind the hon. gentleman that with reference to some of these headings very likely we cannot obtain the information in the way he asks for it, but I think it will all be included in the annual Return under the Consolidated Railway Act, which will be laid before the House.

Mr. BLAKE. Does my hon. friend say he will not grant the Return ?

Mr. POPE. No, that does not follow. It depends considerably upon the accounts. I do not know whether they are kept according to the divisions which the hon. gentleman mentions.

Mr. BLAKE. The hon. gentleman should observe that there are several hundreds of miles between the two divisions that are specified, and it is quite obvious that these accounts can be kept together, and are kept together.

Motion agreed to.

IMMIGRANTS TO THE NORTH-WEST.

Mr. BLAKE moved for :

Statement of the number of persons entering Manitoba or the North-West by rail, during each month of the last calendar year ; and of the number of persons leaving Manitoba or the North-West by rail during each such month ; also, copies of all correspondence, reports, data and statements on which are based the estimates made by the Government of the number of immigrants who have come from specified countries and settled in each Province of Canada, and in the North-West Territories during the year, and of the number of Canadians who have left each Province or Territory, or the Dominion, during the year.

He said : This is also a copy of a motion adopted last Session.

Mr. POPE. There is no objection to bringing down the information asked for, so far as this can be done. There is some information, however, asked for which we cannot give ; but whatever we can furnish will be brought down to the House.

Motion agreed to.

CANADIAN PACIFIC RAILWAY—STOCK.

Mr. BLAKE moved for :

Statement showing the date and rate at which the Ten million dollars of Canadian Pacific Railway stock formerly pledged for a loan of about $4,950,000 was sold, and the net amount received by the company in respect of such sale.

He said : The House will remember that the amount of stock issued by the Canadian Pacific Railway Company and in the hands of the public when the arrangement was made was $55,000,000, but a further sum of $10,000,000 was embraced in the arrangement. It was stated in the public press about two months ago that the loan for which this $10,000,000 of stock was pledged had been paid off and the stock sold, and we are obviously very much interested in knowing at what price the stock was sold, as on that is based the estimate of the 10 per cent. dividend.

Motion agreed to.

ADVANCES TO LOCAL GOVERNMENTS.

Mr. BLAKE moved for :

Correspondence or papers touching applications by Local Governments for advances of money on debt account, and for any papers throwing light on the reasons for the pending Bill on the subject.

He said : it will be in the recollection of the House that the Finance Minister announced the other day that certain circumstances had occurred in connection with applications by Provinces for advances of money on debt account, which in the opinion of the Government, rendered it proper that a Bill dealing with the subject should be introduced. I suppose the applications are on record in some form or other, and it is highly important we should know what they are.

Motion agreed to.

LIQUOR LICENSE ACT, 1883.

Mr. CAMERON (Huron) moved for :

1st. A copy of the Order in Council respecting the submission to the Supreme Court of the case agreed on between the Government of Canada and the Government of each of the Provinces under the Liquor License Act of 1883, and the Act to amend the Liquor License Act of 1883, as to the competency of Parliament to pass the said Acts in whole or in part ;

2nd. A copy of the said case of the factum of the Government of Canada and of the factum of each of the said Provinces—the arguments of counsel in such case and the notes of the short-hand reporter taken during such argument ;

3rd. A copy of the report of said Court in said case ;

4th. All correspondence between the Government of Canada and the Government of each of said Provinces touching said case, and the submission thereof and the report thereon ; and all correspondence between said Governments before and since said report, respecting the same and the matters in dispute and so referred.

He said : I trust the returns asked for will be brought down very shortly. I do not propose to discuss the question just now ; but, later on, I intend to invite the attention of the House to some of the questions necessarily arising in connection with this matter, and such a discussion cannot be properly conducted unless we have the papers before us. I trust, therefore, no unnecessary delay will occur in bringing them down.

Motion agreed to.

CHARGES AGAINST LIEUT.-COL. O'MALLEY.

Mr. CASEY moved for :

Copy of Report of the Major General Commanding the Militia in reference to the charges against Lieut.-Col. O'Malley, 25th Battalion.

He said : This motion has been referred to in the House on previous occasions and I do not intend to discuss it at all at present, further than to say that I think perhaps it is unfortunate that the course finally adopted in regard to these charges was not adopted sooner, viz., that of having a report made upon them by the Major General commanding the Militia, so that the officer in question, whom I know to be an enthusiastic volunteer, might have had an opportunity of clearing himself sooner of these charges. However, that course has been taken at last, and I am glad to understand that the report of the Major General entirely clears Col. O'Malley from the charges ; I am sure the hon. Minister of Militia himself will agree with me in rejoicing that such is the case. I have no doubt that the report of the Major General will cover all that is necessary to bring to the House about the matter, and I hope the Minister will bring it down as early as possible.

Motion agreed to.

EXPENDITURE ON CAPITAL ACCOUNT, &c.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT moved for :

Statement showing sums expended on Capital Account, from the 1st day of July, 1884, to the 1st day of February, 1885, and the purposes for which said sums were expended. Also for statement of the gross amount of the debt of the Dominion on the 1st day of February, 1885.

He said : If the hon. gentlemen have no objection I would like to add to the motion : " And a statement of debts and assets to that date, as given in the Public Accounts, pages 13 and 14." I may explain, as I notice the Finance Minister is not in his place, that this information is always on record in the Department, and I think it could be obtained with very little trouble. I do not at all want to bother the Department to bring down a comparative statement; I merely want a statement showing how our debts and assets stand on the 1st of February, as we now have it on the 1st of July.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. The Minister of Finance is not in his place, but I have no doubt he will agree to the amended notice.

Motion agreed to.

RETURNS ORDERED.

Return showing the number of persons who applied in the year 1884 for licenses under the License Act of 1883. The total number of licenses granted in Canada. The total number in each Province, and in each Electoral District. The total number refused a license and the reason for refusal. The total number in each Province who paid part of the fee but did not take out a license. The total amount received by the Government for such licenses in Canada, in each Province of Canada, and also in each Electoral Division; together with a statement showing what salary was paid the commissioners, inspectors, and sub-inspectors under the Act, and giving the names and address of said commissioners, inspectors, and sub-inspectors in every Electoral District of Canada.—(Mr. Landerkin.)

(2.) Its location, so far as proposed to Government, but not yet approved.

(3.) The location of any branches constructed or acquired, and of any now contemplated by the company, so far as the Government is advised.

(4.) The lands set apart by the company, but not granted.

2nd. A statement of the name and residence of each person who obtained a license under the said Act, and who obtained a license under the said Act, as well as under any local law;

3rd. A statement of all sums received by the Government or any persons appointed under the said Acts up to 1st January, 1885, as license fees or otherwise; and the name and residence of the persons from whom received, and the disposal made by the Government, or the officials of the Government, of such fines;

4th. A full and detailed statement of all costs, charges and expenses paid by the Government up to 1st January, 1885, under the said Acts or in connection therewith, or arising therefrom, for the purpose of carrying said Acts into effect and enforcing the same, and testing the constitutionality of said Acts.—(Mr. Cameron, Huron.)

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD moved the adjournment of the House.

Motion agreed to, and the House adjourned at 4:55 p. m.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.

FRIDAY, 6th February, 1885.

The SPEAKER took the Chair at Three o'clock.

PRAYERS.

FIRST READINGS.

Bill (No. 15) to continue an Act respecting the Albion Mines Savings Bank.—(Mr. McDougald.)

Bill (No. 16) to amend the law relating to Bills of Exchange and Promissory Notes.—(Mr. Smyth.)

Bill (No. 17) respecting International Ferries.—(Mr. Patterson, Essex.)

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT.

Bill (No. 19) to provide for the better observance of the Lord's Day, commonly called Sunday, by prohibiting Sunday excursions of certain kinds.—(Mr. Charlton.)

WHARVES, DOCKS AND PIERS IN NAVIGABLE WATERS.

Mr. TUPPER moved for leave to introduce Bill (No. 18) respecting wharves, docks and piers constructed in navigable waters.

Mr. MACKENZIE. Explain.

Mr. TUPPER. The object of the Bill is to provide for legalizing—if I may use the term in that connection—the wharves already built in navigable waters, and to provide for the construction of wharves to be built in future. At present there is no legislation in this Parliament dealing with the subject, and the provisions of the Bill are somewhat similar to the measure which was passed in Parliament in 1883, dealing with the construction of booms and dams in navigable waters. I hope the Bill will reach a Committee where its provisions may either meet with approval, or be replaced by others dealing with the question, which, I may say, is one of some importance.

Motion agreed to, and Bill read the first time.

CONSOLIDATED INSURANCE ACT.

Sir LEONARD TILLEY moved for leave to introduce Bill (No. 20) to modify the application of "The Consolidated Insurance Act, 1877."

Mr. BLAKE. Explain.

Sir LEONARD TILLEY. It is the same Bill as last year. There is no change.

Motion agreed to, and Bill read the first time.

QUINQUENNIAL CENSUSES IN THE NORTH-WEST.

Mr. POPE moved for leave to introduce Bill (No. 21) to provide for the taking of a census in the Province of Manitoba, the North-West Territories and the District of Keewatin.

Mr. BLAKE. Explain.

Mr. POPE. I may say that the reason for introducing the Bill is that we have made arrangements, or partial arrangements with Manitoba that we will take the census once in five years. With respect to the North-West Territories, probably, we shall not take the census of all of them, but we think it advisable that the census of some of them should be taken.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Will the hon. gentleman state whether he purposes taking the census de jure or de facto, because the system may seriously affect the result. In other words, will he report the men who are there, or the men who ought to be there, according to the system he adopted last census.

Mr. POPE. We shall follow the usual plan, the one we have followed hitherto.

Motion agreed to, and Bill read the first time.

REMUNERATION OF CENSUS ENUMERATORS.

Mr. POPE moved that on Tuesday next the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole to consider the following resolutions:—

Resolved, that the Minister of Agriculture shall cause to be prepared one or more tables setting forth the rates of allowances or remuneration of the several census commissioners and enumerators employed in the taking of the census of the Province of Manitoba, the North-West Territories and the District of Keewatin, not however to exceed in the aggregate such amount for each day of proved effective service for any enumerators, and for each day for like service for any census commissioner as the Governor in Council directs, and the same shall be laid before Parliament within the first fifteen days of the Session next ensuing.

2. Resolved, that such allowances or remuneration shall be paid to the several persons entitled thereto in such manner as the Governor in Council directs, but shall not be payable until the services required of the person receiving the same have been faithfully and entirely performed.

3. Resolved, that such allowances or remuneration, and all expenses to be incurred in carrying into effect any Act of the Parliament of Canada relating to such census shall be paid out of such moneys as are provided by Parliament for that purpose.

Motion agreed to.

COMMITTEE ON BANKRUPTCY.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD moved :

That a Special Committee be appointed to take into consideration and report upon the alleged necessity that exists for the adoption of some system of bankruptcy or insolvency, giving adequate protection against undue preferences; with power to send for persons and papers; that the leave of the House be given for the said Committee to comprise more than 15 members; and that the said Committee be composed of Messrs. Abbot, Baker (Victoria), Beaty, Blondeau, Cameron (Middlesex), Casgrain, Colby, Coursol, Curran, Edgar, Kilvert, Macdonald (King's), Mitchell, Mulock, McGreevy, McIsaac, Macmillan (Middlesex), McMullen, Patterson (Essex), Royal, Scriver, Small, Stairs, Weldon and White (Renfrew).

He said : This subject has excited, as the House knows, the attention of the commercial community, and especially their representatives in the different boards of trade. The commercial classes in England also have called the attention of the Government to the fact that there is no law relating to bankruptcy and insolvency, and have specially referred to what was alleged to be the opportunity to traders of granting undue preferences. In order that the whole subject may be fully examined and ventilated, including the state of the law in the different Provinces, and the expediency or non-expediency of introducing legislation, this Committee has been struck in the hope that its enquiries will enable the House to come to a sound conclusion upon the subject. We know that there is great diversity of opinion on the subject in the House and in the country. The commercial men, on the whole, are in favor of a bankruptcy law, although they are not unanimous as to how far such a law should extend. Under these circumstances, I thought proper to move for this Committee.

Mr. BLAKE. I must say that I think this is not a satisfactory mode for the Government to adopt in dealing with this question. My opinion is that this question will only be satisfactorily dealt with by the Government undertaking the responsibility of dealing with it, and proposing to the House whatever measure they think the public interest requires. If, on the whole, they do not think the public interest requires a measure of this kind, let them say so, and the matter is settled at any rate for this Parliament. If they think the public interest does require such a measure, I think their attention should be directed to it, as the hon. gentleman has just declared the attention of the commercial bodies of England and Canada has been directed to it for some time past. The hon. gentleman has brought once again the excuse he once gave for the appointment of a famous Committee some two Sessions ago—the Committee which attacked the Liquor License Acts—namely, that there are different laws in the different Provinces, and that it requires a Select Committee of Parliament adequately to grasp the divergencies existing in the provincial laws. But, as I said then, I repeat now, that I do not see that the fact that there are divergent laws relating to the civil rights which appertain to the question of dealing with a man's goods in execution, and the preferring of one creditor over another, is a reason why this matter should come to be dealt with in the manner the hon. gentleman proposes. I think the proper course for him to have taken was to have decided whether legislation was in his opinion necessary, and if he thought so to have brought in a Bill.

Mr. CASGRAIN. I may add that after the experience I have had of similar Committees, I am satisfied that this one will be a repetition of what has occurred before. This is a good mode of preventing measures being brought before this Parliament. In the first place, the Committee is rather numerous and it will be difficult to secure the attendance of a quorum. Secondly, this Committee ought to be empowered to report from time to time, so that we may arrive at some result during the Session. I make this suggestion to the hon. gentleman if he wants really to have a report, a valuable and substantial report, before the end of the Session.

Mr. MILLS. This proposition of the First Minister is very like a plea of incapacity. We remember that when the hon. gentleman and his colleagues were on this side of the House, they accused the Government of being flies on the wheel because they confessed themselves unable to prevent depression and to create prosperity throughout the country. Now, here is a question that obviously comes under the control of the Administration, it is one of the questions which it is the duty of the Government to deal with, and the hon. gentlemen on the Treasury benches confess their incapacity to deal with it. They confess that the question is surrounded with so many difficulties that they cannot present to Parliament a satisfactory measure, and they ask that a Committee be appointed of gentlemen better qualified to discharge those duties which they seem to shirk or to be unable to perform. It does seem to me, that if the hon. gentleman is unable to propose a proper measure, and admits that neither he nor his colleagues can deal with the question satisfactorily, he is hardly in a position to indicate who in this House are competent to deal with this particular question, and he ought to have proposed a Committee to ascertain who in this House are best qualified to discharge those duties which the Government admit that they themselves are unable efficiently to discharge.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. Well, if we are not competent to select the Committee to deal with the subject, we are not competent to select men to select the Committee. With respect to the remark made by my hon. friend from L'Islet (Mr. Casgrain), I would say that the Committee is large of necessity, because there are representatives upon it from every one of the Provinces, who will be able to speak with some degree of authority with respect to their several localities. The resolution has been purposely framed without saying that the Committee should report from time to time. They are asked to examine into the whole subject, and to report upon it. If they desire to report from time to time they will ask for permission to do so, and the House, as a general rule, grants that request. In the same way, if they come to such a conclusion as to be prepared to report a Bill, they will ask to report the Bill, and no doubt the House will allow them to report the measure. Hon. gentlemen on the other side say the Government ought to introduce a measure; the Government ought certainly to introduce one if they made up their minds a measure ought to be introduced. But they have not made up their minds, and as they desire to get information they ask that a Committee be formed. That is the custom, and the proper custom, for the Government of the day, who are supposed to lead the House, to take when they desire information. They do it either by a Committee of the House or by a Commission; and when the Government get full information and have considered it they will be in a position, and not before, to make up their minds what course ought to be taken on the important subject. The hon. gentleman says that we should go on without information, that we should make up our minds at once, and because we want information we are not capable. We have not got the hardihood of ignorance; we desire to get information, and on getting information will prepare a measure of some kind. A Government may be in too great a hurry to introduce a measure. I remember a measure being introduced by the hon. member for Bothwell (Mr Mills) to grant all the lands in the North-West to railways, and when that was quoted against the Government the leader of the party said that was merely a private balloon introduced to see what the opinion of the House was, and not for the purpose of legislation at all.

Mr. MACKENZIE. That was stated at the time as the hon. gentleman will recollect.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. That was a declaration of ignorance and incapacity.

Mr. MACKENZIE. I do think the Government might be informed by their own endeavors. They should take the best steps to get the information they require and not shift the responsibility of a measure of this kind to a Committee of the House. I never knew of such a proceeding before.

Mr. BLAKE. I was quite misunderstood by the hon. gentleman, I do not question for a moment the ignorance and incapacity of hon. gentlemen opposite.

Mr. CASEY. It seems to me that this question really includes two separate heads. There is the question as to the necessity of any bankruptcy law and the question as to the exact constitutional mode of dealing with it—as to whether we have a right to pass anything else than a full Bankruptcy Act. With regard to the question of fact, the right hon. the Premier appeared, from the newspaper reports, to be quite satisfied some time ago, when he spoke to the chambers of commerce in England, that there was no doubt as to the desirability of such a law.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. The hon. gentleman must revive his recollection of what I did say as reported.

Mr. CASEY. My present recollection is that he made no objection to the statement of the chambers of commerce that such a law was desirable, but apologised for not having introduced a law of that kind on the ground that the thick-headed rural population, whose minds were not opened to commercial subjects, were opposed to it. I understood also very clearly, from the reports of the hon. gentleman's remarks, which appeared from time to time, without contradiction, that he assured the English chambers of commerce he would use his best endeavors to persuade his thick-headed supporters to consider the subject and introduce a Bill. But there is the constitutional point. Is it possible that the right hon. gentleman should need any information on the constitutional point? Is it possible that the brilliant success which has attended his late attempts at interpreting the constitution of the country has lead him to doubt in any way his capacity of judging this great constitution of which he had so large a share in forming? It appears from his second explanation—his explanation of his explanation—that it is not in order to settle any of these points the Committee is appointed. It appears that the Government have not made up their minds; they do not know whether it is expedient to introduce a measure of this kind or not, and they have appointed this Committee to make up their minds for them. I do not know if that is in harmony with precedent in this House. I do not remember any instance during the late Administration of the Government having appointed a Committee to make up the Government's mind. In regard to the Bill introduced by the hon. member for Bothwell when he was Minister of the Interior with reference to the granting of lands to railways in the North-West, that may have been a private balloon as the hon. member says. My hon. friend (Mr. Mackenzie) said it was announced at the time that the Bill was only intended to sound public opinion. At all events, the hon. the Minister of the Interior then took the responsibility for his scheme. He laid it before the House and said he was prepared to stand or fall by it. When an hon. gentleman brings forward a Bill in detail he declares thereby his responsibility for it, and that was what the hon. member for Bothwell did. The leader of the present Government has not even dared to go so far as that. He has not dared to send out a private balloon, but has appointed a Committee to construct a private balloon for him and send it out, as he does not wish to take the risk himself.

Mr. CURRAN. The commercial community, so far as I am informed, and I have very good opportunities of knowing, are thoroughly in earnest about having a Bill for the equitable distribution of insolvents' assets, and I am satisfied they will view with a certain amount of alarm the tone that has been infused into this debate by hon. members opposite, who appear to make it rather a political question for party bickering than to take into consideration the interests of the commercial community who have been asking, for some time past, for a law that will enable them to wind up insolvent estates in such a manner as will mete out justice to all the creditors. I am satisfied that the community at large will view with satisfaction the move to bring this matter to a satisfactory result, and as we are beginning early in the Session the Committee will be able to report at an early day, and we may be able before the end of the Session to get through such a measure as will afford that relief to the community which they are so anxious to obtain.

Motion agreed to.

THE CENSUS.

On the Orders of the Day being called,

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. I would like to enquire of the Minister of Agriculture whether the fourth volume of the Census has been issued, and, if not, when he expects to be able to place it in our hands? Also, if he can say anything about the forwardness of the fifth volume.

Mr. POPE. I cannot say anything about the fifth volume, because I am not aware of its existence. The fourth volume is nearly ready, and I shall soon be able to lay it on the Table.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. In a fortnight?

Mr. POPE. Perhaps not in a fortnight. The printer is getting on well with the volume.

Mr. MILLS. Tomorrow?

Mr. POPE. Not tomorrow.

QUESTIONS OF PRIVILEGE.

Mr. BENSON. I rise to a question of privilege. My attention has been called to a paragraph which appeared in Wednesday's issue of the Daily Globe. It runs as follows:—

"The Annual Report of the Minister of Inland Revenue shows that Mr. Benson, Tory M. P. for South Grenville, owes the Government £3,840 for arrears of rent for water power on the Williamsburg Canal. The Government cannot be expected to collect this debt so long as Mr. Benson supports them faithfully, and Mr. Benson will scarcely be in a position to act independently upon party questions unless he pays up his arrears."

Mr. Speaker, for reasons which it would take too long to explain, the Government have hitherto been unable to supply me with the water power to which this has reference, and having received nothing from the Government I owe nothing to the Government. The Department of Railways and Canals acknowledged this fact, but the Inland Revenue, being a purely collecting Department, refused to recognise any counter claim against any other of the Departments unless it were allowed by His Excellency the Governor in Council. Therefore, this charge remains on the books of the Inland Revenue Department, though I have explained time and again that I never owed one cent to the Government for water power because I never got it.

Mr. GAULT. I would like to call the attention of the House to a similar article which appeared in the Globe in reference to myself. It says that Mr. A. F. Gault, my brother, owes a large amount to the Government for the hydraulic power on the Cornwall Canal, and that, therefore, I cannot give an independent vote. To-day I have gone to the Inland Revenue Department, and I find that Mr. A. F. Gault does not owe one single cent to the Government, but that his rent has been paid to the 1st of January, 1885. To show the favors that this Government grants to its friends, I may say that my brother's mill was burnt down in 1883. The Government was asked if it would not remit the rental for the time the mill was not running, and the Government positively refused to remit one shilling. That is the sort of favor it grants to its friends. I believe, if it was to its enemies, the case would be very different. We know that Mr. George Stephen, the President of the Cornwall Pattern Company, got his privilege for one dollar per annum forever.

An hon. MEMBER. When was that?

Mr. GAULT. I believe that was under the Ministry of the Hon. Mr. Mackenzie. However, my brother does not owe one cent to the Government, and the article is untrue.

Mr. MACKENZIE. I can only say that I have no recollection of giving water power to anybody for a mill, and the hon. gentleman had better take an opportunity of proving his statement.

Mr. CASEY. It is very embarrassing to these hon. gentlemen—

Some hon. MEMBERS. Order.

REPORT OF THE INTERIOR DEPARTMENT.

Mr. BLAKE. I desire to call attention to the fact that, though the Report of the Department of the Interior seems to have been supplied to the press and was laid on the Table on the second day of the Session, members of Parliament cannot get it.

Mr. MITCHELL. I would like members on both sides of the House who represent the Government and the Opposition to speak a little louder. We who sit in this part of the House cannot hear one quarter of what is said by the hon. the Premier or by the leader of the Opposition.

Mr. BLAKE. I was complaining that, although the Report of the Department of the Interior had been laid upon the Table the second day of the Session with great pomp by the First Minister, and had gone to all the newspapers of the country, yet it has not been distributed to the members of the House.

Mr. MITCHELL. That is a tone of voice which suits very well.

ACCOMMODATION FOR MEMBERS.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. I think that, as a matter of privilege, I am entitled to call your attention, Mr. Speaker, to a fact affecting some of the gentlemen who sit on this side of the House, which I have no doubt you will rectify if you can. There are a great many rooms which have been heretofore put at the disposal of members of this House—if I am correctly informed, some fourteen or fifteen. Now, we have no objection to hon. gentlemen on the other side of the House having twice the number of rooms that we on this side have, but it would be a great convenience if there could be put at the disposal of the seventy gentlemen on this side some four or five of the fifteen rooms which I am informed have been placed at the disposal of members. That would be a great convenience to us in the management of our business and our domestic affairs. I do not want to reflect upon the previous distribution—and it would possibly have been better to refer to this matter with closed doors—I merely want to know if it is possible that four or five rooms can be placed at the disposal of Her Majesty's loyal Opposition. I am aware that my hon. friend beside me (Mr. Mackenzie), as an ex-Premier, and the leader of the Opposition have separate rooms, but it would be convenient if a few more could be placed at our disposal.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. Of course the Government do not interfere in the distribution of the rooms in this House. All those arrangements rest with the Speaker and the officers of the House, and I have no doubt that you, Sir, will see that every accommodation is given to both sides of the House, and in such a way as to facilitate the public business. I would also say that I do not know that I laid the Report of the Department of the Interior with any great pomp and circumstance of war or of peace; I laid it where I was asked to do so by the Minister of the Interior. As to the distribution of the report, I will not assume any responsibility. That is a matter between the officials of the House and the printing contractor.

Mr. MITCHELL. The right hon. gentleman seems to forget the fact that there is a third party in the House. When he speaks of dividing the rooms into two parts, he ought not to forget that there is a little bit of a room about big enough to turn around in occupied by my hon. friend opposite, myself and another gentleman, from which a good deal of the thunder of the third party is fulminated.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. I would point out to my hon. friend that there is a Government side of the House—they have one side; there is an Opposition side of the House—they have another side; and then there is the outside of the House, occupied by my hon. friend.

Mr. MITCHELL. I thank my right hon. friend for the compliment. I think he begins to realise by this time that I occupy a good deal more interest outside the House than he has heretofore given me credit for.

Mr. SPEAKER. With regard to the distribution of the rooms, it is a very difficult matter, because there is not enough rooms to satisfy the wants of all the hon. members of the House; and I have not been able, as yet, to make any satisfactory arrangements. I may say that the hon. gentlemen of the Opposition have had four rooms; that is very nearly the number asked for by the hon. member for South Huron.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. I think not.

Mr. SPEAKER. Yes, they have had four—one for the leader of the Opposition, one for the hon. member for East York, some hon. gentlemen from New Brunswick have had a room, and there has been the large room, No. 6.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. No, that has not been at our disposal; it is constantly occupied for Committee purposes. The Colonization Committee sits there.

Mr. SPEAKER. At all events, until this Session I have had no complaints from hon. gentlemen of the Opposition that have not been attended to at once. I now find it so difficult that I think the only satisfactory mode of dealing with the matter is, that as all the committee rooms are open for the use of members, they must make some arrangements among themselves, as I confess I am unable to make a satisfactory allotment. It is perfectly impossible with the rooms now at our disposal to satisfy 200 members. I think the House should ask the Department of Public Works to make some new arrangement that will meet the case—perhaps another Committee room—and then the present Railway Committee room will be available for members. But I should be very glad indeed, so far as I can, to satisfy hon. gentlemen on both sides of the House.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. I have no doubt the whips could arrange that matter on either side if they would take it in hand. All we want really is more small rooms apart from those assigned to those hon. gentlemen who ought properly to have them.

Mr. SPEAKER. I have suggested the matter to the whips, and I think it can be done.

Mr. TROW. I think there is some reasonable cause of complaint on the part of the Opposition with reference to rooms. No. 6 really is occupied three-fourths of the Session by various Committees. Last Session no less than four Committees occupied it at various times. The only room I am aware of set apart for our use is that occupied by the leader of the Opposition and another for the hon. member for East York. By the courtesy of yourself and of the hon. member for East Durham (Mr. Williams), the Conservative whip, I procured a room here yesterday, a small room in the lower flat, for which we are extremely thankful. We have nothing to conceal, nothing uncommon goes on in our ranks; yet at the same time it is very convenient to have a room for our own use.

Mr. FARROW. I desire to say a few words on this matter. In the first place I would like to say that the Opposition have no reason for complaint about occupying rooms in this House. My hon. friend who has just spoken says that No. 6 is taken up chiefly by Committees. Now, I wish to say that it is not. I think this is my fifteenth Session, and I have been on the Immigration and Colonization Committee ever since I have been in the House. About four years ago the Opposition members really took possession of that room; they claimed it as their own. Just look into the thing for a moment. How often does that Committee meet, and when does it meet? If the Committee meets once, on the average, a week, it is about all. It meets about ten or half past ten o'clock in the morning, and, generally speaking, the meeting is over by twelve o'clock and then that room is vacant all the rest of the time. Now we have a just cause of complaint on this side of the House. We have not a place to go and write a private letter, or any letter, and we have got to do it in our lodgings, or we have got to cramp ourselves up here after hours on these desks. There has been a real ground of complaint by the rank and file on this side of the House, and though they are loath to get up yet I am not loath to get up and make a complaint, and I am thankful I have an opportunity of saying that we are misused, badly used. I wish we had some one as good as the hon. member from the south riding of my county (Sir Richard Cartwright) to look after our interests; for we have been sadly neglected, and I guarantee that I am speaking the solid wish of three-fourths, if not nine-tenths, of the rank and file on our side of the House. I would also mention that the other large Committee room, No. 8, is entirely taken up with our French friends, so that when I went to the door the other day a man says "Who are you?" I began to wonder if I had so changed in appearance that I was not myself, exactly. Well, at last I got him to understand that I had been a member for a little time, and by dint of great perseverance I got my head in. Then I went to the other room occupied by my hon. friend from South Perth (Mr. Trow) the Liberal whip who superintends that room, and I could not even get my head in. As soon as I looked in there were as many frowns as there were faces. I wish, Mr. Speaker, seeing that you are the head and front of this whole question, you would give us fair play and no favor.

Mr. SPEAKER.

Mr. COCHRANE. A deputation of members from Ontario constituencies, supporting the Government, waited on yourself, Mr. Speaker, the other day, and we were informed that we could not have a room, as they were all occupied. We thought that we could, perhaps, get No. 6. We went there and found that it was occupied by three members of Her Majesty's loyal Opposition. It seems strange to me that as regards Committee rooms the members are divided into provincial squadrons. You go to one part of the building and you find members from New Brunswick, in another part are members from Nova Scotia, in another part members from Quebec. I do not approve of this action. I hold that we are all members of this grand Dominion, and I deprecate the idea that we should divide ourselves into provincial squadrons in this House. The Opposition have rooms, and the leader of the Opposition has, and is, entitled to a room, and we, the humble members of the House, are entitled to some respect, although we may not burden Hansard with speeches that do not contain much information for the electors, but express opinions that injure the prosperity of this country, and I may say that Hansard is burdened with speeches that I believe lower the dignity of this House in the estimation of the people. If hon. members of the Opposition have rooms at their disposal, and as the Independent party has a room at its disposal, we humble followers of the Government should have some consideration shown us.

Mr. BLAKE. The hon. member for Huron (Mr. Farrow), who informed us, quite unnecessarily, that he was not beside himself, and who almost left his head inside No. 8 the other day by his own account, I think has left the House and, at least, people outside, who may learn what has been said through the medium which the hon. member for Northumberland objects to so much, under a misapprehension. Room No. 8 is a large Committee room appropriated, as I understand, to the sittings of the Privileges and Elections Committee. That Committee seldom sits, and therefore it is practically unused for Committee purposes. It is understood to be at the disposal not of the French members, but of the French members of the Conservative party. That is the disposition of room No. 8. If the hon. gentleman was not recognised the other day when he went to the door and looked in, it was his own friends who did not know him, who found some difficulty in deciphering his title and passport to admission there. No. 8 has very important functions to discharge, as we all know. It has quasi-parliamentary functions. I am the last one, considering the events of last Session and the possible events of this Session, to propose anything in regard to room No. 8 which would interfere with that important part of our Parliamentary machinery which goes on there. While No. 8 is appropriated for purposes of Government supporters, in so far as Committee exigencies will allow, it is for them to decide whether it shall be devoted exclusively to French members who support the Government or to members of whatever Province or nationality they may belong. That is a matter of domestic arrangement, which the hon. member for Huron can settle with his estranged friends, who did not know him the other day, just as he pleases. The other large room is more largely appropriated for Committee purposes than is room No. 8. The Immigration and Colonization Committee meet much more frequently than does the Privileges and Elections Committee, and that room, No. 6, is also used, as I am informed, for some other Committee purposes; but, subject to these exigencies, that room has for a number of years been appropriated to the use of Opposition members generally, and I think it is a very fair and reasonable arrangement of which no one can complain. If there were another large room available I should not object to its appropriation for the use of Government supporters generally. As to the remaining rooms, the question is a very simple one. First, it must be ascertained how many convenient rooms are available, and then their disposition should be made between the two sides of the House, according to numbers in some rough manner, and further allocation of them should be a matter of domestic arrangement. There was one remark made by the hon. member for East Northumberland (Mr. Cochrane) in which I heartily agree. I should like to see the rooms, when used, used by members irrespective of the Provinces to which they belong, and I believe such a state of things would do a great deal of good. I am very glad that room No. 6 is not appropriated to any particular Province or nationality, but is used generally by hon. members who are good enough to act with me in this House.

ONTARIO'S BOUNDARIES.

Mr. MILLS enquired, Whether it is the intention of the Government to propose any legislation, or to invite Parliament to ask for Imperial legislation to define the boundary of the Province of Ontario upon the north and west?

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. It is not the intention of the Government to propose any legislation. The question as to whether it is necessary to ask for Imperial legislation is now receiving earnest consideration.

Mr. MILLS enquired, Whether the Government propose to contest further the claims of Ontario to the country north of the height of land and south of Hudson's Bay and the Albany River?

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. The Government are not aware that they have at any time contested the claim of Ontario to the country north of the height of land and south of Hudson's Bay and the Albany River. There has been no contest in regard to the matter.

Mr. MILLS enquired, What circumstances arose after the 12th of March, 1884, to prevent the Government agreeing to the extension of the order of reference to the Privy Council in relation to the disputed boundaries of Ontario so as to embrace the whole subject of the northerly and westerly boundaries, as recommended by the Minister of Justice and concurred in by an Order in Council?

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. As the question primarily referred to the boundary between Manitoba and Ontario, it was considered by counsel retained both on behalf of the Dominion and of the Province of Manitoba that the question between the two Provinces should be first settled.

Mr. MILLS. Perhaps the hon. gentleman will say whether that conclusion was reached after the Order in Council was adopted.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. I presume so, but I cannot say positively.

MONEY PAID TO J. A. WILKINSON.

Mr. McMULLEN enquired, Whether any, and if so, what sum or sums of money have been paid to J. A. Wilkinson by the Government of the Dominion, from the first day of January, 1884, to the first day of February, 1885. If paid, for what purpose or services, and where?

Mr. POPE. There was a sum of $69 paid him on 1st February, 1884, and a further sum of $262 on 23rd May in the same year. That is all. It was paid him as valuator

IMPERIAL FEDERATION.

Mr. EDGAR enquired, Whether any correspondence has taken place between the High Commissioner in London and the Government on the subject of Imperial Federation, and whether the Government has received copies of the resolutions passed at the Conferences on Imperial Federation held in London during the past year, or any communications upon the subject of Imperial Federation from the Colonial Secretary, or from any organizations formed in London for the purpose of promoting that object?

Mr. CHAPLEAU. No correspondence has taken place between the Government and the High Commissioner, or the Colonial Secretary, or any organisation, on the subject of Imperial Federation. The Department of the Secretary of State has received a printed pamphlet containing the speeches and proceedings of one of the Conferences.

Mr. EDGAR enquired, Whether it is the intention of the Government to submit for the consideration of the House during the present Session any proposals upon the subject of Federation of the Empire?

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. It is not the intention.

PRIVATE BANKS AND BROKERS.

Mr. CAMERON (Middlesex) enquired, Whether it is the intention of the Government to introduce this Session any legislation affecting or in any way dealing with private banks, brokers and brokers' offices.

Sir LEONARD TILLEY. It is not the intention of the Government to introduce any such measure this Session.

BENEVOLENT SOCIETIES.

Mr. CAMERON (Middlesex) enquired, Is it the intention of the Government to introduce any legislation this Session affecting benevolent or friendly societies?

Sir LEONARD TILLEY. The only measure which will affect the organisations referred to by the hon. gentleman will be the Insurance Bill, the first reading of which we had to-day.

BANK INSPECTION.

Mr. CASGRAIN enquired, Is it the intention of the Government to introduce some measure for securing a better supervision and inspection of banks?

Sir LEONARD TILLEY. It is not the intention of the Government to introduce any such measure this Session.

EXTENSION OF THE FISHERIES ACT TO THE NORTH-WEST.

Mr. HESSON enquired, Whether it is the intention of the Government to extend the operations of the Fisheries Act to the New Provinces of the North-West Territory, West of Manitoba, and if so when?

Mr. McLELAN. There is at present an inspector, Alexander McQueen, residing at Winnipeg, and an overseer, F. C. Gilchrist, at Fort Qu'Appelle.

HARBORS IN GUYSBORO' COUNTY.

Mr. KIRK enquired, Whether the Government had, during recess of Parliament, a re-survey made of the harbors of New Harbor and Port Hillford, in the county of Guysboro', with a view of ascertaining the probable cost of erecting a breakwater at each of these harbors suitable to the necessities of the fishermen? If so, will the engineer's report be submitted to Parliament at an early day?

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. In answer to the hon. gentleman I may say that during last summer an examination was made of the harbor of New Harbor, and that the report of the Chief Engineer on that examination may be submitted to Parliament if asked for by an Address. As to the other harbor the Department knows nothing of a harbor bearing that name.

Mr. KIRK. It is also known as Indian Harbor.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. I am sorry the hon. gentleman gave it under another name. I am not prepared to answer that part of the question to-day.

WHITE POINT, N. S., BREAKWATER.

Mr. FORBES enquired, Is it the intention of the Government to repair, during next summer, the White Point Breakwater, Queen's County, Nova Scotia, recently very badly damaged?

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. The information I have about this work is to the effect that it would cost a large sum of money to repair it, and that it has been reported to the Department as being one upon which we should not expend so large a sum of money, and therefore it is not the intention to touch it at present.

OFFICE OF MINISTER OF RAILWAYS.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. The leader of the Opposition asked me yesterday a question, only a portion of which I was able to answer. I may now state that the late Minister of Railways was in Canada during the recess, between the Session of 1883 and that of 1884, sixty days.

DISALLOWANCE OF PROVINCIAL ACTS.

Mr. BLAKE moved for:

Copies of all Orders in Council, reports and correspondence, not already brought down, in reference to the exercise or non-exercise of the power of disallowance as to any Provincial Acts; with a statement of the dates of prorogation of each of the Provincial Assemblies; and of the dates at which the Acts of the Session were received at Ottawa; and a copy of the despatches addressed to the Lieutenant-Governors on the subject of the transmission to the Government of Canada of such Acts; and like papers with reference to the action on reserved Bills.

He said: In making this motion, I call attention to the fact that an order, which was made at an early period of last Session, for the transactions with reference to these Acts, was not complied with, and I was informed privately that it was because it was desired to make a very careful chronological arrangement which would perhaps prevent the work being done during the Session. I have reason to believe that the return is ready, and I hope it will be presented at once, before the press of business comes on, because as it is a bulky return it will otherwise be really impossible to give proper attention to it after it is before us. I will venture to make a suggestion to the hon. gentleman opposite in this connection. It is quite clear that these important transactions are a proper subject of communication to Parliament. The report of the Minister of Justice at present consists of five lines, in which he addresses to His Excellency the report of the Inspector of Penitentiaries. If the report of the Minister of Justice would contain a few more lines, in which he would declare that he also communicated the whole of the transactions with reference to Provincial Acts, and the report were printed and brought down to us in that form, at the commencement of the Session, it would greatly facilitate our dealing with the subject. The papers, though prepared chronologically and brought down during the Session, are very apt to be disarranged in the process of printing. I took great trouble, when I happened to be Minister, to prepare, in answer to an Address, a very large batch of these papers, and to see that they were chronologically arranged; but in the Sessional Papers they are at sixes and sevens, and it is like looking for a needle in a bundle of hay to find any particular paper. The chronological arrangement of these papers is of considerable consequence, because, when so arranged, they indicate at a glance the turn of mind of each Minister of Justice, and the course of the disallowance of Provincial Acts, and it seems to me that it would be an improvement in the practice if some such arrangement as I suggest were pursued in the future.

Motion agreed to.

ONTARIO'S BOUNDARIES.

Mr. MILLS moved for:

Copies of all Orders in Council, Imperial, Canadian or Provincial, in the hands of the Government, and not already laid before Parliament, relating to the disputed boundaries of Ontario; also all despatches and correspondence with any of the Provinces and with the Imperial Government upon the same subject.

He said: The House is no doubt familiar with all the facts connected with this boundary dispute, and knows that so far as the claims of Manitoba are concerned, the report of the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council confirms the conclusion reached by the arbitrators in 1878. There were questions as to certain portions of the disputed territory which the hon. leader of the Government did not permit to be submitted to the Judicial Committee for their consideration. We have all along understood that hon. gentlemen were most anxious, in accordance with the motion proposed and carried in this House, that this question should be referred to the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council, to be disposed of. The country is anxious to know whether the Government intend further to contest the claims of Ontario to the territory lying north of the height of land and south of Hudson's Bay and the Albany River. This was not submitted to the Judicial Committee for any report on the subject. The committee have intimated their intention to recommend to Her Majesty a measure, for the purpose of confirming the boundaries, so far as they were called upon to report on the subject; but there is a very considerable section of the disputed boundaries on which the opinion of the committee was not asked, and it is no doubt important, if we are to have Imperial legislation on the subject, that this portion of the boundaries shall be dealt with, as well as that upon which the committee have made a report. I think it is desirable that we should know what the Government intend to do on this subject, and what conclusion they have reached in their correspondence with the Government of Ontario in relation to this portion of the boundary.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. I quite agree with the hon. gentleman, that it is advisable this question should be settled and the whole boundary west and north determined early and for ever. This return will be brought down, as well as any legal correspondence going on just now.

Motion agreed to.

SHORT LINE TO THE SEA COAST.

Mr. CASGRAIN. This motion, which is on the Orders for:

Copy of the report of survey made by Mr. Wicksteed, C.E., of the proper location of the so-called Short Line to the sea coast; also of the reports made by S. L. Light, C. E., and other engineers, and all correspondence relative to the said Short Line, and the surveys thereof—was granted the day before yesterday; but I desire to call the attention of my hon. friend the Minister of Public Works, who takes a great interest in this matter, as far as the City of Quebec is concerned, to the importance of bringing down these papers as speedily as possible. The Quebec population to-day is very anxious to have a decision upon this point, and are urging their claims with great force, so that if the report be brought down as soon as possible it will meet the wishes of the people of Quebec, and I think the hon. the Prime Minister has a great regard for his Quebec friends, even those on the Opposition benches. At the same time, I desire to call attention to the wording of the motion in the Order paper in French, by which it might appear I was casting a slur on the subject itself. The word cette is used (cette courte ligne) instead of ainsi appelée (the said). I beg leave to withdraw the motion.

Motion withdrawn.

DREDGES, TUGS AND SCOWS.

Mr. JACKSON moved for:

Return showing the number of dredges, tugs and dumping scows built in the United States for the Government of Canada, during the years 1883 and 1884, showing where they were built, giving the contractor's name, and the price paid for the same.

He said: During the Session of 1883 the Government of Canada built or caused to be built, in the city of Lockport, State of New York, two dredges, two tugs, and four dumping scows, for service in the Dominion. I, being a lumberman or timber dealer, having an office in Tonawanda, New York, within some 15 miles of Lockport, and hearing the Canadian Government were getting dredges built at Lockport, went there to ascertain the facts for myself. I saw one of the contractors who was there. I also saw Mr. James Jackson, the senior partner of the firm of Jackson & Son, mill owners, who furnished the contractors with timber, and lumber. From these gentlemen I ascertained the facts desired, with the exception of the price paid by the Government. That price was given to the House by the hon. the Minister of Public Works on the 3rd March, 1884, when he stated that $53,775 had been paid for two tugs and two dredges, not including the scows. Add the price of those scows to the above, and I believe it would make the price not less than $65,000. In 1884 the Government duplicated that order. The same contractors, Sutton & Morgan, again built for the Canadian Government, two dredges, two tugs, and four scows. This time the tugs were built in Buffalo and the dredges in Tonawanda. When they were being launched, one of the dredges was named Sir John Macdonald, in honor of the hon. the Premier. I have no means of knowing the price paid for these, but I presume it would be about the same amount of $65,000, which would make $130,000 paid by the Government within the last two years to foster and build up the industries of the United States. In 1878, and again in 1882, the people were told to vote for the National Policy, in order to build up the industries of this country. In Dundas, in 1877, the First Minister said:

"I and my friends have nailed our colors to the mast. We want to keep Canada for the Canadians, and not allow it to be a slaughter market for the United States. We declare war to the knife against the opposite policy. We are not sailing north by south."

Is this keeping Canada for the Canadians? I say it is not. It is Canada for the United States. We have had numbers of dredges and boats built throughout this Dominion—they have been built in the Maritime Provinces and in Montreal, in Port Dalhousie and in St. Catharines. And I want here to mention that Muir Bros., of Port Dalhousie, and Mr. Shickluna, of St. Catharines, advertised to build dredges and boats equal to any builders in the world. Have we not got machinists and mechanics, have we not skill, and have we not the timber, and the very same timber that was used to build these boats in 1883 was grown in the county of Haldimand, was sent to Tonawanda, and was furnished to Jackson & Son, of Lockport, who furnished it to the contractors, and in 1884 the timber that was put into those dredges and boats built for the Government grew in the counties of Norfolk and Lambton and was shipped to Tonawanda and sold to the same parties at Lockport who furnished it to the contractors. These are facts which cannot be contradicted, and, as a member of this House, I think it my duty to show the people of this country, who have no way of knowing these things, that this Government has spent this money to advance the enterprises of the United States.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. I do not know whether the hon. gentleman wishes to have this return a second time, but the statements required by him were communicated to the House last Session. I suppose he wanted to make a statement himself, which I am sorry I could not hear distinctly in my place here, but I understood from him that he found fault with the Government, or with my Department, as a portion of the Government, for having given the contract for these scows and dredges to an American firm. This matter was fully explained last Session. It was shown that we had taken all the precautions we could to have this work done here, and had called on a large number of merchants and others, who were in a position, as we thought, to furnish the timber and to build the scows and dredges, and that these contractors and builders and merchants refused, and stated that they could not do it, and that under these circumstances, as we had to obtain these scows and dredges, they were obtained from this firm—I do not remember now the name—at Lockport, and they completed their contract to the satisfaction of the Department. I showed at that time also, that we had called for tenders for scows in the Province of Quebec, and that we could not obtain tenders for that work. I also showed that a number of other parties who wanted similar work performed had to go to that place in Lockport; and now I may say, in addition to that, that I have obtained a statement to this effect, that the timber required for the construction of a ferry boat for the Canada Atlantic Railway, at Coteau, was obtained from the same locality in the United States, for the same reason, that it could not be obtained here, and that Messrs. Allan & Nicholson, contractors for works at the Galops Canal, after making diligent search throughout the country, from Sault Ste. Marie to the Maritime Provinces, were compelled to have a dredge constructed at Lockport, similar to that supplied to the Dominion Government. We required the best machinery, the best work and the best plan, and we had to obtain it. In addition to that, the machinery for a dredge at Chatham, Ont., is being constructed at Lockport, for Mr. Martin, the president of the Chatham Dredging Company, whose dredge the Department has employed for two years. A year ago the Department, desiring to construct two dredges and scows, invited offers from timber merchants in Canada, who all declined to tender, and the scows remained unbuilt. I may say that this last fall tenders were again invited, but none of these leading merchants submitted offers, and the tender of Hurteau & Co., Montreal, was accepted. The timber was to be delivered at Ottawa; a portion has been delivered, and it seems that what has been received has come in bond from the United States, showing that Hurteau & Co. had to procure the timber out of Canada. The fact is, this work required a special sort of timber, and we have obtained it where it could be got. The hon. gentleman may be sure that it is my desire and the desire of the Government that all these works should be executed here in our own country, and so far as possible that has been done. In order to show that we desired to obtain this timber in Canada, I repeat that last winter we called for tenders in the way I have just stated, and this firm of Hurteau & Co., of Montreal, having tendered, we gave the contract to them, and it is they who have procured the timber from the United States, and delivered it here at Ottawa. Of course, if the hon. gentleman requires this statement again, we will get it for him.

Mr. JACKSON. The hon. Minister of Public Works does not meet my point. There was a second order—an additional order for which the timber could be got in Canada.

Mr. BLAKE. I am very sorry that in this wooden country of ours we are unable to find timber for these purposes. My hon. friend only alluded to one portion of the subject. As to that portion which he did not allude to, it is quite obvious that a very special quality of timber was required, in order that the vessel might be worthy of its name, because the hon. gentleman mentioned that one of these tugs was to be called the John A Macdonald. It is a little singular that while we are raising statues to our distinguished men, we have to take American timber to raise a monument to the right hon. gentleman. I hope the tug will get up steam and blow off steam, as its name shows it ought to.

Motion agreed to.

TOLLS ON CERTAIN RAILWAY COMPANIES.

Mr. MULOCK moved for:

- (a.) A statement showing all tolls of the Northern Railway Company of Canada, the Hamilton and North-Western Railway Company, and the Northern and Pacific Junction Railway Company respectively;
 (b.) Copies of the respective by-laws of such companies, fixing and regulating such tolls;
 (c.) Copies of any Orders in Council approving of any of such tolls.

He said: I would be glad if the returns asked for here could be brought down at an early date. A widespread impression prevails in the section of country served by the Northern Railway and the Hamilton and North-Western Railway, that their tolls are excessive and unreasonable; and inasmuch as they require the sanction of the Government, in order to their validity, it is proper that those who have grievances should have an opportunity of applying to Parliament for redress. A portion of this motion, I think, is more particularly important, in view of the fact, as I understand it, that the Northern Railway Company has leased the Northern Pacific Junction Railway Company, which was largely aided by this House, with a view of making it, as far as possible, a cheap line, for the convenience of the whole Province. I do not know whether the information I have laid before the House is well founded or not, but the production of the schedule of rates will give us material on which to form an opinion.

Motion agreed to.

ABOLITION OF THE DUTY ON GRAIN, &c.

Mr. CAMERON (West Middlesex) moved for:

Copies of all correspondence, memorials, petitions or other documents relating to the abolition of the duty on grain, flour and coal, during 1884 and up to the present time.

Mr. BOWELL. There is no correspondence of this character received by the Government, that I am aware of, nor have I been able to ascertain from the Finance Minister that he has any. But should there be any such correspondence it will be brought down.

Motion agreed to.

CHURCH POINT AND TROUT COVE PIERS.

Mr. VAIL moved for:

Copy of the report for 1884, of the resident engineer of the Maritime Provinces, on the Church Point and Trout Cove Piers.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. I have no objection to the adoption of the motion, if it is worded so as to call for copy of the report made by the chief engineer of the Department of Public Works. I suggest this change because reports of local engineers sent to the Department are not in shape to be presented to Parliament. They contain information obtained for the chief engineer, who condenses it and places it before the head of the Department.

Mr. VAIL. I have no objection to the change being made, provided the result will be the same; but I am a little surprised to hear the Minister of Public Works say that this House cannot call upon public officials for what may be considered official reports. It seems to me that the chief engineer is hardly in a position to give us the necessary information, unless he forwards us the report of the resident engineer. I do not know that the chief engineer has been in any of the Maritime Provinces this year—I am sure he has not been in Nova Scotia—and we must in that case depend altogether on any portions of the report submitted by the resident engineer, which he, the chief engineer, may choose to furnish.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. This course is always followed in all matters connected with engineering. The chief engineer of a railway, for example, cannot ascertain everything himself, but he obtains data from sub-engineers, and all information is collected by him and embodied in his report.

Motion, as amended, agreed to.

RECEIPTS OF INTERIOR DEPARTMENT.

Mr. BLAKE. The House may, perhaps, recollect having heard read, some little time ago, a letter, which I re-read the other day and which forms the subject of the present motion—a letter in which the Deputy Minister of the Interior presented to the House of Commons his estimate as to the receipts of the Department from the sale of agricultural and coal lands, rents of grazing lands, timber dues and sale of mineral lands, other than coal, with the royalties from the minerals, between 1st January, 1883, and 31st December, 1891, both inclusive, as amounting to not less than $53,000,000. I have not had time, because I only received a copy of the report of the Department of the Interior a few moments ago, to ascertain how far this conclusion is borne out, as regards all the elements of which it is composed, for the period which has elapsed and which is covered in the report. The letter speaks of the calendar, while the report deals with the fiscal year, and this year I observe the report does not do what it did last year, viz., give the returns also for the last six months of the year which immediately preceded it; so the information is not before us; nor am I able to ascertain, from the circumstance of having received the report only a few moments ago, how the matter stands in regard to timber dues, royalties and timber and grazing lands. But I observe, taking the fiscal instead of the calendar year, that the report states that the receipts for the fiscal years 1882-1883, from homestead and pre-emption fees, from ordinary sales, cash and scrip, and sales to colonization companies, amounted to, in round numbers, $925,000, while for the years 1883-1884 the sum under those heads amounted to $790,000, making an aggregate of $850,000, or over $100,000 less than the receipts for the fiscal years 1881-82 from the same sources. Omitting for the moment the revenues from timber dues, royalties from mining lands and rents from grazing lands, which I am not able to deal with at this instant—and of course we know that under the present arrangement and Administration we may expect a great deal from those sources, owing to the mode in which the Government have been husbanding the timber lands of the North-West and dealing with the mineral and grazing lands there—I am unable to state how much should be added to the calculation; but it would require an average, for the nine years, of about $644,000 a year, from all sources, to meet the estimate laid before Parliament. In these last two fiscal years—and I suspect the revenues for the two calendar years 1883-84 will be somewhat smaller than the revenue for the two fiscal years—the revenues amounted to $1,790,000, which would leave a sum of $8,000,000 a year as the average for the next seven years, to be received from all sources, in order that the estimate may be carried out. As the estimate was made with so much care and consideration, and has been so accurately verified up to this time by results, I am sure it would add to the satisfaction of the House and the country to have the details on which it is based divided into different headings. I therefore beg to move for:

Statement showing the estimated receipts for each year, in respect of each class of public property described in the letter making the aggregate of $58,000,000 mentioned in the following letter of A. M. Burgess, Deputy Minister of the Interior, read to this House on 4th May, 1883:

"OTTAWA, 4th May, 1883.

"Sir,—Having given the subject my best and fullest consideration, I estimate that the receipts of this Department from the sale of agricultural and coal lands, timber dues, rents of grazing lands and sale of mineral lands other than coal, with the royalties from the minerals, between the 1st of January, 1883, and 31st of December, 1891, both inclusive, will amount to not less than $58,000,000."

And also, for a statement in detail of the actual receipts in respect of each such class for each of the years 1883 and 1884.

Motion agreed to.

CANADIAN FISHERIES.

Mr. MULOCK moved for:

Copies of all Minutes of Council, Reports to Council and of correspondence between the Canadian Government and the British Government, or any of its officers or members, not already laid before Parliament, relating to the so-called fishery question, from the 1st of July, 1867, up to the time of the signing of the Washington Treaty.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. I am under the impression that all Minutes of Council and all papers of any consequence relating to the so-called fishery question were laid before Parliament long ago. If the hon. member thinks of any papers that have been omitted, I shall be glad to receive a hint as to where they shall be found.

Mr. MULOCK. I am aware that, in the year 1872, certain documents relating to the Washington Treaty were laid before the House. On April 12th, of that year, the Governor General transmitted certain documents, and on the 18th of the same month, an Address was adopted by this House, desiring that certain other documents be laid before it. The Address to which I refer was somewhat in the same direction as is that of the present motion, though, perhaps, not quite so comprehensive—at least it does not embrace the same period of time. It stops with the date of the appointment of the commissioners. My motion asks for all correspondence not already brought down—that is, correspondence existing up to the time of the signing of the treaty, which was some time afterwards. I have examined the documents printed in the Sessional Papers, and also those not printed, which are now to be seen in the office of the Clerk of Routine and Records, and it is just from the examinations of those papers that I find evidence to satisfy me that Parliament has not yet been placed in possession of some very important documents. For instance, I may direct the attention of the right hon. Minister to the memorandum which I find in the Sessional Papers of 1872, No. 18. It is a copy of the Report of the Committee of the Privy Council, dated 28th of July, 1871, and submitted to His Excellency the Governor General. It is rather lengthy, but I find in it passages like these:

"The Earl of Kimberly, after observing that the Canadian Government took the initiative in suggesting that a joint British and American Commission should be appointed, with a view to settle the disputes which had arisen as to the interpretation of the treaty of 1818, proceeds to state," &c.

From this it appears that the Earl of Kimberly stated that the Canadian Government took the initiative in those proceedings and negotiations which culminated in the appointment of a Joint Commission, and resulted in the treaty. But if we look at the documents produced, we find, in point of time, that the earliest is one dated on the 26th January, 1871. The appointment of the commissioners was made on the 8th of February, 1871, only thirteen days after the date of the only document we have produced, which was prior in date to the appointment of the commissioners.

Now we know, as a matter of unwritten history, that negotiations between this Government and the Imperial authorities, in the direction of this treaty, in the direction of the appointment of the Commission, occupied a considerable period of time, and it is reasonable to suppose that communications, or correspondence not necessarily of a private character, passed between the Government of Canada and the Government of England before that additional step of appointing the commissioners. But I find a further passage in this report as follows:—

"When the Canadian Government took the initiative of suggesting the appointment of a Joint British and American Commission, they never contemplated the surrender of their territorial rights, and they had no reason to suppose that Her Majesty's Government entertained the sentiments expressed by the Earl of Kimberly in his recent despatch."

Now if the Government contemplated anything at all in regard to the Commission, I presume their views are on record somewhere. They initiated the negotiations which resulted in the Commission. They, no doubt, expressed their views to the Imperial authorities, and no doubt the Imperial authorities duly considered them, if they did not think proper ultimately to adopt them. This memorandum says that the views entertained as to the Commission by the Imperial authorities were not those entertained by the Canadian Government. How were these views of the Government communicated to the Imperial authorities, anterior to the appointment of the Commission? Again I find:

"The Committee of the Privy Council may observe that the opposition of the Government of the United States to reciprocal free trade in the products of the two countries, was just as strong, for some years prior to 1854, as it has been since the termination of the Reciprocity Treaty, and that the Treaty of 1854 was obtained chiefly by the vigorous protection of the fisheries which preceded it, and that but for the conciliatory policy on the subject of the fisheries which Her Majesty's Government induced Canada to adopt, after the abrogation of the treaty, in 1854, by the United States, it is not improbable that there would have been no difficulty in obtaining its renewal. The Committee of the Privy Council have adverted to the policy of Her Majesty's Government because the Earl of Kimberly has stated that there is no difference in principle between a money payment and the system of licenses calculated at so many dollars a ton, which was adopted by the Colonial Government for so many years after the termination of the Reciprocity Treaty."

The report goes on:

"Reference to the correspondence will prove that the license system was reluctantly adopted by the Canadian Government as a substitute for the still more objectionable policy pressed upon it by Her Majesty's Government, it having been clearly understood that the arrangement was of a temporary character."

Then, quoting from Secretary Cardwell's despatch of 3rd March, 1866, the following occurs:—

"Her Majesty's Government do not feel disinclined to allow the United States, for the season of 1866, the freedom of fishing granted to them in 1854, on the distinct understanding that unless some satisfactory arrangement between the two countries be made during the course of the year, this privilege will cease, and all concessions made in the treaty of 1854 will be liable to be withdrawn."

After this quotation the report proceeds:

"The principle of money payment for the concession has ever been most repugnant to the feelings of the Canadian people, and has only been entertained in deference to the wishes of the Imperial Government. What the Canadians were willing, under the circumstances, to accept as an equivalent, was the concession of certain commercial advantages."

Now, here it is stated that the Canadians had a certain policy on this question, that there had been correspondence on this subject, and that the correspondence showed that the representatives of Canada desired commercial advantages rather than a money payment. Now, that correspondence, perhaps, might very justly be laid before the public of Canada at the present time. The Washington Treaty is about to expire, and perhaps the same process may have to be gone through again. I find in the Montreal Gazette of the 15th December, 1884, an editorial article, of which the following is a passage:—

"The Globe is disposed to censure Sir John A. Macdonald for not having taken steps, as it alleges, to effect a renewal of the fishery clauses of the Washington Treaty. What action the Premier may have recommended to the British Government is in the meantime a secret, although there is no doubt that an answer has by this time been made to the despatch of the Home authorities a year ago, soliciting the views of the Canadian Government on the subject."

Accordingly, I think it is reasonable to assume that this very great question is, at the present time, receiving the attention of the Government. If not, it is to be regretted, and if as this memorandum says the Imperial authorities, on the last occasion, misapprehended the views entertained by the Government of Canada, it is important, I think, that no such mistake should again happen. It is here stated in solemn documents approved by the Privy Council, and by the Government, presided over by the same gentleman as presides over it to day, that it is not improbable that had the Commission been instructed to press for what is there called reciprocal trade relations, rather than money payments, such a result would have been the outcome; and as none of these documents appear on record, so far as I can find, it seems to me it would be proper and in the interest of the public that we should see these documents, which, according to this minute, show that it is not improbable a Reciprocity Treaty would have been the outcome of the negotiations had our views been presented on our behalf by the Imperial authorities in framing the articles of the Commission, and may be expected as the outcome of future negotiations.

Motion agreed to.

FISHERY BOUNTIES.

Mr. FORTIN moved for:

Statement showing the number and several amounts of the claims for bounties granted for the encouragement of sea fisheries, paid in 1883 and 1884; the names of fishermen and of owners of fishing vessels who received the said bounty, the localities to which they belong and the class of vessel or boat, with the length of keel of the latter, for which they received the said bounty; a statement of the cost of distributing the said bounties, and copies of all correspondence relating to the said bounties.

Mr. McLELAN. The preparation of the statement moved for by the hon. gentleman will involve a great deal of labor and expense, and the examination of some 40,000 papers. I would suggest to the hon. gentleman that, as the Annual Report of the Fisheries Department will be laid upon the Table next week, and will contain a great deal more information with respect to the distribution of the fishery bounties than it has done before, he should not press his motion until he sees that report.

Motion withdrawn.

Motion agreed to, and the House adjourned at 5:55 p.m.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.

MONDAY, 9th February, 1885.

The SPEAKER took the Chair at Three o'clock.

PRAYERS.

CUTTING TIMBER ON INDIAN LANDS.

Mr. BLAKE. It would be in the recollection of the House that at the last Session an Order was made for papers on the subject of cutting timber on the lands of the Indians at Fort William, and on that occasion the hon. Superintendent of Indian Affairs asked the House to suspend its judgment until the papers were brought down. They were brought down, they are very voluminous, I have read them, and I think it my duty to bring the question under the consideration of the House. I think the hon. gentleman will agree that apart from the money involved, it is rather important to that class that some attention should be paid to their complaints, and that the House should have a proper judgment of the matter. The Returns are not printed, and I move:

That the Return to the address of last Session on the subject of timber of the Indians of the Fort William Mission, be printed.

Of course under the Order this will be referred to the Printing Committee, and I merely preface my motion with that statement.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. This will be referred to the Printing Committee.

DREDGES, TUGS AND SCOWS.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. I wish to refer to a statement made by the hon. member for South Norfolk (Mr. Jackson), on Friday, which I could not hear on this side of the House, with reference to my Department. As reported in Hansard, he stated that, in 1883, there had been given by my Department a contract for dredges, tugs and scows, and that he understood that the cost would be about $65,000, and that an additional contract had been given in 1884 for other dredges, tugs and scows, which he thought might cost another $65,000, making $130,000 in all. If I had heard the hon. gentleman then, I would have stated at once, as I state now, that since the beginning of 1884 no other contract was given. There was only the contract which was mentioned in the House, and with reference to which a Return was made last Session. So there is only one contract, and instead of the sum being $130,000, it is only what was mentioned at that time, about $60,000.

FIRST READING.

Bill (No. 22) to amend the Criminal Law, to declare it a misdemeanor to leave unguarded and exposed, holes cut in the ice on any navigable or frequented waters.—(Mr. Robertson, Hamilton.)

RETURNS AND STANDING COMMITTEES.

Mr. BLAKE. I would call the attention of hon. gentlemen opposite to the fact that a considerable number of Returns ordered last Session have not yet been brought down. I have a list of some of them which I will send across the House. I would also call attention to the fact that though we were very diligent in striking the Standing Committees, these Committees have not yet been called together. It is a pity that we have lost a week in the early part of the Session, and I hope there will be no further delay in getting them to work. If the acting Minister of Railways were here, I would like to ask where the Report of the Minister of Agriculture is.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. It is made up to the end of the year, but not up to the end of the fiscal year.

SECOND READINGS.

Bill (No. 8) respecting the River St. Clair Railway Bridge and Tunnel Company.—(Mr. Bergin.)

Bill (No. 9) respecting the Canada Southern Railway Company and the Erie and Niagara Railway Company.—(Mr. Bergin.)

Bill (No. 10) to reduce the capital stock of the Federal Bank of Canada, and for other purposes.—(Mr. Small.)

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. With reference to these Bills, they are only printed in English, and must be printed and distributed in French before they can be taken up by Committees.

GOVERNMENT AND LAND COMPANY AGENT.

Mr. BLAKE enquired, Whether Mr. G. A. Simpson is agent for the Government, as well as for the Edmonton Saskatchewan Land Company in the District of Alberta; and whether, in the opinion of the Government, it is expedient that the same person should be agent for the Government and for a land company?

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. Mr. Simpson is not the agent of the Government as well as of the Edmonton Saskatchewan Land Company, but for convenience sake, agents for land companies are allowed to act specially in settling people on even numbered sections.

SABLE ISLAND COMMUNICATION.

Mr. DALY enquired, Is it the intention of the Government, during the present Session, to provide for the establishment of telegraphic communication between Sable Island and the mainland of Nova Scotia; and also the means of communicating, by telephone, between the several stations on Sable Island?

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. The question of providing for the establishment of telegraphic communication between Sable Island and the mainland of Nova Scotia is now receiving the special attention of the Government. As to the means of communicating by telephone between the several stations on Sable Island the intention of the Department of Marine is to have this communication.

NORTHERN AND PACIFIC JUNCTION RAILWAY.

Mr. EDGAR enquired, Whether the Canadian Pacific Railway Company did, within six months after 12th April, 1884, or subsequently, enter into a contract with the Northern Railway Company of Canada, and the Hamilton and North-Western Railway Company, as lessees of the Northern and Pacific Junction Railway Company, agreeing as to through rates and fares according to the provisions of the agreement under which the subsidy of $12,000 per mile was granted to the last mentioned railway company?

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. The Government is not aware that the Canadian Pacific Railway Company has done so.

GOVERNMENT YARDS, MONTREAL.

Mr. GAULT enquired, Is it the intention of the Government to let or lease the vacant land for coal or lumber yards fronting on the two new basins on William street, Montreal?

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. The basins are not completed, and the question as to the best method of utilising these basins is still under consideration.

CANNED GOODS.

Mr. GAULT enquired, Is it the intention of the Government to either repeal, amend or enforce the law passed last Session with relation to canned goods?

Mr. COSIGAN. The intention of the Government is to have the Act amended.

CANADIAN PACIFIC RAILWAY.

Mr. BLAKE enquired, Whether the Government will introduce this Session any measure on the subject of the Canadian Pacific Railway?

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. It is not the present intention of the Government to introduce any measure on the subject during the present Session.

SUMMERVILLE, (N.S.), BREAKWATER.

Mr. FORBES enquired, Is it the intention of the Government to repair the breakwater at Summerville, Queen's County, N.S., during next summer?

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. I am sorry I cannot answer that to-day, but when the Estimates come down I will be in a position to give an answer to the hon. gentleman.

DYNAMITE LEGISLATION.

Mr. FARROW enquired, Is it the intention of the Government this Session, to prepare special legislation to prevent Canada being made the base of dynamite operations against England or elsewhere?

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. It is the intention,

RAILWAYS IN THE COUNTY OF GREY.

Mr. LANDERKIN moved for :

Copy of memorial from the County Council of Grey, praying for a refund of bonuses paid by municipalities of that county in aid of railways which are now used for Dominion purposes or tributary to such.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. I have enquired about the memorial mentioned in the hon. gentleman's motion, but I am informed that no such memorial has been received.

Mr. LANDERKIN. During the session of the County Council of the County of Grey, a memorial to this effect was passed, I understand unanimously, and I will take this opportunity of stating the position of the County of Grey in reference to the aid the county has given to railways, and I think I shall be able to show to the House that the County Council was justified in memorializing the Government to assist them when they had come to their own assistance so liberally. The County of Grey gave to the Toronto, Grey and Bruce Railway Company $300,000 to assist in the building of that road from Toronto to Owen Sound. Some of the municipalities in the riding, I believe, also gave some aid to that line, and portions of the county have also aided other lines of railway. The Georgian Bay and Wellington road was aided by the municipalities along that line to the amount of $112,000. The Grand Trunk, Georgian Bay and Lake Erie Railway Company was aided to the extent of $177,000. The total aid given by the county was $597,000. The County of Grey has borne her share in the burdens of the great enterprises that have been undertaken by the Dominion. She has taken her share in the aid granted to the Grand Trunk Railway Company, in the cost of constructing the Intercolonial Railway, and also in the cost of constructing the Canadian Pacific Railway, and it is natural to suppose that the members of the County Council would expect that, in conformity with an Act passed last Session, giving aid to other roads similarly situated, this Government would aid the County of Grey by repaying the bonuses granted to these railways. The County of Grey received no assistance from the Government of Canada for the building of her own roads. She had to do that herself with the aid which she received from the Government of Ontario. The county is a new one; the land only came into market in the year 1854, and the county has made wonderful progress, so that in the matter of population I think it stands the third highest, in the Province of Ontario. Last Session the Government, by the legislation which it passed in this House, laid, not only upon that county but upon all the counties in the Dominion of Canada, a very heavy burden. Last Session the Government granted to the Canadian Pacific Railway $30,000,000, not for the purpose of building the Pacific Railway—for the Government then told us that the Pacific Railway Company was quite able to build the road without additional aid—but for the purpose of putting the road through a little sooner. The amount apportioned to the County of Grey—it being a very large county—as its share of that loan, was not less than $500,000. The County Council naturally felt the increase of the burden placed upon the people of that county by that loan to the Canadian Pacific Railway Company, and no doubt that was one of the causes which compelled the County Council, which moved them to memorialise the Government in a very respectful manner to come to their assistance, after they had so liberally aided their own roads without receiving any assistance whatever from the Dominion Government. These roads were chartered by the Local Government. By the charters, the Local Government and the municipalities had some control over them. They had their directors on the board in the management of these railways. The County Council of Grey had the privilege of appointing a director on the board of the Toronto,

Mr. LANDERKIN.

Grey and Bruce Railway, and I believe they had a similar privilege in regard to the other two railways. They had a voice in the management of the road, they had a voice in the control of the road, they had the power to say what freight rates should be levied; but, by an Act passed two Sessions ago in this House, that power was taken away from the county. The local directorate has ceased to have any power or voice in the management of the road. These roads were made, by the Act that was then passed, lines for the general advantage of Canada, and hence the local control and management was taken away, and those roads became Dominion lines. The people in the county feel that, when the Government, by the Act of Parliament then passed, have taken away their control, that the Government ought to come to the rescue of the people, when they have created Dominion lines out of those which were built for purely local purposes, and ought to assist them as they have rendered assistance elsewhere. The amount of railway indebtedness that was placed upon the people of that county by the Government last Session was, in the matter of the loan to the Pacific Railway, about $500,000, and, in the matter of subsidies to the railways in the other Provinces, about $150,000, making a total levy which the Government has imposed upon the County of Grey of about $650,000. This estimate, I think, will be found quite correct—probably it is under what was really imposed. The representatives of the people in the County Council naturally felt that, when local control was taken away from their roads and they had no voice in the management of them, or power to say how much should be charged for freight or passengers, it was but the necessary sequence of those roads coming under the control of the Dominion Government that they should ask that Government to assist them, inasmuch as it had introduced a policy of assisting local roads. This Government last Session inaugurated a policy of giving aid to roads that had been built for local purposes but had been, by its act, converted into Dominion lines. I do not know that the policy was inaugurated in the ordinary way or by the ordinary channels. I do not know that the Government themselves initiated the policy; I believe that the supporters of the Government from Quebec, to some extent, are responsible for the policy and were the means of putting it in force. We did hear then, and it has become a matter of history, that the Government refused to grant the subsidies that were asked for by their supporters until it became essential to their existence that they should do so, and then they consented. I believe the consummation of that policy took place in room No. 8. I believe it is possible that there may be an extension of that policy going on now, because the hon. member for East Huron (Mr. Farrow) told us that he went to No. 8 the other day and could not even get his nose in. They did not want that hon. gentleman to know that they were elaborating a new policy of a kindred nature; I suppose they were not going to take the hon. member for East Huron into their confidence for he could scarcely get his nose into the room and had to retire to No. 6. Now, I will read to the House what was done by the Government and by Parliament last Session, in order to show you that what was asked by the County Council of Grey is but just and fair to their people. When the policy has been initiated, whether it be a good policy or a bad one I am not going to say, but when it has been initiated and put into force for the benefit of other parts of the country, then those people who received the aid, no matter what Province it came from, will no doubt come to the rescue of those people who are situated as are the people of Grey, and will vote as strongly for the Government to aid those who are situated as they are as they did, time and again, that the Government should aid others. Now, I will not read the whole resolution, but I will just read the names of the lines :

To the Government of the Province of Quebec in consideration of their having constructed the railway from Quebec to Ottawa, $954,000.

For the portion between Montreal and Ottawa, $1,440,000.

For the construction of a line of railway connecting Montreal with the harbors of St. John and Halifax, $2,550,000.

To the Quebec Central Railway Company for a line of railway from Beauce Junction to the international boundary line, $211,200.

For the extension of the Canadian Pacific Railway from its terminus at St. Martin's Junction, near Montreal, to the harbor of Quebec, $960,000.

To the Great Northern Railway Company for that portion of their railway between St. Jerome and New Glasgow, in the County of Terrebonne, $32,000.

For a line of railway and bridge between the Jacques Cartier Union Railway Junction with the Canadian Pacific Railway and St. Martin's Junction, $200,000.

For a line of railway from St. Louis to Richibucto, a subsidy not exceeding $3,200 per mile, nor exceeding in the whole, $22,400.

For a line of railway from St. Andrew's to Lachute, in the County of Argenteuil, $22,400.

For a line of railway from the Grand Piles, on the River St. Maurice, to Lake des Isles, $217,600.

To the Pontiac Pacific Junction, for a line of railway from Aylmer to Pembroke, $272,000.

To the Gatineau Railway Company for a line of railway from Kaznabazua to LeDesert, $160,000.

To the Montreal and Western Railway Company for a line of railway from Lake Simon to Le Desert, $160,000.

For a branch of the Intercolonial Railway from Metapediac eastward towards Paspébiac, in the Province of Quebec, $300,000.

All these grants make something in the neighborhood of $7,000,000. Now, this will entail an additional burden upon the people of the County of Grey, and it was a very natural thing that they should come to this Government and ask in the most respectful manner that this Government, which has made these grants to other portions of the Dominion, should come to their rescue and relieve them from the burdens which they have assumed for the purpose of getting railway communication. I hope the Government will give every consideration to the memorial that was passed by the County Council of Grey—and I can assure the hon. Minister of Public Works that I am perfectly certain it was passed. I understand it was presented to the Government, and I was desirous, at the earliest possible moment, of bringing it before the Government and before the House that they might see that a county which has so largely aided railways throughout the country, and so largely contributed to building railways in other portions of the Dominion, ought not to be forgotten by the Government, but that every consideration for the claims of that county should be given by the Government and by this House.

Mr. LISTER. The justice of the claim put forward by the hon. member for Grey who has just spoken must be my excuse for saying a few words on this subject. I feel that the municipalities which have bonused railways in Ontario for the last eight or ten years, as well as the Province itself, are entitled to be paid back the money expended in the construction of those roads. I look upon this Act of last Session as a piece of unjustifiable confiscation of the railway property of the Province of Ontario. When that Province commenced its railway policy we know there were only one or two roads—I think the Grand Trunk and the Great Western; but owing to the impetus that policy gave to railway construction almost every portion of the Province of Ontario is now served by railways. In the construction of those roads the Province has expended of her own funds upwards of $8,000,000; and the different municipalities through which the roads run have expended a sum, I believe, exceeding $7,000,000. Now, Sir, at the last Session of this Parliament the then Minister of Railways, without any excuse whatever, and I believe contrary to the true intent of the British North America Act, caused an Act to be passed by which the railways of the Province of Ontario were made Dominion property. By that Act he took away from the people of Ontario the right to control these roads, the right to say by what law they should be governed, the right to regulate them as they pleased and vested that right in the Parliament of this Dominion. That, as I stated before, was, in my opinion, an Act of confiscation, because it took away from the people of Ontario the property of that people. Now, I can cite to the House one example, at least, of the bad effect of the legislation of last Session. Some time ago the Province of Ontario passed an Act by which the roads of that Province were made responsible unless they did certain things for the safety of the people whom they carried. There is no such Act of the Dominion Parliament. During the past year a young lad lost his leg through the neglect of one of the railway companies. He brought action against the company, and it was held by the courts that, under the law passed by this Parliament, the Province of Ontario had no right to say what protection these railways should give to the public. That, Sir, is one among many reasons why this Dominion should refund to that Province the money which it has expended. We have contributed, as the hon. member for Grey has just shown, not only for the construction of our own railways, but to the construction of all the great railway highways throughout this country. We have borne our fair proportion, and I may safely say, more than our fair proportion in the construction of these roads, and if this Government thinks that it is in the interest of the country that these roads should be taken away from the jurisdiction of the Local Legislature then I say it is but fair that this Parliament should pay back to the Province the money which that Province has expended in the construction of these roads. And if it does pay that money back a portion of it should go to the municipalities who have contributed the money, because they contributed that money under a certain state of facts. These facts have been altered, these circumstances have been changed by the all-powerful Acts of this Parliament. This is a question upon which no members from the Province of Ontario can differ, upon which every representative from Ontario, Conservative and Reformer, can stand on a common platform, and ask the Government to pay back to the municipalities which have contributed their money and paid it out, every dollar they have so contributed to the construction of those roads; because, if it is in the interest of the whole country that those lines should be Dominion roads it is but fair that the Dominion should pay back to the municipalities the money they have contributed for their construction. I submit again that this is a question upon which every representative from Ontario can unite and urge and force on the Government to do what, in my opinion, is an act of simple justice, namely, to pay back to the municipalities the money which they have paid for the construction of those roads.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. Since I spoke on this motion, I have been informed that the memorial in question was mailed last week to the Secretary of State, and, as it was no doubt delayed, it has not yet reached the Department of Railways. That information having been given me, there is no objection to the motion being adopted.

Mr. ALLEN. I think the people of the County of Grey, as well as those of other counties in Ontario, have just reason and cause to object to the course pursued by this Government in respect to their railway policy. They complain, and I think justly, of the distribution of the $10,000,000, or the amount appropriated last year for recouping the various Provinces for railways taken from their control. We find in the distribution of that amount, that, in round figures, the Province of Quebec received nearly 60 cents in the dollar on the amount appropriated, that the Lower Provinces received nearly 20 cents, British Columbia nearly 10 cents, and the Province of Ontario, west of Kingston, a little less than one cent on the dollar. Well, we complain that this is not fair. We, in Ontario, are always willing to pay a fair share of the improvements of all the other Provinces; but I think it is only fair that we should be met in the same spirit. I hope the Government will take this matter into consideration, and treat honestly and fairly the County of Grey and the other counties through which railways, which have been declared Dominion railways, have been built. I would recommend that the Government appropriate $10,000,000 this Session and commence the distribution with Ontario, paying them 60 cents in the dollar and continue the scale contrary to last year's distribution.

Mr. McMULLEN. I hope that during this Session some steps will be taken to recoup those counties which have paid so largely for lines of railway which have come under the control of the Dominion. I believe the County of Dufferin has been worse used than any other county in western Canada. That county contributed very largely towards the construction of the Toronto, Grey and Bruce Railway. Subsequently, in order to secure competition, the people contributed to the construction of the Credit Valley. Those railways ran in opposition to each other for some considerable time; but for some time the Canadian Pacific Railway has, unfortunately for the county, controlled both lines, and now after the people have contributed a very large amount of money in order to secure competition, those two lines are operated by the same company, and the people are charged increased rates as compared with those which formerly prevailed. That county, I repeat, has paid a very large sum of money to both those lines, and the people are placed in this position: that the Ontario Government have virtually lost control of those railways from the fact that the Dominion Government have declared them of general advantage to Canada and under their control, consequently, the Local Government say they have no power to interfere, thus the people of the county are left in a very unfortunate position. I understand a memorial for their relief has been sent to the member for Centre Wellington (Mr. Orton); I am not certain whether it has been received, but no doubt it will be in due time. I hope the Government will take up this question, and that something will be done to recoup the people of the county for the very large sum they have contributed to railways. The Toronto, Grey and Bruce also runs through the County of Wellington. Last year the Government felt it to be their duty to recoup the Province of Quebec for the very large amount of money expended on a road which became a portion of the Canadian Pacific Railway, on the ground that it was of general advantage to Canada and formed a link in the great through line from ocean to ocean. I contend that the Toronto, Grey and Bruce is also a link in that line. The Canadian Pacific Railway have been using that line this year and a portion of last year; they now own it, and it is used in connection with their steamers from Owen Sound to Port Arthur, and probably will continue to be used in that way. If Quebec was entitled to a certain sum because one of its roads had to be appropriated to the use of the Canadian Pacific Railway, on the same ground the people of Dufferin and of Wellington are entitled to be recouped because their road is used as a link in connection with the Canadian Pacific Railway. I believe it is the intention of a large number of the counties of Ontario to send deputations here for the purpose of urging this whole question on the House and the Government, and I certainly hope some action will be taken in the direction of recouping those counties. When people contributed their money under charters granted by the Ontario Government, and when the Government are deprived of the power of seeing that the rights and privileges and contracts entered into by the companies are carried out, and when the Dominion Government have taken into their own hands full control and power, it is nothing but reasonable and right that the Dominion Government should see that those people's rights and interests are protected, and that the money which they invested in those lines, which are now declared to be of general advantage to Canada, should be refunded to them, on the same ground as money invested by the people of the Province of Quebec, in a similar road, has been refunded to them. I did not intend to broach this question—I did not know that it would come up to-day; but I deem it my duty to lose no opportunity of pressing earnestly on the House and the Government the necessity of dealing fairly with this whole question, and I hope something will be done in the interests of the people to whom I have referred.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN,

Mr. CASEY. I cannot help expressing my approbation of the course pursued by the hon. members who have spoken on this subject. The policy of aiding not only roads which are through lines, or which may become part of a through line and of our transcontinental railway system, but also local roads, has been already established by the action of the Government during the last two Sessions. I am not going to discuss at present the propriety of that policy, but I wish merely to point out the fact that the Government have adopted that policy. But not only lines that are through lines or may become such have been aided, but aid has been granted to lines which are purely local lines, such for example as that to Lake St. John, which are intended to open up new districts for settlement. If this be the policy of the Government I consider that in a just and fair distribution of the public money there can be no reasonable doubt whatever that the County of Grey and other counties in Ontario which have contributed money to lines of railway should be recouped to some extent. I have to speak more particularly, however, for the county in which I reside, the County of Elgin. That county has given large bonuses in support of railways. It gave a bonus of $200,000 in support of the Canada Southern Railway Company in 1871. The then town of St. Thomas gave an additional bonus of $25,000; and since that time St. Thomas, now grown into a city, has given $50,000 to the Credit Valley Railway Company. Now, it must be borne in mind that the Canada Southern is an important link at present in the western connections of the Canadian Pacific Railway; in fact, it is its regular route to the North-West. The Credit Valley, which has also been bonused by St. Thomas, has become, not only a link in the communications of the Canadian Pacific Railway, but a part of their lines, it being completely under their control. If there is a case in favor of recouping any county for bonuses to railways, I think the case is especially strong in regard to the County of Elgin. I understand from the public press that the County Council has directed a memorial to be prepared to be presented to the Government or the House in reference to this matter, but I believe the memorial has not yet been forwarded. When it comes down I shall perhaps have occasion to call attention to the matter again, but meantime I could not let this opportunity pass without adding my voice to that of the hon. member for Grey (Mr. Landerkin) and others, as to the justice of the claims of those counties.

Motion agreed to.

McISAAC'S POND, INVERNESS, N.S.

Mr. CAMERON (Inverness) moved for:

Copies of all correspondence, documents, and reports of engineers relating to improvements of the entrance into McIsaac's Pond, Inverness, Nova Scotia.

He said: In placing this motion in your hands I desire to say a few words in explanation. On Wednesday last I asked:

Whether it is the intention of the Government to grant any money during the present Session of Parliament to make McIsaac's Pond, Inverness, a harbor of refuge for vessels engaged in coasting and fishing on the north-west coast of the Island of Cape Breton?

To which the hon. Minister of Public Works, with his usual courtesy replied:

"In 1879 this matter was brought before my Department, and was reported upon by the chief engineer, who disapproved of the plan. In 1882 a thorough survey of the locality was made by an officer of the Department, and the matter was considered by the chief engineer and an estimate made of the cost. The estimate amounted to $143,000. Therefore, I must answer that it is not the intention of the Government."

The counties of Nova Scotia, bordering on the Atlantic coast, are famous for their capacious and excellent harbors, open during the whole year, in the winter as well as in the summer, but the counties along the Northumberland Strait, St. George's Bay and the Gulf of St. Lawrence, are notorious for the want of these facilities for developing the industries of these counties. Fortunately, however, for some of the northern counties of Nova Scotia, such as Cumberland, Colchester, Pictou and Antigonish, they have been afforded facilities for distributing their products by means of railways. Inverness, however, is, in that respect, less fortunate than the adjoining counties, and if that county possessed similar facilities for the distribution of its products I have no doubt that it would vie with any of the Atlantic counties in the Province in the shipping and fishing industries, as it excels all of them put together in agricultural products. Besides possessing advantages in soil which none of the Atlantic counties possesses, it also possesses mineral wealth which cannot be properly utilised without facilities for distributing them throughout the world. In the evidence taken before the Select Committee appointed by this House last Session to obtain information as to the geological surveys, etc., I find that Mr. Fletcher, geological surveyor, of Inverness County, in answer to a question, stated:

"Large exposures of coal occur at Chimney Corner, and from Broad Marsh to Broad Cove Mines, at Mabou and Port Hood. They are very extensive and would be very extensively worked were it not that there are no shipping harbors on that shore."

If, therefore, the County of Inverness possessed even one shipping harbor at this point I have no doubt that Broad Cove, being the centre of the great coal area of Inverness, would vie with any of the counties in the shipping portion of Nova Scotia in the shipment of coal. I find by a statement which lately appeared in the press that the arrivals at North Sydney, Cape Breton, which is a coal shipping port, during 1884, with the tonnage, were as follows:—

Class.	Number.	Tonnage.
Ocean steamships	271	240,674
Coasting do	121	35,303
Ships	11	13,148
Barques	159	80,039
Brigantines	189	36,597
Schooners	856	63,428
Totals	1,607	469,189

With the exception of ocean steamships, why is not the shipping from Broad Cove Mines as great as the shipping from North Sydney? This statement shows the shipping that enters the Port of North Sydney alone; but besides it there are several ports in the County of Cape Breton from which very large shipments of coal are made. The shipment of coal from Broad Cove would equal the shipment from North Sydney if similar facilities were provided; and if the expenditure of $145,000 would give us such facilities why not expend the money? If, however, the chief engineer reported that the improvement desired is impracticable I think it is full time that we should look for some outlet for the enormous coal product which lies dormant in that locality. I am anxious, therefore, to know upon what ground the chief engineer reported against the improvement desired by the people of that section of Inverness.

Motion agreed to.

FUEL OF NORTH-WEST SETTLERS.

Mr. BLAKE moved for:

Copies of all correspondence and regulations, not already brought down, respecting timber for settlers' fuel, applicable to the neighborhood of Moosomin, North-West Territory; all correspondence as to the demands made during the winter of 1882-83 by the Mounted Police, of 25 cents a load for settlers' firewood; all correspondence concerning the demand made by a sub-agent of Mr. Stephenson during the winter of 1883-84, for 50 cents for a permit, in addition to the charge of 25 cents a cord; all correspondence as to the demands made during the winter of 1884-85, including the demands of the present sub-agent, of 25 cents for affidavits as to how much wood each settler had burned since he first came to the locality; and for all letters and instructions from the Department or from the Winnipeg office upon these subjects.

He said: I have received a letter from a respectable settler in the neighborhood of this place, in which he says:

"In the winter of 1882-83 one of the Mounted Police demanded 25 cents a load for every load of firewood brought by a settler into our then infant village. Last winter, 1883-84, an agent under Mr. Stephenson, Crown Timber Agent at Winnipeg, demanded 50 cents for a permit, not only from every townsman who brought a load, with 25 cents a cord for the same, but also from every settler around, where he had not too far to travel, for the wood he (the settler) burned at his own home. This winter is much worse than either of the last two. Another sub-agent has been appointed, who first demanded 25 cents for an affidavit as to how much wood a settler had burned since he first came to the country, and then 25 cents per cord for all that, together with 50 cents for a permit, telling us no one had any authority to issue permits before his advent to this section of the country."

The gentleman then proceeds to state:

"I think the Dominion Lands Act has reference only to lands where there are wood or timber reserves divided into ten or twenty acre lots to go with the prairie farms, and my conclusion is that, as this is entirely a prairie district, no timber reserve being nearer than I know of than the Moose Mountain, which is about fifty miles south-west of this point, we have no wood in our neighborhood save in what are called bluffs. Some of these contain a quarter of an acre, and few of them reach four acres on one homestead; and the wood in these, which has been burned and charred years ago by prairie fires, and is now fallen and dry, endangering the remaining green poles the next prairie fire which occurs in the locality, is what we have been charged for as above."

It seemed to me that that was an unreasonable course.

Motion agreed to.

SEA LOTS OF PRINCE EDWARD ISLAND.

Mr. BLAKE moved for:

Copies of departmental instructions and correspondence on the subject of apportionment of sea lots to individuals desiring to place lobster traps in the open sea off the coast of Prince Edward Island.

He said: I have received a letter from Prince Edward Island, in which it is stated that Mr. Duvar, the Inspector of Fisheries there, says that the Government gave him authority to apportion off to each person a lot in the sea for fishing purposes, and that any person wishing to erect lobster traps in the sea must first make application to him; and these are put out in the open sea, and not in the inlets or bays at all. It seemed to me a curious thing that permits should be given for fishing in the open sea, beyond the limits within the jurisdiction of the Government; and in any case, I wish to ascertain the character of the regulations.

Motion agreed to.

CANADIAN PACIFIC RAILWAY—EARNINGS.

Mr. BLAKE moved for:

Statement showing the gross earnings, expenses and net earnings of the Canadian Pacific Railway for each month of the years 1883 and 1884 distinguishing between the main line and the lines now worked under the lease from the Ontario and Quebec Railway Company; and distinguishing also between the main line east of Port Arthur or Fort William and the main line west of that point, giving in each case the mileage open for traffic during the month specified.

He said: I observe that statements have been made public as to the gross expenses and net earnings of the railway for each of several months, but these statements do not distinguish between the leased lines and the main line of the railway, nor do they extend over the whole period to which this motion applies.

Motion agreed to.

MANITOBA INDIAN AGENCY.

Mr. CHARLTON moved for:

Copy of the report on the condition and management of the Manitoba Indian Agency under J. A. N. Provencher, the Indian Superintendent of the Manitoba district, made by the Government Commission of Enquiry, composed of the late W. H. Ross, barrister, and Ebenezer McColl, Indian Agency Inspector, and the evidence upon which the same was made; also, a voucher dated 25th June, 1875, for $180, signed by one Trembly; a voucher dated 25th June, 1875, for $1,290, signed by one Trembly; and a voucher dated 25th December, 1875, for $600, signed by one Trembly.

He said: In 1852 I made this motion, and renewed it in 1883. The return was brought down in a day or two before the close of the Session of 1883—the 22nd of May. The letter communicating the return is dated 29th of March, 1882, and is as follows:—

"I have the honor to transmit herewith the documents described in the accompanying schedule, in compliance with an Address of the House of Commons, asking for a copy of the report on the condition and management of the Manitoba Indian Agency, under J. A. N. Provencher, the Indian Superintendent of the Manitoba district, made by the Government Commission of Enquiry, composed of the late W. H. Ross, barrister, and Ebenezer McColl, Indian Agency Inspector, and the evidence upon which the same was made, etc.

(Signed) "A. VANKOUGHNET."

The schedule promises to give us a copy of the Commissioner's report, a copy of letter from the Hon. David Mills, dated 7th February, 1879, a memorandum to my right hon. friend the Premier, the evidence of J. H. Ashdown and 63 others, white men and Indians, and the vouchers from Trembly. Now, these are the papers we wanted, but where are they? Whether they were not sent by the Department, whether they have been lost by the Clerk of Routine and Records, or abstracted by some interested party, I am unable to say; but they are not here, and the report without the substance is not what we want. Consequently, I move again for these papers.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. I may say to the hon. gentlemen that not only the papers he has before him but the evidence and the records, and everything mentioned in the schedule, was laid before this House by myself. It was a very voluminous report, and I am surprised it has not been found. I really believe if a search were made in the Departments here it would be found, because I have brought down everything in accordance with the Order of the House. I must say, however, if this Order passes again, and I suppose it will, the hon. gentleman should ask also, in order to be fair to the party accused, for the defence made by Mr. Provencher.

Mr. CHARLTON. I see that the objections of Mr. Provencher, made in his defence, are included in the schedule of documents submitted.

Mr. BLAKE. It is rather unfortunate that my hon. friend should be driven to ask for these papers again. I think some enquiry ought to be made when a voluminous return of this description is presented by a Minister, and when all that the member of the House can find is the shell of the return, the oyster having been abstracted. This is really important, and I hope my hon. friend will not dispense with an investigation, and merely have the papers copied, if all the documents mentioned are accessible. If they cannot be immediately found, I hope severe measures will be taken and every effort made to have these papers recovered. Two Sessions have already passed since they were asked for, and they are not yet at hand.

Mr. MACKENZIE. The officer who has charge of these documents requires the signature of the party to whom he gave them, so that they ought to be easily traced.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. I was speaking to the Clerk of the House, but he had not heard of this abstraction, it I may call it so, of these documents. When made aware of it by the hon. gentleman, I called the attention of the Clerk to the matter, who, of course, will enquire into it, and to-morrow or the next day I will know how it stands. If the papers are not found shortly we will have them recopied,
Mr. CHARLTON.

Mr. CASGRAIN. I think this is a question of privilege of this House. If some of the papers have disappeared the House ought to ascertain in what manner they have disappeared. If they are not simply missing or lost, but have been abstracted, it is the duty of the House and the Government to see that some enquiry be made, so as to fix the culpability on the proper parties.

Motion agreed to.

PORT STANLEY AND BURWELL HARBORS OF REFUGE.

Mr. WILSON moved for:

A return of all reports of Government engineers respecting the construction of a harbor of refuge at Port Stanley and Port Burwell, on the north shore of Lake Erie, together with the estimated cost of each.

He said: I believe the Minister of Public Works sent engineers to this point during the latter part of the summer, and I suppose the returns will not be very voluminous. I should like to have them down as soon as convenient, because the people there are very anxious to have the information.

Mr. JACKSON. I should like to ask the hon. the Minister of Public Works if he authorised the engineers to visit Port Rowan as well. During the recess, I have had conversations with many captains and mates sailing on these lakes, and I have asked them where would be the proper place to build a harbor of refuge, and the answer has been universally, except from a few who came from the neighborhood of Port Stanley, that Port Rowan was the proper place. For two or three very important reasons, Port Rowan is the proper place. Take the geographical reason—Port Rowan is just on the west side of Long Point, and Port Burwell and Port Stanley lie in a bay, Port Burwell 40 miles west, and Port Stanley 60 miles west of Long Point. Port Rowan is in the very vicinity where the wrecks take place. In 1883 five large vessels were wrecked within a few miles of Port Rowan, at this very place which the captains and mates declare to be, the proper place for a harbor of refuge; and in 1884 one propeller was wrecked there. I, therefore, ask the hon. the Minister of Public Works whether he instructed his engineers to visit Port Rowan as well as the other points, because those captains and mates all concurred in the opinion that Port Rowan is the proper place to build this harbor of refuge.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. I was not, of course, aware of the statement which has been made by the hon. gentleman in reference to Port Rowan, but evidently there is a row brewing between the three gentlemen, so I shall have to look into the matter and endeavor to bring about peace between them.

Motion agreed to.

WINTER CROSSING FROM PRINCE EDWARD ISLAND.

Mr. McDONALD (King's) moved for:

Copies of all correspondence with the Government or any member thereof, relating to the placing of piers and procuring of steam tugs at Capes Traverse and Tormentine, to facilitate the winter crossing of mails and passengers to and from Prince Edward Island.

He said: The placing of piers at the points indicated is a very important matter for the people of Prince Edward Island. A vote was taken last year for the purpose of building a pier at Cape Tormentine and at Cape Traverse. The pier at Cape Traverse has been completed or is nearly completed; the pier at Cape Tormentine has not, as far as I know, yet been located. This is very much to be regretted, as anything that will facilitate the winter crossing at this very important place is of very great consequence, not only to the people of Prince Edward Island, but to the people of the adjoining Maritime Provinces. The importance of this service has been repeatedly pressed upon the attention, not only of this Government, but of former Governments, and it has been almost annually brought before the notice of the House. Yet I regret to say that there has not been as much accomplished as we would wish to see. I trust that the late accident that occurred in crossing the Straits of Northumberland, on the 23rd of this last month, may be the means of hastening the necessary work that should be performed to improve the crossing at that point. It was thought a year ago that the branch line from Sackville to Cape Tormentine would ere this have been completed, and that the piers at Cape Tormentine would at least have been under way. We regret to find that the branch line has not been completed. I am sorry that this work is not in the hands of the Federal Government, as I believe that the people of Prince Edward Island very much prefer that it should be. It is not desirable that a short gap of 30 or 40 miles should intervene between the Intercolonial Railway and the crossing from Prince Edward Island. I am glad to say that the Government has set about providing boat-houses to improve the accommodation at the capes, and although this work has been a little late in being carried out, still it is said to be of great service. The good ship Northern Light, at the eastern extremity of the Island, between Pictou and Georgetown, has been doing very good work, and there is no doubt that a large amount of money has been expended in putting her in as thorough a state of repair as was possible; but we all know very well that a vessel, however well built, when she comes to be used in breaking through ice, must have her strength much impaired. I think it has been also shown by the experience gained in running that boat that her model could be improved upon so that greater service would be rendered by her. It has been shown very conclusively, I think, from what I can learn, that, while she may be very well adapted for going through rough ice in the winter, she is not adapted for going through field ice, and I think the time has arrived when the Government should take steps to procure a new boat, with the improvements suggested by the experience which has been gained in the number of years that the Northern Light has been running. There is also this to be said, with reference to the service at the capes. I think we want that whole service reconstructed. I believe that, while the men performing that service are doing very good work, the whole service wants to be reorganized; that it requires to be put under the control of a good and efficient officer, who will see his men enrolled at the commencement of the season, and have them always within call at a moment's notice. At present, they are gathered from the surrounding country as they are required, and they are not under that control and command that men in that situation should be. There is no doubt also that they are insufficiently paid. That may, properly speaking, not be the fault of the Government, as I suppose they are paid by the contracting parties. But it is a fact that these men are very poorly paid, since they get only $3.25 the round trip, which takes one day, two days—and sometimes it takes four or five days, and possibly over a week, on certain occasions. This should not be. These men perform one of the hardest services, perhaps, that is performed for the Government, in the mail service, in any part of the country. They are an active, energetic and hardy class of men, who have to undergo great perils, and certainly, if they were not good men, we would have to deplore many more accidents than have heretofore occurred. I trust the Government will see fit to put this service, as I said before, under the charge of an intelligent officer, who will get the necessary number of men to perform it. They should be regularly enrolled and paid monthly wages, besides getting a certain amount for each round trip. I think the service would be further improved if another boat was fitted out—a relief boat, you might call it—which would accompany the mail boats on each trip. This boat could be equipped in such a manner that she could provide a shelter for the men in case of an emergency, such as the recent accident, or their being out over night. She might be equipped with a portable sort of heating apparatus, and all the other necessaries that would ensure their comparative safety, in case the boats were compelled to remain out over night, as I regret to say has been the case recently. If the piers were constructed at the capes, the ice boat service reconstructed, another steamer provided to assist the Northern Light, and the branch lines from Sackville to Cape Tormentine were completed and in the hands of the Government, I am sure we would have little to complain of. But until that or something equivalent is accomplished, I feel certain that the people of Prince Edward Island will hold this Government responsible, and will demand that the terms of Confederation be carried out, which guaranteed us efficient and continuous steam communication, both winter and summer.

Mr. WOOD (Westmoreland). I regret that the hon. member for Kings, P. E. I., has had occasion to draw attention to the fact that the railway from Sackville to Cape Tormentine has not yet been completed. I desire to say, for the information of those hon. gentlemen from that portion of the country who feel an interest in this work, that the company have made very considerable progress in its construction. The road is now nearly all graded, with the exception of three miles at the lower end, and those three miles would have been finished had the pier, for which an appropriation was made last Session, been located during the summer. Besides this, the track-laying is finished for about half the distance, and considerable ballasting has been done on that section of the road. The work, so far, has been carried on by the private means of the company, slightly aided by the Local Government of New Brunswick. It has, however, been done in the most substantial manner, and I have good authority for saying that the engineer of the Government of New Brunswick, who has had an opportunity of inspecting the road, has pronounced it the best road that has been built by a private company in that Province. During the last two Sessions I made application to the Government, on behalf of the company, for a subsidy to aid in the construction of that work, but so far I have made that application without success. I intend to make application again this Session, and I trust, from the interest which those gentlemen display in this work, I shall have their assistance and cooperation in securing the subsidy. I think, if I do have their assistance, that surely the kind-hearted Minister, who is now acting in the place of the Minister of Railways, will comply with the request. If we succeed in getting this aid the company will be able, during the coming season, to complete and equip their road and make it in every respect a first-class road; and I have no doubt that when those hon. gentleman return to this House next Session they will be able to ride by rail from Cape Tormentine to the Intercolonial quite as comfortably as if that road were owned by the Government.

Mr. HACKETT. In seconding the resolution, I desire to say that two years ago we thought this matter was finally settled. At that time this matter of steam communication with Prince Edward Island was referred to a Special Committee of this House. That committee exhausted a great deal of time and patience in endeavoring to arrive at a proper conclusion. We had witnesses from the Maritime Provinces, gentlemen who were acquainted with the subject, who had experience in that steam communication, and others who were acquainted with ice-boats, crossing over the ice to the mainland; and after having had all that evidence, they brought down a report which we considered covered the whole ground. The only regret I have is, that that report, so far, has not been acted upon with that energy which the people of Prince Edward Island desired. I think if the Government consider that report and act upon it they will arrive at the conclusion that the people of Prince Edward Island deserve and should be given that steam communication which was guaranteed them at the time of Confederation. The recommendation of that report is, in my opinion, the only mode by which communication can be kept up with Prince Edward Island—at least in the winter season. At the present time we make no complaint about the summer service. Last year it was very efficiently performed, and we think this last autumn the Northern Light did very good work. Although she has done fairly well, I must say that she does not come up to what was guaranteed to the Island at the time of Confederation. As a means of efficient communication in winter with the mainland, she has been so far a failure. Now, Sir, this question has been specially brought to our minds by the accident which occurred on the straits a few days ago. We all remember the great anxiety that pervaded this House the opening day of the Session, when it was learned that a number of people from Prince Edward Island, New Brunswick and Nova Scotia were for two days and a night exposed, at this season of the year, to the inclement weather of the Gulf of St. Lawrence. Those men were overtaken by a very severe snow storm. They had left Cape Traverse and were unable to reach the mainland. Their only recourse was to provide as good shelter as possible, by means of their little ice-boat, a boat only 12 feet in length, and they were compelled to pass the night on the drifting ice, which was going at the rate of four miles an hour, before a strong north-east gale, in the middle of the Straits of Northumberland. That was an experience which I hope no hon. member will be compelled to endure. We cannot imagine, and it is impossible to describe, the sufferings and hardships of those men on that night. The whole of them, I believe, were frost-bitten—some seriously, some crippled for life; and all this because a small effort was not made to place the service in an efficient condition. If a small steamer had been placed between the two capes, much of the danger might have been avoided. We know that while the Northern Light can keep up communication for a certain period at the eastern end of the Island, it has been demonstrated that during the winter there must be an ice-boat service between Cape Tormentine and Cape Traverse. The committee on this subject recommended that the service should be performed by the Government. Let them place a sufficient number of ice-boats on the route, and a small steamer to act in connection with them, and make it a Government service directly, and I believe the difficulties will be far overcome, that in a short time very few complaints on this head will come from Prince Edward Island. But it is not an Island matter altogether, although we are called upon, as representatives of the Island, to refer to it more especially. There is not an hon. gentleman representing a constituency from Sarnia to Halifax who has not, directly or indirectly, an interest in keeping up communication with the Island, because the people of the Island are an agricultural people and are fairly well to do, and they are large consumers of the manufactures of the other Provinces. This is apparent, if you look at the agricultural implements on the farms, and the clothing of the people; you see the tweed manufactures of the older Provinces, the cotton manufactures of Montreal and Moncton, sugar and other products from other Provinces. All these products come to the Island, and it is, therefore, as much in the interest of the producers of these articles, indirectly, that communication with the Island should be kept open, as it is in the interest of the islanders directly. As this matter has been so fully discussed on previous occasions, and as I know hon. gentlemen are thoroughly conversant with it, it will be useless to occupy much time in discussing it. But, as regards the ice-boat service, something must be done to improve it, either by providing a steamboat to assist the ice-boats or in some other way. It will not do to allow the matter to remain any longer in its present condition. The lives of Her Majesty's subjects, as well as those of citizens of foreign countries, are in the hands of the men performing that service. The Government should see that the men, when they leave the shores to make the trip between Capes Tormentine and Traverse, have boats properly equipped, and are provided with everything essential to making the trip with safety. What are the facts in connection with this serious matter to which I have referred, and which occurred only a few days ago? I find a local paper asks this question: Is it true that they started out in the face of a storm, entirely unprovided with food, matches, oils, light or compass? There should be some one in authority who would be held responsible in case of accident. But it appears, that although this service is one which should be faithfully and efficiently performed by the Dominion Government, it is let by tender to the lowest bidder. The contractors receive a mere pittance—I believe only $10 for each trip. Of course, there is competition—they cut prices low; but they are not sufficiently recompensed, and such accommodation for passengers is not provided as would be provided if the men were sufficiently compensated for their labor. But, notwithstanding the poor equipment of the boats, and the fact that the crew in question was out for 36 hours, exposed to all the cold and blasts of the Gulf of St. Lawrence at that inclement season, it is a proud boast to be able to say that not one bag of the mails was lost. While the men were struggling for their lives, while they were battling with terrible cold, and in a state of despair, so that they were almost ready to lie down and die, they clung to their work with the greatest energy and tenacity, and although some of them were badly frozen and almost dead, Her Majesty's mails were saved. That is something of which our people should be proud—that these heroes of this ice fight never wavered or flinched from the duty they had to perform, and I consider this one of the most heroic actions of these days. But these men will not get one dollar for their courage and the hardships they endured. They did not make the round trip, and consequently they are not entitled to receive any remuneration. I hope, however, that the Postmaster General will overlook this circumstance and see that these men not only receive the compensation for what they did or were expected to do, but will receive a suitable gratuity for performing a noble service, by which some of them have been crippled for life, and although they have families dependent on them, they will be unable to earn a dollar; and I hope the gratuity will be such as will remunerate them for all their labors and sufferings. The hon. member for Westmoreland (Mr. Wood) has referred to the railway from Sackville to Cape Tormentine. I should much prefer seeing that railway in the hands of the Government, because I believe it will be in the interests of the whole service that the same control should be had over that line as is had over the Government railway in Prince Edward Island and the Intercolonial. But if we cannot have that, I hope he will get such assistance as will enable him to energetically prosecute the work, so as to complete it at as early a date as possible, and have it ready for next year's service at least. What I also desire to see is, that the $150,000 voted by Parliament last year for the construction of a pier at Cape Tormentine should be expended next summer. I should like to see advertisements issued calling for tenders for the construction of the work. Everyone knows that in the Maritime Provinces, where works are constructed mostly of wood, it is of great advantage to the contractors and the Government that the timber should be got out in winter, and I hope the matter is in such an advanced state that we will, at a very early date, see advertisements issued in this connection. When we have the two piers completed, the railway running down to the wharves, and an improved service, with a sufficient number of ice-boats and with a small steamer to assist them, and the whole service placed under one man, whom the Government can hold responsible, I think we shall be able to keep up communication with the Island, and hon. members will not hear annual complaints from Island representatives, as they hear them now.

Mr. LANDRY (Kent). Whether rightly or wrongly, there exists, no doubt, a very strong feeling in the Province of New Brunswick, and especially so in Prince Edward Island, that the present service is a very inefficient one. What I mean by saying "whether rightly or wrongly," is as to whether any blame should attach to the present or the previous Governments, which have had charge of the matter since Prince Edward Island entered the Union. It may be that the people do not fully appreciate the difficulties in the way of any Government seeking to make the service efficient. But the fact remains, notwithstanding, that the service is not such as to command confidence, and is the subject of complaint by the people generally. Now, Sir, it must be remembered that it is some ten or twelve years since Prince Edward Island was admitted into the Confederation; that at that time it was promised, and in fact an engagement was made, that when it entered the Dominion an efficient mode of communication would be established between the mainland and Prince Edward Island; and it does appear to the people, as it appears to me, that the time has been quite long enough for the Government to have arrived at some definite conclusion as to what is the best mode of ensuring efficient service between the Island and the mainland. As yet it would seem as if no definite conclusion had been arrived at, as to whether it shall be a communication between the two capes, Tormentine and Traverse, the route that is followed by the Northern Light or some other route. Representations were made to the Government last Session by my constituents, through me, that the route between Richibucto and the point opposite on the Island was a very easy one, and one over which communication could be maintained the whole year round. I do not know if action has been taken; I have not understood that any has been taken in an affirmative sense, at any rate, and no reply has been received, I believe, stating that that plan would be tested. I cannot speak personally as to that route, but only upon information received from my constituents; but it is asserted by them, by people who, I believe, know of what they speak, because they have long been residents near the shore, that within their memory there have not been more than one or two winters that a boat could not have crossed every day in the year between Richibucto and the opposite point, the name of which I have forgotten for the moment. As I have said, no answer was made, I believe, to representations in this behalf. It was asked that some subsidy, relatively small, should be given to a steamer between those points, and companies were willing and ready to assume the responsibility of trying the route with a steamer, provided that a small subsidy were given them. It is asserted by these people that communication could easily be had between those two points, and that there were only two or three days in one or two winters, during the last twenty-five years or so, when this communication could not be had. It is true that the distance is a little longer than between the two capes, but they assign reasons for their statement that a boat could ply between these places, and I think the Government should, at least, test whether or not those representations are correct. But if the Government have made up their minds that the proper place to have communication between the mainland and the Island is from cape to cape, it seems to me that a more efficient service should be had than the one existing at the present time, and that as speedily as possible the railways on each side should be made to come to the water's edge, and something more expensive, something which would give greater assurance of safety to passengers, should be done by the Government than exists at the present time. I have thought it my duty to add my voice to what has been said, in order that the attention of the House and the Government may be called more strongly to the matter, and that another series of years may not elapse without something more definite and more secure having been provided for this service. Believing the statements made by my constituents as to the practicability of the route between Richibucto Village on the one side and West Point on the Island side—in fact as being the best and safest—I respectfully urge the Government to grant some subsidy to that route, knowing that a company will easily be found to put a steamer on it and test the accuracy of the representations made.

Mr. JENKINS. Recent experience with the boats on this service has caused a great deal of excitement among the people of Prince Edward Island, and has brought this question very prominently before them. It is now nearly twelve years since Prince Edward Island entered the Union. It is well known that a very large majority of the people of the Island were averse to the Union with the other Provinces. They were desirous of maintaining their independence, of preserving the freedom of their government and the control of their revenues, but they felt it was the wish of the British Government that they should join the Union, and partly from a feeling of loyalty and partly because they thought the terms of Confederation offered to them were likely to conduce to their benefit, they accepted the terms of Confederation and entered the Union. Sir, one of the principal inducements to the people of Prince Edward Island to enter the Union was the promise on the part of the Dominion Government that continuous communication, winter and summer, should be kept up with the mainland. Now, I ask this House, how has this communication been kept up? The members of this Parliament who live on Prince Edward Island have been obliged, for the last ten years, to cross the straits that divide it from the mainland at the risk of their lives. Lately we have seen that twenty-two men were exposed to all the horrors of cold and hunger and exposure, and that they escaped with their lives almost by a miracle. That is the risk that hon. members of this House have been obliged to run for ten years, and I think it is time that Parliament should consider some better and more effectual means of giving us continuous communication between the Island and the mainland. The agreement which was made before Prince Edward Island entered Confederation, to give us this communication, has not been carried out, and we are now no better off than we were twenty years ago before we entered the Union. The people of Prince Edward Island feel that a wrong has been done them; that the Government is not taking that interest in the matter which they should take; that they have not performed the promise which was made, with regard to winter communication; that, in short, the Island is at as great a loss now as it ever was in this respect. It is impossible that any country can thrive unless it has continuous communication with other countries. We have a very fertile Province; we are able to grow food largely, but we have no opportunity, except a few weeks in the fall, for disposing of our produce. Now there are many ways in which I believe the Government could assist us. We have a very short season; our harbors are closed early in the fall, so that our farmers are unable to attend to the work of developing their farms, because they are forced to bring their crops to market before the ice forms. I believe it is quite possible to keep the harbors of the Island open for five or six weeks longer in the year than is the case at present, and that time would be of vast advantage to the people of the Island, by enabling them to work on their farms and to leave the shipping of their produce until the frost came, and they could no longer attend to their ploughing. This is not a question which affects Prince Edward Island alone, for I take it that what affects one portion of this Dominion affects all; and I think the representatives from the Upper Provinces take as much interest in the matter as those more directly concerned. The Northern Light has been alluded to, but I have always considered that it was not adapted to the service. It is not modelled on the proper plan for such work, and there is no doubt that it has been to a great extent a failure. I came over in her the other day, when she ran into a piece of ice, not more than 6 inches in thickness, and stuck there; and she would have been there until now but that fortunately there was a sheet of water open which enabled us to avoid the ice and reach Pictou Harbor. On her return trip she was out a week, and would probably have been out until the spring, but the captain adopted a suggestion I made on the first day the Northern Light went out of Charlottetown Harbor, which was that he should turn her stern foremost. He did so, with the result that he made his way through sixteen or eighteen miles of field ice at the rate of two and a-half miles an hour. That is sufficient to show that this boat, which was not built for this service, is not adapted for it; and I can tell hon. gentlemen she does better stern foremost than stem foremost. I can assure this House that the people of Prince Edward Island will not rest contented until they have a boat thoroughly adapted for the service. This is not a matter of a day. We know that there are other countries in which ice has to be combated. In some of the countries of Northern Europe, in polar expeditions, and in Newfoundland, people use steamers built specially for contending with ice; and we should have a steamer constructed on similar principles. My opinion is that there need not be twenty days in the whole year when a steamer may not navigate the channel between the Island and the mainland. It is true that occasionally, between Georgetown and Pictou, a north-east gale causes a heavy flow of ice. On these occasions I believe no steamer can run; but I am quite satisfied that at the capes there are very few days when a steamer cannot run from one side to the other, because the distance is so short that the sailors can see from the masthead the condition of the straits from one side to the other, and if they find that they are not able to run a steamer they can run ice-boats. But I believe this problem of winter navigation will be solved by the running of a moderate sized steamer at the capes in connection with the ice-boats. If it is found that the steamer cannot contend with the ice, she can land the ice-boats, and they can take the mails and passengers to the other side. Now, Sir, this question is a burning one with the people of Prince Edward Island—I am sorry to say it has been a freezing question with some. But it is a question in which the people of Prince Edward Island are deeply interested; they are agitated from one end of the country to the other on the subject, because it is impossible for them to engage in manufactures unless they can carry their products to market continuously. At present, there are three or four months in the year during which we are not able to get our products to market. We possess a fertile soil; we have cheap food, cheap house- rent, and cheap fuel, and we have a climate which is as invigorating as any on this continent; and there is no reason why Prince Edward Island should not have manufactures, except the one reason, that we have not continuous communication with the mainland. Now, Sir, the very sad disaster which has happened will, I trust, show the Government that it is necessary that there should be some supervision over the boats. The contractors are obliged, owing to competition, to place their rates down at the lowest possible point; they are not properly paid, and they are afraid to ask more, for fear that someone else would step in and take the contract from them. Now, I think the Government should take this matter in hand. The service should be in the hands of the Postmaster-General, conducted by him and under his control; he should employ the men, and should see that the boats are properly equipped and are never allowed to go to sea, as the boats now are, without a scrap of provisions, and with no comforts necessary to provide against such a disaster as has occurred. I trust that this will all be changed, and that the Government will see that no boats are allowed to go out without proper supervision. If that were done, disasters of this kind would be almost impossible.

GOVERNMENT OFFICIALS IN THE NORTH-WEST.

Mr. McMULLEN moved for:

Return of the names of all Government officials in the North-West Territories; the date of their appointment and the date upon which they entered upon their respective duties; the salary, fee or other allowance granted to each, including travelling or other expenses; the names and respective locations of sheriffs and registrars; the dates of their respective appointments, and the dates upon which they entered upon their duties, and the date from which their salary commenced to run; the receipts of their respective offices, monthly or annually, from their establishment up to the 1st of January, 1885."

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. I am not sure whether we will be able to obtain all these details, but of course we will do the best we can.

Motion agreed to.

PARRSBORO' BREAKWATER.

Mr. ROBERTSON (Shelburne) moved for:

Copies of all tenders for construction of breakwater at Parrsboro' lighthouse station, in the County of Cumberland, N. S.; copies of letter from Deputy Minister of Marine and Fisheries, accepting the tender of one Neil McKay, and of telegram postponing the work; also all letters objecting to the said Neil McKay as contractor and to the bondsmen offered by him, and letters tendering other names as bondsmen if required, and all other correspondence on the subject.

Mr. McLELAN. I have no objection to bring down all the papers that are not confidential from our agent on the subject.

Motion agreed to.

NORTH-WEST LANDS, &c.

Mr. MILLS moved for:

Copies of all Orders in Council, despatches or other communications with the Government of Ontario, in reference to the ownership of the lands, mines or timber, north and west of the height of land to the north of Lakes Superior and Huron since 1878, which have not already been brought down to the House.

He said: The hon. the First Minister, it will be remembered, made a very extraordinary statement in 1882, in reference to the ownership of these lands. He informed the electors of Yorkville and the country at that time that the lands of which the Indian title had not been extinguished before Confederation, and which had been extinguished since, became the property of the Dominion. That proposition is so wholly at variance with the views usually held with regard to the rights of the Crown to the public domain of the various Provinces, that I think it was well to see what correspondence has taken place on this subject, to ascertain how far the views announced by the hon. gentleman at that time have been adhered to by himself and colleagues.

TUESDAY, 10th February, 1885.

The SPEAKER took the Chair at Three o'clock.

PRAYERS.

MANITOBA INDIAN AGENCY.

Mr. SPEAKER. I have the honor to inform the House that the papers moved for yesterday by the hon. member for North Norfolk (Mr. Charlton) and which were missing in the Return, have been found. They were among the other papers just below the Return. The address voted yesterday is therefore now unnecessary, and I think some action should be taken.

Mr. CHARLTON. As the papers were mislaid and have been found, I move that the motion made yesterday for the papers be rescinded.

Motion agreed to.

FIRST READINGS.

Bill (No. 23) to amend the Act to incorporate the Wood Mountain and Qu'Appelle Railway Company.—(Mr. Williams.)

Bill (No. 24) to incorporate the Lake Erie, Essex and Detroit River Railway Company.—(Mr. Patterson, Essex.)

PATENT ACT OF 1872.

Mr. WHITE (Renfrew) moved that Bill (No. 25) further to amend "The Patent Act of 1872," be read the first time. He said: The object I have in view is to provide that the innocent purchaser of articles which may have been patented shall not be held liable for any penalties for the infringement of the patent rights of the patentees, but that these penalties should be imposed only upon the manufacturer and vendor of the articles.

Motion agreed to, and Bill read the first time.

STANDING COMMITTEES.

Mr. BLAKE. Before the Orders are called, I would once again call attention to the fact that the Standing Committees have not been, as yet, summoned for organisation, although a week has elapsed since they were constituted.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. I understand they are summoned for Thursday.

Mr. BLAKE. Why not to-morrow?

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. They will meet ere long.

GOVERNMENT ADVERTISING.

Mr. McMULLEN. A portion only of the Return I moved for relative to the amounts paid the different publishing companies in the Dominion during the last ten years by the Government has been brought down, and as that constitutes but a mere fragment of the whole, I would like to know what progress is being made in getting the balance ready.

Mr. CHAPLEAU. I have laid before the House all the information which has been received in the Department. The balance of the information will be brought before the House as soon as possible—very shortly.

DEPUTY SPEAKER AND CHAIRMAN OF COMMITTEES.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. Mr. Speaker, I move the following resolutions:—

That the House do elect a Chairman of Committees of this House at the commencement of every Parliament, as soon as an Address has been agreed to in answer to His Excellency's Speech; and that the member so elected do take the Chair of all Committees of the Whole, including the Committees of Supply and of Ways and Means, in accordance with the rules and usages which regulate the duties of a similar officer generally designated the Chairman of the Committee of Ways and Means in the House of Commons of England.

That the member so elected Chairman of Committees do continue to act in that capacity until the end of the Parliament for which he is elected, and in the case of a vacancy by death, resignation or otherwise, the House shall proceed forthwith to elect a successor.

That the foregoing Resolutions be made Standing Orders of this House.

That this House do proceed forthwith to elect a Chairman of Committees to take, during the remainder of this Parliament, the Chair of all Committees of the Whole, including the Committee of Supply and of Ways and Means.

If these resolutions meet with the approbation of the House, I shall follow them up with the following resolutions:—

That whenever the Speaker of the House of Commons, from illness or other cause, finds it necessary to leave the Chair during any part of the sittings of the said House, on any day, he may call upon the Chairman of Committees, or in his absence any member of this House, to take the Chair, and to act as Deputy Speaker during the remainder of such day, unless the Speaker himself resume the Chair before the close of the sittings for that day.

That whenever the House shall be informed by the Clerk at the Table of the unavoidable absence of Mr. Speaker, the Chairman of Committees do perform the duties and exercise the authority of Speaker in relation to all the proceedings of the House as Deputy Speaker, until the next meeting of the House, and so on from day to day on the like information being given to the House, until the House shall otherwise order; provided that if the House shall adjourn for more than twenty-four hours the Deputy Speaker shall continue to perform the duties and exercise the authority of Speaker for twenty-four hours only after such adjournment.

That the two foregoing resolutions be made Standing Orders of this House.

These resolutions are intended to introduce the practice which obtains in the English House of Commons, and also, I believe, in many of the Colonial Legislatures. It is found, and we have found, that the Chair of the Speaker is not a bed of roses. In Canada, the health of our Speakers has suffered from the too long sittings which have taken place. I do not like, Sir, to allude to yourself in your presence, but you have, I believe, had more than one significant hint that the long sittings which you have been obliged, in the performance of your duty, to submit to have been prejudicial to your health. I know that your immediate predecessor suffered materially, and I am sorry to say that my old friend and colleague, Mr. Cockburn, died in consequence of a disease caused by the long sittings in the Chair. There is a partial relief given to the Speaker by the provision that, during his illness or unavoidable absence, he may call to the Chair any member of the House; but it appears to me, and experience shows, that that is altogether an unsatisfactory way of doing business. In the first place, the hon. member who may be called may have no special aptitude for performing the duties of Chairman of Ways and Means or Chairman of Committees of the Whole House and Deputy Speaker. He has no sense of responsibility, and, if any question of Order arises, he is, of course, obliged at once to vacate the seat. He has no weight, he has no prestige or authority. He has no such authority as the Chairman of Ways and Means has in England, who rules on points of Order, subject, of course, to be overruled by the superior, paramount authority of the Speaker, but rules without the disturbance and interruption of the Committee being broken up and the Speaker called to resume the Chair. The experience of the British Parliament all points in one way, in that direction, and there is a series of reports which are to be found in the Journals and Sessional Papers in England showing the general consensus of the House, of the various Committees, and the various Speakers of great experience, such, for instance, as Mr. Lefebvre, who was known to be an authority on all such matters. Although our Sessions do not last as long, I find on enquiry that the average length of sittings de die in diem in Canada is fully as great as in England, perhaps on the whole greater, and crowded into a shorter period, thus causing at least as great a draft on the health of the Speaker as in England. We are a hardy race; we have a good climate; but I do not know that the physique of our Speakers will be found to be superior to that of the gentlemen generally selected in England. I shall move the first resolution, which refers to the election of a Chairman of Committees of the Whole House. He is called the Chairman of Ways and Means in England, because, as a matter of practice, in England the House goes into Committee of Ways and Means and Supply immediately after the Speech is answered, and there are certain estimates—I think the Ordnance estimates—which are brought down at once, and the Committee of Ways and Means is formed and organised at the beginning of the Parliament, the Deputy Speaker and Chairman of Ways and Means being elected almost immediately after the election of a Speaker. Our practice is different, and therefore I have adopted the name which seems to be more appropriate—Chairman of Committees of this House—and I see the same reason has induced the other Colonies to adopt the same name instead of the purely technical name of Chairman of Ways and Means. For years past a Chairman of Committees has been chosen in the following Australian Colonies:—In Victoria, where he gets a salary of £800; in Queensland, where he gets a salary of £500; in New South Wales, where the salary is £500; in South Australia, £400; and in New Zealand, £500. In all these Colonies they have found it necessary to have such an officer. We have not examined you, Sir, either upon oath or otherwise upon this subject, but I think the House will see that the regularity of its proceedings and the management of Committees of the Whole will be infinitely better conducted with an officer of this rank and position selected especially by the House, having in fact the same responsibilities in the position as you have in your position as Speaker. I move the adoption of the first resolution.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD.

On the first resolution,

Mr. BLAKE. I am sorry that the hon. gentleman should have adopted this particular form of reaching the conclusion which he desires to adopt. The course which he has pursued was not at all unreasonable in opening the question, namely, to invite our attention to the two resolutions, the whole mass of resolutions, I may say, of which only the first branch has been moved. I say that was not at all unreasonable, because, of course, the resolutions ought to be considered together. But the course which I think ought to be pursued in a matter of this description differs from that which the hon. gentleman has adopted. My opinion is that a change in our practice, both in reference to the occupation of the Chair and with reference to the appointment of a permanent Chairman of the Committee of Ways and Means, of Supply, and of the Committees of Whole in this House, that the powers which are given by the resolution to that officer, by reference to the powers given in England, that all the considerations which are involved as to the powers of the Chair itself, and all the considerations as to the salary, etc.,—that a proposal of that kind, when it involves also the proposition that we should pass the Standing Orders and so innovate upon our practice, ought to have been a reference to a Select Committee. When, on former occasions, we have dealt, as a general rule, with alterations in our practice and procedure, even of a less important character than this, we have adopted that course. There is no immediate hurry why we should appoint a Chairman of the Committee of Ways and Means to-day; there is, even, no immediate hurry why we should do it this Session; but there certainly is none why we should do it to-day. There is ample time for consideration, so far as this particular branch of the hon. gentleman's resolution is concerned. We have got on pretty well for nineteen Sessions; we adopted a long time ago the practice of calling one hon. member to the Chair of the Committee of Supply, which is the principal Committee of this House. That has come to be the recognised practice, and the Administration can adhere to it with that degree of rigidity which they think convenient. The course, which I admit is advantageous, of having one gentleman in the Chair of the Committee of Ways and Means is one which has great merit, but it is not necessary to adopt this resolution in order that we may carry it out. When a change analogous to these changes—at any rate, to the second branch of them—was about to be proposed in the Imperial House of Commons in 1853, and again in 1855, Select Committees were instructed to consider the whole question, to report what it had been in the past, to report their advice, and upon their advice steps were taken which were afterwards carried out by the House. The regulation is a permanent one, and as it is to be a permanent and lasting one, it is well to be cautious. In this very first branch of this resolution, I think, apart altogether from the question of the merits of the change, there is a defect. As I read the first branch of this resolution the House would be, after having passed it, entirely in a quandary if it should happen that the gentleman who is elected to be Chairman of Committees should happen to be absent from the Chamber when we are called upon to go into Committee. The second branch provides for filling the vacancy when there is a death, a resignation, or otherwise, by the election of a successor; but that does not apply to the case of a temporary absence from the Chamber; and in the case of a temporary absence from the Chamber there is no provision made for filling the office. This officer is to be Chairman of all Committees of the Whole. What if he is away? We have provision for his absence in the other branch of the resolution, of this second resolution, where you, Sir, are given an authority to call a gentleman to the Chair during your absence. It is said that if the Chairman of Committees be absent you may call some other member. But what if the Chairman of Committees is absent when the Chair in Committee of the Whole is to be filled? No provision whatever is made to fill that gap. I instance that, Sir, as a reason why it is important that we should look carefully into this matter and investigate it, according to our custom, with the assistance of a small Select Committee of which, I think, you should be one. Now, I have said that our custom has been for a long time to call some member to the Chair for the Committee of Ways and Means, and that that custom has worked satisfactorily on the whole. It would, in my opinion, be an improvement that the same member of this House should, as a rule, be called to the Chair in the other Committees of the Whole. I do not speak of Ways and Means, because I think that Committee is a less important part of our procedure than is Supply, but I speak of Committees of the Whole on private and public legislation. I think it is important that we should adopt that as a practice, just as we have adopted, as a practice, that one man should be called to the other Committees. These are the proceedings of this House which, I think, are the least satisfactorily conducted, and I do not attribute that to the fault of the Chairman of any particular Committee; I attribute it—if the House will permit me to say so—to the fact that we are in the habit of regarding altogether in a too perfunctory light proceedings of Committees of the Whole; that they ought to be regarded much more seriously; that they ought not to be the matters of course which, in too many cases, they are; and so long as they are so regarded by the main body of the Committee of the Whole it matters little who the Chairman may be. Now, the hon. gentleman spoke most of all, Sir, of the question of the Chair of this House. He addressed his observations to that point almost entirely. With that point we are not, however, now dealing; we are dealing with the Chair itself. But I call attention to the fact that the hon. gentleman's discourse was directed to that, and he gave us a very melancholy account of the consequences of filling this chair to previous Speakers, and he hinted that you, Sir, yourself—although none of us, by any outward and visible signs would have conjectured it—had suffered seriously in your health from the discharge of your duties. I hope, Sir, the hon. gentleman's kind feeling and sympathy towards yourself have led him to express a little more strongly than, perhaps, the facts entirely warrant as to the degree in which you have suffered from the discharge of your duties here. Ever since we commenced our existence as a Parliament, ever since the year 1868, we have had a very proper provision incorporated in our legislation by which you are empowered at any time to call another member to the Chair, and calling another member to the Chair, to retire and get those periods of refreshment which, I quite agree, may be essential to the person who has to perform your exalted duties during the stress and strain of a Session. I do not suppose that it is intended the Speakers of this House shall be absent oftener or longer than has been the custom in the past. I agree as to the importance of the Chair being, as a rule, unless in case of emergency, filled by the Speaker of the House himself: and therefore I shall very much more regret that we should appear to lend a color to more frequent absences of the Speaker than those necessary absences which have heretofore prevailed. But the hon. gentleman gave us an account of the unfortunate position, and of the difficulties created by the men who had from time to time filled the Chair at your request and by your order, which, I think, was somewhat exaggerated. He stated that gentlemen had been called who had no special aptitude for the Chair, who had no sense of the responsibilities which devolved upon them in the Chair, who had not that prestige of authority which belonged to you, as Chairman, and hence these difficulties occurred. I do not remember a single difficulty which has occurred in this House during the absence of yourself or your predecessor, Mr. Speaker, while the Chair was filled by some

hon. gentleman from time to time. I believe hon. gentlemen who have been called from time to time to fill the Chair have been persons who were not, of course, as competent as one specially trained for that office and filling that office permanently, but reasonably competent to discharge, and they did discharge, its functions reasonably well; and, therefore, I testify—and I had never the good fortune to be one of them—that they from time to time supplied reasonably well the place of yourself and your predecessors during temporary absence. That, however, again has nothing to do with the present resolution. While I have said that it would be an improvement if we could adopt the practice of calling one individual to the Chair of Committees of the House, not necessarily the same individual for all the Committees, but perhaps one for Supply and Ways and Means, and another for Legislation, which involves different considerations, different training and knowledge, and a different amount of enquiry and information from that which is involved in holding the office of Chairman of Supply and Ways and Means—I would say this, my opinion is that the plan would have considerable advantage. I think if one or two members, say two members, were chosen by those who are of the majority and control the House, and if it were understood that on occasions when you vacate the Chair as Speaker, one of those should be called upon, and upon the occasion of the House going into Committee of the Whole one or other should be chosen, you would find the exigencies of the case fully met. The position is one of dignity and one of usefulness, one which has been cheerfully undertaken by respectable members of this House, when from time to time in this and previous Parliaments they have been asked to undertake it. It is understood to be one which is an important position, and which hon. members are very ready to occupy as part of that service which they owe to the House and the country. Our Sessions last three months only, one-half or sometimes less, than those of the Imperial Parliament. Our attendance is regular compared with that of members in England, and therefore the question whether a member sits in the Chair or in his own chair in this House is not so very material. That plan, therefore, would give an opportunity of training more men than one; it would have the advantage of elasticity. It would have also an advantage which, I think, is not destroyed by the present plan, but which would, perhaps, be rendered more feasible by what I suggest, of selecting members most familiar with each of the two guaranteed languages in this House. We know that by the constitution the use of the English and of the French languages is secured in our proceedings here, as well oral as written; and I say that the rights of the minority in that respect are by us, who happen to be of the majority, to be carefully guarded, and it comes, perhaps, with better grace from one of those who belongs to the majority to say this, or at all events, to open the discussion on this subject, rather than one of the minority. I say that those rights exist from circumstances over which we have no control. Circumstances are too strong for us. A distinguished former member of this House said, as I observed the other day, that he was an Englishman speaking French; but of how many English members, may I ask, can it be truly said that they are Englishmen speaking French? It is not so. We sometimes make efforts, but they are not great successes. You and I, Mr. Speaker, each sometimes try to read some words of French, but you will agree with me that we do not make very much of it. You have an advantage in every respect over myself in that your utterances, even if it were otherwise in regard to the language, would always be understood; but mine being addressed to finite intelligences, would not be so easily understood. And I am quite sure that the difficulty is as clearly exhibited in our cases as it can be. You have sometimes reminded me of the story in Punch of the young English couple who went to France on their honeymoon trip, and while breakfasting at the hotel, the gentleman found some difficulty in making himself understood. Thereupon he dropped into English, and he found the waiters understood him. "Angelina," said he, "these waiters seem to understand English." "Of course, they do," said his wife, who was familiar with the language, "and I recommend you, if you want to tell me any secrets in public, to talk only in French." It is a little otherwise with our friends here. They have shown themselves to be very much more familiar with our language than we seem to be able to get with theirs, and yet it must be conceded that many of them speak to us at a disadvantage when they address the House in a language not their own, and it must be increased when the presiding officers as well as the audience are in the same position. I think the plan mentioned by me is the best. I think the plan which I have suggested, and which would carry out substantially all that the hon. gentleman proposes, would enable us to say that if the Chair of this House were filled by a gentleman whose native language is English, the Chair of the Committees should be filled by one whose native language is French. But the hon. gentleman proposes a great change; he proposes this new plan, and it is just as well to say that, as far as I can judge, the plan is to create a new salaried office. On this subject, indeed, the hon. gentleman did not do more than touch. Just by way of introducing the subject delicately, he told us that in Australia there was a salary of so much, in Queensland a salary of so much, in Victoria a salary of so much. Those circumstances are not very important to us; what we should like to know is what the hon. gentleman proposes for us, whether he proposes that this office shall be a salaried office, and if so, what shall be the salary. We are left in this respect in entire ignorance. I am not, I think, far wrong in predicting that the hon. gentleman does propose to create a new salaried office; and I am rather afraid I must say more, that it is a case, not of an office for which a man is wanted, but of a man who wants an office. I am much afraid it is so, though I do not like to believe it. But can it be that an estimable and amiable member whom we all respect, whom we all esteem, but who will be the first himself to admit that he has not yet exhibited to us on the floor of this House his Parliamentary capacity or fitness for that post, is to be made Chairman of Supply and of Committees and Deputy Speaker of this House? And is he to be made so in compensation for hopes deferred, if not destroyed, of a cabinet office to which he is not to be promoted, perhaps because he is thought not strong enough for the place, and perhaps because it is thought not safe to submit his acceptance of that place to the endorsement of his constituents. For my part I object at this time to the creation of a new salaried office. I think the times are not opportune for an increase of expenditure in this way. I believe the people at large think this legislative machine of itself is costly enough as it stands, and that they will be averse to paying an additional salary even to a member of this House without cogent reason. And especially are they so when it threatens the independence of Parliament and involves an addition to the places which may be held by members of Parliament, and more particularly to the places which may be held by members of Parliament without their receiving the endorsement of their constituents in the step which they take when they become, instead of being independent members of Parliament, members who hold offices at the gift of the Administration just as plainly as if they were Crown offices, and from which time they cease to be independent members of Parliament. They see, Sir, to day indirect means of increasing the patronage which already exists. They see it through companies of which members of Parliament are the principal proprietors, and under which enormous sums are yearly paid in effect to members of Parliament. They see timber limits, they see ranches, they see colonization companies, they see coal lands, they see gold lands, they see railway charters, they see railway subsidies, they see departmental favors, all used as machinery by which this Parliament is being perverted from being a free and independent Parliament to something very different, which, perhaps, it would not be quite parliamentary to mention; and I do not think they will desire to see added to this a new office, which, as I have said, is in the gift of the Administration as much as if it was a proposal that the Ministry should appoint the officer, inasmuch as the Ministry is about, in a little while, when this discussion is over, to move a selection or appointment which the House will doubtless ratify. I object, therefore, to the plan on all these grounds, but I am not sanguine enough to hope that my objection will prevail. This House has already swallowed camels, and I do not suppose that it will now strain at a gnat. If I could I would press on the hon. gentleman the settlement of the question in the sense in which I have referred to the two languages. If the system—the more elastic system which I have mentioned, which I believe would be the best—is to be departed from, and we are about to lay down once for all a plan under which this additional officer shall be appointed, then the time comes to consider what shall be done in that regard, and whether that question should not be regulated formally, as we are now regulating formally the appointment of the officer. We have here between fifty and sixty members whose native language is French. They bear with good nature and forbearance the inconvenience inseparable from the majority being English, with an imperfect knowledge of their language. They usually address us in English, and when they do so, they acquit themselves in that language to the admiration of the House. But great inconvenience to them must result, and it is then our duty to minimise that inconvenience as much as possible; and it would be reasonable to provide that whenever the Chair of this House is filled by a person whose language is English, the other office should be filled by one whose native tongue is French—turn about is fair play in that regard. Now, in these questions to which I have alluded, the whole subject might best be considered in the way I have suggested. I very much prefer that our proceedings with reference to our informal organisation should be disposed of in that way, and, if possible, by unanimous consent. I think I have said enough to show that there is no reason why we should proceed to the decision of this question to-day; I think we ought to consider it in the method to which I have referred. I am prepared, for my part, to vote against the scheme as now brought down, if the House presses it to a vote to-day; but I am prepared to vote for such a cast of the office as that I have referred to, though, on the whole, I think it would be better to endeavor to adjust this matter in the way I suggested at the opening of my remarks—to refer it to a Select Committee to consider the whole subject and to endeavor to ascertain what is the proper way to deal with it—to find precedents and practices and report to this House. I should like to know, at this moment at which we are called on to vote, how many members are acquainted with the powers and usages and practices that ought to be considered with reference to the Chairman of Committees—the powers and rights affecting the Speaker as they obtain in England? We are not informed as to these matters. The scheme does not strike my mind favorably in the first instance; but, desirous rather of finding a method which will accommodate opposing views, I propose the following amendment—leave out the words after "that" and insert the following:—

A Select Committee be appointed to consider and report to this House whether any and what improvements may be made with reference to the chairmanship of the Committee of the Whole.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. The hon. gentleman commenced by stating that the practice had been that one hon.

member was generally selected as Chairman of Committees of the Whole, and that that was the best practice that could be adopted. Well, it is very difficult to carry it into effect—to carry it out thoroughly. This subject, as the hon. gentleman knows—because I see he has studied the subject and examined the reports of the various committees in England—is one which was fully considered there; it was a matter of very grave consideration and some doubt, and it was only after the whole subject matter had been fully sifted that the House of Commons came to the conclusion that a change was absolutely necessary. The hon. gentleman says that he has not observed, when a Chairman is called to the Committee of the Whole, that there has been any irregularity or inconvenience. The hon. gentleman, if he looks back, will see—any hon. member who has sat in Parliament for some time, must have observed—that the proceedings in Committee of the Whole are not conducted with all the regularity, are not conducted with that deference to Parliamentary propriety that usually obtains when you, Sir, occupy the Chair. A casual chairman selected for the nonce cannot himself feel that confidence, that right to rule and decide, which a chairman clothed with official authority must feel. The hon. gentleman says this is a matter of governmental appointment. The appointment is to be made by the House—by a majority of the House, certainly, but still by the House, by the representatives of the people, and the officer appointed will be no more a governmental appointment than is the Speaker of the House. The majority will decide as they see fit, in a free Parliament of a free people, and if they choose to support the Government of the day, if they choose to approve the recommendations of that Government, it is no impairment of the freedom of the people; it is an exercise of the freedom of the representatives of the people, when they support the Government of the day. The hon. gentleman's main objection, however, is that there is going to be another salary. Well, I think we should pay a few pounds for the purpose of compensating the Chairman of Committees for performing the onerous and responsible duties of such a position. But the hon. gentleman wishes to be economical. Why, Sir, if the hon. gentleman would be more economical in the notices he gives for returns, I venture to say that the cost for returns which he has moved for—many of them of no use or utility, many that will not be printed, or considered by the Printing Committee to be worthy of printing—the cost of the returns which he asks for will provide the salary of the Chairman of Committees five times over. And then, Mr. Speaker, the hon. gentleman, above all things, is so anxious that my friends from Lower Canada who speak French shall have their interests protected. Sir, the hon. gentleman has thought that he might introduce a little sectionalism—that he might set English against French, and French against English. The thing is obvious—he gets such a support from the French Canadians that he feels that he must defend their rights, and must prevent them being trampled upon. The hon. gentleman's motive is kind, it is philanthropic. The hon. gentleman, flowing over with love for his fellow-men, and especially for his French Canadian fellow-men, makes this proposition because he has heard that a gentleman who is not a French Canadian may probably be proposed. It is rather unworthy, that, Mr. Speaker, of the hon. gentleman; it is not very dignified, and I am quite sure that the shaft will fail of its object. It is too thin, Mr. Speaker. My French Canadian friends understand this; they understand the object and the motive too well to pay much attention to the hon. gentleman's newborn philanthropy and French Canadianism. Mr. Speaker, I do not consent to the appointment of this committee. The subject has been threshed out by the experience of the House of Commons in England, to which we always refer with pleasure and instruction. We, as a general rule, in unprovided cases, adopt the rules of the House of Commons. It is provided in our own rules that in unprovided cases we shall adopt the practice of the House of Commons. We propose, in this case, to adopt that practice, and I shall oppose the motion in amendment.

