From the Acaoian Recorder. STANZAS. BY J. MAGGHER ISON

When tades the gargeous light of day. And twilight's gentle stade descend, From human haunts I toy's to strev. Alone the tranquil hour to spend O'er hill and dale by grove or stream, Or near the seabeat shope, I go, And gazing on the parting glam. Recal! my hours of joy and woe

As that last look of daylight dies, So passed the light or youth away: And like the gloom that round me lies, Is that which clouds my later days. By hope, because of earth, were vain, Though to this trembling bosom dear; My joys have always closed in pain, And love has left me darkling here

Yet corner there in this holy hour, Deep spells that hid my sorrows cease-Pure thoughts that heavenly comfort pour, And bring my wenned spirit peste. The few I lov d I see no more-Yet speaks there to my soul a voice Which says when this dim infe is o'er We all shall mingle and rejoice.

NIGHT. The winds to rest are gone.
The flowers are all apoured.
And night upon her starry throne,
Rules o er a steeping world.

No cares of gaudy day Upon my soul intrude, stormy passions find their way, To this sweet solitude.

The thoughts I most do love Now with my spirit dwell,— I sour the sky, the stars above, And there my thoughts I tell.

I meet the lost—the loved— The distant and the dead -I rove with them as east I roved. Ere from these bounts they fied.

O Night! O glorious night! O solemn, beautrous nou!
What visions dost thom yield my sight,
how mighty is the power!