Mr. CASEY. The right hon. gentleman has made two or three points, which he evidently considers very strong ones, against the proposal of my hon. friend on this side of the House. He says, Sir, that the Chairman of Committees would be just as independent of the Government as you yourself. Well, Sir, admit that; admit that the Chairman of Committees would be equally independent with the Speaker. The difference remains that the Chairman of Committees, instead of having a seat, like yourself, outside of the party contentions of the House, acting as arbiter on points of Order, would be an active member of the House, occupying a seat in the House, and with the privilege of voting on every party question, and casting his vote for the Government to which he owes his appointment. I conclude that if the Chairman of Committees is to be only as independent as the Speaker, he should not have a seat in the House, and should not vote on party questions any more than the Speaker does. On the second point, that the cost of the returns moved for by my hon. friend who proposed this amendment would be equal to five times the salary of the proposed new officer, the right hon. gentleman spoke with some feeling; he spoke with some energy, with something approaching anger, about the number of returns moved for by the hon. leader of the Opposition; and I do not wonder at it, Mr. Speaker. These returns have been called for, for the information of the public and the members of this House. "Oh," says the right hon. gentleman, "lots of them won't be printed; lots of them are not worthy to be printed." Well, Sir, I agree that if these returns are a true representation of the facts, many of them are scarcely fit for publication; because returns have been presented to this House before now, and will be again, I am quite sure, bringing things to light which ought to disgust the public, not only with the Government who do such things, but with the people who tolerate such a Government. It is true that, for the credit of the country, some of these returns should not be printed. But the hon. gentleman says that the cost of these returns would pay the salary of this Chairman of Committees five times over. If so, it follows that that gentleman is to have a very small salary, or that the cost of bringing down these returns is to be extravagant. We have heard $2,000 mentioned as the probable salary of this Chairman. If the right hon. leader of the Government can make the preparation of these returns cost $10,000, it will certainly be a glorious harvest time for the sessional clerks, and for those who have friends to be appointed sessional clerks. But what hurt the right hon. gentleman most was the "unworthy sectionalism" displayed by my hon. friend and leader. Well, Sir, it is certainly a crushing accusation to come from that quarter. If the action of the hon. leader of the Opposition seems to the right hon. Premier such a display of sectionalism as to pass the bounds of propriety, it must indeed have been a most disgusting display of sectionalism; because, if the sectionalism of yielding to, taking care of, and conciliating, the prejudices and feelings and interests of the different sections of the country was ever carried to perfection by any individual, I am quite sure the right hon. gentleman will be not only prepared to confess, but to boast, that it has been carried to perfection by himself. That which he now denounces as sectionalism has been one of the secrets of his own success. But is it sectionalism, in any sense, to provide for the convenience of the minority in this House? Is it even unworthy of our attention to provide for that recognition of their influence, their prejudices and their feelings, which can be granted without the slightest detriment to the feelings of any member of this House, or any interference with the business of this House? I think it is not so. I believe the proposition of my hon. leader is worthy of him, and worthy of the acceptance of this House, and I am sure it will be as gladly acceded to by the English-speaking members of this House as by those who speak French. We have recognised the principle of it already, more or less, in the appointment of Speakers. It has not been a hard and fast rule, but it has been almost the uniform practice that the Speakers should be taken alternately from those who speak the two languages; and it has sometimes been urged that we should have an English-speaking Speaker in the Senate, and a French-speaking Speaker here, or vice versa. In the present case, the Speaker of the Senate, as well as yourself, is a gentleman whose native language is English, and that adds force to the contention in favour of the amendment. But, Sir, the right hon. gentleman concludes that this exhibition of sectionalism lacks dignity; it is "undignified," he said, in his most rolling tones.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Oh!

Mr. CASEY. My hon. friends evidently recognise the imitation. They are so accustomed to cheer the tones I refer to, that when I imitate them they are bound to cheer also. He said it was "unworthy, undignified," and he capped the climax by saying, "It is too thin." If the speech seems undignified to the right hon. gentleman who considers the use of slang of that sort to be a highly dignified proceeding, it certainly was undignified, and I am very much ashamed of it.

Dugas,

Mr. ROYAL. I move that after the second paragraph the following paragraph be inserted:—

And that the member elected to serve as Deputy Speaker and Chairman of Committees shall be required to possess a full and practical knowledge of the language which is not that of the Speaker for the time being.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. This will give a fine opportunity for introducing a competitive examination.

Mr. GIROUARD. The House will be the judge of that.

Amendment agreed to.

Mr. MILLS moved:

That the main motion be amended by inserting after the words "so elected do" the words "if in his place in this House."

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. The hon. gentleman will find that in England the Chairman of Ways and Means, as in this resolution, takes the Chair, as a matter of course, in all committees and in the Committee of the Whole House, but should he be absent another Chairman can be appointed. However, I have not the slightest objection to accept the hon. gentleman's amendment.

Amendment agreed to.

Mr. IVES. It strikes me there might possibly be some misunderstanding in reference to the wording of the amendment of the hon. member for Provencher (Mr. Royal). His amendment says that the Chairman of the Committee shall possess a practical knowledge of the language, not the language of the Speaker, for the time being. I do not know, as it is, that there are only two languages. We have a good many Germans in Canada, and the Minister of Agriculture is bringing them in more rapidly every year. I think it is, therefore, worth considering whether the wording is not a little loose.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. Perhaps if Ah-Sin should be here, or an Indian, he might object; but as there are only two languages recognised by the Constitutional Act, the French and English, I do not think the question can possibly arise.

Main motion, as amended, agreed to on the foregoing division reversed.

Second resolution agreed to on a division.

Third resolution agreed to.

Fourth resolution agreed to.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD moved

That Malachy Daly, Esq., member for the County of Halifax, do take the Chair at all Committees of the Whole House, in accordance with the foregoing resolutions.

Mr. CASEY. It will be now in order, under the standing Orders of the House, to appoint a committee or a Board of Examiners to enquire as to whether the gentleman proposed has a full and practical knowledge of the French language.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. I hope the hon. gentleman will not be at that trouble. He knows as well as I that the hon. gentleman who was proposed is a gentleman who, although he cannot speak the French as well as his own language, understands it fully, and I am sure will be quite competent to make himself understood by hon. members of this House.

Mr. CASEY. I know that, and was only drawing attention to the peculiarity of the arrangement which may make it difficult at times to go into effect.

Motion agreed to on a division.

On the fifth resolution,

Mr. BLAKE. I rise to a question of order. The hon. gentleman has not signified the consent of the Crown to this.

SIR JOHN A. MACDONALD. The hon. gentleman is quite right, but I have obtained the consent of the Crown in writing.

Mr. BLAKE. The hon. gentleman has not yet signified the consent of the Crown.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. The hon. gentleman is captious.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Order.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. If "captious" is not a parliamentary word, I will take it back. The hon. gentleman is not captious. I move the resolution.

Mr. BLAKE. The question of order being now settled, I call your attention, Mr. Speaker, to another question, which appears to me to be of considerable consequence with reference to this resolution. The Constitutional Act has provided for the mode in which a Speaker shall be appointed, and for the functions of the Speaker. The 44th section provides that:

"The House of Commons, on its first assembling after a general election, shall proceed with all practicable speed to elect one of its members to be Speaker;"

And then the next section provides for the case of a vacancy. The 46th section provides that:

"The Speaker shall preside at all meetings of the House of Commons;"

And the 47th section that:

"Until the Parliament of Canada otherwise provides, in case of the absence for any reason of the Speaker from the Chair of the House of Commons for a period of forty-eight consecutive hours, the House may elect another of its members," for certain purposes; but the Constitutional Act does not itself make any provision for the case which is being met by this proposed resolution. It provides only for the case of the absence of the Speaker and the action of the House thereupon. The difficulty with reference to the action of the Speaker himself was provided for, as I mentioned awhile ago, in the first Session of the first Parliament, by chapter 2, the second Act we passed; and under that, by Act of Parliament, it was provided that:

"Whenever the Speaker of the House of Commons, from illness or other cause, finds it necessary to leave the Chair during any part of the sittings of the said House on any day, he may call upon any member thereof to take the Chair and to act as Speaker during the remainder of such day, unless the Speaker himself resume the Chair before the close of the sittings for that day;"

and so forth. Therefore, by an Act of Parliament, you were given a full and free power and discretion to choose any one from amongst the members of this House whom you thought fit to take the Chair, and such person was bound to take the Chair and have the authority. Now, the proposed resolution is that you shall "call upon the Chairman of Committees, or in his absence, any member of the House to take the Chair." I do not object to that rule at all. I think it is an extremely reasonable thing, in furtherance of the intention of the House and the English practice, that you should call upon the Chairman of Committees, or in his absence, any member of the House. But it is clear that the discretion given to you by this Act of Parliament is qualified and limited by the proposed Standing Order requiring you to call upon a designated member, and, in his absence only, upon another member of the House. Of course, the House of Commons, no more than the Senate, can alter the law of the land by a resolution. That is well understood. That is a fundamental point. Therefore it is by Bill that this change, which I entirely approve of in itself, must be made. If it is desired by the House of Commons to lay it down as a rule that a designated member must be called upon, we are altering the Act, and we cannot do that by a Standing Order or by a resolution.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. I quite agree with the principle laid down by the hon. gentleman, that this House cannot by a resolution alter an Act of Parliament. There is no doubt about that, and that is not my intention in moving these resolutions. These resolutions are introduced for the purpose of basing and founding an Act of Parliament upon them, and the moment they are passed a Bill will be introduced.

Mr. MILLS. Then they are not the Orders of the House.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. There is no question which comes before the Parliament which cannot be commenced by resolution.

Mr. BLAKE. No, there is no question which comes before Parliament which cannot be commenced by a resolution, but it must be a resolution upon which a Bill is to be founded. This is not a resolution for the founding of a Bill, but a resolution complete in itself, which the hon. gentleman proposes to make a Standing Order. It is now for the first time that we hear of the hon. gentleman's proposed Bill.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. There is nothing said about this being a Standing Order in the resolution now in your hands. We will come to that by-and-bye. In the meantime, I may assure the hon. gentleman that I have the Bill drafted.

Mr. BLAKE. We have this difficulty. We have already elected the Chairman of Committees. The Committee of Ways and Means will be struck very soon, we hope, and committees of this House will be in existence. Is this resolution to have any force in the meantime? Are you to be bound by it? On the face of it, you appear to be bound by it, but you are not bound by it, and it is an illegal order until the Bill is passed.

Resolution agreed to.

On the sixth resolution,

Mr. BLAKE. We have already arranged by a Standing Order, until and unless a Bill shall be passed, to override an Act of our own Parliament. I presume the hon. gentleman is equally able to override the Constitutional Act by a like Order. The Constitutional Act is an Act of the Imperial Parliament, for which the hon. gentleman has been supposed to have some deference, and the 47th section of that Act declares that, "until the Parliament of Canada otherwise provides"—mark you, Sir, not until the House of Commons, by a Standing Order or otherwise, otherwise provides, but "until the Parliament of Canada otherwise provides," and the only way in which the Parliament of Canada can provide is by an Act of Parliament—"in case of the absence for any reason of the Speaker from the Chair of the House of Commons for a period of forty-eight consecutive hours, the House may elect another of its members to act as Speaker, and the member so elected shall, during the continuance of such absence of the Speaker, have and execute all the powers, privileges and duties of Speaker." Now, there is a provision which was the same as, or was based upon, the then provision in England for this case. It is in the same words, and I maintain that any variation from that provision, any alteration of the relations of the House to the Chair in the case of the absence of the Speaker, cannot be accomplished otherwise than by Bill. Here you find, "until the Parliament of Canada otherwise provides," certain things are to be done. Now, what does the hon. gentleman propose? "That whenever the House shall be informed by the Clerk at the Table of the unavoidable absence of Mr. Speaker," so that, if you are absent at any time, not merely for forty-eight hours, but for that or any other time, "the Chairman of Committees shall perform the duties and exercise the authority of Speaker." What is provided in the 47th section is that "the House may elect another of its members to be Speaker." I maintain that we, by Standing Order, have no right to amend this 47th clause of the Constitutional Act, and provide that a designated member shall be called to the Chair. It must be done by Bill, and by Bill only, and the hon. gentleman's Standing Order, unless and until a Bill be passed, is a void Standing Order, in so far as it varies from the Constitutional Act, and is otherwise useless and waste paper.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. I quite agree with the hon. gentleman that unless and until the Act passes, the present provision in the British North America Act must prevail—unless and until it be otherwise; and we are now proceeding for the purpose of otherwise providing.

Mr. CASEY. Will the election of a Chairman of Committees, who is also to act as Deputy Speaker, be also null and void unless and until the Act is passed? And after the Act is passed, will it be necessary to re-elect that gentleman?

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. Hear, hear.

Resolution agreed to.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. To meet the view, to a certain extent, of the hon. gentleman, and instead of moving that the two foregoing resolutions be made Standing Orders of this House, I move for leave to bring in a Bill founded upon them.

Mr. BLAKE. This is the first time I have seen the hon. gentleman having intended to do a thing, and wanting to do a thing, being quite decided to do a thing, not know the way to do it. If the hon. gentleman had said these resolutions were intended to initiate proceedings for a Bill, and intending that and knowing that, he gave us notice they were going to be Standing Orders, and then sprang the Bill upon us, I am sorry to say the hon. gentleman should, upon this occasion, not have known the way. I rather suspect it was because he did not know the difficulty. If he had known the difficulty and intended to accomplish the object, I am quite sure we would not have seen this last resolution put upon the paper which the hon. gentleman has just now moved.

Motion agreed to, and Bill (No. 26) to provide for the appointment of a Deputy Speaker read the first time.

REMUNERATION OF CENSUS COMMISSIONERS IN THE NORTH-WEST.

Mr. CARON. In the absence of the hon. Minister of Agriculture, I beg leave to move that you do now leave the Chair, and that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole to consider the following resolutions:—

1. Resolved,—That the Minister of Agriculture shall cause to be prepared one or more tables, setting forth the rates of allowances or remuneration of the several Census Commissioners and enumerators employed in the taking of the census of the Province of Manitoba, the North-West Territories and the District of Keewatin, not, however, to exceed in the aggregate such amount for each day of proved effective service for any enumerator and for each day of like service for any Census Commissioner as the Governor in Council directs, and the same shall be laid before Parliament within the first fifteen days of the Session next ensuing.

2. Resolved,—That such allowances or remuneration shall be paid to the several persons entitled thereto, in such manner as the Governor in Council directs, but shall not be payable until the services required of the person receiving the same have been faithfully and entirely performed.

3. Resolved,—That such allowances or remuneration and all expenses to be incurred in carrying into effect any Act of the Parliament of Canada relating to such census shall be paid out of such moneys as are provided by Parliament for that purpose.

These resolutions are for the purpose of providing for the remuneration of the enumerators to be appointed for taking the census in Manitoba and the North-West Territories. It has been considered desirable to have the census in the Province of Manitoba and also in the North-West Territories taken every five years instead of every ten. I think it is very desirable that in a new and growing country like Manitoba its progress and development should be ascertained and published more frequently than once in ten years. As to the North-West Territories, I think it is also very desirable that their agricultural development and the producing capabilities of that very fertile country, in the way of agricultural products and cattle, should be ascertained and published to the world oftener than once in ten years. I know that at the present time those statistics are collected, but I think that under the new system they will be collected in a very much more satisfactory and complete manner than they are at present.

Mr. BLAKE. I am sorry that the hon. member has proposed these resolutions to-day. I think the proceedings, if not absolutely irregular, are premature. It is not a resolution upon which to found a Bill at all, and no Bill is actually introduced by the Minister of Agriculture for the taking of a census in the North-West Territories; and yet we have here the money resolution for that Bill. Now, as a rule, we do not take money resolutions on Bills until after the House has had the second reading of the Bill, and for the reason that money resolutions, when reported, are referred to the committee to which the Bill has been referred. But the Bill itself has not been printed. We are unable to scrutinise its provisions, to see if they harmonise with the money resolutions; and we really have not, therefore, a fair opportunity of seeing how they fit into the resolutions of the Bill. There is no difference of opinion as to the principle of the Bill. From this side of the House, some years ago, the suggestion was made that there should be a quinquennial instead of a more distant census. These resolutions contain, however, certain very peculiar provisions as to details for the payment of the enumerators. I know not whether the hon. gentleman (Mr. Caron) has received instructions from the Minister who is in charge of the Department to give full explanations as to the reasons why they have been inserted; but if the hon. gentleman had devoted himself to that point, instead of discussing the principle of a quinquennial census, which belongs to the Bill and not to the resolutions, his remarks would have been more pertinent to what is immediately before us. What is immediately before us is as to these details. There is an illusory provision as to the control of Parliament over these salaries. The resolution reads:

"That the Minister of Agriculture shall cause to be prepared one or more tables, setting forth the rates of allowance or remuneration," and so forth, "and the same shall be laid before Parliament within the first fifteen days of the Session next ensuing."

We do not know the principle on which these men are to be remunerated. We should have some further information as to the principle on which the public money is to be expended. Moreover, the resolutions should indicate the principle. This House should not give a vague and indefinite power to the hon. Minister, particularly when there is no need to do so. The census has been taken in these very Territories. It was done in 1881. The decennial census has been taken more than once in the country. The hon. Minister must know the proper principle, and if he does not know it he must find it out; he must lay down a principle after a little while, before he passes the Order in Council. Why should he not state to the House that such and such a principle is to be applied to the remuneration of the enumerators, and ask the House to sanction it, not ask the House to give the whole matter into his discretion. The resolutions also set forth that the allowances or remuneration and all expenses shall be paid out of such moneys as are provided by Parliament. My objection is to asking this House to surrender its functions of passing upon these proposals and handing over exclusive control and an indefinite power to fix the remuneration to the hon. Minister of the Department.

Mr. CARON. The leader of the Opposition is quite right in asking for the information which I have received from my colleague, who, unfortunately, owing to illness, is prevented from being in his seat to-day. As the House knows, under the old Act, the remuneration given to commissioners was $4 per day, and $3 per day to each enumerator. Payment was made up under the old Act—and it will be made up in like manner if these resolutions are carried into effect and a Bill based on them is accepted by the House—on a calculation of the days of service, the number of miles travelled and the number of families taken, the payment to commissioners not to exceed the amount I have stated, $4 per day, and that of enumerators, $3 per day. In addition to the amount stated, additional compensation was given in the case of some outlying parts of the Province, such as the upper part of the county of Ottawa. As in some remote portions of the older Provinces, so in the North-West Territory and Province of Manitoba, although the rule of $4 per day to commissioners and $3 per day to enumerators was laid down extras had to be paid, due to the sparseness of the population and the great length of mileage which had to be travelled, and also from the difficulties experienced in many instances by enumerators in getting from one place to another. Nevertheless, the rule adopted by the Department of Agriculture is intended to be followed—according to information I have received—which is, payment of $4 per day to commissioners and $3 to enumerators.

Motion agreed to.

(In the Committee.)

Mr. BLAKE. Perhaps the hon. gentleman will alter the resolutions by inserting the maximum rate of payment to which he has referred.

Mr. CARON. The information I have given is the information which I have received. I know that the maximum which the Minister intended to lay down as the rule to be adopted is $4 per day for each commissioner, and $3 for each enumerator. In the absence of the Minister of Agriculture, I do not desire to make the change which the leader of the Opposition has suggested; but I do not mean to ask concurrence in the resolutions until that point has been satisfactorily settled.

Mr. BLAKE. There will, of course, be allowed the same freedom of debate on the motion to concur as in committee?

Mr. CARON. Certainly.

Mr. MILLS. We see the practical inconvenience of being called on to consider these resolutions without knowing precisely at this moment what is contained in the Bill. I do not know from the provisions of the resolutions whether the Government intend taking the census over the entire North-West Territories and the District of Keewatin, or merely in particular organised districts. I think we should know what the Government propose to do before we are called on to take action. The hon. Minister in charge of the resolutions must be aware that unless the Government are prepared to dispute the decision of the Judicial Committee in regard to the boundaries of Manitoba, all those parts of the District of Keewatin in which there were no civilised settlers were embraced either in the Province of Ontario or the Province of Manitoba. The settlers along the Rainy River are now held to be within the Province of Ontario, and not within the District of Keewatin. Hon. gentlemen opposite, by the alterations they made in the boundaries of Manitoba, included in it the Icelandic settlements which were in the District of Keewatin, so that there are no settlers in the District of Keewatin, except a few wandering tribes, or sections of tribes of Indians. There are no people to provide a government for; there is no necessity for a government, and in fact there can be no civilized government within that particular district, and I cannot understand why the hon. gentleman should propose resolutions to take the census in a district in which there are no settlers, and in which there are not likely to be any for some time to come; for all those sections of the District of Keewatin which were at all likely to be settled for years to come are, as I have already stated, within either the Province of Manitoba or the Province of Ontario. Then, with regard to the North-West Territory, there are certain districts which the hon. gentleman marked out by Order in Council, into which settlers are going, which are surveyed and set out for settlement. I can understand why the census should be taken in those districts, as the hon. gentleman proposes, but surely the hon. gentleman does not propose to take the census of the Indian population on lands which are not set out for settlement. Surely the census is being taken with some object in view, either for the purpose of providing representation to the population in those districts, or for the purpose of giving aid to people going in there. So far, then, as those districts are concerned, which are set out for settlement and to which a population is going with a view of making a permanent settlement, there is a reason for taking a census. But with regard to other sections of the North-West Territories there can be no reason for taking the census and incurring a large expenditure unnecessarily. If there is one thing more than another which devolves upon the House, it is to look carefully after the public expenditure. When the Government make a proposal, it is the business of the House to see the extent of the authority which they seek to take, and to confine that authority within a reasonable limit. The duties of the Government are administrative, and it is the duty of the representatives of the people to determine how far they shall authorise the Government to take the census within five years. I think we should have had the Bill before us, so that we could have seen precisely what the proposal is, and seen that the taking of the census is confined to those districts which are set out for settlement; and only where it is necessary, where settlement goes on rapidly should the census be taken oftener than once in ten years.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. These resolutions were introduced by the hon. the Minister of Agriculture to expedite the business, and of course if the Bill does not meet with the approbation of the House, these resolutions fall; they are of no value. The considerations which the hon. gentleman has very properly brought up will have full weight with the House when that measure is taken. It is for the House to see whether the census has to be taken at all, except the usual decennial census, and it is for Parliament to see to what portion of the North-West, Manitoba or Keewatin the Bill shall apply. These resolutions are merely to fix the rate of remuneration, and they in no way pledge the House, except as to this point, especially when the proposition of the leader of the Opposition is carried into effect, and a maximum is stated.

Mr. MILLS. But the District of Keewatin and the North-West Territory are stated without limit.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. Of course. But the limit must be put in the Act.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. In the absence of the Minister of Agriculture, I would suggest to the hon. gentleman in charge of the measure, that it might be desirable to do as was intended to be done in taking the original census—that is, to lay on the Table of the House a schedule of the questions which these proposed enumerators are to ask and the information they should obtain. I mention that because I think it might be of very considerable practical importance in the future, that there should be presented as clear a view as possible of the condition of the people of the North-West to-day. I am quite convinced that in a few years their progress will be very great, and any comparison with this census would be of great value in every point of view. There are two or three matters which, at the proper time, I would like to call attention to, which have been omitted in our present census, and which I think it is greatly to be regretted were omitted, more particularly—and the hon. gentleman and the First Minister will see the force of it—that we have no information as to the quality and condition of the buildings in the Dominion of Canada. In all other censuses that I know of, and certainly in Great Britain and Ireland, great care is taken to show of what material the houses consist, of how many rooms the houses are composed, and valuable and important deductions touching the welfare of the population are and have been drawn from this information. I called attention to it in 1881, but, unfortunately, it was not attended to, and a valuable element of information has thereby been lost. Now, I think that in the case of the North-West Territories it would be of special interest to those who may be here five years hence to have this information.

Mr. CARON. I will make a note of the remarks which have fallen from hon. gentlemen, and will call the attention of the Minister of Agriculture to them. I am quite certain he will give the information if possible.

Resolutions agreed to, and ordered to be reported.

THE BUDGET.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD moved the adjournment of the House.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Is the hon. Minister of Finance in a position to give us any information as to when we may expect the financial statement?

Sir LEONARD TILLEY. I cannot, at present.

Motion agreed to, and the House adjourned at 5:50 p.m.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.

WEDNESDAY, 11th February, 1885.

The SPEAKER took the Chair at Three o'clock.

PRAYERS.

PUBLIC ACCOUNTS COMMITTEE.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. I would beg, if the Finance Minister does not object, that the Public Accounts should be referred, together with the Auditor-General's report, to the Standing Committee on Public Accounts. There has been, perhaps necessarily, some little delay in calling the Committee together, and it would be a convenience to have the Public Accounts before them to-morrow.

Sir LEONARD TILLEY. I have no objection. The meeting to-morrow is for organization.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD.

Mr. SPEAKER. Do you move it?

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Yes.

Motion agreed to.

REPORTS PRESENTED.

Report of the Minister of Railways and Canals for the year ending 30th June, 1884.—(Mr. Pope.)

Report of the Postmaster-General for the year ending 30th June, 1884.—(Mr. Carling.)

FIRST READING.

Bill (No. 27) to provide for the punishment of seduction and like offences.—Mr. Charlton.

THE PUBLIC DEBT.

Mr. CHARLTON asked, The gross amount of the public debt on 1st January, 1885?

Sir LEONARD TILLEY. The amount of the gross debt of the Dominion of Canada on the 1st January, 1885, was $253,739,146.77.

BUREAU OF AGRICULTURE.

Mr. GIGAULT asked, Whether it is the intention of the Government to take any action with reference to the suggestions made in the report of the Select Committee appointed during the last Session of Parliament to enquire into the agricultural interests of Canada, to the effect:—"That the Government take into earnest and favorable consideration the advisability of establishing a bureau of agriculture, and an experimental farm in connection therewith?"

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. This subject now engages the attention of the Government, and we hope to be able to come down with a measure on the subject this Session.

LIQUOR LICENSE ACT.

Mr. AUGER asked, Whether the Government has, as provided by the second sub-section of section 56, of the Act 30 Vic., chap. 30, intituled: "An Act respecting the sale of Intoxicating Liquors, and the issue of licenses therefor," made regulations directing in what manner the license fund shall be applied; and if so, what are the salaries of the commissioners and of the inspectors?

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. The Government have made no regulations on the subject as yet.

INTERCOLONIAL RAILWAY—EXPENSES AND EARNINGS.

Mr. BLAKE asked, What were the working expenses and the earnings of the Intercolonial Railway for each month of the first six months of the current fiscal year, as returned by the Moncton Office to the Department of Railways and Canals?

Mr. POPE. In the month of July, the earnings were $205,000, and the expenditure $250,000; in August the earnings were $197,948, and the expenditure $253,869; in September the earnings were $213,196, and the expenditure $255,146; in October the earnings were $233,754, and the expenditure $266,775; in November the earnings were $206,663, and the expenditure $232,159; and in December the earnings were $152,154, and the expenditure $187,550.

OFFICIAL REPORTERS OF THE DEBATES.

Mr. AUGER asked, Is it the intention of the Government to employ the House of Commons Hansard reporters during the recess at such reporting as may be required to be done in connection with the Supreme Court, before the official arbitrators, in special arbitrations or other cases in which such reporting is chargeable to the Dominion Government.

Mr. CHAPLEAU. The salary of the reporters has been fixed by resolution of last Session, but if it is the desire of the House that their services should be utilised during the recess, the Government will enquire into the matter. But, as I said before, the House has fixed their salary, by resolution, for their work only during the Session.

THE CASE OF D. J. HUGHES.

Mr. WILSON asked, Whether the Government has investigated the charges of certain petitioners of the County of Elgin, against the official conduct of D. J. Hughes, County Judge of Elgin? If so, do they intend to appoint a commissioner or to take any further action in the matter? If so, what action, and when will it be taken? Has there been correspondence between the Government and D. J. Hughes in the matter?

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. The Government has not investigated the charge. They do not intend to appoint a Commission, because, on careful examination of the whole matter, they are of opinion that it is not a case for enquiry under 45 Vic., chap. 12. As to the third branch of the question, a copy of the charges was sent to the judge, and he replied they were too general to answer. The Minister eliminated those charges in respect of which he did not think it necessary to ask an explanation. The other charges were then sent to the judge, who replied. The petitioner (Stanton) asked for a copy of this reply. On enquiry of the judge whether he had any objection, he replied that he preferred that his answer should be sent down to the House with the charges which had been made against him.

INDIAN ADVANCEMENT ACT OF 1884:

Mr. COCKBURN asked, Whether any band or bands of Indians, by order of the Governor in Council, have been declared fit to have the Indian Advancement Act of 1884 applied to them?

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. No band or bands of Indians have been declared fit to have the Indian Advancement Act of 1884 applied to them. The Act was not to be applied to Indian bands earlier than the first of January, 1885.

Mr. COCKBURN asked, Whether any steps have been taken by correspondence with Indian agents or otherwise, with a view to bring into operation the provisions of the Indian Advancement Act of 1884?

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. The attention of Indian agents has been called to the provisions of the Act, and they have been instructed to bring the same under the consideration of such of the bands within their agency as might be considered sufficiently advanced in civilisation to have the provisions of the Act applied to them.

MR. J. H. MORGAN.

Mr. COCKBURN asked, Who is J. H. Morgan, whose name appears in the Public Accounts for 1884 as having received $3,125 for services as Forestry Commissioner? When was he appointed, and upon whose recommendation? What are his duties? Has he made any report to the Government?

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. Mr. Joseph Henry Morgan, was, upon recommendation of Sir John A. Macdonald, appointed by Order in Council of 22nd February, 1883, a Commissioner to enquire into and report upon the subject of the protection of the public forests of Canada. He has made a report, a summary of which is published in the Report of the Minister of the Interior for 1884, part 6.

LIQUOR LICENSE ACT, 1883.

Mr. FOSTER asked, Whether it is the intention of the Government to maintain the Boards of Commissioners appointed under the provisions of the Liquor License Act of 1883 in counties and cities which have adopted the Canada Temperance Act of 1878; if so, whether since the recent decision of the Supreme Court of Canada in re the "Liquor License Act of 1883," if any instructions have been issued to boards in such counties and cities looking towards the enforcement of the Act; and, if not, if it is the intention of the Government to issue any such instructions?

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. The whole subject of this question is under the consideration of the Government.

BREAKWATER AT BAYFIELD, N.S.

Mr. McISAAC asked, Is it the intention of the Government to provide this Session for the completion or further extension of the breakwater at Bayfield, N. S.?

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. I am not in a position to say to the hon. gentleman whether the Government will provide for this work during this Session.

A DIVORCE COURT.

Mr. FARROW asked, Is it the intention of the Government to create a Divorce Court instead of having applications for divorce come before the two Houses of Parliament?

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. It is not the intention of the Government to introduce a Divorce Bill.

PUBLIC BUILDINGS AT NAPANEE.

Mr. PRUYN asked, Whether it is the intention of the Government to recommend the construction of a Customs and Post Office building at Napanee?

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. I must say to the hon. gentleman that I have not yet been able to bring this matter under the consideration of the Government.

CANADIAN PACIFIC RAILWAY—SECTION B.

Mr. CASEY asked, Has the sum of $395,600, awarded as damages to Manning, Macdonald, McLaren & Co., contractors for Section B, Canadian Pacific Railway, by Messrs. Brydges and Light, two of the arbitrators to whom the claims of the said contractors for damages were submitted, or any part of such sum, been paid to said contractors? If so, in what amounts and on what dates?

Mr. POPE. There was a certificate issued on 2nd July for $100,000; on 14th July one for $50,000; on 21st October, one for $245,600, making a total of $395,600.

Mr. CASEY asked, Has the intention of the Government, as stated by Sir Charles Tupper in Committee of Supply, on 17th April, 1884, to take the opinion of eminent counsel as to the binding character of the award of Messrs. Brydges and Light, giving damages to the contractors for Section B, Canadian Pacific Railway, to the extent of $395,600, and as to the action to be taken in case it was not considered binding, before paying anything on account of said award, been carried out? If so, what was the opinion of the counsel consulted, and what action has been taken?

Mr. POPE. Eminent counsel was selected, as Sir Charles Tupper said in this House at that time would be the case; and the advice was that there was no use in contesting the award.

Mr. CASEY asked, Did Judge Clarke, the nominee of the Government on the Section B arbitration make any separate report to the Government in regard to the contractor's claims for damages, or in regard to the award of Messrs. Brydges and Light which the latter state he (Clarke) refused to sign? If so, what is the nature of such report?

Mr. POPE. We have no such report.

TELEGRAPHS IN CAPE BRETON.

Mr. CAMERON (Inverness) asked, Whether it is the intention of the Government, during the present Session, to extend the telegraph system from Cape North along the north-west coast of Cape Breton in connection with the existing telegraph lines?

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. This matter was brought to my notice the other day by the superintendent of telegraph lines; I have taken no action in the matter as yet.

TRADE RELATIONS WITH FOREIGN COUNTRIES.

Mr. BURPEE (Sunbury) asked, Whether the Government have taken any steps towards promoting the extension of our trade relations with other countries, British or foreign? If so, with what country and with what prospect of success?

Sir LEONARD TILLEY. The Government have taken steps towards promoting the extension of our trade relations with other countries, but I may state to the hon. member that in the opinion of the Government it would not be in the public interest to name the countries at this moment.

GREAT AMERICAN AND EUROPEAN SHORT LINE RAILWAY.

Mr. PAINT moved for:

Copies of all reports made by engineers employed by the Great American and European Short Line Railway Company in Nova Scotia and Cape Breton, with the plans, papers and correspondence connected therewith; also, for copies of all correspondence with the Dominion Government and the Government of Nova Scotia on the same subject; also, copies of all contracts by and between the said company and other persons; also, a statement of all moneys paid out and expended on contracts for salaries, wages and labor; showing also the amounts, if any, still due and owing by the said company to their contractors, agents or workmen. And also a statement of the number of miles completed and graded in each of the counties of Cumberland, Colchester and Pictou.

He said: My object, Mr. Speaker, in moving for this Return is to procure reliable information in connection with the Great American and European Short Line Railway Company, which was incorporated in 1882, by an Act of this Parliament: I desire to ascertain why this company has done so little useful work. I want to know if there is any just foundation for the report so strongly made by a reliable party that this company has not paid its debts to the contractors, laborers and others, although the shareholders were reported to be millionaires. I wish, in short, to ascertain the total indebtedness of the Short Line Railway Company, and to arrive at some just plan whereby the contractors may be paid in order to avoid their total ruin; and I desire also to arrive at a just basis for the payment of the laborers and others, who are still in the locality of the works and within the Province, and who are deprived of the necessaries of life by being denied wages due them. In regard to the Short Line Railway passing through the Counties of Cumberland, Colchester, and Pictou, I am not here to say that it should not be constructed, but rather to give my support and influence, if needed, to assist in maturing a plan whereby, first, the debts of the company may be paid, and, second, the railway ultimately completed. But at this point I do not wish to be misunderstood.

Mr. POPE.

Whatever arrangements are made for railway extension into Cape Breton, my aim is that no entanglements shall be had in connection with any projected railway in Nova Scotia, and for this reason: There are parties who would undertake the construction of the 80 miles of railway in Cape Breton by itself; but if they are compelled to construct some 90 miles of Short Line Railway in Nova Scotia which would run side by side with the Intercolonial, they would not be disposed to undertake the contract in the Island of Cape Breton. My interest as the representative of one of the counties of Cape Breton lies in having the railway constructed by the shortest and most feasible route, and that route has already been surveyed from the Strait of Canso to St. Peter's Canal, 30 miles, and the additional 50 miles, from St. Peter's Canal to Louisburg have been surveyed but not located. The counties already named on the mainland, Cumberland, Colchester and Pictou, are intersected by railways, while Cape Breton has not one mile, except that which is situated in the locality of the Sydney Mines, with a line connecting the harbor of Louisburg and Sydney, but all owned by the coal company. Cape Breton has 90,000 people who desire and long for railway accommodation. At this time I appeal to the House on their behalf. Since 1851, a period of some 34 years, the agitation with respect to this railway has been continued, but nothing has been done up to date. It may be urged that the sum available in the Dominion Treasury is not so large as formerly when subsidies were given. As one member from the Island I take the responsibility of saying that if the Dominion Government will give us 2,000,000 acres of good land in the North-West, that grant will ensure the construction of the road. It is time this much needed railway was an accomplished fact, constructed either by the Government or by a company. The necessities of the Government may compel us to accept 2,000,000 acres of land in the North-West in lieu of a cash subsidy, such a gift being perfectly in order when made to a portion of a grand trunk line such as this will be, extending as it will do from Vancouver to Louisburg. The disposal of these lands will be an easy mode for the Dominion Government to do justice in the matter of our through railway; besides, the advantages of such a transaction would not be altogether on our side, for the whole Dominion would be benefited and the bond of mutual dependence would be strengthened. Whatever arguments apply to the granting of a Dominion subsidy to the Canadian Pacific Railway, that great transcontinental line of Canada, apply with equal or greater force to a railway in Cape Breton from the Strait of Canso to Louisburg, as a portion of the great trunk line already constructed to the Strait of Canso, and only requiring the building of 80 miles to bring the railway to an unsurpassed terminus. In regard to the disposal of the land, I said that the advantage would not be altogether on our side. By giving Nova Scotia a share in the North-West Territory the people of that Province would be interested in developing and filling up those railway lands, and they would naturally be desirous of furnishing an outlet for the passengers, mails and products of the North-West Territory. So far as the Island of Cape Breton is concerned, nature has decreed that the outlet shall be by way of Louisburg, for no other harbor in the Island is so accessible at all seasons of the year. I may be asked: Why do you not apply to the Nova Scotia Government? It is true that Government ought to take a deep interest in this railway, but it is only a few days since two hon. gentlemen were here from that Province, Messrs. Morrison and Church, seeking from the Government what is very much like better terms, and, therefore, I do not think that a great deal can be expected from them. Moreover, when the Nova Scotia Local Government gave the Dominion a good and sufficient title to the Pictou and Truro Branch Railway, including its extension—in all 130 miles—worth $4,000,000 for the sum of $1,200,000, since this transaction they maintain that they have relieved themselves of all responsibility for carrying the road into Cape Breton, and have placed the obligation on the Federal Government or, at all events, strengthened our claim for liberal consideration. I am not here, Sir, to plead the cause of the Local Government, nor to aid them in relieving themselves of their responsibility in this matter. But, Sir, we have seen how much has been done in building branch lines in different parts of the Dominion. I notice that 208 miles of railway were built in Prince Edward Island, which is only half the size of Cape Breton; a railway from the Intercolonial, the St. Charles Branch, carried into Lévis opposite the City of Quebec, costing nearly one and a-half million dollars—nearly sufficient in itself to build our road to the Island of Cape Breton; the Vancouver Island Railway, under construction, was provided for last winter in this House; a number of branches were built or are being constructed on the great river of Miramichi; a branch, 27 miles in length, carried to Dalhousie—to the harbor of Richibucto, connecting it with the Intercolonial; 43 miles from the Intercolonial to Parrsboro', and another short line projected to Pugwash, which, in my opinion, should be built; and still another line projected in the vicinity of Metepediac. I am glad to see all these lines being constructed; I am pleased that the several counties in which they exist are deriving these benefits. But, Sir, I plead on behalf of Cape Breton, and I wish to say that the electors of that Island look upon the short line project with contempt, and consider it a perfect flumbug. I desire to say further that there is a great probability that although the Island of Cape Breton sent five members to this House to support the Government—there is a possibility that they may not come again, if the Government does not do something for the railway this Session. When I see all these other railways in the different counties, I am led to exclaim, I wish Sir Charles Tupper had resided in Cape Breton; but I know, I feel assured, that the right hon. leader of this House and his Cabinet will be disposed to do us justice. We were assured on the floor of this House a year ago that this short line route would be extended into Cape Breton. We have been waiting for that good time to come for two or three years past, but up to this time with no better result than the miserable failure in Nova Scotia. And although, Sir, Cape Breton has not, as we consider, received justice in this matter, I am here to say we are still Liberal-Conservative supporters in this House.

Mr. CAMERON (Inverness). I fully concur with my hon. friend from Richmond, N. S. (Mr. Paint), with respect to the feeling which exists in the Island of Cape Breton in reference to railway extension through that Island. It would almost be impossible to exaggerate the intense feeling which exists on that Island in regard to that question. Disappointment after disappointment followed for several years, and the disappointment of last year was not the least, because then we had the assurance that at an early day a railway would be commenced and finished from the Strait of Canso, Sydney or Louisburg. However, Sir, I doubt very much if this is the place to discuss one particular phase of that question—I mean the various arguments with respect to the route of the railway. My own idea was and is still that the determination of the route through the Island of Cape Breton should be left exclusively at the discretion of any company who would undertake to build the railway through the Island. I apprehend that in past days the enforcement of particular routes upon railway companies may have been the reason why disappointment followed disappointment successively. It would be unwise, it would be unfair, it would be against the interests of the Island of Cape Breton to tie the company down to any particular route, and therefore I think it is premature even to mention the route now. When the Government are in a position to subsidise a company sufficiently to enable them to build that road, or when the Government undertake the construction of the road themselves, it will be ample time for the member for Richmond, the member for Cape Breton County, the member for Victoria, or the member for Inverness, to present the claims of the respective localities, and to give reasons why any particular route should be selected. On that phase of the subject I have determined not to speak. My object in rising now is merely to make a statement in behalf of the Short Line Railway Company, in reference to which the hon. member has spoken. I am authorised by the engineer and the general manager of the Great American and European Short Line Railway Company to state that no correspondence has taken place, and that no plans in regard to routes in Cape Breton had been talked of or submitted to the Government; that no location of the line had been made or considered by the company, and that none would be made until the different routes had been surveyed and reported upon; that while different routes recommended by members of Parliament and other interested parties would be carefully surveyed and estimated, it was the intention of the company to ask those members of Parliament and others interested to present such statements as each might desire to make in favor of the route which he preferred; and that such statements, together with the engineer's report, would be submitted to the directors of the company for approval before any route in Cape Breton would be adopted, subject to the approval of the Governor in Council. My object in rising on this occasion was simply to state this in behalf of the company and to assure my hon. friend from Richmond (Mr. Paint) that it is in the interest of a railway extension in Cape Breton to leave the selection of the route exclusively to the discretion of the company undertaking to build the railway subject to the approval of the Governor in Council.

Mr. BAKER (Victoria, B.C.) I would like to correct an error which the hon. member for Richmond, N.S. (Mr. Paint) made when he included in the amounts expended on railways in the Dominion of Canada, an amount for a line on Vancouver Island, which has not yet been constructed, and which has not, nor will it when built, cost the Dominion one dollar. On the contrary, it will cost the Province of British Columbia a great deal, and it puts me very much in mind of dropping a shilling and picking up a sixpence.

Mr. POPE. I may say to my hon. friend from Richmond (Mr. Paint) that the Government have already shown by their acts that they have taken a great interest in this road. A subsidy has already been voted for it; and the interest the Government took in it at that time has not lessened one whit to this hour. We feel the importance of that section of country being opened up by railway communication, and we will do, as we have hitherto done, all we can for it.

Motion agreed to.

PUBLIC BUILDINGS AT ST. THOMAS.

Mr. WILSON moved for:

Copies of all reports and correspondence not already brought down relating to the construction of the Post Office, Inland Revenue and Custom house at St. Thomas, giving the amount expended to date; also the names of all persons to whom any portion of the expenditure has been paid, together with the amount paid to each, and for what?

He said: I regret exceedingly that I find it necessary on this occasion to make a similar complaint to that which I made a year ago, that is as to the slowness of the construction of the buildings at St. Thomas. It appears to me that there might be a little more expedition in the completion of those buildings, and I think the Government, if they were aware of the offices which their various servants there have to occupy, and the impairment of their general health which is caused thereby, would find an inducement for urging forward the work a little more rapidly. I cannot understand why they do not exercise more energy in the completion of those buildings, unless perhaps, it is in order that some of the officials in the employment of the Government may be able to draw a little larger salary the longer the buildings are delayed. One of those officials, who was formerly a member of this House, has been employed by the Government ever since the construction of those buildings was commenced. The buildings were announced to be constructed just before the last general election, no doubt with the intention of producing an effect there,—no doubt with the object that that individual might be returned; and I might say here in passing, that judging from the liberal amount he is receiving from the Government, it is much better for him that he was defeated and I returned. I do not suppose, if I had been defeated and he returned, that I would have received the good things he has been receiving during the time those buildings have been going on. But, Sir, I find the amount given to this individual a very liberal one indeed. I have taken the trouble to compare the amount received by him as clerk of works with the amount paid to other clerks of works in various parts of the Dominion, and I find that he receives the largest amount. He must certainly be a very highly favored individual at the hands of the present Government. The Auditor-General's report shows that the contractor for the work received $16,000 odd. What do you suppose this clerk of works receives? The liberal amount of $1,980, nearly one-eighth of the whole amount paid to the contractor. Now, that does seem to me to be more than he ought to have received, and it is perhaps one of the reasons why the progress of the work has been so slow; because, when the buildings are completed, of course his usefulness in that capacity will be gone, and until something new turns up for him at the hands of the Government he will be without his daily pay. I wish also to call the attention of the Government to another fact. I think they will agree with me that in the interests of the officers, especially those employed in the collecting of Customs, their health ought to be considered. The hon. Minister of Customs will know full well that the building occupied at present by these clerks is not suitable at all and very injurious to their health. I might say further that though the Government may consider they are not wholly to blame for the delay in construction, as the gentleman who had the contract, Mr. Henry Linden, found in the past great difficulty in obtaining the stone for the building on account of those with whom he entered into contract not being able to supply it as fast as required—though perhaps that will be to a certain extent his excuse and be considered as a satisfactory excuse, as far as the Government is concerned, I do not look upon it in that light. I think that it was the bounden duty of the Government to see that the contractor proceeded with the work with all due speed. The hon. the Minister of Public Works, whom I now see in his place, may be able to state the reason why the very large amount of $1,980 was paid to the clerk of works when there was only $16,000 paid the contractor. Mr. Arkell does not appear at all in the report of 1883 as clerk of works. I do not know why he did not appear in that report, and I called the attention of the House to that fact last year. In this year's report I find since then he has been appointed clerk of the works and did not appear as such before, as he had received no pay prior to that time. I hope the Government will proceed with all despatch to get the buildings completed, and at the same time I would desire to see here done what it has been the custom to do in other places where the Government put up public buildings, namely, make provision for laying a pavement in front of the building.

Mr. WILSON.

We have given the Government the advantage of grading and thus relieved them from that necessity; and as it is advisable we should have correct time kept by the Government in the future, I would mention to the hon. the Minister of Public Works the propriety of placing in the tower built for the purpose a very good clock.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. You want to go on tick.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. When I saw my hon. friend in his seat, I felt sure he would call my attention to that matter this, as he did last year. I am very much pleased to tell him that the work is proceeding very well now and will be completed in a very short time. The delay occasioned in the construction of the building was not due to the contractor or the Government or their employés. The contractor had made a contract with parties to furnish him with the stone required, and I think the hon. gentleman will admit that the quality of the stone is a very good one; but the party who agreed to furnish the stone was delayed or disappointed and could not furnish it in time, thus occasioning delay. Of course when we begin with a certain kind of stone we must finish with the same kind in order that the building may be throughout of the same color, and that the upper part may not be of such color as would disfigure the structure. The hon. gentleman speaks of the clerk of works. Well, the clerk of works, his predecessor, was a representative of the county. It shows the representatives of that county are men to be trusted, and perhaps the hon. gentleman himself may some day or other occupy this trustworthy position. As to the price paid per day, it was that paid for a trusted man or one having special aptitude for this work, and is not an excessive rate. The hon. gentleman now suggests a few different improvements. He suggests that there should be a sidewalk. Well, it is likely a sidewalk will go with the building as is generally the case with all buildings of some importance. As the building does not pay any revenue to the town, we may give it a good sidewalk, and I do not suppose, though the county has the advantage of being represented by the hon. gentleman, we will make a different rule in this case. As to the clock, this matter will have to be considered.

Mr. MILLS. It takes time.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. I cannot say whether we will give the time to the hon. gentleman in St. Thomas; but at all events the suggestion has been made from different quarters. The building, however, not having been completed, I do not think the matter should be laid before my colleagues now; but it will be considered when the building is about being completed. The papers will be brought down.

Mr. CASEY. I am astonished to hear the hon. Minister say that no unusual price has been paid for the services of Mr. Arkell as clerk of works on this building. On looking at the Public Accounts I find he was paid $1,980 previous to the first of June, 1884, and apparently for the year 1883-84, as it was put in the accounts for that year. The hon. gentleman appears to be under the impression that Mr. Arkell received only $3 a day for the number of days he was employed. $1,980 is a great deal more than $3 a day for one year; that would only bring the amount to about $900, or less than one-half that paid. Or if you take it that Mr. Arkell only got $3 a day and that this amount paid was for all the time he was engaged on the works, it would carry his engagement back two years and two months—in fact to the time he sat in this House. The hon. Minister must be misinformed as to the rate.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. No; he was paid for the time he was employed.

Mr. CASEY. Then he was employed during the time he sat here as a member.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. I think not.

Mr. CASEY. $1,980, total payment, made up at $3 per day, would give 660 days, or two years and two months of working days, which would bring the employment back, dating from the last of June, 1884, to the time this House was last in Session in 1882, previous to the general elections, when Mr. Arkell was still a member. I do not suppose he was paid at that time, and I presume the Minister has been misinformed as to the rate of his pay. But, when I compare the salary of Mr. Arkell with that of other clerks of works in the year 1883-84, I find that he has received $700 more than any other clerk of works in the whole Dominion of Canada, engaged on any buildings whatever. The services of Mr. Arkell were considered to be worth $700 more than the services of any other clerk of works, and not only so, but, when I compare the works on which he was engaged with works of the same importance elsewhere, I find very grave discrepancies. The nearest comparison I can find is the Dominion buildings at St. Catharines, on which $16,300 were spent, while $16,580 were spent on the buildings at St. Thomas; but the clerk of works at St. Catharines was paid only $150, while at St. Thomas he was paid $1,980. It is evident that a very different scale of remuneration prevails in St. Catharines from that which prevails in St. Thomas. At another place, Clifton, $17,300 were spent on the works and only $637 on the clerk of the works. If I go a little farther and refer to larger sums, the discrepancy is still more remarkable. I find that the clerk of works who looked after the building of the Manitoba Penitentiary, near Winnipeg—and that is a place where living is supposed to be pretty dear—a building on which $38,880 were spent, was paid $145.60 for his services. The clerk who looked after the works at Hamilton, on which $89,730 were spent, was paid $1,281, which is the nearest approach to Mr. Arkell's salary, being $700 less, while six times as much money was spent on the works under his care. If we go again to the North-West, I find that the large sum of $122,837 was expended on the Parliament buildings in Winnipeg. The expenditure of this money was looked after by no less than three clerks, one receiving $1,000, one $500, and a third $200, the whole three receiving $1,700, or $230 less than Mr. Arkell got for looking after the expenditure of $16,580 in St. Thomas. I think the hon. the Minister must admit that he has adopted a very different scale of remuneration in these different cases, and I can only draw one conclusion, that there is some special virtue in connection with the constituency of East Elgin, which confers not only distinction but special capacity for public service on those who have at some time or other represented it. As Mr. Arkell is not a man of any special previous experience in this kind of work, and considering that he spends most of his time, in the autumn and winter at all events, in buying grain at a point twelve or fifteen miles distant from St. Thomas, it cannot be imagined that his excessive pay is due to any special aptitude in the man himself, or to any special attention which he pays to the work, but that the special pay is due to the exceptional virtue conferred upon him by his having at one time represented that remarkable riding of East Elgin, a virtue which has made his services worth $700 more than those of any other similar official in the Dominion, and ten or twelve times as much as officials who have superintended the expenditure of several times as much money elsewhere.

Mr. MACKENZIE. I think the hon. the Minister ought to give the date of the first payment to this person. I do not think the hon. gentleman can pass these remarks in silence. There is a grave charge made of over payment, and the date should be given.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. I have not the date of the payments, but this motion asks for the papers, and the date will be given in those papers when they come down. If a question had been placed on the Orders, I would have given the answer.

Mr. MACKENZIE. I suppose the hon. gentleman was reading from a document in his hands.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. I had this note about the delay that had occurred. The hon. gentleman had called the attention of the Department to that, and I thought he would speak of it to-day, and therefore I asked the officer of my Department to give me a statement about the delay that had occurred, which resulted, as I mentioned just now, from the failure of the party who was to furnish the stone to the contractor to give it at the proper time.

Mr. CASEY. I would suggest that the date of payment should be added to the Return.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. Of course I will give that.

Mr. BLAKE. The hon. gentleman will, of course, see that the statement he has made is entirely irreconcilable with the Public Accounts in regard to this matter. He has stated that this gentleman is paid $3 a day.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. $90 a month.

Mr. BLAKE. We count Sundays as well?

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. That is $3 a day. It is always done in that way.

Mr. BLAKE. I dare say it is always done, but I am glad to know it, because when we talked of $3 a day for a surveyor of works, I supposed it is paid for the days on which he surveyed them, and I presumed that he went to church on Sundays. That is $1,080 a year. The accounts show a payment to this gentleman of $1,980 in the year, which is very nearly double what he should have received according to the hon. Minister's statement. I think, as my hon. friend from East York (Mr. Mackenzie) has said, that calls for some explanation.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. I will give the time from which he was employed and the amount of money he received every month up to the last date.

Mr. MACKENZIE. I am informed this gentleman is not a mechanic at all: Who recommended him for this position?

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. His services in this House recommended him, and nothing else. I say the facts which were disclosed and discussed in reference to this matter before require the attention of the House. Here is an expenditure of $16,000, and $2,000 is paid to an member of the House who knows nothing whatever, I have been informed, and it was stated before in this House, about the practical details of the post of clerk of works, but he gets the $2,000 of the public money for superintending an expenditure of $16,000. These are the facts as they appear, and they are not disputed by the Minister.

Motion agreed to.

INSPECTION OF BANKS.

Mr. CASGRAIN. I had occasion some time ago to call the attention of the Government by putting a question whether it was their intention to introduce some measure during this Session in order to get a better supervision of banks and banking institutions. They answered that it was not their intention to do so, at any rate during the present Session. Now, I think that, under the different circumstances which have appeared lately before the public concerning banks, some legislation is required better than that which we have now, in order to give more security to the public. It is true that a bank may be considered a private institution. To a certain extent it is, but, looking at it in a broader light, it is a public institution, and so much so that to-day the banks are obliged to furnish to the Government certain returns. Well, these returns are not sufficient to guarantee the public as to the accuracy of the figures. I need not go very far back to show to the Minister of Finance that a deposit that he had in one of these banks is to-day in a very precarious situation, and that also a deposit made in the same bank by the Local Legislature of Quebec is also in a very perilous position. Now, if that particular bank had given a true and reliable return, surely it would have been the duty, both of the Local Government of the Province of Quebec and of the Government of the Dominion, to make no deposit in that bank. I consider that some kind of legislation ought to be had further to secure the public interest. The public are sometimes deceived by these returns. In one instance the stock of a certain bank was stated by the Government returns to be worth some 170 or 175 per cent., but when the true state of the bank's affairs came to be known those figures dwindled down to about 60. It is true, it may be said that it is the fault of the shareholders who sometimes elect men as directors who ought not to be confided with that trust. But the shareholders may have elected as directors men whom they believe to be worthy, but who turn out afterwards to be dishonest. Now, if these men are guilty of misappropriation of funds, or of other delinquencies, they ought to be brought before the tribunals of the country; and it is with that view that I intend to press this motion and to take the opinion of the House upon it. For instance, there should be a measure which would guard the shareholders and prevent the bank directors from endorsing, for some of their patrons or some of their friends, to a large extent. I consider that to be a breach of trust, and I affirm to this House that such has been done repeatedly, and such breach of trust ought to be punished. Moreover, Sir, these banks very often contain funds which are the only means of widows and orphans, and such funds ought to be protected by the Government. I know that in the Province of Quebec bank stocks are considered to be immoveable property which tutors and guardians have no right to sell, and therefore there is a security for minors, which, I think, ought to be extended all over the Dominion. Look at the general credit of our banks for the last twenty years or so. Previous to that time our banks enjoyed a good credit all over the country and were on a solid foundation; but since that time we have a long list of losses by banks who have been doing a bad business, of failures and disasters. The public losses in these respects have been very severe, and I think they might have been prevented by sound legislation. Look at the Bank of Upper Canada, for instance. What has become of its assets? I dare say there are many members on the floor of this House whose families have lost through that bank. I will not say what was the cause of it, but I think politics had something to do with it at the time. What has become of the City Bank, and of the Federal Bank? What has become of the stock of the Jacques Cartier Bank, of the Banque Ville Marie, of the Banque du Peuple? The latter has reduced its capital to one-half. Then there is the Mechanics' Bank and the Metropolitan Bank, and very likely there are others.

Mr. VAIL. The Consolidated Bank.

Mr. BOWELL. And the old Commercial Bank.

Mr. CASGRAIN. Well, what has become of the assets of all these banks to-day? Twenty years ago all our banking institutions were on a solid basis, but to-day we must say that many of them are not on a solid basis. Well, Sir, I think that sound legislation would prevent a recurrence of the disasters which have fallen upon the unfortunate shareholders and the country. I think we should pass a measure which would give to the Minister of Justice or the Finance Minister a direct supervision over these banks, and give power to enquire into the state of their affairs. Of course, the information might be considered confidential by the Government in case the particular bank was in a good condition, and then it would not be necessary to publish the affairs of the bank; but the moment the affairs of a bank appear to be unsound the fact should be divulged so that public misfortune may be prevented. There is another point. If a man is appointed as bank director he must consider his office as one of trust; he is not to be appointed a director in order to forward his own private interests to the bank's detriment, but he must consider his position as one of trust in which he is to manage the business for the benefit of the shareholders. He ought not to be a debtor of the bank to more than the actual amount of his stock in that bank—a thing that has occurred in many instances. If we look at the returns of the different banking institutions we find the directors too often are large borrowers of the funds of the bank, and in such cases, of course, they look to their own private interests first and afterwards to the interests of the shareholders. I maintain that it would be for the interests of the country at the present moment that we should have a law which would secure the public and the shareholders. I therefore move:

That it is expedient that some measure be adopted for securing by legislation a better supervision and inspection of banks.

If the Government do not take up the matter themselves I shall undertake myself to do the best I can in that direction.

Sir LEONARD TILLEY. I listened with a great deal of interest to the speech of the hon. mover of the resolution, supposing that he would indicate the course that should be pursued in order to guarantee the interest of the public and of the stockholders. But I failed to gather—perhaps because I did not hear distinctly all he said—I failed to gather from him much information relative to the system that he would propose to adopt if he introduced a measure upon this subject. The suggestions made by the hon. member were such suggestions as would be made on an amendment being proposed to the Banking Act, controlling the directors as to their using the funds of the bank and various matters of like character, rather than with respect to the security of the stockholders and the public, to whom the hon. gentleman particularly referred. He thought it was desirable that the Government should be clothed with the power to send some officer to visit the different banks in the country, and if the condition of a bank was good, to say nothing about it, but if bad, to take such steps as would expose its condition. The difficulty that would arise if the Government under any circumstances—unless, indeed, they were of a very extraordinary and peculiar nature—sent an officer to inspect a bank, was obvious. The very fact of its being known, no matter how strong the bank might be, that the Government had sent an officer to examine into its condition, would be most damaging to its interests, especially so if the Government adopted the suggestion of the hon. member, to say nothing about the result. This is a question of great importance, I admit, and when we were amending the Banking Act a few years ago, it was discussed very fully by the Government and by gentlemen, both bank directors and others. There are various difficulties in the way. If we had, as in the United States, national banks, with comparatively small capital, doing a business in the locality where they were established, without having a large number of branches in different parts of the country, it would be comparatively easy to have an inspection, as is done in the United States by the comptroller of currency or by his representative; but difficulty has been found even in the United States, for we know that an inspection has been made and a favorable report submitted with respect to the condition of a bank, and six months afterwards the bank has been in difficulties, and the persons who trusted the bank had lost money.

Mr. CASGRAIN. Who was wrong, the inspector or the Government?

Sir LEONARD TILLEY. If an Act were passed by Parliament to-morrow authorizing the inspection of banks, and the Government officer visited a bank and made a report that the business was sound and in good condition, and six months afterwards the bank became involved in financial trouble, who would be held responsible. The Government would be held responsible. It would be said that we deposited money there, we took the notes freely—the Government has provided that notes must be first paid in advance of all other claims—we deposited money there at a high rate of interest because the Government had reported favorably on the bank; and, no doubt, people would come to Parliament for compensation, because they had deposited money on the certificate of the inspector. It is an exceedingly difficult question, and hon. members who have anything to do with banking business know that even if the Government secured the best man in the country for the position of inspector, he might be acquainted with the standing of the Merchants Bank in Montreal, but he could form a very vague opinion of the character of the securities in its different branches throughout the Dominion, and in this way it is much more difficult to provide for inspection than it otherwise would be. There are those who object to inspection, and say, why inspect banks more than other companies? The Government has secured persons holding the circulation. But if a person will deposit money at 5 or 6 per cent. on a higher rate, because a particular bank is disposed to give more than other banks, it is a matter for the parties themselves to consider, as they would do if they were dealing with any other corporation. That is an objection pressed by many who object to bank inspection. But while this subject was under discussion the Government endeavored to ascertain whether we could, in addition to guaranteeing the circulation, secure a system of efficient inspection, because inefficient inspection is worse than no inspection; and the Government, after considering the matter and hearing the arguments pro, and con, decided that, as the difficulties were so great, they would not ask Parliament to establish inspection. I know that this matter has again been pressed on the Government during the last two or three months, but surrounded as the question is with so many difficulties the Government authorised me to state, in answer to a question put by the hon. gentleman who has moved this motion, that it was not the intention of the Government to introduce a measure in regard to bank inspection, at all events during the present Session.

Mr. HESSON. This is a question of very considerable importance, and to a great extent I agree with what has fallen from the Minister of Finance in regard to the danger which would arise from improper inspection. If the Government found that a bank required inspection and they adopted the suggestion of the hon. member who has moved this motion, there is no doubt that the bank would be damaged by it. I cannot but feel that the injury or evil arising out of the banking system might be very largely mitigated if the Government would adopt what may be regarded as a very rash policy at the first glance, but one to which I fully believe this country will come sooner or later, and that is to withdraw from the chartered banks the privilege of circulating their own bills. I am satisfied that until the Government adopts that policy, until they give the banks to understand that when their charters lapsed that privilege will be withheld in future, and the Government will take the whole of the paper issue into their own charge, the evil will go on, and go on increasing, as my friend has pointed out, to the injury of the stockholders and depositors and also the unfortunate bill-holders. I do not see why any institutions should possess that privilege simply because they make a demand for it. It is quite sufficient that people should have to risk deposits, if they have the good fortune to be able to make deposits, but it is another thing that men drawing their weekly or monthly wages, should be called upon to suffer loss on the circulation of the bank, and that capitalists should be able to buy up the circulation and make large profits out of the unfortunate note holders who are unable to wait until the assets of the bank are realised. The time has come for a change, and on the termination of the present bank charters the Government should take on themselves the responsibility of issuing the whole of the paper circulation of the country.

Mr. IVES. I do not agree with the mover of this resolution in his view that bank inspection would be of practical advantage. In fact, my observation has taught me that in the United States, where it is possible, it has been anything but effective; and I think with the Finance Minister, that here it is hardly possible. The inspector by the time he had inspected the head office would have to go to the different branches, and it would be quite possible for a dishonest management to deceive the inspector, and to furnish him with paper or notes at the different branches which would verify the returns, whereas it might be transported from the head office to the branches, or from one branch to another. If directors and managers of banks are not competent and honest it is impossible for any inspection we could adopt, or which the Government might attempt to carry into effect, to be effective. But I think there are some particulars as to which the Banking Act might be amended in the direction of improving the security of the public, and one particular to which I would like to call the attention of the Finance Minister, if he contemplates amending the Act is this: that a more stringent provision might be made, obliging the directors of banks to dispose of immoveable or chattel property which may fall into their hands. It is well known that it is quite common for directors of banks, when property falls into their hands, to hold it for years, and to put it down in their statement of assets at exactly what it cost them, when in reality it is not worth one third or one half its cost. It appears year after year in their statement of assets; the public know nothing about it; the managers and directors do know, but it appears in their statement at a fictitious value. This is a matter which regulates the dividends paid by banks, and I believe there are cases in which banks are made weaker by paying dividends which they have not earned, by reason of the fictitious value of these assets, whereas, if this property were not held, and they were compelled to write off the losses, the public would be aware of their extent, and the bank would not be weakened by having to pay dividends on more than the actual value of their assets. I think a provision obliging banks to sell all such property within a certain time, for whatever it may bring, would result in our getting annually a more accurate account of the standing of the banks than we can at present. Our large institutions, doing business all over the country, in the course of years, accumulate a large amount of property which they find it difficult to sell, which they are loath to sell at the prices they are able to obtain for it; they do not care to acknowledge that they have sold it for less than they paid, and they therefore carry it on and it appears at the price which it cost them, and the result is that they pay higher dividends than they are able to pay. They pay more than they should pay, and they grow weaker for that reason. I do not mean to say that such provision as I have suggested would be a panacea, but I think it would be one of the best amendments which could be made to the Banking Act.

Mr. CHARLTON. It strikes me, that the suggestion of my hon. friend from Richmond and Wolfe (Mr. Ives), that banks should be obliged to dispose of real estate and chattel property which may come into their hands, is a strong argument in favor of the proposition of the hon. gentleman at my side (Mr. Casgrain), that there should be some kind of inspection of banks. The argument advanced by the Finance Minister that such inspection would be damaging to our banking institutions would not have, I think, very much force, if the law provided for a periodical and regular inspection of all banks, as the law should provide. There may be difficulties attending the inspection of banks, but this is a matter of detail. If it is necessary and proper that the affairs of banks should be inspected, it rests with the Government or those who settle the details of the Bill to grapple with the question as to the difficulties of inspection. There can be no doubt that the inspection clauses of the National Banking Law of the United States have been effective, and have been a great guarantee of protection to the public of that country.

Mr. MACKENZIE. Was it in the case of Ward & Ward?

Mr. CHARLTON. My hon. friend reminds me of Ward & Ward. But theirs was not a national bank; they were a firm of brokers on Wall street. It is true that many national banks in the United States have come to grief, after the inspectors had pronounced them solvent, but this has been caused by perjury and concealment on the part of the officers of the bank, the result of robbery. But there can be no doubt whatever that the affairs of the several thousands of national banks of the United States are kept in proper order, that they are prevented by the national inspection from embarking in speculations, which they would be likely to embark in but for that inspection. It is not necessary that the inspector should judge as to the character of the securities or the business paper in the hands of the bank; and certain provisions might be arranged for, as, for instance, prohibiting the directors from borrowing more than a certain sum of money in proportion to their stock; preventing banks from lending on a single line of discount, beyond a certain proportion of their stock; and various salutary restrictions might be provided, and the only way of securing the observance of these restrictions would be by an efficient system of inspection. I believe that such a system is imperatively called for. I believe many of our banks—in fact, we know that many of them—have been unsound, have been proved insolvent, and in many cases I believe the business of these banks, under proper restriction and inspection, would have been kept in a position of preventing such calamities. I take pleasure in seconding the motion, believing that some properly devised measure for the inspection of banks would have a salutary effect on the public credit, conducing to the interests of those who have to do with the banks as borrowers, or who make the banks their creditors by becoming depositors in them.

Mr. BLAKE. There are no doubt certain difficulties in the way of making a system of inspection effective, particularly in the respect to which the hon. Finance Minister has alluded. Notwithstanding, my own opinion is that these difficulties ought to be grappled with, and that the present condition of our banking system has demonstrated that it is very unsatisfactory. We have had, as my hon. friend from L'Islet (Mr. Casgrain) has pointed out, a very great series of catastrophes; and we find in tracing these cases that the returns in almost all of them—made, I believe, under the sanction, if not by Order of this Parliament—have been returns which cannot be characterised as otherwise than false. There are returns made which it is impossible to reconcile with honesty and attention to the concerns of the bank. Either there was a gross want of attention or there was dishonesty on the part of the officials who made the returns. Now we are responsible in that regard. We offer to the public at present a certain security. We say: We have provided for returns, and these returns are published from time to time in the Official Gazette, and they come before you, and they show you the condition of the banks; we publish them in order that the public may be informed and may judge of them. But we know—I do not at all say in all the banks—but we know from time to time, in the institutions which have broken down, that these returns have been really falsified; therefore, the evils which the hon. gentleman adverts to, of a parliamentary security given to the public—which turns out to be fallacious—exists at the present day, but exists in a manner and to an extent which requires to be considered. Now, I would make a practical suggestion on that subject. I maintain that the Government, with reference to these measures, ought to see to it that the criminal law is, in the first place, in a proper condition to take hold of those who are guilty of these falsifications, and, secondly, to see that the provisions of the criminal law are enforced. I am not now discussing the constitutional question of criminal procedure and criminal jurisdiction; we know that in election cases provision has been made for the Attorney-General taking part in the prosecutions or arranging them; but in some way or other it ought to be made plain that the power of this Legislature is intended to be exercised in the vindication of the law in cases in which that law has been abused. Up to this time the instances of its abuse and the instances of punishment for that abuse contrast in a very unsatisfactory manner, and nothing is more unfortunate than that a law should be a dead letter. You tell the public that these returns are made under the sanction of an oath, and yet they are falsified; and it turns out now that much may be done and is done in the direction of falsification, and very little punishment seems to follow. With reference to the observation which the hon. gentleman made, as to the responsibility of the Government, it seems to me open to a very strong comment. He says, You send your inspector out, and he visits the bank and reports that it is all right, and if, six months afterwards, the bank fails to whom does the public look? It comes to the Government, and he says the Government are responsible. But I would ask the hon. Minister whether it is not a greater guarantee to the public of the confidence of the Government in a banking institution, that the Government deposits its money to the extent of hundreds of thousands of dollars in that institution—whether the fact that the Dominion Government had deposited with the bank is not, to depositors, to note-holders, to shareholders, and to all concerned, a guarantee of its solvency of a much more pointed character than the mere return of an inspector; and yet, under our present law, as the hon. gentleman administers that law, he gives a guarantee which costs to private individuals who rely upon it, I do not know how much, and us also, large sums of money. So, it seems to me, with reference to the doctrine which the hon. gentleman has laid down, of the responsibility of the Government to the public for these declarations of the inspector of the solvency of banks, that a very strong comment is to be made as to his own conduct in dealing with insolvent banks and fraudulent returns. Now, the hon. member for Richmond and Wolfe (Mr. Ives) has suggested that we should take care that the banks should realise their dead assets. Of course, it would be a good thing if we could compel them to do so. It would also be a good thing if we could compel them to abstain from making these big accounts which they make, and which are really the cause of their difficulties—the creation of credits of immense magnitude, out of proportion to their resources. In such cases, the person to whom the credit is granted, and who is carrying on a gigantic business, reaps all the advantage and the bank all the disadvantage, in the event of misfortune. It would be a good thing if we could restrict banks in making these large accounts, and compel them to realise their assets. But you cannot do it. What would happen if you tried to compel a bank to realise its real property which it had taken for a debt? It would simply happen that the bank would keep the security in a mortgage instead of in an absolute deed, until such time as it could be realised. You cannot interfere with the internal economy of these banks in that way. There are modes of evading such interference, as there are modes of evading the provision of the law which limits the credits of directors; for it does sometimes happen that more money goes to the credit of a director than the Banking Act allows. It seems to me that such restrictions would be ineffective; but something might be done to effect a more vigorous application of the law to those who make these returns, and the hon. gentleman might draw some instruction from the observations which have been made and which condemn his practice in the past.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. The remarks of the hon. gentleman are more directed to the expediency of amending the Banking Act and having a supervision, so far as supervision could be had, and punishing banks making false returns under the Bank Act. Well, if the present Bank Act is not stringent enough, and the powers given to punish banks making false or fraudulent returns are insufficient, that question is well worthy of consideration; but that is not the motion made by the hon. gentleman. The motion made is:

"That it is expedient that some measure be adopted for securing by legislation a better supervision and inspection of banks."

Now, I think my hon. friend the Minister of Finance has given a satisfactory answer to that proposition, that it would not be effective, that it would mislead the public, and would be of little practical value. In the United States they have a system of inspection, which has failed in very many instances. We have no system of Government inspection in the same sense in Canada; yet I take it that the proportion of failures in Canada does not exceed the proportion of failures in the United States. But besides, as my hon. friend has stated, the opportunities for an effective inspection in the United States are infinitely greater than in Canada, owing to the difference in the two systems. The banks in the United States, as a general rule, especially in the State of New York, with which we are more intimately concerned in matters of trade, have a small capital, running from $50,000 to $100,000, and so on. They are small private banks, doing business in a limited area; and an astute inspector sent to inspect a bank in any village or town in which it may be situated, has an opportunity of examining its securities—the commercial paper and other securities—and enquiring as to the standing of the various customers of the bank. He can only approximately arrive at a correct valuation, but he can do so approximately. But how can we arrive at a valuation of the assets of a bank having fifty or sixty agencies? The hon. member for Richmond and Wolfe (Mr. Ives), would submit to inspection the branches of a bank. If it be impossible to have an effective examination and to have anything like an efficient valuation of the assets of a bank, and if there cannot be an efficient valuation of those assets, the fact of an inspection merely misleads the public. They will, rightly or wrongly, put confidence in the Government's inspection. They will say: Well, the Government has just inspected this bank, it is all right, and we can make our deposits in it. The hon. gentleman spoke about the Government strengthening banks by making deposits. Well, it is sometimes in the interests of the Government, and the Government have no interest, except that of the public, to do so. It has been, in my experience, looking back, found requisite or expedient by several governments, in times of great depression, to prevent universal ruin, universal panic, to come to the help of some of the banking institutions. Those hon. gentlemen who have lived as long as I have will, if they look back, find that governments have, on occasion, prevented universal panic by acting in concert with strong banking institutions, in helping to sustain banks which were not quite so strong. That has happened and will happen everywhere. It has happened in England where governments have come to the rescue of the Bank of England, in times of panic, to prevent a run on the bank. Every government must, of course, act on its own responsibility, to the best of its judgment, in coming promptly to the protection of the commercial and financial world and the people generally. If they make mistakes they are liable to animadversion, but no government ought to deprive itself of the power of assuming that position in times of great depression, great commercial distress and panic. Now the hon. gentleman from the west riding of Durham (Mr. Blake) makes certain suggestions which, as I have already said, are of value, and the Minister of Justice will, I have no doubt, look over the Banking Act and direct his attention particularly to this one point, that the returns should be carefully considered as they are made, so that if the law be not sufficiently effective now, most stringent measures should be adopted, on the criminal side of the law, to punish all parties who make false or misleading returns, and that faults of omission in returns should be considered equally criminal with faults of positive mistake. I think that is worthy of consideration, and I hope, after this discussion, my hon. friend will not consider it requisite to press his motion to division.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. I am not entirely disposed to dissent from what the hon. the First Minister has said, but I think he will agree with me that the interference of the Government for the purpose of protecting a particular bank or particular banks is a most extreme measure, only justifiable under most extreme circumstances—in times, as I think he said, of extreme depression or panic, or for the purpose of averting extreme depression or extreme panic. It ought to be guarded carefully and exercised under a sense of heavy responsibility. I am not at all sure that an Act of indemnity ought not to be applied for, and most undoubtedly it ought to be considered as being in the highest degree an act done on the responsibility of the Executive, to be guarded with all possible precautions—Orders in Council and the like. That point we may have an opportunity of discussing on other occasions; but now, with respect to the matter more particularly in hand, I think the case stands somewhat thus: There have been, unfortunately, very great scandals connected with the failures of certain recent banks, and there is a general impression on the public mind that there has been a failure of justice, that bank directors and bank presidents, and other persons connected with banks, have failed most signally in their duty, and no proper means exist for punishing them. That is the popular impression, whether correctly founded or not. I recognise, as fully as the hon. gentleman, or as the hon. the Finance Minister can, that there is great difficulty in obtaining adequate inspection. I do not see myself how any Government inspector, or set of inspectors, could arrive at any fair idea of the value of the discounts of these large banks. I admit that is a very great difficulty. I am not certain, however, that more care might not be taken, or that the inspection might not be judiciously used for the purpose of ascertaining whether, discounts apart, the regulations laid down by our Banking Act are complied with; but of this I am very sure, that in practice, at any rate, our criminal law requires to be strengthened. Acts have been shown to have been committed by persons entrusted with the funds of shareholders and depositors which ought to have received severe punishment. In England and the United States acts of a like nature have received extremely severe punishment; and though I do not think there is need that our criminal law should be amended, I think in this and many other cases there is urgent need that the Government of this country should take steps, at an early day, to endeavor to extradite criminals of this kind. That would be a very important additional safeguard to all our banking institutions. On the whole, I dare say, my hon. friend having obtained an interesting discussion on this subject and been the means of eliciting some very valuable suggestions with reference to it, might comply with the request of the hon. the First Minister, though that is for him to decide. I hope the Finance Minister and the First Minister, who, having been Minister of Justice in former years, is especially able to take charge of this matter—having had great experience in banking matters in the olden time—will consider the suggestions of my hon. friend, with the view of strengthening the criminal law, and will not disregard my own suggestion, that the immediate extension of the extradition treaty will be of great value to all the depositors and shareholders in this community.

Sir JOHN A MACDONALD. I have, I think, indicated to the House that there is an Extradition Treaty now being negotiated between England and the United States, which I hope will come to fruition, and I believe, if so, it will cover every real offender against the criminal law.

Mr. IVES. I quite agree with the hon. the leader of the Opposition, that it would be difficult to formulate a provision in the way of an amendment of the Banking Act that would prevent directors of banks from evading the provision requiring them to dispose of their dead and ineffective assets, but I still think it would be quite possible to do it. I believe his difficulty about changing the ownership for a mortgage would be got over by obliging them to sell such assets for cash. If we had a provision of that kind, which would clear off the dead and ineffective assets, and an amendment to the criminal law which might bring about more care on the part of the directors, the two working together would do good; but it would be very easy, under any amendment to the criminal law, for the directors to hide themselves behind ineffective and dead assets and make their statements really show what they declare in returns to the Government.

Motion negatived.

RAILWAY COMMUNICATION WITH OTTAWA.

Mr. LANDERKIN moved for:

Return showing the amount contributed to the Canada Central Railway between Ottawa and Brockville, either by the Government of Canada, the Provincial Government of Ontario, or by the municipalities along the line of railway. Also for similar returns concerning the Ottawa and St. Lawrence Railway from Ottawa to Prescott; together with the conditions upon which such grants were made to both railways; also statement showing the present train service on both lines of railway.

He said: My attention was called to this subject in coming to Ottawa. I found that the train service on one of these lines at least was very different from what it formerly was. I might state, for the information of the House, that on the trip coming down on the Grand Trunk Railway, we started from Toronto at ten o'clock at night and reached Brockville, a distance of nearly 225 miles, in about seven hours. We then took the train at Brockville, and did not reach Ottawa until eleven, so that it took us almost as long to come the distance of 70 miles as to come the distance of 225 miles. We had no delays or accidents on the short road. The train was apparently a mixed train. I understand nothing but mixed trains run on the line; that the express trains that formerly ran on that line and on the Ottawa and St. Lawrence line have been taken off; that the service has altogether degenerated, and I want to ascertain, in the interests of the people of this country, what amount of interest the people had invested in this road, what amount of interest the Government of Canada had invested in this road, what amount of interest the Government of Ontario had invested in this road. I want to see why it is that the vested rights of the people, if they have any vested rights, are not respected. Hon. members of this House are well aware that, perhaps, there has been no Session—there has been none, in my recollection—when our mails have been received so irregularly as during this Session. We cannot count, with any degree of certainty, upon receiving our mails at a stated period. Formerly the trains were on time, the mails were regularly received, the connection was good and there was very little to complain of. They used to have regular connections between the trunk lines and the local roads which were doing public service for the municipalities in which they were constructed. I want to know how much the difference is due to the change of policy in the management of these roads. I would like to know if it is that which has been the means of causing our local railways to fall into disuse, and the interests of these local railways to be sacrificed, and the interests of the people on those roads to be neglected, as they are in many places. This is only one instance. I have other instances in my mind, and I may move for the papers in regard to them, in order to call the attention of the House to the matter, not with the view of complaint, but in order to see if we cannot get a remedy. This country has aided very largely the Pacific Railway. It has given very largely for the building, maintenance and equipment of the Pacific Railway, which has absorbed these two lines. When it suits the convenience of the Canadian Pacific Railway Company, they will run the trains and the kind of trains they choose, without consulting the interests, the convenience, or the well being of the people on those lines of railway. Is there no power to stop this sort of thing? If the Government grant largely to these roads, have they no control over them? Formerly, when these roads were under the control of the municipalities, every member of this House will remember the more efficient service we had on the St. Lawrence and Ottawa, and on the Ottawa and Brockville roads. The places that are served by these lines are no inconsiderable places. The City of Ottawa and the country between Ottawa and Brockville are served and accommodated by these roads. It is but natural that these people should take a deep interest in seeing if their local rights are going to be overridden by a policy which took away the local rights of the local railways, and centered them all in Dominion lines. If this is one of the results of this policy which was inaugurated here two or three Sessions ago, it is well the people of this country should know it; and if there is no protection for the people, no guarantee that the money they have invested in these roads will ensure them regular trains and efficient service, with a proper rate of speed, then it is time this House and the country should know it. My attention was drawn to this matter coming down, and it has since been drawn to it by the irregularity of the mails that come here, and I have felt it due to myself and to the country to have it duly considered, so that we may see if no remedy can be found for these localities whose lines have been absorbed by Dominion legislation. We may be told, perhaps, that the lessening of the service is due to the great depression that exists in this country; that it is owing to the hard times that the traffic has fallen off; that there is no longer the necessity existing for the continuance of those trains which we formerly had. In all the years gone by, except, I think, the last year, these roads have been able to have several trains upon them, with a large amount of work to perform. If the state and condition of the country is such that it cannot now afford to keep up regular trains, that will run at some reasonable rate of speed, then of course it will be for us to complain. We know that the Government who carried on the affairs of this country a few years ago, were charged with being flies on the wheel, but during the time they were in power they had to regulate the trains on this road, they had the work to perform and we had an efficient service on this road. What has become of the flies now? Where are the flies now?

Mr. IVES. They are in Opposition.

Mr. LANDERKIN. Yes, the flies have become so numerous now that they have clogged the wheels of commerce, not only on these roads but on other roads. Now, while I am speaking, there is another matter I wish to bring before the House. Last Session I drew the attention of the Postmaster-General to the need of giving to that most important line of railway from Stratford to Wiarton, two mails a day, and the hon. gentleman promised that he would give the matter his earnest consideration. His consideration has resulted in this, that now we have three trains a week less on that road and only one service a day at noon, and one the next day in the morning. In the days when the flies were on the wheel we used to have a mail every morning, but now, since this enlightened and liberal policy was inaugurated, by which the industries of the country were to be protected, we have a morning service, and the next day we have no service until noon. The empty trains have been taken off the road. We appealed to the railway company about it, but they say the condition of the trade of this country will not warrant them in keeping on the number of trains they formerly had, so they have been discontinued. Consequently it was impossible, I presume, for the Postmaster-General, in the depressed condition of the country, when it became necessary for the Grand Trunk Railway Company to remove its trains—it was impossible for him, I suppose, to give a better service to the large towns, the rapidly increasing towns—

Some hon. MEMBERS. Hear, hear.

Mr. LANDERKIN. Yes, the towns are increasing, but the service on the road is decreasing. Now, Mr. Speaker, the attention of the Government having been called to this matter, I hope they will bring down the papers, so that we may be able to form an estimate of what amount the people have given, what amount of vested interest they have in the road—so that we may be able to see if any remedy can be provided by this House, whereby the vested rights and interests of the people may be protected.

Mr. RYKERT. I am not aware that this House is bound to pass resolutions for the personal convenience of hon. members. Of course, it is very interesting to hear the hon. gentleman complain of the inconvenience to which he was subjected in coming to Ottawa; that is a matter, of course, very interesting to himself and perhaps to others outside. But I contend that in all resolutions moved in this House, the hon. member making the motion should show to the House some substantial reason why the resolution should be passed. The hon. gentleman knows well that the returns in compliance with resolutions, when made to the satisfaction of hon. members, mean the expenditure of a large amount of money; and if this motion were carried as it now stands, it would involve the expenditure of a very considerable amount of money. What I complain of is, that the hon. gentleman should come to this House and ask for information which it cannot be possessed of. If the hon. gentleman were as studious about this matter as he is about other matters, he would discover, upon reference to parliamentary documents, that no money was ever granted to this railway company between the points indicated. He would discover, also, that his friends in the Ontario Legislature were the proper parties to apply to for redress and for the information he so much desires.

Mr. LANDERKIN. If the hon. gentleman will allow me to explain, I would say there is an item in the railway statistics of Canada where a grant is made to the Canada Central of $1,444,000.

Mr. BOWELL. That is the extension of the Canada Central to the Canadian Pacific.

Mr. RYKERT. If the hon. gentleman will only study the railway history of Canada he will see quite a difference between the railway to which he refers and the Brockville and Ottawa Railway. I say, if the hon. gentleman desires to have the information he speaks of, he should apply to his friends in the Ontario Legislature and they can give it to him. If they cannot give it to him I can afford him all the information he requires. If we were to accept the resolution, as moved by the hon. gentleman, we must admit then, that the Government of Canada has given money towards the Brockville and Ottawa Railway Company. The hon. gentleman will recollect that some years ago a sum of money was granted by the Local Legislature for a portion of the Canada Central Railway, from Carleton Place to Sand Point—a sum of $119,000; but the hon. gentleman will not find that the Government of Canada ever voted a sum of money to the Brockville and Ottawa Company. He will find that some years ago a charter was asked and a Bill was passed by the old Parliament of Canada, for the building of a railway from the City of Quebec to Lake Huron, passing by the City of Ottawa, and following the line of the Ottawa River to Lake Huron. That was in 1856, so he will see that so far as this railway is concerned it cannot be a local railway. At that time the Parliament of Canada, in its wisdom, voted 4,000,000 acres of land to assist the building of that railway. That charter expired, but in 1861 there was an Act passed through the Legislature, which is called the Canada Central Railway Act, by means of which a portion of that line originally proposed by the Bill of 1856 was kept alive, and the land grant was, by some extraordinary manoeuvring, Sir, continued and recognised, to a certain extent, for the building of that railway. That charter also expired, but was subsequently revived in part. Nothing was done, so far as that railway was concerned, until some years afterwards, when the people of Ottawa thought it would be a very good idea to run a road from this city to Carleton Place, a distance of 2½ miles. They built that road and then leased a portion of the Brockville and Ottawa Railway, from Carleton Place to Sand Point, for 999 years, and called that the Canada Central Railway. The original Act of Parliament declared that that railway should run direct from Quebec to Ottawa, and thence to Lake Huron, keeping within 25 miles of the Ottawa River. They built a road from Ottawa to Carleton Place, almost at right angles to Brockville, and then leased a portion of the Brockville and Ottawa Railway for 999 years, and called that the Canada Central Railway Company, and they thought that came within the provisions of the Act. Well, Sir, what did they do then? This company first applied to the Parliament of Canada for aid, and it was not recognised. They then applied to the Government of Sandfield Macdonald, in 1871, but he refused to recognise them, and contended they had no claim whatever for the 12,000 acres per mile. The company claimed, because they had built 28½ miles in the direction of Brockville, and had leased another portion of railway at right angles to it and called it the Canada Central Railway Company, they were, therefore, entitled to receive 342,000 acres of the best land in Ontario. Sandfield Macdonald repudiated that claim. It was supported by the Hon. Mr. Scott, who was then a member of that Legislature, but the claim was finally refused. When the Sandfield Macdonald Government fell and the Hon. Mr. Scott was taken into the Government, then we find an Act was passed by the leader of the Government—the leader of the Opposition was then at the head of the Government—by means of which the company were enabled to sue the Province of Ontario—it was called the Petition of Rights Act. That petition was filed shortly afterwards, and the case was submitted to the courts and tried. Three witnesses were called by the railway company and examined, but none were examined on the part of the other side, and judgment went against the Province. Some months after that, I, in my place in the Ontario Legislature, urged that justice had not been done to the Province, and I asked Mr. Mowat to appeal the case. After a time an appeal was made to the higher court; but instead of adding additional evidence, instead of showing to the court what the facts really were, as regards the position of the railway and the franchise conferred by Acts of Parliament, they appealed from the decision on the facts presented to the court, and that decision was confirmed. The result was that judgment went against the Province for 342,000 acres of land. The hon. gentleman will ask: What connection that has with this matter. I will show the hon. member and the House the connection. Instead of the Government of Canada having given a dollar to the railway company, the company obtained a loan of $1,354,000 from Brockville, the township of Elizabethtown, and the counties of Lanark and Renfrew, for which the company gave to the said municipalities a first mortgage on the road. Payments fell into arrear, and at the time the municipal loan fund was settled by the Ontario Legislature it amounted to nearly $2,500,000. The Act passed by Mr. Mowat provided that where a municipality had borrowed money from the loan fund and had taken security therefor, that that security belonged to the Province. The township of Elizabethtown and Brockville and the counties of Lanark and Renfrew had, as before stated, taken a mortgage on the Brockville and Ottawa Railway to provide for the repayment of the money. The mortgage was in existence, it was a good and valid security, but notwithstanding that, Mr. Mowat's Government reduced the claim of those municipalities from $2,500,000 to $556,000, thereby throwing away nearly $2,000,000 of money of the Province of Ontario. And then what did they do? They coolly asked the House to set off the judgment against the Province against the mortgage they held from the different municipalities. So that by this transaction the Province lost $2,000,000; and if the hon. gentleman will refer to the records of the Legislature and to the several motions on this subject, he will discover that the mortgage which had been given by the railway municipalities was wiped out by the judgment against the Province. So far as the Government of Canada is concerned, it had nothing to do with granting this money. It was money owing by certain municipalities which they were well able to pay, and those municipalities took security for their advances, and, moreover, having that security, the Government could have enforced payment. But they failed to do so and thought it better, in the interest of some person or of their party, to have the judgment wiped out for 342,000 acres of land and give up the mortgage they held as security for the indebtedness of the municipalities which had borrowed the money.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. Allow me to interrupt the hon. member. There is a likelihood of there being a small attendance of members this evening, and with the consent of the House I will move the adjournment at six o'clock; and, in order to be able to do this, I will ask that the debate on this motion be adjourned.

Mr. RYKERT. I would like to move an amendment to the motion before the House—because it will not be convenient for me to be present at its next sitting. The following is the amendment:—

That the resolution be amended by adding the following words after "railway" in the fourth line, "also showing what securities were taken for the amount so advanced to the said railway company, and what disposition was made of such securities."

Mr. RYKERT.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD moved the adjournment of the debate.

Motion agreed to, and debate adjourned.

RETURN ORDERED.

Copies of papers, correspondence and accounts in relation to the School of Cavalry at Quebec, from 1st July, 1884, to 31st January, 1885.—(Mr. Langelier.)

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD moved the adjournment of House.

Motion agreed to, and the House adjourned at 5:55 p.m.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.

THURSDAY, 12th February, 1885.

The SPEAKER took the Chair at Three o'clock.

PRAYERS.

EXTENSION OF TIME.—PRIVATE BILLS.

Mr. KRANZ moved:

That the time for receiving Private Bills be extended to Wednesday, the fifth day of March next, in accordance with the recommendation of the Select Standing Committee on Standing Orders.

Motion agreed to.

FIRST READINGS.

Bill (No. 28) to incorporate the Dominion Drainage Company.—(Mr. Dickinson.)

Bill (No. 29) to amend the Acts relating to Patents of Inventions.—(Mr. Smyth.)

INDIAN SUPERINTENDENTS.

Mr. LISTER asked, Has the office of Indian Superintendent been abolished? If so, the names of the several incumbents at the time of its abolition. Has a new office been created in its place? If so, its name and the names of the several incumbents. Has or have any person or persons who held the office of Indian Superintendent been appointed to the new office? If so, the names of such persons?

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. The office of Indian Superintendent has not been abolished. No new office has been created in its place, and no one has been appointed to it. There are three Indian Superintendents in Ontario, namely, Mr. Gilkison at Brantford, Mr. Walton at Parry Sound, and Mr. Phipps at Manitowaning, Manitoulin Island; one in Quebec, Mr. Boucher, at Betsiamis, on the Lower St. Lawrence; one in British Columbia, Dr. Powell, at Victoria; two in New Brunswick, Mr. Sargeant, at Chatham, and Mr. Farrell, at Fredericton; and one on Prince Edward Island, Mr. Arsennault, on Lennox Island.

OFFICIAL ARBITRATORS.

Mr. BELLEAU (Translation) asked, Whether it is the intention of the Government to introduce this Session a measure to alter the constitution of the Board of Official Arbitrators of the Dominion?

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN (Translation). In answer to this question, I beg to inform the hon. member that the Government are now taking into consideration a measure to that effect; but it has not yet been decided when the measure will be introduced.

IMMIGRANT BUILDINGS AT LÉVIS.

Mr. BELLEAU (Translation) enquired, Whether it is the intention of the Government to commence soon the construction, at Lévis, of the immigrant buildings for which a sum was voted by the House last year and the year before?

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN (Translation). The Government have not yet determined exactly where these buildings will be located. As soon as the site is chosen the construction will be commenced.

THE EXCHANGE BANK OF CANADA.

Mr. HOLTON asked, Has the Government obtained a copy of the judgment recently delivered by Mr. Justice Mathieu, of the Superior Court for Lower Canada, dismissing its claim, as a privileged claim, upon the assets of the Exchange Bank of Canada in liquidation, and, if so, is it intended to lay it upon the Table of this House, with the opinion of the Minister of Justice, and of the legal advisers of the Crown, upon the question involved?

2. Has the Government obtained any security from Senator Ogilvie for the repayment of money loaned to the Exchange Bank and guaranteed by him?

3. Has the Government taken any proceedings against Senator Ogilvie to compel him to pay the amount of his guarantee in this matter, or to give security therefor, and, if so, when? If not, is it their intention to do so?

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. The Government has obtained a copy of the judgment recently delivered by Mr. Justice Mathieu. There is no intention of laying it upon the Table of the House, but the hon. gentleman can move for it if he wishes. Of course it can be procured; it is like any other judgment of a court, and can be obtained by any hon. member or any person in the Dominion. The opinion of the Minister of Justice is an opinion for the information of the Crown; and so with the legal advisers of the Crown upon the question. The Government has not obtained any security from Senator Ogilvie for the repayment of the money loaned to the Exchange Bank and guaranteed by him. As to the third part of the question, the Government have not taken any proceedings against Senator Ogilvie, inasmuch as this judgment is now in appeal, and if the Crown's priority is upheld by the Court of Appeal, there will be no necessity for taking proceedings against Senator Ogilvie.

PRIVILEGE—NEWSPAPER ATTACK.

Mr. SPROULE. Before the Orders of the Day are called I would like to make an explanation in reference to an item which I see in the Free Press of yesterday, and which, I believe, was inspired by an hon. member of this House. It reads as follows:—

"The constituents of Dr. Sproule, the member for East Grey, are not to be congratulated on the choice they made in sending that gentleman to represent them in Parliament. About six months ago the County Council handed a memorial to the doctor, which was passed by the municipality, praying the Dominion Government to grant some compensation for having largely deprived the people of their railway facilities by the legislation which declared all these lines for the benefit of the whole Dominion. He was instructed to forward the memorial to the Government, and at the same time to use his endeavors with the party of which he is so servile a supporter, to obtain some concessions."

Then it goes on to say:

"Sir Hector Langevin said that the memorial was never received by the Government. Later on a note from Sproule—at least it is said so—made the Minister of Public Works state that it was said to be mailed two or three days ago. Now where has this memorial been for the past few months, will be a pertinent question to ask Mr. Sproule."

I would like to say in reference to that item, that the memorial was passed at the June session of the County Council of Grey. It was not sent to me, as the papers will show. A letter accompanying this memorial will show that I only received this memorial early in December. It was dated in the clerk's office on the 1st of December, and I think I received it on the 4th, with instructions to lay it before the Governor in Council and endeavor to obtain the prayer of the petition. I thought the best time to do so would be after the Session of Parliament commenced, and therefore I brought it along with me and forwarded it to the Secretary of State, and direct to the Governor in Council. As to the way I supported the prayer of that petition, I think it might reasonably be left to my own judgment.

Mr. LANDERKIN. I understood the hon. gentleman to indicate that the article was inspired by an hon. member of this House. I wish the hon. gentleman would state who the hon. member is.

RAILWAY COMMUNICATION WITH OTTAWA.

House resumed adjourned debate on Mr. Landerkin's proposed motion for Return showing the amounts contributed to the Canada Central Railway between Ottawa and Brockville, either by the Government of Canada, the Provincial Government of Ontario, or by the municipalities along that line of railway; and the motion of Mr. Rykert in amendment thereto.

Mr. RYKERT. When the House adjourned yesterday, I was endeavoring to show the hon. member for Grey (Mr. Landerkin), and also this House, how highly favored the Canada Central Railway had been at the hands of the Ontario Government. I pointed out the fact that this company had, through one means or another, involved the Province of Ontario in an expenditure of upwards of $2,000,000. I showed that the Government had, in the first place, given $119,000 for a portion of the road from Sand Point to Pembroke. I also showed that money had been taken from the municipal loan fund of the old Parliament of Canada and had been loaned to Brockville, the Township of Elizabethtown, and the Counties of Lanark and Renfrew, to the amount of $1,354,900; that it accumulated to $2,500,000, and that, by the grace of the Mowat Government, that amount was reduced to $550,000, although at that time the municipalities had a valid security, a first mortgage on the road, for the payment of the whole amount. I also showed that the Ontario Legislature had passed an Act by which the Government was allowed to be sued by the Canada Central upon petition of right, and judgment was obtained against the Province for 342,000 acres, and that judgment was set off against the mortgage. Ontario thus lost about $2,000,000 by the Canada Central Railway. But that is not all. Not only the Reform Government of Ontario granted favors to the Canada Central, but we find that in the second Session of the Reform Government of Mr. Mackenzie no less a sum than $1,440,000 was voted for the extension of that railway towards the Canadian Pacific Railway. The motion of the hon. gentleman does not go beyond the City of Ottawa. Yesterday he interrupted me when I was making some observations, and pointed out the fact that he found in the accounts of last year an item of $16,800 paid to the Canada Central Company. True it was granted and paid. But the hon. gentleman's motion does not reach that far. It only covers the road from Brockville to Ottawa, and I say the Government of Canada never gave a single dollar to that portion of the Railway, but that the money was voted towards the extension of the railway. The House does not require any such return as is asked for. It is already on record, and the hon. gentleman knows it right well, for he voted for granting $12,000 per mile for 120 miles of that road in 1875. The amount was $1,440,000, and there is no necessity for the hon. member to move a motion covering that—if he intended to cover it, as I suppose he did by his interruption—and there is no necessity to bring down any papers in regard to that matter. We know all about it. All we have to do is to refer to the speech of the leader of the Opposition in this House in 1879, for he gives it as one of the items of the expenditure of the Canadian Pacific Railway. The hon. gentleman wants this House to interfere with the internal management of this railway company. I should like to know if, in the liberality of the Ontario Government, and of the Dominion Government in granting $12,000 per mile, there was any condition attached in regard to operating the road. There was no condition attached, there was nothing in the Act stating what the company should do. So far as regards running trains, that is a matter of internal economy between the company and the Government. No doubt the hon. gentleman was inconvenienced, but at the same time others have been inconvenienced in like manner. The same thing happened last year, and if I recollect rightly, you, Mr. Speaker, were charged with having compelled the railway company not to wait for the Grand Trunk train, and in consequence a large number of passengers were obliged to wait over and some had to go to Montreal. Nothing was said in this House about that matter; we had no right to say anything. The hon. member for Grey went on to speak about what this Government had done in the way of postal service in his county, and what the late Government did. I understood him to say that there had been a postal service daily on the railway from his place to Wiarton. Am I right in that?

Mr. LANDERKIN. What is the question?

Mr. RYKERT. I understood the hon. gentleman to say yesterday that during the time of the late Government, the fly-on-the-wheel Government, they had a daily postal service on the train from Wiarton.

Mr. LANDERKIN. I did not say so; I said that by the old stage coach we had a regular mail every morning.

Mr. RYKERT. The same all over the Province. The hon. gentleman must have made a discovery. He is not correct in his statement about this fly-on-the-wheel Government. He said, we called it a fly-on-the-wheel Government. There is the father of the statement sitting on the other side of the House—the gallant knight from Cartwright, I mean from Huron. The hon. gentleman was the one who christened the Government the fly-on-the-wheel Government, and we have endeavored to remind the hon. gentleman that he did christen his Government by that name. But the hon. gentleman (Mr. Landerkin) will recollect that when the late Minister of Finance made that statement he stood with his arms folded and admitted he could do nothing to remedy the state of affairs prevailing in this country. They were completely paralysed; they had no legislation to ask; they felt it unnecessary to do anything more than they had done, and they thought they had done everything possible. If the hon. gentleman will refer to past history he will find, as I have said, that the name of the fly-on-the-wheel Government came from the Opposition side of the House. I object to the motion now under discussion because it asks for something that this Government cannot furnish; it asks for information from two Governments and also from different municipalities. The hon. mover knows right well that we have not the machinery by which we can procure the information he so much desires. The hon. gentleman confines the motion to that part of the line from Ottawa to Brockville, and the Parliament of Canada had nothing to do with that portion of the road. I object to the motion because it is not in the public interest, and we would have been spared all this trouble had the hon. gentleman gone down to the corner of Sparks street and asked the Canadian Pacific Railway Company for one of their time tables. He would thus have discovered all about the train service which he so much desires; and I do not think it is a matter for this House to consider. The motion should not pass, but if it does pass it should be adopted with the amendment which I have proposed, asking further information in regard to the securities held by the Government and given by the road, and what has become of those securities.

Amendment agreed to; and

Motion, as amended, agreed to.

COST OF HEATING PUBLIC BUILDINGS.

Mr. BLAKE moved for:

Statement for the last fiscal year, of the cost connected with the heating of public buildings (including wages as well as fuel) now paid under a lump vote, such statement to show the cost under the same sub-headings as those in which it was formerly included in the Public Accounts before the change in the system.

He said: It will be recollected that some time ago the House adopted, at the instigation of the Government, a change in the mode of charging the cost of heating the public buildings, by which clause they are now paid under a lump vote instead of in the separate sums for each of these buildings. It is important that we should be able to compare these items from year to year by having them brought down in the form in which the amounts were formerly voted. Last Session the House was pleased to make an order similar to that which I now move.

Motion agreed to.

SMALL SAVINGS.

Mr. BLAKE moved for:

Copies of all correspondence and petitions to the Postmaster-General, or any member of the Government, with reference to the adoption in Canada of a system to encourage small savings similar to that brought in by the late Mr. Fawcett in England.

He said: Some time ago the British Government adopted, at the instance of the late Mr. Fawcett, a system which I think it is desirable to encourage in this country, for small savings in connection with the Post Office. The details of that plan were that a slip was handed out to any applicant which contained twelve compartments, and in each of these compartments the depositor was intended, as he made savings enough to buy postage stamps, to put a stamp, and as soon as twelve of these were filled, amounting to a shilling, he was able to deposit that amount, so that he was saved from the temptation, with reference to his small daily savings, of spending them and having them lost, and was permitted at once to buy a stamp, and then when a shilling was reached the nearest Post Office received the list and he was credited with a shilling. I have one of these interesting slips here. Now, it seems to me that if we adopted, with reference to our postage stamp currency, a similar system—perhaps by means of five cent or three cent stamps, and made an arrangement for as many as would make up a quarter, which is our usual small denomination of that kind, it would be extremely useful. I think every effort should be made to encourage a system of saving in those who have the least to save. The importance is not to be measured at all by the amount of the savings. A provident habit is that which is of the last consequence, and that a provident habit should be stimulated amongst those who have but little to save and in early life, is a sure way of inducing habits of thrift and economy which will make better men, better citizens and the country which is inhabited by them more prosperous. I have reason to believe that this system has been suggested for adoption to the Government some time ago, and if not I think it is a matter which should be taken into consideration.

Sir LEONARD TILLEY. In the absence of the Postmaster-General I may say that this subject has been under the consideration of that gentleman and the Government, but for some reasons which I am about to state it was not considered advisable at that time to deal with it. I may remind the mover of the resolution that under our Post Office Savings Bank system any person can deposit a sum as small as a dollar. While we had the greatest possible anxiety to meet cases such as have been described by the hon. gentleman, the question arose as to the expense of carrying out the plan. I quite admit that the reference to matters of this kind expense may at times be a secondary consideration; but I would point out that for all stamps that are now sold the seller receives 3 per cent. commission, and therefore for a dollar's worth of stamps that might be sold we would pay, in addition to the 4 per cent. interest, 3 per cent. commission to the vendors as well as the cost of printing. Therefore, supposing that a person deposited the money and did not withdraw it all it would cost the Dominion Government about 8 per cent. It would cost more, because we should have the debits and credits on both sides, the deposits and the withdrawals. Therefore, in that view of the case, the Government hesitated at the time to deal with the matter, inasmuch as every boy or every man, no matter how humble his position or small his earnings might be, could place an amount, even to the limited extent of a dollar, to his credit in any of the Postal Savings Banks.

Mr. BLAKE. I think the hon. gentleman's calculation is hardly correct. He says, add the prime cost of selling postage stamps, 3 per cent., to the interest of 4 per cent. per annum, and even supposing there was no withdrawal, that would mean a cost of 8 per cent. Well, it would mean a cost of 7 per cent. in the first year; it is hardly an accurate calculation, and I hope his calculations on a larger scale are more accurate. It is quite true that the Government pays a commission on the sale of postage stamps. It is very easy to deal with that as a question of interest. If a loss is incurred in that way, a smaller rate of interest might be given to the depositor. The great object is to encourage the habit of saving; and my opinion is that you could promote the habit of saving by giving 2 per cent. as much as you can by giving 4 per cent. The great point is to facilitate the accumulation of small sums. Of course, I admit that those sums would be constantly going in and coming out; there would be friction of that kind; but it might be possible to make arrangements for a reduction of the commission, or the sale at the post office itself of the stamps for this particular purpose, or other terms. It does seem to me that the financial difficulty the hon. gentleman has suggested might be got over. But even if it could not, it does not follow that the scheme would fail, because he might reduce the minimum, and allow a smaller sum than one dollar to be deposited. For instance, if he allowed 25 cents to be deposited, the whole difficulty would be got rid of, except, of course, the extra keeping of accounts.

Sir LEONARD TILLEY. That was just one of the points considered, whether the amount might be reduced. The hon. gentleman says that my statement is not accurate, because 4 and 3 make 7, not 8. There is the cost of printing the stamps, amounting to 1 per cent., to be added to the 4 per cent. The hon. member suggests that to meet this special case we might sell the stamps at a lower rate. I would like him to arrange a plan by which the office could distinguish between the stamps sold to a person who wished to use them, and a boy who wished to place them on a card.

Mr. BLAKE. I will give it to you in a moment. He comes with his slip, and gets the stamps put on it.

Sir LEONARD TILLEY. But he may not have his slip; and the man who wants stamps for other purposes will come with a slip and get them. There are persons ingenious enough, as we have found in the Customs Department, to do such things; they would say they are for deposits in the Post Office Banks when they might be for other purposes. The Government did not reject entirely the proposition to reduce the amount, in case the necessity arises; but the proposition with reference to the cards was not favorably entertained at that time.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. It is so rarely that I am able to corroborate entirely a statement of the hon. gentleman opposite that I take uncommon pleasure on the present occasion of stating that I believe he made a most correct statement when he estimated the cost to this country of every dollar we borrow through the Savings Banks at 5 per cent. per annum. It certainly is not one farthing less, when we take into account the percentage paid, 4 per cent., next the expenses of management, and next, if prudence is maintained in the Finance Department, the necessity of holding a considerable reserve of money not paying interest to meet such demands as may arise. Indeed, I think the hon. gentleman would be more accurate if he put the cost at more than 5 per cent., and I think he is borrowing $26,000,000 from the people of this country by means of the Savings Banks.

Sir LEONARD TILLEY. I entirely differ from the hon. member as to the cost of the money. But if it has been wrong for us to adopt that principle, how much more was it wrong for the hon. gentleman opposite, who paid a higher rate of interest, who allowed on money deposited in the Savings Banks 5 per cent. if it reached \$10,000 and was allowed to remain a certain time, instead of 3 per cent., which we allow for deposits of \$5,000, allowing depositors, if they deposited on the second day of the month, no interest for that month, or if they withdrew on the 29th of the month, no interest for that month. Therefore our system has been much more economical than the system pursued by the hon. gentleman who has risen so cordially, so promptly, and so graciously, to endorse the statement I made. I hope before the Session is over I may have him endorsing many more of my statements. I hope I shall be able to present evidence which he himself cannot resist. But in regard to this matter, I think he or some other hon. member wanted to know last Session how much interest we paid in the Savings Banks, including salaries and all. I think it is $4\frac{1}{2}$ or $4\frac{1}{4}$ per cent. or something of that kind, but if the system is wrong, I think we manage it more economically than the hon. gentleman did.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. The hon. gentleman has stated correctly enough that following out the system which our predecessors, not ourselves, had introduced, we did nearly ten years ago allow slightly higher rates for a small portion of the money deposited, not for much, than are to-day paid. Since that time—and I state this fact for the special information of the hon. Minister of Finance—all over the civilised world, in every great centre where money is dealt in, the rate of interest has fallen between 30 and 40 per cent.; but our rate of interest paid on the majority of Savings Banks deposits is the same to-day as it was at that period, although the normal rate of interest paid by banks and other institutions was, I believe, in many cases 30, 40 and 50 per cent. higher in Canada than it is to-day.

Motion agreed to.

MAIL ROBBERIES IN MANITOBA AND THE NORTH WEST.

Mr. BLAKE moved for:

Copies of all correspondence and Departmental reports with reference to irregularities, frauds and robberies in connection with the mails in Manitoba and the North-West, and particularly to the transactions in which one Campbell was concerned.

He said: It has been stated in the public press that there have been very serious irregularities in connection with some of the officers concerned in the transport or management of the mails in Manitoba and the North-West, and not long since there was a report that a person named Campbell, who had been in the service of the Department and who seems to have absconded from those regions, had been interviewed. It seems he had been for two days in some sort of durance in a hotel under charge of a Chicago detective, I think it was, that he had been ultimately seen by an official of the Government, and I forget if some portion of the plunder had been procured, but, at any rate, some information was obtained with reference to some other persons in the mail service. It is said the amount lost was a considerable one, $18,000 has been mentioned as being stolen at one time; and I think we ought to hear the particulars of those transactions in which the blame is laid, according to some of the reports on the United States authorities, while according to others it is laid on some of our authorities.

Motion agreed to.

COLONIZATION COMPANIES.

Mr. BLAKE moved for:

Copies of all petitions and correspondence on the subject of modifications in the agreements made by the Government with the various colonization companies; and a statement of the present position of the Companies, as to the fulfilment of their obligations under their agreements.

He said: Applications, it has been said, have been made to the Government to modify the agreements entered into by the several colonization companies with the Government on the ground that the Government had since adopted another policy with reference to another class of operations in the North-West, namely, those of the companies interested in building lines of railways; that the Government having adopted the policy of making grants instead of selling the lands at $1 per acre to these companies, it was inequitable that the colonization companies should be called to pay what they had contracted to pay under their agreements, $2 and $2.50 per acre for their lands. Representations have been made and petitions presented to the Government by the colonization companies praying that some change should be made in their arrangements; and from various sources of information it would seem as if some of the colonization companies, at any rate, were proposing that the quantity of land which they had contracted for should be reduced to the amount which their present payment would enable them to pay for in full, and that the rate upon that portion should be a reduced rate having regard to the altered policy with reference to the railway companies. It will be also interesting to the House to learn what the present position of the various companies is with relation to the fulfilment of their various obligations under their agreements.

Motion agreed to.

RAILWAY COMPANIES OUTSIDE MANITOBA AND THE NORTH-WEST.

Mr. BLAKE moved for:

Copies of all correspondence, petitions and Orders in Council, relating to any application by, or on behalf of, any railway company, elsewhere than in Manitoba or the North-West, for aid or additional aid.

He said: It may be remembered by some hon. members that during the last Session of Parliament the then Minister of Railways laid before the House applications that had been made by various companies, and the great bulk of which had been entertained, informing us, at the same time, that the number and the bulk of the papers embodying applications which he had been unable at all to consider was much greater than the very considerable bulk he had laid on the Table. Those applications we desire to see, and in addition we desire to see what further progress in the zeal of railways in the way of plying the Government for aid may have taken place during the interval since the last prorogation of Parliament.

Motion agreed to.

CANADIAN PACIFIC RAILWAY—LAND GRANT AND LAND GRANT BONDS.

Mr. BLAKE moved for:

Copies of all correspondence and petitions of railway companies in Manitoba and the North-West, praying for grants of land, or modifications in the condition and extent of the grants of land already conceded to them; and of all Orders in Council or agreements or letters, not already brought down, affecting or in any wise relating to any railway company in Manitoba or the North-West, other than the Canadian Pacific Railway Company.

He said: When the Loan Act of last Session was passed in aid of the Canadian Pacific Railway, it will be recollected that statements were laid before the House on behalf of the company and corroborated by hon. Ministers of the Crown, with reference to the then position of the contracted line and to the cost of that line when completed. The object of this motion is to ascertain the present position of the enterprise in so far as it relates to the point to which I have referred, namely, the cost of constructing and equipping the contracted line, which is in two parts, the part between Callander and Port Arthur and the part between Red River and Kamloops. Now, as I say, statements were made to us, and they show these figures, in round numbers: Expended on the main line contracted for, $23,080,000; expended in rolling stock for that line, $6,140,000; expended in material on hand, which I assume to be all for that line, although they may be partly applicable to other branches, $4,025,000, and the proportion of the amount for sheds, tools, and machinery, which I take to be about two-thirds, $705,000, making a total amount expended of $33,950,000, and the estimate laid before us to complete the road and equip it was $27,000,000, thus making the completed cost of the line equipped $60,950,000. It is public that during last fall, within three or four months from to-day, the vice-president and chief engineer of the road declared in a formal document that the results of the explorations and of the practical work that had been done indicated that there had been an over-estimate of $4,000,000 in the amount required to complete, and that, instead of $27,000,000, only $23,000,000 would be required for that purpose. Reducing the amount to which I have referred, $61,000,000 in round figures, by the sum of $4,000,000, you find a cost of $57,000,000, and that cost is reached after attributing to the contracted line far too large a proportion of the expenditure for equipment made up to the day in which the estimate was made, for no less than seven-eighths of the whole cost for rolling stock, as shown by the statement of the company, is in this statement attributed to the contracted line, while about two-thirds only ought to be attributed to the contracted line, having regard to the branches and extensions which are also being supplied with equipments. Thus an excess of $1,400,000 is reached under this item. And I take, without questioning them, the stated estimates of expenditure for the prairie country, although they also are of a wholly inordinate and as yet wholly unexplained character as to their amount. But, omitting these considerations, the present indication is that the road is to be completed and equipped for less than $57,000,000. On the other hand the assets which were available to the company for the work were—the original stock, which by the contract and concession to them they were bound to subscribe for and to pay in full, and which they did accordingly subscribe for and pay in full, $5,000,000; the subsidy, $25,000,000; the loan of last Session, $22,500,000; the proceeds of the sale of land grant bonds made up to the time of the statement, $9,200,000; the Winnipeg bonus and other land sales, $900,000; making an aggregate of $62,600,000, to which is to be added a sum of about $1,000,000 of further land grant bonds realized just about the month of January, 1884, making an aggregate of $62,500,000. You will observe that in this calculation no account has been taken of the receipts from further sales of stock or from further sales of land, because the proposals of last Session were such that it was not expected that any further stock would be put upon the market for a considerable time to come, and that, when it was, it was to be at the disposal of the Government, which was advancing this large sum; and, as to the lands, it was recognized even then that the sale of them also would be slow, and it was provided that the proceeds of such sale should go to the Government in diminution of the mortgage. It was therefore contemplated by the Government, by the company and by the Parliament that these two resources, sales of stock and sales of land, would not be available for completing the construction of the line, and that the resources required for that purpose were to be found otherwise; and found they were, as I have shown, irrespective altogether of the large additional sum raised on other shares of stock which were sold; found they were in the large sums I have mentioned, of aid from the Government absolute, of aid from the Government lent, of land grant bonds sold, and of the original capital stock of $5,000,000 subscribed and paid up pursuant to the contract; found they were, and not merely found, but, as now appears, to the extent of $6,000,000 beyond what was required. Under these circumstances, we had good reason to believe what we were told, that we were absolutely assuring the finality of the pecuniary transactions in the way of aid or relief to the company from the public; we had good ground to believe that we were assuring the completion of this enterprise at the early date the company proposed to us to complete it at, and were giving all the money that was required for that purpose; and I am glad to observe, by the report of the Minister of Railways which was laid upon the Table yesterday, that the chief engineer, in the month of October last, confirms that view and declares that, while his information was imperfect and incomplete when he made the estimate of last Session, his further information and the result of his inspection of the line, made late in the summer of last year, has led him to believe that the resources are ample. And yet, notwithstanding that, we find statements made, very generally made, that the company is in straits, and that it is making an application for relief to the Government. It is true that we know that, up to the other day at any rate, there was no formal application for relief. That is not the way that these things arrange themselves. There are conferences and consultations, informal, unofficial, confidential, until a conclusion is arrived at between the two high contracting parties, and, when it is agreed what the Government will give, then the company writes its letter and makes its demand or request, and then the Government says, Yes. That is the way these things get done, as we know by our experience of the past in relation to this very company. Therefore, although no formal application has been made, because the stage of formal agreement has not been reached, no individual in this House, no more than any individual outside of it, doubts that informal applications have been made, and that negotiations are going on, that the situation of the company has been stated to the Government, and that they have been pressing it for relief. I should not perhaps have made that statement as positively as I do except that I observe that, in the Ottawa correspondence of a very important paper, which has received added importance—may I say added lustre?—from a recent change in its proprietorship, that I see in the Ottawa correspondence of a very important paper, certainly not unfriendly to the Canadian Pacific Railway, and by some people—perhaps unjustly—supposed to be to some extent in the confidence of that company, a statement to this effect:

“Although Sir John said there was no present intention to legislate on the subject of the Canadian Pacific Railway, it is rumored here that something must be done on their behalf. It is estimated that they have spent during the past year over $8,000,000, apart from the contract respecting the main line, in furthering the convenience of the farming and trading communities by building elevators, wharves, cattle sheds, termini, etc., and it is felt that an easy and proper way of effecting this would be found in the Government taking back sufficient land in discharge of their debt, and thus enabling the railway company to float their securities and build the branch lines which are demanded.”

Well, of course, if that statement, sent from the centre of official and political information, written of course we know not by whom,—for the veil of anonymity shrouds the sacred mysteries of newspaper correspondence, and I will not venture to guess even who wrote it,—but written we know not by whom, written we know not where, whether in the gallery, whether in a committee room, whether at a member's desk,—I say written we know not by whom and written we know not where, if that statement be at all correct, that of course explains the situation, because, as I have pointed out, during the last Session of Parliament we granted to the company such resources as were adequate, by their calculations, and by the calculation of the Government, and in the view of the Parliament, to carry them through, knowing their stock and their lands were not to be available for the purpose of carrying them through, whatever might be the ultimate result of their stock and of their land operations. Of course, if it be true that over $8,000,000 has been expended in other objects than those which Parliament had in contemplation and was providing for, it is quite clear that it cannot be the Canadian Pacific Railway Company's money; it must be somebody else's money, because it is quite clear they had not got it to spend and therefore it must be owing. There is in this situation as I stated, room, no doubt, for considerable disquiet. There is room for disquiet here and elsewhere as to the attitude of the company and the Government. For my own part I cannot believe that the company has made an order, formally or informally—what I will call the impudent demand—which this otherwise well-informed correspondent suggests would be the easy and proper way of accomplishing their object, namely, that we should buy back our lands which we have not yet handed over to them and in respect of work which they have not yet done. I think it must be in some other way that the proposal is to be made; but in what form I know not. Yet disquieting as that situation may be, there is a more disquieting rumor still—it is that the Government will not bring down anything to Parliament because there are difficulties in bringing down anything to Parliament; there are promises and provisions with the sound of which these walls yet re-echo, and which would make it a little difficult to bring down something. Besides, something was brought down last Session, and it led to the organisation, to the development in a new form, in a revived form, shall I say, of the Maison Bleue. Instead of the Maison Bleue we had No. 8, working with equal ardor, with equal ingenuity, with equal determination and resolve, and triumphing, as the Maison Bleue triumphed, over its adversary, triumphing, also, over the Government and the Parliament again. I can understand that there should be a natural reluctance on the part of the hon. gentleman who fought so long and fell so utterly at last in that conflict with No. 8, to resume the conflict under the more disadvantageous circumstances under which that conflict would have to be resumed this Session. I can understand that there are great difficulties in the way of the Government proposing anything to Parliament. But, Sir, the most disquieting rumor is that something is not to be done in Parliament, but that something will be done after Parliament rises by what is called executive action; because it will be easier when things grow cold, and a few months have elapsed, and when, after all, the thing is done, to get us to ratify something disagreeable that is done, than to approve beforehand of something that the Government would desire us to take the responsibility of doing. I hope that course is not to be pursued. We know that it has been pursued in the past. We know that before the last Session of Parliament the Government, by executive action, without legislative authority, determined to give a guarantee to the Canadian Pacific Railway Company involving the public fortunes to the extent of many millions of dollars, and involving a public policy complicating the question as to the relations of the country and the company in an irrevocable manner. We know that we were called upon to ratify, and as good and obedient boys we did ratify, what the Government had done. We know from the report of the hon. Minister that by executive action again, the action of Parliament has been overridden during the last year, and that grades with reference to the Canadian Pacific Railway had been assumed to be approved by executive action, which were in excess of those that the contract demanded, and which alone the Government was authorised by Parliament to approve of. The Government was authorised to approve of the location, grades and curves of this line in accordance with the contract, and they have approved of grades, as the hon. Minister's report says, which are in excess of those specified by a reference to the Union Pacific Railway as the maximum grades. So that in each of the last two Sessions we have instances with respect to the Canadian Pacific Railway of executive action in excess of executive authority, and of Parliament being reduced to the humiliating position of being called upon to ratify that which had been done contrary to law by the executive, instead of being asked to decide whether it should be done or no. Now I maintain that upon this occasion the plea of unforeseen emergency cannot be made. It is impossible to hold this matter over until this Parliament rises and then to deal with it and say: We did not know there was any difficulty and that difficulty arose afterwards. I have not that position in this House which would enable me with impunity to do what another hon. gentleman did the other day and say "That would be too thin, Sir." But if I might I would apply that phrase to such a pretence as that. The difficulty is here. It is before us, and there is but one way to meet it. There is but one way in which it can be met without overstraining executive authority and without contemning Parliament itself, and that is to grapple with the question and determine what is to be proposed, and to lay before Parliament for its consideration and approval or rejection, the result of that determination. Hon. gentlemen opposite may have—I do not say they have not—reasons for despising us, but they ought not to show their contempt of this Parliament too plainly, and it would be to show it too plainly altogether to hold this matter over for the Session if it is intended to act afterwards. It is better, Sir, for Government, for the company, for Parliament and for the country, that the whole facts should be known and developed. The mysteries, the concealments, the half-truths, which have been the subject of discussion in the past with reference to the company and its relations to the Government, and particularly, I may say, with reference to the loan or guarantee transaction of the fall before last, have been of the greatest injury; and it is due largely, I believe, to that imperfect state of the information and those rumors which go about and which are published in authentic and credible organs of public opinion, that these difficulties arise; and it is better that we should know what the facts are. We are too deeply interested, Sir, to be kept in ignorance of them. We are entitled to know them, and we are entitled to have laid before us what the condition of the Company is, what its wants are, and what the plan of the Government is for solving those wants and carrying out what the public service in their interest demands. For my part I earnestly hope that the eminent correspondent of that newspaper was in error; I earnestly hope that those rumors are all unfounded; I earnestly hope that no such sum as that which has been mentioned has been expended by the company in excess of its receipts; I earnestly hope that the assurances of last Session as to the financial results of the operation of that Session will be fulfilled in their entirety. We had better know the facts, and I therefore take this opportunity of moving for such information as it appears to me will enable us, in Parliament, at any rate, to grapple with them.

Mr. MITCHELL. I was not in my seat when the hon. member for West Durham (Mr. Blake) commenced his remarks on this motion, but I heard him make some reference to the paper which I own and control. I must thank him for some remarks of a flattering character in regard to that paper and his reference to the additional spirit, life and ability thrown into it. I am very much obliged to him for those remarks. I regret that the hon. gentleman's public course in relation to an institution which is a national institution, has not commended itself to that paper as one which would lead to remarks of a flattering character in the columns and correspondence of the paper over which I preside. But I want to say this, not only for the benefit of the hon. gentleman opposite and those who follow him, but for the benefit of this House and the country, and I wish to say it publicly, that, notwithstanding the sneers of the hon. gentleman's chief organ in Toronto and the villainous correspondence it publishes, notwithstanding the manner in which it has villified me, and villified my paper by declaring that it is subservient to some other interest—I say that that paper is an independent paper, that it represents the sentiments of Peter Mitchell, who has shown by his public acts in this House as much independence as, if not more than, most of the people who are listening to me. When the hon. gentleman and those who write paragraphs for his chief organ make such remarks about the Herald, I wish to give them a distinct contradiction, and I say the Herald is subservient to no one, to no influence, and represents no sentiments but those entertained by the proprietor himself. The hon. gentleman has chosen to refer to the fact that in the columns of the Herald there is a reference to a proposal for the relief of the Canadian Pacific Railway. Is a monopoly of dealing with that question to be reserved to the hon. gentleman and his friends behind him, and the organs that represent them throughout the country, especially in Ontario? Are they and their organs alone to represent the views of the Dominion in relation to the greatest public work ever undertaken in Canada, a work which is a credit and honor alike to the country and the Government which initiated it, and to the men who have carried it out? Before any such suggestion appeared in the Herald, I find in the columns of the Globe, in its correspondence, the very statement in question, there being only a difference in regard to the value of the lands, and it was said that a proposition was under consideration to take back the lands in payment of the public debt. I have found that elsewhere. I found in a paper which I saw a few moments ago in the Library, where I was—not thinking an attack of this kind was to be made—remarks in regard to the Herald—and this is a point which it would be well for the Committee of the Library to look to—for it is not the organ of any individual or party in this country. It is independent, and it is a great deal more so than the Globe. It is in a position to express opinions which I believe are in the interest of the country, and I have done so. I fancy the hon. member for West Durham (Mr. Blake) would have felt more pleased had the Herald in its editorial columns not been so severe as it was in a very recent issue on the conduct of the hon. gentleman in relation to the Canadian Pacific Railway. What has been said by the Herald? It has made a suggestion in regard to a great public work carried on by a company, who are entitled to credit and honor for the way in which they have carried out the work, and who have been sustained by the Government, which whatever may be its faults, deserves in this particular case full credit for the manner in which it initiated, and the way in which it has sustained the company and carried out this great undertaking. Everyone knows, it is no secret, that the Canadian Pacific Railway Company requires additional aid. They have spent $8,000,000 on elevators, final stations, cattle sheds and subordinate works in connection with the line, which were necessary to complete this great national undertaking. We also know that in the aid the company obtained from Parliament last Session it is provided that they shall only get payment for work actually performed from time to time; and after the road is finished there will be a surplus on the main line, if the estimates and statements, not only of the Government engineers but of the company's engineers, are accurate. Besides, there is 10 per cent. kept back; nevertheless, by making an enormous expenditure this year, they will complete the road nearly five years before the original time agreed on in the contract, and we know it is quite possible the company may require aid—national aid—in order thus to complete the national work with credit alike to the country and the Government which initiated it. Sir, is there anything wonderful in all that? Does the hon. gentleman read the Globe? Does he not know that before it appeared in the Herald it was pictured and foreshadowed in the Globe, that in place of two dollars per acre as suggested in my paper the Globe suggested one dollar an acre? I take his estimate of the value of the land. I know nothing of the scheme of the Government—I am not in their confidence; I know nothing of the views of the company—I am not in their confidence on that point. Hon. gentlemen laugh derisively. I am a friend of the company because I believe they have done good by the country, they have carried on a work which is a credit to the country, and I say whatever may be done it is the duty of the country to stand by them in carrying out that work, paying all respect and regard to the public interest. It is not in the interest of Canada that that work should be imperilled, and the reputation and character of the Dominion thereby destroyed. We know what has already been done in that way. We know that the utterances of the hon. gentlemen opposite have been used in England and in the United States in a manner which does no credit to Canada. We know that the press which stands behind him have not confined themselves to vilifying the Government—I do not blame them for that; it is party tactics, and I pitch into them myself when I think they deserve it and will do so again. My honorable friend opposite may make an attack on me, but I am here ready and willing and, what is more, able to defend myself and my paper; and whatever appears in that paper I am responsible for, and nobody else. My hon. friend from West Durham (Mr. Blake) has chosen to step out of his way and drag me into this controversy. I have nothing to do with it. As a public journalist, as a representative man, as representing as independent a constituency as there is in the Dominion of Canada, I have as fearlessly expressed my views as any man in this House; and when I choose to propound a scheme which is at variance with the scheme of the hon. gentleman, when I choose to put forward a means of relieving the company, sustaining the honor of the country and protecting the public interests, I have a just right to do so. The difference between me and the Globe in this scheme is, that I put the value of the lands at $2 per acre while the Globe puts it at $1. I have paid some attention to the country and to the proceedings of that public corporation, and the action taken by hon. gentlemen opposite in relation to it. At one time we find the lands valued at $5 per acre. Does the hon. member from West Durham forget that? Of late years the very lowest value which that hon. gentleman has placed on them has been about $3 an acre. Now, Sir, does not the hon. gentleman know, when he discusses the question of placing the value at $2 per acre, that he is putting it at 50 per cent. less—more than 50 per cent. less—than the lowest valuation he individually ever placed on them. I am quite in my place and province, both as a public journalist and a representative, in giving my opinion from an independent standpoint as to what I believe are the interests of the country in relation to this matter, and so far from looking with the dread which the hon. gentleman seems to entertain in regard to a proposition of that kind, I look upon it, that one of the best things the country could do would be to resume possession of those lands, which ought never to have passed out of its hands, which ought always to have been retained by the Government, and, if necessary, to give a value to them so as to develop and open up that country. I know that this railway when built will not give that accommodation which it should give with reference to branches. We know that it is necessary to open up that country. It is stated that the people are likely to go out of the country unless they get the Southern Manitoba branch, and we know that other branches are required there. Is it unreasonable—is it not my duty, individually, and the duty of every honorable and independent man here, if he thinks the means can be provided to carry out this work, to state his opinion openly and above board? I think it is my duty to do so—of my own motion, uninspired by any man, echoing my own sentiments, and I wish my hon. friend to understand that in doing what I have done I have given expression to my own idea of what the duty of the Government is; and I repeat that I am neither inspired by the Government, by the Canadian Pacific Railway, nor even by the Grand Trunk Railway.

Mr. CHAPLEAU. But for one reason I should not have noticed the rather irregular remarks of the hon. member who proposed this motion, because I think it is unnecessary for the Government to reply to such expressions of fear, or to discuss the anticipations which have been expressed by the hon. gentleman. I do not say that the hon. gentleman's remarks were unparliamentary, for they were not, but I do say that they were irregular. Rumors and articles in newspapers may be mentioned when discussing a question which is fairly before Parliament, but I think it was hardly fair that the hon. gentleman should have taken such rumors and have made them the subject of a speech in this House and an attack on the Government, when no information, no measure, was before him—nothing, in fact, which would justify him in making the remarks which he has made. But even to that extent I would have allowed the hon. gentleman to go without answering him a word, but he tried to throw some aspersions upon a section of the party which supports this Government, and these I cannot leave unanswered. There was nothing wrong in the hon. gentleman showing his recollection of the events of last Session, by saying that the Canadian Pacific Railway Company had said that, after spending $33,000,000 in the work they had undertaken, they had estimated that $27,000,000 further was necessary to complete the road, and that that made little short of $60,000,000 which was required. Every hon. gentleman can remember that as well as the hon. member for West Durham (Mr. Blake). The hon. gentleman went further, and he said that during the course of last year the vice-president or manager of the Canadian Pacific Railway Company had stated or had written something in the newspapers to the effect that he thought the work had been conducted with such care, and that the facilities in the construction were such that they led him to think that out of the $27,000,000, which had been estimated as the value of the work to be performed in order to execute the contract between the Government and the company, two millions —

Mr. BLAKE. More.

Mr. CHAPLEAU—or more might not be spent. He said that he had read that the chief engineer of the Government in a report made early last fall had corroborated to a certain extent the estimates of the vice-president of the company, and had said that really the difficulties which were expected to be encountered in the mountain regions were such that probably a large amount of money might be saved in the estimate of $27,000,000. The hon. gentleman has allowed his imagination to have full play, and we know how fertile it is, and he has told us that, calculating as he did calculate, it would not only be two millions of dollars, as Mr. Schreiber estimated, or between three and four millions as the vice-president of the company estimated, that the contract would be short in the expenditure, but that perhaps six millions would be the difference in the cost and the money which is to be available to the company and the subsidy which was to be given to them. All that, Mr. Speaker, was perhaps no reason for the hon. gentleman to have expressed such fears. Is it an expectation or a hope that he has, or is it a fear? Whether it is a hope or a fear that will be realised we know not, but we know one thing—thank God, we know the Government are not going to lose one dollar of the liberal advance which Parliament made last year for the prompt execution of the contract between the country and Canadian Pacific Railway Company; and if we are to be mistaken, it will be on the right side of the sheet. Well, Mr. Speaker, so far so good. But the part of the remarks of the hon. gentleman I object to is this. He appeared from his remarks to think that the Government were concealing the truth from the House and the country—that the Government was perhaps frightened to bring before this House the truth as to what the company would be obliged to ask, lest some other concession would be forced upon them as it happened last Session. Such an aspersion is unjustifiable. The hon. gentleman knows that the Government never have been concealing anything from this House, but that their policy has been candidly, freely and openly explained, and not only the necessary but the unnecessary information asked for by every one of the members on the other side of the House has been given. Such was the course followed by the Government last Session and the Session before last; the same thing shall be done by the Government during this Session. The hon. gentleman has attempted to show that the Government are afraid. Afraid of what? And he has brought up recollections that he, especially, should not have brought before this House. The hon. gentleman has suggested that the Government are afraid of the domination of what he calls the Maison Bleue. Well, Mr. Speaker, if we are to speak of that, my hon. friend should know one thing. I wish the late member for Chateauguay was still alive and in his seat. I would state before him, feeling sure of not being contradicted, that the principle which the Maison Bleue in those days vindicated before this country and the world was a principle which has been supported by the highest constitutional authorities in England, a principle dear to every true lover of the liberties of his country. The Maison Bleue, as the hon. gentleman wishes to call it—and there is no shame in the name—existed to support the principle of responsible Government against the tyranny of a despot at the head of a Government. And what was fought for by the party with whom the hon. gentleman wishes to identify the Maison Bleue? The fight which then took place was one which did, and always will do, honor to the nation, to the party, and to the section of the party to whom the hon. gentleman has alluded. My hon. friend said that last year we had in what he calls No. 8 a kind of repetition of the domination of the Maison Bleue. My hon. friend had last year a bitter experience of the mode of proceeding of the two Maisons, the Maison Bleue and the Maison Rouge. He tried to build a little Maison Rouge out of No. 8, and he knows how the disjointed planks of that little building were thrown about his head before the end of the Session. It was not for my hon. friend to speak of No. 8 after his experience of last year. What is the triumph which the hon. gentleman says was achieved by those whom he designates by the name of No. 8? The hon. gentleman ought to know; if the rumor is true, he was endeavoring to profit by that triumph. The hon. gentleman will not say that those demands were unconstitutional or excessive. The vote of the House was taken on those demands, Mr. Speaker; and what was the consequence? My hon. friend was so much ashamed of the position his Maison Rouge placed him in at the time they left him, in such an insignificant minority, that he dared not take his seat again at the end of the Session. No. 8, Mr. Speaker, was loyal, was constitutional, and No. 8 succeeded because it was both constitutional and loyal; and my hon. friend should never have mentioned the occurrence before this House, because whatever was asked at the time was supported by more than half the solemn votes of his own friends. This, Mr. Speaker, I wanted to say, because this is not the first time that the hon. gentleman or his organs have tried to cast this aspersion on the Conservatives of the Province of Quebec, and I thought it was my duty to repudiate that unmerited aspersion.

Mr. LAURIER. It is not my intention to take any part in this discussion, but there is one statement of the hon. gentleman which I cannot allow to go unchallenged. The hon. gentleman has attempted to cover the most contemptible action of the late Maison Bleue with the revered name of the late Mr. Holton. Sir, everybody knows that Mr. Holton never in any way sanctioned what took place in the Maison Bleue of 1879. I do not know myself whether the inuendoes as to what Mr. Holton's views were with regard to the action of Mr. Letellier in dismissing his Ministers are true or not; for Mr. Holton never, on the floor of this House, at all events, expressed an opinion which could warrant the hon. gentleman in claiming that Mr. Holton ever condemned the action of Mr. Letellier. But we know, from the action of Mr. Holton in this House, that he deprecated the course of this Government in attempting to punish Mr. Letellier for an act for which he was amenable to the Local Legislature of the Province of Quebec; and I say this, that at that time the Maison Bleue, the great Conservative party of the Province of Quebec, attempted to tyrannise over their countrymen by forcing the Government to dismiss Mr. Letellier. We know that the hon. gentleman was not in the House at the time; he was in another House; but if he had been here, he would have seen the Government cowering under the pressure of the Maison Bleue, and he would have seen the Government coming down on its knees at last to the Maison Bleue, not for any honorable act, but for the most dishonorable act; for the Conservative party of Quebec are responsible for introducing the principle that the Local Legislature is not independent from the Government of the Dominion. This I say is dishonorable; and when the hon. gentleman attempts to cover such a contemptible and dishonorable action with the revered name of Mr. Holton, he must understand that such an attempt will not go unchallenged.

Mr. CHAPLEAU. I never intended my hon. friend to understand, nor did I say, that Mr. Holton went to the Maison Bleue. What I meant to say was, that Mr. Holton disapproved the conduct of Mr. Letellier, and this is evident from the fact that he would never give his vote against the condemnation of Mr. Letellier by the House.

Mr. LAURIER. I do not dispute that; I do not know what Mr. Holton's views were on that question, but what I said was, that Mr. Holton never sanctioned the action of the Conservative party in forcing the Government to dismiss Mr. Letellier for an act for which he was amenable to the Local Legislature of Quebec.

Mr. OUMET. I really think the hon. member for Quebec East (Mr. Laurier) and the hon. member for West Durham (Mr. Blake) have done us too much honor. I never thought that we deserved so much credit for what we have done. The members for Lower Canada who formed part of what has been termed the Maison Bleue and what has been called No. 8, only tried to obtain justice for their Province, and the best compliment that could be paid to them is the endorsement which the Liberal members of Quebec have been obliged to give their conduct. We have only obtained what we are entitled to have. We have done not only good service to our Province but we have done good service to the Government; we have done good service to our party; we have done good service to our country. If we had some influence in bringing the Government to do what they did, I say it is a great compliment to be told so by the hon. members of the Opposition. I say that these gentlemen coming from Lower Canada, who had been pressing these claims for Quebec for so many years, and who had been always kept back, who had been always going a begging from the then Liberal Government for what we obtained afterwards—I say this is their condemnation; this is the avowal by themselves that they had no influence, that they were able to do nothing for their Province or their party in the Province of Quebec; and that was the verdict that was passed against them in 1878 as well as in 1882. This was told them by one of the principal members of their party in their own organ, the Événement, who said: "What has killed our party in the Province of Quebec is the fact that our members have never been able to show that they had any influence in the Government of this country; they were always on their knees before the great spirits of the Grit party in Ontario." If we deserve some compliment from our country or from our Province, it is because we are able to say that even against the pretended opposition, the alleged opposition of the Government to do justice to the claims of the Province of Quebec, we have stood up instead of going on our knees. We have stood up like men, we have pressed our claims and we have succeeded. I thank the hon. gentleman (Mr. Blake) for the compliment he has paid to us all from the Province of Quebec for what we have done, because he cannot say himself that by obtaining that which we have obtained we have not done good service for our Province. He himself has been good enough to let us know that it was due to our influence, to our courage, to our loyalty, to our fidelity to the interests of our Province and our country; and this will not be forgotten by the people of Quebec. When I hear the hon. gentleman taunting us for what he pretends to be our disloyalty, I cannot help referring to the fact that he every day taunts us with being the slaves of the Government. It, therefore, comes with bad grace from his mouth to say we are acting disloyally the moment we are putting some claims before the Government and pressing them. How would we act on this side of the House if we were to follow the advice of my hon. friend? We would be here for nothing, because when we vote for the Government he says we are slaves, and when we threaten to vote against the Government he calls us disloyal. If my hon. friend were in power the position, I suppose, he would like us to occupy, would be the humiliating position that was occupied for five years by our friends sitting behind him, and representing, or pretending to represent, the interests of the Province of Quebec.

Mr. BLAKE. I do not intend to say many words on this question, and in doing so, will embrace in my remarks some of the observations of the hon. member for Laval (Mr. Ouimet). The hon. gentleman began by saying that we did him too much honor, attributed too much importance to the efforts of No. 8.

Mr. OUMET. We did only our duty.

Mr. BLAKE. In these days I honor highly a public man who can say of himself that he does his duty.

Mr. OUMET. We believe it our duty.

Mr. BLAKE. Now, the hon. gentleman, I say, having deprecated the compliment, as he called it, which my hon. friend from Quebec (Mr. Laurier) and myself paid to No. 8, by giving it too much importance, amply justified any allusion that might have been made to that institution, for such I understand it to be, that institution in the parliamentary government of this country, by what he said. He said for a long period the affairs of the Province had not been working correctly, because, as I understand it, there was a considerable period after the change to which he attributes so much good fortune, which took place in 1878, before any marked change in the conduct of affairs with reference to Quebec took place. Some five years elapsed before the justice he speaks of was to be done, and it was not possible to obtain it by the ordinary methods. The hon. gentleman announced just now that they had to resort to threats. "We threatened to vote against the Government," he said, "and you denounce us for disloyalty; we vote for the Government and you denounce us as slaves."

Mr. OUMET. I never said so.

Mr. BLAKE. I use the hon. gentleman's own language, for I took down his words.

Mr. OUMET. I was supposing a case.

Mr. BLAKE. "If we threaten to vote against the Government," he said, "you call it disloyal; if we vote for them you call us slaves." Well, I quite agree the hon. gentleman has the right to threaten or to vote against the Government if he thought the Government were bringing down a wrong measure, but the difficulty, is he threatened to vote against the Government unless they would add something more to their own measure. The will to vote for it is one thing and the voting for it is another kind of business. So the Secretary of State declared that No. 8 succeeded, and he was delighted to know that they had succeeded. Against whom did they succeed? Who were the adversaries with whom they waged this internecine war? Who were those whom they triumphed over? What were the successes which the Secretary of State flaunted in our faces to-day? Was it in our faces that those successes should have been flaunted? Is it not one of those attacks upon the flank to which the hon. the Secretary of State is supposed to have given some attention when he flaunts the successes of No. 8? Do we not know where the difficulty was? Was it with the weak, and as he chooses to say, with the disunited band who share my fortunes here, that the difficulty was? Was it to overcome them that the arrangements in No. 8 went on? Not so, Sir; it was the gentlemen with whom the hon. gentleman is associated by ties more or less strong, with whom he is combined by intimacies more or less cordial, with whom he has relations more or less confidential, with whom he entertains and concerts as to measures more or less in the common party interest—I say it was with these that the hon. gentleman was contending. My opinion is, that it was a remarkable scene in the history of Canada, not fully developed; it was not in the face of day, it was not in this chamber, it was not with an audience in the gallery, it was not with the reporters of the press to hear what was said; it was not by arguments addressed to the reason and the conscience of the public.

Mr. OUIMET. How do you know?

Mr. BLAKE. How do I know? Because I know it was in secret.

Mr. OUIMET. You do not know, then.

Mr. BLAKE. Because I know that rumors came in the correspondence of the hon. gentleman's own party papers. I cannot remember the names of all of them, but I will name some of them. I saw the columns of the Canadien, I saw the columns of the Monde, I saw the columns of other papers, identified not with me but with hon. gentlemen opposite, from time to time letting a little lurid light upon the scenes that were going on in this private chamber. That is how I know and that is all I know, and the hon. gentleman knows that that is how I know and that is all I know.

Mr. OUIMET. You do not know much.

Mr. BLAKE. But I say that the public was interested in knowing the various phases of this controversy, this battle, this long-continued series of engagements, in which, following out the principles of General Grant, the leaders of that band decided that they would fight it out on that line all Session, or else they would not allow the debate to proceed. Do we not remember when there was a motion to take the debate from day to day? Do we not remember that the motion to take the debate from day to day was put off from day to day? Do we not know why it was put off from day to day? Do we not know the whole range of events, such as they appear to us from the outside? But I admit we did not know all the inside. I would like to know it. But there was a triumph. The hon. the Secretary of State says No. 8 succeeded. I say, again, those over whom No. 8 succeeded were the allies of the hon. gentleman and not his opponents. Just one word more. He says I tried to build a little house out of No. 8. In form and substance, in sense and spirit, that statement is absolutely without foundation. Whatever he may intend to infer or to imply, it is absolutely and entirely without foundation. I had nothing to do with his cabal. I had nothing to do with his intrigue. I had nothing to do with his negotiations. I had to do neither with his struggles, nor with his compromises, nor with his arrangements. I never hoped to profit by them, and it is not by such means I hope to advance my cause.

Motion agreed to.

BOUNTY TO FISHING VESSELS.

Mr. BURPEE (Sunbury) for Mr. Weldon, moved for:

Statement showing name, tonnage and owner or owners of each vessel that received bounty during the year 1884, under the Act appropriating $150,000 "to aid in the development of the sea fisheries," the amount paid to each vessel; also, the name, tonnage, owner or owners of vessels applying for the same, and refused, and the grounds for refusal.

Mr. McLELAN. I would say to the hon. gentleman that all this information will be in the Fisheries Report, which will be laid on the Table in a day or two. I think he had better let it stand over, and if anything should be wanting in that report he can move for it.

Mr. BURPEE (Sunbury). Very well.

CASE OF D. J. HUGHES.

Mr. WILSON moved for:

Copies of all papers and correspondence between the Government and D. J. Hughes, County Judge of Elgin, or any other person or Mr. BLAKE.

persons, relating to charges preferred by certain petitioners of said county, asking for a commission of enquiry into the official conduct of said judge.

He said: I regret exceedingly to have learned from the hon. the First Minister, yesterday, that the Government had decided not to appoint a commission to examine into the charges preferred against Judge Hughes. These charges were made specifically, and the petitioners, among whom was Mr. Stanton, the County Crown Attorney, declared their ability to substantiate every charge. When I asked that the matter should be enquired into and the charges investigated, I had hope that there would be such an investigation, at least, as would lead to the appointment of a commission which would have substantiated the truth of the charges or exonerated the judge charged. There were grave and serious charges against the conduct of Judge Hughes when on the bench. Now, Sir, I do not wish to say one word which is hard or unjust against the bench. I look upon it, and have looked upon it, with that degree of respect which I think it is entitled to. But there were charges made against that gentleman which, if they were really true, ought to have caused the Government to have taken action to remove him from the bench; and, if they were untrue, I say he should have had an opportunity of showing that they were untrue. Sir, I am perfectly well aware that the wheels of justice, to a certain extent, in the County of Elgin, have been clogged for a number of years by retaining Judge Hughes as County Judge. It is notorious to every person who has had anything to do with him, that he is arbitrary, that he is very prejudiced against those with whom he is not on friendly terms, and that it is almost an impossibility for any person who is in personal disfavor with him to get justice at his hands. It is well known in the county that when a barrister is under the displeasure of the judge, there is no use in a client applying to that barrister with any hope of obtaining a verdict, let his case be ever so just to take before him. Knowing all these facts, and acting in the interests of the judge, as well as in the interests of justice, and in order to give security and satisfaction to the people of that locality, I think that a commission of enquiry ought to have been granted. I, therefore, move for these papers, and hope that they will be brought down, and that when they come down we will be able to see that the Government were justified in the course which they thought proper to pursue in the matter, and thereby give no just cause of complaint to the citizens of the county and city.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. I think the House will understand, from the statement made by the hon. gentleman in respect to this motion, how very vague and unsatisfactory the charges are that are brought against this County Judge. He says it is well understood that the judge is partial, and that unless counsel or parties are familiar with him they cannot obtain full consideration for their cases. Charges are sometimes made against a county court judge by unsuccessful litigants. In order to attack a judge there should be some weighty and specific charges, which are sufficient to show Parliament that the judge was really unfit to perform his duties. The hon. gentleman knows, and indeed admits, it should be so. The independence of the judges is one of the chief protections for justice in any country, and it is the bounden duty of Parliament, and of every member of Parliament, to put down any insinuation or attack on any judge, unless it is based on specific charges, showing that the judge is unfit to hold his position, and that it is contrary to the public interest he should do so; and the member who takes the responsibility of making that charge should state his belief that, from the respectability of the parties, or other circumstances, he has reason to believe there is a basis and foundation for the charges. The hon. gentleman now makes this motion as a sort of censure on the Government for not proceeding with the investigation. The hon. gentleman has been told that the Minister of Justice stated, and the Government on his report stated, that they do not believe there are any sufficient grounds for proceeding against this judge. This is an appeal from that decision, and it is only in the nature of an appeal from that decision we consent to bring down the papers. We will bring them down.

Mr. BLAKE. We have it already on record, in answer to the hon. gentleman's question the other day, that certain charges against this County Judge, of which I know nothing, were so specific that the Minister of Justice considered they required an answer from him, and he pointed out which of them required an answer, and he obtained an answer to them. Therefore, the proposition of the hon. gentleman, that we are to understand from the hon. member's statement that the charges were of a very vague character and not such as in that respect proper to be considered, does not seem to be consistent with the statement made by the First Minister the other day. I understood from it that the charges had been sent to the judge, that he had returned them, saying he thought they were so vague as not to require an answer. Thereupon, the Minister of Justice went over them, and pointed out to him such of them as to which he, the Minister, required an answer, and thereupon the judge did answer those charges. There has been a finding by that member of the Government to which this matter specially belongs, that certain of these charges were sufficiently specific and sufficiently grave to require an answer. They may be entirely untrue, but they are so grave and specific in their character that the Government have themselves decided that as regards some of the charges they come within the rule.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. The hon. gentleman is in error in his statement that the Minister of Justice considered they were specific charges which required a specific answer. There was a long, and I was going to say, a rambling statement, a series of charges or insinuations, as to the conduct of this judge. Some were obviously so vague and uncertain that the Minister of Justice set them aside altogether; but, as to the others, there was sufficient ground to induce the Minister of Justice, in justice to the judge himself, to send the petition to him, because a judge ought to know when charges, at all affecting his position, honor and integrity, are filed, so that he may consider them. But there is no statement on the part of the Minister of Justice or of the Department that the allegations were sufficiently specific to cause the County Judge to be put on trial. The papers will be brought down.

Mr. CASEY. I have not Hansard at hand at this moment, so I cannot refer to the exact words used by the right hon. gentleman; but he will remember that he told this House, in answer to the question asked by the hon. member for Elgin (Mr. Wilson) that, whether the charges were specific enough and grave enough to lead him to order an investigation or not, the Minister of Justice had certainly directed the attention of the judge to some of those charges, and had required an answer from him; that the judge had answered, and had requested that his answer should be brought down to the House with the other papers. So it was evidently understood by the hon. gentleman himself, by the judge and by the Minister of Justice, that certain of the charges were sufficiently grave to require an answer, and they were of sufficient importance to lead the judge to ask that the answer might be brought down to the House, together with the other papers. Hansard of yesterday has just been put into my hand, and I will read what the right hon. gentleman said in reply to the question asked by the hon. member for Elgin. His remarks are thus reported:

"As to the third branch of the question, a copy of the charges was sent to the judge, and he replied they were too general to answer. The Minister eliminated those charges in respect of which he did not think it necessary to ask an explanation. The other charges were then sent to the judge, who replied. The petitioner (Stanton) asked for a copy of this reply. On enquiry of the judge whether he had any objection, he replied that he preferred that his answer should be sent down to the House, with the charges which had been made against him."

So there certainly has been something in connection with the matter, requiring at least this amount of investigation, and it will be for the House to decide, when the papers are brought down, whether it requires further investigation or not.

Mr. MILLS. The views enunciated by the hon. gentleman to-day are not those enunciated by him on a former occasion, with respect to the independent action of judges, and their being subject to adverse criticism. The hon. gentleman said it was not only his own view, but he believed the view of every member of the House, that a judge ought not to be attacked in this way, and subjected to adverse criticism. I remember, on one occasion, when two or three of his supporters made a violent attack upon a judge who was at that time a member of a court of Canada, the hon. gentleman said it was very important that the House should subject the action of the judges to criticism.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. What judge was that?

Mr. MILLS. If the hon. gentleman will look at The Debates, he will see I am not misrepresenting his statement on that occasion.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. On what occasion?

Mr. MILLS. On the occasion to which I refer.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. What occasion was that?

Mr. MILLS. When the hon. member sitting near him, the hon. member for Lincoln (Mr. Rykert), and the hon. member who at that time represented Prince Edward, attacked one of the judges.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. Who was the judge?

Mr. MILLS. When they attacked one of the judges of the Court of Chancery, the hon. gentleman thought it was quite proper for members of the House to subject the judges to adverse criticism, although there had been no petition against the judge. On the present occasion the hon. gentleman enunciated different views, and the views he expresses to-day are perhaps, on the whole, much sounder than those he expressed on that occasion.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. I do not propose to discuss a previous debate to which the hon. gentleman has referred; but if he wishes the question reopened, I am prepared to meet him.

Mr. WILSON. The First Minister states that the charge should be specific, and sufficient to show Parliament that the judge was unable properly to perform his duties. All I have to say with reference to the matter is this, that I think Mr. Stanton's statement that every charge against D. J. Hughes has been proven is sufficient. Mr. Stanton is the County Crown Attorney, and it is his duty to see that justice is administered in that section. He states over his own signature, and I have his letter in my hand, that he can prove every one of those charges, and yet the First Minister and the Government say to-day that the charges are not sufficiently strong as to demand this investigation. I really think that the proper officer there ought to be the proper judge as to whether the charges are established sufficiently to require investigation. If he is not competent to do so, then he is certainly not competent for the office of Crown Attorney, or to conduct the criminal business of the county.

Motion agreed to.

CANADIAN PACIFIC RAILWAY—TRESTLES AND BRIDGES.

Mr. EDGAR moved for :

A statement showing :—(1.) The total number of timber trestles and the total number of wooden bridges constructed, or under contract for construction, upon the line of the Canadian Pacific Railway, between Sudbury Junction and Nepigon River; (2.) The length in feet and the maximum height of each of said trestles and of each of said bridges. Such statement to identify the trestles and bridges by numbering them consecutively from Sudbury westward, and also to classify them under the sections in charge of separate engineers, and to distinguish the trestles or bridges which are only temporary works, to be filled in by the Canadian Pacific Railway before approval of the work by the Government engineer.

He said: I need only say that the information sought for by this motion is very important, and that I think it should be laid before the House. I may add that if the information is in the office of the engineer, it is such that I think it could be supplied in a day or two.

Mr. McLELAN. I have to suggest that the motion be amended by inserting after the words "number of" the word "permanent," and by striking out all the words after the words "Sudbury westward," in the last sentence; the effect being that all the works of a permanent character will be returned.

Mr. EDGAR. I certainly think that the additional information which it is proposed to give by the amendment would be very valuable, but I would be sorry if the information which I seek should be delayed in order to get this additional information. Perhaps the hon. gentleman who is acting for the Acting Minister of Railways will be good enough to allow the motion to stand, and a further motion may be moved, calling for the additional information; otherwise I should be inclined to feel—if not that the object of the amendment is to delay—that it certainly would be productive of delay.

Mr. McLELAN. I understand from the Acting Minister that there will be no delay, but that he is desirous of giving full information on the point.

On the amendment being put,

Mr. EDGAR. I think that the effect of the amendment will be quite different from what the hon. member has suggested. He first suggested to extend the motion so as to cover the whole line which would be very desirable if it did not take too long. Otherwise than that, I hope he does not intend to alter the motion.

Mr. McLELAN. The hon. gentleman will see that where the main line is under construction, where the work is going on by the day, a great deal of temporary work is used—work that is used for a short time and then removed.

Mr. EDGAR. I do not want the resolution altered or emasculated in that way. I think that the motion as it stood originally provides exactly for the information desired, as it will show the temporary work separately from the other.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. How about the temporary work that is to be taken away, and not filled in?

Mr. EDGAR. If the hon. gentleman will read the motion, he will see that it distinguishes the trestles or bridges which are only temporary works. I shall certainly object as strenuously as I can to have the motion emasculated in that way.

Mr. VAIL. I quite understand the object of the hon. gentleman who is acting for the Minister of Railways, in seeking to amend this motion. I remember a meeting that took place once at Truro, in Nova Scotia, at which the present Minister of Marine and Fisheries undertook to convince the people that Mr. Mackenzie was building a very inferior road, because he was building wooden trestle bridges. And that accounted for the progress that was being made. Now, my hon. friend wants to make out that the rest of the road is not of an inferior character, notwithstanding that the same kind of bridges are used, and that is his reason for wishing to encumber this motion with the amendment he has made.

Mr. CASEY. I do not see what objection there can be to including all the structures, so long as they are carefully distinguished.

Mr. MULLOCK moved the adjournment of the debate.

Motion agreed to, and debate adjourned.

Statement of the revenue and working expenses of the Intercolonial Railway, accrued for the six months of the year ending 31st December, 1884, under the several divisions, similar to annual statement B, Intercolonial Railway, in the Public Accounts.—(Mr. Burpee, Sunbury, for Mr. Weldon.)

Statement showing the names and places of residence of all militiamen of 1812 who received their pension during the last fiscal year, and the amount paid to each of them.—(Mr. Bourassa.)

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD moved the adjournment of the House.

Motion agreed to, and the House adjourned at 6:10 p.m.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.

FRIDAY, 13th February, 1885.

The SPEAKER took the Chair at Three o'clock.

PRAYERS.

CONSOLIDATED RAILWAY ACT AMENDMENTS.

Mr. WELLS moved for leave to introduce Bill (No. 30) to amend and consolidate "The Consolidated Railway Act, 1879," and the Acts amending it.

Mr. POPE. Will the hon. gentleman explain what the amendments are?

Mr. WELLS. The amendments are very numerous indeed, and it will be impossible to explain them fully at this stage. The old Railway Act of 1861 was evidently framed by unprofessional men, and contained a great many inaccuracies and inconsistencies, many of which found their way into the Consolidated Railway Acts of 1868 and 1879. Amendments have been made from time to time, and I think the time has now arrived when the whole mass should be remodelled and consolidated. I have done my best in that direction, but, of course, in view of the important character of the Bill, I shall be guided by the action of the Government in this matter. I hope that we shall have an opportunity of going over it carefully so as to arrive at such a conclusion as will satisfy both the railway companies and the public.

Motion agreed to, and Bill read the first time.

GRAND TRUNK RAILWAY.

Mr. MITCHELL. I asked a question the other day of the First Minister in regard to when I was likely to obtain the return ordered by the House on 28th of March last, in the following words:—

"Statement showing the names of all stockholders in the Grand Trunk Railway of Canada, with the amounts of stock held by each of said stockholders at the close of the first year after the charter was granted or operations commenced. Also the names of all stockholders in said company, and the amounts of stock held by each on the first day of the current year."

I should like to ask the right hon. gentleman when we are likely to obtain this information.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. I am afraid that I am unable to give the hon. gentleman a satisfactory answer. I do not know why the Grand Trunk Railway Company have delayed, if they have delayed, furnishing this information. I will make enquiry with a view to having the return brought down, as the hon. gentleman is so persistent in the matter.

Mr. MITCHELL. Do not delay too long.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. Ero long.

CANADA CIVIL SERVICE ACTS AMENDMENT.

Mr. CHAPLEAU moved for leave to introduce Bill (No. 31) to amend and consolidate the Canada Civil Service Acts of 1882, 1883 and 1884. He said: This is a Bill for the consolidation of the different Acts in regard to matters of detail. After copies have been printed, the Bill will be distributed among the members.

Motion agreed to, and Bill read the first time.

INSOLVENCY.

Mr. BILLY moved for leave to introduce Bill (No. 32) respecting Insolvency.

Mr. BLAKE. Explain.

Mr. BILLY (Translation.) Mr. Speaker, I do not think it will be necessary to give lengthy explanations on this Bill to-day, and I believe it would be proper to wait until the Bill is printed and distributed. This Bill contains a great number of clauses, and its object is to regulate the distribution of insolvents' estates and to discharge the insolvent debtor from his liabilities.

Motion agreed to, and Bill read the first time.

RETURNS.

Mr. McCRAVEY. Before the Orders of the Day are called I wish to call the attention of the Minister of Public Works to certain facts with respect to a return asked for last Session in regard to the cost and maintenance of Rideau Hall. Part of the information asked for was brought down on 17th April, but the return is not complete. I desire to ask the Minister if he will see that the return is brought down in a complete form. I wish also to ask the Minister in regard to a return ordered at the same time with respect to the cost and maintenance of the Welland Canal, as well as a similar return in regard to the St. Lawrence Canals. Will the hon. Minister see that these returns are brought down?

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. As regards the St. Lawrence Canals, the matter referred to comes within the Department of the Minister of Railways and Canals. I could not catch the first portion of the hon. gentleman's remarks; but if he will kindly send me over a memorandum of what he wants I will take care that the papers are brought down, if they have not already been brought down.

MESSAGE FROM HIS EXCELLENCY.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD presented a Message from His Excellency the Governor-General.

Mr. SPEAKER read the Message, as follows:—

LANDSDOWNE.

The Governor General transmits to the House of Commons copies of all petitions, resolutions, correspondence and memorials, on the matter of bankruptcy, which have been submitted to His Excellency in Council for consideration.

GOVERNMENT HOUSE,

OTTAWA, 12th February, 1885.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. I desire to move, without notice, that the Message be referred to the Special Committee on Insolvency; also that the committee have full power to consider the whole question of bankruptcy and insolvency, and to report by Bill or otherwise. I also desire that the committee be given power to report from time to time; and, with the consent of the House, I will add some names to the Committee. I beg to move:

That the Message of His Excellency the Governor General, transmitted this day, be referred to the Special Committee appointed to take into consideration and report upon the alleged necessity that exists for adopting some system of bankruptcy and insolvency; that the said committee have power to report from time to time, by Bill or otherwise, on the whole subject of bankruptcy and insolvency; and that Messrs. Auger, Bergeron, Bernier, Desjardins and Robertson (West Hastings) be added to the said committee.

Mr. BLAKE. With reference to so much of the motion as proposes to refer to the committee the papers which have just been brought down in so unusually formal a manner, I do not think there is any objection, nor do I object to the addition of the names. But the other part of the hon. gentleman's proposal is of a very serious character. It seems to indicate that the hon. gentleman had not fully considered what the proper reference to this committee should be. The other day we were invited on the responsibility of the Government to assent to a particular reference to the committee. The committee has hardly commenced its labors—I believe it had but one brief session—and now the hon. gentleman proposes a very large increase of the powers of the committee, including the power to report a Bill. I think it would have been more satisfactory, if the hon. gentleman felt it necessary at so early a day to vary and enlarge the reference, to have done so in the usual way, upon a notice, but I suppose the result would have been the same as to-day. The reasons which I gave from my point of view for objecting to the mode of procedure which the hon. gentleman adopts in this case, apply with added force the greater the enlargement of the reference, and therefore I cannot assent to this motion, otherwise than on a division, though I do not take the formal objection.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. The hon. gentleman will recollect that when I moved the committee, I stated that probably the committee would or might apply, not for extended powers but for power to report by Bill or otherwise, or to report from time to time. They had not made a formal report, but I am informed that it is the desire of the committee, and therefore I make the motion.

Mr. BLAKE. With reference to this additional statement of the right hon. gentleman I think there is a very grave inconvenience in recognising such a mode of procedure, as indicating the sense or the wishes of the committee. There is a recognised mode of indicating the wishes of the committee to this House; and it is the proper mode. But, as I understand, the hon. gentleman when he is moving now, is moving on the volition and responsibility of the Government, for I do not think we can recognise any other method of acting on the wishes of the committee than upon a report from the committee, which is a report placed on the Table.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. The committee can only make one report unless the reference empowers them to report from time to time. Of course, this motion is made on the responsibility of the Government, in accordance with the desire of the chairman of the committee.

Motion agreed to, on a division.

ESQUIMALT GRAVING DOCK.

Sir LEONARD TILLEY moved the second reading of Bill (No. 7) to amend the Act 37 Victoria, Chapter 17, intitled: "An Act to authorize the advance of a certain sum of money to the Province of British Columbia for the construction of a graving dock at Esquimalt, and for other purposes."

Mr. BLAKE. Immediately after the hon. gentleman made the announcement of this measure, on a motion for Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD.

leave to introduce the Bill, I put a notice on the paper at the earliest possible moment for correspondence and this order was granted. I explained that it was with reference to this particular matter, and I did not think the hon. gentleman would propose the measure until that correspondence was brought down. It is of little use to bring it down at all, after the Bill has passed.

Sir LEONARD TILLEY. I thought perhaps we might take the second reading to day, and not take the third reading until after the correspondence comes down.

Mr. BLAKE. Perhaps the hon. gentleman will not move the Bill to Committee until the correspondence comes down.

Sir LEONARD TILLEY. Very well.

Motion agreed to, and Bill read the second time.

APPELLATE JURISDICTION OF THE SUPREME COURT.

On the order, second reading Bill (No. 3) to limit the appellate jurisdiction of the Supreme Court.

Mr. LANDRY (Montmagny). Stand.

Mr. BLAKE. I would suggest that it would be to the convenience of the House, as this order is here and seems to be getting into a standing condition, that the hon. gentleman should intimate when he intends to take the second reading. It is very interesting, but we should not be kept in a state of expectancy about it all the Session.

Mr. LANDRY (Montmagny). Next Thursday.

CARRIERS BY LAND.

Mr. COUGHLIN moved the second reading of Bill (No. 5) respecting the liabilities of carriers by land.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. I would ask the hon. gentleman to allow this motion to stand over. My hon. friend from Simcoe (Mr. McCarthy) has a Bill on the same subject, and there will most likely arise the question of jurisdiction, the question of the competency of Parliament to deal with that subject. It would be well that the whole question should be thoroughly discussed on the two measures, when the promoter of the other Bill is here. The member for Simcoe (Mr. McCarthy) will be here in a few days, and then the two Bills may be discussed together.

Mr. BLAKE. Perhaps the same arrangement might be made as to this Bill—that we should get 24 hours' notice, at any rate, as to the time it will come on.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. Certainly.

CANADIAN PACIFIC RAILWAY—TRESTLES AND BRIDGES.

House resumed adjourned debate on the proposed motion of Mr. Edgar for statement showing total number of timber trestles and wooden bridges upon the line of the Canadian Pacific Railway, and the motion of Mr. McLelan in amendment thereto.

Mr. MULLOCK. When the consideration of this question was adjourned last evening, I believe an amendment was proposed by the hon. Minister of Marine and Fisheries, the effect of which would be to enlarge the enquiry beyond what might be considered reasonable bounds. The simple question that we have now to determine is, whether the object of the hon. member to obtain the information in a reasonable time, and probably for practical use during the present Session, would not be defeated by an amendment of this character. I think the proposition made by the hon. member for West Ontario (Mr. Edgar), was a most reasonable one. He stated that if the hon. Minister desired the House to be informed on the matters aimed at by the amendment, the hon. Minister should ask the House to pass a motion dealing with that particular branch of the case, but that his particular object should not be defeated by the motion being weighted down by a much greater enquiry and which could not possibly be answered within a reasonable time. I think that is the simple proposition before us, and if the Government insist on this amendment, there can be only one inference, and that is that the Government do not desire the House to be put in possession of the particular information asked for by the mover of this motion. I have no knowledge myself as to what is sought for by it; I do not know whether the motion is likely to bring out any information injurious to any individual, corporation, or party. I think it is simply important to know whether, when an hon. member moves in this House for certain information, it is to be in the power of the Government, or is a proper exercise of their power here, indirectly to kill that application by postponing compliance with it to an indefinite period. Now, the effect of this amendment must necessarily be to postpone for an indefinite period the return to the House of this necessary information. The original motion asked that the House should be informed of the character of certain work over a distance somewhere within 500 miles. It is proposed by the Minister of Marine and Fisheries (Mr. McLelan) that the enquiry should not be so limited, but should relate to the whole distance from Sudbury Junction to the Pacific Ocean. Why not come out and vote down the motion, and say you will not give the information, instead of indirectly defeating the object of the mover by an amendment of this character? I have nothing to say as to the merits of the motion. If it is a proper motion to be granted along with the amendment proposed, it is a proper motion to be granted by itself, and I can see no reason for refusing the proposition made by the hon. member for West Ontario (Mr. Edgar), namely, to grant his motion, and let the Minister of Marine and Fisheries present an independent motion for the information which he thinks the House should be possessed of. In that way, if the House should be possessed of the whole information, it will have it. What does it matter whether two parcels of papers are brought down, or only one? We know that if they are to come down together they cannot come down in time to be of any practical use.

Mr. POPE. I have no doubt the hon. gentleman who has just sat down is as desirous as any man in the House to have all the information he can possibly obtain; but I think it is a very curious way to get information to be afraid of getting too much. I think no hon. member in this House will feel that my hon. friend, in moving the amendment, did it with any other object than to give the greatest possible information about the road to this House and the country. I do not think my hon. friend opposite should be accused of being disingenuous; I do not say he is trying to place this portion of the road in a false position before this House and the country; but I say the effect of the motion would be to give a wrong impression of the character of the road from this temporary trestle work, which is part of the construction; it would give an impression to the country and the world which would be not only false, but injurious to the company, and I know that my hon. friend (Mr. Edgar) would not like to do anything to injure this company. I believe hon. gentlemen opposite, and every patriotic man in this country, whether on one side or the other, must wish that any information given of this road should be such as to convey a proper impression of the condition of the road just as it stands. That is one objection I have to the hon. gentleman's motion. What possible good could come of a return showing the quantity of temporary trestle work used for purposes of construction, which is soon to be removed altogether? What possible good could be done by sending a return of that kind to the other side of the Atlantic or to the United States? We know that the competitors of the Canadian Pacific Railway in the United States will take advantage of every word and every syllable that can be used against it. Therefore I say, if you are going to give them any information, give them all the information. I have not seen my hon. friend's amendment, but I have an idea of what it is. It will show everything; it will show the number of trestles built that are permanent on the whole line. Why should we give any information as to these temporary trestles which are to be removed—information which would convey to the world the false idea that the road had been debased and its standard lowered. I object to the motion of my hon. friend opposite. I hope he will accept the amendment, and get the whole information concerning the road from one end to the other. There will be no more delay in bringing that down than there would be in bringing what he asks for. I do not know how long it will take to have the return brought down; but I say to every hon. member of this House that we shall get the information as soon as we can. But I will fight this battle as long as I can before I will consent to be a party to any attempt to spread before the country information false in character, as it must be, before the road is completed, and injurious both to the company who are building the road and to the Government whose duty it is to see that the road is built according to the contract.

Mr. CHARLTON. The hon. Minister of Railways says that the friends of the hon. member for West Ontario (Mr. Edgar) are afraid of getting too much information. Sir, we are not afraid of getting too much information, but we complain that we are not allowed to get the information we desire in regard to the Canadian Pacific road. What we want is simply to get the information we ask for. The colleague of the hon. gentleman who moved the amendment informs us that it is his sincere desire to lay before this country full information. I doubt it. I believe the sincere desire of this Government is to conceal from the public the actual condition of affairs in regard to that road.

Mr. POPE. The hon. gentleman has no right to doubt what I have stated as a fact in this House.

Mr. SPEAKER. I hope the hon. member will accept the statement which has just been made.

Mr. CHARLTON. I will accept with mental reservation the statement made by the hon. gentleman with regard to the temporary trestle work. The hon. gentleman talks of giving a false impression. Sir, to give the present condition of that road is not to give a false impression. What we require is a correct impression, what we require is to know its exact condition; and to conceal its exact condition is to give a false impression. If the hon. gentleman desires to conceal the actual condition of the work, it is he who desires to give a false impression and not the hon. gentleman who asks for the return. He says, in an ironical tone, he knows we would do nothing to injure this company. Certainly we would not; we do not desire to injure this company; we have no contention with this company. This company, we believe, has made this Government its tool; it has used this Government for its purposes. Our quarrel is not with it, but we stand here, as guardians of the people's rights, to condemn the Government that has surrendered these rights to this company. The hon. gentleman acknowledges that he has not seen the motion, so that he does not even know what he is talking about with regard to this motion.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Order, order.

Mr. POPE. I had not seen the amendment.

Mr. CHARLTON. We will see what the amendment is, as well as the motion, and thus see what has been expunged and what added :

"Mr. Edgar moved for an Address to His Excellency the Governor General for a statement showing:—(1.) The total number of timber trestles and the total number of wooden bridges constructed, or under contract for construction, upon the line of the Canadian Pacific Railway between Sudbury Junction and Nepigon River ; (2.) The length in feet and the maximum height of each of said trestles and of each of said bridges. Such statement to identify the trestles and bridges by numbering them consecutively from Sudbury westward, and also to classify them under the sections in charge of separate engineers, and to distinguish the trestles or bridges which are only temporary works to be filled in by the Canadian Pacific Railway before approval of the work by the Government engineer."

That is the motion of my hon. friend. Now, what is the amendment? It is to make the motion read as follows:—

"(1.) The total number of permanent timber trestles and the total number of wooden bridges constructed, or under contract for construction, upon the line of the Canadian Pacific Railway ; (2.) The length in feet and the maximum height of each of said trestles and of each of said bridges. Such statement to identify the trestles and bridges by numbering them consecutively from Sudbury westward."

Or, in other words, Sir, to prevent my hon. friend obtaining the very information he is seeking for,—the information as to the number of temporary trestles upon that road. It is intended, Sir, by this amendment, to give no information whatever upon that point, to refuse to give to this House any information except the information pertaining to the number of permanent timber trestles on that road. How are we to know, if this information is not given, whether the Government are not transcending their powers with regard to the payment of subsidies to the road, whether they are not paying subsidies, perchance, in anticipation of the time when the road will be completed and the company entitled to those subsidies? Now, an hon. member of this House, I hold, has a right to demand information upon any subject of political or public importance. If any hon. member of this House desires to know anything with regard to the progress of the work upon the Canadian Pacific road, that member has a right to know it. The public has a right to know it. This company has been subvented by millions of dollars of public money, it is being constructed with the public money, it is being constructed at the cost of taxpayers of Canada.

Some hon. MEMBERS. No.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Yes.

Mr. CHARLTON. It is likely to cost the taxpayers of this country as much again as it ought to cost, and I maintain the taxpayers of Canada and their representatives have the right to insist upon the fullest information being given with regard to the construction of this road. The stand taken by my hon. friend in attempting to refuse this information looks suspicious; it looks as if there was something to conceal; it looks as if there was a desire to lead the public astray in their opinions and calculations as to the progress and condition of this road. Why do the Government wish to withhold this information? Is there anything in this motion that is calculated to incriminate them? Is there anything in it calculated to make them stand in a worse light even than that in which they now stand before the public? It would seem impossible that there should, but it is to be apprehended that the Government does fear that the information asked for in this motion would put them in a worse position before the people of Canada than that which they now occupy, bad as that position is. Sir, the construction of the Pacific Railway is a dark mystery. I venture to say that never before has a work of this magnitude been undertaken and subvented, or aided by the Government and the people, who had to pay the cost, not being permitted to know its condition and progress. There are things about it we do not understand. We have reason to believe the route of the line was changed merely to cast discredit on an hon. gentleman on this side of the House; we have reason to believe that, in order to make this change, this country will be subjected to a loss of millions of dollars. We know this thing is hidden from the public gaze; we know it is shrouded in mystery; we know that the people are not permitted to know anything with regard to the affairs of the road; we know that the demands of hon. gentlemen on this side are not complied with when they ask for requisite information; we know that when this company applied for a loan only a year ago, the reasonable demand that a committee should be struck to look into the condition of the affairs of this company was made, and this demand was refused. There are a good many things connected with this subject that naturally are calculated to arouse suspicion on this side of the House. When we look back to the circumstances to which I am about to refer very briefly, we cannot fail to have our suspicions aroused as to the relations that exist between the Government and the syndicate. Sir, what was the origin of this contract? Was it made in compliance with the requirements of the law of this country—a law which distinctly exacts, both in the Public Works Act and the Act of 1874, that no Government contract shall be entered into without public tenders being first asked for. Was that law complied with? No; this contract was made in secret; it was made under suspicious circumstances, and the suspicions connected with it grow thicker and darker day by day, and year by year. That contract was made in violation of the law, and it had not been laid three or four weeks before this House before a circumstance transpired which convinced every hon. gentleman open to conviction that the Government had acted hastily, that they had not taken the precautions they should have taken in this matter in the public interest. What was this circumstance? It was that we had another offer to build this road.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Hear, hear.

Mr. CHARLTON. I hear sneers on the other side and ironical laughter. Sir, we had another offer from another company of higher character and possessed of greater resources than the present, and an offer more favorable in the interests of this country than that of the present company. It was an offer that no hon. gentleman opposite has a right to say was not bond fide, because the company that made it paid into the hands of the Government $600,000 more than was required to be deposited by the syndicate as a guarantee of their good faith and ability to execute the contract. We have no right then to say that this was not a bond fide offer. What was the offer? It was one that would have cost the country $3,000,000 less and 3,000,000 acres less than the contract entered into with the syndicate. It asked for no monopoly; it asked for no exemption from taxation; it secured Canadian control by providing that the majority of the Board of Directors should be British subjects. Stock books in connection with it were to be opened in every Province of the Dominion, and the Government was to have the right at any time to buy back the road. If the Government at that time did not believe that offer to be a bond fide one, they, at least, under the circumstances, were bound to retrace their steps and advertise for tenders in order to see how much could be saved in the public interest. No doubt, Sir, millions of dollars could have been saved, but they refused to do it, and what are the subsequent developments in regard to this road? They proposed to secure the public rights against excessive charges by a 10 per cent. limit as to dividends, they limited the stock to $25,000,000; and without the knowledge of this House, without the knowledge of the country, they permitted that company to increase their stock from $25,000,000 to $100,000,000. They were parties to that, and then they permitted a most scandalous system of stock-watering which, if it had been allowed, would have placed that company in a position to have taken dividends of 10 per cent. upon a nominal stock of $100,000,000 which had cost them scarcely more than $30,000,000. Then they were privy to construction rings of the most scandalous character. They upheld the company in these things, and, when this company applied to this House for a loan, they refused to allow the country to know the state of the affairs of the company, they refused to grant a committee of enquiry. Here was a demand being made for $30,000,000. It was supposed that the company had been already subvented beyond its needs, and surely the people of this country had a right to demand and to receive from the right hon. gentleman a commission of enquiry to place before the country a definite statement of the affairs of the company before a further loan was made to it. And, when they might have secured that boon for the people, they refused to remove the monopoly clause. It was subsequently discovered what the condition of the company was when this application for a loan was made. It was subsequently discovered that this company had shamefully wasted its resources.

Mr. MITCHELL. Oh.

Mr. CHARLTON. Yes, shamefully wasted its resources. This company had a contract with the people of Canada. What was that contract? It was a contract to build the main line from Lake Nipissing to the Pacific Ocean. The people of Canada had nothing to do with the affairs of this company so far as the acquiring of other lines, or the building of branch lines, or the advancing of the fortunes of the directors and officers of the road were concerned. The contract of the people of Canada with the syndicate was to build the main line of the Pacific road, and they made them certain grants to enable them to perform that contract. What was the condition of the road when the company came here and asked for this loan? They had spent, according to Sir Charles Tupper's statement last Session, upon the main line, at that time, $29,209,541 on construction and equipment, and that included a quantity of stores on hand. What had they received? They had received at that time, against that expenditure, $54,000,000, in Government subsidy, in the proceeds of stocks sold, in lands sold, and from other sources. They had received $25,037,000 more than they had spent upon their contract, and the Government knew it, and yet they came here with an application for $30,000,000 more, and their application was granted. Now, if they had confined themselves to the construction of the road that they contracted to construct, if they had confined themselves to their contract with the Government, they would have had a surplus at that moment of $25,000,000. They were to earn $12,710,000 in subsidies as the work progressed. Their estimate of the cost of completing was $27,000,000, and if they had confined themselves to their contract with the Government, when the road was completed they would have had a surplus of $10,747,000; and yet they were in extremities, and asked for a further loan. Why? Because they had spent millions of dollars in the United States, because they had acquired nearly a thousand miles of railway, not connected with their contract, because they had built lines of steamers, and it was reported that large sums of money had been taken out of their resources for private purposes. By a course of extravagance and folly, they had placed themselves in such a position, and the Government was a party to it. The Government had chartered the company in defiance of the law. They had carried it on in disregard of the interests of the people of this country, and they are to-day seeking to conceal the real condition of the works upon this road. We are demanding that we shall know the true condition of affairs. We have a right to know it, and, if this motion is refused, if this amendment is carried, it is an admission on the part of the Government that they are acting in excess of their authority and not in the interests of the people, that they are paying subsidies to a company which has not earned them, that they are afraid to let the people know what the condition of the road is. If the Government denies this enquiry, it will justify us in saying that the syndicate comes first and the Government comes second, and, as a body, is the tail of the syndicate kite. I hope the Government will not be guilty of the outrage upon the rights of a free people, which it will be guilty of if it refuses a free enquiry into the condition of this road.

Mr. EDGAR. As a very new member, I was evidently under a mistaken impression. I had supposed that members of this House were entitled to fair and reasonable returns which they moved for on matters of very great public interest and moment. I was strengthened in that impression by the language of the hon. the Secretary of State yesterday, who, in discussing the question of the Canadian Pacific Railway, said the Government had not only brought down all the returns of information which had been asked for, but a great deal more than had been asked for. I really do think that, if there is any subject which can come before this House upon which full information should be given, it is this very question of the Canadian Pacific Railway Company. I should have supposed that, when the Government of the country are mortgagees of a railway, when they have lent vast sums of money upon the security of a line of road they would be just as much entitled as an ordinary holder of a mortgage security is to have the most full and complete information as to the nature of the security. I should also have thought that, when the Government of this country are proposing to pay, and are bound to pay, and from day to day are paying upon this very eastern section of the railway over $15,000 in cash, and granting over 9,000 acres of land per mile, that gave the House and the country some claim to full and fair information on these points. I should also have thought that when this country has paid and is to pay 3 per cent. upon the capital stock of that company for a number of years, that would also entitle us to some consideration in this matter. Sir, I should still further have thought, that when the Government of the day has not yet told this House whether the company is going to receive further assistance or not, that fact also should entitle us to make full enquiries. As to the particular enquiry which is the subject of the motion, everybody connected with railways at all—and nearly everybody in this country at this day has more or less information about railways—knows that when the work is being rushed through, when railways are being rapidly built—and it is the boast of this company that this railway is being more rapidly built than any railway was ever built before—I say that when all this is being done, there is a great temptation to put up temporary trestle work in the place of solid filling in of ravines and gullies, which is done to save time. We know that it is very often necessary in constructing a road, and very properly necessary, to put up temporary trestle works to carry the track on further in order that the work may be continued more vigorously and more successfully. That is a very proper thing for every railway to do, and I have no doubt that this railway is doing it. But, Sir, the motion which I placed before the House is in order to enable that company in making this Return, to show what is temporary and what is not. The hon. member who is acting for the non-existent Minister of Railways, spoke about not having read the motion; he explained afterwards that he meant he had not read the amendment. I am prepared to say, after having listened to his speech, that if he had read the motion he did not understand it—I hope that is parliamentary—because the motion most distinctly and positively makes a direction that the return shall show and distinguish the temporary from the permanent work, and that is just what the hon. member spoke in favor of doing in his speech. I do not want to throw aspersions upon the solidity of the line, which would be uncalled for on my part, but that would be done by this return if it was made in accordance with the amendment. The motion is explicit and contains the words:

"And also to classify them—

That is the trestles—

"Under the sections in charge of separate engineers, and to distinguish the trestles or bridges which are only temporary works to be filled in by the Canadian Pacific Railway before approval by the Government engineers."

So that every single syllable of the hon. gentleman's elaborate argument against the motion falls to the ground entirely. Now, I want to show, Mr. Speaker, why the Return as proposed to be amended would be absolutely useless. The proposal is to show only the permanent trestles. Now, why do we want to know where the temporary trestles are? I think the Government, who are so watchful of the interests of the company, should be more anxious than I am to know where these trestles are. I think it would be a great pity and a great misfortune for the Government as well as for the country, when this road is being rushed through, and when the company is particularly anxious to get all the money that is owing to them, I believe, at present—when the company make demands upon the Government to be paid this $15,000 per mile, it would be a great pity, I say, if the Government should happen to pay over to them that $15,000 a mile before the permanent road was constructed, and when only temporary trestles were on the ground. That is why I think the Government as well as the country ought to have this information. Now, by striking out the clause at the end of the motion which I read a few minutes ago, as to the classification of the work, the amendment entirely prevents anyone from deriving the information I have suggested from that return. Of course, if the permanent trestles were only shown, and if the sections where they are located were classified and designated, even then we would possibly be able, with a good deal of difficulty, to find out where the temporary trestles were situated. In that case every hon. member would have to take that return in his hand, if he wanted to find out the information, and go up to the section and look for the permanent trestles, and then he would know that those that were not mentioned in the return as permanent, would be temporary. But I would like to know why that return cannot be brought down, and why the members of this House cannot have an opportunity of getting that information. The return asked for related to a small portion of the Canadian Pacific Railway from Sudbury to Nepigon. It is that portion of the road which is being pushed forward very vigorously at present, and, of course, that is the reason why I want the information about the temporary trestle work. The hon. gentleman proposes to extend it to the whole Canadian Pacific Railway instead of some 300 miles. He wants to give us information on 3,000 miles, and then only as to the permanent structures. Now that might be very interesting historical information to engineers, but it would be just as valuable five years hence as it is to-day. It would be utterly useless for any practical purpose, and I shall not thank the hon. gentleman for giving that information at all. Now as to the character of these trestles about which I wish to learn. Everybody knows that it is an exceedingly serious thing to construct a railway largely on trestle work instead of on permanent filling. If the hon. Minister of Railways does not know that from his experience of railways in the Eastern Townships, he might have learned it from a letter which Mr. Van Horne wrote in 1883. He was not writing upon this subject, I admit, but upon another portion of this same Pacific Railway, and on the 3rd of July, 1883, he wrote to me then, as now, Acting Minister of Railways in reference to portions of sections on the Port Arthur and Red River portion of the railway, which was to be given to the company by the Government, and he said:

"Upon this portion of the track which had been laid, 6 or 8 years, all the timber structures, and a large portion of the ties required renewal at an earlier date."

That showed what Mr. Van Horne's opinion was of this kind of timber trestle work, and I think the people ought to have an opportunity of forming the same opinion themselves. Now, surely I must assume, Mr. Speaker, that it is the Canadian Pacific Railway Company who are objecting to make this return to the Government. The return will have to be made by them to the Government before the Government can lay it before the House. I cannot believe that the Government are objecting of their own motion, because they cannot have forgotten that this same Canadian Pacific Railway Company, when taking over the portions of the line from Port Arthur to Red River that are to be given them completed, as part of the consideration for constructing the railway—the Government cannot have forgotten how strictly they insisted upon the Government finishing that road completely and making it permanent and having no timber trestles upon it, before they took it over.

An hon. MEMBER. No. No.

Mr. EDGAR. An hon. member says No. No. Why, Sir, at this moment I have a letter in my hand dated the 17th of May, 1883, written by Mr. Drinkwater, and addressed to Mr. Bradley, Secretary of Railways and Canals, in which Mr. Drinkwater emphasises the company's view on that question. It is dated at the office of the Secretary of the Canadian Pacific Railway at Montreal, and in reference to taking over that portion of the road he said:

"In order, therefore, to prevent any misconstruction hereafter as to the position of the company in assuming possession of this portion of the railway, I am instructed to say that it will be taken over by the company under express reserve of the right of the company to have it completed in all respects in conformity with the contract, to the same extent, as if the company were not now undertaking its operation."

He goes on to say:

"In addition to the point suggested in that letter and without relinquishing any right of the company in respect of any matter not designated here, I would indicate various timber trestles across water stretches, which in the opinion of the company would require to be filled in whole or in part, to conform with the spirit of the contract."

I should like to know if, when the Government is taking over from the Canadian Pacific Railway 20 miles of the road at a time for the purpose of paying them $15,000 a mile, they have not as much right to insist on this sort of completion as the Canadian Pacific Railway has when they took the line over from the Government. It surely cannot be, I cannot imagine it, that the Government are trying to shield the Canadian Pacific Railway. Of course, they will not do that. It surely cannot be that they are trying to shield themselves. Can it be possible that the Government have paid over to the Canadian Pacific Railway portions of the $15,000 a mile upon the work between Sudbury and Nepigon on the road which has only been completed with temporary timber trestles, about which the hon. gentleman will not give any information to the public? I am very much afraid the public will infer that such is the case. I am very much afraid, if it is not the case, that everybody will believe it is the case; and the only way in which the Government can clear themselves of that suspicion and show the world it is not the case, is to bring down the return asked for, which will hurt no one but which will show the public that there is nothing wrong. If the Government still refuse to bring down this return, I propose not to accept the amendment suggested, but to let the Government take the full responsibility before the House and the country of refusing to bring it down; and what is more, I propose to let the followers of the Government share in that responsibility by voting down this motion.

Mr. McLELAN. It has been intimated that this amendment is moved by me for the purpose of—

Mr. BLAKE. The hon. gentleman spoke on the amendment.

Mr. McLELAN. I just moved the amendment and did not speak on it.

Mr. BLAKE. The hon. gentleman has no right to speak again.

Mr. WHITE (Hastings). The leader of the Opposition spoke twice yesterday on a motion.

Mr. BLAKE. I made a motion and spoke in reply, as I was entitled to do.

Mr. WHITE (Hastings). The hon. Minister did not speak to the amendment. I move that the House do now adjourn.

Mr. McLELAN. I have been charged with submitting to the House an amendment in order to suppress information. It was with the very opposite intention I prepared and submitted the amendment, my object being to give the fullest information in regard to the character and condition of the works on the Canadian Pacific Railway. The hon. gentleman opposite says he is suspicious, that he is full of suspicion; the hon. member for Norfolk (Mr. Charlton) also says they have suspicions respecting the condition of that work. Why, it seems that suspicion and imagination are the two things that govern hon. gentlemen opposite in dealing with this whole work. The Government have been desirous from the outset, from the laying of this contract on the Table of the House, that the country and the House should have the fullest information upon every point affecting the contract and affecting the public interest. For weeks and months when the contract was lying here it was discussed on the floor of this House and the Government were able to satisfy a majority of hon. members that the contract was in the interest of the Dominion, and it was sustained by a majority of the House; and when the question was submitted to the country in 1882, the people endorsed the action of the Government on this, as upon all other questions. It is with the desire and intention of giving the House and the country correct and full information that I moved the amendment. The hon. gentleman who moved the original motion has killed his own argument, and has sustained the amendment which I moved. He says that in the construction, especially in the hasty construction of railways, temporary trestle work is placed across gullies in order to facilitate the construction and opening of the road. We know that is the case in the construction of every railway—that the contractors place temporary trestle work across ravines and carry engines and cars over in order to obtain material to fill up that very ravine across which they placed the trestle work. No doubt in many cases in the construction of the Canadian Pacific Railway such temporary trestle work has been placed, and the ravines in question are being filled up rapidly. The hon. gentleman is afraid he will not get the number of all the temporary trestles constructed by the contractors before they are embedded and put out of sight in the gravel with which the ravines are being, day by day, filled up. He does not seem to understand the position of the work and the contract. The company are not paid $15,000 a mile and 9,000 acres a mile. They are paid by the yard for every yard they do, and therefore a temporary trestle is not paid for by the mile. The hon. member for West Ontario (Mr. Edgar) said we wanted to shield the Canadian Pacific Railway. There is no desire on the part of the Government to shield the Canadian Pacific Railway or any other railway; but it is in the interest of the Government that the company should have fair play in this House and the country. When they have undertaken so great a work and manifested so much energy in carrying it forward, they deserve at the hands of this House and the country the fullest fair play, and it would be manifestly unfair to the company if we return all those temporary trestles which they are now pulling down, and which were erected merely for construction purposes in order to carry cars and engines across ravines to procure material with which to fill up those ravines. The hon. member for Norfolk (Mr. Charlton) says he would classify the return. But we want to save the hon. gentleman and his party from themselves; we want to save them from the temptation of omitting that classification and publishing to the world that there are so many wooden trestles (leaving the word temporary) on those 100 miles, and give that as a specimen of the whole work. Perhaps, indeed, the hon. gentleman has ascertained that upon those 100 miles, which they are rushing, as he says, there is more than an average number of temporary trestles; and his desire is to get the whole number of trestles upon that part of the road, and then say that that is a sample of the whole Canadian Pacific Railway. We desire that the House shall have, and in the quickest possible time, the whole number of permanent wooden structures upon the entire Canadian Pacific Railway.

Mr. CHARLTON. If the hon. gentleman will allow me to make a statement with respect to a remark made by him through misapprehension—

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. Order.

Mr. McLELAN. We desire to give you the whole information, and I claim that we can do it in less time than we can make a return to the Order as originally moved by the hon. gentleman. The engineers who are now in the office know where there are wooden trestles and wooden bridges as permanent structures, but under the Order as originally moved, they would have to go along the line and enquire of the contractors where there were temporary trestles. The hon. gentleman says that Mr. Drinkwater drew attention to some temporary trestles on the line between Port Arthur and Winnipeg, and these, he said, must have been removed. He does not say under what contract, or under what Government these trestles were put in. I assume they were temporary trestles on section B, put in in order to expedite the opening of that road, and the connection of the two lines which were under contract by the previous Government. Now, the hon. member from Digby (Mr. Vail) says that he heard me on one occasion condemn trestle work. Well, I did not exactly condemn the use of trestle work on those roads for the purpose of getting rapid construction and facilities through that country. The hon. gentleman will remember that was not what I condemned. I condemned the fact that the then leader of the Government had announced to the House that he was constructing 22½ miles of road west of Port Arthur at one half the cost per mile of the Intercolonial Railway. That was what I condemned. When that announcement was made to the House in 1877 it was not questioned. He declared he was constructing this 22½ miles of railway westward of Port Arthur, or had it under contract, and that it would only cost one half as much as the Intercolonial Railway, per mile, and was as good a road. The hon. gentleman came to my own county and made the same statement on the platform there, but I thought it my duty to correct his statement in some respects, from the connection I had with the Intercolonial Railway, and to say that it was not at all of the character of the Intercolonial Railway, that it was largely built of trestles, that the contract had been made for trestle work over the ravines, wooden trestles and with wooden abutments. It was not that I disapproved of wooden trestles or bridges, but I disapproved of the statement being made and the impression conveyed to the country, that he by his skill and economy was able to construct the road at one half the cost of the Intercolonial Railway. I have nothing more to say than that it is for the purpose of doing justice to the Canadian Pacific Railway Company, and of facilitating the return to the motion made by the hon. gentleman, that I have moved the amendment to give the permanent structures on the whole line.

Mr. CAMERON (Huron). I do not understand why there should be this extraordinary fuss by gentlemen on the other side about this very small question. It appears to me to be a very plain, simple, and ordinary proceeding in Parliament. My hon. friend from West Ontario (Mr. Edgar) has asked by a motion for a return of certain papers that one would naturally imagine would not for a moment be refused. We are mistaken, however. First, the Minister of Marine and Fisheries comes to the rescue of the Government and then the Deputy Minister of Railways comes to their rescue. Why, Sir, it takes two Ministers on the other side of the House to fill the place of the late Minister of Railways, and then they do not succeed in doing it. Now what is the fuss about? Why do hon. gentlemen refuse the information? Why does the Minister of Marine and Fisheries, acting as Deputy of the Deputy Minister of Railways, refuse the information? Is there anything to be concealed? He says no. Is there anything to hide? He says, no. Anything to keep from the public? He says, no. Then, why refuse the information to the House and to the country? The hon. gentleman makes an extraordinary statement. He says that if the amendment is carried we will get the papers more quickly than if the motion is carried. He asks us to believe the extraordinary statement that you can give precisely the same information for 300 miles as for 3,000 miles, and it will not take an hour longer for the one than for the other. The hon. gentleman must know that this is too thin—that it is not correct. He must know that the information for which the hon. member for Ontario (Mr. Edgar) asks can be brought down in a short time, whereas information extending for over nearly 3,000 miles cannot be brought down for a considerable time. He says, further, that they have nothing to conceal—that they want to submit everything to Parliament. He says, they are prepared to give the fullest information, to conceal nothing. Pray let me ask the hon. gentleman if he has read the amendment to-day and compared it with the motion. I am quite sure that if the hon. Minister of Marine and Fisheries had read the amendment to-day with any degree of care—I am glad to see that he is reading it now—he would have at once come to the conclusion that his statement was wholly unjustified by the facts. If he reads the third clause of the motion he will find that he has emasculated it, destroyed it; that he has eliminated three-fourths of the resolution. He strikes out all after the word "westward;" he has taken the marrow out of it, the substance out of it, and has left nothing but the bare shell, which would be of little use to the hon. member for Ontario or to the House.

Mr. McLELAN. I left all the permanent structures in.

Mr. CAMERON. Why take the temporary structures out? What was the object? Was it for the purpose, as already suggested, of concealing the true facts? The hon. gentleman tells the House that he made the amendment in order that we, on this side of the House, and the country, would not be misled. Does he think the people are so blind, so ignorant, as not to distinguish between temporary and permanent structures? That is not the reason the hon. gentleman has refused the information. Was the reason, as suggested by the hon. member for Ontario (Mr. Edgar), that the Government are paying for temporary structures the same price as for permanent? I hope this is not the case, but the conduct of the Minister of Marine would rather indicate that it is. They tell us they are willing to give us every information, and still when we ask for information the first particle is not given with respect to this road. From the first day they had to deal with the Canadian Pacific Railway on the floors of Parliament down to to-day, every particle of information that would throw light on the dealings of the Canadian Pacific Railway with the Government, or the dealings of the Government with the Canadian Pacific Railway, has been persistently, consistently and uniformly refused by hon. gentlemen opposite. We have been allowed to vote millions of money and vote it in the dark. I recollect not long ago when we were subventing this company with an addition of $30,000,000, my hon. friend before me moved a resolution asking for further information before we made the grant. But it was voted down by the Government and their supporters, and among the names of those who voted it down I find the name of the Secretary of State (Mr. Chapleau), who not long ago declared that the Government had nothing to conceal. I find, Sir, that on the same occasion I moved an amendment to the proposition of the Government granting this aid, asking that for the purpose of acquiring additional information:

"A Select Committee be appointed to make full enquiry and searching into the condition and affairs of the company, and particularly as to its operations in stock, and in respect of construction contracts—the real cost of the works done—and the proper estimate of costs of the works remaining."

Was that amendment granted? No, Sir. We were forced to the vote on the question without that information, and the Government by their numerical majority in this House, assisted by the Secretary of State, voted it down, and we took the leap in the dark. We are asked to take another leap now. If the Government refuses information which we are fairly entitled to ask for, we can only remain under the impression that it is refused for some improper purpose. I cannot see why the Government should place this House in an awkward, a discreditable and disreputable position, by refusing an hon. member of this House such information as he asks for. I agree with my hon. friend. I suppose this motion will be voted down, as every motion in the House seeking for information in respect to the contract of the Canadian Pacific Railway is voted down. The information the Government is willing to give amounts to nothing; it will be of no public service either to the House or in the country, and therefore my hon. friend should abandon the motion altogether, and not put the Department to the expense of preparing a return at all. Why, we had the hon. First Minister the other night complaining of the hon. member for West Durham (Mr. Blake) for moving for a large number of returns, and entailing heavy expense on the country. Now, when an hon. member moves for information in regard to the Canadian Pacific Railway, the Government moves an amendment which will entail ten times the expense of those the hon. gentleman complained of. Sir, I see no reason why this motion should not be granted. I shall not be surprised if it is defeated, but I shall be surprised if the right thinking people of this country will be satisfied with the course the Government are taking on this question.

Mr. WHITE (Cardwell). The hon. member for West Ontario (Mr. Edgar) in the closing words he used, seems to me to have given the House and the country the only motive for the motion he has presented. He declared that we could not know, if the amendment presented on this side of the House is carried, whether the Government have been paying portions of the subsidy, or portions of the loan granted last Session, upon temporary structures. Now, I submit that there is nothing in this motion for papers which would secure that information. The return would show the number of temporary trestles used in the construction; and we know from the past how ready the hon. gentleman's friends outside of this House—it would not be parliamentary to speak of his friends in the House—would be to assume—because there was nothing in the Return to give any different information—that they had been paid for as parts of the railway itself, and in that way mislead the public in regard to the construction of the Canadian Pacific Railway. What have been the facts in regard to the construction of the Canadian Pacific Railway? My hon. friend from North Norfolk (Mr. Charlton) undertook to give us a revival of the old discussions on this subject. He even went back to the discussions arising out of the letting of the original contract. The hon. gentleman ought at least to have paid the people of this country the respect of crediting them with sufficient knowledge to justify them in what they have done on this question. Notwithstanding all the speeches of the hon. gentleman on the stump and in Parliament, in various parts of the Province of Ontario especially, in which he gave them all the information he could give them on this subject; yet, with all that information, when the elections came, and before the people had an opportunity of realizing what has since been realized from this contract, we find them sending back to this House as large a majority as that which supported the contract when it was first submitted. Now, it does seem to me, under these circumstances, that it is reflecting on the intelligence of the people of Canada as well as upon the action of Parliament for that hon. gentleman to use the language he used to-day in characterising that contract. What have been the results since? During the recess since last Session a number of bye elections have taken place in this country; that hon. gentleman has taken part in many of them, and has had an opportunity of making precisely the same statements to the people as he has made here; he had an opportunity of telling them that this was a scandalous contract, and gave up franchises to the company which never should have been given; and yet we stand in this Parliament as strong as the day when the result of the general elections was made known. In all these bye elections we have been able so to commend the policy of the Government in reference to the Pacific Railway that we have succeeded in retaining as large a support for it as we had at that time. I go further: I have had something to do with some of the elections that have taken place, and I say that nothing, not even the National Policy itself, has more highly commended this Government to the confidence and generous sympathy of the people of this country than their policy in relation to this Canadian Pacific Railway, which has developed our magnificent North-West as never could have been developed under the policy of hon. gentlemen opposite, and which is certain to result, in the near future, in enormous advantage to this country. Now, what is the particular charge of the hon. gentleman? He tells us that the Canadian Pacific Railway Company have wantonly expended money on other works than the fulfilment of their contract; that they have received $54,000,000, and have expended on their contract only $29,000,000. He talks of the fleets of steamers and of other works in which the company have engaged. I know what the sentiment of the people in one portion, at any rate, of the Province of Ontario is, in regard to that fleet of steamers, and I tell him that any one who has travelled over that line and has seen the great advantage of carrying immigrants to the North-West through our own territory, instead of subjecting them, as was formerly the case, to the interference of agents of American lines of railway, will say that the country owes a debt of gratitude to the Canadian Pacific Railway Company for expending money on these other works. Without them, what would be the advantage of a railway running west of Callander? Surely the railway, to be of any advantage, must be a railway which will have connection with the great commercial centres of the country, in order to secure, not only for the railway itself, but for the people of this country, those advantages which would otherwise be lost.

Mr. MACKENZIE. Does the hon. gentleman justify the use of the magnificent water stretches?

Mr. WHITE (Cardwell). Yes, I do; but the magnificent water stretches to which the hon. gentleman committed himself when he was at the head of the Government were not the great Lake Superior—

Mr. MACKENZIE. Yes.

Mr. WHITE (Cardwell). But they were the St. Francis locks and the water stretches of the Lake of the Woods and other water stretches between Thunder Bay and Winnipeg; and the St. Francis locks stand to-day a monument to the utter folly of the policy of that hon. gentleman. Water stretches, Mr. Speaker! Who ever heard of the term water stretches being applied to Lake Superior? No, but what the Canadian Pacific Railway have done is this: they have put into operation a system which gives the people a magnificent line, by which they can have water and railway alternately, if they think proper, or by which, at the same time, they can have an all-rail route over that part of the line which was the special antipathy of hon. gentlemen opposite and in relation to which they want to get information to-day, which, instead of being to the advantage of the country or the company, would, if possible, be used by them or their friends in order to embarrass the company and to create the impression that they were degrading the road. Degrading the road! Why if this company can stand well before the country on any one ground more than another, it is in the fact that they have built a railway far in excess of the requirements of the contract. I appeal to the hon. member for East York (Mr. Mackenzie) to say whether the railway over which he travelled last summer, and with reference to which he honored himself by congratulating the president of the railway company in a telegram, when he got to the end of the line, on the character of the work—I appeal to him to say whether that railway is not far in excess of the requirements of the contract. What do hon. gentlemen want to-day, in the face of the experience we have had, that these men have carried out their contract in a manner which does them credit and is advantageous to the country, which gives, in the very character of the road, the best possible assurance and earnest that they intend honestly to work that railway; that they were building it, not to hand over, as was predicted would be the case by hon. gentlemen opposite, to the Government, but to work it themselves and to make their money out of it. We have in that fact a reason which should protect them against motions for returns of papers, the only effect of which would be giving unnecessary prominence, open to misconstruction, to mere temporary works, necessitated both in the public interest as well as in the interest of the company, and which, in accordance with the contract, will be removed and permanent works substituted, by which alone the line of the company can be judged. The hon. gentleman throws on this side of the House the responsibility of refusing this amendment. Honorable members on this side of the House are not afraid to take that responsibility. I tell the hon. gentleman that we are not going to be afraid to take the responsibility of any policy which may be necessary to secure the completion of that railway and the obtaining of all the advantages that are going to flow from it; and I tell him further, that judging the people of this country in the future, as we have found them in the past, in relation to this great enterprise, we can trust to their intelligence, at any rate, to vindicate by their support a policy which tends to complete this great Pacific Railway and by its completion develop the important interests of this great Dominion.

Mr. CASEY. The hon. gentleman who has just sat down is evidently in a less confident frame of mind than that in which he would lead us to believe he is. When people talk most boldly about what they are not afraid to do, and what they are willing to do and dare, we are prone to suspect that is the very time when their heart is beginning to fail them. And I noticed, when the hon. gentleman broke forth in a rolling sentence, with the statement that his side of the House had not been afraid of anything they were asked to vote for and would not be afraid in the future, there was only one solitary cheer to greet his flowing period. By this his last appeal, it is quite clear—for the hon. gentleman is, I believe, high in the councils of his party—that the Government are going to ask for something else for the railway company, and it is also quite clear that the courage of the party is beginning to fail. Otherwise the hon. gentleman would have had no need to make the unusually emphatic speech he has just made, in order to arouse the hearts of his supporters. The word "supporters" escaped me involuntarily; nor is that to be wondered at, since it is understood that the hon. gentleman may possibly be shortly in a position to call those hon. gentlemen his supporters, and he appears to anticipate that time by giving them the hint what to do, by taking off his hat and asking them to cheer. I will do them the credit of saying that they voted manfully in the past, whether afraid or not. How far the encouraging words of the hon. member for Cardwell will encourage them to vote the next time, I cannot say; but it is quite clear that we will have soon an opportunity of seeing with what courage they will come to the breach on the next occasion. Well, the hon. gentleman said the Canadian Pacific Railway Company have been so generous, so noble, so free in their expenditure of the public money, that it was the duty of this House to protect them—from what? From having a statement of the present condition of the line made public. What is the condition of the line? According to the hon. gentleman it is greatly in excess of the requirements of the contract and what had been expected of the company. They had done, he said, so nobly, they had built this line so much better than they could be expected to build it, that we are bound to protect them from having the actual condition of the splendidly built line made known to the public! I believe the contention of the Acting Minister of Railways was more logical. He said: "For goodness sake, do not let us tell the public what the condition of the line is, because the Yankees might get hold of it, and make fun of us, say it is a pretty poor line, and tell people not to come to the country!" His position was, at least, more logical than that of the hon. member for Cardwell, who says we must not let the people know what a magnificent line the Canadian Pacific Railway have built. Another reason he gave for not letting the people know the condition of this line was, that these miserable Grits—he says he does not include the Grits in the House—but these miserable Grits and Grit organs outside, might, if they once could get hold of a number of temporary trestles on that line, tell lies about their permanency. The hon. gentleman seems to have a low opinion of party organs. He appears to have some idea of what party exigencies may compel a party organ to state. I have even seen the statement myself, in a journal published in Montreal, which the hon. gentleman might sometimes have read, that on occasion it was not only permissible but the duty of public organs was to slightly twist and modify the truth, when compelled to do so by "party exigencies." It may have been the experience of the course pursued by that journal that leads him to suspect the base uses to which the Grit organs might be put throughout the country. I take it for granted that he knows nothing, or very little at least, of the financial affairs of that journal at present. That same party organ is still continuing to write in such strain as the "party exigencies" may require, and it is not forgotten by its friends. It is now receiving something in the neighborhood of $10,000 a year, in the way of extra printing for the Government; and, strange to say, it continues to tell the people that everything the Government does is right, and everything on the line of the Canadian Pacific Railway is glorious and good. The hon. gentleman went into the general question of the Canadian Pacific Railway. This I do not intend to go into, but will only refer to one point. If for nothing else, he said, except to save immigrants from being stolen from us by United States agents, the Canadian Pacific Railway was worth all the money and trouble expended on it. But the strange fact stares us in the face, that fewer immigrants have gone into Manitoba this year through Canadian territory than went in 1881 and 1882, over the American roads. I do not know where the leakage has taken place. Perhaps they stopped on the way to admire Fort Francis locks or to work on some of the railway contracts. But I must get back to some of the contentions of my hon. friend the Acting Ministers of Railways. I say "my friends the Acting Ministers," because though they appear to be two separate bodies, there appears to be only one mind between them. I do not mean to say that either of those gentlemen lacks his proper share, or even fails to possess a prominent share of intelligence; but, on the statement made by the first Acting Minister of Railways himself, their mind is exactly the same on this question. The hon. the Minister (Mr. Pope) who has been acting as Acting Minister in place of the absent Minister of Railways—it is hard to describe him exactly—told us he had not read the amendment moved by his friend, the assistant Acting Minister of Railways (Mr. McLellan), but he thought he knew what was in it. If such sympathy, if such mesmeric sympathy exists between them, I think we must dub them the Siamese Twins. They not only have two hearts that beat as one, but two minds that think as one, and two minds that think instead of the one that used to think and used to be sufficient for the purpose. It is clear that these two gentlemen, between them, have not, at all events, the same amount of pluck as their predecessor had. The late Minister of Railways, Sir Charles Tupper, did not, on a question like this, condescend to refuse information to the House.

Mr. FARROW. Oh!

Mr. CASEY. No, he did not, although my hon. friend from North Huron laughs at the idea. He had the courage of his opinions and the courage of his acts, and he brought down the information to the House and told the House what he had done, and took the consequences like a man. Whatever else may be said about him, he was, at all events, pretty plucky. But these two gentlemen together cannot venture to bring down the information to show us how many temporary trestles there are on this railway, although it is to be distinctly stated that they are but temporary. The assistant Acting Minister of Railways told us the word "temporary" was left out in the motion of my hon. friend from Ontario. It was put in the motion of my hon. friend, but the hon. gentleman proposes to strike it out. The trestles were to be classified as temporary and permanent, and as it is well understood that all railways must have temporary structures, I cannot see what harm is to be done by the Yankees or the people of this country knowing how many of these structures are temporary. We want to know what has been done. This work is being performed by authority of Parliament, but not under contract, in the way such work is ordinarily done. The hon. Minister said it was being paid for at so much a yard as it went on. He is slightly mistaken in his interpretation of the facts. There is no contract between the Government and the Canadian Pacific Railway Company, as far as I can discover from the papers brought down late last Session, as to how much is to be paid per yard for the work, or as to how fast it is to be done. I find that the Auditor General asked the secretary of the Railway Department under what agreement a certain certificate for $150,000 was issued to the Canadian Pacific Railway Company for the work on this section. The secretary referred to the Order in Council of the 9th July, and Mr. VanHorne's letter of a few days before, as constituting the agreement. On reference to these papers, which I may have occasion to quote more fully in a subsequent debate, I find that Mr. VanHorne proposed not only to take in hand the work which was left undone by the contractors on Section B, but also the work in finishing up in a first-class manner, as he terms it, the road from Port Arthur to Winnipeg, as well as the building of a few station houses and putting in a few sidings here and there, and all for a lump sum of $940,000, which, with an additional sum of 15 per cent. to the contractors, came to a total of $981,000. This offer was accepted by Order in Council for $926,000. How this discrepancy occurs I will ask the Minister to explain in a subsequent debate, but not now. But the work is let to the Canadian Pacific Railway Company without tender, without a contract being drawn up, without anything, so far as it appears, but the letters from Mr. VanHorne and the Order in Council, and on that informal, vague, peculiar sort of agreement, the payments are being made, and have already been made to the extent of $266,000. I think it is peculiarly right and proper, under these circumstances, with such a peculiar form of agreement between the Government and the company, with payments going on spasmodically, that we should know exactly what the present condition of the work is. It is a sort of information which has never been refused us in regard to any other kind of work; it is monstrous, and I believe it is unconstitutional, to refuse it to this House, in regard to any work which is being carried on with the public money. It has been contained from time to time in the reports of chief engineers. We have been told from year to year, "there is a temporary trestle here and another there, but they will be taken away." There was no secret about it. There was apparently no shame about it. But now there seems to be some reason for shame. That which is concealed, there must be some reason for being ashamed of. I cannot conclude better than by telling the hon. gentleman of a circumstance which this reminds me of, and which occurred in my school days. One boy was suspected of having stolen another boy's jack-knife. He put on a great air of innocence and said, "Come on, boys, and search me, and see if you can find it," and so they searched his pockets. They looked in the permanent trestle pocket, and they looked in the embankment pocket, but at last they came to a pocket which he said they must not look in. "No," he said, "boys, you must not look there!" "Why not," they asked. "Because the jack-knife is in there!" Mr. Speaker, that poor boy was more than half an imbecile. He did not see that he was convicting himself by his refusal to have that pocket searched. He did not see that the fact that the knife was in that pocket followed inevitably from his refusal to have it searched. But it did; and I hope the ministry will see, as the public will see, that their refusal to have this particular pocket searched is an absolutely certain indication that there is a jack-knife in there which belongs to someone else.

Mr. MACKENZIE. I wish to say to the hon. member for Cardwell (Mr. White), though he is not now in his place, that his statement respecting the water stretches is wholly inaccurate. You will find repeatedly in my speeches in the years 1875, 1876 and 1877, express reference to it. I saw no necessity for building the road north of Lake Superior for many years to come, and my policy, as was well understood, was to connect with the railway system at the west end of Lake Superior and continue from that point westward. I intended to use the interior water stretches as well. All this was well known, and I am astonished that the hon. gentleman had the hardihood to deny it to-day because, connected as he has been with the press and with the House, it is almost impossible that he could have been ignorant of such a well known fact. But, Sir, I am not surprised to hear an hon. gentleman say that, who last year raised an objection to my policy because we began at the two ends, at Red River and Lake Superior, instead of beginning in the middle—as if that were possible; and the gentleman who could be so wanting in intelligence as to suppose that possible, would very likely be wanting in the honesty and fair play which would have prevented him making the statement he did. With regard to the motion itself, I felt disposed to sympathize with the amendment when I heard it first read, supposing that the sole object was to obtain information as to the temporary or permanent structures separately. I find, however, in looking at the motion, that the Government, or the company, or both, shall designate that which is intended to be temporary, against that which is intended to be permanent. That being the case, I cannot conceive what object there can be in refusing the return. It seems a very simple matter, and one upon which information could be got, at any rate. The public cannot be denied that information. I may say there is no kind of trestle work that can be compared in badness with that put up by the Government opposite, on Section B. Anything worse than that could hardly have been constructed. I am quite certain that on the new part of the road there will be no trestle work found equal in badness to that which they have built themselves.

Mr. HESSON. I just wish to say a word or two on this matter. The remarks made by the hon. member for West Elgin (Mr. Casey) may have been very interesting to himself, but any school-boy could have enlightened the House equally as well. A motion has been asked for, that the hon. gentlemen opposite fancy would contain a great deal of information for the country. Now, I have no doubt, for my part, that all the information desired will be contained in the report of the Minister of Railways; and I think it will be very interesting reading to the hon. gentlemen opposite, and they might well spend some time over that portion of it where temporary trestle works are referred to. To show the absurdity of proposing such a motion as this to the serious consideration of the House, I would only refer to the experience of those hon. gentlemen in this House who have travelled over that road from end to end. I have myself gone over the road twice and ought to know something about its construction. I was surprised to see that what was temporary to-day became permanent, I might say, to-morrow, so rapidly did the company push forward the work of completing a solid road-bed. I cannot conceive the necessity of asking for such information, from the fact that these temporary structures, that are confessed to be desirable and necessary in the construction of all railways, but necessary for a time only, are very soon to be replaced by more solid structure. What object is it to this House to know whether this work will be covered up to-morrow or next day with a permanent embankment, or some more solid structure than trestle work? We do know for a fact that that portion of the road that was completed by the Canadian Pacific Railway Company has been admitted, by the hon. member for East York (Mr. Mackenzie), in a very generous spirit, and a very able manner, to be even in excess of the requirements of the contract; and we have reason to believe, from the experience we have had of the construction of that road, that upon its completion the whole road will be of such a character that not only this House but the country will be thoroughly satisfied that we gave such a contract to that company. I am not here to justify the Government in withholding needed information, but I cannot see any good reason why this information should not be withheld, and for the reason I have stated, namely, that the temporary structures which the engineer sees when he goes over the road to-day, may, to-morrow or next day, when he makes his report, all have been replaced by more substantial work. I contend, also, that the experience of this Session, and of past Sessions, has indicated most clearly to every intelligent mind that the Government have been, on all occasions, willing to bring down such information—all information, in fact; and before this Session closes, if I am spared, I propose to put a motion on the paper, enquiring what number of returns have been granted to the House, and, if possible, the number of returns granted in connection with the Canadian Pacific Railway and its construction, from the beginning up to the present. I would like to see the number that have been refused by this Government, and with these results I would ask the country to test the value of the statements made by hon. gentlemen opposite, as to whether it is the desire of the supporters of the Government that the Government should withhold information valuable to the public. Sir, I am quite prepared to vote for the amendment of my hon. friend the Minister of Railways.

Mr. COCKBURN. I do not rise for the purpose of making a speech, but only to show that the hon. member for Cardwell (Mr. White) has obscured the idea that the hon. member for East York (Mr. Mackenzie) intended to utilise the water stretches and the great lakes. One has only to point out the Georgian Bay Branch of the Canadian Pacific Railway project of the hon. member for East York to refute the hon. member for Cardwell's assertion. I have frequently heard supporters of the Government hurl the charge against the Mackenzie Government, that the construction of the Fort Francis locks was one of the most atrocious and corrupt acts that could have been committed. Now, I would ask the hon. member for Cardwell to look at what was done by the previous Administration. Did they not spend hundreds of thousands of dollars upon the Dawson route? The Fort Francis locks were merely improving the navigation for steamers which were already placed there by the present member for Algoma (Mr. Dawson) on behalf of the present Government during the first Parliament of the Dominion. I merely mention this to show the fallacy of the charge of corruption against the Mackenzie Government, made by the hon. gentleman opposite. By the building of the Fort Francis locks the lake may be utilised very much by the present Government. As regards the question before the House, it seems to me so plain as not to require any argument at all, that there can be no reasonable objection to bringing down the information asked for by the hon. member for West Ontario (Mr. Edgar).

Amendment (Mr. White, East Hastings) to adjourn the House withdrawn.

Main motion, as amended, agreed to.

BANK OF UPPER CANADA.

Mr. MACKENZIE. I desire to ask the Finance Minister when he will bring down statements respecting the Bank of Upper Canada. The hon. gentleman will remember that in the Session of 1870 an Act was passed which required returns to be made within fifteen days of the opening of each Session, and another Bill was passed in the following year containing the same provision.

Sir LEONARD TILLEY. My attention has not been called to this matter. The return will be laid on the Table, probably in a day or two.

LIGHTHOUSE AT THE NARROWS.

Mr. WOOD (Brockville) asked, Whether it is the intention of the Government to erect a lighthouse on the island near the entrance to the Narrows, on the River St. Lawrence, west of Brockville.

Mr. McLELAN. This matter is under the consideration of the Department of Marine.

SECTION B ARBITRATION.

Mr. CASEY asked, Will the Government lay on the Table, at an early day, the evidence taken before the Section B arbitration.

Mr. POPE. If the hon. gentleman will move for the evidence, I will consider the propriety of laying it on the Table, although it is very voluminous.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD moved the adjournment of the House.

Motion agreed to, and the House adjourned at 6 p. m.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.

MONDAY, 16th February, 1885.

The SPEAKER took the Chair at Three o'clock.

PRAYERS.

MEMBER INTRODUCED.

Mr. SPEAKER informed the House that the Clerk had received from the Clerk of the Crown in Chancery certificate of the election of J. W. Bain, for the Electoral District of Soulanges.

Mr. BAIN was introduced by Sir Hector Langevin and Mr. Chapleau, and took his seat.

REPORT PRESENTED.

Annual Report of the Department of Marine and Fisheries for the fiscal year ended 30th June, 1884.—(Mr. McLelan.)

FIRST READINGS.

Bill (No. 33) for the equitable distribution of Insolvents' Estates.—(Mr. Beaty.)

Bill (No. 34) for the discharge of past Insolvents.—(Mr. Beaty.)

Bill (No. 35) further to amend "The Consolidated Railway Act, 1879."—(Mr. Bergeron.)

RETURNS.

Mr. BLAKE. Before the Orders of the Day are called I desire to call the attention of the Acting Minister of Railways to the fact that the plans and maps which are mentioned in the return made pursuant to a resolution in the House of Commons with reference to the Canadian Pacific Railway, have not been brought down, although they are referred to in the sheets. The hon. gentleman will observe that the estimates and payments on all the sections are given for no later than November, when we should have them for December and January. The resolution states that the returns are to be brought down to the latest practicable date, which would embrace the January estimate, for as a rule the actual payments take place on the 10th or 12th of the month.

Mr. POPE. I can only tell the hon. gentleman that for the month of January not half the payments have been made.

Mr. BLAKE. Perhaps not all of them.

Mr. POPE. Not half of them.

Mr. BLAKE. Perhaps not, but the remaining third or quarter is what we want.

Mr. POPE. Whatever I can get, I will bring down.

Mr. MITCHELL. It will be remembered that at the last Session of Parliament an address was moved by me, and ordered by the House, for a list of the stockholders of the Grand Trunk Railway Company, and I would like to ask the right hon. gentleman when that will be brought down.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. I really cannot inform my hon. friend. I have no doubt that the resolution of last Session was transmitted to the offices of the Grand Trunk Railway, but I have lost sight of it, and I do not know whether they have sent the return or not. However, I will cause a letter to be written to the Grand Trunk Railway Company, calling on them to make the return, and then if they do not send it down, it will be for my hon. friend to take such steps as he sees fit.

Mr. MITCHELL. I give my right hon. friend notice of the step I intend to take, and it is this: To bring Mr. Hickson before the bar of this House.

Mr. BLAKE. Without saying that I will resort to such extreme measures, I will say across the floor that I could hand my hon. friend a list of twenty-two motions for returns which have met the same fate as the one to which he refers.

MESSAGE FROM HIS EXCELLENCY.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD presented a Message from His Excellency the Governor General.

Mr. SPEAKER read the Message, as follows:—

LANSDOWNNE.

I acknowledge with thanks the Address adopted in answer to the Speech with which I opened the Session. I rely with confidence on the assurance that the important measures submitted to you will receive your careful and full consideration.

GOVERNMENT HOUSE,

OTTAWA, 16th February, 1885.

SECOND READINGS.

Bill (No. 15) to continue an Act respecting the Albion Mines Savings Bank.—(Mr. McDougald.)

Bill (No. 23) to amend the Act to incorporate the Wood Mountain and Qu'Appelle Railway Company.—(Mr. Williams.)

Bill (No. 24) to incorporate the Lake Erie, Essex and Detroit River Railway Company.—(Mr. Patterson, Essex.)

Bill (No. 28) to incorporate the Dominion Drainage Company.—(Mr. Dickinson.)

BANK ADVANCES TO THE GOVERNMENT.

Mr. BLAKE (for Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT) asked, 1. What is the total amount of moneys temporarily advanced to Government by banks or other parties in England, Canada or elsewhere, up to date of enquiry? 2. By whom has the said sum been advanced? 3. At what rate of interest in each case?

Sir LEONARD TILLEY. On the Order of the House, returns of all moneys loaned from banks or from agents in London down to the 1st of February, have been laid on the Table of the House. Since that time a loan of $2,000,000 from the Bank of Montreal has been made. As the rates of interest paid to the different parties are not exactly the same, the hon. gentleman will see that it would not be in the public interest at this time to give the details.

SETTLERS IN THE DOMINION.

Mr. BLAKE, in the absence of Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT, asked, What is the total number of settlers supposed to have settled in the Dominion of Canada during the calendar year 1884?

Mr. POPE. The total number of immigrants supposed to have settled in the country in 1884 is 103,824.

SETTLERS IN MANITOBA AND THE NORTH-WEST.

Mr. BLAKE, in the absence of Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT, asked, How many immigrants are supposed to have settled in Manitoba and the North-West Territories, independently of settlers from the older Provinces?

Mr. POPE. The number of immigrants reported to have settled in Manitoba and the North-West, irrespective of those from the older Provinces, is 20,779, and from the older Provinces, 9,486. The countries from which they came are as follows: From Great Britain, 6,920; from Germany, 643; from Europe generally, 559; from Nova Scotia and New Brunswick, 540; from Quebec, 1,468; from Ontario, 7,473; and from the United States, 9,728. The number of laborers is 2,929.

Mr. BLAKE. They came from nowhere, I suppose.

Mr. POPE. Well, they went somewhere; that is the great point with us.

CANADIAN PACIFIC RAILWAY—SECTION B.

Mr. EDGAR asked, To what account or accounts has the receipt of the sum of $34,179.17 awarded to the Government on their counter claim against the contractors of Section B, been credited, and where do such credits appear in the Public Accounts of last year, which contain, on page 276, the entry of the payment to the contractors of the full amount of their claim of $78,451.59, without any deduction for the counter claim?

Mr. POPE. It would have been very much better if this information had been asked for in an address, as it is difficult to carry the figures in one's mind to answer questions like this. This $34,090 or $39,000 is incidental to the winding up of several Government contracts. Certain materials and furnishings were left, and were sold to different parties for sums aggregating $39,000. I do not mention the odd dollars. Of this property, $14,000 worth belonged to Mr. Whitehead, being rolling stock, etc., and the $14,000 was paid to Mr. Whitehead or his representative at Kingston. The other $24,000, the hon. gentleman will find by the Public Accounts, has been returned to the Consolidated Revenue of Canada.

Mr. EDGAR. Does it appear in the Public Accounts?

Mr. POPE. Yes.

COMMUNICATION—PORT MULGRAVE, GUYSBORO, CANSO, AND ARICHAT.

Mr. KIRK asked, Has it been represented to the Government that the steamer Rimouski has successfully kept up regular communication between the railway terminus at Port Mulgrave and Guysboro', Canso and Arichat, up to the present time? And by whom? Is it the intention of the Government, in view of these representations, to grant a subsidy in aid of said service, and if so, what amount?

Mr. McLELAN. It has been represented to the Government that the steamer Rimouski has been running for some time. The hon. gentleman who asks the question, the hon. member for Richmond, the hon. member for Halifax, the Speaker of the Senate, the owner of the steamer, and a number of others, have brought the matter to the notice of the Government. It is now under the consideration of the Government whether a subsidy shall be granted or not.

INTERCOLONIAL RAILWAY—EARNINGS AND EXPENSES.

Mr. BLAKE asked, What were the earnings and working expenses of the Intercolonial Railway for each month of the fiscal year 1882-83, as returned by the Moncton Office to the Department of Railways and Canals?

Mr. POPE. The remarks I made before will apply to this question, that it would be much easier for me to bring down a return than to carry these figures in my head. However, I am so anxious to accommodate the hon. gentleman that I am going to try to answer his question.

Mr. POPE.

	1882	Earnings.	Working Expenses.
July.....		$203,620 09	$190,541 41
August.....		184,324 93	201,834 71
September.....		193,359 75	222,881 83
October.....		219,773 98	243,158 78
November.....		215,814 57	225,132 55
December.....		189,388 79	190,563 92

	1883
January.....		160,579 56	174,098 38
February.....		164,115 88	189,749 39
March.....		206,168 19	219,298 92
April.....		233,797 93	158,935 31
May.....		227,979 71	171,629 18
June.....		171,993 32	172,550 89

I may say that the hon. gentleman and this House may possibly have conceived a wrong idea of what has been going on this year. There has been an extraordinary expenditure this year. The hon. gentleman will remember that the buildings were burnt at Moncton and we have had other heavy expenditure up to this time, making a larger expenditure this year compared to the earnings, but which I hope to make up before the year closes.

RAILWAY COMMISSIONERS AND DOMINION ARBITRATORS.

Mr. McMULLEN asked, Whether the Government have engaged at present a Board of Railway Commissioners or Dominion Arbitrators; if so, their names and date of their appointment, salary or allowance, and travelling and other expenses, the amount paid to each from 1st of January, 1884, to 1st of January, 1885. At what date were the service of the Board of Railway Commissioners dispensed with? What sum or sums of money have been paid them since the 1st of January, 1884?

Mr. POPE. This is another of these things which make me bring down a hatful of papers. The Railway Commission is a Committee of the Privy Council, and there is also a Board of Arbitrators composed of Mr. Cowan, Mr. Millward, Mr. Compton and Mr. Simard. Mr. Cowan was appointed the 24th of May, 1869. His salary is $1,000 a year, and his travelling expenses amounted to $914.50. Mr. William Compton appointed 16th November, 1878, salary $1,000, travelling expenses $1,076. Mr. Joseph Simard, appointed 13th December, 1879, salary $1,000, travelling expenses, $758. I do not put in the cents but I hope there is some sense in what I am saying. Mr. Henry Millward, appointed 1st October, 1883, salary $750, travelling expenses $1,466.

DOMINION GEOLOGICAL SURVEY.

Mr. HALL asked, Whether any, and if so, what changes have been made in the system under which the Geological Survey of the Dominion is conducted, in accordance with the recommendation to that effect of the Special Committee on that subject appointed by this House at its last Session, and if not, if any such changes are in contemplation?

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. The report of the Geological Survey will be brought down in a few days. It will give my hon. friend a good deal of information. As to the intention of the Government with respect to that Department, I will go into that when the Estimates come up.

TIMBER LIMITS IN THE TERRITORIES.

Mr. MILLS asked, Whether the Government has granted any timber limits within the Territories awarded the Province of Ontario by the report of the Judicial Committee, since that report was sanctioned by Her Majesty? Whether the Government claim the lands, the timber and mines, as the property of Canada?

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. I would answer that no timber limits have been granted since the report was sanctioned by Her Majesty, but vouchers have been issued as to previous grants and correspondence has been going on since. With respect to lands and timber and mines, I would say that, excluding the lands under the Robertson Treaty, about which, of course, there is no question, Canada by the treaty acquired for pecuniary consideration—money and money's worth—the rights of the Indians whatever they may be. The Dominion Government hold that they have the rights of the Indians whatever those rights are.

ONTARIO BOUNDARY.

Mr. MILLS asked, Whether the Government accept the boundary of Ontario on the north and west as defined by Her Majesty's Order in Council and the report of the Judicial Committee? Whether they are ready to accept or have accepted the Albany River from the eastern point of the northern boundary, as defined in the Imperial Order in Council, eastward to Hudson's Bay and thence eastward along the shore of the bay until it reaches the line drawn due north from Lake Temiscamingue to Hudson's Bay?

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. The answer to that question is this: That the reference was as to the western boundary of Ontario and the eastern boundary of Manitoba. So far as the judgment or decision of the Judicial Committee is concerned, it concerned the boundary between Manitoba and Ontario; of course, we have no objection to accept that, we cannot help ourselves, there it is. With respect to that portion of the report of the Judicial Committee, if any, which was not referred to them in the reference, as the Government do not consent, they have not the power to deal with that subject, but must come to Parliament to deal with it.

Mr. MILLS. There is part of the question not answered—that is from where the report of the Judicial Committee left off eastward to the Hudson's Bay.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. We consider that Parliament deals with that and not the Government, as an act of administration.

PERMISSION TO CUT TIMBER IN ONTARIO.

Mr. MILLS asked, Whether any permission, in any form or manner, has been given to any person or persons to cut timber in any part of the territory declared by the Order of the Queen in Council to be within the Province of Ontario? If so, the name or names of the person or persons obtaining such permission; the extent of territory embraced, the amount received by the Government and the amount, if any, still unpaid by the party or parties for such permission?

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. If the hon. gentleman will, without notice, convert that into a motion for a return I will bring the return down at once.

Mr. MILLS moved for:

Return showing what licenses the Commissioners have given to cut timber in any part of the territory declared by the Order of the Queen in Council to be within the Province of Ontario. If so, the name or names of the person or persons obtaining such permission; the extent of territory embraced, the amount received by the Government, and the amount, if any, still unpaid by the party or parties for such permission.

Motion agreed to.

BANKING FACILITIES TO AGRICULTURISTS.

Mr. ORTON moved that the House resolve itself into Committee to consider the following resolution:—

That it is expedient to bring in a Bill to extend better banking facilities to the agriculturists and other persons in the Dominion of Canada.

He said: In reference to the objects of this motion I wish to make a few remarks. It is my intention to introduce a Bill on this resolution to advance the prosperity of Canada by affording easier financial facilities to our farmers. It is unnecessary for me to say that the material prosperity of all Canada depends more or less on the success of our agricultural interests, which is generally looked upon as the mainstay of our national prosperity. How important it is, then, that this industry should be placed in the easiest possible way to obtain the necessary financial facilities to carry it on successfully. We all know how essential it is to the prosperity of trade, commerce, and the various other industries in this country that easy financial facilities should be obtained. How much more is it necessary, then, that the industry from which they sprang, from which, I may say, they have their being, should have similar financial facilities. It is generally considered by all civilized nations that it is the duty of every good and paternal Government to do equal justice to all classes of the people. I ask the House to consider for a moment whether the agriculturists in Canada occupy the same position that other classes do in this particular, and I think there is not a member in this House who considers the question for a moment who will answer yes. While every trader, merchant or manufacturer, any of those engaged in the other industries of this country, even the pronounced speculators, can go to any bank in the country and with a good endorser, obtain hundreds and thousands of dollars to carry on his enterprise, what has the farmer to do? We know that the banks do not like to give accommodation to farmers. We know that, if, after exerting themselves in their industry, farmers have a crop ready to take off and require some financial assistance, and go to any bank in our country and ask for it in nine cases out of ten that aid is refused, and they are compelled to go round among the moneyed men of the locality, or to go to the private banks, which charge farmers for small loans of that character from 10 to 12 per cent., and obtain their funds from the ordinary banks of the country; and in this roundabout way the farmer is compelled to pay more than is absolutely necessary for the little sum he requires to enable him to take off his crop. This also frequently occurs when he is putting his crop into the ground. This condition of affairs should not exist if any remedy can be found, as all will acknowledge. Why is money cheaper in England than it is in Canada? The answer, I suppose, is that England has an accumulation of money which we have not, but, while we have not accumulated wealth in gold, we have wealth in land; we have resources in Canada which far outstrip those of the United Kingdom, and I think some means can be found by which that wealth in land and those resources can be utilised, in order to afford our people a circulating medium, and money, upon a sound basis, to enable them to carry on their industries. In Germany, land credit banks have been established, and they have done immense service to the European countries, to Germany, France, and even Russia. To-day the very serfs of Russia are being liberated, are being freed from serfdom through the operation of these land credit banks. By the operation of these banks the peasants of Russia are enabled to purchase the land themselves, and are becoming independent farmers, such as we have in Canada. This goes to show at any rate that through a system of that kind a great good can be accomplished. I ask that this House shall seriously consider this question and afford that benefit to the struggling farmers of Canada. The Act which, perhaps in my simplicity, I propose, I will endeavor to explain to the House. It provides that farmers who are out of debt may become stockholders in farmers' banks by giving mortgages upon their land without interest, and that any body of men may, upon receiving these mortgages upon land and other securities, go to the Government and ask from them legal tender notes to loan out to those farmers who require to borrow. It also provides that the mortgages given by those farmers who desire to borrow may be converted into negotiable bonds, and that those bonds, based upon the interest-bearing mortgages given by the borrowers of money, shall be guaranteed by the Dominion of Canada, and shall bear interest at the rate of 4 per cent. It also provides that the banks shall loan money to the farmers on mortgages at 5 per cent. per annum on half the assessed value of their lands, or any other limit which may be thought wise. It also provides that county councils may establish farmers' banks in their respective counties, and that the warden and the county treasurer and the county clerk shall in that case be the managing directors of such banks, and that every member of the county council shall be a director in such bank, and that they may, in order to cheapen the cost of carrying on these banks, collect interest on the mortgages held by the banks in the ordinary way in which taxes are collected by the tax collector, so as to ensure punctuality and also safety to the counties which carry on these banks. There is also a provision by which the mortgages which are given for money borrowed may be released at any time by substituting other mortgages of equal value, and placing them in the hands of the Government as a guarantee for the bonds which they have guaranteed. These are some of the provisions of the Bill which I propose to introduce. I think there is nothing startling or unusual in the proposition. We all know that the national banks of the United States afforded their people a national currency, and all they had to do to establish those banks was to pay up United States Government bonds, apart from the interest bearing bonds, and deposit them with the Government, and they received national currency. They actually had a monopoly of the circulation of the national currency. This Bill does not propose any such monopoly; it does not propose that the Government of the country should pay any interest to the banks, but simply that they afford these banks the credit of our Government, the credit of landed security, which is the best in this country. Sir, there is also a provision that I did not mention which I think of very great importance, and that is, the provision by which these banks may loan to the settlers upon Dominion lands money to enable them successfully to carry out their projects. We all know that in the North-West the great difficulty is that there are not enough men possessing capital to settle that country rapidly, and it is essential to the prosperity of this country, to the prosperity of our great national railway, indeed, I may say, to every interest, that every possible facility should be afforded by the Government for the settlement of that country. Now, Sir, I maintain that a settler coming from Great Britain to the North-West with, say, $600 or a $1,000 in his pocket, seldom finds that sum sufficient. Now, in order to supplement that, I propose that these banks shall be allowed to afford these settlers an equivalent to the money which they bring out and spend in improvements on their land, and that their land shall be the first lien for these loans. In connection with this question I think it will strike everybody in this House who has thought upon the subject at all, that the Torrens system of land conveyance should be introduced as soon as possible, and I think that the operation of this Bill will very much facilitate the introduction of that much to be desired measure. In the North-West I think the Government are certainly not doing what they should do in this matter. I think it is in the interests of the country, where the Crown is giving titles, that there should be no longer delay in adopting that system of transferring land, in order that the cheapest possible facility may be afforded, not only for the transfer of land, but for the borrowing of money by the settlers in that new country in order to carry on the operation of farming. Sir, I believe to-day that if we had such a system in this country it would be one of the greatest inducements that we could possibly offer to English and

Mr. ORTON.

European immigrants, and would largely lead them to come to Canada instead of going to the States, by the assistance that would be afforded them from the operation of these banks, aided by the Government of Canada. I need not refer to the general benefits it would produce to all classes. We all know that depressions are brought about periodically through the failure of crops and the consequent inability of farmers to pay their tradesmen's accounts, and to pay the manufacturers for the agricultural implements they require. Now, Sir, if we could enable the farmers to borrow money at a reasonable rate of interest, to borrow only what they want and for a short period, they would be able to pay their store accounts and the manufacturers, and these periods of depression would be less frequent than they are now. Indeed our railways, our steamboat navigation, and every other interest in this country, would be materially benefited by the operation of such a banking system. And, Sir, it would relieve a great deal of the capital which is now loaned out by the capitalists of our own country to the farmers at exorbitant rates of interest, and wealthy men would then divert their capital to the development of our great natural resources in forests and mineral lands and fisheries. Well, Sir, it may be said that this would be unfair to our present banking institutions and to the traders who have gone into those institutions, and that it would be unfair towards the loan societies, I have been frequently told outside this House that it would be utterly impossible to get such a Bill passed through the Parliament of Canada from the fact that the influence of these great loan societies upon this House was so great. Now, Sir, I do not at all believe that such is the case. I believe we have to-day a very large number of independent members in this House;—indeed I do not think there is one hon. gentleman in this House who, if he could see clearly the way by which this great benefit could be secured, would not assist in passing this measure. I ask the House to give it earnest consideration, and I think that the fact that the operation of these banks elsewhere has been a success is a guarantee that if the question is only undertaken by us fairly and with a determination to bring about the same good result, we shall be able to formulate a Bill that will secure, in a large degree, the objects sought for by the Bill which I intend to introduce, based upon this motion. With reference to our banks and its effect upon them, I see nothing to prevent them establishing branches, or farmers' banks, in connection with the parent institutions, which would equally promote trade and commerce. It is not intended to injure these banks, but I believe on the other hand that the measure would have a beneficial effect upon them, and would make their operation much safer than it is to-day, that we would have fewer failures, and fewer losses to regret in connection with our great banking institutions. As to the loan societies I think that the enormous rates of interest they charge are unfair and unjust. I do not think it is right or honest that legislation should be entirely in the interest of one class of our people. We all know that these loan societies have been declaring dividends, for a number of years past, of 10 and 12 per cent.; they have increased their stock and become immensely wealthy. That wealth, Sir, has been extorted from the industrious population of this country, from the men who earn their bread by the sweat of their brow, and I think the time has arrived when a more equitable system should prevail. I do not think this objection can for a moment be urged with any justice or fair play. We know, Sir, that these loan societies themselves borrow money at 4 per cent. We know that those land societies borrow money at 4 per cent., and that the credit banks in Europe are able with 1 per cent. to carry on their operations and pay all their expenses, including good salaries to managers and officials, and lay by one-half per cent. to redeem the bonds issued on those land debentures. They are paid off in a certain number of years by means of a sinking fund, and one-half per cent. enables the amount to be paid in 66 years. When such facilities can be offered elsewhere, there is no reason why the Government should not endeavor to afford similar facilities to the people of this country. There is one little difficulty, to which I desire to refer. So long as the banks of Canada are allowed to use their own circulation, difficulty will certainly arise, simply from the fact that the banks will accumulate Dominion of Canada notes and call upon the Government to redeem them. But notwithstanding the circumstances that those banks have the privilege extended to them for ten years, I think the people of the Dominion could well afford to pay them, if necessary, what is fair and proper for their relinquishment of that privilege, and thereby bring about a system of banking under which all the circulation would be by Dominion bank notes. We know the inconvenience and difficulty experienced owing to bills of banks in different Provinces being in circulation and the loss that is sustained by it. Only the other day I had occasion to use a $50 note of the Bank of British Columbia. I was advised that before I could get that bill cashed, I would have to pay 5 per cent. We should not be compelled to suffer such loss, and men in business must suffer loss almost every day in consequence of the various banks issuing their own circulation. I wish to draw the attention of the Government to this matter, and I hope it will receive serious and careful consideration.

Mr. McMULLEN. I cannot very well understand why the hon. gentleman should have brought forward a motion of this kind at this particular period of the Session. It appears to me that as the hon. gentleman sits so close to the First Minister, he must have taken a hint from him that a general election is drawing nigh. He is taking a step in order to lay out his course when he goes before his constituents. The hon. member is very anxious evidently to do something in the interests of the agriculturists. So far as I am concerned, I am quite willing to second any effort in the way of providing greater facilities for farmers to borrow money and assist in carrying on the farming industry. I must, however, express my opinion that I do not very well understand how the system proposed can be successfully inaugurated. I am afraid that very few farmers would be found willing to place a first mortgage on their farms in order to become stockholders of a bank. That bank would no doubt lend out money, and risks would have to be undertaken and losses would be made, and those farmers who were the back-bone of the institution would inevitably be called on to make up a certain percentage of the losses. I do not think the hon. gentleman would be able to secure the confidence of the farming community in favor of such an institution as he proposes. If it can be established, and if it will give farmers money at reduced rates, I make no objection. I was glad to hear the hon. gentleman admit that the farming industry is after all, the principal industry of this Dominion. He admitted that when we have bad crops and low prices we have poor times. I was very glad to hear that expression of opinion and I hope it expressed the entire sentiment of hon. gentlemen opposite. We know that a short time ago a great effort was made to build up, encourage and carry on manufactures, and that the farming interest was largely overlooked. It was not considered when the National Policy was inaugurated that the farmers would have to pay largely increased prices for what they purchased. They have realised that they have been paying more, and they do not now stand in as good a financial position as they did some years ago. I think the facilities possessed by farmers for borrowing money have been perhaps too great. I believe the credit system of the Dominion has done more to pauperise the farming community and the laboring classes generally than any system that could possibly be inaugurated, and if thirty or forty years ago we had passed a very stringent Homestead Act and Usury Law, as was suggested by William Lyon Mackenzie, I believe this country would have been in a better financial position than it occupies to day. The hon. gentleman stated that the banks generally are not anxious to lend money to farmers. Such is not the fact. Endorsements sought after are especially those of farmers. We generally find that if a good responsible farmer wants to borrow money and his neighbor wants a little money at the same time, they can get accommodation, and at reasonable rates; I believe quite as reasonable as those for commercial purposes. I know there are banks almost exclusively engaged in banking operations with farmers. I am satisfied that a farmer can borrow money at present on good farm paper at 7 or perhaps $7\frac{1}{2}$ per cent. The hon. gentleman has stated that if his system were inaugurated they would be able to borrow money at 5 per cent. I frankly admit that I would like to see the rate of money reduced; but in my opinion a step in the direction of providing cheaper money for farmers and also for business men generally would be secured if the hon. member would induce the Government to reduce the interest paid on money at the savings banks, rather than by any other course. The Government pay 4 per cent. on deposits in Dominion Savings Banks, and it costs even more, as I understand from the accounts that the Government pay a certain commission. If instead of 4 per cent. the rate were made 3 per cent., a very large sum of money at present held by the Government would pass into the hands of the banks; they would lend it to farmers, whereas at the present time the Government use all the money they get from that source. I understand they have from \$24,000,000 to \$26,000,000 in their hands as deposits in the Dominion Savings Banks, and it is all used. The banks have it not, and consequently they cannot extend accommodation and reduce the rate of interest to the extent they otherwise would do. The Government have been practically competing with the banks, and they are largely responsible for keeping up the rate of interest. I repeat that if the Government would reduce the interest on savings by 1 per cent., they would reduce the interest charged by banks to farmers, merchants and manufacturers. This is a desirable end to secure, and I should be glad to see the hon. member use his influence with the Government in that direction. He would thus accomplish something for the farmers and for the manufacturers in the direction of securing for them cheaper money. I should like to see the Bill. Last year the hon. gentleman made a motion in the direction of introducing this Bill, but it never came before a Committee. I hope it will reach Committee this Session, and if it secures justice, and there is a probability of its being carried, I trust it will become law. I should be glad to see any plan by which the rate of interest could be reduced to farmers, but I am much afraid that the matter is introduced at the present time just in order to give the hon. gentleman a chance of airing his sympathies for the farmers in the section of country from which he hails, and that this year it will meet with the same fate that it did last year. It will accomplish this much at any rate, that he will be able to return to his constituents and say to them: Gentlemen, do you see what I have been trying to do for you; I have been trying to reduce the rate of interest, but I could not get my Bill through. If the hon. gentleman will turn his attention in another direction, and try to get the interest reduced on Government deposits, and thus reduce the rate of interest in the other banks, it seems to me that he will accomplish a great deal more than by his present course.

Mr. HESSON. As I represent an agricultural county in this House I may be permitted a few words in reply to my

hon. friend from North Wellington (Mr. McMullen). I quite sympathise with the spirit and purpose of the resolution, as I presume every hon. gentleman will, if he is honestly in sympathy, as he should be, with the agricultural community of Canada. The hon. member who has just taken his seat has asserted that he is in favor of some movement whereby the rate of interest may be reduced to farmers, and I presume to others as well. He has certainly gone a good way round to secure that end when he says that the best movement would be one to reduce the rate of interest paid by the Government for Post Office and Savings Banks deposits. Let every banker, let every hon. gentleman take home with him this reflection, that the depositors in these savings banks, and in the Post Office Savings Banks especially, are all the working men of Canada, and that these institutions are especially adapted for the use of the laboring classes and poor people of the country. My hon. friend would begin his reduction in the first instance by a plan by which the poor man would receive only 3 per cent. for his deposits instead of 4. That does not appear to me to be a good plan to set out with, if the hon. gentleman is honestly and sincerely desirous of seeing the rate of interest reduced to the farmer. The poor men who deposit in these savings banks earn their wages perhaps during the summer time, and they deposit a portion regularly, from day to day, as a provision for a rainy day or the coming winter, and yet the hon. gentleman would withdraw that privilege from the laboring man and compel him to receive 3 per cent. for his deposits. I am rather surprised that an hon. gentleman, who, like myself, has the pleasure and honor of representing an agricultural constituency, should suggest such a plan; but I believe he is more fortunate than some hon. members representing country constituencies, inasmuch as I am credibly informed that he occupies the position of a lender and not a borrower. Coming more particularly to the resolution before the House, I am sure it is one which should have the sympathy of all those who are desirous of seeing the farming interests of the country in a prosperous condition. There are times and seasons, as we all know, when we have distress, and we know also that the security which banks are accustomed to take is not the kind which farmers are in a position to give, and the result is that the accommodation which is given to business men, to merchants and traders, is not afforded to them, for the reason that the banks do not like to give these straight loans at long dates as the farmer usually requires them. The merchant, if he wants relief, borrows for a short period to meet his bills as they come due, whereas the farmer usually wants his money until his harvest comes in, and if his harvest fails then he may require it until the next harvest comes in. I say that if it is in the power of the House to consider and devise any means whereby this difficulty may be grappled with, and the farmer placed in a more easy position with reference to obtaining loans, it is surely the interests of this House and within the wisdom of this House, that a Committee should be appointed for the purpose of seeing if there is any possibility of devising a plan to meet this emergency. I do not know exactly what the Bill may be which the hon. gentleman may propose, but I know that there must be sufficient wisdom and intelligence in this House to devise a plan by which the farmer, who possesses the best security in the country, may be enabled to get his money at as good a rate of interest as any business man. I know that farmers have been refused such accommodation, and cases have frequently come within my own experience in which these men, because they could not get the accommodation at the banks, have been obliged to go elsewhere, perhaps to shaving institutions as they are called, and pay a large rate of interest because they cannot get the straight loans for long periods as they require. I feel keenly in this matter, because, although it may not be possible that we can devise a scheme when debating the resolution in this manner, yet if it were referred to a Special Committee I think they might be able to report a plan whereby that class of securities might be offered and a circulation provided by the Government which might be placed in the hands of reliable managers, who would take collateral security for loans and thus provide a relief for the agricultural community in this direction. I apprehend the difficulty which the Finance Minister will have to meet to provide for that circulation. I understand the difficulty he has with the present circulation, but I say here, sincerely and candidly, that I believe it is in the interests of the country to-day, whether it would be in the interests of the chartered banks or not, that the whole banking circulation of the country should be gradually but surely withdrawn, and substituted by Dominion notes. By the large opportunities and facilities which are afforded to the banks of circulating their own paper to an amount which now stands at $31,935,000, they are able to gather up the Dominion circulation coming into their hands, and come to the Finance Minister and demand specie every day in the week. This will go on increasing until the Government withhold from the banks the privilege of issuing their own circulation. I have pointed this out before, and I point it out again, as I believe it is the only true course to meet the difficulty, and remove the inconvenience and loss which arises from handling and making use of the different varieties of circulation. We should have only one issue, and that issue should be unexceptionable, well established and well endorsed by the Government. I am unwilling at this stage to take up the time of the House, but I hope the resolution will meet with fair play, and will be honestly considered by hon. gentlemen. There is not a word of it which should not meet with approbation on the floor of the House, and I think the proper plan is, in order to meet the requirements of the farmers and the people generally, to refer the matter to a committee where it may receive a fair and honest consideration. Should this Bill be introduced, of course I am prepared to support it if the provisions are such as will warrant its receiving the fair consideration of the House generally; but until I have the privilege of reading the Bill, I do not desire to go further.

Mr. ORTON. I was a little surprised at the manner in which my hon. friend from North Wellington (Mr. McMullen) alluded to me. He certainly did not show that kindly spirit which one would expect from a fellow countyman. He stated that my sole object in proposing this Bill was to gain popularity amongst my constituents. He certainly must feel, at any rate, that the step I have taken is one in the right direction, and a popular one; and if it should be the means of securing my election as a supporter of my right hon. friend, the Premier, at the next election, I shall feel all the prouder, because it will be the best thing that could happen to this country to have that right hon. gentleman again returned to power. I shall not ascribe motives to the hon. gentleman (Mr. McMullen), though I might, perhaps, be believed if I said that when he declared that the farmers of this country had already too great facilities for borrowing money, I thought that possibly he had in view some of the loans contracted in the County of Wellington. I believe what he says, and I shall not make such an assertion. I believe he wants the farmers to have money at 5 per cent, and I am satisfied that when he goes home, after expressing himself so eloquently, he will give the farmers of his neighborhood all the money they want at 5 per cent. interest. He is not very anxious that the laboring classes of this country should receive the just awards of their labor, and proposes to reduce interest in their savings. He does not seem quite so anxious to have the interest of capitalists reduced; but when men have worked hard and saved a few dollars to put in the savings banks of our country, he must urge on the Government to reduce the small rate of interest they are obtaining. I regret that such a suggestion should come from any gentleman from my county, which I believe is populated by a generous class of people, who desire to see all classes prosper.

Mr. CASEY. I think it would be quite out of place, as the hon. member for North Perth (Mr. Hesson) has just remarked, to discuss this Bill until we know what it is to be. As I understand, the only resolution we are now asked to concur in is that it is expedient to introduce some Bill on this subject, and the hon. gentleman who proposes that resolution supports his proposal by pointing out that the farmers are struggling, are hard up, and need further banking accommodation than they now get. Well, I have perhaps not quite so poor an opinion of the condition of the farmers as the hon. gentleman appears to have, but I consider it is a very strong admission to come from the father of the National Policy, so far as the farmers are concerned, that that policy is already such a failure in regard to the agricultural community that they must come to this House and ask the Government to lend them money at less than the ordinary rates; for that, Sir, so far as I understand it, is the meaning of this Bill. I do not think the country is in such a bad condition financially, that interest is so far above the rate it should be, that it is necessary for the Government to enter into the money lending business at all. But perhaps the hon. member will be able to prove to us that the country is in that wretched condition when we get into committee. However, there was one hint thrown out by the hon. member for North Wellington (Mr. McMullen) in regard to the motives of the hon. member who proposes this Bill, from which I deem it my duty to defend him. He appears to think that the hon. member intends to go home to his constituents covered with glory for having proposed this resolution. Well, I do not think he will go home to his constituents. He seems to have got out of the habit of going home to his constituents of late. He may go back to the Rocky Mountains in his position as medical officer of the Canadian Pacific Railway, covered with glory on account of this measure; but he will not go back to his constituents at present for that purpose. I hope the hon. gentleman is not gauging the condition of the farmers of Wellington, their needs and requirements, by what he has seen during his sojourn in the far west; and I hope when he does visit his constituents he will find them better off than he imagines them to be.

Mr. ORTON. I may state that the hon. gentleman is as far off as he was when he shot the cow instead of the barn door.

Mr. CAMERON (Middlesex). I do not pretend to understand the involved proposition submitted by the mover of this resolution, but I do say that there is a good deal in the question viewed from a common sense standpoint. As the representative of an agricultural constituency, knowing what their wants are, I am well aware that the difficulties a farmer experiences in many instances in approaching a chartered bank when it becomes necessary for him to do so are very great indeed. That the propositions laid down by the hon. gentleman in speaking to his motion, are a cure for this, I do not believe, and I think something of a much simpler character would meet the requirements of the farming community. It is my opinion that the securing of better facilities for establishing local banks throughout different sections of the country, where financial backing could be readily secured, is something that the Government or the Finance Minister might very well, in the interest of a very large number of the ratepayers of this country, give attention to. Within recent years the farming community have to an increased extent engaged in the production of cattle in preference to grain, the result of which has been that they require a much larger capital than was the case when they were largely grain producers; and if they stock their farms to the extent necessary, it follows in many cases that they have at some period of the year at least to go somewhere to borrow money. The chartered banks almost invariably refuse to give them the needed accommodation, and the result is that they are forced to find accommodation second-hand at rates that are necessarily high. Now, it seems to me, that if by any such simple means as I suggest, the establishment of local banks, and these afforded them that Government protection that would prevent the larger banks wiping them out after they are established, we should be granting the farmers that facility for obtaining the requisite money that is now denied. I do not know whether the experience of other sections of the country is the same as that of the section I represent; but I am well aware that there a farmer who owns 200 acres of land, representing a value of $10,000, may take a friend with him to obtain money on their joint endorsement, and the bank refuses it. In such cases and they are the rule rather than the exception, because the banks as is well known have a prejudice—a wrong and unwise prejudice, I believe, but still a prejudice—the farmer is ultimately driven to borrow the money from a neighbor or find it elsewhere at such rates as the lenders choose to exact. But the result almost invariably is that he is obliged to borrow that money at a much higher rate of interest than the bank professedly charges. If that is the experience, as it is to a very general extent, I hold that the subject of this resolution is one that deserves some consideration from this House. The Trade and Navigation Returns establish the fact that our cattle producing industry is a largely increasing one, and that last year it was the largest, as far as the value of exports went, in this country. Now we find that the policy of the Government has been, ostensibly, at any rate, to encourage the industries which tend to enrich this country. I would like to know whether there is any industry in Canada deserving of greater favor from the Government than the stock raising industry when properly attended to. My view of it is that every movement made heretofore has had the effect of hampering that industry and that our banking policy has increased that effect. We find that the manufacturing industries can obtain from the banks the capital necessary to carry on their enterprises; we find that the importers are largely aided by the opportunities offered them through the banks, and we find further that the present banking system is established on a principle under which the farmer is unable to borrow scarcely a dollar from these institutions. Such being the case, there is undoubtedly some reason for the resolution, and while I have no sympathy whatever with the involved remedy suggested by the hon. gentleman, a remedy which would be worse than the disease, because, as I understand it, every farmer who participates in the advantages of his scheme would be practically an endorser for every borrower. I believe that a measure which would afford facilities for the establishment of local banks under carefully considered provisions, and with such protection as would prevent their absorption by the larger banks, would confer a great deal of benefit indeed on one of our largest industries, and the one on which, after all, we have most to lean whenever additional revenue is required for the country. From my own local experience I know it to be the fact that in one of the two branch banks in the county in which I live the deposits amount to four times the discounts, and in the other the local deposits are more than sufficient to carry on the business of the institution. That being the case, it shows to my mind that there is no involved principle such as that suggested by the mover of this resolution required in order to find the means necessary to meet the wants of the farmers, who only require those facilities in our banking laws necessary to enable them to carry on their operations in the least burdensome way possible. I am satisfied if such be given, the interest charged to the farming community will be reduced below the rates they have now to pay, and that the cattle producing industry which is yearly increasing in importance in a large section of the Province of Ontario, at any rate, will be greatly fostered.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. It is refreshing to hear the speech of the hon. gentleman who spoke last. He addressed himself to the resolution before the House, but this cannot be said of the hon. gentleman who preceded him, one of whom told my hon. friend (Mr. Orton) in a rather unparliamentary way that his resolution was mere buncombe to deceive his constituents, another gentleman threw up to him the charge that he was going to leave his constituents to settle in the North-West and had therefore no more interest in them. The hon. member for North Wellington (Mr. McMullen) with arguments such as these opposes the resolution.

Mr. McMULLEN. No.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. He got up to throw ridicule upon him, said it was buncombe, that there was no necessity for it, that there were too great facilities already; or in other words that the farmers would be much better off if they had decreased facilities to get money. But he forgot that in the next sentence, and said that the true way to help the farmers would be for the Government to reduce the rate of interest in the savings banks and that money then would be more plentiful in the banks to lend. Which way does the hon. gentleman wish to have it? Does he wish money to be made easier by the Government robbing the servants and laboring men of 1 per cent. of their little savings? Or does he wish the farmers to have no greater facilities for borrowing, they being, according to his first statement, much better off without any additional facilities? The hon. member for West Middlesex (Mr. Cameron) stated what everybody knows that although by the banks the name of a farmer in good standing is considered good security, yet we all know the present banks are commercial institutions rather than mere lenders of money on real estate security or to persons who have only real estate to offer as security. The farmers are therefore driven to other means such as investment companies, loan and building societies, and so forth, rather than the banks as at present constituted. It seems to me my hon. friend (Mr. Orton) is taking a very proper course, as he tried to do last Session, in bringing this subject before Parliament. The hon. member for North Wellington (Mr. McMullen) said he would like to see the Bill, but if we oppose the resolution we cannot see the Bill. We must get the resolution first, and then we will have the Bill. We will then see if it will give reasonable protection to the public, to those who invest in agricultural banks as shareholders, and be able to judge whether it is not liable to the objections which have been taken by sound financiers to other measures dealing with similar subjects. If not, of course it ought to be encouraged. I shall vote for the resolution myself, and I have no doubt we will have an opportunity then of discussing the various theories propounded as well as the merits of the Bill itself. The hon. gentleman who last spoke proposed a system which has its merits, namely, to have local banks with small capitals. That would be one means of helping the different localities; there may be other means which we will have an opportunity of discussing when the measure is submitted to us. In the meantime I will support the resolution.

Mr. McMULLEN. I did not say I opposed the Bill. I said I will gladly support any Bill giving facilities to secure money at a cheaper rate by the farmers of this country, but I said that I was afraid this resolution was only buncombe and would result as fruitlessly as last year's. With regard to the reduction of interest my object in making this suggestion was that if the Government would reduce the interest, the money would naturally flow into the banks, and the banks be able to lend at a lower rate.

Resolution considered in Committee, reported, and concurred in.

Mr. ORTON introduced Bill (No. 36) to provide banking and loan facilities for those engaged in agricultural pursuits.

Bill read the first time.

MAIL SERVICE ON THE CANADA SOUTHERN RAILWAY.

Mr. WIGLE moved for:

Return showing the nature of the mail service on the Canada Southern Railway between Essex Centre and Amherstburg; also the annual amount paid to the Canada Southern Railway for mail service.

He said: The town of Amherstburg gave a bonus of $75,000 to the Canada Southern Railway when it was first built, with the understanding that the mail train was to cross at Amherstburg. Of late, however, these trains go off at Essex Centre and now there is only one train a day each way passing through Amherstburg, which is very inconvenient for the mail service in that town. This motion is made in order to draw the attention of the Government, and more especially of the Postmaster General, to the matter, in order that the town of Amherstburg may get more accommodation for its mail service.

Mr. CARLING. There is no objection to this return, and I can assure the hon. gentleman that every exertion will be made to secure the mail facilities between Essex Centre and Amherstburg which he desires.

Motion agreed to.

PAYMENTS TO H. J. MORGAN.

Mr. McCRAVEY moved for:

Statement of the various amounts of money paid by the Government of Canada, or any of the Public Departments since 1882 to Henry J. Morgan for services of any kind or for copies of a certain book called the "Annual Register," together with copies of the certificate of each public official to whom such books have been delivered.

He said: My object in asking for this return is to bring to the attention of the Government the question whether employes of the Government receiving large salaries and supposed to devote their whole time to the public service should be allowed to engage in publishing or any other business. It is well known to this House that it has been charged by the press of our country that the party named in this motion has, with other parties, received payment for books that were unnecessary, if they were delivered to the Government at all. I hope that, when the Civil Service Bill is brought down, the Government will provide that civil servants shall not engage in outside undertakings especially with the Government as their principal customer.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. There can be no objection to the motion, but I take exception to the line adopted by the hon. gentleman who moves it, because he intimates a desire that no civil servant shall be employed in any useful work, whether scientific or literary, but he must adhere to his office work only. I think it would be a very unfortunate thing for the status of our service if it were understood that no officer of the Government should devote himself to science or literature in his spare time, instead of amusing himself or doing nothing after office hours; that he should go home at four o'clock, eat his dinner, take his pipe, and smoke it. One of the books which has been a credit to Canada and has been immensely useful to the Parliament of Canada, and in fact to all the Colonial Parliaments, and has been quoted in the Parliament of England, is the work of our late Librarian, Dr. Todd, on Parliamentary Government. Then, consider the very valuable work prepared by our present Clerk, Mr. Bourinot, on the Practice of Parliament. Consider the great book on the Practice of Parliament, of which I do not know how many editions have been published, the last I think in 1883, by Sir Erskine May, the Clerk of the Commons in England, the great authority on matters of practice. Consider, also, the various works that have been prepared and published by a man who is a great philosopher, Mr. Gregg, who is at the head of the stationery office in England, and whose books, both for style and for clearness and value, are very noteworthy. He has left a standing reputation behind him. He is one of the great officers of England, and introduced a very economical mode of managing that large department, the stationery office. We cannot expect those gentlemen to employ themselves in that way and to publish their works at their own expense. If they publish valuable works, and if the head of their department is satisfied that the officer, whoever he may be, fully performs his duty like other officers, they should be encouraged in applying themselves to useful employment rather than to idleness or self-gratification.

Mr. McCRAANEY. I may say that I understand that the gentleman referred to does not write the books himself but he employs others to do it for him, and makes a speculation out of it.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. Then there can be no objection. If he employs others he does not do the work himself.

Motion agreed to.

VOTING ON THE CANADA TEMPERANCE ACT, 1878.

Mr. FISHER moved for :

Statement from the records of all the voting held in various counties and cities under the provisions of the Canada Temperance Act, 1878, showing by electoral districts and the various sub-divisions thereof, the total number of names on the electoral lists, the number of votes polled for the adoption of the Act, and the number of votes polled against the adoption of the Act, with the number of the population of each such electoral district at the time of the taking of the census preceding the vote in such electoral district.

He said: in consequence of having had my attention drawn to it, I would ask leave of the House to amend this notice by inserting after the figures "1878" the words "since the 1st of July, 1882." I trust this will tend to facilitate the bringing down of this return, and if the return is made up from that date to the present time, it will practically supply all the information we desire.

Mr. WHITE (Cardwell). I hope the hon. gentleman will not amend his motion. I see it reads in French since 1878, and in English it will be since 1882. I think we ought to have the returns from the first. It will not take much longer to do it, and I think we had better know exactly upon what vote the Scott Act has been adopted since it first passed this Parliament.

Mr. FISHER. My only object in making the amendment was to get the return more quickly. I thought that as regards the elections which took place between 1878 and 1882, the census returns would be so very far from the date of the election that we could not arrive at the actual percentage of population who voted, nor could we satisfactorily ascertain the relation of the number of voters to the whole population.

Mr. WHITE (Cardwell). The census has really less to do with it than the number of voters, and the number of voters is not given in the census at all. We could get the number of voters by the returns of 1878 just about as well. If we leave it at 1878 there will be no difficulty in getting the returns.

Mr. FISHER. If the House prefers that the whole returns should be made, I have not the slightest objection. I only wished to get them sooner.

Motion, as originally proposed, agreed to.

TIMBER LICENSES IN THE NORTH-WEST.

Mr. CHARLTON moved for :

1. The total number of licenses or permits granted since March 15th, 1883, up to February 1st, 1885, to cut timber, saw logs, telegraph poles, railroad ties and cordwood, within the territory lately in dispute between the Provinces of Manitoba and Ontario, and also within the territory in dispute between Ontario and the Dominion of Canada.
2. The name and residence of each grantee, the term over which the license of grant extends; whether the license or permit is for cutting and removing timber, saw logs, telegraph poles, railroad ties, or cordwood, and date of the license or permit.
3. The geographical location of the area covered by each license or permit issued, and the number of square miles embraced in each.
4. The amount of bonuses or premiums received upon each, and the aggregate amount of the same.
5. Full particulars as to the Crown dues or stumpage charged or chargeable upon each license or permit issued, as to whether by percentage of value or specific charges, and the aggregate amount of revenue derived from the same.
6. A statement or case of each license or permit issued, as to whether the Government had caused a survey to be made of the same, and was in possession of estimates made by its own surveyors, woodsmen or bushrangers, as to the kinds, the quantity and the quality of timber upon each area covered by such license or permit.
7. Whether in each case where a license or permit was granted, the berth was put up at public auction after due public notice was given inviting tenders, and was sold to the highest bidder, or whether granted upon application or tender from the the grantee without inviting public competition.
8. In case of application by two or more parties for the same berth, and competition between them for the purchase of the same, the name and residence of each applicant and the particulars of the tender made by each.
9. Copies of all claims, petitions, remonstrances or communications made to the Government respecting such permits or licenses and the action of the Government thereon; also, a copy of all maps and plans showing the location and areas of such licenses or permits.
10. A minute of all assignments of such licenses or permits recorded with the Government, with the names and residence of the assignor and the assignee, and the consideration in each case paid.

I may say to the First Minister, with respect to this motion, that an order has already been granted by the House covering the whole of the area over which timber licenses have been issued. This is for the disputed territory, and the present motion is necessary.

Motion agreed to.

CANADIAN PACIFIC RAILWAY—SECTION B.

Mr. CASEY moved for :

Copy of the report of the engineers appointed to re-measure and re-classify the work on section B Canadian Pacific Railway, in connection with the claim of the contractors for said section for increased remuneration for such work, and for damages.

Also, all reports of the engineers in charge of said section, or of the Engineer-in-Chief, or any other Government engineer, in reference to the questions of measurement, classification or damages, at issue between the Government and the contractors.

As to my reasons for making this motion, I may say that we were informed by Sir Charles Tupper last Session that the contractors for this work had been making constant complaints as to the manner in which they were treated by the Government engineer in charge of the contract. It was asserted—I believe it is a fact—that that engineer had been promised by Order in Council a bonus of a certain percentage on any saving he might effect in the cost of that contract below the contract price, and the contractors used this as an argument to show that he had reason for treating them unfairly, and that he had treated them unfairly. I believe that accusation to have been ill-founded as against the engineer in question. I have the authority of Sir Charles Tupper himself for saying it was ill-founded, for he tells us that Mr. Jennings had at all times his confidence and that of the Engineer-in-Chief. He repeated that statement on several occasions, and gave further evidence of his sincerity in making it by recommending Mr. Jennings as a trustworthy and able engineer to his friend Mr. Onderdonk, who has a large contract on another part of the railway in British Columbia. Yet in the face of all those facts, Mr. Manning, one of the contractors, wrote to the Globe and Mail, asserting that they had demanded the removal of Mr. Jennings from that work because he was treating them unfairly, and that the Government had removed him in consequence of their demand and sent him to British Columbia. I asked Sir Charles Tupper last Session whether he could authoritatively deny that statement. He replied that he had been perfectly satisfied with Mr. Jennings, and told us of the subsequent recommendation to which I have already alluded; but he said he could not give a definite denial on this point, because Mr. Jennings' removal took place in his absence, and when the Minister now in charge was Acting Minister of Railways. I now ask from the Minister himself, who is conversant with all the facts, no doubt, whether he can give an authoritative denial to that statement. It is a very grave charge, to be made public, that the Government dismissed an engineer on the demand of contractors. As Sir Charles Tupper said last Session, he generally found engineers like Mr. Jennings were not those who got along smoothly with contractors—those were his own words—that engineers like Mr. Jennings who honestly and faithfully discharged their duties towards the Government do not get along smoothly with contractors. Mr. Jennings did not get along smoothly with these contractors. It is quite certain that his removal was demanded; it is quite certain his removal took place; but whether it took place in consequence of the demand, it is for the Minister to say. I hope the hon. gentleman will be able to clear the Department from the reproach which has hung over it for over a year and a-half, of having removed an engineer because he was too honest to suit the contractors. Subsequent to the removal of Mr. Jennings, two other engineers, Messrs. Donkin and Bell, were sent to section B, to re-measure and re-classify the work done by the contractors. I may remind the House that the question at issue was more one of classification than of measurement. The contractors claimed that certain excavation done by them should be classed as loose rock instead of earth, and that other work should be classified as rock instead of loose rock, and so on; and unfortunately the terms of the contract were not such as to afford definite means of deciding between the claims of the contractors and those of the engineer in charge. The contract did not specify with sufficient distinctness how certain work was to be classified, and the classification was made from time to time by the engineer in charge, under directions received from his superior, the Engineer-in-Chief at Ottawa, and was made in opposition to the claims of the contractors that the work should be classified otherwise. Whether the engineer or the contractor was right, one thing is certain that the occurrence of this dispute between the Government and the contractors was due to blameable looseness in the original framing of the contract and to the carelessness of the Minister controlling the Railway Department in 1879, when the contract was let, in not seeing that more definite specifications were inserted and strictly adhered to. As this question of classification was referred to the arbitration which subsequently took place, the report of the engineers, Messrs. Donkin and Bell, is necessary that we may see how far it agrees with the conclusions ultimately reached by the arbitrators. I ask for all reports of the engineers in charge of said section or of the Engineer-in-Chief or any other Government engineer, in reference to the questions at issue between the Government and the contractors. The question of the damages referred to is a very loose one, which I will say more about on a subsequent motion; but it is interesting, important and necessary to know what the engineers have advised the

Government from time to time in reference to this matter, in order that we may be able to judge as to the course pursued by the Government in regard to the arbitration.

Mr. POPE. There is not the slightest objection to bringing down all the reports of the engineer, excepting such as are confidential, and the report of the Engineer-in-Chief will, of course, be brought down. One word with respect to Mr. Jennings. I believe he always had the confidence of the Chief Engineer and of the Minister, and it was only when the work was nearly completed, when there was little for him to do here, when the services of an able man were required in British Columbia, that we made arrangements by which the work should be handed over to another engineer, and Mr. Jennings was sent to British Columbia, where there was a large amount of work to be done and where they had every confidence that he would do it. That is the reason for the change. I will get the returns, so far as they can be got, excepting those which are confidential.

Mr. CASEY. Does the hon. gentleman consider the report of Mr. Donkin and Mr. Bell confidential?

Mr. POPE. Any report is confidential which is got for the purpose of informing the Minister, and it would be a great mistake for the Department to give such reports as are understood, when they are sent in, to be only for the purposes of the Department and the information of the Chief Engineer. Beyond that they will be brought down.

Mr. CASEY. The hon. gentleman is not answering my question. I asked him definitely if the report of Mr. Donkin and Mr. Bell is one of those which he would consider confidential.

Mr. POPE. I will look it up and see.

Mr. CASEY. There are many things which the hon. gentleman will have to look up and see. He has gone quite astray in one explanation he gave to-day, as to the reasons for Mr. Jennings' removal, and he has neglected to give an authoritative denial when I asked him if it was for certain reasons. I ask him if it was at the demand of Mr. Manning that—

Mr. POPE. It was not.

Mr. CASEY. We have at last got that information out of the hon. gentleman, after a long struggle. I struggled with Sir Charles Tupper part of one evening last Session, and with the hon. gentleman for part of one evening, and at last he has given the answer, in a faint and half-hearted fashion. The explanation does not, however, accord with the facts, and I must conclude that his memory has failed him in that respect. He says that Mr. Jennings was removed because his services were particularly required in British Columbia, whereas Sir Charles Tupper told us it was because the work on section B was so small that another could take charge of them.

Mr. POPE. I have just said so.

Mr. CASEY. Mr. Jennings was sent out in the autumn of 1882—September, I believe—to British Columbia, to do this important work, and he remained there till about Christmas, or in all about three months. He came home on account of illness in his family, and he was not required after that time, and though for months he kept asking to be sent back to British Columbia, they found no work for him to do there. The hon. gentleman will have to look into that explanation again before he concludes that he has been correctly informed. As to the withholding of confidential reports, or as to what reports should be considered confidential, I am not sufficiently versed in the ways of the Department of Railways to say what has been the custom, but I am inclined to think that the hon. Minister is disposed, from his conduct the other night, to construe that class of reports rather too widely. I fear that in this case he will eliminate everything which is interesting to the House and the country, those things for the purpose of getting which I have moved the resolution—those very things which the House has a right to get and which are required to enable one to judge as to whether the conduct of the Government with regard to this arbitration has been judicious and proper.

Mr. MACKENZIE. What position did Mr. Jennings receive in British Columbia?

Mr. POPE. He was removed to one of the engineers in Mr. Onderdonk's contract. It was a very important position, the duties of which were just beginning when his work here was nearly done.

Mr. MACKENZIE. Was he in charge of an under contract?

Mr. POPE. No.

Mr. MACKENZIE. Was his position subordinate?

Mr. POPE. He was under Mr. Smith.

Mr. MACKENZIE. Of course; they were all under him.

Mr. POPE. He had charge under Mr. Smith.

Mr. MACKENZIE. He was next to Mr. Smith?

Mr. POPE. That was the intention. The hon. gentleman will understand that I cannot speak by the book as to any particular position he occupied, because he was sent there by Sir Charles Tupper.

Mr. CASEY. Sir Charles Tupper says he was sent there by the hon. gentleman.

Mr. POPE. He says no such thing. But I will get the information.

Mr. MACKENZIE. Of course there is no use asking any further questions. If the hon. gentleman does not know we need not ask. With regard, however, to confidential reports, I hope the hon. gentleman will not consider reports with regard to measurements and classification of material as confidential reports.

Mr. BLAKE. It seems to me that a report which states the facts for the information of the Minister, and not opinions as to the character and conduct of persons—reports of investigations which the engineers are instructed to make, as to the facts of the case, the classification of materials, &c., cannot be regarded as confidential. With reference to the circumstances under which Mr. Jennings went to British Columbia, we are in great mystery. If my hon. friend from Elgin (Mr. Casey), be correct, the Minister of Railways stated last Session that he could not tell, because it was the Acting Minister who sent him there during his absence. To-day, when the Acting Minister, in the absence of Sir Charles Tupper, is Acting Minister in the absence of any Minister at all, he tells us that Sir Charles Tupper sent him. Sir Charles Tupper could not speak by the book last Session because the hon. gentleman had sent Mr. Jennings to British Columbia; now, the hon. gentleman cannot speak by the book because, he says, he was sent by Sir Charles Tupper.

Mr. POPE. I do speak by the book, so far as leaving here was concerned. His work here was nearly completed, it could be done without him, and it did not require his services. It was understood, while I was acting, that he would go to British Columbia and take an important position there on an important work. What instructions he had after that Sir Charles Tupper gave him, and I am not prepared to say what they were, because I do not carry these things in my book; but I will ascertain and let the hon. gentleman know.

Motion agreed to.

CANADIAN PACIFIC RAILWAY—CONSTRUCTION BETWEEN PORT ARTHUR AND WINNIPEG.

Mr. CASEY moved for:

Statement of sums paid to the Canadian Pacific Railway Company, up to date, for construction on those portions of the Canadian Pacific Railway between Port Arthur and Winnipeg, the contract for which has been transferred to them from the original contractors, with dates of payment; also copies of estimates on which such payments have been made, showing quantities and rates.

He said: I have to urge that there is a very particular reason for asking for a detailed statement of these payments. I find that on September 28th, 1883, Auditor General McDougall wrote Mr Bradley, of the Railway Department, asking for a copy of the agreement under which a certain certificate for $136,000 to the Canadian Pacific Railway was made out. Mr. Bradley referred him to the Order in Council of July 9th previous, and a letter from Mr. Van Horne, as constituting together the only agreement under which this money was to be paid. I propose to call your attention to the vague nature of that agreement. On October 4th, he wanted further a statement showing that the work remaining undone on the line would cost at least $926,000, the sum stated on the agreement, and pointed out that it was specially necessary to get that Order in Council, because it was not work done under contract in the usual way. He said:

"I should be glad to have a statement showing that the work left undone on the line would cost at least $926,000. I think it important to get this information, as the work was given without tenders having been called for."

Now, Sir, I find, as a matter of fact, that not only were no tenders called for, but no specifications were made and no particulars agreed upon between the Government and the company, so far as I can find, as to what the work was to be, except in regard to a very few details. I must trouble you with a few extracts from the correspondence and the Order in Council, to try and show what the agreement really was. I confess I have not been able myself to form a very clear idea of what was to be done under this agreement, and I doubt if the Minister had any clear idea. In fact, it seems to have been one of those curious contracts between the Government and the Canadian Pacific Railway Company which the company are able to interpret most favorably to themselves, and in regard to which the Government do not seem to have any chance of contending with them before any tribunal. The secretary of the company, on the 17th of May, 1883, writes:

"Referring to the negotiations which have been lately taking place, with a view to the reception by this company of the Thunder Bay branch, from Rat Portage to Prince Arthur's Landing, I am instructed by the directors of this company to state, that while the company are prepared to take over this portion of the railway and equip and operate it, they have not as yet had time to complete the examination of it, as to the extent to which it has been completed, or to which its condition would meet the requirements of the contract between the Government and the company.

"In order, therefore, to prevent any misconstruction hereafter, as to the position of the company in assuming possession of this portion of the railway, I am instructed to say that it will be taken over by the company, under express reserve of the rights of the company to have it completed in all respects in conformity with the contract, to the same extent as if the company were not now undertaking its operation.

"I am further instructed to state that the company have reason to believe that its condition and state of preparation are open to all the objections contained in their letter to the Department of Railways and Canals, under date the 2nd of February, 1882, with reference to the line between Telford and Rat Portage. In addition to the points suggested in that letter, and without relinquishing any right of the company in respect of any matter not designated here, I would indicate various timber trestles across water stretches, which, in the opinion of the company, would require to be filled, in whole or in part, to conform to the spirit of the contract; and it is probable, also, that timber work of various bridges require renewal, from decay having taken place since such work was constructed."

He seems to have had a lower opinion of the work done on that part of the line than the hon. Minister had the other day. He goes on:

"Without further specifying details in which the company believe the work is undoubtedly incomplete, I have only to repeat that in assuming this portion of the railway, the company do so under express reserve, not only of their rights in respect to the matter referred to above, and in their former letter, but also of all other matters in connection with this section, which they would be entitled by their contract to have adjusted if they had awaited the entire completion of the work before taking possession of it."

This letter goes on to refer to details in regard to which there was apparently nothing put in writing; but we find a letter from Mr. VanHorne, of the 3rd of July, to the Acting Minister of Railways, in which he says:

"Owing to the necessity of immediate action, no details were agreed upon (between him and the Government), except that so much of the work as was covered by the contract of Manning, McDonald, McLaren & Co. should be completed by the company at contract prices, less 15 per cent., which had been allowed the contractors for preliminary work. This work was all included in what is known as contract 42."

He then goes on to point out that contracts 41, 25 and 13 were also incomplete, that several stations and side tracks, &c., were wanted along the line between section B and Winnipeg, that some 19,000 or 20,000 feet of side track, 25 station buildings, 27 section houses, 2 engine sheds and turn-tables, and 20 tanks were required. He also makes vague statements to the effect that a large amount of ballasting would be required, that ties were decaying and required renewal, and that the line, in short, though not yet completed, needed considerable repairs, and that some new work would have to be done to conform it to the company's standard, instead of the low standard which had been latterly established by the Government. He said:

"It is already apparent that many difficult and embarrassing questions will arise in connection with the final completion of the railway; and, with a view to avoiding these, and to securing the completion of the line and buildings in conformity with the standards of the company, which, in most cases, differ from those of the Government, the company desire to propose to relieve the Government of the entire work for a lump sum."

Mr. VanHorne puts the case very neatly. "In order to avoid all embarrassing questions that might arise in connection with the final completion of the railway," he offers to take it for a lump sum—in order to avoid any embarrassing questions as to the proper cost of what he had taken, whether it was at contract prices or not, I suppose. He proposes to simplify the matter, and he says:

"The company will undertake, for the sum of $940,000, to complete in a first-class manner the entire line from Selkirk to Winnipeg, and provide all sidings and all depots, section houses, engine sheds, and all other usual and necessary structures, and make all renewals of ties and bridges, and do all other necessary work."

And so on. These are the only specifications, I think. The line is to be completed in a first-class manner. And what is a first-class manner? In an Order in Council adopted by the Government, the work is to be completed to the satisfaction of the Chief Engineer; there is no other definition of what a first-class manner is. It is all left to the option of the Chief Engineer, and we have found before that that gentleman was not hard to satisfy. He was satisfied, if I remember rightly, after an inspection of a few hours of the Canadian Pacific Railway Company's books at Montreal, that all the expenditures of the past few years had been proper, and were devoted to the objects intended; and he so reported to the Government. It was not hard to satisfy him then, and I do not suppose it would be with regard to the final completion of this road. At all events, there is no absolute standard by which the manner of completing the road is to be tried. At the close of his letter, Mr. VanHorne explains that the additional 15 per cent. deducted from the payment to contractors for preliminary work would bring up his offer to the sum of $981,000, instead of the sum of $940,000, first mentioned. The next day the Chief Engineer reported that he had made a calculation of what the cost of the work would be, and he agreed approximately with Mr. VanHorne's estimate. I find next a memorandum, dated the 5th of July, of the hon. Minister of Agriculture, then acting as Minister of Railways, advising the acceptance of Mr. VanHorne's offer, but he states the sum at $926,000 instead of $981,000. I hope the hon. gentleman will take a note of these figures and explain how this discrepancy arose. It turns out that by the acceptance of this offer from Mr. VanHorne the only safeguard contained in the first agreement between the Government and the company, viz., that the remainder of the work on section B was to be finished at contract prices, is taken away. Instead of forcing them to finish at those rates and do the other work at a lump sum, it is proposed to do the whole work at a lump sum, no amount being fixed for any particular part of the work. And there is, as I have said in a former debate, no specification of what has to be done, no appropriation of any part of the money for any particular work, no price agreed upon for such work as is done. The Chief Engineer is to make a report, from time to time, as to how much is done. On what scale of prices he is to base his report I cannot imagine, because he has nothing to go by as to the price of the work done, although it is his certificate which entitles the company to payment. I find that certificates which are brought down amongst the papers contain no allusion to details at all. The company intimate from time to time that they require a little money, the engineer certifies that a certain lump sum is due on the work, and the company are paid. It is for that reason I want to get copies of the estimates on which such payments have been made, showing the quantities and rates. It appears from a subsequent letter of Mr. VanHorne that there was an agreement with the Government, of which I find no trace but this letter. This agreement was to the effect that the company could take over the rolling stock at a valuation. I find that valuers were agreed on by the company and the Government, who valued the rolling stock at $185,000, leaving the sum of $740,000 still due the company. Now it will be remembered also that Sir Charles Tupper estimated, in a speech of last year on this item, in Supply, the total amount remaining to be done to finish this contract—the contract for section B—$359,800, leaving, out of the $966,000, a balance of $607,800 to be paid to the company for work outside the completion of section B. I should like the hon. Minister to explain how this estimate of the value of that work was arrived at.

Motion agreed to.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. This being a wild night, I will not ask the House to meet again, but move that we adjourn.

Mr. CHARLTON. I think that we might sit to-night and get through the Order paper, and adjourn to-morrow night instead, so as to give hon. members an opportunity of enjoying the reading of the famous humorist, Mark Twain.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. The House, of course, will judge to-morrow, as to whether it will cut the Session in twain or not, but this being such a wild night, I think we had better adjourn.

Motion agreed to, and the House adjourned at 6:10 p.m.

Motion agreed to.

ADJOURNMENT—ASH WEDNESDAY.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD moved that when the House adjourns this day, it do stand adjourned until Thursday next at three o'clock.

Motion agreed to.

CONTAGIOUS DISEASES AFFECTING ANIMALS.

Mr. POPE moved for leave to introduce Bill (No. 44) respecting infectious or contagious diseases affecting animals.

Mr. BLAKE. Explain.

Mr. POPE. The Bill is a consolidation, with certain amendments which are required to the existing Act, the better to enable it to be carried out, but without altering the principle in the slightest degree. The amendments are pretty numerous, but are of no importance so far as the principle of the Bill is concerned.

Motion agreed to, and Bill read the first time.

DUTIES OF JUSTICES OF THE PEACE.

Mr. TUPPER moved for leave to introduce Bill (No. 41) to amend the Act respecting duties of Justices of the Peace, in relation to summary convictions.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Explain.

Mr. TUPPER. This Bill is introduced for the purpose of amending the 53rd section of chapter 31, relating to summary convictions before Justices of the Peace, so that the form contained in the schedule of that Act shall conform to the 53rd section. At present, considerable difficulty often arises owing to Justices of the Peace following the form prescribed in the Act, and in doing so including in the conviction the words:

"Unless the said sums and the cost and charges of conveying the said prisoner to the said common gaol shall be sooner paid."

The section under which that conviction is made does not provide any express words for that part of the conviction, and accordingly it has been held, and is laid down in the books, that the conviction can be quashed on the ground of the Act not directing explicitly that these words shall appear. Either the form or the section ought to be amended. I propose to amend the section.

Motion agreed to, and Bill read the first time.

BANKRUPTCY AND INSOLVENCY.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN, in the absence of Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD, moved:

That all the Petitions presented to this House on the subject of bankruptcy and insolvency be referred to the Select Committee on those subjects.

Motion agreed to.

CENSUS COMMISSIONERS AND ENUMERATORS.

Mr. POPE moved:

That the report of Committee of the Whole on certain proposed resolutions respecting the rates and allowances to certain census commissioners and enumerators, be received, and that the said resolutions be read the second time.

Mr. BLAKE. The hon. gentleman was not here when the discussion took place on the resolutions. It was then arranged that, on the reception of the report, the hon. gentleman would modify the resolutions by introducing maximum rates. If not advised of this, he had better defer the order.

Mr. POPE. I did not hear anything of that kind, nor do I think it could well be done. In the first place, we did establish a maximum rate for the census commissioners, $4 per day, and a maximum rate for the enumerators, $3 per day, made up in different ways—so much per mile, so much per family, &c. Notwithstanding that, and notwithstanding the fact that it was the rule adopted in the larger Provinces we found when we got into the Territories and British Columbia that people would not take the census at maximum rates, although in Manitoba we had no difficulty, as a rule. Although these are my maximum rates at this moment, I must be at liberty to pay enough to enable me to get men to do the work in places where these rates will not suffice. The difficulty in paying as they do in the United States, so much per head for every man, woman and child enumerated is this, that you give a bonus to the enumerators to inscribe more people than there really are. Speaking with a gentleman conversant with this subject, in Washington, last spring, he told me that there were really more people enumerated in the United States than the country had through this system of paying so much per head.

Mr. BLAKE. This shows the difficulty of proceeding with a measure in the absence of the Minister who is responsible for it. In this case he appears not to have had his attention directed to the discussion which took place during his absence, when the proposition was suggested from this side of the House that maximum rates should be established, and wherein closing the discussion, the hon. the First Minister said :

"These resolutions are merely to fix the rate of remuneration, and they in no way pledge the House, except as to this point, especially when the proposition of the leader of the Opposition is carried into effect, and a maximum is stated."

My proposal was that the Bill should contain the maximum rates but when we come to the discussion the hon. gentleman dissents from that view, and gives reasons, more or less valid, which, he says, render it imprudent that maximum rates should be stated.

Mr. POPE. The hon. gentleman does not want me to do an impossibility.

Mr. BLAKE. I do not want the hon. gentleman to perform an impossibility. There are a great many possibilities that he is quite unable to perform, and I would not be so unreasonable as to ask him to go further. I am discussing the question as it was understood to be settled on the last occasion; of course, if the House is satisfied by the argument of the hon. gentleman, that within a certain portion of our territory and under certain circumstances, exceptional rates have to be paid, that may be a reason for relaxing a wholesome rule and allowing the hon. gentleman the latitude he desires in those portions. The hon. gentleman has stated with reference to the Province of Manitoba, that he has no difficulty in fixing a maximum. Why not fix it for that Province and make an exception for the cases which necessitate one? If there be a portion of the North-West Territories in which it is impossible to fix the rates, let us give discretion to the hon. Minister limited to that region and to the circumstances which render it necessary to give that discretion. It seems to me, after the understanding reached in the hon. gentleman's absence, that he is called upon on this occasion, unless there be some overruling necessity to the contrary, to fix a maximum rate where he can.

Mr. POPE. I did not speak for all Manitoba but for the thickly settled parts. If I were to fix a maximum for taking the whole of the census, I should have to fix it at a price that would place me in an awkward position in dealing with places where the census ought to be taken at a lower rate. I say that the maximum rate will be $3 per day, calculated as I have before said, for the enumerators, and $4 a day for the commissioners. From that I will have to vary considerably in some parts of Manitoba and the North-West and in British Columbia. This is the same course as that taken last Session when I do not think any one complained that we gave too much, though there were many complaints that we did not give enough. In fact, I doubted myself sometimes whether I was not inclined to be a little too economical in that case.

Mr. BLAKE. Of course if the hon. gentleman determines to depart from the understanding of the other day, and without reason or cause refuses to fix a maximum rate which his colleagues actually declared was reasonable, in so far as it could be done, we know our position in this House and are powerless to resist him.

Motion agreed to, and resolutions read the second time.

SECOND READING.

Bill (No. 21) to provide for the taking of a Census in the Province of Manitoba, the North-West Territories and the District of Keewatin.—(Mr. Pope.)

Mr. BLAKE.

INSURANCE ACT, 1879, AMENDMENT.

Sir LEONARD TILLEY moved that Bill (No. 20) to modify the application of "The Consolidated Insurance Act, 1879," be read the second time.

Mr. BLAKE. Explain.

Sir LEONARD TILLEY. As the House is aware, this is a Bill introduced for the purpose of amending the Insurance Act of 1879. Under the operation of that Act, no organisation or company giving insurance under the assessment principle was allowed to transact business in the Dominion of Canada, unless it deposited $50,000. A number of associations have come into existence since that Act was passed. I may mention the Foresters, the United Order of Workmen, an organisation of the Masonic body, a large number of Roman Catholic organisations in different parts of the Dominion, especially in Ontario and Quebec, the Odd-fellows, the Sons of Temperance, the Commercial Travellers' Association, the Grangers, the Civil Service organisation, and others that practically, under the operation of the law, have been acting in violation of its conditions and provisions. There have also been representatives of associations and companies in the United States, who have been issuing policies, receiving money and taking risks upon the same principle since that period. It was found exceedingly difficult to take legal action against one of these without treating all who had, under the strict provisions of the law, violated it, in the same way, and there were many reasons why the Government thought that fraternal organisations such as I have named, that were incorporated either by the Local Legislatures or the Dominion of Canada and were doing business on the assessment principle, should not be subject to the law, but should be permitted to do business under certain conditions without making the deposit of $50,000. The provisions of this Bill are intended to meet the case of such organisations, whose members are largely men in moderate circumstances, who perhaps could not pay up the sum required under the provisions in regard to regular insurance companies.

Mr. BLAKE. The hon. gentleman, I observe, has introduced a provision by which these various associations may carry on their business if they are licensed to do it.

Sir LEONARD TILLEY. If they are registered.

Mr. BLAKE. And that registration is to be at the discretion of the Minister of Finance.

Sir LEONARD TILLEY. Of the Treasury Board, I think.

Mr. BLAKE. Of course there is the Superintendent and the Minister and the Board, but we understand who the ruling spirit is. It is therefore at the discretion of the Minister, without any principle of action being set forth upon which that discretion is to be exercised, that these associations are to be permitted to carry on their business. I think that a very objectionable provision indeed. I think the general principle upon which the decision is to be reached ought to be stated in the legislation, but there is no hint given in the Bill which is to guide the Minister in agreeing to or refusing to permit a registration.

Sir LEONARD TILLEY. Under the general Act the powers given are very considerable, and the Commissioner of Insurance has very large power in the matter. It would be upon his recommendation that action would be taken, but, as long as the inspection system continues under the Act of 1879 or under this Act, very considerable powers must be given to that officer, because it would be very largely on his report as to the condition of the company that the registration would be granted or refused. I do not know what conditions the hon. gentleman would introduce to define the case in which the application should be accepted or rejected. It strikes me that it would be exceedingly difficult to do that. Our experience in the last few years has been that there have been organisations operating not so much in the Dominion but without the Dominion, with agents in the Dominion, companies or organisations authorised by the State Legislatures which have had representatives here transacting business, and that has not been found to be a safe or satisfactory plan. If we take any of those fraternal organizations such as I have named, I cannot see very well how any great difficulty can occur by requiring them to submit a statement of their rules and regulations and the conditions upon which the payments are to be made. They cannot vary very much, because all these organisations act on the principle that, on the death of one of the members, a certain sum must be paid. Of course, there might be some provision which it would be quite clear to the Inspector of Insurance could not be recognised, and he might not be able to recommend that the company should be registered. I do not, however, see how any conditions or terms can be stated in the Bill which will define what will authorise the parties to submit a statement of their affairs to be registered. There must be very considerable power in a matter of this kind given to the Inspector, and I do not see how we can introduce anything that would be definite, and at the same time would work satisfactorily.

Mr. MILLS. But if they are incorporated under a law of the Provinces?

Sir LEONARD TILLEY. These organisations must be incorporated either by the Provincial Legislatures or the Dominion Parliament.

Mr. MILLS. Do you propose to control the provincial incorporations?

Sir LEONARD TILLEY. The Bill says that only those companies shall be registered which have been authorised either by the Local Legislatures or the Dominion Parliament.

Mr. CASEY. Does the hon. gentleman propose that the prohibition shall apply to companies incorporated under local Acts within any particular Province?

Sir LEONARD TILLEY. We do not propose to interfere with them at all.

Mr. MULOCK. If the hon. Minister of Finance could allow this Bill to stand over for a short time I know it would please some persons. I have had some communications from some bodies in connection with it, and their intention was to attend before the Minister, with a view of discussing the provisions of the Bill. I am not at present in possession of their arguments, and therefore I cannot present their case, but I know, from the communications that I have had, that some bodies have serious objections to the Bill. The particular bodies from which I have had communications are the Trade and Labor Council, and one of the orders the hon. Finance Minister has named. We are at a very early date of the Session, and the Bill has been a very short time before the House. It is true that it was introduced last year, but it was withdrawn, and was only distributed a week ago yesterday. It seems to me that the public interest would not suffer by the second reading being allowed to stand over.

Sir LEONARD TILLEY. I may state to the hon. member that it is exactly the same Bill—not altered one word—that was introduced last Session. We had various deputations to the Government expressive of their views, and communications from many religious organisations in favor of the principles of this Bill. There were some objections raised to it because at the time parties were not in a position to take advantage of it, but they represented that if it stood over for another year, they would be in a position to take advantage of its provisions. That was one reason why, at the close of last Session, these parties remonstrated against our enacting and passing the Bill then. Therefore, it was thought better to give these various organisations a year to put themselves in a position to come under the operations of the Bill. If there is any wish on the part of any number of hon. members of the House that the second reading should be deferred for a few days, there is no objection to allowing it to stand over.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Does the Minister propose referring it to the Committee on Banking and Commerce, or to pass it through Committee of the Whole House?

Sir LEONARD TILLEY. Through Committee of the Whole House.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. If that be the case I think it certainly had better stand over till later, because it is a question that involves a good deal of interest, and the Committee of the Whole House (with all due respect to that Committee) have not been at all in the habit of dealing with questions of this kind. I should think that the Committee on Banking and Commerce, to which, if I mistake not, all insurance Bills have been heretofore referred, would be the proper Committee to which to refer this matter, where it would be more convenient for the Minister himself to discuss it.

Mr. BLAKE. I think the hon. gentleman had better not take the Committee to-day, because it is really in the details that difficulty arises.

Sir LEONARD TILLEY. Very well, at the suggestion of the hon. member I move the second reading now, and then I will move its reference, so that we can discuss it with greater freedom.

Motion agreed to, and Bill read the second time.

REPORT PRESENTED.

Report of the Secretary of State of Canada, for the year ended 31st December, 1884.—(Mr. Chapleau.)

THE MARITIME COURT OF ONTARIO.

Mr. ALLEN moved the second reading of Bill (No. 11) to extend the jurisdiction of the Maritime Court of Ontario. He said: This is the same Bill that I introduced last year but I allowed it to stand over at the request of the right hon. the First Minister, who said he wished to consult the Minister of Justice about it. The Bill gives all creditors for a ship's supplies the first lien on the ship, and places parties who live in the Province in the same position under the Maritime Court as those who live in foreign countries. I find from my own experience, and from the large amount of correspondence I have received from various parts of the country, that both the owners of ships and steamboats, and the parties who furnish them supplies, are desirous that the jurisdiction of the Maritime Court should be so extended as to place all supplies within its provisions. I believe that ship-owners who are desirous of paying their honest debts, and of placing their officers who command the ship in a position to purchase the supplies and other necessaries from the best houses, on the best terms and at the lowest prices, are in favor of the extension of the Act in this direction. We know that many losses have been sustained by merchants who have supplied ships. When a ship comes into a port and the captain goes to a merchant for a supply of coal, for instance, the merchant is not aware that the vessel is mortgaged. There is no time to make an enquiry, and the merchant supplies hundreds of dollars worth of coal, perhaps, and then he finds that the mortgagee claims control of the whole ship and refuses to pay for the supplies. The nominal owner is not in a position to pay the bill, and consequently these losses are sustained by those who supply the vessel. Now, Sir, in the interest of fair play, I think we ought to place the owners of ships in such a position that all supplies, as well as repairs, should be the first lien upon the ship. Same objection was raised by the inhabitants of Ireland some time ago, and we find that the jurisdiction of the Maritime Courts there was extended so as to reach every owner in all parts of the country except in the particular town where the owner resides, and where the supplies were furnished. That was a concession which added greatly to the advantage of merchants and ship-chandlers who supplied goods; and I believe the opinion of a large majority of ship-owners, captains, and officers and merchants will be found of the opinion that it would be in the interests of shipping and of justice and of our country at large to grant an extension of the maritime jurisdiction in Ontario, thus placing them in a position which I believe would be of advantage to all parties concerned. I hope the House will take the matter up in the spirit of justice and will ventilate the matter; if there is any objection let us hear it; but I believe such objections will not be found to prevent the House from unanimously deciding that this extension shall be granted.

Mr. LISTER. I think the Bill now under consideration should receive the approval of the House. What is asked by the promoter is, that those persons who supply goods or do repairs to ships belonging to people living and domiciled in this Province, shall have right of action against the property itself. Prior to 40th Vic., chap. 21, the Act of 1877, we had no law in this country by which an action could be brought against a vessel for anything. The maritime law only extended to the seaports where tide ebbs and flows. In that year the present leader of the Opposition (Mr. Blake) introduced the Act which it is now sought to amend. That Act provided for and gave authority to the Government to establish in the Province of Ontario a Maritime Court, and it gave jurisdiction in all matters arising out of and connected with navigation on inland waters within Ontario, as the jurisdiction of the Vice-Admiralty Court extended to such cases without that Province. In order to get at the jurisdiction of the Admiralty Court or Maritime Court of Ontario, it is necessary to refer to the jurisdiction of the Admiralty Court as it existed in the Province of Quebec and other Provinces, that court being created by an Imperial Act, 26 Vic., chap. 24. It provides that the Vice-Admiralty Court shall have jurisdiction in case of seamen's wages, master's wages and disbursements on account of ship, pilotage, salvage, tonnage, damage done by ship, bottomry and respondentia bonds, claims between owners, claims for necessaries when no owner and part owner is domiciled within Ontario. It gives a right of action for every imaginable claim that the maritime law knows, except the case of goods supplied or repairs done to vessels, the owners of which reside in Ontario. If the owners reside out of the Province of Ontario, then the persons who furnished the supplies or did repairs shall have a remedy against the vessel; but if the owners or any of them reside in Ontario, there is no remedy against the vessel. The persons supplying the goods or doing the repairs are bound to seek redress from the owners of the vessel and not against the vessel itself. The ground on which that doctrine proceeds is, as laid down in the law books, that where the owners are resident within the country to which the vessel belongs the credit is supposed to have been given to the owner of the boat and not to the boat itself. I cannot see myself why that distinction should be made—why in cases where the Maritime Act provides for giving a right of action against the vessel it should stop there, and why persons who enhance the value of a vessel by repairing it or by enabling the owners of a boat to proceed on a voyage by supplying it with goods, should be debarred from bringing an action against the vessel itself. But such is the law, and the hon. gentleman who introduces this Bill seeks to remedy what I conceive to be a defect, by doing away with this distinction, and providing that those persons who supply goods and do repairs shall have the same remedy against the vessel as the persons to whom I have referred have for wages, and so on. I think this is but equitable and right. The vessel is augmented to the value of the repairs done, the owners of the boat get its value increased to that extent, and it is but equitable that the vessel should be responsible to the people who do those repairs. We know from experience, and it is a fact of every day occurrence, that ships receive supplies from merchants and others at the different ports on our lakes and rivers. It is the common impression among people that vessels are liable for everything supplied to them, and they do not receive knowledge as to what the law is until they come to recover for supplies furnished, when they ascertain that the vessel is not responsible, and in many instances they find that the owners are irresponsible persons from whom they can obtain nothing. I repeat that in my opinion this is not fair, equitable, or just, that the people who furnish supplies to vessels in order to enable vessels to proceed on their voyages, and from which the owners derive benefit, should not be placed on the same footing as persons mentioned in the Admiralty Act. We know that in many cases it is necessary to repair vessels, and as the law now stands the man who does the repairs, while he has a lien on the vessel, he has no power to enforce it, and unless Parliament confers on him the power asked in this Bill he will continue to remain in the same position as before. As I have stated this change will enable owners to prosecute their voyages easily, because whenever it is known that the vessel is responsible for whatever she receives, there will be no difficulty about obtaining credit. People do not stop to enquire as to who the owners are. A vessel may be divided into 64 shares, and the shareholders may be scattered all over the Dominion, and it would be very difficult, if not impossible, to recover judgment against them. They may be worthless financially. If they are worthless, they have reaped the benefit of the merchant's goods and the result of the workman's labor and can escape payment. Such is the position of the law to day, and that law should be changed. It may be said that it should not be changed because we follow the English law, because the Admiralty Court in England does not provide for a lien to supply men, and that therefore we should not pass such an Act here. I think that is no good argument against the Bill. If the vessel should be responsible for wages, towage, salvage and other claims, it logically follows that it should be responsible for any sort of claim that benefits the vessel, or facilitates its navigation or increases its value. I think, Sir, that is a logical conclusion, and therefore I say that for my part I can see no reason why this Bill should not become law because it is not the law in England. On looking at the laws of the United States—their laws being also based on the English law—I find that the matter has come before the Congress of that country. Only last year a Bill was introduced in the United States Congress almost identical in wording with this one, providing that the people doing work on vessels, and the supply men, should have a maritime lien. That Bill was referred to the Judicial Committee of Congress, and that Committee made a unanimous report, of which the following are the concluding words:—

"Your Committee entertain no doubt of the power of Congress to legislate upon these subjects, nor of the necessity of so framing the law as to secure uniformity of practice and the same right and priority of lien and remedies in all cases to material-man, without reference to the domicile of the vessel furnished with repairs or necessaries. They therefore report back a substitute for the Bill under consideration and recommend its passage."

In that report, as hon. gentlemen will observe, they see no reason why supply men should be placed in any less advantageous position than any other person entitled to a maritime lien; and I think the report of that Committee is a very strong reason why this House should take action in a matter of very great importance, not only to the shipping interests of the country but to the people who supply the ships. The reason that this matter came before Congress was that in some of the States of the Union the state laws provided that the supply men and the persons doing repairs should have a lien on the vessels, regardless of her domicile, and the laws of other states provided that there should be no lien if any of the owners or part owners left the state in which the work was done or the goods supplied, and in order to have uniformity, Congress took hold of the matter and the result was a reference to this committee and the adoption of this report to Congress. Now, although it is the law of England that where the owners live within England there shall be no lien, still I call your attention to the fact that the English law, so far as Ireland is concerned, is different. An Act has been passed in England by which the owners of vessels living in Ireland, if the goods are not supplied at the home port—and the home port is defined to be the port to which the vessel actually belongs—if the goods are supplied three miles from the home port, there is a lien. Now, if we had the same law here, if when the goods were supplied at any port except where the vessel is registered there should be a lien, it would be in accordance with the law of England affecting Ireland. I say, then, that in fact, and for all practical purposes, the law of England, so far as it extends to Ireland in this matter, gives to supply men and to persons making repairs a lien on the vessel, and if that is the law of Ireland, and if it is in the interests of all parties in the United States that that should be the law there, I submit, with all respect to this House, that it should be the law of this country. I say it is the imperative duty of the Government to introduce such legislation as this; and I say that to allow the law to go on as it is does a very great wrong to the merchants, ship-builders and workmen of this country. I repeat that injury is being done to the owners of vessels of the country, on account of the difficulty I have already adverted to, of being spread over the country—the difficulty at a critical time of being able to get necessities for their vessels, or to get their vessels repaired. If this Bill becomes law that difficulty will be swept out of existence, and no matter where a vessel may be it can be repaired and get the necessary supplies to carry on its voyage. I find, Sir, that in France, and in all the countries of Europe which have adopted the old Roman law, liens are given on vessels for every kind of material, supplies, or work done on them; and it is only in the United States, England and Canada that such a law does not exist. I think such a law is a fair and just one, and I trust it will receive the favorable consideration of this Parliament, and that the House will not prorogue until the Bill which my hon. friend has introduced has become the law of the land.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. I find that I have not with me the brief which I received from the hon. the Minister of Justice with respect to this measure. I am not at first sight inclined to oppose a second reading of the Bill, but it is a matter which must be carefully considered before it becomes the law of the land. I would like to know what is the opinion of the shipping interests in regard to it. The gentleman who introduced the Bill, and the gentleman who has just spoken so fully and ably on the matter, have stated that it is in the interests of the ship-owner, in order that he may get facilities which he otherwise would not have. I am not quite so sure from my recollection of former discussions on this subject that the ship-owners are in favor of it. I think that on the whole they were opposed to it; that they believed that as a whole they can command sufficient credit without having any additional credit given to them by their property being seized for any debt big or little. I am strongly inclined to believe that they will be opposed to this Bill when its effect is considered by them. The only other question is, is it in the interests of the general public, the merchants, workmen, and others who supply vessels? The hon. gentleman quotes the report of the Judicial Committee of Congress on the measure, proving, as I understood him, a general lien for all matters of supply. One can quite understand that a specific lien for the repair of a vessel or the construction of a vessel should be dealt with by the Admiralty Court or the Maritime Court of Ontario; but I do not go with the hon. gentleman when he says we must follow it out to its logical consequence, and that all supplies must also be given to the vessel. Now, in effect this Bill applies only to the Maritime Court of Ontario, which is an inland Province with few or no vessels that ply on the ocean, and the effect of the Bill is simply to deprive the ordinary courts of law in Ontario of the rights of dealing with this subject, and to hand it over to the Maritime Court. The reason for depriving the ordinary courts established for dealing with all subjects of litigation, of jurisdiction over claims arising out of granting supplies to vessels, ought to be very clear before that course is taken. If I remember rightly, when this measure was before Parliament on a previous occasion, the ship-owners opposed it on the ground that their vessels were liable to seizure at the most inconvenient time, the remedy being ad rem, and that they themselves were liable to heavy damages occasionally. For instance, we will suppose a line of steamers running from the extreme west to Montreal, which are advertised to perform the journey within a particular time, and to call at particular ports. The shipowners allege that the indiscretion of a purser, or a captain, or a steward, might lead to the seizure of a vessel in transitu, just before or just after leaving a port. The voyage might thus be interrupted on account of a claim which is a false one, which the owner disputes; and he says his vessel may be seized, a voyage may be lost, his contracts as a common carrier may be all broken, and he may be liable to an infinity of damages by the seizure of the vessel. That, I think, was the line taken by some of the ship-owners when this subject was discussed, as it has been several times, before. For these reasons I would call the attention of the House, especially of all those gentlemen who represent constituencies in Ontario which contain ports or harbors, and of all those especially who are interested in the shipping and transport service of the Province of Ontario, to the importance of the subject. I shall not object to the second reading of this Bill, but I would ask the hon. gentleman not to press its further progress after this discussion, short as it is, and I suppose instructive as it ought to be to the public, until the ship-owners and the great transport navigation companies, whose vessels ply on our waters, shall have an opportunity of directing their attention to the subject, and having the Bill fully discussed before it becomes law.

Mr. BLAKE. I think the suggestion of the hon. gentleman is an extremely reasonable one, that the Bill should be read a second time, and then stand over for a considerable time until all parties interested should have an opportunity of being heard. I speak with a somewhat dim recollection of the precise reasoning which led me to take the view I did on this subject on a previous occasion; but as well as I remember, the view I took was this: that whatever may be the civil law with reference to liens, in other countries which adopt the old Roman law—

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. They had no foreign navigation.

Mr. BLAKE. Yet, the principle of the lien is one which has been gradually drafted on to the English law, and its application is not confined to maritime affairs only. But the lien on supplies is one of an altogether artificial statutory creation. Where this lien was created, if I remember rightly, it was created not on the theory that it was just to the supplies of this particular class of goods to give them a lien which the suppliers of no other class of goods possess, but that it was in the interest of the navigator that the supplies should be obtained; but because he was away so long outside of the jurisdiction of the courts, and because his voyage might be for nothing, and even damage might be sustained, there was no absolute certainty, without the vessel being held, that the goods would be paid for. I believe that was the reason the lien was extended to this class of supplies in the English law, and we just applied it here. We have been extending the application of the principle of the lien in other cases in the Province of Ontario. Whether we should extend that principle in this case to the supplies, no matter whether the domicile of the owner be within or without the Province, is a matter I think open to fair argument and consideration. The interests of both parties are fairly to be considered. With reference to the remark of the hon. gentleman that this measure was ousting the jurisdiction of the civil courts in Ontario, I do not think that will be the case. I think the Maritime Court has a limited jurisdiction, and there will still remain the right of application to the ordinary courts of the Province.

Mr. CAMERON (Huron). There is no doubt that the jurisdiction of the courts in personam still remains notwithstanding the passage of this Bill. But apart from the merits of this Bill altogether, I think the Government ought to consider the propriety of a thorough change in our maritime law, in the direction of simplifying the proceedings of the court, and lessening the costs. In 1882 the late Deputy Minister of Justice addressed a circular to those members of the legal profession who were practising in the Maritime Court and to business men, ship-owners and others, informing them that complaints had been made to the Government of the complicated nature of the machinery and the enormous expense incurred in enforcing the law, and asking their opinion as to the propriety of changes. I believe the Deputy Minister was inundated with answers, all pointing in one direction. Now, one can easily understand that. We have two or three statutes on this subject, the original Act and the amendments, and I think there are something like 265 rules of the Maritime Court; and the expenses, as any person who practices in that court knows, are simply scandalous and outrageous. I believe there is no court established in this country in which the costs are so large as they are in the Maritime Court. I think I gave the House an illustration of that in 1882. I mentioned one case, the case of the Josephine, in which the claim was a comparatively small one, and the costs to the plaintiff alone exceeded $350. In another case, that of the Isaac May, the costs on one side amounted to $700 and on the other side to $750, to enforce a claim of something like $250. This subject is well worthy of the consideration of the Government, and, if the Act is to be carried out properly, they ought at the earliest possible moment to devote their attention to the necessity of simplifying the proceedings and lessening the costs. There is no reason, in my judgment, why a claim under a hundred dollars, for instance, for a seaman's wages should not be sued for in precisely the same way as you sue for a claim in the Division Court, at about the same expense, and with as simple a proceeding. The same judge could enforce both claims because the judge of the County Court is, I think, in all cases, the judge of the Maritime Court. Instead of having nearly three hundred rules to guide and direct the profession in the working out of this Act and instead of entailing enormous expense by cumbersome proceedings, there is no reason why the rules and proceedings should not be much more simple and much less costly. I know of a case in which the claim was for $102 and in which the costs on both sides amounted to over $500. The hon. gentleman will, I think, admit that this is a scandal of the worst possible kind and that it ought to be rectified. The Government were alive to the necessity of this in 1882, but I am not aware that they have taken any action in that direction since. In 1882 I introduced a Bill in this House to simplify the proceedings in the Maritime Court and in cases in which the claims were under $200, to place them somewhat on the same basis as those before the Division Court, giving the judge power to decide them in a summary way and in like manner as ordinary civil cases before the Division Court. The measure did not receive much consideration at the hands of the Government, and the matter was dropped. In moving for papers in 1882, I discussed this matter in the House and the hon. the First Minister then admitted the necessity of some immediate and radical change being made in our whole maritime law, and I suppose it was in virtue of the assurance the hon. the First Minister then gave that the circular to which I adverted, sent out by the Deputy Minister of Justice, was issued. I am not aware that the Government have done anything in the matter since, but I trust they will give their attention in this direction. As to the present Bill, I must say I was always opposed to a maritime lien. I never could understand the reason why one class of creditors should be put on a better footing than another class. I have always opposed the jurisdiction of the Maritime Court in that direction, namely, giving one class of creditors a preference over others. However, Parliament took a different view, and passed an Act giving a maritime lien. Now, it does not appear to me that a man who had a vessel towed, or the seamen, or the other parties entitled to the maritime lien under the Vice-Admiralty Act of England, should have this preference over a man, for instance, who has made repairs to the vessel which may have been of the first possible consequence to the owner, who, without them, could not have prosecuted his maritime venture successfully. I can see no earthly reason logically why he should not be entitled to a maritime lien. I agree to some extent with the hon. the First Minister that the man who furnishes the supplies may be in a somewhat different position, but where a vessel is damaged by a storm such as those which often occur on our lakes it becomes a matter of the first necessity that the vessel should be repaired promptly. The repairs cannot be delayed, they must be done at once, and I see some strong reasons why, in so far as the repairs are concerned, the laborer or the mechanic who does them should be entitled to his maritime lien. I rose, however, more particularly to draw the attention of the Government to the question of costs, and I trust the hon. the First Minister will see the necessity of dealing with this question promptly.

Mr. MITCHELL. I listened with a good deal of attention to the remarks of the hon. member for Huron (Mr. Cameron) and I must say I entirely agree with every proposition he has advanced. I think it is unnecessary to repeat the arguments he has given, but will say this that the present Admiralty law is a great burden to the shipping interest of this country, and to the foreign vessels visiting this country. The machinery is cumbersome, full of delays, and the administration very imperfect, in my opinion, and I have had some little experience to my cost. I quite agree this is a matter which ought to be taken hold of by the Government. They ought to take up the whole question of the laws regulating our shipping and the remedies for claims against shipping, and deal with it from a Government standpoint. While I have no objection to this Bill, I must say that I agree with the hon. member for Huron (Mr. Cameron) that there is a distinction to be made between the laborer who performs work and expends his time upon the ship in doing work which may be a matter of necessity to do in order to keep that ship afloat, which may be of vital importance to prevent her being delayed, or it may be a question of her being frozen up or something of the kind—it may be necessary, I say, in that case to give a lien, but I certainly would not give any advantage to the trader who supplies a vessel with goods when the resident owner is within reach of the civil law. I think in dealing with the change in the Admiralty laws of this country we ought to bring them more in accord with the laws in civil courts; the same speed and simplicity ought to be applied in maritime as in civil cases and the Admiralty Courts done away with altogether.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. I remember quite well the statement by the hon. member for Huron (Mr. Cameron) as to the excessive costs in particular cases. I am informed, however, that by the rules of the court just now the costs cannot exceed $10 on any claim under $100. That will cover, I suppose, most of the claims.

Mr. CAMERON (Huron). That is at the discretion of the judge.

Motion agreed to, and Bill read the second time.

HOLES IN ICE ON FREQUENTED WATERS.

Mr. ROBERTSON (Hamilton) moved that Bill (No. 22) to amend the criminal law and to declare it a misdemeanor to leave unguarded and exposed holes cut in the ice on navigable or frequented waters, be read the second time. He said: This Bill has been before the House on two or three occasions, and I believe it is very well understood; and if I am to judge from the expressions I have heard in the House on its introduction on several occasions, it meets with the approbation of every hon. member. I believe, however, the hon. member for Sherbrooke (Mr. Hall) proposes to move an amendment of which he has given notice to add to the Bill by making it apply to holes in abandoned quarries, and as I have no objection to that I hope my hon. friend is in a position to move it now. I do not wish the Bill to lie over, as it may meet the fate it has on other occasions, because when the ice goes away people do not see any necessity for the Bill.

Motion agreed to, and Bill read the second time.

OTTAWA RIVER SURVEY.

Mr. WHITE (Renfrew) asked, Whether a report has been submitted to the Department of Public Works of the survey and exploration made by Mr. Guerin, C.E., of that part of the Ottawa River between Mattawa and the head of Lake Temiscamingue, during the past summer; if so, whether and when the said report will be laid before the House?

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. The survey and exploration had been made by Mr. Guerin, Civil Engineer, by order of the Department of Public Works on that part of the Ottawa River between Mattawa and the head of Lake Temiscamingue during the past summer. The report has just been made, and I think it was brought in to-day, but it will not be ready to lay before the House for some time. The Chief Engineer must examine it and then report to me. I hope the hon. gentleman will before the Session is over call my attention again to the matter in order that it may not be again forgotten.

THE AWARD TO THE CONTRACTORS FOR SECTION B.

Mr. CASEY. Mr. Speaker, my reason for moving for the opinion of counsel taken in regard to this matter is contained primarily in some remarks made by Sir Charles Tupper in discussing this item on the estimates of last year. Being asked why the item of $395,000 was put in the Estimates for an award to these contractors he explained that the award had been made by two of the arbitrators only, and that the award was made for claims that the Government had always resisted and considered that they should still resist, that they had consistently declined to give the least color to the claims of the contractors for damages in these particulars, and that he was not satisfied yet that the award made by two out of three arbitrators was perfectly valid, or might not at least be appealed against. "But," he said:

"We think it prudent to take the vote; but at this moment the matter has been referred to the Department of Justice, and, as the amount is a large one and greatly exceeded that which the Government considers they should claim, by any possibility, it is proposed, before paying the award, to take the opinions of the ablest counsel at the command of the Government, who will carefully examine the whole question. If it is considered it is an award from which we should appeal, from which there is a prospect of appealing with success, the appeal will be had. If, on the other hand, we are advised, after the best opinions we can obtain, that it would be hopeless to appeal, that there is no prospect of successfully appealing, then this money will be paid."

I was informed by the hon. the Acting Minister of Railways the other day that the Government had taken the opinion of counsel and had been advised to pay the money, and the money was paid. I consider that it will be interesting to the House to obtain a copy of the opinion given, and I should have added a copy of the case submitted to the counsel. I hope the hon. the Minister will allow me to amend the motion in that sense before putting it in, so as to obtain a copy of the case submitted for opinion to the counsel who was actually consulted, as well as the opinion given by him upon that case. I think it important to have a copy of the case, because I find in the agreement submitted to the arbitrators there were special provisions for an appeal. It was agreed, in the first place, that arbitration should be had and that two of the three arbitrators should be competent to make an award, but this proviso was put in:

"And it is further agreed that this agreement of reference may be made a rule of one of the Divisional Courts of the High Court of Justice for Ontario if the said court should so please, and further, that in the event of either of the said parties hereto disputing the validity of the said award or moving in a said Divisional Court of the said High Court to set the same or any part thereof aside, or in any other event, the said Division of the said court or any judge of the High Court of Justice shall have power at any time, to remit the matters hereby referred, or any or either of them, to the reconsideration and redetermination of the said arbitrators, and with and upon and subject to such directions, powers and terms as to the said court or judge may seem proper, and that the provisions of the Common Law Procedure Act and of the Judicature Act and any other Act in force in the Province of Ontario applicable to arbitrations shall apply to this arbitration."

I notice, therefore, that not only was there provision for a possible appeal against the award, but for an order being made by one of the Ontario courts for recommitment to the arbitrators, not only in case of an appeal against the validity but "in any other event," which would certainly cover the case where the Government considered the award, though it might be legally valid, was not in itself a just award. I think, therefore, that the case submitted to the counsel should have covered the question not only whether two out of the three arbitrators were competent to give an award, but whether the award itself was just and consistent with the evidence laid before them and the premises upon which the case was founded. I think if the Department were advised by counsel or themselves believed without the advice of counsel that the award was unfair, that anything had been omitted in the conduct of the case, which, if not omitted might have obtained a more favorable verdict for the Government, they should have taken advantage of this provision to secure under an order of one of the Ontario courts a new trial before the arbitrators. Of course, I do not know whether they took advantage of the provision to have this agreement of reference made a rule of one of the divisional courts of Ontario. If they did not, I suppose the section might not apply, but it was their duty to have done so in order that they might have an opportunity of appealing after the award was made. I consider that the Government should have taken every possible step to have this award appealed against under the provisions of the agreement without recourse to the advice of counsel at all. Sir Charles Tupper told us that the claims presented by the contractors were by him considered invalid. In the first place, they claimed that they should be recouped because they did not gain access to their contract as early as they expected, because the contract on Section 15 was not completed as early as had been agreed upon with the Government, and secondly they claimed damages because the amount of work to be done by them was reduced and they had not as great opportunities to make money as they expected. Upon both those grounds, Sir Charles Tupper thought they had no valid claim. Under these circumstances the Government ought to have fought this matter to the bitter end by all legal means at their disposal. The fact that this was not done, the fact that it was deemed necessary to obtain the opinion of counsel to shelter the action of the Government behind that opinion shows either a desire to shirk the responsibility or a desire to have the action of the arbitrators passed over quietly and the contractors paid the amount. Perhaps $395,000 is not a very large amount to us now, accustomed as we are to deal with millions and tens of millions every Session, but the people of Canada will consider this amount an important one and will require more information in regard to it. I, therefore, propose the motion of which I have given notice, amended in the sense I have mentioned, if I am allowed to do so. I move for:

Copy of case submitted to counsel and opinion given by counsel consulted by the Government as to the validity of the award of damages to contractors for Section B, Canadian Pacific Railway, and as to the action that should be taken in reference to such award.

Motion agreed to.

CANADIAN PACIFIC RAILWAY—SECTION B.

Mr. CASEY moved for:

Copy of separate report or finding of Judge Clarke one of the arbitrators on the claims for damages of contractors for Section B, Canadian Pacific Railway, in regard to such claims or to the award in reference thereto signed by Messrs. Brydges and Light, the other arbitrators.*

He said: It will be remembered that Judge Clarke was the arbitrator appointed by the Government on this arbitration. It appears from the award that all the arbitrators concurred in the first award sent in, namely, as to what should be allowed the contractors in regard to the classification of the work; but only two arbitrators, Mr. Brydges, the contractors' arbitrator, and Mr. Light, the umpire appointed by Chief Justice Ritchie, of the Supreme Court, concurred in the second award which gave this lump sum of $395,600 for damages in regard to the claims to which I referred when speaking to the last motion. That Judge Clarke did make some report to the Government we have the evidence of Sir Charles Tupper in debate last Session, when he admitted that Judge Clarke had written a letter on the subject; and he quoted, to the best of my recollection, some figures from it as follows: That $275,000 of this lump sum was allowed the contractors on account of delay in completing section 15, and the other $120,000 was allowed to them in regard to their losses by not having as much work to do as they would have had under the original contract. When asked by my hon. friend from East York (Mr. Mackenzie) as to whether he would lay that letter on the Table, he stated that on looking at it again he found it to be marked private, and he was advised that one of three arbitrators had no right to make a separate report when it was agreed that two could make a valid award; that therefore he could not make any further use of the letter of Judge Clarke, that he could not lay it on the Table, but he would not retract the statements he had made as to the contents of said letter. Now, Sir, I am not a lawyer, but I think I will be borne out by the opinion of hon. gentlemen on this side who are lawyers, in the assertion that it is rather a strange contention that the Government's own nominee on an arbitration of this kind has no right to make a separate report to the Government in regard to the matters of fact decided by that arbitration. If such is the etiquette in such matters I am sure that etiquette ought to be changed. But I am not at all satisfied that such is the etiquette; I am not at all sure that Sir Charles Tupper was a good enough lawyer to be absolutely sure of what was the legal etiquette in such cases. But at all events the report was made, and even if it must be considered private in the first instance, which I do not admit, it could nevertheless be made public by obtaining the consent of Judge Clarke to its publication—a consent which he ought to be ready to give as a representative of the Government upon this arbitration. It is all the more necessary that he should have made such a report, and that his report should have been made public, because the award itself is in the vaguest and most indefinite terms. The first award, as I have said, goes into some details. It declares that so many yards of work which were classified as loose rock should have been classified as solid rock; that so many yards of work classified as earth should have been classified as loose rock. On these figures the total amount of the award was made up in the Department of Railways itself, taking the contract prices and applying them to the quantities established by the arbitration. The second award, however, relating to the far larger and more important part of the question at issue, after reciting what had already been done, simply says:

"We award and determine that there is due and payable by Her Majesty to the said contractors, for and in respect to the claims and matters in difference between the parties so referred to us and not taken into consideration in our said former award, the sum of $395,600 which sum we direct shall be paid to the contractors forthwith."

There is nothing in this award to show how much is for damages on account of delay, how much for reduction of work, and how much for other claims submitted; and I shall point out later on, that there are various other large and indefinite claims also submitted, to which no reference is made at all. I claim that the Government had a right to know—and, if the Government knows, the House has a right to know—to what particular claims that award referred—how much of it was for delay, how much of it was caused by reduction in the amount of work to be done under the contract, etc. This last item is particularly important because it arises out of the conduct of the Government themselves. They directed the reduction of the work to be done, they permitted delay on contract 15, and if damages have been incurred on account of their action, it should appear in the award and we should be made aware of it. I hope the hon. Minister will not only agree to bring down this report, but that he will now favor us with some verbal explanations. He told us the other night he could not carry in his head a lot of figures about these matters, but it is very easy to carry them in one's pocket; and I am sure he has had sufficient notice of this motion to have procured figures from the officers of his Department, and he ought now to be able to read them to us, as he read them to us the other evening from that paper.

Mr. POPE. I have no objection to bring down all the papers we have. I am sure we have no report.

Mr. BLAKE. We know that the Government have a paper from Judge Clark giving his views on this matter, because we heard the hon. gentleman's predecessor say so across the floor of the House last Session. He announced the fact to us and communicated to us a portion of its contents. Subsequently he said it was private, and he did not propose to bring it down; but no motion was made to bring it down. The question is now raised. I maintain that Judge Clark could not, with propriety, give a private communication, on an occasion when he was acting in a judicial capacity. I maintain that he was bound to make a report to the Government; and if he made it, it must be produced; that there are no grounds on which it can be withheld from this House. It was suggested by the hon. member that something had been said as to there being no power in one of three arbitrators to make a minority report. The validity of a minority report is one thing, but the capacity to make the statement is another. If you take the two greatest arbitrations of modern times, in each of those there was a minority report. If you take the Geneva Arbitration on the Alabama claims, Chief Justice Cockburn made a minority report. If you take the Fisheries Arbitration at Halifax, Mr. Kellogg made a minority report. There is no physical and no legal difficulty in a man who is a minority making a statement on the grounds on which he dissents. But that there is no difficulty we know, because it has been done. We have it stated that this third arbitrator actually made the statement, that it is in writing and is in the hands of the hon. gentleman opposite. I say as regards the paper which we are told was in the hands of the Government and which contained Judge Clark's views with reference to this matter, it is not only desirable that it be produced, but its production cannot without impropriety be refused.

Mr. POPE. I understand that; but I put it to hon. members whether it is right, after I have stated there is no report in the Department, that an hon. gentleman should rise and tell me that I have it. I say there is nothing of the kind in the Department. I enquired and was told there was no minority report. I will bring down everything which is in the Department relating to the matter, but do not let the hon. gentleman get up and try and cram things down my throat. I will meet the wishes of the hon. gentleman in every way I can, but he cannot make me give information I have not got.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. I beg to call the attention of the Acting Minister of Railways, if he be the Acting Minister of Railways, to the fact that this document which we ask for was publicly quoted by his predecessor, as has been stated twice. Surely a document that was publicly quoted by the Minister of Railways, in reply to an attack on his Department, is in existence. If it is not in existence and has been destroyed, we know the conclusion to draw. It is quite possible if the Acting Minister knows nothing about it, a cable might be addressed to Sir Charles Tupper asking what he had done with it. It was a document of far too great importance to be lightly put aside. It was a document we ought to have, for we have paid enough for it in all conscience. To Judge Clark, according to the report of the Auditor General, $7,250, a sum larger than the salary of the Minister, was paid last year for three different services, one as County Judge, one as arbitrator in this very matter, $1,200; and an amount of $4,000 odd as member of the Intercolonial Commission. I say that that gentleman had no right to make a private report. The Minister had no right whatever to quote from that document unless he and his colleagues were prepared to lay it on the Table of the House. I do not know whether the Acting Minister was present on the occasion; if he was not present he can consult the Hansard, and he will see that his predecessor referred to the document in question. There can be no impropriety, so far as I can see or imagine, in desiring the production of such a document, and if such is the case, Ministers cannot object to bring it down.

Mr. POPE. I can only repeat what I stated a few moments ago that every single paper we have touching this matter will be brought down; but I will not undertake to make papers.

Mr. MACKENZIE. Will the Acting Minister telegraph to the late Minister?

Mr. POPE. No; I do not think I will.

Mr. MACKENZIE. Then it is quite clear the hon. gentleman does not want to give the information. That is perfectly clear.

Mr. POPE. No.

Mr. MACKENZIE. I am not surprised that the hon. gentlemen should seek to shelter themselves under the statement that certain documents may be private, and therefore cannot be brought down. We had the same story yesterday, and no doubt we shall have it to-morrow; and Parliament is to be turned into a gathering for the convenience of hon. gentlemen and to pass their measures, instead of being the grand inquest of the nation for the transaction of public business.

Mr. MILLS. The arbitrator who dissented from the majority of the arbitrators in this matter was the arbitrator appointed by the Government, and it would be a most extraordinary circumstance if the arbitrator appointed by the Government, dissenting from the views of the other arbitrators, should not have communicated to the Government formally the grounds of his dissent. We find the cases to which the hon. member for West Durham has referred—the case of the Geneva Award Lord Cockburn, who dissented from the views of the other arbitrators, entered into an elaborate discussion of the reasons of his dissent. He stated fully and explicitly, in a document submitted to the Government which appointed him, the reasons why he could not approve of the conclusions at which the majority of the arbitrators had arrived. This course was followed also by Mr. Kellogg in the matter of the Fisheries Arbitration. And certainly the arbitrator appointed by the Dominion Government in this matter in question would have been derelict in his duty if he had failed to communicate to the Administration how it was that he could not agree with the conclusions reached by his colleagues. They made a report, they stated what their award was, and it is clear that Judge Clark must have communicated to the Government the grounds of his dissent from the conclusions reached by the majority of the arbitrators. In fact, what we would reasonably expect, we were informed, actually did take place. We were informed by the hon. Minister of Railways last year, who was then in his place, that Judge Clark did communicate to him the grounds of his dissent. That communication is a public document. It is not for Judge Clark to express his dissenting opinion in private any more than it is for a judge upon the bench to do so. It is his business as a public official charged with a public duty to state how it was that he could not agree with the conclusions reached by the majority of the arbitrators. We know that such a communication was addressed to the hon. Minister of Railways on the part of Judge Clark, as it was his duty to address such a communication, and the representatives of the people in Parliament are entitled to know what the conclusions of Judge Clark were. If there is any duty devolving upon the House of Commons more than another it is to control the public expenditure of the country. This is a charge upon the public treasury, and the public, through their representatives, are entitled to the fullest information upon the subject.

Mr. CASEY. The hon. minister says he will not give any information which he does not possess. We do not expect he will; or at all events that he will make a practice of doing so, although we have sometimes had information from Ministers, the sources of which we could not exactly trace, and respecting which we were almost inclined to imagine they had done as an Irish wit said another gentleman had done, viz.: that he depended upon his imagination for his facts and his memory for his wit. We have had occasion to suppose sometimes that Ministers depended on a similar source for their information and their facts; but I quite acquit the Minister of Railways of any intention to give us any information drawn from that source with regard to Section B. This is not an imaginative matter; it is a question of hard cash—of dollars and cents—in which the country will be deeply interested, and they will not accept any imaginary statement, or any quibbles as to the production of facts or information which really exists. Now if the hon. gentleman has not that information we want to know where it has gone. We know that it was in the Department last year; Sir Charles Tupper said so and we know it was there. We know that he quoted from it in the first place without hesitation, and that thereby he made it a public document, but afterwards he professed to think that it was not a public document and that he had been breaking all sorts of legal and social rules of etiquette by quoting from a private communication from Judge Clark, with reference to a matter involving $396,000, in reference to which Judge Clark had been the accredited arbitrator for the Government. Sir Charles Tupper knows, at all events, what has become of that information, and the Acting Minister has been reminded that he could ascertain from Sir Charles Tupper what has become of it, simply by sending a cable message. We know that considerable sums amounting to thousands of dollars have been spent for telegraphic messages by the Government, though we do not know for what purpose, and yet forsooth the country is too poor to telegraph to Sir Charles Tupper for important information as to what became of this $396,000? It is not because the country cannot afford it that he will not telegraph; it is simply because he knows what was in that paper and because it is something which he does not want to bring to the House. I do not state that as a matter of positive knowledge but as the only conclusion which we can draw from the facts. We know that Sir Charles Tupper quoted from the paper, and then withdrew it on the plea of its being private, that his successor declared that it disappeared from the Department, and also declared that he would not try to ascertain what has become of it. What other conclusion can we draw from these facts? We believe—and we believe the country will believe—that that paper has been got away with in some fashion because there was something in it damaging to the Government, or to the claims of their particular friends the contractors for Section B.

Motion agreed to.

Mr. CASEY moved for:

Copy of the claim put in by the contractors for section B on which the award to them of $395,500 was based.

He said: This is something which really should have been included in the return for which I moved last year, as part of an Order which passed the House on March 28th, 1884, asking for:

"A copy of any award or report made by the arbitrators appointed to settle claims of contractors for section B, Canadian Pacific Railway; a statement of all sums paid in consequence of such award; also, statement of claims submitted by said contractors before said arbitrators; also, statement as to which items of said claims are still undecided by said arbitrators."

Mr. MILLS.

One of these has not been brought down, and I have accordingly put a notice on the paper; but if the Minister will say that he will bring it down without the motion I will not press it, though I wish at present to urge the reasons why it should be brought down. There is nothing in the documents before us to show what was submitted to the arbitrators. We have been discussing the award as if we knew what had been submitted. Sir Charles Tupper discussed it last Session as if he knew what had been submitted; I have been talking about it to-day as if I knew, and we have been talking as if the Acting Minister of Railways knew, but though we may have an idea as to the general nature of the claims put in, I find that there is no specific agreement in writing, or none brought to the House, at all events, as to what was submitted to the arbitrators. An Order in Council was passed on the 28th March, 1881, declaring that the matters and claims in dispute between the Government and the arbitrators might at some future date, when the Government might consider the work sufficiently advanced to justify such action, be submitted to arbitration. A subsequent Order was passed on the 2nd day of April, 1883, about something. That Order is referred to in the agreement from which I quoted a short time ago, but it is not quoted in detail, and the Order itself is not amongst these papers. The agreement says that the matters and claims referred to in that Order in Council should also be submitted. Perhaps it is private and confidential, for if a report of an engineer to the Government is a private and confidential communication, I suppose an Order in Council may sometimes be so too. Then there was another Order in Council of the 20th of November, 1883, declaring that the time had come to submit this matter to arbitration, and appointing Judge Clark the Government arbitrator. On looking at the agreement for the arbitration, I find that it states:

"And whereas, by an Order in Council, dated the twenty-eighth day of March, in the year of Our Lord one thousand eight hundred and eighty-one, authority was given for a reference of these claims of the said contractors to the arbitration of three arbitrators, one of whom should be chosen by the Minister of Railways and Canals, and one by the contractors, the third to be chosen by the other two, or in accordance with the arbitration clauses of the common law procedure Act of Ontario, and that such reference should be made whenever the Government might consider the work sufficiently advanced to justify such action, but to be in no way taken as an admission of the validity of the claims.

"And whereas, by a certain other Order in Council, dated the second day of April, in the year of Our Lord one thousand eight hundred and eighty-three, it was provided that all claims and matters in difference between the contractors and Her Majesty, arising out of the work done under the said contract, should be referred to the arbitration provided for by the Order in Council of the twenty-eighth day of March, in the year of Our Lord one thousand eight hundred and eighty-one.

"And whereas the contractors have represented to the Government that they are now prepared to submit their claims to the special arbitration authorised by the said Orders in Council, in respect to the three following items: 'Loose rock,' 'rock outside of the prism or slopes of the cuttings,' and 'cross-logging.'

"And whereas by an Order in Council of the twentieth day of November instant (1883), it is authorised that the claim of the Government against the contractors for the use and hire of rolling stock, &c., amounting to the sum of $57,539.37, be also referred to the said arbitration as a counter claim, to be dealt with at the same time that the questions of 'loose rock,' 'rock outside of the prism,' and 'cross-logging' are considered, and that the said Government claims, together with the three items before named, be first considered and awarded on."

Then it goes on to provide further:

"It is hereby agreed that the said arbitrators shall first consider and award on the following items or matters in difference, namely, 'loose rock,' 'rock outside the prisms or slopes of the cuttings,' and 'cross-logging,' and the counter claim of the Government above referred to, and that the said arbitrators may from time to time make their award and awards in writing as aforesaid, on the above mentioned matters, and on all other matters in difference hereby referred, until they have finally awarded upon and disposed of all the matters hereby referred."

Now the question is, what are the "all other matters" thereby referred? They are not stated in the agreement of submission. We have no statement of the claims submitted to arbitration and the only hint of them was in a letter written to the Government by the contractors before the first Order in Council was passed, in which they stated a large number of claims. They wrote on the date of the 7th of January, 1881, a letter which covers several pages of this book. In the letter, there are a large number of very vague and indefinite claims, which they boil down into a few proposition, at the end of the letter :

"That we claim the Government are in default in not giving us means of access by rail over section No. 15, within a reasonable time after the 1st of July, 1879; that in that respect the contract is broken on the part of the Government, and we are entitled to all the damages sustained thereby.

"That we are, subject to such claims for damages, ready and willing to go on with and complete the contract in the manner agreed, both as to rock-borrowing and the making of embankments, within the time limited in that behalf; and we have no doubt, having regard to the preparations we have made, of our ability to do so.

"We decline to assume the responsibility of building the structures now designed and handing them over as part of a complete road bed, and in any event it would be out of our power to obtain the proper timbers therefor, or to do such work at the prices provided for pile driving in the schedule."

And so on at some length. They have a very poor opinion evidently of the work as designed latterly by the Government. They say, in more than one place, that they are afraid of taking the responsibility of putting up such a flimsy work as the Government has ordered to be done on that part of the road; they are afraid it will fall to pieces. I have referred to the only specifications we have that were submitted to the arbitrators. The agreement which I have read from is the only thing I can find in the nature of a legal submission at all; and I submit to the hon. members and to the lawyers in this House, whether that amounts to a legal submission, or whether under that vague submission the arbitrators had not the latitude of enquiring into almost everything connected with the contract without the legal authority of deciding on anything. I believe, and I am backed up by the opinion of lawyers to whom I have talked on the matter, that there was no legal submission, that the whole affair was irregular and illegal, and that for this reason there was the best reason for appealing against the award of the two arbitrators. If the hon. Minister will bring down a copy of the claim submitted to the arbitrators, it will perhaps throw some light on the matter. I will also amend this motion, by consent, by asking for that missing Order in Council of the 2nd of April, 1883. I am informed by my hon. friend from Prince Edward Island (Mr. Davies) that it was promised last year.

Motion as amended agreed to.

STAFF COMMANDER BOULTON.

Mr. McMULLEN moved for :

Report of the Auditor-General and also of one McGee, as well as for all papers, letters, accounts, cheques and newspapers connected with any claim of Staff Commander Bolton against the Department of Marine and Fisheries or the Government, for any amount of money which he alleges to be due him for salary or otherwise, or which he asserts has been withheld from him, or in relation to any dispute between said Bolton and any officer of the Marine and Fisheries Department, in regard to cheques drawn in favor of said Bolton.

He said : In connection with this resolution I desire to say that some irregularity, if I am correctly informed, has taken place in the Department to which this refers. It appears that Staff Commander Bolton who has been in charge of a party sent out for the purpose of making a survey of Georgian Bay, was furnished with amounts from time to time on account of salary and expenses, and it appears that cheques were forwarded to him for these amounts payable to his order. If I am correctly informed, cheques were also drawn not payable to his order, and of the issue of which he was not aware until he returned. I believe that on his return he found, on enquiring at the Department, that his account was in arrears or overdrawn, and after some investigation it was found that some of the cheques which ought to have been forwarded to him for endorsement were not forwarded; that the word "order" was erased and "bearer" inserted, the cheque cashed, and the money charged against his account in the Department without his being made aware of it. I understand that the question was submitted to the Auditor-General, who made a report on the matter, in which he stated that Mr. Tilton, who was then accountant to the Department, was indebted to Mr. Bolton for the sum of $307, and required him to refund him that amount. I do not wish to cast any reflection upon any officer of the Department by any means; I only wish to draw the attention of the House to the fact that apparently an improper action or an irregularity has occurred. I certainly think that in the payment of parties for services performed, the cheques in all cases, without exception, should be made payable to order, and the endorsement of the party to whom they are made payable should be procured before the money is drawn. It appears that in this case this was not done. If Mr. Tilton claims he acted for Mr. Bolton in having the word "order" erased and the word "bearer" substituted, I contend he acted improperly, because I hold that it is decidedly wrong that any person in charge of any duty connected with any Department should be permitted to act as the agent, in any capacity, of any person doing business with the Department. Whether the statute makes any such provision I know not, but if it do not it should; it should provide that no servant in any Department be permitted to act as the agent of any other person. It appears this transpired some time in 1883. Since this has transpired and before it was fully cleared up—the papers possibly will show the date it was cleared up and the refund made—Mr. Tilton has been removed from the position of accountant and made Deputy Minister of Fisheries. It is rather singular, in my opinion, that while a charge of that kind hung over the head of an important officer, the head of the Department should so overlook this charge that he promoted the officer in question to the position of Deputy Minister, before a satisfactory settlement had been come to in regard to this irregularity. I cannot understand why it was done. Certainly no business man would act thus with any one in his employ under similar circumstances; certainly no business man would take one of his employees, who was under suspicion, out of a lower and place him in a higher position until such time as a very satisfactory explanation had been given of the charge made. I do not know what the explanations were that may have been made to the hon. Minister before he made this change, but the fact remains that such irregularities were transacted, that he took that servant out of his position and put him in a higher one, while the servant was charged with that crime, if it may be called a crime. The proceeding appears to be a very strange one. It looks as though the Minister were compelled to make the change, as though he were under the power of his employee, because certainly, in ordinary circumstances, the natural course to be adopted towards an employee guilty of such an irregularity would be to dispense with his services. The fact is, that in place of permitting him on probation to occupy the position he then held, he is taken out of that position, put into a higher and more lucrative one, a position of greater trust, and yet, under the circumstances, the imputation with which he stood charged before the Department is not cleared up or satisfactorily explained. This is the reason I have for moving for all these papers. I hope that when they come before the House I may find that the representations which have been made are not correct, but I am afraid, in fact I have good reason to believe, that a very large portion of the statements, if not the whole, will be found to be just as I have made them.

Mr. McLELAN. I was at a considerable loss to understand why the hon. gentleman should have entered into a discussion of this matter and should make charges affecting the character of an officer of my Department and in the service of the Government—why he should make the charges before he had seen the papers and understood what he was saying. But, he has given the explanation. He wanted if possible to get a blow at the head of the Department, at the Minister, and make it appear that the Minister had been guilty of some grave dereliction of duty in promoting a man against whom there was this charge in regard to the payment of Staff Commander Bolton. I beg to submit that the late accountant of the Department of Marine and Fisheries was promoted months before there was any question raised as to the position of Staff Commander Bolton's salary. Staff Commander Bolton came to this country by the direction of the Admiralty to engage upon that survey. His salary was not fixed at the time he came, nor for several months after he entered upon his duties, and therefore, during the first months that he was engaged, payments were made to him simply on account, and there was an understanding, I have reason to know, with Staff Commander Bolton, when he left for his work in the Georgian Bay, that certain sums should be sent to his wife in England, on account of his salary. The hon. gentleman says that all these cheques should have been sent direct to Staff Commander Bolton instead of being made to bearer, as two of them were, and should have received his endorsement. That would, perhaps, have been the more regular way, but it would have involved a great loss of time. I have understood that Staff Commander Bolton was very anxious that, at the earliest possible moment that money could be said to be due to him, it should be sent across the water to Mrs. Bolton, who was then living in England, and had a family to maintain there. The Commander, in a letter, so late as the 19th of last September, writing to the Department, says it would be impossible for him to get cheques cashed and dealt with whilst on the survey. I had occasion to visit that neighborhood, I think in August, and I found that the vessel and crew had to leave the work on which they were engaged and go some distance in order to raise money upon cheques that had been sent to them. Under the arrangements and the understanding that were had between the accountant and Staff Commander Bolton, when he was leaving on his survey in 1883, two cheques were drawn payable to bearer. The first was changed from "order" to "bearer." I want the hon. gentleman to understand that no change was made after the cheque was made. It was made and filled up payable to bearer, and was signed by the Deputy Minister, Mr. William Smith, and the accountant together, and the words "to bearer" were initialled by Mr. Smith. That was for the purpose of sending a bill of exchange to England, to Mrs. Bolton. Later, another cheque of a less amount, $300, was treated in the same way, in the following month; but, in the absence of Mr. Smith, who was away on departmental business, it was so treated by the officers of the Department who were authorised under Order in Council to sign cheques; and Mr. Tilton was the gentleman who initialled "to bearer" in that case. These are the only two cheques upon which the Auditor General found any difficulty in arranging the accounts of Commander Bolton. The hon. gentleman says that Mr. Tilton has been called upon to refund a sum of about $307. Well, the only sum that has been refunded, that has been repaid, upon which there was any difference of opinion between Commander Bolton and Mr. Tilton, is a sum of about $113. In regard to $13 of that, there was no difference of opinion. A cheque was issued for $300, which was sent to the bank to purchase a bill of exchange for £60. The difference between the cost of that bill of exchange and $300 still remained—some $7 or $8. In another case, also, there was a difference between the cost of a bill of exchange and the amount sent to the bank, the total in the two cases being this $13, which the Auditor said had to be refunded to Commander Bolton.

Mr. McLELAN.

There was another difference as to the transmission of a £40 cheque which was not paid in the way the accountant had directed on the other side, and it came back through the Bank of Montreal into the Finance Department, and was entered upon the books as a second charge. As soon as Commander Bolton returned to Ottawa from his survey, Mr. Tilton called his attention to this, and said, "On the accounts that appear on the books, I think there is an error in a bill of exchange for £40, or about $200, and we will arrange it if you will look over it." I saw Commander Bolton when a question arose about the differences in the accounts. I met him and asked him if that matter in difference was not one which might be readily settled between himself and Mr. Tilton. He said Mr. Tilton had called his attention to that overcharge and that error. I asked him to come in and take the money himself, as I did not want it to be put in the way of a refund to the Treasury, because I would therefore lose the amount from the grant, and the grant was running small for the expenses that were incurred, and I was anxious to save that much, at least, of the grant, and have it paid to Commander Bolton instead of being refunded to the Treasury. In fact, in so far as that is concerned, there really was no difference between the accountant and Commander Bolton.

Some hon. GENTLEMEN. Six o'clock.

Mr. MITCHELL. I hope that hon. gentlemen will have some consideration for the Minister, and allow him to explain when a very serious charge is laid against him. Hon. gentlemen ought not to interrupt him in that way.

Mr. McLELAN. Commander Bolton acknowledged to have received at the Department $100 on the 1st of November, but he claims it was from a cheque that he had subsequently received, and which he had endorsed himself, and therefore the dispute between the accountant and Commander Bolton was as to whether that $100 was paid out of the previous cheques, or, as Commander Bolton claimed, out of the cheque of November. The Auditor General required that $100 to account for all the cheques that were charged to him to that day, and the Auditor General decided that in addition to the two sums amounting to $13, the difference between the bills of exchange and the cheques drawn, he should either furnish to the Auditor General a receipt for the $100 or make a refund of it. The accountant has paid that $100, but under protest, claiming that it was the balance of the first cheques, and not as Commander Bolton states, on the cheque of $300 of November. I therefore think that when all the papers are brought down, and the hon. gentleman has an opportunity of examining them, he will not speak in the same tone and manner with which he addressed the House this evening.

It being six o'clock, the Speaker left the Chair.

After Recess.

Mr. McMULLEN. When the House rose, the hon. Minister, in reply to the remark I had made asking for a return of certain papers connected with a difficulty that arose between Mr. Tilton and Mr. Bolton, stated that it would have been better for me to reserve my remarks until the papers were before the House. Now I beg to say, Mr. Speaker, that perhaps I would have reserved my remarks were it not for the fact that the papers in connection with the duties devolving upon this very officer had been ordered by the House, and had not yet been brought down. On the 20th March, 1884, the following return was ordered, moved by Mr. Somerville (Brant), and seconded by Mr. McMullen:

Return showing all sums received by the Department of Marine and Fisheries on account of rental of rivers and streams; also showing sums paid into the Department of Marine and Fisheries on account of fines imposed for violation of the fisheries regulations, the return in each case to show amounts so received during the years 1882 and 1883, with the date received and the names of depositors, and the dates on which such sums were deposited to the credit of the Government.

Now, Mr. Speaker, these returns have never been brought down to this House, and I know that I was justified, under the circumstances, in making the remark I did, because if I had not pointedly drawn the Minister's attention, perhaps these very returns would never be brought down that I now ask for. I hope now, that we may get both the returns asked for last year and those I am now asking for. The Minister also stated that he was not aware of the difficulties between Mr. Tilton and Mr. Bolton at the time that he appointed Mr. Tilton as Deputy Minister of Marine and Fisheries. Well, it is very singular that he was unaware of that fact, because if I am correctly informed, I think the hon. Minister will find by the papers I now ask for that the difficulty arose some time in September, 1883—that these irregularities actually took place in 1883. The present deputy not having been appointed until some time in July, 1884, I think he will find, when the cheques are produced, that that irregularity took place in 1883. I hope when the papers come down the House will have an opportunity of examining into the whole question and deciding whether any irregularities or improprieties took place in the Department of the Minister of Marine and Fisheries.

Mr. McLELAN. I may say, in respect of the return ordered last year, that the Secretary of State sent to my Department, as well as to other Departments, a list of all the orders to which returns had not been made, and they are now being prepared as rapidly as possible. I think I brought down one or two asked for last year, and I will see that the one now asked for is brought down as soon as possible. The hon. gentleman is entirely in error when he says that the Department became aware of this in 1883. It was not until November, 1884, that I heard anything about it, or that anything was known about it by the officers of the Department. So late as September, 1884, Commander Bolton wrote to the Department, asking for a statement of his account, and, with the permission of the House, I will now read his letter :

“GEORGIAN BAY, 17th September, 1884.

“MY DEAR MR. GOURDEAU.—By an inadvertence I had no copy of my paid contingent account for August. Would you kindly let one of your clerks give me a copy as soon as convenient, to assist me in the squaring up of my accounts to the 30th of June last. I enclose you a statement of moneys received and expended, from the commencement of the survey to the end of fiscal year, as near as I can come to it. The only thing I am in doubt about, is my own salary. Had I known the late accountant was not keeping a separate account of it, I would have been more particular about what I received last autumn. Please to understand that I send this account quite privately, with a view to assisting you in letting me know how I stood to the Department on 30th of June last, for really I do not know whether the Department owes me money or the reverse. Before I left Ottawa I tried to make it understood how literally impossible it is to cash a large cheque like the one I lately received for salary and wages for last month, and, as you are doubtless aware, have written officially for the money in future to be sent in individual cheques, as was the case in July.”

Mr. Gourdeau, I may say, was the acting accountant after the appointment of Mr. Tilton as Deputy Minister.

Mr. BLAKE. Of course, it is quite impossible for the House, in view of the contradictory statements, to arrive at any conclusion as to what the state of the account may be between Mr. Bolton and Mr. Tilton; but upon the Minister's own statement it seems to me that an extremely grave irregularity and impropriety has been committed with reference to the management of the public moneys, an irregularity and impropriety so grave that I am surprised the hon. Minister should have stated it across the House without indicating his own entire dissent from the transaction. There is no security whatever with reference to public moneys, if they are to be dealt with as the Minister has stated the public moneys have been dealt with in this case. I understand that money cannot be paid, under our law and regulations, except to the individual to whom, by the vote of Parliament or by other authority, they are due. I understand it to be the rule that cheques or other letters of credit, instruments of payment, shall be made to the order of the person who is entitled to the payment, and that if there is any difficulty in the way of the personal receipt by that party in cashing the cheque, if anybody else is to receive it, a letter of attorney, according to the practice of the departments, is to be given in favor of some other person, who may receive the money or cheque and acquit the public service of the demand. It was so palpable that, even with those precautions, even when you adhere to the law, even when you arranged that there should be some person, if not the individual, who would be able to acquit the public service of the debt, it would be an improper thing that persons in the public service should be that attorney; that so long ago as 1870 an Order in Council was passed, on 25th January in that year, providing that no officer in the Civil Service shall, under any circumstances, be permitted to act as attorney for the receipt of public money. That order has remained in force ever since. So, had Mr. Tilton held a power of attorney from Staff Commander Bolton to receive his salary, it would be a breach of duty by Mr. Tilton to have accepted that power and to have received the money, and it would have been a breach of duty on the part of the other officers of the Department to have permitted the cheque to be payable to Mr. Tilton's order or to have accepted his endorsement on the cheque for that of Staff Commander Bolton. It is not for me to defend the Order in Council. It was passed when hon. gentlemen opposite were in power. It was held unrepealed during the period when their successors held office. It has been left unrepealed ever since. It has remained the law for fourteen years at least. If, therefore, the hon. Minister had stated that Mr. Tilton had a power of attorney from Staff Commander Bolton to receive money due to that gentleman and to acquit the Department of the debt, he would have told us of a breach of the rules regulating the Civil Service and of the Order in Council and a grave breach of discipline. He has told us, however, that Mr. Tilton had no power of attorney, and that two cheques made payable to bearer instead of to order were handed over to this officer, and one of those cheques, it seems, in the absence of the chief of the Department, was actually made out by the Accountant; so Mr. Tilton made the cheques payable to bearer in order that he (Tilton) might receive the money.

Mr. McLELAN. Mr. Tilton and Mr. Goodall.

Mr. BLAKE. Whether there was one actor and two conspirators in this matter, I do not know or care. But for one or two officers to make cheques payable to bearer instead of to order—although the cheques are printed as payable to order, so that the country may have that security—in order that one of those officers might himself receive the money, was a breach of discipline infinitely grosser than it would have been had Mr. Tilton received power of attorney from Staff Commander Bolton, and produced it as a reason why he had power to receive the money. That, however, would be a breach of discipline. But what was it, according to the statement of the hon. Minister, when the person appointed to sign the cheques, drew them in a form which deprived the public of the usual security, and drew it because he had not authority to endorse the cheque or receive the money? That which was done with regard to the two cheques for $300 might be done the following day with two cheques for $300,000; yet there was no condemnation of the transaction by the hon. Minister, and the only man he denounced was the hon. member for North Wellington (Mr. McMullen) who has submitted this motion.

Mr. MITCHELL. I have listened with a good deal of interest to this discussion. I have done so because the hon. gentleman whose reputation was assailed by the hon. member for Wellington (Mr. McMullen) is an officer who was placed in the Department by myself, a gentleman who, for seven years and a-half, while I occupied the hon. position of Minister of Marine and Fisheries, was my private secretary and accountant of the Department. During the whole of that time I found Mr. Tilton a straightforward, upright, honorable man. I believe him to be so still. I have watched with intense interest, not only the charges brought against him by the hon. member for Wellington (Mr. McMullen), but the explanation of the hon. Minister in his defence, and I have come to the conclusion that what the hon. member for West Durham (Mr. Blake) has said, that there has been a looseness, a violation, perhaps, of a regulation of the Department, may be perfectly true. Everyone who knows Mr. Tilton is aware, if he has a failing, it is a disposition to oblige, to conciliate and to accommodate everyone with whom he is brought in contact. I can understand the position of Mr. Tilton in regard to Staff Commander Bolton. A gentleman coming from abroad, appointed to perform a duty on the Georgian Bay, where it was impossible, as he wrote, to cash cheques and transmit money to his wife, who, with his family, is in England, for their support, asks Mr. Tilton to do what he did, and Mr. Tilton, with that disposition to assist, which has characterised him, acceded to his request. I have listened to the charges brought against him. I was disgusted with the course pursued by the hon. gentleman who brought this motion before the House. Where the private reputation of a public officer is assailed in a matter such as this, about a paltry $200 between Mr. Tilton and Staff Commander Bolton, the duty of a public man, such as the hon. member for Wellington (Mr. McMullen), in bringing the matter before the House, was to have laid the matter calmly and dispassionately before the House, not to have dilated and discussed the merits of the case until we had the papers before us and were able to form an opinion as to whether the outside charges brought against Mr. Tilton were true or not, and hon. members had an opportunity from the papers of ascertaining the facts. I have come to this conclusion, and I believe it will be found to be the correct one, that, from the letter which the Minister has read, it appears that Staff Commander Bolton did not know the actual state of his account, at all events as far as public money is concerned and the amount drawn by Mr. Tilton. The Minister states that there is only $13 difference between the bills of exchange drawn and the drafts placed in Mr. Tilton's hands. I am surprised that the reputation of an honorable man like Mr. Tilton should be assailed about a paltry matter like this; and I take this opportunity, from my place in this House, as one who has known him for years, to say that until some evidence more substantial than mere outside rumors, mere scandalous attacks by rivals, perhaps, in office, by persons envious of his position and jealous of his honorable position, I cannot believe he is guilty. I am surprised that hon. members should come forward and prejudge the question, and ask the House to prejudge it. I do not deny that the hon. member for West Durham (Mr. Blake) is right in saying that no public officer should act as a party to receive money. Perhaps that matter may have been overlooked. It was not, however, a question of receiving, but of transmitting money to Staff Commander Bolton's wife and family in England, while he was on Georgian Bay and could not get cheques cashed; and if, after two or three years of transactions of this kind, a question did arise in the accounts—as they are very likely to have arisen, Staff Commander Bolton not having an opportunity of checking them and perhaps not being very accurate in keeping accounts—I say it is an outrageous thing that the character of an honorable public officer, as I know Mr. Tilton to be, and such I believe him at this moment to be,—I say that it is outrageous that an attempt should be made to throw a reproach on his character—and through him attack the Ministry, for what I can only describe as either political or envious individual purposes. Why is not the reputation of Mr. Deputy Smith assailed in conjunction with him? Mr. Smith signed one of the cheques, and signed it "bearer."

Mr. BOWELL. He changed it and initialed it.

Mr. MITCHELL. Why? Because Mr. Tilton has been a true supporter of the party in power, while Mr. Smith has been a renegade to the party in power, and therefore they let Mr. Smith slip by, and try to drag Mr. Tilton down to the level of the mean curs who never should have attacked him.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. I think the hon. gentleman might have remembered, when he lectured my hon. friend on the impropriety of attacking the character of civil servants, that for him to speak in the terms which he has just used towards an old and valuable public officer like Mr. Smith, is certainly, considering his long standing in Parliament, a grosser outrage than anything that was said by my hon. friend with reference to Mr. Tilton.

Mr. MITCHELL. It is a new experience to me to be lectured by the man who has vilified the Premier of this country on every possible occasion, as the hon. gentleman has who has just sat down.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. You will get it, if you deserve it as he did.

Mr. MITCHELL. You will get it before I am done with you.

Motion agreed to.

IMPORTS AND EXPORTS OF WHEAT AND FLOUR.

Mr. PATERSON (Brant) moved for :

A return showing the quantity and value of wheat and flour imported into and exported from the Dominion, by Provinces, during the six months ending 31st December, 1884.

He said: I ask the privilege of adding to the motion the following:—

"Distinguishing in the imports the quantity entered for home consumption, and in the exports the product of Canada."

Mr. BOWELL. This motion is covered by one which was made on the 6th of February, by Mr. Cameron (Middlesex), with the exception of the words which the hon. gentleman now proposes to add. The motion of the hon. member for Middlesex was for :

"A return showing the quantity of wheat, flour, corn and cornmeal imported into and exported from the various Provinces, from the 1st of July to the 31st December, 1884."

That covers the whole of the motion with the addition of corn and cornmeal. If that motion, which has been carried covers, as I think it does, the hon. gentleman's motion, I would have no objection to instructing the addition to be made to it, showing that entered for home consumption, and that for exportation the product of Canada.

Mr. PATERSON (Brant). That is the information I am anxious to get.

Mr. MITCHELL. I am sorry that the Minister of Finance is not here, for when this subject was referred to last year I called his attention to the fact that a strong disposition exists to have the duty taken off cornmeal, an article which is scarcely produced in this country, and which is largely consumed, at least by the poor people of my own county. When I called his attention to it last Session, when we were passing the Estimates, the Finance Minister stated then that he could not take the duty off that year. I said, we may hope, then, that next year it may be taken off, and he smiled upon me. What he meant by that smile I do not know, but if he were here I would ask him to interpret that smile, and to say if he had any intention of removing the duty. I notice that a delegation of millers has recently waited on the First Minister, with a view of getting an increased duty on flour, claiming that the duty which exists on flour and wheat was relatively against the National Policy, and against the interests of the manufacturers of flour in this country. Now, I want to say for one, that if the Government intend to increase this duty, that it is just as well to take this early opportunity of explaining what my position, with regard to the matter, will be; for if the Government have any intention of complying with—to use the words which were applied by the hon. member for Durham (Mr. Blake), to the correspondent of the Herald, in relation to a certain question the other day—if they intend to comply with the impudent suggestion of the millers, and that additional duty is to be imposed, this House and the Government may depend upon it that there will be a fight for it before it is put on.

Mr. BLAKE. I wish it distinctly understood that I did not state that the proposal of the millers was an impudent proposal—it was quite a different proposal that I characterised as impudent. I wish, as far as I can, to placate the hon. gentleman. My efforts in that direction have not been very successful heretofore. I paid him, I think, a very handsome compliment the other night, and gave him a free advertisement of his enterprise, and he attacked me very violently. I shall make another effort—I do not know whether I shall succeed or not—and I will say of him that, from all I have known of him these many years, I think Mr. Tilton was an admirable man to be his private secretary.

Mr. MITCHELL. While I thank the hon. gentleman for some of his compliments, I do not think his attempt to pay a compliment to me is very happy. I did not say that the hon. gentleman said that the report of the millers was an impudent attempt. I used the same language with reference to the millers that the hon. gentleman used in relation to the correspondent of the Herald, in connection with a much more important matter. As I entered this House I heard him use the expression, “the impudent suggestion of the correspondent of the Herald,” and I applied that expression to the attempt of the millers. I say that the efforts of the millers to impose a tax of $1 a barrel on the flour used by the poor people of this country is an impudent attempt to get more protection, which shall not meet with my support. The hon. gentleman can pay compliments if he likes. I have not received many compliments from him during the last twelve years, at all events since 1873 or 1874. Latterly he has been disposed to pay a few compliments, for which I am very thankful; I am thankful for small favors. I respect the hon. gentleman's great abilities and talents. I know the hon. gentleman imagines that he is the greatest man in this House. I dare say he is—when a lot of us are out of it. But on my responsibility, as a representative of the people, I have the right to act for myself, and I shall endeavor so to conduct myself in this House as to do credit to the people who have done me the honor to send me here to look after their interests.

Motion agreed to.

DRAWBACKS ON MANUFACTURED EXPORTS.

Mr. PATERSON (Brant) moved for:

Return of all claims presented for drawbacks on goods manufactured for export (since the date of the last return made to this House), showing the names of all applicants, their place of business, the articles on which the drawback was claimed and the amount of each claim, distinguishing between the claims which have been allowed and those which have been disallowed, and those under consideration and not yet decided, and giving the reason for such disallowance. Also, copies of all regulations made by the Department with reference to such claims, together with a copy of one allowed claim and the sworn declaration thereto of each exporter.

He said: This motion asks for a return similar to what has been brought down during the last few years. In previous returns a great many sheets have been taken up with statements of refunds on tins for lobster canning. I have no desire to get these in detail, as I know they entail a great deal of work, and are all similar. It would answer my purpose if the number of claims were stated in the aggregate. If it is prepared in that way, I think the return can be brought down very soon. I judge, from what I have seen in the newspapers about interviews with the Ministers, with reference to claims made by manufacturers for drawbacks, that probably new rules have been adopted, facilitating the handling of the matter by the Department. If so, I desire to have copies of all those new regulations.

Mr. BOWELL. There is no date stated in the return, and I suppose the hon. gentleman will have no objection to have it brought up to the 1st of this month.

Mr. PATERSON (Brant). Whatever date will suit you will suit me.

Mr. BOWELL. Say the 1st of the month. I might add that the return will not be encumbered this year with any statements of the drawback on tin. As there is no duty on tin now, there is no drawback.

Mr. PATERSON (Brant). Has that been the case all the year.

Mr. BOWELL. Oh, yes; it was taken off two years ago; but the last return contained every claim that was made previous to the placing of tin on the free list.

Mr. PATERSON (Brant). Have they all been settled?

Mr. BOWELL. I think so.

Motion agreed to.

INSPECTORS OR CLERKS OF WORKS.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT, in the absence of Mr. Mackenzie, moved for:

A statement showing the names of all persons employed by the Department of Public Works or other Department of the Government as inspectors or clerks of works on any building or other public work during the years 1882-83 and 1883-84, with statement showing the amount paid to such persons for services as such officials, and the rate per month or per diem to each; also, the gross amount expended by the Government in each year on such works under the inspection of each clerk of works; also, a statement showing the actual profession or calling of each such clerk of works.

Mr. POPE. The hon. the Minister of Public Works wished to add from 1873-74.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. That ought to be put in a separate work. The result of making additions is, first, to add largely to the expense, and next, to defer bringing down information we want to use to a late period of the Session.

Mr. POPE. You will get it down soon.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. When?

Mr. POPE. Very soon; not to-morrow, but very soon.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. If we get it soon, I have not the least objection, but let the hon. gentleman make the addition.

Mr. POPE moved, in amendment, that “since 1873-74” be added.

Motion, as amended, agreed to.

SUBSIDIES TO RAILWAYS IN NOVA SCOTIA AND CAPE BRETON.

Mr. McDougall moved for

Statement of subsidies in cash and subventions, of whatever kind, on railways in the Province of Nova Scotia, including the Island of Cape Breton, chargeable to capital account, since the date of Confederation, whether in aid of construction or acquiring of said railways, and the number of miles located in each county.

He said: I may state, Mr. Speaker, that the information sought by the motion which I have just tabled, refers to a subject of great importance to the Island of Cape Breton, and in a special manner to the people of the county which I have the honor to represent, which is my apology for offering a few remarks in relation to the peculiar position occupied by the Island of Cape Breton in the railway history of Nova Scotia. Many years previous to Confederation railway agitation was commenced by the people of Cape Breton, and strong appeals were being made by the people to the Parliaments of those days, but without any satisfactory result. Previous to Confederation the Legislature of Nova Scotia, however, undertook the building of several lines of railway east and west in the Province. Those lines have been taken by the Dominion Government, and have been, by Acts of this Legislature, further aided and extended, besides the extensions which have been aided by Provincial subsidies and subventions. I am aware that legislation took place in this House, as well as in our Provincial Legislature at Halifax, which provided for the building of a line of railway to the eastern seaboard of Cape Breton, but, so far as I am aware, Sir, not a dollar has been expended, and not a mile has been built in Cape Breton to this day. We have certain lines of railway in the county which I represent, but these lines were built by private enterprise and without any aid from our Local Government, and I am of the opinion that when the information which I now ask for is placed on the Table of this House it will fail to show that a single dollar was paid by the Dominion Legislature in aid of those roads. Sir, while millions after millions of money were being voted and expended under the authority of the Local Legislatures of Nova Scotia and this Legislature as well, so far as I am aware not a dollar has been expended on railways in Cape Breton. The people of Cape Breton are a hardy and hard working people, and to that fact may be attributed the degree of success and prosperity to which they have attained in the prosecution of their respective avocations, and not, Sir, to any attention which they have received at the hands of successive Administrations, both local and Dominion, who have been from year to year appropriating and legislating away in other directions the benefits accruing from their hard labor, which they were obliged to perform while undergoing hardships and disadvantages which were not being endured by their fellow people in the more favored sections of the Province. The people of Cape Breton, Sir, are engaged in some of the most important industries of the Dominion. They are engaged in agriculture, commerce and shipping, mining and fishing. It will be necessary, Sir, that I should briefly refer to the comparative standing of the extent to which those industries are being prosecuted by the people of Cape Breton with that of their fellow people on the mainland and other parts of the Dominion, in order to show to the House the just reasons which they have for complaint, and in justification of an equitable participation in the railway expenditures of the Dominion. In the year 1881 there was owned, in the Province of Nova Scotia :

With regard to our commercial and shipping industry, I might say, Sir, that owing to our long season of closed navigation, which extends from the month of December until the 1st (and some years nearly the end) of May, we have six months of comparative idleness; but, Sir, I propose to show to the House the extent of our shipping, as compared with some of the principal shipping ports of the Province, as an evidence that our people engaged in that industry suffer for want of a railway. The harbor of Sydney, I may say, is the principal harbor frequented by shipping during the period of open navigation. The shipping which entered that harbor during the year 1884, according to the report of the harbor commissioners, for that year was:

1884—Steamers.....	392	Tonnage.....	275,977

If Parliament had done as much for the improvement of commercial facilities in the harbor of Sydney as it did in the harbor of Halifax, by building their railways, wharves, elevators, docks, is it not proper to assume that the commercial standing of Cape Breton would to-day be double what it is? Referring to the harbor of Pictou, although closed by ice during about the same time as the harbor of Sydney, in view of the fact that by reason of the railway from Halifax east having that as one of its terminal points, being the only means of communication between Prince Edward Island and Nova Scotia and the Dominion, I may say it is hardly credible that with all those advantages over Sydney that the tonnage of Sydney exceeds it, in the year 1883, by 200,634 tons, and its tonnage for the same year exceeds Halifax by 116,190. Now, Mr. Speaker, with regard to the fishing. I may be told, Sir, that the fishing industry has no bearing on this railway subject, but it has a very important bearing on the subject of railway extension into Cape Breton. The fishermen of Cape Breton, particularly in Cape Breton, in Inverness and Victoria suffer many hardships, the most of their shores being surrounded with ice during five or six months of the year, and having no outlet by land. They are, in consequence, compelled to secure their supplies in many cases, for the spring fishing, six months in advance, otherwise the best part of the fishing season may be over before they can secure them and get in readiness to commence their fishing after the opening of navigation. In addition to this, they are compelled to send their fish to market earlier in the season, and when the market is glutted and prices low, for two reasons: that they are compelled to do it in order to be able to meet the obligations incurred in getting their supplies the previous year, and because, if they do not ship before winter sets in, they will not be able to ship for six or seven months more. The fisheries of the Dominion, in the year 1883, were estimated as follows:—

1883.
N. Scotia.....	$7,689,374 75	C. B. Co.....	$223,739 40
N. B	3,185,874 88	Inv	530,323 50
Quebec.....	2,38,997 12	Rich.....	352,993 90
P. E. I.....	1,272,487 93	Vic.....	159,168 40
B. C.....	1,644,645 42
Ontario	1,027,032 88	Total C. B..	$1,176,215 20
Total Dom..		$16,958,192 98

Thus it will be seen that the Island of Cape Breton in that year possessed one-fourteenth the fisheries of the Dominion. How much better would the condition of this class of our people be if they were in a position to get their supplies whenever they wanted them, and not five or six months before, and if they could send the products of their labor into the markets of the world whenever the prices would be most encouraging. But, Sir, without a railway they cannot better their condition. I will now refer to the coal industry, which is not by any means the least in importance among the industries in which our people are engaged. I may say, Sir, that this industry suffers more injustice in the Island of Cape Breton, owing to the absence of railway facilities and the manner in which successive Governments have dealt with the railways of Nova Scotia, than any other industry. Through this industry the people of Cape Breton, and I might say in this particular, the people of the county I represent, have contributed more revenue to the Provincial Treasury than Nova Scotia proper and more than the proportion according to population, to the Dominion Treasury. Notwithstanding the fact that the building of railways in Nova Scotia proper, by both the Local Legislature and Dominion, not only encouraged the successful working of those mines but created a market for about one-half the present output of coal, between the quantity consumed by those railways and the opening of markets which could not be reached by them without a railway, and which could not be reached by the people of Cape Breton. I will take the amount of revenue paid by the Island of Cape Breton, as compared with Nova Scotia, for a period of years before the existence of those railways, and since, which are as follows, during the period from beginning of 1864 to 1868:—

	Total revenue of N.S. from coal.	C. B. Island proportion.	N. S. proper proportion.	Difference in favor of C. B.	Difference in favor of N.S. prop'r
1864 to 68.	$284,561 73	$182,657 07	$ 91,904 56	$80,752 41
1869 to 73.	312,137 92	173,409 90	138,728 02	34,681 78
1874 to 78.	310,787 29	147,702 19	163,085 10	15,362 91
1879 to 83.	381,364 93	185,938 90	195,426 03	9,487 13

Thus it will be seen that Cape Breton, in twenty years, paid into the Provincial Treasury more revenue by about $190,000 than Nova Scotia counties. In consequence of having railway facilities the mining managers of Nova Scotia have an unfair advantage over those of Cape Breton, inasmuch as that during the winter seasons, when, as a general rule, they make their contracts for the supply of coal at the various points, in this instance the people of Nova Scotia can safely calculate the cost of placing their coal at any point, knowing the railway charges, while the people of Cape Breton, who are obliged to ship all by water, have to depend on an uncertain state of freight charges. Besides that, the Nova Scotians can work the mines during the whole year, while the Cape Breton mines are thrown into idleness for about six or seven months of the year. It can be seen, by a statement in the Provincial Engineer's Report, for Nova Scotia, that the building and existence of those railways into the coal fields of Nova Scotia have not only given increased activity to those collieries, but that the railways in themselves have created a permanent market for large quantities of coal from the Nova Scotia mines. The coal supplied from the different mines in Nova Scotia to the Intercolonial Railway, in 1880, were as follows:—

For Intercolonial use.		Tons.
New Glasgow		95,685
Stellarton		125,373
Spring Hill.....		36,725
Maccan.....		892
Albion		7,320
Dunmore		13,240
Nappan		20
		278,655

Now the total sales for the collieries supplying this coal for that year was:

	Tons.
Pictou.....	434,922
Cumberland	134,671
569,593

One-half of which the Intercolonial Railway consumed. Thus, the Government build the railways to carry their coal, provide the cars in which it is carried, and take the coal in the end and pay them the price for it at the expense of the people of Cape Breton, as well as those of any other part of the Dominion, while our Cape Breton people have to build their railways, harbors, piers, cars, &c., without any aid and get no Government patronage in coal sales.

Total Cumberland and Pictou... 684,156

These were the coal shipments by quarters of the year. Now, Sir, these facts go to show, that by reason of these mines having railways running to their pits, they are in a position to work their mines to nearly as good advantage in the winter months as in the summer months, while the people of the Island of Cape Breton, who work in the mines, are idle, and have to maintain their equipment, their staff of officers, a large number of horses to work their mines, and feed them for nothing, during six months of the year. Moreover, they are obliged to contribute their quota towards the extension of railways in other parts of the Province, while they do not participate themselves in the benefits to the extent of one single dollar. That is the position in the Island of Cape Breton, as compared with the rest of Nova Scotia, in regard to railway facilities, and I hope that the necessity which compelled me to call attention to the matter at this early stage of my parliamentary career will not exist after the rising of this Legislature at the present Session. I hope the Administration will come before the House with some policy which will provide for the extension of the Intercolonial Railway system into the Island of Cape Breton at a very early day. I hold that if they undertook the extension of that railway into the Island, the expenditure will be one which will be met by an additional revenue from the Island that will place the Dominion Treasury, within not many years, in the position in which it was before a dollar was spent or contributed towards that extension. This is what I have to say with regard to this question, and in conclusion I have to apologise to the House for taking up so much of its time, and to you, Mr. Speaker, as a new member, for I have probably travelled outside of the latitude to which I was entitled in connection with my motion.

Motion agreed to.

LIFE-SAVING SERVICE AT PORT ROWAN.

Mr. JACKSON moved for:

Copies of all correspondence between the Government and the captain of the life-saving service at Port Rowan, Province of Ontario, not already brought down.

He said: During last Session I called the attention of the Minister of Marine to the inefficiency of the life-saving service at Port Rowan. At that time I submitted that the service was deficient in everything except in a second or third-class boat; the sailors were not provided with life-preservers, life-jackets—they had no lines or mortars of any kind, and these are all very important articles for such a service. In answer to my motion, the hon. gentleman stated as follows:—

"I am aware that the boat at that station does not possess all the improvements of the life-boats of the present day. I have, however, had two of the most approved life-boats made in Buffalo, and I have specifications of those made, and they are now ready. I intend to have a number of life-boats of the most approved pattern in use manufactured as early as possible; and if the hon. gentleman's statement is correct, that that is the most exposed position in the west, we shall place one of the improved life-boats at that station."

At that time I made the statement that that was one of the most exposed stations on the chain of lakes, and in proof of that statement I would refer to the loss of life and property which takes place there. There is no official record kept in regard to these losses, so far as I can find, except for the ten years between 1858 and 1868. A report was made for that period and the losses of property amounted to over a quarter million dollars while some twenty-seven lives were lost. Since that time there have been no statistics kept, so far as I know, but I am aware that in the fall of 1883 there were five large vessels lost and eight valuable lives. Again, in 1884, a Canadian propeller, called the Fortune, was lost, though I am happy to say that no lives were sacrificed. The life-saving crew did noble work on that occasion in saving the lives of the people upon the propeller though they labored under the disadvantage of having very inefficient boats. A few days before the Session opened I called at Port Rowan and saw the captain of the life-saving service there, and he told me that they had not been supplied with anything during the last year, and the service was in a deplorable condition, not even proper oars for the service. He also told me that the men employed there by the Government, including the captain himself, had not been paid their wages. I think that considering the amount of money that is paid by this Government for other purposes, it is too bad that men depending on their daily wages for the support of themselves and their families should not be paid the money which is due them. I hope the Minister will not allow this notice to pass without effect, but that he will take early steps to see that these poor men are paid. They were compelled to sell their time at a loss of 25 or 30 per cent., in order to maintain their families. Since last Session my attention has been called to a life-boat which is built in the United States, and I saw a statement that the Americans are using a boat called Capt. Dobbins' self-righting and self-baling boat, which is said to be of a very superior character. At the time the statement was made, eleven of those boats had been in the service and all had given excellent satisfaction. Now, I hope the hon. Minister will see his way clear to supply that service with one of those new styles of boats on the opening of navigation, and that before another fall the service will be placed in an efficient state.

Mr. McLELAN. The papers will be brought down as rapidly as possible. I am surprised to hear from the hon. gentleman that the men who were engaged in the service at Port Rowan, during the past year, have not yet received their pay. I will make enquiry into that matter. In all cases, as soon as the captain in charge of the station makes his return of the service performed for the period, the cheques are immediately forwarded. I may say further, that on the specifications prepared last season of the Dobbins life-boats, I called for tenders for twelve of them, and six were ordered for construction in Ontario and six in the east. As it is a new work for the boat-builders, some delay occurred, and we were not able to get the boats in time for last fall's service; but I had enquiries made a few weeks ago as to the condition of the work, and I am assured that the boats will be ready for the spring service. They are of the pattern the hon. gentleman describes—self-righting and self-baling. We have procured two of them from the United States, and they are very excellent boats and give great satisfaction.

Mr. JACKSON. Will the hon. gentleman see that these men are paid?

Mr. McLELAN. I will make enquiries to see why they have not been paid. If the returns have been sent in by the captain, I will see that they are paid at once.

Motion agreed to.

CAPE TRAVERSE BRANCH—PAYMENT OF LABORERS.

Mr. HACKETT moved for:

Copies of all petitions, letters and other correspondence between the Government and any other parties relating to the payment of wages due the laborers employed on the construction of the Cape Traverse branch of the Prince Edward Island Railway.

He said: I desire to state that, in the spring of 1883, I think, the Government called for tenders for the construction of the Cape Traverse branch of the Prince Edward Island Railway. Messrs. Gray & Wheaton, contractors, of New Brunswick, were the lowest tenderers, and were awarded the contract. In prosecuting the work that season, it appears that they took over with them some men from New Brunswick, who were called sub-contractors, who were supposed to have taken contracts under the contractors and gone on with the work. A number of people on the Island were employed in the work of construction. Matters proceeded very favorably for a while, but towards the close of the season a few of the sub-contractors left between two days, and a number of the laborers were left unpaid. Now, Sir, the question was asked last Session whether any provision had been made in the contract whereby the laborers would be protected in regard to their wages, or whether the Government would see that justice was done to them; and Sir Charles Tupper replied as follows:—

"There is a clause in the contract as follows:—

"If the contractors fail at any time in paying the salaries or wages of any person employed by them upon or in respect of the said works, or any of them, and any part of such salary be one month in arrear, or if there be due to any such person one month's wages or salary, the engineer may notify the contractors to pay such salary or wages, and if two days elapse and the same be not paid in full up to the date of payment, or to such other date as may be in accordance with the terms of employment of such person, then Her Majesty may pay to such person salary or wages from any date to any date, and to any amount which may be payable, and may charge the same to the contractors, and the contractors covenant with Her Majesty to repay at once and any and every sum so paid."

"It is the intention of the Government to do anything in their power under this clause to protect the laborers."

I regret that nothing has been done to protect the laborers, or to see that their wages have been paid under this clause of the contract. I believe some negotiations were entered into to effect a compromise between the laborers and the contractors. I think those negotiations were successful to some extent; but a great many claims are still unpaid, and the laborers, in their endeavors to secure their rights, entered actions against the contractors. In some cases judgments have been obtained against the contractors in the Island courts, but when the parties proceeded to enforce judgment, no property could be found in the Province, the contractors having left the Province. The matter, therefore, now remains in the hands of the Government, and I hope the Government, in accordance with the statement of Sir Charles Tupper, will see that justice is done to the laborers, and that when they consider it necessary to place in contracts a clause of this kind, they will see the necessity of carrying it into effect, by securing the payment of the laborers engaged on this branch. Most of those people depend on their labor to provide for themselves and their families, and it has been a great hardship to them, so far, to be kept out of their just rights. When the papers come down, I hope it will be found that some action has been taken by the Government towards having them paid.

Mr. POPE. We have heard no complaints about the laborers not being paid; but all the papers will be brought down.

Mr. DAVIES. I may say to the Acting Minister that towards the close of last Session I asked the Minister of Railways whether the contract for the construction of that branch contained a clause allowing the Department to pay the laborers in case the contractors failed to pay them, and Sir Charles Tupper informed me that the contract did contain such a clause, and that he would take measures to see it carried out. I was fully under the impression, after that official statement, that the laborers would be paid. I would ask the hon. Minister to look at that contract, and I think he will find that Sir Charles Tupper was right.

Mr. POPE. I am told that Mr. Archibald, before he paid the contractors, insisted that the laborers should be paid; whether that is true or not I do not know, but that is the rumor. It is very possible that they have not been paid without our knowing anything about it. We have heard no complaints. However, the matter will be looked into.

Mr. DAVIES. Complaints were made last Session, and it was on those complaints that I called the attention of the Minister of Railways to the matter, and he then promised to attend to it.

Motion agreed to.

GRAND TRUNK RAILWAY.

Mr. MITCHELL moved:

For a copy of the document or instrument containing the assurance received by the Government, on or about the 17th day of April last, from the Grand Trunk Railway Company, referred to by the Right Honourable Sir John A. Macdonald on that day in his place in this House, to the effect that the Grand Trunk Railway Company would set aside £1,000,000 sterling for the purpose of double-tracking the line of the Grand Trunk Railway between Montreal and Toronto.

Also, a copy of the report of the denial of the said assurance, and of the statements alleged to have been made in respect of it, by Sir Henry Tyler, the president of the said company, at the meeting thereof held in London, England, shortly after the said announcement; and copies of all correspondence between the Government and any official of the said company respecting the said assurance.

He said: It will be in the recollection of every hon. gentleman present, that a very important discussion took place during the last Session of Parliament upon the Bill presented by the Grand Trunk for the consideration of and passage through this House. I will not refer in detail to the circumstances connected with that—I was going to say nefarious—transaction; but I will say that a transaction reflecting less credit upon the promoters of it, never passed through this House, and it will be in the recollection of every hon. gentleman in this House, that it became the duty of the First Minister to put a notice on the paper to recall the Bill, for the purpose of undoing the fraudulent transaction completed by its passage through the Senate and its passage through this House. It will be recollected that it became my duty as a public man, having taken an interest in the matter, to address a letter to the then Minister of Railways (Sir Charles Tupper), in which I reviewed the whole transaction, and it was upon that letter the action of the House took place which resulted in the First Minister putting a notice on the paper to recall the Bill. I will not go over in detail the circumstances that transpired from day to day, lasting some seven or eight days, in which the general manager of the Grand Trunk Railway danced attendance around the lobbies of this House and followed the right hon. the First Minister, fawning upon him, for the purpose of getting out of the difficulty. It will be in the recollection of every one how the right hon. gentleman, who, I am sorry, is not in his place, from day to day fenced the question as to what was to be done in relation to that Bill, and it will be in the recollection of every one, also, that after having been repeatedly called upon and having as repeatedly put off a decision in relation to this matter, he said, in answer to me, on the 17th of April, last Session—but I will read both question and reply:

"Mr. MITCHELL. Before the Orders of the Day are called, I wish to state that we were promised the matter of the Grand Trunk Company would be proceeded with to-day, and I should like to know what the right hon. gentleman proposes to do in relation to it.

"Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. That item will be dropped. The Government have received assurance from the Grand Trunk Railway Company that they will set aside, out of the money, £1,000,000 sterling to be applied to no other purpose than the placing of a double track between Montreal and Toronto."

Now, Sir, within a very short time after that statement was made by the right hon. gentleman, I find, on the 25th of April of the same year, a report of a meeting of the Grand Trunk Railway Company, held in London. The report is too long to occupy the attention of the House by reading all the scurrility it contains, applied by the people who control that company to the people of Canada, to the country of Canada, as a locality for railway enterprise; to the Parliament of Canada and the Government of Canada. The statements contained in that report are most scandalous as applied to an independent Parliament such as this. I will not occupy the time of the House in reading them, but will confine myself to the object of the motion I have in view, and to find who the Ananias is in this transaction, for there is one, and a big one, somewhere. Sir Henry Tyler said, in reply to a jacknal of the Grand Trunk Railway, by the name of Mr. William Abbott:

"I may mention that the friends of the Canadian Pacific have been trying to do us further harm, whilst Mr. Hickson has been endeavoring to reduce the wages to a proper level—not to an inordinate low rate, but to a proper and fair level. Our antagonists have been stirring up strife amongst our men by articles in the newspapers, and by other means, to try and get them not to accept the reduction. (Cries of 'shame.') Mr. Abbott also asked about an alleged liability of a million of pounds for doubling the line. We have incurred no liability for doubling the line whatever. We are not going to ask you for any money for that purpose at present, and the only statement which has been made for which there is color is this: that when the Grand Trunk Act of 1884 was before Parliament, there was a question of recommitting it because the Lower House did not agree to the amendments of the Senate."

That is the way they put it. If they said the House agreed to recommit it because the legislation was stolen from the Senate by misrepresentation, it would have been nearer the truth.

"And in order to get it through this Session, Mr. Hickson said he would have no objection if one million was reserved for the object of doubling the line between Toronto and Montreal. That seems to be the state of affairs, according to a cable message we have received. I have now only to put the resolution."

And so on. My object in bringing this resolution before the House is to call the attention of this House to the scandalous statements which these people make, the scandalous misrepresentations which they have made. The House will perhaps like to hear some of them. I will give them some tit-bits from the report:

"Some persons have made the suggestion, and with a full view of the law of libel facing me, I would ask how many of the members of the Dominion Government who voted for the £6,000,000 when the Canadian Pacific were interested in the syndicate."

And so on :

"We have been asked to do the bidding of the Canadian Parliament, but I wonder if it is worth while to speak about such a veal and corrupt place as it seems to be."

The report of these men's speeches abounds in such statements and slanders upon the Parliament of Canada. I do not, however, propose to deal with the slanderous statements of these men who have vilified Canada persistently, who have slandered the country, the Government and Parliament, and who have attempted to destroy the credit and the enterprises of our country; but what I want to find out now is this: who told the truth in this matter? Did Sir John, when he said that he had £1,000,000 stg. put aside by the Grand Trunk Railway for the purpose of doubling the track, under an engagement with Mr. Hickson? Did he tell the truth? I believe he did. Or, taking the statement made by Mr. Hickson to Sir Henry Tyler, and repeated by him to the stockholders at their annual meeting, did they tell the truth? I now ask this House, in accordance with the terms of the resolution, that the correspondence and agreement in relation to that transaction be brought down in order that we may judge them ourselves.

Mr. POPE. I can only say to my hon. friend that he must be quite aware that there has been no million of dollars set apart, that there have been no bonds sold, that the thing remains in the position in which it was when this House adjourned. At the same time, I sympathise with the hon. gentleman fully in his remarks as to the observations made respecting this Parliament. I do not think they were creditable to these people, and I am sure every hon. member of this House feels that the hon. gentleman has only done his duty in raising that question. But with respect to this other matter, I was absent from the House at the time, and as regards the assurance, I know nothing; but I know that there is no objection to bringing down the papers. At the same time, there can be no money set apart, as no bonds have been sold.

Mr. MITCHELL. The right hon. the Premier told me personally, after the House rose that day, that he had the document, and that he would bring it down the very next day and show it to me. I know that there is a document, and accept the assurance of the hon. gentleman that it will be brought down.

Motion agreed to.

INTERCOLONIAL AND BEAVER STEAMSHIP LINE.

Mr. BLAKE moved for:

All correspondence between the Intercolonial officials or the Government and the Canada Shipping Company, or the Beaver line of steamships, with reference to the terms for through rates of freight over the Intercolonial.

He said: As I understand it, the other companies which deal with the Intercolonial have arranged a through rate which covers all points, land and sea transport, and which is divided into certain proportions between the railway companies and the steamship companies. This particular steamship company offered a lower through rate, and the inference I should draw from their statement is that they were not permitted to carry out their offer because the Government declined to give them the reduced rates applicable to the other companies unless they kept up the ocean rate. I understand that on the other hand it is stated that the Government was under the apprehension that they would have to share in the reduction, while the company is said to declare that they intended that the reduction should come entirely out of their ocean rate. Whether they made that clear to the Government or not, I know not. I have had no communication with the company or with anyone on their behalf, except that I as well as others have received this printed document. But I have heard, by means of intending shippers and others, that it was not the intention of the steamship company that the railway company should participate in the reduction, but that the reduction should come out of the ocean rate, leaving the through rate to the railway companies the same identically as that which was accepted on the arrangement with the other two steamship companies. It is important to know exactly how that is, and it is with that view I move for this correspondence.

Motion agreed to.

TRENT VALLEY CANAL.

Mr. BLAKE moved for:

Copies of all correspondence, reports to Council, Orders in Council, reports of engineers on the ground, engineers in charge, and of the Chief Engineer, plans and estimates of cost in connection with the proposed Trent Valley canal.

He said: It will be in the recollection of members of this House who were members of the former House that this subject has occupied to some extent the attention of Parliament, and also the attention of a very considerable section of the country, and that votes have been taken on account in respect to this canal from time to time. It will also be in the recollection of some of us, who have relations more or less close with that particular section of the country, that, during the general election of 1882, very strong statements were made by gentlemen very high in authority in the Government of the country as to the intention and determination to carry out that canal. Not much progress, however, has been made.

Mr. POPE. A good deal.

Mr. BLAKE. Well, we will see. Not much progress has been made. On the contrary, it seems from the report I hold in my hand, the appendix to the report of the Minister, that new plans altogether are now proposed to be adopted, and a new investigation is proposed to be made. The report, at page 131 of the appendix, says:

"TRENT VALLEY CANAL.

"A continuous location survey, estimate, &c., for the direct line, as indicated in a previous report, was completed last spring, and its general results given by me to the Honorable the Minister."

So that, so long ago as last spring, the report and estimates were completed and the results given to the Minister. I sought, but I sought in vain, for that estimate, plan and results last Session. I was told that they were not completed. At what period Mr. Rubidge supposes the spring to end I do not know very well. The statement is vague, and perhaps he thought the spring did not end until after the Parliament rose. But, however that may be, it seems that it is pretty nearly a year ago since so much was done.

"This," the officer goes on to say, "the most direct and practicable line of those examined, necessarily diverged in many important instances from the route originally projected by Baird, in 1835; for which reason representations were subsequently made by persons locally interested in the undertaking, and acquainted with the character of the country traversed, to the effect that a closer adherence to, and the canalisation of all rivers connecting the several lakes was desirable; that, although more circuitous, such a course would, nevertheless, be much cheaper than its adoption by the Government of the line surveyed by me, and would yet be sufficiently direct for all practical purposes, regarded as a natural navigable highway to the west.

"Accordingly, in view of such representations, and of the importance attached to the section of the best location for this extensive work, the Minister directed that additional information in relation to the original project should forthwith be obtained, to enable me to present an estimate therefor, as an alternative line, in the report on surveys, to be submitted to the Chief Engineer of canals.

"The necessary additional information has, in part, been obtained during the past summer, but a more minute examination of the Severn River, and other waters not included in the surveys for the direct line, remains to be accomplished, and as this work can be more satisfactorily performed on the ice, it will be proceeded with during the winter."

Of course, I suppose this will not be through until the spring, and therefore I do not expect to receive the report of this new survey, but for the present it is clear that operations have terminated with reference to the old survey, and that they terminated nearly a year ago. We have the location survey, continuous, the estimate, and so forth, nearly a year ago, and I hope we shall, at an early day, have these papers placed before us.

Mr. POPE. I may say that we have pushed this forward as fast as we could conveniently. The hon. gentleman knows that we never undertake to do anything without doing it in the most economical way we can, and so we proposed to utilise the ice; but, as he appears to be so anxious that the work shall be carried out, that will be a stimulus to us, and I shall push it forward as rapidly as possible.

Mr. BLAKE. Don't stimulate too much.

Motion agreed to.

CANADIAN PACIFIC RAILWAY—WESTERN TERMINUS.

Mr. BLAKE. When we were discussing, last Session, the plans for the final settlement of all financial arrangements which might be essential to the completion of the Canadian Pacific Railway, from the Atlantic, on the one side, to the Pacific, on the other, I ventured to state that it would be essential, in order to carry out the grand scheme of trans-continental traffic, and to ensure the dropping upon our happy and favored shores of all the riches of the Orient, that some other port than Port Moody should be adopted as the Pacific terminus of the road. The hon. gentleman, the then Minister of Railways—I was about to say the hon. gentleman's predecessor, but that would be premature, for at present the hon. gentleman is Minister of only one railway, somewhere in the eastern townships, and is only Acting Minister of all the other railways in Canada—

Mr. POPE. I will send you a pass.

Mr. BLAKE. Thank you very much, but how often does the road go? The then Minister of Railways, I say, rather pooh-poohed the suggestion of mine that Port Moody was not the best terminus in the world for the finest railway in the world, which was about to control the most magnificent traffic in the world. He pointed out that certain admirals and other persons high in authority had reported that Port Moody was the harbor beyond all others, a sort of paradise of harbors, and so I was, metaphorically speaking, sat upon. But, not many months afterwards, I observed in the newspapers, which, as I have had occasion to remark before, always tell the truth, that the Canadian Pacific Railway Company was about to leave this paradise of harbors and seek Coal Harbor or English Bay, the two points which I had suggested as affording the probable terminus. I see that the vice-president and the chief engineer or manager of the railway have been to British Columbia, have surveyed the line, have decided to give up Port Moody, have decided upon another terminus, and that extensive works are proposed, with the view of carrying out that plan. It will be interesting for us to understand how far the work which has been accomplished by the Government is to be utilised in this direction. I believe there is a question as to the precise point on the line which has been contracted by the Government, where the road is to diverge to the new terminus. It will also be important to know what the cost is to be for the projected addition to the Canadian Pacific Railway. I therefore beg to move:

For a plan of the proposed route or routes of the Canadian Pacific Railway, from Port Moody, or the neighborhood thereof, to English Bay or Coal Harbor, showing the point at which the route chosen diverges from the main line, and the distance thereof from the present terminus at Port Moody; also an estimate of the cost of constructing the proposed line to the new Pacific terminus, and of the cost of the terminal accommodations there.

Mr. POPE. There is no objection to the motion. Government have not changed their mind, and if this road is to be extended, it is a private enterprise, conducted by the people themselves. As to the cost, I know no more about it than the hon. gentleman. No plan has been submitted to us. We still adhere to the terminus we had formerly selected, as suggested by Sir Charles Tupper.

Mr. BLAKE. Oh! oh!

Motion agreed to.

CANADIAN PACIFIC RAILWAY—THE NORTH AMERICAN CONTRACTING COMPANY.

Mr. BLAKE moved for:

1. A statement of the present position of the debt of $600,000 due last Session by the North American Contracting Company, to the Canadian Pacific Railway, with information as to whether the same has been settled, and if so, when and upon what terms; and if unsettled, what steps have been taken or are being taken to procure a settlement; also, a statement of the present position of a sum of about $600,000 invested by the Canadian Pacific Railway Company in stock of the Canada North-West Land Company, with a statement of its value, at the average price for the month of January, 1885.
2. Also, plan and statement showing the grades and curves on the line of the Canadian Pacific Railway as far as constructed, including all the Government sections, but exclusive of the line constructed by the company from the foot of the Rocky Mountains to Kamloops.
3. Also, a copy of the prospectus, advertisement and other papers in connection with the recent proposal for the issue of bonds of the Ontario and Quebec Railway Company, guaranteed by the Canadian Pacific Railway Company, with a statement of the amount sold, and the average rate.
4. Also, an estimate of the cost of the Canadian Pacific Railway between Callander and Port Arthur, divided under the usual heads of sub-divisions in railway construction, with separate estimate for equipment.
5. Also, a like estimate, in similar form, of the cost of the construction of the Canadian Pacific Railway between Calgary and the summit of the Rocky Mountains, and from the summit of the Rocky Mountains to the junction with the Government section, each separately, with a statement of the items in which a saving of $4,000,000 upon the estimate of last Session is calculated by the officers of the company.
6. Also, a statement of the expenditure by the Canadian Pacific Railway Company on any account, except the construction and equipment of the contracted line between Callander and Port Arthur, and between Selkirk and Kamloops.

Mr. POPE. I can say to the hon. gentleman, we will bring down all the information we can get. I cannot agree to give him all that information; we probably could not get it for the next two years if I did, it would take so long to get it ready. Still, we will bring it down as soon as we can.

Motion agreed to.

OXFORD AND NEW GLASGOW RAILWAY, N.S.

Mr. BLAKE moved for:

Copies of all correspondence, Orders in Council, contracts and other papers in connection with the projected railway between Oxford and New Glasgow, in Nova Scotia, or in relation to any companies, or individuals negotiating for the construction of any part of the projected Short Line, within the bounds of the Province of Nova Scotia; and particularly an instrument signed by Sir Charles Tupper, then Minister of Railways, about 9th May, 1884, whereby he, as representing the Crown, entered into certain engagements with Norvin Green, president of the Montreal and European Short Line Company, or with that company; and all orders or arrangements cancelling the said agreement, and of the evidence as to the ability of the company on which said agreement was made; and of all orders and authorities under which the Oxford Branch Railway was completed, or money thereon expended out of the Intercolonial appropriation, and of all agreements in connection with such expenditure; and of all statements, representations and letters made by, or on behalf of contractors, companies, railway companies, construction companies, laborers, merchants or others, who have been concerned in the work, and of all reports made to any Department, or to Council, upon any of the above subjects.

He said: Some time ago, when it was proposed by the Minister of Railways to aid the project called "The Short Line Company," I felt it my duty to enquire of him whether he had such information as would enable him to say to us that the company was in a position to carry out the work. In the year 1883, I think it was, the hon. Minister gave us very strong assurances upon that point. He said, amongst other things:

"I have taken great pains to ascertain the financial standing and position of this company, and I think that I am in a position to state that whatever work they will engage in they will carry through."

Well, we granted a subsidy, and the contract was let and some work was done. In the prosecution of that work, somehow or other, this same North American Contracting Company that I have just been enquiring about in another connection, got mixed up with it in some way. They contracted to do the work, and they advanced a certain sum upon it—it seems, from some papers I read in the House a while ago, some couple of hundred thousand dollars. Then, just as in the case with their larger contract for the Canadian Pacific Railway, it was not convenient to advance any more money and they stopped; and the sub-contractors were not paid, the store-keepers were not paid, the laborers were not paid, and then there was a general state of discomfort, and trouble, and loss, and vexation to those who had been connected with that work locally, apart from the trouble that belonged to the localities from the non-prosecution of the work. Last year the hon. gentleman brought forward another project. I called his attention to the failures of his former assurances. I called his attention to those facts to which I have just now briefly referred, and the Minister of Railways told me that it was all right, that the trouble was that this company had been engaged upon too small an affair. If they had a bigger railway to build, he said, they would have gone through with it; though I do not see that their having a larger work would be a guarantee that it would be carried through, because, either large or small, the result seems to be the same. But that was what the Minister said, that the enterprise was too small; and he proposed to enlarge the enterprise by a proposition which he submitted to the House, and which he said would ensure its successful completion. So once again the Minister displayed the art of showing the better side of everything, and no doubt when it becomes the duty of the hon. gentleman to whom I am now looking to fulfil his part, he will emulate him.

Mr. POPE. I will try.

Mr. BLAKE. The Minister proved once again that the Long Line Short Line Company was all right, whatever the troubles of the Short Line Company might have been, and the House granted the subsidy over again. It seems we have been doing a little bit of work in connection with the road. We have built a ballast siding, but which was really part of the grand scheme at Oxford. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Pope) shakes his head, but as it forms part of the grand scheme, it was included in the contract or arrangement made with the company, and it was to be sold to them at cost as part of the scheme.

Mr. POPE. I never heard of it before.

Mr. BLAKE. That shows the inconvenience of not having a real genuine Minister of Railways. If there was a real Minister who was responsible for the duties of the office he would doubtless have known about this matter, though the hon. gentleman does not.

Mr. POPE. Are you quite sure about the point?

Mr. BLAKE. I am quite sure. I will give the proof. If the hon. gentleman will turn to the Public Accounts and look at the Intercolonial open account he will find a reference to the Oxford siding, that it is to be part of the Short

Mr. BLAKE.

Line Railway. But he has not read them, because he is not really Minister of Railways, and it is not his business to look at or to be acquainted with the accounts relating to this Department. There seems to have followed a lack of performance in this respect as in the other. I find, in the report of the Acting Minister, a reference to this enterprise. He says:

"Montreal and European Short Line Railway Company (formerly the Great American and European Short Line Railway Company)."—(See No. 4, p. 24.)—In 1882 a subsidy was voted by Parliament to the extent of $224,000, for the construction of a line about seventy miles long, between Oxford, about thirty miles east of Amherst, and New Glasgow, N.S.

"Under date the 28th July, 1882, a contract was entered into with the above named company for the building of this road, the work to be completed by the 1st of January, 1884.

"The company commenced work and continued operations until the autumn of 1883, when work was suspended, and has not since been resumed. The contract, accordingly, became null and void. As the subsidy was to be paid upon the completion of each ten-mile section, and as no one section was completed, no portion of the subsidy has been paid."

That is all that is stated in the report. Another contract was signed at a later date, and under the new arrangement between the Montreal and European Short Line Railway Company and Her Majesty, represented by Sir Charles Tupper, as Minister of Railways, for the execution of the larger project. I am creditably informed and believe that such a contract was executed. The Acting Minister shakes his head; but once again, since he did not know what is in the Public Accounts, he has not accurately acquainted himself with the fact, and the officials have not told him what transpired before he took charge of the Department. If he will enquire he will find that on or about 8th May, 1884, a contract was made between the Queen, represented by Sir Charles Tupper, Minister of Railways, and this company. What has become of this contract, whether it has been nullified, whether it was executed on conditions which have not been carried out, I know not; but I am informed that such a contract was executed, and I find in the Public Accounts evidence of that fact, for I perceive that the Government property, the Oxford siding, is to be transferred to this company under some contract or arrangement, and I know of none except the one to which I have referred. It is important to know what the truth is as to these transactions. It is important to know what steps have been taken towards the execution of this work. It is important to know how far the Minister's plan, which had failed hitherto, had really come to successful fruition, and what prospect there is of those people in the locality, who really, as I have been told, relied on the assurance given by the then Minister of Railways, from his place in Parliament, as to the financial stability and resources of the company, obtaining arrangements to satisfy them for the loss which it seems too likely they will suffer unless something is done to put the enterprise on a proper footing.

Mr. POPE. I have no objection to the adoption of the motion; but I may say to the hon. gentleman that he is mistaken in his statement that there ever was a second contract signed by the Department. There was a proposed contract, based on the condition that these gentlemen would commence the work within a certain time, but the contract never was to be handed over to them until they showed a bond fide ability to build the road.

Mr. BLAKE. Was it signed?

Mr. POPE. It was not signed by the Secretary of the Department.

Mr. BLAKE. Was it signed by the Minister?

Mr. POPE. It was signed by the Minister, but it was not a completed contract. It was placed in the hands of Mr. Pottinger, and afterwards sent to the Department, where it has remained ever since. It never was to be a contract until certain things were done. It is true that one condition of the contract was, at the instance of those people, kept out of it, but the real object of the contract not being completed until those people showed their bond fides, was just to carry out the suggestion the hon. gentleman made. There has been no expenditure, either at Oxford or anywhere else, except that which was of importance to the Intercolonial Railway itself, and not dependent on these people. I have no objection to the motion.

Motion agreed to.

Mr. POPE moved the adjournment of the House.

Motion agreed to, and the House adjourned at 10:30 p.m.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.

THURSDAY, 19th February, 1885.

The SPEAKER took the Chair at Three o'clock.

PRAYERS.

FIRST READINGS.

Bill (No. 45) respecting the representation of the Territories in the House of Commons.—(Mr. Cameron, Huron.)

Bill (No. 47) for the more effectual prevention of cruelty to animals.—(Mr. Charlton.)

BILLS OF EXCHANGE AND PROMISSORY NOTES.

Mr. GIGAULT. (Translation). Asked leave to introduce Bill (No. 46), further to amend the law relating to bills of exchange and promissory notes.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Explain.

Mr. GIGAULT. (Translation). The present law provides that in order to make a protest valid, a bill of exchange or a promissory note must be presented at the office of the bank or at the place where it is made payable. If such office or indicated place of payment do not exist when the note becomes due, the law does not state what ought to be done. The object of the Bill which I beg leave to introduce is to declare that the presentation of the bill of exchange or promissory note will not be necessary whenever such office or place of payment shall have ceased to exist when the bill or note becomes due. It also provides that the notary or justice of the peace by whom the protest shall be made shall make a declaration to the effect that after due enquiry he has been unable to find the office or place at which the bill of exchange or promissory note was made payable.

Motion agreed, to and Bill read the first time.

CANADIAN PACIFIC RAILWAY—PORT MOODY AND SAVONA FERRY SECTION.

Mr. HOMER asked, Has the Government granted to A. Onderdonk an extension of time for the completion of the contract on the Canadian Pacific Railway, between Port Moody and Savona Ferry? If not, is it the intention of the Government to grant A. Onderdonk an extension of time for the completion of his contract between Port Moody and Savona Ferry?

Mr. CARON. In the absence of the Minister of Railways, I have the honor to state that no extension has been asked by Mr. Onderdonk, and no extension has been granted.

DUTY ON FLOUR AND CORNMEAL.

Mr. FORBES asked, Is it the intention of the Government during the present Session of Parliament to increase the rate of duty upon imported flour or cornmeal in accordance with the request of the Millers' Association of Ontario? If so, will the duty on coal be increased also?

Sir LEONARD TILLEY. The intentions of the Government on this subject will be communicated to the House when the Budget is brought down.

ALLAN STEAMSHIP COMPANY.

Mr. FORBES asked, Have the Government received from the Allan Steamship Company, or from the estate of the late Sir Hugh Allan, the amount due, or claimed by the Department of Marine and Fisheries, for services rendered by the Government steamship Newfield, in aiding the wrecked Allan steamship Moravian in 1881? If not, is it the intention of the Government to take steps to recover such amount?

Mr. McLELAN. The amount settled upon between the Allan Steamship Company and the Government has been paid. There was some little delay as to the amount that should be paid, in consequence of there being no principle adopted as to the allowance that Government steamers should receive for aid to private ships. I made enquiry of the British Government and the United States Government as to the practice followed there, we followed something like the same practice, and the account was settled.

AID TO EMERSON, MANITOBA.

Mr. CAMERON (Huron) asked, Has any demand been recently made by the town of Emerson, Manitoba, for financial or other aid? If so, what is the nature and extent of the demand? Has the Government assented to the same in whole or in part, or has any action been taken in the premises?

Sir LEONARD TILLEY. Application has been made by the town of Emerson, and the Government are at this moment considering it, and will probably arrive at a decision in a few days. We have not arrived at a decision yet.

EASTERN EXTENSION RAILWAY, N.S.

Mr. CAMERON (Inverness) asked, What were the earnings and the working expenses of the Eastern Extension Railway from New Glasgow to Port Mulgrave, Nova Scotia, for each month of the calendar year 1884?

Mr. GIGAULT.

Mr. CARON. If the hon. gentleman would move for a return of the papers instead of putting it in the shape of a question, the papers will be brought down and the information given.

EMPLOYMENT OF JOHN MOODY.

Mr. LISTER asked, Is John Moody employed in any way in the Fishery Department of the Government? If so, in what capacity, when was he appointed, what is his salary, and what are his duties?

Mr. McLELAN. John B. Moody is employed as fishery overseer under the Fishery Department. He was appointed in 1880. His salary is $50 per annum. His duties consist in enforcing the Fishery Act and regulations on the north shore of the Sydenham River from its junction at Wallaceburg to its source.

WHEAT AND FLOUR DUTIES.

Mr. BERGERON asked, Whether the Government intend to make alterations in the tariff as respects wheat and flour?

Sir LEONARD TILLEY. The answer I gave to my hon. friend opposite (Mr. Forbes) must be the answer I give to the hon. gentleman who asks this question.

SETTLERS IN THE MARITIME PROVINCES.

Mr. GILLMOR asked, How many of the immigrants who arrived in this country from the 1st January, 1884, to the 31st December, from Europe, have settled permanently in each of the Maritime Provinces?

Mr. CARON. On behalf of the Minister of Agriculture, I beg to state, that, from the reports of the agents of the Department of Agriculture, the following immigrants entered the Maritime Provinces:—Nova Scotia, 1,436; New Brunswick, 235; Prince Edward Island, 2; making altogether, 1,673.

POST OFFICE SAVINGS BANKS.

Mr. STAIRS asked, When does the Government intend to open the Post Office Savings Banks in the Maritime Provinces?

Sir LEONARD TILLEY. The Postmaster-General is now opening Post Office Savings Banks in the Maritime Provinces.

STATION AT ELGIN STATION, COUNTY OF L'ISLET.

Mr. CASGRAIN asked, Is it the intention of the Government to erect a station for the accommodation of passengers and for freight at Elgin Station, County of L'Islet, on the Intercolonial Railway?

Mr. CARON. It is not the intention of the Government to build a station for freight at Elgin Station, County of L'Islet.

PUBLIC BUILDINGS AT ST. STEPHEN, N. B.

Mr. GILLMOR asked, Whether the building of the Custom House and Post Office at St. Stephen, N. B., has yet been commenced, on which $15,000 was voted previous to the last general election of 1882; if not, when does the Government intend to commence those buildings?

Sir LEONARD TILLEY. The lot has been purchased and paid for, and tenders will shortly be asked for.

NORTH-WEST CENSUS.

Mr. FARROW asked, In taking the census in Manitoba and the North-West, is there to be a column to ascertain the last place of residence of settlers, previous to their going to the North-West to settle?

Mr. CARON. It is the intention of the Government to add the column which the hon. gentleman has requested to be added to the census to be taken in Manitoba.

REPORT OF THE PRINTING COMMITTEE.

Mr. WHITE (Cardwell). With the permission of the House, I would like to move the adoption of the second report of the Committee of both Houses on the printing of Parliament. I suppose it ought properly to have been moved when the motions were called, but I did not happen to be in my place, and if the House will permit me I will move it now. I may say that the report mentions the printing of certain documents; and in addition to that, there is a clause which continues the gratuity granted last year to the assistant clerk in the Stationery Office, to the new incumbent in the office, Mr. Clark. The position is one requiring technical knowledge, and the gentleman appointed to the office is a first-class proof-reader, and an exceedingly good man for that position. The Committee thought that the gratuity given last year of $200, might be continued to the present incumbent.

Mr. BLAKE. I must ask the hon. gentleman not to put that motion without notice. I have no objection to the recommendation of the report as concerns the printing, but as a general rule any motion which proposes to make a charge on the service of the House ought to be preceded by notice.

Mr. WHITE (Cardwell). Of course, if the hon. gentleman objects that is a good reason for delaying the motion; but the report has been in the Votes and Proceedings for the last three days.

Mr. BLAKE. Yes, but I am pointing out that by our custom, when it is intended to move the adoption of a report involving a charge, we have had notice given.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. I take the opportunity, with the permission of the House, of calling the attention of the members of the Printing Committee to the desirability of causing to be printed such returns as those I have moved for recently with respect to the receipts and expenditures chargeable to the Consolidated Fund. I noticed they were omitted last year. Now those are of some value. They contain a good deal of information which it is sometimes necessary to look back to in order to refresh one's memory. There is no economy in delay because they might have to be moved for again. They would only occupy half a page, and judging from what I have seen of our Sessional Papers I must say there are a great many other pages occupied with matter of much less importance. I direct the attention of the hon. member for Cardwell (Mr. White) and of the other members of the Printing Committee to that point. I would also like to know whether any progress has been made in printing the reports of the Factory Commissioners. These have been brought down in manuscript, but they are rather voluminous, and I think if the Minister could have caused them to be printed a little in advance it would have been a great convenience to the House.

Sir LEONARD TILLEY. They were only finished the day before I laid them on the Table of the House.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. They will be printed promptly, I hope.

Mr. WHITE (Cardwell). I have no doubt that the reports might be printed in the Sessional Papers with the approbation of the committee. The committee had not met when the reports of the commissioners were laid on the Table; and I declined to take the responsibility of ordering their printing, as the chairman of the committee of the other House did, without the acquiescence of the committee itself.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. I would just mention to the hon. member for Cardwell, that similar reports have been printed in former Sessional Papers, but the practice has not been uniform.

Mr. PATERSON (South Brant). I desire to remark to the chairman of the Printing Committee with reference to the report of the commissioners that it is stated in the Order in Council appointing them, that the information was sought for for the purpose of enabling us to take legislative action thereupon. It is probable they will be used by the Finance Minister in making his statement, and the hon. gentleman will see how necessary it is that members of the House should have the report of these commissioners in print before that debate comes on. I would like to ask him if he thinks it could be rapidly accomplished.

Mr. WHITE (Cardwell). If it is the desire of the House that it should be printed, we can give orders immediately to have it printed.

Mr. BLAKE. This document was heralded some months ago by the Finance Minister as an important document, and I dare say we shall hear a good deal about it, and it ought to be printed in full.

LIFE SAVING CREW AT PORT ROWAN.

Mr. McLELAN. A few days ago the hon. member for South Norfolk (Mr. Jackson) enquired of me respecting the payment of the life-saving crew at Port Rowan. I find upon enquiry that the detailed account on the services of the crew was not received at the office until the 8th of February. It was immediately taken up, and the cheques have been despatched to each of the crew engaged in the service.

THE BUDGET.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Before the Orders of the Day are called, I would like to call the attention of the Finance Minister to the fact that to-day completes the third week since we were summoned. We have been summoned two or three weeks later than usual, and the hon. gentleman may see from the questions put to him by various members of the House, that the public are getting very anxious to hear what he has to say about the financial condition of the country. I think it would be a great convenience to all if the Minister were able to tell us within a day or two when he thinks he can make his financial statement. Until we get that he is aware the actual business of the Session cannot make any very rapid progress. I have no doubt that on this, as on other occasions, considerable discussion must arise, and it would be of interest to all on both sides if the hon. Minister could give us some indication when he will bring down the Estimates and when he will make his statement.

Sir LEONARD TILLEY. I am not in a position to state the day that we will be able to lay the Estimates on the Table of the House or to make the financial statement. I should hope that we might be able to do so to-morrow week. As next Saturday is at the disposal of the Government I may be in a position to make the statement on Friday of next week; I am afraid I will not be able to make it on Tuesday.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. I suppose I may assume it will not be earlier.

Sir LEONARD TILLEY. No; I think not.

HOLES IN ICE ON FREQUENTED WATERS.

House resolved itself into committee on Bill (No. 22) to amend the criminal law and to declare it a misdemeanor to leave unguarded and exposed holes cut in the ice on navigable or frequented waters.—(Mr. Robertson, Hamilton.)

(In the Committee.)

Mr. IVES. I move that after the word "justice" in the first section, the words "or district magistrate" be added. In the Province of Quebec district magistrates would be the officers before whom cases of this kind would naturally be tried. I also move that after the word "city" the words "judicial district or county" be added. Our divisions with respect to justices of the peace or magistrates are divided into judicial districts rather than into counties.

Amendments agreed to.

Mr. HALL. I beg to move that the following be inserted as section 2 of the Bill:—

The owner, manager or superintendent of any abandoned or unused mine or quarry or property upon or in which any excavation in search of mines or quarries has been or shall hereafter be made of a sufficient area and depth to endanger human life, who shall leave the same unguarded and unenclosed by a guard or fence of sufficient height and strength to prevent any person from accidentally riding, driving, walking or falling therein, shall be guilty of a misdemeanor, and shall be liable to be punished by fine or imprisonment or both, before any justice of the peace having jurisdiction in the locality in which said mine or quarry is situate.

This is almost identical with the English law in that respect, except that I have added "quarry" to the word mine.

Motion agreed to.

Mr. HALL. I beg to move that the following be section 3:

If within ten days after conviction for one of the offences referred to in the first and second clauses of this Act, a suitable fence is not constructed around said exposed opening, to conform to the provisions of this Act, the person or persons liable for such omission may be again complained of and convicted for said offence, and the plea of a former conviction therefor shall not avail to him or them as a relief from said complaints and conviction.

Mr. MACDONALD (King's, P.E.I.) I think there are very serious objections to this Bill from a Prince Edward Island standpoint. We are accustomed to cutting ice in our rivers and taking out manure for agricultural purposes, and if the people who are engaged in that occupation are required to fence in all the holes they make it will prove a very great hardship. I do not know of any accident having happened for lack of proper precaution being taken to fence in holes made for that purpose. According to this Bill, all persons digging and cutting holes in the ice will be required to fence in the holes they make, and this, I repeat, will prove a great hardship. There are certain other parts of the country where ice is cut for packing purposes, and the people engaged in the work will also be affected by a law of this kind. I think due care should not be taken that such a measure as that should become a hardship instead of a benefit to the general public.

Mr. DAVIES. The Bill is one that looks reasonable, and I am loath to give it my opposition, but the remarks of my colleague prove that as regards our Province at least, in the creeks and bays of which the farmers are accustomed to keep holes in the ice open for the digging of mussels, it might work a hardship, and besides that it would hardly be necessary as these holes are guarded by putting up trees around them, and I never heard of an accident occurring. It is impossible that they could be protected in the manner provided by the Bill, because horses are used for a space of 20 or 30 feet from the holes, and to inclose these openings and the spaces which the horses occupy would prevent the farmers engaging in that work at all. As I remarked before, the Bill looks so reasonable on its face that one does not like to object to it, but in its practical application I fear that it would either be evaded altogether, or if attempted to be enforced it will act very hardly. There never have been any accidents that I have heard of by leaving these openings unprotected; on the contrary, as the farmers erect a barrier of brush around them they are not on the direct line of travel and therefore accidents could hardly occur. The Bill may apply very well to the bay at Hamilton from which city the promoter comes, but I do not think it should apply to our Province.

Mr. MITCHELL. I should think that if this measure becomes law it will completely put a stop to the immense winter fisheries in my own county, and I suppose there are not less than 700 or 800 holes in the ice in the main river in that county. That industry gives employment to many hundreds of people constantly, and if the Bill becomes law it will practically preclude the fishermen from carrying on their business. Now I have seen the effects—in relation to that Province—of the winter fisheries of our country for a great many years, and I believe I may safely say that not within my memory has it ever occurred that these fishing holes proved dangerous to human life. Such a thing may occur, as accidents occur to individuals travelling by rail, but they are the ordinary casualties which cannot be avoided on any ordinary highway of the country, but if this Bill passes requiring that a fence of a certain height should be placed around the holes, there being hundreds of them in the river, it will practically put a stop to that branch of the business. I think the mover of the Bill should hesitate before he forces us into that position. We have found no practical difficulty from the present state of protection, or the local requirements in relation to the protection of these fishing holes, and the universal custom in the principal river in my county—the second largest river in the Province—is one which amply ensures this protection. I may here state, before I point out the custom on that river, that I doubt whether this Parliament has any right to deal with a matter of this kind. It appears to me to be a matter of purely municipal regulation, to be dealt with, if at all, by the municipal councils or the Local Parliaments, and not to be brought in here, where I claim we have nothing to do with it. The custom in our Province—the law in the Province of New Brunswick is, that the municipal councils have power, under a provincial Statute, to make regulations in relation to fishing holes or other openings made in the rivers for the purpose of carrying on business, and the regulation which is required by the municipal corporation in Northumberland County is this: That every fishing hole shall be indicated by placing green bushes around it. They cut two or three spruce bushes, 7 or 8 feet high, and they place them at the holes as an indication, a warning, a sign post to the public, and that is all the protection which is required, and all the protection they have had within my memory at all events. Now there are some 700 or 800 or more fishermen at work in my county, and in other counties the same state of things exists, and if these men have to fence up these holes on the different rivers it will greatly embarrass them in the operation of their fishing, and will create much trouble and expense. If the hon. gentleman desires any protection in relation to his locality let him confine it to the Province of Ontario, or the harbor of Hamilton, or wherever else it may be required; but do not let him by a law of this kind, applying all over the Dominion, embarrass existing regulations and lead to disturbance and dissatisfaction amongst the industrious fishermen in our country. We do not require such a protection, and in my opinion the Bill would be a detriment to the prosecution of business and should not be allowed to pass. I believe the section of which I speak is already passed by the committee, but I shall take the earliest opportunity at the proper stage to move that it be referred back for reconsideration.

Mr. WOOD (Brockville). I believe that the people of that portion of the Province of Ontario from which I come would not wish this Bill to become law. A few years ago the Canadian Pacific Railway Company tried the experiment of running a ferry across the St. Lawrence between Brockville and Morristown. It was attended with a great deal of expense, but it has proved successful after the outlay of a great deal of money and enterprise on the part of the company. Now it seems to me that if the Canadian Pacific Railway Company are to continue to run that boat through the winter, when they have to break holes in the ice as they have to do, leaving large apertures exposed, it will bring them under the operation of this clause, which would be not only a great injustice to the company but would altogether prohibit the only means of communication we now have between the State of New York, or I may say the United States, and that portion of Ontario. For that reason I cannot support this provision of the Bill.

Mr. BLAKE. The observations which have fallen from several hon. members sufficiently show that the Government has not acted with discretion in permitting this Bill to take the stage of Committee of the Whole, without having previously sifted it in a Select Committee, according to the customary mode of dealing with legislation affecting the criminal law introduced by private members. We have seen from the statements made by the hon. gentleman who last spoke and others who come from different parts of the country, that a measure of this kind should have been referred to a committee whose members could consult with their fellow members from their different Provinces, as to the peculiar local circumstances, and would ascertain whether it was possible so to mould the legislation as to make it at once uniform and just to all. I think therefore it would be a very convenient course that the committee should rise and report progress, and instead of the measure being further prosecuted in Committee of the Whole at this stage, the order for its reference should be discharged and a reference to a Select Committee composed of members from the different Provinces take its place, and after that it could go through Committee of the Whole. With reference to the remarks of the hon. member for Northumberland (Mr. Mitchell) there is a great deal of force in them,—not as I judge in a constitutional view, but as a question of policy. We can make almost anything a crime or a matter of criminal law here. The hon. member for North Norfolk (Mr. Charlton) has for several years endeavored to make that which is now a matter of civil right in the Provinces, a crime; and so with this matter—we may draw it within our jurisdiction. But in a matter of this kind, particularly where there are different interests and necessities in different parts of the country, it may be impolitic to bring it within the scope of the criminal law, because there is no doubt that the Local Legislatures would have power to pass laws prohibiting the cutting of these holes without sufficient protection, and providing for the punishment of the breach of such laws by fine or imprisonment. There is ample power in the Local Legislatures to do all that may be necessary in order to protect individuals of the locality without resorting to this Parliament at all. Although therefore we have the power to make this a crime, it may be a question whether it is expedient to make it a crime, as municipal provision has been made in some of the Provinces, and may be made in others, and the conditions may be so various as to make it difficult to make an equitable change in the criminal law.

Mr. CARON. The discussion on this Bill has brought out some suggestions from hon. members which I think should be considered before the Bill is proceeded with any further; and, especially as the hon. gentleman who has introduced the Bill happens not to be in his seat at present, I think the Committee should rise, report progress, and ask leave to sit again. So far as the principle of the Bill itself is concerned, the protection of the lives of people who have to drive over rivers, and who are exposed to considerable danger, especially at night, from the carelessness of people who for one purpose or another cut holes in the ice, I believe the principle in itself is a good principle. However, several hon. members from the Maritime Provinces have pointed out objections to the Bill which to my mind deserve more consideration than has been given to them, and I would move that the committee now rise, report progress, and ask leave to sit again. When the House again comes to consider the Bill, the hon. gentleman who has introduced it may be present, and may be willing to accept some of the suggestions which have been made. If my memory serves me rightly, this Bill was last Session referred to a Select Committee.

Mr. CAMERON (Huron). No, the year before.

Mr. WATSON. As reference has been made to the Eastern Provinces, I hope the Western Provinces will not be forgotten. A great number of men are employed every winter fishing on Lake Manitoba and Lake Winnipeg, and if it were made a criminal offence to cut holes in the ice, a great hardship would be caused to the people.

Mr. IVES. I do not think it would be necessary to consider Manitoba, because it is understood that the settlers are all going to Dakota.

Mr. HALL. Having taken charge of this Bill, in the absence of the mover, I desire to say a word. It is unfortunate that the objections which have been raised against it were not made at the second reading. The hon. member for Hamilton (Mr. Robertson) went away under the impression that the principle of the Bill was accepted by the House. It has been before the House two Sessions. In the first Session, it was referred to a committee which had charge of other Bills of a similar character, and by some accident it did not again reach the House. The hon. member for Northumberland (Mr. Mitchell) will see that there is a difficulty in the way of leaving the question to local legislation, because it concerns the criminal law. I believe, moreover, that the practical difficulty which led the hon. member for Hamilton to bring it before this House was that it applies to rivers which form the boundaries between municipalities. There can be no objection, however, to referring the matter to a committee, and I second the motion made to that effect.

Mr. MITCHELL. If the hon. gentleman will consent to limit the Bill to rivers which form the boundaries of municipalities, I would have no objection to it.

Mr. HALL. I think it would be better to refer it to the committee, and then all the objections could be considered.

Mr. BLAKE. It would not do to say that what is no crime in one river is a crime in another.

Committee rose and reported progress.

SUPREME COURT.

Mr. LANDRY (Montmagny) (Translation) moved that Bill (No. 3) to limit the appellate jurisdiction of the Supreme Court, be now read the second time. He said: In moving the second reading of this Bill to limit the appellate jurisdiction of the Supreme Court, I think it is my duty to say a few words to justify the legislation I now propose. I do not intend to make a historical sketch of past legislation on this matter, nor do I wish to point out to the House and to the country wherein such legislation affects, in most of its details at least, the position of the Province to which I belong, and the laws which were passed in that Province. It will be remembered that the Supreme Court Act was introduced in 1875. It was introduced by one of those who are now occupying the position of judges of that court, by the Hon. Justice Fournier, who was then the representative of the county of Bellechasse. The legislation of that time defines the composition of that tribunal, and if we open the Statutes of Canada, 38th Vic., chap. 11, we find that section 4 says:

"Her Majesty may appoint, by letters patent, under the Great Seal of Canada, one person, who is or who has been a judge of one of the Superior Courts in any of the Provinces forming part of the Dominion of Canada, or who is a barrister or advocate of at least ten years' standing at the bar of any one of the said Provinces, to be Chief Justice of the said court, and five persons who are or have been respectively judges of the said Superior Courts, or who are barristers or advocates of at least ten years' standing at the bar of one of the said Provinces, to be puisne judges of the said court, two of whom at least shall be taken from among the judges of the Superior Court or Court of Queen's Bench, or the barristers or advocates of the Province of Quebec; and vacancies in any of the said offices shall, from time to time, be filled in like manner."

As will be seen by the above provision of the law, the Province of Quebec was only entitled to two judges out of the six which were to form this tribunal. As to the jurisdiction of the court itself, it is established by section 17 of the same Act, which says:

"Subject to the limitations and provisions hereinafter made, an appeal shall lie to the Supreme Court from all final judgments of the highest court of final resort, whether such a court be a court of appeal or of original jurisdiction, now or hereafter established in any Province of Canada, in cases in which the court of original jurisdiction is a Superior Court: Provided that no appeal shall be allowed from any judgment rendered in the Province of Quebec, in any case wherein the sum or value of the matter in dispute does not amount to $1,000; and the right to appeal in civil cases, given by this Act, shall be understood to be given in such cases only as are mentioned in this section, except exchequer cases and cases of mandamus, habeas corpus or municipal by-laws, as hereinafter provided."

That legislation gave to the court its composition and its jurisdiction. To-day we are asking for legislation to do away with these inconveniences, for the reason that the composition of the court offers no guarantee to the Province of Quebec in particular, and the same complaint has been made by several other Provinces, as I shall prove in a few moments. This is due to the composition of the court itself, and also to the jurisdiction which is given to it. The source of the grievances which are complained of to-day is found in the exercise of that jurisdiction by the persons who are members of the Supreme Court. In the first place, Mr. Speaker, as I said a moment ago, the Supreme Court only contains two judges from the Province of Quebec, and from this point of view we consider that the constitution of that court is defective.

Mr. GEOFFRION (Translation). Why not take them all from the Province of Quebec?

Mr. LANDRY (Montmagny). (Translation.) I am asked, Mr. Speaker, why we should not take them all from the Province of Quebec? You will see, Mr. Speaker, that if he only listens to my argument the hon. member who has just interrupted me will find an answer to his question. If the several judges of whom the Supreme Court is composed were all conversant with our laws, if they were familiar with all the laws of the Province of Quebec, with the French laws and civil laws; if before that court lawyers from any one of the Provinces had full liberty to plead either in French or in English, I could well understand that one of the great objections against that court would be deprived of its strength, but under the present circumstances that court is closed to lawyers of the Province of Quebec, who are unable to plead in French before it, for the good reason that they are not sure that they will be understood by several of the judges. This complaint has been formulated long ago. Every year it has been made here, within these walls; it has been discussed in the press of the country, it has been uttered among the people of the Provinces. People are complaining that the jurisdiction of the Supreme Court is an infringement on the rights of the Provinces, on provincial legislation. In order to show what is public opinion on that point, I could not do any better than to quote textually the words which have been uttered, under various circumstances, on the floor of this House, respecting the composition of that court. In 1881 the hon. member for Laval, (Mr. Ouimet) speaking on this question said:

"These judges for Ontario never learned or practised our Quebec laws, in respect of which they are to decide any cases brought before them. It is absurd to expect that those judges can, by merely opening our civil code or any of our French books—some of them do not understand or read French—can understand our law. I therefore say the constitution of the court is vicious and absurd. I will vote for its maintenance if properly remedied."

An hon. member from another county (Mr. MacCuaig), who was a representative of the county of Prince Edward in 1880, stated as follows:—

"The opinion entertained by the majority of the inhabitants of the county I represent, is this: We have a Supreme Court composed of six men, two from Ontario, two from Quebec, and two from the Maritime Provinces. As I understand the matter, the two judges from Ontario are not at all familiar with the laws of Quebec, while the two judges from the Maritime Provinces are not familiar with the laws of either Ontario nor Quebec. Now, in Ontario, we have an Appeal Court composed of four judges of high legal attainments, and well qualified to decide finally upon most every case that comes before them. But a case taken from our Court of Appeal, presided over by four judges of Ontario, may be taken to the Supreme Court, and their judgment overruled by four judges from Quebec and the Maritime Provinces, not at all familiar with our laws. This is not a all calculated to create any confidence in the decisions of the Supreme Court. I am told that in the Province of Quebec the Court of Appeal is composed of five judges, and they are certainly entirely better qualified to decide, according to the laws of the Province, than the four judges of the Supreme Court can be, who come from the other Provinces."

The hon. member for Halton (Mr. McDougall) also expressed himself as follows at that time:—

"It does seem, on the face of it, rather absurd to appeal from the judgments of a court of five judges, especially upon questions arising out of the civil laws peculiar to the Province of Quebec, to a court of six judges, only two of whom have any real knowledge or acquaintance with the principles of those laws. It seems more absurd still, when an appeal is taken from the judgments of courts in Ontario, that in this court, although the two Supreme Court judges from Ontario may concur, that their judgment should be overborne by the opinions of the judges from the other Provinces, who are not familiar with the laws of Ontario."

The Government themselves, I think, were of the same opinion as to the composition of the tribunal of the Supreme Court, and the hon. Minister of Public Works then uttered the following words, on the importance of which I beg to call the attention of the House:—

"I desire to be careful as to what I say, not only because I am speaking as a member of Parliament, but because of my position as Minister of the Crown. I do not charge these judges with dereliction of duty, which is charged against them outside, because I have no evidence of it. I wish to show, however, that the complaint made by the hon. member for Montmagny does not come from him alone, but is felt throughout the whole Province of Quebec, that the judgments of that court are not really rendered by the whole bench, but are the result of the deliberations of the two judges from that Province. This is unfortunate, and I hope the matter will be considered, in order that the evil may be remedied."

The hon. member for Hochelaga (Mr. Desjardins) also expressed, in the month of April, 1879, the following opinion on the matter:—

"It would be easy for the House to understand the cause of this dislike when it was borne in mind that whilst no one could sit as a judge in the Superior Court or in the Court of Queen's Bench, in the Province of Quebec, without having first followed a course of law and practised as a lawyer during at least ten years for this tribunal of last resort, and which was called upon to confirm or reverse the decisions of Quebec judges, four out of the six judges were chosen from the other Provinces, without being previously obliged to study the civil laws of the Province of Quebec."

The hon. member for Jacques Cartier, who introduced, a few years ago, a Bill altogether similar to that which I am now presenting myself, addressing himself to the Speaker of this House, said:—

"But we all know that the Province of Quebec occupies a very exceptional position, as far as her system of local jurisprudence is concerned. We all know that it is the only Province which is governed by the principles of the civil law, as amended in old France, while all the other Provinces are governed by the principles of English common law. Let us look at the personal of the six judges composing the Supreme Court. Four of them are judges of the English common law, and only two of them are conversant with the principles of the civil law, which rule the Province of Quebec; only three know the French language, in which all or nearly all our laws are written, and so one-half of the court can not even learn our laws. I ask, is it possible that, under these circumstances, the people of that Province can be satisfied to see the decisions of their Superior Court, presided over by a judge generally of long experience, revised, as they are often, by the Court of Review, composed of three judges, and finally examined by the Court of Appeal, composed of five judges, every one of them being lawyers of several years' standing, and familiar with the principles of our own peculiar system of jurisprudence. I say, is it to be expected that the people of Quebec would be satisfied to see this Supreme Court, where only two judges are supposed to know anything of our local laws and customs, reverse the decisions of all these courts?"

Such are, Mr. Speaker, the opinions which have been expressed since the Supreme Court exists. These opinions or fears have been felt by another hon. member who was my predecessor as representative of the county of Montmagny. In 1875, Mr. Taschereau, now one of the judges of the Supreme Court, expressed fears, which were about identical to these, by addressing the House in the following words:—

"As regarded their civil cases, he humbly thought that the people of their Province were quite satisfied with the different degrees of jurisdiction now existing in Quebec. It was a well known fact that their court of last resort, the Court of Queen's Bench, was now so composed as to inspire full confidence and respect. Of the decisions of this high and enlightened tribunal the Bill proposes that an appeal will be to the Supreme Court in all cases where the amount or value of the thing demanded shall exceed $1,000 currency. Well, how would these cases be disposed of? Out of six judges who would compose the Supreme Court, he did not expect that their own Province would be represented by more than two judges, and our own population, the French Canadian element, by more than one judge, perhaps. Without alluding for the present to the unfairness of this proportion, if it was adopted, and without insisting now on the fact that their population was about one-fourth of the population of the whole Dominion, he would content himself with laying down this proposition: one of two things. Either the two judges from Quebec would, in fact, control the whole court in the decision of civil cases coming from Lower Canada, and in that case the authority of their Court of Queen's Bench, composed of five judges, would be superseded by that of two judges, who could not be possibly more competent than the members of their Court of Appeals, and might possibly be inferior to them. And, moreover, in that case, the two judges from Quebec might differ one from the other, and then the decision of the case would rest altogether with the other members of the court, unfamiliar with their laws and customs. Or, in the other supposition, the entire court will presume to hear and judge their civil cases, and then their two judges, although agreeing together, might find themselves in a minority, and then they should find, perhaps, the decision of all their Lower Canada courts, of all their Lower Canada judges, reversed by judges of other Provinces. The truth, the exact truth of this proposition, could not be denied, and the danger to which he drew their attention was too apparent and too imminent to be overlooked."

Such were, in the past, Mr. Speaker, the fears entertained when the Supreme Court was established. Now the experience of the past has not, in the least, dispelled the hostile feeling against the constitution and composition of that court, which has been manifested mostly in the Province of Quebec. This hostility was not limited to that Province, for the Province of Ontario and the Maritime Provinces also had in this House representatives who were not afraid to stand up and state how very small was their confidence in the composition of that tribunal. I do not speak here of the different judges who compose that court. Let it be well understood that the personality of the judges is completely out of question. Until now we have had no reason to complain against such or such a judge in particular, but I am speaking of the composition of the court from a purely theoretical point of view. The hostility which is now found to exist has been created by the composition of the court itself. In the month of February, 1880, the then Minister of Justice, the hon. member for Pictou (Mr. McDonald) thus expressed himself:

"My hon. friend says that in the Province of Quebec the court is unpopular. Now I regret that extremely, but I quite understand that it arises from causes entirely beyond our control. Perhaps it is a natural feeling that the members of the bar from that Province and the people of that Province should not entertain so strong a feeling of confidence in the decisions of this court, on questions of law arising under a system of jurisprudence different from that of other Provinces, and in which they are only represented by two judges."

At that time, Mr. Speaker, even the Minister of Justice, one of the members of the Government, was not afraid to acknowledge, on the floor of this House, that the causes of discontent which were complained of by the Province of Quebec were just causes of discontent; he gave expression to that idea by making, himself, the complaints which I am now making to day, against the composition of the tribunal of the Supreme Court. But we have still better than that, Mr. Speaker, and the hon. leader of the Government openly expressed the following opinion:—

"But that some dissatisfaction exists, I cannot ignore, and I am sure that the greatest amount of dissatisfaction arises from the Province of Quebec. That is easily to be understood, when you consider that the courts in the Province of Quebec are composed of judges learned in the special law of Lower Canada, and specially fitted to adjudicate on all questions under that law; and the feeling is, that they have more confidence in the judgments of the ordinary Superior Courts than the Court of Appeal from the judgments of these courts. The court here is principally composed of judges who have been educated under the system based on the laws of England, and the majority of these judges are not specially trained in the system of law which form the basis of Lower Canada jurisprudence. Of the six judges, only two are from Lower Canada. We do not know what mode is adopted by the judges among themselves, in discussing their judgments, or in what mode they approach the examination of the cases submitted to them, but it is alleged that the judges coming from the other Provinces leave, very much, to the two judges coming from Quebec, the appeals from that Province. Hence it is argued that to these two judges is left substantially the decisions of the cases from Quebec. It is felt that the decisions of the courts below have greater weight than the opinion of the two judges, who may reverse the judgments of the courts below. The consideration of this difficulty is not a new one to any member of the last Parliament. The difficulties connected with establishing a court satisfactory to the Province of Quebec was one of the great reasons that made me hesitate so long in presenting a measure for the establishment of the Supreme Court, which I twice submitted to the Parliament of Canada, and that hesitation induced me to postpone pressing the measure while I held the office of Minister of Justice. But we now have it, and I think we ought to try and make the best of it as a Dominion court."

Thus it will be seen, Mr. Speaker, that the leader of the present Government himself fully concurred in the nature of the complaints which we were formulating then and which we are still formulating to-day. And the hon. Minister of Public Works, in the speech I have quoted a moment ago, in his speech made in the month of February, 1881, again dealt with this question, and said:

"The hon. member for Montmagny remarked that many of the cases from the Province of Quebec are believed to be decided by two judges only, whom we must understand to be the two judges from that Province. Of course we have no legal evidence of such being the case, but we cannot close our eyes to the fact that there is a conviction in the Province of Quebec that in the large majority of cases it is so. How that conviction has arisen I cannot say; but it is another reason why the court is unpopular in that Province. I do not say that it is a very popular court in the other Provinces; on the contrary, I think that in many of the Provinces the same feeling exists towards it."

Nothing is easier, Mr. Speaker, than to prove this sentiment; nothing is easier than to prove that the opinion expressed by the hon. Minister of Public Works is an opinion based on statements which have been made in this House. In order to establish that point, all I have to do is to quote those statements, and the first name I come across is that of the hon. member for South Lanark (Mr. Haggart) who thus spoke in the month of February, 1879:

"The hon. gentleman who introduced this Bill only spoke the feelings of a great portion of the people of Ontario in explaining it. There was a strong feeling in the community against the multiplying of the courts and it was being expressed in almost every portion of the country. The Supreme Court was regarded as entirely useless, while at the same time a great cost to Canada."

The hon. member for North Simcoe (Mr. McCarthy) expressed himself in the following terms:—

"The hon. gentleman who introduced this Bill had done nothing more than express, in its introduction, the feeling which was entertained, not merely in the Province of Ontario but still more largely in the Province of Quebec, with respect to the necessity for its abolition."

The hon. member for Lincoln (Mr. Rykert) held the following opinion on the Supreme Court:—

"He failed to hear any observations of the hon. gentleman for East Northumberland casting reflections on the Supreme Court, but had he gone that far, he would not have gone further than public opinion would have justified. No other court was so unpopular to-day, particularly in Ontario. They had a perfect right to discuss this question in Parliament."

The hon. member for North York (Mr. Strange) expressed the following opinion in 1881:—

"The question was put to me whether, in the event of this question coming before the House, I would apply myself to words favoring a repeal of the Supreme Court Act. I took the ground that we have in Ontario a Court of Appeal to which any cases from the inferior courts might be referred, and that in my opinion—an unprofessional one, of course—so far as that Province was concerned, the Supreme Court was unnecessary, and therefore, that I should have no hesitation in voting for its repeal."

Now, Mr. Speaker, if you wish to hear the expression of public sentiment in the Maritime Provinces, all you have to do is to refer to the Hansard of 1880, and you will see that the hon. member for Lunenburg thus gave expression to his opinion:

"With all due deference to the remarks of our right hon. friend the leader of the Government, in opposition to the Bill now before the House, for the repeal of the Supreme and Exchequer Courts Act, I feel bound, in justice to the county and Province I have the honor to represent, to support my hon. friend from East Northumberland (Mr. Keeler) and endorse the sentiments by him expressed."

The constitution of this court has created, as I have just said, a feeling of hostility, existing not only in the Province of Quebec, but also in the Province of Ontario and in the Maritime Provinces. If we refer to the speech made in 1880 by the right hon. leader of the Government himself, we find the following statement, which, I think, does not show a great deal of confidence in the composition of that court. The hon. leader of the Government thus expressed himself:

"I must admit that I do not think there is any advantage to be gained in shutting one's eyes to the fact that the court, by some accident or misfortune, has not obtained that confidence which such a tribunal ought to have succeeded in obtaining. What may be the cause of this, it is bootless just now to discuss."

The hon. member for Niagara (Mr. Plumb) who is no more a member of this House, did not wish to leave us without having also his word to say on the subject. He said:

"I have listened with attention to the arguments of both parties. There are certainly reasons for discontent against the court."

And the hon. member for North Victoria (Mr. Cameron) uttered the following words:—

"It is perfectly true that the court has been objected to as not giving satisfaction to some people in Ontario. There have been some complaints, but I think the general foundation of the complaints has rather been delay in giving judgment, which may be remedied. In some cases the judgment has not given satisfaction. We think that, perhaps, to some extent, the Supreme Court has been a little too ready to overrule the decisions of the judges in Ontario, especially those in the Court of Chancery. But, for my part, I feel the necessity of the court, and regret that there should be any faults or defects in the manner in which justice is administered there."

And the hon. member for South Huron (Mr. Cameron), in answer to the hon. member for North Victoria, quoted the following words, which the hon. member for North Victoria had said on a previous occasion:—

"The public and the profession are very little satisfied with the constitution of the court. It is absolutely necessary that this constitution should be modified and strengthened."

And, Mr. Speaker, not only was there a sentiment of hostility expressed against the Supreme Court, not only was it shown to the public that there was a lack of confidence in that institution, but people even went further, and charges were brought against it. I find the following words in a speech made on the 10th of February, 1881, by the hon. Minister of Public Works:—

"I do not agree with those members who believe that the Supreme Court is all we should expect it to be. Far from it. If I am not mistaken, to-day, perhaps at this moment, judgment is being rendered in that court in a case which has been standing for months. Delays such as this are one of the reasons why that court—we must say it, because it is in the mouths of the people—has not become a popular court."

The hon. member for Cardwell (Mr. White) thus expressed himself:

"Judgment is being given at this moment and, so far as we can learn, there scarcely appears to be any agreement among the judges in relation to it. We are going to have some four or five judgments. All of the judges are presumed to be very eminent in their learning; on this subject no two of them entirely agree with each other; the effect of such disagreement in opinion will be to destroy very largely the confidence of the public in this court."

Mr. Speaker, when all these questions had been brought before the Government, when, year after year, the several members of the House had given vent to their complaints and had echoed public sentiment as it existed, not only in the Province of Quebec but also in the various Provinces forming parts of the Dominion of Canada, the Government adopted a certain line of policy and gave us promises.

Mr. BLAKE. Hear, hear.

Mr. LANDRY. (Translation.) I shall not undertake to read all the promises which have been made.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Hear, hear.

Mr. LANDRY. (Translation.) I shall point out a few. In 1880 the hon. Prime Minister said this:

"We ought to face the question, however, and enquire into the cause of the dissatisfaction which is so prevalent. It seems to me there must be a remedy. There must be some means of meeting the objections which experience has verified. The Government desires to press this seriously to that extent."

And a little further on, the hon. Prime Minister added:

"The Government desire to address themselves earnestly to this matter, and to make a full and exhaustive enquiry into the best means to remove the objections and into the best means of making the court, in every sense, efficient and satisfactory. If the House will be satisfied with a statement of this kind and will not wipe out of existence this court, I think the country will be satisfied, and that this Parliament will be able to remove the objections which have been taken possession of the public mind and make it a satisfactory and efficiently working court."

This promise, Mr. Speaker, was not clear enough, at least if we are to judge by the following remarks made on the 26th of February, 1880, by the hon. Minister of Public Works, who then said:—

"I do not wish to prolong the debate, but I desire that the position of the Government in relation to that question should be well understood. I fear that when my hon. friend the Prime Minister explained the views of the administration, his voice was not strong enough to be heard throughout the House. I would say, therefore, that it is the intention of the Government, during the recess, to examine the question, with special reference to the Province of Quebec, so as to ascertain what steps must be taken in order to meet the objections which have been raised and the inconveniences resulting from the working of this court."

And further on:

"When there is an appeal from the courts of the Province of Quebec to the Supreme Court, we find ourselves in this position: that often a judgment rendered by a large majority of the Court of Queen's Bench may be reversed by the Supreme Court; that is to say, that a judgment may be rendered by four or five judges of the Court of Appeal of the Province of Quebec, and yet that judgment may be appealed to the Supreme Court, and there reversed by two judges called from the Province of Quebec. Two-thirds of the judges of the Supreme Court do not understand the laws of the Province of Quebec, and they are, therefore, liable to err in cases coming before the court from that Province. Now, Mr. Speaker, it was to those inconveniences the hon. Prime Minister referred, when he stated that the Government would make it their business, during recess, to endeavor to find a remedy. The House must understand that, when the Government take that position and make so solemn a promise, it is their intention to meet the objections which have been raised, and to come down next Session with a measure calculated to meet the just complaints of hon. members from the Province of Quebec, and to remove the grievances enumerated by them this evening."

Mr. Speaker, this was said in 1880. In 1881, three years ago, we find the following statement made by the hon. Minister of Public Works:—

"The hon. member for Montreal East (Mr. Coursol) has alluded to the promise made last year by the First Minister, and I think confirmed in as strong language afterwards by me at a later period of the debate on this question. I regret the right hon. gentleman is not in his place, because I am sure he would say that any promise he made or authorised his colleagues to make would be fulfilled. We have not been in the habit of making promises to Parliament and not fulfilling them."

A few days later—we were then voting supplies—in the month of March, 1881, the hon. member for Hochelaga (Mr. Desjardins), on the occasion of the voting of a certain sum of money for the Supreme Court, asked if the change, promised by the Government in order to satisfy public opinion, was to be made soon, and this question brought out the following answer from the hon. Minister of Public Works:—

"The Prime Minister will, no doubt, answer this question within a certain time, and I have no doubt that his answer will satisfy my hon. friend and the Parliament."

In fact, Mr. Speaker, some time afterwards the question was again raised, and the Prime Minister gave the following answer:—

"It is quite true that the Government are liable to the charge of not carrying out what they promised to do, that is, to investigate this subject and to endeavor to remove the difficulties or the objections that are raised, chiefly, if not altogether, in the Province of Quebec. I am not one who would at all minimise the difficulties of the question. I showed that when I was Minister of Justice in a former Government, on two occasions I brought in a Supreme Court Bill, but after the measures were laid on the Table for discussion, the objections raised against it from the Province of Quebec, the extreme difficulty of constituting a tribunal that would meet the case of Quebec, which has a separate system of law and organisation, and added to that, the difficulty arising from difference of language—these difficulties were so great that they deterred me and the Government of which I was a member from legislative action on the matter. The succeeding Government introduced the present measure and carried it into effect. Almost immediately after there came from Quebec a murmur of dissatisfaction."

And further on he added:

"So far we have been able to come to any solution that would be satisfactory to the bar of Lower Canada. We must however, address ourselves to that subject, and I will again state to my hon. friend that during the recess the Government will take the question into its serious consideration, and if they do not, after giving it their best consideration, individually and collectively, work out a satisfactory solution, Government will be prepared to form a Commission, in which the bar of Lower Canada will be strongly represented, to see if a satisfactory solution cannot be arrived at."

And again:

"If the Supreme Court is to be maintained a solution must be found to remove the dissatisfaction which exists, at all events, among the Franco-Canadians of Lower Canada."

Well, Mr. Speaker, during the next Session the Government brought down a measure; it was mentioned in the Speech from the Throne, and I find that on the 10th of February, 1882, the hon. member for Beauharnois (Mr. Bergeron) in moving the Address in answer to the Speech from the Throne, alluded to the legislation promised by the Government. He said:

"That we learn with much interest that several other measures of importance will be submitted to us and that among them will be Bills for the winding up of insolvent banks, insurance companies and trading corporations, for the consolidation and amendment of the laws respecting the Dominion lands, for the amendment of the Acts relating to the Supreme Court of Canada, and Bills relating to the tenure of office of the judges of county courts."

The Session passed by, Mr. Speaker, and the Bill was never brought before the House of Commons. Nevertheless, a Bill was moved in the Senate by the hon. Minister of Justice. As far as I can remember, that Bill provided for the appointment of assessors. It was intended to appoint the Chief Justice and the other judges of the Court of Queen's Bench, of the Province of Quebec, the Chief Justice and five puisne judges of the Superior Court of that same Province, as assessors to the Supreme Court of Canada. And the Bill provided that the names of these twelve assessors should be registered on a rotation list, so as to form six divisions of two members each. Then each case brought before the Supreme Court was to be pleaded before the judges of that court, assisted by two of these assessors, who were to receive a sum of $300 for each sitting of the court which they would have attended. As I said before, this Bill originated in the Senate, where it died, and we never saw it in the House of Commons. In order to do away with the inconveniences already mentioned, it seems to me that two means could be adopted: there is the complete abolition of the Supreme Court, or the limitation of its powers. The hon. member for Northumberland (Mr. Keeler), who has been carried away by death, while in the exercise of his duties in this House, introduced, on the 21st of April, 1879, a Bill to repeal the Acts respecting the Exchequer and Supreme Court. This Bill, which was the first of its kind, provided for the complete abolition of the Supreme Court. It was lost, and during the next Session, in the month of February, 1880, the same member again introduced the Bill; it was read the first time, and when it came to the second reading an amendment was moved by the hon. member for West Durham (Mr. Blake), asking that the Bill be postponed to six months thence, and a vote of 148 was given in favor of the amendment, and of 29 in favor of the Bill; that is to say, there was a majority of 119 in favor of the amendment. During the next Session the hon. member for Northumberland again introduced the same Bill, but death overtook him before the Bill was called for second reading. With the permission of the House I was substituted for Mr. Keeler, and I moved the second reading of the Bill to abolish the Supreme Court. The majority was adverse to us, but it was reduced from 119, which it was the preceding year, to 49, on the motion proposing the six months' hoist. The next year, in 1881, the hon. member for Jacques Cartier (Mr. Girouard), introduced a Bill similar to that which we are now discussing, to limit the jurisdiction of the Supreme Court. It was read the first time, and there was a debate on the motion for second reading, but the vote was never taken. It is that same Bill which is now on the Table. This Bill does not ask for the abolition of the Supreme Court; we do not ask that, because in a previous Parliament the opinion of hon. members has been repeatedly consulted, and public opinion seems to be adverse to the abolition of that court, but we ask that its jurisdiction be limited; we ask that the court be not called upon to decide upon wholly civil matters which crop out in the Province of Quebec, and in all the Provinces at large. The first clause of the Bill reads as follows:—

"The appellate jurisdiction of the Supreme Court of Canada is abolished in all cases where the matter in dispute relates to property and civil rights in any of the Provinces, and generally as to matters of a merely local or private nature, and coming within the exclusive jurisdiction of the Legislature of any of the said Provinces, according to the meaning of the 'British North America Act, 1867,' and the Acts amending the same."

The Act of British North America, 1867, contains section 92, which is as follows:—

"In each Province the Legislature may exclusively make laws in relation to matters coming within the classes of subjects next hereinafter enumerated, that is to say: property and civil rights in the Province; the administration of justice in the Province, including the constitution, maintenance and organisation of provincial courts, both of civil and criminal jurisdiction, and including procedure in civil matters in those courts, and generally all matters of a merely local or private nature in the Province."

Well, Mr. Speaker, all cases arising from such Provincial legislation would be, by the Bill now before the House, taken away from the appellate jurisdiction of the Supreme Court. The second clause of the present Bill reads as follows:—

"This Act shall not apply to cases decided by the Exchequer Court of Canada, nor to cases where the matter in dispute affects the constitutionality or validity of any Act or statute of any one of the said Provincial Legislatures, which cases shall continue to be subject to appeal to the said Supreme Court, as now is or hereafter shall be provided for."

Finally, the third clause of the present Bill enacts the following provision :—

“This Act shall not apply to appeals already instituted or pending before the said Supreme Court.”

Such is, in a few words, the legislation I now propose, and I propose it in the hope that it will meet one of the greatest difficulties which, at the present time, are throwing such discredit on the Supreme Court, which is not the fault of the judges, but of the composition of that court. The Government have already pledged themselves to find the proper means of overcoming the difficulty, but until to-day it appears that the problem has been too difficult to solve, or that the Government have been too busy to pay a little attention to this question. At all events, for one reason or another, the remedy which has been promised has not been applied. I think that under the present circumstances, the Government will not make any opposition to the measure I now propose; or that if they do, it will be only in case they will be prepared to introduce a better measure, and then I will be most happy to withdraw my Bill in favor of the Government measure. This legislation—and I will conclude with these words—has been promised by the Government not only to do away with the grievances which are complained of, but it has been asked for, and is now, by the people of the Province of Quebec. As provincial autonomy is still occupying public attention, I believe it would be good policy to take away from the jurisdiction of the Supreme Court laws which were enacted by the Province of Quebec, and, as one of my hon. friends beside me truly remarks, laws which that court does not understand. Therefore, I move the second reading of the Bill.

Mr. TUPPER. This is a matter which deserves the serious consideration of all the members of this Parliament. I regret exceedingly that my knowledge of the language of the mover of this Bill is so imperfect that I was unable to follow him throughout his argument, but I judge from the Bill itself that the hon. gentleman seeks for an expression of want of confidence on the part of this House to a very great extent, at any rate, in the Supreme Court of Canada. I am very glad to be able to say that I do not believe, from the general expressions of opinion we have heard, both in this House and out of it, that the hon. gentleman is warranted in drawing the inference that there is a want of confidence in the Supreme Court among the people of this country. The subject to which the hon. gentleman has addressed himself, and concerning which he has cited so many quotations, has been before this Parliament and before the people of this country for some time, and I do not think that the hon. gentleman has a right to conclude from any past discussions that there is a desire on the part of the people of Canada to limit the jurisdiction of the Supreme Court to the extent proposed in this Bill. So far as the Province of Nova Scotia is concerned, I think I am safe in saying that there is almost a unanimity of opinion on the part of the business people of that Province, who have had any experience in the matter, in favor of that institution, and I believe the same general opinion exists in the other Maritime Provinces as well. There may be perhaps a greater desire in the Maritime Provinces than in the others to retain the Supreme Court, from the fact that we have not in those Provinces so many tribunals as there are in the Province of Quebec and in the larger Province of Ontario. The people of the Maritime Provinces are in general of the opinion that suits involving important questions concerning the rights of property and civil rights should have all the advantage to be derived from their thorough discussion. I say, therefore, that the Supreme Court of Canada is favorably regarded by us on the ground that it enables questions raised in a suit to be thoroughly and satisfactorily discussed before being finally adjudicated upon. Our opinion in Nova Scotia is attributable to a certain extent, to the limited number of tribunals there; and it is no reflection, I take it, on the Supreme Court of Nova Scotia, that the opinion of the Province of Nova Scotia, is due in large measure to this fact that we have only one court, so to speak, in that Province in which those questions I have mentioned are discussed before reaching the Supreme Court. The decisions of the Supreme Court of Nova Scotia are often reversed by the Supreme Court of Canada; in the latter the judges have the advantage of a double argument, so to speak, that is not only have they the advantage of the decision of the Supreme Court of Nova Scotia from which the appeal is taken, but also the advantage of fresh argument on the part of gentlemen who have already argued the question in the court below. Having every reason to feel satisfied with the results of our past experience, it would be, I believe, most unwise, so far as the Maritime Provinces are concerned, to either abolish the court or impair its efficiency and injure its usefulness by frequent discussions of this kind. The hon. gentleman who has charge of this Bill, ought, I take it, to deal very gingerly with a question of so much importance, because if that institution is to remain, as judging from expressions of opinion in this House on previous occasions, it undoubtedly will, it is of the greatest importance that it should have the confidence of the whole country; and that confidence cannot be entirely retained if frequent attacks are made upon it, especially by gentlemen holding the responsible position of members of this House. I therefore regard the frequent discussion of this matter as unfortunate from every standpoint, even from the standpoint of those gentlemen who seek to limit its jurisdiction. While I am on my feet I do not think it will be irregular or out of order to mention that while our experience in Nova Scotia has been a satisfactory one with regard to this court, there is one defect, not reflecting particularly upon the judges of that institution but to a certain extent upon its subordinate officers and perhaps upon the Government of the day, which requires prompt remedy, and that is the long delay in the publication of the decisions given from time to time affecting property and civil rights in the different Provinces. While the Supreme Court of itself is of great advantage to the community, it is a most important consideration that whatever it decides, that whenever it reverses or confirms the decisions of an inferior court, that whenever final adjudication does occur, the inferior court and the parties concerned in the matter and the bar of the Province should be made aware at once, not only of the fact that the decision of the court below has been reversed or sustained, but also of the reasons upon which such decision is based. To a great extent, up to this time, this duty has been neglected. The cases are not reported and published as readily as they might be or ought to be; oftentimes years elapsed before a decision solemnly given in this city regarding the rights of parties thousands of miles away are made known to the public, many of the decisions are not published at all, and apparently some of them not yet published will never be published, judging from the long delay that has occurred in their publication. I speak on the subject of this Bill from the very opposite standpoint of my hon. friend (Mr. Landry). He seeks to limit its jurisdiction; he seeks, according to my view, to impair its usefulness; he seeks, so far as regards the Province from which I come, to injure it, to minimise the advantages we now derive from it. He attacks the institution, I defend it. I seek to make it even more generally known and understood than it has been hitherto; I seek to have the decisions more readily made known so that they may be understood with as little delay as possible by all the parties concerned, and thus prevent, as much as possible, litigation which serves no useful purpose; for I believe many suits are brought which would not be prosecuted, if the reasons on which many of the decisions of the Supreme Court are based were at once published. I do not apprehend that this motion will be carried, but although one of the junior bar in my own Province I felt that I could not allow this occasion to pass without giving my evidence as to the satisfactory experience we have had in the Lower Provinces in regard to this Supreme Court.

Mr. GIROUARD. I rise merely to state the reason why I did not present the Bill which the hon. member for Montmagny has brought to the notice of this House. Since the discussion which took place in this House in 1881, I believe, when I presented a similar Bill, the bar of the Province of Quebec, at least of that section of it, the district of Montreal, from which I come, passed a resolution I believe by a rather large majority approving of the present constitution of the Supreme Court. For that reason, and that reason alone, I abandoned the Bill and allowed it to pass into the hands of the hon. member for Montmagny. However, the reasons I had for not presenting the Bill have not changed. They are the same to-day as they were then, and I shall, therefore, vote for the second reading of the Bill.

Mr. BEATY. I always feel a repugnance to motions which I find made in this House with a view of unsettling or changing the established institutions which we have under the Confederation Act. We have not had these institutions long enough in force to find out their true value, and in regard to the Supreme Court I do not know that, with ten years' experience, any large or any serious complaints have come from any of the Provinces with reference to its action or its jurisdiction. The effect of motions of this character in relation to this court or to the institutions which we have under the Confederation Act have this result, they unsettle things generally, and when they come to a question of a court of this character, they necessarily unsettle the rights we have in the laws of the country. It makes matters appear unstable, it makes them appear uncertain as to the laws in respect to property or to civil rights which we enjoy. If I understood the hon. member who made the motion correctly, the chief points he made were the want of knowledge of the judges of the court of the laws especially of the Province of Quebec, and the fact that the Province of Quebec, having only two representatives in that court, would necessarily not have that influence on the general decisions which it ought to have. I think, that being the line of argument, as I understand it—I am not sure that it is correct, but I think those points were made by the hon. gentleman—they are not strong enough to lead us to vote for this Bill and abolish that court. If there was a good reason at all for the establishment of that court, I think it would lead us in the direction of assimilating the laws as far as practicable; but, if a matter solely affecting property and civil rights comes before that tribunal, it must be decided according to the laws of the Province and not upon any general opinion which the court might entertain. It is the law of the Province that prevails in reference to these matters. The point the hon. gentleman makes is that the other judges, who come from Provinces other than that from which the appeal comes, may not be familiar with the law, and may not decide the case correctly. If it were a mere matter of practice, a mere matter of procedure in the courts, that argument might have some force; but, as it necessarily relates to principles of law, I think any judge who has attained the position of Judge of the Supreme Court must be capable of understanding the points presented to the court, and of deciding the cases upon the law of the Province to which it belongs. There is no other reason which I can find why that part of the jurisdiction of the Supreme Court relating to property and civil rights should be abolished, and it seems to me that every Province should have the right of coming to the highest court in the country, as it ought to have, in all cases of an important character, the right to go to England for the purpose of having a decision on matters purely of law. The case may be one affecting the whole Dominion, and under those circumstances the law should be decided by the highest tribunal, and should have the sanction of the highest authority in the land. As to the direction which legislation or judicial decisions should take, I think the principle would be to assimilate the laws as far as practicable. The criminal laws, the commercial laws, the property law and all laws of that character, and the moral law, as my hon. friend here says, should be assimilated, but of course it is impossible to assimilate the laws of the different Provinces without legislation. Why should a man be obliged, if he goes, for instance, to Manitoba, leaving Ontario, perhaps, to learn a different law to that which he knows in regard to property and its rights? Why should he have to do the same thing if he goes to the Province of Quebec, or if he goes to British Columbia why should he be put in this predicament? Yet such may be the case in different Provinces, and under these circumstances the getting a decision, and it may be a common decision, of the provincial law from the Supreme Court gives it the highest sanction and enables all persons to know what they possess and what they are entitled to. The chief point that I wish to make is that it is premature, I will not go so far as to say that it is premature to discuss the question, but to change the relation of the Supreme Court to the Provinces in regard to those matters which appertain to provincial rights or the rights of property or what are termed civil rights. Therefore, I would oppose the legislation proposed in this Bill, and I will certainly vote against it at the present time. Whether changes may come, whether the conduct of the court may be such, or the exercise of their jurisdiction may be such, as to demand some action to be taken must be left to the future; but so far as I know no complaints of a serious character, certainly none of a general character, have come up from any Province as to the action of the court in regard to civil rights and provincial laws. There may have been some quasi-political questions that have created some excitement, but they may be said now to be settled, and beyond that in the matter of property and civil rights there have been no such questions. I shall oppose the Bill.

Mr. BLAKE. I should have thought some hon. gentleman on the Ministerial benches—notably the Minister of Public Works and the First Minister—would have risen to explain to my hon. friend from Montmagny (Mr. Landry) those quotations which, at great length and with great force, he repeated to the House. The House has been made aware by the hon. gentleman of the discussions which have taken place on the subject, not merely the views of individual members of Parliament, which are of less moment perhaps, as to whether the court is popular or unpopular, as to whether it is a proper subject for abolition or repeal or not, but also the attitude of the Government on the question. We know that propositions were advanced, first by the hon. gentleman from Jacques Cartier (Mr. Girouard), and afterwards by my hon. friend from Montmagny (Mr. Landry), in the sense of the project of law before us, and we know that they were met by the hon. gentlemen on the Ministerial benches with the statement that there was a difficulty, that there was a grievance, that there was a wrong which required to be redressed, which was difficult of solution but which it was their duty to solve. It was not to be solved in the sense of this Bill, but some different solution was to be reached. They promised solemnly, both the First Minister and the Minister of Public Works, speaking for himself, and the First Minister confirming it, that they would address themselves to the task and would endeavor to meet the difficulty. A recess elapsed and they were reminded of those promises, and they acknowledged them, and stated that they had found the difficulty greater than ever they had contemplated, great though they thought it to be. But they promised once more to address themselves to the subject in the next recess, and, if they could not by their own intellects devise an appropriate remedy, they said they would appoint a commission, on which members of the bar or distinguished jurists of the different Provinces, and especially of the Province of Quebec, should be asked to sit, and they should be set to solve the question which the Administration had found itself unable to solve. The next recess also passed, and the commission was not, so far as we know, appointed, because the Administration decided that the task was not beyond their own political capacity; they decided that they themselves could meet and grapple with the difficulty, and, as my hon. friend from Montmagny has narrated, they brought forward the fruits of their labors. The result of their incubation was presented in the Upper Chamber. There it was born, and there it died. It never came before this House at all. The Minister of Justice proposed it, but he abandoned his poor orphan and it perished in the cold; and I have not since that time heard of any fresh attempt on the part of Ministers to redress a grievance and cure a defect by them stated to be grave, to be serious, to require legislative action, and which they had promised twice this House, very solemnly, they would address themselves to successfully. On the second occasion the hon. gentleman spoke with a just confidence with reference to his past record. He said: The House knows we are making a solemn promise, and when we are making a solemn promise that promise will be performed. But this is the way it has been performed. I, myself, on that occasion came to the rescue of hon. gentlemen opposite. When the hon. member for Montmagny (Mr. Landry) was pressing his Bill and hon. gentlemen opposite were inviting him to delay action, I pointed out that the Government had pledged themselves to press the measure through this Session and that, therefore, if he had confidence in the Government—which I had not but which he professed to have—and if he had confidence that the Government would in the future fulfil their pledges, we would have an opportunity of dealing with their measure in this House, and in this House he could propose his own as an alternative measure. The hon. member for Montmagny (Mr. Landry) who had been persuaded by the dulcet tones of the hon. gentleman opposite, yielded to the persuasion of this side of the House; he desisted from prosecuting his measure on my suggestion that his doing so was an obvious indication of palpable want of confidence in the assurance and promises of my hon. friend opposite. He felt he could say no more and he sat down. He and I both expected—one of us having no confidence, and the other having great confidence, in the Government—we both expected that we would have an opportunity of sitting upon this egg of the hon. gentlemen opposite and seeing what we could hatch out of it. But the hon. gentlemen would not bring their egg down here to be hatched by this House, and the result is such as I have stated. Well, now, under these circumstances, when the hon. gentleman, with commendable patience, considering those calamities which his unhappy Province, according to his own accounts, has been for so many years suffering, by reason of these unredressed grievances, by reason of this great and serious difficulty, when I say, the hon. gentleman was silent for this long time, and comes at last with a repetition of the same Bill, and presents to the hon. gentlemen opposite these promises—I will not say made to be broken, but made and broken—these promises made and broken and repeated and broken still, I should have thought, I say, that at the last moment, after my hon. friend had resumed his seat, the hon. gentlemen opposite, whose solemn pledges, made in the face of Parliament, had been brought to their attention by one of their warmest supporters, would have given some explanation of the case and some statement of the course they intended to pursue with reference to his measure and with reference to the court of which it is the subject. I think we have a right to know whether the Government is still of opinion that the constitution of the Supreme Court is defective. Obviously their view was that an alteration should be made, not as to the powers of the court, but as to the composition of the court. That is where they thought the difficulty lay, and it was to that they attempted to apply a remedy. But we do not know now, after these statements, what their present view is, whether they think there is still a difficulty with reference to the composition of the court, and whether, if they think there is a difficulty, they think it is a difficulty which is capable of remedy; whether, having abandoned the attempt to remedy it, if they think there is that difficulty, they think the only course is to adopt the view of their supporter from Montmagny and to agree to this Bill. I hope, Sir, that at an early stage, as early a stage as is possible, of this debate, these questions will be answered. For my own part, Sir, I may say that I believe on theoretic grounds a view very close to that of the hon. member for Montmagny (Mr. Landry) is the proper view. I have always believed that the judicial and the legislative power ought to be co-ordinate, and that the same authority which makes, ought to interpret, the law. That has always been my view, and I have expressed it not unfrequently here as the proper theoretical constitution, and applying that to a federal constitution you would reach the conclusion that if the Local Legislature has exclusive jurisdiction over what the law shall be upon some particular topic, that Local Legislature ought also to have exclusive jurisdiction over the creation of the tribunals which are to interpret those laws. There is another question, that of uniformity, suggested for the hon. member for Toronto (Mr. Beatty). We know not on the floor of Parliament, that I am aware of, but the public knows, what the hon. member's views are. He is a legislative unionist; and it has been made pretty well to appear in his observations to-night. He thinks there ought to be legislative union. He thinks the law as to property and civil rights ought to be the same all over the Dominion, and if the same all over the Dominion, it ought to be made here and ought to be interpreted by a judicial authority created and under the authority of this Legislature, of course. But that is not the general sentiment. The hon. member for Toronto will find himself, when he makes a proposition of that kind, without very much support in this House. But dealing with the constitution as it is, as a federal constitution, whether more or less perfect, it seems to me to be perfectly clear that, theoretically, if you are framing a federal constitution the same legislative jurisdiction which makes the law ought to create the functionaries who are to interpret it; so that if your local judges go wrong, it is your Local Legislatures that can correct them. If they say: Now, we interpret this law to mean so and so, and if theoretically, the Legislature finds that it is contrary to their meaning and intention in passing the law, they can alter the law, and make it clear, and they thus correct the views of the judges who then interpret the law according to what the Legislature intended the judicial interpretation should be. Now these two powers have not an appeal to the Supreme Court, but to the Privy Council for the correction of an erroneous judgment. Of course, I do not speak of a retroactive law, but I speak of a settlement of the law for the future upon the basis upon which the people's representatives think it ought to be settled; and I say such a settlement must take place in the Local Legislature, and therefore whatever errors of judgment may take place on the part of the local judges, will affect only individual and isolated cases, and can be cured as to their causes for all future time by the legislative action of the Local Parliament.

Mr. BEATY. Can it not be done now just as well as if it belonged to the Local Legislature?

Mr. BLAKE. Certainly it can, but where is your assimilation? The hon. gentleman was talking of it being necessary to assimilate the law as to property and civil rights; he was saying a short time ago that the laws as to property and civil rights ought to be the same for Ontario, Quebec and Manitoba. How can they be, as long as the legislation as to property and civil rights is vested in the different Provinces? There may be divergence and there may be assimilation, but it must be voluntary divergence and voluntary assimilation. Now that is the theoretical view, but we largely depart from it, in our circumstances, in two respects. First, as to the appointment of the judges of the Superior Courts. We have provided under the Constitutional Act that the judges of the Superior Courts, though those courts are created by the Local Legislatures, shall be appointed by the federal authority; and here there is an infringement, in my opinion, practically, upon the spirit of the federal constitution. My belief is that the judges who are to interpret the local laws ought to be under the appointment of the local executive, just as the courts are confessedly under the authority of the Local Legislatures. But there is something still further, and it is that change which, I may say, almost practically reflects my own judgment as to what ought to be done with the hon. gentleman's measure. The ultimate appeal in all these questions, whether they be questions federal or local, and therefore the appeal in this very class of questions to which the hon. gentleman is adverting, is not, under our present constitution, as I have said it ought to be, with the authority which makes the law. The judicial and the legislative authorities are not co-ordinate, for the ultimate appeal is to the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council; and our local as well as federal questions are subject in appeal to a judicial body created by another Legislature than ours, and entirely beyond our control.

It being Six o'clock, the Speaker left the Chair.

After Recess.

Mr. BLAKE. I was observing that whatever the theory might be, the practical result, as our constitution has been framed, and with respect to our extra judicial relations was, that while we have an appeal to an authority altogether beyond our own bounds, it did not seem to me, when the hon. the First Minister proposed, as he did on two occasions, a Supreme Court Bill, and when subsequently Mr Fournier proposed a Supreme Court Bill under the Administration of the hon. member for East York (Mr. Mackenzie), that so long as that condition of affairs existed under which matters, which were within the exclusive province, so far as legislation was concerned, of the Provincial Legislatures, were yet for their judicial exposition subject to an appeal to the Privy Council, it would be other than pedantry to object as a question of policy to there being an appeal within our own bounds. And so long as that condition of things to which I refer continues, I cannot reach any other conclusion than this: that however desirable it may be that the judicial and legislative authority should be co-ordinate, however desirable it may be that Local Legislatures should have power to settle finally by their own means and their own tribunals the interpretation of their own laws, so long as so different a condition of affairs exist as that which I have depicted, I did not see that it would be other than pedantry to object on that score to Supreme Court jurisdiction in those respects. The jurisdiction given to the Supreme Court of Appeal in those matters is one within our own control, is one capable of being modified by us, capable of being abrogated by us, and when we please. If we deem it to be unsatisfactory, we can repeal the law. If we deem the working of the court and its composition to be unsatisfactory we can amend the law, and there is obviously convenience in giving an appeal too—if an appeal there is to be beyond local bounds—within our own territory to judges made, not indeed by provincial authorities, but yet by Canadian authorities over the appeal to the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council. The members from the Maritime Provinces have on various occasions spoken in the same strain as that in which the hon. member for Pictou (Mr. Tupper) just spoke. No doubt they feel the importance of this appeal, and that it means more to them than to the men who come from the larger Provinces which have already within their jurisdiction Appellate Courts. They are able in the Province of Quebec and in the Province of Ontario to point to those opportunities of appeal and of having more than one decision, to which the hon. member for Pictou pointed as an important part of the machinery of the administration of justice in grave cases; and, therefore with them the necessity is not so great as it is in Provinces which up to this time have had, and are likely so far as I can judge, to continue to have, only one first and final court within their own bounds. It is to them a matter of great convenience; it was to them a great practical improvement in the administration of justice that there should be this appeal. Another reason which animated me in assenting to that part of the proposals of the hon. the First Minister and of Mr. Fournier, was, that, deeming it important that there should be a Supreme Court, I felt it was impossible practically to constitute a Supreme Court unless this jurisdiction were given, because there would be so little work for the court to do if you did not give it this jurisdiction; you could not defend the cost of the machinery before the public unless that amount of work were given it to do. It does not appear to me that if the Supreme Court had been constituted without those appeals from questions of civil rights, it would have lasted up to this time, because I believe the attack directed against it would have been one against the institution costing $60,000 or $70,000 and hearing six or seven cases a year, and the general public would have felt it to be a very strong argument; because we know the argument as to the cost of the court with even the very large business that is done compared with that under the circumstances to which I have alluded, was a very strong argument, and it was pressed very forcibly in the Province of Quebec as in some of the other Provinces, and it was pressed in Nova Scotia too by a namesake and relative of the hon. member for Pictou (Mr. Tupper), who very much condemned the Administration of Mr. Mackenzie for imposing on the country a cost which, I think, with a large and liberal measure, he estimated at $100,000 a year for the creation of a Supreme Court. If the real figures had been appealed to, with the smaller amount of business to which I have alluded, I am quite convinced that the argument would have been very much more emphatic and the results very much more serious than they were. So it has happened, as I say, that I felt myself bound to sustain that portion of the proposition of the hon. gentlemen opposite which involved the giving of this jurisdiction, and that portion of the proposition engrafted also in the Bill which became an Act under the Administration of the hon. member for East York. At that time it was a question among jurists and members of Parliament whether there was power under the Confederation Act to confer this jurisdiction, whether it gave power to the Parliament of Canada, to deal with other classes of cases than those touched on by the hon. gentleman's Bill. I quite agree that there is something to be said in favor of that view, but the balance of the argument was in favor of the opposite view, that we had jurisdiction and that it was a question of policy. And that question seems to be pretty well practically settled now, because we have had the court in vogue for several years. A very large number of appeals in this class of cases, appeals to the ultimate court of appeal, the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council, have been taken, and the question has never been raised, or if raised it has been decided adversely to those who thought that the Parliament of Canada had no power to create a court with this particular jurisdiction. The power being at this day conceded, the question is one of policy, and it is not one of policy as to creation but as to maintenance; and so long as we remain with an appeal court outside our own country and not subject to our control at all, dealing with questions of property and civil rights, matters of exclusive provincial jurisdiction, so long I remain of the opinion that we ought to sustain the jurisdiction we have given to the Supreme Court in those particulars. If the court be not properly composed so as to give confidence, reasonable confidence, to all the Provinces, that is another and distinct question to be settled on other and distinct grounds. It is a question not to be settled by the hon. gentleman's Bill, but to be settled by hon. gentlemen opposite as they have promised, but as hitherto they have failed to settle it.

Mr. MACMASTER. I am very glad, and I am sure the House is very glad, to find the conclusion at which the leader of the Opposition has arrived, is that the jurisdiction of the Supreme Court as it at present exists should be maintained. It did not appear to be a conclusion that would be reached by the hon. gentleman's reasoning before Recess, because the inference, if there was no direct statement, to be drawn from the argument which we had the pleasure of hearing was, that something in the nature of the proposition of the hon. member for Montmagny (Mr. Landry) should be adopted. But that evidently was from the theoretical point of view. Now when we have the matured opinions of the leader of the Opposition, based on experience of the necessities of the country, we find that his conclusion is that it is best to let well enough alone. The proposition involved in the Bill is one of a very serious character. The hon. gentleman proposes practically to take away from the jurisdiction of the Supreme Court everything that falls within the legislative power of the Provinces, because when we take questions of civil rights and property, and everything of a private nature in the Provinces, out of the jurisdiction of the Supreme Court, we are practically taking everything that falls within the legislative jurisdiction of the Provinces. The effect will be in the first place to take away nine-tenths of the subject matters which now come up for determination before the Supreme Court, to reduce the business of the court to a minimum, and to probably bring about the result which the hon. gentleman called attention to, viz.: that if the court had been left with this limited jurisdiction from the outset it would not have lasted more than eight or ten years. The effect of the passing of this Bill would be really to castrate the court and lead in the end to its abolition. Now, Mr. Speaker, what are the real objections to the court? The hon. leader of the Opposition has waived any objections which he raised at the outset. He then stated that in his opinion, from a theoretical point of view, it would be best that the Legislatures which pass the laws should appoint the judges who are to interpret them. Well, in order to carry out that idea we would require a change in the constitution, so it is probably best to deal with the constitution as we have it. I do not quite agree with the leader of the Opposition that the position taken by the hon. member for Toronto (Mr. Beatty) was altogether an unreasonable one. That hon. gentleman expressed his preference for the assimilation of the civil laws of the different Provinces. Well, there is a provision in our constitution for assimilating our laws—an express clause in the Confederation Act that the laws of the English speaking Provinces, the laws of all the Provinces except Quebec, may be assimilated by an Act of this Parliament, provided that the assent of the several Provinces is obtained thereto; so this project of the hon. member for Toronto (Mr. Beatty), with the single exception of its application to the Province of Quebec, may not be so distant as some hon. gentlemen may think. Now what are the objections to the court raised by my hon. friend from Montmagny (Mr. Landry), and we must admit that he has brought to the consideration of this question a great deal of industry and a great deal of ingenuity. I am not one of those who say that the question of the existence of the court should not be discussed in Parliament. If the court cannot stand discussion, let it fall. The hon. member for Montmagny (Mr. Landry) pointed out two or three objections. First, he says there are only two judges from the Province of Quebec—only two judges who understand the civil laws of that Province, and that they have to sit in banc with four judges from the other Provinces, familiar only with English common law, and therefore that the influence of the judges from Quebec is liable to be overborne. On the face of it there is a great deal in that objection. But we must remember that in the Privy Council of England, which has been thoroughly satisfactory to the Province of Quebec, so much so that in no part of the Dominion has there been a greater expression of satisfaction with the decisions of that tribunal, the Dominion has not a single judge familiar with the laws peculiar to Quebec.

An hon. MEMBER. Hear, hear.

Mr. MACMASTER. When I say familiar, I mean that they have not been trained in that law; they are not experienced in it, though they may have become familiar with it by study, but so may the judges in the Supreme Court, familiar with the common law, likewise become familiar with the civil law of the Province of Quebec, especially when they are in constant contact with the judges and advocates from that Province. While referring to the Privy Council, it might be worthy of the consideration of the Prime Minister and the leader of the Opposition whether distinguished Canadian jurists should not find their way to the Privy Council, just as Indian and Australian lawyers have found their way to places on that bench. Sir Richard Couch was, I think, an Indian judge, and I think Sir Arthur Hobhouse is an Australian.

Mr. BLAKE. Sir Lawrence Peacock was an Indian judge.

Mr. MACMASTER. I have no doubt.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. Sir Erskine Perry was.

Mr. MACMASTER. I am not aware of any distinguished member of the Canadian bar, in the present generation at least, having been transferred to the Privy Council, and I do not know that that august body would be much injured by the transference there of such eminent legal gentlemen as the leader of the Opposition and the leader of the Government, though it is generally understood that the latter gentleman is not to leave this scene until he departs for a higher and a better one. Another objection raised by the hon. member for Montmagny was that the lawyers of French origin from the Province of Quebec, pleading their cases and speaking in their own tongues, had to speak to judges some of whom were not familiar with the language of the pleaders. On the face of it there is something in that objection; but it is creditable to the judges of the Supreme Court who are not born and bred in the Province of Quebec (for instance Mr. Justice Strong) that they are not merely familiar with the French language, but very familiar with the French civil law. Again, I do not think this objection is a serious one. Advocates who appear before the Supreme Court bench file their printed books and arguments, and these can be examined carefully by the judges; and again it must be said to the credit of the members of the legal profession of French origin in the Province of Quebec that they address our courts with a grace, an elegance, and skill in the English language that put men of British origin to shame when they attempt to speak the French language. The other difficulties to which the hon. gentleman called attention were more in the nature of fears expressed by way of anticipation, but I venture to say that those fears have never been realized. I am not aware of—and I am tolerably familiar with the decisions of the court—and I cannot point to any case in which, as a lawyer, I can say that the civil law of the Province of Quebec has been overruled by the English judges, and I do not think that any other hon. member in the House can point to such a case. Until the decisions of the court are impugned and it is pointed out and made clear to Parliament that they have not been equal to their functions, and have not interpreted the law correctly, we should not make a retrograde movement by repealing a measure which the leader of the Opposition and his friends, with the aid of those on this side, put on the Statute-Book for the purpose of securing a general court of appeal for this country. I regret that the leader of the Opposition did not express his confidence in the court. I think it would have been well, not only in the interest of the court, but in the interest of the profession and the public, that that learned and hon. gentleman should have expressed his confidence in this court of appeal. He expressed some little doubt in the early portion of his remarks with regard to the system, but these were gradually wafted away at the close of his speech. But I greatly regret that he did not express confidence in the court itself, although I have no doubt that if he had expressed his opinion he has thorough confidence in the court. As far as I can ascertain, not merely from my own experience in the Supreme Court of Canada, but from the experience of advocates from the Province of Quebec, a feeling of perfect satisfaction is entertained by them with regard to its decisions. I would not say that there is entire satisfaction with its constitution. That perhaps might be improved; but as to the manner in which the judges receive the advocates of the Province of Quebec and the attentive hearing they get, I have heard expressions of satisfaction without number. Now, as to the constitution of the court. Where there is smoke there is fire; and there may be some reason—though I do not see any evidence of it—that the ground which the hon. member for Montmagny (Mr. Landry) takes, that two judges familiar with the civil law of Quebec are not sufficient in order to secure satisfaction in that Province. The Province of Quebec has a system of law peculiar to itself, and it may be that to secure greater satisfaction there should be a reconstitution of the court. I do not know that we should do an unwise thing or be misappropriating the money necessary, if we made some additions to the membership of the Supreme Court—if we provided for the appointment of an extra judge for the Province of Ontario and an extra judge for the Province of Quebec. The people of Quebec would then be sure of always having three judges from that Province sitting for the trial of their cases, and it would be practically impossible to reverse the decisions of the Court of Appeals of the Province of Quebec if the three judges from that Province were for maintaining them. Perhaps eight judges might seem a very large number for the Supreme Court bench. But our circumstances are rather exceptional, and we must temper the breeze to the shorn lamb. I believe there are nine or ten judges in the Supreme Court of the United States; and yet, although the whole number is not required to sit at the rendering of judgments, they are so unable to overtake the business that at the present time there are nearly 1,000 appeals in arrear on the roll of that court. These I understand to be the main objections of the hon. gentleman, and I think in the manner I suggest, though the suggestion should not originate with me, those objections might be removed. I would merely reiterate the argument of my hon. friend from Toronto (Mr. Beaty), who said that it would be most unfair to the court, a most unwise and injudicious thing, after it had had an existence of only ten years as a general court of appeal for the whole of Canada, to abolish it without giving it a fair and full trial. When the hon. member has made out a fair case, showing that his Province has suffered or that its civil law has been trampled upon, then there will be a sufficient sense of justice in this House to remedy that injustice. I would merely call your attention, Mr. Speaker, to the opinions of a man who was supposed to have, and no doubt had, the interests of this country at heart, and whom hon. gentlemen opposite followed as loyally as Mussulman followed Mohammed—I refer to the late Hon. George Brown, who in his speech on Confederation, after discussing the details, said:

“I say that, taking the scheme as a whole, it has my cordial, enthusiastic support, without hesitation or reservation.”

It is under that constitution that this court has been established and maintained. The late Hon. George Brown, speaking on the very matter which is now under discussion, on the integrity of the constitution and the necessity of preserving our institutions in such a way as to conserve, not only the present, but the future interests of the people, said:

“By placing the appointment of the judges in the hands of the General Government, and the establishment of a Central Court of Appeal, we have secured uniformity of justice over the whole land.”

Now, Mr. Speaker, I think we should hesitate, at this early stage in our progress as a Confederation and in the history of this court, in interfering with the constitution or the powers of a court which has worked with success up to this time, and for which the late Hon. George Brown, as well as the leader of the present Government, held out such fair promise.

Mr. CURRAN. Mr. Speaker, I have no desire to detain this House at any great length on the subject now under our consideration; but, as belonging to the Province which is more particularly to be affected by the measure proposed, I desire to say a very few words. As regards the original constitution of the court, I may say I was one of those who felt that it was premature to establish such a tribunal at the time the measure for that purpose was brought before Parliament. There was throughout the whole Province of Quebec a very strong popular opinion against the measure, and I may further say there was an equally strong opinion amongst the members of the legal profession, that cases coming before this court for adjudication from the Province of Quebec could not receive that consideration to which they were entitled; and at that time I fully concurred in all that has fallen from the hon. member for Montmagny (Mr. Landry), to-day. However, the Government of the day thought proper to constitute the court, and it has been working for a certain number of years. Under these circumstances, I am under the impression that in bringing forward a measure of this kind, the hon. gentleman who is fathering this Bill should have come before this House armed with something more than his own ipse dixit. He should have come here fortified with representations from the various sections of the bar of Lower Canada, showing that the members of our bar, through their duly constituted authorities, felt aggrieved at the manner in which the legal business from that Province was being conducted. Now, we have no such representations before this honorable House. My hon. friend in bringing forward his motion to-day has not insisted that any such ideas prevail, and we have the statement of the hon. member for Jacques Cartier (Mr. Girouard) that the only section of the bar of Lower Canada that has at all expressed itself, the bar of the district of Montreal, has pronounced against any interference with the present constitution of the court. Now, in view of the fact that more than one-half of the whole business of our courts in the Province of Quebec is transacted in the District of Montreal, I think the action of the learned gentlemen composing that section of the bar may well lead us to believe that the working of the Supreme Court is giving pretty general satisfaction. No doubt, at first view, when we consider that there are only two members of that court appointed from the Province of Quebec, it must strike us that the representation from that Province is hardly strong enough. Yet it appears to me that the remedy suggested by the hon. member for Glengarry (Mr. Macmaster) would not for one moment relieve us from any of the difficulties under which we may be supposed to labor. Appointing an additional judge from the Province of Quebec would give us three judges in the Supreme Court, but we should still have three members of the Supreme Court over-riding the judgments of perhaps five members of the Court of Queen's Bench in the Province of Quebec, and thus the difficulty suggested by my hon. friend from Montmagny would still remain. But my reason for opposing this Bill, under the present circumstances, is this, that the personel of the Supreme Court at present gives pretty general satisfaction and a sure guarantee that our provincial matters will be properly administered. Under the statutes of old Canada, as well as under our present statutes, ten years' practice at the bar was considered sufficient to render a lawyer competent to be appointed to the bench, that is he could not be appointed unless he had previously ten years' practice. That was the term fixed at the expiration of which a gentleman might be elevated to the bench. Now, if we look at the personel of the Supreme Court, as it stands to-day, we find that whilst we have our two members from the Province of Quebec there, three of the original members who were appointed, I think, in 1877, still occupy seats in that court. Now, it strikes me that if after a practice of ten years at the bar, a lawyer is considered competent to become a judge, gentlemen possessing the eminent qualifications of those who have been raised to the bench of the Supreme Court ought, after having sat for eight years upon that bench, after having had our laws expounded before them and studied those laws, not only on their own account, but in conjunction with their distinguished colleagues from the lower Canadian bar, to be at least, as competent to administer our provincial laws, as any person who may have practised ten years at the bar of our own Province. I therefore consider, in view of the fact that we have no outcry against the decisions of this court and no complaints that I see in connection with its judgments; in view of the fact that in hardly a single case have the opinions of the two members of the Lower Canadian section on that bench been overridden by those of their brother judges in cases involving questions of Quebec law, we have a very fair reason to suppose that this court, as now constituted, has given and is likely to give general satisfaction. I see with pleasure that a class of men is now springing up who will be available in the future to occupy seats on this bench. If you look at the bar of the Province of Quebec you will find there more than one gentleman who has graduated at the bar of the Province of Ontario; if you look at the bar of Ontario you will find there a number of gentlemen who are barristers of the Province of Quebec, and if you go to the Province of Manitoba, you will find there large numbers of legal gentlemen, barristers both of Quebec and Ontario, and no doubt from the other Provinces as well. Under all these circumstances, I feel it to be very injudicious on our part to interfere with the court as now constituted. I certainly have great pleasure in re-echoing the sentiments expressed by those who have spoken to-day as to the necessity of maintaining our institutions, of allowing those institutions to take root in the hearts of the people, and certainly if we go on, day by day, altering and amending, we shall not be proceeding in the proper spirit, or in a way likely to endear those institutions to the people at large. In concluding, I will say that whilst on the whole I have never heard any complaint with regard to the judgments of the Supreme Court; yet, from very high quarters indeed, I have received a complaint which, as will be seen by a motion that is now on the Order paper for certain returns, I am endeavoring to investigate—a complaint with regard, not to the judgments of the Supreme Court, but to the very great delay that occurs between the argument of a case and the rendering of a final judgment. We know that many complaints are made that our judges in the Province of Quebec do not decide cases in a great many instances on the spot, cases which perhaps might be so decided, that from time to time the délibérés are almost interminable; and, if my information be correct, and I hope it is not, it would seem that to a certain extent this practice of long délibérés is creeping into the Supreme Court causing months and months to elapse, in many cases, before judgments are rendered. In view of all these facts, considering especially that the court as now constituted is likely to give satisfaction, taking into consideration that we have two of our own judges on it, and that it comprises other judges who have had many years' experience in the administration of our laws, I feel on this occasion compelled to give my vote against the measure proposed by the hon. member for Montmagny, although under other circumstances I might perhaps be disposed to vote differently.

Mr. DAVIES. I think it is unfortunate that Bills of this kind, having for their object the attacking of the constitution and jurisdiction of the Supreme Court, should be annually brought forward, because they are apt to give rise, in the popular mind, to the impressions that this court is not discharging its duties fairly, and that a strong public opinion exists calling for its reconstruction. It must be evident, from the vast preponderance of opinion of hon. members in the House, that the opinion of the bars in the several Provinces is in favor of the court continuing as it is. It is quite evident the court has given great satisfaction to the majority of the Provinces, and if we accept the statements of the two gentlemen who have just spoken, the hon. member for Glengarry (Mr. Macmaster) and the hon. member for Montreal Centre (Mr. Curran), two distinguished members of the Montreal bar, even the bar of the Province of Quebec, the majority at any rate, seems to be well satisfied with the constitution of the Supreme Court. The hon. member for Montreal Centre expressed the opinion that its constitution at the time it was constituted was inopportune. I do not agree with him. Speaking as a member of the bar from one of the smaller Provinces, I have no hesitation in saying that the Supreme Court has been a very great benefit to the Province of Prince Edward Island; by all the Maritime Provinces it is looked upon with the highest respect, and its decisions received with the greatest satisfaction. I can give an instance in point to show why the maintenance of that court is strongly desired by the Province from which I come. When the Supreme Court was first instituted a very important Bill had passed in our Province, an Act expropriating lands in that colony. A court of commission had been appointed, which had sat for two years and had taken an immense amount of evidence, which had made awards to the amount of over a million of dollars, and after the awards had been made and a question with which that colony for nearly a century had been agitated finally settled in the manner provided by that Act, the Supreme Court of the Province came forward and in a hasty judgment set aside the whole of the awards. The work of half a century which had culminated in the compulsory land Act were destroyed, the question was relegated to the position it had occupied a quarter of a century before, and we were on the eve of another agitation, accompanied by all the evils that follow agrarian agitations. The Supreme Court of Canada had just then been established; we took an appeal to it at once; the judgment of our Provincial Supreme Court was reversed, the awards were all maintained in their entirety, and the land question of that colony, to the great benefit of that colony, was settled finally and forever. Since that time we have had the opportunity of appealing, from time to time, when occasion required, to that court, and, as I said before, the decisions of that court have given very general satisfaction, and I know of no Bill which would create more dissatisfaction in the Maritime Provinces than the Bill, if it were carried, which is now before the House. I do not think a member of the bar from one of the Maritime Provinces can be found who would express his feeling or sympathy in favor of the Bill or of the principle of the Bill. If the Bill was carried, so far as the Supreme Court of Canada is concerned, in its relation to the Maritime Provinces, it would be utterly useless. We would have our appeal, of course, to the Privy Council, but the experience of the time preceding the constitution of the Supreme Court here shows that that was not an appeal in reality at all, but merely in name. Very few cases were ever carried there, and we had no intermediate court of appeal, as they have in the larger Provinces of Quebec and Ontario. Therefore, the maintenance of the Supreme Court of the Dominion, as at present constituted, is a vital necessity for the Maritime Provinces of the Dominion, and I hope it will be long ere the constitution of that court is tampered with. I do not wish to prolong the debate, but I desire to call attention, not to the grievance my hon. friend opposite referred to, namely, that the judgments are delayed in their delivery after the arguments have taken place, but that there is a delay in the time between the delivery of the judgments and their publication, and I think that grievance is felt very seriously. I am told that the delay is in part owing to the fact that the judges have not and cannot get clerks to transcribe their judgments and assist them in the copying of their judgments and other work. They have a very great deal of work to do; their work is increasing yearly, and anything that would facilitate the publication of those judgments after they are delivered, anything in reason, I think, should be done by the Government. I think that is a grievance. Perhaps it is a small one, but it is one that is felt generally by the profession, and I hope it will be remedied. I am told by those in authority that it can be remedied, and remedied in one way, by appointing a sufficient number of clerks—one or two clerks, or whatever number may be required—to assist the judges, in order that their judgments may be transcribed.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. When the Supreme Court system was adopted as a portion of the constitution of British America, it was not adopted without grave consideration by those who were concerned in the original resolutions and in the adoption of the scheme which culminated in the British North America Act. It was considered that, following the example of the United States, there should be one Supreme Court of Appeal, to which all cases, arising, at all events, out of the laws of the Federal Parliament, might go for adjudication. It was afterwards pressed, and successfully pressed, that, as, with the exception of Ontario and Quebec, there were no courts of appeal in the Provinces, the court should not only be a court of appeal on Dominion and constitutional questions relating to the laws passed by the Federal Parliament, but a supreme court of appeal, intermediate between the courts of original jurisdiction and the final court of appeal, the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council. And in that respect the system varies from the system in the United States.

Shortly after, as it is known, the Confederation was perfected, the question of the establishment of a Supreme Court was, of course, under consideration by the Government of which I was then a member, and a measure was prepared and submitted to Parliament, but it never culminated in an Act. Then, after the Government of Mr. Mackenzie succeeded, they, following the same line of policy as the previous Government, introduced the Supreme Court Bill, which became the law of the land. The hon. gentleman, the leader of the Opposition, says that theoretically he was opposed to the Bill.

Mr. BLAKE. No.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. Yes.

Mr. BLAKE. No; not opposed to the Bill.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. Perhaps not to the Bill, but he considered that, theoretically, under the federal system, the different Provinces should have their own courts not only of original jurisdiction but of appellate jurisdiction. That was the correct theory as he described it; but notwithstanding that theory, which I suppose obtained in his mind full sway as it does at this moment, he, I think, supported the Bill. The Government introduced the Bill, he supported it, and it became the law of the land, and the court became a court dealing not only with constitutional questions, not only with the decision of Acts passed by this Parliament, but with all matters connected with property and civil rights as well. I think the court has met, as several gentlemen have stated, with the universal approval of the Provinces, with the single exception of the Province of Quebec. Well, that is an exceptional case, as has been argued. The Province of Quebec has its own system of laws, and it is carried through the instrumentality of a language which is not the language of a majority of the courts or of the bars of the different Provinces of the Dominion. The civil law varies in principle in a great degree, and thoroughly in practice, from that which obtains in the other Provinces. I can quite understand why the measure which is acceptable in the other Provinces is not so acceptable in the Province of Quebec. In all the other Provinces the law is substantially the same, based on the common law of England, with some variances of course, from the different Provinces having separate Legislatures of their own. Yet in substance, the body of the law, the corpus legis, in all the Provinces is the same, so that a trained lawyer in any of the courts in any of the Provinces, save that of Quebec, is competent in every way to sit in judgment in cases arising in any one of the Provinces of which, perhaps, he is not a member. But, in consequence of the fact that a different system of law prevails in the Province of Quebec, special care was taken to protect the law and the administration of the law of that Province in the constitution of the court, and although there are only six judges, two of them are taken ex necessitate from the Province of Quebec. As respects the other four judges, they may all come from one Province. They may all be taken from Ontario, or from New Brunswick, or from Nova Scotia. There is no limitation, there is no provision by which the different bars or benches of the different Provinces are to be represented upon the federal bench, with the single exception of the provision that two members of the Quebec bar or bench must ex necessitate be appointed to sit in the federal court. Now one would think that was a sufficient precaution. If it be not so, as has been stated, then the constitution of the court might be altered so as to strengthen that portion of the bench quoad cases arising from the Province of Quebec. It is true that the taunt thrown across the floor by the hon. gentleman opposite has some foundation, that we had undertaken on this side to take up that subject. But it is a very difficult subject, and the difficulty arises from the fact that we have not been able to discover a system by which that bench can be strengthened from the Province of Quebec without giving a predominance to that Province on all the cases that come before the court. If by adding additional judges from the Province of Quebec we would give additional weight to their decisions on cases arising from the Province of Quebec alone, there would be but little difficulty—it would be simply a matter of expenses. But the House must remember that the judges coming from the Province of Quebec, trained to a different law from the law of England, trained to a different law from the common law that prevails in all the other Provinces, and having an equal voice upon the law with which they are not familiar, can and do frequently take the responsibility of giving judgment against the majority of judges from other Provinces. Now, if the bench from the Province of Quebec were strengthened still further, that objection would have still greater force. The other Provinces would say: We are over-riden; our judges, trained to the common law of England, are over-ruled by judges coming from the Province where a different system prevails; and so the complaint which now arises, perhaps very naturally, from the Province of Quebec, would simply be transferred to the other Provinces. They would say that the civilians, those acquainted only with the civil law of Lower Canada, were over-riding the common law, which obtained in all the other Provinces. Now, I am told that practically, Sir—I cannot state with personal acquaintance or examination of the judgments of the court—but I am told that there are few, if any, cases in which the decided opinion and deliberate judgment of the two judges coming from the Province of Quebec, have been over-ruled by the other judges; but I am told also that it is found that frequently the judges from the Province of Quebec have joined with the minority of the other judges of the Supreme Court, and have over-ruled the decision of the majority of the English judges.

Some hon. MEMBERS. French domination.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. It will be impossible, Sir, it seems to me, at this stage of our existence as a Dominion, with this court established under the circumstances, working for so many years, and giving satisfaction to all the Provinces but one, to set it aside. I think, therefore, that my hon. friend, satisfied with bringing this question before Parliament with the ability and perseverance which are his characteristics, can call the attention of Parliament to it again and again, until some mode is discovered by which the constitution of the court may be so altered as to give an additional strength to the Quebec portion of it, and give additional satisfaction to the people of Quebec without, at the same time, causing dissatisfaction to the other Provinces.

Mr. BLAKE. You give it up?

Mr. MILLS. Flies on the wheel.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. My hon. friend says we are flies on the wheel. Well, no; we keep pegging away, as Lincoln said. We will not give up, we will keep pegging away, and I have no doubt that by and bye, by some happy inspiration—perhaps a hint from the hon. gentleman opposite—we will be able to discover some mode of satisfying the reasonable demands coming from the Province of Quebec. However, Mr. Speaker, meanwhile I must vote against the repeal of the Supreme Court Act.

Mr. OUMET. I do not rise to answer or to criticise what the right hon. Premier has just said, but I have been listening in vain to hear from him an argument justifying the existence of that court. Suppose, for instance, there was a law providing that a judgment rendered by one judge in a court should be appealed from to another judge in another court, that would be absurd; the idea is preposterous. Well, I think the idea is just as absurd of having a judgment that has been passed upon by five judges revised by five other judges. I understand very well that the people from the Maritime Provinces who have no appeal court—desire the continuance of the Supreme Court. Now I may say at once, Mr. Speaker, that I have nothing to say against the constitution of the court, nor against the members thereof—I have no prejudice against them. But what I say is this: We have what we call a tribunal de première instance, the Superior Court, presided over by one judge; then there is an appeal from that judge to the Court of Review, consisting of three other judges of the Superior Court. Now, if we lose a case in the latter court we may go to the Court of Queen's Bench, which is composed of five of our best men; and then if we loose there, we may come to the Supreme Court before five other judges; for, although the court is composed of six judges, five compose a quorum, and it is very seldom that the six judges sit at the same time—at least, I have practised before the court occasionally, and I never saw but five judges on the bench. Now, Mr. Speaker, what is the use of piling up tribunals one upon another, more especially when the last tribunal of appeal is composed of but the same number of judges as sat in the preceding court of appeal? As I said at first, the idea of appealing from the judgment of judges in one court to the same number of judges in another court is absurd; and, Mr. Speaker, no one feels that more than those poor people who are obliged to go before the courts to maintain their rights; no one will feel that more than a man who takes an action in the Superior Court to recover a certain amount, and when he has judgment in his favor, is taken by his adversary to another court—the Court of Review, we will suppose—and from that court to the Queen's Bench, and thence either to the Supreme Court here, or to the Privy Council. There is no end to litigation, because there is no end to tribunals of appeal. Mr. Speaker, I am not now speaking as a lawyer. It may be all very well for us lawyers to be able to take our clients from one court to another, always holding out to them the hope that they will finally succeed in the next court. I say the less tribunals of appeals we have the better for the people, and I am speaking for the people now. I say that there is no need of this Supreme Court. I do not say so because the judges give bad judgments; if they gave bad judgments then every one would say they ought to be got rid of. But suppose they only give as good judgments as do our other courts, they are then useless, and besides we have no guarantee that these men are any better men than we have in our own Province. Men are always alike, and the theory of appealing from one judgment to another cannot stand, except if the appeal is from one judge to two or three judges; that is to say, except if you appeal from a number of judges to a larger number of judges. Here we have not that guarantee. If these judges do not reverse the judgment of the court below, they are of no use. If they do, we are told they should be blamed for it. What, then, are they there for? They are of no use, except to prolong litigation, and thereby eventually help to ruin litigants. I lay down this as a proposition: We have too many appeal courts. What is the remedy? I am of the opinion, as are many others, that the theory of the Supreme Court is based on sound reasoning. The Supreme Court is supposed to be the crowning of our judicature; it is supposed to represent the supreme power, the unified power of this Confederation. I think there is reason for its existence; but I say it should be constituted so as not to create an extra appellate tribunal, but to act as a tribunal of last resort. I would make the Supreme Court a large court, consisting of different branches. Those different branches should consist of the several courts of appeal in the different Provinces who would then be incorporated in the Supreme Court. In the Maritime Provinces they have no appeal court, and the Supreme Court would remain their appeal court. The Court of Queen's Bench, in the Province of Quebec, would be the supreme court sitting in appeal on cases belonging to Lower Canada in the same places as they do to-day. The Appeal Court of Ontario would sit as a branch of the Supreme Court, and be the tribunal of last resort for cases from that Province. When a question of great constitutional importance would arise, the Supreme Court, constituted as I have said, of the judges now appointed here—whose number might be reduced in future, if it is too large for the requirements—and the judges of the provincial appeal courts, might sit together, say fifteen judges. This would be the case on a question of such importance as the last question laid before the Supreme Court, namely, the constitutionality of the McCarthy Act. Then we would obtain the opinions of fifteen of the best men of the Dominion. Such a court might be productive of good results, because the great weight of the decision of those judges might prevent the Dominion Government carrying the case before the Privy Council in respect to a question which only concerns ourselves. I think, with a court so constituted, the Government themselves would be obliged to abide by its decision. Of course, this system which I have propounded may look difficult to work out. I should say that the Provincial Governments, having jurisdiction as regards the constitution of the local courts, ought to be communicated with and approached, in order that an arrangement such as I have indicated may be arrived at. I beg to move :

That all the words after "that" in the said motion be left out, and that the following be inserted instead thereof:—"There are in our judicial system too great a number of tribunals having an appeal jurisdiction; that a humble Address be presented to His Excellency the Governor-General in Council, praying him to communicate with the several Provincial Governments, with the object of arranging a judicial system, which will diminish the number of appeal jurisdictions, whilst guaranteeing an efficient administration of justice equally satisfactory to all the Provinces."

Mr. FOSTER. The hon. gentleman who last addressed the House on this subject spoke partly as a lawyer and partly as a layman, and it was the latter part of his observations on the subject before the House which has emboldened me, not a lawyer, to say a few words with respect to this Bill. All my sympathies have been in favor of a supreme court of appeal for our whole country, and I have listened with a great deal of attention to discover what arguments would be brought forward to show why a court should not exist, and why, if it exists, it ought to be abolished. I confess I have not heard sufficient reasons to induce me to vote in favor of the Bill—to vote against the present measure which we have on the Statute Book. I hold as firmly as the hon. member for Laval (Mr. Ouimet) that too much litigation is neither profitable nor wise; but I still think that it will be found in the main that the litigation as to its amount is rather to be limited by the intelligence and experience of the people than by the number of courts which are erected in a country. Although it is well to discourage litigation as far as possible, is it not well also—if there are wrongs to be righted, and rights to be maintained, that it may be put in the power of those who are wronged or who wish to gain rights to have the widest area of redress possible, and the best ability of the country in the courts before whom they apply for that redress. I think that principle will hold quite as strongly as the other. Every objection which has been urged against the Act which we have at present on the Statute Book is one which could be urged just as well against taking our questions from the courts in Canada to the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council. Every objection which is urged against an appeal to our Supreme Court could equally well be urged against that; and yet I doubt very much if the people of this country, especially since Confederation, have not seen, time and time again, the wisdom and benefit of having that avenue open to them as a tribunal to which to refer those questions which affect the Provinces differently, or affect the Provinces in connection with the Federal Government. I think that one of the chief objections to this court is an objection which holds most at a time when the court is first established, and which wears away every year that the court grows in age. The objection, as I understand, comes from the fact that certain judges of the Supreme Court are not as well versed in certain methods of procedure and modes of law in one Province as the judges who come from that Province. But is it not true that by the fact of having this court we have all the judges of our country who are appointed to it, or who look forward to an appointment to it, making it a point to verse themselves in these different kinds of law, and so get to learn what we must get to learn if we are to have a united country—all that is to be known of the greater and wider interests of the country, legal and otherwise. Is it not true that year by year the judges will become more versed in these different methods of law, and so this objection will gradually wear away. As I listened to-night to the debate, I found that the difficulty arose from one Province—and there is division of sentiment with reference to the difficulty even in that Province—while from all the other Provinces of the Dominion I think it is but fair to say there is a consensus of opinion that this appellate court is not only beneficial but necessary; and I think the different Provinces, and I am certain the Provinces down by the sea, would be very sorry indeed to have this court taken away as a court of appeal and be confined to their own provincial courts merely—and that is not making any imputation on the calibre or talents of courts we have. Well, if all are satisfied, with the exception of one, and if there be a difference of opinion even in that one, it seems to me that the weight of opinion should hold, especially in the face of the declaration of the leader of the Government, that it is very, very difficult indeed, to hit upon a method which shall be less onerous on one Province while not, at the same time, becoming more onerous with reference to the other Provinces. The hon. member for Laval (Mr. Ouimet) said he looked in vain for a single argument in favor of the continuance of the court. I think I can give him two or three; and yet, if he heard the arguments brought forward by those who preceded me in favor of the court, I am not sure that he will take mine, because the arguments advanced before are probably stronger than any I can offer. But the line of argument I would advance is this: That it is essential to the best righting of wrongs that the area of redress shall be as wide as possible; that we shall be able not merely to go before a magistrate's court, but that we may get beyond, perhaps, the prejudice or the ignorance of a magistrate's court to the higher judicial atmosphere of the County Court—of the Court of Appeal above—and so that if our wrongs are not righted in the first we may feel with confidence that they may be righted in the second, and so on farther. And men who feel that they have wrongs to be righted will never be satisfied until they have power to get, as they have now, the very best talent selected from the whole of the country or the empire to which they belong. I believe that. Again, it is necessary as well to a better feeling with reference to the justice and security of men's rights, not only that there shall be the widest area of redress, but that there shall be men of the best possible ability to sit in the tribunals before which they go. Now, I think it goes without saying that when you pick and choose among the celebrated and strong men at the bar or on the bench in all the Provinces of the Dominion, you bring a wealth of ability, and a variety of ability, and a variety of methods of looking at different questions, which you cannot possibly hope to gain in any single Province, and so the ability which is ensured is greater far than it possibly could be in any single Province. I think it gives a greater feeling of security and content in any community or in any Province to feel that it is not bound to the courts of its own Province, where provincial prejudices might sometimes get in, but that it can go to a court which is outside of those prejudices, as far as possible, and get that justice which possibly might, from some circumstance, be denied them at home. I think that is another reason for that wider court. But the very fact that we have an appellate court for the Dominion makes a better court for each Province. Why? Because every judgment given by a provincial court may be brought up in review before the larger court, and it therefore puts the provincial courts on their mettle. If these courts were of final jurisdiction they might perhaps get a little careless; but they will say: We need to be very careful in looking into the matter, from the fact that every judgment of our court may be brought before judges from all the Provinces. This condition of things ensures that these provincial court judges will do their duty—they are put on their mettle—and therefore we get better provincial courts. I think that is an argument which we might well consider. More than that, and my chief reason for being in sympathy with the Supreme Court is that it is a national court, a bond of union for the whole country—that in it we unite the different phases of legal talent and ability—of race, and of creed and of Province; that the whole Dominion brings them together, where we can look upon them as the central fountain of judicial decision for the whole country. So the Provinces are united by another bond, and they are not simply divided and kept apart amongst themselves, so far as the highest judicial decisions are concerned. I think the benefit in that way—in having this as a bond of greater and closer union—is one which is not to be despised in this argument. I think, also, with several who have spoken on this subject, that although it may be within the power of this Parliament, although it may be within the power of the politicians of the country, to bring up any of our institutions and pass them in review, there is danger in being continually hammering away at what have been, for a certain time, institutions of the country, and so creating a general feeling of uncertainty as to whether these things will last, whether they are sure, whether they are settling down into really strong and stable institutions of the country. So I am in favor of keeping the court. I believe it will grow better year by year. I want it because it is a bond of union, because there we can get the very best judicial talent in our country from all these Provinces, and I want it most of all because I feel that we need it as the culmination of the area of widest redress possible in our country, and it is the place where we can get the best judicial discussions and decisions.

Mr. AMYOT. I heard, with a certain amount of surprise, that the hon. member who has just spoken did not find any good reason for the Bill that has been presented. I think it will be admitted that such a question should be discussed without any reference to the existing judges. It would not be fair to come before this hon. House and say that such a judge and such another judge possessed such and such qualities. I am ready to admit that the present judges are the best judges we have ever had, and that if they were never going to die, we might consent to keep the court as it is at present constituted. But when we come to discuss the constitution of a court, we should do so without reference to the existing judges. I understand that the mover of the Bill does not wish to abolish the appellate jurisdiction of the Supreme Court for any Province that desires to keep the same. The object of the Bill, as understood in the Province of Quebec, is to take away the appellate jurisdiction of that tribunal for the Province of Quebec; and the reasons for that are very clear and obvious. We contend that for us, that tribunal is, in the first place, useless; secondly, that it is dangerous; and thirdly, that it is against the spirit of the treaties. Now, the hon. members of this House know that we, in the Province of Quebec, have a special system of law, entirely different from the common law or the statute law of England, or of any of the other Provinces of the Dominion. Will any of the hon. members of this House tell me what interest they have in forcing us to be guided in these matters by judges who have not studied our laws, who have not spent their lives in being trained to them? They say: We want a court of general jurisdiction; we want unity in our laws. That is all very well, Mr. Speaker; and it has been provided for by the Confederation Act, except in the case of the Province of Quebec. In that Province our cases are first heard by four judges of the Superior Court, and afterwards by five judges of the Appeal Court. Yet we are to be subjected, in spite of our will, to have the decision of those nine judges reversed by two judges! Where is the sense of that? How comes it that there is more brain in two men than in our nine judges? And suppose the two judges should disagree, and there should be one against one; and suppose they agree, and there are four on the other side! I am told that has not occurred yet; but who is to give me a guarantee that it will never occur? Who can tell me who are to be appointed judges in the future? Who will tell me that at some future day judges may not be appointed who will be our hatred, and who will begin a persecution against the principles which we cherish? We must not be blinded, but we must foresee for the future. I was surprised to hear the hon. member for Montreal Centre (Mr. Curran) ask: Where are the petitions? Has he not been at public meetings in the Province of Quebec for the last ten years? Has he not read the press? Has he not heard repeatedly the denunciations of the Supreme Court in that Province? We do not want it; we do not want the nonsense of those men, who do not know our laws, undertaking to judge our laws. Keep the court for the other Provinces if you want it; appoint other judges if you like; but we say, for us, we have been admitted by the Crown of England, centuries ago, with all our laws and with all the liberties that we possessed before. Those rights have been maintained; we have spent our blood for them, and for the British flag too; and by the Act of Confederation we were given the guarantee that our laws would be respected, and that the judges for the Province of Quebec would be selected from the bar of that Province. That was the guarantee; and is it because there is another clause surrounded with difficulty in interpretation, that you will impose upon us judges not taken from our bar? That is the injustice that is imposed upon us. As my hon. friend from Laval (Mr. Ouimet) said, we have already too many tribunals. But there is another reason why we do not want this court; not only is it useless, but it is dangerous. It is against the spirit of the treaty. It is against the general and well understood principles laid down when Confederation was brought about. In the name of the Province of Quebec, whose sentiments have been so often expressed and are so well known, we say: We have entered the Confederation of Canada, but we have done so with the understanding that our judges, taken from the bar of the Province of Quebec, would rule us, would have exclusive jurisdiction, and we do not want that formal agreement to be disregarded. There is the Privy Council, whose jurisdiction is a matter inherent in the colonial system. We have submitted to it; we were bound to do so; we have made that sacrifice, and we will make it as long as the people decide to remain under the British flag. But if we had not that tribunal, we contend that God has given brain enough to the people of the Province of Quebec to rule themselves without being obliged to cross the sea and be ruled by the infallibility of judges in England. Moreover, the English judges have not their minds influenced by the statutes of the other Provinces, and they are always careful enough, when a question of old French law arises, to consult the experience resulting from the large practice of the best French lawyers. But what cannot be cured must be endured, and we have to receive the jurisdiction of the Privy Council, for which I have the highest respect; but we are not bound to endure the other jurisdiction here. We are entrusted with the care of the old laws which our forefathers have always respected, and which we intend to give intact to future generations. And we say to the other members of the Confederation. Arrange your interests as you please; have any court you wish; but for the Province of Quebec, respect our statutes; respect the treaty; respect the Confederation Act; and if any of the representatives of the Province of Quebec think that we are not rightly expressing here the opinion and desire of that Province, let them say so and take the responsibility.

Mr. LAURIER. My hon. friend from Laval (Mr. Ouimet) stated, in the course of the argument he offered to the House, that we are suffering from too many appeals. I do not think the case is as bad as he represented it. He stated that there was an appeal from the judgment of the Superior Court to the Court of Review, and from the Court of Review to the Court of Appeal. This, as he knows, is only partially true. There may be an appeal from the judgment of the Superior Court to the Court of Review, but if the judgment of the Superior Court is confirmed by the Court of Review, there is no further appeal. It is only when the judgment of the Superior Court is reversed by the Court of Review that an appeal can be made to the Court of Appeal. Now, my hon. friend stated, and that was the burden of his speech, that having two many appeals we should suppress the appeal from the judgment of the Court of Appeal to the Supreme Court. My hon. friend forgets that though he may suppress the jurisdiction of the Supreme Court he will not make away with the right of appeal. My hon. friend knows that at present, when there is an appeal to the Supreme Court there is an appeal of the Privy Council, and when there is an appeal of the Privy Council there is an appeal to the Supreme Court, and the suitor has the choice between the Supreme Court and the Privy Council; so that if you should suppress the appeal to the jurisdiction of the Supreme Court in purely provincial matters, the appeal to the Privy Council will still remain and you still do not suppress the right of appeal. We will still remain with as many appeals as we now have. My hon. friend who has just spoken (Mr. Amyot) said it was sheer nonsense that the judgments of our Court of Appeal, composed of five judges versed in the French law, should be reviewed by the Supreme Court, in which there are only two judges versed in the French law. But if that be nonsensical, is it not far more nonsensical that an appeal should be taken to the Privy Council, where there are no judges supposed to be practically versed in our law? I prefer, for my part, the lesser to the greater nonsense if nonsense there be. It is said that Quebec, as a whole, is opposed to the Supreme Court. I deny that. I say that the Supreme Court has given, on the whole, general satisfaction to the Province of Quebec. It is true that when the court was first established it met with a great deal of political opposition from the Conservative party, and when the Conservative party came into power in 1878 they came here fully determined to suppress it. But it is in the knowledge of every one that their zeal rapidly diminished from year to year, until now, when the opposition we hear is of a very meek and mild character; and if the court will be given another chance, as it undoubtedly will, it will at last give such general satisfaction that we will hear no more of those periodical cries raised against it. As to the amendment of the hon. member for Laval (Mr. Ouimet), I do not think that he and I, coming from the Province of Quebec, ought seriously to invite the interference of this Government with our judicial system. For my part, I prefer to leave the judicial system of the Province in the hands of the Provincial Legislatures, and shall vote against the amendment.

Amendment negatived on a division.

Mr. LANDRY. (Translation.) Before the motion is put to a vote, I desire to answer a few remarks which have been made by those who took part in the debate. The hon. members who addressed the House have not in the least, so far as I can see, answered the objections which we have made and which we maintain, against the existence of the Supreme Court as it is now constituted. It has been stated, Mr. Speaker—and it is the only statement we have been able to obtain from the Government—that the Bill being introduced every year, it may give them a chance to find means to do away with the objections which are formulated against the Supreme Court. Mr. Speaker, if that is the position taken by the Government on this question, they may rest assured that if the House does not at the present time approve of the principle which we now invoke, if the House pronounces now against the measure, such as is now proposed, at least the attention of the Government will, ere long, be called to this question, and they will have the advantage to decide in a final manner, sooner or later. One of the hon. members who spoke on this subject pretends that if the Bill is adopted the result will be to take away from the Supreme Court nine-tenths of the work which is now entrusted to it. I do not think that such an argument can be considered as a serious objection to the adoption of the Bill. If it is a disadvantage, at all events it will be readily admitted that this disadvantage is much smaller than those I have pointed out to the House. And, if of two evils one must choose the least, no doubt that the hon. member for Glengarry himself (Mr. Macmaster) will be glad to withdraw his objection and vote in favor of my motion. The hon. member for Glengarry has proposed the appointment of an additional judge from the Province of Quebec, and of an additional judge for the Province of Ontario. This addition would not in the least improve the present constitution of the court. This addition would not at all remedy the inconveniences which are pointed out, and would not remedy in the least the evils which are complained of in the Province of Quebec. The hon. member for Montreal Centre (Mr. Curran) has said that I came here with my ipse dixit; that the bar of the Province of Quebec had not made any complaint. At this remark the hon. member for Bellechasse (Mr. Amyot) has pertinently answered by telling him that if he had consulted public opinion just a little, in the ten years during which he has been in politics, he might have discovered what is public sentiment on this point. During the elections of 1878 and the elections of 1882 we have ascertained what was the opinion of the public on this question. The hon. member for East Quebec (Mr. Laurier), who has just spoken, ought to know something about it; when, in 1877, he was appointed a member of the Government and when he was a candidate for re-election in the counties of Drummond and Arthabaska, he will surely remember that the great cause of his defeat was the responsibility which he had assumed by being a party to the establishment of the Supreme Court. The people of the Province of Quebec have very staunch opinions on this point, and I believe the hon. member for Montreal has, on the present occasion, spoken more as a lawyer than as a representative of the real sentiment of the electoral division which he represents. The debate which has just taken place has perfectly shown the following fact: That in some Provinces people are in favor of the maintenance of the Supreme Court because they have no Court of Appeal, while in the Province of Quebec people are against it, precisely because we have too many courts of appeal. The amendment just moved by the hon. member for Laval (Mr. Ouimet) is based on that motive. From this point of view, Mr. Speaker, I think that this Bill, when it goes before the committee, and perhaps at this stage of the proceedings, might be amended so as to rally in favor of its adoption the votes of every member from the Province of Quebec and those of the members from all the other Provinces. The Bill might be amended so as to apply to the Province of Quebec only; by this means the principal objection which I have heard against the Bill might be raised at once. One of the hon. gentlemen who spoke on this question—and I believe it was the hon. member for Montreal Centre—said that we ought not to lay sacrilegious hand on the Holy Ark of our institutions, and that his devotedness to their preservation compelled him to vote against this Bill. Well, Mr. Speaker, it is precisely for that reason that the present legislation is proposed; it is for the maintenance of institutions far older than the Supreme Court; it is for the maintenance of our old French laws, the continuance of which has been secured to us by the treaties, that this Bill was introduced; it is in order to shield from the action of the Supreme Court the working of our old institutions; and the reason invoked by the hon. member for Montreal Centre to pronounce against this Bill is precisely one of the strongest that he might have to vote in favor of this Bill and to give it the support of his eloquence. At all events, Mr. Speaker, the evil exists, it has been ascertained. The Government themselves admits that it does exist. The greatest number of the hon. members who are in this House to speak on this question cannot deny its existence. I ask the hon. members of this House if they have a more efficacious remedy than the one I now propose, to submit it to us and to have it adopted, and I shall willingly withdraw this Bill. All we ask, in the Province of Quebec, is that the causes of discontent now existing should be made to disappear. This is the reason why the Bill is proposed, and as long as a better Bill is not introduced in this House, we, the members of the Province of Quebec, are bound to vote for this Bill, which will ensure to us the maintenance of our institutions and our laws, as we shall vote to-night in favor of the principle of this Bill, such as it is now before the House.

Mr. ROYAL. Coming from a small Province, which stands in pretty much the same position as the Maritime Provinces, as regards the number of appellate courts of jurisdiction, I do not view this question from the point of view of the hon. gentlemen from these Provinces. I believe this question was approached in the proper spirit by the hon. member for King's (Mr. Foster), when he stated that far from looking at it from a lawyer's point of view, it should be looked at from a common sense point of view, from the political point of view. And in fact I shall vote for the second reading of this Bill, because I believe that it contains the fundamental principle of our constitution, that is to say, the federative as opposed to the legislative union principle. Now, it is well known that amongst the lawyers the greater the number of appellate jurisdiction courts the better for them, and the worse for their clients. Well, we must not narrow down questions of such importance to such reasoning. I believe this Bill must be discussed from a higher point of view, from the point of view as to whether it contains a principle cognate of the principle which lies at the bottom of our constitution or not; whether the Canadian constitution is based on the federative principles or the legislative union principles; and it is only upon that question that I will vote for the second reading of this Bill. The tendency of the ideas of some of the hon. members who oppose this Bill has come to light during this discussion. We have heard an hon. member express his approval of the assimilation of the civil laws all over Canada. Well, if that were to take place, I believe it would be fatal to the duration of this Confederation. I believe our system is a federative one, and I believe it will grow wider and stronger by the development of the principles of legislation which are peculiar to each Province. It is true this court was at first composed to adjudicate upon cases coming from the various Provinces, but every one sees that it is a standing grievance in our politics; every Session, or nearly every Session attempts are made to modify its constitution or to abolish it entirely. I am not prepared to suggest a remedy to this existing evil; I am not ready to say what should constitute a supreme court of Canada; in fact, the very term "supreme court" is not correct; our Supreme Court is not a final court; it does not adjudicate finally upon the cases which come before it, for we have another court always open to appeal—the Privy Council. This fact, as well as many others, leads me to the conviction that the Supreme Court is not what it should be. Of course we are not called upon to say exactly what ought to be the constitution of that court; in fact, as an hon. member of the Opposition said, there is such a thing as a policy of creation and a policy of maintenance. The policy of creation is a thing of the past, but whether the policy of the maintenance should be followed to this extent, that the court should be maintained as it is, I doubt very much. In fact, from the very words of the right hon. the leader of the Government, we are led to suppose that this burning question has more than once occupied the time of the Government of this country. I believe the two tendencies that have shown themselves during the most interesting debate that has taken place upon this Bill, may be summed up thus: That there are two currents in the public opinion or in our legislation, the federative current and the legislative current. As far as this Bill is concerned, I shall vote for the second reading, because, in my mind, it is a very good approach to what I consider the good policy of legislation that ought to take place in connection with the establishment of such courts as the Supreme Court—that is to say, the federative principle.

Mr. BELLEAU. I concur entirely in the views expressed by my hon. friend who has just taken his seat, for the reason that the Bill now before the House is quite in accordance with the spirit of the constitution. If there is a principle which has been consecrated by the British North America Act, it is that there should exist, under the Confederation, two different systems of judicature, and it has been expressed over and over again by the factors of the Confederation that that was the intention and spirit of the Act, and it has been consecrated by the very terms of the Act itself. If you look at the 94th clause of the British North America Act, you will see that the Federal Parliament has been given the power of assimilating all the laws concerning civil rights in all the Provinces of the Dominion, with the exception of the Province of Quebec; and the exception goes so far as that, while the Act says that the Federal Parliament may pass a law assimilating the civil laws of the other Provinces, and that the Provinces will have themselves to pass a law to give effect to that passed by the General Parliament, in the Province of Quebec the Legislature of that Province would have no right to take for itself the effect of the general law passed by the Federal Parliament. We thus have consecrated by the constitution two entirely different systems of judicature—one for the whole of the Provinces, except the Province of Quebec, and the other for the Province of Quebec. Now, I contend, that if this principle is consecrated by the constitution, you go directly against that principle, you go directly against the terms and against the spirit of the constitution, when you put those laws of the Province of Quebec which are out of the control of the Federal Parliament under the control of a judicial authority which has its source in the Federal Parliament. We have heard a great many reasons given by members from the lower Provinces and the other Provinces outside of the Province of Quebec. They complain that they have not, in their own Provinces, sufficient judicial organisation. They say they are quite ready to accept the Supreme Court as it is now, as a court of provincial jurisdiction for them. Well, that may suit them very well, but that certainly will not suit the Province of Quebec; and, if these Provinces really want that the Supreme Court shall have a jurisdiction under their own laws, they have a very easy way to obtain it; they have only to avail themselves of the 94th section of the British North America Act, and I am sure that, if it was enacted by this Parliament that the Supreme Court would have jurisdiction only on subjects which belong to the Federal Parliament, those Provinces would come before this Parliament, and if they really want that court to exercise jurisdiction, would ask this Parliament to pass a general Act assimilating the laws of their respective Provinces. Then we would have the whole spirit of the Act carried out. Those Provinces would have their laws under the control of the Federal Parliament, and consequently under the control and authority of the Supreme Court. Then the Supreme Court would be, what I always understood it ought to have been, a federal court, having jurisdiction only on subjects which are under the jurisdiction of the Federal Parliament. And there would certainly be a great advantage in this. Under our complex system there are numerous conflicts arising out of the division of the legislative power. Those conflicts will arise for a great many years more, and, if the Federal court were established, which would have jurisdiction only on subjects which are under the control of the Federal Parliament, the question of jurisdiction would arise on every question which came before that court; and every day on which such a question would come before that court you would have a judgment on the jurisdiction of the court itself, and consequently on the jurisdiction of the Parliament which passed the law. That would greatly help you to arrive at a principle which would define the respective jurisdictions of the Local Legislatures and the Federal Parliament. I heard it said by one of the hon. members, that the effect of passing this Bill would be to destroy altogether the existence of the Supreme Court. I think that hon. gentleman went too far. If we look at the number of cases which have been brought before the Supreme Court, we may expect a time when that court will not be adequate to the work which will be brought before it. When the court was first created, as was mentioned by the chief of the Opposition, there were hardly four or five cases each term. If you look at the last roll of the Supreme Court, you will see that there were not less than forty cases to be heard. If that increase is proportionate for the next ten or twenty years, there will be a time when that court will not be able to do the work that will present itself. So, from this point of view, I think the hon. gentleman went too far. I will not go further than what I have just said. I am, for my part, firmly convinced that in this question of the jurisdiction of the Supreme Court, is involved the question of the autonomy of our Province. There have been, in this House and outside of it, a great many speeches made on the subject of the autonomy of our Province. One of the most essential elements of that autonomy is our law, which is different from the laws of the other Provinces. It comes from the same source; it emanates from the customs of our people, which are different from those of the people of the other Provinces, and those customs form one of the most important elements of the autonomy of our Province; and I am surprised to hear hon. members from the Province of Quebec express a contrary opinion. Some hon. gentlemen who have expressed their opinion against the Bill pretend that the court has generally given satisfaction. Well, Sir, the court may have given satisfaction as it is now composed, but the principle of the court is against the spirit of our constitution and contrary to the guarantee given to the Province of Quebec, that our code of laws would be kept separate from the laws of the other Provinces; and I contend that unless the Supreme Court is prevented from over-riding our laws, they will soon be so far discredited as to become useless. For these reasons, I shall vote in favor of the Bill of my hon. friend.

Mr. COURSOL. I would like to say a few words before the vote is taken on this Bill. There is no doubt, whatever, in my mind, that there is a growing feeling and desire, in the Province of Quebec, that the present constitution of the court should be changed, and its appellate jurisdiction altered to a certain extent. But, Sir, in seeking that result, and in defending the interests of the Province of Quebec, as they have been so forcibly and so eloquently defended to-night, we, the representatives of that Province, must be careful not to impose upon the other Provinces our views any more than we would allow representatives from the other Provinces to impose their opinions upon us. I have not heard a word to-night from any member of another Province in favor of altering the appellate jurisdiction of the Supreme Court as regards his own Province; and yet we have now a Bill before us, which proposes to change that jurisdiction for the whole Dominion. I believe that feature of the court is obnoxious to the Province of Quebec; but if it is to be altered in a manner satisfactory to the people of that Province, it seems to me it must necessarily affect the other Provinces, and herein I perceive a very great difficulty. I am prepared to vote for the Bill, but reserving to myself the liberty of proposing, in committee, such suggestions as may meet the difficulty I have mentioned. I presume the hon. mover of this Bill will also be prepared to make some further suggestions in committee, for I cannot believe for a moment that he would propose to enforce upon the other Provinces a court so organised as to be distasteful to them. The hon. leader of the Opposition, in his remarks to-night, has expressed no desire for a change on behalf of the Province from which he comes. He has, in his usual eloquent manner, spoken of the constitution of the court and of its defects, which he believes may be remedied, but he did not at all oppose the appellate jurisdiction of that court. Therefore, with these reservations in favor of so modifying the Bill as not to oppose the opinions of the people of the other Provinces, I shall vote for the Bill, with a view of limiting it to the Province of Quebec, if such a limitation is possible.

House divided on Mr. Landry's (Montmagny) motion for:

LIQUOR LICENSE ACT OF 1883.

Mr. WOOD (Westmoreland), in the absence of Mr. FOSTER, moved for leave to introduce Bill (No. 58) to amend the Liquor License Act of 1883. He said: The Bill repeals the 145th section of the Liquor License Act of last Session. It is considered necessary, in consequence of a late decision of the Supreme Court of New Brunswick, which, I believe, is to the effect that this section repeals certain portions of the Canada Temperance Act.

Mr. COURSOL,

Mr. BLAKE. That is the section under which these numerous prosecutions in New Brunswick became abortive, I believe?

Mr. WOOD. Yes.

Mr. BLAKE. That is one of the advantages of the Liquor License Act.

Motion agreed to, and Bill read the first time.

CRIMINAL LAW.

Mr. OUIMET (Translation) moved for leave to introduce Bill (No. 57) to amend the Criminal Law of Canada.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Explain.

Mr. OUIMET. (Translation). The amendments which are provided for in this Bill are not very important in themselves, but they are of such a nature as to favor the carrying out of the criminal law as it exists to-day. These amendments have been prepared at the suggestion of the magistrate of the City of Montreal, and of the judges of the Quarter Sessions, who have found that the wording of the Act constantly offers difficulties in the interpretation, and especially in the application of criminal law, particularly as regards preliminary investigations, and also as regards courts of Quarter Sessions having summary jurisdiction for certain offences. This Bill also provides for the definition of certain offences which come under chapter 32 of the criminal law of 1869, giving to judges of Quarter Sessions summary jurisdiction for certain offences, and particularly offences concerning persons keeping houses of ill-fame, gambling houses and disorderly houses. Owing to the obscurity of the law, and owing chiefly to the uncertainty of the law, it has happened very often that convictions or commitimus have been set aside because it was found impossible to connect the law contained in this chapter with pre-existing laws. The object of this Bill is to do away with these inconveniences, and I shall give further particulars at the second reading.

Motion agreed to, and Bill read the first time.

DISORDERLY HOUSES.

Mr. OUIMET (Translation) moved for leave to introduce Bill (No. 56) respecting disorderly houses.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Explain.

Mr. OUIMET. (Translation). The object of this Bill is simply to define what must be the meaning in criminal law of the words, "disorderly house," and to provide for the punishment of persons keeping or frequenting such houses. The Maison Bleue is not included in that category.

Mr. BLAKE. Is the interpretation wide enough to embrace this august assembly?

Mr. SPEAKER. Order.

Motion agreed to, and Bill read the first time.

PRIVILEGE—NEWSPAPER ATTACK.

Mr. ROYAL. Before proceeding with the Government notices of motion, I beg to raise a question of privilege. The Ottawa daily Free Press of Monday, February 16th, has the following paragraph:—

"On Friday last a Message came down, signed by His Excellency's own hand; and it is the custom to receive this Message by all members standing and with heads uncovered. It is read in French and English; but two French members—Girouard (Jacques Cartier) and Royal, drew the distinction very fine when they remained conspicuously seated as the English version was read and rose as the French repetition was begun."

Well, Mr. Speaker, all I have to say is that this statement is utterly untrue.

Mr. GIROUARD (Jacques Cartier). This paragraph only came under my notice last evening, and I would also say that it is entirely false from beginning to end. In the past, as in the future, I shall stand when a Message is received from His Excellency, not only when it is read in my own language but when it is read in English. I have always done so in the past and shall always do so in the future.

Mr. BLAKE. I have no doubt the statements of the hon. gentlemen are correct, but perhaps it is not improper to observe that I believe it would have been quite in accord with English rules if they had remained seated during the reading of the Message. I believe the rule in England is that the House uncovers when a Message comes from the Sovereign signed by herself, but that the House does not even uncover under every circumstance when papers are laid on the Table; and I believe the English House of Commons does not rise upon the receipt of Messages, even signed by the hand of the Sovereign.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. That is so, and I presume the reason why, from the earliest times in the Canadian Parliament, members rose was this: In England the common habit is for members to wear their hats. In the Canadian Parliament that is not so common, and in the old Province of Lower Canada, French politeness did not allow members to wear their hats at all. Therefore, as a mark of respect, and to draw a distinction between ordinary business and a Message from the Governor General, they paid that respect by rising which members of the English House of Commons pay to a Message from the Sovereign by taking off their hats.

CENSUS IN THE NORTH-WEST.

House resolved itself into Committee on Bill (No. 21) to provide for the taking of the census in the Province of Manitoba, the North-West Territories and the District of Keewatin.—(Mr. Pope.)

(In the Committee.)

On section 2,

Mr. MILLS. I desire to call the attention of the Minister in charge to the fact that there is no limitation of the authority given. The Minister might, under this clause, undertake to take the census of the wandering Indian tribes over the entire District of Keewatin, and precisely the same thing might be said with regard to the North-West Territories. The power to take a census every five years ought to be confined to districts set out for settlement. The census must be taken with some object in view. The Indian population is not a very variable population, and there is no object to be served politically or economically by taking a census of that population. But there is an important object to be served in taking a census of the civilized people who go into districts set out for settlement. Looking at the position of Keewatin since the boundaries of Ontario have been defined—and we know what are the limits of that Province and of the North-West Territory—we know that in no part of that Territory has there been, or is there likely to be, any population going in for settlement for many years to come. The hon. Minister knows that the Government have not set out a single township, that there are no lands surveyed, that there is no provision made for settlement, and it is perfectly clear that if we are to pursue a rational course in taking the census we must confine our enquiries and our labors to districts that have been set out for settlement and where settlers have gone. It will be necessary to make an alteration in this clause, and confer upon the Government by its provisions the power to take a census in those districts where it is important a census should be taken and not embrace an extent of country covering 3,000,000 square miles.

Mr. POPE. If there is no population, we will not, of course, take a census. I do not know whether there is any population there or not. If there is not there will be no expenditure.

Mr. BLAKE. The difficulty about the case is this: The hon. gentleman has now as much means of knowing whether there is any population there as he will possess in the future.

Mr. POPE. No.

Mr. BLAKE. Yes; unless the hon. gentleman goes to work to ascertain by sending people over the Territory to see if there is any population there. The Department ought to know whether such is the case or not. The Department of the Interior could, no doubt, give all the necessary information. What is the hon. gentleman going to do in order to find out whether he will take a census or not?

Mr. POPE. I am going to make enquiry.

Mr. BLAKE. The enquiry should have been made before legislation was asked, and we should be told, in a general way, in what places there is going to be a census taken. Is the hon. gentleman going to take a census of the Indian tribes?

Mr. POPE. Yes; where the Indians are mixed up with the other population.

Mr. BLAKE. Are those the half-breeds?

Mr. POPE. Yes, half-breeds will be taken, and Indians in that part of the country where they are settled and becoming civilised.

Mr. MILLS. Does the hon. gentleman intend to go outside of organised districts, outside of lands surveyed and set out for settlement?

Mr. POPE. Yes.

Mr. MILLS. Into the Peace River District?

Mr. POPE. If there are any settlers there, I do.

Mr. MILLS. What Territory is the hon. gentleman going to embrace? I can understand how a census might be taken with a view to giving representation in this House, or to ascertain what amount of money the Government might be called upon to expend in that country. There must be some definite object in view—some purpose to be served in taking the census, but what possible object can there be in taking the census every five years in the Peace River District for instance, or on the the Saskatchewan, or on the Nelson River, or in those districts not set out for settlement, where the country is not surveyed and settlers are not authorised to go.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. The hon. gentleman objects to any census being taken in those parts of the North-West or Manitoba or Keewatin where the country is unsurveyed.

Mr. MILLS. I did not say that.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. I thought so. As to the question of having a census in those parts of the country which are not surveyed—

Mr. BLAKE. In unorganised districts.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. The hon. gentleman used the word unsurveyed certainly. But there are considerable groups of whites, half-breeds and settled Indians in parts of the country through which the surveyors' instruments have never gone. Then with respect to the Indian population, I take it that the census must include those Indians or half-breeds who are settled on their lands. There would, of course, be no necessity for a census of the nomadic Indians under the treaties, because there is really a practical census of those Indians. The various bands of those Indians perhaps will be ascertained, the Census Commissioner will report those to the census organisation or whomsoever has to look after that part of the work. He will report in the first place the census of the surveyed parts of the country, then the census of all the unsurveyed districts where there are whites, or half-breeds or other settlers. He will get from the Indian Department the number of Indians in each band. But, I suppose, we cannot get, and there will be no necessity of getting, the nomadic Indians that are not included in the treaties. There may be, and I dare say there are, a considerable number of individuals in small groups scattered through the District of Keewatin, but the power is merely taken by the Bill; there will be no expense gone to if we find on enquiry at the different sources of information in the North-West that there is no considerable number to be taken. But the hon. gentleman knows that the position of a country like that alters in a summer. Take the Peace River District, for instance, this summer. The hon. gentleman has heard, no doubt, that in that region it is believed—it is almost known, I may say—that there are immense tracts of petroleum lands. Well, we hear of a petroleum boom going into that country; it may take place this summer, for we know that American capitalists have been looking at that country with a desire to get possession of it and the real or supposed wealth which is hidden in those petroleum lands. Well, there may be a rush this summer, and it is well that we should know it. The Bill is for the purpose of getting in the first place as accurate a statement of the population as possible for the political purpose of ascertaining and dealing with the question of representation, and in the second place for the material object of ascertaining the growth of the country and the various portions of the country into which immigration next summer, for instance, is directed, and therefore it will do no harm to include Keewatin.

Mr. BLAKE. The hon. gentleman states that there are a few Indians scattered about Keewatin—

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. Yes, and whites, too.

Mr. BLAKE. Well, if there are a few hundreds of them scattered in bands over a large portion of the North-West I think great care will have to be exercised in the question of expense. If you go to sending a man exploring over a territory of vast area and difficult of passage, searching out a few hunters or trappers or Indians, it will probably cost more than it comes to, and the end will be of no consequence, because you will not get more than three or four thousand all over the North-West. I would not be disposed to ignore the existence of infant white settlements even at remote places; and when I say settlements I do not mean isolated individuals or pioneers of settlement such as the hon. gentleman suggests. But supposing they have anything like the elements of permanence it is a matter of interest to know that there are even the rudiments of settlement in that portion of the territory. I am therefore quite ready to agree that a reasonable expense might be incurred in that direction, but I think the rule will have to be very stringently laid down with reference to that portion of the country which is not settled at present, and which is not likely to be settled soon. With reference to the Indian bands there are ample means of ascertaining all we want to know as to the numbers in these bands. There is of course a political question of some importance, although I would have supposed that might have been reached by the same sources of information from which we get other particulars, namely, as to the progress the bands are making, the progress the Indian is making in the matter of settlement, how far he is becoming a freeholder, how far he is becoming a settler and the head of a family in that sense. That, however, I should have supposed we could as well obtain from other sources; and one is a little alarmed when one hears that this enormous area of territory is to be, or may be, traversed by explorers for settlements, unless some general principle of action is laid down, and it is shown that the object of the Government is to get hold of the real centres of population, present or proximate. Speaking now as to the second section, I notice that it embraces the years of 1885 and 1886. Perhaps the hon. gentleman will explain why he takes the whole of next year as well as the remaining portion of this year to take the census. I can understand that a portion of the census in some of the outlying parts may not perchance be completed during the year. I do not know whether it is certain, but it is possible that that is so. But I think it would be very unfortunate and would deprive the census of much of its value if the organisation were not such that the census was taken practically contemporaneously over the country—that is, about the same time—I do not mean the same day—that is not the system; but that we should get an account of what the population was in those places where there is a considerable amount of population at the same time over the whole North-West. As the First Minister stated a moment ago times change in a year. One place is settled one year, and another another year, and if you take a large portion of the settlement in 1885 and another large portion in 1886 you really have not a statement of the condition of the country at any one time.

Mr. MACKENZIE. There are a few families in those districts beyond doubt. The Hudson Bay Company have perhaps twelve posts in Keewatin, at which there is one if not more families. These should be counted as a matter of course, and I would suggest to the Government that they can easily ascertain by communication with the Hudson Bay Company's agents the population of those places, for they will know every individual in them.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. The hon. gentleman is quite correct. In taking the census of such out-of-the-way places as the Hudson Bay posts all the officer will have to do will be to get from the proper Hudson Bay authorities the number of families and individuals at a given place, and those will be returned in the census as returns from Keewatin, and hence the necessity of including Keewatin. In the same way, there are a very considerable number of whites scattered along the shores of Hudson Bay. There is no necessity of sending a commissioner there. We can get a missionary to make a return of the population within his mission, by a postal messenger, for instance. That need not involve any expense, and we shall have the information for the census. Although hon. gentlemen opposite have not confidence in the Government, I can assure them that if they knew the Minister of Agriculture as well as I do, they would know that he is the most economical of mortals.

Mr. MILLS. The hon. gentleman says it is important to have a census of the Hudson Bay District and of the District of Keewatin. I can understand that it would be important, in taking the census every ten years, to have the numbers of the various parts of the population; but I have not heard the Minister give any reason why it is necessary to name one of the most rocky and sterile districts in the whole Dominion, such as what remains of the District of Keewatin, in a Bill having the object of taking a census every five years. In the case of Manitoba, as well as of the Districts of Assiniboia, Alberta and Saskatchewan, which the hon. gentleman has marked out, I can understand that there is a necessity. Those districts have definite limits, and it is those districts in which population is going, and which desire representation in this House. The people going into those districts are entitled to have the census taken every five years. When the Government proposes a Bill of this sort, it is important for us to know within what limits they are going to operate; but what possible object is there in going beyond those districts. The hon. gentleman has had a Bill carried into law forbidding people emigrating or settling in the District of Keewatin or the outlying districts; and yet he proposes to encourage settlement in these outlying districts; and for what purpose? What is the object? If it is the object of the Government to find places for a few scores of individuals, we certainly have no difficulty in understanding that; but if the Government propose a practical measure, with the purpose of giving information which is useful to the House, and of enabling the House better to discharge its duties to Manitoba and the North-West Territories, they should confine their measure to those districts into which settlers may go. As to the Indian population, the hon. gentleman knows what it is every year, and he does not require a census. It is with regard to the population going into the country, and seeking representation, and from our point of view entitled to representation in this House, that the census taken every ten years is not found to be sufficient. But there is no reason whatever for taking the census in the District of Keewatin or in those districts that lie far beyond the limits within what the hon. gentleman has provided that settlers may go.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. With regard to the remark made by the hon. leader of the Opposition on the second clause, which provides for the census being taken in 1885 and 1886, I would point out that that is intended to refer only to the fall of this year and to the spring of 1886. The census cannot be taken in the winter, and 1886 is inserted so as to provide for taking the census in the spring of 1886 in those regions in which it cannot be taken next fall. But I hope that most if not all of the work can be done in 1885.

Mr. BLAKE. Then it is not intended to go later than the spring of 1886?

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. No.

Mr. BLAKE. What period of the spring—I presume as soon as the roads are open?

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. I presume so.

Mr. BLAKE. Because it would add to the reliability of the whole document if the hon. gentleman would name the latest time within which the spring work should be done, so that it would be understood that it was to be done in the spring of 1886, and not in the fall and winter of 1886.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. What was the cost of taking the census in Manitoba and the North-West in 1881? If the Minister has not got it, he might just bring that information.

Mr. POPE. Yes. I can assure the hon. leader of the Opposition that the census will be taken before next year's crop; we might insert, before the 1st of August.

Mr. BLAKE. Does the hon. gentleman not see that he is likely to have the incoming settlers of the year 1886 included as to part of the country, while as to the other part he takes the census in 1885? There is no value in that.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. Say the 1st of July. Very few settlers will come in before that date.

Mr. BLAKE. I do not know that. Is it the hon. gentleman's intention to take all the main parts in 1885?

Mr. POPE. I intend to take all the main parts in 1885. We had better say the 1st of August.

Mr. MILLS. Why not name the Districts of Assiniboia, Alberta, and Saskatchewan.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. There is no use of doing that.

Mr. MILLS. What is the objection?

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. It will increase the expense of printing the Bill.

Mr. BLAKE. I must protest against the hon. gentleman's statement as to his colleague being the most economical of mortals. He has just proved himself to be that.

On section 3,

Mr. BLAKE. With reference to this clause I would like to know whether the decision of the Government is, notwithstanding whatever additions they may think it fit to make to the tables, to preserve the tables of information which are contained in the main census, so that we may have an accurate ground of comparison with what has been taken in the census of 1881. I quite admit there may be a reason for giving additional columns, I do not object to additional information, but I think whatever information is obtained which is of the same class as that obtained in the main census ought to be obtained in the same form for the purpose of comparison.

Mr. POPE. It is intended to adhere as far as possible to the same headings as are contained in the old census returns and to insert additional columns for any additional information.

Mr. MILLS. I would like to call the attention of the First Minister to the fact that the eastern boundary of the District of Keewatin does not extend further eastward than the meridian of Hunter's Island, that this district will embrace a very small portion of the coast of Hudson Bay, as east of this boundary lie nearly all the Hudson Bay posts on the shore of the bay. These missionary stations and posts to which the hon. member for East York (Mr. Mackenzie) referred, and which lie between the eastern boundary of the District of Keewatin and the shores of Hudson Bay, will not be embraced in this census at all.

Mr. POPE. They will be taken so far as they are in Keewatin.

Mr. MILLS. But they are not in Keewatin, and the hon. Minister himself said it was of the utmost importance they should be included.

On section 4,

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. I want to propose an addition to this section. It will be in the sense of an amendment or instruction to the committee of which I gave notice. I propose:

To add after the words, "the houses and other buildings therein and their classifications, as well as dwellings inhabited, uninhabited, under construction, and otherwise," the words, "also the materials of which said dwellings are composed and the number of separate apartments in each dwelling."

I call the attention of the First Minister to the desirability of having information as to the nature of the buildings, whether made of logs, wood, brick or stone, as the case may be, and also as to whether they contain each one, two or more rooms. If the hon. Minister does not object I will propose that emendation.

Mr. POPE. Of what advantage will it be?

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Of very material advantage in every sense. In all the census returns taken in Europe by nations of any pretension, the description of the materials of which buildings are composed and also the number of rooms in each are obtained. It is information of the greatest possible importance, as it shows very clearly the progress made by a country from time to time. A great defect in the census of 1881 is that it does not give that information. I called the attention of the hon. the First Minister to it several times, and it is very much to be regretted that it was not put in our former census returns. If he will look at the census papers of Great Britain and Ireland, he will find this information is always included in them. My hon. friend beside me (Mr. Blake) suggests another thing which will be also desirable, though perhaps not so desirable in the District of Keewatin as in other places, that is the number of families resident under one roof.

Mr. POPE. All I can say is that the hon. member has evidently not read the census of Great Britain, for in that census he will find nothing said about houses at all. He has got hold of something else altogether. The English census contains exactly eight columns while ours contains 172. I will read to the hon. gentleman the headings of the English census: Name, surname, family, creed, sex, age, rank, profession or occupation, where born, condition as to marriage, deaf, dumb or blind, etc. Now I will tell the hon. gentleman where his mistake is. The English census is not intended to include anything but the population, but there are statistics taken—there are 2,700 people continually engaged in taking statistics in Great Britain—of this other information as to the kind of buildings, etc. It was thought, I believe, of great importance in Ireland that they should ascertain the kind of buildings the people lived in. I think that is objectionable in this country; I can see no possible good to come of it. I am ready to take anything of any use, but can see no possible necessity for taking the number of houses, the kind of buildings, etc., the people are living in. Taking the census of Great Britain is a small matter compared with the taking of the census in Canada.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. This is not a matter of small importance, it is on the contrary of great importance that the country should know the kind of buildings in which the people reside, the number of apartments, and the number of people that live under one roof. The hon. gentleman may or not be correct as to the statement he makes that in England it is not comprised in what is called the taking of the census, but the information is obtained in England and it is at the service of the country. The hon. gentleman does not obtain that information here, and I repeat it is of very considerable importance everywhere and of doubly great importance in the case of new countries that such information should be had. There is no one thing that shows more clearly the progress of a country than the improvement in the quality and construction of its buildings as shown from time to time. Of course, as the hon. gentleman chooses to object, I will not press the matter just now, but will simply renew the amendment and divide the House upon it when the matter comes up for concurrence.

On section 7.

Mr. BLAKE. This cannot pass under its present form. The hon. gentleman's money clauses are in a subsequent portion of the measure. Of course he is in a position to move those clauses, but the latter portion of this clause "such emoluments as are laid down in the census by the Governor in Council" must go out, because there is no money clause for it. There is no objection to the provision of the appointment of officers.

Mr. POPE. I do not see that.

Mr. BLAKE. The hon. gentleman ought to see it. This section provides that the Governor in Council shall provide census officers, commissioners, etc., and the last clause provides with "such relative powers duties and such emoluments as are laid down in the census by the Governor in Council." That would be an authority by the Parliament for them to receive such emoluments as the Governor in Council shall lay down, and it is not in order that such a proposal as that should come here otherwise than from an initiatory committee. There has been a committee which has prescribed certain money clauses—the 23rd, 24th and 25th clauses. We shall reach them presently, and then they can be introduced. They provide for money to be paid to certain persons, "the several census commissioners and enumerators employed in carrying this Act into effect," but they make no provision for any other person. This clause refers to the emoluments of "census officers, census commissioners, and other employes who are necessary for the taking of the census." It is a wider clause than the 23rd, authorising the appointment of other persons for whom the money clauses do not provide at all, and therefore it would not be covered by the committee resolution.

Mr. POPE. But the intention is that I shall not take that power, but that it shall be exercised by the Governor in Council.

Mr. BLAKE. The hon. gentleman wants some additional power.

Mr. POPE. No, I do not.

Mr. BLAKE. Then strike that out.

Mr. POPE. No, I shall recommend that certain remuneration be given, and it will be authorised by the Governor in Council, but I shall not have the power departmentally.

Mr. BLAKE. But the 24th clause does that sufficiently as far as the hon. gentleman has taken power by resolution.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. The Governor in Council shall appoint commissioners and enumerators.

Mr. BLAKE. There is no authority for what follows.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. I propose to strike out "and other employes."

Mr. BLAKE. Very well. Then the First Minister will see that it will be wholly unnecessary, because the 24th clause deals with that.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. "The Governor in Council shall appoint census officers and census commissioners."

Mr. BLAKE. No, you have no authority for census officers.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. "Shall appoint census officers and census commissioners with such relative powers and duties as are laid down for the census by the Governor in Council." Strike out the words "and such emoluments."

Mr. BLAKE. There is no objection to that at all. I suppose it is intended that these shall be the same class of officers, except under some special circumstances, as those employed in taking the general census? The same system is intended to be adopted?

Mr. POPE. The same system.

On section 16,

Mr. BLAKE. Are these the same penalties as in the general Act?

Mr. POPE. Yes, the same.

On section 17,

Mr. BLAKE. The same penalties again?

Mr. POPE. Yes.

On section 23,

Mr. BLAKE. Now we get to the committee clauses, and I hope the hon. gentleman will propose some maximum for the settled parts. I do not refer to the outlying districts.

Mr. POPE. Suppose it should turn out, as it did in British Columbia, that I cannot get persons to do the work? My maximum is $3 and $1 a day, but suppose I cannot get anyone to do it, I could not do anything more until I came back to this House. I will put in the maximum if the hon. gentleman thinks so, or if the House thinks so.

Mr. BLAKE. What was the hon. gentleman's experience in reference to Manitoba and the North-West? I do not refer to British Columbia.

Mr. POPE. I think in the settled parts it was about the same as in Ontario and Quebec, but in the outlying districts in the North-West, the census had to be taken in a different way, and in British Columbia I could not get any one to move at all.

Mr. BLAKE. Where are the members from British Columbia?

Mr. POPE. Here is one of them, and he knows that is so.

Mr. BLAKE. Did you not try to employ a Chinaman?

Mr. POPE. I was afraid the hon. gentleman would not be pleased with that.

Mr. BLAKE. As the hon. gentleman has said that in the settled parts he found no difficulty—and the bulk of the enumeration, we know, will be in the settled parts—the statement of the maximum will be no inconvenience, and will be carrying out a wholesome principle.

Mr. POPE. I am willing that the hon. gentleman should fix the maximum in the settled parts, if he will bind himself to indemnify me next Session if I have to pay more.

Mr. BLAKE. Well, no; I do not think I would indemnify the hon. gentleman. I might put him in a position in which he might call for an indemnity, but I do not think I would indemnify him. He has already stated some years ago, as long ago as 1883, when he was in Manitoba, that in the settled parts of Manitoba, at any rate, he was able to get this work done for the maximum remuneration. But it is easier to do it now than it was then; there are more people in the country and more competition for the situation; railway facilities are easier, and upon the whole, the difficulties that might be supposed to exist then will not exist now. But even those words, "settled parts," leave a great deal to the hon. gentleman's discretion. It seems to be very important to adopt the principle, as far as we can, practically, of not leaving the Governor in Council the power to fix any remuneration they please, and that is all I desire to do.

Mr. POPE. There is something more in that clause. The remuneration is for every day a man likes to spend. We fix it partly by the travelling, partly by the time it has taken and partly by the day, in order to get a good day's work for a day's pay. However, I do not object to a provision that in the settled parts of Manitoba the maximum shall be $3 for enumerators and $4 for commissioners.

Mr. BLAKE. I have no objection to the hon. gentleman putting it this way: That in the settled parts of Manitoba the rate shall not exceed the scale adopted for the general census of 1881. Then as to the census commissioner, there is no reason why he should have more.

Mr. POPE. He is an educator of the others, and you have to get a good man.

Mr. BLAKE. I mean more than the rates of the scale.

Mr. POPE. No; I do not think so. I shall take the census at the same rate, and shall try to keep it within those limits, if I can.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. I move that the clause read this way:

That in the settled parts of Manitoba the amounts paid for remuneration shall not exceed those paid in the last census.

Motion agreed to.

Committee rose and reported.

THE DEPUTY SPEAKERSHIP.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD moved that Bill (No. 26) to provide for the appointment of a Deputy Speaker, be read the second time.

Motion agreed to on a division, and Bill read the second time, and House resolved itself into Committee.

(In the Committee.)

On section 3.

Mr. ROYAL. I may be mistaken, but I do not see in the Bill the amendment that was moved and carried to the resolutions which form the basis of this Bill.

Mr. BLAKE. That applies to the chairmanship of committees. That is not in the Bill.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. The hon. gentleman will see that we have made these resolutions standing orders. One is that the chairman of committees shall speak the language with which the Speaker is not conversant. No chairman of committees can be appointed under that standing order unless the amendment is carried out. This Bill is merely for the Deputy Speakership.

On the preamble,

Mr. BLAKE. With respect to the preamble, the hon. gentleman will see the expediency of making a further recital in it. In the course of the discussion which gave rise to this Bill, I enquired of the hon. the First Minister whether the assent of the Crown had been given to the measure. I was misunderstood by a good many exponents of public opinion, as I was supposed to have said that this was necessary, as the Bill involved an expenditure of public money. Of course I did not say anything of that kind, and the hon. gentleman did not so understand me. The principle on which the assent of the Crown is required is that the office of Speaker possesses some ancient prerogatives which we are not entitled to disturb. That was the ground on which the assent of the Crown was signified in the House of Commons of England, on various occasions when proposals were made by standing order and otherwise, not merely to enlarge the functions of the Speaker, but practically to make provisions for the appointment of another Speaker. Of course this gentleman who is to fill the Chair here is to have all the authority of the Speaker, and is to be appointed without any assent or suggestion from the Crown at all, but by ourselves. When the House of Commons of England decided to act on that matter last, the assent of the Crown was signified to the standing order, but the committee upon whose representation action was taken advised a standing order and a Bill. Of course, there the case was very different from the case here. The office of Speaker was not wholly one of statutory power but it had certain inherent powers. The Bill passed in that case, recited the assent in these words:

"Whereas the House of Commons have provided, by their standing orders, for the temporary performance of certain duties of the Speaker, during his unavoidable absence, by a Deputy Speaker; and whereas Her Majesty had previously signified Her consent that the House might do therein as they should think fit;"

And so forth. I think that precedent might very well be followed. The hon. gentleman indicated that the assent of the Crown had been given, and it should be recited in the Bill, because we are settling the matter by Bill, and I repeat the assent of the Crown should be recorded in that solemn manner.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. Of course the hon. gentleman was altogether misunderstood by the press when it was said he had stated that the assent of the Crown was required, because it involved a money grant. As a matter of fact, I had obtained the assent of the representative of the Crown in consequence of the English precedent. But it is more than a moot point whether that assent was necessary, because the approval of the election of a Speaker in England is required by the Sovereign—the Sovereign's assent must be sought to the selection of a Speaker by the House of Commons. With us it is not so. The Speaker is elected by the House of Commons without the assent of the Crown. But still, out of respect to precedents in England, the assent of the Crown was obtained; and perhaps, if we followed the example quoted by the hon. gentleman just now, it would amount to a statement that the consent of the Crown was necessary to the appointment of a Deputy Speaker. If it is not necessary to the appointment of the Speaker, it certainly is not necessary to the appointment of a Deputy Speaker. I think we might recite the passing of the resolution.

Preamble amended by adding the words: "And whenever the assent of the Crown has been obtained to the adoption of the said resolution."

Committee rose and reported.

EVIDENCE IN CRIMINAL CASES.

Mr. CAMERON (Huron) moved the second reading of Bill (No. 6) to further amend the law of evidence in criminal cases. He said: A few Sessions ago I introduced a Bill to the House making the defendant in a criminal case a competent and compellable witness. That Bill applied only to a certain class of cases, known in the language of the law as misdemeanors. The Bill was read the second time, with the sanction of the First Minister and of nearly all who addressed the House on the subject. It was referred to a Select committee, and the Committee reported in favor of the Bill. I pointed out then, as I propose to point out now, that the principle which I sought to extend, by the provisions of my Bill of 1882, was not a new principle, either in the law of Canada or the law of England. I pointed out that in 1878 the Parliament of Canada, by an Act of the Parliament of Canada, made the defendant in a criminal action for assault a competent witness; that in 1880 the principle was extended to the case of battery, and that by the election law, in all the criminal proceedings under it, the defendant is a competent witness. I pointed out that by the law of England the same principle was recognised; that in criminal proceedings under the Plimsol Act the defendant is a competent witness; that under the Election Act in all criminal proceedings against parties the defendant was made a competent witness. And now, Sir, since 1882, under the English Explosives Act, the defendant is a competent witness; and one of the learned judges in England, in giving a judgment on the trial of a person indicted under that Act, declared that the law had so far worked well. The Bill was referred to a Select Committee, as I have stated, and the committee reported in favor of the Bill. I believe it was referred to a Committee of the Whole House, but no further action was taken on it during that Session. It had the support, as I understood, and always had the support of the First Minister and of many of the leading lawyers on both sides of the House. In 1883 I introduced the Bill again, making the defendant in criminal cases not only a competent but a compellable witness, and again the Bill was read a second time and referred to a Select Committee. To the same committee were referred half a dozen Bills on that and kindred subjects. The committee saw fit to consolidate all those Bills and report one Bill to the House, and for that and other reasons the Bill did not proceed any further during that Session. In the Session of 1884 I introduced the Bill the third time, making the defendant competent to give evidence but not compellable—competent to give evidence in his own behalf, and making his wife also competent to give evidence. The Bill was discussed to a considerable extent and passed the second reading by a majority of 47. It was referred to a Select Committee, who reported in favor of the Bill, which was then referred to a Committee of the Whole House, but that committee rose without reporting the Bill, and I subsequently moved that the Bill be reinstated on the Orders of the Day with a view of further consideration. That motion was, however, defeated, and by a majority of some 17 or 18. Now, the objections which were then taken to the Bill were of a fourfold character. There were practically four objections taken to the Bill by those who took part in the discussion against the measure. These objections were all summarised by the Secretary of State (Mr. Chapleau), and the four objections taken by other hon. gentlemen were dwelt upon by him and discussed by him at some length. The first objection was that there was no necessity for the Bill, that there were no petitions in favor of it, no expressions of opinion, so far as the House was aware, from those engaged in the administration of the criminal law of any portion of the Dominion, and there being no necessity for the Bill, it should not become law. The Secretary of State (Mr. Chapleau) stated on that occasion as follows:—

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD.

"Sir, I have not spent a great deal of time with the ancients, I have not read a great deal of the past, but the little I have read in old books, in very old books, has convinced me that wisdom is not all confined to the present age, and that those who lived before us had also a large measure of wisdom, especially in cases like the one which is now under the consideration of the House. At a time when people were less troubled with politics, with railway schemes, with electricity and other things; when the progress of the physical sciences engrossed less of the attention of men—I think that in those old times men reflected as much, and perhaps more, and perhaps better, than we do upon those moral questions like the one involved in this Bill. And in the light of the wisdom of the past, I ask myself the question which was so well put, I think, by the hon. member for Brockville (Mr. Wood), when he said: 'What is the necessity for such legislation? What representations have been made by those who interpret the law in these cases? What remonstrances have been made by judges upon this question?' My hon. friend, the leader of the Opposition, says that seven years ago he had his opinion upon this question, and he challenged any one to say that he was not right in changing it, because, during those seven years, public opinion had also changed. Public opinion, then, was not ripe. But I would like very much to ask the hon. gentleman what causes have ripened public opinion since then? What facts have been elicited before the courts of justice which have had the effect of ripening public opinion upon this question?"

I pointed out then, Mr. Speaker, and I point out now in reply to the Secretary of State, that during the last eight or ten years public opinion in England as well as in Canada has changed on this subject, and the strong current of opinion now is, in England as well as in Canada, in the direction, I believe, of allowing the defendant in a criminal case to be examined in his own behalf, and that there is just as much reason for his examination in a criminal case—a much stronger reason, in fact—than there is in a civil action. I pointed out then, as I do now, that to allow the defendant to give evidence in a criminal case was recognised, not only by the law of Canada but by the law of England, and it was not logical to limit the cases on which a defendant should be a competent witness. It was not logical to limit the principle to cases of assault or battery, or to criminal offences under the election law or under the Plimsoll Act, or under the English Explosives Act. If it was a good principle in these cases, I say it is an equally good principle in the cases to which I seek to extend it by this Bill. Now, Sir, on at least three or four different occasions, the Attorney General of England, the Liberal as well as the Conservative Attorney General, introduced a Bill into the English Parliament embodying this principle; and on two, if not three, occasions, the Bill passed its second reading in the House of Commons, on one or two occasions without any opposition. But for some time it failed to become law, not because there was any opposition to this principle, but because it formed part of a large and complicated Bill for the codification of the English criminal law, embracing 500 or 600 sections, and because the other business before Parliament was of such a pressing character that the Attorney-General was unable to press his Bill to its final passage. The Bill, on several occasions, was referred to the Grand Committee, and the consensus of opinion, both in the committee and in the House, was in its favor. But, Sir, things have somewhat changed since I last introduced this Bill into this House. A Bill, of which the one now before the House is an exact copy, has passed the English House of Lords, and also, I believe, the English House of Commons. That being the case, it can hardly be argued now that public opinion, at all events in England, is not ripe for this change. I pointed out, when I addressed the House in support of this Bill on a former occasion, that many of our own judges—in fact, I think all the judges I have consulted on the subject—and some other officials engaged in the administration of criminal justice in the country, were in favor of the Bill. I intimated that Judge Davis, of Middlesex, Judge Sinclair, of Wentworth, and Judge Thoms, of Huron, than whom there are no abler judges on the county court bench, were all in favor of this Bill. I referred then, as I do now, to the following remarks made by Judge Armour, of the Superior Court, to whom I sent a copy of the Bill:—

“I have perused your Bill to permit accused parties to give evidence in their own behalf. I am entirely in favor of all accused parties being entitled to give evidence in their own behalf, just as in civil actions.”

I also referred to the opinion of writers upon the subject, both in law publications and elsewhere, all clearly indicating, in my judgment, that public opinion was now quite ripe for this change—an important and a radical change, I admit—but still a change justified by our more matured ideas upon evidence in criminal cases. I referred to a valuable article that appeared in the London Globe on the Bill which the Attorney General had introduced into the English Parliament, and with regard to which the writer said:

“A Bill of which the Attorney General gave notice yesterday will, if passed, overturn one of the most fundamental principles of our criminal law. This is the proposal that prisoners on their trial shall be permitted to give evidence as if they were defendants in a civil action—a proposal that has constantly been made throughout an entire generation of lawyers, and as constantly opposed. It cannot be said, therefore, that the question has not been fully before the country, and that ample opportunity has not been afforded for the adequate formation of opinion. That the law of evidence with regard to this matter is in an unsatisfactory state is sufficiently certain. The recent attempt made by eminent counsel to bring a prisoner's story indirectly, and without liability to cross-examination before a jury, at any rate reduced the existing rule to a state of logical absurdity. Either the aid of counsel must be regarded as being often a positive disadvantage to an innocent prisoner, by closing his mouth, or else such aid must be a no less positive advantage to a guilty one, by enabling his story to be brought forward by an expert, and without such sanctions as an oath or affirmation implies. Of course the principal objection taken to the examination and cross-examination of a prisoner on oath is founded on the indefensible scenes with which the French criminal reports have made us familiar. But to this it may be safely answered that such scenes are the result of far other circumstances—of an inferior class of judges and magistrates, and of the practice, absolutely foreign to English ideas, of assuming the guilt of a prisoner unless he can prove his innocence in the teeth of every test capable of application. There is absolutely no fear that in this country the innocent would be put at a disadvantage by the liberty of being able to tell their own stories on oath in their own way. The principal danger of our system is that suffered by the public—the escape of the guilty, who too often get off by the simple expedient of holding their tongues. Whatever may be the details of the Attorney-General's Bill, which may or may not be worthy of approval, its principle is certainly gaining ground among those who are familiar with the working of our criminal law.”

Now, it does appear to me extraordinary how it can be argued that a defendant is a proper witness in a civil action, involving, it may be, a shilling, or it may be a million dollars, while that man's mouth is absolutely sealed where his liberty or perhaps his life is at stake. It does not appear to me that there is any principle involved in the one case that is not involved in the other. The writer in the London Law Journal, discussing this subject, says:

“The primary object of a criminal prosecution is to elicit the whole truth about a crime. If a prisoner is innocent it can do him no harm to be examined; it cannot diminish his chances of escape; and, if guilty, it is good that those chances should be diminished.”

The principle here laid down is one which I think cannot be successfully controverted. On the same subject the Pall Mall Gazette observes:

“Innocence, as a rule, has more to gain than to lose, as guilt has certainly more to lose than to gain, by telling its own story, and having that story sifted by direct interrogation; and the cause of truth would undoubtedly gain by allowing, in both cases, the story to be told.”

Now, I think what I have said on this subject should satisfactorily dispose of any objections that may be raised on the ground that there is no necessity for this law. Another objection which is taken to my Bill, and which I have no doubt will be presented again, was that it was not the law of England, and that until the principle of this Bill was adopted in England it ought not to prevail in Canada. Now, I say that is no objection at all. I contend that we ought not always to be in leading strings to England, or to any other country; if the principle is a sound principle we should adopt it, whether it is adopted in England or not. But if there were anything in this argument last Session when I presented this Bill, there is nothing in it now, because we find that a Bill, of which the one now before the House is an exact transcript, has passed the English House of Lords. Those who are sticklers for precedents in matters of that kind ought to be satisfied with the one I cite. The Bill I mention was introduced into the House of Lords by Lord Bramwell. A similar Bill was introduced into the House of Commons and has passed its second reading. Whether it has passed its third reading or not I do not know, because no Hansard that I could find in the Library is brought down to that period. In moving the second reading of his Bill, Lord Bramwell gave his reasons for introducing and pressing the measure through the House. I will not trouble the House with quoting what he said, but will read an extract from the late Lord Chancellor, (Earl Cairns,) speech on the Bill, and also a few words from the present Lord Chancellor. Earl Cairns said:

“It would very ill become him to offer any opposition to the Bill, for it proposed to do what was proposed to be done by the Government of which he was a member, and it was included in the large measure for the codification of the criminal law which was brought into the other House of Parliament by that Government. That measure was about to be reintroduced into the House of Commons; and he hoped the Bill now under consideration might become law as part of that larger measure, instead of being an isolated Bill. He admitted, however, that they might have to wait a long time for that larger measure, and, perhaps, it was better to deal with this pressing subject in the way now proposed. Another reason he had for supporting the Bill was that the Explosives Act, and some other recent statutes, enabled persons charged under their provisions to be examined as witnesses. He was informed that in the trial that took place under the Explosives Act this provision was brought into force, and that it acted extremely well. If it were wrong for a counsel to state to the jury the prisoner's version of what had occurred, a great hardship was inflicted on the accused; but if a counsel were allowed to give the prisoner's version, it was still more absurd that the prisoner himself should be prevented from stating it on oath to the jury.”

Such were the observations of Earl Cairns on the subject, when this Bill was before the House of Lords for its second reading. The Lord Chancellor said:

“He rose to express, on the part of the Government, entire concurrence in the object which his noble and learned friend (Lord Bramwell) had in view. The Bill about to be introduced in the House of Commons by the Attorney General was not only the same in substance with that now under consideration, but he believed it would be nearly, if not quite, the same in form. Still, he had no objection, on that account, to the course taken by his noble and learned friend, in bringing the matter before their Lordships, for in many possible contingencies the present Bill might further the object which all who agreed in its principles had in view. Even if only a few cases of injustice could be shown to arise, that would be a sufficient reason for altering the law; but in point of fact, he believed that the number of cases in which there was at least some appearance of injustice, due to the present state of the law, was constantly on the increase. Nothing could be more difficult to justify than the principle that when a man was charged with a criminal act, alleged to have been committed in the presence of a single witness, the mouth of the accuser should be opened, while the mouth of the accused was closed; and that when—as had happened in several cases—the witness was afterwards indicted for perjury, this process should be reversed. He was sanguine as to the success of this measure, because a similar one, introduced into the House of Commons in 1878, by his hon. friend, Mr. Evelyn Ashley, passed the second reading by a considerable majority."

I will add nothing to the pointed language made use of by the Lord Chancellor and by Lord Cairns, and I shall trouble the House with very few more observations on this subject. I would, however, like to read to the House, with its permission, a letter received by me from Lord Bramwell on the subject of this Bill, and its introduction and passage through the House of Lords:

"EDENBRIDGE, KENT, 2nd January, 1885.

"DEAR SIR,—I send you a copy of the Evidence Bill which passed the Lords this Session. It is the same as they passed last Session. It is, I believe, the same as was brought in by the Government and passed the Commons last Session, with one exception, namely, in that Bill was a provision that the defendant in a criminal case, when called as a witness, should not be cross-examined as to his past career and character. This was contested in the Commons, but carried by a small majority. It is clearly wrong, and I believe contrary to the opinion of our Attorney-General. If a man presents himself as a witness, there ought to be a power to see what he is worth as such. There cannot be opposite rules for ascertaining that—one where the proceeding is criminal, another where it is not. If the question is, whether the defendant assaulted or libelled the plaintiff or prosecutor, and the defendant tenders himself as a witness, it is manifest that he should be dealt with in the same way, whether the proceedings be by indictment or civil action. No doubt it puts the defendant in an awkward dilemma if not being called or being subject to such enquiries, but I dare say there may be convictions, not because the man has committed the offence charged, but some other—not many. There is no help for it. And remember that it is hard upon a prosecutor of good character that he should be put on an equality with one of bad character. Remember also, that the prosecuting counsel may always say to the jury: My client has been asked no question to show he is untrustworthy; I could not ask such questions of the defendant. I hope you will take this view and get the Bill passed as mine stands. I think the Bill should apply to cases of felony. My opinion in its favor is based on its obvious and natural justice. It is an extension of a reform that began with us many years ago. The common law seems to have been founded on the notion that juries and others were not to be trusted with evidence open to suspicion. The modern and right notion is the other way, namely, that the evidence should be laid before them and they judge its value, instead of its being condemned before hand. This would not admit hearsay. Further, the exclusion of such tends to wrong acquittals, as the jury are always told that the man's mouth is shut.

"Yours faithfully,
"BRAMWELL."

Those who practice before the courts, especially in the criminal branch of the profession, know that that is the case. You, Sir, who have many times defended the accused in criminal cases, know that almost invariably that is one of the arguments used. The jury is told: You heard the statement of the prosecutor and the evidence of persons whom he has brought into the witness box to tell his story, while my client's mouth is closed. He who knows all about the transaction is not allowed to say a word, therefore, you must take my version of it. And what takes place? The prisoner at the bar tells his counsel his story, the counsel repeats it to the jury; the jury, therefore, get the prisoner's version from the counsel, but they get it without the solemnity and sanction of an oath. It is important the law should be amended in this respect. Another objection urged against the proposed change is the old argument, always urged against any change in the law or evidence, namely, that it will lead to perjury. Half the arguments used in the House last Session against this Bill were based on this objection. But this objection had no weight with the Legislature in dealing with the question whether plaintiffs in civil suits should be allowed to give their testimony, and not a man practising at the bar to day, not a judge on the bench, would ask to go back to the old system and exclude the evidence of parties to the litigation. Reason, common sense, logic, all point one way, and that one way is, that every person who knows anything about the transaction should be enabled to tell his story and let the jury weigh for themselves the value of the testimony. Another objection with which I desire to deal for a moment is the objection that this Bill would simply introduce into our Canadian legislation, in a vicious form, the French system. My hon. friend the Secretary of State (Mr. Chapleau) told us last Session:

"There is a strange feature in this Bill, and one which the promoter of it, perhaps, has not considered, and that is, that he proposes to adopt a mode of procedure which has been repudiated for many a year by the most eminent jurists in England. My hon. friend is opening the way to the French mode of procedure in criminal cases—the examination of the accused. He goes even further, because the French law compelling the accused to answer the magistrate in the preliminary investigation, or the public prosecutor, does not subject the accused to the humiliation or danger of giving his evidence under oath."

One cannot very well see where is the humiliation or where the danger—the humiliation especially—in the allowing a man to give his evidence under oath. My Bill is not the French system; it bears no resemblance to, nor does it approach in any way the French system. By the French system, as I understand it, a prisoner is brought before the judge for the preliminary investigation. He is examined and cross-examined, with the view, not so much of eliciting the truth as of ascertaining whether or not, out of the prisoner's own mouth, there is a sufficient admission of facts to justify the public prosecutor putting him on his trial. I pointed out the discrepancy between the two Bills and the two modes of procedure during the last Session. I draw the attention of Parliament to it again, and I point out that in the one case the prisoner is at liberty to step into the witness box and tell his own story, or to stay out of the box and keep his mouth closed, while under the French system there is no such liberty. The man is bound to submit himself to a cross-examination which, in some cases, is of the most stringent and the severest possible character. The English Law Journal, in discussing the French system, points out the difference between the two systems. It says:

"As to French criminal procedure, we observe that the interrogation of the prisoner is only a part of it, and that part might be adopted without adopting the whole. It is, however, just this part of the French criminal procedure which excites the most repugnance in England, and for the reason, that as applied in France, its aim seems to be less the discovery of truth than the conviction of the prisoner. We do not hold it as by any means an indisputable proposition that an innocent man ought to prefer, or would be likely to prefer, telling his whole story to a French judge to having his mouth closed, as in an English criminal court, before a judge who starts apparently from an assumption of a prisoner's guilt and continually interrupts his examination to utter ejaculations of horror over the enormity of his crime, or to exhort him feelingly to make a confession of it; the vindication of innocence is not by any means a necessity. Truth may, as it is said, resemble a torch which shines the brighter the more it is shaken, but then the shaking must be done fairly, and this is exactly the essential condition which French tribunals appear to neglect."

I think I have said enough upon that subject to satisfy the House that my Bill in no sense approaches to the French system. I say that, with all this testimony in favor of the principle of this Bill, I do not think there is any reason why it should not become law, and become law now. I do not see how there should be any substantial objections to its becoming law. Those who oppose the Bill now may rest assured that at no distant day, just as surely as daylight succeeds darkness, it will become law; but I say there is no reason why it should not become law now. The principle is recognised by the legislation of Canada and by the legislation of England. Before I conclude, I wish to bring to the attention of the First Minister an illustration which has occurred since the last Session of Parliament, a case in which the aid of the Executive had to be invoked in order that justice might be done, and in the doing of which the Executive, I think unjustly, incurred a great deal of odium. At the last assizes which took place in the county of Huron, there was a trial in which three men named Beamish were indicted for murder. The circumstances were briefly these. Three men named Mains and three named Beamish lived on adjoining farms. They were at enmity with each other. There were the father of the Beamish family and two sons and the father and two sons of the Mains family. The Mains' appear to have been quarrelsome people, according to the evidence brought out at the trial. The old man Mains challenged the old man Beamish and his two sons to fight him and his two sons upon the following day. The Beamishes did not accept the challenge, but one of the young Beamishes, in going to his work, had to pass by the Mains' farm, and while he was so passing he was assaulted by one of the Mains'. The result was that the three Beamishes came to the rescue—the consequence was a skirmish ensued, and the result was that one of the Beamish boys used a small stick and struck the old man Mains over the head. There was no external mark as the result of the stroke, but unfortunately the stroke was given directly over an artery. The artery was ruptured and death ensued. The three Beamishes were then indicted for murder. On the trial the Mains' were the main witnesses against them, and they threw the whole responsibility upon the Beamishes, so far as they could. The mouths of the old man Beamish and his two sons were closed. They could not say a word. They were practically the sole witnesses of the unfortunate occurrence that took place; but, under the law, under the enlightened law that we have now, they could not say a word in their own justification, and the three Beamishes were convicted of manslaughter. The judge sentenced the old man to twenty years in the provincial penitentiary, one of the sons to twenty years, and the other to five years. Public opinion was aroused. It was known, as far as the circumstances could be known, that the men were improperly convicted of the grave offence. Application was made to the Executive, and the Executive pardoned the old man, who had been in the penitentiary only two weeks. The sentence of the elder son was reduced from twenty to five years, and that of the younger from five years to one. Recollect that all the public had to judge of was the verdict of the jury. They had found these men guilty, the judge passed the sentence, and they were sent to the penitentiary. Others, who were behind the scenes, knew something more about it, and, I apprehend, the Government must have known something more about it, or they would not have advised His Excellency to exercise the prerogative of the Crown in their behalf. What was the result of this executive clemency? The Grand Jury, at the last sitting, passed the following complimentary statement in reference to the matter:

"On one point this Grand Jury would approach Your Honor to gain some information respecting the commutation of sentence in the Beamish-Mains murder case, tried at the recent assize court here. This jury, not one member of whom knows what steps were taken to obtain a commutation, are of opinion that unless good reason is shown to the country for the course of clemency shown by the Executive, that there is but little use in convening juries, grand or petty, to waste their time in doing their duty as jurors, or judges passing righteous judgment upon the perpetrators of atrocious crimes, if, as in this case, where the criminals are, one of them, let loose upon the society and the sentence of others commuted in such a degree as to render the best efforts of juries and the righteous sentence of judges little else than a mockery and a farce, public justice baffled, and no life safe in a community but the convicted murderer, while here no aid has been extended or sympathy shown to the widow or the helpless orphans of the murdered man."

Such are the thanks the right hon. gentleman received for advising the exercise of the royal clemency and doing an act of justice. Then why was it necessary to interfere with the finding of the jury and the sentence of the judge? If they were satisfied that these men were guilty, they ought not to have commuted the sentence, because it was not an excessive sentence if they were guilty of manslaughter. If they exercised the executive power, it must have been upon the sole ground that the parties were not guilty. There was no other ground on which to reduce the sentence of the elder son from twenty years to five, and that of the younger from five to one, and to discharge the old man altogether. Had my Bill of 1882 passed this House and been in force, such a thing would not have occurred, and I do not believe the executive would have been called upon to exercise the prerogative of the Crown in that respect, because, if these men had been allowed to go into the witness box and tell their own story, I believe no jury in Christendom would have convicted them. And so in regard to a great number of other cases. We know by our experience and our reading that not once, nor twice, nor ten times, nor a hundred times, but a thousand of times, have innocent men been convicted of crimes solely because prosecutors went into the box and swore the prisoners committed the offence charged. Take the case of rape. It is an offence committed in concealment, not in the public glare, not before the eyes of the public, but with only the two parties present. The one party is allowed to tell the story with such varnishing and gilding as she may choose to put upon it, but the other party, the defendant, if innocent, the party who knows all about it, who knows if any connection did take place, and was not criminal, who has the knowledge of whether he was there or not, is not allowed to say a word, or give a single explanation of how it took place or why it took place. And so with a score of other criminals cases. The prosecutor, perhaps, gives his testimony, and that testimony is unsupported and unsustained by the testimony of a single other witness, and yet, Sir, upon that unsupported, uncorroborated testimony, a judge is bound to tell the jury that if they believe the story the prisoner must be convicted. And we know that over and over again prisoners have been convicted on just such evidence. I will refer again to the case I mentioned last year that occurred in England, where an unfortunate English Church clergyman was convicted of having committed an indecent assault upon two young girls and was sentenced to transportation for five years. It was discovered afterwards that the accusation was a pure fabrication; the story was well got up, the circumstances were dovetailed together and the man was convicted. The two young girls were subsequently indicted for perjury, and upon the clearest possible evidence they were convicted, and the man was released. Released! But what satisfaction is that? Released with his reputation tarnished and destroyed. It was no compensation, after six months' imprisonment, to be released from prison with the sentence still standing against him. He got the pardon of the Crown as the Beamishes got the pardon of the Crown, and that was all. But that is no compensation, no redress, for a man who has been convicted, improperly, wrongfully, upon testimony that would not have prevailed had he been allowed to tell his own story. I present this Bill to the House in the hope that it will receive the consideration of the House. It is not a question of party, it is not a question of politics; it does not signify from which side of the House the Bill emanates, if it is sound in principle, and it has been conceded, I think, upon nearly all hands, that the principle is a sound one. It has been put in practice for some time without any objection, both here and in England. It is proposed to carry it still further in England, and, as I have said, it has passed the House of Lords there. But, apart from that altogether, I do not see any reason why the Bill should not become law in this country. Believing that it is a good Bill, believing that the principle is a sound one and must ultimately prevail, I beg to move the second reading of the Bill.

It being six o'clock, the Speaker left the Chair.

EVIDENCE IN CRIMINAL CASES.

House resumed consideration of motion of Mr. Cameron (South Huron) for second reading of Bill (No. 6) to further amend the law of evidence in criminal cases.

Mr. TUPPER. I think the House will agree that the pertinacity of the hon. member for South Huron (Mr. Cameron) is highly commendable, yet I question whether it is proper that this House should again be compelled to consider a Bill which has been thoroughly discussed during the last two Sessions, and in reference to which the sense of this House has been fairly tested. I say, Mr. Speaker, that although there are some alterations in the present Bill as compared with those which the hon. gentleman has introduced during the last two Sessions, the principle involved is to a great extent the same. This Bill, it is true, goes further and applies to all crimes—felonies as well as misdemeanors; but I think the hon. gentleman who has charge of it, in his ingenious speech, when repeating the arguments that have been used by others before him, and by himself, during the last two Sessions, did not give to the House any new reason or use any new argument why we should come to a different conclusion than the one at which we have arrived on two previous occasions. A Bill, as the hon. gentleman has stated, or a Bill not going quite as far as this, has reached, in the English House of Commons, during the last few years, a certain stage; but it has always stopped at a certain stage in the English Parliament, as this one has done in ours. It has never yet become law in Canada, nor has it become law in Great Britain. It is true that during the first part of the hon. gentleman's speech he stated that he thought it had become law in Great Britain, but I understood him to qualify that later on and to mention, accurately, as I believe, that it has only reached the second reading in the House of Commons, one of the Bills dealing with this subject, and of which this is a copy, having passed through the House of Lords. I wish to call the attention of hon. gentlemen to the historical part of this question, so far as the hon. gentleman has alluded to it, because, as I understand it, he not only bases this Bill upon theories that are pretty well understood, and which have been already explained to this House, but he attempts to draw great strength from the fact that some of the law reformers of England, and, in fact, the English Parliament, are anxious to enact a similar law, and are of the opinion that these provisions should become law. The hon. gentleman is aware that so long ago as 1856, I believe, Lord Brougham attempted to enact a similar law to this in the Parliament of Great Britain. He failed, and all the learned gentlemen who succeeded him, have failed, to place such a law on the Statute Book. The question is a vexed one. We can understand, and I think laymen can understand, even from the ingenious argument of the hon. member for South Huron (Mr. Cameron), that there must be something wrong, that there must be a weak point in his argument, when, with the force with which he has put his case, we know that in England, where so many able men have called attention to this question, and have been unable to place such a law on the Statute Book. I say there is much to be drawn from that circumstance. If that were a necessary reform, if criminal justice was not being administered satisfactorily; if criminal procedure in England were defective, surely there is sufficient spirit of enterprise and of reform, both in this country and in Great Britain, to have such a law speedily enacted. It is strange that a Bill of this kind should so often reach this stage. It is strange that in Great Britain, when the criminal law is attracting the attention of all grades of society, that if this were a desirable law a greater effort was not made in the English Parliament last Session to place this law upon the Statute Book. What do we find? We find that, instead of hurrying this law through Parliament, it has been discussed time and time again, and all the able law reformers who have turned their attention to the subject, while combining on the principle that in the main such a law should be enacted, cannot agree, and in fact disagree, as to what form the law should take; and there are actually three Bills before the British Parliament dealing with the subject. Not only is there Lord Bramwell's Bill, of which this is a copy, but there is a Bill treating the subject in a different manner, by the present Attorney General; and, in addition, there is an entirely different Bill from either of these—what is known as the Criminal Code Bill. These three Bills have reached the Grand Committee of the House of Commons, and the members there are not so anxious to enact this law that they will take any one of them, but they have three Bills treating on the same subject matter to consider maturely before taking any decided step. Although this Bill comes from Lord Bramwell, a jurist well known and of high standing, though now a very old man, known chiefly in connection with commercial law, a man who was trained as a merchant before he read for the bar, although it is his Lordship's wish to have this law enacted, there are many more eminent men who favor a different treatment of the subject, and men as eminent who are opposed to the enactment of any such law. We must not lay too much stress on the fact that this is Lord Bramwell's Bill; and it was quite natural that His Lordship should write a letter to the hon. member for South Huron (Mr. Cameron), hoping that the Canadian Parliament will pay him the compliment of enacting his Bill before the other Bills on the subject are considered. In England, as I have said, opinion is divided. Opinion, too, among law reformers, is greatly divided as to this Bill. If the House will permit me, I will read a short extract from the Law Times, of 1st March, 1884, in which these different Bills are mentioned. The Law Times says:

"Neither of the Bills disposes of the subject with a thoroughness beyond criticism, and a consideration of the three, side by side, will suggest a good many small points in which each might be improved. Of the three, the provisions of the Criminal Code Bill are, perhaps, the most logical, but the probable fate of the Criminal Code Bill is shrouded in mystery."

It does not appear that this is the best Bill of the three. It does not appear that this Bill will ever become law. And I would also mention that this Bill passed through the second reading by a very close shave, and in a very unsatisfactory manner. If the hon. gentleman will look at Hansard he will find that, when it passed through the House of Commons, there was an exceedingly small attendance of members. The Bill was not considered as it should have been considered, and the charge is openly made that it was smuggled through the House, passing, as it did, at about two o'clock in the morning. The division on a motion to adjourn gave as the numbers 20 to 99, a very small proportion of the House of Commons. But after all the discussion in England the Bill is not the law to-day. In proof of the fact that eminent men are divided on this vexed question, I need only refer, as I have done on previous occasions, to the remarks made by Messrs. Blackburn, Barry, Lush and Stephen, commissioners appointed to consider the criminal code, in their report to the House of

Mr. CAMERON (Huron).

Commons. When the Criminal Code Bill was sent to the House by these commissioners, dealing with many reforms, they had to qualify their opinion in connection with this question, and say as follows: "As the policy of a change of the law is so important, we are divided in opinion." That is a suggestion to us, that we must be careful in dealing with this subject, which is a question that enthusiasts in law reform have hesitated in dealing with. I again say, that it is for the hon. member for South Huron (Mr. Cameron) to show this House, since he failed last Session and the Session before, that there is any great need that such a law should be passed. There are certain hon. members in regard to whom it may be said that they take only a passing interest on this question, and are not so familiar with it as are members trained to the bar. But it affects every hon. member and his constituents, because, from my point of view, and it is the point of view taken by the leader of the Opposition, it is fraught with great danger to the working people, the masses of this country, and especially the uneducated, whose interests are at stake. Those who have opposed the passage of the Bill have, among their arguments, advanced this fact, that a prisoner who is uneducated may be placed in a false position before a tribunal of justice, as under the provisions of this Bill it is compulsory for the prisoner to testify; because Lord Bramwell himself admits that though it is not made compulsory in express terms, the effect of the measure is what I have stated. The hon. leader of the Opposition used the same argument, that though in the Bill it is not stated that it is compulsory on a prisoner to give evidence, yet in effect he must go into the box or take the consequence, the natural presumption of his refusing being that he is afraid to go into the box and tell his story. All members of the legal profession know that in many cases, although a client may be ever so innocent, it is necessary to keep him out of the witness box; for there being no necessity to place him there, as it might prejudice his case to be placed there, they might extract damaging evidence through the natural confusion arising in the minds of people unaccustomed to the halls of justice and the solemn forms which obtain there. I pressed that argument last Session, and I repeat it again; and I say that an uneducated man, in an ordinary case in the courts of justice, with a strong case, or in a criminal court with a clear conscience, is not himself, and the less he has to do with those courts the better exhibition he will make of himself. I say it is often impossible for an honest uneducated man to tell a story several times over, to explain and repeat a narrative over and over again, without telling it in so many ways. I appeal to my professional brethren to corroborate me in that statement. It is the every day experience in courts of law that much damage is done to a man's case in consequence of the embarrassment which he naturally feels in appearing before a court. I could cite cases still more familiar to us. I appeal to young men of my own position who feel it necessary sometimes to arise and express their opinions; and I would ask them what is their experience? I would ask them if they do not feel embarrassment, diffidence and awkwardness when they feel called upon to speak? I say, then, that if that be the case with men trained at the bar, if they feel that embarrassment here, what must be the embarrassment which a man will experience who comes for the first time into a court of justice, and who is told that if he does not get on the rack and stand a cross-examination by an able counsel, his innocence will be doubted; and having gone on the stand and made an exhibition of himself, through ignorance and not guilt, he will, no doubt, suffer the fate that men used to suffer in England, as late as the 17th century, in consequence of the practice there obtaining—a practice so abused that it was abolished—the practice of interrogating them, of seeing them racked and tortured and worried to death by both judge and Crown counsel. And I would also ask, what power are you placing in the hands of the untrained magistracy of this country by this Bill? I call attention to this phase of the question. I say that when the hon. gentleman cites the movement towards the consummation of such legislation in England, he must remember that a very important feature comes up there. I say that in England they have a trained magistracy—that special qualifications are there required for the commissions of the peace, while in this country, as we know too well, the appointment of justices of the peace in the different Provinces is oftentimes abused; and we know that men hold the commission who should not hold it, and who, under this Bill, could exercise the power and authority most dangerous to their fellow men, especially in small communities. Take the case, for instance, mentioned by the hon. member for West Huron (Mr. Cameron), in which the prejudice of the people appear to be so great that in endeavoring to fortify his argument he attacked the jury system, and cited a case in which the Minister of Justice, on enquiring into the circumstances without the slightest hesitation interfered and voided a verdict. In this case, dealing with a charge of manslaughter, the jury proceeded to find a verdict of "guilty," and after the Minister of Justice had interfered, the Grand Jury of the community took the extraordinary course of drawing up and producing a document of a nature that struck me as rather odd, as a rebuke to the responsible administrators of justice, the Minister of Justice and the executive. Take that case, I say, and are you going to place in the hands of men like these such a power as is now proposed; because, under this Bill, not merely in the Supreme Courts and Superior Courts will the defendant have to be cross-examined and worried and tortured, but it applies to every hearing, to every stage of such a charge, so that he is placed in a position most embarrassing to any innocent man, particularly in the case of those who are not educated in such matters. Therefore, I say we were wise when we hesitated before saying that this Bill should become the law of the land. Further, I ask that we should still pause when we find, after all the attention the hon. gentleman has given to this matter, he comes down at every Session with a different Bill. He came down the previous Session with a measure, and after advising us that the law reformers of England were united in carrying down such a Bill, he comes down the next Session and tells us he has a better measure still, and therefore the old measure was not a proper one and should not become law. He has eliminated one clause to which I called attention, and he has substituted one which is no better. The second clause of this Bill provides that no person charged shall be compellable to be a witness. But I say this is a nugatory clause, for the witness must either testify or run great danger to his interest. The former Bill provided that the jury, forsooth, must not presume anything against the prisoner who did not come into the box as if the judge from the bench could control the opinion of a juryman's mind in dealing with such a matter as that. Now, if we are able to show that every Bill produced from that hon. gentleman's mind is defective in so important a point, if we are able to show that the law reformers of England are divided to-day as to how they shall frame a Bill dealing with the matter, I think we can afford to wait. Quoting the language of the hon. member for West Durham (Mr. Blake), as I did last Session, I ask if the time is ripe for such a revolution in the criminal procedure of this country? I had the temerity last Session to refer to the hon. member for West Durham (Mr. Blake). I had the pleasure of quoting, in support of my views, in discussing this subject, the language used by him, putting the matter far more concisely than I could hope to do, when he was standing in the responsible position of Minister of Justice, and when he advised this House to throw out a Bill similar to this, introduced by Mr. Dymond, then a member of this House. I referred to his arguments; but in reply he told me, with a certain amount of indignation, that I had put a gloss over his speech which it did not deserve, and he said that when I referred to his speeches I should read the whole of them. Well, Sir, referring to his speeches, I consider life is too short to read all the speeches, or any one of the speeches, of the hon. member for West Durham (Mr. Blake). They are pleasant to listen to, and I, like other hon. members, derive pleasure in listening to the well-rounded periods of his speeches, and I admit that it is difficult, in any extract of a dozen or twenty lines from that hon. gentleman's speeches to show exactly what he does mean; because we find that he has a habit, on most occasions, to use popular language, of steering north by south, except when he is dealing with questions touching the Maritime Provinces. There is no mistaken ring then in his speeches—no mistaking his meaning when opposing any legislation, such as better terms or railway subsidies for those smaller and poorer provinces by the sea. On other subjects it is impossible, I admit, to get his exact meaning from reading so many lines of his speeches. But since I have laid stress on his speech in 1877, I will trouble the House by repeating it again, as I cannot use any argument stronger in the direction of opposing this Bill. I am sorry I do not see the hon. gentleman in the House.

Some hon. MEMBERS. He is here.

Mr. TUPPER. I now see he is in the House. I ask the hon. member for West Durham not to tell me that seven years make a difference, and that things that are not right at one time become right seven years afterwards—not to give me an answer like that, but to give me an argument that will answer the argument he used then—to give me an experience that he has had since 1877 that will upset the experience he testified to in 1877. I am not opposing this Bill factiously; I am open to be convinced by the hon. member; but, before he can convince me, he must use an argument stronger than the argument he used last Session. I believe he was right, in 1877, when he said:

"He could conceive of some cases—they had occurred in his own experience in civil suits—in which an innocent man, owing to his nervous habit, great excitement at the time, or unhappy mode of giving testimony, would be placed rather at a disadvantage than otherwise."

So I say, Mr. Speaker; and am I to be told that seven years can reverse that argument? Can seventy times seven years change the force of the testimony of an authority so high, of a gentleman of such experience as the hon. member for West Durham then was? Dealing with another branch of the subject, he said:

"He thought the existing securities for the innocent were as powerful as, and perhaps more powerful than, the protection obtained by the prisoner telling his own story."

Of course, I suppose it was necessary for the hon. gentleman, in advising the House to throw out the Bill of a supporter, to do it in as pleasant a manner as possible, and he used other language which, however, does not affect the language I quote. He said that the time was not ripe for the measure; but all the arguments which have been used to-night were used then, and nothing has occurred since 1877 to lessen their force. Those same arguments, as I have stated, were ably put forward by Lord Brougham, by Jeremy Bentham, and by other reformers long before 1856 and 1877, and nothing has happened since to change the force of the experience of the hon. gentleman, which has been my own experience in courts of law, with regard to the effect of such a privilege in civil cases. Now, the hon. mover of this Bill has stated that what is true in civil cases would be true in criminal cases—that the right which he is now endeavoring to have extended to criminal cases was denied in civil cases; and the same arguments were used against that principle that are now urged against his claim. Grant that; I have an answer for him. The hon. member for West Durham is again the authority. In 1876, in discussing a criminal Bill, that hon. gentleman said:

"Rules prevailing with regard to civil cases could not be wholly adapted to criminal cases."

And they are not here. The hon. mover of the Bill says that it is illogical to say that what is proper in civil procedure would not be proper in criminal procedure. Why, his own Bill admits that you cannot deal with criminal cases in the same way as with civil cases, for it says:

"Provided that no person so charged shall be compellable to be a witness on any such hearing, nor shall such wife or husband be an admissible witness on any such hearing, without the consent of the person so charged, unless so compellable heretofore."

Sir, I ask if the argument of the hon. gentleman be sound, why should such a clause be inserted in the Bill? Why has he not gone the whole length and removed the difference between criminal and civil procedure altogether? He has not, because you cannot, as the hon. member for West Durham has well said, apply the rules to criminal cases which obtain in civil cases. Now, as I stated a short time ago, Lord Bramwell—like the hon. member for West Durham, when advising the House to reject Mr. Dymond's Bill—used this language:

"If the accused did not offer his own evidence, he would be exposed to the remark that he dared not do so."

And yet we find that this Bill provides that he shall not be compelled to do so. That is sufficient to show the weakness of the theory advanced in support of this measure. The ingenious argument used by the hon. member in charge of the Bill is entirely theoretical. It is apt to mislead, especially those who are not familiar with courts of justice. In theory, it may appear, to a great extent, to be fair, but in practice it is entirely illogical. When you come to draft these theories in a practical measure, it is then that difficulties appear, and that great differences arise in the minds of law reformers as to how this measure should be carried out. Therefore, my position is, that no matter how sound, theoretically, the principle embodied in the hon. gentleman's Bill may be, the practical view is that taken by the hon. member for West Durham, which is just as true now, that we do not require, for the protection of the innocent, any such legislation as this, neither do we require it in order to ferret out and punish crime. Holding these views, Mr. Speaker, though having expressed them perhaps at too great length, considering the number of times the Bill has been discussed, and feeling justified by the past treatment of this Bill, remembering that though it reached a second reading it was finally thrown out of this House, I beg to move, seconded by Mr. Hesson, in amendment:

That this Bill be not now read a second time, but that it be read a second time this day six months.

Mr. WOODWORTH. It is true, as my hon. friend from Pictou (Mr. Tupper) has said, that this Bill occupied the time of this House last Session, and a very free and full discussion was had upon it. It went to its second reading by a very large majority, and after that, through the want of a sufficient number of members in the House, its passage was obstructed. But the principle of this Bill was affirmed by this House by an overwhelming majority last Session. My hon. friend complains that this Session the Bill has come up in a new form. He says he objected to a certain clause of the Bill, and that clause has been eliminated from it this year. What is his complaint about, then? If his views have been met, and the clause he objected to has been eliminated, he should not take up the time of the House in objecting to the elimination of that clause. That was done in order to meet the final views—I do not use the word in an offensive sense—of my hon. friend, with reference to this Bill.

But, Sir, I think that since last Session all the objections that were then so ably and eloquently urged against this Bill have been taken away. The hon. gentleman declared that in England—the great pattern, the place to which we all look for guidance in our mode of procedure in criminal cases—no legislation on this point had taken place. Well, Sir, light has since then been thrown on this subject, and that statement can no longer be advanced. Allow me to read for a moment from the hon. gentleman's own speech on the question last Session. He said :

"I think we may, consistent with our national pride, and a feeling of admiration for our knowledge of the law, bow with great respect to the legal minds in England, and carefully follow in the footsteps of the law reformers of the United Kingdom.

Again, he said :

"Therefore, Sir, this is not such a measure of reform as ought to commend itself so highly to reformers that they should vote blindly for it, simply because it is described in that way. I appeal to those gentlemen who were in the House in 1877, and who voted for the motion to throw out the Bill at that time—I appeal to them whether they have heard an answer to the arguments then urged so strongly by the hon. member for West Durham, sufficiently to induce them to vote blindly for such legislation. Not only was this practice discouraged and departed from in England, but though some States in the Union have adopted it, it has brought a great scandal on the courts in those States."

The Law Journal of England, as quoted by my hon. friend from West Huron (Mr. Cameron), advocates this measure; the judges in the Superior Court in Ontario have urged its passage; the London Globe and the Pail Mall Gazette have argued in its favor, and that, I think, is pretty good authority that this measure has created some discussion in England. But I wish to quote from the English Hansard the views of Lord Bramwell, whom the hon. member for Pictou (Mr. Tupper) criticises as an old man. Somebody rose at one time in the House of Commons in England, I believe, and made an attack upon Pitt, afterwards Earl of Chatham, on the ground that he was a young man; it was a crime then to be called a young man. My hon. friend from Pictou has found that it is a crime in England to be an old Lord—an old Tory Lord, by the way—and to have reform views on criminal or any other procedure. Lord Bramwell, in rising to move that the Bill be now read the second time, said :

"The object of this Bill was to make a person charged with a crime a competent witness; also to enable a husband or wife to give evidence when either was charged with a criminal offence, and also to enable any one or two or more persons charged in the same indictment to give evidence. He did not propose to compel these persons to give evidence, but simply to remove the disqualifications which prevented them doing so if they wished. Only forty years ago no one who had the smallest interest in a case could give evidence in it, but this disqualification had been removed; husbands and wives had been made competent witnesses in civil cases; plaintiffs in breach of promise might be examined, and last year the Explosives Act admitted as witnesses the persons who were charged with offences under it."

He says further :

"A Bill similar to this would be introduced in the other House, but their Lordships would not have the trouble of discussing the matter twice, because if that measure came to that House he would not proceed further with his own. If, on the other hand, their Lordships should pass his Bill and send it to the other House, he should be quite willing that both Bills should be dealt with there in the manner that might be deemed best. At all events, he had given their Lordships an opportunity of discussing the question once, and this was more than could be said of many important measures last Session. In conclusion, the noble and learned Lord moved that the Bill be read a second time."

Earl Cairns rose and said :

"It would very ill become him to offer any opposition to the Bill, for it proposed to do what was proposed to be done by the Government of which he was a member, and it was included in the large measure for the codification of the criminal law which was brought into the other House of Parliament by that Government. That measure was about to be re-introduced into the House of Commons, and he hoped the Bill now under consideration might become law as part of that larger measure, instead of being an isolated Bill. He admitted, however, that they might have to wait a long time for that larger measure, and, perhaps, it was better to deal with this pressing subject in the way now proposed. Another reason he had for supporting the Bill was, that the Explosives Act, and some other recent statutes, enabled persons charged under their provisions to be examined as witnesses. He was informed that in the trial which took place under the Explosives Act this provision was brought into force, and that it acted well. If it were wrong for a counsel to state to the jury the prisoner's version of what had occurred, a great hardship was inflicted on the accused; but if a counsel were allowed to give the prisoner's version, it was still more absurd that the prisoner himself should be prevented from stating it on oath to the jury."

Viscount Cranbrook, the Lord Chancellor, and various other noble Lords, spoke in the same strain. Now, my hon. friend has told the House that there were three Bills before the British Parliament: The first was that of Lord Bramwell; the second that of the Attorney General; and the third the Criminal Code Bill. I have already shown that the Bill introduced and passed by the House of Lords was precisely the Bill introduced in the Commons, and Earl Cairns said that the Government of which he was a member had introduced a Bill in the House of Commons. I ask my hon. friend how can he possibly tell this House that this is a question which enthusiasts in law reform alone take up, when it has passed the House of Lords in England—which, the Lord knows, is conservative enough, and the last body to be charged with an advanced reform movement. I contend that my hon. friend's reasons for voting against this Bill last Session have been entirely taken away by the events that have since transpired, namely, the passage of the Bill through the House of Lords and its introduction into the House of Commons, where, judging from the letter received by my hon. friend from West Huron (Mr. Cameron), from Lord Bramwell, which he read to this House, it has probably become law by this time. My hon. friend tells the House again that this Bill, should it become law, will have a damaging effect—damaging, first, to the accused who is innocent, and secondly, after you get through with that one you will unduly favor the next one. He says, as he argued last Session, when a man goes into the box with a forbidding countenance and a hesitating manner these will tell against him, and he may be convicted of a crime of which he is not guilty. But I ask you, if a man has a forbidding countenance, does he not take that with him into the dock as well as into the box, and will it not tell against him there as well? He may be as innocent of the crime with which he is charged as the babe unborn, but standing there in the criminal box, with all eyes turned upon him, occupying a most humiliating position, unable to say a word in his own behalf, I ask my hon. friend if the forbidding countenance and the receding forehead will not create as great a prejudice against him there as could possibly be created by his appearance in the witness box, and that without his being given any chance of removing it. But take that man with the forbidding countenance and the receding forehead from the criminal box, and place him on the witness stand, and if he be innocent, I venture to say that a workingman—my hon. friend referred to the ignorant workingmen—take every one of them for a jury, and we take our jurymen from them to-day, and good jurymen they make, too—but take that man and put him in the box and unseal his lips, and if he were innocent of the crime they would acquit him, although he were almost deaf and dumb, by the conscious innocence he possessed, by the consciousness of his own want of guilt, that man could make himself understood by the jury and the judge, that man could make himself understood by the Court, and would go out of that box a free man if he were innocent. Does not everybody know that that is the case, that any man, no matter how nature has warped him, no matter how appearances are against him, if he be innocent, will make his innocence known and felt, and the jury sitting there—these workingmen if you please, who are watching their fellow workingman in the box, who have all the charity for the hesitancy of manner of that man, for his worn clothes and haggard looks—can give that charity, and they can tell by his manner and by his answers to the questions whether he is the guilty or the innocent man. And what is the result, then? It is that justice is done, and it is justice that we are after. It is not to allow the innocent to be punished, or the guilty to escape, but that justice should be done, and how can it be done unless the truth be extracted? Then my hon. friend says, it will let somebody off; some person will get off that should not. The principle of the law is that ten guilty men should escape rather than one innocent man should suffer, and if somebody did get off, there is no net so formed that some fish will not get out that perhaps should be held in. These are peculiarities known to every law. You cannot make any law perfect, but you must aim at the perfect and get the best you can; and if you place a law on the Statute Book that will allow the innocent man to escape, that will allow the truth to be extracted from a witness's mouth and justice to be done, you have made an advance in statesmanship, you have made an advance in governing your country in a proper and righteous and desirable manner. But my hon. friend tells us that, in an assault case—and this was the argument used last Session—where persons meet together and there is a fight, we will let them all come up and tell their story. That is the Canadian law to-day. My hon. friend from West Huron (Mr. Cameron), although in bad form to speak to-day from hoarseness, yet put the case so strongly here that it appealed to the sympathies of every man on both sides of the House, and that was the case of Mains and Beamish—these men who went out mutually and fought, the Mains' being the aggressors, old man Mains having been struck by a stick over the eye, severing an artery, from which he died. The penalty for murder, as everybody knows, is death. My hon. friends who are against this Bill say that, if death occurs, only the accusers who were in the fight should go upon the witness stand and swear; only one side of the fray shall be represented, only one of the parties shall be heard; or we will divide the parties, we will hear what the Mains' say, but you shall not hear what the Beamish's say. Although the penalty is hanging, although the penalty is death, yet we will not permit you to go upon the witness stand and swear to what you know. If it be flogging, or a week in gaol, or a fine, you can all go on the witness stand and swear to the truth of your statements. My hon. friends solemnly, gravely contend in this House that the Canadian law, in regard to evidence in cases of assault, is perfectly proper and right, but, when it comes to a felony under similar circumstances, we will only hear one side of the story, and the accused shall not go on the stand. Is it not most absurd? Where is the logic of such reasoning as that? Would not you, Sir, would not the members of this House, and would not the country say that, in case of a higher crime so much the greater the necessity of extracting the truth, of getting at the truth, no matter where it comes from, whether from independent witnesses or from the accused party. Who does not know that in this country, as in every other country, persons commit crimes or are charged with crime when only one witness can go upon the stand, and all the other witnesses are shut out by the rules of evidence? Crime is not committed in crowds, as a general thing. It is committed silently, stealthily, in the darkness of night sometimes; and when one witness is allowed to testify, and he the bigger criminal of the two, that the other man was the committer of the crime, is it not monstrous that the man charged with it shall not be allowed to go into the witness box, to be examined as you will, by the ablest counsel you can find, to tell the truth about the matter in regard to which he has been falsely arraigned, while the real criminal has been giving his evidence by the hour and swearing his life away. Yet, when the old Tory House of Lords in England has passed a Bill like this, they who oppose this Bill are afraid of this reform measure. All these arguments were made when the Bill was introduced to allow a man or a woman to testify in a civil suit to which they were parties. It was said that the crime of perjury would be committed. It was said that self-interest would not allow these persons to tell the truth. That is a matter you cannot legislate against efficiently—the crime of perjury. Men have to take the responsibility of that. Men have to take the responsibility in this life of their acts. All you can do is to give the opportunity, as I said before, for the fullest investigation of the matter, and he or she who commits the crime of perjury must suffer for it, either here or elsewhere, and no human legislation can reach that. I took occasion last Session to say that there was more perjury committed in making up the electoral lists in one riding in this Canada of ours than there would be under this law, if perjury be swearing with intent to tell what is not true, or to violate an oath already taken. Now, Sir, I do not intend to take up the time of the House with any further remarks, but merely to say, having given my vote for this measure last Session, giving it in the interest of the masses, as I believe, in the interests of Canada, and following in the footsteps, to use again the language of my hon. friend, of that great country to which we owe allegiance and to which we are so proud to belong, I repeat again, on the present occasion, that I believe this law, if passed, will not be a retrograde step, but will be a step of advancement towards a higher state of civilisation.

Mr. LISTER. When this Bill was last before the House, a number of hon. gentlemen felt themselves called upon to speak against its passage, and to-night I hesitated for a few moments to allow some one of those hon. gentlemen to rise again and oppose it. I listened with a great deal of interest to the remarks of the hon. gentleman who represents Pictou (Mr. Tupper), in order to see whether he could advance any genuine argument against the passage of this Bill; and I am bound to confess, Sir, that during his whole speech I was unable to detect one single reason why the Bill of the hon. member for West Huron (Mr. Cameron) should not become law. One of the reasons—if we may call it so—that he urged why it should not become law was, the timidity of young men like himself who might be called into the witness box, perhaps from the prisoner's box, and from timidity prejudice his case. Now, Sir, I may say confidently, that if that was a reason why this Bill should not become law, it has fallen to the ground, because my young friend did not display that timidity and nervousness which his language would indicate. That this Bill will become law, whether it is defeated at this Session or not, there is no reasonable doubt whatever. I believe that if the hon. member for Pictou (Mr. Tupper) had been in existence seventy years ago and had been then a member of Parliament, he would have been found opposing, as vigorously as he opposes this law to-day, the law which gave a man accused of crime the right to have the services of counsel; he would doubtless have thought that if a lawyer was allowed to raise his voice on behalf of a man accused of crime there was a great public danger that he would be acquitted. But, Sir, that inhuman law has been wiped from the Statute Book. I have no doubt that my hon. friend would also have been found opposing the law which gave parties to a suit the right to testify on their own behalf. That was an innovation, and in his own words, it was a dangerous innovation. We know, as a matter of fact, that while that law was in existence, by which a man was not able to testify in his own behalf, many a suitor was prevented from appealing to a court of justice because his cause could only be maintained by his own evidence. So gross was that injustice that the law of the land was changed, and to-day every suitor, every man, whether he be interested or not in the result of a case, has a right to go into the witness box, and the jury who are sworn to try that case are to judge as to his credibility. That law has been placed upon the Statute Book. We find also that in the Parliament preceding the present one, in this very House, a law was passed by which a man charged with assault and battery, a misdemeanor under our criminal law, was allowed to testify on his own behalf. Now, Sir, if these advances have been made within the last few years, if these improvements and reforms in the laws of this country have taken place, are we not justified in demanding that the last vestige, the last remnant of these unjust laws should be removed, and that the judge and the jury should have the right to hear the facts of the case from every man, from every lip, that can testify about it? That is not the case to-day. The man who is charged with a crime is placed in the criminal's box, and his mouth is closed, whereas the man who has the most interest in convicting him, and perchance who is the only witness, that man's mouth is open, his story is told, and the result has often been, I have no doubt, an unjust conviction. Why should that man not be allowed to speak? Why should he not be allowed to tell his story to the jurors, to the judge, and before the lawyers, and if he is telling a falsehood a cross-examination would sweep the false portion of it away, would separate the grain from the chaff, and if he is telling an untruth there is no doubt that it will prejudice his case. But, Sir, if he is innocent, the manner in which he tells his story, his air of conscious innocence, will convince the men before whom he is tried whether he be guilty or not, and if he be innocent he will have what every innocent man is entitled to, an acquittal. The hon. member for West Huron (Mr. Cameron) has referred to charges of rape, a charge which is frequently made in this country, a charge which is easily made and hard to be defended. We know, Sir, that men have been convicted of that abominable offence upon the evidence of perjured testimony, and that there are to-day men who are lingering in prison, with their life blasted, convicted unjustly and improperly, whereas if these men could have gone into the witness box and told their story to the jury, instead of being persons disgraced forever they would now be free men and the stamp of conviction would never have been placed upon them. Shall it be said that in a free country like ours, that in a country having as intelligent a population as we have, the jury and the judge are not able to tell whether a man is telling what is true or what is false? Shall we take the chance—for it is nothing more than a chance—that an innocent man may be convicted because he is not allowed to tell what he knows? That, Sir, is the position of our law to-day, and I think it is a disgrace to this country that it has not been changed before. Now, Sir, we have the fact that it has not only engaged our attention here, but that it has engaged the attention of the Parliament of Great Britain. My hon. friend from Pictou tells us that there are no less than three Bills before the House of Commons in England, providing for making the evidence of a person accused of crime receivable in court. That shows that this important question is engaging the attention of statesmen on the other side of the water; and when this question came before the House of Lords upon a Bill which was introduced by Lord Bramwell, I think, there was not one noble Lord who dared to get up and oppose the principle of the Bill. Every man who spoke upon the Bill spoke favorably of its provisions, and the only one who had opposed it at all in the past would not take upon himself again the responsibility of active opposition. Are these not reasons why it should become the law of our land? Is this a mere adventure? Is this a mere jump in the dark? No. We have also the experience of the United States before us; we know that in every State of the Union this has been the law for years and years. Yet, if it worked badly, if justice was frustrated, will you tell me that that law would not have been repealed? Sir, that law, instead of being abolished, has been found to work beneficially, and I am safe in saying that in no Legislature in the Union would there be found a majority of members who would support a repeal of the law as it now stands. Those are strong reasons why this should become the law in the Dominion. What is the opposition? That a man might commit perjury. In the name of common sense and reason, is a man's life, property and reputation to be lost simply because there is a chance that somebody who may be charged with a crime may commit perjury? Yet that is the argument used by hon. gentlemen who oppose this Bill. I feel that the hon. member for West Huron (Mr. Cameron) is entitled to the thanks of this Parliament and of the people of Canada for what my hon. friend from Pictou (Mr. Tupper) is pleased to call his pertinacity in bringing this Bill from time to time before the House. The hon. member for West Huron, in an elaborate and exhaustive speech, which does his industry infinite credit, has gone into this question and advanced arguments in its favor that by no possibility can be refuted, and which should convince us of the propriety, yea, of the absolute necessity, of making this the law of the land at the earliest moment possible. As I stated a moment ago, this is a last disqualification. Every other disqualification has been removed. Defendants in civil actions, or those interested in any way, are entitled to give evidence, and there is but this one disqualification to remove to enable all courts to get at the whole truth in the cases before them. We must look at this matter as reasonable men and consider, not that it is in the interest of the accused, but that it will tend to promote justice. It is to promote the investigation of cases and to get at the truth and the exact truth; and if that is the case, it becomes our bounden duty, as representatives of the people, to support this Bill and make it the law of the land. It is a puerile argument, and one unworthy of the hon. member for Pictou (Mr. Tupper), to say that perchance a man may commit perjury, and for that reason a man charged with crime should not be allowed to testify in his own behalf. The hon. member who last addressed the House (Mr. Woodworth), said it was better that ten persons should be acquitted rather than that one should be improperly condemned; I say it is better that ninety-nine should be acquitted rather than that one should suffer the penalty of an unjust conviction. The noble Lord who spoke in the case referred to by the last speaker said there was nothing more difficult to get than a conviction on the evidence of one witness. How many cases are there in which the evidence of one witness has convicted a man; how many cases are there when that conviction would not have taken place if the law had been different? Then, I say, in this intelligent age, in view of the fact that this has been the law in the United States for forty or fifty years, in view of the fact that is now engaging the attention of public men in England, that a Bill on this subject has actually passed the House of Lords, and has passed the second reading in the House of Commons—in view of all these facts, there is nothing to prevent us from taking that step which they in England are anticipating, and which may be the law to-day, for all I know. If it is improper, I repeat, to allow a person charged with an offence to give evidence, it is improper that he should give evidence in any case at all. We have it that defendants are now allowed to give evidence in assault cases; also, under the Crooks' Act and under the Temperance Act of 1878, a man charged is a competent and a compellable witness. I can only repeat that such is the law in the United States. That such will be the law, if it is not now the law, in England; and I think this Legislature will not be discharging that duty which it owes to the public, and will not be doing that which is due to itself as an intelligent body of men, if it rejects the Bill now before the House.

Mr. BEATY. The change proposed by the Bill of the hon. member for West Huron (Mr. Cameron) is a very important one and must affect the public interest very largely, and it certainly will affect the interests of individuals who are charged with offences or crimes to a very great extent. The change as proposed is reduced, as I understand it, in the Bill, to the minimum of change in connection with the law of criminal evidence. It does not go to the extent of providing that any person charged with crime can be compelled to give evidence by the prosecution, but it simply admits or allows the person who is charged to give evidence in his own behalf, and in rebuttal of the charge made against him. The first section says:

"Every person charged with an offence, and the wife and husband, as the case may be, of the person so charged, shall be a competent witness on every hearing at every stage of such charge, and whether the person so charged is charged or arraigned solely or jointly with another or others."

That goes simply to the extent of allowing a person charged, in connection with the other sections, to present himself or herself as a competent witness in his or her defence. That reduces the matter down. It does not allow a court of justice or the prosecutor for the Crown to force the prisoner to give evidence either for or against himself. The prisoner is still allowed the toleration of the law, for he can state what might be called a legal lie; he can plead that he is not guilty and stand his trial on such evidence as may be presented. That enables the defendant or prisoner to give evidence in explanation of any circumstances that may be brought to bear against him in evidence. I think that is one of the most important points of this Bill, that it enables a prisoner charged with an offence or crime to give such explanation as to the circumstances and the nature of those circumstances which are brought in evidence against him as will procure an acquittal in case of innocence. I think the Bill is in the right direction. We have found, in cases of civil action, that this principle of allowing all persons to give evidence has been extended from time to time, until at the present day plaintiffs and defendants can give testimony either for or against themselves.

An hon. MEMBER. It is not so in Quebec.

Mr. BEATY. It is so in Ontario; and it is found to work so beneficially there that I do not know any judge or lawyer who would desire to repeal that law. They would consider it a retrograde movement to revert to the old law on this matter, so far as relates to civil actions. The effect upon the prisoner is one of two kinds. An innocent person who is charged with a crime will have an opportunity of denying his guilt, pledging his oath to his innocence and explaining the circumstances which are brought to bear against him in the testimony of the prosecutor or other persons. It is true a rascal, not afraid of perjuring himself, may also swear himself innocent; he may also come forward and deny the charge made against him, although he may be guilty. But that allegation may be laid against every witness brought into a witness box. Every witness who gives testimony may be said sometimes to perjure himself, as indeed they are said to perjure themselves in giving testimony for or against a friend or in favor of their own interests. That is not a fatal objection in the matter of civil actions to the reception of the defendant's testimony, or to its discussion by judge and jury. The point which is made in regard to this matter of perjury is of no greater force than it would have in relation to any other witness. The prisoner ought to be heard, if he choose to present himself. He cannot be compelled to do so as the Bill now stands, but he simply presents himself and explains the nature of the charge against him, or the facts as they may be adduced. We know that, in general, circumstantial evidence is all that is obtainable in criminal cases. I suppose there are not more than three cases out of ten, and probably less, in which such cases are not decided on circumstantial evidence. Now, would it not be of great advantage, so far as the prisoner is concerned, and to that extent so far as the jurisprudence of the country is concerned, and so far as the public interests are concerned—would it not be a valuable thing to enable the prisoner, if he choose, to go into the box and explain those matters which are brought to bear against him by the testimony of others. I think it would, and I think it is desirable, especially in the point of view of innocent persons coming into the box, notwithstanding any embarrassment to which they may be put by reason of a cross-examination. I think every person charged with crime would like to have the opportunity of saying himself that he is not guilty. I think if I were charged with a crime my diffidence, which is of course well known, would not prevent my going into a witness box and saying I was not guilty. I would rather prefer going before the court and jury and pledging my oath that I was not guilty. If, however, a person is guilty, he can stand in his present position and say "not guilty," as he is allowed to do now, and allow the prosecution to press the charge against him. It is true that an impression may be left on the jury and the court that a person who is charged and who refuses to go into the box and exculpate himself of the crime is guilty, but I do not know that that should be of any more force in cases of that kind than it is at present. Counsel are allowed at the present time to state the defence of the prisoner, to state the facts and circumstances connected with the case, which the prisoner himself might state under oath. It has so much weight so far as it goes. Why, then, if counsel are allowed to do so, should not the prisoner himself be allowed to give the court the benefit of his knowledge of the facts, pledging his oath to the court and jury, so that they might come to a righteous conclusion. I do not know any reason why he should not; and my disposition would be, and the tendency, so far as my knowledge of criminal jurisprudence goes, would be to hear all parties under all circumstances and relating to whatever grounds. But this Bill does not propose to go so far. It does not enable the prosecution to compel the prisoner to go into the box at its option, but simply at his own option. Now, the repugnance to opening up and extending questions of this kind has been evinced all through the history of our jurisprudence. We find, that step by step, the law in relation to evidence in civil matters has gone on, until to-day, at all events, in the Province of Ontario, there is scarcely a man who understands matters of this kind who would wish to go back to the original condition of things. If that has been the effect of enlarging the power of reaching the facts of the case and seeking out the truth, why should not its application to persons charged with criminal offences produce similar results? I believe it would do so; and if the Bill becomes law, I venture to say that there is not a man in the House, who lives for five years, who will say that the law should not have been enacted. I think that the experience which would be had under the administration of a law of this kind would be such as would ratify it strongly, and that it would show, without hesitation, that it was a valuable law, and would produce good effects.

Mr. FLEMING. I do not desire to prolong the discussion on the principle of the Bill, for I have not heard that there have been any valid reasons advanced why the principle of the Bill should not be adopted. It is not such a radical change after all. It is true that a prisoner at present charged with a misdemeanor or felony, except those which have been already stated in the course of the argument, has no right to testify in his own behalf, but in the practice of the criminal courts the principle is admitted. The right of a prisoner to tell his own story is admitted in practice, when his counsel is permitted to tell his story for him. Now it never has appeared to me to be consistent with a fair trial of an issue that any one of the parties who could throw light on a transaction under investigation, is excluded from the possibility of telling his story. If any person were endeavoring to investigate any matter he would not confine himself to hearing one side of the story. He would be a simpleton who would desire to make up his mind on any state of facts if he heard only the one side; and in a solemn trial where men's liberties, and in many cases their lives, are at stake, it surely cannot be inconsistent with justice—it must be consistent with every principle of justice—that the person most interested in the event of the trial should have the opportunity of stating his case to the tribunal before which he is being tried. The objection that the prisoner may commit perjury is of no validity, because although it may be true that a man may commit perjury to get clear of a conviction of a crime, we know it is possible for the prosecutor to commit perjury. There are sometimes greater incentives in the mind of a prosecutor to prosecute a conviction unjustly than there is in the mind of a prisoner to escape conviction. We know cases—there are hundreds of them—we have seen them in our experience, where the strongest feelings of malignity have been manifested in the minds of prosecutors—these men going into the box, actuated by such feelings, have been permitted to tell their story, and the person accused has his mouth closed. In many criminal cases, those relating to assaults against the person particularly, and even more serious crimes of that nature, the facts and circumstances may be stated by the defendant. Thus, in most criminal cases those who are most concerned in the commission of the crime are the prosecutor, on the one hand, and the prisoner, on the other; and to have one's liberty so jeopardised by permitting the prosecutor to tell his story, and permitting detectives and others to weave around him a chain of circumstances that produce almost inevitably proof of his guilt, when by a single word, by a single explanation on the part of the prisoner he may be able to show that there was an important link wanting in the chain of evidence which would demonstrate his innocence beyond the possibility of a doubt, would be a gross injustice. Now, we have not only the principle of justice involved, that would entitle the prisoner to the privilege of telling his own story, but we have the experience, in our own courts, of defendants in civil cases going into the witness box and telling their story, a privilege which has only been recently conferred upon them. We have had the same experience now for several years of men charged with assaults, or with offences under the various license Acts, being permitted to tell their own story; and nobody, in view of our experience under the different enactments, would think for a moment of going back to the old system. It seems to me, therefore, both on principles of justice and of enlightenment, and in the light of our experience in our own courts, that the Bill of my hon. friend from West Huron (Mr. Cameron), ought to become part of the statute law of the country.

House divided on amendment of Mr. Tupper :

That the Bill be not now read a second time, but that it be read a second time this day six months.

Mr. WHITE (Hastings). The hon. member for East Middlesex (Mr. Macmillan) has not voted.

Mr. MACMILLAN (Middlesex). I have paired with the hon. member for North Oxford (Mr. Sutherland). The arrangement was that on any question that came up, he not being here, I was not to vote.

Mr. SPEAKER. By resolution of the House last Session, it was decided that members should state which way they would have voted.

Mr. MACMILLAN (Middlesex). I would have voted for the Bill. I do not know whether he would or not; only, I was not to vote during his absence.

Amendment negatived.

Main motion agreed to on division, and Bill read the second time.

Mr. CAMERON (Huron). The Bill, to the principle of which the House has now assented by a very large majority, is a Bill having relation to the criminal law, and it is one, therefore, which I think the Government ought to take the responsibility of. If, however, the Government are not disposed to do so, I suppose it ought to be referred to a select committee. As the Bill, in its present shape, has never been before this House before, perhaps the better plan would be to refer it to a committee. I therefore move :

That the Bill be referred to a select committee composed of Messrs. Woodworth, Lister, Fleming, Davies, Girouard, Beaty, McCarthy, Amyot, Hall, and the mover.

Motion agreed to.

RETURNS ORDERED.

Copy of the Order in Council relating to the Forestry Commission, appointing J. H. Morgan as such commissioner, and a copy of the recommendation on which such appointment was based.—(Mr. Rykert.)

Copy of the Order in Council appointing L. K. Jones secretary to the Intercolonial Railway Commission, and also a copy of the recommendation on which such Order in Council was based.—(Mr. Rykert.)

ADJOURNMENT—CANADIAN PACIFIC RAILWAY—PROGRESS ESTIMATES.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD moved the adjournment of the House.

Mr. BLAKE. Perhaps the hon. Minister of Railways could now answer the question which I asked, and which was allowed to stand, with reference to the progress estimates on the Canadian Pacific Railway for January.

Mr. POPE. There has been paid the eastern section, out of subsidy, $320,336; on the central section, out of subsidy, $114,976; on the eastern section, out of loan, $140,300; on the central section, out of loan, $172,800.

Mr. BLAKE. Perhaps the hon. gentleman will see whether he can soon bring down the papers with reference to the progress estimates for February as well.

Mr. POPE. If they are not brought down I will bring them down.

Motion agreed to, and the House adjourned at 10:00 p.m.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.

MONDAY, 23rd February, 1885.

The SPEAKER took the Chair at Three o'clock.

PRAYERS.

DELAYED RETURNS.

Mr. MULOCK. Before proceeding with the Orders of the Day I would like to ask the hon. Minister of Railways when he expects to be able to lay on the Table of the House certain returns that were ordered on the 6th of February; I refer to the returns showing the tolls on the Northern Railway and its branches. These returns must be in the printed schedule, and I think if so, could be laid on the Table almost at any time. It is now more than two weeks since the House passed the address, and I am deferring some action until that information is produced.

Mr. POPE. Is it the rates?

Mr. MULOCK. You will find the address in the Votes and Proceedings of the 6th of February.

Mr. POPE. I can say to the hon. gentleman that I will enquire into it and bring them down as soon as possible.

Mr. MULOCK. I would also call the attention of the Minister of Marine and Fisheries to an Order of the House passed also on the 6th February, directing that certain correspondence with respect to the Washington Treaty should be laid on the Table. That correspondence, I have been told, has been printed, has been printed for years, and is at the present time in the Department; if so, there does not appear to be any reason for any delay in laying that correspondence on the Table.

Mr. McLELAN. I think there was some enquiry made about it in the Department. Some of the officials enquired of me to know what had been brought down and what had not been brought down. I think the order was for all not already brought down. I think the return is now being made up. I know there is action being taken upon it.

Mr. MULOCK. The enquiry need not involve any great time, because not a single letter has been brought down, and that need not be an excuse for delay.

EBENEZER WATSON, SARNIA.

Mr. LISTER asked, Did Ebenezer Watson, of Sarnia, on the 23rd day of January, 1882, hold an office under the Government? If so, the name of the office, does he still hold the same office? If not, why?

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. From a memorandum handed to me by the Department, it appears that Ebenezer Watson on 23rd January, 1882, held the office of Indian Agent. He does not hold the same office now, he is agent for the sale of Indian lands.

Mr. LISTER. I call the hon. gentleman's attention to the fact that he has not answered the question fully. Part of the question was, why he does not hold the same office.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. Because he has been appointed to another office.

PROVINCIAL RAILWAYS.

Mr. SPROULE asked, Does the taking over of provincial railways by the Dominion destroy the validity of agreements entered into by those railway companies and the municipalities relative to bonuses given in aid of such roads? Have railways, which by the Act of last Session are declared to be in the interest of Canada and therefore Dominion roads, any additional powers given them by virtue of this change, whereby they are enabled to control local freight rates different from what such companies had when under provincial control?

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. These are leading questions, but so far as I know the taking over of provincial railways by the Dominion—if the hon. gentleman means by it declaring any provincial railway to be a Dominion railway—does not, I think, destroy the validity of agreements. The second question involves a point of law, and I am not prepared to answer it.

MANITOBA SUBSIDY.

Mr. CAMERON (Huron) asked, Has the Government of Manitoba made any claim on the Government of Canada during the past year or recently for an additional subsidy or for any financial or other aid? If so, what was the nature and extent of such claim, and has the same or any part of such claim been assented to? If so, to what extent?

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. Negotiations between the Government of Manitoba and the Government of Canada have been going on for some time. A provisional agreement has been arrived at, which will be laid on the Table of the House, by Message, either to-day or to-morrow.

PORT CREDIT HARBOR.

Mr. FLEMING asked, Is it the intention of the Government to take any steps by grant or otherwise to secure repairs of Port Credit Harbor? If so, what is the nature of the steps to be taken?

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. With respect to Port Credit Harbor, I am informed that an Act of incorporation was given to a company, that they built the works there, and those works are now in very bad order. The fact is the wharves and piers are rotten. The Act of incorporation provides that if the Crown should assume the harbor, it would have to pay the company their capital, $20,000, and also 20 per cent. of the amount of stock in existence and 6 per cent on the money advanced. Moreover, I am informed that to renew the works would cost the country $25,000. Under those circumstances the Government are not in a position to undertake those works.

IMMIGRANTS SETTLED IN BRITISH COLUMBIA.

Mr. BAKER asked, The number of immigrants supposed to have settled in British Columbia from 1st January to 31st December, 1884?

Mr. POPE. The number reported to have settled in British Columbia is as follows: Of white people, about 9,000, and about 3,000 Chinese.

STEAMER LANSDOWNE.

Mr. VAIL asked, Did the Minister of Marine and Fisheries receive a written communication or verbal representation from the builder of the steamer Lansdowne or from any other person, while said steamer was in course of construction, or at any other time, informing him that the engines and boiler of the wrecked steamer Princess Louise were not sufficiently powerful, and consequently unsuited to a vessel of the Lansdowne's dimensions and capacity? Were said engines and boiler used for the Lansdowne?

Mr. McLELAN. There was no written communication or verbal representation from the builder of the steamer Lansdowne or from any other person, so far as I know. It has been reported that the engine does not possess as much power as is desired, and I am informed by experts that this can be remedied by an alteration of the propeller, which is being made so that the steamer will be fit for service.

NORTH SHORE RAILWAY.

Mr. LAURIER asked, Has the Government received any communication from the Government of the Province of Quebec, whereby the said Government declare themselves ready to purchase the North Shore Railway at the price of $5,000,000, provided the Government of Canada will grant them an allowance equal to the interest at 5 per cent. upon the said sum? Has said proposition been accepted or refused? If no communication has been made precisely in the terms mentioned, has any similar communication been made, and if made, has it been entertained?

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. The Government of Canada have not received any communication of this kind or nature from the Provincial Government.

NOVA SCOTIA SUBSIDY.

Mr. KIRK asked, Has the Government fully considered the claims of the Nova Scotia Government for additional subsidy to that Province? Is it the intention of the Government this Session to introduce a measure by which Nova Scotia's finances will be placed in a more satisfactory position by increasing the annual subsidy or by any other means?

Sir LEONARD TILLEY. The Government of Nova Scotia have submitted to the Dominion Government a statement showing why, in their judgment, their case should be considered. That is now under the consideration of the Government. An answer will be prepared, probably within ten days. The answer given to them will be the reply to the latter part of the question.

RAILWAY FROM MONTREAL TO THE SEABOARD.

Order that The House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole to consider resolution, declaring that the route for a line of railway to connect Montreal with the Harbors of St. John and Halifax, for which a Dominion subsidy was granted last Session, should be subject to the approval of Parliament (Mr. Laurier) read.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. I ask the hon. member for Quebec East to postpone his motion. The plans and reports are not quite ready to be placed before the House, and we desire that they should be in the possession of the House before any motion on the subject is proposed.

Mr. LAURIER. I cannot allow the motion to be postponed again, for the second time. It has been pending ten or twelve days. Moreover, the plans are not, I think, pertinent to the motion. I therefore beg to move that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole to consider the following resolution:—

That the route for the line of railway to connect Montreal with the Harbors of St. John and Halifax, for which a subsidy of $170,000 a year for fifteen years was provided by the Statute of last Session, 47 Victoria, Chapter 8, should be subject to the approval of Parliament.

The Statute referred to in the motion provides that for the construction of a line of railway to connect Montreal with the Harbors of St. John and Halifax by the shortest and best practicable route, and after reports of competent engineers have been obtained, a subsidy of $170,000 a year for fifteen years shall be allowed. The subsidy shall be granted to such company as shall be approved by the Governor in Council; and the location of the line shall be subject to the approval of the Governor in Council, without any reference to or approval by Parliament. I imagine that it was not without some annoyance to themselves that the Government finally made up their minds to come before Parliament, and did come before Parliament, to ask for such power. Their action, of course, would be perfectly natural but for one fact, that the important Harbors of Montreal, St. John and Halifax are already connected by a line of railway planned and constructed by the Government themselves. We have the Intercolonial Railway, and the route of that railway was chosen exactly in the same manner as it is proposed to apply this subsidy, that is to say, it was chosen by the Government itself without any reference to Parliament, and without their choice being subjected to the approval of Parliament. It was selected out of many proposed routes, and it was selected, in the language of the Government of the day, as the best that could be secured under all the circumstances and to all intents and purposes. And if I remember aright the very objects which are urged to-day to justify the Government in this action were at that time strongly urged and strongly pressed on the Government. The desirability and even the necessity of choosing the most direct route was pointed out again and again to the Government and yet their object at the time was the very same as the object they have in view to-day. Their object was to connect the new elements of the Confederation, to bring together the Provinces of the interior and the Provinces at the seaboard, and above all things to create a trade between those different Provinces, to bring down to the ports of the Maritime Provinces, previous to their shipment to Europe, the rich productions of the west. And yet having these objects in view the Government instead of selecting the most direct route, selected on the contrary the longest and most expensive one. They contended at the time that their choice was the best that could be made, but after an experience of some years they are forced to their present action; they are forced to supplement their first choice by another route which is to connect the same points that are connected by the Intercolonial Railway. Therefore, I say, that it cannot be without some secret annoyance that the Government made up their minds to come to Parliament to ask for an appropriation to connect the harbors of Montreal and St. John and Halifax, which are already connected by the previous action of the Government. The action of the Government to-day is a positive admission that they erred in the selection they made; it is an admission that however efficient the Intercolonial Railway may have been, however useful it may have been, still it has failed to bring the trade of the west to the ports of the Maritime Provinces, and that unless a new channel is opened up for that trade it must of necessity find its way to the ports on the American seaboard. It is not with any intention of fault finding or indulging in recrimination that I recall the fact—for recrimination would be out of place because it would not mend the errors of the past—but I recall the facts to the attention of the House because they show the paramount importance of the proposition which I lay before the House. I bring them before the House in order if possible to prevent the repetition of the same error which was committed in 1868, when the route of the Intercolonial Railway was chosen; and I bring them before the House in order that the House may be convinced how important and how necessary, I may say, that the House should keep to itself the final approval of the route to be selected under the Act. I may say, Sir, that the history of the present route of the Intercolonial Railway, illustrated as it is by the present action of the Government in asking a new appropriation to correct an error otherwise irreparable, is a conclusive argument in favor of the course which I urge for the adoption of the House. In 1868 when the scheme of the Intercolonial Railway was before Parliament a motion similar in purpose to the present one, and almost similar in language, was made by Mr. Dorion, asking what I now ask—that the choice of the Government should not be final, but should be subject to the approval of Parliament. When the Bill was before the House and was about to be referred to Committee of the Whole Mr. Dorion moved:

“That it be an instruction to the committee to amend the Bill so as to provide that the location of the line of Intercolonial Railway shall not be finally adopted without the previous assent of Parliament.”

This motion was opposed by the Government, and it was opposed for two reasons, the first one being a temporary reason which cannot be urged to-day. The first reason was that under the Imperial Act, the Intercolonial Railway was to be commenced within a certain time, and that if the choice of the Government was to be subject to the approval of Parliament the time might elapse, and that we therefore might lose the Imperial guarantee. The second reason was that the Government were well informed; that they had the interests of the whole country at heart, and would use carefully the information they could obtain, and would exercise the greatest care to make the best possible choice. These reasons prevailed, and the House entrusted them with the choice of route. Before proceeding further, I would recall the language used by the Prime Minister in answer to the motion of Mr. Dorion. He said:

“That the Government could only have one interest at heart, namely, the interest of the whole country, which was to be served by the construction of the cheapest and most direct road possible. When they had come to a conclusion as to which route was the most desirable they would submit their decision for the approval of the Imperial Government, and it must be remembered that any delay such as would be necessary to await the House's attention to the matter, would preclude the possibility of the work being commenced within the six months prescribed by the Act of Union. The House might fairly think it safe to leave the matter in their hands, who were all unbiassed by the possession of local interest in any special route, with the exception perhaps of the Minister of Customs, whose influence would not be absolutely crushing in their councils.”

These reasons prevailed. The Government said they were unbiassed, that they had nothing at heart but the interest of the whole country; they asked to be trusted, and they were trusted, and the consequence of that trust is that after a lapse of seventeen years the Government are now bound to admit that they erred in their selection, and that they have to supplement their action on that occasion by adopting another route, in order to secure what the selected route was expected to secure, but failed in securing. Now it is neither unfair nor unreasonable to assume that if Mr. Dorion's motion had been carried, and the House had reserved to itself the final choice of the road, the arguments which the Government used as a reason for their being entrusted with the selection, would have prevailed, and the nearest and most direct route for connecting the west with the Atlantic seaboard of the Maritime Provinces would have prevailed. Moreover if it was important in 1868, if there were strong reasons for the House keeping to itself the final approval of the selection of the route, I say that to-day there are reasons as strong and stronger why the House should take the course which it failed to take in 1868. The choice of the routes for this subsidy lies between two routes, one upon foreign territory through the State of Maine, and the other through Canadian territory. I desire to be neither captious nor factious, but I say that unless the House adopts the course which I suggest, and reserves to itself the final choice of that route, I fear there will be a miscarriage of justice. I fear that the Maine route may be adopted—I say adopted, not selected—not selected upon a comparison of the two, but simply adopted upon insufficient surveys. Nor do I believe that my language, strong as it may appear, is too strong; for last year, when the Government asked for this appropriation, their mind, as far as we could judge at the time, was made up in favor of the Maine line, and not in favor of the Canadian line. This appears to me to be conclusive from the language then made use of by Sir Charles Tupper, in introducing this measure. He used this language:

“Then a very strong feeling has grown up in the Maritime Provinces, and not only in the Maritime Provinces, but throughout Canada, because, I believe, that from British Columbia down through the North-West Territories, through the Province of Ontario, and in the Province of Quebec, there has been a strong and general sentiment that this great inter-oceanic line of the Canadian Pacific Railway would be incomplete if we were obliged to have our Atlantic terminus in a foreign country. I believe that sentiment is not at all confined to the Province of Nova Scotia, or Prince Edward Island, or the Province of New Brunswick, but I believe it has taken just as deep a hold of the minds of our friends in the other Provinces almost as it has in the Maritime Provinces. Although every effort has been made to render the operation of the Intercolonial Railway as successful as possible, although more has been accomplished in the development of the country, in the development of the trade and business of the country, through the agency of the Intercolonial Railway than any person on either side of this House a few years ago supposed to be possible, still we have found we were too heavily handicapped by the distance, and that we could not—reluctantly as we were driven to the conclusion, we have been driven to the conclusion by the force of circumstances and by the practical results, that it is impossible for the ports of St. John and Halifax to compete with the nearer ports of Portland and Boston in the United States. Under these circumstances, the attention of the Government has been drawn, as I have said on one or two occasions before in this House, to the best means by which we ought to secure a realisation of that which we all desire, the Atlantic terminus being in Canadian territory as well as the Pacific terminus, and thus be placed in a position to fairly compete for the great trans-continental trade and traffic that we all know must flow over that line. Although that may involve the necessity of passing for a certain portion of that line through a foreign country, we believe that even that is a comparatively insignificant point compared with the great importance of having the ocean ports both on the Pacific and Atlantic coasts, within the borders of our own country.”

Now, Mr. Speaker, this is certainly remarkable language. It is especially remarkable language in the mouth of Sir Charles Tupper, because we all remember that that hon. gentleman has always held to be something approaching treason, the mere suggestion that we might pass through foreign territory for any portion of the Canadian Pacific Railway; and yet, Sir, he came here with the statement that we have to pass through foreign territory for this line. In his speech there is no mention of any route but the foreign one, and if the mind of the Government had not been made up at that time in favor of the Maine route, if they had even contemplated that it would have been possible to find a way through our own territory, it is safe to assume that Sir Charles Tupper would have made some mention of it; but he did not do so. What he said was that it would, perhaps, be necessary to pass through foreign territory; and what other conclusion can we draw, even though no resolution was recorded, but that their mind was made up that the subsidy should be given for a line through the State of Maine? And I believe the subsidy would have been granted, in accordance with that view, to this foreign company, but for the strong agitation which was raised against it in this House, and which has been kept up ever since. When the Bill was before the House I moved an amendment similar in terms to the motion I now place in your hands. I asked that the choice of the Government should be ratified by Parliament; but this was denied, and the motion was voted down. But in order to get their followers to vote it down, the Government promised that they would, during the recess, have surveys made of the different routes proposed. And, Sir, the opinion has been prevalent since, that although there have been surveys made during the summer, these surveys have been neither thorough, accurate nor complete. Not only so, but statements of a similar kind have been made and widely circulated in the press—not the press of the Opposition, but the Ministerial press. I will give to the House a sample of the articles which were published at that time, and which the Conservative press of the Province of Quebec have been full of during the summer. The Ministerial press, speaking of the explorations made of the different routes proposed, not in Canada, but through the State of Maine, said :

“ This exploration is not made. What is now taking place is a farce, a snare, and a sham exploration. The instructions given to the engineers are insufficient, and the engineers are the first to admit it.”

That is the statement of a Ministerial paper.

An hon. MEMBER. What paper?

Mr. LAURIER. Le Canadien.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Hear, hear.

Mr. LAURIER. I do not understand what these hear, hears mean. Le Canadien is certainly a Ministerial paper. It is true, we have in the Province of Quebec two shades of blue; there is the darker hue and the lighter hue. It is true, the opinion of Le Canadien is supposed to be that of the light blue, but I can give the opinion of a deep blue as well—the opinion of L'Etendard, which is certainly as true blue as any; and you will find, Mr. Speaker, that it is quite worthy of its color, because its language is stronger than any used by Le Canadien. Here is what L'Etendard said on the 25th of July last :

“ The apprehensions of the adversaries of the Sherbrooke line would seem to be, to a certain degree, justified by the fact that Mr. Pope, Acting Minister of Railways, is said to be partial to the extent of not giving to the engineers the instructions necessary to ensure an impartial survey of the different rival routes.”

So, Mr. Speaker, that is the opinion of the Ministerial press of the Province of Quebec. The Castor press may differ from the rest of the Blue press on some questions of practical politics, but on this question they were of the same mind, that the instructions given to the engineers were not in good faith, and that the surveys were not thorough and accurate. But we have heard recently—not from a newspaper organ, but from a member of Parliament—that he had been informed that the instructions given to the engineers were not sufficient, and he gave an instance in illustration. He stated that he had seen information that a certain engineer had been instructed to survey a certain route, which he found very practicable until he came to a knoll that rose abruptly from the ground to a height of 400 feet. He reported this fact to the Government, and was told that the Government wanted to give up the exploration, to back out, but the engineer succeeded in finding on the other side of this knoll a better route than on the side previously followed. This has been stated by the hon. member for Montmagny (Mr. Landry), and therefore the statements of the press are none too strong. It is all the more necessary Parliament should reserve to itself the final decision in the matter; it is all the more necessary that the choice of the Government should not be finally made until all the information and data have been placed before Parliament, and the reasons made apparent why one line should be adopted in preference to another. I understand that our friends from the Maritime Provinces feel strongly on the subject of the short route. So do we all. It is not a question confined to them; it is a question which interests the whole of Confederation. It is a question on which we all feel strongly, but at the same time every one must admit that it will be looked upon as a misfortune if, after we have had an ample and thorough survey, we have to come to the conclusion that it is impossible to find through our own territory as good, or almost as good, a line as we can find through foreign territory. Every one will agree that it would be inexpedient to spend a single dollar of Canadian money in building a line through a foreign Country until we have satisfied ourselves, by a most thorough survey, that it is impossible to find as good a line on Canadian territory. Yet, as I have said, my impression is, and it is warranted by the facts, that when the Government brought down these resolutions upon which the Act was framed, their minds were made up in favor of the line through the State of Maine. Although at the very time that the then Minister of Railways (Sir Charles Tupper) spoke, the press—especially the press of the city which I have the honor to represent—strongly contended that it was possible to find a route as short, if not shorter, through our own territory, than could be found through the State of Maine. The plan suggested, the tracé of the route indicated, was that the Canadian Pacific Railway should be extended over the North Shore Railway to the harbor of Quebec; that the St. Lawrence should be bridged at Quebec; that the Intercolonial should be used to Rivière du Loup, and that from Rivière du Loup a short line might be constructed, for which there is already a charter, to Edmonton, to connect with the New Brunswick system of railways. That plan is said to be perfectly practicable. It is true it involves the building of a bridge across the St. Lawrence at Quebec, but the Maine route involves the bridging of the St. Lawrence at Montreal. Besides the choice between the two bridges there is the question of distance. The hon. Minister of Railways last year (Sir Charles Tupper) said the distance between Montreal and the harbor of St. John by the Maine route was 427 miles. This was the only route of which the hon. Minister spoke, and the figures he gave have since been controverted in the Quebec press. I am anxious and willing on this occasion to take all my arguments especially from the Ministerial press, and from the Ministerial organs I take the following figures, which show that the distance was not 427 miles, as then stated by the hon. Minister of Railways, but 479 miles, between St. John and Montreal, over the Maine line, namely :

	Miles.
From St. Martin's Junction to Mile End.....	10
From Mile End to Lachine.....	9
From Lachine to Sherbrooke, including the bridge on the St. Lawrence at Lachine.....	93
From Sherbrooke to Megantic.....	69
From Megantic to Woodstock.....	170
From Woodstock to Fredericton.....	69
From Fredericton to St. John.....	68
Total.....	479

It was further claimed that by the route over the North Shore Railway and the Intercolonial and Rivière du Loup and Edmonton, the distance would only be 466 miles, as follows :

	Miles.
From St. Martin's Junction to Petite Rivière Junction.....	166
From Petite Rivière Junction to Chaudière Junction (including the bridge over the St. Lawrence).....	6
From Chaudière Junction to Woodstock.....	176
From Woodstock to Fredericton.....	60
From Fredericton to St. John.....	58
Total.....	466

So that between St. Martin's Junction and St. John, according to these figures, the Canadian route would actually be shorter than the Maine route. Now I do not give these figures as accurate.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Hear, hear.

Mr. LAURIER. How can you give any accurate figures till you have a survey. At this time it is impossible for a man to give accurate figures, and no man will be in position to do so until we have these surveys made. Then, when we have the figures, as determined by the surveys that must take place, we will be able to show which calculation is the right one. At present we can deal only with approximate figures, and these approximate figures show that, even if the figures which I have given in favor of the Canadian line be perhaps estimated on a sanguine basis, they still show that after all the difference cannot be very great, and they show still more the necessity of having an absolute survey, which should be reported to Parliament before Parliament is called upon to take action, and especially before the choice of the Government is finally made. It is true, upon the question of mileage we cannot speak with accuracy, as we have not yet had a survey, but though we have not had a survey we can speak with something like accuracy upon the other feature of the railway, that is to say, upon the question of grades and curvatures. On this point we are all sufficiently conversant with the geography of the different localities to know that all the advantage will be in favor of the Canadian line, that is the line by the North Shore Railway, over the Intercolonial Railway and through Rivière du Loup to Edmonton, which for two-thirds, or at least two-fifths, of its distance is completely over level ground, while there would be but very little undulating ground between Rivière du Loup and Edmonton; we all know that the line through the State of Maine would be completely over a mountainous country; and this fact, without any further consideration, shows that the advantage would be altogether in favor of the Canadian route. There is also another argument to be used against the line through the State of Maine. It is not an argument I would press so much on hon. members on this side as on hon. gentlemen opposite, with whom it must carry great weight, because we have heard it applied by them over and over again, with reference to the Canadian Pacific Railway. We have heard it stated by them again and again, even during this very Session, that it was extremely objectionable that we should use the American lines on the south shore of Lake Superior, because, forsooth, if we did our immigrants would be snatched away from us by the wiles of the astute Yankee immigrant agents. If that is to be accepted as an argument in the west, it ought to hold as good in the east. If our immigrants, when they pass through American territory south of Lake Superior, are liable to be exposed to the blandishments of Yankee colonisation agents, will they not be equally subjected to the same when they pass through the State of Maine. This is not a very strong argument, I admit, but it is one that has frequently commended itself to the majority of this House. There is, however, a strong argument to be used against the line through the State of Maine. It has been stated in this House, Session after Session, that it was in the general interests of the country that the summer terminus of the Canadian Pacific Railway should be the harbor of Quebec, and that the winter terminus should be some port in the Maritime Provinces, either St. Andrews, St. John, or Halifax. Not only has it been stated here, without any contradiction by a single hon. member of this House, but it has been stated as the policy of the Government. I have had occasion before, during the present Session, to quote the language of a prominent hon. member of the Government on this matter, and I will not repeat it, but I will repeat the language made use of last year by the hon. the Minister of Public Works, because it commits the Government to the policy, that the summer terminus of the Canadian Pacific Railway should be the harbor of Quebec. This is the language which was made use of last year by the hon. the Minister of Public Works. He said:

"In answer to the hon. member for Bellechasse, I must say this: the hon. gentleman speaks as if the extension of the Canadian Pacific Railway was not to be in the Province of Quebec. That extension is to be from Montreal to Quebec, and in the Province of Quebec, and for the benefit of the whole Dominion, but especially for the Province of Quebec. The intention is to make the harbor of Quebec the eastern terminus, in summer, of the Canadian Pacific Railway. This has been asked, the people and the press have asked it; and we have come down with these resolutions to carry it out; that is to say, we propose to give $6,000 per mile in order that the terminus of the Canadian Pacific shall be in the harbor of Quebec."

So here is the policy of the Government in that matter. The harbor of Quebec is to be the summer terminus of the Canada Pacific Railway. Now, I ask it, if this line through the State of Maine is built, if this subsidy contemplated by the Act is to be applied to a line which is to pass through the State of Maine, what will become of the policy of the Government? Wherever the terminus of the Canadian Pacific Railway is put on paper, let it be put on paper in the city of Quebec. If this line is constructed, the policy of the Government becomes nugatory, and never, in reality, will the harbor of Quebec be the summer terminus, or the terminus at any other season, of the Canadian Pacific Railway. From what we know of the geography of the place, it is plain and manifest that, if the bridge is constructed at Lachine, and then a road is built to connect with the present system of railways, through the State of Maine, as soon as the freight reaches the point of junction—that is, St. Martin's Junction—it will be deviated to the American ports, and not a pound of it will go to Quebec.

Mr. IVES. You mean, it will take the shortest route if it is built?

Mr. LAURIER. If the difference was very large it would take the shortest route, but, as it is not very large, the propensities of the Canadian Pacific Railway are so well known in favor of an American road, that it will take that direction. When it is deviated over the Maine road, will the trade find its way to the Maritime Provinces? This is a consideration for gentlemen coming from the Maritime Provinces, and especially those coming from Nova Scotia and New Brunswick. I ask, if the trade is brought over that line to the State of Maine, will it reach the ports of St. John and Halifax? It is certain that, if the line is built through the State of Maine, it will be tapped by the American system of railways, that is to say, by the railway which runs from Portland to Bangor, and from Bangor extends northward, and then, when the trade is at the point of junction, what direction will it take? Will it be carried through the ports of the Maritime Provinces to St. John and Halifax, or will it be taken to Portland? If you look at the map, it is almost impossible to say whether it would be nearer to St. John or to Portland, but the difference would be settled by the well-known preference of the Canadian Pacific Railway for an American port. In connection with this, I may recall the attention of the House to the language of Mr. Stephen, the president of the Canadian Pacific Railway Company, at the city of Portland, in the month of October, 1882. This is what he said then:—

"Perhaps you are aware that the Canadian Pacific Railway has been at work for three years. Three years ago we made a contract to build a line of railway from Montreal to the Pacific Ocean, a distance of about 2,900 miles, and we have progressed so far that I think I am safe in saying that, within two years, or two more working seasons, the road will be complete, and a main line connecting the Pacific Railway of Montreal to the Pacific Ocean will be complete."

"In addition to that, we shall have, by January or February of this coming year, a line of railway from Montreal to Chicago, connecting at St. Louis with the Canadian railway, giving us a through road from Montreal to Chicago. That brings us under the control of the Canadian railway, and from the Pacific Ocean to Montreal, a line from Chicago, and it is not unnatural, having reached Montreal, and, as you are well aware, Montreal being only a six months' port, we should be looking to the question of reaching the Atlantic, and it is not unnatural that our eyes should be cast upon the most direct way, and whether we shall be able to accomplish our object will depend a little upon yourselves. We think, as I said before, that Portland has great capacity in that respect, and I may say, for my colleagues and myself, we are anxious to do all we can to endeavor to get a foothold here."

This is what was said by Mr. Stephen in 1883. He and his colleagues were most anxious to get a foothold at the port of Portland. At that time Mr. Stephen was negotiating with the Ogdensburg and Portland Railway in order to get that foothold, and it was after the negotiations with that road had failed that this project of a short line took the shape which it has since taken. I do not say it took that shape because of the failure of Mr. Stephen's negotiations to obtain the connection by the Ogdensburg and Portland Railway, but it did take that shape after that failure; so it was quite a coincidence. Such being the facts, they show conclusively, to my mind, the great importance that no haste should be made in this matter, and that the choice of the Government should not be final, but that Parliament should reserve to itself the final decision to be given in this matter. And, if I am correct, perhaps we may expect such a result. Last year I made a similar motion. It was denied. The Government appealed to their supporters, and their supporters responded to that appeal and voted against the motion; but, if I am correctly informed, many of the hon. gentlemen who voted in that way did not sleep a very easy sleep afterwards, and my hon. friends the Minister of Public Works and the Minister of Militia were the recipients, during the early summer, of many gentle complaints about it.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. No.

Mr. LAURIER. The hon. gentleman says no. One thing, however, is certain, if he has not been the recipient himself of many complaints, my hon. friend the Minister of Militia thought it wise to invite the members from that section to a pic-nic at Rivière du Loup, last summer, where a little pleasure and a good deal of politics were to be mixed up. The Premier was also to be invited to the pic-nic, and the pic-nic took place. No doubt it was a pleasant gathering, but it was not all pleasure. They thought and spoke of business, and especially of the vote given last Session, of the fact that the surveys were not thorough or accurate, and they prevailed upon the Premier, if the reports are to be believed, to say that no action would be finally taken by the Government until their choice had been subject to the ratification of Parliament. At least the Ministerial press at that time said so, and I will quote again from the paper from which I quoted a moment ago:

"The pic-nic took place on the 20th of August, and the following day the following message was sent to a Ministerial paper published in the city of Quebec:—'Sir John A. Macdonald formally bound himself yesterday to submit the different explorations to Parliament before adopting any route.' This had been denied last Session."

Whether this statement is accurate or not, we will soon know; but whether accurate or not, I believe this is the course which the Government ought to adopt, and which the House ought to adopt. Let me again recall to the recollection of the House what took place in 1868, when the first choice for the route to connect Montreal with the harbors of the Maritime Provinces was made. When Mr. Dorion asked that the choice of the Government should not be finally made before all the data, all the information, and all the surveys and reports were brought down, so that they might be discussed and the best route adopted, the Government then said: You know we are unbiassed, you know we will do for the best, and therefore you can trust us. They were trusted, and unbiassed as they were, though they had at heart, as they said, the best interests of the country, they made the very worst choice that could be made, a choice, indeed, so bad, that they are now forced to come to Parliament and ask for another appropriation in order to supplement their former deficiency. Now, these are reasons which, in my opinion, ought to determine the House to support the motion I am about to lay before it. Neither on this occasion nor on any other would I appeal to the House through any sectional motive, through any motive which applies to one section of the country and not to another. It is true that in this matter, though I am advocating what I conceive to be in the interest of the whole country, yet the course I propose would especially benefit the city which I have the honor to represent in this House; and, therefore, while expecting the support of the whole House, I look particularly for the warm, effective, and active support of those who, with me, represent the old city of Quebec and the country of which it is the centre. I now move, Mr. Speaker:

That the route for the line of railway to connect Montreal with the harbors of St. John and Halifax, for which a subsidy of $170,000 a year, for fifteen years, was provided by the statute of last Session, 47 Victoria, chapter 8, should be subject to the approval of Parliament.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. I regret that the hon. gentleman who has put this motion before the House did not accept the offer I made him and has not complied with the request made to him to defer proceeding with this motion until the plans and the reports of all the surveys were laid before the House, as we promised they should be. However, the hon. gentleman, of course, is at liberty, as a member of Parliament, to do as he pleases in that respect; he has taken advantage of that privilege, and I do not blame him for it. But the House will see that we are not to-day in a position to discuss this question. We have no plans, we have no surveys, we have no information whatever. The hon. gentleman himself felt the weakness of his position when he brought forward just now certain figures of distances; he said he would not vouch for those figures, as they were not official. Now, if all the information was before the House we would then be in a position to say whether this line is the shortest or the longest, and to decide which was the best. As we promised some time ago, I now repeat, that all the information will be laid before the House as soon as it can be gathered. The hon. gentleman has made a long speech, and an eloquent one, as he is accustomed to make, but I must say that I am not to-day in a position to enter into the details of the subject, in answer to the hon. gentleman. When I answer him I wish to have all the information afforded by the plans and surveys, and all the information which has been gathered by the Department of Railways from the engineers, and which is now being prepared. Under these circumstances, the hon. gentleman may be sure that if I do not answer him now it is not out of want of respect for himself. I shall take another opportunity to do so, and as the hon. gentleman has not consented to postpone his motion, I move, seconded by Mr. Caron, that the debate be adjourned.

Mr. LANGELIER. I cannot allow this debate to close without addressing a few words to the House on this question. It is a question of the greatest importance, not only to the city of which I happen to be chief magistrate, but, I may say to the whole Province of Quebec—or nearly the whole Province. All the hon. gentlemen of this House who come from the Province of Quebec are aware of the circumstances under which the construction of the North Shore Railway was undertaken. It was an immense enterprise, and when the scheme was proposed many great objections were urged against it. It was stated by many of my friends, that it would involve the Province of Quebec in very serious financial difficulties. And what was the answer that was given us by hon. gentlemen sitting opposite, who share the political opinions of the Government of the day? They said that the railway would involve those heavy sacrifices of money by the Province of Quebec for only a few years, and that then it would be made a link of the Canadian Pacific Railway. It must be in the recollection of every hon. member of this House, that the construction of the Canadian Pacific Railway had then been decided upon for several years previous; it was in 1875 that the construction, by the Provincial Government of Quebec, of the North Shore Railway, was undertaken. Well, we were promised distinctly, by hon. gentlemen whose opinions were supposed to have some weight with the Government, that the North Shore Railway would be made a link of the Canadian Pacific Railway. We have all along been relying upon that promise, and at this moment, it is well known that the attention of the whole of that portion of the Province of Quebec, with which I am particularly connected, is engrossed with this subject. It is a subject that interests not only the city of Quebec, but it interests all those localities whose business brings them to that city, and I may say that amongst those localities is my own county. It might be supposed by some hon. members of this House that my county, judging from its name, would be interested in the Lake Megantic line. I must say it is quite the reverse. My county has no business where that road passes. All its transactions are with the city of Quebec. So it is with a large portion of the Province. But it is not only that portion of the Province which is interested; it includes all that portion of the Province east of Montreal. It is too evident to require demonstration, that if the line of the Canadian Pacific Railway passes by a bridge at Lachine through to Sherbrooke, all that portion of the Province east of Montreal will be entirely deprived of all the advantages which had been promised to it, and which it had a good right to expect, from the construction of the Canadian Pacific Railway. I have a very vivid recollection of the fine speeches made when the policy of building a Canadian Pacific Railway was inaugurated. We were made to see, in imagination, immense trains of cars coming from the Pacific Ocean, laden with all the riches of China and Japan, and passing through the Province of Quebec, to be transferred to vessels in the harbor of Quebec. Those promises were made to us by gentlemen supposed to have a great deal of influence over the policy of this country; and upon those promises, not only the North Shore Railway was built at the expense of the Province, but very large works were undertaken in the harbor of Quebec. At the present time harbor works are being prosecuted in that city, the execution of which will cost some $3,000,000. I ask all hon. members of this House what will be the use of these works if the Canadian Pacific Railway is not to come to the harbor of Quebec? They will involve a very serious burden upon the shipping of Quebec. These works are not executed at the expense of the Government. It is true that the present and the previous Governments have advanced money to the Harbor Commissioners, but the interest on that money has been paid by the shipping of Quebec. So it is a charge upon the trade of Quebec, and it is out of the revenues from the shipping and from the trade of Quebec that the harbor works are being built. Those works will be scarcely of any use if we do not get a share of the traffic which was supposed to be brought to this country and to the Province of Quebec by the construction of the Canadian Pacific Railway. Another consideration which makes this question of great interest to our portion of the country is this: We have been made to contribute, like all the rest of the Dominion, to the heavy expenditure which has been incurred for the construction of the Canadian Pacific Railway. We have been paying, as have the people of the other Provinces, the heavy taxes which have been entailed by the additional expenditure due to the construction of the transcontinental road. Another point of great interest in connection with the subject is this: The Intercolonial Railway has cost a very large sum of money, some $40,000,000, to the Dominion. What will become of the Intercolonial if the Canadian Pacific Railway does not connect with it? It will become merely a local road. It scarcely pays its running expenses at this moment, and its position will be much worse if the whole traffic is diverted, as it certainly will be, from that portion of the Province of Quebec, by the construction of a bridge at Lachine, and sending all the Canadian Pacific Railway traffic through Sherbrooke to the United States. It is a general opinion, and it is one shared in by all business men of Quebec with whom I have had occasion to speak on the subject, that if a bridge is built at Lachine, the whole of the Canadian Pacific Railway traffic will go to the United States within a very short time. The hon. member for Quebec East (Mr. Laurier), quoted, a few moments ago, some remarks made by the president of the Canadian Pacific Railway, which afford very good grounds for the impression which exists among business men in Quebec, that if the Canadian Pacific Railway crosses at Lachine, it will go, perhaps, for some time, to Sherbrooke, but will eventually leave that line and go direct to some United States port. Another reason which has been advanced by the hon. member from Quebec East is this, and it was mentioned to me by some very competent railway engineers: They say, it is impossible for a line like the Canadian Pacific Railway to go over the chain of the Alleghanies, as it will have to do if it passes through Sherbrooke, and compete with American lines going to Boston, New York and Portland, and that it will eventually have to go to Portland. Whereas, if it came to Quebec and connected with the Intercolonial and ran through Rivière du Loup, or Rivière Ouelle, and proceeded to some port in the Maritime Provinces, such as St. John or Halifax, whatever might be the wishes of the syndicate composing the Canadian Pacific Railway, it would then be impossible for them to take the railway to the United States, but they would be compelled to leave it in the Province of Quebec. I have no private information on the subject; I have to depend, like every other hon. member, upon information I can obtain from railway authorities, and I have been talking on the subject with several very well posted railway engineers. They all say that a line through Quebec, passing entirely over Canadian territory, can be found not much longer and with lower grades than the line which is almost adopted—the line passing through Sherbrooke. The length of the line is not the only consideration. The grades are important. The grades of a line through the Province of Quebec will be exceedingly easy. Everyone who has travelled over the country can see for himself that the grades cannot be difficult. It is stated that it will be necessary to build a bridge. The answer to that objection is a very easy one. If a bridge were necessary in adopting the Quebec route, and if it could be saved by passing through Lachine, it would be a very strong objection to the Quebec route. But, unfortunately, a bridge must be built. Is there any justice in building a bridge at Lachine in order to divert the Canadian Pacific Railway to that portion of Quebec where there are already railways, and sending it thence to the United States, instead of building a bridge near Quebec. I think another consideration can be advanced. Other things being equal, I think it cannot be disputed that the Province of Quebec and the city of Quebec deserve some consideration in this matter. It cannot be forgotten that from our city started out those missionaries and explorers who travelled all over North America. There is no place on this continent, either on this or on the other side of the Rocky Mountains, that has not been visited by missionaries or explorers who had left the city of Quebec. It may, indeed, be said that all this country has been settled through the city of Quebec and through the Province of Quebec. Quebec is the oldest Province of the Confederation and deserves some consideration in this respect, supposing it affords equal advantages with other routes. It must not be forgotten that the shortest line is not always the most successful, from a business point of view. The lines that cross the country from the western States to the Atlantic seaboard are not the shortest roads. There are many other considerations. One of the most important is the desire of those who control a line to give it the traffic and the power to secure that traffic. Fifty or 100 miles would be nothing in the hands of such a man as Mr. Vanderbilt to bring traffic to his own line, and I think the same considerations apply to the Canadian Pacific Railway. It is going to be a very powerful corporation; it is already very powerful, and I think they could very easily find a compensation for only some 50 or 60 miles, which, I am told by engineers, is the excess of distance of the line passing through Quebec and Rivière Ouëlle, or Rivière du Loup. I say that these might be easily compensated by energy and enterprise, and by the advantage which the Canadian Pacific Railway Company would have in bringing traffic over their own line. Some years ago, when the contract for the construction of the Canadian Pacific Railway was before this House, it was proposed to dispense for some time with building the line to the north shore of Lake Superior. It is in the recollection of this House that such a policy was proposed, and when the leader of the Opposition proposed temporarily to go to Sault Ste. Marie and use some of the American lines to reach the fertile portion of the North-West Territory, that proposition was voted down by a large majority, and that policy set aside. On what ground? On the ground, that as this was a great national railway it should pass entirely on Canadian territory; and in order to carry out that policy the construction of a line of some 600 miles was undertaken, at the cost of some $20,000,000, on the north shore of Lake Superior, where there is no present local traffic and scarcely any future possibility of traffic. I ask hon. members—and I am speaking for the portion of Quebec east of Montreal—do we not deserve as much consideration as the bears and moose on the north shore of Lake Superior? If $20,000,000 are spent to build the Canadian Pacific Railway on the north shore of Lake Superior, because it should pass through Canadian territory, is that principle to be abandoned when we come to the Province of Quebec? Those 600 miles were built there for no other purpose than for the sake of constructing the line on Canadian territory, because it cannot be contended that there will be any local traffic in that region; it would never have entered any person's mind to build it in that region as a local, or business, or commercial undertaking, and I ask if it is good policy for that region is it not good policy in the oldest Province of the Confederation, the pioneer Province of the Confederation, I may say. It was said, a short time ago, by the hon. the Minister of Public Works (Sir Hector Langevin) that it would be better to postpone the motion until further information was given. I could understand such a suggestion if it were now proposed to make a final choice of a line, but such is not the proposal of the motion. The motion is only to this effect: that no line be finally adopted without being submitted to and approved by this House. We do not want any information to decide that question; we have all the information necessary to pronounce judgment on that point. What further information could any plans or reports of engineers give us? Those plans would be of immense use to us when we come finally to decide the question, if it is left to the decision of the House, but presently they are of no use whatever. The question is, whether it is better that the selection should be decided by this House, or by the Government of the day, in private conference with the syndicate of the Canadian Pacific Railway. I do not think there can be two opinions on that point. We know what an influence such a powerful company can exert on a Government—I do not say it would be exerted in an improper manner, but it is undoubtedly a very great influence. The policy adopted last year was—and the promises of the Government since have been in accordance with that policy—that the shortest and best line to the Atlantic seaboard would be adopted. There may be a great many opinions as to the shortest and best line. It is quite possible that a line which might appear best to the Government in private consultation with the Canadian Pacific Railway would not be considered the best and shortest if its merits and demerits were discussed in the House. There is nothing like public discussion to bring out light, and if the matter be left to the House the greatest amount of light will be thrown on the subject. All these reports of engineers will be discussed and examined and gone into, and then the House, if it is of opinion that it is absolutely impossible to carry the line through Canadian territory, will have to give up that idea. I am quite sure that no hon. member would insist on a line which would be a practical or commercial impossibility, but we should be put in possession of all the reasons which can be adduced for or against that line, or any other line. There is another reason, why our minds should not be quite easy on this subject and I will allude to some facts which are quite public. On the 20th of July last, the hon. Minister of Public Works (Sir Hector Langevin) happened to be in Quebec at the laying of the corner stone of the examining warehouse, and he took the opportunity to speak of the future of Quebec and the harbor of Quebec. He repeated there that no line would be adopted finally without the closest and most minute survey of all proposed lines, and those who were present believed that all possible consideration would be shown to the line through Quebec. On the 10th of August, Mr. Stephen, the president of the Canadian Pacific Railway, speaking to a reporter of the Sun, said that the Lake Megantic line was to be selected. This was enough, I think, to make the public mind uneasy in that portion of the Province. But that is not all. On the 19th of August there was a celebrated pic-nic at Rivière du Loup, given by the hon. Minister of Militia and Defence (Mr. Caron), and if we are to believe that hon. gentleman, it was composed of only the very best portion of the Conservative party. If we are to believe the papers supporting the Government, those present, as we say in French, were triés sur le volet, and if we are to believe those same papers, there was a distinct promise made at that time by the Prime Minister that a line through Canadian territory would be chosen, and that at any rate nothing would be done without the assent of Parliament. Well, that may have two meanings. It may mean the assent of Parliament after the line is chosen; and it may mean without the assent of Parliament previously obtained. Under these circumstances, I think the House perfectly justified in insisting that no line should be chosen before being approved by it. Such, at all events, is my impression, and such is the opinion of the people of Quebec. There is a strong impression that unless the line is selected on the approval of Parliament openly, and after a full, public discussion, the city of Quebec and the larger portion of the Province of Quebec will not obtain justice. We simply ask justice, and we think we ought to get justice. After having spent so much money in territories where there is scarcely any population, we think the interests of the oldest Province of Confederation should be considered with a great deal of care. If our interests are to be sacrificed, we think they should be sacrificed only on good grounds—on grounds that can be defended in a House like this, and not on grounds that are discussed privately, and that cannot be controverted, as they would be controverted in a full and open discussion in this House.

Mr. DE ST. GEORGES. (Translation). Mr. Speaker, after hearing the two eloquent speeches which have just been heard, there are but few things left for me to say on the matter now occupying the attention of the House. But the division I represent is so deeply interested in this question that I shall venture to offer a few remarks. Last Session when the hon. the Minister of Railways submitted to the House the resolutions which have become so famous, owing to the debate to which they gave occasion, the hon.

member for East Quebec (Mr. Laurier) moved in amendment a motion which read as follows:—

"That the said resolution be not now read a second time, but that it be referred back to a Committee of the Whole with power to amend the same, by providing that the route for the line of railway connecting Montreal with the harbors of St. John and Halifax, for which a subsidy of $170,000 a year for fifteen years, is provided, should be subject to the approval of Parliament."

The construction of the line proposed by the hon. the Minister of Railways is certainly calculated to carry off the traffic of the Pacific Railway to the United States, thus depriving the Quebec Harbor of such traffic. Therefore, the demand of the hon. member for East Quebec was perfectly just. He desired to save, from a summary condemnation, the city which he so worthily represents. It was his opinion as it is the opinion of every Liberal, that if the question was considered without passion, and without preconceived ideas, the House could not do otherwise than to accept the plan of running the Pacific through Quebec, because this line would be about the same length as the other proposed lines and altogether better suited to the general interests of the country if not to the desires of the Canadian Pacific Railway Company. By refusing to vote for this motion the hon. members who were opposed to it have refused to Quebec that justice to which it was entitled, and I have reason to believe, Mr. Speaker, that certain hon. members must have regretted the vote which they had given on that occasion, when, a few days after the Session, they had to meet their constituents. What the hon. member for East Quebec asked for in his amendment was a simple act of justice, and I think that those who voted against this amendment have ignored the interest of their Province. Indeed, it was taking away from Quebec all chances and all hopes of ever realising from the Pacific Railway the full benefit which was expected from it, because, from that day it became evident that if the Montreal and Halifax route via Sherbrooke was adopted almost the whole of the Province of Quebec, at least that part of the Province of Quebec which lies east of Montreal, comprising over thirty counties and three or four cities, which have contributed largely to the construction of that railway, all that part comprised between Montreal and the Gulf on the north shore of the St. Lawrence would be completely isolated. A great deal could be done in that part of the country in favor of colonisation, but, unfortunately, the means at the disposition of the Local Government have not allowed us to make as much progress as we should have desired. However, it is under these circumstances that the Federal Government has asked us to vote large sums of money for the construction of the Pacific Railway. The people of the Province of Quebec have adopted that policy; the electors have consented to favor the construction of that railway on the express promise made by the present Ministry, that we should profit largely by the construction of the Pacific Railway, which was to give us the western traffic, and even that of the United States. The people have accepted that policy, if we are to judge by the last elections, but, at the same time, I wish to remind the House that it was accepted on the express promise that we should profit by its being carried out. That promise, Mr. Speaker, has been repeatedly renewed to us. It has been made by the hon. Premier during his visit at Quebec in 1880, when he told us that we should have the terminus of the Pacific Railway at Quebec; it was made by Sir Charles Tupper, who said that even should the Quebec line be the longest of any other by a hundred miles, we should have the terminus of the road at Quebec, that promise has been made by the Minister of Public Works, whose words it is useless for me to recall, for I think the press has reminded him of them often enough, finally it is the promise of the Government themselves, and only for that promise, Mr. Speaker, the people of the Province of Quebec would never have accepted that policy, they would never have consented to the construction of the Pacific Railway. And I am not speaking on a supposition; it is a fact which nobody can doubt. In order to know what is the public sentiment in the Province of Quebec on that question, all one has to do is to read the newspapers of whatever political shade they may be. Even at the risk of inducing some hon. members to say "hear, hear," as they did when the hon. member for East Quebec was speaking a moment ago. I shall read an extract from a Conservative newspaper published at Quebec, Le Canadien, of the 17th of January, 1885. It said:

"In face of the immense interest we have to serve, it is absolutely necessary for us that our line of battle should offer a solid, compact front, that we should rise superior to our personal leanings or dislikes and work all together in order to attain the one great object which is to secure the Pacific terminus at Quebec."

I find in Le Canadien of the same date, the report of a meeting held in the county of Quebec, which is represented here by my hon. friend, the hon. Minister of Militia and Expense. Some time before the Session there was a meeting at Saint Coloman, an important parish of the county of Quebec. At that meeting were present Mr. Garneau, the representative of the county in the Local Legislature, a Conservative, M. Charlebois and M. C. Pelletier, both also Conservatives. I will take the liberty of quoting an extract of a speech made on that occasion by Mr. Charlebois, who said:

"Mr. J. A. Charlebois held that the Government ought to keep his pledge and bring the Pacific at Quebec. If Quebec is deprived of that advantage all the traffic goes to the Americans."

And at that meeting the following resolutions were adopted:—

"That during the late Session of Parliament it was expressly understood, and the Government pledged themselves to locate the summer terminus of the Canadian Pacific to Quebec."

"That it is in the interest not only of the citizens of Quebec and vicinity, but also of the Province of Quebec that this pledge should be kept."

"That the policy of the country being to make of the harbor of Quebec the summer terminal point of the Canadian Pacific, as has been proved by the declaration of the Ministry during last Session, and by the granting of a subsidy of $6,000 per mile of railway as far as Quebec, it is necessary in the interests of the Province that that part of the line should be built immediately, and should be made available to the Province as part of the shortest line to Halifax by means of a bridge across the St. Lawrence in the neighborhood of the city of Quebec."

"That by allowing the Pacific to cross the St. Lawrence by means of a bridge above Montreal the Province of Quebec would lose most of the advantages that we should reap from the construction of our line. Our Canadian railway would thus become an American railway crossing Canadian territory, and carrying all its freight to the American ports."

"That the only way to protect Canadian interests would be to limit this line to Canadian territory."

"That the construction of this projected line of railway from Montreal to the Maritime Provinces via Sherbrooke and the State of Maine, would be the virtual abandonment of the compact of Confederation, namely: A national line from the Atlantic to the Pacific exclusively on Canadian territory."

"That the enormous sacrifices made by the Province of Quebec for the development of the resources of the country by building a national line, ought to be rewarded by the extension of the Pacific to Quebec and by the construction of a bridge across the St. Lawrence near Quebec."

Now, Mr. Speaker, I shall read an article bearing date the 30th of January last, from the Morning Chronicle which I believe is the organ of the Minister of Militia and Expense. Here is what it says on the question of the Pacific Railway:

"Over and over again, it has been promised that the summer terminus would be located in Quebec. The time has arrived for the fulfilment of the promise. Nothing but justice, full and ample, will satisfy the people of this city, who have for many years made such heroic sacrifices, and spent vast sums of money in the construction of important public works. The members of Parliament and of the Senate, representing this district, irrespective of party, must unite on this question, and join the Board of Trade in its eminently reasonable demands. Those demands are well expressed in the petition. The Canadian Pacific Railway Syndicate owes much to Quebec, and it will not do now for the promoters of that enterprise to ignore our just claims. The railway has always been regarded as a national, rather than as a private enterprise. It has been largely subsidised by the people's money, and when more funds were demanded at various stages in the progress of the work, the people have not been slow to respond in a way which has met with the approval of the company."

And further it adds :

"The road was destined to open up a great tract of territory, and to plant the seeds of colonisation and civilisation in a vast wilderness, it is true, but another object was unquestionably the opening up of a market for the manufactures and other products of the older Provinces comprising the Confederation.

"To that end, the Province of Quebec undertook the building of the railway from Quebec to Ottawa, at a total cost of some fourteen millions of dollars. The plan included an extension of the same line to Lake Nipissing, the point agreed on by the Dominion Parliament for the eastern terminus of the Canadian Pacific Railway, thus forming the connecting link between the latter and the Intercolonial. Our city voted one million dollars for the construction of this road, the citizens feeling that the enterprise deserved a material endorsement at their hands. That endorsement was freely given, the understanding being clearly that Quebec would be one of the summer termini and the point of connection with the Intercolonial Railway."

Mr. Speaker, I think I have sufficiently explained the position to indicate what is almost the unanimous sentiment of the citizens of Quebec, and to show that the electors of Quebec are opposed to the construction of the railway from Montreal to Halifax via Sherbrooke. I do not hesitate to say that this Quebec line, although useful to the district of Quebec, may conflict with private interests, as it has been insinuated by some newspapers, but it will in no way conflict with the interests of other Provinces and of the Dominion at large. In order to prove my statement, I cannot do any better than to submit to the House the resolutions passed by the Quebec Board of Trade on the 20th of January, 1885, which resolutions have been sanctioned by the citizens of Quebec at a public meeting held on the 3rd of the following month of February. The resolutions set forth :

"That when the federation of the Provinces of British North America was resolved upon, the construction of a national highway entirely through Canadian territory was one of the conditions mutually agreed to ;

"That this great public work was undertaken with the view of binding solidly together the several Provinces composing the Dominion of Canada ;

"That in the pursuance of this agreement, the Intercolonial Railway has been constructed—and the Canadian Pacific Railway is being built, and to the north of Lake Superior ;

"That this policy will entail responsibilities on the people of the country ;

"That, in addition to her share in these, the Province of Quebec has assumed a further liability in the construction of the late Quebec, Montreal, Ottawa and Occidental Railway, and the city of Quebec a still further one, in her subscription to the North Shore Railway ;

"That the construction of the late provincial railway was undertaken on the understanding that it would form part of our national highway, and be the connecting line between the Canadian Pacific and Intercolonial Railways ;

"That this understanding was admitted during the late Session of Parliament, in the passing of an Act providing for the extension of the Canadian Pacific Railway down to the port of Quebec ;

"That, when the people of Canada consented to assume the responsibilities incident to the creation of this national highway, it was upon the solemn assurances, repeatedly given inside and outside of the halls of Parliament, that in the development of the trade of the country, the resultant thereof, and which would build up their sea ports, they would receive far more than commensurate returns ;

"That the diversion of the traffic of our national highway from Canada to American ports would leave the people of this country with these responsibilities, but without the equivalents promised ;

"That the result would prove disastrous in the extreme, and would seriously imperil the permanency of our present political system ;

"That the most effective way to prevent this diversion is by carrying the traffic of our national highway by the north of Quebec, the most eastern point where it is possible to bridge the St. Lawrence, by shortening the mileage to the seaboard, and by reducing freight rates to a minimum ;

"That towards the close of the late Session Parliament voted a grant in aid towards the construction of a line of railway from Montreal to Halifax—as the virtual extension of the Canadian Pacific Railway to the Atlantic seaboard ;

"That several routes have been advocated for this projected line—among others :

"1st. Montreal via Quebec—River du Loup and Edmundston.

"2nd. Montreal via Quebec and Hartland.

"3rd. Montreal via Sherbrooke and Canterbury.

"That routes Nos. 2 and 3 pass through the State of Maine, and No. 1 entirely through Canadian territory ;

"That during the passage of the resolutions through Parliament the Government pledged themselves to a thorough study of the country and complete instrumental surveys of all the routes advocated previous to any action being taken in the selection of route ;

"That it would appear that this thorough study and these complete instrumental surveys have not as yet been fully made ;

"That the construction of this projected line of railway from Montreal to Halifax, through foreign territory, would be the virtual abandonment of the compact entered into at Confederation.

"That its construction, via the south shore would lead :—

"1st. To the bridging of the St. Lawrence at Lachine.

"2nd. To the almost inevitable diversion of the traffic of the country through this bridge to the American Atlantic sea ports, "3rd. To a breach of faith with the Province and city of Quebec.

"4th. To the final isolation of the cities of Three Rivers, Quebec, St. John and Halifax, and of almost the three-fourths of the Provinces of Quebec, New Brunswick and Nova Scotia from our national highway, and to their deprivation of all practical participation in the benefits to flow therefrom ;

"That the good faith and the welfare of the people of this country are intimately bound up in :—

"1st. The loyal and firm adherence to the policy mutually agreed upon at Confederation.

"2nd. The immediate extension of the Canadian Pacific Railway down to the port of Quebec, as decreed last Session.

"3rd. The bridging of the St. Lawrence at Quebec to connect the Canadian Pacific to the Intercolonial.

"4th. The construction of the link from River du Loup to Edmundston, and any other line which may be found necessary, to shorten the mileage to the Atlantic seaboard.

"5th. The refusal to sanction the bridging of the St. Lawrence at Lachine as a standing menace to our sea ports ;

"6th. And, likewise, the expenditure of the funds of Canada in the construction of any line of railway through foreign territory."

We ask for the extension to Quebec, but we want a real extension. We do not merely ask a running arrangement on the North Shore Railway, but the real terminus at Quebec, and besides a connection with the Intercolonial by the construction of a bridge near Quebec, this bridge to be used as an outlet for our colonisation roads. We ask for the terminus and we have a right to it because it has been promised to us, and because it is due to us as a compensation for the sacrifices of money which we have made towards the construction of the North Shore Railway and the Intercolonial and for the improvement of the Quebec Harbour. We are entitled to it because Quebec, owing to its geographical position, its vast seaport, and its proximity to the Atlantic, offers as a terminal port, advantages against which no other city can compete. On the other hand, it would be preposterous to prefer even a line which would be shorter by a 100 miles, if that line must pass through American territory, especially if we take into account the fact that by building a bridge at Quebec we can utilise a road already constructed, which has cost $43,000,000, and which was built wholly on our own territory. I repeat what I said a moment ago. We ask for the terminus because we are entitled to it, because it was promised to us. If the thing is impossible to-day, it was equally so last year, and then why did the Government make such a promise? Why were we given to understand that the City of Quebec would not see its hopes frustrated? Why did the Government give us to understand that Quebec, and consequently the surrounding country would have the benefit of a connection between the Pacific and the Intercolonial by means of a bridge built at Quebec? I ask it also from those who are now occupying the Treasury benches. I believe, Mr. Speaker, that when the day—I will not say the day of retribution—but when the day of election shall come, when the hon. gentlemen now supporting the Government will be called upon by their electors to give an account of their conduct in the House, when they will be charged with neglecting the best interests of their Province, I believe that more than one among them will regret the vote they have given on that occasion. This is a matter of capital interest to us. If we have not the terminus of the Canadian Pacific Railway at Quebec, we may expect that the city of Quebec will diminish in importance. I hope, Mr. Speaker, that the Government will alter the decision which they seem to have taken, and that they will give justice to the Province of Quebec as they have so often boasted of giving justice to British Columbia. For the reasons I have just stated I shall vote for the motion of the hon. member for East Quebec.

Mr. CASGRAIN. I did not intend to speak on this subject, and I only rise, because none of the members for the Province of Quebec on the other side of the House appear disposed to take any part in the discussion. The motion before the House asks for delay. What is the object of delay? At the very beginning of the Session, on the second or third day after it opened, I asked, in this House, for these very papers. Now, we have been here nearly a month, and why are these papers not before the House? Does it require such a long time to get two or three reports upon the surveys which have been made? I know that the report of Mr. Wicksteed, at any rate, has been before the Ministers since before the Session; that I can aver. Now, what is to be gained by a little delay in this matter? Shall I say it openly? It is a matter of $170,000 a year for a company. And who is to get the money? And who is to get the benefit of that money during the election? That is the long and short of it. Will it go to Sherbrooke? Will it help my hon. friend there, who is at present laughing at my words? He will laugh in his sleeve if he can get the money. Let us speak plainly—it is a matter of dollars and cents among the Ministers. Well, the Province of Quebec wishes that Quebec should have its fair proportion of money spent for a few years—for what? To go to the North-West Territories? But Quebec does not expect much from the members who represent the Province of Quebec on the other side. They are ready, as they did last year, to submit to the dictates of the Ministry, and they are going to do it: à quat' pattes les Canayens, I say, and we are going to see it again to-day. I did not want to say one word on this matter; only I looked around to see if there was any member on the other side of the House from the Province of Quebec who was ready to rise up and speak, but I did not see one. Is this not the most important measure for that Province that has ever come up? They are going to submit like shorn lambs to the dictation of the Minister of Public Works, and we are going to have this put off till to-morrow—"old to-morrow" again. I am now speaking on the motion to adjourn the debate, and I reserve to myself the right to speak on the main motion hereafter; and I object in toto to any delay in order to enable the Government to have their little lobbying. It is just as well to see whether this Parliament is going to have its say in this matter or not, and whether the voice of the people of the Province of Quebec is going to be heard. That is all I wanted to say.

Mr. BLAKE. I wish to explain why I consider it impossible, for my part, to assent to my hon. friend's motion that this debate be adjourned. I should be extremely sorry to ask the House to come to a decision on any question, in the absence of information that was essential or important to reach a correct decision. My hon. friend beside me (Mr. Laurier) would equally regret to take such a course; but the hon. Minister of Public Works has, in the few words he said, misconceived the nature of this question. His usual perceptive powers and quickness of apprehension have deserted him on this occasion. I think the motion has been since the 4th of the month on the Order paper, and although he has had daily opportunities of scanning it he has not correctly apprehended what the motion is; and it is entirely because the hon. gentleman has entirely misconceived it—I see he is surprised—he can hardly conceal his light at this moment—that I hope to convince himself and his supporters of the impropriety of the step they are about to take. What is our present position with regard to this question? It is that there is a law upon the Statute Book leaving the selection of the route for which this public money has been appropriated absolutely and finally to the Governor in Council. That is the condition of things as it stands to-day; and as long as that condition of things exists, absolutely and irrevocably the Governor in Council can decide this question. What is the proposition of my hon. friend. It is to affirm that that selection by the Governor in Council should not be final, but should be subject to the approbation of this Parliament, so that we may have an opportunity of considering the proposition of the Government, as to the route for which our money is to be paid and of deciding whether the choice which they shall ask us to agree to is a sound choice or not. If my hon. friend had proposed a motion which should indicate in any way, however inferentially or vaguely, what the route should be, he would be premature, because in order to form a judgment upon that subject we want the plans and reports. If he were to propose such a motion in the present state of the affair, he would, in my view, engage in a constitutional error also; because my belief is, that there is a reasonable partition of the Executive and of the legislative function in this transaction. My belief is that constitutionally it is the function of the Executive to obtain the necessary information to make its proposal for the expenditure of public money to Parliament, including, in that proposal, those communications as to the route which are necessary in order to enable Parliament to judge of the wisdom of the proposal as a whole. We propose to you to expend so much public money, and we propose to expend it for such an object in such a direction; there is our policy. We ask of you to accept it, or reject it, or modify it. That I believe to be sound constitutional doctrine. We affirmed it, as well as we could, from this side of the House, when the choice of the Intercolonial was the question; we endeavored to have it affirmed by the House last Session when the choice of the short line route was the question. In each case the Government declared that our view of constitutional law and parliamentary right was wrong; they declared that it was for the Executive to choose and to choose absolutely, finally, and irrevocably to settle the question. They procured the assent of Parliament in both cases to that view. Upon the Statute Book to-day is a law which cedes to them absolutely, finally, and irrevocably, the choice of this route. Now my hon. friend's object is simply to affirm that, at any rate, in this case, with reference to this transaction, the choice of the Government is not to be final; it is to affirm that whatever their view may be, after having obtained all the information necessary to a sound view, they shall submit their view to us and that we shall judge whether it is such a one that the public interest would allow us to sanction or not. Now, for that purpose it is not necessary to have the plans, it is not necessary to have the engineer's reports. These will be necessary when we come to consider what the proposal may be; these will be necessary when we will have to form a judgment whether their proposal as to a route is right or wrong; but they are by no means necessary in order to come to a conclusion whether we will wrest from the Administration of the day the power which they unconstitutionally asked us to give and we unconstitutionally gave them during last Session, and whether we should re-affirm our right, to a cogent and an effective voice in the choice of the route. I mentioned this subject in the debate on the Address. I sought to obtain from the hon. gentleman opposite an indication that they were prepared to surrender to this Parliament its fair share of power in this transaction. The hon. gentleman would not answer me; it was amongst the things not worth answering; he passed it by. My hon. friend put his notice on the paper. The hon. gentleman (Sir Hector Langevin) says: Delay; it is delayed at his request, for a considerable time. He says: Delay until the plans are brought down. They are not brought down. My hon. friend brings forward his motion. The hon. gentleman again says he wants the plans first brought down. My hon. friend persists, and persists rightly, in saying that the plans are not at all essential to the decision of his motion. The hon. the Minister, without a word of argument on this question, says: I move the adjournment, because I am not going to answer these discussions as to rights, and so forth; to what purpose are these discussions of rights, and so forth, just now? They are for one purpose—an important purpose; they are to show that the question is one of such great importance, one involving interests constitutional, interests national, interests provincial, of such great magnitude that Parliament ought to re-assume what it unfortunately surrendered last Session. That is the only purpose of this motion. The question is one of great pith and moment; it is one of great importance; it is one of great complexity. So much has been demonstrated by the speeches of my hon. friends near me; so much will not be denied by hon. gentlemen opposite; and it is a voice in the discussion of a question of that importance which we seek to restore to Parliament. If the hon. gentleman would say, across the House, that Parliament is to have a voice in the decision of the question, my hon. friend's (Mr. Laurier) object would be accomplished. That is all he asks. But the hon. gentlemen will not say so; they will not give us that indication; they may give it, perhaps, to a choice selection of their friends and supporters in some private party, and it may be mentioned in the newspapers, but this House of Commons is not to be told it. The hon. Minister, whom the hon. member for Portneuf (Mr. De St. Georges) calls the Minister of Militia and Expense, may, perhaps, procure from his chief and leader, in a private caucus of this description, some declaration or assurance; but that is not a declaration or assurance with which Parliament or the country can or ought to be satisfied. What we want is a declaration on this floor, in full Parliament, as to the intention of the Administration. Can it be that hon. gentlemen opposite are going to jump from one extreme to another? Can it be that, after having declined last Session to give us the right to determine whether their choice was good or ill, they are now proposing to abandon any power to choose themselves and to pitchfork the plans and profiles and reports upon the Table, and say: There is a scramble for you; let the House of Commons decide the question now; we will not? Is that the plan at present? Is it from absolute, exclusive executive action to an entire departure from all executive action they are about to bound? If it is, I can understand the hon. gentleman wanting to throw those papers on the Table and say: Here, gentlemen, choose for yourselves; quarrel among yourselves, decide among yourselves as you please. But if what he intends to do is, having obtained these papers, to consider of them, and having considered of them, to suggest what, in his opinion, the public requires, and having so decided, to bring down a conditional or provisional Order in Council, to propose his scheme in Parliament, on which Parliament shall judge—if that be his intention, we want no delay for this motion, which is only to secure to this House the power and voice that plan would give it. But the hon. gentleman will not assent to the motion being debated or decided. He says: I will hold this matter over until the plans come down. Are they to come down with the announcement that the route has been finally settled under an Act of Parliament? And are we to be told that we are to have the empty satisfaction of censuring the Government if they have done wrong, but that the route is chosen once and for all? Is the hon. gentleman going to act upon the power he insisted on taking last Session, or not? If he is, I can understand his wanting to get rid of this motion the easiest way. If he is not, then he confesses—no, Sir, he does not confess—an open confession would be good for his soul, but he is acting on the view that he was wrong then; he is acting upon the view that he was bound to concede something more to Parliament; he intends to concede it, but he does not choose to do it openly; he desires to postpone the motion until the papers come down, and to give us, in an indirect way, that repeal of the Act of Parliament which it is fair we should have openly, clearly and directly. My hon. friend asks for nothing for which the production of any paper is necessary, but he asks for the affirmance of the constitutional share of this House in the choice of the route for this work. That does not depend upon the plans, but upon the general principle, and it is the decision of that which hon. gentlemen opposite, without giving us the slightest assurance that they are going to yield our just rights, seek to evade or to adjourn.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. The hon. gentleman who has just spoken says that my hon. friend who sits near me, the Minister of Public Works, has evidently misapprehended the meaning and intention of the motion. If my hon. friend has misapprehended it, that is a very good reason why he should ask for the delay, until he has an opportunity of fully understanding what is the intention of the motion. But there is really no misapprehension in the matter at all, on the part of my hon. friend; or, if there is, it is shared with the three hon. gentlemen from the Province of Quebec who spoke before him. Although this motion is merely a motion to state that the decision of the line shall be subject to the approval of Parliament, the hon. gentleman who moved it feels that a debate on the whole subject is absolutely enforced by this motion. He entered into the whole subject; he discussed the whole subject; he spoke about the line; he spoke about the different lines; he spoke in favor of one line against another; he spoke about a line through the State of Maine; and so did the other two gentlemen, the hon. member for Megantic (Mr. Langolier) and the hon. member for Portneuf (Mr. De St. Georges). They all argued the case without having the plans before them, and my hon. friend and we all feel that, when this question comes up to be discussed, it must be discussed with these plans before the House. No matter what the form of the motion may be or what specious arguments may be used, and used by the leader of the Opposition, yet those three gentlemen feel that this question is up on this motion. That being so, we insist and we call upon our friends to sustain us in this.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Hear, hear.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. Hon. gentlemen say, "hear, hear." Yes, we call upon our friends, and we would have a right to call upon our friends, to vote against the motion altogether, on the arguments which have been used by the hon. gentlemen opposite. In the first place, the leader of the Opposition says that this House acted unconstitutionally last Session, and calls upon them to reverse their unconstitutional conduct.

Mr. BLAKE. Hear, hear.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. Does the hon. gentleman expect that the majority of this House, who gave a solemn vote last Session, are going to eat their own words, simply because these gentlemen get up? Does he expect they will do so?

Mr. CASGRAIN. No, no.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. Then if the hon. gentleman does not expect it, very well. Then there would be another reason why the Government might call upon this House to vote against this resolution altogether, because, according to the language of the hon. member for Megantic (Mr. Langolier), and according to that of the hon. gentleman from L'Islet (Mr. Casgrain), this is a vote of want of confidence, a direct vote of want of confidence in the Government. What said the hon. member for Megantic? If this is left to the Government, if the interests of Quebec are confided to the Government, to a Government having the confidence of the majority of this House, they will betray the interests of Quebec. There was a distinct statement by that hon. gentleman that this was a vote of want of confidence. The member for L'Islet went further. He is behind the scenes, and knows all about it. He said $170,000 was to be paid by the Government and was to be handed over, to be used in the next general election. If we treated those arguments as serious, and declared this a vote of want of confidence, the Government would be quite satisfied to call upon their friends to declare that they have confidence in them and to vote against the resolution. But the request of my hon. friend, the hon. the Minister of Public Works, is a reasonable one. It is simply this, that as this question is of the very greatest moment, as it is one of the very greatest importance, it is well that the whole of the papers should be down before this House, and that Parliament should then judge whether this motion is to be received or not. After the papers and the plans, and the reports are down, when every man has been fully charged with a knowledge of the whole subject, then every man can declare how he will vote, whether he thinks Parliament should vote on this question at all or that it should be left in the hands of the Government. There is no reason why this motion should be pressed now. I was going to say it was a little bit of open tactic, very pardonable, very allowable—perhaps if I were in the hon. gentleman's position, I might take the same course—but it is simply a little bit of open tactic at this moment. There will be no harm in delay; the papers will be brought down, and then we can have the full discussion on the matter; but, in the meantime, I hope the House will not be dragged prematurely into the discussion, but will support the motion of my hon. friend.

Mr. MILLS. The motion which my hon. friend (Mr Laurier) has submitted, is not a question of the route which should be adopted. If the Government had made the choice, and Parliament were called upon to say whether that choice was wise or unwise, then Parliament would require to have the plans, in order to know which route should be chosen. But that is not the position of the House on this question at all. We are in precisely the same position now as we were when this Bill was originally submitted. When it was submitted it was not thought necessary that any choice should be made nor that the Government should indicate any particular line, but the question was then, as it is now, whether the Government should have the power of choosing absolutely the line of railway, and whether Parliament should be bound by that choice or not. If the law stands as it is now and the Government make a choice, that finally disposes of the question, then all the House could do would be to censure the Government for making an improper choice. What my hon. friend proposes is, that the House shall resume those functions which it abdicated when it gave its sanction to that particular Bill. It is for the hon. members of this House to say whether they are prepared to adhere to the principle in the Bill, of which my hon. friend complains by this motion, that the Government shall decide where the road shall be located and the public money spent. We desire that Parliament shall resume the power which properly belongs to the representatives of the people, and shall give to the Government the power of making the choice, of ascertaining the relative ease or difficulty with which particular lines may be constructed, but that the Government shall not have the power to make an absolute choice, which should ultimately remain with this House. The hon. the leader of the Government has said that this House is not going to recede from the position it took last year; that it is unreasonable to suppose that the views which hon. gentlemen formed when they gave the Government power, have changed since the Bill was carried. Why, Sir, I have seen Ministers themselves change their views with regard to matters of public policy, within two hours, and certainly we may reasonably suppose that the supporters of the Government may change theirs within twelve months. Sir, there is such a thing, in this country, as public opinion; public opinion has been appealed to on this question; the people have voluntarily expressed their views on it, over a very large section of the Dominion; they have indicated a view which is not consonant with the policy adopted by the Government, and they have indicated that they are not satisfied with the course taken by the Government. They are not willing that the Executive shall exert powers, or shall have conferred upon them by Parliament, powers which the people have entrusted to Parliament and which Parliament has no right to transfer to another body, however able they may be. Now, Sir, that being the case, I am prepared to vote against the proposition of the hon. Minister of Public Works for delay. I think the motion of my hon. friend is a reasonable one. I think Parliament should resume those powers which of right belong to it, and that it is not of the slightest consequence what the plans may be. It is not of the slightest consequence where it may be best to locate the route—we have nothing to do with that question. It is of no consequence to us whether the Government make a wise or unwise choice in the selection of a route; that is not a question which the House has to consider. The question which the House has to consider is this: Will it allow the Government to make choice of a line of railway and to determine where the road shall be located, without retaining to itself the power of review of that choice, and of determining whether the road is properly located by the Government or not. It seems to me, Sir, that there is no necessity for the papers. If this proposition had come before us for the first time, if the Government were now asking for, or assuming, these powers, it would not be necessary to know where a road could be located—it would not be necessary to know the different lines of projected railway. These would not be of the slightest consequence. But what is of consequence is, that Parliament shall retain those powers which have been entrusted to it by the people, and that it shall not delegate those powers to the Administration of the day. It has delegated those powers, and my hon. friend, by his motion, asks Parliament to assume those powers which it improvidently transferred to the Government some time ago.

House divided on motion (Sir Hector Langevin) to adjourn the debate.

After Recess.

THE LATE JOHN MARTIN.

Mr. CURRAN moved for :

Copies of the petition of J. Hickson, Esq., and others, relative to the continuation of the pension of the late John Martin to his widow, and all papers in connection therewith.

He said: I make this motion, Mr. Speaker, for the purpose of bringing to the notice of the hon. Minister of Militia and his colleagues, as well as of this House, a case of very great hardship indeed, in the hope that something may be done toward alleviating the position of this unfortunate lady who, I think, deserves better treatment from the country than that which is now being meted out to her. The facts of the case are these: This old lady, Mrs. Martin, is now nearly eighty years of age. In 1866 her son, who was a private of the 7th Prince of Wales Regiment, was ordered to the front with his comrades, and while in the performance of his duty, contracted the disease from which he died. Subsequently, the Government allowed the amount of $110 per annum to his father as a pension. At the time of the death of this young man, his father and mother had another son, who, unfortunately, about two years afterwards, was killed by a railway accident. The old couple were then left entirely to their own resources, and during the lifetime of the father he was enabled, by his own labors and with the addition of this pension, to provide the necessaries of life for himself and wife. About two years ago the old man died, leaving his widow, on whose behalf I am making this motion, entirely without means of support, an object of public charity, and thrown upon the world for her subsistence. She has no relatives or friends upon whom she can make any claim for support; and in view of these facts, Mr. Hickson and a number of other prominent citizens of Montreal, who were acquainted with her circumstances, addressed a petition to the Department of Militia, requesting that the pension of $110, which had been allowed to the late Mr. Martin, might be continued to his widow. I also addressed a letter, in connection with my colleagues, to the Department, and we received the following answer, addressed to myself:—

"Sir,—With respect to the letter of Mr. Robert Hay, addressed to you and transmitted to this Department, enclosing a petition signed by Mr. Joseph Hickson and other gentlemen, praying for the continuance of the pension of Mr. John Martin, I have the honor to state that in the Order in Council of the 13th April, 1867, authorising the payment of the sum of $110 per annum to the father of Robert Martin, there is no mention that the pension is to be continued to any other member of the family. It therefore appears that there is no provision for continuing this pension to Mrs. Martin."

That, therefore, is the state of affairs. On different occasions I have listened to the eloquent remarks of the hon. Minister of Militia, with respect to the great valor of the Canadian people. I had occasion to listen to the magnificent orations he delivered some two years ago, on the consolidation of the Militia Acts, in which the hon. gentleman traced in glowing language the history of all the warlike movements of this country, from the earliest time down to the present day. I saw him unfurl the flag of Carillon and wave the banner of Chateauguay. As I listened with patriotic feelings to all those effusions, both here and elsewhere, I certainly felt proud to think that our fellow countrymen had on every occasion shown themselves worthy descendants of the warlike races from which we have sprung; and it would be difficult to picture, in language more eloquent than that of my hon. friend the Minister of Militia, the great deeds of our forefathers upon all occasions. Yet it strikes me that if we are to have a continuation of that spirit, if our young men are to shoulder the musket at the call of their country, it is very poor encouragement indeed that when an application of this kind is made by a poor old lady who has sacrificed her son in the country's cause, she should be told that all we can do is to allow her to sit on his tombstone and starve. For my part, I am quite satisfied that this communication from Colonel Panet is not the last which will be received in connection with this subject, and that the Minister will take the matter into his serious consideration, and that if necessary his colleagues and the Prime Minister, whose generosity of heart is so well known, will take the matter up, and this old lady will not be allowed, at eighty years, and after her son has sacrificed his life for the country, literally to starve or to beg from door to door, as she would be obliged to do if kind friends on whom she has no claim did not provide for her wants. I hope these few remarks will be sufficient to induce the Minister to look generously at this case of dire distress, and that the proper remedy will be applied, and the continuation of the pension to this poor woman ordered.

Mr. CARON. I must say that the hon. member has been very energetic in laying before the Department the claims of Mrs. Martin. The hon. gentleman appears in his proper role as a barrister, and comes forward to protect the widow, as, no doubt, if necessary, he would protect the orphan. This is one of those cases which are frequently brought before the Militia Department. Recognising, as I try to recognise, the claims of the militia force for services rendered to their country, I feel it is necessary that the claims should be confined to the statutory enactments, so far as they control the cases, and be kept within the Orders in Council which are passed, allowing pensions to be given to those who deserve them. The case, as laid before the House by my hon. friend, is certainly one which is deserving of all the sympathy that can be extended to Mrs. Martin in her bereavement and in the straitened circumstances in which she is placed. It must, however, be remembered that the pension was given to the father of young Martin, who died, and that now it is proposed to continue the pension to the widow. I am sure I would be very happy to do so, but this is not an isolated case. Time and again applications are made to the Department, and it would be impossible to meet the claims without considerably increasing the expense of the Department. I shall be very happy to bring down the papers which have been asked for, and in regard to the appeal made by my hon. friend to the well-known warm heart of the First Minister, I shall be very happy to consider with my colleagues this application.

Motion agreed to.

WEIGHT AND MEASUREMENT OF ROOTS.

Mr. McDONALD (Kings) moved for :

Copies of all correspondence, reports, &c., in connection with the weighing and measuring of potatoes and other roots, in the Province of Prince Edward Island.

He said: I would just say, in connection with the motion, that this is a matter of considerable importance to the people of Prince Edward Island, and also, I dare say, to the farming population of this country generally. I find, at the present time, that there is a good deal of discrepancy as to the way in which potatoes and other roots are bought and sold. In some parts of Prince Edward Island a barrel, holding about two and a-half bushels, is generally used, while in other parts of the Province a measure holding about two bushels is used. Altogether, there is a good deal of dissatisfaction amongst our farmers as to these differences, and they lead to a great deal of annoyance. I may say that the farmers generally, who take the greatest interest in the matter, speak, as a rule, in favor of weighing potatoes and other roots. I do not know that it makes a great deal of difference to the other parties, because, whether they are weighed or measured, the price will be regulated accordingly; but in some portions of the Dominion I find that they are taken by weight, and in others by a bag containing about one and a-half bushels, while in other places again they are sold by a two bushel measure, which, however, I do not think is a standard or sealed measure. Altogether, I think there should be some greater uniformity with respect to the buying of roots. I am given to understand that in the United States weighing is generally resorted to in buying potatoes and other roots, though measurement is resorted to in buying them at first hand. There has been a great deal of talk among our farming population with respect to this matter, and some of them are under the impression that they are unfairly dealt with, with respect to measurement; but I think that is rather a mistake. There is no doubt that whatever the measure is, the price will be regulated in accordance with it. However, it is absolutely necessary, in the interests of the whole country, that a uniformity of measure should be used, and I think it would be well that the matter should be finally settled by the Department under whose charge it comes, and that a uniform system should be introduced.

Motion agreed to.

IMMIGRATION PRINTING AND ADVERTISING.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT moved:

That the several items of charges for printing, advertising, payments for books or pamphlets, by the Department of Agriculture and Immigration, for the years 1878 to 1883, both inclusive, be referred to the committee on Public Accounts.

Motion agreed to.

PROTECTION OF FORESTS.

Mr. COCKBURN moved for:

Copy of J. H. Morgan's report upon the subject of protecting the present forests of the Dominion and of forest tree planting upon an extensive scale.

He said: If value has been received for such service as purports to have been given to the country in this matter, the money will have been well spent. I cannot say, however, without seeing the original report, what has been done, because the summary report does not indicate what parts of the country have been visited, or what sort of trees are proposed to be planted. I think the Government have taken a very proper step in enquiring into the subject of forestry and the prevention of bush fires. It is most disheartening to see extensive territories, where magnificent pines have been burned, and if anything can be done to stop this destruction of our forests, it will be a great public benefit. As a similar motion has been already made by another hon. member, I would ask leave to withdraw this one.

Motion withdrawn.

TRENT VALLEY CANAL.

Mr. COCKBURN moved for:

Copies of all correspondence relative to the proposal to have the waters of the Muskoka lakes connected with the proposed Trent Valley Canal.

Mr. McDONALD (Kings).

system by the construction of a short canal from Gravenhurst Bay to the waters of the Severn River.

Mr. POPE. I have no objection to this motion. All the correspondence that I know of has been with the hon. gentleman himself, and I shall be very happy to send it back to him.

Motion agreed to.

MESSAGE FROM HIS EXCELLENCY.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD presented a message from His Excellency the Governor-General.

Mr. SPEAKER read the Message, as follows:—

LANSDOWNE.

The Governor General transmits to the House of Commons two approved Minutes in Council, dated respectively the 20th May, 1884, and the 23rd January, 1885, regarding the terms of the provisional settlement of the claims of the Province of Manitoba.

GOVERNMENT HOUSE,

OTTAWA, 23rd February, 1885.

INTERCOLONIAL RAILWAY.

Mr. BLAKE moved for:

Comparative statement of the costs of working the Intercolonial Railway for each of the years 1879, 1880, 1881, 1882, 1883 and 1884, giving for each year the cost for locomotive power under the seven (?) sub-headings given in the Minister's Report, Appendix, page 37; for car expenses under the seven (7) sub-headings given in the same report, same page; for maintenance, way, and works, under the ten (10) sub-headings given in the same report, page 38; for station expenses under the three (3) sub-headings given in the same report, same page; and for general charges under the seven (7) sub-headings given in the same report, page 39.

He said: I see the hon. gentleman has made some improvements in the classification of the various items in the Intercolonial Railway accounts.

Mr. POPE. I am a live reformer.

Mr. BLAKE. You may be a reformer, but you do not look alive. The hon. gentleman has made some improvements in these classifications, but it is necessary that we should have statements for the several years, so that we may be able to compare the cost of one year with another, in the different branches. I am the more induced to come to that conclusion by recent little investigations into the sub-divisions in the Minister's own report, and the Chief Engineer's report, which I was induced to make on reading some paragraphs in these reports with reference to the expenses of the last fiscal year. The hon. Minister reports:

"The expenditure of the year has received an exceptional increase, owing to the fact that the general offices at Moncton, destroyed by fire in February, 1883, have been rebuilt. The cost, up to the end of the fiscal year, was $83,098.25. This has been charged to the working expenses of the road.

The chief engineer and general manager reports:

"Although the net earnings for the year ($9,068.17) are less than those of the preceding year by $1,479.66, it has been only by the most careful watchfulness on the part of the officers of the railway that a result even so favorable has been secured. The working expenses having been debited with the sum of $83,098.25, expended during the year in rebuilding the Moncton offices, destroyed by fire in February, 1883, every effort had to be made to give effect to the policy of economy laid down by the Honorable Minister."

And the other day, in bringing down a return with reference to the Intercolonial Railway, the hon. gentleman alluded again to these Moncton offices—their heavy draft on the resources of the railway, and so forth. I have looked into an analysis of the work on the Intercolonial Railway for the past year, and having regard to the fact that the receipts were unfavorable as compared with the previous year, and that the mileage, &c., is almost the same—the engine mileage being the same, within a very few miles, and the train mileage also, taking into account the number of miles—as the previous year, I am not able to agree in the view of the hon. gentleman that very great economy has been established in reference to the working expenses of the road, or that the expenditure upon the Moncton offices is, in its general result, to be attributed, as he has done, so as to produce an exceptional expenditure. The accounts show, for the years 1883 and 1884, the following expenses:—Locomotive power for the year 1883, $767,000; for the year 1884, $757,000, a decrease of $10,000 in 1884; Car expenses, 1883, $508,100; 1884, $531,200, an increase of $23,100 in 1884. Station expenses, 1883, $313,400; 1884, $325,800, an increase of $12,400. General charges, 1883, $167,900; 1884, $171,700, an increase of $3,800—or a net increase on these four headings of $29,400 for the year 1884 over 1883. Maintenance of way and works, 1884, $560,800; in 1883, $532,600, a decrease, in 1884, of $21,800. This shows that notwithstanding the decrease in earnings, there has been an increase in the working expenses, in all the items except maintenance, of no less than $29,400 for the year 1884; while in maintenance account there is a decrease of $21,800 or 3.88 per cent. Making all due allowances for stringent economy in the maintenance of the road, it is evident that unless there was great extravagance in the management of maintenance account in 1883, you have been starving this branch during the past fiscal year. This is not economy, but simply a postponement of repairs which will necessitate consequently, a much larger amount of repairs and a much greater expense to be made the following year. The following are the details of maintenance account:—Wages and repairing, 1883, $297,300; 1884, $280,100, or a decrease, in 1884, $17,200. Rails and fastenings, 1883, $47,800; 1884, $18,700, or a decrease of $29,100. Sleepers, 1883, $64,500; 1884, $46,900, or a decrease $17,600. Timber, lumber, &c., 1883, $39,100; 1884, $38,700, a decrease of $400. Wharves, 1883, $11,700; 1884, $5,600, a decrease of $5,100. Snow ploughs, 1883, $12,500; 1884, $15,700, an increase of $3,200. Miscellaneous, 1883, $2,800; 1884, $2,300, a decrease of $500. Chiefs salaries, &c., 1883, $5,200, 1884, $3,800, a decrease of $1,400—making, on these several particular heads, an expense in the year 1883, of $480,900, as against $412,800 in 1884, or a decrease of $68,100, or 16.49 per cent. There are, however, two increases, apart from the question of snow ploughs, one the expense of clearing away ice and snow, which, of course, was a work the House could not defer, and the other, repairs to buildings, platforms, &c. Clearing away ice and snow in 1883 cost $33,900, and in 1884 $41,600, or an increase of $7,700; and repairs to buildings, platforms, &c., in 1883 cost $67,500, and in 1884 $105,900. This last item embraces the exceptional one of the Moncton offices, $63,000, so that notwithstanding that exceptional item, the total increase over the expenses of the year previous, on this item of repairs to buildings, platforms, &c., was only $38,400. Omitting, therefore, the exceptional expenses at Moncton, of $63,000, we have in the expenditure, on repairs to buildings, a deficiency of $29,100. Thus, the deficiency in all the branches of maintenance, except clearing away ice and snow—leaving out the Moncton offices—is $97,200, or over 20 per cent.; showing that the maintenance of way and works must have been kept at starvation point during the past year, although, having regard to the time of running, and so forth, this account should rather tend to increase than diminish year by year, unless there was an altogether exceptional expense in 1883, and the fact that there has been so very large a diminution in the expenditure for the last year in the maintenance of way and works from the preceding year is, to my mind, an indication that the hon. gentleman has been trying, I will not say to force a balance, but to create a favorable balance between working expenses and revenue, by postponing unduly the expenditure for the maintenance of way and works. This will be further elucidated by the return I ask for; because, if you have a comparative statement from year to year for a series of years, it will be easier to ascertain the normal expenditure for way and works in each of the Departments for each year.

Mr. POPE. I will only say to the hon. gentleman that he is mistaken thus far. The road was never in a better condition than it is now, and was never better maintained than it has been this year. I am obliged to the hon. gentleman for endorsing what I said the other day, that there have been extraordinary charges to account for the increase, but the hon. gentleman and any other man who has anything at all to do with running a railway, must know that the earnings depend very much on the kind of freight carried over the road. We have carried as much freight and a larger quantity of freight, but there is a class of freight which has gone largely into the operations of this year which pays us very little indeed, and that accounts partly for the change. As to the engines, although the hon. gentleman says there is about the same locomotive power, those engines have run over a considerably longer piece of road, and so have the cars.

Mr. BLAKE. They have run about the same number of miles—1,457 more miles this year than the year before, out of some millions.

Mr. POPE. I have no objection to the motion, but I shall ask the hon. gentleman to amend it by beginning at the year 1873. You will have no objection to that? I also ask him to add after "1884," "and the mileage operated this year," which the hon. gentleman must get, in order to get anything like an exhibit such as he asks.

Mr. BLAKE. I have no objection at all to the miles operated each year being added, but, as to the date, I could not take the responsibility of asking the House to order a return for a period such as the hon. gentleman speaks of, before the road was in operation. He must move that himself.

Mr. POPE. Then I will move in amendment:

To insert after the words "for each of the years" in the said motion, the words "1874, 1875, 1876, 1877, 1878," and after the words "1884," to insert the words "and the number of miles operated in each year."

Mr. BLAKE. You are beginning before the road began. That is the advantage of having an Acting Minister of Railways.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. The road was commenced in 1867.

Mr. POPE. Make the return from 1874.

Mr. CASGRAIN. Perhaps the Acting Minister will read the motion in French. I did not catch the amendment.

Mr. LANGELIER. Whilst the motion is being written by the Minister of Railways, I would call the attention of the Government to a very serious grievance which was brought under my notice last summer, in reference to the running of the Intercolonial Railway. A gentleman who was a friend of the Government told me that coal was actually being carried from Pictou to Quebec at $16 a car, which he thought could not pay the running expenses. Thinking it would be possible for him to get rates in proportion, or, at all events, near those rates, and being desirous of carrying lumber from River Ouelle to Quebec, he tried to get something like the same rates but could never get a satisfactory arrangement. This is a serious matter, for he told me, and several friends of the Government at the same time, that he had been trying to open a new industry, which would have given employment to several hundreds of men, perhaps, but he could not get satisfactory rates. The same complaint has been made in my hearing at public meetings in reference to carrying flour. I am told that it costs less to carry flour from Toronto to Halifax than from Toronto to Quebec. I know some lumbermen who are lumbering in the lower part of the Province of Quebec, who consider it an advantage to have their flour carried to Halifax and brought back again by the Intercolonial Railway into the Province of Quebec. This has been told me by those gentlemen themselves, and I have no doubt it is correct, from the character of the gentlemen.

Mr. POPE. Lumber is quite different from coal. It is a different class of goods and is carried at different rates.

Motion, as amended, agreed to.

CANADIAN PACIFIC RAILWAY—WORK ON THE FRASER.

Mr. BLAKE moved for:

Reports, plans and other information in the possession of the Department, in reference to the work on the Canadian Pacific Railway at or near Maple, a short distance above Hammond, on the bank of the Fraser, B.C.; for all reports and information in the possession of the Department, as to the condition of the work of the Government sections of the Canadian Pacific Railway in British Columbia, and as to the extent of work remaining to be done before the completion of the contract; also, for all correspondence with the Canadian Pacific Railway Company as to the taking over by them of these sections of the railway; also, for a statement of the names, salaries and period of service in that region, of the Government engineers who have been employed on the Government sections in British Columbia of the Canadian Pacific Railway, with dates at which any of them were relieved, a statement of the cause of their removal, and of their present occupation, if any, under the Government.

He said: I have been informed that at the point which I mentioned, Maple Ridge (which is Maple in the motion), which is a short distance above Hammond, a serious error has been committed with reference to the location of the line on the bank of the Fraser; that at that point there are lofty clay banks on a quicksand bottom; that a few years ago a land slide occurred at that very point, in which thirty or forty acres slid into the Fraser, changing its course; that on the opposite side of the river a farmer who was working in the field was caught by the water, hurled against a tree and killed. Slides are still occurring at this point, and in the neighborhood where the curvatures are short and sharp, and it has been found necessary to keep Chinamen employed to avoid accidents and loss of life. This statement is given to me with reference to that locality, and it is the justification which I have for asking the House to adopt this motion. Then I have received statements as to the condition of the work on the Government sections of the Canadian Pacific Railway in British Columbia, and as to the extent of work remaining to be done for the completion of the contract, which is now, according to the date, very soon due, and which seems to call for attention. The statement made is that the works are in a condition which renders it impossible that they can be so completed as really to satisfy the exigency of the contract with the contractor, or to satisfy the spirit or exigency of the contract with the Canadian Pacific Railway Company. What I am anxious to avoid is that the work should be taken off the hands of the contractor in such a condition that it will be accepted by the Canadian Pacific Railway Company without reclamations upon the Government of the country for further expenditure to put it in proper condition. I think it important that we should understand that such communication is being had between the Government and the company with reference to this work that the condition which the Government accepts as satisfactory is going to be accepted as satisfactory by the company as well, so that when the Government takes the work off the contractor's hands the railway company shall take it off the hands of the Government, without making such demands as are being made in another section and, I believe, much greater demands, unless proper care is used. It is said that a great deal remains to be done, and it is said that a very great amount of reduction has taken place in the staff of Government engineers on that section, due, as I understand, to the fact that the work is so nearly complete that there is no work for them to do.

Mr. LANCELIER.

That is a very judicious and proper step, if the facts are so; but it is, as I have said, extremely important that there should be such an efficient oversight of the work in these final stages that there will be no difficulty on the part of the country with reference to the acceptance by the railway company of the work when completed. These are the subjects which are exposed in this notice.

Mr. POPE. The engineers always expressed themselves very well satisfied with the work done. The chief engineer has passed over it every year, and, of course, he will pass over it again. We have engineers there sufficient to look after the work. There is no objection whatever to the adoption of the motion.

Motion agreed to.

OCEAN MAIL SERVICE.

Mr. BLAKE moved for:

Statement in detail of the annual cost in connection with the ocean mail service, for salaries, allowances of mail clerks and conductors, or railway post office clerks in charge of the British mails; also, for all correspondence as to the landing of the post office bags containing the British mails outward bound from Canada at Derry, and the saving or loss of time effected thereby.

He said: I have from time to time called the attention of the Government to the propriety of considering the desirability of reorganising that portion of the ocean mail service which involves the maintenance of the system of having railway postal clerks in charge of the mails on the steamers. We are, I believe, the only country of those interested in the trans-Atlantic mail service which keeps up this system. The great correspondence which takes place between Britain and the United States is handled at the terminal points. There is no provision whatever for the sorting of the mails on the voyage. The arrangements which are made are such that the sorting takes place very expeditiously at the end of the voyage in each case. The expenditure which we still encounter in regard to the transport of the mails to Britain is very large, under the contract, and there is added to it the cost of a service which, as I have said, has been dispensed with a very long time by the other countries. It does not commend itself to me as a wise expenditure of money. We are actually doing work which should be done at the end of the transit and not during the transit. I can hardly conceive, if this system is necessary in order that the mail matter may be expeditiously handled, that the two countries in the world which are most interested in rapid communication by mail, and which have, I suppose, the largest correspondence, Great Britain and the United States, should find it unnecessary to adopt the system. The other branch of the motion is with respect to the landing of the post office bags containing the British mails outward bound from Canada at Derry. It has been represented to me by business men who have crossed the water to buy goods that it happens much more often than not that they reach a point, say, Manchester, twenty-four hours in advance of the mails which have been landed at Derry, with a view to their reaching Manchester more quickly. The passengers stick to the steamer, and they arrive at Manchester frequently twenty-four hours before the mail arrives. That has been represented to me by a gentleman of the utmost respectability, to whom that incident has happened more than once, and he tells me that it is somewhat common. Such an arrangement should be made with the captain of the steamer that, on his arrival at Lough Foyle, he should be able to judge whether a saving of time would be effected by landing the mails. I do not mean to say there should be a special train. I believe there is not. I believe it depends on the regular train from Derry. That makes it easier for the captain to judge, considering the departure of the train, whether he could catch the mails or not, and how soon, in the ordinary course of rail-and steam, the mails would reach their destination. But, however it may be, it seems an extraordinary thing that this effort to make more expeditious transport of the mails should end so frequently, as I am told it does, in the very reverse.

Motion agreed to.

SQUATTERS IN THE QU'APPELLE VALLEY.

Mr. LISTER moved for:

Return of copies of all correspondence between Mr. Taylor, M.P. for South Leeds, and Mr. Wood, M.P. for Brockville, or either of them, and the Government, respecting the claim for compensation of William McLeod, J. D. Jewitt, S. M. Stiles, John Stevenson and R. R. Coleman, or any of them, squatters in the Qu'Appelle Valley, together with copy of all reports made by the said Taylor or Wood, and either of them, respecting the said claims. Also, all correspondence between Mr. Gordon, Dominion land agent, Calgary, and the Government, and all reports made by said Gordon to the Government, respecting said claims, or any of them; also, copy of any award made in regard to said claims, or any of them.

He said: in connection with this matter I may say that I have no personal knowledge whatever of the subject matter of the motion, and I shall content myself with making a statement just as I have received it. The parties mentioned in the motion, along with others, were squatters in the Qu'Appelle Valley, on property now owned by the Bell Farming Company. According to the statement given to me these squatters went upon the land prior to the time the Qu'Appelle Valley Farming Company became the proprietors; in other words, the rights of the squatters were better in law—so they believe—than the title of the Qu'Appelle Valley Farming Company. There was some difficulty about the squatters. The company were anxious to get them off, and the squatters having gone in and selected the lands as homesteads, were desirous of staying there. Whatever their right may have been, neither the Government nor the company undertook to enforce what they conceived to be their rights in law against these squatters. Some time during the Session of 1884 a person representing these squatters came to Ottawa and was given to understand that their claims would be settled justly and fairly. On that assurance he returned to the North-West, and during the following spring the gentlemen named in the resolution appeared on the scene in the Qu'Appelle Valley. They are, of course, warm supporters of hon. gentlemen opposite, and the statement made to me is, that they were authorised by the Government to effect a settlement of the claims of the settlers. I do not vouch for the correctness of that statement; I merely, as I stated before, give it as it was given to me. They were induced to enter into an arbitration suggested by these gentlemen, upon the distinct promise, as they say, that they would be permitted to take up other homesteads in other portions of the country, without doing any duties; that the full time that they would have to live upon the homestead would be allowed to them, and that a patent would be issued to them; further, that they would be allowed to pre-empt and would be given three years for the payment of their pre-emption. They say that on those representations they consented to the arbitration. An arbitration did take place, and I believe an award was made by Mr. Taylor, M. P. for Leeds, and Mr. Wood, M. P. for Brockville. That award, I believe, covers the points I have stated, namely, that they were to get their homesteads free, without having to live on the homestead, to be taken for for any length of time, and to have their pre-emption free; and they were also to be allowed certain damages, to which they were entitled, for improvements they had made on the place. Payment under that award was to be made at a fixed time; no payment was made. It is claimed by the settlers that the Government repudiated the arrangement made by the arbitrators, that they insist on these people having to live on the place some eight months, and on the usual and ordinary terms, so far as the pre-emption is concerned; and further, they complain that they have not been paid the amount awarded to them. Now, whether these gentlemen were representing the Government or not, I am not in a position to say. These people hold that they were doing so, or they would not have entered into the arbitration. They supposed they were sent there in compliance with a promise made to them in the preceding Session. At all events, the award was entered into, and they say it has not been carried out according to its terms. If such is the case, I think there is no doubt that these men have not been properly dealt with. I think that the Government, on the facts being represented, will be inclined to do to these men what is right. In the case of the pioneer settlers of this country I feel that neither this Government nor any Government is justified in doing anything which is not perfectly right, and if anything has been misrepresented—I do not pretend to say that these gentlemen did so—but if these settlers misunderstood the character in which these gentlemen went out to them, I think the Government should be prepared to give effect to the understanding of the settlers. I feel that nothing more is necessary than to bring the matter to the attention of the House and the Government, in order that these people may be justly, fairly, and equitably dealt with.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. There can be no objection to the motion, and the papers will be brought down. The House will then see from the papers exactly what took place. Neither of the gentlemen mentioned who acted as arbitrators acted as the officers of the Government, or at the request of the Government; they acted as arbitrators between the Qu'Appelle Farming Company and the squatters. Some of these men had no legal or equitable claim. They went out, believing that the company were going to have a large tract of land, and to see what they could make out of it—a very common trick in the North-West. They set up exorbitant claims, thinking that either the Government or the Qu'Appelle Company would pay them for their real or imaginary improvements. However, some of them put their cases or grievances into the hands of one of these gentlemen—the hon. member for Leeds. These two gentlemen went up there, one acting as arbitrator for the settlers, with their consent, and the other acting on behalf of the Qu'Appelle Company. They made an equitable award, I suppose, between the Qu'Appelle Company and the settlers. I have no doubt they have acted impartially, and have no reason to doubt that the award is satisfactory to most of the settlers. I believe there are only two or three of the whole of them who object, and they object because they were found not to have had either an equitable, a legal, or a moral right.

Mr. WOOD (Brockville). My name having been alluded to by the hon. member for Lambton (Mr. Lister), I feel called upon to offer a few words in explanation. Over a year since a gentleman named Johnson appeared in Ottawa, representing certain parties known as squatters in the Qu'Appelle Valley. At the same time, Major Bell, the manager of the Bell Farming Company, was also in Ottawa. Before that there had been disputes between certain squatters and the manager of the Bell Farming Company, it having been claimed by the squatters that they were in possession of the land there before the grant was made to the company, which statement was denied by the company. Neither party, as has been truly said, ever entered an action at law, on the one part to assert their right, or on the other, to eject the squatters from the soil. My hon. friend, Mr. Taylor, the member for South Leeds, had been acting for the squatters, three or four of them having come from the riding he represents. Major Bell, as many of you know, is an old Brockville man, and I acted in the capacity of his solicitor for some years. Well, it was proposed, either by the person acting for the squatters, or by the company, I forget which, that the questions in dispute between the company and the squatters should be referred to arbitration. At that time the squatters selected the hon. member for South Leeds, because he had taken a very active part in trying to get for them all the concessions from the company he could, and in laying before the Government their alleged rights. I having acted for Major Bell for some years, as I have stated, he very naturally asked me if I would act as arbitrator, in the event of their not agreeing upon the terms. I consented to do so, not supposing at the time that it would be necessary for us to visit the North-West in order to settle the differences in question. I supposed that the evidence which had been taken, I think by Mr. Stephenson, the colonisation agent there, would have been used, or that the squatters would have made declarations and sent them down here, and that in that way we should have been enabled to adjudicate upon their claims. However, it was found necessary that Mr. Taylor and myself should go up there, view the premises and the improvements these men had made, see personally for ourselves the ground of their complaints, and look into, as far as we could, the rights of each of the parties. Now, Mr. Speaker, I knew nothing of the Government whatever in this transaction. I had no communication, one way or the other, with the Government or with any official of the Government; and although it is the right of any hon. member of this House to move for returns, I question whether it is the right of any hon. member to even intimate, simply on the strength of a letter from a dissatisfied party to an award, that another hon. member of this House has been connected with the Government in a transaction of this kind or any other, because that is a very serious matter. I, as a lawyer, would be very poorly qualified to represent my position as such at the bar, if I did not know that that was coming very close to the line of a violation of the Independence of Parliament Act. I had no more to do with the Government in that transaction than I had with any individual outside of this House; and the same can be said of my hon. friend, Mr. Taylor. Now, Sir, I do not know that an award was ever yet made which was satisfactory to all the parties to that award. In this case, the reference was drawn by the solicitor acting for the squatters. We had nothing to do with that; and so far as our conduct as arbitrators is concerned, when we were in the Qu'Appelle Valley, I can only say that we worked as hard, I think, as we ever did before in our lives. We viewed all the improvements those men had made; and my hon. friend, as a practical man and a farmer, was very well fitted to look after their rights, while I, though acting on behalf of the Bell Farming Company, had no object in doing anything but what was right by the squatters. I have no hesitation in saying, as a lawyer, that I do not think they had even the shadow of a legal right. I do not say that in any spirit of bias against them, for I have nothing against them; but my assertion has been borne out by every lawyer who has looked into their claims; and I venture to assert that if the hon. member for Lambton (Mr. Lister) investigates them, he will find that, with one single exception, the case of a squatter named Thompson, these men had no claim to an inch of the ground on which they lived. But we did not enter into that arbitration on any such theory. We knew that some of these men, at all events, thought that they were right, and it was in that spirit that we entered upon our duties. So far as the award itself is concerned, I am satisfied that it is a liberal one. There were a few of the squatters who had no shadow of a right whatever. They merely came into the Qu'Appelle Valley, and finding a few squatters there who did think they had a right, they joined forces with them and were quite content to remain there as squatters, standing midway between Winnipeg and the Rocky Mountains, and by complaining of their alleged grievances, injured our country. Now, I do not regret that my hon. friend has brought up this question. So far as I am concerned, I am satisfied that every scrap of paper relating to our conduct in connection with it should be printed and laid before the public, then it will be found that the squatters on the Bell Farm have been fairly dealt with by the arbitrators.

Mr. LISTER. I desire to say to my hon. friend who has just spoken that I have no knowledge myself of the matters referred to in the motion. As I understand, it is the right of every man to have his grievances, or his supposed grievances, brought before the Government, and it is the duty of a representative to bring these matters before the House and the country. Now, the hon. gentleman has stated that he was not acting with the Government; that he had no communication with the Government or any official of the Government. I am bound to take his answer; but it is somewhat remarkable that the award these hon. gentlemen made provides that lands belonging to the Government shall be given to these squatters. If there was no authority for it, why was that a portion of the award? My hon. friend says it is not in good taste for me to refer to the position he occupied there. I cannot agree with him; I take issue with him on that point. While I do not charge him with having been guilty of any impropriety—I can scarcely believe he would be; I am bound to take his word for that—I say I have, at the same time, a perfect right to make this statement fully, fairly and frankly, as I think I have done.

Mr. WOOD (Brockville). If my hon. friend will allow me, I will mention now what I omitted to say when on my feet before. I never, to any one of these squatters, represented that we were acting for the Government. It never entered my mind to do so, because it would be quite contrary to the fact; and so far as the recommendation made by my hon. friend and myself with regard to these squatters, and the claim they should have to other lands, is concerned, we understood that the position the Government took was that if the squatters would settle their difficulties with the company and agree upon whatever damages the company should pay them, if any damages there were, the Government would allow them, upon other land they might take up, the time they had spent upon the land of this company. This was agreed, we understood, upon the principle that these men thought they were acting within the law, and this accounts for the fact that in the award that was made—a copy of which I have here—the suggestion was made by the arbitrators that the time these men had spent upon the Bell Farming Company's land should be allowed them. We had no interest in inserting that clause, but did so in order to assist the squatters, if we could. I may add, to show the good faith in which we acted, that it was only a few days ago this was mentioned to the hon. member for Lambton (Mr. Lister) by my hon. friend, and the hon. gentleman would not have known anything about it had he not learned it from my hon. friend.

SECTION B ARBITRATION.

Mr. CASEY moved for:

Copies of case submitted to the section B arbitrators by the Government and the contractors respectively; of the evidence taken before the arbitration, and of all the records of that arbitration not already brought down.

He said: The reason I think it desirable to get the copy of the case submitted by the Government, and that submitted by the contractors, is that in the agreement of submission, signed on behalf of the Government and the contractors, no particulars are mentioned, except in regard to one part of the claims, which I may briefly describe as coming under the head of re-measurement and re-classification of the work. All the claims for consequential damages arising out of the delay in the completion of section 15 and out of reduction in the amount of work to be done on section B itself, are contained in the two letters of the contractors, dated January, 1881, and 24th of February, 1883, which are included in the papers brought down last Session. I find that the agreement of submission signed by the Government and the contractors refers to several Orders in Council as authorising the submission; first, one dated 28th March, 1881; the second, the 2nd of April, of the same year not brought down; and finally one dated 9th July, 1883, closing the matter and providing for an immediate reference. All these Orders in Council speak in the vaguest possible terms of the claims at issue and laid before them. The claims are only defined in the two letters from the contractors:

"They commenced the work under our contract in the early part of the summer of 1879, but as the contract was awarded too late for us to get in our supplies in the winter of 1878 and 1879, we were unable to make much progress until the frost set in, in the month of November of the latter year, since which we have pushed on the work with vigor, not merely in the actual performance of the building of the road, but also in making preparations to complete the construction of it within the time limited by our contract, knowing, as we did, that time was of the essence of our contract, and that it was required of us that our contract should be completed by the time therein limited. We have had to contend with difficulties of no ordinary character, and the facilities for getting our supplies, machinery, carts and men required for the successful prosecution of the work, and which we had a right to rely on under the terms of our contract, viz., the use of the road being constructed under contract 15, which, although by the terms of the contract the Government were not bound to give access by the first day of July, 1879, they were bound to do, to quote from the specifications (Number 93), 'sometime thereafter,' which means, as we are advised, within a reasonable time thereafter, and which, even up to this time, is not yet fully completed, and it is only since September last that we were permitted in any way to avail ourselves of the use of that portion of the road."

These are the complaints of the contractors as set down in their letter of 7th January, 1881. This is the claim which Sir Charles Tupper told us he had always resisted, and in regard to which he did not believe the contractors had the ghost of a claim on account of delay, because the Government had not contracted to give them access over contract 15 at any specified time, and he had persistently refused to recognise this claim. I think it strange, therefore, that he should have allowed this part of the claim to go before the arbitrators. I doubt if it was submitted to them in definite terms. It appears to have been included in the award of two of the arbitrators, and dissented from by the Government's nominee. It is possible that the arbitrators may have granted damages on a claim which was not intended to be submitted to them. It is absolutely necessary to let us see the detailed case submitted by both parties to the arbitration. If the Government case contemplates the consideration of this claim by the arbitrators, I contend they were not only acting contrary to their duty, by submitting such absurd claims to arbitration at all, but were acting contrary to the repeated declaration of Sir Charles Tupper, that he had resisted, and would resist, the grant of any damages in connection with that claim. Then the contractors go on to point out that they have got a considerable quantity of plant, which turned out not to be necessary after the reductions in rock work which were made on the road. They specify derricks, and so on. They say they had made a great deal of road to get access to their contract, and that the expense on this road was so much money lying idle and unprofitable to them, on account of the delay referred to. This is another branch of the first claim, and if one is not allowable, the other should not have been allowed. They go on to make a calculation in figures, which I need not quote in detail, but they point out that the reductions made by the Government in the quantity and quality of the work involved a reduction of $737,500, which, with allowances for increase on cost of pile-driving and trestle-work, and taking into account a reduction on the quantity of earth work, makes a total reduction on the whole cost of the contract of $1,173,574. This saving, this reduction, which Sir Charles Tupper used to allude to as a saving, has almost entirely disappeared since that time. The contractors advanced it as a reason for getting damages. Sir Charles Tupper advanced it as a reason for claiming credit for the Government. Now, if we take into account the $395,000 awarded as damages, the large proportion of the $926,000 for which the contract for finishing the line between Port Arthur and Winnipeg was let to the Canadian Pacific Railway, which must be applied to the finishing of section B alone, and all the other expenditure for arbitration and completion of work, nearly all this large saving has vanished. The Government, in attempting to make a saving, only furnished the contractors with a claim for damages, which has almost swept away the saving itself. Then they go on for two or three pages in regard to matters upon which they feel themselves aggrieved. In the second letter they refuse to go on with the work at all except under certain conditions which they mention. The great question to be decided is whether these two letters, in all their detail, in all their contradictoriness of statement, were submitted to the arbitrators as representing the case of the contractors, or whether some carefully prepared case was submitted on their behalf, and an equally well prepared case on behalf of the Government. I doubt whether it will be found that a carefully prepared case was submitted on behalf of the Government, because, if one had been, I believe the arbitrators would have followed the lines of that case in their award, and stated how much was due to the contractors on each item, as they did in their first award, where specific questions were submitted to them. I have not only asked for the case but for the evidence taken before the arbitrators, which I think is a very important part of the record which should be submitted to this House. By a strange fatality, following many other proceedings of the Government which tended to make this case look suspicious, it was decided by the arbitrators to exclude the representatives of the press from their meetings, and to keep their meetings as secret as any of the meetings of the famous Star Chamber, and so add the only element which was needed to make the case look supremely and utterly suspicious. All the proceedings between the Government and the contractors had been shrouded in mystery, and when information was extracted, that information was vague and unsatisfactory. The final trial of the case between the Government and the contractors was shrouded in complete obscurity. Nothing was allowed to leak out to the public, except what was gathered from the general statements of the contractors or parties who had been, or were to be, examined before the arbitration. If the Government desired to cover the case with suspicion they could not have adopted a better plan than that of securing the secrecy of the arbitration. Sir Charles Tupper said last Session that it was the action of the arbitrators themselves, that they claimed that an arbitration was not necessarily a public tribunal. They may have been right in that. I do not say they were not. But the arbitration would have been made a public tribunal if the Government had requested it. The exclusion of reporters was due to the negligence of the Government in not making such request, and that negligence was due to a desire to keep the evidence which came before the arbitration from the public. They have succeeded in keeping it from the public so far; it remains to be seen whether the Minister will succeed still further, by treating this public evidence in regard to a public case as confidential, as he has some other matters. If he does so, I think there has been a considerable waste of public money, for I find that a certain firm of reporters, who are not supposed to be on the most unfriendly terms with the Government, who are not supposed to need any little attentions of that sort to make them friendly, were paid the enormous sum—for I think it is an enormous sum, under the circumstances—of $3,300 for reporting this evidence. I think, after spending $3,800 for having that evidence reported, the hon. gentleman ought to bring it down.

Mr. POPE. If you will sit down you shall have the whole of it.

Mr. CASEY. I am glad to hear that we are going to get something that we ask for. I also ask for all other records not already brought down. This, I think, will cover the items which I could not specify without technical knowledge of what passed before the arbitrators in regard to the dissent of Judge Clark and the matters in which he differed from the arbitrators.

CANADIAN PACIFIC RAILWAY—REPORT OF MR. VAN HORNE.

Mr. BLAKE moved for:

Copies of the report of Mr. Van Horne, vice-president of the Canadian Pacific Railway Company, of September last, and of Mr. S. B. Read, C. E., of the same month, with reference to the Canadian Pacific Railway in British Columbia

And also, for copies of the reports of engineers of high standing as to the route of the Canadian Pacific Railway at the point where a temporary line has been built, referred to in the letter from Mr. Van Horne to the Minister of Railways and Canals, of 19th May, 1884, and for any report of Mr. Fleming on the subject, in the possession of the railway company.

He said: The reports to which I have alluded were made public some time ago by the company, apparently, and they were printed in the Montreal Herald of 27th September, 1884. The report of Mr. Van Horne is a very interesting document to the company, announcing the result of his tour of inspection, more particularly over the British Columbia section. It contains, amongst others, these paragraphs:

"From the favorable character of the work and the progress already made, I think there will be no difficulty in completing the mountain section within a year from this date, and for $1,000,000 less than the estimate of last winter. Within the same time, the eastern section will also be completed, so that by September next a through rail connection between Montreal and the Pacific coast will be established."

Then we are particularly informed that Mr. Van Horne is happy to state, as one result of that trip, that his doubts about the value of the mountain section had been entirely removed; and after giving interesting details of the circumstances which have removed those doubts, which had unhappily existed up to that time in the mind of the vice-president and engineer of the railway company, as to the value of the mountain section, and after discussing other portions of the line, he proceeds to say:

"I do not hesitate to say that the Canadian Pacific Railway has more good agricultural land, more coal and more timber, between Winnipeg and the Pacific coast, than all the other Pacific railways combined, and that every part of the line, from Montreal to the Pacific, will pay."

Well, I will not trouble the House with the details of this, but I think it is such an interesting general report, and contains so many attractive statements, that it will be well that we should have it amongst our records. Then the report of Mr. Read, the engineer who was instructed to make a survey and inspection of the line, contains numerous interesting particulars; but the one to which I wish especially to draw attention, is that with reference to the temporary track. Mr. Read says:

"I gave some attention to the nine miles of temporary track that has been built around a tunnel, and some heavy work in the vicinity of Mount Stephen, for the purpose of saving a year's time in completing the road through to the Pacific. This part of the road has four per cent. grades and curves, of ten degrees. As far as I examined this temporary line, I found it thoroughly built, with seventy pound rails (per yard), and first-class fastenings. It will answer all purposes for traffic for years to come, without material increase in the cost of operating. The Atchison, Topeka & Santa Fe, and other roads crossing the Rocky Mountains, have grades equal to or exceeding this one.

"I also examined the section of the proposed permanent line around which the temporary line has been built, and especially, as you suggested, Mr. CASEY.

the large rock slide immediately east of the long tunnel through a spur of Mount Stephen. All of the slide, except about one hundred and fifty feet in width, seems to have been formed from gradual accretions, as the face of the solid rock forming the cliffs south of the line has weathered and worn away. There is no evidence of any recent movement that could not be guarded against. Bushes of various kinds grow on the old and gradually accreted portion. The one hundred and fifty feet of the slide above referred to, is the track of a small stream that comes out from under a glacier about one thousand feet above the grade line. This glacier extends up Mount Stephen, nearly or quite to the summit, the upper portion being hidden from view by a projecting spur of the mountain. This small stream is gradually accumulating debris from the glacier, and in times of extreme summer heat, when the largest amount of snow and ice is being melted, a flood of water rushes down this slide, carrying with it the accumulated debris into the valley below with great force. A truss bridge one hundred and fifty feet in length can be built over this slide through which these accumulations can be passed with safety.

"But the temporary line around this place is so well built, and promises to answer present purposes so well, I should think it unwise to spend any money on the intended permanent line until the traffic really demands it."

I had supposed, from having read this in the newspapers, that there was no question as to the permanent line, as to the route which he adopted, and as to the engineering problems involved in its location; but another paper, which is referred to in the latter portion of this motion, as to the letter of Mr. Van Horne, of the 19th May, 1884, leads to a different conclusion. It is amongst these returns that were brought down in pursuance to a resolution of the House. He says this:

"Plans and profiles of the proposed line, from the summit of the Rocky Mountains down to the Columbia River, covering the most difficult work on the entire line of the Canadian Pacific Railway, have already been submitted to you.

"While this section of the line, with some modifications in places, is entirely feasible and the best that can be obtained, some important engineering questions have yet to be settled, as regards some portions of it. It has been examined by a considerable number of engineers of high standing, who, while agreeing as to the general question of the feasibility of the line, and its merits as compared with any other, differ widely as to what should be done at particular points.

"Several extensive boulder slides on the mountain sides have to be crossed, and there is some doubt as to the probability of their movement; and at Tunnel Mountain, above the line of the railway, a glacier exists, the movement and effect of which are as yet unknown, and can only be surmised. While the proposed permanent line is entirely feasible, notwithstanding the existence of the glacier and the boulder slides, the local modifications necessary to protect the line against their movement should any be found to occur, would materially increase its cost.

"This difficult section occurs at the beginning of our present season's work, and embraces a tunnel through hard rock of about 1,400 feet in length, only about eleven miles from the present end of the track, and this tunnel must be completed before the work beyond can be reached to advantage. In the opinion of the construction engineers, this would result in delaying the final completion of the line, nearly if not quite one year. The question of time being an important element in addition to the grave engineering question before mentioned, the company, at the suggestion of Mr. Sandford Fleming, who had examined the line in person and whose suggestion was approved by all of the engineers familiar with the ground, whose opinion was asked, decided upon a temporary line dropping down from the summit of the Rocky Mountains into the comparatively level valley of the Kicking Horse river, by means of a grade of 232 feet per mile, following the river valley several hundred feet below the line as located on the mountain side, and intersecting the located line again about thirteen miles from the point of divergence; and as some years might be necessary to determine the disputed questions regarding the permanent line, it was decided to make the temporary line available for operation for as long a time as might be necessary, making the gradients uniform, the curvature as light as practicable, and constructing the line substantially. This temporary line is estimated to cost about $400,000, and the heavy gradient of 232 feet per mile will be four miles in length. A heavier gradient was used without difficulty on the Northern Pacific Railway, pending the completion of a long tunnel, and similar gradients have been used on one or more other railways crossing the western mountain ranges. This heavy gradient occurs on a section of the railway where the traffic must be very light for many years, where there will be no local traffic whatever, and where three, or at most four trains, each way per day will carry all the business to be done, so that for a number of years to come there will be no pressing need of a lighter gradient at the particular point mentioned, and it would seem that the immediate expenditure of the large amount necessary to build the permanent line at that point would be unwise as well as unnecessary, as it would not appreciably affect the transportation of freight and passengers or the cost of operations.

"Moreover, I have no hesitation in stating that the difference in the cost of constructing the permanent line at the present time, when the work must be pushed to the utmost limits and when wages are unreasonably high, as compared with doing it without pressure of time and when wages have returned to normal rates, will amount to the entire cost of the temporary line, so that in the end the cost of the railway when fully completed will not be affected. This expedient was decided on shortly after the close of the last season's work, and the cost of the temporary line was included in the estimates of the cost of the completion of the entire permanent line as submitted by the company to the Government during the last Session of Parliament. Similar expedients for the saving of time and ultimate expense are very common on large works of this kind. The plan and profile of this temporary line will be submitted."

There are several points which are important in connection with this communication. In the first place, it appears that there is a considerable divergence of opinion on the part of numerous engineers who have been consulted, and have given opinions as to the method of overcoming the difficulties in the construction of the permanent line of the Canadian Pacific Railway at this point. In the second place, it appears that these differences of opinion are partly due to the circumstance that there are several boulder slides and a glacier, the local movement of which is not ascertained, and it will take several years to ascertain what the local movement is, so that engineers will be able properly to determine how the line may be constructed. While Mr. Van Horne assures us with great positiveness that the line is feasible, he equally assures us that it will take several years to find out the proper mode of construction, and therefore the necessity of establishing a temporary line, which, he thinks, notwithstanding the enormous through traffic which is to pass to and from the east over the Canadian Pacific Railway, will answer very well. I should not have said "notwithstanding the enormous traffic," because he says the traffic will be very light for many years, and he thinks there will be no harm in having a temporary line with a grade of 2.52 feet, which is now found to be 2.37 feet to the mile. It seems to be important to obtain the opinions of those engineers which are stated to have been obtained by the company, and which indicate different methods or suggestions as to the solution of this problem, which, however, after inspection by those engineers, Mr. Van Horne declares will take several years to solve before you can get even the data for its solution. Then we are told that the Government ought to provide for the construction of the temporary as well as the permanent line out of the loan and subsidy, because Mr. Van Horne does not presume to say that the price of the permanent line, at the rate at which work is being prosecuted, would cost much more than the temporary line if the work was gone about in a leisurely and reasonable fashion, and by prosecuting the work in a reasonable fashion, enough would be saved to build both the temporary and the permanent line. So it appears that the price which is going to be paid in consequence of hurrying through with the work is not quite clear. You find the engineers stating that $400,000 would be saved on that small section of the railway by going a little slower, and yet Mr. Van Horne proposes that the country should pay for the temporary line because, he says, that in the end the temporary and permanent line would cost no more than the permanent line, if we put it through at the same rate as the rest of the work was prosecuted. Then you have the chief engineer considering this subject and dealing with it. He says:

"Being called upon to report upon this matter, I have the honor to state that my estimate of the probable cost of the western division of the central section did not include the building of a temporary line at any point, but was merely intended to cover the cost of the construction of the permanent line within two years. This estimate was a close one, and if the construction of the permanent line within that time be insisted upon, there will not, I believe, be any portion of the loan or subsidy available for the proposed temporary section; and if the plan now proposed is to be carried out, and if the company look to the subsidy and loan only, I see no means of doing it, unless both temporary and permanent lines can be brought within the limits of those resources. At the same time, were this temporary line in operation and the permanent line completed, save this gap of 13 miles, and were the construction of this 13 miles allowed to proceed leisurely during several years after the road is in operation, I have no doubt it could be done more cheaply by at least 30 per cent. than if pushed forward at the present time, when labor is dear and means of access costly. There is no difficulty in working a grade of 2.32 feet, and during the construction of the Northern Pacific Railway a course was pursued similar to that now suggested by the vice-president."

He proceeds to state the instances on the Northern Pacific, and then goes on to say:

"My estimate of the cost of this 13 miles, if constructed rapidly, was $978,000; and I have stated that if sufficient time be granted, it can, in my opinion, be built for at least 33 per cent. less, or for $656,000. This difference, together with the rails and sleepers available for the temporary line, would enable the company to build the two lines at an expenditure within my estimate for the permanent line. If this estimate be correct, little or no loss could arise from building the temporary line, and communication from ocean to ocean would be accomplished earlier than by permanent line."

There is the statement, and upon that statement an Order in Council was passed, authorising the granting out of the loan and subsidy of payments for the construction of the so-called temporary line. Those statements are, I think, statements of high consequence. They indicate very serious difficulties in the locating of the permanent line, difficulties, it is said, not to be solved at the present time. They indicate tremendous grades for the line which is to carry the traffic over that portion of the railway for a great many years. They indicate grades—while the maximum grade on our standard railway is 80 feet—of 232, which now appears to be 237, or nearly three times as great as the maximum. They indicate, also, divergence of opinion on the part of the engineers as to the method of overcoming the permanent difficulties. They indicate an exceedingly light traffic for this portion of the line; they indicate that the rate at which the work is being pushed forward under the arrangement made by the Government has caused the cost, in this region, and under those circumstances, to be one-half as much again as if it had been proceeded with under the contract.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.

TUESDAY, 24th February, 1885.

The SPEAKER took the Chair at Three o'clock.

PRAYERS.

FIRST READINGS.

Bill (No. 62) to amend the Act to incorporate the Bank of Winnipeg.—(Mr. Watson.)

Bill (No. 63) to incorporate the Portage la Prairie and Lake of the Woods Navigation Company.—(Mr. Watson.)

CIVIL SERVICE ACT.

Mr. CHAPLEAU. I desire, with the consent of the House, to give notice of a resolution which I desire to add to the resolutions respecting the Civil Service Act. It is to provide for the salary of one or more superintendents of letter carriers, the salary not to exceed $800. I find this has been overlooked. I therefore move that the House resolve itself into committee on Friday next to consider the following resolutions:—

1. Resolved, That it is expedient to provide that each member of the Board of Examiners appointed for purposes of the Civil Service Act, shall receive a salary of six hundred dollars per annum.

2. Resolved, That it is expedient to provide that the members of the Board shall be paid such travelling expenses while engaged in their work, as may be determined by the Governor in Council.

3. Resolved, That it is expedient to provide that the Governor in Council may appoint a secretary to the Board, with a salary not exceeding one thousand dollars per annum, and a clerk having a qualified examination certificate, to assist the Board, and the latter shall be a third class clerk of the Department of the Secretary of State.

4. Resolved, That it is expedient to provide that the minimum salary paid to a chief clerk shall be one thousand eight hundred dollars, with an annual increase of fifty dollars per annum, up to a maximum of two thousand six hundred dollars.

5. Resolved, That it is expedient to provide that when the duties of any superior officer or clerk, during his absence or by reason of his demise, but not through superannuation, are continuously performed by an officer or clerk of an inferior class, or junior rank, during a period of more than three months, the officer or clerk performing such duties may, on the recommendation of the Deputy Head, concurred in by the Head of the Department, by Order in Council, and provided that funds are available under Parliamentary vote for such payment, receive in addition to his ordinary pay the difference between such ordinary pay and the pay of the officer or clerk whose duties he has performed for the time he has performed such duties.

6. Resolved, That it is expedient to provide that all payments of money to permanent employes, other than salaries to be made under the provisions of the Civil Service Act, and whether specifically stated or not in the estimates submitted to Parliament, shall be made only under the authority of the Governor in Council.

7. Resolved, That it is expedient to provide for the appointment of one or more superintendents of letter carriers, at a salary not to exceed $800 each, as may be determined by the Governor in Council.

Motion agreed to.

RETURNS.

Mr. McMULLEN. I beg to call the attention of the Secretary of State to the fact that a return for which I moved last year, showing the amount paid to printing and publishing companies in the Dominion for a number of years back, has not been brought down in full.

Mr. CHAPLEAU. I have already laid before the House all the information that was in the Department with reference to this subject, and nearly everything which was asked for by the motion. I hope to be able to place the remainder before the House in a day or two.

Mr. VAIL. I desire to call the attention of the Minister of Customs to the fact that a return laid on the Table yesterday, purporting to show the quantity of sugar imported at Halifax and Montreal, is incomplete, so far as regards Halifax, inasmuch as the quantity is simply given in bulk, without giving the vessels' names or the details for each cargo.

Mr. BOWELL. I am under the impression that the paper laid before the House contains all the information asked for, if not more than was asked for. There are two distinct propositions in the motion, and only in the second—the one referring to Montreal—are these details asked for, and in the return they are given for that port. If the hon. gentleman desires the same information with regard to both ports, he should have asked for it. I was very particular in ordering that full return should be made, especially as the fact had come under my observation and knowledge that there has been some discussion in the newspapers and among the merchants as to the relative value at which sugars are entered.

Mr. VAIL. The Minister of Customs must surely have seen that the closing part of the motion referred to both places.

Mr. BOWELL. It does not say so.

Mr. VAIL. I do not see how it can be understood otherwise, as it must be obvious that the object was to get a comparative statement, and that, therefore, the return would be of no value unless the figures were given for each cargo. I take it for granted, however, that he will have no objection to furnishing the correct information, and if not I suppose it will be open to me to move another motion, as I know he is disposed to give us all the information we require. I may say that I do not want the information for any particular purpose except to enable me to judge of the relative value of the sugars imported.

Mr. BOWELL. There is no possible objection to bringing down all the information the hon. gentleman asks for, but I leave it to the House to say whether Ministers are to attempt to fathom what gentlemen want when they place motions on the paper. If they state distinctly what they require, I am quite sure the Departments will supply the information at once. If he requires a statement for Halifax similar to that which I have given for Montreal, I will have great pleasure in handing it to him; but in the next motion he puts on the paper I hope he will kindly state what he wants and all he wants.

THE BUSINESS OF THE SESSION.

Mr. BLAKE. Before the Orders of the Day are called I would call the attention of the First Minister to three subjects that are referred to in the Speech, upon which I should suppose by this time we should be supplied with some papers. The first is with reference to the Hudson Bay expedition, the report of which was to be laid before us. I think it is time that we should get this report. Then in the 9th paragraph, a statement is made with reference to the necessity of encouraging the speedy construction of lines of railway through the North-West Territories, and we are told that we shall be asked to aid railway enterprises by liberal grants of land. If the Government has adopted a policy on that subject I think the papers announcing that policy should be laid before us, even although the form of the parliamentary action to be asked for is not yet divulged. Reference is also made in the Speech to the exhibitions at Antwerp and London, and we are asked to consider the best means of aiding these objects. The same organs to which I referred a short time ago indicate that the Government has adopted a policy in this matter, and that commissioners have been appointed who have been engaged for the prosecution of their work for some time. I think, therefore, that the papers which would show the policy adopted, as far as possible, should also be laid before us without delay.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. I find on enquiry that the report respecting the Hudson Bay expedition is attached to a report of the Minister of Marine and Fisheries. With respect to the grants to railways in the North-West the papers are all ready, with the exception of those relating to one road, that is the Manitoba and North-Western. That company has been urging an alteration in the terms, and that subject has been under discussion; otherwise the papers would have been brought down.

Mr. BLAKE. Are the others brought down?

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. No.

Mr. BLAKE. Well, I think we should have them.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. Yes, I think so. All the correspondence and Orders in Council respecting exhibitions will be brought down.

THE BUDGET.

Sir LEONARD TILLEY. I stated last week, in answer to the hon. member for South Huron (Sir Richard Cartwright) that I hoped to be able to make the financial statement on Friday. The estimates for next year are not completed yet, and therefore I shall have to name Tuesday of next week.

THE FACTORY REPORT.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Can the hon. Minister, or any member of the Printing Committee, say whether the Factory Report will be printed and distributed within a day or two?

Mr. BERGIN. It is being printed. It is in the hands of the printer now.

CHINESE COMMISSION REPORT.

Mr. SHAKESPEARE. I desire to ask the right hon. leader of the Government when we may expect the report of the Chinese Commission?

Mr. BLAKE. Ask the Secretary of State.

Mr. CHAPLEAU. I hope to have a Message with the report before to-morrow.

THE DEPUTY SPEAKERSHIP.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD moved the third reading of Bill (No. 26) to provide for the appointment of a Deputy Speaker.

Motion agreed to on a division, and Bill read the third time and passed.

CENSUS OF THE NORTH-WEST.

Mr. POPE moved consideration of Bill (No. 21) to provide for the taking of a census in the Province of Manitoba, the North-West Territories and the District of Keewatin, as amended in Committee of Whole.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Before that motion is put I desire to call the attention of the House to a point to which I called their attention in Committee, respecting the desirability of acquiring information on two or three additional points—in the first place, the material of which the houses in the North-West are composed, in the second place, the number of apartments in each house, and in the third place, the number of families residing under each roof. Now, I can hardly understand why so reasonable a request, for information which every hon. gentleman in this House knows is in itself valuable, should be refused. If I understood correctly the reason offered by the Minister of Agriculture, it was partly because he considered that at the present moment there were too many lists in the schedule committed to the enumerators. On that point I shall have a word or two to say presently. But I desire to call attention to this fact, first, that this information is in itself very desirable, and in the next place, that it will, if obtained, give us a better means of testing the advance of the North-West, from time to time, than almost any other item in the census schedule which was recently laid on the Table. This is one of the very few items which, if included in the returns, it would be in the power of the enumerators to take with reasonable accuracy. In almost every other case the enumerator is obliged to depend on loose and vague statements made by the parties consulted. In this case he can with his own eye supply himself with all the information I desire him to obtain. Moreover, it can be got at a minimum cost; all that is required is to add a line or two to the census paper. True, that paper is already very large, but no serious expense can be incurred by complying with the request I make. In all other countries I know of, such information can be obtained from one quarter or another, and whether it is or is not included in the census returns is a matter of no moment; but if we are to have this information, it is only by means of the census enumerators that we can obtain it. I have always considered the absence of this class of information from the census of 1871 and 1881, a serious omission; and I desire not only to obtain it for Manitoba and the North-West Territories, but I desire that the precedent should be established, so that in taking future censuses, this very valuable item of information may form part of the regular details required by law. Now, Sir, in order that the House may know that I am warranted in saying that the census, as at present taken, abounds with a great many details which can by no possibility be accurate, I will just call attention to certain items in the census of 1881. I find there that nearly twenty pages, and something like fifteen distinct entries required to be made up all over the Dominion, are devoted to items like these: Total number of pounds of home-made butter, pounds of home-made cheese, pounds of grapes, bushels of other fruits, pounds of maple sugar, pounds of hops, and a variety of items of the same kind. Now, if accurate information on these points could have been obtained, the hon. Minister might have been justified in asking for it, and in loading down the census tables with all these details; but I put it to the common sense of every hon. gentleman in this House whether one farmer in a hundred, or in five hundred, is able to give the census enumerators the number of pounds of home-made butter or cheese he has produced, much less the number of pounds of grapes or of maple sugar. Any one who has paid any attention to the way in which such information is obtained, knows that farmers scarcely ever dream of keeping accurate accounts of these various matters. The fact is that all these details are simply guesses, and nothing more; not one of them can be depended on. They are approximations, more or less accurate, generally less accurate than more. I dare say the information would be valuable if it could be relied on; but the hon. Minister, who is a man of practical experience, knows that very few farmers keep accurate accounts, even of the quantity of grain they raise, much less of these details with which the census is encumbered. Now, I do not want to harass the Minister, but I say that it is an act of pedantry on his part to insist on getting information on such details, which he knows cannot be accurate, and to refuse to get information on the points to which I have referred. I move:

That the said Bill be not now considered, but that it be re-committed to amend clause 4 by inserting at the end thereof the following words: "the material of which each dwelling is constructed, the number of rooms it contains, and the number of families residing under the same roof."

Mr. POPE. The hon. gentleman says it is of the utmost importance that we should know what the houses are made of, how many rooms in each, and so forth; but it is of no consequence that we should know how many pounds of sugar are made in the country. Well, that is like a great many things the hon. gentleman has said. He says these people are guessing. It is he who is guessing. He says the quantity cannot be obtained. Why, there is not a man who makes sugar, who does not know almost to the very pound how much he makes. Is there a man who raises hops who cannot tell how many pounds he sells? Is it not ridiculous for the hon. gentleman to say that this information cannot be got directly? It is the very information you can get directly.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. It is not.

Mr. POPE. I think this House will agree that it is very important we should know how much sugar, how many pounds of hops are used—much more important than to know exactly what kind of timber a house is made of or how many rooms it has. Does the hon. gentleman suppose there is a farmer in the country who makes butter and cheese who does not know how many pounds of each he makes?

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Yes.

Mr. POPE. The thing is perfectly ridiculous. It shows what an impracticable man the hon. gentleman is. Let the hon. gentleman condescend once in a while to dine with a farmer, to go to a farmer's house and look at him, and the farmer will tell him at once that what the hon. gentleman has said is perfectly ridiculous. I object to this work the hon. gentleman proposes. I do not see any possible good that can come from taking such information just now. If it were a question of taking a new census, I would consider the hon. gentleman's proposition; but just now when we have taken a census in the rest of the Dominion without this particular item, I think the hon. gentleman should decide to withdraw his motion.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Certainly not.

Amendment negatived on a division.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Then I propose to move :

That the said Bill be re-committed to amend the same, by adding at the end of the last clause the following words: "that it shall be the duty of each enumerator to set down in a separate column the names of all persons included by him in the population of his district, who are not at the time of the taking of the said census actually present in the said district."

Now, I want to call the attention of the House to this. During the taking of the preceding census, we, from this side, called attention to the manifestly fraudulent intention with which it was taken. The result of that census has been that we have paid $500,000 for a document as to which we only know this, that it does not contain one single statement that can be relied upon; that in the very first statement, the most important of all, the statement of the number of people who are now in the Dominion of Canada, that census has been deliberately and fraudulently falsified, and falsified for a purpose; and that that purpose, so far as the hon. gentleman, the hon. the Minister of Agriculture, and those who support him could make it, was, I believe, to deprive the Province of Ontario of its legitimate representation.

Mr. POPE. I call the hon. gentleman to order. He has no right to say that the Minister of Agriculture falsified those returns.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. I say that the census was taken in a way to produce a false representation.

Mr. SPEAKER. I think that the hon. gentleman stated that the Minister of Agriculture had fraudulently taken the census for a purpose. In that he is not in order.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. What I say is, that that census has been taken in a way to render the statements made in it worthless. That census has been taken in a fashion which has caused several thousands of people in every Province to be put down as residents of this country who are not residents there. There may have been many purposes for that. It may have been from an adherence to an absurd and obsolete system of taking the census; and it may have been for the purpose of depriving the Province of Ontario of a large share of the representation to which it is entitled; it may have been that it was supposed that by this mode of taking the census many thousands would be counted to one or other Province, which that Province was not entitled to have, and in that way that the Province of Ontario, in which that was not so likely to happen, would be deprived of a considerable portion of its representation. But whatever may have been the object, whatever may have been the purpose, the fact remains that we have a census which cost us $500,000, if not more, and of that census, no man who takes the trouble to analyse it, to scrutinise its tables, can affirm with certainty any proposition except that in the most important part of all, it exaggerates by thousands of people the number of persons supposed to be resident in Canada. That is the result of the system which has been adopted. From various portions of the country I have heard complaints as to the way that census has been taken. Over and over again, instances have been given to me in which men who have been absent from this country for three, five, seven, eight, and ten years, and who have no sort of intention of returning, have been put down as inhabitants of the Dominion of Canada. I say it is very unfortunate that this has been done, because it authorises very great and very deserved distrust of all the statements which are made in this census. Now, I desire, as far as possible, to prevent that fault being committed again. If the hon. gentlemen are really desirous of giving us the facts, if they really desire to show us, not those whom they imagine or whom they think ought to be in Canada, but who are in Canada—in any part of it—at the time of the taking of the census, then they can have no objection to take the census in their own fashion, but at the same time to insert a column in which shall be stated the number of persons and the names of the persons whom they admit not to be in that part of Canada in which the census is being taken at the time it is taken. If they do not do that, then we shall know perfectly well that this census is not being fairly taken, that it is not being taken with a view of ascertaining the number of people that are here. Now, in the case of Manitoba, and the other territories, there is a double reason for this. Naturally enough, the people who suppose that they may receive additional subsidy or additional representation by virtue of this census, may be a little disposed to exaggerate their number. That is one of the points in which the enumerator is often obliged to take the statements of the head of a family without being able to satisfy himself of their perfect accuracy. By doing what I propose the Minister may secure a return according to his own fashion, if he pleases, but he will, at least, give us the means of checking this return, of ascertaining who were in the country at the time. There can be no excuse here such as was applied in other cases, that a large number of people, at the time of taking the census, might be absent in the prosecution of their ordinary avocations. That excuse cannot be applied to the Province of Manitoba. All that we demand, all that I demand, in this matter is that the Minister shall have a separate column, in which the names of those who are not at the time the census is taken residing in Manitoba shall be stated. If he declines, there can be only one inference to be drawn, and it is that this census is to be utterly incorrect, that this census, for which I presume we shall be called upon to pay a large sum of money, will be so incorrect in regard to the most important figure of it that we shall only know, as we know in regard to the census of 1881, that it does not show the number of people actually at that time residing in Canada.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. I think the hon. gentleman has not exercised his usual calm discretion in using the language he did in proposing this amendment. He said that this system was obsolete and effete, though it is the same which has always existed in Canada, and, I think, in the United States, and I am not sure whether it exists in England or not—no, it does not exist in England—but the position of the population in the United States is similar in almost every respect to that of Canada, and therefore this system must be considered an effective system and not at all obsolete or absurd. I do not think the hon. gentleman is justified in taking that line, especially as the system was adopted and approved of by Parliament, and I think the hon. gentleman did not exercise his usual discretion when he said not only that this was done for a purpose, but that it was done for an improper purpose, for the purpose of depriving Ontario of its proper proportion of population, and that not only were the Government and the Minister chargeable with that improper purpose, but those who supported them were also chargeable with it. In other words, the hon. gentleman charged all the members from Quebec, Nova Scotia, New Brunswick, Prince Edward Island, Manitoba and British Columbia with having entered into a fraudulent conspiracy to rob poor Ontario of its proper representation. That is the deliberate statement of the hon. gentleman. I do not think that those gentlemen in the House who were here at the time when the census was settled will admit that that charge is a correct one. With regard to the motion, the desire of my hon. friend who has charge of this Department is to have the census taken in exactly the same way as the last census was taken, to the same extent and with the same particulars, so that it will be on all fours with the census of 1881. When the next general census takes place and the whole subject is resumed, it may be that, with the progress of the country and with the increased light of experience, the de jure system may be altered and the system adopted which now obtains in England, where there is a fixed population, where the people are not transitory to anything like the same degree as they are in Canada. The general directions which are given with respect to the mode of taking the census are shortly these:—

“The principle adopted for the registration of the population is that which is called by statista the population de droit or de jure; that is, the population legally domiciled within the territory of the Dominion, and including all persons who may be temporarily absent from their place of abode, whether at the fisheries, at sea, or in the forest, wilderness, etc.

“All persons are to be registered in the Province and particular locality in which their home, family dwelling or place of abode is situated, although they may happen to be in other parts of the Dominion, in the forest, or at sea, or in foreign parts, on the day with reference to which the census is taken.

“In order to make the details of this system of registration very clearly understood, cases that will occur in practice are furnished in the form of instruction as follow:—

“Sea-faring men or fishermen at sea on the coast, lumbermen or hunters in the forest, merchants or tradesmen, or laborers, or travellers, or students, or any others happening to be temporarily absent from home and not permanently settled elsewhere, are not to be considered as absent for the purpose of the census; but their names are to be registered by the enumerator as being present. Therefore, the names of seamen at sea, college students and school children, of the sick in hospitals, of inmates temporarily present in educational, charitable, or penal institutions, are to be taken down in their own Provinces, at their own domiciles or homes, and not at temporary abiding places or institutions. In other words, all living members of one family are to be registered as being present at the family abode, unless they are settled in homes of their own, or have left the country with the intention not to return.”

This system, I think is the one best adapted to our scattered and transitory population, and I think it would be a great mistake to have the census taken on any other principle, introducing new particulars, from that which obtained in 1881. We want the census, in the first place, for the purpose of comparison, and, secondly, for the purpose of ascertaining the scattered population in the North-West, and I think the people of the North-West will feel that, instead of it being the desire of my friend to exaggerate the population there, he is trying to diminish the actual number of people in the North-West by the course he is taking. I hope the hon. gentleman's amendment will not be carried.

Mr. BLAKE. I am unable to agree in the reasoning of the hon. gentleman, or in the accuracy of his historical retrospect of the adoption of this system. I recollect very well when the first Census Act was passed providing for the census of 1871. I recollect enquiring across the floor—I think it was I who made the enquiry, but, at any rate, I recollect an enquiry being made as to the principle upon which that census should be taken, the de facto or the de jure system. I recollect the hon. gentleman himself, then as now the First Minister, answering that it would be taken on the de facto system, which he thought the proper system; and that measure passed on the faith of that statement that the census would be taken on the de facto system. But, when we came back, we found that it had been taken on the de jure system. I have no doubt that the hon. gentleman made the statement in good faith, that it was his intention to have it taken on the de facto system, but, without further consulting Parliament, he changed his mind and had it taken on the de jure system and that is how we got into the way of the de jure census. I do not agree with the hon. gentleman that this amendment involves a departure from the de jure system. I entirely agree with him that having had our census of 1871 and that of 1881 on the de jure system, and this being one for the purpose of comparison, the same general principle ought to apply; otherwise I should advocate a census on the de facto system. But we called the attention of the Government, on the last occasion of the discussions in Parliament, to the importance of securing this additional information in that sense. Now, nothing that my hon. friend proposes is to make this census less accurately one capable of being compared with the results of the census of 1881. He does not propose that the principle shall be altered in the slightest degree; he does not propose that the column shall be changed, that the instructions shall be changed, that anything shall be done except to provide this additional information not provided by the census of 1881, and what those of us who have given attention to that subject know to be the facts of the census of 1881, and know to be essential—this additional information as to the number who are taken as inhabitants of the district and who are not within the district. I have had it from men in various parts of this Dominion, to whom the enumerators applied, that they were asked: Well, how many children have you? So many. Well, are they here? No. A son, two sons, a daughter, two daughters, are away. Where away? In the States. How long away? Ten, fifteen, twenty years. Well, do you think they will never return? Oh! I can't say they will never return. I hope to see my son again, I hope to see my daughter again. Down they went, although it was quite certain that if they did return they would return only as visitors to the parental home, although they had adopted a new residence. Now, I have had that statement made to me over and over again by respectable individuals whom I saw, and who voluntarily communicated the fact to me in particular districts. Gentlemen who had taken pains to ascertain found that in the census district with which they were connected, numerous instances of this kind occurred, cases in which the party who was counted had in no case been less than ten years, and in some cases, twenty years away. All that is asked is that we shall have this check upon the operations of the enumerator, and this piece of information for the public—how many men and women, what percentage of the whole numbers whom you count as residents of the districts are, in fact, at that time, non-residents; that is all. The very circumstance that the enumerator is called upon to give this statement will be an important check; it will be an important lever towards accurate enumeration. He will be told that if he reports a very large percentage on the total number as belonging to a district who were not present, when the visit was made, this fact will cast suspicion upon his enumeration, and he will be disposed to be more rigid than the enumerators were formerly as to whom he shall count. These instructions were offered for his guidance when the last census was taken. They are admirable instructions; the hon. gentleman has read them to us, but we know they were not complied with. We know that these instructions which dealt with men who were temporarily absent on a fishing voyage, with the girl at a boarding school, were extended by the enumerators to cases of persons who were not in that position, but were in the position I described a little while ago. While we cannot ascertain that while you cannot call upon the enumerator to state the duration of the absence of each person whom he counts, you can take that broad and general test of how many of all you count are actually there—what proportion are there and what proportion are away. I say that is an easy thing to be done. It does not add to the cost, it does not add to the complexity, but it will add to the accuracy and value of the census very much.

House divided on amendment of Sir Richard Cartwright:

That the said Bill be recommitted to amend the same, by adding at the end of last clause the following words: “That it shall be the duty of each enumerator to set down in a separate column the names of all persons included by him in the population of the district, who were at the time of the taking of said census actually present in the said district.”

Amendment negatived.

Mr. MILLS. I beg to move in amendment:

That the said Bill be recommitted, so as to provide that the census be taken in the Province of Manitoba, and in the Districts of Assiniboia, Alberta and Saskatchewan.

I need not detain the House with any observations. I called the attention of the House to that subject when the Bill was before us for a second reading. Hon. gentlemen will know that the North-West Territory embraces about two million square miles, and the District of Keewatin is of very considerable extent. I mentioned the other day, and I repeat it now, that there are no settlements in the District of Keewatin, and there are no indications that there will be any settlement there for years to come; that the districts I have mentioned are districts within which the Government have for some years been carrying on surveys, through which a railway runs, and where any projected lines of railway that may be undertaken for some time to come will be found. It embraces the whole country known as the fertile belt. It seems to me that if the Government are anxious to ascertain the population of the North-West Territory for practical purposes oftener than once in ten years, they should confine their operations to those districts where settlement is going forward. I have in my hands here a map showing those districts where they are going forward. There will be ample room for the work which the Government proposes to undertake within these particular limits. The districts not embraced, that is, the territory lying north of the fertile belt and the whole Keewatin District, are districts to which no settlers have gone in, where no population will be found except, perhaps, a few trappers who are engaged in trading, and the Indians, who are of nomadic habits. It seems to me that the proposition is a reasonable one. It is consistent with the duties this House owes to the public, because it embraces the whole territory, within which it is desirable the work should be done which the Government have brought under the attention of the House.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. This matter was discussed when this Bill was before the House before. The officials will make enquiry in the vicinity of Winnipeg and thoreabouts, and if there are no people in Keewatin there will be no census; if there are any white people or half-breeds they will be taken.

Amendment (Mr. Mills) negatived on a division.

Bill read the third time and passed.

MARITIME COURT OF ONTARIO

Order for the House to go into Committee on Bill (No. 11) to extend the jurisdiction of the Maritime Court of Ontario (Mr. Allen) read.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. I think there was a sort of suggestion thrown out by the leader of the Opposition that this Bill should be postponed for some considerable time.

Mr. BLAKE. It was thrown out from the other side. The hon. gentleman threw it out.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. I received to-day a deputation of a number of shipowners, of large shipowners, who are alarmed at the effect which this Bill would have if it became law. They had a meeting last week in Toronto, and the Toronto association appointed a respectable and influential body of representatives to protest against this Bill. I desire that all the objections to the measure shall be set out, and then fully considered. I hope the hon. member will not press the Bill, because there is no hurry about it.

Mr. ALLEN. Let the Order stand.

WHARVES AND DOCKS IN NAVIGABLE WATERS.

Mr. TUPPER moved the second reading of Bill (No. 18) respecting wharves, docks and piers constructed in navigable waters. He said: This Bill, of which I have charge, is, as I stated on a previous occasion, of considerable interest and importance to the shipping interest of the Dominion and to our mercantile people. It deals with a question hitherto untouched by our legislation, and affects particularly that kind of property of which there is so much in the Dominion, namely, wharf property, and the rights of owners to grants of water lots in navigable waters. According to the law as it now stands and the decision of the Supreme Court of Canada in several cases, there is no legislation by which the owner of a grant of a water lot can erect on that water lot a wharf. The law lays down that a wharf built in such waters can be deemed an obstruction, and is an obstruction to navigation, all the Queen's subjects having a right to navigate without interruption navigable waters.

So that the different wharves and structures in the harbors of this country are at present in such a position that they are liable to destruction, and the owners have no redress. This subject, being one of great importance, I propose that this Bill be read the second time and carefully considered by a Select Committee, because I am aware that great caution must be exercised, and I must confess that the clauses have not been so carefully considered as is desirable in a Bill dealing with such an important subject as this treats. After the Bill has been read a second time, I shall move that it be referred to a Select Committee, which I am prepared to name, so that the whole subject, and the different decisions affecting it, which have been given by our own courts, may be carefully considered, and some measure arrived at which will satisfactorily deal with the question. In Massachusetts the subject was dealt with long ago, when that State was a British colony; and there, I believe, there was power vested in a local authority delegated by the Legislature, by which the local authority or superintendent decided how a wharf should be built or a dock constructed. And by dock, as stated in the Bill, I mean what we generally understand in Canada as a dock—water between different wharves, in which ships lie from time to time. This Bill is drafted somewhat after the Bill dealing with the erection or construction of booms in navigable waters, and provides for the filing of a plan of any proposed wharf or dock, the same to be subject to the approval of the Governor in Council; and it proposes in respect to those wharves already erected and standing, as I say, without any legislative authority and therefore existing by mere sufferance, to legalise them for a year, as in the case of the Boom Bill of 1883. If those different wharves are not approved within a year, they will be treated in the same way as booms in a like position are treated under the Boom Bill. This Parliament has dealt with the question of obstruction in navigable waters in the Boom Bill of 1883, and last Session the subject was also touched upon in the amendments to the Public Works Act, chap. 16, Act of 1884, where the right of supervision was vested in the Minister of Public Works and the Minister of Marine in regard to the foreshore. I move that the Bill be read a second time.

Mr. KAULBACH. I hope this Bill appearing for its second reading, is not intended to have a retrospective effect, or that it will in any way interfere with the rights of private parties, rights to lands and lands covered by water, vested in them by the Local Legislatures of the different Provinces previous to the passage of the Act known as the British North America Act of 1867.

Mr. DAVIES. So far as this Bill deals with the construction of wharves and piers in those portions of the navigable waters which the Supreme Court of Canada, by its decisions, have determined to be under the control of the Dominion Government and the Dominion Parliament, I have no objection to it. But so far as it attempts to legislate away existing vested rights in wharves and piers which have been legally built by the authority of local statutes, and in waters where the Dominion authorities have not sole control, I do object. The matter is a very important one, for perhaps the line where the provincial jurisdiction ends and the federal jurisdiction begins is not very clear. I think the hon. gentleman is right in referring the Bill to a Select Committee, for in its present form it is one which can never be consented to. For instance, many of these wharves and piers were built 70 or 80 years ago under a local statute and they are perfectly legal. They do not interfere with navigation, and at any rate they are essentially necessary, and to say that it should be within the power of the Dominion executive to declare them illegal structures, or to interfere with these vested rights, would be monstrous. I understand that the leader of the Government himself does not assent to such a proposition; but I believe that under the Bill that would be the effect, and that no matter under what authority the wharf was constructed, if the Dominion Government does not approve of it, it becomes a nuisance. So far as the Bill legislates in that direction I am strongly opposed to it, but so far as it is prospective in its operations, and is confined to waters over which the Dominion Government has control, I think its object may be a good one. If I vote for the second reading, it must be with the distinct understanding that I oppose the retrospective character of the Bill and those clauses which interfere with vested rights.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. The hon. gentleman is quite right, as the Bill is one which will not interfere with the legislative action of the different Provinces. It is of a similar character with an Act passed in 45 Victoria respecting bridges over navigable rivers, and also 48 Victoria, chapter 43. I quite agree with the proposition of my hon. friend, the promoter of the Bill (Mr. Tupper), that it should go to a Special Committee, and I think my hon. friend from Charlottetown (Mr. Davies)—

Mr. TUPPER. I have the hon. gentleman's name on the committee which I intend to propose.

Mr. BLAKE. I am sorry the Government does not think proper to take charge of this measure as it is a much more important one of necessity than the analogous one to which the hon. gentleman refers, with reference to booms in navigable waters. Its application is much more extended, and yet the Government thought the other measure important enough to bring it down as a Government Bill. Of course that does not prevent its being within the competence of the hon. gentleman to introduce it to the attention of the House—I am not raising that question—but I think a measure which affects such a number of existing interests of one kind and another should be dealt with on the responsibility of the Government, and I should like to have seen the hon. gentleman offer to take charge of this Bill. If there have been, as I believe there have been, in various localities throughout Canada, wharves or piers, or what we sometimes call docks—because that word is oftentimes in the West applied to the wharf instead of to the water-space between two wharves—erected for whole generations without formal or legislative or executive authority—and if all are to be placed in this precarious position, that the right of the present proprietors is to be subject to their bringing in their maps and plans within twelve months, and getting the assent of the Governor in Council, I am afraid there may occur a vast amount of utterly unnecessary expense to multitudes of persons. I do not suppose the hon. gentleman's Bill is intended to render lawful wharves and piers which are at present lawful.

Mr. TUPPER. No, it is not.

Mr. BLAKE. Quite so; I was speaking of the hon. gentleman's intention, and not what the hon. gentleman has done. But mark this; it being now the statement of the promoter of the Bill, that he does not intend to ask us to make unlawful those which are lawful, the first section applies only to those which are unlawful at this day. To what end, therefore, shall you provide that:

"No wharf, dock, or pier, shall be constructed or maintained (except only as provided by section 4), etc."

At this moment, all the wharves and piers which this Bill can at all affect must be wharves and piers which can be dealt with as nuisances, which are unlawful now; and why then declare that twelve months from date, they shall become nuisances and shall not be maintained? It must be to facilitate the proceedings for their destruction, for their abatement, and render it easier that the ancient wharves or piers in respect of which there might be some presumption, or at any rate an extreme disinclination on the part of a jury or tribunal to deal with adversely and deal with them on the same footing as if they had been erected a year or two ago. I think that would be an unfortunate state of things. My impression is that in the vast majority of cases to which the Bill applies, it will be found that no harm is done to navigation and no disturbance will take place, by the proprietors of the wharves or piers. But if you are to expressly declare that their title is bad, if you are to negative the legality of their maintenance, you call on them to come in here and bow down to my hon. friend before me and prepare plans, and then, if he thinks proper, they must go down. Then my hon. friend objects that the fourth clause may be construed as rendering unlawful those which are at present lawful. Of course this would be a monstrous proposition except on the ground of great public interest—this interference with the rights of individuals, of which the hon. gentleman has shown himself so great a champion in a controversy which I shall not mention at this moment, and thereby disturb the harmony of the occasion. I do not know what is the purpose for which the hon. gentleman proposes to give the power which is to be given by section six, to charge tolls. If the wharf or dock is lawful, or is to be made lawful under this Act, then in common law the right which may follow from the ownership of the lawful dock or wharf to charge tolls will exist irrespective of the Act. But it is possible that they may be given a new right in favor of the individual as against the public as to terms on which the wharf would be used, which would be improper. The clause, therefore, as it strikes me at this moment, is unnecessary for the protection of the owner of the wharf or dock in his exercise of the common law right, because that is enough; and if any circumstances now exist which disable him by usage or otherwise, from taking such tolls as he has the right to take, I do not see that we should say he should be given the right. I throw out these ideas to show that difficulties and complications may arise, and that the Bill is one which should properly come under the responsibility of the Administration.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. I am not at all prepared to dispute the arguments of the hon. gentleman in support of his contention that this Bill deals with a subject to be taken charge of by the Government. Still, my hon. friend, on his own responsibility as an independent member of Parliament, introduced this Bill without any previous concert or communication with the Government, and the Bill being before the House, the House had better deal with it. The Bill will go to a committee, where it can be carefully considered, and when it returns from the committee it will be then for the Government, as it will be their duty, to consider whether they ought not to give a decided opinion on the Bill as reported.

Mr. WOODWORTH. This Bill deals with interests so great and of such mammoth proportions that I agree with the observations made on the other side of the House, in favor of the Government taking it under their charge. In my own county there are some 15 wharves which are more or less public. I applied to the Department of Marine and Fisheries, which, under the Act of 1877, deals with this class of public works, and I found a great deal of trouble in inducing the Government to take over these wharves and make them Dominion wharves to all intents and purposes. They are built under the authority of the Local Legislature of Nova Scotia, from which they have received from time to time very large amounts of aid. My hon. friend opposite, who led the Government of Nova Scotia for a number of years, knows that the estimates every year contain appropriations for these wharves; so that they have become vested rights, and for this Parliament to touch them in any way injuriously affecting their interests, would arouse a great deal of complaint among the people of Nova Scotia. It is a very delicate subject, which calls for the exercise of great care by this House that the vested rights of no corporation or quasi corporation are affected hurtfully by this Bill. I think the law officers of the Crown should look into this matter very carefully, and see that it is not dealt with in a higglety-pigglety manner, and the authoritative declaration of the Government should be had before any Bill like this is allowed to become law.

Mr. WELDON. According to my observation, this is one of the most important Bills ever brought before this House. If passed, it would very seriously interfere with all the owners of property bordering on the Gulf of St. Lawrence and the Bay of Fundy, where there are high tides. We know that wharves to be useful at all must be up to low water mark, or even beyond it. Many of the lands on the Bay of Fundy, are granted down to low water mark. In the City of St. John the wharves are built to the harbor line, which is fixed by the law of the Province of New Brunswick, and extends out below low water mark. The effect of this Bill would be to compel all these owners before the end of twelve months to get their wharves legalised. There is a distinction between wharves and booms. In the case of booms a conflict of authority has arisen between the Dominion and Local Legislatures as to the granting of powers to boom rivers, and we know that booms which entirely cross a stream, must necessarily, to a certain extent, temporarily impede navigation. Wharves, however, are different; they do not necessarily obstruct navigation, although it is a principle of law as laid down by my hon. friend, that a party has no right to build a wharf below low water mark where it may interfere with navigation. I quite endorse the remark of the hon. member for King's, Nova Scotia (Mr. Woodworth) that this is a matter which ought to be dealt with by the Government. With regard to the question of tolls, in many cases, wharfage and other tolls are regulated by the Local Legislature, and the effect might be very serious if the Parliament gave power to wharf owners to impose reasonable tolls. The effect might be simply to leave the different wharf owners to charge what they please, or what might be considered reasonable or unreasonable in the view of the owner of the vessel or the owner of the wharf. Perhaps there would be no objection to establishing some supervision over wharves in waters over which this Parliament has jurisdiction; but it seems to me that to pass a retroactive measure, affecting wharves which have been built for upwards of sixty or eighty years, would be fraught with great danger and hardship.

Mr. VAIL. I am glad to see that the importance of this Bill is fully acknowledged by the House, and I do not think too much has been said as to the desirability of getting this question settled, because, as has been said, it is very difficult to see where the jurisdiction of the Dominion ends and the jurisdiction of the several Provinces begin. In Nova Scotia, so far as I understand the matter, the local authorities have claimed the right to grant water lots in the harbors and on the shores outside of the harbors. The question has been raised as to the right of the Provinces to grant water lots within the harbors; and I believe the Dominion Government itself has been somewhat doubtful on that question, because, if I am correctly informed, only a little over a year ago the Dominion Government applied to the Local Government of Nova Scotia for the grant of a water lot in the harbor of Halifax. This shows that the question is an unsettled one at present, and I am very glad that we are to have some legislation which will settle this important question. I hope, whether this Bill goes to a committee or whether the Government take charge of it, the right will not be given to the Dominion Government to interfere with the wharves and piers on the shores of the bays of Nova Scotia, at all events. We have bays from five to ten miles in width, some of them having fifteen or twenty piers on their shores, and it cannot be held for a moment that any pier that could be built in waters so extensive as those would at all interfere with navigation. It is quite right the Dominion should have complete control over all matter affecting navigation, and so long as they have the control over harbors and the water lots within the limits of what are still known as the harbors of Nova Scotia, I think it is quite proper for them to leave the others in the hands of the Local Governments. I hope the committee appointed to examine this Bill and remodel it, will take into consideration the important effects it will have, if left in its present shape, on the shores and bays of Nova Scotia, outside of what are considered at present as harbors.

Mr. TUPPER. I am glad to notice the unanimity of hon. members with regard to the importance of the principle involved in this Bill. The hon. member for King's, when he understands the causes that have led to its introduction, will be one of the warmest supporters of this measure. As I have said, it is not framed with that care and caution such a Bill requires, and is justly open to the criticisms passed upon it by the leader of the Opposition, and the hon. member for Queen's, and the hon. gentlemen who followed, in regard to the manner with which the idea which I have in view is embodied in the different clauses. My object is not to interfere with the legislation anterior to 1867. I know that in Prince Edward Island and New Brunswick there is legislation dealing with this subject before 1867. That demonstrated the necessity now, since our courts have decided that such legislation is useless to support rights acquired since, for this Bill. The hon. member for King's will find on further enquiry that it is in the interest of every man who owns at present a water lot below low water mark. There is no desire to interfere with vested rights; on the contrary, my object is to secure them, to enable owners to recover dockage dues or wharfage dues because the courts have decided they cannot do so unless the wharves are sanctioned by proper legislation, unless the property they use is protected by proper legislation; some legislation is therefore desirable. The criticisms with regard to the fourth section are correct; the Bill does not sufficiently exempt from its operation those rights about which there is no dispute, that is the rights acquired under legislative authority previous to 1867; and in regard to the sixth and last clause to which attention was called, the clause dealing with collection of tolls and dues, I quite concur that where you have built and own a wharf you have authority by law to collect, for the use of the wharf, a fair and reasonable toll. This clause was inserted by me because a similar declaratory clause, as it were, is found in different English Acts regulating the rights of owners of wharfs and property of this character. It is, I take it, merely declaratory, and nothing more. I am very glad to find that the important principle involved has drawn the attention of hon. members, and is likely to be followed by legislation which I am sure all proprietors of wharves are anxious to obtain.

Motion agreed to, and Bill read the second time.

Mr. TUPPER moved:

That this Bill be referred to a Select Committee composed as follows:—Messrs. McCarthy, Wood (Brockville), Cameron (Huron), Mulock, Davies, Weldon, Ouimet, Bossé, Laurier, Laugelier, Girouard, Townsend, McIsaac, Woodworth and the mover.

Motion agreed to.

OFFENCES AGAINST THE PERSON.

Mr. TUPPER moved the second reading of Bill (No. 42) to amend the Act respecting offences against the person. He said: I introduce this Bill at the suggestion of one of the judges of the county courts of Nova Scotia, and, as the House will see, it is a substitution of a clause for the forty-third section of the Act passed, 32-33 Vic. The object of my amendment is to make this statute conformable to the English statute dealing with this subject. The main alteration is that justices of the peace are vested with the jurisdiction to award compensation in cases of common assault or battery. Hitherto clothing was often destroyed or damage done by these offenders, and a justice of the peace could only impose a fine. This enables the Justice of the Peace to do what I think he ought to be able to do, award compensation not to exceed ten dollars. That is similar to the provision of the English Act dealing with this subject, and therefore there is a further amendment introduced, making this a matter cognisable by two justices, instead of one as heretofore, because of the additional jurisdiction which is vested in the magistrate's court, this power of awarding compensation. There is also the omission of the power which obtained in the old Act, but is not in the English Act, of praying the magistrate to proceed summarily. The English Act leaves it in the hands of the court below, either to proceed summarily or to send the matter to a higher court. It is desirable, I think, to have a clause framed conformably to the English Act, so that we may have the benefit of English decisions in connection with it from time to time. There is also another alteration which is similar to the one I proposed in another Bill, enabling the justices to include in the conviction the order, not only for the fine and the costs, but also for the charges of conveying the offender to the place of confinement. The form of conviction includes that, and the justices invariably follow the printed form, but it has been held on certiorari that the conviction could be quashed because these two last lines are not authorised by the Act.

Mr. DAVIES. So far as the amendment of the hon. gentleman is concerned which merely alters the section enabling a person who has been fined to be imprisoned for the costs and charges of conveying him to prison as well as the costs of the cause, I have no objection, but there is one clause in the Bill of the hon. gentleman which I think may give rise to no little difficulty. For an assault now a man is fined, and that fine goes to the Crown. None of it goes to the prosecutor in the nature of damages, and there is a part of the assault section which prohibits a prosecutor from suing in a civil action if he once prosecutes in a penal action. That, however, has been held ultra vires, it has been held that this Legislature has not the power to take away the right to sue for private damages. The idea is a very good one to enable the magistrates in trivial assault cases to award $10 or $12 as compensation, if we have the power to pass it. I question it, however. It seems to me that it is altogether within the civil rights belonging to the Local Legislatures, and, if we exercise it, if we have the power to exercise it, we take away the man's right to go before the courts and sue civilly for damages. He would be estopped afterwards from going into another court and suing for damages. Now, after prosecuting for a breach of the law and punishing his assailant by a fine which goes to the Queen, he may sue for damages, and he is not limited to $10, $20, $30 or $100. I had a case the other day in which large damages were found, because the man was seriously injured, but, if you allow the magistrate to give even $10 damages, I think the civil remedy would be taken away from the man, and so my hon. friend would defeat the, to some extent, the very meritorious object he has in view. I suggest the advisability of taking out of the Bill altogether the portion of the section which enables a magistrate to give compensation.

Mr. TUPPER. The criticism of my hon. friend opens up a very large subject. At present, under the criminal law in regard to property, the magistrates have the power of awarding compensation in addition to the fine, and I do not know of a case in which the point has been raised which the hon. member now raises. At the first blush, I do not know with what success it could be raised. There have been many cases where damages have been awarded for malicious injury to property in addition to a fine. Therefore, I think I must press upon the House this clause, especially as the hon. member admits that it would be fair that the magistrate should have that right. I think, too, the hon. gentleman's argument could be answered in this way, that, though the Act says a certain sum shall be imposed by way of fine and so much for compensation, still it is not enabling the man to recover damages or enjoy a civil right, and so is not interfering with the jurisdiction of the local legislature. It is specified that the punishment shall include the fine and so much in addition, all as a punishment. The hon. gentleman's criticism, if it be sound, will affect a considerable part of the criminal law as it now stands. This principle obtains in the criminal laws dealing with petty injuries to lands and personal property in the case of trespasses, and I do not see why exception should be made in regard to persons in cases of common assault.

Mr. MILLS. I think it is pretty clear that this is a matter of civil right so far as compensation for any personal injury is concerned. I do not think we have a right so to deal with the criminal law as to embrace the civil rights of the parties as a mere incident of our legislation. If one man commits a trespass upon the property of another, any damages he may have done to the property and may be liable for in a suit for civil damages certainly could not be controlled by our legislative action here, and I can see no difference between that and this case. If we have been dealing with the civil rights of parties as well as with offences against the criminal law, we ought to retrace our steps. If there are any such cases on the Statute book, it is clear that we have been exceeding our powers, and we should not persevere in a course of that sort. Even if we had the power to legislate, we ought not to limit the compensation to the sum of $10, because a magistrate might compensate in that way when the effect would be seriously to injure the party who was entitled to damages. My learned friend beside me has mentioned the case where a party obtained an offer of $100 damages for injury done to him by a similar action. Now if this clause were law and a magistrate acted upon its provisions and granted compensation to the extent of $10, then the party would be precluded from bringing a second action for the same injury. It seems to me that this is clearly ultra vires, and that however meritorious the Bill may be in other respects this portion ought to be struck out.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. There may be a question as to whether this does not affect civil rights. The Bill is very convenient in the interests of peace, of course. I think the magistrate should have the power of punishing the party by fine going to the Crown and also by fine going to the prosecutor. But I do not see, even if he had the power of granting compensation, except at the special instance of the prosecutor, that he would be deprived of his right of civil action by any legislation of ours. It might be well that the law should provide that the fine should be so much, a certain portion to go to the prosecutor upon his stating that he abandoned his civil rights. That would be all very convenient, but still the point taken by the hon. member, I think, is a good one. I would suggest to him that the debate be adjourned until the matter can be more fully considered. I move the adjournment of the debate.

Motion agreed to, and debate adjourned.

CANADIAN PACIFIC RAILWAY—DEBT.

Mr. CHARLTON asked what was the aggregate amount of floating or unsecured debt of the Canadian Pacific Railway Company on the first day of the present month?

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. The Government are unable to answer the question; they have no information on the subject.

TREATY BETWEEN THE UNITED STATES AND SPAIN.

Mr. VAIL moved for :

Copies of all correspondence with the Imperial Government on the subject of the flag Treaty between the United States and Spain, whereby American products are admitted in' Cuba and Porto Rico on more favourable terms than the products of the Dominion.

He said: A few days before the close of last Session, I called the attention of the Government to a treaty or arrangement which had been entered into between the Government of the United States and the Government of Spain, whereby certain products of the United States are admitted to entry in the Islands of Porto Rico and Cuba on much more favorable terms than the products of the Dominion of Canada, or in fact any other British possession. I also pointed out at that time that the people of the United States had the privilege of entering dry fish, which is a very important export of the Province of Nova Scotia, in Porto Rico at a rate of duty some twelve or fifteen cents per hundred pounds less than British fish. The House will understand the importance of this matter to the West India merchants and fishermen of Nova Scotia, when I state that the annual shipment of dry fish from Nova Scotia to Porto Rico alone is about 150,000 quintals, nearly one-fifth the whole catch of fish in the Province of Nova Scotia. Besides this, we ship a large quantity of pickled fish to that Island. In the Island of Cuba the difference is greater. They admit United States fish at from 27 to 30 cents per hundred pounds less in duty than British fish. Our exports to the Island of Cuba are not nearly so large as those to Porto Rico, but they are very considerable, and up to the time that this treaty took effect, which was on the 1st of March last, the exports to that Island were rapidly increasing. Besides fish, we export a large quantity of white pine lumber to the West India Islands. The difference of the duty at Cuba in favor of the Americans is about $1.60, which, you will see, is a very important item. Besides this, the Americans have the privilege of entering their vessels by paying one-half the tonnage dues that British vessels are obliged to pay. For instance, British vessels pay at the Island of Porto Rico $1.25 for discharging and $1 for loading, while United States vessels are allowed to enter and discharge cargoes by paying 62½ cents per ton for discharging, and 50 cents for loading. Now, Mr. Speaker, in this matter I am not stating that for which I have no authority, and though I have not been able to procure a copy of the treaty, I have here a copy of one clause of the report of the executive committee of the Halifax chamber of commerce, made in March last, which I propose to read to the House. It is headed "A Blow at Our Fish Trade," and this is what they say in reference to that treaty :

"Your committee learn that a treaty has lately been made between the United States and Spain, whereby the flag of the United States is placed on the same terms regarding Customs duties as that of the latter country. The conditions of this treaty does not apply to British shipping, and we are consequently placed at a great disadvantage in Cuba and Porto Rico, to which the treaty more particularly applies, the difference in favor of the American flag, so far as we can learn, being equal to an average of about 20 per cent. on the whole tariff. On our fish, which is our chief export to these islands, it amounts to considerably more. By calculations made on data received, it would appear that in Porto Rico fish by British flag pays about 12 cents per quintal more than fish by American vessels, and that the tonnage duty for landing and loading cargoes is 100 per cent., or just double, on our vessels, to what is exacted from the Americans. In Cuba the differential duty in favor of the Americans is still larger, amounting to about 27 cents per quintal. Cuba and Porto Rico are amongst our best customers, shipment to the latter having some years reached nearly 150,000 quintals, while to Cuba the demand is steady and increasing. It will therefore be seen that if the Americans continue to enjoy those great advantages, and we are excluded, that it will be a heavy blow to our trade, and calls for prompt and energetic remonstrance from our Government. The charges made by the Spanish Government through the consulates of 10 cents per ton on securing Spanish clearances is also very burdensome, and has been objected to by the United States, who claim that no foreign Government has a right to impose such a charge, which is equal to an import tax on the products of their country.

"We have reason to believe that this unfair tax will be abolished in the United States, and our Government should take immediate steps to place us in the same position."

This was signed by John Doull (president), Thos. E. Kenny, John S. Maclean, J. J. Bremner, C. F. DeWolf, J. C. MacIntosh, all good supporters of the Government, and other members of the executive committee. I find, moreover, that a few days ago the board of trade of St. John, N.B., the city represented by the Finance Minister, also referred to this subject. In a petition to the Governor General in Council, the board say:

"And your petitioners would respectfully impress upon the Government that the present is a most opportune time to enter into reciprocal trade relations with the British and Spanish West India islands.

"That we can supply most of the manufactured goods—productions of the soil, forests, mines, and fisheries—that are imported into those islands, and in exchange, can take their productions, which already find a large and rapidly increasing market in Canada, owing largely to the sugar refining industries now established in this Dominion, which may hope to not only fully supply our home market, but with the peculiar facilities that must be developed by reciprocity with the West Indies, to also export refined sugar extensively to other countries.

"The West India 'carrying trade has heretofore been largely done in Canadian bottoms, owing to the cheapness with which that class of vessels can be built in Canada.' The tariff at present existing in the Spanish West Indies being about 40 per cent. in favor of the United States, as against Canada, is a great obstruction to our trade; and should the reciprocity treaty now negotiating between Spain and the United States be ratified, and Canada debarred from same terms, our Spanish West India trade will virtually cease."

I have not been able, as I stated, to secure a copy of the treaty, but I have here a copy of prices current issued by Lawton Bros., commission merchants, Havana, Cuba, dated January last. In one column they give the rate of duty on British goods, and in another column the rate on United States goods, and I have selected some few of the products of Canada which we might, I think, be able to supply to Cuba, so as to show the difference in the duty payable. The following are some of the articles:—

It will be found that the difference is a very marked and important one. I now call the attention of the Minister of Finance to the statement made by him last year, in connection with this subject. The hon. gentleman said:

"The attention of the Government had been called to this subject previous to the statement of the hon. gentleman. We have obtained some information with reference to the effect of this treaty or arrangement between the two countries; but, as far as we have received it, if it includes the question of tonnage, it does not bear out the statement the hon. gentleman has made, though I dare say he may be right. The arrangements made between Spain and the United States were not really as favorable as those between Canada and Cuba or Porto Rico. There were charges made that did not exist here. They have been removed and the United States have been placed in the third list of duties. The Government are quite alive to the importance of having our trade on as good terms as that of the United States, and no time will be lost in endeavoring to bring about such arrangements as will place us on quite as favorable terms as they have."

Nearly a year has elapsed, and I am anxious to learn what the Government has done in this important matter. I suppose the answer will be—I do not know that I have a right to anticipate it—the stereotyped one, that some negotiations have been going on and some progress has been made; that although this is the case, the Government are not in a position to bring down papers and tell the country exactly how far they have gone and what progress they have made. What I complain of, however, is, that so much time has elapsed without the Government approaching the Spanish Government on this important subject—of course, through the British Government, because we are not a treaty-making power. The Government, I think, should have given attention to this question immediately after prorogation last Session. Surely if the United States Government could, more than a year ago, have arranged such a treaty as that to which I have referred, and which has such an important bearing on our trade, and could since that time have made the necessary preliminary arrangements for a wider and more favorable treaty, our Government should at least be in a position to tell this House and the country that they have done something and made some substantial progress. It is too important a matter to us in Nova Scotia to admit of our keeping quiet much longer. Surely, a year is long enough within which to have made some progress in this matter, and unless something is done I am afraid the people of Nova Scotia will have just reason to complain that the Government have neglected their interests, while, perhaps, their attention has been engaged with some things of far less importance.

Sir LEONARD TILLEY. I may say to the hon. gentleman who has moved this resolution, that early after the return of the High Commissioner to London, he was instructed by the Government to take certain steps with a view to securing the same advantages to Canada as were secured to the United States by the treaty referred to. Instructions were given to him to make certain propositions. If those failed, he was to make other propositions. Correspondence was entered into between the High Commissioner and the Imperial Government, and it was settled that he was to act in conjunction with the British Minister in Spain, in negotiating a treaty of this kind. It was stated at the time the treaty was made that a more extended treaty would likely be arranged between Spain and the United States during the summer. It was found that negotiations of a much more extended character were being prosecuted between the representative of the United States and the Spanish Government. It was found desirable—in fact our High Commissioner was communicated with—to say that understanding, as we did, that the new treaty proposed was so extensive in its operations, that the authority given the High Commissioner would be inadequate to meet the enlarged concessions proposed to be given to the United States. Under these circumstances the High Commissioner waited until the larger treaty was agreed upon, and then he was instructed to put himself in communication with the foreign office, and with the Government of Spain. The answer of the Spanish Government was, that they declined to continue further negotiations with the representative of the Government of Canada until the decision of the Senate of the United States was known, as to the new treaty; and therefore the matter stands in that position until the action of the Senate is known. I might state that it would not be in the public interest to say what instructions were given to Sir Charles Tupper in reference to the Flag Treaty. If the treaty made is ratified the Government will probably be in a position to give decided instructions to the High Commissioner in the larger and more important question. The Government think it would not be in the interests of the public to state exactly what the instructions were or to bring down the papers which would show exactly what we propose in the first place, and then as an alternative-suggestion.

Mr. VAIL. I agree with the Finance Minister, but the trouble is, that the old treaty is in force, and I say that the proposed treaty between Spain and the United States provided that the other treaty shall cease when this becomes a fact.

Sir LEONARD TILLEY. Of course we will have to deal with a much larger question.

It being six o'clock, the Speaker left the Chair.

After Recess.

Mr. BLAKE. I wish to say, with reference to the statement of the Finance Minister, that while agreeing with the view that after giving instructions to the High Commissioner it would not be proper at the present time to bring down those papers, I regret much the course of procedure, which in its efforts at diplomacy the Government has thought fit to pursue. It seems to me that the true course for the Government to pursue was this: The moment we found that the Spanish Government and the Government of the United States had agreed on a treaty under which more favorable terms existed for the trade of the United States than for the trade of Canada, their attention should have been directed to the single point of placing the trade of this country on as advantageous a footing as that of the United States. It is true that their attention being directed to that matter it was diverted by the circumstance that a treaty of a more enlarged character had been negotiated between the United States and Spain, but that treaty, although so far as Spain was concerned, it may be—I am not aware as to the constitutional principles of that country under the present constitution—it may be that it was finally assented to; but still, under the constitutional provisions with reference to the United States, the assent of that country was not completed until the Senate had passed executively upon it, and even to-day it is quite uncertain whether it will ever become an effective treaty or not. In this state of things the Government of Canada ought not to be diverted from the object to which I have referred, by pursuing a proposal for an enlarged treaty, and particularly since the Spanish Government had declared—as the Finance Minister has announced that they did declare—that they did not wish to enter into negotiations with Canada for an enlargement of the commercial relations, on the basis of the United States treaty, until it had been decided, by the action of the Senate of the United States, whether the treaty was to become operative or not. I can understand that course of action by the Spanish Government; they may have determined that it would not be well that the relations between Canada and Spain should be of a different character than those between the United States and Spain; they may have determined that a different consideration would arise as to the proposed negotiations if the treaty was unfavorably viewed by the United States. But for all the intervening time, in the meantime, now, until it shall be decided whether the Spanish treaty shall become effective or not, our trade remains under the relative disadvantage which has been created by the fact to which my hon. friend has alluded. That difficulty still subsists; and supposing a new treaty should not be operative, by reason of the Senate of the United States refusing to assent to it, the hon. gentleman has to begin his negotiations again, to put the country on as favorable a condition as it would be under that treaty, and in the meantime we suffer the disadvantage from day to day and from hour to hour. Therefore, I say, a great miscarriage took place when the Government suffered itself to be delayed in the progress of the negotiations to put us and keep us abreast of the United States, with respect to the commercial advantages referred to in this discussion.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. The hon. gentleman supposes a great many things, from the brief and incomplete statement which the Finance Minister was obliged to make, because he was obliged to preserve that reticence which was his duty, and any breach of which might cause the failure of the negotiations. The hon. gentleman must not suppose that either the British Ambassador or the High Commissioner has been idle during the period he has mentioned. The hon. gentleman knows, or he should know, that if there is one thing as to which constant vigilance has been exercised by the Canadian Government and its representatives in England, it has been with regard to the negotiations with Spain. The hon. gentleman knows that Sir Alexander Galt, whose diplomatic abilities even he will acknowledge, was in Spain; that he spent a long time there, and that he was fully accredited by Her Majesty's Government to act in accord with the British Minister in Spain—with Mr. West, and afterwards with Sir Robert Morier. Pressure was brought to bear upon the Spanish Government with the view of opening up the trade of the Spanish West Indies with Canada on mutually advantageous terms. The Spanish Government seemed to agree with the idea, but suggested that perhaps it might be widened, so that there might be a reciprocal treaty not only between Canada and the Spanish Antilles, but between Canada and the mother country of Spain. Of course an intimation of that kind could not be thrown over or rejected or limited. The mere fact of doing so would injure any arrangement of a more limited nature. I do not know whether the information reached the hon. gentleman, but we know that in consequence of frequent changes of Government in Spain, the Government who received our first advances so readily were removed, in some way after the Spanish fashion, and another administration came in who were not so friendly; and all attempts, both by Her Majesty's Government, on behalf of Great Britain itself, and by our representative, fell to the ground and were not entertained. We cannot force Spain to make a treaty; but the pressure has been continuous. It has not been given up or surrendered or forgotten for a moment, and Her Majesty's Ambassador, Sir Robert Morier—I cannot say the present Ambassador, because I believe he has been removed within a few days—as well as Mr. West, the British Ambassador at Washington, have been fully alive to the subject, and have lost no opportunity of pressing upon the Spanish Government our desire to have the same privileges as the United States; and we have, I believe, offered reciprocal advantages as regards Canadian trade. Everything that could be done has been done; there has not been a moment of delay, and no opportunity has been lost or neglected. The particulars cannot, of course, be gone into, but I believe we never stood a fairer chance of making an arrangement with Spain. The matter, however, rests with Spain and not with us. The United States, unfortunately for us, can offer greater advantages than Canada. Whether the present treaty made between Spain and the United States will be ratified or not we cannot say. I fancy there will be no chance of its getting the sanction of the Senate during the present Congress, or during the term of the present moribund Government; and it is impossible to say whether the treaty will be taken up in a special Session, under the authority of the new President, or whether it will stand over for another year before it is sanctioned by the United States. As to all that we cannot say. Meanwhile, however, the negotiations are kept alive. Spain, naturally very anxious to secure the enormous advantages which the present treaty would give to Cuba, does not desire to disturb that arrangement or make any new arrangement with Canada until that whole question is first settled. The advantages offered by that treaty to Spain are so enormous that she would sacrifice everything—she would sacrifice a dozen Canadas—for the sake of getting that trade. To get $20,000,000 annually, which it is alleged by the New York Nation would be given by the United States for that trade, is a matter of such importance that Spain would not look at anything else. Should that treaty come to nothing, failing to receive the sanction of the Senate, whether a treaty of a financial nature can be finally ratified without the consent of the Lower House, the House of Representatives, is a great constitutional question which has never yet been settled. Meanwhile, all we can do is to be constantly on the watch; to be vigilant. We are vigilant: we believe we have done everything we could do; and hoping and believing that we shall get the support of this House on both sides, we will continue to watch every opportunity of pressing for a treaty which will be reciprocally advantageous to Canada and the Spanish Antilles. You see how anxious Spain is to have that treaty with the United States sanctioned. It is rumored in the press that she even offered to do what was never done before—to add the trade of the Philippine Islands to that of the Antilles for the sake of securing that treaty. The situation of Cuba is to-day so desparate that unless some relief of that kind is secured there is no hope for the Spanish Antilles, and they will be in a revolutionary mood. Spain will not look at anything until that question is settled. If that should fail, I think Canada will have more than a fair chance of making an advantageous treaty. I can only assure the hon. gentleman that there will be no neglect, but that there will be continual watchfulness and pressure on the part of the Canadian Government upon the Government of Spain, in the first place, directly through our own officers, and then constantly, every day, through the intervention of Her Majesty's Ambassador.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. I had not the advantage of hearing the first remarks of the First Minister. Did he state whether the Canadian Government were taking part in the negotiations which were recently going on between the British Government and Spain, with a view to a treaty between Her Majesty's Government and Spain, which would secure the admission of Spanish wines on more favorable terms into England, for corresponding concessions in the way of reducing the duties now levied on English goods imported into Spain? That would afford, I imagine, an opportunity for something to be done. Did the First Minister mention that?

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. Perhaps I had better not now enter into details on that matter; but the hon. gentleman will understand that in the event of an alteration in the English wine tariff in favor of Spain, a corresponding advantage must be given by Canada before we can hope to have any arrangement with Spain.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. I wished to ascertain whether the Government had called attention to that point.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. Oh, yes.

Mr. WELDON. I quite understand that the steps taken in connection with the British Ambassadors were most essential, more particularly in view of the new treaty now before the United States Senate; and judging by what I observe in the United States press, the people of that country are becoming daily more alive to the importance of getting that trade with Spain. Hitherto, under the late treaty, we have labored under a great disadvantage. A great portion of the vessels of New Brunswick and Nova Scotia are engaged in the West Indian trade, and we have hitherto enjoyed a great portion of the trade between the Spanish Antilles and the United States. That is being gradually reduced under the operation of the present treaty, and if the new treaty comes into force it will be practically destroyed. I will give a statement which was made up to show what the effect of the new treaty will be with regard to our products. An elaborate statement was made with regard to a brig of 333 tons register carrying in a cargo of shooks to Cuba valued at $3,300. At present she will pay in Cuba $1,964 tonnage dues and consul fees, while, if the new treaty comes into force, an American vessel will pay $1,900 loss. Thus the result would be practically to destroy our trade as it stands. Now, under the present regulations fish can be carried to the United States and thence shipped to Cuba cheaper than it can be carried direct from United States ports. As shown by the statement of the hon. member for Digby (Mr. Vail), the following are the differences in dues chargeable to vessels, foreign or Spanish or American, under present treaty arrangements:—

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD.

Potatoes in Spanish or American vessels,	$0-61	per 100 kilos.
do " foreign	" 0.87	" "
Rails " Spanish or American	" 2.60	" "
do " foreign	" 3.77	" "
Pork " Spanish or American	" 2.85	" "
do " foreign	" 4.06	" "
Butter " Spanish or American	" 6.49	" "
do " foreign	" 9.20	" "

The result of the treaty will therefore be disastrous to us, should it be endorsed by the United States Senate; it will practically destroy trade between the West Indies and the Maritime Provinces.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. I would suggest to the hon. gentleman that perhaps arguments of that kind are not of a nature to strengthen our position.

Mr. BLAKE. Does not everybody know what the duties are? Do not the people of the United States know what the duties are?

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. The people of the United States are not Spain.

Mr. BLAKE. Well, Spain is not so ignorant as the hon. gentleman supposes.

Mr. WELDON. The reason I put this forward is because we know the present state of trade between the Maritime Provinces and the mother country is most depressing, and if we destroy our trade with the West Indies we shall have no outlet for it at all. That is why I maintain that valuable time has been lost, and it strikes me that if we had the right we claimed, on this side of the House, we ought to have, to negotiate a treaty ourselves, instead of going through the red tape circumlocution office, we might have been in a position to have a treaty now. While we have been watching and waiting, the Americans have got ahead of us, and are in a position to command the trade, not only with Cuba and the Spanish Islands, but eventually with the West India Islands.

Mr. DAVIES. The importance of this subject is so great, that I believe it warrants me in making a few remarks on it. The right hon. gentleman either failed to catch the point made by the leader of the Opposition, or skillfully evaded it in his answer, by deprecating any discussion at present upon the negotiations going on with regard to a new treaty. Hon. gentlemen on this side do not wish the Government to divulge matters not proper to be divulged, but the point made by the leader of the Opposition, and one which has great weight with hon. gentlemen on this side, is this: that the House is entitled to know something of what has been done by the Government with respect to the existing tariff between Canada and Cuba, before a new treaty can be negotiated. The hon. gentleman said we ought to be satisfied; that the Government have done everything; but he has failed to mention one step the Government have taken; he has failed to mention one item of instruction that they have sent to our High Commissioner. The charge we make is, that they have neglected our interest to such an extent that we are at present in the disadvantageous position, explained by the hon. member for Digby, of having to pay very much higher duties than the United States, and that we will have to remain in that position for one, two or three years, until this treaty be either approved or disapproved of by the Senate of the United States. In the meantime, our trade will become more crippled year by year, and this at a time above all others when the Maritime Provinces demand some outlet for their produce. I have listened carefully to the remarks of the hon. gentleman and those of the Finance Minister, and have failed to find that the Government have taken any active steps whatever to guard our interests, or that they have made any demand that we should be placed in the same position as that of the United States. To talk about the inopportuneness of referring to facts which are public, facts which the hon. member for Digby copied from the prices current of a circular known to commercial men all over the Dominion and the United States, the Havana prices current, which is in the hands of every man who deals in the trade between Canada and Cuba, is beside the question. These facts publicly known show that our trade is hampered, and in the face of them we have the right to ask what steps, if any, have been taken to remove the disadvantages under which we labor. Never mind the new treaty. Hon. gentlemen opposite have a perfect right to refuse to divulge steps now taken to secure a new treaty, but they have no right to refuse this House information as to the steps they have taken, if any, to remove the disadvantages pending the conclusion of a new treaty, from which we now suffer, and from which we will have to suffer, unless removed, so long as the United States do not disapprove of their new treaty with Spain, or until we succeed in having a new treaty ourselves.

Mr. WHITE (Cardwell). Impartial people outside of this House will agree with the suggestion of the First Minister, that this debate is not likely to result in improving our position or in aiding us to secure new treaty arrangements. The same rule exists between communities as with individuals. It is a new doctrine that, if you want to get advantages, the first thing you must do is to declare that without them you cannot live; that you have everything to gain and nothing to give in return. Hon. gentlemen opposite, while they have pointed out from their standpoint that without a treaty with Spain, without our getting similar advantages to those provided in the Flag Treaty now adopted between Spain and the United States, this country must be seriously injured, have not pointed out, as they might, that we have some advantages to present on our side. They simply have presented an argument least likely to commend this country to the Government of Spain as a country with which it is desirable to have treaty arrangements. Of what possible interest can it be with Spain whether a treaty they will enter into with this country is going to be advantageous to us or not? If they enter into a treaty, it will be at least because the advantages to be gained will be reciprocal. It seems to me, if we look back a little into the history of this country, we will find there never has been a time hardly when we have not had people declaring the condition of the country was verging on ruin. In 1843, when free trade was adopted in England, we had people in Canada who declared that our future would be absolutely paralysed in consequence of that policy, and it certainly was a policy which, on the face of it, seemed calculated to bring great injury to Canada; but we managed to live through it and to prosper very well, despite those predictions. When the treaty of 1854 was adopted we certainly derived considerable advantages from it, but when it was abrogated in 1866 what did we find? We had a gentleman, Mr. Potter, sent to Detroit, to the convention there, carrying with him letters from gentlemen in Canada, declaring that they ought not to renew that treaty, because if it were not renewed the condition of things in Canada would be such that we would be compelled to seek annexation in order that we might have commercial existence at all in the future. The treaty was abrogated, yet, despite its abrogation, we succeeded in managing to live and to prosper. In 1874, when hon. gentlemen opposite were in power, they sent the late Hon. George Brown to Washington, to negotiate a treaty which they felt was absolutely necessary; they made every effort to get it. What would have been said by hon. gentlemen opposite if the Conservatives had denounced them because they did not succeed in getting a treaty? Surely they did all they could to get it; they offered, as every one will admit, concessions, I venture to say, no one would be disposed to offer to-day, to secure a treaty with the United States; but the United States did not even give us the courtesy of discussing them in the Senate. But nobody here complained that the Government was recreant to its trust to the people of Canada because the United States would not give them a treaty, and when we find hon. gentlemen opposite talk about our demanding certain concessions, in order to secure a market for our goods in foreign countries, and then attempting to show, on the floor of Parliament, that this country depends for its existence commercially on these concessions being obtained, we cannot but conclude that their course is unfortunate, and that they are not likely, by means of it, to secure the concessions they ask. The leader of the Opposition tells us that Spain knows all these things; that she knows what the tariffs are; that she knows the position in which we stand towards her, compared with the United States, and what the effect of a treaty with us will be, and that nothing said in this House can affect her in the least. But they do not know, and, Sir, they cannot know, because it is not true, that the future prosperity of this country depends upon their giving us a treaty; and I am bound to say, and I think everyone outside of this House, at any rate, will admit, that after the frank statement of the First Minister, that the Government are doing all they can, all that can be done, in order to secure a treaty, a fair treaty, a reciprocal treaty, a treaty that will be advantageous to both sides, and to secure it with the approbation and the support and the influence of the Imperial authorities at their back, it does not lie in mouths of those hon. gentlemen opposite to attack the Government, because they are not getting a treaty, because a foreign Government, over which we have no control, have not yet seen fit to give us the treaty which these hon. gentlemen say we ought to have. The hon. member for St. John (Mr. Weldon) tells us that, if we had the right to make our own treaties, if we had the right to go straight to Spain without the red tape, as he calls it, of going through the Imperial Government, we would have had this treaty long ago. Does he not know that Spain would naturally ask, who are you? if we went there simply as a colony. We go there with the Imperial Government at our back, accredited by the Imperial Government. The power of making treaties is an attribute of sovereignty, and if hon. gentlemen are only honest enough to admit frankly what they desire, that they desire independent nationality, that we may go as an independent sovereignty to demand treaties, we can understand what they are asking for, and we can discuss it on its merits. I am not going to say whether we should have it or not; it is not pertinent to this discussion; but I do say that he who undertakes to assert that a colony can have the power of making independent treaties says what I doubt very much whether he believes himself, but what I am certain he cannot make any one else believe who knows anything of the position of independent nations. The question of a treaty with Spain or with any other nation is one of a bargain between people, and we cannot demand, but we can ask, we can negotiate, and, if those on the other side are willing to enter into the negotiations, if they see it to their advantage to yield concessions in return for concessions, we can get treaties. I think, after the statement of the First Minister, that the Government have been and are earnestly engaged in the work of getting treaty arrangements with Spain, the House and the country may fairly leave the matter in that position, trusting to the Administration to press as far as they can for those treaty arrangements, which will be to the advantage of this country and reciprocally, I hope, to the advantage of the country with which we may make them.

Mr. MITCHELL. This is, perhaps, as important a debate as any which has occurred during the present Session, and it is one in which the future of this country is largely involved. I have listened with very considerable interest to the remarks made on both sides of the House, and while I pay great respect to the utterances of my hon. friend who has just sat down, and recognise the eloquence with which he has put forward his view of the case, I must say that I do not entirely agree with the conclusions at which he arrives. I may also say that I do not agree with the contentions of the other side of the House. I am in the happy position that I think I represent independent public sentiment, both inside of this House and outside; and while I do not assent to propositions brought forward for purely party purposes, for the object of making an attack on the Administration, neither do I agree altogether with those wholesale defences of an Administration which has a great many faults. I agree with the right hon. the Premier that this not the time to discuss the question of whether the Government have done their duty or not, that this is not the time, when questions are on the tapis, important national questions are under consideration, important questions between two foreign nations, in which we desire to participate, this is not the time for the gentlemen on the Opposition benches to get up and point out the reasons why it will ruin and injure this country if our Government do not step in and endeavor to secure a share of the benefits which a foreign country has obtained. Therefore, I think it is indiscreet at this moment to arraign the Government, to pour-tray the disadvantages and point out the ruin which this country may suffer if this treaty is not negotiated. It is not the time to point out to the Government their duty. They know their duty, and while I am not one of those who believe they always do it, yet I believe that, in an important question such as this is, the Government have too high a sense of the responsibility which devolves upon them to allow an opportunity like this to pass them without endeavoring to secure to Canada, or taking the preliminary steps to secure to Canada, the advantages which she would enjoy by participating in those which are given to either Spain or Cuba. I hold that the time to arraign the Government is not now, but when, having their attention called to the necessity of it, not only by the public prints but by the motion of the hon. gentleman, they neglect it. I think, perhaps, to some extent, the hon. gentleman's motion was judicious and proper, but I think the pursuance of that motion, as followed out by some of the hon. gentlemen opposite, may work to the detriment of Canada and may hinder and retard and handicap the hands of the Government in carrying it out. A word as to what my hon. friend from Cardwell (Mr. White) has said, and I suppose I may say "hon. friend," for everyone says he will be an "honorable" soon, and I am sure he will be a great addition to the Administration when they get him. He arraigns the members on the other side of the House and gentlemen like myself who may sympathise with them in some particulars, by telling them to ask for independence if they want it, but not to expect to get the treaty-making power. It is not necessary to have independence to have the power to make treaties, or at all events to get the power to arrange the preliminaries of those treaties.

Mr. WHITE (Cardwell). Hear, hear:

Mr. MITCHELL. I believe that all we have to do to-day is to say to the Imperial Government: We, as Canadians, knowing better than you can the necessities of our trade and the peculiarities of our position, claim the right to have you place us in such a position with foreign nations that we may arrange the treaties with them, and, if it is necessary to confirm them, we expect you to do it sub silentio, without question or negotiation, whether it suits Birmingham or Manchester or Sheffield, or suits the ideas of free trade or not, but because Canada desires it and her statesmen ask it. I should like to speak further upon some other points, but I have been suffering so much from cold that I can hardly give utterance to my views on this. There is one thing, however, that I feel it my duty to say as the representative of the county of Northumberland. I had placed in my hands a letter received from a friend of mine in Chicago, bearing upon a question which, if not exactly directly in the sense of this motion, was so nearly allied to it that I hope the House will allow me to refer to it. We have heard of deputations of millers and of those interested in the manufacture of flour coming to the Government and asking that an additional duty be placed on flour because there is a discriminating duty against it in the duty placed on foreign wheat. That is a thing which directly affects the interest of the United States and United States manufacturers, as it does those of Canadians and Canadian manufacturers. It affects Canadians not only in connection with their manufacturers, which principally applies to the western portion of this Dominion, but also as to consumers, which applies mainly to the Province of Quebec and the eastern Provinces of this Dominion. Now, Sir, what is asked to be done? They claim that there is a difference in the duty on wheat and the duty on flour, against the miller, because the relative duty is greater on wheat than it is on flour, and these millers modestly come here and ask this Government to increase the duty on flour, to allow them to get wheat without a discriminating duty against it, thereby adding to the increased cost of an article of consumption which is the main staple of the poor people of the country. Now, Sir, I say that in place of levelling up the duty to make flour correspond with wheat, if there is a difference, let the Government level down the duty. If we cannot get the duty off flour altogether, as we ought to have, the Government ought not, at all events, to increase it, particularly at a time of a crisis such as exists in the country to-day. Sir, I have had placed in my hands a letter in relation to that question, and I will read it if the House will permit me:

"DEAR SIR,—I see by the Canadian newspapers that it is the intention of your Government to increase the duty on flour. As I believe you are well posted on that subject, will you please let me know your opinion. I hear on the board of trade here—

That is, in Chicago—

"that should your Government put up the duty—

That is the point to which I wish to call the attention of the Government now—how it is going to affect us with the United States—

"they will petition the Congress to raise the duty on barley, rye, lumber and fish from Canada, to such a figure as to stop its business. No doubt your Government will hear both sides of the question before they vote on it."

Now, Sir, what I ask is this—speaking for the consumers, the large class of consumers, the large outside party of which the right hon. Premier spoke of me as the representative, the other day—I speak for them, I speak for the consumers in the Maritime Provinces, forming a very large class of the population, and I say that the duty ought not to be put upon a staple article of produce which forms their food; and if there does exist any discrimination against the miller in the country, let the Government level down the duty and take it off wheat, and bring it down to the level of what flour is, and not add to the cost of living, to the cost of the poor man's bread, by increasing the duty on flour and levelling it up. That is all I have to say on that subject just now. At a later stage, perhaps, when I can speak more directly on the subject, and I am in better condition to speak, I shall take the opportunity of discussing the subject at greater length.

MR. HILLIARD. The hon. gentleman who has just taken his seat, I think, is out of order, because this is not the proper time to speak on this question. The millers have asked the Government—

MR. SPEAKER. The hon. gentleman must confine his remarks to the question of the treaty; he must not speak on the flour question.

SIR JOHN A. MACDONALD. Then, I think the hon. member for Northumberland (Mr. Mitchell) ought to have been stopped.

MR. BLAKE. Otherwise his observations would remain unanswered.

MR. MILLS. The House, no doubt, took note of the fact that the hon. member for Northumberland (Mr. Mitchell) threatened the Government with what might seriously affect the country in case it persisted in the policy which it was rumored it was likely to adopt. But the observations of the hon. member for Northumberland were not relevant to the question before the House. The discussion indulged in by the First Minister and by the hon. member for Cardwell (Mr. White) was equally irrelevant to the motion of my hon. friend from Digby (Mr. Vail). Now, Sir, my hon. friend did not go into any such discussion as the hon. member for Cardwell spoke of. He did not say that the establishment of a reciprocity treaty with the Spanish West India colonies was necessary to the existence of the Maritime Provinces, or of Canada. That was not the subject of discussion. Every one knows the people of Spain, at all events, know that unless Canadians believe that there is some advantage to be derived from a reciprocity treaty, they would not seek to engage in such a treaty at all; and if the First Minister or the hon. member for Cardwell supposes that we can go to Spain, with a view of negotiating a reciprocity treaty and inform the Spanish authorities that we have no interest in such a treaty, that it would not be advantageous to the people of this country, they would hardly take the trouble of entering into any correspondence or of negotiating with us. I also observe that the hon. member for Cardwell said that to speak of negotiating treaties on our own behalf was scarcely less than treasonable; that, in fact, it was a demand for separation in disguise, and that those who are advocating the right to negotiate a reciprocity treaty were in favor of independence. Well, Sir, I observe that the Imperial Government has taken a different view. I understand, from the public press, that at this very moment they have authorised the Government of Newfoundland to enter into negotiations with a view to a reciprocity treaty with the United States, and certainly no one supposes that the Government of Newfoundland, at the present time, is demanding independence or separation from the mother country. What is important at this time, is to bring before the House the fact that in our commercial relations with the Spanish West Indian colonies, in consequence of the existing treaty between Spain and the United States, the products of the United States, such as we also might send to the Spanish West Indies, are admitted from the United States on more reasonable terms than they are from Canada. Now, we understood that the hon. gentleman who is at the head of the Government, and his colleagues, had taken steps to secure a treaty between Canada and Spain similar to that which now obtains between the United States and the Spanish West Indian colonies. My hon. friend who is leader on this side, asked the First Minister how it was that these negotiations came to be broken off; how it was the Government did not persist in these negotiations and secure for Canada terms at least as favorable as those which existed at the present time between the United States and the Spanish West Indian colonies. The First Minister did not answer that question; he evaded it. The Finance Minister, just before we adjourned at six o'clock, informed us that these negotiations had been broken off, and that they had been allowed to stand over until it would be seen what were the results of the proposed ratification of the treaty which has been negotiated between the Government of Spain and the Government of the United States. Well, Sir, we do not understand, on this side of the House, why it is that these negotiations should be deferred. If the treaty is completed between the United States and Spain, if it is ratified by the Senate, and the Spanish Government are favorable to a reciprocity treaty, why did our Government not take the initiatory step? Why did they not go at least as far as the present treaty relations go between Spain and the United States? That would have been a step in the right direction, and it would have facilitated negotiations for a further treaty, to secure more direct trade relations, even than would have been secured by an arrangement of that sort. What we would like to know is, why these negotiations were broken off—why the Government did not persist in them? The Spanish Government are favorable to reciprocity; they have shown that by their negotiations with the United States. We have the same products to offer them, and the Spanish West Indian residents would like to secure competition in their market, no doubt. They would like to purchase Canadian fish upon the most favorable terms. They know that the supplies which they obtain from the United States and from Canada would be obtained at a more reasonable rate if both Canada and the United States were competing in the Spanish West Indian market than if it was made a close preserve for American products alone. That being the case, and the course taken by the Spanish Government being before us, we are satisfied that the Government of Spain is ready to negotiate a treaty. They are willing to go at least as far as they went in their negotiations with the United States; they are ready to go further if the United States Senate ratifies the new treaty. Why did this Government not negotiate a treaty like that which is in force? Why did they not secure to our people trade relations at least as favorable as those which were obtained by the people of the United States with the Spanish West Indian residents? I say the hon. gentleman has not given us that information, and to talk about the imprudence of discussing the matter is quite beside the question. We admit that the treaty is advantageous; we admit that trade relations freer than those which exist, will be advantageous. The very fact that we propose to negotiate shows that we make that admission. That being the case, there is no possible imprudence in saying so. But what we want to know at this time is why a treaty similar to that which now obtains between the United States and the Spanish West Indies was not negotiated, and why those negotiations were broken off?

Motion withdrawn.

CANADIAN PACIFIC RAILWAY—CONSTRUCTION NEAR LYTTON, B.C.

MR. BLAKE moved for:

Information in the possession of the Department as to the character of the work done near Lytton, B.C., on the Canadian Pacific Railway, on that portion of the road for which Mr. Hugh J. Keefer had a sub-contract and which was under the inspection of his brother, Mr. George Keefer, Government engineer; also, copies of any statements as to the character of the material allowed as rock or as other than earth in this part.

He said: I make this motion in consequence of information which has reached me twice. At the close of last Session I received from one source a very authentic and circumstantial statements given to me by a gentleman, who communicated it upon the authority of a person who had personally known of it, setting forth the fact that a very considerable fraud had been committed with respect to this portion of the Canadian Pacific Railway; that a large quantity of stuff which was entered and counted as rock was really earth or sand, and that Hugh J. Keefer, the sub-contractor, I presume under an arrangement with the main contractor—I presume there was participation, but as to that I cannot say—received, the Government's estimate having been paid in that way, the price of rock for earth work to such an extent that within a very few months large sums have been accumulated by him. Since the commencement of the present Session I have received, from an entirely independent source, information to the same effect. I made no enquiries, and the information in both instances was communicated to me spontaneously. It seems to me to be my duty to bring this matter under the attention of hon. gentlemen opposite and of the House, in order that if those statements have not reached the ear of the Government, proper enquiries may be made. Hon. gentlemen will observe that the case is one in which the Government engineer is a brother, and my informants believe he was also, although not ostensibly, a partner with the sub-contractor, Mr. Hugh J. Keefer; and if those facts are correct, it would seem that a considerable fraud has been perpetrated on the country by the sub-contractor and the engineer.

Mr. POPE. I would say to the hon. gentleman that, of course, I knew nothing of this matter. I understand from the chief engineer that this is a very small contract and that it was mostly earth work. I have some information here from the chief engineer. This is what he says: There was a man by name Hugh J. Keefer, working upon contract 61, upon which Mr. George Keefer was engineer in charge; he is said to be a cousin of George Keefer. The part of the road on which Hugh J. Keefer appeared to be working, and who was said to have a sub-contract, was in charge of Mr. John Grey and Mr. Hannington, assistant engineers under Mr. George Keefer. Under Mr. John Grey and Mr. Hannington were employed a number of men as loose rock measurers, whose duty it was to measure the boulders as excavated, and record them in a book; these were to be returned daily to the assistant engineers, and upon these returns the quantity of loose rock was calculated at the end of each month by the assistant engineers, and checked by the engineer in charge. The work on this portion of the road is of good quality.

Mr. BLAKE. I made no complaint as to the quality.

Mr. POPE. Any papers we have on the subject will be brought down.

Mr. BLAKE. I am informed, and a statement is, that $100,000 were extracted by this means. The hon. gentleman says loose rock, boulders and earth, but he knows that the difference in cost between boulders and loose rock, and earth and sand, is very considerable. I daresay the difference is 25 cents on the one hand and $1.75 or $1.35 on the other.

Mr. POPE. We do not pay $1.85 for loose rock.

Mr. BLAKE. I do not know what the Government are paying for loose rock in British Columbia.

Mr. POPE. Nothing of that kind.

Mr. BLAKE. How much?

Mr. BLAKE.

Mr. POPE. I cannot say. Probably not more than half Motion agreed to.

RAILWAY ACCIDENTS.

Mr. MITCHELL moved for:

A statement in detail of the several casualties or accidents whereby passengers were injured or killed which have occurred on the Grand Trunk Railway—

Some hon. MEMBERS. Hear, hear.

Mr. MITCHELL. I am glad to notice that my motion meets with so unanimous a feeling of approval in this House.

and any of its branches, and the Canadian Pacific Railway, and any of its branches—

I think I should have added also the Intercolonial Railway, and any of its branches, and I shall be happy to have the motion amended in that way, if any hon. gentleman wishes it—from the 1st day of January, 1884, to the 1st day of January, 1885, stating in detail where and when such casualties occurred, the number of persons killed in each casualty; also number injured, stating whether seriously or otherwise, the several amounts paid, and to whom paid, as damages in each accident, whether any law suits for recovery of damages are pending, and stating in detail what amounts are still claimed thereon; also the causes of such accidents.

He said: I think, from the frequency of these accidents, and the very enormous character of many of them, it is very important that we should get this information laid before the House, and that these railway corporations should understand that public attention is being called to the manner in which human life is being sacrificed upon their roads. I am not pointing at any particular road now; I think there is general carelessness on all roads, and I think it is well to call attention to this fact and get these returns, as the law provides.

Motion agreed to.

CANADIAN PACIFIC RAILWAY—COST OF CONSTRUCTION.

Mr. BLAKE moved for:

A statement of the cost of the Canadian Pacific Railway from Winnipeg to a point 615 miles west of Winnipeg, divided under the usual sub-headings of cost of railway construction; or in case the company has not recorded the expense under the usual sub-headings, then divided in such a way and in such detail as the company has recorded it.

He said: I have more than once, on former occasions, felt it my duty to call the attention of the House to the alleged cost of this section of the Canadian Pacific Railway. It was with some difficulty, and after a good deal of delay, that a statement was obtained of the expense of the construction of the different sections, and the efforts up to this time to obtain a statement in those details which are usual in all works of railway construction has been a failure. We know the general sub-headings under which estimates are made for works of railway construction. We know that they are almost invariably on one line—that there are some leading sub-divisions which are well understood to be the proper mode of estimating and of recording what is the cost of a line. But, as I have said, former applications though acceded to by this House, though thought reasonable by this House, have not been responded to by this company in a satisfactory manner. So with reference to the contracts; we have not been able to obtain any of the contracts for the construction of the Canadian Pacific Railway, excepting one of the contracts of Langdon, Shepherd & Co., and the contract with the North American Contracting Company. All the other contracts have been omitted up to this time to be supplied to us by the Canadian Pacific Railway, though called for by this House by the medium of an address. I have said that I have felt it my duty to call the attention of the House on more than one occasion to the cost of this section, and to impress, if by any means I can impress, on the House, the importance of insisting on further information with reference to the cost of this section. We have several tests which we may fairly apply with reference to the cost of this section. Hon. gentlemen will remember that the section of which I am speaking is the section from Winnipeg to a point 615 miles west—that is, to the point to the eastward of the South Saskatchewan, so that the heavy bridge over the South Saskatchewan is not embraced in the cost of this construction. In fact, there is only one bridge of any importance embraced in this whole stretch of 615 miles—I mean the bridge over the Assiniboine—a bridge which is certainly important, but which probably did not cost, with its approaches, much more than one-third of the cost of the bridge over the Saskatchewan. For the rest, the road is as easy a road as is to be found anywhere, and the cost has been stated to us during last Session, irrespective altogether of the terminals and station buildings, and the offices and workshops at Winnipeg, so that we are dealing simply with the ascertained statement of the cost of 615 miles of line, of the cheapest description which it is possible to find in the character of the works which are necessary. Now, as I have said, there are several tests we may apply as to what the cost of this line may be. In the first place, there is the estimate of Mr. Fleming, made, I think, in the year 1880, for 1,000 miles of prairie line from Selkirk, trending more to the northward over a more difficult country than that traversed by the southern line—more difficult in several particulars, and notably so in respect of the river crossings—and certainly a much more expensive piece of line which Mr. Fleming estimated, at a period at which, if I remember aright, steel rails were much more expensive than they are at present—at $13,000 a mile for the whole stretch, including a light equipment. A light equipment has been estimated for the purpose of the present contract at $1,300 a mile, which would leave the cost of that more expensive prairie section at $11,700 per mile. Of course it is to be observed as against the observation of its being a more expensive section, that the line of the Canadian Pacific Railway is probably more substantial in the sub-grades than that referred to by Mr. Fleming. That is certainly an observation quite fit to be made, and it would probably compensate fully for the more expensive natural features of the road to the northward. Now, the next element for calculation is the actual cost of the branch lines of the Canadian Pacific Railway in the Province of Manitoba, and these are at a figure, by their own reports, which amount to $10,700 per mile. These lines, as we know, are not very extensive, though there is an important line from Winnipeg to the south and south-west; but the cost to the company is $10,700 per mile, over a country certainly not superior for railway building to that of the 615 miles to which I have referred. Another element in the consideration of actual cost—which is always more satisfactory than an estimate—is the actual cost of the 345 miles commencing at the termination of the section which is the subject of this motion—the 345 miles which commences at the 615th mile west of Winnipeg and terminates at the Rocky Mountains is a piece of road very much more expensive than the 615 miles. First of all, it is more expensive in respect to the haulage and the distance, because all the material which comes from the east had to be hauled over the whole 615 miles before it reached the initial point of those 345 miles; and we know that during the year before last the cost of the haulage of the material on the Canadian Pacific Railway amounted to about $1,200,000, and that last year it amounted to over $600,000; so that is not an unimportant point. Secondly, this piece of road, the 345 miles, possesses very much more difficult characteristics, with reference to the bridging. There is a very important bridge over the Saskatchewan river, which, with its approaches, cost between $500,000 and $600,000, which, if you divide it by the comparatively small mileage I am referring to, you will see makes an addition for one single bridge of something like $1,500 a mile over the whole distance. And lastly, the third unfavorable element comparatively is the well known circumstance, that in the course of the section to which I am referring, you pass the foot hills and up the Rocky Mountains. After Calgary there are some foot hills, and although up the hither slope of the Rocky Mountains the route is fairly good, it is very much more expensive than the ordinary work of the line. With these three relatively unfavorable elements—the distance from the base of operations, a very important bridge over a small mileage, and a country comparatively difficult, with a good deal of mountain work—the actual cost of that section of 345 miles was $14,530 a mile. So that you find the branch lines near Winnipeg costing $10,700; you find this section I have been speaking of costing $14,500; and you find Mr. Fleming's estimates, apart from equipment, to be $11,700. And now I come to my fourth and last element of the calculation in reaching the price, and that is embraced in the report of Mr. Reed, the engineer I referred to yesterday, with reference to a section in the mountains in British Columbia. Mr. Reed reports with reference to a particular section of 113 miles; and I am desirous to point out to the House what the features of this section are, and what his statement of the cost is, in order that we may bring it into a comparison with the cost of the section to which this motion is directed. The section to which he refers commences at Kamloops Village, and terminates at Griffin Lake, near the summit of the Eagle Pass in the Gold range. Mr. Reed says:

"From Kamloops village to the Little Shuswap lake, 38 miles, the line runs near the shore of the South Thompson river, crossing the farms that are located in the valley, where the small streams, tributary to the river, furnish water for irrigation. The grading and bridging on this portion of the line is very light, and the material is mostly sand and gravel. The trees are few and scattered, and the clearing and grubbing will be very light."

You will observe that this 38 miles is a very favorable piece of railway construction, and may not unfairly be compared, for most of the distance, to the prairie line.

"From Little Shuswap lake to Sicamous narrows, 45 miles, the line will be somewhat more expensive. The Shuswap lakes are of irregular shape, and their arms, extending out between the mountains, distort the railway line and cause a loss in distance of about 8 miles. The line leaves the South Thompson river at the head of the Little Shuswap lake, crosses a 'divide' to the Salmon arm of the Shuswap lakes, and passes around on the south shore to Sicamous narrows."

"From the west end of the Little Shuswap lake, going eastward, the excavation on the first 6 miles will average nearly 30,000 cubic yards per mile, about one-half of which will be rock. On the next 14 miles the work will average 16,000 cubic yards per mile, all earth and gravel. The next 13 miles will average 16,000 yards per mile, 1,000 yards of which will be rock, and the rest earth, gravel and sand. The remaining 12 miles to Sicamous narrows will average only about 10,000 cubic yards to the mile, 40 per cent of which will be rock. On this section there will be two short tunnels—one of 240 feet and one of 300."

"From Savonna's ferry to Sicamous narrows, a distance of 108 miles, the entire line is contiguous to navigable water, and is therefore more favorably situated for cheap and rapid construction."

There you see a section of 45 miles of a very different character—and I will advert presently, in more detail, to what I calculate to be the cost of that 45 miles.

"From Little Shuswap Lake eastward there is a marked change in the climate."

And he proceeds to state what the climate is, and goes on:

"From Sicamous narrows to Griffin lake, near the summit of Eagle pass, in the Gold range, 30 miles, the line follows the valley of the Eagle river. But little if any rock excavation occurs, and the earth work is very light. Some pile bridging and a short pivot bridge at Sicamous narrows will be required. The country is densely wooded, and clearing and grubbing will cost about $1,000 per mile over the remaining portion of the line, east to the Rocky Mountains."

I say, with reference to that 30 miles, being the eastern portion of this section of 113 miles, that the observation I made as to the westerly 38 miles may be repeated, namely, that it is a cheap line, possessing the general characteristics of the prairie line, except that there is a dense timber, and therefore the clearing and grubbing will cost $1,000 a mile, which is in excess of the cost on the prairie, where that cost is almost nominal. Now, Mr. Reed estimates the cost of this whole 113 miles at $16,000 a mile. Of course, the locality is one of the least favorable for railway construction, because the base of supplies is very much more distant, and the haulage is very much greater than that which was essential to complete the 116 miles west from Winnipeg. Then the broken character of the country and of the section itself involves a considerable difficulty in railway construction. It is not possible in such circumstances to construct as fast or as cheaply as when you have an unbroken stretch of prairie. But apart from the middle 45 miles, this section of 113 miles is not a difficult section. There are in that portion, according to Mr. Reed's estimate, no less than 151,000 yards of cubic rock, two tunnels, and 12,000 cubic yards of earth a mile, apart from the 3,000 or 4,000 yards of rock a mile. There is a very heavy timber over this section, making $1,000 a mile for clearing, cutting and grubbing, so that upon the whole, looking at these circumstances, my opinion is that a fair estimate for this 45 miles would be $22,500 a mile; but in order to be safe, I reduce the cost of these 45 miles, to $21,000 per mile, which makes $945,000, while the whole 113 miles are estimated at $1,808,000, leaving $863,000 for the remaining 68 miles, on 30 miles of which there is $1,000 a mile for clearing, post cutting and grubbing. Therefore, the comparison of these remaining 68 miles, with the prairie section, to which I have alluded, remains unfavorable, because you have $500 a mile about to add for the simple item of clearing; and the comparison remains unfavorable also with reference to the distance from the base of operations and the broken and mountainous character of the country. But making no allowance for all those circumstances, assuming there was no more clearing than on the prairie line, assuming that the base of operations was as near, assuming that the country was such that you could press on the work with equal rapidity and facility throughout that broken and mountainous country as on the prairie section, still the cost would be $12,700 a mile, for the 68 miles of these 113 miles, and the total cost of the 113 miles is $16,000 a mile. There you have my fourth element of comparison or calculation, the cost of this section in British Columbia, which, with its expensive 45 miles, Mr. Reed tells us is going to cost $16,000 per mile, and eliminating that expensive 45 miles, would cost between $12,000 and $13,000 a mile. With these four elements of comparison, what I desire to know is, how it comes that the section from Winnipeg to a point 615 miles west has cost, according to the statement of the company, no less than $16,780 per mile, or three or four thousand dollars a mile more than any of these other pieces of the line, and more than what the estimate, properly applied, would lead one to conclude it ought to have cost. To my mind it is wholly inexplicable. I cannot understand how it can be alleged that this 615 miles cost this sum of nearly $17,000 a mile; and yet that is the statement the company has returned to Parliament as the cost of that section. I have reason to believe that the first 133 miles from Winnipeg to Brandon, which was carried on under the former engineer of the company, cost about $10,000 per mile. Under the Langdon-Shepherd contract, which commenced at Brandon, a very high increase of price, an inexplicable increase, was adopted; but I cannot see how even there it could cost more than $12,800 or $13,000 a mile at any reasonable rates, and how we reach the sum of $16,700 or $16,800 per mile is wholly inexplicable. As far as I can judge, there cannot be less than two and a half million dollars of which we have no reasonable explanation whatever in the cost of this section. Now, some clue would be given as to what has become of this money, as to how this which, by a sad experience too lightly to be repeated, we know is our money, has been spent, if this motion be passed by this House and if compliance with it be enforced from the company and we receive a statement, according to the usual sub-heading of railway construction, of what the cost of this sub-section was.

Mr. POPE. The papers will be brought down. I can say to my hon. friend that he is laboring under a considerable mistake when he says the first 615 miles was lighter work than the 345 miles. I have travelled over all parts of this railway, and I can tell the hon. gentleman that the 345 miles are quite as light as the 615 miles. It is not built as usually with a prairie road; the road is elevated very high, so as to prevent snow collecting on it. The banks on each side where there is a cutting, and there are very few cuttings, are levelled up for a very great distance, to prevent the collection of snow. It is not very strange, it is possible this piece of road referred to in Mr. Reed's report may be as easily built as the road across the prairie, because they would not take the same pains with it, and there is nothing like the amount of earth to be removed as on the prairies, nor are there high banks to be built in many places as on the prairie. But the hon. gentleman is not singular in not being able to understand that. I do not suppose many lawyers who have devoted most of their time to the practice at the bar would understand railway construction. No doubt he has exercised great ingenuity and has studied the papers very closely, but it is an exceedingly difficult thing for a man to come from a lawyer's office and to understand why a section of grading should cost a great deal more than estimated; but he will have the papers, and what more information he desires.

Mr. BLAKE. I am quite aware, and I did not say that this is built as ordinary roads are; I said it was a road over the prairie. I am quite aware that the embankment on this line is wider than it ordinarily is.

Mr. POPE. And there is the height.

Mr. BLAKE. I am speaking of one of two things—the hon. gentleman is trying, as usual, to put two ideas into one sentence, but with my limited comprehension, to which he referred, I prefer to state one thing at a time. I was speaking of the width of the embankment and was going to speak of the height. I know that the embankments were very wisely made higher, having regard to the pliable material with which they were made. It is said that they are much higher than they need be, and I suppose they are as high as a judicious engineer would provide them to be; but the only information we have on the subject is the amount of earth work over the whole line. There is no statement of the earth work on this section, although there is of the average earth work all over, and it certainly is a surprising amount, one of the things one wants to find out a little more about. Even allowing for the earth work, I am still at a loss to understand the cost of the line. The hon. gentleman says I come out of a lawyer's office and know nothing about railways. I suppose he would say I do not know more about railways than he does about law, and I admit that is very little. But, Sir, I am sorry to say that for a great many years my life has been passed very little in my office, and very much in this House, and in the discharge of my duty as a public man, and that I cannot take the hon. gentleman's kind excuse that my attention to my own business prevents me from understanding this matter. I think the statements I have made will be found to be verified. They are based not upon my own information, but upon information supplied by the hon. gentleman himself and the Minister of Railways, with reference to other sections, and what he says with reference to the Columbia section is: I dare say it did not cost any more than the prairie section. I dare say it did not. I dare say it was not more expensive than the prairie section; but, according to this estimate of Mr. Reed, it cost a great deal less than the prairie section, and that is the point. I want to know how it is that it costs so much less than the prairie. I do not believe that they have given us an under-estimate of this, and therefore I believe there is an extraordinary amount of cost in the prairie line. Then, he says that 345 miles from a point 45 miles east of the Saskatchewan to the summit, is just as light as that from Winnipeg to that point.

Mr. POPE. Average.

Mr. BLAKE. Of course it is an average that we are talking of. He has been over the line, he says. Part by day and part by night, I suppose.

Mr. POPE. Every foot by day.

Mr. BLAKE. And perhaps he was looking out of the glass all the time?

Mr. POPE. No; I did not take my glasses.

Mr. BLAKE. What the hon. gentleman, running over the Canadian Pacific Railway at between 30 and 40 miles an hour, on a special train, with my hon. friend from Ottawa to cheer him by the way, and I know of no one who could better cheer him by the way, could not find out, I suppose is not worth mentioning; but, for all that, we would like the figures; and even if the work were just as light on the average for the 345 miles as it was on the prairie section, there is the big bridge which I mentioned; and even if the work were just as light including the big bridge, —

Mr. POPE. I did not say that. I did not say including the bridge.

Mr. BLAKE. He acknowledges then, that including the big bridge, it was not as light on the 345 miles as on the 615 miles; but the fact is, that the admittedly heavier section, what he now admits to be the heavier section, cost $14,500 a mile and the lighter section, $16,700.

Mr. POPE. The hon. gentleman must understand that they did not include the bridge in that statement; it was made when the road was first built. I must say that the hon. gentleman has displayed a great knowledge of railways when he says the usual width of a dump is 12 feet. The width of that dump is 16 feet.

Mr. BLAKE. I did not speak of a dump at all.

Mr. POPE. Well, the embankment. Did he ever see one on a road that was 12 feet in width? I never saw one less than 14 feet.

SUPPLIES FOR THE HUDSON'S BAY STEAMER "NEPTUNE."

Mr. VAIL moved for:

Copies, in full, of the accounts and vouchers of all provisions, coal and other supplies furnished the Hudson's Bay steamer Neptune at Halifax in July last.

Mr. McLELAN. I would ask the hon. gentleman to amend that by adding "Copies of all tenders upon which all the contracts were based."

Mr. VAIL. I have no objection at all.

Motion, as amended, agreed to.

INLAND FISHERIES.

Mr. O'BRIEN. In the financial statement of the Treasurer of the Province of Ontario, delivered at Toronto the other day, I find a claim made on behalf of the Province for a sum, I think, of $129,000 for license fees due to the Province for licenses for fishing in the inland waters of Ontario. I think that, in view not only of the importance of the sum mentioned, but also of the fact that the Government and other members of this House have taken a great interest in the promotion of our inland fisheries, it is for our interest to know, at the earliest possible moment, in whose hands the promotion of these fisheries is. It might be a strong argument for those who favor a legislative over a federal union that in almost every province of legislation which we take up we are hampered, and our hands are tied, by being met with this conflict of jurisdiction. The constituency I represent is largely interested in this question. We have some 100 miles of coast on the Georgian Bay. We have in every township inland lakes and rivers, which are largely stocked with fish, and we have been making great efforts to preserve that industry, which is of great importance and value. The Government have also done a great deal in this direction in the last year or two, and I was hoping that before the expiration of another Session we should have had these fisheries placed on such a footing that we would avoid that which has happened in almost all the older Provinces—an entire destruction of the fish in the inland waters. So far as I have had an opportunity of considering the nature of the judgment to which reference is made, I do not think it goes as far as is stated by the Provincial Treasurer. I do not gather that it at all affects the rights of the Dominion to control the fisheries, so far as legislation may go, irrespective of fees for licenses. In fact, it seems to be in somewhat the same position as the liquor question, and attended with all the same difficulties. But, from a cursory examination of it, I do not think it debars the Dominion from exercising that control over the fishing which has already been claimed and exercised. Of course we can hardly expect the Dominion will continue to administer a branch of the executive if the fees are to be taken by another party, if they are only to have the expense and another Legislature is to receive whatever profit may be obtained. I cannot myself understand by what process of calculation the Treasurer of Ontario has arrived at the very large sum he claims, because the fact is, that so far as the inland fisheries are concerned, which alone were affected by the judgment in the Queen against Robertson, which came from the Province of New Brunswick, the fees are exceedingly small and the expense of management correspondingly great. I think that so far as any money interest is concerned, the Province will find that it had better have allowed the subject to rest. But however that may be, it is important that we should know how far this judgment affects the Province and the Dominion. Having taken myself great interest in this matter, and knowing that other hon. members are interested in it, and that the Government will be compelled to take it into consideration, I beg to move:

For a copy of the judgment of the Supreme Court in the case of the Queen against Robinson, so far as the same relates to the rights of Provincial Governments to control the inland fisheries of the Dominion; and also for copies of all correspondence between the Government of the Dominion and that of the Province of Ontario in relation thereto.

Motion agreed to.

THE GRAND TRUNK RAILWAY.

Mr. MITCHELL moved:

For copies of the returns as required to be made under the Consolidated Railway Act of 1879 and the Acts in amendment thereof, of 1881 and 1884, by the Grand Trunk Railway Company, for the fiscal year 1883-84, in each case separately; and

1st. The number of miles of main line of Grand Trunk, with statement of actual total cost of construction and equipment thereof. The separate cost per mile of construction thereof, without rolling stock. The total amount of capital account now standing against the said railway, including its equipment.

2nd. A statement in detail, showing the several branches or side lines now owned by the said company, including the number of miles in each, with the amounts severally paid for each. How such amounts were paid; whether paid in cash or securities, and the statement and character thereof in detail. The amount for which each of such securities was sold, and the net amounts which were realised in each.

3rd. A statement in detail of any railway line or lines leased by the Grand Trunk Company or agreed to be worked by them on a percentage of earnings or other terms, with the length of each of such lines and the conditions in detail of the agreements in relation thereto.

4th. A statement in detail of any interest the Grand Trunk Railway may have in any other railway or railways, with the securities in detail that they may hold in relation thereto.

5th. A statement in detail of the net earnings of each of the railways mentioned in the four preceding clauses, after the payment of working expenses, for the past financial year of each of the said railways, with a statement in detail of the percentage that working expenses bear in each case to the gross earnings.

6th. Whether any and what amounts were paid by the Grand Trunk Company towards the construction of the Toronto and Ottawa Railway, and the amount thereof; with the statement of the gross as well as the net earnings of the said railway, for the past financial year of the said railway, and a statement of where these funds came from; also, a statement as to where they appear in the accounts of the Grand Trunk Company's accounts or returns.

Mr. McMULLEN. I certainly think it is unwise to assist any hon. gentleman in this House to worry and annoy a railway company in the way in which the hon. gentleman is determined to annoy and worry the Grand Trunk. I do not think it is wise for this House to assist him in calling upon the Grand Trunk Railway Company to bring down extended returns of this kind. It will cost them a great amount of money, and will be of no use to the country, that I can see. I have noticed, since it has been my privilege to sit in this House, that the hon. gentleman has got some peculiar spleen of his own against the Grand Trunk, that apparently is not very well known to any other member. I cannot understand what it is. Possibly there may be a $10,000 nigger in the fence, or something of that kind. I have noticed that he has a continuous antipathy against that corporation. The word Grand Trunk is hardly ever mentioned in the House but that he goes for that company like a mad bull at a red rag. I notice that the hon. gentleman has got three motions on the Order paper, and every one of those motions is Grand Trunk, Grand Trunk, all the time. I would certainly like to have some explanation of the secret of his antipathy. It appears to me that in justice to the House, as well as to himself, the hon. gentleman ought to enter into a detailed statement of all the grievances that exist between himself and the Grand Trunk, of all the facts at issue between them. I think certainly that we should not permit this Order to pass until the hon. gentleman gives the House such explanation as will warrant us in believing that it is necessary, in the public interest, that we should permit it. The Grand Trunk Company has performed a great deal of valuable service to this country; it was the pioneer line of this Dominion, and I do not think it is quite right that we should permit any hon. gentleman here to ask questions, from time to time, to annoy the company in this kind of style. I hope the hon. gentleman will give the House some extended explanation of the cause which leads him to take this course.

Mr. MITCHELL. I certainly did not desire to occupy the time of the House at any length with remarks on the Grand Trunk at the present moment; but since the hon. gentleman who has just sat down has chosen to make references to me, and thinks it is due to the House that I should give some explanation why I want these returns, I shall be happy to comply with his request. That hon. gentleman has chosen to imply some personal interest, or some $10,000 nigger in the fence, or some other reason, which, I presume, he intends to be jocular about—or, at all events, to imply that I have personal motives in my action in relation to the Grand Trunk. Sir, that there may be some personal differences between the leading executive and myself, is true; and, Sir, I thought that I had given, last winter, sufficient explanation of my attitude towards the Grand Trunk Company. Was my hon. friend, who has chosen to make these inferences about myself, in the Committee of Railways and Canals last winter when this matter was discussed, when another hon. gentleman, who is now in my eye, chose to make similar references to those which the hon. gentleman has just made? Does the hon. gentleman not recollect what my answer was to my hon. friend then? I am prepared to make the same answer now. I leave it to the House, who witnessed the struggle last winter, between myself, individually, and a great corporation—a struggle in the interests of the public of Canada, a struggle in vindication of Canadian rights, a struggle to remove the stigma and stain that have been put upon Canadian statesmen, the Canadian Government, the Canadian people and Canadian institutions, by the leading power that controls that corporation in London. Was the hon. gentleman not in the House when I read the report of the proceedings at the semi-annual meeting, in April last, when they charged this House with corruption, when they slandered the people and Parliament of Canada, and when they found fault with our enterprise and attempted to dictate to this Parliament how they should spend their money and what undertakings they should enter into? Did the hon. gentleman not hear those remarks; and if they are not sufficient explanation of the reason why I have placed these motions on the papers, I will give him and this House further explanation. Everyone knows that this corporation owes this country $26,000,000, and ten years' interest on that amount, and that this corporation, through its chief executive officer, threatened the Government of Canada that if they dared to enter into and encourage the construction of a Canadian Pacific railway across the continent, the power and vengeance of the Grand Trunk would be visited upon them. We want, and this House has a right to demand, that that company shall place before Parliament, each year, information which they are bound to supply, according to the statute. The hon. member who last spoke should have paused before making an exhibition of himself by questioning my right, or the right of any other hon. member, to ask information on public affairs, information on a subject which we have a right to know about, and which I am sure the House will order to be granted. Does any one question the right of the hon. member for West Durham (Mr. Blake) when he rises, day after day, to move strings of resolutions respecting the Canadian Pacific Railway, an enterprise which Canada has initiated and is bound to carry out. Did anyone question the motives which inspire the hon. gentleman. I might ask why should the hon. member, day after day, place motions on the paper, calling for statements and returns, and asking for information in regard to the Canadian Pacific Railway. Have I, as any hon. member, ever questioned the hon. gentleman's right? No. He has a right to move for information which he desires to procure, and which he, as a representative, has a right to demand; and why should I, as an hon. member, not have a right to call for returns which the statute requires the Grand Trunk and the Canadian Pacific Railway to lay before the House from year to year. But this House has supreme power outside of the statute, and it has the right to obtain all information from its debtors as to the manner in which they are expending their money, as to why they have entered into enterprises which may be very questionable in their character, such as branch railways and speculations which may imperil the safety of the $26,000,000 the company owe us. If that is not sufficient, I will tell the hon. gentleman that it is the time Grand Trunk, that monster corporation which dictates to the people and the Government of Canada, should understand, and their representatives and controllers in England should realise, that Canada is not going to tolerate any more of their insolence, or put up with any more of their insinuations. The other night I read from the statements of Sir Henry Tyler and those who spoke in his interest—I have not the extracts here, but I am able to produce them again—containing the insinuation that this House was corrupt, and asking how much of the £6,000,000 sterling voted for the Canadian Pacific Railway had gone into the pockets of hon. members of this House, or members of the Cabinet. Such an insinuation is an outrage upon the independence and honesty of this Parliament of Canada, and ought to have been resented in a more striking manner by some hon. members on the Treasury Benches. It has not been done, and I have an opportunity of doing it now. If I had possessed the information then, which I have now, I would have talked to them about corruption. For what were the thousands of dollars put in circulation in Montreal—for what were they given by the Grand Trunk on a certain occasion? I may have to enlighten the hon. gentleman about these things before we get through. In conclusion, I desire to say this: I have a right, in the public interest, to enquire how the money that is due to Canada by this company is going to be paid. I have a right to see as to the condition of the enterprise which is security for the money. I recollect, when we of the Maritime Provinces were entering into Confederation, this Grand Trunk debt was put forward as an asset against the investments of New Brunswick and Nova Scotia, when the matter was dealt with in London, and it was represented and counted as a good asset. I, as one of those representatives, have a right to know what the particulars are and what is the condition of that security for repayment of the money. I have a right to ask why the Grand Trunk have put a million dollars in the road between Toronto and Ottawa, which I cannot find charged in the Grand Trunk accounts, but which was paid for by them. I want to unearth some of the jobs perpetrated in connection with the Grand Trunk, and I have a right, as a representative of the people, to ask that this information which is embodied in my motion be given to us, for the purpose of finding out in what position our accounts stand, whether the condition of that enterprise is satisfactory, or whether it is not the duty of the House and of the Government to deal with that corporation and prevent it squandering money and thus removing all chance of this country ever getting recouped any portion of the money due it. These are my reasons for making this motion, and I think they are good and substantial ones.

Motion agreed to.

SQUATTERS IN TOWNSHIP 3, RANGES 23 and 24, WEST.

Mr. CAMERON (Huron) moved for:—

Return showing

1. The names of all squatters or occupants on the various sections in Township 3, Ranges 23 and 24, west; when such sections became occupied; the various applications made by such squatters or occupants to acquire said land; all petitions and correspondence with the Government respecting residence; all declarations made by such squatters or occupants and sent to the Government touching said land; the names of all persons who have been allowed to make entries on said lands, and the names of all squatters or occupants who have not been allowed entries; the decision or adjudication of the Government respecting all such claims, and the reasons therefor.

2. All claims made by the Morton Dairying and Farming Company to said lands; when such claims were made; the action of the Government or Department of the Interior thereon; a copy of any agreement, lease or license under which said company claim said land; and all correspondence with the Government and said company respecting said claim, and the action of the Government or Department thereon; and all other documents or papers affecting said land.

He said: My reason for troubling the House with this motion is contained in the following letter, which I shall read to the House. It is dated 20th February, 1885, and addressed to myself, and is in the following terms:—

“DEAR SIR,—In the fall of 1881 I, with a number of others, squatted on Township 3, Ranges 23 and 24, west. In May, 1882, a company, by the name of the Morton Dairying and Farming Company, informed us that these two townships were part of the land they bought from the Government. Since that time we have sent a number of petitions and letters to the Minister of the Interior, asking him to give us an entry for our land, but all we can do seems to be of no use. At different times we have asked three members on the Government side of the House to take our case in hand. Two of them promised to do so—the third one advised us to go to the North-West, where the land was in market. In 1882 an order was sent from Ottawa to the land agent, asking him to send in a report of the number of squatters, their improvements, &c. In 1883 blank forms were sent us to fill up, asking us some forty-two questions. These forms had to be filled up under oath. Well, the forms were filled up and sent to Ottawa. In September of the same year an order was sent to the land agent to give us an entry for our land. In a few days the order was cancelled. The excuse they gave us was that they were not aware that the land was reserved land. During those few days seven of the squatters got an entry. There are eleven of us that have the same right to get an entry as those who got it. Will you be so kind as to take our case in hand, and try if you can get them to give us our land, and oblige, “Yours truly,

“WILLIAM MUSTARD.”

“P.S.—As for the company, every dollar's worth they had on the land was sold by the sheriff in the summer of 1883.

“W. M.”

Now, Mr. Speaker, there are some facts in this letter, some statements, which I desire to submit to the attention of the House. I find, by the terms of this letter, that in the fall of 1881 eighteen heads of families left the Province of Ontario to settle in the North-West, and these eighteen heads of families, as this letter states, squatted on vacant Government lands in Township 3, Ranges 23 and 24, west. That is the first fact. I find that all, or nearly all, of these men, in the fall of 1881 and the spring of 1882, entered into possession of what they supposed to be their lands, and made some improvements thereon, such as putting up houses of the dimensions required by law, and entering on the cultivation of the soil. That is fact number two. I find, by the official Gazette, that on the 28th of February, 1882, long months after these men had squatted upon the land, the Morton Dairying and Farming Company gave notice of their intention to apply for an Act of incorporation, and some months after the 28th February, 1882, this company did become incorporated. That is fact number three. Now, Sir, recollect all this took place several months after the settlers or emigrants had entered on the settlement of their land. I find, further, that after these men had entered on the settlement of their land, after they had made some improvements on their lands—and they were bona fide settlers from the Province of Ontario—some time in the year 1882 that company gave notice to these settlers that the land belonged to them and gave them notice to leave it. That is fact number four. I find that these men, according to the statements of the letter, by petition, by representation, by letter and otherwise, stated their complaints to the agents in Manitoba, and sent their complaints to the Government, at Ottawa, and in answer to these complaints an Order in Council was passed, in 1882, and was transmitted to the local agent, allowing these squatters to make their entries. Fact number five. This action of the Government was correct. Nobody has any objection to it. After that Order in Council reached the local agent, seven of the eighteen heads of families to whom I have referred having become aware of the Order in Council, made entry and thus secured their lands. But unfortunately within one week after the Order in Council had been transmitted to the local agent in Manitoba the Order in Council was cancelled, and the remaining eleven of the eighteen were deprived of their right of entry, and up to the present cannot get any redress. I find another fact established by this letter—that this Morton Dairying and Farming Company, almost the moment it began to exist, ceased to exist. It became insolvent, and in September, 1883 the company's assets were sold out by the sheriff of Manitoba. All the assets and property of the company were sold by the sheriff, and yet from the fall of 1881 down to the present time eleven of the eighteen who settled on the lands there have been unable to obtain an entry for their land. Now you see that these eighteen heads of families left their homes in the Province of Ontario and went to the Province of Manitoba and settled upon unoccupied lands owned apparently by nobody, and claimed by nobody except the Government, until months after they made occupation there. They left their homes in good faith, and settled there in good faith, relying on the assurance of the Government to encourage, as far as possible, all the immigrants that would settle in that country. And yet, Sir, although these representations have been made to the Government, although affidavits have been sent to the Government, yet up to this hour these men have been unable to obtain their entries. I do not know how many of these unfortunate men, who have been dangling for three years and a-half between earth and heaven, hoping against hope, remain in the country to-day. I know that my friend, Mr. Mustard, who was a former constituent of mine, is there still; but how many more remain in the country I do not know. It would not be a wonder if many of them, dissatisfied and disgusted with the treatment they have received from the Government and from their officials in the North-West, left the country and removed elsewhere. I hope, however, that better counsels have prevailed among them, and that they have remained on their land. I hope that the energy and the indomitable perseverance which have characterised most of the immigrants who went to that country, have prevailed in the case of these men, and that they have remained, there in the hope, however faint it may be, that they will ultimately receive justice at the hands of the Government. Now, I regret that my friend Mr. Mustard has not sent his complaint to some person who has greater influence with the Government than I have. I have no other way of ventilating the wrongs of these men than on the floor of Parliament, and I can only avail myself of the opportunity this letter has given me to discuss this question, in order that the Government may see the necessity of dealing with the complaints of these men in the way they ought to be dealt with. I have more than once, both during the present and the preceding Parliament, found it my duty to point out, on the floor of Parliament, what I conceive to be the harsh treatment received by the settlers of the North-West at the hands of the Government or the employees of the Government in Manitoba and the North-West. I hoped, from the statements made in the House last Session, that a more liberal and generous policy would have been pursued by the Minister of the Interior in regard to these settlers. If the statements contained in this letter are true, and I have no reason to doubt them, I am sorry to see that a more liberal and generous policy has not prevailed; because the First Minister must admit that if these statements are correct, these men have been dealt with in the harshest possible manner. They have been allowed to remain there three years and a-half without their claims being recognised, and the hon. gentleman must know that nothing can check the progress and retard the settlement of the country so much as to let men like these remain in the unsatisfactory condition in which they have been allowed to remain. I am sorry to say that the case in question is not an isolated case. I have had half a dozen such cases brought under my notice since the opening of the Session. But it would be of no use for me to go to the Department of the Interior. If the remonstrances sent to the Government by the settlers, many of whom are warm friends of the Government, do not prevail with them, I can hardly hope that my voice will influence them; and my course is simply to state the facts to the House, in the hope that the House may press the Government to deal liberally with the settler. I have several other cases which I intend to bring before the House, in the hope of securing some redress for these people. Mr. Mustard writes that he wishes me to bring this matter before Parliament so that these eleven men, with their families, may obtain some redress.

Mr. CAMEBON (Huron).

I remember that last Session, when I drew attention to some of these complaints, the First Minister denied that any man was dispossessed of his land in the North-West or in the Province of Manitoba. If men who put their names to communications in the public press do not state what is utterly untrue, the Department has deprived more than one man of land and improvements. Let me refer to a statement made by a correspondent in a Winnipeg paper. I do not vouch for its correctness; but I will give the First Minister the man's name and address, and I will put the letter on the Table of the House, so that it may appear in Hansard. His name is Livingston, and he writes to the Winnipeg Sun as follows:—

"I see in your issue of to-day that Sir John Macdonald, in the debate on the Address, denies that any bona fide settler has ever been dispossessed. This I am in a position to contradict, for after residing in and cultivating my homestead for nearly nine years, and having improvements to the amount of $20,000, my land was sold by the Government, and I was dispossessed. Hundreds of others can tell the same story."

I have no doubt the correspondence on this case has been presented to the Department of the Interior. We find that the Government's own supporters, in a certain locality in the North-West, held a meeting, confined to Conservatives, with the view of pressing this matter on the attention of the Government; and being a purely Conservative meeting, it was supposed that its influence and power would prevail with the Government, and that the Government would see the necessity, in the interest of their own followers, of doing justice to them and giving them their entries. Sir, I do not know what cause has inspired the mad policy of the Department of the Interior during the past two or three years as regards the settlers in and the settlement of the North-West. There must have been some moving cause unknown to the public, otherwise the settlers in the North-West Territory would not have ground to complain. I find in a public newspaper published in the interest of the Government, a report of a meeting of Conservatives at Moose Jaw, at which resolutions were passed condemning the action of the Dominion Government regarding their land policy. It was resolved that the Government be memorialised by the Conservatives of that place, asking the Government to grant an immediate solution of the land problem. The complaint there made was just the same as the complaint I am now bringing forward. The people had been living upon their land for years before the line of the Pacific Railway in that district was located, and yet almost up to this moment, at all events up to the end of 1884, these men were deprived of the right of entry, and were kept in a state of suspense. I know of two or three cases of men from my own county, who, through my persuasion, were induced to remain on their lands in the hope that the Government would recognise their entries. I remember last year mentioning these cases to the First Minister, who commended the action of these men in remaining there. They remained another year, but still without their entries, hoping against hope, working on and improving the land in the hope of getting their entries. I believe the Government have now decided, and properly decided, that these men were entitled to their entries, and I suppose they have given them their entries by this time. It was not only by petition their claim was urged; the press that supports the hon. gentleman, from one end of Manitoba and the North-West to the other, has been pronounced on this subject. I propose to read an extract from the Times, to indicate the feeling that existed in the North-West and Manitoba with respect to the land policy on this question, a policy that is keeping the settlers in a state of perpetual uncertainty and suspense. The Times says:

"On the lands sold south of the railway belt—

And these are the lands to which I refer—

"there are scores of squatters who, at this moment, are planting their crops in blissful ignorance of this fact, that some speculator will soon own their farms and their labor spent on them. It is true the Department professed, some time ago, that compensation for disturbances will be given to those squatters who had made improvements, the compensation to be determined by a Government valuator; that, as a matter of fact, the buyers at the sale buy not only the land but the improvements; and even within the mile belt, the Government will find it a difficult matter to inspect the farms sold and to appraise the improvements. South of the belt, this will be utterly impossible. Then all, looking at its pecuniary results, is a failure. To reserve a vast quantity of land in the market at a time when money is exceedingly tight and the richest speculators poor, was madness. It is reasonably safe to say that Commissioner Wash did not advise that step. It was, no doubt, taken in pursuance of that inconprehensible policy which the Department has adopted at the suggestion of ignorant or interested friends. But the failure of the sale, in a pecuniary sense, is a small matter, compared to the evils it is bringing to this country. A squatter who has gone in upon the land, now being sold, and ploughed and sown, will think himself justified in holding it against all comers and his neighbors will think so too. Mr. Metcalf, of Kingston, has an easy task in selling the land, pocketing the commission; but the Department will find, when it comes to evict the squatter, that human nature, in the North-West, is much the same as in Ireland. If we cannot prevail against the Government and the speculator, the squatter can, at least, leave the country with a curse."

I do not want the squatters to leave the country with a curse. I do not want them to leave at all. I want them to remain in the country, but if you want them to remain, you must treat them with ordinary fair play, you must treat them with some degree of generosity and liberality, and you must not prefer an insolvent and speculative land company to the actual settler. That is what these men complain you do. They say that they were there before this company applied for an Act of incorporation; they say that six months before the company made application for incorporation they were on the land and made improvements on it, and the Government agreed to give them the land and sent them out papers to swear to. They did swear to these papers, and the Government passed an Order in Council granting them the land, but before the entries were made the Government cancelled the Order in Council, and these men are still without their entries. If that be the case, they have a fair and just ground of complaint against the Government. The Times still further discussed the question. I want to make this point so impressive, pointed, and strong, as to induce the First Minister, not from anything I can say, but from what his friends say, to do justice to these men:

"The fundamental blunder which underlies the policy of the political parties at Ottawa is that the North-West settler is a pampered individual, and that he ought to submit to little inconveniences like heavy taxation, notably land regulations and disregard of his rights as a squatter. The fact that large sums have been spent on the railroad here is held up to us as a proof of the beneficent treatment we are receiving at the hands of the older Provinces. That we pay three times as much per capita into the Dominion Treasury as the eastern tax-payer, that the National Policy increases the price of everything we buy, without adding a mill to the price of wheat, oats or barley, that even with a free homestead the settler's life is for some years a hard and unprofitable one. These and such like considerations are quietly ignored. To make matters worse, the people of Ottawa forget that not many miles from here a foreign flag offers the settler nearly all the advantages he can obtain here, with others, good railway facilities, peculiar to every settled region. He gets nothing here which he could not get elsewhere, and it should be the policy of the Government to treat him, not as though he were beholden to it for special favors, but in terms of equality and in a spirit of fair play. A few more blunders, a little more stamping on his corns, may provoke him, until he becomes 'unreasonable' in earnest."

I have drawn the attention of the First Minister to the statement made by my correspondent, to the opinions of the press that support him, and to a resolution passed at a Conservative meeting dealing with this subject, and I trust he will see the necessity, in the interests and prosperity and growth of Manitoba and the North-West, to at once deal with this question in a generous and liberal spirit. He must admit that for some cause—I am not going to discuss for what cause—the tide of immigration into the North-West has not been what was expected. The First Minister or some of his followers may say it is because I and some hon. gentlemen on this side of the House ventilate these questions on the floor of Parliament; but my tongue is not to be tied nor my mouth closed when a wrong has been committed, until justice be done. If our country is only to prosper by our lying about the condition of affairs in the North-West, I say the country should not prosper. No country can prosper without the truth being told, and I am satisfied if we tell the truth and deal with the immigrants in a spirit of generosity and fair play, that country is bound to prosper, and all that hon. gentlemen opposite may do will not prevent it from prospering. They may check its growth and stunt its prosperity to some extent, but its ultimate growth is beyond peradventure, no matter what the policy of hon. gentlemen opposite may be. That the state of the country is not what it ought to be is beyond peradventure. A prominent member of the hon. gentleman's party stated not long ago that we had spent large sums of money in immigration, and that everybody knew the settlement of the country was not what it ought to be; it was a truism that settlers were leaving in large numbers for the United States. I do not say whether that is true or not, as it does not affect the motion I am submitting; what I say is, that if the statements contained in the letters of my correspondent be true, these settlers have been hardly dealt with, and the quicker the Government retrace their steps the better for the country and the settlers. I do not make this motion out of any desire to do damage to the Government in any way, or with any view of making political capital. My sole desire is that something like justice should be done to these men. Hon. gentlemen opposite may cheer derisively. They cannot understand that a man can honestly submit these facts without political motives; they measure other people's corn by their own half bushel. As I have said, I do not present this case before the House with a view of damaging the Government. I have some idea of the difficulties the Government have to encounter in carrying out their regulations, when the carrying out of these regulations is entrusted to the hands of their subordinates in the North-West. I know something of the way in which these subordinates deal with the settlers there; and although the Government are responsible for a good deal of the difficulty, they cannot, in many respects, be chargeable, except through their subordinates, for things that have happened in the North-West and Manitoba. I make this statement with a view of securing redress at the hands of the Government, and I am sure if the First Minister finds the facts I have mentioned to be anything like correct, he will give a fair and dispassionate consideration to the question, and have no hesitation in at once directing the Department of Interior to rescind the Order in Council by which the Government cancelled the Order in Council allowing these settlers their entries, and thus give them the right to enjoy the fruits of their industry and the reward for their patience, long-suffering and forbearance.

Mr. ORTON. I did not hear all the remarks of the hon. gentleman, but although the hon. gentleman stated in the last part of his address that his object was not to injure the Government, or to decry its land policy, I must say that the tenor of the remarks which I did hear was calculated not only to bring the policy of the Government in the North-West into discredit, but to do what has been done in the past to so great an extent by the party to which the hon. gentleman belongs, namely, to decry the North-West and to deter settlement in that country. Why did he read the remarks of newspapers decrying the management of that country and comparing it with older countries; why did he refer to vested rights and to acts of oppression and tyranny which are not exercised by the Government of Canada? I maintain that there is no land policy to-day that can compare with that of Canada. The policy of the United States does not compare with the liberal land policy of this Government. I am not familiar with all the cases the hon. gentleman has brought forward, but I am familiar with one of those cases, that of Mr. Livingstone. Although he introduced that case with the view, apparently, of decrying the course pursued by the Government or by their officers in the North-West, if he made himself thoroughly acquainted with that case he would know that it resulted from a transaction under the former Administration, when the hon. member for Bothwell (Mr. Mills) was at the head of that Department, when a patent was granted which apparently was fraudulently obtained. The member for Bothwell has expressed regret, I believe, that that patent was issued, but he knows, as a lawyer, that there is no means by which a patent from the Crown can be set aside—

Mr. CAMERON (Huron). Oh, yes; there is.

Mr. ORTON—except by the law courts of the land, and it was not generous or proper that the hon. gentleman should refer to that as one of the instances in which the land policy of the Government was detrimental to the interests of the settlers of the country. I sincerely hope that gentlemen on that side will come to their senses in regard to this continuous harping upon the unfavorable conditions in which the settlers in that country are placed. I maintain that they are placed in an exceptionally favorable condition. Although we have not, perhaps, all the money at our command to build all the railways required in that country, still there is nothing the Government have not shown their willingness and desire to do; and if hon. gentlemen would apply themselves to assisting the Government to carry out their measures of good, instead of decrying the country, they would do more good to the struggling settlers. Men have gone up there and invested largely in that country, but their best efforts have been marred by the continual desire to injure the Government, by decrying the North-West and the facilities by which the settlers are surrounded there, and by making out that they are suffering hardships equal to those of the serfs of Russia. I am proud to say that the settlers in that country are in a much more favorable position than the settlers on the other side of the border. Last year I heard an hon. gentleman on that side of the House from Manitoba make some remarks on this subject, and state that our settlers were not in as good a condition as those on the other side of the border, but they have told me to-day that the settlers in Manitoba and the North-West are in a much more favorable condition than those in the neighboring States of Minnesota and Dakota. It is well known to members coming from that Province that the farmers in Minnesota and Dakota are taking over their grain and paying 15 cents per bushel duty, in order to sell it at Emerson and other points on this side, so that they may have their grain carried to the markets of the world by the Canadian Pacific Railway. Not only have the Government, but the Canadian Pacific Railway Company, exerted themselves to the very utmost to accommodate the settlers of that country, and to assist the development of our North-West. I have no doubt they will continue to do so in the future. There is a great deal still to be done in that country, but I am sure that if the Government fail, it is not from a want of desire but a want of power. I hope, therefore, that hon. members on the other side, instead of weakening their efforts, will co-operate in every way they can to develop the best means for helping the people of the North-West.

Motion agreed to.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.

WEDNESDAY, 25th February, 1885.

The SPEAKER took the Chair at Three o'clock.

PRAYERS.

MESSAGE FROM HIS EXCELLENCY.

Mr. CHAPLEAU presented a Message from His Excellency the Governor General.

Mr. SPEAKER read the Message, as follows:—

LANSDOWNE.

The Governor General transmits to the House of Commons the Report of the Royal Commission on Chinese Immigration, and the evidence taken thereon.

GOVERNMENT HOUSE,

OTTAWA, 24th February, 1885.

PATENT ACT AMENDMENT.

Mr. McCARTHY moved for leave to introduce Bill (No. 64) further to amend the Patent Act of 1882. He said: The purpose of the Bill is to add several clauses to the 23rd section of the Patent Act of 1872. That section gives to the Minister of Agriculture or his Deputy power to hear complaints with regard to the manner in which the licensee of a patent has fulfilled some of the conditions under which the patent has been granted, and it purports to make the decision of the Minister absolute and binding. Now, Sir, I much doubt the power of this Parliament to pass such a clause as that at all. It appears to me that it is a matter which concerns civil and private rights, and that it should be more properly left to the legislation of the Provinces. But if it is the law I think it is well that there should be some power given to the Minister to examine witnesses under oath, which he has not now; to compel the attendance of witnesses, and to compel them to produce documents that may be necessary to the proper adjudication of the matter. Further, I think there should be some appeal from the Minister's decision, and I propose that the appeal shall be to the Supreme Court. I introduce this Bill knowing that from the strong views which the Minister entertains as to his powers under the Act, it may be impossible to get his assent to the abolition of that power, but I believe that the judicial and the executive power should be separate, and I will gladly accept any amendment which may be proposed to my Bill which will have the effect of doing away with the power the Minister has under the Patent Act of 1872. In the meantime I move the first reading of the Bill.

Mr. BLAKE. I am sorry to hear the hon. gentleman give such an account of the autocratic habits of the Minister of Agriculture.

Mr. POPE. I am sure I will have the support of my hon. friend opposite since I am to lose the support of my hon. friend from Simcoe (Mr. McCarthy).

Mr. BLAKE. That shows that the hon. gentleman thinks the Minister knows as much of law as I think he does of railways.

Motion agreed to, and Bill read the first time.

CANADA TEMPERANCE ACT AMENDMENT.

Mr. McCARTHY moved for leave to introduce Bill (No. 65) to amend the Canada Temperance Act of 1878.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Explain.

Mr. McCARTHY. The object of this Bill is to permit those persons who, by the Canada Temperance Act, are authorised to sell in the county where the Act is in force—but not to sell to persons in that county—to sell in that county. The law now stands in this way: That those who are authorised to sell, such as distillers, brewers, wholesale merchants and others, may sell, provided they sell to persons who will take it out of the county, and those who live in the county where the Scott Act is in force may buy it outside and bring it in. It appears to me that this is a manifest absurdity, and I propose to permit those who have a right under the Act to sell, to do so to those who reside in the county, as well as to those outside.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Is there any limit as to quantity?

Mr. McCARTHY. The same as in the Act—ten gallons as to one class, and eight gallons as to beer. I do not make any alterations except the one I have spoken of.

Mr. BLAKE. The hon. gentleman seems to be much disposed to amend the Scott Act. Does he not think that he had not better turn his attention to amending the McCarthy Act?

Mr. McCARTHY. I may satisfy my hon. friend by saying that there is a clause or two in that direction also.

Mr. BLAKE. My hon. friend's modesty prevents him from saying how far he will amend it.

Mr. McCARTHY. It is only a small part of the Bill.

Motion agreed to, and Bill read the first time.

INSOLVENT BANKS, INSURANCE COMPANIES, &c.

Mr. EDGAR moved for leave to introduce Bill (No. 66) to further amend an Act respecting insolvent banks, insurance companies, loan companies, building societies, and trading corporations.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Explain.

Mr. EDGAR. The object of the Bill is to make provision that clerks and other employees of insolvent companies shall have three months' privilege over other creditors for arrears of wages. This was a provision of all the Insolvent Acts which this House has passed, and I do not see why it should be left out of an Act providing for the winding up of insolvent corporations.

Motion agreed to, and Bill read the first time.

TRANSFER OF BATTERIES.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT asked, Whether it is the intention of the Government to transfer the battery now stationed at Kingston to Quebec?

Mr. CARON. I beg to state that it is the intention of the Government to transfer "B" Battery, now at Kingston, to Quebec, and "A" Battery, from Quebec to Kingston.

CABINET REPRESENTATION OF BRITISH COLUMBIA.

Mr. SHAKESPEARE asked, Is it the intention of the Government to make provision for the Province of British Columbia to be represented in the Cabinet? If so, at what date?

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. I beg to say that the Government has not yet come to a conclusion on that subject.

ABSENTEES IN THE CENSUS OF 1881.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT asked, Is it in the power of the Government to ascertain how many persons out of those returned as forming the population of Canada according to the census of 1881, were absent from their residence at the time the said census was taken?

Mr. POPE. It is not.

PAYMENTS TO G. M. CLARKE.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT asked, What sums (apart from his salary as county judge) have been paid to G. M. Clark in each of the years 1879, 1880, 1881, 1882, and 1883 respectively? And for what services in each year? Also, what sums, if any, have been paid to him from the 1st July, 1884, to the date of this enquiry?

Mr. POPE. I am not in a position to answer that off hand. If the hon. gentleman will move an address, the papers will be brought down.

CANADIAN PACIFIC RAILWAY—PROGRESS ESTIMATES.

Mr. EDGAR asked, How is the figure of $5,160 per mile given in the progress estimates of the Eastern Section of the Canadian Pacific Railway as "rails as per standard" made up? What tonnage per mile is allowed for rails and what for fastenings? What price for each and how much for haulage in addition to the prices?

Mr. POPE. The $5,100 "rails, etc., as per standard," is made up of rails and fastenings, $3,207; sleepers, $683; track laying, $210; ballasting, $300; station building and water service, $400; engineering and superintending, $300. There were 97 60 tons of rails, and 7 40 tons of fastenings, making a total of 105, giving one-half allowance for siding. The price of the rails and fastenings was $30.

QUEBEC PROVINCIAL SUBSIDY.

Mr. LANGEЛИER asked, Whether advances have been made to the Government of the Province of Quebec since the 1st July last, on account of the provincial subsidy or otherwise; and, if so, when, to what amount on each occasion, and on what conditions?

Sir LEONARD TILLEY. There have been no advances made to the Government of Quebec since the 1st of July.

REPORT OF CHINESE COMMISSION.

Mr. BLAKE. I desire to call the attention of the Secretary of State to the fact that the report which he has just laid on the Table of this House was laid on the Table of the other Chamber of Parliament yesterday. As we have the advantage of having present in this House the Secretary of State and one of the commissioners, I think we might at least have expected that the report would be presented to us as early as to the other Chamber, and I do not very well understand how this could have arisen unless the hon. gentleman entrusted the report to the postmaster.

Mr. CHAPLEAU. No one regrets more than myself that this has happened. I received a Message from His Excellency conveying the report last evening, but I did not want to interrupt the proceedings of the House, and intended to present it at the end of the sitting; but, unfortunately, the adjournment was proposed and carried before I could do it.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. It was evidently my fault. I moved the adjournment too quickly.

Mr. BLAKE. I noticed that the hon. gentleman was very anxious to move the adjournment, but I think this report was presented to the Senate in the afternoon. They did not sit after six o'clock.

COMPENSATION TO BREWERS AND DISTILLERS.

Mr. KRANZ moved that the House resolve itself into committee to consider the following resolution:—

Resolved, That it is expedient whenever Parliament decides that a law prohibiting the importation, manufacture and sale of intoxicating liquors for beverage purposes should be enacted that equitable provision should be made for the compensation of brewers, distillers and malsters, so far as respects the diminution in value of the real property, premises and plant owned and used by them in their business.

He said: In rising to move the resolution in my hand, I desire to say that the principle expressed in it, the principle of compensation to those who are prevented by law from carrying on their business, is one so fair and just that I think it requires only a very few words on my part to recommend it to the unprejudiced consideration of this honorable House. It may be said that it is rather premature to move a resolution of this kind at present, when there is no legislation in favor of total prohibition before the House; but a large industry has been so much disturbed by the adoption of the Scott Act and by the great number of petitions presented to Parliament every day asking for total prohibition—that those engaged in this industry wish to have at the earliest moment an expression from this House as to what are their vested rights in their property. The industry of the manufacture of liquor, and especially beer, is a very large one. There are about 200 breweries, distilleries and malt houses in Canada; the capital invested in them is over $2,000,000, and the number of hands employed about 2,500. Already, wherever the Scott Act is put in force, this business is practically prohibited, and I think it is not more than fair and right, whenever a man's property is taken away from him in the interest of the general good, that he should be compensated. Not being a lawyer, I am not able to give a legal definition of vested rights; but it appears to me, as a layman, taking a common sense view of the matter, that a business which has been lawfully carried on for centuries, a business which has been carried on in this country with the consent of the Government, and which has yielded a large revenue to the Government who gives a vested right to those who invest their money in it. It may be said that their right is only a permissive right; but I believe their right is as perfect as that of any other manufacturer. It is true, they manufacture under a license, but the license given to a brewer or a distiller, or a tobacco manufacturer, or an auctioneer, is not a restrictive license. It is not imposed in order to restrict him in the prosecution of his business, but it is a license to produce a revenue to the Government; and let me tell you, the revenue derived from the industry of liquor manufacturing is a very large one. It amounts to about one-sixth of the total revenue of this country. If I am correct in this, every member of this House draws a certain percentage, while he draws his indemnity here, of the money which has been collected in the manufacture of beer and whiskey. It is beyond doubt that the majority rule in this country, and if in the opinion of the majority it is necessary that, for the general good and prosperity and morals of the people, the carrying on of a certain industry should be prohibited, well and good. Let the majority prohibit it, they have the right to do so, but they have no right to take away a man's property without compensation. Certainly public morality, commercial morality will not be furthered by an act by which you take away a man's property without giving him proper compensation. I hope I have clearly shown that this is a question which ought necessarily to be debated in this House, it is a burning question, and I hope hon. members will consider it calmly and without prejudice.

Mr. WELLS. I am glad, Mr. Speaker, to have the opportunity of seconding the resolution of my hon. friend. The only thing I find fault with in it is that, in my humble judgment, it hardly goes far enough; I should have been better pleased had it made allusion to another class which I consider have been harshly dealt with by this Parliament—I mean the licensed victuallers. But taking the resolution as it is, I think that inasmuch as it is simply an affirmation of the old constitutional axiom that private property shall not be taken by the authority of Parliament for public use, unless it is paid for, it ought not to require any great effort to induce this House to formally adopt it. I am sure if my hon. friend had simply moved a resolution affirming the abstract principle, without referring to any particular class or interest, it would have received the support of every member of this House; I do not imagine that any member, if such a motion had been proposed, would have risen to say that he could not conscientiously support it, so long as under any contingency it covered the case of a brewer, a malster or a distiller—and that with respect to that class he was willing to give the right to expropriate, but no right to compensation. Of course, Sir, in a purely technical sense, the property of a brewer or a distiller would not be taken under the operation of a prohibitory liquor law. The owner would still have the legal ownership of his property. He would still have the satisfaction of calling it his own, although he would be prohibited from using it as a brewery or distillery; and although the result so far as he is concerned would be precisely the same as if the property itself were expropriated. Now ought that circumstance to make any difference? I think not. We know that under the laws applicable to the expropriation of property the owner is entitled to compensation even if his property be only injuriously affected. It is not necessary that it should be taken or even touched. For instance, if the Government under the Public Works Act, or a municipality under the municipal laws, or a railway company under its charter, injuriously affects the approach to a property, no matter whether that property be a church or a tavern, the owner is entitled to compensation for its diminished value. Now, is there any difference between that case and the present? Is there any difference between the case of a brewer's right to compensation, because the free ingress and egress to and from his property is interfered with by a railway, and his right to compensation because he is forbidden by an Act of Parliament from using it altogether? If there is a difference, it must be purely technical and not reasonable or substantial. I know that a great many good and earnest men look upon this as a matter of conscience, and they say that under no circumstance will they consent to a compromise with the devil on the whiskey question, that the war that they are engaged in is a war of extermination, and that they will neither take nor give quarter. Now, while we may have great respect for the opinions of these men, because we know them to be sincere, I do not think that that is an argument which can be fairly addressed to Parliament. It is our duty, I submit, simply to enquire what is the legal status of these men who are engaged in the manufacture of beer and spirits, and to apply the same rule to them that we would apply to those engaged in the manufacture of any other article of commerce. If you make any distinction at all, you must put it upon an intelligent and intelligible principle. It seems to me that you will be driven to say that in no case where the trade is pernicious or dangerous to the public health, compensation can be allowed. In that case, Sir, the manufacturers of tobacco, according to some, the manufacturers of confectioneries, according to others, would be under the ban, and scores of other industries. I firmly believe that measured by the harm which tobacco has done to the human race it has as much to answer for as alcohol. Of course that is a mere matter of opinion, but when one considers not only the constant but the universal use of tobacco as compared with spirits the aggregate amount of harm it does must be enormous. At all events as between the two, it is only a question of degree. The argument, therefore, that we are now dealing with—the conscience argument—seems to me to be an argument for particular occasions; it does not seem to be an argument for every day. For instance, to use the illustration I have already referred to, if a railway company comes to this House and asks for powers to run their track through a brewery, or if we require for departmental purposes certain tavern premises in this city, would any hon. member say that he would grant the powers, but that, inasmuch as the trade is a pernicious one, he would deny the compensation? Yet all the surroundings of the two cases are just the same. In both, you require Parliamentary authority; in both the object of the expropriation is for the public advantage; in both the kind of property injured is exactly the same; in both, the injury is the same. Surely, if it offends the conscience of any man to grant compensation in a case where the owner of property is injured under a prohibitory law, it must offend his conscience also to grant it where the property is injured under the Public Works Act. Surely, it is a matter of small consequence to enquire in what way Parliament has authorised the injury to be done; whether by burning it up or pulling it down; whether by running a railway through it, or cutting off all access to it, or hermetically sealing up its doors. What difference is there between putting up a barrier or an embankment so that the public cannot get at a particular property, or passing a law which makes it a crime to do so? The only substantial question, in my humble judgment, is: Ought Parliament in any case to authorise the destruction of property even for the public good without requiring full and complete compensation? A great judge, Chancellor Kent, laid down that principle in these words:

“The settled and fundamental doctrine is that Government has no right to take private property for public purposes without giving just compensation and it seems to be necessarily implied that this indemnity should in cases which will admit of it, be previously and equitably ascertained and be ready concurrently in point of time with the actual exercise of the right of eminent domain.”

I admit that, in some of the States of the neighboring Republic, they have in their prohibitory liquor laws violated this great charter principle, but I am one of those who believe that there are higher models for this Parliament to imitate than some of those State Legislatures, and I think that, when we do resolve to imitate them, we would do well not to imitate them in a case which overturns one of the oldest and best constitutional principles, especially when we find what the opinion of some of their own great constitutional writers is upon this subject. Mr. Cooley, in his work on “Constitutional Limitations,” says:

“Perhaps there is no instance in which the power of the Legislature to make such regulations as may destroy the value of property without compensation to the owner appears in a more striking light than in the case of these statutes. The trade in alcoholic drinks being lawful and the capital employed in it being fully protected by law, the Legislature then steps in and by an enactment based on general reason of public utility annihilates the traffic, destroys altogether the employment and reduces to a nominal value the property. Even the keeping of that for the purpose of sale, becomes a criminal offence; and without any change whatever, in his own conduct, or employment, the merchant of yesterday becomes the criminal of to-day and the very building in which he lives and conducts his business—which to that moment was lawful—becomes the subject of legal proceedings if the State so declare, and liable to be proceeded against for a forfeiture.”

But what must we think of a measure, which in addition to making the “merchants of yesterday the criminals of to-day,” proceeds to confiscate his property. Sir, I hope, and I confidently believe that no British Parliament will ever do that. Mr. Speaker, I intimated a few moments ago that many excellent and earnest men have conscientious scruples about rewarding such “bad men” as brewers and distillers. That very argument arose in the celebrated debate on the abolition of slavery in the West Indies fifty years ago. There was a conscience party then as there is now, and as I hope there always will be, who said: How can we, who believe that slavery is the vilest and wickedest of all vile and wicked things, consent to compensate the slave owners; they said, moreover, that there could be no such thing as property or the right of property in human flesh and blood, and that they would never consent to compensate a man for giving up what he could not own. The House will see what a great difference there is between that case and the present one. There is in the first place the great contrast between the two trades, that of the slave owner and that of the brewer; and in the second place, there is the argument to which I have alluded, viz, the right of property in human flesh and blood. Yet that argument made absolutely no impression whatever upon the Parliament or the people of England. It was felt to be altogether too theoretical—too sentimental for practical purposes. If the House will allow me for a moment, I will quote what Lord Sandon said during the debate on the subject:

“The right of property, I know, is often denied. The possibility of property in man may be a fit subject of discussion for the schools. I do not deny that it is vicious and mischievous property, but that it is property in the light in which we as practical men consider it, I fearlessly assert, as an abstract principle it cannot be disputed; but such as it is, it has been recognised—nay, created—by Parliament itself, and having been so recognised and so created Parliament we cannot, without the grossest injustice, affect to consider it no longer as property for the purpose of extinguishing it without compensation. If the right of property is to be extinguished on these abstract principles, what species of property will not soon be in danger?”

Now, Sir, I have never heard from that day to this any serious disapprobation of what England did on that occasion. I know that Wilberforce, only three or four days before his death, thanked God that he had lived to witness the day when England was willing to give £20,000,000 sterling for the abolition of slavery. Now, if it was right to compensate a slave owner for his right of property in the flesh and blood of a fellow creature, it must be a fortiori right in the case of an owner of a brewery or a distillery. Their business has, to use Lord Sandon's words, “not only been recognised, but created by Parliament itself, and Parliament cannot without the grossest injustice affect to consider it no longer as property for the purpose of extinguishing it without compensation.” The British nation gave $100,000,000 for the abolition of slavery, and the civilised world has a thousand times since not only commended their humanity to the slave, but their noble recognition of the great principle that nothing, not even the unspeakable horrors of slavery, will justify the State in destroying private rights and property without compensation. Now, I do not think it is useful or even possible to put the case upon higher grounds than that of justice to the manufacturer himself. I observe, however, that a petition was presented to the First Minister the other day at the Opera House from the bankers and loaning companies of Toronto, which set forth how seriously the passage of the Temperance Act has damaged their investments, and the ability of their debtors to pay, and praying for relief. Now, however reluctant any one may be to compensate a man who has himself been engaged in what he may consider a pernicious business, I do not believe that any member of this House will go so far as to put under the ban every man and every institution that in the ordinary course has a lien or mortgage upon this particular kind of property. They certainly are entitled to our protection.

They certainly have done nothing wrong. It has been said that this resolution is premature, and that it is time enough to consider the question of compensation when we are called upon to consider the question of prohibition. I do not agree with that suggestion. The petition to which I have referred itself shows how necessary it is that something should be done at once either to forewarn these people on the one hand or to reassure them on the other, as to what they have a right to expect. We know that petitions for prohibition are pouring in upon us by the hundred from every quarter, and that they indicate very clearly an organised determination to force a prohibitory law upon the country at the earliest possible day; and unless something is done at once by this House to settle the public anxiety upon this question we will have, during the coming year, a very great amount of unnecessary distress and a very serious derangement of business. I have often heard it said that the men who are engaged in this particular trade are very bad men, and that if they suffer loss they deserve punishment, and therefore have no right to be compensated. We have often heard temperance orators declare in their wrath that brewers, distillers, saloon keepers and tavern keepers are all the servants and agents of the devil—that they are moral outcasts—and deserve no consideration at the hands of the avenger. Of course we know, happily, that these gentlemen do not mean quite all they say, for I have heard it also openly declared on more than one occasion that even moderate drinkers are just as bad, if not worse, than the others, because if there were no moderate drinkers there would be no brewers or distillers. In that case, Sir, I fear that a good many members of this House are in a bad way. Perhaps, Sir, we may even be presided over by a moral leper. But are all who are engaged in this trade equally guilty? Are they all deserving of the same punishment? Are there no degrees in their guilt? Are there no extenuating circumstances in the case of any? I know a man,—a quiet, unassuming country storekeeper—who has spent his life in doing good. What his private charities may amount to, I do not know, for he has often given anonymously and always unostentatiously; but I am safe in saying that they amount to a sum which without exaggeration I may call munificent. In fact, Sir, I do not know of any man who lives a better life, a purer life, a nobler life, or a more religious life, and yet, Sir, this hideous creature owns a brewery. Perhaps I may explain, in extenuation of his fault, that he was obliged, about two years ago, to take it in payment of a debt, and that having got it, he was obliged to spend a large sum in improvements. Well, Sir, the passage of the Temperance Act in Bruce has made this property actually valueless; for, Sir, the House will easily understand that a property of this character in a small country village could not be well adapted for any other purpose. The result has been that this man has suffered a direct loss of, I understand, about $8,000. He has, in other words, been compelled by an Act of Parliament to contribute out of his own pocket $8,000 for the public good, as the majority in his county understand it. Now, Sir, that may be all right, but I do not think so. There may be some code of precepts somewhere which will justify this terrible confiscation of private property, but it seems to me it is a code which is a little too severe, a little too Draconian for modern times. I give this individual case—and I will be happy to give the name of my friend if any one desires to verify the facts—only to show how impossible it is with any regard to justice to apply one rule and measure of punishment to all who are engaged in this particular business. Now, Sir, no one can fail to recognise the earnestness of those good men and women who are engaged in this great temperance movement, and no one for a moment doubts their sincerity; but whether they are wise—whether they are the true friends of their own cause in carrying on this war of extermination is another matter. "Firmness with moderation" seems to me a far better motto for a temperance party than "war to the knife." They must not forget that the enforcement of the Scott Act will prove a much more difficult task than carrying it. The leaders of this movement must remember that the majorities they have obtained here and there do not indicate the real, permanent strength of the movement. There are thousands and thousands of men who, like some of those I am now addressing are moderate drinkers—who do not therefore belong to what is called the temperance army, but who were willing to give the Act a fair trial. And these men will certainly judge of the Act according to the result in their particular localities, and if they find these result to be unsatisfactory, they will certainly vote against the Act at the very first opportunity afforded them. This large vote is really the vote which has carried the Act, and is really the vote which will determine whether the law is to be a permanent one or not. The same thing occurs in this House. There are, no doubt, many cases in which votes have been carried in this House for the temperance cause which really do not indicate the real, inherent, permanent strength of the temperance movement, nor the personal views of hon. members. The truth is that many of us, most of us indeed, find ourselves in a rather ticklish position in respect to what is called the temperance vote. We have adherents and friends on both sides of the question, and we are naturally very anxious to please them both; we could indeed be "very happy with either were t'other dear charmer away." The Government also are in the same position. They too, would like to "run with the hare and hunt with the hounds," and they are doing their very best to do so. But in the motion now before the House I see no cause for embarrassment to anybody. It declares nothing antagonistic to the temperance movement. Indeed, I think it will materially assist it, if those who are engaged in it will only be moderate and just, and do as they would be done by. For my own part I think I am doing right in supporting this resolution. I am not afraid of my friends in the County of Bruce, no matter how pronounced or how much in earnest they may be on this question. I am certain that they do not expect me to be, and do not want me to be, a better man or a more severe moralist than Wilberforce and the other philanthropists who carried the abolition of slavery in England 50 years ago, and I am willing, at all events, to let them judge of me in this matter and to accept their verdict. I repeat that I think I am doing what is right and fair as between man and man in supporting this resolution. I believe that it is contrary to law, to justice and to constitutional usage to forcibly deprive any man of his property without making fair compensation, and I believe that the triumphs of the temperance party cannot be permanent if this great fundamental principle of justice is disregarded. At all events, Sir, we have a noble example in the case to which I have alluded, and I think it is an example which ought to be followed by the Parliament of Canada.

Mr. ORTON. The motion before the House is one which has emanated from the fact that the Scott Act has been advocated throughout the length and breadth of this country. One result of that agitation has been wholesale distress and ruin to a large class of our people. There is no right feeling member who is not in entire sympathy with the object of the Scott Act. The indignation felt by the right minded people of this country with respect to the cruel wrongs that have resulted and are resulting day after day from the improper use of the abuse of, alcohol and other stimulants, is felt by every hon. member. I believe there is no right thinking individual here or outside of this House but is in entire sympathy with the temperance body, in entire sympathy with the object of the Scott Act. So far we are all united; but as to the proper means of attaining that great and good object, the removal of the evils of intemperance, great and wide differences of opinion exist. We have been accustomed in the past to believe, a large portion of those who have had the privilege of living under the British flag have been accustomed to believe, that the force of precept and example and the influence of religious teaching were the right and correct means of correcting all forms of immorality. A large portion of our people have believed with respect to this question, and still believe, that the evils of intemperance can be stayed more effectively and more certainly by a continuance of those means, supplemented by such restrictions as license laws and the inspection of the articles used by the people. We are encouraged in that belief by the fact that a very great deal of good has resulted not only to this country but to Great Britain and other countries, by the earnest faith and belief in the adoption of such a mode of staying this evil. But there are others who have departed from the old means, and believe that the people can only be made good and moral by an Act of Parliament. They have lost faith in the efforts they have exerted in the past. Temperance societies in former days have done, and I believe are still doing, a great deal of good by earnest teaching and example. But I say they have lost faith in those means, and they have formed an alliance to force on the people of this country coercive measures to make them moral and to stay the evils of intemperance. Sir, I do not know whether hon. members of this House have carefully investigated the principles which are, as it were, set at nought in the Scott Act—principles upon which we believe that the freedom of the people of Great Britain depends so largely—principles upon which the good which the British Government has done to the world depends so largely. What are those principles? One principle is that under the British Government justice shall be done to all classes of our people, from the highest to the lowest, to the humblest individual in the community as well as to those who occupy the highest positions and are surrounded by wealth. Another principle is that vested rights, the rights of property, shall be respected. Another principle is that if the public welfare desires the property of an individual of the community, that individual shall be paid for it, and the whole community shall bear the burthen of making that payment. Another principle is that individual liberty of action shall not be interfered with, unless injury is done by that individual to his fellow man; and it is always considered that this principle should not be transgressed without grave reason. I invite the attention of hon. members for a few moments, and I ask why are these principles the chief corner stone of the grand edifice of human freedom which has been raised under the British flag? The first of those principles is justice. Mr. Speaker, justice properly forms the main corner stone of all Governments. Why? Because we believe the British constitution is based on religion. We believe we are living in a Christian community, and we know that justice is the highest attainment the Christian can arrive at. We are told that the throne of the Almighty is surrounded by justice and judgment, and we believe the objects to be attained by all religious services are that men may learn to act justly one toward another. Now, Sir, I would ask hon. members to consider for a moment whether the great principle of justice has been observed in the Scott Act. Sir, under that Act the property of individuals is being despoiled. From time immemorial, as long as Great Britain has existed, and long before the British Empire was formulated, stimulants of one kind or other have been used by the human race, and it has never been asserted that it was wrong that such should be the case. Property has arisen under the custom of using those stimulants; men have engaged in undertakings by which they have accumulated property; they have worked hard, and have saved, and have become the possessors, and the honest possessors, of a means of livelihood, and perhaps some of them of more than a means of livelihood. I need only point you to the enormous structures in Great Britain, the large breweries, and to the honors which are given by the British Parliament to the men who have accumulated wealth and honor in the manufacture of ale. Sir, in Great Britain they have been knighted in honor of the distinction they have attained from their industry and carefulness in that kind of industry, as well as in others.

Mr. BLAKE. Hear, hear.

Mr. ORTON. The leader of the Opposition sneeringly says, "hear, hear." However, I will ask the hon. gentleman to have patience and listen to my remarks, or if he does not desire to listen, he will perhaps try to treat me, at any rate, with some courtesy. Under the Scott Act, Sir, property of this kind is being confiscated. Men who have invested their money in erecting breweries, in building malt houses, in manufacturing the various implements which are required in these establishments, are, under the operation of this Act, having that property rendered valueless. That Act goes further, and it debars them from selling their article in the county in which it passes, so that it virtually destroys their property. Now, Sir, I maintain that that is not justice. I maintain that it is not just that these men, who have pursued an honorable course in life, who have industriously followed their calling, who have not been drunkards, who have not assisted in making men drunk, should have their property taken away from them and destroyed, even for the good of the state, without compensation. Sir, I believe that under the Government under which we live vested rights should be respected, and the rights of property should not be thus invaded. The Scott Act does invade vested rights in property, and renders it valueless. It has been said that the state does the same thing in many other particulars, as when a charter is granted to a railway, the rights of property of a stage owner or a steamboat owner are destroyed. But not in the same way. He is not debarred from following his occupation. But under this Act those who have built a house for the entertainment of the public under the belief that they can pursue their calling as they have in the past, are debarred from pursuing that portion of their business, and their property is being destroyed. We all know that stage owners can continue, if they like, to drive their stages, and if they do not pay it cannot be helped; but under this Act no proprietor of a hotel or other hostelry can pursue his calling; he is debarred entirely from doing so, and, therefore, I say, it is an entirely different state of affairs. And, Sir, I say that the principle of compensation to individuals if they are called upon to sacrifice their property by the State for the good of the public, is nothing more than right and correct. Does the Scott Act afford any means by which the individuals who are willing, perhaps, to sacrifice their property, and are desirous of sacrificing it for the public good, if it is in order to try the experiment, rather than to be supposed to stand in the way of any good, and are ready to destroy their property—I ask, does the Scott Act provide any means by which the public at large shall bear the burdens of the loss of that property—of that right which the individual may be even desirous to renounce for the benefit of the State, if he is only fairly remunerated therefor? Now, Sir, with all this sacrifice of principle involved in this Act, let us consider for a moment is there any possibility of any great good resulting from the continuation of that Act in the various counties in which it is passed, or in passing it in other counties in which it is not in force. We know that in the County of Halton, near which I have lived for many years, the effects of the adoption of this Act have been anything but of a moral character. The moral tone of the people of that county has not been elevated.

Instances have occurred there in which deliberate and wholesale perjury has been committed by people to uphold the illegal traffickers in stimulants. Why? Because, Sir, the popular element feels that a great wrong has been done to the people who were engaged in the liquor business by the destruction of their property. They sympathise with them, and they believe that where a great wrong is done, even by a Government or a people, people are not to be blamed for ignoring the law under which that wrong is done. Sir, I think that any candid individual from any part of the country where that law has been put into operation, will agree with me that it has not had the effect which was expected from it. It is a well known fact that instead of the people having the opportunity of indulging in comparatively harmless beverages, such as beer and wine, the only stimulants that they can secure are ardent spirits, and these usually of the most inferior character. In the North-West I have had some experience of the workings of a prohibitory law, and what do we find there? That strong liquors are kept out of the country? No; all along the line of railway in British Columbia, spirits of every description are brought in in wholesale quantities and sold at retail at enormous profits in the face of the law; and notwithstanding that a large body of mounted police are kept there at great expense to the people of this country, and are vigilantly doing their utmost to preserve order and to prevent infringements of the law, they have been powerless to prevent this traffic. Then, Sir, how can we expect that it could be otherwise in a community in which perhaps a large majority of the people are in sympathy with those who carry that traffic on? But a great many will argue that this is only an experimental law, intended to educate the people up to such a position that they will call for a total prohibitory law. Well, Sir, in reference to that matter, though my own individual judgment is not in favor of a prohibitory liquor law, I believe that if legislation of any kind can do any good, a prohibitory law is the only law that can restrain the evils of intemperance. The only pledge ever asked of me in going into Parliament, was as to whether I would vote for a prohibitory liquor law; and I did pledge myself the first time, that though I did not believe it in myself, I would vote for a prohibitory law if it provided for compensation; and I am prepared to do that to-day—to sacrifice my own individual opinion and to assist loyally our temperance friends in seeing that that law is respected and honored. But, Sir, the question of total prohibition, and of the Scott Act, I think, should to-day command the close attention of every hon. member of this House. I think this tentative Act, the Scott Act, has proved in every form and shape, a lamentable failure. I think, Sir, it has proved more; it is not only creating immorality through the illegal use of ardent spirits, but it is sapping the very foundations of our Christianity.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Hear, hear.

Mr. ORTON. Hon. gentlemen sneer; but I will show you why I have endeavored to show that the Act is unjust—that it is contrary to the spirit that should actuate a Christian community. I have endeavored to show that from the very earliest history of the world it has never been considered a wrong to use in moderation the fermented juice of the grape; and I maintain that when the leaders of religious thought use their positions in order to intimidate the people of this country and to influence their judgment by trying to make them believe that in order to be good and religious they must have a law compelling them, they are sapping the very foundations on which our religious system rests, and they are doing an immeasurable wrong to their own calling. The question of prohibition is one which if seriously considered will bring the House and the Government face to face with various difficulties. The first difficulty is in reference to its effect on the revenue of the country, and I think there is not an honest man here but knows that the Scott Act, if it means anything, means total prohibition. Therefore, I think it is the duty of every member of the Government and of the House to consider what effect it will have on the public revenue, and whether the loss of revenue can be borne by the people of this country. We have also to consider its effect on immigration into Canada. Sir, it is my opinion that if prohibition is brought into operation in Canada we shall have very few German immigrants, very few Swedes or Norwegians—those people from northern latitudes of Europe who make the best settlers in this country, but who have been accustomed from their infancy to the use of light wines and beer. I believe, too, that we shall have comparatively few from the British Isles. I know that to-day in the North-West Territories old English settlers are very much dissatisfied because they cannot have their accustomed glass of ale, and are threatening to leave the country.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Hear, hear.

Mr. ORTON. Hon. gentlemen again say, "hear, hear," as if that statement was not worthy of credence; but if those hon. gentlemen who sneer would take the trouble to go up and interview the settlers in the Regina and Moose Jaw districts, and all through that region, they would find that my words are true to the letter. Sir, I think this House ought also to consider the question whether the use of alcohol should be entirely abolished or not—whether it would be to the best interests of the people of this country that that should be done. So far as our knowledge and experience go, it is certain that those people on the face of the globe who have used light wines and beer have been a courageous, a long lived, a generous, and a noble people. We know that there is not a nation under the sun but that uses in some form or other stimulants. The Turk uses his opium, the Chinaman his tea, and in some form or other the wild Indians of North America use their stimulants. They use their herb stimulants and vegetable stimulants which enables them to perform feats they could not do without those aids. We know for a fact that alcoholic stimulants are of use to humanity and that many a human life has been saved by their judicious and proper use. A great deal has been said with regard to the modus operandi of alcoholic stimulants, medical authorities have been quoted on that subject. I regret to say that so far as regards that portion of the profession to which I belong—and I say it without fear or contradiction—not only the modus operandi of spirits and drugs, but the following of those drugs through the system is any thing but clear, and that our profession are no more able to follow alcohol in its course through the system and state its exact action than they are able to describe the exact action of quinine which is known so well to destroy the poison remittent fever and other diseases. So with regard to other drugs, but we do know that in cases of extreme prostration there is nothing that can take the place of stimulants. Alcoholic stimulants are the easiest assimilated and the most readily applied of all stimulants in cases of extreme depression or extreme shock to the nervous system. I know of cases where men have lived for weeks upon little else but the wine or whiskey which was supplied them as food. I knew a very singular case, that of an insane woman who would not take food into her stomach, who refused food of every kind, and had to be supported by having food injected into her stomach; and that woman lived upon what? Why it was found that milk and whiskey was the easiest kind of food for her to assimilate, and for a whole twelve months that food, milk and whiskey, was injected into her stomach three times a day; it was, at any rate, sufficient nourishment to keep her alive, and at the end of twelve months her reason was restored. There are cases occurring day by day in the experience of every medical man where those who have lost blood—when nearly the very last drop of blood has been extracted from their body—have been kept alive for hours, their nervous force supported by the use of stimulants, until sufficient food could be taken and assimilated in order to support life. Therefore, I say that when men get up and say that alcohol is a useless article, that it is of no benefit to the human race, they know not of what they speak. In reference to this question there is one thing that I have remarked on the various occasions upon which the temperance question has been brought before the House. I have noticed that the men who should lead public opinion, who should deliberate upon this great question, who should give this House the advantage of their ripe judgment, are not the men who speak, and a discussion of this question is left to the tale end of the rack and file. I think that that is, at any rate, not creditable to those leaders. I do not refer to the leaders of one party more than to the leaders of the other, but I do say that on this serious question we should have, and the country should have the advantage of their ripe judgment. Is it to be thought that this silence on their part is to be accounted for by the fact that one side or the other are trying to take advantage of this question in order to keep in power or to get into office? If such is the case, it is sad indeed. But I believe that to-day, at any rate, no political capital can or should fairly be made out of the question by either side, and I am glad to see hon. members on both sides ready to discuss it in a fair and open manner; and I do hope we shall have the benefit of the opinion of the leaders of both parties on this question. We ought to have their opinion as to whether any legislation of this kind is calculated to lessen or increase crime, whether it will create a greater or a less respect for the laws of the country, whether it will increase or decrease the feeling of security in property which exists among our people. I shall not detain the House any longer as there are many other hon. gentlemen who desire to speak on this question, but I will say this, that if hon. members are of opinion that the people desire prohibitory legislation, if that is the conclusion they come to, the sooner we have prohibition the better; but I would say, on the other hand, that prohibition should be coupled with compensation. I say it not only on the ground of justice but on the ground of temperance; and I direct the consideration of the temperance leaders in this House to that point. I think it would be better for them and their cause if they would enlist on their side men who are bound by honor, bound by every principle which should guide a man to assist loyally in carrying out the laws, rather than have a large portion of our people estranged from their efforts by injustice and by sympathy with the wrongs done to a portion of our people.

Mr. SPROULE. In rising to express my views on this question, I do so with some reluctance, knowing that many of my warmest political friends differ from me in reference to the opinions I hold on this subject. It is only from my strongest sense of what I believe to be right and my duty that I feel bound to give the reasons why I am prepared to support the resolution before this House. The resolution expresses a principle which, in my opinion, is this: Have we the right to take away property without giving some compensation for it? It is a principle which has been acknowledged through all the years of the history of this country and in every part of the British Empire. In asking foreigners to come to this country, they might reasonably ask what advantages we were about to give them provided they became residents of Canada. We tell them that we are prepared to give them protection to life and property, and to hold out as a premium on their industry protection to whatever property they may accumulate in the country. This principle is acknowledged in reference to other questions where the public good is on one side and private interest on the other. It was acknowledged by England when she abolished slavery, and, in that case, a great evil was effectually done away with without any injustice being done to those engaged in the trade. If this was acknowledged by England and has been acknowledged by all the dependencies of England, if it is the admitted principle embodied in the laws of our country, why should we not support that principle in this House to-day, in reference to a question which is said to be of so great importance to the country. If a man's property is depreciated in value by a railway passing through or in close proximity to it, he is allowed compensation for the depreciation of his property, because it is admitted that, when the interest of the community requires that his property should be destroyed, it is fair that he should be compensated for it. It is said that a great good will be done to the country by the abolition of the liquor traffic, because it will abolish what is every year imposing a very heavy outlay upon us for the administration of justice. If this be correct, then as a matter of financial policy we should be ready to concede it; if the abolition of the liquor traffic would result in the large saving to the country that is claimed by the temperance advocates, we ought to be prepared to sacrifice a share of our money in buying out the trade. When we find men engaged in business who have been respectable members of society, who have always been foremost in enterprise, who have always been ready to give a helping hand in whatever assisted the community, or individuals in the community, who have been living within the bounds of law, and have been recognised as respectable citizens, why should we take away from them what is virtually the accumulation of their industry and economy; without giving them a recompense for it? It may be said that those who are engaged in the business hold their tenure of office only for a limited time, as their licenses are granted but for a year, and that at the expiration of the year it is no injustice to take away these licenses. Apply that to every other line. Take the people who are building up ranches in the North-West Territories. When the demands of settlement require that these leases shall be cancelled, the law is that they must be cancelled in the interest of the settlement of the country; but does any one pretend to say, that if the Government have made regulations compelling a man who has a rancho of 20,000 acres to put on one or two head of cattle for every 20 acres of land, and he has invested so much money and has built up whatever is necessary for the purpose of carrying on that respectable business, they may at a moment's notice at the expiration of his lease, perhaps at the time when he has just completed the requirements of the law and put on the number of cattle demanded, annul that lease and make the man suffer the consequences whatever they may be? That, I think, would be regarded as most unreasonable. A gentleman at my right has suggested timber limits. There are many lumbermen in this country who have bought extensive timber limits in Ontario upon the principle of the established order of things, and as long as these men pay the royalty and are prosecuting what is a legitimate business, the acknowledged principle of the established order of things recognises that they should be allowed to prosecute that work, from time to time, without being molested. The same principle is involved in all these matters, whether you apply it to the slave trade, which was bought out by England, or to the licenses given from year to year to the brewers, or to the timber licenses given from year to year. The same principle exists equally in one as in the other. What has been the result when there has been a violation of this principle? We need only look back to the civil war that occurred in the United States a few years ago. They had also to grapple with the question of slavery in a free country. They said that, in the interests of the morality of the country, it was important to do away with it. Did they adopt the same principle as England adopted in the accomplishment of that great work? No; they said: We will do away with it by one stroke of the pen, whatever injustice may be done, and we will balance the injustice done to the slave trader by the great good done to the country. But what was the result? A civil war, the most important, the most gigantic, the most destructive ever known in the history of the country, was the result; and not only that, but to-day and for the next hundred years, for the next two or three generations, a large number of the citizens of the States will recognise that, in that method of doing away with the slave trade, a great injustice was done to them, and they will never feel that they have the security for property in their country which the laws guaranteed to them when they came into it. This resolution is not dealing with the general trade. I should be disposed to go further, and to say that those who are engaged in the retail trade should be compensated as well, but this does not go so far, and I am glad to see that it does not, because it would be used as an argument in the campaigns which are being carried on in the country in favor of what is called the Scott Act. But the resolution acknowledges that, after the people have expressed their opinion by their voice in such numbers as to show that they are in favor of prohibition, those parties who are said to be at the root of the trouble, the brewers, the malsters, the manufacturers, who have their trade taken from them, shall be compensated for it. I say, that when these men have been paying large sums into the treasury of the country to support the country, to defray the expenses of legislation and government, and to build up the country when they have their vested rights to the extent of tens of thousands of dollars, it is only right, if we take away from them that property and that business out of which they have heretofore accumulated money, if we believe it to be in the interests of the country to do so, we should be liberal enough, we should be Christian enough in our charity to pay them for the rights we take away; because if we destroy that business so that there is a depreciation in the value of their property—it may be to the extent of $1,000, $2,000 or $10,000; the principle is the same—it is taking away something from them that represents, in their eyes, money that they accumulated by their hard labor, that they have put into these various enterprises. Holding those views I am prepared to support the resolution. I believe that carried out it will more effectually stamp out the liquor trade in the country than any measure that has been passed through this House for a long time. Why? Because, when we compensate men for their trade, if there is any violation of the law on their part, there is no sympathy with them. As soon as we pay a man what we believe to be a fair compensation for stopping that trade, if he endeavors to continue it afterwards the whole country would be against him, almost to a man; and public opinion being then strong against the business it would be much more easy to stamp it out than it is at the present time by the Scott Act. I say I am prepared to support this principle and shall be well pleased to see it carried. I am glad to find that it is not recognised as a party question. I think that these things too often fall into the arena of party, and very great injustice is done thereby; that because one party takes it up and endorses it, therefore the other must oppose it. I endorse the expressions of the hon. member for Wellington (Mr. Orton). I think it is a great pity that the leaders of opinion in this country are not now ready to express their views and their judgment on this very important question, for as long as they hold back as a matter of policy, the country will not be in possession of what might be called the ripe opinions of the foremost men on this question, and it is left to others, who might be termed subordinates, to endeavor to force the question upon them, and oblige them to support either one side or the other.

Mr. FISHER. I rise to move an amendment, and perhaps I had better read it as an introduction to the remarks I am about to make:

That all after the word "that" be struck out, and the following be inserted in its stead: "The time when Parliament proceeds to discuss the details of a law prohibiting the importation, manufacture and sale of intoxicating liquors for beverage purposes, will be the proper occasion on which to discuss the question of compensation to the manufacturers of such liquors as may come under the operation of such a law."

I am sorry I was not able to catch all the arguments that fell from the lips of the hon. mover of the original motion, and I was somewhat disappointed in what I did hear, to find no sufficient justification was given for the introduction of such a resolution at the present moment. If there was any immediate prospect before us that a prohibitory law would be passed by this House during the present Session there would have been, perhaps, some justification and some reason for discussing this matter as one of the details of the general question. But the hon. gentleman who moved this resolution, and the hon. gentleman who seconded it, did not show that there was any immediate prospect of a general prohibitory law being passed in this country. More than that, they did not even give us any argument to show that there was a prospect that even during the life of the present Parliament we were likely to be called upon to pass such a law. Now, of course, a resolution like this would express the opinion of this Parliament, but I do not consider that it would thereby be binding upon the country or the people; it is merely an expression of opinion by the members who vote upon it. That being the case, I do not think that much good can come from submitting such a resolution; and I fear, on the contrary, that a great deal of harm might arise from it, for in case a large number of leading men here should express their opinion in favor of such a course, the hopes of a large body of people who are interested in this trade would be raised, in the expectation of getting compensation. The hon. gentleman who sits before me (Mr. Wells) said he regretted that the resolution did not go far enough. I suppose the reason why this resolution did not include compensation to others who are engaged in the liquor traffic was because the proposer and seconder were fully aware that such a proposition would meet with far greater opposition than the one they have submitted to us. It is evident that the question of compensation, which seems to be now chiefly agitating those interested in the liquor traffic, is divided into two parts—the part which comes under this resolution, and that part which refers only to the dealers in liquor who hold licenses. I am not now going to enter into the discussion of the question of compensation to those who are licensed. I do not believe that these gentlemen have any grounds whatever upon which to base a claim for compensation; if there is any claim for compensation which can be entertained for an instant, it may be that of the manufacturers who are referred to in this resolution. But speaking for myself, and I think also for some others who are interested in this question, I must say that I should feel bound, under the present circumstances, and at the present time, to vote against this resolution—at all events, until such arguments are brought forward as will convince us of the justice of such a demand. So far, I have not heard any such argument, and I believe if such arguments were brought forward to-day they might assume a very different aspect if a prohibitory law was now before the House for discussion. We can well understand that if we promised to-day to the men engaged in the manufacture of liquor that their loss in consequence of a prohibitory law would be compensated, they would naturally extend, instead of contracting, their business, and instead of preparing for a prohibitory law they would be tempted rather to plunge more deeply into that business in order to obtain larger compensation. Especially would that be the case in a time like the present, when money finds but few investments, and when other kinds of business are more or less depressed. The passage of a resolution like this would naturally give an impetus to their business, and this is a sufficient reason for us withholding, at the present time, an expression of our opinion. These gentlemen, I understand by this resolution, do not pretend to claim any compensation whatever for loss which they may suffer in consequence of the adoption of local prohibitory laws throughout the country. We are aware that on the 1st of May next about one-third of the whole country will come under the operation of local prohibitory laws, and we know that in consequence of that fact those gentlemen who are engaged in the manufacture and sale of liquors have already suffered a great deal of contraction in their business. This was stated to us the other day, when a deputation of licensed victuallers interviewed the Government on this question. Now, Sir, I believe that the same causes which have been in operation for the last year in this country will continue to act and will produce in the future even greater results than they have in the past; I believe that at no distant day more than one-half the country will be under a local prohibitory law. When that takes place we can understand that this business will be still more largely contracted, and when the time comes to discuss a national prohibitory law in this House, the chances are very great that by the simple operation of the law of supply and demand the business of the licensed victuallers will then be very much less than it is to day. But, as I pointed out a few moments ago, if Parliament pledges itself to give compensation at a future day, and at a time when we do not know what the circumstances will be under which compensation will be demanded, we can understand perfectly well that instead of diminishing the compensation we are more likely to increase it. This, as a matter of prudence, should cause hon. members to hesitate before voting for any such resolution as that before the House. I do not know what may be the extent of the prohibition which may be introduced. We have already on the paper a notice of a resolution to prohibit the manufacture of alcoholic beverages. But there is nothing in regard to brewers and maltsters. When that question comes up we shall have to discuss compensation in regard to those particular items; but the compensation for those items would vary from the compensation to brewers and maltsters, so if we were to pledge ourselves to provide any such compensation as is proposed, we would weaken our position when we come to discuss the question. The hon. member in front of me (Mr. Wells) alluded to the evident feeling on the part of the temperance people that they could not make any compromise with this trade, that they were not prepared in any sense or any way to acknowledge that the trade had rights. I confess that there may be a wing of the temperance party who are animated with that spirit. There is, however, a very large part of the temperance party who are not animated with that spirit in any sense; they demand legislation in their favor and ask that the people of the country be protected from the great evil which is in our midst. I believe those temperance people, when they have the power, will not use it in the same way as the liquor dealers have used their power against us in the past. I believe we will be actuated by a desire to give justice to our enemies, even though we have not received justice at their hands in the past. The hon. gentleman in front of me said that temperance people would neither give nor receive quarter. I believe, that although we have never received quarter at the hands of our opponents, we will be quite willing to give it when our opponents are on their knees before us, and we have triumphed over them. If to-day this question is urged and forced upon us, we shall feel, as I do personally, that we cannot admit this principle, that there has not been placed before us sufficient grounds on which this principle should be acknowledged; and we will vote against this principle, if brought squarely before us to-day, whatever course we might take on a future occasion, when, under different circumstances, such a proposition for compensation might be brought before the House at a time when we were discussing the details of a prohibitory law. I shall not enter in any sense or way into the question of prohibition. The hon. member for Wellington (Mr. Orton) has stated that the majority of the members of this House are in favor of restricting the traffic in liquor, and of freeing the country from the evils which that traffic has brought upon us. I believe that is the fact, but I am not going to discuss the principle of prohibition. I am glad, however, to be able to stand in this House this Session in a position different from that occupied last Session. The people of the country at large have spoken on this question, and have decided in favor of temperance. I was glad to hear from the lips of an hon. member who has not always been on the side of temperance, that this position is taken, and that we are to-day acknowledged to be on the right side in this question. I think this matter simply resolves itself into a question of justice. If at the time a prohibitory law is passed here, manufacturers of liquors can show us they have just grounds for compensation, let them come forward and prove to us that such is the case, and ask that a compensation clause be introduced into the law. But I do not think they are wise in their day and generation, or that it is expedient and right that Parliament should be asked beforehand to pledge itself and the country, in so far as Parliament can do so, to any such proposition. I think I have touched shortly upon the reasons which have prompted me to move this amendment, and in view of the fact that the country is not likely to be asked to pass a prohibitory law this Session, or be asked to pass such a law during the life of the present Parliament, it is inopportune and premature to make any such arrangement as is proposed with the manufacturers of liquor.

Mr. FOSTER. Before the vote is taken, I should like to say a few words with respect to the original motion particularly, and in a slight degree with respect to the amendment. I am not sorry that this question has come before the House, I do not think it is premature to discuss it at this or at any subsequent time. I have, however, my own opinion as to the time when this question should be decided. As prohibitionists and temperance men, those of us who have been in favor of a prohibitory law and have argued for it, certainly do not regret that this resolution has come before the House at this time or in the way in which it has come. It has been quite common, in the years that have passed, for those who did not believe in the principle of prohibition to think little of the movement which was inaugurated and carried out by that section of the people who did believe in prohibition, and who were generally said to be but few in number and to have but little influence. That argument can no longer be used. During the eight or ten years that have passed, both the number and influence of the prohibitionists in the country and in the House have been augmented, and to-day we have a resolution which distinctly recognises the fact that the prohibition movement can no longer be ignored, that the people are behind it, and this resolution is, if I understand it rightly, the calm and deliberate expression of opinion of the brewers and distillers of this country, that whether they be prepared for death or not, death is imminent; that they are looking now for some way in which the business may go out with pecuniary consideration attached to it, and may, so to speak, in some way get the promise of the country to erect a mausoleum to its memory. I thank the mover and seconder of this resolution, and those who are behind it, for this strong admission, and I assure them it will be heard from one end of this country to the other, that, after to-day, no person in this Dominion will be able to say that the strength of the prohibition movement is to be despised, but that this resolution is an indication that it is the general sentiment of those to whom prohibition is opposed, that it is a growing power in the country, and that it is coming close to its consummation. Sir, this resolution which has been introduced to the House, I do not consider, so far as my judgment goes, to be one which we ought now to decide. I am willing to discuss the principle; I want a fair and square discussion of that principle; I want the leaders of public sentiment in this House to give their opinions on this weighty matter—the men who have studied political economy and social economy; the men who are conversant with the affairs of state; the men who have studied social problems in all their parts—I want them, as leaders of public opinion, and as standing as representatives of the people in this House, to discuss this question as deeply, as widely, as fully as it can be discussed, so that the people may have the data whereupon to gather to the discussion of it outside of this House. But this House is not prepared to decide this question, or to say that the decision of this question to-day, on the original resolution in the affirmative, would be the decision of the country, or could, in any way, be tortured to be taken as the decision of the country. This resolution, as it comes down, is a contingent resolution. It does not ask for the taking away of any existing grievances; it does not ask for the addition of something to any existing law, or to any law which is to-day in process of being enacted. It simply says that if something or other, in the years of the future, in five years or twenty-five years from this day, shall come to be the case, then, this other thing which is asked for by the resolution, shall also come to be the case. I do not think that this is the usual method of procedure in a deliberative body. It is as though when the new improvements in cotton machinery and woollen machinery were coming to the front, and when employees were looking out in the not very distant future, and saying there will come a time when, if these things are allowed to come into use, our labor will be thrown out, our wages taken from us; and now, before the advantages of these things can be fully seen, now, on the wave of the prejudices which exist against them, we will pass a resolution through Parliament, saying that in the event of these machines coming into use those employees who are thrown out of employment shall be compensated for their loss. It is as though, when a Bill was before Parliament to charter a railway to run along the side of a great navigable stream, those who owned boats plying on that stream, seeing the approaching diminutions of their gains, seeing the fact that in the near future their gains would be interfered with and a different route of travel would be taken, should say, we will make interest; we will pass a resolution through Parliament saying that if such and such a thing takes place we are to be compensated for the loss which may come upon us. And what is this resolution? It is nothing more nor less than an attempt, in a time when there is a want of knowledge on the subject, in a time of first feeling, to bind the hands of the future by a resolution contingent on something else happening. And if I mistake not, although this resolution may have within its scope the compensation of brewers and distillers, it will have this effect—whether this is its motive or not—it will have consequence: It will raise up a sum of money anywhere from $12,000,000, which has been spoken of by my hon. friend as the capital invested in the brewing business to day, up to $30,000,000 or $40,000,000—it will raise that sum up as the probable sum which the people of this country will invite to fall upon their shoulders, and be laid as a burden on their backs if they pass a prohibitory law. Sir, I do not think it is the usual course for a parliamentary or deliberative assembly to proceed in that way. Then again, I think this resolution, as my friend on the other side has stated, is premature. Has it been discussed in the country? It may be said that your prohibition resolution last year was premature. But, I reply, there is a great difference. That question has been before the country for fifty years; it has been steadily marching forward towards its solution. Every year it has been increasing in strength. Every year the influences behind it have been augmented. This question has permeated every nook and corner of the land; it has gone into the centre of every constituency, it has been talked of at every fireside; and this Parliament last year, or any year within the last fifteen years, has had the data at hand to give a vote on that principle, feeling certain that those who voted upon it would represent the aggregate feeling of their constituents. But where has this question of compensation been argued? In what constituency, in what nook or corner has it been raised? Is there a single representative here who can get up and say: I can vote for this question, for or against, feeling that I know what the sentiments of my constituents are, and that by my vote I am representing them here.

An hon. MEMBER. Yes.

Mr. FOSTER. The hon. gentleman says he can. He then is one of the favored few, but I think the large majority of this House will feel that they cannot. Well, Sir, following that out, I do not think this House is in the position, in its representative capacity, to decide this question for or against compensation; because, whether this House does possess the knowledge of its constituencies far enough and wide enough to make a fair decision in this matter—even if they do not, yet the opinion will go out from this House, if it be taken in the affirmative or negative, the opinion will go out that this Parliament of Canada, representing the people of Canada, would make this decision, when I hold that that would not be the case, but that it will be the gentlemen who are sitting in the Parliament of Canada, who have expressed their own collective or aggregate opinion on this question. Do not imagine that I wish to say that we should not discuss manfully and fairly and squarely the whole issue, and nothing else. I think we should; but I think we should reserve our opinion as a solemn declaration until we find out the feeling of our constituents on this question. At least, that is my private opinion, guiding my own conduct and speaking for myself. Nor has this question come up on the ground of petition. Has there been a single petition put before Parliament asking that compensation should be given to the brewers and distillers and maltsters? Is there one from all this country—from the island of Cape Breton to the Pacific ocean? Can there be produced on the Table of this House a single petition coming from the people asking that compensation be granted? I think not. And we are a representative body; we represent the people in this House. This is a large matter, involving at least $12,000,000, according to what my hon. friend, the mover of this resolution, has stated to be the capital employed in breweries and distilleries. I say that, under the circumstance, that no voice of the people has asked for this action, it is too great a burden for us to resolve should be placed on them without consulting our constituents. It may be stated that a deputation which came to this city not many days ago, presented to the Government a memorial in which they claimed compensation. That may be; but it was not the compensation which is claimed in this resolution. That deputation, if I understood their memorial aright, asked for compensation for the license victuallers, for the coopers, for the employees, and for the cigar manufacturers. This, then, is not their resolution; it is not founded on their presentment of the case. This is somebody else's resolution, and is founded on somebody else's presentment of the case, because the brewers and distillers are the only people included in it. Then I say that from the sovereign people of this country, in the exercise of their right of petition, there has not come a single voice to this Parliament, asking that compensation shall be granted. So much, Sir, with reference to that point. But this resolution is also, to my mind, one which we ought not to take into consideration, so far as to decide in favor of it, for another reason, and that is this: It is a resolution which, besides embodying something which has not been asked for by the people, besides tying the hands of the people in the way I have stated, is one which is not backed up by that amount of argument necessary to show that the necessity for it exists. I may just refer, in passing, to the kind of argument with which this demand is sometimes backed up. For instance, I think the only financial argument which was used by the deputation which came to Ottawa a few days ago, the only argument which condescended to figures, was that used by the cigar manufacturers. Hon. gentlemen who have read their memorial will remember that the cigar manufacturers started out by arguing that they should have compensation on the ground that the Scott Act was injuring them; and they showed, from official records, a diminution of $449,000 in the amount paid by the cigar manufacturers into the Dominion revenue in 1884, as compared with 1883; and then, by that strange sort of argument which so often prevails, they stated that this diminution was due to the operation of the Scott Act in the different counties. Now, Sir, examine that argument. When we come to look at the returns of the Minister of Inland Revenue, we find that last year the duty on tobacco was reduced from 20 cents to 12 cents on the pound. The Minister calculated that some $800,000 would be lost to the revenue in consequence of that decrease; but he states, in his report, that instead of $800,000 being the decrease, the decrease was $419,000. Now, you see what kind of an argument that was. The Minister of Inland Revenue says that the diminution is due to the decrease in the duty; but the memorialists, in order to use it as an argument to show why compensation should be granted to them, say it is due to the effect of the Scott Act on the cigar trade. That is an instance of the curious kind of non sequitur argument which is used in favor of compensation. Well, Sir, I am glad this resolution has been brought forward for other reasons. I am glad, because it shows that the finality is somewhat near, that the end is approaching, and that there is a feeling not only widespread among the people that prohibition ought to be established, but that there is a feeling amongst those likely to be affected by it financially that it is coming, and that it is an event that ought to be provided for. What does this resolution affirm? It affirms that these petitioners have no legal ground on which to base the continuance of their traffic, that they have no legal ground on which to ask for compensation. If they had in the constitution of the country or in the laws of the country any such ground, they would not be approaching Parliament to-day by a resolution asking that measures should be taken to give them that compensation. They have also abandoned the ground that they are able to go before the country and argue, on the ground of right, that their traffic shall be maintained and their trade carried on. They distrust the people in regard to that, and they come to Parliament and ask that a compensatory resolution should be passed by this House. As a temperance man and a prohibitionist, I thank the promoters of this resolution for the admission which they have thus made. Then I say, that the resolution is not an out-and-out manly resolution, and in saying that I am not making any reflection personally on the hon. gentleman who moved it. The resolution is that the brewers and distillers shall be compensated. Hitherto the strong reason that they have urged why their business should not be interfered with has been that there are correlative industries connected with the breweries that would be interfered with by the Scott Act.

It being six o'clock, the Speaker left the Chair.

After Recess.

CANADA SOUTHERN RAILWAY COMPANY AND ERIE AND NIAGARA RAILWAY COMPANY.

House resolved itself into Committee on Bill (No. 9) respecting the Canada Southern Railway Company and the Erie and Niagara Railway Company (Mr. Bergin).

Mr. BLAKE. I should like to know why all the branch lines which are affected by this Bill are not recited in the Bill? There is a wholesale enlargement of the time for the construction of all those lines, without any statement of what those lines are.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. As far as I can recollect, the mover of the Bill (Mr. Bergin) called attention to these words: "And whereas by an Act of the Parliament of Canada, passed in the 38th year of Her Majesty's reign, chap. 66, the time for the completion of the original branch lines, authorised by the Acts therein recited, or any of them, was extended until the 8th April, 1878."

Mr. BLAKE. I am not objecting to the ground being covered, but want to know what ground is covered. It seems to me, when we are extending the period within which lines may be commenced and completed, the Act itself ought, in point of convenience, to say what the general direction is of these lines with which we are so dealing. It is an interesting thing, of course, to know that the Canada Southern Railway Company has built this and other lines; that is interesting, but not very important. It is done. What is important to know is, what they want to have the power to do, which they have not yet done, and it is that they have omitted to tell us.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. The committee can pass the Bill and report to the House, and we will leave the third reading to the next day, when the mover of the Bill (Mr. Bergin) will give the explanation desired.

Committee rose and reported.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.

THURSDAY, 26th February, 1885.

The SPEAKER took the Chair at Three o'clock.

PRAYERS.

CANADA TEMPERANCE ACT AMENDMENT.

Mr. BAKER (Victoria) moved for leave to introduce Bill (No. 67) further to amend the Canada Temperance Act of 1878.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Explain.

Mr. BAKER (Victoria). As I understand the Canada Temperance Act is made applicable to the whole Dominion, and more recently an amendment to the Act provided that electoral districts in the Province of Manitoba could submit the Act instead of counties. The only object of the Bill is that the same principle may be made applicable to British Columbia, so that if at any time an electoral district in that Province chooses to avail itself of the Act it may have liberty to do so.

Motion agreed to, and Bill read the first time.

APPELLATE JURISDICTION OF THE SUPREME COURT.

Mr. LANDRY (Montmagny) moved for leave to introduce a Bill to limit the appellate jurisdiction of the Supreme Court as respects matters of a purely local nature, in Province of Quebec.

Mr. CASGRAIN. I would ask whether this is not a Bill of the same nature or to the same effect as the one which has already been presented to this House.

Mr. SPEAKER. The other Bill, which is before the House still, is a Bill to limit the appellate jurisdiction of the Supreme Court for the whole Dominion. This Bill seems to be limited to one Province, and differs from the other in that respect. Of course, I have not seen the Bill, but that seems to be its effect.

Mr. BLAKE. Mr. Speaker, is it to be competent, then, for hon. members to introduce measures to limit the jurisdiction of the Supreme Court, first for the whole Dominion, then for the Province of Quebec, then for Ontario, then for Manitoba, then for British Columbia, and so forth, by separate Bills? It seems to me, Sir, that this is a Bill concerning the same matter, and what the hon. gentleman desires to accomplish is, by an amendment to the Bill now before the House, to limit the scope and operation of that Bill. Thus we have the same member proposing six or eight Bills on the same subject matter.

Mr. SPEAKER. It would seem to be the more convenient course for the hon. member to amend his Bill now before the House. The position we are in with regard to that Bill is that the House has not yet thrown it out. The other Bill is still before the House. I cannot say at the moment, however, that this Bill is out of order.

Mr. BLAKE. Perhaps the hon. gentleman would not object to renewing his motion to-morrow.

Mr. SPEAKER. If the hon. gentleman will renew his motion to-morrow, I will look into the matter.

CRIMINAL LAWS OF CANADA, 1869 to 1881.

Mr. GIGAULT. (Translation) asked, Is it the intention of the Government to cause to be published in French the collection of Acts, intitled: "Criminal Law of Canada, 1869 to 1881?"

Mr. CHAPLEAU (Translation). The criminal laws are now being consolidated with the other statutes. To print these laws at the present moment would be useless. When the consolidation shall have been approved of by the House, the Government will see that, instead of sending the statutes themselves to the justices of the peace, the legislation which deals with their duties should be sent to them, and then these laws will be printed in both languages.

STATION AT CAP ST. IGNACE.

Mr. CASGRAIN (Translation) asked, Whether it is the intention of the Government to erect a station in the parish of Cap St. Ignace, in the county of Montmagny, on the Intercolonial Railway?

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN (Translation). In answer to the hon. member, I must say that it is not the intention of the Government to erect a station there for the present.

RAILWAY LINE KNOWN AS THE SHORT LINE.

Mr. CASGRAIN (Translation) asked, Whether steps have been taken with a view to the production of the plans, reports and papers ordered by this House, in relation to the railway line known as the Short Line? Also, when the said plans, etc., will be laid on the Table of the House?

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN (Translation). In answer to the hon. member, I must say that these plans and reports are being prepared as rapidly as possible, and that as soon as they will be completed they will be laid before the House.

POST OFFICE AT MONTMAGNY.

Mr. CASGRAIN (Translation) asked, Whether it is the intention of the Government to set apart a sum of $12,000, or any other sum sufficient for the purpose, for the building of a post office in the village of Montmagny?

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN (Translation). Mr. Speaker, the hon. member for Montmagny (Mr. Landry) has already brought this question before the Department, and he has presented a petition asking $10,000 for that work. The Government have not yet decided as to what shall be done with regard to this matter.

THE GOVERNMENT POWDER MAGAZINES AT FORT HOWE.

Mr. MILLS (for Mr. WELDON) asked, Whether the Government powder magazines at Fort Howe, St. John, N.B., are occupied? If so, by whom, for what purpose? If leased to any person, to whom, for what period and at what rent?

Mr. CARON. The old stone magazine is occupied by the Department of Militia and Defence for the storage of gunpowder. The magazine known as the New Brick magazine has been leased to Mr. William Henry Thorne, merchant, of St. John, N.B., for the storage of gunpowder. The rental is $100 per annum, year by year, the rent being payable half yearly in advance.

QUESTION OF PRIVILEGE.

Mr. DAWSON. Mr. Speaker, before the Orders of the Day are called, I desire to draw attention to a paragraph in the Toronto Globe of the 24th inst., under the heading of "Notes from the Capital," which reads thus:

"A large deputation of laborers who have been employed for some time on the Canadian Pacific Railway, north of Lake Superior, and who have been unable to get their wages from the Company, waited upon Mr. Pope, Acting Minister of Railways, to-day, to see if they could get any assistance or encouragement. Mr. Dawson, M.P. for Algoma, was asked to accompany the deputation, but begged to be excused, lest, to use his own words, it might compromise him with the Government or the Canadian Pacific Railway Company."

In reference to this, I have to say that I know nothing of a large deputation of workmen. All I saw was a single contractor who asked me to go with him to demand money from the Government. I simply declined to interfere, as I knew nothing of the matter. Subsequently, on seeing the article I have just read, I called his attention to it, when he at once denied having said that I used such an expression. All I have to say now is that the Globe correspondent was entirely misinformed in attributing to me the expressions set down in his article.

COMPENSATION TO BREWERS AND DISTILLERS.

House resumed consideration of motion of Mr. Kranz for Committee of the Whole to consider a resolution (p. 236) declaring it expedient, in the event of the enacting of a law prohibiting the importation, manufacture and sale of intoxicating liquors, that equitable provision should be made for the compensation of brewers, distillers and malsters; and of the motion of Mr. Fisher (p. 242) in amendment thereto.

Mr. FOSTER. In the remarks which I was addressing to the House yesterday I was endeavoring to give some reasons why I did not regret the introduction of this resolution, and also some reasons why I should very much regret its passage. I stated, if you will remember, that I did not regret the introduction of the resolution, because it was an admission of the strength of the prohibition sentiment outside of this House—an admission from those to whom the movement is opposed; that, in the second place, it was an admission that on grounds constitutional and legal the traffic had no hope of continued existence or of compensation in the event of its existence being destroyed. I also said that I was glad the matter had been brought up for discussion in the House as it was a question of very great importance to the country and one upon which the mind of the country had not yet been very much exercised. When I had stated these reasons, I had stated all the reasons I had for not regretting that the resolution was introduced, but against the passage of the resolution there were several reasons which I urged. One was the unusual and contingent character of the resolution itself. The other was that I thought an expression of opinion by this House, binding, as it would, to some extent, the country, standing, as it would, to some extent, for an expression of opinion of the country, would be premature, because the question had not been sufficiently discussed to allow us to get at what would probably be the sentiment of the country upon it. I also stated that I would be sorry to see it pass because it was not based upon any popular demand, because there was not a single public deputation nor a single petition sent in from the country upon which to base this demand for compensation to the brewers and distillers. I may state in addition that the resolution is not a logical one, that it is of a kind that we may call a class resolution. Heretofore the contention has been of the brewers and distillers that their business did not stand alone, but that other great interests were dependent upon it, that by its destruction other great correlative industries would suffer to a large extent; and if any plea has gone forth through the country as to why the brewing and distilling business should not be interfered with, it has heretofore been the plea that the destruction of other interests would be involved in the destruction of the brewing and distilling interest. But in the face of all that, we find this resolution introduced into the House and an attempt made to get the authoritative decision of this Parliament—upon what? Upon a proposition which includes but 130 men in the Dominion, a proposition which includes but the brewers and distillers nominally, which leaves entirely out of sight all those correlative industries and employments which we have heretofore been led to consider as depending upon and liable to be greatly injured if the business of brewing and distilling were interfered with. There is another reason why I should not like to see the resolution adopted, and that is this, that it is a very unguarded resolution. A prohibitory law may not be brought before the people for ultimate decision, for one year, or three years, or five years, or even for ten years; but the very moment this resolution is passed, what happens? If there were no vested interests before, there will be vested interests after the passing of this resolution. It is now a moot question as to whether there may be vested interests or not; some claim that there are or ought to be, others that there are not. But from the moment this resolution is passed, it is a declaration that hereafter all those interests are vested interests, and must be considered in any attempt to legislate with reference to this traffic. I do not think so unguarded a resolution as this, one so liable to be followed by such consequences financially to this country, ought to be passed by this House. More than that, in all the years which may intervene, be they few or many, between the passage of this resolution and the passage of a complete prohibitory law, all brewers and distillers will be in a position to add to their business. They will be in a position to say: Let us make all the gain we can out of it, let us enlarge our places of business; and those who have not invested in it will say: Let us also invest our property in it, there is a chance of making money out of it until prohibition comes; and when that period arrives here is a resolution which binds Parliament and, which will be pressed to its furthest consideration, that our interests will not be sacrificed without money compensation. I do not think it would be wise for us to put Parliament and the country in that position. Again I say that this resolution either goes too far or does not go far enough. What is the principle affirmed in it? It is this simple principle that if the brewing and distilling traffic be interfered with by law to its injury, either by restricting it or by our preventing it entirely, a money compensation should be given to those who are engaged in it. That is the principle. Now, I say, if that principle be true, it does not go far enough. I heard a good deal said yesterday about justice, about its being the corner stone of good government, and I think quite a number of hon. gentlemen who spoke, thought the ends of justice would not be met, nor the sentiment of justice fully and completely respected, unless this compensatory principle were added to the prohibitory principle whenever the latter should be affirmed. Sir, if it be true, as a principle, that if you interfere with the brewers' and distillers' traffic you should compensate them, where is the sense of justice, where is the broad principle, supposed to be embodied in this resolution, that we should not prejudice this interest without full compensation if it only includes brewers and distillers and does not go further; if it does not include those who need compensation more, who have labored harder in this general traffic, and without whose labor there could be no brewing or distilling interests in this country to-day, no accumulated capital and no profits to accrue from capital. I say it does not go far enough to meet the idea of justice which has been urged by those in favor of compensation. The farmer who ploughs and sows his land and brings the grain to market which is to be used in the distillery or brewery, the employé who works there, the railways which carry the grain, the people who distribute it, and the ten thousand or more who are the agents to distribute the production of the brewery and distillery to the consumers—these are the men who work the hardest, who have in the aggregate the most at stake; these are the men who must get up early in the morning and have their shutters off at six o'clock while the rich brewer or distiller is quietly enjoying his morning's snooze; these are the men who must do the sweeping and scouring, who must stand behind the bars twelve, thirteen or more hours a day; these are the men who must compromise with their conscience and stifle its voice as they see the misery which is connected, and inevitably connected, with their traffic—yet these are all lost sight of by those hon. gentlemen whose sense of justice is so great that they could not allow the rich brewer or distiller to go without compensation. If we admit the principle of compensation at all, it is impossible for Parliament to face that other and larger and poorer number who will be disturbed by the taking away of the traffic of the brewers and distillers. It will be impossible to look them in the face and say that we have acted justly and fairly. Either the principle should not be adopted, or, if adopted at all, it should be extended further than this resolution extends it. I will proceed now for a moment, with the kind forbearance of this House, to discuss the question of compensation itself. That is the question which is before the House—if prohibition, then compensation. We are all under a debt of gratitude, I know, to the learned doctor who gave us such a disquisition upon the medical and other advantages of alcoholic stimulants yesterday. We were all interested in that touching case in which a woman was kept alive a whole year by a peculiar process of administering milk and whiskey, and we have all been left in a delightful state of uncertainty to know which it was that kept her alive, the milk or the whiskey. But the medical use of alcoholic liquors is not meant to be prohibited by any prohibitory law that I know of. The question is, compensation or not? We have first to learn from the voice of precedent, from the voice of related precedent. In all the legislation which has taken place with reference to the liquor traffic, have we any precedent for the compensatory principle or for the application of money in that way for injury arising from any restrictions or prohibitions? I think I can stand before this House, and, looking back through history, can challenge any one to present a case in the legislation which has taken place for the last hundred years in Anglo-Saxon countries in which a single penny has been paid for damage or loss which has come to the traffic either from certain mild restrictions placed upon it or from the more drastic measure of complete and total prohibition. If we go back to English history, and to the history of the traffic from the first, restrictions were placed upon it, which became greater in magnitude and scope, and which must have interfered with the gains and must have curtailed the profits of the traffic, but not a single case can be found in which any one of these restrictions had attached to it the principle of compensation. You may take 1736 in the British House of Parliament, when, driven almost to desperation by the multiplied and constant evils which arose from the gin traffic, the House of Parliament in Great Britain passed the

Mr. FOSTER,

Gin Act, which was virtually prohibition, and yet that House of Parliament, noted for its conservatism, noted for its eminent sense of fairness, attached no compensation to it at all. Following that up, you find another instance where, about the year 1742, the distillation from grain or flour or malt was distinctly prohibited. Well, as a result of that prohibition what followed? Whereas, in the year 1742, the consumption of alcoholic spirits was 19,000,000 gallons a year, from 1760 to 1782 the average yearly consumption had fallen to 4,000,000 gallons. There was a reduction from 19,000,000 to 4,000,000 of a yearly sale. Does not any one see that that interfered seriously with the profits and with the gains of the traffic? And yet, that drastic measure was brought in and kept upon the statute book, and not a penny of compensation was given. The Beer Bill was brought in in 1830. It was antagonised by the whole of the licensed victuallers' interest. You will see in the debates the petitions which were presented against it, and you will see that the most determined onset was made against the Beer Bill by the licensed victuallers and by the great brewers, because, they said, it threatened their entire trade, that their vested interests were to be injured and that the families which depended upon that trade, that numbers of dealers variously estimated at from 50,000 to 70,000, would be ruined by the measure; and the plea for compensation was put in. But the Beer Bill of 1830 was passed and those vested interests were interfered with, and yet there was no mention of compensation, though in the debates those who were in favor of the Bill pressed the ground that although these interests might be interfered with, the public had no right to be called upon to pay for any damage that might arise. In 1854, the Forbes-Mackenzie Act was passed in the Parliament of Great Britain, which did away with the trade in intoxicating liquors in Scotland for every Sabbath day in the year. That had a direct effect upon the interest. Within five years time it had taken 2,000,000 gallons off from the annual consumption of alcoholic spirits, and one-third or a little less of the whole of the aggregate of the traffic in that kind of liquors. It was a serious detriment to the traffic, and yet there was no compensation given. We might cite the Irish Sunday Closing Act, the Welsh Sunday Closing Act, we might cite the fact that, upon the great estates in Great Britain, by prohibitory power vested in the land owner, these interests are interfered with and driven out and the traffic to that extent curtailed. Looking over the history of liquor legislation in Great Britain, we find a constant series of prohibitory and restrictive measures injuring the trade in every instance without the principle of compensation being at all admitted. Suppose we come to Canada, and ask what has been the course of legislation here. The old license legislation, such as it existed in the Province of Nova Scotia, for instance, which brought about virtual prohibition in three-fourths or more of the counties in that Province, which absolutely forbade the trade being carried on, yet gave no compensation, even though it was asked. In 1855, the Province of New Brunswick passed a prohibitory law, which had no principle of compensation attached to it. In 1864, the Dunkin Act was passed in the old Parliament of Canada, and, although that was sufficiently elastic to be applied to every county and town in Quebec and Ontario, and so to interfere materially with the traffic, no principle of compensation was allowed. In 1878, the Canada Temperance Act was passed, both sides of the House agreeing to it, by which every county and city in Canada might entirely do away with the retail traffic and might do away with the wholesale traffic as well; and yet the legislators of that day, who may be considered to have been as honest and intelligent, or nearly so, as the legislators of to-day, did not attach the principle of compensation to their law. So, if we take the precedents in Canada in reference to the liquor legislation, we find nothing which goes to support the idea of compensation. If we pass over to the United States of America, the ground is still stronger. The State of Maine in 1851 passed a prohibitory law. Breweries and distilleries—distilleries which had a capacity of more than one million gallons a year—were entirely swept away; there is not one there to-day; and yet the principle of compensation was not introduced or embodied in the law. Prohibitory laws have been passed in ten or twelve of the United States of America and in no one of them has the principle of compensation been affirmed. In Kansas in 1830, a prohibitory law was passed which immediately set itself to destroy 39 breweries and two distilleries, and 1,862 wholesale and retail liquor shops, and yet the principle of compensation was not attached to that law. In Iowa a prohibitory law passed in 1882 by which 132 breweries, with a capital of $2,000,000, and 13 distilleries with a corresponding large capital, were shut so far as the provisions of the law are concerned, and are being closed out in accordance with that law. Yet, Sir, there has been no principle of compensation embodied in that law. And so with all these precedents before us of laws varying from the restriction of the liquor traffic through local option to complete prohibition, we find Anglo-Saxon legislators, presumably with as much intelligence as we have ourselves, presumably with just as great a sense of what is honest and just—we find them legislating upon this matter without introducing in any single instance the principle of compensation. I think it will require a very strong argument to induce this House or any other Legislature in the Dominion of Canada, to be the first to break this long array and to adopt the principle of compensation in any prohibitory measure which they may enact and complete. When we come to enquire why it is that legislators have proceeded upon this plan without providing compensation for the traffic which has been disturbed, there must be some good reason, some strong underlying reason, to account for it. It cannot be mere whim, or caprice, or sentiment. This matter must have been argued and probed to its bottom, and there must have been found away down there some underlying principles so strong and so secure as to induce this universal action with reference to liquor legislation. And, Sir, what may we find to be some of these underlying sentiments? It is a common argument that you must compensate the traffic because, it is said, it has been created by Government. Government has called it into being, Government has protected it and fostered it, and therefore Government has a duty to do, and that duty can only be fulfilled by compensation whenever the Government takes away its protecting arm from the traffic. Sir, I think the whole history of this liquor traffic will contradict that statement of the case. I stand here to-day to affirm that the liquor traffic is not a creature of the Government, that it is not a pet of the Government, and never has been; that it came out of the ages when ignorance prevailed, that it came out alongside of other abuses which date from ancient times; that it fastened itself upon the country; that it grew strong before the people knew its character, and as soon as the people began to understand its true character, and in proportion as they understood it, the struggle commenced, and went on, and grew greater, to overthrow the abuse which had grown to so much power and strength during these preceding years. So, Sir, it forced itself upon the country, and when the country began to deal with it at all, the country dealt with it as far as it could get the power by restricting it in greater and greater proportion, until at last, in the long struggle, the liquor traffic is being overmastered by the people. And now when the victory is about to perch upon the banners of the temperance people, after these long years of struggle, the traffic comes up and says: Why, you have sanctioned our existence; you have allowed us—under protest it is true—but that allowance is equivalent to a sanction. Now, if you want to get rid of us the only manly and just way to do is to pay us what is involved in getting rid of the traffic. Sir, this involves a much larger question; it involves the question as to how far it is necessary that the people of this or any other age, in dealing with the abuses that have grown out of preceding ages, should meet them and overthrow them by force, and contest, and the power of legislation, or should compensate them and buy them off from the hold that they have upon the community. If we were to admit that principle, where would we be landed? There was a time when absolute tyranny had its hold upon country after country. The people were beneath its grasp, and the yoke was laid upon them. Then commenced the struggle, and after a time the people became triumphant. Around this absolute tyranny there had clustered monopolies, vested interests of a thousand different kinds, but when the people overthrew the tyranny there was no proposition to compensate that tyranny for those vested interests which had grown up about the abuse. So it is with every abuse, every system of tyranny, every system of monopoly, which has been grappled with by the people, and overthrown as an enemy. It has not been customary to buy them off but rather to grapple with them, and to throw them off from the body politic. It would be a fair test of this matter with reference to the creation of the traffic to take a new country to-day, and attempt to establish in it this same traffic that we have amongst us by sufferance. That you could not do. Why, Sir, when the North-West Territory was set apart, a new country under somewhat different conditions, of course, it was found that this liquor traffic could not be set up anew in it, and there was an iron-clad prohibition placed upon the introduction of the traffic into that new country. Only the other day the representatives of the great powers of the world met together to lay the foundation of a provisional empire in Africa; the Congo settlement was to be put within its limits and set out in the race for progress and improvement under a certain provisional Government. When the proposition was made to introduce this traffic of intoxicating liquors into that new country, it drew forth an almost unanimous expression of disapproval from the Anglo-Saxon world, and the representatives of Great Britain and of the United States of America made their protest so strong that it had its effect and the proposition was, if not entirely, yet to a large extent, thrown aside. You could not establish that system in a new country which is a fair proof that it has grown up against the will of the people, and it will be thrown off just as soon as the peoples' will is strong enough. More than that, Sir, the traffic has grown up despite persistent warning. There is no abuse which the people have tried to throw off, there is no system of evil which the world has struggled against, that has had longer and more persistent warnings given to it of approaching dissolution, than this liquor traffic. Fifty years ago, and more in this country, the first note of warning was raised, and every temperance meeting that has been held since has been an added protest. Every resolution of a church synod has been a warning to it, and every resolution of a Legislature. I think a good many Legislatures have passed resolutions against it; I think the Legislature of Nova Scotia and the Legislatures of New Brunswick, Prince Edward Island, Ontario and Manitoba, have all passed resolutions praying this Parliament to pass a complete prohibitory law. Sir, all these things have been notices to quit, and the traffic should have taken them to heart, and should not have gone on in the face of all these repeated warnings. If it has gone on, it has been upon this principle: Here is a man who comes up and says to himself, What business shall I take? There is the grocer's business, there is the boot and shoe business, and there is the liquor traffic—which shall I take? He says that the two former are stated, and stable, and certain; that there has been no agitation with reference to them, no strong wave of public opinion condemning them; while the liquor traffic exists by an uncertain tenure, and goes on in spite of the prayers of the people to Parliament to sweep that traffic away. And what does he say? He says: The gains in this seem to me to promise well. True the risks are great, but I will take the risks for the sake of the gains. Now, then, if he has taken the risks for the sake of the gains, when the time comes for the risks to accumulate, let him pocket the losses as well as the profits. He has taken the risks against the strong and repeated and continuous warnings that his tenure was not a certain tenure and might at any day be disturbed. In 1864 the warning was given to him by an Act put in the hands of the people, which might have shut up the liquor traffic in any county at any time the people chose. How many are engaged in the trade who have not undertaken it since 1864? In 1878 that position was made doubly strong by the passing of the Canada Temperance Act. How many are in the licensed victuallers trade to-day that were in it previous to 1878? All that have gone in since those warnings of 1864 and 1878 were given have gone in with the full knowledge of the risk and the uncertain tenure upon which the traffic rested, and if they have chosen to take the risk they have no right to come here to-day and say: Because we have chosen to take the risk, we want you to compensate us when loss falls upon us. My friend from Grey, I think, who spoke yesterday, made the proposition something in this light—or if it was not he the proposition was made. Suppose a railway company have a charter for a railway to run through a certain district, and suppose that that railway crosses a man's land, and that it is necessary for the use of that road that the land should be taken, the company have the power, or the Government have the power, to take that land; but do they think of taking it without compensating the owner for the value of it? Not at all; they never could. But I hold that that and the compensation which is talked of with respect to the liquor traffic are two entirely different things, resting upon bases entirely different, and to which entirely different reasoning must in the very nature of the case apply. My hon. friend who was formerly Speaker of the Ontario Legislature (Mr. Wells), and who spoke to us so eloquently and ably yesterday from the other side of the House, said it was laid down by Chancellor Kent that when property was taken for public use that property should be paid for. Now, Mr. Speaker, I am not a lawyer; I do not know all that Chancellor Kent says or does not say, but I am willing to submit four propositions to the good sense of this House, and to ask this House if those propositions will not stand. The first is this: Whenever private property is taken for public use the public ought to pay for that property. it is an injustice if payment is not made. Second, whenever private property which is not to be put to an injurious use so far as the public is concerned, continues in that state of not injuring or harming the public interest, the Government has a right to protect it, and it has a right to claim the protection of the Government. Third, wherever or whenever private property devotes itself to the injury of the public, the Government and the public have a right to inhibit that use of the property, and, if that fails, to confiscate the property. My fourth proposition is this: That wherever general legislation is needed for the public good, even though that general legislation affects private investments injuriously, that private property must stand it, and it must pay its own loss, as it does, even though that private property is used, not against the public good, but in accordance with the public advantage. I see that an hon. member shakes his head to that proposition, and as he did not shake his head to the three preceding propositions I conclude that I have three-fourths of him at least. Let me see if I cannot get the other quarter. The principle I laid down last was this, that the Government has a right to legislate for the general good irrespective of individual loss and without compensation, even though private property used to the public advantage may be injuriously affected thereby. Has it or has it not? Let me go back, Sir, to the time of the corn laws in Great Britain. Let us ask what was the real question before the people then? It was this: Whether the public advantage should be enhanced by having the tax taken off corn, or whether, on the other hand, the landed interest should be kept with larger profits and more exclusive markets for corn even though the public advantage should be harmed thereby. The corn laws were abolished and the landed interests had to suffer, but there was no talk of compensation. That is an illustration of the principle that if legislation is for the general good, private property, even though it be injuriously affected, has to sustain the loss and gets no compensation. Let us take fiscal regulations. There is scarcely a single regulation with respect to fiscal matters which will not injuriously affect some department of trade or of business. You cannot make tariff legislation without injuring and harming some certain interest, and yet it is never contended that in the making of those fiscal laws there should be the idea of compensating the interests which suffer thereby. If they suffer they must stand it. The general good of the country is supposed to require the legislation. Again, I take railways and steamboats. Here is a railway which runs from Montreal to Toronto. There are a number of small towns along the route of the railway, towns which before the road was projected or built had in prospect and also in essence a trade, and prospectively a larger trade, in connection with the navigation of the lakes. The railway was built; it took the traffic, and instead of the lake traffic continuing to grow it has gone down, and some of those towns to-day are feeling the effects of the railway construction, and are not enjoying those special advantages which they were enjoying in essence and in prospect at that time. Yet not one of those towns comes here for compensation, although each suffered in its private town interest; yet the general good was enhanced, and private interest had to suffer for the public good. Take factory legislation, and I call the attention of the hon. member for Grey to this matter. Suppose this year, or last year, a factory went into operation under the existing law, and suppose that this year there was introduced factory legislation which made it necessary for the factory owner to do certain things. The inspector goes down to the factory, and he says: Have you fire escapes properly organized in your factory? No. Legislation which has been passed since you entered into your business says you must have those, and you must put them in and pay the expense yourself. Have you the machinery properly protected? No. The late legislation plainly says you must have it so protected, and you must pay the expense yourself. Now, Sir, the factory man has no right or reason to come to this Parliament and put his argument thus: I engaged in my business under certain conditions, made so by existing legislation; I took it with those conditions in prospect; I calculated what the profit would be after paying the expenses required to meet the existing conditions. Now you have gone to work and disturbed those and brought a great deal of expense upon me, and I demand that you should compensate me for that additional trouble and expense involved on me on account of the change you have made in your legislation. No such thing happens. My hon. friend says that Parliament does not take his factory from him. Now I wish to put this point to my hon. friend. I say that in justice and in truth it does not make the least difference in the principle whether you so legislate as to completely take away all the profits from that factory, or whether you simply legislate to take away $10 profits from that factory. The principle is exactly the same, if you are talking of principle. The principle is, on its broad foundation, simply this: That where you legislate to the detriment of a trade or interest you are bound to pay a reasonable compensation for that detriment, and on the grounds of justice it makes no difference whether the legislation causes a loss of $100,000 or a loss of $10. If you go to the ground of expediency or to other grounds, you may find a difference, and you may apply some different rule. But we are arguing, as we heard yesterday, on the ground of even, honorable justice, and on this ground the amount of loss that is entailed makes no difference with reference to the principle. Now the whole point between those prohibitionists who are in favor of compensation, and those others, be they prohibitionists or not, who are not in favor of compensation, hinges entirely, it seems to me, on this: Is the private property which is invested in the liquor traffic from first to last invested in that which works to the public injury or to the public good? If it be invested in that which works to the public injury, on the principle which we have laid down, and which my hon. friend did not contradict, and I think will not contradict, the state has a right to inhibit that particular use of that property and investment; it has the right to do it in the interests of the public, and on the ground that injury is being done as the outcome and result of this traffic. If you contend that the investment in the traffic is not being used to the injury of the public, then you have a basis or ground for demanding compensation; but if, as we hold, this investment is for the injury of the public we have good ground from which to contend that the state has a right to inhibit that use of it, and pay no compensation therefor. And I think I can challenge the production of a single instance in which property has been taken away by legislation, or the use of it inhibited, where that use was for the public injury—a single instance where such legislation has taken place in which any compensation whatever has been given by the Government or Parliament which passed the legislation. The fundamental principle then to be looked at is the difference in kind between this traffic and every other traffic. If this traffic were the same as the flour business, then, Sir, there would be a claim for compensation which no Parliament, no body of people, could overlook. Let us take the product of the miller: There is the farmer who raises the grain; there is the carrier who takes it to the mill; there is the miller who grinds it; and from the time the farmer puts his first ounce of labor on it till it comes out as bread on the table of the consumer, every bit of labor put upon it has added real actual value to the thing, and the product is increased in value by the labor which has been put on it. And when the consumers get it they get that which is food, from which they make brain and muscle, out of which they produce again larger quantities and greater results than is merely represented by the value of it. And, Sir, in the train of this there is no extraordinary disease, no extraordinary death, no extraordinary burdens of pauperism or crime that are entailed on the community in this business. But when we come to the liquor traffic there is a difference from first to last. From the time the farmer sows his grain until it is set before the consumer I contend that every ounce of labor which is expended on it is labor which is wasted. It is labor which is worse than wasted, Sir. It is labor which is put on something which in the end is not only wasteful but is worse—is destructive; and so there is no parallel between the miller's business and the distiller's business, so far as the rationale of the two businesses is concerned. Then what happens besides in this second business. Last year 2,384,424 bushels of grain were consumed in making the beer and alcoholic liquors consumed in this country. Can it be contended that the result, as it went into the hands of the consumers and was consumed, could at all be comparable for sustaining life and giving brain and muscle to the food which had been destroyed in order to make the substance itself? More than that, the labor was drawn from other and productive fields in the making and distribution of this product. More than that 10,000 waste banks were set up in this country in which the people of this country deposited of their earnings, $30,000,000 or thereabout, and from which the depositors took no principal home, and they got no interest for their deposits. It is so much money taken out from the people, and they got nothing that helps and much that does incalculable injury in return for it. Not only that, Sir, but labor is destroyed and idleness is produced as the direct result of this whole traffic. It is contended that in Great Britain, and it was contended on the authority and as the result of a Royal Commission to enquire into this matter, that one-sixth of the labor power of Great Britain, was lost to the country because of the traffic in intoxicating liquors. That serves to show that a vast deal of labor is lost to the country because of the traffic. Now, I do not pretend to say how much it is in this country, but suppose we make a calculation which cannot be impugned on the ground of extravagance. Suppose that 10,000 drink-selling places in the course of a year take away 5,000 laborers or the equivalent of 5,000 laborers. Suppose that the 10,000 places for the sale of intoxicating liquors take out of the productive labor of the country labor which would equal that of 5,000 persons, and I think that is not an excessive estimate. Those persons' labor is certainly worth in each case $400 per year, and the 5,000 multiplied by 400 makes $2,000,000, which will serve to show on this low basis of calculation that the productive labor power destroyed by this traffic in each year is certainly not less than $2,000,000 per year. More than that, we know from vital statistics, from the results of researches which have been made by eminent scientific men and scientific bodies, that a great deal of life is sacrificed every year because of the traffic. Suppose we make the estimate that in the Dominion of Canada 3,000 lives are sacrificed annually to this traffic, and that from these 3,000 men ten years of prospective life is taken away from the country, which life they would have lived and in which they would have labored, had it not been for their being prematurely cut off as the result of the traffic. Those ten years of 3,000 persons every year is equivalent to 30,000 years' labor, and that at the same value of $400 per year as before would make a loss in labor power of $12,000,000 to this country each year. I am persuaded that any man may take these estimates, and though he may criticise them in many ways, he certainly will not have as the burthen of his criticism that the estimate is too high. I present them merely to emphasise this fact that the labor power of the country has a serious drain put upon it as the result of this traffic. More than that, Sir, the burden of poverty and of crime which is laid upon the country as a direct result of this traffic is great. I wish to present just the barest outline of last year's statistics in Ontario alone with reference to that matter. I find that in the Province of Ontario last year there were committed to the common gaols 9,830, with a cost of maintenance of $44,783; that in the prisons there were 995, with a cost of maintenance of $32,190; that in the Boys' Reformatory and the Mercer House there were 321 and 303 respectively, with a cost of maintenance of $26,120 and $21,568 respectively; making altogether a large amount of money which was paid out for the maintenance of criminals of this class in the Province of Ontario alone. The report of the Bureau of Statistics in Massachusetts, after exhaustive researches, makes the calculation that 84 per cent. of criminality is due directly or indirectly to the liquor traffic. Then, 84 per cent. of that cost of maintenance in Ontario amounts to $105,515 every year, which at a low estimate the Province of Ontario pays out for the maintenance of that portion of its criminals in gaols, prisons and reformatories, which is found, as we may conclude after proper investigation, to be caused by the liquor traffic. More than that, Sir, the asylums in Ontario had in them last year 2,890 inmates, and the cost of their maintenance was $273,040. The Earl of Shaftesbury, who for a long time served on the Commission of Lunacy in Great Britain, and who was, I think, for about 20 years its chairman, gave as his opinion that three-fifths of the insanity of Great Britain was due directly or indirectly to the liquor traffic. I am assuming here but 50 per cent., showing in the case of Ontario the sum of $136,520. Adding that to the cost of the maintenance of criminals due to the liquor traffic gives $242,035 as the cost of the maintenance of crime and insanity in Ontario paid for by the Ontario Government as the proportion of cost which is due to the liquor traffic. Sir, it cannot be said of any other traffic or business in the world that it is responsible for anything approaching that amount of crime, and for the burden of crime which is placed upon the different countries in the world for its maintenance, its watching and its punishment. More than that; in 1881, Sir, we find that the arrests in all the cities of Ontario footed up to 13,196; and of those the arrests for drunkenness and drunkenness and disorderly conduct alone numbered 6,926, giving 45 per cent. of the total criminality in the cities of Ontario in that year as being for drunkenness and drunkenness and disorderly conduct alone. You may go outside of that, and find all the crimes which come from this as a proximate or indirect cause; but that is sufficient, and it will show you that the vast burden entailed upon our Provinces and our cities for the watching and guarding and maintenance of criminals comes directly from this traffic, and it comes from no other traffic which we have in this country. It is upon that ground, Sir, that prohibitionists are able to contend that they have a right to stop the use of property which is devoted to a purpose the ultimate outcome of which brings so many burdens and entails so great an expense on the community. The traffic is not a traffic of our creation. It has unsurpassed control against the protests of the people; it has remained in spite of the warnings of the people; it has fed and grown rich by the spoliation of the people. The property in it is not required or to be taken for public uses, and on that ground should have no compensation. The property, as the ultimate outcome shows, is devoted to the injury of the body politic, and consequently the people and the Government have a right to curtail it, destroy it, and give it no compensation in return. Mr. Speaker, I thank you and the House for the attention you have given to these remarks. I wished to have this discussion go on, and wished to lay before the House my views with reference to this resolution from one standpoint, so that if they be wrong, they may be refuted. All we want in this country is to get at the right idea, and we can only get at right ideas and conclusions by persistent discussion; and I believe the people of this country, and the Parliament of this country as representing the people, will, as the ultimate outcome of this discussion, do what is just and honest and fair; but we shall never get at the truth by refusing to discuss the question or by shelving it in any way. We have to discuss it and decide upon it, and it is best, in the ultimate interests of justice and even-handed fair play, that it should be discussed thoroughly and generously; and then time should be given to the people to make up their minds with reference to it. In conclusion, I would like just to leave one thought which may be elaborated, if any person thinks worth while to elaborate it, and which may perhaps form an element in the discussion and in the ultimate decision. It is this: What are we asked to compensate the traffic for? Are we asked to compensate it for any prospective profits it might make? I think no person puts forth so absurd a claim as that. I do not think the resolution of my hon. friend contemplates that at all. Then we may put that out of the way. The prospective profits, what might be made in the long years to come, we do not propose to compensate them for, and it is not asked that we should. What are we asked to compensate them for, then? The capital they have accumulated? Whence does the capital come? Most of this they have laid up from profits, and put from their profits into capital and stock; and this property and stock it is not proposed to take from them or to touch. No person proposes to confiscate their past profits. The stock they have to-day in liquors no one proposes to confiscate. Every honorable man and every reasonable man proposes to give them long enough time to get rid of their stock, if any measure of prohibition is passed, so that when the measure of prohibition comes into actual force, they need not have one single dollar's worth of their stock on hand to be a loss to them. Are we to compensate them for their buildings and real estate? All the buildings and real estate have come out of the profits of the traffic of preceding years, and for such I think they have not very much claim upon us for compensation. These are the accumulations of years of the profits of their traffic, and the country says and can say truly: Whilst you have had these profits and have amassed this accumulated capital, we have had all the disadvantages of the trade, we have had all the burdens to bear, and we have had to bear the losses and to take care of the burdens which have come as an indirect or direct result of the traffic. Who is to pay this compensation? I will put a practical question to my hon. friend the mover of this resolution. Will he take with him the 130 brewers and distillers and go down to any county in this Dominion, call the hard working people together in assembly, and stand up before them on the platform, and looking into their faces over which have passed years of experience, say to them: Here am I and these poor brewers and distillers who want compensation; we propose, now, not to allow them to brew or distill any more, and we propose now that they have a capital of five, six, or twelve million dollars, to call upon you, poor hard working people, to put your hands into your pockets and compensate them. How many votes does my hon. friend suppose he would get from the hard working men of this country in favor of such a proposition? They would reply that all these men had acquired, all they had accumulated in years past, had first passed through the hands of the workingmen, had been wrested from the fruits of their hard toil; they would say that there had been no tribute laid upon this country so heavy as this which they paid out of their homes and their own earnings; they would reply, that they did not propose to add to the burdens they had already borne this unnecessary burden to compensate men who are now rich, and whose riches had been accumulated by means of this traffic. They would say—leave us the future, and let us live happily and prosperously and become independent, without having this abuse from past ages, this worst of all tyrannies, this slavery than which no slavery is so grinding or so far reaching in its effects, further perpetuated.

Mr. JAMIESON. When I say that I do not propose to discuss the principle involved in this resolution, it will be discussed to all that I have no intention of making a speech. I have but a remark or two to make in the line taken by the hon. member for Brome (Mr. Fisher), whose amendment I had the honor to second. I think his view of the question is a very proper one. I am prepared to admit at the outset that the question is a very important one and ought at the proper time to receive proper consideration; but for my part, and I think I speak not only my own views but the views of several hon. members of this House, and also the views of a very large portion of the electorate of this country, when I say that I think this question is one that properly ought to be considered when the question of prohibitory legislation is brought before the House. I do not feel disposed to commit myself to any bald resolution, but I will say that when the Government of the day or this House, in its wisdom, thinks proper to enact a prohibitory liquor law, and that law has embodied in it the principle of compensation to the class of persons referred to in the resolution of my hon. friend, I for one will be prepared calmly, honestly, and candidly to consider the question of compensation, and perhaps will go so far as to say that at the present moment I would concede it. I am not disposed to go as far as the hon. gentleman who has just sat down. Possibly he may be right. He opposes in toto the principle of compensation. Well, I think there may be circumstances in which compensation might be conceded, and at the proper time, when this question of prohibition comes before Parliament, there is a large class of temperance men, both in this House and out of it, who will fairly discuss the question of compensation. I do not think it would be right to discuss that question when it does not come up in a practical way. Now I hold that we cannot discuss it in a practical way in advance because we do not know what the circumstances of the country or the circumstances of the traffic may be at the time that a prohibitory liquor law may be submitted to this House. If the votes which have been given on the Canada Temperance Act during the past year can be taken as any indication of public sentiment, and I have no doubt that such votes are an indication of public sentiment, it will be a very short time before this House will be called upon to deal with this question. It has forced itself upon this House and the electorate of this country, and I have no doubt it will force itself upon the members of this House more strongly when they go back to their constituents for the election at the next general elections. This is all I have to say upon the question. I simply rose to say that I was not prepared, and there are a great many members in this House who are not prepared at the present time to discuss this question, and I do not feel disposed to be committed to the view, although perhaps the hon. member who has just sat down is correct, which he holds on this question to day. I believe that the people in favor of prohibition in this country are prepared at any moment when this question is brought in a practical shape before the House, to meet the case of the men whose interests would be affected by prohibition in a fair and reasonable way, and I have no doubt that many of them would concede a fair degree of compensation, although I, for my part, would not concede it for any great extent.

Mr. FAIRBANK. Following in the line of the last speaker, I wish to say that I do not think members of this House are called upon at this time to discuss the question of compensation. I do not understand that the question of compensation is before us. Between the resolution and the amendment to it, the question is: What is the proper time to consider the question of compensation? To my mind it is clear and conclusive that the proper time will be whenever the question of prohibition is before us. Has the Ministry brought before us any measure dealing with prohibition? I believe it has not. When we are called upon to consider that question, or when, as is more likely, some future Parliament will be called upon to deal with it, it will have been fully considered by the people, our masters, and Parliament will have received instructions in that direction. It seems to me that to enter upon this question at the present time is like giving judgment before hearing the evidence. It seems to me as if we were called upon to constitute ourselves a grand jury and to instruct the petty jury, who will hear all the evidence and decide upon it. I do not think we ought to assume that we have all the wisdom of present and future Parliaments. When these questions are to be considered, it will probably be by a Parliament elected for that purpose. Is there any new distillery proposed to be constructed? Is this an attempt to throw an anchor to windward? Is there anything at this time to show that this question is not prematurely brought before us? I do not think we should assume that we have all the wisdom of the past and of our successors. When the question of prohibition comes before us or our successors, the question of compensation will naturally arise with it, and then I think is the time to decide. The question before us is not the question of prohibition and this is not the proper time to consider the question of compensation.

House divided on amendment of Mr. Fisher :

That all the words after the word "That" be left out, and the following inserted instead thereof: "the time when Parliament proceeds to discuss the details of a law prohibiting the importation, manufacture and sale of intoxicating liquors for beverage purposes, will be the proper occasion on which to discuss the question of compensation to the manufacturers of such liquors, as may come under the operation of such law."

Amendment agreed to.

Main motion, as amended, agreed to.

CARRIERS BY LAND.

Mr. McCARTHY moved the second reading of Bill (No. 13) respecting Carriers by Land.

Mr. BLAKE. I think some time ago it was understood that this Bill, with a Bill on the same subject introduced by one of the members from Middlesex (Mr. Coughlin), should be discussed together, and the First Minister undertook that twenty-four hours' notice should be given for the consideration of the constitutional point which might arise on those Bills.

Mr. McCARTHY. When was that arrangement made?

Mr. BLAKE. When the hon. gentleman was absent.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. That is so. It was agreed that the House should have full notice, as a constitutional question was to be raised.

Mr. McCARTHY. I give notice that I will go on with it at the next opportunity.

Order postponed.

INTERNATIONAL FERRIES.

Mr. PATTERSON (Essex) moved the second reading of Bill (No. 17) respecting International Ferries.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Explain.

Mr. PATTERSON (Essex). In accordance with the notice I have given, I am asking that this Bill should be referred to a select committee.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. I have no objection to the Bill being read the second time and referred to the Committee on Banking and Commerce.

Mr. CASEY. I think the hon. gentleman would do better to give a brief explanation of the object of this Bill, even before it passes a second reading for the purpose of going to the committee. There may be something objectionable in it.

Mr. CAMERON (West Huron). It is important to have some explanation. Not long ago a Bill passed without discussion and the next day it was seen to be a very improper Bill and a Bill which, if it had been discussed, would not have been read a second time. I think we ought to have, from the hon. gentleman, some explanation of the scope of the Bill, and what he proposes to accomplish by it.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. Our practice with respect to public Bills has, I think, been altogether erroneous. I think it would be well if it were understood that we should resume the practice that prevails in England with respect to all public Bills. With respect to them the statement is made on the first reading; any hon. member who asks leave to introduce a Bill has to give reasons to Parliament why that Bill is introduced. It is elaborated and fully reported, and then when the second reading comes, the House is prepared to discuss the Bill after having heard the introductory remarks of the hon. member. That rule is so stringent in England that it is not considered right, as a general rule, for a member who has introduced a public Bill to move the second reading with a speech; it is considered that he has made his speech on the first reading, and that it is not fair to the House that he should make another speech on the Bill. My hon. friend, the leader of the Opposition, may remember that Mr. Gladstone—who broke that rule on one occasion, on a very important occasion, when he wished to impress a new and additional view—was taken very strongly to task for having broken the ordinary rule. I dare say in that case he was quite right, on account of the exceptional nature of the Bill. But the consequence of allowing hon. members to move a public Bill without saying a word is this: that the Bill is introduced, it is printed, and I am afraid that the majority of the House do not look at the Bill; they wait for the discussion to learn its nature. This is par parenthèse. With regard to this Bill I must say that I do not admit every provision of it. There is one clause in it, for instance, that by which ferry leases may be granted for fifty years, which looks very like a monopoly. As far as that clause is concerned, I would object to it strongly. Still, I have no objection that the Bill should be read, on condition that it goes to the Committee on Banking and Commerce to consider it fully.

Mr. BLAKE. I am disposed to attach more importance to the hon. gentleman's parenthèse even than to his comments on the principle which he has enunciated, and in which I concur. I was delighted to hear his statement. What he says is quite true, but it is quite true that we depart from it very seriously in this House. I think, however, that it is not our Canadian Gladstone, but our Canadian Disraeli, who is himself the greatest sinner of anybody in this House in this particular. He has, time and again, introduced Bills without discussion, or with such a very slight sketch of their provisions that the House was quite surprised when they came to read in print what the hon. gentleman had stated as apologetic and parenthetical matter. What he left out was the most of it. But I really hope that the House will take to heart, and that the hon. gentleman himself will take to heart, the observations he has made. I think it is of great consequence that the House should have a full statement, an expository statement, of the entire matter of the Bill upon the motion for leave. This is an occasion on which, as a rule, unless one very well understands the details, there cannot be much discussion, though observations may be thrown out; but the statement of the mover as to the provisions of the Bill and his reasons therefor, I think ought to be made at the earliest stage.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. I am glad my hon. friend agrees with me in the main, but I do not think that I am obnoxious to the charge that he made. When I have introduced a public Bill I have always made a statement in the first place before asking leave to introduce the Bill. As the hon. gentleman truly says, it would not be of very great advantage to enter into the details, because with the Bill yet in petto, yet in the hands of members, criticisms of its provisions would be of no value. I have always tried to make a statement of the general principle of the Bill which I was introducing. As the hon. gentleman says, my speeches were short, but then I made them fully aware of the intelligence and the quick perception of those hon. gentlemen who heard me.

Mr. PATTERSON (South Essex). If it is the desire of the House I shall be happy briefly to state the principle of the Bill. It applies to all international ferries between Canada and the United States. The ferry licenses are to be issued by the Governor in Council, and it is left to the discretion of the Governor in Council to fix the time for which a license shall be granted. It is found that when a ferry is only licensed for five years the people will not invest their money in the construction of safe iron boats, such as are required to ply across the St. Lawrence river between Prescott and Ogdensburg, between Windsor and Detroit, Sarnia and Port Huron, and a number of other places. The Bill does not fix every license for fifty years, but it leaves that to the discretion of the Governor in Council, who will be guided by the various interests involved and the amount of money invested in these boats when they grant the leases. Then it restores to the various municipalities the powers that were taken from them by the Act of 1870; it gives back to them the control of the ferry system, the tolls, and the manner of regulating the conduct of the licenses, penalties for contravention of the Act, etc. All moneys arising out of such licenses, as well as the fines and
